ARKANSAS POST.

(Taken by Assault, January 11, 1863.)

By MRS. EVA F. BURT,* MT. GILEAD, OHIO.

Fort Hindman was a massive fort —
Three hundred feet in length.
Was built along the river side,
Excelled in power and strength.

With deep, wide ditch and parapets,
And shells and cannon ball,
And guns and powder magazines,
The Union cause must fall.

Our boys in blue espied this fort
And its destructive power;
Knew our own "Blue wing" had been robbed
By rebels behind this tower.

The transports, with their many brave,
Landed our tried and true.
The gun boats, on the river side,
Filed in with boys in blue.

They battered 'gainst its great, strong wall
From both sides of the fort,
While regiments of infantry
Fall in with dread report.

* Widow of Matthew H. Burt, Company E.

The 96th were in this fray,
And, sad it is to tell,
With all their glorious victory
Was many a sad farewell.

For many who hailed that Sabbath morn,
And welcomed its sweet light,
Were cold and still in death before
The shadows of the night.

A flag of truce was seen 'ere long;
Before the day was done
The first great battle, many fought,
Ended with victory won.

In fort, the mangled, torn and dead;
Outside, our heroes slain;
While over all this doom and strife
The stars and stripes remain.

Great was the spoil, and great the gain,
To Union cause that day;
While, carefully and tenderly,
They bear their dead away.

Demolished, then, these massive walls;
And prisoners, dressed in gray,
Laid down their arms, with down-cast eyes,
And silent moved away.

And gentle moonbeams' silver light,
With stars look pitying down,
Will never leave, quite lonely now,
These honored, little mounds.

While raindrops weep our tears of love,
Sweet birds sing our refrain,
Shall noble deeds of soldier boys
Forever more remain.

SOFTLY TREAD, THIS GROUND IS HOLY.

[Dedicated to Ohio's patriot dead. For Memorial Day.]

BY N. D. WATKINS, COMPANY A, 96TH O. V. I.

Once again a weeping nation
 Bends above her heroes graves,
While at half-mast see "old glory"
 As it slowly, sadly waves.
Bands are playing, sad sweet music—
 Anthems solemn, dirges low—
While around is heard the wailing
 Of bereaved ones in their woe.

Softly tread, this ground is holy,
 Hallowed by our patriot dead;
O'er these graves, so green and lowly,
 Nature's floral tributes spread.

Silent, now, is street and workshop;
 Silent, factory and mill;
All the busy marts of business
 Stand deserted, closed, and still.
Busy only, hands of children,
 Gathering blossoms of the May—
Binding into cross and garlands—
 Nature's off'rings, for this day.

[Softly tread, etc.]

See that little band of veterans —
War-worn remnants of that band —
Who, at once, at country's peril,
Sprang to save, at her command.
Feeble, though, have grown their footsteps,
Eyes all dim, and locks turned gray,
Yearly, fail they not to honor,
Fallen comrades, on this day.

[Softly tread, etc.]

Weary marches, nearly ended;
Soon they'll sleep beneath the clay;
Dust with dust of comrades blended
Dawns for them Memorial Day.
Eyes, now dim, again will brighten,
Weary feet renew their pace,
And above, in glad reunion,
They'll meet comrades face to face.

Softly tread, this ground is holy,
Hallowed by our patriot dead;
O'er these graves, so green and lowly,
Nature's choicest tributes spread.

THE BOYS WE LEFT BEHIND US.

By NATHANIEL D. WATKINS, Co. A, 96TH O. V. I.

Old comrades of the Ninety-sixth —
To all a hearty greeting;
With fervent grasp each hand we clasp
At this, our yearly meeting.
We'll fight our battles o'er again,
Though, sadly they'll remind us
Of many gallant, loyal men —
The boys we left behind us.

Scenes, long past, come flitting fast
O'er memory's magic mirror,
And, half-forgotten faces grow
Upon us, nearer, dearer.
We see, again, the weeping friends
As they, with tears, resigned us —
We see, again, those absent boys —
The boys we left behind us.

We hear old songs — they're ringing still
In memory, clear as ever —
That echoed backward from the hill
To our camp, beside the river.
Privations, we in common shared,
Still closer seems to bind us;
The dangers we, together, dared
With the boys we left behind us.

With joyous hearts we marched away —
From off the field of battle —
When war's fierce lightnings ceased to play,
And hushed was the musket's rattle.
Our homeward march, friends strewed with flowers ;
Bright laurel wreaths they twined us,
But still we sigh for those boys of ours —
The boys we left behind us.

Upon each year's Memorial Day
We'll meet where some lie sleeping;
Sweet flowers of May, on their graves we'll lay,
And leave them to God's keeping.
Sorrow alloys our social joys,
And rising tears will blind us
At thoughts of those poor absent boys —
The boys we left behind us.

COMRADES OF THE 96th OHIO.

In writing this sketch of my army life, I desire to say that I do so at the earnest request of our worthy secretary, Robert F. Bartlett, who has so kindly undertaken the task of making out a new Roster of the Regiment. I must of necessity be brief, so as not to encumber the Roster too much with that which will be of a personal character, consequently I will have to omit many incidents of my army life, both in the Mexican War and that of the Rebellion, to which I would be pleased to refer, if time and space would permit.

It may not be out of place for me to refer briefly to my parents and to my early life previous to my entering into the service of my country in time of war. I was born October 18, 1825, at Raymond, N. H. My father, John Brown, entered the volunteer service of the United States when but sixteen years of age, in the War of 1812, and was stationed at Portsmouth, N. H. My mother, Mary Wood, belonged to that large family of Woods that lived in and near the town of West Brookfield, Mass. The subject of this sketch while yet a child moved with his father's family to the vicinity of Gill, Mass., living there but a few years and then removing to Plunkett's cotton factory, near South Adams, Mass. It was in this factory that I received my first lesson as a factory employe in the capacity of "bobbin boy," when in the ninth year of my age. I afterwards was employed in Jenks' factory, in the village of South Adams, Mass., and also in the "boys" factory at Stratford, Mass.; also in the Tremont and Caledonia Works at Hoosick Falls, N. Y., and lastly in the Harmony Mills, at Cohoes, N. Y.

I came to Ohio in the spring of 1840, coming all the way from West Troy, N. Y., to Columbus, Ohio, by water, which consumed over six weeks of time and steady travel; on the New York and Erie Canal from Troy to Buffalo, thence by steamer to Cleveland, thence by the Ohio Canal to Columbus, Ohio, and settled in Worthington, ten miles from the city of Columbus, at that time, but now the village may be said to be a suburb of the Capital City.

Having inherited a spirit of patriotism from my father, at the call of President Polk for volunteers for the Mexican War, I enlisted in the spring of 1846 for one year in Company C, 3d Regiment of Ohio foot volunteers, and served until the regiment was discharged in June, 1847. I was at that time a resident of Marion, Ohio.

My Captain was Thomas H. Ford, who was at one time Lieutenant Governor of Ohio, and during the late Rebellion was Colonel of the 32d Ohio Volunteers, and gained an unenviable reputation at the surrender of Harper's Ferry, on September 15, 1862. My Colonel was Samuel R. Curtis, who, during the late war, was a Major General of Volunteers, and figured largely in the state of Missouri.

When in 1846 my Regiment was on its way to Mexico, and encamped on the old battle ground below the city of New Orleans, I asked for and obtained permission from my officer to go to the city for the purpose of visiting the Slave Market, as conducted in that part of the South. The scenes witnessed there created in my mind a lasting hatred of human slavery. As I was standing there watching the sale of people nearly as white as myself, I made a solemn vow that if an opportunity was ever offered me to assist in wiping out that damnable institution, I was ever ready with my talents, time, means, and if need be, my life, so on the 17th day of April, 1861, in response to President Lincoln's call for troops, I offered my services to the Governor of Ohio, with a company of one hundred men, who were mustered into the three months service, and then re-enlisted for three years on the 6th day of June, 1861, and was known as Company K, 4th Regiment, Ohio Volunteers, I having been in the meantime commissioned as its Captain.

As soon as the regiment could be armed and equipped, it was sent into West Virginia as a part of the command of General McClellan in his Rich Mountain Campaign. At the capture of Romney, Va., by the troops under General Kelly, Company K had the honor of leading the charge, not only to the bridge but up through the city. The next morning I was ordered to report to General Kelly as Provost Marshal, and my Company as Provost Guard, and assigned to quarters in the city. On account of the suffering of General Kelly from his wounds which he received at the beginning of the war, he was relieved from his command of the troops at and near Romney, and General Lander was assigned to the command, which was afterwards known as Shields' Division.

At the time General Lander took command of the troops at Romney, it was known that there was being collected a large force of rebels at a bridge on the road leading from Romney to Winchester, and also a force up the Morefield Valley, with the intention of throwing a portion of the troops between Romney and the B. & O. R. R., with the expectation of capturing the troops that were stationed at Romney. The War Department at Washington was fully advised of the fact when General Lander was assigned to that part of the army.

The next morning after the General arrived I was summoned to headquarters, and in company with the balance of his staff officers, he laid before us, as far as it was prudent for him, his plan of evacuating Romney, and concentrating the entire command at some point on the B. & O. R. R. without uncovering that road to any great extent. It would be very imprudent for me in a sketch of this kind to occupy space sufficient to give a detailed account of that evacuation. Suffice it to say, that in the movement my Company was assigned to the rear of the column to cover the retreat — a post of honor under the circumstances.

It will be remembered that the troops moved out of Romney during the night, and my orders were to remain in the city until the telegraph operator had sent off all of his dispatches, and then remove the instrument and wire and try to reach the command by the time the rear of the column had crossed the iron bridge on the road leading to the mouth of Patterson's creek, at which point the troops would gather. I wish to note the fact that this march was a very difficult one to make, and execute strictly the orders of General Lander. The entire distance was made during a very severe rainstorm, and as the company reached the east end of the bridge referred to above, the rebel cavalry came in sight, but not until everything connected with the command had been safely landed on the east bank of the river and out of the enemy's reach.

Among my effects I find a commendatory order of General Lander for the able manner in which myself and company performed the difficult duties assigned us. It will be remembered that at the death of General Lander, General

James Shields was assigned to the command of that division, and while it occupied Winchester, Virginia, I was again detailed as Provost Marshal and ordered on duty in the city.

There are many incidents connected with my service as Provost Marshal of Winchester that would probably interest my army associates, but space is too limited to insert them in this article. During the time that I served on the staff of General Shields as Provost Marshal, the battle of Kernstown was fought between General Shields' division and the troops under the command of Stonewall Jackson, and victory won by the Union troops. I spent nearly the entire day (Sunday) on the field where that battle was fought, and was a close observer of the movements of the two armies, especially at the time when the engagement proper was in progress. Not having a command to claim my immediate attention, I believe I saw as much, if not more, of that engagement than many who have written at length concerning that battle. I remained on the field till the last charge was made and the last gun was fired, and then rode back to Winchester to make the necessary provision for the care and comfort of the wounded of both armies.

It is like reading fiction for me to read the official report of that engagement. Especially is it so in reference to the first report that bears the signature of General Shields, and not his supplemental report.

Early the next morning after the battle, and whilst seated at the table in my office making out the necessary details and reports, I was surprised to have come into my office a daughter of General Taylor, ex-President of the United States, and a commander whom I had served under during the Mexican War. My interview with Mrs. D. was not a very pleasant one, as she was not in a frame of mind to talk very pleasantly with a yankee officer who had served in the army under her father, and had come into the South to slaughter her people and friends. Her husband was an officer in one of the regiments engaged at Kernstown the day before this interview.

I have stated above that this interview was not a very pleasant affair, and yet, comparatively speaking, it was, when taken in connection with my interview a few days afterwards with the notorious Belle Boyd, when she applied to me for a pass to go outside of the Union lines.

The next day after the battle, I had the Provost Guard bring to my office every able bodied male citizen of Winchester, for the purpose of interring the rebel dead left on the field of battle. In two long trenches on the hill, between and overlooking Winchester and Kernstown, I caused to be buried eighty-four of the killed of Jackson's Army. This number corresponds exactly with the official report of General Jackson made to the rebel government at Richmond, Va., which I believe to be correct, although the number is much smaller than given by General Shields and his staff, excepting my report made the day after the burial.

The final sickness of my companion necessitated my presence at home, for a short time at least. Having forwarded a number of applications for leave of absence, and all being returned to me disapproved, I asked and obtained twenty-four hours' leave and went to Washington and tendered my resignation in person to the Adjutant General of the Army, and it was accepted, much to my relief and satisfaction.

Three days after the burial of my companion I was again in the service as Lieutenant Colonel 96th Ohio. My army life while a member of this regiment is about as familiar to those who belonged to the organization as to myself. Many of you at this time can remind me of incidents which I was associated with that had long since passed out of my recollection, consequently I shall write but little concerning my service as a member of the 96th Ohio.

It was not my fortune to be your commander when the regiment first took the field, and probably it was best that I was second in command. Be that as it may, it was so ordered by those high in authority.

What further space I shall consume in this article will be devoted, or nearly so, to the expedition which deprived us of our Colonel, J. W. Vance. I approach this subject with a great deal of reluctance, I assure you, for it is anything but a pleasant one to me when I think for a moment of the dreadful results of that campaign—an expedition that ought to have been victorious in every sense and yet resulted in an ignominious defeat; not from a want of bravery on the part of the rank and file of the army, but for the want of a proper leader, or I might say, commander.

The first question that presents itself in reference to that campaign is, what was the object of that terrible expedition? The declared object was the capture and occupancy of Shreveport, La., but the ostensible object was to release a large amount of cotton held up in that section of the confederacy. The whole movement indicated clearly that the commander and his immediate associates cared more for the cotton than they did for the lives of the men composing the command. Suppose we had captured Shreveport, what then? Does any person suppose that we could have held the place, or even held open our line of communication, with 80,000 armed rebels west of the Mississippi river and with a disloyal population and roving bands of guerrillas all over the country? Not much.

It is a matter of history and known to every reading man that General Grant was not in favor of this Red River expedition, and in his final instruction to General Banks he says, on March 31: "It is intended that your movements shall be co-operative with movements elsewhere, and you cannot start too soon. All I would now add is that you commence the concentration of your forces at once. Preserve a profound secrecy of what you intend doing and start at the earliest possible moment."

Now, it is known by everybody in any way connected with that expedition that there was scarcely a person in the city of New Orleans, or in any of the river towns but what knew of this movement, and it was in reality discussed nearly everywhere in that section of the country long before the army entered on its march for the Red River country.

Of course, that gave the Rebel officers ample time to concentrate a large army out of the 80,000 soldiers west of the Mississippi river. That expedition could in no way contribute to the suppression of the Rebellion. The Rebel army in the Trans-Mississippi Department were dormant; it made no move only to counteract one being made by the Union forces, except a few roving bands that sometimes fired on our transports as they passed up and down the rivers of that country. What did the burning of a few steamboats amount to in comparison with the great loss of life in that campaign? saying nothing about the loss of war material.

But how different the results in our next expedition — our movement on the city of Mobile, Alabama. The capture of that city and its strongholds hastened the downfall of the Confederacy, and this was accomplished with a very small loss of life.

A word in reference to our lamented Colonel, and I am through. It was known to the entire command that he was anxious for promotion. His great ambition was to wear the star of a Brigadier—a worthy ambition for any American citizen. In order to gain so glorious a result he lost his life at the post of honor in the performance of his duty by the bloody-stained hand of treason. (O, how I do hate that word and all that it implies.) It is for having thus died that he deserves and should hold a place in the memory of the survivors of the regiment of which he was so proud in being its commander. Peace to his ashes, and may the memory of him ever be bright.

Of myself, I will only say, that my association with the regiment was a very pleasant one, indeed, in comparison with other regimental commanders, made so by the gentlemanly treatment of the rank and file of that command. What little reputation I may have gained as a field officer I owe to the men of the 96th Ohio Regiment, for which I shall ever be grateful.
