HON. HARMON L. REMMEL

BIOGRAPHICAL

HON. HARMON L. REMMEL.

Capability, resourcefulness and high ideals have made Harmon L. Remmel one of the foremost financiers and business men of Arkansas and a recognized leader in republican ranks in the state. His devotion to civic interests and the progress and upbuilding of the commonwealth has been manifest in many tangible ways. His success is that which brings intellectual liberty, making him a citizen of the wider world of thought and knowledge. His plans and purposes have ever found expression in practical methods for their achievement and that he reaches his goal is perhaps best evidenced in the high positions which he occupies as a citizen, as a political leader and as a banker.

Those who know Mr. Remmel feel that prophetic vision must have influenced the choice of his middle name, for they feel that it is a synonym of his entire career. Harmon Liveright Remmel was born in Stratford, Fulton county, New York, January 15, 1852, his parents being Godlove and Henrietta (Bever) Remmel, both of whom were natives of Germany. The father was a manufacturer of Bruchhausen, near Cologne, Prussia, but left that country at the time of the revolution of 1848 and sailed for the United States that he might enjoy the liberty and freedom of the new world. He came to America to be an American citizen and not to give a divided allegiance to the country, so that when the Civil war broke out he gave three of his sons to the cause of the Union. He followed farming as a life work and both he and his wife spent their remaining days in the Empire state.

Harmon L. Remmel, the only surviving son of the family, obtained his early education in his native town and afterward studied in the Fairfield Seminary at Fairfield, New York, subsequent to which time he took up the profession of teaching, which he followed for a year in his native state. In 1871 he became a resident of Fort Wayne, Indiana, and there engaged in business until 1874, when he returned to New York and devoted his attention to the lumber trade in the eastern metropolis. It was by reason of that line of business that he became interested in the great lumber resources of Arkansas and eventually came to this state to make his home in 1876. For a time he resided at Newport, Jackson county, where he engaged extensively in the manufacture of lumber, being associated for several years with his brother, Augustus C. Remmel, under the firm style of Remmel Brothers, the partnership being maintained until 1883, when the brother died in Newport.

Harmon L. Remmel continued an active factor in the business life of Newport for two decades and then in 1896 removed to Little Rock, where he has since made his home. In the meantime he had contributed to the development of the former city, doing much to upbuild its material interests and to further its civic welfare and progress. He was twice elected a member of the village council and for eight years served on the board of education, being chosen president of the first school board formed at Newport. Since those early days Mr. Remmel has never hesitated to manifest the keenest interest in public affairs and has cooperated in many plans and projects which have been fruitful of splendid results in the upbuilding of the commonwealth. At the same time he has conducted important and extensive business interests, being particularly well known in financial circles. For a considerable period he occupied the presidency of the Mercantile Trust Company of Little Rock, retiring from that position in 1912, while in 1914 he assisted in organizing the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock and has since been at the head of the corporation. In addition to his banking interests Mr. Remmel has been state manager for Arkansas of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for twenty-six years.

Mr. Remmel has been married twice. On the 13th of March, 1878, he wedded Laura Lee Stafford of Staunton, Virginia, member of one of the old and prominent families of that state and a daughter of John Stafford, who was a soldier of the Confederate army in the Civil war, as were his three sons. Mrs. Remmel died in October, 1913, and in 1915 Mr. Rimmel was married in Fort Covington, New York, to Elizabeth I. Cameron, of a prominent family in that community. Prior to her marriage she was a teacher of music in the Presbyterian College at Asheville, North Carolina. Afterward for several years she was traveling secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, covering a number of states. Since her marriage she has been deeply interested in the Young Women's Christian Association work and at the close of the war she was chairman of the Assyrian and Armenian Drive of Little Rock and Pulaski county, having over four hundred women in her organization, and secured more than the quota of funds assigned to her to raise. She was also active in the Jewish Relief Drive of 1918-19. They have one son, Harmon L., born November 14, 1916. Mr. Rimmel and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and manifest a helpful interest in its work. They are also prominent in the social circles of the city and the hospitality of their own home is greatly enjoyed by their many friends. Mr. Rimmel has long manifested most appreciative interest in the Young Men's Christian Association and has served as a director thereof for many years. He belongs to the American Bankers Association and has been a member of the executive council of the savings bank section. He was made a member of the state capitol commission, which had in charge the erection of the state capitol building.

A staunch republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, Mr. Rimmel has become a national figure in republican politics, not as an office holder, for he has had no ambition to fill political positions, but as one who has stood loyally back of the principles upon which the party is based. At times he has consented to become a candidate for office, but this has been really as a means of helping his party. In early manhood he was elected from Jackson county to the state legislature. In 1884 he was nominated for congress but was unable to overcome the large normal democratic majority. It was two years after this time, however, that he was elected to the general assembly, being one of the first regularly elected republican members of the legislature following the reconstruction period after the Civil war. In 1894 the republicans named him as their candidate for governor, and while defeated by the Hon. James P. Clarke, the latter, after becoming chief executive, manifested his appreciation of the sterling qualities and distinctive abilities of his former opponent by naming him as the only republican member of the state board of charities. When in 1896 Mr. Rimmel again became candidate for governor he was defeated by Hon. Daniel W. Jones and in 1900, when he was a third time a candidate, his successful opponent was the Hon. Jeff Davis, although on each occasion Mr. Rimmel received a vote far in advance of that usually accorded the republican party. On the last occasion of his candidacy his vote was about forty-eight per cent above that of the republican candidate of two years before. It was by Governor George W. Donaghey, also a democrat, that Mr. Rimmel was made a member of the state capitol commission, which completed the present magnificent statehouse. Mr. Rimmel served as collector of internal revenue during President McKinley's first administration and President Roosevelt appointed him in 1906 to the office of United States marshal for the eastern district of Arkansas. Upon the expiration of his term in May, 1910, he was reappointed by President Taft. For fourteen years Mr. Rimmel was chairman of the republican state central committee and wisely directed the activities of the party during state and national campaigns. In 1916 Mr. Rimmel was the republican nominee for the United States senate against W. F. Kirby, who was elected. He made a most creditable race. In January, 1921, he was reelected chairman of the state central committee. He was a delegate-at-large to the national conventions which named Benjamin Harrison, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and William H. Taft as presidential candidates, and he also acted as a member of the notification committee which officially carried the news of nomination to McKinley and Roosevelt. In the national convention which made Taft the standard bearer of the party he served as a member of the committee on resolutions. He was a delegate-at-large to the republican national convention in 1920 and member of the sub-committee on arrangements which prepared for the meeting of the national convention in Chicago. He has done much effective and valuable service for Arkansas along many lines of improvement and progress. While serving in the general assembly in 1887 he was made a member of the joint committee which formulated and carried out the plan under which the long standing debt against the state, amounting to more than one million dollars, was adjusted and paid, much to the relief and benefit of the taxpayers of the commonwealth, and thereby upholding the integrity of the state. In January, 1910, Mr. Rimmel was made member of a committee, by appointment of the governor, that visited the national capital and brought to the attention of the proper federal authorities the matter of securing a federal government appropriation for Arkansas whereby there would be met the expense of a thorough survey of the wet and overflowed lands in the northeastern section of the state, that the district might be rendered cultivatable and transformed into a valuable agricultural region. In connection with this committee's work at Washington a state drainage convention was held at Little Rock in February, 1910, Mr. Rimmel acting as chairman of the convention. He has long been one of the foremost factors in the promotion of good roads and for one year served as president of the Arkansas Good Roads and Drainage Association. While filling the office of president of the Little Rock Board of Trade he did much to maintain high civic ideals and to advance the various departments of practical work undertaken by that body. On the 20th of May, 1921, he was nominated by President Harding as collector of internal revenue for Arkansas to succeed Jack Walker. Mr. Rimmel was selected for the office at the recent meeting of the republican state central committee, and according to arrangement with Mr. Walker he took office at the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, 1921. Since 1913 he has been the member of the republican national committee from Arkansas.

Mr. Rimmel was a close personal friend of Presidents Harrison, McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. During the summer of 1918 President Taft visited the various cantonments throughout the United States to inspire and instruct the young soldiers in lessons of patriotism in their duty to their country before their departure to the front. During his visits to Camp Pike he was entertained by Mr. Rimmel. After the death of Chief Justice White, Mr. Rimmel probably was one of the first men in the United States to wire President Harding, urging the appointment of ex-President Taft as the successor of the chief justice. He followed up his message by a personal visit to the president and was given the assurance by him that Taft would be appointed. Governor Jones appointed Mr. Rimmel a colonel on his staff.

There has been no period in the history of Arkansas when she has needed the aid and support of her loyal sons that Mr. Rimmel has not stood with the foremost in promoting her interests and welfare; and when the nation needed his aid he was found equally ready to the call of duty. He took a very helpful part in all of the activities relating to the World war and became chairman of the Four-Minute men of the state, perfecting an organization of one hundred and seventy-five speakers in the different counties. He campaigned the state three times in the interests of Liberty Loans and was the largest subscriber for Liberty bonds of any man in Arkansas. He served on the committee that went to Washington, D. C., to secure the location of Camp Pike and on another committee to protest against Camp Pike being removed from the state and he served on the State Council of Defense. In the summer of 1918 a plan was evolved to have each farmer give a bushel of wheat, corn, cottonseed or other product for the benefit of the United States and the allied countries. Colonel Rimmel took up this matter and went to Washington, where he secured the approval of President Wilson and, returning to Little Rock, started operations. Products to the value of forty thousand dollars were given by farmers by the time the armistice was signed, at which time the work was dropped. Another official honor that has come to Mr. Rimmel has been the election to the presidency of the Arkansas Bankers Association. In everything that he has attempted, quick discernment and the faculty of separation of the important features of any subject from its incidental or accidental circumstances have characterized his work. When he presents any cause before an audience it is a dull mind that does not respond to the touch of his thought, to the play of his fancy, to the force of his logic. His business has ever balanced up with the principles of truth and honor, while his public service has been of a most far-reaching and resultant character. Anyone meeting Mr. Rimmel face to face would know at once that he is an individual embodying all the elements of what in this country we term a "square" man—one in whom to have confidence, a dependable man in any relation and any emergency. His quietude of deportment, his easy dignity, his frankness and cordiality of address, with the total absence of anything sinister or anything to conceal, foretold a man who is ready to meet any obligation of life with the confidence and courage that come of conscious personal ability, right conception of things and an habitual regard for what is best in the exercise of human activities.

M. L. PRICE.

M. L. Price, of the Ozark Poultry & Egg Company and recognized as one of the alert, energetic and farsighted business men of the city, was born in Bates county, Missouri, June 8, 1880, and is a son of George and Mary Elizabeth (Warford) Price. The father was born in northern Missouri and was a representative of one of the old families of Virginia, his father, who was a native of the Old Dominion, removing to Missouri during the pioneer epoch in the history of the latter state. There George Price was reared to manhood and after attaining adult age he wedded Mary Elizabeth Warford, who was born in Kentucky and was a daughter of Mitchell Warford, also a native of Kentucky, whence he removed to Missouri prior to the Civil war. George Price served with the Confederate army during the war between the two sections of the country and he always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He devoted many years to farming and stock raising, thus providing for the support of his family. Fraternally he was connected with the Masons and his religious belief was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, while his wife held membership in the Baptist church. The death of Mr. Price occurred in 1920 and his widow now resides in Fort Smith, Arkansas. They became the parents of six children: M. Burge, conducting a grocery and meat market at Bartlesville, Oklahoma; M. L., of this review; J. L., who is manager of the Poultry Company of Fort Smith; Veaze, who is engaged in the poultry business at Fort Smith; L. V., who is connected with the American Express office at Fort Smith; and Cora May, the wife of Dr. Anthony of Fort Smith, who was formerly a practicing physician at Maryville, Missouri.

M. L. Price obtained his education in the schools of his native state and was trained to the work of the home farm which claimed his attention in youth and early manhood. Later he became identified with mercantile interests at Ballard, Missouri, and about twenty years ago engaged in the poultry business there. He also worked for other firms in the same line. In January, 1914, he came to Fayetteville and in the following year purchased the business of the Aaron Poultry Company, Incorporated, of Kansas City, Missouri, the business being here carried on under the style of the Ozark Poultry & Egg Company. It was capitalized for twenty thousand dollars and incorporated by Jay Fulbright, M. L. Price, F. M. Patrick and R. M. Clark. Mr. Price has continuously served as manager since the incorporation. The business has steadily grown and developed and the company now maintains branch houses at Fort Smith and at Rogers. Their success is assured by reason of the progressive business methods they have ever followed and the close application and unremitting energy of Mr. Price, who is the active head of the concern. Recently the Ozark Poultry & Egg Company has made several improvements in its plant and it is the intention to make the business the largest of the kind in the south. Already it has far outdistanced many competitors and is regarded as one of the leading commercial enterprises of Fayetteville and this section of the state. Mr. Price also owns a half interest in the Security Motor Company.

In 1900 was celebrated the marriage of M. L. Price and Miss Ruey Patrick, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of F. M. Patrick, who is engaged in the poultry and egg business in Elkins, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Price have one daughter, Marvine, who is attending high school. The parents belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Price is also identified with the Chamber of Commerce. In politics he has ever been a democrat and is now serving as a member of the city council of Fayetteville, exercising his official prerogatives in support of many plans and measures having to do with civic betterment and improvement. Starting out in the business world on his own account when a youth of sixteen years he has since depended entirely upon his own resources, and his thoroughness, capability and energy have been the dominant factors in bringing him the success which is now his.

CAPTAIN DIGBY B. WEST.

Captain Digby B. West, who became well known as one of the successful farmers of Arkansas, established his home in the vicinity of Berryville in 1889 and there resided to the time of his demise in 1902. He was fifty-six years of age when death called him, for his birth occurred in Ireland in 1846. He was a son of Dean West, who was a dean of the Episcopal church of Ardagh, Ireland, and later in Presteign, Wales.

Digby B. West was the third in order of birth in a family of eight children. He acquired a good education in an agricultural college at Cirencester, England, and was a magistrate in County Roscommon, Ireland, and also became captain of the Royal Longford Rifles of Ireland. He came to America in 1882, settling on a farm in Texas, and remained in that state for seven years, but his experience there was anything but encouraging. His family were all sick and he lost considerable money while attempting to found a home in the Lone Star state. He had enough left to bring his family to Arkansas, when in 1889 he decided to try his fortune in this state and settled on a farm which he purchased near Berryville. Immediately he began to prosper and he continued to live on his farm throughout his remaining days, devoting his attention to the work of further improvement and development. In 1900 he set out a nice apple orchard of fifty acres and in 1920 Mrs. West shipped sixteen carloads of fine apples.

It was in England, in 1868, that Mr. West was united in marriage to Miss Fanny Louisa Swindell, who was born in England, near London. She is a daughter of John

S. and Mary Louisa (Bond) Swindell. Her father was a highly educated man, being a graduate of the Royal Engineers College of England, and he devoted his life to the profession of civil engineering. Mr. and Mrs. West became the parents of thirteen children, of whom eight are living: Francis married W. J. Jamison of Baltimore, and they are now living in Berryville. He has devoted his attention to the hotel and banking business and he also managed Deer Park Hotel, Maryland, in the summer seasons; Digby West, the second of the family, is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Sidney is an engineer on an ocean steamship and makes his home at San Francisco, California; Charles is a druggist of Minnesota; Fred is a railroad man, living at Eureka Springs, Arkansas; Heyrick C. follows farming in the vicinity of Berryville; Lucy is the wife of E. V. Wier, conducting a dry goods store in the vicinity of San Diego, California; John lives on his mother's farm and manages the orchard. All are members of the Episcopal church, but as there is no church of that denomination in Berryville, Mrs. West attends the Methodist Episcopal church and is pianist for the congregation. In politics Mr. West was an ardent democrat. Mrs. West lives in a comfortable home in Berryville. The family is most highly esteemed and Mr. West left to his wife and children not only a comfortable competence but also that priceless heritage of an untarnished name.

DIGBY JOHN WEST.

Digby John West, who for twenty-eight years has been connected with the First National Bank of Berryville, was born in Ireland, April 22, 1871, a son of Digby B. West, mentioned elsewhere in this work. He obtained a public school education in Texas and also attended Clarke's Academy at Berryville, a time-honored institution, while later he spent two years as a student in the military academy at Sweet Springs, Missouri. He entered upon his business career when a young man as an employe in the Carroll County Bank, which was converted into The First National Bank of Berryville and he has been connected with the institution throughout the intervening period, covering twenty-six years. Steadily he has worked his way upward until for the past five years he has been president of the bank and active in directing the policy of the institution, which is notably sound and reliable and most carefully safeguards the interests of its depositors.

In 1897 Mr. West was married to Miss Fannie Clarke, who was born in Berryville and is a daughter of Professor Isaac A. Clarke, to whom extended reference is made on another page of this work, her father having for many years been one of the leading educators of this state. To Mr. and Mrs. West have been born six children: Helen Maude; Digby Clarke, who is now in school at Columbia, Tennessee; Herbert Brooke, Rollo Granger and Virginia Frances, all in school; and Vinnie Ream. Mr. West is a member of the Episcopal church, while his wife holds membership in the Christian church. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and is a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. In politics he has always been a democrat and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but has never been an aspirant for public office. He devotes his time to the bank and is leading a most active life in connection with the business interests of Berryville, where the sterling worth of his character is widely recognized and where the circle of his friends is almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances.

BURTON O. GEORGE.

Burton O. George, vice president of the First National Bank of Berryville, was born November 24, 1872, in the house in which he now resides, his parents being William Patrick and Mary (Burton) George, both of whom were natives of Barry county, Missouri. The father was born near Cassville in 1846 and died on the 13th of October, 1915. The mother's birth occurred in the same neighborhood in 1850 and she now makes her home in Berryville. They were the parents of four children, of whom two are living, Burton O. and Charles A., the latter a physician of Berryville who is mentioned on another page of this work. William Patrick and Mary (Burton) George were reared and educated in Missouri, the father coming to Berryville, Arkansas, in 1868, a year or two before they were married. Here he engaged in the practice of medicine to the time of his death and he died in the faith of the Baptist church, of which he had long been a devoted member. Fraternally he was a Knights Templar Mason and politically a democrat. He enlisted in the Confederate army at the age of fifteen years and served as a member of Parson's Brigade for a period of three years and while at the front was captured and imprisoned at Memphis. With his return home he studied medicine and graduated from the St. Louis Medical School. He was a most capable and successful physician, recognized as well as one of the foremost surgeons of northern Arkansas. The first amputation which he made was with a Diston saw. As the years passed and great improvements were made in the methods of surgery he kept in touch with these and was ever abreast with the times in his professional work. He also was one of the foremost builders and promoters of Berryville. He assisted in organizing the First National Bank and remained president of the institution to the time of his demise.

The George family has long been represented in the south. The grandfather of Burton O. George was David O. George, who was born in Tennessee and in an early day removed to Missouri, where he spent the remainder of his life, devoting his attention to the occupation of farming. The Burton family, of which Burton O. George is a representative through the maternal line, was also an old family of Tennessee. His grandfather died when Mrs. Mary (Burton) George was but a young girl and thus much of the family history has been lost.

Burton O. George was educated in Clarke's Academy at Berryville, one of the old, substantial schools of the state. His first commercial venture was in connection with the drug business, in which he engaged for twenty years, associated with his father. He made a success in that line but eventually sold his drug store in 1912 and became actively identified with the First National Bank as cashier. Later he was elected to the position of vice president and has been the active vice president of the institution since that date. The First National Bank was organized by his father in 1889 and is one of the strong financial institutions of Arkansas. It is capitalized for sixty thousand dollars and has a surplus of thirty thousand dollars, with average annual deposits amounting to three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. He was also at one time a director of the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Green Forest but sold his interest in that institution, which, however, he conducted for six months in 1915. He now acts as guardian for the children of his deceased brother.

Mr. George is a member of the Masonic fraternity, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, but the honors and emoluments of office have no attraction for him. He devotes his time to the bank and to the management of his father's estate and is thus leading a busy, active and useful life.

ISAAC ASBURY CLARKE.

Professor Isaac Asbury Clarke, who for years was principal of Clarke's Academy of Berryville and was one of the most widely known and ablest educators of the state, was born in Overton county, Tennessee, March 22, 1837. He acquired his early education in Rhea's Academy at Berryville, which he attended for several years, and he later became a student in the University of Missouri at Columbia in the year 1860. He left school the following year, however, to enlist in the Confederate army, with which he served until the close of the war. He was on duty with the First Creek Regiment of the Indian Territory under General Standwate and participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and of Honey Springs. He received his discharge at the close of the war, at which time he had risen to the rank of captain.

It was less than two years after the close of hostilities that Professor Clarke opened an academy at Berryville. The institution began with twenty-five pupils on the 14th of January, 1867, and such was the success of the new enterprise that the number of pupils had increased to one hundred before the first term had closed. From the beginning the school was a success and Professor Clarke continued his educational work until within a year and a half of his death. He was a most capable educator, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he had acquired, and many of the ablest men of the state and of the west received at least a part of their training under his direction and bear testimony to the thoroughness of the work and the inspiration of his own career over their lives.

In 1871 Professor Clarke was united in marriage to Miss Virginia G. Layton and they became the parents of a son and two daughters. The mother, Mrs. Clarke, was killed on the 8th of August, 1879, while on an outing trip with her husband and children. They were camped at Eureka Springs when a tree fell upon Mrs. Clarke, causing her death almost instantly. Professor Clarke remained true to her memory, never marrying again. His son, Cuthbert Clarke, resided for a time at Victor, Colorado, but is now deceased. The daughters are: Vinnie, now the wife of Malone Lewis of Denver, Colorado; and Fannie, the wife of Digby John West of Berryville. In the summer of 1905 Professor Clarke made an extended trip through the west and at every stop was greeted and entertained by his old students, many of whom are now men of prominence in business circles and in the councils of state and federal government. It was the arduous duty that he imposed upon himself in carrying on the school and in writing nights and evenings concerning his western trip that finally caused the breakdown resulting in his death. He was for many years teacher of the Bible class in the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his entire life was guided by a most earnest belief in the Christian faith, although he did not unite with any church. However, he closely followed the Golden Rule and there are few men whose lives have been such a force for intellectual and moral advancement in the state of Arkansas. One of the local papers said: "He has, through his personal influence and the influence of his school, done more to advance the educational interests of the county than any other individual. It would be an impossibility to estimate the loss Carroll county has sustained in the death of Professor Clarke. Always public-spirited, he was ready at all times to give of his effort and his means to any enterprise that promised good to his county or state, and his voice will be missed in those councils that are called upon to act for the good of the people. The moment of his death—sunset—was emblematic, for with the going out of this life a source of both light and warmth was withdrawn from a large section of the earth." He lived and labored long for the benefit of his fellowmen and his influence remains as a power and a benediction among those with whom he was associated.

WYLIE BLOUNT MILLER.

Wylie Blount Miller, manager of the insurance department of the Union & Mercantile Trust Company of Little Rock and a well known figure in the insurance circles of the state, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, July 16, 1878, and is one of a family of five children, four sons and a daughter, of whom one son is deceased. The parents were James Russell and Geraldine (Hill) Miller. The father was born in Rogersville, Tennessee, in 1842, while the mother's birth occurred in Mount Sterling, Kentucky, and they were married in Memphis, Tennessee, in 1877. Mr. Miller served in the Confederate army during the Civil war, organizing a company at Nashville, Tennessee, soon after the outbreak of hostilities. He was chosen captain and served for four years in General A. S. Johnson's command. His political endorsement was always given to the democratic party. He followed various lines of business to the time of his death, which occurred in Saratoga, New York, in September, 1892. His widow survives and now makes her home in Little Rock.

Wylie B. Miller was quite young when he became a resident of the capital city and in private schools here he pursued his early education, while later he attended St. Alban's College at Radford, Virginia, and for a time was a student in the University of Virginia. After leaving the University he was engaged in looking after his father's estate until it was settled up. In his business career he has steadily advanced and now occupies the responsible position of manager of the insurance department of the Union & Mercantile Trust Company.

On the 1st of June, 1904, in Staunton, Virginia, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Helena Hunter Spitler, who was born in Staunton, Virginia, in 1881. Mr. Miller has always voted with the democratic party but has never been an office seeker. During the World war he assisted the welfare committee and took active part in promoting the Liberty Bond and Red Cross drives. He and his wife are members of Christ Episcopal church and he also belongs to the Country Club, through which avenue he derives much social pleasure.

HARRISON E. CRILL.

The enterprising little city of Gillett numbers among its wide-awake, progressive and energetic merchants the gentleman whose name introduces this review. Harrison E. Crill succeeded in business William J. Stillwell, one of the oldest merchants of Gillett, his present establishment being the outgrowth of the business that had been founded by Mr. Stillwell many years before. In the conduct of his store Mr. Crill displays a most progressive spirit, carrying a well selected and attractive line of goods and employing modern-day business methods in the management of the trade, while his thorough reliability has been one of the potent elements in the attainment of his present-day success.

Mr. Crill was born in McDonough county, Illinois, in 1875 and is a son of E. J. and Phoebe (Walker) Crill. The father was a native of Oneida county, New York, where his father was a well known capitalist. He purchased land in Illinois and other western states at a very early day and E. J. Crill made visits to these places in the interest of his father and ultimately became identified with the middle west. It was while on one of these trips looking after his father's business affairs that he met and married Phoebe Walker, a native of New York, and for a time they resided in Illinois, the birth of their son, Harrison E., there occurring. Subsequently they became residents of Oneida county, New York. To them were born the following named: Arthur, who is now living in Gillett; Harrison E., of this review; and John W., deceased. The father removed with his family to Arkansas and established his permanent residence in 1887 where the town of Gillett now stands. He was a civil engineer by profession and at one time served as surveyor of Arkansas county.

Harrison E. Crill was reared and educated in this state and in early life became identified with farming interests. In 1902, however, he entered into association with Mr. Stillwell, pioneer merchant of Gillett, and later became one of the organizers of the Stillwell Mercantile Company, which succeeded to the individual ownership of Mr. Stillwell. Mr. Crill became president and general manager of the business and in January, 1920, he took over the interests of his associates in the store, becoming sole owner of what is today one of the leading mercantile establishments in his part of the county. His stock is attractive, his business methods thoroughly reliable and progressive and his trade is steadily growing.

Mr. Crill has been married twice. He first wedded Dasie McGraw of Gillett, a daughter of George and Sally McGraw. His second wife was Roberta Branstetter and in the social circles of the city they occupy an enviable position, having a legion of warm friends. Fraternally Mr. Crill is connected with the Woodmen of the World and his entire life has been guided by the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he holds membership.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE.

Hon. James P. Clarke of Little Rock, who died October 1, 1916, was serving at the time of his death, for the third term as a member of the United States congress. He had previously been governor of Arkansas and he left the impress of his individuality and marked ability upon the history of state and nation, being connected with various important legislative measures while a member of congress.

A native of Mississippi, James P. Clarke was born in Yazoo City, August 18, 1854, and was the eldest son of Walter and Ellen (White) Clarke, the latter the daughter of a prominent family of New Jersey. The father was a civil engineer and architect. After attending the public schools of Yazoo City, James P. Clarke became a student in Professor Tutwilder's Academy at Greenbrier, Alabama, and completed his preparation for the bar as a law student in the University of Virginia in 1878. Before becoming a university student he had edited a small newspaper in Yazoo City and this constituted his initial step in the business world.

It was in 1879 that Senator Clarke became a resident of Arkansas, taking up his abode in Ozark, later moving to Helena, Phillips county, where he opened a law office and had soon gained a large and distinctively representative clientele. He possessed a keen, analytical and logical mind and his reasoning was always sound, while he was seldom, if ever, at fault in the application of a legal principle.

Senator Clarke was well known through his political activity. In 1886 he was elected to represent Phillips county in the twenty-sixth general assembly of Arkansas and after two years' service in the lower house he was elected to the senate from the fourteenth district, continuing a member of that body until 1892 and serving as president of the senate in 1891. In the succeeding year he received the nomination of the democratic party for the office of attorney general and was elected by a large majority, continuing to serve in that position in 1893 and 1894, vigorously prosecuting the duties of the office. He declined a second term, to which he would without doubt have been elected, had he so desired. In September, 1894, he was made a candidate for governor on the democratic ticket and entered upon one of the most bitterly contested campaigns in the political history of the state. He was elected, however, and inaugurated in January, 1895. He declined reelection as governor and it was while serving as chief executive of the state that he established a precedent in the matter of preventing prize fighting. Some prize fight promoters undertook to arrange a bout between James J. Corbett and Robert Fitzsimmons at Hot Springs, whereupon Governor Clarke announced that no prize fights should take place in Arkansas while he was governor and that he would call out the militia if necessary to prevent the match. His unyielding determination to protect the good name of the state caused the abandonment of the project by its promoters. In 1896 Senator Clarke became a candidate of the United States senate against Senator James K. Jones of Garland county, but withdrew from that contest and devoted the next six years to the active practice of law. In 1902 he again became a senatorial candidate against Senator Jones, whom he defeated, taking his seat in Washington, March 9, 1903. So valuable was the service which he rendered to the state that he was reelected in 1909 without opposition, for another six years' term. In 1914 he was again chosen for the office and was filling the position for the third term at the time of his demise. He was regarded as one of the influential members of the senate and in 1913 after a bitter contest he was elected president pro tempore of that body, being the first Arkansas man to receive this honor. In 1915 he was again chosen for the same position. During his last term he served as a member of three of the most important committees in the senate, being chairman of the commerce committee and a member of the foreign relations and military affairs committee. He was closely associated with the passage of some of the most important legislation enacted during his connection with the United States senate. He introduced and was responsible for the passage of the Philippine bill, also of the cotton futures bill and he had opposed the ship purchase bill introduced by the administration in the sixty-third congress. He was also one of the two democratic senators who voted against the Adamson bill passed in September, 1916, to stop the threatened national railroad strike. It was largely through his efforts, at a most strenuous contest in both house and senate, that the rivers and harbors committee recommended a substantial appropriation for Arkansas rivers. Senator Clarke was a student of men and events. He watched the trend of the times and with notable prescience foresaw what might be accomplished in the future. He looked beyond the exigencies of the moment to the opportunities of oncoming times and labored to meet the needs which would arrive with the passing years. None ever doubted the integrity of his position. Those who opposed him politically had the keenest respect for the sterling worth of his character and his fidelity to a cause in which he believed.

On the 15th of November, 1883, Senator Clarke was married to Mrs. Sallie (Moore) Wooten of Moon Lake, Mississippi, a daughter of Francis Marion and Nannie B. Moore, members of a prominent family in eastern Arkansas. They became the parents of two daughters and a son: Julia, now the wife of Joseph W. House, Jr., and they have a daughter, Ellen Clarke House; Marion, now the wife of Robert Monroe Williams, and they have one child, Francis Marion Williams; and James P., Jr., who was a captain in the late war and died while serving his country at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, October 28, 1917. Senator Clarke was a prominent member of Albert Pike Consistory, in which he attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Masonry and he also belonged to Al-Amin Temple of the Mystic Shrine and was a past exalted ruler of Little Rock No. 29, B. P. O. E. He died on the 1st of October, 1916, leaving behind him a memory that is enshrined in the hearts of those who knew him because of the sterling traits of his character, his upright manhood, his fidelity to principle and the broad vision which he always displayed in connection with public affairs. The state honored Senator Clarke by placing his statue in Statuary Hall of the capitol at Washington, D. C. The statue stands between those of Jackson and Lee.

J. L. WRAPE.

J. L. Wrape, manager of the Henry Wrape Co., and thus closely associated with the productive industries of the city, was born in Jennings county, Indiana, November 1, 1877, and is a son of John and Mary (Meeley) Wrape, the former a native of New York and the latter of Ireland. The father went to Indiana prior to the Civil war and there engaged in farming. To him and his wife were born twelve children, of whom nine are living: Henry J., who is engaged in the stave milling business throughout Arkansas and is treasurer of the Henry Wrape Company of this state, makes his home in St. Louis. W. R. is also engaged in the stave milling business as a member of the Wilson Wrape Stave Company of Little Rock. F. S. is a director of the Henry Wrape Stave Company of St. Louis. Three sisters, Mrs. John Fahy, Mrs. John Reichle and Mrs. Richart, are all residents of Indiana, the two former living in North Vernon and the latter making her home in Seymour. Bob and Louis are in Paragould, Arkansas, where they are engaged in the stave business connected with the Henry Wrape Company.

J. L. Wrape of this review was educated in North Vernon, Indiana, where he pursued a public school course and then came to Arkansas, settling in Jonesboro. He had charge of the Henry Wrape Stave factory there, thus becoming actively identified with the business that has been in active operation in Arkansas since 1880. This business was founded by the uncle, Henry Wrape, Sr., and the first factory was at Paragould, built in 1880. Mills were also established at Searcy and at Walnut Ridge, but the principal mills were at Searcy and Paragould. The factory at Searcy was constructed in 1909 and J. L. Wrape is in charge here, employing sixty men in the operation of the plant. The business has been incorporated and is confined to the manufacture of staves and headings. It is a mammoth enterprise, shipment being made to all parts of the United States from the various branches situated in Arkansas and St. Louis. J. L. Wrape has continuously served as manager at Searcy and has most carefully and wisely directed the business, which is one of the most important productive industries of this section.

In 1902 Mr. Wrape was married at Jonesboro, Arkansas, to Miss Anna Higgins, a native of this state and a daughter of Carlton Higgins, manager of a hotel at Jonesboro. In religious faith Mr. Wrape is a Catholic. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he gives his political allegiance to the democratic party but he devotes practically his entire time and attention to his business affairs. Thoroughness, close application and indefatigable energy have been the salient features in his growing success and Searcy regards him as a valuable asset in connection with the business development of the city.

JOHN H. WHARTON.

John H. Wharton, living in El Dorado, was born on a farm in Union county, Arkansas, February 23, 1883, his father being John U. H. Wharton, of whom extended mention is made on another page of this work in connection with a sketch of his son, Dr. J. B. Wharton. In the public schools of Louisiana John H. Wharton acquired his early education and afterward attended Ouachita College at Arkadelphia, in which he completed a classical course, winning the Bachelor of Arts degree at his graduation in 1905. Following the completion of his studies he entered the employ of the Ritchie Grocery Company, a wholesale house, with which he was associated for fifteen years. He worked in every department, winning promotion from time to time until he reached the position of assistant to the manager. On the 1st of May, 1921, he resigned and accepted a position with the Arkansas Wholesale Grocery Company, with which he is still associated, being now the head of the sales department. This is a position of responsibility and importance and Mr. Wharton is proving thoroughly adequate to the duties devolving upon him.

On the 15th of October, 1915, Mr. Wharton was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Gibney, a native of El Dorado. They are highly esteemed in the city, where they make their home. Mr. Wharton belongs to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., also to El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is heartily in sympathy with the purposes and plans of that organization for the city's development and improvement. He belongs to the Baptist church, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Wharton is a young man who has made steady progress since starting out in the business world. He early recognized the eternal principle that industry wins and industry became the beacon light of his life. He has won his advancement through earnest labor and close application and his record illustrates what can be accomplished by a young man of laudable ambition and determined effort.

JAMES DRAYTON DUBARD.

One of the representative business men in Marked Tree is James Drayton DuBard, cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank, of which institution he is likewise a director. He was born in Grenada, Mississippi, on the 2d of December, 1889, a son of Charles R. and Celie Emma (Bernhardt) DuBard. The father was born and reared to young manhood in Vaden, Mississippi, and in early life engaged in farming. He has become one of the successful agriculturists of that state and is now living retired in Charleston. At Vaden, Mississippi, in 1885, Charles R. DuBard was united in marriage to Miss Celie Emma Bernhardt, who is likewise a native of that state. To their union four children were born, three girls and one boy. * Two of the daughters and the son are living. James Drayton, whose name introduces this review, was the second in order of birth.

James Drayton DuBard attended the grade and high schools of Grenada, Mississippi, and later took a course in the Macon & Andrews Business College at Memphis, Tennessee. He made his initial step into the business world in 1910, when he became assistant cashier of the Bank of Marked Tree. In January, 1911, he was promoted to the position of cashier and was active in that capacity until 1914, when he tendered his resignation. On the 1st of September, 1914, he accepted a position as bookkeeper for Ritter & Company and was active in that connection until the 1st of January, 1915, when he became manager of the Marked Tree Telephone Company. He remained with the telephone company until the 1st of February of the following year, when he came to the Farmers & Merchants Bank as cashier, which position he now holds, as well as that of a director in the institution. The Farmers & Merchants Bank, which was organized in 1911, is one of the most reliable institutions of its kind in the county. During Mr. DuBard's service as cashier the capital and surplus has been increased from thirteen thousand, five hundred dollars to sixty-two thousand dollars and the deposits from fifty thousand to two hundred and twenty thousand dollars. Mr. DuBard is well fitted for his present position and his genial and pleasing personality have won for the bank many staunch friends.

At Lebanon, Ohio, on the 2d of September, 1914, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. DuBard to Miss Ida Dilatush, a daughter of Walter Dilatush, a well known resident of that community. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. DuBard two children have been born: Ann, five years of age; and James Drayton, Jr., aged three.

Mr. DuBard gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Marked Tree Lodge, No. 668, F. & A. M. He is planning to complete the Scottish Rite in the near future. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church, to the support of which Mr. DuBard is a generous contributor. During the World war he was tireless in promoting the government's interests and not only served as county chairman of the War Savings Stamps drive, but was on the various Liberty Loan committees and as one of the Four-Minute men he made speeches throughout the county. He is one of Marked Tree's most public-spirited and progressive citizens and is connected with every organization that has for its purpose the development and improvement of the general welfare.

HENRY GRADY MANNING.

Henry Grady Manning is displaying marked efficiency as the manager of the Goldman Hotel of Fort Smith, although one of the youngest hotel managers in the United States in charge of a hotel of this size and character. Back of his present work, however, there has been long practical experience in hotel service from the position of check boy to that of control of all the business interests of the hostelry. Throughout the intervening period Mr. Manning has made a close study of the desires, wishes and demands of the public as to hotel service.

Mr. Manning is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Scott county, his parents being Dr. Henry G. and Virginia (Fuller) Manning. After completing his early education in the public schools near his home Mr. Manning came to Fort Smith to pursue a commercial course in a business college and while thus employed he accepted the position of check boy in the dining-room of a hotel in order to pay for his meals. He afterward entered the service of the Eastman Hotel at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and there learned to cater to a very fastidious and discriminating patronage. Subsequently he was employed in the Queen Royal Hotel at Niagara, Canada, which received the wealthiest and most exclusive patronage of any hotel in the Dominion. He served there as room clerk and his painstaking efforts and unflinching courtesy marked him as one "to the manner born." Since that time he has been widely recognized as a most desirable man in connection with hotel management. His tact and agreeable qualities in meeting the public have been most potent forces in his success in hotel life. In 1917 he became assistant manager of the Marion Hotel at Little Rock, Arkansas, taking that position during the momentous days which marked the early preparations for war with Germany. Camp Pike was situated near Little Rock and his duties were increased to a notable degree in caring for relatives who came to the city in order to visit the boys who were training at Camp Pike. In 1919 Mr. Manning accepted the management of the Basin Park Hotel at Eureka Springs, Arkansas, a popular summer resort in the Ozark mountains. A little later he was offered and accepted the management of the Goldman Hotel, the leading hostelry of Fort Smith, and has brought this hotel up to the present high standard, which he has maintained in connection with all of his hotel ventures. The Goldman has one hundred and fifty rooms, well appointed, maintains a splendid cuisine and excellent service in the cafe and is the center of almost all of the important social affairs, balls and other interests of similar nature in Fort Smith. Mr. Manning always demands that the highest type of service be rendered to patrons and by reason of this the business of the hotel has constantly increased. He has introduced many improved methods into the Goldman and has made it a hotel which would be a credit to a city of much larger size than Fort Smith. He is at all times energetic and alert, watchful of the interests and comfort of patrons and quick to adopt any new method or improvement that he believes will be of advantage in hotel management.

WILLIAM W. WOOD.

William W. Wood, of El Dorado, now a partner in the Southern Ice Company, was born in Roanoke, Alabama, August 15, 1877. His parents, Wyatt H. and Mary J. (Moody) Wood, were natives of Georgia, where they were reared, educated and married. Soon afterward they removed to Alabama where the father took up the occupation of farming. In 1883 he went to Hill county, Texas. There the mother died in 1887, and Wyatt H. Wood removed in 1901 to El Dorado, Arkansas, where he lived retired up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1902.

William W. Wood was educated in the Waco, Texas, public schools and when eighteen years of age entered upon an apprenticeship to the blacksmith and wagon making trade in Waco. In 1901 he came to El Dorado, where he opened a blacksmith and wagon making shop, which he conducted for nineteen years. In January, 1921, he secured the agency for the Buick cars and engaged in the automobile business until January 1, 1922, when he became one of the proprietors of the Southern Ice Company.

In 1901 Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Miss Thula Steadman, a daughter of Robert C. Steadman, who was the founder of what is now the El Dorado Times. For six years he published the paper as the Union County Populist and then two or three years ago changed the name to the El Dorado Times. Prior to her marriage this paper was edited by Mrs. Wood, who since her marriage has given her attention to household affairs and the rearing of her two children: Emory D. and Mary A.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood and their children are all members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is serving on the board of stewards. They take an active interest in church work and contribute generously to its support and do everything in their power to advance the cause. Mr. Wood belongs also to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.; El Dorado Chapter, No. 14, R. A. M.; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., of Little Rock; and Al-Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Little Rock. He is likewise identified with the El Dorado Chamber of Commerce, and his interest centers at all times in those channels through which flow the greatest good to the greatest number.

ALGERNON SIDNEY GARNETT, M. D.

For forty-five years Dr. Algernon Sidney Garnett was one of the most noted representatives of the medical profession in Hot Springs, where he continued in active practice almost to the time of his death, which occurred October 30, 1919, when he was in his eighty-fifth year. He was born on Wakefield plantation, in Westmoreland county, Virginia, April 11, 1834, and was the son of Colonel Henry Garnett, at one time a member of the Virginia state legislature and one of the most prominent and influential residents of the Old Dominion. The mother, who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Bankhead, was a daughter of Mrs. Eveline (Fermicelli) Bankhead, who was a ward of Lord Dunmore, the colonial governor of Virginia.

Dr. Garnett was educated in the University of Virginia and subsequently attended the Medical College of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, from which he received his M. D. degree. He then went to New Orleans to take the examination for admission to the United States navy and passed the examination by the highest average ever made by any applicant up to that time. He was assigned to duty on the U. S. Man of War Saranac and was on a three years' cruise. During that time he secured a leave of absence and it was while he was making a trip ashore on the coast of Mexico that President Diaz was shot by an assassin. Dr. Garnett being the only surgeon near, he was called upon and operated on the president, cutting out the bullet. Being an American, he was placed in a delicate position, for had the patient died under the operation, it was doubtful what the outcome might have been. Likely it would have resulted in his own death at the hands of some of the Mexicans, because of the feeling existing against the Americans.

Following the expiration of this three years' cruise Dr. Garnett was stationed at the Washington city navy yards for six months and was then assigned to duty on the Man of War Wyandotte for service in the Gulf waters off the coast of Mexico. There he was stationed at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war. When Virginia seceded from the Union he resigned his position and returned home to offer his services to the Confederacy. He enlisted in the Confederate navy and was later assigned to duty in the army, where his services as a surgeon were more urgently needed. He acted as surgeon on board the Merrimac when that vessel had its memorable fight with the Monitor and he was stationed in the bay of Mobile when the war closed.

Following the cessation of hostilities Dr. Garnett engaged in cotton growing in Alabama and while there he was offered the chair of physiology and hygiene in the University of Alabama and continued to fill that professorship for three years. He then came to Hot Springs, Arkansas, about 1873 or 1874 and continued to practice in this city to the time of his death, becoming one of its most noted physicians and surgeons. Here he remained in active and successful practice for forty-five years, enjoying the honor and respect of colleagues and contemporaries in the profession and of the general public as well. On the day that he was stricken with illness, only two days prior to his death, he was at his office in seemingly good health and attended an unusual number of patients, notwithstanding he had passed the eighty-fourth milestone on life's journey.

On the 30th of October, 1861, Dr. Garnett was married to Miss Alice Evelyn Scott of Washington, D. C., the marriage being celebrated in Richmond, where the mother of Miss Scott was a refugee, having run the blockade to return to the south. Dr. and Mrs. Garnett became the parents of five children three of whom are living: William Henry, a resident of Little Rock; Evelyn Sidney, attorney at law, for many years located in New York city but now in the south; and Rita, the widow of Thomas Scott Boykin of Hot Springs. She has a son, Aubrey Boykin. Dr. Garnett was a member of the Hot Springs Medical Society, the Garland County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He was long regarded as a man of pronounced ability in his profession in this city and his services were in constant demand not only by the permanent residents of Hot Springs but by many of the hundreds of visitors who annually come to the city in search of health. He was most careful in the diagnosis of his cases and most conscientious in the performance of his professional duties, and his sterling personal worth combined with his professional skill to bring him to his place of high standing in the regard of his fellowmen.

JULES BELKNAP, M. D.

Dr. Jules Belnap, who has been an active and successful representative of the medical profession at Sulphur Springs for more than three decades, has been engaged in practice as a physician and surgeon in different cities of Arkansas since 1875, or for a period covering forty-six years. His birth occurred in New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1855, his parents being Gideon and Elizabeth Belnap, both of whom were born near Versailles, France. After crossing the Atlantic to the United States in 1849 they settled in New Orleans, where the father conducted a millinery establishment to the time of his death, which occurred in 1864. The mother passed away in Greene county, Missouri. Their family numbered five children, two of whom survive: David, residing at Harold, Missouri; and Jules, of this review.

When a little lad of ten years the latter was taken to Shelbyville, Illinois, by his mother, who had been left penniless at her husband's demise and who there rented a hotel which she conducted for a number of years. In this way she made sufficient money to purchase a farm. Having determined upon a professional career, Jules Belnap entered the medical department of the University of Missouri, which conferred upon him the degree of M. D. at his graduation with the class of 1873. He first located for practice in Springfield, Missouri, but at the end of two years removed to Arkadelphia, Arkansas, where he followed his profession for three years. On the expiration of that period he went to Little Rock, where he continued in practice for six years, while subsequently he spent four years as a physician of Scottsville, Arkansas.

The year 1890 witnessed his arrival at Sulphur Springs, where he has remained continuously since and has built up a practice of most extensive and gratifying proportions as his professional skill and ability has become more and more widely recognized.

At Hot Springs, Arkansas, Dr. Belknap was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Blenker, a native of Springfield, Missouri, who passed away in 1889. For his second wife he chose Miss Lydia Johnson, of Scottsville, Arkansas, and they became parents of four children who are yet living as follows: Mrs. Beatrice Bagby of Gulfport, Mississippi, who is a college teacher of music, while her husband is leader of a band; J. Rousseau, who is a graduate of the University of Arkansas and is now principal of the machine department as well as a director of the Reo Motor Company; Ray L., who is also a graduate of the University of Arkansas and is now employed in the New York office of the Allis-Chalmers Company; and Mrs. Anna Lee, a widow, living in Oklahoma City.

Dr. Belknap has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party and has served as health officer, in which position he is still active. His wife is a devoted and consistent member of the Baptist church. They are widely and favorably known throughout the community in which they reside and in which Dr. Belknap has long enjoyed an enviable reputation as a leading representative of the medical fraternity.

REV. T. A. PARK.

Rev. T. A. Park, a minister of the Presbyterian church, now engaged in preaching the gospel at Mena, was born in Greeneville, Tennessee, in October, 1873, and comes of Irish ancestry. His grandfather, James Blair Park, was born in Ireland and was but four years of age when brought to the United States by his parents, who settled on what became known as the old Park homestead near Greeneville, Tennessee. There James B. Park was reared and became a farmer, devoting his entire life to agricultural pursuits and his was the proud boast that he had assisted in raising eighty-four crops of corn. He died on the old home place at the age of eighty-eight years. His son, Robert D. Park, was born on the farm and in young manhood entered the Presbyterian ministry, devoting his efforts to the work of preaching the gospel for a number of years. He was a graduate of the Union and Jefferson College near Knoxville, Tennessee, and afterward spent four years as president of that institution of learning. He also became the owner of farm property near Greeneville, Tennessee, his son, T. A. Park, being a partner with him in the ownership of that property. The father gave his political endorsement to the democratic party and he served as a chaplain in the Federal army during the Civil war. He wedded Mary Ann Alexander, who was also born in the vicinity of Greeneville, Tennessee, and was a graduate of a young ladies' college at McMinnville, that state. Her father was Thomas Alexander, who became one of the pioneers of Tennessee, where he owned a good farm property, spending the major part of his life thereon. He was of Scotch lineage. To Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Park there were born five children, four of whom are living: Mrs. S. B. White, whose husband is a merchant of Johnson City, Tennessee; J. B., a farmer living at Tusculum, Tennessee; T. A., of this review; and Roy D., who occupies the old homestead farm near Greeneville, which his father had formerly owned.

T. A. Park obtained his early education in the schools of Tusculum, Tennessee, completing his high school work there, after which he pursued a theological course at the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, and was graduated with the class of 1902. Ordained to the ministry of the Presbyterian church he entered upon pastoral duties at Mason, Tennessee, where he engaged in preaching for seven years. In 1909 he came to Mena, where he has remained, so that he has had but two charges. He has done splendid work in the church, both congregations growing under his administration and guidance, while his labors are constituting a forceful element in the moral progress of this community.

In 1906 Rev. Mr. Park was married to Miss Annie Jean Whitten, who was born in Covington, Tennessee, and supplemented her early education by a year's study in the Normal School at Knoxville, Tennessee, while for a year she also studied at Nashville. She is a daughter of J. C. Whitten, a native of Lynchburg, Virginia, who in his boyhood days removed to Covington, Tennessee, and later entered mercantile circles there. He was reared by Major Morgan, his uncle. By his second marriage he had four children and by a previous marriage there were two children: Mrs. B. B. Goodman, whose husband is a traveling salesman at Memphis, Tennessee; and Mrs. J. K. Marshall of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, whose husband is a professor in a college. The children born of Mr. Whitten's second marriage are: J. G. Whitten, who now edits a paper at Greenwood, Arkansas; Mrs. T. A. Park; Mrs. H. M. Euart of England, Arkansas, where her husband is engaged in the lumber business; and K. H., an electrician of Jackson, Tennessee, who married Miss Hollan Greene, a native of Covington, Tennessee, and a daughter of J. U. Greene, who was a colonel under General Forrest in the Confederate army.

Rev. Mr. Park is a member of the Masonic fraternity and both he and his wife are connected with the Order of the Eastern Star. He also belonged to the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and in politics he has always given his allegiance to the democratic party. He has served on the board of health in Mena and is now a scoutmaster. His wife taught school in western Tennessee and was principal of the Mena high school during two years of the World war—1917 and 1918. Like her husband she is most actively interested in the work of the church and as pastor of the Presbyterian church at Mena Rev. Mr. Park is contributing in notable measure to the moral development of the community, taking active part in fixing the standards of right and wrong as enunciated in Biblical teachings. A man of most earnest purpose, his labors are far-reaching and resultant and Mena is largely indebted to him for the advanced standards of living which many of her citizens follow.

JOHN W. MAXWELL.

John W. Maxwell, banker and merchant at Fouke, Arkansas, with residence at No. 1017 Pecan street in Texarkana, is a native of West Virginia, his birth having occurred near Ravenswood in that state on the 27th of August, 1866. He enjoyed good educational opportunities and came to Arkansas when eighteen years of age. Here he began teaching school in Miller county and was recognized as one of the popular, proficient and prominent educators of the state through a period of seventeen years. In 1902 he established a general store at Fouke, where he has built up a large mercantile business, and he also became a factor in its banking circles, organizing the State Bank of Fouke, of which he was elected president, and also serving as director of the Merchant & Planters Bank of Texarkana. In 1914 he purchased a beautiful home on Pecan street in Texarkana and removed his family to the city but has continued to conduct his mercantile and banking interests at Fouke.

On the 11th of October, 1892, Mr. Maxwell was united in marriage to Miss Aro K. Mitchell and they have become parents of four children: Nellie, Alice, Robert and John W., to whom they have given good educational advantages.

Mr. Maxwell and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, taking a deep interest in the growth of the church and doing everything to expand its influence. In politics Mr. Maxwell has always been a democrat and has served on the central committee. He has never sought or desired office but served for several years on the school board at Fouke, the cause of education finding in him a stalwart champion. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World and also to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Maccabees. His interests center in those lines through which flow the greatest good to the greatest number and he has been a contributing factor to many of those forces which make for the benefit, upbuilding and progress of the community.

CHARLES F. KING.

The drug business of Huntington finds a worthy representative in Charles F. King, part owner of the Kirkland Drug Store, and he is known as one of the substantial men of the community. Mr. King is a native of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Lonoke in 1896, and he is a son of Charles and Betty (Bange) King.

In the acquirement of an education Charles F. King attended the schools of Little Rock. Upon the completion of his course he engaged in the drug business in Huntington and he has been active in that connection here ever since. He is now part owner of the Kirkland Drug Company, of which Frank Kirkland is the president, operating three drug stores. In April, 1917, Mr. King enlisted for service in the World war, was assigned to the Medical Corps as first-class private and was sent to Camp Pike for his training. He was in active service until the signing of the armistice, when he received his discharge and returned to Huntington and his business interests. Efficient in the administration of his business affairs, Mr. King has a comprehensive grasp of details and is also thoroughly competent in handling large situations involving the solution of intricate problems. Among his business associates he is regarded as conscientious and trustworthy, never stooping to do anything not in accord with the highest standards of business ethics.

On June 14, 1921, Mr. King was united in marriage to Miss Cathleen Hudson of England. Mrs. King is prominent in the club and social circles of Huntington and her husband is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JUDGE WILLIAM THOMAS MARTIN.

Judge William Thomas Martin, attorney at law of Camden, was born in Carthage, Lake county, Mississippi, July 16, 1851, and is of Scotch-Irish descent. He is a son of James S. and Jane (Mann) Martin, the former a native of South Carolina and the latter of Alabama. They were married in Carthage, Mississippi, and in 1856 came to Arkansas, settling in Bradley county, where the father purchased a plantation, bringing his slaves with him to this state and carrying on the work of developing his place with their aid. His wife died when their son, Judge Martin, was but two years of age. The father afterward married a sister of his first wife, Penina Mann. He died in 1884 at the age of sixty-three years.

Judge Martin pursued his early education in the common schools of Bradley county and was fortunate in having among his instructors Professor Hogue, a noted educator of that day. In his youth he began reading law and finished his studies under the preceptorship of Colonel Ben Johnson of Camden, being admitted to the bar in 1888. Prior to this time he had been engaged in farming with the exception of the year 1876, when he was employed by an uncle, G. D. Bustamante of Jackson, Mississippi, in the machinery business. After his admission to the bar he maintained a law office in Camden but lived on the farm and continued to have the place cultivated with the aid of others. In 1888 he went on the road as a representative of the Memphis Appeal Avalanche, a prominent newspaper of the south, continuing with that publication for six years, following which he was with the Scimitar of Memphis for a year. Later he went to Nashville, Tennessee, and took charge of the circulation department of the Nashville Sun upon the organization of that paper, with which he remained for a year. He had made a splendid record as an advertising man and by reason of this he decided to engage in the advertising business on his own account, his operations covering the entire country east of the Rocky mountains through a period of sixteen years, during which time he became one of the best known advertising men of the United States. In 1904, however, he left the road and that year was elected county judge of Ouachita county. During his term of office, in the face of strong opposition from west of the river, he induced the court to allow a one-mill assessment as a sinking fund to build the Ouachita bridge at Camden, and before the expiration of his term of office he appointed the commissioners and the bridge was built during the following term at a cost of sixty thousand dollars and was named the Martin bridge, in honor of Judge Martin. It is a public improvement of the greatest value to the community, as even those who opposed the move now acknowledge. Judge Martin, in 1912, originated a plan to build a number of parallel levees a mile or less apart, back from the Mississippi river to the mainland from above Cairo to above New Orleans, as spillways to let the water through in an overflow, when it gets above the danger line, into the rivers and bayous and smaller streams in the Mississippi valley, not allowing enough to go through to overflow their banks, which would relieve the pressure on the main levees on the Mississippi river front during a big overflow, being a kind of safety valve for the water above the danger line. This method would throw most of the water from the western watershed through the Atchafalaya river into the Gulf, and a good deal of the water on the eastern side of the river through Lake Pontchartrain into the Gulf. This was published as a front page item by the St. Louis Republic and later published by all the leading newspapers of the south and by this means was called to the attention of the government. The measure was discussed in congress and congratulatory letters were written him by the war department with the compliments of President William H. Taft. He has always been a close student of public needs and opportunities and has ever stood for progress and all that pertains to the general welfare.

In November, 1876, Judge Martin was united in marriage to Miss Emma V. Broughton of Camden, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of seven children, six of whom are living: Henry S., a real estate man of Fort Worth, Texas; Margaret, the wife of Napoleon L. Broughton of Pinewood, South Carolina; Lucy, the wife of the Rev. Thomas Harkin, chaplain of the United States army now stationed at Riverside, California; Charles M., an attorney at law, associated in practice with his father; Lillian, the wife of E. B. McConnell, a commercial salesman of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Willie L., who became the wife of Joe F. Arnold of Fort Worth, and died in 1919, leaving a daughter, Josephine, who is being reared by her grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Martin; and Annie, not married.

In addition to his home in Camden, Judge Martin has extensive land holdings in Bradley and Ouachita counties. He is giving the major part of his attention, however, to the practice of law and has gained a large clientage here since his retirement from the bench. He prepares his cases with great thoroughness and care and his presentation of a cause is always clear and forceful. Fraternally he is connected with Camden Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is widely known by reason of the important work that he has done, not only along professional lines but in the way of public improvement, and he is accounted one of the most substantial and valued citizens of Ouachita county and one of the best scientists and writers in Arkansas.

HARRY LASKER.

Harry Lasker, president of the Commercial Trust Company of Little Rock, is one of those strong and resourceful business men who seem to possess almost intuitive perception as to the value of any business opportunity, and, carefully directing his efforts at all times, he has advanced steadily step by step until he now occupies an enviable position in financial circles. Mr. Lasker was born in Little Rock, March 11, 1865, and is a son of Samuel and Augusta (Sheik) Lasker, both of whom were natives of Germany. Coming to America, they here reared their family of two sons and three daughters, all of whom are yet living. The parents are now deceased, the father dying in the year 1888, while the mother's death occurred in 1913.

Harry Lasker obtained a public school education in his native city. Otherwise he has learned the lessons of life in the school of experience and his training there has been thorough and comprehensive. Activity and enterprise have constituted the rounds of the ladder on which he has climbed to success. No special advantages aided him at the outset of his career. He has worked persistently and steadily upward and is today recognized as one of the prominent figures in business and financial circles in the capital city. He is president of the city market and Arcade Company, is a director in many corporations and is an outstanding figure in financial circles. He was made the president of the Lasker-Morris Company Bank in 1915 and in January, 1920, the name of the institution was changed to the Commercial Trust Company. Mr. Lasker remained as president of this institution and is regarded as one of the strong representatives of financial interests in Little Rock. He is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the banking business and has always recognized the fact that the bank which most carefully safeguards the interests of its depositors is most worthy of public support. He has always followed a business policy that will bear the closest investigation and scrutiny, and the success of the Commercial Trust Company is attributable in large measure to his efforts.

On the 28th of June, 1888, in Little Rock, Mr. Lasker was united in marriage to Miss Bertie Louchheim, who was born in Galena, Illinois, a daughter of A. Louchheim, now deceased, who was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Lasker have one child, Harry, Jr., born October 29, 1908.

The parents are of the Jewish faith, and politically Mr. Lasker is a democrat. He belongs to the B'nai B'rith, the Knights of Pythias and to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is loyal to the high purposes of these organizations. His entire life has been passed in the city which is yet his home, and those who know him bear testimony to the fact that he has ever manifested those sterling qualities which in every land and clime awaken confidence and regard.

SIMON BLOOM.

Intense business activity and marked devotion to the public good, through his terms of office and as a private citizen as well, have placed Simon Bloom in the front rank of the representative residents of Pine Bluff. He rendered valuable aid to his city for several years during his mayoralty service, giving a businesslike and progressive administration that brought about various needed reforms and improvement. His life history stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for Simon Bloom has won distinctive preference in Pine Bluff, where his birth occurred in the year 1861. He is a son of John and Fannie (Aschoffenberg) Bloom, both of whom were born in Alsace, now a part of France. They were reared and married there and on coming to the new world settled at Arkansas Post, being among the pioneers to establish homes in that locality. About 1857 they removed to Pine Bluff and here John Bloom entered business circles, but during the period of the Civil war his losses were very heavy, for his goods were confiscated and his cotton burned. He reestablished business following the close of hostilities between the north and the south and again he won a substantial measure of success through his wise and capable management of business affairs. He died in 1878, having for two years survived his wife. He, too, was prominent in the public life of the community, serving as one of the first aldermen of Pine Bluff and giving his aid and support to every plan and project for the city's upbuilding and advancement. He was a man of determined purpose, whose well formulated plans were carried forward to successful completion, while his personal qualities made for popularity wherever he was known. To him and his wife were born seven children: Moses, deceased; Theresa; Charles, who was a banker of Pine Bluff for thirty years but has passed to the home beyond; Sallie and Emma, also deceased; Simon, of this review; and E. B., who at one time was county clerk of Jefferson county and lives in Pine Bluff.

In the public schools of his native city Simon Bloom pursued his education and afterward became secretary to Congressman Clifton Breckenridge. At a subsequent period he was with the Iron Mountain Railway as commercial agent at Pine Bluff and in 1904 he became associated with the W. R. Kirby Company at Varner, Arkansas, continuing in active connection with that business for a period of eight years. In 1912 he again came to Pine Bluff and the following year was elected mayor of the city. So efficiently and capably did he discharge the duties of the position that he was reelected at each biennial period until he had served until 1919—retiring from office as he had entered it, with the confidence and goodwill of all concerned. He is now fiscal agent for the city and again he is proving his loyalty and fidelity to the interests and welfare of the district which he represents. He is, moreover, known as one of the most prominent representatives of cotton raising in the south. He has thirty-two hundred acres of cotton land and he is now actively interested in securing a cotton spinning plant for Pine Bluff, acting with the same determination and energy that have always characterized him. There is little doubt as to the success of his efforts in this connection. Situated at Pine Bluff, he is in the midst of a great cotton growing district and there is no doubt but what such an enterprise could be made a splendidly paying investment here.

In 1888, Mr. Bloom was married to Miss Sophia Rhine, a daughter of Sol and Fredericka Rhine of Memphis, Tennessee. They have one child, Sol N., now living at Varner, Arkansas, where he is engaged in merchandising and cotton raising. He was a second lieutenant, serving at Camp Pike during the World war. Mr. Bloom belongs to the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and is also identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, loyally following the teachings and purposes of these different societies. He is an alert, energetic, progressive man and one whose contribution to Pine Bluff's upbuilding and advancement has been of most substantial and valuable character.

COLONEL JOSEPH WARREN HOUSE.

The name of Colonel Joseph Warren House, Sr., is known to nearly everyone throughout the whole of the state of Arkansas. No man is more truly or generally beloved by those who know him well. Indeed, the esteem in which he is universally held is closely akin to reverence. He has, during the many years of an eventful life, rounded out a career distinguished by public and private virtues. His outstanding characteristics are a simple and unpretentious manner, a keen sense of humor, a kindly, sympathetic interest in all children, marked chivalry toward women and the highest sense of personal honor. It would seem, therefore, that he comes as near to summing up in himself all the best virtues of the old-fashioned, ideal southern gentleman as ever did any individual.

Colonel House was born June 12, 1847, in Hardeman county, Tennessee, the son of A. B. and Eliza (Wilkes) House, who in 1858 left Tennessee and became residents of White county, Arkansas, where their remaining days were passed, the father following the occupation of farming. The son, Joseph Warren House, attended such country schools as then existed in White county and was a youth of but sixteen years, when in May, 1863, he responded to the call of the Confederacy and enlisted in Colonel Moseley's Regiment, with which he served for two years, or until after the cessation of hostilities. He then returned to his home and soon afterward entered upon the study of law in the town of West Point, White county, receiving instruction from an able representative of the bar at that place until admitted to practice in May, 1869. He then entered upon the active work of his profession in Searcy, the county seat of White county, and in 1885 removed to Little Rock, where he has since resided. For fifty-two years Colonel House has been a member of the Arkansas bar. Advancement in the law is proverbially slow, but surely and steadily Colonel House worked his way upward, proving his ability by the capable manner in which he handled involved and intricate legal problems. His clientage steadily grew in volume and importance and for many years he has occupied a foremost place in the ranks of the leading lawyers of the commonwealth.

Colonel House has long left the impress of his individuality and his ability upon the political history of the state, yet he has never been a seeker for public office. He has been active in shaping many events which have had to do with political progress in Arkansas from the Civil war period on through the days of reconstruction, through the Brooks-Baxter war and in later periods molding the political history of the present decade. In 1871 he was elected to represent his county in the lower house of the state legislature and gave most thoughtful and earnest consideration to all the vital questions which came up for settlement while he served in the general assembly. He was elected to the constitutional convention in 1874, being one of the youngest men elected to that now historic body. In spite of his youth he took an active and highly creditable part in framing the fundamental law of Arkansas, under which the state has been resurrected from the ashes of reconstruction. He is one of two or three members of that convention who still survive. In 1874-75 he represented the twenty-seventh senatorial district, composed of White and Faulkner counties, in the state senate and during his connection therewith was chairman of the committee on education and as such had a large share in shaping the public school system of the state. He served as United States district attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas during the first and second administrations of President Cleveland and in 1917 he was elected without opposition as delegate to the state constitutional convention, which convened the following year. He delves deep into any question which elicits his attention, studying the problems of the commonwealth from every angle and his support of any measure is based upon a firm belief in its value and efficacy as a factor in good government. The democratic party has long regarded him as one of its ablest exponents in Arkansas and there are few men who have figured so long in connection with the political history of the state, while the record of none has been more faultless in honor, fearlessness in conduct, or stainless in reputation.

With the establishment of his home in Little Rock in 1885, Colonel House entered upon the active practice of his profession in the capital city, in which he has made a most notable record. His prominence is indicated in the fact that he was honored with the presidency of the Arkansas State Bar Association for the year 1906-07. For a time he was associated with his nephew, Menefee House (now deceased), in law practice, under the style of House & House, but for the greater part of his career he has practiced independently.

In 1882 Colonel House was united in marriage to Miss Ina Dowdy, a native of Memphis, Tennessee, and to them have been born two sons, Joseph W. and Archie F., and three daughters, Arline, Mary and Ina. The daughter Arline was married to Alfred M. Lund of the engineering firm of Lund & Hill of Little Rock; Mary became the wife of Horace G. Mitchell, president of the Democrat Printing & Lithographing Company of Little Rock; Joseph W., Jr., was married to Julia Clarke, daughter of the late United States Senator James P. Clarke of Little Rock. The family has long occupied a most prominent social position, their residence in Little Rock covering a period of more than a third of a century. Moreover, Colonel House is a representative of one of the old southern families, holding to the high traditions and ideals of the south and ever standing as a splendid example of American manhood and chivalry.

M. E. BURGESS, M. D.

Dr. M. E. Burgess, successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Clarksville, was born in Pope county, Arkansas, August 26, 1879, and is a son of Iverson Carter and Dulcinea (Jolly) Burgess both of whom were natives of North Carolina, where they were reared and married. Removing westward they settled in what was then Johnson but is now Pope county, Arkansas, taking up their abode in this state soon after the Civil war, in which I. C. Burgess had served as a Confederate soldier. He was in limited financial circumstances when he arrived in this state and here he devoted his attention to farming and to school teaching, winning a substantial measure of success and continuing active in business until his health failed about six years prior to his demise. He always voted with the democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Missionary Baptist church. They became parents of eight children, seven of whom are living: Gilford B., who is a farmer of Pope county, Arkansas; Henry, who is teaching in Oklahoma; I. C., an attorney and abstractor of western Texas; T. E. and M. E., twins, the former a physician of Lamar, Arkansas; Marinda, the widow of Finis Burns and a resident of Texas; and Arah, the wife of H. Kennedy, living in Doyle, Oklahoma.

Dr. Burgess of this review was a student in the State University of Arkansas at Little Rock, where he pursued his medical studies for two years. Later he was graduated from the Gates Medical College at Texarkana, with the class of 1903. He also attended the Arkansas Normal College at Sulphur Rock before entering upon his medical studies, having thus laid broad and deep the foundation upon which to build the superstructure of professional knowledge. In early manhood he taught school for three or four years, so that he had some experiences in life before entering upon his chosen professional career. After completing his studies he practiced medicine for three years in the Indian Territory and then removed to Lamar, Arkansas, where he remained for seventeen years. In December, 1920, he came to Clarksville, where he already has gained a large practice, his ability being known to the public even before he took up his abode here. He is thorough and most careful in his diagnosis of a case and is seldom, if ever, at fault in planning a course of treatment. The results that he has achieved have been most gratifying and his professional colleagues and contemporaries acknowledge his ability in his chosen field.

On the 31st of December, 1904, Dr. Burgess was married to Miss Alice Cowan, who was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. J. M. Cowan, who practiced medicine at Lamar, Arkansas, for a number of years. Dr. and Mrs. Burgess are parents of three children: Roy, who was graduated from the high school at Clarksville at the age of fourteen years and is now a pupil in the College of the Ozarks; Glenn, who is attending high school; and Truett, also in school here. Dr. and Mrs. Burgess have ever been deeply interested in educational progress and in all those forces which make for the uplift of the individual and the benefit of the community at large. They belong to the Baptist church and Dr. Burgess is a member of the state executive board of the church, being the only representative on the board between Fort Smith and Conway. In all branches of the church work he takes deep and helpful interest and is now serving as superintendent of the Sunday school, a position which he also occupied at Lamar for fifteen years. He was elected superintendent in Clarksville almost immediately after his arrival here and has been continued in that position, his labors being an effective force in holding the interests of the pupils and in working out a plan of instruction that will be of the greatest possible benefit. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workman. In politics he is a democrat and is now filling the position of county health officer. His time is divided between his church work and his professional interests and in the latter connection he has membership in the County and State Medical Societies and is secretary of the former. He has taken postgraduate work in Little Rock on diseases of women and he engages in general practice, his patronage steadily growing.

ALBERT JOSEPH DEMERS

Through a decade Albert Joseph DeMers has been connected with the Little Rock bar, entering upon practice here in 1911, following the completion of his preparation for his calling. He is a native of the state of New York, his birth having occurred in the city of Buffalo, April 3, 1884. His father, Albert Norbert DeMers, was also a native of Buffalo, born in 1869, and after arriving at man's estate he wedded Rosalie Thomas, whose birth occurred in Canada, the same year. Their marriage was celebrated in Buffalo in 1883 and they became the parents of four sons and two daughters, all of whom died in infancy, with the exception of Albert J. DeMers. The father in 1884 removed with his family to Montreal, Canada, and in later years became a resident of Little Rock, where he continued in the practice of law from 1902 until 1914, when he retired and is now enjoying a well earned rest. His political endorsement has ever been given to the democratic party. His wife died while residing in Montreal, in 1895.

Albert J. DeMers was only six months old when the family home was established in Montreal, Canada, where he remained until 1900. He was a pupil in the Montreal schools, completing his course, there in the Montcalm school. Then he came to Little Rock in 1901, two years after the arrival of his father, who had taken up his abode in the capital city in 1899. In 1909 Albert J. DeMers entered upon the study of law, which he pursued in the law department of the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated with the class of 1911. He then entered upon active practice, and while advancement at the bar is proverbially slow he has steadily progressed and is now accorded a good clientage, which is indicative of his ability in the trial of cases before the court. He is now local attorney for the Security Benefit Association, is attorney for the Eclair Oil Company of Arkansas and secretary of the Arkansas Oil Exchange. He is likewise financier of the Security Benefit Association.

Mr. DeMers was married to Miss Anna Elizabeth Penzel, who was born in Little Rock in September, 1886, a daughter of Adam C. Penzel of Little Rock. They have become parents of three children: Albert Penzel, Adam William, and Rosalie Charlotte.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Catholic church, and politically Mr. DeMers is connected with the democratic party. He is a master workman of Capitol Lodge, No. 26, A. O. U. W., and he is the secretary and treasurer of the Alumni Association of the Arkansas Law School. A resident of Little Rock from the age of sixteen years, he has become widely known in this city and has made for himself a creditable name and place through his professional connections.

RICHARD HANCOCK ALLEN.

Richard Hancock Allen, circuit clerk of Arkansas county and a resident of De Witt, is well known in this part of the state, by reason of his stalwart championship of all those interests which make for public progress and improvement. His devotion to the general welfare has, therefore, led to his selection for office, the duties of which he has promptly and efficiently performed. Mr. Allen was born on a farm five miles east of De Witt in 1881 and is a son of R. C. and Belle (Williamson) Allen. The father was a native of Shelby county, Mississippi, and his father became one of the pioneer settlers of this state, arriving in 1858 and taking up his abode on a farm in Arkansas county, while the Williamson family had previously been established in this county and was also connected with the agricultural life of the community.

Richard H. Allen acquired his education in the common schools and later pursued a commercial course, after which he took up the business of bookkeeping. His interest in public affairs, his capability and his devotion to the general welfare caused him to be selected for official duties and he was elected county treasurer in 1912, continuing in that office for four years. He has also served as deputy collector for four years and with his retirement from the office of deputy collector in 1920 he was elected circuit clerk and is the incumbent in that position.

Mr. Allen was married to Miss Bertie Parker, a daughter of Joseph Parker of St. Charles, Arkansas, and they have three sons: Robert, R. H., Jr., and Gleason. Mr. Allen is identified with the Masonic order, being a member of Albert Pike Consistory at Little Rock, Arkansas; also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His fellow members in these societies attest his sterling worth and give him their warm friendship and kindly regard, while his official record has also gained him high position in the esteem of his fellow townsmen.

ALBERT M. BYRNES.

Albert M. Byrnes, a contractor of Fayetteville, is numbered among the sons of the Emerald isle who have sought the opportunities of the new world and have made good here in the attainment of success through untiring industry and progressive business methods. Mr. Byrnes was born in Dublin, Ireland, August 2, 1849, and is a son of Michael and Charlotte (Hatton) Byrnes, also natives of that country, in which they Michael Byrnes early learned the wagon maker's trade and in 1852 he came to the were reared and married. The grandfather was Peter Byrnes, a farmer of Ireland, and he and all of his descendants have been faithful followers of the Catholic church. United States, making his way first to California, while later he went to New Orleans, where he became a victim of the yellow fever.

Albert M. Byrnes is the only survivor of the family which numbered parents and two children. His educational opportunities were very limited and in early youth he learned the carpenter's trade after his mother brought him to Fayetteville in 1866, following the death of her husband. Here she was married to Joseph Zilleh, and they became the parents of two children: John Zilleh, who is now street commissioner of Fayetteville; and Mrs. Mary Goss, whose husband is an electrician of Fayetteville.

Albert M. Byrnes was married in 1872, when twenty-three years of age, to Miss Mary E. McCoy, who was born in Providence, Rhode Island, a daughter of Phillip and Mary McCoy, who are mentioned in connection with the sketch of their son, W. J. McCoy, on another page of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Byrnes became the parents of seven children, of whom five are living: Mrs. D. M. Benbrook, a widow residing at Krehs, Oklahoma, where she is teaching music, having a very large class; Mrs. J. Wythe Walker, living in Fayetteville; Mrs. R. L. Putman of Chicago, whose husband is general manager of the National Lumber Association; Mrs. B. H. Barnes, a widow residing with her parents; and A. H., who is cashier in the office of the Frisco Railroad at Springfield, Missouri, having been connected with the company for many years.

In the year in which he was married Mr. Byrnes began contracting and building in Fayetteville. He has done much work for the railroads and for the government. He had contracts with the Frisco Railroad which amounted to thousands of dollars. He is now engaged in the construction of a large dormitory and other school buildings for the government in Oklahoma, the contract being for one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. This was awarded him over several competitors. He has been very successful in his building operations and is today numbered among the prominent contractors of western Arkansas. In 1873 Mr. Byrnes purchased two beautiful lots in Fayetteville at a cost of sixty-six dollars and a half each. He built thereon a home in 1876 and has since occupied it. The lots are today worth several thousand dollars, showing something of the growth and development of Fayetteville, resulting in the rapid rise in realty values. Mr. Byrnes has erected all of the school buildings in Fayetteville and he removed the Arkansas building to this city from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, held in St. Louis in 1904. He has built hundreds of the homes in the city, was the builder of the Engineers Hall in connection with the state university and also the boys' dormitory. In various localities stand substantial structures which are a monument to the enterprise, skill and ability of Mr. Byrnes and all recognize the fact that he well deserves the success which has come to him. He owns a large block of stock in the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company and is serving on its board of directors.

Mr. Byrnes and his family are communicants of the Catholic church and his political endorsement is given to the republican party, but while he keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day, he has never sought or desired office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his building operations. He was brought to the United States when fifteen years of age and has always remained on this side of the Atlantic. The spirit of western enterprise and progress has actuated him in everything that he has undertaken and step by step he has advanced until he has climbed to the plane of affluence and now has the opportunity to select those business contracts which he desires to execute.

T. J. BOWERS.

T. J. Bowers, editor of the Searcy News, was born in Greene county, Tennessee, August 19, 1861. He is a representative of one of the oldest families of Pennsylvania, his ancestors coming to the new world during William Penn's time. The family is noted for longevity. The grandfather, Lewis Bowers, was born in the Keystone state and removed to Tennessee, where he followed the occupation of farming. His son and namesake, Lewis Bowers, was born in Greene county, Tennessee, and after arriving at adult age, there married Barbara A. Cobble, who was also born in that county. Mr. Bowers was actively interested in politics prior to the Civil war and was serving as sheriff of Greene county when the war broke out. He enlisted for service with the Confederate troops while seven of his eight brothers fought against him, being members of the Union army. He was under Bragg and participated in many of the most important battles of the war. On one occasion a bullet struck a Bible which he carried in his pocket and thus prevented him from being wounded. He served with the infantry forces and on one occasion was captured. At another time he saved the life of a Union general by carrying him off the field. He was court-martialed for furnishing arms to the Confederate army but was paroled. He had become quite wealthy prior to the war but lost everything during that conflict, having been an extensive landholder and slave-owner. Later he went to Huntsville, Alabama, where he engaged in farming, leasing a plantation there for eight years. He shipped his first crop of cotton but never received anything for it. He then removed to St. Francis county, Arkansas, settling in Forrest City in 1874, and was there engaged in farming until he took up his abode in Cushman, Arkansas, where he conducted a hotel and also served as justice of the peace. He afterward removed to Washington, D. C., where he died in 1910, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, while his wife departed this life in 1908 at the age of eighty-one years. They were the parents of ten children, of whom the eldest died in infancy. The others are: Sarah E., who is the widow of J. A. McGall and is living in Washington, D. C., at the age of seventy-six years; Rebecca, the wife of J. F. Engles of Washington, D. C.; Mattie, who became the wife of J. F. Eslinger, but both are now deceased; Mary E., who is the wife of I. D. W. Cobb, living near Huntsville, Alabama; Andrew J., a machinist, residing at Batesville, Arkansas; T. J., of this review; C. C., a stockman, residing in Comanche, Texas; Fay I., the wife of F. J. Headstream, living near Roby, Texas, where he owns land and is engaged in dairying; and Lillie A., the wife of J. W. Simmons of Washington, D. C. The parents were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Bowers was a democrat in his political views and fraternally was connected with the Odd Fellows and the Masons. The mother was a daughter of William Cobble, who was a carpenter and contractor of Tennessee.

T. J. Bowers pursued his advanced education in a college at La Crosse, Arkansas, under Professor Kennard, there studying in 1883 and 1884, while in 1885 and 1886 he attended the State University at Fayetteville. He then returned to Independence county and became a teacher in the rural districts, after which he spent three years as a teacher in Cushman, Arkansas. He next turned his attention to merchandising at that place, where he remained until 1896, when he came to Searcy and here entered the grocery business. Later he spent three years in Blue Mountain, Arkansas, but in 1904 he returned to Searcy and for three years was on the road as a traveling salesman. He afterward purchased a general merchandise business in Searcy, which he conducted for a time and then sold. Subsequently he concentrated his efforts and attention upon the insurance and real estate business and at the same time filled the office of justice of the peace. In June, 1918, he purchased the Searcy News and has continued as its manager and editor. This is a weekly paper of merit, devoted to the dissemination of general and local news and in addition to printing the paper Mr. Bowers does job work of all kinds. He has improved the equipment of the office, so that excellent work is turned out and he has largely built up the paper, which today has a circulation of one thousand. He devotes his entire time to his newspaper interests and real estate business and for many years he has figured prominently in connection with the business development and progress of the community.

In 1894 Mr. Bowers was married to Miss Quilla Crow, who was born in Arkansas, a daughter of Joe Crow. They have many friends in Searcy and the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by their large circle of acquaintances. Mr. Bowers is a democrat in his political views and he and his wife hold membership in the Missionary Baptist church, its teachings constituting the basic principles of all their acts.

PROFESSOR DONALD MacQUEEN.

Professor Donald MacQueen, city superintendent of schools of El Dorado, was born in Milledgeville, Georgia, on the 26th of March, 1886, and is a son of Dr. Donald and Martha (Windsor) MacQueen. The father is a native of South Carolina and the mother is a native of Georgia. They were married in Milledgeville of the latter state, in the year 1883. Dr. MacQueen is a Presbyterian minister, upon whom has been conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity and he is now filling a pulpit at Palatka, Florida.

Professor MacQueen of this review was educated in Center College at Danville, Kentucky, and in the University of Wisconsin, which conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1906 and that of Master of Arts in 1916. Following his graduation he began his educational work as principal of the high school at Carlisle, Kentucky, and later he was made superintendent of the city schools at that place. He remained in Carlisle for four years, giving excellent satisfaction in his administration of educational affairs. While there residing he was married on the 23d of December, 1909, to Miss Elizabeth Taylor Calliver of that place, and to them has been born a son, Donald (IV).

In 1910 Professor MacQueen was called to Fredericksburg College at Fredericksburg, Virginia, to fill the chair of English and remained there for a year, at the end of which time he resigned and came to Arkansas for the benefit of his health. In 1911 he accepted the presidency of the Warren Presbyterian Training School at Warren, Arkansas, where he remained for two years. In 1913 he went to Monticello as head of the department of English in the Arkansas State Agricultural School, in which capacity he served for five years and in 1918 he was offered and accepted the superintendency of the El Dorado schools, in which important position he has remained. He has always held to the highest standards of his profession, ever making it his purpose so to instruct that his training shall be of practical value as a preparation for life's responsible duties.

Professor MacQueen is well known in fraternal circles, being a Knights Templar Mason, a member of El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E., and also of the Knights of Pythias. Of the Rotary Club of El Dorado he is the president and is keenly interested in the high purposes and plans of that organization for the benefit of the city along material and civic lines. He has membership in the El Dorado Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the board of directors of the Warner Brown Hospital. Keenly interested in the work of the Presbyterian church he is serving as one of the elders, also as superintendent of the Sunday school and is likewise president of the County Sunday School Association. He is scout-master of the Boy Scouts, Troop No. 1, and he gives his hearty aid and support to all measures which tend to uplift the individual and promote the welfare of the community at large. His labors in the field of his profession have been far-reaching and highly resultant and he ranks today among the most capable of the educators connected with the public school system of Arkansas.

J. P. WOMACK.

Among the well known educators of Arkansas is J. P. Womack, superintendent of the schools of Jonesboro. He was born at Centerton, Arkansas on the 25th of July, 1871, a son of James W. and Elizabeth Jane (Gamble) Womack. The father, who is now in his seventieth year, is living retired in Centerton. He was for many years engaged in farming near that point and achieved more than gratifying success. He was born in Tennessee and located in Centerton with his parents when a boy of six years. The Womacks were among the pioneer settlers of that community and Richard Womack, grandfather of our subject, built the first church at that point, of Methodist denomination. In 1868, in Centerton, was celebrated the marriage of James W. Womack to Miss Elizabeth Jane Gamble, whose demise occurred in 1916. She was born and reared in Arkansas, her parents having come from Northern Alabama and located near Centerton at an early day. Grandfather Alex G. Gamble served as assessor of Benton county for many years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Womack, nine children were born, five boys and four girls. All are living except one boy who died in infancy. J. P., whose name initiates this review, was the second in order of birth.

In the acquirement of an education J. P. Womack attended Pea Ridge Academy at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, and later Rogers Academy at Rogers, this state. He spent three years at the State University, studying for the A. B. degree, having received the L. L. certificate from that institution in 1902. He was thirty-two years of age at the time the A. B. degree was conferred upon him. His higher education was acquired by working his way through college. He went to high school after his marriage and taught school for seven years to obtain enough money to begin his college career. In 1903 he went to Stephens, Arkansas, as principal of the school, there, a position in which he was active until 1909, when he became superintendent of the Magnolia schools. For four years he remained in that place. At the termination of that time he removed to Conway and was superintendent of the schools at that point until 1917. In that year he came to Jonesboro and has been active in educational circles here since. He is now serving his sixth consecutive year as superintendent of the local schools. He has won for himself a prominent place among the educators in Arkansas, for since coming here he has doubled the attendance of the high school and placed it in the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges. The high school has a normal attendance of four hundred. The school term has also been lengthened from eight to nine months. During the five years, 1913-18, Mr. Womack attended the summer sessions of the Peabody College and he received the M. A. degree from that institution in 1918. In 1912 he was president of the State Teacher's Association and he is director for Arkansas of the National Moral Educational Association. He is a member of the education commission of the North Arkansas conference, secretary of the Board of Education of the North Arkansas conference, and has been delegate to the General Conferences of the Methodist Church, South.

On the 21st of May, 1891, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Womack to Miss Lottie Belle Lee, a daughter of James C. Lee, a prominent resident of Pea Ridge.

Since age conferred upon Mr. Womack the right of franchise he has been a staunch supporter of the democratic party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Conway Lodge, A. F. & A. M. and Conway chapter, Royal Arch Masons. Mr. Womack is a consistent member of the Methodist church and active in all church and Sunday school work. He is lay leader, steward and a teacher in the Sunday school. He is an accredited Sunday school teacher, having received his training under the supervision of the general Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal church. During the World war Mr. Womack gave generously of his time and money in promoting his government's interests and as one of the Four-Minute men made many speeches throughout the county. There is no movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare which seeks Mr. Womack's aid in vain and he is readily conceded to be one of the most public-spirited and substantial citizens of Jonesboro and Craighead county.

NOBLE ROBERT TOWNSEND, M. D.

Dr. Noble Robert Townsend, a physician and surgeon, who is now senior member of the firm of Townsend & Townsend, practicing successfully at Arkadelphia, has been a lifelong resident of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Lawrence county, February 28, 1866. His parents were John Woods and Anna E. (McGee) Townsend, natives of Alabama and of Tennessee, respectively. The father came to Arkansas some years prior to the Civil war, settling in Lawrence county. He was twice married, the mother of Dr. Townsend being his second wife. The father was also a physician and for some years after coming to Arkansas he practiced his profession but on account of failing health he gave up active work of that character. Later he entered the ministry of the Baptist church and was one of the pioneer preachers of that faith in the state. He became one of the founders and the moderator of the Spring River Association. He was also the editor and publisher of a small newspaper at Smithville for many years, this paper being known as the Sketch Book. Rev. Dr. Townsend was a man of broad education and liberal culture for his day and wielded a wide influence for good in the communities in which he lived and labored, his efforts being most effective in connection with the intellectual and moral progress of the state.

Dr. Noble R. Townsend was educated in the public schools of Smithville and in the La Crosse Collegiate Institute and in 1888 he took up the study of medicine, being graduated from the Hospital School of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, as a member of the class of 1889. Following his graduation he located at Black Rock, Arkansas, where he remained in active practice until 1903. He then came to Arkadelphia, where he has continued and through the intervening period has built up an extensive practice of a most important character. In 1892 he took up a special course of study at Louisville, Kentucky, covering six months and in 1896-7 he pursued a course in the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans, Louisiana. He was graduated from the medical department of that institution in 1897. For some years he was associated in Black Rock with Dr. C. E. Witt, now of Little Rock, and for a considerable period was in partnership with Dr. J. C. Wallace of Arkadelphia, who is deceased. Dr. Townsend has always held to high professional standards and his capability is widely recognized. He is a member of the Clark County Medical Society, also of the Arkansas State Medical Society and belongs to the Southern Medical Association.

On the 16th of October, 1887, Dr. Townsend was married to Miss Roxie Creekmore of La Crosse, Arkansas, and they became parents of three children, a daughter and two sons, but the daughter died in infancy. The sons are: Dr. Charles Kennard Townsend and Ernest Witt Townsend, the latter now a senior in the medical department in Tulane University.

Like his father, Dr. Noble R. Townsend is not only a physician for the body but also for the soul as he is an ordained minister of the Baptist church and at the present writing is doing supply work for a small suburban church. Occasionally he fills the pulpit for a brother minister and in all possible ways aids in the promotion of the church work. His life is characterized by high and lofty ideals and as a representative of the medical profession he holds to the most advanced professional ethics and standards. In 1919 Dr. Townsend established a private sanitarium in association with his son and Dr. Rowland and Dr. Doane. He is continually extending a helping hand where aid is needed and he is prominently known as one of the representatives and honored residents of Arkadelphia.

H. L. THOMPSON.

It is a noticeable fact that a great majority of men who have operated successfully at the oil fields of the southwest have come to this section of the state from Pennsylvania, where the first oil discoveries of the country were made. They are men who have become familiar with the oil industry in the east and have recognized the possibilities and opportunities in this direction in this section of the country. To this class belongs H. L. Thompson, a well known oil operator of Fort Smith. He was born in Sugar Grove, Warren county, Pennsylvania, his parents being John H. and Ella (Phillips) Thompson, the former a newspaper man. The son was educated in the public schools of Irvington, Pennsylvania, and became a drilling operator in the oil fields of his native state. To this business he has since given his attention and has done a contracting business in drilling wells, following the business successfully in Ohio, West Virginia, New York, Illinois, Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas. Thus he has made his way westward in connection with the discovery and development of oil fields in various sections of the country, at length turning his attention to the southwest when operations were begun in the oil fields of this part of the country. He has made his home in Fort Smith since 1916. He is thoroughly familiar with the oil industry in every department and his sound judgment, persistency of purpose and undaunted energy have brought him gratifying success.

Mr. Thompson has been married twice. He first wedded Neva English and they became the parents of three children: Winona, who is now a student in Wellesley College near Boston, Massachusetts; Edwin; and Harry. The wife and mother died and later Mr. Thompson married Elizabeth Garner of Clarendon, Pennsylvania. His life history is an interesting one, for opportunity has ever been to him a call to action—a call to which he has made ready response. At the outset of his career he recognized the qualities which are essential to success and has cultivated those qualities in the conduct of his business affairs until activity and energy have made him one of the representative oil men of Arkansas.

G. N. GILLEY.

G. N. Gilley, who conducted one of the large and profitable automobile sales agencies of Hot Springs, to the time of his death on November 7, 1921, established business in August, 1918, and had handled the Franklin, Paige and Hupmobile cars. He had developed a large business in this connection and was thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the automobile trade. Mr. Gilley was born in Alabama and spent his youth in Dalton, that state. He was educated in the public schools and when he started out in the business world he became proprietor of a furniture store in Jackson, Alabama. Later he continued in the same line of business at Birmingham and afterward was identified with the furniture trade in both Texas and Louisiana. In the latter state he conducted a general mercantile business at Lake Charles.

Mr. Gilley dated his residence in Arkansas from 1906, in which year he took up his abode at Fort Smith, there residing until his removal to Hot Springs in 1914. Here in 1918 he established his sales agency for handling the Hupmobile, Paige and Franklin cars and his business had grown to large and gratifying proportions. He was very thorough and energetic in all that he undertook and strictly reliable in all of his business transactions. Aside from conducting his sales agency he was identified with the Superior Bath House as vice president and one of the directors. Mr. Gilley belonged to the Rotary Club and was also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He had gained many friends during the period of his residence in Arkansas and had made for himself a creditable position in business circles. His entire record was characterized by steady progress since he started out in business on his own account. He always carefully utilized his opportunities and chances for advancement and step by step he had reached the position which he occupied as a prominent representative of the commercial interests of Hot Springs.

JULIUS GIGER.

Julius Giger, who dates his arrival in Benton county from 1896, has been well known in business circles of Bentonville as the owner of a first-class garage and in association with his brother, Henry Giger, he has become the owner of a fine fruit farm of two hundred and sixty-five acres, constituting one of the best improved and most valuable agricultural properties in the county. He has recently exchanged the garage for a large stock farm in the northwest corner of the county. He is an enterprising and progressive business man whose plans are carefully formulated and in their execution he is prompt and determined. Mr. Giger is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Madison county on the 31st of March, 1865. His parents were Daniel and Marietta (Todd) Giger, who were also natives of that county. In 1884 they removed to Kansas, where the father purchased a farm, which he continued to cultivate until 1901, when he made his way to Arkansas, but subsequently returned to the Sunflower state, where he spent his remaining years, departing this life in Lyon county, where the mother's demise also occurred. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church and in his political views Mr. Giger was a republican, while fraternally he was connected with the Masons. In their family were six children: Julius, the subject of this review; Mildred Alberta, the wife of John Boosinger, who follows farming in Lyon county, Kansas; Emma, who married C. L. Saffer, a farmer residing at Bentonville; James, who is operating a farm in the state of Kansas; Clem, a farmer in Allen, Kansas; and Henry, who resides in Bentonville and is associated in business with the subject of this review.

In the schools of Illinois Julius Giger acquired his education and on starting out in life independently took up the occupation of farming, which he followed in Lyon county, Kansas, until 1896, when he came to Arkansas, purchasing eighty acres of unimproved land in Benton county, and in order to gain a start he was obliged to borrow money, having a capital of less than three hundred dollars when he arrived in this locality. He devoted every energy to the cultivation of his land, utilizing the most modern and progressive methods and gradually converting it into a rich and productive property. He was at length able to discharge all of his indebtedness and as his resources increased he gradually enlarged his holdings, until he now has in all six hundred and eighty acres, of which sixty-five acres is devoted to the raising of fine apples. He is interested in all modern developments along agricultural lines and has equipped his farm with the most labor saving machinery. He formerly had the best horses in the county but now utilizes three trucks and two tractors and has also installed a water-works system on the place, keeping abreast of the times in every way. He has wrought a remarkable transformation in the appearance of the property, which at the time it came into his possession was the poorest piece of land in the county but is now classed with the most highly developed and valuable farms of this section. His brother, Henry Giger, is part owner of the property and is also associated with him in his other business interests. In 1920 he took up his residence in Bentonville, where he at first became connected with the feed business, later opening a garage and also engaging in the lumber business. He now devotes all of his attention to the management of his farms and his efforts have been crowned with a substantial measure of success.

In 1889 occurred the marriage of Julius Giger and Miss Alice H. Curt, a native of Vermilion county, Illinois, and a daughter of Thomas H. Curt, who served as a captain in the Civil war, receiving two severe wounds. Mr. and Mrs. Giger have had no children of their own but reared an adopted daughter, Cora Hatcher, who is now residing in Benton county. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political allegiance is given to the republican party. The cause of education has ever found in him a strong advocate and he is deeply interested in the schools of the county. For a number of years he was a director of the country schools and is now serving as school director of Bentonville, in which connection he is doing effective work. Energy, perseverance and thrift are recognized the world over as the foundation of material prosperity and these three qualities are possessed by Mr. Giger. He enjoys the esteem of many friends and fully deserves the honor that is accorded the fortunate individual who has fought and won in the great battle of life.

JAMES YOUNG STEVENS.

James Young Stevens, one of the prominent attorneys of Arkansas and chancellor of the seventh chancery circuit, was born near Haynesville, Louisiana, on the 30th day of April, 1856, a son of James Bailey and Mary Elizabeth (Foster) Stevens. The Stevens family are of English origin, members of the family having come to America at an early date. The father was born in Alabama and was carried by his parents to Mississippi. He lived there until manhood and with his father went to Claiborne Parish, Louisiana, in 1851. He followed farming the greater part of his life. His demise occurred at Magnolia, Arkansas in 1909, when seventy-six years of age. In 1861, upon the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted in the Confederate army and was in the active service for nearly the entire four years. He was wounded at the siege of Vicksburg. He was a noncommissioned officer in the infantry. Near Gordon, Louisiana, in 1855, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Stevens to Miss Mary Elizabeth Foster, and to their union five children were born, one boy and one girl dying in infancy. Of the three remaining children, all sons, James Young is the eldest. Mrs. Stevens died in 1902 at Magnolia.

In the acquirement of an education, James Young Stevens attended the country schools of Louisiana and the Haynesville Academy at Haynesville in said state, and after putting his textbooks aside he engaged in educational work for some time. From 1880 to 1886 he taught in the public schools of Louisiana and Arkansas, the most of the time being at Center Point, a country schoolhouse in Louisiana, and one year at Chalehyate Springs in Columbia county, Arkansas. About 1884 Mr. Stevens began the study of law at night and in his spare time, and in September, 1886, he came to Magnolia, continuing his studies under the preceptorship of Col. H. P. Smead, one of the leading attorneys of that day. In June, 1887, he went to Camden, Arkansas, and after passing an examination as provided by law he was admitted by the court to practice his chosen profession. He then returned to Magnolia and has since practiced here. He has an extensive general practice, and handles much important litigation before the courts. In 1908 Mr. Stevens was called to his first public office, being elected prosecuting attorney of the thirteenth judicial circuit comprising Columbia, Ouachita, Calhoun and Union counties, and he served for two terms with no opposition, the last term expiring in 1912. In 1920 he was elected chancellor for the seventh chancery circuit for a term of six years and he took over the duties of that office on the 1st of January, 1921. His circuit comprises Lafayette, Columbia, Ouachita, Union, Calhoun and Dallas counties. In addition to his legal and political interests he is a director in the Columbia County Bank of Magnolia and occupies a prominent place in financial circles.

On the 15th of November, 1894, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Stevens to Miss Effie J. Mullins, a native of Columbia county and a daughter of J. W. Mullins. Mr. Mullins was a successful farmer for many years in the county and afterwards moved to Magnolia and became a merchant. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stevens two children have been born: Ethel May, who married Herbert Jones of Pine Bluff, where she is now residing; and James Curtis, who is a student in Henderson-Brown College, Arkadelphia. He enlisted in the navy on the 1st of February, 1919, and served until receiving his honorable discharge in June or July, 1921.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church and Mr. Stevens is now serving as a steward. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias. Upon the entrance of the United States into the World war Mr. Stevens put all personal interest aside and took a prominent and active part in promoting his government's interest. He was a director of most of the Liberty Loan drives and served on the committee of the Three-Minute men and made speeches for the cause he represented. The success that has come to Mr. Stevens in a professional way is evidenced by the clientage accorded him. He has won a creditable position as a representative of the Arkansas bar. He is one of the estimable citizens of Magnolia who can always be depended upon to meet his obligations in both public and private life.

HON. THOMAS CHIPMAN McRAE.

Hon. Thomas Chipman McRae, whose political career has extended over a period covering almost half a century and who has long been recognized as one of the distinguished statesmen of Arkansas, is now serving as the twenty-sixth governor of the commonwealth, having been elected in November, 1920. His birth occurred at Mount Holly, Union county, Arkansas, on the 21st of December, 1851, his parents being Duncan L. and Mary Ann (Chipman) McRae, who were natives of North Carolina and Georgia, respectively. In the paternal line the family comes of Scotch ancestry. Duncan L. McRae took up his abode among the pioneer settlers of this state, here becoming a successful planter and a citizen of prominence and influence whose efforts contributed in no inconsiderable degree to the work of general improvement and progress. He died July 30, 1863, while his wife, surviving him for a third of a century, was called to her final rest on the 19th of April, 1897. Both were residents of Columbia county, Arkansas, at the time of their demise. Two sons of the family still survive.

Thomas C. McRae largely acquired his early education in private schools of Shady Grove, Mount Holly and Falcon, Arkansas, and subsequently spent one year as clerk in a general store at Shreveport, Louisiana. He next removed to New Orleans, where he completed a course in the Soule Business College by graduation with the class of 1869, after which he was employed in a store at Falcon, Arkansas, for a year. Having determined upon a professional career, he then entered the law department of the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, in 1871, this institution conferring upon him the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1872. In January, 1873, at Rosston, which was then the county seat of Nevada county, Arkansas, he was admitted to the bar and there commenced his work as a representative of the legal fraternity. In January, 1876, he was admitted to practice in the supreme court of the state and in January, 1886, to the supreme court of the United States. In 1917 he was elected president of the Arkansas Bar Association.

The county seat of Nevada county was changed from Rosston to Prescott in 1877

and in July of the same year Mr. McRae established his home in the latter place, where he won notable distinction in the practice of law. His political career began in 1874, when he was appointed election supervisor for Nevada county. In 1876 he was elected to represent that county in the lower house of the state legislature, while three years later he became a member of the city council of Prescott, of which he was likewise chosen recorder and city attorney in 1879. He has always remained a staunch supporter of democratic principles and has long been one of the leaders of the party in Arkansas. In 1880 he was made presidential elector on the democratic ticket and in 1884 he served as chairman of the democratic state central committee of Arkansas, while in the latter year he was also sent as a delegate to the democratic national convention. From 1896 until 1900 he was the democratic national committeeman from Arkansas. During the period between 1890 and 1893 he acted as school director and for several terms was special judge of the district composed of Lafayette and Pike counties. At a special election in 1885 he was elected representative of the third congressional district of Arkansas in the United States congress. By successive reelections he remained in the national halls of legislation for eighteen consecutive years or until he voluntarily retired in 1903—a record that has not been equaled by that of any other congressman from this state. Popular appreciation of his services was thus shown in an unequivocal way, and as a diligent, conscientious and able member of the United States congress his record became an integral part of the history of that body during the long period of his active and effective service therein. He was appointed a member of the state board of charities in April, 1909, and was elected as a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1917. The highest honor within the gift of the state was conferred upon him when he was elected governor in November, 1920, and is now ably guiding the destinies of the commonwealth. He is now a candidate for reelection.

While engaged in law practice at Prescott, Mr. McRae also became identified with varied and extensive business interests there and he is still the president of the Bank of Prescott. In 1909 he was honored with the presidency of the Arkansas Bankers' Association.

On the 17th of December, 1874, Mr. McRae was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Ann White, daughter of Captain William R. and Mary Jane (Clarke) White, of Rosston, Arkansas. Her father, one of the honored citizens of Nevada county, was at that time serving as county clerk. Mr. and Mrs. McRae became the parents of nine children, six daughters and three sons: Ethel, who is the widow of Horace Bemis of Prescott, Arkansas; Herbert, who died at the age of five years; Mary, who is the widow of Dr. F. H. Montgomery and resides in Prescott, Arkansas; Alice, twin sister of Mary, who died in infancy; Corrie, who died at the age of seventeen years; Thomas C., Jr., who is cashier of the Bank of Prescott at Prescott, Arkansas; Norvelle, who died at the age of eleven years; Duncan L., an attorney practicing as a member of the firm of Tompkins, McRae & Tompkins; and Mildred, the wife of John D. Barlow of Hope, Arkansas.

Fraternal Governor McRae is well known as a representative of the Masonic order, in which he has attained the Knights Templar degree of the York Rite and the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He is likewise identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Presbyterian church, in which he is an elder and to which his wife also belongs. Not seeking honor but simply endeavoring to do his duty, honors have yet been multiplied to him and prosperity has followed all his undertakings. No man in public life perhaps has had so few enemies. Even those opposed to him politically entertain for him the warmest personal regard and admiration. His life record finds embodiment in the words of Pope:

"Statesman, yet friend to truth, of soul sincere,
In action faithful and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gained no title and who lost no friend."

HON. W. K. OLDHAM.

On the pages of Arkansas' history the name of the Hon. W. K. Oldham stands prominently forth, for he has rendered to the state important public service as a member of the upper house of the general assembly and also as acting governor. He makes his home in Pettus, from which point he superintends his business interests, although his political activity has called him into many sections of the state. A native of Kentucky, he was born in Richmond, in 1865, and is a son of W. K. and Catherine (Brown) Oldham. His father was also a Kentuckian by birth, the place of his nativity being in Madison county. He was a son of Hezekiah Oldham, who was born in central Kentucky, the family having resided in that state from pioneer times. W. K. Oldham was a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war, serving under General John Morgan. His wife was a daughter of Dr. R. Brown and her people, too, were well known in the Blue Grass state. Hezekiah Oldham, the grandfather, married Polly Cavanaugh and in Kentucky they reared their family, as did also W. K. Oldham and his wife, who became the parents of six children: Mary, the wife of Governor Eagle of Arkansas; Kate, who became the wife of W. H. Miller; Margaret, the wife of John Doty; W. K., of this review; Kie, who was a lawyer of Little Rock and also a member of the state senate of Arkansas but has now departed this life; and Ira B., a physician, living in Muskogee, Oklahoma.

W. K. Oldham, whose name introduces this review, was accorded liberal educational opportunities in preparation for his life work. He supplemented his early studies by attending the Central University at Richmond, Kentucky. Following his graduation he came to Arkansas, arriving in Pettus in 1885. Throughout the intervening period of thirty-seven years he has resided in this city and has been closely associated not only with the development of his locality but of the state as well. He rode horseback to Pettus on coming to Arkansas, where he joined his sister, who had become the wife of Governor Eagle and their home was in this place. In the years which have since been added to the cycle of the centuries Mr. Oldham has become an important factor in connection with the agricultural progress of the state and today controls fifteen hundred acres of land. He follows diversified farming and is prominently known as an extensive cotton planter. He also raises blooded live stock and along various lines has led to the improvement of the live stock industry and to the advancement of agricultural methods in this state. He has at all times been actuated by a spirit of progress and his labors have brought most satisfactory results.

Mr. Oldham was united in marriage to Miss Lillian Munroe, a daughter of L. W. and America (Thompson) Munroe. They have become the parents of two children: W. K., who served during the World war; and Lillian, who was educated at Rome, Georgia, and is now teaching in Fordyce, Arkansas.

Mr. Oldham is a Baptist in religious faith and has served as moderator of the Caroline Baptist Association, also as president of the Baptist state board of Arkansas. In other words he has been a most active and earnest worker in the church and in many ways has promoted its welfare and success. He has also been most active in advancing the interests of the schools in and near Pettus. Fifteen years ago the school in his neighborhood had an attendance of only six white children. Mr. Oldham liberally donated funds for the establishment of a modern grade school, which is called the Oldham school. A building was erected and there is now an attendance of three hundred pupils. Mr. Oldham has exerted a widely felt and beneficial influence over public affairs through his political labors. He served in the Arkansas house of representatives in 1907 and from 1911 until 1913 he was state senator, acting as president of the senate in 1913 and proving most fair and impartial in his rulings. In the spring of that year he also became acting governor. While a member of the house he introduced a bill repealing the anti-trust law, thus allowing insurance companies to reenter the state and the public to benefit by insurance, while in the senate he was the promulgator of good road legislation and introduced bills that resulted in the first road being built in Lenoire county. He has done everything in his power to promote the building of good roads, his labors have been an effective force in improving the public highways in the state and his influence in this direction can scarcely be overestimated, as good roads are a foundation upon which is built much of the prosperity and development of a community. Mr. Oldham also served on the state board of charities and in this connection aided in carrying through an extensive building program, furnishing adequate care for the unfortunate. His life has, indeed, reached out along many lines of service and of usefulness and as the years have passed the state's indebtedness to him for valuable aid has been piled up until today Arkansas acknowledges her obligations to him in large measure for the progress that has been brought about through his labors.

JAMES W. BUTLER.

James W. Butler, cashier of the Washington State Bank, is proving a capable and obliging official of that institution and the thoroughness with which he takes up his work and carries on his duties day by day constitutes a contributing factor to the success of the business. Mr. Butler was born in Batesville, Arkansas, November 9, 1869. His youthful days were spent in the town and his education was acquired in the public schools, supplemented by study in Arkansas College. Starting out in the business world, he was employed on the Cotton Belt Railroad for a period of fourteen years and, removing from Texarkana to Washington in 1909, he here became associated with the Lesser-Goldman Cotton Company of St. Louis, having charge of their plantation of sixteen hundred acres as manager. Though the duties were heavy and manifold, he measured up to the standards demanded by his employers, giving to them the benefit of capable and efficient service. In 1918 he became cashier of the Washington State Bank and is now one of its stockholders. He is also one of the stockholders of the W. J. Johnson Mercantile Company and is thus closely associated with the commercial and financial interests of the town.

In 1913 Mr. Butler was united in marriage to Miss Lenora Trimble and their circle of friends in Washington is almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintance. Mr. Butler is a member of the Masonic fraternity, recognizing the brotherhood of man and the obligations thereby imposed. He is also a faithful member of the Presbyterian church and his aid and influence are ever on the side of reform, right and progress.

IVERSON H. JEWELL, M. D.

Dr. Iverson H. Jewell, who since 1908 has been a representative of the medical profession in Arkansas and who has been successfully practicing in Paris as a surgeon since 1911, was born in West Tennessee, April 18, 1878, and is a son of I. C. and Frances (James) Jewell, who were natives of Middle Tennessee, and the former was of Scotch descent. The grandfather, Elihu Jewell, was born in Scotland and on coming to America in young manhood settled in Tennessee, where he followed the blacksmith's trade. The grandfather in the maternal line was Alva James, a native of Virginia, who spent most of his life in Tennessee, where he departed this life. The birth of I. C. Jewell occurred in 1852 and his death in 1897. His wife, who was born in 1848, died in 1904. They were married in Middle Tennessee, whence they removed to the western part of the state and in 1880 came to Logan county, Arkansas, where Mr. Jewell homesteaded and began farming. He purchased more land from time to time and at his death was the owner of an excellent property, both he and his wife dying on the farm. They had a family of eleven children, seven of whom are living: I. H.; N. C., a farmer of Sugar Grove, Arkansas; E. V., who was for a time engaged in the oil business and is now farming at Chickasha, Oklahoma; A. C., who is occupying the old homestead; J. B., living on a farm near Paris; V. C., who has charge of the commissary for the farmers' union in Oklahoma; and V. L., who is practicing medicine in Blaine, Arkansas. The parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in Paris, and Mr. Jewell gave his political endorsement to the democratic party.

Iverson H. Jewell pursued his early education in the rural schools of Logan county and continued his studies in the high school at Paris, after which he spent a year in the State University of Arkansas. For six or eight years he engaged successfully in teaching school but regarded this merely as an initial step to other professional labor and eagerly availed himself of the opportunity to become a student in the medical college of the State University at Little Rock, where he was graduated in 1908, receiving the medal from the medical department of the university for the highest standing in the four-year course. He then began practice in the capital city, where he remained for three years and was in the city hospital at Little Rock from 1907 until 1910. In 1911 he assisted in organizing the hospital at Paris and still owns a third interest in this institution. He makes a specialty of surgery and is particularly capable and successful in this branch of the profession. He entered the army and was commissioned a first lieutenant of the Reserve Corps of the regular army in 1914. He was called out for active service on the Mexican border in 1916 and following his return home was appointed a member of the draft board, on which he served in 1917 and 1918. In the latter year he was commissioned a captain in the regular army and did laboratory work at Whipple Barracks in Arizona for a time, after which he was transferred to Camp Pike and served on the surgical staff there until after the signing of the armistice. Later he returned home and began the active practice of medicine and surgery at Paris, was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps and was also commissioned examiner of the war bureau insurance and was made county health officer in 1914, serving until June, 1921, except while in active service. He has done much important public work in the field of his profession in addition to a large private practice and is regarded as one of the foremost physicians and surgeons of Logan county.

In September, 1913, Dr. Jewell was married to Miss Mosella Laubon, who was born in Ozark, Arkansas, a daughter of J. W. Laubon, an early settler and well known farmer of Franklin county. Dr. Jewell and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he belongs also to the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and to the American Legion. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party and he is most loyal to any cause which he espouses. He belongs to the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, and is a member of the American Medical Association, and he devotes his entire time to the practice of medicine and surgery, having a liberal patronage. His ability, which has been developed through earnest study and broad experience, is today widely acknowledged not only by the laity but by his professional colleagues and contemporaries as well.

LUM WILLIAMS.

One of the substantial business men of Huntington, Arkansas, is Lum Williams, who has engaged in the grocery business here for some time. He was born in Shamokin, Pennsylvania, in 1881, a son of Nels and Elizabeth (Burgett) Williams. His father was a well known and successful physician and his demise occurred in Oklahoma, to which state he had removed. The maternal grandfather came from Alabama. Dr. Williams was an army surgeon during the Civil war, having offered his services to the Union upon the outbreak of the conflict. To the union of Dr. and Mrs. Williams four children were born: Martha, Mary, Nell and Lum, whose name initiates this review.

In the acquirement of an education Lum Williams attended the schools of McAlester, Oklahoma, and upon putting his textbooks aside made his initial step into the business world in connection with the meat business. In 1913 he came to Huntington. Previous to locating here, however, he engaged in the grocery and meat market business at Bonanza. Mr. Williams has built up an extensive patronage and has a well equipped store with a butcher shop in connection. He is one of the prominent and representative business men in Huntington and has contributed much to the growth and development of that place.

Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Hayes of Barling, this state, and to them three children have been born: Harry, Morris, and Louise. Fraternally Mr. Williams is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of A. M. He takes the interest of an intelligent and wide-awake citizen in public affairs and in the selection of competent men for office. He has never become actively engaged in politics, nor has he sought nor held public office, preferring the quiet home life and the association of a select circle of friends.

WILLIAM W. BETHELL.

William W. Bethell, an alert and energetic merchant of Des Arc was born in Prairie county, a son of B. B. Bethell, also a native of this county. The father married Miss Mary Walsh, a daughter of the well known Dr. William Walsh, who practiced medicine in Prairie county for many years and who was a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war. B. B. Bethell also served with the Confederate forces during the period of hostilities between the north and the south and afterward became a river pilot at a time when all traffic and transportation was conducted by means of the river route. He afterward worked as a salesman and subsequently opened a store, in which connection he developed a business of splendid proportions, becoming one of the prominent and representative merchants of Des Arc. B. B. Bethell served during the Civil war in General William Slemmons' brigade, in Colonel Crawford's regiment and in Company E, under Captain A. S. Erwin, the commander of a Cavalry Company. To him and his wife were born four children: William W., Henry B., Erwin and Bedford. The last named joined the American army during the World war, enlisting at Jacksonville, Florida, and was sent to France with the Motor Transportation Corps, dying of illness on the western front. His death greatly affected his mother, who gradually succumbed to her grief and it seemed as though the summons from the other side was clearly manifest to her as she made a will a few days prior to her death mentioning in the legal document that the Father in heaven, the Master, had called her. She died a few days after making this will, although she was in her usual health at the time she penned the document.

W. W. Bethell served as chairman of the United War Work campaign in Prairie county and the family always registered one hundred per cent in everything having to do with the prosecution of the war and the maintenance of high civic standards in relation to community, commonwealth and country. W. W. Bethell was reared under the parental roof with the usual experiences of the lad of the period, who largely devotes his boyhood to the acquirement of a public school education. The present Bethell store was organized in 1902 and W. W. Bethell is now the active head of the concern, having devoted many years to the conduct of the business in association with his father. He is a progressive and enterprising business man, who closely studies the demands of the trade and who, in his energy and enterprise, is meeting with most substantial success.

W. W. Bethell was united in marriage to Miss Bertie Greer, a daughter of T. F. Greer of Des Arc, and they have two children: Preston and Mary Nell. Henry B. Bethell, a brother of W. W. Bethell, married Clara Pride; and Irwin Bethell wedded Katie Sides, their children being, Mary, Virginia and Caroline. The family is widely and prominently known in this section of the state, where their activities have constituted an important element in the material development and in the social, intellectual and moral progress of the community. Their record is closely interwoven with the history of Prairie county and the work of father and son has been of decided benefit and value to the community. Both W. W. Bethell and his father are men of marked initiative and they have left and are leaving the impress of their individuality in marked manner upon the development of Prairie county.

VIRGIL CARPENTER PETTIE.

Virgil Carpenter Pettie, vice president of the England National Bank and president of the Arkansas Hydro-Electric Development Company, is one of the most alert and progressive business men of Little Rock. His activities have ever been of a character that have contributed to public progress and advancement as well as to individual success, and the value of his service in connection with the upbuilding of the capital is widely acknowledged. Mr. Pettie was born in Eminence, Henry county, Kentucky, November 2, 1878, and is a son of the Rev. Albert S. and Louella (Tinsley) Pettie, both of whom are Kentuckians. The father was born in Versailles, that state, in 1851, while the mother's birth occurred in Eminence in 1857. They were married at the latter place on the 9th of January, 1878, and they are now residents of Hickman, Kentucky. The father has devoted his life to the work of the ministry of the Baptist church and he has always given his political endorsement to the democratic party. To him and his wife have been born seven children, a son and six daughters, all of whom are yet living.

Virgil Carpenter Pettie, the only son, pursued his early education in the public schools of Mayfield, Clinton and Hopkinsville, Kentucky. He also attended the Clinton (Ky.) College and in 1897 he came with the family to Arkansas, settlement being made in Jonesboro. In the year 1900, however, the father returned to Kentucky and is now pastor of the First Baptist church in Hickman.

Remaining in Arkansas, Mr. Pettie has through the intervening years made for himself a very prominent position in business and financial circles in his adopted state. When he became identified with the England National Bank of Little Rock, the Arkansas Gazette said: "Virgil C. Pettie, vice president of the Bank of Jonesboro, has been elected an active vice president by the board of directors of the England National Bank. Mr. Pettie is one of the most widely known bankers in Arkansas. He was president of the Arkansas Bankers Association in 1917 and was vice chairman and in active charge of the Victory Liberty Loan campaign in Arkansas in the spring of 1919. He is the president of the Jonesboro Building & Loan Association and of the Jonesboro Rotary Club and is secretary of the A. B. Jones Company, the largest wholesale grocery company in eastern Arkansas. He is likewise interested in other business enterprises." Thus before coming to Little Rock, Mr. Pettie had had broad experience along business lines and had become firmly established as a most substantial and progressive citizen, ready to meet any emergency or to improve any opportunity. Aside from his connection with the England National Bank as its vice president, he is today the president of the Arkansas Hydro-Electric Development Company, to which office he was called in 1920. He is likewise the vice president of the United Insurance Agency of Jonesboro, Arkansas. One who has long been associated with him in business said of him: "Virgil C. Pettie is a banker of the new school of thought; he recognizes the duty a banker owes the public and discharges it. He is an entertaining speaker and lends this gift as well as his rare judgment freely and without selfish interests to public work. He has never been connected with an unsuccessful enterprise. While the bank with which he is connected will benefit from his services, Little Rock too will also enjoy the advantage of having as a citizen such a man as Virgil C. Pettie, who not only occupies an advantageous place in the business circles of the capital, but whose splendid ability, progressive ideas and public-spirited citizenship radiate a larger sphere of enthusiasm to others in the upbuilding of the state and the development of Little Rock as its commercial center."

On the 21st of December, 1901, in St. Louis, Mr. Pettie was married to Miss Blanche Hawthorne, who was born in Corning, Arkansas, in 1882. They now have one child, John Hawthorne Pettie, born March 5, 1904. Mr. Pettie is a member of the Baptist church and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and to the Country Club. In politics he is a democrat, but in times of national crisis partisanship is always made subservient to patriotism. He served on the County Council of Defense, was county chairman of War Loan and district manager of the third and fourth Liberty Bond drives, while in the spring of 1919 he was made vice chairman for Arkansas of the Victory Loan. He has acted as secretary of the Arkansas state democratic central committee. He is the president of the Arkansas Advancement Association and in that office has done effective work for the welfare and progress of the state. He is a man of broad vision as well as of marked executive force and he carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

WILLIAM ERI LIVINGSTON.

William Eri Livingston, who is the organizer and head of a newly created real estate firm known as the W. E. Livingston Company, 123 West Second Street, Little Rock, has had wide experience in the field in which he is active and has made steady progress along his chosen line. Mr. Livingston knows Arkansas, her opportunities and possibilities, and is especially familiar with her real estate market. He is a native son of the state, born in Enola, Faulkner county, May 18, 1880. His parents, Asher Eugène and Miranda Bartimeus (Whiteley) Livingston, were natives of Caledonia, Boone county, Illinois, and of near Batesville, Arkansas, respectively, the former born June 10, 1853, and the latter March 9, 1855. They were married in 1874 and became parents of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are living. Following his removal to the southwest Mr. Livingston engaged in merchandising at Conway, Arkansas, from 1889 until 1920, or for a period of more than three decades, but is now living retired, he and his wife making their home in Little Rock.

William E. Livingston pursued his early education in the public schools of Enola and of Conway, Arkansas, the family removing to the latter place in 1889. He was then graduated from the high school with the class of 1900 and after putting aside his textbooks he became the active assistant and partner of his father and his brother J. J., in the store in Conway, which was conducted under the style of A. E. Livingston & Sons from 1900 until 1906. In the latter year the junior partner became a member of the firm of Wilson Brothers & Livingston, haberdashers, of Conway, Arkansas, a connection that was continued until 1910, in which year Mr. Livingston turned his attention to the real estate field, becoming secretary and treasurer of the Holman Real Estate Company of Little Rock. This business was organized under a partnership relation, but was incorporated in 1911. He continued to discharge the official duties of that position until April, 1917, at which time he became a real estate salesman for the Southern Trust Company, with which he remained until November, 1918, when he accepted the position of manager of the real estate department of the Central Bank of Little Rock. Several years before, or in 1911, he began the study of law and in 1915 was graduated from the law department of the University of Arkansas. While he has never practiced the profession, his knowledge of law is of great value to him in the conduct of his business affairs. He continued with the Central Bank until August, 1921, when he established the firm now conducting business under the name of the W. E. Livingston Company, the Realtors. His previous experience has been of great value to him and he is making substantial progress. The firm has become a member of the real estate bureau of the Board of Commerce and Mr. Livingston is one who studies closely every phase of the business and is able to speak with authority upon anything connected with the local real estate market. The firm handles Little Rock and Arkansas property and already has gained a good clientele.

On the 8th of November, 1905, at Benton, Arkansas, Mr. Livingston was married to Miss Mary Evelyn Glenn, who was born in Benton, Arkansas, August 20, 1882, and is a graduate of the Central College at Conway. She is a daughter of Hiram S. and Martha (Quinn) Glenn. The father died in 1919 at the age of eighty-three years, while the mother survives and makes her home in Benton. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston have become the parents of two children: Evelyn Maurine, born July 29, 1907; and Margaret Elizabeth, born October 10, 1911.

Mr. and Mrs. Livingston are members of the Second Baptist church. He has always voted with the democratic party and his loyalty in matters of progressive citizenship is pronounced. During the World war he served on the local bond drives and in days of peace or days of war he labors untiringly for the adoption of high ideals in regard to public affairs. Appreciative of the social amenities of life he has membership in the Lakeside Country Club.

H. S. NEEL, D. D. S.

The dental fraternity of Stuttgart finds a young but progressive representative of the profession in Dr. H. S. Neel, who is one of the native sons of this state, his birth having occurred at Bearden in 1893. He is a son of J. R. and Esther (Yeager) Neel, the former born near Princeton, Arkansas, while the latter was born at Bearden. The grandfather in the paternal line was James Neel, who on coming to this state settled at Princeton.

Dr. Neel pursued his education in the Brock Springs Academy of Arkansas and in preparation for the practice of dentistry entered the University of Tennessee and was graduated from the dental department with the D. D. S. degree in 1915. He taught school at Huttig, Arkansas, in that year and then entered upon the active practice of dentistry at Delight, Arkansas, where he remained until 1916, when he removed to Stuttgart. Here he opened an office but in 1917 abandoned his professional interests in order to join the army. He enlisted in the Medical Corps, went to Fort Riley and was afterward sent overseas, going to Nantes, France, where he was stationed during the period of his foreign service. When the country no longer needed his aid he returned to the United States and once more resumed practice in Stuttgart, where his ability is fast winning him recognition, until his practice is now gratifying and gives every evidence of future growth.

Dr. Neel was married to Miss Orpha Hill, a native of Streator, Illinois. Fraternally he is a Mason and that he has advanced far in the order is indicated in his connection with the Mystic Shrine. He likewise belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and enjoys in large measure the high and friendly regard of his fellow members of these fraternities.

WILL HUGH MOCK, M. D. F. A. C. S.

Dr. Will Hugh Mock, thoroughly trained for the practice of medicine and surgery, has won notable success in following his profession in Prairie Grove, where his record stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for in this locality in which his life has been passed he has made substantial progress and enjoys in unusual measure the confidence and goodwill of his fellowmen. Dr. Mock was born here in 1875, his parents being John and Margaret (Rogers) Mock, the former a native of Sevier county, Tennessee, while the latter was born near Charleston, South Carolina. The Mock family was long represented in Tennessee, the grandfather having been a native of that state, while within the borders of the commonwealth he spent his life. The grandfather in the maternal line was Hugh Rogers, a native of Charleston, South Carolina, who came to Arkansas in pioneer times and devoted his life to farming, aiding in the early agricultural development of the section in which he lived.

The marriage of John Mock and Margaret Rogers was celebrated in Georgia and removing to Arkansas they settled in Washington county in 1851. Here Mr. Mock purchased a farm, which is still owned by his son, Dr. Mock. In his religious faith the father was a Methodist and fraternally he was a Mason. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party and during the Civil war he served for four years with the Confederate army. He departed this life December 16, 1900. He is still survived by his widow, who has reached the notable age of ninety-one years. Mrs. Mock deserves more than passing notice in this volume, by reason of the part which she played in the period of pioneer development and her activity in the Civil war. Her home was located on the battle ground of Prairie Grove and during the course of the battle she sent her daughter to the cellar while she remained in the home until after firing had ceased. When hostilities were over she had the wounded brought to her home in order to help nurse them. She knitted socks and made clothing for the soldiers throughout the war, gave them food and in every possible way assisted the southern cause. When the troops were encamped near her home she and an old negro went to the fields and shot their hogs, which they then cooked and served to the soldiers of the south. Mrs. Mock is still living near the old home with her son and though she is now an octogenarian she possesses all her faculties to an unusual degree and is a most well informed and lovable old lady, who well deserves prominent mention in the history of the state. Mr. and Mrs. John Mock had a family of eight children, all of whom are living: J. E., a land owner of San Angelo, Texas; John F., also a land owner, living at Altus, Oklahoma; W. H., of this review; Martha J., the wife of J. J. Baggett of Fayetteville; Mary, the widow of Frank Lake of Oklahoma, now living in Prairie Grove; Margaret, who is the widow of Samuel Neal of Altus, Oklahoma, and a wealthy land owner of that place; Carolyn, the wife of Senator G. T. Cazort, wealthy planter of Lamar, Arkansas, who is a large land owner and now represents his district in the state senate; and Josephine, who is the wife of W. L. Stuckey, an attorney of Fayetteville, who also owns a fine country home at Johnson, Arkansas.

Dr. Mock pursued his education after completing his public school course in the University of Arkansas and in the Vanderbilt College of Tennessee, in which he matriculated as a medical student, being there graduated with the class of 1895. He next attended the University of Tennessee and completed his course there in 1899. He had a year's hospital service during that period and later he became chief surgeon for the O. & C. C. Railroad. In 1899 he entered upon the private practice of medicine and after his hospital service he opened his office in Prairie Grove, where he has remained, save for the period of two years which he spent in connection with the railroad company. He engages in general practice and also specializes in surgery. He has taken postgraduate work in New Orleans, Philadelphia, Chicago, New York, Kansas City and Cleveland and has thus constantly promoted his knowledge and increased his efficiency. He is now prominently known by reason of his highly developed skill in surgery and does all his operating in Fayetteville hospitals. He possesses comprehensive knowledge of anatomy and the component parts of the human body, is cool and collected in the face of cases and his efforts have been attended with splendid results.

Dr. Mock belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Since attaining his majority he has been a stalwart democrat and has filled various local offices. As the years have passed he has acquired outside business interests beyond his profession, having made judicious investment in banks, in oil stations and in land. He owns two excellent farms and town property and is the owner of two parks in Prairie Grove. After all, however, his time and energies are most concentrated upon his professional duties and he keeps in close touch with the trend of modern thought along medical and surgical lines through his membership in the Washington County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and he is also a fellow of the American College of Surgeons. The Doctor has perhaps given more of his time gratis toward charitable work than any other man in his town and to the development of his community, from the good roads subject to every call that is made for help and charity.

ANDREW CLAUDE HAMILTON.

Some men live for gain and judge the world by the inch rule of self; others gain a world vision and form their opinions by the understanding obtained through association with the master minds of all ages. Principle and not personal prejudice is their guide, and dignity in thought and honor in action mark their pathways. Such was the career of A. C. Hamilton, a man whose business success was not inconsiderable but who regarded the attainment of wealth only as a means to an end. Life with him found its expression in his love of travel, love of literature and most of all in his love of family.

Mr. Hamilton was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1852, and traveled life's journey to 1913, when he was called to the home beyond. He came of an old and distinguished family and his lines of life were cast in harmony with the ancestral history. He pursued his education in the schools of Belfast, Ireland, and it was intended that he should enter the ministry, but changing his plans, he came to the United States at the age of nineteen years and entered the business world. His first position was in the establishment of A. T. Stewart, then "The Merchant Prince of America," in New York city. The great west appealed to his love for a bigger life, and going to Indiana he engaged in business for a time in Muncie. From there he went to Memphis, Tennessee, where he was prominent in business and social life.

ANDREW C. HAMILTON

But love of travel took him into the empire of Texas. In Waco he opened a wholesale grocery business, which he later removed to Galveston.

One summer he chanced to visit Fayetteville, Arkansas, and was at once impressed with the beauty of the town, the natural scenery and the excellent climate and in 1896 removed his family to this city. Here he originated the dried fruit packing industry in Arkansas and made shipments on an extensive scale. He built up a great business, shipping to practically every state in the Union. Later he established a cold storage, which also proved a most profitable enterprise, contributing to the substantial growth and development of the city as well as to the advancement of his individual fortunes. He rejoiced in his success merely by reason of what it enabled him to do for his family and his fellowmen. He found his happiness in visiting the beauty spots of the world, in spending hours and days and months in poring over the writings of the best authors of all ages and most of all in bringing his family into touch with those interests which develop character and bring cultural worth into life.

In 1880 Mr. Hamilton was united in marriage to Miss Mary Kate Downs, who was born in Waco, Texas, in 1858, a daughter of William P. and Martha Sandal (Fort) Downs, both of whom were natives of northern Alabama and both representatives of distinguished old southern families. The grandfather of Mrs. Hamilton in the paternal line was Major W. W. Downs, a native of North Carolina, who at an early day removed to Alabama and in 1854 became a resident of Waco, Texas, where he purchased several thousand acres of land and owned many slaves. He built the first two-story residence in Waco and was largely connected with the development and improvement of that section of the country. He served as a chaplain in the Civil war and all of his sons were in the Confederate army. Prospering as the years went by, he left a vast estate. The grandfather of Mrs. Hamilton in the maternal line was David G. Fort, a native of North Carolina and a descendant of Frederick Fort of Revolutionary fame.

William P. Downs, father of Mrs. Hamilton, was a graduate of the Lagrange (Va.) College, while his wife was a graduate of the college at Athens, Alabama. In 1854 they removed to Texas and he soon won place as one of the eminent educators of the state, becoming the second president of the Waco Female College, which position he filled to the time of his early death at the age of thirty-two years. To him and his wife were born four children, three of whom are living: F. F., who is the president of the First National Bank at Temple, Texas; P. L., vice president of the bank; and Mrs. Hamilton. Mr. Downs was an exemplary follower of the Masonic fraternity and he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton was blessed with six children, five of whom are living. Claude, who died in infancy in Ireland, was interred in the family burying ground in White Church cemetery, where the Hamiltons had interred their dead for three hundred years. The others are: Mary Fort, the eldest, who is the wife of Roswell Sears Lander, a Boston man who belongs to one of the prominent old New England families and who is now engaged in the manufacturing business in Little Rock; Eileen Kathleen, who is the wife of Dr. Neal Carothers of New York. He was the first young man in Arkansas to win the Cecil Rhodes scholarship, after which he received a degree at Princeton and later was a teacher in that university; William J., the eldest son, who has charge of his father's business, was president of the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce and was chairman of the local board of the Council of Defense during the World war; Andrew C., a civil engineer, who was graduated from the University of Arkansas and is now a well known contractor in road building in Arkansas. A. C. Hamilton, Jr., married Hallie De Vaney and they have a daughter, Katherine Howard; and Scott Downs, the youngest, who was a prominent student of the University of Arkansas and entered the service in the World war, going overseas with the rank of lieutenant. He now travels for the A. C. Hamilton Company and has charge of the orchards. The family circle has twice been broken by the hand of death—first when Claude departed this life while the family was visiting in Ireland and again in 1913, when Mr. Hamilton was called to the home beyond. He never took an active part in politics but voted with the democratic party. He was chosen to represent Texas as commissioner to the World Exposition in Paris, France, in 1889, and, accompanied by his family, went to that country. Mr. Hamilton's position as Commissioner to the Exposition brought to them many courtesies and opportunities which were not enjoyed by the ordinary tourist. They spent two years in Europe, principally in Ireland. In 1909 Mr. Hamilton and his daughter, Miss Eileen Kathleen, visited the city of Mexico and while there they were presented to President Diaz. One of Mr. Hamilton's strongest ambitions was to give his children every possible educational advantage and every opportunity for travel. Again and again, accompanied by some member of his family,

Mr. Hamilton took trips in this and foreign lands, making thirteen voyages to Europe. His business attained to great proportions, and when he wished for rest or recreation he would go to some of the best libraries of America, and selecting the best books of great authors, would find his relaxation in reading, sometimes for weeks at a time. His home life was largely ideal and the closest companionship existed between husband and wife, based upon their mutual interests, their love for all that is uplifting and their hopes and desires for their family. Storing his mind throughout life with all that is best in the broad field of literature, Mr. Hamilton came to be a splendid writer and excellent public speaker. It was not that he prepared for such things but that his brain was a storehouse from which he drew at will for arguments, for narratives, for discussions or illustrations. Association with him meant expansion and elevation. He was a constant stimulus to the best that was in others and when he died his life called forth a tribute such as is seldom given or deserved in this day when in large measure self-interest seems to reign supreme in the individual and in nations. A friend wrote: "The death of this remarkable man is a heavy loss to the town where for many years he was a conspicuous figure in business, social and religious circles. Blessings brighten as they take their flight. This is especially so when a good man dies. So devoted was our friend to his daily toil, the management of a great enterprise, that only his death can teach us how admirable was his patience, his perseverance, and his self-sacrifice. Made of finer clay, cast in a larger mould, he lived on a higher plane than the average man. He was resourceful, believed in the Irish proverb that 'When God closes one door he opens another,' and so in every place of responsibility he filled the measure. His heart was sensitive to pain and wrong as the needle of a compass to a disturbing influence. To say or to do a harsh thing gave him nights of solitude and sorrow. To him a sordid deed was appalling, and a wound, a crucifixion. He was as true a gentleman as ever broke bread at the circle of a court. He kept his heart with diligence because he believed that in the heart are the issues of life. He was rich in what he was rather than in what he possessed. He believed money valuable as a means, never as an end, and so he used it for the comfort of his home, the advancement of his religion and the pleasure of his friends. He had a genius for work, whether in dealing with the problems of business life or the study of a great book. He read the best literature both of the present and the past. His information was varied, extensive and accurate. His memory was phenomenal, and he had the imagination of a poet. To confine such a mind to the details and the drudgery of a great business was like hitching a race horse to a plough. To the minister of the evangel of Christ this lovable man was the most sympathetic and helpful friend. He had the listening ear and the understanding heart. He knew the value of an encouraging word and how to speak it in a sincere and modest way. When he ventured an adverse criticism it was given in a gentle and winsome spirit that won both gratitude and affection. While we carry with us the heavy sorrow of his death we are cheered, strengthened and inspired by the lessons of his life, and the certainty of his reward."

FRANK TOMLINSON.

Frank Tomlinson, a cotton broker of Pine Bluff, was born in the city which he still makes his home in the year 1874, his parents being Frank and Mary (Bronson) Tomlinson. The father, a native of Florence, Alabama, was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Tomlinson, who lived for many years in the vicinity of Florence. The father served with the Confederate army during the Civil war, joining the troops when a mere boy and acting as orderly on the staff of one of the generals. He served throughout the war and was wounded in action. Later in the '60s he came to Pine Bluff and entered the employ of Jacob Fies. In 1870 he established business on his own account as a general merchant and prospered as the years passed by. He also accumulated extensive cotton acreage and was prominently identified with the cultivation of that crop in his section of the state. He wedded Mary Bronson, a daughter of Dr. Asa and Lucinda (Simpson) Bronson. Her father was a native of Tennessee and was an extensive planter after coming to Arkansas. Her mother was born in Fairfax county, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Tomlinson, Sr., became the parents of eight children, three of whom are living: Louise, Asa and Frank. The others died in infancy. The daughter married Will Nolan of New York and they had one son, Will, who served in the World war. The father of this family died in 1888. The mother is living, now making her home at Pine Bluff.

Frank Tomlinson was educated in the schools of Pine Bluff and in Jordan's Academy. He subsequently entered the coal business and later was engaged in railroad office work.

Since 1896 he has been engaged in the brokerage business and in 1909 he entered the cotton business as a buyer and seller. He has made for himself a creditable place in connection with the cotton industry in this section of the country and he today has one thousand acres planted to cotton. His business affairs are wisely and capably managed, owing to his diligence, determination and laudable ambition.

In 1897 Mr. Tomlinson was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Roane, a daughter of Samuel C. and Minnie (Hunn) Roane. They have become parents of three children: Frank Roane, May and Horace Hunn. Fraternally Mr. Tomlinson is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. During the World war he served as county chairman of the Liberty Loan drives and as district chairman of the War Savings Stamps campaign. He was also active on the County Council of Defense and in connection with the Red Cross, doing everything in his power to maintain the stability of the home lines, which constituted the financial defense of the firing lines on the western front in Europe. Mr. Tomlinson has always lived in Pine Bluff and his history is as an open book, which all may read. Diligence, adaptability and perseverance have been marked features in his success, which has increased year by year and which is the merited and legitimate outcome of his personal effort.

C. H. C. HOWARD.

C. H. C. Howard, engaged in the insurance business at Beebe, is a representative of ancestral lines that can be traced back in New England to the year 1640. It was in that year that Thomas Howard landed in this country and established his home at Norwich, Connecticut. The line comes on down through Benjamin and Thomas to William Howard, the great-great-grandfather, who was a native of Massachusetts and was killed at the battle of White Plains, while serving in the Revolutionary war. His son, Abel Howard, was a native of Sturbridge, Massachusetts, and was the father of Dr. Abel Howard (II), who was born in Hartford, Vermont, and who wedded Mary E. Hunt, a native of Connecticut, and they became the parents of eight children: Abel T., Mary E., George A., Julia A., George, Austin, Sophia and Elizabeth. The last two named are still living. The first of this family, Abel T. Howard, was the father of C. H. C. Howard. He married Anna H. Cutts and both were natives of Vermont, the former born in West Hartford and the latter in North Hartland. In the maternal line the ancestry can also be traced back to a remote period. The grandfather, Hampden Cutts, was a native of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and was a graduate of Harvard University. He exerted a widely felt influence over the history of his state, serving as probate judge for many years and also as representative in the state legislature. He was descended from Robert Cutts, a native of England, who on crossing the Atlantic in 1640 settled at Kittery, Maine. The line comes on down to Richard (I) and Richard (II), who was a major in the War of Lewisburg in 1745. He was the father of Samuel Cutts, who in turn was the father of Edward Cutts, a native of Kittery, Maine. The last named was the father of Hampden Cutts, who wedded Mary P. S. Jarvis, who was also of notable New England parentage, her father, William Jarvis, serving for eight years as American consul at Lisbon, Portugal.

It will thus be seen that C. H. C. Howard is descended from distinguished ancestry in both the paternal and maternal lines. His parents were teachers of liberal education and broad culture. The father was graduated from Dartmouth College, while the mother was a graduate of the Tilden Ladies' Seminary at Lebanon, New Hampshire. At their marriage they began teaching, becoming teachers in high schools and later in the Glenwood Collegiate Institute at Matawan, New Jersey, where they remained until 1872. They afterward removed to Brooklyn, New York, and Mr. Howard taught in private schools for some time. He devoted the last ten years of his life to envelope manufacturing. He was born in 1830 and died in 1899, while his wife, who was born in 1835, departed this life in 1889. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Howard was also identified with the Masonic fraternity. To him and his wife were born seven children, three of whom died in infancy, the others being: C. H. C.; Mary, the wife of R. W. King of Montclair, New Jersey; Charles T., who is connected with the city department at Los Angeles, California; and Eliot, an electrician of Brooklyn, New York.

C. H. C. Howard was born in Brattleboro, Vermont, September 5, 1862. Having acquired a public school education he later attended the Adelphi Academy at Brooklyn, New York, and for five years was assistant librarian in the Astor Library of New York city. He came to Arkansas in 1890 for the benefit of his health and entered newspaper work at Beebe, where for ten years he was editor and publisher of Current Topics, which was afterward merged into the White County News and for a year he remained as editor of the latter publication. He then sold out and was employed as a bookkeeper in Beebe, while later he took over the fire insurance business and is now representing nine different companies. In this connection he has gained a good clientage and his business is one of large extent.

On the 12th of September, 1894, Mr. Howard was married to Miss Effie M. Bartley, a native of Fulton, Missouri, and a daughter of S. N. and Virginia (Berry) Bartley, who were also natives of Fulton. The father became a merchant of Beebe and also assistant cashier of the Bank of Beebe. He was likewise prominent in public affairs, serving as mayor of the town and as treasurer and recorder at different times. He died October 1, 1915, at the age of seventy-two years, his birth having occurred in 1843 and he is survived by his wife, who still makes her home in Beebe. Their daughter, Mrs. Howard, however, departed this life November 1, 1915, leaving a son, Elwin who is pursuing a scientific course in the Westminster College of Fulton, Missouri.

Mr. Howard is a member of the Christian church and his political belief is that of the democratic party. He served for four years as city recorder of Beebe and is an honorary member of the New Hampshire Historical Society, also a corresponding member of the Maine and Vermont Historical Society and the New England Historical and Genealogical Society. He is likewise thus identified with the Essex Institute of Salem, Massachusetts. He has recently published a history of the Cutts family, also of the Sparhawk family and a history of the Pepperrell family. He also wrote the Pepperrell portraits and a small pamphlet of the life and public service of General John W. Phelps. His authorship includes a volume entitled Brattleboro in Verse and Prose and he has in manuscript the history of the Carter family. His life has been cast in harmony with the records of an honored ancestry. In both lines he comes of families of strong intellectual force and high ideals and he has ever proven a worthy scion of his race.

DR. JOHN L. GREENE.

Dr. John L. Greene, optometrist of El Dorado, enjoying an extensive practice as the result of his comprehensive scientific knowledge and practical skill, was born in Ruston, Louisiana, on the 9th of August, 1873, his parents being Malaciah B. and Mary Jane (Gathright) Greene, the former a native of Alabama, while the latter was born in Union county, Arkansas. Both, however, were reared in Louisiana, to which state they accompanied their parents during their early childhood.

Dr. Greene spent his youthful days in Lincoln parish, Louisiana, and completed his education in the Fellowship high school of that parish. When a youth of sixteen years he began work at the bench in a jewelry and optical store in Shiloh, Louisiana, and served his apprenticeship under A. J. Mashaw of Palmerville, that state. In 1893 he returned to Ruston, where he established himself in the jewelry and optical business, there continuing until 1896, whence he removed to Junction City, where he was successfully engaged in business until 1912. However, in 1906 he bought out the jewelry business of Constantine & Fuller in El Dorado and conducted the two stores until six years later, at which time the Junction City store was closed out, but the El Dorado store was continued until February 1, 1921. For some years previous to the latter date Dr. Greene had been a consistent student of optometry and his jewelry business had become only a means to an end. In 1903 he attended the Kansas School of Optometry at Topeka, Kansas, and in 1905 he pursued a course in optometry at Atlanta, Georgia, while in 1912 he attended the Needles Optical Institute at Kansas City, Missouri. Thus continuing his studies along this line so that his ability was constantly increasing, he finally closed out his store on the 1st of February, 1921, in order to give his entire attention to the practice of optometry. He then opened offices in the Security Bank & Trust building, where he is now located and at the present time he is concentrating his undivided attention upon his profession. He is splendidly qualified for the work by thorough training and is most conscientious in the performance of his professional duties. Since 1915 he has been a member of the state examining board of optometry and has throughout this period served as secretary and treasurer of the board. He belongs to the Arkansas Optical Society and utilizes every means that will broaden his knowledge and promote his efficiency in his chosen calling.

Dr. Greene was married on the 24th of December, 1893, to Miss Elizabeth Pauline Mitchell of Schoudrant, Louisiana, and they have become the parents of three children: Alonzo Maughan, Clara Mitchell and Muriel Alice. Dr. Greene belongs to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.; also to El Dorado Chapter, No. 114, R. A. M.; El Dorado Chapter, No. 280, O. E. S.; and all of his children are likewise members of the Eastern Star, while the son belongs also to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M. Dr. Greene is identified with the Scottish Rite bodies, having attained the thirty-second degree in Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R. He belongs to the El Dorado school board and has always taken an active interest in educational work and in civic affairs, supporting all those plans and measures which look to the development of the community intellectually or to the promotion of those interests which are a matter of civic virtue and civic pride. He and all of his family hold membership in the Baptist church, in which he is serving as deacon and no good work done in the name of charity or religion seeks his aid in vain. By reason of his intense and helpful interest in the material, intellectual, social and moral welfare of the community he is classed with El Dorado's foremost citizens and highly honored men.

OSCAR HUGH WILSON.

From pioneer times to the present the Wilson family has played an important part in the development and upbuilding of Pope county, and Oscar Hugh Wilson, a large landowner residing in Russellville, is a worthy representative of a name that for many years has stood as a synonym for enterprise and integrity in business circles of north-western Arkansas. His birth occurred in old Norristown, Pope county, on the 25th of August, 1872, and his parents were R. J. and Cassandra (Ford) Wilson, the former of whom was born near Russellville, Arkansas, September 20, 1835, while the birth of the latter occurred near Shreveport Louisiana. The father is a veteran of the Civil war, in which he served with the rank of captain, enlisting in 1861. He was formerly an agriculturist but later became one of the leading merchants of Russellville, and in 1890 he organized the Peoples Exchange Bank, of which he has since been president. He is a man of exceptional business ability, enterprise and determination and is the largest landholder in this vicinity but is now living retired in Russellville at the advanced age of eighty-seven years and is one of the most substantial citizens and highly respected pioneers of Pope county. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, a democrat in his political views, and fraternally is identified with the Masons. Mrs. Wilson passed away in 1884, leaving four children, of whom the subject of this review is the eldest; Kate, who married Joe Jacobson, has six children and the family reside in New Mexico; Stella is the wife of John J. Duffie, who is engaged in the export business in South America; Walter is the owner of a large farm near Woodson, Arkansas, on which he makes his home.

In the acquirement of an education Oscar Hugh Wilson attended the schools of Bell Buckle and Lebanon, Tennessee, and after completing his studies he returned home in order to assist his father in caring for his large mercantile and farming interests. For a number of years he conducted the Russellville establishment but since the sale of the enterprise a few years ago has had charge of his father's land interests, in addition to which he is managing his own property holdings, which are also extensive. In the control of his business affairs he displays much of his father's executive ability and keen sagacity and his efforts have been crowned with a substantial measure of success.

In 1894 Mr. Wilson was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Kerr Rankin, a native of Russellville and a daughter of W. H. Rankin, who was formerly identified with farming interests but is now living retired in Russellville. To this union have been born four children: Margaret, who graduated from the State University of Arkansas with the A. B. degree and is now the wife of T. Bennett Freeman, a leading merchant of Marianna, Arkansas; Estelle, at home; Evelyn, who is a student at the State University; and William W., who is a senior in the Culver Military Academy of Indiana.

The family are all members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Wilson was sent as a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1917. He is widely and favorably known in Pope county, where he has spent his life, and in matters affecting the welfare and progress of his community, county and state he has ever been deeply and helpfully interested. He is a worthy son of a distinguished sire and is ably sustaining the traditions of one of the oldest and most highly respected families in this part of the state.

WILLIAM M. PHILLIPS.

William M. Phillips, district manager for the Morris Packing Company of Kansas City, Missouri, with headquarters at Fort Smith, where he controls extensive and important interests, at the same time maintaining his residence in Hartford, Arkansas, was born in Auburn, this state, on the 24th of July, 1894, and is a son of W. E. and Louise Ella (Richmond) Phillips. He acquired his early education in the schools of Fort Smith and of Little Rock and devoted two years to the study of medicine in the University of Arkansas but afterward abandoned his plan of becoming a physician and turned his attention in other directions. He became auditor for the Central Coal & Coke Company and was filling that position when in February, 1918, he enlisted for service in the World war and went to Camp Pike, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant and made bayonet instructor. He was honorably discharged on December 29.

When Mr. Phillips again took up civilian activity he became a salesman for the Morris Packing Company of Kansas City, Missouri, and made so creditable a record in that connection that he was promoted to the more responsible position of district sales manager and is now acting in that capacity, controlling important interests in his present position and displaying those business qualities which ultimately win success—the qualities of determination, perseverance and sound judgment.

S. A. DIEHL.

The newspaper business is constantly attracting men from the various walks of life, many of whom find in this work a pleasant and profitable occupation. To this class belongs S. A. Diehl, editor and proprietor of the Daily Times-Echo and the Flashlight of Eureka Springs. He became identified with the publication of newspapers many years ago and is recognized as one of the thoroughly experienced and capable men in this line in the state.

S. A. Diehl was born in Fostoria, Ohio, on the 31st of July, 1865, a son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Leonard) Diehl, the former a native of New York state and the latter of Ohio. The father was a member of the Union army during the Civil war, serving for three years. He was a member of Company E, Forty-ninth Ohio Regiment. He received a wound in the leg at Shiloh and was likewise wounded at the battle of Chickamauga. At the close of the war he returned to Ohio, where he resided until 1871, when he removed to Illinois. He engaged in farming in that state. As one of the representative citizens of the community he was frequently called to public office and for some time he served as justice of the peace of the community in which he resided. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Diehl six children were born, five of whom are living. S. A., whose name initiates this review, is the oldest child. The family was reared in the faith of the Evangelical church and Mr. Diehl gave his political allegiance to the republican party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. He was likewise an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

S. A. Diehl received his education in Illinois, attending the country schools in the vicinity of the home farm and in due time the Illinois Normal School at Dixon. Upon the completion of his education he engaged in farming and was active in that connection until he reached the age of twenty-four years. He then took up the profession of teaching and was engaged in educational work for a period of seventeen years, eleven years of that time being spent as principal and superintendent of schools at various places. Subsequently, however, he discovered that he was more interested in the newspaper business than he was in teaching and accordingly he went to Manito, Illinois, where he purchased a newspaper, which he edited for six years. He then spent one year in Bloomington, Illinois, and in 1908 came to Eureka Springs, arriving here in September of that year. He purchased the Flashlight, a weekly paper here and since that time he has succeeded in absorbing all the newspaper interests of the city. His daily paper is called the Times-Echo. He has one of the best equipped offices in the state and gets out the cleanest and best edited democratic daily and weekly in North Arkansas. In addition to the publication of his own papers he prints five other publications and does a large job printing business.

A contemporary writer has said of Mr. Diehl: "Mr. Diehl comes from that grand old state of Illinois, and while comparatively new to Eureka Springs, ever since his coming, has labored hard for the advancement of the city, not only with his hands and his head but with his money as well. His past experience has given him a schooling tended to make him a public man. Sixteen years as a pedagogue, eleven of them as principal and high school teacher; seven years of newspaper work in Illinois; president of the Illinois State Epworth League; president and platform manager of the Quiver Lake Chautauqua in Illinois; state secretary of the Illinois Anti-Saloon League when he removed to Eureka Springs—these honors bestowed by Illinoisans bespeak a versatile ability." Not long after Mr. Diehl came to Eureka Springs he was appointed by Mayor Fuller as a member of the board of health and he was also elected as secretary of the Commercial Club, of which body he has been a director since his residence in the state.

On the 30th of November, 1899, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Diehl and Miss Hannah J. Behringer, a native of Illinois. To their union two children have been born: Webster Emerson, and Donald DeWitt. The eldest son is now attending the law department of the University of Virginia, where he is a brilliant student. He seems to have inherited a natural talent for oratory, he is a fine public speaker for one of his years, and is widely known as the boy orator of the Ozarks. The younger son is but thirteen years of age and is a student in the schools here. Mrs. Diehl is prominent in the club and social circles of Eureka Springs and is recognized as a model housewife and mother.

The family is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Diehl has been president of the official board for many years. Fraternally he is a Mason, being a Knight Templar, and also past master of the craft. He is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor of the latter organization. In 1896 he became a democrat and he served as a delegate to the state convention the same year and the two years following. For nine years he has been a member of the board of education in Eureka Springs, his past experience in educational work making him a valuable asset to that body. Mr. Diehl is a forceful and eloquent public speaker and a man who pays strict attention to the minutest details of any business with which he is connected. He has made many friends throughout the state and ranks among the leaders of the press in Arkansas.

ELMER H. ELLSWORTH, M. D.

Dr. Elmer H. Ellsworth, engaged in medical practice in Hot Springs, with office in the Citizens National Bank building, is a native son of this city, his birth having here occurred August 20, 1878. His father, Prosper Harvey Ellsworth, was born in Canada and he, too, was a physician, a graduate of the Rush Medical College of Chicago of the class of 1861. He had previously read medicine in the office and under the direction of Dr. Leeds of Lincoln, Illinois. Following his graduation he joined the United States army as a surgeon, going to the front with the One Hundred and Sixth Illinois Infantry with the rank of major, his regiment being with the command of General Grant. He was on active duty in the field hospitals throughout the war, being stationed at various points and at length he was mustered out at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, in 1866. During his military service he passed through this section of Arkansas and became greatly impressed with the wonderful possibilities of the springs. It was this that induced him to return in September, 1866, and here he located for the practice of his profession, which he also followed at Pine Bluff. He assisted largely in developing the hot springs, recognizing their curative properties. There was only one physician here at the time besides Dr. Ellsworth. The latter engaged in practice in connection with Dr. Lawrence, and afterward continued in active practice in the city almost to the time of his death. He passed away September 30, 1907, at the age of sixty-nine years, and the community mourned the loss of a valued physician and representative citizen. He was a member of all the Masonic bodies up to and including the Commandery and was a faithful follower of the teachings of the craft. He married Sarah E. Van Patten, who is living at Hot Springs.

Dr. Elmer H. Ellsworth was born and reared in this city, attending the public schools until he had completed the high school course, after which he became a student in the Morgan Park Academy in Chicago and was there graduated. He later completed a scientific course in the University of Chicago and next entered the Rush Medical College of that city, in which he completed his studies as a member of the class of June, 1904. He then returned to Hot Springs and joined his father, with whom he was associated in practice until the latter's death. He is recognized as one of the able members of the medical profession in this city and while he continues in general practice he specializes to some extent in surgery. His ability is pronounced and he is most conscientious in the performance of all of his professional duties. He displays the utmost care in the diagnosis of his cases and his judgment is seldom, if ever, at fault.

Dr. Ellsworth was united in marriage to Miss Adean M. McClure and they became parents of two children: Kathryn E. and Adean M. The wife and mother passed away in 1918, and in 1919 Dr. Ellsworth was married to Miss Minnie A. McCollum. Fraternally Dr. Ellsworth is a Mason and has taken all degrees of the York Rite up to and including the Knights Templar degree. He is likewise a member of the Mystic Shrine and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he has served as civil service examiner and also as president of the board of pensions, a position which his father had previously filled. Dr. Ellsworth belongs to the Garland County, the Arkansas State, the Southern and American Medical Associations. He enjoys the highest respect of his professional colleagues and contemporaries and has the full confidence of his patients. His ability is attested in the excellent results which follow his labors and which have gained him a most creditable place as a practicing physician in Hot Springs, a city noted for the large number of its prominent physicians and surgeons.

W. D. MAUCK.

W. D. Mauck, a well known attorney of Bentonville, where he has practiced his profession continuously for almost a third of a century, was born in Harrison county, Indiana, in 1864. His parents, Jonathan W. and Hannah (Cunningham) Mauck, were also natives of that county and there spent their entire lives, the father devoting his attention to the pursuits of farming and stock raising. David Mauck, the paternal grandfather of W. D. Mauck, became one of the pioneer settlers of Harrison county, Indiana, while Samuel Cunningham, the maternal grandfather, was a native of Ireland. Jonathan W. Mauck and his wife were consistent and loyal members of the Presbyterian church and in politics he was a democrat. In his family were nine children, seven of whom are yet living.

W. D. Mauck, the eldest of the children, obtained his early education in the district schools of his native county and subsequently became a student in the State University of Indiana. He began reading law under the direction of Major W. Funk at Corydon, Indiana, and was admitted to the bar in 1883, after which he began practice at Corydon, thus continuing for three years. He then went to Kansas in order to look after some land which he had purchased in that state and also took a trip to Arkansas. So well pleased was he with the outlook here that he brought his family to Bentonville in 1889 and opened an office for the practice of his profession. Here he has remained continuously since and he has been admitted to practice in all the courts. His clientele is now extensive and of an important character. He is remarkable among lawyers for the wide research and provident care with which he prepares his cases. At no time has his reading ever been confined to the limitations of the questions at issue. It has gone beyond and compassed every contingency and provided not alone for the expected but for the unexpected, which happens in the courts quite as frequently as out of them. Mr. Mauck is likewise identified with agricultural interests on an extensive scale, owning four or five farms in Benton county, Arkansas, two farms in Missouri and also some Texas land. Success in notable measure has crowned his efforts, for he came to this state with but a thousand dollars and by diligence, determination and capable management has worked his way steadily upward until he is now recognized as one of the prosperous citizens and representative attorneys of Benton county.

In 1886, in Indiana, Mr. Mauck was united in marriage to Miss Emma Deutsch, a native of that state and a daughter of Jacob Deutsch, who was born in Germany and on crossing the Atlantic to the United States took up his abode in Harrison county, Indiana. He was a tailor by trade but later engaged in the grocery business. Mr. and Mrs. Mauck had one son, Ralph, who was a graduate of the University of Arkansas and also completed a course in the law department of the University of Virginia but passed away in 1909.

In his political views Mr. Mauck is a democrat and while residing in Indiana he served as a member of the state legislature from 1883 until 1885. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar Mason and a Knight of Pythias, being a past chancellor in the latter order. His wife is a devoted member of the Presbyterian church and both are highly esteemed in the community in which they make their home and in which the circle of their friends is almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintance.

HENDRICK A. ROSS, M. D.

It was in December, 1918, that Dr. Hendrick A. Ross opened an office and began practice in Arkadelphia. He had previously had several years experience in the active work of the profession and had received thorough preliminary training in the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia. He was born in Okolona, Arkansas, February 21, 1884, and is a son of Dr. James S. Ross, a practicing physician, who for forty years has followed his profession in Okolona. He married Miss Sallie Winfield, a daughter of the Rev. Sandy Winfield, one of the pioneer circuit riders of Arkansas and a brother of the Rev. Gus Winfield, in whose honor the Winfield Memorial Methodist Episcopal church of Little Rock was named. Dr. James S. Ross is a graduate of the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans and throughout his professional career he has made steady progress, keeping at all times in close touch with the trend of professional thought and investigation, so that his labors have been of great benefit to his fellowmen.

Dr. Hendrick A. Ross completed his preliminary education as a high school student in Okolofa and then took up the study of pharmacy, being graduated in 1908 from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. In the same year he entered upon the study of medicine, matriculating in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, which conferred upon him his M. D. degree at his graduation with the class of 1912. He then accepted the position as junior assistant physician in the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane and continued there for seven months, on the expiration of which period he resigned in order to return home. In January, 1913, he entered upon the private practice of medicine in Okolona, where he continued until December, 1918, when he sought a broader field of labor and removed to Arkadelphia. Here he has built up an extensive practice, which is steadily growing and he is recognized as one of the ablest physicians and surgeons of his adopted city. He belongs to the Clark County Medical Society, also to the Arkansas State Medical Society and the Southern Medical Association.

On the 23d of July, 1916, Dr. Ross was united in marriage to Miss Pamela Potts, a native of Pottsville, Arkansas, and they have become parents of two children: Wallace A. and Pamela B. Dr. Ross and his wife are consistent and faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he is connected with Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 1149, B. P. O. E. He is serving as city health officer and he is also a member of the state medical board of the Arkansas State Medical Society. Throughout his professional career he has done everything in his power to promote a knowledge of sanitary conditions and thus prevent the spread of disease. In his practice he is most thorough, diagnosing his cases with the greatest care and is seldom, if ever, at fault in foretelling the outcome of disease.

JAMES POMEROY WHITTEN.

One of the leading druggists of Murfreesboro is James Pomeroy Whitten, who was born in Prescott, this state, on the 24th of February, 1882. His father, Orf Whitten, was born in Georgia, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and came to Arkansas, locating in Lewisville in 1870. Subsequently he removed to Prescott and was one of the pioneer settlers of that community. For some years he was active in the conduct of a blacksmith shop and achieving substantial success in that connection, is now living retired in Prescott, at the age of seventy-two years. He is a highly respected citizen, as is also his wife, who is now seventy years of age. In 1873 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Whitten to Miss Buena Vista McKellar, a native of Ripley, Mississippi, who came to this state in 1870. The ceremony was performed in Lewisville. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Whitten seven children were born, four boys and three girls, James Pomeroy, whose name initiates this review, being the fourth in order of birth. Two sons and two daughters are deceased.

In the acquirement of an education James Pomeroy Whitten attended the common schools of Prescott and after graduating from the high school he made his initial step into the business world by accepting a position as clerk in the Hesterly Drug Store, remaining in that employ for three years. In 1908 went to Texarkana as clerk with the Johnston & Stewart Drug Company there. In 1911 he severed his connection with that firm and started into the business on his own account in Murfreesboro, buying out the interests of Dr. J. W. Baker. It was not long before he had paid off his entire indebtedness and each year has witnessed a substantial growth in the concern, the result of his able management and innate ability along that line. By constant study at home Mr. Whitten was, in 1903, ready to take the examination required to become a registered pharmacist and he passed the examination with a high grade. For some time he was city recorder of deeds of Murfreesboro and is now a director in the Pike County Bank here. Mr. Whitten has always been a stanch advocate of education and is now an active member of the school board, which body he served as secretary for six years.

In Clinton, South Carolina, on the 5th of October, 1910, Mr. Whitten was united in marriage to Miss Ola Bell, a daughter of Dr. J. L. Bell of Highland, Arkansas. She is a registered pharmacist, having passed the examination at Little Rock on the 14th of June, 1921, and is one of twenty-one women who are registered pharmacists in this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Whitten two children have been born: James Henry, who died at the age of eleven months; and Lois Vernita, whose death occurred at the age of three years.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist and Christian churches, to the support of which they are generous contributors. Fraternally Mr. Whitten is a member of Pike Lodge, No. 97, F. & A. M., and he is likewise a Knight of Pythias, holding membership in Dixie Lodge, No. 87, of Prescott. During the World war Mr. Whitten was chairman of the War Savings Stamps committee and made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of this and the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives. He is conceded to be one of the towns most public-spirited citizens and as the result of his own intelligently directed efforts has won an enviable position among the business men of the county.

HON. GEORGE W. DONAGHEY.

Hon. George W. Donaghey, on whom was conferred the highest honor within the gifts of the people of Arkansas in his election to the governorship of the state in 1908 and who by reelection was continued as the chief executive of the state for four years, has in many other ways been associated with events which have made history in this commonwealth. He is identified with many important financial and commercial enterprises and with many projects looking to the benefit and welfare of city and state. His birth occurred near Oakland post office, Union parish, Louisiana, on the 1st of July, 1856. His parents moved across the state line into Union county, Arkansas, when he was an infant and there he remained until after he had attained the age of about seventeen years, eventually establishing his home in Conway, Arkansas, in 1879, when a young man of twenty-three years. Early in life he had learned the carpenter's trade, his first position being that of a bench head in a cabinet shop. There is nothing for which the American people have as great respect as for the record of the self-made man—one who rises through sheer merit and ability from comparative obscurity to prominence, and this Governor Donaghey has done. He early realized the eternal principle that industry wins and, moreover, he has exemplified in his entire life that honesty is the best policy. The qualities of diligence and industry, therefore, were among his marked characteristics from the time he made his initial step in the business world. After working at the carpenter's trade for some time he took up contracting and building on his own account and his excellent workmanship, his fair dealing and his business sagacity soon led to the development of a large patronage. As his financial resources increased he made judicious investment in real estate, acquiring much valuable property, including a number of well located business houses. He was the builder of Hendrix College, which was his first large contract and later he was given the contract for the erection at Fayetteville of the Washington county courthouse. He was likewise the builder of the courthouse at Longview, Texas, and of the Arkansas Insane Asylum, which he rebuilt after its partial destruction in the tornado in 1894. He has had important contracts in many other sections of the state, as well as in Oklahoma and in Texas, and gradually he advanced to a foremost position in the ranks of contractors and builders in the southwest. As the years have passed he has made large investments in business enterprises of importance and is now the active vice president of the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock. He is also the vice president of the Faulkner County Bank at Conway, Arkansas, and the vice president of the Beal-Burrow Wholesale Dry Goods Company of Little Rock. He has just completed a building for this company and likewise has recently completed the new Exchange National Bank building of the capital city. He is the president of the Donaghey Real Estate & Construction Company and is the chairman of the board of the Broadway Main street improvement commissioners, which board is to erect two bridges over the Arkansas river. His work has at all times been of a character that has contributed in marked measure to the development and upbuilding of the state and he is justly accounted one of the most valued and progressive men of Arkansas.

On the 20th of September, 1883, Mr. Donaghey was married to Miss Louvenia Wallace, and they have a legion of friends throughout the commonwealth. They hold membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Donaghey is serving as chairman of its board of trustees, while at all times he is a generous contributor to its support and does everything to promote the growth of the church. He is a Scottish Rite Mason, is identified with the Knights of Pythias and is a member of the Country Club. During the World war he served on all bond drives and on the finance board, helped to locate Camp Pike and built the aviation warehouse in Little Rock at a cost of one million dollars. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party and the first public office which he held was that of member of the first board of capital commissioners. In the democratic primaries of 1908 he sought the nomination for governor. It had come to be recognized that the man who could secure the democratic nomination had practically won the election. Mr. Donaghey was opposed by a strong faction in the party, but overcame all opposition and was nominated by a large vote and won the election in the following September by a splendid majority. In 1910 he was again the nominee of the party, carrying every county in the state primary election, except two, and once more he was elected to the office, first taking his seat as chief executive on the 14th of January, 1909, and remaining at the head of the state government for a period of four years. For several years prior to 1908 the new state capitol, then in course of construction, had been the cause of frequent political dissension. Donaghey's election is proof conclusive that the people had at last grown tired of the agitation and that they wanted now to see the political end of the matter settled for good and all. Donaghey promised, in the event of his election, to complete the capitol and to give the state full value for every dollar expended on it during his administration. On his record as a contractor and builder of public buildings he was able to show evidence of his capacity to make good that promise. Under his direction practically all of the interior construction that was placed in the building by the former contractors, Caldwell and Drake, was condemned as being unsafe, was torn out and later replaced by heavier and better building materials. In two years this work had advanced far enough for the legislature of 1911 to hold its session there. Governor Donaghey was reelected in 1910. He continued, however, a member of the capitol commission until the building was completed, in which position he served the state for a number of years without compensation for his labor. To him must be given most of the credit for the creation and integrity of construction of the capitol as it stands today, pronounced by the hundreds who visit it each year a building of magnificent proportions and ideal appointments. To one who has visited all the principal capitals of Europe it is "one of the world's beautiful buildings" and a "triumph of architecture." As one might have anticipated his administration was businesslike and progressive. He avoided all useless expenditure of public money and the equally useless retrenchments which block advancement and improvement. He studied every phase of public life coming under his direction and sought at all times to advance the welfare of the state, the indorsement of his splendid service coming in his reelection. Notwithstanding all this he considers the pursuits of private life as in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts and is accomplishing much for the state's benefit as well as for the upbuilding of his fortunes in the conduct of important commercial and industrial interests with which he is identified. He is also a member of the board of control of the state charitable institutions of Arkansas.

W. M. GREENWOOD.

W. M. Greenwood, editor and owner of the Paris Express, an excellent weekly paper published in Paris, Arkansas, was born in Mississippi, August 2, 1863, his parents being William S. and Emily (Lambert) Greenwood, who were natives of South Carolina and of Alabama, respectively, while their marriage was celebrated in Mississippi. The father became a planter, merchant and mill man, devoting his entire time and attention to his business, save for the period of his service in the Civil war. He joined the Confederate army and was on active duty until he became ill, his death occurring soon after the close of the war.

W. M. Greenwood acquired a common school education and afterward continued his studies under John M. Pettigrew, a noted educator of Charleston, Arkansas. At the age of nineteen years Mr. Greenwood entered a newspaper office, since which time he has been connected with journalistic interests. In fact, he has figured prominently in newspaper circles since 1882. In March, 1885, he purchased the Paris Express, which he has since owned and edited. He has made this a bright, readable journal, devoted to the dissemination of local and general news and in addition to its publication he conducts a job printing business on a cash basis.

In December, 1885, Mr. Greenwood was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Cabell, a daughter of Major A. S. Cabell, who was a prominent figure in military circles during the war. He removed to Logan county, Arkansas, after the close of hostilities between the north and the south and became a planter there. He also served as sheriff for a number of years and was a leader in the public life of the community. Mr. and Mrs. Greenwood have become parents of seven children, three of whom are living: Will C., the eldest, is now engaged in the automobile business in Paris; Cabell A., residing in Los Angeles, California, is connected with a construction company of that city as its secretary and treasurer. Formerly he was engaged in the newspaper business, being associated with the El Paso Texas Times as advertising manager for a considerable period. He joined the army at Leon Springs, Texas, where he was in training but because of illness he was discharged. He then returned to Paris, Arkansas, where he raised a company of the Fourth Regiment and was elected its captain. Later he went to Camp Pike, however, as a private and was commissioned a second lieutenant there. He was also at Camp Sherman, Ohio, for a time, being at that camp when the armistice was signed; Gladys, the third of the family, is the wife of John D. McFadden of Bevier, Missonri, who is a master mechanic with a railway company.

Fraternally Mr. Greenwood is connected with the Knights of Pythias and is a past chancellor commander of the lodge, which he joined on its organization, becoming one of the charter members. He is also identified with the Woodmen of the World and politically he is a democrat. He makes his newspaper the champion of party principles and he devotes his entire attention to newspaper publication at the present time.

J. A. BURNS.

J. A. Burns, who figures actively in the financial circles of Hartford, this state, as cashier of the Citizens State Bank, is one of the prominent young business men of the city. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Lamar, in 1892, a son of S. J. and Tennessee (Moore) Burns. The father was a Baptist minister and a son of Anderson Burns, also a minister in the Baptist church, who held pastorates in Ringgold, Georgia, Chattanooga, Tennessee, and also at Lamar, this state. The Moore family came originally from Chattanooga, Tennessee, and grandfather Richard Moore was a representative citizen of that community. Mr. Burns has one brother, S. A., who during the World war served as lieutenant of the One Hundred and Forty-first Machine Gun Battalion, Thirty-ninth Division in France.

In the acquirement of an education J. A. Burns attended the schools of his birth-place and later entered Ouachita college at Arkadelphia. For six years he taught in the public schools of the state. Subsequently he became associated with the Bank of Hartman, at Hartman, Arkansas, and held a position with that institution until his removal to Hartford. He is now active as cashier in that bank and he is performing the duties of that office to the complete satisfaction of the officers and patrons of the bank. He has proven a most popular and obliging official and carefully safeguards the interests of the institution which he represents.

On April 15, 1914, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Burns to Miss Kate Evans, a daughter of James Evans, and they have one child, Jeania Moore. Fraternally Mr. Burns is identified with the Masons and he is loyal to the teachings of that order and has attained high rank in the fraternity. He votes with the democratic party but has never sought public honors nor office, preferring to give undivided attention to his financial duties. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and his wife is a member of the Presbyterian church. Both he and his wife are consistent and active members of their respective organizations. His interests and activities are wide and varied and constitute a forceful element of public progress, as well as of individual advancement. He looks at life from the standpoint of a practical, energetic business man who is cognizant of the fact that opportunities are open to all and that the attainment of success depends upon the energy, determination and persistency of purpose of him who seeks it.

J. H. DOWNS, M. D.

Dr. J. H. Downs, who since 1907 has engaged in the practice of medicine in Vilonia, came to the starting point of his professional career well equipped for the duties which have since devolved upon him. He is a native son of Vilonia, his birth having occurred on the 31st of May, 1881, a son of William J. and Martha Jane (Munn) Downs, the former a native of Mississippi and the latter of Tennessee. The paternal grandfather came to this state in 1861 with his family and upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the army. He was killed while in active service. The maternal grandparents came to Arkansas in 1862. Mr. Munn was a tailor and shoemaker and he followed those trades in Faulkner county until his death in 1870, at the age of fifty-five years. William J. Downs came to Faulkner county with his parents in 1861 and was reared to manhood on a farm. In later life he engaged in farming on his own account, clearing two farms in this county. He was one of the successful general farmers and stock raisers in the community and resided on one of his farms until his death in 1905.

at the age of fifty-three years. In 1875, in Faulkner county, Mr. Downs was united in marriage to Miss Martha Jane Munn and to their union eight children were born: John W., who is a traveling salesman for a well known concern in Little Rock; Dr. L. E., a prominent eye, ear, nose and throat doctor of Los Angeles, California; Robert F., a successful merchant in Ardmore, Oklahoma; James A., whose death occurred in 1908, at the age of twenty-one years while a student in Hendrix College; Thomas C., who for many years previous to his demise in 1920 was a traveling salesman out of El Paso, Texas; Prudie E., who is teaching school in Clarendon, this state; Dr. J. D., whose name initiates this review; and Mary L., who died in 1917. She was the wife of Professor C. F. Forrest of Englewood, Colorado. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, of which church Mr. and Mrs. Downs were consistent members. Fraternally the father was identified with the Woodmen of the World and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party.

It was on the old home farm that Dr. Downs spent his boyhood, attending the country schools near by. In due time he became a student in the high school at Vilonia and after graduating from that institution enrolled in the medical department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. He received his M. D. degree in 1907 and immediately located in Vilonia, where he has since practiced. In a profession where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit he has made continuous progress and is today accounted one of the leading physicians of Faulkner county.

In Naylor, this county, in 1906, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Downs and Miss Ida J. Reynolds. Four children have been born to their union: Seth, Dennis, Paul and Mildred, all attending the public schools of Vilonia. Mrs. Downs is prominent in the club and social circles of the community and is readily conceded by her many friends an excellent housewife and mother.

Since attaining his majority Dr. Downs has given his support to the democratic party and he believes that every citizen should exercise the right of franchise and, moreover, that each should thoroughly inform himself concerning the political conditions and the significant problems of the age. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons. In the line of his profession he holds membership in the American, Arkansas State and Faulkner County Medical Societies, which enables him to keep in close touch with what is being done by eminent members of the medical fraternity. Dr. Downs holds to high professional standards and puts forth conscientious efforts to make his labors of the utmost value to his patients. That his work is attended by gratifying results is manifest in his constantly increasing patronage and that he holds to high professional ethics is evidenced in the fact that his fellow practitioners always speak of him in terms of high regard.

WILLIAM ARTHUR HICKS.

William Arthur Hicks, vice president and cashier of the American Bank of Commerce & Trust Company, which is today the largest banking institution of the state, was born October 12, 1880, in Little Rock, Pulaski county, Arkansas, being a son of William Henry and Mary Olivia (Diehl) Hicks. The father, whose birth occurred in Hawkins county, Tennessee, September 8, 1845, was a successful contractor and builder of Little Rock throughout his active business career. During the period of the Civil war he served as a private of Company G, Forty-seventh Arkansas Cavalry, from July 24, 1862, until April 25, 1865. At all times he was active as a supporter of the democratic party, manifesting a keen interest in politics. He departed this life on the 18th of August, 1906, but is still survived by his widow, who was born April 13, 1851, in Little Rock, where she yet makes her home. They were married in Little Rock on the 27th of August, 1879, and became the parents of seven children, namely: Mina, William Arthur, John Ernest, May Pearl, Charles Henry, Walter Scott and Jimmie Winfield. Of the above named only two survive, William A. and his brother, Walter Scott.

William Arthur Hicks attended the public schools of his native city to the age of seventeen years, completing the work of the ninth grade. He then started out to provide for his own support and whatever success he has achieved or enjoyed is attributable entirely to his own labors. For five years he was connected with the Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf Railroad, now a part of the Rock Island system filling a clerical position. He afterward became associated with the Oregon Short Line Railroad at Salt Lake City as a clerk and when he returned to Little Rock he entered the employ of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company as chief clerk in the general offices. For a year and a half he filled that position and on the expiration of that period removed to New Orleans, where he became sales manager for the southern division of the H. W. Johns-Manville Company of New York. He spent a year and a half in the Crescent city, after which he came again to Little Rock in 1909 and here entered the employ of the American Bank as assistant cashier. This bank was afterward consolidated with the German National in 1911 and Mr. Hicks became assistant cashier of the newly organized institution, conducted under the name of the German National. In 1911 he was advanced to the position of cashier. In 1914 the German National changed its name to the American National Bank and Mr. Hicks continued as cashier. In 1919 the American National consolidated with the Bank of Commerce and became the American Bank of Commerce & Trust Company, Mr. Hicks remaining as cashier, while later he was elected to the vice presidency and today fills both offices. He is thoroughly conversant with every phase of the banking business and his close application, his diligence and his efficiency have been potent forces in the attainment of success by the institution which he represents. He is also the vice president and treasurer of the National Ice Cream Company, a director in the Arkansas Building & Loan Association and treasurer of the Tipton Nursery, Incorporated, all of Little Rock.

On the 6th of November, 1901, Mr. Hicks was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Louise Miller, who was born in Little Rock, December 7, 1880, a daughter of Daniel and Margaret Miller of this city. Her father, who is now deceased, was a veteran of the Confederate army. Mrs. Hicks obtained her education in the public schools of her native city and by her marriage has become the mother of two children, Marian Miller and Nellie Louise, who are eighteen and sixteen years of age respectively.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hicks attend the Methodist Episcopal church and he is well known as a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He likewise belongs to the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he has membership in the Little Rock Country Club, the Little Rock Quapaw Club, the Big Lake Club, the Old River Fishing Club, the Brasfield Rod and Gun Club, the Lakeside Club and the Kiwanis Club. His interest in the community welfare is shown through his connection with the Chamber of Commerce and he also occupies the important position of president of the Arkansas Children's Home Finding Society, doing everything in his power to ameliorate the hard conditions of life for the unfortunate. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party. At the time of the World war he did active work for the government in connection with the Liberty Loan drives and also the Red Cross, War Savings Stamps and the Near East Relief drives. His wide acquaintance and his salesmanship ability enabled him to accomplish excellent results in this connection. Moreover, he was actuated by a most patriotic devotion to the cause and in days of peace he has manifested the same loyalty to every project or interest that tends to promote the welfare and upbuilding of Little Rock.

CHARLES H. TRIPPLETT.

Charles H. Triplett, president of the National Bank of Arkansas at Pine Bluff, occupies an enviable position in business and financial circles, not alone by reason of the success he has achieved but also owing to the straightforward business policy he has ever followed. His life record cannot fail to prove of interest because of his wide acquaintance and the high esteem in which he is uniformly held. He was born in Jefferson county, Arkansas, in 1850, a son of C. H. and Esther Ann Triplett, both natives of Virginia, and a descendant of the old Triplett family of Round Hill, Fairfax county, Virginia. The grandfather attended the same church as did George Washington, purchasing therein Pew No. 5 on the 24th of February, 1774, at which time it was the custom to buy church pews. Mr. Triplett of this review still has in his possession the deed to this pew, showing the signatures of Washington, Mason, Henderson, Thomas Triplett, Payne and several other members of the church and also bearing the seal of the commonwealth of Virginia. Following their marriage C. H. and Esther Ann Triplett settled on a farm in Jefferson county, Arkansas, about 1846 and they became the parents of four children: Sarah, Marion, George W. and Charles H., but the last named is the only one now living.

In his youthful days Charles H. Triplett of this review attended the public schools of Jefferson county and during the summer months worked on the home farm until he was eighteen years of age, when, thinking to find other pursuits more congenial, he took up clerking and was thus employed for four years. He next entered the real estate business in Pine Bluff on his own account, and his close application and undaunted enterprise brought him at length to a commanding position in the real estate circles of the county, while his labors constituted an important factor in the development of Pine Bluff and this section of the state. His business steadily increased until it became one of extensive proportions and for years he devoted his entire attention thereto, save for the period of his service in public office. He was elected county treasurer of Jefferson county in 1888, filling the position for four years, and in 1894 he was elected sheriff and also occupied that office for four years. At the time of the failure of the old Bank of Pine Bluff, Mr. Triplett purchased the assets and became president of the newly organized National Bank of Arkansas, of which he has continued the chief executive officer. He shaped the policy of the institution and has largely directed its destiny and the bank has enjoyed a steady and substantial growth through the intervening years. It is now in excellent condition and is regarded as one of the thoroughly safe and dependable moneyed institutions of this part of the state.

In 1880 Mr. Triplett was united in marriage to Miss Estelle Holland, a daughter of W. H. and Hannah Holland, and they have become the parents of five children: Charles H., Jr.; Gerald; Esther Dunlap, the wife of Sam Williamson; Arthur F., an attorney; and Frank, who served in the World war and is now a teller and assistant cashier in the National Bank of Arkansas. Mr. Triplett is the oldest paying member of the Presbyterian church at Pine Bluff, in years of continuous connection with the organization, and he has long been a most consistent and helpful worker in the church. In politics he has always been a democrat and was the first person elected to the office of sheriff on the democratic ticket after the Civil war. He made a most excellent official in public office, discharging his duties with the same thoroughness and fidelity that have always characterized the conduct of his private business affairs. His name has long been regarded as a synonym of enterprise and integrity in business and through his own efforts he has reached a most creditable position in the financial circles of Jefferson county.

PAUL M. HEERWAGEN.

Paul M. Heerwagen, one of the most prominent painting and decorating contractors of Arkansas, located in Fayetteville, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1866. He is a son of Gotlieb and Mary (Stahl) Heerwagen, who were also of Bavarian birth, the father spending his entire life in that country, where he had engaged in the drug business. His wife also died in Germany. They were the parents of four children, of whom two are living: Leo, who is engaged in the music business; and Paul M.

The latter acquired his education in the schools of Berlin and came to the United States in 1881 with other members of the family. He made his way to Detroit, Michigan, and there learned the business of decorating, developing expert ability along that line. In 1891 he came to Arkansas, where he has since made his home, and through the intervening years he has built up a reputation as one of the foremost decorators of the state. He removed with his family to Fayetteville in 1911, and while he has done a large amount of work in this city, he is continually being called to various points in the south and southwest. He has decorated many of the fine residences and he did the decorating work on many of the finest public buildings of this section of the country, including Hotel Gayoso of Memphis, Tennessee; Hotel Piedmont of Atlanta, Georgia; Hotel Gay Teague of Montgomery, Alabama; Hotel Marion of Little Rock, Arkansas; Hotel Peabody of Memphis, Tennessee; Hotel Galvez of Galveston, Texas; Hotel Pine Bluff of Pine Bluff, Arkansas; Hotel Gibraltar of Paris, Texas; the courthouse of Paris, Texas; Hotel Youree of Shreveport, Louisiana; Hotel Bently of Alexandria, Louisiana; Exchange building of Memphis, Tennessee; Central Bank building of Memphis, Tennessee; Commercial Bank of Shreveport, Louisiana; Southern Pacific of Houston, Texas; the courthouse of Memphis, Tennessee; City National Bank building of Shreveport, Louisiana; Cosden building of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Scottish Rite Temple of Shreveport, Louisiana; City National Bank building of Wichita Falls, Texas; Farmers' & Mechanics' National Bank building of Fort Worth, Texas; and the Ardis building of Shreveport, Louisiana, as well as the Arkansas state capitol at Little Rock. These are among some of the largest hotels and public buildings of this part of the country and indicate the high character of the work which is planned and executed by the representatives of the Paul M. Heerwagen studios at Fayetteville.

In 1893 Mr. Heerwagen was married to Miss Ida Killian, who was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. Miles and Ruth (Johnstone) Killian, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Dr. Killian came to Little Rock in 1849 and practiced there for a number of years. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and following its close visited Little Rock while en route to North Carolina. So pleased was he with the city, however, that he did not continue his journey and remained a resident of the Arkansas capital. He was a member of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Heerwagen is his only child and by her marriage she became the mother of six children: Ruth, who is a graduate of the University of Arkansas and taught in the schools of Oklahoma in 1920, while in 1921 she is a teacher in the schools of Fayetteville; Paul, the owner of the business conducted under the name of the Square Tire Company at Fayetteville; Leo, who is a junior in the University of Arkansas; Louie, also connected with the Square Tire Company; Margaret, who is attending high school; and Marion, at home.

In his political views Mr. Heerwagen has always been a democrat. Fraternally he is a Mason and has filled all of the chairs in the York Rite bodies and taken a very active part in Masonic affairs. He has also taken the Scottish Rite degrees. He and his wife are active and faithful members of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Heerwagen is a member of the Pioneer Society of Arkansas at Little Rock, also has membership with the Daughters of the Confederacy and the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. and Mrs. Heerwagen have a beautiful modern home, erected at the edge of the city by Mr. Heerwagen in 1916. Its beauty is matched by its cordial hospitality, which is freely accorded their many friends.

IDMON ANDERSON.

Idmon Anderson, attorney at law, who is also engaged in the abstract business at Clarendon, was born in Cotton Plant, Woodruff county, Arkansas, in 1889, a son of J. W. and Alice (Johnson) Anderson. The father, also a native of Cotton Plant, was a son of Patton Anderson, who removed to this state from Mississippi. The mother, Alice Johnson, was a daughter of W. A. and Mittie (Nunamaker) Johnson, who represented an old family from Columbia, South Carolina, whence removal was made to Jackson, Tennessee. W. A. Johnson returned to the seacoast state several years ago, settling in Georgia, where his last days were passed. To Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Anderson there were born eleven children: Viot, who became the wife of T. A. Wood of Howell, Arkansas; Dot, who married C. H. McKnight of Brinkley, Arkansas; Allie Laura, deceased; John W. and David L., who are residing at Cotton Plant; Robert O., who is a teacher; Vidolaw, Imogene, Justine and Wilson, all living at Cotton Plant; and Idmon. of this review. The family home was maintained at Cotton Plant for many years and the father there engaged in teaching school.

Idmon Anderson, to whom was accorded liberal educational privileges, completed his studies in the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he pursued his law course and qualified for active practice. In 1909 he opened an office in Pangburn, Arkansas, and later removed to De Valls Bluff, while subsequently he came to Clarendon. Here he has remained and has steadily advanced in his profession, having now a large practice of a distinctively representative character. He also organized an abstract company and conducts that business in connection with his law practice.

Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ellen Nix, a daughter of J. D. Nix of Hunter, Arkansas, and they have become parents of one child, Mildred Ellen. In the social circles of Clarendon, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson occupy an enviable position, having many warm friends who esteem them highly, while the hospitality of the best homes is freely accorded them. They are members of the Baptist church and in his fraternal relations Mr. Anderson is a Mason, loyally following the teachings and purposes of the craft, as he does the injunctions and principles of the church.

W. K. TUCKER.

W. K. Tucker, one of the reliable citizens of Morrillton, is the county treasurer of Conway county. He is a native of this county, his birth having occurred on the 10th of December, 1889, a son of T. S. and Mollie (Adams) Tucker. The paternal grandfather, Wilson Tucker, was born in Georgia and farmed in that state until he came to Conway county, in 1859. He made the trip overland with oxen and suffered the usual privations and hardships of those early days. He located on what is now known as the old Evergreen place and he had to clear his heavily wooded land himself. There was an abundance of wild game to be found in the vicinity of the homestead and Grandfather Tucker was a great hunter. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, his sympathies being with the south, he enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861. His death occurred in Little Rock from pneumonia, which was contracted during his service in the army when he was exposed to all kinds of weather and was poorly clothed and fed. He is buried in the Confederate Cemetery at Little Rock. Hyman Adams, the maternal grandfather, was born in Conway county and farmed here until his death, at the age of twenty-six years. T. S. Tucker was born in Georgia, in 1857, while his wife was born in Conway county, this state, in 1871. He received his education in the schools of Conway county, then primitive log structures, and upon putting his textbooks aside engaged in farming on his own account. After his marriage he bought three hundred and sixty acres of good land, which he cleared himself and brought to a high state of cultivation. He split rails and fenced in his land. The first cotton gin he built on his place had a horse press, but after that burned he erected another gin with a modern press. He won prominence in that connection and also as a general farmer and stock raiser. For eight years he served as county assessor of Conway county. Subsequently Mr. Tucker retired from farm life and removed to Morrillton, where he is now engaged in the mercantile business, assisted by two of his sons. In every undertaking with which he has been connected he has achieved substantial success and he is ranked among the representative business men of Morrillton. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Tucker four children were born: Samuel Othella, engaged in the mercantile business with his father; W. K., whose name initiates this review; Ben H., also associated in business with his father; and Nettie M., the wife of Noah Maxwell, an extensive farmer in Conway county. The family was reared in the faith of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and fraternally the father is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Tucker has always voted with the democratic party, in the interests of which he has ever taken an active part.

In the acquirement of an education W. K. Tucker attended the public schools of Conway county and later enrolled as a student in the Choctaw high school. Upon the completion of his studies he secured work as a clerk in a grocery store in Morrillton, which position he held for one year. He then clerked in a mercantile store here for two years and at the termination of that time became manager for the Standard Oil Company's station. He held that position for three years and then sold Chevrolets and Republic trucks to agents throughout the county for a period of two years. Subsequently he became timekeeper for road construction on the public highway for one and one-half years. He ran for and was elected to the office of county treasurer of Conway county in 1920, taking over the duties of that office on January 1, 1921. As a public official he is demonstrating his ability to serve the public in a most efficient manner and is indeed proving a faithful custodian of the public funds.

Mr. Tucker was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Shewmake, a native of this county and a daughter of George Shewmake, a well known farmer and merchant of Morrillton. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have become parents of a son, Charles Benjamin. The family is affiliated with the Presbyterian church and fraternally Mr. Tucker is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Since attaining his majority he has given his allegiance to the democratic party and is a firm believer in the principles of that party as factors in good government. He is a wide-awake and progressive citizen and his election to the office of county treasurer came to him as the expression of public faith and confidence on the part of his fellow townsmen.

EDMOND ECKHART BEAUMONT.

Edmond Eckhart Beaumont, auditor of the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock, is a native of the capital city, his birth having occurred October 28, 1892. He is a son of Eckhart Lucius and Sophie (Kohler) Beaumont, the former born at Aransas Pass, Texas, in 1871, while the latter was born near Stuttgart, Germany. In the year 1888 Mr. Beaumont removed to Little Rock, where his remaining days were passed, his death occurring November 7, 1917. He had for a number of years survived his wife, who died March 8, 1908, in Little Rock. They were the parents of three sons, all of whom are living.

Edmond E. Beaumont obtained a public school education and was graduated from the high school with the class of 1911. After leaving school he entered the employ of the Southwestern Tile Company, with which he remained for several years and in 1911 he secured a position in the Old State National Bank, being a representative of the transit department. On the 31st of December, 1913, he left that position and went to the Exchange National Bank as manager of the transit department, there continuing until the 31st of December, 1917. At the latter date he joined the Bankers Trust Company as chief clerk and on the 1st of February, 1918, was advanced to the position of auditor, in which capacity he has continued. He has made steady and substantial progress in banking circles for one of his years and his high standing is indicated in the fact that he has been elected to the presidency of the Junior Officers' Club of Little Rock Bankers. Since 1911 he has been a member of the American Institute of Banking, the Little Rock chapter, and has served as vice president and president of the local organization.

On the 28th of October, 1912, in Little Rock, Mr. Beaumont was married to Miss Irene Lola Hutton, whose birth occurred in this city July 7, 1893. They have become parents of a daughter, Muriel Ruth, born August 4, 1914. Mr. Beaumont has always been a democrat in his political views, but never an aspirant for office. He and his wife belong to the Hunter Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they take active and helpful part. Mr. Beaumont is now serving as secretary and treasurer of the board, doing all in his power to advance the moral progress of the community and uphold high standards in his native city.

H. L. STERNBERG.

H. L. Sternberg, devoting his attention to law practice at Stuttgart, comes to this state from St. Louis. His birth occurred in that city in 1879, his parents being Charles and Emma (Jennings) Sternberg. The father was born in Centralia, Illinois, and was a son of Frederick Sternberg. On leaving Illinois he removed to St. Louis, where he still makes his home. During the Civil war he served as a drummer boy in the Confederate army. His wife is a daughter of John Jennings, who was born in England, and her birth also occurred in that country. She accompanied her parents to the new world, the family home being established first in St. Louis, while later a removal was made to Bluffton, Missouri.

H. L. Sternberg pursued his education in the public schools of St. Louis and then in preparation for law practice he attended the Washington University of that city. He not only prepared for the practice of law but likewise became an expert stenographer and this has been of much assistance to him in his professional career. He was admitted to practice at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, in 1907, and was appointed official court reporter of the eleventh judicial circuit. His work as a reporter has brought him comprehensive knowledge of the law and of the methods employed by attorneys. He came to Stuttgart in 1919 and in the previous year he reported the proceedings of the Arkansas constitutional convention. He was official reporter of the state senate in 1911. He has attained a notable degree of efficiency in his reportorial work and in 1918-1919 was president of the Southwest Shorthand Reporters Association. He reported the 1921 meeting of the American Investment Bankers Association, the meeting being held in New Orleans, Louisiana, and has reported hearings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission and also the Oklahoma State Medical Association conventions. He is now deputy prosecutor for Arkansas county and is connected with much important litigation heard in the courts of his district.

Mr. Sternberg was married in 1901 to Miss Lillian E. Wright, a daughter of H. G. Wright. He has an interesting military chapter in his career, for he is a veteran of the Spanish-American war, having served as a member of Company H, First Missouri Regiment. His uncle, Dr. George M. Sternberg, was surgeon general of the United States army during that war. Fraternally Mr. Sternberg is connected with the Elks and with the Woodmen. He belongs to the Episcopal church, in which he is a lay reader, and he is greatly interested in all that pertains to moral progress and to the uplift of the individual. In this connection he organized the Boys' Club of one hundred and twelve members and is a director of the Boys' Choir. He is seeking in every possible way to safeguard the youth of the country and to surround them with such influences and advantages as will make for honorable manhood and upright citizenship.

WILLIAM JACKSON WHITE.

One of the most successful business men in Pope county is William Jackson White, who for a half century has been identified with mercantile interests in Russellville, and he is also prominently connected with many other important enterprises, all of which have profited by his cooperation and keen sagacity and have constituted valuable factors in promoting the development and upbuilding of the town. He was born in Gordon county, Georgia, in 1852, and his parents were J. M. and Florida (Miller) White, both natives of Spartanburg, South Carolina. The father was born March 23, 1820, and the mother was born in 1822 and they were married in South Carolina, removing to Georgia soon afterward. The father cultivated a plantation in that state until 1869, when he came to Arkansas, opening a mercantile establishment at Ellsworth, in Logan county, which he continued to conduct until 1872. He then came to Russellville and in association with his son, W. J. White, engaged in general merchandising and the business is now being successfully operated by the subject of this review. Mr. White, Sr., also had financial interests and was the owner of valuable holdings in land but was not active in business after taking up his residence in Russellville, having accumulated a substantial competence through the capable management of his affairs. Mrs. White was a charter member of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Russellville, with which her husband was also affiliated, and his political allegiance was given to the republican party. He was one of the early postmasters of Russellville and one of the most prominent and highly respected residents of his community. His father, Logan White, was also a native of South Carolina, later came to Arkansas, and died in this state at an advanced age. His wife had reached the venerable age of ninety-three years at the time of her demise. Their son, J. M. White, died March 23, 1892, and his widow survived until 1908. In their family were twelve children, of whom four are living: William Jackson, of this review; Mary A., the widow of Freeman S. Casper and a resident of Denver, Colorado; J. W., who is engaged in merchandising in Russellville; and Helen, the wife of Jesse Leonard, who is identified with the hardware business here.

William Jackson White attended the high school at Ozark, Arkansas, and on starting out in life for himself, he acquired a third interest in a small store, of which his father and E. E. Eggleston were part owners, having thirty-six hundred dollars invested in the enterprise. Prices were high at that time and their capital was not sufficient to enable them to carry a large stock of goods. The partnership was dissolved at the end of the first year and Mr. White and his father took over the business, which was soon placed upon a paying basis, owing to the untiring efforts and excellent management of the son, who assumed entire control of the undertaking. As the business expanded he was obliged to seek larger quarters and in 1886 he erected a large two-story building, eighty by one hundred feet in dimensions, in which he has since conducted his interests, which with the passing years have constantly developed, having now assumed extensive proportions. Mr. White owns practically the entire block in which his store is located and nearly all of the block in front of his establishment, while he also has large land holdings in Pope county. He has likewise become the owner of a farm in Colorado, comprising several hundred acres of land, and is specializing in the raising of Percheron and coach horses, of which he has a very fine grade. A substantial home stands on this property and here Mr. and Mrs. White have spent their summers for the past twenty-three years. Subsequently the firm of White Brothers & Company, composed of W. J. White, Jr., J. W. White, Jr., and J. W. White, Sr., repurchased the interests in the old retail establishment that our subject and his father established May 14, 1872, the building being owned by our subject. He was one of the organizers of the Norwood Wholesale Grocery Company, which was formed at Russellville about 1915, and is now vice president of this company. The Norwood Wholesale Company maintain stores at Conway and Morrilton, Arkansas, in addition to their Russellville establishment. Mr. White being owner of the building in which the business is conducted at this point. He is considered one of the most successful merchants in Pope county and is also well known as a financier, having for thirty-two years served as vice president and one of the directors of the Peoples Exchange Bank of Russellville, of which he was the organizer in 1890. His activities have covered a wide scope and his connection with any undertaking always insured a prosperous outcome of the same, for his efforts have been resultant factors in everything which he has undertaken.

In 1899 Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Allen, a native of Grenada county, Mississippi, and a daughter of James Allen, who was for a number of years one of the prominent merchants of Russellville. Mr. and Mrs. White have had no children of their own, but their kindness of heart has prompted them to rear four children, namely: Eugene Shinn, who is connected with the government mail service, being employed in the office of the chief clerk at Little Rock; Hazel Jones, the wife of Arthur Winn, who is also identified with the mail service and resides at Joplin, Missouri; Vernon Shinn, who is engaged in the wholesale mercantile business at Russellville; and Sadie Jones, the wife of S. J. Ross, who is also connected with mercantile interests here.

Mr. and Mrs. White are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and his political allegiance is given to the republican party. For two years he served as postmaster of Russellville, being appointed by President Garfield, and resigned at the end of that period. He has also been a member of the town council and in public affairs has ever taken a deep and helpful interest. His life has been a very active and useful one and he is now living largely retired in Russellville, at the age of seventy, devoting his attention to the supervision of his extensive interests. Along the path of opportunity open to all he has reached the goal of notable success, his progress being due to the fact that he has recognized and utilized opportunities which others have passed heedlessly by. He has always followed constructive methods, hending his energies to administrative direction and executive control, and his business activities have at all times balanced up with the principles of truth and honor. His life has been an exemplary one in all respects and from pioneer times until the present his name has been inseparably associated with the work of progress, improvement and upbuilding here.

COLONEL LOGAN H. ROOTS.

From the time when he first entered Arkansas, Colonel Logan H. Roots was a devoted and stalwart champion of the state, an untiring worker for its advancement, an unflinching supporter of its highest ideals and a most valuable contributor to all those forces which have made for the greatness and advancement of the commonwealth. He came to the state as a veteran of the Civil war and in fact was still an officer of the U. S. A. when he made investment in a cotton plantation near Little Rock. He became one of the pioneers in the development of much of Arkansas' greatness, just as his ancestors had taken part in laying the foundation for New England's settlement and growth. In tracing the ancestral line one finds that Josiah Roots, in the year 1634, landed on the New England coast after crossing the Atlantic on the old sailing ship, Hercules. The law requirements of that day necessitated that each emigrant bound for the new world must produce "certificates from the minister where they last dwelt, of their conversion and conformity to the orders and discipline of the church and that they had taken the oath of allegiance and supremacy" before being allowed to embark. Robert Gorsham, curate of Great Chart, England, under date of the 20th of March, 1634, did certify not only of "ye sayd Josiah Rootes," but also of "hys familie ancestrie," facts obtained from the "parish records and other bookes of entrie" and "certify'd," showing that the Rootes family, of Norman origin, had been largely interfused with Saxon blood and that representatives of the name were "ever reputed valyant in war and honourabel in peace." Moreover, the members of the family were represented as men of "great staturrs," possessed of keen minds, inflexible integrity, thrift and independence and practical godliness. These sterling traits have been marked in each successive generation down to the present time. Among the descendants of Josiah Rootes in the fourth generation was the Rev. Peter Philanthropos Roots, A. M., who was a distinguished Baptist clergyman and the author of a volume on baptism. He also spent eighteen years in the mission field, preaching in seventeen different states in the Union and also in Canada, traveling more than two thousand miles in this work and delivering more than two hundred sermons annually. His life was one of great usefulness and activity and he died at his home in Mendon, New York, December 26, 1828, when in the sixty-third year of his age.

Benajah Guernsey Roots, the youngest son of the Rev. Peter Philanthropos Roots, was born in Fabius, New York, April 20, 1811, and became a resident of Illinois in 1838. He left the impress of his individuality in large measure upon the history of his adopted state, especially in connection with his earnest and effective championship of the cause of public education. He became the president of the state board of education of Illinois and at the same time contributed in large measure to organized efforts for moral development, being an active member of Bible societies, Sabbath schools and other organizations for religious work. He was likewise identified with various benevolent societies and, moreover, was connected with agricultural societies looking to the further material development of the state. He was married October 20, 1834, to Martha Sibley Holt of Wilmington, Tolland county, Connecticut, and they became the parents of three sons who reached adult age: Oliver Guernsey, who was born in Wilmington, Connecticut, April 11, 1836, and who died November 3, 1856, at New Orleans, Louisiana, where he was acting as principal of a high school; Philander Keep, who was born at Wilmington, Connecticut, June 4, 1838, and who became a valued resident of Little Rock; and Logan Holt, whose name introduces this review. Martha, a daughter of the family, is the wife of J. C. Kimzey of Duquoin, Illinois.

Colonel Logan Holt Roots was born in Tamaroa, Perry county, Illinois, March 26, 1841. His home training had definite effect upon his character. Into him were instilled the principles of kindness and tenderness, as well as of indomitable integrity and inflexible honor. He was taught courtesy and respect for his elders and was constantly impressed with the fact that life is a reality, carrying with it many duties and burdens and that character is best developed and refined in the university of hard knocks. There were comparatively few play-days in his youth. He was stimulated to acquire the best education possible and he early displayed special aptitude in mathematics. When but fifteen years of age he was occupying a man's position in connection with the civil engineering corps engaged in railroad location and construction. Ambitious to further his education he entered the Illinois State Normal University when a youth in his sixteenth year, being the youngest male student in that institution. He afterward taught school for a year and then returned to the university, where he was graduated with valedictorian honors as a member of the class of 1862. The Civil war was already in progress and his patriotic spirit prompted immediate enlistment. He joined the army before returning to his home and became an officer of the Eighty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers. His business qualifications led to his appointment as quartermaster of the regiment and soon afterward he was transferred to the commissary department of the army, with which he continued until the close of hostilities, winning rapid promotion. He served on General Sherman's staff during the notable march from Atlanta to the sea, having charge of the entire supplies for the vast army under Sherman's command. As a member of the general's staff he participated in the grand review in Washington, D. C., in May, 1865, and when General Sherman came west Colonel Roots was assigned to duty in Arkansas.

The natural advantages of the state at once attracted him and before resigning his position as an officer of the army he had purchased a cotton plantation. He greatly developed his property, making it a paying investment, and as the years passed he came more and more into prominence as a public official. In 1872 he was elected to the presidency of the Merchants' National Bank and instituted a most safe and conservative policy, yet one that did not interfere with substantial progress and growth. In fact, under his guidance the bank developed so continuously that it became the foremost financial institution of the state and its thorough reliability was impregnable. It was his great ambition to aid materially in the development and upbuilding of the southwest and to this end he became closely associated with various banking institutions, which constitute the real heart of the commercial body, indicating the healthfulness of trade. He was quick to extend aid to manufactories and this aid was always based upon a firm belief in the value of the enterprise. His judgment was particularly sound and his discrimination keen. Beyond his banking business he had large investments in cotton-seed oil mills and in many manufacturing enterprises of Arkansas. He was a member of the directorate of the gas light, cotton mills, waterworks, state fair association, cooperate interests and other important companies having to do with the steady development of the commonwealth. He was likewise one of the directors and a member of the executive committee of the Texas & St. Louis Railroad and he became the president and largest stockholder of the Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Company, which company was the licensee of all telephone exchanges in Galveston, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Waco, Dallas and Fort Worth. In fact Colonel Roots was the father of the telephone system of the southwest and the value of his service in this connection cannot be overestimated.

On the 9th of August, 1871, Colonel Roots was married to Miss Emily M. Blakeslee, daughter of Lyman C. Blakeslee and a native of western New York, born in 1844. She represented one of the old families of the Empire state, several generations of the name having there resided. Her father became the superintendent of the largest oil producing company in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, with headquarters at Bradford. Her mother was a sister of C. D. Angell, the originator of Angell's Belt Theory, in the oil regions. In young womanhood Mrs. Roots taught school in southern Illinois from 1864 until 1866 inclusive. She always adhered to the faith of the Episcopal church, with which her ancestors were connected through several generations, and she became the president of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Episcopal church in Little Rock, thus instituting much splendid work.

Colonel and Mrs. Roots became the parents of seven children, but four sons are deceased. Those living are: Frances Emily, born March 23, 1874; Miriam, born June 11, 1879; and Lois Helen, born October 18, 1884.

Like his wife, Colonel Roots belonged to the Episcopal church and was a generous contributor to its work. Politically he was a republican and he was identified with several fraternal and social organizations. He had been a resident of Arkansas for only a brief period when he was appointed collector of internal revenue without his solicitation and held the office until elected to represent Arkansas in congress, serving as the youngest member of both the fortieth and forty-first congresses. He was most loyal to the interests of his adopted state and stanchly and effectively championed plans and measures of great benefit to the commonwealth. While at all times he kept in close touch with the trend of political thought and progress, he was never a politician in the sense of office seeking and the positions which he filled came to him as a tribute to his ability and to his loyalty in all matters of citizenship. He inherited the sterling traits of his character and he developed these traits through a life of great activity and usefulness. His prominence is shown through the fact that the military post located just outside of Little Rock, and which he was largely instrumental in securing, was named in his honor. His last journey to Washington and Chicago was made in the interests of the military post. There are, indeed, many evidences of his loyalty to his adopted city and state and of his devotion to those causes which contributed most to its upbuilding and progress. He continued a resident of Little Rock until his demise, which occurred May 30, 1893, when he was fifty-two years of age. With his forcefulness and resourcefulness he combined high standards that made his labor of great benefit and, looking beyond the exigencies of the moment, he worked for the future with its boundless opportunities. Colonel Roots was a gentleman of most obliging disposition and genial nature and it has been said that he never spoke an unkind word of anyone. Life with him was real and earnest and he left the world better for his having lived.

O. P. MAXWELL.

O. P. Maxwell, a native son of Arkansas and a member of one of the old and prominent families of the state, is well known in financial circles of Benton county as cashier of the State Bank of Siloam Springs and is well fitted by training and experience for the duties which devolve upon him in this connection. He was born in DeWitt, Arkansas, February 11, 1877, a son of Albert and Emma (Pringle) Maxwell, the former a native of Orange county, Indiana, while the latter was born in Arkansas. They were married in the Bear state and the father engaged in the occupation of blacksmithing throughout practically his entire life, also following the trade of a millwright to some extent. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving for four years in the Confederate army, which he left at the siege of Vicksburg, Mississippi, never returning to his command. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a democrat in his political views and took a prominent part in public affairs, serving as county commissioner and also aiding in reconstruction work in the state. To Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were born six children: Alice, who is the widow of M. A. Miller and resides in Pueblo, Colorado; Jennie, who married Charles O'Dowd, a leading tailor of San Antonio, Texas; James R., a machinist, of whom the family have had no word for fifteen years; O. P., of this review; R. L., a prominent physician of Pueblo, Colorado; and Sarah, the wife of Henry Tillitt, who is connected with railroad interests and resides at San Antonio, Texas. The paternal grandfather, Nimrod Maxwell, became a resident of Arkansas county, Arkansas, and there spent his remaining years. His father and seven sons of the family fought in the Indian wars, serving under General Harrison at the Battle of Tippecanoe. The maternal grandfather, James Pringle, also settled in Arkansas county in an early day and there died during the childhood of Mrs. Maxwell.

O. P. Maxwell acquired his education in the schools of Arkansas county, Arkansas, afterward taking up the profession of teaching, which he followed for a time. He was called to public office, serving from 1899 until 1901 as surveyor of Arkansas county, after which he engaged in merchandising, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1909 he was admitted to the bar and for some time followed his profession, also continuing active in financial affairs. In 1905 he became identified with the Bank of Gillett, Arkansas, with which he continued for six years, and in 1911 he removed to Siloam Springs, Benton county, where he practiced law for a year. In 1912 he became cashier of the State Bank of Siloam Springs and has since served in that capacity, making a most creditable record in the office by the prompt and faithful manner in which he is discharging his duties. He thoroughly understands the principles of his occupation and the details of modern finance and is doing able and systematic work. He also has other interests, owning land in Benton county, Arkansas, and in Oklahoma, and his investments have been judiciously placed, for he is a keen, farsighted business man.

In 1898 Mr. Maxwell was united in marriage to Miss Lettie Beck, a native of Morrilton, Arkansas, and a daughter of C. J. Beck, who was reared in this state, devoting his attention to the operation of a farm. Three children have been born of this union: Ralph E., who is a student in the State University of Arkansas, where he is pursuing a course in chemical engineering; Willa May, at home; and Alfred, a high school pupil.

Mr. Maxwell is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and an active worker in its behalf. For sixteen years he has been superintendent of the Sunday school and was chairman of the building committee which had charge of the erection of the beautiful new church edifice, representing a cost of fifty thousand dollars. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and is a past master of the lodge at Gillett. He is a democrat in his political views and has taken a prominent part in public affairs, serving as mayor of Gillett, as councilman of Siloam Springs, and for nine years has been a member of its school board, the cause of education finding in him a strong advocate.

Mr. Maxwell is a self-educated and self-made man. He was obliged to aid in the support of the family after his father's death and his early youth was a period of hard and unremitting toil. He has worked his way upward, placing his dependence upon the substantial qualities of industry, perseverance and integrity, and well deserved success has crowned his efforts. His record is a most commendable one and he enjoys the unqualified respect and esteem of a large circle of friends.

HON. ROBERT W. BAXTER.

Hon. Robert W. Baxter, prominently identified with the lumber industry at Dermott, is a representative of a family whose members have gained positions of leadership in connection with the legal profession and also along business lines, while in public affairs they have likewise been active, rendering effective service for the general good. Mr. Baxter was born in Drew county, Arkansas, four miles south of Monticello, on the 22d of June, 1885, of the marriage of Robert M. and Virginia (Sunderlin) Baxter, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Georgia. The father is connected with the lumber industry at Winnsboro, Louisiana. The mother died in November, 1887.

After completing a course in the Hinemon University School at Monticello, Arkansas, Mr. Baxter entered the law department of the University of Michigan and was admitted to practice in the circuit and supreme courts in 1912. He began his professional career at Warren, Arkansas, and while there residing was elected city attorney, in which capacity he served for six years, discharging the duties of that office conscientiously and efficiently. In 1917 he decided to devote his attention to business pursuits and on the 11th of June of that year he organized the Baxter Lumber Company at Dermott, being sole owner of the undertaking. From the beginning the enterprise proved a success and under the capable direction of Mr. Baxter, the scope of the business has been greatly extended, a branch yard having been established at Arkansas City in 1921. He has made a close study of the lumber industry and in the management of his interests displays foresight, determination and marked executive ability.

In 1918 Mr. Baxter was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Murphy of Warren, and they have become the parents of a son, Robert Patrick. They are members of the Baptist church, actively interested in its work, and Mr. Baxter is chairman of the board of deacons. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and his fellow citizens have shown their appreciation of his worth and ability by calling him to public office. In 1916 he was chosen to represent his district in the Arkansas state legislature, in which he served for one term, and as a member of the common council of Dermott, he is doing all in his power to promote the interests of his city. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Concord Lodge, No. 23, F. & A. M., at Eudora, Arkansas, and he is also connected with the Woodmen of the World. He is a self-made man, who has constructed his own success, working his way upward through merit and ability. While pursuing his studies he engaged in teaching during the winter season and in the summer months attended the university. He became an instructor when nineteen years of age and devoted six years to teaching, thus securing the funds necessary for the acquirement of an education and giving proof of the elemental strength of his character. He has always stood for progress and improvement in affairs relating to the upbuilding of town, county and commonwealth and ranks with the public-spirited citizens and progressive business men of Dermott.

JOHN S. LAKE.

John S. Lake was born in Tipton county Tennessee, on the 1st day of April, 1861, and was reared on a farm in that county. His education was such as could be derived from the common schools of that time. In 1880 he came to Arkansas and located in Perry County, where he married Miss Fanny White, who survived their marriage only a few months. He then began the study of law in the office of Colonel J. F. Sellers, of Perryville, and was admitted to the bar in 1886. In 1887 he became a resident of Sevier county, opening an office at Lockesburg in partnership with W. H. Collins. This association was maintained until 1901, when the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Lake was connected with Judge Oscar Scott and J. D. Head in a partnership relation until the death of Judge Scott. Mr. Lake was then joined by Judge Steel and J. D. Head under the firm name of Steel, Lake & Head and the association was continued until 1917. Mr. Lake was then appointed by Governor Brough as judge of the ninth judicial circuit to fill a vacancy in the office caused by the death of Judge Cowling. After the expiration of the term, Mr. Lake practiced alone until his son was graduated from law college and the present firm of Lake & Lake was formed. He filled the office of prosecuting attorney from 1904 to 1908 and served as a member of the legislature during the sessions of 1895 and 1897.

In 1891 Mr. Lake married Miss Lou Williamson, and to them have been born five children: Edward C., who is now his father's law partner in the firm of Lake & Lake, was graduated from the University of Arkansas in 1914 and was attending the law department of Columbia University when America entered the World war. He enlisted, was commissioned captain in 1917 and went overseas as a member of the Eighty-seventh Division. He served until February 12, 1919, when he received his discharge. After his return he reentered Columbia University, was graduated and then joined his father in the practice. The second son of the family, John P. Lake, graduated from the University of Arkansas in 1915 and was a student in the law department of the University of Michigan when the war was entered by his country. He immediately enlisted and served as a lieutenant throughout the war and was severely wounded on the last day of the fighting. Later he was made captain and is now one of the military instructors in Missouri University. Winford, the third son, graduates from Missouri University in 1922 and expects to become a lawyer. Mary, the elder daughter, died in Washington, where she was attending college, in 1918, at the age of eighteen. Johnny Lou, the baby girl, is finishing the high school course in 1922. These children all give promise of a brilliant future and Mr. Lake is justly proud of them.

THOMAS SAMUEL OSBORNE.

Thomas Samuel Osborne, member of the Fort Smith bar, who entered upon the active practice of law here at an early day and has since become known by reason of his ability in handling cases entrusted to his care, was born in Independence county, Arkansas, in 1858 and is a son of Enoch Morgan and Emeline (Howell) Osborne. He received liberal educational opportunities at Asheville, North Carolina, and later was a student in the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree. His identification with Fort Smith dates from 1886 and through the intervening period of thirty-six years he has remained an active factor in the practice of law. From 1889 until 1893 he was in partnership with George A. Grace. In 1887 he was elected city attorney and has been closely associated with professional interests here from the pioneer border days when Fort Smith was the seat of justice for Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. He defended the notorious bandit, Henry Starr, on a minor charge. He was attorney in the federal court in many important cases during those stirring early days before law and order had fully taken root and suppressed lawlessness in this frontier district. He has constantly been inspired by an innate love of justice and fidelity to the interests of his clients, yet he never forgets that he owes a higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. The tenacity and courage with which he defends the right as he understands it challenges the admiration of his associates. Moreover, he invariably seeks to present his argument in the strong, clear light of common reason and sound logical principle and he displays notable diligence in the preparation of his cases. Mr. Osborne is well known as a lawmaker as well as a lawyer, for in 1913 and 1917 he served as a member of the state legislature and while in the general assembly introduced and had passed a measure to create a commission form of government in Fort Smith.

Mr. Osborne's mother is still living at the advanced age of ninety years. His father died in 1876 at the age of sixty-one years. They were of well known families in North Carolina, and came to this state in 1854, locating in Independence county. His father owned a large plantation on White river, and was a successful and ideal farmer. He was a gentleman of the old school and of fine stalwart character and highly respected in his county; his mother, a woman of more than two generations back, was noted for her knowledge of the Bible, beautiful Christian life and charity to others; and both were known for their example and parental training of their five sons and two daughters.

Thomas S. Osborne was married in 1892 to Miss Jessie Collier and their children are Virginia E. and Howell C. The former, who was born in 1896, is a graduate of the University of Arkansas and also attended the University of Chicago. She engaged in the profession of teaching prior to her marriage to John S. Toney of Pine Bluff. For a time she was teacher of English in a high school at Fort Smith and also taught at Palm Beach, Florida. During the World War Howell C. Osborne was a student in the army training corps at Fayetteville, Arkansas. Five years ago he entered the grain business and has since conducted his interests as a grain broker and as a dealer in flour and feed at Fort Smith, where he has gained an enviable position in business circles. He married Miss Nell Wright of Fort Smith on the 1st of October, 1921.

Mr. Osborne has long been prominent in politics as a supporter of the democratic party and has ever been most loyal to any cause which he has espoused. He is everywhere recognized as a man of integrity and honesty of purpose, despising all unworthy or questionable methods in securing success in any direction, political or otherwise. He has wrought along the lines of largest good for the community and the commonwealth and is today one of the honored pioneer practitioners of the Fort Smith bar.

FRED DUKE.

Fred Duke, a successful dry goods merchant of Mena, owning and conducting a well appointed store and building up a substantial trade by reason of his progressive methods and fair dealing, was born in Laneburg, Nevada county, Arkansas, near Prescott, on the 15th of January, 1893. Mention of the family to which he belongs is found in the sketch of S. W. Duke on another page of this work. In the acquirement of his education he attended the Prescott high school and then started out in the business world as clerk in a dry goods store in that city, remaining in that connection for more than two years. On the 14th of June, 1914, he arrived in Mena, where he began working for the Lockridge Dry Goods Company and was thus engaged until with a partner he purchased the business of his employer, organizing the firm of Duke & Magruder on the 1st of January, 1917. Later they changed the firm name to the Duke Magruder Dry Goods Company, which is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and of which Mr. Duke is the president and general manager, with J. T. Magruder as the vice president and S. W. Duke as the secretary and treasurer. They carry a large line of dry goods, ladies' ready-to-wear garments, millinery and shoes and occupy two floors in one of the substantial business structures of the city. Their trade is steadily growing and the success of the enterprise has long since been assured. Mr. Duke devotes his entire time and attention to the store, which is the largest and most thoroughly progressive mercantile establishment in Mena.

On the 10th of March, 1921, Mr. Duke was married to Miss Nettie Acruman,⁶ of Fordyce, Arkansas, a daughter of E. A. Acruman, who was a merchant and planter of Fordyce. Mrs. Duke belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Duke is a Mason, who has taken the degrees of the York Rite and has also become a member of the Mystic Shrine at Little Rock. He is now senior warden in the commandery and is a worthy follower and exemplar of the teachings and purposes of the craft. He likewise belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a democrat but has never aspired to office, preferring to concentrate his energies and attention upon his business affairs, which wisely and carefully directed, have brought him to a creditable and enviable position among the successful merchants of this part of the state.

HON. I. N. MOORE.

Hon. I. N. Moore, a native son of Arkansas and a member of one of its pioneer families, is a leading attorney of Dumas, where he has practiced his profession since 1912, and he has also taken a prominent part in public affairs, having represented his district in the state legislature. His birth occurred in Garland county, Arkansas, September 3, 1876, and his parents were Miles S. and Mary E. (Aikens) Moore, the latter a native of Union county, Arkansas. When sixteen years of age his father removed from Georgia to Arkansas with his parents, who settled in Bradley county. There his marriage occurred and immediately following that event he joined the Confederate army as a private, serving throughout the Civil war, and after his discharge he removed to Garland county, Arkansas, where he engaged in the practice of medicine. Later he went to Pine Bluff, where he remained for a time and then located at Red Fork, in Desha county, but shortly afterward sought the medicinal qualities of the famous waters of Hot Springs, owing to failing health, and there he died on the 16th of August, 1908.

In the public schools of Fordyce, Arkansas, Mr. Moore pursued his education and after laying aside his textbooks he was variously employed until about 1905, when he took up the study of law, and while reading Blackstone he worked as a clerk in mercantile establishments of Dumas. In 1911 he was called to public office, being chosen to represent his district in the state legislature, and in the following year he was admitted to the bar, entering upon his professional activities at Dumas, where he has since maintained an office. In 1919 he was joined by George D. Hester under the firm style of Moore & Hester and they are conducting a large law business, being numbered among the most successful attorneys of Dumas. Mr. Moore has a thorough knowledge of statute and precedent, is careful in the preparation of cases, convincing in argument and is well qualified to handle important litigated interests.

In 1901 Mr. Moore was united in marriage to Miss Ophelia Puntney, of Florence, Drew county, and they became the parents of eleven children, eight of whom survive, namely: Norman, Viola, Robert, Ralph, Madge, Lloyd, Charles Edward and Carr Lamoin. They are all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are members of the Baptist church and Mr. Moore is serving as one of its deacons. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Masons, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 547, F. & A. M., and to Victory Chapter, R. A. M., in the latter organization. Through merit and ability he has worked his way upward in his profession and his fellow practitioners unite in bearing testimony as to his high character and superior mind. He is ever ready to give his support to measures for the promotion of the public welfare and is a stalwart champion of everything pertaining to the interests and upbuilding of his community, county and state.

RAY GILL.

The outstanding characteristic of Ray Gill, secretary of the Business Men's Club of Fort Smith, is probably initiative. With a keenness that is born of energy and diligence he seems to see the possibilities of every situation and utilizes his opportunities and advantages in the attainment of results extremely desirable in the upbuilding of various interests and communities.

Mr. Gill was born in Paola, Kansas, in 1876. He completed his education in the University of Kansas and subsequently engaged in newspaper work and in teaching school. Both proved of worth and value to him in preparation for his activities at a later date. In 1900 he came to Arkansas and was first engaged in the hotel business at Hot Springs. While there residing, he founded the criminal identification bureau, employing the Bertillon and finger print systems. He also organized the Arkansas State Fair Association, offering prizes for mineral and agricultural exhibits, which resulted in a widespread interest and development along both agricultural and mineral lines.

From 1908 to 1916 Mr. Gill was associated with the state department of education. While thus engaged he instituted the first agricultural club work in Arkansas and organized Boys Corn Clubs throughout the state. He prepared and issued pamphlets on these movements and their value, resulting largely in production of a greater and better yield of corn. As deputy state superintendent of public instruction he was in charge of publicity and propaganda, thus serving until 1916 with the result that there was a decided increase in the school tax in order that the schools of the state might be advanced to higher standards.

Mr. Gill was also associated with the old Board of Trade and the old Chamber of Commerce of Little Rock and cooperated heartily in all organized movements of those bodies for the benefit of the city and the extension of its trade relations. In 1914 he was prominent in the movement for agricultural development and for diversifying crops. He greatly promoted these objects through demonstration by exhibit and through the distribution of literature on similar work in other states.

In 1916 Mr. Gill became secretary of the Business Men's Club of Fort Smith, his work being the broadening of civic spirit. This was following the discovery of natural gas, which gave great impetus to the growth and development of the city. He also instituted a factory campaign, which resulted in locating twenty-five factories in Fort Smith, including many furniture factories and glass making concerns. He also continued the campaign for agricultural extension and he was instrumental in getting rid of the cattle tick in this campaign, so that Sebastian county was placed north of the quarantine line. He likewise instituted a movement for the introduction of blooded cattle and from forty per cent of the normal milk supply there was an increase to full local supply, with six hundred to seven hundred gallons of cream per week shipped to creameries. Mr. Gill closely studies every question that has to do with the agricultural development and business progress of the state.

Mr. Gill has also organized civic and cultural clubs which work in conjunction with the organized civic council, meeting once a month, representatives of these clubs, of the school board and other organizations, meeting in a round-table discussion of civic needs. The Civic Federation under his guidance has worked on the housing problem and on the entertainment of children, and each club which is organized devotes a part of its time to social betterment.

During the World war the Business Men's Club was the center of all war movements and activities. A most complete card system was kept and any movement or project that was started was immediately systematized in this way. Mr. Gill served as subchairman of the war industries board and in every possible way furthered the work done in Arkansas in connection with the various war activities which constituted the home defense for the soldiers in camp and field. Every corporation was listed with an account of the nationality of the owner and that of the superintendent, together with the record of floor space and the number of employes both skilled and unskilled, together with an account of the possibility of increased output or the conversion of a plant to other uses if necessary. The system developed by Mr. Gill was used as a model throughout the country. Another line of his activity was in connection with the bond sales campaigns and in this work every promise was an actual sale being accompanied by cash payment. The liberty loan work, the conservation work and other campaign work was handled by Mr. Gill in a concise and accurate manner, thoroughness and system characterizing all of the work done in the office.

In connection with the social welfare work of which he has been the prime mover the old federal jail was ceded to The Fort Smith Day Nursery and a demonstration of kitchen activities and a free clinic were instituted. The building has likewise been used as a gymnasium and a place for teaching child welfare work and health improvement. The study of the milk situation has also claimed the attention of Mr. Gill, who aided in securing the establishment of health inspection for the school children, which disclosed a need of nourishment. Fifteen distributing stations were established, issuing a quart of milk per day to school children and the result was seen in the immediate improvement in the general health of the pupils.

In the reorganization campaign of the Chamber of Commerce sixty new members were added in spite of the general depression of the times and this is in marked contrast to the falling off that has been shown in Chambers of Commerce in other cities.

The funds of the Chamber are distributed through three different appropriations—the industrial fund, the civic fund and the traffic fund—and the interlocking directorates have handled in this way a total of thirty-two thousand dollars per year. Mr. Gill has also instituted a home-building movement, promoting a stimulation in home building. There is now a campaign under way for securing substantial industries for the city.

Mr. Gill was married in 1894, to Miss Phoebe Hobson and they have two children: Hazel; and Mrs. Juanita Adams. Mr. Gill is a man of unfeigned cordiality, possessing a social, genial nature, while at the same time he is most alert and energetic, ready for any emergency and ready for any opportunity. He has studied closely the great sociological, political and economic problems before the country today and while concentrating his efforts upon Fort Smith, its local needs and its advantages he has at the same time aided many other cities in finding solution for their problems through the example which he has set. The worth of his work is immeasurable and Fort Smith could ill afford to dispense with his services.

W. H. BLAND.

In the history of De Valls Bluff it is imperative that mention be made of W. H. Bland inasmuch as he was a prominent figure in commercial circles and in public life. His entire career was one which reflected credit and honor upon the people who honored him and his service was of marked value to the community which he represented. Born in Bartlett, Tennessee, on the 14th of March, 1861, he was the son of Theophilus and Adeline (Adams) Bland. His youthful days were spent in his native state, where he pursued his education and grew to manhood. Coming to Arkansas in 1884, he established his home in Biscoe, Prairie county, where he engaged in business. Later he became a planter and cotton buyer. There he remained until his removal to De Valls Bluff in 1900, where he established a general merchandise business. He developed a trade of substantial proportions, and his enterprise, diligence and determination constituted the broad foundation upon which he built his success. His ability brought him prominently to the front and at all times he commanded the confidence and respect of his fellowmen, not alone by reason of the success he achieved but also owing to the straightforward business policy which he ever followed.

Mr. Bland was twice married. The children of the first marriage are Harvey C. and Troy. The former is a director of a leading wholesale dry goods firm in Little Rock, and Troy also resides there and is a dealer in real estate and has oil interests in El Dorado. The children of the second marriage are two daughters, Leland and Lucille, the latter a graduate of the University of Arkansas, and the former a member of the firm that her father established.

Mr. Bland was keenly interested in the public welfare and espoused many causes which contributed to general progress and improvement. He was elected a member of the legislature in 1915 and reelected in 1917, and his interest in vital public measures was real and forceful. He was the author of the uniform textbook law passed in 1917 and he stood loyally in defense of various other plans for the general good. He was, indeed, a useful and public-spirited citizen and wide regret was felt when he passed away in July, 1917.

STERLING WOODWARD TUCKER.

Sterling Woodward Tucker, president of the Fones Brothers Hardware Company, a large wholesale concern of Little Rock, has thus risen to prominence in business circles in his native city, for he was here born December 15, 1883. He is a son of Sterling W. and Jennie (Hennegin) Tucker. The father was born in Little Rock in 1852 and was a representative of one of the old and prominent families here. He was general manager for some time of the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad, now a part of the Rock Island system. His military service covered connection with the Quapaw Guards, an organization of the state militia, of which he was a lieutenant. His wife was born March 22, 1861, and they were married in Little Rock in 1882. They became parents of two sons: Sterling W. and Henry Hennegin, who was born January 14, 1888, and is a partner of his brother in the wholesale hardware business.

In his youthful days Sterling W. Tucker became a public school pupil and passing through consecutive grades was in due time graduated from the high school as a member of the class of 1901. In the same year he initiated his business career by entering the employ of the Fones Brothers Hardware Company, a wholesale house. He started in a minor capacity, being assigned to a position in the wareroom. He rose through successive promotions, becoming shipping clerk and superintendent of the operating department, which is practically supervisor of the whole business, on the death of D. G. Fones, the president of the company. Mr. Tucker continued in the operating department until 1916, at which time J. J. Mandelbaum, the new president retired. Mr. Tucker was then elected president and treasurer and in this dual position still continues, being now the executive head of an immense business. The company is a million dollar concern. Identified with this business for twenty years Mr. Tucker is familiar with every phase thereof and by reason of his sound judgment and keen discrimination he has been able to most wisely direct the affairs of the company. He is also a director of the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock.

On the 16th of June, 1909, in Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Tucker was married to Miss Brydie Baker, who was born in Chicago, Illinois, January 23, 1887, and is a graduate of the National Park Seminary at Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker are members of Christ Episcopal church and their social position is an enviable one. Mr. Tucker belongs to the Little Rock Country Club and politically he is connected with the democratic party. During the World war he served on all of the bond and Red Cross drives and supported many other projects having to do with the successful prosecution of the war. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished since he started out in the business world in a most humble capacity following the completion of his public school course. Since then he has gradually advanced by reason of his capability, close application, thoroughness and unimpeachable integrity. Each forward step has brought him a broader outlook and wider opportunities, and he is today one of the leading merchants of Little Rock, controlling a million dollar concern as the president of the Fones Brothers Hardware Company.

CURRIN M. NICHOL.

On the roster of public officials in Jefferson county appears the name of Currin M. Nichol, who is filling the position of sheriff and makes his home in Pine Bluff. He has been continued in office almost uninterruptedly since 1904 and in every position which he has filled he has proven his loyalty to the trust reposed in him and his capability, through the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties that have devolved upon him. He was born in Pine Bluff on the 24th of May, 1876, his parents being Charles Alexander and Nannie (Williams) Nichol, both of whom were natives of Tennessee and representatives of old and prominent southern families. The father was born in the city of Nashville and was a son of William Nichol. When his textbooks were put aside he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, becoming a planter, and following the outbreak of the Civil war he joined the Confederate army and served in defense of the southland with the rank of captain of a company in a Tennessee regiment, participating in many important battles and in numerous minor engagements. He always maintained his interest in his old army comrades through his connection with the United Confederate Veterans' Association and he gave unfaltering allegiance to the democratic party, believing firmly in its principles as factors in good government. It was after the close of the Civil war that he came to Arkansas, where he conducted a plantation and during the remainder of his life he continued a prominent and influential citizen here, his place being situated a short distance below Pine Bluff on the Arkansas river. There he developed one of the valuable landed estates of the county, giving to it his active supervision until his demise, which occurred in 1891. His wife, who was a daughter of Willoughby Williams, a well known planter along the Arkansas river, departed this life the same year. They were the parents of three sons, who are living: Currin M.; William, who is now a resident of Pine Bluff; and Joe, who is the vice president of the Simmons National Bank here.

Currin M. Nichol was educated in a private school conducted by Professor Junius Jordan, now superintendent of the schools of Pine Bluff, and in the University of Arkansas, which he attended for two years. He afterward accepted a clerical position in the offices of the Cotton Belt Railroad at Pine Bluff, being at that time twenty-four years of age. He applied himself with thoroughness and diligence to the tasks assigned him with that corporation, with which he remained for a period of five years, when he was called to public office. He was first made deputy county clerk in 1904 and filled the position for four years. His capability and efficiency in that connection led to his selection for other official duties and honors. He was elected county treasurer, also serving in that office for four years and he afterward occupied the position of county and probate clerk for six years. He was next elected to the position of sheriff and his splendid record in office is indicated in the fact that he is now serving for the second term in that position. Over his official record there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil, for he has always been most loyal to the duties that devolve upon him and the trust that is reposed in him. He has never wavered in his allegiance to the democratic party, the principles of which he has upheld since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and he has ever been an earnest and zealous worker in its ranks.

Mr. Nichol is a Presbyterian in religious faith and fraternally is connected with the Masons, having attained the Knights Templar degree in the York Rite, the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite, and with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and to the Knights of Pythias and at all times is a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of these organizations, all of which are based upon a recognition of the brotherhood of mankind and the obligations thereby imposed.

JOSEPH HENRY BROWN.

Prominent among the energetic, farsighted and successful business men of Little Rock is Joseph Henry Brown, vice president of the C. J. Lincoln Company, wholesale dealers in drugs. He has made his home in the capital city since the fall of 1890 and throughout the intervening period has been connected with the business enterprise of which he is now one of the leading officials. Mr. Brown came to the southwest from Illinois, his birth having occurred in Morris, Grundy county, December 18, 1860. He is a son of John and Ann (Brown) Brown, who, though of the same name, were not related. The father was born in the village of Trushington, Leicestershire county, England, September 1, 1825, and his life record covered the intervening years to 1906, when he was called to his final rest. He served an apprenticeship to his cousin, James Ogden, a druggist of Ashton, England, and soon after the completion of his term of indenture he purchased a pharmacy at Droylsden, near Manchester, England. In the fall of 1851 he came to the new world, crossing the country to Illinois, where lived his friend, William H. Bradbury, formerly of Ashton, England. Mr. Brown purchased land about seven miles from the present site of Morris, Illinois. He afterward returned to England, disposed of his property there and left the following spring for a life on the Illinois prairies. In the spring of 1867 he took up his abode in Morris and there engaged in the drug business, in connection with Hamilton Longworth. He continued to carry on business there almost to the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Brown were married August 27, 1850, and celebrated their golden wedding at Morris in 1900. Mrs. Brown was born at Barton under Nudwood, England, in 1826, and departed this life January 7, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. John Brown were the parents of ten children.

At the usual age Joseph Henry Brown became a pupil in the public schools of Morris continuing his studies there until graduated from the high school. He also spent a year as a student in the Chicago School of Pharmacy and was graduated in 1883 from the Philadelphia (Pa.) College of Pharmacy. Later he returned to Morris and entered his father's drug store, in which he was employed for several years. In 1890 he went to Denver, Colorado, expecting to locate but only remained for six months, working during that period as a pharmacist. He next took up his abode in Little Rock in the fall of 1890 and soon afterward purchased an interest in the wholesale drug house conducted under the name of the C. J. Lincoln Company. Since then he has been closely associated with the business, its development and conduct, and in 1898 he became vice president and manager, in which dual position he continues. He has thus had much to do with shaping the policy and directing the activities of the house, which is today one of the strong and potent forces in the commercial circles of Little Rock.

Mr. Brown is a republican in his political views and his religious faith is that of the Christ Episcopal church. Fraternally he is a Mason of the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and member of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Country Club and the Quapaw Club and is highly esteemed by reason of a genial social nature.

JOHN M. MOORE.

Fifty* years have been added to the cycle of the centuries since John M. Moore became a member of the Little Rock bar and throughout that period he has held to the highest professional standards, his course reflecting credit and honor upon the history of the Arkansas bar. Moreover, he is a native of Pulaski county and a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of the state.

In the paternal line his ancestry is traced back to Thomas Lloyd, who came from Montgomeryshire, Wales, to America and settled in Pennsylvania. He was president of the legislative council and deputy governor of the Colony in 1684, after William Penn returned to England. A daughter of Thomas Lloyd became the wife of Samuel Preston, and their daughter married Dr. Richard Moore of Maryland, from whom John M. Moore is a descendant in the fifth generation.

Israel M. Moore, the father of John M. Moore, was born in Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, December 3, 1814, and came to the southwest when a young man of twenty-two years. He was one of the promoters of the Cairo & Fulton Railroad, which was organized under acts of the legislatures of Missouri and Arkansas for the purpose of building a railroad from Cairo, Illinois, to the southern part of this state. He served on the board of directors and was largely instrumental in securing land grants from congress to the company until it passed into the hands of Thomas Allen of St. Louis and was reorganized as a part of the system of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. On the maternal side, his great-grandfather came from the north of Ireland to America, and served as a member of the patriot army in the Revolutionary war.

John M. Moore was reared in Searcy, Arkansas, and although but a schoolboy at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, he joined the Third Arkansas Cavalry and was on active duty under Generals Forrest and Wheeler. He enlisted as a private but was promoted to a lieutenancy and was in command of his company at the close of hostilities. With his return home Mr. Moore resumed his studies under the direction of private tutors, and a year later began preparation for the bar, being admitted to practice in Searcy. In 1870 he opened a law office in Augusta, Woodruff county, and the following year removed to Little Rock, where for half a century he has engaged in practice. He served for six years as reporter of the supreme court.

In 1873 Mr. Moore wedded Miss Annie C. Turner, a daughter of Blakely D. Turner, who was one of the pioneer members of the Arkansas bar. Mrs. Moore departed this life January 31, 1901. Their family numbered four children: J. Merrick, associated with his father in the practice of law, married Miss Rebecca Read of Fort Smith; Janie, now deceased, was the wife of A. C. Miller of Little Rock; Charlotte is the wife of M. K. Kassony of New York city; and Blake Turner died in 1909.

In his political views Mr. Moore has always been a supporter of democratic principles, and for eight years he was chairman of the state central committee, contributing much to the success and growth of the party during that period. He never sought nor held a political office. His ambition seems to have been centered in his profession. His high professional standing is indicated in the fact that he was honored with the presidency of the State Bar Association. A contemporary biographer has said of him: "There are those—and they are legion—who put at the head of the legal profession in Arkansas the name of John M. Moore. It is quite certain that no one qualified to form an opinion on the subject but regards him as one among the very few who are the head and front of the profession. He is one of those truly great lawyers of whom it is in no sense flattery to say that he is deeply learned in the law. Indeed, he is, intellectually, more than a learned lawyer; he is a man of broad scholarship. Few men have read more widely. His private library, of works selected from time to time through a period of many years, is one of the largest and best in the state. The quality and scope of the collection, in which are missing few, if any, of the outstanding contributions to knowledge of nearly every practical sort during the last half a century, afford significant evidence of an intellectuality of ripe and varied culture. He is, moreover, a shrewd and wise observer of practical affairs. His personality is one of dignity and reserve. He has won success in his profession by dint of sheer ability."

MACK F. MONTGOMERY.

Arkansas county has on the whole been signally favored with the class of men who have occupied her public positions, for usually they have been men faithful to duty, capable and loyal to the tasks which they undertake. Mack F. Montgomery as county treasurer is making a record equal to that of the most efficient men who have served Arkansas county. He resides in De Witt and the friendly regard in which he is held is everywhere evident. He was born on a farm near Mount Adams, Arkansas, on the 26th of November, 1876, and represents one of the old families of this state, while his forebears were originally from Virginia. Representatives of the name removed from the Old Dominion to Mississippi and it was from the latter state that the founders of the family in Arkansas came. His father was J. S. Montgomery and the latter had a brother who was killed in the Civil war. J. S. Montgomery was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Pryor, whose people came from Tennessee.

Mack F. Montgomery largely acquired his education in the public schools of Arkansas county and later attended the University of Arkansas, thus being well qualified for life's practical and responsible duties. He was first called to public office when elected county assessor of Arkansas county in 1914, and so splendidly did he serve in that connection that he was called to the position of county treasurer in 1921, in which office he is now serving. He has also been associated with the Cotton Belt Railway and his activity in business and official circles has made him a substantial citizen of the community.

On January 20, 1901, Mr. Montgomery wedded Miss Florence Price of Ashley county, Arkansas, a daughter of E. G. Price. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he is serving as a steward, and he is also active in other lines of church work, filling the position of Sunday school superintendent at the present writing. He represents one of the old and honored pioneer families of the state. It was his grandfather in the paternal line who named the town of De Witt. He was accorded that privilege and so called it in honor of Governor De Witt Clinton, one-time chief executive of New York and the builder of the Erie canal. From that early day to the present representatives of the Montgomery family have borne their share in the work of public progress and improvement and Mack F. Montgomery, still living in De Witt, has long taken active part in furthering the welfare of the town and promoting its upbuilding along many lines of general improvement and progress.

COLONEL C. F. ARMISTEAD.

Colonel C. F. Armistead, a retired army officer now living in Fayetteville, was born in Franklin county, this state, April 18, 1872, and is a son of John C. and Annie (Carroll) Armistead who are natives of Virginia and of Arkansas respectively. The former was a son of John Armistead, who was also born in Virginia and spent his entire life in that state, living in the Shenandoah valley. The family came originally from Holland and has been represented in this country through several generations. General George Armistead was in command of Fort McHenry, off the Maryland coast, when Francis Key wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner." General Lewis Armistead, a cousin of John C. Armistead, was killed in Pickett's famous charge at Gettysburg. H. B. Armistead, brother of John C. Armistead, served with the rank of general in the Confederate army and for two terms was secretary of state of Arkansas. He also served for ten or twelve years as clerk of the federal court, continuing in that position until his death. John C. Armistead was born and reared in Virginia and came to this state soon after the Civil war. He wedded Annie Carroll, a daughter of De Rosey Carroll, who was born in Maryland and was a descendant of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. He served as a colonel in the Confederate army and was killed in front of his own home by bushwhackers in 1862. The Carroll family comes of English ancestry. To the marriage of John C. and Annie (Carroll) Armistead there were born two children, the elder being John B., a farmer and stockman of Franklin county, Arkansas. The parents are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Armistead is a democrat in his political views. He served as mayor of Charleston and has always been keenly interested in public affairs but has given the greater part of his time and attention to his farming and stock raising interests since his removal to this state.

Colonel Armistead, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated with the class of 1893. He afterward took up the profession of teaching, which he followed in the high school at Fort Smith, Arkansas, for a few years. With the outbreak of war with Spain he joined the Arkansas volunteer forces for active duty and was made a lieutenant in the regular army in 1898. He served for six years in the Philippines with the regular army and for two and a half years in Cuba, while for nine months he was in France during the period of the World war. He temporarily held the rank of colonel and was retired as lieutenant colonel. He has rendered important military aid to his country in various sections of the globe, ever fully sustaining the high standards and the honor of the regular army. Coming to Fayetteville in 1918, he here purchased a home and retired from military life. In his service for his country he "ran true" to the history of his forebears, for he comes of military stock. He operated on the field of action in the Philippines and was in the front-line division in the World war, in command of the Fifty-eighth Infantry. The Armistead family has long been connected with military interests, being represented in every war in which the United States has taken part. The ancestral line is traced back to William Armistead, who came from England in 1635 and settled in Virginia. Since that time representatives of the name have most loyally supported the country in all of her military activities and the record of Colonel Armistead of this review reflects added credit and luster upon an untarnished family name.

In 1915 Colonel Armistead was married to Miss Jessie Smith, who was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. They are members of the Episcopal church and they occupy an enviable social position. Colonel Armistead has membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the American Legion and is also identified with the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party, but he does not seek nor desire civic office. He has many friends in Fayetteville, where he now resides, and enjoys the respect of all with whom he has come in contact.

EUGENE CYPERT.

Eugene Cypert, attorney at law of Searcy, Arkansas, who for three terms occupied the bench of the county court and served as a member of the constitutional convention of 1917, has thus been very active in framing as well as executing the laws of the commonwealth. He is a native son of Searcy, his parents being Jesse N. and Sarah Harlan (Crow) Cypert. The former was a son of Jesse Cypert, who was born in North Carolina and emigrated to Tennessee, where he conducted an extensive plantation and also served as sheriff of Wayne county but devoted the greater part of his life to his farming interests. His remains lie buried on the old plantation, which is still in possession of the family. He married Jemima Worthen, a native of Pennsylvania. In tracing the ancestral line still farther back it is found that Jesse Cypert was a son of Francis Cypert and that his father was born in Alsace Lorraine, whence he emigrated to the United States. The grandfather of Eugene Cypert in the maternal line was Joshua B. Crow, who was born in South Carolina, whence he removed to Alabama and thence came to Arkansas in 1849, settling in White county, where he entered six hundred and forty acres of land, which he purchased for twelve and a half cents per acre. The town of Kensett now stands on the northern part of the land which he thus secured. He had to clear all of his land, for it was covered with timber and the work was accomplished with the aid of several slaves whom he owned, his entire time and attention being given to his plantation. He lost all of his personal property before the Civil war and died in 1866. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lavenia West, also departed this life in the same year. The great-grandfather was the Rev. Charles Crow, a Baptist minister, prominent in his church. He preached in South Carolina and Alabama. He married Sarah Harlan, who was born in South Carolina and was a descendant of George Harlan, a Quaker, who settled in Pennsylvania at the time William Penn founded the colony and afterward served as ruler of three counties in Pennsylvania.

Jesse N. Cypert, father of Judge Cypert, was born in Wayne county, Tennessee, in 1823, and his life record covered the notably long period of ninety years, as his death occurred on the 1st of September, 1913. His wife was born in Perry county, Alabama.

in 1836, and died in January, 1915. He was educated in the country schools of his native county and afterward studied law there. Removing to Arkansas in 1850, he settled in Marion, Crittenden county, where he practiced his profession until 1851 and then removed to Searcy, where he became well known as an attorney. He had read law under Judge L. L. Mack in Tennessee and his thorough training well qualified him for success at the bar. In Searcy he opened a law office with John M. Bracy and Colonel William Hicks and following the war was a partner of John G. Holland. He was a member of the secession convention in 1861 and of the reconstruction convention of 1868 and also served as a member of the constitutional convention of 1874 and was the only man in the state who served in all these three conventions. In the latter year he was elected circuit judge and remained upon the bench for eight years, or until 1882, his decisions being strictly fair and impartial, so that he won rank among the able jurists of the state. In 1861 he had joined the Confederate army as captain of Company K, Eighth Arkansas Battalion, and after the battle of Shiloh he was promoted to the rank of major. He served largely west of the Mississippi and was in the quartermaster department. He was captured at Searcy, Arkansas, and was held as a prisoner of war at Little Rock for sixty days, at the end of which time he was paroled. It was during the early part of the war that he suffered from typhoid fever and it was after this that he was placed in the quartermaster department. When hostilities had ceased between the north and the south he returned to Searcy, where he resumed the practice of law. He also owned land on Little Red river, which he farmed and there also engaged in stock raising. He had to clear most of the land, which was largely covered with timber and after the war he had little left but his home, for his slaves were gone and his property was badly in need of repair, owing to conditions brought about by the war. To Mr. and Mrs. Cypert there were born three children: Florence, who became the wife of W. M. Watkins, the president of the Bank of Searcy, and died in 1896; Alice, who became the wife of H. A. Smith, a merchant and at one time county clerk of White county, her death occurring in 1886; and Eugene, the only son. The father was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and served for a half century as church trustee. His wife held membership in the Baptist church. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch Mason and member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. As a lawyer, as a political leader and as a member of three constitutional conventions of Arkansas he left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the history of the state in notable measure.

Judge Eugene Cypert was educated in the common schools of Searcy and in the Searcy Academy and began reading law in his father's office. He was admitted to the bar in 1884 and then entered into partnership with his father, a relation that was maintained until the latter's death in 1913. Fifteen years before this, or in 1898, Eugene Cypert was elected county judge of White county and by reelection was continued on the bench for three terms. He, too, was called upon to aid in framing the organic law of the state, serving as a member of the constitutional convention of 1917. He has devoted the greater part of his life to law practice and has long enjoyed a large clientage of an important character. He is also a director of the Bank of Searcy, which he aided in organizing, obtaining the charter for the bank. He still owns a part of his father's old home place which adjoins Searcy and thus his interests are somewhat varied but the practice of law he has always regarded as his real life work and his devotion to the interests of his clients has become proverbial.

Judge Cypert was united in marriage to Miss Louise I. Seat, who was born in Belton, Texas, a daughter of Benton B. Seat, a native of Tennessee, who was graduated from the university at Lebanon, that state, and afterward practiced law in Tennessee, in New Madrid, Missouri, and in Brownsville, Texas, serving as prosecuting attorney at the last named place. He came to Searcy in 1901, having retired from active law practice, and died at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. He had filled the position of consul in Central America under President Cleveland. There were many interesting and ofttimes exciting events that occurred in connection with his life. When he was but eighteen years of age he went from Tennessee to California as one of the Argonauts of 1849. He served as captain in the Confederate army, enlisting in Texas, and was on duty most of the time west of the Mississippi river under General Dick Taylor. He participated in the battles of the New Mexico campaign with a command of thirty-two hundred, returning with only seven hundred and fifty. He took part in the battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill, the Galveston campaign and Yellow Bayou and on one occasion was shot through the arm, carrying the bullet with him to his grave. He also sustained a flesh wound in his head.

Judge and Mrs. Cypert have become the parents of five children: Sarah L., who was educated in the high school of Searcy and in Galloway College here, is now engaged in the abstract business; Jesse Benton is at home; Eugene is attending the Searcy high school; Florence Alice and Harriett Haymond are also at home. The religious faith of Judge Cypert and his family is that of the Presbyterian church, in which he is serving as ruling elder. He is a Royal Arch Mason and member of the Knights of Pythias and in politics has been a stalwart democrat since attaining his majority. His life has been fraught with the high purposes and lofty ideals which have characterized the family through many generations. He has rendered valuable public service and his life has been a potent force in connection with the maintenance of high legal and moral standards not only in Searcy and White county, but throughout the commonwealth.

FRANK HILL.

Frank Hill, who for many years was engaged in farming and is now a teaming contractor living in El Dorado, was born in Union county, Arkansas, a son of Jesse W. and Rebecca (Morrison) Hill, who were natives of Georgia and Alabama, respectively. The mother has departed this life, but the father is living, in his eighty-second year, and makes his home in El Dorado. He engaged in farming until 1909, when he retired from active life. He arrived in Union county, Arkansas, as a child with his parents in the year 1843, the family settling near Hillsboro, and through the intervening period of almost fourscore years he has continued his residence in this county. He was four years in the Civil war, having volunteered, and served from the beginning to the close of the war. He was wounded eight times during his service.

Frank Hill was educated in the district schools of Union county and on reaching adult age he engaged in farming, with which he was actively identified for a long period. He had been trained to the work of the fields, so that his experience had well qualified him for the duties which he took up on reaching his majority. At the present writing he is also numbered among the oil men who are operating in the oil field of El Dorado. He is likewise well known as a teaming contractor, working as high as forty mule teams daily.

In 1904 Mr. Hill was married to Miss Lillie Parnell, a native of Union county, and they have become parents of a son, Jesse Proctor, who is attending high school.

It was in the year 1913 that Mr. Hill established his home in El Dorado, where he has remained. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World and he has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, with which his wife and son are also identified. He likewise is owner of the land on which the first producing oil well was drilled in the El Dorado field. The discovery of oil and the development of the oil industry is constituting a great source of wealth in this state and Mr. Hill is bearing his part in shaping the history of the community in connection with the oil industry.

REECE ALEWINE.

With the industrial and manufacturing interests of Atkins, Reece Alewine is closely associated through his operations as a miller and lumberman. He has developed a business of substantial proportions and his enterprise and determination have constituted the foundation upon which he has builded his success. He comes to Arkansas from South Carolina, in which state his birth occurred December 29, 1868, a son of J. C. and Emma (Milford) Alewine, both natives of South Carolina. The father, who was born in 1842, represented one of the old families of that state, being a son of Michael Alewine, who spent his life in South Carolina. The mother was born in 1846 and her father was also a native of South Carolina. It was in that state that J. C. Alewine and Emma Milford were married and there made their home until 1870, when they came to Arkansas, settling in Pope county, where he purchased a farm and has remained upon that place. In early manhood he joined the Confederate army, enlisting from South Carolina, serving for more than three years. He was the youngest soldier in his regiment and his comrades called him the baby. He has met with substantial success since coming to Arkansas and now owns a farm of one hundred and twenty acres of well improved land. He is a Royal Arch Mason and has served as treasurer of his lodge for many years. In politics he is a democrat and in religious faith he holds membership in the Baptist church. To him and his wife were born six children: Reece; O. C., who is engaged in business with his brother Reece, at Atkins; G. W., who is engaged in farming with his father; J. J., a farmer of Pope county; Sarah, the wife of James Reyonlds, an insurance man of Pine Bluff, Arkansas; and Jane who is the wife of C. L. Matthews, who is engaged in clerking in a store at Atkins.

During his youthful days Reece Alewine attended the country schools of Pope county and started out to provide for his own support as a farmer, devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits until twenty-eight years of age. He then removed to Atkins and worked in a mill for nine years, after which he purchased the property and has since operated the mill, being associated in the enterprise for a time with Mr. Evans, later with Mr. Bell and now with his brother. The mill has a capacity of seventy-five barrels daily and in addition to carrying on this business he has a lumberyard and has built up a good trade in handling lumber and building material.

In 1911 Mr. Alewine was married to Miss Myrtle Austin, who was born in Pope county, Arkansas, a daughter of S. Y. Austin, one of the old settlers of the county and a farmer by occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Alewine have become parents of one son, Maurice, now six years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Alewine belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and his fraternal relations are with the Masonic lodge and chapter. He is a past master of the order, having served for three different terms as worshipful master of his lodge and at the present time he is high priest of the chapter. He likewise belongs to the Woodmen of the World and both he and his wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. He votes with the democratic party and gives stalwart allegiance to its principles but has never been an aspirant for public office. His time and energies have been concentrated upon his business affairs and it has been by reason of his close application, his thoroughness and his reliability that he has advanced steadily until his undertaking has brought to him a substantial measure of prosperity.

ALFRED LEE PEACHER.

Alfred Lee Peacher, filling the position of postmaster at Fort Smith, was born in Linneus, Missouri, in October, 1870, and is a son of James and Elizabeth (Wilson) Peacher. The father was a native of Virginia and the grandfather came from Westmoreland county, Virginia. He served as a soldier of the Continental army during the Revolutionary war. The Wilson family came from Tennessee, so that in both the paternal and maternal lines Alfred Lee Peacher is descended from old southern families. His father removed to Linneus, Missouri, where he took up the occupation of farming and there spent his remaining days, always devoting his life to agricultural pursuits.

Alfred Lee Peacher obtained his education in the Brookfield Academy at Brookfield, Missouri, in Westminster College, Fulton, Missouri, in the University of Wooster at Wooster, Ohio, and in the University of Chicago, in which he pursued postgraduate work. In early life he took up the profession of teaching, which he followed in Charleston, Arkansas, and at Van Buren, Arkansas, where he was superintendent of schools. Thinking to find other pursuits more congenial and profitable, however, he entered the insurance field in 1903, establishing an agency at Fort Smith, and he had already built up a good business when he was called to his present position. It was in 1919 that he was appointed by President Wilson to the office of postmaster of Fort Smith, in which capacity he is now serving.

In 1904 Mr. Peacher was married to Miss Leanny Teague and they have one child, Alfred Lee, Jr. The parents are widely and favorably known and both as a business man and as a public official Mr. Peacher has made an excellent record that has gained for him the respect and confidence of all.

OSCAR DILLON.

Oscar Dillon is the president of the De Soto Spring Company and is also further identified with the business interests of Hot Springs through his connection with the Citizens Ice & Fuel Company. A man of sound judgment and keen sagacity, his cooperation is regarded as most valuable to the conduct of business enterprises and he possesses notable initiative and resourcefulness in all that he undertakes. A native of Missouri, he was born in Holt county, March 31, 1855, and was therefore a lad of nine years when in 1864 his father, W. E. Dillon, removed with the family to Nebraska City. The father was a freighter who crossed the plains with both mules and oxen, making the trip to Salt Lake City and to Denver, Colorado. He was thus engaged until the railroads were built, when freighting by team was no longer profitable. As Oscar Dillon became of sufficient age to assist his father he took active part in the work and drove four mules across the plains when a boy of only ten years. He made many overland trips with the freight wagons across the plains and experienced all the hardships and trials of journeying in that fashion. He saw large herds of buffalo and often saw the Indians as he traveled from the starting point to his destination. At one time he was interested in a cattle ranch on the Republic river and he remained a resident of Nebraska until 1879. He then went to Texas and was a Texas ranger for a period of fifteen months. Returning to Arkansas, he located at Little Rock, where he served as deputy United States marshal under Torrence, for about two years. He was also interested in buying and selling horses there and in 1880 he came to Hot Springs, where he lived for a time.

In the year 1882 Mr. Dillon was married to Miss Ada Baird, a daughter of William Baird, one of the pioneers of Hot Springs. They began their domestic life in this city and continued to reside here until 1893, when they removed to Texas, and Mr. Dillon was engaged in the cattle business, living at Fort Worth, Dallas and San Antonio. He likewise followed general merchandising and remained a resident of Texas until 1897, when he removed to Denver, Colorado, there residing for a year. He then went to Kansas City, Missouri, where he conducted a general insurance business for a number of years. His next removal took him to St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he engaged in the insurance business and became the organizer of the Minnesota Casualty Company. Later he went to Regina and to Saskatoon, British Columbia, and conducted a laundry in each place.

After leaving the northern country Mr. Dillon took up his abode in Huntington, Indiana, where he was connected with manufacturing interests until his return to Hot Springs in 1920. Here he purchased the De Soto spring and erected there one of the finest drinking pavilions and buildings in the state. The structure is built of Texas marble and contains a large refreshment room, while in addition the famous De Soto spring water is there sold. There is also a beautiful ballroom, where there is dancing every night except Sunday, and this is patronized by the leading people of the city. A very fine orchestra is here found, rendering high-class music for dancing. Mr. Dillon is the president of this company and associated with him in the undertaking is F. W. Fooshe. Mr. Dillon was for a time also interested in the Citizens Ice & Fuel Company of St. Paul.

Mr. and Mrs. Dillon have a son, W. E. Dillon, and a daughter, who is married to C. W. Whittaker. The son is the manager of the Retail and Wholesale Merchants Association of Utah.

Mr. Dillon belongs to several fraternal orders, being identified with the Eagles, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen. His lodge associations have brought him a wide acquaintance and his business affairs have further extended the circle. He is a genial, cordial gentleman, so that he wins friends among all, and in business it is his earnest desire to please his patrons, so that he gives to them the best possible service along the lines of business in which he is engaged.

C. P. HUMMEL.

C. P. Hummel, deceased, was long a well known and highly esteemed resident of Monte Ne. He came to the southwest from the Keystone state, his birth having occurred in Montoursville, Pennsylvania, August 12, 1868, his parents being Peter B. and Emeline (Hartman) Hummel, who were likewise natives of Pennsylvania. They came to Arkansas in the year 1894 and the father conducted a large hay ranch near Carlisle. Subsequently he sold that land and removed to Monte Ne in 1901, at which time he purchased a farm and developed his acreage into rich and productive fields, his place constituting one of the finest farms in the county. His family numbered five sons, of whom two are living. C. P. Hummel was the third in order of birth. Those still living are: D. B. Hummel, a farmer residing at Burlington, Kansas; and C. C., living at Carlisle, Arkansas, where he is engaged in the grocery business. In early life the mother was a member of the German Reformed church, but later both Mr. and Mrs. Peter B. Hummel became affiliated with the Seventh Day Adventist church. Peter B. Hummel was a soldier of the Union army in the Civil war, doing service as a blacksmith and remaining at the front until the close of hostilities. On one occasion he was wounded but never went to the hospital.

C. P. Hummel largely acquired his education in the public schools of Iowa, accompanying his parents on their removal to that state when he was a young lad. After putting aside his textbooks he began earning his own living by clerking in a grocery store when but fourteen years of age. He gained much valuable knowledge while thus employed and acquired considerable skill as a bookkeeper. In 1901 he arrived in Monte Ne, Arkansas, where he erected a large store building and then secured an extensive stock of general merchandise. He continued to conduct his store in a very successful manner to the time of his demise, which occurred May 18, 1921. He was classed with the representative and progressive business men of this section of the state and as he prospered in his undertakings he made judicious investment in property, becoming the owner of valuable land and a number of city lots in Monte Ne. He was also keenly interested in affairs relating to the improvement and progress of his community and for seven years he acceptably filled the position of postmaster.

On the 8th of July, 1889, Mr. Hummel was united in marriage to Miss Frank A. Kimpton, who was born in Saint Lawrence county, New York, a daughter of C. P. and Augusta A. (Woodward) Kimpton, the former a native of Saint Albans, Vermont, and the latter of Manchester, New Hampshire. They removed to Iowa in 1876 and there Mr. Kimpton followed the occupation of farming until his life's labors were ended in death on the 21st of November, 1909. He had long survived his wife, who departed this life November 18, 1876. They were the parents of twelve children, six of whom are living, Mrs. Hummel being the sixth in order of birth. The others are: Charlie, who is engaged in the telephone business in Gravity, Iowa; Mrs. Jennie French, living in Creston, Iowa; Mrs. Henderson, a resident of Colorado; Mrs. John Marsell, of Colorado; and Mrs. Nellie White of Omaha, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Hummel became the parents of three children, of whom two are living: Mrs. Hazel Means, whose husband operates a large wheat ranch at Goddard, Kansas; and Mrs. Josephine Graham, living with her mother.

Mr. Hummel was for many years widely known as a faithful member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and took an active part in the work of his lodge, which he also represented in the grand lodge for a number of years. He likewise belonged to the canton and the Daughters of Rebekah and he was also connected with the Woodmen of the World. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party and he manifested his interest in the public welfare in many tangible ways. He did more to grade the roads from his home to Rogers than any other man of the community. He gave freely of his time and labor to the cause, six months being required to complete the job. He was very progressive, believing in improvement and advancement at all times, and his cooperation could ever be counted upon to further any plan or measure for the general good. He built the dance hall, established a swimming pool and otherwise recognized the demand of youth for pleasure, making it his purpose to provide clean sports and interests for the young people. The sterling worth of his character, his contribution to the public good and his loyalty in all matters of citizenship made him a man whom to know was to esteem and honor and his death was the occasion of deep and widespread regret.

Mrs. Hummel gives her political endorsement to the republican party and from 1907 until 1914 she served as postmistress of Monte Ne, while recently she has been reappointed to the position, which she is now acceptably filling.

JACOB H. C. KING, M. D.

Dr. Jacob H. C. King, a physician and surgeon of Hot Springs, who won his professional degree upon graduation from the medical department of the University of Arkansas, deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, as he had to provide for his own support while pursuing his medical studies. Laudable ambition prompted him to the greatest industry both in his work for others and in acquiring a knowledge of the science of medicine and surgery, and today he occupies a place of prominence as a successful practitioner in Hot Springs. He was born in Talladega, Alabama, August 31, 1860, and is a son of Jacob W. and Sarah Ann (Mayes) King, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in South Carolina. The father was one of the pioneer citizens of Alabama and was one of the leading organizers of the Confederacy. He served throughout the four years of hostilities between the north and the south, continuing active in his organization work. He was a physician by profession and also a minister of the Missionary Baptist church and his life was at all times guided by his Christian belief and characterized by his devotion to every cause which he believed to be right. He died in 1889, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Dr. King received his primary educational training in the public school of Lineville, Alabama, and afterward attended the Lineville Academy. In 1880 he entered the University of Arkansas for further study, but was compelled to return home in 1882 in order to attend his father, who was on a sick bed. For two years he cared for his father and during that time he read medicine under his father's preceptorship and passed the examination before the county board of examiners, as was then the custom, being granted a county license to practice.

Dr. King entered upon the active work of his profession in Amity, Clark county, Arkansas, and in the winter of 1886-7 he became a student in the medical department of the University of Arkansas, from which he received his professional degree as a member of the class of 1889. During his attendance at medical college he worked at whatever offered in order to gain the money necessary for the expenses of his course, and in vacation periods he practiced his profession, thus paying his way through the university. His entire cash capital at the time he entered college was twenty-five dollars.

Following his graduation Dr. King returned to his practice in Amity, where he remained until 1897, when on account of ill health he removed to Pike City, in Pike county, Arkansas. Four years later, still in quest of health, he took up his abode in Merkel, Texas, and after two years there spent he removed to Roswell, New Mexico, while subsequently he established his home in Lakewood, that state. On regaining his health he came to Hot Springs in 1904 and for the past seventeen years has made this city his home. In 1914 he suspended practice on account of a sunstroke sustained that summer and for six years was not in the active work of the profession but returned to the practice of medicine and surgery in 1920. In the meantime his reading had kept him abreast with the trend of modern professional thought and investigation. He resides on his farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which is situated on the Ouachita river, five miles southeast of Hot Springs.

In 1889 Dr. King was married to Miss Mary Alice Runyan of Amity and they became the parents of nine children, six sons and three daughters, of whom five are living, all sons: Henry, Glen, Paul, Stell and Cue. In 1909 Dr. King wedded Mrs. Lucy F. Gilbert, nee Amick, and by this marriage there is one son, Jacob. Dr. King and his wife are members of the Methodist church and they are well known in Hot Springs and throughout the surrounding district, where the hospitality of the best homes is freely accorded them. Dr. King deserves much credit for what he has accomplished. Handicapped in youth by the lack of financial resources, he displayed the elemental strength of his character in the manner in which he achieved his education. He is a broad-minded man of wide general knowledge as well as of excellent information concerning the science of medicine. His views are progressive and he is steadily looking toward further development along helpful lines.

SEBASTIAN GEISREITER.

Sebastian Geisreiter, an Arkansas pioneer, with a distinguished military record for service in the Civil war and ranking with the honored and representative residents of Pine Bluff, was born in Bavaria, Germany, May 30, 1840, his parents being Jacob and Elizabeth (Von Schmuck) Geisreiter. He attended school in his native land to the age of fourteen years, when he came to America in company with his father, who was a cabinetmaker by trade. They lived in New York city for some time, the father working at his trade, and during that period the son became a clerk in a cigar store and later a furniture salesman. He afterward occupied a position as bookkeeper in Brooklyn, New York, but when several years had passed he and his father removed to Iowa, where the father died. Anxious to improve his education, Sebastian Geisreiter attended Washington College in Iowa and eventually won a teacher's license. Later he moved to Minnesota and it was during his residence in that state that he inaugurated his military career by enlisting in the Second Minnesota Cavalry and participating in the campaign against the Sioux Indians, who rendered life and property unsafe on the western frontier. He was assigned to a detail to guard immigrant trains across the plains of Montana and was made a sergeant. He was afterward ordered to St. Louis and commissioned a first lieutenant in the Army of the Department of the South. He remained on active duty not only until the surrender of Lee but also continued in the service and in 1866 appeared before the army officers examining board and was assigned to Fort Smith, Arkansas, on special service. He was ordered to report to General Ord at Little Rock the same year and was assigned to inspection duty in eastern Arkansas, with headquarters at Pine Bluff. There were many delicate situations arising during the reconstruction period and Mr. Geisreiter was called on to solve many perplexing problems requiring skill and diplomacy of the highest order. He endeared himself to the people of this community by his fairness and splendid sense of equity and he has carried this esteem with him through the years that have passed since the disturbed days following the civil conflict. His continued residence in this community, honored by his fellow citizens, is a rare mark of distinction and is in itself a splendid testimonial to the integrity and broad spirit of one who came here to discharge a military duty at a period fraught with dissension.

In 1868 Captain Geisreiter resigned from the service and embarked in the insurance business. As the years passed he prospered in his undertakings and, making judicious investments in real estate, is now the owner of two thousand acres of cultivable land besides substantial holdings in city property. In all things he has manifested sound judgment and marked enterprise and for many years has been numbered among the men of affluence in this community, while in the evening of life he is able to enjoy not only its necessities and comforts but many of its luxuries.

In 1877 Mr. Geisreiter was married to Miss Mary Olive Merrill, a daughter of James Merrill. She died in 1878 and in 1889 Mr. Geisreiter wedded Linda D. Chinn, a daughter of Dr. Raleigh Chinn of Mason county, Kentucky. She died in 1920. Mr. Geisreiter has one daughter, Mary Merrill, who became the wife of J. Hall Miller of Atlanta, Georgia, a representative of one of the old and distinguished families of that section of the country.

Mr. Geisreiter has served as a captain in the uniformed rank of the Knights of Pythias and in Masonry he has been accorded the honorary thirty-third degree in the Scottish Rite—a degree that is bestowed only upon those who have rendered signal service to the fraternity and exemplified in the highest measure the beneficent principles underlying the order. He has at all times enjoyed the friendship and confidence of many distinguished persons, including some of the leading figures in Arkansas' history, from Civil war times down to the present. To him have come "the blest accompaniments of age—honor, riches, troops of friends."

JOE LEE DAVIS.

Joe Lee Davis of Magnolia, a prominent and representative business man, is identified with manufacturing, mercantile and banking interests and his labors are a potent force in promoting the material development and upbuilding of the district in which he operates. Mr. Davis was born in Atlanta, Arkansas, December 20, 1869. His father, James Evan Davis, who died in Magnolia in 1909, at the age of eighty-two years, was at one time a successful merchant and planter of Atlanta, Arkansas, but retired about five years prior to his demise and established his home in Magnolia, where his remaining days were passed. His people were from Georgia. During the entire period of the Civil war he was in the service of the Confederate government and was disfranchised afterward by carpetbaggers because of his connection therewith. In early manhood he wedded Mary R. Morgan, who died in Magnolia in 1908, at the age of seventy-five years. She was born in Jasper county, Georgia, and was a daughter of Henry S. Morgan, who served as a soldier in the Seminole war in Florida. The Morgans were originally from Virginia and were descendants of Captain John Morgan of Revolutionary war fame, who came from Ireland and settled in Virginia in 1752. The Davis family comes of Welsh ancestry, although representatives of the name emigrated from Wales to Ireland and then came to America in the eighteenth century, settling first in Virginia, while at a later date a removal was made to Georgia. The marriage of James E. Davis and Mary R. Morgan was celebrated at Longcane, Georgia, in 1850, and they became parents of eleven children, five sons and six daughters, of whom three sons and two daughters are deceased, while six of the family are living.

Joe Lee Davis, the ninth in order of birth, was educated in Atlanta Academy in Atlanta, Arkansas, pursuing a full college course in mathematics and two years in English and science. Through the intervening period he has been an active factor in business circles and now divides his attention between manufacturing, banking and mercantile interests. He engages in business under the firm name of J. L. & D. M. Davis, the firm having branches at Magnolia, El Dorado, Kerlin and Hynesville, Louisiana. At these various points they are actively engaged in the lumber business, to which J. L. Davis has largely given his attention for the past fifteen years. He is also the vice president of the People's Bank of Magnolia, vice president of the Bank of Taylor, at Taylor, Arkansas, and a director in the Farmers' & Bankers' Trust Company. He is also the secretary of the Columbia Cotton Oil Company of Magnolia and of the Ouachita Cotton Oil Company at Camden. He is the president of the Davis Loan & Investment Company at Magnolia and president of the Magnolia Grocer Company, a wholesale grocery concern. He is likewise the president of the McNeil Hardware & Furniture Company of McNeil, Arkansas, is a director of the McNeil Mercantile Company of McNeil, Arkansas, vice president of the firm of Hollis & Company, wholesale dealers in mill supplies at Little Rock, and is a director of the Shreveport Fertilizer Works at Shreveport, Louisiana. His business interests, therefore, are of large extent and importance and that he deserves great credit for what he has accomplished is indicated in the fact that he started out in the business world as a bookkeeper while in his teens, for C. M. Fomby, at Atlanta, Arkansas, and was afterward at Magnolia with Mr. Fomby, who was his brother-in-law and who was engaged in general merchandising. Mr. Davis was thus employed at Atlanta and Magnolia for eight years and during the latter part of that period became a partner in the business. Later he embarked in merchandising independently, carrying on business of that character under different firm names from 1890 until 1908, at Magnolia. He afterward entered the present firm, under the style of J. L. & D. M. Davis and has continued to operate successfully to the present time in connection with the lumber industry and mercantile pursuits. His holdings and investments are now extensive and his business affairs place him as one of the representative men of this section of the state. He also operates several plantations in Columbia county, near Atlanta and Kerlin. He is a man of forceful character, resourceful in all that he undertakes, and by reason of what he has accomplished he is recognized as one of the captains of industry in the southwest. His fellow townsmen recognizing his worth and ability and seeing what he has accomplished in a business way have chosen him for various positions of public honor, trust and responsibility. He is now the president of the Chamber of Commerce at Magnolia and has been president of the county board of education since it was established in 1920. He was likewise a member of the state board of charities from 1907 until 1909 and was a delegate from Columbia county to the constitutional convention of 1917-18. As a candidate he received every vote in the township in which he was born and reared except two, a fact which indicates in notable measure his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him. He was supervisor of the census for the Seventh Congressional district in 1920. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Magnolia Lodge, No. 82, A. F. & A. M.; Magnolia Chapter, No. 112, R. A. M.; and Magnolia Council, No. 11, R. & S. M. Religiously he is connected with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is serving on its board of stewards and its board of trustees.

Mr. Davis has been twice married. On January 11, 1894, he wedded Mattie Goo'le, daughter of Dr. John Goode of Magnolia, Arkansas. Mrs. Davis departed this life in 1898. At Prescott, Arkansas, on the 16th of January, 1901, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Ella Arnold of that place, a daughter of Dr. W. E. Arnold, who is still living, at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have become parents of four children, a son and three daughters: Ruth, who married James Hatley White of Hope, Arkansas, where they reside; Joe L., Jr., who is cashier for the J. L. & D. M. Davis Company; and Mary and Lottie who are students in Galloway College at Searcy, Arkansas. Mr. Davis is a native son of Arkansas and has spent his life in this state. He has recognized and utilized the opportunities which have come to him and his enterprise and diligence have carried him steadily forward, until he has long since left the ranks of the many to stand among the successful. His persistency of purpose and capable management have brought him substantial reward and, moreover, his labors have been of a character which have contributed to public progress and improvement along material lines. At the same time he has never allowed business affairs so to monopolize his attention that he has had no time for other interests and duties. On the contrary, he has contributed much toward the work of general advancement and improvement, standing loyally at all times for progressive citizenship and for those interests which lead to the intellectual and moral progress of the state.

HARRY NORWOOD STREET, M. D.

Dr. Harry Norwood Street, a physician of Lonoke, was born at Street, Mississippi, in 1868, the town having been named in honor of the family of which he is a representative. His parents were Thomas Parke and Emily Kate (Norwood) Street and the former was a son of Henry G. Street, of Hanover county, Virginia, and of Revolutionary war stock. The mother was a daughter of Abel J. and Emily (Stanley) Norwood. The former lived at Norwood, Louisiana, and was a son of Abel Norwood, who was born in South Carolina. Thus in both the paternal and maternal lines Dr. Street is descended from old and prominent southern families. He is related to the Curtis and Parke families of Virginia. His father was a Civil war veteran, serving as a major sergeant for four years, and following the close of hostilities between the north and the south he owned and developed a large cotton plantation.

Dr. Street pursued a common school education and afterward continued his studies in a preparatory school at Port Gibson, Mississippi. He determined upon the practice of medicine as his life work and to this end became a student in the medical college of Tulane University at New Orleans in the fall of 1887, being graduated April 1, 1890. He then located for practice in his native town and in 1892 removed to Gloster, Amite county, Mississippi, where he followed his profession until 1907. He afterward traveled for two years before locating in North Little Rock in 1909. Later he took up his abode in the city of Little Rock and made for himself a creditable position in professional circles of the capital. He became a member of the faculty of the College of Physicians and Surgeons and his power in the educational field as well as in the practice of medicine and surgery was widely acknowledged. On leaving Little Rock he took up his abode in Lonoke in 1914 and has here remained throughout the intervening period. He has gained a liberal practice here and is most conscientious and capable in the performance of his professional duties. Aside from his practice Dr. Street has been interested in a railroad project, building a short line, and he is now general manager of the Pine Bluff & Northern Railway Company and president of the Central & Gulf Railroad Company, which is under construction into the city of Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

Dr. Street was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Robinson, a daughter of L. B. Robinson, president of the Bank of Gloster, Mississippi. Their children are two in number: Thomas N., who is a student of Batesville College; and Helen K., who is a graduate of the Lonoke high school and also of Belhaven College of Jackson, Mississippi. She held the chair of Latin and English in the high school of Arkansas City and is now teaching in the Fordyce high school at Fordyce, Arkansas.

Mrs. Street is very active in church work and is now Bible instructor in the Young Women's Christian Association of Little Rock and is likewise well known throughout the entire south as an instructor in Bible work. Fraternally Dr. Street is a Mason of high degree, having become a member of the Mystic Shrine, and is a loyal follower of the teachings and high purposes of the craft. The Doctor and his wife occupy a very prominent position in social circles and their influence has been a potent force for good in the field of general development and progress.

COLONEL EDWIN LANDVOIGT.

Colonel Edwin Landvoigt, vice president of the Times Herald, published at Forrest City, Arkansas, was born in what is now the District of Columbia, then a part of Virginia, June 11, 1840, his parents being George and Dora (Kramer) Landvoigt. The father was a native of Austria, while the mother was born in Bremen, Germany. Coming to the United States in young manhood, George Landvoigt located in Baltimore, Maryland. He had previously been a soldier in the Austrian army and he was a botanist of renown, devoting his life to botanical work and to the conduct of a greenhouse in Baltimore until he removed to Washington, D. C., where he continued his activity along the same line, becoming recognized as one of the foremost botanists in the capital city. He entered the United States army with the rank of captain, serving with the regulars. He went to Mexico with the American forces and was killed during the progress of the Mexican war. His wife had come to the United States when but six years of age in company with friends, her parents having previously died. She was reared in Washington, D. C., and was there married. She lived to the advanced age of eighty-seven years. In their family were four children: Charles E., who served as a surgeon in the Confederate army and is deceased; John A., who was a member of the Federal army during the Civil war and is also deceased; Doris W., who served with the Federal forces; and Edwin.

The last named attended a private school in Washington and was also a student in the Georgetown College for a year. He afterward entered the employ of the Buell & Blanchard Printing Company in Washington and while thus employed he set up captions for Uncle Tom's Cabin. He also acted as proof reader on Hinton Helper's Impending Crisis of the South. In 1858 he went to Memphis, Tennessee, where he took charge of the job office of the Eagle-Inquirer, being thus connected until the war, when he enlisted in the Confederate army, becoming a member of Wicks Mounted Infantry. Thus two of the four brothers of the family were in the Federal service and two with the Confederate forces. Colonel Landvoigt was wounded at the battle of Perryville and sustained two wounds at Fort Morgan, where he was captured. He was afterward taken to New Orleans and Ship Island, also to Point Lookout and to Castle William in New York, thence he was sent to Elmira, New York, where he was held as a prisoner of war until the close of hostilities. He afterward returned to Washington, D. C., and later again went to Memphis, where he entered the service of Whitmore Brothers as foreman on the Evening Ledger. In 1885 he came to Forrest City, Arkansas, where he purchased the Forrest City Times, which had been established by Bill Oury in 1871. This was a weekly paper, which he continued to publish until 1919, when he organized a stock company and retired from active management. He had previously consolidated this with the Herald under the name of the Times Herald. He remains vice president of the company, owning stock, but is not active in its control. In connection with newspaper publication he also did commercial printing and built up a business of gratifying proportions, having devoted the greater part of his life to newspaper interests.

Colonel Landvoigt was married in young manhood to Miss Fannie White, a native of Kentucky, who died in 1902, leaving two children: Nettie, who is the widow of Charles Power of Los Angeles, California; and Dora, deceased.

Colonel Landvoigt is today the oldest member of the Arkansas Press Association and has frequently served as a delegate to various meetings of the press association in this and other states. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party and his discussion of vital political themes through the press has been an influencing factor in molding public thought and opinion on many occasions. Fraternally he was connected with the Knights of Honor, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Episcopal church. He has lived through many momentous periods in the history of the country, watching its development since the beginning of the fifth decade in the nineteenth century and at all times his influence and aid have been given on the side of progress and improvement and in behalf of those plans and projects which he believed would prove of public benefit and of worth to community, commonwealth and country.

ISOM SIMMONS.

Isom Simmons enjoys an extensive clientage as an able attorney of Fort Smith, where he has followed his profession during the past fourteen years. He is a native of Kansas and a son of Benjamin and Matilda (McKenzie) Simmons, who removed from the Sunflower state to Booneville, Arkansas, where his early education was acquired. Later the family home was established about three miles west of Barber. After completing his educational training Isom Simmons took up the work of teaching and also read law in preparation for a professional career. On being admitted to the bar he located for practice at Waldron, there remaining until 1907, when he came to Fort Smith, where he has continued through the intervening years to the present time. He is now practicing independently but was formerly associated with Harold K. Watrous, who entered the army and subsequently settled in Connecticut. His clientage is extensive and of an important character. He is remarkable among lawyers for the wide research and provident care with which he prepares his cases. At no time has his reading ever been confined to the limitations of the questions at issue. It has gone beyond and compassed every contingency and provided not alone for the expected but for the unexpected, which happens in the courts quite as frequently as out of them. In 1914 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Sebastian and Scott counties, making a most creditable and commendable record in that position during the period of his incumbency, which covered two years.

Mr. Simmons has been twice married and had two children by his first wife, who in her maidenhood was Miss Jennie Blythe of Logan county. For his second wife he chose Miss May Brown and they have become parents of a son, Isom. Mr. Simmons has spent practically his entire life in Arkansas, and in Fort Smith he has become widely recognized as a most able and successful member of the bar.

W. D. JACOWAY.

W. D. Jacoway, one of the widely known residents of Yell county, serving as postmaster at Dardanelle, was born January 26, 1869, in the city which is still his home, his parents being Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Jacoway, who are mentioned on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of H. M. Jacoway. Dardanelle's present postmaster received his education in his native city and at Winchester, Tennessee, and afterward pursued a course in dentistry in the University of Tennessee at Nashville, where he was graduated in 1900. He then located for practice at Dardanelle and followed the profession for fifteen years, gaining a liberal patronage during that period. In 1912 he was appointed postmaster and is now serving under a second appointment. He is courteous and obliging to the patrons of the office, faithful in the care of the public interests and the constituents of the office are thoroughly satisfied with his administration.

In 1905 Mr. Jacoway was married to Miss Maye Adams, who was born in Dardanelle and is a daughter of Cass and Sallie Adams, pioneer settlers of Yell county, where the father followed the occupation of farming. Mr. and Mrs. Jacoway are parents of two children: William Cass and Henderson M., both in school.

In his fraternal relations Mr. Jacoway is a Royal Arch Mason and a Knight of Pythias and in the latter organization he is a past chancellor commander and is also a past high priest of the Masonic chapter, to which he belongs. His religious faith and that of his wife connects them with the Baptist church, while in political belief Mr. Jacoway is a democrat and has filled various offices. He is a school director, a position which he has occupied for a number of years, and during the past eight years he has concentrated his time and energy upon his duties as postmaster. He is representative of one of the old and highly respected families of the county and there are few in this section of the state who are more widely known or more highly respected than W. D. Jacoway, who possesses many sterling traits of character such as win confidence and goodwill in every land and clime.

SAMUEL McCONAUGHEY WASSELL.

Samuel McConaughey Wassell, member of the Little Rock bar, was admitted to practice in this city and has since given his attention to duties connected with the legal profession save for the period of his service in the World war. Born in Little Rock, April 28, 1883, he is a son of Samuel Spotts and Bettie (McConaughey) Wassell, also natives of this state. The father was born in Little Rock, May 2, 1854, and the mother's birth occurred in Searcy, October 2, 1859. They were married in the capital city, April 8, 1878, and became parents of four sons, one of whom died in infancy, while three are yet living: Frank John, Samuel M. and Herbert Lynn. The last named was a student commander at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology during the World war and was in the army from May, 1918, until December, 1918, but was not overseas. The father was an attorney, who was graduated from Cornell University at Ithaca, New York, in 1876, and after preparing for the bar concentrated his attention upon professional interests until his demise, which occurred in Little Rock on the 24th of December, 1904. His political endorsement was always given to the democratic party. His widow survives and yet makes her home in the capital city.

Samuel M. Wassell obtained a public school education and afterward took up the study of law under private instruction. Following his admission to the bar on the 4th of October, 1904, he continued to serve as official court reporter of the first judicial district until November 15, 1905, having been appointed to the office on the 1st of January, 1904. After retiring from that position he was appointed assistant attorney general for Arkansas and continued to represent the state in that connection until February, 1907, at which time he once more became official court reporter of the first judicial circuit and so acted until November 1, 1912, when he resumed the private practice of law. He was thus engaged, enjoying a large clientage, until August, 1917, when he volunteered for military service, becoming a member of Company I, Twelfth Infantry Regiment, with which he remained until November 17, 1917, when he was pronounced physically disqualified. He then went to Houston, Texas, where he was made assistant land and tax commissioner for the Southern Pacific Railroad, with headquarters in Houston. Two months later he was requested by J. R. Vinson, president of the Southern Trust Company and the state manager for the Red Cross, to return to Little Rock and take charge of the finances of the Red Cross. Mr. Wassell complied with this request and so served until May, 1918, when he was appointed United States naturalization attorney with headquarters first in Little Rock and later in Chicago and Detroit. He continued to act in that capacity until April 1, 1920, when he again became a resident of Little Rock and resumed the private practice of law, in which he still continues, his practice now being extensive and of an important character. He has also acted a number of times as special judge of the circuit court.

Mr. Wassell has one daughter, Ruth Helen, born May 28, 1908. His political endorsement is always given to the principles of the democratic party. He belongs to Christ Episcopal church and is a Master Mason, these associations indicating clearly the nature of his interests and the rules which govern his conduct.

JAMES D. COOK.

James D. Cook, a leading member of the Texarkana bar, was born on a farm about seven miles from Lansing, Michigan, on the 8th of September, 1853. The family comes of Scotch ancestry. His parents were William and Janette (King) Cook, both of whom were natives of Scotland, whence they came to the United States in 1842, settling in Michigan. Both were reared about fifty miles from Glasgow, but the opportunities of the new world attracted them and they came to the United States to try their fortune.

Their son, James D. Cook, spent his youthful days in his native state and almost as soon as old enough to reach the plow handle he began work in the fields, devoting much of the summer season to the task of assisting his father in the operation of the old homestead. Liberal educational advantages, however, were accorded him and after attending the common schools and an academy he continued his studies under a private tutor. In 1875 he went to Corinth, Mississippi, where he engaged in teaching school for two years, and in 1877 he came to Texarkana and again took up the profession of teaching in the Cook Brothers Academy, which was established by his brother, W. G. Cook, in the previous year. James D. Cook was one of the instructors in the institution for a time and while thus engaged he devoted the hours which are usually termed leisure to the study of law. In the spring of 1878 he was admitted to the bar and opened an office in partnership with his brother, a business relation that was maintained for fifteen years. He then began practicing alone but later was in partnership for two years with R. M. Wallace. His son, James D., Jr., is now associated with him in practice and the firm has a large clientele. Their business is extensive and of an important character and they have made for themselves a most creditable name in connection with the work of the courts. Mr. Cook is regarded as both an able advocate and wise counselor and in the course of his practice he has tried all kinds of cases and tried them well.

On the 15th of November, 1881, Mr. Cook was united in marriage to Miss Susan Pride Martin and to them were born seven children, of whom three are now living, as follows: Flippin M., now a lawyer at El Dorado, Arkansas; Miss Leta M. and James D., Jr., both of Texarkana.

In point of time Mr. Cook is the oldest practicing attorney of Texarkana with the exception of Paul Jones. In 1882 he was elected the first city attorney and filled the position for one term. Following the death of Colonel Al. H. Payton he was appointed to fill the vacancy in the state legislature in 1881. In 1917 he became municipal judge of Texarkana and served upon the bench of that court for two terms or until 1921. He was also alderman for several years and at all times he has stood for those interests which most fully uphold and sustain the legal, social and moral status of the community. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and his entire life has been cast in harmony with his professions. Arkansas gained a most substantial citizen when he removed to Texarkana and one whose worth along many lines has been most tangibly demonstrated.

HAROLD E. BLUTHENTHAL.

Harold E. Bluthenthal, a cotton factor and merchant of Pine Bluff, well known in the business circles of Arkansas, is a representative of one of the old families of the state whose members have been conspicuous in the life of the south for more than a century. He is the son of David M. Bluthenthal, who passed away in Pine Bluff in 1915, having reached the age of seventy years, his birth having occurred in Bavaria, Germany, in 1845. Before entering upon the immediate history of Harold E. Bluthenthal it will be interesting in this connection to note that the first representative of the name in America was an uncle of David M. Bluthenthal, who, coming to the new world, served with the American army in the Mexican war and was killed before the city of Mexico, under command of General Scott. A. Simon, the father-in-law of David M. Bluthenthal, came to the United States from France in 1825 and was a prominent business man of Louisville, Kentucky, but spent the last fifteen years of his life in Arkansas and was buried at Pine Bluff. He was a noted horseman and owned many thoroughbreds. He also served in the Mexican war and was in the secret service of the Confederacy during the Civil war. Samuel Bluthenthal, elder brother of David M. Bluthenthal, left Germany to become a resident of the new world and made for himself a creditable position in connection with the business interests and the public life of Arkansas. He took up his abode in Dallas county. He was married to Bertha Becker and at the time of the Civil war he joined the Confederate forces and served in the Third Arkansas Cavalry command under Solon Bolin. He was also with General Forrest and General Wheeler, was twice taken prisoner and was wounded in battle, sustaining injuries in the engagement at Corinth and again at Chickamauga. At the latter place, when his regiment surrendered, its numbers had been reduced until there were only eighty-four men. On one occasion after being captured he escaped from prison. When the war was over he returned to his home in Arkansas and in this state he reared his family, numbering five children. Herbert C., the eldest of the family, married Jessie Marks of Cincinnati, Ohio, and they became parents of three children: Irwin, who served in the World war; Herbert, Jr., a student in the University of Chicago; and a daughter, Mabel. The second of the family of Samuel Bluthenthal is Blanche, the wife of S. Katzenstein, and the others are: Josie, the wife of Rabbi Kornfeld, United States minister to Persia; Gabe, living in New York city; and Mrs. Max Mayer, also of New York.

David M. Bluthenthal, the father of Harold E. Bluthenthal, spent the first ten years of his life in his native country and then came to the United States to join his brother Samuel, who had previously settled in Dallas county, Arkansas. A cousin, D. S. Bluthenthal, was also a resident of Dallas county, as was another cousin, Samuel. David M. Bluthenthal joined his kindred and lived in Dallas county until the outbreak of the Civil war. His brother, Samuel, joined the Confederate army and David afterward became a representative of that great army of gray-clad soldiers who marched to the defense of the south. Henry Bluthenthal, another brother who had previously lived in Arkansas, died at Princeton in 1860. Following the war David M. Bluthenthal and his brothers, Samuel and D. S., came to Pine Bluff, where they organized the S. Bluthenthal Company in 1865 and opened a store which has been in existence throughout the intervening period, a most substantial and constantly growing business having been developed. The senior partner in the firm, Samuel Bluthenthal, passed away in 1917 and from that time the business was carried on by Harold E. and Herbert Bluthenthal up to February, 1922, when the former became sole proprietor by the purchase of the interest of Herbert Bluthenthal. The latter is a son of Samuel Bluthenthal and Harold E. is a son of David M. Bluthenthal, both founders of the business. The company has not only conducted a mercantile establishment but has also engaged in cotton raising, having extensive acreage, its properties amounting altogether to fifteen thousand acres, situated in ten counties of the state. The original owners were men of recognized business ability and marked enterprise and their activities brought them a very substantial measure of success.

David M. Bluthenthal was united in marriage to Miss Sophie S. Simon, a daughter of Abraham and Minnie (Kahn) Simon, and they became parents of two children, Harold E. and Bessie.

Harold E. Bluthenthal, who was born at Pine Bluff, July 11, 1884, was educated at Center College of Kentucky, in which he completed his course of study in 1902. Immediately afterward he became associated with his father in business and is now manager of the company. Like his father, he has displayed marked enterprise, diligence and perseverance in the conduct of his affairs and obstacles and difficulties in his path have seemed to serve but as an inspiration for renewed effort on his part.

For a brief period during the World war Harold E. Bluthenthal was in military service. He is well known in fraternal circles, being a past exalted ruler of the local lodge of Elks, while in Masonry he has taken the degrees of the Scottish Rite and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. The family have been represented in Arkansas during the greater part of a century and the name has always been a synonym of business enterprise and progressiveness, while their influence has ever been on the side of improvement in connection with affairs of public moment.

ROBERT BOOTH MOORE, M. D.

Dr. Robert Booth Moore, an ear, nose and throat specialist of Little Rock, of marked capability and with large practice, was born in Searcy, Arkansas, July 23, 1888. His parents, Dr. Luther E. and Martha (Booth) Moore, still reside in Searcy, where the mother was born, but the father's birth occurred in Tennessee in 1851. They were married in Searcy, February 22, 1886, and Dr. Moore continues in the active practice of medicine and surgery there. In politics he is a democrat. To him and his wife have been born three sons and two daughters, but the latter have departed this life.

Dr. Moore, spending his youthful days under the parental roof, attended the public and high schools of his native city until graduated with the class of 1904. He was afterward for four years a student in Hendrix College of Arkansas and later went to the Vanderbilt University, in which he spent three years, devoting two years of that time to medical study. He next matriculated in Columbia University of New York as a medical student and was graduated in 1914. Later he spent eighteen months in the New York Polyclinic as an interne and subsequently was interne at Bellevue Hospital for a year. In December, 1917, he came to Little Rock, where he opened an office and entered upon the active work of the profession. On the 18th of August of that year, he had been commissioned a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps and was at Camp Pike, Arkansas, until September 25, 1918. In October of the same year he went overseas and was assigned to Base Hospital, No. 65, at Brest, France, there remaining until February, 1919, when he was assigned to Field Hospital, No. 2, at Dernbach, Germany, remaining at that place until August 20, 1919, when he returned to Little Rock and resumed the active practice of his profession. He specializes on the ear, nose and throat as a member of the firm of Scarborough, Ogden, Zell & Judd, one of the best known and most prominent firms of the state.

Dr. Moore belongs to the Little Rock Country Club and his social qualities have gained for him many friends. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He neglects no duty nor obligation of citizenship but concentrates the greater part of his time and attention upon his professional interests, which are becoming increasingly more important as the years pass.

HENRY S. JONES.

Henry S. Jones, banker, merchant and rice grower, living at Gillett, is through his various lines of activity closely associated with the commercial development and progress of this section of the state. He is a man of undaunted enterprise, to whom obstacles and difficulties seem no bar to the attainment of his purpose, for he overcomes these by determined and persistent efforts, while at all times his business activities have been most intelligently directed.

Mr. Jones is a native of Eugene, Vermilion county, Indiana, his birth having occurred in 1863. His parents were J. A. and A. M. (Craig) Jones, the former a native of Springfield, Ohio, and a son of Louis Jones, who was a farmer and blacksmith and who in the year 1824 removed to Indiana, casting in his lot among the pioneer residents of Vermilion county. There his son, J. A. Jones, was reared and made his home until 1879, when he came to Arkansas, settling near Arkansas Post, where he departed this life. His widow, who afterward removed to Gillett, was a daughter of John and Olive (Googans) Craig. Her father was born in Kentucky, whence he removed to Indiana, living for some time in Ripley county. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Jones had a family of five children: L. C.; Henry S.; J. M., deceased; Mary Etta; and Naomi, who is the wife of Albert Dohman.

Henry S. Jones was a youth of sixteen years when his parents came to Arkansas and in the public schools of Gillett he completed his education, which had been begun in the public schools of his native county. He afterward became identified with cattle raising and subsequently turned his attention to mercantile pursuits in Gillett. Here he owns and conducts a store that is one of the leading mercantile interests of the city. It is well appointed in every particular and the large line of goods which he handles enables him readily to supply the wants of his patrons. He also controls a thousand acres of rice land and in this manner is closely associated with rice production, which has become one of the most important industries of this part of the state. He is also the president of the Bank of Gillett and is proving his ability to handle various interests and handle all successfully. He is still associated with W. H. Truax in his general merchandise interest, the partnership having existed since Mr. Jones entered mercantile circles.

In 1916 Mr. Jones was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Truax, a daughter of James Truax of Gillett, and they are prominently known in this section of the state, where the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by their many friends. Mr. Jones is a Mason of high rank, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in the Consistory, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He is much interested in the growth of the organization and has exemplified in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft. The major part of his time and attention, however, has been concentrated upon his constantly expanding business interests and step by step he has advanced, his orderly progression at all times bringing him a broader outlook and wider opportunities. Today he is recognized as one of the forceful figures in agricultural, commercial and financial circles in Arkansas county.

ADDISON C. TENNANT.

Addison C. Tennant, who is engaged in farming, his home being in the vicinity of Farmington, is a native son of Washington county, Arkansas, born January 14, 1846. The Tennant family is of English origin and was founded in America at an early day. The grandfather was a native of Virginia and went west at an early period, after which nothing was heard of him. His son, Thomas H. Tennant, was born in Virginia and he cast in his lot with the early settlers of Washington county, Arkansas. He was first married near Little Rock and there were eight children born of that union, but only one is living, Mrs. Adeline Pyeatt, who makes her home in the state of Washington. For his second wife Mr. Tennant chose Mrs. Stover, a widow, whose maiden name was Clarissa White. She was born in Murray county, Tennessee, and this marriage was celebrated in Washington county, Arkansas. The following children were born of the second marriage: Addison C., of this review; T. S., a farmer, living near Summers, Arkansas; Mrs. Alva Black of Merkel, Texas. The father was always a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political support was given to the democratic party. He was a successful farmer who took up land of the government in pioneer times and in the early period of the state's development and killed many deer and bears here. He was a man of notable strength and had a marvelous voice which carried seven miles. He lived to the notable age of one hundred and fifteen years.

A. C. Tennant was educated in the country schools and was but a youth of fifteen years when the Civil war broke out which caused the closing of many schools and thus curtailed the educational advantages of Mr. Tennant and others in the neighborhood. The first school that he ever attended was held in one of the old-time log buildings with mud and stick chimney and slab seats. Following his father's death he inherited a part of the old homestead, which he afterward sold and later purchased his present farm, comprising one hundred and seventy acres of land. On this he has erected a beautiful frame residence, comfortable, commodious and tasteful in its arrangements. He devotes his attention to the raising of corn, oats and other grains and also fruit, having an orchard of twenty acres. He produces some of the finest apples raised in this section of the state and his ability as a horticulturist is widely recognized. He has also made a specialty of raising mules and the various branches of his business are proving to him a gratifying source of success.

On May 19, 1872, Mr. Tennant was married to Miss Mary E. Gray, who was born in Washington county, Arkansas, a daughter of Sanford F. and Elizabeth Gray, both of whom were natives of Tennessee, where they were reared and married. They came to Washington county in early life and here Mr. Gray followed the occupation of farming throughout his remaining days. He and his wife had a family of ten children, but only three are living: Mrs. Anna Simpson, a resident of Washington county; Mason F., living in Dodge City, Texas; and Mrs. Tennant. Three sons of the family were killed or died during the Civil war and two of these were wounded at the battle of Prairie Grove, dying from the effects of injuries there sustained.

Mr. and Mrs. Tennant have a family of eight children: Fannie, the wife of R. L. Garrison, who works in a planing mill at Spokane, Washington; Eva, at home; Edna, the wife of Walter Carl, a merchant of Prairie Grove; Lizzie, at home; James H., a carpenter of Fullerton, California; Thomas S., a resident of Oakland, Washington, where he is employed in ship building; Walter, at home; and Clara Schaffer, who died of influenza in 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Tennant are widely and favorably known in this section of the state. He is a democrat in politics and has served as constable and as a member of the school board. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to lodge and chapter and he has served as senior warden and as master in the lodge. He also served as king in the chapter and is recognized as a faithful follower of Masonic teachings. Both he and his wife are devoted members of the Presbyterian church and are highly esteemed by all who know them.

JUDGE FOSTER O. WHITE.

Judge Foster O. White, now occupying the bench of the county court of White county and making his home at Searcy, was born in Bald Knob township, this county, July 5, 1882. He is a son of H. C. and Cassie (Guthrie) White and a grandson of James White, who was a native of Alabama and there also owned and operated an extensive plantation, having a number of slaves. He lost everything, however, during the Civil war. He had two sons in the service, Bud and Perry, and the latter died of measles while held a captive. Bud was wounded in the leg and body and this rendered him a cripple for life. James White bought six hundred and forty acres of land near Judsonia, White county, Arkansas, which he had to clear, as it was then covered with timber. The place is now known as the Jim White farm and is mostly devoted to the cultivation of strawberries. He died in 1887 at the age of sixty-five years. The maternal grandfather was Samuel Guthrie, who was born in White county and became a farmer and prominent stock raiser, devoting his entire time to that business. One of the great-grandfathers of Judge White was Samuel White, who was born in Georgia and became the first county judge of White county, Arkansas, settling here among the pioneers. He held four sessions of court per year and received a salary of but fifty dollars per year. While he held court at Searcy he made his home at Clearwater and in addition to serving in public office he engaged extensively in farming, remaining in White county to the time of his death.

The father of Judge White of this review was born in Alabama, October 7, 1851, and removed from that state to White county, Arkansas, in 1871, when a young man of twenty years. He followed farming and also engaged in construction work on the Iron Mountain Railroad from Newport to Texarkana, Arkansas, assisting in building all of the bridges. He, too, became actively interested in agricultural pursuits, purchasing land which he had to clear the timber from. In those days turkey, deer and wild game of other kinds were plentiful and he has lived to witness many changes wrought by time and man as the work of development and transformation has been carried steadily forward. He has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising and he now lives with his son, Judge White. His wife, who was born in White county, died at the comparatively early age of thirty-eight years. They were the parents of ten children, nine of whom are living: William H., of Little Rock, who is a train conductor on the Iron Mountain Railroad, having been in the service since 1900; Foster O., of this review; M. S., a bridge foreman on the Memphis division of the Iron Mountain Railroad; K. H., a locomotive engineer on the Missouri Pacific road; Eurah, who is the wife of Walter McLaughlin, a farmer of Bald Knob township; Samuel, a conductor on the Iron Mountain Railroad, serving on the Memphis division; Rose, a bookkeeper with the Arkansas Electric Appliance Company of Little Rock; Dock, a brakeman on the Memphis division of the Iron Mountain Railroad; Mamie, the wife of Earn Cholendt, a brakeman on the Arkansas division of the Missouri Pacific; and one child who died in infancy. The mother was a member of the Baptist church, while Mr. White belongs to the Christian church and in politics has always been a democrat.

His son, Judge White, was educated in the public schools of his native county and remained on the home farm to the age of eighteen years, when he, too, began railroading, entering upon an apprenticeship in the bridge and building department of the Iron Mountain Railroad. He served in this way for six years and was connected with railroading altogether for about ten years. He then returned to Bald Knob township, where he began contracting on his own account, carrying on a general contracting business in White and adjoining counties. He was thus active until 1918, when he was elected county judge, taking the office in January, 1919. So creditable has been his record on the bench that he was reelected for a second term without opposition. His decisions are strictly fair and impartial and his course has been a highly creditable one.

Judge White was married to Miss Elva L. Baker, who was born in White county, Arkansas, a daughter of Joseph Baker, who was one of the builders of the Iron Mountain Railroad and afterward ran trains over that line until 1892. He then turned his attention to farming and is now living with Judge and Mrs. White. This worthy couple have become the parents of six children: Lillian, Willie Maude, Foster O., Lorraine, H. C. and Opal, all at home. The parents are members of the reorganized church of the Latter-Day Saints, in which Judge White has served as elder and as president of the Bald Knob branch, also filling the office of branch elder. Fraternally he is connected with the Masonic lodge, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and also with the Railroad Bridgemen, being one of the pioneers in the Brotherhood of Railroad Car Men. His has been an active and useful life and the sterling worth of his character has placed him high in the regard of his fellow townsmen.

HARVEY C. COUCH.

On the stage of business activity Harvey C. Couch occupies a central position. He may well be termed one of the captains of industry of Arkansas, by reason of the extent and importance of the interests which he controls, being now the president of the Arkansas Light & Power Company, making his home at Pine Bluff. The story of his career is the record of steady progression at the hand of one who has been master of himself and his environment, who has recognized and directed the development of his own powers and who has utilized his opportunities for the advancement of public welfare, as well as the attainment of individual prosperity. Mr. Couch is a native of Arkansas and his life record indeed reflects credit upon the history of the state. He was born at Magnolia, August 21, 1877, and is a son of Thomas G. and Manie (Heard) Couch. The Couch family is of Welsh extraction but was early established on American soil and several representatives of the family served in the colonial army during the Revolutionary war. Early representatives of the name settled in Virginia and others took up their abode in Georgia about 1810. The grandfather of Harvey C. Couch in the paternal line was a lieutenant in the Confederate army and his three brothers also served with the southern forces. The great-grandmother in the paternal line was in her maidenhood Rebecca Pierce, a relative of the distinguished Bishop Pierce. The first of the Couch family to come to Arkansas was William Couch, who with his four sons removed from Thomaston, Upson county, Georgia, to this state, arriving in the year 1853. The Heard family, of which Harvey C. Couch is a representative in the maternal line, comes of Scotch lineage and was early established in the vicinity of Augusta, Georgia. Thomas Heard, the grandfather, was a lieutenant colonel in the Confederate army and in days of peace devoted his life to the medical profession, practicing in Georgia. He married Martha Cavin, who with her children came to Arkansas, settling in Magnolia, where she conducted one of the early inns of that locality. Governor Heard also came of the same ancestral line. Thus the natal strength of Welsh and Scotch blood flows in the veins of Harvey C. Couch, although the long connection of the families with the United States establishes them firmly as one hundred per cent American.

Harvey C. Couch, at the period when most boys are attending school, was earning his living by working on the hillside farm of his father in Columbia county. It was not until he had reached the age of seventeen years that he was able to attend school, other than the very poor rural schools of Columbia county. Although the family was in straitened financial circumstances, the parents made an effort to give each child some little opportunity of attending school but this chance did not come to Harvey C. Couch until 1894, when as one of his biographers said: "He entered the Magnolia public school, only to find himself embarrassed and almost discouraged from the fact that the other pupils of his age were so far ahead of him. This was really the turning point in his life, however, and Couch gives full credit to a country school teacher for whatever success has been his. It happened that this forty-dollars-per-month school teacher had recently graduated from college and, having been compelled to work his own way through school, had a sympathetic feeling for boys who had not had a fair chance. Through the advice and assistance of this young school teacher, who helped him during school hours and evenings, Harvey Couch was able to carry two grades at once, and at the end of the session had a general average of ninety-seven, being the highest in the school. The school teacher has succeeded along with Couch and while the former pupil is now head of one of the largest corporations of its kind in the entire southwest, the former country teacher is now governor of the great state of Texas—Hon. Pat M. Neff." Two years covered the entire period of Mr. Couch's school training, for serious illness in the family made it necessary for him again to contribute to the support of the household and he obtained a clerkship in a drug store in Magnolia at fifty-five cents per day. With his entrance into the business world he realized how necessary and how valuable is an education for young men who wish to succeed, and after seeing an advertisement in a magazine concerning a correspondence school he began studying through that method, notwithstanding his hours in the drug store were from 6:30 in the morning until 10 o'clock at night. He completed the correspondence course and successfully passed a United States government examination for railway mail clerks with such a high rating that he was immediately given a position and sent to St. Louis. The other mail clerks had considerable fun at the expense of the "green" country boy, but he applied himself with such diligence and capability to his tasks that after a short time he was made clerk in charge, thus being promoted ahead of those who had found him amusing by lack of his experience of city life and customs.

After a time Harvey C. Couch was transferred to a run between Memphis and Texarkana, where he became greatly interested in the building of a long distance telephone line along the right-of-way of the Cotton Belt road. From early boyhood he had been interested in things mechanical and he evolved the idea of establishing a telephone system in some small town. He had no time on his run between Memphis and Texarkana, however, to visit the smaller towns in search of a favorable location to launch such an enterprise and he, therefore, sought a transfer to a little run between McNeil, Arkansas, and Bienville, Louisiana, the latter place being a village of six hundred population without telegraph or telephone service and with only one mail a day. He paid the sum of fifty dollars to the clerk on that run to make the exchange and this practically exhausted his savings. After considerable persuasion he induced the village postmaster to assist him in promoting a telephone line but as neither of them had any capital, they sold coupons for telephone service in advance and thus succeeded in raising one hundred dollars. Wire was purchased on sixty days' time from a hardware traveling salesman with whom Mr. Couch had long been acquainted and their one hundred dollars was invested in the construction of twelve miles of telephone line between Bienville and Arcadia, trees being used for the poles. The receipts during the first two months were only sufficient to pay for the wire but after that they began to build additional lines through the means of selling service coupons in advance. The business grew rapidly and at the end of the first year the country postmaster "decided that the plan of extensions would eventually bust the whole concern" and he sold out to Mr. Couch, accepting his note for one thousand dollars. It was then that Mr. Couch secured the cooperation of Dr. H. A. Longino of Magnolia, who made an investment of fifteen hundred dollars in the enterprise and loaned Mr. Couch an equal sum. The turning point was thus passed and within eight years Mr. Couch sold the business to the Southwestern Bell Telephone system for more than one million, five hundred thousand dollars. Naturally while engaged in the development of this mammoth enterprise Mr. Couch was also studying the question of other public utilities and believed that success could be won in combining various public utilities into one immense business enterprise. Accordingly he interested his associates in the electric light and power business, purchasing the plants at Malvern, Arkadelphia, Camden and Magnolia and organizing them into the Arkansas Light & Power Company. His vision reached a practical fulfillment when at the end of the first year it was learned that the gross income amounted to seventy-five thousand dollars, while in 1920 it was in excess of two million dollars. At the beginning the largest engine in use was one hundred and fifty horse power, while today the largest owned by the corporation is eighty-five hundred horse power. The Bankers Trust News in a biography of Mr. Couch, speaking of his business career, said: "From the four plants originally owned, the Arkansas Light & Power Company, with its allied corporations, has grown to be one of the largest of its kind in the entire southwest and supplies light and power to more than one hundred thousand people, including not only the third largest city in the state of Arkansas but thousands of families in the rural districts. The largest unit of this great company is located at Pine Bluff and cost in excess of one million dollars. From this one plant alone is supplied light, power, water and transportation to the people of Pine Bluff; and light and power to the citizens of Altheimer, Wabaska, Humphrey, Stuttgart, DeWitt, England, Sherrill, Tucker, Lonoke, Carlisle, Scotts, and even to the Dixie Cotton Oil Mills of North Little Rock, as well as to more than two hundred rice irrigation wells, cotton gins, cotton oil mills and other industries in the surrounding country. Over the four hundred and seventy-five miles of copper strands radiating from the central stations of this company is sent the energy utilized to produce, manufacture, mill or mine practically every need of man; rice, cotton, corn, wheat, cottonseed oil, water, lumber, coal, steel, and even—buttons. The latest acquisition of this company was the Pieron power plant, erected by the government in East Little Rock during the war. This company also operates many independent plants all over the state, and it is the intention of Mr. Couch to eventually connect all of these plants into one great system, building very large modern power houses that will enable his company to place these modern conveniences where they may be available to hundreds of thousands of Arkansas people who do not now have such advantages. Starting without an education, without resources, and practically without friends, it occurs to me that the secret of the success of H. C. Couch lies in his determination, honesty, and the happy faculty of making friends of all those with whom he comes in contact. Through all his business life he has had the implicit confidence of business men and banks, and has successfully weathered many financial storms, and he is perhaps better known today in the great financial centers of the east than any other Arkansas man. In 1906 a railway mail clerk, today president of one of the largest corporations of its kind in the southwest, director in two of the leading banks in the state of Arkansas, and interested in many other financial enterprises—Can you beat it?" Mr. Couch has been the president of the Arkansas Light & Power Company throughout the period of its existence and the success of the undertaking is the direct outcome of his enterprise, his far vision, his progressiveness and his indefatigable energy.

In his home life, too, Mr. Couch is most happily situated. He wedded Jessie Johnson, a daughter of W. M. Johnson of Athens, Louisiana, and five children, four sons and a daughter, have been born of this marriage: Johnson, Harvey, Kirke, Catherine and Verne. Mr. Couch is a Mason, belonging to the blue lodge, chapter and consistory and also to the Mystic Shrine. His interest in the moral development of the community is shown in his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in which he is serving as a steward, and in the fact that he is a state trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is likewise a member and chairman of the board of directors of the Henderson-Brown College and is president of the Chamber of Commerce at Pine Bluff, while during the war he served as United States fuel administrator for Arkansas. He has ever been actuated by a most progressive spirit and he erected the first radiophone broadcasting station in Arkansas at Pine Bluff, giving regular radiophone programs. Any feature of stable progress and improvement elicits his attention and wins his support, especially if it contributes to the general upbuilding and advancement of the community. He is one of the most prominent residents of Pine Bluff and his labors have always been of a character that have advanced the public welfare as well as his individual interests. He may well be called a human dynamo, a captain of industry, or any other term that indicates wonderful creative power intelligently directed. The point is that he started out with almost every handicap but he has arrived and is today accounted one of the foremost business men in his native state.

GEORGE W. BARHAM.

One of the prominent and successful attorneys of Blytheville is George W. Barham, who has engaged in the general practice of his profession here since 1919. He was born near Hornersville, Dunklin county, Missouri, on the 25th of February, 1876, a son of Jonathan R. and Mary E. (Hickman) Barham. On the paternal side he is of English and Scotch descent, while his mother's ancestors came from Ireland. The father, J. R. Barham, whose demise occurred in 1907, at the age of sixty-four years, was for many years prominent in the public life of Missouri. He was born in South Carolina, but reared in Tennessee, where he received his education and enlisted from that state for service in the Confederate army in the Civil war, during which he served as a lieutenant of cavalry. Directly after the war he came to Mississippi county, Arkansas, and resided here until two years later, when he came to Missouri and engaged in blacksmithing and wagon-making, also farming, near Bloomfield, that state. He achieved substantial success and was soon called to public office, being elected sheriff of Stoddard county in 1888. He was active in that capacity four years, at the termination of that time taking over the office of county collector for a like period. He was one of the public-spirited and progressive citizens of the community in which he resided and was an influential factor in the upbuilding of both the county and state. His demise, on July 24, 1907, caused a feeling of deep bereavement to sweep the communities in which he was so well known. At Union City, Tennessee, soon after the Civil war Mr. Barham was married to Miss Mary E. Hickman, who survives her husband and is living in Bloomfield, at the age of sixty-eight years. She was born and reared in Tennessee. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Barham ten children were born, five boys and five girls, and four of the boys and three of the girls are living.

In the acquirement of his education George W. Barham attended the common schools of Bloomfield, Missouri, and after graduating from the eighth grade he became assistant in his father's office. He was active in that capacity for four years when he became deputy in the collector's office, the collector being his father, and at the termination of that time he became bookkeeper for the Goff Mercantile Company of Desloge, Missouri. He remained with that concern until 1902, when he became travelling salesman for the Nicholas Sharff & Sons Grocery Company of St. Louis, an association he maintained until 1907. He then assisted in the organization of the Norwine Coffee Company of St. Louis, serving as vice president and a director until 1912, when he severed his relations with that firm and took up the study of law, attending night school at the City College of Law, and during the day working as assistant sales manager for D. A. Blanton & Company of that city. The LL. B. degree was conferred upon him in 1916. He came to Mississippi county and located at Manila, where he practiced with substantial success until 1919. In that year he came to Blytheville and he has practiced here since, having built up an extensive and lucrative clientage, handling much important litigation before the courts. His practice has been chiefly civil. Since coming here he has gained for himself an enviable position among the leading attorneys of the county and has made many staunch friends.

Mr. Barham has been twice married. His first marriage was celebrated at Bloomfield, Missouri, on the 27th of December, 1897, when Miss Anna Casey, a daughter of J. J. and Mollie Casey, prominent residents of that community, became his wife. She was the granddaughter of Zadoc Casey, one of the well known characters in the Black Hawk war. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Barham two children were born: Earl Bruce, twenty years of age, who is now attending the Morgan School, Petersburg, Tennessee, is in his junior year and is completing a literary course; and Gladys May, seventeen years of age, is attending the junior high school at Blytheville. Mrs. Barham's demise occurred on the 12th of February, 1907, when she was in her twenty-fifth year. At Farmington, Missouri, on the 4th of May, 1912, occurred the marriage of Mr. Barham to Miss Lula M. Conts, a daughter of J. D. and Mary E. Conts, well known residents of that community. To the second union one child has been born, which died in infancy.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Barham has given his political endorsement to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. His religious faith is that of the Christian church and for some time he has been active as secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Chickasha Lodge, No. 134, A. F. & A. M. of Blytheville and the Royal Arch Chapter here. He likewise belongs to the local lodge, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. During the World war Mr. Barham put all personal interests aside and was tireless in promoting the government's interests. He was a member of the legal advisory board of Mississippi county, food administrator for the west end of this county and one of the Four-Minute men. Mr. Barham is readily conceded to be one of Blytheville's leading citizens and he has wielded a great influence for good in this community. Although he was thirty-seven years of age when he took up the study of law, he has achieved more than substantial success as a practitioner and is ranked with the leading attorneys of Mississippi county and the state.

A. N. FALLS.

A. N. Falls, who represents the third generation of the family in Arkansas, is now serving as cashier of the Farmers State Bank of Russellville and is recognized as an able financier and a man of thorough reliability and strict integrity. He is a member of one of the pioneer families of the state and was born in Pottsville, Pope county, in May, 1875, a son of Erskine B. and Mollie (Sinclair) Falls, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Tennessee. As children they came to Pope county, being playmates during their youth, and their marriage occurred near Pottsville. For a number of years the father followed the occupation of farming and later he engaged in merchandising in Pottsville, successfully conducting his mercantile interests there for a period of fifteen years. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian and in his political views he was a democrat, but never aspired to public office, although in all matters of citizenship he was public-spirited and progressive. Mr. and Mrs. Falls became the parents of three children: Gregory S., deceased; A. N.; and Roy, a leading merchant of Pottsville. The eldest son was associated with his father in business and was called to public office, serving for two terms as county clerk of Pope county, and was filling that office at the time of his death, which occurred when he was but thirty-four years of age, a most promising career being suddenly terminated. The paternal grandfather, A. N. Falls, was a native of North Carolina and became a resident of Mount Noir, that state, whence he made his way to Arkansas, becoming one of the early settlers of the state. He purchased land and continued to follow agricultural pursuits until his demise. Although his advanced years prevented his participation in the Civil war, he contributed two sons to the cause of the Confederacy and but one returned home at the end of the conflict, the other losing his life on the field of battle. The maternal grandfather, Gregory Sinclair, was a native of Ireland and after emigrating to the United States he first settled in North Carolina, whence he removed to Tennessee, and later came to Arkansas, where he made his home the rest of his life.

A. N. Falls became a traveling salesman, continuing to act in that capacity for three years, and then engaged in merchandising at Danville, Arkansas. Subsequently he entered the financial field as an employe in a bank at Danville, being connected with that institution for ten years. He then secured a position in the Farmers Bank at Dardanelle, with which he remained for nine years, thus gaining a comprehensive knowledge of modern finance. In 1919 he came to Russellville and assisted in organizing the Farmers State Bank, of which he has since been cashier, and is doing able, systematic work. He is faithful to the interests in his charge and is doing all in his power to promote the success of the institution. He is a stockholder and director of the bank and also owns stock in the Farmers Bank at Dardanelle, while he likewise has made investments in valuable farm property in Pope and Yell counties, being an astute, farsighted business man, whose plans are carefully formulated and promptly executed.

In 1909 Mr. Falls was united in marriage to Miss Annie Davis, who was born in Wilmar, Drew county, Arkansas, a daughter of Grier Davis, a native of Mississippi, who removed from that state to this section at an early period in its development and devoted his attention to the cultivation of a farm. Mr. and Mrs. Falls have become the parents of five children: Irma, Etta and Erskine, all of whom are attending school; and Harold and Helen, twins, aged three years.

Mr. and Mrs. Falls have been earnest and active members of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church for the past three years at Russellville, and for nine years he served as one of the elders of the Southern Presbyterian church at Dardanelle. His political support is given to the platform and candidates of the democratic party and he is a Knights Templar Mason, being also identified with the Knights of Pythias. He has led an active and useful life, employing every opportunity to advance, and he deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, for his prosperity is the direct result of his persistency of purpose and undaunted energy. He is always loyal to any cause which he espouses and faithful to every trust and his record as a man and citizen is an enviable one.

WHARTON CARNALL.

Wharton Carnall, real estate agent, is identified with this line of business in Fort Smith, where he has handled many important realty transfers during the past forty years. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with conditions bearing on property interests in this city and his knowledge enables him to speak with authority on many matters that have to do with the valuation of real estate holdings in Sebastian county. Much of his life has been devoted to this line of business. He was born in Sebastian county in 1862 and is a son of John and Frances (Turner) Carnall. The father came to Arkansas from Fauquier county, Virginia, making his way to this state in order to take up the profession of school teaching here. He afterward became sheriff of Crawford county and also filled the position of clerk of the United States court at Van Buren. He was elected the first clerk of this county and at all times discharged his public duties with promptness, capability and fidelity. He also became identified with the purchase and sale of land and likewise took up the business of newspaper publication. He was a most public-spirited citizen and he distributed gratis the first write-up that Fort Smith ever had, in order to promote the interests and advantages of Fort Smith, making wide distribution of the paper at the Louisville exposition. He assisted in laying out various additions to the city and in every possible way contributed to its growth, progress and improvement. Mr. and Mrs. John Carnall reared five children: J. Henry; Turner B.; Wharton; Virginia, the wife of William Gardner; and Emma C., the wife of Will W. Wheeler. It was the father of Wharton Carnall, with whom the idea originated that has developed the magnificent school fund for Fort Smith. This was consummated by a donation of the old Military Reserve now in the heart of Fort Smith. This was John Carnall's thought and later his political assistant brought it about. J. Henry Carnall, brother of Wharton Carnall, who was in 1885 mayor of the city, made the first sale of lots on that reserve for school purposes.

Wharton Carnall obtained his early education in the schools of Sebastian county and throughout his life he has remained a student of events which have their influence upon the public welfare and the general interests of society. He has learned many valuable lessons in the school of experience and the worth of his opinions on vital questions is widely acknowledged. At maturity he turned his attention to the real estate business and to newspaper publishing in connection with his father. He was the originator of the movement for the building of the greater sewer and paving districts in Fort Smith and worked untiringly to secure results along those lines, to the end that the town now has more miles of paving and sewer than any other city of its size in the world. He is constantly alert to the opportunities for Fort Smith's upbuilding and substantial development and his financial aid and active cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further public plans and measures of a beneficial character. He is likewise one of the board of directors of the Goldman Hotel. His life has been passed in Sebastian county and those who analyze his career must readily recognize the integrity of his business principles and methods and his devotion to the general good, while at the same time he has so conducted his individual affairs that legitimate prosperity has come to him.

M. F. LAUTMAN, M. D.

Dr. M. F. Lantman, physician and surgeon of Hot Springs, was born in Meriden, Connecticut, April 18, 1890. He was reared in New Britain, that state, and the public schools accorded him his educational opportunities until he had mastered the high school course. He entered Yale University in 1907 and was graduated with the class of 1911. Even as a boy he had been keenly interested in the science of medicine and it was to this that he turned when making choice of a life work. Having completed his college course, he became connected with the army on the 12th of February, as a representative of the medical division, being commissioned a first lieutenant and stationed for service at Chattanooga, Tennessee, and also at San Antonio, Texas, where he received his discharge on the 20th of December. He is now a captain of the Medical Reserve Corps. He was connected with Mount Sinai Hospital of New York as interne for three years and then opened an office in New York city, where he practiced for a time. He came to Hot Springs as medical director of the Levi Hospital, which position he filled for a year, and he is now serving on the hospital staff. He is also chief of the clinic at the United States Public Health Service clinic.

Dr. Lautman belongs to the Masonic fraternity and has attained high rank in the order, as indicated in the fact that he is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He is likewise identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His attention and activities, however, are largely concentrated upon his professional duties and he belongs to the Garland County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Through the proceedings of these bodies he is thoroughly in touch with the advanced thought and scientific investigation of the profession and employs the most progressive methods in his practice. Already he has attained a most creditable position for one of his years and his future career will be well worth watching.

WILLIAM A. McHENRY, M. D.

Dr. William A. McHenry, who has been continuously engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Rogers through the past fifteen years, was born in Fillmore county, Minnesota, in 1859, a son of W. M. and Amanda (McGuffey) McHenry, both of whom were natives of Ohio, in which state their marriage was celebrated. They removed to Minnesota in the early '50s, at which time the Indians were still numerous in that region. The father preempted a tract of land and carried on farming for a number of years, bringing his property to a high state of cultivation and improvement. He passed away in the state of Oregon in 1908, having for almost four decades survived his wife, who was called to her final rest in 1869. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, while his religious faith was indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. To him and his wife were born seven children, four of whom survive, namely: James, who follows farming in Oregon; William A., of this review; Sam, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Texas; and Lizzie, who is the widow of John Nelson and resides in Dakota.

William A. McHenry obtained his education in the schools of St. Charles, Minnesota, and after putting aside his textbooks assisted his father in the operation of the home farm until he decided to enter professional life and with that end in view matriculated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at St. Louis, from which he was graduated with the class of 1906. In that year he came to Arkansas and at once opened an office in Rogers, where he has since remained and has built up a practice of gratifying proportions, his patronage steadily increasing as he has demonstrated his skill and ability in coping with the many complex problems which continually confront the physician in his efforts to restore health and prolong life. He owned a drug store in Rogers for four years but now devotes his entire time to his professional duties. He is a valued member of the Benton County Medical Society and also belongs to the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

On the 25th of July, 1883, Dr. McHenry was united in marriage to Miss Sadie Miller, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Joshua and Huldah Miller, the former born in Massachusetts and the latter in Pennsylvania. Joshua Miller, who was engaged in business as a barber and laborer, lived in the states of Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri and died in 1903 in Santa Barbara, California, passing away in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was a devoted and consistent member. He participated in the Civil war as a member of the Eighteenth Iowa Infantry, remaining with that command until the close of hostilities between the north and the south. He was injured while on a forced march and this disabled him throughout the remainder of his life. His wife passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. McHenry, in Rogers, Arkansas, December 23, 1914. They became the parents of six children, four of whom are yet living, as follows: Mrs. McHenry; William A., who is a farmer residing in Rochester, Minnesota; Herbert A., who is identified with journalistic interests in Montana; and Edith, the wife of Charles F. Harris, a contractor of Bellingham, Washington.

Dr. and Mrs. McHenry are the parents of five children: Maude E., at home; Percy W., who is engaged in the drug business in St. Louis; Blanch, who is the wife of Milton Brown, of Rogers, Arkansas; Ralph Ray, a physician who is engaged in Red Cross work in Serbia; and Edith, who has been a teacher of domestic science during the past five years and is now a resident of Rogers, Arkansas. The last named was educated in the high school at Rogers, Arkansas, and also pursued a course of study in Baker University of Baldwin, Kansas. Ralph Ray McHenry served in the World war with the rank of captain for nineteen months and was given a medal for bravery by King George, who pinned it on his coat in Buckingham Palace on the 19th of December, 1918. He was one of the physicians loaned to the English government by the United States.

In politics Dr. McHenry is a republican, having staunchly supported the men and measures of that party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally he is identified with the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen. He holds to the highest ethics and standards in the performance of his professional duties and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his colleagues and contemporaries as well as of the general public.

ANDREW J. RUSSELL.

One of the representative citizens of Berryville is Andrew J. Russell, who for many years has engaged in the practice of law here. He was born in Springfield, Missouri, on the 20th of November, 1865, a son of Willis C. and Mary Ann (Goforth) Russell, both natives of Carroll county, this state. The paternal grandfather, Lewis Russell, was born in North Carolina and resided in that state until his removal to Illinois in early life. In 1842 he came to Carroll county, being one of the early pioneers here. The grandfather on the maternal side was William Goforth, a native of South Carolina. He came to Carroll county at an early day and resided here until his demise. Willis C. Russell was born on the 16th of April, 1843, and was but eighteen years of age at the outbreak of the Civil war. In 1861 he entered the army from Carroll county and after doing home guard service, became a member of Company E, Seventy-third Missouri Infantry. He served throughout the war and participated in many of the most important battles, and personally assisted in the capture of General Marmaduke. After receiving his discharge he resided in Springfield, Missouri, for one year, returning to Carroll county. Previous to the war Willis C. Russell had little time for education but on returning to this county he commenced to study at home, learning to read and write, and in due time he took up the study of law. He became one of the successful attorneys of the county and continued in active practice until his demise, October 1, 1919. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Russell four sons and one daughter were born: Andrew J., whose name initiates this review; Jesse L., a newspaper man of Harrison, Arkansas; Margie, the wife of Lee H. Smith, owner of a garage and automobile business in Green Forest; Martin B., special newspaper writer with residence in Seward, Nebraska; and Henry Berry. The last named enlisted for service during the World war as a member of the Twenty-seventh Mining Engineers and was in active service in France for twelve months. While returning to the United States on the transport Dakotan, his death occurred on the 14th of March, 1919, and his body was brought to his home in Carroll county, burial taking place on the 26th of that month. The family was reared in the faith of the Baptist church, one of the ancestors of Mrs. Russell, John Oneal, being clerk of a Baptist Association in Scotland more than one hundred and fifty years ago. Mr. Russell was an exemplary member of the Masonic craft. His political allegiance was always given to the republican party. Mrs. Russell is now living in Carroll county, enjoying the best of health, at the age of seventy-nine years.

In the acquirement of an education Andrew J. Russell attended the common schools of Carroll county and in due time entered Clarke's Academy at Berryville. For eight years, after putting his textbooks aside, he engaged in teaching school and subsequently, deciding upon a legal career, he read law in his father's office and took a correspondence course. For ten years he published a newspaper at Green Forest, but upon his admission to the bar in 1906 he disposed of all business interests at Green Forest and located in Berryville and he has practiced here since, gaining for himself a place among the successful lawyers of the state. A staunch republican, he has taken a prominent part in that party's activities, being a delegate at large to the last two national conventions and for two terms he served as circuit clerk. In 1911 he was a member of the state legislature and he has been recommended as United States marshal for the western district. For some time he was chief executive of Green Forest and he has likewise been mayor of Berryville. Aside from his legal and political connections he is president of the Berryville Wholesale Grocer Company and is a director in the Harrison Wholesale Grocer Company and is recognized as an alert and progressive business man.

In 1891 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Russell to Miss Mattie Lamb, a native of Boone county, this state, and a daughter of Jerry Lamb, one of the pioneer farmers of Boone county. To their union six children have been born: Lucille, who is the wife of Herman Dodson, a merchant at Joplin, Missouri; Lillian, the wife of Thomas Clark, a merchant of Galena, Kansas; Raymond, attending a dental college at Denver, Colorado; Andrew J. Jr., a student in the University of Arkansas; and Louise and Lewis, attending the Berryville high school.

The family is affiliated with the Baptist church, Mr. Russell being chairman of the board of deacons for many years. He and Mrs. Russell are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Russell became a Mason the night he was twenty-one, and he is now a Knight Templar and a member of the Mystic Shrine. He has served as master of both lodges, at Green Forest and Berryville, and he is now secretary of the blue lodge and high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter at Berryville, and grand master of the Second Veil of the Grand Chapter of Arkansas. His sons Raymond and A. J., Jr., are also Masons. A staunch advocate of education, Mr. Russell is a member of the Berryville school board and also of the county educational board. He is one of the substantial citizens of the county and one whose aid may always be counted upon in promoting any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare, being president of the Berryville Commercial Club.

JOHN E. ALFORD, M. D.

Dr. John E. Alford, physician and surgeon, successfully practicing in Okolona, Arkansas, was born near Kirby, in Pike county, this state, May 22, 1871. His father, Dr. W. D. Alford, was born in Alabama and came to Arkansas with his parents when a small boy. The grandfather, the Rev. Ewing Alford, after serving in the Mexican war, being on active duty in Texas, came to Arkansas. In the early '40s he had removed from Texas to Pike county, this state, and cast in his lot with the pioneer settlers of that locality. The family comes of English ancestry and was established on American soil before the War of 1812, the first representative of the name settling in Virginia and afterward participating in the second war with England under General Jackson, taking part in the battle of New Orleans. Thus for considerably more than a century the Alford family has been found on this side of the Atlantic and for more than two-thirds of a century has been represented in Arkansas. Dr. W. D. Alford, father of Dr. John E. Alford, is still living at the notable age of eighty-seven years, his home being in Murfreesboro, Arkansas, where he formerly engaged in the practice of medicine for a long period but is now retired. He was at one time county treasurer of Pike county for two terms and during the Civil war he served as head steward in a hospital at Little Rock, where he was stationed when the city was captured by the Federal troops under General Steele. He was with the army throughout the four years' period of the war. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Rebecca Sharp, died in Murfreesboro, Arkansas, in 1898, at the age of fifty-eight years. She was born near Greeneville, Tennessee, and the Sharp family removed from that state to Pike county, Arkansas, in 1840, being also numbered among the early pioneer settlers of that locality. The Sharp family is of Irish lineage, the grandfather of the Doctor having come from Ireland to America in the '30s. He fought under General Jackson in the Seminole Indian war in Florida. It was near Murfreesboro, Arkansas, in 1870, that Rebecca Sharp became the wife of Dr. W. D. Alford and to them were born three sons, all of whom are living.

Dr. John E. Alford, the eldest of the family, was educated in the common schools of Pike county and in the high school at Murfreesboro, after which he took up the profession of teaching, which he followed in Hempstead and Pike counties for four or five years, or until 1894. In that year he began studying medicine in the Barnes University of St. Louis, Missouri, and later was graduated from the Gate City Medical College at Texarkana, Texas, winning his M. D. degree in 1906. From the time when he began the study of medicine in 1894 he was engaged in practice in Pike, Montgomery and Clark counties, although he did not obtain his professional degree until 1906. His medical education was acquired through his own efforts, his earnings supplying him with the money necessary to meet his tuition and the other expenses of his college course. In 1900 he opened an office in Black Springs, Montgomery county, Arkansas, where he remained until 1908 and then went to Polk county, this state. A little later he located at Caddo Gap, where he continued from 1909 until 1918, successfully practicing medicine there. In the latter year he came to Okolona, where he has remained, and here he is successfully and extensively engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery. He is also serving as health officer of Okolona and during the World war he was a member of the Volunteer Medical Corps.

Dr. Alford was united in marriage to Miss Occo Mauney, a daughter of M. M. Mauney of Murfreesboro, Arkansas, the wedding being celebrated July 21, 1897. They are parents of a son and a daughter: Millard Williams, nineteen years of age, who is attending the Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia, Arkansas, where he is studying for a Bachelor of Arts degree and is also editor in chief of the Star, a college manual; and Alice Dell, who graduated from the Okolona high school in 1922.

Dr. Alford is a Mason, belonging to Rob Mori Lodge No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Okolona, of which he is past worshipful master, while at the present time he is serving as secretary. He was raised a Mason in Pike Lodge, No. 91, at Murfreesboro in 1899. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and along professional lines he is connected with the Clark County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society. He has reached high standards in his profession and his ability is constantly increasing as the result of his experience, his wide study and thorough investigation. He holds to the highest ethical standards of the profession and he commands the respect of his professional brethren and of the laity as well.

O. A. GRAVES.

O. A. Graves, one of the most prominent attorneys of Hope, was born on a farm near Mineral Springs, Howard county, Arkansas, July 17, 1876. His youthful days were those of the farm-bred boy. He attended the country schools and in the summer months worked in the fields from the time of early planting until crops were harvested. He likewise continued his education in the public schools at Mineral Springs and next entered the Henderson-Brown College, in which he completed his classical course, being graduated in 1898 with the Bachelor of Arts degree. On the expiration of that period he began teaching school, which he followed for a year at Mineral Springs, and later spent two years as a teacher at Columbus. During the summer of 1901 he was a student in the law office of Judge Eakin of Washington. He had determined to become a member of the bar and with that end in view entered the law school at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in June, 1902. He then located for practice at Hope, where he has since remained. While advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, no dreary novitiate awaited him. He soon secured a liberal practice that has steadily grown in volume and importance as the years have passed and he now has a large clientele. His first partner was Judge W. M. Green, with whom he was associated for two years or until the death of the judge. He afterward became a partner of J. D. Montgomery in 1906 and this association was maintained until 1910. Mr. Graves was then alone in the practice of law until April, 1919, when he admitted E. F. McFaddin to a partnership under the firm style of Graves & McFaddin.

On the 19th of June, 1907, Mr. Graves was united in marriage to Miss Jett Black, and they have one child, Albert. Mr. Graves is a member of the Masonic fraternity and has filled various offices in the local lodge, serving as junior and senior warden and as worshipful master. He also belonged to the council and to the commandery and is a member of the Modern Woodmen. He has held membership in the Methodist Episcopal church from the age of seven years and its teachings have ever been the guiding spirit in his life. He has filled many public offices, serving as county examiner of Hempstead county from 1900 until 1902, as mayor of Hope from April, 1904, until April, 1905, as prosecuting attorney from 1906 until 1910, while in 1917 he was a member of the constitutional convention. He has thoughtfully and earnestly considered the vital questions which have come up for settlement and has lent the weight of his aid and influence to support all measures which he has deemed of worth and of moment to the community and the commonwealth at large.

J. L. L. GREEN.

L. L. Green, who since 1911 has been the cashier of the Bank of Booneville and is a representative and progressive resident of the city in which he makes his home, has spent much of his life in Logan county, his birth having here occurred upon a farm January 2, 1884. His grandparents, Robert O'Riley and Nancy Caroline Green, were natives of North Carolina, whence they removed to Mississippi and afterward to Alabama, there residing until they came to Arkansas. The grandfather was a quartermaster sergeant in the Civil war, serving throughout the period of hostilities. The grandfather of L. L. Green in the maternal line was Buck Wagon, a native of Alabama, in which state he passed away. It was in Alabama that J. L. Green and Louise Wagon were married. The former was born in Mississippi in March, 1851, and the latter in Alabama, October 20, 1849. They came to Arkansas in 1881 and both are still living. Mr. Green rented a farm the first year but ere the close of the year purchased forty acres of land on which was a little log house that became the birthplace of his son,

L. L. Green. The parents still reside upon the old homestead, but in appearance and extent it bears little resemblance to the place which he secured on coming to Arkansas, for from time to time he has extended the boundaries of his land until he now owns twelve hundred acres, which he has brought under a high state of cultivation and to which he has added many modern improvements. Although he arrived in Arkansas a poor man, he is today one of the affluent citizens of his part of the state. To him and his wife have been born ten children, of whom five are yet living: L. L.; Mande, the wife of J. L. Franks, who occupies a farm near Booneville; O. O., of the Superior Builders Supply Company of Little Rock; Ruth, the wife of Gus McLaughlin, living on a farm in Logan county; and Charles H., also a resident farmer of Logan county. The parents are loyal members of the Christian church and in politics Mr. Green is a democrat. He has served as justice of the peace and was also postmaster at Golden City, Arkansas. In various ways he has contributed to the upbuilding and progress of this section of the state and he deserves classification with its representative and honored residents.

L. L. Green was educated in the district schools and through the period of his boyhood and youth lived and worked upon the home farm, early taking his place as a hand in the fields. He likewise taught four schools in early manhood and in 1908 he removed to Booneville, where he secured a position in the Bank of Booneville, being made assistant cashier. In 1911 he was advanced to the cashiership and has since occupied that position. He is likewise a director in the bank, of which his father is one of the largest stockholders and also a director. The bank is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars, has a surplus of equal amount and average deposits of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Its surplus has been acquired from the earnings of the bank, which has always been wisely and conservatively managed. Aside from his connection with the bank L. L. Green is identified with agricultural interests, being now the owner of four hundred and seventy-four acres of well improved land, which returns to him a gratifying annual income. However, he devotes the major part of his attention to the bank and has made for himself a creditable position in financial circles.

In 1908 Mr. Green was married to Miss Nola Young, who was born in Booneville, a daughter of George W. Young, a merchant and farmer who became one of the early residents of this city. Mr. Green always votes with the democratic party but has never been an aspirant for office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs, which have been wisely and carefully managed. Both he and his wife belong to the Baptist church and they occupy an enviable position in social circles where true worth and intelligence are accepted as the passports into good society.

JOSEPH P. RUNYAN, M. D.

Dr. Joseph P. Runyan, the sole owner of St. Luke's Hospital of Little Rock and a man of high professional standards and attainments, is also keenly interested in the welfare of his city and stands at all times for those activities and interests which are a matter of civic virtue and of civic pride. His labors have been a most helpful factor in promoting the welfare and progress of the capital city as well as in upholding those high standards which have ever characterized the medical profession of Little Rock. Dr. Runyan was born on a farm in Columbia county, Arkansas, January 29, 1869, and is one of a family of three sons and a daughter, whose parents were William and Paulina (Boyd) Runyan. By a former marriage of his father Dr. Runyan had four half brothers and two half sisters, all deceased. The father was born on a farm in Talladega county, Alabama, in 1830, and the mother's birth occurred on a farm in the same county in 1844. They were married in Columbia county, Arkansas, in 1866, Mr. Runyan having removed to that county in the year 1858. He devoted his life to agricultural pursuits and was ranked with the representative and successful farmers of Columbia county to the time of his death, which occurred in 1873. His political views were in accord with the principles of the democratic party. His widow long survived him, departing this life November 18, 1903. Of their family two of the sons are living in Little Rock, Joseph P. and I. O. Runyan.

While spending his youthful days under the parental roof Dr. Runyan attended the country schools of Columbia county and his more advanced education was obtained in Tulane University, where he pursued his medical course, being graduated in 1890. He has specialized in surgery throughout his professional career and has made steady and substantial progress, ranking high among the ablest surgeons of the state. In 1911 he became the founder and promoter of St. Luke's Hospital of Little Rock and in 1916 was joined in operating the hospital by Dr. H. H. Kirby, while a third partner, Dr. Sheppard, was admitted in 1917. This is a private hospital owned by Dr. Runyan and rented to the firm of Runyan, Kirby & Sheppard. It is splendidly equipped with all modern appliances for the care of medical and surgical cases and its patronage taxes the capacity of the institution. Dr. Runyan has held many professional positions of honor and trust. He was president of the state board of health of Arkansas from 1904 until 1906. He had previously, from 1901 to 1904, been secretary of the Arkansas Medical Society and in the latter year was elected to the presidency, filling the position for one term. He was also secretary of the state medical board of the Arkansas Medical Society from 1903 to 1906. He was dean and president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Little Rock from its organization in 1906 until it was merged with the medical department of the Arkansas University in 1912. Dr. Runyan belongs to the Pulaski Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association, the American Obstetrical and Gynecological Association, the Rock Island Railway Surgeons Association and the American Railway Surgeons Association. He likewise belongs to the Southern Railway Surgeons Association, being entitled to membership in these last named organizations by reason of the active work he has done as a railway surgeon.

On the 5th of June, 1895, Dr. Runyan was married to Miss Callie Jackson, who was born in Columbia county, Arkansas, January 7, 1870. Dr. Runyan is a democrat and fraternally is connected with the Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Second Baptist church, in which he is serving as a deacon. He takes the keenest interest in all that has to do with the welfare and progress of his fellowmen and is now president of the Civitan Club of Little Rock. He was the first person chosen to this office and reelected thereto. He is also the vice president of the International Association of Civitan Clubs for the improvement and beautifying of cities. The motto of all such organizations is "Builders of good citizenship." He withholds his support from no plan or project that looks to the betterment of Little Rock and has been the instigator of many projects which have been of direct value to the city. He possesses initiative and enterprise and when he becomes convinced that an idea would be of practical value to the capital he at once seeks to put this idea into force and his plans and methods are at all times far-reaching and resultant.

JOSEPH MORRISON HILL.

Joseph Morrison Hill, for thirty-four years a member of the Fort Smith bar, save for his four years' service as chief justice of the supreme court of Arkansas, was born September 2, 1864, at Davidson College, Mecklenburg county, North Carolina. His father, Daniel Harvey Hill, was a descendant of Colonel William Hill, commander of a regiment in Sumter's brigade, and also of Thomas Caheen, who served as a private in Sumter's brigade in the Revolutionary war. Daniel Harvey Hill was a graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point with the class of 1842. He was promoted from the rank of second lieutenant to that of major during the Mexican war and later he was professor of mathematics in Washington College, now the Washington and Lee University. He afterward filled the position of professor of mathematics at Davidson College and next was superintendent of the North Carolina Military Institute at Charlotte in that state. He served in the Confederate army as a colonel of the First North Carolina Regiment and became successively brigadier general, major general and lieutenant general, C. S. A. He was afterward well known as editor, writer and educator and filled a notable place in connection with the history of the south. From 1877 until 1885 he was president of the University of Arkansas. He married Isabella Morrison, a daughter of the Rev. Robert Hall Morrison, a distinguished Presbyterian minister and the first president of Davidson College. On the maternal side Judge Hill is descended from Joseph Graham, a lieutenant of the American army in the Revolutionary war and later a major general.

Judge Hill pursued his classical education in the University of Arkansas and afterward attended the Lebanon Law School of Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the LL. B. degree. He was admitted to the bar at Berryville, Carroll county, Arkansas, September 11, 1883, and was engaged in the practice of law at Eureka Springs, this state, from that date until 1887. He then removed to Fort Smith and has since been a representative of the bar of this city, save for the four years of his service as chief justice of the supreme court of the state, to which office he was called on the 1st of November, 1904, remaining in active connection with that high tribunal until February 1, 1909, when he resigned to accept the position of chief counsel for the state in the railroad rate cases, which he won for the state before the supreme court of the United States. He now has an extensive clientele and has long been regarded as one of the most eminent representatives of the bar in the southwest.

On the 19th of November, 1890, at Lake Village, Arkansas, Judge Hill was married to Miss Kate Reynolds, a daughter of General D. H. Reynolds, who was a brigadier general in the Confederate army, also a member of the Arkansas state senate and a most distinguished lawyer. Judge and Mrs. Hill have two daughters: Martha, the wife of David R. Williams; and Isabel Preston, the wife of John C. Hill. Judge Hill belongs to the Country Club of Fort Smith, to the Elks lodge and to the Masonic fraternity, being a past master of Belle Point Lodge, No. 20, F. & A. M. In politics he has always been a stalwart democrat and was permanent chairman of the state democratic convention in 1920. In 1918 he served as a member of the district exemption board of the western district of Arkansas, and since June, 1909, he has been president of the board of trustees of the Arkansas Tuberculosis sanitarium. His keen interest in everything pertaining to the welfare and progress of the state has been manifest in many tangible ways, while his service on the bench was one that reflected honor and credit upon the people who had honored him.

THOMAS J. GAUGHAN.

Thomas J. Gaughan, of the firm of Gaughan & Sifford, prominent attorneys at law in Arkansas, makes his home in Camden. He was born in Ouachita county, this state, on the 4th of December, 1864, his birthplace being the farm upon which he was reared. He is a son of Patrick and Caroline (Patterson) Gaughan, the former a native of County Mayo, Ireland, while the latter was born in Meriwether county, Georgia. Patrick Gaughan was a youth of nineteen years when in 1847 he came to the new world. He spent some time in New York city and then made his way to Georgia, where he met and married Caroline Patterson. In 1858 they came to Arkansas, settling on a farm in Ouachita county, and Mr. Gaughan was identified with the work of tilling the soil and raising stock during the years of his active life. It is said of him that he was not only a good farmer but also displayed notably sound judgment as a breeder of live stock. Through the careful management of his business affairs he became one of the successful men of Ouachita county and was also classed with the most influential and representative farmers and citizens. He lived to the age of seventy years, while his wife survived him and reached the age of seventy-nine years.

Thomas J. Gaughan was educated at Spring Hill College in Mobile, Alabama, where he won the Bachelor of Arts degree as a member of the class of 1885. Returning home, he was offered and accepted the position of deputy circuit and county clerk, in which capacity he continued to serve for a year. During this time and later he studied law in the office and under the direction of Colonel H. B. Bunn and was admitted to the bar in February, 1888. He immediately began practice in partnership with Colonel Bunn, his former preceptor, and when the latter was appointed chief justice of the state supreme court, Mr. Gaughan entered into partnership with John T. Sifford under the firm style of Gaughan & Sifford, a connection that still exists. Advancement at the bar is proverbially slow and yet no dreary novitiate awaited Thomas J. Gaughan, who rapidly advanced to a most creditable position in the ranks of the attorneys of his section of the state. In 1891 he was elected a member of the state senate of Arkansas for a two years' term, being one of the youngest men ever chosen to the office in this state. In 1896 he was elected prosecuting attorney of the thirteenth judicial district and served in that important position with notable ability for four years. His course in office has always been characterized by the utmost fidelity to duty and by earnest effort to promote the general welfare.

While he maintains a most creditable standing as a lawyer, he has also become well known in other business connections. He is the vice president of the Ouachita Valley Bank of Camden, is a director of the Frost-Johnson Lumber Company, a director of the Valley Lumber Company, president of the Gloster Lumber Company, president of the Rockwell Manufacturing Company, president of the Valley Oil Company and a director of the Union Sawmill Company. He is likewise attorney for all of these corporations and also for several railroads. He is the state president of the Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic. Mr. Gaughan is the president of the Catholic Lay Council of Arkansas and has been a lifelong member of the Catholic church.

On the 10th of October, 1888, Mr. Gaughan was married to Miss Lulu B. Higgins of Montgomery, Alabama, and they became the parents of three children: John Emmet, an attorney who is associated in practice with his father; Ruth, at home; and Thomas J., deceased. The wife and mother departed this life in 1896 and on the 12th of September, 1899, Mr. Gaughan was married to Miss Helen Bragg of Camden, Arkansas. To their marriage have been born seven children: Josephine, deceased; Caroline, who was educated at St. Mary of the Woods Academy in Indiana; Virginia, who is attending St. Mary of the Woods Academy; Ethel M. and Helen B., who are high school pupils in Camden; and Mary Alice and Thomas J., who are yet in the grades.

Mr. Gaughan belongs to Camden Lodge No. 40, B. P. O. E., also to Pine Bluff Council No. 1153 of the Knights of Columbus. He is active in civic affairs and church work and also is a stalwart champion of the cause of education, having served for seven years as a member of the school board.

EDWARD LEVENS GAUNT.

Edward Levens Gaunt, of the firm of Chase, Wallin & Gaunt, public accountants of Little Rock, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, August 21, 1895. He was one of a family of four sons and three daughters, of whom three sons and three daughters are living. The parents are Jesse Stebbins and Annette Mary (Puthoff) Gaunt. The father was born in Booneville, Missouri, in 1862, and the mother's birth occurred in St. Louis in 1865. They were married in that city in 1884 and they now reside in Benton, Arkansas, where the father conducts business as a lumberman. He votes with the democratic party.

In early boyhood Edward L. Gaunt became a pupil in the public schools of St. Louis and afterward continued his education in the public schools of Pekin, Illinois, and of Corning, Arkansas. He next became a high school pupil at Benton, Arkansas, and was there graduated with the class of 1911. He completed a course in a business college in Little Rock and likewise attended a commercial school in Chicago. His training was thus thorough and comprehensive and well qualified him for the responsible duties that have devolved upon him in later years. He came to Little Rock on the 9th of September, 1912, and was with the Foster Hardware Company for a period of five and a half years. He then entered the ordnance department as a civilian accountant and was so engaged until January, 1919. At that date he went to Chicago, where he was employed by a firm of public accountants for a period of eight months, after which he returned to Little Rock. On the 12th of August, 1919, the firm of Chase, Wallin & Gaunt was organized in the capital city. Their clientele, however, is not limited to Little Rock for their work calls them to all sections of the state. The three partners are men of acknowledged ability in their profession and their business is now a substantial and growing one.

On the 11th of September, 1920, Mr. Gaunt was married to Miss Charlotte Marie Betten, who was born September 29, 1896, in Orange City, Iowa, and is a daughter of Dirk and Mary (Noteboom) Betten, the former a native of Pella, Iowa, while the latter was born in Salem, Oregon. Mrs. Gaunt was educated in Ames College of Iowa and is a lady of liberal culture. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gaunt are held in high esteem in social circles and they are well known as members of the Presbyterian church. At the time of the World war Mr. Gaunt enlisted for service in May, 1917, but was rejected on account of physical disability. It was then that he entered the ordnance department as a civilian accountant in the department at Rochester, New York, serving there for eight months. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party and he is a firm believer in its principles. Fraternally he is a Mason and has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He likewise belongs to the Kiwanis Club and to the Cooperative Club and of the latter he is treasurer.

LOUIS KEENER MENARD.

Louis Keener Menard, making his home in De Witt, now occupies the bench of the county court of Arkansas county and his judicial record has been characterized by the utmost faithfulness to duty and by strict fairness and impartiality in his rulings. He had previously practiced law in De Witt and Arkansas county numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred on a farm, in the year 1876. His father, N. B. Menard, was born at the same place and was a son of Frank and Lucille (Nady) Menard. The old homestead farm was likewise the birthplace of the grandfather, having been secured as a family home by the great-grandfather, Julian Menard, who was the first of the family to locate in the southwest. The Menards originally came from the southern part of Illinois and were of French-Canadian extraction, being among the first of the early French settlers here. The Nadys were pure French, the grandmother who in her maidenhood was Lucille Nady, having been born in France, whence she came to the new world and was married in Arkansas county to Frank Menard. Here they reared their family, which included N. B. Menard, whose youthful days were spent on the old homestead farm and who early took up the occupation of farming as a life work. Having reached years of maturity, he married Ellen Thompson, a daughter of Zachariah Thompson, who came to this state from New Orleans and settled on a tract of land in Arkansas county. His wife bore the maiden name of Abigail Freeman. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Menard were born five children: W. T., who is now a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, engaged in preaching at Lake Village; N. B., who is a railroad operator; J. G., who is in the merchant marine service; M. L., who has departed this life; and Louis Keener.

The last named completed his literary education in Hendrix College and afterward took up the study of law. At length he was qualified for admission to the bar and, having successfully passed the required examination, he entered upon active practice in De Witt. Here he was engaged in the work of the profession as a lawyer before the courts until 1920, when he was elected county judge and is now sitting upon the bench. In early manhood he taught school at Hendrix Academy, at Mena, Arkansas, being thus engaged while laying the foundation for his later success as an attorney. His course on the bench is in harmony with his record as a man and lawyer, being characterized by a masterful grasp of every question presented for solution and by marked fidelity to duty at all times.

Mr. Menard was united in marriage to Miss Mary Nicholson, a daughter of Charles Nicholson of St. Charles, Arkansas. Judge Menard belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and he staunchly endorses all those forces which make for the uplift of the individual, the betterment of the community and which promote respect for law and order in every way.

ALEXANDER MCCARTNEY.

Alexander McCartney, manager of the Sligo Manufacturing Company of Fayetteville, was born in Ireland, in 1858, his parents being John and Agnes (Cochran) McCartney, who were likewise natives of the Emerald Isle, whence they came to the new world in 1865. They settled in Cuba, Missouri, and the father, who had been a weaver of linen cloth in Ireland, purchased a homestead in Missouri, where he spent his remaining days. His widow afterward returned to her native country and there died. They were the parents of six children, of whom only two are living: Alexander and Thomas, of St. Louis. The parents were members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. McCartney was an orangeman. His political allegiance was given to the republican party.

Alexander McCartney was educated in the common schools of Missouri and afterward attended night school in St. Louis. He was reared to the work of the home farm and remained thereon to the age of eighteen years, when, believing that he would find other pursuits more congenial than those of agricultural life, he obtained a position in a hardware store and engaged in clerking for thirty-one years. He came to Fayetteville in 1895 and established a branch store for the Sligo Iron Store Company, which company purchased hardwood lumber for wagons and also bought timber here and likewise has a hardwood lumber plant, manufacturing all kinds of hardwood lumber. They now make hardwood rims and spokes for automobiles and the concern is a mammoth one, being classed with the largest and most important productive industries of this section of the state. The business has been greatly developed under the direction and as the result of the enterprise of Mr. McCartney, who has been manager for the company in Arkansas and in Oklahoma since locating in Fayetteville in 1895.

In 1881 Mr. McCartney was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Murphy, who was born in St. Louis, a daughter of John Murphy, an architect and builder of that city. They have become parents of the following living children: Stella is the wife of Ben Stone, an attorney with large practice at Amarilla, Texas, who has also been referee in bankruptcy there; Jessie is the wife of Paul C. Williams, a lawyer of Muskogee, Oklahoma, who has a large and important practice; Isabelle is the wife of Harry Schuitz, who is connected with the musical department of the State University at Denton, Texas; Ruth is the wife of L. M. Holt, agent for the Dodge Brothers car at Fayetteville; Norman, who is taking up business in connection with his father, entered the regular army in the World war in May, 1917. He had previously spent six months on the Mexican border and he trained at Little Rock, going overseas as first lieutenant in July, 1918. He was on the front for forty-two days and received his discharge May 17, 1919. He was with the infantry forces and at one time he had to march two hundred miles on foot at night. He never had his shoes off for days at a time and there were periods in which there was, indeed, little rest. On one occasion he was wounded and sent to the hospital but again qualified for active duty and was on the firing line on the day the armistice was signed.

Mr. McCartney is prominent in Masonic circles, having attained the Knights Templar degree in the York Rite. He has passed through all of the chairs in the Bluelodge, chapter and commandery and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. His political allegiance is given to the republican party. He and his entire family are faithful members and active workers in the Presbyterian church, in which he is serving as an elder. His life has ever been guided by the highest principles and he has ever stood as a man among men, honored and respected by all who know him and most of all by those who know him best.

JOHN BAUMGARTNER.

John Baumgartner, superintendent of schools at Brinkley, is a splendid type of the progressive men and women who are now efficiently promoting the interests of public education in Arkansas. He holds to high ideals and employs the most practical methods in their attainment, thus making the public schools a source of great benefit in training the young for the responsible duties of life. Mr. Baumgartner comes to Arkansas from Ohio, his birth having occurred at Bluffton, in the northwestern part of the Buckeye state, in 1880, his parents being Christ and Elizabeth (Welly) Baumgartner. The former is of Swiss parentage, while the latter was born in Ohio and is a representative of a very old, prominent and distinguished family in the northwestern part of that state, a family that has furnished to the country several congressmen, including the present member of congress from that district, who is a cousin to Mr. Baumgartner. The parents of Mrs. Christ Baumgartner were Peter and Fannie (Bixel) Welly and like others of the family they enjoyed the high respect and goodwill of all with whom they came into contact.

In the acquirement of his education, John Baumgartner attended the public schools of his native town and also studied at Lima, Ohio, and in the Northern Indiana University at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he won the Bachelor of Arts degree. He likewise attended the University of Arkansas and the Chicago University, from which he received his Master's degree, and his thorough and comprehensive training have well qualified him for important work in the educational field. All of the schools under his direction have made steady progress, for his methods are efficient and resultant. He served for nine years as superintendent of the schools at Brinkley, Arkansas, and satisfaction is everywhere evinced in connection with what he has accomplished. Among the improved features which are now in the school are courses in home economics, vocational agriculture and banking, a school bank having been established. Mr. Baumgartner also started a movement for a safe and sane Halloween and takes the school children on an organized hike on that day with games, races and other means of entertainment, thus keeping them out of mischief. All of his work is conducted along psychological principles and he believes that mind and hands well occupied will solve many a problem of juvenile delinquency. He also made a record on the sale of War Savings Stamps, receiving a special testimony from United States Treasurer McAdoo for his work in this connection, acting as chairman of the War Savings Stamps sales in the county. He was likewise chairman of the Y. M. C. A. drive for three counties and he did much other effective work in behalf of the country during the war period.

Mr. Baumgartner was united in marriage to Miss Van Arsdell of Stuttgart, Arkansas, who is also a teacher in the Brinkley high school. They attend summer school each year, thus equipping themselves for better service and their labors are indeed most efficacious in advancing the interests of the schools, in promoting the standards of education here and in producing practical results. They are studying broadly and thinking deeply along those lines which have to do with public progress, and their influence is an immeasurable force for good and for advancement among the young people who come under their instruction.

JOHN ELMORE CULP.

John Elmore Culp, one of the leading and representative business men of El Dorado, now occupying the presidency of the Arkansas Wholesale Grocery Company, one of the leading commercial enterprises of the city, was born February 14, 1892, in the city which is still his home, his parents being Mr. and Mrs. Elmore W. Culp, of whom extended mention is made on another page of this work. At the usual age he became a public school pupil, passing through consecutive grades in El Dorado and later enjoying the benefit of a commercial course in Draughan's Business College at Little Rock. He completed his studies there in 1910 and returned home to become associated with his father in business as a member of the office force of the Arkansas Wholesale Grocery Company. He then bent his energies to a mastery of every phase of the business with which he became connected in the discharge of his official duties and had thus been well trained for further responsibilities when in 1915, immediately following his father's death, he was elected to the presidency of the company. He has since served in this capacity, covering a period of six years, and his prominence in business circles is further indicated in the fact that he is the president of the El Dorado Building & Loan Association.

For some years Mr. Culp was a member of the city council, exercising his official prerogatives in support of many measures for the general good. He is a member of the Rotary Club and of the board of directors of the El Dorado Chamber of Commerce. He belongs to El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E., of which he was exalted ruler in 1917-18. He has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and his entire life has been guided by those principles which neither seek nor require disguise. His course reflects credit upon an honored family name and he is regarded as a dominant figure in the commercial circles of the city.

GENERAL VIRGIL AUGUSTUS BEESON.

Arkansas on the whole has been signally favored in the class of men who have occupied her public offices. They have been men of ability, loyal to the welfare of the state, and have greatly advanced the interests of the commonwealth through the faithful performance of duty. To this class belongs Virgil Augustus Beeson, who is now state adjutant general, and his effective service has given high standing to the military interests of the commonwealth. Making his home in Little Rock, he was born in Monroe City, Missouri, June 3, 1880, and is a son of the Rev. Isaac Richard Marion and Lulie (Merriman) Beeson. The father was born in North Carolina in 1843 and in early life took up the work of the ministry as a representative of the Baptist church. After forty-six years of active service he retired from the ministry shortly before his death. In politics he was always a democrat and at the time of the Civil war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy, joining General Price's army, with which he served during the last three years of hostilities between the north and the south. He accomplished great good during the long years devoted to the upbuilding of the church and the advancement of moral progress. He came to Arkansas in 1914 and died at Morrilton in December, 1916. His wife, who was born in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1847, and whom he wedded in that city in 1875, died in Savannah, Missouri, in 1906. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, and one son and one daughter are yet living.

Virgil A. Beeson, having acquired his early education in the public schools of his native state, afterward spent two years as a student in the William Jewell College at Liberty, Missouri. He has been prominently identified with military and public affairs since attaining his majority and his record in both connections is of most creditable character. He was a member of the Second Arkansas Infantry and on the 7th of June, 1917, he offered his services to the country in connection with the prosecution of the World war, enlisting as a private in Headquarters Company of the Second Arkansas Infantry. He was commissioned captain of D Company, Third Arkansas Infantry. When the state troops were drafted into the federal service on August 5, 1917, he went to Fort Logan H. Roots, Arkansas, and later to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, remaining at the latter place until July 30, 1918, when the troops left for the port of embarkation, sailing for France on the 6th of August, 1918. General Beeson remained in France until the latter part of July, 1919, and was promoted to major there on the 19th of May. He was on overseas service from the 6th of August, 1918, until July 31, 1919, when he was honorably discharged, the demobilization occurring August 19, 1919. He was appointed major of infantry of the Officers' Reserve Corps on that date and was appointed major of infantry of the Arkansas National Guard Reserve on the 18th of September of the same year. On the 1st of February, 1921, he was appointed adjutant general of the state by Governor Thomas C. McRea and is now serving with that rank.

Before entering the army General Beeson was connected with the publishing business, becoming widely known as editor and publisher between the years 1900 and 1917. He was connected with the following papers: The Democrat of Savannah, Missouri; Times Dispatch of Pawnee, Oklahoma; Republic of St. Louis, Missouri; and the Morrillton Headlight of Morrillton, Arkansas. In 1915-1916 he was president of the Arkansas Press Association.

On the 21st of April, 1908, General Beeson was married to Miss Charlotte Howe Lewis, who was born in Missouri in 1883 and is a graduate of the Howard Payne College at Fayette, that state. She is a daughter of Charles O. Lewis, also a native of Missouri. General and Mrs. Beeson have membership in the Presbyterian church and take an active and helpful interest in its work. Fraternally he is connected with Masonry as a thirty-second degree member of the Scottish Rite. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically he has always been a democrat, loyal to the interests of the party, and has rendered active service to the commonwealth as a legislator, having been a member of the general assembly from Conway county in 1915 and 1916. The service which he has rendered to the state both along political and military lines ranks him as one of the honored and representative residents of the capital city.

ALEXANDER JAMISON WILSON.

Alexander Jamison Wilson, manager since 1909 of the insurance department of the Southern Trust Company of Little Rock, was born in Monticello, Arkansas, August 28; 1873, a son of Alexander Jamison and Eliza H. (McCain) Wilson. The father was born in Chester district, South Carolina, March 4, 1836, and in 1857 became a resident of Monticello, Arkansas, so that the entire period of his adult life was spent in this state, his attention being given to farming and fruit raising. In 1862 he responded to the call of the Confederacy and became chief gunner in the Drew Battery of Light Artillery, which for a time was connected with Forrest's command. He always voted with the democratic party. His death occurred in Monticello, Arkansas, in 1910, and he is survived by his wife, who yet makes her home in that city. She was born on a farm in Tipton county, Tennessee, August 21, 1840, and their marriage was celebrated in that county in December, 1857. They became parents of two sons and four daughters, of whom one son and three daughters are yet living.

Alexander J. Wilson pursued his education in the schools of Monticello until graduated from the high school with the class of 1890. He then resided in Drew county until 1897. Taking up the profession of teaching, he was thus active in the work of the schoolroom in Drew and Ashley counties for a period of seven years. He has been identified with the Southern Trust Company as manager of the insurance department since 1909 and is one of the directors of the corporation. His entire attention is now given to this business and he has been instrumental in the development of a strong and growing department.

On the 1st of November, 1905, Mr. Wilson was married to Mamie Eloise Fuller, whose birth occurred in Nashville, Tennessee, November 5, 1884, her parents being Felix De Moville and Mary (Osborne) Fuller, the latter a native of Georgia. They resided for some time at Nashville, Tennessee, but the father is now deceased. Mrs. Wilson was reared in that city and is a graduate of the Nashville Conservatory of Music. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have one daughter, Elizabeth, whose birth occurred November 21, 1915.

Politically Mr. Wilson is a democrat and while residing at Fordyce, Arkansas, filled the position of recorder for two years and for one year directed the affairs of the city as its mayor. During the World war he served on all the bond drives and otherwise supported to the extent of his ability and opportunity those interests which had to do with the support of the government in financing the war. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Lakeside Country Club, and is an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal church, in which he has served as secretary of the board of stewards since 1919. For several years he has been treasurer of the Arkansas Sunday School Association and is very active in both local and state Sunday school work.

REV. WILEY LIN HURIE.

Rev. Wiley Lin Hurie, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church of Russellville, has devoted many years to the ministry and his religious instruction has been a tangible force for good in the various communities in which he has labored. He was born in Petersburg, Illinois, March 17, 1885, a son of J. S. and Anna (Houghton) Hurie, both of whom were born in the central part of that state. The paternal grandfather, Josiah Hurie, was a native of Pennsylvania and became one of the pioneer farmers of Illinois, in which state his demise occurred. The maternal grandfather, A. M. Houghton, was born in central Illinois and there spent his life. J. S. Hurie, a man of good education, who has devoted much time to reading and study, is now residing on his farm, having engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of years. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he is a Knights Templar Mason and is also identified with the Knights of Pythias. Mrs. Hurie died in 1910, in the faith of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Hurie is also affiliated with that religious denomination, joining the church over which his son was at that time presiding. In the family were four children: A. E. and E. J., who are operating farms in Illinois; Wiley Lin; and Frank J., who is also engaged in farming in that state.

Wiley Lin Hurie acquired his early education in the country schools of his native state and then became a student in an academy at Jacksonville, Illinois, completing his course in 1902, while four years later he was graduated from Illinois College of that place. He then entered the Union Theological College of New York city and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1912, but had engaged in preaching the gospel in the country adjacent to Petersburg previous to this time, erecting a church at Hickory Grove, Illinois, which was named the Lin Hurie chapel, in his honor. While attending the theological seminary he supplied the pulpit of the First Presbyterian church at Petersburg, was student pastor of the Church of the Covenant in New York city, pastoral supply at Christ church, and acting pastor of the Church of the Covenant in 1912. In November, 1912, he was called to Russellville to fill the pastorate of the Central Presbyterian church, of which he has since been in charge, and under his guidance the work of the church has materially expanded and developed. It now has a membership of three hundred and seventy, of which number about fifty are non-residents, and its influence is constantly broadening, the church being recognized as a potent force for good in the moral progress of the community.

On the 15th of November, 1917, Rev. Mr. Hurie was united in marriage to Miss Ula Moores, who was born at Richmond, Arkansas, a daughter of Alexander Ross and Nellie Virginia Moores. The father was for many years a prominent merchant of that place and later he became connected with mercantile interests of Russellville. To this union has been born a daughter, Mary Virginia, who is but a few months old. In his political views Rev. Mr. Hurie is a democrat and in Masonry he has attained high rank, having taken all of the degrees up to and including those of the consistory. For a number of years Rev. Mr. Hurie has been president of the board of trustees of the College of the Ozarks, the synodical college of the Presbyterian church, located at Clarksville, Arkansas. He is a gentleman of liberal culture and superior intellectual attainments, who by example as well as precept has pointed out to others the best way of life, and his course has at all times awakened admiration and respect.

LEON A. WILLIAMS.

Leon A. Williams, numbered among Arkansas' capitalists, makes his home at Fort Smith and owns and controls important farming and live stock interests. His land holdings are, indeed, extensive and he employs the most progressive and scientific methods in the care of his fields and in the breeding of his stock.

Mr. Williams is a native of Kansas, born in 1881. He was but fourteen years of age when he took up his abode in Arkansas and settled in Fort Smith and here he started out in the business world by trading horses and mules. Young though he was, he displayed excellent judgment in recognizing the value of the animals and, prospering in his undertakings, he acquired after a time a barn of moderate size. Gradually he expanded and developed his business interests and in this connection erected one of the largest barns of the kind in Arkansas. He rented his first barn at ten dollars per month and from that modest beginning he steadily worked upward until he has become one of the wealthy and influential men of the state. While only forty years of age, he is the owner of eight thousand acres of land and has also made investment in some of the best business property of Fort Smith, with an estimated value of three hundred thousand dollars. Whenever he has seen opportunity for judicious investment he has added to his property holdings and he is today one of the foremost agriculturists of the southwest, employing the most scientific and improved methods in caring for his fields and in the development of his herds.

Mr. Williams has ever recognized the fact that play is second in importance only to work and that a man's recreations make or break him as surely as do his business habits. He has largely found his diversion in fox hunting, keeping a kennel of fine hounds which are the best bred of any to be seen in this section of the state. In business he has ever recognized the fact that application is what counts and that every man has it in him to work if he wants to. Indifference is the principal cause of failure and a lack of real interest in the business keeps most men from financial success. Mr. Williams, however, has always found pleasure in his work and has steadily improved and developed his opportunities until prosperity has followed all his undertakings.

THOMAS N. BLACK, M. D.

Dr. Thomas N. Black, one of the younger physicians of Hot Springs, whose ability, however, is bringing him rapidly to the front, was born in Little River county, Arkansas, June 24, 1891, his father being Thomas N. Black, a native of Alabama. Dr. Black was largely reared at Ashdown, Arkansas, where he pursued a public school education, while later he attended a high school in Oklahoma and also was a student in the University of Oklahoma. He thus laid broad and deep the foundation upon which to build the superstructure of professional knowledge, when he had decided to engage in the practice of medicine as a life work. In 1911 he entered Tulane University at New Orleans, Louisiana, as a medical student and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1918. His first practical experience came to him through serving as an interne in Charity Hospital of that city. He afterward opened an office in Hot Springs in connection with Dr. Tribble, his office being in the Thompson building. He specializes in urology and surgery and is making rapid advance along those lines, attaining a marked degree of efficiency in each. In addition to his private practice he is serving on the staff of the St. Joseph Hospital.

Dr. Black was united in marriage on the 30th of June, 1920, to Miss Fern Burhop and they now have one child, Natta Lee. Dr. Black is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also of the Knights of Pythias, while along professional lines he is identified with the Garland County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. His interest in his profession has its root not only in a desire for success but also in broad humanitarian principles and he maintains the highest standards in his practice, anxious at all times that his service shall be of real practical benefit to his fellowmen.

C. M. RICE.

C. M. Rice, a member of one of the pioneer families of Arkansas, has long occupied a position of prominence at the bar of Bentonville and has also served as mayor of the town. He was born in McMinn county, Tennessee, September 5, 1859, a son of Charles W. and Julia A. (Cobb) Rice, who were also natives of that state. They were married in Tennessee and in 1859 came to Arkansas, locating at Pea Ridge. The father became the owner of a large farm in that section, on which he and his wife spent their remaining years. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he was identified with the Masonic order, holding membership in the chapter. He was a democrat in his political views and in an early day served as circuit clerk of Benton county. He was a widely known and highly esteemed resident of his community, being numbered with the pioneer settlers of Arkansas whose labors were resultant factors in the development and upbuilding of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Rice became the parents of thirteen children, of whom eight are living, the subject of this review being one of the younger members of the family. R. S. and C. A. Rice are prominent physicians of Rogers, this state, and Roland, W. C. and M. B. Rice are successful business men residing in Benton county.

In the acquirement of an education C. M. Rice attended the schools of Benton county, after which he became a student in the State University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, from which he was graduated with the class of 1886, on the completion of a law course. Returning to Arkansas, he opened an office in Bentonville in 1887 and here has since engaged in professional work, his ability being attested in the large clientage accorded him. He has been admitted to practice in all the courts and is now serving as president of the examining board of the supreme court of the state. In a profession where advancement depends upon individual merit and ability he has gradually worked his way upward, his success coming to him because of his close reasoning, his logical argument, his correct application of legal principles and his ability to present his contention in the strongest possible light.

In 1885 Mr. Rice was married to Miss Martha Ragan, who was born near Petersburg, Illinois. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Ragan, were natives of Virginia and in the '70s they became residents of Arkansas, and died in Benton county. Her paternal grandfather, John H. Ragan, lived to a very advanced age, being one hundred and four years old at the time of his demise. Mr. and Mrs. Rice have become the parents of five children: Russell, the eldest in the family, has been connected with government work since 1916 and is now occupying the position of finance clerk at Camp Pike, near Little Rock, Arkansas; Ethel Anderson is a teacher in the schools of Oklahoma; Jefferson Randolph was educated in the grammar and high schools of Bentonville, after which he pursued a law course in the State University of Arkansas, and is now associated in practice with his father; Phillip pursued a course in electrical engineering at the Arkansas State University, standing at the head of his class, and is now manager for a large electrical plant at Rochester, New York. During the World war he entered the British army as a volunteer and was subsequently transferred to the American forces. His term of service covered two years, during which he participated in all of the major engagements of the war; Paul, who was also in the service of his country, became ill in camp and has not yet entirely regained his health.

Mr. and Mrs. Rice are members of the Baptist church and fraternally Mr. Rice is identified with the Masons, holding membership in the lodge. He is a staunch democrat in his political views and takes an active interest in the welfare and success of the party but has never been an aspirant for public office, although he has been called upon to serve as mayor of Bentonville and was also president of the school board, making a most creditable record in both connections. He has always been loyal to any trust reposed in him and puts forth every possible effort for the benefit and upbuilding of his community, county and state, doing effective service for the public good, while in his law practice whatever he does is for the best interests of his clients and for the honor of the profession.

HARRY CLYDE KING, M. D.

Dr. Harry Clyde King, a surgeon of notable capability, by reason of thorough training and long experience and who at all times is most conscientious in the performance of his professional duties, was born in Luray, Clark county, Missouri, December 16, 1871, and is the youngest of a family of eleven children, whose parents were Alfred A. and Ellen (Dennis) King. The father was a mechanical engineer, who served in the Civil war, there being seven brothers in the family who joined the army and all were killed save two.

Dr. King of this review was but nine years of age at the time of his father's death. He soon afterward left home to attend school in Cherokee, Kansas, and there lived with a married sister, remaining at that place until he had completed a high school course. He afterward removed from the Sunflower state to Wisconsin, where he continued his studies in a private school and still later he became a student in the University of Chicago. After a preparatory course there pursued he entered Rush Medical College, which is the medical department of the University of Chicago and has an endowment from the Rockefeller foundation. Lacking necessary funds to meet his tuition and the regular expenses of a college course, yet determined to qualify for the practice of medicine Dr. King slept in the basement of the college in order to save room rent and paid for his tuition by acting as an orderly and waiting on table in the student's boarding hall, thus providing for his board and maintenance. Notwithstanding his financial handicap his fellow students recognized his personal worth, ability and high character and elected him to the position of secretary of his class, which was the first four-year class being graduated from that institution. He completed his studies in 1899, gaining thereby his much coveted degree of M. D. In later years Dr. King has taken postgraduate work in New York. On leaving the east he went to Weir City, Kansas, where he established himself in the practice of medicine in connection with his brother, Dr. Dennis W. King, who was then the physician and surgeon for the Central Coal & Coke Company of Weir City. During an epidemic at Bonanza, Arkansas, Dr. King was sent to that place by the Central Coal & Coke Company and continued for a period of six years. He was not only prominent as a physician there but was also a recognized leader in connection with many interests of great public importance and moment. He served as mayor of the city, was chief of police and occupied other positions of public honor and trust, thus displaying his devotion to the welfare and progress of the community.

It was in 1906 that Dr. King came to Fort Smith, where he has followed his profession for a period of fifteen years and he is today recognized as one of the leading physicians of the city. He has developed great skill and ability as the years have passed and his efficiency is manifest in many ways. He has always specialized in surgery and he possesses intimate knowledge of anatomy and the component parts of the human body and thoroughly understands the onslaught made upon it by disease. From 1907 until 1916 he acted as chief surgeon for the Midland Valley Railroad and he has been chief surgeon for the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company since 1906. In 1915 he organized the Union Hospital Association among the Union Mine Workers of District No. 21, comprising Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. The present membership is ten thousand, representing fifty thousand people. Almost every year Dr. King leaves home to attend an important clinic in the larger medical centers of the country. While in Chicago he did service in the Cook County Hospital. He is a local member of the Surgeons College at Rochester, Minnesota, and he belongs to the Sebastian County, the Arkansas State and the American Medical Associations. He was a member of the Medical Reserve Corps during the World war, but could not get overseas, as it was thought best that he should remain at home on account of his duties as chief surgeon of the mine workers.

Dr. King was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Cummings of Toronto, Canada, and they have become parents of three children: Linton, who attends the Southwestern University; Eleanor; and Juanita. Mrs. King is a most active club woman and is interested in many of the projects and problems that have to do directly with the welfare and benefit of the people at large. She is now president of the Anti-Tuberculosis Association of Sebastian county and during the World war she acted as chairman of Liberty Loan drives in Fort Smith. Dr. King belongs to the Lions Club and the Country Club of Fort Smith, is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Masonry, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. Both he and his wife are recognized leaders in the field in which they labor and to which they direct their attention and they are actively interested in all those concerns which are of vital worth to the community, their influence being ever on the side of progress and improvement.

W. A. BURKS.

The legal fraternity of Bentonville finds a leading representative in W. A. Burks, who also has important business interests, and in both lines of activity his efforts have been attended with a gratifying measure of success. He is a native of Kentucky, his birth having occurred in Logan county in February, 1871. His parents were A. L. and Sallie A. (Terry) Burks, who were also natives of the Blue Grass state, the birth of the former having occurred in Logan county, while the latter was born in Barren county. They were married in Kentucky, remaining residents of the state until 1891, and the father devoted his attention to farming, in which he was very successful. On leaving Kentucky he made his way to Bentonville, Arkansas, and here lived retired until his demise. Mrs. Burks was a member of the Christian church, while he was a Baptist in religious faith, and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. In their family were three children: B. T., a prominent merchant of Bentonville; Lizzie, the wife of W. T. Dudley, who is also engaged in merchandising here; and W. A., of this review.

In the pursuit of an education Mr. Burks attended the public schools of Kentucky and on starting out in life for himself he first took up the occupation of farming. Later he entered upon the study of law in the office of C. M. Rice of Bentonville, and in 1896 he was admitted to the bar, having successfully passed the required examination. He began the practice of law in association with Mr. Rice, with whom he continued for eight years, and then organized the Fidelity Savings Bank & Loan Company, of which he was president for several years. Following the liquidation of the bank he resumed the work of his profession in connection with bonds and mortgages and the list of his clients is now an extensive and representative one. He is local attorney for the Frisco & Kansas City Southern Railway Company and he has been connected with a number of important cases which have come before the courts of his district. He is a man of logical mind, studious, well versed in the law and therefore highly qualified to take care of important litigation. He is a prominent figure in business circles of Bentonville, being president of the Monarch Investment Company, and he is also president of the Texas Oil & Refining Company and the Blue Hawk Refining Company, for which he likewise acts as attorney. In addition he had made extensive investments in land in Benton county and is an astute, farsighted business man, whose plans are carefully formulated and promptly executed.

In 1902 Mr. Burks was united in marriage to Miss Essie Smart, a native of Bentonville and a daughter of Dr. John Smart, who has for many years been numbered with the leading physicians of the town. Mrs. Burks is a member of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Burks is affiliated with the Christian church. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor commander. His entire career has been actuated by a spirit of progress and enterprise that has been productive of substantial results. He has constructed his own success and in business and professional circles of Bentonville his standing is of the highest.

OLIVER W. CLARK, M. D.

Dr. Oliver W. Clark, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Pine Bluff and owner of the Clark Sanitarium and member of the Pine Bluff Clinic, is regarded as a most valuable addition to professional circles here. He utilizes the most advanced and scientific principles and at all times keeps abreast with the progressive thought of the times bearing upon the treatment of disease. Because of his wide and favorable acquaintance in Pine Bluff and this section of the state his life history cannot fail to prove of interest to many of the readers of this volume. Dr. Clark was born at Nashville, Arkansas, in 1875, a son of George M. and Amelia (Anderson) Clark. His father was a captain of the Confederate army during the Civil war and afterward devoted his life to merchandising. He became a pioneer in the southern section of the state and erected the first building in Texarkana, Arkansas. He was a native of Alabama but removed to Arkansas sixty-four years ago and in various ways contributed to the progress and upbuilding of this state, just as his father, William Clark, had done in Alabama, where he was rated as a distinguished citizen. The mother of Dr. Clark was a daughter of O. P. Anderson, representative of one of the old families of South Carolina that was later established in Mississippi and thence removed to Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. George Clark were parents of three children: Oliver W.; A. B.; and Mrs. J. R. Hill of Texarkana.

Dr. Clark enjoyed liberal educational opportunities. He attended the Ouachita College, there completing his more specifically literary course, and later he entered the Memphis Medical College, which constituted the initial step to his further study in Tulane University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903. He then put his theoretical knowledge to the practical test by serving in St. Joseph's Hospital at Memphis for a year, gaining that broad and valuable experience which is never so quickly acquired in any other way as in hospital practice. In 1904 he came to Pine Bluff, where he has continued in the active work of the profession, enjoying a large general practice for a decade. He toured Europe in 1914 with members of the American Clinical Congress of Surgeons, visiting chief medical centers, and after returning he established the Clark Sanitarium, in association with Dr. W. H. Simmons and Dr. J. S. Jenkins. This institution is now devoted exclusively to the service of the Pine Bluff Clinic, being supplied with every modern surgical equipment and appurtenance. The physicians in charge are all men of marked ability and progressiveness and the work accomplished there is of a most advanced and highly satisfactory character. In addition to his connection with the medical profession Dr. Clark is well known as a successful oil operator, owning producing wells in Louisiana, and he has sold oil acreage, owned in fee by him, for thousands of dollars. He is now actively interested in the development of a part of his holdings and his work in this connection is making substantial contribution to his annual resources.

Dr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Willie Jean Atkinson of Pine Bluff and they have become the parents of two children: William George and Sterling Moore. Dr. Clark and his family are most widely and favorably known here, enjoying the hospitality of many of the best homes, and their friends are legion.

BENJAMIN L. ROSS.

Prominent in the financial circles of Arkansas is Benjamin L. Ross, cashier of the Merchants & Planters Bank at Eudora, of which institution he is also a director. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Arkadelphia, on the 27th of August, 1885. His father, Robert R., who died in 1918 at the age of sixty years, was for many years active as a bookkeeper and for some time held the office of circuit clerk in Clark county. He was also in the land office at Camden for many years. Mr. Ross died in Arkadelphia and his passing came as a severe blow to his many friends in the community. One of his brothers, Jesse A. Ross, was a major in the Confederate army during the Civil war. The Ross family was one of the pioneer families in Clark county. In Memphis, Tennessee, in 1883, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Ross to Miss Sue John Ligon, a native of Mason, that state. She is now making her home in Memphis, aged fifty-five years. To their union two boys and one girl were born, all of whom are living. Benjamin L., whose name introduces this review, was the second in order of birth.

In the acquirement of an education, Benjamin L. Ross attended the public schools of Arkadelphia, and after graduating from the high school there he took a two-year literary course at Ouachita College. His higher education was acquired through his own efforts, for he worked in a sawmill during the summer vacations in order to secure enough money to pay his tuition. In 1907 he went to work with the Gulf Congress Company of Little Rock, as clerk, and was active in that capacity for one month. The following three months were spent as clerk in the State National Bank at Little Rock, at the termination of which time he was transferred to the Bank of Lake Village, being promoted to the position of assistant cashier. For about one year he was connected with that institution and was then transferred to the Bank of Eudora, being employed in the same capacity. All of these banks were branches of the Bankers Trust Company of St. Louis, Missouri. Two years later, or in 1910, Mr. Ross became cashier of the Citizens State Bank at Lake Village and remained with that institution until 1911, when he returned to Eudora. Subsequently he organized the Merchants and Planters Bank here, of which he was elected cashier and has remained active in that capacity since. The success of the institution seemed assured from the start and today the deposits amount to some one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The bank was organized with twenty-five thousand dollars, paid up capital, and since organization it has paid about seventy per cent dividends. The surplus and undivided profits now total twenty thousand dollars. Mr. Ross is one of the stockholders in the bank and is acting as secretary and director of the Eudora Congress Company of this city.

Mr. Ross was married on the 24th of December, 1908, at Eudora, to Miss Essie Crabtree, a daughter of Benjamin Crabtree, a well known resident here. To their union four children have been born: Benjamin L., Jr., aged twelve years; Sue Elizabeth, ten years of age; Roberta A., eight years of age; and Robert Harlan, aged six months. The three older children are attending the Eudora public schools.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church, which Mr. Ross serves as deacon. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Concord Lodge, No. 23, A. F. & A. M., of Eudora; Eudora Chapter, No. 132, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is high priest; Arkansas Consistory at Little Rock; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff. He is a Scottish Rite Mason. During the World war Mr. Ross took a prominent and active part in all activities and served on various committees in the interest of Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other drives. He is one of Eudora's most public-spirited and representative citizens and is never too busy to give his aid in the furtherance of any movement for the development and improvement of the community. Mr. Ross has many stanch friends throughout the county and state who appreciate his true personal worth and he is held in high esteem by his fellowmen.

OTTIS GRADY HIRST, M. D.

Arkansas numbers among her native sons Dr. Ottis Grady Hirst, a member of the firm of Drs. Buchanan, Buchanan and Hirst of Prescott. He was born on a farm in Nevada county, on the 4th of July, 1897, a son of Judge Jesse J. and Susan A. (Alsbrook) Hirst, both natives of this county. The paternal and maternal grandparents came to this state at the same time, in the '40s, the former emigrating from Virginia and the latter from Georgia. Judge and Mrs. J. J. Hirst are still living, making their home on the old farm in the southern part of Nevada county. For four years the father held the office of county judge of this county and he is one of the influential men here, having done much for the development and improvement of both county and state.

In the acquirement of an education Ottis Grady Hirst attended the public schools of Cale, and after graduation from the high school there with the class of 1914, entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas. He received his M. D. degree on the 29th of May, 1918, and for the following year he served as an interne in the Logan H. Roots Memorial Hospital at Little Rock. In May, 1919, he came to Prescott and formed a copartnership with Drs. Buchanan & Buchanan, further mention of both being made on another page of this work, and he has remained active in that association. Although Dr. Hirst is but twenty-four years of age he has demonstrated his skill both as a practitioner of internal medicine and as a surgeon.

Along strictly professional lines, Dr. Hirst has membership in the Nevada County Medical Society, Arkansas State Medical Society, American Medical Association and Southern Medical Association and through these bodies he keeps in constant touch with the advancement being made by eminent members of the profession. Fraternally Dr. Hirst is a member of Chi Zeta Chi, a Greek letter college fraternity, and he is identified with the Order of the Eastern Star; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he holds membership in Nevada Lodge, No. 203; and Prescott Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons. Dr. Hirst has many friends in this community who have known him since boyhood and the consensus of public opinion places him among the representative members of the profession in the state.

D. M. WATKINS.

No history of the business development of Mena, of Hatfield and of this section of the state would be complete were there failure to make reference to D. M. Watkins, who is actively associated with its commercial and industrial development. He was born in Birmingham, Alabama, March 23, 1871, and is a brother of William E. Watkins, in connection with whose life history on another page of this work mention is made of their parents and ancestry. D. M. Watkins started out in the business world as an employe in the mills of Birmingham. He was thus engaged for seven years and gained good practical business experience during that period. In 1900 he came to Mena, where he joined his brother, W. E. Watkins, in the establishment and conduct of a hardware store. Since that time they have constantly developed and expanded their interests and are now owners of a hardware store at Hatfield and of large lumber and sawmilling interests, while their property holdings include both farm lands and city real estate. Their investments have been most judiciously made and are representative of the sound judgment, broad intelligence and keen discrimination of the brothers, who have been so long and so successfully associated in their business undertakings. D. M. Watkins has charge of the hardware business, while his brother is the active manager of their lumber trade.

In 1902 D. M. Watkins was married in Mena to Miss Alice Gray, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas, a daughter of Mr. Gray, who settled in Logan county on coming to this state from Illinois. He served in the Confederate army. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have become parents of one child, Edward, who was graduated in the spring of 1922 from the high school at Mena. Mrs. Watkins belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Watkins has membership relations with the Masons, having attained the Knights Templar degree of the York Rite. He is past master of the lodge, past high priest of the chapter and past eminent commander of the Knights Templar Commandery. He also belongs to the Elks Lodge, No. 781. In politics he has ever been a stalwart advocate of democratic principles and has served as a member of the city council of Mena, taking an active interest in promoting all those forces which make for the advancement of civic standards and the adoption of higher civic ideals. His cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any plan or project that is looking to the benefit and improvement of city and state.

At the same time Mr. Watkins remains one of the most forceful and representative figures in the business circles of Polk county. He is the president of the Watkins Hardware Company of Mena and vice president of the Watkins Lumber & Mercantile Company of Hatfield, and a half owner in the Watkins Lumber Company of Mena, being a full partner of his brother in their undertakings. Not by leaps and bounds but by a steady progression has he reached the creditable and enviable place which he now occupies in the business and financial circles of this section of the state and his life should serve to encourage and inspire others, showing what can be accomplished by persistent effort intelligently directed.

HENRY THOMAS SMITH, M. D.

In 1910 Dr. Henry Thomas Smith entered upon the practice of medicine and surgery in McGeechee and as the years have passed he has won a well established position in the ranks of his profession, owing to his conscientious application and scientific attainments. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred at Cincinnati, on the 16th of October, 1886, and his parents were Reuben J. and Nannie C. (Bond) Smith, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Tennessee. In childhood they were brought by their parents to Arkansas and in this state their marriage occurred. The father, who has departed this life, followed the trade of a blacksmith. The mother is residing with a daughter in Pryor, Oklahoma.

After completing his high school course Henry Thomas Smith became a student at the University of Arkansas and in 1907 he took up the study of medicine, graduating from the University of Tennessee at Memphis in 1910, with the M. D. degree. In September of that year he opened an office in McGehee, where he has since successfully followed his profession, and he is now assistant surgeon for the Missouri Pacific Railroad in this section. He is thoroughly familiar with the scientific principles upon which his work rests and is correct in the application of his knowledge to the needs of his patients. His labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success and with the passing years his practice has steadily increased as he has had opportunity to demonstrate his professional skill and ability.

In 1912 Dr. Smith married Miss Mary Olive Avery of McGehee, and they have a large circle of friends here. In religious faith they are Presbyterians and fraternally the Doctor is identified with the Masons, belonging to Desha Lodge, No. 643, F. & A. M.; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R.; and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff, Arkansas. He is also connected with the Knights of Pythias lodge and the Woodmen circle, while his professional relations are with the Desha County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the Southern Medical Association. He utilizes every possible opportunity to promote his knowledge and increase his efficiency, ever keeping in touch with the advancement that is being made along the lines of medical and surgical science, and he enjoys the respect of his colleagues and also of the general public.

J. F. SIMS.

J. F. Sims, president of the New Bank of Hazen and also identified with the business interests of the city as a merchant, has likewise figured in public affairs and has filled the office of sheriff of Prairie county. Thus he has led a busy, useful and active life, contributing to the progress and upbuilding of the district in which he makes his home. Mr. Sims is a native of Missouri, his birth having occurred in Mexico, that state, in 1878, his parents being John and Melinda (Crockett) Sims. Thirty-four years ago his parents moved to Hazen and his father is still a prominent factor in the business circles of this city, where he has for more than a third of a century taken active part in promoting the upbuilding and advancing the civic interests of the community. With the removal of the family to Hazen, J. F. Sims became a pupil in the public schools here and when his textbooks were put aside he entered upon the live stock business and likewise engaged in the shipment of hay. Since his early start in the business world he has constantly enlarged and developed his business activities and his enterprises have been forceful factors in the growth and substantial improvement of this section of the state. He early devoted acreage to rice cultivation, being among the first in this section to grow rice, planting one hundred and fifty acres to that crop the first year that rice was produced in this part of the state. He now has eighteen hundred acres of good rice land and he also owns other lands. He turned his attention to merchandising at La Grue, Arkansas, there remaining until his election to the office of sheriff, when he removed to Hazen to enter upon the duties of that position, in which he served by reelection for two terms. He is now president of the New Bank of Hazen, in which he has previously been a director and he gives much of his time to the executive control of the bank, which has become recognized as one of the strong financial institutions of Prairie county. He also owns one of the largest mercantile establishments here and in all of his undertakings is very successful, owing to his close application, his thoroughness and his progressive spirit. His plans are always carefully formed and promptly executed, so that he never fails to reach his objective in any business transaction.

Mr. Sims was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Johnson, a daughter of Lee Johnson, and they have become parents of five children: Annabelle, Bessie Grace, Blanche, J. T. and I. T.

During the World war Mr. Sims was chairman of the exemption board and did everything in his power to uphold the interests of the government and promote those activities constituting a basis for the success of the American and allied forces. Fraternally he is prominently known, having membership with the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Elks, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is loyal to the teachings and purposes of these different orders and his life has been actuated by a progressive spirit, which has made him a valued representative of these different organizations and made him a prominent and forceful factor in business circles.

In politics, too, he has exercised considerable influence and in office he proved a most capable and faithful official but his ambition has been rather in the field of business progression than of office holding. Watchful of all the opportunities pointing to success, he has wisely used his time and talents in the control of his business affairs and as banker, merchant and planter is today widely known and highly honored.

HENRY HENNEGIN TUCKER.

Henry Hennegin Tucker, secretary of the Fones Brothers Company, controlling an extensive wholesale hardware business, of which he is part owner, has thus gained an enviable position as one of the substantial business men of Little Rock, his native city. He was born January 14, 1888, and is a son of Sterling W. and Jennie (Hennegin) Tucker. Following the death of the father, the mother later became the wife of D. G. Fones, of the Fones Brothers Hardware Company, one of the mammoth business concerns of the capital city. When she passed away she left this business to her two sons, Sterling W. and Henry H. Tucker.

The younger son was educated in the public schools of Little Rock and also attended the Arkansas Military Academy for two years before entering Cornell University at Ithaca, New York, from which he was graduated in 1909 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Having completed his education, he returned to his native city and here became identified with the wholesale hardware house of Fones Brothers. He has since been identified with this business and has contributed in no small degree to the success and continued growth of the undertaking. In June, 1912, he became secretary of the company, while his brother, Sterling W., succeeded to the presidency in 1916. The brothers are now joint owners of this business, which is one of the most important commercial interests of the city, its trade relations covering a very wide territory. They have always fully sustained the high reputation which the house has borne since its founders first opened the doors of the establishment and at the same time they have kept apace with the most progressive commercial methods, the gradual expansion of their trade being the direct result of carefully formulated plans and sound judgment.

On the 5th of June, 1919, H. H. Tucker was united in marriage to Miss Katharine Duke, who was born in Baxter, Arkansas, August 14, 1893, a daughter of Charles Talbot and Willie (Slemons) Duke. The father, a native of Arkansas, is now deceased and the mother has also been called to her final rest. To Mr. and Mrs. Tucker has been born a daughter, Elizabeth Duke, whose birth occurred April 21, 1921.

In his political views Mr. Tucker has always been a stalwart democrat but never an aspirant for office. He and his wife are consistent members of the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the nature of his interests aside from the lines indicated is manifest in his membership relations with the Rotary Club and the Country Club. That his has been a well spent life is indicated in the fact that many of his staunchest friends are those who have known him from his boyhood to the present. He is a splendid representative of that class of wide-awake, alert young business men who, meeting present-day requirements of the commercial world, also measure their activities by the highest ethical standards of trade.

ISAAC DREYFUSS.

Isaac Dreyfuss is one of the pioneer merchants of Pine Bluff, where he is conducting a well appointed department store. Enterprise and persistency of purpose have actuated him in all of his business career and his success is the merited reward of his labors. Mr. Dreyfuss is a native of Louisiana, his birth having occurred in New Orleans in 1850, his parents being Isaac and Rosina (Meyer) Dreyfuss. The parents were from Germany and on coming to the United States settled in New Orleans, where the father engaged in merchandising.

Isaac Dreyfuss, one of a family of four children, was educated in his native city, after which he traveled through this section of the south. In 1869 he located at Grand Lake, where he engaged in merchandising on his own account and after eleven years there spent came to Pine Bluff in 1880. Here he opened a small store on Baroque street and some time afterward established his store at his present location. Here he founded the nucleus of what is now a large department store, gradually adding different departments to the original store until he is at the head of a very substantial commercial enterprise. He is one of the oldest merchants in years of continuous connection with business in Pine Bluff and his slogan "your grandparents traded here" is literally true. His lines are comprehensive in their scope, tasteful in selection and reasonable in prices and his patronage has steadily grown as the years have passed by.

Mr. Dreyfuss was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Simon of New Orleans, and their children are: H. C., J. M., D. S. and Hattie. The son, D. S. Dreyfuss, served with the Red Cross during the World war and was also at Camp Pike. The sons are engaged in business with their father and are progressive young men, whose enterprise and zeal are guided by the sound business judgment and experience of the father, making this a strong combination. Mr. Dreyfuss certainly deserves much credit for what he has accomplished as he started out in the business world empty-handed and by persistent effort has made continued advancement, his labors winning for him the just and merited reward of diligence and persistency of purpose.

GEORGE FERDINAND SNYDER.

George Ferdinand Snyder, secretary-treasurer of the Charles F. Penzel Grocer Company of Little Rock, has been identified with this business continuously since 1906, or for a period of fifteen years. He started in a humble capacity, but has gradually been advanced as his powers and capability have increased until now he is one of the executive officers of the concern. Mr. Snyder displays the enterprising spirit that has been characteristic of the development of the southwest. He was born in Morrilton, Arkansas, September 11, 1887, and is a son of John W. and Anna (Rolf) Snyder, who are now residents of Little Rock. The father was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in February, 1866, and the mother's birth occurred in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, in 1868. Both came to Arkansas in early life and they were married in Morrilton on the 26th of August, 1886. They became parents of five sons and two daughters and the family circle yet remains unbroken by the hand of death. On the 1st of January, 1895, John W. Snyder removed with his family to the capital city, where he is engaged in business as a bookkeeper. His political views are in accord with the principles of the democratic party.

George F. Snyder was a lad of but eight years when the family home was established in Little Rock, where he pursued his education in the public schools. When a youth of sixteen, or in 1903, he became office boy for the Little Rock Board of Trade. During the two succeeding years he occupied the position of bookkeeper with the National Biscuit Company at Little Rock and in 1906 he entered the employ of the Charles F. Penzel Grocer Company as assistant bookkeeper. On the 1st of January, 1907, he was promoted to cashier and credit man and on the 15th of November, 1920, was elected secretary and treasurer, which position he now fills. He is an energetic, progressive and farsighted business man and is accomplishing much in the commercial world by reason of his determination and unabating industry.

On the 14th of June, 1910, in Subiaco, Arkansas, Mr. Snyder was married to Miss Anna Cecilia Spieler, whose birth occurred February 12, 1888, in the town of Spielerville, Logan county, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are members of the Catholic church and he is identified with the Knights of Columbus. His political endorsement is given to the republican party, but he has never been ambitious to hold office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and energy upon his business interests. This consistency of purpose has been one of the salient elements in his advancement and today he ranks with the successful and representative merchants of the capital city.

WILLIAM H. JOHNSON.

The name of William H. Johnson is well known in connection with the industrial and financial interests of Fort Smith, where he is the vice president of the Merchants National Bank. Along the line of steady progression he has reached his present position, learning many valuable lessons in the school of experience and constantly developing his powers until his labors have become a potent force in the city's improvement and material upbuilding. Mr. Johnson came to Arkansas from New England, his birth having occurred in Bridgeport, Vermont, his parents being R. H. and Susan (Smith) Johnson. In early life he became a resident of the middle west and his preliminary education was supplemented by a course of study in Drake University at Des Moines, Iowa.

The year 1896 witnessed the arrival of Mr. Johnson in Arkansas and through the intervening period he has been actively identified with the lumber business and timber interests and eventually became president of the Fort Smith Wagon Company. While a resident of Iowa he engaged in the hardware business and his initial experience along mercantile lines acquainted him with the best methods of conducting his interests. He early recognized the eternal principle that industry wins and industry became the beacon light of his life. He learned to value opportunity correctly and has ever displayed ready discrimination between the essential and non-essential in business affairs, thus developing his interests along constructive lines and he made for himself a most creditable place in connection with the lumber trade of the southwest and with the manufacturing interests of Fort Smith as general manager of the Wagon Company. On January 1, 1917, he became one of the directors of the Merchants National Bank and in 1921 was elected to the vice presidency, so that he is now the second executive officer in this strong financial concern.

Mr. Johnson has also found time and opportunity to promote public interests and has displayed hearty cooperation in all movements for the general good as president of the Business Men's Club. During the World war period he acted as chairman of the county council of defense and was also chairman of the Liberty Loan drives and Red Cross work. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and also with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and in his life exemplifies the beneficent spirit upon which these societies are founded. He has many traits admirable and worthy of all praise and one meeting him face to face would know at once that he is an individual embodying all the elements of what in this country we term a "square" man.

GARDNER K. OLIPHINT.

When old age comes upon an individual, family and friends feel that the end is near and that it is but natural to pass from this life to eternity, but when death comes in young manhood or middle age it always carries with it a sense of the deepest regret and hereavement to the close associates of the one who has died. Gardner K. Oliphint was but thirty-three years of age when the final summons came to him. It is doubtful if there are many men who have crowded so much into a short lifetime. His entire career was one of intense activity and it was the keen mental labor of his early years that undoubtedly hastened the end.

Mr. Oliphint was born in Little Rock, October 13, 1888, and attended the grammar schools in his boyhood days and also assisted in his father's law offices. He early began using a typewriter—in fact he was a child prodigy in this respect. When but four and a half years of age he was taken throughout the state by a traveling man, a friend of the family, and the little lad would demonstrate in store windows how easy it was to use an old L. C. Smith typewriter. When but seven years of age he was taking depositions direct on the machine. By the time he was twelve he had become an expert stenographer and at thirteen years of age he was private stenographer for one of the officials of the Rock Island Railroad. At seventeen he had full charge of the wholesale liquor establishment of the Sandefur-Julian Liquor Company and when a youth of but nineteen he had become a court reporter on the first circuit of Arkansas. Throughout his remaining days Mr. Oliphint continued to act as court reporter. He had won a medal for being the most rapid typist in the state when but twelve years of age and his skill in stenography and typewriting was of great value to him in his reportorial work. He remained for a time in his father's office as stenographer, studying law until he was admitted to the bar in 1913. The same year he was admitted to the bar at Little Rock and continued to engage in practice to the time of his demise. In 1917 he was appointed by Chancellor John E. Martineau as official court reporter for the district embracing Pulaski, Lonoke and White counties, and Judge Martineau granted him permission to practice law in addition to the performance of his other duties. Mr. Oliphint was a member of the firm of Oliphint & Powell, court reporters. After engaging in this line of business alone for a number of years his business had grown to such an extent that he could not handle it alone and he therefore entered into partnership relations with Mr. Powell of St. Louis. He was engaged in the performance of his duties as court reporter when death overtook him. He started to drive his motor car from Little Rock to Pine Bluff, there to engage in court reporting work, but as he and his wife neared Wrightsville he became ill and Mrs. Oliphint returned with him to their home, death occurring a little later.

It was on the 10th of March, 1917, that Mr. Oliphint was married to Miss Helen Nothwang of Little Rock, a daughter of William and Alice Nothwang, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Illinois. Heavy had been the business responsibilities that had devolved upon Mr. Oliphant from his childhood, due to the notable aptitude and capability which he had displayed in early youth. He was a phenomenon in his work—perhaps unequaled by any other in the United States—through the period of his minority. His business and professional activities had brought him a wide acquaintance and he was greatly esteemed by all who knew him because of the many admirable traits of character which were his. He left behind him many friends and his memory will be cherished for years to come.

REV. JOSEPH SCHLATTERER.

Rev. Joseph Schlatterer, pastor of the Holy Rosary Catholic church at Stuttgart, was born in Baden, Germany, in 1853. He studied for the priesthood at the theological seminary of Freiburg, Germany, and was ordained by Bishop Kubel. His first pastorate was in Baden and later he was transferred to Offenburg, while subsequently he labored as a priest at Constance.

It was in 1900 that Father Schlatterer came to Arkansas and took up his abode at Pocahontas as successor to the Rev. Father Sattelle. He also held a pastorate at Knobel, Clay county, and largely through his influence many German farmers went to that locality and settled. In 1910 Father Schlatterer was assigned to the pastorate of the Holy Rosary Catholic church at Stuttgart, a church that was founded about twenty-five years ago and had previously been served by Rev. P. J. McCormick, Rev. J. Plamondon and Rev. J. McQuaid in turn. The parochial school conducted in connection with the church is taught by the Benedictine Sisters and has sixty pupils. There are about eighty-two families that worship at the Holy Rosary church and the work of the church has been thoroughly systematized and is being efficiently carried on under the guidance of Father Schlatterer.

BRADFORD KNAPP.

Bradford Knapp, dean of the College of Agriculture of the State University, is a man who combines high ideals with practical methods. He has accomplished great good in the educational field, especially in connection with the enlightenment of the farmer as to more progressive and adaptable methods of crop production and the care of stock. The value of his service in Arkansas is almost inestimable. Mr. Knapp was born at Vinton, Benton county, Iowa, December 24, 1870, his parents being Seaman A. and Maria E. (Hotchkiss) Knapp and he is a grandson of Bradford Knapp. Seaman A. Knapp became a man of national reputation in connection with agricultural development. He was born in Essex county, New York, December 14, 1833, and after pursuing his early education in private schools he attended the Troy Conference Seminary at Fort Edwards, New York. He also became a student in Union College at Schenectady, New York, and later was professor and associate president of the Troy Conference Seminary. Subsequently he was associated with the management of the Ripley Female College at Pulteney, New York, and in 1866 he removed to the west, settling on a farm at Big Grove, Benton county, Iowa, becoming a prominent factor in the agricultural development of that state. He published the Cedar Rapids farm paper at one time and his influence became a most potent force in agricultural progress. He removed to the west on account of his health and after living on his farm for a time he established his home in Vinton, Iowa, although retaining the ownership and operation of his farm property. In 1869 he was elected superintendent of the College for the Blind, located at Vinton, and remained at the head of the institution until 1874, when he resigned and again engaged in farming. He was one of the early breeders of Berkshire hogs and shorthorn cattle and was a member of the First Iowa Live Stock Breeders' Association. In the latter part of the '70s he began the publication of the Western Stock Journal and Farmer and his continued labors for agricultural progress and improvement brought him more and more constantly into public notice. In 1879 he was elected professor of agriculture in the Iowa State Agricultural College at Ames, and president of the same institution in 1883, and there continued until 1886, when he removed with his family to Lake Charles, Louisiana, and accepted a position with a large corporation engaged in the development of the southwestern section of that state. He devoted twelve years to that work and in 1898 and again in 1901 he was chosen by Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, during his administration, to go to China, Japan and the Philippine Islands as an agricultural explorer to secure available information regarding rice varieties, rice production and rice milling. When the United States acquired Porto Rico, following the Spanish-American war, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson sent Dr. Knapp to the island to make a special report with regard to agricultural resources there. A notable thing concerning Dr. Knapp's important work is that he did not enter upon that line of activity in which he became famous until he was past seventy years of age. His own experimentation and successful operations in rice cultivation in Louisiana, combined with the knowledge that he had gained of the production of the crop in the Orient, afterward made him known as the father of the rice industry in this country. In 1904 he originated the cooperative demonstration work under the United States department of agriculture, which was a plan for practical demonstrations on farms where the farmer received his instruction and applied it on his own farm. This was the origin of the county agent work. He also conceived the idea of forming boys' and girls' clubs in order to stimulate the interest of the young in agricultural development. He began home demonstration for farm women and girls in 1910, along the same practical lines. He had charge of the demonstration work in the south at the time of his death, which occurred in 1911, when he was seventy-seven years of age. To him belongs the credit for having added a new branch of our educational system, for his work resulted in the cooperative extension work under the Smith-Lever Act of 1914 and the employment of county agents, county home demonstration agents and boys' and girls' clubs throughout the whole country. Even foreign countries have adopted the same system of practical teaching.

His son, Bradford Knapp, was educated in the country schools of Iowa and in the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames, in which he remained a student for three years, after which he entered the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and was there graduated with the class of 1892. When he had completed his course he began farming in Louisiana and cultivated a sugar and cotton plantation for two years. He afterward devoted three years to raising rice and in 1892 he and his father sustained heavy losses in the widespread financial panic of that year. Afterward Mr. Knapp entered upon the study of law in the State University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and was there graduated in 1896. Later he practiced law in Iowa for a few years and also engaged in farming in that state. In the meantime he was keeping in close touch with demonstration work as carried on by his father and in 1909 he was made assistant under his father in the agricultural department at Washington, D. C. After his father's death he was appointed his successor and thus upon Mr. Knapp devolved the task of formulating practical plans for continuing the development of the demonstration work. In 1913 Mr. Knapp was sent to Europe to study farm conditions and in his travels covered Belgium, Germany, Denmark, England and Ireland. During the war period he prepared programs on farm production for the Southern States, which were adopted and universally followed. During this period he created the phrase "Safe Farming" to describe such a degree of diversification as will permit the production of food and feed for home needs and the maintenance of soil fertility. While in the department he wrote several pamphlets on safe farming, publishing one such pamphlet each year and his writings on this subject have been widely used and quoted. He also prepared a pamphlet on the agricultural interests of Arkansas in 1920. His labors have been extremely helpful in the various sections of the country where he has been heard on questions relative to agricultural development, or where his writings are known. He remained in active connection with the agricultural department at Washington until 1920, when he came to Fayetteville to accept the position of dean of the College of Agriculture and director of experiment stations of the State University.

In the year 1904 Dr. Bradford Knapp was married to Miss Stella White, a daughter of L. A. White, a farmer of Iowa, and they have become the parents of five children: Bradford, Jr., who at the age of sixteen years is a high school pupil; Marion, fifteen years of age; DeWitt, twelve; and Roger, ten, all in school; and Virginia, who is two years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Knapp belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and he is a Scottish Rite Mason. He also belongs to the Kappa Alpha, a college fraternity, and the Alpha Zeta, an honorary fraternity. He has membership in the Rotary Club and is interested in all those forces which make for progress and improvement along every line of uplift and general development. His duties at the present time are many. He has charge of the state experimental stations and under his supervision a thousand acres of land are being cultivated. One of the experimental stations is located at Fayetteville and the other at Scotts, Arkansas. He has taken much interest in the new method of cooperative marketing the cotton crops. He has devoted his chief study and effort along three lines, the development of extension work, safe farming, and agricultural economics, especially marketing of farm products. Perhaps no better indication of Dr. Knapp and his ideals can be given than by quoting from an article that appeared in the Christian Century of June 23, 1921, as follows: "Dean Bradford Knapp of the Arkansas State College of Agriculture would be named by all informed southerners as the greatest agricultural leader in America. All will admit that he is foremost in the southland. His distinguishing characteristic is what might be called his evangelistic spirit. He is an apostle and prophet of the better rural life. He possesses all the cool acumen of the scientist, all the practical administrative ability of the detached executive, and adds an enthusiasm for his task and a fervency of interest in human life that would honor a social reformer. In fact Dean Knapp is a social reformer; he is not primarily interested in the material factors he so ably promotes—he is interested in them as means to the making of better farm homes, less provincial rural communities, a larger outlook for the farmer and a wider chance for his children to share the good things of life.

"The last thing Bradford Knapp would do would be to give his time merely to help a farmer 'grow more corn to feed more hogs to buy more land to grow more corn' and so on round and round that vicious circle of materialism. He helps make two blades of grass and two strands of wool grow where one grew before as a means to less drudgery, more culture, better schools and churches and a better citizenship. It is a striking fact in American university life that the agricultural college faculties take an interest in the church to a greater degree than any other faculty in the university circle. And there is no other single profession, not even excepting the teachers and Red Cross nurses, that shows more interest in rural churches than do the county farm agents. Dean Knapp says 'Emancipate the farmer's wife and you will emancipate the farmer; solve her problems and you will have solved the rural problem.'"

THOMAS HUMPHREYS.

Thomas Humphreys, mayor of Bradford, to which office he was called through a recognition of his public spirit and devotion to high municipal ideals, was born in Pike county, Ohio, on the 1st of November, 1864, and is a son of J. F. M. and Nancy (Pillers) Humphreys, who were natives of West Virginia and Ohio, respectively. In tracing the ancestral line it is found that the family has long been established on American soil. The great-grandparents lived in West Virginia, where Howell Humphrey, the grandfather, was born. He was employed in connection with iron work at the furnaces and he also engaged in flat boating on the rivers. For some time, however, he was foreman in different iron works in West Virginia, but eventually removed to Ohio, where he carried on farming and fruit raising. He married Edith McCracken, a native of West Virginia and both departed this life in Ohio at an advanced age. The maternal ancestry is one of long connection with the Buckeye state, for the grandfather, Cyrus Pillers, was born in Ohio, where he followed farming and fruit raising and also operated a still, but died in early manhood. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Polly Beakman, lived to an advanced age. In their family were nine daughters and one son and those living are: Abbie, Nancy, Elizabeth, Lou and Cyrus. Both the parents died in Ohio.

Having attained his majority, J. F. M. Humphreys, then a resident of Ohio, turned his attention to the sawmill business, which he followed in both Pike and Scioto counties, Ohio. He constructed and operated the mills there and also engaged in general lumber manufacturing. He likewise owned land and followed farming in the Buckeye state and in 1885 he removed to Bradford, Arkansas, bringing a sawmill with him. This he put in operation in Jackson county, where he purchased timber land and cutting the trees, sawed the timber. He also manufactured wagon stocks, shingles and lumber of various kinds and continued the operation of his sawmill until his death, which occurred in 1895, when he was fifty-eight years of age, his natal day having been January 13, 1837. Ere his demise he had cleared a half section of land, which he placed under cultivation, devoting it to general farming and stock raising. He thus contributed to the material development of the county and was a man of marked business enterprise and capability. His wife, who was born in 1833, survived him until 1899. They belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Humphreys always voted with the democratic party. Their family numbered six children, five of whom are living: Edgar, a farmer of Bradford; P. H., who was a merchant of Bradford for some time but now follows farming; Thomas; Mary, who became the wife of W. S. Clark and died in Ohio; J. F. M., a farmer of Bradford; and Minnie, the wife of T. E. Hickman, a druggist, postmaster and farmer of Pleasant Plains, Arkansas.

In the acquirement of his education, Thomas Humphreys attended the country schools of Pike county, Ohio, for two or three months in the year, having to walk about three miles to school, where he studied his lessons sitting on homemade benches of split logs, while the other furnishings of the little schoolhouse were equally primitive. He remained with his parents to the age of twenty-seven years and came with them to Arkansas. He afterward purchased land which was partly improved and began the further development and cultivation of a farm, situated on the White river in Jackson county. There he continued until 1905, when he bought a sawmill in White county and devoted the succeeding six years to its operations and the manufacture of wagon stock. At length he sold his interests in the business to his brother, E. L. Humphreys, and purchased forty acres of land near Bradford, since which time he has engaged extensively in the cultivation of strawberries, employing the most modern and scientific methods in the care of his crops.

Mr. Humphreys was married to Miss Margaret Shelley, a native of this state and a daughter of R. J. Shelley, a farmer. They now have four children: Frankie, who is employed as a stenographer by the Frisco Railroad at Springfield, Missouri; Irene, the wife of James W. Durham, a farmer of Bradford; Thelma, who died in 1910 at the age of seven years; and Harold T., who was born in 1912 and completes the family.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphreys are consistent followers of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. He has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party and his fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, have frequently called him to office. He served for nine years on the school board and was president of the board of commissioners of White and Jackson counties, having in charge the road improvement in district No. 1. For 10 years he has been the mayor of Bradford, his reelection standing in incontrovertible proof of his capability, fidelity and the trust reposed in him. Over the record of his official career there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil, for at all times he has been actuated by a most earnest desire to serve the city, giving to it a practical businesslike administration during which he has introduced many needed reforms and improvements in the methods of managing city affairs.

G. A. WARD.

No matter in how much fantastic theorizing one may indulge as to the cause of success, investigation into the lives of those who have won honorable prosperity shows that their advancement is due not to any unusual combination of circumstances but to the fact that they have improved opportunities and that industry, determination and honorable dealing are salient forces in winning success. Such has been the record of G. A. Ward, who since 1916 has been owner and editor of the Conway County Unit, one of the most enterprising newspapers in this state. He is not a native son of Arkansas, for he was born in Orange county, New York, on the 15th of January, 1857, a son of Alexander and Sarah Ward. His father was a native of England and came to this country in early life. He engaged in farming in New York state and there met and married his wife. G. A. Ward was the only child born to their union. His mother was a native of New York state.

G. A. Ward had but little opportunity for education, attending the country schools for a period of about six years. When twelve years of age he started out in life on his own account and obtained a position in the printing office of the Bath Times, Steuben county, New York, which was his introduction into the newspaper business. He then went to Bingham, New York, where he worked on a paper for several years as a compositor and the next eight years he spent in working on papers in various places. For some time he was on a paper in Dodd City, Arkansas, and then removed to Yellville, Arkansas, and discontinued his newspaper activities for some time. He engaged in the construction of a telephone system from that place to Forsyth, Missouri, and he had charge of the business there, which was known as the Yellville Telephone Company. The call of the newspaper proved too great, however, and he resigned his position and removed to Leslie, where he worked on the Leslie News. For some time he was on the Searcy News and later he engaged in farming near that place for two years. He farmed near Nettleton for one year but finally disposed of his land interests and in 1916 came to Morrillton, where he has since resided. For one year he was employed on the Democrat and subsequently established the Conway County Unit, in the conduct of which paper he is now active. He installed all modern machinery, cylinder presses, linotype machines and other equipment and he prints a semi-weekly paper, having a circulation of some two thousand. The paper is conducted on a progressive and independent basis and it is one of the best papers in the county. Mr. Ward also does commercial printing and book printing. He is tireless in his devotion to his newspaper interests and the success he has achieved in this connection is the result of his own intelligently directed efforts and innate ability.

In 1901 at Yellville, this state, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Ward and Miss Anna Wood, a daughter of Joseph Wood, a successful agriculturist near Flippin. To their union six children have been born: Marina, the wife of W. C. Morgan, a resident of Morrillton, Ark.; Burleigh, employed in the office of the Conway County Unit; Ruby, also employed in the office of the paper; Evelyn and Anna Sue, at home; and Bernice, whose demise occurred at the age of twelve years.

Mr. Ward follows an independent course in politics, giving his support to the man he thinks best fitted for the office without regard for party principles. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and he is a member of the State Press Association. Mr. Ward is rightly entitled to the proud American title of self-made man and those who meet him find that he possesses many of the qualities which awaken admiration and give rise to warm friendships. He started out in the business world with no false ideas concerning the way of attaining success. He early realized that diligence is the root of all honorable advancement and by reason of his persistent purpose and the skill which he has constantly displayed (for he has continually studied the newspaper business in its various phases), he has gained the liberal patronage which is accorded him and which is certainly well merited.

F. D. WATSON.

F. D. Watson, automobile dealer of Huntsville, handling the Ford cars, was born in Hall county, Georgia, near Gainesville, in 1890. He is a son of W. M. and Nancy (Hausen) Watson, who were also natives of Georgia and on coming to Arkansas in 1892 settled in Madison County. There the father purchased a farm, on which he spent his remaining days, his death occurring in 1918. His father was David Watson, who was born in South Carolina, but in early life removed to Georgia, where he died at the advanced age of ninety years. He had served under General Longstreet as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war. The maternal grandfather of F. D. Watson was David Hausen, who was born in Georgia, and came to Arkansas, where his remaining days were passed, his death occurring when he had reached the age of eighty-eight. His daughter, Mrs. Nancy Watson, survives and is now living with her son. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which her husband also belonged and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. They became parents of eight children: Minnie, the wife of Calvin Stanfield, residing on a farm in Madison county; Garland, a farmer, living in Fayetteville, Arkansas; J. A., a salesman with the Bear State Oil Company at Springdale, Arkansas; E. M., whose home is on a farm near Fayetteville; F. D., of this review; Paul, a teacher in the schools of Madison county; Luther, living on the old homestead farm; and Lee, who is living with his brother, F. D. Watson, and attending school.

In his youthful days F. D. Watson mastered the branches of learning taught in the schools of Huntsville and then took up the profession of teaching, which he followed for eight years, imparting readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired. He then purchased a store which he conducted for three years and in 1918 he established the Ford plant and has continued in this business to the present time. He not only maintains a Ford agency but handles all kinds of supplies and his business is now one of large proportions.

In 1910 Mr. Watson was married to Miss Addie Dyer, who was born in Huntsville, a daughter of J. W. Dyer, a well-known farmer of Madison county. Mr. and Mrs. Watson are the parents of four children: Era, Carl, Mildred and Stanley, all yet in school. Mr. Watson and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal church, and he belongs also to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has always voted the democratic ticket since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, but has never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs. His close application, unfaltering energy and thoroughness have been the salient features in the success which has come to him, making him one of the representative young business men of the city.

D. W. GOLDSTEIN, M. D.

Dr. D. W. Goldstein, who is connected with the Cooper clinic at Fort Smith, his activities covering the departments of radium, therapy and dermatology, was born in Greenville, Mississippi, in 1888, his parents being Merx and Rosa (Wolf) Goldstein. He obtained a high school education, after which he entered the University of Tennessee for the study of medicine, having mentally reviewed the broad field of business in order to select a vocation which he believed would prove congenial and profitable. Attracted by the practice of medicine and surgery, he matriculated in the University of Tennessee, winning his M. D. degree in 1910. He afterward went abroad for postgraduate work, studying in Vienna, Berlin and London. He also studied in Philadelphia and New York, and in his practice has always specialized in dermatology, having gained a marked degree of efficiency in that field.

In May, 1917, Dr. Goldstein enlisted for service in the World war and was commissioned a first lieutenant at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. He was sent to Camp Gordon at Atlanta, Georgia, as battalion surgeon of the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Infantry, and in April, 1918, went overseas. While in France he was promoted to a captaincy in the Eighty-second Division. He was with the field troops in the offensive and defensive sectors on the western front, being stationed at Toul and at Maubache. He was also on active duty in the offensive at St. Mihiel, in the Meuse-Argonne and was with the combat troops of the Three Hundred and Twenty-eighth Infantry. Later he was made regimental surgeon of that command and received a citation for distinguished service in rendering first aid under fire. He met all of the experiences of modern warfare and exerted his professional skill to the utmost in rendering aid to wounded and stricken comrades, never considering his own health or safety when he could make his labors of avail in ministering to the soldiers of his regiment. In June, 1919, he was sent to Camp Pike, Arkansas, and was recommended for a promotion to the rank of major.

With his return to Fort Smith Dr. Goldstein joined Cooper clinic and has since done important work in this connection in radium, therapy and dermatology. He has at all times kept abreast with the trend of modern professional thought, research, investigation and progress, and is accounted one of the able young physicians of western Arkansas.

Dr. Goldstein was united in marriage to Miss Florence Pahotski. Beyond the interests of his home, outside activities make little claim upon the time and attention of Dr. Goldstein, for he has always preferred to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his professional interests, and he discharges his duties with a marked sense of conscientious obligation.

HERBERT P. LEWIS.

Herbert P. Lewis, who owns and edits the Gravette News-Herald, one of the leading newspapers of Arkansas, has also gained prominence as an author, possessing literary ability of a high order. He was born in Minnesota, February 24, 1874, a son of Leland B. and Emily (Chreviston) Lewis, the former born at Cornish Flats, New Hampshire, August 23, 1826, and the latter at Racine, Wisconsin, in 1843. When a young man of twenty-three years, the father joined the rush of gold seekers who made their way to California in 1849, and subsequently he went to Minnesota, where his marriage occurred. He resided in that state from 1859 until 1891, when he came to Arkansas, settling at Sulphur Springs, in Benton county, where he followed the occupation of farming. He was a Freethinker in his religious views, and politically he was a democrat with independent tendencies. He died at Gravette, Arkansas, at the age of eighty-three years, and Mrs. Lewis died August 14, 1921, at her home in California. She was a member of the Baptist church. They became the parents of eight children; one son and a daughter, are deceased. Those living are: Edward, who was formerly engaged in the jewelry business at Fairmont, Minnesota, but is now operating a fruit farm at Santa Ana, California; Charles F., a leading physician of Austin, Minnesota, owning a clinic there in association with two other members of the profession; Alvin, who is assisting his brother Edward in conducting his California farm; Herbert P., of this review; George, a resident of Willis, Kansas, and Orin J., who resided with his mother in Los Angeles, California. The paternal grandfather, Thomas Lewis, was of Irish descent, and his demise occurred in one of the New England states. The maternal grandfather, William Chreviston, was born in Pennsylvania, and prior to the Civil war went to Minnesota, where he spent his remaining years.

Herbert P. Lewis acquired his education in the rural schools of Minnesota and the high school at Fairmont, that state. Twenty-five years ago he became a newspaper correspondent and has gained prominence in this connection, contributing articles to the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette and also to The Democrat and other leading publications. Fifteen years before starting his newspaper he was connected with business interests of Gravette as a photographer and jeweler, but for the past fourteen years has devoted the greater part of his time to journalism. He owns and edits the Gravette News-Herald, which he is conducting along the lines of modern and progressive newspaper education, and its circulation is steadily increasing. He is a trenchant, forceful, scholarly writer and has become well known as the author of Uncle Eb and also The Man From Arkansas, written in defense of Arkansas and in humorous style.

In 1896 Mr. Lewis was united in marriage to Miss Rosemonde Cooper, a native of Kansas and a daughter of George W. Cooper, who served as a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war. Mrs. Lewis was educated at Vinita Academy of Vinita, Oklahoma, and by her marriage she has become the mother of four children: H. Wyrick, the eldest of the family, is his father's assistant in business. Previous to the World war he was stationed with the United States troops on the Mexican border, and on the 8th of September, 1918, he reached France, being attached to the One Hundred and Forty-fourth Arkansas Regiment. He enlisted from Fayetteville, Arkansas, and became corporal and battery clerk. He volunteered for service in company with another young man from Gravette, and in 1919 returned to the United States. Jesse D., an automobile mechanic residing at Taos, New Mexico, is the only member of the family who has married. L. Frank is attending the Gravette high school, and Sadie Lea is also in school.

The family are all members of the Christian church, with the work of which Mr. Lewis has been actively identified for a period of twenty-five years. He has served as clerk and elder and for fourteen years has been superintendent of the Bible school, working untiringly to upbuild the interests of the church. His fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has taken the Rebekah degree. He is a democrat in his political views, and during his residence in Gravette has been called upon to fill a number of public positions, serving at clerk of the school board for nine years, and he has also been city clerk. That he is public spirited and progressive is indicated in the fact that during the entire period of his residence here he has acted as secretary of the Commercial Club. In 1920 he spent seven months in Little Rock as publicity director for Jim G. Ferguson. For several years he has been a member of the Authors and Composers' Society of that city. He has been a close student of the questions and issues of the day as affecting the welfare of community, state and nation, and has made the News-Herald the champion of every movement tending toward the upbuilding of Benton county along intellectual, political, material and moral lines.

ROBERT WARREN QUARLES.

Robert Warren Quarles, a dental surgeon practicing at Van Buren, his professional standing being indicated in the fact that he has been honored with the presidency of the Arkansas State Dental Association, was born at College Hill, Mississippi, in 1853, a son of J. J. and Sallie E. (Buford) Quarles. The father was graduated with first honor in the first class that completed the course in the University of Mississippi and afterward became a professor in the Synodical College at La Grange, Tennessee. He continued his teaching there until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Confederate army from Mississippi and served until his death, which occurred in a hospital at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1863, in the midst of the conflict.

Dr. Quarles was reared and educated in his native city and in young manhood became a student and assistant in the office of Dr. J. S. McCorkle of Oxford, Mississippi. In 1884 he came to Van Buren, where he has since followed his profession, and for many years has been accorded an extensive practice. He has kept informed concerning the latest researches and discoveries of the dental profession through his membership in the Fort Smith Dental Society, the Northwest District Dental Society and the Arkansas State Dental Association, and in the last named has filled the offices of secretary and president. He likewise has membership with the Knights of Pythias.

In October, 1888, Dr. Quarles was married to Miss Minnie Hynes, a daughter of Charles J. Hynes, editor of the Warrensburg Democrat, published at Warrensburg, Missouri. R. S. Hynes, an uncle of Mrs. Quarles, was the founder of the Crawford County Bank in Van Buren. Dr. and Mrs. Quarles have become parents of four children: Ashwell J., Donald A., Kathryn E. and Virginia C. Ashwell J., who was graduated from Cornell University, is now residing in Montreal, Canada, where he has charge of a department in a large machinery jobbing house, their trade extending to all parts of Canada, so that the position of Ashwell J. Quarles is an important one. Donald A., a Yale graduate, who completed his course at the university with a record in mathematics and entered the first training camp organized in the United States at Fort Benjamin Harrison, coming out as first lieutenant, and he afterward became identified with the Rainbow Division, while subsequently he was promoted to captain and transferred to the First Division in the Army of Occupation. He had gone overseas to receive special training in artillery given by the French and assisted in establishing an artillery training school for American artillery officers in France. Since his return he has become identified with the experimental laboratory of the Western Electric Company in New York city. Of the daughters, Kathryn E. is now the wife of Lawrence Harrison, a minister in Ontario, Canada, while Virginia C. has just graduated from the Fort Smith high school.

Such in brief is the history of Dr. Quarles and his family, who have long occupied an enviable social position, while in his profession the Doctor has made steady progress. He is also regarded as one of the public-spirited citizens of Van Buren, giving ready and helpful support to all those plans and projects which have to do with the progress and improvement of city, county and state.

WILLIAM J. WAGGONER.

William J. Waggoner, filling the position of prosecuting attorney of Lonoke, was born in Lonoke county in 1889, his parents being Thomas J. and Nancy (Munsch) Waggoner. The father was a native of Tennessee and belonged to one of the old southern families. The mother was a daughter of Nicholas Munsch. Thomas J. Waggoner and his wife resided in Illinois for some time after their marriage, making their home near Decatur, but about thirty years ago came to Arkansas, first settling in White county, but later removing to Lonoke county. They became the parents of a family of ten children, five of whom are living: William J.; John; Jess; Joseph; and Viola, the wife of Charles Hudson.

Reared under the parental roof, William J. Waggoner pursued his education in the schools of Lonoke until he had completed his high school course. A review of the broad field of business led him to the determination to make the practice of law his life work, and with this end in view he became a law student in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1913. He then located in Lonoke for practice, entering upon the active work of the profession in which he has made steady advancement. While progress at the bar is proverbially slow, he soon gained recognition of his ability, and his powers have constantly expanded through experience and broad study, for he is most careful in the preparation of his cases. He is also numbered among the law-makers of the state, for he served in the legislature in 1915 and 1917, nor did he lightly regard the duties that devolved upon him in this connection. In the latter year he was made a delegate to the constitutional convention.

Mr. Waggoner also has a military chapter in his life record, for he entered the army at Camp Leon Springs, Texas, and was commissioned a second lieutenant, after which he was assigned to duty at Camp Gordon, Georgia, and later at Camp Pike, Arkansas, as an infantry officer. He went overseas on the 24th of August, 1917, and was assigned to the Thirty-second Division. He was in reserve at St. Mihiel, in the offensive in the Argonne Forest and was wounded in battle, being thus incapacitated for further service. His wound was sustained on the 30th of September in the drive on Montfaucon, his left hand and his left leg both being injured. Later he was assigned to the One Hundred and Seventh Ammunition Train of the Thirty-second Division and was stationed at Heimbach, Germany, for two and a half months, with the Army of Occupation. Subsequently he returned to the United States, making the voyage on the battleship Louisiana and reaching the American shore on the 13th of May, 1919. He was then sent to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and afterward to Camp Pike, Arkansas, where he received his discharge on the 27th of August, 1919. Following his return home Mr. Waggoner was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney and by reelection is still filling this position. He is proving a splendid official, prompt and faithful in the discharge of his duties, and his conscientious service, coupled with his ability as a lawyer, has won him high endorsement.

On the 14th of February, 1919, Mr. Waggoner was married to Miss Ruth Bradford, a daughter of John C. and Lula (Eagle) Bradford of Lonoke and a granddaughter of Judge H. T. Bradford. Mr. Waggoner belongs to the Masonic fraternity, having attained the thirty-second degree, and is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He belongs to the Christian church, while his wife is a Baptist. They are well known socially, having many warm friends in this part of the state, and their record at all times commends them to the confidence and high regard of those who know them.

G. C. ELLIS.

The high educational standards to which Arkansas is rapidly approaching are fully maintained in the efforts of G. C. Ellis, county superintendent of schools in Scott county. Actuated by a laudable ambition, he is doing everything in his power to promote the interests of the schools and during his incumbency in this position has introduced various improvements. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Rockwood, December 7, 1884, his parents being John and Mary Elizabeth (Bacon) Ellis, who are also natives of Tennessee, in which state they were reared and married. The father was a son of Monroe Ellis, a native of Tennessee, who owned a large plantation there, together with about one hundred negroes. The grandfather in the maternal line was John Bacon, who was likewise born in Tennessee and was a direct descendant of Nathaniel Bacon. John Bacon served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war and was badly wounded. In 1899 John and Mary Elizabeth (Bacon) Ellis left Tennessee and came to Arkansas, settling upon a farm in Scott county, where they still make their home. They are stanch supporters of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in which they hold membership, and in politics Mr. Ellis is a democrat. He served in the Confederate army under General Joseph Wheeler for four years and on one occasion was slightly wounded and also was captured, but soon afterward was exchanged. To Mr. and Mrs. John Ellis there were born the following children: G. C., whose name introduces this review; Claude, a farmer living at Mansfield, Arkansas; Jarvis, who married Henry Presson and is located at Dayton, Arkansas; Mae, the wife of Leota Waters, a farmer of Huntington, Arkansas; Cole Y., who is a school teacher at Mansfield, and Jane, who married Earl McDonald and lives at Shawnee, Oklahoma.

G. C. Ellis pursued his education in the Arkansas State Normal School at Conway and in the State Normal at Tyler, Texas. He took up the profession of teaching in 1905 and continued to engage therein until elected county superintendent of schools in Scott county in 1918. Throughout the intervening period to the present he has made a most excellent record in office, and the county is to be congratulated upon having at the head of its school system one who is so thoroughly informed concerning modern methods and who is so thoroughly interested in bringing about the best possible conditions in the schools over which he has supervision.

In 1907 Mr. Ellis was married to Miss Willie Simpson, who was born in Scott county, Arkansas, a daughter of S. W. Simpson, a native of this state and now living at Mansfield, where he owns considerable land. To Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have been born three sons, Byron, Weston and Merrill, all in school.

Mr. Ellis is a democrat in his political views. He has membership with the Masons, with the Odd Fellows and the Junior Order of American Mechanics, and he is likewise a consistent and faithful follower of the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His labors have been a potent force in bringing about intellectual and moral progress in his community and he has accomplished a work the results of which are immeasurable.

HON. ANTHONY HALL.

Hon. Anthony Hall, lawyer and lawmaker, who in years of practice in the courts of Arkansas has left indelibly his impress upon the history of the state bar and also as a lawmaker upon the legislative enactment of the state, serving in the house of representatives during the forty-third general assembly, and is a splendid example of those men of foreign birth who, coming to America, have espoused American principles and have stood for the highest standards of American manhood and chivalry. Mr. Hall was born in Biersted, Allborg, Denmark, in September, 1857, and is a son of August Peter and Inger Marie (Mueller) Hall. The father was born in Randers, Denmark, in January, 1808, and the mother in Allborg, in 1830. They were married at Biersted in 1850, and in the year 1870 August Peter Hall brought his family to the new world. Notwithstanding he was then sixty-two years of age, he had the hardihood to sail with his wife and children for the United States, and after a brief period spent in Illinois came to Arkansas, where he devoted his attention to farming until his death in September, 1878. He became a naturalized citizen and the sterling worth of his character commanded for him the respect and confidence of all who knew him. His wife died in November, 1875. They were the parents of five children: Harold, August, Anthony, Mette and Nelson.

Anthony Hall was a lad of thirteen years when he accompanied his parents to the new world. He had pursued his education in his native country up to that time, mastering not only the common branches of learning but also studying sciences and history under a private tutor. After the family reached Illinois he became a pupil in the public schools of that state, eagerly applying himself to his studies for a year. Circumstances later kept him out of school for a time but in 1879 and 1880 he was again an apt and eager pupil in the public schools. In the meantime, however, he had removed with his parents to Arkansas and this state has since been his home. In two years, from 1880 until 1882, he completed the regular four years' high school course in Dardanelle. Already he was planning to become a member of the bar and he eagerly availed himself of the opportunity of pursuing his studies under the preceptorship of George S. Cunningham, then judge of the circuit court. In 1884 he successfully passed the required examination admitting him to the bar and in the following year he opened a law office in Paris, where he has remained. In less than a year after taking up his abode in Paris he was made deputy prosecuting attorney of Logan county. In this connection a contemporary writer has said that the fact that he was called to this position "speaks for itself of Mr. Hall's personality. Nor has the early good impression which he made upon his neighbors ever suffered a reversal in almost forty years of his career among them. Few men, indeed, are more genuinely esteemed than he for unflinching integrity and kindness of character. He is the sort of man to whom the so-called honors of public office make no appeal; in accepting for a period of four years the mayoralty of Paris, he was simply and solely actuated by a high sense of duty to society; in the selfsame spirit did he accede to the wishes of public opinion—and only when drafted for the post—to represent at once the county of Logan and the state of Arkansas in the house of the forty-third general assembly." His official record is one over which there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil. He has always been a stalwart believer in democratic principles and his opinions have been the result of thorough study and investigation of the political issues and conditions. Therefore by reason of his high sense of the duties of citizenship he has been impelled to perform any task assigned him for the good of his party. He served continuously on the democratic central committee of Logan county from 1886 until 1918, or for a period of almost a third of a century, and acted both as secretary and chairman of the committee. In 1918 he was elected to the state central committee and again he rendered signal service to the party in this connection by reason of his executive ability, his keen insight into situations and his recognized standards of honor in all matters of citizenship. As a lawyer he has long stood in the front rank. While advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, he soon won recognition of his ability and his powers have been continually augmented through his comprehensive reading and study.

On the 28th of September, 1887, Mr. Hall was married to Miss Julia Idelle Daniel, who was born in Alabama, in May, 1867, and is a daughter of Dr. John E. and Eliza J. (Teague) Daniel, who resided at Roseville, Logan county, after removing to Arkansas. Mrs. Hall is a graduate of Hendrix College and by her marriage she has become the mother of five children: Edgar A., who died at the age of eighteen years; Marie; Daniel A.; Julia Lucille and Elizabeth Pearl. The son, Daniel A., volunteered for service in the World war and after training at Camp Beauregard, was sent to France as a second lieutenant in the outfit of the One Hundred and Forty-first Machine Gun Battalion. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are active and faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He has given generously of his time and means in support of the work, has acted as chairman of the building committee and also as trustee. A recognition of the threefold nature of man, physical, intellectual and moral, has led to his earnest support of all agencies or projects which make for development and improvement of the individual, that he may serve the highest purposes of life and maintain the most advanced standards of individual worth and of public good. His own career has been one of signal service and usefulness to his fellowmen and he is today accounted one of the prominent lawyers and legislators of the state.

ROSCOE GREEN JENNINGS, M. D.

It is in the pioneer history of a community, where unusual demands are made and where opportunities and advantages are few, that the real nature of the individual stands most strongly forth. Meeting every exigency and every requirement with the strength that comes from steadfast purpose and high ideals, Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings, pioneer physician of Little Rock, made for himself a prominent place in the affections of the people and in the regard of all who knew him. He was born at Leeds, Kennebec county, now Androscoggin, Maine, June 11, 1833, and was the fourth son and fifth child in the family of Perez Smith and Johanna (Lane) Jennings. The father, a man of considerable local prominence, devoted his attention to farming and served for some time as justice of the peace, rendering decisions that were strictly fair and impartial. He was a son of Samuel Jennings, a native of Salem, Massachusetts, who figured prominently in that historic old town. The great-grandfather had settled in Salem at an early period. He, too, was Samuel Jennings and was one of three brothers who came to America in 1703, emigrating from England to the new world. He held an important office under King George III while this country was still numbered among the colonial possessions of Great Britain. He suffered confiscation of his estate by reason of his loyalty to the crown and was forced to flee into the wilderness of the "eastern territory" which afterward became the state of Maine. The mother of Dr. Jennings was a daughter of James Lane, a lumberman of Fayette, Maine, who married a member of the well known Ledbetter family, whose representatives were particularly prominent because of their physical stature. General Ledbetter of Confederate fame belongs to one branch of this family.

The boyhood days of Dr. Jennings were spent on the banks of the Androscoggin river, working on his father's farm in the summer seasons and devoting the winter months to the acquirement of a public school education. He early learned the value of earnest toil and discharged his duties promptly and faithfully in every relation. When but seventeen years of age he had become so proficient in his studies that he was chosen to teach the school in which he had previously been a student, his salary being but fourteen dollars per month without board. His earnings as a teacher enabled him later to attend school in Wayne village, where he came under the instruction of Oliver O. Howard, subsequently a major general in the army. Dr. Jennings afterward attended the academy at Monmouth and also the Kent Hill Seminary at Readfield, Maine, and his work as a teacher in the summer seasons enabled him to meet the expenses of his advanced education. As he pursued his studies it was always with the hope of entering Boudoin College, but his plans in this direction were frustrated by his father's death in 1851. Up to that time he had never been more than twenty miles from home, but he determined to see something of the world, and borrowing one hundred dollars, he made his way to New York city, afterward to Pennsylvania and eventually to Port Golden, New Jersey, where he took charge of a boys' school noted for the rough treatment accorded former teachers. He met the situation with determination, proved himself the conqueror of the unruly pupils and continued to teach there for four months, after which he entered upon preparation for the medical profession under Dr. William Cole. Soon afterward, however, he returned to Maine, where he further studied under the preceptorship of Dr. Alonza Garcelon, who was later governor of that state. He next attended a course of lectures in the Dartmouth Medical College and continued his studies in the Medical School of Maine at Brunswick, from which he was graduated with honors in 1856.

Dr. Jennings at once made his way westward and after living at several places for a short time, took up his abode in Lapeer, Michigan, where he successfully practiced until December, 1857, when he became a resident of New Orleans. He afterward made his way to Washington, Arkansas, where his eldest brother, Hon. Orville Jennings, had previously established his home. Dr. Jennings formed a partnership with Dr. Jett, one of the pioneer physicians, and entered upon regular practice, while later he also became interested in the ownership and conduct of a drug store. He became attached to the institutions and ideals of the south and in 1861 was appointed a surgeon of the Twelfth Arkansas Infantry in the Confederate army. In August of that year the regiment was sent to Memphis, Tennessee, and afterward to Columbus, Kentucky, subsequent to which time they participated in the battle of Belmont. In December the regiment was ordered to New Madrid, Missouri, where it remained during that winter and until March, 1862, when the place was captured by General Pope. His regiment, already greatly reduced by disease, escaped to the Tennessee side of the Mississippi and Dr. Jennings was ordered with the transport of one hundred and fifty sick and wounded past the Federal batteries at Point Pleasant, at night, to Memphis, which he reached safely. As the hospitals at this place were full, he was then ordered to Vicksburg, Mississippi, with an additional transport and one hundred and fifty men sick and wounded, where he placed one hundred and fifty in the city and the same number in the Marine Hospital, and then he rejoined the army in time to take part in the evacuation of Island No. 10 and witness the capture of most of his regiment. On April 7, 1862, near Tiptonville, Tennessee, he was captured with others of his regiment but escaped and for two weeks wandered in the bogs and swamps of that region, finally making his way to Memphis and then to Corinth, and reported to the surgeon general of Beauregard's army. He was assigned to duty as surgeon of Jackson's brigade, Withers' Division of Trapiers' Corps. After the battle of Farmington, in May, he was attacked by camp fever and was unfit for duty many weeks. In August he returned to Washington, Arkansas, and remained until the following spring, when he was able to rejoin his command at Jackson, Mississippi, but here was stricken with typhoid pernicious rheumatic fever and forced to resign his commission. He returned to his home and in March, 1864, was given permission to pass the lines to Little Rock, then in possession of the Federal forces, for treatment. Great sickness prevailed in the camps there and after a partial recovery he was offered the position of contract surgeon in the United States army. He accepted and served with satisfaction till the end of the war, later continuing duty in the Freedmen's Hospital.

In the meantime Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings had established a large private practice and had rendered valuable aid to the families of absent Confederate soldiers.

He figured prominently in connection with the public life of the community and in 1874, during the Brooks-Baxter difficulties, Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings gave his support to the latter and was commissioned surgeon general of the Arkansas troops. During the period of early development in Little Rock there was built on the block bounded by Broadway, Arch, Sixth and Seventh streets a beautiful southern home containing many spacious rooms and surrounded by attractive shrubbery. It soon became the property of Orville Jennings, the circuit attorney of the state and a brother of Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings. The former was a warm friend of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, who was at one time his law partner and for whom he stumped the state of Illinois during one of the colonel's political campaigns. Subsequent to the demise of Orville Jennings, which occurred in his handsome home in Little Rock, the property came into the possession of Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings, who leased it for several years as the Arkansas governor's mansion and as such it is still known to the older residents of the city. During the time of the Civil war it was used as a hospital for wounded soldiers. The property is still in possession of the Jennings family, being now owned by Mrs. James Arthur Bowman, the only daughter of Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings.

On the 10th of April, 1869, only a few years after his return from the army, Dr. Roscoe Green Jennings was married to Miss Gertrude Elizabeth Elliott, a native of Camden, Arkansas, and a representative of a pioneer family of that locality. Her father, William A. Elliott, belonged to a prominent Georgia family, while her mother was a lineal descendant of Daniel Boone, the famous hunter and pioneer who carried civilization into the wilds of Kentucky when it was known as "the dark and bloody ground." Dr. and Mrs. Jennings had three children: Octavia, the wife of James Arthur Bowman; Orville; and Elliott Crews. The family circle was broken by the hand of death when in 1899 Dr. Jennings departed this life. A review of his life shows that he was the possessor of many splendid qualities and that he was a substantial contributing factor to the upbuilding and progress of the state. He held to the highest standards in his profession and was a prominent member of the City, County and State Medical Societies, all of which honored him with the presidency. He became one of the founders of the medical department of the State University and served as secretary and executive officer thereof for thirteen years and was long one of the lecturers of the department. In 1869 he became a member of the American Medical Association and retained his connection therewith to the time of his death. For thirteen years he served as examining surgeon for the United States pension bureau and he was also a member of the state board of health, acting during a part of the time as its secretary. He ever stood for progress and improvement in all that had to do with the welfare and upbuilding of city and state. He was active in connection with bridge building and pile driving for fifty miles along the Texas Pacific Railroad from Dallas to Wills' Point, Texas, in 1870-71, being one of the contractors in connection with this important project.

Nor did Dr. Jennings neglect the higher and holier duties of life. He was a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal church and belonged to the Royal Arcanum. In politics he voted with the democratic party but was never an aggressive partisan. He continued in the practice of his profession at Little Rock for many years and as time passed he gave more and more of his attention to charity work in connection with professional duties. No one sought his aid in vain, his broad humanitarianism prompting him to put forth a helping hand wherever he believed he could be of real assistance to a fellow traveler on life's journey. Thus it was that he became closely endeared to the community and few men have passed on so deeply and widely regretted as Dr. Jennings, whose memory is enshrined in the hearts of many who knew him, while the story of his good deeds is cherished by all who came within the intimate circle of his friendship.

RUDOLPH NEY.

Rudolph Ney, manager and part owner of the Boston Store at Fort Smith, Arkansas, has been identified with the commercial interests of this city for a period of twenty-eight years, or since 1893, and in this interval he has made steady progress, contributing not only to his own success but also to the commercial advancement and upbuilding of the city. He dates his residence in America from about 1880, having come to this country from the Palatinate, where his birth occurred. He located first in New York city, where he resided for a time and then crossed the continent to Colorado, where he remained until he came to Fort Smith in the year 1893. His previous experience along commercial lines and his recognized ability led to his appointment to the position of department manager in the Boston Store when he came to Fort Smith. In the intervening years he has steadily advanced as the result of the capability and efficiency which he has displayed and is now general manager and part owner of this store, which was founded in 1879 by the firm of Baer Brothers & Fuller, the partners in the undertaking being Julius Baer, Sigmund Baer and Aaron Fuller. At a later period the business was incorporated with Aaron Fuller as the president, H. Kaufman as vice president, G. E. Berson as treasurer and Rudolph Ney as secretary. The store has been gradually enlarged until it has become one of the leading mercantile enterprises of the state and is the largest in Fort Smith. In fact it would be a credit to a city of many times the size of Fort Smith, owing to the attractive line of goods carried, the beauty of the display, the honorable methods of the house and the earnest effort put forth to please the customers. The company has always maintained the highest standards in the line of goods carried, in the personnel of the establishment and in the treatment rendered to its patrons and thus its success has constantly grown. The efficiency, farsightedness and enterprise of Mr. Ney have led to his being made general manager, and as the years have passed he has acquired stock in the enterprise. Moreover, he is one of the stockholders in the Goldman Hotel Company and whatever he undertakes he carries forward to success, allowing no obstacles or difficulties to bar his progress if they can be overcome by persistent, earnest and honorable effort.

Mr. Ney was united in marriage to Miss Marie Baer and they have become parents of a son, Lester, who is a veteran of the World war. While America was at war with Germany, Mr. Ney took a prominent part in the sale of Liberty bonds and in support of all the activities which arose out of war conditions necessary for the successful prosecution of hostilities. He has made a most creditable record in business circles and is prominent as a man whose constantly expanding powers have taken him from humble surroundings to the field of large enterprises and continually broadening opportunities. To the solution of complex problems he brings a clear understanding and his powers of coordination have enabled him to unite unrelated and even diverse elements into a harmonious whole.

WILLIAM V. HIGGINS.

At eighty years of age William V. Higgins is a hale and hearty man, and although he is now retired from business he remains a factor in the world's work, inasmuch as he gives out of the rich stores of his wisdom and experience for the benefit of others. For many years he was active in agricultural circles, likewise in the conduct of a mercantile business and in ginning, and won success that can be attributed to his energy and diligence and, above all, to his honesty and integrity. The years marked his advancement and at length he reached a position where he felt that his success and his age justified his retirement. The most envious could not grudge him his prosperity, so well has it been won and so worthily used.

William V. Higgins was born in Gibson county, Tennessee, on the 18th of August, 1841, a son of Michael M. and Mary L. (Partee) Higgins, both natives of the Southland. They came to Yell county, this state, in 1846, making the trip by boat, and the father purchased some land in the county. He cleared it himself and resided thereon until his removal to Perry county, where he farmed until his demise in 1855, when forty-six years of age. Mrs. Higgins died at the age of seventy-four years. Seven children were born to their union: Marcia, J. M. M., Pollyann, Mary Jane, Mathias P., and Arkansas, all deceased; and William V., whose name initiates this review. The family was reared in the faith of the Baptist church and Mr. Higgins was a staunch supporter of the democratic party, in the interests of which he took an active part.

In the acquirement of an education William V. Higgins attended the old log schoolhouses of Perry county, walking a distance of three miles each day. At the age of twenty years he enlisted in the Confederate army and served under Colonel Merrett and General Bowen, participating in many of the important battles of the war, among them those of Shiloh and Port Hudson. He was captured at Port Hudson but was soon paroled and then went into a hospital at Helena. He was in active service four years. At the close of hostilities he returned to Conway county, without a dollar to his name, and securing some land he engaged in farming, achieving such success as soon enabled him to buy a tract of land. He carried on general farming and stock raising and was known throughout the county as one of the most progressive farmers. For five years Mr. Higgins conducted a mercantile business in Oppelo and he ran a steam gin there for three years. In every undertaking with which he was connected he won prosperity and in 1900 he retired from active business life. He is still interested in farming and owns six hundred and eighty acres of well improved land, from the rental of which he receives a substantial income. He is now residing in Ola with Thomas Howell.

Mr. Higgins was twice married. His first wife was Miss Isabelle Hallett, a native of Conway county, and her demise occurred in January, 1876. To their union two children were born, both of whom are deceased: One, whose demise occurred in infancy and Anna, who lived to the age of twenty-two years. Mr. Higgins' second marriage was to Miss Mary Pierce, a native of this state, and her death occurred on the 7th of January, 1916.

Since age conferred upon Mr. Higgins the right of franchise he was always a staunch supporter of the democratic party, although he neither sought nor desired public office, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his business interests. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and he is a regular attendant at the church in Oppelo. Mr. Higgins has many friends throughout the county and there is no man more justly entitled to the proud American title of self-made man than he.

LOUIS C. DEWOODY, M. D.

Dr. Louis C. DeWoody, physician and surgeon of Hot Springs, was born in what is now Nevada county, Arkansas, near the city of Prescott, June 25, 1868, his parents being Mr. and Mrs. John A. DeWoody. The father was a planter, who served in the Confederate army during the Civil war, as did two of his brothers. He died when his son, Dr. DeWoody, was but three years of age, and the mother died when the Doctor was but two years old. The boy was then reared by his uncle, Philip G. DeWoody, who was also an ex-Confederate soldier and who in times of peace followed the occupation of farming. Louis C. DeWoody acquired a common and high school education at Bluff City, Arkansas. He took up the study of medicine under the direction of his father-in-law, who was a physician. He continued his reading in this way for a time, and in 1894-1895 attended lectures at the State University at Little Rock. In the spring of 1895 he began the practice of his profession at Norphlet, Arkansas, where he remained for four months, and then returned to a point near his own home locality in Nevada county. He continued there for three years and next went to Stamps, Lafayette county, Arkansas, where he resided for six years. In 1908 he came to Hot Springs, where he has since specialized in genito-urinary diseases, having developed a high degree of efficiency in this particular branch of practice. He has studied thoroughly along that line, keeping in touch with the latest scientific researches and discoveries and as a genito-urological surgeon he has gained a notable position.

Dr. DeWoody is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and his life is ever guided by its teachings. Dr. DeWoody also belongs to the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but has comparatively little time for lodge work, as his efforts and energies are demanded by his professional duties. He belongs to the County, Arkansas State and Southern Medical Associations. His ability is constantly augmented and promoted by his thorough study and research, and he is familiar with all that scientific research has brought to light concerning the profession, especially in the line to which he is mainly devoting his attention.

FREDERICK J. SCHMUTZ.

Frederick J. Schmutz, trust officer of the American Bank of Commerce & Trust Company of Little Rock, came to Arkansas from the land of the Alps, his birth having occurred in the beautiful city of Bern, Switzerland, March 5, 1871. He is a son of Gottlieb and Elizabeth (Schmied) Schmutz, who were likewise natives of Switzerland, the former born in 1840 and the latter in 1842. They were married in Canton Bern and became parents of two sons and five daughters, all of whom are living with the exception of one daughter. Crossing the Atlantic to the new world they made their way to Arkansas and took up their abode in the vicinity of Little Rock, where Gottlieb Schmutz followed the occupation of farming. He gave his political support to the republican party but was not an aspirant for public office. Both he and his wife died in the year 1881.

Frederick J. Schmutz was but ten years of age when left an orphan. He acquired his education in the public schools of Little Rock and in a business college and was thus qualified for life's practical and responsible duties. Throughout his business career opportunity has ever been with him a call to action. He has utilized his chances for advancement wisely and well and step by step has progressed until he has reached the responsible position of trust officer in the American Bank of Commerce & Trust Company. He is likewise the vice president and one of the directors of the Lonoke Rice Milling Company. In business affairs his judgment is sound and sagacity keen, and by reason of these qualities and his well known spirit of fidelity he is proving most competent in the responsible position which he now fills in connection with one of the strongest financial institutions of the state.

On the 14th of February, 1914, Mr. Schmutz was united in marriage to Miss Lassie Shoffner, who was born in Cabot, Arkansas, in 1887. They have one child, a son, Frederick H., whose birth occurred March 20 1915. During the World war period Mr. Schmutz took active part in promoting all bond drives and otherwise holding the home lines which constituted the support of the great American Expeditionary Force on the western front. His political endorsement has always been given to the men and measures of the republican party at national elections since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He is a Master Mason and a member of the First Presbyterian church and in these associations are indicated the rules which govern his life and direct his conduct in relation to his fellowmen.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARRETT.

William Francis Barrett, well known in newspaper circles in his section of the state as the owner of the Gillett Reporter, comes to Arkansas from Indiana, his birth having occurred at Fort Wayne, that state, while his natal day was June 23, 1884. His father, J. E. Barrett, was a farmer by occupation and after following that pursuit in Indiana for some time removed to Sumner county, Kansas, while later he became a resident of Fort Wayne, Indiana. He married Elizabeth May.

Their son, William F. Barrett, spent his youthful days under the parental roof and acquired a public school education. He then turned his attention to newspaper publication and as a reporter on the Record and he not only wrote the editorials and supervised the composition but also learned the mechanical end of the business and did considerable work as a job printer. At length he determined to try his fortune in Arkansas and here worked on the Marianna Courier and later on the Daily World at Helena. He afterward removed to Clarksdale, Mississippi, where he became associated with the job department of the Daily Register. During all these years he was acquiring himself thoroughly with every phase of the newspaper business and acquiring knowledge that has been of the utmost value to him since he started out in business on his own account. After severing his connection with the Daily Register at Clarksdale, Mississippi, he came to Gillett and purchased the Gillett Reporter. This paper was established in 1914 by Frank N. Henderson and was first printed in England, Arkansas, the papers being then shipped to Gillett. The next owner was W. Charles Hopper, who was later city editor of a paper published at Arkadelphia, Arkansas. Mr. Hopper sold the Reporter to Mr. Barrett on the 13th of October, 1919, and the latter has since developed this into a popular sheet, with a growing circulation in Gillett and vicinity. It has been placed on a safe basis, has become a good advertising medium by reason of its increased circulation and in connection with the publication of the paper Mr. Barrett does a good job printing business.

On November 15, 1915, Mr. Barrett was united in marriage to Miss May Dillingham of De Witt, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of a son, William Francis, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett have made many friends during the period of their residence in Gillett. His social, genial nature makes for popularity wherever he goes and his fellow townsmen recognize in him an alert, energetic and progressive business man.

WILLIAM G. OWNBEY.

William G. Ownbey, a druggist of Springdale, in which city he was born November 5, 1877, is a son of Julius F. and Elizabeth (Eidson) Ownbey, both natives of Washington county, Arkansas. The father was a son of Porter M. and Martha (Martin) Ownbey, who settled in Washington county during the period of the Civil war and the grandfather remained a resident of this section of the state until his death. His widow survives at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. They came to the state from Georgia and Porter M. Ownbey always followed the occupation of farming. His son, Julius F. Ownbey, was reared in Washington county and he, too, followed the occupation of farming and also dealt in stock. He was one of the pioneers in the development of orchards in this county and contributed much to the upbuilding of the fortunes of others as well as to his own, through his successful introduction of fruit raising into this part of the state. He was a democrat in his political views and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church. In early manhood he wedded Elizabeth Eidson, also a native of this county. She survives her husband and now makes her home in Springdale. They were the parents of three children, of whom two are living: William G. and Carl, the latter connected with the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Springdale.

William G. Ownbey was educated in the public and high schools of his native city and in the State University of Arkansas. In early life he began learning the drug business, with which he has since been identified, devoting his entire time to commercial activity of this character. He is owner of a large store in Springdale and also another at Fayetteville. His capable management, indefatigable energy and persistency of purpose have been dominant factors in the attainment of his present-day success.

In 1900 Mr. Ownbey was united in marriage to Miss Bertie Parker, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Theodore and Jane (Prater) Parker, who were likewise natives of that state. They came to Springdale about 1887 and Mr. Parker here engaged in the produce business, but he and his wife are now residents of the state of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Ownbey have become parents of two children: Julian and Margaret, both in school. Mr. Ownbey belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, while his wife is a member of the Christian church. He is identified also with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and with the Masons and is a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of these societies. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and for five years he filled the office of alderman, taking active interest in all that pertained to the progress and development of the community. He likewise filled the office of city recorder for two years and as mayor during a two years' term he gave to Springdale a businesslike and progressive administration that was thoroughly beneficial. He also has an interesting military record, for he was a National Guardsman when America became engaged in war with Spain. He saw his first service in 1898 as private in the First Arkansas Infantry and was stationed at Chickamauga Park. Again his military spirit was aroused when Mexico showed decided hostility to the United States in 1916 and he became a captain of the Second Arkansas Infantry, with which he went to the border, being there stationed through 1916 and 1917. In the latter year he was promoted to the rank of major. He was graduated from the School of Musketry at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, in 1917 and from the School of Fire for Field Artillery at Fort Sill in the same year. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel and was commissioned colonel by the Federal government in May, 1918, and placed in command of the One Hundred and Forty-second Field Artillery. He served with that unit in France from August, 1918, until June, 1919, when he returned home and received his discharge. He and his command did the firing for the artillery schools at Valdahon, France, and he is still holding his commission of colonel of the Field Artillery Reserve Corps, United States army.

Colonel Ownbey has spent his life in Springdale and his many sterling traits of character have gained for him the high esteem in which he is held. He has carefully directed and managed his business affairs and has made steady progress, well qualified for the work by reason of the fact that he is a graduate of the Ohio Institute of Pharmacy at Columbus and had thorough practical training. He has most wisely directed his activities along mercantile lines and has built up a large business at both Springdale and Fayetteville. What he has accomplished in the business world represents the fit utilization of his time and opportunities, while in matters of citizenship he has always stood for the highest and best, proving his loyalty to community and commonwealth in days of peace just as he has demonstrated his loyalty to the country in times of war.

FINIS E. STOCKTON.

Finis E. Stockton, identified with banking interests of Ozark, was born on a farm ten miles from this city, July 17, 1883. His grandfather, William Stockton, was a Confederate soldier, who was killed in the battle of Peach Tree Creek. The father, William G. Stockton, was born in Alabama and came to Franklin county, Arkansas, in 1880. He was a farmer and school teacher, being well educated for his day, in the schools of Alabama. The greater part of his life has been devoted to educational work and he is now principal of the school at Hodgen, Oklahoma. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and a past master of the blue lodge. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and while residing in Franklin county, Arkansas, he served for two terms as county judge. In early manhood he married Hannah Ford, a native of Alabama and a daughter of George Ford, who also served as a soldier of the Confederate army, having participated in the battle of Shiloh, during which time one of his arms was shot off. He was a resident of Franklin county at the time of his demise. They were married in that county and became the parents of seven children, six of whom are living: Finis E.; Inez, who married Joe Mantooth, a farmer, residing at Newport, Arkansas; Winnie, who is the wife of Bradley Cotton of Cowlington, Oklahoma, where he follows farming; William, a school teacher of Oklahoma; George, a farmer and school teacher, living at Rogers, Arkansas; Una, the wife of DeWitt Durham, a machinist of Allen, Oklahoma; and Sam, who is in the post office at Tulsa, Oklahoma. The wife and mother departed this life in 1905. In religious faith Mr. Stockton is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

In the acquirement of his education Finis E. Stockton mastered the branches of learning taught in the country schools and afterward attended the State University of Arkansas for two years. He then began teaching in the rural schools of Franklin county and followed the profession for two years, while later he pursued a commercial course at Fort Smith. He then started out in mercantile lines by working in a store for two years, after which he became connected with the People's Bank of Ozark, in 1910. His original position was that of bookkeeper and in 1916 he was advanced to the cashiership, since which time he has occupied that position. He is thorough and systematic in all of his work in connection with the bank, is courteous and obliging to its patrons and has made a popular official. The People's Bank is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars, has a surplus and undivided profits of thirty thousand dollars and its deposits amount to more than two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The bank was established in 1905 and is under the presidency of L. L. Ford.

In 1910 Mr. Stockton was united in marriage to Miss Annie Bearden, who was born in Webb City, Arkansas, a daughter of Moses Bearden, a farmer of Alma, Arkansas. They have become the parents of five children: Grady, Finis and Axie Catherine, who are in school; Christina and Wilson, who are not yet of school age. The religious faith of the parents is that of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Stockton is a Royal Arch Mason, has served as master of the lodge and high priest in the chapter. In politics he is a democrat and is now serving as chairman of the democratic county central committee. He does everything in his power legitimately to promote the success of the party because of his firm belief in its principles and he is interested in all that pertains to the city's welfare and promotion of public interests.

SAMUEL JOSEPH ESTES, M. D.

Dr. Samuel Joseph Estes, physician and surgeon of Little Rock, who has practiced in this city since 1915, was born at Holly Springs, Mississippi, August 27, 1874, and was a lad of but seven years when his parents removed to Denmark, Tennessee, there taking up their abode in 1881. He is a son of Robert Fenner and Mattie Emma (Sharp) Estes. The father's birth occurred in Jackson, Tennessee, in 1841, and the mother was born in Wall Hill, Mississippi, in 1850. They were married in the year 1866 at Wall Hill and became parents of three sons and a daughter, all of whom are living. The wife and mother, however, died in March, 1910. The father resides at Brownsville, Tennessee. He has always been a democrat in his political views and he was a soldier of the Civil war, serving as a captain in Forrest's command. He was with the Confederate troops for four years and was captured at the battle of Fort Donelson, but soon afterward made his escape.

Dr. Estes was largely reared in Denmark, Tennessee, where he pursued his education until graduated from the high school with the class of 1895. At a later period he attended the Mississippi State Normal School at Iuka and there won the degree of Bachelor of Science as a member of the class of 1898. He was graduated in medicine in 1902 from the Memphis Hospital Medical College and in the following year he did postgraduate work in Memphis. Since that time he has continuously practiced his profession and has made his home in Little Rock since 1915. His success has resulted from close application, broad study, careful analysis and a sympathetic nature that enables him readily to win the confidence of his patrons. Wide reading has kept him informed concerning the latest scientific researches and discoveries and he is quick to adapt his knowledge to specific needs. He is conceded by the profession, not only in Little Rock but throughout the South as an especially fine diagnostician.

On the 10th of May, 1901, Dr. Estes was married to Miss Sallie Bobbitt, who was born in Lorado, Arkansas, June 10, 1883, and was graduated from the high school there.

The children of this marriage are: Donald Bobbitt, who was born in 1904; Everett Edward, born in 1906; Alma Estelle, born in 1908; and Samuel James, born in 1915.

Dr. Estes always votes with the democratic party, which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. His religious faith is that of the Methodist denomination, his membership being in the Highland Methodist Episcopal church, South, in which he is serving as a member of the board of stewards. Fraternally he has wide connections. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine, is a past master of Lorado Lodge, No. 241, I. O. O. F., and is also a representative of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is greatly interested in the good road movement and does everything in his power to advance improvement along that line. He finds his recreation in outdoor life and is fond of all manly sports. These things, however, are not allowed to interfere with the faithful performance of every professional duty that devolves upon him and he is an esteemed and valued member of the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Tri-State Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

BEN ALLEN.

Ben Allen, sheriff of White county and a resident of Searcy, is ever found prompt and faithful in the discharge of his official duties and his record is one which reflects credit and honor upon himself and has proven highly satisfactory to his constituents. A native son of Arkansas, he was born in Cleburne county, September 23, 1872, his parents being Thomas and Missouri (Butler) Allen. The Allen family has been represented in this state from pioneer times. The grandfather, Eli Allen, was a native of Virginia, born in 1804 and followed farming in that state ere his removal to Arkansas in 1818. He first made his way to New Orleans, thence up the Mississippi and White rivers to Des Arc, from which point he traveled to Heber Springs, becoming one of the earliest settlers in that district. He fished, hunted and trapped and carried the furs to Arkansas Post, trading among the Indians. He had seen hundreds of buffaloes in droves on the western plains and he passed through all of the experiences and hardships of pioneer life. In the early days he was a squatter but afterward entered land from the government and engaged in farming and on his land he reared his family. He departed this life at the age of eighty-five years. His son, Thomas Allen, was born in what was then old Van Buren county and is now Cleburne county, in 1823, and his life record covered the intervening years to 1888, when his death occurred. His wife was born in Missouri and died in 1919 at the age of sixty-five years. Thomas Allen was educated in the old-time subscription school, the schoolhouse being a log structure with split log benches and puncheon floor. Reared amid pioneer surroundings he became familiar with all of the conditions of life on the frontier and bore his share in the work of early development and progress. In 1861 he enlisted for service in the Confederate army, joining the Tenth Arkansas Infantry, with which he served the greater part of the time, going to Mississippi under Captain Miller. He participated in the battle of Shiloh and served throughout the period of the Civil war. With his return from military life he again settled in Van Buren county, where he followed the occupation of farming, homesteading land in that locality. The tract which he secured was covered with timber and he had to clear most of this. At one time he owned a thousand acres of land, for which he paid only a dollar per acre. In the early days most of his trading was done at Batesville, at Des Arc and at Little Rock. He crossed the ice on the Arkansas river at Little Rock in order to get to market. There was much wild game to be had in this section of the country in those days and the hunter had no difficulty in securing meat for the table. During the Civil war Mr. Allen lost everything that he had accumulated and when he returned home his stock consisted only of an old mule. With undaunted courage he took up the task of regaining his lost possessions and for many years engaged in general farming and stock raising. At a later day he removed to Texas, where he purchased land and his last years were spent in the Lone Star state. He always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church. In their family were nine children, six of whom are living: J. G., a practicing physician, residing at Commerce, Texas; Ben, of this review; John, living in Hunt county, Texas, where he follows farming; Theophilis, a photographer, also living in Hunt county, Texas; Vester, a government mail clerk, living at Waco, Texas; and Dora, the wife of Joe Tedford of Pueblo, Colorado. One daughter, Effie, died at the age of twenty-three years and two children died in infancy.

Ben Allen was educated in the common schools of Heber Springs and remained in Cleburne county through the period of his boyhood and youth. He afterward taught for a few terms in the rural districts of Cleburne county and then took up the occupation of farming. He bought and cleared land, securing a part of his father's old homestead and devoted his attention to the task of developing the fields and producing substantial crops. In 1893 he came to White county and entered the employ of the Millen Lumber Company at St. Louis, Missouri, occupying the position of general manager for eight years. He next purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land near Beebe and while engaged in farming there he served as constable and as deputy sheriff for a period of eight years. He was afterward elected justice of the peace at Beebe and occupied that position for four years, while in 1920 he was elected to the office of sheriff, entering upon the duties of the position on the 1st of January, following, and is serving in an acceptable manner. He still owns his farm of one hundred and twelve acres, from which he is deriving a good rental.

Mr. Allen was married to Miss Jennie Thompson, who was born in White county, Arkansas, a daughter of Wes Thompson, a farmer and stock dealer. They have become parents of six children: Opal, who is the wife of Albert Beville, a farmer of White county; Homer, farming in the same county; Nellie, the wife of Elbert Walls, a barber of Cabot, Arkansas; Elvis, Velda and Oatley, all at home. Mrs. Allen is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Allen belongs to the Masonic lodge at Beebe and is also identified with the Woodmen of the World. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and he keeps well informed on the vital questions and issues of the day. In all matters of citizenship he stands with those men who are seeking to promote progress and uphold high civic standards.

S. E. McREYNOLDS.

S. E. McReynolds, county and probate clerk of Conway county, was born in Conway on the 19th of December, 1891, a son of T. J. McReynolds and Isabelle (Templeton) McReynolds. The paternal grandfather, James McReynolds, came to Conway several years prior to the Civil war, making the trip overland with oxen. He entered land here, which he had to clear and upon which he erected log improvements. He did his trading at Lewisburg, a landing on the Arkansas river and obtained his meat by shooting deer, bear and turkey. He was an extensive farmer and slave owner and resided on his homestead until his death, at the age of seventy-four years. T. J. McReynolds was born in Conway county, where he engaged in farming, owning some valuable land, the original homestead acquired by his father. He received his education in the country schools of the county attending them but three months out of every year. He won substantial success as a general farmer and stock raiser. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, his sympathies being with the south, he enlisted in the Confederate army and served under Colonel Gordon, for the most part west of the Mississippi. He was captured and held prisoner at Rock Island, Illinois, his release being secured only after hostilities had ceased. He then returned to Arkansas, where he lived until his death at the age of fifty-nine years, in 1903. Mrs. McReynolds died in 1908, at the age of fifty years. To their union six children were born, four of whom are living: T. J., who is a mail carrier of Morrilton; S. E., the subject of this review; Walter, a barber at Morrilton; and Terry, a stenographer for the board of Commerce at Little Rock, Arkansas. Two other children died in infancy. The family was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian church and Mrs. McReynolds was an active worker in that organization. Throughout his life the father was a staunch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government.

S. E. McReynolds received his education in the country schools of his native county and later attended the high school at Hattiesville. Upon putting his textbooks aside he became bookkeeper for the sheriff of Conway county, being then but twenty-one years of age, and he was active in that connection for six years. At the termination of that time he became bookkeeper of the Bank of Morrilton and the Rainwater Bank and he was active in financial circles until 1920, when he was elected to his present office of county and probate clerk. He devotes his entire time to the duties devolving upon him in that office and has won the respect and confidence of all with whom he has come into contact.

In 1921 occurred the marriage of Mr. McReynolds to Miss Ora Childress, a native of Conway county and a daughter of J. W. Childress. Her father was a well known business man in Hattiesville, where he conducted a mercantile establishment for some time. Mrs. McReynolds is prominent in the club and social circles of Morrilton and is a consistent member of the Christian church.

On October 19, 1918, Mr. McReynolds enlisted for service in the World war and as a member of Company 36, Depot Brigade, he received training at Camp Pike. He was there ten days when he was transferred to Benton as clerk on the local board and he served in that capacity until receiving his discharge on the 19th of December, 1918, at Camp Pike. In his political views he is a democrat and he has always taken an active part in local political affairs. He is discharging the responsibilities of his present office in a manner highly creditable to himself and his constituency and by reason of his faithful discharge of all matters of trust and his high standards of citizenship, he has won the esteem of the community.

HERMAN PEAY MADDOX.

Herman Peay Maddox, who ranks high among the prominent lawyers of Arkansas, has engaged in practice in Harrisburg since 1912, and his constantly increasing ability has brought him continuous recognition in a large and distinctively representative clientage. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry on both paternal and maternal sides. His ancestors came to this country at an early day and became prominent figures in the public life of the communities in which they resided. Herman P. Maddox was born in Rockport, Ohio county, Kentucky, on the 14th of June, 1884, a son of James E. and Verda (Gentry) Maddox. His father, who is living in Harrisburg at the age of sixty-seven years, is active in the milling business and is achieving more than substantial success in that connection. For many years the father was engaged in farming in Ohio county, Kentucky, the county of his birth. He was married in Ohio county in 1880, to Miss Verda Gentry, who is also living at the age of sixty-seven years. She was born and reared in that county, her family having been among the pioneer settlers there. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Maddox ten children were born, seven boys and three girls. Five sons and the three daughters are living. Two sons died in infancy. Herman P., whose name initiates this review, was the second in order of birth.

Herman P. Maddox received his early education in the common schools of Ohio county, Kentucky, and after graduating from the high school at Beaver Dam, that state, entered the Bryant & Stratton Business College at Louisville. After completing his course there he started out in the business world as assistant cashier of the Rockport Deposit Bank at Rockport, a position he held for two years, 1905-07. At the end of that time he came to Arkansas and located in Cherry Valley, where he was employed as cashier with the Bank of Cherry Valley, and this position he held for five years. During his spare time he took up the study of law and in 1910 was admitted to practice in the circuit and chancery courts. He remained with the bank, however, until January, 1912, when he went to Wynne, Arkansas, and began the active practice of law, which he continued there until October, 1912. He then removed to Harrisburg, established his office and began practice independently. He soon built up a distinctively representative clientage. He has concentrated his time, energies and attention upon his professional duties and the work that he has done as advocate and counselor indicates clearly his familiarity with the principles of jurisprudence and an analytical power that enables him correctly to apply those principles to the question under consideration. On April 5, 1915, Mr. Maddox was admitted to practice before the state supreme court and on October 5th, following, he was admitted to the federal court. In 1916 he was elected deputy prosecuting attorney of Poinsett county and was active in that office for two years. He is now a member of the local city council. Although the greater part of Mr. Maddox's time is devoted to his professional interests, he is well known in financial circles as a stockholder in the Bank of Cherry Valley, at Cherry Valley, this state.

On the 21st of February, 1909, occurred the marriage of Mr. Maddox to Miss Ruth Halk, a daughter of George and Anna Halk, well known residents of Cherry Valley. To their union four children were born: Edward Stacey, twelve years of age; Maurine, ten years of age; Vivian, aged six; and Herman Peay, Jr., aged five. Mrs. Maddox's demise occurred on the 19th of October, 1918, at Harrisburg, and came as a severe blow to her family and many friends.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church, to the support of which Mr. Maddox is a generous contributor. Fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason; a member of Poinsett Lodge, No. 184, A. F. & A. M., of Harrisburg; Arkansas Consistory, No. 1, Little Rock; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff. He is likewise affiliated with Lodge No. 1080, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Paragould and Cherry Valley Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Along strictly professional lines he is identified with the Arkansas State Bar Association. During the World war Mr. Maddox was chairman of the legal advisory board and a Four-Minute man, making many speeches throughout the county in behalf of various war activities.

HERMAN PEAY MADDOX

He is readily conceded to be a public-spirited citizen of Harrisburg and is recognized as a man of well-rounded character, whose interests are varied and who at all times keeps in close touch with the trend of modern thought and progress.

THOMAS E. ALLYN.

Thomas E. Allyn has been engaged in the general practice of law in Marked Tree since 1916. He was born near Mt. Vernon, Posey county, Indiana, on the 1st of April, 1883, a son of Elisha and Laura (Lewis) Allyn. On the paternal side he is of English, Irish and Scotch extraction. Progenitors of the Allyn family in this country came from England on the Mayflower and located at Plymouth. The branch of the family from which Thomas E. is descended migrated to Pennsylvania and thence down the Ohio river to Mt. Vernon, Indiana. They were among the pioneer settlers of that section of the country. Elisha Allyn was born and reared in Indiana and on the 1st of September, 1901, came to Arkansas, where he acquired land in Clay county. For many years he followed agricultural pursuits and achieved more than substantial success. He is now living on his farm near Boydsville, at the age of sixty-five years. In Posey county, Indiana, in 1881, Elisha Allyn was married to Miss Laura Lewis, who was likewise born and reared in Indiana. She was of Irish extraction, although members of her family have lived in America for many generations. The demise of Mrs. Allyn occurred in 1884, at the age of twenty years. To Mr. and Mrs. Allyn one son was born, Thomas E., whose name initiates this review.

Thomas E. Allyn received his early education in the common schools of Posey county, Indiana. At the age of seventeen years he started teaching school near Piggott, this state, having come to Clay county in company with his father. He was engaged along educational lines continuously from 1901 to 1916. In the meantime he had been reading and studying law and in 1910 he was admitted to practice in the state courts. He came to Marked Tree in 1916, established offices for the practice of his profession and has remained here, practicing under his own name. He has built up an extensive and lucrative clientage, most of the litigation which he conducts being of chancery and civil character. During the World war Mr. Allyn served on the legal advisory board of Poinsett county. He was likewise active as one of the Four-Minute men, and made speeches throughout the county in behalf of the various drives.

On the 5th of December, 1912, in Clay county, occurred the marriage of Mr. Allyn to Miss Gussie Choate, a daughter of James and Ollie A. Choate, prominent residents of St. Francis, Arkansas. To their union four children have been born: Gerald Elisha, who died at the age of five years; Lloyd Exter, eight years of age; Frances Elaine, six years of age; and James Joseph, four years of age.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Allyn has given his political endorsement to the republican party and the principles for which it stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being an exemplary member of the craft. He belongs to Marked Tree Lodge, No. 668, F. & A. M., of which body he is past worshipful master, and he has been worshipful master of St. Francis Lodge, No. 505, F. & A. M. He is district deputy grand master of the Tenth District of the Grand Lodge of this state and was grand representative of Panama Grand Lodge to this state. He is likewise identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holding membership in Marked Tree Lodge, No. 197, of which he is past grand. He is now holding the office of treasurer in the local lodge. He has served as noble grand of several other lodges and is now grand conductor of the Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F. of this state. For some time he was district deputy grand master of District 89, of the I. O. O. F. Grand. Along strictly professional lines Mr. Allyn is connected with the County and District Bar Associations. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church and for many years Mr. Allyn has served the church as a steward. During the years of his residence here he has wielded a great influence for good in the community and his friends are legion.

WINSTON LEE WINTERS.

Winston Lee Winters has gained creditable standing as a civil and hydraulic engineer and is now practicing his profession with offices in the Merchants National Bank building at Fort Smith. He has been a resident of this place for twenty-four years, or since 1897. His birth occurred in Charleston, Arkansas, and he was a youth in his teens when he came to this city. Here he resumed his education, entering the high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1900. He afterward pursued a course of study in the University of Arkansas and is numbered among its alumni of 1906, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering. Since entering upon this professional work he has given most of his attention to civil and municipal engineering. In 1910 he established the firm of Winters & Dove, Civil & Hydraulic Engineers, and conducted the business under a partnership relation for a number of years but in 1918 he assumed entire control and has since directed the efforts of the office. He has been engaged in municipal engineering, including the building of water works and sewer systems, and the contracts awarded him have been of an extensive and important character, calling him in their execution into various sections of the state. Today as monuments to his skill, ability and handiwork are seen the water systems of Ashdown, Clarendon, Meno and Clarksville, Arkansas, and also of Sallisaw and Stigler, Oklahoma. He has likewise been the builder of the sewage systems of Siloam Springs, De Queen, Clarksville and Bentonville, Arkansas, and in the construction of these important plants he has solved many difficult engineering problems and has shown himself fully equal to the responsibilities thus devolving upon him.

Mr. Winters was united in marriage to Miss Loma Harriss of Texarkana, Arkansas, and they are widely and favorably known in Fort Smith, where they have many friends. Mr. Winters belongs to the American Society of Engineers, also to the American Association of Engineers and he keeps abreast with the best thinking men of the age in relation to all engineering problems, constantly studying to develop his skill and efficiency, while already he has reached a notable place in professional circles.

OSSIAN H. KING, M. D.

Dr. Ossian H. King, specializing in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, has been numbered among the medical practitioners of Hot Springs since December, 1915, with the exception of one year spent in the service of his country during the World war. He was born in Louisiana on the 27th of October, 1886, and was seven years of age when his parents established the family home in Little Rock, Arkansas. His early education obtained in the public schools, was supplemented by a course of study in the old Arkansas Military Academy and on attaining his majority he entered the College of Physicians & Surgeons, from which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1911. He then attended Kuapp's Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Sanitarium of Vincennes, Indiana, and later pursued postgraduate work on the eye and ear in both New York and Chicago. In December, 1915, he located for practice at Hot Springs, where he has remained through the intervening period to the present, with the exception of one year's service as a medical officer during the World war. He joined the Medical Corps in March, 1918, and was attached to the air service at Kelly Field and at Ellington Field, being commissioned first lieutenant. He was discharged in April, 1919, and has a captain's commission in the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps. On returning to civil life he resumed his professional duties in Hot Springs, where he has built up an enviable practice of lucrative proportions that is a merited tribute to his skill and ability in his chosen line. His professional membership connections are with the Garland County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association, the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology.

In 1914 Dr. King was united in marriage to Miss Margaret McDonald and they are a well known and popular young couple of Hot Springs. The Doctor is a Knights Templar Mason and also belongs to the Mystic Shrine, exemplifying in his daily life the beneficent spirit of the craft. In the field of his specialty he has demonstrated a degree of skill and efficiency that has established him among the representative and able members of the profession in his adopted state.

G. A. HUGHES, M. D.

Dr. G. A. Hughes is a native son of Arkansas and one of the old established physicians of Benton county, having for twenty-six years followed his profession in this locality. Since 1918 he has been a resident of Siloam Springs and his thorough knowledge of his profession and broad experience have secured for him a large practice. He was born in Scott county, Arkansas, February 9, 1870, a son of John H. and Louise (Pullen) Hughes, the former a native of eastern Tennessee, while the latter was born in Georgia, in which state their marriage occurred. After the Civil war they came to Arkansas and in 1881 settled in Benton county, where the father purchased land, which he continued to cultivate throughout his remaining years. When a youth of eighteen years he enlisted in the Confederate army and remained in the service for a period of four years. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. He died in Benton county on the 22d of February, 1910. Mrs. Hughes survives and is residing with a sister in Siloam Springs. They became the parents of eight children, of whom five are living, the subject of this review being the second in order of birth. The paternal grandfather, Rice Hughes, was a native of Tennessee and subsequently removed to Scott county, Arkansas, where he became the owner of a large plantation, on which he died in 1881. The maternal grandfather, the Rev. William Pullen, was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church and died in Georgia when nearly one hundred years old.

In the pursuit of an education Dr. Hughes attended the schools of Scott and Benton counties, Arkansas, after which he spent three years as a student in the State University of Arkansas, completing his course in 1889. He later entered the medical department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1894. Coming to Arkansas, he opened an office at Canehill, where he remained for four months and then removed to Gravette, where he successfully continued in practice for twenty-three years. In 1918 he became a resident of Siloam Springs and his labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success, the list of his patients being already an extensive one. He engages in general practice but devotes considerable attention to surgical work and through constant reading and careful study of the cases that come under his care he is continually broadening his knowledge and ability. His professional connections are with the Benton County Medical Society, of which he has been president, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is also the owner of a farm in Oklahoma which has proven a profitable investment.

In November, 1895, Dr. Hughes was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Lewis, a native of Canehill, Arkansas, and a daughter of William Lewis, formerly a prominent merchant of that locality, but now living retired at Siloam Springs. To this union have been born five children: Otto, the eldest, died at the age of fourteen years; Lillian, a stenographer in the employ of the Benton County Hardware Company of Siloam Springs; Lewis, who is a student in the State University of Arkansas; and Lina and Louise, both of whom are attending school.

Dr. and Mrs. Hughes are members of the Christian church and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, in which he has passed through all of the chairs, and in Masonry he has attained the Royal Arch degree. He is a staunch democrat in his political views and has been called upon to fill a number of public positions of honor and trust, serving as mayor and health officer of Gravette. He is the present health officer of Siloam Springs and is ably discharging his duties in this connection. He has led an active and useful life, employing every opportunity to advance, and his present success is entirely attributable to his own labors, his close application and his laudable ambition. He is most conscientious in the discharge of his professional duties and his ability is not only attested by his fellow practitioners but by the general public as well.

BONNIE DAVIS.

One of the alert and enterprising citizens of Magnolia is Bonnie Davis, who was born in Haynesville, Louisiana, on the 11th of November, 1876, a son of Alexander and Cassie T. (Green) Davis. On the paternal side the family is of Scotch-English descent and members of the family emigrated to this country at an early day, first locating in North Carolina. Alexander Davis came to this state from Mississippi in 1856 and was one of the early settlers in southern Arkansas. He engaged in farming near Emerson. His death occurred on the home place in 1913, at the age of sixty-five years. In 1874 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Davis to Miss Cassie T. Green, a native of Louisiana, the ceremony being performed at Haynesville, that state. To their union six children were born, three boys and three girls, Bonnie D. being the second in order of birth. All of the children are living with the exception of two sons. Mrs. Davis died on the home farm in 1911, at the age of fifty-nine years. The three daughters are Lula May, who married Luther McDonald of Shongaloo, Louisiana; Lillie, the wife of E. W. Warner of Emerson; and Amelia, who is now Mrs. B. T. Gallaher and resides in Trout, Louisiana.

In the acquirement of an education Bonnie Davis attended the country schools of Columbia county and later entered Ouachita Baptist College at Arkadelphia, where he took a literary course, withdrawing at the end of two and one-half years. In 1899 he began teaching and was thus engaged in the public schools of Louisiana and in Columbia county, this state, for a period of fifteen years. He is now secretary and treasurer of the Columbia County Farm Bureau and conducts an abstract business. He owes considerable valuable real estate in Columbia county. Mr. Davis has not only become prominently known in educational and business circles but has served his fellowmen in the state legislature, having been elected to that body for the first time in 1909 and again in 1911, 1913 and 1917.

Fraternally Mr. Davis is identified with the Ancient Free & Accepted Masons, having membership in Emerson Lodge, and he is likewise affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, belonging to Lodge, No. 336, of Bristol, this state. He is one of the foremost citizens of Magnolia, is a man who takes an enthusiastic interest in every progressive public movement, and champions every cause that he feels will advance the welfare of the municipality either morally, intellectually, socially or financially.

GEORGE A. HENRY, M. D.

Dr. George A. Henry, who has successfully devoted his attention to the practice of medicine and surgery in Horatio during the past quarter of a century, was born in Haynesville, Louisiana, on the 13th of March, 1866. Practically his entire life, however, has been spent in Arkansas, for he was brought to Magnolia, this state, when but two years of age. He attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education and received his professional training in the medical department of the University of Louisville at Louisville, Kentucky, being graduated from that institution with the class of 1888. He first located for practice at Mars Hill and thence removed to Lewisville, Lafayette county, Arkansas, where he followed his profession until 1896, which year witnessed his arrival in Horatio. Here he has remained throughout the intervening period of twenty-five years and has been accorded a constantly growing practice that is indicative of his marked skill and ability in his chosen field. He owns two hundred acres of river bottom land and derives therefrom a gratifying annual income.

Dr. Henry has been twice married. He first wedded Mary T. Rudd and they had a daughter, Lessie, who is now the wife of B. L. Daniel. For his second wife the Doctor chose Miss Annie M. Mathews, by whom he has two children, Helen and George A., Jr.

Fraternally Dr. Henry is identified with the Masonic order, being a past master of his lodge, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Baptist church. He has ever conformed his practice to the highest standards and ethics and enjoys in unusual degree the confidence and respect of his professional colleagues. Brought to Arkansas when but two years of age, he has witnessed the growth and development of the commonwealth during the past half century and has been an active factor in all movements which have contributed to the welfare and upbuilding of his home community.

WILLIAM FRANK NORRELL.

William Frank Norrell, one of Arkansas' native sons, is devoting his attention to the practice of law and is recognized as one of the rising young attorneys of Monticello, being a member of the firm of Wilson & Norrell, accorded a large and distinctively representative clientage. He was born in Milo, Ashley county, August 29, 1896, his parents being Frank and Sarah Elvie (Richardson) Norrell, the former a native of Alabama and the latter born in Drew county, Arkansas, where their marriage occurred. The father followed the occupation of farming and also conducted a general store in Milo for many years, being numbered among the enterprising merchants of the town. He died in 1898. The mother is still a resident of Milo.

In the acquirement of an education William F. Norrell attended the public schools of Milo, the Fourth District State Agricultural School and the College of the Ozarks at Clarksville, in which he completed his course in 1918. He then entered the Arkansas Law School at Little Rock, from which he was graduated with the class of 1919, and in May, 1920, he was admitted to the bar. In June of that year he began his professional career at Monticello, becoming a partner of R. W. Wilson, at that time assistant United States district attorney, and this relationship has since been maintained. Their interests are conducted under the firm style of Wilson & Norrell and they are numbered among the most successful attorneys in southeastern Arkansas. They have built up a large clientele in Monticello and have been retained as counsel by many large corporations, among which may be mentioned the United States Fidelity & Guarantee Company, the Hankins Hardware Company, the Bailey Production Oil Company and the American Surety Company.

Studious by nature, Mr. Norrell has closely applied himself to the mastery of legal principles and his ability is manifest in the clearness of his reasoning and the logic of his deductions. High ideals guide him in every relation of life and he adheres to the strictest ethics in his professional work. He is an alert and enterprising young man, who is actuated by laudable ambition to progress and in his practice he displays a conscientious zeal and energy that are carrying him steadily forward. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Eureka Lodge, No. 40, F. & A. M.

JUDGE C. W. NOLAN.

Judge C. W. Nolan, serving for the second time on the bench of the Miller county court and highly esteemed as a resident of Texarkana, was born in Henry county, Georgia, January 7, 1847. He was seven years of age when his parents removed to Cass county, Texas, where he resided until 1870. He acquired a common school education and was reared upon a farm, early becoming thoroughly acquainted with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. The year 1870 witnessed his arrival in Arkansas, at which time he took up his abode in what was then Lafayette county but is now Miller county. Here he began farming and later he extended the scope of his business activities to include the operation of sawmills. He was thus engaged for about fifteen years and also handled timber, continuing in the business until 1909. In the meantime, or in 1900, he had removed to Texarkana and in 1910 he assumed the duties of county tax collector, to which office he had been chosen at the previous election. He continued to fill the position for four years and then in 1914 was elected police judge. He served upon the bench of the police court for about twenty months, when he resigned the position, having in the meantime been elected to the office of judge of the county court. He served during the years 1917 and 1918 and was then defeated for reelection, but at the end of another term he was once more chosen county judge at the election in 1920 and is again upon the bench. His decisions are strictly fair and impartial, being based upon the law and the evidence in the case, and the fact that he was again called to the position after an interim of two years indicates the confidence which the public has in him as a man and as a jurist.

On the 24th of November, 1873, Judge Nolan was married to Miss Louisa J. Mays and they became the parents of two children, but both died in infancy. Judge Nolan is an exemplary representative of the Masonic fraternity and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They are highly esteemed people and deserve classification with the representative residents of Arkansas. His life has long been the expression of high ideals in business and in public office and he still remains a factor in the world's work, although he has passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten, being now in his seventy-fifth year.

HON. ALLAN KENNEDY.

Hon. Allan Kennedy, who in business circles is well known by reason of the extensive insurance agency which he has built up and who is leaving the impress of his individuality and ability upon the political history of the state, now represents his district in the general assembly. Fort Smith classes him with her valued citizens, for his labors have brought about splendid results in connection with the upbuilding and progress of the city. He was born in Memphis, Tennessee, a son of Milton F. and Julia M. (Williams) Kennedy. The father was a son of John Kennedy, who removed from Richmond, Kentucky, to Farmington, Missouri, in the year 1820, taking his negro slaves with him. He was a nephew of General Thomas Kennedy, the noted Indian fighter and one of the distinguished Kentucky pioneers. The grandfather of Allan Kennedy in the maternal line was Duke Williams of Nashville, Tennessee, and his wife was a granddaughter of Colonel Nicholas Long, one of the Revolutionary war leaders of Halifax, North Carolina. Her name was, prior to her marriage, Mary Long.

Milton F. Kennedy, father of Allan Kennedy, was educated at Westminster College, Fulton, Missouri, and after residing for a number of years in Farmington, Missouri, he removed to Memphis, Tennessee, in the year 1865, there becoming a cotton broker, in which business he attained a notable measure of success. He continued his residence there until 1881 and then removed to Fort Smith, where he again engaged in the cotton trade and became one of the prominent cotton brokers of the southwest. He is now interested in oil development in Franklin and Logan counties of Arkansas. Moreover, he has been very prominent in the public life of Fort Smith, his activities being a direct and beneficial force in bringing about the present-day welfare and prosperity of the city. To him and his wife have been born three sons and a daughter: Owen, who died in Denver, Colorado, in October, 1921; Allan, of this review; John J., who is located in New Orleans; and Lucy W., the wife of Harry K. Albers.

Allan Kennedy was educated in the public schools of Fort Smith and following the completion of his school days he secured a situation as teller in the Merchants Bank, there remaining for three years. On the expiration of that period he turned his attention to the insurance business, some years later organizing the firm of Kennedy & Albers, his associate in the undertaking being Harry K. Albers. For a number of years he represented as Special Agent for Arkansas the Aetna Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut. They now represent twenty-three different insurance companies, handling fire, life and accident insurance. They have developed an agency of notable proportions and Mr. Kennedy ranks among the best known and most prominent insurance men of the southwest.

Moreover, he has figured very prominently in public affairs and in 1918 was elected a member of the state legislature. He has promoted and fostered progressive legislation, being the author of a bill which was passed creating a municipal court at Fort Smith, also the bill for the improvement of roads leading to Fort Smith, a project involving the expenditure of eight hundred thousand dollars. He is also the author of a bill to improve and convert the old state capitol into a permanent war museum, that it may be used as a meeting place for patriotic societies. Mr. Kennedy was chairman of the house committee that was appointed to visit the State University, a visit that resulted in raising the tax levy for the university from four-ninths of a mill to one mill and thus greatly promoted the facilities and work of the institution. It was Mr. Kennedy who proposed a joint resolution in the two houses advocating a change in the United States constitution, enabling all treaties to be ratified by a majority of congress. He also introduced into the general assembly a workmen's compensation bill and proposed a measure for resubmittal of the new constitution. He likewise introduced a bill creating a city manager for larger cities and was the author of an act creating a new insurance code and stipulating certain qualifications for agents that the standards of insurance work might be maintained. His legislative work was of a most practical character, looking to the benefit and upbuilding of the commonwealth, and his labors brought excellent results.

Mr. Kennedy served for several years as inspector general of the State Guard with rank of brigadier, having previously acted as captain of a local militia company. He was the first president and organizer of the Arkansas Association of Local Fire Insurance Agents. He is a member of various local civic bodies and also of the Sons of the American Revolution. There is no good work instituted for the benefit of community, commonwealth or country that does not receive his endorsement and his labors have been an effective force for Arkansas development. In Fort Smith he ranks not only as a capitalist but as one of the most honored and valued citizens. He has prospered in his undertakings and aside from his insurance business is today the owner of the Kennedy building, a modern office building erected in 1907. It is one of the attractive and substantial structures of Fort Smith and stands as a monument to the enterprise and business ability of the builder.

During the war with Germany Mr. Kennedy was appointed by Herbert Hoover, a member of the state executive committee of the Food Administration, and served under Federal Food Administrator Hamp Williams as food administrator for Sebastian county. It was he who initiated the movement for the saving and return of flour by the people of the state, resulting in shipping the starving Belgians one hundred and twenty-nine straight carloads, given up as a patriotic sacrifice from the pantries of the people of Arkansas.

LOUIS BAUERLEIN.

Louis Bauerlein, cashier of the Valley Bank of Camden, was born in Kansas City, Missouri, April 24, 1864, and is a son of John and Barbara (Frederitzi) Bauerlein, the former a native of Bavaria, while the latter was born in the United States. The father came to the new world in his boyhood, the family living for a time in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, whence they came to the west, taking up their abode in what is now Kansas City. There John Bauerlein attained his majority, was married and engaged in merchandising, being prominently identified with that line of business to the time of his death, which occurred in 1909.

Louis Bauerlein attended the Washington School of Kansas City until his thirteenth year, at which time he became a wage earner, serving as driver of a bakery wagon. Later he entered upon an apprenticeship to the machinist's trade but after three years abandoned work of that character and found employment with Whipple Brothers, real estate dealers. Later he worked in the private bank of Whipple, Cowherd & Company, which was his initial training in connection with the banking business. Subsequently this firm organized the Citizens National Bank of Kansas City and with this new banking institution Mr. Bauerlein worked his way upward from the humble position of porter to that of receiving teller. He continued with the bank until 1888, when he resigned to accept a position with the Bank of Camden in Camden, Arkansas. Two years later, or in 1891, he became identified with the Ouachita Valley Bank, with which he has remained, covering a period of thirty years. Throughout this time he has had much to do with formulating the banking policy and to him much credit is due for the wonderful growth and good name of the institution. When entering into active connection with the Ouachita Valley Bank, Mr. Bauerlein was made bookkeeper and subsequently was advanced to the post of assistant cashier, while about 1915 he was made cashier of the bank. About 1909 he became one of the principal organizers of the Carson Dry Goods Company of Camden and was chosen secretary and treasurer, since which time he has served in that official capacity. His judgment is sound, his sagacity keen and his industry unfaltering and the sterling traits which he has displayed in all business connections have constituted important sources of success for the enterprises which he thus represents.

On the 29th of February, 1890, Mr. Bauerlein was married to Miss Cora Holmes of Camden, and they are parents of two living children: Beatrix, the wife of Hon. Lamar B. Smead, ex-state senator and a prominent attorney of Camden; and Ida Louise, at home. The wife and mother departed this life April 19, 1921, her death being deeply regretted by many friends as well as by her immediate family.

Mr. Bauerlein belongs to Camden Lodge, No. 1140, B. P. O. E., and also to Ouachita Camp, No. 19, W. O. W., while in Masonry he is connected with Camden Lodge, No. 11, A. F. & A. M.; Whitfield Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M.; Western Missouri Consistory, No. 2, A. & A. S. R., of Kansas City; and is an honorary member of Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, of Little Rock. He likewise belongs to Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff, and is a member of Columbia Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star at Magnolia. He has taken a very prominent part in Masonic activities and was grand orator of the Grand Lodge of Masons in 1915, while in 1916 he was elected junior grand deacon. In 1917 he was elected junior grand warden and in 1918 was promoted to deputy grand master, while in 1919 he served as grand master of the Grand Lodge of the state. Mr. Bauerlein has likewise been active in civic affairs and in educational work and for ten years was a member of the school board, during five years of which time he served as secretary of the board. His championship of educational interests has been manifested in many tangible ways and the results achieved have been highly satisfactory in connection with the work of the schools. During the World war Mr. Bauerlein served as treasurer of all the Red Cross drives and on the first drive he made the unprecedented record of collecting one hundred and twenty per cent of subscriptions. He also served as one of the local directors of the first and third Liberty Loan drives and was identified in some important capacity with all of the other drives. A one hundred per cent American, a business man of ability, a champion of education and all civic interests, Mr. Bauerlein has left the impress of his individuality for good upon the history of Camden and Ouachita county.

SAMUEL GIVENS DILLARD.

Samuel Givens Dillard, a well known cotton merchant of Little Rock, was born on a farm in Lamar county, Texas, January 29, 1879. His father, Miles Anderson Dillard, was a native of Illinois, born in the year 1812. He removed to the south in early manhood and owned and operated a plantation. He served as a private in the Mexican war and became a colonel in the Civil war, commanding the Ninth Texas Infantry. He died in Paris, Texas, in the year 1907, having for four years survived his wife, who in her maidenhood was Lucinda Olivia Burrow. She was born in Mississippi in 1821 and their marriage was celebrated in Tupelo, that state. Her death occurred in Blossom, Texas, in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Miles A. Dillard were the parents of nine sons and four daughters, and of this family four sons and one daughter are yet living.

Samuel G. Dillard, the youngest of the family, was educated in the country schools of Lamar and Delta counties, Texas, and his youthful experiences were those of the farm bred boy who divides his time between the duties of the schoolroom, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields. Reared in a cotton growing state he early became interested in the industry and turned his attention to the cotton trade as a merchant in Paris, Texas. He continued to operate there and at other points until 1905, when he removed to Little Rock and through the intervening period has since been well known as a cotton merchant of this city. He is the secretary-treasurer of the Little Rock Compress Company and is now serving as a director of the Cotton Exchange, of which he was the president in 1919. He is also identified with financial affairs as a director and the vice president of the Central Bank.

On the 9th of April, 1902, Mr. Dillard was married to Miss Jeffie Morris, who was born in Cooper, Texas, February 11, 1883. The two children of this marriage are Loraine, born April 27, 1906; and Wilma, born December 25, 1910.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Dillard has been a stalwart advocate of democratic principles. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and as a club man is well known through his membership in the Quapaw and Spring Lake Clubs. His life has ever been guided by high and honorable principles and he is a consistent and faithful member of the Winfield Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, South.

ROBERT A. HILTON, M. D.

Dr. Robert A. Hilton, deceased, was for a long period a prominent physician and surgeon of El Dorado and enjoyed in large measure the confidence, esteem and high regard of those with whom he came into contact. He was born in Simpson county, Mississippi, October 8, 1868, his youthful days being spent on the home farm on which his birth occurred. He early began work in the fields and soon had acquired practical knowledge of all phases of crop production. He attended the public schools and afterward had the benefit of a course in the Mississippi College at Clinton, that state. In young manhood he determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work and with that end in view he began studying privately, while later he attended the Louisville Medical College and the Tulane Medical College, now the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans, Louisiana. Later in life Dr. Hilton took post-graduate work two different times at Tulane University, New Orleans. Having qualified for the profession he came to Arkansas, settling first at Lisbon, where he remained from 1893 until 1895. He then returned to his home town in Mississippi, and there practiced for about six years, or until January, 1901, when he came to El Dorado, residing here to the time of his death. He was in partnership with Dr. Thompson in the early years of his practice here and later became a partner of Dr. Mahoney. His ability was recognized by his professional colleagues and contemporaries and by the general public as well and during the years of his residence in El Dorado his practice steadily increased in volume and importance. He was acknowledged a prominent member of his profession and he did important service on the health board.

On the 14th of February, 1898, Dr. Hilton was married to Miss Nannie E. Butler, a native of Simpson county, Mississippi, and reared in that locality. Besides a pleasant home in El Dorado Dr. Hilton owned a very fine fruit farm six miles south of the town, whereon he had a large peach orchard. His place comprised several hundred acres of land and in addition to his horticultural pursuits he raised corn and cotton. His life's labors were ended in death on the 24th of June, 1916, and his demise was the occasion of deep regret to his many friends. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity, in which he attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and he also had membership with the Mystic Shrine. He likewise belonged to the Knights of Pythias and to the modern Woodmen of America, while along strictly professional lines he was connected with the Union County and the Arkansas State Medical Societies, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He thus kept apace with the onward trend of the profession, being thoroughly familiar with modern thought and investigation as related to the science of medicine and surgery.

D. A. CARROLL.

Various business interests are profiting by the enterprise, sound judgment and keen sagacity of D. A. Carroll, who is giving his attention to the hardware trade, to farming and to banking at Charleston. He was born on a farm twelve miles north of this city, April 22, 1862, and is a son of Henry and Mary (Arbuckle) Carroll, who were natives of Mississippi and of Arkansas, respectively. The grandfather, Derosey Carroll, was a colonel in the Confederate army and was killed near his home by bushwhackers in 1862. The maternal grandfather, John D. Arbuckle, came to Arkansas in 1833 and obtained land in this state through his uncle, Matthew Arbuckle. Here his remaining days were spent and during the Civil war period he was shot in the leg by bushwhackers which rendered him a cripple for life.

DR. ROBERT A. HILTON

The marriage of Henry Carroll and Mary Arbuckle was celebrated in Franklin county, Arkansas, where the former took up the occupation of farming, which he followed throughout his remaining days, departing this life at the old homestead in 1871. His widow long survived him, her death occurring in 1920. They were faithful and consistent members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Carroll belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics he was a democrat and at the time of the Civil war he served in Monroe's regiment of the Confederate army. On one occasion he was captured but after three days succeeded in making his escape. To him and his wife were born five children, three of whom are living, D. A. being the eldest. The others are: John, who is located on a farm in Franklin county; and Emma, the wife of Thomas Davis, also a farmer of this county.

D. A. Carroll largely pursued his education in the schools of Booneville, attending the high school at the latter place. He then started out in the business world as a farmer and has always given his attention in a greater or less degree to agricultural pursuits. He still owns a large farm, which he has brought under a high state of cultivation and which returns to him a gratifying annual income. In 1907 he left the farm and took up his abode in Charleston, where he assisted in organizing the Charleston Hardware Company, of which he became the first president and has continued to serve in that capacity throughout the intervening period to the present time. He is also one of the directors of the Bank of Charleston and thus various business interests claim his attention and profit by his diligence and determination.

On the 1st of September, 1886, Mr. Carroll was married to Miss Mattie Rhyne, who was born in Booneville, Arkansas, a daughter of Marvel Rhyne, a merchant, who carried on business at Booneville for a number of years, becoming the pioneer merchant of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll have a family of four children, three of whom are living: Marvel, who occupies his father's farm; Forrest, who is in the hardware store at Charleston; and Susan, the wife of Charles Wakefield, a farmer, living near Charleston.

Mr. and Mrs. Carroll hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, contribute generously to its support and take a helpful part in its work. He is also a faithful follower of Masonic teachings and belongs to the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a democrat and while living at Booneville filled the office of mayor and has also occupied the position of chief executive of the city of Charleston. For eighteen years he was justice of the peace, rendering decisions strictly fair and impartial, so that he won golden opinions from all sorts of people. In 1893 he served in the state legislature and gave earnest and thoughtful consideration to all the vital questions which came up for settlement. He is never neglectful of any duty of citizenship and loyally supports any cause or project which he believes will benefit the community, commonwealth or country.

CHARLES VANCE SCOTT, M. D.

With keen recognition of the responsibility that devolves upon the physician and surgeon Dr. Charles Vance Scott is practicing his profession in Little Rock and his capability is making for continued success. Arkansas claims him as a native son, his birth having occurred in Gainesville, August 15, 1867. His parents were William H. and Emily Wesley (Stedman) Scott, both of whom have departed this life. The father was born in Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1827 and on coming to this state settled at Gainesville, where he followed the occupation of farming. The removal was made subsequent to the Civil war, in which he had served as a private in a North Carolina regiment for a period of four years. His political support was at all times given to the democratic party. His wife was born in Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1834, and their marriage was celebrated in that city in 1852. They became parents of a family of nine sons, six of whom are living. The mother died in 1887, while the father survived for more than two decades, his death occurring in 1911.

Born in Arkansas, in his youthful days Dr. Charles V. Scott attended the public schools of Gainesville and afterward spent two years as a student in the Barnes Medical College at St. Louis. He then returned to this state and was graduated in 1904 from the medical department of the University of Arkansas. Having thus qualified for professional activity, he at once entered upon practice as a physician and surgeon and has given his entire time to professional duties since that day. His efficiency has been constantly heightened by reason of his broad study and wide experience and at all times he keeps thoroughly informed concerning the latest scientific researches.

On the 10th of January, 1892, in Gainesville, Arkansas, Dr. Scott was married to Miss Martha Louise Greider, who was born in Altamont, Illinois, in 1870, and they have become parents of four children: Leon, who died in 1893; Vivian Merrell, the wife of I. J. Steed; Cleo Beatrice, who died in 1894; and Jessie Marie, whose death occurred in 1898.

Dr. Scott has always been a democrat in his political views. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias fraternity, also to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and to other societies. He and his wife are consistent and faithful members of the Winfield Memorial Methodist Episcopal church and he is serving on its board of stewards, doing everything in his power to promote the growth of the church and advance its object. Along professional lines his connection is with the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southwestern Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His life is characterized by high ideals and worthy purposes and he has accomplished great good for his fellowmen as the years have passed.

FERGUS O. MAHONY, M. D.

Dr. Fergus O. Mahony, displaying marked ability in the performance of professional duties as a physician and surgeon of El Dorado, is a native of the city which is still his home, his birth having here occurred July 30, 1879. His parents are Edmond and Mary R. (Klopher) Mahony, the former a native of County Cork, Ireland, while the latter was born in El Dorado, Arkansas, her parents having come to this section of the state from Sweden at a very early period in the pioneer development of Arkansas. The father was a tailor by trade and was employed along that line by the Confederate government during the period of the Civil war. Following the close of hostilities he worked for a time at his trade in El Dorado and when he had acquired some capital he engaged in general merchandising on his own account, being associated with that line of commercial activity to the time of his death in 1889. His wife survived until 1897. Mr. Mahony was filling the position of county treasurer of Union county when he became ill and on account of the condition of his health he resigned, after which he went to New Orleans for an operation. He never fully recovered and his death ensued some time later.

Dr. Mahony, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the University of Arkansas until he had completed a three years' course of study, after which he matriculated in the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans and there won his professional degree as a member of the class of 1908. In the summer of 1906, however, he entered upon the active work of his professional career. That spring, after medical lectures at the university were ended for the season, he went to Huttig, Union county, Arkansas, and acted as physician in charge of a logging camp of the Union Sawmill Company. In the following autumn he returned to the university and in the summer of 1907 he practiced in connection with Dr. R. A. Hilton of El Dorado. When he had completed his university course he settled in Huttig, where he continued in successful practice until 1914, when he returned to El Dorado and formed a partnership with Dr. R. A. Hilton, an association that was maintained until the death of the senior partner in 1916. Since that time Dr. Mahony has practiced independently and in the intervening years has built up an enviable reputation as a most capable, resourceful and successful general practitioner. During the latter part of Governor Hays administration he was appointed a member of the state board of health and in 1921 was elected president of the state board of health, while at the same time he is filling the positions of county health officer and city health officer. His marked ability is widely recognized and it is well known that he is keenly interested in everything that tends to bring to man the key to the complex mystery which we call life. He thinks broadly, studies deeply and carries his investigations far and wide into the realms of medical and surgical science.

In 1908 Dr. Mahony was married to Miss Minnie Lee Maguire of Fayetteville, Washington county, Arkansas, and they have become parents of three children: Minnie Lee, Fergus O. and Edmond Ossain. Dr. Mahony gives his political endorsement to the democratic party and is now representing Ward 1, in the El Dorado city council. He has membership in Roland Lodge, No. 594, A. F. & A. M., at Huttig, and is a member of Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., and also of Al-Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Little Rock. He belongs to El Dorado Lodge, No. 133, I. O. O. F., and to El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E. Along strictly professional lines his connection is with the Union County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. While the major part of his time and efforts is given to his professional interests and duties he nevertheless has found opportunity to aid those projects which are looking to the benefit and upbuilding of the community at large. He is a member of the Rotary Club, also of the Kamel Club and is a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. All who know him attest the sterling worth of his character and his devotion to duty, whether of a public or private nature and bear testimony to his progressiveness in citizenship and his hearty and effective endorsement of all those interests which are looking to the benefit and welfare of the community and the commonwealth.

ELMER WHEAT SMITH.

Elmer Wheat Smith of Searcy, who is filling the position of circuit clerk, is a native son of White county, his birth having occurred July 20, 1889. He is a son of J. F. and Sarah Elizabeth (Walker) Smith, who are also natives of White county. The paternal grandfather, J. L. Smith, was a native of Mississippi and engaged in farming in that state previous to his removal to Arkansas, which occurred in 1850, at which time he took up his abode in White county. He traveled across the country in a prairie schooner accompanied by five brothers and after reaching his destination homesteaded. He also engaged in freighting during the early days and as opportunity offered gave his attention to the further development and improvement of his farm. He had to clear his land, which was covered with timber and he used an ox team to break the sod and develop the place. There was much big game to be had in this section of the country in that early day and all of the conditions of pioneer life were here found. As the years passed his labors resulted in the development of a good farm property and he continued his residence in White county to the time of his death, which occurred in 1899 when he was sixty-eight years of age. In young manhood he was married, near Searcy, to Miss Sarah Skidmore and the house in which the marriage was celebrated is still standing, being one of the old landmarks of this section of the state. Mrs. Sarah Smith passed to the home beyond in 1920 at a notable age, being in her ninetieth year. The maternal grandfather of Elmer W. Smith was A. G. Walker, who removed from Tennessee to Arkansas but afterward returned to the former state. Later he again came to Arkansas, taking up his abode in White county. He opened a market in Searcy and engaged in selling meat and produce for a number of years. He married Saline Paige and died at the age of sixty years, while his wife departed this life at the age of sixty-two.

J. F. Smith, father of Elmer W. Smith, was born in White county in 1852, and acquired a common school education, pursuing his studies in one of the old-time log schoolhouses with its homemade benches and other primitive equipment. He remained with his parents to the age of twenty-nine years, when he married, purchased land and began farming for himself. As his tract was covered with timber he had to clear away the trees and brush ere he could break the sod. He still owns the land which he first purchased two miles from Searcy and has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising. He served as deputy sheriff of White county for a part of one term but has never been anxious to hold public office. He married Sarah Elizabeth Walker and to them have been born four children: Lorena, the wife of A. I. Darnall, a salesman with the Neelly & Smith Hardware Company at Searcy; Elmer W.; Grace, the wife of Dudley Morris, who follows farming near Searcy; and Hettie, the wife of F. J. Davenport, who is engaged in farming near McRae, White county. The parents are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and fraternally J. F. Smith is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with the Woodmen of the World. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party.

Elmer W. Smith attended the country schools of White county and afterward the high school at Searcy, while later he pursued a commercial course in the Memphis Business College at Memphis, Tennessee, and thus became well qualified for life's practical and responsible duties. He started out in the business world as bookkeeper for the Sandefur-Julian Wholesale Company of Little Rock and afterward came to Searcy to fill the position of deputy circuit clerk in 1914. For four years he occupied that position and in 1918 was elected circuit clerk, entering upon the duties of the office on the 1st of January, 1919. He was reelected at the close of his first term, so that he is now serving for the second term in office, devoting his entire time to his duties in this connection. He is prompt, reliable and systematic and his official record is winning him high commendation from all who know aught of his work.

Mr. Smith was married to Miss Martha Irene Chrisp, who was born in White county, a daughter of Horace Chrisp. They have become parents of two sons: Elmer Wheat and Edward Forest. Mr. Smith has always given his loyal support to the democratic party. He is well known in Masonic circles, belonging to Searcy Lodge No. 49, A. F. & A. M., while in Albert Pike Consistory of Little Rock he attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in November, 1921. He also belongs to Al Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he is serving as steward, and they take an active and helpful interest in all branches of the church work and contribute liberally to its support. They are well known socially in Searcy, where they have many friends, and the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by those who know them.

B. W. REEVES.

B. W. Reeves of El Dorado is senior partner in a large general mercantile store in which he has associated with him his sons and daughters. He has long been connected with commercial activity here and has manifested a spirit of the utmost progressiveness in controlling his interests. He was born in Union county, Arkansas, October 3, 1848, a son of John A. Reeves, who came from Georgia to Arkansas in 1845, settling on a farm near El Dorado, where he operated his land with the labor of the slaves whom he owned. His place was situated two miles northeast of El Dorado, and thereon he spent his remaining days, his death occurring in the fall of 1860.

B. W. Reeves was born and reared on the old homestead. He was only three years of age when his mother died, and a lad of twelve when his father's demise occurred. He attended one of the old-time subscription schools held in a log building, and when still quite young he and his elder brother operated the home farm. He turned to commercial pursuits when twenty-two years of age by securing a clerkship in the store of T. C. Moore & Son of El Dorado, with whom he remained for three years. He then returned to the farm, upon which he again lived for three years, and later he opened a small country store at Hillsboro, carrying on business for a year. He next engaged in clerking for a few months, and then in March, 1879, established a store under the firm style of Reeves & Gresham, this partnership being maintained for two years, at the end of which time Mr. Reeves purchased the interest of his partner, who had died. Later the firm became Reeves & Miles, and the business was carried on at the present location for two years. At the end of that time Mr. Reeves purchased the interest of his partner and afterward carried on the business independently until January, 1921, when he admitted his four sons and three daughters to a partnership. They have a large and well-appointed general store, and in 1900 erected a fine brick building fifty by one hundred and fifty feet. Aside from his connection with the mercantile interests of El Dorado, Mr. Reeves became the first president of the First National Bank and is still one of its stockholders. He is also a director in the Bank of Commerce and he has oil interests in Arkansas, being connected not only with oil companies, but also with oil refining companies. He is the oldest merchant of the city and one of the most enterprising and progressive business men, having long been a potent factor in the commercial development of El Dorado.

On the 13th of November, 1879, Mr. Reeves was united in marriage to Miss Julia S. Moore, and they have seven children, all now connected with the business. In 1872 Mr. Reeves purchased the block where he lives, the property now being worth one hundred thousand dollars.

In community affairs Mr. Reeves has ever taken deep and helpful interest. He has served as mayor of El Dorado, has been a member of the school board for a number of years and is the stalwart champion of all those interests which are a matter of civic virtue and civic pride. He has for an extended period been a consistent member of the Baptist church and is chairman of the building committee of the new Baptist church which is now being built at a cost of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The cornerstone was laid by Mr. Reeves on Sunday, March 12, 1922. His life has ever been guided by those high and honorable principles which command for the individual respect and confidence in every land and every clime.

S. A. HENRY.

S. A. Henry, a representative of a family that for over sixty years has been identified with the development and upbuilding of Arkansas, is now living retired in Russellville, Arkansas, after many years devoted to agricultural pursuits, and he has also been called upon to fill public positions of honor and trust. A native of South Carolina, he was born in 1841, and his parents were Andrew K. and Elizabeth Serena (Parker)

Henry, who were also born in that state, the former a native of York county and the latter of Union county. They were married in that state and in 1856 came to Arkansas, settling in Pope county, where the father acquired a tract of land. This he cleared and developed, transforming it into a productive and well-improved property and continuing active in its cultivation until after he had reached the age of eighty-six years. Both he and his wife died on that place. They at first resided in a log house, which was replaced after the Civil war by a substantial frame dwelling, and in his farming operations Mr. Henry was quite successful, owning about ten negroes. He was a veteran of the Civil war, and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party, while in religious faith he was a Presbyterian. He was a son of Charles W. Henry, who was born in York county, South Carolina, and was there reared and educated. The maternal grandfather, Silas R. Parker, was also a native of South Carolina, and in 1859 came to Arkansas, where he spent his remaining years. To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew K. Henry were born ten children, four of whom survived: S. A., of this review; Kate, who is the widow of W. O. Ferguson and resides in Russellville; Lizzie, who married William M. Henry and is living on a farm in Pope county, and Charles W., who resides on the old homestead.

S. A. Henry received a fair education, and in 1861, when a young man of twenty, enlisted in the Confederate army, becoming a member of Company B of the Second Arkansas Mounted Rifles. He served from June, 1861, until July, 1865, participating in many important engagements in the Civil war. He was wounded on two different occasions and was discharged from the service with the rank of lieutenant. Returning home, he assisted his father for two years in the cultivation of the old homestead, working without pecuniary reward, and then secured a farm on credit. Through hard work and the exercise of careful economy he was soon able to discharge his indebtedness, and after residing on that place for a number of years he moved to Russellville. At the end of two years he returned to his farm, on which he spent a similar period. He then decided permanently to abandon agricultural pursuits and has since resided in Russellville, where he owns an attractive home. He is now living retired, in his eighty-first year, in the enjoyment of a comfortable competence, earned through former years of untiring industry, perseverance and well directed efforts. His fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, called him to public office, and in 1894 he was elected sheriff of Pope county, capably discharging the duties of that position for two terms, or until 1898. For a time he engaged in the fuel business and was then chosen county treasurer, serving in that capacity for one term.

Mr. Henry has been married twice. In 1867 he wedded Miss Nannie Bigham, a native of North Carolina. Her father died during her infancy, and she was reared by her grandfather. Mrs. Henry died in 1897, leaving seven children: R. B., who is engaged in raising horses and mules, in addition to other stock, and is a resident of Russellville; C. Walter, a farmer and trader of Russellville; Jennings M., who is associated in business with his brother, R. B.; J. G., who is also a partner in that business; D. B., who is connected with the People's Exchange Bank of Russellville; Thomas S., who assists his brothers in their stock raising operations, and Lillie, who married S. J. Rye, a leading grocer of Russellville. The Henry brothers have been very successful in the conduct of their stock raising interests and are classed with the leading dealers in horses and mules in this part of the state. They operate on an extensive scale, and during the World war secured a contract to furnish the government with horses and mules. They own a large, substantial barn which covers almost an entire block, and are progressive, energetic and thoroughly reliable business men, whose intelligently directed efforts have been rewarded with a gratifying degree of success. In 1908 Mr. Henry, Sr., was again married, his second wife being Mrs. Hattie McKay, whose first husband was a physician.

In his political views Mr. Henry is a democrat, and in religious faith he is a Presbyterian. His has been a long, honorable and upright life, actuated by high ideals and characterized by devotion to duty, and as one of the pioneer settlers of Pope county he is accorded the respect and esteem of an extensive circle of friends, all of whom attest his genuine personal worth.

HARALSON & NELSON.

Although young in years, the two members of the firm of Haralson & Nelson, architects, with offices in the Merchants National Bank building at Fort Smith, have made a splendid record in their profession. Their patronage is now extensive and their business has reached most gratifying proportions, many splendid structures standing as monuments to their skill and ability. J. J. Haralson was born in Lagrange, Georgia, in the year 1895, and in the acquirement of his education attended the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, which conferred upon him the degrees of Bachelor and of Master of Science. Early in his professional career he was associated with the E. E. Dunlap Company, well-known architects of Indianapolis, Indiana, and in 1917 came to Fort Smith, where he has since remained, and through the intervening period has successfully followed his profession. In 1919 he formed a partnership with Mr. Nelson, and the association has since been maintained most satisfactorily. At the time of the World war Mr. Haralson joined the coast artillery, enlisting at San Antonio, Texas, and winning a commission as second lieutenant.

E. C. Nelson was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, July 26, 1894, and was a lad of six summers when his parents removed to Birmingham, Alabama, in 1900. His professional training was also received in the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. His early office training was received while in the employ of the firm of Miller & Martin, architects of Birmingham, and he was afterward associated with Frederick Ausfeld, a well-known architect of Montgomery, Alabama. He has remained in Fort Smith since 1919, at which time he entered into a partnership with Mr. Haralson. He had also been in the army, having served for about two years during the period of the World war. The firm of Haralson & Nelson gained almost immediate recognition by reason of their professional skill and ability, and they now occupy a most enviable place as architects of the southwest. Both have been thoroughly trained and have had wide experience for men of their years, and that they are doing splendid work is evidenced in the many substantial and beautiful structures which they have erected. They were the architects of the Arkansas Valley Bank, the store of the W. A. Johnson Clothing Company, the Presbyterian Sunday school, the Ninth Street Baptist church, also the Stadium at Fort Smith and the residence of Buckner Williams at Fort Smith, the Masonic Temple of Fort Smith and the Tuberculosis Hospital for Fort Smith District of Sebastian county. They have a thorough understanding of all of the scientific phases as well as the practical features which underlie their work, and as the years go by their developing powers are bringing them more and more into prominence.

T. L. BATES.

T. L. Bates, principal of the Washington school at Fayetteville, is one of the native sons of Washington county and his life record stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for in this section of the state, in which his life has been passed, Mr. Bates has won a most creditable and enviable position as a prominent representative of the educational system of Arkansas. He was born May 4, 1869, his parents being Henderson and Eleanor (Crozier) Bates. The former was a son of James Bates, a native of Virginia, who removed to Tennessee and there spent his remaining days, devoting his life to the occupation of farming. The mother was a daughter of John B. Crozier, whose birth occurred in Tennessee and who traveled with team and wagon to Arkansas. He was a justice of the peace or "squire" for a number of years and he devoted much of his life to the profession of teaching.

Henderson Bates was born in Tennessee, May 4, 1804, and when he decided to become a resident of this state he walked the entire distance from Memphis, Tennessee, to Batesville, in 1827. He bought a horse from his brother at Batesville and rode horseback to the Canehill country, where he spent his remaining days. He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Nancy Miller and they became the parents of nine children, of whom two are living: J. Y. Bates, a merchant of Texas, who also served as district clerk in that state; and W. F., who is a farmer at Canehill. After losing his first wife Henderson Bates married Mrs. Eleanor (Crozier) Pyatt, who was born in Tennessee, November 30, 1831, and was the widow of Jacob Pyatt, who was killed in the Confederate army. By her first marriage she had three children, all of whom are deceased. To the second marriage there were born three children, two of whom are living: Mrs. Nannie Matteson, a widow, residing in Texas; and T. L., of this review. The father departed this life July 30, 1888, while the mother died in 1896. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian church and their sterling traits of character won for them the confidence and goodwill of all who knew them.

T. L. Bates was educated at Canehill College and at the Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. He afterward went to Oklahoma, where he engaged in teaching for five years and was principal of a preparatory school at Chelsea conducted under the auspices of the Presbyterian church. Removing to Fayetteville he was principal of the Leverette school for a period of ten years and later became principal of the Washington school, in which position he has continued for eleven years. He has been engaged in educational work altogether for twenty-six years and twenty-one years of this period has been passed in Fayetteville. He owns a farm of twenty acres near the university and has four and a half acres planted to fruit, to which he gives his personal supervision. He likewise has quite a large poultry farm and it has been a source of gratifying income to him.

In 1896 Mr. Bates was united in marriage to Miss Frances Kelleam, who was born in Charleston, Arkansas, a daughter of Dr. Kelleam, for many years a practicing physician and surgeon of this state and a veteran of the Confederate forces in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Bates have three children, only one of whom is living, Margaret, who is now a senior in the State University of Arkansas. The parents are members of the Central Presbyterian church and fraternally Mr. Bates is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. He has never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty but has concentrated his efforts and attention upon his professional duties and is classed with the eminent educators of the southwest. He is a man of pronounced ability, by reason of the fact that he has continually studied educational conditions and needs and has possessed the initiative that has resulted in forming progressive methods and ideas in relation to the school work. His labors have been far-reaching and resultant and there is no one to whom the success and improvement of the Fayetteville schools is so largely due as T. L. Bates.

SAMUEL B. STEELE, M. D.

Dr. Samuel B. Steele, actively engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Hot Springs, was born in Benton, Arkansas, June 6, 1869, and is a son of Samuel B. Steele, who served throughout the Civil war as a member of the Confederate army and who died when his son Samuel was in his first year. The mother died when the son was but three years of age, and thus left an orphan, he was reared by an uncle, John L. Hughes, who resided at Little Rock and was a well-known merchant and planter there.

Dr. Steele was educated in the public schools of the capital city, passing through consecutive grades to the high school, and thus laying a good foundation for his professional knowledge. He first began reading medicine with Dr. A. H. Scott, and in 1892 he matriculated in the Louisville Medical College at Louisville, Kentucky, in which he completed his course by graduation with the class of 1894. Immediately he opened an office in Hot Springs, hanging out his sign here five days after graduating. Four months later he moved into the building which he now occupies, and his office has since been maintained here. He gives his attention exclusively to his practice and professional duties. In 1895 he served as health officer and at all times has aided in maintaining the highest standards in the municipal health service. He was likewise a member of the city council from 1895 until 1897, and he exercised his official prerogatives in support of all plans and measures for the general good.

Dr. Steele was united in marriage to Miss Harriet L. Gillis, and to them has been born a son, Gerald, twelve years of age. Dr. and Mrs. Steele occupy an attractive home which is the abode of warm-hearted hospitality. He is a stockholder in the Arkansas National Bank, but gives his attention mainly to his professional duties, and has membership in the County, State, Southern, Southwestern and American Medical Associations. Through the proceedings of these bodies he keeps in touch with the trend of modern professional thought, investigation and progress. He is a most competent physician, conscientious in the performance of all his professional duties, and his knowledge, ability and sound judgment are manifest in the liberal practice accorded him.

HON. EDMOND PENN WATSON.

Hon. Edmond Penn Watson, a member of one of the pioneer families of Arkansas, has been a representative of the Bentonville bar since 1872 and is the dean of the profession in this district. He has also figured prominently in connection with public affairs in Arkansas and his record is a credit and honor to the state which has honored him. He was born at Van Buren, Arkansas, August 31, 1848, and has therefore passed the seventy-third milestone on life's journey, but is still an active factor in the world's work. His parents, William Albert and Christiana L. (Crews) Watson, were natives of Virginia, whence they removed to Arkansas in 1847, casting their lot with the pioneer settlers of the state. They located at Van Buren, where for a number of years the father successfully engaged in merchandising. He was a democrat in his political views, and Mrs. Watson was a member of the Baptist church. She died at Fayetteville, Arkansas, in January, 1872, having for twenty years survived her husband, whose demise occurred at Van Buren in 1852. They were widely known and highly respected residents of their section of the state. In their family were nine children, seven sons and two daughters, and all but two are deceased, those who survive being Clementine, the widow of Thomas H. Boles, and the subject of this review.

In the acquirement of an education Mr. Watson attended the schools of Fayetteville, this state, and at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the north and the south he was a student at Arkansas College. During the Civil war he aided in supporting the family and after its close engaged in clerical work for two years. He then took up the study of law under the direction of Major W. D. Reagan, and in 1869 was admitted to the bar, entering upon the work of the profession in Boone county, Arkansas, where he remained for nearly four years. In 1872 he came to Bentonville, where he has continued in practice. His ability has developed with the passing years, which have brought to him broad experience, and that he has won the confidence and support of the public is indicated by the large clientage accorded him. He has been admitted to practice in all the courts and has ever held to high standards in professional service. He displays keen discrimination in the solution of intricate problems of the law and is seldom at fault in the application of a legal principle. He prepares his cases with great thoroughness and his arguments are forceful and convincing, while his deductions are at all times logical.

In December, 1873, Mr. Watson was united in marriage to Miss Grace Dinsmore, a native of Benton county and a daughter of A. W. Dinsmore, who came to Arkansas about 1846 and for many years successfully followed merchandising at Bentonville. To Mr. and Mrs. Watson have been born eight children of whom seven survive: Catherine C., the eldest, attended the grammar and high schools of Bentonville and the State University and is now a teacher of expression at Clarksville, Arkansas; Rebecca D. and Mary M. are twins. The former is the wife of E. C. De Shong, a traveling salesman residing at Bentonville, while the latter is employed as private secretary by a large business house of Denver, Colorado; William W. is interested in the oil business at Wichita Falls, Texas; Grace is the wife of W. Bull, a prominent automobile dealer of Syracuse, New York; Edmund Penn, Jr., is a civil engineer by profession and is now residing at San Diego, California; Charles Clement is traveling auditor for the Sinclair Oil Company, his home being at Bentonville.

Mrs. Watson is a member of the Presbyterian church, while Mr. Watson is affiliated with the Episcopal denomination. He is a staunch democrat in his political views and has been called to public positions of importance and trust. In 1871 he was chosen to represent Boone county, Arkansas, in the state legislature, being the youngest member of the house, and in 1877 he was called upon to represent Benton county in that body, while in the following year he was elected state senator from the twenty-fourth district, comprising Benton and Madison counties. He has long been an active worker in the ranks of the party and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1917-18. He has done much to shape public thought and opinion, leaving the impress of his individuality indelibly upon the history of the state, and in his public service has ever looked beyond the exigencies of the moment to the opportunities and possibilities of the future. For almost a half century he has been a member of the Benton county bar, and that his life has been an honorable and upright one is evidenced in the high regard entertained for him by his colleagues in the profession as well as the general public.

JAMES FRANK BLAKEMORE, D. D. S.

One of the youngest members of the dental profession in Arkansas is Dr. James Frank Blakemore, who has been practicing here since July, 1919. He is a native of this state, his birth having occurred at Prairie Grove in 1898, a son of T. M. and Jennie (Allen) Blakemore. His father is now engaged in farming at Prairie Grove.

James Frank Blakemore is the youngest of seven children born to his parents, and he was reared in Prairie Grove. After graduating from the high school there he entered the St. Louis University and received his degree of D. D. S. in June, 1919. During the World war he enlisted in the Medical Reserve Corps and upon completion of his dental course he was to have received a commission in the army. In 1918 he was transferred to the Students Army Training Corps. He never received his commission in the army, because the armistice was signed before he completed his course. In July, 1919, he came to Van Buren and in spite of his youth he has built up a large and lucrative practice.

On February 25, 1921, Dr. Blakemore was united in marriage to Miss Glenn Goldsby, a daughter of Mrs. Lora Goldsby of Fort Smith. Fraternally Dr. Blakemore is identified with the Masons and the Knights of Pythias, and he likewise holds membership in Delta Sigma Delta, a college fraternity. In the line of his profession he is identified with the National and State Dental Associations and as a citizen always interested in the development and improvement of the community, he is active in the interests of the Rotary Club and the Business Men's Club of Van Buren. In his practice he is always careful and he is conscientious in the performance of his professional duties. His colleagues recognize his worth and ability, and that public opinion is favorable to him is indicated in the liberal patronage accorded him.

CHARLES ERNEST DICKEN, LL. D.

A most prominent figure in educational circles in Arkansas is Dr. Charles Ernest Dicken, the president of Ouachita College at Arkadelphia. He was born in Elizabethtown, Hardin county, Kentucky, December 1, 1877, and is a son of the Rev. Charles W. and Mary (Williams) Dicken, the latter a daughter of William Williams, D. D., who was one of the founders of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Greenville, South Carolina. The Rev. Charles W. Dicken, deceased, was born in Campbell county, Kentucky, November 24, 1842, and his life record covers the intervening years to June, 1913. He was the ninth in order of birth in a family of four sons and six daughters, whose parents were Charles and Mary (Cherry) Dicken. His father was a native of Campbell county, Kentucky, and died in 1863, at the age of sixty-three years. He in turn was a son of Joseph Dicken of Virginia, who was one of the heroes of the Revolutionary war and who became a resident of Campbell county, Kentucky, about 1795. There he owned a large farm and many slaves. He was of English and Welsh origin, the family being established on American soil in colonial days. Joseph Dicken wedded Mary Sntton of Virginia, and died at the ripe old age of eighty four years. Succeeding generations of the family continued to reside in Campbell county, Kentucky, and there Charles Dicken, grandfather of Dr. Dicken of Arkadelphia, made his home for many years. He wedded Mary Cherry, a daughter of Nicholas Cherry, who removed from Pennsylvania to Kentucky during the pioneer epoch in the history of the latter state.

Their son, Charles W. Dicken, spent his youthful days in the usual manner of the farm bred boy, and upon his father's death was thrown on his own resources for a livelihood. When but eighteen years of age he was licensed to teach school, which he did for a time, and then became a student in Bethel College, while in 1864 he matriculated in Toronto University at Toronto, Canada. Some time later he became a student in Georgetown College in the District of Columbia, and was there graduated in 1868. On the 12th of July of that year he was ordained to the ministry of the Baptist church and engaged in teaching and preaching for a year at Aspen Grove, Pendleton county, Kentucky. He then entered the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Greenville, South Carolina, in which he studied for two years, after which he took charge of churches in Kentucky, spending two years in pastoral work in Woodford county and two years in Elizabethtown, Kentucky, where he engaged in both teaching and preaching. Later he became president of Murray Institute of Calloway county, and still later was actively engaged in ministerial work for five years. In June, 1884, he located near Bowling Green, Kentucky, where he had charge of several churches.

On the 26th of March, 1871, the Rev. Charles W. Dicken wedded Miss Mary Williams of Greenville, South Carolina, who is a native of Montgomery, Alabama, and a daughter of Dr. William and Ruth (Bell) Williams, who were born near Athens, Georgia. Dr. Williams was educated in the Georgia University and acquired his law education in Boston, after which he practiced his profession for four or five years in Montgomery, Alabama, winning a large clientage and proving himself a strong and able advocate in the courts. Believing that he could accomplish greater good and be of more lasting benefit to his fellow-men in other fields, he entered the ministry, and after twelve years of hard labor accepted a professorship in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Greenville, South Carolina, which position he filled with honor and ability until his death on the 20th of February, 1877, when he was fifty-five years of age. His father was William Williams, a wealthy and influential planter of Georgia.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles W. Dicken had a family of five children: William Edward; Ruth Bell and Marcissa McCay, both deceased; Charles Ernest, and Hubert Alvin. Mr. Dicken had given his political allegiance to the democratic party and fraternally was connected with the Masons.

The second son, Charles E. Dicken, was educated in William Jewell College of Missouri, being graduated therefrom with the class of 1903, at which time the Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred upon him. Ouachita College conferred upon him the Doctor of Divinity degree in 1916, and from Baylor University at Waco, Texas, he received the Doctor of Laws degree in 1920. Following his graduation from William Jewell College he became associate principal of the Liberty Ladies' College of Liberty, Missouri, and continued in active connection with that institution until 1911, at which time he was elected president of Woodlawn College at Jonesboro, Arkansas. Three years were there spent, and he was then elected president of Mary Connor College at Paris, Texas, and in 1916 he was elected to the presidency of Ouachita College at Arkadelphia, where he has remained for five years. The school under his direction has made steady and continuous progress, not only in the matter of attendance, but also in the methods of instruction and the system maintained in all the school work.

In the year 1906 Dr. Dicken was married to Miss Belle H. Quick, a daughter of Albert R. Quick, one of the officials of the Rocky Mountain Coal & Coke Company of Raton, New Mexico. Dr. and Mrs. Dicken have one son, Albert R., who was born February 7, 1910. In his political views Dr. Dicken has always been a democrat and he has been an active and prominent factor in public affairs, especially such as have to do with the welfare, progress and benefit of the community. He is a member of the commission of charities and corrections of the state of Arkansas, is a member of the Southern Education Association, of the American Geographical Society and is now at the head of the leading Baptist college of the state and one of the foremost educational institutions in Arkansas. Fraternally he is connected with Liberty Lodge, No. 31, A. F. & A. M., of Liberty, Missouri, and throughout his life has been a faithful follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. His life has ever been guided by high ideals, and his methods of attainment have been of a most practical character. He has ever regarded the teaching profession as a means of preparation for life, and his work, therefore, has been dominated by the most earnest efforts to prepare the young for later duties and responsibilities. His successful work has won wide recognition, and today he is classed with the eminent educators of the southwest.

EDWARD W. GIBB.

When New England thrift and enterprise are added to western opportunity, the results are certain. From the eastern coast have come men of energy and determination who have recognized the chances for development and progress beyond the Mississippi and have contributed largely to the work of upbuilding and improvement. To this class belonged Edward W. Gibb and in his life's story there is much of inspirational value, much that can serve as an example to others. Mr. Gibb was born in Hinesburg, Vermont. He was educated in private schools and at an academy and was still pursuing his studies at the age of nineteen years when his father died, leaving a family of six children, of whom Edward W. was the eldest. He took over his father's business, that of dealing in carriage furnishings and material, and a few years later removed to Chicago, where he established a carriage furnishings and material business, which was successful from the beginning. Within a short time he had established a wholesale concern for carriage goods in a five-story building filled with a large stock and was conducting a most profitable trade when in October, 1871, the Chicago fire wiped out his establishment, causing him a heavy loss. Although he saved nothing he paid one hundred cents on the dollar to his creditors. In December, 1871, through the influence of a brother he came to Little Rock, here joining his brother, Henry Gibb, in the sawmill and lumber business. At first Edward W. Gibb worked for wages, with the desire to see how the business was conducted in the south. He soon learned that methods were far different from those employed in the north. He had been trained to strict economy and in the thrifty way of the New Englander and his early training made deep impression upon him and was of great value to him in later life. He saw where many improvements could be made in the way of managing the sawmill and lumber business and eventually he purchased the lumber interests of his brother and organized a company under the firm name of Butler, Gibb & Company. This company conducted the famous old red mill at the foot of Spring street. For years he successfully conducted this enterprise and his progressive methods, close application and indefatigable energy brought to him a substantial measure of success.

In 1857 Mr. Gibb was united in marriage to Miss Isabella A. Emerson, who had been reared in a home of refinement and culture and was liberally educated in New York state. She has spent three seasons in travel in Europe and one in the Orient and gleaned much interesting and valuable knowledge from her travels, possessing an observing eye and retentive memory. Coming to Little Rock, she at once became a favorite in social circles here. She was always a great student of ancient and religious history and has perhaps one of the best photographic collections of Oriental history and places which can be found in America. Her liberal culture and truly womanly qualities have caused her to be loved and esteemed by the people throughout the state, wherever she is known. To Mr. and Mrs. Gibb were born two sons: Fred Emerson, who died, aged twenty-three, a very promising young man, who was loved and respected by all who knew him; and Frank W., who is an architect of Little Rock and has attained eminence in his chosen field. Mr. Gibb built one of the large and beautiful southern homes of Little Rock, which was occupied by the family until after the son's death. At all times it was Mr. Gibb's desire to make Little Rock a city of great beauty as well as of commercial prominence and he ever bent his energies in that direction. He was an advocate of giving sites to induce manufacturers to locate here and to exempt them from taxation for a few years until they should be placed upon a substantial business basis. His views in this respect, however, were not popular with the powers that were, yet there are many who acknowledge that such a course would have been of greatest possible benefit to Little Rock.

Mr. Gibb retired from business in 1887, some time prior to his death, giving his attention thereafter to the management of his large property interests, for he had made extensive investments in real estate and derived therefrom a most gratifying income. His last days were spent in Chicago, whither he had gone to escape the oppressive heat of the summer in the south. There he was taken ill and died suddenly, on the 19th of August, 1901. In his passing Little Rock lost one of her most respected and representative men. He was a member of the Eclectic Club and the Shakespeare Club. In politics he was a republican, but never an office-seeker. His position as one of the foremost and honored residents of Little Rock always remains unchallenged.

WILLIAM E. WATKINS.

William E. Watkins, a lumber dealer and hardware merchant of Mena, actuated by a spirit of enterprise and progressiveness in the conduct of his commercial interests, was born near Birmingham, Alabama, November 29, 1868, and is a son of Wiley M. and Amanda (Inzer) Watkins. The father, who was born in Tennessee in 1830, died in 1904, while the mother, who was born in Alabama in 1843, now makes her home in Mena. The Watkins family was early established in South Carolina, where Daniel Watkins was born, but about 1802 he removed to Alabama and there followed farming through the remainder of his days. The Inzer family came from Georgia, the maternal grandfather being Lafayette Inzer, who was born in that state and cast in his lot with the pioneer residents of Alabama. The marriage of Wiley M. Watkins and Amanda Inzer was celebrated in Alabama, where he followed farming during the greater part of his life, but also engaged in the charcoal business. He was in sympathy with secession and served in the Confederate army. His early political allegiance was given to the democratic party, but at the end of the Civil war he became a staunch advocate of republican principles. He belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his widow is also a member. They were parents of five children, four of whom are living: Martha D., the wife of William R. Goode, a coal miner of Birmingham, Alabama; William E.; D. M., who is engaged in the hardware business in Mena, and Nancy J., the wife of J. Spencer Kelley, a real estate man of Albuquerque, New Mexico.

William E. Watkins, having pursued his education at Birmingham, Alabama, took up the occupation of farming in young manhood and later turned his attention to railway contracting. He assisted in building the Georgia Pacific, now the Southern Railroad, and was engaged in construction work of this character for about eight years. In 1896 he removed to Mena and established a cold drink stand, which he conducted for three months. He afterward opened a grocery store and later extended the scope of his commercial activities by joining with his brother, D. M. Watkins, in founding and conducting a hardware business. Later the brothers were associated in the conduct of a sawmill, planing mill and lumber business, and today they manufacture a general line of lumber and molding. Recently they have organized a casket company and are manufacturing caskets. They are likewise engaged in merchandising at Hatfield, where for seven years William E. Watkins was owner of a lumber yard. He came to Mena with practically nothing, but has been very successful and has constantly broadened the scope of his activities until he is now at the head of extensive and important interests. In addition to the business affairs already listed, he is a director and the vice president of the Planters State Bank and is a stockholder in the First National Bank. He and his brother own considerable land and also a substantial amount of city real estate. He personally undertakes the management of the mill and lumber business, while his brother has charge of the hardware store. The hardware business is incorporated with a capital stock of thirty thousand dollars, and the general store established at Hatfield is incorporated for twenty-five thousand dollars, William E. Watkins being the vice president of the Watkins Hardware Company and the president of the Watkins Lumber & Mercantile Company at Hatfield.

On the 30th of June, 1909, Mr. Watkins was married to Miss Mande Rachael Gardner, who was born in Minnesota, but was reared in Iowa. She is a daughter of Edwin Gardner, who was a railroad engineer for a number of years and is now farming near Mena. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have four children: William E. and Marion Edwin, both in school; Mande Rachael, four years of age, and Emma Caroline. Mrs. Watkins is a member of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Watkins belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having passed through all of the chairs in the latter lodge. In politics he is a republican and is interested in all matters of general concern to the community and the commonwealth. He ranks not only with the most progressive, alert and energetic business men of Polk county, but as one of the most thoroughly alive citizens, ever watchful of the best interests of his community, and he is honored and respected not alone by reason of the success which he has achieved, although he is now one of the wealthy men of the county, but also owing to the straightforward and honorable business policies which he has ever followed.

W. J. MATHIS, M. D.

Dr. W. J. Mathis, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Cotton Plant, was born in Henry county, Tennessee, September 7, 1851, his parents being Josiah and Angeline Mathis. The former, a native of Kentucky, accompanied his parents on their removal to Henry county, Tennessee, when but six years of age. He became a planter of Henry county, there spending his remaining days. His demise occurred December 24, 1863, when he was forty-seven years of age, his natal day being December 16, 1816. His wife was a native of Kentucky and went with her parents to Henry county, Tennessee, when about five years of age. She had reached the age of fifty-five years when called to her final rest in 1880, her birth having occurred in 1825. Josiah Mathis was a member of the Masonic fraternity and his political endorsement was given to the democratic party. To him and his wife were born six children: W. J.; J. T., now deceased; L. G., of Oklahoma City, one who died in infancy, and Susan and Dora S., who have also passed away.

W. J. Mathis was reared in his native state, and in 1881 came to Arkansas, settling in St. Francis county. He had acquired his early education in the public schools of Henry county, Tennessee, and the Henry Academy, after which he attended the Vanderbilt Medical College at Nashville, Tennessee, during the years 1869 to 1871, inclusive. Having qualified for the practice of medicine, he then entered upon the active work of the profession in Henry county, where he continued from 1873 until 1881. He next opened an office in Palestine, Arkansas, where he remained until 1887, when he came to Cotton Plant, where he has been actively engaged in medical and surgical practice to the present time.

On the 10th of November, 1875, Dr. Mathis was married to Miss Emma Wynns, a native of Stewart county, Tennessee, and a daughter of Harry and Martha (Askew) Wynns, who were also natives of Stewart county, where her father was an extensive planter. Both he and his wife passed away when about thirty-five years of age. To Dr. and Mrs. Mathis have been born nine children: Jennie and Joe L., both now deceased; Charlie, who married Fred Parker and is living in Cotton Plant; William and Myrtle, deceased; Harry, who is engaged in coal mining in Texas; Ross, mentioned elsewhere in this work; Horace, who is engaged in business at Cotton Plant, and Lillian, who has departed this life.

Dr. Mathis has always voted with the democratic party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day, but has never sought or desired office. He belongs to the Masonic lodge at Cotton Plant and is a loyal and exemplary follower of the teachings of the craft. In his chosen profession he has made steady progress and his capability has brought him prominently to the front in coping with the intricate and involved problems which continually confront the physician.

WENDELL ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON.

Wendell Archibald Robertson, a well-known figure in insurance circles at Fort Smith, also deserves prominent mention through the fact that he became an aviation ace during the World war. He participated in many combats and made a brilliant military record as a member of the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Aero Squadron. A native of Oklahoma, he was born in Guthrie in 1894, and is a son of R. Scott and Elizabeth Jane (Weudell) Robertson. He represents one of the prominent old southern families of Scotch extraction. The Robertsons settled in Tennessee prior to the Revolutionary war and afterward representatives of the name lived in Mississippi, Alabama and Texas. Captain James Robertson, the great-grandfather of W. A. Robertson, was the founder of Nashville, Tennessee. James A. Robertson, a descendant, became the father of R. Scott Robertson, who is now president of the Reynolds-Davis Grocery Company of Fort Smith, Arkansas. He was born in Galveston, Texas, but came to Fort Smith twenty-five years ago and here entered the wholesale grocery business, in which he engaged for a time. Later he went to New York city, where he was active in the brokerage business, and still later returned to Fort Smith and organized the Reynolds-Davis Grocery Company, of which he is now the president, thus occupying a most prominent position in the commercial circles of the city.

Wendell A. Robertson was largely educated in the schools of Fort Smith, passing through consecutive grades to the high school, after which he attended the Holbrook Preparatory School at Briarcliff, N. Y., and then entered Yale University, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts with the class of 1915. Returning to Fort Smith, he became associated with his father in the wholesale grocery business, and later was connected with the Clear Creek Oil & Gas Company. When America entered the World war he joined the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Root, near Little Rock, and from there was sent to the school of military aeronautics at Austin, Texas. His next transferral took him to Rantoul, Illinois, where he was recommended for a commission and sent to Garden City, Long Island. He was made a first lieutenant of the aviation section of the Signal Corps and went abroad with the One Hundred and Eighth Aero Squadron, proceeding first to St. Maxient, while later he was assigned to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Aero Squadron. He saw service at many points on the fighting front and participated in many combats. On one occasion he was flying with Dave Putnam, a noted air man, when they were attacked by fifteen German planes. Putnam was brought down, but Lieutenant Robertson managed to return to the lines in safety. So splendid was his military record that he was decorated as an American ace, but with the characteristic modesty of the American air man, he says little of his experiences in foreign lands, but history proves the splendid record which he made. Mr. Robertson has six official confirmations to his credit.

When the war was over Mr. Robertson returned to Fort Smith, where he is now engaged in the insurance business, and with the same thoroughness and determination which characterized his pursuit of German planes in the air service on the western front, he is pushing toward his objective in the business world, basing his advancement upon thoroughness, diligence and a resolution which enables him to overcome all difficulties and obstacles in his path.

WILLIAM I. BOOE.

Commercial enterprise finds a substantial representative in William I. Booe, who is conducting a store at Des Arc and by reason of his close application, thoroughness and enterprise has gained a substantial measure of success in the conduct of his business affairs. He is a native son of Prairie county, his birth having occurred in the extreme western part of Union township in 1881. His parents were L. Q. and Martha Jane (Melton) Booe, both of whom were born in the vicinity of Holly Springs, Mississippi. The former was a son of Colonel I. D. Booe, who took up his abode in Arkansas in pioneer times. The grandfather was a Confederate veteran, and on removing to this state settled in Lonoke county, near Walters Chapel, where both he and his wife spent their remaining days. He was a prominent figure in connection with the public life of the community and represented his district in the state legislature. The grandfather of William I. Booe, in the maternal line, was William Melton, who lived near Bucks Landing, Arkansas. He and his wife died on the same day. L. Q. Booe had one brother, William, who became a Confederate soldier in the Civil war and lost his life in battle. To L. Q. and Martha Jane (Melton) Booe were born ten children: William I., Hosea, Dorsey, Grace, Edna, Bessie, Lois, Jewell, Thomas J. and Emma, and of this family Thomas J. served in the war with Germany.

William I. Booe pursued his education in the public schools of Prairie county, completing a course in the Cabot high school, after which he taught for three years. He also studied in a commercial college and thus received thorough training in preparation for life's practical and responsible duties. Starting out in the commercial world, he became a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Des Arc and later occupied the position of bookkeeper with the well-known Hayley Berne & Company, which firm had been established in 1876 and was incorporated in 1902, its incorporators being: H. S. Hayley, president;

W. H. Hayley, vice president; Howard Beine, secretary, and G. W. Edmondson, treasurer. Mr. Booe became an active factor in the conduct and management of the store, was elected to the position of secretary on the resignation of Howard Beine, and acquired stock in the business at that time. Later Mr. Edmondson sold his interest to H. S. Hayley and Mr. Booe, and in March, 1919, the latter purchased the interest of Mr. Hayley and is now sole owner of the business, which is one of the oldest established mercantile enterprises of the city. A progressive policy has always been maintained, and an excellent line of goods has been carried. Mr. Booe and his associates in the business have ever recognized the fact that satisfied customers are the best advertisement and, therefore, every effort has been put forth to please their patrons. An extensive and well-selected line of goods is carried, and the thorough reliability of the house has also contributed to the growing success of the business.

Mr. Booe was united in marriage to Miss Ola Hazen, a daughter of William and Alice (Stephenson) Hazen of Des Arc. The children of this marriage are two daughters: Mildred and Marjory Jane. Mr. Booe has always been keenly interested in matters of public importance and during the World war served as chairman for the Red Cross in the northern part of Prairie county. He had previously filled the office of deputy county treasurer for four years, and at all time he is loyal to every cause which he deems of value to the community. For four years he was a member of the school board in Des Arc and has also served on the county board of education, the cause of public instruction finding in him a stalwart champion. He has acted as secretary of the Bible class in the Methodist Episcopal church since the age of sixteen years and has long been a loyal and consistent member of the church, in which he is serving as steward. Fraternally he is a Consistory Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. His life has ever been the expression of high ideals, of noble purposes and of honorable business methods, and throughout Des Arc and this section of the state he commands the confidence and good will of all who know him.

HON. JOHN D. SHACKLEFORD.

Hon. John D. Shackleford, of Little Rock, lawyer and lawmaker, who has left the impress of his individuality upon the history of the bar and upon the laws of the commonwealth through service in both houses of the general assembly, was born in Carthage, Missouri, November 25, 1864. His parents, Henry H. and Martha J. (Dennis) Shackleford, removed with their family to Arkansas in 1875, the father becoming one of the leading and prosperous farmers of Carroll county, where both he and his wife remained until called to their final rest.

Having attended the public schools of Carrollton until he had completed the high school course, John D. Shackleford then determined upon the practice of law as a life work and pursued his reading under private tutorship until admitted to the bar in 1886. In February, 1890, he removed to Little Rock, where he has since engaged in active practice. Here he completed the prescribed course in the law department of the University of Arkansas and was graduated as a member of its first class in 1894. He had previously been a member of what is known as the Little Rock Law Class, which had been in existence for many years and of which he was president when the class was merged into the law department of the University of Arkansas. To an understanding of uncommon acuteness and vigor, Mr. Shackleford thus added a thorough and conscientious preparatory training, while in his practice he has exemplified all the higher elements of the truly great lawyer. He is constantly inspired by an innate, inflexible love of justice and a delicate sense of personal honor which controls him in all the relations of life. His fidelity to the interests of his clients is proverbial, yet he never forgets that he owes a higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. His diligence and energy in the preparation of his cases, as well as the earnestness, tenacity and courage with which he defends the right as he understands it, challenges the highest admiration of his associates. He invariably seeks to present his argument in the strong, clear light of common reason and sound logical principle.

On the 2d of May, 1894, Mr. Shackleford was united in marriage to Miss Ada B. Dominick, who was born and reared in Arkansas, her father being the late John Dominick of Pulaski county. They are the parents of two sons and a daughter: John Marshall, Ada May and William Henry. Mr. Shackleford maintains his home upon a farm near Little Rock, where he took up his abode in 1915, though still actively engaged in law practice in the capital city. He has membership in the Christian church and belongs to the Woodmen of the World. His political views have always been in full accord with the principles of the democratic party, and he has taken an active interest in politics. In 1897 he was elected to represent Pulaski county in the general assembly, and in 1899 was chosen state senator for a period of four years, so that his service as one of the lawmakers of Arkansas covered a period of six years. He carefully considered the important and vital questions that came up for settlement before the house and was active and influential in the deliberations of the committee rooms. During his senatorial term he served on the judiciary committee, was chairman of the committee on auditors' and treasurers' books, a member of the committee on charitable institutions and also active in other committee work. He has ever most thoroughly and earnestly considered the problems which affect the welfare of the state and his support of any measure secured to it a still larger following from among those who recognized the soundness of Mr. Shackelford's judgment and his intense public spirit.

STERLING A. MILLER.

Sterling A. Miller, attorney-at-law, practicing at Pine Bluff, was born near Paris, Tennessee, in 1864, and is a representative of an old southern family. His great-grandfather removed from Virginia to South Carolina, and in the latter state Henry Miller, the grandfather, was born. He married a Miss Travis and they removed to Tennessee. The Millers, however, originally came from the Isle of Wight. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miller were the parents of A. C. Miller, who was born in Henry county, Tennessee, and who served with the Confederate army, being on duty as a member of Captain Johnson's company of a Tennessee regiment. He wedded Virginia Pritchett, also a native of Henry county, Tennessee, and they became parents of three children: Sterling A., Dr. A. H. Miller and J. P. Miller.

The public school system of Tennessee afforded Sterling A. Miller his early educational opportunities, and later he took up the study of law, while in early manhood he also engaged for a time in the dry goods business. He entered upon the active practice of law at Paris, Tennessee, in 1886, and remained a member of the bar of that state until 1894, when he came to Arkansas, settling first at Wynne. In 1896 he removed to Pine Bluff, where he has since followed his profession and with the passing years he has enjoyed a good practice of a distinctively representative character. He tries all kinds of cases and tries them well, and his reputation as a lawyer has been won through earnest, honest labor, while his standing at the bar is a merited tribute to his ability.

In 1888 Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Anna Ezell of Martin, Tennessee, and they became parents of a son, Harry E., who is now engaged in the lumber business at Pine Bluff. For his second wife Mr. Miller chose Anna Haynes of Stuttgart, Arkansas. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and his religious faith has guided him in all the relations of life. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party, and he has been called to fill various important offices. He served for four terms as a member of the state legislature, having been elected in 1905, in 1909, in 1913 and again in 1921, so that he is the incumbent in the office. He was elected municipal judge of Pine Bluff in 1922, and his record as a legislator and as a judge is in harmony with his record as a lawyer and as a citizen, being characterized by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution and by marked devotion to the general good.

CHARLES MCKEE.

Charles McKee, recently appointed state bank commissioner of Arkansas and long actively identified with banking history of the state, makes his home in Little Rock. He was born in Cynthiana, Harrison county, Kentucky, February 17, 1864, and is a son of James W. and Jane (Turney) McKee. The father, born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, in 1848, resided for many years in Cynthiana, Kentucky, and devoted his life to the occupation of farming. His great-grandfather, John McKee, was killed at the battle of Kings Mountain in the Revolutionary war. James W. McKee was married in November, 1859, to Jane McClelland Turney, whose birth occurred in Bourbon county, Kentucky, in October, 1839. They became parents of the following named: William, Eliza, Charles, Julia, Elizabeth, Allie, George, Frank Turney, Jesse and Louise. The wife and mother passed away in 1880. The father survived for thirty-one years, his death occurring in April, 1911.

Charles McKee, whose name introduces this review, pursued his early education in the public schools of his native city, passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school with the class of 1883. Later he studied in Central University, then located at Richmond, Kentucky, but now at Danville, Kentucky, and was graduated in 1885 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. His life has largely been devoted to banking interests. For eleven years he occupied the position of cashier in the Bank of Fordyce at Fordyce, Arkansas, and in 1902 he became one of the organizers of the Citizens Bank of Hope, Arkansas. The following year he was elected secretary of the Mercantile Trust Company of Little Rock and continued to act in that capacity until 1906, when he became vice president of the State National Bank of Little Rock and held that position until 1910. In 1909 he organized the State Bank Building Company and built the State National Bank building, now the Boyle building, in 1910. He has recently been appointed bank commissioner by Governor McRea, the appointment being made on the 1st of September, 1921. Aside from his connection with financial interests, Mr. McKee has become well known by reason of his activity in other fields. He was principal of the Hope high school in 1887 and president of the Hope Female Institute from 1889 until 1891. He is now the president of the Home Telephone Company of Fordyce, was president of the State Building & Loan Association of Little Rock and president of the North Arkansas Townsite Company of Marianna. He is likewise treasurer of the Arkansas College at Batesville and was president of the Lee County National Bank at Marianna, Arkansas. His activities are thus broad and varied and have been a potent element in the growth and development of the state for a number of years.

On the 4th of January, 1887, Mr. McKee was married to Miss Mary Anna Lydick, who was born in Cynthiana, Harrison county, Kentucky, in September, 1864, and is a daughter of Andrew Lydick, who made his home for a considerable period in Cynthiana. Mrs. McKee was a graduate of the high school at Cynthiana with the class of 1883. By her marriage she became the mother of a son, George Taylor McKee, a missionary of the Presbyterian church to Africa, being stationed in the Congo Belgé. On the 4th of March, 1905, Mr. McKee was married to Mrs. Levitte (Lawrence) McSwine, a widow, and they now have one daughter, Martha.

During the World War Mr. McKee generously gave of his time and means to further the bond drives, being county chairman for Lee county. He has always been a democrat in politics, but never an officeseeker, although he is now filling the position of bank commissioner through appointment of Governor McRea. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he was made a commissioner to the general assembly of the church and is a ruling elder. He is connected with the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and the Woodmen of the World, and his many friends in these and other organizations speak of him in terms of high regard. He early became cognizant of the fact that those qualities which get the individual anywhere are the qualities which inspire confidence and respect. Industry has enabled him to overcome obstacles, sound judgment has enabled him to triumph over difficulties, and step by step he has advanced until he is today a leading figure in commercial circles of his adopted city.

JOHN MELBY HENDERSON, JR.

John Melby Henderson, Jr., county superintendent of schools of Arkansas county and a valued resident of De Witt, was born on a farm ten miles east of this city in 1880, his parents being J. M. and Mollie Henrietta (Dempsey) Henderson. The family is of English lineage, the ancestry being traced back to John Melby Henderson, who was a sailor in the British fleet under Admiral Peter Parker. The ship on which he served was wrecked off the coast of North Carolina, and Henderson and a companion made their way into the woods after being cast on a shore by the way. Finding a hog wallow, Henderson lay in this and thus managed to keep warm for a time while recovering from the exposure and the fatigue of buffeting the waves. He continued in the new world, becoming the founder of the family in America. The line of descent is traced down to John Melby Henderson (II), who removed from North Carolina to Tennessee, and John Melby Henderson (III), who left his home in Middle Tennessee, in 1847, to become a resident of Arkansas. His wife was the daughter of James Rust, a descendant of the first settlers of Virginia. He, in turn, was the father of John Melby Henderson, who was born in Arkansas county and who married Mollie Henrietta Dempsey. The paternal grandfather served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war. He established his home in Arkansas in 1847, and, therefore, went to the front from this state. Mrs. Mollie H. Henderson was a daughter of Andrew Jackson Dempsey, who was born at Lake Charles, Louisiana, whence he removed to Mississippi, while later he came to Arkansas. The father, with his family, settled at St. Charles, Arkansas, in 1868, the mother having previously departed this life. He, too, was a Confederate veteran of the Civil war. His father had served with Andrew Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, in the War of 1812. J. M. and Mollie H. (Dempsey) Henderson are still living, making their home near St. Charles, and to them has been born four children: John Melby, Jr., Nina, May and Maury W.

After completing the work in the rural schools and high school at De Witt, Professor J. M. Henderson, of this review, continued his education in the Southern Normal, now the Western Kentucky State Normal, at Bowling Green, Kentucky. He later took up the profession of teaching, which he followed in Arkansas county and also in Louisiana. He studied law in the University of Arkansas, completing his course by graduation in 1910, and then located for practice in De Witt, where he remained an active member of the bar until 1918. Two years prior to this time, or in 1916, he had been elected county superintendent of schools and twice he has been reelected to this position, so that he is now serving for the third term. He has instituted many progressive movements and measures beneficial to the school, has advanced the standards of instruction and has been instrumental in raising the salaries of teachers from sixty to one hundred dollars per month in the first grade. He likewise was effective in his efforts to increase the school term in the rural white schools from five and a half to eight months per year. He introduced club work in the school and amplified the curriculum, introducing new matter and coordinating the school work with the daily life of the child, or, in other words, extending the home life of the child to the schoolroom. It is his ambition to secure an agricultural high school for the community, thereby laying the basis of agricultural training in the common schools. He is a believer in vocational training. He had worked at the blacksmith and carpenter trades in early life, learning much about these trades from his father, who operated a wagon shop in the early days. He feels that there is much to be gained from this manual training, as well as from the intellectual stimulus that comes from the perusal of books. He has introduced many innovations in the school, imparting a fuller knowledge to the pupil of the things which he encounters in his every-day life, and among the subjects discussed in the schoolroom are: Infectious parasites, stock and their habits, seed selection, horticulture, agriculture, home economics, poultry, household arts, ventilation, hygiene, housing for animals, housing for humans, botanical studies, rodents, drainage, sewage, good citizenship, common sense, usefulness, ideals, the attitude of the youth toward elders, and government in its district, county, city, state and national forms. The free discussion of all these subjects in the schools has been a means of stimulating the interest of the children in a number of the vital problems which affect the physical and material welfare and which have to do with many of the vocations into which the children are apt to enter.

Professor Henderson, while doing splendid work in the educational field through the past six years as county superintendent, has also rendered assistance to the community in other ways through capable service as city attorney and as special judge. He is a director of the First National Bank and is the president of the De Witt Publishing Company, which publishes the Enterprise. He carries forward to successful completion everything that he undertakes, and thoroughness, energy and diligence have characterized him in every relation of life. During the World war he acted as food administrator in his district. He has developed eight hundred acres of rice land in connection with associates and he owns several small farms, using one of these as a demonstration farm.

Mr. Henderson was married to Miss Bertie E. Jones of De Witt, a daughter of J. L. Jones. Mrs. Henderson's people were also among the early settlers of Virginia. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Henderson are three in number: Mary Louise, John Melby and Virginia E. Fraternally Mr. Henderson is a Mason, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft, and his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. His life has always been actuated by the highest ideals, which he strives to reach by the most practical methods, and the results which he has achieved have been indeed far reaching and effective as contributing factors to the material, intellectual and moral development of the community and to the adoption of high standards of civic activity and of daily living.

CHARLES W. APPLEBY.

Charles W. Appleby is the well-known representative of horticultural and industrial interests in Fayetteville, where he is part owner of a canning factory, while in the adjoining district he has a large fruit farm. A native of Washington county, he was born September 27, 1865, and is a brother of George Appleby, mentioned at length on another page of this work. He acquired his education in the common schools and started out as a farmer, his life having been devoted to a greater or less extent to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. In 1900 he removed to Fayetteville and became associated with his brother George in the ownership of a canning factory in 1906. In the following year they failed in business and lost all they had. They retained the equity in the canning factory, however, but gave up all their other possessions, which were considerable. With undaunted courage they faced the future and made arrangements to purchase a farm of four hundred and forty acres, placing a small payment on the property and arranging to meet the other payments in the course of time. There was a bearing apple orchard on the place at the time. They have since set out trees until their orchards now cover one hundred and ninety acres and in addition they have one hundred and forty acres planted to strawberries. As the years have passed the careful management of their business interests has brought to them substantial success and they are today men of affluence, their entire possessions having been acquired since 1907. In the propagation of their fruits and the care of their orchards they have followed the most progressive and scientific methods and have accomplished notable results, their labors contributing toward making Washington county one of the widely known fruit centers of the southwest. Charles W. Appleby has charge of their canning factories when these are in operation during the fruit growing seasons. They have three plants—one in Fayetteville, one in West Fork and the third at Hiwassee. The capacity of their plants is seventy-five thousand cases of tomatoes per season and they ship their products to Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri and throughout Arkansas. Carefully formulated plans and thorough system in carrying out his plans have been potent elements in winning Mr. Appleby the success which is now his.

In February, 1910, Mr. Appleby was married to Miss Mary Lorie Hughey, who was born in Hillsboro, Ohio, whence her parents removed to Fayetteville in 1907. Her father was a chair manufacturer of Ohio and now lives in Florida. Mr. and Mrs. Appleby are well known in Fayetteville, where they have an extensive circle of warm friends. They belong to the Presbyterian church and Mr. Appleby has membership in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also in the Rotary Club, in the work of which he has been very active, his labors in this connection being far-reaching and resultant. In politics he is a democrat but has never been ambitious to hold office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his business affairs. That he has most carefully and wisely directed his interests is indicated in the success which he has achieved since sustaining heavy losses in business in 1907. His life should serve as an example and an inspiration to others, showing what may be accomplished through individual efforts.

J. S. LADD.

J. S. Ladd is now living retired in Judsonia and no history of the town would be complete without extended reference to him, for through thirty-five years he was closely associated with its mercantile interests and with the development and progress of the city arising therefrom. His birth occurred near Franklin, in Williamson county, Tennessee, April 9, 1848, his parents being T. G. and Mary Jane (Smithson) Ladd, both of whom were natives of Middle Tennessee and representatives of old families of that state. The grandfather in the paternal line was Noble Ladd, who was born in Tennessee and belonged to one of the pioneer families of the south. He followed farming and owned slaves to the time of his death, which occurred during the Civil war period. The grandfather of J. S. Ladd on the distaff side was Samuel Smithson, who was likewise a native of Tennessee, where his ancestors settled during the Revolutionary war period. He spent his life in his native state.

T. G. Ladd, father of J. S. Ladd, was a school teacher, following the profession for forty-five years. A man of liberal education, he held to high ideals in the work of the schoolroom and contributed much to the intellectual progress of the community in which he lived. He afterward engaged in merchandising in Memphis from 1862 until 1865 and he departed this life at the ripe old age of seventy-four years, while his wife died in White county, Arkansas, at the age of seventy-nine. His political support was originally given to the whig party and on the dissolution of that party he joined the ranks of the democrats. He was a Mason and his wife was connected with the Order of the Eastern Star, while both held membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. In their family were eight children, four of whom are living, Minerva Ann, Samuel N. and Mary M., having all departed this life, as has Martha E. These were the three eldest and the fifth member of the family. Those who survive are: J. S.; Eliza J., living in Louisville, Kentucky; T. G., of Memphis, Tennessee; and W. F., a resident of Covington, Tennessee.

J. S. Ladd was educated in western Tennessee, where he attended the subscription schools, being largely under the instruction of his father. The year 1869 witnessed his arrival in White county, Arkansas, at which time he purchased bottom land and engaged in general farming. A little later he removed to Judsonia, where he established a confectionery store but later developed it into a general merchandise house, which he conducted under his own name. He remained an active factor in the mercantile circles of the city for thirty-five years ere he retired from business in 1915 to enjoy in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil.

On the 8th of May, 1870, Mr. Ladd was married to Miss Mollie Vandal, a native of Tennessee, who died in 1885. They had a family of seven children, two of whom died in infancy, while Sarah J. has also departed this life. Lula is the widow of Dr. W. J. Miller, who was a practicing physician of Griffithville and she now makes her home at Little Rock; Pearl is the widow of Eugene Winsott, who was a liveryman of Judsonia; Walker is engaged in the garage business at Newport and at Judsonia; and the youngest child died in infancy. The mother was a consistent member of the Baptist church. For his second wife Mr. Ladd chose Miss Hal Key, a native of Arkansas, and to them were born ten children, seven of whom are living: Clifton, who is a graduate of the Memphis Dental College and is now practicing dentistry in Marvell, Phillips county, Arkansas; Frances, the wife of Carl Garms, a contractor of Little Rock; Mary, the wife of Thomas Wells of Searcy; Catherine, the wife of J. K. Jemerson, manager of a garage at Judsonia; Ester, the wife of Irvin Winn, a banker of Bald Knob; two children who died in infancy; Johnnie, who died at the age of four years; and Henry and Elizabeth, at home. The mother of this family belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Politically Mr. Ladd is a democrat and for two terms served as postmaster of Judsonia under President Cleveland. He was also elected constable, being chosen to that office at one time when he was the only democrat elected in the county, a fact indicative of his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him. He was opposed by a populist. His has been a useful and well spent life and the sterling worth of his character is attested by all with whom he has come into contact. As a merchant he contributed in large measure to the business development of Judsonia and while he has now retired from mercantile pursuits he is still interested in a garage, the company being the authorized Ford agent at Judsonia, handling the Ford supplies and accessories and also the Fordson tractor. Throughout his career Mr. Ladd has been characterized by a progressive spirit and his determined purpose has enabled him ultimately to reach his objective. His career, moreover, proves that success and an honored name may be won simultaneously and his example is well worthy of emulation.

JULIUS S. ALPHIN.

Possessing those qualities which have made him a dynamic force in business circles, Julius S. Alphin has long been identified with a number of the more important commercial and financial interests of El Dorado. It is a well known fact that power grows through the exercise of effort and from early manhood Mr. Alphin has labored diligently and persistently, finding in the faithful performance of each day's duties the strength and courage for the labors of the succeeding day. Arkansas numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred on a farm about five miles south of El Dorado, in Union county, January 25, 1866, his father being Julius Alphin, Sr., who came from Alabama to this state at an early day, settling here prior to the Civil war. He married Miss Martha Phelan, who died when her son, Julius S., was but eight years of age. The father's death occurred in 1896.

Julius S. Alphin was born and reared on the old homestead farm, early becoming familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops, although his school training was limited. He came to El Dorado in 1886 with a cash capital of but two dollars and a half and started out in business circles here as a clerk in the store of D. E. Armstrong, with whom he continued for a few months. Step by step he has advanced, owing to the wise use he has made of every chance and opportunity that has come his way, and for a long period he has been accounted one of the most active and enterprising business men of El Dorado. He is today one of the largest stockholders in the First National Bank, also a stockholder in the Ritchie Grocer Company, in the Carson Dry Goods Company, in the Taylor-Miles Drug Company, in the El Dorado Oil Mills & Fertilizer Company, in the Warren oil mills, in the First National Bank at Huttig and in other business enterprises. The gradual expansion of his commercial activities has not only constituted a source of individual wealth but has also been a contributing factor to the upbuilding and prosperity of the community. In addition to his other interests he is the owner of ten thousand acres of land in Union county, scattered in every township of the county. Owing to the development of the oil industry he bids fair to become one of the very wealthy men of the state. He also has large property holdings in El Dorado and in the vicinity of the city and his business activities have at all times claimed his entire attention. He owns oil interests in and near El Dorado and the outlook for oil development in Arkansas is so favorable that undoubtedly he will win large results through that channel.

Mr. Alphin was married first to Miss Amy Pinson and they became parents of a son, Hendrick J. For his second wife Mr. Alphin chose Mary Armstrong and they have two children: Samuel David, who is four and a half years of age; and Jim Armstrong, a little lad of two summers.

Mr. Alphin and his family are widely known and their circle of friends is almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintance. Mr. Alphin has always been too busy with his various commercial and financial interests to take active part in politics, but his cooperation in support of public welfare in his home town is never sought in vain.

CHARLES N. ROCKAFELLOW.

While Hot Springs has within its midst almost every known enterprise and line of business that is found in every great cosmopolitan center the city largely stands to the outside world as a place famous for its wonderful medicinal bathing facilities obtained from the hot springs from which the city derives its name. It was in this connection that Charles N. Rockafellow had reached a place of notable prominence in the business world as proprietor of the Rockafellow Bathhouse and also of the Rockafellow Hotel and Apartments, for with the steady and growing influx of visitors to the city the question of hotel accommodation came steadily to the front and there is perhaps no city of equal size in the country which can offer such advantages and opportunities in the way of hotel service as Hot Springs. In this connection Charles N. Rockafellow manifested a most progressive spirit and the extent and importance of his business affairs and his activities along other lines made him one of the most distinguished residents of the city. He was one of a family of seven children, two sons and five daughters, whose parents were Mr. and Mrs. Abraham J. Rockafellow. The mother's maiden name was Newcomb. The father was a prosperous farmer of the state of Illinois, devoting many years to agricultural pursuits but ultimately living retired. He settled in Galva, Henry county, Illinois, where for many years the family residence was maintained.

Charles N. Rockafellow was born in Illinois, September 25, 1842, and pursued his education in the public schools of Galva until he had completed his high school work. In young manhood he turned to mercantile pursuits, accepting a clerkship but following the outbreak of the Civil war he answered the call of the Union and followed the stars and stripes into southern battle fields. He served as a private, was for a time a member of a band and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant, serving with distinction for four years and eight months, manifesting the utmost valor and loyalty during the entire period.

Immediately after the close of the war Mr. Rockafellow went to New Orleans and later became a resident of Chicago, where he engaged in the drug business. On removing from that city he took up his abode in Little Rock, Arkansas, where he became baggage master for the Rock Island Railroad, continuing with that corporation until he removed to Hot Springs in the year 1868. Here he established a drug store, which he conducted with marked success for some time and then turned his attention to the business that occupied his time throughout his remaining days. He established one of the finest bathhouses of the city, also the Rockafellow Hotel and Apartments, and, moreover, he built a beautiful residence, in which his widow now resides at No. 212 Whittington avenue. In the construction of the bathhouse he maintained the highest scientific and sanitary principles, with due regard also to the comfort and convenience of the patrons and the most advanced standards were also employed in the erection and conduct of the hotel and the apartments which he built. He closely studied the modern-day conditions and demands and even anticipated modern needs, giving to the public almost unprecedented service in both lines of his business.

Mr. Rockafellow was united in marriage to Miss Mahala J. Golding, a daughter of James Golding, of a well known Virginia family, the wedding being celebrated on the 10th of December, 1868. They became the parents of two sons: Charles A., who was born November 20, 1870, and who succeeded his father in business; and William B., who was born at Hot Springs, January 1, 1874.

Mr. Rockafellow gave his political allegiance to the republican party, being a firm advocate of its principles. On several occasions he served as alderman of Hot Springs, exercising his official prerogatives in support of many progressive plans and movements for the public good. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and was a loyal follower of the teachings and purposes of the craft. In every relation of life he measured up to high standards and in his business career his position was one of leadership, for he displayed not only the sterling qualities of enterprize and progressiveness but also a creative genius. By reason of his splendidly conducted affairs he left to his family a handsome estate. His wife and sons occupy a very prominent position in the social circles of the city and the name of Rockafellow continues to figure most notably in connection with events which are leaving a lasting impression on the business development and social life of Hot Springs.

THE NEAL FAMILY.

From early pioneer times the Neal family have resided in Arkansas and its representatives have borne an important and helpful part in the upbuilding and development of the state. The family was established in Pope county by Samuel and Elizabeth Neal and it was on their farm in the old Piney community that their youngest child, Thomas McPadden Neal, was born on the 6th of May, 1848. He was reared and educated in that locality and was a man of initiative spirit and marked executive ability whose business affairs were most capably conducted. In 1896 he established the Bank of Russellville, of which he was made president, and continued to act in that capacity until his demise. He also owned valuable real estate in Russellville, Morrillton and Dover, Arkansas, and likewise had made judicious investments in property in Oklahoma, accumulating a substantial competence through his intelligently directed efforts and unwearied industry. He was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in the Confederate army when but a boy, and fraternally he was identified with the Masonic order, in which he attained high rank. He was a devout Christian, joining the Methodist Episcopal church, South, when twenty years of age, and for forty years he was a member of its board of stewards. A man of powerful physique, his was a personality that would attract attention in any crowd. On the 18th of February, 1875, Mr. Neal was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Gunn, who is a native of Dover, Pope county, and has reached the age of sixty-eight years. They became the parents of four children: Thomas Carroll, W. G., Sarah and George S. Mr. Neal died at Russellville on the 7th of November, 1921, and a touching and beautiful tribute to his life and character was read at the funeral by his pastor, who had known him for many years, the following being a brief extract therefrom: "We bury today one of our oldest and most prominent citizens. He was one of the outstanding men of our community life, a gentleman of the old school, a man of integrity and conviction."

The eldest son, Thomas Carroll Neal, left home when a young man, going to West Virginia, and for thirteen years he was identified with oil and banking in that state. He then went to Chicago and for the past twelve years has made his home in that city, occupying a foremost position in its financial circles as vice president of the Central Trust Company of Illinois. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and is identified with the Masonic fraternity, having held several offices in his lodge.

W. G. Neal, the second son, was born March 26, 1878, and was graduated from the Russellville high school with the class of 1896. Soon afterward he entered his father's store at Dover, assisting in its operation for two years, and following the establishment of the Bank of Russellville by Mr. Neal, Sr., he became identified with the institution, first acting as collection boy. His connection with the bank dates from December 27, 1897, and through merit and ability he has gradually worked his way upward from one position to another of greater importance and responsibility until he is now filling the office of president, succeeding his father. Under the able instruction of his father he acquired a comprehensive understanding of the principles of modern finance and much of the prestige which the institution now enjoys is attributable to his conscientious and efficient work. His standing in business circles is of the highest and he ranks with the leading financiers of this part of the state. On the 29th of January, 1901, Mr. Neal married Miss Lucy Youngblood, a native of Russellville and a daughter of T. F. Youngblood, who was here engaged in the commission business for a number of years, but is now a resident of San Antonio, Texas. To this union has been born a daughter, Gladys Carroll. She specialized in expression at the Henderson & Brown College of Arkadelphia, Arkansas, in the State University, and in the Harnor Institute at Kansas City and is now teaching in Sallisaw, Oklahoma. Mr. Neal is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is identified with the Masonic fraternity. He devotes his entire time to the management of the bank and his work sustains the enterprising spirit that has long been synonymous with the family name in Russellville.

Sarah, the third member of the family, married Brown Rogers, a leading attorney of Russellville, who is now capably filling the office of mayor, retiring from the practice of law to engage in the mercantile business.

George S. Neal, the youngest son, was born at Dover in December, 1888, and acquired his education in the local schools and also at Lebanon, Tennessee. When but seventeen years of age he entered the Bank of Russellville, with which he has since been connected, and is now filling the position of cashier. He is faithful to the interests in his charge and is recognized as a progressive and capable young business man. He is also affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is likewise a member of the Masonic fraternity.

SAMUEL C. VAN LEER, M. D.

There is no city which can claim so many able and prominent physicians as Hot Springs and among those who are successfully following the profession in this city is Dr. Samuel C. Van Leer, who comes to Arkansas from Texas, his birth having occurred in Bonham, on the 4th of April, 1861. He there resided to the age of seventeen years and laid the foundation of his education in attendance at the public schools. He then entered the Milwaukee Medical School, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, wherein he was a student for a year and on the expiration of that period he went to New York, where he remained for three years. He had been reared on a ranch, so that his early experiences made him familiar with various phases of outdoor life. The old home property is located in the great oil districts of Texas. He was seventeen years of age when his parents died and it was then that he became a student in a boarding school in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, while later he spent three years in a boarding school in New York city. He is a postgraduate of the Post Graduate Hospital Medical College and has taken postgraduate work in other hospitals in New York. Having qualified for the practice of medicine he came to Hot Springs in 1895, opened an office and has since given his attention to his professional duties, which have constantly grown in volume and importance. He specializes in skin and blood diseases and has splendidly qualified for work of this character by reason of his post-graduate studies in the polyclinic of Chicago and in the hospitals of the east. He did postgraduate work on skin and cancer in New York.

Dr. Van Leer married Nora Paxton and they have two daughters: Ava, the wife of Dr. William H. Deaderick of Hot Springs; and Gladys, the wife of Cecil Parker of Hot Springs.

Twenty-six years have been added to the cycle of the centuries since Dr. Van Leer came to Hot Springs and throughout the intervening period he has made steady progress in his profession, ranking extremely high as a specialist in skin and cancer diseases. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and all who know him appreciate the social qualities of his nature, which make for popularity among his many acquaintances.

WILLIAM FRAZER.

William Frazer, an enterprising and successful business man of Gravette, conducting extensive real estate interests, has been a resident of the town since its establishment and in the work of development and improvement here he has played an important part. He was born in Fulton county, Illinois, October 12, 1852, a son of Rev. James A. and Sarah J. (Stevenson) Frazer, the former a native of Kentucky, while the latter was born in Ohio. They were married in Illinois, having removed to that state as young people, and subsequently they became residents of Iowa, locating in the Hawkeye state in 1855. The father was a minister of the United Brethren church and devoted his life to spreading the gospel, his labors proving effective forces for good in the communities which he served. From Iowa he went to northern Missouri and thence to McPherson county, Kansas, where he became the owner of a well improved farm. There the mother died and following her demise he made his home with his children, departing this life at Shawnee, Oklahoma, about 1914. He was at first a republican in his political views but on removing to Kansas joined the populist party. In the family were twelve children, of whom ten are living, the subject of this review being the second in order of birth.

In the schools of northern Missouri, William Frazer acquired his education and early in life took up the occupation of farming, beginning the purchase of stock when eighteen years of age. He later went to Kansas and in 1881 came to Arkansas, settling on a farm in Benton county, and took up his residence in Gravette the year in which the town was founded. He at first engaged in the drug business but at the end of a year sold the enterprise and turned his attention to real estate, becoming associated with a Mr. A. C. Veach. He has since been connected with real estate activities here and has negotiated many important property transfers, also handling insurance at one time, but has disposed of his interests along that line. He likewise engages in loaning money and has built up an extensive business in both real estate and loans, displaying foresight, energy and marked executive ability in the management of his affairs. In addition, he owns two valuable farms in Benton county and is also a stockholder in the First National Bank, formerly serving as one of its directors and also on the directorate of the Bank of Gravette.

In Missouri, on the 12th of August, 1879, Mr. Frazer was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Bales, a native of Tennessee. Her father was a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war and was killed in service and following his demise she made her home with a sister, Mrs. Calvin Robinson. Mrs. Frazer is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and endeavors to guide her life by its teachings. Mr. Frazer is a staunch republican in his political views and his fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, have called him to public office. He was justice of the peace for one term and for eight terms served as mayor of Gravette, his long continuance in the office being indisputable proof of his trustworthiness and ability. Diligence and determination have constituted the foundation upon which he has reared the superstructure of success and as the architect of his own fortunes he has builded wisely and well, while at the same time he has contributed in large measure to the improvement and development of the community in which he resides.

ANDY F. WARD.

Andy F. Ward, a coal operator of Clarksville, watchful of the signs of the times and taking advantage of the business opportunities offered, thereby making his way to success, is regarded as one of the representative residents of Johnson county. He was born in Clarksville, April 14, 1869, and is a son of David and Mary (Collins) Ward. The father was a native of Tazewell county, Virginia, born in 1815 and his life record covers the intervening years to 1889. He was a son of David Ward, who was also born in Tazewell county, Virginia, and who came to Arkansas in 1827, settling on a farm which he obtained from the government. Not a furrow had been turned nor an improvement made upon the land but he transformed it into a richly productive tract and as the years passed became the owner of a large amount of land in this section of the state. In fact he was the wealthiest man of his day in this section, owning not only an extensive plantation but also a number of slaves. He left a will that is recorded in the courthouse and is a somewhat unique and most interesting paper. He married Ellen Cravens, representative of one of the prominent families of Virginia and Arkansas. Their son, David Ward, father of A. F. Ward, was one of those who went to California through the attraction of gold discoveries on the Pacific coast. There he went through all of the experiences of life on the far western frontier. He did not marry until he reached the age of fifty-four years and until after his return to Arkansas. In Johnson county he wedded Mary Collins, who was married three times, Mr. Ward being her third husband. She was born in Johnson county and is still living at the notable age of ninety-eight years. Her father was a native of Tennessee and became one of the pioneers of Arkansas. Like his father, David Ward owned a large amount of land in Johnson county and was quite successful in his business affairs. He voted with the democratic party and his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church. To him and his wife were born two children, the eldest being a daughter, now Mrs. Effie Dunlap of Clarksville, who was born in 1867.

The son, Andy F. Ward was educated in the public schools of Clarksville and started out in life on a farm. As the years passed he acquired a large amount of land and in 1906 he became identified with the coal industry. He has handled coal since that time and is now one of the well known and successful operators in this part of the state. In 1901 he organized the Arkansas Fruit & Farm Company and set out three hundred acres of fruit trees, being the first man to engage in horticultural pursuits in Johnson county. Prior to this time he was extensively engaged in breeding and feeding cattle. As his orchard began to bear fruit he shipped a large amount of fruit from the county and made considerable money on that venture. He managed the business for the company, but sold his fruit interests about 1914 and is now concentrating his efforts and attention upon the handling of coal. In business affairs he has ever displayed sound judgment and unflinching enterprise and steadily has his success increased as the result of his close application and earnest purpose.

In 1895 Mr. Ward was united in marriage to Miss Kittie King, who was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, a daughter of Jasper King, a pioneer farmer of the county. Mrs. Ward pursued her education in the Presbyterian College of Clarksville and by her marriage she has become the mother of five children: Andy F., Jr., who is engaged in the manufacture of fruit baskets and has developed a large plant at Clarksville; Allene, the wife of Pat McWilliams, assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Clarksville and also engaged in the coal business; Lucile, at home; J. D., who is a student in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Virginia; and King, who is attending the College of the Ozarks in Clarksville. The parents are members of the Presbyterian church and are interested in the moral progress and development of the city. Mr. Ward also belongs to the Masonic fraternity and has taken the degrees of both the York and Scottish Rites. He has membership with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party, but he has never sought nor desired office, preferring to devote his attention to his business affairs. His entire time is given to his individual interests along the line of mining and other business. He is connected with the Clark McWilliams Coal Company and the McWilliams Ward Coal Company and in addition he is a director of the First National Bank and the May Marlar Wholesale Company, the Clarksville Mercantile Company and the Clarksville Basket & Manufacturing Company. His varied business interests indicate the prominent part which he plays in connection with the development and upbuilding of the city. He certainly deserves much credit for what he has accomplished. In the early days he chopped wood, hauled it to town and in this way gained his start. He represents one of the old pioneer families of the county. His grandfather in the paternal line owned the land where Clarksville now stands and from that day to the present the Ward family has taken active part in the progress and upbuilding of this section of the state. Mr. Ward has served on the school board and has always been a friend of education and of every progressive measure having to do with public welfare, but most of all his attention has been directed in the field of business and his activities have ever been of a character which have contributed to public progress and prosperity as well as to individual success.

DANIEL HON.

In professional circles Daniel Hon has made a creditable name and place for himself, being now engaged in the practice of law in Fort Smith with a large clientage that is indicative of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow townsmen, who recognize his professional ability and have employed his service in connection with important litigated interests. Mr. Hon was born in Scott county, Arkansas, in 1860, a son of Jackson Hon, one of the pioneer settlers of this state, who came to the southwest from White county, Illinois, in 1836. He was a son of Jonas Hon, who had formerly resided in Kentucky. Desirous of enjoying the opportunities furnished in the southwest, Jackson Hon came to this state and contributed to the development and upbuilding of Arkansas during the long years of his residence here. He wedded Lucy Huie, and they continued to reside in Arkansas throughout their remaining days, the former passing away in the village of Hon, which was named in his honor. In their family were eleven children, three of whom are living.

Liberal educational opportunities were accorded Daniel Hon, who after mastering the branches of learning taught in the public schools continued his studies in the University of Arkansas, from which he won the Bachelor of Arts degree upon graduation with the class of 1882. In early manhood he taught school in Scott county but regarded this merely as an initial step to other professional activity, for it was his desire to become a member of the bar and he took up the task of reading law when in Scott county and later became a law student in Cumberland University. Having qualified for admission to the bar, he then located for practice at Waldron, Arkansas, and was not long in demonstrating his ability in the field of his chosen profession. His fellow townsmen, appreciating his worth and his fidelity to high standards of the legal profession, elected him to the office of county probate judge and continued him in the position through reelection for two terms. He was afterward elected circuit judge of the twelfth judicial circuit and in order to be near the seat of justice he removed to Fort Smith, where the court was held. He is now filling the position of referee in bankruptcy in the federal court and he is also the vice president of the Arkansas Refining Company of Fort Smith. As a lawyer he is clear, sound-minded and well trained. His legal learning, his analytical mind, the readiness with which he grasps the points in an argument, all combine to make him one of the capable judges of the circuit court of the state and the public and the profession acknowledge his ability, manifest in his service on the bench.

In 1888 Judge Hon was united in marriage to Miss Maggie P. Gaines, a daughter of F. C. Gaines, and they became the parents of four children: Lucy, who is a graduate of the University of Arkansas and taught school both in this state and in Alaska, became the wife of W. M. Cuddy in the far northwest, where they still make their home; Mabel is the wife of P. Woods and she, too, was liberally educated, having graduated from Clarendon College and from the University of Arkansas, while for a time she engaged in teaching in Texas; Mildred, a graduate of the University of Arkansas, taught school at Shelbyville, Kentucky, and later became the wife of Dr. H. E. Murray of Texarkana, who was a lieutenant of the Medical Corps during the World war; Gaines, a graduate of the University of Arkansas, completes the family. Judge and Mrs. Hon are well known in Fort Smith and other sections of the state, and along the line of his profession the Judge has won distinction, success and prominence. His decisions always indicated strong mentality, careful analysis, a thorough knowledge of the law and an unbiased judgment. The judge on the bench fails more frequently perhaps from a deficiency in that broad-mindedness which not only comprehends the details of a situation quickly and insures a complete self-control under even the most exasperating conditions, than from any other cause; and the judge who makes a success in the discharge of his multitudinous delicate duties is a man of well-rounded character, finely balanced mind and splendid intellectual attainments. That Judge Hon was regarded as such a jurist is a uniformly accepted fact and he is enjoying an extensive practice as a representative of the bar.

REV. PATRICK FRANCIS HORAN.

Rev. Patrick Francis Horan, a representative of the Catholic priesthood, now in charge of the Church of the Immaculate Conception of Fort Smith, was born in Ireland, in the year 1866. Liberal educational training prepared him for the life work which he entered upon. He was educated in the American College at Rome, Italy, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1892 by Cardinal Parrochi in the city of Rome. Coming to America, his first pastorate was at Little Rock, Arkansas, where he was placed in charge of the Church of Our Lady of Good Counsel. There he continued his labors successfully for about twelve years. On the expiration of that period he came to Fort Smith, where he has remained pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception for about fifteen years and under his guidance the church has made steady progress. Its work is well organized and the labors of Rev. Father Horan are productive of good results in the upbuilding of the cause.

Rev. Father Horan is a forceful man and an eloquent speaker, who is often called upon to address public meetings. He is interested in the general welfare and throws the weight of his aid and influence on the side of public progress and improvement. He is popular with all classes and is greatly loved by the people of his parish.

SAM ROREX.

Sam Rorex, member of the Yell county bar, residing at Dardanelle and filling the office of prosecuting attorney, was born near Russellville, Arkansas, October 11, 1886. He represents one of the old southern families, his grandfather being J. W. Rorex, a native of Alabama, who came to Arkansas soon after the Civil war, in which he had served for four years as a member of the Confederate army. He was wounded and captured at Vicksburg, Mississippi. His last days were spent in Pope county, where he departed this life at the age of sixty-five years. His son, George Rorex, who was born in Alabama, is now living at the age of fifty-six years. In Pope county, Arkansas, he was married to Miss Ida Aston, a native of Mississippi, as was her father, who spent his life in that state. He, too, was a Confederate soldier, whose service covered the four-year period of the Civil war. It was in 1871 that George Rorex came to Arkansas, while his wife arrived in Pope county in 1884. He has always followed the occupation of farming and is also a merchant at Fowler, Arkansas. His political allegiance has ever been given to the democratic party and fraternally he is connected with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen. He and his wife belong to the Baptist church and their loyal support of the church and close adherence to its teachings have made them most highly respected people of the community. They became parents of five children, four of whom are living: Sam, of this review; Albert, who is assistant cashier of the Farmers Bank at Dardanelle and who was at Camp Pike during the World war; and Viola and Robert E., who are living with their parents.

Sam Rorex pursued his education in Ouachita College and in the University of Arkansas, becoming a student in the law department at Little Rock. He was admitted to the bar in 1913 and entered upon the active practice of his profession in Danville, where he remained until 1916, when he came to Dardanelle, and has here since made his home. He engaged in general practice here until 1920, when he was elected prosecuting attorney of the fifth judicial circuit and has since filled the office. There are four counties in his district, Yell, Pope, Johnson and Conway. His professional and official duties make heavy demand upon his time and energies and he has proven most capable in meeting official requirement. He prepares his cases with great thoroughness and care and his ability is manifest in the many favorable verdicts which he has won.

In 1917 Mr. Rorex was married to Miss Floy Pierce Leming, who was born in Yell county and is a daughter of Dr. E. Leming, who practiced medicine at Danville to the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Rorex have two children: Edna, three years of age; and Sam, who is in his first year.

Mr. Rorex served in the United States army at Camp Pike during the World war for a period of eleven months. He has figured quite prominently in public affairs as an active supporter of the democratic party and in 1913, and again in 1915, was a member of the state legislature. During his connection with the general assembly he gave thoughtful and earnest consideration to all vital questions which came up for settlement and served as chairman of the house judiciary committee. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His life has been guided by high and honorable principles in every relation and he holds to advanced standards in matters of citizenship and of public service.

JAMES W. STEPHENS, D. D. S.

Dr. James W. Stephens, a representative of the dental profession practicing in Pine Bluff, was born in Sheridan, Arkansas, in April, 1885, and is a son of J. G. and S. E. (Sudduth) Stephens. The grandfather in the paternal line served in the Confederate army and on removing westward from Georgia took up his abode in Pine Bluff, Arkansas. Dr. J. E. Stephens, a brother of Dr. James W. Stephens, is a successful dentist practicing at Benton, this state.

Dr. James W. Stephens was educated in the Vanderbilt University and entered upon the practice of his profession at Sheridan, Arkansas, after having completed a thorough and comprehensive course of study well qualifying him for the onerous and difficult duties of the profession. He has an office well supplied with the latest equipments and the multitudinous delicate little instruments that are used in dental practice and he is regarded as a most capable dental surgeon. He served as a member of the state board of dental examiners from 1913 until 1918 and he is a prominent and valued member of the Arkansas State Dental Society, of which he was treasurer from 1909 until 1911. It was in the latter year that he came to Pine Bluff, where he has since practiced, and his patronage has grown year by year.

In 1907 Dr. Stephens was united in marriage to Miss Janie Hayes, a daughter of W. F. Hayes of Nashville, Tennessee, and they are parents of two children: Louise and Wilma Jean. In his fraternal relations Dr. Stephens is a Mason and also an Odd Fellow, loyally following the teachings and purposes of these orders, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. The sterling traits of his character and the principles of his manhood have insured him a creditable and enviable position in the regard of his fellow townsmen.

JUSTIN MATTHEWS.

Justin Matthews, a Little Rock capitalist, is one of the most enterprising and successful business men of Arkansas. His birth occurred at Monticello, Drew county, this state, December 23, 1875, his parents being Samuel James and Anna (Wilson) Matthews, whose family numbered six daughters and three sons, of whom three daughters and all of the sons are yet living. The father was both an attorney and horticulturist and was prominent in connection with many events which have left their impress upon the history of the state. In 1874 he was a delegate to the constitutional convention and during an active life he did not a little to shape public thought and opinion.

Justin Matthews acquired his early education in the public schools of Monticello, Arkansas, and afterward continued his studies in the Hindman University School at Monticello. His life has been one of intense and well directed activity. Throughout his entire career his industry has been untiring, and he has quickly recognized and utilized opportunities for advancing his business affairs and has just as quickly put forth equally effective effort for the welfare and progress of the state. He has demonstrated his faith in Little Rock and her future by large investment in property in this city until his holdings are now very extensive. "His father, Samuel James Matthews, was a man of substance, of high integrity and strong character and was particularly notable as a man of intellectual independence. Justin Matthews has inherited many of these sterling traits and has the same intellectual independence, which enables him to pursue a course which he believes to be right without considering public opinion or swerving from his position because of the criticism of others. He thinks out individually and he has achieved his purpose through determined effort wisely directed. He has been the champion of many public improvements in the state and particularly in connection with the development of good roads. It has been said of him that none has done more to put through the present good roads program of Arkansas and that he is an enthusiast in his faith in the larger future of Little Rock and the state." One of the most prominent public improvements with which he has been actively identified is the Broadway bridge and he is accredited with being the father of the scheme. In 1913 he commenced single handed to work for the construction of this bridge and his efforts have been crowned with success for now it is well under way and before long it will be completed.

On the 16th of January, 1900, in the capital city, Mr. Matthews was married to Miss Agnes Somers, who was born in Pulaski county, Arkansas, in 1880. They have become parents of six children, four living, namely: Justin, born in 1901; John Pope; Henrietta Ann; and Somers.

Politically Mr. Matthews is a democrat, having given unswerving allegiance to the party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He belongs to the Country Club and those who meet him socially as well as those with whom he comes in contact in a business way regard him as a forceful, capable and representative citizen, one whose well formulated plans are carried steadily forward to success—plans which have not only been of great individual benefit but have also constituted a potent element in the growth and progress of community and commonwealth.

O. M. YOUNG.

O. M. Young, president of O. M. Young & Company, engaged in the abstract insurance and real estate loan business in Stuttgart, and also a member of the law firm of Young & Elms, is actuated in all that he does by a spirit of laudable ambition that has enabled him to forge steadily to the front in both business and professional connections. A native of Missouri, he was born in Shelby county, May 5, 1890, and is a son of Robert P. and Fannie (Highland) Young. The father, a native of Shelby county, Missouri, is a son of S. and Joan (Forsythe) Young, the former a native of Kentucky, whence he removed to Missouri. S. Young was called to fill the office of county judge in Shelby county and made an excellent record on the bench. He afterward removed to Arkansas in company with his family, save his son, Robert P. Young. He settled at Stuttgart, taking up his abode here many years ago, so that through an extended period the Young family has been represented in this part of the state, becoming actively identified with its development and progress. Judge Young was a Civil war veteran, aiding in the defense of the Confederacy, while in times of peace his labors were a potent force in connection with the public life and material welfare of the community. The mother of O. M. Young was a daughter of John and Jane (Crawford) Highland, and her father, a native of Scotland, settled near Bowling Green, Kentucky, following his emigration to the new world. Robert P. and Fannie (Highland) Young, parents of O. M. Young, resided for many years in Shelby county, Missouri, there continuing to make their home until 1898, when they removed to Stuttgart, Arkansas. They had a family of two sons, the younger being James E., who is engaged in the hardware business in Stuttgart, where he succeeded his father, who had been the founder of the store and had successfully carried on the business for a number of years.

O. M. Young was a lad of but eight years when the family home was established in Stuttgart, so that he pursued much of his early education in the public schools of this city, passing through consecutive grades to the high school. After he attended the Arkansas Military Academy and subsequently became a law student in the University of Arkansas. Having qualified for law practice, he opened an office in Little Rock but afterward removed to Stuttgart, where he has continued as an active and resourceful member of the Arkansas county bar. In 1912 he organized an abstract company but later disposed of his interest in that business and formed a new company, which was incorporated under the name of O. M. Young & Company, of which Mr. Young is the president, with M. K. Boutwell as vice president and J. W. Boutwell as secretary. This company is now conducting a large and growing abstract and real estate loan business and Mr. Young is largely directing the affairs of the company, making it one of the profitable business concerns of the city. He also continues in the practice of law and has been connected with much important litigation.

In 1911 Mr. Young was united in marriage to Miss Zula Patrick of Little Rock, a daughter of Z. W. and Lena (Slemmons) Patrick. Mr. Young and his wife are members of the Christian church and their interest always centers in those channels through which flow the greatest and most permanent good to the greatest number. He is identified with several fraternal organizations, being a Knights Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Mystic Shriner, a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America. During the World war he was chairman of the Red Cross for Arkansas county and a director of the Liberty Loan drives. He stands at all times for those interests which feature most largely in connection with public progress and welfare and while at all times upholding the legal and moral status of the community, he is, through his abstract and real estate loan business, also promoting the material progress of this section of the state.

OBIE R. KELLY, M. D.

One of the prominent physicians and surgeons of Grant county is Dr. Obie R. Kelly, a resident of Sheridan. His birth occurred on the 10th of June, 1885, in Belfast, Grant county, a son of Miles and Lydia (Wells) Kelly, both natives of Georgia. They were married in that state and came to Arkansas in the early '80s, locating on a farm in Grant county. The demise of Mrs. Kelly occurred in 1893. Mr. Kelly is now living retired in the village of Prattsville, Grant county, and is a highly respected and beloved citizen of that community.

In the acquirement of an education Obie R. Kelly attended the common schools of Grant county and the Prattsville high school. His earliest ambition was to become a doctor and subsequently he enrolled in the medical department of the University of Arkansas, remaining there during 1905. He then spent two years in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Little Rock and in 1909 received his M. D. degree from the medical department of the University of Kentucky at Louisville. Immediately after graduation he located in Carthage, Dallas county, this state, where he had previously practiced during his vacations after completing his second course of lectures, and he remained there until December of the year 1913. In that year he came to Sheridan. He has since resided here and is enjoying a most successful practice, having won for himself an enviable position among the leading members of the medical profession in Grant county.

In 1913 Dr. Kelly was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Forrester of Carthage, and to their union one child has been born: Mary Ellen. Dr. Kelly has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Baptist church here and are generous contributors to its support. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Sheridan Lodge, No. 260, F. & A. M. Along strictly professional lines Dr. Kelly holds membership in the American Medical Association, Southern Medical Association, Arkansas State and Grant County Medical Societies and for some time was president of the last named organization. He is a constant student of his profession and through membership in these societies and through reading the best medical literature keeps in touch with advance being made by eminent members of the profession throughout the country. Dr. Kelly devotes the greater part of his time to his practice but is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities as well as the privileges of citizenship and to that end takes an active part in the furtherance of any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare. He is one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the county and state and is held in high esteem, both by his professional brethren and his fellowmen.

CHARLES CALLOWAY PRICE, M. D.

Dr. Charles Calloway Price, a man of high professional attainments, has devoted twenty-five years to the practice of medicine and surgery and is numbered among the leading physicians of Desha county, having maintained an office at Dumas since 1911. He was born in Franklin county, Virginia, July 16, 1872, a son of Owen H. and Lucy (Taliaferro) Price, both of whom were natives of that state. The father was one of the most prominent men in public affairs of Franklin county, filling various important public offices, and for about eighteen years prior to his demise he served as clerk of the circuit court, most capably discharging the duties of that position. He died at Rockmount, Virginia, the county seat of Franklin county, in 1910, when sixty-eight years of age. The mother was called to her final rest in 1889.

In the acquirement of an education Charles Calloway Price attended the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and Washington and Lee University at Lexington, that state. In 1893 he matriculated in the Medical College of Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1896, and then served an internship in the Rebecca Sanitarium at Roanoke, Virginia, thus gaining valuable practical experience. On the 1st of January, 1897, he opened an office in Douglas, Lincoln county, Arkansas, where he successfully followed his profession for thirteen years, and in 1910 he became connected with the Rockefeller Foundation as a member of the hookworm commission, serving in that capacity for about ten months. In January, 1911, he came to Dumas, where he has since been located, and in the intervening period he has built up a large practice. He has never regarded his education as completed with the termination of his college work but has ever remained a close and discriminating student of his profession and in 1904 he took a postgraduate course in the New York Polyclinic, while in 1917 he attended Tulane University at New Orleans, Louisiana, thereby greatly promoting his knowledge and efficiency. In addition to his activities in the medical profession Dr. Price is also acting as engineer of the Desha drainage district, No. 5.

In 1915 was solemnized the marriage of Charles C. Price and Miss Ruth Kiteley of Dumas, and they have become the parents of two children: Charles C., Jr. and Alfie T. Dr. and Mrs. Price are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Dr. Price is serving on its board of stewards. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 547, F. & A. M., and Victory Chapter, No. 113, R. A. M., and he is also connected with the Knights of Pythias, while his professional relations are with the Desha County and Arkansas State Medical Societies. Progress has been the keynote of his career and he is an exponent of all that is highest, best and most advanced in the practice of medicine and surgery and of all that is most worthy and honorable in his relations to his fellowmen.

HUGH RUDEN CARTER.

Hugh Ruden Carter, city improvement engineer of Little Rock, with broad knowledge of the scientific principles which underlie his work and comprehensive practical experience in all that has to do with road building and other lines of city improvement, was born in Winfield, Kansas, on the 27th of June, 1887, while his parents were on a visit there, the family home being at that time in the city of Fayetteville, Arkansas. He is a son of James David and Mary Josephine (Glass) Carter. The father was born in the vicinity of Fayetteville in 1855 and still makes his home in that city, where he has retired from active business. His political endorsement is given to the republican party. His wife was born in Fayetteville in 1859 and their marriage was celebrated in the year 1876. They have become parents of three sons and two daughters, all yet living with the exception of one daughter.

Hugh R. Carter acquired his early education in the Fayetteville public schools and afterward was graduated from the University of Arkansas in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering, while in 1914 the Civil Engineer degree was conferred upon him. He has always devoted his attention to professional interests and duties, specializing in the building of highways and pavements, and his advanced knowledge and expert skill have led to his selection for the important office of city improvement engineer at Little Rock. He was formerly state highway engineer of Arkansas from 1913 until 1919 and he is now consulting engineer for eleven road districts in the state. He finds ready and correct solution for the many intricate and involved professional problems which confront him in connection with the execution of the duties of his office and the private practice of his profession.

On the 21st of December, 1910, in Texarkana, Mr. Carter was married to Miss Velma Mary Robins, who was born at that place in 1889. They have membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally Mr. Carter is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He also has membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and in club circles is well known through his identification with the Quapaw Club and the Springlake Club. His military record consists of service as captain in charge of highway construction at Camp Knox, Kentucky, from August, 1918, until January, 1919, during which period he was on leave of absence from his state work. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party, but he has never sought office outside the strict path of his profession, preferring always to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his chosen calling, in which he has made steady advance until he now occupies a place of prominence among the road builders and civil engineers of Arkansas.

WALTER A. LEE.

Walter A. Lee was born October 2, 1857, in England. His parents, William and Mary (Adams) Lee, also born on the "Merrie isle," had a family of five children. The father was employed in an official capacity by the British government until he came to the United States in 1871. He first settled in Homer, Illinois, and later removed to Bement, that state, where his remaining days were passed.

Walter A. Lee spent the first fourteen years of his life in his native country and pursued a public school education. He then accompanied his parents to the new world and here he initiated his business career by entering the railroad service, with the Wabash Railway, as fireman and extra engineer. Steadily he worked his way upward by reason of his industry and fidelity to the interests which he served, until various promotions had brought him to the responsible position of engineer on passenger trains with the St. Louis & South Western, on the 25th of August, 1885. He continued in that employ to the time of his death, which occurred March 13, 1912. He was always most careful and efficient, methodical and systematic in the performance of his tasks and never did he take any undue risk. His fidelity is indicated in the fact that throughout his life he remained in the railroad service with two companies.

In 1881 Mr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss Mary C. Martino, a daughter of Joseph Martino, who was a resident of the state of Ohio and belonged to one of the old families there. Mr. and Mrs. Lee had two children, but one is deceased. The surviving son, Charles E., is now in the employ of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, with headquarters at Little Rock. The other son was Walter Hamilton, who died at the age of twenty years.

In his political views Mr. Lee was a democrat, always voting for the men and measures of the party, yet never seeking nor desiring office. Fraternally he was a Mason and attained the Knights Templar degree of the York Rite, while he was also identified with the Scottish Rite bodies, and was a Shriner. He enjoyed the unqualified regard of his brethren of the craft because of his loyalty to its teachings and its high purposes. He was a prominent member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. He had many friends in Pine Bluff and this section of the state, the sterling traits of his character being such as win esteem in every land and every clime. Mrs. Lee, surviving her husband, now makes her home at No. 602 East Second avenue in Pine Bluff. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lee were members of the Eastern Star and she is a Maccabee.

A. D. NORWOOD.

A. D. Norwood, a dealer in produce at Lincoln and classed with the enterprising and progressive business men of his section of the county, was born June 11, 1881, on a farm in the vicinity of Lincoln, his parents being William and Elizabeth (Holt) Norwood, the former a native of Texas and the latter of Washington county, Arkansas. The father had one brother, John Norwood, who was killed while serving in the Confederate army during the Civil war. William Norwood came to Washington county about 1875 and was here married. He was one of the early nurserymen of Washington county but is now living retired, enjoying in well earned ease the fruits of his former toil. He and his wife are residents of Lincoln. William Norwood has always voted with the democratic party but has never been an office seeker. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, while his wife is a devoted and consistent member of the Baptist church. Their family numbered eleven children, ten of whom are yet living: Sam V., who is associated with his brother in the produce business and in handling real estate at Lincoln; A. D., of this review; William L., a traveling salesman residing at Lincoln; Fannie, at home; Lucille, the wife of Alfred Kelley, a traveling man residing in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Lem, who is engaged in clerking in a store in Minneapolis; Clyde, a produce dealer of Okmulgee, Oklahoma; Eula, the wife of Bert West, manager for the Hodges Brothers Mercantile Company at Lincoln; Bryan, a produce merchant of Okmulgee, Oklahoma; and Lola, at home.

A. D. Norwood was educated in the schools of Washington county, Arkansas, and pursued a business course at Springfield, Missouri. The first work in which he engaged in the employ of others was that of farming and later he began clerking in a store. He subsequently conducted a mercantile business on his own account for a period of four years and later he devoted four years to government and state work in connection with the bureau of animal industry. He next engaged in the fruit and produce business at Lincoln in 1911 and in this won a substantial measure of success. He erected a large two-story brick building in Lincoln, seventy-five by ninety feet, and is today one of the leading produce men of this section of the state, annually handling a large amount of fruit and vegetables. He is also the owner of a theatre in the First National Bank building and he has his produce offices upstairs. He is the vice president of the First National Bank of Lincoln and also president of the Lincoln Spray & Supply Company, which manufactures lime and sulphur for spraying fruit. He has developed his entire business through his own efforts, close application, energy and determination being the vital forces which have brought his prosperity.

In 1903 Mr. Norwood was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Holt, who was born in Washington county, a daughter of Benjamin Holt, a pioneer of this county. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Norwood belongs also to the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has always voted with the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and he has served as a member of the town council. Mr. Norwood has spent his entire life in northwestern Arkansas and has contributed in no small measure to the growth and progress of the communities in which he has lived.

JOHN S. PIERCE.

John S. Pierce, actively identified with farming in White county for many years and now making his home at Russell, was born near Denmark in this county, November 16, 1859. His parents, Moses and Sallie Ann (Womack) Pierce, were natives of East Tennessee and in that state were married. There the father followed farming until 1858, when he started across the country with horse team and wagon, making the river crossing on ferry and ultimately reaching White county. It was his purpose to continue the journey to Texas but one of the horses became sick and they tarried in White county. Being pleased with the country Mr. Pierce purchased land, which was then a heavily wooded tract. He cut away the native timber, cleared off the brush and as soon as possible began to plow and cultivate the land, which he thus continued to improve until enlisting for service in the Confederate army at the beginning of the war, being on duty most of the time west of the Mississippi. He died during the war period, his death, however, resulting from a wound which he had sustained previous to his enlistment. In that early day he had engaged in hunting and he also followed blacksmithing, making the tools with which he worked and also tools for his neighbors. He experienced all of the hardships and privations of frontier life, living in White county when it was a pioneer region, in which bears, deer and turkeys could be secured in large numbers. He was but twenty-nine years of age at the time of his death, while his wife reached the age of sixty years. She married again, becoming the wife of H. P. Herd and by her first marriage she had three children, the eldest of whom died in infancy, the others being: John S. and Stephen S., but the latter died at the age of twenty-one years. By her second marriage she had one child, Belle, who is the widow of W. F. Mayfield, of White county. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pierce belonged to the Baptist church and endeavored at all times closely to follow its teachings, while politically he gave his support to the democratic party. His father was a factor in the pioneer development of different localities. He was Stephen Pierce, a native of Tennessee, who emigrated to Illinois, where he owned land and carried on farming, removing to that state soon after the Civil war and spending his remaining days there. The maternal grandfather of John S. Pierce was Jacob Womack connected with one of the old and honored pioneer families of this state.

John S. Pierce attended the subscription schools in his boyhood days. He walked five and a half miles to receive instruction in a little log schoolhouse, seated with split log benches, while the curriculum consisted of little more than the "three R's." Moreover, he could pursue his studies for only about two months in the year, as he remained on the home farm with his mother and assisted her in its development and improvement. Following her death he went to Tennessee, where he was employed at farm labor for four years, on the expiration of which period he returned to White county and here did contract work in making wagon spokes. He also manufactured staves and sold log timber and piling. Eventually he entered the livestock business, buying and selling horses and cattle at Russell. He likewise became a factor in mercantile circles at Russell, where he owned and conducted a store for three different periods. He also owned farm land and at one time he operated the Pierce and Moore ranch, devoted to the raising of hogs and cattle. He now specializes in strawberries and cotton and the land which he owns is particularly adaptable to the cultivation of strawberries.

Mr. Pierce has been married twice and by his first marriage had one child, Earnest F., now living in New Mexico. He afterward wedded Hannah Cunningham, a native of Indiana and a daughter of William Cunningham, a railroad man and a merchant of Bradford. There have been six children born of the second marriage, two of whom died in infancy, the others being: W. S., a livestock man of Russell; J. W., who follows farming in White county; Mary A. and Lela, both at home. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in which he is serving as steward. They take an active interest in all of the church work and do everything in their power to promote its growth and extend its influence. Mr. Pierce is a Blue Lodge Mason and in politics he is a democrat. He has served as school director and is interested in all that pertains to the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of his community. His life has been actuated by high and honorable principles and those who know aught of his career speak of him in terms of the warmest regard, because he has ever been faithful to his profession, loyal in citizenship, reliable and progressive in business.

B. ALLEN HANCOCK.

B. Allen Hancock, of El Dorado, who is serving as sheriff of Union county, was born near the old town of Marysville on the 6th of April, 1872, and was reared to farm life, early becoming acquainted with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. His educational privileges were limited to the opportunities afforded by the common schools. He attended through the winter seasons, working on the farm through the summer months, and remained on the old homestead until twenty-two years of age, when he went to Texas, where he was employed as a cowboy on the range. He devoted three years to work of that character and then returned to Columbia county, Arkansas, near Atlanta, where he was again engaged in farm work for a period of five years, and in addition to the cultivation of his land he carried on merchandising in Atlanta. In 1906 he removed to El Dorado, where he has conducted a general merchandise store and later a hardware store. He also has engaged in buying and selling horses and mules, following this business for a number of years. He has always led a life of activity and his energy and determination have constituted the salient qualities on which he has builded the success that has come to him.

Mr. Hancock has filled a number of public positions. He was city marshal of El Dorado from 1912 until 1915 and in 1920 he was elected to the office of sheriff of Union county, taking up the duties of the position on the 1st of January, 1921. He is now making an excellent record by the prompt and fearless manner in which he is promoting the cause of justice through the apprehension of criminals. Aside from this he has oil interests and land interests in Arkansas, being connected with the Stewart Oil Company. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished and his life should serve to inspire and encourage others, showing what can be done when the individual is industrious and ambitious.

Mr. Hancock was married December 23, 1904, to Mrs. Mary Lee McBride. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and its teachings have guided him in all the relations of life. He is well known in Arkansas, where he has gained a large circle of friends, all of whom speak of him in terms of high regard.

J. E. DARR.

J. E. Darr, an enterprising merchant of Atkins, is today the oldest native born resident of the city. Here his birth occurred October 17, 1870, his parents being James F. and Mary Jane (Hearne) Darr. The father was born in Lincoln county, North Carolina, on the 3d of June, 1841, and died August 7, 1894. His father, who was born in North Carolina, died in that state, and the mother, Mrs. Ann Darr, afterward came to Arkansas. It was in the year 1858 that James F. Darr arrived in Pope county and settled on a farm. He purchased considerable land and added to his holdings from time to time until he had large property interests in this part of the state. He also engaged in merchandising and was conducting a store at the time of his demise. He started out in the world empty-handed but by persistent effort and unflinching energy worked his way steadily upward and became one of the prosperous residents of his section of the state. In early manhood he joined the Confederate army and served for four years with the southern troops, being twice wounded during that period. He was always a democrat in his political views and he served as the first mayor of Atkins. Fraternally he was connected with the Knights of Pythias. It was near Atkins in 1867 that he wedded Mary Jane Hearne, who was born December 5, 1849, a daughter of Joshua Hearne, who was born in South Carolina and was one of the pioneer settlers of Arkansas. His people came originally from Ireland, while the Darr family was of Scotch lineage. Mrs. Mary J. Darr died May 21, 1920, and during her life was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Like her husband she enjoyed the high esteem and goodwill of many friends throughout this part of the state. They became the parents of nine children, of whom four are living: J. E.; W. E., who is a farmer of Atkins; R. W., a physician, practicing in Atkins; and Irl R., who is a merchant engaged in business with his brother, J. E. Darr.

The public school system of Atkins afforded J. E. Darr his educational opportunities. His early business training was received in his father's store—in fact, he has been connected with the store from the age of eleven years. The business is now conducted under the firm style of Darr & Darr, the brothers carrying an extensive line of general merchandise and conducting a large and profitable business. Together they also own fifteen hundred acres of land, which they have acquired since the father's death. They are men of marked business enterprise, displaying almost intuitive wisdom in the conduct of their affairs and their determination and diligence are the substantial qualities which have brought to them well earned success. J. E. Darr devotes his entire time to his store and his farm. He and his brother also buy cotton and handled about twenty-five hundred bales in 1920. Their store is a commodious and well stocked establishment and they have a large business, which is the merited reward of their close application and sound judgment.

On the 22d of April, 1894, J. E. Darr was married to Miss Susie Nugent, who was born in Toronto, Canada, in 1871, a daughter of Joseph Nugent, who removed to Canada from Ireland in 1868 and in 1873 brought his family to Arkansas, his daughter, Mrs. Darr, being then but two years of age. He was a farmer and also operated a ferry in this state. Mr. and Mrs. Darr have become parents of two children: Leta, who was graduated from Galloway College at Searcy, Arkansas, and from the Bush Conservatory of Music in Chicago, is now head of the music department in the public schools of Atkins; Alta is the wife of Thomas A. Watkins, president of the Bank of Searcy at Searcy, Arkansas. She was also graduated from Galloway College at Searcy and from the Bush Conservatory in Chicago. She became a teacher of voice and had taught for two terms in Galloway when she met Mr. Watkins and was married. Mrs. Darr and her daughters are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Darr is a Mason, also a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has filled all of the offices in the Knights of Pythias lodge and he is at all times faithful to the teachings and high purposes of these different fraternal societies. In politics he is a democrat and has served as mayor of Atkins, loyally advocating every plan that has to do with the city's upbuilding. He is widely recognized as a most public-spirited man and one whose entire record is a credit to one of the most honored family names in this section of the state. His worth is widely acknowledged as he has long been a dynamic factor in the business development of Pope county, nor has he ever been unmindful of the duties and obligations of citizenship. On the contrary his support has been a valued asset in public progress and he belongs to that class of men who have been most active in upholding the civic, legal and moral standards of the community.

ERWIN KOLLER.

The development and upbuilding of every community depends not alone upon one line of activity but upon the combined efforts of many men of enterprise who control various phases of business, all of which are essential to the welfare and well-being of a community. In this connection, therefore, mention should be made of Erwin Koller, who is the senior partner in the Koller-McKim Plumbing Company of Fort Smith. Mr. Koller is a native of Switzerland and spent the first fourteen years of his life in the land of the Alps, after which he came to America, attracted by the broader business opportunities which he believed he might secure on this side of the Atlantic. Arriving in the new world in 1884, he worked for a time in a grocery store and afterward learned the machinist's trade at Fort Smith. He was employed for a period in St. Louis and then returned to Fort Smith, Arkansas, where he secured a position with the Electric Light & Power Company. Each experience that came to him brought to him wider knowledge of business conditions and activities and step by step he has advanced, utilizing fully the opportunities which have been his. In 1907 he established a gas appliance store and in 1910 formed a partnership with Paul McKim, opening a plumbing department in connection with the other business. Their present establishment is located at No. 16 North Seventh street, where they have one of the most complete display rooms of its kind in this part of the state. They handle gas appliances, furnaces and plumbing fixtures, do all kinds of plumbing and steamfitting and are agents for the Round Oak furnaces and also for the American radiators. Their business has assumed extensive and gratifying proportions. They are expert workmen in their line and they have thus secured many important contracts of this character and have rendered valuable service in the field of their chosen labor.

Mr. Koller was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Graber and they have become parents of three children, as follows: Cecilea, Edwin and Robert.

Mr. Koller has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the new world, for here he found the opportunities which he sought and in their utilization has steadily advanced. His position is now a gratifying one in connection with the industrial and commercial interests of Fort Smith and whatever success he has achieved is attributable entirely to his own labors and careful management.

THOMAS E. SANDERS, M. D.

Dr. Thomas E. Sanders, actively and successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Hot Springs, was born in Beebe, Arkansas, on the 13th of December, 1880. His father, A. F. Sanders, a native of Alabama, was also a physician and in 1886 came to Hot Springs, where he continued in the practice of his profession to the time of his death in 1906. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having joined the Confederate army when a youth of but fourteen years. He belonged to the Knights of Pythias lodge and was highly esteemed by those with whom he was brought into contact through social or professional relations.

Dr. Thomas E. Sanders was a lad of but six years when brought by his parents to Hot Springs and here he attended the public schools, while after completing his high school course he became a student in the Arkansas State University, graduating therefrom with the class of 1901. Whether natural predilection, environment or inherited tendency had most to do with his choice of a profession it is perhaps impossible to determine, but at any rate he entered upon the field of labor for which nature seemed to have aptly adapted him. He determined to follow in the footsteps of his father and read medicine under his direction for a time, while later he entered Tulane University at New Orleans, Louisiana, as a medical student and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1905. He then put his theoretical knowledge to the practical test by serving as interne in the Charity Hospital at New Orleans and there gained that broad and valuable knowledge which hospital practice and experience bring. He afterwards returned to Hot Springs and became associated with his father in practice, the partnership continuing until the father's death. Since that time Dr. Sanders has practiced independently and has steadily advanced by reason of his merit and skill to a point in the front rank of the able physicians of the city. His practice is now extensive and of an important character and the results which he secures well entitle him to the enviable reputation that he now bears.

Dr. Sanders was married to Miss Ethel Hallman, a daughter of Dr. Hallman, and they now have two sons: Hallman, who is twelve years of age; and Carl, a lad of seven. The parents are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and along strictly professional lines Dr. Sanders is connected with the County, State and American Medical Associations. He served as city health officer in 1914 and 1915. He is keenly interested in everything that tends to bring to man the key to the complex mystery which we call life. His reading and study have covered a wide field and he at all times keeps in touch with the trend of modern professional thought, investigation and progress.

J. Z. SEXTON, M. D.

Dr. J. Z. Sexton, a leading representative of the medical fraternity of Siloam Springs, has a thorough knowledge of his profession and through close study and practical experience has gained the skill which brings to his work the utmost possibility of accuracy in results. He was born in Smith county, Virginia, July 31, 1871, a son of Le Grand and Catherine (Korff) Sexton. The father was a native of Winchester, Virginia, and always remained a resident of that state, followed the occupation of farming and also engaging in merchandising. When a young man of thirty years he enlisted as a soldier in the Confederate army and served throughout the period of the Civil war. Mrs. Sexton was born in Washington, D. C., and acquired her education in the Convent of the Visitation at Georgetown, D. C. Owing to the illness of a half brother, who was serving in the Confederate army, she took up the profession of nursing, which she continued to follow throughout the Civil war, performing important, self-sacrificing service, and it was while acting in this capacity that she met Mr. Sexton. For a time she was connected with the treasury department of the Confederate government and was thus active at the time of Sherman's memorable march to the sea. She was with Jefferson Davis, president of the Southern Confederacy, in St. Paul's church, when General Lee sent word that the city of Richmond, Virginia, should be evacuated, and was present during the burning of the city, losing all of her clothing except the garments which she wore. She sought safety in the Federal Hospital and aided in nursing the northern soldiers. After her marriage she returned to Virginia and continued a resident of that state until after her husband's death. She then went to Washington, D. C., where she lived for a number of years, but later returned to Virginia, dying in that state in 1919. She was at one time connected with Sullins College at Bristol, Tennessee, organizing the kindergarten department of that institution. She was a prominent member of the Daughters of the Confederacy and her life was a noble and self-sacrificing one, devoted to the interests of others. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Sexton were six children: Jennie, the wife of Dr. N. H. Reeve, a leading physician of Bristol, Tennessee; Moses, a well-known druggist of Washington, D. C.; J. Z., of this review; Mattie, who is unmarried and also resides in Washington; Paul, who is connected with the government service and resides in the nation's capital, and Kathryn, who is unmarried and also makes her home in Washington. Mrs. Sexton was a Catholic in religious faith, and her husband was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he was a democrat in his political views. His father, Aaron Sexton, was born in Massachusetts and removed to Virginia prior to the outbreak of the Civil war. The maternal grandfather, Herman Korff, was a refugee of Russian Poland, who sought shelter in the United States in order to avoid religious and political persecution. For a time he resided in Washington, D. C., but became a victim of tuberculosis and died in Cuba. He was of royal birth, the Sexton family being originally members of the English nobility, bearing a coat-of-arms.

In the acquirement of an education Dr. Sexton attended the public schools of Washington, D. C., and the Catholic School of Georgetown, now known as the Georgetown University, subsequently becoming a student in the medical department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897. For a time he served as interne in a hospital and then took up the work of his profession in Indian Territory, where he remained for a year. In 1900 he arrived in Siloam Springs, Arkansas, where he has since resided, and in the intervening period of twenty-one years has built up a large practice. He has ever remained a close student of his profession and pursued a three months' postgraduate course in Chicago, while for four months he was occupied in similar work in New York city, thus augmenting his knowledge and skill.

In 1899 Dr. Sexton was united in marriage to Miss Ada Pegues, a native of Siloam Springs and a daughter of Robert Pegues, who for thirty years was numbered among the leading druggists of this locality. Two children have been born of this union: Ruth, who married T. B. Boyd, a citizen of Waco, Texas, and Paul, who is attending school.

Dr. and Mrs. Sexton are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Rogers, Arkansas, and the professional connections are with the Benton County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. He utilizes every possible opportunity to promote his knowledge and increase his efficiency, and he enjoys the respect of his professional colleagues and also of the general public.

RAY ANDERSON.

Ray Anderson, cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Green Forest, was born on a farm near the city in which he still makes his home, his natal day being October 26, 1891. He is a son of Columbus and Alice (Johnson) Anderson, the former born in Carroll county, Arkansas, while the latter is a native of Illinois. The grandfather, Abner J. M. Anderson, was a native of North Carolina and removed to Arkansas in the '30s, settling in Carroll county, where his remaining days were devoted to the occupation of farming and stock raising. He was in the Federal army during the Civil war. He had several brothers, all of whom were with the Confederate forces, two serving with the rank of captain, but Mr. Anderson believed in the righteousness of the Union cause and remained a loyal follower of the stars and stripes. The maternal grandfather of Ray Anderson was Presley Johnson, who was born near Cairo, Illinois, and became a resident of Carroll county, Arkansas, in the '80s. Here he spent his remaining days, his death occurring in 1910. The marriage of Columbus Anderson and Alice Johnson was celebrated in Carroll county and the father has here followed the occupation of farming and stock raising, winning a substantial measure of success through the capable management of his business affairs. He has always given his political allegiance to the republican party. His wife is a member of the Baptist church, and sterling worth has gained for both of them the high respect of all with whom they have been brought in contact. They have become parents of three children: Ray, Julia, at home, and Tom, who is married and lives upon the home farm.

Ray Anderson acquired his early education in the public schools of his native county and afterward attended the University of Arkansas for one term. His first occupation after starting out in life independently was that of farming, and in 1916 he became identified with the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Green Forest, in which institution he was made cashier in 1917. This bank is capitalized for ten thousand dollars, has a surplus and undivided profits of sixty-seven hundred dollars and average deposits of one hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Anderson is proving a capable official, obliging and courteous to the patrons of the bank and at the same time carefully safeguarding the interests of stockholders and depositors alike.

In 1912 Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Gertrude Stafford, a daughter of John Stafford, a prominent farmer and stock raiser residing near Green Forest. Her father served for two terms in the state legislature. Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Christian church, and Mr. Anderson is a Royal Arch Mason. He has passed through all of the chairs in the local lodge and is a faithful follower of the teachings of the craft. Politically he has been a republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, but the honors and emoluments of office have had little attraction for him, as he has always preferred to concentrate his attention upon his business interest, and along this line has made steady progress.

SETH C. REYNOLDS.

Seth C. Reynolds is a successful and well-known attorney of Ashdown, where he has remained an active representative of the bar during the past fourteen years. A native son of Arkansas, he was born at Cascade Springs, now Naylor, in Faulkner county, on the 12th of May, 1878. His youth was spent on a farm in that vicinity and his early education was acquired in the public school at Naylor and in the high school at Rover, while subsequently he entered Hendrix College, from which he was graduated in 1904. He also spent one summer as a student in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and later entered the University of Arkansas, in which institution he completed his law course by graduation in 1907. The same year he was admitted to practice in the supreme court, while two years later he was admitted to the federal courts. Prior to and during the period of his college course he engaged in teaching school at intervals through a period of thirteen years, and won an enviable reputation as an educator, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he had acquired. After qualifying for law practice he took up his abode at Ashdown, where he has remained continuously since and has built up a clientage of most gratifying proportions and importance. He practiced independently until July, 1919, when he formed a partnership with A. P. Steel, with whom he was associated as senior partner in the firm of Reynolds & Steel until January, 1922. It is characteristic of him that he always gives his best efforts to a client, regardless of the standing of those who employ him, for he is no respecter of persons and money does not swerve him in the least from his path of duty as a lawyer. His briefs are ever splendidly prepared and his presentation of a cause is clear and logical. Aside from his professional interests he owns a farm of eight hundred and forty acres in Little River county.

On the 21st of August, 1908, Mr. Reynolds was united in marriage to Miss Nelle McCrary, and they occupy an enviable social position in the community in which they make their home. Mr. Reynolds is a democrat in his political views, and in 1920 was sent as an alternate delegate at large to the democratic national convention in San Francisco. He is a devoted and consistent member of the Methodist church and takes an active and helpful part in its work, having served for eighteen years as superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the period of the World war he served as secretary of the Little River County Chapter of the Red Cross, while during three of the Liberty Loan drives he acted as chairman of the speakers' bureau in Little River county. He was likewise chairman of the legal advisory board of Little River county during the entire period of hostilities between the United States and Germany. His aid and influence are ever found on the side of right, reform, progress and improvement, and he has long been numbered among the leading lawyers and highly esteemed citizens of southwestern Arkansas.

WILLIAM M. GARNER, M. D.

Dr. William M. Garner, an active and successful representative of the medical fraternity at Hope, is numbered among the worthy native sons of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Crawford county, this state, on the 16th of May, 1883. He was reared on a farm and supplemented his early education, which was obtained in a country school, by a high school course at Van Buren. When nineteen years of age he taught school during one summer term. Having determined to become a physician, he entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock and following his graduation from that institution spent the years of 1906 and 1907 as an interne in the City Hospital of Little Rock. He then opened an office at Catcher, this state, but a few months later removed to Dean Springs, where he remained for a year and a half, after which he spent six months as a medical practitioner of Uniontown. Subsequently he was identified with the Nashville Lumber Company of Nashville for two years, and in 1918 entered the medical department of the United States army as first lieutenant, doing hospital duty at Fort Riley, Kansas, for ninety days. On the expiration of his military service he opened an office at Hope, where he has since been engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery with gratifying success, the number of his patients steadily increasing as he has demonstrated his professional skill and ability. He keeps in close touch with the most advanced thought and work of the profession through his membership in the Hempstead County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Garner wedded Miss Maude Daly and they have become the parents of three children, namely: Fern L., Mary, who passed away at the age of five years, and one who died in infancy. Fraternally the Doctor is identified with the Masons and the Odd Fellows, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. He conforms to the highest standard of professional ethics and is most conscientious in the performance of his professional duties, so that his reputation is an enviable one and his practice has assumed extensive proportions.

W. L. SHIREY, M. D.

Texarkana has every reason to be proud of the medical profession represented within her borders. They are men of capability and worth, holding to high standards, and at all times they are keeping in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress. In this connection mention should be made of Dr. W. L. Shirey, who was born in Jonesboro, Arkansas, on the 30th of November, 1867. There he was reared and educated, attending the public schools and the Jonesboro Academy. He began reading medicine when nineteen years of age and in early manhood he also worked in a drug store, thus earning the money that enabled him to pursue his college course. He afterward matriculated in the University of Tennessee as a medical student and was there graduated with the class of 1895. Soon afterward he located for practice at Foreman, Arkansas, where he remained until March, 1921, when he came to Texarkana. He had successfully followed his profession in Foreman and already he has gained a good practice since coming to Texarkana. He is most careful in the diagnosis of his cases and his ability is recognized by his contemporaries and colleagues in the profession.

On the 26th of September, 1888, Dr. Shirey was married to Miss Alice M. Allen of Clay county, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of two children: Dr. Guy O. Shirey, who is now practicing at Fort Worth, and Fay, the wife of F. A. Perrot, of Arkansas. The son was in the service during the World war, being a member of the first expedition that left Texas. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the Medical Corps and was first aid on General Bullard's staff. In May, 1917, he went overseas and remained in France until December, 1918, returning with the rank of lieutenant colonel, his promotions being indicative of the splendid service which he rendered to his country.

Dr. W. L. Shirey also joined the army as a member of the Medical Corps in 1918, and with the rank of captain was on duty at the base hospital at Fort Oglethorpe. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, having become a Consistory Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He is also identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is a member of the Episcopal church. Along strictly professional lines he has membership in the Miller County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society, and is thus conversant with all of the latest researches and discoveries of the profession, while wide reading is constantly broadening his knowledge, and from experience, too, he learns many valuable lessons.

JAMES A. FOLTZ, M. D., F. A. C. S.

Dr. James A. Foltz, a physician and surgeon of Fort Smith, who has developed marked efficiency and skill in his chosen profession and now enjoys an extensive practice, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, March 24, 1878, and is a son of J. K. and Mary (Rathell) Foltz. At the time of the Civil war the father joined the Federal army and served in defense of the Union with the rank of captain, while Mary Rathell was the daughter of Colonel Rathell, who commanded a regiment of Confederate troops during the Civil war.

James A. Foltz pursued his education in the public schools of his native city, and after mastering the work of the high school continued his education in Tulane University of New Orleans, Louisiana. He was but three years of age when his parents removed with their family to Fort Smith, taking up their abode in this city in 1881. When he had completed his studies in Tulane University he took up postgraduate work in Harvard College and also attended the New York medical colleges and hospitals for further preparation in his profession. Returning to Fort Smith, he has here engaged in practice, making a specialty of surgery. In 1903 he was made chief surgeon of the Fort Smith & Western and the St. Louis, El Reno & Western Railroads, two years later was appointed division surgeon of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, and subsequently was appointed surgeon of the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company. All of these positions he still holds. For two terms he served as president of the Sebastian County Medical Society, was at one time president of the Tenth Council or District Medical Society of Arkansas and in the Medical Association of the Southwest acted as chairman of the section on surgery.

In 1903 Dr. Foltz was united in marriage to Miss Janie Price, and they are well known in the social circles of Fort Smith, the hospitality of the best homes being most freely accorded them, while the good cheer of their own household is greatly enjoyed by their many friends. During the World war Dr. Foltz acted as chairman of the district medical service of the Red Cross. The cause of education has ever found in him a stalwart champion and he has taken great interest therein, having served as a member of the board of education for eight years. He is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons and he concentrates his efforts and attention wholly upon his professional duties, fully realizing the obligations and responsibilities that devolve upon him in this connection. In everything that pertains to professional advancement he keeps abreast with the best thinking men of the age and his study, investigation and experience have brought him prominently to the front in surgical work in Arkansas.

BYRD COLLINS ROCKWELL.

Byrd Collins Rockwell, organizer and general manager of the Rockwell Manufacturing Company, of Camden, manufacturers of the kasement skrene dore and kasement skrene dore hardware, has in this connection developed one of the important productive industries of his section of the state. The business has grown to substantial proportions under the careful management and wise direction of the founder, who has placed upon the market goods that meet a popular demand and which merit the best that can be said for them. Mr. Rockwell came to the south from the state of New York, his birth having occurred in Watkins Glenn, April 1, 1866, his parents being Byron B. and Belle (Chamberlain) Rockwell, the former also a native of the Empire state, while the latter was born in Maryland. The father spent his life in connection with the lumber business, as had his father before him. In the year 1844 the grandfather Rockwell removed with his family to the lumber regions of Michigan, but subsequently returned to the state of New York, where the later years of his life were passed. Byron B. Rockwell, on reaching adult age, engaged in the sawmill and lumber business, and about 1870 came west, operating in northern Indiana and southern Michigan, where he had extensive timber holdings. He died in Goshen, Indiana, in the year 1907, being a resident of that place at the time. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served as captain of Company E, Twelfth Infantry, U. S. A., which was the first Federal command to enter Little Rock. He was at De Valls Bluff at the time of Lee's surrender, after which he returned to his former home in Niles, Michigan. His death was the first in a family which included himself, his wife and nine children. All of the children are still living, with one exception. The mother survives and is now hale and hearty, although in her eightieth year. For the past three years she has had her second sight. The great-grandmother of Byrd C. Rockwell in the maternal line lived to the notable old age of one hundred and five years, and at ninety years of age she gained her second sight. The grandparents in the paternal line lived to the ages of ninety-one and ninety-two years, respectively. History tells us that George Washington met the woman who was later his wife in the home of the maternal great-grandfather Chamberlain.

Byrd C. Rockwell, the eldest in his father's family of nine children, pursued a high school course in Goshen, Indiana, and in his youthful days started out to provide for his own support by entering the employ of the I. X. L. Pump, Lumber & Manufacturing Company of that place. He continued in active association with that company for a period of fifteen years, rising from a humble position to that of superintendent of the business. His powers developed through the exercise of effort and his life history is proof of the fact that activity does not tire, but on the contrary develops resistance and force.

In 1900 Mr. Rockwell came to Arkansas, settling at Malvern, where he was made general superintendent of the Owoso Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of screen doors. With this business he was identified for four years. In 1904 he organized the Rockwell Manufacturing Company of Malvern, devoted to the manufacture of screen doors, and was made president and general manager of the company. In 1910 this business was sold to the trust, and in 1912 Mr. Rockwell came to Camden and organized the Rockwell Manufacturing Company. Prior to the entry of the United States into the World war the company confined its activities to the manufacture of screen doors and screen door hardware, but since the United States joined the allied forces in the effort to advance world democracy the company of which Mr. Rockwell is the head has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of special crates. This crate was designed by Mr. Rockwell for the sweet potato industry and is known as the Dixie Crate. Notwithstanding the fact that it costs thirty per cent more than other crates put upon the market by other manufacturers, it has been adopted and is being extensively—in fact, almost exclusively—used by the Arkansas Sweet Potato Growers Association. To the trade Mr. Rockwell is known as a mechanical genius, and many valuable patents are the product of his brain. In addition to his mechanical skill and ingenuity he possesses executive force and administrative ability that have enabled him wisely and successfully to direct the operations of the plants owned by the companies with which he has been identified.

In 1899 Mr. Rockwell was married to Miss Olive D. Behymer of Kansas City, Missouri, and they have become parents of five children, four of whom are living: Louis, Olive, Mary and Helen, all at home. Mr. Rockwell is a member of Goshen Lodge, No. 798, B. P. O. E., of Goshen, Indiana. He also belongs to the Hoo Hoos, the national order of lumbermen, and he is identified with the Camden Chamber of Commerce. He takes an active and helpful interest in civic affairs and his cooperation can be counted upon to advance and support any plan or interest that is looking to the benefit and welfare of the community. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal church, and their sterling traits of character have established them high in public regard. As a business man and as a citizen Mr. Rockwell occupies an enviable position and his life record should serve as a stimulating example to others, showing what can be accomplished through individual ability and merit.

W. TERRY FEILD.

W. Terry Feild, a consulting engineer of Little Rock, with offices in the Gazette building, was born February 17, 1880, in the city which is still his home. His parents, Talbot and Annie (Terry) Feild, resided for many years in the capital city. The father was here born in 1858 and devoted his life to the occupation of farming. He gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, and he died in the year 1883. His wife, who was born in North Carolina in 1858, survived him for only a brief period, her death occurring in 1884. They were married May 17, 1878, in Little Rock, and their family numbered twin sons and three daughters.

In the acquirement of his education W. Terry Feild attended the public schools of Little Rock to the age of fourteen years, when he started out in the business world. Later realizing the value and advantage of further educational training, he became a student in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville and there won his degree of Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering in 1906, while later the degree of Mechanical Engineer was conferred upon him. In 1909 he did postgraduate work in Fayetteville, and all through his college course he paid his own way, his industry and determination enabling him to carry out plans for the acquirement of his education. He has since become widely recognized as an able consulting engineer and he is now associated in practice with Colonel John R. Fordyce of Hot Springs under the firm style of Fordyce & Feild. Their Little Rock office is maintained in the Gazette building and their practice is constantly growing in volume and importance. By reason of his professional ability Mr. Feild was able to render most valuable aid to the government during the World war period. In September, 1917, he entered the employ of the American Car & Foundry Company, which had a government contract to manufacture high explosive shells. Mr. Feild was made construction engineer for the erection of the 155 MM. shell plant at Depew, New York. In October, 1918, Mr. Feild was sent to St. Louis in charge of two similar plants of much larger capacity, erected at a cost of fifteen million dollars. Mr. Feild did all the work of arranging these two plants to get them ready for operation. He continued in St. Louis until December, 1918, and then returned to Detroit, where until May, 1919, he was engaged in preparing estimates for the government of the cost of restoring the plants to the original owners. Since the latter date he has resided in Little Rock, pursuing his profession, and is now engaged in the task of assisting to place a valuation upon the property and plant of the Little Rock Street Railway Company. He has also been engaged in similar work in Detroit, in Kansas City and in Washington, D. C., and the fact that he has been called to various cities throughout the country is an indication of his expert ability in his chosen field of labor.

On the 29th of March, 1915, Mr. Feild was married to Miss Nelle Trimble, who was born in Lonoke, Lonoke county, Arkansas, December 10, 1892, and is a daughter of Judge Thomas Clark Trimble, who is a native of Alabama and in 1878 became a resident of Lonoke, where he is still engaged in the practice of law. Mrs. Feild attended the Randolph-Macon College, also the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and is a graduate of the music department of the University of Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Feild now have one child, Terry Trimble, born April 11, 1919.

The parents are members of Christ Episcopal church and Mr. Feild is a Master Mason. He also belongs to the Sigma Nu, a college fraternity. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and in matters of progressive citizenship he has always stood one hundred per cent. He volunteered for service in the World war before entering upon government construction work, but was rejected for field duty. His entire time and energies are now concentrated upon professional interests and he is the secretary of the Little Rock Engineers Club, a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and he also belongs to the Kiwanis Club.

CHARLES D. HYTEN.

Charles D. Hyten, originator and manufacturer of the Niloak pottery, has thus developed in Benton one of the important manufacturing interests of Arkansas. He has entered upon a unique field and his labors have found recognition in many of the leading art centers of America and among the connoisseurs of ceramic art. Mr. Hyten, who is at the head of this enterprise, was born in Benton on the 14th of March, 1877, and is a son of John F. and Hattie E. (Brown) Hyten, the former a native of Indiana, while the latter was born in Iowa. The father acquired a college education in Greencastle, Indiana, and when a youth of but sixteen years enlisted in an Indiana regiment for service in the Union army during the Civil war, remaining at the front throughout the entire period of hostilities between the north and the south. He returned to the Hoosier state when the war was ended but subsequently removed to Boone, Iowa, where he learned the potter's trade. While there residing he was married to Hattie E. Brown, with whom he traveled life's journey for many years. Some time later they made their way to Callaway county, Missouri, where Mr. Hyten engaged in the pottery business, manufacturing jars, churns and a general line of stoneware. It was about 1875 or 1876 that he came to Benton, Arkansas, for the benefit of his health and while here he noticed the splendid clay deposits in the neighborhood and again took up the manufacture of stoneware. He continued the business with a considerable measure of success for several years, but it was not until some time after that the business was developed into one of the important productive industries of this section of the state. His service as a soldier of the Civil war left him in impaired health and after a few years' residence in Arkansas he died, in the fall of 1881. His widow afterward became the wife of Frank Woosley and they now reside in Springfield, Ohio.

Charles D. Hyten, whose name introduces this review, acquired his education in the Benton public schools and after his father's death he worked in connection with the pottery business, which was carried on under the management of Mr. Woosley, who afterward married Mrs. Hyten. In 1896 the business was acquired by Charles D. Hyten and his two brothers, Paul and Lee Hyten, and conducted by them for about two years. At the end of that time the brothers withdrew, after which Mr. Hyten carried on the business alone. Up to this time the manufacture of pottery had been conducted in but a desultory fashion. Charles D. Hyten, rather too young to manage the business and with little capital, rented the plant where stoneware was made and worked as a journeyman potter. It was not until 1902 that he took over the business, which still was that of manufacturing stoneware, and for seven years that continued to be the output of the plant. It was in 1909 that Mr. Hyten began experimenting in the manufacture of pottery. He combined the clays of different colors, mixing them on the potter's wheel almost at random, and thus the first piece of Niloak pottery came into existence, although the name was not adopted until a year later. The citizens of Arkansas paid little attention to this new product that was placed upon the market, but travelers in the state, especially those on their way to and from Hot Springs, saw the pieces of pottery which had been placed on exhibit in a jeweler's window in Benton and a real market for the beautiful ware began to develop. In 1911 Mr. Hyten recognized that the demand would soon far outrun the output and his financial resources. He therefore organized a stock company known as the Niloak Pottery Company and this was immediately followed by a notable expansion in the business. In January, 1918, Mr. Hyten became the sole owner of the plant and its fields of clay and has continued so to the present time. By 1912 the sale of the pottery had become quite extensive. This resulted from the fact that a connoisseur in pottery visited the plant and saw the product. He was so enthusiastic over it that he formed a connection with the company and for two years acted as sales manager throughout the United States. The coloring is perhaps the greatest charm of the Niloak pottery. From the very nature of the manufacturing process, in which clays of different colors are mixed, no two pieces ever are the same as to color pattern. Many useful and handsome designs are produced, including bowls, vases, candlesticks and wine and water sets. There is no artificial clay put upon the pottery and the beautiful finish of the first piece ever turned out is still retained. Mr. Hyten personally superintends every piece of pottery turned out and the output is now about seventy-five thousand pieces annually. All articles are formed and perfected by the hand and the eye. In order for a man to be skilled in the art of turning this ware by hand, he has to start when a youth and continue for many years. The first step is weighing and kneading the clay into round shape (commonly called ball) for the potter. Each article requires a certain amount of clay in weight. All colors are kneaded thoroughly before mixing, for should the different colors be kneaded together they would gradually mix to the extent of a solid color. All machinery is run by electricity. When the pottery goes to the kiln it is fired for from thirty-six to forty-eight hours and the temperature finally is brought up to twenty-one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, the heat being supplied through natural gas. The business of the company is constantly growing. There is today a large eastern trade and the California trade has been said to rival if not surpass the sales in the east. Extensive shipments have also been made to Canada and to Cuba. Mr. Hyten owns thirty-five acres of clay banks about two miles from Benton and his plant in the city consists of a main building forty by one hundred and forty feet, but he expects soon to erect another of equal size. There are three kilns and there are storage sheds covering a space of one hundred and fifty feet long by fifty feet wide. The company employs from fifteen to twenty-five men.

On the 5th of February, 1901, Mr. Hyten was married to Miss Cora Caldwell, a daughter of Charles and Laura (Crawford) Caldwell of Benton. Her father was a merchant and traveling man but is now deceased. The mother survives and still makes her home in Benton. Mr. and Mrs. Hyten have become parents of four children, but only two are living, Norma Pauline and Mabel Arlene.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hyten are members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Hyten is superintendent of the Sunday school, while in all branches of the church work they take active and helpful part. Mr. Hyten is a member of Benton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and is a loyal follower of the teachings of the craft. Aside from his pottery business he is a stockholder in the Bank of Benton, also the secretary and treasurer of the Southern Bauxite Company and is regarded as one of the leading and representative citizens here. He still owns the clay deposits which his father located when the son was but a year old and in addition he has three other tracts of clay deposits in this county, the only bodies of such clay known to exist in the entire county. Mr. Hyten is making steady advance in his chosen vocation, constantly progressing to higher standards in workmanship and design, and today the Niloak pottery is known from coast to coast.

L. DEWOODY LYLE.

L. Dewoody Lyle, filling the office of city attorney at Pine Bluff, was born here in 1895 and is a son of T. B. and Linnie (Dewoody) Lyle, who were natives of Lincoln county, Arkansas, and of Juka Springs, Mississippi, respectively. Their family numbered four children: L. Dewoody, Elizabeth, now the wife of S. L. Ellen; Thomas B., Jr., and Marshall.

Reared under the parental roof, his boyhood and early youth spent in Pine Bluff, L. Dewoody Lyle pursued a public school education and afterward in preparation for his professional career entered the Washington and Lee University, from which he was graduated with the LL. B. degree in 1917. He then returned to his native city, where he opened an office and has since engaged in practice save for the period of his services in the World war. When America became identified with the allies in the effort to establish world democracy he entered the Army Officers' Training School at Fort Logan H. Roots, near Little Rock, and was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was then assigned to Waco, Texas, and with the Thirty-ninth Division went overseas, being on active duty in France, where he remained for an extended period, being mustered out with the rank of first lieutenant in April, 1920. In the same year he returned to Pine Bluff, where he served as deputy prosecuting attorney, and later in the year he was elected city attorney, which office he has since filled. Although one of the younger representatives of the bar, he is recognized as an able lawyer, wide-awake, alert, energetic and possessing a laudable ambition. By reason of these qualities he is making steady progress in his chosen calling and has most capably conducted various important cases. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, while his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church. He is widely known in the city and that his has been a well spent life is indicated in the fact that many of his staunchest friends are those who have known him from his boyhood to the present time.

LEWIS RHOTON.

The legal profession demands not only a high order of ability, but a rare combination of talent, learning, tact, patience and industry. The successful lawyer must be a man of well-balanced intellect, thoroughly familiar with the law, with a comprehensive knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence, possessed of an analytical mind and a ready grasp of every point that bears in any way upon the questions at issue. Splendidly qualified in these particulars, Lewis Rhoton has gained an enviable position at the Little Rock bar, where he now devotes his attention to the general practice of law, although his early professional connection with Arkansas was that of a teacher. He comes to this state from Indiana, his birth having occurred in Henry county, May 13, 1868, his parents being Franklin and Susanna (Garrett) Rhoton, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in Virginia. The father followed farming throughout the greater part of his active life and for many years was not only a progressive agriculturist of Henry county, but also one of its leading and valued citizens. He gave his political support to the democratic party and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Dunkard church, enjoying the high respect and confidence of all who knew them. They continued residents of Henry county until called to their final rest.

Their son, Lewis Rhoton, pursued his early education in the public schools of his native county and afterward matriculated in the Illinois State Normal School at Normal, Illinois, being there graduated as a member of the class of 1883. He then turned to the profession of teaching and secured the position of principal of the high school at El Paso, Illinois, where he remained until September, 1890. In that year he came to Little Rock, Arkansas, where he continued his educational work as principal of one of the ward schools until 1894. He then accepted the appointment to the principalship of the high school of the city, serving in that capacity for two years. In the meantime he had largely devoted his leisure to the study of law and in 1894 was graduated from the law department of the University of Arkansas. In 1896 he took postgraduate work in the law department of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and in December following opened an office in Little Rock, where he has remained in the active practice of the profession. Mr. Rhoton, as few men have done, seems to realize the importance of the profession to which he has devoted his energy, and the fact that justice and the higher attitude of mercy he often holds in his hands. His reputation as a lawyer has been won through earnest, honest labor and his standing at the bar is a merited tribute to his ability. He has held various important positions in the strict path of his profession. From 1901 until 1904 he filled the office of deputy prosecuting attorney of Pulaski county and was afterward elected prosecuting attorney for the sixth judicial district and so capably and efficiently served that he was reelected in 1906, while in 1908 he was nominated for the third term. He proved a most able prosecutor, standing at all times for law and justice, and he was active in the prosecution and conviction of the members of the legislature of 1905 who were indicted for bribery in connection with the legislation pending before the general assembly of 1905. In June, 1908, he resigned the office of prosecuting attorney and surrendered the nomination for a third term, although such nomination was equivalent to an election. Since then he has given his undivided time and attention to the private practice of law and has a clientage of notably large and distinctive character. In November, 1908, he was appointed assistant general attorney for the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company, of which he became general attorney in the succeeding year, remaining as the incumbent in the office until January 1, 1910, when he resigned that he might give his undivided attention to his private practice. From 1900 until 1906 he was lecturer in the law department of the University of Arkansas, and the student body and the faculty bore testimony to the value of his service in this connection.

In 1896 Mr. Rhoton was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Riffel, a native of Greenville, Ohio, and a daughter of the late James K. Riffel, who was a representative citizen of Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Rhoton have two children: Riffel Garrett and Bayard Francis, the former born in 1899 and the latter in 1904. The elder son was graduated in 1915 from the Little Rock high school and in 1918 from the Annapolis Naval Academy, at which time he was commissioned a lieutenant and assigned to the destroyer Allen. He thus served until November, 1918. The naval base of operations of the Allen was at Queenstown, Ireland, and when the war was over he was assigned to the battleship Mississippi, on which he is now doing duty.

Mr. Rhoton is well known as the author of a valuable textbook on civil government, entitled Arkansas and the Nation, which is today widely used in public and private schools of this state. The cause of education has ever found in him a stalwart champion and supporter and from 1904 until 1908 he was a member of the board of education of Little Rock, serving during the last two years of that period as president. In 1908 he was reelected a member of the board, but within the same year resigned. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party, and he takes a most loyal interest in everything that tends to advance the public welfare or is a matter of civic virtue or civic pride.

J. W. A. NORDEN.

Active and alert in business affairs, J. W. A. Norden is closely associated with the commercial and financial interests of Gillett through the conduct of his store and as the vice president of the Bank of Gillett. His determined purpose and laudable ambition enable him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties in his path and he steadily pushes forward toward his objective. Mr. Norden is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Hinckley in 1884, his parents being the Rev. H. H. and Augusta (Siebert) Norden. The father was a minister of the Lutheran church and occupied pastorates in St. Louis, Jarvis and Menfro, Missouri, and Hinckley, Illinois, doing effective work in the upbuilding of the various churches with which he was connected. He resided in Menfro to the time of his demise. In early manhood he wedded Augusta Siebert, who was born in Germany and came with her parents to the new world, the family home being established in Grand Island, Nebraska. Rev. and Mrs. Norden had a family of six children: Paul, Henry, Rudolph, Theodore, J. W. A. and Amelia. The second son, Henry, became a Lutheran minister and is now preaching the gospel at Muskegon, Michigan.

J. W. A. Norden largely pursued his education at Jarvis, Missouri, where the family lived during much of his boyhood. The year 1900 witnessed his arrival in Gillett, where he engaged in farming until 1903. He then purchased the interest held by H. C. Deal in the store of Rook & Company, and today the owners of this mercantile establishment are Mr. Norden, J. H. Natho and A. G. Richter. The business is conducted along most progressive lines, an extensive stock of goods being carried, while every effort is made to please their patrons, for the firm has always recognized the fact that satisfied customers are the best advertisement. Mr. Norden is also well known in the community through his banking connection, being now one of the directors and the vice president of the bank of Gillett.

In 1908 Mr. Norden was united in marriage to Miss Olga Hoffman, a daughter of Gottfried Hoffman of this city, and to them were born two children, but one has departed this life. The living daughter is Isabel. The parents are members of the Lutheran church and are deeply interested in all that pertains to the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of the community in which they make their home. Mr. Norden served as mayor of Gillett, administering municipal affairs with the same thoroughness, care and sagacity that he has displayed in the conduct of his private business interests.

W. B. WELCH, M. D.

In the passing of Dr. W. B. Welch, Fayetteville lost a distinguished citizen and the medical profession a most able representative. He began active practice at the age of twenty-one years and he ever remained a deep student of his profession, taking frequent postgraduate courses. He took an active interest in all medical societies, at one time serving as first vice president of the American Medical Association, and he was a dominant factor in the organization of the State Medical Society. He made a specialty of surgery, being one of the few men to concentrate on that particular branch of the profession in his day, and he performed some remarkable operations.

He was born in Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1829, a son of Christopher and Elizabeth (Lyle) Welch. The father was a native of Virginia and removed to Kentucky at an early day. He was postmaster at Huntsville, Alabama, a number of years, to which state he removed after the Civil war. Both Mr. and Mrs. Welch died at the home of their son, Dr. Welch. They were the parents of six children, two of whom are living. Dr. Welch was the third in order of birth. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the father gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government.

Dr. Welch received his early education in the schools of Huntsville, Alabama, and later went to Nashville, Tennessee, and entered the medical department of the State University, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1849. He began the practice of medicine in Somerville, Alabama, and remained there until he came to Arkansas and located at Canehill. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, his sympathies being with the south, Dr. Welch enlisted in the Confederate army as surgeon and was in active service for four years. After the surrender of his command at Fort Smith he received his honorable discharge and returned to Canehill, where he resumed his practice until 1881, when he came to Fayetteville. He represented the medical profession in Canehill for some thirty-two years, and was a representative citizen of that community. He practiced in Fayetteville until his demise in 1917. Dr. Welch was one of the few men in his day to specialize in surgery, and he performed some remarkable operations. He operated on a child of eight years who had never talked nor walked, and the child was completely normal at the age of eleven years, walking, talking and reading. He gained recognition as one of the able and successful surgeons of Arkansas and by his labors and high professional attainments and his sterling characteristics justified the respect and confidence in which he was held by the medical fraternity and the local public.

Dr. Welch was twice married, his first wife being Laura McClellan, whose demise occurred in May, 1901. On June 5, 1902, he was again wedded, taking Miss Julia A. Garside, a native of Memphis, Tennessee, for his wife. She was a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Dickens) Garside, both natives of England, who came to Memphis, Tennessee, at an early day. The father was a builder and an architect. They are both deceased. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Garside nine children were born, four of whom are living: Robert, a contractor of Memphis, Tennessee; Margaret, the widow of Rev. J. J. Vaulx and a resident of Fayetteville; Mrs. Welch, and Mary, the wife of W. E. Turley, an architect in California. Mr. and Mrs. Garside were both members of the Episcopal church, and he was a democrat in politics.

Dr. Welch always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, and although he was active in its affairs, he neither sought nor desired public preferment. He was never too busy to aid in the development and improvement of the community, and he was a public-spirited citizen in every respect. He was one of the founders of the City Hospital and he willed that institution a substantial sum upon his demise. Mrs. Welch survives her husband, and she has many friends in Fayetteville, where she continues to make her home.

After the Doctor's death, Mrs. Welch gave to the medical department of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock the Doctor's medical library, and Dean Morgan Smith, in acknowledging the gift, said the library was such as only a man of Dr. Welch's temperament and advanced thought would accumulate.

WILLIAM AUBREY KOSER.

William Aubrey Koser, farmer and one of the leading citizens of Crittenden county, is residing on his well-improved farm just outside the city limits of Marion. He is a native of this state, his birth having occurred at Jonesboro on the 22d of December, 1886, a son of Thomas F. and Emma (Smith) Koser, the former a native of Raleigh Springs, Tennessee, and the latter of near Shannon, Mississippi. At the age of six years Thomas F. Koser came with his parents to this state, and the mother was but an infant when brought here by her parents. Her father, John Franklin Smith, served throughout the Civil war under General Forrest, and after the close of that conflict came to Arkansas and engaged in farming. He is said to have been one of the pioneer agriculturists of this state. Thomas F. Koser, who is now living retired, was for many years the leading merchant of Marion and was likewise extensively engaged in farming. He gave the greater part of his time to his agricultural interests and also operated the store. He achieved more than substantial success along the lines of his endeavor and is one of Crittenden county's most highly respected and beloved citizens.

In the acquirement of his early education William Aubrey Koser attended the rural schools in the vicinity of the home farm and in due time enrolled in the University of Arkansas. After three years of collegiate work he decided to engage in farming and returned to his home in 1909. Since that time he has been actively identified with agricultural pursuits and is now operating seven hundred acres of land and is one of the most successful farmers in this county. His land is highly improved and boasts of fine outbuildings, everything being kept in a constant state of repair.

On the 9th of February, 1910, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Koser to Miss Madge Campbell of Fayetteville, and she is one of the prominent young matrons of this vicinity, being active in both club and social circles. She is a consistent member of the Christian church.

Mr. Koser gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, and although he does not take an active interest in politics, he is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship and to that end takes a prominent part in every movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Marion Lodge, No. 686, F. & A. M., of which body he is past master; Arkansas Consistory, A. & A. S. R., and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Pine Bluff. The religious faith of Mr. Koser is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for some time he has served that organization as a member of the board of stewards. He is a staunch supporter of all educational movements, realizing that a good education is the foundation of business success, and he is now president of the Marion school board.

J. A. DOWDY.

J. A. Dowdy, mine owner of Clarksville, Arkansas, and president of the Spadra Coal Company, is one of the dynamic forces in the business circles of that section of the state. In the conduct of a business project he never fails to reach his objective, and his position as one of the leading and representative business men of Arkansas remains unchallenged. He is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in White county in 1870, his parents being William T. and Elizabeth Dowdy. The schools of his native county accorded him his educational privileges and when his textbooks were put aside he became a traveling salesman and devoted a number of years to business of that character.

Constantly watchful of opportunities and utilizing every chance for legitimate advancement, in 1908 Mr. Dowdy became associated with others in acquiring the Spadra coal mines, the property embracing more than five hundred acres in the principal mining district of northwestern Arkansas. The company employs from forty to fifty miners and produces more than two hundred tons of coal per day. The officers of the Spadra Coal Company are: J. A. Dowdy, president; Dave McKinney, W. J. Lemley, R. A. Dowdy and Tom McKinney.

In addition to his coal mining interests Mr. Dowdy is connected with oil development in Columbia county, Arkansas, he and his business associates having acquired immense acreage in Columbia and other counties. Active drilling has begun in Columbia county and this is considered one of the large development projects of the state. Mr. Dowdy is a man of clear vision, keen insight and sound business judgment. He carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes, and his energy and determination have enabled him to reach the goal of success. Moreover, his activities are of a character which have contributed to public progress and prosperity, as well as to individual affluence, and northwestern Arkansas is indeed fortunate in that he has cast in his lot with the residents of this section of the state and has here directed his energies to the benefit and upbuilding of the community.

MAJOR JOHN H. AVERY.

Major John H. Avery, engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Hot Springs and also the president of the Superior Bathhouse Company, was born in Dundaff, Pennsylvania, December 15, 1841. He was a lad of but five years when in 1846 his parents removed to Connecticut, and for ten years he resided in New England, the family home being established in Onarga, Illinois, in 1856. There he was living when he attained his majority. He had acquired a common school education, and on the 10th of August, 1861, before he was yet twenty years of age, he enlisted as a private in Company M of the Ninth Illinois Cavalry for service in defense of the Union during the Civil war. He was on duty largely in Tennessee and participated in the battle of the Cumberland. He was altogether in fifty-six skirmishes and battles, including some of the most hotly contested engagements of the war, but was never wounded nor taken prisoner, nor was he in a hospital, and never lost a day's service. Within a year after his enlistment he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant and later became first lieutenant, while at a subsequent period he was advanced to the rank of captain and was made major by brevet by the president of the United States in recognition of distinguished service. During the last two years of the war he was staff officer of the Fifth Division of the Cavalry Corps, acting first as aide-de-camp and subsequently as assistant adjutant general. He thus served until November 30, 1865, and when the country no longer needed his aid he received an honorable discharge, returning to his home with a most creditable military record.

Major Avery again became a resident of Illinois and for eight years was connected with the internal revenue service. He came to Arkansas in 1872, settling at Forest City, where he engaged in merchandising and also became proprietor of a hotel. He likewise conducted an insurance business and was thus active in the affairs of Forest City until 1890, when he came to Hot Springs and here opened a real estate and insurance office, which he has since conducted, having gained a large clientele in those fields. He is also interested in the Superior Bathhouse, being the largest stockholder in the enterprise and the president of the company. This is one of the important enterprises of the city, as Hot Springs owes its development in large measure to its medicinal waters. Mr. Avery served for four years as postmaster under Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, and has always manifested a most progressive attitude concerning everything relating to the public welfare. He is likewise a stockholder and a director in the Arkansas National Bank, and whatever he undertakes he carries forward to successful completion.

On the 8th of February, 1872, Mr. Avery was married to Miss Emma B. Johnson, and to them were born three children: Elise, the wife of William F. Lake, now associated with Major Avery in business; Lyman J., who died at the age of thirty years, at which time he was serving as teller of the Arkansas National Bank, and Eunice, who died at the age of eighteen years, following her graduation from high school.

In politics Major Avery has always been a stalwart republican, giving unfaltering allegiance to the party. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and is also a Knights Templar Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine, having served as eminent commander of the Knights Templar Commandery. He likewise belongs to the Loyal Legion and to Camby Post, No. 5, G. A. R. He served as department commander for two terms and is now commander of the local post. He proudly wears the little bronze button that proclaims him a representative of the Grand Army of the Republic, having loyally stood by the Union cause through that crisis whereby national perpetuity was established. Hot Springs has long classed him with her representative men, and his efforts have been a direct and beneficial element in her growth and progress. Major Avery is now nearing the eightieth milestone on life's journey, but in spirit and interest seems yet in his prime and is still an active factor in the world's work.

F. P. VINES, M. D.

Dr. F. P. Vines, a well-known representative of the medical profession at El Dorado, was born in Hillsboro, Arkansas, on the 4th of October, 1877. His youthful days were spent as a farm-bred boy. He worked in the fields through the summer months and until the harvests were gathered in the late autumn, and he also assisted in the operation of a sawmill and cotton gin. His educational privileges were those accorded by the public schools of Junction City, and later he attended Ouachita College, while afterward he became a student in the Westminster College at Dallas, Texas. Still ambitious to promote his intellectual development and thus qualify for responsible and important duties in life, he matriculated in the Memphis College of Memphis, Tennessee, and was graduated in 1903. He next attended Tulane University as a medical student, and since graduating there he has pursued five postgraduate courses in Tulane. Wide reading has kept him in touch with the trend of modern professional advancement, and he has been very successful in the field of general medical practice and surgery.

Dr. Vines first opened an office in Hillsboro, his native town, where he remained from 1903 until 1905. The succeeding seven years were spent at Strong, Arkansas, and in 1912 he went to Hot Springs, where he remained until 1917. In that year he removed to Bauxite, where he practiced until coming to El Dorado in July, 1921. Already he has gained a good practice here. He belongs to the Union County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He is conscientious in the performance of all of his professional duties, carefully diagnosing his cases and meeting all the requirements that are made upon the physician of the modern day.

Dr. Vines is likewise widely known through his fraternal connections, having membership with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen.

HORTON H. MILLER.

Business enterprise in Rogers finds a prominent representative in Horton H. Miller, who is conducting one of the leading insurance agencies of the town and also has other interests. He is a member of one of the pioneer families of Rogers and for many years he was in the employ of the United States government in connection with the Indian service, doing important and valuable work along that line. He is a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Warren county in 1867. His parents, William A. and Clarissa (Thomas) Miller, were also natives of Tennessee and were married in that state, where the father became the owner of a large plantation. In 1868 he started for Missouri, driving the entire distance, and in Lawrence county he established his home. There he followed mercantile pursuits until 1881, when he came to Arkansas, opening the first dry goods establishment in Rogers. This he continued to conduct until 1893, when he sold out and spent the remainder of his life in the enjoyment of a well-earned rest. He was a very successful business man and stood high in commercial circles of the town, of which he was one of the promoters and upbuilders. He was a democrat in his political views and a Presbyterian in religious faith, while fraternally he was identified with the Masons, with which order all of his sons are likewise connected. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller were born ten children, of whom eight survive, seven sons and one daughter, namely: Horton H., Hugh J., who is superintendent of the Sand Springs (Oklahoma) Railway Company; John F., of San Francisco, California, who is connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, being a member of the board of train rules; Charles A., a railway mail clerk residing at Rogers, Arkansas; F. Horace, a railroad conductor, who makes his home at Grove, Oklahoma; A. Claude, who follows the same occupation and resides at Muskogee, Oklahoma; Finis E., cashier of the Farmers State Bank of Rogers, and Maude, who makes her home with her brother Horton.

In the public schools of Missouri and Arkansas Horton H. Miller acquired his education, and after laying aside his textbooks entered his father's dry goods establishment in Rogers, assisting in the management of the enterprise until it was sold. He then became connected with the United States Indian service, being located in Oklahoma for five years, while later he was sent to California, Nevada, Arizona, Montana and Idaho. For a period of twenty-six years he was connected with the service, and during twenty-one years of that time acted as Indian agent, his services being very valuable to the government. In January, 1920, he returned to Rogers and turned his attention to insurance interests, with which he has since been connected. He conducts a general insurance business, having the agency for the Equitable Life and also carrying a large line of casualty and fire insurance. He is building up a good business in this connection and ranks with the leading insurance dealers in the town. He also has other interests, being a stockholder in the Farmers State Bank of Rogers, and he is likewise the owner of two well-improved farms situated near the town. His business affairs are capably managed and success has attended all of his ventures.

In Oklahoma, in 1897, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Ansley, a native of Prescott, Arkansas, and a member of one of the pioneer families of the state. They are members of the Presbyterian church, and Mr. Miller gives his political allegiance to the democratic party. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, serving as secretary of his lodge, and he is also a Mason, belonging to the lodge, chapter, commandery and Shrine, and he is now acting as senior warden of his lodge, captain of the chapter and junior warden of the commandery. He is likewise connected with the Rotary Club of Rogers, of which he is secretary. His is a creditable record, characterized by devotion to duty, by enterprise and integrity in business and by loyalty in citizenship, and he enjoys the esteem and good will of a large circle of friends.

OSCAR ABSALOM CARRUTH, M. D.

Dr. Oscar Absalom Carruth, physician of Little Rock, was born February 19, 1881, in Parkdale, Ashley county, Arkansas. His parents were Benjamin Franklin and Emma (Harris) Carruth and the family comes of Irish ancestry but was established in America in early colonial days by the great-grandfather of Dr. Carruth, who, with two brothers, came from the Emerald isle to the new world prior to the Revolutionary war. The brothers separated, the Doctor's branch of the family being established in Mississippi, whence a removal was afterward made to Arkansas. The grandfather became one of the pioneers of this state at a period which antedated the building of the railroads. In proving up his title to his lands he rode a mule into Little Rock. He shared in the hardships and trials of frontier life and aided in laying broad and deep the foundation upon which has been built the present progress and prosperity of this section.

Benjamin F. Carruth, the Doctor's father, was a small boy when the family home was established in Arkansas and in this state he was reared and educated. He became one of the prominent farmers of the state and departed this life in 1921. He wedded Emma Harris, whose people were pioneer residents of Alabama, her father, William Harris, being long numbered among the leading merchants of Talladega, that state.

Dr. Carruth obtained his early education in the public schools and afterward attended the University of Arkansas and the University of Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1902 with the degree of M. D. Later he took a post-graduate course in Tulane University at New Orleans as a member of the class of 1904. He first practiced his profession in Ingalls, Arkansas, for a period of eighteen months and afterward removed to Warren, Arkansas, his home town, where he spent the succeeding ten years in active practice. In 1913 he pursued a postgraduate course in the Johns Hopkins University, where he specialized in diagnosis. On his return to his native state he took up his abode in Little Rock, where he has since followed his profession, and from 1913 until 1919 he served as chief of the medical clinic of the University of Arkansas. In the latter year he became diagnostician in St. Luke's Hospital at Little Rock and remained in active connection with that institution until 1921, when he became associated with Dr. A. G. McGill in the private practice of his profession. Dr. Carruth confines his practice to diagnosis and is regarded as an eminent specialist in that field. During the World war he served as medical examiner of Local Board, No. 2, and he also took part in all drives and activities for upholding American interests.

In October, 1903, Dr. Carruth was united in marriage to Miss Rena Harding, a daughter of William H. and Lee Eiler (Morris) Harding, both representatives of old Alabama families. Dr. and Mrs. Carruth have three children: Margaret Elizabeth, James Anthony and William Franklin. The daughter is a senior in the Little Rock high school and is an honor pupil in mathematics. She contemplates taking a university course, majoring in mathematics. The elder son is a student in the Junior high school, while the younger son has not yet reached school age. Mrs. Carruth is regarded as a model mother and charming housewife and this is one of the representative families of the city. Dr. Carruth has never been prominent in fraternal relations, confining his membership to the Masonic order and to the Phi Chi, a medical fraternity. He has ever been actuated by a most high purpose and laudable ambition in his professional career, putting forth every effort that will promote his knowledge and advance his efficiency that his labors shall be of the greatest possible service to his fellowmen. He has thus made steady progress and is today one of the eminent diagnosticians of the southwest.

DR. OSCAR A. CARRUTH

PAUL McKENNON.

Professional interests find a most substantial representative in Paul McKennon, attorney at law, whose ability has been demonstrated in the trial of various important cases before the bar of the district. Clarksville not only numbers him among her honored citizens at the present time, but also among her native sons, his birth having occurred December 30, 1873, his parents being B. P. and Maggie (Harley) McKennon. The father, who was born in Carroll county, Arkansas, died November 30, 1919. The mother's birth occurred in Holly Springs, Mississippi, and she was called to her final rest in 1912. They were married in Clarksville, Arkansas, her parents having settled in Johnson county soon after the Civil war, removing to this county from Princeton, Dallas county, Arkansas. The parents of B. P. McKennon came to Johnson county from Carroll county also soon after the close of hostilities between the north and the south, and B. P. McKennon was educated in Clark's Academy at Berryville, while his wife pursued her education in the public schools of the state. He was a traveling salesman in Arkansas for more than thirty years, but retired from business several years prior to his death, on account of ill health, dying in a hospital at Shreveport, Louisiana. He had served in the Civil war, enlisting when but fifteen years of age with General Stand Waitie's Indian Brigade. He was twice captured, but was never wounded. His father was Archibald McKennon, a native of Tennessee, who settled in Carroll county, Arkansas, at a very early period and there practiced medicine until he removed to Clarksville, where he again followed his profession for a number of years, or until the time of his death. The family has thus been represented in this state from a very early day. B. P. McKennon was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally was connected with the Masons and the Knights of Honor. He wedded Maggie Harley, a daughter of Basil C. Harley, a prominent resident of Arkansas, who was born in Smith county, Virginia, whence he removed to Mississippi and while in that state he filled the office of lieutenant governor. He became a resident of Dallas county, Arkansas, long prior to the Civil war and died during the progress of that struggle. He served in the state senate of Arkansas in 1852 and 1854 and was president of that body. He was defeated by Augustus H. Garland as candidate for the Confederate congress. He was one of the promoters of the Iron Mountain Railroad, known at that time as the Cairo & Fulton Railroad, serving as secretary and treasurer of the company. He made the preliminary routing of the road and took an active part in public improvements and in all that pertained to the progress and welfare of the state. He was an excellent public speaker and was heard on many questions vital to the commonwealth. It was his daughter Maggie who became the wife of B. P. McKennon, and to them were born eleven children, five of whom are living: R. H., who is engaged in the furniture business in Clarksville; Paul, of this review; William A., who is a lumber merchant at Shreveport, Louisiana; Mrs. A. W. Belt, whose husband is a miller at Tahlequah, Oklahoma, and Basil C., an electrical contractor at Shreveport, Louisiana.

After acquiring his preliminary education in the public schools of Clarksville, Paul McKennon continued his studies in Cumberland College and was graduated with the class of 1894. He read law under the direction of his uncle, Captain A. S. McKennon, and was admitted to the bar in 1898. He then began practice in Clarksville, where he has since remained and through the intervening period he has advanced steadily to the front rank of the legal profession, where he has long occupied an eminent position. He has been connected with much important litigation tried in the courts of the district, and his ability is pronounced.

On the 10th of June, 1910, Mr. McKennon was married to Miss Pearl Blackard, who was born in Clarksville, Arkansas, a daughter of H. Blackard, who was a pioneer settler of Clarksville. The father was a contractor and builder and served throughout the Civil war with the rank of captain. Mr. and Mrs. McKennon have become parents of three children: Pauline, now in school, and Claude and Clyde, twins, who are also pursuing their education in Clarksville.

Fraternally Mr. McKennon is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He served as county attorney for ten years and is county chairman of the democratic central committee. On one occasion he was defeated for the office of district attorney, but while probably not without that laudable ambition which is so great an incentive to activity and fidelity in public office, he nevertheless regards the pursuits of private life as in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts and he is now devoting his entire time to his law practice in all the courts. His clientage is large and of an important character and he is noted for the care and precision with which he prepares his cases and the strength which he displays in presenting his arguments. He is most forceful and resourceful in his law practice and has won a well merited reputation in his chosen profession.

SANFORD WILBOURN.

Sanford Wilbourn, distributor of the Ford cars in England, has spent his life in the little city which is still his home, his birth having here occurred in 1883, his parents being Sanford and Bettie (Graham) Wilbourn. While spending his youthful days under their roof he attended the public schools and thus qualified for life's practical and responsible duties. He afterward learned the blacksmith's trade and became a practical and thoroughly trained mechanic. In 1909 he established a garage and in 1914 secured the agency of the Ford cars, his district covering the south half of Lonoke county. He sells an average of about one hundred and thirty-two cars per season and twelve tractors and has thus built up a business of substantial proportions. He carries in stock all the automobile accessories, tires and equipment and is able to fit out a car completely. He has also become one of the directors of the Citizens' Bank & Trust Company and is regarded as one of the most thoroughly reliable and progressive young business men of this part of the state.

Mr. Wilbourn was united in marriage to Miss Mamie Hamilton and they have become the parents of one son, Sanford S. In his political views Mr. Wilbourn is a democrat and while not an aspirant for office he has filled the position of alderman and in that connection exercised his official prerogatives in support of many plans and measures for the general good. In matters of citizenship he has always stood for progressiveness and advancement and during the World war he did everything in his power to uphold the interests of the government and acted as chairman of the Red Cross chapter here. Fraternaly he is a Mason of high rank, as is indicated by the fact that he is identified with the Mystic Shrine. His religious faith is that of the Methodist church, which finds in him a generous supporter and loyal follower and all who know him class him with the public-spirited citizens of England.

REV. JOHN HOOVER.

Crossett numbers among her representative citizens Rev. John Hoover, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. A native of Arkansas, he was born at Selma, on the 16th of December, 1883, a son of J. A. and Agnes (Lampton) Hoover. The father was born in Georgia and came to Drew county, this state, with his parents when but four years of age. They arrived here in 1856 and were among the pioneer settlers of Drew county. In early life Mr. Hoover engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he followed with substantial success for many years. His demise occurred at Monticello, in November, 1921, at the age of sixty-eight years. His father, John T. and a brother, Fred, served in the Civil war, enlisting in the Confederate army. For many generations the Hoover family have lived in America, their ancestors having located in Georgia and North Carolina at an early day. It was on the 28th of February, 1883, that Mr. Hoover was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Lampton, who died in 1906, at the age of thirty-nine years. She was born in Kentucky and came to Drew county, this state, with her parents in 1880. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hoover four boys and four girls were born. All are living except one daughter. John Hoover, whose name introduces this review, was the oldest child.

In the acquirement of an education John Hoover attended the common schools of Monticello and after graduating from the high school there, he enrolled in Hendrix College at Conway, this state. There he took a two-year literary course and subsequently took a four-year Methodist Conference course of study, acquiring his theological education by home study. In order to obtain his higher education John Hoover taught school. In 1908 he entered the ministry and his first charge was at Hermitage, where he remained from 1908 to 1910. From 1910 to 1913, he was at Parkdale and Wilmot, and the latter part of 1913 and 1914 he was at Snyder and Montrose. From 1914 to 1918 he was in charge at McGehee and in the latter year came to Crossett, where he has remained. Since he took charge of the church here there has been a constant and substantial increase in the membership and as a church it has done more for Methodism in general than any other church in the state of its numerical strength. The Sunday school has a large enrollment of active members and the things it has accomplished have become known throughout the state. Mr. Hoover has a most pleasing personality and is quick to make friends, these friends soon recognizing his true personal worth and many sterling traits of character.

At Hermitage, Arkansas, on the 2d of December, 1910, occurred the marriage of John Hoover to Miss Mary Gammill, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Gammill, well known residents of that place. To their union one son has been born, Paul Williams, who is ten years of age and a student in the public schools of Crossett.

Fraternally Mr. Hoover is identified with the Masons and is conceded an exemplary member of that craft. He belongs to Desha Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Valley Chapter, and Ellsworth Council, all of McGehee. He has taken the degrees of the Scottish Rite and is a member of Albert Pike Consistory at Little Rock and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine in Pine Bluff. Mr. Hoover is always intensely interested in any movement for the betterment of the general welfare and Crossett is indeed proud to number him among her representative citizens.

NATHAN E. MURPHEY, M. D.

Dr. Nathan E. Murphey has been actively engaged in the practice of medicine at Clarendon for nearly a quarter of a century and enjoys an enviable reputation as one of the skilled and successful representatives of the profession in Monroe county. His birth occurred in Decatur, Alabama, in 1868, his parents being J. I. and Sallie (Stevenson) Murphey, the latter a daughter of Arthur Stevenson. J. I. Murphey, who served as a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war, was also a native of Alabama. L. G. Murphey, brother of Dr. Murphey of this review, is a successful attorney practicing at Holly Grove, Arkansas.

Nathan E. Murphey obtained his more advanced education in the University of Alabama and further prepared for a professional career as a student in the medical department of the University of Louisville at Louisville, Kentucky. It was in 1898 that he took up the work of his chosen profession at Clarendon, Arkansas, and here he has remained continuously to the present time, being accorded a practice that has steadily grown in volume and importance as he has demonstrated his skill in checking the ravages of disease and restoring health. He belongs to the Monroe County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Railway Surgeons Association and the American Medical Association, and through the proceedings of these bodies keeps thoroughly informed concerning the latest scientific researches and discoveries of the profession. Aside from his professional interests he is a director of the Merchants & Planters Bank of Clarendon.

In early manhood Dr. Murphey was united in marriage to Miss Anna L. Palmer of Kansas City, Missouri, a daughter of Mrs. A. T. Palmer. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally he is a Knight Templar Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. During the period of the World war he served on the advisory board for two counties. In his practice he has ever conformed to the highest ethics and standards and has therefore won the confidence and esteem of his professional colleagues and contemporaries as well as of the general public.

FAY L. DUNN.

Fay L. Dunn, now serving his second term as county treasurer and a member of the jewelry firm of Hempstead & Dunn, was born in Summerville, Calhoun county, Arkansas, on the 18th of August, 1881. His father, J. D. Dunn, was born in Calhoun county and reared to manhood there. The paternal grandparents were originally residents of Carolina but came to Arkansas in 1850, being among the early settlers of Calhoun county. The grandfather on the paternal side served throughout the Civil war as a private in the Confederate army. J. D. Dunn was for thirteen years identified with the furniture and undertaking business at Fordyce and was one of the prominent business men of that community. His demise occurred there in 1898 when but forty-five years of age. On the 26th of October, 1880, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Dunn to Miss Catherine M. Jones, a native of Bradley county, this state, where she was reared to womanhood. She is now living, at the age of sixty-two years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dunn seven children were born, five of whom are living. Two died in infancy. Fay L., whose name initiates this review, is the eldest child.

In the acquirement of his early education Fay L. Dunn attended the common schools of his native county and in due time enrolled in the Clary Training School at Fordyce. He spent one year at the University of Arkansas, taking a literary course, and after becoming thoroughly familiar with stenography he secured a position with A. B. Banks, in 1901. For eighteen years he was in charge of the claim department of the Home Life and Accident Insurance Company. On the 20th of September, 1920, he entered into partnership with Mr. Hempstead in the conduct of a jewelry business, the firm becoming Hempstead & Dunn. Mr. Hempstead had engaged in that line of business for over twenty years previous to the partnership with Mr. Dunn, and he achieved substantial success. The firm is one of the most reliable in the county and has built up a large patronage. For the past three years Mr. Dunn has been active in the office of county treasurer and he is now finishing his second term. He was city treasurer of Fordyce from 1910 to 1918. In both political and business circles Mr. Dunn has won the confidence of his fellowmen and he is conceded one of Fordyce's most influential citizens.

On the 31st of January, 1910, at Stamps, Arkansas, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Dunn to Miss Clyde Chisolm, a daughter of Dr. Chisolm, one of the prominent physicians and surgeons of Lewisville, this state. To their union one daughter has been born: Frances Catherine, who is ten years of age and a student in the high school at Fordyce.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church and Mr. Dunn is a steward of the church and secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party.

LEIGH KELLEY.

Prominent among the energetic, farsighted and successful business men of Fort Smith is Leigh Kelley, who is the vice president of the Kelley Trust Company and the vice president of the Mansfield Gas Company. His activities and interests are of an important character and he displays marked capability in their management and control. Mr. Kelley comes to Arkansas from the neighboring state of Kansas, his birth having there occurred in the city of Burlington on the 15th of May, 1887, his parents being Harry E. and Kate, (Henderson) Kelley. His paternal grandfather, Captain Harrison Kelley, was a Civil war veteran, serving with the Union army. The father, Harry E. Kelley, has been a prominent figure in the business affairs of Fort Smith for many years. He has been active in the real estate field and is now prominently known as a capitalist and landowner and as the founder of the Kelley Trust Company.

Leigh Kelley pursued his early education in the public schools of Fort Smith, for during his infancy the family home was removed to this city. In fact he was but three months of age when his parents came to Fort Smith and with the interests of the city he has been closely associated throughout the intervening period, save for the time when he was pursuing his education in the Leland Stanford University of California, where he studied civil engineering. He then followed his profession for three and a half years in various parts of Arkansas. He has since been identified with financial interests of Fort Smith as vice president of the Kelley Trust Company, which was organized in 1905. He has closely studied all the problems relating to the business, has made himself familiar with every phase of the work and has accomplished excellent results through his superintendency of the interests of the corporation in the position of vice president. He has also become the vice president of the Mansfield Gas Company and in business affairs he displays notably sound judgment and unflinching energy.

Mr. Kelley attended the First Officers' Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Roots and was commissioned a first lieutenant, being assigned to the Three Hundred and Thirty-fourth Field Artillery. In June, 1918, he was promoted to the rank of captain and went overseas in August. After reaching France he was assigned to the training school at Bordeaux and while there he was placed on detached service on the general staff of Base Section, No. 2. He was mustered out on the 7th of March, 1919. He is a prominent and valued representative of the American Legion, having been chosen state commander for a term of one year, beginning in 1920.

Mr. Kelley was united in marriage to Miss Fay Alexander, a daughter of J. H. Alexander of Fort Smith, and they have become the parents of three children, namely: Gordon, Elizabeth and Alexander. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley are well known in Fort Smith, where they occupy an enviable social position and where his standing as a business man is very high. He possesses untiring energy, is quick of perception, forms his plans readily and is determined in their execution, and his close application to business and his excellent management have largely brought to him the high degree of prosperity which is today his. It is true that he became interested in a business already established, but in controlling and enlarging such an enterprise many a man of even considerable resolute purpose, courage and industry would have failed. Mr. Kelley, however, has demonstrated the truth of the saying that success is not the result of genius but the outcome of clear judgment and experience.

B. W. COYLE.

B. W. Coyle, a planter of De Valls Bluff, where he is acting as manager of the Gates estate, was born in Mississippi, in 1864, a son of A. I. and Julia (Moore) Coyle. The father was a native of Lexington, Kentucky, while the mother's birth occurred in Tennessee. Mr. Coyle removed with his family to Arkansas, settling near Hickory Plains, in Prairie county, in 1870, and there B. W. Coyle attended school, his training fitting him for life's practical and responsible duties. He started out in the business world as clerk in a store and from that point has steadily worked his way upward, wisely utilizing his time, talents and opportunities as the years have passed by. Removing to De Valls Bluff in 1893, he secured employment in the Gates store and through years of active association with Mr. Gates familiarized himself with all of the details connected with the Gates holdings, including thousands of acres of land. Upon the death of Mr. Gates, Mr. Coyle was entrusted with the management and development of this land, exceeding ten thousand acres, and thus he has become one of the foremost planters of Arkansas. He has managed this vast property prudently and profitably and as the years have passed has introduced most progressive methods in the care of the soil and the development of the place, much of which is devoted to rice culture. His unflinching energy, his broad vision and his keen sagacity have been vital forces in the attainment of success and he ranks today as one of the most prominent representatives of agricultural life in Arkansas.

Mr. Coyle was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Espich, a daughter of Henry Espich, who removed from Indiana to Arkansas. Mr. Coyle and his wife are keenly interested in all those forces which make for public progress and improvement, and his own labors have constituted a valuable contributing force to the upbuilding of the state. Especially have his labors been of great worth in demonstrating what can be accomplished in the way of rice production in the Prairie lands of Arkansas, hitherto regarded as of little value.

MEYER F. GATES.

Meyer F. Gates, assistant treasurer of the Bankers Trust Company at Little Rock, comes to Arkansas from Memphis, Tennessee, where his birth occurred January 8, 1892. He is a Harvard man and throughout his entire life has wisely used the talents given him and the opportunities that have come to him in the course of the years. His parents were Ferdinand and Tillie (Schamburg) Gates. The father was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1832, and coming to America in early life, devoted his attention to business affairs in Memphis for many years. On crossing the Atlantic, however, he first located at Hickory Plains, Arkansas, and it was in 1890 that he removed to Memphis, Tennessee, where his remaining days were spent, his death occurring July 9, 1909. He had been a merchant and planter and at the time of the Civil war he put aside all business considerations and joined an Arkansas regiment of Confederate troops, serving from the beginning of hostilities in 1861 until the middle of the year 1865. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party. His widow, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1859, is still living in Memphis. They were married in her native city in 1890 and their family numbered a son and three daughters, but two of the daughters are deceased.

Meyer F. Gates pursued his education in the public and high schools of Memphis and in a preparatory school before entering Harvard University, from which he was graduated in 1915 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, having completed a classical course. In 1916 he became connected with the Bankers Trust Company in the capacity of messenger and through the intervening period has won various promotions until he is now treasurer, having been called to this office in January, 1921. He is thus active in connection with one of the foremost financial interests of the state and his ability is widely recognized.

On the 30th of November, 1915, Mr. Gates was married to Miss Gladys Theresa Frauenthal, who was born in Conway, Arkansas, November 30, 1896. They are now parents of one son, Meyer F. Gates, born October 17, 1916.

During the World war period Mr. Gates served on various drives in connection with financing the war. He is a democrat in his political belief and religiously he adheres to the Jewish faith. He belongs to the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and also to the Concordia Club. He has steadily worked his way upward not only in the sense of success in business but also in the regard of his fellowmen and is today one of the highly esteemed young representatives of financial circles in Little Rock.

D. A. RANSOM.

D. A. Ransom, starting out in the business life with limited opportunities and meager advantages, has steadily worked his way upward and is now one of the owners and editors of the Democrat-Enterprise, published at Ozark. Born in Alabama in 1868, he is a son of David and Mary E. (Gallups) Ransom, who were also natives of that state. At an early day they removed to Georgia and subsequently to North Carolina, whence they came to Arkansas in 1890, settling in Johnson county. The father filled various county offices while in Alabama and after coming to this state he turned his attention to the occupation of farming and also conducted a country store near Clarksville. He has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party and during his early manhood he served under General Joe Wheeler in the Confederate army for four years. On one occasion he was wounded while engaged in military duty. His wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Both have departed this life. Their family numbered nine children, five of whom are living: D. A., whose name introduces this review; John, a printer, located at Clarksville, Arkansas; W. T., living in Little Rock; Simon, who follows farming in Johnson county; and Annie, now Mrs. Pollard, residing in East Texas.

D. A. Ransom received but limited educational opportunities. He began working at the early age of seven years in a printing office and was thrown entirely upon his own resources when but a child. He continued to work in the printing office, learning every phase of the business and was employed at various places in Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Arkansas. He has followed the printing business throughout his life, with the exception of one year, which he devoted to farming near Clarksville, this state. At length he purchased an interest in the Enterprise, a paper published at Ozark, of which he became part owner in May, 1908. This was his first independent venture. He later consolidated this paper with the Democrat and his publication is today called the Democrat-Enterprise. The paper has a circulation of about thirteen hundred and fifty and the company does considerable job printing, having a well equipped office with a linotype machine, large presses and everything for turning out first-class work. In fact, theirs is the best equipped office of any plant of the size in the state and Mr. Ransom holds to high standards in the character of work turned out.

Mr. Ransom belongs to the Missionary Baptist church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Knights of Pythias, being a past chancellor in the latter organization. He is also identified with the Woodmen and is a past consular commander in that order. In politics he is a democrat and staunchly advocates the principles of the party but has never been an aspirant for office, devoting his entire time and attention to his newspaper business. In this undertaking he is a partner of Sid Forrest, both of them doing editorial work on the paper and together owning the plant.

THOMAS E. HELM.

Thomas E. Helm, attorney at law, practicing independently in Little Rock, was born at LaCrosse, Izard county, Arkansas, on the 1st of January, 1874, his parents being David N. and Mary A. (Hesterly) Helm, who were natives of Kentucky and Missouri, respectively. In his early childhood the father accompanied his parents to Tennessee, where the period of his minority was passed and soon afterward he accompanied his widowed mother to Arkansas, where they established their home just prior to the outbreak of the Civil war. Becoming a resident of Izard county, David N. Helm, when nineteen years of age, joined the Confederate army as a member of an Arkansas regiment and later he was transferred to the army of the Tennessee. He proved gallant and his courage was demonstrated on many a southern battle field. He participated in the engagements at Shiloh and at Murfreesboro and in many other hotly contested battles of the war, including much of the fighting in and near Chattanooga and in other sections of Tennessee. He was also actively engaged in the Atlanta campaign and was with Hood's army in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, following the engagement at Atlanta. When the war was over he returned to his home in Izard county and there concentrated his efforts and attention upon mercantile pursuits. For many years he was on the road as a traveling salesman and eventually took up his abode in Batesville, Independence county, Arkansas, where he lastly lived retired until his death, which occurred May 1, 1904. His widow is still a resident of that place. They reared a family of two sons and two daughters, all of whom are living.

Thomas E. Helm largely acquired his education in the schools of his native town. He attended the public schools until he had completed the regular course and later became a student in the LaCrosse Collegiate Institute. In 1893 he matriculated in Hendrix College, at Conway, and was there graduated as a member of the class of 1896, at which time the Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred upon him. He then entered upon the profession of teaching and for three years occupied the position of principal of the high school at Clarendon, Monroe county, but he regarded this merely as an initial step to other professional labor. He proved a capable teacher, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge he had acquired, but his desire to become a member of the legal profession led him to enroll as a law student in the University of Arkansas and there he completed his course as a member of the class of 1900, at which time the Bachelor of Laws degree was conferred upon him. Immediately afterward he was admitted to practice in all the courts of Arkansas and took up the active work of the profession in connection with De E. Bradshaw. In 1907 they were joined by Lewis Rhoton, forming the firm of Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm, which firm was continued until November, 1916. At that time Mr. Bradshaw moved to Omaha, Nebraska, where he engaged in the practice of his profession and Lewis Rhoton and Thomas Helm continued in the practice, separately, at Little Rock. In all of his professional work Mr. Helm displays a thorough grasp of the law and ability accurately to apply its principles and these qualities make him an effective and successful advocate, at a bar which numbers many distinguished representatives.

Politically Mr. Helm has always been a democrat and loyally supports the principles of the party, but has never aspired to office. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias and is a worthy follower of the teachings of these societies, exemplifying in his life the beneficent spirit upon which the orders are based. A lifelong resident of Arkansas, he has made wise use of the opportunities accorded him and has steadily advanced to a most creditable position in the legal profession, in which progress depends entirely upon individual merit and ability.

RISLEY N. LYON.

One of the well known citizens of Hampton is Risley N. Lyon, who since 1918 has been engaged in the abstract business here. He was born near Hampton on the 1st of July, 1874, a son of Henry L. and Catherine Means Lyon. The maternal ancestors came from Ireland to America at an early day, first locating in New York. From there they removed to Fairhaven, Vermont, arriving there in the latter part of 1700, and Matthew Lyon represented that state in congress during Adams' administration. Another member of the Lyon family, James Lyon, served in the Revolutionary war. Henry L. Lyon was born in Sullivan county, Tennessee, and came to Arkansas in 1872. For many years he engaged in farming here, achieving substantial success. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted for service in the Confederate army, becoming a private in Company G, Fourth Alabama Cavalry. For many years previous to his death he was active in the local chapter of the United Confederate Veterans at Pine Bluff. At Hampton in 1873 occurred the marriage of Mr. Lyon to Miss Catherine Means. She was born in Huntsville, Alabama, but came to this state with her parents, who located at Hampton in 1850. They were among the pioneer settlers of Hampton. The Means family is of English-Irish extraction, one branch of the family, the Bradfords, having come to this country on the Mayflower. Grandfather Means served in the Civil war. Henry L. Lyon died at Pine Bluff in 1918, at the advanced age of seventy-four years. Mrs. Lyon died at Hampton, in 1919, aged seventy-five years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lyon four children were born, all of whom are living; Risley N. being the eldest.

In the acquirement of an education, Risley N. Lyon attended the public schools of Hampton and after graduating from the Warren high school he enrolled in the Woodbury Institute at Woodbury, a town which is not now in existence. He then took a course in the Central Business College at Sedalia, Missouri, and in six months completed his course there. In 1901 he became associated with the Cotton Belt Lumber Company as book-keeper, remaining active in this position until 1902. From 1902 to 1904 he was employed in like capacity with the Hampton Stave Company and from 1904 to 1908 was with the Marsh & Reilly Wholesale Grain & Commission Company at Pine Bluff. In the latter year he returned to Hampton and kept books for the Furlow & Dunn Company until the 1st of December, 1910, when he went with the Stout Lumber Company at Thornton, this state, as land commissioner. In March, 1914, he severed his relations with that concern and removed to Little Rock, where until May, 1915, he was engaged as abstractor for the Guaranty Title & Trust Company. Subsequently returning to Hampton he served as deputy circuit clerk under W. L. Furlow until the fall of 1918, when he entered the abstract business on his own account. He has since been identified with this business and is now located in the courthouse here.

On the 6th of October, 1901, at Hampton, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Lyon to Miss Maude Means, a daughter of Thomas N. and Belle (Black) Means of this community. To their union six children have been born: Katie Belle, who died in infancy; Claude J., nineteen years of age; Clyde B., seventeen years of age; Herbert L., age twelve years; R. N., Jr., ten years of age; and Madge, seven. All of the children are students in the Hampton public schools.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyon are members of the Methodist church and fraternally Mr. Lyon is identified with the Masons, having membership in Southern Star Lodge, No. 53, A. F. & A. M. of Hampton, and he and his wife are members of Lodge No. 363, Order of Eastern Star of Hampton. During the World war he served on the legal advisory board and on the local Red Cross committee and gave generously of his money in support of his government's interests. He is one of the alert and enterprising citizens of Hampton and recognizing the duties and obligations of citizenship, is never too busy to aid in any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare.

REV. E. M. FREYSCHLAG.

It is said that "no other profession demands half so much mental labor as the clerical," and for many years Rev. Mr. Freyschlag, minister of the Presbyterian church at Mount Comfort and Walnut Grove, has labored tirelessly in serving his denomination. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred near Fayetteville on the 12th of November, 1863, a son of Edward and Lucy W. (Hawkins) Freyschlag. The father was born in Monheim, Germany, and the mother was born in Kentucky. Their marriage was celebrated in Washington county, Arkansas, having both come to this county with their parents in early life. Eight children were born to their union, four of whom are living: Jennie, the wife of John Stanberry, a mine worker in Kansas; Mary, the widow of Anderson Davis of Washington county; E. M., whose name initiates this review; and Sarah, who is residing with the mother on the home place. The father was a consistent member of the German Lutheran church and always gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. For a short time he was in the Confederate army and he served as an officer in the campaigns against the Indians on the frontier. Throughout his life he followed farming and achieved substantial success in that connection. His death occurred in 1906, at the age of ninety-two years. Mrs. Freyschlag is still residing on the old farm of one hundred and sixty-nine acres in Washington county, where she has lived since she was sixteen years of age. She is now ninety-three and in the best of health. Her son, Rev. E. M., of this review, looks after the farm for her.

In the acquirement of an education Rev. Mr. Freyschlag attended the common schools of Washington county and a private Episcopal school in Fayetteville. For two years he was a student in the State University and then went to Chicago, where he attended the Moody Bible Institute for two years. He united with the Presbyterian church and was ordained in Arkansas and subsequently went to school to Dr. Earl of Canebill, this state. In 1891 he entered the ministry and filled a charge at Berryville for one year. For one year he served his church at Mount Comfort and Rogers and then for six years was minister of the Presbyterian church at Prairie Grove. In 1908 he came to Fayetteville to educate his children and has since resided in this community. He is now pastor of the church at Mount Comfort and Walnut Grove. The church owns a farm of twenty-five acres at Walnut Grove and Rev. Mr. Freyschlag attends to its cultivation, on the side. The church bought the farm on time, under his supervision, and since its purchase seven years ago the farm has netted some ten thousand dollars. There is a modern home on the farm, electrically lighted and with all improvements of the present day. The church also owns a moving picture machine and shows an exceptionally fine grade of educational and Bible pictures.

In 1897 Rev. Mr. Freyschlag was united in marriage to Miss Ida Appleby, further mention of the family being made in the sketch of George Appleby, to be found on another page of this work. Two children have been born to their union: Jessie, a graduate of the State University with the class of 1921; and Helen, attending high school. Since attaining his majority Rev. Mr. Freyschlag has given his political support to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. He has devoted his life to church work. In his sermons the Rev. Mr. Freyschlag is "positive but not dogmatic; earnest, but not denunciatory; tender, but not sentimental; scholarly, but not pedantic; simple, but not commonplace; impassioned, yet graceful; popular, but not vulgar." He serves to the best of his ability his church and congregation and he has the love of the entire community.

JOHN E. MILLER.

John E. Miller of Searcy and prosecuting attorney of his judicial circuit comprising five counties, was born in Aid, Missouri, May 15, 1888, and is a son of John A. and Mary K. (Harper) Miller, who are natives of Stoddard county, Missouri. The father, a farmer by occupation, has given much attention to stock raising, handling high grade cattle and hogs. He has carried on an extensive business and has met with substantial success in his agricultural and stock raising interests, which he began following his service in the Civil war, in which he was with the Confederate army, spending much of his time at Cape Girardeau and Bloomfield, Missouri. He participated in several skirmishes and was on active duty until the close of hostilities, whence he turned his attention to the work of developing his land and raising stock. He has now reached the age of seventy-three years, while his wife is sixty-nine years of age. Both are members of the Baptist church. In their family were eight children, five of whom are living: E. E., who makes his home near Puxico, Missouri, where he follows farming; Eunice May, who is a graduate of the Cape Girardeau Normal School and is now teaching at Caruthersville, Missouri; Iva Beatrice, also a graduate of the Cape Girardeau Normal School and now a teacher in the high school at Bloomfield; Oden Ray, who is pursuing a pharmaceutical course in the Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri; and John E. Two of the children died in infancy, while one daughter, Edith Victoria, became the wife of T. J. McDowell and died in 1899 at the age of twenty-five years, leaving two sons: Alfred L. and Samuel H. The former is with her parents and the latter is now employed in the transportation department of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad at Danville, Illinois.

John E. Miller pursued his education in the rural schools of Stoddard county, Missouri, in the high school at Bloomfield and in the State Normal at Cape Girardeau, while later he took a law preparatory course at Valparaiso University. He did not study continuously but at intervals taught in six different rural schools of Stoddard county, Missouri, and thus earned the money which enabled him to continue his education. At the age of eighteen years he was elected principal of his home school. He never abandoned his plan of becoming a member of the bar, however, and was graduated from the Kentucky State University of Law on the 6th of June, 1912, with the B. L. degree. On the 13th of June he became a resident of Searcy, where he opened an office, entering into partnership with J. N. Racheals, with whom he was connected until 1915. He then formed a partnership with C. E. Yingling and is still associated with him in general law practice. He served as assistant attorney for the Missouri & North Arkansas Railroad for two years and he has always enjoyed a good private practice. He likewise filled the office of city attorney for three years and on the 1st of January, 1919, became prosecuting attorney of the first judicial circuit, comprising White, Woodruff, St. Francis, Lee and Phillips counties. He handled the prosecution in connection with the Elaine race riots in 1919 and has tried many other important cases. For the past two years he has been attorney for the Arkansas Hydro Electric Company, of which he is also one of the directors. Aside from his professional interests he has investments in farm lands.

On the 21st of October, 1914, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Ethel Lucile Lindsey, a native of Lee county, Arkansas, and a daughter of R. H. Lindsey. They have one child, Mary Louise, now two years of age. The parents are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Miller is serving on the board of stewards. He is a Chapter

Mason, belonging to Searcy Lodge No. 49, A. F. & A. M., and Tillman Chapter, No. 52, R. A. M., in which he has filled all of the chairs. He is likewise identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and aside from serving as city attorney and prosecuting attorney he was a member of the constitutional convention of 1917, being the second youngest member of that body which framed the organic law of the state. His ability is widely recognized and has brought him to a point of leadership in connection with public interests in his section of the state.

PHILANDER K. ROOTS.

Philander K. Roots, one of the venerable and highly honored citizens of Little Rock to the time of his death on October 16, 1921, was closely connected with the development and progress of the state through his activity as a civil engineer, railroad builder and banker. His life had been one of intelligently directed activity and of intense usefulness and Arkansas largely benefited by his labors. Mr. Roots came to the southwest from New England and his ancestry was strictly American in both the lineal and collateral branches through many generations. The line is traced back in this country to 1634, when representatives of the name came from England. The great-grandfather of Mr. Roots, a graduate of Yale College, became a clergyman of the Congregational church, while the grandfather was a graduate of Dartmouth College and also devoted his life to the work of the ministry, although becoming a representative of the Baptist church, in the home mission field of which he did most effective work. Benajah G. Roots, father of Philander K. Roots, was a pioneer settler of Illinois. In New England he had qualified for the profession of civil engineering and had devoted his attention to professional work of that character for a considerable period. He determined, however, to become identified with the upbuilding of the growing middle west and settled in Perry county, Illinois, where he turned his attention to educational interests and contributed much to the development of the schools in that locality. He married Martha Sibley Holt and they became the parents of four children. The wife and mother died in 1864, while the father survived until 1888.

Philander K. Roots was the second in order of birth of their children and was still an infant when the family removed to Illinois from Connecticut. He was born about twenty miles east of Hartford, in the town of Willington, Connecticut, on the 4th of June, 1838, and has therefore passed the eighty-third milestone on life's journey. He was reared on a frontier farm near Tamaroa, Illinois, his father having there taken up a government claim. He early assisted his father in the development and cultivation of the fields and he likewise received a liberal educational training under his father, who was a highly educated man. At a later date Philander K. Roots became a student in the Carrollton College at Carrollton, Illinois, where he specialized in civil engineering, and later he matriculated in the State Normal School at Bloomington, Illinois, where he continued in the same line of study to the time of his graduation. He started out in the business world as assistant to his father, who was then division engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad in Illinois. In 1853 Mr. Roots accepted a position as engineer in connection with the work of laying out the town of Centralia, Illinois, and when that task was accomplished he went to Paducah, Kentucky, where he was in the employ of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, acting as locating and constructing engineer. With the outbreak of the Civil war, however, he returned to Illinois and entered the educational field by becoming principal of the high school at Duquoin. A year passed in this way and then, prompted by a most patriotic spirit, he joined the engineering corps of the Union army, rendering valuable service to his country in operations between Nashville and Atlanta under command of General Thomas. He did much reconstruction work along engineering lines, following the trail of the Confederate Generals Wheeler and Forrest in that section of the south.

When the country no longer needed his aid Mr. Roots turned his attention to the west and for some time remained in Nevada and California, acting as deputy state surveyor in Nevada but also giving considerable attention to mining interests. He dated his residence in Arkansas from 1869, where he became a partner of his brother, Colonel Logan H. Roots, in the conduct of plantation enterprises at De Vall's Bluff. In the early '70s, however, he again engaged in civil engineering, being employed as locating and constructing engineer by the Cairo & Fulton Railroad, now a part of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad system. His labors as a civil engineer constituted a most valuable contribution to the upbuilding and development of the state. He was one of the first expert representatives of his profession in the state and the value of his service can scarcely be overestimated. In 1873 Mr. Roots turned his attention to banking, becoming managing official of the First National Bank of Fort Smith, in which he held a large amount of stock to the time of his demise. Little Rock had been his home since 1880 and for a decade he was the cashier of the First National Bank of the city but retired from active connection with the institution in 1890. In the meantime he had made large investments in property and along other lines here and was able in the evening of life to rest from labor and yet enjoy all of the comforts and luxuries which make for a pleasant existence.

On the 23d of May, 1866, Mr. Roots was married in San Francisco, California, to Miss Frances Maria Blakeslee, who was reared and educated in Duquoin, Illinois. They became the parents of the following named: Bishop Logan H. Roots, of the Episcopal diocese of Hankow, China; Rev. Willard H. Roots, Episcopal missionary in the state of Idaho; Mrs. Mary Emily Hall of Little Rock; and one who died in infancy. The wife and mother died on August 21, 1906, her death being the occasion of deep regret to her many friends. The sons and daughter of the household are now all married and filling positions of great usefulness in life. The son, Logan H. Roots, married Miss Eliza L. McCook, a daughter of the Rev. J. J. McCook of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, and they became parents of three sons and two daughters, all born in Hankow, China; Willard Holt Roots, who has devoted his life to the work of the Episcopal ministry, married Miss Katherine Philp, of Canada, and they have two children, Mary Frances and Willard H., Jr. Both sons were graduated from the Cambridge (Mass.) Theological Seminary; Mary Emily, the only daughter, is the wife of Walter G. Hall and they have two children, Graham Roots and Mary Emily. Mrs. Hall has been very active in Sunday school and church work and has served as president of the Young Women's Christian Association of Little Rock. Mr. and Mrs. Hall and their two children made their home with Mr. Roots and the household has ever been noted for its gracious and liberal hospitality.

Mr. Roots had long been identified with the Masonic fraternity, taking all of the degrees of the York Rite, including that of Knights Templar, while in the Scottish Rite he attained the thirty-second degree. His political endorsement was always given to the republican party and he never neglected any duty of citizenship. He belonged to the Protestant Episcopal church and for almost a half century was senior warden therein, while for many years he had served as superintendent of the Sunday school. He became one of the organizers of the Young Men's Christian Association of Little Rock in 1885 and there was no good work done in the name of charity or religion that sought his aid in vain. He approached the end of life's journey with the consciousness of duty well performed, of a life well lived, and the honor and respect accorded him were not the recognition of mere business success but of a sterling character above reproach. He died at his home, 1018 Scott street, Little Rock, Sunday, October 16, 1921, and his departure is deeply mourned by his family and hosts of friends.

S. G. PARSLEY.

S. G. Parsley, cashier of the Valley Bank at Hindsville, was born in London, Kentucky, September 25, 1874, a son of S. W. and Sallie (Black) Parsley and a grandson of Alexander Parsley, who was a native of Virginia, but in early life removed to Kentucky. In the maternal line the grandfather was Richard Black, who spent his life in the Blue Grass state. S. W. Parsley was born in Lee county, Virginia, but was married in Kentucky to Miss Sallie Black, who was born in that state. Practically his entire life was passed in Kentucky, for he was but three years of age at the time of the removal of the family from Virginia. He became a merchant and farmer and about 1880 removed to Madison county, Arkansas, where he purchased land and carried on general agricultural pursuits. His political support was given to the democratic party and fraternally he was connected with the Masons. Both he and his wife died in Madison county. They were the parents of four children, two of whom are living: S. G., of this review; and J. F., a merchant of Patrick, Arkansas.

In the schools of Madison and Benton counties, Arkansas, S. G. Parsley acquired his education and also attended the Pea Ridge Normal College. He took up the profession of teaching when but sixteen years of age and was thus engaged for eight years, proving a capable educator, imparting readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired. Afterward, however, he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits at Delaney, Arkansas, and was active in that line of business for eight years. Subsequently he was elected circuit clerk and so continued in office for four years, retiring from the position as he had entered it—with the confidence and good will of all concerned. He then removed to Hindsville and accepted the position of cashier in the Valley Bank. He has since served in that connection and is today a well known representative of financial interests in his part of the state. He started in life with nothing and has been dependent entirely upon his own resources from the age of sixteen years. Steadily he has advanced as the result of his industry, perseverance and capability and today he is well known in the banking circles of Madison county.

In 1899 Mr. Parsley was married to Miss Cynthia Brashears, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of J. C. Brashears, also a native of that state, whence he came to Madison county, Arkansas, in the '80s and is now living at Lowell, Arkansas, where he owns a farm. Mr. and Mrs. Parsley have become parents of four children: Leola, who is a student in a college at Ozark; Keith, attending college in Clarksville; Jeraldine and Kenneth, who are also in school. Mr. Parsley belongs to the Christian church, while Mrs. Parsley has membership in the Presbyterian church. He is also identified with the Masons and the Odd Fellows and has passed through all of the chairs in the lodge of the latter order. His political support is given to the democratic party and he has served as county judge for one term since removing to Hindsville. Much of his attention, however, is given to his business affairs and in addition to his work in the bank he devotes some time to real estate activity and to the supervision of the farm which he owns on the river. All that he possesses has come to him as the direct result and reward of his industry and perseverance and his life record should serve to encourage and inspire others who must start out in the business world empty-handed as he did.

SIDNEY J. WOLFERMANN, M. D.

Dr. Sidney J. Wolfermann, a physician and surgeon of Fort Smith, with offices in the First National Bank building, has qualified for his profession by thorough and comprehensive study which has well equipped him for the important and onerous duties that devolve upon him. Moreover, he has held to the highest standards and directed his course according to the most advanced professional ethics, and thus it is that he enjoys in the highest degree the esteem and confidence of his professional brethren. Dr. Wolfermann is a native of Streator, Illinois, his parents being David and Carolyn (Heller) Wolfermann. The father was engaged in the retail clothing business for more than fifty-one years. He was desirous that his son should have excellent educational advantages, and after attending the public schools Sidney J. Wolfermann entered the University of Wisconsin at Madison and there won the Bachelor of Arts degree. Having determined to make the practice of medicine his life work, he next became a student in the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago and thus qualified for professional activity.

Following America's entrance into the World war Dr. Wolfermann enlisted in the army and was commissioned an officer of the Medical Corps. He was assigned to duty at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and specialized in facial surgery. He was also for a time at Camp Sevier, Georgia, and at Garden City, Long Island, as well as in the Army Medical School at Washington, D. C. There he studied plastic surgery and while stationed there also took up the study of X-ray work. For a time he was on duty at Camp Grant, where he worked in the field of plastic surgery, which was largely evolved in its more advanced stages during the war period, being used in reconstructing mutilated faces. This called for skill and application of the highest order. During his term of service Dr. Wolfermann made this his specialty and attained a high degree of efficiency in this newly developed science.

When the country no longer needed his aid Dr. Wolfermann returned to Fort Smith to resume the private practice of his profession in 1919. Here he joined the Cooper Clinic, with which he has continuously been associated since that time. He is constantly promoting his efficiency and skill through scientific research and investigation and not only has he kept abreast with the times but has become a leader in this field of practice, developing his power to a high point of efficiency.

CURNEL SAMUEL WILLIAMSON.

Curnel Samuel Williamson was for many years a resident of Hot Springs and although he now makes his home in St. Louis he still has important business interests and investments in the former city. He was born in Covington, Kentucky, April 5, 1851, and obtained his education largely in the public schools of Cincinnati, Ohio, and in the Chickering Institute. His parents removed with the family to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1861, and Curnel Samuel Williamson started out to provide for his own support when a youth of eighteen years, initiating his business experience as a clerk with the Peoples Ice Company of Cincinnati. At the age of twenty years he was bookkeeper with the ship chandler firm of Williamson & Company, the senior partner thereof being his uncle. In 1871 he came to Hot Springs on a visit, after which he returned to Cincinnati, but in 1872 again made a trip to this city. He did not take up his abode here at that time, however, but in 1875 returned to Hot Springs and was married on the 18th of October of that year, to Miss Fannie Gaines, a daughter of William H. Gaines, who is mentioned on another page of this work. About the time of his marriage Mr. Williamson took the management of the old Hot Springs Hotel, associated with A. B. Gaines and carried on the business until the hotel was destroyed by fire in March, 1878. At that time Mr. Williamson turned his attention to the real estate business, conducting important transactions of this character until 1892, when he erected the Great Northern Hotel and the Great Northern Bathhouse. He then assumed management of the hotel and bathhouse and carried on the business successfully for a long period. In 1897 he erected an addition to the hotel, making it as it now stands. In 1874 he had acted as agent for the White Star Line Packet Company, having four side-wheel steamers on the river, and was located at Memphis, Tennessee. In 1872 he had been agent for the Cincinnati & St. Louis Express Line, also having four river steamers. Mr. Williamson continued to conduct the hotel until 1903, when he removed to St. Louis, where he has since resided, although retaining his business and financial interests in Hot Springs. He is connected with the city of St. Louis in an official capacity. While in Hot Springs he laid out the Williamson and Gaines addition to the city and he owns large real estate holdings here. He still visits Hot Springs quite frequently, to look after his hotel and other interests and takes great pleasure in meeting his old friends, who are always glad to see him. He rejoices, too, in the progress and development that is taking place in Hot Springs, ever manifesting a commendable pride in what has been accomplished as the years have gone by. This is a city famous for its fine hotels.

To Mr. and Mrs. Williamson were born four children: Maria L.; Etna A., the wife of Paul Powers of Washington, D. C.; Curnel Samuel, Jr., of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, who is engaged in merchandising; and Mary F., the wife of M. P. Relyea of New Jersey. For his second wife Mr. Williamson chose Ida L. Miller, who was born in Iowa. Mr. Williamson has been a member of the Elks lodge of Hot Springs for nineteen years. He has always voted with the republican party and he held the office of chief deputy sheriff under Mr. Houpt. He collected taxes individually during the smallpox epidemic of 1895 and in 1896 he acted as deputy sheriff, collecting all taxes and making settlements. A man of pronounced ability and of progressive public spirit, Hot Springs was loath to have him leave but she feels that she still has a claim upon him because of his extensive investments here and because of his continued interest in the welfare and growth of the city.

J. L. CLEMMER, M. D.

Dr. J. L. Clemmer, a successful physician and surgeon of Gentry, where he has been located since January, 1920, has continuously followed his profession in Benton county during the past two decades and has enjoyed an extensive and lucrative practice. He is numbered among the worthy native sons of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Springdale on the 6th of September, 1877. His parents, J. G. and Hettie (Mosher) Clemmer, are natives of eastern Tennessee. John Clemmer, the paternal grandfather, was also born in Tennessee, his parents having emigrated to this country from Germany about 1789. The maternal grandfather was Phillip Mosher, likewise a native of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Clemmer were married in eastern Tennessee and came to Arkansas after the close of the Civil war. Mr. Clemmer served with the Confederate army as a member of a Tennessee regiment from 1862 until the cessation of hostilities, being captured twice and being in prison when peace was declared. His time and energies throughout the period of his active business career were devoted to general agricultural interests, in the capable conduct of which he met with a gratifying and well deserved measure of prosperity. He and his wife now make their home in Springdale, where he has lived retired for the past three years. Their religious faith is indicated by their membership in the Lutheran church, while in politics Mr. Clemmer is a staunch democrat. They have been residents of Arkansas for more than a half century and have become well known and highly esteemed for their many estimable and admirable qualities. Their family numbered thirteen children, seven of whom are yet living.

J. L. Clemmer, who was the fourth in order of birth, was educated in the Springdale high school and then entered the University of Kansas Medical College at Kansas City, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of M. D. as a member of the class of 1901. He at once opened an office at Springtown, Arkansas, from which point he traveled over the surrounding district and thus continued in practice until January, 1920, when he removed to Gentry, where he has remained to the present time. Well merited success has attended his professional labors, for when he settled at Springtown he was entirely without financial resources and during the period of his practice there accumulated sufficient capital to enable him to become possessed of considerable property. He has ever kept in close touch with the progress of the medical profession, pursued a special course in Tulane University in the fall of 1920 and in 1908 did four weeks' postgraduate work in St. Louis. His high standing among his professional colleagues and contemporaries is indicated in the fact that he was chosen to the presidency of the Benton County Medical Society and he likewise belongs to the Medical Association of the Southwest, the District Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

In 1900 Dr. Clemmer was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Wasson, a native of Springtown, Arkansas, and a daughter of David Wasson, a prosperous merchant of Springtown. They have become parents of three children: Vira E., who was educated in Galloway Female College of Searcy, Arkansas; Franklin, who is a high school graduate and will enter the University of Arkansas in the fall of 1921; and Iva May, a high school student.

Dr. Clemmer gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and fraternally is identified with the Masonic lodge at Gentry and with the Modern Woodmen of America. His wife and children are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Both the Doctor and his wife have spent their entire lives in Arkansas and have become widely and favorably known throughout the northwestern part of the state, winning the warm regard of all with whom they have come in contact.

PROCTOR F. JOHNSON.

Among the well established attorneys at law in Eureka Springs is Proctor F. Johnson, who not only has a large private practice but is now serving as deputy prosecuting attorney. He is numbered among the native sons of Arkansas, for his birth occurred in Newton county on the 16th of December, 1891, a son of Oscar F. and Nannie (Parris) Johnson. The paternal grandfather, James F. Johnson was born in Ohio and served throughout the Civil war in the Union army. He was with Sherman on his famous march to the sea. At the close of the war he came to Arkansas and resided in this state for some time, subsequently removing to Missouri where he was killed in a street car accident in 1912. The maternal grandparents were Stephen and Elizabeth Parris. He was a native of Texas and upon the outbreak of the Civil war, his sympathies being with the southern cause, he enlisted in the Confederate army. His death occurred while in service, the result of exposure in all kinds of weather and poor clothing and food. Oscar F. Johnson was born in Ohio and at an early age removed with his parents to Kansas, in which state he was reared to manhood. Mr. Johnson has followed many lines of business, having been engaged in the mercantile business for some time and having traveled for some large concerns on the road. He came to this state in the '80s and remained here for some time before going to Colorado, where he resided for two years. At the termination of that time he returned here and he has since been a resident of this state. He owns four hundred acres of valuable land in the county and is living retired in Eureka Springs. His wife is also living. She was born in Texas but came to this state in early life. Their marriage was celebrated at Harrison. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson four children have been born, Proctor F., the oldest child, being the only one living. For many years Mr. Johnson has been identified with the Masons and he is conceded an exemplary member of the craft. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party, he having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are highly respected citizens of Eureka Springs.

Proctor F. Johnson received his early education in the common schools of Carroll county and in due time entered the high school at Eureka Springs. Upon his graduation from that institution he enrolled as a student in the State University, with the intention of studying law, but being then only about seventeen years of age he changed his mind and at the end of the year withdrew from the university. He made his initial step into the business world as clerk in a mercantile establishment and then for some time was active in the cleaning and dyeing business. About that time he again determined to make the legal profession his life work and he began to study under the direction of F. O. Butt, a prominent and well known attorney. In 1917 he was admitted to the bar and immediately opened offices in Eureka Springs for the practice of his profession. In the early part of the following year, however, the United States having entered the World war, Mr. Johnson put all personal interests aside and enlisted for active service. He was sent to Camp Pike for training and on the 15th of October was commissioned second lieutenant. He was then transferred to Camp Funston, where he remained until the close of the war. Receiving his honorable discharge from the army he returned to his practice here and has gained for himself an enviable place among his professional brethren in the state. In January, 1920, he was appointed deputy prosecuting attorney and he is now active in that office. Mr. Johnson's clients are representatives of practically all classes and the attention which he gives to business entrusted to him and the success which he has before the courts, give him an excellent standing in the community where he is greatly respected.

In November, 1919, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Johnson to Miss Bettie G. Woodruff, a native of Washington county, this state, and a daughter of Jasper N. Woodruff, and Minnie Bell Woodruff. The paternal grandfather, Jasper N., was a lieutenant in the Confederate army. The maternal grandfather, John M. Bell, was likewise a Confederate soldier. Both families were pioneer lumbermen of Washington county. Mrs. Johnson is prominent in the club and social circles of Eureka Springs and she is active in all of the undertakings of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which she is a consistent member.

Mr. Johnson gives his political adherence to the democratic party and he has taken an active interest in the promotion of those principles and policies for which democracy stands. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and he is a Knight Templar. Mr. Johnson is always interested in matters of progressive citizenship and is a cooperant factor in many projects for the general good, yet he regards the practice of law as his real life work, and in his chosen field of labor he has won continuous advancement through merit and ability which has placed him with the leading lawyers of Arkansas.

LESLIE GOODLOE.

Leslie Goodloe, as well known figure in insurance circles in Arkadelphia, where close application and undaunted enterprise have enabled him to develop a business of substantial and gratifying proportions, was born in Clarksville, Tennessee, December 16, 1878. He is a son of Albert Theodore and Sarah Louise (Cockrill) Goodloe, the former a native of Mount Pleasant, Tennessee, while the latter was born in Tusculumbia, Alabama, where their marriage was celebrated in 1855. Immediately afterward they came to Arkansas, settling in St Francis county and the town of Caldwell was later built upon the plantation which Mr. Goodloe purchased. He acquired two thousand acres of land there and owned a large number of slaves. He was a man of liberal education, having graduated from the University of Virginia and also from the Richmond Medical College of Richmond, Virginia. For years he engaged in the practice of medicine in St. Francis county and in addition managed his large estate, being a man of splendid business ability and executive force. Both he and his wife were but children when their respective parents died and both were left estates of considerable consequence. Like her husband, Mrs. Goodloe had splendid educational opportunities, being a student at Dr. Price's Select School in Nashville, one of the leading educational institutions of the city at that time. Soon after the Civil war Albert T. Goodloe returned to Tennessee, where he had retained his summer home—Millbrook Farm—which adjoined The Hermitage, the home of General Andrew Jackson, near Nashville. In subsequent years he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and gave his life to the holy calling until his labors were ended. He served in the Confederate army during the entire period of the Civil war and preached to the soldiers while with the army. He died February 22, 1912, having for a few years survived his wife, whose death occurred March 31, 1908.

Leslie Goodloe pursued his education in the Henderson-Brown College of Arkadelphia, which conferred upon him the Bachelor of Arts degree at his graduation with the class of 1898. His brother, Granville Goodloe, was a member of the faculty of the college for several years. On the completion of his course there Leslie Goodloe spent one year as a student in the Randolph-Macon College at Ashland, Virginia, and then entered upon a law course at the University of Virginia, being graduated therefrom with the class of 1902.

Having thus qualified for the practice of the profession Leslie Goodloe located in Jonesboro, Arkansas, where he opened a law office but at the end of the year turned his attention to financial interests by organizing a bank in Hoxie, Arkansas, of which he served as cashier for four years. In the fall of 1906 he came to Arkadelphia as assistant cashier of the Citizens National Bank, in which capacity he served for six years. While an employe of the bank he built up an extensive insurance business and in 1912 he resigned his position with the bank and organized the United Insurance Agency, of which he was made general manager. Through the intervening period his attention has been given to insurance interests and he has gained a most extensive clientage for the agency which he represents, being recognized today as one of the prominent insurance men of his section of the state.

On the 28th of November, 1906, Mr. Goodloe was married to Miss Frances Louise Sims of Brunswick county, Virginia, and they have become parents of two children: Frances Ida and Albert Theodore. Mr. Goodloe is a member of Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 381, A. F. & A. M., and also of Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 1149, B. P. O. E., of which he is a charter member, while for two terms he served as exalted ruler. He is serving on the board of trustees of the Henderson-Brown College and is acting as secretary of the board. He is also the president of the Rotary Club and is in hearty sympathy with the high ideals and purposes of that organization, which is actuated not only by a desire to develop business relations in the city, but also to uphold the highest civic standards and the most advanced ideals of American citizenship. He was chairman of the exemption board during the period of the World war and religiously he is connected with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, while his wife also holds membership therein.

E. L. PYE.

E. L. Pye, numbered among the progressive merchants of El Dorado, where he is owner of a drug store which he has conducted with growing success since 1907, was born in Drew county, Arkansas, February 29, 1868. His birth occurred upon a farm and there he spent his youthful days, dividing his time between the acquirement of an education in the public schools, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields. He continued to assist in the task of plowing, planting and harvesting until he had attained his majority, when thinking to find other pursuits more congenial than those of agricultural life, he left home and obtained a position in a drug store at Helena, where he was employed for two years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Monticello, Arkansas, where he occupied a similar position until 1896 and then came to El Dorado, where he has now made his home for almost a third of a century. Here he secured a clerkship in a drug store and thus spent his time in the employ of others until 1907, when he purchased his present business. He was ambitious to have a place of his own and carefully saved his earnings until his industry, economy and careful management had made the step possible. He now conducts business under the name of the Pye Taylor Drug Company, of which he is president and general manager, and his well appointed store and the straightforward business methods which he follows well entitle him to the liberal patronage accorded him.

Mr. Pye has ever manifested a helpful and progressive interest in public affairs and has served as a member of the town council of El Dorado. He also belongs to the Baptist church and to the Knights of Pythias fraternity—associations which indicate much concerning the nature of his interests and the rules that govern his conduct.

SIDNEY W. DUKE.

Sidney W. Duke, cashier of the First National Bank at Mena, was born in Prescott, Arkansas, September 10, 1889. His grandfather, James W. Duke, was a native of Georgia and served for four years in the Confederate army during the Civil war. He was a farmer by occupation and spent his last days in Nevada county, Arkansas. The grandfather in the maternal line was John W. Gann and he, too, was born in Georgia, while at the present time he makes his home in Nevada county, Arkansas, where he is extensively engaged in farming. He was one of the standard bearers in the Confederate army during the period of hostilities between the north and the south.

T. H. Duke, the father of Sidney W. Duke, was born in Georgia and having arrived at years of maturity wedded Eliza Gann, whose birth occurred near Prescott, Arkansas, where they are still living. They became parents of six children: Sidney W.; Myrtie, now the wife of J. D. Crosby, a contractor of Hepe, Arkansas; Fred, who is living in Mena; T. H., who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Mena; Horace G., who is an insurance man at Fort Smith, Arkansas; and Chipley Sterling, who is attending school in Prescott. The parents are consistent members of the Baptist church and politically Mr. Duke is a democrat. He went to Prescott with his parents soon after the Civil war and has there resided to the present, now living retired from business, although for many years he was connected with the lumber trade.

Sidney W. Duke pursued his education in the Prescott high school, in the University of Arkansas, which he attended for two years, and in the University of Illinois, in which he was a student for a similar period. He started out to provide for his own support by working for a contractor and builder of Little Rock, with whom he remained for six months and later he engaged in the building and loan business in Texarkana for an equal period. In September, 1912, he came to Mena and secured the position of bookkeeper in the First National Bank. He was promoted to the cashiership in 1917 and has occupied that position through the intervening period, proving a courteous and obliging official and one who is very popular with the patrons of the bank. He also has an insurance department in the bank, of which he has charge and has gained a large clientele in that connection. His business activities also extend to other corporations, for he is the president of the Oden State Bank at Oden, Arkansas, a director of the Bank of Hatfield and secretary of the Duke Magruder Dry Goods Company at Mena.

Mr. Duke votes with the democratic party and keeps thoroughly informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day but does not seek office. He belongs to the Baptist church and he is well known in fraternal circles, being now exalted ruler of the Elks' Lodge, No. 781. He is also a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine and has filled the position of eminent commander in Malta Commandery, No. 17, K. T., of Mena. He has membership in the Kappa Sigma, a college fraternity, and he is ever most loyal to the interests which he represents, whether of a public or private nature. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, as he started out in the business world empty-handed and has progressed by reason of his close application, his thoroughness and persistency of purpose and his reliable methods in all of his dealings. Today he is a well known figure in financial circles in western Arkansas.

C. C. SADLER.

C. C. Sadler, engaged in the abstract business at Paris, is one of the native sons of Logan county, his birth having here occurred October 12, 1867, his parents being James O. and Mary Z. (Clements) Sadler. The father was born in Arkansas in September, 1838, and was a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of the state. His father was Rufus C. Sadler, who was probably a native of Georgia and removed to Mississippi, whence he came to Arkansas in the '20s. He assisted in transporting the Indians to the territory and he was a farmer, merchant and slave owner. The maternal grandfather, Abel B. Clements, a native of Tennessee, also came to Arkansas long prior to the Civil war and served as county judge in southwestern Arkansas. His daughter, Mary Z. Clements, was born in the southwestern part of this state on the 12th of February, 1840, and there she became the wife of James O. Sadler on the 9th of August, 1866. He was a farmer and merchant, conducting a store at Shoal Creek and also carrying on merchandising at Elsworth for a number of years. In 1887 he removed to Paris and thereafter lived largely retired from active business until his death, which occurred in January, 1913. For about four years he had survived his wife, who died April 3, 1909. They were the parents of seven children, of whom five are living; C. C., who is the eldest of the family; J. M., who is field man for the Bankers Trust Company of Little Rock, having for a number of years been associated with the banking business, connected with the state banking department for some time; Ocie M., the widow of William L. Cravens, Jr., who was a merchant and bookkeeper; R. B., who is a practicing dentist at Paris; and Lewis C., cashier of the First National Bank at Paris. The parents were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, taking an active part in the church work. In early life they had been members of the Presbyterian church but later joined the Methodist denomination. Mr. Sadler was also a Mason and for a number of years served as secretary of the Masonic lodge in Blaine. In politics he was a democrat and at the time of the Civil war was a captain of Headquarters Company under Cabell. He was wounded in the arm at the battle of Wilson Creek, Missouri. Both he and his wife were highly esteemed as people of sterling worth and as representative of two of the old and honored pioneer families of the state.

C. C. Sadler was educated in the country schools of Logan county and started out in the business world by assisting in his father's store. He afterward began studying law in an office and was admitted to the bar in January, 1906, at which time he began practice in Paris but now devotes the greater part of his attention to the abstract business, in which he has engaged since 1908. He has a splendid set of abstract books, is thoroughly accurate, systematic and reliable and his patronage is now extensive.

In 1897 Mr. Sadler was married to Miss Jennie Gwaltney, who was born in Logan county and died August 7, 1908. She had four children, of whom three are living; James Overton, who works at an oil station in Paris; Mary Lee, attending Galloway College at Searcy; and Elizabeth Murphy, also a student in Galloway College. In July, 1909, Mr. Sadler was married to Theodocia Foster, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas.

They are faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Mr. Sadler is also identified with the Knights of Pythias. He is a past chancellor commander of the lodge and keeper of the records and seal. He is also identified with the Woodmen of the World. Politically a democrat, he has served as town recorder, as school director and for four years as deputy circuit clerk, while for an equal period he filled the office of county treasurer and was a faithful custodian of the public funds. He has always been active in political circles and his opinions carry weight in the local councils of his party. His entire life has been passed in Logan county, and those who have known him from his boyhood, as well as the acquaintances of his later years, bear testimony to the sterling traits of his character, to his reliability and progressiveness in business and to his faithfulness in all matters of citizenship.

JOHN THOMAS HUMPHREYS.

Although many years have been added to the cycle of the centuries since John Thomas Humphreys departed this life, he is still remembered by those who were his friends and associates in life because of the sterling qualities of his character and the strong friendships which he made. He was born in Charlestown, Virginia, March 30, 1830, and in early manhood went to California, making his way to the Pacific coast during the time of the gold excitement in the far west. He was educated in Virginia and having studied law was admitted to practice in Van Buren, Arkansas.

It was while in Van Buren, Arkansas, in the latter part of the '50s that Mr. Humphreys met the lady who afterward became his wife. In November, 1860, he wedded Miss Belle Aldridge, a daughter of Thomas and Amanda M. (Jones) Aldridge, the former a native of Alabama, while the latter was born in Kentucky. They became early settlers of Arkansas, making their way to this state in the early '30s and the father at one time owned considerable land and a large number of slaves. Some of the descendants of the slaves are still living upon the original farm and in fact two are still living there who were born in slavery. The farm is situated twenty-five miles east of Fort Smith and is yet known as the Aldridge place. There were two sons and three daughters in the Aldridge family and both sons served in the Confederate army. H. T. Aldridge was killed in the last battle of the war, while delivering a message, and Thomas H. Aldridge died from the effects of disease contracted in the service. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Humphreys is the only surviving member of the family. Mr. Aldridge settled near Charleston, Arkansas, and was a cotton dealer. He also conducted a small merchandise store for the benefit of his employes and his neighbors. After the outbreak of the Civil war he went to Texas as a refugee and there died in 1863. The mother of Mrs. Humphreys died June 21, 1883, her last days being spent on the same plot of ground on which Mrs. Humphreys now resides.

Following his marriage, John Thomas Humphreys resided in Van Buren, Arkansas, for three or four months, or until after the outbreak of hostilities between the north and the south, when he organized a company of infantry at Van Buren and was captain of this company during the Oak Hills fight. After this fight the company was disbanded and he organized a company of artillery and was captain of this company in the Elk Hill battle. He served throughout the war and was in command of a battalion for some time east of the Mississippi river. It was during a part of this time that his family resided in Texas as refugees.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphreys were the parents of six children: Eustace W., who died in infancy; Thomas Hadden, a supreme court judge of Arkansas; G. A., a practicing physician who has followed his profession in New York city for the past quarter of a century; John, who is living in Shreveport, Louisiana; Ora Belle, now deceased; and Birdie, the wife of A. J. Coniff, living with her mother at Fort Smith.

In his political views Mr. Humphreys was a democrat. After the close of the Civil war he practiced law for a time in Fort Smith, devoting several years to the profession. Later he went to San Francisco, where he served as assistant city attorney. He departed this life about 1893 or 1894, his remains being interred in one of the cemeteries of the city that borders the Golden Gate. He was a Presbyterian in his religious faith and enjoyed the esteem, confidence and high regard of all who knew him.

Mrs. Humphreys reared her family and is deserving of great credit. Left with only limited financial resources she kept her children together and bought ten acres of land, where she now lives. Some time later this was subdivided and platted and is known as Humphreys place. Later she bought twenty acres adjoining and developed an excellent addition, which was named in honor of her father and known as the Aldridge addition. Mrs. Humphreys has displayed excellent business ability in the management of all her affairs, winning a substantial measure of success as the years have gone by. She is a consistent member of the Christian church and enjoys the high esteem of all who know her, while her friends throughout the community are many.

A. B. PRIDDY.

A. B. Priddy, judge of the district court in the fifth district of Arkansas and an honored resident of Danville, was born in Logan county, this state, December 12, 1874, his parents being Burrell and Katherine (Scott) Priddy. The father was a native of Mississippi and in 1858 came to Arkansas, settling in Logan county. He pursued his medical education in Memphis, Tennessee, and devoted his life to the practice of his profession. Following the outbreak of the Civil war he joined the Confederate army, raising a company of which he was commissioned captain and serving throughout the period of hostilities. He was married during the first year of the war to Miss Katherine Scott, who was born in Yell county and is a daughter of Alexander Scott, an Arkansas pioneer, who followed farming and stock raising as his life work and won a very substantial measure of success. Dr. and Mrs. Priddy were consistent members of the Baptist church and he was an exemplary follower of Masonic teachings. In politics a democrat, he represented Logan county for three terms in the state legislature and left the impress of his individuality and ability upon the legislative enactment of that period. He continued to practice medicine for a long period in Logan county, Arkansas, and departed this life December 31, 1901. His widow long survived him, her death occurring in December, 1918. They were the parents of five children: Eudora, the wife of E. D. Bowden, living at Magazine, Arkansas; Florence, the wife of E. T. Powell, a practicing physician of San Antonio, Texas; Edna, who is residing at Magazine, Arkansas; A. B., of this review, and Blanche, the wife of W. W. Westmoreland, a merchant of Conway, Arkansas.

A. B. Priddy pursued his education in the State University, in which he took a three years' course, and in the Cumberland Law School at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he was graduated with the class of 1896. Having determined upon the practice of law as a life work, his preparation was thorough, and his ability has brought him prominently to the front. He entered upon his professional duties as a partner of John M. Parker of Dardanelle, and later formed a partnership with John E. Chambers, with whom he practiced until elected to the bench in 1915, entering upon his official duties in January, 1916, as judge of the fifth district. He is now serving for the second term, his reelection indicating most clearly the confidence which the public has in his ability as a fair and impartial interpreter of the law in the court. When he had completed his schooling and entered upon active practice his cash capital consisted of but five dollars. He has been very successful as the years have passed, his ability enabling him to win the patronage of many clients. Today he is the owner of a valuable farm and an attractive residence on the edge of Danville, and he also owns a splendid plantation in Louisiana in connection with a partner. He was at one time president of the Yell County Bank and is still a member of its board of directors. His attention, however, is mainly given to his judicial duties, his district comprising four counties and he has made for himself a most creditable place as one of the capable jurists of the state. His course has ever been in harmony with his record as a man and as a lawyer, being distinguished by marked fidelity to duty and a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution. The scales of justice are evenly balanced in his hands and neither fear nor favoritism can swerve him in his opinions.

On the 14th of March, 1900, Judge Priddy was united in marriage to Miss Augusta Ellington, who was born at Magazine, Arkansas, a daughter of M. M. Ellington, a pioneer farmer of Logan county, where he spent most of his life. Judge and Mrs. Priddy have become parents of seven children: Julian B., now a student in the University of Arkansas; Katherine, attending Galloway College at Searcy; Richard, Lorene, Arthur Henderson and Paul, all in school; and Ellen, who is but three years of age. The parents are loyal members and generous supporters of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the judge is a thirty-second degree Mason. In politics he is a democrat and has served as mayor of Danville, but was never a candidate for office until he was elected judge, save that he served as mayor of the town. He had always preferred to leave office-holding to others, regarding his professional pursuits as in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts. He holds to high ideals in the discharge of his official duties, and never forgets that he holds not only justice but the higher attribute of mercy in his hands.

SAMUEL ADAMS COCHRAN.

Samuel Adams Cochran, president of the Cochran-Foster Lumber Company at Little Rock, is a native of the city in which he makes his home, his birth having here occurred April 15, 1886. His youthful days were largely devoted to the acquirement of his education in the public schools of Arkansas and in the Cascadilla School at Ithaca, New York, from which he was graduated with the class of 1904. In the fall of that year he entered Cornell University, where he received thorough training and was graduated in 1908 with the degree of Mechanical Engineer. Having completed his college course, he returned to his native city and here turned his attention to the lumber business, in which he has since been engaged. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with every phase of the trade and his ability and enterprise have enabled him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties and advance steadily toward the goal of success. The Cochran-Foster Lumber Company, of which he is now the president, is accorded a liberal patronage and controls a large trade that makes its business one of substantial results.

On the 10th of June, 1909, Mr. Cochran was married to Miss Marion L. Foster, who was born in Merrill, Wisconsin, April 3, 1889, and is a daughter of Harry Howard Foster, a native of Wisconsin, who has now departed this life. Mrs. Cochran is a college-bred woman of innate culture and refinement and presides with gracious hospitality over their home. By her marriage she has become the mother of two children: Harry Foster, born June 18, 1910, and Jane Annis, whose birth occurred July 7, 1914.

Mr. Cochran is a member of Trinity Episcopal church, and his wife belongs to the Second Presbyterian church. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha, a Greek letter fraternity; of the Country Club and of the Boat House Club—associations that indicate much concerning the nature of his recreation—and of the Rotary Club, his membership in the last named being proof of his interest in the welfare and progress of the city along lines of progressive municipal upbuilding. His political support is given to the republican party and he keeps well informed on the vital questions and issues of the day, but has never been an aspirant for public office. He feels that business affairs make full demand upon his time and energy, and the careful direction of his labors in the field of trade and commerce has gained for him a gratifying position among the lumbermen of the state.

HENRY C. READ.

Henry C. Read, a representative resident of Fort Smith, where he is engaged in the brokerage business, has not only gained a creditable position in financial circles, but has also rendered valuable aid in public affairs as mayor of the city and in other connections. His life record had its beginning in Columbia, Kentucky, where he was born in 1863, his parents being Rev. Henry C. and Ada (Frazer) Read, the former a minister of the Presbyterian church, who was graduated from Danville College at Danville, Kentucky, and also pursued his education in part in Princeton Seminary. He afterward located in Columbia, Kentucky, and in addition to his work in the ministry he entered the educational field as president of the Columbia male and female high school, imparting readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired, and thus contributing much to the educational development of the city.

Henry C. Read was a pupil in the Columbia high school and afterward matriculated in Center College at Danville, Kentucky, where he obtained his more specifically literary education that served as an excellent foundation upon which to rear the superstructure of professional knowledge. In 1883 he took up the study of architecture and engineering and for some time was associated with the firm of McDonald Brothers of Louisville, Kentucky, thus gaining much valuable practical experience. He afterward removed to Las Vegas, New Mexico, where he accepted the superintendency of the Aqua Pura Water Company, thus representing the Kentucky capitalists who were the stockholders in that company. It was during his residence in New Mexico that Mr. Read was married. In 1888 he removed to Fort Smith, where he entered the brokerage business, becoming a pioneer in the wholesale grocery brokerage trade. He has since handled and developed a business of very substantial proportions, and his activities of this character place him among the representative merchants and successful business men of the city.

While residing in New Mexico, in 1888, Mr. Read was united in marriage to Miss Stuart Eads, and they have become the parents of four children: Anne, who is the wife of Willis W. Hale, an electrical engineer of Cleveland, Ohio; Adele, who is the wife of Lyman C. Martin of Louisville, Kentucky; Dorothy, who is the wife of Wendel A. Robertson of Fort Smith, and Henry, who is at home.

In his political views Mr. Read has always been a stalwart democrat and in 1913 he was elected to the office of mayor of Fort Smith. He has labored untiringly for what he has believed to be the best interests of the city and was instrumental in securing the passage of a bill for the commission form of government. He acted as mayor of the city for four years, his administration being thoroughly businesslike and progressive, while the results achieved were most satisfactory. He served for twelve years as a member of the school board and was active in obtaining a construction program for bigger and better schools, his labors proving a most potent force in the development of the educational system of the city and improvement of the architecture of the school buildings, for his standards were high and he put forth every effort to secure their adoption. During the World war Mr. Read was active in promoting every interest that would further the welfare of the country and was active in teaching the principles of American government. Those who know him—and he has a wide acquaintance—esteem him highly as a man of genuine worth and one who by his own merit and ability has steadily risen to a place in the foremost rank of the business men and citizens of Fort Smith.

He has been an active officer of the Presbyterian church, lending his aid to all the church's activities, and rendering valuable help through his knowledge of church architecture.

FRED ARTHUR ISGRIG.

Fred Arthur Isgrig, who has devoted his attention to the practice of law since completing a course in the law department of the University of Arkansas in 1910, and who throughout this period has remained in Little Rock, was born October 5, 1884, on a farm in Perry county, Arkansas. His father, William A. Isgrig, came to this state from Indiana, his birth having occurred on the 16th of October, 1862, in Campbellsburg, Indiana, thence his parents removed to Kansas in 1869, when he was a lad of but seven years. After a residence there covering a decade they established their home in Perry county, Arkansas, in 1879, and William A. Isgrig, then a youth of seventeen years, soon afterward began farming in that county and devoted many years of his life to agricultural pursuits. In 1911 he removed to Little Rock, where he and his wife now reside, and where he is manager of a cotton oil mill. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. In early manhood he wedded Nancy Jane Noah, who was born in Albia, Iowa, in September, 1863. Their marriage was celebrated in Perry county, Arkansas, February 27, 1882, and they have become the parents of six sons and four daughters, of whom one son and one daughter died in infancy.

Fred A. Isgrig, who was the second in order of birth in the family, pursued his early education in the country schools of his native county and afterward had the benefit of three years' instruction in Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas. Determining upon the practice of law as a life work, he later entered the University of Arkansas and when he had finished the regular course he was graduated with the class of 1910, the degree of LL. B. being at that time conferred upon him. Through the intervening years he has continued in practice and has made steady progress in his chosen calling. The zeal with which he has devoted his energy to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unflagging attention to all the details of his cases, have brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct. His arguments have elicited warm commendation not only from his associates at the bar, but from the bench.

In November, 1908, Mr. Isgrig was united in marriage to Miss Mittie J. Jones, who was born in Lonoke county, Arkansas, August 25, 1888, a daughter of Julius K. and Mary J. (Chandler) Jones, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. The father served in the Confederate army throughout the Civil war, being a member of Forrest's Cavalry, and though he participated in a number of hotly contested engagements, he never was wounded nor was he captured. He has now departed this life, while his widow yet makes her home in Little Rock. Mr. and Mrs. Isgrig have become the parents of one daughter, Nancy Jane.

In his political views Mr. Isgrig has been a democrat since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He has filled several local offices, serving as police judge of Little Rock from 1913 until 1915, while at the present time he is alderman of the city from the eighth ward. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World and his religious faith is manifest in his membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church, South.

P. B. ADAMS, D. D. S.

Dr. P. B. Adams, successfully engaged in the practice of dental surgery in Stuttgart, comes to the southwest from Indiana, his birth having occurred in Clark county, that state, in 1883. His parents were S. F. and Elizabeth (Conn) Adams, the former a veteran of the Civil war, having served in defense of the Union. Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, the son pursued his early education in the public schools of his native county and later continued his studies in the Danville State Normal College. Having decided upon the practice of dentistry as a life work, he next entered the Cincinnati Dental College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1916. The opportunities of the southwest attracted him, and he began practice in the Ozark mountain region in the northwestern part of this state, opening his office at Heber Springs, in Cleburne county. There he remained until 1918, when he came to Stuttgart and through the intervening period of four years has steadily followed his profession here, building up a practice of gratifying and substantial proportions. He has a well-appointed office, supplied with all of the machinery and multitudinous delicate little instruments which constitute the equipment of a dentist, and his mechanical skill and ingenuity, combined with his scientific knowledge, has made him one of the capable dental surgeons of this part of the state. In addition to his professional interests he is the owner of six hundred and eighty acres of land in Faulkner county, devoted to timber, and he also has eighty acres in Arkansas county.

Dr. Adams was married to Miss Edith O. Badger of Charlestown, Indiana, a daughter of Louis Badger. They are well known in Stuttgart, where they have gained many friends and where the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed. Dr. Adams is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and the beneficent spirit upon which this order is founded finds expression in his relations with his fellowmen.

R. MACK MORTON.

R. Mack Morton, who is engaged in general agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Farmington and not far distant from Fayetteville, was born on the place which is still his home, his natal day being June 3, 1866. He comes of the sturdy pioneer stock of northwest Arkansas. His grandfather, William Morton, who was born in South Carolina in 1804, emigrated in early manhood to middle Tennessee, where he wedded Rachel Crawford. He and his young bride came to Washington county, Arkansas, in the year 1830, establishing their home in the valley immediately north of where the town of Prairie Grove now stands. The old homestead was between the lines of the Union and Confederate forces in the battle of Prairie Grove during the Civil war. To the union of William and Rachel (Crawford) Morton, ancestors of the Morton family in Washington county, Arkansas, were born five children: James A., Nancy J., John M., Martha E. and William T. William Morton departed this life on the 30th of January, 1880, having for several years survived his wife, whose death occurred December 5, 1873.

Henry Tollett, the maternal grandfather of R. Mack Morton, was born in Virginia in the year 1793. In early manhood he made his way to middle Tennessee, where he was united in marriage to Eliza Brown, who was also a native of Virginia, born in 1795. Henry Tollett was a soldier in the War of 1812 and held a commission as captain in the Black Hawk Indian wars. He and his young wife emigrated to Little River county, Arkansas, in the year 1819 and a decade later took up their abode in Washington county, this state, establishing their home where the subject of this review now resides. To them were born five children: William J., Rowland C., Margaret J., Ferdinand G. and Harriett L. Mr. Tollett died in July, 1871, while the demise of his wife occurred on the 15th of October, 1885, when she had reached the ripe old age of more than ninety years.

James A. Morton, the father of R. M. Morton, was born in Washington county, Arkansas, February 19, 1831. On the 12th of July, 1860, he wedded Miss Harriett L. Tollett and they became the parents of three sons: W. H., R. M. and J. E., all of whom are still living at this date. James A. Morton was reared in a typical pioneer home, and, true to the faith of his fathers, in early manhood united with the Presbyterian church, in which he served as an elder until his death, which occurred on the 30th of November, 1885. In politics he was a democrat. He was a Confederate veteran of the Civil war and spent two years in northern prisons, having suffered capture at the battle of Prairie Grove. His wife, Harriett L. Morton, died at the old home where she was born, in November, 1905.

R. Mack Morton, whose name introduces this review, obtained his education in the country schools and when he had reached adult age he took up as his life work the occupation to which he had been reared. Throughout the greater part of his life he has engaged in tilling the soil and harvesting the crops, but at different periods his fellow countrymen have called him to public office, and he has rendered efficient service in these connections. In 1914 he was chosen sheriff and collector of Washington county and continued to serve in that capacity until January, 1919, discharging his duties without fear or favor and retiring from office as he had entered it—with the confidence and good will of all law-abiding citizens. During the World war he was prominently identified with all war activities in Washington county. He acted as chairman of the draft board or classification board of the county throughout the period of hostilities and until the board was discharged from further service. Since resuming the work of the farm Mr. Morton has given his attention to the further development and improvement of the fields, which he has brought under a high state of cultivation.

In 1886 Mr. Morton was united in marriage to Miss Kate Smith, who was born in Washington county and is a sister of the wife of W. H. Morton, her husband's brother. Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Morton are the parents of four children: Grace, who is the wife of J. C. Barnett, a farmer of Washington county; Ruth, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Albert Russell, who died at the age of thirteen years, and Mamie, the wife of C. A. Carnes, who is engaged in farming with Mr. Morton.

In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Morton are Presbyterians, loyal to the teachings of the church and contributing generously to its support. He belongs also to the Masonic lodge of Farmington and has membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. In politics he has ever been a democrat and has taken a deep interest in politics, yet he feels that the pursuits of private life are in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts and is now concentrating his undivided time and attention upon his agricultural interests. He owns the old home place and other lands, so that his holdings embrace three hundred and seventy-five acres. He carries on general farming and specializes in raising berries and tomatoes. In former years he also engaged in raising thoroughbred horses and was one of the best-known breeders in the county. On his farm stands an attractive and commodious country residence, and the place is supplied with all the comforts and conveniences of the model farm of the twentieth century. Mr. Morton is also operating a canning factory on his farm, having a capacity of forty thousand cans per day, and he usually ships from forty to fifty carloads of canned goods per year. He cans blackberries, tomatoes and peaches, but the first two in larger amounts. The first year in which he began this work he canned two hundred and fifty cases in a small shed near his home. Then he developed his plant until he now has a well-equipped establishment, which during the canning season furnishes employment to many and constitutes an important source of revenue to the community, while the capable management and unfaltering enterprise of the proprietor have found their reward in the gratifying profit which comes to him as the result of his labors in this connection.

JOHN C. CARROLL.

In El Dorado and throughout Union county, John C. Carroll, now deceased, was widely and favorably known, having long been closely associated with agricultural interests in that section. He was born in Union county, about ten miles west of El Dorado, on the 29th of August, 1839, and spent the period of his boyhood and youth in this locality. He was a young man of about twenty-two years when the Civil war broke out, and true to his loved southland, he joined the army and served for four years with the Confederate forces. He was injured in the exploding of a mine during the siege of Vicksburg, but recovered and remained at the front until the close of hostilities.

When the war was over Mr. Carroll returned to the old home farm and took up the active work of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. Year after year he carefully cultivated his fields and his labors brought substantial results, so that in the course of time he became the possessor of a very comfortable competence.

Mr. Carroll was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Tatum, a daughter of Edmund Tatum, who came to this state from Alabama and cast in his lot with the pioneer settlers of Union county. To Mr. and Mrs. Carroll were born ten children, seven sons and three daughters.

The family circle was broken by the hand of death when on the 23d of September, 1912, Mr. Carroll was called to his final rest, being then seventy-three years of age. He was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church, active and prominent in its work, and his entire life was guided by his religious faith. Mrs. Carroll is a member of the Methodist church and is equally loyal to its teachings. She continued upon the home farm until 1918, when she removed to El Dorado, where she now resides. She is still the owner of the farm property, however, which embraces three hundred and fifty acres of rich and productive land and annually returns to her a gratifying income. Mrs. Carroll had three sons and a grandson who were in the World war. The family has long been prominently known in Union county, its members enjoying the high regard of those with whom they have been associated.

L. B. McCLURE.

In financial circles of northwestern Arkansas, L. B. McClure is well known as vice president of the Peoples Exchange Bank of Russellville, with which he has been identified for the past twenty-eight years, entering the institution in a minor capacity and working his way up to his present office of trust and responsibility through merit and ability. A native of Virginia, he was born February 12, 1866, and his parents were M. T. and Sarah Catherine (Baumgardner) McClure, the former also a native of Virginia, while the latter was born in Missouri. The father served throughout the Civil war, entering the service as a private and winning promotion to the rank of lieutenant, and was with General Lee's army at Appomattox at the time of the surrender. He is a well-informed man and has frequently been urged to become a candidate for public office, but has always refused. He is a member of the Scotch Presbyterian church and his political support is given to the platform and candidates of the democratic party. He resides on the farm in Virginia on which he was born and has reached the venerable age of eighty-eight years. His father, John McClure, was also a native of Virginia and a farmer by occupation. He was a grandson of James McClure, who emigrated from Ireland to Virginia about the year 1730 and became the American progenitor of the family. The maternal grandfather, Lewis Baumgardner, was born in Virginia and after living in that state for a number of years he went to Missouri, but subsequently returned to his native state, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. M. T. McClure became the parents of nine children, of whom eight survive.

L. B. McClure, the only member of the family to come to Arkansas, was educated in the public schools of Virginia, spending two years as a student in the high school at Tinkling Springs, after which he completed a business course at Staunton, Virginia. His initial business experience was acquired in a country store, where he was employed as a clerk and bookkeeper, working the first month for his board. At the end of eighteen months he resigned that position and in 1888 came to Russellville, entering the employ of Captain R. J. Wilson as bookkeeper and remaining in his service for six years. In 1894 he became bookkeeper for the Peoples Exchange Bank, with which he has since been connected, and his faithful, conscientious and efficient service won him promotion from one position to another of greater importance until he now occupies the vice presidency. Broad experience has given him a comprehensive knowledge of the complex problems of modern finance and the prestige which the institution now enjoys is largely attributable to his untiring efforts, keen sagacity and marked executive ability.

In 1890 Mr. McClure was united in marriage to Miss Allie Bayliss, a native of Pope county and a daughter of B. F. Bayliss, who was born in Tennessee. His father, A. J. Bayliss, became one of the early pioneers of Pope county, arriving here in 1836. He followed the profession of teaching and filled several public offices of importance, serving for a number of years as county clerk. He occupied that position during the Civil war and rendered valuable service to the county by concealing the records in an adjacent forest, thus preventing them from being destroyed, and he also served as county judge. Mr. and Mrs. McClure have had five children, but only one survives, Benjamin, who is preparing for the Master of Arts degree in the State University at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is also an instructor in that institution. While attending the University of Virginia he volunteered for service in the World war and was first with the Ambulance Corps, while later he was assigned to Tank Unit, No. 314. He participated in the Argonne and St. Mihiel offensives and for fourteen months was in France. Owing to physical disability he was sent home from service before the termination of hostilities and was discharged, returning home about the 25th of March, 1919. He has now regained his health.

The family resides in an attractive home in Russellville, and Mr. McClure also owns other property within the corporation limits. He has in his home a large library of books which he highly prizes. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in his political views is a staunch democrat. His fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, have called him to public office and he has served as alderman and city treasurer and for nine years was chairman of the school board, performing effective service for the public good in these various capacities. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias. For thirty-four years Mr. McClure has been a resident of Russellville, arriving here with a cash capital of three dollars and a half and an indebtedness amounting to twenty-five dollars, while he now ranks with the most substantial business men of the town, which has greatly benefited through his progressive spirit and intelligently directed activities. His life has been one of unremitting industry and to him has come the crown of earnest effort and persistency of purpose—success and an honored name.

J. C. CLEVELAND, M. D.

Dr. J. C. Cleveland, a physician and surgeon for more than a third of a century, practices at Bald Knob, where his capability has again and again been demonstrated in his successful handling of important and involved medical cases. Dr. Cleveland is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Independence county, November 19, 1852, his parents being Joseph and Elizabeth (Butcher) Cleveland, who were natives of Georgia and Alabama, respectively, their marriage being celebrated in Tuscaloosa, Alabama. The father was a son of Joseph Cleveland, a native of Georgia, who served with the rank of colonel in the Seminole war. In days of peace he engaged extensively in farming in Georgia, where he owned many slaves, and he also carried on merchandising there. Sustaining many losses on account of the ravages of war, he removed to Texas and there died ere the war had been brought to a termination. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Cleveland was T. J. Butcher, a native of Alabama, who carried on farming on a large scale. He removed to Hempstead county, Arkansas, after his son-in-law removed with his family to this state and his death there occurred.

It was in the year 1851 that Joseph Cleveland came with his family to Arkansas, settling in Independence county, having made the journey across the country with horse team and wagon. He purchased a preemption near Oil Trough and had to clear most of the land. For three years he served in the Confederate army and was captured while participating in the General Price raid in Missouri. He was sent to Fort Monroe, where he was incarcerated for ten months, and then being paroled, returned home, walking from Chattanooga, Tennessee, and crossing the Mississippi river on a raft, which he and his companions made. He had three brothers who were in the battle of Shiloh. Joseph Cleveland had his gun shot out of his hand, and his trousers were on one occasion pierced by bullets, but he escaped injury. With his return home he resumed farming and he also took an active interest in public affairs, serving as a member of the state legislature during the time of the Brooks-Baxter war. He was in the legislature during the extra session called by Governor Brooks and in various ways aided in shaping the destiny of the state during that momentous period. Returning to Independence county, he resumed farming and also operated a mill and steam cotton gin near Oil Trough. Later he retired and removed to Newport, where he departed this life in 1867, at the age of sixty-three years. His widow long survived him, her death occurring in 1910 at the age of eighty years. In their family were eleven children, six of whom are living. Those who have died are: Thomas J., Mary, John, Frank and Susan. The others are: J. C., H. P., an attorney of Judsonia; Mary, who is the widow of J. B. Cantrell of Chicago, Illinois; C. E., of Memphis, Tennessee; Samuel, living in Van Buren, Arkansas, and Edward L. of North Little Rock. The parents were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Cleveland was a Royal Arch Mason. His political endorsement was given to the republican party and he served for many years as justice of the peace and also filled the position of county commissioner in Independence county.

Dr. Cleveland pursued his education in the public schools of his native county and also through private instruction at home. He taught in the rural districts and in the town schools for several years, and afterward began reading medicine, while for a time he was employed in the drug business. He afterward attended the Kentucky School of Medicine and later the Louisville Medical College, while later he was graduated from the Missouri Medical College of St. Louis, winning the M. D. degree in 1888. Previous to this time he had practiced at Russell, Arkansas, and following his graduation he went to Newport, Arkansas, where he opened an office. In 1888 he came to Bald Knob, where he established an office and has since devoted his attention to medical and surgical practice. He has taken postgraduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic, and in 1919 he opened a private sanitarium, which he has since conducted. He devotes practically all of his attention to his professional interests, which are of an important character, and his ability is demonstrated in the excellent results which follow his labors in the treatment of disease. For thirty-two consecutive years he has been local surgeon and dispenser of medicine for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company. He belongs to the White County Medical Society, the Arkansas State and Southern Medical Societies, the American Medical Association and the Southern Railroad Medical Association. He enjoys the high respect and confidence of his colleagues and contemporaries in medical practice and his position has long been a creditable and enviable one.

Dr. Cleveland was married to Miss Eleanor Vick, and they had three children, two of whom died in infancy. The surviving daughter, Vina E., is the wife of C. E. Preston, a linotype operator on the paper of Memphis. For his second wife Dr. Cleveland chose Nannie E. Goad, and they became parents of three children: Estella, the wife of Percy Spriggs of Cairo, Illinois; Hattie May, the wife of Dr. J. B. Crawford, a practicing physician of Benton, Arkansas, and one who died in infancy. For his third wife Dr. Cleveland chose Mrs. Dora (Winfield) Webb, and by a former marriage Mrs. Cleveland has a daughter, Cecile, who is the wife of B. J. Perham, a bookkeeper with the Fruit Exchange of Bald Knob.

Dr. Cleveland is an exemplary representative of Masonry, having taken the degrees of the Blue Lodge at Newport, the chapter and the council at Bald Knob and he has served as high priest of the chapter. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Pythias, is examining physician of the former and passed through all of the chairs of the latter. His political endorsement has always been given to the republican party, and he staunchly advocates its principles. His entire life has been passed in Arkansas and thus for almost seventy years he has been a witness of the growth, progress and development of the state. He served as a member of Baxter body guard during the Brooks-Baxter war, although but a boy in his teens at the time. Many events which are to others matters of history are to him matters of personal knowledge and experience, and his reminiscences concerning the early days in Arkansas are most interesting and instructive. All who know Dr. Cleveland, and he has a wide acquaintance, speak of him in terms of high regard by reason of his splendid professional attainments and, moreover, by reason of the sterling traits of his character.

ROBERT GEDDES DAVIES.

Robert Geddes Davies, a prominent representative of the bar of Hot Springs, practicing with a large clientele that has connected him with much important litigation heard in the courts of the state, was born in Lake Village, Arkansas, a son of Anthony H. Davies, who was a native of Milford, Connecticut, and became one of the first settlers of Chicot county, Arkansas, arriving there in 1829. From Connecticut he went first to New York and removed from the Empire state to Arkansas. He had been dependent upon his own resources from the age of twelve years, at which time, in 1812, he began working in a store. He was with the American soldiers for a period during his youth and then went to St. Louis, where he entered the employ of Choteau, the fur trader and merchant. Mr. Davies began trading among the Indians, who gave to him the name of Rising Sun. He took up his work of this character on the Platte River and also traded with the Indians in Dakota. Coming to Little Rock, he established the first bank of Arkansas, and Albert Pike acted as attorney for the institution, the bank being conducted under the name of the Real Estate Bank of Arkansas. This was in 1829. He also purchased a plantation of two thousand acres located opposite the present site of Lake Village. He was likewise engaged in the commission business in New Orleans while developing his Arkansas interests, and he was a large slave owner, owning one hundred and sixty negroes, his home being on the Lake Hall plantation. He contributed much to the material development and progress of this section and was also prominent in connection with public affairs, serving as judge of the county and probate court for many years. He was likewise a member of the constitutional convention of the state and fraternally he was connected with the Masons. He died in April, 1861, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mildred H. Gaines, was born in Kentucky at Gaines Cross Roads, a place settled by her father in 1798. He was the father of Major William H. Gaines. The daughter, Mrs. Davies, died in 1900, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. In the family of this worthy couple were the following named sons and daughters: Harpin, who served throughout the Civil war and is now living in Montana; Fanny, the wife of Charles W. Fry of Hot Springs; Walter, who is living on the old homestead; Robert G., of this review; Joseph, who also occupies the old plantation, and Mildred, who died at the age of twelve years.

Robert G. Davies lived on the old plantation in his boyhood and youth and acquired his education under the instruction of private tutors until he entered the Garrison Forest School at Baltimore, Maryland, while still later he became a student in Georgetown College at Washington, D. C. He likewise attended the Locust Dale Academy and also the University of Virginia, from which he was graduated on completing a course in the law department with the class of 1874. He next made his way to Little Rock, where he entered the law office of Garland & Cockrell, well-known attorneys, with whom he remained for a few months. He then came to Hot Springs, where he formed a partnership with E. W. Rector for the practice of law, an association that was maintained for a number of years. He afterward practiced by himself for several years and still later was associated with Charles D. Greaves, who at one time was a candidate for governor of the state. In 1887 Mr. Davies went to Helena, Montana, where he followed his profession and also acted as assistant state land agent. In 1900 he again came to Hot Springs, where once more he entered into partnership with E. W. Rector and in 1910 he removed to Elko, Nevada, where he practiced law and engaged in mining for three years. On the expiration of that period he once more located in Hot Springs, where he has continued to the present time and is today one of the able and well-known attorneys of the city. For three terms he has filled the office of city attorney, making a most excellent record in that position. He was also chairman of the vigilantes committee in 1882, when that organization had a big fight on with the gamblers and succeeded in freeing Hot Springs from this element of professional gamblers.

In 1875 Mr. Davies was married to Miss Cornelia Alice Gibbs, a daughter of James E. A. Gibbs, inventor of the Gibbs sewing machines. Mr. and Mrs. Davies became parents of the following named: Fanny, who was teacher of mathematics in the Hot Springs high school for several years; James Gibbs, manager of the Great Northwestern Telegraph & Telephone Company of Canada with office in Winnipeg; Charles E., general manager and superintendent of all the Canadian government telegraph and telephone lines, living at Toronto, Canada; Harpin, who also holds a very prominent position with the Bell Telephone Company and lives in New York. All three of these sons began as messenger boys and worked their way upward through individual merit and ability to the present prominent and responsible positions which they now occupy. The wife and mother passed away in 1884 and later Mr. Davies wedded Margaret Cameron Fulham of New Orleans. There are three children of this marriage: Allen T., an attorney, living at Hot Springs, who is a member of the state legislature; Cornelia, the wife of Ernest Woodcock, a merchant of Hot Springs, and Fulham, who is likewise living in this city. There are now eight grandchildren. Mr. Davies has had an interesting and varied experience as he has removed from place to place in the conduct of his business affairs. He ranks with the representative attorneys of Hot Springs and well deserves mention in this volume by reason of the fact that he belongs to one of the oldest and most prominent of the pioneer families of the state.

A. E. KINDLEY.

For twenty-three years A. E. Kindley figured prominently in financial circles of Benton county as cashier of the Bank of Gravette and his record was at all times a most creditable one, for his entire career was actuated by progressiveness and dominated by a spirit of fair dealing. He held to advanced ideals of citizenship, was guided by an enterprising spirit in business and in every relation of life exemplified the highest standards of manhood and citizenship. He was a native of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Bentonville on the 20th of September, 1860. In the acquirement of an education he attended the grammar and high schools of Benton county, later completing a course at the State University at Fayetteville. On the 21st of March, 1898, he took up his residence in Gravette and soon afterward established the Bank of Gravette, of which he became cashier, serving in that capacity until his demise. With keen insight into business affairs and situations and with a thorough understanding of every phase of banking, he was largely instrumental in promoting the growth and success of the institution and made for himself a creditable place among the substantial and trustworthy bankers of his part of the state.

On the 6th of October, 1885, Mr. Kindley was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Cliburn, a native of Benton county and a daughter of James H. and Jennie (McPhail) Cliburn, the former of whom was born in Tennessee, while the latter was a native of Arkansas. They were married in this state and became the parents of two children, Mrs. Kindley being the only surviving member of the family. Mr. Cliburn was a veteran of the Civil war, serving for four years as a Confederate soldier. He was a member of the Baptist church and his wife was a Presbyterian in religious faith. To Mr. and Mrs. Kindley were born eight children; Lena married Herman D. Chatfield, a leading hardware merchant of Gravette; Wendell is engaged in the stationery business in Los Angeles, California. He married Miss Minnie Holding and they have a daughter, Virginia, aged seven years; Uther was born in Maysville, Arkansas, July 1, 1892, and acquired his education in the schools of Gravette. On starting out in life independently he became connected with the banking business, to which he has since given his attention, and following his father's demise he was made cashier of the Bank of Gravette, in which capacity he is now serving, being regarded as an able financier. In 1913 he married Miss Edna Austin, a daughter of W. H. Austin of Gravette, and they have a daughter, Mary Frances. Mr. Kindley is a member of the Presbyterian church and a democrat in his political views; Ola, the fourth in the order of birth, married Gus English, who is connected with the moving picture industry at Los Angeles, California; May is the wife of J. B. Simons, who is foreman of an oil refinery at Tulsa, Oklahoma, and they have a daughter, Norma Jane; Emma married Roy C. Martin, a bookkeeper residing at Fort Smith, Arkansas; Genevieve is attending high school, and Norma is a pupil in the grades.

Mr. Kindley was a prominent member of the Presbyterian church of Gravette, in the work of which he was actively and helpfully interested, serving for several years as an elder and also becoming a teacher of the men's Bible class. He gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, and his fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, called him to public office. He was elected county assessor of Benton county, filling that office for two terms, and for many years was a member of the Gravette school board. His political record was a most creditable one, characterized by strict integrity and marked devotion to the public good. His demise occurred at Gravette on the 3d of December, 1915, and in his passing his community lost a valued citizen, his associates a faithful friend and his family a devoted husband and father. Many were his sterling qualities and many the good deeds which he quietly performed, so that his memory lives as a blessed benediction to all who had the honor of his closer acquaintance.

DAVID HENRY DUNCAN.

On the list of Pine Bluff's honored dead appears the name of David Henry Duncan who was one of the prominent lumbermen of Arkansas—a man who in his business career displayed marked capability, great thoroughness, notable initiative, splendid executive ability and unsullied integrity and honor. Business, however, was to him only one phase of life—a means to an end. He rejoiced in his success by reason of what it enabled him to do for his family, for his friends and for the community at large. Those qualities which make a man an outstanding figure among his fellowmen were his in large measure. His entire life was a credit and honor to the parents who reared him—an example of marked love and loyalty to his family and of devotion to the high standards of friendship. There are perhaps few men who have inspired warmer regard and friendship among their associates than did he—a fact which was strongly manifest in a beautiful and merited tribute paid to him in a memorial prepared for the American Lumberman and which was signed simply "Friends." This memorial gives so completely the story of his life that it is appended herewith in its entirety.

"David Henry Duncan was born in Nashville, Tennessee, February 22, 1865. His father, David Duncan, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and came to this country when quite a young man, and settled in Cincinnati, afterwards moving to Tennessee. He married Miss Harriett Dobb of Philadelphia, whose brother gained great distinction as an instructor in Gambier College; another brother, the Rev. Alexander Dobb, was rector for many years of the historic and famous Trinity Church in New Orleans. During the great epidemic of yellow fever, when there was such an exodus of people from the stricken city, he endeared himself to all by remaining with his people, while many urged him to leave and escape the plague. He stood by his post, like the true man he was, and he and his wife, after faithful service to the sick and dying, succumbed to the dreaded disease. A tablet in the church speaks for him and his noble work where he ministered as a faithful shepherd.

"A son of Rev. Alexander Dobb was also a clergyman of distinction; he died in his pulpit in Frankfort, Kentucky, while in the act of blessing his people.

"David Henry Duncan spent most of his childhood in Paducah, Kentucky, with his father, who operated a large hub and spoke factory. When only a boy the care and responsibility of the business fell upon his shoulders, on account of the failing health of his father. He manfully met his duty, and as his sister, Mrs. T. W. Moore of Redfield, Arkansas, who alone of the children survives, says of him: 'He was father and brother, always kind and thoughtful. Never an unkind word or selfish act emanated from him.' He was his mother's favorite child and all that a dutiful son should be. It was, as he deemed it, the greatest privilege of his life to be able to educate his sister, no sacrifice being too great for him to make in her behalf; he was the sunshine of the home.

"He came to Arkansas twenty years ago, and engaged in the lumber business, and for the past twelve years was identified with John F. Rutherford of the Bluff City Lumber Company. He climbed by his own efforts to the top of the business world and was what one would call a self-made man.

"In 1892 he was married to Miss Martha Rose Dorsey of Atkins, Arkansas, who with four children survives him and mourns his untimely death.

"He was a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to the Consistory of New Orleans; also a member of Jerusalem Temple of the Mystic Shrine of New Orleans, and a member of the following orders: Knights of Pythias, Knights of Honor and Woodmen of the World.

"In the death of David Henry Duncan, to the loved ones and others left behind, the sense of personal loss is so great that we can only give expression in our grief. He was a true, kind-hearted friend. The tender radiance which shone from his beautiful idea of friendship gave comfort and cheer to all who came under its influence. To his friends he was faithful and true. To the poor and needy he ever stretched forth a helpful hand. As a member of the Bluff City Lumber Company, he was always present and manifested the greatest interest in all its undertakings, faithful in the discharge of his duties, always doing the best for the good of the company. This institution mourns the loss of a true and tried friend.

"The business interests and the community at large have suffered an irreparable loss.

"Thrust in a moment from the full tide of this world's interests, from its joys, its hopes, its aspirations, into the visible presence of death.

"What sundering of strong, warm manhood's friendship; what bitter rending of sweet household ties, whose lips can tell? He was a devoted husband, whose life lay in hers who was his wife; his children, to whom he was a most exceptional father, each day received their father's love and care, and in his heart the eager rejoicing proved to meet all demands.

"He believed in the religion of love and a gospel of good works. He sympathized with human frailties and human sufferings. He never bore malice. He felt that the man who scatters flowers in the pathway of his fellow creatures lets into the dark places of life the sunshine of human sympathy and human helpfulness. He believed 'we rise by raising others.'

"To the bereaved ones we can truly say that a loving husband and father has passed to immortality. We reverently bow our heads in sympathy with those whose heart ties have been snapped by the stroke that was laden with the acutest grief. Deep as is our bereavement, theirs is yet more poignant. They miss, as no other mortals can, the kind and gentle voice of our friend; yet, across the abyss of grief, we gently clasp the hands of those stricken ones; we whisper in their ears those soothing words of comfort, 'He is immortal,' and let us see him not shrouded in night of gloom and sorrow, but smiling upon us from the sweet halo that marks God's farewell to the day where the gorgeous sunsets paint the sky and sea with incomparable glory. Smiling with all the well remembered grace of his true manhood and love and devotion, and saying: 'The sunset speaks but feebly of the glories of another day. All is well.' With new faith and chastened hearts, let us echo, All is well!"

Friends."

There is comparatively little to add to this for those who read between the lines and recognize the sterling qualities of the man. In his business he was associated with John F. Rutherford under the name of the Bluff City Lumber Company and their relation was more like that of brothers than business associates. It has often been said that an individual may best be judged by his treatment of those beneath him in the social scale and by this standard Mr. Duncan may be rated high. He was always kindly and just to his employes and among the choice floral offerings seen at his funeral were many furnished by those who were in his service, while many of the laborers and the employes in the various mills owned and controlled by the Bluff City Lumber Company came to pay their last tribute of respect and honor to him. He was regarded as one of the best lumbermen in the south and as a financier was looked upon as a wonder, while with the most progressive business men of his section he stood in the front rank. Resolutions of respect were passed by all the organizations with which he was identified, while Mrs. Duncan and her family received letters by the score from close friends and those also who knew Mr. Duncan in a business way, especially the lumbermen of the south. Rich in those qualities which endear men to their fellows, his life was characterized by a charming devotion and loyalty to family and friends, and by the most straightforward business dealings. He shed around him much of the sunshine of life and sweet and precious are the memories which he left as a legacy to all who knew him. It was on the 22d of March, 1909, that he was called to his final rest.

F. H. KRAESZIG.

F. H. Kraeszig, a well-known architect of Pine Bluff, enjoying a liberal patronage and holding at all times to the highest standards of his profession, was born in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1885, a son of Joseph and Mary (Klapheke) Kraeszig. His education was acquired in the public schools of his native city, and afterward he there studied architecture and construction, being associated with a number of the leading architects of Louisville, so that through study and experience he gained broad and valuable knowledge, constituting the foundation upon which he has built his subsequent success. In 1910 he came to Pine Bluff, opened an office and has since followed his profession here. His capability and merit have gained for him a large clientele and he has erected many of the substantial and attractive structures of the city. He designed and superintended the building of the Ichnabel residence of Pine Bluff, the Alzheimer high school, the Wabbaseka high school, the Masonic Temple of Pine Bluff and the residence of Dr. O. W. Clark. He has also erected many other attractive residences and business blocks of pleasing design, and these structures stand as monuments to his skill and ability.

Mr. Kraeszig was married to Miss Cecelia Schweri of Louisville, Kentucky, a daughter of John Schweri. They have become parents of six children: Katherine, Marie, Aline, Leona, John and Albert. The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church, and they are interested in the various branches of the church work and in all of those plans and organized projects which have for their object the upbuilding of the city along material, intellectual, social and moral lines.

H. N. PITTMAN.

Arkansas numbers among her native sons H. N. Pittman, attorney at law at Berryville. He was born in Prairie Grove on the 12th of August, 1867, a son of J. M. and Margaret (Peel) Pittman, the former a native of Washington county and the latter of Carroll county, this state, in which latter county their marriage was celebrated. The paternal grandfather, James Pittman, was an early pioneer of Washington county and for many years engaged in farming near Prairie Grove. Extended mention of the Peel family may be found in the sketch of S. W. Peel, appearing elsewhere in this work. J. M. Pittman was but a young man when the Civil war broke out and he immediately entered the Confederate army, serving as captain of the state troops for some time and later becoming a major in the Confederate army. Subsequently he received the commission of lieutenant colonel in the Sixteenth Arkansas Regiment and he was in active service until 1863, when he was captured at Port Hudson. He was then confined in a military prison until the close of the war. Returning to Arkansas, he resumed the practice of law, having been prepared for a legal career at the time the Civil war came on. He was judge of the district court from 1874 to 1878; from 1882 to 1890; and he was again elected in 1898. He served but two years of that term, however, for his demise occurred in August, 1900. To the union of Judge and Mrs. Pittman four children were born, three of whom are living: H. N., whose name initiates this review; Mrs. Jennie Wilkinson of Fayetteville, the wife of H. D. Wilkinson, in the mail service there, and R. T., chief chemist for the Schloss Iron and Steel Works in Birmingham, Alabama. Mrs. Pittman was a consistent member of the Episcopal church and the family was reared in that faith. The Judge was a staunch supporter of the democratic party and he represented Washington county in the state legislature in 1872. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

H. N. Pittman received his early education in the schools of Fayetteville and in due time became a student in the University of Arkansas. He received his legal training in the University of Missouri, at Columbia, and in 1892 he was admitted to the bar. He then located at Berryville, where he established offices for the practice of his profession and has practiced here since. He has since been admitted to practice in all courts and handles much extensive litigation. He was county judge of Carroll county from 1900 to 1904, and was reelected to that office in 1912, serving until 1916. He is now devoting his entire time and attention to his law practice and his abstract business.

In 1897 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Pittman to Miss Alice McCleary, a native of Carroll county and a daughter of James McCleary, who is engaged in the hotel business in Berryville. Mrs. Pittman has many friends in this community, who have known her from girlhood, and she takes a prominent part in the club and social circles of Berryville. Mr. Pittman has always given his allegiance to the democratic party and the principles for which it stands and he takes a prominent part in its activities. He is an alert and enterprising citizen and his aid may be counted upon in furthering any movement he deems essential to the development and improvement of the general welfare.

GILBERT A. BUCHANAN, M. D.

A prominent physician and surgeon of Prescott is Dr. Gilbert A. Buchanan, member of the firm of Drs. Buchanan, Buchanan & Hirst, conducting the Park Sanitarium here. He was born in Nevada county, this state, on the 19th of February, 1884, a son of Chesley M. and Clara (Donnell) Buchanan, further mention of whom is made in the sketch of Dr. A. S. Buchanan, appearing elsewhere in this work.

Gilbert A. Buchanan received his early education in the public schools of Prescott and was graduated from the high school there with the class of 1905. In the fall of 1906 he entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas and graduated from that institution with the class of 1911, receiving his M. D. degree. While pursuing his medical education he served an internship in the City Hospital at Little Rock and was assistant city physician during the years 1908 to 1911. He remained in the hospital for two or three months following his graduation. He changed his plans, however, at the last moment and in July became a partner of his brother, Dr. A. S. Buchanan, in the practice of his profession at Prescott. In 1919 Dr. Otis Grady Hirst was taken into the firm, which is now known as Buchanan, Buchanan & Hirst, and they are active in the conduct of the Park Sanitarium, one of the best-known institutions of its kind in the state.

In 1914 was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Buchanan to Miss Florine Warrick of Van Buren, this state, and to their union two children have been born: Paul Otis and Clara Frances. The family is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Dr. Buchanan is a member of the board of stewards.

Along strictly professional lines Dr. Buchanan holds membership in the American Medical Association, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the Nevada County Medical Society. During his college days he became affiliated with the Chi Zeta Chi national Greek letter fraternity and he is also identified with the Ancient Free & Accepted Masons, belonging to Prescott Lodge, No. 80; Prescott Chapter, No. 38, Royal Arch Masons, and Ascalon Commandery, Knights Templars. He is active in Nevada Lodge, No. 203, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World. Dr. Buchanan is readily conceded to be one of the representative members of the medical profession in Arkansas and he is meeting with gratifying success.

WINFRED L. WOZENCRAFT.

Winfred L. Wozencraft has worked his way steadily upward to a position of prominence in business circles, being now secretary and manager of the Hamburg Lumber Company at Hamburg, one of the large concerns of its kind in the state. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth occurring at Holly Springs, Dallas county, on the 15th of December, 1888, a son of R. L. and Martha Jane (Shankles) Wozencraft. On the paternal side he is descended from Welsh ancestry. R. L. Wozencraft was born in Dallas county, to which county his parents had come in 1859. They originally made their home in Georgia. Upon attaining manhood R. L. Wozencraft entered the ministry and for many years he was pastor of the Methodist church in the Little Rock conference at various places. His demise occurred in 1897, at the age of thirty-six years. Three brothers of the Rev. R. L. Wozencraft—M. L., J. G. and W. T.—fought in the Civil war and J. G. gave his life in the cause of the Confederacy. In 1886, in Dallas county, occurred the marriage of R. L. Wozencraft to Miss Martha Jane Shankles, a native of that county, and to their union four children were born, two boys and two girls, all of whom are living. Winfred, whose name introduces this review, was the oldest child. Mrs. Wozencraft survives her husband and is making her home in Holly Springs.

In the acquirement of an education Winfred Wozencraft attended the rural schools of Dallas county and later entered the Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia. He was graduated from that institution in 1912, with the B. S. degree and was also honored with a degree in music, having been a student in the vocal department. During the last three years of his college education he paid his own tuition, teaching in the rural schools of Dallas county in the summer vacations and attending school in the winter. For three years he was identified with the A. B. Banks Company of Fordyce, in the insurance department. Following this he returned to college for one year. After his graduation in 1912, he accepted the position of invoice clerk for the Crossett Lumber Company of Crossett, this state, and worked his way up to assistant bookkeeper. In the fall of 1918 he resigned his position to enter the service of the United States government. In that same year he was sent, as resident auditor of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to Pascagoula, Jackson county, Mississippi, and remained there during the war. In January, 1919, he returned to Arkansas and became associated with the Hamburg Lumber Company, with which concern he has since been identified. In March, 1919, he was made secretary and manager of the company and is discharging the duties of those offices to the best of his ability and to the complete satisfaction of the higher officials of the concern. The Hamburg Lumber Company was organized in June, 1917. It has an enormous business and ships its products all over that part of the country east of the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Wozencraft is a stockholder in the Tippy Lumber Company of Fountain Hill, this state; in the Employees Investment Company at Crossett; the East Arkansas Lumber Company of Little Rock; the Builders Material Corporation at Little Rock, and the Home Life Accident Company of Fordyce. He has been a close student along the line of his business, has made himself familiar with the condition of the country and its business prospects and his sound judgment of men and affairs constitutes one of the chief forces of his success.

It was on the 19th of April, 1916, that Mr. Wozencraft was united in marriage to Miss Dorothy Stanley, a daughter of J. R. Stanley of Alexandria, Louisiana. To their union two children have been born: one who died in infancy, and Stanley Hewett, aged ten months. Mrs. Wozencraft is one of the well-known young matrons of Hamburg and takes an active and prominent part in the club and social life here.

The religious faith of Mr. and Mrs. Wozencraft is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for some time Mr. Wozencraft has been a member of the board of stewards and assistant Sunday school superintendent. Fraternally he is identified with Crossett Lodge, No. 576, A. F. & A. M. of Crossett; Olive Chapter, No. 12, Royal Arch Masons of Hamburg, and Crossett Council, Royal & Select Masters. He is past worshipful master of Crossett Lodge, No. 576, and for two years was high priest of Crossett Chapter, No. 123, Royal Arch Masons. He is at present high priest of Olive Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Hamburg. He is likewise affiliated with Crossett Lodge, No. 303, Order of the Eastern Star, and was worthy patron of that order at Crossett for two years. Although the greater part of Mr. Wozencraft's time has been devoted to his business affairs, still his aid can always be counted upon to further any movement for the material and moral progress of the city and for its upbuilding and the exploitation of its resources and opportunities. The progressive steps in his life are easily discernible and each forward move has brought him a broader outlook and wider opportunities. He has never left anything to chance, but has labored to acquaint himself with every phase of the business with which he has been connected and thus has gradually advanced to the prominent position which he occupies as a representative of lumber interests in Arkansas.

HUTTON HEWITT HAYS.

One of the most prominent attorneys in Arkansas City is Hutton Hewitt Hays, who has practiced here since 1907. A native son of Arkansas, he was born at Marianna, on the 28th of July, 1879, a son of Robert M. and Ann (Brandon) Hays, of Scotch-Irish descent. The father, who is now living retired in Marianna at the age of eighty years, is one of the state's representative citizens. A native of South Carolina, he left that state when nine years of age, coming to Arkansas with his parents. The journey was made in an emigrant wagon train, and they landed in Helena, Arkansas, in 1850. In later life Mr. Hays removed to Marianna and was for many years actively engaged in the conduct of a brokerage business, being a commission broker. He became quite a well-known figure in political circles and represented Lee county in the state legislature during the session of 1917. At LaGrange, Arkansas, in 1875, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hays to Miss Ann Brandon, who was born near Helena, this state, her parents having come from Alabama at an early day and being among the pioneer settlers of Phillips county. Her brother, William Brandon, served as a private in the Confederate army throughout the Civil war. Mrs. Hays died at Marianna in 1901, in her fiftieth year. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hays two children were born, one boy and one girl. Lillian died in 1900, at the age of twenty-three years; Hutton Hewitt Hays, whose name initiates this review, was the youngest child.

In the acquirement of an education Hutton Hewitt Hays attended the public schools of Marianna and after graduating from the high school there he began the study of law at the Southern Normal University at Huntington, Tennessee. In 1901 he was admitted to the bar and returning to Marianna, entered the offices of H. F. Roleson and W. R. Compton, well-known attorneys, with whom he remained until 1903. The following year he practiced in Clay county and in 1904 went as claim agent of the Missouri Pacific railroad, his headquarters being at Little Rock. He was active in that connection until July, 1907, when he came to Arkansas City, opened offices for the practice of law on his own account and has since resided here. Although he has a large general practice, he has specialized to a great extent in criminal law and handles nearly ninety-five per cent of that practice in the county. He has defended thirty-nine first degree murder cases to date, without a single conviction for that crime.

It was on the 21st of June, 1903, that Mr. Hays was united in marriage to Miss Eula Silverburg, a daughter of Edward Silverburg, a well-known resident of Peach Orchard, this state. To their union two children have been born: Helen, eighteen years of age, who is at home, and Perdita, thirteen years of age, attending the public schools of Arkansas City.

The religious faith of the family tends toward that of the Methodist church. Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Hays has been a staunch supporter of the democratic party. He is one of Arkansas City's most public-spirited citizens and is alive to the duties and responsibilities as well as the privileges of citizenship. To that end he is never too busy to aid in the furtherance of any movement he deems essential to the development and improvement of the general welfare. During the World war Mr. Hays was government appeal agent for the local draft board and as one of the Four-Minute men, made many speeches throughout the county in behalf of Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives.

JUDGE JAMES V. BOURLAND.

Judge James V. Bourland, presiding over the chancery court at Fort Smith, was born near Ozark, in Franklin county, Arkansas, July 30, 1855, and is a representative of an old Virginia family. His grandfather, Dubart Lee Bourland, was born in Virginia, whence he removed to Tennessee and eventually came to Arkansas, where he served as the first county treasurer of Franklin county and carried the public moneys in his saddlebags—a fact which plainly indicates the pioneer condition of the country. He married Malinda Robinson, of a prominent Virginia family, she being related to General Robert E. Lee. Their son, Ebenezer Bourland, was born in Tennessee in 1834 and his life record covered the intervening years to 1911. He was a merchant and farmer but at the time of the Civil war put aside business and personal considerations and joined the Confederate army. His last days were spent in Ozark, where he was engaged in merchandising at the time of his death. In connection with his mercantile and agricultural pursuits he also worked as a blacksmith. He was a well-read man for his day and kept thoroughly informed concerning vital public questions and issues. His political support was given to the democratic party and he belonged to the Masonic fraternity, while both he and his wife held membership in the Presbyterian church. In early manhood he had wedded Rebecca Bruton, who was born in Pope county, Arkansas, and was a daughter of John Bruton, one of the early ministers of the Baptist church in this state, settling in Pope county when it was a frontier district. The death of Mrs. Bourland occurred in 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Ebenezer Bourland became parents of five children, three of whom are living: James V. of this review; Mrs. Belle Erwin, living at Long Beach, California; and Dr. F. M. Bourland of Houston, Texas.

James V. Bourland pursued his education in the schools of Ozark and in Caneyhill College, after which he pursued his law course in Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, being graduated from the law department there in 1876. The same year he was admitted to practice by the supreme court and opened an office in Ozark, where he remained until 1903. Under appointment he served as chancellor of the tenth district of Arkansas for four years and was then elected for a six years' term, at the close of which period he was reelected for another six years. He took up the duties of judge of the chancery court in that term but resigned in the fall of 1913 and was appointed United States district attorney through the influence of Governor Clarke and Senator Jeff Davis. He filled the position for four years, after which he practiced his profession in Fort Smith for about a year and then again became a candidate for the office of chancellor, being elected over his opponent by a majority of one thousand votes. He is still filling this position and doubtless can continue in the office as long as he desires, for he is making a most competent, successful and popular chancery judge. As chancellor he is strict in the enforcement of divorce statutes and his position on this question is known throughout the state. He has been continuously in the office of chancery judge since 1903, save for the period when he acted as district attorney and the one year of his law practice at Fort Smith.

On the 29th of April, 1891, Judge Bourland was married to Miss Bonnie Jean Carter, who was born in Ozark, Arkansas, and is a daughter of Dr. W. A. Carter, an early physician of Ozark, who practiced there for a number of years. He was related to the Lee family of Virginia and to the Taylor family of Tennessee. Judge and Mrs. Bourland are parents of four children: Annie Marr, who was educated in the high school at Fort Smith; Mary Rebecca, who has also completed her education in the high school of Fort Smith; Wallace Carter, who is studying law under the direction of his father; and James V., who is a traveling salesman, representing an Atlanta (Ga.) house. The elder son was graduated from the high school of Fort Smith and became chief clerk to his father in the office of the United States attorney. In November, 1916, he resigned his clerkship and volunteered his services to his country. He served in the One Hundred and Forty-second Field Artillery during the World war, being stationed at Camp Beauregard and at Camp Logan H. Roots, receiving his discharge on the 29th of November, 1918.

Judge Bourland has always been a democrat in politics but not an aspirant for office outside of the strict path of his profession. He is a member of the Society of Applied Psychology of New York and is interested in many broad scientific questions. His reading is comprehensive, he delves to the root of all matters and by reason of his splendid mental development association with him means expansion and elevation. Judge and Mrs. Bourland and their two daughters are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, of Fort Smith.

Judge Bourland for some time has been preparing manuscript for a treatise soon to go to press, The Science of the Christian Religion. His conception is that fundamentally, pure truth nowhere incongruous, therefore to organize scientific knowledge, so that the several separate sciences may fit their cogs properly into the cogs of other wheels; and on in succession, until the entire category be fitted out as a "set up" mechanism; that thus common ground of agreement may assuredly be found; since, with the several parts assembled and adjusted, all one has to do in proof of the efficiency of the mechanism as an entirety, is to observe directions for engaging the Power, and then to turn it on.

PROFESSOR J. J. TIBBITS.

The standard of public education in Arkansas is being constantly raised and men of marked ability are being called to serve as teachers and as directors of the educational work of the state. Well known in this connection is Professor J. J. Tibbits, now county superintendent of schools of Ouachita county and a resident of Camden. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Calhoun county, August 26, 1874, his parents being J. T. and Martha (Moore) Tibbits. The father was born near Atlanta, Georgia, while the mother is a native of Calhoun county, Arkansas. The grandfather, Moses Moore, came to this state from Alabama some time in the early '40s, settling in Calhoun county, while Job W. Tibbits, the grandfather in the paternal line, came from Georgia and established his home in Calhoun county in the early '50s. He was killed by one of the marauding bands that infested the neighborhood during the Civil war. J. T. Tibbits served with the Confederate army during the period of hostilities between the north and the south under General Joseph E. Johnston, remaining at the front throughout the war period. He is now living retired in Fordyce. His wife departed this life in May, 1900.

Professor J. J. Tibbits obtained his early education in the public schools of Fordyce and afterward attended the Clary Training School at that place. Later he became a student in Highland Park College at Des Moines, Iowa, and also attended four summer sessions at the Peabody Normal School in Nashville, Tennessee. Throughout his life he has remained a student of men and events and has also read most widely along the line which brings well rounded mental development. He became a teacher prior to his eighteenth year, taking up the work of the profession in the spring of 1892. For five years he filled the position of principal of the Fordyce schools and was also principal of the Millville schools for a similar period. He then returned to Fordyce, where he was again principal of school for one year. He was then called to take the supervision of the Bearden schools and remained principal at that place for eight years, after which he was a teacher at Eagle Mills, Chidester, Buena Vista and other points. His ability constantly increased as the result of his broadening experience and wide study and he became recognized as one of the able educators in connection with the public school system of Arkansas. His exposition of any question before the students is always clear and he has the faculty of largely winning their cooperation in connection with his purposes as a teacher. Professor Tibbits was first called to public office when in 1916 he was elected county treasurer of Ouachita county and so capably did he serve in that position that he was reelected in 1918, remaining the incumbent in the office for four years. He also held the office of county examiner from 1910 until 1914 and in 1920 he was elected superintendent of schools of Ouachita county, taking the office on the 1st of January, 1921. He belongs to the State Educational Association, also to the Ouachita County Educational Association and is constantly alert to every opportunity that will promote his efficiency and advance his powers in the educational field.

On the 13th of August, 1902, Professor Tibbits was married to Miss Grace Weaver of Millville, and they have become parents of four children: Frances Louisa, now a student in the Arkansas State University; Lloyd Weaver, attending the Camden high school, in which he is a senior; Jefferson Dobb and Marian Elizabeth, both attending school. Professor Tibbits and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he is serving on its board of stewards. He takes a most active and helpful part in all the church work and is now district lay leader and also superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is connected with Abana Lodge, No. 271, A. F. & A. M., of Bearden, Arkansas, and is a faithful follower of the teachings and high purposes of the craft. He is ever interested in all of those projects which are looking to the benefit and upbuilding of community and commonwealth and is a loyal supporter of every project that promises advancement along intellectual and moral lines.

WINFIELD S. HOLT.

Winfield S. Holt, president of the Arkansas Abstract & Loan Company and one of the most progressive and enterprising business men of Little Rock, has long been an important factor in the business circles of the city. He came to this state from New England, his birth having occurred in Tolland county, Connecticut, June 26, 1864. He is a grandson of the Hon. Orrin Holt, who represented Connecticut in congress and who belonged to one of the distinguished old families of that section of the country. Norman and Catharine (Griggs) Holt, parents of Winfield S. Holt, removed from the Atlantic seaboard to Missouri in 1868 and took up their abode on a farm in Knox county. There the son, then but four years of age, was reared in the usual manner of the farm bred boy. He pursued his early education in the public schools of that county and started out in the business world in 1881, when a youth of seventeen years, by entering the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company at Tamaroa, Illinois, where he remained for two years. At the end of that time he came to Little Rock and initiated his business career in this city by accepting a clerical position in the First National Bank, of which the late Logan H. Roots was then president. A little later Mr. Holt became identified with mercantile interests as treasurer of the S. B. Kirby Company and in June, 1887, he accepted the position of Little Rock representative for the Union Manufacturing Company of Toledo, Ohio, engaged in the manufacture of sewing machines. Mr. Holt conducted the business for this corporation at the corner of Main and Sixth streets and not only did he have the supervision of the company's interests in Arkansas, but also in Texas, Oklahoma and Indian Territory, this being prior to the coalition of the last two. Thus step by step Mr. Holt advanced in business circles to a place of prominence and in 1897 he received from President McKinley appointment to the position of postmaster.

The official service of Mr. Holt was characterized by the utmost fidelity to principle and crowned with the confidence and high respect of all who knew aught of his service. He was twice reappointed to the position under President Roosevelt and for twelve years and eight months continued as postmaster of the city, remaining in the office until his successor qualified on the 1st of March, 1910. He thoroughly systematized the work of the office, rendered to the public the best possible service and was instrumental in promoting the movement leading to the erection of a large addition to the post office building. Following his retirement from office Mr. Holt became manager of the farm and loan department of the Arkansas Guaranty Title & Trust Company of Little Rock and at the present time he is at the head of the Arkansas Abstract & Loan Company, controlling important and extensive interests of that character.

On the 22d of December, 1886, Mr. Holt was united in marriage at Albion, Illinois, to Miss Maud S. Spiller, a native of Carbondale, Illinois, and a daughter of George Spiller, now deceased. Mrs. Holt possesses marked artistic talent of high order and one of her canvases has been hung in the Paris salon. The social position of Mr. and Mrs. Holt is a most enviable one and their circle of friends is almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintance. Mr. Holt has long figured as one of the leaders of the republican party in this state and formerly served as secretary of the republican state central committee. He was also at one time chairman of the county central committee and secretary of the state league of republican clubs. He is likewise widely known in fraternal and social organizations and stands at all times for those things which make for public progress, for civic betterment and for higher standards and ideals of life.

JOHN FLETCHER.

As one peruses the history of Arkansas the name of Fletcher is frequently seen, for practically all of the representatives of the name in the state have come from the same pioneer ancestor who settled in this section of the country before Arkansas was even organized as a territory. John Fletcher, whose name introduces this review, was born in Pulaski county, March 10, 1849, and is a son of Thomas and Lucinda (Beavers) Fletcher. His grandfather, Henry L. Fletcher, belonged to one of the old families of Tennessee and married Miss Mary Lindsey, a native of Mississippi, the wedding being celebrated in 1814, after which they settled in Arkansas, then a part of the Louisiana purchase. This was in 1815 and this worthy couple are the progenitors of the various Fletcher families known in Arkansas today—men and women whose records have reflected credit and honor upon the name and also upon the history of the state in which they have made their home. Hon. Thomas Fletcher, the eldest son of the pioneer, Henry L. Fletcher, and the father of John Fletcher, was a dominant factor in the growth of Little Rock and of the state. He became a distinguished lawyer and held many offices of honor and trust which he ably filled. He twice served as sheriff of Pulaski county, occupying that position from 1858 until 1862 and again from 1866 until 1868. In 1862 he was elected to the state legislature and in 1885 he was appointed United States marshal for the eastern district of Arkansas, occupying that position until his death in 1900.

John Fletcher, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the common schools and in St. John's College at Little Rock and afterward took up the study of law, pursuing his course in the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, from which historic old institution he was graduated in 1871, with the Bachelor of Laws degree. He then returned to Little Rock, where he took up the practice of his profession in the office of his father, who was a member of the law firm of Farr & Fletcher. Soon afterward he became associated in practice with William C. Ratcliffe, under the firm style of Ratcliffe & Fletcher and this connection was maintained during the remainder of his life, the firm building up one of the largest and most important law practices in the state. Mr. Fletcher was for many years ranked with the most prominent members of the Little Rock bar. He belonged to all of the bar associations and for an extended period served on the general council of the American Bar Association. He served as special judge of the circuit, chancery and supreme courts of the state and on one occasion was candidate for the position of justice of the supreme court on the democratic ticket, having been throughout his life an earnest and active supporter of democratic principles.

In March, 1875, Mr. Fletcher was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Moose, a daughter of James M. and Emily (Stockton) Moose. Mrs. Fletcher was born in Morrilton, Conway county, Arkansas, and is a representative of old pioneer families in both the paternal and maternal lines. Her mother, Sophia Emily Stockton, was descended from Richard Stockton, who signed the Declaration of Independence as one of the delegates from New Jersey. Mary Emily Moose was educated in the public schools and also in the Martha Washington College. By her marriage she became the mother of a son, Thomas, who is operating a plantation in Pulaski county.

Mr. Fletcher was a lifelong member of the Christian church and served as one of its elders from the time he attained manhood until he was called to his final rest in 1911. His life was greatly beneficial to the community in which he lived by reason of his earnest support of all measures for the general good. He was one of the faculty of the law department of the University of Arkansas from its foundation until his death, and was dean of the law department and lecturer on the laws of real property.

JOHN FLETCHER

Mrs. Fletcher's place in the social circles of Arkansas is an enviable one. She was formerly president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and served as vice president of the National Association of Musical Clubs. She has membership in the Aesthetic Club, of which she has been treasurer, was formerly president of the Edelweiss Club and also president of the Musical Coterie. For eight years she was president of the State Missionary Society of the Christian church and she is the recording secretary of the Pulaski County Tuberculosis Association. She is an accomplished musician and was volunteer organist of the Winfield Memorial church. She is also a member and officer of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. She ranks with the social favorites of the city and has friends in every city and section of the state.

JACOB R. RIGHTSSELL.

Abraham Lincoln said, "There is something better than making a living—making a life," and a modern philosopher has given the estimate of man's work in the world in the following: "Not the good that comes to us, but the good that comes to the world through us is the measure of our success." Judged by this standard Professor Jacob R. Rightsell was a most successful man. Little Rock enjoyed the benefit of his services as superintendent of her public school system for a quarter of a century and he was ranked with the most eminent educators of the southwest. He did not regard education merely as the imparting of knowledge to others, but rather as a means for the development of individual power and ability in preparation for life's practical and responsible duties. His entire work, therefore, was directed with that end in view and there are many who acknowledge their indebtedness to him for the stimulus which he gave them while they were students under his care.

Professor Rightsell was a native son of Illinois, his birth having occurred on a farm near Mattoon, Coles county, December 15, 1846. His youthful experiences were those of the farm bred boy and he learned from nature many a valuable lesson as he performed his part in cultivating the fields and caring for the crops. He early manifested the desire for educational advancement and utilized every opportunity that would enable him to promote his knowledge. When quite young he took up the profession of teaching in the common schools and was but twenty-three years old when he came to Arkansas. In 1869 he established his home in Little Rock and was continuously a resident of the capital city until his death, save for the period of six years from 1874 until 1880 when he held a position in the congressional library in the city of Washington. Throughout the time of his connection with Little Rock he was identified with the public school system and made most valuable contribution to its improvement and development. In January, 1870, he was elected principal of the Peabody school and in December, 1872, he was advanced to the position of superintendent of the public schools of the city, in which capacity he continued to serve until he passed on to find solution in a broader sphere of existence for the mysteries which lay beyond mortal ken. No better characterization of his life and work can be given than by quoting from the Arkansas Democrat, which at the time of his demise wrote of him as follows: "Probably there are more of the successful men of the state who were educated under his superintendency than under that of any other teacher in the state, and for that reason his death will be felt as a very general personal loss. He was prominent in educational work, and besides contributing much to the growth and development of the Little Rock school system, which was his pride, he was interested in state and national affairs. He represented Arkansas in the National Educational Association several years as vice president and also as state manager. He was also one of the originators of the Arkansas State Teachers' Association, being first its secretary and later its president. He was a trustee of the Arkansas School for the Blind for more than a decade, under the former management of the school, and at one time was president of the board. During his incumbency of this office the present buildings were erected. He was also a member of the American Geographical Society." The editorial which appeared in the Arkansas Democrat of the same date, October 11, 1905, reads with but slight change in phraseology, as follows: "Professor Jacob R. Rightsell, for thirty years superintendent of public schools in this city, who had indeed given his life to the advancement of the school interests of Little Rock and of the state, died at his residence in this city at six o'clock yesterday afternoon, after an illness extending over a period of several months. His death was not unexpected to a host of friends who had felt an earnest solicitude concerning his physical condition during the past few months. It was remarkable, indeed, that this battle for life and health should have lasted so long under the adverse conditions that attended his last illness. It was the strong will power that had characterized his life that sustained him in his last efforts. Though his physical system was in a wretched state, his mind retained strength and his eye was as bright a few hours before his death as in the days of his prime. He went to his last reward fearlessly and with the consciousness of having rounded out a long and useful career. There was much for him to live for and those who loved him most were anxious to stay the hand of death. He wanted to live for them, but an all-wise Providence had decreed otherwise. He had fought a good fight and had kept the faith. If the good men in this life shall plead for recognition in the life to come, then Professor J. R. Rightsell will have ample representation at the seat of judgment. Much of his life had been devoted to efforts in behalf of others. In his death the state loses one of its ablest and most prominent educators; indeed, he stood in the foremost ranks of advanced thinkers in the entire southwest. Little Rock has lost a true friend and the school patrons and thousands of young people will feel that they have sustained a personal loss. There will be sorrow in many a home when it is known that this good man is no more."

In young manhood Professor Rightsell was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary E. Wilshire, a daughter of the late William W. Wilshire. She, too, was born in Illinois and died November 7, 1903. They are survived by two sons: Richard W. and William W., both of whom have taken prominent places in the business circles of Little Rock. The latter is now a director of the State National Bank, in charge of its real estate department, while the elder son, Richard W., is mentioned at length on another page of this work. Both Professor Rightsell and his wife were members of the Episcopal church, loyal to its teachings and generous in its support. It was his Christian belief that caused Mr. Rightsell to put forth the greatest possible efforts in service for his fellow-men. He died on the 10th of September, 1905, in the fifty-ninth year of his age, and many there were who bore testimony to the value of his life and work. A contemporary writer said of him, "There is no need for conjecture or uncertainty in determining as to the value and success of the life work of the late Professor Jacob R. Rightsell, who was one of the foremost factors and most practical philanthropists of Arkansas and he realized in the most significant sense that the true success is not that gained through personal preeminence or personal aggrandizement, but rather that which lies in the eternal verities of human sympathy and helpfulness. His was not the great worldly success, in the accepted application of the term, but he left a greater heritage of noble thoughts and noble deeds. He was a man of broad intellectuality and viewed life and its responsibilities in their right proportions. He was not given to half-views and rash inferences. The leap from the particular to the general is ever tempting to the thoughtless but not to this man of strength, judgment and lofty motives." A most interesting estimate of the character and worth of Professor Rightsell was given by one of his oldest and most intimate friends, Major Robert H. Parham, county school examiner, who said, "Professor Rightsell was a capable, judicious and efficient superintendent. His intercourse with the teachers was always characterized by a great deal of kindness and consideration. He displayed great wisdom in dealing with all questions arising between patrons and teachers. One of his chief policies in dealing with the teachers was to permit them the full use of the individual qualities without hampering them with formal rules. No superintendent was ever more loved by a whole corps of teachers than was Professor Rightsell. During his long administration his whole heart was devoted to the welfare of the school system of the city, and the schools had grown from a few poor buildings to a magnificent series of buildings, some among the best in the country. The corps of teachers had grown from twenty-five to eighty-one, and the enrollment had more than doubled. He was progressive in his methods and ever ready to adopt anything that would tend to increase the efficiency of the schools." The city of Little Rock has perpetuated his memory by naming one of its modern school buildings after him.

COY M. NIXON.

Coy M. Nixon, a well known and successful attorney of Pine Bluff, was born in Conway, Arkansas, in 1887, and is a son of W. H. and Mary C. (Townsend) Nixon. The father was a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war and in days of peace he devoted his attention to farming.

Coy M. Nixon is indebted to the public schools of Jacksonville, this state, for the early educational opportunities which he enjoyed and which qualified him for his collegiate work, which he pursued in the University of Arkansas. When at the end of four years he had completed the more specifically literary course he entered the law department of that institution, from which he received the degree of LL. B. He holds membership in Sigma Phi Epsilon, a college fraternity of the university. He located for practice at Pine Bluff in 1916 and through the intervening period has followed his profession here. Advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, yet he has made steady and gratifying progress and has been connected with much important litigation of a representative character. The only interruption to his professional service came during the period of the World war, when he entered the first Officers' Training School at Fort Logan H. Roots.

Mr. Nixon married Miss Willie Belle Mason of Little Rock, a daughter of L. W. and Sarah (McKinnis) Mason. They have a wide circle of friends in Pine Bluff, occupying an enviable social position, and the hospitality of their own home is greatly enjoyed by those who know them. Mrs. Nixon is a member of the Christian church, while Mr. Nixon belongs to the Presbyterian church and is also identified with the Masonic fraternity—associations which indicate much concerning the nature of his interests and the rules which govern his conduct, making him a man whom to know is to esteem and honor.

T. J. COWAN.

T. J. Cowan of Clinton, now county superintendent of schools in Van Buren county, has reached a creditable and enviable position in educational circles in his native state. He holds to high standards in his chosen profession and has inspired teachers and pupils under him with much of his own zeal in the work of public education. Mr. Cowan came to Van Buren county from Cleburne county, where his birth occurred January 31, 1888, his parents being William F. and Mary Etta (Vaughn) Cowan. The father was also born in Cleburne county, while the mother's birth occurred either in White or Cleburne county. William F. Cowan was a minister of the Presbyterian church and preached at Heber Springs, Arkansas, and also in Van Buren county for a number of years, devoting his life to that holy calling. He departed this life at the age of forty-seven years. His wife died when but twenty-eight years of age. They were the parents of five children: Lulu, the wife of W. Bradford, residing at Morrilton, Arkansas; Lela, the wife of Hebert Mix, a farmer of New Mexico; Mrs. Thonia Moore and Cicero, both deceased, and T. J., of this review.

T. J. Cowan was reared in a home of culture and Christian refinement, where the verities of life are rated at their true value. He was educated in Choctaw, Arkansas, attending the public schools and passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school. He later spent a year in study in the State Normal School at Ada, Oklahoma, and next pursued a course in bookkeeping and banking in Draughon's Business College at Dallas, Texas. His youthful days were largely passed on the home farm, with the usual experiences of the farm bred boy, until he entered the office of county superintendent on the 1st of January, 1921. He is proving most competent in the educational field, having put forth earnest and effective efforts in systematizing the work of the schools and in introducing higher standards for the pupil and also in the methods of instruction.

On the 1st of September, 1914, Mr. Cowan was married to Miss Minnie S. Rogers, whose family history is given in connection with the sketch of Judge O. E. Rogers on another page of this work. They have become parents of two children: Thomas Wynne and Zane Steele.

Professor Cowan votes with the democratic party, which he has supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He is a Royal Arch Mason, holding membership in the lodge of Clinton and the Royal Arch Chapter of Marshall. He and his family are members of the Christian church and are most highly esteemed in the locality where they reside, for their influence is ever given on the side of those forces and projects which make for intellectual and moral progress.

CHARLES W. WALKER.

In the legal profession, which embraces many of the most brilliant minds of the nation, it is difficult to win a name and a place of prominence. Many aspire, but few attain. In commercial life one may start out upon a more elevated plane than others; he may enter into a business already established and carry it still further forward. But this is not true in the case of the lawyer. He must commence at the initial point, must plead and win his first case and work his way upward by ability, gaining his reputation and success by merit. People do not place their legal business in unskilled hands; it is the man of power before judge and jury who commands public patronage. Of this class Charles W. Walker is an illustrious type. He began as many others do in the practice of law and his present prominence has come to him as the reward of earnest endeavor, fidelity to trust and recognized ability. He is now living retired in Fayetteville, the oldest native born citizen in the community, and is hale and hearty in his eighty-sixth year. For sixty years he was numbered among the prominent members of the legal profession, practicing for a short time in Carrollton, but returned to his home town prior to the Civil war, where he was active along professional lines until 1919, when he retired from active life.

Mr. Walker was born in Fayetteville on the 24th of December, 1835, a son of David and Jane Lewis (Washington) Walker. His paternal grandfather, Jacob Wythe Walker, was for many years prominent in the legal circles of Kentucky. He was born in Virginia, but removed to Kentucky at an early day and there entered the legal profession. Later in life, however, he came to Arkansas and locating in Fayetteville retired from professional life. He was well known in the financial circles of the community, being director of the Real Estate Bank of Fayetteville, and a deep feeling of bereavement swept the community when he departed this life in 1838. Whiting Washington, the maternal grandfather, was likewise a native of Virginia, who went to Kentucky at an early day. He was a wealthy slave-owner and his demise occurred on his estate in Kentucky. David Walker, the father of Charles W. Walker, was born in Todd county, Kentucky, in 1806, and died on the 30th of September, 1879. In early life he determined to enter the legal profession and as a result began study in a law office and some time later was admitted to the bar. In 1831 Mr. and Mrs. Walker came to Fayetteville and the father immediately opened offices there. In 1836 he was a member of the constitutional convention and in 1848 he was appointed supreme judge, serving on the bench from that year until 1878. Mr. Walker was one of the oldest members of the profession in Fayetteville and held distinct precedence as an eminent lawyer. His wife, who was before her marriage Jane Lewis Washington, was born in Logan county, Kentucky, in 1814, and died on the 7th of March, 1847. The following children were born to their union: Wythe, a soldier in the Civil war, who met his death at the battle of Jenkins Ferry; Charles W., whose name initiates this review; Edward, who died in 1919; Nannie, who married Charles R. Buckner, and both of them are deceased; David, a farmer of Coal Hill, this state, and two other children who died in infancy. Mr. Walker was a staunch supporter of the whig party until 1852, when he gave his allegiance to the democratic party, in the interests of which he took an active part. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church, while his wife was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

Charles W. Walker received his early education in the schools of Fayetteville and in due time entered Princeton University, from which institution he was graduated in 1858. Returning home from school he read law in his father's office for some time and then went to Lebanon, Tennessee, where he took a law course. He was admitted to the bar in 1859 and practiced here until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he entered the army, and after the close of the war immediately opened up offices here with Thomas M. Gunther, and continued in active and successful practice until his retirement in 1919. The zeal with which he devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases, brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct. His arguments elicited warm commendation not only from his associates at the bar, but also from the bench. A very able writer, his briefs always showed wide research, careful thought and the best and strongest reasons which could be urged for his contention, presented in cogent and logical form and illustrated by a style unusually lucid.

Although the greater part of Mr. Walker's time was devoted to his legal practice, he was active in political circles as a staunch supporter of the democratic party. The ability and training which qualified him to practice law also qualified him in many respects for duties which lay outside of the strict path of his profession and for one term he was mayor of Fayetteville, the honor being unsolicited, as he was chosen for the office while away on business. His administration was marked by the progress and development of the community and he is remembered as one of Fayetteville's best executives. For two terms he was a member of the state legislature and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1868.

On the 26th of September, 1867, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Miss Serena Jernigan, a native of Illinois, who was reared in Texas, to which state her parents removed at an early day. She was a daughter of Clement L. and Louisa (Sams) Jernigan, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Illinois, in which latter state their marriage occurred. Her father won prominence in the saddlery business and conducted that business in Texas until June, 1866, when he came to Arkansas and located in Fayetteville. Mr. Jernigan died in 1895, while his wife's demise occurred in 1888. Four children were born to their union, two of whom are living: Mrs. Walker; and Mrs. Josephine Davenport, a widow, residing in Fayetteville. Throughout her life Mrs.

Jernigan was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which faith the family was reared. He gave his political allegiance to the know nothing party and was a member of the Good Templars. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Walker three children have been born: The eldest daughter, Nannie F., is the wife of Dr. G. A. Warren of Black Rock, Arkansas. Dr. Warren is one of the most prominent physicians in the state and is considered an authority on typhoid fever. He is a member of the leading medical societies of the state and is president of the State Medical Society; the second member of the Walker family is Louise, the wife of P. C. Wikersham, associated with the Electric Light & Gas Company of Oakland, California; Jennie is the wife of John W. Tilman, an attorney of Pawhuska, Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs. Walker are consistent members of the Baptist church.

For many years Mr. Walker was actively connected with a profession which has important bearing upon the progress and stable prosperity of any section or community and one which has long been considered as conserving public welfare by furthering the ends of justice and maintaining individual rights. His life has been exemplary in every respect and he has ever supported those interests which are calculated to uplift and benefit humanity, while his own high moral worth is deserving of the highest commendation.

WALTER G. EBERLE, M. D.

Dr. Walter G. Eberle, who returned to the private practice of medicine and surgery in Fort Smith following his active service in the World war, now occupies an enviable professional position and his record stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country. Dr. Eberle is a native of the city in which he makes his home and is here accorded a liberal and gratifying patronage. He was born in the 11th of September, 1886, his parents being Dr. J. G. and Elizabeth (Pearson) Eberle, the former also a capable physician, whose example has been an inspiration to the son. The latter pursued his early education in the public schools of Fort Smith and then in preparation for his professional career, went east to matriculate in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He there pursued the regular course, winning his M. D. degree and later he took up postgraduate work in the Bellevue and allied hospitals of New York city. He has availed himself of every opportunity to promote his knowledge and advance his efficiency in practice and by broad reading and study has kept in touch with the trend of professional research and investigation. In the early days of his active career he served as a surgeon instructor in New York and also on the training ship Newport, specializing in surgery during that period. In 1913 he returned to Fort Smith, where he entered upon private practice and was not long in demonstrating his ability to cope with the intricate and involved problems occasioned by disease. Gradually his patronage was increasing, but in 1917 he put aside all business and personal considerations in order to respond to the country's call for medical aid in connection with the World war. He became a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Field Artillery at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, and there remained until August, 1918, when he was sent overseas. He was assigned to duty with the field troops as regimental surgeon and continued until his aid was no longer needed in France.

With his return to Fort Smith, in 1919, Dr. Eberle resumed private practice and has again become well established in his profession in his native city. He married Miss Ella Smart of Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, and, like her husband, she has made for herself an enviable social position during the period of her residence in the southwest. Dr. Eberle never lightly regards the duties devolving upon him in his professional capacity, nor his duties as a man and citizen, and the friends he has made as the years have gone by mark him as one of the popular residents of Fort Smith.

CHARLES STEVENS YARBROUGH.

Charles Stevens Yarbrough, now well known as an oil operator in the El Dorado fields, deserves much credit for what he has accomplished. He started out in life with limited educational opportunities and few advantages of any kind. Since then he has made the best possible use of his time and talents and has steadily advanced, progressing step by step until the onward march has brought him to a place of prominence in business circles. He was born in Texas, October 13, 1882, and is a son of Charles Yarbrough, a native of Ouachita county, Arkansas, who in 1880 removed to Texas. After four years he returned to Ouachita county in 1884 and is now living on the old home farm where he was born. He is a son of George Yarbrough, a native of South Carolina, who was one of the first settlers of this section of the state. He bought a farm upon which his son, Charles Yarbrough, now resides and there he developed his land with the aid of the slaves whom he owned. He was a very strong southern sympathizer during the Civil war and after the close of hostilities his wife papered a room with Confederate money. On the old homestead Charles Yarbrough, father of C. S. Yarbrough, was reared and throughout the greater part of his life his attention has successfully been given to general agricultural pursuits. He married Georgia Smith, who was born in Pike county, Arkansas, and they became parents of five children, two sons and three daughters. The wife and mother died in 1911, while the father is still living at the age of sixty-five years.

Charles S. Yarbrough was only two years of age when his father returned to Arkansas and upon the old homestead he was reared, while his early education was acquired in the common schools. Through vacation periods and during the long summer months he assisted his father in the work of the fields and continued to aid in cultivating the farm until twenty-one years of age. He then went into the logging camps of Louisiana, where he made some money, and with his earnings he paid his tuition while attending the University of Arkansas for two years. He afterward taught school for an equal period and later he resumed farming, to which he devoted his attention for five years. When that period had elapsed he began the operation of sawmills and was busily engaged in cutting lumber until November, 1920. At that date he removed to El Dorado, where he is now interested in the Prairie Gas & Oil Company. The largest well owned by this company is a thirty-thousand-barrel well, and altogether they have six oil wells and two gas wells. In addition to the properties of the oil company, of which Mr. Yarbrough is one of the stockholders, he owns forty acres in his home place and also has other property in the oil fields. He is likewise a stockholder in the De Soto Spring Company of Hot Springs.

Mr. Yarbrough was married to Miss Lula Murphy, a daughter of M. J. Murphy, and they have become parents of five children, of whom two are deceased. Those living are: Robert, eleven years of age; Loraine, six; and Lucille, who is in her second year.

Mr. Yarbrough is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and loyally follows the teachings and purposes of that society. His ability in business has long been demonstrated in the excellent results which have come to him. Diligence, enterprise and the wise use of opportunity have brought him to the front and he became well known in connection with the lumber industry, while at the present time he is figuring prominently as a representative of the oil interests of the El Dorado district.

WILL D. VANCE.

Will D. Vance, a native son of Arkansas, representing the third generation of the family in this state, is engaged in the abstract business in Russellville and through untiring industry and intelligently directed effort has gained a position of leadership in the field in which he specializes. He was born in Conway county, July 30, 1877, a son of W. D. and Mary F. (Brigham) Vance, who were also natives of that section of the state. There the father engaged in farming for many years, but he is now following the carpenter's trade and resides in Russellville. The paternal grandfather, Walter J. Vance, was a native of Tennessee, whence he came to Arkansas, becoming one of the pioneer farmers of Conway county, where he spent his remaining years, devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving as a soldier in the Confederate army. The maternal grandfather, John Brigham, was also an early settler of Conway county and he, too, served in the Civil war, meeting death on the battle field and leaving behind him a widow and three children in straitened circumstances. Mr. Vance is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he was formerly identified with the Knights of Honor. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party. To Mr. and Mrs. Vance were born eleven children, of whom five survive, namely: Will D.; Margie, who is employed as a stenographer and bookkeeper at Fort Smith, Arkansas; Holden, who is connected with the cotton industry at that place; Pearl, who married R. F. Richardson, a leading jeweler of Tulsa, Oklahoma; and John W., who assists the subject of this review in the conduct of his business interests.

After completing his education, which was acquired in the public schools, Will D. Vance engaged in farming and also followed the profession of teaching for four years. Later he worked as a clerk and also did bookkeeping, entering the abstract business in 1908. He opened an office in Russellville and now has the most complete set of abstract books in the state, being recognized as an authority in his line of work. He displays sound judgment, enterprise and determination in the conduct of his interests and with the passing years his business has steadily developed until it has reached large proportions.

Mr. Vance has been married twice. In 1903 he wedded Miss May Burris, a native of Pope county, who died in 1905, leaving one son, William B. In 1917 Mr. Vance married Mary Harden, who was born in Mississippi. They have a son, Alfred Crawford, twenty months old. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally Mr. Vance is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he served as secretary for one year. He is a staunch democrat in his political views and has been called to public office, serving as alderman for one term. His time and attention are concentrated upon his abstract business, of which he has made a comprehensive study, and his present success is well deserved, for he started out in life empty handed and has depended entirely upon his own efforts for advancement, being numbered among the self-made men and progressive citizens of Russellville.

LUTHER B. NEWTON.

Luther B. Newton, manager at Fort Smith for the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, in which connection he has greatly developed the interests and business of the company in this state, was born in Gurdon, Arkansas, on the 13th of May, 1881, his parents being A. W. and Mattie (Bussall) Newton of Gurdon, where the father engaged in merchandising for many years. The grandfather in the maternal line was prominently known in Clark county, Arkansas, where for sixteen years he filled the office of county treasurer, and he likewise won the rank of captain during his service in the Confederate army.

Luther B. Newton obtained a high school education in Gurdon, Arkansas, and starting out upon his business career, turned his attention to the field of insurance. He subsequently became an agent for the Aetna Life Insurance Company at Little Rock and the ability which he displayed in making insurance sales led to his appointment to the position of district manager at Fort Smith on the 17th of June, 1919. At that time but few policies were held in this district and there was no office. Mr. Newton has developed the district and has been instrumental in building up a wonderful business for the corporation at this point. He now has fourteen men working out of this office, covering western Arkansas, and he and the agents under him have written insurance to the amount of over six million dollars. The agents now in his employ were without previous experience, but under the careful instruction and direction of Mr. Newton they have been developed into excellent men for the business and are reaping substantial profit for themselves and at the same time contributing largely to the upbuilding of the company with which they are connected.

Mr. Newton was united in marriage in 1909 to Miss Cora E. Jones of Gurdon, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of one child, Sarah Jane. Fraternally Mr. Newton is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, with the Knights of Pythias and with the Masons, and in his life he exemplifies the sterling principles upon which these orders are based. He is a young man of most progressive spirit, of clear vision in business affairs and of marked executive ability, and as the years pass he accomplishes what he undertakes and each year sees him a long way in advance of the position which he had attained the previous year.

JUNIUS ALEXANDER TOWNSEND.

Junius Alexander Townsend, owner and proprietor of the Townsend Hotel at Hot Springs, was born in Robeson county, North Carolina, November 2, 1853. There he was reared, pursuing his education in private schools. His youthful days were spent upon his father's plantation, and in September, 1882, he first visited Hot Springs, stopping here on his way to Texas, as he thought, but he decided to remain and secured a clerkship in a dry goods store, in which he was employed for three years. For eight years before removing to Arkansas he had been engaged in clerking in a dry goods store in North Carolina, so that he brought knowledge and experience to his work here. Moreover, he was ambitious to establish business on his own account and carefully saved his earnings until in 1885 he was able to open a small store, purchasing a stock of dry goods which he increased as the years passed by and prosperity attended his efforts. He conducted the business for fifteen years and then sold the store, after which he was out of business for several years. He then turned his attention to the hotel business and in the meantime he assisted in organizing the Citizens National Bank, of which he was president for two years. In 1909 he erected the Townsend Hotel, which was opened on the 6th of January, 1910, with fifty-seven guest rooms. It is situated on Chapel street and has been a popular hostelry, well patronized from the beginning. It is conducted along high standards of hotel service and the business has therefore proven a profitable one.

On the 25th of September, 1888, Mr. Townsend was united in marriage to Miss Sarah L. Warren of Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and they have become parents of five children: Junius M.; Richard W.; Sarah L., who died at the age of seventeen months; Hubert F.; and Martha E. The second son, Richard W., was captain of Company H of the Three Hundred and Fifty-seventh Infantry, Ninetieth Division, in the World war and died from wounds received in action on the 12th of September, 1918, having been wounded in the St. Mihiel drive. Junius M. was also overseas as a member of Company A, Three Hundred and Forty-third Field Artillery, Ninetieth Division, and following the signing of the armistice was with the Army of Occupation in Germany for six months.

Junius A. Townsend's religious faith is that of the Methodist church. The sterling worth of his character is widely recognized by all and he finds warm friendships among those who appreciate the embodiment of advanced principles in human conduct.

JAMES MONROE COMSTOCK.

Active and energetic, James Monroe Comstock closely watches every opportunity for the attainment of legitimate success and has made constant progress since starting out in the business world on his own account. He is now copartner in the Comstock Dry Goods Store at Van Buren, one of the representative business interests of that place.

James Monroe Comstock was born in McDonald county, Missouri, in 1860, a son of Thomas and Maranda J. (Brown) Comstock. The father was a native of Perry county, Tennessee, and his mother died when he was just a boy. After her death he went to Missouri with his father. In the year 1866 they removed from McDonald county, Missouri, to Lamar county, Texas, where they remained for three years. At the termination of that time they sold out their interests in Texas and traveled back to Missouri in ox-drawn wagons. In about 1863 the grandfather Murphy and his son were killed by northerners while going from their home to the mill, and Thomas Comstock then became a bushwhacker in the Confederate cause, and he and a party of men did much damage to the northerners during the remainder of the conflict. In 1869 the family again moved from McDonald county, Missouri, and they located at Lee Creek, fourteen miles north of Van Buren, in Crawford county, Arkansas. Mr. Comstock remained a resident of this county until his death in 1917, at the age of seventy-eight years, and he was recognized as a representative citizen of the community. Mrs. Comstock's demise occurred in 1912, at the age of sixty-two years.

James Monroe Comstock was reared and received his education in the schools of Crawford county, and after putting his textbooks aside engaged in farming. He was active along that line until he became twenty-three years of age, when, on January 1, 1884, he engaged in the general mercantile business with J. C. Wood at Uniontown. That association was maintained with the greatest of success until 1888, when Mr. Comstock sold out his interest to his father-in-law and entered into partnership with his brother, Randolph. This partnership was maintained until 1916. In that year Mr. Comstock again sold out and for the following two years engaged in farming and stock trading. He removed from Uniontown to Fort Smith, where he purchased a home and resided until 1918, when with his two sons, Kenney M. and Ira V., he concluded to embark in the dry goods business in Van Buren. He has since been active in the mercantile circles here and through his enterprise and intelligently directed efforts he has built up an extensive and steadily increasing patronage. Many of his customers come from Uniontown to trade with him.

In 1884 occurred the marriage of Mr. Comstock to Miss Lucretia E. Wood, a daughter of J. C. Wood of Uniontown. To their union the following children were born: Dorey, who died in infancy; Kenney M., Nora, Ira V., Mand, Lelia, whose demise occurred at the age of thirteen years; Edna, Letty, Paul and Pauline. For forty-one years Mr. Comstock has been a member of the Masonic fraternity and he is an exemplary member of that craft. His religious faith is that of a Christian, and as a man actively interested in the development and improvement of the community he is identified with the Van Buren Business Men's Club. The growth of the Comstock Dry Goods Store is notable even in this district of rapidly developing enterprises and its splendid success is attributable in large measure to the executive force, keen sagacity and discrimination of James Monroe Comstock and his sons, Kenney M. and Ira V.

E. L. CRANDALL.

With the development of the rice fields in this section of the state there has grown up an important industry, for the cultivation of rice is naturally followed by the establishment and operation of rice mills and the promotion of commercial activity having to do with the handling of the product. To this field of labor E. L. Crandall directed his attention and is now manager of the rice mills at Carlisle. His birth occurred in Minnesota in the year 1876, his parents being N. C. and Elizabeth Crandall. He pursued his education in his native city while spending his youthful days under the parental roof and leaving the north he made his way to Louisiana, where he became connected with the rice business. He attained a first hand knowledge of rice culture, being schooled in the practical end of the business first as a well driller for rice irrigation wells and later as a rice grower and rice buyer for the Louisiana mills. In fact, he acquainted himself with every phase of the business and broad experience well qualified him for the onerous duties which he assumed on coming to Carlisle, taking charge of the extensive rice mills at this place as secretary and manager. In 1909 this mill was built by the Carlisle Rice Milling Company. The officials of the present organization were formerly: M. B. Moore, J. H. Sims, D. B. Perkins, H. I. Buechtley, and E. B. Roy. In 1916 the Arkansas State Rice Milling Company took over the mills, which have an output of twenty-five hundred barrels per day and furnish employment to fifty men. They handle the rice grown on fifteen thousand acres in this vicinity and the business has become one of the mammoth industries of this section of the state, constituting an important source of revenue to the district.

Mr. Crandall was united in marriage in 1905 to Rosa Tanigan, who died in 1912. Mr. Crandall was again married in 1915, this time to Miss Frances Sanders of Texarkana, and they have become the parents of two daughters: Margaret and Virginia. Mr. Crandall was the government representative at Carlisle during the World war period, serving as a member of the food conservation committee, having to do with the conservation of rough rice. He is interested in all that has to do with the general welfare and is indeed a public-spirited citizen, one who has the good of the community at heart, and while holding to high ideals employs the most practical methods in their attainment. As a business man he is thorough and progressive, discriminating readily between the essential and the non-essential in all business affairs and possessing a considerable measure of initiative that enables him wisely to direct the interests of the corporation which he represents, his activities having constituted an important element in the company's success.

MARSHALL PATTERSON DOOLEY.

One of the well known citizens of Crossett is Marshall Patterson Dooley, foreman of the planing mill of the Crossett Lumber Company. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Columbia, Maury county, on the 26th of July, 1861, of Irish ancestry on the paternal side and German descent on the maternal side. Both the Dooley and Holcomb families came to America from their native lands prior to the Revolutionary war. The father, William Hill Dooley, was born and reared to manhood in the state of Tennessee, where he engaged in farming for the greater part of his life. It was in 1842 in Tennessee that Mr. Dooley was united in marriage to Miss Mary Holcomb, who died in Fort Worth, Texas, in 1914, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. She was likewise a native of Tennessee, her family having been among the early settlers in the central portion of the state. Mrs. Dooley had three brothers who served in the Confederate army during the Civil war. Mr. W. H. Dooley died at Columbia, Tennessee, in 1872, when he was in his fifty-second year. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dooley eight children were born, five boys and three girls, Marshall Patterson, whose name initiates this review, being the seventh in order of birth. Two boys and one girl are living.

In the acquirement of an education Marshall Patterson Dooley attended the primary school near Columbia, Tennessee, and worked on the farm during vacations and in his spare time until he reached the age of twenty years. In 1886 he came to Arkansas, secured work in connection with the sawmills here and has been active along that line since. Since 1902 he has been an employe of the Crossett Lumber Company and has been foreman of the planing mill since 1904. He is well fitted for that position, being thoroughly familiar with every phase of the sawmill business, and is one of the most highly valued employes of the concern. Mr. Dooley is a member of the board of directors of the Employes Investment Company of Crossett and is a stockholder in the East Arkansas Lumber Company at Little Rock. In 1909 Mr. Dooley was called to his first public office, being elected mayor of Crossett, which office he held for seven years. He gave to the city a businesslike administration, which was marked by great prosperity and continued development in the general welfare. He has always been a staunch advocate of education and from 1903 to 1921 has been a member of the board of directors of the board of education.

On the 19th of September, 1888, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Dooley to Miss Molly Kinnabrew, a daughter of J. D. and Nanny Kinnabrew of Rison, the ceremony being performed at that place. To their union eleven children have been born, eight boys and three girls. Two boys and one girl died in infancy. The living children are: Roy, assistant cashier in the Bank of Crossett, who is thirty years of age and is married to Ruby Parkhill of Crossett; Ora Belle, the wife of Elmer Oslin, who is active in the conduct of a grocery business in Arkansas City; Jessie, who is working in the lumber company in the office of Mr. Thornton; Eunice, living at home; Joe, eighteen years of age, and J. D., fifteen years of age, who are students in the Crossett high school; Marshall P., Jr., twelve years of age, who is a student in the grade schools; and Ray, nine years of age, also a student in the grade schools.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church, to the support of which they are generous contributors. Fraternally Mr. Dooley is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masons, holding membership in Crossett Lodge, No. 576, A. F. & A. M. Since age conferred upon Mr. Dooley the right of franchise he has given his support to the democratic party, in the interests of which he has taken an active part. He is one of the representative and public-spirited citizens of Crossett whose aid may be counted upon in the furtherance of any movement for the development and improvement of the community.

WILLIAM JOSEPH ECHOLS.

William Joseph Echols, banker and merchant, who made valuable contribution to the development and progress of Fort Smith through the many years of his connection with the city, was born on a plantation in De Soto county, Mississippi, in 1848, his parents being Elkanah and Louisa (Shotwell) Echols. His grandfather, William Echols, was the owner of a large plantation in Alabama and later became a resident of Mississippi, where he also was prominently known as a planter. The father of William J. Echols was a resident of Huntsville, Alabama, before his removal to Mississippi and was descended from an old Virginia family. Like his father he was a planter and slave owner, giving his entire life to the management of his agricultural interests.

William J. Echols was reared on his father's plantation and pursued his education in public and private schools in southern Mississippi. He started out in the business world as a merchant at Senatobia, Mississippi, where he remained for about ten years and then removed to Fort Smith, Arkansas, in 1881. Here he opened a wholesale grocery house, which he conducted to the time of his death on the 2d of March, 1897. Through the intervening period he built up a business of very substantial and gratifying proportions, his ramifying trade interests covering a broad territory. After a few years residence in Fort Smith he also organized and founded the Merchants' Bank, now a National Bank of Fort Smith, of which he became the first president, remaining as its chief executive officer until his life's labors were ended. He made this one of the most substantial and thoroughly reliable banking institutions of the state. His business policy was always such as would bear the closest investigation and scrutiny and in which enterprise, determination and progressiveness figured strongly. His plans were always carefully formulated and promptly executed and his energy enabled him to carry forward to successful completion whatever he undertook.

In October, 1871, at Memphis, Tennessee, Mr. Echols was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Carter, of North Carolina, in which state Mrs. Echols was reared and educated. Three children were born of this marriage: William Joseph, who is now president of the Merchants Bank, which his father established and he became his father's successor in the office; Maud Shotwell, now the wife of C. W. Hammill of New York city; and Elizabeth C., the wife of James Reynolds of Fort Smith.

Mr. Echols was a democrat in his political belief and his religious faith was that of the Christian church. Since his demise Mrs. Echols has erected the Echols Memorial Christian church in Fort Smith, at Alabama street and May avenue. She also built a beautiful residence on Fifteenth street, it being one of the most attractive homes of the south. Mr. Echols was never a club man but gave his time and energy without limit to his business affairs and his close application undoubtedly hastened his death. By reason of his business activity he contributed in large measure to the upbuilding and progress of the city in which he made his home and he ever measured up to the highest standards of manhood and citizenship in every regard. Mrs. Echols is a cultured lady of the southern school, devoting her life to her home and her family and taking helpful part in charitable and benevolent work, yet always without ostentation or display. Frequently her bounty is not known save to the recipient and to herself but it is well known that the deserving never make appeal to her in vain. Her friends—and they are legion—say that she is one of the most honored and most loved women of Arkansas.

SAM BEASLEY.

Sam Beasley, an able member of the Bentonville bar and junior partner in the law firm of Floyd & Beasley, was born in Murfreesboro, Tennessee, March 2, 1882, a son of B. F. and Ann (Bowen) Beasley, likewise natives of that state, where they continued to reside until 1896. In that year they made their way to Benton county, Arkansas, where the father engaged in agricultural pursuits. They were faithful members of the Christian church and Mr. Beasley gave his political allegiance to the populist party. He died in 1903, but the mother is living, making her home at Hiwassee, Arkansas. Of the children born to their union five are living, namely: Sam, of this review; Joe, who is a leading lawyer of Bentonville and is now serving as county judge of Benton county; Hattie, who is filling the office of postmistress of Hiwassee; Esther, who resides at home and is engaged in teaching a country school; and Noble, who is attending the West Point Military Academy.

Mr. Beasley attended the public schools of Benton county and the Normal School at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, after which he began the study of law in the office of W. B. Horsley, prosecuting attorney for the fourth judicial circuit. Having mastered the principles of jurisprudence, he was admitted to the bar in 1910, after passing the required examination, and later was made deputy circuit clerk, which position he continued to fill for a period of four years. In 1914 he was elected circuit clerk and for four years was the incumbent in that office, after which he became associated in practice with Judge Floyd under the style of Floyd & Beasley, a relationship that has since been maintained. They rank with the leading law firms of the locality. Mr. Beasley is a capable attorney, well versed in all branches of the law, and his ability is manifest in the logic of his deductions and the clearness of his reasoning.

Mr. Beasley was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Banks, a native of Hiwassee, Benton county, and a daughter of Houston Banks, a pioneer farmer of this county who served as a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Beasley have become the parents of a son, Sam, Jr., aged five years. They are members of the Christian church and Mr. Beasley gives his political allegiance to the democratic party. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand chancellor, and he is also a prominent Mason, belonging to the blue lodge, of which he is a past master; to the chapter, of which he has been made secretary, and to the commandery, of which he is now serving as eminent commander. He holds to high standards in his law practice.

R. B. SADLER, D. D. S.

Dr. R. B. Sadler, actively and successfully engaged in dental practice in Paris, is a native son of Logan county, born May 22, 1874. He is a brother of C. C. Sadler and a representative of one of the oldest and best known of the pioneer families of the state, mentioned at length on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of C. C. Sadler.

Dr. Sadler obtained his early education in the rural schools and the schools of Paris, Arkansas, and in preparation for his professional career entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1895 and was graduated in 1898. He then entered upon active practice in Paris, where he has since remained and through the intervening years has enjoyed a business of extensive proportions. He is also a director of the First National Bank of Paris but devotes almost his entire time to dentistry and is thoroughly familiar with the most progressive methods and advanced theories of the science. He holds membership in the Arkansas State Dental Association and the National Dental Association, and his prominence among his professional brethren is indicated in the fact that he was elected to the presidency of the state society. For a number of years he was the only dentist in the Dardanelle valley between Dardanelle and Fort Smith and he rode all over the country in his buggy to administer professional relief. He thus became widely known and few men enjoy equal esteem and regard. He educated himself professionally, incurring some indebtedness to pursue his college course, and this he paid in full with interest after entering upon practice.

On the 24th of January, 1901, Dr. Sadler was married to Miss Blanche Hardwick, a daughter of D. D. Hardwick, who was born in Mississippi and when a small boy was brought to Logan county, Arkansas, by his parents, who cast in their lot with the earliest settlers of this part of the state. His father had a large farm of over one thousand acres, which he sold for Confederate money and thus lost heavily. D. D. Hardwick served throughout the war with the Confederate troops and until his death always devoted his life to farming. Dr. and Mrs. Sadler have two children: Howe, who finishes high school in 1922; and Herblin, also attending high school.

The family are members of the Presbyterian church and Dr. Sadler is also identified with the Knights of Pythias. Politically he is a democrat and has served on the town council, while at the present writing he is president of the school board, the cause of education finding in him a stalwart champion. He was secretary of the advisory board for Logan county, Arkansas, during the World war and at all times he has given his aid and support to every measure or project that is promoted for the benefit and up-building of city, commonwealth and country.

W. J. MURPHY.

W. J. Murphy, a saddlery manufacturer of Fort Smith, who has developed a business of large proportions, which is one of the important productive industries of the city, was born in the state of New York, in 1851. His boyhood and youth were passed in New York state and the period of his early manhood was spent in New York and St. Louis. He came to Fort Smith in 1885, when thirty-four years of age and here turned his attention to the business in which he is now engaged. His thoroughness and capability have been manifest throughout the period of his residence in western Arkansas. In the thirty-six years which have elapsed since Mr. Murphy took up his abode in Fort Smith the business has steadily grown until today he utilizes a large building, five stories in height, with a frontage of forty-five feet and a depth of one hundred and thirty feet. His plant is splendidly equipped with the latest improved machinery to facilitate the work and the product is of such excellent quality as to find a steady sale on the market. The output is sold to the wholesale trade through Oklahoma and western Arkansas and the business is one of gratifying proportions.

Mr. Murphy was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Durkin of Dubuque, Iowa, and they have become the parents of two sons and a daughter: Robert J., William J., and Angie. The latter is now the wife of R. W. Halliburton of Fort Smith. Mr. Murphy is a member of the Business Men's Club and also of the traffic bureau, being thus identified with organizations which are making a thorough and systematic study of business conditions and opportunities, with the purpose of upbuilding Fort Smith as a trade center and enlarging the scope of its commercial activities.

IRA WILLIAM BLACKLOCK.

Ira William Blacklock, superintendent of schools at Hazen, has in his professional career held to the highest educational standards and his labors have constituted a potent force in the advancement and development of the schools under his care. A native of Kentucky, he was born near Hartford, in 1874, and is a son of Charles and Lois (Barrett) Blacklock, both of whom were also natives of Hartford. The Blacklock family is of Scotch origin, the name being derived from Black Loch, which is the Scotch word for lake. Richard Blacklock was among the first of the family to settle west of the Mississippi, going to Texas at a very early day. In the year 1894 Charles Blacklock and his wife established their home on a farm at Poyen, Grant county, Arkansas. Later they removed to Sheridan, where Mr. Blacklock again engaged in farming and also conducted a leather and harness manufacturing business. Still later he moved to Benton, where he lived to the time of his death, in January, 1919. To him and his wife were born nine children, seven of whom are living: Ira William; Ora, the wife of K. P. Davis; Mary, the wife of J. D. Ritchey of Texas; Ella, the wife of J. C. Whitley; Maude, the wife of J. M. Scott; Thomas M., who is a minister of the Baptist church in New Mexico; and Clarence E.

It was during the early boyhood of Ira W. Blacklock that the family home was established in Kansas and in the public schools of that state he pursued his studies until he had mastered the usual branches of learning that constitute the public school curriculum. Later he attended the Central Normal College at Great Bend, Kansas, and he began teaching in Stanton county, that state, while later he was identified with educational work in Butler county. In 1894 his parents removed to Oklahoma and during that year Ira W. Blacklock taught in Red Bud, Kansas. In 1895 he secured a school near Donaldson, Arkansas, and later spent four years, as a teacher in the schools of Donaldson, after which he matriculated in Ouachita College, where he remained as a student for three years, teaching during the summer months at Butterfield and at Elmore during that period. Afterward he spent two years as principal of the high school at Sheridan and subsequently was principal at Prattsville, whence he returned to Sheridan in 1906, there remaining until 1909. Ambitious to promote his own education he next attended the University of Arkansas for a year, winning the Bachelor of Arts degree. A year was spent as principal of the Yellville high school, after which he went on the road as a traveling salesman in connection with educational interests. He was called from that field of labor by an increase of one-half in salary, to take charge of the Sheridan schools, with which he was again connected for three years. He next went to Mount Harmony School for one year as principal, after which he attended the Peabody College for Teachers. In the fall of 1916 he took charge of the Bryant school and in 1919 he became superintendent of the Rondo high school. Then he went to Beebe as superintendent at that place, at a decided increase in salary. In 1921 he became superintendent of the schools at Hazen and has made a splendid record here as in the other localities in which he has labored. He is constantly looking ahead to meet the demands of the times and has introduced many advanced and progressive methods into the schools, at all times seeking to make instruction of the most practical worth in the lives of the pupils who come under his guidance.

Professor Blacklock was united in marriage to Miss Grace Morrill, a daughter of Albert and Jemima (Jadwin) Morrill, and they have become the parents of three children: Carl Morrill, Naomi Ruth, and Orla Ray. The family occupies a prominent position in those social circles where true worth and intelligence are accepted as the passports to good society. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and take great interest in religious activities.

Mr. Blacklock is keenly interested in everything that makes for public progress and improvement and his own course has been marked by steady advancement. In his youth he learned the printer's trade, working on the Johnson City Journal, the Stanton County Sun and on the Blackwell Daily Eagle. He learned many valuable lessons from his experience along those lines and his career has shown steady development as he has continued his work in the educational field. He is the author of much creditable poetry, his writings having appeared in The Arkansas Teacher, and local periodicals. His discussions of vital questions are always enlightening, showing deep research and broad vision. Two of his shorter poems are here given:

HONESTY.

Honesty, boys, must come from the heart;
When you are tempted some wrong to impart,
Make it your challenge pure motives to test—
Policy never makes honesty best.

He who seems honest, to cover his wrongs,
Shall in due time stand where he belongs;
Hypocrite, rascal, though dressed like a king,
Greater the torments that round him shall cling.

He who looks honest, intent upon wealth,
Finds his soul shriveled, his physical health
Ruined prematurely by Satan's device,
Grinding his life for a counterfeit price.

He who courts beauty, to revel with friends,
 Scarcely may know worthy honor depends
 Wholly on grace or the inner design,
 Rather than form of features so fine.

Thus you will see that honesty comes
 Purely from character, riches or crumbs
 Nothing avail, for a man's sterling worth Ever must date from his silent re-birth.

"Do as Romie does, when you are in Rome."
 Curses the world in both commerce and home.
 Do your full duty, regardless of fate,
 Then in God's sight you may become great.

Honesty first, though you swear to your hurt,
 Hold up the banner, your claims to assert;
 Honesty always, with noblest of strife,
 Models the image of Christ in your life.

THOU TINY SEED.

I'd like to know how you can grow,
 O tiny seed in coat of brown!
 How can you tell so very well
 The way to send your rootlets down?

How make the bend, your stem to send
 Above the ground, in search of light?
 Or how to sprout your branches out
 And send them forth, a lovely sight?

How grow so strong in form, ere long,
 That you can bear a goodly weight?
 That passing birds, with chirping words,
 May rest within your foliage great?

Methinks you must a Pilot trust,
 To guide your groping in the dark,
 Or else you might not steer aright
 Your wandering course, when you embark.

Within, quite firm, the living germ
 Contents itself, unseen, to stay
 Until the clime, at proper time,
 Has warmed the dreary, lifeless clay.

When duty calls within your walls,
 Without a single beat of drum,
 To see the world around you furled,
 Quite bravely out, at once, you come.

O lesson fair, to all who dare
 Earth's hidden beauties e'er to find
 If we would climb to heights sublime,
 We must this precept bear in mind:

Each little thing some truth may bring,
 If we but look with eyes intent,
 In nature's laws to find the cause
 Which to that seed its growth has sent.

But we observe that this may serve
 A purpose foul, if borne too far;
 In asking why, we must not try
 The source of power Divine to bar.

Oh, foolish man! This mystery can
Your strongest intellect confound!
Perhaps too late, you'll see the bait
That lured your steps to deadly ground.

We must not seek through nature's freak,
To find the cause in seed or clod;
Let us disclose what science knows,
Then look through nature up to God.

Thou Source of Strength! We're forced at length
To call on Thee with every plan.
Creation's power must come each hour,
Directly down from God to man.

ALFRED MAJENDIE LUND.

Alfred Majendie Lund of the civil engineering firm of Lund & Hill of Little Rock, comes to this state from Tennessee. He was born in the city of Louisville, July 8, 1879. He is of English ancestry, his parents being Harry M. and Sarah Ann (Stephenson) Lund, both of whom were natives of England, the former born in Bradford, in 1846, while the latter was born in Cumberland, in 1847. Their youthful days were spent on the "Merrie Isle" and in 1869 they were married. They became parents of three sons and two daughters, of whom one son died in infancy and one daughter died after reaching adult years. Mr. and Mrs. Lund became residents of Decatur, now Albany, Alabama. He devoted his life to railroad work and gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. His death occurred in 1904. The mother is still living.

Alfred M. Lund acquired his early education in the public schools of Bowling Green, Kentucky, his family removing from Louisville to that city during his infancy. He afterward became a student in Webb Brothers Preparatory School at Bellbuckle, Tennessee, and in 1902 was graduated from the Vanderbilt University with the degree of Bachelor of Engineering. Soon afterward he came to Little Rock, Arkansas, where he has since followed his profession and is now widely known as a civil and consulting engineer. He displays marked ability in the line of his chosen profession and has been identified with many of the most important engineering projects executed in this section of the country. He belongs to the American Society of Civil Engineers and also to the American Association of Engineers.

Mr. Lund was married November 15, 1911, to Arline House, a native of Searcy, Arkansas, and a daughter of Joseph W. House. She is a graduate of Goucher College at Baltimore, Maryland.

During the World war Mr. Lund was at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and in April, 1918, was assigned to Camp Humphreys, Virginia, near Alexandria, with the rank of major. He was on detached service and in July, 1918, he was transferred to Camp Hancock, Georgia, as camp engineer. He continued with the army until January, 1919. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party, but the honors and emoluments of office have had no attraction for him. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, in which he is now serving as deacon. He is also a Master Mason and belongs to the Delta Kappa Epsilon. In club circles, too, he is well known, being a popular and representative member of the Engineers' Club, the Spring Lake Club, the Country Club and the Kiwanis Club. He has many friends and is never too busy to be cordial, nor is he ever too cordial to be busy. The activities and interests of his life are well balanced and his genuine character worth has gained him high regard.

CLAYTON GOULD.

Clayton Gould, filling the position of county assessor at Pine Bluff, was born in Bradley county, Arkansas, in 1861, and is a son of Josiah and Marinda (Pomeroy) Gould. The father was a native of Massachusetts and on removing to the southwest settled in Warren county, Arkansas. Later he removed to Little Rock, where he engaged in the practice of law, becoming recognized as one of the prominent and representative members of the bar of the state. He also served as circuit judge in Little Rock and his course upon the bench was distinguished by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution and by the utmost fairness and impartiality in his decisions. He likewise became widely known as the author of Gould's Digest and his ability ranked him with the most eminent lawyers and jurists of the state. He died in Bradley, Arkansas, in 1872, while his wife, surviving for many years, died in Pine Bluff in 1899. He was twice married, having eight children by the first marriage and two children by his marriage to Marinda Pomeroy.

The elder of the two is Clayton Gould of this review, who was largely educated in the schools of Warren county and after putting aside his textbooks devoted his attention to farming. He removed to Pine Bluff in 1894 and became a surveyor and civil engineer, working along the lines of that profession until elected to the office of county assessor. He had previously filled the position of county surveyor, filling out the unexpired term of J. B. White. He has twice been elected to the office of county assessor—a fact which indicates his capability, promptness and fidelity in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. Gould was married to Miss Betty Holland, a daughter of Jacob Holland, and they have become parents of seven children, six of whom are living: Carrie, now the wife of L. A. Galloway; Florie, the wife of James Wood; Walter; Joseph; Frank; and Howard. Two of the sons, Walter and Joseph, are veterans of the World war. The family is well known in Pine Bluff, occupying a creditable social position, and as a public official the record of Mr. Gould is one over which there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil.

RICHARD CALHOUN BRIGHT.

In insurance circles in Arkansas the name of Richard Calhoun Bright of Little Rock is prominently known. He has developed a business of large proportions as state manager for The Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company and what he has accomplished represents the fit utilization of the innate powers and talents which are his. Mr. Bright is a native of this state, his birth having occurred on a farm in Nevada county, March 17, 1872. His father, William Loderick Bright, was born in South Carolina in 1827, belonging to one of the old families of that state. With his parents he came to Arkansas in early life and lived for many years in Nevada county, where he followed the occupation of farming, bringing his land under a high state of cultivation and contributing much to the agricultural development of that section. Through the period of the Civil war he was a private in the ambulance service. He was married in Bossier parish, Louisiana, to Miss Elizabeth Franks, who was born in Alabama in 1829. Both have departed this life, the death of Mr. Bright occurring in 1882, while his wife, surviving him for seven years, died in 1889. They were parents of nine sons and a daughter and of this family the daughter and three sons are yet living.

Richard C. Bright, the youngest of the family, spent his boyhood days upon the home farm in Nevada county and his experiences were those that usually fall to the lot of the farm bred boy who divides his time between the acquirement of an education in the country schools, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields, for the summer months were given to tasks suited to his age and strength in connection with the farm work. After attending the district schools he continued his education in public schools of Prescott and of Little Rock. His identification with the insurance business covers twenty-eight years. He first became connected with The Fidelity in 1893. Step by step he has steadily worked his way upward and is now occupying the responsible position of state manager with The Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company. He is widely known in this connection and his ability is evidenced in the splendid results which have followed his labors in the upbuilding of the interests of the corporation which he represents in the state.

On the 22d of October, 1896, in Jacksonville, Arkansas, Mr. Bright was married to Miss Annie Louise Stone, who was born in Pulaski county and is a daughter of Manci and Mary (Ferguson) Stone, the former a native of South Carolina. Both are deceased, their deaths occurring at their home at Jacksonville, Pulaski county. Mr. and Mrs. Bright have become parents of three children: Mary E., now the wife of William A. Moncrief, of Ponca City, Oklahoma; Richard C., who was born December 23, 1902; and Miles Alfred, born May 24, 1908.

During the World war period Mr. Bright rendered every possible service to the government and from December, 1917, until Armistice day was chairman of Local Exemption Board No. 1. He is a democrat in his political views, thoroughly informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day, but has never been an aspirant for office. He belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, giving loyal adherence thereto and taking a helpful interest in its work. He is particularly well known in Masonic circles in Arkansas, being a thirty-third degree Mason and a past potentate of Al-Amin Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Little Rock. He is a past master of Western Star Lodge, No. 2, F. & A. M., of Little Rock, and has served as grand treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas and also as secretary of the board of finance of the Grand Lodge. In club circles he is a prominent and well known figure, being a past president of the Quapaw Club, a member of the Spring Lake Club and of the Big Lake Club. He has been a forceful factor in business and social circles and in the public life of the community, standing as one of the representative residents of the capital city.

ALONZO FRANKLIN THOMPSON.

Alonzo Franklin Thompson, filling the position of county and probate clerk of Arkansas county, has been a resident of De Witt since 1907 and has taken active interest in public affairs here. Born in Monticello, Drew county, Arkansas, in 1881, he is a son of J. F. and Martha (Carter) Thompson. He represents one of the old families of Georgia, his grandfather being James G. Thompson, who was born in that state and became a resident of Drew county, Arkansas. He married Elizabeth Penny and their family included J. F. Thompson, who was born in Harrison county, Georgia, and who took up his abode in Arkansas in 1856, settling in Dallas county. He afterward became a resident of Drew county and spent his remaining days in this state. He was a veteran of the Civil war and in 1862, when home on a furlough in Drew county, he was captured by the Union forces. He first married Rhoda M. Brown and they became the parents of three children: James L., deceased; Josie F. and John T. He later married Martha Carter and to them were born six children: Joseph M., Lois E., Leona, Alonzo Franklin, Samuel and William G., the last named having departed this life. The father died in the year 1908.

Alonzo F. Thompson is indebted to the public school system of Arkansas for the educational privileges which he enjoyed and which qualified him for life's practical and responsible duties. He received high school training and afterward pursued a commercial course at Wilmar. He then took up the business of bookkeeping and in 1907 came to De Witt, where he entered the employ of the John Bowers Company. In 1914 he was appointed by Governor Hayes to the position of assessor of Arkansas county and he later filled the office of deputy county clerk. Still later he became deputy county collector and in 1918 he was elected without opposition to the position of county clerk. He is now acceptably serving in the office of county and probate clerk and is thoroughly methodical and systematic in the discharge of his duties, his record winning him high commendation from all who know aught of his service. He has also served as mayor of De Witt and the city benefited by his progressive administration. In business circles he is likewise well known, being the president of the New Era Publishing Company of De Witt.

Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Willie M. Kendell, of Tillar, Arkansas, and they have one child, Muriel. Mr. Thompson is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Woodmen and his religious faith is that of the Methodist church. The many sterling traits of his character are attested by all with whom he has come into contact, while his reliability and progressiveness in citizenship are known to the general public through the excellent service which he has rendered in office. His social qualities, too, have won him many friends and he is today widely and favorably known in the county, where for fifteen years he has made his home.

DUKE W. VINCENT, M. D.

Dr. Duke W. Vincent, physician and surgeon of Holly Grove, is one of the younger representatives of the profession in Monroe county, but already has attained a creditable reputation and standing, his ability having won him place by the side of many older representatives of the profession. Dr. Vincent was born in Vici, Oklahoma, December 26, 1892, his parents being Hiram J. and Nellie (Connelly) Vincent, the former a native of the state of New York, while the latter was born in Urbana, Illinois. The father is now engaged in merchandising at Vici, Oklahoma, and is also a well-known ranchman, having for many years engaged extensively in raising and selling cattle. He has likewise figured prominently in connection with public affairs in his community and has served as county judge. To him and his wife were born six children: Duke W., Albert, Myrl, Hazel, Olive and Ella, the last named being the wife of Ernest Davis.

Dr. Duke W. Vincent pursued his education in the schools of Oklahoma, at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and in the University of Oklahoma. In the last named institution he pursued his medical course and was graduated with the M. D. degree as a member of the class of 1917. He then became first assistant to the dean of the Medical College of Oklahoma and continued in that connection until later in the year, when he joined the Medical Corps, U. S. A., in which he was commissioned a first lieutenant. However, he was permitted to study surgery for a year longer and was then assigned to duty at Camp Greenleaf. Later he was transferred to Camp Pike and afterward was stationed at the Evacuation Hospital No. 27, serving in France for twelve months, while for six months he was with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz, Germany. He won promotion to the rank of captain and as such was mustered out in October, 1920. When his military duties were over he did postgraduate work in surgery in Oklahoma City, but in July, 1921, he came to Holly Grove, Arkansas, where already he has gained a liberal practice. He is surgeon to Holly Grove Hospital, a private hospital which was established in 1921 by Drs. Sylar and Vincent.

Dr. Vincent was married in 1921 to Miss Marie Andreskowski of Buffalo, New York. She went overseas with a private Boston unit as a Red Cross nurse prior to America's entry into the World war and worked in this capacity in Austria for six months in collaboration with the Austrian Red Cross. She returned to this country just before the United States entered the struggle and subsequently again served overseas with the American Red Cross, coming home soon after the signing of the armistice. It was while serving as assistant superintendent of nurses in the State University Hospital of Oklahoma City, where Dr. Vincent was doing postgraduate work, that she formed the acquaintance of her future husband.

Dr. Vincent belongs to the Masonic fraternity, to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and to the national medical fraternity of Phi Beta Pi, while along the line of his profession he is connected with the Oklahoma State Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society. Actuated by a laudable ambition, he is improving every opportunity that will promote his efficiency and advance his skill in the treatment of disease and already he has gained a most creditable position, while his present day achievements argue well for the future.

JOHN WILLIAM FAUST, M. D.

Thoroughly trained in the science of medicine and displaying marked capability in the application of his scientific knowledge to the needs of suffering humanity, Dr. John William Faust has become recognized as one of the able physicians and surgeons of Searcy and this part of the state. Widely known, his life history is of interest to many of our readers. He was born July 1, 1874, in the home of his parents at the corner of Third and Chester streets, Little Rock, and comes of German ancestry. His grandfather was a native of Germany and on crossing the Atlantic with his two brothers settled in Alamance county, North Carolina, where he became a farmer and slaveowner, spending his remaining days in that state. His son, John W. Faust, born in North Carolina, in 1829, was graduated in Amherst University and after coming to Arkansas he read law under the direction of General Albert Pike. He entered upon the active practice of the profession in Little Rock several years prior to the Civil war and with the outbreak of hostilities between the north and the south he enlisted in Little Rock, becoming a captain in the Confederate army, with which he served throughout the period of hostilities. He then resumed the private practice of law in the capital city, becoming a law partner of W. C. Ratcliff, with whom he was associated at the time of his demise. He was also interested in farming and owned a plantation on the river below Little Rock. He brought the first registered Jersey bull into Arkansas and he won many prizes at the fairs on his blooded stock. He was likewise eminent as an horticulturist and was one of the first to engage in fruit growing and the first to produce strawberries in this state. He occupied a position of leadership in horticultural circles and became the first president of the Arkansas Horticultural Association. Another important feature of his business was the breeding of fine hogs and in everything that he attempted he was actuated by a spirit of progress, which made his labors standard in every respect. His was the first marriage celebrated in the Presbyterian church of Little Rock. He wedded Cora Beebe, who was born in White county, where the town of Beebe now stands. Her father, Roswell Beebe, was a native of New York and came to Arkansas prior to the admission of the state into the Union. He laid out the city of Little Rock and donated the capital grounds to the state and also made a gift of Mount Holly cemetery to the city. At one time he owned most of the property on the river front at Little Rock and his real estate holdings throughout the city were extensive. The town of Beebe was named for him, as he owned a large plantation there at the time the railroad was built through. He was a civil engineer by profession and through his professional and business activities he contributed in notable measure to the upbuilding and development of the capital city and to the state. His political endorsement was given to the republican party. He remained a resident of Little Rock until his demise and his passing was a matter of deep and widespread regret, owing to the value of his services and his devotion to the public good.

To John W. and Cora (Beebe) Faust there were born seven children, four of whom are living: Catherine C., the wife of Ed Insley of Los Angeles, California; Emma B., a teacher in Arkansas College at Batesville; John William, of this review; Henry; Roswell B., who was killed in the shipyards at Dayton, Ohio; Fannie Ashley, who became the wife of John Meehan at Cotton Plant and died in 1910 at the age of thirty-four years; and Cora, who died in 1881 at the age of four years. Mr. Beebe was married a second time, his second union being with Eliza A. Tucker, a daughter of Sterling H. Tucker, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Little Rock, where he took up his abode in 1833 and became president of the first bank of any consequence in the capital city. Mr. Faust was a democrat in his political views and fraternally was a Mason, in which he attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Albert Pike Consistory. He was also a member of the First Presbyterian church of Little Rock and died in that faith in 1879.

John William Faust, whose name introduces this review, acquired his education in the public schools and in the Arkansas College at Batesville, while later he attended the Peabody School of Little Rock and Searcy College for a period of two years. He next went to the Bingham Military School at Mebane, North Carolina, and afterward matriculated in Davidson College in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, where he won his Bachelor of Arts degree. Later he entered the Hospital College at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated on the completion of a medical course in 1898.

Dr. Faust located for practice in Searcy in February, 1896, and since obtaining his professional degree he has continued in the general practice of medicine and surgery for a quarter of a century. He pursued postgraduate work in the University of Louisville in 1899 and at all times he has availed himself of every opportunity to promote his professional knowledge and thereby advance his efficiency in handling the intricate problems of health and disease. He was elected captain of the Medical Corps on the 1st of January, 1918, and acted as inspector of local boards. After receiving his commission he inspected local boards throughout the state and thus rendered valuable aid to the country.

Dr. Faust has been married twice. In September, 1895, he wedded Norma Rogers, who died April 1, 1912. They were parents of five children, four of whom are living: Margaret, who died at the age of three years; Frances, who was born July 13, 1899, and is traveling in Oklahoma; Florence, who was born September 7, 1901, and is attending the Arkansas College at Batesville; John E., who was born January 19, 1905, and is also a student in the Arkansas College; and Norman, who was born March 28, 1912, and is a student in Batesville. For his second wife Dr. Faust chose Zora (Patterson) Ray, their marriage being celebrated April 20, 1918. Dr. Faust and his first wife were Presbyterians and later he joined the Baptist church, to which his present wife belongs. He is a member of Searcy Lodge, A. F. & A. M., with which he has been identified since 1895. He is a democrat in politics and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but has no time nor inclination to fill public office, preferring to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his professional duties. He belongs to the White County, Arkansas State and Tri-State Medical Societies and to the American Medical Association and he is ever most prompt and conscientious in the performance of all of his professional duties.

LODOWICK BRODIE STONE.

Lodowick Brodie Stone, a retired merchant and prominent farmer and stock raiser residing at Fayetteville, was born April 23, 1859, in the house which is still his home. He is a son of Stephen K. Stone, who was long one of the prominent, honored and valued citizens of Arkansas. He was almost a nonagenarian when death called him and had been a resident of Arkansas for nearly seventy years. His birth occurred in Oxford, North Carolina, September 25, 1819. The family is of English origin and was founded in America by Allen Stone, grandfather of Stephen K. Stone. He died in early life, survived by his son, Parker F. Stone, who was born in Richmond, Virginia, in 1788. When about fifty-seven years of age Parker F. Stone removed to Arkansas, settling on Lee's creek, near Van Buren, where both he and his wife died. They were married in 1811,

Mrs. Stone bearing the maiden name of Kindness Hicks. She was born in Granville county, North Carolina, in 1793. Mr. and Mrs. Parker F. Stone became parents of the following named: Dr. Robert Stone, who spent his life in Stewart county, Tennessee; Harriet, who became the wife of Nathaniel Daniels and died in Mississippi; Sallie, who married Thomas Word and died in Tennessee; Allen, whose death occurred near Van Buren, Arkansas; Mary, who after becoming the widow of James Phillips married a Mr. Miller and died in Tennessee; Stephen K.; and Sophie, who married James Gatlin and departed this life in Tennessee.

The youthful training of Stephen K. Stone was that of the farm bred boy and his education was obtained in the military school at Bingham, North Carolina. When fifteen years of age he left home and started out to provide for his own support by clerking in a store at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, while subsequently he became bookkeeper in an auction store in New Orleans, Louisiana. He next proceeded northward by way of the Mississippi as far as Vicksburg and there he again was employed as a salesman and bookkeeper. The 11th of June, 1840, witnessed his arrival in Fayetteville, Arkansas, at which time his cash capital consisted of but four hundred and fifty dollars. Here he entered the employ of others and in 1850 he established a family grocery store, to which he constantly added other lines of goods until he was engaged in the sale not only of groceries but of dry goods, hardware and implements, his original establishment having thus been converted into a small department store. At one time he retired from active business but later joined a son in another venture, becoming a partner of the firm of B. H. Stone & Company. He possessed marked ability as a financier and displayed sound judgment in everything that he undertook. In order to meet the demands of a constantly expanding business he erected buildings and he also improved vacant property around the square as an investment, realizing the growing importance of the county seat. From time to time he made purchases of property which constantly increased in value as the district became more thickly settled.

Stephen K. Stone was married September 22, 1842, to Miss Amanda Milvina Brodie, a daughter of Lodowick Brodie, who established his home near Fayetteville in 1835. Mr. Brodie left Clarksville, Tennessee, with his family and traveled by wagon to Arkansas in 1831, spending one year in Benton county. He afterward engaged in general merchandising at Fayetteville from 1840 until 1842 and then took up the occupation of farming. Following the discovery of gold in California he made his way to that state and spent two years upon the Pacific coast, making the return trip by way of the Isthmus of Panama. While en route, however, he became ill and died, being buried at sea. His daughter, Mrs. Stone, was but twelve years of age when on horseback she accompanied her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. James Brodie, to Hopkinsville, Kentucky, where she attended school, returning in the same manner in 1840.

The father of Mrs. Stone was Lodowick Brodie, who was born at Oxford, North Carolina, September 22, 1800, a son of Dr. John Brodie, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, who was graduated in the University of Edinburgh and in young manhood came to the United States. He wedded Mary Taylor, a cousin of Zachary Taylor, who later became president of the United States. Dr. and Mrs. Brodie were parents of the following named: Dr. John Brodie, Jr.; Thomas; Lewis; David; Nancy, who became the wife of Dr. Kittrell; Mary; Dr. David; Lodowick; Alexander; and James. Dr. Brodie, Sr., resided for many years in Montgomery county, Tennessee, and there both he and his wife lie buried. Lodowick Brodie was active in many ways. He built the first Methodist church in Fayetteville, also the first schoolhouse in the town in 1835. This building afterward became the first female academy west of the Mississippi river. The structure was a brick building and was the first of the kind in the county, occupying the present site of the Fayetteville high school. Lodowick Brodie was married twice. In 1821 he wedded Miss Matilda Anthony, daughter of William B. and Susan (McClain) Anthony, the latter a sister of Charles McClain, a soldier of General Harrison's army in the battle of Tippecanoe, in which he captured an Indian tomahawk that is now an heirloom in the family at Fort Smith. Lodowick and Matilda Brodie became parents of the following named: Crispes, born in 1822; William, in 1823; Mrs. Stephen K. Stone, born October 15, 1825; and John, born in 1827. After the death of his first wife Mr. Brodie wedded Miss Amanda Malvina Anthony, a sister of his former wife, and their children were as follows: Prairie, Susan, Adelaide, Jane, Mary, Ella, James, Thomas, Albert and Lewis. The grandfather of Mrs. Amanda M. Stone in the maternal line was William B. Anthony, a gallant soldier of the War of 1812, who enlisted September 24, 1813, as a private in Captain George Smith's company of spies, Dyer's regiment of mounted gunmen, of the Tennessee volunteers. He was honorably discharged April 30, 1814, after which he returned to his home at Gallatin, Sumner county, Tennessee. He reenlisted September 28, 1814, in Captain Moore's company, Second Regiment Mounted Gunmen, as a private, and was killed December 28, 1814, at the battle of Lake Borgne, Louisiana, when in defense of New Orleans under General Jackson.

There are many interesting events related in connection with the history of the maternal ancestry from which Stephen K. Stone sprang. His grandfather was Captain Robert Hicks, who was the father of Kindness Hicks. Captain Hicks married a Miss Raven, of French-Huguenot lineage, whose maternal ancestors journeyed to England from France in order to escape the persecutions of the Catholics. They came from England to America during the colonial epoch in the history of the new world. Robert Hicks was a son of John Hicks, who lived for many years on Long Island, and Hicks street in Brooklyn was named in his honor. Captain Hicks spent his youthful days in North Carolina, the family home being there established about the time of the outbreak of the Revolutionary war. He joined the militia troops of North Carolina and at the battle of Guilford Courthouse his company was placed in front of the trained Colonials. Being untrained militia, all fled from the assault of the British save Robert Hicks, who scorned to retreat and single-handed fought the enemy. He finally escaped from the Red Coats, according to the records in the war department at Washington, and shared the dangers and glories of the struggle for independence. The records of North Carolina concerning that period show that Captain Hicks was issued certain certificates in payment for services rendered as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

It was from such ancestry that L. B. Stone sprang in the maternal line. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen K. Stone, had a family of seven children: Mary, who became the wife of George S. Albright of Fayetteville; Stephen R., a merchant of Olathe, Kansas; Benjamin H., of Fayetteville; William C., of Altus, Oklahoma; Lodowick Brodie, of Fayetteville; Amanda M.; and Albert Brodie, who is engaged in the practice of law. The mother gave the block of ground where the City Hospital of Fayetteville now stands, it then containing only a small brick building. It was her wish and will that this ground be used for the sake of humanity and on the board of trustees she appointed one member from every denomination, both Jews and Gentiles, represented in Fayetteville.

Stephen K. Stone was a man of splendid business ability, adaptable, ready, alert and possessed of broad information. He was characterized by a genial manner, affability and generosity and was constantly extending a helping hand where aid was needed. He made a notable record in the achievement of success, but it was his straightforward and creditable business policy that gained for him the high regard and goodwill of all with whom he came in contact. A contemporary biographer said of him: "In his relation to the city and public generally Mr. Stone was simply a modest, quiet citizen without ambition for politics or for public office. The nearest he came to holding an office was when he was made deputy postmaster at Fayetteville to protect his interests as a bondsman for the postmaster. He was reared a whig but when that party dissolved he became a democrat. He was not a party to any of the events of the Civil war but was in sympathy with the southern cause and gave it his moral support. He was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he was affiliated with the blue lodge of Masons and with Washington Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M."

Lodowick Brodie Stone was educated in the University of Arkansas and in the Emory and Henry College at Emory, Virginia, being thus well qualified for life's practical and responsible duties. He afterward returned home and he and his brother, Benjamin H. Stone, purchased the father's store and carried on mercantile pursuits from 1880 until 1891, winning substantial success during that period. In the latter year they disposed of the store and purchased the farm of David Walker, who had built a large brick house upon the place prior to the Civil war. When hostilities between the North and South occurred Mr. Walker and his family removed southward and after the battle of Prairie Grove the Union army used the house as a hospital. L. B. Stone still owns the farm and he has altogether five hundred and fifty acres, constituting the best and most highly improved farm property in the county. Hereon he raises full-blooded shorthorn cattle, Shropshire sheep and Duroc hogs and is one of the most prominent stock raisers of this section of the state. He has made a most thorough study of scientific methods of farming and stock raising and his wide understanding and unflinching industry have been strong features in the attainment of his present-day success.

In 1884 Mr. Stone was married to Miss Juliet Thurmond, who was born in Nashville, Tennessee, a daughter of James M. and Prairie (Brodie) Thurmond. Her mother was born in a log cabin in Fayetteville, then considered the finest house in the town. Mr. Thurmond was born in Nashville, Tennessee, and they were married near Clarksville, that state. Removing to Fayetteville, Mr. Thurmond engaged in contracting and building. He afterward took up his abode in Texas, where he died in 1906. He was considered a very wealthy man for his day, owning one thousand acres of land, and was also successfully engaged in merchandising. To Mr. and Mrs. Thurmond were born three children, of whom two are living, Mrs. Stone and Mrs. Mary Whitcomb, a widow residing in Groesbeck, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Stone have become parents of a son, Dudley, who is engaged in merchandising at Pierce City, Missouri. He married Marie Roberts and they have one daughter, Juliet Annette Stone.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Stone are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, with which they have been identified for many years. The grandfather, Lodowick Brodie, gave the lot upon which the church now stands to the society and thus for several generations representatives of the family have been closely associated with the moral development of the community as promoted through the activities of the Methodist church. In politics Mr. Stone has always been a democrat and he belongs to the Anti Horse Thief Association. He still owns and occupies the house in which he was born, his father having purchased this large brick residence from Judge David Walker in 1858, the judge having erected the building ten years before. Through various connections Mr. Stone is closely associated with the pioneer development and later history of Fayetteville and the western portion of the state. He has long taken an active and prominent part in public affairs and his labors have been so directed that the results achieved have been most gratifying to the public. His memory forms a connecting link between the primitive past and the progressive present and there are few events which have to do with the history of Fayetteville and northwestern Arkansas with which he is not thoroughly acquainted.

W. D. DAVENPORT.

W. D. Davenport, attorney at law of Searcy, was born August 3, 1877, in White county, Arkansas, and comes of Irish ancestry. His grandfather, John Davenport, was a native of the Emerald isle and in 1830 crossed the Atlantic, settling in North Carolina. Later he removed to Tennessee and afterward to White county, Arkansas, in 1856. He then entered one hundred and sixty acres of wooded land and after clearing away the trees and brush, broke the sod and began the development of a farm. He was one of the pioneer settlers of White county, having made the journey westward with ox team and wagon and his oxen were used in breaking the sod. There was much big game to be had in this section of the country at the time and all of the experiences and hardships of pioneer life constituted the features of the daily existence of the people of the community. He did his trading at West Point in the early days and he lived to see many changes as the country became settled and developed. His death occurred during the Civil war period. He was the father of Benjamin F. Davenport, who was born in North Carolina and accompanied his parents to Arkansas in 1856. He enlisted in the Confederate army from White county and served during the last year of the war, although only fifteen years of age, being on duty west of the Mississippi, the time being largely passed in northern Arkansas and along the Missouri border. When the war was over he returned to White county, where he became a land owner and carried on general farming. He had to clear, break and improve his land and from time to time he added to his holdings, prospering as the years passed by. He continued to occupy and further develop the homestead until his death and the property is still in possession of the family. In young manhood he married Frances Haywood, a native of Mississippi, the daughter of Tillman Haywood, who removed from Mississippi to Greene county, Arkansas, in 1866 and in 1867 came to White county. In Mississippi he had been a slave-owner and had engaged extensively in farming, but during the Civil war lost everything that he had save his home. After coming to this state he bought land in White county and here spent his remaining days, his death occurring in 1876; while his wife, who bore the maiden name of Tabitha Haley, also departed this life here. Their daughter, Mrs. Frances Davenport, survives her husband, who died in 1886 at the age of thirty-six years. She has reached the age of seventy-two and she recently carded and spun yarn and made a scarf, which was on exhibit at the Arkansas state fair. Mr. Davenport was a populist in political faith and in religious belief a Christadelphian, while Mrs. Davenport belongs to the Apostolic church. In their family were four children: W. D., of this review; Kate, the wife of Walter N. Harshaw, who operates a gin and conducts a farm at Pangburn, Arkansas; Jennie, who is the widow of George Reaves; and Benjamin Booth, who died at the age of sixteen years. The daughter, Jennie, had one child by her first marriage, Maude, who is the wife of Riley Doyle, a farmer of Pangburn, Arkansas. After losing her first husband Mrs. Reaves became the wife of Pressely Broadwater and they have one child, May, who is the wife of Goldie Williams of Pangburn, Arkansas. Mrs. Broadwater died in 1901.

W. D. Davenport, having mastered the elementary branches of learning taught in the rural schools of White county, continued his education in the Searcy high school and then took up the occupation of farming, to which he had been reared and which work he successfully conducted. He also taught in the district schools for a period of ten years, mostly in the winter seasons and ambitious to advance his education he later became a student in the State University, where he prepared for law practice, being graduated in 1909 with the Bachelor of Laws degree. In the same year he opened an office in Searcy and entered upon general practice. Through the intervening period he has tried all kinds of cases. While he regards the practice of law as his real life work he is also well known as a land-owner, having a thousand acres, from which he derives a good rental. Mr. Davenport is also interested in the Union Bank & Trust Company of Searcy as one of its directors and vice president.

Mr. Davenport was united in marriage to Miss Margaret E. Figg, who was born in White county, and they became parents of two children, but the older one died in infancy. The other, Elvin Figg, is at home. Mr. Davenport is a democrat in his political views and has been called upon to fill several important public positions. In 1915 he was elected to the state senate, serving as president of the upper house during 1917. He was also acting governor of the state for a short time during the absence of the chief executive. He is thoroughly conversant with all of the questions vital to the welfare and progress of the commonwealth and his aid and influence have been a dominant force in shaping the history of the state in recent years. His patriotism and public spirit are manifest in all that he does and his labors have brought satisfactory and helpful results.

A. J. McCOLLUM.

A. J. McCollum, well known financier and member of the bar, who since 1903 has been at the head of the Merchants & Farmers Bank of Atkins and who has ever recognized and met his obligations and duties in relation to the public welfare, certainly deserves classification with the prominent and representative residents of Pope county. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Hickman county, in September, 1845, and has therefore passed the seventy-sixth milestone on life's journey, yet remains an active factor in the world's work. His parents, John and Susan (Carothers) McCollum, were natives of South Carolina, whence they removed to Tennessee in early life and were there married. The father was a farmer and saddler and following the establishment of his home in Tennessee he continued to reside in that state until called to his final rest. He was quite successful in his business affairs and was a well educated man who exerted considerable influence over public thought and action. He belonged to the Christian church, while his wife held membership in the Presbyterian church. In politics he was a democrat and filled some of the local offices.

A. J. McCollum, who was the second in order of birth in a family of six children and who is the only one living, was educated in the schools of Hickman county and of Perry county, Tennessee, and started out in the business world as a farmer, continuing to devote his attention to general agricultural pursuits until 1874. He removed to Missouri in December, 1870, and was identified with the farming interests of that state until 1874, when he was called to public office, being elected circuit clerk. He served altogether for twenty years, making a most splendid record by the prompt and capable manner in which he discharged his duties. In January, 1903, he came to Arkansas and settling at Clinton organized the Van Buren County Bank. In the same year, however, he disposed of that bank and came to Atkins in September, 1903, after which he established the Merchants & Farmers Bank with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars. The bank has averaged deposits amounting to two hundred thousand dollars and has enjoyed a steady and substantial growth. Mr. McCollum wisely directing the interests of the institution as president of the bank from the beginning. He has also been admitted to the bar and practices law in connection with his banking business. His knowledge of the law, too, is of value to him in the conduct of his financial interests.

In 1867 Mr. McCollum was married to Miss Alice Harrington, who was born in Perry county, Tennessee, and they became parents of two children: Mary, who is the wife of Elijah Dalton, a farmer and banker of Pocahontas, Arkansas; and Thomas, of Springfield, Missouri, who is a traveling salesman. The wife and mother died in 1878, in the faith of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a consistent member. In 1879 Mr. McCollum was married to Miss Emma Borth, who was born in Ripley county, Missouri, and they have become parents of three children: Oscar H., who is cashier of the Merchants & Farmers Bank of Atkins; Albert C., who is assistant cashier of the bank; and Flora, the wife of Dr. L. Gardner of Russellville. The family is one of prominence as judged by all well known standards, Mr. McCollum measuring up in every way to high ideals of manhood and citizenship. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, in the work of which they take active and helpful interest, Mr. McCollum serving as one of the elders. He is also a Royal Arch Mason and was secretary of his lodge for a number of years. He likewise belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Knights of The Maccabees. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and for eight years he served as mayor of Atkins, his administration of municipal affairs being strictly businesslike and progressive. There is also a military chapter in the life record of Mr. McCollum, for in the fall of 1861 he enlisted in the Confederate army as a member of Company H, Forty-second Tennessee Infantry and served to the close of the war. He was captain of his company and he was paroled and discharged near Franklin, Tennessee, in November, 1864. He participated in the battles of New Hope Church, Jackson, Mississippi, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Georgia, Fort Donelson, Tennessee, and in several other of the lesser engagements. He was captured at Fort Donelson, Tennessee, and was in prison seven months during the war, at Chicago, Illinois. His life history is altogether interesting inasmuch as it shows what can be accomplished, not only in the way of attaining success but also in developing character. He started out in the world a poor boy and all that he possesses has been acquired through his own labors, his entire career proving that prosperity and an honored name may be gained simultaneously.

ROY R. GEAN.

Roy R. Gean, who since his service in the United States army during the World war, has been engaged in the practice of law in Fort Smith, being one of the younger members of the bar who is rapidly forging his way to the front, was born in Van Buren, this state, on the 19th of September, 1894, his parents being John R. and Charlotte (Mann) Gean. The maternal grandfather was a soldier of the Confederate army during the Civil war.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, Roy R. Gean attended the public schools of VanBuren and later prepared for his professional career as a student in the law department of the La Salle University through its extension course. He continued his reading until he had thoroughly qualified for practice and then, having passed the required examination for admission to the bar, he opened a law office in Fort Smith. Advancement in the profession is proverbially slow, yet he made steady progress and after a time entered into partnership with James A. Gallaber. His professional activity, however, was interrupted by his service in the World war. On the 26th of April, 1917, he volunteered for the army and went to the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Roots. There he was honorably discharged. Later he was drafted into the service on the 26th of August, 1918, and remained a member of the Fourth Company of the Fourth Battalion, I. C. O. T. S., until mustered out the following December.

Mr. Gean was united in marriage in 1919 to Miss Nan Fisher Baker of Oklahoma City, and they have become parents of a daughter, Francis Virginia. Mr. Gean is identified with the Masonic fraternity and also has membership with the Woodmen of the World and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He finds pleasurable associations in these orders and is loyal to their teachings and purposes. The major part of his attention, however, is given to his professional interests and earnest effort, close application and the exercise of his native talents have won him constant advancement as a representative of the bar. By reason of what he has already accomplished it seems that his future career will be well worth watching. He is now assistant prosecuting attorney of the twelfth judicial district.

WILLIAM G. MAURICE.

William G. Maurice is a man who has attained success by following out high ideals of service to his fellowmen. If he had to sacrifice the opportunity for either one, it would be the former: but in making his life of benefit to his fellows he has also attained prosperity and the most envious cannot grudge him his success, so honorably has it been won and so worthily used. Not to know William G. Maurice in Hot Springs is to argue one's self unknown. He is the possessor of the most beautiful home of the city, the owner of the finest and most perfect baths. At the same time he is a prominent figure in banking circles, being vice president of the Arkansas Trust Company, and until recently he was president of the De Soto Mineral Spring Company, owner of a magnificent drinking pavilion. He is likewise the president of the Manitou Baths at Manitou, Colorado.

William G. Maurice is a son of Charles E. Maurice, who was one of the original lessees at Hot Springs when the district was taken over by the government as a permanent reservation, through act of congress in 1877. From early youth, therefore, William G. Maurice became familiar with questions relative to the development of the bath interests of the city and since that time he has cherished high ideals which have found their expression in the building and conduct of the Maurice Baths.

Mr. Maurice is a supporter of all public enterprises of worth and is very generous of his means and his time toward all commendable causes. No man has done more for the city than he, for he makes immediate response to any call for service in the field of benefit for Hot Springs. The poor and needy, too, find in him a friend and champion and his interest in helping others is manifest in his service as president of the Hot Springs Associated Charities. He is a Mystic Shriner and his life has always been an exemplification of the spirit and object of the Masonic fraternity, which recognizes the brotherhood of man and the obligations thereby imposed. It is said that no one knows more of the great men of the country than does W. G. Maurice, and his appreciation of high friendship was shown in the establishment of a memorial room to Elbert Hubbard, representing the highest Roycroft ideals.

JULIUS S. MOORE, M. D.

Dr. Julius S. Moore, an eminent representative of the medical profession, who has attained wide reputation in surgical practice in Arkadelphia, was born at Three Creeks, Union county, Arkansas, September 4, 1882, a son of George W. and Isakatera (Godley) Moore, who were natives of this state and of Louisiana, respectively, but were married in Arkansas. The father has for many years been engaged in mercantile pursuits at Three Creeks and is one of the leading business men of that locality.

Dr. Moore completed his more specifically literary education by graduation from Ouachita College of Arkadelphia with the A. B. degree, as a member of the class of 1905. He then took up the study of pharmacy and completed a course in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, with the class of 1904. When he had finished his studies in the east he returned to Arkadelphia and continued as a student in Ouachita College of this city. Later he entered upon preparation for the practice of medicine and surgery, matriculating as a student in the University of Virginia as a member of the class of 1909. When his course there was completed he removed to Bienville, Louisiana, where he remained in active practice for a period of four years. Later he spent two years as an interne in Grace Hospital at Detroit, Michigan, and gained that broad and valuable experience which is never acquired as quickly in any other way as in hospital practice. He likewise became an interne in Lakeside Hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, where he continued for a year and subsequently he spent one year in the Charity Hospital at Shreveport, Louisiana.

In May, 1918, Dr. Moore enlisted for service in the Medical Corps of the United States army and was stationed for four months at the Base Hospital at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. He was then sent overseas with the Evacuation Hospital and saw service at the front for about a year. He was commissioned a captain and was honorably discharged in August, 1919. With his return to Arkansas, Dr. Moore opened an office in Arkadelphia, where he is associated with Dr. Charles Wallace in conducting the Moore & Wallace Sanitarium. He specializes in surgery and his marked capability in this field of professional labor has gained him prominence and fame.

On the 10th of August, 1920, Dr. Moore was married to Miss Maud S. Talbot of Bernice, Louisiana. Mrs. Moore is a lady of liberal culture and refinement and they are numbered with the consistent and helpful members of the Baptist church. Dr. Moore has membership in Arkadelphia Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; in Albert Pike Consistory, A. & A. S. R.; and Al-Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is likewise identified with Arkadelphia Lodge, B. P. O. E., while along strictly professional lines he has membership with the Clark County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the Southern Medical Association. Through the proceedings of these bodies he keeps informed concerning the advance work of the profession and is familiar with each forward step that has been taken in finding solution for the difficult problems which have to do with the laws of life.

FRED O. COLLMAN.

Fred O. Collman, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the United Oil Mills of Hope, now the Temple Cotton Oil Company, was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, January 15, 1887. His parents were Fred A. and Anna (Bonnie) Collman and the father, a native of Germany, came to the United States in his youth, settling in Hoboken, New Jersey, where he remained until he obtained his naturalization papers. He then joined the United States army and served under his uncle for twenty years. He saw much service on the frontier, fighting the Indians, and went through many interesting and sometimes dangerous experiences while connected with the military forces of the country. Immediately after receiving his discharge he was married in Indiana to Miss Anna Bonnie, who was born and reared in that state. A year or two later they removed to Arkansas, being among the early settlers of Little Rock, where Mr. Collman became a public accountant. After a time he was identified with the accounting department of the Missouri Pacific Railroad and remained in the employ of that corporation for many years. He died in 1897. His wife still survives, making her home in the capital city.

Fred O. Collman was educated in the schools of Little Rock until graduated from the high school, with the class of 1904. He afterward entered the law department of the University of Arkansas, from which he received his law degree as a member of the class of 1909. However, he did not take up the active practice of the profession. The year prior to his graduation he had become identified with the oil mill business as an employe of the Arkansas Cotton Oil Company, now the American Cotton Oil Company, beginning with the firm in a clerical capacity. He worked steadily upward through the various positions of cashier and auditor to the important post of manager of the business and remained with the company until 1915, when he came to Hope to accept the position of auditor of the United Oil Mills at this place. In 1916 he was made manager of the local plant and in 1917 he was elected secretary and treasurer of the company, while in 1921 he became general manager and now has charge of the company's business at this place with three oil mill plants in the state of Arkansas and one in Oklahoma, together with thirty cotton gins in southwestern Arkansas. The concern is now the Temple Cotton Oil Company. The business is one of large and substantial proportions and is steadily growing under the wise direction and capable management of Mr. Collman.

In 1906 Mr. Collman was married to Miss Katherine Long Wright of Lonoke, Arkansas, and they have become parents of a son and a daughter: Fred Albert and Edith Louise. Mr. Collman belongs to the Episcopal church, while his wife is a member of the Baptist church and their children have membership in the Presbyterian church. Mr. Collman belongs to the Masonic fraternity, being connected with Magnolia Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M.; and Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R. He has likewise crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of Al-Amin Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and he belongs to Hope Lodge, No. 1109, B. P. O. E., and the Rotary Club. He is likewise a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is serving on its board of directors. He has also been its president and has filled the presidency of the Rotary Club. He ranks with the foremost citizens of Hope and is untiring in his efforts to advance the public welfare and promote progress along lines of civic advancement and improvement. His life record illustrates what can be accomplished through determined efforts. He had no special advantages at the outset of his career but by the employment of industry, perseverance and diligence he has accomplished much, progressing step by step until public opinion accords him leadership in business circles and classes him with the foremost representatives of his section of the state.

R. H. WHITLOW.

R. H. Whitlow, secretary and manager of the Mutual Aid Union, with offices at Rogers, is a self-educated and self-made man who owes nothing to the adventitious aids that ordinarily push men forward, but has worked his way steadily upward, placing his dependence upon the substantial qualities of industry, perseverance and integrity. He is a native of Mississippi, his birth having occurred in Corinth on the 3d of June, 1868. His parents were Moses and Lucy (Byrne) Whitlow, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Mississippi, in which state their marriage occurred. The father was born in 1836 and in 1850 he made his way to Mississippi, where he continued to make his home throughout the remainder of his life, conducting mercantile interests. He was also a large slaveholder and a most successful business man up to the period of the Civil war, which ruined him financially. His father was likewise a planter and slaveholder, maintaining his residence in North Carolina. Moses Whitlow gave his political allegiance to the democratic party and fraternally he was identified with the Masons. He died in 1881, at the age of forty-five years, and his wife's demise occurred in 1871. She was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church. To their union were born nine children, of whom five are living.

R. H. Whitlow, the seventh in order of birth in the family, has never been accorded educational opportunities, but in the school of experience he has learned many valuable lessons and through wide reading, study and close observation has become a well informed man. When twelve years of age he was obliged to seek his own livelihood and obtained work as a farm hand, receiving a salary of six dollars per month. He was next employed in a gin mill and later in a grist mill and when he had reached the age of twenty he became a clerk in a store. In 1905 he came to Arkansas, first locating at Heber Springs, and in July, 1907, he came with his bride to Rogers, his total cash capital amounting to sixty-two dollars. Here he established the Mutual Aid Union, which has since enjoyed a prosperous existence, and is the oldest man connected with the institution. He was made vice president and general manager of the business but is now serving in the capacity of secretary and manager. This is one of the most substantial organizations of the kind in the state, its splendid development being due to the close application and able management of Mr. Whitlow, who during a period of fourteen years has put almost eighty million dollars worth of insurance in force for the Mutual Aid Union, which now stands as a monument to his enterprise and business ability.

At Heber Springs, Arkansas, in February, 1907, Mr. Whitlow was united in marriage to Miss Eva Peeler, who was born near Hiram, this state, a daughter of Micklin Peeler, a veteran of the Civil war and a large planter of Arkansas, of which he was one of the pioneer settlers. He has departed this life but the mother survives, making her home at Pangburn, Arkansas. In their family were five children, of whom two are living: Mrs. Whitlow; and Dr. C. M. Peeler, a well known physician and druggist of Pangburn. Mr. and Mrs. Whitlow have become the parents of two children: Francis, twelve years of age; and Horace, aged nine. Both are attending school.

Mrs. Whitlow is a Christian Scientist in religious faith and prominent in the work of the church, acting as reader. Mr. Whitlow gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of which he is a past exalted ruler, and he is also connected with the Masons. He has fought life's battles unaided and has come off a victor in the strife. His fellow townsmen attest his sterling worth and he has gained a wide circle of friends during the period of his residence in Rogers.

HENRY CONRAD FABER.

Henry Conrad Faber is one of the most active and energetic business men in Crawford county, and closely watching every opportunity for the attainment of legitimate success, he has made constant progress since starting out in the business world on his own account. For twenty-five years he has conducted the Faber Store in Van Buren and he is readily conceded to be a representative citizen of the community.

Henry Conrad Faber was born in Sebastian county, Arkansas, on his grandfather's farm in 1868, and this farm is still in possession of the family. His parents were William L. and Georgie L. (Knox) Faber. The paternal grandfather, Conrad William Faber, was for many years a prominent business man in New York city and a personal friend of John Jacob Astor. Mr. Astor and Mr. Faber were then on a par in the business world. Mr. Faber, however, met with financial disaster when, after shipping a large consignment of turpentine, tar and pitch to an English concern, that concern failed and the shipment was seized. Grandfather Faber's demise occurred in 1852 in Brooklyn, New York, and he is buried in Greenwood Cemetery there. Our subject's paternal grandmother was Annie Bolton Booth Faber, and her death occurred when her son, William L., was born. William L. was cared for by his grandmother Booth until he was seven years old. He was then sent to Germany and was there reared by Mrs. Harnickell, an aunt, and educated at Heidelberg. A brother of Annie Bolton Booth, Prof. James Curtis Booth, was for forty years identified with the mints in Philadelphia and was a highly esteemed and representative citizen. William L. Faber, the father of our subject, was highly educated and was an accomplished musician. He was one of the first chemists and mining engineers in this country and at the time of his demise in Salt Lake City in 1873, he was in the employ of a large mining company there. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served on General Van Dorn's staff in the Confederate army. Mrs. Faber's death occurred May 27, 1920. She was a daughter of George W. and Eudora (Rose) Knox, and both her mother and grandmother were natives of Arkansas. A diary was recently found by Mr. Faber which was written by his grandfather Knox, in which he describes a boat trip from Arkansas to New York in 1842, and speaks of St. Louis, Chicago and other large cities, as thriving little towns.

In the acquirement of an education H. C. Faber attended the schools of Little Rock. In 1892, after putting his textbooks aside, he came to Van Buren, and because of serious eye trouble at this time, engaged in raising strawberries. For four years he was thus actively engaged, achieving substantial success, and at the termination of that time he determined to enter the business world and subsequently opened an establishment in Van Buren. For twenty-five years now he has been one of the leading merchants in Crawford county and he is perhaps the only retailer in the country who is a stockholder in the Reynolds-Davis Grocery Company of Fort Smith, wholesale grocers. Mr. Faber is a stockholder in the Oklahoma Auto Manufacturing Company of Muskogee and the Coca-Cola Manufacturing business in Fort Smith. He likewise operates the old home farm of five hundred acres.

On June 6, 1918, Mr. Faber was united in marriage to Miss Pauline Sadler, a daughter of W. P. Sadler of Van Buren, who is clerk of the state supreme court in Little Rock. Mr. Faber takes the interest of an intelligent and wide-awake citizen in public affairs, and in selection of competent men for public office. In his business life he has been a persistent, resolute and energetic worker, possessing strong executive powers, and added to a progressive spirit, ruled by more than ordinary intelligence and good judgment, there has been a native justice which has expressed itself in correct principle and practice.

HARRY HOWARD FOSTER.

Harry Howard Foster, who was long a contributing factor to the growth and development of Little Rock and the state, manifested throughout the period of his residence in Arkansas the utmost loyalty to the commonwealth and its best interests. By reason of this quality and his winning personality he made friends of all with whom he came into contact and the news of his death carried with it a sense of bereavement into hundreds of homes throughout Arkansas. Mr. Foster was born in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, March 15, 1857, a son of Edward Augustus Foster. He came of a family devoted to the lumber industry and when he attained his majority he turned to the same line of business. His ancestors, even back to Revolutionary war days, have been identified with the lumber trade and he early received his training in that connection from his father. Soon after the birth of Harry Howard his parents removed to Oconto, Wisconsin, and in 1865 went to Muskegon, Michigan, while in 1869 they became residents of Ludington, Michigan. These various districts offered excellent opportunity for lumbering and from his earliest childhood Mr. Foster was familiar with the business and as he grew in years he gained practical knowledge thereof. He spent two years as a student in Olivet College at Olivet, Michigan, following the completion of his public school course and then left school to become the active assistant of his father, with whom he entered into partnership under the firm name of E. A. Foster & Company. They established a new lumber business at Ludington in the early '80s and in 1883, after disposing of their interests at Ludington, they bought into the firm of A. R. Gray & Company of Chicago. In 1884 Harry H. Foster retired from the firm in which his father was interested and removed to the Wisconsin valley, where he became identified with the McDonald Lumber Company, but sold out in 1885. The following year he went to Racine, Wisconsin, where he became one of the incorporators of the West Shore Lumber Company, which is still in existence. He severed his connection with that concern in 1887, at which time he went as manager of the Merrill Lumber Company at Merrill, Wisconsin, a company of which his father was president and had been one of the organizers in the previous year. Mr. Foster occupied that position until 1901, when he accepted the presidency of the Wisconsin & Arkansas Lumber Company at Malvern, Arkansas, and on the 1st of December of that year, he assumed his duties as the chief executive of the corporation. From that time until his death, which occurred on the 11th of March, 1915, he made his home in Little Rock. He constantly extended the scope of his activities and at his demise was president not only of the Wisconsin & Arkansas Lumber Company, but also of the Arkansas Land & Lumber Company, likewise a Malvern concern, and president of the Malvern & Freeo Valley Railroad. He was one of the first of the governing board of the Southern Pine Association and a director of the Union Trust Company. He assisted in organizing the Thief River Falls Lumber Company of Thief River, Minnesota, and was one of the founders of the Wausau & Everett Lumber Company and the Arkansas Land & Lumber Company, of which he was president, and at one time he was president of the Southern Yellow Pine Association. He became one of the well known lumbermen of the country by reason of his activities in Wisconsin, Michigan, Chicago and Arkansas. He at all times displayed remarkable resourcefulness and forcefulness in the conduct of business affairs and was a dynamic force in the industrial, commercial and financial development of the state.

It was on the 15th of June, 1886, that Mr. Foster was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Wallin of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and they became the parents of a son, Wallin, and two daughters, Marion, who is now Mrs. S. A. Cochran of Little Rock; and Dorothy May, now the wife of Ross McCain of Hartford, Connecticut. Mr. Foster was well known in fraternal circles, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in Masonry and was also connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His social nature found expression in his membership in the Country Club and the Quapaw Club, while his interest in the moral progress of the community was manifest in his active and efficient service as a director of the Young Men's Christian Association and in his membership in the Second Presbyterian church. His marked traits of character were such as commended him to the confidence and high regard of all. His business interests were extensive and in his passing the community in which he lived sustained an irreparable loss. He was ever mindful of his civic duties and opportunities and at all times put forth earnest effort to advance high standards in citizenship and promote the welfare of city and state. He played well his part in every relation of life and when he died one of the papers of Malvern, where he had large business interests, wrote of him as follows: "H. H. Foster was one of the men brought to Arkansas by good resources awaiting capital and energy and ability." But this captain of industry did not treat Arkansas merely as a place for his business activities. With his home established in Little Rock he made himself a part of the community. Our work was his work, our burdens his burdens, and he did his share and more in good and deserving causes.

"It is only a just tribute to say that this man from the north, who won for himself so many warm and true friends, exemplified in his life in Arkansas that this nation is one nation and its people one people. His sudden death called forth universal expressions of regret that he should have been taken away at the height of his usefulness, for the passing of his type of man from a community means that it has sustained a grievous and irreparable loss.

"While the home of Mr. Foster was at Little Rock, the most of his time while in Arkansas, was spent by him looking after his business interests in and about Malvern; every one about Malvern had learned to know and love him. No man could be with him long without becoming his friend. His very presence compelled friendship. The sunny smile which dominated his face was not the mere mask of the 'hail fellow, well met,' but the outward manifestation of an inborn and ingrained kindly nature, filled to the full with the joy of living and the delight of mingling with his fellowmen.

"What most endeared him to men was his intense humanity. He was human all through and he loved humankind; and those who were admitted to the inner cloisters of his intimacy feel that in losing him we lost a part of our own selves, and that life for us will never again be as complete a thing as it was before he was taken away. Mr. Foster was more than a friendly acquaintance to those with whom he frequently came into contact. He was a fatherly man. He was at once interested in the things in which you were interested, and immediately took upon himself the cloak of helper and adviser, and if the beautiful dream of the poet be true, that on the roll of the book of gold hereafter the names of those who loved their fellowmen shall be first inscribed, then will his name be found high on the list.

"Mr. Foster was of the type which seeks efficiency by the law of its nature. His instincts were for order, discipline, intelligent direction, voluntary subordination to a common purpose, definite conclusion, achievement.

"He was modest and unassuming—never vaunted himself or pressed himself forward. He was free from the exaggerated egoism which has wrecked so many fair causes. He had the unselfishness and self-control to obey where others rightfully led, and he had the clearness of intelligence, the force of personality, and the decision of character to lead, so that others might follow. He was simple and direct in thought and action. He was frank and truthful and entirely free from that cowardice which breeds deception. He had naturally an unconscious courage. Among all the multitude who have known him, in boyhood and in manhood, in private and in business affairs, not one can recall a mean, or ignoble, or cruel, or deceitful word or act on his part. He was sincere in his beliefs, he was faithful to his word, he was steadfast in his friendship, he was loyal to every cause that he espoused. His life made men happier; his example is making men better.

"We will not see his winning smile, no more feel the cordial hand grasp, no more receive the acts of kindly sympathy, but the memory of it all will remain with us and make us feel thankful that we knew one whose impulses through life prompted his conduct towards others to the end that he might contribute to their happiness.

"In his family relations he was particularly blessed. His enjoyment and contentment reached its height when his family was gathered about him, and its members, more than any others, will miss him as a devoted husband, loving gentle father, and zealous protector.

"It is difficult, indeed, to realize that Harry Howard Foster has gone, never to return. Had he been spared there were other heights which he might have reached, but after traveling well the road of life service he was stricken down in the prime of life and left us lonely and sorrowful at his demise. We miss his cordial greeting, his heartfelt hand grasp, his tender solicitude. His memory will live always and we are better for having known him.

"The esteem in which he was held by his many friends are confessions of love and respect, on the part of those who not only knew him but who enjoyed in his presence and at his side those delightful characteristics and that personal charm which endeared him to young and old and which remained with him to the end. He has gone. He has trod the path we shall tread when the summons comes. Let us be as well prepared in all things as was he, for the good he did lives after him. Our struggle here may be longer, yet for whatever time it will be we will go on as 'weary ships to their haven under the hill.' I would pay tribute to those traits of character which made the loving husband, the devoted father, the faithful friend, the good citizen. These were the titles that he won; they were the flowers of love and duty and friendship that blossomed along his pathway through life. They constitute the fairest garland that can be placed upon his tomb."

BEN. N. ANTHONY.

Ben N. Anthony, distributor for the Buick motor cars at Texarkana, where he has already developed a large and growing business, was born in Bonham, Texas, on the 30th of January, 1880. He was reared in the Lone Star state and pursued his education in the public schools and in Carleton College. Early in his business career he started out upon the road as a traveling salesman and was thus engaged for seven years. He then turned his attention to the automobile business and in 1904 came to Texarkana, Arkansas. He has had the agency for the Buick cars here through the intervening period and has developed a gratifying business, annually making many sales. In November, 1920, he established a branch office at El Dorado. In addition to the conduct of his agency he owns and operates a farm of one hundred and twenty acres in the cotton belt and this, too, is a gratifying source of revenue.

In 1914 Mr. Anthony was united in marriage to Miss Linnie B. Webber, a daughter of Colonel T. E. Webber. Mr. Anthony belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and is in hearty sympathy with the plans and purposes of that organization to upbuild the city, to extend its trade relations and uphold its high civic standards. He is regarded as one of the progressive young business men of Texarkana, his sterling worth being attested by all who know him. He belongs to the Christian church and he has a circle of friends almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintance.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

J. L. Williams, who is now serving as circuit clerk and recorder of Conway county and is a resident of Morrillton, was born in Conway county on the 31st of October, 1881, a son of A. J. and Martha Belle (Martin) Williams. His grandfather on the paternal side was W. J. Williams, a native of Georgia and an extensive and successful planter in that state. In later life he emigrated to Arkansas, making the trip with oxen, the journey covering several weeks. Locating in Conway county he homesteaded here and resided on the land until his death at the age of sixty-one years. He always did general farming and won prominence among the agriculturists of the community. The maternal grandfather, Andrew J. Martin, was born in Tennessee, where he engaged in planting for many years. Previous to the Civil war he came overland to Arkansas and entered eighty acres of land in Conway county. During the war his crops were repeatedly destroyed by bushwhackers. His death occurred at the age of fifty years, when he was overcome with the heat while plowing a field with a mule team. A. J. Williams was born in Georgia in 1855 and came to Conway in the '60s. He homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of wooded land here, which he cleared himself and upon which he erected a log house and other improvements. He is still living on the old homestead, at the age of sixty-six years. When Mr. Williams first located in this community the nearest trading post was Lewisburg, a landing on the Arkansas river. The country abounded in wild game, deer, bear, turkey and the like. In 1869 Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Martha Belle Martin, who was born in Conway county in 1857, and to their union eleven children were born: Hallie, the widow of G. E. Edison of Morrillton; J. L., whose name initiates this review; Ira, an instructor in the University of Illinois dental school and a graduate of that institution; Sallie, the wife of F. C. Cargile, who is engaged in the oil business in Morrillton, Arkansas; Myra, the widow of Amos Carter of Morrillton; Emmett, associated with the McGeorge Construction Company of Pine Bluff; Leah, residing with her father; Mattie, deputy circuit clerk of Conway county; and Alvie, attending the high school at Morrillton. Two other children died in infancy. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams are consistent members of the Presbyterian church and the father always gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, in the activities of which he takes a great interest.

In the acquirement of an education J. L. Williams attended the country schools of Conway county and graduated from the high school at Morrillton, with the class of 1904. He then enrolled as a student at Draughon's Business College in Little Rock and after putting his textbooks aside engaged in teaching in the rural schools until 1916. In that year he was elected to the office of county clerk for a period of four years and at the termination of that time was elected circuit clerk and recorder, in which capacity he is now active. Mr. Williams holds to the belief that every public office is a public trust and in every office in which he has been active he has discharged the duties and responsibilities devolving upon him in a very satisfactory manner. He owns some land in the county, which he rents and he takes an active interest in agricultural affairs.

Fraternally Mr. Williams is identified with the Masons, and is a member of Albert Pike Consistory of the Mystic Shrine. He is likewise a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a staunch supporter of the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he has for some time served that organization as elder. Mr. Williams is one of the estimable citizens of Morrillton, who can always be depended upon to meet his obligations in both public and private life.

D. C. GREEN.

D. C. Green, vice president and general manager of the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company, was born in Patriot, Indiana, in 1884. His youthful days were spent in his native state and after completing his public school education he attended Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana, where he pursued a course in electrical engineering, winning his E. E. degree in 1908. Since that time he has engaged in public utility work in the states of California, Oregon, Washington and Utah. His varied experience covering thirteen years has brought him wide knowledge of every phase of the work and steadily he has advanced in positions of responsibility until he is now the vice president and general manager of the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company, which furnishes light and power for Fort Smith. He has been in Arkansas for the past four years and during his connection with the corporation at Fort Smith he has been active in introducing improvements and thoroughly systematizing the business in every way, his labors bringing about excellent results.

In 1910 Mr. Green was united in marriage to Miss Frances Sexton, a daughter of Dr. J. C. Sexton of Rushville, Indiana, and they have become parents of one son, John Sexton.

In public affairs Mr. Green takes an active interest and his aid is ever given on the side of progress and improvement. He belongs to the Business Men's Club, of which he is now the vice president and one of the directors—an organization that is doing definite work for the improvement of business conditions in Fort Smith, taking into consideration all the problems that in any way effect the commercial or industrial life of the community. He likewise belongs to the Noon Civics Club, which, as the name indicates, has for its purpose the upholding and advancement of civic standards. He is likewise the president of the Rotary Club, vice president and one of the directors of the Country Club and is national council representative of the Fort Smith Boy Scouts. During the World war he served on all the committees having to do with the Red Cross and war fund drives and by reason of his marked energy, enterprise and patriotism he has become a dynamic force in the community in which he lives, being widely recognized as a leader of public thought and opinion.

WILLIAM LEROY LEE.

William LeRoy Lee, engaged in law practice at Dardanelle, has been a resident of Yell county since 1880, at which time he was brought to Arkansas by his parents, William Carter and Mollie (Walker) Lee, from the old home in Alabama, where William LeRoy Lee was born in 1874. His parents were natives of Virginia, but when young people they went to Alabama, where they were reared and married. The Lee family comes of the same ancestry as the distinguished Confederate general, Robert E. Lee. The grandfather in the maternal line was James Walker, a native of Virginia, who, removing to Alabama, spent his remaining days there. His daughter, Mrs. Lee, was a woman of liberal education, attending college at Selma, Alabama, while her husband's educational privileges were those of the common schools, but he became a well-read man of sound practical judgment and both were highly esteemed where they were known.

He devoted his life to farming and won a substantial measure of success in tilling the soil. In early manhood he served through the Civil war, was wounded on two or three occasions and was captured and sent to a northern prison. In 1880 he left Alabama and with his family removed to Yell county, Arkansas, where his wife departed this life, while subsequently he became a resident of Mississippi and there spent his remaining days. They were both Christian people, Mr. Lee belonging to the Methodist church, while his wife held membership in the Christian church. Fraternally he was a Mason and his political allegiance was always given to the democratic party. To him and his wife were born six children, three of whom are living: Mrs. Lena Bernard, a widow, residing at Centerville, Yell county; William LeRoy of this review; and C. W., an oil man of Glenpool, Oklahoma.

William L. Lee, having mastered the branches of learning taught in the common schools of Yell county, continued his education in the academy at Chickalah, Arkansas, and was there graduated. He also pursued a business course in Fort Smith and when seventeen years of age he began to teach, following the profession for four years. He regarded this, however, merely as an initial step toward other professional labor and while teaching he devoted his leisure hours to the study of law. He afterward engaged in merchandising at Dardanelle and continued in the business until 1911, when he sold his interests there. He was admitted to the bar in 1915 and through the intervening period has continued in active practice, making steady progress in his chosen profession. His purpose in conducting the mercantile business was to get funds enough with which to pursue his legal education and to give him a start in his law practice. He also became one of the organizers of the Farmers Bank of Dardanelle and was elected its first president, continuing to act in that capacity for five years, when he resigned in order to give his undivided time and thought to his practice. He is deeply interested in legal science and his ability is demonstrated in the success which has followed his efforts. He practices in partnership with H. C. Scott and the firm has a liberal clientele. Mr. Lee has ever displayed marked devotion to the interests of his clients, yet he never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. He practices in all of the state courts and he is a member of the Yell County Bar Association, of which he is secretary. His opponents in the trial of a case always recognize the fact that he had made careful preparation and ever displays marked ability in marshaling facts and evidence. Perhaps his strongest asset is his oratory and his ability in addressing a jury.

In 1906 Mr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss May Toomer, a daughter of Joshua Toomer, who possessed one of the brilliant minds of Arkansas and figured prominently in connection with the early history of the state, serving as a member of the state senate and exercising marked influence over public thought and action. Mr. Lee was called upon to mourn the loss of his first wife in 1907. On the 10th of July, 1909, he married Barton Caplinger, who was reared at Conway and is a niece of Captain J. M. Jenkins, a distinguished citizen of Quitman, Arkansas. Mrs. Lee was graduated from Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas, and by her marriage has become the mother of two children: Elizabeth and James, aged, respectively, eleven and four years. Mr. and Mrs. Lee belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and are interested in all those forces which make for higher ideals and the advancement of moral standards. Politically Mr. Lee is a democrat and served in the general assembly in 1921, being called to the office by the vote of his fellow townsmen without solicitation for the position on his part. He was made a member of the judiciary committee and also of the agricultural committee and thus he has figured in connection with lawmaking as well as with the interpretation of the law in the courts. He is making steady advance in his profession and his ability is widely acknowledged.

SAMUEL RITCHIE BROUGH.

Samuel Ritchie Brough, superintendent of the Arkansas Water Works at Little Rock, is a man of high professional attainment and broad experience, well qualified for the important duties that devolve upon him in his present connection. His training has been thorough, his activity of a comprehensive character and his developing powers have been recognized in his selection for important positions. Mr. Brough was born in Helena, Mason county, Kentucky, December 24, 1879. His parents were Samuel and Belle (Willette) Brough, also natives of Kentucky. The father was born on a farm in Mason county in 1840 and the mother's birth occurred in Helena, that county, in 1846. They were married in Helena in 1872 and became parents of four sons and three daughters, all of whom are living, Samuel R. being the third in order of birth. The parents resided for many years in Helena and the mother still makes her home there. The father became a physician, devoting his life to the practice of medicine, following his graduation from the medical department of the University of Michigan and the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. The efficiency of his service made his life work of great value to his fellowmen and he continued in active practice in Kentucky until called to his final rest in 1905. His political views were in accord with the teachings of the democratic party.

Samuel R. Brough attended the country schools of his native county and afterward had the benefit of thorough instruction in the Central University at Richmond, that state. He has been identified with public utility interests for many years. In fact, for twenty-two years he has been associated with water and electric projects, first entering upon work of this character in Joplin, Missouri. He has since been identified with similar work in the west, steadily advancing from one position to another of greater responsibility and in June, 1918, he accepted the superintendency of the Arkansas Waterworks at Little Rock, since which time he has acceptably filled the office, covering a period of three years. He is familiar with all the problems connected with work of this character and his services are giving general satisfaction to the company which he represents.

Mr. Brough was married October 18, 1911, to Miss Elizabeth Murphy, who was born in Menominee, Michigan, in April, 1885, and is a daughter of John and Anna (McCullough) Murphy, both of whom have departed this life. Her father was a native of the far distant Pine Tree state. Mrs. Brough is a graduate of the high school at Menominee, Michigan, and also of the Marquette (Mich.) Normal. Two children have been born of this marriage: John Willette, born in May, 1915; and Samuel R., born in February, 1919.

Mr. Brough rendered active service as fuel administrator during the World war, covering a district that comprised eight counties in Wisconsin. He filled this position in 1917 and 1918 and he was also one of the two generals on three Liberty Loan drives in Wisconsin. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party, but without desire for office, although a firm believer in party principles. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has not only taken the degrees of the lodge but also of the chapter and council and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Second Presbyterian church.

BENJAMIN D. BRICKHOUSE.

Benjamin D. Brickhouse is serving for the second term as mayor of Little Rock and is giving to the city an administration characterized by thorough study of municipal needs and by practical methods in the attainment of high ideals in municipal service. The story of his life is an interesting one to his fellow townsmen, for he has long occupied a place in public regard in this city. He was born in Norfolk, Virginia, June 8, 1873, and is a son of Benjamin D. and Louise A. (Wellons) Brickhouse. The father was born in Virginia in 1840 and resided in that state for many years but in 1891 removed to Arkansas, settling at Little Rock, where he continued to make his home until his demise. During the Civil war he served as a private in Company H of the Sixteenth Infantry (Norfolk Light Artillery Blues) and was on active duty until after the close of hostilities. In early manhood he wedded Louise A. Wellons, who was born in 1842 in North Carolina, their marriage being celebrated in Norfolk, Virginia, in 1867. The father died in 1916 and the mother, still surviving, makes her home at Little Rock. They became parents of four sons and three daughters, all of whom survive.

Benjamin D. Brickhouse, who was the fourth in order of birth in this family, pursued his education in the public schools of Norfolk, Virginia, to the age of twelve years and then removed with his parents to Austin, Texas, where he continued his studies in a private school. At length he determined to enter upon the practice of law as a life work and with this end in view he became a student in the law department of the University of Arkansas, from which in due course of time he was graduated as a member of the class of 1908, the LL. B. degree being at that time conferred upon him. He and his parents came to Little Rock in 1891 and therefore he had the opportunity to pursue his law studies in this state. Since then he has been a representative of the bar of Little Rock and has won a most creditable name and place among the attorneys of the city. In 1913 he was called to the office of alderman and by reelection was continued in the position until 1917 as representative of the eighth ward. In April, 1919, he was elected mayor and was reelected in 1921, so that he is now serving for the second term. He closely studies the needs and opportunities of the city and is seeking in every way to uphold high civic standards and to promote the welfare of the community. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party and he has ever been found a stalwart champion of its principles.

On the 20th of June, 1894, in Little Rock, Mr. Brickhouse was united in marriage to Miss Edna V. Erion, who was born in Paris, Illinois, in 1875, a daughter of Jacob and Mary J. (Marrs) Erion. Jacob Erion died in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1895. To Mr. and Mrs. Brickhouse were born two sons: Edwin Benjamin, born March 19, 1895, was married in 1918, in Little Rock, to Eulalia Sanders and they have two children, Roland B. and Clifford W.; Linwood Leonard, the younger son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin D. Brickhouse, was born October 17, 1897.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Brickhouse takes an active and helpful interest in the church work, serving on the official board of the Winfield Memorial church and acting as vice president of the board. Fraternally he is well known in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He likewise belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is a past Noble Grand. His labors have been carefully and wisely directed for the benefit of his fellowmen along many lines and he is interested in all those forces which tend to promote higher ideals or which broaden the field of general public service.

EDWIN B. SWINDLER, M. D.

Dr. Edwin B. Swindler, a physician of Stuttgart, whose ability in practice has long been successfully demonstrated, was born in Dawson Springs, Kentucky, in 1883. His father, M. N. Swindler, a native of Kentucky, was a son of David and Nancy (Snider) Swindler, who on removing westward from West Virginia settled in Livermore, Kentucky, and thus the family was planted in the Blue Grass state. M. N. Swindler, after arriving at years of maturity, was married to Miss Sarah E. Hildreth. The Hildreths were from Eddyville, Kentucky. The Snider family, of which Dr. Swindler is a representative in the paternal line, came from Pennsylvania, representatives of the name removing from that state to Fairmont, West Virginia. To M. N. and Sarah E. (Hildreth) Swindler there were born five children: Arthur V., who is now a druggist of Memphis, Tennessee; Charles J., an attorney living in Washington, D. C.; Edwin B.; Sarah M., who is also located in the national capital; and Catherine, the wife of J. D. Bell of Crawfordsville, Arkansas.

Dr. Swindler pursued his professional education in the medical department of the University of Tennessee and following his graduation located at Dardanelle, Arkansas, where he remained until 1913. It was in this latter year that he came to Stuttgart, Arkansas, and here he has continued in active and successful practice. He offered his services to the government during the World war and was commissioned a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps but was not called out for active service. He filled the position of chairman of the local draft board and was also examiner and at no time did he hesitate in the performance of any duty that furthered American interests or upheld the policy of the government in relation to the World war.

Dr. Swindler was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Dunlap, a daughter of James Dunlap, and they have two children, a daughter and a son, Sarah May and Charles Edwin. Dr. Swindler is a Mason, and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. He takes a deep interest in all forces that make for the uplift of the individual and the benefit of the community at large and his aid and influence are ever given on the side of right, progress, reform and improvement.

MILLARD BERRY.

Millard Berry, who is engaged in the abstract business in Springdale, was born in Washington, Indiana, October 19, 1856, and is a son of Walter E. and Angelina (Cross) Berry. The father was born in Mason county, Kentucky, while the mother's birth occurred in Daviess county, Indiana, and they were married in the latter state. They removed to Texas on leaving the north and there lived for four years, on the expiration of which period they came to Arkansas, settling in Springdale in 1883. The father, who had followed farming for many years, lived retired after coming to this state. Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Berry had one child, Millard, and all lived together until the father's death, which occurred about 1902. The mother survived for several years, dying in 1908 in the faith of the Christian church, to which she belonged, while Mr. Berry was a member of the Baptist church. In politics he was a democrat. The family record can be traced back to an early period in Kentucky. There resided Evans Berry, the grandfather of Millard Berry, who became one of the pioneers of Indiana, contributing to the agricultural development and progress of that state, in which he resided until his demise. The maternal grandfather, William Cross, was born in Virginia and he, too, became one of the early residents of Indiana.

Millard Berry of this review was educated in Washington, Indiana, and on starting out in life on his own account he entered a law office at that place. He was afterward admitted to practice at the bar of the state and followed his profession there for some time.

While still living in Indiana, Mr. Berry was married in 1878 to Miss Ida McHolland, who was born in Baltimore, Maryland, a daughter of Thaddeus McHolland, who was a carpenter by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Berry became parents of six children: Thaddeus, who is engaged in the abstract business in Fayetteville, Arkansas; Walter, who resides upon a farm near Springdale; Marian, the wife of B. C. Heiner, who is a physician practicing at Stilwell, Oklahoma; Helen, the wife of C. A. McQuaid, a dentist of Hominy, Oklahoma; Hazel D., who married Howard D. Ewalt, who is engaged in the real estate business at Springdale; and Josephine, the wife of Percy Brown, a registered druggist now connected with the Ownbey Drug Company of Springdale and Fayetteville, Arkansas.

Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Berry resided in Indiana until 1879 and then removed to Texas, where they remained for four years. On the expiration of that period, in 1883, they came to Arkansas, settling in Springdale, where Mr. Berry opened an abstract office. He also traveled through Arkansas and Texas during the first two years after coming to this state, after which he engaged in the abstract business, which has since claimed his attention. He is the oldest abstractor continuously engaged in this line in the county. He now devotes his entire attention to this undertaking and the management of his farming interests. He owns valuable farm property in Benton and Washington counties and is now planting his land to vineyards. He started with nothing when he came here from Dallas county, Texas, with a two-horse wagon. There were only two buggies in the town of Springdale at the time and the place had a population of but five hundred. Great, indeed, have been the changes which have occurred through the intervening period, as the district has become thickly settled and highly developed, while the old horse and wagon and other primitive vehicles have been replaced by the automobile.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Berry are most widely and favorably known. Mrs. Berry belongs to the Christian church and Mr. Berry has membership with the Masons and the Odd Fellows. He is a past master of the former and a past Noble Grand of the latter. In politics he has always been a democrat and he has served as mayor of Springdale for two or three terms. He has also been a member of the city council and of the school board and for two terms he was county judge of Washington county. He has made a most excellent record in office by the prompt and faithful manner in which he has discharged his duties. He has ever stood for development and improvement in public affairs, and his life has been a potent force in the accomplishment of good for the community in which he lives.

W. W. REID, D. D. S.

Dr. W. W. Reid, actively and successfully engaged in the practice of dentistry at Beebe, was born at Des Arc, in Prairie county, Arkansas, May 18, 1877, and is a son of John R. and Jennie (Perry) Reid, both of whom were natives of Middle Tennessee. The former came to Arkansas with his grandfather, Roderick McKeever, who was the first county clerk of Madison county, Tennessee, residing at Jackson. He cast in his lot with the pioneer settlers of Des Arc, Arkansas. He brought his slaves with him and engaged in farming quite extensively there to the time of his death. The maternal grandfather of W. W. Reid was a native of Tennessee and was a farmer and slaveowner, spending his life in his native state.

The marriage of John R. Reid and Jennie Perry was celebrated near Hazen, Arkansas, the former becoming a resident of the state prior to the Civil war. Here he acquired land and was an extensive farmer and slaveowner, his place of six hundred and forty acres being situated between Des Arc and Hazen. He had to clear a part of his land and placed the entire tract under cultivation. At one time he also owned a thousand acres between England and Little Rock, and sacrificed that place for ten thousand dollars. At one time he established a mercantile store at Des Arc and conducted it for several years. He freighted his goods up the Mississippi and White rivers to Des Arc and was prominently associated not only with the mercantile development of the town, but also operated a grist and saw mill upon his place. He was successfully engaged in business at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted, serving throughout the period of hostilities. He did scout duty at Poison Springs, where he was shot in the right arm, but he remained with the Confederate forces until the close of the war, when he returned to his home. The farm had suffered greatly through the ravages of war, but he at once resumed the further development and improvement of the place, carrying on general farming and stock raising and specializing in handling blooded cattle. He was a man of prominence and influence in his community and was frequently called to public office, serving for several terms as judge of Prairie county. His labors were a vital element in locating the county seat at Des Arc, and in many other ways he was active in shaping the history and promoting the progress and upbuilding of the state. At length he retired from business and removed to Oklahoma, where his death occurred in 1915, when he was seventy-one years of age. He had long survived the mother of W. W. Reid, who died in 1887. Mr. Reid was married three times. His first wife was Lyda Greer of Jackson, Tennessee, and they had three children: Lizzie, who is the widow of Charles Petty and makes her home in Little Rock; Charlow, occupying the old home farm at Des Arc; and one other. Having lost his first wife, Mr. Reid married Jennie Perry, and they had four children, three of whom are living: W. W.; Keever of Hazen, Arkansas; and Grace, who is now Mrs. Fisher of Little Rock. For his third wife John R. Reid chose Mrs. Mattie (Rinehart) Jones, and they had four children: Guy, who is an architect of Stilwater, Oklahoma; Roy, who was in the United States service during the World war; Fabel; and Lynn. Mr. Reid was a member of the Presbyterian church and also belonged to the Knights of Honor. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, and at all times he was actuated by a most progressive spirit, consistent with the public good.

W. W. Reid pursued a public school education at Des Arc and at Searcy, Arkansas, and further studied in Tennessee. He took up dentistry under the direction of Dr. J. S. Stilwell of Searcy, and afterward pursued postgraduate courses, while at all times he has kept abreast with the trend of professional thought and progress through his wide reading and broad experience. He began practice on the 20th of February, 1897, opening an office at Des Arc and also giving certain days each week to practice in other towns. In October, 1899, he enlisted in the United States army at Jackson, Tennessee, and was sent to the Philippines as a member of Company M, Forty-sixth Massachusetts Infantry. There he participated in the battles of Montalabon, in the engagement at Palowith on the 18th of September, 1900; at Santa Gorda in February, 1901, and in the skirmishes at Molino, at Julang in 1900; at Buena Vista in the same year, and at Pinnan in 1901. He took part in General Swan's expedition in the southern part of the islands, and was in the service for almost two years.

It was in 1909 that Dr. Reid came to Beebe, where he opened an office and has continued in practice, having been a representative of the profession here for thirteen years. He has been accorded a liberal patronage and his mechanical skill and ingenuity, combined with broad scientific learning along the line of his profession, insure him continued success.

Dr. Reid was married to Miss Mary Lena Norfleet, a native of Brinkley, Arkansas, and they have one child, Ward, who is attending the Agricultural College at Jonesboro, Arkansas. Dr. Reid belongs to the Presbyterian church, while his wife has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Beebe Lodge, No. 145, A. F. & A. M., and he also has membership in the Odd Fellows Lodge at McRae. He votes with the democratic party, but the honors and emoluments of office have never had attraction for him, as he has always preferred to devote his attention to other interests. He is a member of the Arkansas State Dental Association and also of the National Dental Association, and thus keeps thoroughly informed concerning all that has to do with the improvement of methods in his profession.

WILLIAM ANDERSON SNODGRASS, M. D.

Dr. William Anderson Snodgrass, physician and surgeon of Little Rock and the son of Andrew J. and Elmira (Waterfield) Snodgrass, was born in the town of Murray, Calloway county, Kentucky, in 1872. His father was a native of Johnson county, Tennessee, and the ancestral line in America dates back to two brothers who came to the new world early in the seventeenth century. William Snodgrass, the great-grandfather of Dr. Snodgrass, was a lieutenant colonel in Washington's army during the Revolutionary war and Andrew J. Snodgrass was a soldier in the Civil war, serving with the Confederate forces during the struggle from 1861 until 1865. He is still living and now making his home in Little Rock. The mother of Dr. Snodgrass was a native of Kentucky and is of pioneer stock in both the paternal and maternal lines. On the pages of Kentucky history again and again appears the name of Waterfield and of Welch.

Born in Murray, Calloway county, Kentucky, in 1872, Dr. Snodgrass acquired his early education there but when he was ten years of age his family removed to Arkansas and in Little Rock he completed his public school and collegiate courses, after which he entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas and was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1896. He ranks high among the surgeons of the south. He has for a quarter of a century been one of the leaders of his profession in Little Rock and for eleven years he occupied the position of demonstrator of anatomy, while for eight years he occupied the chair of clinical surgery in the University of Arkansas. Dr. Snodgrass now devotes his entire time to surgical practice and is on the staff of the City, St. Vincent's and the Baptist Hospitals and for the past seventeen years has been physician to the Arkansas Methodist State Orphanage. He is a member of all the medical societies and has served as secretary of the Pulaski County Medical Society, a position which he filled in the early days, while for two terms he acted as its president. For six years he was chairman of the council of the Arkansas State Medical Society and he also holds membership in the Southern Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is likewise a fellow of the American College of Surgeons and has ever made it his purpose to keep thoroughly informed concerning the advances that are being made by the leaders in medical and surgical practice. Broad study and investigation keep him in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress and he is indeed recognized as one of the leading surgeons of the state. He served in the World war with the rank of major in the Medical Corps and organized the only Red Cross Hospital Unit entered from the state of Arkansas. With this unit he went to France in January, 1918, and in April of the same year was transferred to the regular army in charge of Field Hospital No. 12, thus serving until mustered out in May, 1919.

It was in the year 1898 that Dr. Snodgrass was married to Miss Lelia Phillips, a daughter of John W. Phillips, of Hempstead county, Arkansas, her parents being pioneers in that section of the state. Mr. Phillips is a veteran of the Civil war and is well and popularly known in Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Snodgrass have four children: Myra, who is a graduate of the Nashville College and is now the wife of James Murray of Little Rock; Ruth, who is a graduate of the Little Rock high school; William A., Jr., and John Patterson, who are students.

In politics Dr. Snodgrass follows the principles of the democratic party and in religious faith the teachings of the Methodist church. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason. It has been men of the type and character of Dr. Snodgrass who have formed the strong fabric of this state—men who have never ceased to uphold in public aid and in private life the things that are wholesome and righteous and make for the upbuilding of a great commonwealth.

DREW FRANK HARRISON.

Drew Frank Harrison, a restaurant proprietor of El Dorado, was born in Hillsboro, Union county, Arkansas, February 7, 1880. His father, C. F. Harrison, who died in 1918, was one of the pioneer settlers of the city of Cleveland, Arkansas, and contributed to the early development and progress of the state. He came of a family distinctively American in its lineal and collateral branches through several generations. Throughout the greater part of his life he followed the occupation of farming, though for a short time he was engaged in commercial pursuits. He had two brothers who served throughout the entire period of the Civil war, also another brother who was killed while fighting at the front. C. F. Harrison was united in marriage to Miss Laura Sanders, who departed this life in 1913. She was born and reared in Union county, Arkansas, where her father had settled in pioneer times. She also belonged to one of the old American families, her ancestors having lived on this continent for an extended period.

Drew F. Harrison was educated in the country schools of Union county and in early youth worked in different positions, being employed in various ways until 1912. With an accumulated capital of two hundred and fifty dollars, saved from his earnings, he then started a restaurant in a small way. In the succeeding years he has built up a business which represents an investment of twenty thousand dollars and of which he is the sole owner. He has ever maintained high standards in the service given to the public, and his restaurant is a popular establishment, a traveler or a fellow townsman being always assured of a good meal if he visits the Harrison place of business. In addition to the conduct of his restaurant Mr. Harrison owns a cotton gin in Upland, Arkansas, and has one hundred and sixty acres of land near there, his tract being situated only a short distance from the oil fields, with possibilities that oil may also underlie his place. He is likewise a stockholder in the El Dorado Natural Gas Company.

On the 24th of September, 1904, Mr. Harrison was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Thompson of El Dorado, who was born and reared near Waldo, Arkansas, and belongs to an old family from Chattanooga, Tennessee. They have become the parents of two sons and a daughter, but the daughter, Mabel, died in 1912, at the age of five years. The two sons are: Asberry Columbus, now sixteen years of age; and Drew Frank, Jr., a lad of six.

Mr. Harrison belongs to El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., also to the Eastern Star and to Columbia Camp of the Modern Woodmen. The religious faith of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison is that of the Baptist church, and their interest centers in those channels through which flow the greatest good to the greatest number. Mr. Harrison gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and is interested in everything that pertains to the welfare and progress of his community, his cooperation being a tangible asset in the work for public improvement.

WILLIAM G. HODGES, M. D.

Dr. William G. Hodges, who since 1912 has devoted his time and energies to the practice of medicine in Malvern, was born in Hot Spring county, Arkansas, October 21, 1878. His youth was spent on the home farm, seven miles from Malvern, and in his boyhood days he became familiar with the work of the fields from the time of early spring planting until crops were harvested in the late fall. He acquired a common school education and attended high school at Friendship, after which he took up the profession of teaching, which he followed from 1900 until 1905. In this way he earned the money with which he met the expenses of an advanced course. He taught the Gifford high school and eventually qualified for the practice of medicine as a student in the Barnes Medical College of St. Louis, Missouri. There he was graduated on the 17th of June, 1912. He had become a resident of Fallsville, Arkansas, in 1907, and through the vacation periods in his college course he practiced to some extent at that place and at Magnet. Following his graduation he opened an office in Malvern and through the intervening years he has successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery. He pursued a postgraduate course in surgery in the Illinois Postgraduate Medical School of Chicago, in 1919 and afterward attended the Mayo Brothers' clinics at Rochester, Minnesota, in May, 1920. He also specialized in surgery in the Illinois Postgraduate School, and in January, 1921, he took postgraduate work in the St. Louis clinics. He has thus at intervals promoted his efficiency through wide study and experience under some of the ablest physicians and surgeons of the country. He has constantly advanced in his profession and in large measure enjoys the confidence and good will of his colleagues and contemporaries. Broad reading has also kept him in touch with the onward march of professional progress and he has gained much valuable knowledge through the proceedings of the Hot Spring County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Tri-State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association, in all of which he has membership. He has served as chairman of the city health board, and has also been both city and county health officer. He stands with that progressive class of physicians and surgeons who are ever attempting to prevent disease by a dissemination of knowledge that will promote sanitary conditions and thus check epidemics or the ravages of disease of any kind.

Dr. Hodges is a faithful follower of Masonic teachings and also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and religiously is connected with the Methodist church. His life has been spent in Arkansas, he is well known in various sections of the state, and merits the friendship and kindly regard which are uniformly tendered him.

JAMES A. GALLAHER.

James A. Gallaher, member of the Fort Smith bar, practicing as senior partner in the firm of Gallaher & Gean, a relation that has been maintained for more than six years, is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in the city of Paris in May, 1871, his parents being Thomas J. and Eliza J. (Rhyne) Gallaher. While spending his youthful days in his father's home he attended the public schools and later became a student in the Paris Academy. Determining upon the practice of law, he began reading with the purpose of winning admission to the bar and continued his studies in the University of Arkansas until graduated with the class of 1898. Immediately afterward he opened an office in his native city and there remained for about a decade, or until 1908, when he came to Fort Smith. Here he has continued in practice, and on the 25th of March, 1915, entered into his present partnership relation with Roy R. Gean, under the firm style of Gallaher & Gean.

In 1912 Mr. Gallaher was married to Miss Elba B. Culbertson of Fort Smith, who is well known in this city, both Mr. and Mrs. Gallaher having an extensive circle of warm friends, and to them the hospitality of the best homes is freely accorded. Externally Mr. Gallaher is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and he was a delegate to the national convention of the Yeomen, while for ten years he served as secretary of the local organization. He is also the secretary of the Southern Live Stock & Lumber Company, which indicates that his activities have been extended into other business fields outside of his profession. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and he was nominated on its ticket for the office of circuit judge. However, he has always considered the pursuits of private life as in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts, and he has made a lasting impression upon the bar of the state, arguing many cases and losing but few. His course in the courtroom is characterized by a calmness and dignity that indicate reserve strength, and while he has manifested the utmost devotion to the interests of his clients, he never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law.

CHRIS J. LEDWIDGE.

Chris J. Ledwidge, engaged in the undertaking business at Hot Springs, was born in Ireland on the 16th of May, 1871. He spent the first ten years of his life on the Emerald isle, and then came to America in 1881 with his parents, who crossed the country with their family until they established a home in Hot Springs. Here Chris J. Ledwidge was reared to manhood and he acquired his education by attending the public and night schools. When twenty-one years of age he started out to provide for his own support as a carpenter and continued to follow the building trade and contracting for a period of twenty years. He then turned his attention to the livery business, and in 1908 purchased the undertaking business of which he is now sole owner. His undertaking establishment is situated at Nos. 215 and 217 Central avenue, and here he has splendid equipment and is accorded a liberal patronage. He is the inventor and patentee of an electric switch danger signal for use on automobiles. This switch is very easily adjusted on the steering gear and contains four lights—red, green, yellow and white, which can be seen at any angle by occupants of an approaching car, or by pedestrians. In case of collision or danger the lights can be switched to any of the four colors, each color having its separate meaning. This patent has been endorsed for use by the city council of Hot Springs and also of Little Rock.

Mr. Ledwidge belongs to the Catholic church and to the Knights of Columbus, and he also has membership in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has long served as alderman of the city, representing four different wards as a member of the city council. In fact, he has been alderman from each ward of Hot Springs, and is now serving as chairman of the streets and alleys committee. He takes deep and helpful interest in public affairs and is seeking ever to promote progress and improvement along the lines of civic interests.

C. S. WILSON, M. D.

Dr. C. S. Wilson, a well known and highly regarded medical practitioner of Gentry, where he has successfully followed his profession for the past eight years, was born in Lee county, Iowa, on the 6th of September, 1877, his parents being G. W. and Lucy Elizabeth (Stewart) Wilson, who are likewise natives of the Hawkeye state. The paternal grandfather, George Wilson, was born in Tennessee and in 1832 removed to Iowa, where he entered a tract of land from the government and spent the remainder of his life. Frank Stewart, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Wilson, was a native of Scotland, but emigrated to the United States in his boyhood and settled in Iowa, where he also made his home until called to his final rest. G. W. Wilson, the father of the Doctor, has successfully devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career, and now resides with his wife in Missouri. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and at one time he capably filled the office of assessor. His family numbers six children, namely: C. S. of this review; George Frank, a railway engineer residing in Alliance, Nebraska; Mary Grace, who is the wife of John Spencer, a farmer residing at Gibbs, Missouri; Walter B., who is a geologist in the service of the Gypsy Oil Company of Tulsa; Edward D., who cultivates the home farm near Gibbs, Missouri; and Alice Beatrice, who is the wife of Ray Begole, a railway agent of La Plata, Missouri.

C. S. Wilson obtained his education in the schools of his native state and prepared for a professional career as a student in the medical department of the St. Louis University, which conferred upon him the degree of M. D. in 1905. During the succeeding eight years he practiced medicine in Missouri and in 1913 removed to Gentry, Arkansas, which has since remained the scene of his professional labors. He has pursued several postgraduate courses in Chicago and in 1920 did postgraduate work in St. Louis. His practice has become extensive and important, steadily increasing in volume as he has demonstrated his professional skill in the successful treatment of many difficult cases. He is now serving as president of the Benton County Medical Society and he also belongs to the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

On the 29th of April, 1912, Dr. Wilson was united in marriage to Miss Maun Shibley, a native of Missouri and a daughter of John Shibley, who is a retired physician of Gentry, Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Wilson have one son, John Stewart, who is six years of age. The mother belongs to the Congregational church. In his political views Dr. Wilson is a stalwart democrat and his aid and influence can ever be counted upon to further any movement or measure instituted to advance the general welfare.

CLAUDE A. FULLER.

Claude A. Fuller needs no introduction to the readers of this volume, for his long connection with the professional and business circles of Eureka Springs and north Arkansas has made him well known and his efforts have ever been of a character which have contributed to public progress and prosperity, as well as to individual success.

Illinois claims Mr. Fuller as her native son, for his birth occurred in Whiteside county, on the 20th of January, 1876, a son of W. P. and Maria L. (Ocoback) Fuller. The paternal grandfather, Levi Fuller, was a native of New York state and removed to Illinois at an early age. He became one of the prominent stockmen of that state and remained there until the town of Eureka Springs was started. Soon afterward he came here and was recognized as one of the town's most representative and enterprising citizens. The maternal grandfather, Albert Ocoback, was likewise born in New York state, and he also made his home in Illinois for several years. Later, however, he removed to Kansas, and was residing in that state at the time of his demise. William P. Fuller was born in Illinois and for many years followed farming and the carpenter's trade there. In 1881 he moved to Kansas, and in 1887 came to Eureka Springs, and he is still following that line of work, achieving substantial success. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller were married in 1868, the ceremony being performed in Illinois. The death of Mrs. Fuller occurred in 1904 at Enreka Springs. She leaves, besides her husband, three children to mourn her death: Mrs. Maude Parkhill of Eureka Springs; Claude A., whose name initiates this review; and Harvey H., a traveling salesman for a large concern with headquarters in Eureka Springs. The family was reared in the faith of the Baptist church.

Claude A. Fuller was but eleven years of age when he came with his parents to Eureka Springs and for some time attended the public schools here. At an early age he had determined upon the practice of law as his life work, and in 1896 he entered a night school in Chicago for the study of the profession. He secured office work during the day in order to pay for his schooling, and he later studied at home under the direction of C. G. White. In February, 1898, he was admitted to the bar, and beginning practice immediately, he has continued an active member of the profession since. He has been admitted to practice in all the courts of this county and he is one of the best known and most reliable lawyers in northern Arkansas. Mr. Fuller has learned his lessons in the hard school of experience, for his start in the business world was made as a bootblack and he worked on railroad sections and did all kinds of work in order to make enough money to enable him to begin the study of law. He is a self-made man and as such he is appreciated by his many friends throughout the state. Mr. Fuller has not only become prominent in professional circles and farming, but he is intensely interested in political affairs and has always been a staunch supporter of the democratic party. He had the honor of being city clerk of Eureka Springs, in which office he served from the years 1898 to 1902, inclusive, and he was elected to represent his fellowmen in the state legislature in 1903, serving in that office until 1905. In 1906 he became mayor of Eureka Springs, and the four years of his administration were marked by progress and prosperity. At the termination of that office he became prosecuting attorney and he was active in that position until 1914. He ran for congress in 1914, but was defeated by a few votes. A keen business man, Mr. Fuller has invested heavily in real estate and he owns valuable farm lands, which he oversees and from which he receives a substantial income. Returning to his political career, Mr. Fuller has attended several national conventions as a delegate and he was on the national platform committee at the convention in San Francisco. His popularity and prominence in the state won him the position of manager for the campaign of Governor Brough, and he was an important factor in making the election a success for his party.

On the 25th of December, 1899, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Fuller to Miss May Obenchain, a native of Fayetteville and a daughter of J. B. and May Obenchain. Her father settled in Fayetteville at an early age and followed the trade of wagon making, achieving substantial success in that connection. He later became master mechanic with the Missouri & North Arkansas Railroad. During the Civil war Mr. Obenchain served in the Confederate army for four years and participated in many of the most important battles of the conflict. His death occurred in 1899. His widow is still living, now making her home in Eureka Springs. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Fuller two children have been born: Ruth M., twelve years of age; and Dorothy, aged eleven years. The family is affiliated with the Baptist church, and they are generous contributors to its support. Fraternally Mr. Fuller is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and for three terms he served as Exalted Ruler of that organization. Since its organization he has been a trustee in the same lodge. His other fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias. The success that Mr. Fuller has attained is the result of a full-faithed attempt each day to know more and to grow more. His is the record of a strenuous life—the record of strong individuality, sure of itself, stable in purpose, quick in perception, swift in decision, energetic and persistent in action. There is no success in life without effort, and Longfellow says: "The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, without a thought of fame."

DAVID HUGH LATIMER.

David Hugh Latimer is the popular proprietor of a well-equipped drug store at Lockesburg and is accorded a most gratifying patronage in this connection. He is a native son of Sevier county, in which his entire life has been spent, his birth having occurred at Lebanon on the 29th of March, 1886. He was reared on a farm to the age of fourteen years, and in 1900 removed to De Queen. His early educational opportunities were those afforded by the graded and high schools, while subsequently he spent two years as a student in the Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia. In 1905, when a young man of nineteen years, he obtained a position in a drug store at De Queen and eventually embarked in business along that line on his own account, there remaining until the 1st of January, 1919, when he purchased his present establishment at Lockesburg. He carries a large and carefully selected line of drugs and druggists' sundries and his attractive store is extensively patronized, for he has won a well-merited reputation as a progressive, enterprising and thoroughly reliable merchant. He is likewise a stockholder and director in the Bank of Lockesburg.

In 1910 Mr. Latimer was united in marriage to Miss Mary Steel, a daughter of Judge A. C. Steel, and they have become parents of a son, Richard Hugh. Their religious faith is indicated by their membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Latimer is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity, now serving as junior deacon of his lodge and being also connected with the chapter, the commandery and the Mystic Shrine. His career has been upright and honorable in every respect, and he is widely and favorably known as one of the prosperous young business men and representative residents of Sevier county.

GEORGE HEARTSILL BANKS.

Since 1921 G. Heartsill Banks has been superintendent of the Parkin schools. He was born in Raines, Tennessee, on the 15th of February, 1893, a son of W. L. and Lucy (Heartsill) Banks. For several generations the Banks family has resided in America, progenitors of the family in this country having come from England in 1722, locating in Elbert county, Georgia. The father, W. L. Banks, has for many years engaged in farming and is now residing in retirement in Hickory Ridge, this state, at the age of fifty-two years. He has always been prominent in the public life of the communities in which he resided. He is a staunch advocate of education and is a member of the board of directors of the State Agricultural School. On the 31st of December, 1890, at Marshall, Texas, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Banks to Miss Lucy Heartsill, whose demise occurred in 1919, at the age of forty-seven years. The maternal ancestors came from Holland in 1795, members of this family having been prominent in American history for some five generations. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Banks four children were born, three boys and one girl, but one boy and the girl have died. George H., whose name initiates this review, was the eldest of the family.

In the acquirement of his early education George H. Banks attended the country schools of Shelby county, Tennessee, and for one year attended the Parham School at Benton, this state. He took a preparatory course in the Fitzgerald & Clark School at Trenton, Tennessee, and was a student at the University of Arkansas from 1910 to 1911. In 1914 he was graduated from the University of Missouri, at Columbia, that state, with the B. S. degree. Subsequently Mr. Banks took postgraduate work in the University of Wisconsin. In 1914 he started his career as an educator, accepting a position as teacher at Bolton College, Brunswick, Tennessee, a position in which he was active one year. At the termination of that time he went to Villisca, Iowa, as principal of the schools at that point, and he remained there until 1917. He was engaged in extension work for the University of Arkansas during 1917 and 1918, and was in the service of the United States navy for eight months during the World war. From 1919 to 1920 he was engaged in farming in Cross county, Arkansas, and on the 1st of January, 1921, he came to Parkin as superintendent of schools, in which position he is now active. He is well fitted to carry out the duties devolving upon him in this capacity, and although being in charge but a short time he has brought the school to a high state of efficiency. The school is now overcrowded, having an enrollment of three hundred and eighty-seven pupils and facilities for caring for but two hundred and fifty. Students come to this school from a radius of ten miles, making the trip in a bus each day, the bus being operated for their convenience at a nominal charge. The high school is accredited and the students may matriculate in any university in the country. Mr. Banks is not only active in educational affairs, but is a director in the Arkansas Cooperative Marketing Association for Cotton. He is likewise commissioner of the Parkin Road Improvement District Association and on the executive committee of the Cross County Farm Bureau.

On the 7th of July, 1917, occurred the marriage of Mr. Banks to Miss Gertrude Brodrick, daughter of E. G. Brodrick of Villisca, Iowa. To their union two boys have been born: David F., three years of age; and William Love, one year old.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church, and Mr. Banks has been a teacher in the Sunday school for years. Fraternally he is identified with Parkin Lodge, No. 680, F. & A. M., of Parkin, and along strictly professional lines he holds membership in the Arkansas State Educational Association and the Cross County Educational Association. He is one of Parkin's most public-spirited and progressive citizens, and every man who knows him is his friend. He well merits the position he has attained as an educator and no man stands higher in this community for integrity and sterling worth.

D. B. CASTLEBERRY.

D. B. Castleberry, attorney at law, who is now serving as mayor of Booneville and manifests a most progressive spirit in the conduct of his law practice and in the discharge of his official duties, is classed with those men whose native strength of character and acquired ability have brought them prominently to the front in public relations. Mr. Castleberry is a native of Kentucky, his birth having occurred in Marshall county, that state, May 11, 1845. His grandfather, James Castleberry, had removed in an early day from North Carolina to Kentucky and had there devoted his attention to farming throughout the remainder of his life. He was the father of Wesley S. Castleberry, who was born in Hopkins county, Kentucky, in 1813 and became a farmer, devoting his attention to general agricultural pursuits until he died August 2, 1845, at the comparatively early age of thirty-two years. He had married Isabelle Larimer, who was born near Shelbyville, Tennessee, in 1817, and was a daughter of John Larimer, who was born in Tennessee, but in early life removed to Kentucky, where he, too, carried on farming. His daughter, Mrs. Wesley S. Castleberry, survived her husband for a number of years, departing this life June 11, 1863. She never married again, but lived a widow to the time of her demise. Her husband was a school teacher at an early day, but later concentrated his efforts and attention upon farming. In politics he was a democrat. The family of this worthy couple numbered three children, but only two are living, the elder being John W. Castleberry, who was born in Kentucky in 1842 and entered the Confederate army during the early progress of the Civil war, serving throughout the period of hostilities. Several years ago he came to Booneville, Arkansas, and filled the office of county judge, while at the present time he is serving as justice of the peace, although practically living retired. In former years he carried on farming and through his agricultural pursuits won the competence that now enables him largely to rest from further labor.

D. B. Castleberry received but limited educational opportunities. He attended the common schools for only four or five months and then at the age of eighteen years, or in 1863, joined the Confederate army, becoming a member of Company G, Third Kentucky Regiment of Mounted Infantry. This command was attached to Forrest's cavalry forces, and Mr. Castleberry was captured by Wilson's cavalry on the 31st of March, 1865, which was the last battle fought by the cavalry troops under General Forrest. He received a furlough on the 14th of April of that year and walked all the way home from Montgomery, Alabama, to Kentucky, reaching his destination on the 11th of May. Immediately he took up farm work, nor did he scorn any labor that would bring to him an honest dollar, for he had arrived home penniless. His mother had a small tract of land, which he and his two brothers farmed, but it was all one could do to make a living there. He continued to devote his attention to the cultivation of the land until 1866, when he went to Texas, where he was employed on a farm and at other manual labor until 1868. That year witnessed his arrival in Benton county, Arkansas, and throughout the intervening period he has lived in this state.

In 1869 D. B. Castleberry was united in marriage to Miss Mary Latimer, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of Dr. G. W. Latimer, who for a number of years engaged in the practice of medicine in Benton county, Arkansas. After his marriage various pursuits occupied the attention of Mr. Castleberry, and later he took up the study of law, reading privately under the direction of attorneys of this locality until admitted to the bar in 1901. He has since continuously engaged in practice, covering more than two decades, and has won a satisfactory place at the Logan county bar, now having a large clientele that connects him with much important litigation heard in the courts of this district. He also owns farm property and is a stockholder in the Bank of Booneville.

Mr. Castleberry and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is also a Mason and has served for six consecutive years as master of his lodge. Politically he is a democrat and for eleven years has been mayor of Booneville—a record which indicates most clearly his capability and efficiency in office and his fidelity to the trust reposed in him. His administration has been characterized by close study of the needs of the city and practical methods in meeting the highest civic standards and ideals. He has made a most excellent record in office and also in his business and professional career. He has never had a dollar given him, but by persistent effort has worked his way steadily upward, advancing step by step, winning both a creditable name and place in connection with the professional and public interests of his city and county.

W. R. MARTIN.

W. R. Martin of Fort Smith, recognized as one of the leading attorneys of Arkansas, was born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, on the 6th of February, 1865. The period of his minority was passed in his native state and when he had mastered the elementary branches of learning he continued his studies in the University of Alabama, in which he pursued an academic course, winning the degree of Bachelor of Arts at his graduation in 1882, while the following year the Master of Arts degree was conferred upon him. In further preparation for a professional career he entered the law department of the University of Virginia and attained his LL. B. degree in 1884.

Returning to his native city, Mr. Martin there opened an office and entered upon the active practice of his profession in the month of June, but on the 2d of May, 1885, removed to Arkansas, settling in Fort Smith, where he has since made his home. Advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, yet no dreary novitiate awaited him. He soon gained recognition of his ability and for many years his practice has been extensive and of an important character. He is remarkable among lawyers for the wide research and provident care with which he prepares his cases. At no time has his reading ever been confined to the limitations of the questions at issue. It has gone beyond and compassed every contingency and provided not alone for the expected, but for the unexpected, which happens in the courts quite as frequently as out of them. His legal learning, his analytical mind, the readiness with which he grasps the points in an argument, all combine to make him one of the capable lawyers practicing at the Arkansas bar, and his name is associated with much notable litigation heard in the courts of his district.

Mr. Martin was united in marriage to Miss Sue Bozman, a daughter of J. A. Bozman of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and they have become the parents of six children, two of whom have passed away, while four are yet living, namely: Mrs. Sue Williams of Fort Smith; Mrs. Julia Coulson of Detroit; Mrs. Ann Ross of Fort Smith; and Mary, at home.

During the World war Mr. Martin served on various committees in soliciting funds for financing the war and upholding the interests of the government and was active in connection with the Red Cross. Although he had no sons to give to his country, all three of his sons-in-law were in the service, Mr. Ross being a member of the Marine Corps and wedding Ann Martin after his return. Mr. Williams was in the aviation branch of the service, and Mr. Coulson was connected with the navy. In all matters pertaining to public welfare Mr. Martin displays an intelligent and helpful interest. He belongs to the Business Men's Club, with which he has been identified since it was first organized. He is also well known in fraternal circles, being a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and of the Knights of Pythias. His life is guided by the teachings and high purposes of these societies, and his sterling character worth commands the respect and confidence of all, while his professional abilities have gained him high standing among the leading attorneys of the state.

CEPHAS L. BARTON.

The progressive spirit which dominates certain of the growing cities of Arkansas has its root in the enterprise and laudable ambition of its business men. Among the representatives of this class in Camden is Cephas L. Barton, the general manager of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company and president of the Camden Chamber of Commerce. He is recognized as a dynamic force in the business development of the city and the advancement of its civic standards. Mr. Barton was born in Boston, Massachusetts, October 10, 1888, and is a son of Isaac B. and Anna E. (Anthony) Barton, the former a native of North Carolina, while the latter was born in Georgia. They were married near Cartersville, Georgia, in 1876. The father was a planter in the south for a number of years, and in the spring of 1888 went to the eastern states to look over the country, but after spending a year in Boston he returned to Georgia and continued to devote his attention to farming and trading until about ten years ago, when he removed to Atlanta, where he has since lived retired.

Cephas L. Barton was educated in the Cartersville high school, and after completing his studies secured a clerkship in the Park Hotel at that place, remaining in the position for eighteen months. He then became identified with the drug trade as a clerk in the Auditorium Pharmacy at Atlanta, Georgia, there continuing for a period of three years, at the end of which time he accepted a position with the Marshall & Pendegast Pharmacy, with which he was associated for two years. He next became identified with the Coca-Cola Company at Atlanta, Georgia, and was sent to Arkansas as the state representative of that corporation. In this important position he served for two and a half years, and in June, 1917, he came to Camden, where he took over the management of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company's plant. He entered upon the duties of the position at a time when the business had declined to a low ebb through mismanagement and was all but defunct. The enterprise was losing money heavily, and the company was doing business in a rented ramshackle building. They had a team of mules and an old horse for their delivery service. When Mr. Barton took charge new life was infused into the enterprise, and the changes have been continuous. Today the company does business in a new modern building, erected under Mr. Barton's management, and the company now owns four automobile trucks, while other equipment is equally modern and attractive. This is today one of the largest and most successful plants of its kind in the state, due to the enterprise, energy and keen business sagacity of Mr. Barton. In all business affairs he readily discriminates between the essential and the non-essential, and his sound judgment is manifest in the results which have been achieved.

On the 29th of December, 1917, Mr. Barton was married to Miss Grace Tubbs, a native of Atlanta, Georgia. Mr. Barton belongs to Camden Lodge, No. 1140, B. P. O. E. He is the president of the Camden Chamber of Commerce and is one of the city's most prominent and active business men. He readily recognizes the opportunities in the field of trade and commerce, and he sees the weak as well as the strong points in the matter of civic development. He therefore makes it his purpose to oust the former and utilize the latter to the fullest extent, and as head of the Chamber of Commerce he is producing excellent results for the city's upbuilding, nor is he neglectful of the holier and higher duties of life. He is of the Methodist Episcopal faith, while his wife has membership in the Baptist church, and they are well known socially, enjoying the hospitality of the best homes of the city.

RABBI LOUIS BRAV.

Louis Brav, a rabbi of the Jewish church, now presiding over Temple Israel at Pine Bluff, was born in Czecho Slovakia in 1884, his parents being Isaac and Hannah (Rocker) Brav. The father was also a rabbi and died in his native country in 1919, while the mother died there at a comparatively early age. In their family were eight children, one of whom, Victor, is now a wholesale shoe merchant of Philadelphia, while Herman and Aaron are both successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in the same city.

The other member of the family residing in the new world is Louis Brav of this review, who largely acquired his education in the public schools of Philadelphia and in the Central high school of that city before entering Columbia College of New York, in which he won his Bachelor of Arts degree. Liberal educational opportunities thus qualified him for the important service which he determined to make his life work. Desiring to benefit those of his own race and faith in advancing the moral standards, he determined to enter the church and to this end attended the Jewish Theological Seminary, becoming a rabbi in 1910. He accepted his first charge at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in 1911 and there labored until 1915, when he went to Raleigh, North Carolina, where he earnestly labored until called to the chair of French and Spanish in Lawrence College at Appleton, Wisconsin, in 1920. While engaged in educational work there he was petitioned by Temple Israel of Pine Bluff to come to this city, and accepted in 1922. Already he has made for himself a most desirable place in the community. His scholarly attainments, his broad vision, his high ideals and his practical service have won for him the respect and honor of his fellow townsmen and Pine Bluff has thus welcomed him to her ranks.

FREDERICK E. BROWN.

Frederick E. Brown, member of the state tax commission of Arkansas and a well-known representative of the Des Arc bar, was born August 27, 1858, on a farm in Choctaw county, Mississippi, but in his early youth he was brought to this state, where he has since resided. He was the eldest child in a family of four sons and five daughters, of whom two of the daughters died in infancy, while three of the sons and one daughter are living. The parents were Andrew Jackson and Margaret Elizabeth (House) Brown. The father was born in Autauga county, Alabama, July 24, 1835, and during his early childhood his parents removed with their family to Mississippi. The mother was also born in Autauga county, Alabama, her natal day being May 22, 1836, and their marriage was celebrated in Choctaw county, Mississippi, in October, 1857. They continued to reside in that state until 1869, and then removed to Arkansas, settling near Des Arc. The father followed the occupation of farming as a life work and thus provided for the support of his family. During the Civil war he served for nearly four years as a member of Forrest's command of the Confederate forces. His political endorsement was always given to the democratic party. He died in 1905 and was survived for several years by his wife, who died in Des Arc in January, 1910.

Frederick E. Brown was but eleven years of age when brought to this state. He continued his education in the common schools of Prairie county, Arkansas, and in the high school of Des Arc, and afterward attended a commercial college in Little Rock, from which he was graduated in 1880. This constituted the scope of his literary training, but afterward he read law in Des Arc and was admitted to the bar in 1894, when he located for practice in the city in which he has been residing. He was admitted to practice before the Arkansas supreme court in 1895 and before the United States supreme court in 1914. He still maintains his law office in Des Arc and is recognized as one of the able attorneys of the state, his ability as a lawyer enabling him to find ready solution for many intricate and involved legal problems.

On the 24th of December, 1882, in Des Arc, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Lucy Adelaide Morrill, who was there born January 16, 1862, a daughter of John C. and Anne Virginia (Adams) Morrill, who were natives of Maine and of Tennessee, respectively, and are now deceased. They lived for some time at Des Arc, where Mr. Morrill established the Des Arc Citizen, which he published from 1854 until 1861. He died in 1862, while serving in the Confederate army. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born four children: Charles Frederick, whose birth occurred July 4, 1884; Epps William, born February 23, 1891; Elizabeth, the wife of Albert Erwin, Jr.; and Mary Adelaide, the wife of Byron Gattinger. The second son, Epps William, volunteered on the 10th of April, 1917, and went to the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Pike, where he advanced rapidly. He was held in the United States, however, as military instructor in various training camps, rising through the grades to the rank of captain, and had been recommended for promotion to major when the armistice was signed.

Mr. Brown and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is a Blue Lodge Mason, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft. During the war he served on the questionnaire board in Prairie county, Arkansas, and took active part in promoting the bond sales. In politics he has always been a democrat and has frequently been called upon to serve in positions of public honor and trust. From 1898 until 1908, or for a period of ten years, he was prosecuting attorney of the seventeenth judicial district, and in 1891 he served as mayor of Des Arc. In 1893 he was elected to the state legislature and was continued in the position for three consecutive terms. Again in 1909 he was chosen to represent his county in the general assembly and was made speaker of the house. From 1911 until 1917 he was a member of the state tax commission, and in 1917 he was elected a delegate to the constitutional convention. In April, 1921, he was appointed by Governor McRea a member of the state tax commission and is now filling this position, with office in Little Rock. Over the record of his official career there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil. The history of no man in public office in Arkansas has been more commendable. Faultless in honor, fearless in conduct and stainless in reputation, he has rendered valuable service to the state and enjoys the respect and confidence of all with whom he has in any way been associated.

CAPTAIN HENRY FINCHER EASON.

Captain Henry Fincher Eason, prominently identified with educational interests and an honored resident of Texarkana whose aid and influence have ever been on the side of progress, reform and improvement, is a native of Miller county, his birth having occurred near the Louisiana line, in Sulphur township, on the 21st of October, 1883. He is a son of Sidney S. Eason, a native of Georgia, who came to Arkansas in 1860 in company with his father, Abraham Eason. The grandfather was a well-to-do planter and served in the Confederate army during the Civil war as a member of Colonel Kelly's company but did not believe in the separation of the states. Having arrived at years of maturity, Sidney S. Eason was married to Miss Luella L. Hemperley, a daughter of Dr. E. T. Hemperley and also a native of Georgia. Sidney S. Eason still resides on the old homestead farm, at the age of seventy-three years, but his wife died July 19, 1896. Captain Eason is one of a family of fifteen children, nine sons and six daughters, all of whom are yet living, six of the children having been born of the father's second marriage.

Captain Eason spent his boyhood and youth upon the old home farm on which he was born and he early became familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. He attended the common schools to some extent but is largely self-educated, and realizing the value of intellectual training, he attended, after attaining his majority, the Louisiana State Normal School for a time and also continued his studies at Alexandria, Louisiana. When twenty-two years of age he began teaching in the country schools and taught for eleven years—twelve months in the year. In 1916 he was elected to the office of county clerk of Miller county and filled the position for two terms, or four years. In 1920 he was chosen county collector and has since occupied the position. He was also county statistician for the agricultural department of the United States government and was instrumental in promoting the investigation of the soils of Arkansas. From early manhood he has been identified with educational interests as a director, as teacher, as principal and as superintendent of schools and has been a very prominent figure in educational circles. He has also constantly broadened his knowledge by reading, study and experience and is today a highly educated man, thoroughly versed in the natural resources and the possibilities for development in Arkansas. During the World war he had charge of the registration boards of Miller county and at the close of the war was acting as chairman of the board. He was also the first food administrator of the county.

Captain Eason was likewise instrumental in raising Company C of the Fourth Arkansas Infantry of the state militia. He enlisted as a private and was advanced to the rank of first lieutenant in 1917, while in 1918 he was promoted to the captaincy of the company and is now on the reserve list of military officers of the United States army, in the Arkansas National Guard.

On the 23d of December, 1908, Captain Eason was united in marriage to Miss Ollie Minnie Walton and they have become the parents of six children, of whom two died in infancy, while those still living are Henry Fincher, Sidney S., William B. and Eveline M.

Captain Eason is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine and he has served as senior deacon in the lodge. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, and he has membership in the Baptist church. His entire life has been actuated by high and honorable principles and in every relation with his fellowmen he has commanded the confidence, goodwill and high regard of those with whom he has been brought in contact. His life work has constituted a valuable contribution to progress and improvement in the section of the state in which he has always lived and at the time of world crisis he proved himself one hundred per cent American.

WILLIS H. HOLMES.

Among Arkansas' native sons who are devoting their energies to the work of advancing the educational standards of the state is numbered Willis H. Holmes, who although but twenty-four years of age has already attained a position of prominence in the ranks of his profession, being superintendent of schools of Dermott, and he is conceded to be the youngest incumbent in that position to be found in any city of similar size in the state. He was born in Pike county, December 11, 1897, and is a son of David P. and Pattie M. (Palmer) Holmes, both natives of Amity, Arkansas. When a young girl of fifteen Mrs. David P. Holmes removed with her parents to Texas and in Blossom, that state, her marriage occurred. David P. Holmes is a graduate of the University of Arkansas, which bestowed upon him the A. B. degree, and he has also done postgraduate work at the University of Chicago. He is now a member of the faculty of the Henderson-Brown College at Arkadelphia, Arkansas, and is one of the best known educators in the state.

After completing his public school course Willis H. Holmes became a student at Hendrix College of Conway, Arkansas, from which he received the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1921, and he has since followed in the professional footsteps of his father, also proving an able exponent of educational interests. During 1920 and 1921 he was principal of the high school at Carlisle, Arkansas, and in the latter year was called to his present position as superintendent of the Dermott schools. They are included among the twenty-seven schools in the state which are accredited with the Southern Association of High Schools & Colleges and now have an enrollment of eight hundred and sixty-two pupils, of whom four hundred and twelve are white, and four hundred and fifty are colored. They are housed in separate buildings, a corps of twelve white teachers being employed for the white pupils, while six negro instructors are engaged in teaching those of the colored race. Mr. Holmes keeps in touch with the most modern ideas in regard to the education of children and is exerting his influence to better school facilities and better school conditions in his district. He seems to have entered the calling for which nature intended him and inspires teachers and pupils under him with much of his own zeal and enthusiasm in the work. He holds to high standards in his professional service and his course has won the hearty approval of the citizens of Dumas.

Professor Holmes is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is a young man of marked intellectual attainments, whose enterprise and ability are bringing him rapidly to the front in his profession, and judging from what he has already accomplished the future holds for him large possibilities.

MOSLEY WILSON HARDY.

A name well known in banking and insurance circles is that of Mosley Wilson Hardy of Little Rock. He is now engaged in the insurance business in the capital city and still holds his financial and official connection with some of the banking institutions of the state. He is likewise one of the most prominent Masons of Arkansas, and the high ideals of the craft have long found exemplification in his career.

Mr. Hardy is a representative of one of the old southern families. His parents were Lewis Mosley and Lucy Caroline (Hill) Hardy, both of whom were natives of Heard county, Georgia, the former born in 1847 and the latter in 1848. During the last year of the Civil war Lewis M. Hardy served with the Confederate army, being on active duty during that period. After leaving Georgia he took up his abode in Roanoke, Alabama, where he lived for many years. At all times he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party, and he was a man ever loyal to any cause which he espoused. He died in the year 1881 and is still survived by his wife, who now makes her home in Lineville, Alabama. In their family were four children, Mosley W. being the only son, while the three daughters are yet living. There were also two other daughters, who died in early girlhood.

Mosley W. Hardy was born upon the home farm in Heard county, Georgia, on the 18th of October, 1879, and was quite young at the time of the removal of his parents to Roanoke, Alabama, where he attended the public schools. Later he pursued his more advanced education in the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, and there won his Bachelor of Arts degree upon graduation with the class of 1901. Mr. Hardy initiated his business career as a railroad man in the employ of the Central Railroad of Georgia, with which he remained for two years. He afterward became connected with banking as an employe in the Bank of Roanoke at Roanoke, Alabama, there serving as assistant cashier for two years. On the expiration of that period he went to the Citizens Bank at Brewton, Alabama, where he continued for six months, and next located at El Dorado, Arkansas, where he organized the Citizens National Bank, becoming cashier and serving in that capacity for two years. On removing to Camden, Arkansas, he was made manager of the Camden Oil Mill and so continued for two years, after which he returned to El Dorado, Arkansas, where he turned his attention to the real estate and insurance business, operating in that field of activity for six years. In October, 1914, he came to Little Rock, where he has since been well known as a leading figure in insurance circles. He still remains the vice president of the Citizens National Bank of El Dorado and is a director of the Union Mercantile Bank of Little Rock. He has comprehensive knowledge of the banking business by reason of broad experience and study, and his cooperation in this field is of value to the institutions with which he is identified. At the same time he has made steady progress as a real estate man and as an insurance man, and his interests of this character at Little Rock are important. He is now a director in the Union and Mercantile Trust Company of Little Rock, and vice president of the Union Indemnity Company.

At Hamburg, Arkansas, on the 7th of January, 1913, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hardy and Miss Corinne McCombs, who was born in Hamburg in 1888, a daughter of William Faulkner and Frances (Pugh) McCombs. They lived for some time at Hamburg, Arkansas, but both are now deceased. The father was born in Kentucky, while the mother was a native of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Hardy have become parents of an only child, William McCombs, who was born January 3, 1915.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hardy are members of the First Presbyterian church of Little Rock, in which he is serving as deacon, and in the work and upbuilding of the church they take active and helpful part. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. Fraternally he is a Mason and an Elk. He has attained the honorary thirty-third degree in Masonry, which is conferred only in recognition of valuable service rendered to the order, and he is likewise a member of the Mystic Shrine. He has gained a name and place of prominence during the years of his connection with Arkansas, not only as a Mason, but as a business man and citizen, and he is today most highly esteemed in the city which he makes his home.

WILLIAM C. BUTCHER.

William C. Butcher, a hardware merchant of Gillett, was born in Desha county, Arkansas, in 1874, and is a son of John W. and Mollie (Barnett) Butcher, the former a native of Virginia, while the latter was born in Louisiana. On leaving the Old Dominion the father went to Tennessee, and about the year 1869 arrived in Arkansas, settling on a farm in Desha county. The mother's parents also located in Desha county at an early day and became farming people of that locality. In 1876 Mr. and Mrs. John W. Butcher removed to Mississippi and afterward became residents of Tennessee, where the mother departed this life. Mr. Butcher then took up his abode in Concordia, Mississippi, where he engaged in merchandising for a time. His last days were spent in Gunnison, that state, where he died in 1900. In their family were two children: William C. and Thomas C.

William C. Butcher was educated in the common schools and early learned the value of industry, energy and determination as factors in the attainment of success in the business world. When his textbooks were put aside he engaged in rice farming and later turned his attention to the lumber business. Two years ago he established the Butcher Hardware Company and has since conducted a hardware store in Gillett, where he is now enjoying a good trade. He carries a carefully selected line of shelf and heavy hardware, so that he is ready to meet the demands of his patrons, and his progressive methods in the conduct of his store have been a salient feature in the attainment of his present-day success. Close application and diligence have ever characterized him in all of his business career and he well merits the prosperity which is now his.

In 1898 Mr. Butcher was united in marriage to Miss Allie Hibbard, a daughter of J. Hibbard of Tichnor, Arkansas. The children of this marriage are: Clara, Mabel, Nellie, Carroll, Hazel and Pattie. The second daughter, Mabel, is now the wife of James Brannen. The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. They are interested in all of those forces and plans which make for the uplift of the individual and the benefit of the community at large. Mr. Butcher is a public-spirited citizen whose influence is ever on the side of progress, and Gillett has profited by his efforts in her behalf.

IRA O. MILLER.

Ira O. Miller, manager of the Red Spoke Company of Fayetteville, was born October 18, 1878, near Howe, Indiana, a son of Thomas A. and Mary (Kauffmann) Miller, who were natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The former was a son of Abraham Miller, a native of Pennsylvania, who spent his last days in Michigan. The maternal grandfather, John Kauffmann, was born at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and was there living at the time of the memorable flood, when a great portion of the city was swept away and many lives were lost. For two days and nights he was without food. He had passed the ninety-ninth milestone on life's journey when called to his final rest.

The marriage of Thomas A. Miller and Mary Kauffmann was celebrated in Ohio and soon after the close of the Civil war they removed from the Buckeye state to Indiana, where the father followed the occupation of farming. His wife died in that state and Mr. Miller now makes his home in Sturgis, Michigan. He has always given his political support to the democratic party, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. To him and his wife were born eight children, four of whom are living: Samuel E., a dentist, engaged in active practice in Toledo, Illinois; David C., a jeweler, located at Fort Wayne, Indiana; Ira O.; and Lizzie, the wife of Harry Nearhood, a mason contractor of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Ira O. Miller obtained his education in the high school at Howe, Indiana, and in the Howe Military School, while later he pursued a commercial course in the Elkhart (Ind.) Business College. He was first employed by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in connection with the construction department, his duties taking him from Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Oregon. He was on the Pacific coast for only five months when he became ill of typhoid fever and afterward suffered from an attack of smallpox. With the recovery of his health he returned to the east and was employed by the Studebaker Manufacturing Company at South Bend, Indiana, there spending four years. On the expiration of that period he became connected with the International Harvester Company and has represented that corporation for five years. In 1910 he came to Fayetteville and took charge of the interests of the Red Star Spoke Company, which has a large plant in this city and makes shipments of spokes throughout the United States and also to Holland, France, Cuba and Mexico. The firm manufactures spokes for automobiles, wagons, buggies and other vehicles. During the period of the World war the entire plant was turned over for the production of war material.

On Christmas day of 1915 Mr. Miller was married to Miss Helen Hoover, who was born in Jeffersonville, Indiana, and who is a great-granddaughter, in the maternal line, of Elias N. Conway, at one time governor of this state. The Conways are of a very prominent family in the east, and representatives of the name served in the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have become parents of one child, William Conway Miller, now four years of age. Mr. Miller belongs to the Episcopal church, while his wife has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. He is also connected with the Knights of Pythias and his political allegiance is given to the republican party, while at all times he is thoroughly informed concerning the vital issues and questions of the day. He devotes his entire attention to the spoke business and does not seek to figure prominently in any public connections. Since starting out in life on his own account at an early age he has been dependent entirely upon his own resources. His father was always interested in a sawmill and Ira O. Miller early became identified with the timber and lumber industry. He was connected with the wood department when with the Union Pacific and also with the International Harvester Company and the Studebaker Corporation. Eventually he became identified with the interests which he now represents. There is little connected with the lumber industry in its various phases with which he is not familiar and his broad understanding of the trade enables him most carefully to direct the interests which are now under his control. Forceful and resourceful, he has become a dynamic force in the commercial circles of Arkansas.

H. E. McCOLLUM.

H. E. McCollum, mayor of Clarendon and the general manager of the Clarendon Pearl Button Company, is thus largely influencing the development and progress of the city through his business and political activity. In both fields his course is marked by a steady progress that indicates his commendable ambition on behalf of his own interests in business and in connection with the welfare and upbuilding of the city, over which he is now presiding. Mr. McCollum was born in Franklin, Illinois, in 1882, and is a son of J. W. and Lydia (Roundtree) McCollum. The father came to Arkansas in 1893 with his parents, the family home being established in Clarendon. He sold the first ton of mussel shells taken from White river, and he thus instituted a business enterprise that has been of large value and worth to the community.

H. E. McCollum spent the first eleven years of his life in his native state and then in company with his parents came to Arkansas, where he continued his education in the public schools. As the years have passed he has steadily advanced in his business connections until he is now a commanding figure in connection with the manufacturing interests of this part of the state. The Clarendon Pearl Button Company, of which he is the general manager, was organized in 1901 by the citizens of Clarendon, but after eighteen months was sold to the Ontario Pearl Button Company. In 1913 the plant was purchased by the Harvey Chalmers & Son Company of Amsterdam, New York, and the machinery was given to them by the Clarendon citizens on condition that they operate the plant for three years without a shutdown of more than thirty days, or until they had paid out thirty-five thousand dollars to labor. They paid this amount to labor in two years and they have operated the plant continuously since. It has a capacity of two hundred and fifty thousand gross of pearl blanks for buttons per year. Employment is given to fifty-six men who cut pearl button blanks from mussel shells. The by-product of the factory consists of chicken grit shipped out in carload lots. The business is under the direct management of Mr. McCollum, who is familiar with every phase of the work and therefore most wisely and carefully directs the labors of those who serve under him. High standards have been maintained in the factory, in the worth and value of the product and the industry has become one of much importance in connection with the material growth and business development of Clarendon.

Mr. McCollum was united in marriage to Miss Goldie Farris, a daughter of George Farris of Clarendon, and their children are: Harry C. and Leah May. Mr. McCollum belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and upon this ticket he was elected to the office of mayor of his city, in which capacity he is now serving. He studies public problems with the same thoroughness that he manifests in connection with business questions, and he is giving to the city a progressive and businesslike administration, carefully meeting municipal needs and directing advancement toward the adoption of high civic standards and principles.

PAT McNALLEY.

Pat McNalley, one of the foremost members of the Arkansas bar, is now practicing at El Dorado, where he enjoys an enviable reputation as a most learned and successful attorney. He is a native of Dublin, Ireland, where his birth occurred on the 21st of February, 1867, his parents being Michael and Elizabeth (O'Neill) McNalley. It was in the year 1880 that they emigrated to the United States, first taking up their abode near Erie, Pennsylvania, while subsequently they removed to Indianapolis, Indiana, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Michael McNalley, who devoted his attention to railroad work after coming to the new world, passed away in 1896, five years prior to the demise of his wife, which occurred in 1901.

Pat McNalley, who was a lad of thirteen years when he came to this country with his parents, completed a public school education by graduation from the Indianapolis high school as a member of the class of 1887. His professional training was received as a student in the Indiana Law School, from which institution he was graduated in 1895. Prior to entering upon preparation for a legal career, however, he had learned the painter's trade, had taught school and had been otherwise employed. Following his admission to the bar he took a trip to Ireland and after his return to the United States located at Danville, Indiana, where he was actively and successfully engaged in the practice of law until 1903. He then took another trip to his native land, and on again returning to this country located for practice at El Dorado, Arkansas, here continuing until 1915, after which he spent five years in the development of some silver mining properties which he owned in Arizona and in Mexico. In November, 1920, he came back to El Dorado and here practiced his profession in partnership with Judge R. G. Harper until the latter's death on the 30th of August, 1921, since which time he has been alone. The zeal with which he has devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases, have brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct. His arguments have elicited warm commendation not only from his associates at the bar but also from the bench. He is a very able writer; his briefs always show wide research, careful thought and the best and strongest reasons which can be urged for his contention, presented in cogent and logical form and illustrated by a style unusually lucid and clear. Mr. McNalley belongs to the Union County Bar Association, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Catholic church. He is highly esteemed in both social and professional circles of the community in which he makes his home, his course having ever been such as to commend him to the confidence and regard of those with whom he has been associated.

LEWIS D. COOPER.

Lewis D. Cooper, a dynamic force in the business circles of Arkansas, the potency of his labors and the soundness of his judgment being manifest in the splendid results which he has achieved, is now engaged in the wholesale grocery trade in Hot Springs, is vice president of the Security Bank and also the president of the Cooper Dickerson Grocery Company of Little Rock. What he attempts he accomplishes and in his vocabulary there is no such word as fail. He early recognized the fact that energy and persistency of purpose will overcome obstacles and difficulties and by reason of his determination he has advanced steadily until he is a dominant figure in commercial and financial circles in the state. He was born in Tulip, Dallas county, Arkansas, October 4, 1862, and is a son of Dr. L. D. and Catherine (Yawber) Cooper, both of whom were natives of North Carolina, where they were reared and married. Immediately afterward they removed to Arkansas, settling at Tulip, where the father continued in active practice up to within five or six years of his death. Following the death of his wife he removed to Malvern, where he afterward lived retired. He had three brothers who served throughout the Civil war in the Confederate army and who remained residents of Arkansas to the close of hostilities.

Lewis D. Cooper had but limited educational opportunities. The entire period of his attendance at school covered only about six months. His education has been almost self-acquired through reading and study and in the school of experience he has also learned many valuable lessons. On attaining his majority in 1883 he came to Hot Springs and here purchased a small book store, which he owned for six or eight years. He had been in the store for only six months, however, when he secured a position with the Texas Produce Company, which was operating trading cars through the south on the Iron Mountain Railroad. Mr. Cooper became representative of the company at Hot Springs and subsequently purchased the business at this place. The Texas Produce Company had the agency for the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company and while associated with the company Mr. Cooper became acquainted with Adolphus Busch, an acquaintance that ripened into a strong personal friendship. One day Mr. Cooper received a telegram from Mr. Busch asking him to come to St. Louis. He responded to the telegram and in the conference which ensued Mr. Busch handed him twenty-five thousand dollars in order to establish himself in business and to take charge of the brewery product at Hot Springs. From that time Mr. Cooper's business career was assured. Throughout the lifetime of Mr. Busch the closest personal friendship existed between the two men and he continued the representative of the latter for a long period. This important event in Mr. Cooper's life occurred in 1895 and with his return to Hot Springs he established a wholesale grocery business in connection with maintaining the agency of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company. Since then he has constantly broadened the scope of his activities.

In 1891 Mr. Cooper was united in marriage to Miss Etta Buffington of Hot Springs and they became parents of two children: Lewis D., Jr., who is a graduate of the law department of the University of Michigan of the class of 1916 and is also a graduate of Blee's Military Academy at Macon, Missouri. He is now employed in connection with his father's business. He served during the World war as a first lieutenant of the Seventeenth United States Cavalry. The daughter, Nellie, is deceased, and the wife and mother died in 1899. In August, 1916, Mr. Cooper was married to Estelle Kirkland of Hot Springs. He is well known through his fraternal associations, belonging to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, B. P. O. E.; Hot Springs Lodge, Knights of Pythias; and also to the Rotary Club and to the Hot Springs Country and Golf Club. He is a man of social genial nature and of unfeigned cordiality. In his business career he has worked his way steadily upward. While he was denied practically all advantages in youth he has nevertheless carved out his opportunities for the attainment of success and is today one of the strong factors in the business circles of the state.

CLYDE C. COLVERT.

One of the prominent educators of Arkansas is Clyde C. Colvert, who has been superintendent of the Marion public schools since 1920. He was born in Vesey, Texas, on the 29th of September, 1899, a son of W. H. and Lou Ella (McCain) Colvert. On the paternal side he is of English descent, members of the family having come to this country at an early day, settling in Maryland. W. H. Colvert was born in Fordyce, this state, his parents being among the pioneer settlers of the southern part of Arkansas. He is now living in Eagle Mills, where he is engaged as a stationary engineer. He is one of the prominent citizens of that community and is particularly active along educational lines. He has been a member of the local school board for many years. In December, 1896, at Vesey, Texas, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Colvert to Miss Lou Ella McCain, whose demise occurred at Eagle Mills at the age of thirty-nine years. She was of Scotch-Irish descent, although her ancestors have lived in this country for many generations. She was a native of Texas, and was reared to young womanhood on a farm near Clarksville. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Colvert seven children were born, six boys and one girl, all of whom are living. Clyde C., whose name initiates this review, is the eldest.

Clyde C. Colvert received his early education in the public schools of Eagle Mills and in due time entered Ouachita College at Arkadelphia. Subsequently he enrolled in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville but withdrew the year before graduation. He expects, however, to have the B. S. degree conferred upon him by that institution next year. Mr. Colvert worked his way through school. In 1917 he began his career as an educator accepting a position as teacher in the schools at Elliott, this state, where he remained one year. At the termination of that time he went to Eagle Mills to fill out an unexpired term as superintendent of the schools there, and during 1918 and 1919 he was employed in a similar capacity at Oak Grove. In 1920 he came to Marion as superintendent of schools and since that time the enrollment here has increased fifty per cent. The schools are conducted on the basis of psychological and educational tests and measurements relative to the mentality of students. This system has proved quite successful. Mr. Colvert has won an enviable position for himself among the educators of the state and his genial and pleasing personality have won the confidence and trust of the many students under his control. He is identified with the National, Arkansas, Crittenden and Marion Educational Associations and during 1920 and 1921 he was vice president of the latter body. In 1922 he was elected president of the Crittenden County Association, his term of office to expire in 1923. He likewise holds membership in the Red Red Rose, a secret organization of school superintendents and principals from the majority of the southern states.

Although the greater part of his time and attention is devoted to his educational interests, Mr. Colvert gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. He is ever cognizant of the duties and responsibilities, as well as the privileges, of citizenship and there is no movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare that seeks his aid in vain. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and he holds membership in the church at Eagle Mills.

A. A. McKELVEY, M. D.

Great are the demands that are made upon the physician—perhaps greater than upon any other representatives of the professions. If a minister holds himself aloof from his fellows it is supposed to be because he is engaged in the contemplation of things beyond the understanding of the majority of his fellows; if a lawyer is brusque and crabbed, it is believed that he is engaged in the solution of intricate and involved problems of vital interest to mankind. The physician, however, must never allow personal feelings to bias or influence his opinions or his actions but must ever display tact and kindness, combined with professional skill, when he visits his patients and attempts to obviate the ills to which human flesh is heir. Meeting all of the requirements of the modern-day physician, Dr. A. A. McKelvey is now successfully practicing in Fort Smith. He was born in Lawrence county, Arkansas, July 16, 1866, and is a son of Dr. J. W. and Mary Ann McKelvey. The father was a native of Tennessee and in that state practiced medicine for a number of years and also engaged in preaching the gospel as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He afterward removed to Arkansas, settling first in Franklin county, then becoming a resident of Sebastian county in 1872, taking up his abode in Greenwood. He was one of the early circuit riders of this part of Arkansas and as such ministered to the spiritual welfare of many in pioneer times. During the same period he also practiced medicine and thus healed both physical and spiritual ills. It was while in the midst of preaching a sermon that he became ill himself and asked the Rev. J. Holland, a Baptist minister, to come to the pulpit and take his place. Returning to his home, he never rallied and passed away the same week. To him and his wife were born twelve children, all of whom reached adult age and were married. Two of these, J. K. and I. S., became ministers of the Methodist church.

Another son, Dr. A. A. McKelvey, followed in the professional footsteps of his father as to the practice of medicine. He acquired his early education in the common schools and afterward took up the study of medicine in St. Louis, also studied for a time in Little Rock and still later in the University of Chicago. His thorough preliminary training well qualified him for the onerous and responsible duties of the profession and he entered upon active practice at Bloomer. Later he resided for a time at Greenwood, Arkansas, and then came to Fort Smith, where he has remained. For sixteen years he occupied the position of district health officer in the Greenwood district and he has been district health officer at Fort Smith for a period of about three years.

Dr. McKelvey was married to Miss Minnie Fry of Bloomer, Arkansas, daughter of J. T. Fry, and they have become parents of two children: Althea, the wife of A. H. West; and Aaron. They have gained many friends during the period of their residence in Fort Smith, while the Doctor has made for himself a most enviable position in professional circles. He is a man of broad sympathies and kindly spirit and is continually extending a helping hand where aid is needed. His ability has brought him an important practice of large proportions and he is accounted one of the leading physicians of his adopted city.

HON. A. L. SMITH.

Hon. A. L. Smith, a member of one of the old and prominent families of Arkansas which has long figured conspicuously in public affairs and in legal circles of the state, is one of the leading attorneys of Siloam Springs and has also represented his district in the state legislature. He was born in De Witt, Arkansas, February 23, 1880, a son of L. C. and Elizabeth (Hill) Smith, the former a native of Arkansas county, Arkansas, while the latter was born in Charleston, South Carolina. They were married in Arkansas and for many years the father has been numbered with the able and successful attorneys of De Witt, Arkansas. His fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, have called him to public office and for five terms he served as sheriff, while for two terms he filled the office of judge of Arkansas county, making a most creditable record in both connections. He was twice mentioned for governor of the state but met defeat at the primaries. He is a democrat in his political views and a leader in the ranks of the party and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of seven children, of whom two survive: R. V., a well known planter of Spiro, Oklahoma; and A. L., of this review. L. C. Smith's father, J. Floy Smith, was also a native of this state and became a large slave-holder. He was a son of Colonel James Smith, who served as a member of the first Arkansas senate. The maternal grandfather, Alexander Hill, was a native of Mississippi and became a captain in the Confederate army during the Civil war.

In the pursuit of an education A. L. Smith attended the grammar and high schools of De Witt, Arkansas, and the Normal School at Chillicothe, Missouri, completing a law course at Lebanon, Tennessee, in 1911, at which time the degree of LL. B. was conferred upon him. Previous to taking up his law studies he had served for five years as cashier of a bank at Clarendon, Arkansas, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Siloam Springs in 1911. He has been admitted to practice in all the courts and has followed his profession in western Arkansas and Oklahoma. While advancement at the bar is proverbially slow, he has made substantial progress. He has built up a representative clientage, connecting him with much of the important litigation tried in the courts of the district. Aside from his professional connections he has other interests, having invested in farm lands in Benton county and also being a director in the State Bank of Siloam Springs.

On the 22d of November, 1905, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Addie Eleanor Branch, a native of Monroe county, Arkansas, and a daughter of William W. Branch, who was born in Tennessee and came to Arkansas in 1854, becoming one of the pioneer settlers of the state. To this union have been born two children, Marjorie Eleanor, and Arthur L., Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Knights of Pythias, while he is also identified with Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a college fraternity. He is a staunch democrat in his political views and in 1920 was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, in which he served for one session, being a member of the committees on federal relations, education and corporations. On the 12th of September, 1918, he enlisted for service in the World war and was sent to the Officers Training School at Camp Pike, Arkansas, receiving his discharge in December of that year. His time and attention are concentrated upon his law practice, and in a profession demanding keen intellectuality and individual merit he is making continuous progress, ranking with the leading attorneys of Benton county.

ERNEST W. CHANEY.

Hon. Ernest W. Chaney, representative to the state legislature and actively identified with agricultural pursuits in Woodruff county, makes his home at McCrory and is one of the valued and highly esteemed citizens of his section of the state. He was born March 30, 1874, in Haywood county, Tennessee, and is a representative of one of the honored pioneer families there. His grandfather, Fleming W. Chaney, was also born in Tennessee and became a merchant and planter at Chaney's Landing on the Hatchie river, a place which was named in his honor. He owned an extensive plantation and many slaves prior to the Civil war. He had interesting military experiences in connection with both the Seminole and Mexican wars, being a captain in the former on active duty in Florida. During the period of the Civil war he suffered severe losses and for sixty years the family has had a claim before congress to be recompensed for some of the losses sustained at that time. He died in 1877 at the age of seventy-one years and was survived by his wife until 1912, her death occurring when she had reached the age of eighty-eight.

Their son, John N. Chaney, was born in Haywood county, Tennessee, and after attaining his majority owned and conducted a store at Stanton, that state. He followed commercial pursuits to the time of his marriage to Miss Frances Hawkins, also a native of Haywood county and a daughter of J. H. Hawkins, who was likewise born in Tennessee and was a practicing physician, whose professional calls took him up and down the Mississippi river for some distance from his home. On one of these trips he was drowned while making his way from one boat to another. His widow became the wife of Fleming W. Chaney, who in the meantime had lost his first wife.

After his marriage John N. Chaney turned his attention to farming in Haywood county, Tennessee, and in 1880 came to Woodruff county, Arkansas, where he rented land for a time. Later he purchased land near McCrory and continues to engage in general agricultural pursuits and stock raising on the old homestead, which has been in his possession for many years. He has reached the age of seventy-three, while his wife is now seventy-one years of age. For more than fifty-two years they have traveled life's journey happily together. They are members of the Baptist church, and the Chaney family has been identified with that religious denomination for more than two hundred years. In his political views John N. Chaney is a democrat. To him and his wife have been born nine children: Minnie, who is the widow of Ed Woodruff, of Chicago, Illinois; Anna Bird, the wife of H. H. Holder, a farmer of Grays, Arkansas; E. W.; John H., a farmer of Emhouse, Texas; Fannie K., the wife of W. A. Burkett, a retired merchant of Houston, Texas; N. H., a farmer of Jelks, Arkansas; Thomas, who cultivates a farm near McCrory; Robert, who is engaged in farming near Cotton Plant; and Paul, who owns and cultivates land near Jelks.

Ernest W. Chaney pursued his education in the common schools of Woodruff county and on attaining his majority took up the profession of teaching. He taught school altogether for twenty-six terms, three months in the summer and three months in the winter and at the same time carried on his farming interests. On the expiration of that period he concentrated his entire attention upon his land and is today the owner of two hundred and forty acres devoted to the cultivation of diversified crops and also to stock raising. As an agriculturist he has won a position among the substantial citizens of this part of the state and he still owns and supervises his farm, although making his home in McCrory.

In 1898 Mr. Chaney was married to Miss Verna Winfree, a native of Hardeman county, Tennessee, and a daughter of Frank B. Winfree. They became parents of two children: Vera, who died at the age of four years; and Winfree, now twenty-two years of age. He was educated in the common schools of Woodruff county and in the Agricultural College of Jonesboro, Arkansas, and enlisted for service with the Marines during the World war, being trained at Port Royal, South Carolina. He served for forty-two months in Haiti and was discharged in November, 1921.

Mr. Chaney is a Baptist in religious faith and a democrat in his political views. In 1920 he was elected to the state legislature and is now a member of the general assembly. He served as chairman on the committee of enrolled bills and also as chairman of the committee on rules. He was made a member of the committee on levy and drainage, on roads and highways and on the penitentiary committee. He was the only man in the house who served as chairman of two committees and at all times he proved himself a loyal advocate and supporter of all progressive measures looking to the benefit and welfare of the state, his support of any measure being the result of careful investigation into its merits.

JOHN H. McMILLAN.

Admitted to the Arkansas bar in 1895, John H. McMillan has since made steady progress in his profession and as a partner in the firm of McMillan & McMillan he ranks as one of the leading attorneys of the state. Throughout the period since admitted to practice he has made his home in Arkadelphia, his native city. He was born March 27, 1871, and is a son of Henry W. McMillan, a prominent lawyer and lawmaker, who served in the state legislature from his district on two different occasions and was numbered among the foremost men of Clark county. He was a native of North Carolina and pursued his early education in Chapel Hill College at Raleigh, that state, there winning a literary degree and later his degree in law. In young manhood, about a decade prior to the Civil war, he came to Arkansas, settling first in Columbia county, where he taught school. Subsequently he became a teacher in the schools of Camden and in that city he was married. Later both he and his wife were teachers in the Camden schools. At the outbreak of the Civil war Mr. McMillan enlisted for service in the Confederate army as a private and rose to the rank of colonel of his regiment, being on active duty throughout the period of hostilities. Following the close of the war he took up his abode in Arkadelphia and entered upon the practice of law, with which he was prominently identified to the time of his death. He left the impress of his individuality and ability in large measure upon the history of the city. He ranked with the ablest representatives of the bar here. He was very thorough, careful and conscientious in the preparation of his cases and presented his cause clearly and cogently before the courts, his reasoning being at all times sound and his deductions logical. Moreover, he closely studied the vital problems and issues of the day and did not a little to mold public thought and action. His interest in the general welfare was of a most tangible character and he became a recognized leader in the section of the state in which he made his home. In young manhood he wedded Miss Fannie T. Williams, a native of North Carolina, who was well known among the pioneer teachers of Arkansas. She, too, has departed this life.

John H. McMillan was educated in the public schools of Arkadelphia and in Ouachita College, which conferred upon him the Bachelor of Science degree in 1893. He afterward began preparation for the bar as a law student in the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, from which he received his degree in 1895. He was admitted to practice at the bars of Virginia and of Arkansas in the summer of that year and entered upon his professional duties in Arkadelphia, where he has become a prominent figure in the courts. For the past twenty-six years he has been active in upholding the legal status of this section of the state. Since beginning practice he has been associated with his brother, Dougald McMillan, and for the past three years a younger brother, David, has been a member of the firm, which has long held high rank as representative of the Arkansas bar.

On the 9th of September, 1901, John H. McMillan was married to Miss May Boswell of Arkadelphia, and they have become parents of a son and daughter: Boswell and Mary Ernestine. Fraternally Mr. McMillan is connected with Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 1149, B. P. O. E., also with the Woodmen of the World. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, in which he is serving as deacon, while in all the work of the church he takes an active and helpful interest. Aside from his profession he is connected with the Merchants & Planters Bank of Arkadelphia as a director and he is the owner of a farm of thirty-five thousand acres in Clark county, of which five hundred acres is under cultivation, being operated under the direct supervision of Mr. McMillan. His interest in agricultural life forms a helpful diversion from his law practice which makes heavy demands upon his time and energy. His devotion to his clients' interests is proverbial yet he never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law.

W. N. MARTIN.

W. N. Martin, engaged in the practice of law at Mena, was born on a farm in Greene county, Arkansas, April 22, 1870. His grandfather, W. G. Martin, spent his life in Illinois and it was in Edwardsville, that state, that William M. Martin was born in 1835. He served for four years in the Confederate army, in which he enlisted from Van Buren county, Arkansas, and on two or three occasions he was wounded. In young manhood he wedded Nancy J. Andrews, who was born in Greene county, Arkansas, in 1843 and this venerable couple are still living in this state. They were married in Greene county and Mr. Martin devoted his attention to farming and to the gunsmith trade. In 1876 he removed to Polk county, having been a resident of Little River county from 1870 until 1876. In 1880 he purchased a farm, on which he has since made his home and which is situated in the outskirts of Hatfield. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and politically he gives his support to the democratic party. In their family were five children, who are all living: W. N., of this review; Charles E., a resident of Hatfield, where he works for the Mill & Lumber Company; W. B., who is engaged in blacksmithing and general iron working at Nogal, New Mexico; John W., who is with his father and mother on the farm, caring for the property; and Ida E., the wife of W. I. Green of Mena.

W. N. Martin, whose name introduces this review, pursued his education in the country schools of Polk county and was reared to farm life, early becoming familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. He continued to devote his attention to farming until 1904, when he removed to Mena. He had previously filled the office of justice of the peace and in the year in which he took up his abode in Mena he was elected county clerk, occupying the position for four years, or until 1908. In 1910 he was elected county judge and served upon the bench until 1914. He had read law from early boyhood and he studied law throughout the time that he was in office, thus qualifying for admission to the bar in 1907. He began practice in Mena in connection with R. G. Shaver and Minor Pipkin and with the dissolution of that firm some time later he entered into partnership relations with Pole McPhetridge, in 1915. This firm has since been in existence and they have a very large clientage of a distinctively representative character. Mr. Martin has always realized the necessity of thorough preparation of his cases and he now devotes his entire time to his law practice and to his abstract business.

On the 4th of June, 1893, Mr. Martin was married to Miss Eliza Lena Callahan, who was born in Missouri. They have become parents of ten children: John W., who is engaged in the abstract business at Mena and is now a candidate for the office of county tax collector; Marion, who is assistant cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank at Mena; William B. and Goldie, both at home; Jean, a high school pupil; Lina Lee, Paul and Irene, who are all in school; and Mildred and Helen, who are not yet of school age. Mrs. Martin is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Fraternally Mr. Martin is connected with the Woodmen of the World and his political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party. Starting out in life with no special advantages beyond those afforded by the rural schools he has steadily worked his way upward, making good use of his time, talents and opportunities. He was a thorough-going farmer and he has proved a competent official, while at the present time he ranks with the prominent and representative lawyers at the Mena bar.

DANIEL WRIGHT GILL.

Daniel Wright Gill, a native son of Arkansas, has been identified with educational interests of the state for the past fourteen years and is now serving as superintendent of schools of Dumas, a position for which he is well qualified through comprehensive training and broad experience. He was born in Drew county, March 26, 1889, a son of William P. and Lucy Gill, natives of Mississippi, in which state they were reared and married. About 1880 they came to Arkansas, settling on a farm eight miles east of Monticello, in Drew county. The mother died there on the 19th of April, 1919. The father is still residing on the old homestead.

Mr. Gill was accorded liberal educational advantages, attending the district schools of Drew county, the Hinemon University School at Monticello and Mace's Normal School at that place, while he also took a course in the State Normal at Conway. He next became a student at Peabody College of Nashville, Tennessee, and in 1908 took up educational work, with which he has since been connected, confining his activities to the state of Arkansas. From 1909 until 1912 he served as superintendent of schools at Collins and in the latter year he was called to Redfield to fill a similar position, there remaining until 1916. The next two years were spent as superintendent of schools at Watson Chapel and during 1918 and 1919 he acted in a similar capacity at Tillar, coming to Dumas in the fall of the latter year to take charge of the schools at this point. He has since remained at their head and has done much to improve the curriculum and methods of instruction followed in his district. He is conscientious and efficient in the discharge of his professional duties and under his able direction the public schools of Dumas have made splendid progress.

On February 5, 1911, Mr. Gill was united in marriage to Miss Cora Stephan of Little Rock, Arkansas, and they have four children: Stephan W., Daniel W., Jr., Marvin Gardner and Robert Dean. Mr. Gill is a member of the Baptist church and fraternally is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masons, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 547, F. & A. M., of the latter organization. He has devoted his life to educational work, in which he has been very successful, gaining that expert ability which is acquired only through concentrated effort and specialized knowledge, and his enterprise, determination and adherence to high standards have won for him the unqualified respect and esteem of all with whom he has been associated.

CLARENCE L. HUNT, D. D. S.

Dr. Clarence L. Hunt, an able representative of the dental profession of Fort Smith, not only deserves mention in this work as a prominent dentist and leading citizen but also as a member of one of the old and honored pioneer families of the state. He is a grandson of Hon. William H. Hunt, a Harvard graduate, who came from Georgia to Arkansas in the early period of settlement and development here and at one time served as a member of the legislature, aiding in shaping the policy and progress of the state in its formative period. His son, Charles Hunt, was a surveyor and did much important work of this character in Arkansas. Both he and his son, Dr. Hunt, were connected with topographical work for the railroad that was to extend from Ola to Hot Springs and in this connection estimated the timber, coal and the position for the railroad, which now extends from Ola to Plainview.

Charles Hunt was united in marriage to Ruth White and their family included Dr. Clarence L. Hunt of this review, who was born in Ola, Arkansas, in May, 1884. He acquired his primary education in Dardanelle and in 1901 made his way to Fort Smith, then a youth of seventeen years. Here he entered high school and completed the full course in three years. He afterward spent a year in study in the Central University at Danville, Kentucky, and later went east, attending the University of Pennsylvania from 1905 until 1908, in which year he completed his dental course and won his D. D. S. degree. Returning to Fort Smith, he spent four years in practice as the associate of Dr. W. T. Cate and in 1912 opened an office independently, since which time he has concentrated his efforts and attention upon professional duties, which have constantly increased in volume and importance. He displays marked skill and ability in dental surgery, being thoroughly conversant with the most improved and advanced methods of caring for the teeth. His satisfied patrons are legion and his practice has largely grown through that advertising which comes when an individual speaks a favorable word for his dentist. At all times he has kept in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress and in addition to his extensive private practice he was dentist for the United States public health service in his district for about fifteen months and was also a dentist for the vocational training board.

While a student in Central University at Danville, Kentucky, and also in the University of Pennsylvania Dr. Hunt distinguished himself in athletics. He received three medals at the Central University and eighteen medals in the University of Pennsylvania for his prowess in athletic sports. In the latter institution he made the record high jump. Even while a high school pupil he won a gold medal for three consecutive years as the best all-round athlete and he is still active and enjoys outdoor sports.

During his school days he was given an opportunity to take part in the Olympic games which were held in London in 1908, but it was impossible for him to make the trip. Throughout his entire life he has recognized the fact that it is necessary not only to work well but to play well and that a man's success depends upon his recreation almost as much as upon his business activity. In other words there must be maintained an even balance for the best physical and mental development. The Doctor is still very fond of fishing and hunting and enjoys anything in the line of manly sports. At the same time no professional duty is neglected and his ability is widely recognized throughout Fort Smith and the surrounding country.

On the 27th of October, 1915, Dr. Hunt was united in marriage to Miss Lucia Belden, a daughter of Judge E. A. Belden, of Hamilton, Ohio, and they have become the parents of two children, Elizabeth and Lucia Leigh.

During the World war period Dr. Hunt served on the board of medical examiners. He is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the nature of his interests and activities is indicated in the fact that he has membership in the Business Men's Club, the Lions Club, the Noon Civics Club and the Country Club, manifesting an intense interest in all of those projects and plans which have to do with the welfare and upbuilding of the city. Along strictly professional lines he has membership in the Fort Smith District Dental Association, the Western District of the Arkansas State Dental Association and in the National Dental Association and through the proceedings of these bodies keeps thoroughly informed concerning the advanced steps that are being made by the profession.

JOHN HENRY KRUGER.

John Henry Kruger, whose training, experience and business activity have been such as to make him fit and ready to take a large place and play a large part in the world of men, is now the state sales manager for the Magnolia Petroleum Company. Important and responsible as is this position it has been attained solely through individual merit and ability. He started out in the business world in the humble position of messenger boy with the Waters-Pierce Company of Galveston, Texas. Since that time he has made steady progress in connection with the oil industry and today his name is widely known in business circles not only in Arkansas but throughout the southwest. He was born in Peoria, Illinois, November 10, 1871, his parents being Edward Henry and Dora (Johnson) Kruger. The father was a musician, devoting his life to the art and his last days were spent in Atlanta, Georgia. He was a soldier of the Civil war, serving with the rank of corporal in the Union army and was with General Sherman on the celebrated march from Atlanta to the sea. Because of wounds which he received during a charge on Rome, Georgia, he was not returned to active service. Both he and his wife have departed this life. Their family numbered three sons, one of whom died in infancy.

The youngest of the family, John Henry Kruger, was a young lad when his parents removed from Illinois to Atlanta, Georgia, where he pursued a public school education. He was a youth of eighteen years when he first became identified with the oil business in Galveston, Texas, as a representative of the Waters-Pierce Company in 1889, accepting the minor position of office boy. He was industrious and energetic and steadily won promotion, becoming bookkeeper and eventually an agent for the company at Galveston, in 1908. He continued to serve in that connection for three years, or until 1911, when he accepted the position of sales agent with the Magnolia Petroleum Company at Galveston, his territory covering four counties. In that position he remained until 1913, when he was transferred to Fort Worth, Texas, as assistant manager of the northwestern division. In 1916 he was transferred to Little Rock as state manager of the Arkansas division of the Magnolia Petroleum Company and has since acted in that capacity, covering a period of five years. The Magnolia Petroleum Company was organized in 1911 and now has a capital stock of one hundred and twenty million dollars and also has nearly six hundred distributing stations in the southwest. The corporation not only owns valuable oil land that is doing splendid production work, but places upon the market many of its manufactured products, including engine oil, machine oil, cup grease, cylinder oil, tractor oil, auto oil, gasoline, gas engine oil, fibre grease and many other of its by-products. As manager of the Arkansas division Mr. Kruger has greatly developed the business of the company in this state.

On the 22d of June, 1896, Mr. Kruger was married to Miss Mary Lallier Davison, who was born in Texas, in July, 1872. Their children are: Florence Dorothy, born in 1900 and now a graduate of the Little Rock high school, while for two years she has been a student in the University of Arkansas; and Edward Davison, who was born in 1901 and is a graduate of the Little Rock high school with the class of 1920.

The religious faith of the family is indicated by their membership in the Second Baptist church, in which Mr. Kruger is serving as a deacon. His political endorsement is given to the republican party and he keeps well informed on the vital questions and issues of the day. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias, is a Scottish Rite Mason and is a member of the Spring Lake Club. His record is commendable and should serve as a source of encouragement and inspiration to others. His steady rise with the company in spite of early educational disadvantages is certainly worthy of admiration. His leisure time in his youth and early manhood were given to study with the realization of the value of education as a factor in success in life. He is yet a comparatively young man and what he has already accomplished indicates that his future career will be well worth watching.

WILLIAM GUY PITTMAN, M. D.

Dr. William Guy Pittman, a physician of Pine Bluff, who is specializing in X-ray and laboratory work, is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Sparkman in 1881, his parents being J. T. and Elizabeth (Williams) Pittman, who carefully directed the education of their son that he might have the opportunities for steady advancement in his chosen field of labor. He completed his more specifically literary training in the University of Arkansas and afterward entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas, and finally graduated from the University of Louisville in 1909, and the Illinois Medical College. He thus came under the instruction of some of the eminent medical educators of the country and in 1909 he opened an office in Grapevine, Arkansas, where he continued in practice until 1913. In that year he returned to his native city, where he practiced for a time and then removed to Little Rock, there specializing in X-ray and laboratory diagnosis. On leaving the capital city he came to Pine Bluff, in 1915, and now has a well equipped laboratory in the Citizens Bank building, continuing, as he did in Little Rock, in X-ray and laboratory work. His practice of this character is now extensive and important and he occupies a prominent position in professional circles.

In 1910 Dr. Pittman was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle Ross of Brooks, Arkansas, a daughter of J. R. and Lavinia (Shell) Ross. Their children are: Hubert and Madero. The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church, to the support of which they make generous contribution, while in the work of the church they are helpfully interested. Dr. Pittman served on the exemption board during the World war and he always stands for progressiveness in citizenship but has comparatively little time for work outside of the strict path of his profession, which is constantly making greater demands upon his time and energies.

GEORGE LEONARD MALLORY.

George Leonard Mallory has used his talents wisely and well in the field of law practice and has gained a most creditable position at the bar since entering upon the active work of the profession in 1911. Moreover he is recognized as one of the leaders of the republican party in Arkansas and at the present writing is serving as secretary of the state central committee. He was born in Ontario, Canada, March 8, 1879, and was but five years of age when his parents crossed the border into this country. He is a son of Ira O. and Elizabeth A. (Moxley) Mallory, who were likewise natives of Canada. The father was also born in Ontario and there resided until 1885, when he came to the United States and for a considerable period lived in Pontiac, Illinois. His wife died in Pennsylvania in 1913 and he survived only until 1914, passing away in Florida. Their children were three in number: George L., Frank L., and Charles Norton.

George Leonard Mallory was a little lad of but five years when his parents removed to Illinois, and his early education was largely acquired in Pontiac, that state. He afterward attended the Lake Forest University, which conferred upon him the Bachelor of Arts degree and was also a student in the University of Chicago. When he had completed his studies he became correspondent for the Chicago Tribune and for a time was employed by the City Press Association of Chicago. His identification with newspaper interests covered several years and constituted a valuable training school for later professional activity. In November, 1902, he came to Arkansas, where he was made editor of the State Republican, which position he held for ten years, and it is safe to say that there are few so thoroughly familiar with the political history of Arkansas as George L. Mallory. In the meantime he had determined to take up the practice of law and actuated by this desire he entered the law department of the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1911. After a very brief period he entered upon active practice and his progress has been continuous and substantial from that time to the present. His powers have constantly developed through the exercise of effort and he is today recognized as an able advocate and wise counselor. He is serving as attorney in Arkansas for the Aetna companies and also represents a number of other important corporate interests.

Four days after the declaration of war Mr. Mallory enlisted and later was commissioned. He was called to active duty on the 15th of August, 1917, and rose from a second lieutenancy to captain and adjutant of the Three Hundred and Twelfth Train Headquarters. He went overseas in August, 1918, and there remained until January, 1919, when he returned to America and on the 8th of February of that year he received his honorable discharge.

Mr. Mallory was married August 20, 1919, to Miss Edwina Reid, who was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1893 and is a daughter of J. Lawson and Mary (Parker) Reid. Her father, who was born in Georgia, died in 1907. Her mother was born in Little Rock, representing one of the old families of the city. Mrs. Mallory completed her education in the Higbee school at Memphis, Tennessee, and is a lady of liberal culture and refinement. By her marriage she has become the mother of an interesting little daughter, Mary Elizabeth.

Fraternally Mr. Mallory is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and his religious faith is evidenced in his membership in and loyal support of the Presbyterian church. Politically he is a republican and has continuously filled the position of secretary of the state central committee since the state convention of 1914, save for the period of his service in the army. He takes a most active interest in politics and does all in his power to promote republican successes. He has received the endorsement of the Arkansas republican state central committee for the office of United States marshal, but whether in office or out of it Mr. Mallory is always a loyal and progressive citizen, holding to high standards in relation to civic betterment and the general advancement of the community and commonwealth.

ALVIN LOUIS PETTER, D. D. S.

Dr. Alvin Louis Petter, who has been actively engaged in the practice of dentistry at Stuttgart for the past seven years, is widely recognized as an able young representative of the profession in eastern Arkansas. He was born in Paducah, Kentucky, in 1891, a son of Frank and Sophie (Mamman) Petter, his father being also a native of Paducah. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Petter fought in the Civil war.

In the acquirement of an education Alvin L. Petter pursued a high school course in his native city, while his professional training was received as a student in the Indiana Dental College of Indianapolis, Indiana. It was in 1915 that he took up the work of his chosen profession at Stuttgart, Arkansas, where he has remained to the present time and where a large and gratifying practice has been accorded him. He displays marked skill in handling the many delicate little instruments which constitute the equipment of the modern dentist and his work is of a most satisfactory and commendable character. During the period of the World war he became a member of the Dental Reserve Corps, remaining in camp for two months.

Dr. Petter married Miss Marie Grable, daughter of August Grable of Stuttgart, and they are well known and highly esteemed socially. The Doctor is a Scottish Rite Mason and an Elk, while his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church. He has gained an extensive circle of friends during the period of his residence in Stuttgart and enjoys an enviable reputation as one of the successful young dentists and representative citizens of Arkansas county.

DAVID VANCEY THOMAS, Ph. D.

David Vancey Thomas, Ph. D., educator and author, who is filling the chair of history and political science in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, was born in Fulton county, Kentucky, January 19, 1872, his parents being James Fuller and Eliza Ann (Ratliff) Thomas. He comes of Scotch-Irish, English and German ancestry, but the family from whom he is descended has lived in America from colonial days and its representatives have fought in the Revolutionary and subsequent wars of the country.

His grandmother in the maternal line was one of the few pensioners of the War of 1812 at the time of her death, which occurred in 1896.

The public schools of Kentucky afforded Professor Thomas his early educational privileges. He spent two years in preparatory work in Marvin College at Clinton, Kentucky, and then matriculated at Emory College of Georgia, from which he was graduated in 1894 with the Bachelor of Arts degree. During his student days he won several prizes and was also editor of the college magazine, while in a class of thirty-five he won second position in scholarship. On commencement day he delivered the salutatory in Greek and one of his prize essays was afterward published in the Methodist Review of Nashville under the title, The Origin of the English Drama.

Following the completion of his college course Professor Thomas devoted two years to public school teaching in Perote, Alabama, and Coleman, Georgia. He was then awarded a scholastic fellowship in Vanderbilt University, which he held for two years and on the completion of his course there he was awarded the Master of Arts degree. Continuing his work in the educational field he filled the chair of Latin and Greek in Hendrix College for three years and during that period he decided to specialize in history and political science, so that he devoted the long summer vacation periods to study along those lines in the University of Chicago. In 1901 he was awarded a university fellowship in history at Columbia University and spent a year as a member of the student body there, passing all the examinations for the Doctor of Philosophy degree, but his thesis not being quite ready for publication the degree was not formally awarded until the following year, 1903.

In September, 1902, Professor Thomas resumed his connection with Hendrix College, accepting the chair of history and political science, which he filled for three years. He next became identified with the University of Florida, occupying a similar position for two years, when he resigned to become professor of history and political science in the University of Arkansas.

In the meantime, or on the 21st of June, 1905, Professor Thomas was married to Miss Elizabeth Janney of Conway, Arkansas, and they have become parents of two children: Mary Elizabeth and Albert Janney. Mrs. Thomas is a lady of liberal culture, who was president of the University Club of Fayetteville in 1920 and is now the president of the local missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church. Professor Thomas gives his entire time to teaching and writing and through the latter connection has become most widely known. He is the author of A History of Military Government in Newly Acquired Territory of the United States, which was published in New York in 1904. He has written numerous magazine articles on literary, educational, historical and political subjects. In October, 1902, his article on The South and Her History, appeared in the Review of Reviews and from July until October, 1905, there appeared in the South Atlantic Quarterly a series of articles from his pen on The Development of the Executive Prerogative. His Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness in Modern Society, was published in October, 1907, and an article on The Impending Crisis Fifty Years After, was published in Uncle Remus Magazine in November, 1907. His other writings include A Forgotten Work of Victor Hugo, published by the Methodist Review in January, 1908; The Law of Impeachment in the United States, appearing in the American Political Science Review in May, 1908; A Year of Bench Labor Law, published in the Political Science Quarterly in March, 1909; The Need of Agricultural Education in the South, in the Annals of the Academy of Social and Political Science in January, 1910; and he was one of the contributors to The South, in Building of the Nation, to the Cyclopedia of American Government, and to the Encyclopedia Americana (1919). His Next Step in Railway Legislation, appeared in the Unpopular Review of 1917 and an article on The Land and the People appeared in the Nation in January, 1920. He also wrote an article on Filling the Coal Bin, which appeared in the Independent in January, 1918, and he is the author of Syllabus on Studies in Citizenship, published by the general extension department of the University of Arkansas; also Reorganization of State Government with Special Reference to Arkansas. He also published Commerce, Concession and War, in the South Atlantic quarterly in April, 1921. While in the University of Florida Professor Thomas prepared reports on the Florida archives for the annual report of the American Historical Association. The Carnegie Institution also engaged him to write a history of banking in Florida and a history of the free negro in that state before 1865. He belongs to the American Historical Association, to the Arkansas Historical Association, the American Political Science Association, the Arkansas Educational Association, the Southwestern Political Science Association, of which he is the vice president, the University Commission on Race Relations and the Delta Tau Delta fraternity. Aside from his connection with the Arkansas State University he has been a member of the summer faculty of Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tennessee, and practically his entire time is devoted to teaching and authorship. Fraternally he is a Mason, politically, a democrat and religiously, a Methodist. These connections indicate the nature of his interests outside of professional life. His studies and researches have resulted in valuable contribution to the world's work and the University of Arkansas has reason to be congratulated upon having at the head of its history and political science department a man as capable as David Yancey Thomas.

AVERY M. BLOUNT.

Avery M. Blount, attorney at law at Searcy, is a representative of one of the old American families. His great-grandfather, Jesse Blount, held the office of high bailiff in England but due to his sympathy with the American struggle for independence he resigned his position and made his way to the colonies, after which he enlisted in the American army, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant and served throughout the Revolutionary war, giving valiant aid to the cause of liberty. He remained a resident of the new world, becoming the founder of the family on this side the Atlantic. His son, Jesse Fields Blount, was born in Rhode Island and removed to Virginia. He was a teacher by profession and organized an academy in West Tennessee. He served as justice of the peace and was a man of prominence and influence in his community. His liberal education, his high standards and his sterling worth made him a forceful factor for good in the community in which he lived. He was at one time a slave-owner but becoming convinced of the injustice of this method he freed his slaves. He made extensive investments in land in Tennessee and he sold each of his slaves forty acres, giving them their freedom when their land was paid for. The greater part of his life was devoted to educational work and he made valuable contribution to progress and advancement throughout his life. He married a Miss Hyatt, who was reared in Pennsylvania and both died in Tennessee, his death occurring at the beginning of the Civil war. They were the parents of Addison L. Blount, who was born in West Tennessee and became a contractor and builder. He worked on railroad construction on the Illinois Central in the rebuilding of the roads after the Civil war. Through experience he learned engineering and removing to Arkansas he settled near Marianna, in Lee county, where he became overseer of a plantation. At a later date he bought land in St. Francis county near Palestine and continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits for five years, his place being mostly given over to the cultivation of cotton. Due to the condition of his health he removed to Harrison county, where he engaged in prospecting and in 1885 he came to White county, purchasing land on the Bayou des Arc creek near Searcy. Some time afterward he sold most of his land but continued thereon until he retired from active business life and took up his abode in Searcy. In young manhood he wedded Louise Brown, also a native of West Tennessee and a daughter of John Brown, who was a distant relative of John Brown, the apostle of antislavery. Her father was a native of North Carolina and owned slaves that he later freed. On leaving North Carolina he removed to West Tennessee and had become a resident of Indiana prior to the Civil war. He was a millwright by trade and engaged in the construction of several mills in West Tennessee, making most of the machinery by hand. His death occurred while the Civil war was in progress. He had married Eliza Wood, a native of Alabama and after his demise she returned to Tennessee with her family and departed this life in that state. It was her daughter, Louise, who became the wife of Addison L. Blount and to this marriage there were born eight children, four of whom are living: Robert Lee, a farmer of Armstrong Springs, Arkansas; Benjamin F., who follows farming at Rosebud, Arkansas; John B., an accountant of Canada; and Avery M. Those who have departed this life are: Walter, who died in 1907 at the age of thirty-three years, up to which time he had been associated with his father in the development of the home farm; Albert, who died in 1903 at the age of twenty years; and two children who died in infancy. The death of the father occurred in 1920, when he was seventy-two years of age. The mother is still living, at the age of sixty-nine years.

From the foregoing it will be seen that Avery M. Blount is descended from ancestry whose outstanding characteristic has been loyalty to their honest convictions and fidelity in following the principles in which they believed. Avery M. Blount was born in White county, September 6, 1888, and his life has been in harmony with that of the ancestral record. He pursued his education in the public schools and in Batesville Business College and afterward studied stenography and accepted a position of that character. He did stenographic work and studied law in the office of W. D. Davenport and also pursued a correspondence course in law through the La Salle Extension University of Chicago. He was admitted to the bar in the circuit and chancery courts and in 1919 was admitted to practice before the supreme court. He entered upon general practice, in which he continues and he also has farm and timber lands in Arkansas, from which he derives a good rental. Actuated by a laudable ambition he has made steady progress in his professional career and his success has come as the result of thorough study, close application and marked devotion to the interests of his clients. His entire time is given to his law practice and to his real estate interests.

Mr. Blount was married to Miss Grace D. Burkett, a native of Ohio, and they enjoy the warm esteem of an extensive circle of friends in Searcy and the surrounding country. Mr. Blount belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America and in the latter organization is now state clerk, having been elected to the office in 1921, in 1917 and again in 1919. He was a district delegate of the order to the national convention and he has also served as clerk of the local lodge. In politics he is an independent voter, exercising his right of franchise as seems to him is beneficial to the community at large. He ever seeks the welfare and progress of his community and cooperates in all plans and projects which he believes will prove of public benefit.

SAMUEL BASCOM KINARD.

Samuel Bascom Kinard, whose death occurred in 1919, was long closely associated with the industrial development of his section of the state, being engaged in the operation of a sawmill in Ashley county at the time of his death. He was born in Columbia county, Arkansas, July 14, 1879, and was a son of Robert and Margaret (Kelly) Kinard, who are now residents of El Dorado. The son was but a small boy when his parents removed to this city and his education was acquired here in the public schools. He possessed natural mechanical skill and ingenuity and in very early life identified himself with the sawmill business. At the age of seventeen years he was a mill foreman and served in that capacity up to the time of his demise, being killed in the mill which he had built on his own account in Ashley county. He was in some way caught in the machinery and sustained injuries which caused his death on the 23d of March, 1919.

Mr. Kinard was married on the 23d of November, 1904, to Miss Lena Renfroe of Ouachita county, who was born near Camden, and is a daughter of William C. Renfroe, one of the prominent farmers of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Kinard became parents of three children: Corine, Early and Clifford. Mrs. Kinard is a member of the Baptist church and has many friends in El Dorado. Mr. Kinard belonged to the Masonic fraternity and the Woodmen of the World and at one time was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he lived his life according to its teachings, trying at all times closely to follow the golden rule.

GILES LUCAS, M. D.

In a thorough preparatory course and later in postgraduate work, Dr. Giles Lucas laid the foundation for the success and progress which he has attained as a practitioner of medicine and surgery. For twenty-eight years he has followed his profession in Van Buren, at all times keeping in touch with the advancement that is being made by those who are regarded as leaders in this field. He was born in Harnett county, North Carolina, in 1860, a son of Alfred Lucas and Penelope (Giles) Lucas. His father was a successful turpentine producer and upon the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in the Confederate army, serving throughout that conflict.

Dr. Giles Lucas was one of twelve children, six boys and six girls, and at the age of fourteen years he left the parental roof. For sometime he wandered about, working on farms for six dollars a month and following other occupations and he secured enough money to further his education by teaching in the country schools. He had early determined upon a medical career and in 1884 enrolled in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, graduating from that institution with the M. D. degree in 1887. Two years later he came to Arkansas and for two years resided at Alma, Crawford county. In 1893 he graduated from the Missouri Medical College, which is now a part of the Washington University in Missouri. In that same year he came to Van Buren and has resided here ever since. In 1895 he took a postgraduate course at the New Orleans Polyclinic. Dr. Lucas is ever careful in the diagnosis of his cases and his judgment is sound and reliable. His work has commanded the respect of his professional brethren, for he displays keen ability in the administration of remedial agencies. His time is not only taken up with his general practice but he is now serving as city health officer and he has likewise large farming and stock interests.

Dr. Lucas was first married in 1879, near Fayetteville, Cumberland county, North Carolina. He has one son by that marriage, William Erich Lucas, who is in the National Bank of Commerce at Seattle, Washington.

In 1900 occurred the second marriage of Dr. Lucas, when he wedded Miss Lucy Jane Pool of Hiattville, Bourbon county, Kansas, and to their union one child has been born: Lucy Jane, sixteen years of age. Dr. Lucas is a member of the city council and is interested in any plan for the development of Van Buren and the promotion of its material interests. He displayed the elemental strength of his character in his efforts to obtain an education and the same spirit of determination and laudable ambition have characterized him in his later life work, bringing him to a creditable position as a representative of the medical profession in Van Buren and throughout the state.

MAJOR T. E. STANLEY.

Major T. E. Stanley, whose life record includes an important military chapter as well as the record of prominent connection with the bar and with the banking interests of Augusta, died on the 16th of June, 1904, while attending the Confederate reunion at Nashville, Tennessee. He was born in Lawrence county, Alabama, October 15, 1844, and was therefore sixty years of age at the time of his demise. His parents were Joe H. and Jane (Hill) Stanley, both natives of Alabama, where the father followed agricultural pursuits.

The son was educated in the public schools of his native county until he matriculated in the La Grange Military Academy in January, 1860. He was assigned to Company A of the Cadet Corps and, although in the fourth class, his conscientious and capable performance of his duties earned for him a corporalship within his first year. Following the outbreak of hostilities between the north and the south he enlisted as a private in Company B, Tenth Alabama Infantry, on the 10th of June, 1861, and by October of that year had won promotion to the rank of first sergeant. He afterward became a lieutenant of Company G in the same regiment and thus served from 1863 until the close of the war.

During the days of peace Major Stanley devoted his attention largely to the practice of law, becoming a member of the bar at Augusta, Arkansas. He soon gained a large clientage of an important character and proved his capability to successfully handle intricate and involved legal problems. He likewise served as probate judge of Woodruff county and was called to other positions of public honor and trust. He became a member of the Arkansas state legislature, was made speaker of the house and was defeated by only eight votes in the convention for the democratic nomination for governor. Throughout his life he remained an active factor in political circles and one whose opinions carried great weight in the councils of the party. Aside from devoting his attention to the practice of law he became active in the establishment of a banking institution known as the Bank of Augusta & Trust Company and his successful management of this and various other enterprises brought to him a handsome fortune. He found his greatest happiness in his success through the fact that it enabled him to provide liberally for his family.

It was on the 1st of May, 1873, that Major Stanley was married to Miss Laura McCurdy, a native of St. Francis county, Arkansas, and a daughter of I. M. and Sarah Elizabeth (Quiett) McCurdy, the former a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and the latter of North Carolina. They became pioneer settlers of St. Francis county, Arkansas, where Mr. McCurdy took up his abode about 1850. He entered land from the government and there engaged in farming, while at the same time he carried on merchandising in connection with his brother at Mount Vernon, Arkansas. He likewise served as sheriff of St. Francis county and in 1855 he removed to Woodruff county, where he again carried on mercantile pursuits. He had charge of the commercial business on the White river before and during the Civil war. He held membership with the Masonic lodge of Augusta and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party and he continued active in its support until his death, which occurred when he was seventy years of age, his wife surviving to the age of seventy-five years. In their family were two children, Mrs. Laura Stanley and Junius McCurdy, both living in Augusta. By her marriage Mrs. Stanley became the mother of seven children: Baxter, deceased; McCurdy; Mrs. J. R. Vinson; Hugh, deceased; Thomas, who is married and lives in Augusta, where he is connected with the Augusta Mercantile Company; Joe H., who is the first vice president of the Southern Trust Company of Little Rock, Arkansas; and one who died in infancy.

The family circle was again broken by the hand of death when on the 16th of June, 1904, Major Stanley suddenly died while attending the Confederate reunion in Nashville, Tennessee. There were many friends who mourned his loss as well as his immediate family, for he had endeared himself to all with whom he came into contact by reason not only of his business capability and the success he achieved but also by reason of the many admirable traits of character which he manifested. He was thoroughly reliable and progressive in business, was kindly and generous in spirit and genial in disposition and thus his strongly marked traits won for him the friendly regard of all.

IRVIN T. SIMS.

Irvin T. Sims, who is engaged in merchandising in Hazen, was born in Audrain county, Missouri, October 26, 1876, his parents being John and Melinda (Crockett) Sims. The father came to Hazen about thirty-four years ago and has been a prominent factor in the business life of the city for many years. He has devoted the major part of his time to the purchase and shipment of grain and has also engaged extensively in dealing in cattle. His business affairs have been wisely, carefully and successfully conducted, and his position is that of an honored and representative citizen not alone by reason of the success he has achieved but also owing to the straightforward and progressive business policy which he has ever followed. He was also widely known as one of the pioneer rice cultivators of the state and assisted materially in developing rice production in this section. He was among the first to plant large acreages to rice and demonstrated the possibilities in this connection. His first wife was of the noted Crockett family and was a kinswoman of Davy Crockett. Following her death Mr. Sims married Sallie Dooley. To John and Melinda (Crockett) Sims there were born seven children, six of whom are now living, namely: Samuel C., who at one time was state senator of Arkansas and is represented elsewhere in this work; J. F., who was formerly sheriff of Prairie county and is now engaged in the banking business; Mrs. Oswell Nail, living at Biscoe, Arkansas; Mrs. F. G. Harris, a resident of Columbia, Missouri; J. H., of Little Rock; and Irvin T.

Irvin T. Sims was educated at Hazen and in early life became a stockman, while later he engaged in dealing in hay. He likewise gave his attention in part to the cultivation of a rice plantation and established a mercantile business in Hazen, which he still successfully conducts. Whatever he undertakes he carries forward to creditable and profitable completion, and his enterprise and industry enables him to overcome many difficulties and obstacles that may bar his path. He is now a director and the vice president of the New Bank of Hazen and figures most prominently in connection with all of the business affairs which have claimed his time and energy.

Mr. Sims was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Brockway, a daughter of David and Rebecca (Balance) Brockway, who were at one time residents of McDonough county, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Sims have been born two children: John P. and Marguerite Imogene. The son married Susan P. Screeton, of Hazen, a daughter of S. E. Screeton.

Fraternally Mr. Sims is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks but has never sought to figure prominently and both within and without the organization he is held in high esteem. He is regarded as a most progressive and representative business man, and his activities have been of benefit to his section of the state. As a citizen he stands for all that makes for improvement and advancement and he justly deserves classification with the representative men of Prairie county.

G. C. McKENNON, D. D. S.

A well equipped office and marked skill in practice have enabled Dr. G. C. McKennon to gain a position of prominence in the ranks of the dental fraternity of Russellville, with which he has been identified for over a quarter of a century, being the dean of his profession in Pope county. He is a native son of Arkansas and a member of one of the old and highly respected families of the state. His birth occurred at Clarksville on the 13th of November, 1869, and his parents were A. S. and Virginia (Berry) McKennon. The former of whom was born in Pulaski county, Tennessee, in 1841, while the latter was a native of Virginia. The father received limited educational advantages and when a youth of seventeen came to Arkansas, securing a position as clerk in a store at Carrollton. He was called to public office, serving as sheriff of Carroll county, and later he removed to Clarksville, becoming one of the leading merchants of that place. Subsequently he completed a course in law and successfully followed his profession at Clarksville, building up a large practice and winning recognition as an able attorney.

He served as prosecuting attorney and also represented Johnson county in the state legislature, being urged to accept still higher public offices, but refused. He was appointed by President Cleveland a member of the Dawes commission at McAlester, Oklahoma, and for nine years was identified with that body, after which he became attorney for the Seminole Indians, with headquarters at Wewoka, Oklahoma. He also conducted a law office at McAlester, Oklahoma, and was one of the most prominent men of that state and also of Arkansas. While residing in the Bear state he was elected prosecuting attorney of his district, which comprised the western tier of counties lying between Little Rock and Fort Smith, this being during the early days when lawlessness held sway in the state. He waged a determined warfare against evildoers and within a few years succeeded in eliminating crime from this section, thus reducing the necessity for holding court in these various counties from four weeks per term to a week or ten days. It was also owing to his untiring efforts that every saloon between Little Rock and Van Buren, a distance of one hundred and sixty miles, was forced out of business. He was a strong prohibitionist and did more to promote the cause than any one man either in Arkansas or Oklahoma. Although his educational opportunities were extremely meager, during his youth, he was a close student and a keen observer and he became in his later years an exceptionally well informed man. He was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he served as a captain in the Confederate army, and was captured at Port Hudson, being a prisoner on Johnson's island at the close of the conflict. He gave unfaltering support to the democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. In Masonry he attained the honorary thirty-third degree and was an exemplary representative of the craft. He was deeply interested in the cause of education and was the first president of the board of trustees of Hendrix College, giving to the students of that institution a medal for high scholarship—a gift that is continued by the subject of this review. He died at McAlester, Oklahoma, on the 20th of September, 1920, at the age of seventy-nine, having for many years survived his first wife, whose demise had occurred in 1874, when she was but thirty-five years of age. She was a sister of Senator James H. Berry of Bentonville, Arkansas, who is represented elsewhere in this work. To the first union were born five children, of whom three survive; Mrs. Minnie Mulcahey, a resident of Chicago, Illinois; G. C., of this review; and Mrs. Gene Towell, whose home is at Hot Springs, Arkansas. Following the death of his first wife, Mr. McKennon married Miss Hannah Basham, a sister of J. H. Basham of Clarksville, and she is also deceased. They became the parents of nine children, of whom five are living, namely: P. D., a leading dentist of Fort Smith, Arkansas; Mrs. Basham Brice, who resides in Colorado; Mrs. Rose Leinbach of Onaga, Kansas; Mrs. Louise Mourning, who lives at McAlester, Oklahoma; and Mrs. R. L. Kilgore, a resident of Wichita Falls, Texas.

In the acquirement of an education G. C. McKennon attended the grammar and high schools of Clarksville, after which he was for two years a student at the Arkansas State University. He then entered the dental college of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, being graduated therefrom with the class of 1895, and in the same year opened an office in Russellville, although he had previously practiced at points in Texas and Oklahoma during vacation periods. Throughout the intervening period of twenty-seven years he has maintained the same office and has devoted his life to the profession, being the oldest practicing dentist in Pope county. He possesses the mechanical skill and ingenuity which are so essential in this profession and adds thereto a comprehensive knowledge of the broad scientific principles upon which his work rests. As time has passed his practice has enjoyed a continuous growth and it is now one of large proportions. He also has other interests, being a director of the Peoples Exchange Bank, and he likewise owns two valuable pieces of property in the business section of Russellville.

In 1895 Dr. McKennon was united in marriage to Miss Rose Griffin, who was born near Clarksville, a daughter of B. F. Griffin, who was at one time county treasurer of Johnson county, Arkansas. They have become the parents of four sons: Frank Archibald, a prominent dentist of Waxahachie, Texas; Berry Peel, who is assistant to the chief clerk of the Rock Island Railroad freight office at Little Rock; George C., Jr., who for the past three years has been a student in the dental college of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee; and Forrest Lee, who is attending high school.

The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and they reside in an attractive home standing in the midst of twelve acres of land on the outskirts of Russellville, the property being owned by Dr. McKennon. Like his father, he gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, while his fraternal connections are with the Masons, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of Pythias, and of the last named organization he has been chancellor commander. When he arrived in Russellville his financial resources were extremely limited and he was obliged to borrow the sum of one hundred dollars in order to furnish his office, but his enterprising spirit, unfaltering purpose and pronounced ability were invaluable assets, and as the years have passed he has worked his way steadily to the front in his profession, being numbered among Russellville's self-made men and most valued citizens.

VICTOR ANDERSON.

Victor Anderson, an alert, energetic business man, now general manager of the Fort Smith Brick Company, with offices in the Merchants National Bank building, is a native son of this state, his birth having occurred in Van Buren, Arkansas, in 1880. No special events occurred to vary the routine of life for him in his boyhood, which was largely devoted to the acquirement of a public school education in Fort Smith. He mastered the work of successive grades until he had completed three years in high school and also a business course. In early manhood he filled the office of deputy United States marshal and most loyally and capably performed the duties of that position. It was in 1914 that he entered the service of the Fort Smith Brick Company as a salesman, and thoroughly acquainting himself with the work and manifesting marked capability and adaptability, he was advanced to the position of sales manager in 1917.

The Fort Smith Brick Company was organized as the Burke Brick Company by the Burke brothers, who secured an extensive contract for paving the streets of Fort Smith. The wonderful quality of shale found in this vicinity, especially adapted to the manufacture of brick, resulted in making a splendid finished product, used in paving the streets, and thus the brickmaking industry became a firmly established enterprise of Fort Smith. The entire output of the original factory was used for street paving for some time, but later was used for construction work. Among the buildings that have been built with the product of the Fort Smith Brick Company are the new dormitory of Galloway College at Searcy, Arkansas; the high school building at Little Rock; the station of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad and the Frisco station at Durant, Oklahoma; the station of the Midland Valley Railroad at Fort Smith; the Frisco station at Hugo, Oklahoma; the plant of the Cooke-Boyd Motor Company at Fort Worth, Texas; the Bank of Commerce at El Dorado, Arkansas; the hospital at El Dorado; the high school at De Valls Bluff, Arkansas; the federal post office at Rogers, Arkansas; and many residences throughout this and other states. In the position of general manager Mr. Anderson has greatly developed the business, which is now one of very gratifying proportions. He has constantly studied the trade and striven to extend the commercial activity of the company and the results achieved have been most gratifying and satisfactory to the corporation which he represents.

LUCIEN S. RAMSEUR.

Lucien S. Ramseur, who is widely recognized as one of the leading and representative business men of Hot Springs, has since February, 1912, occupied the important position of manager of the local branch of the Scott-Mayer Commission Company, wholesale grocers and dealers in fruits and produce. His birth occurred in Augusta, Arkansas, on the 4th of November, 1877, his parents being Colonel Lee M. and Mary I. (Bland) Ramseur, the former an officer of the Confederate army during the Civil war. Colonel Ramseur, who was long numbered among the prominent attorneys of Augusta, this state, is deceased, but the mother survives and now makes her home with her son, Lucien S.

In the acquirement of an education Lucien S. Ramseur attended the public schools of his native city, Center College of Danville, Kentucky, and the University of Arkansas. Thus well equipped, he started out upon his business career in 1897, when a young man of twenty years, as shipping clerk in the employ of the Scott-Mayer Commission Company of Little Rock, with which he was identified through the succeeding nine years. In 1906 he resigned his position and went on the road for the American Tobacco Company in Texas territory, being thus engaged for about one year. It was in 1908 that he came to Hot Springs as assistant manager of the branch of the Scott-Mayer Commission Company here and four years later was appointed to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the manager. He has filled the responsible position of manager at Hot Springs for nearly a decade and the business has continued to prosper under his able direction, the Scott-Mayer Company regarding him as one of its most efficient and successful representatives.

In June, 1914, Mr. Ramseur was united in marriage to Miss Helen Anderson of Statesville, North Carolina, and they have become parents of a daughter, Martha Helen. Fraternally Mr. Ramseur is identified with the Masons, belonging to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M.; Hot Springs Chapter, No. 47, R. A. M.; and Hot Springs Commandery, No. 5, Knights Templar. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Methodist church, in which he is serving as steward and to which his wife also belongs. He is likewise connected with the Rotary Club and with the Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a college fraternity. His life has been spent in Arkansas, and through the wise utilization of his opportunities he has won a most creditable position in business circles of Hot Springs.

WILLIAM D. FOSTER, M. D.

In 1900 Dr. William D. Foster retired from the active practice of medicine and he is now serving as postmaster of the little city of Gravette, his services in this connection being of the highest character. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred at Pea Ridge on the 12th of November, 1853. His father, George R. Foster, was a prominent agriculturist who came to this state in 1842 and resided here until 1905, when his demise occurred at the age of eighty-five years. He was born in Bedford county, Tennessee, in 1820, and was the son of Thomas Foster, who is also buried in Pea Ridge. A contemporary writer says of Thomas Foster: "Thomas Foster was the head of the delegation of Fosters who set out with ox-teams to make the journey from Bedford county to Arkansas, coming by way of St. Louis to Arkansas and casting anchor, so to speak, at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, afterward (in 1862) made famous as the battle ground of the Federal and Confederate forces. The Foster settlement proved a permanent one, and it gave Benton county a family name which has been perpetuated here during the succeeding generations."

George R. Foster, the father of our subject, was a veteran of the Mexican war, having joined the service from Tennessee when a young man. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war his sympathies were with the Union, and conditions in Arkansas were such that he found it necessary to send his family to take refuge in Union territory. During their absence his property was destroyed by the invading forces. He had a son, Elias, who died in Kansas at the close of the war, and his stepson, George Jones, wore the blue in the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, both offering their lives as a sacrifice that the Union might be preserved. Mr. Foster married Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, a widow. She was a daughter of George Parsons. She had a son, George, by her former marriage, and, as before stated, he died shortly after the war from disabilities received and is buried at Fort Smith. Mrs. Foster's demise occurred in September, 1897, when seventy-seven years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Foster the following children were born: Elias; Dr. J. S., a practicing physician of Seligman, Missouri; Dr. William D., whose name initiates this review; Jacob Allen, a retired farmer of Sparrow, Oklahoma; Margaret Heaston, a widow residing in Miami, Oklahoma; Ellen, whose demise occurred in 1910 in Miami, Oklahoma; Alice, deceased, who was the wife of Rev. Charles Wade; Edgar, farming the old home place at Pea Ridge and also traveling; and Mrs. Rettie Tatum, who married George Tatum, a prominent merchant of Anderson, Missouri.

In the acquirement of an education Dr. William D. Foster, whose name initiates this review, is indebted to the public schools of Pea Ridge and to the college at that place. Upon putting his textbooks aside he engaged in teaching school for a short time, but his choice of a career was given to the medical profession, and he commenced study under the direction of Dr. A. Chenoweth of Pineville, Missouri. Later he removed to Exeter, Missouri, where he subsequently engaged in the drug business, at the same time attending lectures in the Joplin College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1881 he removed to Nebo, where he established an office, and when the railroad caused the establishment of Gravette he removed to that town. For a period of about twenty years Dr. Foster was active in professional circles, but he retired from the practice of medicine in 1900 upon his appointment to the office of postmaster. He was active in that capacity until June 30, 1914, and the next seven years he followed the real estate and brokerage business. He achieved a substantial success in that connection and was well versed in land valuations. On the 18th of June, 1921, he was again appointed postmaster and assumed the duties of that office, July 1, 1921. Dr. Foster's interests have been varied and for some six years he was engaged, as a side issue, in thoroughbred horse breeding. He owns several farms and his efforts are for the most part directed toward the development of race stock. Dr. Foster won distinction as the first importer of fine hoes in the county, and so many have followed his example as to give Benton county a highly improved breed of swine. The raising of swine has consequently become a great profit-making industry for the farmer.

On the 20th of June, 1882, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Foster and Miss Mary Hartman, who was born in Pendleton county, West Virginia, in 1858. Her parents were Ahia and Mary (Cassell) Hartman. One daughter, Tallie, was born to Dr. and Mrs. Foster. She married James P. Sparks and became the mother of Florence and Clayton Foster Sparks. Mrs. Sparks died 'on the 26th of November, 1905, at Gravette, and her children are being reared in the home of their grandparents.

Since attaining his majority Dr. Foster has been a staunch supporter of the republican party, and a contemporary writer says of him: "Dr. Foster has ever been known for his political opinions and convictions, and for being a republican he has no apology to offer, having always given an enthusiastic and whole-hearted allegiance to the men and measures for which the 'Grand Old Party' stands sponsor. His first political appointment was in 1891, when he was made one of the Benton county board of pension examiners, and he was obliged to yield his position to a democrat when Cleveland entered the White House a second time. President McKinley restored him to rank again, and he went from examining board to post office in 1901. He has witnessed the change from a third to a second class office and bears a commission from President Roosevelt and another from President Taft." Dr. Foster has been republican state committeeman from Benton county and has been a member of the county committee, serving for ten years. He is likewise a member of the Gravette school board, having defeated a democrat for the place in a democratic territory. He served two years as mayor of the city.

Socially Dr. Foster finds pleasure and profit in his lodge relations. He is a Mason, being a member of both the chapter and commandery; an Odd Fellow and former delegate to the Grand Lodge; and belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He is a consistent member of the Baptist church of Gravette, and he was a dominant factor in the organization of that congregation. Dr. Foster believes that every public office is a public trust and he has won the esteem of the community by reason of his faithful discharge of all matters of trust and his high standards of citizenship.

WILLIAM M. JONES.

One of the well-known newspaper men of Columbia county is William M. Jones, who for seven years has been active in the conduct of the Columbia Banner at Magnolia. A native of York county, South Carolina, his birth occurred on the 14th of March, 1869, a son of B. C. and Susan E. (Sturgis) Jones. His father, whose death occurred in 1885 at the age of fifty years, was for many years one of the prominent merchants and stockmen of Winnsboro, Texas, where he resided until his demise. When just a boy he enlisted in the Civil war and served throughout that conflict, participating in many of the most important engagements. The Jones family are for many generations back of American descent, and for many years they resided in North Carolina. In York county, South Carolina, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Jones to Miss Susan E. Sturgis, a native of that county, of Welsh descent, her ancestors having come from Wales to America prior to the Revolutionary war. Some years after the death of Mr. Jones Mrs. Jones was married to James Johnson, now deceased, and she is making her home with a daughter near Warren, being hale and hearty at the age of seventy-five years.

In the acquirement of an education William M. Jones attended the public schools of Warren and later entered Ouachita College at Arkadelphia. In 1897 he was graduated from that institution, receiving his A. B. degree. For thirteen years Mr. Jones engaged in teaching school in Bradley, Lincoln and Columbia counties, the last two years of that time being spent as an instructor in the schools of Magnolia. In 1901 he gave up teaching and went into the drug business at Magnolia, under the name of the W. M. Jones Drug Company, which business he conducted successfully until 1912. During that time he became a registered pharmacist, having studied at home and acquired some knowledge along that line while attending college. From 1912 to 1914 he went on the road as traveling salesman for the Arkadelphia Melting Company, his territory being southern Arkansas, and in the latter year, resigning his position, he entered the newspaper business at Magnolia. Mr. Jones purchased the Columbia Banner, which was established in 1878 and is one of the oldest newspapers in the state, and he has since been active in its publication. The Columbia Banner is one of the most popular sheets in the county and has an extensive circulation. The paper is known for the high and honorable policies it maintains and it readily champions every cause for the development and improvement of the general welfare. Mr. Jones is one of the public-spirited citizens of Magnolia and has been chief executive of this community for one term, his administration being marked by general development and prosperity.

At Pine Bluff, Arkansas, on the 22d of November, 1897, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Jones to Miss Mollie C. Cannon, a daughter of B. F. Cannon of Hempstead county. She is a woman of much culture and refinement and a leader in the club and social circles of Magnolia. She is a graduate of Central College at Conway, which institution conferred upon her the degree of A. B. Mrs. Jones is now active in educational work, being an instructor in English in the Third District Agricultural School. She has done more or less writing and is an active member of the Authors and Composers Club of Little Rock. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Jones one son has been born, William J., Jr., nine years of age.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church, in which Mr. Jones is a deacon. Fraternally he is identified with Columbia Lodge, No. 82, A. F. & A. M., and he is likewise a member of the Woodmen of the World.

DAVID P. PROCTOR, M. D.

Dr. David P. Proctor, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Carlisle, comes to Arkansas from the neighboring state of Missouri and is one of the young physicians whom many an older representative of the profession might well envy. In touch with the most progressive methods in the practice of medicine and surgery, he is making steady progress in his chosen life work and his ability is attested by many. He was born in Palmyra, Missouri, in 1896, a son of E. M. and Frances (Forsythe) Proctor, the former also a native of Palmyra, Missouri, while his parents were from Kentucky. The mother was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was brought to the west at an early day. E. M. Proctor is a successful lumberman who has conducted business along that line for an extended period. To him and his wife were born four children.

In the acquirement of his education Dr. Proctor attended the public schools of Carlisle, his parents having removed to this place during his boyhood, and passing through consecutive grades, he completed the high school course. He afterward returned to his native state and attended the William Jewell College, while later he became a student in the University of Arkansas, in which he spent two years. He then entered upon preparation for his chosen profession as a medical student in Tulane University at New Orleans, and there won his M. D. degree. Immediately afterward he located for practice in Carlisle, where he has since remained, and his ability is attested by his growing practice. He is very careful and conscientious in the performance of his professional duties and most thorough in diagnosing his cases.

Dr. Proctor was united in marriage to Miss Mildred Birkhead, a daughter of Dr. Birkhead of Cabot, Arkansas. They occupy an enviable social position and their own home is noted for its warm-hearted hospitality.

HENRY L. VEAZEY.

Henry L. Veazey, a man of liberal education and high professional attainments, is numbered among the leading representatives of the Monticello bar, with which he has been identified since 1903, and is recognized as a leader of public thought and opinion in this part of the state. A native son of Arkansas and a member of one of the pioneer families of the state, he was born near Warren, in Bradley county, on the 15th of June, 1867, of the marriage of Fielding and Nancy (Howard) Veazey, both natives of North Carolina, the former of Scotch ancestry and the latter of English origin. The mother was a lineal descendant of John Howard, a noted prison reformer of England. Mr. and Mrs. Veazey were married in North Carolina an eight of their eleven children were born in that state. In 1859 the family came to Arkansas, first locating in Bradley county, and on New Year's day of 1860 they moved into the home in which the subject of this review was born. While a resident of North Carolina, Mr. Veazey had engaged in farming, being the owner of a number of slaves, whom he brought to Arkansas to assist in the cultivation of his plantation in Bradley county. He was a Confederate veteran and three of his sons also served in the Civil war, one of whom, Thomas, lost his life in that conflict. He died on his farm in August, 1884. The mother's demise occurred in April, 1896. They were members of the Baptist church, in which Mr. Veazey served as a deacon, and he was one of the leading residents of his community, being highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

Henry L. Veazey attended both public and private schools, devoting three years to the study of music, and as the years have passed he has spent much time in reading and investigation, storing his mind with valuable and useful information. In 1886 he secured a teacher's license, but did not take up educational work until two years later, when he became an instructor in the schools of Calhoun county, this state, with which he was connected for two years. In 1891 he came to Drew county and for five years taught school at Lacy and for one year at Monticello, being very successful as an educator. For some time he had been desirous of joining the legal profession, and in 1890 he began reading law, being admitted to the bar in 1903. He has since engaged in practice at Monticello and in the intervening period his clientele has steadily increased as he has demonstrated his professional ability. He is well versed in the law, readily quotes precedents, and adheres to high standards in professional service. His mind is analytical and logical in its trend and he displays keen discrimination in the solution of intricate legal problems. He possesses marked oratorical ability and is regarded as one of the ablest platform speakers in southeastern Arkansas. His services are much in demand in this connection and he has probably delivered more public addresses than any other man in this part of the state. He has used his talents to further worthy measures and was a leader of the cause of prohibition and also of the movement to establish higher educational standards in the state. Twenty years ago he strongly advocated the consolidation of schools and within recent years this work has been accomplished, about eight schools having been consolidated in Drew county alone. He is recognized as a man of sound and well balanced judgment, who looks beyond the exigencies of the moment to the opportunities and possibilities of the future, and in all that he undertakes he is actuated by high ideals, utilizing practical methods in their attainment.

On the 20th of December, 1894, Mr. Veazey was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Lee Hillman of Lacy, Arkansas, and they have become the parents of twelve children, ten of whom survive, namely: Hubert Lamar, an expert automobile mechanic, residing at El Dorado, Arkansas; James Fielding, who is attending a commercial college; Velma B., a student at a normal school in southern Ohio; Bessie, the wife of Shannon Bell of Harrisburg, Arkansas; and Willis Leon, Ruby B., Madeline, Lewis H., Catherine and Billie, all of whom are still at home.

The family are members of the Baptist church and Mr. Veazey is serving as superintendent of one of the Sunday schools. His fraternal connections are with the Woodmen of the World and the Tribe of Ben Hur. Endowed by nature with a keen intellect, he has used his well-developed powers not only to further his individual interest, but also to advance the public welfare along lines which are constituting effective forces in advancing the world's civilization, and he is a man whom to know is to esteem and admire.

J. J. SMITH, M. D.

Dr. J. J. Smith, actively and successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Paris, was born in northern Alabama, January 7, 1854, and is a son of Arthur F. and Mary Jane (Adams) Smith, who were also natives of northern Alabama. His paternal grandfather married a Miss Frazier and both were natives of North Carolina, whence they removed to Kentucky, afterward to Tennessee and eventually settled in the wilderness of northern Alabama, casting in their lot with the pioneers who first planted the seeds of civilization there. After residing for a time in northern Alabama, following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Smith removed to Franklin county, Arkansas, in the spring of 1860, and there the father owned and developed a farm and also worked to some extent along mechanical lines. At the time of the Civil war he put aside all personal and business considerations and joined the Confederate army, dying at the front on the 3d of April, 1863, when forty-three years of age, his birth having occurred in 1820. His wife, who was born in 1828, survived him until 1896. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are living: J. J.; H. A., who occupies the old home farm in Franklin; Frank, a retired farmer living in Paris; A. M., who is engaged in medical practice with his eldest brother; and Mary A., the wife of L. C. Gammill of Wetumka, Oklahoma, where he is engaged in law practice. The parents were members of the Baptist church and enjoyed the high respect of all with whom they came into contact.

J. J. Smith acquired his early education in one of the little, primitive schools of Franklin county, Arkansas, and after putting aside his textbooks as a student he devoted three years to teaching. He had been reared to farm life and in vacation periods had always worked in the fields. He regarded teaching, however, merely as an initial step to other professional labor, for it was his desire to enter upon the practice of medicine and eventually he saw the beginning of the fulfillment of his hopes when he became a student in the medical college of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, where he was graduated in 1879. Desiring still further to perfect himself for his chosen calling, he matriculated in the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was there graduated in 1891. He practiced in Logan county, Arkansas, and in 1899 removed to Paris, where he opened an office. In the early days he rode horseback over a wide territory in order to respond to the call of his patients. Today he has a large and successful practice in Paris, and his ability is widely acknowledged, for from time to time he has taken postgraduate work in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans and Boston, and in this way and through wide private reading he has kept thoroughly informed concerning the latest methods and scientific researches of the profession. He is today the oldest practicing physician in Logan county and his ability prevents any one winning from him his position of professional leadership. He now devotes practically all of his time to surgery and is most thoroughly skilled and efficient in this field. His name is likewise well known in financial circles, for he has been the president of the American Bank & Trust Company for the past fifteen years.

In 1880 Dr. Smith was married to Miss Ida Childers, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of Isaac Childers, who died while serving in the Union army. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Christian church and a most estimable lady. Dr. Smith has always voted with the democratic party, but the honors and emoluments of office have never had attraction for him. He has always preferred to concentrate his efforts and attention upon his professional duties, which have constantly developed in volume and importance as the years have passed. Today he concentrates largely upon surgery and is conducting a well-equipped hospital, which was built in 1911 and has a capacity of fifteen beds. Dr. Smith belongs to the Logan County and Arkansas State Medical Societies, also to the American Medical Association, was the president of the Tenth Councilor District Medical Society in 1920, and is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons. His name has become a synonym for marked efficiency and ability in his chosen profession and he enjoys in large measure the confidence and good will of his colleagues and contemporaries.

ALVIN STERLING GARDNER.

Alvin Sterling Gardner, who as secretary of the Building Materials Corporation occupies an enviable position in the business circles of Little Rock, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, November 19, 1880, and is a son of Robert M. and Mary E. (Farrell) Gardner. He acquired his early education in the graded schools of his native city and afterward attended the Christian Brothers College of St. Louis, while later he pursued a commercial course in the St. Louis Business College. After thus thoroughly qualifying for the activities and responsibilities of life he obtained employment in connection with the hardware business and through the succeeding five years was in the service of such mammoth concerns as the Simmons Hardware Company and the Shapleigh Hardware Company, both of St. Louis.

Severing his connection with the hardware trade, Mr. Gardner spent the succeeding six years in the lumber manufacturing business and in 1905 came to Little Rock as manager of the hardware and paint department of the Charles T. Abeles Company of that city, remaining with that company until 1917, when he organized the Building Materials Corporation and became its secretary and manager—a position which he still fills. The extensive wholesale plant of the company is located on the railroad tracks at the foot of Rock street, where a large stock of building materials, paints, oil and varnish is at all times found. The corporation also conducts a retail store at Seventh and Main streets and they are sole distributors of the Peaslee-Gaulbert paints, the Pratt and Lambert varnishes, the Muresco wall tint and the Valdura asphalt roofing paint, together with other such high-grade products. Mr. Gardner will probably make history for himself and for Arkansas by a varnish he has recently invented. This product has not yet been named nor a patent obtained, nor has it been placed upon the market. This product is a clear surface varnish that has been thoroughly tested and promises to revolutionize the trade. Severe tests made of the varnish prove that it will stand up under a stream of boiling water without suffering a stain or mark and it has been tested with one hundred and eighty-eight per cent alcohol, the strongest ammonia and an extra strong muriatic acid—resisting all of them. The writer witnessed a test of this remarkable varnish, which had been placed upon a small board. Vinegar, muriatic acid, ammonia and alcohol were all rubbed into the surface one after the other, and when finally wiped dry no one single blur was found upon the wood and the polish was bright and undimmed. Mr. Gardner has been offered all sorts of propositions from varnish makers for an interest in his invention but so far has paid no attention to these proposals. That Arkansas will become famous by the manufacture of this product is beyond question.

In 1905 Mr. Gardner was married to Miss Doshie Grewell, a daughter of John R. Grewell of Potosi, Missouri. Mrs. Gardner is a graduate of Columbia College. Her father comes from a pioneer family of Missouri and served gallantly in the Civil war. He is now a well known farmer of that state. Mrs. Gardner is a most wise and capable mother and active in church work, and in the School Improvement Society she is also a well known and influential factor. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner have two children: Edith Eleanor, now a high school pupil, who possesses remarkable musical talent; and Helen Clydene, who is a pupil in the grades.

In his political views Mr. Gardner has always been a stalwart democrat and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but does not seek nor desire office. He belongs to the Methodist church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Masons and the Woodmen of the World. He has keen appreciation for the social amenities of life, is neglectful of no duty or obligation to his fellowmen or to the community and at the same time he is a most enterprising and progressive business man who already has made for himself a notable position in commercial circles, while the future seems to hold in store for him enviable success and prominence.

JOHN BAXTER.

John Baxter, one of the foremost attorneys in Chicot county and for the past five years a member of the Dermott bar, is a self-educated, self-made man, whose advancement has been won through self-denial, untiring effort and persistency of purpose. He is one of Arkansas' native sons, his birth having occurred in Drew county, four miles south of Monticello, on the 2d of June, 1887, and his parents were Robert M. and Virginia (Sanderlin) Baxter, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Georgia. The father is engaged in the lumber business at Winnsboro, Louisiana. The mother died in November, 1887.

John Baxter attended the Hinemon University School at Monticello, Arkansas, after which he entered the law department of the State University and was graduated from that institution on the 3d of June, 1912, being admitted to practice before the supreme court on the same day. In order to secure his tuition fees he engaged in teaching school. For two years after his graduation he devoted his attention to educational work, and in 1914 began his professional career, first locating at Hampton, Arkansas, where he remained for three years. In 1917 he came to Dermott and in the trial of cases entrusted to his care has won many favorable verdicts. Like all men who have achieved success in the best sense of the term, he has been an indefatigable worker and his legal learning, his analytical mind, the readiness with which he grasps the points in an argument, all combine to make him one of the most capable lawyers who has ever practiced in Dermott. He is well qualified to handle important litigation and his clientele is a large one.

On the first of November, 1917, Mr. Baxter was united in marriage to Miss Edith Bailey of Little Rock, Arkansas, and they have many friends in Dermott. They are Baptists in religious faith and helpfully interested in the work of the church, Mr. Baxter being teacher of the men's Bible class. He has made good use of his time, talents and opportunities and in his practice has displayed a conscientious zeal and energy that have carried him steadily forward in his profession, while his upright policy and adherence to high standards have won for him the respect and confidence of his associates and also of the general public.

R. C. BOLLINGER.

One of the attractive commercial establishments of Fort Smith is the piano and music store of R. C. Bollinger. Carrying an excellent line of goods, Mr. Bollinger has built up a substantial trade and the spirit of enterprise and progress characterizes him in all that he does. He is considered the dean among the merchants of the city because of his long connection with the trade interests, while the activity and capable management which he has ever displayed have placed him in the front rank among the leaders in commercial circles.

Mr. Bollinger is a native son of Fort Smith, his parents being Samuel and Emilia (Grober) Bollinger. The father came to this city from Switzerland in the year 1854 and here established a general merchandise store, carrying everything from hardware to music. He remained an active factor in the business life of the community for more than three decades, or until the time of his death, which occurred in 1885. His wife is a native of Saxony, Germany, and also came to the United States in 1854. She is still living at the advanced age of eighty-three years. In the family were thirteen children, all of whom have passed away with the exception of three sons and two daughters. One brother, Henry Bollinger, is also engaged in the music business in Fort Smith, while the other brother, Samuel Bollinger, is a pianist and composer of St. Louis. He conducts a music conservatory and is considered one of the foremost American composers. R. C. Bollinger financed the education of his brother, who after studying for eight or ten years in this country went to Leipzig, Germany, where he continued his studies for six or seven years, completing his course in the Royal Conservatory of Music in Leipzig.

R. C. Bollinger spent his youthful days in Fort Smith, and the public schools of the city accorded him his educational opportunities. His initial business training was here received and he has always concentrated his efforts and attention along commercial lines. For forty-three years he has conducted the business which he now owns and he today occupies four floors of one of the leading business blocks of the city. His is considered the best music house in Fort Smith and he carries many makes of pianos and other musical instruments—in fact, keeps on hand everything that the trade demands, including a splendid line of sheet music. His own love of the art of music enables him to be of great assistance to his patrons in their purchases, and he has done not a little to develop and improve musical taste in the city. Moreover, he displays excellent business qualifications in the management of his store, his enterprise enabling him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties, while his indisputable commercial integrity has always stood as a strong feature in his success.

Mr. Bollinger was married in 1881 to Miss Emma Wegman of Fort Smith, and they have become parents of the following named: Clarence, who is identified with his father in business, now acting as manager of the store; Lillie, the wife of R. D. Parmenter, who is a violin teacher in Louisville, Kentucky; Emma, the wife of Tom Higgs, now living in Spokane, Washington; and Ida, the wife of Marvin Leard, manager of the Edison Shop at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Mr. Bollinger belongs to the Advertisers' Club of Fort Smith, to the Business Men's Club, the Rotary Club and the Country Club. He is very fond of golf and finds his recreation and diversion on the links. His entire life has been passed in Fort Smith, and he certainly deserves representation in this volume as one of the native sons and representative citizens, for throughout his entire career he has been a loyal supporter of every interest for the public good and has given tangible evidence of his support of progressive public measures on many occasions. Moreover, his unflinching courtesy, his geniality and his kindly spirit have won for him a most extensive circle of friends, and all who know him speak of him in terms of respect and regard.

W. L. CURTIS.

W. L. Curtis, who has engaged in the practice of law since 1898, became a representative of the Fort Smith bar on the 30th of June, 1916, and is today recognized as one of the prominent attorneys of the city, specializing largely in corporation law. He is a native of northwestern Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Newton county, March 6, 1874, his parents being J. H. and Sarah C. Curtis, who still reside on the old homestead in Newton county, where the father has long followed the occupation of farming.

The boyhood days of W. L. Curtis were passed in the usual manner of the farm-bred lad, who divides his time between the acquirement of a public school education, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields. Later he had the advantage of a course in Jasper Academy and then started out to provide for his own support by serving as circuit court clerk of Newton county. While thus engaged he took up the study of law, devoting his leisure hours to the mastery of the principles of jurisprudence. In 1898 he was admitted to the bar and then opened an office in Sallisaw, Oklahoma, then a part of the Indian Territory, where he remained in active practice for almost two decades, or from 1898 until the 30th of June, 1916. During that period he built up and enjoyed an extensive practice, connecting him with much important litigation tried in the courts of the district. He was also quite prominent in public affairs, served as county attorney and on three different occasions was elected mayor of Sallisaw, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration which greatly furthered public welfare. He was also chosen a member of the state legislature and gave thoughtful and earnest consideration to the vital questions which came up for settlement while in the general assembly. Seeking the broader field of labor offered in a larger city, Mr. Curtis removed to Fort Smith on the 30th of June, 1916, and through the intervening period of five years has successfully engaged in practice here. His clientele is large and of a distinctively representative character. He has to a considerable extent specialized in corporation law and is now trial attorney for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company in Oklahoma, also general counsel for the Commonwealth Public Service Company, attorney for the Brown-Hinton Wholesale Grocery Company and for the O. K. Transfer & Storage Company.

Mr. Curtis was united in marriage in 1893 to Miss Hattie Harrison, a daughter of Robert Harrison of Jasper, Arkansas, and a granddaughter of Robert Harrison, who was a prominent representative of the Newton county bar and served as county judge. Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have become parents of six daughters: Alpha, who is now the wife of Fred G. Beckman of Oklahoma; Mrs. Maude Shipley; Willie, who died June 22, 1920; Jessie, a teacher in the public schools of Sallisaw, Oklahoma; Katherine B. and Anna Louise, both in school.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have become widely known in Fort Smith since taking up their abode in this city and occupy an enviable position in its social circles. As a citizen he stands for all those activities and interests which are a matter of civic virtue and of civic pride, while in his profession he has ever held to the highest deals and standards, practicing along ethical lines, so that he enjoys the highest respect and confidence of his contemporaries and colleagues in the profession. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to all bodies of the order, including the Mystic Shrine.

HON. GEORGE THORNBURGH.

Hon. George Thornburgh, lawyer, author and editor, who since the 1st of January, 1919, has been superintendent of the Arkansas School for the Blind, was born in Havana, Mason county, Illinois, January 25, 1847, a son of Eli and Elizabeth (Thoman) Thornburgh. The father was born in Harpers Ferry, Virginia, August 11, 1809, and the mother's birth occurred in Pennsylvania, September 20, 1810. They were married in Ohio, November 30, 1830, and became residents of Smithville, Arkansas, where the father followed mercantile pursuits. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party. He died November 14, 1884.

The son, George Thornburgh, was but eight years of age when the family removed to Smithville, Arkansas, in December, 1855, and there he was reared to adult age. He attended law school at Cumberland University and was admitted to the bar in 1868, devoting several years to the practice of law. In 1886 he became identified with newspaper publication through the establishment of the Walnut Ridge Telephone and the following year he founded a Masonic paper known as the Masonic Trowel, of which he was the editor until July, 1919, when he transferred it to other hands. In November, 1889, he took over the business management of the Arkansas Methodist, published at Little Rock, and removed to the capital city. For fourteen years he continued as manager of that publication in partnership with Rev. Z. T. Bennett, D. D., and later with Rev. J. E. Godbey, D. D. On retiring from active connection with that paper he concentrated his efforts and attention exclusively upon his editorial work in connection with the Masonic Trowel and other Masonic publications. He had been extremely successful in his work as manager of the Arkansas Methodist, increasing its subscription list from about seven thousand to nearly twelve thousand.

Mr. Thornburgh early entered actively upon the work of the church. He first confessed Christ in a country church at Shady Grove, a few miles south of Smithville, in Lawrence county, in 1863, and soon afterward was received into the membership of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in Smithville. Almost continuously since reaching the age of nineteen years he has served as one of the church stewards, was Sunday school superintendent for more than forty years in Smithville, Powhatan, Walnut Ridge, and in the First church and Winfield Memorial church at Little Rock. He is the author of a Sunday school catechism and a catechism of church government, has also compiled class books and a Sunday school record, which have been widely used. He is the author of the stub form of reports of preachers to be made at the annual conference and for fifteen years he served as the secretary of the Batesville district conference, while for a decade he acted in a similar capacity in connection with the White River annual conference. Twice he was a lay delegate to the general conference from the White River conference and once from the Little Rock conference.

Mr. Thornburgh's activities have covered a very wide scope. He has always felt that to live in the world one should be a part of it, should find a place of activity where his efforts would prove of benefit to his fellowmen and further the interest of community, commonwealth and country at large. In early manhood he served for four terms as a member of the state legislature of Arkansas and in 1881 was speaker of the house. In the Brooks-Baxter war he was commissioned a colonel, first by Elisha Baxter, governor, and afterward by Governor Augustus H. Garland. He has not been an active factor in politics since 1885, though frequently urged to become a candidate for governor.

In more recent years his activities have been directed into other channels which have more closely affected the general interest of society, especially in uplift work. He was one of the organizers of the Anti-Saloon League in Arkansas and for many years has filled the office of president. When the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League agreed upon the bone dry measure he prepared the bill and gave it to Senator Great-house to introduce into the senate. The house bill was copied from it. During the final passage of the bill in the house Mr. Thornburgh, by courtesy of the speaker, occupied the stand with him. Mr. Thornburgh was also one of the organizers of the Methodist Orphanage, became its first secretary and has been president thereof since October, 1906. He was the president of the Arkansas Press Association and was the first president of the Lawrence County Sunday School Association, filling the office in 1885. He assisted in organizing the State Sunday School Association, was honored with its first presidency and thrice has been reelected to that position. At the request of the trustees of the Methodist Orphanage he undertook to raise funds to build a home for the orphans and was eminently successful in this work, raising more than fifty thousand dollars and building a commodious home for the little ones in Little Rock, accepting no compensation for his service in that connection.

On the 30th of September, 1868, Mr. Thornburgh was married to Margaret C. Self, who was born in Missouri, January 27, 1847, a daughter of the Rev. J. M. Self. They became the parents of six children: Lillie and Daisy, both deceased; Margaret Elizabeth, the wife of Dr. J. M. Workman; Celestine and Edna George, who are deceased; and Agnes Eva, the wife of R. P. Ramsey. Mr. Thornburgh was married again in 1903, when Mrs. L. B. Green became his wife. She, too, is a daughter of a Methodist preacher, the Rev. W. P. Gibson of the St. Louis conference.

Mr. Thornburgh has long been prominently known in Masonic circles and was elected to the highest office in the gift of the Masonic grand bodies of Arkansas. By request of the Grand Lodge of the state he wrote a book known among Masons as The Monitor, which was adopted by the Grand Lodge as the exclusive work for the lodges of this jurisdiction. It has been remarkably popular and twenty-one editions of a thousand each have been published. In 1914 he wrote a history of Freemasonry, which has found a ready sale, the seventh edition having already been published. The honorary thirty-third degree of Masonry has been conferred upon him and to him is given credit of leading the Grand Lodge in its advanced legislation against the liquor traffic and of putting the Masonic fraternity of the state on record as favorable to prohibition. His life has been devoted to service for his fellowmen, and on the 27th of December, 1918, he was chosen superintendent of the Arkansas School for the Blind, though not an applicant for the position, and he took charge on the 1st day of January, 1919. On the 1st of October, 1921, he entered upon another term of service to cover two years. He is doing splendid work in this connection, greatly improving conditions for the unfortunates under his charge. His life has ever been actuated by the highest ideals and in every possible way he has reached out a helping hand to his fellowmen and has labored untiringly in support of those things and interests which are looking toward the uplift of the individual, the betterment of the community and the adoption of those high principles which find their root in Christian teachings.

WALTER H. SIMMONS, B. S., M. D.

The rapid industrial and commercial development of Pine Bluff in recent years has made this city also a fruitful field of labor for the able professional man, and thus it is that Dr. Walter H. Simmons established an office here for the practice of medicine and surgery. He has made steady progress in his chosen calling through the intervening period and his patronage is now extensive and his service of important character. Dr. Simmons was born in Carrollton, Mississippi, in July, 1879, and is a son of Harry and Della (Johnston) Simmons. The father was born in Atlanta, Georgia, and removed from that state to Mississippi, where he remained for a number of years, eventually becoming a resident of St. Louis, Missouri. His wife was a daughter of Peter Johnston, a native of Scotland, who in young manhood married Eliza Garrett, who was born in Alabama and was a sister of James Garrett, who was a law partner of United States Senator Underwood of Alabama. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Simmons became parents of two sons, Walter H. and Harry W., the latter now an oil operator.

Dr. Simmons was educated in the public schools, in Bethel College at Russellville, Kentucky, and in Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee. He completed a literary course as a member of the class of 1901, and continuing his studies as a medical student he finished his professional course in 1903. He then began practicing at Coal City, Alabama, and was surgeon for the Seaboard Air Line, construction work. He removed to Fordyce, Arkansas, in December, 1904, and through the intervening period to the 1st of January, 1918, continued in active practice there, making steady progress as the result of his wide knowledge of the principles of medicine and surgery and his experience. He then came to Pine Bluff and has since been connected with the Clark Sanitarium of this place, the staff of which is now operating as the Pine Bluff Clinic. He has ever displayed a characteristic thoroughness in the diagnosis of his cases and his judgment is seldom, if ever, at fault. He manifests the utmost zeal in the care of his cases and his ability has frequently been demonstrated in the splendid results which have attended his labors.

Dr. Simmons was married to Miss Lida A. Cook, a daughter of R. T. and Sue (Rowland) Cook of Hot Springs and a relative of the distinguished Augustus Garland of Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Simmons are the parents of three children: Elizabeth, Walter and Barbara Dell. Mrs. Simmons is very prominent in social, club and literary circles of Pine Bluff. She has been the president of the Musical Coterie, the leading musical organization of the city, and is now president of the Federated Music Clubs of Arkansas. She is also a member of the Authors and Composers Club and is keenly interested in everything that tends to stimulate literary and musical culture in the state. Both Dr. and Mrs. Simmons are consistent and helpful members of the Presbyterian church. The Doctor is president of the Pine Bluff Battery Company and fraternally he is a Mason, having taken the degrees of both York and Scottish Rites, while in the commandery he has served as generalissimo, in the chapter as high priest, and in the blue lodge as master. He is a member of the Sahara Shrine and the Pine Bluff Court of the Royal Order of Jesters.

WILLIAM ARCHIE McDONNELL.

The history of the bench and bar of Arkansas is one which in the main reflects credit and high honor upon the annals of the state. The younger representatives of the legal profession are fully sustaining the reputation of the lawyers of an earlier period, and holding to high ideals and to the advanced ethical standards of its calling, William Archie McDonnell has gained a creditable name and place among the attorneys of Little Rock. The story of his professional record and of his military experiences is a most interesting one. He was born in Altheimer, Jefferson county, Arkansas, November 29, 1894, and is the second in order of birth in a family of four children, whose parents were James Smith and Susie Belle (Hunter) McDonnell. The father was born in Huntsville, Madison county, Alabama, in 1858, while the mother's birth occurred in Star City, Lincoln county, Arkansas, in 1867, their marriage being celebrated in the latter place in 1889. The mother was a daughter of Joseph Hunter, who served as a captain in the Confederate army during the Civil war. James Smith McDonnell spent his youthful days to the age of nineteen years in his native city and then removed to Altheimer, Arkansas, where he has long resided, becoming prominent in its business circles in connection with general merchandising and as a dealer in cotton. His political endorsement has for many years been given to the democratic party. The children born to him and his wife are: Joseph Hunter, William A., Susie Belle and J. S.

During his youthful days William Archie McDonnell had the opportunity of pursuing his education in the excellent public schools of Denver, Colorado, and later of Little Rock, being graduated from the high school of the capital city in 1912. A review of the broad field of business led him to the determination to make the practice of law his life work and he began preparation therefor, becoming a student in Vanderbilt University of Tennessee, in which he won the LL. B. degree upon graduation with the class of 1917. He made excellent record in college and received the Founders Medal. He also enjoyed two years' training in the academic department of the same university, studying the more classical lines from 1912 until 1914. After his graduation he entered upon active practice, but after a few months his professional duties were put aside, for he felt that his loyalty to his country demanded his offer of active service in the army. It was on the 27th of August, 1917, that he enlisted, serving until May 5, 1919. He became first lieutenant on the 26th of November, 1917, being assigned to the Eleventh Field Artillery, and afterward was advanced to the rank of captain on the 16th of July, 1918, in the Sixth Field Artillery Brigade. When he enrolled he was assigned to the second Officers' Training Camp at Leon Springs, Texas, where he continued from the 27th of August, 1917, until the 26th of November, 1917, when he received a commission as first lieutenant of the Field Artillery and was sent to Douglas, Arizona. There he continued until April, 1918, when he was sent with the Eleventh Field Artillery to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, where he continued until July 6, 1918. He was afterward with his regiment at Camp Mills, near New York, and sailed on the 14th of July, 1918, for France, disembarking first at Liverpool on the 26th of July and crossing the channel about the 5th of August, landing at Cherbourg, France. Soon afterward he was sent to Camp Valdahon, twenty miles from the Swiss border, where he remained until September 1, 1918. Having received his commission as captain on the 26th of August of that year, he was transferred on the 1st of September, following, to the Sixth Field Artillery Brigade and attached to the First Field Artillery Brigade on the line north of Toul. On the 12th of September, 1918, he participated in the fight at St. Mihiel, the engagement continuing for about two weeks, this being one of the hotly contested sectors where the American troops were stationed. Captain McDonnell was returned to the Sixth Field Artillery Brigade, then located at Camp Valdahon, and remained with that command until April 1, 1919, when he was transferred to the Twenty-eighth Division and returned to the United States, arriving about the 15th of April, 1919, while on the 4th of May he received an honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New York, and returned to Arkansas.

Mr. McDonnell had been admitted to the bar on the 5th of July, 1917. On resuming the duties of private life he entered upon active practice in Little Rock and is making steady progress, already having gained a creditable position as one of the younger members of the bar of this state. He has many friends in the Masonic lodge, in which he holds membership and is recognized as a worthy and exemplary follower of the craft. He votes with the democratic party, but has never sought nor desired office. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is now serving as superintendent of the Junior department of the Sunday school.

LOUIS K. BUERKLE.

Louis K. Buerkle, postmaster at Stuttgart and a public-spirited citizen, interested in all that pertains to the general welfare of his community, was born in Findlay, Ohio, in August, 1875. His father, the Rev. M. Buerkle, was a native of Stuttgart, Germany, and was educated for the ministry in that country, being graduated from the University of Heidelberg. Louis K. Buerkle now has in his possession a ruby ring, the set of which was mounted on a jeweled pencil and given to his father on his graduation from the famous old Heidelberg University. In 1859 Rev. Mr. Buerkle left his native land and came to the new world, first settling in Lansing, Michigan. He began preaching, however, at Crestline, Ohio, and afterward was located at New Bremen, that state. In 1891 he came to Arkansas, although he had previously visited the state in 1878 and had here purchased land before the town of Stuttgart was laid out. In 1881, while on a visit to this locality, he founded the town and named it in honor of his old home town in Germany. He was accompanied to the new world by his brother, Adam Buerkle, who was also a minister of the gospel and who lived for a time in Lansing, Michigan, while later he settled in Woodville, Ohio. Following his removal to Arkansas, Rev. Adam Buerkle settled at Gum Pond and both brothers engaged in preaching, serving the same church, Rev. M. Buerkle continuing the work of the church after the death of his brother. In large measure he contributed to the moral progress and development of the community and in connection with his work as a preacher of the gospel he edited the Stuttgart Germania, a German paper, which was discontinued in 1913. His land holdings were very extensive at one time, but prior to his demise he disposed of all but three hundred acres of his land. He departed this life on the 4th of January, 1918, and was survived by his wife until 1920. She bore the maiden name of Minnie Hennings and by her marriage had become the mother of six children: Louis K.; Catherine, now the wife of Charles Barton; Marie, the wife of John Bittner; Augusta, the wife of Emil Hill; Ida, deceased; and William.

Louis K. Buerkle, spending his youthful days in his native state, supplemented his early education by study in the Defiance (Ohio) College, and in 1891 he came to Arkansas, settling on a farm. After a time he removed to Stuttgart, where he engaged in the insurance business and as the years have passed he has become identified with other business interests of importance. He is now the vice president of the First National Bank of Stuttgart and aids in directing the policy and promoting the growth of that institution, which is regarded as one of the strong and sound money concerns of this part of the state. He likewise owns three hundred acres of land and from the property derives a substantial annual income.

While successfully managing his business affairs Mr. Buerkle has also responded to the call made upon him for public service and has proved a most capable official. He was elected a member of the city council at Stuttgart and exercised his official prerogatives in support of various measures for the general good. In 1908 he was elected to the state legislature and during his connection with the general assembly his influence was ever on the side of order and of progress. In 1913 he was appointed postmaster and is now filling that office. While serving in the general assembly he introduced a bill to permit the erection of a high school in Stuttgart by issuing bonds and was successful in securing its passage. He acted as chairman of publicity in relation to all war movements and was chairman of the local chapter of the Red Cross.

Mr. Buerkle married Miss Ida Kesterson and they now have one daughter, Lonise. Their religious faith is that of the Lutheran church and fraternally Mr. Buerkle is connected with the Masons, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His life record is one which will bear close investigation and scrutiny, for at all times he has been actuated by high principles and worthy motives and his record reflects credit and honor upon the people who have honored him with election to office.

FRANK BAUDINO.

Frank Baudino, engaged in merchandising at Tontitown, was born in Italy, July 14, 1880, and is a son of John and B. Victoria (Perassi) Baudino, who were also of Italian birth and spent their entire lives in that sunny land. The father is still living, but the mother died in 1893. They were the parents of six children, five of whom survive: Frank, of this review; Angelia and Frederick, who are in Italy; Mary and Vincent, in South America. The father is a shoemaker by trade and has followed that pursuit throughout his entire life. He has also been a consistent follower of the Catholic church. His father, Dominick Baudino, spent his entire life in Italy and was also a shoemaker. The maternal grandfather, Chiaffredo Perassi, was a miller.

Frank Baudino acquired his education in Italy and there learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed in his native country until 1907, when he crossed the Atlantic to New York. He first made his way westward to Wisconsin, settling at Rib Lake, where he engaged in shoemaking for about three years. He then removed to Arkansas, taking up his abode in Tontitown in 1911. Here he has since engaged in merchandising and is now proprietor of a large store. He carries an extensive stock and enjoys a liberal patronage, his trade steadily growing as the years go by. He devotes his entire time to business and aside from his connection with mercantile interests he is the owner of forty acres of land, ten acres of which is planted to grapes.

In 1902 Mr. Baudino was married to Miss Maddalena Mollar, who was born in Italy, a daughter of Chiaffredo Mollar, also of Italian birth. Her father was a farmer by occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Baudino have become parents of five children, of whom four are living: Leo, who is a graduate of a business college; Armando and Victoria, in school; and Pauline, who is not yet of school age.

The parents are members of the Catholic church and Mr. Baudino is connected with the Catholic Knights of America, and the Knights of Columbus. In politics he is a republican and has served as mayor of Tontitown. He is interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of the community and he supports many projects for the general good. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the new world, for in this land he has found the opportunities which he sought and through the careful direction of his business affairs has gained a substantial measure of success.

R. C. MANN.

R. C. Mann, who is a prominent figure in journalistic circles of White county as editor of the Judsonia Advance, was born in Jackson county, Missouri, October 1, 1888, his parents being Arthur and Amelia (Merchant) Mann, who were natives of New York. The former was a son of Gilbert L. Mann, also born in the Empire state, where he extensively engaged in dairy farming near Franklin. He married a Miss Carr and in later life retired from active business and removed to Kansas City, Missouri, where he made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mann, and there he died at the age of eighty-six years. The grandfather of R. C. Mann in the maternal line was Herman W. Merchant, who was also born in the state of New York, where he followed general farming until he, too, retired, spending his last days in Kansas City, where he reached the notable old age of ninety-four.

Removing westward from New York to Kansas, Arthur Mann settled near Dodge City, where he homesteaded and carried on the work of tilling the soil and producing crops. He afterward removed to Kansas City, where he entered the government service as a post office employe, spending forty years in that connection. He filled various positions in the post office and was superintendent of mails at the time of his death, which occurred in July, 1920, when he was sixty-four years of age. His widow survives and yet makes her home in Kansas City. In his political views Mr. Mann was an earnest republican and fraternally he was connected with the Knights of Pythias, while his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church. To him and his wife were born five children, of whom three are living. Chester, a graduate of the School of Engineering of the University of Missouri, is now state highway engineer, with offices in Jefferson City, Missouri. R. C. is the second of the family. Robert was educated in the University of Missouri and is now a teacher in the School of Journalism there, being assistant to Dean Williams. Two of the family died in infancy.

Liberal educational opportunities were accorded R. C. Mann, who, passing through consecutive grades in the public schools, was ultimately graduated from the Manual Training high school in Kansas City with the class of 1906. He later spent four years in the express business there, advancing from the position of collector to that of cashier. He afterward worked in the office of the Kansas Lumber Company and of the Hutchinson Lumber Company and for one year was in New York with the Adams Express Company as bill clerk. In 1910 he came to Judsonia, Arkansas, with the Kansas City Bridge Company, acting as timekeeper and paymaster in connection with the construction of bridges for the Missouri Pacific Railroad. At a later date he returned to Kansas City but again came to Judsonia and purchased the plant of the Judsonia Advance. He was a novice in connection with the printing business but has continued in this to the present time. He installed new machinery, also a cylinder press, linotype machine and other equipment and now has a splendid plant, while the circulation of the paper has been built up almost from nothing to six hundred. He does all kinds of job printing as well and any work turned out from his office is first-class. He likewise writes fire insurance, representing eight different companies, and he acted as assistant receiver of the First National Bank from July 15, 1920, until April 1, 1921. His life has thus been one of marked business activity and his industry and perseverance have been the dominant factors in bringing to him the prosperity which he now enjoys.

In 1912 Mr. Mann was united in marriage to Miss Winnie Latta, a native of Arkansas, and they now have two children, Ralph and Thomas. Mrs. Mann belongs to the Baptist church, while in religious faith Mr. Mann is a Presbyterian. He also is identified with Anchor Lodge No. 384, A. F. & A. M., in which he has filled all of the chairs. Politically he is a republican and has twice served as mayor of Judsonia, giving to the city a businesslike and progressive administration. His ideals are high, his activities always of a practical character, and the two make a splendid combination in the accomplishment of desired results.

TOM MARLIN.

Tom Marlin, attorney at law of El Dorado, practicing as a member of the law firm of Marsh & Marlin, is regarded as one of the representative lawyers of southern Arkansas, his constantly developing powers in the field of his chosen profession bringing him to a most creditable position in his chosen calling. Mr. Marlin is a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Marshall county, September 17, 1889, his parents being Benjamin S. and Ellen (Osteen) Marlin, who were also natives of Tennessee and at the time of their marriage they removed to a farm given them by the father of Mrs. Marlin. On this they resided to the time of the death of Benjamin S. Marlin, on the 9th of May, 1921. The mother still makes her home on that place.

Tom Marlin was educated in the public schools of Chapel Hill, Tennessee, and in a preparatory school at that place, after which he entered Cumberland University and later became a student in Lebanon University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1916, at which time the LL. B. degree was conferred upon him.

On the 13th of May of the following year, Mr. Marlin entered the first Officers' Training Camp at Fort Logan H. Roots, Arkansas, and was commissioned a second lieutenant on the 15th of August, 1917. Later he was assigned to duty at Camp Pike, where he remained until receiving his discharge on the 11th of September, 1919. In 1918 he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant.

Following his discharge Mr. Marlin returned to the Cumberland University, where he did some review and postgraduate work and in January, 1920, he removed to El Dorado, where he entered the law office of Neill C. Marsh. Three months later he was admitted to partnership with Mr. Marsh and the law firm of Marsh & Marlin ranks among the most prominent in southern Arkansas. Mr. Marlin is a young man of marked capability and much promise. Studious, energetic and determined he possesses the qualities so essential to the attainment of success at the bar.

Mr. Marlin is a valued member of El Dorado Lodge, No. 1129, B. P. O. E., and also belongs to the Greek letter fraternity, the Delta Sigma Phi. He is now serving as one of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce and his active work in that organization indicates his deep interest in the welfare and progress of his community. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

L. D. BERRYMAN, M. D.

Among Arkansas' native sons who are contributing to the prestige of the state along professional lines is numbered Dr. L. D. Berryman, who for the past seventeen years has been a member of the medical fraternity of Russellville and during that period has won a well established position as a skilled physician and surgeon. He was born near Russellville, October 7, 1878, of the union of Robert C. and Martha (Reed) Berryman, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of North Carolina. They were married in Pope county, Arkansas, the father having come to this section in 1850. He purchased a farm, which he continued to improve and cultivate for a number of years, and then removed to Russellville, where he is now living retired. He is a veteran of the Civil war, in which he served for nearly four years, and his political support is given to the democratic party. In religious faith he is a Baptist and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, having served as master of his lodge. His father, James Berryman, was also a native of Tennessee and came to Pope county in 1850, continuing to make his home in this district until his demise and devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits. The maternal grandfather, Thomas Reed, was born in North Carolina and became one of the early settlers of Pope county, Arkansas. To Mr. and Mrs. Berryman were born nine children, of whom six survive: Laura, the wife of J. T. Puckett, who is engaged in the brokerage business in Russellville; Ella, who married C. G. Williamson, a leading grocer of Russellville; L. D., of this review; Robert J., who is engaged in teaching school at Paris, Arkansas; Nora, who married E. R. Shanks, a telegraph lineman residing at Russellville; and Oscar, who is connected with the government mail service and also makes his home at Russellville.

Following his graduation from the Russellville high school, Dr. Berryman entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas, from which he won his M. D. degree in April, 1905, and in the same year opened an office in Russellville, where he has since engaged in general practice. He is an expert in administering anesthetics and is often called upon to perform work of this character for other physicians. In 1911 he completed a postgraduate course at the New Orleans (La.) Polyclinic and he has ever remained a close and discriminating student of the science of medicine. His attention is concentrated upon his professional duties and with the passing years his practice has steadily increased as he has demonstrated his ability and skill.

Dr. Berryman has been married twice. In 1903 he wedded Miss Anna Nation, a native of Morrilton, Arkansas, and two children, Mattie Elizabeth and L. D., Jr., were born of that union. Both are attending school. On the 5th of October, 1918, he married Martha C. Bearden, one of Arkansas' native daughters. They are members of the Baptist church and Dr. Berryman is a democrat in his political views, while fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His professional connections are with the Pope County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the Southern Medical Association and of the first named organization he has served as president and as secretary. He is a man of enterprising spirit, of commendable ambition and untiring energy and in his practice he displays a sense of conscientious obligation which has made his work entirely satisfactory. He is widely and favorably known in this section, where his life has been passed, and the welfare and progress of his community are to him matters of deep concern.

WILLIAM McKENZIE McQUEEN.

In the personnel of the First National Bank are found men of capability, thoroughness, determination and high business ideals. Well deserving of mention of mention in this connection is William McKenzie McQueen, cashier of the bank, whose record of faithful service has won him the entire confidence and good will of his business associates. His life history had its beginning in Missouri, his birth having occurred at Lamar, in 1891, his parents being J. H. and Irene (McKenzie) McQueen. The father was a native of Michigan, while the mother's birth occurred in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Following their marriage they resided for some time in Michigan, but on leaving that state took up their abode in Searcy, Arkansas, where Mr. McQueen engaged in merchandising.

He afterward removed to Des Arc and opened a general store, success attending him in this undertaking. To them were born two children: Vivian, who became the wife of O. H. Fink; and William M.

The latter pursued his early education in the public schools of Des Arc and afterward attended the Little Rock Commercial College. Starting out in the business world he became an employee of the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Des Arc, and thus gained valuable experience. Later he was with James Stewart & Company of Little Rock in the auditing department. Following America's advent into the World war he joined the army, in 1917, going to Camp Pike, while later he was a corporal at Camp Dix. After receiving his training he went with his regiment overseas and the boat on which he sailed was torpedoed off the coast of Ireland. The ship, being crippled, put into Gravesend, England, and later Mr. McQueen was stationed at Cherbourg, France, and was in reserve training in northern France for a time. Following the signing of the armistice and the return of his regiment to the United States he was mustered out at Camp Pike. He then again took up his abode in Des Arc, where he engaged in the ice manufacturing business with his father. His identification with the First National Bank dates from 1919, at which time he became assistant cashier of the institution, while later he was promoted to the cashiership and is proving a popular official by reason of his uniform courtesy to the patrons of the bank, while his efficiency is attested by the officers of the institution, who regard him as one of the progressive young business men and financiers of this part of the state.

Mr. McQueen was united in marriage to Miss E. A. Greer, a daughter of F. G. Greer of Des Arc, and they have become parents of a son, Ralph. Their religious faith is that of the Episcopal church and Mr. McQueen's interest in the adoption of high ideals of manhood and citizenship is further indicated in his connection with the Masonic fraternity. His aid and influence are always given on the side of progress and improvement and his labors have brought desired results in the matter of general advancement. He is yet a young man, and judging by what he has already accomplished his future career will be well worth watching.

HON. CHARLES HILLMAN BROUGH.

Hon. Charles Hillman Brough, lawyer, educator, statesman and author, has twice served as governor of Arkansas and has left his impress indelibly upon the history of the state, his administration, according to many competent to judge, being characterized by more constructive legislation than that of any other chief executive of the commonwealth. Governor Brough was born in Clinton, Mississippi, July 9, 1876, his parents being Charles Milton and Flora M. (Thompson) Brough, the latter at one time principal of the Central Female Institute of Clinton, Mississippi. The father was a prominent mining man and banker of Ogden, Utah.

In the acquirement of his education, Charles H. Brough completed a course in the Mississippi College, winning the Bachelor of Arts degree and first honors of his class of 1894. He then spent a year with his father at Ogden, Utah, while subsequently he pursued a three years' postgraduate course in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, Maryland, where he specialized in economics and history, winning the Doctor of Philosophy degree in 1898.

Mr. Brough then became an active factor in educational circles, being unanimously elected professor of philosophy, economics and history in Mississippi College, where he remained for four years, resigning that position in order to become a law student in the University of Mississippi, which conferred upon him the Bachelor of Laws degree in 1903. He has been admitted to practice in the states of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Mississippi. He did not enter upon the active work of the legal profession, however, following the completion of his law course, but accepted the position of professor of history and economics at Hillman College of Clinton, Mississippi, an institution that was established by his uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. Walter Hillman, for whom he was named. His identification with the University of Arkansas dated from 1904, in which year he was unanimously elected professor of economics and sociology, filling the chair for twelve years and developing one of the largest departments of the state university, with an average enrollment of more than three hundred. It was during his incumbency in that position that Dr. Brough on the 17th of June, 1908, was united in marriage to Miss Anne Wade Roark of Franklin, Kentucky, a lady of broad and liberal culture, well qualified to meet the social demands made upon her as "the first lady" of Arkansas. She has taken active part in promoting many interests which have been of utmost benefit to the commonwealth, and served as chairman of the Woman's Liberty Loan organization for Arkansas during the World war.

HON. CHARLES H. BROUGH

In 1916 Dr. Brough severed his connection with the state university, in order to become a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor; and in the contest on the 29th of March, 1916, won by a vote of sixteen thousand and nineteen thousand, respectively, over his two competitors, Hon. Earle W. Hodges and Judge L. C. Smith. His inauguration as chief executive of the state occurred on the 10th of January, 1917. He bent every energy toward securing legislation that would be of the greatest practical benefit to the state and his administration of public affairs was wise and of a constructive character, resulting in the introduction of various reforms and improvements. Among the legislative enactments brought about under his administration was a seven hundred and fifty thousand dollar note issue, designed to place the state on absolutely a cash basis; the calling of a convention to frame a new constitution; the passage of the "bone-dry" bill; the township assessment law; the conferring of suffrage upon women in primary elections, Arkansas being the first southern state to confer even limited suffrage upon women; the passage of the so-called "Millage Bill," so framed as to take higher institutions of learning out of politics; the state-wide tick eradication law; the creation of a state illiteracy commission and the honorary board of charities and corrections; the establishment of a Girls Industrial School and a State Reformatory for Women; the election of the members of the St. Francis levee board; the creation of the state auditorial department; the oil inspection department; the state hotel inspector; a state insurance commissioner and fire marshal and a state inheritance tax attorney. Governor Brough's friends contend that more constructive legislation was passed under his administration than has ever been enacted in Arkansas' history. It is a widely recognized fact that Governor Brough gave the most thoughtful and earnest consideration to the many vital questions which came up for settlement, ever looking beyond the exigencies of the moment to the needs and opportunities of the future and subjugating all partisanship to the welfare and progress of the commonwealth. He was nominated for a second term by a majority of more than fifty thousand over his former opponent, Judge L. C. Smith, and was the first democratic nominee in Arkansas in many years who had not had a republican opponent. He is widely known as a public speaker and as a democratic leader of the country and made campaign addresses in twelve of the northern states when his former teacher, Woodrow Wilson, was a second time candidate for the presidency. After taking his seat as governor of the state he delivered patriotic addresses in more than thirty states of the Union. He was a recognized leader in all war activities and following America's advent into the great world strife he delivered more than four hundred addresses, elucidating the real issues of the war and the conditions existing in the various countries. In this campaign he spoke in seventy-four of the seventy-five counties of the state. Since his retirement from the position of chief executive, Dr. Brough is serving as publicity director of the Arkansas Advancement Association and is president of the United States Good Roads Association. During his second term as governor he championed the cause of good roads in Arkansas and throughout the Union, and his position upon this extremely vital question led to his selection to the presidency of the United States Good Roads Association, as the successor of the late Senator John H. Bankhead.

In the midst of an extremely busy life, with manifold duties demanding and engaging his attention, he has also gained nation-wide reputation through his authorship. A student by nature throughout his life, he has delved deep into those questions which are of far-reaching effect in connection with public welfare. His doctor's thesis consisted of a volume entitled Irrigation in Utah. In the publications of several of the leading societies of the country have appeared his monographs on such subjects as: Taxation in Mississippi; Historic Clinton; History of Banking in Mississippi; The Clinton Riot; The Industrial History of Arkansas; Historic Homes of Arkansas; Historic Battle Fields of Arkansas; and The Political Problems of the Present. Again and again he has been heard on the Chautauqua platforms and among his lecture subjects are: The Glory of the Old South and the Greatness of the New; America's Leadership of the World; American Patriotism and Preparedness; The Wit and Wisdom of Great Americans; God in History; and We Study but to Serve. With the interests that have dominated his life, it is natural that he should become a member of the American Historical Society, the American Economic Association, the Arkansas State Historical Society, the Authors and Composers Society of Arkansas, the Mississippi State Historical Society and the American Political Science Association. For two years he was chairman of the Southern Universities Commission, organized to study race problems. He has been a member of the Missionary Baptist church for more than two decades and although not an ordained minister he has filled the pulpit of several churches on various occasions. His connection with fraternal organizations includes the Masons, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Eagles, the Woodmen of the World, the Columbian Woodmen, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias, the Knights and Ladies of Security, the Maccabees, the Tribe of Ben Hur and the Moose. Dr. Brough remains a dominant factor, not only in Arkansas but in the nation, by reason of his scientific researches and his thorough understanding of the great political, economic and sociological problems that confront the country today. He believes in the fairness of American judgment, if the public can be thoroughly educated concerning the issues of the day, and he has taken an important part in bringing to the American public knowledge concerning many of the most vital interests which affect the general welfare at the present time.

WILLIAM JOSEPH LENEHAN.

William Joseph Lenehan, filling the position of postmaster at De Witt, was born in Decherd, Tennessee, March 27, 1877. His father, G. W. Lenehan, was also a native of that state and was a son of Peter and Narcissus (Champion) Lenehan, the former a native of Dublin, Ireland, while the latter was a representative of one of the old families of Virginia. Peter Lenehan first settled in Alabama on coming to the new world and afterward removed to Franklin county, Tennessee. He was the father of nine sons and two daughters. Five sons served in the Confederate army during the Civil war. One of these sons, William, died at Yorktown, while another son, John, lost his life in the battle of Fredericksburg.

G. W. Lenehan, father of William Joseph Lenehan, was born in Tennessee and on coming to Arkansas settled in Independence county, where he took up his abode in 1881, there residing until his death in 1921. He married Nancy McKelvey, who was a daughter of Samuel McKelvey, who removed from the Carolinas to Tennessee and who was of Scotch extraction. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lenehan there were ten children: William Joseph; John P.; C. E.; Lula, the wife of Orville Baker; Minnie, the wife of Charles Magness; Ruth, the wife of N. McClendon; Ed, deceased; Narcissa, the wife of John D. Martin; Betty, the wife of C. B. Keating; and Annie, the deceased wife of Archie Miller. Eight children of this family became school teachers.

William J. Lenehan, who is now efficiently serving as postmaster of De Witt, was educated in the schools of Sulphur Rock and afterward took up the profession of teaching, which he followed for sixteen years in Independence, White, Calhoun, Cleveland, Ouachita and Arkansas counties. He imparted readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired and proved a capable instructor, the school under his control making substantial progress. He afterward took up bookkeeping in De Witt and later became a rural mail carrier, which was the successive step that brought him ultimately to the position of postmaster of De Witt in 1919. He has since filled this position and is most systematic, methodical and careful in the management of all interests having to do with the mail.

Mr. Lenehan was married to Miss Willy Allen, a daughter of James W. Allen, and their children are: William Allen, George Warden, W. J., Jr., J. P., deceased, and Marian. Fraternally Mr. Lenehan is a Mason and has taken the degrees of both lodge and chapter. He loyally follows the teachings and purposes of the craft and exemplifies these tenets in his relation with his fellowmen.

MARION T. BELL.

One of the most important commercial interests of Fort Smith is that conducted by Marion T. Bell, under the name of the Bell Lumber Company. He has built up an enterprise of vast proportions and the success of the undertaking is the outcome of his clear judgment, his broad experience and his sagacity. Arkansas numbers him among her native sons and is proud of the record which he has made. He was born on the 1st of December, 1876, and is a son of Christopher Columbus and Mollie (Cherry) Bell. The father, also a native of Arkansas, resided in this state until he had reached the age of forty-four years, when he removed to Texas, where he still resides. To him and his wife were born seven children and the family circle remains unbroken by the hand of death.

Marion T. Bell obtained his early education in the primary schools of Arkansas, mastered the branches of learning taught in successive grades of the public schools and eventually became a student in the University of Arkansas, his liberal educational training well qualifying him for the important duties and tasks which have since claimed his attention. Early in his business career he became identified with the lumber trade, and constantly extending and enlarging his activities in that field, he ultimately became the owner of a line of lumberyards in Oklahoma, which he sold prior to establishing his lumberyard in Fort Smith. Here he has built up a business which is one of the important commercial interests of the city. He sells both to the wholesale and the retail trade, handling yellow pine lumber, white pine, cypress, gum and oak. His yard covers five lots and the business is constantly growing as the result of his enterprise, his capable management and his thoroughness in all that he undertakes. In addition to handling lumber he carries a full line of all building supplies and his patronage is very extensive.

Mr. Bell was united in marriage to Miss Emily A. Hobart, a daughter of H. L. Hobart of Garden City, Missouri, and they have become the parents of four children: Marion, Jr., now fifteen years of age; Ellen; Clarence; and Howard. Mr. Bell is identified with the Business Men's Club and with the Ad Club and takes an active interest in everything that pertains to the development and extension of trade relations in Fort Smith and to the substantial upbuilding and improvement of the city. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons and the Elks and is a loyal follower of their purposes and teachings. His life record indicates the fact that the sources of our power lie within ourselves and that advancement may be won by any man who cultivates perseverance and determination and is watchful of opportunities. Moreover, Mr. Bell's breadth of view has not only recognized possibilities for his own advancement but for the city's development as well, and his lofty patriotism has prompted him to utilize the latter as quickly and as effectively as the former.

CITIZENS ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The public utilities of Hot Springs have played no small part in the growth and prosperity of the city. These utilities are incorporated as the Hot Springs Water Company, the Citizens Electric Company, the Consumers Gas Company and the Hot Springs Street Railway Company. They are under the Federal Light & Traction Company of New York city, which company controls utilities in several western and southwestern states. The officers of the Hot Springs utilities are: E. N. Sanderson, president; S. E. Dillon, general manager; and W. I. Boyer, secretary and treasurer.

Hot Springs was the first city in Arkansas to enjoy a street railway, the company being incorporated on the 21st of July, 1874. The cars were drawn by mules originally, but in later years the system was electrified.

The Hot Springs Water Company was incorporated and given a franchise November 7, 1881. Its mains extend throughout the city. Its source of supply is secured from two lakes located between the mountain ridges north of the city. The pump station grounds are laid out in a beautiful park, one of the most attractive spots around Hot Springs.

The Consumers Gas Company and the Citizens Electric Company were incorporated under these names on March 1, 1913, although these utilities operated under other names as early as the year 1875 and 1883, respectively.

The public utilities of Hot Springs cooperate in all movements towards the advancement of the interests of the city and its people.

W. S. FLOYD.

W. S. Floyd, who has been an active representative of the Arkansas bar through a period of forty-three years, has been located at Bentonville since 1887 and has been accorded a most extensive and gratifying clientage. His birth occurred in Sparta, White county, Tennessee, in August, 1855, his parents being John Wesley and Liza J. (Snodgrass) Floyd, who were also natives of that state. During the period of the Civil war the father served with the Confederate troops under General John H. Morgan and also in Forrest's cavalry. The year 1869 witnessed his arrival in Arkansas and in this state he devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits, owning a tract of land near Bentonville. He was a democrat in politics and for a quarter of a century filled the office of justice of the peace, in which connection he made a most creditable and commendable record. His religious faith was indicated by his membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. To him and his wife were born seven children, five of whom survive, namely: W. S., of this review; J. C., a resident of Yellville, Arkansas; James R., who is a practicing physician of Fort Worth, Texas; Frank Forrest, a retired merchant living in Bentonville; and Carrie, who is the wife of William R. Maxwell, of Alva, Oklahoma.

In the acquirement of his education W. S. Floyd attended the schools of Bentonville and in preparation for his chosen profession began reading law in the office and under the direction of Judge S. N. Elliott at Bentonville. He was admitted to the bar in 1878 and began practice in Marion county, Arkansas, where for two years he filled the position of county judge. He also practiced in Bentonville while living in Marion county and in 1887 took up his abode in Bentonville, where he has remained continuously since or for a period of more than a third of a century. Few lawyers have made a more lasting impression upon the bar of the state, both for legal ability of a high order and for the individuality of a personal character which impresses itself upon a community. The zeal with which he has devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases, have brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct. In 1914 he served as county judge in Benton county to fill out an unexpired term.

On the 25th of April, 1880, Mr. Floyd was united in marriage to Miss Josie M. Jackson, a native of Missouri and a daughter of S. H. Jackson, who was also born in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd became the parents of five children, namely: Mrs. Sallie Conine, who is a widow residing in Bentonville, Arkansas; James Hurlie, a mine operator who makes his home at Picher, Oklahoma; Hugh Jackson, who is filling the office of postmaster in Bentonville; Jennie, who is the wife of Claude Silver, a contractor and architect of Okmulgee, Oklahoma; and Maggie, who is the wife of Timothy Applegate, a druggist of Bentonville. The wife and mother was called to her final rest on the 18th of August, 1914. She joined the Presbyterian church in early life but later became a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

In politics Mr. Floyd has always been a democrat and his fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, have called upon him for public service. He filled the office of mayor of Bentonville for several terms, giving to the town a most public-spirited and progressive administration that was characterized by many needed reforms and improvements. He now devotes his entire time and attention to his law practice and has long been recognized as one of the leading attorneys of his part of the state. His fraternal connection is with the Masonic order and his entire career has been in harmony with upright principles of manhood and citizenship, so that he enjoys the high esteem and warm regard of all with whom he has been associated in both professional and social relations.

SAM LASER.

Sam Laser, a well known representative of business enterprise at Clarksville, his labors contributing in substantial measure to the commercial development of the city, where he is engaged in merchandising, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, April 14, 1865, and is a son of Abraham and Lacetta (Ackerman) Laser, who were natives of Germany and came to the United States in early life, their marriage being celebrated in Scranton, Pennsylvania. They afterward removed to Baltimore, Maryland, and thence to Detroit, while subsequently they became residents of Memphis, Tennessee, and later of Mobile, Alabama. It was in that city that the father died of yellow fever. He was a rabbi, having been educated in Germany and devoted his life to the ministry. To him and his wife were born five children, only two of whom are living: Sam, of this review; and Rosa, the wife of A. Lazarus, a wholesale grocer of Camden, Arkansas.

Sam Laser, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the Southwestern Baptist University in Jackson, Tennessee, and after putting aside his textbooks started out in the business world, his first occupation being that of clerk in a store at Little Rock. In 1884 he came to Clarksville, where he opened a small store in 1886. He increased his stock from time to time and now has one of the largest stores of the county, besides being the oldest merchant in Johnson county, and his success is the direct outcome of his persistency of purpose, his close application and his indefatigable energy. He has always based his advancement upon principles that neither seek nor require disguise and he has long occupied a prominent position among the leading merchants of this part of the state.

In 1886 Mr. Laser was married to Miss Minnie Nichols, a daughter of T. D. Nichols, a pioneer physician of Paris, Arkansas. They have become parents of seven children: Thomas S., who is engaged in the automobile business in Little Rock; Lucile, at home; Albert, a hardware merchant of Clarksville; Rille, who married Richard Orme, connected with the automobile business in Little Rock; Alvin, owner of a coal mine and mercantile enterprise in Clarksville; Minnie and Maurine, both at home. Mrs. Laser is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and the daughters have membership in the Presbyterian church. Mr. Laser is a loyal follower of Masonic teachings and has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He likewise belongs to the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a democrat and he served on the town council and on the school board for a number of years. He has ever stood for progress and improvement in public affairs, has contributed to the welfare and upbuilding of the city in many ways and the cause of education has ever found in him a stalwart champion. He is devoting his life to his business affairs and in connection with his mercantile interests he is a director of the First National Bank. He started out in the business world a poor boy and has been dependent upon his own resources from the age of fourteen years. His life illustrates what can be accomplished through energy and persistency of purpose, which qualities have enabled him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties in his path and work his way steadily upward toward the goal of prosperity.

R. E. HUDDLESTON.

R. E. Huddleston, one of the capable young officials of Little River county, living at Ashdown, is filling the position of county and probate clerk in a highly satisfactory and commendable manner. He is a native son of Arkansas, having been born at Salem, Fulton county, on the 24th of August, 1891, and since the age of eleven years has resided at Ashdown. The graded and high schools afforded him his educational opportunities and after putting aside his textbooks he worked in a store for several years, while subsequently he spent seven years as an employe of the First National Bank of Ashdown, which was then known as the Little River Bank. In 1920 Governor Brough appointed him county clerk to fill out an unexpired term and later he was elected to the office, so that he is the present incumbent and is making a most creditable record, efficiently discharging the important duties devolving upon him in this connection.

Mr. Huddleston has been married twice. In 1912 he wedded Miss Nola Boggerly and they became parents of two children, Robert E., Jr. and James E. For his second wife Mr. Huddleston chose Miss Mary Locke, by whom he has one son, Mathew W. R. E. Huddleston is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity and served as secretary of his lodge for several years. His religious faith is shown by his membership in the Methodist church, South. These connections indicate the rules which govern him in the varied relations of life, making him a man whom to know is to esteem and respect.

W. I. GREEN.

The field of real estate has been a profitable one in western Arkansas because of the rapid and substantial growth and development of this section of the country. In the last quarter of the nineteenth century and the opening years of the twentieth century the tide of immigration has continually flowed into this district and there has been a constant demand for property by those who have sought western Arkansas to become permanent settlers here. W. I. Green, therefore, has found a fertile field of labor in conducting a real estate office and at Mena has negotiated many important transfers, which include not only city realty but also farm property. He is one of the native sons of Polk county, his birth having occurred on a farm December 23, 1871, his parents being Jesse M. and Frances J. (Isham) Green, the former a native of Georgia and a son of William W. Green, who was born in South Carolina, whence he removed to Georgia, while in 1868 he became a resident of Polk county, Arkansas. He founded Bethesda Springs about 1880 and for many years was closely associated with the substantial development and progress of his section of the state. The maternal grandfather of W. I. Green was Charles Isham, who was also one of the early residents of Polk county.

It was in western Texas that Jesse M. Green was united in marriage to Frances J. Isham, after which they began their domestic life in the Lone Star state, where they remained until 1869 and then became residents of Polk county, Arkansas, where he homesteaded and engaged in farming for a number of years. In 1892 he removed to Oklahoma, where he still resides, living retired at the age of eighty-five years. He is also a minister of the gospel, having engaged in preaching for a number of years in addition to farming. He served in the Confederate army for one year during the Civil war and then went to Texas, where he fought the Indians during the uprising there. He now receives a pension from the Federal government in recognition of his service against the Indians. In politics he had always been a stalwart democrat and he served in the Arkansas legislature from Polk county from 1888 until 1890. He was also the second county judge of Comanche county, Texas, and has ever been most loyal to the duties entrusted to his care as a public official. In early manhood he taught school and he is a man of broad and liberal information along general lines. His wife departed this life in 1877. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are living: J. B., who is a farmer of Oklahoma; H. J., who carries on farming and merchandising at Fillmore, Oklahoma; W. I., of this review; J. R., who is clerking in a store at Okmulgee, Oklahoma; and Luella, the wife of J. R. Wallace, living on a farm in Oklahoma. The father is a member of the Missionary Baptist church and as one of its ministers he became widely known. Fraternally he is a Mason.

W. I. Green, after mastering the early branches of learning taught in the rural schools of Polk county, continued his education in the high school at Bethesda Springs, which he attended for two terms. He started out to provide for his own support as a farmer and divided his time between farming and school teaching until 1898, after which he engaged in merchandising at Hatfield in 1899. He continued as a merchant in that city until 1904, when he disposed of his business there, having been called to public office. He was elected circuit clerk and occupied that position for four years, at the end of which time he became assistant cashier in the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, while later he was elected to the presidency of the bank. He sold his stock in 1919 and ceased his active connection with the banking business, since which time he has given his attention to the real estate and insurance business. He has gained a good clientele and negotiates many important realty transfers each year, while at the same time he writes a large amount of insurance annually. He is also at the head of the Mena Oil & Gas Company and he owns a farm in Polk county, together with real estate in the city. He said that he made his start in the business world with a little yellow mule and a yearling calf, which was all that he ever had given him. Steadily, however, he has progressed in the business world and today he is the possessor of valuable property and is at the head of a constantly growing and successful business.

In 1892 Mr. Green was united in marriage to Miss Julia Lindsey, who was born in Mississippi, a daughter of J. Lindsey, who followed farming in Polk county for a number of years. They became parents of the following children: Ivan, who has been a member of the navy for twelve years; Jesse J., who was assistant cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank to the time of his death, which occurred April 14, 1919; and Jewell Grady, who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Electra, Texas. The wife and mother died August 8, 1904. Mr. Green was again married on the 17th of January, 1907, when Miss Ida E. Martin became his wife. She was born in Polk county, Arkansas, a daughter of W. M. Martin, a pioneer living in Hatfield, who was a mechanic and is now living retired. To this marriage there have been born three children: Hazel E., W. I. and Julia Frances, all in school. The parents are members of the Baptist church and Mr. Green is a Royal Arch and Council Mason. Politically he is a democrat and has served on the school board. He was also one of the first aldermen of Hatfield and he filled the position of city clerk. While he has never been remiss in the duties of citizenship he prefers to give his attention to business affairs rather than to public office and his close application, thoroughness and enterprise have been the dominant factors in winning him place among the men of affluence in Mena.

JAMES W. WILLOUGHBY.

For the past seventeen years James W. Willoughby has been closely connected with the development and upbuilding of McGehee and he has thoroughly identified his interests with those of the town, being recognized as a leader of public thought and action and a live wire in his community. He is an able financier and is now serving as vice president of the McGehee Valley Bank, in which connection he is doing all in his power to broaden the scope of the institution and promote its success. He is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Vermilion county, on the 6th of January, 1874, and his parents were Andrew J. and Sina (Truax) Willoughby, who were also natives of that county. Both are deceased.

Mr. Willoughby completed his education in the high school at De Witt, Arkansas, and afterward engaged in teaching in country schools of the state, devoting three years to that profession. In May, 1898, he enlisted for service in the Spanish-American war, being assigned to the Second Arkansas Regiment, and was stationed at Camp Chickamauga for a time. From that point he was transferred to Anniston, Alabama, where he remained with his command until discharged from the service in February, 1899. He then returned to Arkansas county, where he had previously been occupied with educational work, and entered the field of journalism, being identified with the publication of a newspaper at Stuttgart until 1903. Removing to Arkansas City, he accepted an office position with the Kimball Lacy Lumber Company, with which he remained for a year, and early in 1905 he came to McGehee, becoming connected with financial interests as cashier of the McGehee Valley Bank. His excellent work in that connection led to his choice for the vice presidency in January, 1921, and he is now filling that responsible office. Broad experience has given him a comprehensive knowledge of the intricate and involved problems of modern finance and he has been largely instrumental in promoting the growth and prosperity of the bank, which is classed with the substantial moneyed institutions of this part of the state.

In 1905 Mr. Willoughby was united in marriage to Miss Viola Edmonds of Brownsville, Tennessee, and of their family three children are living: James W., Jr., Mary Lucille and Verna Mae. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Willoughby is one of its trustees and is also serving on the board of stewards. In civic affairs he has ever been deeply and helpfully interested and for the past fourteen years has been secretary of the school board and he is also an alderman of his city, rendering valuable service in both connections. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, belonging to McGehee Lodge, No. 165. His career has been marked by continuous advancement, due to his close application, his study of the business to which he has turned his attention and his unquestioned integrity and reliability. He is broad-minded and public-spirited, a strong champion of moral progress and civic advancement and stands as a high type of American manhood and citizenship.

JOHN MCGINTY, M. D.

Dr. John McGinty, engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Fort Smith, was born in North Vernon, Indiana, in 1863. His youthful days were passed in his native state and after acquiring his preliminary education he determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work. To this end he matriculated in the University of Louisville, then known as the Kentucky School of Medicine, from which he was graduated with honors in 1884, making a very high record in his studies. He received the medal for the highest standing in examination on materia medica.

Returning to his native city, Dr. McGinty opened an office and continued in practice at North Vernon, Indiana, for three years. In 1887 he came to Arkansas, attracted by the opportunities of the growing southwest. He has since remained in Sebastian county, practicing at different periods in Hackett, Jenny Lind, Bonanza and for the past sixteen years in Fort Smith. He has continued in general practice and has also served on the staff of St. Edward's Hospital and is one of the lecturers in the school for nurses in connection with that hospital. He is likewise local surgeon for the Kansas City Southern Railway and for the Midland Valley Railway.

In 1890 Dr. McGinty was united in marriage to Miss Johnny Park, a daughter of Dr. Frank Park, of Arkansas, and they have become the parents of three sons: John Park, Earl Andrew and Paul Raymond. The two eldest sons were soldiers of the World war, being connected with the army for eighteen months, and during six months of that time were overseas, being identified with the One Hundred and Fourteenth Field Artillery Ammunition Train as members of Company C. Both escaped injury and returned safely to their home at the end of the war. Dr. McGinty and his family are well known in Fort Smith, where he has now practiced for sixteen years. He belongs to the Sebastian County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Association, the Southwest Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Through the activities and proceedings of these bodies he keeps informed concerning the latest discoveries and scientific researches of the profession. Throughout his entire life he has held to high professional standards and has made his labor of great benefit to his fellowmen, putting forth the most earnest effort to meet the demands of his practice and find ready solution for the intricate problem which we call life.

WILLIAM L. NEWTON, M. D.

Dr. William L. Newton, who is now filling the position of postmaster of Camden, Arkansas, and has for the past twenty-two years been numbered among the foremost physicians and surgeons of Camden, was born in Atlanta, Texas, July 22, 1876, a son of Andrew J. and Frances A. (Chamblee) Newton, who were natives of Georgia, in which state they were reared and married. Immediately after their marriage they removed to Cass county, Texas, where Mr. Newton engaged in farming to the time of his death, at the age of forty-five years. His widow survives and has reached the age of eighty years, making her home with her son, William L.

In the public schools of Texas Dr. Newton pursued his early education, completing a high school course at Atlanta, that state, while later he entered the Georgetown College at Georgetown, Texas, and became a student in the Memphis Hospital Medical College in 1895, receiving therefrom his M. D. degree as a member of the class of 1898. He served for one year as interne in the City Hospital at Memphis and in 1899 he entered upon the private practice of his profession in Camden, where he has remained, winning a position among the leading practitioners of the state. He has always kept pace with the onward march of professional thought and progress and his ability has been demonstrated in his careful diagnosis of his cases and the splendid results which follow his professional labors. In 1914 he was appointed postmaster of Camden and is now serving for the eighth year in this important position. He discharges his duties with marked capability and promptness.

In 1900 Dr. Newton was united in marriage to Miss Eula L. Morriss of Atlanta, Texas, and they have become parents of three children: Kate C., who is a graduate of the Camden high school; Jack J., a junior in high school; and Evelyn F., a pupil in the seventh grade. Dr. Newton belongs to Eagle Lodge, No. 540, A. F. & A. M., of Elgie Mills, Arkansas, and is also identified with the Royal Arch Chapter. He has membership in Camden Lodge, No. 1140, B. P. O. E., is identified with the Woodmen of the World and with the Camden Chamber of Commerce. Along strictly professional lines his connection is with the Ouachita County Medical Society and the Arkansas State Medical Society and throughout his life he has made it his strong purpose to qualify to the greatest extent for professional duties and responsibilities, his conscientious service giving him high professional rank.

GASTON PERCY GEORGE.

Gaston Percy George, lawyer and banker of Hamburg, was born here on the 25th of March, 1873, a son of G. P. and Joan George, both of whom are deceased. On the paternal side he is descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry and he is English on the maternal side. The paternal grandfather, Hosea George, came to Ashley county in 1840, and was one of the pioneer settlers here, as was the maternal great-grandfather, Elias, who came to this state from the northern part of Louisiana at the close of the Civil war. G. P. George was born in Ashley county and resided here throughout his life. He enlisted for service in the Civil war from this state and became a private in the infantry. He engaged in farming near Hamburg at the close of the war and became one of the prominent agriculturists in this community. At Farmersville, Louisiana, in 1864, occurred the marriage of Mr. George to Miss Joan George, a native of that state. Her father, Wash George, likewise served in the Civil war as private. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. George ten children were born, two girls and eight boys, Gaston Percy, whose name initiates this review, being the third in order of birth. Three boys and one girl are living. Mrs. George died at Hamburg in 1900, in her forty-eighth year. Mr. George departed this life on the 24th of April, 1909, when sixty-five years of age.

In the acquirement of an education Gaston Percy George attended the public schools of Hamburg and later enrolled in the Southern Normal University, at Huntington, Tennessee, where he took a three-year literary course. Determining upon a professional career, Mr. George then returned to Hamburg and entered the law office of R. E. Craig. In 1898 he was admitted to the bar and immediately started into active practice. He has built up an extensive and important clientage and practicing in all courts in southern Arkansas, has won a place among the foremost lawyers in the state. In 1917 he was elected to attend the constitutional convention as a delegate from the seventh congressional district and he was presidential elector from that district on the Wilson-Marshall ticket in 1916. In addition to his legal and political activity, Mr. George is also prominent in financial circles, being president of the Farmers Bank & Trust Company of Hamburg and a director in the Fountain Hill Bank, at Fountain Hill.

At Hamburg on the 7th of January, 1907, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. George to Miss Abbie Wilson, a daughter of A. H. and Eliza (Thompson) Wilson. Her parents were among the pioneer settlers of this community and are representative and highly respected citizens. Mrs. George has made many friends in Hamburg, most of whom have known her from childhood, and she is prominent in the club and social affairs of the town.

Both Mr. and Mrs. George are consistent members of the Methodist church and he is a trustee, in which position he has been active for some years. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Prairie Lodge, No. 465, at Hamburg; Olive Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Albert Pike Consistory at Little Rock; and Sahara Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pine Bluff. He is a Scottish Rite

MR. AND MRS. GASTON P. GEORGE

Mason. In the line of his profession he is identified with the American and Arkansas State Bar Associations, and as a citizen who has the good of the community ever at heart, he is a member of various bodies whose object is the development and improvement of the general welfare. During the World war Mr. George gave generously of his time and money in promoting the government's interests and he received recognition from Washington, D. C., for service tendered in behalf of raising money in Liberty Loan drives and various other war activities. He is readily conceded to be one of the influential and highly respected citizens of Hamburg and this community is proud to claim him as a native son.

J. R. DOBYNS, LL. D.

Dr. John R. Dobyns, superintendent of the Deaf Mute Institute at Little Rock, Arkansas, has been spoken of as one of the most conspicuous educators of the deaf in the country and a man whose private character is above reproach. For more than a third of a century he served as superintendent of the Institute for the Deaf and Dumb at Jackson, Mississippi, and later was called to his present position. Dr. Dobyns is a native of Missouri, his birth having occurred at Columbus, Johnson county, March 31, 1850, his parents being Benjamin F. and Margaret Ruth (Morrow) Dobyns. His father was born in Mays Lick, Kentucky, in 1807, and the mother's birth occurred in Columbus, Missouri, in 1827. They were married in Columbus in 1849 and became parents of four sons and a daughter, of whom three sons survive. Leaving his native state, Benjamin F. Dobyns removed to Columbus, Missouri, and for many years engaged in the practice of medicine in that state, for he was a physician who was graduated from the Louisville Medical College. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party and he remained an honored and respected resident of Columbus until his death, which occurred in 1867, while his wife died in 1878 near Marshall, Missouri.

Dr. Dobyns of this review began his education in one of the old-time log school-houses at Columbus, Missouri, and in 1874 he was graduated from the Westminster College, a Presbyterian institution of learning at Fulton, Missouri, winning the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while later the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him and eventually that of Doctor of Laws. In 1881 he became superintendent of the Mississippi School for the Deaf at Jackson, Mississippi, and remained there until 1914, or for a period of a third of a century. His work there was one of the greatest possible value to the institution and when he left the board of trustees issued a booklet, telling of his good work as compiled from the reports of trustees and of investigation boards from time to time. In 1896 he was tendered the position of superintendent of the Missouri Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and thinking to accept sent in his resignation to the governor of Mississippi, who replied as follows:

State of Mississippi,
Executive Department.
Jackson, Miss., April 27, 1896.

Prof. J. R. Dobyns, Jackson, Miss.

My Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your resignation of the superintendency of the Deaf and Dumb Institute. If you have no reason for my immediate action I will take no action on the resignation as long as I can delay it consistent with my official duty, in the hope that you may see your way clear to withdraw your resignation.

I have given very careful thought and attention to the institution, and to the ascertainment of what would redound most to its advantage, and of course I have thoroughly canvassed the subject of its superintendency, and I am sure no man could be found anywhere, under whose superintendency it would be safer. Therefore my great solicitude for the unfortunate people who are compelled by their infirmities to seek the beneficent hand of the institution makes me hope as well as desire that you will continue to occupy the position which I feel you have so long adorned.

Faithfully, etc.,
A. J. McLaurin,
Governor.

After carefully considering every phase of the question Mr. Dobyns decided to remain and the governor, in order to secure his release from his promise to go to the Missouri institution, sent a letter to the board of managers and a personal representative to present the letter to that board.

On one occasion charges were made against Dr. Dobyns as to extravagance and the management of the institution. At Mr. Dobyns' request the governor immediately appointed an investigating committee and after receiving the report of that committee wrote to Dr. Dobyns as follows:

March 8, 1912.

Dr. J. R. Dobyns, Jackson, Miss.

Dear Dr. Dobyns: Your favor of the 7th inst. received. There is no question but what the institution has prospered for many years under your management, and I feel sure that it will continue to do so. I knew that there was nothing in the fight being made against you, and am certainly glad that the closest scrutiny verified the investigation as reported to me before I sent your name to the Senate.

Yours very sincerely,

Earl Brewer,

Governor.

The auditors' report on the institution contained the following: "During the 1912 session of the legislature charges were preferred by a sub-committee of the appropriations committee of the house of representatives, that the Institute for the Deaf and Dumb was being extravagantly managed. When we started our audit at this institution we were appraised of these charges by you, the state investigating committee, and were asked to investigate, among other things, whether too high prices were paid for supplies during the period, from October 1, 1911, to August 31, 1913, that we were to audit. Instead of finding anything to confirm the charges, the exact antithesis of each suspected set was shown in everything we examined, and our examination was thorough, for we looked into everything and from every conceivable angle. In fact, we found the real condition of things at the institution to be so diametrically opposite to the alleged conditions, that, if the subject had not been of a serious nature and actually coming from the legislature, we would have branded the charges as a huge joke. From all outward appearances, J. R. Dobyns, the superintendent, is the very highest type of man. Apparently, he possesses a nobleness of character rarely met in the world. In culture, education, business acumen, integrity of purpose in both material and ethical things, mastery of detail and progressiveness, Dr. J. R. Dobyns seems to us to be in a class where few follow. If our observations are correct, it seems like the gravest injustice to impugn a man of his character, and, the state really should be thankful that it has, as superintendent of the Institute for the Deaf and Dumb at the salary paid, a man who, if he entered the business world, would probably have an income five times as large."

The Chicago Herald once wrote of Professor Dobyns as follows: "Governor McLaurin did a wise thing when he named Professor J. R. Dobyns as superintendent of the Deaf and Dumb Institute, at Jackson. Tender as a father to those under his charge, Professor Dobyns has won the love of all, and his ability as an instructor of the deaf and dumb has placed this institution among the leading schools of its kind in the south, and it is fortunate that Mississippi can retain his services."

At length, however, Dr. Dobyns severed his relation with the school with which he had been identified for a third of a century and from September, 1914, until January, 1917, was president of the Southwest Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tennessee. At the latter date he became president of the Stonewall Jackson College at Abingdon, Virginia, and from September, 1919, to the present time has been superintendent of the Deaf Mute Institute of Arkansas. He has also been the active head of the International Association of Instructors of the Deaf and held the vice presidency of that organization for two terms.

In many ways Dr. Dobyns has been honored by the instructors of the deaf in the United States during the past few years, one of the notable occasions being in May, 1911, when he was chosen to deliver the address on the retirement of Dr. E. M. Gallaudet and the installation of Professor Percival Hall as president of Gallaudet College in Washington. In December, 1910, he was also chosen to deliver the address at the laying of the corner stone of the new building of the Oklahoma school for the deaf. The North Dakota Banner once wrote of him, "Superintendent J. R. Dobyns, vice president of the convention of American instructors for the deaf, was the live wire in the recent successful convention at Delavan, Wisconsin, which was held last summer, and which was probably the largest and, without reflection upon the others, perhaps the best convention ever held. Mr. Dobyns will have charge of the convention to be at the Virginia school in 1914, and has already started out on a campaign, the object of which is to make that convention the 'Best and Biggest ever.' Those who know Dr. Dobyns personally and his untiring zeal and strong executive ability, know that he will accomplish what he sets out to do." A most interesting indication of Dr. Dobyns' standing in Mississippi, where he so long resided, is indicated in an article which appeared in the Alabama Messenger: "In striking contrast to some of the appropriation fights that have been waged at this session was the action of the senate on Saturday in calling up, reading for the third time, and passing the deaf and dumb institute bill within a period of five minutes, and without a single dissenting vote. And yet this bill carried a very goodly sum in addition to the regular support fund, which is to be used in the erection of new buildings and making needed improvements, the sum total being almost equal to the cost of the new building now occupied by the institution. The action on this measure is a silent but effective demonstration of the high regard in which Dr. J. R. Dobyns, the superintendent, is held by the legislature. The members realize that the additional allowances would not have been asked by Superintendent Dobyns if not needed, and for this reason they granted the appropriation without question or debate."

On the 26th of June, 1878, at Mineral Point, Missouri, Dr. Dobyns was married to Miss Eliza Roxanna Webster, who was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1850. They have become parents of three children: Ashbel Webster, an attorney; Richmond Smoot; and Robert Morrow. The eldest son, A. W. Dobyns, was in the service of the American army during the World war and was also on border service in the United States. The youngest son, Robert Morrow Dobyns, was with the Young Men's Christian Association in France for about two years.

Dr. Dobyns has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party. He is a member of the Beta Theta Psi but of no fraternal orders. He has membership in the First Presbyterian church of Little Rock, of which he is now an elder. He is making for himself a place in the life of Arkansas just as he did in that of Mississippi and is spoken of among his constantly increasing circle of friends and acquaintances as a generous, big-hearted Christian gentleman and prince of good fellows.

JOHN WILLIAM NEWMAN.

John William Newman, for thirteen years actively engaged in the profession of law and numbered among the representatives of the Little Rock bar since 1910, was born on the 4th of August, 1882, in Maryville, Nodaway county, Missouri. He comes of southern ancestry, representing one of the old families of Virginia. His father, James Blakey Newman, was born in the town of Orange, Orange county, Virginia, on the 30th of May, 1852, and received liberal educational opportunities in his native state, studying law under Prof. John B. Minor at the University of Virginia and having prepared for the practice of law he removed from Orange, Virginia, to Maryville, Missouri, where for twenty-five years he continued actively in the practice of law, winning prominence as a representative of the bar of that state. He was remarkable among lawyers for the wide research and provident care with which he prepared his cases. Moreover, he threw himself easily and naturally into the argument with a self-possession and a deliberation that indicated no straining after effects, but on the contrary showed a precision and clearness in statement and acuteness and strength in his arguments which bespoke a mind trained in the severe school of investigation, to which the closest reasoning had become habitual. At length he retired from the active work of the profession and in 1906 returned to his native state, where he is living retired, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. It was on the 30th of May, 1879, in Jacksonport, Jackson county, Arkansas, that James B. Newman was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Jones, who was born October 21, 1857, in Jacksonport. Her father was a distinguished member of the bar, practicing law for many years in Jacksonport and in Newport, Arkansas, as a partner of the firm of Jones & Doswell and later of the firm of Jones & Jones, the junior member thereof being his son Gustave Jones, now of Newport, Arkansas. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Newman were born four children: Lucile, who is residing in Somerset, Virginia; John W., of Little Rock; Mrs. Kate Scott, living at Orange, Virginia; and Nannie, who is located at Somerset.

Reared under the parental roof, John W. Newman largely spent his youthful days as a public school pupil in Maryville, Missouri, but afterward attended the Woodberry Forrest Academy at Orange, Virginia, and still later became a student in the Virginia Military Institute, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1904. In preparation for a professional career he attended the law school of the University of Missouri in 1904-5 and later became a student in the Washington and Lee University of Virginia, which conferred upon him the LL. B. degree at the completion of his course in 1908. From 1905 until 1908 he was assistant professor of the Virginia Military Institute. In 1908 he was admitted to the bar of Virginia and has since engaged in practice, making his home in Little Rock since 1910. Already he has made a lasting impression upon the bar of the state, by reason of his legal ability and his personal quality. He is constantly studying along broadening professional lines and wide experience in the courts is bringing to him comprehensive knowledge. The patient care with which he ascertains all the facts bearing upon every case with which he is connected makes his position largely an incontrovertible one and his opinions are seldom seriously questioned in court.

On the 29th of December, 1910, Mr. Newman wedded Mattie Garland Ayres, whose birth occurred in Lexington, Rockhrdige county, Virginia, December 31, 1884, her parents being Dr. Brown and Kate (Anderson) Ayres. Her father was professor of physics in Tulane University and was president of the University of Tennessee from 1904 until 1919. He remained in educational work at New Orleans, Louisiana, until 1904 and then removed to Knoxville, Tennessee, where he continued as president of the college to the time of his death, which occurred January 19, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Newman have become parents of an interesting little family of two sons and a daughter: John Ayres, born February 20, 1914; James Blakey, born January 10, 1917; and Katherine Anderson, born July 4, 1919. Mrs. Newman received liberal educational opportunities, attending private schools and later becoming a member of Newcomb College at New Orleans, Louisiana, from which she was graduated on the completion of her course with the Bachelor of Arts degree.

Mr. Newman is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon, a college fraternity, and he is likewise a blue lodge Mason, while his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. He belongs to the Episcopal church and he loyally holds to any cause which he espouses, giving his aid and influence to many measures which he deems of value in the promotion of public welfare and the upholding of civic ideals.

CHARLES R. HAM.

Charles R. Ham, local manager for Fairbanks Morse & Company of Stuttgart and thus prominently identified with business interests in this part of the state, was born at Verona, in southwestern Missouri, in 1888, his parents being W. J. and Flora (Talbert) Ham. He is descended in the paternal line from an old Kentucky family, his grandfather having been a native of the Blue Grass state, whence he removed to Henry county, Missouri, and while there enlisted for service as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war. The Talbert family was from Shelbyville, Indiana.

Charles R. Ham, having completed his education in the high school at Verona, Missouri, became associated with his father in the hardware and sheet metal manufacturing business. When twenty-one years of age he entered the employ of Fairbanks Morse & Company, with which firm he has since been identified, his long association therewith being incontrovertible proof of his capability, efficiency and fidelity. He was first employed in the practical construction department at St. Louis and came to Stuttgart as assistant manager, acting in that capacity until 1913, when he was advanced to the position of local manager of the Fairbanks Morse agency at this place. His territory covers Monroe, Prairie, Lonoke and Arkansas counties. The company makes a specialty of building irrigation engines for irrigating the rice fields and in this connection Mr. Ham has developed a business of extensive proportions and is one of the efficient and capable representatives of the company. In addition to his connection with Fairbanks Morse & Company, Mr. Ham is a director of the First National Bank.

In 1910 Mr. Ham was married to Miss Mabel Titterington, a daughter of Dr. J. Titterington of Marionville, Missouri, and their children are, Betty Jane and Charles. Fraternally Mr. Ham is a Knights Templar Mason and also a member of the Mystic Shrine. His religious faith is that of the Methodist church, in which he is serving as one of the stewards. He is keenly interested in all that makes for moral as well as material progress in the community in which he lives and he gives his influence at all times on the side of right, reform and improvement.

W. E. ROSSER.

W. E. Rosser, who was well known as a surveyor of Arkansas, was born in Campbell county, Virginia, October 7, 1842, and died on the 14th of May, 1914. His parents, John and Martha (Johnson) Rosser, were also natives of the Old Dominion and in early life became residents of Texas. The father was a well-to-do and prominent citizen, who exerted considerable influence over public thought and action in the locality in which he lived. He had one son, Thomas L. Rosser, who served with the rank of brigadier general under General Robert E. Lee in the Civil war. He was a graduate of the West Point Military Academy and was on active duty throughout the period of hostilities between the north and the south. John Rosser, the father, was married four times and became the father of seventeen children, born of three of the marriages. His last marriage was to the mother of W. E. Rosser. In February, 1868, he removed with his family from Texas to Arkansas and his remaining days were passed in this state.

W. E. Rosser spent his youthful days in his father's home and having arrived at years of maturity he was married in 1866 to Miss Virginia Hudson, who was born in Mississippi and is a daughter of John and Mary (Hartley) Hudson, the former a native of Mississippi, while the latter was born in Alabama. They removed to eastern Texas and it was there that Mrs. Rosser was reared. The father was a merchant, thus providing for the support of his family, which numbered five children, all of whom have departed this life with the exception of Mrs. Rosser. There was one, a brother, Thomas J. Hudson, who died while held as a prisoner of war by the northern army during the conflict between the north and the south. Mr. and Mrs. Rosser became parents of seven children: Mary, the wife of D. W. Moore, who is a minister of the Christian church now located at Liberty, Missouri; Judge Malcolm E., who was graduated in law at Charlottesville, Virginia, and is now a prominent attorney of Muskogee, Oklahoma; Obeira, the wife of J. A. Dearing, engaged in the hardware and furniture business at Shawnee, Oklahoma; John Thomas, who is engaged in the furniture brokerage business; Florence, who is a twin of John Thomas and is now the wife of Dr. W. D. Pigg, a physician of Shawnee, Oklahoma; Olga, the deceased wife of E. M. Hunter; and Annie, the wife of J. G. Cubage, of Little Rock.

W. E. Rosser was educated in Virginia, pursuing his advanced studies in Emory and Henry College. He entered the Civil war when young, joining the army at the outbreak of hostilities and served for four years. In 1868 he came to Fayetteville and taught school for a number of years. He was a teacher in the State Normal for ten years and an able educator who imparted readily and clearly to others the knowledge that he had acquired, making for himself a creditable name and place in educational circles. In the latter years of his life he followed surveying and won a very substantial measure of success in that business. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party and his religious faith was that of the Christian church. He commanded the confidence and good will of all and as the years passed he gained friends wherever he went. He had reached the age of about seventy years when death called him and he left behind him the record of an untarnished name.

ROBERT H. WILLIAMS.

Robert H. Williams, filling the office of county judge at Pine Bluff, is a native son of this city and his life record, therefore, stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for in the place of his birth Judge Williams has steadily won recognition of his powers and has been called upon for important judicial service. He was born in 1865, a son of Mack H. and Sarah J. (Young) Williams, who were natives of Nashville, Tennessee, and of Jefferson county, Arkansas, respectively. The former was a son of Willoughby Williams, who was one of the first sheriffs of Davidson county. The grandfather in the maternal line was Richard Young of Louisville, Kentucky, who removed from that state to Jefferson county, Arkansas, making the trip by boat in 1828. Two of his sons, James and John, served in the Civil war and the latter died while a member of the army. Two of the sons of Willoughby Williams, Andrew and Willoughby, Jr., were also Confederate soldiers during the period of hostilities between the north and the south. Mack H. Williams became a well-to-do planter of Jefferson county and was a highly esteemed citizen, he and his wife enjoying the warm regard of all with whom they came into contact. Their children were four in number: Alice, the wife of Virginus Murbaugh; Richard; Nannie, the wife of Lanier Tanner; and Robert H.

The last named is indebted to the public school system of Pine Bluff for the educational opportunities which he enjoyed and after leaving school he became a planter. Later he entered the contracting business, to which he devoted his attention until 1914, when he was elected sheriff of Jefferson county, making a creditable record by the prompt and fearless manner in which he discharged the duties of that position. In 1918 he was appointed tax collector and in 1919 he was elected to the office of county judge, since which time he has served on the bench, his decisions being strictly fair and impartial.

In 1889 Judge Williams was united in marriage to Miss Mollie L. Core, a daughter of James B. and Nannie (Mosby) Core. They have a family of three daughters and a son: Sallie W., the wife of O. M. Spellman; Henry, who served in the World war and is now filling the position of deputy sheriff; Jessie W., the wife of H. P. Savage, who is also a veteran of the world conflict, having been on active duty overseas; and Mary R., at home. Judge Williams and his wife are consistent members of the Presbyterian church and he is also a loyal follower of the Masonic fraternity, the Woodmen of the World, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is ever loyal to the teachings and high purposes of these different organizations, which are based upon a recognition of the brotherhood of man and the obligations thereby imposed. He has ever been a capable public official, loyal to the duties reposed in him, and his record in office has received the high endorsement of the general public.

S. T. TAPSCOTT, M. D.

Dr. S. T. Tapscott, physician and surgeon, is practicing in Searcy, his native city. He was born October 7, 1884, and is a son of S. T. Tapscott mentioned in connection with the sketch of Mrs. J. B. Gill, on another page of this work. Dr. Tapscott acquired a public school education in Searcy and then attended the Searcy College, from which he was graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1900. He afterward became a student in the University of Missouri at Columbia, where he pursued a preparatory course and later he matriculated in the Kansas City University, from which he was graduated with the M. D. degree in 1907. He was identified with the public health service in 1907-1908, being connected with a city hospital, and in 1909 he returned to Searcy, where he entered into partnership with his father for the general practice of medicine. Throughout the intervening period he has remained a close student of the profession and took post-graduate work in the Chicago Postgraduate Medical College in the winter of 1914-15. Broad reading at leisure hours has also kept him thoroughly abreast with the latest discoveries and researches of the profession and his pronounced ability is manifest in the excellent results which have attended him in his practice.

In March, 1918, Dr. Tapscott enlisted for service in the World war and was trained at Fort Oglethorpe, after which he went overseas with Base Hospital, No. 57, of the American Expeditionary Forces and was stationed at Jully and at Paris. He was commissioned a first lieutenant and served for about a year.

With his return to his native land Dr. Tapscott again opened an office in Searcy, where he has continued in active practice and his professional duties now make heavy demands upon his time and attention. He is a member of the White County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and has served as secretary of the county organization.

Dr. Tapscott was married to Miss Margaret Wilburn, a daughter of Major Wilburn. Politically Dr. Tapscott is a democrat and keeps thoroughly informed concerning the vital questions and issues of the day but has never been an office seeker. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church and fraternally he is connected with Searcy Lodge, No. 49, A. F. & A. M. He became a charter member of Herman Armstrong Post of the American Legion, in which he has served as vice commander. The interests and activities of his life are well balanced, with the major part of his attention being given to his professional duties which he discharges with a sense of conscientious obligation and according to the highest ethical standards of the profession.

ROBERT LEE SMITH.

Robert Lee Smith, superintendent of the public schools of Leachville since June, 1920, was born May, 28, 1893, in Cleburne county, Arkansas, near Heber Springs. His father, Newton Alexander Smith, now deceased, was a farmer of Cleburne county who was born and reared, however, in Mississippi, whence he came to Arkansas in young manhood, arriving in 1875, at the age of twenty years. He married Frances Mitchell, who was born and reared in Faulkner county, Arkansas, near Conway, her parents having been among the pioneer settlers of that county. The marriage was celebrated near Conway, August 10, 1876, and they became the parents of nine children, six sons and three daughters. All are living with the exception of one of the daughters.

Robert Lee Smith, who was the seventh in order of birth, began his education in the rural schools of Cleburne county, Arkansas, and afterward attended the Quitman high school and the Arkansas State Teachers' College. He also did summer work at the University of Arkansas and took up the teaching profession in 1911 at Oakgrove, this state. During the succeeding six years he taught in rural and high schools of Faulkner county and in 1917 became first assistant principal and athletic coach of the Quitman high school, serving for one year. On the 14th of July, 1918, he entered the service of the government in connection with the World war, occupying a clerkship in the camp personnel office of the Motor Transport Division at Camp Holabird, Baltimore, Maryland. He joined the army at New Orleans and went from there to Atlanta, Georgia, and afterward to Maryland, remaining in the service until March 8, 1919.

Mr. Smith then returned to Arkansas and in June, 1919, was elected superintendent of the high school at Palestine, St. Francis county, Arkansas, where he remained for a year. He came to Leachville in 1920 as superintendent of schools and is still serving in this position, being at the head of the Agricultural high school, which is a consolidated rural high school, having a modern building and splendid equipment. The attendance at the school under his direction has increased twenty-five per cent. He has introduced many improvements and progressive methods and is making the school thoroughly modern in every particular. He belongs to the Arkansas State Teachers Association and the Mississippi County Teachers Association, and served as president in 1916 of the Faulkner County Contest Association, which was organized in Faulkner county, being the youngest incumbent in that position. Mr. Smith is now engaged in securing a higher education at Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana.

On the 9th of August, 1919, Mr. Smith was united in marriage at Quitman, Arkansas, to Miss Elva DeJarnatt of that place. Their religious faith is indicated by their membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. They are prominent in the social circles of the city in which they live, the hospitality of the best homes being freely and cordially extended to them. In his professional career Professor Smith has made steady progress, actuated by a laudable ambition and high ideals, and the various schools under his control have made substantial advancement.

J. M. STANFORD, M. D.

Although one of the more recent additions to the medical fraternity of Russellville, Dr. J. M. Stanford has already won a well established position in professional circles and is rapidly building up a large practice. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred near Scottsville on the 18th of March, 1879, and his parents were John W. and Anna (Snyder) Stanford, the former born in Mississippi and the latter in Missouri. They were married in Scottsville, Arkansas, and the father has devoted his life to the occupation of farming. He served for two years as a soldier in the Civil war and while participating in the raid in Missouri he became ill and was invalidated home, but did not recover sufficiently to rejoin his command before the termination of the war. He is now residing with the subject of this review and has reached the age of seventy-seven years. He is a Baptist in religious faith and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. His father, Miles Stanford, was also a native of Mississippi and previous to the outbreak of the Civil war he came to Arkansas, where he followed the occupation of farming. The maternal grandfather, Peter Snyder, was born in Germany, but acquired his education in France and on emigrating to the United States he first settled in Missouri, removing to Arkansas prior to 1861. He was a well-known physician and his demise occurred in this state when he had reached the advanced age of eighty-five years. His daughter, Mrs. Stanford, died in 1906. She had become the mother of six children, three of whom survive, namely: J. M.; Clara, the wife of Paul Llewellyn, who is one of the oldest teachers in Pope county and is now following his profession at Newton Springs; and Thomas, who is engaged in farming and resides at Dover, Arkansas.

In the public schools of Pope county, J. M. Stanford acquired his early education and his professional training was obtained at the Memphis Hospital Medical College, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1908. He entered upon the work of his profession at Hector, Arkansas, where he remained for sixteen years, during which period he developed a large practice, being obliged to cover an extensive area in ministering to his patients. While residing there he also became the owner of a drug store and acquired farming property, which he retains, and he likewise has a house and lot in that town. In April, 1918, he opened an office in Russellville, where he now has a large practice, conducting his professional interests under the firm style of Campbell, Hays & Stanford. He engages in the general practice of medicine, but devotes considerable attention to surgical work, in which he has been very successful. In 1918 he took a postgraduate course at the Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota, and is an earnest student of his profession, doing everything in his power to broaden his knowledge and promote his skill.

On the 21st of May, 1902, Dr. Stanford was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Webb, a native of Hector, Arkansas, and a daughter of James Webb, a well-known farmer residing in that place. Four children have been born of this union: Ruth, who died at the age of twelve years; Cecile, who is a student at the State Agricultural College; Mildred, who is attending the grammar schools; and John, Jr., who is but twenty-one months old.

Dr. Stanford is a democrat in his political views and fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masons, and while residing at Hector he was master of his lodge. He keeps in touch with the advancement that is continually being made along the lines of his profession through his membership in the Pope County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association, and of the first named organization he served as president in 1920. He has never been content with mediocrity, but is ever striving toward the attainment of high ideals, and his pronounced ability and upright policy have won for him the respect and confidence of his fellow-practitioners and also of the general public.

LOUIS COHEN.

Louis Cohen, president of the Fort Smith Office Supply House, a man whose diligence and enterprise in business have constituted the basic elements of his steady progress toward the goal of prosperity, was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1889, a son of H. L. and Regina (Strauss) Cohen. The father is now engaged in the real estate business at Drumright, Oklahoma, having removed to the southwest by reason of his belief in the business possibilities and opportunities of this great and growing section of the country.

Louis Cohen, spending his youthful days in the home of his parents, who removed from New York to Denver, Colorado, there pursued his education to the age of sixteen years, when in 1905 he came to Fort Smith and here started out in the business world by securing employment on a local newspaper. He gradually worked his way upward in newspaper circles and eventually became circulation manager of the Southwest American, a position which he occupied for five and a half years. Later he was made circulation manager of the Times Record at Fort Smith and there continued for six years. Desirous of engaging in the business on his own account, he ultimately organized the Fort Smith Office Supply House in 1919, and this was later incorporated, with Mr. Cohen as the president, C. S. Weaver as vice president and E. N. Cohen as secretary. They conduct a business in office furniture and supplies and their trade covers the territory of eastern Oklahoma and western Arkansas. The business is steadily growing along most satisfactory lines and already the patronage of the house has reached most substantial proportions.

Mr. Cohen was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Ney, a daughter of Rudolph Ney, and they now have one child, Marie Rosalie, who is three years of age.

Mr. Cohen is prominently known as a valued and representative member of various civic clubs. He is the secretary of the Lions Club, formed to promote business interests and to uphold the highest standards of Americanization. He served as president of the Ad Club, of which he was previously secretary, and he is the secretary of the Progress Club. He is likewise secretary of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and secretary of the Jewish Charity Fund. He also is a trustee of the United Hebrew congregation. He belongs to the Business Men's Club and to the Retail Merchants Association. He closely studies business conditions and his opinions thereon indicate his wide investigation and thorough understanding.

H. L. SWAN, D. D. S.

Dentistry may be said to be almost unique among other occupations, as it is at once a profession, a trade and a business. Such being the case, it follows that in order to attain the highest success in it one must be thoroughly conversant with the theory of the sciences, must be expert with the many tools and appliances incidental to the practice of modern dentistry and must possess business qualifications adequate to dealing with the financial side of the profession. In all of these particulars Dr. H. L. Swan is well qualified and therefore has attained prestige among the able representatives of dentistry in Hot Springs. His birth occurred in Kalamazoo, Michigan, on the 14th of January, 1877, his parents being William L. and Sarah J. (Rouse) Swan, the former a native of New York, while the latter was born in Canada. The father, who was a minister of the Universalist church, came to Arkansas after putting aside the active work of his holy calling and spent his last days in retirement at Hot Springs, where he died January 19, 1921. The mother, who survives, now makes her home with her son, Dr. Swan.

In the acquirement of his education H. L. Swan attended the public schools of Michigan and Iowa, while his professional training was received in the Kansas City Dental College, which institution conferred upon him the degree of D. D. S. Following his graduation he at once located in Hot Springs and has here remained throughout the intervening years, building up an extensive and profitable practice which has been accorded him in recognition of his marked skill and ability as a representative of the dental profession. He belongs to both the Arkansas State Dental Association and the Southwestern Dental Association.

On the 28th of May, 1901, Dr. Swan was united in marriage to Miss Loretta Power of Jackson, Michigan, and they have become parents of a daughter, Mabel L. The Doctor is a member of the Business Men's League and is highly esteemed as a citizen, while his reputation as a practitioner of dentistry is a most enviable one.

WILLIAM RICHARD HUNT, M. D.

Dr. William Richard Hunt, well versed in the principles and practices of medicine and surgery and thoroughly qualified for the onerous and responsible duties of his profession, is now practicing successfully in Clarksville. He is a native of Johnson county, born November 16, 1863, and is a son of John D. and Irene (Ogdon) Hunt. The father was born in Georgia and died in 1913, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife, a native of Arkansas, is living at the age of eighty years. Long prior to the Civil war John D. Hunt became a resident of Arkansas and at the time of the hostility between the north and the south served in Cabel's brigade. He was an attorney by profession and practiced law for about forty years at Coal Hill in Johnson county, winning prominence in his profession. He also devoted a part of his time to merchandising. He had a large family of ten children, five of whom are living.

Dr. Hunt, whose name introduces this review, was educated in the schools of Johnson county and in the University of Arkansas, in which he pursued his medical course until graduated at Little Rock with the class of 1884. He then located for practice at Coal Hill, where he remained until 1906, when he removed to Clarksville. He probably performed the first appendicitis operation, outside of the cities, in the state in 1885, and he is the pioneer surgeon of Johnson county. He has the largest consultation practice of any physician in Arkansas and has always enjoyed a liberal patronage by reason of his marked ability to cope with the intricate and involved problems which have to do with the laws of health. He was one of the organizers of the Clarksville Medical Society, also of the Johnson County Medical Society and throughout his professional career he has kept in close touch with the trend of modern professional thought and practice. His ideals are high and his success has been the direct outcome of his capability.

Dr. Hunt was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Houston, who was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, in 1862, a daughter of Colonel John S. Houston, a prominent citizen of this state, who was born in Ohio and came to Arkansas in his boyhood days. He had previously gone to California in the days of the early gold excitement there and had become a prominent figure in connection with public affairs on the coast. He was the first comptroller of the state of California and wrote the first constitution of that commonwealth. He was quite successful during his sojourn on the Pacific coast and returned to Arkansas with substantial rewards of his labor in the far west. He became one of the early postmasters of Clarksville, filling the position for a number of years. He had been liberally educated and was a high type of the southern gentleman. One of his daughters, Mrs. Betty Littlepage, is a poetess of note and lives in Washington, D. C. She married into a prominent family, her husband being John C. Littlepage, who came to Arkansas after the Civil war, bearing with him a personal recommendation from Robert E. Lee. Mr. Littlepage became a teacher in the Clarksville Academy, with which he was thus connected for a number of years, and afterward served as superintendent of schools at Batesville, Hot Springs and Little Rock. In many ways he left the impress of his individuality and marked ability upon the educational development and progress of the state.

Dr. and Mrs. Hunt have a family of three children: Earl H., who was born at Coal Hill, February 16, 1886, there attending the public schools and afterward entered Hendrix College. He next became a medical student in the Washington University of St. Louis and was afterward graduated from the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans in 1909. He then began practice in association with his father, and their business connection has since been maintained. Like his father, he makes a specialty of surgery and he has taken postgraduate work in St. Louis, in the Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota, and in Tulane University. He was married in 1912 to Miss Totton Hutchison, who was born at Van Buren, Arkansas, a daughter of Leonard Hutchison, a locomotive engineer. They have two children, Lillian and Earl H., Jr. Dr. Earl H. Hunt and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. In the Knights of Pythias organization he has been chancellor commander. He also belongs to the Chi Zeta Chi, a medical fraternity, and to the Pi Kappa Alpha, a literary fraternity. He was the first county health officer of Johnson county and he devotes practically his entire time and attention to his professional duties. He and his father together own the Johnson County Telephone Company. The second of the family is Lillian, the wife of E. A. King, who is at the head of the Clarksville Motor Company, and they have a little daughter, Mira. The third of the family is Dr. W. R. Hunt, Jr., a dentist, who was graduated from the Clarksville high school and from the Cumberland College in Clarksville, after which he studied dentistry in the University of Tennessee at Memphis. He is now following his profession in his native city.

Dr. W. R. Hunt of this review and his estimable wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Woodmen. In politics he is a democrat, but has never been an aspirant for public office. His entire time and attention have been given to his professional interests and duties, and he is today one of the best known representatives of the profession in southern Arkansas. He was early thrown upon his own resources, but, actuated by a laudable ambition, has steadily worked his way upward and has long occupied a commanding place in the ranks of the medical fraternity in his part of the state. Both he and his son, Earl, have long been active in both the County and State Medical Societies, and the family name has become a synonym for high standards and splendid service in connection with medical and surgical practice.

REV. JOHN E. BROWN.

The life of Rev. John E. Brown, evangelist, author and founder, and president of the John E. Brown College, has been one of far-reaching influence and usefulness, devoted unselfishly to the service of others and exemplifying the true spirit of Christianity. He was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, in 1879, a son of John F. and Julia A. (Brammer) Brown, who were natives of Indiana. They were Quakers in religious belief and in 1853 removed to Iowa, where the father followed the occupation of farming. Mr. and Mrs. Brown became the parents of nine children, of whom seven survive, the subject of this review being the fifth in order of birth.

During his boyhood Dr. Brown worked in the limekilns of Arkansas, coming to this state when fourteen years old, and his youth was a period of hard and unremitting toil, for his father was poor and the family was a large one. The son at first received for his services seventy-five cents a day and as he became more proficient this amount was increased to a dollar. Life seemed to hold out but little to him as he toiled in the blazing sun with aching muscles, but one night, impelled by curiosity, he attended a meeting of the Salvation Army and this marked a turning point in his career. Animated by hope and courage, he joined the little band of religious workers on their journey to Siloam Springs, Arkansas, for the purpose of opening a mission, being at the time seventeen years of age. During the absence of the ensign Dr. Brown was placed in charge of the mission, which he conducted so successfully that he was invited to deliver his message in a neighboring town, and this constituted the beginning of his work as an evangelist. He did not follow closely the tenets of the Salvation Army but strove to deliver a message that would find a lodging place in each heart, regardless of creed or doctrine, and so eloquently has he delivered it that with the passing years he has succeeded in influencing many to choose the better path in life. The secret of his power lies in his utter honesty and sincerity, his abounding sympathy and understanding, his magnetism and his all-embracing democracy. The boy from the limekilns has grown, and grown greatly.

Feeling that Siloam Springs had given him his start in life, Dr. Brown chose this pretty little Arkansas city as his home, for there is no fairer region anywhere among the Ozarks. He purchased a farm a mile west of the town and on the brow of the plateau he built a big, wide-porched house commanding a fine view of the surrounding country. While carrying on his work as an evangelist he never lost sight of the dream of his life and at length his long cherished ambition came to fruition in the founding of the John E. Brown College, whose purpose is to help ambitious boys and girls to help themselves. To the home farm were added two other farms, with their buildings, approximating altogether three hundred acres of land, most of it highly cultivated. All this became the property of the school, together with a herd of about forty Jersey cattle, horses and mules for working the land, hogs, sheep and poultry, all necessary farming implements and a fully equipped printing plant, all being free of debt. Dr. Brown practically impoverished himself and family by the gift, never doubting that whatever more might be needed would be provided, and he has not been disappointed, for contributions to this worthy cause have poured in from all parts of the country. The school buildings are modern and substantial and the goal of its founder is to make this the greatest industrial college in North America—a prospect that seems not very remote. The curriculum is not a series of dreary tasks, to be grumbled over and dodged as far as is possible, but the open door of opportunity. No student is admitted who is able to pay his way and the pupil is carefully studied in order to ascertain for what line of work he or she is best fitted, so that each may be thoroughly equipped for his chosen vocation. The rudiments of a sound general education are given to all, and then as the student develops his specialty he is equipped as thoroughly as possible along that line, the sum of the whole endeavor being to make him the possessor of an intelligent mind, trained hands and Christian character. Cleanliness of mind and body are compulsory and the Bible is taught as one of the studies.

Dr. Brown is the president of the International Federation of Christian Workers, having been elected eight times to fill that office without a dissenting vote. This is the largest organization of the kind in the world and was founded in 1913. He is also president of the State Bible Class and in addition to serving as president of the John E. Brown School continues his work as an evangelist. He likewise edits two papers and has become well known as a writer on religious subjects, being the author of the following books: Repentance; Sowing; Reaping; Thinking White; In the Cult Kingdom; Hath God Said; Foundation of God; Spirit-Filled Life; Fruit of the Spirit.

In 1901 Dr. Brown was united in marriage to Miss Juanita Arrington at Sallisaw, Oklahoma. Her parents are residents of Ozark, Arkansas, her mother being a member of the Jeffries family of this state. To this union have been born five daughters and one son: Jean Elizabeth, a teacher of music in the John E. Brown College; Julia Helen and Jessie Virginia, who are also identified with the college work; Mary Jane and Frances Juanita, who are attending school; and John E., Jr. A man of high ideals, he has utilized practical methods in their attainment, and his life has been one of great benefit and value to his fellowmen.

E. L. FORSYTH.

Although death claimed E. L. Forsyth at the early age of twenty-seven years, he was numbered among the successful business men of Rogers, where he took up his residence in 1892. He was a native of California, his birth having occurred at Santa Rosa on the 13th of May, 1872. His father, Robert A. Forsyth, was born in Tennessee and when but an infant was brought to Arkansas by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Barnett Forsyth, whose family numbered fourteen children, of whom twelve attained mature years. The majority of the children went to California in 1849, attracted by the discovery of gold in that state, where they continued to make their homes. Barnett Forsyth was also a native of Tennessee and came to Arkansas during the pioneer period of its development. He settled in Pea Ridge, becoming one of the first merchants of the town, and his demise occurred in Arkansas. His son, Robert A. Forsyth, became a successful rancher, and he was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. To Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth were born four children, of whom two survive: W. B., a resident of Santa Rosa, California, where he is operating a well-improved ranch; and Mrs. Adelbert Le Baron, also making her home in that town.

In the schools of California E. L. Forsyth pursued his education, which he completed by a course in a business college. On starting out in life independently he engaged in ranching, which he continued to follow in the Golden state until 1892, when he came to Arkansas, settling in Rogers. In the following year he married Miss Myrtle Fowler, a native of Benton county, Arkansas, and a daughter of W. H. and Frances (Dalton) Fowler. Her father was born in Virginia, while her mother was a native of Georgia and at an early period in their lives they came to Benton county, Arkansas, where they were later married. Mr. Fowler became connected with business interests of Bentonville as a carpenter-contractor and subsequently removed to Rogers, being largely instrumental in the development of the town. He opened a furniture store, which he successfully conducted to the time of his death. Mr. Forsyth and his bride spent their honeymoon in California, returning to Rogers at the end of a year. He became associated with the management of the furniture business established by his father-in-law and following the demise of the latter continued active in its control until a short time before his death, when he disposed of his interest in that enterprise and purchased a well-improved farm in this locality. He possessed excellent business ability, and his close application, energy and determination resulted in the attainment of a comfortable competence, while the methods which he employed were such as would at all times bear the closest investigation and scrutiny.

Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth became the parents of two daughters: Irene, who acquired her education in the grammar and high schools of Rogers and a business college of California and is now employed as a stenographer in a wholesale grocery house of Rogers; and Sarah, the wife of B. D. Miller of Springfield, Missouri, who is in the service of the Frisco Railroad Company.

The family are members of the Christian church. Mr. Forsyth gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. He died on the 26th of September, 1899, and in his passing the community lost a valued, and highly respected citizen. He was a worthy representative of a family whose members have ever been actuated by high and honorable principles in all the relations of life, and his record constituted a fine example of manliness, industry and uprightness. Mrs. Forsyth resides in a comfortable home in Rogers and is a prominent figure in club circles here, being at the head of the League of Women Voters and also holding membership with the Woman's City Club. She is interested in all those things which are of cultural value and which tend to uplift the individual, and her many admirable traits of character have won for her the esteem and regard of an extensive circle of friends.

J. J. DOYNE.

J. J. Doyme, ex-state superintendent of public instruction and former president of the State Normal, is now superintendent of the public schools of Lonoke. He has for many years been closely and prominently associated with educational interests in Arkansas and has contributed in notable measure to the progress of the schools in this state. Born in Farmville, Prince Edward county, Virginia, in 1858, he is a son of John and Agnes (Stratton) Doyme. His father was a native of Petersburg, Virginia, and a son of Charles Doyme, who came from Dublin, Ireland, following the completion of his education in Trinity College at Dublin. He settled in Petersburg, Virginia, where the family home was maintained for some years. His son, John Doyme, was a veteran of the Confederate army, serving throughout the Civil war as a member of Pickett's famous brigade. Later he became a merchant at Farmville, Virginia, and the building which he occupied is now utilized as a store by his nephew, so that the Doyme family has carried on business in the same building for eighty years. To John and Agnes Doyme there were born four children: William T., Mary E., Susan and J. J. Doyme.

The last named was accorded liberal educational opportunities, pursuing his collegiate work in the University of Virginia. Subsequently he taught in Lonoke, Arkansas, coming to this city forty-three years ago, and throughout the intervening period he has been identified with the public school system of the state. For eight years he remained a teacher in the schools of Lonoke and then went to Fort Smith, where he remained for two years, after which he returned to Lonoke and was again active in school work in this city for nine years. In 1898 recognition of his ability, forcefulness and resourcefulness in the educational field came to him in his election to the office of state superintendent of public instruction, which position he filled most acceptably for four years. He was then out of office for two terms, but in 1906 was reelected to the position, which he filled for a time and then resigned to accept the presidency of the State Normal School. He became the first president of that institution and served altogether for nine years, establishing its policy and largely formulating its course of instruction and field of work. Upon his resignation there, in 1917, he returned to Lonoke, where he is again superintendent of schools. This city is to be congratulated upon having at the head of its educational system a man of such wide experience and marked capability as Professor Doyme, and Lonoke has, indeed, reason to be proud of her schools. He also served for fourteen years as county examiner of Lonoke county and in every possible way has maintained the high standards under which the district schools have been conducted. For thirty-five years he has been a member of the National Education Association and he is a life member of the Arkansas Educational Association.

Professor Doyme was united in marriage to Miss Ida Beard of Lonoke, a daughter of Judge T. C. Beard, and their children are: Charles B. and William T., who have departed this life; and Charles Russell, a physician and surgeon, who is now serving as staff physician in the State Hospital for Nervous Diseases at Madison, Indiana. He was graduated from the Arkansas Medical College and has devoted his entire life to professional activity. He married Mazie Lawson.

Professor Doyme is a Baptist in his religious faith and fraternally he is connected with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. His prominence in the educational field extends far beyond the boundaries of this state. For five years he was editor of the Arkansas Teacher, at that time a state publication.

ARTHUR H. MORROW.

A definite purpose and a spirit of enterprise and determination have carried Arthur H. Morrow steadily forward to the point of success in the conduct of one of the leading commercial enterprises of Fort Smith. He is proprietor of a large book and stationery store, and the business methods which he has employed have ever been such as to commend him to the patronage and to the confidence of the public.

Mr. Morrow was born in Dardanelle, Arkansas, in 1876, but was reared at Fort Smith, where he has since made his home. After his textbooks were put aside he entered upon an apprenticeship in a business concern similar to the one of which he is now the owner. He there thoroughly acquainted himself with every phase of the trade and eventually he determined to embark in business on his own account. When his industry and economy had brought to him sufficient capital to enable him to take this step, he opened a small store on Garrison avenue on the 1st of January, 1908. His stock was quite limited at that time, but he put forth every effort to please his patrons, recognizing that satisfied customers are the best advertisement. Gradually, therefore, his trade developed and he increased his stock to meet the demand. His business has thus been enlarged from time to time until he now has the most extensive enterprise of this character in Fort Smith. In addition to carrying an attractive stock of books he handles a general line of stationery and office supplies, paints and wall paper. His sound judgment and even-paced energy have carried him forward to the goal of success. He has never hesitated to take a forward step when the way was open, and though content with what he has attained as he has gone along, he has always been ready to make an advance. Fortunate in possessing ability and character that inspire confidence in others, the simple weight of his character and ability has carried him into important commercial relations.

Mr. Morrow was married in 1902 to Miss E. Oakley Payne of Fort Smith, and they are now parents of a daughter and a son: Martha J., seventeen years of age; and Arthur P., a youth of fifteen.

Fraternally Mr. Morrow is connected with the Knights of Pythias and with the Woodmen of the World. He also belongs to the Business Men's Club, the Credit Men's Association and the Noon Civics Club and is deeply interested in all those projects and plans which have to do with the city's development, progress and improvement. His cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any interest for the public good or which relates to the welfare of community, commonwealth and country.

GLEN H. WIMMER.

In professional circles in Des Arc, Glen H. Wimmer, attorney at law, is a well known figure. He is yet a young man, but has already achieved a creditable position at the bar and is today accorded a very liberal clientele. Missouri numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred at Lamar in 1890, his parents being I. N. and Jennie (Torson) Wimmer, who on leaving Missouri came to Arkansas and established their home at Des Arc, where the father is engaged in the real estate business.

Glen H. Wimmer was but a little child at the time of the removal of the family to this place, so that his early education was acquired in the public schools of this city. A review of the broad field of business determined him to enter upon a professional career and he became a law student in the University of Arkansas, from which he won his law degree as a member of the class of 1913. While in the capital city he served as assistant librarian for the supreme court library under J. T. Cassell and aided in cataloging the library upon the removal to the new state house. He entered upon the active practice of law in Des Arc and was making satisfactory advance in his profession when America entered the World war. On the 30th of July, 1917, he enlisted in defense of world-wide democracy, joining the army at Camp Brough, while later he was sent to Fort Logan H. Roots and afterward to Camp Beauregard. He was assigned to a special detail to study motors, tractors, trucks and motorcycles at the Raritan, New Jersey, arsenal, and next saw active duty at Camp Mills, Long Island, from which point he embarked for France. It was a singular coincidence that he rode in a train from Camp Mills to New York city that was made up of thirteen coaches and he sailed from

New York on the 13th day of the month, the vessel being thirteen days in making the voyage, after which he disembarked at Brest, France, on the 13th of the month. He was quartered at LaGuerche and at Tours and later at Phelan. He was fleet sergeant of the motor battalion at Saint Nazaire and there came to him many of the experiences incident to warfare in this twentieth century.

With his return home Mr. Wimmer resumed the practice of law and has since maintained his office in Des Arc, where his clientage is steadily increasing in volume and importance.

Mr. Wimmer was united in marriage to Miss Geraldine Woods, a daughter of Thomas and Myrtle (Damon) Woods. They have become parents of one child, June. In the social circles of the city they occupy an enviable position, having many warm friends here. Mr. Wimmer is a progressive young man, keeping in touch with the trend of modern thought and progress, while in his profession his thorough study and careful preparation of cases is gaining for him the well-deserved reputation of being a most able advocate and wise counselor.

SHEPARD AUGUSTUS LANE.

Shepard Augustus Lane, general manager for Arkansas of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, with headquarters at Little Rock, where he makes his home, was born in La Grange, Georgia, January 23, 1880, and is a son of R. R. and Mary (Bradfield) Lane. The father was born in La Grange in 1849 and the mother's birth there occurred in 1859. They were married in their native city in 1878 and there still reside. The father was for many years actively identified with the management of a plantation, but is now living retired. His political support has always been given to the democratic party. To him and his wife have been born five sons and three daughters, of whom one son died in infancy, while the other members of the family are living.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, Shepard A. Lane pursued his education in the La Grange public schools until graduated from the high school with the class of 1896. He afterward attended the Georgia School of Technology and on leaving that school secured a position with the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company at Birmingham, where he remained for three months. He was then sent to Norfolk, Virginia, on a job and continued in field work in various places until 1901, when he was made manager of the Model Exchange for the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, having charge of the exchange with one thousand phones, his duty being also to receive visitors and represent the company generally. Mr. Lane was selected from among many other employees, a compliment not only to his business ability in telephone service, but also as to his general adaptability in meeting people. After the exposition was over Mr. Lane was made manager of two exchanges in Buffalo, New York, and there continued until January 1, 1905, when he resigned with the Bell Telephone Company and accepted a position as assistant general superintendent for the Federal Telephone Company, then the largest independent company in existence. In this connection Mr. Lane was located in Buffalo for three years and was then transferred to Geneva, New York, as district manager for central New York, which position he held until 1911. His next transfer took him to Niagara Falls with the same company. A year later he resigned and returned to the Bell Telephone Company as special representative of the general manager at St. Louis. In the spring of 1913 he was made district manager for northern Missouri, with headquarters at Hannibal, where he continued until February 12, 1914, when he was transferred to Little Rock as division commercial superintendent for Arkansas and on the 1st of July, 1920, he was made divisional general manager for Arkansas of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company and now fills that position. One who has known him long and well wrote of him as follows:

"Mr. Lane developed a liking for the telephone game early and has specialized in it since, with a record of accomplishments which few people can ever hope to equal or surpass. His appealing personality and his sense of fair dealing with the public in general, particularly with those who work for him and with those whose duty it is to regulate public utilities, has won for him an enviable reputation. Mr. Lane believes, as Abraham Lincoln once said, that 'with public sentiment nothing can fail, without it nothing can succeed.' In these few words may be summed up the secret of his success in the telephone business. He believes in fair dealing with the public; that they are entitled to good service at a fair and reasonable rate; and that the public should, in return, grant the utility a fair rate of return on its investment.

"Commonly known to a state-wide circle of friends as 'Gus,' Mr. Lane has a method of approaching and convincing people that is rarely seen in men of his position. He is inclined to be rather exacting in handling the affairs of his company; although he does not believe in exacting unnecessary or useless details, desiring results more than the method in which they are obtained, and expects those men under him, in supervisory capacity, to accomplish and handle their work without burdensome supervision. His sense of fair dealing makes him an easy man to work for; having come up from the ranks, makes it easy for him to appreciate an employee's position. He rarely makes the mistake of misjudging the ultimate results of a situation, or the character or ability of one of his men."

On the 18th of June, 1904, in Buffalo, New York, Mr. Lane was married to Susanne DeLafayette, who was born at Balston Spa, New York, January 17, 1880, and is a graduate of the State Normal School at Buffalo, New York. They have become parents of a son, Robert Augustus, born May 12, 1918. Mr. Lane is a democrat in his political views, an Elk in his fraternal relations and a Presbyterian in his religious faith. He is ready and willing at all times to do anything that will aid in the development of the great state of Arkansas and is very optimistic about the future of the state.

CALVIN H. BURKS.

On the roster of county officials in Jefferson county appears the name of Calvin H. Burks of Pine Bluff, who is filling the position of county treasurer and making an excellent official, as attested by the consensus of opinion on the part of his fellow citizens. A native of this state, he was born in Monticello, Drew county, in 1869, and is a son of Captain W. P. and Maggie (Hemingway) Burks, who were natives of Tennessee and Mississippi, respectively. The Burks family was founded in Arkansas at an early day, when settlement was made in Drew county, and the Hemingways also took up their abode in Drew county on coming to this state. Captain W. P. Burks served with the Confederate army during the Civil war. He had been a man in affluent circumstances prior to the period of hostilities and after the war he largely recuperated his fortunes through the conduct of a general merchandise business at Monticello. He was also a planter and his carefully directed interests again brought to him a gratifying measure of success. In the family of Captain and Mrs. Burks were six children: Belle Pearl, the wife of T. W. Loper; Calvin H.; Agrippina, the deceased wife of M. C. Cleveland; J. Pinckney, who is editor of the Helena World; Anna Marie, principal of the Pine Bluff schools; and Lona May, the wife of E. C. Chestnut. Two of the sons of J. Pinckney Burks—Edwin and Pinckney—were soldiers of the World war.

Calvin H. Burks pursued his education in the schools of Monticello and in early life became a salesman, thus making his initial step in the business world. In 1892 he removed to Pine Bluff and became identified with the wholesale grocery house of the John H. Talbot Company as a salesman. Later he filled a position with a railroad company as an accountant and in 1921 he was elected to the office of county treasurer, which position he is now filling. In the discharge of his duties he is prompt, systematic, thorough and painstaking and is making an excellent official in the office.

Mr. Burks was united in marriage in 1895 to Miss Dora G. Toney, a daughter of W. L. and Mary (Kimbrongh) Toney. Mr. and Mrs. Burks have become parents of four children: Calvin H., Pearl, Elizabeth and William. Calvin is a veteran of the World war, while the daughter, Pearl, is a teacher of elocution in the high school at Pine Bluff and has also appeared on the Chautauqua platform. Mr. Burks and his family are members of the Methodist church, in which he has served as a steward for fifteen years. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He is keenly interested in all those forces which make for the uplift and betterment of mankind and his influence has ever been on the side of law and order, of right and progress.

ELBERT A. HENRY.

Elbert A. Henry is the junior partner in the law firm of Rogers, Barber & Henry, constituting a legal connection of force and power at the Little Rock bar. He has now practiced for seven years, ability bringing him steadily to the front. The only interruption to his professional activity came through his service as a soldier of the World war. Mr. Henry was born in Jacksonville, Pulaski county, Arkansas, October 3, 1889, and is one of a family of five sons and two daughters, whose parents were Marion Jackson and Marian Frances (Nichols) Henry. The father was born in Pontotoc county, Mississippi, February 11, 1847, and in his boyhood days removed to Arkansas, settling in Pulaski county, where he continued to make his home to the time of his death, residing for many years in Jacksonville, where he engaged in merchandising. In politics he was a democrat. His military record covered service as a private during the last six months of the Civil war. He died June 1, 1918, and is still survived by his wife. She was born near Charleston, South Carolina, September 12, 1852, a daughter of Edmund Nichols, who was born in South Carolina and became a Confederate soldier of the Civil war, being killed in battle in Arkansas in 1863. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Jackson Henry there were born five sons and two daughters, and four of the sons of the family are living.

Elbert A. Henry, the youngest member of the household, obtained his early education in the public schools and afterward became a pupil in the preparatory department of the University of Arkansas. His college training was there received and in 1914 he was graduated from the University of Arkansas with the Bachelor of Arts degree. The succeeding year was devoted to the teaching of economics in Barton Academy, Mobile, Alabama. Later he began the study of law and was graduated from the Arkansas Law School with the LL. B. degree in 1916. Through the intervening period to the present time, covering six years, he has engaged in law practice and is now identified with one of the strongest and most prominent law firms of the city, that of Rogers, Barber & Henry.

On the 22d of October, 1920, Mr. Henry was married to Miss Mary Garrett Cargile, who was born on the 1st of January, 1899, in Cardile, Union county, Arkansas, a daughter of John Stark Cargile, a native of Clark county, Arkansas, and now residing in Philadelphia, Clark county. Mrs. Henry was accorded liberal educational opportunities and is a graduate of Ouachita College, in which she completed her course in 1919.

After America's advent into the World war, Mr. Henry enlisted for service and became a member of the One Hundred and Sixty-second Depot Brigade at Camp Pike, where he served with the rank of first lieutenant, receiving his honorable discharge on the 11th of December, 1918, one month after the signing of the armistice. His political endorsement has always been given to the democratic party and fraternally he is a prominent Mason, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, while with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine he has crossed the sands of the desert. He likewise belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and his religious faith guides him in all of his relations, he being a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

TALBOT FEILD.

Talbot Feild, president and general manager of the Hope Lumber Company, manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of lumber, and also president of the Hope Chamber of Commerce, is a dominant figure in the business circles of this city. A man of steady and persistent purpose, his plans have always been carefully formulated and promptly executed and the results which he has achieved have been most satisfactory. Little Rock numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred on the 17th of February, 1880, his parents being Talbot and Annie Rose (Terry) Feild, who were also natives of Arkansas. The father died at the early age of twenty-eight years and the mother died when her son was but four years of age, after which he was reared by his grandfather, Silas Flournoy Feild, a Little Rock merchant, who was senior partner in the firm of Feild & Dolley, pioneer merchants of the capital city. In later years, however, the grandfather engaged in farming. Talbot Feild has a twin brother, William Terry Feild, who is a mechanical engineer, with office in the Gazette building in Little Rock.

Talbot Feild was educated in the Little Rock grammar schools and in Keys Commercial College. In young manhood he found employment with the J. H. Martin Arms Company of Little Rock, with which he was associated for a period of fifteen years, rising from the position of salesman to the vice presidency of the firm. His steady advancement came as a recognition of his ability and expanding powers. He readily adapted himself to any task which confronted him and step by step he progressed until he became one of the officials of the company. On the 1st of January, 1910, however, he removed to Hope, Arkansas, to become secretary of the Hope Lumber Company, in which he purchased stock. In 1911 he was elected to the presidency and was made general manager at the same time. This company is conducting an extensive business in the manufacture of lumber, which is sold to both the wholesale and retail trade, and the business is now one of substantial proportions. Mr. Feild likewise became identified with the Hope Ice & Coal Company on his removal to this city, purchasing stock at that time, while in 1912 he became president of the company and has remained as chief executive officer to this time.

On the 14th of October, 1908, Mr. Feild was married to Miss Wanda West, a daughter of Captain J. T. West, who was the organizer of the Hope Lumber Company. He died in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Feild are parents of a son and daughter: Talbot and Hattie Anne. Mr. Feild is well known in Masonic circles, having membership in Whitfield Lodge, No. 239, A. F. & A. M.; Washington Chapter, No. 23, R. A. M., of Hope; Albert Pike Consistory, No. 1, A. & A. S. R., and was invested in 1921 with the Knight Commander of the Court of Honor; and Al-Amin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He likewise belongs to Hope Lodge, No. 1109, B. P. O. E., of which he is now the exalted ruler, and to the Woodmen of the World, having previously served as council commander, in which capacity he continued for four years. His membership relations likewise extend to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, to the United Commercial Travelers, the Woodmen Circle and the Rotary Club, of which he was secretary for three years. He and his wife are active and faithful members of St. Mark's Episcopal church, of which he is serving as treasurer. Along strictly social lines he has connection with the Hempstead County Hunting Club. During the World war he was active in support of all projects for the country's good and served as sales director in the third and fourth Liberty Loan drives, in both of which his district went over the top, and he was publicity director in the United War Work campaign. He was likewise county chairman of the War Camp Community Service and also served as county chairman of the Girls' Industrial School. He belongs to the Arkansas Travelers. His interests and activities are broad and varied and many of them constitute forces for public improvement and for the support of those projects which have most to do with the welfare and upbuilding of community, commonwealth and country.

SAMUEL P. MCCONNELL, M. D.

Dr. Samuel P. McConnell, one of the alumni of the St. Louis University, has engaged in active medical practice in Booneville since 1906 and through the intervening period his progress has been continuous as his ability has increased through further study, research, investigation and experience. Moreover, he is entitled to representation in this volume as a member of one of the old pioneer families of the state. His grandfather, Samuel C. McConnell, was born in East Tennessee in 1824 and on leaving that state removed to Missouri, whence in 1859 he came to Arkansas. From this state he entered the army, serving with the Confederate forces for three years. His son, Dr. John W. McConnell, was born in Missouri in 1855 and was but four years of age when brought to Arkansas. Having attained his majority, he was married near the White Bluff schoolhouse, near what is now Bonanza, Arkansas, to Miss Sarah McNabb, who was born in Tennessee in 1857 and is a daughter of Nathaniel B. McNabb, whose birth occurred in eastern Tennessee, in 1824, and who came to Arkansas in 1870. He was a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and a missionary to the Indians. Mrs. McConnell was thirteen years of age at the time the family home was established in this state. Dr. John W. McConnell devoted his life to the practice of medicine and surgery and was for twenty-three years surgeon for the Kansas & Texas Coal Company, the Central Coal & Coke Company and also the Frisco Railroad at Huntington, Arkansas. A few years prior to his death, which occurred in 1906, he removed to Booneville, but did little practice here, largely living retired. His widow survives and yet makes her home in Booneville. She as a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, to which Dr. McConnell also belonged. His political endorsement was always given to the democratic party. This worthy couple became the parents of eight children, but only three are now living: John L., who is a structural engineer of Chicago; Samuel P.; and Ruby, at home.

Samuel P. McConnell was born at Hackett, Arkansas, on the 4th of February, 1883, and liberal educational advantages were accorded him. He attended Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas. He started out in the business world as a clerk in a dry goods store and afterward entered the medical college of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. A year later he went to St. Louis and was graduated from the medical department of the St. Louis University with the class of 1906. For three months he practiced in Magazine, Arkansas, and then came to Booneville, where he has since remained. Here he gradually won recognition of his ability which, moreover, has increased through experience and further study until he is now recognized as one of the capable physicians and surgeons of this section of the state. He devotes his entire time and attention to his professional duties and at different periods he has attended clinics in Chicago, thus coming in touch with the advanced methods of some of the most eminent members of the profession in that city. He has served as health officer and he is a member of the Logan County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the National Association of Railway Surgeons. He was assistant superintendent of the Arkansas Tuberculosis Sanatorium for a period of two years and he is now division surgeon for the Rock Island Railroad. He displays marked skill in surgery as well as in medical practice and large professional demands are now made upon his time and energy.

In 1907 Dr. McConnell was married to Miss Dessau Dorsey, who was born near Hartford, Arkansas, a daughter of Nathan A. Dorsey, a farmer and mill man who came to this state in 1872 and is now engaged in the insurance business in Booneville. Dr. and Mrs. McConnell became the parents of three sons, John Paul, Dorsey A. and Robert Emmett, all in school. The wife and mother died in 1917 in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, of which she was a consistent member.

Dr. McConnell also belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is an exemplary Mason, belonging to lodge, chapter and council. He is a past master of the lodge, past high priest of the chapter and past thrice illustrious master of the council. He has always closely followed the teachings and purposes of the craft, which recognizes the brotherhood of mankind and the obligations thereby imposed.

NORA BINGHAM PARKER RICE.

Mrs. Nora B. P. Rice, one of the best known women in Little Rock, is a daughter of Isaac Montgomery and Mary Ann (Bingham) Parker, both natives of Arkansas. Her father was born at Point Chico, in 1818, and had the distinction of being the first white child born in that county. The mother was born in Pulaski county, in 1832. Isaac M. Parker was best known for his wide benevolence and there are many substantial citizens and successful men and women living in Arkansas today who owe their advancement to the assistance which he kindly rendered them. Mr. Parker took more than passing pleasure in helping those whom he knew to be deserving and reared and educated fifteen children in addition to those of his own family. He spent his life as a planter and his career seemed an exemplification of the admonition, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you," for notwithstanding his great generosity he continued to prosper, so that he was able to aid his fellowmen more and more as the years passed by. In politics he was a democrat and as a citizen he did much for the improvement and upbuilding of the state. The Parkers came from old colonial Virginia stock and Samuel Parker, the father of Isaac M. Parker, was a gallant soldier in the War of 1812. Immediately after the close of that war he came to Arkansas and thus cast in his lot with the earliest of the pioneers of the state. The Bingham family was one of the early families of North Carolina, connected with that state from colonial times. Both Mr. and Mrs. Parker have long since departed this life, both dying in 1883, the mother in March and the father in July.

Nora Bingham Parker was educated in private schools and in May, 1881, she became the wife of Patrick J. Rice, a native of New York, who had located in Arkansas when nineteen years of age. He took up railroad work and remained in active connection with railroad interests for thirty years. As an engineer he took into Pine Bluff the first engine of the Missouri Pacific Railroad and as a conductor brought into Little Rock the first train on the same line. His character as a business man may be gleaned from the fact that all his service of thirty years was spent with the one road, indicating his marked capability and fidelity. He died November 16, 1900, much regretted by a large circle of friends and by the officers and employes of the corporation to whose interests he had given faithful service for so many years. Mrs. Rice was left a widow with four children: Mary J., who is now the wife of Thomas Harding, a well known architect; Leonora, the wife of E. A. McCaskill; James H., who is the superintendent of public works in Little Rock; and Patrick J., who is engaged in the oil business. Another member of the family is Walter B., who was adopted and is now a resident of El Dorado, Arkansas.

Mrs. Rice is one of the most patriotic and public-spirited women of the south. She is a Daughter of the American Revolution by virtue of the services of her ancestor, John C. Vance of North Carolina, in connection with the war for independence. Her membership in the Daughters of 1812 comes through her grandfather, Samuel Parker, and she was formerly vice president of the Nicholas Headington Chapter. She was also one of the organizers of the Arkansas Pioneer Association and during the first year of the life of that association acted as first vice president and acting president. She is a member and an ex-president of the J. M. Keller Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and an ex-president of the School Improvement Association. She has membership in the League of Women Voters and is especially active in club work. The society that reflects more clearly than any other the character of Mrs. Rice is the Widows Benevolent Society, of which she is one of the organizers. This association is made up of fairly well-to-do widows and the purpose of the society is to help widows who are needy by advancing money for vocational training for themselves or their daughters, so as to make them self-supporting. This noble work is done without publicity and really helps without ostentation those who are not seeking public charity. These good women are an honor to the community and the organization is the only one of the kind in the country. It certainly sets an example that might well be followed in every city and state. Born in Arkansas, a daughter of a native of the state and a granddaughter of pioneers in both the paternal and maternal lines, Mrs. Rice is a splendid type of the noble women who make up the citizenship of Arkansas.

W. W. LOWE, M. D.

Dr. W. W. Lowe, who is engaged in the practice of medicine in Gillett, where he also conducts a drug store, was born in Albany, Missouri, in 1876, his parents being W. P. and Nancy (Peck) Lowe. The father was a native of Tennessee and a son of Joseph Lowe, who removed from Tennessee to Missouri, thus establishing the family in that state. The mother, Nancy Peck, was a daughter of William and Julia (McGonagel) Peck. Her father was from Tennessee and on removing to Missouri settled in the country where the Lowe home had been established. It was there that W. P. Lowe and Nancy Peck became acquainted and were married. They afterward removed to Gillett, becoming well known residents of this city. They reared a family of four sons and two daughters: W. W.; Dr. A. M. Lowe, living at Little Rock; Sam, a resident of Gillett; C. C., who died in 1910; Mrs. F. E. Martin, also of Gillett; and Mrs. Marie Menard, who is living in Lake Village.

In the acquirement of his education Dr. W. W. Lowe, after completing his elementary course, attended the Northwestern Missouri College. He later became a student in the St. Louis University Medical School, for he had determined to make the practice of medicine and surgery his life work. He completed the course of study there by graduation with the class of 1903 and then located for practice in Gillett, where he has remained. Here he has built up an excellent practice, the number of his patients increasing year by year as he has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate and involved problems that continually confront the physician. He is very careful in the diagnosis of his cases and is seldom, if ever, at fault in determining the outcome of disease. He adds to his broad scientific knowledge a deep human sympathy and his attitude of courage and cheer is often like a ray of sunshine in the sick room. In addition to his practice he conducts a drug store in Gillett and in this connection has built up a very satisfactory business. During the World war he was physician for the exemption board.

In 1911 Dr. Lowe was united in marriage to Miss Lillie Quertermous of De Witt, Arkansas, a daughter of Ben and Nellie (Cannon) Quertermous, her father a farmer and merchant of this section of the state. Dr. and Mrs. Lowe have become parents of a son and a daughter: Benjamin and Nancy. Fraternally Dr. Lowe is a Royal Arch Mason and along strictly professional lines he has membership in the Arkansas County and Arkansas State Medical Societies, thus keeping abreast with the trend of modern professional thought and progress. His ability is pronounced and he is reaping the satisfactory rewards of his labors.

L. E. HALL.

L. E. Hall, deceased, was born in Tipton county, Tennessee, April 3, 1864, and had been for some years a resident of Fayetteville ere he departed this life in 1917. He was a son of John N. and Sarah (Alexander) Hall, both of whom were natives of North Carolina, whence they removed to Tennessee in early life. The father was a farmer and cotton planter. He belonged to the old school Presbyterian church and lived a life of the utmost integrity and honor. To him and his wife were born two children, the elder son being James R. Hall, now living at Covington, Tennessee.

L. E. Hall pursued his education in the schools of Mount Carmel, Tennessee, and was reared to agricultural life, which claimed his attention for many years. He owned and successfully conducted a plantation and he also maintained a store on his farm. As the years passed success in substantial measure came to him and he continued to own his land after his removal to Fayetteville, where he arrived on the 12th of August, 1910.

It was in the year 1891 that Mr. Hall was united in marriage to Miss Willie Mitchell, who was born in Pontotoc, Mississippi, a daughter of Charles B. and Virginia (Dennis) Mitchell, who were natives of Kentucky and Virginia, respectively. They were married in Mississippi and began their domestic life in that state, continuing to reside within its borders throughout their remaining days. The father was a distinguished attorney and also for one term represented his district in congress, being one of the most prominent and influential residents of the section in which he lived. He gained fame as a criminal lawyer and was retained as counsel in many of the most important cases tried in the circuit in which he practiced. He served with the Confederate army throughout the period of the Civil war. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church, while his wife belonged to the Presbyterian church. In the family were seven children: Charles D., a physician and surgeon, who is now superintendent of the Insane Asylum at Jackson, Mississippi; Virginia, who is the widow of J. G. Conway, a Presbyterian minister, and she lives at Red Springs, North Carolina; Mary, the wife of Ben Sumner, president of the Jones Lumber Company at Dallas, Texas; Mrs. Hall; George T., a prominent lawyer of Tupelo, Mississippi; Annie, the wife of Sidney Stitt, a planter of Covington, Tennessee; and Frances, the wife of Charles Moore, who is connected with the Dunn Mercantile Agency at San Antonio, Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall also had a family of seven children: Charles Mitchell, who is secretary of the Young Men's Business League at Waco, Texas, took a year's collegiate course at Sherman, Texas, and for two years studied medicine at Galveston, but did not complete his course and turned to other business pursuits; Sarah is the wife of M. A. Stice, manager of the Handle factory at Fayetteville; Frances is the wife of B. L. Milburn, who is a captain in the regular army now stationed in the Philippine islands; and Lonnie E., Virginia, Evelyn and William N. are all attending school.

Mr. Hall's religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church, as is that of his widow. He also had membership with the Knights of The Maccabees and he gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. It was the condition of his health that caused him to remove from Tennessee, at which time he went to Texas, remaining in the Lone Star state for six years. He then came to Arkansas, settling in Fayetteville, where his remaining days were passed. He did not engage in active business here, but purchased three different farms in Washington county and Mrs. Hall still owns these properties. He also bought farms in Texas which are yet in possession of Mrs. Hall. In business affairs he displayed sound judgment and unrelenting enterprise and his activity brought him most gratifying results. Those who knew him, and he gained many friends during his residence in Fayetteville, esteemed him highly for his sterling worth and the many excellent traits of character which he displayed, so that his death was the occasion of deep and widespread regret.

JAMES H. STACK.

James H. Stack, who is filling the position of postmaster at Brinkley, is prompt and faithful in the discharge of his duties and is making an excellent record in office. A native son of Texas, he was born in the city of Nacogdoches in 1875, his parents being Thomas J. and Mollie (Corey) Stack. He was quite young at the time of the removal of the family to Woodruff county, Arkansas, and there he attended the public schools. He dates his residence in Brinkley from 1909, at which time he entered the employ of the firm of Lamm & Company, merchants. He worked in that connection until appointed postmaster in April, 1914, and he is now concentrating his efforts and attention upon the duties of the office. He is accurate and reliable in the distribution and care of the mail, is always a courteous and obliging official and by reason of his excellent service and sterling worth has made for himself an enviable position in the regard of the patrons of the office. During the World war he acted as vice chairman of the Monroe County Red Cross and his influence is always given in behalf of all those measures which have to do with progress and upbuilding and with the adoption of high standards of manhood and citizenship.

JAMES WILEY SLAUGHTER, M. D.

Dr. James Wiley Slaughter, a physician and surgeon of El Dorado, in which city he was born July 27, 1886, is a son of Hardy and Mary Ellen (Martin) Slaughter. The father was a native of Alabama and was a lad of nine years when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Arkansas, the family home being established on a farm in Union county. There Hardy Slaughter was reared to manhood and since attaining his majority has given his attention to general agricultural pursuits. His wife was born in Union county, this state, and they are highly esteemed people of the county, enjoying the warm regard of all with whom they have been brought into contact.

Dr. Slaughter was educated in the rural schools of Union county, in the El Dorado high school and in the Arkansas State University. In 1907 he entered upon the study of medicine at the last named institution and was graduated with the class of 1912, at which time his professional degree was conferred upon him. He displayed the elemental strength of his character by paying his own way through the university. There was a lapse of one year in his medical course, 1909-10, when he taught school for six months, also acted as census enumerator for one township and raised a crop of sweet potatoes. By these three lines of activity he made enough money to finish his course in medicine. A man who will provide means for his education is sure to succeed, for the same quality of determination and perseverance which enabled him to finance his schooling will bring him success in anything that he undertakes. When his course was finished Dr. Slaughter located for practice in Lisbon, Arkansas, and there remained for two and a half years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Wesson, a sawmill town, where he successfully followed his profession for three years. On the 15th of January, 1918, he enlisted for service in the Medical Corps of the United States army and was sent to Fort Riley, Kansas, where he remained in training for three months. He was then assigned to duty at Camp Dodge, Iowa, where he was stationed for five months and then was sent overseas in August, 1918, with the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth Field Artillery, with which command he remained up to the time of their return to the United States in March, 1919. He saw much of the horrors of modern warfare and always promptly and efficiently discharged his duties, returning to his home with a most creditable military record. When he had again reached his native land he was made assistant camp sanitary inspector at Camp Dodge, Iowa. On the occasion of the race riots at Omaha he was sent on detached duty with a machine gun battalion to the scene of trouble, the battalion there remaining for three weeks. On the 12th of January, 1920, he was transferred to Fort Bayard, New Mexico, where he was stationed to the time of his discharge on the 16th of June of that year.

Returning to Arkansas, Dr. Slaughter opened an office in El Dorado, where he has since engaged in private practice and in the intervening period a liberal patronage has been accorded him. He has had broad experience and his wide knowledge gained from books has made him one of the most capable medical practitioners of southern Arkansas.

On the 2d of September, 1920, Dr. Slaughter was married to Miss Mabel Rogers of El Dorado, who is a graduate nurse. Fraternally Dr. Slaughter is connected with Wesson Lodge, A. F. & A. M. His time and attention, however, are chiefly concentrated upon his professional interests and business affairs, for aside from his profession he has been successful in his lease operations in the oil fields of El Dorado and still has some lease holdings. He likewise has a fourth interest in the royalties on forty acres which at the present writing has four producing oil wells; and twenty acres in section 4 with three producing wells. He manifests sound judgment and keen discrimination in the management of his business interests, while in his profession he is a most capable and conscientious practitioner, neglecting no duty that devolves upon him and finding keen pleasure in rendering aid to the sick and suffering. He is also chairman of the Union County Medical Association and a member of the Arkansas State Medical Association.

JOSEPH T. IRBY, M. D.

One of the substantial citizens of Earl is Dr. Joseph T. Irby, physician and surgeon. A native of Mississippi, he was born at Vimville, Lauderdale county, on the 5th of October, 1873, a son of J. M. and Louvisa (Brewster) Irby, both of whom are living in Vimville where they are highly respected and beloved citizens. The father has engaged in farming all his life and has achieved more than gratifying success along that line, having won a place among the representative agriculturists of the state. Both the Irby and Brewster families have resided in America for many generations. Mr. and Mrs. Irby were united in marriage near Vimville and to their union nine children were born, five boys and four girls. Three boys and three girls are living. Joseph T., whose name initiates this review, was the second in order of birth.

In the acquirement of his early education Joseph T. Irby attended the country schools of Lauderdale county and in due time entered Peabody College at Nashville, Tennessee. He took a two-year literary course there and subsequently enrolled in the medical department of the University of Tennessee at Nashville, Tennessee, graduating therefrom with his M. D. degree in 1905. Dr. Irby received no financial aid in acquiring his higher education but worked his way through, being employed at various jobs in his spare time. In the year of his graduation he located in Enterprise, Mississippi, where he practiced until 1917. In 1912 he became railroad surgeon for the Mobile & Ohio Railroad there, a position he held for five years. He was likewise health officer of Enterprise for a period of ten years. In July, 1917, he volunteered his services to the United States army and enlisted in the Medical Corps. He was commissioned a first lieutenant and was sent to the Base Hospital at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, where he was on the surgical staff. In July, 1918, he was sent to the Mayo Brothers, at Rochester, Minnesota, to take a special course in surgical work, in connection with the army. In October he was ordered to Camp Crane, Allentown, Pennsylvania, to await embarkation for service overseas but the signing of the armistice prevented the transportation of further troops and he received his honorable discharge in December, 1918, with the rank of captain. He then came to Arkansas and locating in Earl in June, 1919, established offices for the practice of his profession. He has won an enviable reputation as a physician and surgeon and is enjoying an extensive and lucrative patronage. During 1919 and 1920 he was health officer of Earl.

At Oaklands, Tennessee, on the 16th of January, 1907, was celebrated the marriage of Dr. Irby to Miss Effie Hall Smith, a daughter of J. G. and Maggie Smith of that place. To their union two daughters have been born: Margaret, twelve years of age; and Lady Mary, eight years of age. Mrs. Irby is prominent in the club and social affairs of Earl and is conceded by her many friends to be a charming hostess and a model housewife and mother.

Since attaining his majority Dr. Irby has voted with the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Crittenden Lodge, No. 607, A. F. & A. M.; Oklahoma Consistory, No. 1, at Guthrie; and India Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Oklahoma City. He is likewise connected with Enterprise Lodge, No. 76, Woodmen of the World. Along strictly professional lines the Doctor belongs to the Arkansas State and Crittenden County Medical Societies and through membership in those organizations he keeps in constant touch with the advance in medical research being made by eminent members of the profession throughout the state. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he was elder in the church while residing in Enterprise. Dr. Irby is devoted to his profession and although his many patients make heavy demands upon his time, he is never too busy to give his aid to the furtherance of any movement he deems essential in the development of the community. He has won the confidence and respect of his professional brethren throughout the state and is readily conceded to be one of Earl's most public-spirited citizens.

PAUL J. CARUTH.

Paul J. Caruth, engaged in business as an undertaker and embalmer of Hot Springs, is widely recognized as a man of marked skill and proficiency in his chosen work and enjoys well merited prestige along that line. His birth occurred in Tupelo, Lee county, Mississippi, on the 18th of November, 1867, his parents being Absalom L. and Josephine M. (Ratcliff) Caruth, who were likewise natives of that state and are now deceased. The father was successfully engaged in business as a dry goods merchant of Tupelo, Mississippi, for many years.

Paul J. Caruth obtained his education in the public schools of his native city and after putting aside his textbooks secured employment in a furniture and undertaking establishment of Tupelo. In 1889, when a young man of twenty-two years, he removed to Fort Smith, Arkansas, where he entered the service of an exclusive undertaking firm, with which he remained for seven years. On the expiration of that period, in 1896, he came to Hot Springs to take charge of the undertaking establishment of Benz & Buchanan, which he ably managed for several years or until the business was sold. In 1919, feeling that his capital and experience justified the step, he embarked in business as an undertaker and embalmer on his own account and has since won a most enviable reputation in this connection, an extensive patronage being accorded him. His experience in this field of activity dates from the time when he first started out in the business world, so that he has become thoroughly familiar with every phase thereof and utilizes the most scientific methods in the care of the dead. He is a charter member of the Arkansas State Funeral Directors' Association and also belongs to the National Funeral Directors' Association.

In 1902 Mr. Caruth was united in marriage to Mrs. Sadie (Wilson) Polk of Fayetteville, Arkansas, and they have become parents of a son, Paul J., Jr. Fraternally Mr. Caruth is identified with Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, B. P. O. E., and with Hot Springs Valley Lodge, No. 67, I. O. O. F., while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the First Baptist church. He likewise belongs to the Lions Club and to the Business Men's League and is widely and favorably known as a representative and respected citizen of Hot Springs, where the period of his residence now covers a quarter of a century.

L. E. DAVIS, D. D. S.

For fourteen years Dr. L. E. Davis has been successfully engaged in the practice of dentistry and for a considerable portion of this period has resided in Fort Smith, where he maintains a well appointed office and enjoys a liberal patronage. Dr. Davis is a native of Michigan, his birth having occurred in Macomb county, in 1880, his parents being C. F. and Catherine (Sullivan) Davis. His boyhood days were spent under the parental roof and his early education was largely acquired in the public schools of Detroit, Michigan. He afterward went to Chicago, where he entered the National Medical University as a student in the dental department and there prepared for his chosen life work. He was graduated with the class of 1907, and making his way to the southwest, located at Fort Smith, Arkansas, in 1908. Later he removed to Earl, this state, and there he remained in the active practice of his profession for seven years, but returned to Fort Smith in 1915 and has here continued to the present time. He has a well appointed office, splendidly equipped with dental appliances, and he shows the utmost ingenuity and skill in the use of the multitudinous delicate little instruments which form the equipment for dental practice. Moreover, he has intimate and accurate knowledge of the scientific principles underlying his work and has met with excellent success, as evidenced in the liberal patronage now accorded him.

Dr. Davis was married in 1909 to Miss Ora E. York. They have gained many friends during the period of their residence in Fort Smith, occupying an enviable position in those social circles where intelligence and true worth are accepted as passports into good society. Dr. Davis has never regretted his determination to come to the southwest, for here he has made a creditable name and place for himself in connection with his professional activity and at all times he has stood with the vanguard in the adoption of improved methods which have been brought to light through scientific research and investigation.

J. L. SMILEY, M. D.

Dr. J. L. Smiley, a native son of Arkansas, is numbered among the leading physicians and surgeons of Siloam Springs, where he has made his home since 1911. He does everything to perfect himself in his chosen vocation and his ability is pronounced. He was born in Springdale, Arkansas, May 24, 1874, a son of William and Alpha (Holcomb) Smiley, the former a native of Tennessee, while the latter was born in North Carolina. They were married in Arkansas, coming to the state as young people, and for many years the father successfully followed the occupation of farming. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving for four years in the Confederate army. He was captured at the battle of Vicksburg, Mississippi, and was confined in prisons at Alton, Illinois, and Baltimore, Maryland. He was a Baptist in religious faith and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. Mr. and Mrs. Smiley became the parents of five children, of whom three survive, namely: Dorothy, who married T. Stearns of Fayetteville, Arkansas; Tabitha, who is the wife of George Harris, a well known farmer residing at Cave Springs; and J. L., of this review.

After completing his high school course J. L. Smiley became a student in the medical department of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1896. Going to Robinson, Arkansas, he opened an office and there remained for seven years, at the end of which period he removed to Bentonville, where he followed his profession for four and a half years. In 1911 he arrived in Siloam Springs, where he has since resided, and with the passing years his practice has steadily grown in volume and importance, having now reached extensive proportions. He has never lost the attitude of a student toward his profession and has taken postgraduate work in leading medical institutions in various parts of the country. He attended the Polyclinic at Philadelphia in 1902; took Polyclinic and hospital work at New Orleans in 1916, 1917 and 1921; spent four months at the Presbyterian Hospital of Chicago; and for two weeks studied at Mayo Brothers' Hospital in Rochester, Minnesota. He devotes considerable attention to surgery, in which he has developed expert skill, and has been called upon to perform more surgical operations than any other medical practitioner in this locality. He has always made his professional duties his first consideration, being most thorough and conscientious in the performance of the work that devolves upon him in this connection, and his labors have been attended with a gratifying measure of success. Through his membership in the Benton County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association he keeps in close touch with the advancement that is continually being made in the science of medicine and by constant reading and careful study of the cases that come under his care he is ever broadening his knowledge and ability.

On the 2d of June, 1895, Dr. Smiley was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Webster, a native of Elm Springs, Arkansas, and a daughter of Thomas F. Webster, a prominent merchant and farmer of that place. They have become the parents of three children: Diva, at home; Opal, who is employed as a stenographer in Tulsa, Oklahoma; and Barnette, who follows the trade of a mechanic and resides at Siloam Springs.

Mrs. Smiley is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in his political views the Doctor is a democrat. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor commander, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past Noble Grand. He is a veteran of the World war, entering the service on the 15th of June, 1918. He received his training in the Presbyterian Hospital at Chicago, afterward going to the Base Hospital at Camp Logan, and in November, 1918, he was sent overseas. He received his discharge from the service on the 24th of March, 1919, and at once returned to Siloam Springs, where he has continued in practice. Prompted in all that he does by laudable ambition and broad humanitarian principles, as a member of the medical fraternity he has attained high rank among those whose skill is uniformly acknowledged.

JOHN PIERCE HOLMES.

One of the leading lumbermen of Ashley county is John Pierce Holmes, who is residing in Hamburg. A native of this state he was born in Okolona, Clark county, on the 8th of December, 1873, a son of J. P. and Martha (Williams) Holmes, both deceased. On the paternal side he is descended from English ancestry, the Holmes family having come from England to this country at an early date. J. P. Holmes was born in Georgia and came to Arkansas prior to the Civil war. He was for many years a minister in the Methodist church and was widely known throughout this section of the state. At Tulip, Arkansas, in 1862, occurred the marriage of J. P. Holmes to Miss Martha Williams, a native of Tennessee, who came to this state with her parents, they being among the pioneer settlers at Tulip, Dallas county. Her brother, Sim, served in the Civil war. Ten children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, five boys and five girls, six of whom are living. John Pierce, whose name initiates this review, was the sixth in order of birth. Mrs. Holmes died at Princeton, this state, in 1882, at the age of forty-two years. Mr. Holmes departed this life in 1886, at the age of fifty-four years.

John Pierce Holmes received his early education in the rural schools of southern Arkansas and later enrolled in the Southwestern University at Georgetown, Texas, where he took a literary course for two years. At the termination of that time he went to work in a sawmill in Perla, Arkansas, as a day laborer but did not long remain in that capacity, his conscientious preformance of every duty assigned him winning him constant promotion. From 1890 to 1893 he was in the employ of that concern and at the time of his resignation in the latter year, had been holding the position of foreman for some time. Leaving Perla he went to St. Louis, Missouri, in the office of the Malvern Lumber Company, and he was employed as bookkeeper there until May, 1896. Subsequently he became sales manager for the Summit Lumber Company at St. Louis, and was active in that connection until the 1st of September, 1896, when he was sent to the Upland, Arkansas, branch of the company to serve in like capacity. On the 1st of January, 1898, he went to Wesson as general manager of the H. C. McDaniel Lumber Company and held that important position until 1905. The following year he entered the lumber business on his own account, locating in Union county, near El Dorado, and he remained in that location until September, 1917, when he organized the Ashley Lumber Company and located ten miles east of Hamburg. He is still active in the conduct of that business and is achieving more than substantial success. Working his way from the bottom to the top of the lumber business he is familiar with every phase of it and is well qualified to take his place among the foremost lumbermen in the county and state.

At El Dorado, Arkansas, on the 8th of December, 1902, Mr. Holmes was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Shumaker. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Holmes one daughter has been born: Martha, seventeen years of age. She is an accomplished young woman and will graduate from the Hamburg high school this year. She expects to attend Galloway College for a short time prior to enrolling in an eastern college.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist church and Mr. Holmes is a generous contributor to its support. He is alive to the duties and obligations, as well as the privileges, of citizenship, and though he has never sought nor desired public preferment, he takes a prominent and active interest in any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare. The success he now enjoys is well merited and he is rightly entitled to a place among the self-made men of Arkansas.

STUART WILSON.

Stuart Wilson, first vice president of the State National Bank of Texarkana, is a prominent figure in banking circles in the southern part of the state. He has studied closely the vital financial problems and has ever recognized the fact that the bank is most worthy of public support that most carefully safeguards the interests of depositors. He has therefore maintained the highest standards in the conduct of the bank and his labors have been a resultant factor in the attainment of success for the institution.

Mr. Wilson is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Columbus on the 16th of June, 1882. He was but four years of age when his parents left that place and removed to Hope, where the family home was maintained until he reached the age of nine years. They next resided in Washington for two years and then went to Little Rock, where Stuart Wilson attended the public schools until he reached the age of fourteen years, when he started out in the business world, making his initial step as an employe in a dry goods store. He was afterward connected with the Little Rock Street Railway Company until 1903, when he obtained a position in the oil mill at Ashdown and there remained until 1904. That year witnessed his preliminary connection with the banking business, for he obtained a position in the Bank of Hope, now the Hope National Bank, acting as bookkeeper for two years, after which he was advanced to the cashiership and there remained until 1911, when he came to Texarkana as cashier and executive officer of the State National Bank. In 1920 he became vice president and his time is now occupied by constructive effort, administrative direction and executive control of one of the strong and growing financial institutions of southern Arkansas.

On the 25th of October, 1909, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Pauline Eakin and they have become parents of three children: Pauline, ten years of age; Mary Adele, eight years of age; and Margaret Stuart, who is in her first year.

Mr. Wilson and his wife are consistent members of the Presbyterian church. He likewise belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, to the Rotary Club and to the Country Club and in all of these is a director. He is interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of his community and his labors are of far-reaching effect in advancing the public good.

RUPERT CONDREY.

Prominent among the energetic, farsighted and successful business men of Fort Smith is Rupert Condrey, the manager of the Sterling Drug Store and the treasurer of the Carnahan Drug Company of this city. A progressive spirit actuates him in all that he has undertaken and the thoroughness and diligence which he displays in his work have been the salient features in bringing him to the point of prominence and prosperity which he now occupies. Mr. Condrey is a native of Mississippi, his birth having occurred in Smithville in 1888. His youthful days were spent in his native state and becoming interested in pharmacy he matriculated in the College of Pharmacy in St. Louis and thus qualified for his active business career. He had been engaged in the retail grocery business for four or five years previous to taking up the study of pharmacy, but believed the latter would prove a more congenial and profitable field and he has never had occasion to regret the change which he made. He has been identified with the Carnahan Drug Company of Fort Smith for the past eleven years. This is an incorporated company, which has been the outgrowth of the consolidation of three large drug stores and one warehouse in Fort Smith. Mr. Condrey also has full charge of the Sterling Drug Store, of which he has been the manager since 1910 and he has been largely instrumental in developing the trade, the patronage of this store equalling if not exceeding that of any other drug house in the city. Mr. Condrey employs the most progressive methods and puts forth untiring efforts to please his patrons, while his straightforward dealings and courteous treatment are strong elements in the attainment of prosperity. There is no feature of the trade with which he is not thoroughly familiar and in the Sterling Drug Store he carries an extensive line of drugs and druggist's sundries, thus being able to meet any demand of the trade.

In 1913 Mr. Condrey was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Birne, a daughter of H. C. Birne, and they have one son, Rupert, who is three and a half years of age. Mr. Condrey belongs to the Lions Club and is interested in the work of that organization which has its basis in the purpose of upbuilding the city and advancing American ideals and standards. During the World war he served on all the committees for raising war funds and at any time his cooperation and aid can be counted upon to promote public welfare.

N. D. KIMBROUGH.

An energetic business man, whose success in life has been on a parity with his well directed endeavors, is N. D. Kimbrough, senior partner of N. D. Kimbrough & Company, brokers and shippers of fruits, vegetables, flour, feed and seeds, with headquarters in Van Buren. He is a native son of Arkansas and was born in Crawford county in 1875, a son of J. A. and Katie (Fort) Kimbrough. His father was born in Springfield, Missouri, but removed to East Tennessee at an early day and was there reared to manhood. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army and participated in many of the important battles of that conflict. He is living, at the advanced age of seventy-six years.

N. D. Kimbrough is the eldest of six living children, having three brothers and two sisters. He received his early education in the common schools of Crawford county and in due time enrolled in the University of Arkansas, from which institution he was graduated in 1900. While attending the university Mr. Kimbrough taught school and he was also active along that line during many of his vacations. At different times for the nineteen years following his graduation he followed that profession, teaching in the Mansfield, Trusty, and Malvern high schools. In the summer vacations Mr. Kimbrough would work as shipper and broker in fruits and vegetables and two years ago he gave up teaching in order to devote his entire time and attention to that line of business. He formed a partnership with F. L. Clark and the enterprise is conducted as N. D. Kimbrough & Company, brokers and shippers of fruits, vegetables, flour, feed and seeds. Van Buren is the center for the fruit and vegetable business in western Arkansas and among the products handled here most extensively are strawberries, peaches, watermelon, cantaloupe, potatoes and cucumbers. These products are shipped clear across the country. Since his connection with local business interests Mr. Kimbrough has become known for his spirit of enterprise and his tireless energy, being progressive in his policy and quick to act when the occasion demands.

In 1902 occurred the marriage of Mr. Kimbrough to Miss Maud Mickel, a daughter of Dr. F. A. Mickel of Crawford county. To their union four children have been born, three girls and one boy: Melba, who is attending the Arkansas State Normal; Jean, a student also in the State Normal; Lois, ten years of age, attending the schools of Van Buren; and N. D., Jr., eight years of age and also attending the grade schools. Mr. Kimbrough always takes an active and helpful interest in all matters pertaining to the public welfare and the development of the community and he is conceded to be a representative citizen. In addition to his interest in the Kimbrough company he owns an eighty-acre farm and he is quite active in agricultural circles.

CHARLES KENNARD TOWNSEND, M. D.

Dr. Charles Kennard Townsend, a physician and surgeon, active and conscientious in the performance of his professional duties and junior partner with his father in the firm of Townsend & Townsend of Arkadelphia, was born at Black Rock, Lawrence county, Arkansas, August 14, 1890, his parents being Dr. Noble Robert and Roxie (Creekmore) Townsend, mentioned at length on another page of this work. Having attended the public schools of his native city he continued his education in Onachita College of Arkadelphia and in 1910 matriculated as a medical student in Tulane University at New Orleans. From that institution he was graduated with the class of 1915, at which time his M. D. degree was conferred upon him. One year during his attendance at college he was connected with the Shreveport (La.) Charity Hospital. Following his graduation he served for two years as an interne in Tauro Infirmary of New Orleans and thus gained broad and valuable experience. In 1917 he returned to his home at Arkadelphia and in May, 1918, he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States army for service in the World war. He was assigned to duty at Camp Gordon, Georgia, and was later transferred to Fort Bayard, New Mexico, where he remained until receiving his discharge in May, 1920. He was commissioned a first lieutenant at the time of his enlistment.

Following his return to Arkadelphia, Dr. Townsend was admitted to a partnership by his father, Dr. Noble Robert Townsend, and they have since been associated in practice. They are called upon for important professional duty and the son, like the father, is recognized as an able physician and surgeon, carefully diagnosing his cases and performing his professional service with the utmost conscientiousness, realizing fully the responsibility that devolves upon the physician and surgeon.

On the 5th of July, 1919, Dr. Townsend was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Pratt of El Dorado, Arkansas, and they have many friends in the city where they make their home. Dr. Townsend is a member of Arkadelphia Lodge, No. 1149, B. P. O. E. He is also identified with three Greek letter societies, the Pi Cappa Alpha, the Phi Beta Pi and the Alpha Omega Alpha. He is likewise a member of the Baptist church and along strictly professional lines he is connected with the Clark County Medical Society, with the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

L. C. SHACKELFORD, M. D.

Dr. L. C. Shackelford, who in August, 1898, located for the practice of medicine at Foreman, has since been numbered among the most able and successful representatives of the profession in the city and surrounding district. Arkansas is his native state and here he has always remained. His birth occurred in Prescott, Nevada county, on the 18th of December, 1871, and his youth was spent on a farm near Okolona, in Clark county. The public schools afforded him his early educational opportunities, while his professional training was received in the medical department of the University of Louisville at Louisville, Kentucky. In 1895 he began practice in Okolona, there following his profession until August, 1898, when he opened an office in Foreman, where he has remained continuously since with the exception of the year 1900, which he spent in recuperating his health and strength. He has devoted his attention to the general practice of medicine and surgery and has built up a patronage of extensive proportions as he has demonstrated his skill and effectively utilized his professional learning in checking the ravages of disease and restoring health. Dr. Shackelford was one of the directors of the Citizens National Bank until he sold his interest in the institution in 1919, and on the 20th of February, 1922, became president of the Merchants & Planters Bank of Foreman. He owns four hundred acres of valuable land on the Red River bottom.

In January, 1896, Dr. Shackelford was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Reddell of Russellville, Arkansas, and they became parents of two children: Joyce, who is now the wife of Henry A. Hawkins; and Claudius, who died at the age of two years. The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church. The Doctor enjoys high standing in both professional and social circles of southwestern Arkansas and has been an interested witness of the progress and development of the state through the past half century. He is a member of Little River County and Arkansas State Medical Societies.

THOMAS H. LANDERS.

Thomas H. Landers, superintendent of schools at De Valls Bluff and holding to the highest standards in his educational work, was born in Waveland, Arkansas, in 1897, his parents being Thomas P. and Sarah C. (Walker) Landers, the former a native of Atchison, Kansas, while the latter was born in Walker, Missouri. Her parents settled in Logan county, Arkansas, at an early day and the Landers family was also founded in the same county. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Landers there were born five children: Thomas H.; O. C., who is superintendent of the schools at McGehee, Arkansas; A. J.; Lila; and Cora.

Liberal educational advantages were accorded Thomas H. Landers, who after mastering the branches of learning taught in the public schools continued his education at Hendrix College of Conway, Arkansas, and there won the Bachelor of Arts degree. He began teaching at Center Point, this state, but when America entered the World war he put aside all business and personal considerations and enlisted in the navy, becoming an electrician of the third class, on duty at New York and Norfolk. In 1921 he came to De Valls Bluff as superintendent of schools and already the educational interests of the city have felt a decided stimulus as the result of his labors and high standards. His methods are of a practical character and he is making substantial contribution to the growth and development of the schools.

Mr. Landers was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Westmoreland, a daughter of W. W. Westmoreland of Conway, Arkansas. Fraternally he is a Mason, exemplifying in his life the beneficent spirit and purposes of the craft, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. His life is one of valuable service to his fellowmen along the lines of intellectual and moral progress and he has already made for himself a most creditable position in educational circles in the state.

JUDGE EMON O. MAHONY.

Judge Emon O. Mahony of El Dorado stood as a man among men, honored by reason of his marked ability in his profession and his fidelity to the highest activities and standards of life. He was a representative of a family whose impress has been indelibly left upon the history of Union county, and none of the name has done more to promote the welfare and progress of the county than he. His interest centered in those forces which make for good and by reason of his ability and sterling qualities his position was one of leadership in his home city. He was born in El Dorado, September 4, 1873, and his entire life was passed in his native town, where he laid down the burden and cares of this world on the 28th of August, 1920. Just entering upon the prime of life, it seemed that he should have been spared for years to come, yet within the comparatively brief period of his earthly existence he accomplished much more than do many men of almost twice his age. He was the second in order of birth in a family of five sons and one daughter whose parents were Edmund and Mary Mahony. The father, a native of Ireland, came to the new world in the early '60s and throughout his entire life followed the tailor's trade, which he had learned in early manhood in his native country. His death occurred in El Dorado. His wife in her maidenhood was Mary Klopfer. Her father came to this country from Saxony in the early '40s and married Signor Torpin, who was of Norwegian ancestry. His death occurred in El Dorado when his daughter, Mrs. Mahony, was only three years of age and Mrs. Klopfer afterward became the wife of James Mellor, an Englishman, who in his boyhood witnessed the coronation procession of Queen Victoria of England and saw the great throngs of people who on that eventful occasion stood in and near Kensington square for the whole day long.

In early life Emon O. Mahony was left an orphan and upon him devolved not only the responsibility of providing for his own support but also of contributing to the support of the younger members of the family. In fact almost his entire earnings in his young manhood went to the care and education of his younger brothers and sister. He faced hardships, privations and trials in so doing, but he never counted the cost nor regarded it as a sacrifice to do for those of his own household. One of his biographers at the time of his death said: "During these years of privation and trial for those whom he loved and considered himself responsible for, he was necessarily forced into contact with much that was vicious and corrupt, but he in no way became a part of it. The same inherent love for mental cleanliness, truth and honor that so distinguished the works of the man in after life kept the boy unstained in his unfortunate environments. By his untiring energy and great determination of purpose he lived to see all the younger children well educated and established in their chosen callings and professions—one in law, one as a physician and the sister a school teacher."

Judge Mahony himself attended the public schools of El Dorado and afterward enjoyed the benefit of instruction in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. He determined upon the practice of law as a life work and conscientiously prepared himself for the calling, being admitted to practice at the bar at El Dorado in 1896. No dreary novitiate awaited him, notwithstanding the fact that advancement at the bar is proverbially slow. He soon won recognition as an able lawyer, preparing his cases with great thoroughness and care and ever presenting his cause with clearness and force before the court. In 1898 he was elected county and probate judge of Union county and so capably served in that position that he was twice reelected. The affairs of the county at that time were in a deplorable financial condition. There was a considerable county indebtedness and the county warrants were sold at a large discount, while the courthouse, which was built in 1848, was fast falling into decay. He and he also was instrumental in erecting the present courthouse. In 1903, when legislative provision brought about the establishment of chancery court districts,

JUDGE EMON O. MAHONY

Judge Mahony was appointed by the governor of the state as judge of the seventh chancery district, embracing Union, Ouachita, Columbia, Calhoun, Dallas and Lafayette counties. For six years he continued in this position, discharging his duties with credit to himself and marked satisfaction to the bench and bar of the state. In 1912 he was elected prosecuting attorney for the thirteenth judicial district and served in the office for two terms, or four years, when he withdrew and entered upon the private practice of his profession in El Dorado. His work in the office of prosecuting attorney had been of a most fair and impartial character, yet he had been zealous and vigorous in the prosecution of all evildoers, so that his name became a terror to those who did not hold themselves amenable to law. In 1917 he received from Hon. J. T. Robinson, United States senator from Arkansas, appointment to the position of United States district attorney for the western district of the state, with headquarters at Fort Smith, and on the 30th of September, 1917, he was reappointed to the office by President Woodrow Wilson, continuing to serve until his demise. Over his official record there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil. His duties were ever discharged with marked promptness and fidelity and his native powers were used to the utmost in the faithful performance of the tasks that devolved upon him.

Throughout his entire life Judge Mahony was a stalwart advocate of democratic principles and a recognized leader in party ranks in Arkansas. When the state convention met in June, 1920, he was selected a delegate from his congressional district to the national democratic convention, which met in San Francisco, but on account of the serious illness of his sister at that time he did not attend.

Judge Mahony was married January 27, 1898, to Miss Pattie Wright, who was also born and reared in El Dorado. They were playmates from early childhood, sweethearts from early youth and their companionship following their marriage was largely an ideal one. Mrs. Mahony is a daughter of Colonel John C. and Mary A. Wright, representatives of one of the old pioneer families of southern Arkansas, her father having valiantly served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war and ranking at all times as an honored and highly respected citizen of Union county. Judge Mahony always made his home in El Dorado but was the owner of a splendid farm six miles southeast of the city, and it was his delight when the duties of his office were over for the day to mount his saddle horse and ride to his farm. He found much recreation in supervising the place, which was devoted to the raising of thoroughbred white-faced cattle, there being more than six hundred head on the farm at the time of his death.

The greatest happiness in his life, however, came to him through the companionship of his wife, his interests at all times centering in his home. However, he continually found opportunity to aid his fellowmen and he constantly left the impress of his ability and of his character upon the conditions of society and the people whom he met. As the years passed on he prospered in his undertakings and had gained the plane of affluence ere he was called home. His delight in his success came by reason of the fact that it enabled him to do for others and he was constantly extending a helping hand where aid was needed. He studied the great laws of life and saw back of them the hand of the Creator. He passed on August 28, 1920, and the high esteem in which he was uniformly held was best indicated in the great concourse of people that followed his remains as they were laid to rest in El Dorado cemetery. The humble and the great stood by his bier. People of prominence came from all parts of the state and the beautiful floral offerings expressed the high regard everywhere tendered him. His life burned with an intense desire for the good of all and for all that is best for the race, and his life was attuned to the divine and to the good that lies within his fellowmen. His memory is enshrined in the hearts of all who knew him and remains as a blessed benediction to those who were closely associated with him.

ANDERSON WATKINS, M. D.

Dr. Anderson Watkins, engaged in surgical practice in Little Rock, is a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of the city. His grandfather in the paternal line was George C. Watkins, who came to the Arkansas capital at the age of ten years with his father, Isaac Watkins, and both remained residents of Little Rock to the time of their death. Both were natives of Shelbyville, Kentucky, and came of an ancestry previously represented in Virginia. Walton Watkins, father of the Doctor, was born in Little Rock, where his life was passed. He wedded Susan Trezevant, who was born in Memphis, Tennessee, in 1850, and was a descendant of one of the French Huguenots who sought political and religious liberty in the new world. At the time of the Civil war Walton Watkins joined the Confederate forces and was a member of Cleburne's command. He was commissioned a captain and actively participated in many engagements until wounded and captured in Missouri, after which he was incarcerated on Johnsons island as a prisoner of war. He died in the year 1884, while his widow survived until January, 1902. Their family numbered but two sons: Dr. Watkins of this review; and Heyward Watkins, who died in 1908, at the age of twenty-nine years.

Dr. Watkins was born July 19, 1876, in Little Rock, Arkansas. He pursued a public school education in Little Rock, the place of his nativity. He has always continued a resident of this city. He was graduated from the high school with the class of 1893 and later pursued the work of the freshman and sophomore years in the University of Tennessee. He then entered the University of Arkansas for the study of medicine and was graduated in 1897. He has since given his attention largely to surgery and is a member of the surgical staff of St. Vincent's Hospital, chief of the surgical staff of the Baptist Hospital and chief of staff of the Little Rock City Hospital. He is likewise professor of surgery in the medical department of Arkansas University and he is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons. He likewise belongs to the Pulaski County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

On the 30th of November, 1901, Dr. Watkins was married to Miss Mary Helen Hammond, who was born at Little Rock, January 24, 1880. They attend Christ Episcopal church and Dr. Watkins is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His political views are in accord with the basic principles of the democratic party and while he has never sought nor desired office his loyalty to all those projects which have to do with the public welfare is a recognized factor in his career. During the World war he served on the council of defense of Pulaski county. His attention has naturally been given most largely to his professional duties and his developing powers have placed him in the front rank of the eminent surgeons of the state.

MAJOR CHARLES HENRY MILLER.

Major Charles Henry Miller needs no introduction to the readers of this volume, for he has an extremely wide acquaintance by reason of his connection with the Miller-Butterworth Company, engineers and contractors, of which he is the president and also by reason of the valuable service which he rendered the country in the World war. His professional ability is of an extremely high order and his success is indicated in the large number of important contracts with which his firm has been favored. He has made his home in Little Rock since 1911, but comes to this state from Pennsylvania, his birth having occurred in Strasburg, Lancaster county, in November, 1866. His parents, Henry B. and Elizabeth (Bartholomew) Miller, were also natives of Lancaster county, the former born in 1837 and the latter in January, 1845. They lived for many years in their native county, the father there following the occupation of farming in order to provide for his family. At the time of the Civil war, however, he put aside all business and personal considerations and responded to the country's call for aid to preserve the Union. With the Boys in Blue of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry he served during the last nine months of the war. His political allegiance was at all times given to the republican party, of which he was a stalwart supporter, although never an office seeker. He died in December, 1890, and is survived by his widow who still makes her home in Strasburg, Pennsylvania. They were the parents of three children: Charles H., of this review; Enos H., living in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; and John Milton, whose home is in Strasburg.

Charles Henry Miller attended the public schools of his native city and was graduated from the Strasburg high school with the class of 1884. He afterward took up the study of civil engineering in Lehigh University at South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and the C. E. degree was conferred upon him at his graduation with the class of 1888. Through the intervening period he has engaged in business as a civil engineer and contractor. Immediately following his graduation he became identified with the improvement of the Mississippi river, under the direction of the United States Engineer Corps, handling surveys, dredge work, bank revetment, dike construction, levee and ditch construction and in fact all character of work pertaining to that improvement. He was thus engaged for thirteen years, during which time he served as instrument man, draftsman, assistant engineer, chief of the survey party and superintendent of construction. At the close of the thirteen-year period, or in 1901, he was made superintendent of construction with the McClintic-Marshall Construction Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and had charge of the building of their Pittsburgh plant, which manufactures steel bridges and buildings and does all class of general construction work, consisting of concrete foundations, erection of iron buildings, placing of railroad yard tracks and placing of waterworks and sewers. For four years Mr. Miller remained with the McClintic-Marshall Construction Company and then from 1905 until 1911 was engineer of river protection for the Missouri-Pacific & Iron Mountain Railway System, having charge of all river-bank protection work as well as drainage work along the lines of these railways and at the same time handled a considerable amount of special consulting work pertaining to river protection and drainage for a half dozen or more other railway systems. He next spent six years, from 1911 until 1916, as president of the Miller Engineering Company, now the Miller-Butterworth Company of Little Rock, Arkansas, engaged in the general engineering and contracting business. He was chief engineer for a number of very large drainage districts in Arkansas and Missouri and also became a member of the board of consulting engineers for the Dayton flood committee and handled a considerable amount of consulting work for drainage districts and railways. As contractors the company built about five miles of bank protection for the Caddo levee board of Shreveport, Louisiana, built several miles of Macadam road in Lonoke county, constructed Dam No. 2 of the Ouachita river, for the United States government and also dikes and bank work for the government in the Mississippi river between Grafton, Illinois, and Louisiana, Missouri. At the present time the company is engaged in the construction of thirty-three miles of "Warrenite" road in Arkansas county.

In the midst of a highly successful business career, Mr. Miller put aside all thoughts of personal interest because the country needed his service in connection with the World war. He enlisted in June, 1917, and was on duty until April, 1919. From the first date until December, 1917, he was located at Deming, New Mexico, as constructing quartermaster in the building of Camp Cody, near Deming, erecting buildings to accommodate thirty thousand soldiers. When this work was almost completed, about the middle of November, 1917, he was transferred to the Twenty-third Engineers and stationed at Camp Meade, Maryland, while later he went to Laurel, Maryland, organizing and getting ready for overseas duty as a member of the Highway Regiment, being major in command of the Second Battalion and having charge of several construction jobs around Camps Meade, Laurel and Humphreys. From the 13th of April, 1918, until April, 1919, Major Miller was in France. He was in charge of construction work on the Nevers Cut-off (Railroad) to the 4th of July and then in charge of construction at the Advance Overhaul Motor Park, No. 2, at Dijon, until the 11th of October. He was next placed in charge of construction at Base Hospital Center, motor spare parts and overhaul park of the army school camps at Langres, France, where he continued until December 10 and was then assigned in addition all building work and repairs in training areas seven to twenty-two inclusive. On the 18th of December, 1918, he was given charge, in addition, of all road repair work, handling this in conjunction with the several division engineers. Being a district engineer he made reports direct to the chief engineer of the advance section, the road work involving a total of approximately seven thousand miles of road. This was gradually turned over to the divisions as they came back from the front and occupied nine of the training areas.

It was in February, 1919, that Major Miller was transferred to the Three Hundred and Seventh Engineers of the Eighty-second Division and early in March received orders to report to the commanding officer at Brest for return to the United States, reaching Newport News on April 2, 1919, while three days later he was honorably discharged at Washington. He at once returned to Little Rock and took up his work in connection with the Miller-Butterworth Company, since which time this company has been engaged in the general contracting and engineering business, their contract work being principally in line with good road construction. The engineering work handled by Mr. Miller personally has involved principally general consulting practice. In this connection he received appointment from the supreme court of the United States as a member of the commission to settle the boundary between Arkansas and Mississippi, a short distance below Friars Point, Mississippi. He was also consulting expert engineer for the United States government in the sunk land cases in eastern Arkansas and consulting engineer for the United States government in the boundary dispute between Texas and Oklahoma near Wichita Falls.

It will be of interest in this connection, as showing the value of Major Miller's service when on duty overseas, to include in his history letters received from his commanding officers at the close of the war. W. M. Black, major general, chief of engineers, wrote to him as follows: "1. The signing of the armistice with the Central Powers having made further sacrifice on your part unnecessary, I wish to convey to you my appreciation of your efforts in behalf of your country during the recent emergency. The engineers of the United States have by their patriotic and self-sacrificing conduct well merited greater thanks and appreciation than it is possible for me or any other one man to give them. I am sure, however, that when it is possible to relate in full the efforts and accomplishments of American engineers, both overseas and in this country, the people of the United States will show appreciation of their efforts in no uncertain terms. 2. That you have been one of these engineers and have contributed your part toward this successful accomplishment constitutes in itself an honor greater than any official expression of opinion. Permit me, however, to extend to you my personal thanks and those of the corps of engineers for your efforts and assistance."

From L. S. Chappelle, adjutant general, Major Miller received a communication reading, "There is inclosed herewith extract copy of letter received from Brigadier General I. W. Littell, Quartermaster Corps National Army. The department appreciates the splendid service rendered by you in connection with the work of cantonment construction and advises that a copy of the letter from Brigadier General Littell has been filed with your records in this office." The inclosure signed I. W. Littell, Brigadier General, Q. M. Corps N. A., was as follows: "1. Having just received orders relieving me from duty in charge of the Cantonment Division, I take this occasion to especially commend the officers of the Engineer Corps named below. 2. The magnitude of the work with which they have been connected is best shown by the fact that construction work to the extent of an average of eight million dollars had to be performed within a period of six months in connection with the cantonments and the expenditure of approximately two million dollars within a shorter period of time in connection with each National Guard camp. The short time in which this work had to be completed is the element which makes these achievements remarkable. 3. In view of the unusual task which has been accomplished by the constructing quartermasters in the development and construction of these camps, with but a limited amount of assistance from other officers, it is desired that this great service shall not go unnoticed, but that there shall be placed upon the record of the officers who had charge of this work the definite statement from this office that the service which each has rendered is worthy the highest commendation within the power of this office to express. 4. The problems involved in laying out the cantonments and camps, development of systems of water supply, sewerage and electric lighting, and the design and construction of systems of roads, both within the camps and between the camps and the nearby cities and towns, have all been of such character as in civil life are handled by consulting engineers of established reputation. The fact that these officers were able to plan and execute the great problem of design and construction shows conclusively that they are deserving of well merited recognition. Major Charles H. Miller, Engineer R. C., was the constructing quartermaster at Camp Cody, Deming, N. M."

Major Miller is most pleasantly situated in his home life. He was married October 9, 1900, in Luna Landing, Arkansas, to Miss Edna Ward, who was born there in June, 1881, a daughter of Francis M. and Virginia (Bryan) Ward. The father, a native of North Carolina, died in December, 1897, while the mother lives at Little Rock, Arkansas. Mrs. Miller was educated in a high school of her native town and by her marriage has become the mother of two daughters: Anne Charlene, now the wife of Captain Edgar A. O'Hair, U. S. A.; and Marion Edna.

Both Major and Mrs. Miller are members of the Second Presbyterian church of Little Rock, in which he is filling the office of deacon, and fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In politics he maintains an independent course, voting for men and measures rather than party, and preferring at all times to concentrate his efforts and his attention upon his professional interests and duties. He is well known to the profession because of his frequent contribution of articles to leading technical journals, his writings appearing often in the transactions of the American Society of Civil Engineers, in the proceedings of the American Railway Engineering Association and in the Engineering News Record, besides other publications. He has always maintained the highest professional standards and an indication of the advanced position which he fills is found in the fact that he has been admitted to membership in the American Society of Civil Engineers, the American Railway Engineering Association and the American Association of Engineers.

CLARENCE BURNETT CRAIG.

Clarence Burnett Craig, attorney at law at Pine Bluff, with offices in the Citizens Bank building, was born in Hickman county, Kentucky, in 1885, his parents being Joseph and Martha (Hicks) Craig. The father was born in Perry county, Tennessee, and at the time of the Civil war joined the Confederate forces, being wounded in action. The mother was a representative of one of the old families originally from Virginia. To Mr. and Mrs. Craig were born the following named: Clarence Burnett; J. T., an attorney living at Paragould, Arkansas, who formerly served as a member of the state legislature;

W. A., a physician living at Eudora, Arkansas; Sam V., an attorney, residing at Clinton, Kentucky; Claude, an educator of Oklahoma; Betty, the wife of the Rev. Ernest Peters; Viva, the wife of David B. Graham; Jesse of Clinton, Kentucky; and John, who follows farming in Kentucky.

Clarence Burnett Craig pursued his education in Marvin College of Clinton county, Kentucky, in the State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and in the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, in which latter place he pursued his law course and won his professional degree. He afterward practiced at Paducah, Kentucky, for several years and there filled the position of county attorney of McCracken county for four years. In 1918 he enlisted for service in the United States army at Camp Gordon, Georgia, and was assigned to the Officers Training School. After leaving the army he removed to Pine Bluff, where he has since engaged in law practice, and although one of the younger representatives of the bar here, he has made steady progress and has already reached a position which many an older lawyer might well envy.

Mr. Craig was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Rabb Kirkland of Paducah, Kentucky, and during the period of their connection with Pine Bluff they have won many friends here and have been accorded a cordial welcome in the social circles of the city. Fraternally Mr. Craig is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

G. R. HOLBROOK.

G. R. Holbrook, who is the efficient cashier of the Huntington State Bank at Huntington, Arkansas, was born in Kansas, and after acquiring a public school education he entered railroad service in a clerical capacity. Since that time he has steadily progressed, through the wise use of his time, talents and opportunities. After his railroad service he was connected with the coal business at Midland and later removed to Huntington, where he has remained. Here he was also engaged in the coal trade for a time but for the past nine years has been associated with the Huntington State Bank, in which he is now cashier. His ability in this direction is recognized by his fellow officials in the institution as well as by the general public that always finds him a courteous and obliging official—one who is just as thorough in looking after the welfare of patrons of the bank as in protecting the interests of the institution. He married Miss Clara Woodson.

J. M. HARRISON.

J. M. Harrison, filling the office of postmaster at Prairie Grove, is a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of Washington county. From an early period in the development of this section of the state representatives of the name have here been found and have been closely associated with agricultural and other business interests leading to the upbuilding of northwestern Arkansas. The grandfather, Green L. Harrison, came by flatboat to Lewisburg, now Morrilton, and then drove across the country with ox team to Washington county, where he established his residence. His son, Richard P. Harrison, was born and reared near Prairie Grove, Arkansas, and spent his entire life in this locality, his attention being given to agricultural pursuits. He married Malinda Howell, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of Wiley B. Howell, who was an early settler of Arkansas and afterward gave a part of his original claim to his daughter, Mrs. Harrison. He, too, bore his part in the work of pioneer development here. Mrs. Harrison died on the old homestead farm, while Richard P. Harrison died at Eureka Springs. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in politics Mr. Harrison was an earnest democrat who twice represented his district in the state legislature and left the impress of his individuality upon the laws enacted during that period. For four years he served with the Confederate army in the Civil war. To him and his wife were born five children, of whom three are living: Mrs. John Mock, who was born August 10, 1868, and resides in Altus, Oklahoma; T. P., who was born May 6, 1871, and is now county assessor of Washington county, living at Prairie Grove; and J. M. Another child of the family, Lillie, became the wife of W. R. Campbell, who resided near Prairie Grove, where her death occurred in 1897.

J. M. Harrison was born near Prairie Grove on the 15th of April, 1878. He obtained his education in the schools of Prairie Grove, spending his youthful days on the home farm to the age of eighteen years, when he turned to mercantile pursuits and was identified with commercial interests in Prairie Grove to the time of his appointment to the office of postmaster, in which he is now serving for the second term. He is very prompt and faithful in the discharge of his duties and has made a most excellent record in office.

On the 16th of May, 1902, Mr. Harrison was married to Miss Auda E. Morris, who was born and reared at Canehill, Arkansas. They were the last couple that Dr. Harrison Welch ever married. Mrs. Harrison is a daughter of Larkin M. and Elba (Edmiston) Morris, natives of Georgia and of Washington county, Arkansas, respectively. Following their marriage they spent their entire lives in Washington county, where Mr. Morris followed shoemaking. Mr. and Mrs. Morris had three children, two of whom survive: Frank, who is manager for the office of the Arbuckle Coffee Company at El Paso, Texas; and Mrs. Harrison. Both Mr. and Mrs. Morris were members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Morris belonged to the Masonic fraternity, loyally following the teachings and purposes of the craft. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have become parents of two daughters and a son: Lillian, who is now attending college at Chickasha, Oklahoma; Grace, who is a high school pupil; and Morris, who is in his last year in the grammar school grades. The family is highly esteemed, warm-hearted hospitality being extended to them throughout the community in which they make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are faithful followers of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his membership relations also extend to the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He is a past chancellor in the former organization and has also filled all of the chairs in the Woodmen camp. His political allegiance has always been given to the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and he received his appointment to his present office under the administration of President Wilson. He is proving a most capable official, loyal in every way to the duties reposed in him, and he has won not only commendation for his faithfulness and capability in office but also has gained the high respect of all with whom social, business or official relations have brought him into contact.

W. A. CLARK, M. D.

Dr. W. A. Clark, successfully following his profession in Bald Knob, was born in Hardin county, Tennessee, on the 1st of January, 1868, and is a representative of one of the old families of that state. His paternal grandfather was also born in Tennessee and devoted his life to the work of the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He was the father of J. H. Clark, whose birth likewise occurred in Hardin county, Tennessee, and who obtained his early education in subscription schools there, while later he continued his studies in the State Normal School at Carbondale, Illinois, gaining a liberal education for that time. He afterward taught in the rural schools and later was principal of a high school at Henderson, Tennessee, for three years. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted under Colonel Williams and served throughout the period of hostilities, being wounded at the battle of Shiloh by a gunshot which terminated his military career. He then returned to his home and resumed the profession of teaching. In 1881 he removed to Franklin county, Arkansas, and taught in the rural districts near Ozark and Lonelm. In December, 1888, he removed to Bald Knob and taught in district No. 63 during 1889 and 1890. Subsequently he engaged in the hotel business in Bald Knob for several years, after which he returned to his former home in Tennessee, but died in White county, Arkansas, when on a visit here in 1916, at the age of seventy-five years. In young manhood he had married Harriett Alexander, who was also born in Hardin county, Tennessee, and was a daughter of John Alexander, whose birth occurred in South Carolina, whence he removed to Hardin county, Tennessee, where he owned and conducted a large plantation. He was also the owner of fifty-five slaves at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war and he had an extensively and splendidly developed plantation but lost everything during that period of strife. He died in 1877, at the age of seventy-eight years. His daughter, Mrs. Clark, survived her father only until January, 1879, and was but thirty-two years of age at the time of her demise. By her marriage she had become the mother of six children: Jennie, who is the widow of S. H. Rosseau and resides in St. Louis; W. A., of this review; R. C., proprietor of a drug store at Bald Knob; Mollie, the wife of A. L. Stokes of Malden, Missouri; J. F., of Gallup, New Mexico; and Hattie, the wife of W. H. Worsley of Paragould, Arkansas, where he is cashier in the Green County Bank. After losing his first wife J. H. Clark was married to Mary E. (Alexander) Pickens and they had two children: Anna, the wife of a Mr. Weber of St. Louis; and Edna, the wife of S. H. Vandine of St. Louis. For his third wife Mr. Clark chose Miss Mary Beard. He was a lifelong member and supporter of the Methodist Episcopal church and he also belonged to the Masonic fraternity, while his political allegiance was given to the democratic party.

Dr. Clark mastered the branches of learning taught in the country schools of his native state and at the age of eighteen years began teaching in the rural schools of Franklin county, Arkansas, but he regarded this merely as an initial step to other professional labor, as it was his desire to enter upon the practice of medicine and he began reading for that purpose when nineteen years of age. He afterward became a student in the Missouri Medical College and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons with the class of 1892, winning the M. D. degree. He opened an office at Bald Knob in 1889 and through the intervening years, covering a third of a century, has here continued in the general practice of medicine and surgery, his labors being of marked value and benefit to his fellowmen. He has taken postgraduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic and he is justly accounted a most skilled and able physician. He is extremely careful in the diagnosis of his cases and is seldom, if ever, at fault in his opinion. He devotes practically his entire time and attention to his profession and yet is the owner of farm lands, from which he derives a substantial annual income.

Dr. Clark was married to Miss Ollie Lumpkin, a native of Arkansas, and they have two children: L. C., who is engaged in the confectionery business in Tucson, Arizona; and Lucile, the wife of O. J. Clark, proprietor of a variety store at Bald Knob. Dr. Clark gives his political endorsement to the democratic party. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, while his wife is of the Baptist faith and both are held in high esteem throughout the community in which they live. Along strictly professional lines Dr. Clark is connected with the White County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association and thus keeps thoroughly informed concerning advanced professional thought and modern research and investigation.

WALLER O. GREEN.

Waller O. Green, secretary and a member of the board of directors of the Missouri Lumber Company of Hot Springs, his close application, his thoroughness and his progressiveness winning for him a place among the representative business men of the city, was born in Marceline, Missouri, October 3, 1884, and is a son of Robert and Missouri E. (Hainds) Green, both of whom were also natives of Missouri. The father was for many years prominently identified with the cattle breeding and cattle dealing industry of Missouri, continuing in the business to the time of his death, which occurred about 1906. His widow survives and resides on the old home farm near Marceline, which has been her home for the past forty-two years.

Waller O. Green was educated in the public schools of Marceline and in the William Jewell College at Liberty, Missouri, following which he turned his attention to merchandising at Meadville, Missouri, and was successfully engaged in business of that character until 1901, at which time he went to Kansas City and for four years was employed as a shoe salesman in one of the large establishments of that character in Missouri's western metropolis. In 1905 he removed to Kirksville, Missouri, and was employed by the Adair Lumber Company, of which his brother-in-law, W. O. Creason, was general manager. Mr. Green remained in that position for two years and then came to Hot Springs, where in connection with his brother-in-law he purchased the business of the Missouri Lumber Company. They then incorporated their interests under the same name, with a capital stock of seventy-five thousand dollars, all owned by Mr. Green and Mr. and Mrs. Creason. The company does an extensive business as dealers in lumber and in fact ranks with the leading lumber firms of this section of the state. They have developed their trade along substantial lines and their business is now one of most gratifying proportions. Mr. Green is likewise a member of the Green-Wheeler Lumber & Coal Company of Manchester, Kentucky. He is watchful of every opportunity pointing to advancement and success in business. He readily discriminates between the essential and the non-essential in all commercial affairs and his determination and energy have enabled him to overcome obstacles and difficulties and push steadily forward to the goal of prosperity. In addition to his lumber interests he is a stockholder in the Rowland Oil Company of El Dorado, Arkansas, which has two producing wells, and he is a member of the Arkansas Oil & Mineral Association. He is likewise a heavy landholder in Garland county, on the Little Rock and Hot Springs highway, and his holdings constitute a valuable oil prospect, which is being developed and a well is now being drilled.

Mr. Green was married in Meadville, Missouri, in 1904, to Miss Mary K. Creason and they became parents of one son, Onis Creason Green. Fraternally Mr. Green is connected with the Hot Springs Lodge of the Knights of Pythias and he also belongs to the Rotary Club. The religious faith of Mr. Green is that of the Baptist church, while his wife worships at the Christian church. They are both most highly esteemed people, enjoying the warm regard of all with whom business or social relations have brought them into contact. Mr. Green deserves much credit for what he has accomplished. He started out in the business world without capital save the qualities of industry and perseverance. He early recognized the fact that success plays as a will-o'-the-wisp before the dreamer, tauntingly slips away from the sluggard but yields its rewards to the man of earnest purpose and thorough reliability. He therefore cultivated these qualities and as the years have passed on has advanced steadily, step by step, until he occupies a place in the front rank among the foremost business men of his adopted city.

JOHN ALBERT BELL.

For twenty-eight years John Albert Bell was numbered among the representatives of merchandising in Lonoke, for throughout this entire period he was proprietor of a grocery store and at the time of his death was also owner of the Queen Theatre, a moving picture house. A native of Lonoke county, he was born in Brownsville in 1860 and was a son of William and Mary Ann (Liggett) Bell, who were natives of Mississippi and of Arkansas, respectively. The father served in the Confederate army as a private and throughout his entire life was a loyal defender of any cause which he espoused. To him and his wife were born six children, three of whom are yet living.

John Albert Bell pursued his education in the schools of his native county and in his youth divided his time between his studies, the pleasures of the playground and the work of the fields. He continued to assist his father on the farm for some time after leaving school but at length determined to enter commercial circles and established a grocery business in Lonoke in 1894. In addition to conducting a retail store of large proportions Mr. Bell also sold to the wholesale trade and was a dealer in feed, conducting this branch of his business under the name of the Bell Commission Company. He carried a large and well selected line of staple and fancy groceries. The neat arrangement of his store, the excellent line of products which he handled and his thoroughly reliable business methods were the salient features in the attainment of his success. Ever watchful of opportunity he also entered upon another field of labor as proprietor of a moving picture house, which added materially to his annual income and he furnished to the public the best film attractions, therefore making his theatre worthy of a liberal patronage.

Mr. Bell was married to Miss Barbara Alice Johnson, of Lonoke county, a daughter of William Johnson, who was a native of Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Bell were born the following children: Alta is now Mrs. W. N. Morton of Lonoke; Walter, the eldest son, is an ex-service man, having done active duty in the World war; Myrtle is deceased; Minnie is the wife of George Martin of El Dorado; John is also deceased; Ila is a professional motion picture operator and, being of a mechanical turn of mind, is perhaps one of the best operators in the state of Arkansas; Wesley, Eugene, Grace, Wallace and Clyde are at home. Having lost his first wife Mr. Bell was married to Mrs. Lola Peel and they had two children: Dorothy and Francis. By her former marriage Mrs. Bell has one son, Rimmel Peel, now eleven years of age.

In public affairs Mr. Bell was always keenly and helpfully interested and, called to the office of mayor of his town, he was continued in the position by reelection for eight years, during which time he gave to the city a businesslike and progressive administration, productive of many excellent results in the way of advancing civic standards and civic service. Fraternally he was a member of the Knights of Pythias. He died at his home in Lonoke, December 18, 1921, honored and respected by all who knew him.

DAPHNEY E. WHITE, M. D.

Dr. Daphney E. White, a well known physician and surgeon of El Dorado, was born in Monticello, Arkansas, February 22, 1898. His parents, John W. and Elizabeth (Rogland) White, are both representatives of old southern families. The father was born in Drew county, Arkansas, while the mother's birth occurred in Macon, Georgia. They have resided continuously in Drew county and in Monticello since their marriage, having for the last thirty years made their home in Monticello. Mr. White served as sheriff of Drew county for a period of four years and has long been prominently known throughout the southern part of the state as a leading dealer in live stock.

JOHN A. BELL

Dr. White, having completed a course in the Monticello high school, spent one year in the pursuit of a premedical course in the University of Arkansas and then devoted four years to the study of medicine in Vanderbilt University of Tennessee. There he won his M. D. degree as a member of the class of 1919 and made high standing, becoming the honor man of the class, being awarded the Founder's Medal, which is conferred upon the scholar having the highest average during the four years' course. He was also further honored by being made president of the scholarship fraternity known as the Phi Kappa Chi, membership in this fraternity requiring a yearly average of not less than ninety for the first three years. These high positions to which he attained indicates the splendid work he did through his university course, thus qualifying for the great responsibilities that devolve upon the physician and surgeon. Following his graduation he served as interne for eighteen months in Vassar Brothers Hospital at Poughkeepsie, New York, and during that period took special instruction in eye, ear, nose and throat work. In June, 1921, he came to El Dorado and entered upon the active practice of the profession in partnership with Dr. Cathey, thus forming the medical firm of Cathey and White. In this connection Dr. White specializes upon diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, while his partner gives his attention to other divisions of medical and surgical practice, mainly surgery. The firm is recognized as one of prominence in southern Arkansas and Dr. White is accorded high rank by reason of his splendidly developed ability in his chosen field. He belongs to the medical fraternity, the Phi Beta Pi, also has membership in the Union County Medical Society, the Arkansas State Medical Society, the Tri-State Medical Society, the Nashville Academy of Medicine and the American Medical Association.

On the 29th of June, 1919, Dr. White was united in marriage to Miss Mary Lynn Jagers of Monticello, Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. White occupy an enviable social position and they hold membership in the Presbyterian church, their interest centering in those channels through which flows the greatest good to the greatest number.

GORDON FRIERSON.

Gordon Frierson, one of the well known attorneys of Jonesboro and a member of the firm of Frierson & Penix, was born at Forrest City, Arkansas, November 18, 1872, a son of James Gordon and Emma G. (Davis) Frierson, of whom an account is given on another page of this volume.

Gordon Frierson, after the usual public schooling, entered the law school at the University of Arkansas in Little Rock and in 1896 received his B. L. degree. In 1893 and 1894 he was executive clerk to Governor Fishback and in 1895 and 1896 held the same position under Governor Clarke.

After his graduation and admittance to the bar Mr. Frierson came to Jonesboro and here remained until the opening of the Spanish-American war, when he enlisted in Company C of the Second Arkansas Volunteer Infantry. In this branch of the army he remained throughout his period of service.

In 1905 and 1906 Mr. Frierson assumed the duties of private secretary to Senator Clarke, one of the most distinguished citizens and statesmen of Arkansas. In July, 1906, he went to the republic of Panama and served in the department of civil administration until September, 1907, when he returned to Jonesboro and resumed the practice of his profession. Mr. Frierson served as police judge of Jonesboro, having been elected in 1903 and again in 1905. He was mayor during two terms, beginning in 1917 and ending in 1921.

On the 14th of March, 1912, Mr. Frierson was married to Miss Pearl Clardy, daughter of the late Hon. Martin L. Clardy of St. Louis, who was vice president and general solicitor of the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Frierson is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. He is a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian church.

JUDGE JOE BEASLEY.

Judge Joe Beasley, a man of high intellectual attainments and a leading representative of the Bentonville bar, is now serving for the second term as judge of Benton county and his record upon the bench is in harmony with his record as a man and citizen—distinguished by marked fidelity to duty and by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution. He is a native of Tennessee and a representative of an old family of that state. He was born at Murfreesboro in 1884, a son of B. F. and Ann (Bowen) Beasley, who were also natives of that state, where they continued to make their home until 1896, when they removed to Benton county, Arkansas, the father following the occupation of farming. They were members of the Christian church and in his political views Mr. Beasley was a populist. He died in 1903, but the mother survives and is a resident of Hiwassee, Arkansas. Of their family five children are living: Sam, a prominent attorney of Bentonville; Joe, of this review; Hattie, who is serving as postmistress of Hiwassee; Esther, who resides at home and is a teacher in the country schools; and Noble, who is a student at the West Point Military Academy. The paternal grandfather, John E. Beasley, was a Confederate soldier, serving for four years in the Civil war. He married Catherine Hall, who is still residing in Tennessee, having reached the very advanced age of ninety-five years.

In the acquirement of an education Judge Beasley attended the district schools and the State Normal School of Arkansas, after which he entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1915 on the completion of a course in law. Coming to Bentonville, Arkansas, he opened an office and has since engaged in practice here. He has been accorded a good clientage, for he has displayed marked skill in the conduct of intricate cases and has won many verdicts favorable to the interests of those whom he represents. In 1918 his fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, called him to the office of county judge of Benton county, and so creditable a record did he make in that connection that he was honored with reelection in 1920 and is now serving in that capacity. He is strictly fair and impartial in all of his rulings and his decisions are sustained by the higher courts upon appeal.

On the 15th of June, 1920, Judge Beasley was united in marriage to Miss Kate Fair, a native of Benton county and a daughter of S. T. Fair, who was born in Tennessee and on reaching mature years followed the occupation of farming and also engaged in teaching school. Subsequently he removed to Benton county, Arkansas, where he enlisted for service in the Civil war. Mrs. Beasley is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, while the Judge is affiliated with the Christian church. In his political views he is a stalwart democrat, active in the interests of the party, and he has been chosen to fill the office of justice of the peace. His fraternal connections are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masons. He is a member of Hiwassee Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master, and he is also identified with the chapter. He holds to high ideals in his professional service and is proving an able presiding officer over the tribunal of which he has charge.

J. H. BROCK.

J. H. Brock, member of the Clarksville bar, was born on a farm in Pope county, Arkansas, March 12, 1875, and is a son of David and Jane (Booher) Brock, who were natives of Mississippi and of Pope county, Arkansas, respectively. The former was a son of Russell Brock, who was born in Mississippi and in 1857 removed with his family to Pope county, Arkansas, where he followed farming. He served with the rank of major in the Confederate army during the Civil war. The grandfather in the maternal line was William Booher, who was born in Arkansas and spent practically his entire life in Pope county. He, too, was a Confederate soldier, who reached the rank of lieutenant.

The marriage of David Brock and Jane Booher was celebrated in Pope county and in 1883 they removed to Johnson county, where he purchased a farm, both residing thereon until called to their final rest. The farm comprised one hundred and sixty acres of productive land, which he carefully, systematically and successfully cultivated. He, too, was a Confederate soldier, serving from 1862 until the close of hostilities and on one occasion he was slightly wounded. He voted with the democratic party and in religious faith he and his wife were connected with the Methodist Episcopal church. They had a family of fifteen children, of whom nine are living: Lou, who is the wife of J. P. Underwood, a farmer and trader of Clarksville; J. D., a farmer living in Piney, Arkansas; Tempie, the wife of C. W. Smith, who follows farming in Oklahoma; J. H., of this review; Susie, the wife of H. M. Smith, a miner of Colorado; Zeta, the wife of Robert Lowery, a teacher of Blaine, Arkansas; Thomas, who follows farming at Elaine, Arkansas; Maude, the wife of John Cagle, a farmer of Knoxville, Arkansas; and Lizzie, the wife of Willis O'Neal, who devotes his attention to agricultural pursuits in Clarksville.

An old log schoolhouse was the little temple of learning in which J. H. Brock pursued his education. He read and studied whenever opportunity offered and through this means and through the experiences of life has learned many valuable lessons. Turning his attention to farming in early life he devoted thirty-five years to the work of tilling the soil and brought his farm under a high state of cultivation. He also traded in horses, sold goods, operated a sawmill and utilized every opportunity for advancement and step by step he has steadily progressed.

On the 16th of December, 1896, Mr. Brock was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Townsel, who was born in Logan county, Arkansas, a daughter of James Townsel, who was a native of Ohio and received his discharge from the Union army in Arkansas, after which he decided to remain in this state and here spent the rest of his days. Mr. and Mrs. Brock became parents of six children, three of whom are living: Icie, the wife of E. E. Wright, a farmer and merchant of Piney, Arkansas; James, who is living with his father; Townsel, who is in school. The wife and mother died September 4, 1915, and on the 22d of April, 1917, Mr. Brock was married to Miss Jean Phillips, who was born in Johnson county, Arkansas, a daughter of Robert Phillips, a native of Scotland, who came to this state in 1879 and here followed farming and mining. Mr. and Mrs. Brock are parents of a daughter, Jean, three years of age. They belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and he is an exemplary member of the Masonic fraternity, being a past master of his lodge. In politics he is a democrat and for a number of years he served as justice of the peace.

All of these interests and experiences finally led Mr. Brock into the field in which he is now active. It was in 1905 that he began the study of law, having purchased and borrowed books and pursued his law study independently. In 1912 he was admitted to the bar. He had practiced in a justice court soon after he began to study and he entered upon the real practice of law in 1914 in Clarksville, where he has remained. Steadily he has progressed and has made for himself a creditable position in the ranks of the legal fraternity of Johnson county. In 1917 he was appointed deputy prosecuting attorney by H. H. Ragon, under whom he served during his term of office. He was then appointed to the same position by Sam Rorex and is still serving in that capacity. He devotes all of his time and attention to his official duties and to the private practice of law. However, in addition he owns three hundred and seventy-five acres of land, about one-half of which has been placed under a high state of cultivation. Thereon he raises cattle, hogs and horses and likewise produces large crops in grain and cotton. He has made every dollar that he possesses and has proudly won the American title of a self-made man. Energy, ability, force of character and determination have constituted the strong elements in his success and his course commands for him the respect, confidence and good will of all who know aught of his career.

JOHN H. HAMILTON.

John H. Hamilton, one of the successful real estate dealers of Mena, well known in the business circles of Polk county, was born in Alabama in 1851 and is descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Abraham Hamilton, was a native of South Carolina and a millwright by trade. He spent his last years in Tennessee. His son, John Hamilton, was born in South Carolina in 1818. He started with his parents in a covered wagon to Tennessee and while en route the parents of John Hamilton with their family met the family of Martin Hamilton, who was a native of Virginia and a farmer by occupation. He was on the road with his family to Mississippi, also traveling in a covered wagon. It was at this time that John Hamilton formed the acquaintance of Jane Hamilton and they were married, and likewise another son and daughter of the two Hamilton families were married while they were on their way westward. After their marriage John and Jane Hamilton continued on their way to Hamilton, Marion county, Alabama, where he engaged in merchandising and in mechanical pursuits, including blacksmithing. He prospered in his undertaking there and afterward went to Louisville, Kentucky, where he purchased a stock of goods, which he shipped by boat for some distance and then hauled his goods ninety miles by ox team and wagon from the river to his destination. During the opening year of the Civil war he joined the Sixteenth Alabama Infantry and died from disease at Knoxville, Tennessee. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and his wife belonged to the Eastern Star. In politics he was a democrat, but was a staunch advocate of the Union cause, having entered the service of his country as soon as hostilities were inaugurated. Both he and his wife belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church. He died in 1863, while his wife survived for a quarter of a century, departing this life in 1888, being then seventy-two years of age, her birth having occurred in Virginia in 1816. In their family were eleven children, four of whom are living: Mrs. Hannah Vaughn, a widow, residing in Tupelo, Mississippi, at the age of seventy-eight years; Julia, the wife of J. A. Morgan, a farmer living at Tupelo; John H., of this review; and Fannie E., the wife of Gabie Brown, a farmer and money loaner of Calvin, Oklahoma.

John H. Hamilton, whose name introduces this review, was educated in Vernon, Alabama, and in young manhood devoted his attention to mercantile interests. He remained in the business in Detroit, Alabama, for a number of years, and in 1880 took up his abode at Eureka Springs, Arkansas, becoming one of the early merchants of that place. He also served as postmaster of the town under President Cleveland's first administration. He likewise filled the office of county clerk of Carroll county, Arkansas, for one term and following his retirement from office he engaged in the real estate business, which he capably and successfully conducted. In July, 1896, he came to Mena, arriving a few days before the completion of the railroad to this point. He built the third house in the town, it costing him fifty-six dollars to complete the structure, which he rented for a dollar per day. He had charge of land for the railroad company, making the sales for the corporation, and when this was accomplished he continued in the real estate business on his own account and has won substantial success in the careful and sagacious conduct of his affairs. As opportunity has offered he has made judicious investments and now owns considerable farm lands and city property. He is also a stockholder in the Planters' State Bank. He started out in the business world empty-handed and had enjoyed no special advantages in the way of education or along other lines. Moreover, he had a widowed mother whom he had to support, receiving, the first two years he worked, fifty cents a day. He learned the multiplication table after he was seventeen years of age and notwithstanding various handicaps he has made his way steadily upward until he is today one of the prosperous and representative business men of western Arkansas, conducting an extensive real estate and loan agency.

In 1876 Mr. Hamilton was united in marriage to Miss Michael Key, who was born in Georgia and died in 1887, leaving a son, Paul K., now at Birmingham, Alabama, where he is engaged in the wholesale and retail commission business. On the 7th of November, 1920, Mr. Hamilton was again married, his second union being with Pearl M. (Dean) Brewer, who was born in Sebastian county, Arkansas, where her father settled in pioneer times. He was an Indian scout and also served as United States marshal for a number of years. Mrs. Hamilton clerked in the Mena post office for fourteen years before her marriage. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed all of the chairs. In politics he is an earnest democrat and in 1907 and 1909 was elected to the state legislature, in which he served for two terms, giving thoughtful and earnest consideration to the vital questions which came up for settlement during his connection with the general assembly. He was mayor of Mena for two terms and for twenty years served on the school board, the cause of education finding in him a stalwart champion and one whose labors were of practical benefit in the upbuilding of the schools. He organized the first school in Mena and he has been closely associated with the development and progress of the city in many ways. There were no houses in Mena when he came here and his first place of abode was a tent that stood on the site now occupied by his office, it being on the main street of the city. Today he owns the entire block, which is built up with good business property and returns to him a very gratifying annual rental. Mr. Hamilton also has a military chapter in his life record. He was one of the youngest Confederate soldiers, entering the army in 1864 and serving with Forrest's cavalry. He had twenty-one relatives who were also with the Confederate forces. His entire time and attention are given to his business affairs as a real estate dealer in Mena and his capability is manifest in the substantial results which he achieved as the years passed by. He truly deserves all the credit that is implied in the term a self-made man and his life record should serve to inspire and encourage others, showing what may be accomplished through individual effort intelligently directed.

EARNEST ERVIN.

Earnest Ervin, conducting an abstract business in Booneville, was born in 1882, near the city in which he still resides, and is a son of J. C. and Eliza (McCaskill) Ervin. The father, a native of Tennessee, is still living at the age of sixty-eight years, but the mother, who was born in South Carolina in 1858, died on the 13th of May, 1916. The former was a son of Jonathan Ervin, who was born in Tennessee, but became a resident of Arkansas and during the period of the Civil war served as county jailer in Polk county. The mother was a daughter of W. K. McCaskill, a native of North Carolina, who arrived in Arkansas when Logan county was still largely an undeveloped district and here spent his remaining days. The marriage of J. C. Ervin and Eliza McCaskill was celebrated near Booneville and they became parents of five children: Ollie, who is the widow of W. M. Burgess and resides in Cowlington, Oklahoma; J. K., a farmer of Booneville; Earnest, of this review; Lafayette, who is city salesman for the Western Grain Company at Fort Smith, Arkansas; and Mays, a jeweler and watchmaker by trade, now living at Tulia, Texas. The father is a member of the Baptist church, to which Mrs. Ervin also belongs. He likewise has membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he gives his political allegiance to the democratic party. For many years he followed farming, making that occupation his life work, but is now living retired, making his home with his daughter in Oklahoma.

Earnest Ervin, having attended the public schools of Logan county, afterward pursued a course in bookkeeping at Arkadelphia. He started out to provide for his own support as a farmer and continued to give his attention to agricultural interests until twenty-four years of age, when he turned to commercial pursuits, becoming a shipping clerk in a wholesale grocery house at Fort Smith. There he continued for three years and later spent a similar period upon the road as a traveling salesman. He next engaged in the grocery business at Booneville for twelve months and later obtained a position in the office of the circuit clerk, there remaining for two years. In 1912 he was appointed deputy county clerk and has been associated with the office in this connection continuously since. He likewise conducts an abstract business under the name of the Booneville Abstracting Company and has gained many clients, so that his business is now a substantial one.

In 1904 Mr. Ervin was married to Miss Addie Westmoreland, who was born in Mississippi, a daughter of H. M. Westmoreland, who came to Logan county, Arkansas, about 1888, and is now living on a farm near Booneville. Mr. and Mrs. Ervin are the parents of three children, Edward, Virginia and Elizabeth, all in school. Politically Mr. Ervin is a democrat. He is interested in all those forces which make for public progress and civic betterment and his cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any movement for the general good. He has a wide acquaintance in Logan county, where his entire life has been passed, the sterling traits of his character gaining for him the respect, confidence and good will of all with whom he has been associated.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM FRANKLIN HALL.

Professor William Franklin Hall, city superintendent of schools at Camden, was born in Booneville, Logan county, Arkansas, November 29, 1882, his parents being Benjamin F. and Mary A. (Graham) Hall, who were natives of Kentucky and North Carolina, respectively. In young manhood and young womanhood, immediately after the Civil war, they had come to Arkansas and were married in this state. Benjamin F. Hall served in the Confederate army throughout the period of hostilities between the north and the south and following his removal to Arkansas he took up a homestead claim in what is now Logan county, residing thereon to the time of his death in 1890, his labors winning him place among the leading and representative farmers of that locality. His wife is still living and makes her home with her son, William F.

As a student in the Magazine Academy at Magazine, Arkansas, following the completion of his public school course, Professor Hall entered upon higher educational work and also attended Ouachita College, from which he received his Bachelor of Law degree in 1910. He displayed the elemental strength of his character by paying his own way through high school and college, for his father died when the son was but eight years of age and he was early thrown upon his own resources. During his high school course he had to discontinue his attendance for a year and teach school in order to secure funds to meet the further expenses of his high school days. While a college student he taught school in the summer vacations. Following his graduation from college he became a high school principal at Booneville, filling the position for one year and then went to Portland, Arkansas, as principal of the high school of that place. A year later he was chosen superintendent of schools there and continued to fill the position for two years. He next went to Russellville, Arkansas, as principal of the high school and after occupying the position for one year he was made superintendent of schools, continuing to act in that responsible position for five years. In 1920 he was called to Camden as superintendent of schools and has remained here, winning many staunch friends during the period of his residence in this city, while his work here has added to his reputation as a most successful educator. Professor Hall is a student as well as a teacher and in the many years of his educational work he has made use of his vacation periods either in travel to broaden his views or in postgraduate work. He took special work at the Chicago University in the summer of 1911 and attended Peabody Institute in the summer of 1914. The summer of 1919 was spent in the Teachers College of Columbia University, New York city, while the summer of 1920 was devoted to special work at the Arkansas State University. He plans to take his master's degree some time in the near future at Columbia University and is constantly working to that end. His professional ideals are very high and he has accomplished splendid results, regarding education not merely as the acquirement of knowledge, but as a preparation for life's responsible duties. He is putting forth every effort to make his service of the greatest benefit to those who come under his instruction.

Professor Hall is a member of Russellville Lodge, No. 244, A. F. & A. M., and also of Camden Lodge, K. P. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Baptist church, in which he is serving as a deacon and also as a member of the board of trustees. He is interested in all those forces which make for higher development along intellectual and moral lines and while seeking to attain high ideals the plans which he follows are of a most practical and resultant character.

SAMUEL P. STUBBS, M. D.

Among those who are devoting their attention to the indispensable practice of medicine and putting forth most earnest effort to check the ravages of disease, is Dr. Samuel P. Stubbs of Fort Smith, who opened an office in this city in 1919. He is a native of the neighboring state of Missouri, his birth having occurred in Platte City, on the 10th of August, 1880, his parents being B. H. and Iris (Oliver) Stubbs, the former a native of Missouri, while the latter was born in Tennessee. The father served in the Union army during the Civil war. The mother's people belonged to an old southern family who were extensive landowners in the vicinity of Oliver Springs, Tennessee, and had a large number of slaves there.

Dr. Stubbs, whose name introduces this review, obtained his early education in the common schools near his father's home and also attended high school in Kansas City Missouri. He determined to devote his life to a professional career, and deciding upon the practice of medicine, he then entered the Kansas City College of Medicine and Surgery. He pursued the complete course, thus thoroughly qualifying for active practice, and in 1919 he came to Fort Smith, where he opened an office and has here remained. In the intervening period he has built up a large and lucrative practice and has been very successful in its conduct. He is extremely careful in the diagnosis of his cases and is seldom, if ever, at fault in foretelling the outcome of disease. He displays the utmost devotion to the needs of the profession, and while he does not hastily discard old and time-tried methods, he is quick to take up any new idea which his judgment sanctions as of value in professional work.

Dr. Stubbs married Miss Loga Arterbury of Neosho, Missouri, and they have become the parents of one child, Samuel P. Dr. Stubbs had been previously married and by his first wife, who bore the maiden name of Alice Watkins, he also had one child, Velma. Dr. Stubbs is medical examiner for the Woodmen of the World. He is well known both in his professional capacity and socially and the sterling traits of his character are recognized by all with whom he comes into contact.

B. A. GRISWOLD.

As the complexity of business has increased there has come a demand for efficiently trained men and women who are qualified to take up the onerous and responsible duties that have to do with the successful conduct of business at the present day. At various points in the country, therefore, have been established and conducted commercial colleges which have trained young people for the business world and today B. A. Griswold is manager and owner of the Fort Smith Commercial College, located at Sixth and Rogers streets. He became identified with this institution in August, 1917, and has since successfully conducted it.

Mr. Griswold is a native of Missouri, his birth having occurred in Chariton county in 1879. He pursued his education in the schools of that state and his business education was acquired in the Capital City Business College at Guthrie, Oklahoma. Practically his entire life has been devoted to educational work. He early became principal of the Lawton Business College at Lawton, Oklahoma, there remaining from 1907 until 1908. He was also principal of the bookkeeping department of the Taylor Commercial College at Taylor, Texas. In the latter part of 1908 he became manager and owner of the Moberly Commercial College at Moberly, Missouri, and there remained for about nine years, or until March, 1917, when he came to Fort Smith and purchased the Fort Smith Commercial College, of which he has since been owner and manager. During the intervening period of four years the enrollment of the school has greatly increased, until its student body now represents eleven different states. The school is conceded to be the best equipped in Arkansas and is perhaps the most widely known business college in this part of the country. Mr. Griswold maintains an excellent corps of assistants, splendidly qualified to teach in their various departments, and he has supervision over the entire school, studying each individual student so far as this is possible and directing his studies to his best development.

Professor Griswold was married in 1902 to Miss Lelia Brown of Missouri, and they have one son, Raymond. Mr. Griswold belongs to the Business Men's Club and to the Ad Club. He takes the keenest interest in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of Fort Smith and his cooperation and aid are given to every plan and measure which tends to benefit the city and uphold its civic standards.

H. L. TOLAND.

H. L. Toland of Ashdown, where he is engaged in the real estate, insurance, farm loans and bonds business, is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred near Nashville on the 6th of February, 1871. There he was reared, the public schools according him his educational privileges, while later he enjoyed the benefit of a business course in Arkadelphia. He started out in the business world as bookkeeper, having studied along that line while in commercial college, and later he spent a year in that connection with the Saginaw Lumber Company. He afterward acted as bookkeeper for Bascom & Ward for a year and then established business on his own account by opening a drug store and general merchandise establishment at Mineral Springs, where he remained until January 1, 1903. At that date he came to Ashdown, where he opened a general store, erecting the first brick business block in Little River county. He continued actively in merchandising from 1903 until 1912 and then retired from commercial lines to establish his real estate, loan and insurance business. In this connection he has gained a large clientele and has built up an extensive business in the sale of timber and farm lands. He also handles bonds and insurance, and in these departments his business, too, has reached a gratifying figure. He is likewise a director in the First National Bank of Ashdown and is regarded as a representative and resourceful business man, alert and enterprising and ready for any emergency.

In November, 1894, Mr. Toland was married to Miss Fannie E. Martin and they have become parents of five children: Thomas E., Joe B., Kathleen, Mary Martin and Marguerite. The two sons were soldiers of the World war, both volunteering in the infantry, and Thomas E., who went overseas, was in the Officers' Training Camp.

Mr. Toland took an active interest in everything that furthered the war and its consequent victory, acting as chairman of the Red Cross in Little River county throughout the entire period. He is a consistent and faithful member of the Baptist church and is a thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner. At all times he is loyal to any cause which he espouses and his fidelity is counted as a valuable asset in any organization with which he becomes allied.

WILLIAM BOOKER WORTHEN.

William Booker Worthen, who was long at the head of the oldest and most substantial private banking institution in Arkansas, classed for many years with the honored and leading citizens of Little Rock, was born in the capital city September 17, 1852. He was descended from New England ancestry, connected with the history of the country from early colonial days. The line is traced back to Ezekiel and Hannah (Martin) Worthen, who were living in Amesbury, Massachusetts, in 1663. His father, George Alfonso Worthen, was born in Winchester, Kentucky, June 28, 1816, and in antebellum days became a resident of Little Rock, where his demise occurred June 30, 1864. He was married on the 14th of November, 1849, to Louisa Booker, who was born in Springfield, Kentucky, October 8, 1827. The Booker family came originally from England, near the border of Wales, and Sam Booker, grandfather of Mrs. Louisa Worthen, was born in Virginia in 1758. He served throughout the Revolutionary war and was a lieutenant under Washington at the time of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. Mr. and Mrs. George A. Worthen became parents of four children: William Booker; Eliza H., born in 1855; George A., in 1858; and Paul, in 1862. The mother died March 29, 1895, having for more than three decades survived her husband.

William Booker Worthen began his education in the public schools of Little Rock and completed his studies in St. John's College. However, he early assumed the duties and responsibilities of life. He was but twelve years of age at the time of the death of his father, who had lost all of his means during the Civil war, so that upon William Booker Worthen devolved the support of his widowed mother and the younger brothers and sister. He early displayed those forces of character which made him in later years one of the strongest representatives of financial interests in the state. His initial step in business was made as rod man with an engineering party and in 1866 he was employed by David F. Shaw, who was conducting a real estate and brokerage business in Little Rock. Mr. Worthen, although then but fourteen years of age, eagerly applied himself to the duties assigned him and gained wide and valuable experience in connection with financial affairs. After severing his association with Mr. Shaw he entered into partnership with Gordon N. Peay on the 8th of May, 1874, when a young man of twenty-two years, for the conduct of a private bank and the relation between the two continued until the death of Colonel Peay on the 1st of January, 1877. A new partnership relation was then entered upon, resulting in the organization of the firm of Parker & Worthen, which was maintained until June, 1888, when Mr. Worthen purchased the interest of Mr. Parker and continued actively in banking under the style of W. B. Worthen & Company until August 2, 1902. Articles of incorporation were then taken out under the style of the W. B. Worthen Company. The business was developed upon the principles of inflexible integrity and a most careful and wise safeguarding of the interests entrusted to their care. There was no citizen of Arkansas more familiar with the great scientific and economic principles underlying banking, for he was ever a close student of political economy and his opinions carried great weight in the banking fraternity of the state. He was also the author of a volume entitled "Early Banking in Arkansas," which was published in 1906 at the request of the Arkansas Bankers Association.

On the 3d of June, 1879, Mr. Worthen was married to Miss Mollie C. Peay, who was born in Little Rock, June 25, 1856, a daughter of Gordon N. and Sue (Crease) Peay, for long years honored residents of the capital city. Mrs. Worthen was educated in a convent of Little Rock and in a boarding school at Patapsco, Maryland. The children of this marriage are: Sue Peay, who was born in 1881 and is the wife of Dr. M. D. Ogden of Little Rock; George Gordon, who was born in 1883 and is assistant cashier of the W. B. Worthen Company; Elizabeth Agee, who was born in 1887 and is the wife of I. S. Hirsch of Little Rock; Louisa Booker, who was born in 1893; and Mary Booker, in 1897.

The military record of Mr. Worthen covered service in the Arkansas State Guard in young manhood, in which connection he won the rank of major. His political endorsement was always given to the democratic party and he was untiring in effort to advance its success. He took a conspicuous part in the Brooks-Baxter contest in 1874 and served as a lieutenant with the state troops that were upholding the cause of Governor Baxter. In the early '80s he was prominently identified with the organization of the Business Men's League and Board of Trade of Little Rock, both of which have constituted potent forces in the development of industrial and municipal progress. Major Worthen ever stood as a stalwart champion of all those activities and forces which have featured most largely in the city's growth and substantial improvement, interested in everything that promoted civic virtue and civic pride. His religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church, while his wife belongs to the Episcopal church. William B. Worthen died at his home in Little Rock, October 23, 1911. In all of his life he never deviated from a course which he believed to be right between himself and his fellowmen, and while success came to him in large measure as the result of business ability, he also won that good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

WARREN S. WHITTLE, D. D. S.

Dr. Warren S. Whittle, engaged in the practice of dentistry in Pine Bluff, where his well equipped office is supplied with all the delicate little instruments that constitute the tools of dental surgery, has gained a liberal patronage during the period of his residence here and his business is steadily growing. A native of St. Louis, Missouri, Dr. Whittle was born in 1894, his parents being T. W. and Iva (Stewart) Whittle, the former a native of Columbia, Missouri, while the latter was born in Fulton, that state. The Whittle family is of English lineage and was founded in Missouri by the grandfather of Dr. Whittle, who settled there in pioneer days. The Stewarts were originally from Scotland, although the family has been found in America for a very extended period. In the family of T. W. and Iva (Stewart) Whittle there were three children: Thomas W., Jr., Sybil and Warren S.

Spending his youthful days under the parental roof, Dr. Whittle pursued his education in the schools of Columbia, Missouri, and in the State University at that place, thus gaining a broad and liberal classical education before entering upon preparation for his professional activity. He also attended the Washington University of St. Louis and afterward became a student in the Kansas City Dental College, from which in due course of time he was graduated.

Following America's entrance into the World war Dr. Whittle enlisted for service in the army and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Dental Corps, with which he served overseas for eight months as a member of the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Infantry, while later he was with the Headquarters Company of the Seventh Army Corps. He remained with the army until mustered out with the rank of captain in July, 1919.

With his return to America, Dr. Whittle settled in Pine Bluff, where he opened a dental office in the Citizens Bank building, and here he has remained in the active work of his profession. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also with the American Legion, being in hearty sympathy with the plans of that organization to "carry on" just as earnestly and effectively in behalf of American institutions and ideals in times of peace as they did when serving on the western front in Europe, during the period of conflict with Germany. Dr. Whittle is also identified through membership relations with the local, state and national dental societies and thus keeps in touch with the proceedings of these bodies, whereby he is thoroughly informed concerning the results of modern scientific research and discovery in the field of dental practice.

W. F. BELL.

Business enterprise at Prairie Grove finds a worthy exponent in W. F. Bell, who is here engaged in the lumber business. At the outset of his career he recognized the eternal principle that industry wins and he has made industry the beacon light of his life. Directing his labors along approved commercial lines he has met with a gratifying measure of success. His birth occurred April 12, 1866, about seven miles north of Prairie Grove on the farm of his parents, John M. and Elizabeth C. (Hale) Bell. His grandfather, J. C. Bell, was a native of North Carolina and became one of the earliest settlers of Arkansas, establishing his home in Hempstead county, this state, in the '20s, or almost a century ago. He took up his abode in Washington county about 1826 and obtained land from the government—land upon which not a furrow had been turned nor an improvement made. He was closely associated with the early agricultural progress of this section of the state and his remaining days were passed on the old homestead. The maternal grandfather of W. F. Bell was Jaber Hale, a native of Tennessee, who came to Arkansas in 1856, living in Benton county. The birth of John M. Bell occurred just across the boundary of Arkansas in the Indian Territory in July, 1829, and his life record covered the intervening years to 1891. It was in 1833 that he came to Washington county and throughout his life he followed the occupation of farming. During the Civil war he served as a member of Company K, Thirty-fourth Arkansas Infantry, and for three years was with the Confederate army. His wife was born in Tennessee and came to Arkansas in 1856. They were members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Bell belonged to the Masonic fraternity, faithfully following the teachings of both the lodge and the church. He always voted with the democratic party and kept well informed on the vital questions and issues of the day. To him and his wife were born four children, of whom three are living: W. F.; Minnie, who is the widow of J. N. Woodruff and lives at Prairie Grove; and Samuel E., whose home is in Gonzales county, Texas, where he is engaged in business as a decorator.

W. F. Bell obtained his education in the common schools of Washington county and started out in life as a farmer, having been early trained to the work of the fields. He soon acquainted himself with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops and he continued successfully to engage in farming until 1902, when he sold his land and removed to Prairie Grove. Here he purchased a lumberyard which he conducted for three years. He then merged his yard with another in Prairie Grove and became manager for the Prairie Grove Lumber Company, in which position he has continued. This company sells lumber and all kinds of building materials and its trade extends largely over this part of the county. Mr. Bell is winning success in his connections with the lumber trade and as the years have passed he has made judicious investment in realty and today holds considerable city property.

In 1912 Mr. Bell was united in marriage to Miss Nattie Cox, who was born in Green county, Arkansas, a daughter of George W. Cox, also a native of that county. Her father was a trader and live stock dealer and also engaged in the real estate business. He is still living at Prairie Grove. Mrs. Bell is a consistent member of the Christian church, while Mr. Bell belongs to the Masonic fraternity and has served as master of his lodge. Both he and his wife are identified with the Order of the Eastern Star. Politically he is a democrat, active in the work of the party and has been called to fill various public positions. He served as a member of the town council and has also been mayor of Prairie Grove, his administration resulting in benefit along many lines of general upbuilding and definite improvement. He is also the head of the Community Club and thus in various ways cooperates in all that tends to be of specific worth and value to the district in which he lives.

REV. JOHN BODEN.

Rev. John Boden, an Episcopal clergyman of Little Rock, was born on Barra Island of the New Hebrides, off the northwest coast of Scotland, on the 3d of August, 1879. His parents were John and Margaret (MacLachlan) Boden, the former born in Sweden, March 9, 1854, while the mother's birth occurred in Glasgow, Scotland, August 3, 1849. They were married in Glasgow, Scotland, September 26, 1873, and became parents of two sons, Duncan L. and John Boden. About thirty-nine years ago the family came to America and the family home was established in Chicago, Illinois. The father is a seaman. The mother departed this life November 10, 1905.

Rev. John Boden pursued his early education in the public schools of Chicago and afterward attended Hanover College at Hanover, Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1901, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He next entered the McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago. He was ordained a clergyman of the Episcopal church in 1911. As deacon he was assigned to the charge of All Saints Episcopal church at Nevada, Missouri, and afterward became rector of St. Paul's church at Evansville, Indiana. On leaving that place he was made rector of St. Mary's church in St. Paul, Minnesota, and later became rector of the Church of the Holy Communion in St. Louis, Missouri. At the present writing he is rector of Christ church of Little Rock, which is the mother church of the Episcopal diocese of Arkansas. He was assigned to this pastorate in November, 1919, and has labored untiringly for the development of the church and the extension of its work. His labors have covered a wide scope, not only in connection with religious work but along various other lines. He is a member of the ways and means and other standing committees of the diocese of Arkansas and is a member of the council of advice to the bishop of Arkansas. He is examining chaplain to the bishop of Arkansas and chairman of the board of religious education of this diocese.

His labors, too, have been a vital element for progress and upbuilding along lines outside the strict field of church work. He is a member of the speakers bureau of the Arkansas Advancement Association, is a director of the Arkansas State Farm for Women, is president of the Arkansas Prison Welfare Association, is a director of the Arkansas Near East Relief and in connection with the city in which he makes his home he is serving as a member of the Board of Commerce of Little Rock, as a director of the United Charities Association, as a director of the Pulaski County Tuberculosis Association, as president of the Little Rock Motor Club, as vice president of the Little Rock Kiwanis Club and as president of the Court of Honor of the Little Rock Council of the Boy Scouts. His activities and interests are thus broad and varied, keeping him in touch with the trend of modern thought and progress and particularly with the work that is seeking to improve sociological and economic conditions.

Rev. Mr. Boden is likewise a prominent figure in Masonic circles, belonging to the various Masonic bodies. He has served as worshipful master of Clinton Lodge No. 19, A. F. & A. M., of Petersburg, Illinois; was worthy patron of the Eastern Star chapter at Petersburg; prelate in Palladin Commandery of the Knights Templar at St. Paul, Minnesota; grand orator and grand marshal of the grand lodge of Minnesota; and is a Consistory Mason and Mystic Shriner. He likewise has membership in the Sigma Chi, a college fraternity.

On the 1st of June, 1905, Mr. Boden was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Boley Crum, who was born in Virginia, Cass county, Illinois, November 27, 1881. She attended the graded and high schools of Virginia, Illinois, and afterward became a student in the Illinois Woman's College at Jacksonville. She is a daughter of David Marion and Henrietta (Payne) Crum, who were residents of Virginia, Illinois. By her marriage she has become the mother of three children: Margaret Henrietta, who died at the age of six years; John David, now eight and a half years of age; and Mabel Crum, a little maiden of five summers. Mrs. Boden takes an active interest in all departments of the local church work and is of great assistance to her husband. Occupying an enviable social position, their influence has been a potent force for cultural as well as moral progress in the community. Rev. Mr. Boden is a close student of the vital questions and issues of the day which affect the welfare of the individual and the progress of mankind and has been a cooperant factor in many carefully organized plans and agencies for public benefit and the general good. A man of scholarly attainments, actuated by the highest ideals of service, his labors have indeed been far-reaching and effective.

S. W. DONAGHEY.

S. W. Donaghey, conducting a feed and wagon yard in Searcy, was born in Perry county, Alabama, September 12, 1871, his parents being E. and Salina E. (Osborn) Donaghey, who were likewise natives of that state. The father followed farming in Alabama, but at the time of the Civil war put aside all business considerations and personal interests and enlisted in the Confederate army, serving throughout the period of hostilities. He participated in the battle of Shiloh and in other engagements. He left his wife and two children at home while in the service and all he had of his property possessions when he returned was his residence, for through the exigencies of war the farm had been neglected, there being no one left to till it. With his return Mr. Donaghey at once set to work to retrieve his lost possessions and in 1879 he removed from Alabama to Arkansas, settling in White county. He made the trip by boat from Memphis, proceeding up the White and Little Red rivers to West Point. After reaching his destination he rented land and carried on farming, but was not long permitted to enjoy his new home, as death called him a little later. His wife died in 1913, at the age of seventy-two years, while his death occurred at the age of forty-eight years. They were loyal members of the Baptist church throughout their lives and Mr. Donaghey always gave his political support to the democratic party. To him and his wife were born four children: Mattie, who is the widow of Aaron Tettleton, and resides in San Antonio, Texas; Nannie, the wife of J. W. Blevins of Pasadena, California; S. W., of this review; and Estelle, living in Searcy. The Donaghey family is of Irish descent, for the grandfather of S. W. Donaghey was a native of Ireland and smuggled his way across the ocean to the new world. He then settled in Perryville, Alabama, and afterward took up the occupation of farming there. In due course of time he became owner of a plantation and a number of slaves and he died in Alabama prior to the Civil war. The maternal grandfather of S. W. Donaghey was William Osborn, a native of Tennessee, who in early life became a resident of Alabama, where he, too, owned and cultivated a plantation, while his property interests also included a number of slaves. He died while the Civil war was in progress.

S. W. Donaghey pursued his education in the public schools of Kensett, Arkansas, attending one of the old-time box schools, a crude structure of four walls, with wooden benches and primitive furnishings. He walked three miles to school and in this way laid the foundation for his education. Later he took up farming on his own account in Kensett township, White county, Arkansas, and for a considerable period gave his attention to the work of tilling the soil and raising stock. In 1899 he removed to Searcy, where he entered the livery business and for three years he also worked in connection with a harness business. He now conducts a feed and wagon yard and is accorded a liberal patronage by reason of his thorough business reliability and his enterprise. Whatever success he has achieved has come to him as the direct reward of his own labors. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and he has always voted for its candidates, but has never sought nor desired office for himself as a reward for his party loyalty. Much of his life has been spent in this state and he has a wide acquaintance in White county, where he has become well known through his farming and kindred interests.

ISAAC M. GEORGE, M. D.

Dr. Isaac M. George, a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, practicing successfully in El Dorado, was born in Clark county, Arkansas, November 3, 1860, and is a son of Daniel and Martha (Reid) George. The parents were natives of the state of Georgia and the father was of English descent, while the mother came of Irish ancestry. The grandfather in the maternal line assisted in building the first railroad ever constructed in Georgia and in this way he made the money with which he purchased his first negro slave. He served as captain of the Home Guards during the Civil war, while nine of his ten sons served throughout the period of hostilities between the north and the south and six of the number laid down their lives on the battle fields. The grandfather was also seriously wounded, but lived through the memorable struggle. The birth of Dr. George's parents occurred on adjoining farms, but they were not married until their removal to Arkansas. Daniel George came to this state in young manhood, while his future wife was brought to Arkansas by her parents when twelve years of age, the family settling in Clark county. Mr. George departed this life soon after the close of the Civil war, his death resulting from exposure during the service.

Dr. George was educated in the high school at Lanian, Texas, and in 1887 he took up the study of medicine, which he read for two years before entering college. In 1889 he enrolled as a student in the Louisville Medical College at Louisville, Kentucky, where he attended one course of lectures that fall and in the following spring he pursued a course in the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville. In July, 1890, he entered upon active practice in Clark county, Arkansas, and in December of the same year he removed to Union county with the coming of the railroad, settling in Smackover. In 1896 he completed his medical studies in the University of Arkansas, which conferred upon him his professional degree that year. He continued to practice in Smackover, in Union county, until the fall of 1899, and through a period of two and a half years thereafter he made frequent removals and trips for the benefit of his wife's health. In 1902 he located at Jonesboro, Louisiana, where he was in active practice for five years, and in 1907 he came to El Dorado, where he has remained. In 1900 and again in 1907 he took postgraduate work on the eye, ear, nose and throat in the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College, and in 1914 he pursued a special course in the same department of the Tulane University at New Orleans. For the past twenty years he has specialized in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, but for fifteen years of that time also conducted general practice. During the past five years, however, he has confined his attention solely to his specialty and is recognized as an eminent authority upon this branch of professional activity.

On the 15th of May, 1892, Dr. George was married to Miss Anna Norton, a daughter of Preston Norton, a farmer of Clark county. They are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Dr. George is identified with El Dorado Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., and El Dorado Chapter, No. 114, R. A. M. He is interested at all times in those forces which make for the benefit and progress of the community and for the uplift of the individual. In his practice he has performed his work in a most conscientious way and is zealous in promoting his knowledge, that his labors may be of the greatest possible benefit to those who seek his aid. He keeps in touch with the latest scientific researches and discoveries and his methods are thoroughly modern in every particular. He is a member of the Union and the Arkansas State Medical Societies.

J. M. CAMPBELL, M. D.

Dr. J. M. Campbell, one of Arkansas' native sons and a representative of a pioneer family of the state, is numbered among the leading physicians and surgeons of Russellville, where for the past nineteen years he has engaged in general practice, and he has also become well known as a real estate owner, winning success along both business and professional lines. He was born on a farm twenty-five miles north of Russellville, March 1, 1859, his parents being Charles R. and Ruth (Herrin) Campbell, both of whom were natives of Tennessee and were married in Arkansas. The father came to this state during his boyhood and on starting out in life independently he took up the occupation of farming, which he continued to follow until his demise. He was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he served for a year, during the latter part of that conflict, and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist church and as a young man he became identified with the Masonic order. His father, Edward Campbell, was also a native of Tennessee, who had settled in Arkansas many years before the outbreak of the Civil war. Here he successfully engaged in farming, becoming the owner of a number of slaves. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Campbell were born seven children, of whom three survive: Henry, a well known farmer residing at Scottsville; J. M.; and Charles K., a leading physician of Dover, Arkansas.

After completing his high school education, which was acquired at Valley Springs, Arkansas, J. M. Campbell devoted six years to the profession of teaching in order to provide the funds necessary to pursue his collegiate course. During the scholastic year of 1887-88 he was a student at the medical college at Little Rock and then entered the medical school at Memphis, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the class of 1890. He began his professional work at Scottsville, Arkansas, where he remained for fifteen years, and since 1903 has successfully engaged in practice at Russellville. He carefully diagnoses his cases and thoroughly understands the scientific as well as the practical phases of his profession. He is most thorough and conscientious in the performance of the work which devolves upon him in this connection and with the passing years his practice has steadily grown until it has now assumed large proportions. Dr. Campbell is also a successful business man. In 1896 he made investment in land which is now the townsite of Russellville and is the owner of twenty acres at the present time. He has sold many lots and has still about twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of property to dispose of, having made a profit of fifteen thousand dollars on his original investment of twenty-five hundred dollars. His operations along this line have not only been a source of individual prosperity, but have also contributed in large measure to the upbuilding and development of his community.

In 1887 Dr. Campbell was married to Miss Tennessee Price, a native of Pope county, Arkansas, and a daughter of Allen Price, who was born in Tennessee and came to Arkansas in pioneer times, devoting his energies to farming pursuits. To this union was born a daughter, Norma Gertrude, who married Earl Hobbs, who is identified with railroad interests and resides at Warren, Arkansas.

Dr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masons, belonging to the lodge and chapter of the latter order. He has held all of the offices in his lodge except that of master and for two years was scribe of the chapter. His professional connections are with the Pope County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and of the first named organization he has served as president. He is also a director of the Peoples Bank of Russellville. He is a loyal, patriotic and public-spirited citizen and during the World war did all within his power to aid his country in its time of need. He has never lost the attitude of a student toward his profession, in which he has made continuous advancement, and his pronounced ability and high standards have won for him the respect and confidence of his fellow practitioners and the general public as well. In his political views he is a stanch democrat and for twelve years he served as a member of the school board, doing everything in his power to promote the cause of education in his community.

EULEN GREEN SHOFFNER.

Little Rock has always been distinguished for the high rank of her bench and bar. She has claimed many members capable of crossing swords in forensic combat with the ablest lawyers of the country. The present generation has furnished a full quota to the legal profession and among those whose record has at all times been creditable and an honor to the calling, is numbered Eulen Green Shoffner. Born on a farm in Carroll county, Tennessee, in 1878, he was the fourth child in a family of seven, whose parents were Midian Davis and Julia Belle (Cate) Shoffner, who were likewise natives of Carroll county, Tennessee, where the father was born in 1836 and the mother on the 28th of December, 1858. The father lived for many years in Cabot, Lonoke county, Arkansas, where he took up his abode in 1881 and there followed the carpenter's trade. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, which at all times he supported. His military record covers service as a private in the Twenty-second Tennessee Infantry of the Confederate army and he was on duty from the beginning of hostilities until 1864, when he was invalided home. He continued to reside in Tennessee for a period of seventeen years thereafter and then came to Arkansas, living for some time at Cabot. On the 10th of August, 1918, he died in Little Rock, where his widow still resides. Their family numbered five sons and two daughters, who are all living.

The youthful experiences of Eulen Green Shoffner were those of the farm bred boy. He was reared in Lonoke county, Arkansas, and in the acquirement of his education attended the public schools of Cabot, passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school with the class of 1896. Through his life he has been a close and attentive observer of men and measures and in the school of experience has learned many valuable lessons. His professional training was received in the law department of the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1915, with the LL. B. degree. Through the intervening period of six years he has continued in the practice of his profession, spending all of this period in Little Rock, where he is now well known as an able lawyer. In no instance has his reading ever been confined to the limitations of the questions at issue; it has gone beyond and compassed every contingency and provided not alone for the expected, but for the unexpected, which happens in the courts quite as frequently as out of them. His logical grasp of facts and principles of the law applicable to them has been another potent element in his growing success.

On the 7th of September, 1904, Mr. Shoffner was married to Miss Rosa Blanche Rice, who was born in Little Rock, December 9, 1878, and is a graduate of the high school of this city. Her parents were Edmund Samuel and Blanche (Macarte) Rice, both of whom were natives of England. The father came to the United States about 1875 and died April 23, 1916. The mother survives and still makes her home in Little Rock.

Since attaining his majority Mr. Shoffner has voted with the democratic party and has firm faith in the efficacy of its principles as factors in good government. He served as a representative from Pulaski county in the 1915 general assembly and was one of the active members of that body. He belongs to the Second Presbyterian church, in which he is serving as a deacon, and he takes deep and helpful interest in all that has to do with the betterment and welfare of the community, casting his aid and influence at all times on the side of progress, reform and improvement.

J. W. SEARAN.

J. W. Searan, a man of executive ability and keen sagacity in business affairs, is now the secretary and manager of the Arkansas Grain Company, operating at Stuttgart. He is numbered among the substantial citizens the Buckeye state has furnished to Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Springfield, Ohio, in 1861, his parents being Thomas and Mahala (Souder) Searan. The grandfather, Michael Searan, was born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, and at the outbreak of hostilities between the north and the south he joined the Union army and followed the stars and stripes to southern battle fields. The grandfather in the maternal line removed from Ohio to Pettis county, Missouri, and it was in that county that Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Searan resided for many years after leaving Ohio.

J. W. Searan pursued his education in the schools of Pettis county and then removed to eastern Kansas, where he lived until 1885. At that date he became a resident of Harper county, Kansas, and eventually settled in Wichita county of the same state. There he drove a mail coach from Garden City to Fort Wallace. In 1888 he went to Fairfield, Iowa, where he was married and in the same year he took up his abode in Arkansas, settling at Stuttgart, when there were only three or four buildings in the town. Here he turned his attention to the grocery business and eventually established a wholesale grocery house. After continuing in that line for a time he went on the road as a traveling salesman for the Hammett Grocery Company of Pine Bluff, which he thus represented for ten years. In 1904 he removed to Little Rock, there resided until 1912 and then returned to Stuttgart, where he established a grain business, organizing the Arkansas Grain Company, which operates a grain elevator at this place. The officers of the company are: C. C. Hayes, James Thomas, Floyd Searan and J. W. Searan, the last named being secretary of the company and the active manager of the business, which under his control has developed rapidly and substantially.

J. W. Searan wedded Kate E. Chander of Fairfield, Iowa, and they are parents of two sons: Floyd and Carl, the former having married Lillian Kinnikin. In his fraternal relations J. W. Searan is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and with the Masons, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist church. His life has ever been the expression of straightforward principles and all who have had business or social relations with him have come to respect and esteem him for the sterling worth of his character. He has always been imbued with the spirit of western enterprise and progress which has been a dominant factor in the upbuilding of this section of the country and step by step he has advanced until his steady progression has made him one of the forceful figures in the grain trade circles of this part of the state.

MRS. LOGAN H. ROOTS.

Among the splendid women of Little Rock who have contributed in large measure to the benevolent and philanthropic work of the city and have been active in those organizations which are looking to the benefit of mankind and the amelioration of hard conditions of life for the unfortunate is Mrs. Logan H. Roots, who in her maidenhood was Emily Margaret Blakeslee. She was born at Silver Creek, Chautauqua county, New York, September 21, 1844, a daughter of Lyman Curtis and Maria Candace (Angell) Blakeslee. Her father was a native of Fredonia, Chautauqua county, New York, and lived for many years at Bradford, Pennsylvania, where he was connected with the oil industry. His wife was born at the Angell settlement in Chautauqua county, New York, and was a relative of Cyrus Angell, who discovered the belt theory of crude oil. In his political views Mr. Blakeslee was always a stalwart republican. His wife died July 4, 1860. They were the parents of three children: Emily Margaret, Helen Maria and Charles Henry.

The daughter, Emily Margaret, attended the public schools of her native state and continued her education in Duquoin Seminary of Illinois. On the 9th of August, 1871, she became the wife of Logan H. Roots, mentioned at length on another page of this work. To them were born seven children: Mrs. Frances Roots Mitchell, whose birth occurred in 1874; Mrs. Miriam Roots Crawford, born in 1879; Mrs. Lois Roots Hemingway, born in 1884; Logan Guernsey; and three sons who died in infancy.

Mrs. Roots has taken a most active and helpful part in benevolent and charitable work in societies and clubs. She is honorary president of the board of the Logan H. Roots Memorial Hospital, was president of the Woman's Auxiliary and president of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Episcopal church, in which she holds membership. She was also the president of the Colonial Dames of America in Arkansas, is now the honorary president of the Daughters of the American Revolution of Arkansas, is president of the Descendants of Colonial Governors and belongs to the Aesthetic Club, the Current Events Club and Country Club. Her interests are indeed broad and varied, showing her to be a woman of wide culture, keeping in touch with the trend of modern thought and progress. Her influence has been a potent element for good along many lines and wherever possible she extends a helping hand, her labors at all times being an effective force for good.

W. M. BROWN.

W. M. Brown of Fort Smith is at the head of the firm of W. M. Brown & Company, electrical engineers, in which connection a business of extensive proportions has been developed. Mr. Brown is a native son of Sebastian county, Arkansas, born in the year 1883, his parents being James and Caroline (McLaughlin) Brown. At the usual age he became a pupil in the public schools and thus laid the foundation for his later professional training. He afterward took up the study of electrical construction and became associated with the Fort Smith Light & Traction Company, adding practical experience to the knowledge which he gained from books. He has pursued his reading extensively and has acquainted himself with every phase of technical and applied electricity. He knows the theory and the practical side of the work and he organized the firm of W. M. Brown & Company, now engaged in rebuilding and installing motors, in the building of power plants, mine power plants and electrical machinery. The business was organized under its present form in 1919, with Mr. Brown as the controlling spirit, and his interests have developed to very substantial and gratifying proportions.

W. O. CREASON.

High on the roll of capable and prosperous business men of Hot Springs appears the name of W. O. Creason, who is the president of the Missouri Lumber Company and the vice president of the Southern Hardware Company of this city. Missouri claims him as a native son, his birth having occurred in Audrain county on the 11th day of July, 1874, his parents being George H. and Mary A. (McClenny) Creason, both of whom were natives of Missouri, the former born in Ray county and the latter in St. Charles. The father followed farming for many years in Audrain and in Livingston counties of Missouri, continuing to cultivate the soil until his life's labors were ended in death. His widow survives and now makes her home in Hot Springs.

W. O. Creason, having mastered the branches of learning taught in the district schools near his boyhood home, afterward attended Avalon College at Avalon, Missouri, where he pursued a classical course. Later he went to Kansas City and for a time worked in connection with the street car system there. He was thus employed during the day-time in order that he might earn money enough with which to meet the expenses of a stenographic course, which he pursued at night. When he had completed his studies he obtained a position as stenographer in the office of the E. P. Cowen Lumber Company of Kansas City, Missouri, and remained with that house until the failure of the firm three years later. He afterward worked as office man for the Saunders-Turner Lumber Company of Kansas City for a period of three years and then removed to Myrtis, Louisiana, where he was placed in charge of the office of the Black Bayou Lumber Company. After a brief period of six months, however, he returned to Kansas City and was made assistant sales manager of the yellow pine department of the Long-Bell Lumber Company, continuing in that position for a period of two years. In 1904 he went to Kirksville, Missouri, and organized the Adair Lumber Company, which was incorporated, the business starting with three lumberyards. Mr. Creason was made secretary-treasurer and general manager of the new concern and remained with the company in Kirksville for eight years, at the end of which time he severed his connection with that business. This was in 1912. The trade of the corporation had been greatly built up under his management and the business extended until it included a chain of nine lumberyards. At length, however, Mr. Creason sold his stock in the enterprise and removed to Hot Springs, where he purchased the plant of the Missouri Lumber Company and has since continued business operations in this city. In 1913 he became one of the organizers of the Southern Hardware Company and is one of three partners who share equally in the business, his official position being that of vice president. There are few men more thoroughly acquainted with the lumber trade than Mr. Creason and his capability and enterprise have made him one of the successful dealers in that field, while at the present time he is manifesting equal ability in the conduct of the hardware store.

In 1897 Mr. Creason was united in marriage to Miss Berdine Lacock of Paola, Kansas, and they have become parents of one son, Willard George, who is employed in the office of the Missouri Lumber Company. Mr. Creason is well known through his fraternal relations, being a life member of Kirksville Lodge, No. 464, B. P. O. E. He now belongs to the Business Men's League of Hot Springs and for several years was a member of the board of governors of the league. He also has membership in the Hot Springs Country & Golf Club and is an associate member of the Rotary Club. He and his wife belong to the Presbyterian church and its teachings constitute a guiding spirit in their lives. They are today well known in this city, having gained many friends since taking up their abode here, while in commercial circles Mr. Creason is regarded as a man of weight, others deferring to his sound judgment and recognizing the fact that he possesses those substantial qualities which in every laud and clime awaken confidence and regard.

F. E. LARIMORE.

F. E. Larimore, a successful real estate operator of Rogers, conducts his interests under the name of the Rogers Land Company and has built up an extensive and profitable enterprise of this character. He was born in Plattsburg, Missouri, on the 9th of August, 1887, his parents being Sam and Maggie (Blocker) Larimore, both of whom passed away in Bentonville, Arkansas, when their son, F. E., was still young. The father devoted his attention to the drug business with gratifying success and was widely recognized as a substantial and esteemed citizen of his community. He was a democrat in politics and a Baptist in religious faith. To him and his wife were born eight children, of whom but two survive, the sister of Mr. Larimore of this review being Mrs. R. A. Spieker of Pratt, Kansas, whose husband is connected with the Rock Island Railroad as train dispatcher.

F. E. Larimore obtained his education in the public schools of Rogers and early began providing for his own support by securing a position as helper in a blacksmith shop, in which he worked for eighteen months. He then took a business course at Fort Smith and entered the employ of the Reynolds-Davis Company, a wholesale grocery concern, remaining in the office for one year, after which he spent four years as a traveling salesman. He next became district manager for a life insurance company in Oklahoma, continuing in that connection for four years, on the expiration of which period he returned to Arkansas and embarked in the real estate business at Rogers. This has claimed his attention to the present time and his interests have been developed to extensive and gratifying proportions. He does considerable commission business, but also buys and sells property on his own account. His holdings in Benton county are quite extensive and have been accumulated through his own efforts and perseverance. His time is now divided between his real estate and farming interests and he devotes considerable attention to the raising of pure blood Poland China hogs and shorthorn cattle.

In October, 1911, Mr. Larimore was united in marriage to Miss Goldie Gipple, a native of Iowa, and they have become parents of two children: F. G., who is four years of age; and Doris Joan, who is in her first year.

In his political views Mr. Larimore is a stalwart democrat, while fraternally he is identified with the Elks and the Masons, belonging to the Knights Templar commandery and the Mystic Shrine of the latter order. He is also a valued member of the Rotary Club and is now serving as its president. Both he and his wife attend the services of the Presbyterian church and are widely and favorably known throughout the community in which they make their home. Mr. Larimore is a most progressive and public-spirited young man, whose cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any measure or movement instituted for the benefit of city and county or for the promotion of the general welfare.

C. C. O'NEAL.

C. C. O'Neal, who since 1913 has been cashier of the First National Bank at Green Forest, was born upon a farm in the vicinity of this city in September, 1872, and comes of Irish ancestry. His great-grandfather was a native of Ireland and became the founder of the family in the new world. He was the father of Charles G. O'Neal, who was born in Tennessee and became a pioneer resident of Arkansas. He also lived for a time in Missouri and it was in the latter state that his son, W. J. O'Neal, was born. Having arrived at years of maturity he wedded Tinsey Garrison, likewise a native of Missouri and a daughter of Calvin Garrison, who was one of the pioneer residents of Carroll county, Arkansas. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. O'Neal was celebrated in Carroll county, to which place Mr. O'Neal removed with his parents when quite young, and his wife also arrived in this county in her early girlhood. He devoted his entire life to the occupation of farming and both he and his wife died on the old homestead. They were consistent members of the Baptist church and both took an active and helpful part in the church work. In his political views Mr. O'Neal was a republican and at the time of the Civil war served with the Union army as a member of Company G, First Arkansas Federal Regiment. He was on active duty for four years and participated in some of the hotly contested battles of the war, including the engagements at Pea Ridge, at Prairie Grove and Wilson Creek. To him and his wife were born seven children, as follows: Mrs. T. C. Rhodes, who is living on a farm near Green Forest; J. J. and C. L., who also follow farming in Arkansas; Mrs. J. W. Scott, living at Blue Eye, Missouri; C. C., of this review; George W., who is engaged in the hotel business in Harrison, Arkansas; and Mrs. Mae Stanley, living at Green Forest.

C. C. O'Neal was educated in Green Forest and at Carrollton and after he had completed his course of study engaged in teaching school for four years. He lived upon the home farm until 1892, when he came to Green Forest and here turned his attention to the hardware business, in which he engaged for ten or twelve years, winning substantial success in the conduct of his commercial interests. He afterward assisted in organizing the First National Bank in 1913 and became its first cashier, since which time he has occupied the position. The bank is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars, has a surplus of more than twelve thousand five hundred dollars and deposits amounting to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The business of the bank has been most carefully directed and its policy is one which commends it to the patronage of all. Mr. O'Neal is one of the directors as well as the cashier of the bank and is a most popular official by reason of his uniform courtesy to the patrons of the institution.

In 1891 Mr. O'Neal was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Shibley, who was born in Green Forest and is a daughter of L. S. Shibley, who is engaged in the insurance business. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal are now parents of one daughter, Hallee, who is in school. In religious faith Mrs. O'Neal is a member of the Christian church and politically Mr. O'Neal is a republican. Both are highly esteemed and occupy an enviable social position, having the warm regard of many friends throughout this section of the state.

JOHN R. MATHEWS.

One of the substantial citizens of Sheridan is John R. Mathews, clerk of the chancery, probate, county and circuit courts and county recorder of Grant county. He is a native of this county, his birth having occurred on the 24th of February, 1880, a son of Gilliam D. and Sarah (Graves) Mathews, the former a native of Georgia, where he was born in 1847, and the latter a native of Pulaski county, this state. Her parents came to this state from Tennessee at an early day. As a lad thirteen years of age Gilliam Mathews came to Arkansas. He accompanied his mother and a number of the other children of the family, of whom there were fourteen. His father died in Georgia, when he was but five years of age. Upon their arrival in this state they located on a farm in Grant county, where Mr. and Mrs. Gilliam D. Mathews are now living. For the greater part of his life Gilliam D. Mathews has engaged in agricultural pursuits and has achieved substantial success. He is numbered among the pioneer citizens of the community, in the development and improvement of which he has been a dominant factor.

In the acquirement of his education John R. Mathews attended the district schools of his native county and was subsequently graduated from the county high school. He was enrolled in the State Normal School at Conway for two terms, and in 1903 began teaching. For the following nine years he devoted his time to educational work but in 1912 was elected sheriff of Grant county, serving four years in that office. On the 10th of December, 1916, he took up farming. For the next two years he was active as a farmer and was very successful in that connection, but in 1919, he disposed of his interests and located in Sheridan, where he entered the real estate business. At the primary election on the 8th of August, 1920, he was elected to fill the positions in which he is now serving. Mr. Mathews is one of the most prominent men in Grant county and has won the confidence and respect of his fellowmen.

In 1912 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Mathews to Miss Lucille Trotter of Sardis, Mississippi, and to their union two children have been born, Bernice Trotter and James Reed. Since age conferred upon Mr. Mathews the right of franchise he has given his staunch support to the democratic party, having firm belief in the principles of that party as factors in good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Taylor Lodge, No. 206, F. & A. M., of Grapevine; and he is likewise affiliated with Lodge No. 233, Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Sheridan, and the Woodmen of the World. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, while his wife is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Mathews has always been interested in the development and improvement of the community and has won for himself a place among the most representative and public-spirited citizens of his town, county and state. He has maintained his interest in educational affairs and for a number of years was a member of the local school board. He is the possessor of a genial personality and his friends are legion. In every relation of life he has been successful and Grant county is indeed proud to number him among her native sons.

THOMAS JEFFERSON NEWMAN, D. D. S.

Dr. Thomas Jefferson Newman, whose high standing in his profession may be gathered from the fact that he is the president of the Arkansas Dental Society, was born in Raymond, Mississippi, March 1, 1874. His father, Dr. Alexander Newman, who practiced his profession in Mississippi after his graduation from the Atlanta Medical College, was a native of Athens, Georgia, and a member of a pioneer family of that state. Dr. Newman removed with his family to Arkansas, when his son, Thomas J., was ten years of age and later practiced his profession in Lonoke county to the time of his death, which occurred in 1905. He was a surgeon of the Confederate army during the Civil war from 1861 until 1865. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Duanah Standifer, was born in Rankin, Mississippi, where her people had settled at an early day. She now makes her home in Little Rock.

Dr. T. J. Newman was educated in the schools of Lonoke and in the University of Arkansas until he had completed his more specifically literary course. His dental work was taken at Vanderbilt University, from which he was graduated in 1898 with the D. D. S. degree. For a short period thereafter he practiced in Mississippi but about twenty years ago entered upon active practice in Little Rock, where he has continued. His practice is extensive and of very high class and at all times through his professional career he has kept in touch with the latest scientific researches and discoveries. While he cannot be called exactly a specialist he has nevertheless developed a high degree of skill in the treatment of pyorrhea and in exodontia. He is a member of the local and state dental societies and has been honored with the presidency of the last named. He also belongs to the American Dental Association and the profession recognizes his skill and ability which has brought to him merited prominence.

In 1898 Dr. Newman was united in marriage to Miss Laura Florence McArthur, a daughter of William McArthur, a planter of Raymond, Mississippi. They have two children: Ethel Rosalie, who is now a freshman in the National Park Seminary, displaying much talent in music but being particularly gifted in costume designing, which promises to be her vocation in life; and William Vernon, who is a senior in the Little Rock high school.

Dr. Newman is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs also to the Xi Psi Phi dental fraternity, the Country Club and the Spring Lake Club and he is a Baptist in religious faith, having membership in the Second

DR. THOMAS J. NEWMAN

Baptist church, in which he is serving on the finance committee. He was appointed by President Wilson to serve on the medical advisory board during the World war. In all civic affairs he takes a foremost place. His time and money are freely given to every project that has for its object the betterment of the city, state and nation and his labors in this direction, as well as along professional lines, have been far-reaching, resultant and beneficial.

LAWRENCE M. GARY.

Lawrence M. Gary, who for the past nine years has been connected with educational interests in Arkansas, is now serving as county superintendent of schools of Desha county and his thorough training for the profession, combined with his long experience in school work, have made him not only a successful educator but have given him an insight into school affairs which well fits him for the important position he now occupies. He is one of Kentucky's native sons, his birth having occurred in Ohio county on the 8th of May, 1885, and his parents were Richard and Sarah F. (Likins) Gary, both natives of Grayson county, Kentucky.

After completing his public school course Lawrence M. Gary attended Hartford College at Hartford, Kentucky, and then entered the Kentucky State University at Lexington, which conferred upon him the B. S. degree in 1908. After his graduation he took up educational work, in which he has since been engaged, and in 1908 and 1909 was superintendent of schools in Morgantown, Kentucky, while during 1909 and 1910 he was a teacher in the Hartford schools. Going to Louisiana, he served for three years as superintendent of schools at Redland, and in 1913 he came to Dumas, Arkansas, to fill a similar position, being thus occupied for five years. His excellent work in that connection led to his election to the office of superintendent of schools of Desha county in 1918 and he has since served in that capacity. Under his able direction the schools have made splendid progress. He has instituted many improvements, has advanced the standards of education in this district and has also successfully exerted his efforts to bring about a harmonious collaboration between the teachers of the county, thus insuring the pupils of the schools a higher degree of efficiency in their lessons.

In 1912 Professor Gary was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Hudson of Plain Dealing, Louisiana, and they have become the parents of two daughters, Wanda Madeen and Maxine. Mr. and Mrs. Gary are faithful members of the Missionary Baptist church, of which Professor Gary is serving as clerk, and fraternally he is identified with Morgantown Lodge, No. 203, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also connected with the Masons, belonging to Omega Lodge, No. 547, F. & A. M., and Victory Chapter, No. 131, R. A. M. Believing that the destiny of the world depends upon the lessons which the pupils in the public schools are learning, he deems it of vital importance that they should be given a correct conception of the duties of citizenship and a thorough knowledge of the standard of morals which the American people hold sacred and his efforts in his chosen profession are most intelligently directed and have been important and far-reaching in their results.

H. L. BENNING.

For seventeen years H. L. Benning has been numbered among the prominent and progressive citizens of Fort Smith and has been the promoter of one of its leading business enterprises. The growth and development of a city depends upon its industrial and commercial activities and thus Mr. Benning has contributed in no small degree to the benefit and upbuilding of Fort Smith. His connection with any undertaking insures a prosperous outcome of the same, for it is in his nature to carry forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. He has earned for himself an enviable reputation as a careful man of business and in his dealings is known for his prompt and honorable methods which have won for him the deserved and unbounded confidence of his fellow-men. He is now the president of the Carnahan Drug Company, which owns and controls three large drug stores and a central warehouse in this city, from which the three retail establishments are supplied.

A native of Missouri, H. L. Benning was born in Wheeling, in 1875, and in his youth enjoyed liberal educational opportunities. He attended the William Jewell College at Liberty, Missouri, and then in preparation for a business career he entered the St. Louis College of Pharmacy, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897. He then followed his profession in Missouri for about seven years and in 1904 came to Fort Smith, where he purchased the drug business of J. P. Davis and conducted the store under the firm style of Benning & Underwood. At a later date the junior partner sold out and the firm became Benning & Hattaway. In 1909 this firm joined with the Carnahan Drug Company, the business then being reorganized and incorporated with the following officers: H. L. Benning, president; Earl Carnahan, first vice president; R. Condrey, treasurer; and J. H. Carnahan, secretary. They now conduct three fine large drug stores, which are a credit to the city. One of these is situated at 801 Garrison avenue and is called the Crescent Drug Store, managed by Earl Carnahan. A second, called The Palace, is situated at 603 Garrison avenue and is managed by Mr. Benning. The third, known as the Sterling Drug Store, is at 1101 Garrison avenue and is under the management of Mr. Condrey, while Mr. Benning has charge of the general warehouse located at 419 Garrison avenue, from which all three stores obtain their supplies. The business is now one of very substantial and gratifying proportions. Back of it are men of wide experience in this line of business and of marked enterprise. Mr. Benning never stops short of the successful accomplishment of his purpose and attacks everything with a contagious enthusiasm which produces results.

In 1898 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Benning and Miss Rose Stade, a daughter of William Stade of Elmwood, Canada, and they have become the parents of two daughters: Frances and Olive. The former was graduated from the University of Missouri, April 27, 1921, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, having specialized in modern languages. The other daughter, Olive, is now a sophomore in the University of Missouri.

Mr. Benning is well known through fraternal relations, belonging to the Knights of Pythias and to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His interest in business conditions of the city is manifest through his connection with the Retail Merchants Association, of which he is now a director. He likewise belongs to the Kappa Alpha, a fraternity of William Jewell College of Missouri, and he is a member of the Lions Club. He is a man of honesty of purpose, whose courtesy is unfailing and whose integrity is above question. Moreover, he is actuated by a most progressive spirit which has kept him in touch with the trend of business developments and he is justly accorded a place among the prominent and representative merchants of Fort Smith.

CAPTAIN JUDSON T. WEST.

Captain Judson T. West, long one of the honored citizens and prominent business men of Hope, Arkansas, died August 8, 1907, thus terminating a life of great activity and usefulness. He was born in Huron county, Ohio, April 21, 1836, and was a son of Truman W. and Emily (Lazell) West, both of whom were natives of the state of New York, where the father followed the occupation of farming.

Captain West was reared in the Buckeye state to his fourteenth year, when, his parents having died, he started out to make his own way in the world. For two years he was employed by an uncle, Col. George R. West, a wholesale grocer of Dubuque, Iowa, and at sixteen years of age he went on the river as a cabin boy. When a youth of eighteen he was made pilot of his vessel and in 1860 he became captain and part owner of the vessel, continuing to follow the river until 1876. During a part of this time he made the run between St. Louis and New Orleans and he owned and operated a number of steamers including some of the best on the river. During his river experience Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) was a boy under him on one of his vessels and for many years James J. Hill, railroad magnate, was one of his intimate friends. In 1876 Captain West retired from the steamboat business and came to Hope. He had a little capital to invest and he here engaged in the lumber business, buying a small sawmill in the country. From the beginning the new enterprise prospered and subsequently he organized the Hope Lumber Company, in which connection he built up one of the large lumber concerns of the southwest, owning and operating one of the extensive planing mills in southwestern Arkansas. The Hope Lumber Company is doing an immense business, shipping lumber throughout the northern states. Mr. West, however, did not confine his activities entirely to the lumber industry, for he became identified with banking and was regarded as one of the most prominent financiers of Hope. He was president of the Bank of Hope and continued as president after the reorganization and nationalizing of the institution under the name of the Hope National Bank. He remained in the presidency until his demise and this bank and the lumber business which he established stand as monuments to his enterprise and ability. His activities, too, were ever of a character that contributed to public progress and prosperity, as well as to individual success and he deserved much credit for what he accomplished in the way of upbuilding the city in which his last years were passed. Captain West was married twice. His first wife was Miss Nellie Sweet of St. Paul, Minnesota, and to them were born three daughters and a son, but the daughters died in infancy. The son is William H. West, now living in Edwardsville, Illinois. Following the death of his first wife Captain West wedded Miss Hattie A. West, the daughter of William Greenfield West, of North Fairfield, Huron county, Ohio. They had one daughter, Wanda, who is now the wife of Talbot Feild, president of the Hope Lumber Company. Captain West was well known in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and he also belonged to the Knights of Pythias. He was a broad-gauged man, liberal in his views, kindly in his nature and cordial and genial in manner. He judged men not by wealth but by worth and all who knew him were proud to claim him as a friend. Mrs. West was a most active worker during the World war and was appointed chairman of the women's committee of Hempstead county for the third Liberty Loan, at which time the county went over the top, through the efforts of her committee which sold more Liberty bonds than the men's committee. Mrs. West is also treasurer of the Hempstead County Chapter of the American Red Cross. She is the vice president of the Women's League of Hope, is vice president of St. Mark's branch of the women's auxiliary and St. Mark's Guild. She has membership in the Episcopal church, of which Mr. West was also a communicant, dying in that faith August 8, 1907. He had attained the age of seventy-one years and during an active, busy and useful life had made valuable contribution to the world's work, contributing in substantial measure to the progress and improvement of the district in which he lived. Thrown upon his own resources at the age of fourteen he so directed his efforts as not only to win success but also an honored name, which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

EDWARD ADAMS, M. D.

While engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at De Valls Bluff only since 1915, Dr. Edward Adams has continuously and successfully followed his profession since 1901, the year of his graduation from the Chattanooga Medical College. He is a native son of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Nashville on the 9th of January, 1878, his parents being Reuben and Mollie (Griffin) Adams, both of whom were born in the vicinity of Nashville. Reuben Dalton Adams, the paternal grandfather, was a native of eastern Tennessee, in which state the parents of Dr. Adams continued their residence and reared their three sons and two daughters: Raymond, Lena, Harvey, Edward and Cora. The last named is now deceased.

Dr. Edward Adams, spending his youthful days under the parental roof, completed his public school education by graduation from the high school at Tiptonville, Tennessee, while later he continued his studies in the University of Tennessee and prepared for his professional career as a student in the Chattanooga Medical College. He located for practice in Reelfoot, Tennessee, in 1901 and there remained until 1912, when he removed to Arkansas, settling at Little Rock. After three years' practice in the capital city he came to De Valls Bluff in 1915 and here he has since remained. His practice has steadily grown in volume and importance as the public have come to recognize his skill and ability in his chosen calling. He has kept in touch with the trend of modern professional thought and progress by wide reading and study and is thoroughly familiar with the latest scientific discoveries in the field of medicine and surgery. During the war he was assistant county medical examiner and also a member of the Medical Reserve Corps.

In 1902 Dr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Bettie Howard, a daughter of Andrew Howard of Roe, Arkansas, and to them have been born two children, Quincy and Geraldine. The son is now assistant superintendent of the Hazen high school. He was graduated at the University of Arkansas when but eighteen years of age, winning his Bachelor of Arts degree at that time, a fact which indicates the special aptitude which he displayed in his studies and his keen mentality. Dr. Adams has always been a stalwart champion of the cause of education and is serving as a member of the school board at De Valls Bluff. Fraternally he is a Mason, exemplifying in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft, and he is an equally consistent and faithful member of the Christian church.

CARROLL D. WOOD.

Carroll D. Wood, judge of the supreme court of Arkansas, is recognized as a peer of the ablest members who have sat in the court of last resort in this state. His steady advancement has come as a result of laudable ambition, persistency of purpose and untiring industry—qualities which are just essential in the attainment of professional prominence as in the acquirement of success along industrial or commercial lines. Judge

Wood was born on a farm in Ashley county, Arkansas, his father being the Rev. John S. Wood of Hamburg, this state. The mother died in early womanhood, leaving five young sons and a daughter to be trained and educated. Some time later the father wedded a school mistress from New England, a lady of rare intellectual accomplishment and of most kindly spirit. She proved, indeed, a mother to the children, who thus came under her fostering care. Of this family three became members of the bar and from 1875 to the time of his death Judge J. B. Wood, a brother of Judge C. D. Wood, was a distinguished representative of the profession in Hot Springs.

Judge Carroll D. Wood, like his elder brother, acquired his preliminary education under the guidance of his stepmother and through attendance at the common schools of Hamburg, Arkansas. His stepmother impressed upon his mind that years of integrity and usefulness are open to all and that laudable ambition intelligently directed may hope to gain the desired end. The training of the stepmother, as well as of the father, had its full effect upon the lives of the boys. When seventeen years of age Judge Wood of this review went from Hamburg to Fayetteville to attend the university. He carried with him thirty-five dollars in money; and his entire wardrobe aside from the clothes which he wore, was contained in a gripsack. He made the entire distance of three hundred and eighty-five miles at slow stages. Occasionally some fellow traveler on the road would give him a lift in his wagon or on horseback. When he had reached his journey's end he had expended six dollars and seventy-five cents of the precious sum with which he had started. He knew that he must find work in order to meet the expenses incident to his college course and after reaching Fayetteville he was employed at work on the campus grounds at ten cents per hour. This task, however, lasted only for a month and on the expiration of that period he engaged to wait on tables and wash dishes in a hotel at Fayetteville, in return for his board and lodging. During his second collegiate year he obtained a similar position in a private family, and in the vacation period between his sophomore and junior years he was employed in a dry goods store. During his senior year he acted as secretary to the president of the university and received a small salary therefor. He "messed" with the boys in the steward's hall during the last two years of his university study and at the commencement of his junior course he was awarded the medal for the best original oration in a contest between the junior and senior classes. Completing a thorough classical course, Judge Wood was graduated in 1879, after which he went at once to Hot Springs, Arkansas, where he read law with his brother. His thorough preliminary readings had qualified him for admission to the bar in August, 1880, and in the fall of that year he removed to Monticello, where he entered upon a partnership relation with his brother, Z. T. Wood, and thus he initiated a professional career which has brought him to notable prominence. No dreary novitiate awaited him. Almost immediately he secured a liberal clientage and with the passing years his practice constantly increased. In 1882 he became a candidate against Col. Robert H. Deadman for the office of prosecuting attorney in the tenth district and in the contest won the election by a majority of nearly six thousand votes. His strength and popularity was so great that in 1884 he was reelected to the office without opposition. In 1886 he became a candidate for the office of judge of the tenth circuit, at which time the position was sought by such veteran members of the bar as Norman of Ashley, Simms of Chicot, and Duffie of Dallas. While Judge Wood thus received the democratic nomination the incumbent in the office, Judge John M. Bradley, made an independent race for the office, but again Judge Wood triumphed, winning the election by a majority of five hundred. The law requires that one must practice at the bar for six years before being elected to the bench. Judge Wood had practiced but six years and one month. His course on the bench was marked by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution and his decisions were at all times strictly fair and impartial. In 1893 he became a judge of the supreme court of the state and is now sitting on the bench, his decisions indicating strong mentality, careful analysis, a thorough knowledge of the law and an unbiased judgment. He is a man of well rounded character, finely balanced mind and of splendid intellectual attainment and that he is regarded as one of the eminent jurists of Arkansas is a uniformly accepted fact. His service as prosecuting attorney of the tenth district for two terms beginning in 1882, well qualified him for his preliminary judicial service when in 1886 he was elected circuit judge. Again his fidelity and capability during his first term won him reelection and then in 1893 he was elected a justice of the supreme court and has since sat upon that bench, covering a period of twenty-eight years. He is one of the oldest jurists in point of years of continuous service that Arkansas has known and his name is carved high on the keystone of the legal arch. His mind is analytical, logical and inductive. With a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the fundamental principles of law he combines a familiarity with statutory law and a sober clear judgment, which gave him the distinction while on the district court bench of having few of his decisions revised or reversed, while his record on the supreme court bench has received the endorsement of contemporaries and colleagues in the profession.

On the 4th of November, 1886, in Monticello, Arkansas, Judge Wood was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Reola Thompson, who was born in Monticello, in 1863, a daughter of Professor Woodville Thompson, now deceased. Judge and Mrs. Wood became the parents of three children: Major John Shirley Wood, who was graduated from the West Point Military Academy in 1912 and is now in the United States army, being professor of military science and tactics at the Wisconsin Military University; Claudia M., the wife of James L. Murphy; and Roy Winton. The first seven years of the their married life Judge and Mrs. Wood spent in Monticello and in 1893 came to Little Rock, where they have since resided. He has always given his political allegiance to the democratic party, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist church. He is a loyal member of the Scottish Rite and also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his fidelity to every cause he espouses or to every organization with which he becomes identified has ever been one of his marked characteristics. He does not hold himself aloof from his fellows but is a man of democratic spirit and the simplicity and beauty of his daily life as seen in his home and family relations constitute an even balance to his splendid professional acquirements.

THOMAS L. SAVIN, M. D.

Those familiar with the history of the south and the families who have figured conspicuously in connection with its annals, need no introduction to Dr. Thomas L. Savin, a leading physician of Pine Bluff. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1875, a son of R. T. and Jane (Aitken) Savin. The father was born at Port Deposit, Maryland, and his parents were W. F. and Mary E. (Savin) Savin. The grandfather, W. F. Savin, resided in Nashville, Tennessee, before going to Baltimore, but his wife belonged to the Savin family of the latter city, prominent and well known there. The father of W. F. Savin was a physician, Dr. T. L. Savin by name, and the latter had a brother, Dr. William Savin, who was a surgeon of the Federal army and died in New Orleans. Mrs. Mary E. Savin, the grandmother of Dr. Thomas L. Savin of Pine Bluff, was a daughter of T. L. Savin of Baltimore, to which city he had removed from Philadelphia. She was also a relative of Edgar Allen Poe, poet, and a cousin of Governor Veziey of Delaware. The Savin family comes of French Huguenot ancestry and the first representatives of the name in America settled at Sparrows Point in Maryland. Seven generations of the family have been represented by a physician of the name of Thomas L. Savin, the immediate subject of this review being of the seventh generation.

His father, R. T. Savin, was graduated in theology from the Dickerson College, a Methodist Episcopal institution of learning, after which he engaged in preaching in Baltimore for a number of years. In his later life, however, he withdrew from the ministry and became cashier of the Citizens Bank of Baltimore, being associated with that institution for fifty years. His brother, F. A. Savin, was one of the early editors of the Baltimore Herald, while another brother, M. D. Savin, became cashier of the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Baltimore.

R. T. Savin was united in marriage to Miss Jane Aitken, a daughter of Dr. James and Mary (Mitchell) Aitken. Her father was from Edinburgh, Scotland, and was a graduate in medicine of the University of Maryland, of the class of 1809, after which he practiced successfully in Baltimore for many years. He had a brother who was the first professor of chemistry in the University of Maryland. Dr. James Aitken wedded Mary Mitchell, whose parents came from England at an early day and settled in Baltimore, so that through various branches of his lineage Dr. Thomas L. Savin of Pine Bluff is connected with old and distinguished families of that city. To his parents were born the following named: Helen Augusta, the wife of J. M. Morley; William Francis, a resident of Baltimore; Marcus R., also living in that city; Virginia A., the wife of Dr. C. D. Steenken of the Johns Hopkins University; Thomas L.; and A. Aitken, who is an attorney practicing in Baltimore.

Spending his youthful days in his native city, Dr. Thomas L. Savin pursued his advanced education in the University of Maryland, from which he was graduated with the class of 1897, and in the Baltimore City College, while later he took postgraduate work in the Johns Hopkins University. For a time he was resident physician of the University Hospital at Baltimore and gained that broad and valuable experience which is never as quickly acquired in any other way as in hospital practice. He was also a member of the surgical board in connection with the treatment of diseases of eye, ear, nose and throat at the Presbyterian Hospital of Baltimore and for a time he served as lecturer at the Woman's Medical College in that city.

In the year 1904 Dr. Savin came to Pine Bluff, where he has remained, and through the intervening period of eighteen years he has enjoyed a steadily increasing practice, which has grown not only in volume but also in importance. He has at all times kept abreast with the latest scientific researches and discoveries of the profession and, while never hastily discarding old and time-tried methods the value of which has been proven, he has at the same time quickly adopted any new method which his sound judgment sanctions as of real worth to the profession.

Dr. Savin was married in 1904 to Miss Jessie E. Sweet, a daughter of Frank and Ada (Hall) Sweet. Mrs. Savin is also a graduate physician, having completed a course in the Woman's Medical College of Baltimore, and is also a graduate of the St. Louis high school. She was a resident physician in the Good Samaritan Hospital of Baltimore in 1901 and 1902. By her marriage she has become the mother of three children: Thomas L., Frank R. and Ada Helen.

Dr. Savin is well known in Masonic circles, having taken the degrees of lodge, chapter, commandery and Mystic Shrine, while his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the Presbyterian church. He has never sought to figure prominently in any public office and has never held a position of political preferment outside of the strict path of his profession. While in Baltimore, however, he occupied the position of health commissioner. He has always concentrated his time and energies upon his professional duties and his life is an expression of the well known fact that power grows through the exercise of effort. His capability has developed in the years of his continued practice and he is now one of the leading physicians of his part of the state.

JOHN W. MONCRIEF.

John W. Moncrief, lawyer, actively engaged in practice at De Witt, is a native son of Arkansas county, his birth having occurred in 1887. He is descended from Scotch ancestry, his grandfather being David Moncrief, who served with Forrest's cavalry in the Civil war and afterward removed to this state, settling in Arkansas county, where he followed farming and merchandising. He was the father of R. L. Moncrief, who was born in Tennessee and who after attaining his majority married Mattie Roach, the daughter of Peyton Roach, an old inhabitant of the county and a veteran of the Confederate army, in which he served to the close of the war. Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Moncrief became parents of four children: John W., W. J., Peyton and Virgil.

Having mastered the branches of learning taught in the public schools near his home, John W. Moncrief then took up the study of law, prepared for the bar and began practice at De Witt in 1906. Through the intervening years he has followed the profession and in a calling where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit and ability he has made steady progress. He recognized at the outset of his career that diligence is just as essential in professional life as in commercial or industrial pursuits and accordingly he has prepared his cases with great thoroughness and care and put forth every effort to promote justice through his work in the court. He has served as city attorney and somewhat outside of his profession he has been active in public office. In other words he has been a lawmaker as well as a lawyer, having been elected to the state senate for the sessions of 1917 and 1919. While filling the position of president pro tempore of the senate he served as lieutenant governor of the state. Matters of vital public concern have ever been of deep interest to him and at all times he has kept well informed on the important questions and issues of the day. During the World war he acted as chairman of the legal advisory board.

Mr. Moncrief was married to Miss Eula McGahay, a daughter of J. W. McGahay of Arkansas county, and their children are: John W., Jr., Virgil Roach and Joyce. The family is well known socially in De Witt. In his fraternal connections Mr. Moncrief is a Woodmen and also an Odd Fellow. He has always lived in Arkansas, where three generations of the family have been represented.

W. J. MCCOY.

W. J. McCoy, manager and secretary of the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company of Fayetteville, was born in Washington county, this state, January 3, 1861, his parents being Philip and Bridgett (Pierce) McCoy, both of whom were natives of Ireland. They were married, however, in Providence, Rhode Island, the father having come to the United States when a youth of eleven years, while the mother crossed the Atlantic when a maiden of twelve summers. Both were educated in the east and lived in Providence, Rhode Island, for a period of fifteen years, the father there engaging in shoe-making. "On his removal to the southwest he made his way direct to Washington county, Arkansas, in 1857, and settled upon a farm. His attention was then given to agricultural pursuits in this county to the time of his demise. To him and his wife were born six children, of whom four are living: Fannie, the wife of J. A. Wilcox, residing upon a farm in Washington county; Mary, the wife of A. M. Byrnes, a prominent contractor of Fayetteville; W. J., of this review; and Ella, the wife of W. A. Gregg, who works in a lumberyard in Fayetteville. The parents were members of the Catholic church and in his political views the father was always a democrat.

W. J. McCoy was educated in the schools of Fayetteville and in the University of Arkansas. He was reared upon a farm and continued to assist his father in the cultivation and improvement of the fields until 1892, when he took up his abode in the city of Fayetteville and turned his attention to the lumber business. For a time he was connected with the Byrnes Lumber Company, with which he remained until 1908, when it was consolidated with the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company and assumed the name of the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company in 1908. Mr. McCoy has been manager of the business since 1915. He started with the company as a common laborer and has worked his way steadily upward through various positions until he has reached a place of prominence in connection with the commercial activity of Fayetteville. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with every phase of the lumber trade and is most carefully directing and managing the interests in his charge.

In 1889 Mr. McCoy was united in marriage to Miss Bertie Montgomery, who was born in Indiana, a daughter of P. L. Montgomery, who came to Arkansas in 1885. He was a broom maker, long following that vocation. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have become parents of three children: Jessie, who is now the wife of S. H. Lee, a civil engineer of Jonesboro, Arkansas; Bessie, who is the twin sister of Jessie and is the wife of Jack Reed, who owns several automobile filling stations at Rogers, Arkansas; and Aileen, who is teaching in the State Agricultural School at Russellville, Arkansas. All of the three children are graduates of the University of Arkansas.

Mr. and Mrs. McCoy belong to the Catholic church and Mr. McCoy is a democrat in politics. He has never sought nor desired office, however, for he prefers to devote his entire time to his business affairs and is now one of the directors and the secretary and manager of the Northwest Arkansas Lumber Company. This company was organized in 1886 and has always enjoyed a good business standing. Mr. McCoy deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, as he started out in life empty-handed and has worked his way upward through sheer ability and unfaltering determination, recognizing the fact that industry and integrity are invincible even when arrayed against such drawbacks as poverty and seeming lack of opportunity. He has made splendid use of his time and talents as the years have passed and today is a prominent figure in the lumber circles of his section of the state.

W. J. BROWN.

W. J. Brown, a planter residing in Clarendon, was there born in 1881, his parents being W. A. and Sarah (Barnes) Brown. The father, also a native of Clarendon, was a son of Jesse Brown, who came from Tennessee to Arkansas prior to the Civil war and engaged in merchandising in Clarendon, becoming one of the pioneers in that line of business, if not the first merchant of the city. Since that time the family through three generations has contributed in large measure to the progress and upbuilding of this section of the state. Sarah Barnes, the mother of W. J. Brown, represented an old Mississippi family, her father having come from that state at an early day, at which time he took up his abode east of Clarendon. To W. A. and Sarah (Barnes) Brown there were born three children: Katie, now Mrs. Mart Gill; Willie, the wife of Jewett Cox; and W. J.

W. J. Brown, pursuing his education in a military institute at Searcy and thus thoroughly qualifying for life's practical and responsible duties, became engaged in business as a pearl buyer after leaving school. The freshwater pearl was found in considerable quantities in the waters of this vicinity as the mussel shell beds abound in this region. Mr. Brown also traveled throughout the United States, buying pearls from eastern and European dealers and disposed of many thousands of dollars' worth of pearls abroad. He also engaged extensively in cotton raising, and acquiring more land from time to time he is now the owner of a thousand acres in the vicinity of Clarendon. He has been an advocate of diversified farming and has done much to advertise the advantages of Monroe county and the opportunities here offered, whereby many people have come into this region, thus contributing to the steady growth and development of the district. He conducts a substantial business as a cotton buyer, nor does this cover the scope of his activities, for he is also prominently known as an automobile dealer, handling the Studebaker and Overland cars, trucks and tractors. He has displayed marked ability in bringing diversified and seemingly unrelated interests into a unified and harmonious whole and his ready discrimination between the essential and the non-essential in all business affairs has been one of the strong and vital elements in his growing success.

During the World war Mr. Brown served as food administrator in Monroe county. In 1919 he was elected to the legislature and while a member of the general assembly he sponsored the auto license bill, was chairman of the roads and highways committee and was connected with much other important legislation, which was promoted during his membership in the house of representatives.

Mr. Brown was united in marriage to Miss Maude Richardson, a daughter of Arthur Richardson of Newport, Arkansas, and they have become parents of two sons: Max and Alf. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he is well known in fraternal circles. He belongs to the Masonic lodge, to the Knights Templar Commandery and to the Mystic Shrine, is identified with the Knights of The Maccabees and became district supreme commander thereof and also has membership with the Modern Woodmen and with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His life has ever been guided by high and honorable principles, as is manifest in his church and fraternal relations and thus he has contributed in substantial measure to the material, political and moral progress of the community. He is a worthy representative of an honored pioneer family and the work instituted by his grandfather and carried on by his father has been continued and enlarged by him with adaptation to the modern-day conditions, and today he is one of the most forceful factors in the business development and upbuilding of this section of the state.

ARLEY D. CATHEY, M. D.

Dr. Arley D. Cathey, one of the partners in the firm of Cathey & White, well known and prominent physicians and surgeons, not only of El Dorado but of the entire southern portion of the state, was born in Prescott, Arkansas, June 17, 1889, his parents being Dr. Thomas D. and Addie L. (Garmon) Cathey, who were likewise natives of Arkansas, the father having been born in Ouachita county and the mother in Pike county. The former was a physician and surgeon who began practice in Washington, Hempstead county, but in 1895 removed to Wilton, Little River county, Arkansas, where he practiced to the time of his death, which occurred on the 2d of April, 1913. His widow survives and makes her home with a daughter in Kilbourne, Louisiana.

Dr. Cathey was educated in the Wilton grammar and high schools and in his youth was employed in a drug store in that town. This undoubtedly awakened his interest in the practice of medicine and, moreover, his youthful environment and perhaps his inherited tendency had something to do with shaping his choice of a life work. In 1908 he entered the medical department of the University of Arkansas, which he attended for two years and then became a student in the medical department of the Louisville (Ky.) University, from which he received his M. D. degree upon graduation with the class of 1912. Following the completion of his course he returned to Wilton, Arkansas, and began practice. In 1914 he took postgraduate work at the New York Postgraduate Medical School and Hospital and following his studies there he returned to enter again upon active practice in Wilton. In 1916 he once more went east and served as an interne in St. Mary's Hospital in Hoboken, New Jersey. He next located in Texarkana, Arkansas, where he was engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery to the time of his entrance into the World war. He enlisted for service in the Medical Corps of the United States army on the 9th of September, 1917, was commissioned a first lieutenant and ordered to the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. There he remained in camp for five months, a part of which time he served as company instructor. He was then ordered to the Rockefeller Institute in New York and subsequently to the Army Medical School at Washington, D. C., there receiving instruction in special laboratory work. Later he was assigned to the Eighty-fifth Division at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan, where he remained for four months with the Three Hundred and Tenth Sanitary Train, with which organization he went overseas. He served with an ambulance company which was a part of the Three Hundred and Tenth Sanitary Train for a short time, after which he was assigned to the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Machine Gun Battalion, medical department. He remained with that command until the division reached Brest on its return to the United States, when he was detailed for work in the Red Cross division, and after reporting to Red Cross headquarters in Paris he was assigned to the Balkan department with headquarters in Rome, Italy. Later he was assigned to the Montenegro unit and went to Montenegro, taking active part in Red Cross work there for twenty-two months. While there he organized one hospital and did all kinds of hospital work, returning to the United States on the 19th of January, 1921. About three months after going overseas he had been promoted to a captaincy. He was awarded "The Fourth Order of St. Sava" for service to the Montenegrin and Serbian people and was awarded "The First Order of the Serbian Red Cross Society." He was also cited by order of the king of Montenegro for "The Fourth Order of Prince Danilo First."

Following his return Dr. Cathey settled in El Dorado, where he began practice in March, entering into partnership with Dr. White, with whom he has since been associated as a member of the firm of Cathey & White, ranking with the most prominent and capable physicians of southern Arkansas.

Dr. Cathey has membership in the Union County Medical Society, also in the Arkansas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and through the proceedings of these organizations he keeps in close touch with modern scientific researches and investigations as affecting the laws of health. He is a man of pronounced ability in his profession and although he is little more than thirty years of age he has attained a degree of skill and efficiency that many a member of the profession of twice his years might well envy.

JUSTIN MACKAY BARKER.

In the business circles of Atkins Justin Mackay Barker is a prominent figure, having for the past ten years been president of the Bank of Atkins, of which he was one of the organizers. Other interests of a private and public character have also claimed his attention and profited by his cooperation, for his determined purpose enables him to achieve success in almost anything that he undertakes. Mr. Barker is a native of the neighboring state of Missouri, his birth having occurred at Wellsville, July 13, 1869. In tracing his ancestral line it is learned that he is a representative of one of the old families of Kentucky. His grandfather, Simeon L. Barker, was born in that state and at an early day removed to Missouri, where he took up the occupation of farming and also engaged in the practice of law. He married Louise Mackay, a daughter of James McKay, who built the first brick house in St. Louis and who was commandant of the post there under the Spanish regime. John M. Barker, father of J. M. Barker of this review, was born at Flinthill, Missouri, and became a member of the bar, practicing for many years in Mexico and in Montgomery, Missouri. His marked ability was manifest in the many favorable verdicts which he won for his clients. He was always careful and thorough in the preparation of his cases and for three successive terms he was chosen to act as prosecuting attorney of his county. At the time of the Civil war he put aside all business and personal considerations and joined the Federal army, serving for four years in defense of the Union under Captain David P. Dyer, judge of the Federal court of St. Louis. In early manhood he wedded Margaret Pace, who was born in Montgomery county, Missouri, a daughter of William Pace, a native of Kentucky and a well-to-do country gentleman, known as Squire Pace. To Mr. and Mrs. John M. Barker was born a large family of children. The parents were loyal members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Barker was a Mason, closely following the teachings of the fraternity. In politics he always voted with the democratic party.

Justin M. Barker pursued his early education in the common schools and was graduated from the Kirksville (Mo.) Commercial College with the class of 1886. He initiated his business career by accepting a position in a bank at Wellsville, Missouri, where he was employed by his uncle, S. M. Barker. He continued in the bank for five years, gaining intimate, accurate and comprehensive knowledge of various phases of the banking business and then went to Arkansas City, Arkansas, in 1891 to become cashier of the Desha Bank. Four years were spent in that connection and in 1895 he removed to Atkins, where he organized the Bank of Atkins, of which he became the first cashier. The bank was capitalized for fifteen thousand dollars and the success of the institution is indicated in the fact that the capitalization has been increased to fifty thousand dollars and there is today a surplus of equal amount, the additional capital and surplus being earned by the institution. The bank has an average deposit of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars and is recognized as one of the strong financial institutions of this section of the state. About ten years ago Mr. Barker was elected to the presidency of the bank as successor to E. A. Darr (deceased), the first president. He has long maintained a prominent and honored position in banking circles, being chosen the president of the Arkansas Bankers Association in 1911, while at the present writing he is vice president for Arkansas of the American Bankers Association. During the World war he acted as chairman of some of the Liberty Loan campaigns of Pope county, Arkansas, and took a most helpful part in war work. Aside from his interest in the bank he owns valuable farm property and is justly accounted one of the foremost representative business men of this part of the state.

On the 14th of December, 1892, Mr. Barker was married to Miss Annie L. Bessellieu, a native of Monticello, Arkansas, and a daughter of Dr. W. F. Bessellieu. The father was a practicing physician of Monticello for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Barker have become parents of four children: John Mackay, after acquiring a high school education, attended Hendrix College and also the Barnes Business College at St. Louis and is now assistant cashier of the Bank of Atkins; David Lamar, also assistant cashier of the bank, was a soldier of the World war, being stationed at Camp Pike, Arkansas, and Camp Shelby, Mississippi, remaining with the army for six months. He was educated in the Henderson-Brown College, also the Hendrix College and the Mercersburg (Pa.) Academy; Caruth Alexander, the third of the family, after attending the Atkins high school, continued his education at Hendrix College and in the Henderson-Brown Academy, and like his brothers is associated with the bank; Louise Martha, who attended high school and the Galloway College, afterward became a student in the National Park Seminary in Washington, D. C., and is now attending Central College at Conway, Arkansas.

Mr. Barker and his family are well known socially and the hospitality of their home is greatly enjoyed by their many friends. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is a prominent and well known figure in various fraternal organizations. He belongs to the Masonic blue lodge, the Royal Arch Chapter and the Knights Templar Commandery, is also identified with the Knights of Pythias and was grand chancellor of the state at one time, being the youngest man to fill that position in the entire country. He also served as worshipful master in the blue lodge and has taken an active part in upholding the high standards of Masonry. His membership connections also extend to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His political endorsement has been given to the democratic party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, and he has taken an active part in its work. He served as a member of the state central committee and as a member of the executive committee and for a number of years he was one of the trustees of the state charitable institutions for Arkansas. In 1917 he was elected to serve as a member of the state senate and gave thoughtful and earnest consideration to all the vital questions which came up for settlement during his connection with the upper house of the general assembly. His interest in the public welfare is of a tangible character and while he holds to high ideals he uses the best practical methods in their attainment. His entire life has been of service to his adopted state and he today ranks as one of the representative business men and financiers and as a most public-spirited citizen, his course at all times being such as might well serve as an example and source of encouragement to others.

DAVID BEITLER.

In the year 1877 David Beitler became a factor in the business circles of Hot Springs by establishing a retail grocery store in this city. In the course of years he became an outstanding figure in commercial and financial circles and at the time of his death was president of the Citizens National Bank. His activities were at all times wisely, carefully, intelligently and honorably directed and constituted a contributing factor to the growth and progress of Hot Springs. His life story indicates what can be accomplished through individual effort guided by a laudable ambition. David Beitler was born in New Philadelphia, Ohio, August 7, 1847, and the old home in which his birth occurred is still in possession of members of the family. His parents were Conrad and Marguerite (Birnbaum) Beitler, the former a native of Germany, although brought to the United States by his parents when but three years of age, the family home being established at that time in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, where Conrad Beitler became a farmer. To him and his wife were born eight children, who were reared on the old family homestead.

David Beitler, the eldest of the family, pursued his education in the public and high schools of New Philadelphia and when not busy with his textbooks assisted in the development of the fields. He continued in Ohio through the period of his boyhood and youth and in early manhood removed to Missouri but after a brief period returned to New Philadelphia. Later he sought the opportunities of the southwest and made his way to Arkansas in the year 1877. Pleased with Hot Springs and conditions and possibilities of the city, he here established a retail grocery house and conducted the business with marked success for some time. In the year 1889 he embarked in the wholesale grocery trade at Hot Springs, continuing the conduct of the store with uninterrupted success until he retired in the year 1905. At that date he became identified with banking interests of Hot Springs and at the time of his demise was the president as well as one of the directors of the Citizens National Bank. He studied closely all of the phases of banking and also the business conditions here and was thus enabled to make the institution a forceful element in the business development and progress of Hot Springs. He also became identified with the Buckstaff Bath House as vice president.

Mr. Beitler was married twice. He first wedded Miss Mattie Chalfant, who departed this life in 1878. He later wedded Miss Kate Kennan, a daughter of Samuel Kennan, of a prominent and well known family of Kentucky and later of Missouri. Her father was a prosperous planter and successful breeder of blue ribbon horses. Mrs. Beitler is well known in Hot Springs, occupying a prominent position in social circles, and is identified with the leading women's clubs of the city.

Mr. Beitler was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his religious faith was that of the Lutheran church, while Mrs. Beitler is identified with the Methodist Episcopal church. In his political views Mr. Beitler was a republican but never sought nor desired the honors and emoluments of public office, preferring to concentrate his time and energy upon his business affairs, which were most wisely, carefully and successfully directed. At one time, however, he ably served the city of Hot Springs as a member of its council. The sterling worth of his character is attested by all with whom he was associated and the world is better for his having lived because his influence was ever on the side of right, progress, truth and justice. Mrs. Beitler now occupies a beautiful bungalow residence at No. 835 Park avenue and, like her husband, shares in the warm regard of many of the leading people of Hot Springs. David Beitler was in the sixty-fifth year of his age when called to the home beyond on the 9th of June, 1912.

H. P. ROSS.

Among the important business enterprises of Fort Smith is that conducted under the name of the Ross Electric Company, of which H. P. and D. T. Ross are the proprietors, their establishment being located at No. 1102 Garrison avenue. The senior partner in the firm was born in McAlester, Oklahoma, in 1895, and is a son of J. T. and Elizabeth J. (Patton) Ross. His early education was acquired in the public schools of his native state and he afterward took up the study of applied electricity. For a time he worked in Shreveport, Louisiana, and subsequently made his way to St. Thomas, Ontario, where he continued his activities in his chosen field. Each new position brought to him wider opportunities and he gained valuable knowledge from each new experience. On leaving Ontario he returned to the United States and for a time was employed in Guthrie, Oklahoma, after which he went to Muskogee, Oklahoma. He later came to Fort Smith and here entered into partnership with D. T. Ross in organizing the Ross Electric Company. They do all kinds of electrical work and their business has steadily grown and developed until it is now one of substantial proportions.

H. P. Ross wedded Miss Maude G. Sparks and they enjoy the goodwill and high regard of a large circle of warm friends in Fort Smith. Mr. Ross belongs to the Business Men's Club and also to the Retail Merchants Association and is interested in everything that has to do with the advancement and improvement of trade conditions and relations in this city.

D. T. Ross, junior partner in the Ross Electric Company, was born in Celestine, Oklahoma, in 1898, and is a brother of H. P. Ross. He pursued his studies in the public schools of his native town and afterward took up electrical construction in Oklahoma. Some time later he worked with his brother in Louisiana and in Ontario, Canada, and eventually they returned to the southwest, spending some time in Oklahoma and then coming to Fort Smith.

The business activity of D. T. Ross was interrupted by service in the World war. He joined the Coast Artillery, became a chief mechanic and was on active duty in France.

D. T. Ross was married to Oneida Dickinson. He is interested in all of those projects and plans which have to do with the development and upbuilding of his adopted city, but the major portion of his time and attention is concentrated upon the work of the Ross Electric Company, which was formed in Fort Smith in 1917. They now conduct a large construction business and also handle a full line of fixtures, chandeliers and other electrical supplies. Their business in both departments has assumed extensive proportions and the brothers have won a most creditable place as representatives of electrical interests in western Arkansas.

CLARK TARRELL BATES.

Clark Tarrell Bates, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Southern Hardware Company of Hot Springs and one of the city's foremost business men, was born in Montgomery county, Arkansas, March 18, 1886, a son of John F. and Mary Jane (Smith) Bates, who were also natives of Montgomery county. Both are now deceased. The grandmother in the maternal line came to the state of Arkansas and passed over the site of Hot Springs when there was hut one cabin in the town.

Clark T. Bates was educated in the public schools of his native county, supplemented by a commercial course at Draughon's Business College at Denison, Texas. In 1906 he went to Chickasha, Oklahoma, as an employe of Swift & Company, filling the position of shipping clerk. Subsequently he was placed on the road as one of the sales force of that corporation, with which he remained for a period of three years. He then resigned his position to enter the employ of Buie & Wallace, hardware dealers of Chickasha, in the capacity of bookkeeper, and continued with the house for two years. In 1911 he went on the road for Draughon's Business College, opening schools for them throughout Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri. In the fall of 1913 he came to Hot Springs and in company with W. O. Creason and E. L. Cotton organized the Southern Hardware Company, of which Mr. Bates was made general manager. In this important position he has continued directing the operations of the house, which is today one of the foremost business enterprises of this character in Hot Springs. The business has been incorporated with E. L. Cotton as president, W. O. Creason as vice president and C. T. Bates as secretary, treasurer and general manager.

In 1907 Mr. Bates was married to Miss Georgia E. Maddox of Chickasha, Oklahoma. He is a member of Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M.; Hot Springs Chapter, No. 47, R. A. M.; Hot Springs Council, No. 23, R. & S. M.; Hot Springs Commandery, No. 5, K. T.; and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff. His wife has membership in the Missionary Baptist church. Both are highly esteemed, having many warm friends in this city, and Mr. Bates is recognized as a most progressive and capable business man. Starting out in life without special advantages, he has steadily advanced through the mastery of each task assigned him. The faithful performance of each day's duties has given him courage, strength and inspiration for the labors of the succeeding day and step by step he has proceeded until he has reached the goal of prosperity.

T. C. RAMSEY, M. D.

Dr. T. C. Ramsey, a leading representative of the Benton county medical fraternity, has resided in Gentry since 1912 and his practice has steadily grown in volume and importance as he has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems which confront the physician in his efforts to restore health and prolong life. He is a native son of Arkansas, his birth having occurred in Carroll county on the 1st of January, 1871. His parents were Thompson and Naomi (Hulsey) Ramsey, the former a native of Tennessee, while the latter was born in Georgia. They were married in Arkansas and the father engaged in farming and merchandising, winning success along both lines of activity. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving as a sergeant in the Confederate army. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party, while fraternally he was identified with the Masons. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey became the parents of fifteen children, of whom seven survive, the subject of this review being the youngest in the family. His paternal grandfather, John Ramsey, was a native of Tennessee and in his later years became a resident of Arkansas. The maternal grandfather, Hiram Hulsey, was born in Georgia, there residing until the latter part of his life, when he removed to Arkansas.

Following the completion of his public school course Dr. Ramsey became a student in Clark's Academy at Berryville, Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1892 with the A. B. degree. For a year thereafter he engaged in teaching school and then entered the Kentucky School of Medicine, graduating with the class of 1894. Coming to Arkansas, he opened an office at Green Forest and there successfully followed his profession for over thirteen years. He then went to Talala, Oklahoma, where he remained for five years, and in September, 1912, arrived in Gentry, where he has since made his home, his practice now having reached large proportions. He has ever remained an earnest student of his profession and has taken postgraduate work at the Kentucky Medical College, acting as staff operator. He devotes some attention to surgery and in the field of professional service has made continuous progress, gleaming from comprehensive study and research and from practical experience valuable truths in connection with the science of medicine.

In March, 1896, Dr. Ramsey was united in marriage to Miss Ota Wilson, a native of Carroll county, Arkansas, and a daughter of J. C. Wilson, a well known farmer and stockman of that locality. Her mother was a daughter of Alexander Fancher, one of the survivors of the terrible Mountain Meadow massacre. Mrs. Ramsey is a successful teacher, having followed that profession for the past twenty-five years, and is now an instructor at Springtown, Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Ramsey have become the parents of a daughter, Reta Pauline, who is now a teacher at Grove, Oklahoma, holding a state certificate from Tahlequah College of Oklahoma.

Mrs. Ramsey is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally the Doctor is identified with the Masons, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand. His professional connections are with the Benton County and Arkansas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association and he is also a member of the Alumni Medical Associations of the World. He is a democrat in his political views and is now acting as health officer of Gentry and is also assistant collaborating epidermologist of the United States public health service. He utilizes every possible effort to promote his knowledge and increase his efficiency and he is accounted one of the most able and successful physicians of Benton county.

F. O. BUTT.

One of the representative citizens of Eureka Springs whose success is the result of his own intelligently directed efforts is F. O. Butt, well known attorney and banker. He was born in Lovington, Illinois, on the 3d of February, 1875, a son of William A. and Anna (Weaver) Butt, likewise natives of that state. The paternal grandfather, Archibald Butt, was born in Kentucky and removed to Illinois in 1830. He spent the remainder of his life in that state, where he was a highly respected and representative citizen. On the maternal side the ancestors of Mr. Butt came from Holland and his maternal grandfather, John Weaver, was born in Pennsylvania. He removed to Illinois at an early age and gaining substantial success, resided there until his demise. He served in the Mexican war. Mr. and Mrs. Butt were married in Illinois and lived there until 1885, when they came to this state and located in Carroll county. Mr. Butt is still living in Green Forest, but the mother is deceased. For some time he was superintendent of the Wabash Railroad in Illinois and since coming to Arkansas he has served as notary public and justice of the peace. His life has been one of industry and he is now retired, enjoying well merited rest. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Butt eight children were born, four of whom are living: Mrs. Charles Ramsey, who resides in Seattle, Washington, where her husband is engaged in the lumber business; Annie, the wife of James Litterel, a prominent laundryman of Los Angeles, California; Dr. W. A. Butt, a prominent physician and surgeon of Green Forest; and F. O., whose name initiates this review. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally Mr. Butt is a master Mason. Since attaining his majority he has given his political allegiance to the democratic party, in the activities of which he takes a prominent part. Mr. Butt is one of the few surviving veterans of the Civil war. For three years he fought with the Union army as a member of the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Regiment.

In the acquirement of an education F. O. Butt attended the common schools of his native state and later, upon removing to this state with his parents, became a student in the high school at Harrison and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1893. For the following five years he engaged in teaching school, studying law in his spare time under W. F. Pace, and he was admitted to the bar on the 3d of February, 1896, on his twenty-first birthday. For two years prior to his admittance to the bar he had practiced in the circuit court by permission of the judge. He at once located in Green Forest and opening offices there followed his profession until he came to Eureka Springs in 1905. He has since practiced here and the zeal with which he has devoted his energies to his profession, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients and an assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases, have brought him a large business and made him very successful in its conduct. He handles much extensive and important litigation and is admitted to practice in the United States supreme court, the state supreme court and all federal courts. Although the greater part of Mr. Butt's time is spent in taking care of his professional duties, he is active in financial circles as vice president of the First National Bank of Eureka Springs, vice president of the First National Bank of Green Forest and of the Peoples Bank at Berryville. Mr. Butt owns four thousand acres of land throughout the state and he has just completed the erection of a beautiful suburban home. He is a self-made man and the success he enjoys is the result of his own intelligently directed efforts and laudable ambition.

In 1901 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Butt and Miss Essie Cox, a native of Green Forest and a daughter of A. J. Cox. Her father is one of the prominent and successful agriculturists of the community in which he resides. Mrs. Cox is deceased. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Butt seven children have been born: John K., who is nineteen years of age and is a student in a law school at Little Rock; Katheleen and Robert Lee, students in the high school; Dorothy, in the eighth grade; Jack, in the sixth grade; Joe Vol, in the third grade; and Frank, four years old. Mrs. Butt is prominent in the club and social affairs of Eureka Springs and is a woman of charming and magnetic personality.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Mr. Butt is a generous contributor to its support. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a member of both the York and Scottish Rites. He has attained the Mystic Shrine and he is conceded to be an exemplary member of the craft. Mr. Butt is likewise affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he has been deputy grand master of both that organization and of the Masons. He holds membership in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Woodmen of the World, and the Anti-Horse-Thief Association. Since attaining his majority Mr. Butt has given his stanch support to the democratic party, in the interests of which he has taken an active part. For two terms he represented his fellowmen in the state legislature and he was a state senator for four years. For a like period he held the office of county examiner and for six years he was chief executive of Eureka Springs, his administration being marked by a period of progress and prosperity. In 1918 he was a delegate to the constitutional convention and is the present chairman of the county board of education. Mr. Butt's friends are legion, for his salient qualities have endeared him to those with whom he has come into contact. He enjoys the admiration and respect of his colleagues and contemporaries, the goodwill of acquaintances and the strong and enduring regard of those with whom he has been more intimately associated.

LAWRENCE BRANCH BURROW.

Admitted to the bar in 1914, Lawrence Branch Burrow has since engaged in the practice of law. As a member of the well known firm of Reid, Gray, Burrow & McDonnell, with offices in Little Rock, he has an excellent clientage that connects him with much important litigation in the courts of the district. His birth occurred in Morrillton, Conway county, Arkansas, September 5, 1892. His father, Thomas Ewell Burrow, also a native of this state, was born at Bunker Hill Landing, Perry county, his natal day being December 16, 1863. His grandfather was one of the early settlers of Arkansas. Thomas E. Burrow has spent practically his entire life within the borders of his native state and since 1893 has made his home in Little Rock, where he is prominently known as a successful merchant, engaged in the wholesale dry goods business as a member of the Beal-Burrow Dry Goods Company. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party. At the place of his nativity he was married to Miss Emma Robinson, who was born in Clarksville, Arkansas. They have become the parents of three sons and two daughters, of whom two sons and a daughter are now living, the latter being the wife of Carey R. Harrison of San Francisco, California.

Lawrence B. Burrow was but a year old when his parents removed from Morrillton to Little Rock and at the usual age he became a public school pupil, passing through consecutive grades, while later he attended the Smith Academy in St. Louis, Missouri, and subsequently matriculated in the Culver Military Institute, from which he was graduated with the class of 1911. Soon afterward he entered upon preparation for the bar and completed a course in the University of Virginia in 1914, taking his LL. B. degree while at Charlottesville, Virginia. Since his admission to the bar he has continuously engaged in practice and through the intervening period of seven years has made steady progress in his profession.

On the 18th of April, 1916, Mr. Burrow was married to Miss Lila Jane Plunkett. She, too, is a native of Arkansas, her birth having occurred in Eureka Springs, August 18, 1895, her parents being William B. and Lila (Boyd) Plunkett. Her father was born in Arkansas and for a number of years they have made their home in Little Rock.

In his political views Mr. Burrow has always been a democrat. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons as a member of the blue lodge and he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, being secretary of its Brotherhood Society. He is much interested in the work of the church and its purposes and he cooperates heartily and earnestly in all those plans and projects which are making for the uplift and benefit of the individual and the benefit of the community at large.

DEANE H. TOMPKINS.

Deane H. Tompkins, who is actively engaged in the insurance business at Ashdown, is widely recognized as a young man of enterprise, ability, progressiveness and initiative. His birth occurred in Webster, North Carolina, on the 6th of September, 1887, and when he was nine years of age his mother brought him to Little River county, Arkansas, settling at Wilton, where he pursued his education in the public schools. It was in 1904, when a youth of seventeen years, that he came to Ashdown and began work in the office of the county clerk, being thus engaged for four years. Soon after severing that connection he established an abstract and insurance business, but in 1920 discontinued his activity in the real estate field and is now concentrating his attention solely upon insurance interests. He handles both life and fire insurance, representing the Equitable Life and about thirty fire insurance companies. An extensive clientele is accorded him, so that he writes a large amount of insurance annually and has become well known as one of the successful men in his line in southwestern Arkansas. He also had the agency for the Ford car in Little River county from 1916 until 1920 but disposed of this in the latter year.

On the 6th of December, 1906, Mr. Tompkins was united in marriage to Miss Julia Phillips and they have become parents of a son, William Deane. Their religious faith is indicated by their membership in the First Baptist church. Coming to Arkansas in his boyhood days, Mr. Tompkins has now been a resident of Little River county for a quarter of a century and has made many friends who esteem him highly as a man of genuine personal worth, a business man of ability and a citizen who is ever loyal to the best interests of the community.

JESSE THOMAS TADLOCK.

One of the alert and enterprising citizens of Crossett is Jesse Thomas Tadlock, foreman of the machine shops at the Crossett Lumber Company. He was born in Monroe, North Carolina, on the 18th of August, 1883, of Scotch, Irish and English ancestry. His father, S. B. Tadlock, is living, at the age of sixty-five years, and is traveling representative for the John Deere Company of Moline, Illinois, his territory being southeastern Arkansas. He was born in North Carolina and came to this state in 1889. During the Civil war he served as a private in the Confederate army and participated in many of the important battles of that conflict. He enlisted at a very early age. In Charleston, South Carolina, in 1870, was celebrated the marriage of S. B. Tadlock to Miss Elizabeth Dees, whose demise occurred in 1900, in her fifty-eighth year. She was a native of that state, her birth having occurred near Charleston. She lost two brothers and her father in the service of the Confederacy. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Tadlock six children were born, four boys and two girls, Jesse Thomas, whose name initiates this review, being the fourth in order of birth. Three boys and one girl are living.

In the acquirement of an education Jesse Thomas Tadlock attended the Industrial School in Louisiana, receiving the equivalent of a grammar school education, and in later life he took a correspondence course in mechanical training from the International Correspondence School. Mr. Tadlock was but thirteen years of age when he started out in the world on his own account, accepting a position as helper with the Magnolia Manufacturing & Supply Company at Junction City, Arkansas. After two years in that connection he went to Ruston, Louisiana, and was but sixteen years of age when he became an employe of the Ruston Foundry & Machine Company in the mechanical department. He served four years as an apprentice machinist, at the termination of that time becoming an employe in the railroad shop at Monroe, Louisiana. He remained there for nine years. For four years he was machinist for the V. S. & P. Railroad, was one year machinist for the A. L. & G. Railroad, and subsequently was appointed master mechanic and foreman, in which capacity he was active until the 1st of January, 1916.

Resigning his position he became associated with the Missouri Pacific at Ferriday, Louisiana, as machinist but after six weeks in that connection he came to Arkansas as machinist for the Southern Lumber Company at Warren. He was in their employ for nine months and then went with the Bradley Lumber Company there, as master mechanic for four years. In the early part of 1920 he came to the Crossett Lumber Company and in December of that year was made foreman of the machine shops, which important position he has since held. This company is one of the largest in the state and Mr. Tadlock has been a dominant factor in promoting the efficiency of his end of the business.

On the 7th of March, 1905, Mr. Tadlock was united in marriage to Miss Nettie Goodnough, a daughter of C. S. Goodnough, one of the well known citizens of Ruston, Louisiana. Mrs. Tadlock was a woman of much culture and refinement and was well known in the club and social circles of the various communities in which she resided. Her demise occurred in March, 1921, coming as a severe blow to her family and many friends in this community.

Mr. Tadlock is a consistent member of the Methodist church, to the support of which he is a generous contributor, and fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of Western Star Lodge, No. 24, A. F. & A. M., of Monroe, Louisiana; Monroe Chapter, No. 18, Royal Arch Masons; and Albert Pike Consistory at Little Rock. Along the line of his work he holds membership in the International Association of Machinists, which organization he served as corresponding secretary from 1909 through 1912. During the World war Mr. Tadlock gave generously of his time and money in the furtherance of the government's interests and he was especially active in Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives. Although he has been a resident of Crossett but a short time he has made many friends and is recognized as a man whose aid may be counted upon in any movement for the development and improvement of Crossett.

CONRAD ELSKEN.

Alert and energetic, watchful of all opportunities pointing to success, which opportunities he has wisely utilized in the upbuilding of his own fortunes, Conrad Elskén has also contributed through his business activity to the development of the section of the state in which he lives. He has become well known as a merchant, banker and promoter of a telephone system and his work has always been an element of much public worth. Born in Prussia, Germany, May 6, 1850, he is a son of Gerhart and Maria (Neisens) Elskén, who were also natives of Germany, whence they came to the United States in 1859, settling in Illinois, where the father followed farming. The mother died in that state and in 1878 Mr. Elskén came to Arkansas, where he lived retired to the time of his death. They were members of the Catholic church and they had a family of ten children, three of whom are yet living: Conrad; Henry, who works in his brother's store in Subiaco; and Christina, who is the wife of Matthias Klein, a native of Wiesbaden, now living near Paris, Arkansas, where he follows farming.

Conrad Elskén was educated in the schools of Illinois, being a lad of but nine years when brought to the new world. When his textbooks were put aside he took up the occupation of farming, which he followed until nineteen years of age and then began clerking in a store, continuing in that employment until he came to Arkansas. For three years he engaged in farming on rented land in this state and in 1881 began working in a store at Patterson's Bluff. In 1883 he removed to Paris, where he again engaged in clerking and while thus employed was appointed land agent for the Fort Smith & Little Rock Railroad, now the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad, for Logan and Franklin counties. He made his financial start in that way. He afterward engaged in the transfer business, operating between Altus and Paris, hauling an entire carload per day. After the railroad was built he engaged in merchandising at Paris and at Charleston, beginning with a small capital and a small store. In fact, he had only four hundred dollars with which to establish business and his partner had about an equal amount. They prospered from the beginning, owing to their earnest desire to please their customers and their straightforward dealing, and from time to time they increased their stock and broadened the scope of their activities. The business was established in 1895 and was so continued for twenty-two years, or until 1917, when the partnership was dissolved. In the meantime Mr. Elskén had removed to Subiaco, where he had established a store, and he is still engaged in merchandising at this place. This, however, constitutes but one phase of his activity, for he is the vice president of the First National Bank of Paris and president of the Citizens Telephone Company, which has all the telephones in Logan and South Franklin counties, numbering altogether about two thousand. He likewise owns farm land and he has made every dollar that he possesses through his own efforts. He now devotes most of his time to the telephone business, but gives general supervision to all his other interests, and his sound judgment and unfaltering enterprise are manifest in the success which he has continuously enjoyed and which is indeed well deserved. He is a director of the Fort Smith, Subiaco & Rock Island Railroad.

In 1877 Mr. Elsken was married to Miss Elizabeth Besselman, who was born in Germany and died in 1898. They were parents of three children: Augusta, the wife of John McGlyn, proprietor of a grocery store at Paris; Gahart, who is engaged in merchandising at Paris; and Henry J., who is bookkeeper and superintendent of the telephone system at Paris. In 1900 Mr. Elsken was married to Miss Margaret Kramer, who was born in Germany, in the Alsace-Lorraine district, or the Bavaria district. They have become parents of seven children: Margaret, at home; William, Edward, Anton, Mary Ann and Hermina, all in school; and Gregor, who is four years of age.

The family are communicants of the Catholic church at Subiaco and Mr. Elsken belongs to the Knights of Columbus. In politics he is a democrat and served as county treasurer of Logan county for eight years. He also was a member of the town council of Paris and is now mayor of Subiaco. He likewise organized the post office here and became the first postmaster. He took a most active and helpful part in furthering the interests of the government during the World war and was at the head of the Council of Defense in Logan county. He also had charge of different bond drives. His son, Henry J., volunteered for the wire service and was put in school at Fayetteville and afterward transferred to Bloomington, Indiana, but never had the opportunity to enter overseas service. Mr. Elsken was also on the charity board of the state under Governor Roberson and thus in many public capacities he has done valuable and important service.

THOMAS A. JOHNSTON.

Thomas A. Johnston, living in Dardanelle, is connected with both farming and banking interests in Yell county. He is a capable business man, alert and energetic and the thoroughness and system with which he has managed his business affairs have constituted vital elements in the attainment of his present-day prosperity. Yell county numbers him among her native sons, his birth having here occurred October 5, 1857, his parents being Joseph C. and Malinda (May) Johnston, who were natives of Tennessee and of Maryland, respectively. The latter was a daughter of Jesse May, also a native of Tennessee, when he removed to Johnson county, Arkansas, at an early day. He became quite prominent in that county, where he conducted extensive farming interests and owned a large number of slaves.

Joseph C. Johnston was comparatively young when his father died, and he therefore largely guided his own destiny. He was a well educated man and throughout his life was an extensive reader, keeping in touch with the trend of modern thought and progress in this way. Upon many topics of public concern he kept abreast with the best thinking men of the age and he was recognized as a most excellent and entertaining conversationalist. He went to California in the days of the gold excitement in 1849, traveling with a company that had forty-five wagons, each drawn by two or four yoke of oxen or steers, while one hundred and eighty-five men were in the party. They were nine months on the road ere they reached the Pacific coast. Mr. Johnston remained in California until 1853 and met with success in his undertaking, accumulating considerable gold there. He then rejoined his wife and two children who had remained in Arkansas, and when he left California it was with the intention of taking his family to that state, but after reaching home he changed his plans and instead removed to Yell county, settling on a farm two and a half miles from Dardanelle. He purchased slaves with which to cultivate the fields and continued to reside upon the farm until his demise. The land acquired by the parents has never been out of the possession of the family. The father was a member of the Presbyterian church, while his wife belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church, and his political allegiance was given to the democratic party. To him and his wife were born nine children, of whom five are living: John M., who yet occupies the old homestead farm; Mary, the widow of M. J. Catlin, residing at Little Rock; Susan, the wife of M. L. Davis, a prominent attorney of Dardanelle; Thomas A.; and Joseph S., who lives on the old home farm. The father was a stone mason by trade, serving an apprenticeship of seven years in his early life and though in later years he devoted his attention to farming he was yet able to do much mechanical work. He built the sheds and barn foundation with his own hands and instituted many other improvements on his property by reason of his mechanical ingenuity. Prior to the Civil war he took over the Gazette, which was a weekly publication, and as a result of the war he lost all of his slaves and considerable money.

Thomas A. Johnston was educated in the schools of Yell county and was early trained to the work of the fields. After his textbooks were put aside he farmed for a number of years and he is today the owner of two hundred and fifty acres of land, on which he raised thirty-six crops before he rented the property, which he leased in 1920 for the first time. During the thirty-six years in which he tilled the fields he never lost a week on the farm. He is now president of the Dardanelle Bank & Trust Company, occupying the presidency for the past five years, while for fifteen years previous he has been one of the directors and has been a patron of the bank from its establishment. He still owns much land in Yell county, also a valuable farm in Johnson county. He was a charter member in an oil mill at Dardanelle, which was burned, at which time he was president of the mill. He still owns considerable real estate in Dardanelle and his holdings likewise include the ownership of an ice plant, which is operated by his son and which has proved a profitable investment, he having but two dollars and sixty cents on his books outstanding for the last year. Mr. Johnston also owns a half interest in the cotton gin at Dardanelle. He made the principal part of his fortune through farming and trading in land, but in all business ventures he has prospered, possessing sound judgment and unremitting diligence—qualities which bring splendid results. In connection with Mr. Cotton he planted a peach orchard of one hundred and sixty acres and in 1912 they shipped from this orchard sixty carloads of peaches, or twenty-five thousand bushels.

In 1891 Mr. Johnston was united in marriage to Miss Viola M. Boles, who was born in Yell county, a daughter of Thomas Boles, who was a prominent citizen of Arkansas, serving as congressman from this state at an early day through election on the republican ticket. He afterward removed to Fort Smith and became United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas. He had served for four years in the Union army, proving a brave and loyal soldier. He died in Fort Smith about sixteen years ago, honored and respected by all who knew him.

To Mr. and Mrs. Johnston have been born three children: Neal died aged two years and eight months; one died at birth; and Thomas G. is proprietor of the ice plant and a fuel business in Dardanelle. He spent two or three years in Hendrix College and was taking a commercial course at Tyler, Texas, when he volunteered for service in the World war. He was in the training school at Camp Pike at the time hostilities ceased. He married Pauline Gibson of Nashville, Arkansas, and the young couple and his parents are widely and prominently known in Dardanelle and Yell county.

Since age conferred upon him the right to exercise the voting privilege Thomas A. Johnston has given his support to the democratic party. He was formerly identified with the Independent Order of Good Templars, but still belongs to the Modern Woodmen. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and their aid and influence have ever been on the side of justice, truth and right. He has worked for temperance and for all those forces which uplift the individual and promote the standards of the community at large. At the same time he has wisely and carefully directed his business affairs and his progressiveness along industrial, commercial and agricultural lines have been the potent features in making him one of the men of affluence in Yell county. Honored and respected by all, no man occupies a more enviable position in business and financial circles than does Thomas A. Johnston, not alone by reason of the success he has achieved, but also owing to the straightforward business methods which he has ever followed.

CAPTAIN JOEL MONROE McCLINTOCK.

Captain Joel Monroe McClintock, an attorney at law and an honored pioneer settler of Prairie county, now living at De Valls Bluff, has been closely associated with the development and upbuilding of this section of the state since about the close of the Civil war and has taken a most active part in promoting public progress and in advancing the general welfare. He was born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, thirteen miles east of Pittsburgh, in 1839, his birthplace being the farm of his father, Ralph McClintock, who was a native of Pennsylvania and who in early manhood wedded Nancy Monroe, who was born in Allegheny county, that state, and was a daughter of Joel Monroe, with whom Joel M. McClintock made his home during his early youth. The father upon leaving Pennsylvania removed westward to St. Charles county, Missouri, but afterward returned to the Keystone state. Later he became a resident of Illinois and for a time served as county treasurer of Bureau county. In the year 1873 he came to Arkansas, settling at De Valls Bluff, and his last days were spent in Little Rock, where his death occurred in 1890. His wife also died in the capital city. They were the parents of seven children, four of whom are still living:

CAPTAIN JOEL M. McCLINTOCK

William, now a resident of Gardner, Kansas; Mrs. Anna Riley, living at Mineral, Illinois; Ralph and Joel Monroe. One of those who has departed this life was Margaret McClintock.

Joel Monroe McClintock pursued his education in the common schools of Pennsylvania and also in St. Charles county, Missouri, and in Illinois. He was twenty-one years of age when he enlisted for service in the Union army, joining the Thirty-third Illinois Infantry under Colonel Hovey, who had previously been principal of a seminary in Illinois. Mr. McClintock was on duty west of the Mississippi river and participated in the battle of Big River. He was captured but later was paroled and returned home, after which he attended Lombard University at Galesburg, Illinois. Subsequently he reentered the army under General Steele. In 1862 he marched to Helena, Arkansas, and while there became a victim of typhoid fever. After a time he was removed to St. Louis, Missouri, where he continued until he was transferred to the Mississippi Marine Brigade and was on duty up and down the Mississippi river. In August, 1863, he was commissioned a captain and was assigned to Helena, Arkansas, while later he was transferred to De Valls Bluff and in 1863 was sent on military duty to Little Rock.

In the spring of 1864 Captain McClintock resigned from the army and came to De Valls Bluff, where he entered business in connection with Charles McDowell. Here, he remained until 1866 and then went to Gum Pond, where he engaged in farming, but in that business venture lost heavily. In 1867 he was appointed military registrar of Woodruff county and in the following year he was appointed to the office of sheriff of Prairie county, a position which he filled for five years. He also took charge of the bill which was introduced in the legislature to establish Lonoke county, having been petitioned by the citizens of this district to undertake the task. The bill passed the general assembly and he was commissioned by the governor as the first sheriff of Lonoke county, being the popular choice as well for that office. The following spring he removed to Prairie county and served as county judge. During the period of his incumbency in the office of sheriff of Prairie county the reconstruction work was begun and with it came the evils of carpetbag government. Although a northern soldier Mr. McClintock espoused the manifest human rights of the southern people of this neighborhood and protested strongly against the quartering of militia in this vicinity. In this trying period he adjusted affairs equitably in his administrative offices and did much to bring about improved conditions. He endeared himself to the people of this region and has lived here continuously since as a highly esteemed citizen, enjoying the confidence and warm regard of all with whom he has been brought in contact. Not only has he made an excellent record in public office but has become a prominent figure in connection with business affairs and the material development of the community.

Captain McClintock today owns twenty-five hundred acres of land in this vicinity and from his agricultural interests derives a most gratifying income. Moreover, he is numbered among the early pioneers, being here at a day when Isaac Gates conducted a store here. Mr. Gates was for many years manager for his brother, who held extensive interests here for a long period and his nephews, Victor and Jacob Gates, are now conducting a store at Lonoke. Among the other pioneer merchants were George F. Lovejoy and O. H. Platt. In 1870 Sam Lovejoy, a brother of George F. Lovejoy, was also in business in this county and still other merchants were Sam Peoples and Abe Boyd. Mr. McClintock is today the only survivor among these pioneer figures of De Valls Bluff. He relates in a most interesting manner many incidents concerning the early days and the progress that has since been wrought, bringing about a marked transformation in this section of the state.

Captain McClintock was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Crosson, a daughter of Greene Crosson, who located at Arkansas Post in 1859 and afterward removed to De Witt, while later he took up his abode at De Valls Bluff. He came to this state from Lawrence county, Illinois, and his wife bore the maiden name of Rebekah Buchanan. For his second wife Captain McClintock chose Sarah Carroll Brown, who resided at De Valls Bluff with her aunt, Mrs. Sarah Dinsdale, whose husband was an Englishman by birth and served in the Federal army during the Civil war. He afterward owned a store at De Valls Bluff, where he departed this life. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mulhaddon, was married again, becoming the wife of Dr. Cooper of Brownsville, Tennessee, who is also now deceased, while Mrs. Cooper still makes her home at De Valls Bluff. In 1910 Captain and Mrs. McClintock made a trip to Europe, visiting many points of interest in the countries of the old world.

There are few who are so intimately associated with the history of Prairie county and this section of the state as Captain McClintock has been. He has the distinction of having fired the gun carried by Davy Crockett. This gun, which was silver mounted, was given to Davy Crockett by the young men of Philadelphia and was inherited by the late Colonel Robert Crockett, at whose home Captain McClintock was visiting when the privilege was accorded him of loading and firing this old relic, now in the possession of Mrs. John W. Crockett of Little Rock. Fraternally Captain McClintock is a Mason and he belongs as well to the Grand Army of the Republic and to the Loyal Legion. The interests and activities of his life have been broad and varied, and his experiences have been many as he has lived in various sections of the country and at different times has engaged in various lines of business. He has now passed the eighty-third milestone on life's journey and in the evening of his days receives the respect and honor which should ever be accorded one of advanced years whose life has been well spent.

J. A. SIPE.

J. A. Sipe is widely known in the commercial circles of Fort Smith and of western Arkansas as the president of the Fort Smith Paper Company, with which business he has been associated since 1905. His entire course has been characterized by a progressiveness that has enabled him to overcome obstacles and difficulties and push his way steadily forward to the goal of success. His early life was spent in the east, his birth having occurred at Harrisville, Pennsylvania, in 1870. He obtained his education in the public schools and continued a resident of the Keystone state for thirty-six years. His connection with Fort Smith dates from 1906. The previous year he was instrumental in organizing the Fort Smith Paper Company in partnership with Mr. Fletcher. While the beginning was comparatively small the business was soon placed upon a substantial basis and in 1907 was incorporated with J. A. Sipe as the president, E. D. Hill as secretary and I. H. Nakdimen treasurer. Their original investment was but five thousand dollars and something of the continuous and substantial growth of the business is indicated in the fact that the company is today capitalized for sixty-five thousand, five hundred dollars. They conduct a large business in school supplies, also handle paper of all kinds and all kinds of notions. They do printing of every character, make rubber stamps and seals and in the conduct of the business utilize a building three stories in height and in dimensions sixty-eight by one hundred and thirty-seven feet. In the factory are employed fourteen people, while the business is represented upon the road by five traveling salesmen. Steadily their patronage has grown and they have found that satisfied patrons are the best advertisement. Before engaging in business on his own account Mr. Sipe was connected with the internal revenue service and made an excellent record in that connection, but his ambition to make his labors prove of greatest personal benefit led him to turn his attention in the direction of the paper trade, and in this field he has so directed his efforts that substantial results have accrued and the business has contributed to the material development and upbuilding of Fort Smith.

Mr. Sipe was united in marriage to Miss Frances Fletcher and their children are three in number: Ethel, Paul and Mildred. Mr. Sipe is a member of the Business Men's Club and he also belongs to the Lions Club, while fraternally he is connected with the Masons and the Odd Fellows. He is loyal to every cause which he espouses and any project for the benefit and welfare of community or country receives his strong endorsement and support. His life record is that of a self-made man, indicating what can be accomplished when there is a will to dare and to do. Utilizing opportunities that others have passed heedlessly by, he has steadily advanced until he stands in the front rank among the leading business men of his adopted city.

HARVEY THOMAS HARRISON.

Harvey Thomas Harrison of Little Rock was born January 6, 1884, in Lockesburg, Sevier county, Arkansas, and is a son of the Rev. William Ringgold and Alice Virginia (Grady) Harrison. The father was born December 22, 1853, on a farm in Itawamba county, Mississippi, while the mother's birth occurred on a farm in Sevier county, Arkansas, December 25, 1864. They were married at Lockesburg, Arkansas, on the 4th of October, 1882, and through the intervening years Rev. Mr. Harrison has devoted his life to the work of the ministry, laboring earnestly at various places to which he has been called. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party. To him and his wife have been born five sons and four daughters, of whom two daughters died in infancy.

Harvey T. Harrison, who was the eldest in his father's family, obtained his education in various towns of Arkansas as his father went from place to place, according to the itinerant custom of the Methodist ministry in that day. At length he became a student in Hendrix College at Conway, Arkansas, and there won his Bachelor of Arts degree upon graduation with the class of 1906. Thus he laid broad and deep in his literary training the foundation upon which has been reared the superstructure of his professional knowledge. He afterward took up the study of law and was admitted to the Arkansas bar in June, 1911. Since that time he has steadily engaged in practice. He became assistant attorney for the Rock Island Railway Company for Arkansas on the 15th of March, 1915, and on the 1st of January, 1916, he became a partner in the law firm of Buzbee, Pugh & Harrison, a connection that has since been maintained. Mr. Buzbee is the attorney for the Rock Island in Arkansas and Louisiana and the two other members of the firm are acting as assistant attorneys. They also enjoy an extensive private practice and the clientage of the firm has connected them with much important litigations heard in the courts of the southwest.

On the 14th of December, 1911, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Harrison to Miss Nellie Evans McCaughey, who was born in Camden, Arkansas, August 30, 1887. She attended Galloway College of Arkansas and afterward continued her education in Belmont College in Tennessee. By her marriage she has become the mother of one son, John McCaughey, who was born October 27, 1912.

Mr. Harrison is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, of Little Rock and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party. He belongs to the Country Club, to the Spring Lake Club and to the Dilly Club and is much interested in these organizations. His genial, social nature makes for popularity wherever he is known and his friends in Little Rock and the state are legion.

PRESTON CASTLEBERRY.

Preston Castleberry, an optometrist of Pine Bluff, was born at Castleberry, Alabama, in 1878, the town having been named in honor of the family. His parents were Solomon and Mary (Branch) Castleberry, who were also natives of that place, and the father was a Confederate veteran of the Civil war. The sons of the family have entered professional circles, one brother of Preston Castleberry being C. E. Castleberry of Little Rock, who is well known as an optometrist of that city, while another brother is Dr. F. L. Castleberry, the well known eye, ear, nose and throat specialist of Paragould, Arkansas.

Preston Castleberry was educated in his native village and in the schools of Kansas City, Missouri, and Little Rock. Having received thorough training along the line of his chosen profession, with the passing years he has become an expert optometrist and has developed a high degree of efficiency in connection with the mechanical end of the business, in the grinding of lenses and other such work. For a time he was associated in practice with his brother in Little Rock before removing to Pine Bluff. Since coming to this city he has gained a splendid patronage and his success is growing year by year.

Mr. Castleberry was united in marriage to Miss Leila Ricks of Atlanta, Georgia, a daughter of Dr. Ricks. Mr. and Mrs. Castleberry have become parents of one child, Mary M. Mr. Castleberry is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mrs. Castleberry is a Presbyterian. Both are interested in all those forces which make for right, justice, truth and progress. Their friends are many and the hospitality of a large number of the best homes in Pine Bluff is freely accorded them, for during the period of their residence here they have become firmly established in those social circles where intelligence and true worth are accepted as the passports to good society.

JOHN F. CLIFFORD.

Almost every state in the Union has sent its quota of citizens into Arkansas, and among those who have gone from Michigan is John F. Clifford, now a well known attorney of Little Rock. He was born in Lapeer, Lapeer county, Michigan, August 7, 1883. His father, John Allen Clifford, was a native of County Tipperary, Ireland, and after residing for a number of years in the middle west removed to Little Rock in 1890. He had come to the United States in 1861 and the last twenty-four years of his life were spent in Arkansas capital, where he died in May, 1914.

John F. Clifford was but seven years of age when brought to this state, so that his education was acquired in the public schools of Little Rock and then he determined upon the practice of law as a life work, so that he became a law student in the University of Arkansas, from which he was graduated in 1908. In the intervening period of thirteen years he has made steady advancement at the bar. He has served as city attorney of Little Rock, but otherwise has given his attention solely to the interests of his private practice. His devotion to the interests of his clients is proverbial, yet he never forgets that he owes a still higher allegiance to the majesty of the law. His capability in his chosen profession is widely recognized. He throws himself easily and naturally into the argument, with a self-possession and a deliberation that indicate no straining after effect. On the contrary there is a precision and clearness in his statements, an acuteness and strength in his arguments, which speak a mind trained in the severest school of investigation and to which the closest reasoning is habitual.

On the 17th of July, 1908, Mr. Clifford was married to Miss Mabel Grace Robertson, who was born in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1885, her father being Alexander Robertson, who was born in Scotland and is now living in Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Clifford have become parents of three daughters: Bess, Grace R. and Ellen.

Politically Mr. Clifford has always been a democrat, but has never sought nor desired office outside the strict path of his profession. Fraternally he is a blue lodge Mason, loyal to the teachings and purposes of the craft, and he is also connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, his membership being in the Winfield Memorial church. His cooperation and aid can at all times be counted upon to further those interests and projects which are based upon an earnest desire to promote the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of the community and which at all times work for public good and advancement.

R. S. WOODARD, D. D. S.

Dr. R. S. Woodard is a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred in Fayetteville, in 1877, his parents being M. W. and Ida (Hatcher) Woodard. His parents were likewise natives of Tennessee and the father was a lawyer by profession. He won prominence at the bar and also served as county judge, while on various other occasions he filled public office, acting as county clerk and also as representative of his district in the state legislature. His father, R. S. Woodard, was a banker and the family was one of prominence in Tennessee, the name being closely interwoven with the history of material, intellectual and political progress there. The mother of Dr. Woodard was a daughter of B. H. Hatcher, who was a Confederate veteran of the Civil war and resided for many years in Hampshire, Tennessee. To the marriage of M. W. Woodard and Ida Hatcher three sons were born: B. H., who is now a physician practicing at Spring Hill, Tennessee; John, a member of the bar at Tulsa, Oklahoma; and Dr. R. S. Woodard of this review.

The last named pursued his education in the public schools of Fayetteville, Tennessee, until he was ready to enter upon preparation for a professional career, at which time he matriculated in Vanderbilt University at Nashville and there won his D. D. S. degree on graduation with the class of 1901. He located for practice at Fort Smith, Arkansas, in the same year, but after a brief period there spent he came to Stuttgart in 1902.

Dr. Woodard was married to Miss Lucille Chapline, a daughter of Judge J. M. Chapline, and they have one child, a daughter, who is named for her mother. Dr. and Mrs. Woodard belong to the Methodist Episcopal church and loyally assist in its work and contribute to its support. Fraternally Dr. Woodard is connected with the Elks and with the Masons.

GEORGE APPLEBY.

George Appleby, successfully and extensively engaged in fruit raising and in the conduct of a canning factory at Fayetteville, was born June 28, 1869, on a farm three miles north of the city in which he now resides, his parents being John T. and Almira (Stanfield) Appleby. The mother was born in the same house in which occurred the birth of her son George, while John T. Appleby was a native of Tennessee. His father was Hezekiah Appleby, who arrived in Washington county, Arkansas, in 1829, and here devoted his attention to farming and stock raising. He was a slave owner and during the Civil war went to Texas, his death occurring in that state. His wife, learning that her husband was ill, made the trip to Texas on horseback through the mountains, reaching him before he died. The maternal grandfather of George Appleby was Alexander Stanfield, who was born in Tennessee and always followed the occupation of farming as a life work. He made his way to Washington county, Arkansas, in 1830, and thus he, too, became closely identified with the pioneer development of this section of the state.

John T. Appleby likewise followed farming as a life work and was a very successful man. He purchased a tract of land and greatly improved the property, converting it into one of the valuable farms of the district and living thereon to the time of his death. During the Civil war he was taken prisoner while at home and was sent to Springfield, Missouri. There he was paroled, but continued to remain in Springfield until after the cessation of hostilities. His political endorsement was at all times given to the democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. To him and his wife were born five children: Mrs. Annie Sterns, now living on a farm in Washington county, Arkansas; C. W., who is in business with his brother George in Fayetteville; Mrs. Ida Freyschlag, whose husband is a Presbyterian minister at Fayetteville; George of this review; and Mrs. Bertha Cunningham, who is living upon the old homestead farm.

George Appleby supplemented his early education, acquired in the country schools, by study in the University of Arkansas, which he attended for two years. In young manhood he went to Dakota, where he remained for three and a half years. He was employed in various ways during the three years and a half of his residence in the north, after which he returned to Arkansas and for two years was a student in the university at Fayetteville. He also attended a business college at Sedalia, Missouri, and then went upon his father's farm, at which time he began raising strawberries, planting about ten acres, which was then considered a very large patch of berries. In 1917 he and his brother purchased a fruit farm, which they began to develop and improve. In 1907 they established a canning factory, and although they met with financial reverses that year which caused them to give up everything but their canning factory, they have since won a very substantial measure of prosperity. They today own eleven hundred acres of valuable land in addition to the canning factory at Fayetteville, and still others at West Fork and at Hiwassee, Arkansas. They have one hundred and ninety acres in orchard and extensive patches of strawberries. All that Mr. Appleby has today he has made since 1912. His energy and enterprise have been dominant factors in the attainment of very gratifying success. He has followed the most modern and scientific methods in the care and development of his orchards and the production of small fruit, and in the management of the canning factories is systematic, thorough and progressive.

In 1896 Mr. Appleby was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle McCarty, who was born in Fayetteville and died in 1902. In 1906 Mr. Appleby wedded Mrs. Gertrude Taylor, a native of Washington county, Arkansas. They have become parents of five children: John T., who is now a high school pupil; and Mildred, Marion, Annis and Helen Virginia, all in school.

Mr. and Mrs. Appleby are members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Appleby belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. His political endorsement is given to the democratic party and he has figured very prominently in its local ranks. He served as county clerk from 1912 until 1916, was county judge for two years and in other positions of public honor and trust has proven himself thoroughly competent and faithful. Business, however, has claimed the major part of his time and attention, and the fact that he has regarded obstacles and difficulties in his path as an impetus for renewed effort on his part has brought him eventually to the goal of prosperity, where he is now found.

JOHN R. LINDER.

John R. Linder, attorney at law of Beebe, has spent his life in Arkansas, his birth having occurred in White county, January 6, 1870, his parents being Jefferson P. and Lucy J. (Shelton) Linder. The family has long been represented on American soil. The paternal grandfather, Abraham Linder, was a native of the Spartanburg district of South Carolina and was a well educated man, who devoted his life to teaching in his native state for a number of years and then made an overland trip with ox team and wagon to Arkansas, crossing the rivers on ferries. This was in 1858 and after reaching this state he continued in the teaching profession, being connected largely with private schools. He married a Miss Templeman, a native of South Carolina, who died about the year 1864, while his death occurred in 1874, when he was seventy years of age.

Their son, Jefferson P. Linder, came with his parents to what was then Conway county, Arkansas, in 1858. He was there married to Miss Lucy J. Shelton, who was born in Shelby county, Tennessee, and who went from Memphis to Des Arc, making the boat trip in order to visit her sister, but owing to hostilities between the north and the south she could not return. She became acquainted with Jefferson P. Linder and they were married in what is now Faulkner county. Subsequently they removed to White county, where Mr. Linder purchased wooded land, which he cleared and developed, carrying on general farming and stock raising. During the last ten years of his life he also preached to a considerable extent throughout the community, he and his wife being members of the Missionary Baptist church. His political endorsement was given to the democratic party. He died July 27, 1903, at the age of sixty-four years, while his wife departed this life August 11, 1910, at the age of sixty-three years. They had a family of twelve children, five of whom are living: Laura, the wife of S. M. Trotter, a farmer of Lamar, Arkansas; John R.; Charles, who is farming in White county; Oscar B., a barber of California; and Albert, also farming in White county. Those who have departed this life are: Thomas J., who died in Monroe county, Arkansas, in 1889, at the age of twenty-one years; Maggie, who was the wife of J. W. Acree and died in 1919, at the age of forty-seven; two who died in infancy; Myrtle and Belmer, who died at the age of two years; and Berley, who died when sixteen years of age.

John R. Linder is indebted to the public school system of White county, Arkansas, for the educational opportunities which he enjoyed. He remained at home until he had attained his majority and began reading law at the age of eighteen years. He entered upon practice in the justice court and in 1901 and was admitted to practice in the district and circuit courts. He opened his law office in Beebe, where he has continued in the general practice of law and has been connected with much important litigation. He is also numbered among the lawmakers of the state, having served in the general assembly in 1905, through election on the democratic ticket. He gave thoughtful and earnest consideration to the vital questions which came up for settlement and at all times he has been actuated by devotion to the general good in his attitude toward all public questions.

Mr. Linder was married to Miss Mattie E. Hill, a native of White county, Arkansas, and they have become parents of nine children, six of whom are living: Harvey, now residing in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he is engaged in vocational training, is a veteran of the World war. He enlisted in St. Louis in the regular army in 1917, was at Jefferson Barracks and later was sent to Boston, Massachusetts, where he was in training. He then went overseas and was connected with the Medical Corps in France for six months. After his return home he again went to France, where he married a French girl; Pearl, the second of the family, is the wife of W. E. Davis, a farmer of Beebe, Arkansas; Bernard, who is a bookkeeper with the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company of Little Rock, married Marie Westbrook, a native of Arkansas; Robert is following the profession of nursing at Little Rock; Earnie and Mabel are at home. Ruth and Thomas died at the age of two months and three years, respectively, while one child died in infancy. The religious faith of the family is that of the Baptist church and Mr. Linder is serving as clerk. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. The greater part of his time and attention is given to his profession and he has made steady progress in a calling where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit and ability. He is a close student of the principles of law and is seldom, if ever, at fault in the application of these principles to the point in litigation.

JOHN HARDEMAN CORDELL.

John Hardeman Cordell, who built up an extensive business as a contractor in railroad ties, continuing in this line of activity to the time of his death, belonged to one of the old and well known pioneer families of the state closely associated with the development and progress of Arkansas from an early day. John H. Cordell was born in Jefferson City, Missouri, July 19, 1843, a son of Richard and Leona (Hardeman) Cordell. His ancestors were members of an old and influential family of Virginia. The first of the name in this country was John Cordell, who emigrated to the new world from England at an early period in the colonization of Virginia. Later he served through the Revolutionary war as chaplain with the rank of captain. The direct line of descent comes down from Captain John Cordell through George Edward, Presley and Richard to John Hardeman Cordell. The grandfather, Presley Cordell, came west with his family in an early day, settling in St. Louis, where both he and his wife died during the cholera epidemic of 1849. Two of his sons, Richard and Enos, went to Jefferson City, Missouri, where they became established in merchandising and won prominence in business circles there.

John Hardeman Cordell, reared under the parental roof, turned his attention to the banking business by establishing a private banking institution in Marshall, Missouri, this becoming the first bank of Saline county. Mr. Cordell conducted the business successfully until 1893, when he became involved in the widespread financial panic that swept over the country in that year. He then went to St. Louis and for some time was employed by the Bagnell Timber Company, large contractors in railroad ties. During his association with that firm he made various trips throughout the southwestern country as an inspector of railroad ties. Subsequently he established himself in the tie business, getting his contracts through the Bagnell Company, and thus he operated throughout the southern states. In 1906 he established his family in El Dorado, where they have since lived. As a tie contractor Mr. Cordell manifested splendid executive ability and, administrative direction and built up a wonderful organization. When ties were needed for some railroad in a great hurry he had delivered as high as seven hundred thousand in three months' time, due to the splendid organization which he developed, whereby man-power and commodities could be requisitioned at a moment's notice to meet any emergency. Mr. Cordell continued an active factor in the business to the time of his death, which occurred at Stafford Springs, Mississippi, where he had gone for the benefit of his health. His life's labors were ended on the 12th of January, 1909, when he was sixty-six years of age.

It was on the 29th of April, 1868, that Mr. Cordell was united in marriage to Miss Alice Ann Montague, a native of Demopolis, Alabama, the town which was founded by the French refugees during the administration of Thomas Jefferson. Mr. and Mrs. Cordell became the parents of nine children, all of whom are living: Robert Vaughan Montague, who is a broker of El Dorado; Leona H., who is employed in the public library at St. Louis; Emily, the wife of Dr. H. D. McCallie, a Presbyterian missionary at Mokpo, Chosen, Japan; Alice, who is a twin sister of Emily and for twenty years has been engaged in educational work, spending eight years as a teacher in the schools of Kansas City, Missouri; Annie, at home; Fannie, the wife of J. L. Lee of El Dorado; Catherine S., the wife of C. F. Hurd, city editor of the Post-Dispatch at St. Louis; St. George T., who is general manager of the national agency for the Burroughs Adding Machine Company at Nashville, Tennessee; and John H., living on the Forest Home plantation near Bosco, Louisiana. The mother and three of the daughters, Emily, Alice and Fannie, are all members of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The family has long occupied a prominent social position and the name of Cordell is closely associated with the history of the state. John H. Cordell was recognized as one of the representative business men in the south, forceful and resourceful, a man to whom difficulties and obstacles seemed to serve as an impetus for renewed effort on his part. As the years passed he steadily worked his way upward and became a dominant figure in connection with the tie contracting business in this section of the country.

WILLIAM HENRY ELLIS.

William Henry Ellis, a pharmacist of Hot Springs, who is proprietor of the National Park Pharmacy and of the Ellis drug store, was born in Clinton, Alabama, on the 6th of April, 1876, his parents being Dr. Robert A. and Jennie (Calhoun) Ellis, the former a native of Fairfield, Alabama, while the latter was born in Newman, Georgia. The father was graduated from the Tulane Medical College of New Orleans with the class of 1870 and was in active and successful practice for forty-two years. He first opened an office in Fairfield, Alabama, and in 1880 removed to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, where he continued in practice for nine years, coming to Hot Springs in 1889. He was recognized as one of the leading medical practitioners of this city for twenty-three years, or to the time of his death, which occurred in 1912.

William Henry Ellis was educated in the public schools of Tuscaloosa and of Hot Springs and was graduated from a high school of the latter city as a member of the class of 1894. Soon afterward he made his initial step in the business world by accepting a position in the drug store of Sorrells & Carr, while subsequently he worked for J. W. Angle in the drug business, continuing in that connection until 1905, when he resigned his position to engage in business for himself. He established a drug store on Ouachita avenue, on the present site of the Moore drug store, and three years later removed to his present place of business at No. 233 Valley street. On the 4th of May, 1913, he purchased the Majestic drug store, located in the Majestic Hotel building, and removed the stock to 242 and 244 Central avenue, changing the name to the National Park Pharmacy. This is by far the finest drug store of the city, a most progressive policy being maintained in its conduct. It is beautifully appointed, tastefully arranged and measures up to the highest standards of the trade in every particular.

On the 16th of January, 1898, Mr. Ellis was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Sutton, of Hot Springs, a daughter of Captain J. J. Sutton, who owned and operated the famous quarries of the Arkansas Oil Stone. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have become parents of three children, but only one is living, Marjorie Louise.

Fraternally Mr. Ellis is a Mason, having membership in Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M.; Hot Springs Chapter, No. 47, R. A. M.; Hot Springs Council, R. & S. M.; and Hot Springs Commandery, No. 5, K. T. He likewise belongs to Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, B. P. O. E. He has membership in the Lions Club and in the Business Men's League and he and his wife are consistent and active members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Mr. Ellis is serving as head usher in the church, as chairman of the district conference and member of the board of church stewards. During the years of the state fair, held at Hot Springs, he was a member of the board of directors of the fair association and has at all times been active and helpful in civic affairs, being a most public spirited citizen and one whose labors are of a practical nature, highly resultant. While he has won substantial success in business, he has never allowed his commercial interests to monopolize his time to the extent of excluding opportunity to aid in public affairs and his cooperation has been a helpful element in much that has had to do with the development and commercial progress of Hot Springs.

JUDGE CHARLES H. DAVIS.

Judge Charles H. Davis, judge of the county and probate courts of Garland county, was born in Hot Springs, December 11, 1875, and is a son of Henry C. and Mary E. (Goode) Davis, both of whom were natives of Georgia, where they were reared and married. They afterward removed to Camden, Arkansas, where they took up their abode in 1871 and a year later they became residents of Hot Springs. The father devoted his life to the profession of bookkeeper. Both he and his wife are deceased.

Judge Davis obtained his education largely in the public schools of Hot Springs, but also enjoyed the benefit of a year's instruction in Bethel College at Russellville, Kentucky, following which he returned to Hot Springs and became identified with newspaper interests. For fifteen years he was connected with the Sentinel Record, working in every department of the paper, and in November, 1908, he came into the courthouse as deputy county clerk, a position which he filled for four years. In 1912 he was elected county clerk and was chosen to that office for two terms without opposition. He afterward served for two terms, or four years, as county treasurer and in the fall of 1920 was elected judge of the county and probate courts, in which important capacity he is now serving. Over the record of his official career there falls no shadow of wrong nor suspicion of evil. He has always been loyal to the trust reposed in him and the many times he has been reelected to office is unmistakable proof of his capability and fidelity in discharging the duties that have devolved upon him.

In December, 1908, Judge Davis was married to Miss May Peters of Hot Springs, Arkansas. He belongs to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, A. F. & A. M.; Hot Springs Chapter, No. 47, R. A. M.; Hot Springs Commandery, No. 5, K. T., of which he was eminent commander in the year 1920; and Sahara Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pine Bluff. He also has membership in Hot Springs Lodge, No. 380, B. P. O. E., of which he is past exalted ruler and he belongs to the Business Men's League, of which he is serving as a member of the board of governors. His interest in community affairs is manifest in many tangible ways. He seeks ever the welfare and good of the city in which he makes his home and is truly a public-spirited citizen.

LEONIDAS H. MCGILL.

Leonidas H. McGill, a leading representative of the Benton county bar, has followed his profession continuously in Bentonville since 1887 and is now associated in practice with his son, J. T. McGill, under the firm style of McGill & McGill, the list of their clients being an extensive one. He comes of English and French Huguenot ancestry, early representatives of the family settling in Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee. He was born in Kentucky, February 22, 1854, and passed a portion of his childhood in Tennessee, leaving that state in the fall of 1861 and going to Titus county, Texas, whence he removed to Gilmer, in Upshur county, that state, where he attended a private high school conducted by Morgan H. Looney, this institution ranking with the best in Texas. In March, 1873, he left the Lone Star state and came to Arkansas, completing his high school course at Bentonville under the same teacher. In 1874 and 1875 he engaged in educational work, acting as assistant to his brother, John T. McGill, who was then a high school teacher, but for the past forty years has been a member of the faculty of Vanderbilt University and is a man of high intellectual attainments.

In 1875 Leonidas H. McGill became a law student in the office of Judge S. N.

Elliott of Bentonville, with whom he continued until 1876, and in October of that year he was admitted to practice here. He formed a partnership with Judge E. S. McDaniel, with whom he was associated until May, 1880, when he removed to Ozark, Arkansas, and was in the law office of Judge W. W. Mansfield until January, 1881. He then went to Morrillton, Arkansas, where he became a partner of Colonel E. B. Henry, a relationship that was continued until January, 1883, when Mr. McGill returned to Bentonville, continuing to follow his profession here until October of that year, when he became private secretary to Governor James H. Berry. He filled that position until July, 1884, when he again took up his residence in Bentonville. While at Little Rock he attended law lectures delivered by some of the leading attorneys of the city, including U. M. Rose, Judge Henry C. Caldwell, John M. Moore, W. G. Whipple and Judge Joseph W. Martin, pursuing a night course. In October, 1885, Mr. McGill removed to Clarksville, Arkansas, where he formed a partnership with the late A. S. McKennon, and was thus associated until July, 1887, when he returned to Bentonville and has since resided here. He again became a partner of Judge E. S. McDaniel, with whom he remained until the elevation of the latter to the bench of the circuit court in 1894, and four years later, or in 1898, he associated himself with F. G. Lindsay, a relationship that was maintained until the 1st of April, 1917, when Mr. Lindsay went to Little Rock as attorney for the insurance department of the state. Mr. McGill then formed a partnership with his eldest son, J. T. McGill, and their interests are conducted under the firm style of McGill & McGill. The father was admitted to practice before the supreme court of Arkansas in 1882 and in the United States supreme court in April, 1909. His knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence is comprehensive and exact and the zeal with which he prepares his cases, the careful regard evinced for the interests of his clients, combined with his assiduous and unrelaxing attention to all the details of his cases, have brought him a large business and made him very successful in his conduct.

At Bentonville, Arkansas, on the 26th of December, 1881, Mr. McGill was united in marriage to Miss Mit Peel, a daughter of Colonel S. W. Peel, a well known resident of this place, and they have become the parents of ten children, six sons and four daughters, all of whom are living, with the exception of a daughter, who met an accidental death when but ten years of age. The sons are: J. T. and L. H., Jr., both of whom are married; Charles B.; Samuel P.; William A.; and James Berry. The daughters are: Elizabeth, who married S. C. Bohart; Catherine, the wife of Bennett Dickson; and Mary. Mr. McGill and his wife are domestic in their tastes, finding their greatest happiness in the midst of their family, and Mrs. McGill has never exercised her right of franchise, feeling that her housewifely duties require her undivided attention. Mr. McGill is a member of the State and American Bar Associations and he is a democrat in his political views, interested in the welfare and success of the party, and he was a member of the constitutional convention of 1917-18. Early recognizing the fact that industry and perseverance must constitute an important element in the attainment of success, along those lines he has labored for advancement, and wisely and conscientiously utilizing the talents with which nature has endowed him, he has won a prominent position at the Benton county bar, his upright policy gaining for him the confidence and respect of his colleagues and associates.

CHARLES ASTYNAX OVERSTREET.

Charles Astynax Overstreet, president of the Third District State Agricultural School, is one of the representative citizens of Magnolia. He was born in DeKalb, Mississippi, on the 27th of July, 1891, a son of James A. and Winnifred Penelope Overstreet, both residing at that place. The father is a native of Mississippi and has been engaged in agricultural pursuits there for many years. He is now living retired, however, at the age of sixty-seven years. In 1878 was celebrated the marriage of James A. Overstreet to Miss Winnifred Penelope Hull, the ceremony being performed at De Kalb, and to their union ten children were born, six boys and four girls, Charles A., whose name initiates this review, being the eighth in order of birth. All of the children are living with the exception of one daughter. Mrs. James A. Overstreet was born in DeKalb sixty-eight years ago.

In the acquirement of an education Charles A. Overstreet attended the rural schools near DeKalb and later became a student at the Mississippi Agricultural College, Starkville, from which institution he was graduated in 1913, with the degree of B. S. He then taught agriculture in the Tangipahoa Parish Agricultural School at Chesbrough, Louisiana, until December, 1915, when he came to Columbia county, this state, as county agricultural agent. In that capacity he gave demonstrations and advice concerning agricultural problems and achieved substantial success. He resigned that position, however, on the 11th of July, 1921, at that time being elected president of the Third District Agricultural School, in which connection he is now active. This school has the important mission of teaching the problems of agriculture to the growing generations and is located at Magnolia because here it is more central and more accessible to the children of neighboring farmers. Since its inception in 1910 the school has grown rapidly and is now one of the most popular institutions of its kind in the state. Mr. Overstreet is well fitted for the duties that devolve upon him as chief executive of the institution.

On the 16th of June, 1915, occurred the marriage of Mr. Overstreet to Miss Nina Maude Kemp, a native of Pochatoula, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Kemp, well known citizens of that place. Both Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and they are generous contributors to its support. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Columbia Lodge, No. 82, A. F. & A. M., which he has served as worshipful master; and to Magnolia Chapter, No. 112, Royal Arch Masons. He has likewise served as high priest and is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the World war Mr. Overstreet gave generously of his time and money in the promotion of the government's interests and he made many speeches in behalf of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives, etc.

BERNIE BABCOCK.

The name of Bernie Babcock is written high on the list of American authors and her fame has reached far beyond the confines of the American continent. She was christened Julia Burnelle Smade and is a daughter of H. N. and Charlotte (Burnelle) Smade. "The ancestral line is traced back to an early date in the settlement of Canada and she is descended from English and French Huguenot stock. She was educated in the public schools of Russellville, Arkansas, and in the Little Rock University and her literary talent first found expression in a poem which was written when she was but six years of age. When a little maiden of but twelve summers she wrote a drama, but owing to the religious scruples of her parents, this was destroyed. Her first work that gained publicity was an essay called "Marketable Brains," which was published in the Arkansas Gazette, and about the same time she contributed poems to the Saturday Bee and the Democrat. She also became one of the leading contributors to the Woman's Chronicle.

In 1886 Julia Burnelle Smade put aside her pen to take up the role of wife, becoming the bride of William Franklin Babcock, a son of Colonel E. F. Babcock, a veteran of the Civil war, who located in Arkansas and was one of a group of men who were responsible for bringing the superiority of Arkansas fruit to the notice of the world. Prominent as a pomologist, Colonel Babcock, in association with Professor Thomas and Jay Gould, placed the Arkansas apple in competition with the apples of other sections, and they were rewarded by winning for the state first prizes at exhibits in New York and elsewhere, gaining recognition on the famous Arkansas Blacks and other fruit in New Orleans, California and other sections, gaining first prizes wherever their fruit was exhibited.

William Franklin Babcock was educated in the public schools of Little Rock and, being of an independent turn of mind, started to work as a bridge tender when comparatively young, continuing his education at night. He afterward entered the employ of an express company and rose from a humble position through successive promotions until he became one of the prominent officials, thus serving to the time of his death in 1897.

An early marriage and the arrival of five interesting little children interfered naturally with the literary activities of the gifted mother to some extent, yet she never allowed her household duties to shut out all literary activity, for at night after the little ones were put to bed she would be found at her writing desk. In 1900 she published The Daughter of a Patriot, a prohibition story which sold as a serial and later was published in book form, the issue being one hundred thousand copies. Other works which she produced in 1901 and 1902 were Justice to the Woman, published by A. C. McClurg & Company of Chicago, and An Uncrowned Queen, published by Revell & Company of New York and London. This was the popular life of Frances E. Willard. In 1903 The Civilized Gotham and Paul were published and in 1906 Mrs. Babcock founded a high-class quarterly called the Arkansas Sketch Book, which she continued to publish until 1910. Pictures and Poems of Arkansas, was issued in 1908, while Santa Claus, the Stork and the Widow and The Man Who Lied On Arkansas were published in 1909 and 1910. The year 1911 witnessed the production of The Giant Killer and The Devil and Tom Walker and the sale of the latter reached one hundred thousand copies. During 1912 she published a series of leaflets on socialistic subjects. Mammy, A Drama of the Old South, was published by Neale & Company of New York, and Yesterday and Today in Arkansas was published in 1917. In 1919 Mrs. Babcock published a work that has so added to her reputation as an authoress as to place her in the front rank of American writers. This was The Soul of Ann Rutledge, for in addition to being a mother, editor and author, this gifted woman found time to study the life of Abraham Lincoln. In her researches she found that while many writers mentioned Lincoln's friendship and love for Ann Rutledge, none lay particular stress upon this great passion which so influenced the life of our immortal statesman. Tarbell, Nicolay, Hay and Rankin were carefully studied and finally Mrs. Babcock found a copy of Herndon's suppressed lecture on Lincoln's love affair, early days in New Salem and the poem Immortality. The result of all this research and labor was the production of the book entitled The Soul of Ann Rutledge, which tells in a sympathetic and appealing way Lincoln's early romance, which was cut short by the death of the young woman whom he so ardently loved and whose influence was felt throughout his life. In 1921 Mrs. Babcock published The Coming of the King, a Biblical romance in which the human side of the Christ is treated. One of the local papers, commenting on the work, said: "The chorus of praise and approval rings loud and is a fine sign of the broadening vision and interest in Biblical matters written for twentieth century understanding and a love for the human Christ whose overshadowing personality marks the romance. As echoes of comment and opinion the following quotations are interesting: 'The Bookseller, Newsdealer and Stationer,' New York, closes a review by saying, 'With the triumph of the resurrection the narrative closes, the latter marked by exceptional power and pathos, making the whole a profoundly human and vivid picture of the greatest of all dramas.' 'Mrs. Babcock writes,' says the Philadelphia Public Ledger, 'with fine literary distinction. Those who admire Ben-Hur will find this an absorbing book and one of better literary quality.' Of religious opinion there is much. William I. Clarke, editor of the New Era Magazine, official organ of the Presbyterian church, in his excellent review of 'that notable new book, The Coming of the King,' says: 'General Lew Wallace set the high-water mark for this class of literature with his Ben-Hur, a tale of the Christ. Many will judge that Mrs. Babcock in The Coming of the King has produced a work worthy to stand beside Ben-Hur because of its bigness and breadth, and beside Henry Van Dyke's The Other Wise Man because of its idyllic beauty and spiritual imaginativeness.' Referring to the chapter, Orange Blossoms, this writer says it is 'as audacious as it is artistic.' He does not approve the love scene, but says 'in the main the book is lofty in purpose and its general effect on the reader is exaltation. The spirit of the narrative borders on sublimity. Love and brotherhood are its message and mankind is led away from human things toward divinity. From clergymen all over the country come words of commendation. In many places, leading ministers are recommending the book for close reading both on account of the humanity of Christ, as intensely set forth, and the historical value of the work. Even the labor papers are giving it editorial mention as a story of the Great Radical who first among the world's religious teachers took the part of the under-dog. A current issue of 'Organized Labor,' a leading radical publication on the Pacific coast—the seat of Tom Mooney's radicalism, prints a full page, double column editorial on the book with lengthy quotations from the chapter in which the walking delegate of those times addressed a group of working-class Galileans. The point emphasized by the labor paper is that 'They who lift the sword shall perish by the sword,' and the very good editorial winds up by saying of the age-long conflict between capital and labor, 'The solution lies in finding a common ground, recognizing a common interest in the well-being of all humanity.' A critic in Los Angeles said of the book, 'It is the greatest literary production of this generation.' If it shall succeed in making an appeal to both the religious and the laboring classes it will be at least something out of the ordinary."

Mrs. Babcock has provided for her children through her literary labor, carefully rearing and educating them according to the high standards and ideals which such a mother would have. Her children are: Mary Lucille, now the wife of Dr. Samuel G. Boyce; Charlotte Burnelle, the wife of Judge W. W. Shepard; Frances Mildred, the wife of John E. Thornberg, Jr.; William Franklin, who served in the World war as a member of the Nineteenth Aero Squadron; and MacArthur, who was also a volunteer in the war but whose service was cut short by the armistice.

Mrs. Babcock has not neglected her social duties in her devotion to her literary work. She is a member of the Psychical Research Society of London, the Authors League of America, the Drama League, the Authors and Composers of Arkansas, and is state representative for Arkansas to the League of American Pen Women. She is also the president of the Friends Memorial for Psychical Research and is identified with many other organizations. She stands today prominent among those who have contributed to the literary fame and achievement of the fair state which she so deeply loves, and while her writings in considerable measure have had to do with Arkansas and its people, there is in everything that she writes the human touch which makes her productions of greatest interest to the reading public. On more than one occasion her readers have felt that she reached the apex of her career, but passing years seem to indicate a still greater development and broader vision.

OSCAR A. FENTRESS.

Oscar A. Fentress, a funeral director and embalmer, who is conducting business at Fort Smith, came to this state from Oklahoma, where his birth occurred in 1880, his parents being George and Susan (Speer) Fentress. The father was a Confederate soldier during the Civil war and removed to Oklahoma from Middle Tennessee, while his wife was a native of Alabama.

Oscar A. Fentress was largely reared in Fort Smith, where he attended the public schools, being but three years of age when his parents removed from Oklahoma to this city. He started out in the business world as an employe in a grocery house and thus received his initial commercial training. He afterward became associated with a wholesale grocery establishment of Fort Smith and eventually occupied a position in the freight office of the Fort Smith & Western road. It was in 1912 that he entered the employ of a local undertaker, thus gaining practical knowledge of the business, when in 1913 he formed a partnership with R. T. Hunt and opened an undertaking establishment, which they conducted together until 1917, when Mr. Fentress purchased his partner's interest and assumed entire control of the business. He has been located at his present quarters since July, 1913, and has a splendidly appointed establishment. His outfit includes two splendid ambulances complete in every detail and he employs the most scientific methods in the care of the dead. His patronage by reason of the capability, tact and kindness which he displays has become very extensive. He is further identified with business interests of Fort Smith as the president of the Maple Leaf Building & Loan Association.

In 1908 Mr. Fentress was united in marriage to Miss Mae Yadon. He belongs to the Rotary Club, that progressive organization which is constantly seeking the up-building of every community, the extension of its trade relations and the maintenance of its civic standards. He is likewise the president of the Ad Club and in all that he undertakes, whether for the improvement of his own interests or for the upbuilding of the city, he manifests a most progressive spirit.

J. L. RAGSDALE.

J. L. Ragsdale, the efficient postmaster at Russellville, was born in Atkins, Arkansas, in 1878, and is a son of L. T. and Isabelle (Boggess) Ragsdale. The grandfather in the paternal line was Thomas Ragsdale, a native of Tennessee, who came to Arkansas in the '20s, casting in his lot among the pioneer settlers of the state. He built the first mill in Conway county and also had the first cotton gin there and in many other ways was closely associated with the early development of that district, whereby was laid the foundation upon which has been built the later prosperity and progress of that section. He died at his home at the old mill many years ago. The maternal grandfather of J. L. Ragsdale was W. C. Boggess, a native of Kentucky, who arrived in Arkansas in 1845, settling in Jackson county. He followed mercantile pursuits, conducting a store at Pottsville, Arkansas, for about a half century.

It was in Conway, Arkansas, that L. T. Ragsdale and Isabelle Boggess were united in marriage, the former a native of that county, while the latter was born in Kentucky. Their wedding was celebrated at the historic old Ragsdale mill and L. T. Ragsdale devoted a number of years to the milling business. He was later educated in the University of Arkansas and obtained a medical degree, after which he devoted his attention to the practice of medicine at Atkins and at Pottsville, Arkansas. His last days were spent in Russellville, where he departed this life June 12, 1918. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and also to the Presbyterian church, while his political belief was that of the democratic party. He served throughout the Civil war with the Confederate army, rising to the rank of lieutenant. He went to the front with the first company from Morrilton, was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, while at Port Hudson he was captured and was being held as a prisoner of war at the time hostilities were brought to a close. He owned considerable farm property and was in very comfortable financial circumstances during the latter period of his life. To him and his wife were born nine children, of whom five are yet living: A. S., an oil man, who was formerly engaged in the practice of medicine at Pottsville for a number of years, but now lives in Russellville; J. L., of this review; Robert A., a well known attorney of Russellville; Allien, who lives with her mother; Wade, who conducts a garage in Russellville; and E. H., a farmer, who died October 16, 1921.

Supplementing his early education by study in Ouachita College, J. L. Ragsdale completed his course there and afterward removed to Pottsville, where he engaged in mercantile pursuits in connection with his father. Subsequently he removed to Texas, in which state he remained for a year, and upon his return located in Russellville, where he once more concentrated his efforts and attention upon mercantile interests, continuing in the business until 1910, when he was called to public office, being elected circuit clerk, which position he filled for four years. He was made postmaster in 1914 and is now serving for the second term in that position. He is very prompt, efficient and faithful in the distribution and care of the mails and in all of the duties connected with the office and is a popular official who well deserves to serve in this connection.

In 1904 Mr. Ragsdale was married to Miss Alma Strayhorn, who was born in Dardanelle, Arkansas, a daughter of Lute Strayhorn, one of the oldest of the pioneer settlers of Yell county, where he engaged in merchandising. Mr. and Mrs. Ragsdale have become parents of four children, Louise, Robert, Nina and Christina, all in school. The parents are members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Ragsdale belongs also to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in which he is serving as a trustee, and to the Modern Woodmen of America. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he has always been an active worker in its ranks. The greater part of his time and attention is devoted to his official duties, but he also holds an interest in the Ragsdale Auto Company of Russellville. He started out in the business world empty-handed and has been very successful in the conduct of his affairs, so that he is now reckoned with the men of affluence in his community.

L. WERT WISH.

L. Wert Wish, actively connected with the banking business at Cabot as cashier of the People's State Bank, which was organized in 1920, was born at Pleasant Plains, Independence county, Arkansas, in the year 1889, and is a son of John and Harriet (Wood) Wish. The father was born in Saxe-Weimar, Germany, and the mother's birth occurred in Lawrence county, Arkansas, her father being Josiah Wood, one of the pioneer settlers of this state. John Wish came to the United States in young manhood with his parents, the family home being established on a farm in the Little Red River valley. To John and Harriet (Wood) Wish there were born nine children, those still living being: L. Wert, of this review; Maggie, who is the wife of T. R. Rushing; J. M.; Mattie, the wife of R. E. Powell; and J. C., who is engaged in the wholesale grocery business in Cabot. C. L., Clementine, Joel and Ida Oretha are all deceased. The son, John Clarence Wish, now a wholesale grocer at Cabot, was born at Pleasant Plains, Arkansas, in 1885, was there educated and afterward entered the live stock business, while subsequently he engaged in merchandising at Judsonia, this state. In 1918 he came to Cabot and, joining his brother, established the wholesale grocery house of Wish Brothers. He married Loda Cecil.

L. Wert Wish pursued his education in Pleasant Plains Academy and throughout the greater part of his life has been identified with the banking business. He assisted in organizing the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Judsonia, Arkansas, in 1903, and became its cashier. He also was interested in formulating the mercantile firm of Powell & Wish and took active part in the conduct of the business. In 1918 he became associated with the old German National Bank of Little Rock as teller and after leaving the capital came to Cabot, where in 1920 he was one of the organizers of the People's State Bank. Its first officers were: J. L. Powell, president; Hugh D. Hart, vice president; L. M. Burge, vice president; and L. Wert Wish, cashier. These still continue in office and are active in the management of the bank, which is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and has a reserve of thirty thousand dollars. The business of the bank has steadily increased from the beginning, as a safe, conservative policy is followed that wins the confidence and support of the general public.

Mr. Wish was married in 1919 to Miss Rady Lillian Cecil, a daughter of H. C. and Alice Lelora (Bailey) Cecil. Her father was born in Polk county, Arkansas, while his wife is a native of Birmingham, Alabama. The grandparents in the paternal line settled in Polk county, Arkansas, in pioneer times and the Bailey family was also established there at an early day.

Mr. Wish is widely known in the business circles of Cabot, as is his brother with whom he is associated, and both are public-spirited and progressive citizens, alert to every duty and obligation as well as to every opportunity afforded them in the business world. The Wish Brothers have also succeeded in establishing a Co-Operative Association of Marketing at Cabot, which is attracting state-wide attention in that it embodies marketing all the farmer's products, and as a result Cabot has a large strawberry acreage, ships radishes, garden peas and string beans in car lots, established dairying, and built sweet potato curing plants, and as this is in its incipency Cabot bids fair to become noted for its marketing the above named products.

FLOYD WALKER.

Floyd, Walker, the present mayor of Hamburg and proprietor of the People's Hardware Company, was born here on the 10th of September, 1871. On the paternal side he is of Irish descent, members of the Walker family having come to America from Ireland at an early day, locating in Georgia. The maternal ancestors came from France and made their homes in the southern states. The father of Floyd Walker, William A., came from Alabama to this state on the 4th of March, 1859, and was one of the earliest settlers here. Locating south of Hamburg, he engaged in farming and became one of the representative agriculturists of the community. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war, Mr. Walker, together with nine brothers, enlisted in the cause of the Confederacy and participated in many of the important battles of that war. William A. Walker died in 1900, at the age of sixty-eight years. In Alabama in 1857, was celebrated the marriage of William A. Walker to Miss Josephine Thompson, who was born near Meridian, Mississippi, and whose four brothers also took up arms in defense of the Confederacy at the outbreak of the Civil war. Her demise occurred on the old farm near Hamburg, on the 14th of October, 1887. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Walker nine children were born, seven girls and two boys, six of whom are living. Floyd, whose name initiates this review, was the third in order of birth.

Floyd Walker received his education in the rural schools of Ashley county and after graduating from the Hamburg high school he enrolled in Beauvoir College at Wilmer. He secured part of his education by his own personal efforts. When twenty-one years of age he commenced teaching school in the rural districts of Ashley county and was active in that connection for ten years, or until 1904. In that year he became associated with W. F. McCombs as salesman and remained in the employ of that concern until 1908, when he was elected to the offices of sheriff and collector of Ashley county. The following four years were spent in carrying out the duties of those offices and in 1914 he became revenue inspector for the federal government. At the end of nine months he resigned that position and in 1915 started into the hardware business in Hamburg, in the conduct of which enterprise he has since been active. The business is known as the Peoples' Hardware Company and is one of the largest of its kind in the county. In 1920 Mr. Walker was again called to public office, being elected mayor of Hamburg, and he is giving to the city a prosperous and businesslike administration. In 1913 he was a member of the county school book commission, selecting school books for Ashley county, and for the past few years he has been a member of the state congressional committee, representing the tenth judicial district.

On the 2d of February, 1898, at Lacy, this state, occurred the marriage of Mr. Walker to Miss Ethel Haskew, a daughter of Charles Haskew, a prominent resident of that place. To their union two sons have been born: Vaughn, who is twenty-two years of age and is working in the hardware store with his father; and Eugene, nineteen years of age, a freshman in Vanderbilt University, where he is taking a general course. Mrs. Walker is prominent in the club and social circles of the town and is a member of the Eastern Star lodge. She is active along educational lines, also, and is connected with the School Improvement Association.

The religious faith of the family is that of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Walker has served as deacon for many years. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, holding membership in Prairie Lodge, No. 465, A. F. & A. M. and Olive Chapter, No. 12, Royal Arch Masons. He is also affiliated with Margaret Chapter, No. 151, local Order of the Eastern Star. During the World war Mr. Walker gave generously of his time and money in promotion of the government's interests and he made many speeches throughout the state in behalf of the food administration. He was chairman of many war drives and belonged to the Home Guard. In every relation of life Mr. Walker has won success and the confidence and faith of his fellowmen. He is an alert and enterprising citizen, ever having the interests of the community at heart, and Hamburg is proud to number him among her native sons.

EDWIN EASTMAN HOPSON.

Edwin Eastman Hopson, one of the prominent attorneys of Arkansas City and a representative member of the legal profession in the state, was born in Baxter county, near Mountain Home, on the 7th of April, 1881. He is of Welsh descent on both paternal and maternal sides, both families having come to America at the time of colonization, the Lowell family settling in North Carolina. The paternal grandfather served in the Civil war in the Confederate army and soon after the close of that conflict he removed to this state from Tennessee. The father, William J. Hopson, was a small boy at that time and has continued to reside in this state. In early life he took up farming, achieving substantial success in that connection, and is now living retired near Mountain Home, at the age of seventy-one years. In 1871, in Evening Shade, Arkansas, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hopson to Miss Elizabeth Lowell, who is now sixty-eight years of age. Her parents also came to this state after the Civil war. Her father and three of his brothers fought in the Confederate army during the Civil war, the three brothers being killed in active service. They were all privates. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hopson eight children were born: four boys and four girls, of whom two boys and three girls are living. Edwin Eastman, whose name initiates this review, was the third in order of birth.

In the acquirement of his early education Edwin Eastman Hopson attended the public schools of Mountain Home and after graduating from the high school there he enrolled in the University of Arkansas, at Fayetteville, from which institution he was graduated in 1907, with the B. A. degree. The following year the LL. B. degree was conferred upon him from that university. Mr. Hopson worked his way through college, doing various jobs in his spare time. In 1908 he started into the practice of his profession at Arkansas City and he has remained here, practicing under his own name. An analytical mind, studious habits and power of concentration have been instrumental factors in forwarding Mr. Hopson's professional attainments and in addition to his general private practice he is attorney for fifteen leading Arkansas and foreign corporations, among them being the Shane Lumber Company and the Desha Bank & Trust Company of this city; the McGehee Valley Bank at McGehee; the Arkansas Gravel Company of this community; the Grayling Lumber Company of Detroit, Michigan; the White Construction Company of Chicago, Illinois; and the Breen Manufacturing Company of Arkansas City.

At Memphis, Tennessee, on the 29th of November, 1910, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hopson to Miss Anna May Reitzammer of Arkansas City. To their union two children have been born: Edwin Eastman, Jr., six years of age; and Jean, aged nine. Both are students in the public schools of this city.

Mr. Hopson is one of the public-spirited citizens of Arkansas City and his aid may always be counted upon in the furtherance of any movement for the development and improvement of the general welfare. During the World war he was chairman of the legal advisory board for Desha county and gave generously of his time and money in behalf of the various drives. Mr. Hopson is in every sense of the word a self-made man and he has not only won an enviable place among the foremost lawyers in this part of the state, but has won the esteem of all his fellowmen.

WILLIAM B. PAPE.

One of the largest commercial enterprises of Fort Smith is the Pape Book Store, owned and conducted by William B. Pape. A spirit of enterprise and progressiveness has always actuated the proprietor in the management and conduct of the business and he has closely studied every problem relating to the trade and its improvement. His thoroughness and earnestness have ever been guided by sound judgment and he has never feared to venture where favoring opportunity has led the way. Fort Smith is proud to number him among her native sons, for his birth here occurred in 1860. His parents were Henry and Elizabeth Pape, the former coming to Fort Smith in 1854. Here he engaged in business as a contractor and builder and was prominently identified with the early development and improvement of the city.

William B. Pape acquired his primary education in the public schools of Fort Smith and in fact attended the first public school of the city. He afterward became a student in the University of Arkansas, in which he pursued his studies for three years from 1878 until 1881. In 1889 Mr. Pape was called to public office when he was made United States jailor at Fort Smith under President Benjamin Harrison, serving under the direct supervision of Colonel Jacob Yoes, who was then United States marshal. After retiring from that position Mr. Pape became assistant cashier of the Crawford County Bank at Van Buren and was thus identified with the financial interests of the county for a considerable period. In 1896 he was again called to public office when elected on the republican ticket to the office of sheriff of Crawford county. He served for one term in that position, discharging his duties fearlessly and faithfully, after which he came to Fort Smith and has since been identified with the commercial interests of the city. It was in 1899 that he turned his attention to the book and stationery business, in which he has since been engaged. The store was formerly owned by J. D. Van Winkle & Company and Mr. Pape acquired a half interest in the business, while in 1899 he purchased the remainder of the stock, becoming sole proprietor. He carries a large and most attractive line of goods. The reading public has little difficulty in finding what is wanted on his shelves and he also carries a large and well selected line of stationery, while the steady growth of his business is indicative of the reliability of his trade methods and the progressiveness which he manifests in the conduct of his store.

In 1916 Mr. Pape was united in marriage to Mrs. Nettie Tibbs and they have become the parents of a daughter, Lucy Louise. In politics Mr. Pape has always manifested the keenest interest as a supporter of the republican party and has served as a member of the state republican committee from Sebastian county. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, exemplifying in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft, and he is also a member of the Business Men's Club, displaying keen interest in the organized efforts of that society for the city's upbuilding and improvement. In whatever relation of life he is found—in the government service, in political circles, in business or in social relations—he is always the same honorable and honest gentleman whose worth well merits the high regard which is uniformly extended him.

A. LAZARUS.

A. Lazarus, who has accomplished results that entitle him to classification with the foremost business men of Arkansas, is the secretary, treasurer and one of the principal stockholders of the Ritchie Grocery Company, conducting a wholesale grocery establishment with the parent house in Camden and branch houses at El Dorado, Prescott, Hope and Waldo, Arkansas, and at Ruston and Alexandria, Louisiana. A business of most extensive proportions has been developed, its ramifying trade connections reaching out into various sections of the country. Every successful, legitimate business enterprise is a contributing factor to the growth and progress of the state, and the Ritchie Grocery Company in this connection ranks high.

Mr. Lazarus, who has been a contributing factor to the success of the institution, was born in Camden, July 7, 1863, and is a son of John Lazarus, who came to the United States as a youth of seventeen years. He landed in New York city, where he spent some time, but eventually made his way to New Orleans and after a period passed in the Crescent City went up the Mississippi river to St. Louis. He continued there for but a brief period and then came to Arkansas, arriving in Camden on the 14th of October, 1858. He was a young man without friends, but he possessed a substantial capital in his laudable ambition to win success, in his unflinching enterprise and his unflagging industry. He soon made friends and eventually established himself in the mercantile business, in which he continued for forty years, being prominently identified with the commercial interests of Camden. He reached the psalmist's allotted span of threescore years and ten, for he was born October 14, 1834, and died November 22, 1904. He was a life-long Mason, loyal to the teachings and high purposes of the craft, and was a man of prominence and influence in the section of the state in which he lived.

His son, A. Lazarus, was educated in the public schools of Camden and when a youth of fourteen he became a wage earner, securing a clerkship in one of the mercantile establishments of the city. For eight years he worked for others, gaining an intimate knowledge of business methods and commercial standards. In 1886, in company with J. C. Ritchie, he organized the wholesale grocery firm of Ritchie & Company, establishing a business that grew in importance with the passing years until today, after an existence of more than a third of a century, the company operates seven wholesale houses and controls one of the most important mercantile interests of the state. In 1903 the business was reorganized and incorporated, at which time Mr. Lazarus was made secretary and treasurer of the company, in which capacity he has continued. From the beginning he has been an important factor in the attainment of success. His plans have ever been carefully formulated and promptly executed and his energy and determination have enabled him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties in his path. Step by step he has advanced along the lines of legitimate trade, holding ever to high commercial standards and ethics and throughout the period no business man has enjoyed to a larger extent the confidence and high regard of contemporaries and colleagues.

Mr. Lazarus is a member of Camden Lodge, No. 1140, B. P. O. E., and also of the Woodmen of the World. While not affiliated with any church, he contributes to the support of Christianity without regard to denomination. He has always been active in support of educational and civic affairs and is a member of the Camden school board and of the Chamber of Commerce. Today there is not a man in social or business life in Camden who is held in higher esteem by reason of the many sterling traits of character which he has ever displayed. He is liberal in his charities and notwithstanding his successes has never lost the human touch. He never misses an opportunity to assist his fellowmen or to aid in promoting public progress, and Camden could indeed ill afford to lose Mr. Lazarus from the ranks of her citizens.

GORDON N. PEAY, JR.

Gordon N. Peay, Jr., one of the alert and enterprising young business men of Little Rock, conducting a bond brokerage business, was born in the capital city August 8, 1890, and is a representative of two of the best known pioneer families of the state. He is a great-grandson of Major Nicholas Peay, who became a resident of Arkansas in 1825, a grandson of Colonel Gordon N. Peay, who won distinction as a Confederate soldier and also as receiver of assets for the old Real Estate Bank of Little Rock. Both are mentioned at length on another page of this work in connection with the sketch of Gordon N. Peay, Sr., president of the W. B. Worthen Company Bank and the father of him whose name introduces this review.

Gordon N. Peay, Jr., obtained a public school education and afterward attended the Stone Preparatory School in the state of New York. Returning to Arkansas, he has since been identified with the bonds and stocks business and is rapidly gaining a good clientele in this connection. In May, 1917, however, he put aside all business and personal considerations and was engaged in military duty for his country until February, 1919, becoming major of the Seventy-third United States Infantry. He went first to the officers' training camp at Fort Logan H. Roots, in Pulaski county, and on the 15th of August, 1917, was commissioned a captain and assigned to Company F of the Three Hundred and Forty-sixth Infantry Regiment. In August, 1918, he was commissioned major at Camp Dix, New Jersey, near Trenton, and was assigned to the Seventy-third Infantry, commanding the Third Battalion. In October, 1918, he was sent by the war department to the field officers' school at Langres, France, to learn modern warfare, and there remained until the armistice was signed, spending two months in Langres.

On the 29th of August, 1918, Mr. Peay was united in marriage to Miss Rosalini Byrne, who was born in Maplewood, New Jersey, November 30, 1893, a daughter of Joseph and Victoria (Hobart) Byrne, the former a native of New York. They now reside at East Orange, New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Peay have become parents of a daughter, Victoria Hobart. In his political views Mr. Peay is a democrat, staunchly supporting the party, but never seeking office. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Country Club, and the nature of his interests and the rules which govern him in all relations of life are further indicated in his membership in Christ Episcopal church.

REV. HANSON A. STOWELL.

Rev. Hanson A. Stowell, rector of the Trinity Episcopal church of Pine Bluff, was born in Tubingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1871, his parents, Edward and Jennie (Cook) Stowell, being at that time temporary residents of Germany, although both were of American birth. In both the paternal and maternal lines Hanson A. Stowell is descended from old New England stock. His grandfather Stowell was a pioneer of Chicago and planned and constructed the Chicago harbor as it was at that time. Edward Stowell, father of Hanson A. Stowell of this review, was a distinguished linguist and possessed splendid literary attainments. He was graduated from the Phillips Exeter Academy and graduated later from the University of Tubinger. He also translated many German works into English.

The Rev. Hanson A. Stowell was educated in the University of Illinois and in a theological seminary at Chicago, that state, being graduated from the latter institution in 1898. Having thus qualified for the work of the ministry, his first pastorate was at Arcola, Illinois, while later he was called to the Episcopal church at Carlinville, Illinois. Subsequently the scene of his labors was transferred to Ironton, Missouri, and in 1908 he came to Arkansas, remaining in pastoral charge of the church at Batesville until 1913. In that year he accepted a call from the Trinity church at Pine Bluff and has here remained through the intervening period of nine years. Trinity church was founded in 1861 and the present house of worship was erected a decade later. The church now has a membership of three hundred and fifty and the work has been carefully organized in its various departments under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Stowell, who is an earnest, forceful and convincing speaker and a wise pastor, of broad sympathies and keen sagacity, so that he is able to give needed aid, counsel or encouragement to individual cases, as well as to instruct and admonish his people from the pulpit.

Rev. Hanson A. Stowell was united in marriage in 1902 to Miss Ethel Laycock, a daughter of Robert and Jennie (Bourne) Laycock. Mrs. Stowell has been of great assistance to her husband in his work and, like him, is very popular among his parishioners. During the World war Mr. Stowell served as chairman of the local Red Cross and he is now a director of the Associated Charities and also chaplain of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His interest reaches out to all those projects and activities which affect the welfare of his fellowmen and he is a close student of all those questions which are vital in connection with the uplift of the individual and the progress of the race.

F. WALTER CARRUTHERS, M. D.

Dr. F. Walter Carruthers, an eminent surgeon of Little Rock, is in charge of the department of bone and joint surgery of the St. Luke's Hospital, is also bone and joint surgeon of the Arkansas Children's Home, physician of the Arkansas Blind School and district consulting bone and joint surgeon for the Rock Island Railroad, the district covering Louisiana, Arkansas and east Oklahoma. He has not yet passed the thirtieth milestone on life's journey and yet has gained a prominence in his profession that many an older physician and surgeon might well envy. His thought and energy directed in the path of duty have brought him steadily to the front and his service has been of great benefit to his fellowmen.

Dr. Carruthers was born at Blooming Grove, Texas, in the fall of 1891, his parents being F. Walter and Viola (Davis) Carruthers. While his father was a merchant the male members of the family have for generations followed the medical profession. Early in the seventeenth century two brothers, John and James Carruthers, came to America, settling in Pennsylvania. Their children scattered through the south and many are to be found in the Carolinas, Florida and Texas, the doctor belonging to the Texas branch. His early education was obtained in the public and high schools of Corsicana, Texas, and his collegiate course was pursued in the Southwestern University, while his professional training was received in the medical department of the Baylor University of Texas. Following his graduation with the M. D. degree, he entered upon active practice in Hillsboro and was almost immediately elected county physician of Hill county, Texas. Having early determined to specialize he practiced in his home town and in Dallas for four years and then decided to move to a larger city, where he would have a wider field for his specialty but war intervened at this period. In 1916 he joined the army and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. In January, 1918, he was called to service and spent sixteen months in Pennsylvania hospitals and at the Reconstruction Hospital at Chicago, Illinois. This latter service gave him the opportunity of displaying his ability in the field of bone and joint surgery. He did splendid work there in rehabilitating the maimed and wounded veterans of the World war and was mustered out with the rank of captain in the summer of 1919.

Dr. Carruthers then came to Little Rock and became associated with the firm of Runyon, Kirby & Sheppard, with which he is still identified, this firm occupying a high place among the eminent physicians and surgeons of the state. Gradually Dr. Carruthers has developed and expanded his powers through experience, study and research and his skill and efficiency have brought him into prominent connections. St. Luke's has called him to take charge of its department of bone and joint surgery and he occupies a similar position in the Arkansas Children's Home. He has been made physician of the Arkansas Blind School and is district consulting bone and joint surgeon for the Rock Island Railroad in the territory that embraces Louisiana, Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma. He is likewise one of the directors of the Arkansas

DR. F. WALTER CARRUTHERS

Children's Home and in his practice is at all times actuated by a broad humanitarian spirit.

In 1918 Dr. Carruthers was united in marriage to Miss Kate Gibson of Texas, a daughter of the Rev. G. M. Gibson, D. D., the ranking pastor of the Methodist faith in Texas, having the distinction of serving seven years in one church, while his life work also covers other extended pastorates. Mrs. Carruthers was graduated from Central College in 1910 and from the Kidd Key Conservatory of the North Texas Female College in 1914. For the period of a year following her graduation she taught voice culture in the conservatory. As a soloist she has few superiors, possessing a beautifully trained voice that has been heard with much pleasure by her many friends. Dr. and Mrs. Carruthers have one child, Mary Catharine, an infant.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Carruthers are consistent and prominent members of the Methodist church, taking active part in the work of the Winfield Memorial church of Little Rock. He is also a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Mystic Shrine and is a deep thinker on all questions that effect the general interests of society and the welfare of the race. He is now chairman of the board of directors of the Civitan Club of Little Rock and is president of the Civitan Clubs of Arkansas. His interest centers in all those fields which have to do with public progress and civic advancement. Along the line of his profession he is connected with the Pulaski County, the Arkansas State and the Southern Medical Societies and also with the American Medical Association and the Association of American Railway Surgeons. He presented before the Southern Medical Society at its 1920 meeting an example of his handiwork in bone and joint surgery. The subject was a youth who, having been stricken with infantile paralysis when eleven years of age had previous to the doctor's operation been horribly misshapen and unable to move or turn. When he was a youth of sixteen Dr. Carruthers had so far corrected the shape of the boy that he has become no longer a care and promises to develop into a useful citizen. Dr. Carruthers is one of those who are proposing the building of a hospital for the Arkansas Children's Home. He is also one of the proponents of a children's clinic for Methodist churches of Little Rock. This is a need that for its support should require no urging from either the members of the Methodist faith or from those of other denominations. Dr. Carruthers' span of life thus far covers but thirty years and only ten years of this time have been devoted to his professional interests. What he has thus far accomplished leaves no doubt as to his future advancement and success, and his whole life work is a valuable contribution to the welfare of his race.

HON. GEORGE VAUGHAN.

Hon. George Vaughan, state senator of Arkansas from 1919 to 1921 and well known as a lawyer, as well as a lawmaker, practicing at the Little Rock bar as senior member of the firm of Vaughan & Rector, was born in Fayetteville, Washington county, Arkansas, May 20, 1873.
