A Crooked Trail

By LEWIS B. MILLER

A Thousand Mile Saddle Trip Up and Down the Texas Frontier

IN THIS story the author gives a true and unforgettable picture of the West, in which he puts a premium upon honesty, integrity and cleanliness of thought. It is a story of the right kind—sure to entertain and help make up better men and women.

Beginning with the actual running away from home of old Lep, a real steer, the story forever moving leads through semi-wilds and on days into the wilderness itself. In it we have the crackling of camp-fires, the raging of storms, the screaming of wild animals, the glare and smoke of prairie fires, the lowing and trampling of driven herds, the angry growling of mobs, and the thunder and clatter of the wild midnight ride. Settlers and ranchmen, outlaws and sheriffs, cowboys, soldiers, rangers and vigilants, march across the pages with lifelike distinctness. Starting with one bareheaded farm boy on foot, the pursuit of the runaway moves by pioneer cabins, through forests and mountain glens, by ranches and frontier forts, till it becomes a great marching cavalcade of cattle and horses and armed and mounted men. And with the pursuit moves a slight but very satisfactory romance. The book contains 413 pages.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

BOSTON GLOBE:—"A vivid, thrilling narrative. The story is intensely interesting."

CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR:—"No more thrilling escapes can be found in fiction than those graphically told in this work—the excitement beginning with the first chapter and holding the reader till the last."

ST. JOHN (NEW BRUNSWICK) GLOBE:—"A tale of delightful adventure—stirring, vigorous, romantic."

"A Crooked Trail" is illustrated—handsomely bound in beautiful colored cloth covers, and is printed from clear, readable type on good paper. It is highly commended by ministers, editors, college presidents, farmers, and by many of the ablest literary critics, both in this country and in the land beyond the sea. INTRODUCTION

THE FARMERS' REVIEW takes pleasure in presenting this directory of Cass, Mason, Menard and Sangamon Counties. We have labored diligently to make it accurate and complete in every respect.

A large force of men have been at work calling on the farmers, merchants and breeders of these counties, collecting the information which is now placed in your hands.

We wish at this time to express our sincere appreciation for the co-operation of farmers, merchants, breeders and the newspapers, without which the publication of such a directory as this would have been impossible.

The merchants, whose liberal advertising support has aided materially in bearing the expense of publishing this directory, are deserving of your patronage and we hope that you will so favor them whenever possible.

The directory has brought a considerable number of new readers into The Farmers' Review family and we shall do our very best as always to see that they are glad to be in.

Sincerely yours,

THE FARMERS' REVIEW

ILLINOIS STATE CAPITOL, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

ILLINOIS

WHEN you try to convey an idea of the size, or importance, or prosperity of a thing so vast as a state you usually find it necessary to drag in statistics. You rake up all the miles, and acres and bushels and tons you can lay your hands on, and stack them up, mentally, against the miles, and acres, and bushels and tons of other states. The result is known as Fascinating Facts, and it makes dry reading. If you like that sort of thing you'll find it at the bottom of each page of your loose-leaf desk calendar. There is a better way to make the outlander recognize the individuality of that state called Illinois. This is what we mean.

When you hear France mentioned your mind says—Paris! When one speaks of England your mental movie flashes—London! New York means New York City unless the word state is tacked after it. Those cities have actually handicapped their country or state, swamped their personality, as a famous and brilliant wife outshines her worthy but nondescript husband.

But when you think of Illinois, does your mind at once register Chicago? No, it doesn't! Illinois calls up a picture all its own. Illinois had fought for its place in the sun, and won it, when Chicago was a mixture of swamp and prairie. Illinois opens up a gracious, splendid mind-picture of rolling prairie and ample farms; of prosperous, middle-sized towns full of paved streets, and shady lawns, and comfortable two-story homes equipped with sleeping porches, and rose bushes, and swinging couches and two-toned rugs; towns that have the newest thing in waterworks and public libraries, and with an incredible number of automobiles—this year's model—skimming up and down Elm Street and out as far as the State Road and back. Why, the very waters of Illinois have personality! Leaving Lake Michigan and the Mississippi entirely out of it, who hasn't heard of Bubbly Creek? In Illinois you can't even keep an ordinary, meandering little river down. Just recently along came Edgar Lee Masters, waved a magic fountain pen, and behold!—humble Spoon River was immortalized.

If you have always associated Illinois in your mind with pigs, and iron and steel, and corn, we advise you to take a dip into the history of the state. There's color for you, and life, and romance, and adventure! You'd never believe that a staid, prosperous and respectable state like Illinois could have had such a roystering past. It reads like Gilbert Parker at his best. Like a splendid pageant they move through those pages, Jesuit priests, and French adventurers, coureurs de bois, stealthy Indians, dashing cavaliers.

If Illinois means to you something prosaic and bourgeois, just roll this on your tongue: Robert Cavalier, Sieur de La Salle. He didn't find Illinois prosaic and dry. Neither did his gallant friend, Henri de Tonty—Tonty of the iron hand and the ready sword; Tonty, soldier of fortune and brave gentleman, with the curling plume in his cap, and surely lace at his sleeve even when he was killing an Indian. The recent history of Illinois is full of Jonathans, and Cyruses, and Samuels and Alexanders, solid gentlemen with beards and watch chains and lay-down collars. And that is as it should be. But all the Bloomingtons and Edwardsvilles and Greenvilles only serve to make more charming the impress made by French, and Indian, and Jesuit. The Indian left his mark in such names as Kaskaskia, Cahokia, and Kankakee. The trail of the French is found in such names as Bellefontaine, Fort Crèveœur, Vincennes, Versailles; the black robe of the Jesuit in Joliet and Marquette.

What would they think—those immigrants who come to America with the belief that its streets are paved with gold—if they knew that Illinois is not paved with it, but built on a solid foundation of it? That doesn't mean mines of precious metal. That means forty solid feet of rich loam along the river bottom lands, so fertile, so gracious, so inexhaustible that in the greater portion of the state no rotation of crops is necessary. It means that the plow may run for hundreds of miles over the prairies without touching a pebble or a grain of sand. Crop failures are practically unknown. Farm land is held at from one hundred and fifty to three hundred dollars an acre.

Is it to be wondered that the farmhouses of Illinois have a gracious, ample and prosperous look, far removed from the pinched and weather-beaten face worn by typical farmhouses of many sister states, when it is realized (statistics here, but only this once) that nearly all of its thirty-five million acres are susceptible of cultivation? Of course, nobody's mind can grasp thirty-five millions of anything. But anyone can get an idea of size when it is known that one state is so varied and versatile as to embrace the tropics and the far—well, fairly far,—north. Down in Cairo, Illinois, where the state almost melts invisibly into Kentucky, you get all the sunny southland scenery—darkies, levees, banjos, river boats. Up in northern Illinois, on the lake, you're very apt to find furs comfortable in August, for northern Illinois uses the lake much as a grocer uses the electric fan in his choice vegetable and fruit window—to temper the heat in summer and the cold in winter.

The story of the growth of Illinois is a miraculous thing—the kind of thing that could happen only in these United States. But other states have expanded marvelously, too, have blossomed overnight. That isn't so remarkable, though in the case of Illinois, perhaps, the growth was magic in its rapidity. The stupendous thing about it all is that, with her sudden prosperity and riches, Illinois has kept her head and figure. Few other states can say that. It is to her everlasting glory that it can be said of Illinois.

Illinois comes from the Indian Illini, signifying a complete, finished and perfect Man, imbued with the spirit and bravery of the men of every nation that ever lived.—From American Magazine...

THE FARMERS' REVIEW, CHICAGO

SANGAMON COUNTY COURT HOUSE, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

HISTORY of SANGAMON COUNTY

WHEN Illinois was admitted into the Union it was composed of thirty-three counties—Sangamon was not among them. This county was created by a law of the state and was approved of, January 30, 1821.

About 1818 a bachelor by the name of Elisha Kelly emigrated from North Carolina, stopping first in Macoupin county. He was fond of hunting and in prospecting for hunting grounds he wandered in between the two ravines about two miles apart running in a northwesterly direction and emptying into Spring Creek a tributary of the Sangamon river. Here there were deer roaming up and down the river. In the morning they would leave the ravine and go out on the open prairie where they would spend the day in the tall grass, roaming and racing about. The deer in passing down these ravines, gave Mr. Kelly an opportunity for the full gratification of his ambition for game, which seemed to him like a hunter's paradise, and when he returned to his old home he induced his father, Henry Kelly and his four brothers, John older than himself, Elijah, William and George who were younger, to emigrate with him. He induced other families among his acquaintances to also emigrate. More families continued to move into the county and generally settled at long distances from each other, but the principal settlement clustered around the Kellys. When the commissioners came to locate the county seat it was discovered that the Kelly settlement was the only place in all the county where enough families could be found in the vicinity of each other to board and lodge the members of court and those who would likely attend the sessions.

April 10, 1821, there is record of an article of agreement having been made between the county commissioners and John Kelly, Zachariah Peter and William Drennan. These three men agreed to build for the use of the county a court house of the following description: The logs to be twenty feet long, the house one story high, plank floor, a good cabin roof, a door and window cut out. Work to be completed by the first day of May, 1822, for which the commissioners agreed to pay $42.50. As the court house neared completion, the commissioners found it would be a very nice summer building, but not very practical for winter, so there was another contract between the county commissioners and Jesse Brevard, in which he agreed to chink the outside of the building and daub the inside, boards sawed and nailed on the inside cracks, a good, sufficient door shutter to be made of good planks and hung with iron hinges and a window to be cut out, faced and cased, and to contain nine lights with a good sufficient shutter hung on the outside. A fireplace to be cut out seven feet wide and a wooden chimney, built with back and hearth. To be finished by September, 1822.

Robert Hamilton agreed to build a jail for the county of Sangamon for the sum of $84.76.

On June 5th, 1821, the county was divided into four election districts or townships, called respectively Sangamon, Springfield, Richland and Union. Overseers of the poor were appointed, two for each township, and a board of three trustees to look after the overseers of the poor.

After the temporary location of the county seat, a contest sprang up in regard to the permanent location of it. At an election of the members of the legislature, two opposing candidates went before the people on the merits of two localities. I. S. Pugh was the candidate from Springfield, and William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, represented Sangamon, a beautiful site for a town on the banks of the Sangamon river, about seven miles west and a little north from Springfield. Hamilton was elected but Pugh went to Vandalia the capital as a lobby member and succeeded in having commissioners appointed who proved favorable to Springfield.

In 1825 there was a movement for building a large and better court house, and in the July term the county commissioners passed an order that the county proceed to build a court house not to exceed $3,000 provided one-half of the expense be made up by subscription. It was to be all brick and two stories high. The failure to raise the money by subscription defeated the whole project. In 1830 the original court house proving to be inadequate was to be replaced by a brick structure. This was built at a total cost of $6,841.

In 1837 Springfield was selected as the future capital of the state with the promise to raise $50,000 to assist in building the state house, and also to furnish the site upon which it should stand. If the land was selected far enough from the existing business to be cheap, the $50,000 could not be raised. Those already in business around the square refused to contribute because the state house being so much larger and attractive, would draw the business after it thus depreciating the value of their property. After discussing the question in all its bearings it was found that the only practicable way to settle the matter was to demolish the court house and use the site for the state house. Under that arrangement the business men around the square pledged themselves to contribute to the $50,000 fund as much as they were able. The court house was removed early in 1837, and the work on the state house commenced. This square, with the court house and other buildings on it, were valued at $16,000, about one-third of which was lost in the destruction of the buildings. Having thus disposed of their court house and pledged to do much towards building the new state house, the people of the county were unable to undertake the building of another, for this reason the county rented a building which had been erected for a store house by the Hon. Ninian W. Edwards. This was used for the court house for ten years.

During the winter of 1826 and 1827 the Sangamo Spectator was established in Springfield by Hooper Warren, and the Sangamo Journal was established by Simeon and Josiah Francis in 1831 and is now known as the Illinois State Journal. The Illinois State Register first established at Vandalia was removed to Springfield in 1836 by Walters and Weber.

The transportation question was one of great importance to the early settlers on account of the vast extent of undrained land so rich and soft so as to be almost unpassable in its natural state for half of every year. For the transportation of heavy articles for long distances water was the only one thought to be available, consequently efforts were made to navigate every stream to the highest point possible. Navigation on the Sangamon river was not successful since a man might walk across it dry shod for nearly half of every year.

The first locomotive was run into Springfield, February 15th, 1842, on what is now the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad. George Gregory was the engineer and Thomas M. Averitt was the fireman.

The State Constitution of 1818 required the General Assembly to petition Congress for a grant of land on which to locate the seat of government for the State and it was expected to be laid on a site of land which township was to be the seat of government for twenty years. At the session of 1819 in Kaskaskia, five commissioners were appointed to select the land appropriated by Congress for the state capitol. Having selected the site the commissioners wanted to select a name that should be so euphonious as to attract the attention of the whole world. Tradition says, according to Governor Ford in his history of Illinois, that someone who was present suggested to the commissioners that the Vandals were a powerful nation of Indians who once inhabited the banks of the Kaskaskia river, and that Vandalia derived from the name would perpetuate the memory of that extinct but renowned people. The suggestion met with favor with the commissioners and the name was adopted. Having located and named their town, it was at once laid out and a two story frame building erected on the square set apart for the state capitol. That wooden state house was burned a few years later and a much larger one built of brick on the same ground.

The rapidity with which emigration filled up the northern portion of the State, made it apparent that much before the twenty years for the capital to remain at Vandalia was up, it would be necessary to remove the capital further north and as early as 1833 the question began to be agitated in the General Assembly.

In the legislature of 1836 and 1837, Sangamon county had two senators and seven representatives. They were the most remarkable delegation from any one county to the General Assembly. Physically they were taller than the average human being; some were less and some more than six feet, but their combined height was exactly fifty-four feet. They were then and there spoken of as the "Long Nine." The names of those in the Senate were Archer G. Herndon and Joe Fletcher, in the House, Abraham Lincoln, Ninian W. Edwards, John Dawson, Andrew McCormick, Dan Stone, William F. Elkin and Robert L. Wilson. One or two were very tall but none as tall as Abraham Lincoln. It was known that a movement would be made to remove the state capitol—the "Long Nine" were united in securing it and nothing could turn one of them from their purpose. They were ready to yield anything but when any other point was yielded, it secured votes for Springfield as the capital.

There was pending at this time a bill for internal improvements in regard to railroads. It was while this internal improvement bill was pending that the "Long Nine," as they were called, were busy. They said little or nothing in locating proposed railroads, but would assist other localities where votes could be secured for locating the capital at Springfield. The result was the passage of the act February 25th, 1837, locating the capital at Springfield.

A supplementary act was passed on the third of March, authorizing the commissioners of Sangamon county to convey the land as a site for the edifice to the state, which was named after A. G. Henry; Archibold Job and William Herndon as commissioners were authorized to superintend the work of erection. The new capitol was supposed to have been ready for the first meeting of the Legislature in Springfield, which was fixed for the special session of 1839-40. Finding that the building could not be sufficiently advanced, the Second Presbyterian church on Fourth street was secured as Representatives' Hall. The building was then quite new and was by far the largest church edifice in the central and whole northern part of Illinois. It was built of brick and was torn down the summer of 1875. The Methodist Church was used for the Senate Chamber and the Episcopal Church for the Supreme Court.

It was thought by many to be unreasonable to require a little town of eleven hundred inhabitants, struggling with the disadvantages of a new county, to pay the $50,000 pledged. During that special session, Hon. Steven A. Douglas, then a member from Morgan county, pledged to bring in a bill releasing Springfield from the payment of same. The sterling honesty of Abraham Lincoln manifested itself. Appreciating the kindly feeling that prompted the pledge he insisted that Sangamon county should pay the money. Arrangements were made to pay it in three installments. The first two payments were made without any great difficulty, but the third pressed heavy as the final crash that swept over the whole United States, while the new state house was in the course of construction, impoverished many. Under these circumstances it became necessary to borrow the money to make the last payment from the State Bank of Illinois. A note was signed by one hundred and one citizens and deposited with the bank. From that time it was between the State Bank and the citizens who signed the note. Soon after the note was given the State Bank failed, and some of the payments were made in the depreciated paper of the bank, for which it had received par value when it was paid out. Soon after the State Legislature adjourned at Vandalia in March, 1837 and the members returned to their homes. A public festival was given in Springfield in honor of the new legislation for the removal of the capitol. Among those who gave speeches were Abraham Lincoln and Steven A. Douglas.

Robert Pulliam located in the present town of Ball in 1813 and built a cabin which was the first built in the town. It was here that in 1858 the Old Settlers Society held their first celebration. However, the descendants of Henry Funderburk claimed that he was the first settler; that he arrived in the spring of 1817 and in that year raised a small quantity of corn, and that Pulliam was not there then. Their claim was supported by Jacob Hinkle of Pawnee who states that he was six years old when his father arrived in the county in the spring of 1816 and that he well remembers seeing shocks of corn on Mr. Funderburk's place which may have been less than a year previous.

In the June term, 1882, Aaron and Gideon Hawley were authorized to keep a ferry across the south fork of the Sangamon river, afterwards known as Jarvis Ford.

In a new county far removed from the conveniences of civilization and where all are compelled to build their own houses, make their own clothing and procure for themselves the means of subsistence, it is to be expected that their dwellings and clothing would be rude. They necessarily must use the things at hand. The early settlers constructed what were termed three-faced camps; that is, three walls leaving one side open. They are described as follows: The walls were built about seven feet high when poles were laid across at a distance of about three feet apart and on these a clapboard roof was laid which was four feet in length and from eight inches to twelve inches in width, split out of white oak timber. No floor was laid in the camp. The side left open answered the purpose of door, window and chimney. In front of the open side was built a large log heap which served for warmth in cold weather and cooking purposes in all seasons. The log cabin was a material advance over the three-faced camp for comfort, in which the living room was of good size and served as kitchen, parlor, bedroom and arsenal. Bacon and dried fruits and vegetables hung from the rafters. There was the loom and spinning wheel used in the making of the family clothing, and in a conspicuous place hung the rifle and hunting pouch. The bedrooms were separated from the living room by sheets and these coverlets suspended from the rafters. The articles used in the kitchen were as few and simple as can be imagined, a Dutch oven and a long handled frying pan, an iron pot or kettle constituted the utensils of the best furnished kitchen. The living was simple.

The wedding was an attractive feature of pioneer life. The whole neighborhood was interested and the whole neighborhood was invited. On the morning of the wedding day the groom and his intimate friends assembled at the house of his father and after due preparation departed to the home of the bride. The journey was made on horse back or foot or in farm wagons. On reaching the home of the bride, the marriage ceremony took place, afterwards the dinner and then dancing which lasted all night.

Of course, Sangamon county is known as the Illinois residence of Abraham Lincoln, his real residence having been at New Salem, which was then part of Sangamon county, now in Menard. About 1842 he practiced law in Springfield.

A SCENE FROM THE FUNK BROS. FARM.

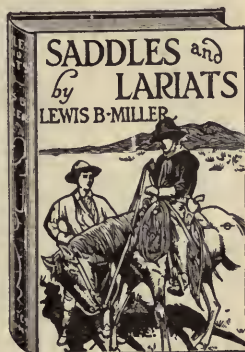

Saddles and Lariats

By LEWIS B. MILLER

Life on the Great Cattle Trail

THIS Story, once published serially in The Farmers' Review, is the largely true account of the Bar-Circle Outfit's attempt to take a big drove of longhorns from Texas to California in the days of the gold excitement. Starting in central Texas, then a wild, Comanche-infested region, the great drove of twenty-five hundred beeves marches, not directly toward its destination, but northward to Fort Gibson, in the Indian Territory. Thence its course is up the Arkansas River, partly by way of the Santa Fe Trail, and up along the east base of the Rockies to Old Fort Laramie on the Overland or Gold-seekers' Trail. Most of the principal events, as well as many of the details, were set down by the author from the lips of one of the cowboys. Hence, the book has the interest of a story and the value of a history. No more picturesque life was ever seen on the American continent, or any other continent, than that along the great cattle-trails of the western wilderness.

The book has 285 pages, is illustrated, and has an illustrated cloth cover.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

TRENTON ADVERTISER: "A rousing story of the West and South."

TORONTO GLOBE: "A racy account of an old-time cattle-drove across the American plains in the days when the gold rush was on. Replete with interest."

WINDER'S TRAVEL MAGAZINE: "A thrilling story of the life that has passed away forever."

OAKLAND (CALIFORNIA) ENQUIRER: "Presents without doubt a true picture. They are all here—the round-ups, the desert marches, the tremendous trails, the stampedes, the fights to the death with bronchos and grizzlies—all very graphically told."

"Saddles and Lariats" is illustrated—handsomely bound in beautiful colored cloth covers and is printed from clear, readable type on good paper. It is highly commended by ministers, editors, college presidents, farmers, and by many of the ablest literary critics, both in this country and in the land beyond the sea. Suitable for any library or for a birthday, holiday or other present to any relative or friend.

CASS COUNTY-COURT HOUSE VIRGINIA ILL.

HISTORY of CASS COUNTY

ON THE 14th day of August, 1834, the county commissioners met to organize Cass county. At this first meeting of the board the county was divided into precincts, Beardstown, Monroe, Virginia, Sugar Grove, Richmond and Bowens. At this time there was not a house built exclusively for religious worship, neither was there one in all Morgan county outside of Jacksonville. Physicians were scarce and fever ague quite common. Game was plentiful, particularly wolves. The wolves very seldom did violence to any one, but when the weather was stormy they were so bold and treacherous that no one cared to risk himself out alone at night. The county seat was to be located at Virginia.

In 1823 Morgan county was formed from Green county, which is now Cass county. In 1818 a man by the name of Pullam settled upon Barns Creek, a tributary of the Sangamon river, and returned in November of that same year.

Seymour Kellogg first settled in the country afterwards included in Morgan county, and it was at his house that the first white child of the Sangamo country was born.

The first actual permanent white settler within the limits of the present city of Beardstown was Thomas Beard who went there on horse back when it was Kickapoo territory. In 1819 he made it his home as a trader among the Indians.

Martin L. Lindsley, together with his wife and two children and Timothy Harris and John Cettrough settled in Beardstown in 1820, and afterwards located in Camp Hollow. Lindsley built a cabin and the first white child in this county was added to his family.

During the year 1820 a family named Eggleston settled on the site of Beardstown.

Major Elijah Iles landed in 1819 where Beardstown now is on his way to the Keeley Settlement, afterwards named Calhoun and now Springfield. He said that at that time there was but a hut building of birchen poles standing on the bank of the river but unoccupied. As the Indians lived in the hut this was probably erected by a French trader about a century before this time.

Archibold Job first settled at Beardstown and then at Sylvan Grove at the north end of North Prairie in the spring of 1821, surrounded by Kickapoo Indians.

In 1821 there were only about twenty white families within the present limits of Morgan, Cass and Scott counties, but when the reputation of the Sangamo country, for its unrivaled fertility became known, and when the Indian title to it had become extinguished and word that the land would soon be surveyed and offered by the government had reached Kentucky and Tennessee, the sturdy and enterprising farmers of the states further east and south began to come here in great numbers.

It was very common at this time to see the prairie schooner. "It was constructed with four high wheels upon which was a great box formed like a quarter of a moon with the bend hanging between the fore and aft wheels. The solid running gears well and fantastically ironed, the broad felloes heavily tired, the tongue arranged for the propelling power of either horse or ox. Its high end-boards and curving side-boards, ribbed and barred and riveted gearing in red and blue paint was not gotten up merely for show. It made no pretension to beauty. The old prairie schooner with its white cover and flapping curtains looking at a distance on the prairie like a ship on the ocean was the emigrant wagon of the West." It held considerable utensils, provisions, ammunition, bedding, farming implements and all the various necessities for setting up housekeeping on the wild prairies. Besides all this it contained the family. It was in these prairie schooners that most of the first settlers of Cass county emigrated from the older states. At the time, they were not considered pleasure trips, although they had pleasant features connected with them as well as hardships and hairbreadth escapes. No doubt the real pleasures of these trips were when they were recounted by the participants in later life to their grandchildren. There were few roads and no bridges at that time. The emigrants usually took along with them a few head of cattle and a horse and occasionally a coop would be fastened to the wagon for the purpose of raising a few chickens in the new home. Having come to the good, rich prairie land and having found a place with timber and water, they went together to some distant town for a surveyor. This meant a long and weary journey to the government land office to file on the land. Then the cabin must be built from the logs which they got themselves. There were no nails nor iron nor glass; the outside walls were made of round hewn logs set together at the end and chinked with chips and clay between them. The floor was made of split logs, the doors made from split logs well fastened together with wooden pins swung on wooden hinges and fastened with a wood latch. Thus the first farmers of Cass county started in life—very much the same as the settlers of the other rich counties of the state.

The first land entry was made by Thomas Beard and Enoch C. March jointly, upon the northeast quarter of section 15 in township 18, range 12, September 23rd, 1826. It was upon this fractional quarter section that Mr. Beard's cabin was built. It was built upon the steep bank of the river at the present foot of State street where he afterwards built his brick hotel. In the following spring it was discovered that this cabin had been built over a den of snakes and with the opening of the warm weather thousands of them swarmed about the cabin.

The first licensed ferry that crossed the Illinois river was established June 5th, 1826, by Thomas Beard and a license was granted him by the county commissioners of Schuyler county upon his paying $6.00 per annum into the treasury of that county. There was at that time no road from Beardstown through Schuyler county, but blazes on the trees were made out as far as where Rushville now stands. Schuyler county had been organized and the county seat had been located near where Pleasant View now is and strange enough that was named Beardstown, too. Beard's ferry-boat was propelled by man power and was so small that only one wagon and two horses could be crossed at one time and then very little standing room was left for passengers.

The original town of Beardstown consisted of twenty-three blocks fronting on the river, three tiers of blocks reaching from Clay to Jackson streets of which ten lying between the park and Main street and State and Washington is the central cut. It was laid out and platted by Enoch March and Thomas Beard and acknowledged before Thomas H. Arnet, a justice of the peace of Jacksonville, September 29th, 1829, and is reported in the local county records, an inscription of which is in the Cass county records.

Mr. Charles Robinson, an early resident of Cass county, in 1872, wrote a letter to the Chicago Journal in which he said "Fifty years ago, or in the summer of 1821, there was not a bushel of corn to be had in Central Illinois. My father settled in that year twenty-three miles west of Springfield. We had to live for a time on venison, blackberries and milk, while the men were gone to "Egypt" to harvest and procure breadstuffs. The land we improved was surveyed that summer and afterwards bought of the government, the money being raised by sending beeswax down the Illinois river to St. Louis in an Indian canoe. Dressed deer skins and tanned hides were then in use and we made one piece of clothing out of nettles instead of flax. Cotton matured well for a decade until the deep snow of 1830. The southern part of the state referred to by Mr. Robinson as "Egypt" was so called because being older, longer and better settled and cultivated "it gathered corn as the sand of the sea," and the immigrants of the central part of the state went to them to buy their corn. In the early years of the white settlements, wheat was not to be had and corn meal, the only breadstuff, was exceedingly hard to obtain as mills were scarce. Jarroes mill on Cahokia Creek was for a long time the only one accessible to the pioneers. In 1821 a small horse-mill was erected on Indian Creek by Richard Sheppard. Then a horse-mill was put up at Clary's Grove and still later Ogle's water-mill was built on Indian Creek.

Reddick Horn, a Methodist preacher, settled at Beardstown in 1823. He became, upon the formation of Cass county, the clerk of the circuit court.

The first schoolhouse was of logs, built on Enoch Ogden's farm. The first blacksmith shop was owned by Mathew Holland in 1835.

The winter of 1830 and 31 was a remarkable one and will be remembered as the most terrible one for suffering. The snow fell first about 30 inches deep and kept on falling until it was from four to six feet deep. The fences were covered and lanes filled up and there was much suffering everywhere. Stock died for want of food. Game could be had in plenty for food, because it had alighted in the snow and was unable to get out, but finally game became so poor, from starvation, that it was unfit for food. The snow stayed all winter until March and people ran short of everything, particularly fuel. Thomas Beard, remembering a widow with a small family living at the bluffs, wandered out there and found her and her family on the verge of starvation and hovering over the last remnants of a fire, her fuel having been used. Mr. Beard tore up some fencing and chopped up a large pile of wood for her and afterwards carried provisions to her a distance of seven miles, as a horse could not travel. What little corn had been raised in the county was generally ungathered when the snow came and men took sacks and waded out into the fields and gathered and carried it on their shoulders to their cabins and their horses, cattle and hogs.

Previous to 1831 most of the pioneers raised sufficient cotton for their own use, but following the terrible snow all efforts to raise it were futile.

In 1831 the Indians became very troublesome and threatened to overrun the white people. They were led by Black Hawk, their chief, who pretended to have power given him by the Great Spirit to destroy the pale-faces. He attacked the whites with so much vigor that militia companies were formed for self protection. A battalion of this regiment of 275 men, commanded by Major Stillman of Fulton county, was on the 14th of May, 1832, attacked by Black Hawk on a small branch of the Sycamore Creek. This was called the battle of Stillman's Run. The first call which Governor Reynolds made was in May, 1831, for all able bodied men who were willing to fight the Indians to the number of seven thousand to present themselves at Beardstown on the 10th of June. On that day three times that number assembled. Governor Reynolds organized them at once by appointing Joseph Dugan of Jacksonville brigadier, and Enoch C. March of Beardstown quartermaster. March being well acquainted with this vicinity soon furnished the necessary supplies, but Governor Reynolds was at a loss to know how to arm those who had not brought rifles. In this emergency Francis Arenz came to the rescue. He was a merchant in Beardstown and had previously purchased some light, brass-barreled fowling pieces which had been manufactured in the east for a South American government, and not answering the purpose for which they were made they were shipped west to shoot birds with. These answered excellently for arms for light horsemen and skirmishers. The little army started on their campaign June 15th, 1831, for Rock Island.

During the Black Hawk war David Epler, a resident of North Prairie, came to Beardstown to purchase two barrels of salt. He drove two beautiful horses, well harnessed and a good wagon. Col. March saw them and wanted them for the army for war material. He seized them under the law of war times. Mr. Epler refused to give them up unless he should be paid their value. Col. March then agreed to pay for them what two disinterested men would say they were worth. This Epler agreed to. At the time there were two comparative strangers, Dr. Charles Chandler and a man named Crawford stopping at Beardstown. The case was referred to them. They had come from the east and were wholly unaware of the low prices of this new country and priced the team at eastern value which was $350.00. Mr. Epler received what was a very large price for his team.

Shortly before this Dr. Chandler left Rhode Island, where he had a good medical practice, started west with his family intending to settle at Fort Clark, where Peoria now stands. He came up the Illinois river on a steamer, and when they arrived at Beardstown the hostile attitude of the Indians made it seem impracticable to go further, so the captain discharged his passengers and freight at Beardstown. It was while here at this time that Dr. Chandler settled the value of the team for Mr. Epler, and also became so well pleased with the vicinity that he determined to go no further north, but settle here. The doctor entered 160 acres of land where the town of Chandlerville now stands. He broke up three acres of land that spring and raised a crop of buckwheat.

It was the universal custom among the settlers at that time that every man should be entitled to 80 acres of land on either side of the land already entered by him, until such time as he was able to enter it, as it was called, or in other words until he could raise enough money to buy it from the government at $1.25 per acre. For another man to enter this land was considered the same as stealing.

Shortly after the doctor had settled there, a man named English was so well pleased with the prospects that he concluded to enter land and settle there. The doctor assisted and befriended him all he could and to induce him to stop offered to give up his claim to one-half of the 80 acre tract next to the land that English wanted and let him enter it. English told him that he was going to Springfield to enter the whole tract—that he did not care for the custom of the country and that he was going to have it right or wrong, and started for Springfield. The doctor went to his cabin and found that he had $50.00. He knew that his neighbor McAuly had some money also. He saddled his best horse and rode to McAuly's and borrowed $50.00 and started taking a different road than that chosen by English. When about ten miles from Springfield he overtook two men on horseback, and as his horse was foaming with perspiration he rode along slowly with the young men telling them of the cause of his haste, as well as to rest his horse. When he told them of the meanness of English one of the young men was so indignant that he offered the doctor his own comparatively fresh horse that he might make greater haste, while the young man would ride the doctor's horse into town. But the doctor rode his own horse, got safely to the land office and entered the land before English got there. Sometime after he wanted to have his land surveyed and the county surveyor lived at Jacksonville, but a neighbor told him that there was a better surveyor living at Salem in Sangamon county named Abraham Lincoln, so the doctor sent for him and when he came with his implements to do the surveying the doctor found that Abraham Lincoln the surveyor, was the same young man who had offered to lend him his horse that he might ride to the land office before English.

Dr. Chandler was the first physician in Central Illinois who adopted quinine as a remedy in his practice. The first to induce the practice of the infliction of bodily pain as a remedy for overdoses of opium, and the first to oppose bleeding as a remedy.

In 1833 Frances Orenz began publishing the first newspaper, entitled the Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Military Bounty Land Advisor.

The White River Raft

By LEWIS B. MILLER

A Story of Logging in Arkansas and Rafting on the Mississippi

EVERYONE enjoys a good, wholesome story. Stories of the right kind always entertain. They are helps in everyday life and make us better men and women.

Such is the story, "The White River Raft," which recently ran as a serial in The Farmers' Review. It is a Largely True Story of a Logging Trip into the Flooded Forests of Arkansas, followed by an Eventful Voyage down the Mississippi. This thrilling narrative opens on the bank of Chouteau's Pond in the City of St. Louis, where the three principal characters meet. The story soon moves down the Mississippi to the flooded White River Forest. Adventure follows adventure in swift succession. There is a meeting with a fleet of flatboats and an exciting experience with gamblers and river pirates; but the most thrilling events are the snagging of the great steamer, the River Queen, and those that take place during the awful raging of a tropical storm, when the raft breaks up and the raftsmen are swept asunder in the pitchy darkness. In spite of these misfortunes, the story reaches a satisfactory conclusion.

All the principal happenings are true, the author having heard them narrated by one of the partners in that ill-fated rafting venture. Number of pages, 430.

SOME REVIEWERS' OPINIONS

THE AMERICAN BOY:—"Not a dull page from first to last."

NEW YORK BOOK-SELLER:—"An ideal adventure story. The wonderful exploits and hair-breadth escapes of the voyagers make one forget bedtime and even the call of hunger."

LONDON (ENGLAND) DAILY GRAPHIC:—"The book is the right stuff, all the time racy, sound and wholesome."

PORTLAND (MAINE) PRESS:—"An absorbingly entertaining book for boys or older people."

"THE WHITE RIVER RAFT" is illustrated—handsomely bound in beautiful colored cloth covers and is printed from clear, readable type on good paper. It is highly commended by ministers, editors, college presidents, farmers and by many of the ablest literary critics, both in this country and in the land beyond the sea. Suitable for any library or for a birthday, holiday or other present to any relative or friend.

MASON COUNTY COURT HOUSE, HAVANA, ILL.

HISTORY of MASON COUNTY

MASON county was formed from the counties of Tazewell and Menard by an act approved January 20th, 1841. The adjoining counties or the territory now forming the adjoining counties were all settled prior to Mason. In 1830 to 1835 there were not more than 25 families in the present limits of Mason county. By 1845 it was becoming fairly well settled and was beginning to take a prominent part among the counties of the state.

Among the first white settlers was Osian M. Ross. He located at Havana in the spring of 1829. In 1833 a few other families settled in the vicinity. Dr. Chandler located where the town of Chandlerville is. In 1832 a man by the name of Myers came to Havana; also the Krebaum family about the same date. Mr. Shepherd and Mr. Westervelt located at Matanzas about this time and a Mr. Barns at the Mounds north of Matanzas. Neither of these settlers were troubled by the Indians to any serious extent as settlers were in other parts of the state. Nearly all had left prior to the arrival of the first white settlers. There were a couple of block houses for defense at Havana which had been erected previous to the Black Hawk war.

The first schoolhouse stood on what is now known as the Court House Square. The first schoolhouses in the eastern part of the county were built at Crane Creek and Big Grove. These were used for voting purposes and for religious service. Mr. Lease, Sr., was the first teacher at Big Grove. Rev. Peter Cartwright was the first minister who preached at Havana in 1835.

The formation of the new county had been for some time discussed and in 1841 the act was passed by the legislature and duly approved by the government for that purpose. By the provision of the law, the legal voters of the district which was to compose the county met on the first Monday in April, 1841, and proceeded to elect a sheriff, treasurer and other county officers. The sheriff chosen was Francis Low, then president of the First National Bank. George T. Virgin, John R. Chaney and Abner Baxter were county commissioners.

The population at the time of the organization of the county, as near as can be ascertained, was about two thousand and at the election about four hundred votes were cast.

It was also directed by the legislature that the location of the county seat should be determined and here began a long struggle and rivalry which continued for many years. The two towns which were competitors for the county seat were Havana and Bath. The former was successful in securing the location, but the agitation kept up and an act approved January, 1843, was obtained from the legislature authorizing another election on the second Monday of February of that year. Polls were opened in Havana, Bath and Lynchburg and the question of the county seat was again voted upon. The votes at Havana were for that town and at the others, were against it, with the result that Bath received the majority of votes and was declared the county seat. The records were moved to Bath and the circuit court for 1844 was held there. Bath continued the county seat for eight years. Havana still had aspirations for it, and in February, 1851, legislation was obtained which ordered another election on the second Monday in March, 1851, at which the question was again taken up. Havana was successful this time.

The first white settler in Havana and in the county is believed to have been James Hokum who kept a ferry for Mr. Ross. In 1828 John Stewart settled on the head of Snicarte Island, now in Bath township. In 1829 O. M. Ross built the Ross hotel. In the fall of 1829 the Havana postoffice was established and Mr. Ross was appointed postmaster, making the Havana office two years older than the Chicago postoffice.

Mr. Allen, from whom Allen's Grove was named, lived in Allen's Grove as early as 1830 and had a crop of wheat in the ground during the winter of the terrible snow in 1830 and 1831. He was a squatter.

In 1831 Absalon Mounts settled on Crane Creek and built a mill. The mill was built to run by water, conveyed over the dam through a hollow sycamore log on to a flutter-wheel, but on account of the scarcity of water it was afterwards reconstructed so as to run a part of the time by horse or ox power. It was a rude affair with a pair of ten or twelve-inch stones grinding a bushel and a half of corn per hour when doing its best. Being the first and only mill in the county it was considered a big institution and patronized by all the pioneers far and near.

On the first day of November, 1836, the original plat of the town of Bath was laid out by Abraham Lincoln, deputy surveyor of Sangamon county. Agriculture was the main occupation and not very intensive farming at that. There were no grain elevators in those days and very little money to buy up surplus products, so the farmer was content if he raised enough wheat for his own family and possibly a little to spare to his new settled neighbor. The ground was poorly tilled with rude implements. They made their own houses out of logs—made the bread out of the flour from wheat which they had raised themselves. The women spun the woolen and linen cloth.

Mr. Comwell made the first marker used in the county for corn planting. The old way of plowing furrows and planting with the hoe was too much work for him. He got a saw and auger and an old wagon tongue and made the original marker which laid off four rows instead of one, then he made a "jumper" to cover the corn. At first the neighbors were skeptical and believed it to be just a lazy Yankee notion, but in a year or two it became a fixed institution in the county. In 1868 Mr. Comwell contracted with General Walker to do a job of prairie plowing with a steam plow made in England. The season was wet and the machine was heavy, but it demonstrated that plowing could be done by steam.

An agricultural society was organized in Mason county at Havana in 1854. Under this organization annual fairs were held in Havana.

The first newspaper printed in Mason county was in 1851; "The Mason County Herald," edited and published by McKenzie in the town of Havana.

FAIRVIEW M. E. CHURCH

The Fairview M. E. Sunday school was organized in the spring of 1848, with Thomas Ainsworth as superintendent; the teachers were David Layman, William Ainsworth, and grandfather, Thomas Ainsworth. This was the first Sunday school organized in Lynchburg Township.

In 1849 Thomas Ainsworth removed from the little log school house to the new church building, being the first church built south of Havana, in Mason County. The Fairview church and cemetery stand on the corner of sections 10 and 15 of Lynchburg Township.

The founders of the Fairview M. E. church were Thomas Ainswas elected superintendent of the Sunday school held in the little log school house, for the second time. This little log school house stood on the present site where the Fairview school now stands, in school district number four.

During the year of 1850 the first Fairview M. E. church was built and the Sunday school was worth, William Ainsworth, John W. Howarth, David Layman, Samuel Layman, George Layman and P. C. Bowen. The Rev. Peter Cartwright, the famous itinerant preacher, was the presiding elder of this charge at that time.

In 1890, the new and present Fairview church was built.

HISTORY of MENARD COUNTY

MENARD county was originally a part of Sangamon county. In 1839 the legislature subdivided Sangamon county and Menard was one of the three counties cut off and named in honor of Col. Pierre Menard, a Frenchman, who settled at Kaskaski in 1790. He was so popular in his day with the people of Illinois that when the convention formed the constitution of the state, a clause was included providing that any citizen of the United States who had resided in the state for two years might be eligible to the office of lieutenant governor. This was done in order that Col. Menard, who had been naturalized only a year or two at the time, might be made lieutenant governor. Menard and DuBois of Quebec in 1790 formed a partnership. For a number of years DuBois was government agent for the Indians, and his candor and integrity soon won for him the esteem and friendship of the Indian tribes. He could purchase pelts and other wares to great advantage. He acquired considerable fortune, but it was lost through his liberality in going security for his friends. He died at the age of seventy-seven years in Tazewell county.

Of the 198,675 acres of land in the county there were in 1878, 169,282 under cultivation. Of this, 63,286 acres were in corn yielding 1,875,096 bushels. In the same year there were 8,989 acres of winter wheat yielding 125,149 bushels, 891 acres of spring wheat yielding 6,244 bushels, 8,352 acres of oats producing 263,666 bushels, 10,168 acres of timothy yielding 14,542 tons of hay, 303 acres of Irish potatoes producing 15,620 bushels, 1,464 acres of apple orchards yielding 56,157 bushels of apples. This all shows that Menard county has always been agriculturally productive.

A number of settlements were made in other parts of old Sangamon county before any were made in the limits of what is now Menard, and there is no evidence that any one ever settled in the area of Menard county before April, 1819, the first settler being Mr. John Clary, who came with his family at the date just named. He settled in a grove in the southwestern part of the county near the present site of the village of Tallula. Mr. Clary built what was known to the pioneer settlers as a three faced camp, which was a building with one entire side open; the open side serving as door, window and chimney. In front of the open side was a pile of wood logs which served as fuel for cold weather and cooking purposes in all seasons.

Not long after the Clary's settled in the grove, Mr. Solomon Pratt with his family took up his residence near the Clary's. During the fall of 1819 and the spring of 1820 a number of families came, among them the Armstrongs, Greens and Spears.

The first marriage was John Jennison and Patsy McNabb. The first death was an infant son of Jacob Boyer.

The first schoolhouse was built at Sugar Grove township in 1822. The text-books were few in number. The teacher made all the pens of goose quills. The New Testament was used for a reader. James McNabb was the first teacher.

The first preaching was in the cabin of Roland Grand by a man by the name of Henderson.

The first postoffice in Menard county was established at Salem, and Col. Rogers was the first postmaster. His duties were not very arduous, since newspapers were scarcely known in the west and but few people ever received a letter.

In the fall of 1831 Abraham Lincoln came to Salem on his return from a trip with a flat boat to New Orleans. This was his first visit to the village. In the fall of 1831 Abraham Lincoln was appointed postmaster at Salem, which position he held for several years. He was a member of a company of one hundred men who answered the call for volunteers for the Black Hawk war. He was elected captain of the company.

During Lincoln's stay at Salem, especially the first few years, there was a kind of a feud or rivalry between the Clary's Grove boys and the River timber boys. Perhaps in the entire state there was not a hardier set to be found than those Clary's Grove boys, and there was no rowdiness or rivalry for a circuit of twenty miles with which they were not in some way connected. Lincoln was always umpire, arbitrator and judge and all of them had the most implicit confidence in his honor and ability.

Lincoln became surveyor and in the discharge of the duties of his office he visited every part of the county, for by him the entire land of the county was surveyed. Almost his last work as surveyor was laying out the present town of Petersburg.

Near the end of the Black Hawk war Mr. Lincoln became interested in Anna Rutledge, but in 1835 she died and it is said "The heart of Lincoln was buried in the coffin of Anna Rutledge." Be this true or not, a dark shadow seemed to be cast over him from which he fully never emerged, and it is said by those who knew him that Lincoln would often wander alone to her grave.

In 1834 when Abraham Lincoln was elected to the legislature he walked to the seat of government, and one suit of home-spun jeans was his outfit for the entire session. He was popular with all classes. At one time his compass and chain were sold for debts and were bought by Mr. James Short who at once handed them over to Mr. Lincoln who gladly accepted them remarking "I'll do as much for you some day." Firm and true to his words, after he became President of the United States, he repaid the kindness by appointing Mr. Short to a lucrative office.

On the highest bluff along the Sangamon river were found a number of Indian mounds. Arrow-heads, spear-points of flint and stone axes were found on the surrounding surface. In some of the mounds were found human skeletons; also specimens of pottery.

After the first settlements were made in the limits of the county, the Indians had nearly all been removed. A few were still in the timbers of Indian Creek in the neighborhood of Indian Point. Two old men Shick-Shack and Shambole lived for a year or two in the vicinity of the present town of Chandlerville. With them were a number of their relatives. Here Shick-Shack died and was buried and the hill is still known as Shick-Shack Hill. After his death his friends left the settlement and they were heard of no more.

There being no trouble with the Indians at the time of the settlements, there was never any need of block houses or forts. At one time while the Indian town was in Elkhart Grove a band of Indians coming through carried off a young lady as prisoner. The first day she was tied fast to a pony, but she had presence of mind and tore off parts of her clothing, which she dropped at intervals when not watched by her captors. This served to guide her friends to her rescue. The band with their captain crossed the Sangamon river almost east of where Springfield now stands. It was near Williamsville that her father and a few friends who were pursuing her came upon the Indians. When she saw her rescuers she ran towards them. An Indian gave chase and hurled his tomahawk at her, wounding her. She was restored to her friends but it was a long time before she recovered.

The first two railroads to come into Sangamon county were the Chicago and Alton and the Springfield and Northwestern.

From the very beginning, the inhabitants were interested in providing schools. The first rudely constructed building with log and home made benches were the result of a great deal of sacrifice on the part of the parents, but with the desire to give their children the best that was possible in this new country. Books were scarce. To illustrate the scarcity of books a little story is told of Lincoln. While at Salem he took lessons from Mr. Graham in English grammar. He did not have a book, but he learned that Mr. John Vance, then living seven miles north of Salem, had a copy of Kirkhove's Grammar. Mr. Lincoln walked barefooted the seven miles and back, procured the book, mastered its contents and then returned it.

Schools were supported by subscription, the charges being $1.50 to $2.50 per scholar for a term of three months, the school being in session only during mid-winter; everyone was needed to take care of the crops during the rest of the year.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR COMMUNITY

By E. B. MOON

FROM THE FARMERS' REVIEW

Do you fully realize what the community in which you live means to you individually?

You hear of wonderful commercial, social, educational and religious advantages, of fine stores, beautiful parks and good roads in other localities, all of which means but little or nothing to you compared to advantages and conveniences offered you at home. You are affected only by prevailing conditions in your community where you are benefited by advantages and must suffer for lack of them.

Everyone is more or less proud of the community in which he or she lives, and justly so. However, to me, the height of inconsistency is personified in people who pretend to be deeply interested in local conditions, and at the same time deliberately do those things that tend to retard the development of their home communities.

Those people who proudly boast of the advantages offered by their home towns, as desirable places in which to live, and then refuse to extend local patronage, are as ridiculous as the restaurant proprietor who eats "out."

It may be a fact that your local stores are not as large, or as handsomely equipped as some of the big city stores, but you will agree with me that your merchants cannot possibly enlarge or improve their businesses beyond the extent justified by the amount of patronage accorded them.

If you are interested in bringing about better local shopping facilities, it is squarely up to you, and other residents of your community, to patronize home merchants, thus keeping your money at home, insofar as possible, where it will circulate in various channels for the improvement of the community.

There are only two possible reasons why a person should remain in any certain town or community: their duties demand it, or they simply like to live there. Isn't this true in your case?

In either event, it is to your distinct advantage to do everything within your power to assist in improving local conditions. The community belongs to you and your neighbors, and you are necessarily governed by conditions as they exist.

A prosperous community is in every instance a desirable place in which to live, as it affords its residents advantages and conveniences to the extent of its prosperity, which invariably is limited to, and controlled by, the amount of local commercial activity.

ILLINOIS SYSTEM OF PERMANENT FERTILITY

BY

DR. CYRIL G. HOPKINS

Reprinted From THE FARMERS' REVIEW

All agricultural plants are made of ten elements, five of which are always provided by Nature in abundance, including carbon and oxygen taken from the air, hydrogen from water, and iron and sulphur from the soil. Man need not concern himself about these five elements. His fertility problem is thus at once reduced to a consideration of the other elements, nitrogen, potassium, phosphorus, calcium, and magnesium.

The Illinois system recognizes that there is an inexhaustible supply of nitrogen in the air and provides for its utilization as needed; also that there is an inexhaustible supply of potassium in the soil which may also be liberated and utilized as needed. It also recognizes that the supply of phosphorus in the common Illinois soil is very limited and that phosphorus is contained neither in the air nor in the rain, and, consequently, that phosphorus must be purchased and applied to the soil in larger amounts than are removed in crops if the productive power of the soil is to be increased and permanently maintained. The Illinois system also recognizes that soils should be sweet, and not acid or sour, and that ground limestone will destroy acidity and also provide calcium, which is sometimes deficient; and, finally, that, if magnesium is also deficient in the soil, which is rarely the case, it too may be provided, together with calcium, in dolomitic limestone, which is the most common limestone of northern Illinois and which consists of the double carbonate of calcium and magnesium.

These are the simple basic facts which every man should make a part of his ready knowledge and then proceed to make use of in his farm practice.

There is no one order of procedure that is best under all conditions, and the step which should be taken first in one season may not be best in another season. However, these are minor matters, the same as the time of plowing, the time of planting corn, and the question of threshing from the stack or after stacking.

Consider Conditions

Weather conditions, soil conditions, and labor conditions must be considered. Whichever step is taken first is a step forward, and the benefit of any important improvement may be more marked the second or subsequent years than the first year. On bare cornstalk land the farmer would make conditions better for oats, and still better for the clover seeded with the oats, if he would apply one ton per acre of fine ground rock phosphate, and thoroughly mix it with the soil by disking, then apply four tons per acre of ground limestone and harrow it in before seeding the oats and clover. However, the farmer usually has to utilize most of the good weather in the spring to get his land in shape and his crops planted even without handling much phosphate or limestone. Moreover, the roads are often in bad condition and the fields may be too soft for hauling and spreading phosphate and limestone in March and April.

Phosphate and Organic Matter

On Poorland Farm we sometimes handle one carload of such material in the spring, but in the main such work is done during the late summer and early fall. We spread phosphate on the pasture land or clover meadow and plow it under, then apply limestone, mix it with the soil in preparing the seed-bed, sowing wheat in the fall and clover the next spring. Or we apply phosphate where we have spread manure and plow both under for corn, then apply limestone (some times in the fall or in the spring on fall plowing) before planting the corn. Both phosphate and limestone are then in the soil and ready to benefit the oats and clover which follow the next year after corn.

The initial applications may well be one ton of phosphate and four tons of limestone per acre; but, after the first rotation, half of these quantities once every four or five years is sufficient to permanently maintain the supply of both limestone and phosphorus, even under the heaviest cropping with such crops as wheat, corn, oats, and clover. When seeding to alfalfa, five or six tons per acre of limestone may well be applied. To markedly enrich the soil in phosphorus, one ton of phosphate may well be applied every four or five years for four or five crop rotations; or, if one prefers and is prepared to make the investment, he may apply four or five tons of phosphate during the first five or ten years, and then continue to apply 1,000 pounds every four or five years, or one ton every eight or ten years, in order to maintain the supply.

As a rule, the corn belt prairie soil is more in need of phosphorus than limestone, but both are required for the best results on the most common soil. On the more acid timber soils of the corn belt, and on both prairie and timber upland in southern Illinois, limestone is more deficient than phosphorus, but there, too, both must ultimately be used for permanent soil enrichment.

Not Expensive

Of course, it costs something to purchase and apply phosphate and limestone, but not so much as one might think, when compared with other farm expenses and investments. Thus it costs $200 to buy an acre of corn belt land; and if money is worth 5 per cent, it costs $10 an acre a year to own the land. Five tons of phosphate at $7 a ton would double the total phosphorus content of the plowed soil of an acre of the most common corn belt land. This application would provide phosphorus for the largest crops for seventy years. A dollar an acre a year will make and maintain a limestone soil on the average Illinois farm.

Neither phosphate or limestone need be applied to a given field oftener than once every four or six years, or even less frequently if one cares to invest in heavier applications. In an hour's time a man and team can spread enough limestone or phosphate over an acre of land to last for five or ten years.

But, while limestone and phosphate, when properly used, increase the yields of wheat, oats and corn, their most important use in permanent agriculture is to make possible the production of large yields of clover and other legumes, which may be returned to the soil in large part, either with crop residues or in farm manure, in order to provide both nitrogen and organic matter, and thus complete the Illinois system of permanent fertility, and also insure the benefits from the physical improvement of the soil which is brought about by the addition both of organic matter and of limestone.

The important question remains, How much clover or manure must be returned to the soil to maintain the supply of nitrogen. The following facts should help us to solve this problem:

Nitrogen Supplies and Requirements

	Manure and Produce	Nitrogen
1	ton average manure....	10 pounds
1	ton clover hay.....	40 pounds
1	ton alfalfa hay.....	50 pounds
100	bu. corn	100 pounds
3	tons corn stalks.....	48 pounds
100	bu. oats.....	66 pounds
2½	tons oat straw.....	31 pounds
50	bu. wheat.....	71 pounds
2½	tons wheat straw.....	25 pounds

On Livestock Farms

For the livestock farmer, I would suggest a five-field rotation system, besides the pasture land. Four of these fields may be used for a four-year rotation of corn, corn oats and clover, while the fifth field grows alfalfa for perhaps five years, after which the alfalfa field may be put into the four-year rotation, and one of the other fields used for alfalfa for another five-year period, and so on. If the manure is saved with reasonable care, as many tons should be returned to the soil as the number of tons of air-dry produce hauled off. It may be assumed that the roots and stubble of the clover and alfalfa contain no more nitrogen than was furnished by the soil for those crops, but that the nitrogen contained in the hay harvested may represent new nitrogen taken from the air. With the information thus far secured, this is a reasonable basis to figure on for soils of moderate productive power.

For the grain and hay farmer, this rotation may well be modified by substituting wheat for the first corn crop, thus growing wheat, corn, oats and clover in the four-year rotation, and alfalfa on the fifth field. If only the grain and clover seed and the alfalfa hay are sold, all stalks, straw and clover (except the seed) being returned to the land, and nitrogen and organic matter may be maintained by the grain and hay farmer, provided a cover crop of clover is also seeded on the wheat ground in the spring to be plowed under late in the following fall or sufficiently early the next spring so as to get the land in good shape for corn.

Where there is no permanent pasture land, the livestock farmer may seed both clover and timothy with the oats and then use the field two or three years for meadow and pasture, thus making a six-field or seven-field system. With some modifications, a system of mixed farming may be practiced in which some crops are sold and others fed to livestock.

The important thing is to use the facts concerning the amount of nitrogen in manure and crops, and return enough to the soil to provide for the grain crops, with such yields as are desirable or possible under permanent systems. While we may still expect to reduce the nitrogen content of much of our rich corn belt lands, we should already see that we must ultimately develop our practice to a point where we return as much nitrogen as we remove in the non-legumes.

Thus to replace the nitrogen carried away in a 60-bushel crop of corn would require nine tons of manure or two and a quarter tons of clover; or if the stalks are left on the land, six tons of manure or one and one-half tons of clover would suffice. While there are great seasonal variations and other variable factors, the principles which hold in the long run apply with practical scientific exactness in the maintenance of soil fertility as well as in maintaining a bank account.

On part of the University farm at Urbana 89.9 bushels of corn per acre has been produced as an average of six consecutive years where limestone, phosphorus and "home-grown" organic matter have been used, in a good crop rotation. The average clover yield for the same six years was 3.82 tons per acre, not including the cover crop.

Important Points

Raw phosphate has little or no value as a top dressing, but it must be thoroughly incorporated with the soil before its full benefit can be secured. Keep in mind that raw phosphate should be well distributed where the roots feed and that this is chiefly between 2 inches and 7 inches beneath the surface.

While distinct benefit something results, especially on the clover crop, when raw phosphate is applied and well disked in, as on plowed ground or on corncstalk land where clover is to be seeded with small grain, much better results are secured after the phosphate is more thoroughly mixed with the plowed stratum to a depth of 6 or 7 inches.

It is true that some benefit results from the use of raw phosphate with no special provision for decaying organic matter, especially on soil fairly well supplied with humus and most deficient in phosphorus, and clover is usually the first crop to show such benefit; but the best results are not to be expected until plenty of decaying organic matter is turned under in intimate contact with the phosphate.

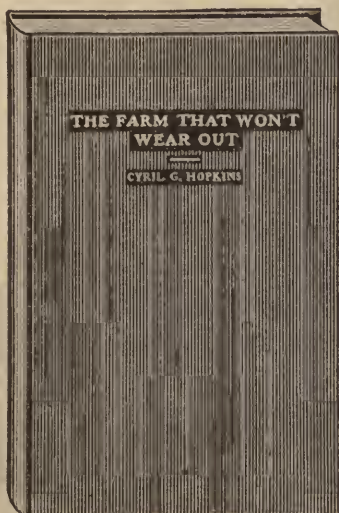

From the standpoint of getting the quickest results from the phosphate, the ideal method is to apply it with manure or with a good growth of clover; mix the phosphate with the organic matter and the soil by thorough disking and then plow.—From The Farmer's Review.

THE FARM THAT WON'T WEAR OUT

By Dr. Cyril G. Hopkins

of the University of Illinois

The subject expresses an ideal worthy of the efforts of every farmer; the book itself tells clearly how to attain such a farm. It is not impossible; it has been and is being done by many. It is not a system that is all expense and no profit; it means more profit at once and continuously. It is not an untried theory, but the product of actual farming experience.

The author himself is a farmer, using with success on his own farm the methods he advocates in this book. It is necessary to meet the food requirements of plants to make a soil produce its best. Those requirements are comparatively simple, and are clearly outlined in this book. It is not a large book—because the requirements are few and are plainly and concisely stated.

“The Farm That Won’t Wear Out” is a valuable illustrated book of 78 pages that tells exactly what is necessary in soil management to increase and maintain fertility. Every farmer should secure a copy and not merely read it, but study it carefully and follow in detail its teachings. It presents the fundamental principles of soil fertility in condensed form.

THE COUNTRY BANKER AND THE FARMER

By G. H. CAMPBELL

FROM THE FARMERS' REVIEW

It is only within recent years that the banker and the farmer have discovered that they work better in double harness than as single drivers. This is illustrated by the growth of country banks in the last twenty-five years. In 1890 Clay County, Illinois, had only three banks, now it has ten. Then Mercer County had only four regularly organized banks, though there may have been two or three stores doing something of a banking business; now it has twenty-three banks in operation and another is organizing. These two counties are typical of their respective localities; the former of the poorer farming lands in southern Illinois, and the latter of the rich lands in the northern part. And most of these banks are largely owned, if not actually controlled, by farmers.

There has been a good deal of nonsense, political and otherwise, scattered over the country the past year or two, about the farmer being unable to secure proper credit. But the average banker in the northern Mississippi valley considers the farmer his best customer, whether he be a depositor or a borrower. And with the exception of a few corporations, the farmer in this valley is getting his money as cheaply as his city cousin.

At the present time most farmers in northern and central Illinois are getting money on their personal notes for six per cent; and if the loan is well secured by real estate, they are getting it for as low as five per cent. Much of the money now being loaned on good business and apartment houses in Chicago is costing the borrowers six per cent or more.

The interest rate is like any other commodity, it is dependent on the law of supply and demand. Farmers very well know that when there is a surplus of corn in the neighborhood, they can get no more for the corn which they sell than it will net them when shipped on the general market. On the other hand when more corn is fed in the community than is raised, every farmer who has any corn to sell will get more than that corn would net him if shipped.

The same thing is true as to interest. If there is more money in a locality than the people want to use, then interest rates are sure to come down. But if the demand is greater than the supply, then interest rates must rise. This is a benefit to the borrower in two ways; it checks unwise speculation, and it saves the money for those who must have it to carry on their business.

Because he realizes this fact better than the farmer, the banker is interesting himself in farm conditions. The most effective way for the banker to reduce the cost of money to his customers is to make it more plentiful and thereby cheapen it. This method is sound and looks to permanency; any other method smacks of favoritism and instability.

Still another reason why the banker is taking an interest in farming is because he realizes that a farm is like a bank account—you must put in as much as you take out or some day the account will be closed. A poor farm calls for a poor tenant, poor often as to money, mentality and efficiency. And the lack of these qualities does not make good bank customers.

The idea is often held by farmers and sometimes fostered by bankers—that the banker is conferring a great favor in making the customer a loan.

This is not true. Good loans are just as necessary for the success of the bank as good deposits. And the banker who makes his patrons believe that he is letting them have the money just because he is a good fellow, is either applying for membership in the Ananias Club or he is unfit to handle credits. A banker is a trustee of the funds placed in his hands, and it is his business to see that they are safely and property used for the benefit of the entire community. And if he is letting you have any part of these funds just because you have smoked a few cigars with him, he is unfit for the trust. Friendship and good intentions are admirable, but they are very poor collateral.

The mention of improper loans naturally suggests the subject of overdrafts. An Irishman once defined a bank as a place where you could put your money in today and take it out tomorrow by giving sixty days notice. But the American farmer who overdraws his account has gone the Irishman one better, for he takes his money out without ever having put it in, or so much as saying "by your leave!" The banker who developed the overdraft as a sop to greedy customers should be locked up in the same "bug house" with the farmer who wanted to breed chinch bugs.

One of the most important crops that the farmer can raise is credit. And perhaps even a good farmer will concede that a banker might know something about its cultivation.

Your home banker wants to see you prosper, because he cannot win out unless you do.

Tell him your exact financial condition. He cannot safely help you unless he knows what you have, what you are going to get in and what you must pay out.

Tell him the exact truth. Do not think because he does not call you a liar that he does not know when you are pumping hot air. You wouldn't think of trying to pass a counterfeit on him, yet he is a good deal more familiar with lies than with counterfeits—he gets more of the former.

If you know that you are not going to be able to pay your loan for a year, don't tell your banker that you want it for only 30 days.

When your note is due, pay it, or renew it. It makes no difference how good your note is, no bank wants to keep it as a reminder of the past.

Don't spend the profit from your corn crop as soon as it is planted. Crops are like college valedictorians—they do not always live up to their promises.

sound by clearing up all your notes at regular intervals. He may not want your money, but he will be pleased to know that you CAN pay him. Besides, you know, paper, as well as notes, loses color if kept too long.

If you have secured a loan to buy cattle, pay the loan when the cattle are sold. He might think it a good loan if used to buy cattle, and a poor one if used to buy stock in an oil well.

When a stranger comes around and offers to sell you a corner lot in heaven or a cosey corner in a lower and warmer region, ask your banker—perhaps he has tried it. No doubt you are thinking: "The banker does not want to see my money leave his bank." That may be true, but as long as your money is in the bank it is yours, and you can get it when you wish. But when you hand your money over to some silver-tongued stranger, too often it is everlastingly "hisn."

Before entering upon a new deal which will take more money than you have, ask your banker about it and see if he is willing to let you have the money. He may be a little conservative, but most of your neighbors who are getting their mail on Easy Street have had the same failing.

Notes are like kisses—when too freely given they have little value.

And, finally, both the banker and the farmer need to bear in mind that hearty co-operation, the one with the other, means better banks and better farms.—From The Farmer's Review.

ADVANTAGES OF BUYING STANDARDIZED IMPLEMENTS OF HOME DEALERS

By E. B. MOON

FROM THE FARMERS' REVIEW

Ever since the manufacture of farm implements became a real industry and each manufacturer looked beyond his own immediate vicinity for trade, the marketing channel has been the home dealer. For more than three-quarters of a century this has been true. The channel has become so thoroughly efficient that it has been accepted as the most economical and best adapted to the consumer's demands for any system yet devised.

Good dealers in this channel have a real standing in the community and the better they are the more they are sought by the individual manufacturer.

A good implement dealer is one who takes care of his obligations to both farmer and manufacturer and gives the best possible service to his community as a merchant. These qualifications have become so necessary that they have practically forced a standardizing of the dealer in the business. We have then what might be called a standardized dealer.

No standardized dealer will knowingly handle "off stuff," as the term goes. He is surrounded with such strong competition he is everlastingly after the best farm implements he can buy. This fact, alone, is enough to protect any farmer when buying of a good dealer.

This same competition for the best implements between dealers has forced competing manufacturers to standardize their product to as large an extent as possible. For instance, materials must conform to a high standard of excellence, sizes, types, kinds and even repairs for machines must all be made and handled with a view of keeping up the standard of materials and service.

Stocks of all these machines and repairs are carried in all the large agricultural trade centers of each state. The farmer wants a machine at once—perhaps he knew a long time ahead he would have to buy it and just put it off to the last moment; again conditions beyond his control may force him to buy new machines. The Good Dealer channel of marketing is so perfected a phone or personal call on the dealer supplies the want instantly or in twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Compare this prompt service with buying farm implements from manufacturers direct or through other channels where you are not known personally and even when cash accompanies the order, shipments are not as quickly delivered, as usually no branch house carrying these stocks is near you. A local freight shipment from the factory may take days and even weeks. When repairs are wanted later on or expert help is needed, the same slow procedure is expected and is the rule.

After one or more of these experiences the farmer will remember it for years as an experience that spelled loss at that time. On the other hand suppose a few farm equipment purchases have been made direct and much trouble has been experienced. Sooner or later the circumstances will create a compromised situation and the losses will wipe out all fancied former benefits.

Year in and year out the farmer has been equipped with machinery sold through the Good Dealer in his nearest town. The deals have all been so satisfactory one doesn't stop to figure the satisfaction and real service. If each satisfactory purchase of the Good Home Dealer stood out as prominently and was remembered as long as the single unsatisfactory purchase made through other channels, every farmer would eventually buy at home. He would thoroughly and lastingly realize the benefits of home trade.

Dollar for Dollar, service for service the Good Home Dealer is the best and cheapest market. Give him your proposition, cash or otherwise, the same as the direct seller demands of you, and buy at home.

THE successful farmer realizes that his yearly income can be increased through sowing seeds produced by scientific methods. Ainsworth Pure Bred seed corn is bred upon our own farms. Every ear is hand picked, sorted three times and dried in our modern drying plants; the largest in the world. Systematic tests are made and we guarantee 95 to 100 per cent germination. Your money back if you return the seed. Only "true to type" ears are selected for seed. Strong vitality assured. We sell no crib dried seed.

GET OUR CATALOG

Send for it today, select your seed and have it shipped when you want it. Hundreds of customers order too late every year. We produce seven standard varieties. Our customers often increase their yield as much as 15 bushels per acre.

We have thousands of satisfied customers who buy of us each year. Why not begin now to increase your income by planting tested, high yielding seed? Market conditions were never better for high grade corn. Successful farmers will seed with new stock this year. Don't put it off. Write today for "Seed Corn Annual."

We want to thank especially the local farmers for their large orders and the splendid support they have given us since we have been in business. Our attention has been called to the fact that last year alone we sold more than 1200 bushels to neighbors within hauling distance of the plant. We assure you that local orders will receive the same careful attention as do orders from a distance.

We extend a cordial invitation to all farmers to inspect our drying plant at Mason City, Illinois. If you make us a visit during January or February, you will see thousands of bushels on the drying racks as well as thousands of bushels ready for shipment. Our entire stock is easily seen at our plant. We handle no crib corn.

Revolution in Threshing

SOLVES THE SHORTAGE OF HIRED HANDS

THE UNEQUALLED PERFORMANCES OF THE

Independent Thresher

Mark the greatest stride toward solving the farmers' threshing problems, made in the last 50 years—the average small tractor furnishes ample power. The VITAL QUESTION on the farm today is that of labor. The shortage has become a serious menace, and harvest time will find the situation alarming. We must get more done with the hands we have.

Your Means of Labor Relief is in the Independent Thresher

AN INDEPENDENT THRESHER and a half dozen men can do a good day's threshing. It affords crop insurance and prompt threshing. Its cost means "A THRESHER FOR EVERY FARM."

Gleason's Horse Book

Good for Both New and Renewal Subscriptions

520 Pages — Fully Illustrated

All That is Worth Knowing About Training and Treating Horses

EVERY person who owns, handles or manages horses and all livestock keepers and breeders should have a copy of this great book, because it tells about all the known methods of treating diseases of horses and other domestic animals—methods that are based upon the results of actual practice and not mere theory.* It also contains Prof. Gleason's famous system of horse breaking, taming and training. Therefore, it is in reality two books in one, and positively the most authoritative work of the kind ever published. This book gives the cause and cure of practically every disease known to horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, swine and dogs, with the right remedies for each disease. There are special chapters on how to buy, how to detect unsoundness, feeding, breeding, horseshoeing, general care of horses, etc. Gleason's Horse Book is actually worth its weight in gold to every horse owner or breeder in the land, yet by special arrangement with the publishers, we are enabled to give it away without cost with a yearly subscription to 'The Farmers' Review'.

BIGLER BIG "4" SPECIALTIES

Bigler Condition Powder.
 Bigler Anti-Hog Cholera Tonic.
 Bigler Poultry Compound.
 Bigler Lice Killer.

Testimonial received from Mr. Scott
 Mercer, Dayton, Ohio.

Four weeks ago I got one sack of Bigler Condition Powder and one sack of your Bigler Poultry Powders, and can recommend them to anyone. My horses were sick, had a bad stomach, their breath smelt very sour, had been feeding them Molasses feed and got them clear off their feed, but after using your Tonic two weeks, could see a change in them. They are fit now and working hard every day. My Poultry is all right again from cholera and lice and laying better than any of my neighbors' chickens.

Testimonial received from Hope Tatum,
 Riley, Kentucky:

After using Bigler Condition Powder for my horses for one week, I noticed a great change in their eating and appearance for the better. Also my cows gave more milk after one week, and my hogs were more healthy and I can recommend it to anyone.

Original of above letters and a thousand more just as good on file in our office.

Forty Years Experience of a Practical Hog Man

By A. J. LOVEJOY

farmer and well-known breeder of pure-bred and market swine; popular swine judge and Institute lecturer, and one of the foremost benefactors of American agriculture.

BIG MONEY IN HOGS

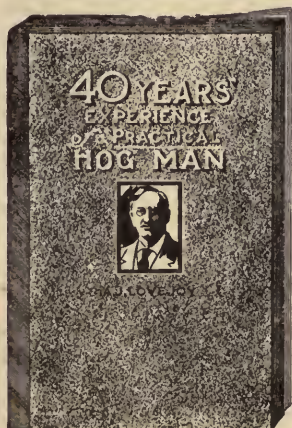

This profit is yours, if you go after it, and if you know how to breed, raise and market hogs right. Strong bone, good quality, thrifty, healthy market types are possible on every farm. All that is necessary is that you adopt right methods. These methods are described in detail in Lovejoy's Hog Book.

It covers every phase of breeding, feeding and marketing hogs, and in such a way as to be of everyday use to hog raisers. It answers every important question and problem relative to the successful and profitable production of pork on the ordinary farm. There are nearly two hundred pages of definite and concrete information about hogs and how to make the most money out of them. This experience is given in simple and plain language, just as the author would talk to you in his own hog lot. Mr. Lovejoy has been actively engaged in the hog business for over forty years. He has bred great pigs and, in return, they have made him great. He has broadened their backs and shortened their snouts—they have put slices of savory ham on his dinner plate and made him president of banks and of a railroad. They have brought home big slabs of bacon, and the "streaks o' lean" are wide. What he has learned will help you. This book will tell you more in an hour than you can dig out for yourself in years.

LOVEJOY'S HOG BOOK is sent postpaid with a yearly subscription to THE FARMERS' REVIEW

HAPPY AND CONTENTED

"OUT OF TOWN"

By E. B. MOON

FROM THE FARMERS' REVIEW

I happened to meet a man not long ago who was bewailing the fact that one of his farm implements, for which he had urgent need, was lying idle awaiting a new part that had to be ordered "out of town."

Reason? The implement in question had been bought from a distant house, and, not being a standard make, the local dealer was unable to supply a part to match the broken one, which the local blacksmith could not mend on account of a "bad place in the metal."

Work dependent on the machine had already been held up three days. Appraisal of the time lost—according to the owner's computation—amounted to approximately $20.00, to say nothing of the inconvenience to which he was put.

Investigation on my part developed the information that the owner figured that he was saving about $6.50 on the original purchase price by sending away for the implement. The local merchant stoutly maintained, however, that the difference in price was fully represented in quality.

In justice to all parties, will say that the broken part was replaced without cost to the purchaser.

At any rate, the time lost waiting for necessary repairs much more than counter-balanced the difference in price. Then, too, there is always a possibility of similar accidents occurring in the future.

Well-meaning retailers will not expect you to patronize them unless they are in position to extend you the same inducements in the way of quality, style and price offered elsewhere.

That your local merchants are in position to render you more and better service than those at a distance, there is no doubt. And service is an element worthy of much consideration.

If you will demand standard goods of established worth, you will invariably be assured of getting full value for the amount of money expended.

Establishing favorable reputation and demand for any particular brand of merchandise is an expensive process. As the expense incurred cannot be added to selling prices it must be absorbed by value of sales—steady demand by satisfied consumers.

You can buy standard products to as good advantage locally as anywhere else, and your money spent in your home stores will benefit you and your neighbors in many ways.

Eliminating the element of sentiment, it is to your advantage, from a financial standpoint, to keep, in your own community as much of the money produced there as possible.

Your Chance to Help That Boy

That boy of yours is looking ahead—he has his heart set on something. Maybe it's to follow in his father's footsteps and make the farm a big business success. Maybe he wants to specialize on Dairying, or Fruit Growing, or Poultry. Maybe he likes to work around machinery, and is planning a future as an engineer, an electrical expert, an architect, or an advertising man, or in the Government service.

Whatever he wants to be, remember this—training is what counts. If he is to win real success, on the farm or off, the thing for him to do is get ready now. He can do it. Whatever line of work he chooses—or you choose for him—he can get that training right at home in spare time—in the evenings this winter—through the International Correspondence Schools. Thousands of young men on farms all over America, with I. C. S. help, have made winter nights at home the stepping-stones to successful careers on the farm and in responsible, splendid-paying city positions.

For 25 years the I. C. S. have been the great university of the farm home. They bring a thorough training in any one of 280 subjects to your very door. They provide amidst home associations the advantages of a technical or agricultural college training and at a mere fraction of the cost.

If you have been worrying about that "off-to-school" problem, dreading the day when the boy would have to leave, let the I. C. S. help you.

Just ask your boy to mark the profession or subject he is most interested in on this coupon and mail it today. The I. C. S. will tell him all about the chance he has been waiting for. Have him mail the coupon now.

HOME LIFE

November, 1917.

AMERICA'S FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE: SEE PAGE 8

Home Life Magazine

enjoys the unique distinction of being the only magazine in the world with a circulation of 1,000,000 copies edited by a woman. Miss Josephine Conger, the editor of Home Life Magazine, is a Missouri girl who was reared in a country town and received her education in the editorial office of a country newspaper.

Though widely traveled, and identified with movements of national character, she has never lost her interest in country life, and this is why Home Life carries such a strong appeal to the people God loves so well—the great common folks of the land. In a quiet, helpful way, Home Life appeals to their sentiments and arouses their spirits.

Besides the stories, the special articles, the homely old fashioned sermon by the famous evangelist, Rev. Wilbur Chapman, the stirring and vigorous editorials, Home Life is always to be found in the forefront in some mighty crusade for the betterment of the nation.

Home Life is more than merely a magazine with clever stories and illustrations: It is, in fact, a living, breathing personality that brings it in constant touch with the most wholesome folks in the world—the fathers and mothers of the country.

You will like Home Life and you should, by all means, add it to your list of magazines for the coming year. The low subscription rate (35c per year, 60c for two years) is possible only because of the large circulation.

D. E. HALE
Editor of Big Four

Mr. and Mrs. Farmer

Are you one of those that have sold off their chickens on account of high-priced feed?

Have you noticed how the price of eggs keeps mounting?

Prices for eggs will continue to go up because of the low supply of poultry in the country.

Now is the time to get in the chicken business and if you are already in it you want the very latest, best and most authentic information on the feeding and care of poultry.

BIG FOUR POULTRY JOURNAL

is the medium that will give it to you.

BIG 4 is so named because it caters to the poultry raisers of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

It reports on conditions and gives you the poultry news in your own home territory.

It tells you how to house, feed and care for your fowls.

It gives you the Chicago market reports.

Its editorials are live and up-to-date—in fact,

The Reading Matter In BIG FOUR

is the most practical that can be bought or written. Its writers are men who are actually raising chickens and give you bare facts, not theory. The editor is a practical chicken raiser. He has been raising chickens, managing poultry farms, conditioning, showing, caponizing and writing for the past twenty years. He realizes what the poultry raiser of today has to contend with and it is his earnest desire to help solve these problems and give you the very latest, money-saving plans to be found. He is always at the service of our readers and is glad to answer any questions pertaining to your poultry problems. There is no charge for this service. After you read BIG FOUR a few issues you will think you cannot get along without it—Try it and see.

"$16,000,000 Wasted in Fuel in the home heating plants in Illinois every season by loose fitting doors and no provision for burning the gases with pre-heated air" is the startling statement of the Illinois University.

The Farris Furnace

is designed and built to get the greatest amount of heat units out of the fuel.

All doors are ground air tight, joints correctly proportioned as to weight and thickness in the several parts. Farris Furnaces are gas and dust proof and will save up to twenty per cent in fuel bills.

Sold Direct From the Factory to Consumer

Insuring a quality furnace at a right price. All parts of furnace are guaranteed for five years. We can heat any home new or old, and will make your heating estimates without cost to you.

Examine this furnace before buying.

Let Us Send You Circular No. 3

LIVESTOCK FEEDING

COMPOSITION OF FEEDS

(From I. C. S. Farmers' Handbook by Permission of I. C. Schools)

It is a matter of common observation on farms that certain feeds tend to produce growth—the formation of bone, muscles, etc.; that other feeds tend to produce fat; and that still other feeds tend to produce milk. The reason for this lies in the difference in their composition; therefore, a knowledge of the composition of a feed is a valuable guide in feeding livestock. Chemists have made five classes or groups into which all compounds that are found in feeds are placed. These classes are water, ash, protein, carbohydrates, and fat.

The following tabulation shows the elements that make up the compounds of each class:

Water.....	{ Carbon Hydrogen
Ash.....	{ Oxygen Sodium Potassium Calcium Magnesium Iron Manganese Sulphur Phosphorus Silicon Fluorine Chlorine
Protein.....	{ Carbon Hydrogen Oxygen Nitrogen Sulphur Phosphorus Iron
Carbohydrates..	{ Hydrogen Oxygen Oxygen
Fat.....	{ Carbon Hydrogen Oxygen

Water in Feeds.—All feeds contain water, although the more water a feed contains the smaller is its nutritive value. In young and growing plants the presence of water is readily apparent; it constitutes from 70 to 90% of the total weight of such plants. Air-dried feeds, such as the grains, corn, wheat and oats, and well-cured hays, contain on an average only from 8 to 15% of water.

Ash in Feeds.—The mineral matter, or ash, of a feed is the portion that is left after complete burning; it is, therefore, the incombustible part.

The common farm feeds contain but a small percentage of ash, although the percentage varies greatly in different feeds.

Potatoes contain .9% of ash; rutabagas, 1.2%; corn, 1.5%; oats, 3.2%; timothy hay, 4.4%; Red clover hay, cut when the clover is in bloom, 6.6%; and alfalfa hay, 8.6 to 10.6%.

Protein in Feeds.—All plant and animal compounds that contain the element nitrogen are grouped into a class to which the term protein is applied. This is a very general term, and the number of compounds included in this group is exceedingly large. In addition to nitrogen, there are always found in protein the elements carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, and sometimes sulphur, phosphorus, and iron. Owing to the fact that nitrogen is found in all the compounds included in this class, they are often spoken of as nitrogenous compounds.

The percentage of protein in the common feeds is given in the table showing the dry matter and digestible nutrients in 100 pounds of feedstuffs, printed on a subsequent page. An examination of this table will show that the seeds of plants usually contain a higher percentage of protein than the other parts of the plants. It will be learned, further, that by-products from mills and slaughter houses are rich in protein.

Carbohydrates in Feeds.—Like protein, the term carbohydrate is a general one and is the name of a large group of compounds. All carbohydrates are alike, however, in that they contain only the three elements, carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen. There are two general classes of carbohydrates, namely, crude fibre and nitrogen-free extract. Crude fiber constitutes the framework, or skeleton, of plants, such as the hard, woody portions of corn stalks and of straws. The husks of grains, such as oat hulls and corn and wheat bran, contain large quantities of this material; wood also is an example of crude fiber. Carbohydrates of the nitrogen-free-extract class are much more valuable as sources of feed than are those of the crude-fibre class, because the former are more easily digested than the latter. Familiar examples of the nitrogen-free-extract compounds are corn starch and common sugar.

Fat in Feeds.—The term fat, as it is used in connection with feeds, applies to all true fats and oils, as well as to all other feed compounds that are soluble in ether, and because of this fact the terms ether extract and fat are used synonymously in tables showing the composition of feedstuffs. Although all feeds contain some fat, the percentage in feeds varies widely.

CLASSIFICATION OF FEEDS

Feedstuffs can be conveniently divided into two general classes: concentrates and roughages. Roughages are also of two classes: dry and succulent.

The concentrates include all grains, seeds, and by-products that are used as feeds. Feeds of this class yield a larger proportion of digestible nutrients than those of the other class. The proportion of concentrate feeds that should be supplied in a ration depends on the class of animal that is being fed and on whether or not the ration is merely one for maintenance or is a full ration.

Three general classes of dry roughage are used as livestock feed. These are hays, straws, and fodders. As compared with the concentrates, all roughage feeds are more bulky in nature, less digestible, and therefore, are not so efficient as furnishers of materials for the production of energy, growth, fat, or milk. They usually are the stalks of the plants from which the seed has been removed. Their low digestibility is due to the large proportion of crude fiber, or woody matter, that they contain. Though ranking low in feed value, they constitute an essential and necessary part of every ration for all farm animals, except perhaps for pigs.

On account of the difference in the digestive capacity of the animals, less roughage is used for horses and pigs than for ruminants. The abundance and the comparative cheapness of roughage on most farms make it highly desirable that the feeder use all such feeds as completely as possible on the farm.

Hays.—The hays represent the most valuable roughage for feeding purposes. They are of two classes, namely, leguminous and non-leguminous. The leguminous hays have, on an average, a higher feed value, are more digestible and usually more palatable when properly cured, and contain a larger proportion of protein than the non-leguminous hays. As leguminous hays contain more protein and less carbohydrates than non-leguminous hays, the former are particularly valuable when fed with corn or other feeds that contain small percentages of protein. The quantity of protein that leguminous hays contain guarantees a high fertilizing value to the manure of the animals to which the hays are fed. There can be no well-directed or wise system of cropping established on farms that does not include some legume in the crop rotation, and experience and scientific investigation both indicate that leguminous hay should be fed on the farm where it is grown.

Straws.—The straws are the lowest of the roughages in feed value. Their high content of crude fiber makes them hard to digest and reduces their palatability. However, straws are of some use as livestock feed. Ruminants that are to be carried through the winter on merely a maintenance ration can make large use of straw. Idle horses can also be fed some of this material to advantage.

Fodders.—Most of the fodder available for livestock feed has its origin in the corn plant. Corn fodder, or fodder corn, is the entire corn plant after drying. Corn stover is corn fodder minus the ears. Shredded corn stover is corn stover that has been passed through a corn shredder.

Soiling Crops.—The crops most valuable for soiling purposes are field corn, sweet corn, sorghum, millets, rape, rye, oats, wheat, alfalfa, the clovers, cowpeas, soy beans, and vetch. It is desirable that these crops be fairly well matured before they are cut, as the immature plants are mostly water and often have an injurious effect on the digestive system of an animal.

Silage.—Silage may be defined as feed which has been stored in such a manner that its green or fresh condition is preserved. Green clover, alfalfa, cowpeas, sorghum, and other forage crops have been stored successfully in the silo. But the great American crop pre-eminently suited for the making of silage is the corn plant. Recent tests have shown that it is usually unprofitable to make silage out of a crop that can be successfully cured and stored in the mow without danger of excessive fermentation. The pithy stalk of the corn plant prevents it from drying and being handled in the same way as the hollow-stalked hays and straws.

Root Crops.—The roots ordinarily grown for feed are mangels, sugar beets, rutabagas, and carrots. Horses prefer carrots; sheep, common turnips and rutabagas; and for cattle, mangels are very appropriate. In England and Scotland, roots are largely depended on for all classes of livestock, especially for cattle and sheep. In fact, in those countries roots constitute the greatest part of the daily rations for livestock; but in America roots are not grown extensively for the feeding of livestock. This is due chiefly to the labor required to grow and harvest a root crop, and to the fact that corn is so extensively grown and made into silage.

BALANCED RATIONS

Feeding Standards.—A feeding standard shows the experimentally established quantities of dry matter, digestible protein, digestible carbohydrates, and digestible fat that are necessary to satisfy the physiological requirements per day per 1,000 lb. of live weight of animals under specified conditions.

Thus, the Wolff-Lehmann feeding standards given in the accompanying table show that a dairy cow weighing 1,000 lb. and giving 22 lb. of milk should receive 29 lb. of dry matter, $2\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of digestible protein, 13 lb. of digestible carbohydrates, and $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.

of digestible fat for each 24 hr. This standard is the result of experiment and scientific investigation, which has shown that a daily ration supplying the above quantities and kinds of digestible nutrients to a 1,000-lb. cow will maintain on an average, a milk flow of 22 lb. a day. All the other standards in the table have been derived in the same manner.

Nutritive Ratio.—A nutritive ratio is the ratio of the digestible protein to the digestible carbohydrates and fat in any feed or ration. In computing the nutritive ratio of a ration, the amount of digestible fat is multiplied by 2.25 and the product added to the amount of digestible carbohydrates, and the sum divided by the amount of digestible protein. The ratio of one to the quotient is the nutritive ratio. To illustrate: What is the nutritive ratio of a ration furnishing 2.5 lb. of digestible protein, 15 lb. of digestible carbohydrates, and .5 lb. of digestible fat?

The calculation is usually made as follows: $.5 \times 2.25 = 1.125$; $1.125 + 15 = 16.125$; $16.125 \div 2.5 = 6.45$. The nutritive ratio is, therefore, 1 part of protein to 6.45 parts of carbohydrates and fat, or 1 : 6.45.

Note.—Some authorities on feeding multiply the quantity of fat by 2.4 in computing a nutritive ratio, but recent experiments and investigations show that 2.25 is a more nearly correct factor to use.

The nutritive ratio is wide or narrow according to the proportion of protein that the ration contains. If the relative amount of protein in a ration is large, it is said to have a narrow nutritive ratio, and if the relative amount of protein is small it is said to have a wide nutritive ratio. A ratio of 1 to 5.5 or less is considered narrow; a ratio of 1 to 8 and above is considered wide; between these two the nutritive ratio is medium. Young growing animals generally and cows giving milk need a large amount of protein, and should therefore receive a ration that has a narrow nutritive ratio. Fattening animals thrive well on wide rations, but pregnant animals and horses at work should receive rations of a medium nutritive ratio.

Making Up a Balanced Ration.—By the aid of the accompanying table giving the total dry matter and the digestible nutrients contained in 100 lb. of the different feedstuffs, and the number of pounds of each of the digestible nutrients, the nutritive ratio may be determined of almost any ration that may be fed. The value of such determinations to the feeder is not only to acquaint him with the wide variations in the demands and requirements of the different classes of live-stock, but to increase his knowledge of the chemical composition of feeds. With a knowledge of feeding standards and of the composition of feeds a stockman is enabled to combine feeds so that they satisfy the needs of animals, or, in other words, to feed a balanced ration. This is the first and a most fundamental principle of feeding.

RATIONS FOR DIFFERENT CLASSES OF LIVESTOCK

Ration for Draft Horses.—As an average for draft horses at moderate work, a good plan to follow is to feed 1 lb. of grain and $1\frac{1}{4}$ lb. of hay per day per 100 lb. of live weight of the horse. At this rate, a 1,600-lb. horse would receive 16 lb. of grain and 20 lb. of hay per day. If the work is severe, the quantity of grain should be increased to $1\frac{1}{4}$ lb. or more per 100 lb. of live weight of the horse, but should not exceed 11-3 lb. When a heavy grain ration is fed it may be necessary to feed a slightly smaller quantity of hay, but this should not be less than 1 lb. per 100 lb. of live weight; the exact quantity must be determined largely by the individuality and appetite of each horse. When a heavy grain ration is being fed it should be slightly reduced as soon as the work slackens.

The grain ration should be divided into three equal feeds and given morning, noon, and night. The greater part of the hay should be fed to the horses in the evening, as they will then have all night in which to consume and digest it; about one-quarter should be fed in the morning and one-sixth or less at noon, the quantity for each feed depending on the time allowed for the horses to eat.

In selecting the kind of grain for the ration of a draft horse, the feeder should be guided by the kind of hay used and the cheapness of the ration; a larger quantity of corn can be economically and satisfactorily used in a ration with clover or alfalfa hay than with prairie or timothy hay. Also, the ration should contain enough digestible protein to meet the requirements of the horse. A ration consisting of $\frac{1}{2}$ part of corn, 1-3 part of oats, and 1-6 part of bran, by weight, and a mixture of timothy and alfalfa or clover hay, or of prairie hay and alfalfa or clover, will give satisfactory results. For a 1,600-lb. horse at moderate work, a ration of this proportion would be as follows:

	Pounds
Corn	8
Oats	$5\frac{1}{3}$
Bran	$2\frac{2}{3}$
Timothy or prairie hay.....	10
Clover or alfalfa hay.....	10

Rations for Driving and Saddle Horses.—An ample ration for a driving or a saddle horse at severe work is 1 lb. of good hay and $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of grain per 100 lb. of live weight of the animal. At this rate a 1,200-lb. horse would receive 12 lb. of hay and 16 lb. of grain per day. Most of the hay should be fed at night and but little given in the morning before the horse is put at work. The grain should be divided into three equal parts and given morning, noon, and night.

For extremely severe work, such as racing, less hay should be given than for common road work; most of the nutrients should be supplied by grain, oats being best. About $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of hay per 100 lb. of live weight of the animal should be given, most of it being fed at the evening feed.

Ration for Pregnant Mares.—A good grain ration for a mare that is just past the seventh month of pregnancy and is being worked is as follows: Ground oats, by weight, 4 parts; corn, 2 parts; wheat bran, 2 parts; alfalfa or clover hay, $1\frac{1}{4}$ lb. per 100 lb. of live weight.

Rations for Mares After Parturition.—For about 3 days after foaling, mares should have a light grain feed of oats and bran, and good clean hay, preferably clover or alfalfa. The ration should be light, as a colt does not need a large supply of milk the first few days of its life. If, at the end of 3 to 4 days the mare and foal are in good condition, the ration should be gradually increased in order to stimulate the flow of milk.

A mare that is working and suckling a foal requires a little heavier ration than is usually prescribed for work horses, owing to the fact that she is producing milk in addition to supplying energy for work. The ration should be a highly nutritious one that will produce a good flow of milk; for this purpose good alfalfa or clover hay fed in conjunction with corn and oats is desirable. If good alfalfa or clover hay is not available, some linseed meal or cottonseed meal should be added to the ration. Ordinarily, 1½ lb. of grain and 1¼ lb. of hay per 100 lb. of live weight will be sufficient, although it may be necessary to increase the grain to 1½ lb. per 100 lb. of live weight if the mare shows signs of getting in poor condition. When such a grain ration is fed it is a good plan to mix the grain with chopped hay in order to prevent any serious digestive disturbances.

Ration for Stallions.—The sexual tax on a stallion during the breeding season makes it necessary that he be fed a highly nitrogenous ration, as the principal part of the seminal fluid is composed of albuminous matter. During this time there is nothing better to feed than good clover or alfalfa hay, with oats and bran and a very little corn. A grain ration composed of 2 parts of oats, 1 part of corn, and 1 part of bran, by weight, combined with a roughage ration of 1 part of alfalfa hay and 1 part of timothy or prairie hay will give satisfactory results. Because of the low protein content of corn, a large quantity should not be fed. During the breeding season a stallion requires about the same quantity of feed as horses at hard work.

Rations for Dairy Cattle.—The efficiency of the dairy cow depends to a large extent on the feeding of a ration adapted to the production of milk and butter fat. The following rations are offered as suggestions to be modified to suit individual conditions. With these rations as a guide, a dairyman can easily make up from the feedstuffs he has available an economical and satisfactory ration for the cows of his herd.

Rations for the Fattening of Cattle.—

The following are examples of satisfactory daily rations for the fattening of cattle under corn-belt conditions:

Rations for Unweaned Pigs.—During the time pigs are running with their mothers they should have a rather narrow grain ration. The following materials mixed in the proportion given have been found by experience to be well suited for suckling pigs:

	Parts
Corn meal	2
Wheat middlings	7
Tankage	1
Skim-milk	30

These materials are mixed together to form a medium thick slop, and are fed soon after being mixed. Of this mixture the pigs are fed just what they will clean up with a relish. No feed should be left in the troughs to become sour. If skim-milk cannot be procured, pure, fresh water may be substituted.

Rations for Pigs After Weaning.—

After weaning the pigs, the first ration given may be continued until they reach an age of about 4 mo. From the fourth to the sixth month, the following proportions may be used:

	Parts
Corn meal	5
Wheat middlings	4
Tankage	1
Skim-milk	30

From 6 mo. up to the time the pigs are marketed, the following proportions are used:

	Parts
Corn meal	4
Tankage	1

This mixture is either fed dry or made into a thick mush by the addition of skim-milk, whey, or water. If fed dry, an abundance of pure, fresh water should be placed where the pigs can get it at will.

Other mixtures that will give about the same proportion of nutrients may be substituted for the preceding rations. Hogs welcome a variety in food as well as do other animals.

Succulent Feed for Fattening Hogs.

—In addition to rations given in the preceding paragraphs, young pigs need some kind of succulent feed. In summer this succulent feed can best be derived from pasture. Animals running on pasture require less attention from their caretakers than do animals that are being fed in a lot, for the reason that they gather a large part of their feed themselves. The exercise that the pigs get in searching for food in a pasture tends to give them a good appetite and to keep them healthy.

Rations for Bacon Hogs.—Rations for producing bacon hogs should be somewhat narrower than those required for fat hogs. In the corn belt, bacon hogs for the first month or two after birth should be fed about the same ration as that given for unweaned pigs of the lard type. The finishing ration, however, should be different from that for fat hogs. A mixture of corn, other grains, mill feed, tankage, skim-milk, and pasture crops makes a satisfactory ration for bacon pigs. Corn should not, however, form more than one-third of the concentrated part of the ration. Outside of the corn belt where barley, peas, and oats are grown, these grains mixed with shorts, middlings, tankage, and skim-milk give good results. For summer, alfalfa, clover, or some other pasture for the production of green forage is desirable. If the hogs are kept and fed during winter, mangel wurzels, sugar beets, or turnips may form the succulent part of the ration.

Rations for Herd Boars.—The boar or boars of a breeding herd of swine should be placed in pastures or lots by themselves, where they will have plenty of room in which to exercise, as this has a tendency to keep their appetite vigorous. They should be supplied with abundant water, and it is well to have a quantity of charcoal available. The feed for aged animals should consist of a slop composed of a mixture of different ground grains and mill feeds, enough only being fed to the animals to keep them in fair flesh. A ration that has been found satisfactory consists of the following:

Parts
Ground oats	2
Corn meal	1
Wheat middlings	1

For each mess, a small quantity of salt and a handful of linseed meal may be added to this ration, and these should be mixed together with sweet skim-milk to form a slop. Only as much of this mixture as the boar will eat with a relish should be given at one time.

Young boars during their first half year should be given enough of a ration consisting of mixed mill feed and grain to keep them in rapid growth. This means that the quantity given at a meal should be all that they will eat with a relish.

Rations for Brood Sows.—The feed for a brood sow should be similar to that recommended for young pigs. The following combination for the concentrated part of the ration has been found to be satisfactory:

Parts
Corn meal.....	5
Middlings or ground oats.....	5
Tankage	1

This ration may be fed either dry or mixed with water. If the sows are being fed during the winter, some bulky feed should be added to the above list. Well-cured alfalfa or clover hay will prove to be a good feed. If such hay cannot be procured, sugar beets or mangel wurzels may be used. In the absence of all these, sorghum cane that has been cut when ripe and placed where it is protected from frost will answer.

A brood sow carrying a litter during the summer should be placed on good alfalfa or clover pasture. She will then require no other bulky feed than that which she can gather. The preceding mixed ration may be fed to the sow if it is easily procurable, but if the pasture is an exceedingly good one, ear corn alone will answer as the grain part of the ration.

DISEASES OF FARM LIVESTOCK

(From I. C. S. Farmers' Handbook by Permission I. C. Schools)

Any departure from a condition of health in an animal constitutes a diseased condition. In some cases the departure may be so slight and so unimportant as to be of no particular significance. On the other hand, the disturbance may be severe and the condition of the animal so serious that medical or surgical aid is necessary. Some of the more common of the derangements that may require medical aid are described herewith and such treatment suggested as it is practicable for one not skilled in veterinary science to undertake. The treatment of certain complex diseases and certain diseases that are likely to become epidemic and may spread to mankind are matters that should not be left to unskilled hands, for the situation is one that may involve even more than a heavy loss to the owner and to the community. In the case of some diseases lack of proper measures may even result in loss of human life. For these reasons it is always advisable, when there is reason to suspect that a dangerous transmissible disease has broken out, to call a qualified veterinarian. In many states, a state veterinarian is employed and, if notified, he will visit suspected premises or send a deputy to make an inspection, the expense being borne by the state. Every stock owner will do well to post himself as to the provisions made by his own state in this particular, and take steps to make use of any suggestions or assistance that may be available from the state veterinarian's office. Frequently leaders of bulletins are issued by these offices, and these publications may afford timely warning on matters that are of the most absorbing interest to the owner and breeder of livestock.

TRANSMISSIBLE DISEASES

Infectious diseases and contagious diseases, as the terms are usually applied, are those that are transmissible from one animal to another of the same species, and sometimes to those of another species. A contagious disease is one that requires immediate contact of healthy animals with diseased animals, or with their excretions, before transmission can take place. This is due to the fact that the casual agent of the disease, usually a bacterium or an animal parasite, cannot exist for an appreciable time outside of or away from its host. Consequently, there is little danger of a healthy animal acquiring a contagious disease unless it comes close enough to one affected with the malady to permit the direct passage of the germs to the unaffected individual. An infectious disease is one that does not require close contact in order for transmission to take place, as the casual agents of infectious diseases are able to exist independently outside of the host. Hence, infection from such a disease, spread on the ground, on feed, in water, or in the air may remain virulent for a considerable, and in some cases, an indefinite time, and animals coming in contact with it during this time may contract the disease. This, briefly, is the common distinction between infectious and contagious diseases, but it should be understood that there is no absolutely sharp line of demarcation between the two. Some diseases partake of the nature of both infectious and contagious disorders, hence, there is a tendency among pathologists to discontinue the use of these terms and refer to all the diseases included in the two groups as transmissible diseases.

Mange, or scabies, is an example of a contagious disease. It is caused by a minute animal parasite, which, although it may live for a short time away from the body of its host, is not capable of reproducing under such conditions and consequently cannot exist indefinitely. Healthy animals may contract mange by coming in contact with affected animals, by being confined in quarters or pastures, but recently occupied by affected animals, by the use of blankets, harness, etc., recently used on affected animals, or in fact in any way that permits the living parasite to be transferred during its life cycle. If, however, sufficient time elapses between the use of these quarters, or articles, by infected animals and their occupation by or coming in contact with healthy animals the disease will not be transmitted, because the parasites will have been unable to maintain themselves during this time away from the host.

Blackleg may be cited as an example of an infectious disease. It is caused by a germ or bacterium capable of maintaining itself for an indefinite time outside of the body of the host. Hence, pastures, quarters, etc., when once infected with the germs of blackleg, are likely to harbor the infection for many years. From the above it is obvious that contagious diseases are much more easily controlled and exterminated than are infectious diseases.

NON-TRANSMISSIBLE DISEASES

Under the heading of non-transmissible diseases may be grouped the numerous disorders that are not due to a specific organism. Certain forms of indigestion, for example, are due to errors of diet rather than to any specific germ or animal parasite; some skin diseases are not due to parasites, and some diseases of the heart and of the respiratory organs are not traceable to such causes.

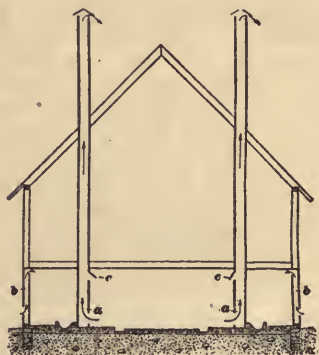

SANITARY MEASURES

The maintenance of good sanitary conditions about livestock quarters is of the greatest importance not only in the treatment of animal diseases, but also in their prevention. Although it is not true, as some suppose, that dirt and filth generate disease, it is true that most disease-producing organisms find an ideal breeding ground under such conditions.

Light.—One of the most important steps in making buildings sanitary is a provision for an abundance of light. Direct sunlight is destructive to most disease germs, and buildings should be so placed and designed as to admit a maximum amount. Parts of livestock quarters that do not get direct sunlight should get an abundance of diffused light. Well-lighted interiors are conducive to the contentment of animals and greatly simplify the routine work of feeding, grooming and cleaning the building, for accumulations of dirt and dust are quickly noticed and easily removed.

Ventilation.—Barns that are enclosed on all sides require some provision for ventilation. No domestic animal can be confined in an enclosed space that is not adequately ventilated without some bad effects from it. As a rule, quarters for hogs, sheep, beef cattle, and some other animals are somewhat loosely constructed, or consist of sheds rather than enclosed barns; in such cases it is not advisable or necessary to install an extensive system of ventilation, but if a building is of such a nature as not to admit of good natural ventilation, some means of supplying fresh air and of removing foul air should be provided. The King system of ventilating barns is by far the most practical and satisfactory one in use. By this system, fresh air is admitted to the interior of the barn at a point near the ceiling and foul air passes out through flues that open near the floor. The accompanying illustration shows a diagram of a barn ventilated by the King system. Foul-air flues and the openings into them near the floor line are seen at a. Fresh air inlets are shown at b, and at c are auxiliary openings into the foul-air flues. The latter openings are to be kept closed except when the temperature of the barn becomes too high, at which time they may be opened to permit warm air near the ceiling to escape.

Disinfection.—Although the sanitary measures already described go a long way toward protecting animals from the ravages of disease-producing organisms, it is nevertheless, advisable and often absolutely necessary to make use of chemical disinfectants as a means of destroying these organisms. Successful stock raisers commonly make it a rule to apply a disinfectant about animal quarters at fixed intervals regardless of whether or not disease is prevalent. Such a course is to be commended, for it tends to prevent the unrestricted multiplication of injurious organisms and may forestall a serious outbreak of disease.

Some of the most commonly-used disinfectants are carbolic acid, corrosive sublimate, formaldehyde, and the coal-tar dips. A brief description of these will be found under their respective names in the discussion of common medicines.

Disinfection, to be effective, must be thorough. In fact it is commonly accepted as true that the inefficient and haphazard use of disinfectants may be even worse than no application, because it is likely to give a false sense of security and also to have the effect of satisfying legal requirements with reference to disinfection, but in reality leaving the danger still present. In stables, sheds, barns, etc., that are to be disinfected, all movable fixtures should be taken out in order that the disinfectant may reach every accessible part of the structure. If wooden floors are in use and they are decaying and broken, it is advisable to remove them also, for beneath them there is sure to be an accumulation of dirt and filth that is favorable to the growth of disease germs. After the interior of the building has been exposed as far as possible by the removal of fixtures, etc., the disinfecting solution should be sprayed on all parts. If a suitable spray pump is not available, scrubbing with a broom, brush, or mop will accomplish practically the same results, and even if spraying is resorted to, the scrubbing process should be applied to walls, floors, etc., where there are accumulations of refuse material.

All fixtures should be treated with the disinfectant before being returned to the structure, or if they are old and racked a better plan is to install new ones. A concrete floor is one of the most valuable aids in maintaining sanitary conditions, and should be substituted for wooden floors whenever possible.

In rare cases, the use of a gaseous disinfectant such as formaldehyde gas or sulphur dioxide, may be practicable, but in most cases livestock quarters are not sufficiently close to permit of the use of these agents. Hence, liquid disinfectants are almost universally used for this purpose.

DIAGNOSIS OF DISEASES

The Pulse.—The pulse is one of the most important aids in the diagnosis of disease, because it serves to indicate the action of the heart and also is, to some extent, an indication of the condition of the nervous system. The pulse-rate, or the number of beats per minute, is about as follows in different domestic animals: Horse, 30 to 40 beats per min.; cow, 40 to 50 beats per min.; sheep, 70 to 80 beats per min.; swine, 70 to 80 beats per min.

Owing to the fact that there is a considerable variation in domestic animals, even though they may be in perfect health, and the further fact that experience is necessary in order to make a correct interpretation of pulse, it is not likely that the man unskilled in veterinary science will be able to diagnose diseases by taking the pulse. Nevertheless, it will be of some assistance, when taken in connection with other diagnostic indications that are discussed in following paragraphs.

Temperature.—The following figures indicate the range of temperatures of various animals under normal conditions: Horses, 100° to 101°; cattle, 100° to 103°; sheep, 101° to 104°; swine, 102° to 104°.

Temperatures of domestic animals are best taken by means of a special thermometer known as a clinical thermometer, which may be purchased from any druggist. A considerable rise or fall of temperature, from the figures given, may be taken as an indication of a diseased condition. In general, veterinarians consider that a rise of 6° or more denotes a serious condition, and any considerable fall below normal almost always signifies approaching death. It must be understood, however, that local conditions may operate to bring about considerable variations in temperature, and all readings of the thermometer should be considered in connection with them. For example, excitement, heat, or œstrum, hot weather, and other factors may cause considerable rise of temperature. Cool weather, large quantities of cold water or cold feed taken into the body, and some other factors may cause a reduction of temperature; hence, if at any time the thermometer indicates a considerable departure from normal temperature, an investigation should be made to determine whether it is due to any of these causes.

Respiration.—The rate of breathing and the sounds heard during the process often afford aid in diagnosing disease. Rapid breathing may be due to disease and often constitutes a symptom of the disorders of the respiratory organs. However, it may also be occasioned by extreme heat, excitement, violent exercise, or other factors. Hence, as in preceding cases, it is important that the subject be considered in connection with the conditions that may have influenced it.

Mucous Membranes.—Ordinarily, mucous membranes, as seen in the mouth, nostrils, and other openings into the body have a characteristic pink color that is indicative of health. A diseased condition usually brings about more or less change in the appearance of these membranes. A flushed, congested condition indicates a general inflammation of the tissues, while a lack of proper color or paleness is taken as an indication of debility, anemia, or insufficient nutrition.

COMMON MEDICINES

The information presented here is offered merely as a suggestion of what may be done in certain cases and is not to be considered as specific directions for treatment nor is responsibility assumed by the publishers for cases in which favorable results are not forthcoming. The action of all medicines is relative, as is also the dosage of the same, and hence no attempt is made to lay down fixed rules.

Anesthetics.—The term anesthetic is applied to medicinal agents that are used for producing insensibility during periods of pain, or when an operation is being performed. Some of the anesthetics used in veterinary practice are cocaine, chloroform, and ether, but it is scarcely advisable for a layman to administer them. Carbolic acid has a distinct anesthetic action when applied to the skin, and is sometimes applied locally for this purpose.

Anodynes.—Remedies that are used to relieve pain are called anodynes. The following are medicines of this class: Cocaine, menthol, tar, carbolic acid, belladonna, etc. These are used for external applications. Internally, opium, chloral hydrate, and turpentine are often given. Morphine is used by veterinarians for hypodermic injections.

Antispasmodics.—Antispasmodics are agents that relieve spasms for cramps. Hot and cold applications, friction, liniments, counter irritation, and bleeding are frequently resorted to. The agents enumerated under anodynes are frequently used internally as antispasmodics.

Astringents.—Astringents are used to check bleeding, to reduce secretions, and to cause tissues to contract and condense. Chalk, alum, turpentine, boric acid, common salt, and iodoform are some common agents of this class.

Blisters.—Blisters are Commonly spoken of as vessicants and counter irritants. Some blisters merely cause redness and a slight irritation; others are so powerful that they actually burn the flesh with which they come in contact.

Mustard, and tincture of iodine are examples of mild blisters; butter of antimony, lunar caustic, and caustic potash are examples of severe blisters.

ADMINISTRATION OF MEDICINES

In most cases medicines are either administered to domestic animals through the mouth or are applied externally. Veterinarians occasionally resort to hypodermic injections, using for this purpose a syringe having a hollow needle. The procedure is often of value when immediate results are desired, or when on account of paralysis or other cause the animal is unable to swallow. It is also useful as a means of getting a drug into a specific locality in which it is required, as, for instance, the injecting of cocaine into the flesh previous to operations, or the injecting of vermicides into the windpipe to destroy worms. In addition to these methods of administration, some drugs are volatilized and animals permitted to inhale them.

Dosage.—The doses suggested in the following list of medicinal agents are those calculated to be given to adult animals. To small animals or to animals much weakened by disease or other causes reduced doses should be given. It should be noted that ruminants, that is, animals that chew the cud, such as cattle and sheep, will take larger doses than will horses and swine. This is due to the fact that ruminants have four stomachs, and consequently a more extensive digestive system.

The dosage of a solid medicament is usually given in apothecaries' weight. The tables of apothecaries' weight and fluid measures given later on will be of assistance in this connection.

LIST OF COMMON MEDICINES

Acetic acid: Occasionally applied externally for the removal of warts and abnormal growths.

Aconite, Tincture of: Frequently administered by veterinarians for fevers or inflammations. It is a powerful drug and should be avoided in case an animal is suffering from a weak heart or disturbance of the circulatory system. Dose, horses 10 to 20 drops; cattle 20 to 30 drops; sheep, 10 drops; swine, 1 to 5 drops. External applications of this drug are sometimes made to relieve pain, but should be used sparingly.

Aloes: Extensively used as a purgative for horses. Dose, 5 to 8 drams. Should be administered in a ball or bolus, which may be procured from a druggist.

Ammonia water: Frequently given as a drench in case of acute indigestion, colic, bloating, and is also used as a stimulant. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; cattle, 1 oz.; sheep, 2 drams; swine, $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 dram. In all cases to be diluted with water.

Arnica, Tincture of: Is useful to promote sweating and reduce fever. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 oz.; cattle, 1 oz.; sheep, 2 drams; swine, $\frac{1}{2}$ dram. Applied externally, tincture of arnica is useful in sprains, bruises, etc.

Arsenic, Fowler's solution of: Extensively used by veterinarians as a tonic for animals that are depleted in condition, also used in the treatment of heaves of horses. Dose, horses, 2 to 4 drams; cattle, 4 to 6 drams; sheep and pigs, 5 to 20 drops.

Belladonna, Fluid extract of: In cases of fever, colic, tetanus (lockjaw), it is believed to be a valuable agent. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ dram; cattle, 1 dram; sheep, 20 drops; swine, 3 drops.

Blue vitriol (copper sulphate): Used in the treatment of foot rot in sheep, also for application to wounds, on which it acts as an antiseptic and astringent. A solution of 1 oz. to 1 pt. of water is usually employed, but in severe cases a stronger solution may be applied.

Boric acid: A solution of 20 grains of boric acid to 1 oz. of water is useful in the treatment of sore or inflamed eyes, mouth, nostrils, etc. Such a solution is practically non-poisonous, yet it has considerable merit as a germicide and astringent.

Butter of antimony: A caustic used in the treatment of old sores, wire cuts, etc., in which proud flesh has formed. The material is applied undiluted by means of a swab. Must be handled with care and is never administered internally.

Carbolic acid: Crude carbolic acid in a 5% solution is a suitable disinfectant for use about barns, stables, pens, and for other purposes. May be applied with a sprayer or by scrubbing the surface with a broom or brush.

Pure carbolic acid (not crude), diluted with 30 parts of water is useful in the treatment of wounds, sores, scratches, etc., and is one of the most generally used disinfectants in veterinary medicine. The solution given is efficient for sterilizing instruments, which should be immersed in it for five minutes. Both the products mentioned are extremely poisonous, and their careless use or storage is frequently the cause of fatal accidents. It is, therefore, advisable to keep them in a compartment under lock and key, and take careful steps to prevent persons not familiar with their qualities from having access to them.

Calomel: An extensively used purgative and vermifuge. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 dram; cattle, 1 to 2 drams; sheep, or swine, 5 to 20 grains.

Castor oil: Purgative. Dose, horses, 1 to 2 pt.; sheep, 4 oz.; swine, 2 oz.

Copperas (sulphate of iron): A valuable tonic and very often one of the constituents of condition powders. Useful for checking scours in pigs or calves. Dose, horses, 1 dram; cattle, 2 drams; sheep, 20 grains; swine, 10 grains.

Corrosive sublimate (bichloride of mercury): A powerful disinfectant and very poisonous. For external use only. Corrosive sublimate 1 part in 1,000 parts of water makes a solution that is suitable for use about livestock quarters, also for cleansing wounds and disinfecting prior to operations. It attacks metals, consequently should not be used on instruments or in any place where it will come in contact with metal surfaces.

Coal-tar dips: A general class of proprietary disinfectant and insecticidal solutions that are on the market under different trade names. They are extensively used as dipping and disinfecting solutions for sheep, swine, and cattle, and if they bear the label of reputable manufacturers may be depended on for destroying skin parasites, when used according to directions. They are also useful for dressing cuts, scratches, surgical wounds, etc. They have the advantage of being practically non-poisonous, hence are much safer to use than carbolic acid or corrosive sublimate, and if of good quality they are undoubtedly just as efficient as disinfectants.

Epsom salts: Purgative. Useful for cattle and sheep, but not much used for horses. Doses, cattle, 1 to $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb.; sheep, 2 to 4 oz.

Gentian root: Powdered gentian root is one of the most common ingredients of condition powders, and it has considerable merit as a bitter tonic. Dose, horses, 2 drams; cattle, 4 drams; sheep, 1 dram.

Iodine, Tincture of: Used externally to paint surfaces where a counter irritant is required; also in the treatment of skin diseases, such as ringworm. Application may be made once daily until the area becomes sore, when it should be discontinued for a time.

Jamaica ginger: Useful in many cases of intestinal disorders. Should be given in milk. Dose, horses, 1 oz.; cattle, 2 oz.; sheep, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; calves and foals, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.

Kerosene and gasoline: Sometimes given internally for stomach worms. Lambs will take from 1 to 2 drams, larger animals a proportionate amount.

Laudanum: Given internally for the relief of acute pain such as it often present in colic; also useful in severe cases of intestinal disorders. Dose, horses, 1 oz.; cattle, 1 to 2 oz.; sheep, 2 drams; swine, 5 to 20 drops.

Lime water: Frequently given to young animals in case of diarrhea. Should be diluted with milk, using about 2 parts of milk to 1 part of lime water.

Linseed oil, raw: Extensively used as a purgative, also as a diluent for mixing drugs that are too strong to be given undiluted. For purgative effects, 1 to 2 pt. may be given to horses; cattle, 2 to 3 pt.; sheep, $\frac{1}{2}$ pt.

Quinine: A stimulant and bitter tonic. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 dram; cattle, 2 to 4 drams; sheep, $\frac{1}{2}$ dram; swine, 10 grains.

Salt-peter (nitrate of potash): A favorite remedy for the treatment of kidney disorders, also useful in fevers. Dose, horses, 1 oz.; cattle, 1 to $1\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; sheep, 2 drams.

Spirits of camphor: Will often afford relief from pain in colic. Useful in cases of dyspepsia and sometimes in respiratory troubles, coughs, and colds. Should be given in water. Dose, horses, 2 to 4 drams; cattle, 1 oz.; sheep, 2 drams; swine, 10 to 20 drops.

Sulphur: It is a common belief that feeding sulphur will tend to destroy skin parasites, but there is little evidence to support this belief. Dry sulphur dusted into the hair will often accomplish this result. Burning sulphur in a tight enclosure is useful in the treatment of hoose, or verminous bronchitis.

Turpentine: A standard remedy for colic. Useful in cases of bloating and for the destruction of intestinal parasites. Should be given in linseed oil or in milk. Dose, horses, $\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 oz.; cattle, 2 to 3 oz.; sheep, 1 to 3 drams; swine, 1 dram. Turpentine is extensively used in compounding liniments.

Whiskey: A stimulant that is valuable in cases that require such treatment, as for example, sunstroke, chills, general depressions, or collapse. Dose, horses and cattle, 2 to 4 oz.; sheep and swine, 1 to 2 oz.

COMMON DISEASES

Abortion.—Contagious abortion, due to a specific germ, is somewhat common in cows, ewes, and mares. Cases should be at once isolated from other animals and the fetus and fetal membranes burned, as they are likely to spread the disease. Disinfect quarters occupied by these animals and douche the womb with a 1% solution of coal-tar dip or a 2% solution of carbolic acid. Repeat douche daily and do not breed until all vaginal discharge ceases. A male may become infected by serving affected females, hence care must be used in selecting a sire.

If accidental abortion, due to injury, overwork, or undue excitement, is threatened, give the patient rest, quiet, and, if necessary, small doses of laudanum.

Abscesses.—For an abscess, as a rule, a hot poultice is advisable until the abscess softens and pus collects. The abscess should then be opened and thoroughly cleaned with an antiseptic solution, such as carbolic acid. Repeat the cleansing daily or oftener if necessary. Apply lard or vaseline to the skin and hair about the abscess.

Actinomycosis.—Actinomycosis, or lump jaw, affects chiefly young cattle.

It is due to a fungus that is usually taken in with feed. If the tumor is external it may be removed and the wound painted with tincture of iodine. Internally, give large doses of potassium iodine—some authorities recommend 3 drams daily until symptoms of poisoning are seen, when the dose should be reduced to 1 or $1\frac{1}{2}$ drams or discontinued if necessary.

Anthrax, or Charbon.—Anthrax, or charbon, affects horses, cattle, and sheep and is transmissible to man. It is a dangerous disease, for which there is no satisfactory treatment. Affected animals should be destroyed and the carcasses burned or buried in quicklime. Premises occupied by such animals should be thoroughly disinfected or abandoned and all discharges from the bodies burned or buried with the carcasses. The utmost care should be observed in this work, since the disease is extremely infectious and usually fatal in man. A vaccine that is somewhat successful in rendering animals immune to the disease may be purchased from druggists.

Azoturia.—Azoturia is a disease that affects horses, particularly work horses, after a short period of idleness on full feed; it is often called Monday-morning-sickness because of the frequent cases that develop after the animals have rested over Sunday on full feed. Treatment should consist of supporting the animal in slings if it is paralyzed, administering a purgative, and applying hot blankets. A qualified veterinarian should be called to administer hypodermic injections and give other necessary treatment. Light succulent feed should be given until recovery is complete.

Barrenness, or Sterility.—Barrenness, or sterility, may affect breeding animals of any species. Reduction of flesh by restriction of diet and giving abundant exercise may correct the condition in overfat animals. Tonics and a liberal ration containing an abundance of nitrogenous feed should be given in the case of depleted animals. Barrenness in cows is sometimes corrected by injecting into the vagina a quart of warm water in which a cake of ordinary compressed yeast has been dissolved. The yeast should be dissolved a few hours before injection and the treatment repeated daily for 3 or 4 days. Some cases of sterility are due to causes that require surgical aid, in which emergency the services of a veterinarian are required.

Blackleg.—Blackleg is known also as black quarter, and as symptomatic anthrax, the latter term being applied for the reason that the disease somewhat resembles anthrax, but it should be understood that the two are distinct. Blackleg affects chiefly young cattle and its ravages are most pronounced among those that are fat and thrifty. It is almost always fatal and no treatment is satisfactory. Cases should be destroyed and the carcasses treated as directed for anthrax cases. Vaccination with a protective vaccine that any stockman can administer is very successful in preventing the disease. Vaccine may be had in pill form at any drug store.

Cerebrospinal Meningitis.—Cerebrospinal meningitis is sometimes epidemic among horses and sheep. A layman can scarcely undertake treatment. If possible, a veterinarian who is familiar with the disease should be called.

Choking.—If an animal is choked the first efforts should be directed toward returning the obstruction to the mouth. If this is not successful, olive oil or castor oil should be given to lubricate the passage and thus aid in passing the obstruction to the stomach. Sometimes gentle massage of the exterior of the esophagus will assist in this. In some cases a piece of garden hose may be used to force the obstruction down, but great care is necessary or rupture of the gullet may result. In cattle severe bloating may follow a case of choking, in which case tapping the paunch as directed for hoven may be necessary. A surgeon may be able to open the esophagus by an operation and remove the body.

Colic.—Colic is an extremely common disorder among horses. It is difficult to give specific directions for treatment, as there are various forms of the disease, due to different causes, and a treatment that is suitable for one is often entirely unsuitable for another. Good authorities recognize the following forms of colic: Engorgement colic, obstruction colic, tympanitic colic, spasmodic colic, and worm colic. Horse owners will do well to familiarize themselves with the different forms of colic and from this knowledge there will follow an ability to avoid many cases and to give simple treatment when a case makes its appearance. It is obvious that a satisfactory discussion of the causes, symptoms, and treatment of these various colics cannot be given here.

Constipation.—Many cases can be benefited if not cured by giving laxative feed; abundant exercise, and good care. Purgatives are often necessary, in which case aloes are usually given to horses and Epsom salts to cattle. Linseed oil or castor oil are often useful. It should be the aim to correct the condition that causes constipation; probably in most cases it will be found to be improper feeding.

Cough.—As a rule, cough should be regarded as a symptom of a disease rather than as a disease in itself. One of the first steps in treatment is to provide dry, comfortable, well-ventilated quarters. Turpentine, mustard, and other mild counter irritants applied to the skin of the neck and chest are often of service. Equine cough syrup containing agents that tend to relieve the irritation may be procured from druggists. Opium or heroin are sometimes administered to veterinarians in cases of violent or spasmodic cough.

Eczema.—Eczema is, in most cases, due to improper feeding, hence the first step toward treatment should be directed to the correction of this condition. A laxative should be given and the affected skin may be washed with tar soap and oxide-of-zinc ointment of ichthyl applied.

Farcy.—See Glanders.

Foot-and-Mouth Disease.—Foot-and-mouth disease affects cattle, sheep, swine, and goats. It is extremely infectious and no satisfactory treatment is known, hence immediate destruction of affected animals is recommended. The disease is rare in the United States and Canada, but occasional outbreaks occur, probably resulting from the importation of in-fectured animals from foreign countries. Thorough disinfection of premises occupied by diseased animals is necessary and it is advisable to leave such quarters vacant for several months before placing healthy animals in them.

Foot Rot.—Foot rot is an infectious disease of sheep. Affected animals should be isolated and unaffected ones removed from pastures that may be infected. All affected animals should be compelled to stand for a few moments each day in a shallow tank or trough containing blue vitriol solution, or a 2% solution of coal-tar dip. In advanced cases, individual treatment should be given by removing diseased horn and applying pure carbolic acid or the latter mixed with 10 to 15 parts of glycerine, after which a bandage moistened with disinfectant solution should be applied.

Founder.—For founder, hot foot-baths and poultices of thermofuge or antiphlogistine are a favorite treatment. If the animal is shod, the shoes should be removed and a clean, dry, well-bedded box stall provided. Bleeding and blistering are frequently practiced by veterinarians. In acute cases it may be advisable to cast the animal or place it in slings. Proper shoeing will often benefit chronic cases.

Foul in Foot.—The disease known as foul in foot is usually seen in cattle and is often due to animals being confined in wet, filthy quarters. A correction of this condition and the application of the remedies suggested for foot rot in sheep will usually bring about a cure.

Galls.—Galls are usually due to poor fitting of harnesses or chafing, and the steps first made should be to remove the cause. Galled surfaces should be cleansed and oxide-of-zinc ointment applied. Alum dusting powders are also often effective.

Garget.—As a treatment for garget the udder should be milked dry and massaged. Cloths wrung out of hot water or applications of camphor ointment procurable from any druggist are useful. In acute cases it may be well to support the udder by means of a wide bandage around the hips of the animal. Some forms of garget are believed to be contagious, hence it is well to isolate all cases.

Gid.—Gid is a parasite disease of sheep, often spoken of as grub in the head. The only treatment consists of trephining the skull and removing the parasites, but the operation requires special instruments and skill in their use. Preventive measures such as avoiding infected pastures and destroying the heads of sheep that die of the disease are more satisfactory.

Glanders, or Farcy.—Glanders, or farcy, is an extremely contagious and practically incurable disease of horses, mules, and asses. Affected animals should be destroyed and premises carefully disinfected. The disease is transmissible to man, hence the work of destroying animals and disinfection should be done with great care.

Grease.—Grease, sometimes called grease heels or scratches, is a form of eczema affecting horses' heels. Some cases are believed to be due to filth or skin abrasions. The treatment suggested under eczema is often beneficial in early stages. The affected area should be clipped, cleansed, and a hot poultice applied. Carbolic acid and glycerine may then be applied as directed under eczema, the part bandaged, and the animal kept in a dry, clean stall well supplied with bedding.

Heaves.—Heaves are not curable but may be alleviated by moistening all grain or hay fed. An affected animal should not be watered immediately before exercise or work. Arsenic, iron, and strychnine are often given, but should be prescribed by a veterinarian.

HOG CHOLERA

(By courtesy of Great Western Serum Co.)

Hog Cholera is an acute febrile disease which affects only hogs, and which is characterized by extreme contagiousness and a very high death rate. The disease is found in practically all parts of the world, and is especially prevalent in the large hog-raising districts of the United States. The first recorded outbreak in this country occurred in the year 1833 in the State of Ohio. From the original center of infection the disease has spread to all portions of the United States. The United States Department of Agriculture estimates the losses of swine from cholera totaled $73,000,000 in one year. In one state alone the loss is placed at $4,000,000. While outbreaks occur at all seasons of the year, the great majority take place during the late summer and fall. The mortality from hog cholera is as high as 100 per cent in some herds, while the average is about 88 per cent, and many of the hogs which survive being weakened and stunted in growth are comparatively worthless, and as a rule are carriers of cholera for months following apparent recovery.

CAUSE OF THE DISEASE

The Germ Which Causes Hog Cholera.—Scientists have not been able to discover the specific germ or microbe which causes hog cholera. It has never been cultivated in laboratories, as has been done with many other infectious germs, and we know of it only by the effects which it produces. The germ is so small, or else of such structure, that it cannot be seen with the strongest microscopes available.

Predisposing Causes.—While hog cholera can be started in a herd only by introducing the germ which causes it, there are many factors which may render a herd more susceptible to the disease. Anything which tends to lower the health of the animals may be regarded as a predisposing cause. Among such predisposing factors there may be mentioned improper feeding, insanitary condition of hog lots, damp or cold or to crowded sleeping quarters, dirty drinking and feeding troughs, etc. Of course insanitary surroundings and poor feed cannot in themselves produce hog cholera, but they lower the vitality of hogs to such an extent that they become comparatively easy victims of any disease producing germs to which they are exposed.

Ways Hog Cholera Reaches a Herd.

—The most dangerous factor in spreading hog cholera is the sick hog and the hog which has apparently recovered from the disease. The germ which causes hog cholera is always present in the bodies of sick hogs, and is thrown off from them in large numbers in the feces and urine, thus contaminating the yards and pens in which sick hogs are kept. Sick hogs may get onto a farm in various ways—by escaping from a neighboring herd, by the purchase of new stock which may show no symptoms of sickness until some days after purchase, by returning show hogs to the herd after visits to fairs or stock shows, by purchase of hogs which have apparently recovered from hog cholera.

In addition to the danger of introducing the infection through the hogs themselves it must be remembered that the germ of the disease may be carried in a minute particle of dirt on the feet of attendants or neighbors who have previously visited farms where hog cholera exists. It may also be carried in this way by dogs, and by crows and other birds. The disease may be carried down stream from herds which are affected above.

After hog cholera has visited a farm, the lots, hog houses, feeding troughs, and implements used for cleaning have naturally become contaminated with the germs of the disease, and if new stock is placed in such yards after these were occupied by sick hogs the new hogs will more than likely contract the disease. Such premises should be restocked only after cleaning and thorough disinfection and then the safest plan is to place thereon only hogs which have been vaccinated against cholera.

SYMPTOMS OF HOG CHOLERA

The beginning of hog cholera in a herd is usually ushered in by sickness appearing in one or two hogs. Soon other hogs are affected and in a very short time all hogs exposed to the contagion are affected. In general the symptoms are sluggishness, disinclination to move, weakness, loss of appetite, a high fever, frequently cough, inflammation of the eyes with gumming of the lids, and there may be diarrhea. In advanced cases purplish blotches appear on the skin, especially on the surface of the abdomen, on the inside of the legs, and around the ears and neck. As a rule the progress of the disease is so rapid that the hog is not greatly emaciated before death; it is, in fact, quite common in acute outbreaks for hogs to die after being sick only a few days. In the chronic type they eat very little and lose flesh rapidly, finally becoming so emaciated and weak that they stagger and walk with an uncertain gait, the hind legs particularly appearing to be very weak. The eyes become inflamed and the lids may be gummed together. After a few days' illness there is usually a profuse diarrhea, and in these cases the hog may, and usually does, linger for several weeks, sometimes months, before it finally dies. It is extremely rare for such an animal to recover its health and vigor sufficiently to become of value to the owner.

PREVENTION AND TREATMENT OF HOG CHOLERA

General Preventive Measures.—It has been shown that in the vast majority of cases the germ of hog cholera is transported mechanically, in the bodies of sick hogs and on the feet of men or animals, including birds. It thus follows that the chances of an outbreak of hog cholera would be greatly lessened, if not completely avoided, if the herd could be safely protected from these carriers of infection. Under average farm conditions this is very difficult, and the best that can be hoped for is the lessening of the opportunity for infection by placing the herd on a part of the farm that will be the least accessible to men or animals from other farms. Hog lots should never be located near public roads if this can be avoided. All newly purchased stock should be kept separate from the main herd for at least thirty days.

In addition to protecting the herd by methods of quarantine, careful attention should be given to the general health of the herd. The hogs should be provided with clean, dry sleeping places, and the lots and feeding troughs should be kept clean. It is well occasionally to scatter slaked lime about the lots and to wash and disinfect the troughs.

After an outbreak of hog cholera the yards and pens should be thoroughly cleaned, all dead hogs should be burned, the litter should be collected and burned, and lime scattered freely over the ground. The sheds and hog houses should be washed and disinfected with three per cent solution of compound cresol (U. S. P.) Feeding troughs that have been used by sick pigs should be burned if made of wood, but if this is not practicable they should be scrubbed clean and thoroughly soaked with cresol solution, the latter being washed out before the troughs are used again.

Prevention by Inoculation.—Careful and persistent attention to general preventive measures, such as quarantine, disinfection, proper feeding, etc., on the part of farmers generally would no doubt result in a material reduction in the yearly losses from hog cholera, and the importance of observing these precautions can not be overestimated. In view of the fact that it is impracticable to enforce general and completely effective measures to protect hogs from the various avenues of cholera infection most hog raisers now keep their hogs immunized against cholera by employing the serum preventive treatment. It should be remembered that the serum treatment is used especially as a preventive, and that little success can be expected in herds which are badly affected with hog cholera. An early application is essential, and farmers should notify their veterinarians immediately upon their hogs' becoming ill, so that they can be treated at once.

Properly prepared serum and virus scientifically administered insures absolute protection against hog cholera. In employing the serum vaccination against hog cholera it is considered highly desirable for the treatment to be applied by competent veterinarians who have had special training in this class of work.

Hoose.—Hoose is a parasitic disease of calves and lambs, caused by worms in the bronchial tubes, hence it is sometimes spoken of as verminous bronchitis. Some cases are successfully treated by confining animals in a tent or a tight room and causing them to inhale sulphur dioxide, generated by burning sulphur on charcoal. There is imminent danger of suffocating the animals if they are kept too long in the gas, hence great care is necessary. In some cases an attendant remains with them and opens doors when he is no longer able to endure the gas. Veterinarians sometimes

WOMAN'S WORLD

"The Magazine of the Country"

EDITED by HIRAM MOE GREENE

Subscription 50 Cents a Year

WOMAN'S WORLD is eminently a magazine for the home and for the family. The high quality of its literary offerings is an outstanding feature. Its stories, chosen with the greatest care, are not only interesting, understandable and entertaining but, better than that, they radiate strength, clean cheer and wholesomeness. Every reading member of the family, from oldest to youngest, turns to the pages of Woman's World with pleasure and profit. Authors of national and international reputation are proud to have their stories appear in Woman's World. Here are the names of a few of the notables who will contribute fiction during 1918.

inject chloroform or turpentine into and one that is particularly adapted to the specific parasite that is causing the trouble may be necessary.

Hoven, or Eloat.—Hoven, or bloat, is very likely to occur in cattle when they are allowed to overfeed, particularly on rank-growing forage such as clover or alfalfa. In early stages of the disease, a wooden bit or gag, retained in the mouth by means of light ropes over the horns will assist in getting rid of the gas that is accumulating in the digestive tract. A handful of salt placed in the mouth back of the gag will often make it more effective. A favorite remedy is 2 oz. of turpentine well diluted with milk or linseed oil. Other remedies are: common baking soda in 2-tablespoonsful doses as a drench, and Jamaica ginger in 3- or 4-oz. doses given as a drench, well diluted with hot water. In acute cases when bloating has become so severe that there is danger of suffocation or rupture of the paunch, tapping should be resorted to. Use a trocar and canula, inserting the instrument about half way between the point of the hip or what is often called the hook bone and the last rib on the left side of the animal and choosing the point where the swelling is most prominent. It is well to first make a hole in the skin with a knife. When the puncture has been effected the trocar is withdrawn and the canula allowed to remain in the opening. A pocket knife may be used if a trocar is not available, but with the former there is danger of making the incision too large.

Intestinal and Stomach Worms.—Intestinal and stomach worms are one of the most common parasitic disorders of domestic animals. Worms in the stomach or intestines interfere with nutrition, cause irritation and spasms, and may give rise to serious complications. Some of the different forms are tapeworms, roundworms, whipworms, threadworms, and pinworms. Common remedies for worms are turpentine, diluted with linseed oil, salt, copperas and santolin. It is always advisable to withhold feed for 24 to 48 hr. previous to giving worm remedies, and shortly after giving the drug a purgative should be administered. In obstinate cases a more specific treatment than can be outlined here

Indigestion.—The usual treatment for indigestion is to give a purgative, followed by Jamaica ginger and a tonic, but special cases often require special treatment. If the indigestion is due to improper feeding, the cause should be obviated by feeding sparingly for a time, or even by withholding feed entirely.

Lice.—Lice are more or less common on all domestic animals. A good coal-tar dip is an efficient lice killer and may usually be depended on to exterminate the parasites if used in accordance with directions furnished by the manufacturer.

Maggots.—Maggots are frequently seen in wounds resulting from dehorning, castrating, and accidents. The treatment is to apply coal-tar dip, kerosene, or turpentine diluted with linseed oil.

Mange.—Mange is a parasitic disease caused by minute animal parasites or mites. It is common in sheep and cattle and is often called scab or scabies; it also affects horses and hogs. Some forms of mange are more resistant to treatment than others. Dipping in a reliable coal-tar dip is the most convenient and satisfactory remedy for small animals. The dip solution does not kill eggs of the mites, hence the dipping should be repeated frequently if it is expected to exterminate the disease. If dipping is not practicable, local treatment with green soap, sulphur ointment, or carbolic acid in glycerine may be applied. The hair should be clipped and scabs softened before application in order to secure the best results. Infected quarters should be thoroughly sprayed with coal-tar dip solution to destroy parasites that may be harbored there.

Milk Fever.—Milk fever affects chiefly dairy cows that are heavy milkers. Purgative of epsom salts may be given early in the disease, but if paralysis has set in, medicine administered by the mouth is likely to cause strangulation. The affected cow should be propped up to a comfortable position with bags of straw, and ice or cold water applied to her head and spine. Oxygen gas injected into the udder is a treatment that is now used very extensively. If oxygen cannot be procured, pumping the udder full of air by means of an ordinary bicycle pump and a milking tube may be resorted to.

Navel Ill.—Navel ill is an infectious disease of the joints. It occurs in foals and sometimes in the young of other animals soon after birth, and is due to the entrance of germs through the naval opening. Prevention consists in keeping the dam in a clean, dry, sanitary stall, and in bandaging the naval of the young as soon as it is dropped. Treatment after a case has developed is seldom successful.

Quarter Crack and Sand Crack.—When a horse is affected with quarter cracks or sand cracks a blacksmith may draw the parts of the hoof together with a carefully fitted shoe, or by means of nails. Tar should be applied to exclude dirt from the crevices.

Rabies.—Rabies affects all animals and is transmissible to man, in the latter case being known as hydrophobia. There is no satisfactory treatment of rabies in animals. On account of the imminent danger of spreading the disease, it is advisable to destroy affected animals at once. However, in case what is thought to be a rabid animal, as a mad dog, is at large in a community and bites animals or persons it is always advisable to preserve the life of the supposedly rabid animal until a diagnosis can be made to determine whether or not rabies is actually present. This precaution is particularly important in case persons are bitten.

Rheumatism.—Rheumatism affects horses, cattle, pigs, and goats. Treatment is not very satisfactory. Clean, dry quarters and good, nourishing feed will go a long way toward preventing the disorder and will often bring about marked improvement in cases already developed. Enlarged, stiffened joints may be rubbed with iodine ointment. Veterinarians are sometimes able to fire and blister affected parts with good results.

Rickets, or Rachitis.—Rickets, or rachitis, is common in young pigs and is believed to be due to improper feeding of the dam. Treatment should be directed toward correcting the diet and providing clean, dry, sanitary quarters. Liquid feeds, such as gruels, are particularly useful.

Ringworm.—Ringworm attacks horses, cattle, sheep, goats, and swine. The disorder is due to a fungus growth. Painting with iodine or a strong solution of coal-tar dip will usually destroy the parasite. Occasionally man requires ringworm from animals, hence due precaution should be taken in treating cases. Animals transmit the disease to animals of the same species, but it is said that cattle seldom acquire it from horses or vice versa. It is always desirable to isolate cases of ringworm and disinfect the quarters they have occupied. Green soap, boracic acid, and turpentine are other remedies that are frequently used.

Scab in Sheep.—See Mange.

Scours.—Scours affects chiefly newly born animals. Linseed oil will often assist in a freeing of the intestinal tract from irritating material. Laudanum is useful to relieve pain. Lime-water is a favorite remedy with many stockmen. See that feed is clean and wholesome and milk pails or troughs are sterilized for each feeding.

Sunstroke.—Apply ice or cold water to the head and along the spine. Bleeding is not advisable. A stimulant such as whiskey is often given in these cases. Many authorities consider it inadvisable to drench animals over the entire body with a hose or by throwing pails of water on them. Many cases of sunstroke in horses may be prevented. During periods of intense heat, provide a head covering and place in this a sponge moistened with cold water. Frequent watering is also a safeguard.

Swine Fever.—See hog cholera.

Tetanus, or Lockjaw.—Tetanus, or lockjaw, is an extremely contagious disease and a dangerous one because of the fact that it is easily transmitted to man. As a general rule, treatment for the disease is useless, although good results have been reported from the use of a serum. When there is reason to suspect that an animal will develop tetanus because of infection from a wound, an immediate use of the same serum, known as antitetanic serum, is successful in preventing the disease in a large majority of cases. A qualified veterinarian should be employed to administer the serum. A wound that is suspected to contain tetanus germs should be open and cleaned out so that every part of it will be exposed to the air, as the germs of tetanus do not thrive under these conditions. Pure carbolic acid may be used to clean the wound.

Texas Fever.—Texas fever is a virulent disease of cattle and one that is very prevalent in the southern part of the United States. It is caused by a minute animal parasite that lives in the body of the Texas fever tick or more properly the splenetic fever tick. Hence, efforts should be made to exterminate the latter pest. The method of immunizing cattle against the disease has been developed and used somewhat extensively. No satisfactory treatment is known, and it is often advisable to destroy affected animals and free the other ones from ticks by dipping or spraying and remove them to new pasture.

Thrush.—Thrush affects the frogs of horses' hoofs. Treatment consists in placing the animals in clean, dry quarters and cleaning the foot and applying a healing powder such as calomel and iodoform, equal parts. In some cases it may be necessary to cauterize the affected part, for which purpose butter of antimony applied with a swab is effective. Afterwards a dressing of tar and a bandage over the foot will serve to exclude dirt and permit healing.

Tuberculosis.—Tuberculosis affects all domestic animals. There is no satisfactory treatment for this disease, but every effort should be made to stamp it out by destroying the affected animals or at least isolating them and abstaining from the use of any products from them. A discussion of the additional measures for the control of this disease is impossible in this space. Consult a state veterinarian or board of health.

The Farm Grain Elevator

(From the Farmers' Review)

I was one of the first in my neighborhood to buy a portable grain elevator. Since then nearly every one of my neighbors has an elevator.

I do not say that this elevator has had no repairs, but it has had very few. These few repairs on the elevator have been cables, worm wheels and rubber belting, used on the short conveyor from the wagon to the large conveyor. The repairs on any grain elevator will be small if the machine is handled right. Comparing the elevator of today with the elevator of a few years ago is like comparing the latest equipped automobile with the old, now odd-looking cars of a few years ago.

Every manufacturer of elevators specifies the time to take in unloading a load of grain and the speed to run, but if the elevator is overloaded or run too fast it can seldom do much harm. The grain elevator is hardly ever like the binder, that is always causing little delays. One man can run an elevator with horse power if the horses will go without driving.

The main points in caring for an elevator are to keep it well oiled and placed in the dry during bad weather. It does not require an expert to repair a grain elevator. The cost of repairs will depend more upon the care than the wear of the parts. The outside portable elevator has the advantage over the inside type in that it has to be moved but little, and sometimes not at all; but it is exposed to the weather.

The fixed type of elevator has the advantages of both the portable types, but is a little higher priced.

Most of the older portable elevators did not elevate wheat and oats as well as corn, but the newer types, especially the vertical bucket types, carry any kind of grain.

An elevator will unload a load of grain in a few minutes, besides saving the husker, already tired with his day's work, a lot of hard labor. Since my first elevator, which, I forgot to mention, was an inside type, I have an outside type which I have had for six years. Last summer I purchased a fixed, vertical type of elevator with chain and buckets. This elevator is very handy and will unload any kind of grain. It is run by a horizontal four-horse gasoline engine. I believe the gasoline engine is a little handier and better than the power jack for running a dump, because it requires no attention while running, and also runs the dump at the same rate of speed. Nearly any type of elevator is useful on the farm for unloading small grain.

The Most Satisfactory Elevator for the Farmer

The "Little Giant" has done more for the farmer in the way of helping him take care of his corn and small grain in a satisfactory and most economical manner, than any elevator money and brains has ever made. This claim of ours is backed by thousands of our farmer friends who bought elevators from us when we first built them—and have gotten real, downright honest service out of them ever since.

National Giant Inside Elevator The Most Sensible Inside Machine on the Market

On cribs 28x38 ft. or less, with half pitch roof, it is not necessary to have a cupola. When cupola is necessary, we can save you from $15 to $30. We also save you the cost of digging a pit. Save you the length of elevator required. This machine has other sensible features. Spout swings around from side to side—fills crib directly back of elevator—also leaves corn on the cob where it belongs.

COMMERCIAL LAW IN BRIEF

(From Ropp's Commercial Calculator)

Ignorance of the law excuses no one. The law compels no one to do anything impossible. It is fraud to conceal a fraud.

Goods obtained by fraud may be recovered unless held by an innocent third party. Stolen goods may be recovered wherever found.

Signatures made in pencil are binding, but it is better to use ink.

Principals are responsible for the acts of their agents.

Each partner (in a co-partnership) is responsible for all the firm's debts.

A firm is responsible for the acts of each of its members, except in matters not connected with the business, or for their individual benefit.

Real estate owned in partnership is not subject to dower interest.

Stockholders in a corporation are liable only for the amount of their capital stock. Stockholders in national banks are liable for double the amount of their paid-up capital stock.

A Contract is an agreement between two or more parties, each binding himself to perform or not to perform certain specified acts. The consent of all parties and a valuable consideration are essential, otherwise the contract is void. All parties must understand it alike, to make it binding.

A contract made in violation of the law, or for immoral purposes, or to commit a breach of the peace, is void.

When consent is given by mistake, a contract cannot be enforced.

If any part of a contract is illegal, it is wholly illegal.

A material alteration of a contract or other written instrument after its execution, renders the instrument void.

A contract must be performed in full before payment can be collected, unless otherwise specified. A contract made by means of threats, is void.

Fraud vitiates a contract. If fraud is practiced, the responsibility of the innocent party ceases, but the contract still binds the guilty party.

Money borrowed for the purpose of making a wager cannot be collected if the lender knew of its intended use. Wagers cannot be collected by law.

The law will not aid in collecting rents on premises let for illegal use.

A Promisory Note is a written promise to pay a specified sum of money. The person promising to pay is the Maker of the note; the person to whom the promise is made is the Payee.

An indorser of a note becomes liable to any subsequent holder of the note, if the maker fails to pay it.

A note bears interest only when so stated therein. All notes bear interest after maturity, at the legal rate.

A material alteration of a note after its execution, without the consent of the maker, renders the note void.

A note made in one state and payable in another is governed by the laws of the state in which it is payable.

A note must be presented for payment upon the exact date of maturity, or the indorsers are released from liability.

If the maker of a note refuses payment upon presentation, it must be protested and notice sent to the indorsers within a reasonable time, otherwise they are released from liability.

Extension of time of a note by the holder releases sureties and indorsers.

Transfer of a note after maturity, releases indorsers from liability.

When a note, on deposit as collateral security, falls due, the temporary holder becomes the payee, and must collect, or become liable to the owner.

A Receipt is not conclusive against a claim. Even though a receipt is given, a claimant may recover if he can prove that the debt has not been paid.

A release given in discharge of all demands, and for a consideration, can not be set aside except by showing fraud.

An obligation or debt is renewed and the time of limitation is extended by making part payment, or by payment of the interest thereon.

A Forgery is a material alteration of a note or written instrument with intent to defraud. One whose name is forged cannot be held responsible.

A forged instrument is not commercial paper and no rights are gained by its possession. If a bank pays money on a forged check or note believing it to be genuine, it must lose the money.

An Innkeeper may retain the goods of his guests for settlement.

Mechanic's Liens expire one year after filing, unless action is begun.

A Bill of Sale is a written instrument by which the ownership of personal property is transferred. Actual transfer of the property is not absolutely necessary to insure the validity of sale, but to protect the purchaser from attachments by the creditors of the seller, the property should be delivered.

Property covered by a chattel mortgage must be taken possession of at the maturity of the mortgage, or it can be taken by other creditors.

It is a criminal offense to sell goods covered by a chattel mortgage.

A chattel mortgage is not valid if the debt to be secured is not.

If mortgaged real estate is foreclosed and sold for more than the debt, and costs, the mortgagor is entitled to the surplus.

A Deed is a written instrument conveying the ownership of real estate. In a Warranty deed, the grantor warrants his title to be good and agrees to hold the purchaser harmless against all comers. In a Quit Claim deed, the grantor conveys his right, title and interest, but warrants nothing.

A deed must be signed by the wife, otherwise, after the husband's death, she may claim the use of one third, during her life.

An assignment does not require a valuable consideration.

An assignment covers all property not exempt from execution.

A lease given by a guardian terminates when the ward comes of age.

Leases on mortgaged property whereon the mortgage was given prior to the lease, terminate with the foreclosure of the mortgage.

A testator's "last will and testament" annuls all former wills.

A husband may will his wife property in lieu of dower, she may elect to take either such property or her dower, but not both.

A husband cannot claim dower right in the estate of his deceased wife.

A husband and wife cannot testify for or against each other, except in cases of personal injury or violence.

A Patent protects the inventor for seventeen years. After that anyone may use, sell or manufacture the thing patented.

The term of a Copyright is twenty-eight years. Within six months of the end of this time a renewal for fourteen years can be secured.
