FOREWORD

Hendricks county will celebrate its ninety-first birthday on December 20, 1914. The eighth General Assembly of Indiana met at Corydon on the first day of December, 1823, and created three counties before the close of the session, among them being Hendricks, the fifty-first county to be organized in the state. The bill creating the county was introduced in the Senate on December 9th and, after passing both houses of the Legislature, was signed on December 20th by Governor William Hendricks, in whose honor the new county was named. The county had been a part of the so-called New Purchase which was secured from the Indians in the fall of 1818, and, previous to its organization, had been under the civil and criminal jurisdiction of contiguous counties.

It is difficult for the people of Hendricks county today to realize the wonderful changes which have come about since the organization of the county. In 1823, Indianapolis was a mere village, with a few log cabins and a population not to exceed two hundred. In fact, the whole population of the state did not exceed one hundred and fifty thousand and practically all of this was south of the present National Road. Not a railroad, canal or improved road of any kind was to be found within the limits of the state and all transportation was confined to the trails through the dense woods and to the streams and rivers flowing into the Ohio and Wabash. The farmer had only two implements, the plow and harrow, which were not operated by hand; he planted and harvested all his crops by hand and frequently had to grind his corn and wheat in the same way. He sheared his sheep and cut his flax, while his good wife took the raw product and made the family clothing. The farmer was his own blacksmith, shoemaker, mason, carpenter and clothing manufacturer and frequently was his own doctor, dentist and lawyer. The division of labor as we know it now was practically unknown to the early settlers of this county.

From a trackless wilderness Hendricks county has come to be a center of prosperity and civilization with millions of wealth, systems of railways and interurbans, schools and colleges, marvelous industries and immense agricultural productions. Conditions have changed so much since those early days that the pioneer of ninety years ago would hardly recognize his own farm today if it were possible for him to see it. The children of these sturdy pioneers cannot realize the hardships which surrounded their forefathers on every hand and the fact that this history of the county records the lives of many of these pioneers gives the volume a value which is hard to estimate. As the years roll by it becomes increasingly difficult to write the early history of the county. The pioneers are nearly all gone; old newspapers, records and valuable historical material are being destroyed each year, and, for these reasons, the task of writing an accurate history of the county becomes more difficult as time passes. It is to be regretted that the facts of our early history have been so meagerly preserved, and, indeed, so carelessly lost, that it is hard to present important features in a satisfactory manner. Hendricks county has suffered in the loss of much valuable data which might throw an interesting light on its early history, a fact which the editor has had forcibly impressed on him several times in the preparation of this volume. To perpetuate the history of this county and to trace and record the social, political and industrial progress of the county from its first inception has been the purpose of the editor.

In covering ninety-one years of history, as this volume tries to do, it is impossible to do full justice to every phase of the county's growth, but it is believed that much valuable data is here preserved which would otherwise have been lost. The personal sketches appearing in the book are full of interesting details which throw a flood of light on the pioneer history of the county. It is our duty to gather in good and enduring form all the stories of our forefathers and portray as truthfully as possible the struggles through which they passed and in this way give credit to the courageous men and women who started this county in such a strong and vigorous manner. The editor and publishers wish to thank the citizens of Hendricks county who have helped in various ways to make this volume possible, not only in the way of contributing historical material, but also because of their financial support without which it would have been impossible to issue the volume.

HISTORICAL

CHAPTER I.

GEOLOGY AND TOPOGRAPHY OF HENDRICKS COUNTY

Hendricks county has a central position in the state, the county seat being nearly in the exact center from north to south and twenty miles west of the center on an east and west line. Its geographical position is between parallels 30 and 40 degrees north latitude and meridians 86 and 87 west longitude. The exact position of Danville is 39 degrees 40 minutes north latitude and 86 degrees 30 minutes west longitude. In extent, the county was intended to be twenty miles square, but the surveyors' correction line, which passes through the northern part of the county, destroys its quadrilateral shape, and makes it more than half a mile wider at the north than the south. However, owing to irregularities in the surveys, which were caused by the passage through the county of both the second principal meridian and a correction line of the government surveys, the county averaged just twenty miles square until the year 1868, when a strip two miles in width, extending from the meridian line west to Mill creek and containing twenty square miles, was added to the county from Morgan county, which makes the area of the county four hundred and twenty square miles. The county is bounded on the north by Boone county, on the east by Marion county, on the south by Morgan county and on the west by the counties of Putnam and Montgomery.

The general elevation of the surface of Hendricks county is much higher than the surrounding country, except portions of Boone and Putnam counties. Passing through the county from south to north, from near Clayton to Lebanon, in Boone county, is a natural water-shed, which divides the waters of Eel river and Sugar creek from the waters of White river, and at a point three miles northwest of Danville, at Mount Pleasant church, it attains an elevation of more than one thousand feet.

The general surface of the county is level or gently undulating. Though the streams in many places have eroded deep, narrow valleys, there are but few acres in the county which, on this account, cannot be cultivated and not one which cannot be made useful for grazing purposes.

The streams which make the natural drainage of Hendricks county are the White Licks, Big. Little, East and West forks, Abner's creek, Mill creek, School branch and Eel river. The east and north parts of the county are drained by the White Licks, the southwest by Mill creek and the northwest by Eel river. Owing to the elevation of the land, but few springs are found in the county, though pure water in great abundance is obtained at no great depth by digging through sand and clay. Originally the county was covered by a dense forest, composed of every variety of timber, trees and undergrowth found in this latitude, with an extraordinary amount of the more valuable kinds, popular, walnut and the oaks. After the Indians were gone and the annual burning of the woods ceased, there grew up a dense undergrowth, and the highways of the early settlers consisted of narrow trails through the woods, the thickness of which may be illustrated by the statement of a pioneer that when driving cattle from place to place they often tied handspikes across their foreheads, which prevented them from leaving the trail.

In all parts of the county the soil is productive for cereals, grasses and fruits.

GEOLOGY.

No official survey has ever been made of Hendricks county until the spring of 1914, but the publication of this report, having been delayed by the United States government printing department, will not be issued in time for this work. However, good information is at hand.

The entire county is covered by a glacial drift formation from ten to three hundred feet in depth. This formation is composed of sand, clay and calcareous substances, boulders, fragments of crystalline rocks, remains of ancient animals and vegetable life and extensive moraines of gravel.

The drift in Hendricks county rests upon a stratum of Devonian sandstone, known to geologists as the Marshall or knob sandstone. It is soft, brittle and shaly and unfit for economic uses. This sandstone ceases to appear near the eastern line of the county and it is probable that in the southeast corner of the county, the black slate of the Hamilton group, which underlies the Marshall sandstone, may be found. Near the western border of the county sub-carboniferous limestone overlaps the sandstone. The drift formation is composed of a disintegration and decomposition of almost every variety of rocks, soils, the remains of animal and vegetable life and various mineral elements.

CHAPTER II.

RELATED STATE HISTORY.

EARLY EXPLORERS.

As an introduction to the history of Hendricks county it is fitting that a brief survey of the history of the state of Indiana should be given, not for the purpose of teaching the reader the course of events which make up Hoosier history, but for the subordinate purpose of building a foundation for the county history, a preparatory word to lead the reader to a better understanding of this work.

Not until the years 1670-2 did the first white travelers venture so far into the great Northwest as Indiana or Lake Michigan. Claude Dablon and Claude Allouez, two intrepid Frenchmen, then visited what is now the eastern part of Wisconsin, the northeastern portion of Illinois, and probably the portion of this state north of the Kankakee river. In the year following M. Joliet, an agent of the French colonial government, and James Marquette, a missionary stationed at Mackinaw, explored the country around Green bay, and along Fox and Wisconsin rivers as far westward as the Mississippi river, the banks of which they reached on June 17, 1673. They descended this river a short distance and returned by way of the Illinois river. At a village among the Illinois Indians, Marquette and his followers were received with friendly hospitality and made guests at a great feast of hominy, fish, dog meat and roast buffalo. In 1682 LaSalle explored the West, but it is not known certainly whether or not he entered the territory now embraced in Indiana. He took possession, however, of the whole Mississippi region in the name of France, and, in honor of the king, he named it Louisiana. Spain at the same time claimed the region around the Gulf of Mexico. Consequently the two nations clashed.

FIRST INDIAN INHABITANTS.

At this time the country now comprising the state of Indiana was held by the Miami confederacy of Indians, the Miamis proper, originally the Twightwees, being the eastern and most powerful tribe. Their villages were few and scattering. These Indian settlements were occasionally visited by Christian missionaries, fur traders and adventurers, but no permanent settlement was risked by the whites. The Five Nations farther to the east, in the New England states, comprised the Mohawks, Oneidas, Cayugas, Onondagas and Senecas. In 1677 the number of warriors in this confederation was two thousand one hundred and fifty. About 1711 the Tuscaroras retired from Carolina and joined the Iroquois, and the organization then became known as the Six Nations. In 1689 hostilities broke out between the Indian tribes and the French colonists of Canada, and the following series of wars served to check the purpose of Louis XIV and to retard the planting of French colonies in the Mississippi valley. Missionary efforts, however, continued with more failure than success, the Jesuits allying themselves with the Indians in habits and customs, even encouraging inter-marriage between them and their white followers.

NATIONAL POLICIES.

The English, who were envious of the French, resorted to every method to extend their territory westward. Both nations secured aid from various Indian tribes, and a bloody and merciless warfare continued for many years. France continued in her effort to connect the Canadian country with the gulf of Mexico by a chain of trading posts and colonies, which further increased the jealousy of England and really laid the foundation for the French and Indian war, which terminated in the treaty of 1763 at Paris, and by which France ceded to Great Britain all of North America east of the Mississippi river, except New Orleans and some contiguous territory. The British policy, after getting control of the Indian territory, was still unfavorable to its growth in population. In 1765 the number of French families within the limits of the Northwestern territory did not exceed six hundred. These were in settlements around Detroit, along the Wabash river, and in the neighborhood of Fort Chartres. Cahokia and Kaskaskia on the Mississippi river. Of these families, eighty-five resided at Post Vincennes, fourteen at Fort Ouiatenon on the Wabash and in the neighborhood of the confluence of the St. Mary and St. Joseph rivers. The colonial policy of the British government opposed any measures which might strengthen the settlements in the interior of this country, lest they become self-supporting and independent of the mother country. Thomas Jefferson, the wise statesman and governor of Virginia, saw from the first that actual occupation of western lands was the only way to keep them out of the hands of foreigners and Indians. Accordingly he engaged a corps of scientific men and sent them to the Mississippi river to ascertain the point on that stream intersected by latitude thirty-six degrees thirty minutes and to measure its distance north to the Ohio. In that quarter he intrusted the military operations to General Clark, with instructions to select a strong position near the named point and erect a fort and garrison the same for protecting the settlers, and then to extend his conquest toward the great lakes on the north. Conforming to his instructions, General Clark erected Fort Jefferson on the Mississippi, a few miles above the southern limit. The result of these operations was the addition to Virginia of the vast Northwest territory. The fact that a chain of forts was established by the Americans in this region convinced the British commissioners that we had entitled ourselves to the land. During this time minor events were transpiring outside the territory in question which later promoted the settlement in what is now known as Indiana.

THE GEORGE ROGERS CLARK EXPEDITION.

George Rogers Clark, a resident of Kentucky, but a native of Virginia, some time in the spring of 1776 formulated a scheme of more rapid settlement in the Northwest territory. That part of Kentucky was occupied by Henderson and Company, who pretended to own the land and set a high price on the same. Clark doubted the validity of their claim, and wished to make a test of it, and adjust the control of the country so that settlements might be fostered. He called a meeting of the citizens at Harrodstown, to assemble June 6, 1776, and consider the claims of the company, and consult with reference to the interests of the country.

This meeting was held on the day appointed and delegates elected to confer with the state of Virginia as to the propriety of attaching the new country as a county to that state. Many causes prevented a consummation of this object until the year 1778. Virginia was favorable to the enterprise, but would not take action as a state. Governor Henry and a few others, however, assisted Colonel Clark all they could. Clark organized an expedition and took in stores at Pittsburgh and Wheeling, and proceeded down the Ohio to the falls, where he built some light fortifications.

Clark's original plan was to take Vincennes, but he changed it on account of an erroneous idea as to the strength of the garrison at that place. He left the Falls of the Ohio on June 24, 1878, and, with one hundred and fiftythree men, floated down the Ohio, reaching the mouth of the Tennessee river four days later. He then landed his men and marched them to Kaskaskia, reaching the quaint little French village on the night of July 4th. Clark had no difficulty in winning the French inhabitants to the American cause and a few days later the people of Cahokia also took the oath of allegiance to the Americans. Clark now had Kaskaskia and Cahokia and only Vincennes remained to be secured. Clark wanted some of the people of Kaskaskia to go to Vincennes and win over the inhabitants of the village and finally Doctor Lafont and Father Gibault, a Catholic priest who had charge of the Wabash mission, undertook the task. On July 14, 1778, these two emissaries left Kaskaskia with a small retinue and within a few days were at Vincennes. Two days after their arrival they had won the people to the American cause and had the deep satisfaction of gathering all of the French inhabitants in the church, where they took the oath of allegiance. An officer was elected; the fort was garrisoned; and for the first time an American flag was raised on Indiana soil.

Father Gibault returned to Kaskaskia about the first of August and brought the glad news to Clark, but just at this time a new trouble was threatening Clark. His men were leaving him because their enlistment had expired and, since he had no authority to extend it, he was in grave danger of losing the larger part of his force. But Clark was not to be dismayed. He made some liberal promises and finally succeeded in getting one hundred of them to re-enlist, filling the vacancies with French volunteers. Clark now placed Capt. Leonard Helm in command of Vincennes and made him superintendent of Indian affairs on the Wabash. As the summer and fall of 1778 wore away the British were planning to capture Vincennes and late in the fall Gen. Henry Hamilton moved down the Wabash with a force of thirty regulars. fifty Canadian volunteers and four hundred Indians. He reached Vincennes December 15th and found Captain Helm and one other man in the fort. Captain Helm stood by a loaded cannon with a lighted match in his hand as the envoys of General Hamilton approached the fort and shouted out that no one should enter the fort until he knew what terms would be given. General Hamilton assured him that he could march out with all the honors of warand Vincennes became a British post.

On January 29, 1779, Clark, who was still at Kaskaskia, heard of the fall of Vincennes and determined to retake the place. He gathered together about one hundred and seventy men, and on February 5th started from Kaskaskia, crossing the stream of the same name. The weather was wet and the low-lands covered with water. He had to subsist on such game as he could kill en route. The men underwent great privations, wading through acres of water to their hips, and suffering intensely with the cold. However, Colonel

Clark shared all of the hardships of the men and asked nothing of them which he would not undergo himself. They reached the little Wabash on the 13th, and two days were occupied in crossing the swollen stream. They found the roads no better, but marched down and reached the Embarrass on the 17th of the month. The next two days were consumed in attempting to cross the angry stream. Finally canoes were constructed and the entire force crossed the main stream, and then found the lowlands entirely under water and ice which had formed recently. His men refused to proceed. All of Clark's persuasions had no effect upon the half starved men. In one company was a small drummer-boy and also a sergeant who stood six feet and two inches high. Clark ordered him, the sergeant, to mount the boy on his shoulders and plunge into the water. He did so, and the small drummer beat the charge from his position, while Clark, sword in hand, followed, This maneuver was electrical, and the men, with a cheer, followed their leader. On arriving within two miles of the fort Clark halted his men and sent in a letter demanding surrender, to which he received no reply. He next ordered Lieutenant Bayley, with fourteen men, to advance and fire on the fort, while the main body of men moved in another direction and took posession of the strongest portion of the town. Clark then demanded Hamilton's immediate surrender, on penalty of being treated as a murderer. Hamilton refused indignantly. Fighting began and continued for over an hour, when Hamilton proposed a three days' truce. Clark, characteristically, sent word that nothing but unconditional surrender was satisfactory. In less than an hour the surrender was dictated by General Clark. This was on February 24, 1779.

Of this expedition, of its results, of its importance, as well as of the skill and bravery of those engaged, a volume could well be written. The expedition has never been surpassed in modern warfare, when we consider that by it the whole territory now included in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and a part of Minnesota was added to the Union, and so admitted by the British commissioners in the treaty of peace in 1783. Clark reinstated Captain Helm in command at Vincennes, with instruction to subdue the marauding Indians, which he did, and soon comparative quiet prevailed on Indiana soil. The whole credit of this conquest belongs to Colonel Clark and Francis Vigo.

NORTHWEST GOVERNMENT.

By the conquest of Colonel Clark, Indiana came within the territory belonging to Virginia. In January, 1783, the General Assembly of the Old Dominion resolved to cede this territory to the general government of the United States. The proposition made by Virginia was accepted by the government and the transfer made early in 1784. The terms were that Virginia was to be reimbursed for all expenses incurred in exploring and protecting settlers in the territory; also that one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land should be granted to the soldiers who, with Colonel Clark, had made the famous expedition. After all these matters had been attended to, in the spring of 1781, the matter of governing this section of the west was referred to a committee of Messrs. Jefferson, of Virginia, Chase, of Maryland, and Howell, of Rhode Island, which committee, among other things, reported an ordinance prohibiting slavery in the territory after 1800, but this article of the ordinance was rejected. The Ordinance of 1784 was passed April 23d and remained the fundamental law of the Northwest territory until July 13. 1787. The ordinance of 1787 has an interesting history. Much controversy has been indulged in as to who is really entitled to the credit of framing it. The honor was held by several men jointly, among them being Nathan Dane. Rufus King, Timothy Pickering, Thomas Jefferson and Manasseh Cutler, Mr. Jefferson had vainly tried to secure a system of government for the Northwest territory excluding slavery therefrom. The South, however, invariably voted him down.

In July, 1787, an organizing act without the slavery clause was pending, which was supposed to secure its passage. Congress went into session in New York City. July 5th, Dr. Manasseh Cutler, of Massachusetts, came to New York in the interests of some land or speculators in the Northwest territory. He was a courtly gentleman of the old-school type and had won the confidence of the Southern leaders. He wished to purchase five million, five hundred thousand acres of land in the new territory. Jefferson and his administration desired to make a record on the reduction of the public debt, and this was a rare opportunity. Massachusetts' representatives could not vote against Cutler's scheme, as many of their constituents were interested in the measure personally; Southern members were almost committed. Thus, Cutler held the key to the situation, and dictated terms, which were as follows:

1. The exclusion of slavery from the territory forever.

- 2. Providing one thirty-sixth of all lands for public schools.
- Be it forever remembered that this compact declares that religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall always be encouraged.

Dr. Cutler planted himself on this platform and would not yield, stating that unless they could procure these lands under desirable conditions and surroundings, that they did not care to purchase. On July 13, 1787, the bill became a law. Thus the great states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin were consecrated to freedom, intelligence and morality. On October 5, 1787, Congress elected General Arthur St. Clair governor of the Northwest territory. He assumed his official duties at Marietta and at once proceeded to treat with the Indians and organize a territorial government. He first organized a court at Marietta, consisting of three judges appointed by Congress, himself being president of the court.

The Governor, with his judges, then visited Kaskaskia for the purpose of organizing a civil government, having previously instructed Major Hamtramck at Vincennes to present the policy of the new administration to the several Indian tribes and learn their feelings. They received the messenger with a cool indifference, which, when reported to the governor, convinced him that nothing short of military force would command compliance with the civil government. He at once proceeded to Fort Washington to consult with General Harmar as to future action. In the meantime he intrusted to the secretary of the territory, Winthrop Sargent, the settlement of the disputed land claims, who found it a hard task, and in his reports states that he found the records so falsified, vouchers destroyed, and other crookedness as to make it impossible to get at a just settlement, which but again proves that the "graft" of the twentieth century existed decades before this word had been coined.

The general court in 1790 passed stringent laws against the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians and also to soldiers within ten miles of any military post; also prohibiting any games of chance within the territory.

The consultation between St. Clair and General Harmar ended by a decision to raise a large military force and thoroughly chastise the Indians about the head of the Wabash river. Accordingly, Virginia and Pennsylvania were called upon to muster eighteen hundred men at Fort Steuben, and, with the garrison of that fort, join the forces at Vincennes under Major Hamtranick, who proceeded up the Wabash as far as the Vermillion river, destroying villages, but without finding an enemy to oppose him. General Harmar, with one thousand four hundred and fifty men, marched from Fort Washington to the Maumee, and began punishing the Indians, but with little success. The expedition left Fort Washington September 30th, and returned to that place November 4th, having lost during that period one hundred and eighty-three men killed and thirty-one wounded. General Harmar's defeat alarmed as well as aroused the citizens in the frontier counties of Virginia, thinking the Indians might invade that state.

The governor of Virginia called out the militia along the upper borders of that state; at the same time Charles Scott was appointed brigadier-general of the Kentucky militia now preparing to defend the frontiers of that state. This excited Congress and a war board was appointed, consisting of five members. On March 9, 1971, General Knox, secretary of war, wrote to General Scott recommending an expedition against the Indians on the Wabash. On March 3, 1791, Congress invested Governor St. Clair with the command of three thousand troops, and he was instructed by the secretary of war to march to the Miami village and establish a strong and permanent military post. After that was accomplished he was to seek the enemy with all his available forces and make them feel the effect of the superiority of the whites.

THE ST. CLAIR AND WAYNE EXPEDITIONS.

Although seriously damaged, the Indians were far from subdued. The Canadians and English along the border gave them much encouragement. In September, 1701. St. Clair moved from Fort Washington with a force of two thousand men and a number of pieces of artillery. November 3d he reached the headwaters of the Wabash, where Fort Recovery was later built, and here the army camped, consisting of one thousand four hundred effective men. The following morning the army advanced and engaged a force of twelve hundred Indians. Here the American army was disastrously defeated. having thirty-nine officers and five hundred and thirty-nine men killed and missing, twenty-two officers and two hundred and thirty-two men wounded. Several pieces of artillery and all their provisions were taken from them. The property loss was estimated at thirty-two thousand dollars. There has always been some disposition to blame General St. Clair for this awful defeat, but his recent biographer, John Newton Boucher, of Greensburg, Pennsylvania, proves conclusively that he was not to blame. Be that as it may, he resigned his commission after that battle and the work was taken up by General Anthony Wayne, of Revolutionary fame, who organized his forces at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and in October, 1793, moved westward at the head of an army of three thousand six hundred men. He proposed an offensive campaign. The Indians still held that the Ohio river should be the boundary line between the United States and their lands.

Major-General Scott, with about sixteen hundred volunteers from Kentucky, joined the regular troops under General Wayne on July 26, 1794, and on the 28th the united force began their march for the Indian towns on the Maumee river. Arriving at the mouth of the Auglaize, they erected Fort Defiance and on August 15th the army advanced toward the British fort at the foot of the rapids of the Maumee, where, on the 20th, almost within reach of the British, the American army gained a decisive victory over the combined forces of the hostile Indians and a considerable number of Detroit militia at the battle of Fallen Timbers. The number of the enemy was estimated at two thousand, against about nine hundred American troops actually engaged. As soon as the action began this horde of savages abandoned themselves to flight and dispersed with terror and dismay, leaving Wayne's victorious army in full possession of the field. The Americans lost thirty-three killed and one hundred wounded; the loss of the enemy more than doubled this number.

The army remained three days and nights on the banks of the Maumee, in front of the field of battle, during which time all the houses and cornfields were consumed and destroyed for a considerable distance both above and below Fort Miami, as well as within pistol shot of the British garrison, who were compelled to remain idle spectators to this general devastation and conflagration among which were the houses, stores and property of Colonel McKee, the British Indian agent, and general stimulator of the war then existing between the United States and the savages. On the return march to Fort Defiance the villages and corn fields for about fifty miles on each side of the Maumee were destroyed as well as those for a considerable distance around the post.

ORIGIN OF FORT WAYNE.

On September 14, 1794, the army under General Wayne commenced its march toward the deserted Miami villages at the confluence of St. Joseph and St. Mary's rivers, arriving October 17th, and on the following day the site of Fort Wayne was selected. The fort was completed November 22d and garrisoned by a strong detachment of infantry and artillery under the command of Colonel John F. Hamtramck, who gave to the new fort the name of "Fort Wayne." The Kentucky volunteers now returned to Fort Washington, and were mustered out of service. General Wayne, with the federal troops, marched to Greenville and took up his headquarters for the winter. Here, on August 5, 1795, after several months of active negotiation, this gallant officer succeeded in concluding a general treaty of peace with all the hostile tribes of the Northwest territory. This treaty opened the way for the flood of immigration for many years, and ultimately made the states and territories now constituting the mighty Northwest.

Up to the organization of the Indiana territory there is but little history to record aside from those events connected with military affairs. In July, 1796, after a treaty was concluded between the United States and Spain, the British garrison, with their arms, artillery and stores, were withdrawn from the posts within the boundaries of the United States northwest of the Ohio river, and a detachment of American troops consisting of sixty-five men under the command of Captain Moses Porter took possession of the evacuated post of Detroit in the same month.

ORGANIZATION OF INDIANA TERRITORY, JULY 4, 1800.

On the final victory of the American army in 1796 the principal town within what is now the state of Indiana was Vincennes, which comprised only fifty houses, but presented a thrifty appearance. There was also a small settlement where Lawrenceburg now stands, and several smaller settlements around trading posts, and the total number of civilized inhabitants in the territory was estimated at four thousand eight hundred seventy-five.

Indiana territory was organized by act of Congress May 7, 1800, the material features of the Ordinance of 1787 remaining in force and the people being invested with all the rights and advantages granted and secured by that ordinance.

The seat of government was fixed at Vincennes. On May 13, 1800, William Henry Harrison, a native of Virginia, was appointed governor. John Gibson, of Pennsylvania, was made secretary of the territory. The government for Indiana territory went into active operation on July 4, 1800, and General Harrison called together the first territorial Legislature or Council January 12, 1801. From this time to 1810 the chief questions under discussion were land speculators, African slavery and the hostile views of the Shawnee chief, Tecunseh, and his brother, the wily Prophet.

Up to this time the sixth article of the Ordinance of 1787, prohibiting slavery, had been somewhat neglected and many French settlers held slaves; many slaves had been removed to slave-holding states. A session of delegates elected by popular vote in the new territory met December 20, 1802, and petitioned Congress to revoke the sixth article of the old ordinance. Congress failed to grant this, as well as many other similar petitions. When it appeared from a popular vote in the territory that a majority of one hundred and thirty-eight were in favor of organizing a General Assembly, Governor Harrison, on September 11, 1804, issued a proclamation, and called for an election to be held in the several counties of the territory January 3, 1805, to choose members of the House of Representatives, who should meet at Vincennes, February 1st. The delegates were duly elected and assembled as ordered, and they perfected plans for territorial organization and selected ten men whose names were sent to President Jefferson and the President chose five of the number to act as members of the Council. The first General Assembly or Legislature of the territory met at Vincennes July 29, 1805.

On July 30th the Governor delivered his first message to the Council and House of Representatives. Benjamin Parke, who came from New Jersey in 1801, was the first delegate elected to Congress.

The first newspaper published within the territory of Indiana was the Western Sun, first issued at Vincennes in 1803, by Elihu Stout, of Kentucky, and first named the Indiana Gazette, but changed to the Sun July 4, 1804.

In 1810 the total population of Indiana was 24,520. There were then reported 33 grist mills, 14 saw mills, 3 horse mills, 18 tanneries, 28 distilleries, 3 powder mills, 1,256 looms, 1,300 spinning wheels; value of woolen, cotton, hemp and flax cloth, $150.059; of nails, 30,000 pounds; of wine from grapes, 96 barrels, and 50,000 pounds of maple sugar.

The territory of Indiana was divided in 1805, when the territory of Michigan was established to comprise practically the same territory which it has today. In 1800 Illinois was set off and Indiana was left with practically its present limits. For the first half century after the settlement Vincennes grew slowly.

The commandants and priests governed with absolute power; the whites lived in peace with the Indians. The necessaries of life were easily procured; there was nothing to stimulate energy or progress. In such a state of society there was no demand for learning and science. Few could read and fewer still could write their own names; they were void of public spirit, enterprise or ingenuity. Not until the close of the war of 1812 and 1814 did Indiana take on her vigorous growth, and since then she has kept pace with her sister states. In 1815 the total white population was sixty-three thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven. On February 13, 1813, the Legislature in session at Vincennes changed the seat of government to Corydon.

Governor Posey took Governor Harrison's place May 25, 1813, for the latter was engaged in subduing the enemies of this country.

Up to 1811 a man must own at least fifty acres of land before he was entitled to cast his vote. To become a member of the Council he must possess five hundred acres of land, and each member of the Legislature must needs own two hundred acres.

In 1814 the territory was divided into three judicial districts. The Governor appointed the judges and the compensation was fixed at seven hundred dollars per annum. The same year two banks were authorized, the Mechanics Bank of Madison, with seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and the Bank of Vincennes, with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars,

STATE ORGANIZATION IN 1816.

The last territorial Legislature convened at Corydon December 14, 1815, and petitioned Congress for authority to adopt a state constitution and maintain a state government. Congress enacted the proper legislation and Indiana was made a state. On May 13, 1816, an election was held for forty-three delegates to a constitutional convention. That body met at Corydon, June 10th to 29th, Jonathan Jennings presiding, and William Hendricks acting as secretary.

The representatives in the constitutional convention were able men. The constitution they there formed for Indiana in 1816 was in no wise inferior to that of any other commonwealth in the Union at that date.

The first state election was held the first Monday in August, 1816, and Jonathan Jennings was elected governor, Christopher Harrison, lieutenant governor, and William Hendricks, representative to Congress.

The close of the war of 1812 and 1814 was followed by a great rush of immigrants to the new state and in 1820 the state had more than doubled its population, having at this time one hundred and forty-seven thousand one hundred and seventy-eight inhabitants. This date was the beginning of prosperity for Indiana, and at this time begins our history of the county of Hendricks.

CHAPTER III.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND ORGANIZATION.

The history of the early settlement of Hendricks county would be worthy of treatment in a separate volume were the records and other sources of information in regard to those days in existence. At that time the importance of keeping such things was not realized, and consequently few can be obtained. The settlement of Hendricks county occurred early in 1820. within six years of one hundred years ago. Many of the people in the county today remember of hearing their fathers and mothers recount the thrilling tales of pioneer life in the early period of log rollings, husking bees, barbecues, cabin raisings, hunts and the thousand and one other incidents which were a part of the early life. Settlements were miles apart and social intercourse was difficult, so these entertainments afforded the only opportunities for the people to congregate, and these periods were generally months apart. So the pioneer lived alone with his family in the silent and mighty forest, sallying out before dawn to shoot the game or to cast a line in the stream nearby for the day's food supply. The meat of the wild game and the rough cereals raised in the patch of cleared ground provided the principal sustenance for the family; the clothes were manufactured by the women, who sat for days before the loom; linsey-woolsey and homespun, adorned with the skins of small animals, were the popular weaves. The good mother was the teacher of the children also; meager teaching it was, but thorough.

Relative to the early settlement, it is well to quote a few paragraphs from the writings of Logan Esarey, an authority on Indiana history. He writes: "The attempt to better their economic condition was no doubt the cause that led a great majority of the immigrants to come to Indiana in the early period of its statehood. They were encouraged and many of them grossly deceived by the advertisements in the Indiana papers. The Western Sun and the Sentinel of Vincennes, the Indiana Republican of Madison, the Intelligencer and the Ledger of Richmond, from which the following data has been collected, are full of the most glowing accounts of the prosperity of this western world. Judged from these papers, there was bustle and activity everywhere. Cotton gins, ox mills, grist mills, salt wells, rich mines of silver and gold, steam saw mills, card mills, breweries were in need of laborers everywhere. Dozens of towns, each sure to be a metropolis, were springing up and in which lots could be bought for a trifle and on credit. A steamer one hundred and sixty-six feet long was on the ways at Jeffersonville. Another would soon be launched at Bono to ply on the branches of White river. Indiana seemed to be a bee-hive of industry, glowing with opportunity for the poor and industrious.

"The period from 1816 to 1825, while the capital was at Corydon, was one of unprecedented immigration into Indiana. The settlers crowded up the waterways beyond the middle of the state. The number of counties in the state rose from thirteen to fifty-two. Almost all of the territory south of White river was organized and the line of settlement was pushed well to the north of the National road. The latter had not yet been opened and practically all of the settlers came by way of or across the Ohio river."

The long, weary journey in a covered wagon, over rough hills, through tangled valleys, fording streams, slow, tortuous miles traveled, made the final stopping point inviting to the settler, even if it consisted of but a convenient nook in the forest or a sequestered spot on the banks of a stream, for it meant home wherever it was. The first nights were spent under the wagon-canopy or in a lean-to hastily erected of branches and grasses. The pioneer immediately began the erection of his cabin, hewing the logs and notching them into place. A fireplace was constructed in one end of the small hut, made of sticks and mud, and the fire therein afterward served the purpose of light, heat and as a cook-stove. The furniture of the interior was as rough as the cabin itself; three-legged stools, puncheon floor, a bed built against the wall, and a small table generally comprised the interior of the shack. The walls, through which numerous breezes penetrated, were hung on the inside with animal skins, that is, if such skins were procurable. However crude these homes might have been, the health and sturdiness of the occupants was mighty, and many of those who live today in luxury and idleness would swap their all for this strength of body and mind.

A great part of the land in central Indiana in those days was swampy. Sloughs were scattered through the forests and were far from healthy. Ague among the settlers was an established illness, and the best remedy was quinine and whiskey, the latter in quantities. Fevers, the intermittent kind which attend malaria, were frequent too. The people believed many peculiar things about these ailments and the fear of miasma and germ-laden atmosphere was wholesome.

OLD HENDRICKS COUNTY COURT HOUSE

PRESENT COURT HOUSE

Much more could be narrated in this chapter of the first days in the life of Hendricks county, but for the sake of unity these other facts are assigned to the other parts of the book, following closely their respective subjects.

SURVEYS AND INDIAN TREATIES.

At St. Mary's, Ohio, in 1818, a treaty was negotiated by Governor Jennings, General Cass and Judge Benjamin Parke, men who acted as government commissioners, with the Indians. The red men gave up all title to their unceded land south of the Wabash river, except reservations, which included the territory in central Indiana, out of which thirty counties have been laid off, among them Hendricks county. This was the largest of the fifty-two purchases which were required to obtain from the Indians all of the land in the state of Indiana. In the terms of this treaty it was stated that the Indians should have possession of their improvements and reside in the country for a period of three years, after which time a portion of them would have to go upon reservations, but the majority of them were to be transported beyond the great Mississippi river. The government surveys were stipulated to begin immediately, and the ceded lands to be opened to settlers. Prior to this time the land now forming Hendricks county had been occupied by the tribe of Delaware Indians, but, not being located on any of the great war trails or fighting grounds, there were no large Indian villages or Indian improvements in this district. Hendricks county land was used principally as a hunting ground.

The government plans were carried out and the survey started at once. Hendricks county was on the meridian line from which the beginning was made, and accordingly it was surveyed first in 1819. This survey started a great flood of immigration to every corner of the new purchase. In wagons, on foot, horseback, the sturdy men came to build their homes here. Locations were indefinite and the settlers merely contented themselves with finding a convenient spot and then starting a clearing wherein to build their log homes. The Indians were not hostile; in fact, they were very friendly and assisted the home-seeker in many ways. Their knowledge of the hunting and fishing grounds was often a great help to the stranger.

Although the year specified for the removal of the Indians beyond the Mississippi was 1821, it was not until 1826 that the last of them departed. When the first white men came to this county a large band of Indians was found camping on White Lick and Eel rivers. The former they called Wa-pe-ke-way, meaning "white salt;" and the latter they termed Sho-a-mack, which meant "slippery fish."

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT.

In the territory now known and designated as Hendricks county the first settlement was made in the spring of the year 1820 on White Lick creek. The band of settlers who made this initial location, a few miles south of Plainfield, was composed of Bartholomew Ramsey, Samuel Herriman, Harris Bray, John W. Bryant, James Dunn, George Dunn and Ezekiel Moore.

The nearest settlements to this location were along the Wabash river, and in order to establish communication and a road for the transportation of supplies, these men cut a trail through the woods and bushes, and gave it the name of the Terre Haute trail. It passed through Hendricks county about a mile south of what was later the National road, and in this same year of 1820 Nathan Kirk, one of the settlers, afterwards one of the associate judges of the county, located on this trail in the southwest corner of the county and kept a public tavern. He later transported his goods to Clinton county and became the founder of the town of Kirklin. Kirk's prairie was also named after this man.

In the spring months of 1821 Thomas Lockhart, Noah Kellum and Felix Belzer made settlement on the East fork of White Lick, in the southeast corner of what is now Guilford township. Belzer was the most notable of these three men, due to his reputation as a hunter. The tradition is that he killed one hundred and twenty-five deer within a year after he settled in this county. It was in this year, 1821, that the first death occurred in the county, that of Uriah Carson, who had come from Ohio and entered land from the government. He died at the home of Felix Belzer. In the autumn of 1821 William and Thomas Hinton, James Thompson and Robert McCrackin settled on the West fork of White Lick, in the territory now comprising Liberty township. Quite a number of other families settled in the territory now comprising Guilford and Washington townships in the following year of 1822, among them being Jeremiah Hadley, David Carter and Jonathan Hadley, who took the three adjoining farms on the hill immediately east of Plainfield.

SETTLEMENT IN 1824.

In the year 1824 the population of the county was estimated to be one thousand people, settled mostly in the regions in the southeast, with a few settlers near the present site of Danville, Nathan Kirk and Jere Stiles in the southwest corner, and Noah Bateman and a few others along Eel river. The portion of the county now occupied by Union, Middle, Brown and Lincoln townships was then a mosquito-infested swamp, and no settler had the boldness to risk his health by settling there. As late as 1830 there were not more than thirty settlers within this locality. The more rapid and thicker settlement of the other portions of the county was due in a large measure to the better drainage facilities. The northeastern portion of the county was also settled slowly. The building of the Cumberland or National road through the south part of the county in 1830 gave a great advantage to the southern part, this road being a highway for the tide of immigration to the far West. Many of these transcontinental travelers found reason to stop in this locality and remained and became permanent residents. Practically every farmer kept open house; every home was a hotel, and many of the settlers became moderately wealthy by their hospitality.

FIRST IMPROVEMENTS.

The first mill constructed in the county was a horse-mill on East fork of White Lick. It was built and owned by James Tomlinson. The first water-mill was built by John P. Benson on Rock branch in Eel River township in 1826. The first merchandise was sold in Danville by James L. Given. The first resident attorneys were Judge Marvin and Colonel Nave, the latter locating in Danville in 1832, where he was engaged in the practice of law for more than fifty years, until his death, in 1884. In the summer of 1823 the two first school houses were built in the county, one in Liberty township, below Cartersburg, and the other on Thomas Lockhart's land in Guilford township, and in them W. H. Hinton and Abijah Pierson taught the first schools in the county. In this paragraph it is well to mention that the first birth in the county was that of Silas J. Bryant, who was born in Guilford township in 1820, the son of J. W. Bryant.

OTHER FIRST EVENTS.

The first marriage license issued by the county clerk was for the marriage of James Reynolds and Rachel Demoss on November 17, 1824. Samuel Jessup, the first justice of the peace, performed the ceremony. In this same month Charles Merritt and Jemimie Leaman were married by Aaron Homan, a justice of the peace.

The first land deed was made on November 3, 1825, between Samuel Woodward and his wife, Abigail.

The first will recorded in the county was that of Uriah Hults, a farmer.

ORGANIZATION OF HENDRICKS COUNTY.

The act organizing the county of Hendricks was approved on December 29, 1823. The county was named in honor of William Hendricks, then governor of the state of Indiana. The act follows:

"This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

SELECTION OF COUNTY SEAT.

According to the provisions of this act, the men selected began to investigate several claims made for the location of the county seat. Many localities were at work striving for the honor, among them the community near George Mattock's tavern, two miles east of Belleville, where a town had been laid out named Hillsboro. This site was discarded in favor of a location as near as possible to the geographical center of the county, and on the second Monday in July, 1824, the site of Danville was chosen. Four men, Daniel Beals, George Matlock, Robert Wilson and James Downard, heing the owners of land in four sections having a common corner, each donated twenty acres touching the common corner for the benefit of the county seat, all of which was laid out into public square and town lots.

Thomas Hinton was appointed agent of the county, and on October 20, 1824, he placed on file a plat of the town of Danville. The lots were immediately put up at a public sale, and this continued for three days. An order was made by the commissioners for fifteen gallons of whiskey to assist the purchasers in making their selection. Samuel Herriman, the coroner, was the distributor on this occasion. The price paid for the lots ranged from three to one hundred and fifteen dollars. The latter price was given by Mr. Hulse for the lot on the northeast corner of Main and Washington streets. The lot on the southwest corner brought the next highest price.

The court house was completed and the first term of court held in Danville in April of the year 1826. The building was constructed of peeled hickory logs and cost one hundred and forty-seven dollars. The jail was of the same material.

The first county commissioners were Thomas Lockhart, Gideon Wilson and Littlebury Blakely. They divided the county into nine townships, of nearly equal area, and there was sufficient population in but four of the townships at that time to give them a civil organization. The first representative of the county in the General Assembly was Lewis Mastin.

CHAPTER IV.

BROWN TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

In the extreme northeast corner of Hendricks county lies Brown township, comprising about twenty-five square miles of land in townships 16 and 17 north, ranges 1 and 2 east. On the north the township is bounded by Boone county, on the east by Marion county, on the south by Lincoln township and on the west by Middle township. White Lick creek, passing through the western side of the township, drains the largest portion of the land, although Eagle creek carries a large quantity of water from the high country along the eastern border. The soil of Brown township is rich and productive, the nature of the ground being rolling. The central portion is for the most part very level and, before the excellent system of drainage used today, was swampy and of little value. The clay and alluvial soil found in Brown township is without a superior in the county or middle Indiana and is now worth a high price per acre. Practically every acre is under cultivation and made to yield to the utmost of its productiveness without impoverishing the soil.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Until the year 1863 Brown township included what is now Lincoln township. Brown township was named after James Brown, who was the first settler within its boundary. David Sparks, however, was the first white man in this territory; he came in the year 1827, three years before any definite settlement had been made in this portion of the county. Owing to the unfortunate location of the township it has no railroad or interurban line, but the general fertility of its soil largely makes up for this deficiency.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first general election in Brown township was in 1828. From the poll book and tally sheet the following is taken: "At an Election held at the hous of James Brown on the 4th day of August 1828 for the purpos of Electing one Govinor one Lieutenant Govinor one Representator to Congress one Sinitor one representative to State Legislater one Coriner the following is a list of the number of votes taken and also the number Each Candidate receivs." There were twelve voters at this election, namely: James Brown, Joseph Runion, Joshua Newham, William Harris, Thomas Nash, Daniel Newham, George Tyler, James R. Smith, Shannon Foster, Edward Railsback, Jesse Smith and Nathaniel W. Hults. Politically, the township has been strongly Democratic from the beginning.

BROWN TOWNSHIP IN 1914.

The statement has been made that Brown township holds a singular place among the other townships, by not having the usual transportation facilities and the lack of towns. This fact by no means is evidence that the township is behind the others. The farmers are intelligent and capable and the farms they manage are modern and well kept. The science of agriculture has not been a neglected art in this locality, in fact it has been much encouraged, and the tiller of the soil embraces every opportunity to improve his knowledge of the best methods of cultivation.

Roads in this township are excellent, of macadam and gravel and in a high state of improvement. This lends quick access to the railroads and other points in the county. Telephones, both local and long distance, have enabled the people to come into closer communication with their fellows. Schools are now set to a standard of high efficiency, the consolidated school system rapidly coming into effect.

Not only has the farmer paid attention to his farm land, but he has built his residence and his buildings in the most up-to-date fashion. All conveniences are found in the present farm home the same as in the city. Electric lights, telephones, steam heat, water power and sewerage systems are but a few of these.

NEAR TO NATURE'S HEART

CHAPTER V.

CENTER TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

In the center of Hendricks county is located the township of Center. It is in townships 15 and 16 north, ranges 1 east and 2 west, comprising about forty-six square miles. It is bounded on the north by Union and Middle townships, on the east by Middle and Washington, on the south by Liberty and Clay, and on the west by Clay, Marion and Eel River townships. The west fork of White Lick creek, its tributaries, and Mill creek drain the land within the bounds of this township, supplemented today by a very efficient system of artificial drainage. With the exception of the deep, precipitous valley worn through the center of the township by White Lick, the nature of the land is undulating and level. The highest elevation of land in the county is in Center township, gradually sloping away to the border. Woodland once covered this territory, but it has now been reduced to a minimum. It embraces a body of land unexcelled for grazing and of very high rank for fruit and grain production.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND ELECTION.

It is recorded that the earliest settlement was made in Center township in the year 1823. Very few people ever lived in this portion of the county until after the platting of the town of Danville, from which time it began to grow.

There was a general election held in Center township on August 7, 1826, votes being cast for congressman, senator, representative, sheriff and coroner. There were about two hundred people in the township at that time and sixty-six persons voted. The list of voters was as follows: Francis Barbee, Thomas Hinten, Richard Christie, Elijah Thompson, Dickison Thompson, James Thompson, Jeremiah Cutbirth, Thomas Nichols, William Moore, George Moore, Thomas Shelton, Jonathan Wyatt, Nathaniel Kirk, Thomas

CENTER TOWNSHIP TODAY.

Because of the location of Danville, the county seat, Center township today occupys in some respects the foremost place among the twelve townships of the county. In richness, in agriculture and kindred vocation, she is not superior to all of the townships, but holds a high position and is deserving of much credit. The taxpayers are loyal and willing to support any movement for the good of the township and consequently civic pride and intelligent interest in the country has gained a prominent place. The land surrounding Danville is very good farming ground and a visit to the numerous estates will convince the critic that the most modern and efficient methods are used by the farmer in the cultivation of his soil. The homes dotting the broad farms are attractive and equal to the home of the man with urban advantages, something which twenty years ago would have been believed impossible. Telephones, excellent roads, railroads and interurban lines, all contribute to the easy communication with all parts of the county and the state capital. Distance has ceased to be a factor in present-day life. The schools of Center township are of the first class, the religious life is pronounced, and behind all there is a spirit of goodfellowship, progress and industry which prophesies greater and greater things to come.

DANVILLE.

In the year 1824 the first dwelling was constructed on the site of Danville by Daniel Clark. This structure was a log cabin. Immediately after the Iccation of Clark's cabin several other settlers came to the immediate vicinity and made their homes. By the following winter there were quite a number of people living in the neighborhood—in fact, sufficient in number to start a school. The first man to teach here was Wesley McKinley. Doctor Garrett was the first physician to administer to the ill. A hotel, or rather, a log tavern, was opened to the public by Levi Jessup, the first county clerk. He was succeeded in this business in 1828 by Col. Thomas Nichols, who came to Danville in that year and became sheriff of the county. Nichols also interested himself in building houses. In 1829, he constructed, at Danville, the first brick school house in Hendricks county.

In another chapter it is stated that the town of Danville was officially laid out by Thomas Hinton on October 20, 1824.

Immediately after this, cabins began to spring up and with the first one erected by Clark were many, just as unpretentious, but inviting. James L. Givin set up a small store on the north side of the square and there the first merchandise was sold. Flour was not among his stock, however, and people were compelled to go to Indianapolis after that product. The first court house, constructed of peeled hickory logs, cost one hundred and fortyseven dollars. The jail, made of the same material, was back of the building recently occupied by the Thompson jewelry store. It was considered impregnable, with its thick walls, small, high windows, puncheon floors and dungeon The first hotel, then called a tavern, was a large, rambling twostory building situated on the lot now occupied by Beck's restaurant. With its source and multipaned windows, massive door and large chimney, it was a picturesque building. Along the alley was a long, mossy trough, hollowed from a log, from which horses were watered from the tavern well. This tayern was a busy place, especially when court was in session. Those who attended court had to travel over many miles on horseback, through sloughs and forests, over fallen trees, across streams and every other obstacle which impeded the journey of the early traveler. Arriving at the tayern door, cold. tired and hungry, they found rest and food in plenty. The food was not served by courses, or miniature quantities in side dishes, but was literally piled upon the table, the chief dish often being a whole roast pig.

INCORPORATION.

The record of incorporation of the town of Danville reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, President and Clerk of an election held at the court house in the town of Danville, on the 24th day of January, A. D. 1835, agreeably to an order of the Board of County Commissioners, within and for the county of Hendricks, at their January term, 1835, for the purpose of electing five Trustees to serve the corporation of said town of Danville, do certify that at the election aforesaid, we, the undersigned, President and Clerk as aforesaid, after being duly sworn according to law, did proceed to lay off the said town into five districts, as follows, to-wit: District No. One is composed of Blocks No. 1, 2, 3, 14, 15 and 16; District No. Two, of Blocks Nos. 17, 18, 19, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33 and 34; District No. Three, of Blocks Nos. 4. 13. 28 and 35: District No. Four. of Blocks Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12; District No. Five, of Blocks Nos. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 36, 37, 38 and 30; and after the division of the said town into districts, and the same being made known to the qualified voters thereof, who then proceeded to elect one trustee from each district, whereupon the following persons were duly elected, to-wit: Disrict No. 1, Henry G. Todd; District No. 2, Jubal Lee; District No. 3. Charles B. Navlor: District No. 4, James M. Gregg; and District No. 5. William S. Crawford. The foregoing certificate, given pursugnt to the revised code for such case made and provided, together with an act entitled 'An act amendatory of the act entitled an act for the incorporation of towns,' approved February 2, 1832. Given under our hands and seals, this 27th day of January, 1835.

"J. M. Gregg, President."
"Henry G. Todd, Clerk."

After some years under this town charter, it was surrendered, but renewed and the town reincorporated in the year 1859.

TOWN BEGINNINGS.

About the time of the incorporation of Danville the young town was becoming a centering place for the farmers of the county and was regarded as a particularly beautiful place. At that, the appearance of the village was far from what the present dweller would call attractive. The street at the northeast corner of the square was almost a marsh, although steps had been taken to fill it in. The present hollow, a square south of the college, now being filled and a street put through, then extended westward to the McCurdy block and on Tennessee street there was a bridge across it. At the west end of the hollow was a spring of pure water, as there was also in the court house yard. When an election was held in the town some of the voters would get thirsty and depart for the spring in the hollow to get a drink. However, their source of supply was a keg hidden in the bushes alongside the spring.

The main business portion of the town was on the north side of the square. The first brick business room was constructed by Colonel Nave in 1832. It was a square law office, almost comparable in size to a piano box, but was considered elegant then. The second brick building was located on the spot now occupied by Darnell's "Yaller Front." Before it was erected the first postoffice stood there. The postmaster, who was a saddler, plied his trade in the front room. All the stores at this time were general stores, that is, they kept every article of merchandise desired by the settler from dry goods and groceries to plows.

This, in a measure, supplies the reader with a picture of the early Danville. The town has never grown to city proportions, but the improvement since those early times have been timely, and as thorough as if the town had enlarged to ten thousand population.

NAMING OF COUNTY SEAT.

The man directly responsible for the naming of the county seat of Hendricks county was Judge William Watson Wick, one of the pioneer jurists of Indiana. He was judge of the fifth circuit, composed of Lawrence, Monroe, Morgan, Greene, Owen, Marion, Hendricks, Rush, Decatur, Bartholomew. Shelby, Jennings and Johnson counties. Judge Wick was holding court in Hendricks county when the commissioners used ediscussing what to name the county seat. The Judge had a brother named Dan and in honor of him he urged the commissioners to adopt the name Danville, which was done.

AN OLD RESIDENT'S IDEA OF EARLY DANVILLE.

From the manuscript of H. Henry, one of the first men in Danville, the following is taken:

"I came to Danville in August, 1858. That year was, in the language of the farmers, a wet year. The train upon which we came waded through what Major Verbrike would have called 'a wilderness of mud and water' and it made the trip from Cincinnati to Cartersburg in eight hours, which was considered fast time in those days. Coming up to town from Cartersburg in Keeney's hack, I had for fellow passengers Professor Tarr and Clint Petty. The Professor was on his first trip to town to make arrangements to organize the Danville Academy. He was dressed as a minister and was full of missionary zeal. I was loaded for Indians and wild game, and carried a double-barreled shot-gun. Petty was armed with a stone pipe, loaded with long-range tobacco, and, being on his own native soil, he 'got the drop' on the bear hunter and the missionary at once. The Professor looked at my gun and turned up his nose at Petty's pipe, which had made him sea-sick, while he said, 'Please, sir, do not smoke the pipe in this hack.' Petty answered, 'Stranger, I will compromise with you. I will hold my head outside of the window.' The Professor looked at me and my gun as if he wished to shoot the pipe, but I never said a word. I became a silent partner in the compromise with the ways of the wild and woolly west.

"On our arrival in town we were met by the immortal Boone O'Haver, who was the self-appointed keeper of the gates of the city. Boone directed Professor Tarr to the home of a good Methodist brother. Then he took my gun in his hands and escorted me and the oil-cloth carpet sack over to Henry Howell's grocery on the east side of the square, where he introduced me to the 'boys.' Boone gave me a hearty reception. He went in the grocery and brought out a mammoth watermelon and cut it and made the usual mistake of quoting Scripture and crediting it to Shakespeare, by saying to the crowd: 'Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest.'

"The first thing I remember concerning politics after coming to Danville was a joint discussion between Martin M. Ray and Albert G. Porter. The slavery question was, of course, the bone of contention. The orators talked much about 'border ruffians' and 'bleeding Kansas' and had much to say about 'squatter sovereignty.' After the speaking, a tramp shoemaker named Cary Maul, who had gathered the impression that 'squatter sovereignty' was an individual, a bully who had set down on all the government lands in the West and had caused all the political troubles, declared that he would go to Kansas and 'put a hole through Old Squatter Sovereignty.' He added that if Nebraska Bill did not look out he would get shot, too.

"James Peters, a journeyman musical instrument maker, who made dulcimers for Vinson Hamblin in Samuel Hawkins' chair shop, was a genius that only a Charles Dickens could describe properly. He resembled Julius Caesar. He was a college graduate and had, before coming to Danville, been a clerk of a court in Ohio. Peters had met a disappointment in love and had made an unsuccessful effort to drown his sorrows in opium and liquor. One day, while under the influence of liquor, he threw a bucket and a bundle of axhandles through the show-window of a drug store and would have painted the town red if it had not been for the officers of the law. When the marshal and his deputies arrived at Squire Singer's office with Peters there was a large crowd there to see the fun. The Squire was scared and his hand trembled so that he was unable to write. Peters stood before the court with the skirt of his blue cloth coat, which the officers had torn while making the arrest, dragging on the floor. He said in a voice which would have done credit to Edwin Forrest, addressing the crowd. 'We did not come here to praise Caesar, but to bury him.' Then he walked around the railing and took the pen out of the trembling hand of the justice and made the necessary entries on the docket, instructed the prosecutor as to his duties, worked in the capacity of attorney for both sides of the case and so expedited the business of the court that the trial lasted only a few minutes. He paid his fine and went to Armstrong's tailoring shop for repairs. Peters and Judge Marvin used to discuss for hours the subject of astronomy. They had, according to Welshans, completely covered the walls and floor of the room with diagrams of the heavens and the earth, drawn in chalk. Peters had taken the contrary side in the argument in order to draw the Judge out. The debate closed by the Judge calling Peters a blank fool. Peters was living in Springfield, Illinois, when Lincoln was nominated and he wrote to Alf. Welshans a nice letter describing the jollification held at Lincoln's home.

"Warner Vestal, editor of the Hendricks County Ledger, requested Peters to read the proof of a long article he had written for that paper. Peters took the proof slips to his room and in about two hours he came back with the slips together with an exhaustive criticism on the article longer than the original. Vestal said, 'I can not make the corrections on your article intime to go to press.' Peters said, 'My article? I have written nothing that needs correcting.' 'You wrote the whole business,' said the editor. Peters had written the first article when intoxicated and did not remember it. He was at himself when he read the proof. The article was put on the dead galley rack, but the proof slips and the criticisms were kept as object lessons by the editor and printers for many a day. Peters met his fate in Libby prison near the close of the war.

"Thomas N. Jones was a many-sided character and a good citizen. He was fond of all kinds of innocent amusements and at almost every entertainment he was a star performer, always appearing in a comedy of blunders. Whether it was the mind-reading phrenologist or the gag of the circus clown or the mystifying ventriloquist or the simple twist of the wrist of the street fakir, Tom always took the cake as the victim of every trick and joke. During the years that the 'Sons of Temperance' wave swept over the country, that society held a temperance celebration at Indianapolis. On the day of the grand parade, Tom was in command of the Hendricks county division. The weather was very hot, the people in the parade were very thirsty and a committee was supplying drinking water, which they carried in buckets. Tom's division had been served with a drink, but it did not satisfy Tom and he arose in his regalia and 'fuss and feathers' to the attitude of a magazine picture of 'Washington crossing the Delaware,' and yelled at the top of his voice, 'More water for the Danville delegation.' The grotesqueness of the commander's efforts to get drinks for the banner temperance delegation was too much for the spectators and they responded with laughter and applause. And Tom's words were passed along the line and were the toast of the day to which tin cups rattled and beer glasses clinked. To the day of Jones' death, he never heard the last of 'More water for the Danville delegation.'

"One day at a circus he assisted Richard Hemming, the celebrated rope-walker, in a tight rope act. Hemming carried Mr. Jones under the rope by straps looped to his feet. When the walker arrived over the dustiest spot in the ring he let Mr. Jones fall in the dirt to the infinite delight of the audience, who greeted him with the usual encore. To this day tight rope and Tom Jones are twin geraniums. The secret order known as the Sons of Malta did not have a lodge in Danville, but Jones never missed anything. He went to Indianapolis and joined and very nearly met his death during his initiation into the order. The practical jokers worked him up to a fever heat until he almost sweat blood, then let him fall from a great height into a tank of ice water. He admitted that this experience took the conceit out of him, but don't you believe it."

PRESENT CITY.

The officers of the town of Danville in 1914 are: F. H. Huron, C. E. Allred, H. S. Curtis, W. L. Holman, Simon Hadley, trustees; Charles T. Clark, clerk; James V. Cook, treasurer; Thomas R. Harney, engineer; John Hume and C. W. Gaston, attorneys, and W. T. Lawson, health officer.

In eleven blocks in Danville the streets are paved with brick and there is in addition twelve miles of macadam streets and many miles of cement sidewalks

An extensive sewerage system is now being placed in Danville, the cost of which is to be close to twenty thousand dollars. A septic tank for the purification of the sewage is constructed east of town.

The Danville water works, a municipal plant, supplies the town with pure water from artesian wells.

The water used in Danville is without a superior in the United States. It comes from flowing wells and is almost entirely pure. It is also of high medicinal value. The formal analysis follows: Solids, 33.9; chlorein, faint trace; ammonia, none; nitrates, nitrites, none; total hardness, 8.65. It is medicinal in quality. Not a case of typhoid fever has been contracted in the town since this water has been used.

The Danville Light, Heat and Power Company, a corporation owned by Indianapolis capital, is the largest of its kind in the county and one of the largest in the state. It is considered a model plant. It is worth about one hundred thousand dollars. This company supplies power not only for Danville, but also for Plainfield, Clayton, Pittsboro and Brownsburg, also many farm houses. It is the ambition of this concern to supply the power for every factory in Hendricks county. The power house is fitted with all the modern machinery to be found in plants of its kind. The town of Danville is considering a new system of street lighting, to replace the old style now in use.

COMMERCIAL CLUB.

The Danville Commercial Club was organized on January 20, 1911. The organization is governed by a constitution and by-laws, which provides a fee of five dollars for membership and fifty cents dues per month for each member. They also provide for numerous committees, among which are the executive committee of seven members, boosting committee of ten members, an advertising committee of five members, and from time to time special committees are appointed to carry out worthy projects.

Early in its career the club organized a boys' band, which has continued to be a success to the present time. The club has, among its many aims, the following: to secure more factories, better mail and transportation facilities, to decrease danger at car crossings by reducing speed limit and to urge the installation of proper signals, to create a suburban residence city, to keep the town clean and the atmosphere pure, to create better business conditions by securing better markets for farm products.

SOCIAL CLUBS.

In harmony with the cultured life of Danville, there are several social clubs, which, in themselves, form an important part of the town. Charity, high moral standards, patriotism, civic honor, education, purity of life, honorable ambition, are sentiments that mark the right growth of a city and these sentiments have been promoted by the noble women of Danville, individually and in club life and organized concert of action. All these clubs do their part to lighten burdens, to broaden education, and to promote the graces of true culture.

The Social Dozen is a club with a membership limited to fourteen. It is an embroidery club and its object is to do variegated needlework, besides the social side.

DANVILLE'S CLASSIC LIBRARY BUILDING

DANVILLE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

In February, 1902, the president of the Commercial Club, Mord Carter, wrote a letter to Andrew Carnegie, explaining the needs of the town for funds to build a library building, which resulted in an offer from Mr. Carnegie to donate ten thousand dollars for the erection of the building, provided that the town would make a levy that would raise on thousand dollars per year and provide a suitable site for the building. The Commercial Club, ladies' clubs, college faculty, town trustees, school board and citizens came forward with aid and a literary board was organized under the acts of 1901. A lot was purchased by popular subscription and the plans submitted by S. C. Dark, of Indianapolis, Indiana, were accepted. A contract was let to W. C. Halstead & Company of Franklin, Indiana, for the erection of the building. The township afterward came in under the provisions of the law and made a levy of one-tenth of a mill on each dollar and the town a levy of one cent on the dollar, the two levies raising about one thousand five hundred dollars annually for the support and building up of the library.

The building was dedicated on September 5, 1903. The ladies' clubs raised about three hundred dollars for books and many other volumes were donated, making in all about one thousand volumes. The number of volumes in the library in May, 1914, is about five thousand. Most of the leading magazines of the country are taken. There are enrolled upon the books of the library at this latter date nineteen hundred and sixty readers. The present board consists of the following: Dr. Joel T. Barker, Henry C. Hadley, Mrs. Mattie A. Keeney, Mrs. Josephine K. Thomas, Mrs. J. D. Hogate, Charles Z. Cook, W. C. Osborne, John W. Whyte and Thad. S. Adams. Dr. Joel T. Barker is president; Thad. S. While the Civil War was in progress the First National Bank of Danville was organized with $60,000 capital, September 24, 1863, under the new law of Congress enacted a few months before and entitled an "Act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved February 25, 1863. The bank was authorized to commence business on December 11, 1863, and was the one hundred and fifty-second chartered bank in the United States. The bank opened its doors in a building a few doors south of its present site. At a later date it was moved to the Estep block, north of the court house. It moved to the present location upon the erection of the building in 1897. The present officers of the bank are: W. C. Osborne, president; F. J. Christie, cashier; Charles Z. Cook, assistant cashier. The present capital is $100,000; deposits, $350,000; surplus, $40,000. The bank charter has been twice renewed, once in 1883 and again in 1903.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF DANVILLE.

The Danville public schools graduated the first class in the year 1880. This class consisted of but one member, Belle Kennedy. Since that time there have been nearly three hundred and fifty graduated. The largest class was graduated in 1910, consisting of twenty-three members. Many of the graduates have continued their studies in higher institutions of learning, but a majority have entered upon their life work without any other training than that given in the high school. The people of Danville have spared no expense in giving the young people of the community the advantages enjoyed by the most favored in the state.

The first brick school house in the county was built at Danville in 1829. The second free school, as it was called, was a two-story frame, situated on the lot across the street south from the old college building. This burned in the fall of 1872. The following year another school building was constructed, but in 1878 fire destroyed it to such an extent that it had to be nearly entirely rebuilt. The present high school building was completed in 1900.

COURT HOUSE HISTORY.

The first court house in Danville was constructed of peeled hickory logs and the jail, back of the present location of Thompson's jewelry store, was of the same material. In the year 1830 a second court house was built and was a square, brick building. The third court house was completed in the year 1862 and cost sixty thousand dollars. The building was considered a substantial one and of elegant architecture for the time. The first floor was taken up mainly by the county offices and on the second floor was the court room, considered one of the best in the state. The building was surmounted by two towers, upon one of which was an observatory. This court house performed good service for many years or until eight-thirty o'clock on the night of January 9, 1912, when the whole roof collapsed, completely wrecking the upper floor of the building. Fortunately, it was an hour when the place was deserted or there would have been fatalities. Court had been held that very day; also for many weeks noises of cracking had been heard, but unheeded,

The county council held a meeting on Monday, January 22, 1912, for the purpose of discussing the building of a new court house. There was no definite action taken, due to two factions in the council and much difference of opinion. On February 3d, however, they met again and appropriated two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the erection of a new court house. Bonds were ordered issued. The work of advertising for bids, etc., went on and the contract was awarded. Clarence Martindale is the architect of the new court house structure. The first thing done was the razing of the ruins of the old court house. This was done, most of the bricks being deposited in the fill at the east end of Marion street. The corner stone for the new court house was laid on May 29, 1913, with fitting ceremonies.

The new court house, now well along in the process of construction, is to be one of the most efficient and beautiful in the state of Indiana. The house is constructed of Bedford oolitic stone and the best steel. The inside wainscoting and corridor floors are to be of marble. The court room is to have monolithic floors, art glass sky-light and ornamental plaster ceiling. The dimensions of the court house are one hundred and eleven by one hundred and forty-two by one hundred and thirteen feet and forty-eight feet in height. The two court rooms, the grand jury room and the county surveyor's office are on the third floor, the principal county offices are on the second floor, and on the first floor are the minor offices, the county superintendent's office, rest rooms, Grand Army of the Republic room. The building is to be heated by steam and lighted by electricity. A modern ventilating system is installed and a vacuum cleaning apparatus. An electric elevator will run the entire height of the building. This building has a copper roof and is considered absolutely fire-proof. The architecture is of the Renaissance style mainly, with features of other architectural designs. The natural lighting of the building is an important asset. P. H. McCormack Company, of Columbus, Indiana, are the contractors.

THE JAIL.

The present jail building in Danville was erected in the year 1869. In January, 1865, the county board of commissioners ordered the sheriff "to sell at public outcry to the highest bidder the old county jail, reserving all the iron and stone in said building to the county, also to sell the old fence around said house." This was done and it was ordered that Martin Gregg be appointed to examine jails in other counties and employ an architect to give a draft and estimated cost of such a building and report on the same. Pending the erection of the new jail the jury room in the north side of the old court house served the purpose of a bastile. The cost of the jail was approximately thirty thousand dollars. In 1914 a new heating plant is being installed.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Western Star Lodge No. 26, Free and Accepted Masons, at Danville, was organized under dispensation February 10, 1846, and the charter is dated May 30th following. James L. Hogan was the first worshipful master; J. D. Parker, senior warden, and William L. Matlock, junior warden. Col. Thomas Nichols, a pioneer justice of the peace, was the first man initiated into this lodge. This lodge now has a membership of about one hundred and seventy-five.

Application having been made in due form for the organization of a Grand Army of the Republic post in Danville, a dispensation was granted and General James R. Carnahan, in company with a number of comrades from George H. Thomas Post, of Indianapolis, reported on the evening of mustering the post. The meeting was held in the court room and an organization effected and officers elected. This was on April 27, 1883. Fifty-six comrades were mustered as charter members and this number quickly mounted to well over a hundred. The first officers included such men as: Alfred Welshans, commander; John Messler, and James J. Bell, Thomas J. Coffer, Daniel Kelleher, Charles W. Stewart, John W. Tinder, H. Hall, Leroy H. Kennedy, William H. Nichols and Stanley A. Hall. The roster of the post, taken in May, 1013, numbered forty-four men.

The post is gradually growing smaller, each year many of the veterans being called from the ranks by death. However, the post is active here and each year Memorial Day is sacredly observed. The Sunday schools, Central Normal College and citizens generally unite with the post in the strewing of flowers and reviving the memories of the deceased comrades.

PUBLIC PARK.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable facts about Daville, considering its size, is that the town boasts of a public park. Ground for this park was purchased in 1913 at a cost of two hundred dollars an acre for twenty acres. The Commercial Club pushed this deal until the city decided to buy the property. The city employed a landscape gardener, who has planted about two thousand trees and shrubs on the ground. A baseball diamond and grandstand have been constructed and this summer it is planned to obstruct the stream, which flows throught the grounds, and a bathing beach created.

CHAPTER VI.

CLAY TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The land surface of Clay township is in most respects similar to the rest of the county. The township is one of the smaller ones and is drained by the three forks of Mill creek. The land is practically level, with slight valleys made by the streams, and the drainage, now aided by artificial means, is adequate. The quality of the land in this township is good. The farmers have managed, by skillful cultivation and intelligent study, to derive large profits from the soil and are to be commended, especially for this work and progress. The St. Louis division of the Big Four railroad, the Vandalia, and the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern interurban line traverse the township and, supplemented with an excellent system of gravel and macadam roads, make the township strictly a modern one and a pleasurable location in which to live.

ORGANIZATION.

The township was formed by separating from the north end of Franklin township three tiers of sections of land and taking three sections off the southeast corner of Marion township, thereby giving Clay township an area of twenty-four square miles. This organization was executed by the board of county commissioners in the year 1845.

The poll book of the first election, held at Springfield, in Clay township, August 3, 1846, gives the names of one hundred and one voters. They were Peter Long, Wesley Hardwick, Joshua F. Huckings, Mordecai Samuels, Abraham West, Benjamin Pickett, Caleb Hunt, Thomas J. Hadley, Erasmus Nichols, Milton Asher, Phineas Moon, Eli Hodson, Job Hadley, Henry Bland, Robert Harvey, Mencher Coe. John Candiff, John Harlan, John Gambold, Phineas Tomilson, Ransom Estes, Edward B. Hall, James Hayworth, John Hancock, William Cosner, Joel W. Hodson and William Beechardson.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement in Clay township was made near the year 1825. The exact identity of the first settler is not known, but among the families which came prior to 1832 were those of Obadiah, George and John Tincher, John Hadley, Joel and Jesse Hodson. William Benbow, Doctor Kersey, Newbry Hunt, Abraham West, Nicholas Osburn and George Hancock.

PECKSBURG.

The village of Pecksburg was named in honor of the first president of the Vandalia railroad. The village is located near the east line of Clay township on section 31. The plat of Pecksburg was officially recorded on May 24, 1853. Some of the earliest settlers in the neighborhood of Pecksburg were David Wreitzel, John Sheerer and Daniel Wreitzel. They settled two miles south of the present village in a very early day and constructed a log church of the Lutheran denomination. This afterwards was abandoned and a frame built in Pecksburg, which still stands, about sixty years old. It is not used at present, however. Abraham West had a grist mill near here in the early days, but sold out to John Sheerer. When the Vandalia was built, through the village, Sheerer opened the first store, having a general assortment of goods.

The village at present is very small, comprising but one general store, in charge of Mr. Wreitzel, a descendant of David and Daniel Wreitzel, and a few houses. The Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern interurban line, Brazil division, and the Vandalia railroad pass through here.

AMO.

Two miles west of Pecksburg, on sections 2, 3, 34 and 35, is the town of Amo, one of the voting places of the township. This village was laid out in 1850 by Joseph Morris and was originally Morristown. The first house in this village was constructed by William Tomlinson. The present town has a population of about three hundred people and is incorporated, this having been voted in 1913. The board of trustees is composed of G. G. Hunter, J. S. Carter, H. C. Summers; C. C. Burch is clerk and W. A. Barker is marshal. The town of Amo bears the appearance of prosperity and will in all probabilities have a marked growth in the next few years. The incorporation has been a good thing for the town and the business men have planned to make the most of it.

The First National Bank, of Amo, was organized on January 20, 1906, by John Kendall and others. J. N. Phillips was the first president of the bank; H. C. Summers, the first vice-president; John Kendall, cashier; W. H. White and E. B. Owen, second and third vice-presidents. The capital stock is $25,000, the deposits amounted to $88,168 and the surplus is $5,000. The present officers are as follows: E. B. Owen, president; George W. Christie, vice-president; J. N. Phillips, cashier; Milber Kendall, assistant cashier. This bank opened for business on July 23, 1906.

Amo Lodge No. 701, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has a present membership of over one hundred. The lodge was instituted in 1899. Amo Tribe No. 503, Improved Order of Red Men, has seventy-five members.

RENO.

Reno is a small village located in Clay township on section 30. The village originated with the building of the Indiana & St. Louis railroad, now the Big Four, in 1870. The official plat of the village was recorded on December 10, 1870. The town in 1914 is exceedingly small and with no industrial activity.

HADLEY.

The village of Hadley, in Clay township, is a railroad station on section 23. The official plat was recorded March 28, 1872.

COATESVILLE.

It is unfortunate that more of the early history of the town of Coatesville is not obtainable. Even the official plat of the town has been lost. The town, however, was orginated sometime in the late sixties and quickly became a prosperous community. The town, by the census of 1910, had a population of four hundred and seventy-two people, but this is conceded to have grown to nearly six hundred in 1914.

The town was incorporated in the year 1909 and the present officers are: Trustees, Marvin Hunt, R. C. Knight and James Davidson; clerk, Clarence Shortridge; marshal, O. E. McCammick. The town is supplied with electricity from the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction Company.

The business houses and residences of the town of Coatesville are attractive and orderly, in fact, to the visitor the town presents an aspect of civic pride and a progressive community. Everything is modern, the streets are well cared for and trade is excellent. The citizens claim that there is not a poor merchant in the town. A new high school was constructed in 1911 and is a model of its kind.

The Coatesville Bank was organized in May, 1902, by Messrs. Beck, Moffet and Reeds. It was reorganized in 1906 as the First National Bank, commencing business on January 1, 1907. Coatesville Lodge No. 695, Free and Accepted Masons, has fifty-three members.

CHAPTER VII.

EEL RIVER TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Eel River township is in the extreme northwest corner of Hendricks county. It is bounded on the north by Boone county, on the east by Union and Center townships, on the south by Marion township, on the west by Putnam and Montgomery counties. The natural drainage of the most of this township is excellent; the east and west sides are rather flat and not adequately drained by the streams, although the farmers have at this time provided artificial means which remedy this deficiency. In the southwest corner of this township are found many high elevations, some of the hills below the juncture of Rock Branch and Eel River rising one hundred feet above the bed of the stream and now covered with a luxuriant second growth of timher. Five good-sized streams enter the township near the southwest corner, merging into Eel river. The picturesqueness of these stream valleys, the rich, wooded banks rising from them and the well-arranged farm lands lying behind, supplies beauty of landscape unequaled in the county. It is the garden sport of Hendricks. The land in this locality is uniformly good and is well adapted to any kind of cultivation.

The Ben-Hur division of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern line crosses the northeast corner of this township.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the spring of 1824 the first white settlers came to Eel River township. They were Noah Bateman and Reuben Claypool and they located a mile south of North Salem. They were followed in the fall of that year by John Claypool and John S. Woodward. Among the others who located in this township, previous to 1830, were James Trotter, Henry Bales, J. and Martha Page, John P. Benson, Robert Covey, Enoch Davis and his sons, William, Frank and Jesse, William Dewitt, Dr. Collins, Andrew Clifton, James Campbell, Mr. Crum and the Penningtons. John Benson built the first mill in the county on Rock Branch in the year 1826. This structure lasted but a few years when Mr. Crum built a mill on Eel River, not far from the site of the former mill. About the year 1830 a distillery was started near Crum's mill. This was the first in the county.

The date of the organization was somewhere near the year 1828, four years after the organization of the county.

THE BOULDER CLUB.

The citizens of Eel River, at an early date, passed what was known as a "stay law," in defense of their property, which was often taken and sold by the constable. Whenever the constable advertised any property for sale the club would meet on the night before and carry a number of boulders which they piled on the ground as a notice to the constable not to offer the property for sale.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first general election held in Eel River township was on August 7, 1826. The men who voted at this election were Abel Pennington, Lewis Benson, Jacob Shoemaker, William Turner, Jacob Crum, A. Jones, James Fowler, Jesse Turner, John Warker, Hampton Pennington, Daniel Turner, John Woodward, John Turner, David Evans, Edward Turner, William Hinton, David Claypool, W. Jones, Christian Hartman, John Fowler, Noah Bateman, Y. L. Huggs, John Claypool, Alva Benson, Little Huggs and William Fowler.

THE TOWNSHIP TODAY.

To describe Eel River township of today the same words used in the account of the other civil divisions might be used. The township has no large settlements, but has developed in agricultural lines during the past score of years until now it occupies a marked position in the county. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton railroad traverses the township, east and west, near the center and the Peoria division of the Big Four and the Ben-Hur interurban line cross near the north part of the township, providing direct intercourse with the chief markets of the state. The schools have grown and become modern in every respect, following the new thought of consolidation. The people of the township have directed a large part of their efforts to the betterment of the roads. The old dirt road, with its sloughs and dangerous holes, has been replaced by excellent gravel and macadam highways. The farms are cultivated according to the latest practices employed over the country and along with care for proper cultivation has become a pride in the appearance of the field, the equipment and the residence. Many a farm home viewed by the traveler in Eel River township is impressive and suitable for the largest cities.

NORTH SALEM.

North Salem is the only village in Eel River township. It was laid out in 1835 by John and David Claypool and John S. Woodward. The town has always been a prosperous one, even from the beginning, a new life having been given by the building of the railroad, now the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad. The United States census report for 1910 gives the population of North Salem as five hundred and sixty-nine, which number had grown proportionately larger in the past five years.

The place was incorporated as a town in May, 1899, and town officers elected. The offices in 1914 are filled as follows: Trustees, J. H. Page, Harry Seaton and Harry Dean; clerk, Smith Davis; marshal, Virgil Robbins. About ten years ago the town installed an acetylene plant, for residence and street lighting. This public utility was recently improved and enlarged and is now worth four thousand dollars.

The North Salem Bank was organized in 1891 by Pritchard & Son, of Illinois, and in 1893 the business was purchased by the present owners and has since been controlled by home people. C. W. Davis is president of the bank, G. B. Davis, cashier, and J. B. Fleece, assistant cashier. The average deposits amount to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

North Salem Lodge No. 142, Free and Accepted Masons, was chartered on May 25, 1853, and was the first secret order in the town. This lodge is in good condition now and has a membership of ninety.

North Salem Lodge No. 158, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was chartered on April 15, 1865, with the following first members: William Adair, John S. Woodward, James White, John M. Hensley, James Shakles and H. W. Hackley. This lodge today has a membership of one hundred and fifty-eight.

North Salem Lodge No. 291, Knights of Pythias, has at present sixtyfive members. This lodge was organized about ten years ago.

Joe Fleece Post No. 383, Grand Army of the Republic, at North Salem, was mustered, in September, 1884, with ten charter members. This post is not active at the present time.

CHAPTER VIII.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

In the extreme southwest corner of the county is located Franklin township, containing parts of township 14 north, ranges 1 and 2 west. It is bounded on the north by Clay township, on the east by Liberty, on the south by Morgan and Putnam counties, and on the west by Putnam county. The soil level is comparatively flat in the northwestern and southeastern portions, but in the central part it assumes a rolling character. Mill creek and its tributaries drain the township in the central and west and Mud creek drains the southeastern part. These streams are small but of great value to the land. For cultivation the soil of Franklin township is unsurpassed in Hendricks county, especially for corn. It has a rich, alluvial quality, free from sand and alkali, and is of high productiveness.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND EVENTS.

Judge Nathan Kirk was the first settler in the township of Franklin. In 1820 he located on Mill creek, where it was crossed by the old Terre Haute trail, and in this place he kept a sort of tavern, a resting place for the weary traveler. Jeremiah Stiles, the founder of Stilesville, was the next settler of whom there is any account. He came in 1823. He was followed shortly by the following: John Swart, John and Isaac Wilcox, John Eslinger, David Orsborn and Jacob Reese.

The date of the organization of the township is in doubt, but it is certain that it was very shortly after the organization of the county. Jere Stiles was the first justice of the peace. Samuel Wicks was the first merchant in the township, in Stilesville, which had been laid off in 1830, and Doctor Mahan was the first physician.

FIRST ELECTION.

At Stilesville, on August 1, 1831, was held the first general election of the township. Forty voters were registered on the poll books. Their names follow: William Shipley, Jonathan Sparks, Joseph Petty, Jacob Reese, Jeremiah Stiles, James Kelly, John Brown, George H. Keller, George Morris, George Hancock, Henry Reese, William Thomas, Peter Pearson, Thomas Wood, Edward Shipley, Samuel Wick, Daniel Austin, Lorenzo D. Cleghorn, James Walls, Isaac Odle, William Scott, Charles Smith, Silas Rustin, William Wilcox, Absalom Snoddy, Samuel Gerber, Monroe Cleghorn, Joseph Cleghorn, William Snoddy, James Pritchett, Eli Lee, Frederick Cosner, William Becknell, Joshua Rustin, James Bray, James Wiece, John Hancock, Silas Bryant, Nicholas Osborn and Garry Morris.

The vote at this election was counted by James Walls and Silas Bryant, as judges, with Thomas Wood and John Hancock as clerks, and Jeremiah Stiles as inspector.

Until the election of 1856 Franklin township was very strongly Whig in sentiment, then became Republican. The Democrats have recently become the strongest party in the township.

THE TOWNSHIP IN 1914.

To give a proper description of the present Franklin township would require much more space than is available here. In a word, the township has become one of the best in the county and her institutions, schools, churches, commercial activities, etc., have grown rapidly in the past twenty years or so. Railroad facilities are poor in this township and the chief town, Stilesville, is entirely removed from the steel lines of transit. Noth-withstanding this deficiency, the excellent roads and the automobile have enabled the farmer and business man to maintain adequate communication with the rest of the county. And, too, the telephone, both local and long distance, have been a great factor in the growth of Franklin township.

STILESVILLE.

Stilesville was laid off as a village in 1828 and a small settlement started. The opening of the national road through this county, in 1830, passing directly through Stilesville, made the town of some importance in the early day, but now the place has been forced to the rear by the absence of either railroad or interurban line. Passengers are transferred to Amo, four miles northeast, in order to reach the steel lines.

At first, Stilesville was a stopping place for emigrants bound for the West and it became quite popular. The town has since kept pace with modern progress and now presents a neat and attractive appearance. It is not an incorporated town. Among the new features of the town is the new high school building, constructed in 1912 at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. Good accommodations may be secured in Stilesville; in fact, in most respects it has overcome the handicap of being without railroad facilities.

The Citizens State Bank was organized in the year 1913 by a stock company. It succeeded the bank owned by E. R. Robards. The first officers were John E. Hicks, president; B. W. Anderson, vice-president; Chester G. Pike, cashier. These officers are the same now, except the office of vice-president, which is filled by Charles W. Robards. The bank was chartered May 27, 1913. The capital stock is $25,000; the deposits, $65,000 and surplus, $2,200.

Larabee Lodge No. 131, Free and Accepted Masons, was organized at Stilesville in May, 1852. This lodge is still in existence and has good support, having sixty-five members.

Stilesville Lodge No. 538, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized fifteen years ago, and now has one hundred and twenty-five members.

Enoch Alexander Post No. 265, Grand Army of the Republic, at Stilesville, was mustered in the fall of 1833 with thirteen charter members. This post is not active at the present time, many of the comrades having passed away.

CHAPTER IX.

GUILFORD TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Guilford township is situated in the southeast corner of Hendricks county; is bounded on the north by Washington township, on the east by Marion county, on the south by Morgan county and on the west by Liberty township. White Lick creek flows through the central portion, the East fork thereof and Clark's creek through the east side, and the West fork of White Lick, with a small tributary, across the west side. This network of streams supplies perhaps the best natural drainage system of any township in the county. The water adds greatly to the value of the land also; the uplands are rolling and the stream valleys are fertile and of high productive quality. Walnut, poplar and maple timber was at one time thick over this township, but this has been reduced by the encroachments of agriculture to a very small per cent. of the original.

SETTLEMENT.

Guilford township was the first in the county to be entered by white settlers. This was in the year 1820. In that year Samuel Herriman, James Dunn, Bat Ramsey, Harris Bay, John W. Bryant and George Moore settled on White Lick, south of Plainfield, near the Morgan county line. Here they set up their cabins, cleared ground and raised a few small crops of corn and potatoes. In the spring of 1821 Noah Kellum, Thomas Lockhart, Mr. Plummer and Felix Balzer settled on the East fork, and Matthew Lowder, Jesse Hockett and Robert Tomlinson on White Lick, south of Plainfield. In the spring of 1822 Jeremiah Hadley, Jonathan Hadley and David Carter settled on adjoining lands on the hills immediately east of the present town of Plainfield and were the first to locate in that neighborhood. In the same year James Downard settled on the state farm. In 1824 Guilford township contained more people than all the other townships combined. The Friends were the majority of the early settlers and to this day this religious denomination is strong in the township. The civil division was named in honor of Guilford county, North Carolina, by Samuel Jessup, due to the fact, doubt-less, that a large number of the emigrants came from that place.

FIRST ELECTIONS.

Samuel Jessup was the first justice of the peace in Guilford township and in Hendricks county. He was elected in the autumn of 1822, under the jurisdiction of Morgan county, to which Hendricks county was attached for two years for judicial purposes before its organization. Mr. Jessup was elected by the first political campaign in the county. John and Samuel Jessup, on East fork, were also candidates, and Gideon Wilson, near Shiloh. There were fifteen voters below and eight in Wilson's vicinity. A caucus was held in the Fairfield neighborhood, and it was found that there would be no election if all the candidates remained in the field, and as Samuel had the most votes it was decided that John should withdraw from the race, which he did, and Samuel was chosen.

The poll book of the first general election held in Guilford township, on August 7, 1826, at the house of John Jessup, gives a list of forty-two voters, which is manifestly incomplete, namely: Timothy Jessup, Thomas Lockhart, James McClure, John White, Noah Kellum, Isaac Sanders, Harmon Hiatt, Adin Ballard, Benjamin Sanders, Henry Bland, Robert Tomlinson, Joseph Chandler, John Hiatt, Elihu Jackson, Joseph Ballard, Charles Reynolds, Pratt W. Jessup, Joseph Jessup, Joel Jessup, John Hawkins, Lee Jessup, Abijah Pinson, John Jessup, Joseph P. Jessup, Levi Cook, Henry Reynolds, Timothy H. Jessup, James C. Tomlinson, Joseph Cloud, John Lemon, John Carson, David Stutesman, James Ritter, William Merritt, Solomon Edmundson, John Ballard, David Ballard, Robert Lemon, Joseph Hiatt, Jesse Kellum, Thomas R. Ballard and John Harris. Guilford township has always been Republican in politics, following from the support of the Whig party.

GUILFORD IN 1914.

Because of the location of Plainfield, the second town in the county, Guilford township is perhaps next to the leading, if not the leading, civil division in the county. It has the advantage in not only having a good population, but in having exceptional land, rich and fertile, and capable of producing record crops. The farmers are of the best class in the state and are all in a prosperous condition. The appearance of the farms, the buildings and the residences is the strongest testimony to this fact. Much attention has been given to the roads of the township. Gravel highways, and many macadamized, form a network over the division. Two railroads and two interurban lines cross the county, all going into Indianapolis.

PLAINFIELD.

The town of Plainfield is the second town in the county in size. It was laid out by Elias Hadley and Levi Jessup in the year of 1839. Thomas Worth built the first frame house in the town and Worth & Brothers were the first merchants.

In 1839 Plainfield was incorporated as a town, and the officers of the election made the following report:

"We, the undersigned president and clerk chosen and qualified according to law, do hereby certify that we did, on the morning of the 25th of May, 1839, lay off the said town into five districts, to-wit: That the town lots lying east of Center street and north of the national road shall be known as the first district; that the lots lying east of Center street south of the national road shall be known as the second district; that the lots lying between Center and Mills street south of the national road, shall be known as the third district; that the town lots lying between Center and Mills streets, north of the national road, shall be known as the fourth district; and that the town lots lying west of Mills street shall be known as the fifth district.

"And we do further certify that David G. Worth, Eli K. Caviness, James M. Long, Andrew Prather and James M. Blair were duly elected trustees of the town of Plainfield according to law.

"DAVID G. WORTH, President.

"Attest: Isaac Osborn, Clerk."

At this election the following twenty-three persons voted: Daniel Barker, David G. Worth, M. G. Taylor, David Barker, Jesse Hocket, James M. Blair, A. C. Logan, A. Prather, Luther Sikes, James M. Long, James T. Downard, Eli K. Caviness, M. G. Corlew, Joel Hodgin, Muling Miller, Thomas J. Worth, Benjamin Lawrence, David Phillips, V. C. Gitchens, John Shelley, Isaac Osborn, Isaac Holton and William Osborn. These were among the prominent first settlers of the town of Plainfield. This incorporation charter was later given up, due to unsuccessful attempts at town government. Township rule was considered to be the best. However, on June 25, 1904, the town of Plainfield was again incorporated as a town. In the second in corporation the first officers were: M. M. Fraser, J. A. Johnson and John L. Gunn, trustees; Charles R. Harvey, clerk; Jacob Wickliff, marshal. The present town officers are as follows: Joseph Pruitt, Charles Harvey and E. E. Watson, trustees; R. M. Hadley, clerk and treasurer; Frank Fields, marshal.

The Plainfield water works is a municipally-owned plant, built in 1913, at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars. Electricity is supplied by the Danville Light, Heat and Power Company.

THE PRESENT TOWN.

The town of Plainfield had a population in 1910 of one thousand three hundred and three. The town has the appearance of a much larger city; the residences are commodious and of pleasing architecture and the business section has the air of prosperity and civic excellence. The town is reached by the Vandalia and the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern lines and much commercial and social intercourse is held with the city of Indianapolis and other towns on the lines.

The Citizens' State Bank of Plainfield was organized in 1889 by George W. Bell. It was chartered in that year and in 1909 this charter was renewed. The first officers of the bank were: Harlan Hadley, president; John A. Miles, vice-president; George W. Bell, cashier. William Lewis, Ezra H. Cox, T. F. Roberts, David Hadley and John R. Weer were associated with the institution. The present officers are: John L. Gunn, president; John M. Brown, vice-president; Emil B. Mills, cashier; Ralph B. Hornaday, assistant cashier. The capital stock is $25,000; deposits, $145,000; surplus and undivided profits, $30,000.

Plainfield Lodge No. 286, Free and Accepted Masons, was organized October 21, 1862, with the following officers: Amos Easterling, worshipful master; Caleb Easterling, senior warden; Amos Alderson, junior warden; Madison Osborn, secretary; Carey Regan, treasurer; N. Y. Parsons, senior deacon; William D. Cooper, junior deacon; Thomas Powell, tyler. This lodge is now Plainfield Lodge No. 653, and has a good membership.

McCarty Lodge No. 233, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Plainfield, is over forty years old. They now have a membership of one hundred and sixty.

Plainfield Lodge No. 50, Knights of Pythias, has a membership of two hundred and is very prosperous.

There is also a tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men and a camp of the Modern Woodmen of America in the town.

Virgil H. Lyon Post No. 186, Grand Army of the Republic, at Plainfield, was chartered June 11, 1883, with forty members. This post is not active at the present time, due to the decease of so many members.

PLAINFIELD PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The Plainfield library is a partial realization of the dreams and desires of some of the women of Plainfield. Feeling the need of such an institution in the town and believing an honest effort to establish such a means of directing and cultivating the literary tastes of the young and satisfying the demands of the old would be rewarded by success, the Woman's Reading Club asked the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Friday Club to enter into an association for the above purpose. A corporation was formed and a board of trustees appointed. With these organizations as charter members, the association membership was increased by adding the name of any person in the township who gave a dollar or more in money or books. Donations in both were solicited, with the result that in a short time the library opened with about four hundred volumes and money to buy more.

The opening took place in June, 1901, and work began in a front room of a private residence on Main street, with Mrs. Edward Lawrence as librarian. She served until the fall of 1903, when failing health compelled her to resign, and she was succeeded by Miss Melissa Carter.

THE INDIANA BOYS' SCHOOL.

Just a mile from Plainfield is located the Indiana Boys' School. It is a beautiful place, well kept, and an admirable home for the class of boys sent within its grounds. This school was established by the Legislature of Indiana in 1867, under the name of "The House of Refuge for Juvenile Offenders." In 1883 this name was changed to "The Indiana Reform School for Boys," and in 1903 to the present title, "The Indiana Boys' School." The institution is governed by a bi-partisan board of control of four members appointed by the governor for a term of four years. The present board is: Harry T. Schloss, president; Joseph B. Homan, of Danville, vice-president; Guy H. Humphreys, treasurer, and George Webster, Jr., secretary. Guy C. Hanna is superintendent of the institution.

Boys are received on commitments from the courts of the state between the ages of eight and seventeen. On a general charge of incorrigibility or delinquency, boys are received between ten and seventeen and on a criminal charge between eight and sixteen. All boys are retained here until they reach the age of twenty-one years, unless sooner released by the board of control under general rules. At present these rules are such that with good conduct a boy may gain his release on parole in eighteen months. The average time is a little under two years. Boys may be returned to the institution at any time for the violation of their parole while under twenty-one years of age. A statute proposed by the executive officers of the institution was enacted by the Legislature of 1913, giving the board of control the right to finally discharge any boy over the age of eighteen years. Under this law six hundred and one boys already on parole have been discharged.

The present number of inmates, which has remained nearly stationary for the past year, is about five hundred and sixty. One hundred of these are colored boys. The institution had, four years ago, six hundred and ninetynine boys. The falling off has been due to the overcrowded condition of the school and the pressure exerted on the courts to hold boys out as long as possible.

The ordinary capacity of the institution is four hundred and twenty-six. A new building for housing purposes, Washington Barracks, is now under construction and will accommodate eighty boys. It will replace an old building. A new school house is being constructed also, named Charlton school, in honor of Major T. J. Charlton, superintendent of the school for twenty-one years. The institution is supported entirely by direct appropriation from the Legislature. In 1910 the total maintenance cost was $113,-281.74; in 1911, $107.164.81; in 1912, $102.224.63; in 1913, $100.883.66.

The purpose of the institution is the reformation of criminal and incorrigible boys. School is maintained the year round. The course covers the eight grades of the common school system. Two graduations are held each year, spring and fall. Sixteen boys were graduated in September, 1913. During the twelve months each grade is given a two-weeks vacation out of doors. A director of music and a physical director are included in the teaching force. The schools are in charge of a school principal, who is an experienced school man.

The institution maintains the following shops and trades: Manual training, printing, carpenter, blacksmith, shoe shop, plumbing, tinshop, bakery, laundry, barber, tailor, paint shop, florist, farm and garden and telegraphy. All the furniture of the institution is built at the manual training shop. The printing office does all of the job work for the institution and issues monthly and weekly publications. The ordinary repairs of the institution are kept up by the carpenter, painting, plumbing, blacksmith and tinsmith forces. The garden produces a large variety of vegetables for the institution's use. An orchard of twenty-five acres produces five thousand bushels of apples yearly. These are all consumed by the boys. The farm, of three hundred acres, produces all the feed used by the institution and a large quantity of wheat per year, which is milled into flour. This year's corp of wheat amounted to over eighteen hundred bushels and last year's corn crop to five thousand bushels.

The institution owns five hundred and twenty-seven acres of land and has fifty-four buildings. The place is heated by steam and is lighted by electricity produced at the institution's central power plant. It has its own water works system, equipped with fine, pure water wells pumped by electric pumps. The power plant also supplies steam for cooking and for the steam laundry. It has a capacity for nine hundred horse power.

The officers, including everybody employed, number sixty. These are all appointed by the superintendent and are subject to dismissal at his pleasure. The present board of control started two years ago, with the erection of the new chapel, to gradually rebuild the entire institution. The plan of housing in the future will include barracks, cottages and buildings, with single rooms for the boys.

CENTRAL ACADEMY.

The first school taught in the Central Academy at Plainfield was in 1881-2. This school was originated and supported by four quarterly meetings of the Friends' church, Plainfield, Fairfield, White Lick and Danville, until the year 1912, when the support of the school was transferred to the Plainfield quarterly meeting alone. It is a commissioned high school with a four-year course, having now thirty pupils and three teachers, including Simon N. Hester, the principal. The old building was burned in 1905 and in the next year a new one was constructed at a cost of ten thousand dollars. The first building was a two-story brick, with four rooms above and one below; the new one is the same, with the addition of a basement.

CHAPTER X.

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Liberty township is the middle division of the three southern townships, being bounded on the north by Center and Washington townships, on the east by Guilford, on the south by Morgan county and on the west by Franklin and Clay. There are nearly forty-nine square miles within the area, in townships 14 and 15 north, range I east and I west. It is the largest of the twelve townships in the county.

The ground level in the north and east parts is high and rolling, while the southwestern part at one time was low and swamp, but is now made into valuable land by the judicious system of drainage established. West fork of White Lick crosses the northeast corner of the township and Mud creek rises in the north central part and passes out near the southwestern corner, thus affording adequate outlots for successful drainage of the township.

EARLY LIFE.

About two miles east of the present town of Belleville, on the West fork of White Lick, in October, 1822, the first settlement was made in the township by William and Thomas Hinton, James Thompson and Robert McCracken. William Pope and his son, James N., who was then sixteen years old, came in the spring of 1823, which year also brought into the township George Matlock, James R. Barlow, Samuel Hopkins, William Brown, William Ballard, David Demoss, John Cook, Moses Crawford, John Hanna, Thomas Cooper, George Coble and Jonathan Pitts. William Hinton was the first teacher in the township and county, in the fall of 1823, in a school house which had been built that fall, one-half mile south of Cartersburg. Thomas Hinton was the first justice of the peace and William Pope, a Baptist 'minister, did the first preaching. He organized the first Baptist church in Hendricks county, in his own home, in the late months of the year 1823.

The first brick dwelling house in the county was built in 1830 for Jesse Cook, just south of Belleville, by Joseph V. Pope and William Hinton. The act authorizing the organization of Hendricks county designated the house of William Ballard, which was on the old Terre Haute trail, south of Belleville, as the place of holding the courts, but William Ballard died before the county was formally organized and George Matlock, who kept tavern on this trail a mile east of Ballard's, laid off a town which he called Hillsboro, and made a strong effort to get the county seat located there. He failed in this and met his death in 1825 as the result of a combat with his brother-in-law. Consequently, the Hillsboro project was a failure.

A PIONEER'S VIEW.

Joshua Marshall, one of the earlier settlers of Liberty township, wrote the following prior to his death, of his experience in coming to this new country:

"In the autumn of 1826 my father, William Marshall, of Surrey county, North Carolina, emigrated to Indiana and settled in the south part of Hendricks county, I being then in my nineteenth year. Evan Davis, my brotherin-law, with his family, came at the same time and settled nearby. At that time most of the land belonged to the government and settlements were scattering. We frequently went as far as five miles to help each other raise our log cabins and stables. A few settlers had preceded us, Edward and Joseph Hobson, William Rushton, John Cook, and sons, Levi, Jesse and Stephen, with their families, Edmond Cooper, Jefferson Matlock, Rev. William Pope, Thomas Irons, Judge Little, William Herron, William Townsend, Joshua Hadley, Bowater Bales and others.

"Not having saw mills, we felled a tall gray ash and cut it into four by six lengths, split out puncheons, dressed the ends to a uniform thickness and then laid them on sleepers. They were jointed with saw and ax and made a good floor. We split out clapboards for roofing and door shutters. We had plenty of elbow room and were anxious for our neighbors to help build our cabins and roll logs so as to get them out of the way, in order to raise a little corn for our bread and to feed our stock. We were mostly poor, yet contented, and looked forward to better days and more conveniences. We were all neighborly and kind to each other.

"Danville had been laid out into lots and a few cabins were being built. David Matlock and others had settled nearby and were opening farms. Religious privileges were scarce, not a church or school house, to my knowledge, being then in the county. The Friends had formed a society and worshipped in a log house near Mooresville, in Morgan county. Rev. Pope, a Baptist minister, then living near where Cartersburg now is, preached frequently in his own house to attentive, though small, audiences; and we were glad thus to meet, hear preaching, and form each other's acquaintance. In the spring of 1820 Joseph Tarkington, a Methodist minister, established a preaching place at the house of Edmond Cooper, then residing on Mud creek, at the crossing of the Indianapolis and Terre Haute road (Terre Haute trail), and there a class was formed of six members. Evan and Rebecca Davis, Mother Cooper and two daughters and Hannah Snodgrass. Shortly after this, in June, 1829, at a two-days' meeting held in Putnam county, I joined the church and invited Rev. John Murser to come to Hendricks county and preach at my house. At the appointed time he came, and seven joined the church. Three weeks later he came again, and seven more joined. Thus a society was formed in the settlement where Salem church now stands. In August of the same year Evan Davis, Father Crutchfield, Bowater Bales, myself and others commenced work on a hewed-log church, which was raised in the presence of an 'assembled multitude.' About this time Evan Davis built a saw mill on White Lick and there we had our lumber sawed out for flooring and seating. Evan Davis was class leader and I was assistant. By Christmas there were seventy-five members. In the summer of 1884 I visited Salem church and found the old log church had been removed and in its stead was a beautiful frame building, nicely painted and finished inside and out. Nearby stood a handsome brick school house. Surely this wilderness has 'budded and blossomed like the rose.' "

Could Mr. Marshall view the Liberty township of today, thirty years after his visit, he would learn that this was but the beginning of the prosperity and beauty of the community.

EARLY ELECTIONS.

There were thirty-nine voters in the general election held in Liberty township on August 2, 1830. The names follow: Evan Davis, Joshua Marshall, Jacob Harper, Abraham Woodward, Lewis Cooper, Samuel Gwin, Thomas Cooper, Edmond Cooper, Cornelius Cooper, George Dawes, William Rushton, George Rushton, John Cook, Jonathan Mills, William Allen, James Hewett, Michael Kirkum, Jesse Allen, William Marshall, William Korby, Nathan Snodgrass, Joshua Rushton, Joel Wilson, Silas Gregory, Bowater Bales, Cornelius Johnson, Jesse Rushton, Joshua B. Hadley, Robert Cooper, John Mills, Thomas Harper, William Townsend, Nathan Cook, Robert H. Irvin, Silas Rushton, Martin Cooper, Eli Moon and Jesse Whippo.

The Whig and Republican tickets have always been predominant in Liberty township.

CLAYTON.

On sections 33 and 34, in the northwestern part of Liberty township, the town of Clayton is located. It was platted in the year 1851 by George W. Wills and contains about eleven acres, which tract was purchased from Elizabeth Wills. The first name of the town was Claysville, in honor of Henry Clay, the Kentucky statesman. However, the name was changed to Clayton because there was another town in Indiana having the former name.

The first house in Clayton was constructed by Thomas Potts and the second by Lewis T. Pounds, both of them being frame structures. The first store was opened by Parker & Foote, the second by Richard and James Worrel and the third by Morrison & Thomas, near the year 1852. The first hotel was built by George W. Wills and operated by Ephraim Hartsuck. The first justice of the peace was Amos S. Wills, elected in 1852. The first flouring mill was built in 1852 by John Miles and James Worrel.

THE PRESENT TOWN.

The population of Clayton in 1910 was four hundred and ninety-seven, which has grown to six hundred since. On March 16, 1909, the town was incorporated as a town. The present town officers are: R. L. Ader, W. A. Coble and S. E. Edmondson, trustees; Alvin Woodward, clerk; Lorenzo D. Johnson, treasurer; Lee H. Smiley, marshal.

Electric service is supplied Clayton by the Danville Light, Heat and Power Company, and includes street and residence lighting. Lorenzo Mabe has control of the water system, under contract whereby under certain conditions the city will get the ownership in a number of years. Fire plugs are placed at advantageous points in the town.

The Clayton of today is a prosperous, progressive and beautiful little city. Trade is excellent among the business houses and the social life of the town is of high standard. Good communication is available by way of the railroad or interurban to the capital city and other towns in the southern part of the county.

The People's Bank and Trust Company was organized in June, 1912, by the citizens of Liberty township. R. A. Edmondson was the first president; C. E. Kelly, secretary; Amos L. Mitchell, vice-president; R. A. Edmondson, Amos L. Mitchell, Charles B. Worrell, William Peck, W. F. Martin and Charles West, directors. The present officers are the same. The capital stock is $25,000. The bank was chartered on June 11, 1912.

The Clayton State Bank was organized in 1912 by Albert Johnson & Company. Albert Johnson was the first president; J. C. Walker, the first vice-president, and L. D. Johnson, the first cashier. The office of vice-president at present has no incumbent. The bank was chartered in 1912.

Clayton Lodge No. 463, Free and Accepted Masons, was organized on May 29, 1873, with the following charter members: John Harrison, James H. Rynearson, William E. Howland, Thomas F. Dryden, Nelson Sowder, Amos S. Wills, John N. Wills and W. C. Mitchell. The first officers, appointed by the grand lodge at Indianapolis, were: Amos S. Wills, worshipful master; James H. Rynearson, senior warden, and Thomas F. Dryden, junior warden. The lodge at present is in good condition and has a membership of over a hundred.

Clayton Lodge No. 205, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized in 1859 at Belleville and in recent years moved to this town. The lodge is in good condition and has one hundred and twenty-five members.

BELLEVILLE.

Next to Danville and Stilesville, Belleville is the oldest town in the county. It was laid out by William H. Hinton, Lazarus B. Wilson and Obadiah Harris in 1829. The construction of the national road through the village, which soon followed, greatly stimulated its growth and it increased rapidly in population. It soon became the social and educational center of the county. But, with the completion of the Indianapolis & Terre Haute railroad, in 1850, passing more than a mile north of the village, the town of Belleville began to retrograde and now is but a very small village of one hundred and fifty people.

The first house was built by William H. Hinton, who also kept the first store.

Belleville Lodge No. 205, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized in April, 1859, by John O. Gilliland, Dr. L. H. Kennedy, James T. McCurdy, Z. S. Reagan and Dr. R. C. Moore. This lodge has since been moved to Clayton, a mile north.

CARTERSBURG

On section 31, in the northeast corner of Liberty township, is situated the village of Cartersburg. The village owes its existence to the Vandalia railroad, the construction of which caused the village to be laid out in 1850 by John Carter, after whom it was named. The first lots were sold on January 1, 1850. Van Matlock and Simon Hornaday started the first store and soon established Cartersburg as a good trading point for produce. John Biddle later bought land and set up a store. In 1854 William H. Oliver bought land of Biddle, which lay north of the railroad, and laid the tract out in lots, which he offered for sale. He donated certain lots to the Methodist Episcopal church. Land was also bought on the south of the railroad in the John Carter farm and west of gravel road was laid off in lots. This gravel road is now the main street of Cartersburg.

The village of Cartersburg is perhaps one of the most beautiful spots in Hendricks county, due in no small measure to the orderly rows of stately trees which line the streets. Great care was exercised in the sixties to plant these trees and now the village is enjoying the benefits.

Belleville Lodge No. 65, Free and Accepted Masons, has a membership of forty in Cartersburg. Although small, the lodge is in good condition.

Cartersburg has a population of about two hundred and fifty.

The Cartersburg magnetic springs supply a large amount of water to the state. It is a mineral water and was first found in 1887 on Dobbin's farm, five miles southeast of Danville.

CHAPTER XI.

LINCOLN TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Lincoln township is located on the eastern boundary of Hendricks county, bounded on the north by Brown and Middle townships, on the east by Marion county, on the south by Washington township and on the west by Middle township. The township was organized in 1863, by a division of Brown township into two parts. White Lick, flowing through the western part, breaks the otherwise almost level ground of the township. The land along this stream valley is rolling and very fertile. The level portion of the area is of rich, alluvial quality in most places, but in spots is composed of clay, which is not highly productive. Plenty of timber once covered the land in this township, but, as in other parts of Hendricks, this has been removed from the path of cultivation.

EARLY HISTORY.

In the autumn of 1824 James Brown made the first settlement in the territory destined to become Lincoln township. After him and previous to the year 1830 came G. W. Tyler, William Harris, Daniel and Thomas Newman, Daniel Brown, William Merritt, Robison Turpin, Caleb Shirley, John Given, Larkin Dollahite, James Shirley, Thomas Nash, Harvey and T. H. Barlow, the latter settling with their father, Enoch, in 1828, just outside the limits of Brownsburg. In 1830 and immediate years Asa McDaniel and sons, Joel Smith and sons and Peter Metsker located in the vicinity of Brownsburg.

The first justice of the peace in Lincoln township was Edward Railsback. Swain's tavern, on the road two miles east of Brownsburg, was one of the noted spots of the early day. This inn was a gathering place for the settlers and a very popular one.

Politically, Lincoln township has been very changeable, Republicans and Democrats having at different times controlled the township vote.

PRESENT STATUS.

Although one of the smallest townships in the county, Lincoln is important. Agriculture is the main industry and in the town of Brownsburg there is strong evidence of civic and commercial pride. Two railroads and one interurban line increase the value of the township land, together with the good roads, the latter an universal feature of the entire county. The country bears the mark of improvement and modern life and is an example of the qualities which have made Indiana one of the first states in the Union. Good farms, schools, homes, roads, telephones, fences, drainage system, are but a few of the factors which make Lincoln township today a first class one.

BROWNSBURG.

The town of Brownsburg is located on section 11, in the northern part of Lincoln township. The town was laid out by William Harris in 1835 and first named Harrisburg, but upon the establishment of the postoffice was changed to the present name. B. M. Logan was the first merchant in the town

Brownsburg was incorporated in the year 1848, in which year the board of commissioners ordered a chairman, clerk and five trustees elected. The election was held on June 24, 1848, and resulted in the choice of the following: Chairman, Henry H. Moore; clerk, T. J. White; trustees, William M. Dinwiddie, T. J. White, Sam Betts, Gaten Menifee, James Davidson. Ten votes only were cast at this first election. This corporation did not last long, however. In 1870 it was revived and has continued ever since. The present officers are: Trustees, I. N. Mugg, R. A. Fuson and Elza Henson; clerk, Harry H. Hughes; treasurer, Harry Johnson; marshal, John T. Ellis.

The present population of Brownsburg is about nine hundred, the official census in 1910 having been eight hundred seventy-six. The only public utility at present in the town is that of electricity, which service is supplied by the Danville Light, Heat and Power Company. There is a branch factory of the Ladoga Canning Company, a tile factory, grist mill and saw mill in the list of industries. Brownsburg is the only town in Hendricks county at this date which allows licensed sale of liquor.

Brownsburg, both in the business and residential part of town, is neat and attractive. It is a substantially built town. Business conditions are reported as being excellent. Social life also plays a prominent role in the community. Brownsburg Lodge No. 241, Free and Accepted Masons, was organized in 1859 with the following members: J. T. Davidson, H. W. White, J. P. Welshans, William Harris, William McDaniel, Joseph Holloway and S. M. Potts. The lodge has a good membership now and is very prosperous.

Brownsburg Lodge No. 377, Knights of Pythias, was instituted in 1898. There are now one hundred and forty members.

Brownsburg Lodge No. 188, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized in 1857. The charter of the lodge was surrendered at the time of the opening of the Civil War, but was renewed in 1866. This lodge has again become inactive.

There is also a tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men at Brownsburg. John A. Hollett Post No. 242, Grand Army of the Republic, was mustered in in the fall of 1883, with eleven members and named after a gallant soldier of the Seventy-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. This post is no longer in active condition.

The Hunter Bank was organized in April, 1907, by M. T. Hunter, C. L. Hunt, Jane Frank, Julia H. Huitt. The bank succeeded the firm of Cope & Hunt, bankers. M. T. Hunter was the first president, and C. L. Hunt the first cashier. These officers are the same now. The first and present capital stock is $10,000; the deposits total $210,000, and the surplus is $3,000. The bank was chartered in April, 1907.

The Brownsburg State Bank was organized in 1908, succeeding the Brownsburg Bank. The first officers were: W. F. Evans, president; J. L. Marsh, cashier; J. S. Tharp, vice-president; Grandison Eaton, assistant cashier. The present officers are: W. F. Evans, president; I. N. Mugg, cashier; J. S. Tharp, vice-president, and Ollie Miller, assistant cashier. This bank was chartered on April 1, 1908.

CHAPTER XII.

MARION TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The boundaries of Marion township are as follows: On the north by Eel River township, on the east by Center and Clay, on the south by Clay and on the west by Putnam county. The surface in most places is undulating and in some spots flat. There is a clayer subsoil throughout the entire township, making the ground more productive for the raising of grasses and thus making the business of stock raising equal to crop cultivation as the principal industry. There are no large streams, but several small ones flowing toward the two creeks. Mill and Eel river.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Marion township was settled later than most of the other townships, due to its position in the middle west of the county. Naturally the tide of immigration first touched the southern parts of the county, along the main stream channels, and Marion township was then considered a remote district. It was not until two years after the organization of the county, which was in 1824, that permanent settlements were made here. The first settlers were Thomas Samuels, Xury West, John and Isaac Hays, Daniel, Thomas and David Higgins. who settled in the township from 1826 to 1827. From 1828 to 1832 Paul Faught, Moses Cavett, William Blackketter, William and Harvey Buntain, G. W. Turner, Wesley Morgan, Peter Vannice, Thomas Chadd, John Hancock, James McCown and William Hays settled in different portions of the township.

FIRST ELECTION.

The poll book of the general election held August 3, 1836, at New Williamsburgh gives the names of thirty-one voters. They are as follows: William Hodges, Elijah Sutton, David Fox, Henry Tomlinson, William Bailey, Abraham Lewis, Alexander Bryant, William Tomlinson, James Turner, Bradford Sanuel, R. W. Shannon, Jeremiah Culbertson, Joseph Lewts, Jr., James Maccoun, John Higgins, Jacob Pox, Henry Bland, William Hayworth, John Mahan, John Robins, Jordan Denny, William Robins, John Vicory, Joseph Robins, Wesley Morgan, Hiram Tomlinson, B. S. B. Parker, Moses Tomlinson, Jeremiah Hunt, Martin Hancock and Thomas Higgins.

The political record of Marion township has been Democratic since its organization.

MARION TOWNSHIP IN 1914.

The intelligent cultivation of the soil, the pride in home, and the striving for better things and higher ideals, the qualities which characterize a prosperous and modern community, are no better exemplified than among the people of Marion township. The accomplishments of the people of this civil division of Hendricks county are testimonials to this condition. To the observer much seems to have been done in the last score of years. Roads have been built up, new farming methods have been adopted, schools have been improved, elegant residences have been constructed, churches have been increasing, telephones installed, and numerous other things added in order to keep step with the progress of civilization.

NEW WINCHESTER.

New Winchester was laid out in 1832 by Wesley Morgan and James Bronaugh. It is located a little west of the center of Marion township and is seven miles west of Danville, on the Rockville road. The town today is very small, having but a hundred inhabitants. The most attractive feature of the town is the new brick school house, containing the high school, erected in 1908 at a cost of twenty thousand dollars.

CHAPTER XIII.

MIDDLE TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Middle township is located in the north tier of townships, being bounded on the north by Boone county, on the east by Brown and Lincoln townships, on the south by Lincoln, Washington and Center townships and on the west by Center and Union. The township was originally located in what was known as the "black swamps," the greater part of it being deficient in natural drainage. Artificial drainage has, however, largely remedied this defect in the last ten years. The intense growth of deciduous trees, oak, poplar, walnut, maple, ash and many other species, were evidence of a rich virgin soil. There are no large streams; the soil surface is nearly level; wheat and oats and corn are the main crops.

SETTLEMENT.

In the first organization of Hendricks county, Middle township, as it is now, was geographically located in the north central portion of the county and was one of the nine civil divisions. It included not only its present area, but also all of what was afterward known as Union township. Its location and physical condition had much to do in determining its settlement and progress. Some physical defects in the land above mentioned had the tendency to make settlement here slower than in other parts of Hendricks. The first settlement made in the township was in the year 1830 by Lenuel McBee. His cabin and first clearing were in the western part of what is now Pittsboro.

Richard Richardson was next, whose cabin, in section 6, township 16, was on the spot where Miles Hession recently resided. In three years' time other settlements were formed by the following families: The Spicklemires, Samuel Hill, the Hales, Thompsons, Wells, Holtsclaws, Jonas Lipe, Hezekiah Dunick, Philip Waters and Jack Parker. This group of early pioneers erected the first cabins and formed the nucleus of community life. At this time no roads were known except neighborhood trails, marked by blazing the trees, the one leading through the township from Indianapolis to Crawfordsville being the most prominent and bisecting the township. The herculean task of the pioneers was now begun. The rearing of cabins, rolling logs, cutting out highways and constructing bridges was begun. A great percentage of the pioneers came from Mason, Fleming and Bourbon counties, Kentucky, and from Ohio, the Carolinas and Virginia, a splendid stock. The Watsons, Dillons, Weavers, Reynolds, Walters, Philips, Moneys, Smiths, Crabbs, Veaches, Kennedys, Craggs, Touts, Jones, Caywoods, Hughes, Herods in the succeeding decade came and entered or bought land.

The township was organized in 1833 and James Parks was the first justice of the peace.

DEVELOPMENT OF TOWNSHIP.

Since the beginning of the seventies improvements have steadily advanced in Middle township. The sickle, scythe and cradle, used by the pioneers and wielded by muscular power, were relegated to the past when the reaper, mower, binder and other modern implements came into operation. The description of the other townships of the county apply equally well to this township, for the development has been the same. The farms, rich in alluvial soil, are well drained and cleared of stumps and rocks. Miles of wire fencing have taken the place of the old rail fence. Farm houses and barns, many of them spacious and modern, contribute largely to the wealth of the community. Twenty-two miles of gravel road and twelve miles of rock road have been constructed in the township and turned over to the county to keep in repair. Seventy-five miles of post roads make possible the excellent system of rural free mail delivery.

PITTSBORO.

The town of Pittsboro was originally platted by Simon T. Hadley and William Matlock. It was first called by Mr. Hadley Pittsburg, and afterward changed to the present name in order to have the name of the town and postoffice agree.

Pittsboro's first store was in a small log room and kept by Basil Tout. It was located on the corner lot now owned by the bank. He was succeeded by James Hoadley and James Barker. John Vaughn built a frame building on the lot where the Sawyer block now stands in 1844. He kept a general store, with plenty of whiskey for sale. Vaughn sold out to John C. Parker, who, early in the fifties, erected a brick store on the corner where the Hayworth block now stands. It burned in 1884. Thomas Hoadley, one of the first physicians, built a two-story frame where A. C. Dunn's property is now located.

Aaron Keith was the first man in the town who made furniture. Elias Leach and Isaac B. Waters were other early craftsmen.

In 1867 the Big Four railroad was built through Pittsboro and then began a new era of prosperity. Business became better and the town grew. In 1873 Daniel Feely established a stave factory and operated it until 1886. Thousands of cords of oak, elm and ash were brought from the sloughs, cut into staves and shipped to outside markets. Many farmers paid off mortgages by disposing of surplus timber.

THE PRESENT PITTSBORO.

Pittsboro is now a thrifty and well-ordered town of about five hundred inhabitants. The social and commercial, as well as religious, tone of the town is excellent. The community is advantageously located on the Ben-Hur interurban line and the Big Four railroad, and consequently much business is transacted with other markets.

The Pittsboro Bank was organized in 1897 by Isaac Palmer, Jesse Smith and Steve Cline, the two latter acting as president and cashier, respectively. The present officers of the bank are: E. W. Sawyer, president; C. G. Olsen, vice-president; Glen C. Tolin, cashier; Miss Alcie Ridgway, assistant cashier. The capital stock is $10,000; the deposits amount to $84,000; and the surplus is $4,000. The bank was chartered in the year 1905 under the new banking laws.

Pittsboro Lodge No. 342, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized on January 22, 1870. John N. Shirley, William N. Crabb, Lewis Watts, James Adams, Amos Hoak and J. M. McLean were the charter members. It was the outgrowth of the Brownsburg lodge. The lodge erected its present home in 1874. The lodge is now in good condition, having a membership of over one hundred.

Pittsboro Lodge No. 428, Free and Accepted Masons, was instituted in 1871 by John Burton, deputy grand master. Its home was in the second story of E. A. Parker's store building, then occupied by A. C. Weaver. This lodge did not last long. It became defunct in 1882, when the grand lodge called in its charter. The present lodge, No. 620, was instituted by Jacob Smith with thirteen charter members. Beginning under dispensation in 1893, it was chartered in due and ancient form May 25, 1899. Its first officers were: Sabert S. Offutt, worshipful master; Chester H. Weaver, senior warden; W. D. Lewis, junior warden; George D. Junken, secretary. Its present membership is seventy-one. The stated communications are the first and third Tuesday evenings of each month at their hall in the Sawyer block.

Thomas Ashby Post No. 451, Grand Army of the Republic, was organized in the old school building September 8, 1886, with the following charter members: A. C. Weaver, W. D. Lewis, R. T. Dorman, H. T. Kirk, E. M. Weaver, J. M. Wills, S. S. Wills, W. H. Milam, George W. Tidrick, W. B. McClung, Jacob C. Waters, Lewis Buergelin, Thomas Brooks, Charles P. Cox, Joe Williamson and Samuel James. At eight P. M., April 8, 1886, a delegation of comrades came up from Danville and assisted in the organization. The first officers of the post were: A. C. Weaver, post commander; William D. Lewis, senior vice-commander; Richard T. Droman, junior vice-commander; Henry T. Kirk, officer of the day; Ellis M. Weaver, officer of the guard; James M. Wills, adjutant; S. S. Wills, quartermaster; George W. Tisrick, sergeant major; William B. McClung, quartermaster sergeant.

Thomas Ashby Woman's Relief Corps No. 231 was organized March 25, 1899, with eighteen charter members. Mrs. Marian McVey French was installed first president; Etta Jordan Palmer, treasurer, and Mrs. Eva Lewis, secretary.

CHAPTER XIV.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Union township is located in the northern tier of the county, bounded on the north by Boone county, on the east by Middle township, on the south by Center, and on the west by Eel river. The land surface is generally level, with rolling land in the southwest and northwest corners. Like Middle township, the natural drainage is very poor, but has been aided considerably by artificial tiling. The land in this township is valuable today and it is easy of cultivation.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first white settlement was made in Union township in the year 1828 by John Matlock and John Fowler. Isaac Veiley entered the land where Lizton is now located, in 1828, but did not move to his holdings until 1831. Prior to 1835 the following located in this township: Archibald Alexander, James and William Leak, their sons, William Montgomery, John Pritchett, Claiborne Davis and the Plummers. The bad drainage of the township hindered the rapid growth of the colony, the same as in Middle, and it was not until 1840 that the settlement assumed any size whatever. The cabins were small and far apart and the clearings were mostly unproductive. One of the advantages of the pioneer was that the stock brought with them would live in the woods all winter and usually do well. This was especially so with swine, and soon after the arrival of the first settlers wild hogs became very abundant in the woods and all those who had ever had a hog go astray had a lawful claim upon the common herd. In the autumn of the year, after the acorns and the other mast began falling, these hogs became fat and were hunted down by the settlers with dog and gun, the same as the bear and deer. The settlers often caught them in traps. When desirable to catch them alive, this was always necessary and was accomplished by making a log pen so high that they could not jump over and arranging a trap door to which a string was fastened. Corn was then scattered in trails in different directions through the woods to entice the swine into the pen, when a man secreted high in a tree top would spring the trap.

FIRST ELECTIONS.

The poll book for the presidential election results in this township in the year 1852 gives the names of fifty-one voters. The list is as follows: Jackson Griffith, R. D. Northcutt, Melzer Ward, William F. Darnell, James Leak, Benjamin G. Hiatt, John Pritchett, Claiborne Davidson, Tyra Stocker, Meredith Leach, Philip Stickleman, George Wilson, Solomon Adams, J. P. Lewis, William Northcutt, James Reed, Ezekiel Davidson, Joseph Edwards, Parry Burk, E. Hutchins, James Adams, William Joseph, Thomas Northcutt, John A. Leach, Henry Lewis, Thomas C. Pritchett, Benjamin L. Rainy, Doctor Buzzard, John Gregory. R. S. McDaniel, James E. Montgomery, William Hines, James Dingemore, John D. Fear, William D. Lane, S. T. Lewis, John D. Hiatt, William S. Johnson, Anderson Leach, Isaac Burnett, Samuel T. Scott, Thomas C. Parker, Larkin C. Eperson, Samuel Reynolds, Enos Leach, Leland Leak, John Nouringer, Francis A. Scott, Johnson Brookshire and J. H. Herrick. Politically, the township has most always favored the Democratic ticket.

PRESENT UNION TOWNSHIP.

The growth and progress of Union township has kept pace with the development of the neighboring townships. The class of people are generally the same and the improvements have been equal. The land in Union township is now very valuable, this value increasing by the knowledge of proper cultivation and care which has in recent years come to the entire county of Hendricks.

LIZTON.

Lizton is the only town in Union township. It was laid out by Jesse Veiley in 1837 and named by him New Elizabeth, in honor of Mrs. Veiley. The name was contracted to Lizton when the postoffice was first established.

Lizton never assumed a forward place in Hendricks county, although it has always been a substantial town, with good business and prosperous and public-spirited citizens. The population now is about two hundred and fifty. The town was incorporated in 1909. The present officers are: George Thompson, Clarence Storms and A. Gibson, trustees; I. E. Voris, clerk; Jesse Tharpe, treasurer.

The Bank of Lizton, organized by Marion Bailey and others, commenced business on December 1, 1910. Mr. Bailey was the first president; W. E. Leachman, vice-president; James T. Leak, cashier, and George Huber, assistant cashier. The same officers are now active. The capital stock is $10,000; deposits, $85,000, and surplus, $1,000. Certificate of authority was issued to this bank on October 19, 1910.

Lizton Lodge No. 342, Knights of Pythias, was organized about ten years ago and now has one hundred and sixty members.

Iona Tribe No. 231, Improved Order of Red Men, has one hundred and ten members.

An Odd Fellows' lodge existed here once and was prosperous, but later

CHAPTER XV.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

TOPOGRAPHY.

On the east line of Hendricks county is located Washington township, bounded on its north side by Lincoln and Middle townships, on the east by Marion county, on the south side by Guilford and Liberty, and on the west by Center township. White Lick creek flows across the west side of this township and the East fork of this same creek touches the southeast corner. Along the creek valley the land is rolling and fertile; the central and eastern portion of the civil division is very level and, before the day of artificial drainage, was rather swampy. It was not, however, equal to other townships in this respect. The early growth of timber, now gone, was largely composed of beech, but embraced many valuable varieties. The soil is clay and alluvial, being well adapted to grasses and grain.

EARLY DAYS.

The first settlement in Washington township was made in the northeast corner, near the site of Shiloh church, by Robert Wilson, Gideon Wilson and Elisha Kise in the year 1822. The next year Daniel Tryer, Aaron Homan, the Griggs family, Joseph Fausett and others came into the same neighborhood in the same year, 1823, James Dunn, John Givens, Abner Dunn, for whom Abner's creek was named, and others, settled on the west side of the township on the above named creek. James Dunn settled on the Rockville road. Among those who came into the township within the next few years were David Cox, Alexander McCammock, Enoch Barlow and his sons Harvey and Harrison, the Thornbroughs, Hurons, Huffords and Gossetts.

This township was one of the four which were organized at the same time as the organization of Hendricks county and received its name from George Washington at the suggestion of Aaron Homan, who was the first justice of the peace and married the second couple to be wedded in the county.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first general election in Washington township was held August 7, 1826, at the home of Daniel C. Hults, and eleven persons voted. These were: Sidney Williams, Daniel C. Hults, James Merritt, Joseph Runyan, Isaac Williamson, Daniel B. Tryer, James Higgenbotham, Joseph Phillips, William S. Merrill, Robert Wilson and John Triggs. In its political history, Washington township was at first Whig and after the death of that party followed the fortunes of the Republican organization.

AVON.

Avon, the capital of Washington township, is at a point very near the center of the township. The first settlement of the neighborhood was about the year 1830. Among the first settlers were the Hurons, the Rosses, the Gossetts, the McClains, the Jenkinses, Abram Harding, Absalom Payne, Dr. Malone, R. I. Barker, G. W. Merritt and James Siggurson. It was dense forest everywhere; deer and wolves were a common sight; but in small clearings little cabins of round logs sprang up and in a very short time this became a "neighborhood." The whole settlement was made up of people of energy and enterprise who came here to make a home that was to be their home. so their plans took in the question of church and school and roads and a postoffice. In 1833 Absalom Payne, who entered the land and lived where J. H. Wear now lives, was commissioned postmaster of Hampton postoffice, with a weekly mail carried on horseback from the east to the west, but no one remembers where from or where to. In a few years Mr. Payne tired of the empty honor and the office passed to Dr. Malone, where I. H. Winings lives, and a little later to W. T. Ross, where E. E. Blair now lives. Mr. Ross also tired of the office and, no one else wanting it, is was allowed to die, and Hampton was no more. In 1852 O. J. Huron, newly married, was persuaded to accept a commission as postmaster, naming the office White Lick and locating it in his log cabin, one-fourth mile west of present Avon. Just three months satisfied Mr. Huron and White Lick died and was laid away, in memory, besides Hampton. Along in the fifties John Smoot began making visits here as a pack-peddler; soon he added a horse and wagon and came weekly, and, after a time, about 1858, leased ground and built a small room in the corner of J. H. Ross's yard, where William Shipman now lives. Smoot emptied his pack and put a few more items on a few shelves. 102 and this was the beginning of the town. But Mr. Ross was a strong Republican and Mr. Smoot an ardent Democrat, and it was not long until Smoot moved his store to Democratic ground, across the road, on the land of John Dickerson, and thus, at the very first the town began to move. Mr. Dickerson not being willing to sell a lot to Mr. Smoot, the latter sought one elsewhere and, November 1, 1862, R. J. Barker deeded Smoot a half acre a mile farther west and the following winter he moved his store on a couple of logsleds to his own lot; this was the third town-site. Mr. Smoot prospered and enlarged his store and added more goods, and in 1867 he headed a petition to Washington for a postoffice, and for R. M. Bartley to be made postmaster. but no name was suggested for the new office, and the authorities used the first name on the petition; when Mr. Bartley's commission, dated April 28, 1868, reached him it gave the office the picturesque name. Smootsdell, located it in Smoot's store and gave us two mails a week, carried horseback from Plainfield by D. S. Barker. When the I. & St. L, railroad was being surveved, the man who, with a blue pencil, marked the stakes, made fun of the name of our postoffice, and said, "I'll name the town," Artistically he pencilled "New Philadelphia" on a stake and drove it down. When the road was completed the company drove another stake, with "Avon" painted on it. The people liked the name and petitioned to have the postoffice name changed to Avon. This was done and Smootsdell was laid away beside Hampton and White Lick. In May, 1871, Mr. Smoot sold all his property, building, lot and goods to Mr. Bartley and moved to Kansas. A little later the Barker brothers erected a building at the railroad crossing, put a stock of goods in one room, the other being used by the company. The Barkers soon tired of the store and quit, then J. L. Middleton, in 1875, added a general store to his shoe shop south of the railroad. In 1889 E. T. Huron was made postmaster and purchased the Middleton store. In 1803 William Taylor became postmaster. Mr. Taylor was full of enterprise and built a new postoffice building and put in a stock of goods, and Avon, for the first time, had three stores at one time. From the very first there was a rivalry among the people as to the location of the postoffice and the future town; the east side wanted it and the west side wanted it more. The Big Four folks soon learned of this feeling and sought to use it in securing bonuses. The station was at first a half mile west of the Plainfield road, then on the road, then threefourths of a mile east, where trains stopped at an old box-car in the middle of a farm for passengers, and patrons carried trunks down the track till they were tired, then changed hands and carried again. The west side complained and grumbled, than begged and finally won the station, and thought themselves secure; but in 1801 private citizens bought a little vellow dwelling and moved it to the crossing a mile east, and the company slid its telegraph office into it. The old sad look came again to the west-sider's face; the company saw the look and smiled, then moved their station also to the vellow dwelling, using it for all purposes until 1804, when, with generous help of east-side citizens, the company erected a neat three-room building. The eastside countenance broadened; the little vellow building was moved back and a stock of goods put in and, for a little while. Avon had four stores, three at the west side and one at the east, a mile away, but trade was backward and the new store soon closed, the yellow dwelling was sold again and this time was moved three miles away, when it ceased to worry the west side, with her three stores and the postoffice left. In 1900 the first rural free delivery in the county, and among the first in the state, was established in Danville, route No. 1, and its first delivery was made April 2d, of that year. While this has proven one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed on the common people, it crippled the Avon postoffice, reducing the salary from thirty-five dollars to six dollars per quarter, and when, on November 1, 1002, the first Plainfield route was opened and passed the Avon postoffice door, the office was discontinued, and now Hampton, White Lick, Smootsdell and Avon all lie buried side by side. But the town survived, holding its own till the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern traction line was opened. September 1. 1906, when it began to improve and has continued to do so, until today its two general stores sell several times the amount of goods sold then, and property values have about trebled.

CHAPTER XVI.

POLITICAL HISTORY AND OFFICIAL ROSTER.

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS.

The year 1824 is the first year in Hendricks county in which politics entered, and thirty-seven votes were cast for President, as follows: Jackson, 6; J. Q. Adams, 1; Clay, 30. At that time there were no party alliances; personal popularity, ability and influence were the main factors determining the failure or success of a candidate. Jackson carried the county in the campaigns of 1828 and 1832, the first time by a majority of forty over John Quincy Adams and the second time by one hundred and nine over Henry Clay. In the year 1836 the Whigs were victorious. Martin Van Buren was the Democratic candidate for President and William Henry Harrison, the Whig. There were one thousand one hundred and twenty-one votes cast in Hendricks county that year, and of this number the Whigs received seven hundred and thirty-one, a majority of three hundred and forty-two.

The campaign of 1860, just prior to the opening of the Civil war, was a hot one in this county. Abraham Lincoln was the nominee of the Republican party, Stephen A. Douglas of the Northern Democrats, John C. Breckenridge of the Southern Democrats, and John Bell of the Constitutional Union party. The campaign was an exciting one and, as history records, Lincoln was the victor, although he received only two-fifths of the popular vote in the United States. The split in the Democratic party made this result possible. A heavy vote was polled in this county, Lincoln receiving two thousand fifty votes; Douglas, one thousand eighty-three; Breckinridge, two hundred forty-four, and Bell, forty-one. Eight of the townships voted for Lincoln; Eel River, Middle and Union townships gave their pluralities to Douglas.

In the presidential election of 1864 George B. McClellan, the first commander of the Army of the Potomac, was placed in the field against Lincoln. McClellan received in Hendricks county but eight hundred thirty-two votes, against two thousand six hundred and twenty-two for Lincoln. Much excitement and bitter feeling existed in Hendricks county during this election. Many threats were made by ardent supporters of the war and it was deemed necessary for the polls to be guarded to prevent violence against some voters supposed to belong to a treasonable order. Two townships, Brown and Union, gave a majority for McClellan.

In an uninterrupted series the elections proceeded every four years until 1912 with the Republicans in the lead. The campaign of 1912 and the split in the Republican ranks is fresh in the mind of the reader. In this year Woodrow Wilson, the Democratic nominee, received the plurality of votes cast in Hendricks county.

Following is a summary giving the vote in the different Presidential elections from 1828, also a roster of the county officials from the date of the organization of the county:

CHAPTER XVII.

MILITARY HISTORY.

The county of Hendricks is jurly proud of the heroic part played by her sons in the great drama of the sixties. The news of Lincoln's nomination by the Republican party for the Presidency of the United States was received with great rejoicing in Hendricks county and particularly in Danville, the county seat. Early the following spring their rejoicings were changed to great nervous excitement.

The following notice appeared in the newspapers:

"WAR! WAR!

"All persons within the county of Hendricks who are subject to military duty are hereby requested and notified to be and appear in Danville on Saturday the 20th day of April, 1861. War is on hand and our whole safety depends on thorough military organization.

"J. M. Gregg,

"Colonel 6th Military Dist."

Hendricks county had at this time less than seventeen thousand inhabitants. Under the call for seventy-five thousand volunteers the quota of Indiana was fixed at six regiments. The response was hearty from all parts of the state and from none more so than in Hendricks. Being but an hour's travel by rail from Indianapolis, the first company raised in this county was one of the first to be accepted by the United tSates. From that time on the county sent enlisted men into the field, until a total of approximately two thousand had been enrolled, sixty-five per cent. of the voting strength.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Scores of men and women are yet living who remember that awful April day when the news came that Sumter had fallen, that Lincoln had called for troops, and that, be it long or short, the most terrible of all wars, a civil war, was upon the people.

The issue of the Ledger of Saturday, April 20, 1861, told the story locally and generally. Fort Sumter surrendered on the afternoon of April 13th and this was the first issue after that event. And it appears that so great was the excitement that this issue was not printed until Monday, the 22nd. The news of the attack and fall of Sumter is given in a series of official communications showing the progress of the fight from day to day, the last dispatch from Charleston reading: "Fort Sumter has been unconditionally surrendered. The fort was taken possession of tonight."

When the news reached Danville all business was suspended and men stood about the streets discussing, almost in a whisper, the future of the land. Men doubted if a company could be organized in Danville. Joseph S. Miller thought it worth while to try and, going to his law office, he drew up a muster roll, signing it himself first. Then he went out on the street and name after name was added and public enthusiasm increased with each signature.

Under the heading, "War Spirit of Old Hendricks," the Ledger tells of this as follows:

"The President's call for men was received here on Monday last. On Tuesday Joseph S. Miller headed a list of volunteers. On Wednesday the Governor was petitioned to appoint Hon. James M. Gregg colonel of the county militia. On Thursday his commission came and he gave notice to all liable to do military duty to meet him for immediate service and organize the militia in every township. On Saturday morning the town was alive with people from all parts of the country. The volunteers, numbering over fifty, were formed into line before the Odd Fellows' hall and a national flag was raised from the roof of the building amid the shouts of the people and the roar of musketry. Colonel Gregg then responded to a call for a speech. Messrs. Campbell, Colonel Nave, W. L. Gregg, S. A. Russell and V. Lingenfelter also spoke and one hundred and eight men enrolled themselves. Their captain, James Burgess, was offered and accepted by the governor and they leave this evening. In the meanwhile, L. S. Shuler commenced another company, continued all day Sunday and this evening will tender a second full company to the governor."

Among those who signed was Warner L. Vestal, editor of the Ledger, and his enlistment caused the following to appear in the paper:

"The editor and proprietor, W. L. Vestal, having volunteered in the service of the United States, has put in John Irons as editor and agent during his absence. Four of our compositors, W. P. and George Gregg, J. N.

Vestal and B. B. Freeman, having also volunteered and the Devil. W. H. Carnes, having gone with the captain of the company, the news room is left with no other force than the old stand-by, the former foreman, T. O. Thompson. The paper will probably be behind for an issue or so. But unless another call is made by the government the Ledger will be on hands as usual after all hands have got the hang of the new arrangement."

That the paper was late in being published is evident, for, although it was dated April 20th, the following item concerning the departure of the Hendricks county volunteers tells of an event which happened on the 22nd as follows:

"One hundred and eight of as gallant fellows as ever dared to meet a foe left our town Monday evening, April 22nd. Hon. James Burgett, captain; P. S. Kennedy, Esq., first; Joseph S. Miller, Esq., second; and W. P. Gregg, Esq., third lieutenants. Such unanimity of purpose was never witnessed among our people before. Parties now date this back no further than Monday the 15th inst. The bombardment of Fort Sumter proved to be a great uniter of parties in this county. In fact, there is but one party, that of the Stars and Stripes, in old Hendricks and it is dangerous to avow any other principles. So hot have matters become that one fellow here had nearly been slaughtered at the meeting here on the 20th inst. by mistake. Swords and bayonets flashed around him like lightning and but for prompt assistance his life would have been out of him in twenty seconds."

It is unfortunate for this generation that more of the local scenes are not described in the issue of the Ledger, but the excitement was too great, the tension too strong to write. Editorially, the Ledger said:

"It becomes our duty this week to announce the lamentable fact that war has been inaugurated in our own country by the rebels of the Confederate states. The attack made on Fort Sumter by the rebels was successful. Major Anderson has been compelled to surrender and, however humiliating it may seem to others, we can not but regard it as a point gained. We will now find out whether we have a government or not, and if we have, woe be unto those who have for years been plotting its ruin. The people in this part of the country are a unit for the Union. We know no man as a Republican, a Douglas or a Breckinridge Democrat. Party lines have been abandoned and, although it has been predicted that in case of an attack upon the government the North would be divided and the rebels receive the support of a strong party here, we are of the opinion that not one company can be found north of Mason and Dixon's line who are willing to assist the traitors.

The present state of affairs is much to be regretted, but we of the North can not help it. For four months every act of aggression, of insult, and insolence has been done in the secession states against the government and people of the American nation, which can possible be conceived except the actual conflict of arms. This has come and henceforth we have to hear the sound of war and the combat of battles. The record is made up. The position admits of but two sides. He who is not for his country is against it. Let every loyal heart now rally to the country. Let the flag be borne aloft and the battle will end with a victory for the Union, for humanity and the world."

Elsewhere the Ledger says: "Hon. J. M. Gregg has been commissioned by the governor as colonel of the sixth military district of Indiana. Mr. Gregg is a Democrat and was delegate to the Charleston convention. In this hour of our country's distress we are glad to see that all party lines are obliterated and that all go for the glorious flag and Union which have conferred so many blessings upon us as a people. The appointment of Mr. Gregg is a good one and he will do all in his power to enforce the laws and sustain the union."

The Ledger also says: "On Tuesday (the 16th) an effort was made to organize a company of militia here to be tendered to the governor for the maintenance of the government and the enforcement of the laws. Before night twenty-six men were enrolled. At the meeting Tusday night several more signified their willingness to, serve their country and the company will soon be made up. Wednesday morning another meeting was held and the company proceeded to the election of temporary officers. The band played martial music and everything was astir. After marching around to the commons east of town Captain Kennedy proceeded to drill the new company. Colonal Nave's hall was secured and there in the evening the company drilled again. The greatest excitement and enthusiasm prevails and all men of all parties are determined the government shall be sustained at all hazards. The stars and stripes are floating from stores, offices and other buildings."

Local mention is made of the marriage on Sunday, April 21st, of George Gregg and Miss Annie Vawter and Charles F. Hogate and Miss Julia Depew. The Ledger says: "The boys left with their company for the national service the following day, leaving their newly-made wives praying for their safe return."

The original muster roll of this first company from Danville, the one used at Indianapolis April 24th when the company was sworn into the service of the United States, is as follows:

It bears the names of James Burgess, captain: Peter S. Kennedy, first lieutenant: Joseph S. Miller, second lieutenant; Charles F. Hogate, Orion A. Bartholomew, Will C. Banta, Warner L. Vestal, sergeants; Joseph B. Homan, William M. Walker, Virgil H. Lvon, Hubbard B. Lingenfelter, corporals, Miltiades Cash, drummer; James Landon, fifer; Joseph Allison, Samuel Armstrong, A. # ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD INDIANA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

On July 8, 1863, news came to Indiana that a large rebel force under command of Gen. John H. Morgan had crossed the Ohio river near Mauce port and was moving on Corydon, Indiana. Governor Morton at once issued a call and within forty-eight hours sixty-five thousand men had tendered their services. Thirteen regiments and one battalion were organized for the emergency. In the second of these, known as the One Hundred and Third, were seven companies from Hendricks county. The regiment left Indianapolis by rail on the evening of July 11th and reached Vernon the next morning at three o'clock. Here Colonel Shuler impressed a number of horses and, mounting one hundred and forty-six men from his own command and that of Colonel Gregory's, moved in pursuit of Morgan. These troops came in sight of Morgan's rear guard on the afternoon of the 13th, captured several stragglers, skirmished with detachments of the enemy near Harrison, Ohio, and entered that town shortly after Morgan's rear guard had departed. Next morning the pursuit was resumed and continued as far as Batavia, Ohio, when, upon learning of Morgan's capture, the command returned to Indianapolis and was mustered out July 16th.

Lawrence S. Shuler was a colonel; Virgil H. Lyon, lieutenant-colonel; Samuel J. Banta, major; and Frank Coons, adjutant, were the higher officers in this regiment. Other officers were William H. Calvert, Richard Duddy, Tyra Montgomery, John Franklin, William M. Brown, William Little, Aquilla S. McCormick, Joseph Wood, Jesse S. Ogden, Joseph O'Haver, Robert Curry, William F. Parker, Joseph Allison, James L. Smith, Erastus F. Hunt, Scott Miller, David T. Cox.

NUMBER OF ENLISTMENTS.

The following will show the number of men from Hendricks county and the companies and regiments in which they served during the Civil War. These figures are compiled from Adjutant-General Terrell's reports and include re-enlistments and substitutions, so that the list is not exactly true, but as much so as possible to obtain.

BOUNTY AND RELIEF.

The county gave bounties to volunteers during the war amounting in all to $2,7.750, while the several townships paid the following amounts: Center, $20,000; Washington, $30,000; Liberty, $35,000; Franklin, $10,000; Clay, $20,000; Marion, $36,000; Eel River, $45,000; Union, $20,000; Lincoln, $10,000; Brown, $21,500. This made a total of $266,250.

Not content with this, the local authorities also resolved to care for the needy families of volunteers and for this purpose the county appropriated at various times amounts aggregating $50,200. Each of ten townships contributed $1,000.

The relief work at home was energetic and prompt. Whenever money could not be obtained by asking, it was appropriated.

DRAFT.

A draft became necessary in Indiana in the fall of 1862, and the enrolling commission made the following report for Hendricks county: Total militia, 2,443; total volunteers, 1,352; total exempts, 506; total conscientiously-opposed to bearing arms, 150; total volunteers in service, 1,271; total subject to draft, 1,787. But two townships in this county were behind in their quotas, Union and Eel river. The former was required to supply nine and the latter twenty-three to this draft.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

Hendricks county did not supply a full company to the Indiana militia during the Spanish-American war. The declaration of war by Congress and President McKinley's call for troops in the month of April, 1898, brought great excitement to the county and many recollections of the days of '61.

On Friday night, April 22, 1898, an immense crowd gathered in the court room at Danville. The college band played lively airs and a Cuban flag waved from the gallery. Solon Enloe called the mass meeting to order and Judge John V. Hadley was elected chairman, following which election the latter made an address. Enloe followed, then George C. Harvey, C. W. Stewart, Thad S. Adams, O. E. Gulley and Messrs. Hack, Lane and Young of the Central Normal College. Solon Enloe then moved that a roll be prepared for those who were prepared and willing to go the front. While the band played patriotic airs and Judge Hadley waved the flag, one hundred names were affixed to the roll. A committee was appointed consisting of Enloe, Harvey and Julian D. Hogate, and these men went to Indianapolis to inform the Governor that they were ready.

Some disagreement in the election of officers resulted in the disbanding of the company. The men most eager to serve their country and flag, however, were not to be thwarted, so they went to Indianapolis and enlisted. They were sworn in on Tuesday night, May 10th, and that night returned home to say good-bye. The public responded and accorded them a reception and banquet. A list of the men, mort of them in the Second Regiment, who went from Hendricks county to the war follows: E. M. Swindler, O. O. Marshall, Charles Sims, J. M. Gregg, R. D. Warner, Oliver Sears, Walter Thomas, Aquilla Miles, Rome Phillips, Frank H. King, Albert Ayres, David Stutesman, Claude Adams, Herschell Hall, Solon Enloe, Guy Roach, Edgar Pennington, Fitz Roberts, Oat Johnson, J. W. Estep, Ralph Beauchamp, Orlando Davis, Clark Howell, Charles Temple, Harry Stephenson, J. Bolen, Sigel Bolen, James Bowen, William King.

CHAPTER XVIII.

HISTORY OF JOURNALISM.

THE FARLY NEWSPAPER.

In this day of huge metropolitan newspapers and up-to-the-minute newsstories, it is hard to realize the handicap under which the newspaper of fifty, or even thirty, years ago labored. Facilities for receiving and publishing news had not reached the point of perfection attained today. The editor of today is a business man, a manager, a news medium; years ago he was a moulder of public opinion, a controller of local polities. The paper was known by the editor, but now the editor is known by the paper. Crude hand presses, meager supply of type and other simple paraphernalia of the early printing shops have given way to the linotype, power presses which turn out over a hundred papers a minute ready for the subscriber, and other wonderful inventions and methods used in modern newspaper production.

In Hendricks county the growth of the newspaper has been very substantial, although it has been retarded by the close proximity of Indianapolis and the large dailies there. The resident of Danville and other larger townships is enabled to receive the city paper almost as soon as a local edition. The papers in Hendricks county have been restricted to weekly editions due to this fact alone, for otherwise the population and interest of the county would warrant more frequent issues.

BEGINNINGS IN HENDRICKS COUNTY.

The year 1846 saw the beginning of journalism in Hendricks county. In the spring of that year the Danville Advertiser was established, with Joseph Graham as publisher and Dr. H. G. Todd as editor. Doctor Todd and several other enterprising citizens bought the press and gave it to Mr. Graham for the sole purpose of giving the town of Danville a newspaper. In size, the Advertiser was a six-column folio, composed almost exclusively of reading matter. Very little advertising matter found its way into the sheet. Politically, the paper was Whig. The paper was established to promote the interests of this party and it continued so during the period of its existence. After a few years, the paper changed hands and from then on had a varied career, having several owners, appearing under several names, until 1856, when it came out as the Danville Republican. Under this title it was issued until the spring of 1864.

HENDRICKS COUNTY UNION.

On the day of April 23, 1856, the first issue of the Hendricks County Union was published by W. P. Gregg & Company. The paper was decidedly in favor of war. At the top of its first page it printed each day, "To preserve the Union, soldiers must fight at elections as well as fight in the field." The name Union was selected instead of Republican in order to gain the support of the war Democrats, which in large measure it accomplished. The paper was under splendid editorial management and met success from the very start. The above mentioned firm continued to publish this paper until July 14, 1856, when Col. Lawrence S. Shuler, a soldier, became sole proprietor, with Col. James M. Gregg as editor and Gideon B. Thompson in charge of the local department and assistant in the management of the business. Colonel Shuler continued to publish the paper until April 20, 1865, when he sold it to James L. Singer. who became editor and publisher and remained as proprietor of the newspaper until March 15, 1866, at which time John N. Scearce bought the office. Mr. Scearce continued in charge for over thirteen years and changed the name of the paper to the

DANVILLE UNION.

Under Scearce's management the paper had a very prosperous career. During a part of this time Dr. A. Furnas was agricultural editor and contributed largely to the value and interest of the paper. In 1866 O. H. Smith was educational editor. On the 2nd of January, 1879, Mr. Scearce sold the Union to J. E. Sherrill, who had begun the publication of the Danville Republican. Sherrill merged the Union into the Republican, but the new paper was of short life. On January 30, 1879, less than one month after the suspension of the Danville Union, another Hendricks County Union came into existence.

The new firm was South, Hathaway & Company, and the paper at once struck the public favorably, there being something of advantage in the old name Union. In a few weeks Mr. Sherrill sold his Republican office and business to the new Union firm, S. F. Wishard and James B. Greene being added to the proprietors. A. G. South soon left the company and in a few months Mr. Greene also retired, the paper being continued by Hathaway and Wishard. On August 4th of the same year Mr. Wishard sold his share to John R. Rankin and Hathaway and Rankin were proprietors until November 7th, when O. H. Smith bought out the interest of Mr. Rankin. Smith became editor and in December, 1880, bought out Robert F. Hathaway's share of the paper, thus becoming sole editor and proprietor. On February 11, 1882, he sold to Parker & Bowen of the Republican, who continued to issue the Union from their office for about two months on account of certain advertising contracts.

HENDRICKS COUNTY REPUBLICAN.

Mr. Bowen and J. O. Parker had established the paper known as the Hendricks County Republican on the 13th day of October, 1881. This paper is now, after an existence of over thirty-three years, the leading paper of Danville. On February 10, 1883, Mr. Bowen sold his interest in the office to William N. Crabb and the paper was published by Crabb and Parker, with Mr. Parker as editor and manager until the month of April, 1883. After Mr. Bowen's departure Samuel F. Wishard was local editor for one year. In March, 1884, Mr. Bowen returned to the paper, with which he was connected as local editor until April, 1885. In this month Crabb and Parker sold to Moffett and Riddle, who continued the publication to good advantage. John C. Ochiltree was the next proprietor, followed in the year 1890 by Julian D. Hogate, who, in 1914, is still successfully publishing the Republican. It is the leading newspaper in the county, having a circulation of about eighteen hundred. It is a six-column quarto, issued Thursday of each week. The paper is neat in appearance and is strictly a news sheet. The Republican plant turns out a quantity of high class job printing in connection with the issue of the paper.

OTHER DANVILLE PAPERS.

Two newspapers were at one time moved to Danville from the town of Plainfield. Both papers bore the name Progress. The first was in 1877 by John N. Vestal, who suspended after six months, and the second occasion was in May, 1883, when George V. Mechler made a like venture. He, too, found the venture unsuccessful.

The Democratic party has been represented editorially in Danville.

The first newspaper of that political faith bore the sanguinary title of The Butcher Knife. It was founded in 1856 by George Gregg. Four years completed the life of this sheet and it died amidst the strong Union sentiment at the opening of the Civil war.

The Danville Indianian was established in 1870 by a group of men from Greensburg. Soon after it became the property of a stock company and afterward, for a time, it was in charge of Doctor Haggart, who was followed by two brothers named Ray. In 1872 the office was purchased by C. N. Walls, who remained in control until the fall of 1875, when the office and material were sold and transported into Illinois.

In February of the year 1878 E. D. King established the Democrat and remained as its editor and publisher until August, 1879, building up a strong and influential paper. At the latter date mentioned he sold the office to M. A. Barnett, who, in turn, closed out the office in October, 1881, to James O. Parker of the Republican. Just prior to this, E. D. King returned from a year's trip in Colorado and founded, on September 15, 1880, the which is now the leading Democratic paper of the county. The paper was started during a presidential campaign and found a fertile field in which to grow. It at once assumed an important position and today (1914) it still holds that reputation. At one time its editor was indicted for libel under the Grubbs law, but so obviously unfair was the action of the partisan grand jury that Mr. King was never brought to trial, the judge of the court quashing the indictment and throwing the case out. In August, 1882, E. D. King retired from the managerial helm of the Gazette and from then until August I. 1884, it passed through the hands of several proprietors. At that date it came into possession of William A. King and John W. Cravens. Cravens disposed of his interest in a few months and Mr. King became sole proprietor. He holds this position today, after thirty years of valiant service for the Democratic party. Just at present he holds the office of postmaster of Danville, in connection with his editorial duties. The paper is a weekly, published on Thursday, being a six-column quarto and with eleven hundred subscribers. The paper has been uniformly successful throughout the many years of its existence. High class job printing is also made a specialty at the Gazette plant.

PLAINFIELD PAPERS.

There have been almost as many papers started in the town of Plainfield as there have been in Danville. The first one was called Once A Week, being founded by John A. Deem in 1862. After a short run this was suspended. John N. Vestal afterward attempted to make the paper a successunder the name of the Citizen. After publishing it for some time, he sold it to Charles S. McNichols, who issued a paper for a period under the name of the Tribine.

PLAINFIELD PROGRESS.

On January 1, 1879, George V. Mechler established the Plainfield Progress, which he ran successfully for several years. Mechler was a Democrat of the first water and the community was Republican, so he compromised and published his paper as an independent sheet. In this venture he was successful and, thinking to gain more prestige at the county seat, he removed to Danville in May, 1883. At this place he was soon obliged to suspend publication. Immediately after his removal Horace G. Douglass and J. A. Fullen began the issue of a paper under the old name of the Plainfield Progress. These men issued their first number on May 31, 1883. Fullen withdrew after a time and moved west. Douglass retained control, however, until May 12, 1884, when he obtained an appointment at the Reform School and sold the office to A. T. Harrison. The Progress was at this time a five-column quarto. This paper was published until September 5, 1904, at which time it was succeeded by the established by P. W. Raidabaugh. From May, 1910, until June, 1912, C. C. Cumberwrite had control of the paper. At the latter date Fred E. Warner became the editor and proprietor and is still in this position. The paper has a general circulation, is six column, eight page in style, and is Republican.

FRIDAY CALLER,

NORTH SALEM NEWSPAPERS.

J. J. and H. E. Hennon came from Roachdale. Putnam county, in July, 1884, and until March, 1885, published the North Salem Reporter. Thiswas a six-column quarto, independent in politics. In the month last mentioned, however, Messrs. Hennon returned to Roachdale. In 1892 the North Salem Herald was established as an independent newspaper. It is still in operation, a weekly six-column quarto, and is edited by John H. Wetz, who took charge January 1, 1914. Previous to this date Samuel Sherman Waters held the office of editor. The paper has a circulation of five hundred.

THE CLAYTON WEEKLY PRESS.

The Clayton Weckly Press was established on January 6, 1914, succeeding the Clayton Enterprise. The Enterprise had been established by a Mr. McDaniel, and was later owned successively by Harrison F. Weesner, then by H. E. and Paul Hathaway. The Clayton Weekly Press is an independent Democratic paper, with a circulation of six hundred. The paper is an eight-page quarto, patent insides. Cal Sinninger is the editor and owner of the paper.

BROWNSBURG RECORD.

In the year 1881 A. S. Clements established a paper in Brownsburg known as The Modern Era. It then changed to the name Brownsburg Courier, and later to the present title. It is a very prosperous paper in 1914, with a circulation of approximately one thousand. It is a six-column quarto, independent in politics, and is issued weekly by U. S. Watson, the editor and publisher. Previous to Mr. Watson's management Charles A. Sedgwick, Walter Burns, Carey Gaston, John R. Sheehan, G. A. Johnson and Charles A. Hughes presided over the destinies of the paper. Mr. Watson assumed control on June 10, 1912.

RELIGIOUS PUBLICATIONS.

There have been quite a number of religious publications issued in Hendricks county within the past years, most of them devoted to the Friends denomination. There was the Friends Bible School Teacher, with twenty-five hundred circulation, a quarterly magazine of sixty-four pages for Sunday school superintendents and teachers; the Friends Advanced Quarterly, thirty-two pages, with a circulation of seventeen thousand, for the main body of the Sunday schools; the Friends Intermediate Quarterly for younger classes in the Sunday school, thirty-two pages and seven thousand circulation; the Friends Lesson Sheet, weekly, two pages, forty-five hundred circulation; the Friends Lesson Sheet, weekly, two pages, forty-five hundred circulation;

lation, for general study in Bible schools; the Youth's Friend, eight pages, illustrated weekly for young people, seventeen hundred circulation; Child's Lesson Leaf, for the primary department of the Sunday school, four-page weekly, thirty-two hundred circulation. The Africa Record, eight pages, missionary information, published quarterly, and with fifty-five hundred circulation.

These publications were all edited and published by P. W. Raidabaugh and were moved to Plainfield from Chicago in 1901, and were transferred to the American Friends Bible School Board, located at Fairmount, Indiana, on January 1, 1914.

THE PITTSBORO SUN.

The Pittsboro Sun was established in January, 1893, by Frank C. Harrell. It was bought by E. C. Weaver during its first year of life. He placed it on a firm basis. On December 25, 1898, Samuel James became the owner, remaining in charge until June, 1911, when he sold to Evart Watson, a young man who made good in the twenty months that he conducted the paper. In February, 1913, the Sun again changed hands, Gregory Walden, of Howell, Michigan, becoming its publisher.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

The medical profession in Hendricks county had its beginning before the organization of the county, for of all the professions in which man is engaged that of medicine is the first demanded. True it is that great progress has been made in the science since its introduction into Hendricks county, but nevertheless, the early patient probably had as much confidence in the methods of the pioneer physician as the present-day patient has in the most advanced methods. Trust and dread did occasionally go hand in hand in administration of the first doctor's treatment. There was the lancet, to take from the patient all the blood he could spare and still live, hoping thereby to destroy the tenement of the demon disease and force him to seek some other abode. Another indispensable remedy was, "the Spanish-fly blister," which was applied on the same theory, indiscriminately upon adult and child. Calomel and blue-pills were common remedies for most diseases determined by the doctor's diagnosis, and a sure remedy when the doctor's diagnosis left uncertainty in his mind. To work out of the human system the calomel and blue-pills, after they had done their savage work, gamboge, castor-oil and senna, one or all of them, were freely administered. The accepted theory of the profession at that early day was if the patient survived the first course, it was soon repeated until the patient, in the opinion of the doctor, was only suffering from the remedies. The surgeon in those early days of frontier life ranked with the skilled carpenter and blacksmith. In fact, the former made the doctor's splints and other appliances of wood, and the latter made his operative cutlery, forceps and other implements of steel.

If the physician in those early days, with his multiplied trials to contend with and groping in the darkness, could become enthusiastic in his efforts to carry conviction to others, what might be his exulting joy now, since the light of intervening years of scientific progress and investigation has so changed the theory of disease and remedies. Both medicine and surgery have made greater progress in harmony with scientic truth in the last half century than during all previous history. Medicine, however, with its component sciences and surgery, is not alone in this rapid and wonderful progress, which is world wide, but there has been a general awakening in the world of thought during this recent period, discovering and inventing the most wonderful aids to modern life. We can but marvel when we endeavor to tabulate the innumerable lists. This revolution has placed medicine, as a profession, a long way on the road of science. As nature, with its most intricate vital forces, is the superior physician and first in charge of every case of human disability, the present doctor is now on such friendly terms with nature that he lends rational assistance to his superior and thereby gives most welcome aid to the afflicted.

HENDRICKS COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

On the 29th day of April, 1854, the medical society of Hendricks county was organized at Danville. The doctors signing the constitution were Henry G. Todd, D. J. Depew, J. A. Comingor, David Todd, Risdon C. Moore, Henry H. Moore, Thomas P. Seller, Wilson Lockhart, J. Joel Wright, Leroy H. Kennedy, Thomas B. Harvey, Henry Cox, B. Bartholomew and W. F. Harvey. Henry G. Todd was elected the first president; Wilson Lockhart, vice-president; J. Joel Wright, secretary; Leroy H. Kennedy, corresponding secretary; Henry Cox, treasurer; Thomas B. Harvey, Bradley Bartholomew, Henry H. Moore, censors.

The constitution was as follows: "We, the undersigned practitioners of medicine and surgery in the county of Hendricks and vicinity, for the purpose of promoting harmony and good fellowship, and of elevating the cause of medical and collateral science, associate ourselves under the following constitution:

"Article 1. This association shall be denominated the Hendricks County Medical Society.

"Art. 2. The officers of this society shall consist of a president, vicepresident, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer and three censors, all of whom shall be elected by ballot, annually, and each officer shall serve until his successor is duly installed into office.

"Art. 3. Any regular and reputable practitioner of medicine may become a member of this society, by signing the constitution, paying into the treasury two dollars, and complying with such other regulations as may be hereafter provided by law.

"Art. 4. Any distinguished literary gentleman may become an honorary member of this society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any regular meeting; provided that notice to that effect had been given at any previous meeting of the society.

"Art. 5. The society shall have power to form a library and a cabinet of specimens, in the various departments of natural science, and pathological specimens and illustrations, both from the donations of individuals and other societies, and by levying taxes and fines, agreeable to the regulations which may be hereafter provided by law.

"Art. 6. This society may open a correspondence with similar associations in this state and such others as it may from time to time direct.

"Art. 7. This society shall meet at such times and places and engage in such deliberations as may from time to time be agreed upon, and may enact by-laws for its government, not inconsistent with this constitution.

"Art. 8. The society may admit honorary members upon compliance of the applicant with the same forms as are prescribed for the admission of bona fide members, except that no initiatory fee shall be required. He shall not be permitted to vote, nor shall he participate in any of the proceedings, except by express permission of the society.

"Art. 9. One-third of all the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but on all subjects involving the rights, interests or standing of any member, a majority of all the members shall be present.

"Art. 10. This constitution may be amended at any stated meeting of the society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present; provided, the amendment has been prosposed, in writing, at a previous meeting."

PROGRESS OF SOCIETY.

The society continued from year to year until the opening of the Civil War, when, most of the members having enlisted, so few were left to hold meetings that they were discontinued until the year 1866, when the times for its regular meetings, specified in its by-laws, were observed, and have been ever since.

At the annual meeting of the State Medical Society, in 1872, as a basis on which to organize this society under the statute relating to voluntary associations, passed resolutions providing for the incorporation of county medical societies. It was not, however, until the annual meeting of 1875 that the requisite number, twelve counties, reported to the secretary of the state society. The state society, now having adopted the delegate system of representation from incorporated auxiliary county societies, the Hendricks County Medical Society, at one of its regular meetings, in the year 1875, changed its constitution, as was thought, to comply with the state society. The delegates from the Hendricks county society were admitted at the annual state meeting in 1876. However, the constitution of the Hendricks society was defective in regard to its seal. When this fact became known, most of the physicians of the county who were not members of this society organized a new society, and, as a result, at the annual state meeting in 1877 there were two sets of delegates, each claiming to represent the Hendricks County Medical Society. The committee appointed to straighten out the matter took cognizance of the fact that the old society in Hendricks had acted on good faith and the mistakes in the constitution were not voluntary; therefore they allowed the old society to continue, after that trouble had been remedied and the constitution rewritten.

Before 1890 the physicians who had been enrolled upon the books of the society were T. J. Adams, B. Bartholomew, J. T. Barker, J. H. Brill, J. A. Comingor, Henry Cox, Amos Carter, D. J. Depew, A. Davidson, T. F. Dryden, M. F. Depew, C. R. Dixon, J. A. Eastman, T. Evans, Thomas E. Ellis, F. C. Ferguson, C. E. Farabee, J. N. Green, Thomas C. Graham, Thomas B. Harvey, W. F. Harvey, W. J. Hoadley, A. Heavenridge, G. H. F. House, G. K. Hurt, L. H. Kennedy, Wilson Lockhart, W. T. Lawson, H. H. Moore, R. C. Moore, B. Mendenhall, J. W. Mansbridge, J. H. Orear, J. A. Osborne, J. H. Oscar, M. G. Parker, J. S. Ragan, Thomas R. Seller, F. W. Smith, H. C. Summers, J. T. Strong, H. G. Todd, David Todd, R. C. Talbott, J. J. Wright, J. F. White, C. A. White.

CHAPTER XX.

CHURCH HISTORY.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

The first Methodist Episcopal class that was organized in Hendricks county was at the home of Robert Wilson, near the present Shiloh church, in the winter of 1828 and 1829. Soon afterwards classes were established at North Salem, Danville, Stilesville, Wesley Chapel and near Lizton. At the first quarterly meeting for the White Lick circuit, held at Robert Wilson's on October 25, 1828, there were present John Strange, Joseph Tarkington, Peter Monicle, Robert Wilson and Wesley Monicle; Aaron Homan, Gideon Wilson and Elisha Kise were appointed a committee to make an estimate of the amount necessary to build a meeting house near Robert Wilson's. Early the next season plans were made and the house constructed, and it was the first Methodist meeting house in the county. There was not much money available at that time and the sums given by the different classes would seem pitifully small today, but they were given with a generous spirit and undoubtedly went much farther than they would now.

At the quarterly conference held in Danville, August 4, 1838, it was ordered that P. S. Dickens, Daniel McCreary, Hezekiah Smith, Asa Beck and Elijah M. Crawford be appointed a committee to divide the Danville circuit into two separate circuits; also at the same time it was ordered that S. B. Caywood, R. C. Russell and H. Rammel be appointed a committee to form an estimate of the probable cost of building a church in Danville. At a subsequent conference William Henton, R. C. Russell, William C. Cline, James Logan and Samuel Brenton were elected trustees for the Danville church, which was erected in 1840 on the same lot upon which is located the present church. This church was occupied for public worship until 1865, when it was converted into a parsonage and the chapel of the Danville Academy was fitted up and used for church purposes.

THE DANVILLE ACADEMY.

Before this time the church society in the town of Danville had taken the lead in educational matters by organizing and building up the Danville Academy, which was operated under the management of the quarterly conference. This enterprise commenced in 1858 and lasted until 1868. Among the prominent educators who, at different times, had charge of this school were Professors Tarr, Lummis, O. H. Smith, J. L. Rippetoe and James Scull. About eighteen thousand dollars were spent by the Methodists of Danville in this undertaking. In the spring of 1878, twenty years after the beginning, the society transferred, for a small sum, all of the school property to the Central Normal College.

In that year the present Methodist church was begun in Danville and finished at a cost of ten thousand dollars. It was dedicated on the 26th of January, 1879. Milton Henton, Moses Keeney, Bloomfield White, B. N. Beale and N. T. Hadley were trustees during the erection of the present church building.

Danville was organized into a station in 1853. Before that among the preachers who had preached in the circuit were J. Tarkington, Joseph White, Asa Beck, Israel Lewis, D. F. Streight, Hezekiah Smith, Frank Richmond, J. B. Demotte. After that came C. S. Burgner, N. L. Brakeman, Samuel Godfrey, Allen Gurney, George Warner, Luther Taylor, D. F. Barnes, T. C. Workman, F. Taylor, Nelson Green, Thomas S. Webb, Francis M. Pavey, Samuel P. Colvin, George W. Bower, James H. Claypool, Joseph C. Reed, R. D. Utter, I. H. Hull.

The first Sunday school organized by the Methodists in Danville was opened in the old brick school house located on lot 1, block 23, with Henry Rammel as leader. After this organization had continued for one year it disbanded and then there was a union Sunday school, with John Baker as superintendent. This school met in the old Presbyterian church on lot 1, block 15. This continued for one year, when the Methodists withdrew and, as a society, were interested in no school until 1840. At this date they organized again into a Sunday school with John Green as superintendent. The school lived two years. At a political meeting in the old court house on Saturday night, in the latter part of October, 1844, there happened to be in attendance Hezekiah S. McCormick, Milton Henton and William V. Bishop. In a conversation held at that time they resolved that a Methodist Sunday school should be started the next day week. Notice was accordingly given and on the set date the school started with a membership of fifty. The Sunday school is still in existence and has an excellent membership.

The Methodist Episcopal church, at Stilesville, has been organized about seventy-five years. Services were held for many years in the old school house and in 1850 the society built a new church which cost them about sixteen hundred dollars. Among the early members were Isaac Smart, William Cline, John Clark, John Richardson, James Borders, Joseph Bishop, Edward Jackson, Elijah McAnich and their wives. Some of the early ministers were James Williams, Joseph Woods, J. F. Woodruff, Silas Gaskin, Bridges, Miles, Woods, W. W. Pewett, William Ginnis, Asa Beck and J. V. R. Miler. The present church at Stilesville is in charge of Rev. Ramsay. A brick church was built in the nineties, costing three thousand dollars. There is a good membership of over a hundred.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Cartersburg was formed in the winter of 1856-7 by Rev. Jesse Woodward, with John Biddle, William Little, Richard Poe and their wives, Mrs. Brady and others as the first members. Their first house of worship was built in 1857 at a cost of seven hundred and fifty dollars. It was of frame and located in the northwest part of the village. A brick church was erected in 1897. Rev. Eckhart is the present pastor, having charge of a congregation of one hundred people.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Coatesville was organized in the thirties. Their first house of worship was destroyed by fire about 1860 and a new one was built the same year at a cost of two thousand dollars. Revs. J. B. Combs, Jesse Hill, D. W. Risher, Nelson Green, John McDaniel, W. D. Davidson, B. H. Bradbury, E. Mason were a few of the earlier pastors. Rev. Smock is in charge at present. The church has a substantial house of worship and the membership is about eighty-five.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Plainfield has been an organization nearly seventy years. Among the early members of this church were O. H. Dennis, Riley Taylor and wife, Alexander Worth (founder of the society) and wife, William Owens, Sebastian Hiss, Fred Trucks and Mrs. Higgins. Revs. Dunlavy, Switzer, Green, Johnson, Beard and Siddell were among the early pastors of the Plainfield church. Rev. Williams is the present pastor. There are about one hundred and fifty members.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Brownsburg was the second to be organized in the town. Some of the early pastors were I. P. Patch, T. M. Webb and John B. Demott. Rev. Weidman is the pastor in charge at this date, and has succeeded in maintaining the high standard of the church. There is a good membership and a new brick house of worship.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Amo was organized in the year 1867. The first church house was completed in that same year at a cost of two thousand dollars. Among the first members were William H. Tush, Winfield Hines, John McAninch, Wesley Johnson, M. W. Cosner, John M. Champion, Herbert Fencer, John Gaspar, S. F. Tincher, James E. Ralston, with their wives, Mrs. Lucinda Stanley and Mrs. Nancy Newman. The pastors have been F. M. Pavy, B. H. Bradbury, Thomas Bartlett, J. F. McDaniel, W. C. Davidson, Nelson Green, B. W. Risher, Nelson Green, Jesse Hill, J. B. Combs, Elihu Mason, Rev. Smock is the present pastor of the Amo church. The church has a good membership and is prosperous.

The first house of worship in Pittsboro was erected in 1836 by the Methodist Episcopal society. Simon T. Hadley offered to donate lot 2, block 2, to any congregation which would build a church. Arch and John Alexander, William Tincher, Nathaniel Helton and their families were the charter members. The elder Alexander sawed lumber in his water mill on his farm below town, and a house was built a short distance west of the present building. Rev. Enoch Wood was the first minister. Park Poynter and Nathaniel Gossett were its local preachers for years.

The Methodist Episcopal church at the town of North Salem was organized over eighty years age. Reuben Claypool was a Methodist minister and preached to his neighbors in their private cabins from the earliest date, and about 1833 a class was formed. Among the prominent early members were John S. and Charity Woodward, John Claypool, wife and children, Chester and Martha Page, Mrs. Jerusha Covey, and William and Eleanor Jones and family. A church was built by the society before the war, costing twelve hundred dollars. J. L. Smith, T. F. Drake, W. Fletcher Clark, David Hadley and D. P. McLain were among the early ministers. The church is now in good condition, with a membership of one hundred and fifty.

Before any church organization existed, in Washington township, the Methodists held religious services regularly at the home of John and Dorcas Gossett. Then a class of ten or twelve charter members was organized, a yearly camp meeting was established on the land of Seth Hurin, one-fourth mile west of present Avon. In 1842 a frame church was erected just south of the camp ground. The labor on this building was almost entirely performed by the membership. Rev. Joseph Marsee was pastor as well as one of the chief carpenters, and each day at the noon hour he preached a short sermon to the men and to their wives who came bringing them dinner. In 1875 a second church was built on this same lot and was dedicated October 10th. This building, thirty-two by forty-six feet in size, cost complete sixteen hundred dollars. T. C. Webster was pastor during the building. The building was still in good condition when the grade for the traction line was made in the winter of 1903, and it was found that the church was so cut off from the road by the grade that the building must be moved or a new one erected. The latter course was chosen. The entire membership, and members of other churches, as well as those with no church relation, contributed generously. The building was completed at a total cost of five thousand dollars, and, on October 2, 1904, was dedicated, without a cent of debt and without a collection. Rev. H. C. Riley was pastor during the time of building. The size of the building is forty-two feet in the extreme, with a square tower, with entrance through its vestibule to both the main and Sunday school rooms. The building is of Poston paying brick, rock faced, and with stone trimming, and is a neat and substantial structure. In addition to this church there are in the township two other Methodist churches. Shiloh. three miles east, and Bartlett's, three miles west,

The Methodist Episcopal society dates from 1833 in Union township. At this date a class was formed at the house of William Montgomery, who was leader. Among the early members were Mr. Plummer, Sally Bargan, Claiborne Davis and John Pritchett. The church building was located one half mile south of Lizton.

The first church organized in Washington township was at the house of Robert Wilson in 1823. This is now the Shiloh church. It was the first Methodist Episcopal church organization in the county and the fourth one of any denomination. There were afterwards three other churches in the township of the Methodist Episcopal faith, namely: Shiloh, Wesley and Bartlett's Chapel. Regular Baptist churches were located at Abner's creek and Salem.

The African Methodist Episcopal church at Plainfield was organized about forty-five years ago. It met for a long time at the Morgan school house, two and a half miles from Plainfield, and in 1879 commenced holding its services in the village. The church erected in that year cost about six hundred dollars.

CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

The Disciples, or Christian, church was organized in the fall of 1844, at Danville, by Love H. Jameson, of Indianapolis. The charter members were Allen Hess and wife, Asa S. White and wife, James Odell and wife, Wesley B. Sears and wife, Wesley Bell and wife, Margaret McPhetridge, Celia Cake and Samuel A. Verbrike and wife, all of whom are now dead. The first officers were Allen Hess and Asa S. White, elders; Wesley Bell and James Odell, deacons. The organization was effected at the home of Asa S. White and for years afterwards the society met to worship in private homes and in the old court house. In the year of 1852 the congregation was sufficiently large to build a frame church, in which it worshipped for more than twenty years. The church had no resident ministry for many years, but was periodically visited by such men as L. H. Jameson, Thomas Lockhart, N. Waters, William Jarrett, John O'Kane, O. P. Badger, A. I. Hobbs and others. After the Civil War William R. Jewell settled with them as the regular and only pastor. He was followed by U. C. Brewer, W. H. Blanks, W. S. Tingley, George G. Peale, Ira J. Chase, A. J. Frank, S. O. Conner, A. L. Oreut, A. L. Conner, U. G. Martin, E. E. Daugherty, E. E. Moorman, Charles Goodnight, A. Leech and the present pastor. W. E. Anderson.

A handsome brick house of worship was erected in 1874 at a cost of sixteen thousand dollars. It has, however, recently been demolished and a more pretentious building is now in process of construction on the same spot on greatly enlarged grounds at a cost of fifty thousand dollars. The new structure was induced by the munificent gift of thirty-five thousand dollars, by Edgar E. Shirley, as a memorial to his father and mother. The new building will be institutional in character. It will embrace not only an auditorium for worship, but an assembly room for the Sunday school, divers class rooms, a kitchen, a banqueting hall and a gymnasium. The latter will be equipped with appliances for all modern physical exercises, such as swings, bars, in-door ball games, etc. It will be supplied with about one hundred lockers, lavatories, etc., and will be set apart on certain evenings of the week for the use of the girls and certain evenings for the boys of the town, without reference to church affiliations. A governor or governess to attend each open evening.

The church membership, at the time of organization in 1840, numbered thirty. In 1884 it had increased to two hundred and sixty and now has an enrollment of four hundred and four.

The Sunday school was organized in 1852, Moses Cavitt being the first superintendent. The present average attendance is two hundred and twenty and James P. Snodgrass is the superintendent. The church has also been efficient in religious and social activities usual to church work.

.The Christian church, at Clayton, was organized December 7, 1863, by Rev. Thomas Lockhart and O. P. Badger. Samuel B. Hall and John R. Ballard were chosen as the first elders and George Acton and James Ferguson, deacons. The charter members were sixty-three in number. The church built in 1865 cost over twenty-six hundred dollars. Among the early pastors were Thomas Lockhart, O. P. Badger, Jameson, Sherman, Canfield, Miller, Jewell, Frank and Brewer. Rev. Scofield is the present pastor and the membership is one hundred and twenty-five.

The Christian church at Stilesville was organized and their first house of worship erected in 1842. This building was of frame and cost one thousand dollars. Among the first members were Daniel Osborne, John W. Bryant, John R. Robards, George W. Snoddy, James Snoddy and their families. After using their first church over thirty years, a brick edifice was erected, costing twenty-five hundred dollars. George W. Snoddy was a preacher in this church over forty years, dying in April, 1882. A. J. Frank, of Greencastle, took charge after his death, then A. M. Connor, Gilchrist. Rev. Beard is the present pastor. The membership numbers seventy-five.

The Christian church at Plainfield was organized in March, 1830, with the following as the first members: David Cox and wife, John Hadley, Jonathan Hadley, David Carter, Ezekiel Hornaday, Hiram Hornaday, Hiram Green, Abijah Cox, with their wives, and Alexander Shover, seventeen in all. They soon built a hewed-log church and in that primitive structure, half a mile north of the present site of Plainfield, they worshipped for five or six years. They then erected a frame church in the village, using the same for twenty years, when it was succeeded by a brick structure, built on the site of the frame, at a cost of three thousand dollars. Among the first ministers were Revs. Michael and Job Combs, Lewis Comer, John Secrest, Oatman, and John O'Kane. Rev. Shields is now in charge. There are two hundred members enrolled.

The Christian church at Pittsboro was organized February 25, 1854. A church was built in the same year at a cost of two thousand dollars. It was later used as a residence. This first church was located on ground now owned by the Pierson sisters. It was erected by James Cundiff, an uncle of Mrs. E. W. Sawyer. This membership was organized by the venerable Thomas Lockhart. He ministered to the spiritual needs of this congregation for years and was succeeded by Elders Luke Warren and James Canfield. Its charter members were from the families of the Wells, Parkers and Hills, who were before that members at Brownsburg. This house served for the triple purpose of sanctuary, school and dwelling until 1889, when it was purchased and razed by Douglas Baker and the site occupied with a dwelling.

The second church was built in 1873. It has since been remodeled and made more modern. Frank Sumner is the present pastor. The membership is one hundred and ninety.

The Christian church at North Salem was organized in 1837, with Charles Fleece and Thompson Farmer as elders. O. P. Badger, D. Collins, W. B. F. Treat, A. J. Frank, William Holt and A. Plunkett were among the early pastors. In recent years this church divided over a controversy in regard to an organ and now there are two Christian churches in Salem. Rev. H. E. Kelsev is in charge of the larger and the smaller obtains supply.

The Christian church, in Brownsburg, is the oldest in that town and the second to be organized in the township of Lincoln. It was organized in 1835 by Thomas Lockhart, with seventeen members. John L. Parker and V. Cress were the elders. The society constructed a brick church in 1859, at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. Rev. William L. Newlin is the pastor now. The church has a strong membership.

In Union township the first preaching was done by Gilbert Harney, of the Christian denomination. In 1837 Gilbert Harney organized at the house of Archibald Alexander, a church, with Mr. Alexander, Joseph P. Lewis, Samuel C. Carrington and their wives, with a few others, as members. A church was built about 1875 and has been prosperous since.

In Middle township the Christian church was the first to be organized. The Baptist was second and then the Cumberland Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETIES.

The Presbyterian church at Danville was organized in 1832. Among the leading early members were Daniel McAuley and wife, Jacob K. Moore and wife, Alexander Morris and family, Henry G. Todd, Samuel King and Eliza McPheeters. Among the pastors who have served this congregation have been Revs. Samuel G. Lowry, Hill, Moody, Chase, Theophilus Lowry, Henry Hammer, Samuel Wishard, Henry L. Dickerson, G. D. Parker, N. S. Dickey.

The first house of worship was erected on the corner lot north of the present standpipe. It was frame, substantially built, the sleepers of whole logs, slightly flattened on one side, on which rested the floor. This building was used for public worship on the Sabbath and a subscription school was taught by the old-time pedagogues during the week. Some of the charter members of the congregation walked to church from what is now a part of the "Abe Eastes farm," a distance of nearly four miles, and had to cross the creek northeast of town on a foot log. Henry Ward Beecher attended and preached here during meetings of the presbytery. It is reported that a Sabbath school was conducted at which "Uncle George Rich" led the singing with a violin.

At the building of the next church, now the Knights of Pythias hall, about 1850, the old building was purchased by George Wayland, who put in a ceiling and converted it into a carpenter shop and later into a residence, and as such it served until leveled in 1891, when the heavy timbers made fuel for a family for more than two years. The new church was not fully completed and dedicated until December 20, 1858, when Amos Jones, one of the early ministers, came and assisted in the dedication. Rev. H. L. Dickerson came in the spring of 1858. Ministers who had previously served the church were Revs. Cole. Post and Lee. Rev. Dickerson came direct from Lane Seminary, with his bride, who had been a teacher in a female seminary on Walnut Hills, and they at once began to plan better things for this church. He resigned after twenty years of faithful service. During the pastorate of Rev. Dickerson he had organized White Lick church. During his absence the pulpit was supplied by Dr. Fisk, of Greencastle, and Rev. R. B. Herron On June 1, 1877, Rev. Dickerson returned and again took up the work here and at White Lick, but deaths and removals had so depleted the membership that it was found impossible to sustain a regular pastor, so Rev. Dickerson removed to Indianapolis, from which point he supplied vacant churches in every direction from that city.

On July 30, 1882, the Danville congregation decided to organize as a Cumberland Presbyterian church, with a large majority of the working members as charter members of the new organization. Among them were J. O. Wishard and wife, Isaae Piersol and wife, W. T. Lawson and wife, James Reed and wife, Asa Martin and wife, Charles R. Rose, Emma Piersol Barnett, Mary E. Warner, Elizabeth Scearce, Mary Cooper, J. B. Harlan, Ruth Cash and Ella Nave. together with Charles Hadley and wife, Stanley Hall and wife, Asa Black and wife, and Lawrence Vannice, who had removed to this vicinity from the New Winchester and Groveland Cumberland congregations. This new organization proceeded to crect a new building, in which they now worship. Work on the church was begun in the spring of 1884 and completed in November of the same year and dedicated November 30th. It cost sixty-two hundred dollars.

In April, 1883, the Indianapolis presbytery, on petition of the members of the old church who did not see fit to go into the Cumberland organization, reorganized the church, with Henry G. Todd, Robert R. Downard and Isaac R. Lawson as elders, and Marshall Todd and Frank J. Christie, deacons. Dr. H. G. Todd was afterward elected clerk of the session. Rev. G. D. Parker was secured as a supply until February, 1885, when Rev. N. S. Dickey came and labored faithfully, but the field was small and the church grew weaker until, in April, 1890, by resolution of presbytery, the church was dissolved at the request of the home mission committee.

On May 25, 1906, the reunion of the Cumberland Presbyterian and the Presbyterian churches of the United States was consummated at Decatur, Illinois, and is now known as the Presbyterian church of the United States of America. The Danville church, by a vote, concurred in this action of the general assembly.

This church has had as pastors and supplies Revs. Witherspoon, Whatley, Penick, Halsell, Hudgins, Rogers, McKnight, Prather, Yokely, Mahr, Danley, Giuchard, Christensen and W. H. Gray.

In the early thirties the Cumberland Presbyterians of Liberty township were perfected into an organization by Rev. Alexander C. Downey at Belleville. They, in common with other religious organizations in our early days, had no stated house of worship, but met from house to house or held services in some school house, mostly, however, in what was known as the Mitchell school house, situated on the west side of the road leading south from Clayton and at the short bend just south of the national road.

The minutes of the sessions having become lost, Wabash presbytery authorized the elders to procure a new book and enter therein the names of such members as were known to be in good standing. This was accomplished in January, 1841, when thirty-eight names were enrolled. Of these, Samuel Little, of Plainfield, now nearing the ninety-second anniversary of his birth, was a charter member and his niece, Rebecca Harden, of Indianapolis, some eighty years of age, are the only ones known to be among the living.

In 1851, upon a lot donated by Richard Worrell, and a short distance south of the present location, was erected a house for worship. The contractor was Ferdinand Hopwood, who was assisted by D. N. Hopwood, Frank W. Beckwith, William A. Ragan and Moses Kebner.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Ragan were the first to be received into membership in the Clayton church. This was on March 27, 1853.

The first Christmas tree in Clayton was held in this church on Christmas eve, 1866. In 1869 the first church organ was purchased by Taylor Wills, who acted as organist for eight years.

In 1872, not liking the location, a lot was bought of Joseph L. Rhoades and Messrs, Dr. C. T. Lawrence, Henry Lincoln and William A. Ragan were appointed a committee to remove the church and refit it for use. This building having been occupied something over half a century as place for worship and also showing the marks of time, in May, 1901, it was decided that a more suitable location and a building adequate for the needs of the times were absolutely necessary. The church appointed Messrs. Columbus F. Edmondson, Thomas Edmondson and Howard Mitchell, who performed their duties by selecting a site more centrally located and erecting thereon a building forty-nine by fifty-eight from out to out, having an auditorium and two Sunday school rooms, all of which may be easily thrown together as occasion demands. The seating capacity is about four hundred and may be increased to five hundred by crowding. The building is heated by a hot air furnace, lighted by a gasoline plant and seated with chairs. A new threehundred-dollar vocalion organ was secured. The cost of the location, building and furnishings footed up about five thousand dollars. Samuel Little, before mentioned, is supposed to be the oldest living elder, having been ordained in 1832.

W. A. Ragan was Sunday school superintendent for over thirty years. For twenty years John Cornett led in the singing and Amos S. Wills was secretary of the Sunday school.

Much of the credit for the structure was due to the untiring zeal of the pastor, Rev. Elmer J. Bouher.

The following pastors have been in charge here at various times: Alexander Downey, Samuel C. Mitchell, James Ritchey, Joseph Hannah, W. T. Ferguson, D. D., Elam McCord, H. D. Onyett, D. D., A. Randolph, W. D. Hawkins, B. F. Ivy, L. P. Witherspoon, A. H. Whatley, Thomas Penick, J. P. Halsell, Charles Wilson, J. L. Hudgins, J. L. McKnight, Josephus Latham, A. T. Carr, Elmer J. Bouher, and Rev. Frank, the present incumbent.

The Presbyterian church at Brownsburg was organized by George Long in 1865. He raised the sum of twenty-three hundred dollars to be used for the construction of a church building. Revs. Beach, McKee, Mayo and H. L. Dickerson were a few of the first to occupy the pulpit. Rev. Beeson is the present pastor. The church has a membership of one hundred and is prosperous.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.

The Regular Baptist church at Danville was organized in the year 1823, having the distinction of being the first religious organization in the county and also of having been organized before the county. Some of the early members were William Faught and wife, Thomas Flathers and wife, Joel Jelf and L. T. Pounds. Elder J. W. Thomas preached for some time prior to the year 1836. Elders William Hardin and Thomas Hooten each served for a number of years. The latter's back was broken by a falling shed and he died a year after the accident. Elder Erasmus D. Thomas commenced his labors here before the war.

The church has had three houses of worship. The first, a log structure, was used until 1852, when a new frame building was constructed. This house was used until 1903, when the present building was built. The regular services of the church are held monthly on the second Saturday and Sunday following in each month. Elder E. W. Thomas, the son of Erasmus D. Thomas, has served the church continuously.

The Missionary Baptist church was organized November 9, 1850, by members from the Belleville church. Prominent in this movement were Moses Cavett and wife, Rufus Tharpe, Richard Christie and David Downs. A house of worship was built, which cost about twelve hundred dollars. The money for this building was raised chiefly through the efforts of the wife of the first pastor. This church society is now discontinued in the town of Danville.

The Baptist church at Cartersburg was constituted March 21, 1864, with Rev. R. M. Parks as pastor and the following first members. H. D. McCormick and wife, R. T. McCormick and wife, A. S. McCormick and wife, Matilda Christine, William, Nancy, Sudy, Cynthia, and Moses Tomlinson, James and Sarah Ḥayden, John A. and Sarah Veatch, Isabel Silch, Joseph K. and Elizabeth Little, Hazzard and Margaret J. Woodhurst, Anna Martin, Sarah A. Snodgrass, Oliver P. Garr, Susan Dilley, Charles Maddox, Greenberry Baker, James Roach, George Hufford, Hannah Owens. R. T. McCormick was chosen the first clerk. The society erected a frame church in 1868 at a cost of seven hundred dollars. R. M. Parks, B. A. Melson, W. Trent, J. W. Sherrill, F. M. Buchan and J. W. Crews were among the first pastors. Rev. Buchanan is now in charge.

The White Lick Baptist church was the first of any denomination organized in Hendricks county. It was formed March 27, 1824, by Elder William Pope, with the following members: Thomas Hinton and wife, James Thompson and wife and Chris. Pope. This little band met at the house of Elder Pope for several years and in 1831 built a church at Belleville, a frame building. After a number of years the church was divided, a portion going to Clayton and organizing the Missionary Baptist church. Many of the first members having died, the Belleville church went down, and finally became defunct and the church building torn down. This church was moved to Pittsboro in 1887. Elder E. A. Williams has been preacher for several years. The membership is about fifty.

The Baptist church at North Salem was organized before the Civil War and a building erected during the war at a cost of one thousand dollars. Among the first members were Preston Pennington, Elizabeth Ballard, Susan, Levi, Mary and Eliza Pennington, Thomas, Susan and George Barber, John N. and Mary V. Clemens and Eaton Bales. Rev. Fuson is the present pastor.

The Baptist church at Amo was organized near the time of the opening of the Civil War in 1861. A year or two after the organization a frame church was constructed, costing two thousand dollars. Among the early members were Elijah Wheeler, Harding Tincher, Milton Bland, Hiram Bland, Samuel Hubbard, and their wives. The first regular pastor was Rev. Edwards. Following him came Rev. Wilson G. Trent, Moore, Sherill, L. A. Clevenger, R. N. Harvey. Rev. Tedford now fills the pulpit.

The Missionary Baptist church at Stilesville was organized about eighty years ago. The frame church first used was constructed in 1840. Among the early members of the society were David Boswell, Abraham Bland, James Walls, Moses Crawford, Josiah Garrin, their wives, and Mary Reese. A brick church was completed in 1882, at a cost of three thousand dollars. Among the early pastors were Revs. John Jones, Benjamin Arnold, John Mugg, Jacob and John Rynearson. Rev. J. E. Sherrill is the latest pastor.

The Missionary Baptist church at Clayton was founded March 11, 1854, by John Vawter, Jacob Rynearson, M. Elliott, Davis Boswell and Moses Crawford, who held letters of dismissal from the Belleville church, and a number of others, fifty-eight in all. The first trustees elected were Richard Worrell, Francis Edmondson and John Rynearson. Rev. Hackleman is the pastor in 1014.

The Missionary Baptist church at Coatesville organized their church in 1871, and built a frame church in 1873 at a cost of twelve hundred dollars. Revs. Sherrill, Jesse Buchanan, John F. Crews, G. W. Terry. Rev. J. E.

Sherrill also preaches at this church. Rev. Richard Oliphant is in charge of the Primitive Baptist church at Coatesville.

The Missionary Baptists at Plainfield have had a regular organization for about sixty years. Among the first members were Adam Jones and wife, Orrin Bonner and wife, Samuel McCormick and wife, William Douglass and wife and children. After a time the society purchased the church which had been occupied by the Friends and used the same for a number of years. In August, 1884, they dedicated a fine brick church, which cost about three thousand dollars. Rev. Bell is the pastor today.

The Regular Baptist church was the first to be organized in Middle township. The Spicklemires, Keeneys and Newman families were among the charter members. Their church building was erected on grounds now comprising the old White Lick cemetery east of Pittsboro, about the year 1837. The earliest preachers were Harrison Darnell, Thomas Hooten, William Hardie and Peter Keeney. Its membership increased with succeeding years until it was one of the strongest associations in the county.

The first church organization in Eel River township was that of the Regular Baptists, which was organized at Round Town by the Penningtons and others, at an unknown date.

William Pope, a Baptist minister, did the first preaching and organized the first Baptist church in Hendricks county, in his own house, in the autumn of 1823.

The Center Valley Baptists have a church building, dedicated in October, 1906.

FRIENDS.

The Western yearly meeting of Friends was organized in September, 1858, the first members being Eleazer Bales, Charles Moore, Matthew Stanley and Robert W. Hodson, with their families. At the time of the organization the large new building could not accommodate the crowd. Barnabas C. Hobbs, of Bloomingdale, Indiana, was the first presiding clerk and Shiles Moore, of Plainfield, the first treasurer. The women members organized a separate meeting, with Drusilla Wilson, of Indianapolis, the first clerk. Separate sessions of the men and women were continued until 1893, since which time the whole body has met together. The yearly meeting has enjoyed nearly a half century of prosperity. She experienced one schism in 1877, but fortunately this was scarcely felt in any of its limits except Plainfield.

On March 28, 1913, the splendid church building of the Friends yearly meeting burned. Experts came to contract for the building of a new structure and upon examining the walls of the old church, found that they were eighteen inches thick and sunk ten feet to hard-pan. This wall could not be duplicated without great cost, so the new structure was built upon the foundations of the old. It was opened on March 8, 1914, having cost nearly seventeen thousand dollars. One-third of the building is for the local society and the rest for the yearly meeting. The local society has a membership of five hundred. E. J. Carter is pastor. The Western yearly meeting is composed of one hundred and ten churches and the meeting is held on the Tuesday before the third Sunday in September.

The Friends church at the town of Amo was organized about the year of 1840. A log church was constructed as the first house of worship, but this was quickly succeeded by a frame structure, which was used for forty years and then gave way to the new structure, which was completed in the fall of 1883, at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. Among the early members of this society were Philip Johnson, John Cosner, Annuel Edwards and Asael Hunt.

The Friends church in Danville was organized in the year 1874 with about forty charter members, among them Henry and B. F. Howell, Wyatt Osborn, William F. Hamrick, William Cox, John Warnock, John McPheters and their wives, Mrs. J. W. Estep and E. L. Smith. Within a year steps were taken toward building a church, which was completed in 1876 at a cost of four thousand dollars, located on the corner of Cross and South streets. There were but few resident members of the church when the first effort was made to enter this field. John K. Howell, Anna Mills and William S. Wooton were the first ministers in the early organization of this church. John Henry Douglas dedicated the house of worship; David and Sarah Hadley were the first pastors, being in charge at the time the church building was erected. The parsonage was built in 1885. Since the organization of the church evangelistic services of more than passing interest have been held by John Henry Douglas, Nathan and Esther Frame, George Willis and Mary Moon. The following persons have been pastors of the church: William S. Wooton, Caleb Johnson, Mahlon Perry, Abbie Trueblood, Orvil Jones, Howard Brown, Thomas Brown, Robert Pretlow, Sarah M. Hadley, Hannah Pratt Jessup, Zeno Doane, Fred Smith, David Hadley, Willis Bond, The church has never failed to sustain a regular means of grace, and has always maintained a good Sunday school. The present membership is considerably over one hundred.

Other churches of this denomination in Hendricks county are at Bridgeport, Fairfield, Union Hill, three miles south of Plainfield, and Hadley.

CATHOLIC CHURCH.

St. Malachy's Catholic church at Brownsburg is first written upon the records under the date of August 26, 1867, and this was made by Rev. D. J. McMullen, through whose efforts the church building was constructed. Very Rev. Aug. Bessonies was there February 20, 1860, and the first resident priest began his work there on October 2d of that same year. He was succeeded after a time by Rev. Dennis O'Donavan. The latter served some years at this point and then exchanged with Rev. Thomas Logan, of Greencastle, where he remained a year or two. Returning in 1877, he found the parish in debt for certain improvements made by Father Logan and O'Donavan denied the validity of the debt. Bishop Chatard took the opposite view and to secure the creditors gave a mortgage on the church property. Father O'Donovan contested the right of the Bishop to do this and the court decided for the latter. The Bishop then asked and obtained from the supreme court a writ of ejectment against the priest, who also lost a subsequent suit for fifty thousand dollars damages for loss of employment, etc. During these troubles mass was regularly held at private houses or in a rented hall by Revs. Patrick Shepherd, Casper Seiler, Charles Curran and E. J. Spelman. The first church was built in 1900, at a cost of twenty-five hundred dollars. The fine new structure recently completed has cost thirteen thousand dollars. Father John A. Walsh is the pastor and the congregation numbers eighty families.

OTHER CHURCHES.

The first religious meetings in Franklin township were held by the New Lights and John Smart and Thomas Woods did the preaching. This denomination organized a church at Orsburn's horse mill, which was the most noted place in the township until 1835. At this mill the Christian church was organized by Thomas Lockhart in 1832.

A Lutheran church at Pecksburg was organized in the sixties. William Tinster preached for several years and in 1882 removed to Mud Creek. This church is not active at present.

A Holiness society exists at Cartersburg, with twelve members and in charge of Rev. George Stephenson.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE BENCH AND BAR.

THE FIRST CIRCUIT COURT.

At the house of William Ballard, on October 25, 1824, was held the first term of the circuit court. Then the county was in the fifth judicial circuit. The presiding judge was William W. Wick, commissioned by Jonathan Jennings on January 2, 1822. The associate judges at the same time were Nathan Kirk and James Downard, whose commissions were issued by Governor William Hendricks on July 26, 1824. Levi Jessup was clerk of the court.

The men who acted as grand jurors this first session were Thomas R. Ballard, foreman, Daniel B. Tryer, Jesse Kellum, Pollard Baldwin, John Hawkins, David Demoss, Noah Bateman, John Fowler, John Ballard, James Thompson, Abijah Bray, Adin Ballard, Moses Alderson, Thomas Gilbert, David Ross and Samuel Jones. Jonathan Jessup was selected to attend to the grand jury. Hervey Gregg was the prosecuting attorney.

In this session of court Calvin Fletcher, Gabriel Jones, Mr. Johnson and Daniel B. Wick were admitted to the bar. On the following day Craven P. Heister was also admitted to practice as an attorney.

On this day the first case came up for trial. It was that of Joshua W. Redman vs. Benjamin Benson, for debt. This case was continued. James Brown vs. William H. Henton was then called and tried. This closed the October term, the next beginning in the following April.

On April 25th the first case was tried before a jury, being the case of Brown vs. Hinton, for debt. The men who composed the jury were James McClure, Abijah Pinson, Ezekiel Hornaday, John Leaman, John W. Bryant, James Dunn, Samuel Woodward, Stephen Cook, Thomas Lockhart, David Demoss, David Ballard and Robert Cooper. The result of the trial was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for thirty dollars.

So ran the trials for a number of years after the establishment of the court. The first really important case was in February, 1827, against Samuel

K. Barlow for killing George Matlock—charged with manslaughter. He was tried in August and sentenced to one year in the penitentiary, but he was granted a respite until the first day of the next term, Thomas Lockhart, Samuel Jessup, John Ballard and Abel Stanley giving a bond of three hundred dollars for his appearance.

FIRST PROBATE COURT.

The first probate court was held in Hendricks county in April, 1825, and Nathan Kirk and James Downard were associate judges. At this meeting the wills of Uriah Hults and William Ballard were admitted to probate.

TUDGES.

The list of judges who have served in the different courts of Hendricks county down to the present time will be found in the official summary of county officers.

THE BAR.

James M. Gregg was one of the first active attorneys in Hendricks county. He was born in 1806 in Patrick county, Virginia, and came to Hendricks in 1830. After being employed as dry goods clerk by James J. Given in Danville for a season, he became a deputy in the county clerk's office. In 1834 he was made county surveyor, and was later elected to the office of county clerk. At the close of his term of office as clerk he began the practice of law which he followed exclusively until his death with good success. He served one term in Congress, also one in the Legislature, and died in June, 1860.

Simon T. Hadley was another of the early attorneys in the county. He was born in North Carolina in 1801, taught school for a time, and in 1826 came to Hendricks county and settled in Danville. He filled the offices of clerk and recorder in this county, serving as both for seven years and as recorder alone for twenty-two years. He was president of the First National Bank in Danville for many years. Mr. Hadley never studied law as a profession, his practice being confined almost exclusively to probate matters, conveyancing and the writing of contracts. He was so reasonable in his charge, and possessed so fully the confidence of the people of the county that it was not at all infrequent for a citizen and his wife to drive over muddy roads in a two-horse wagon fifteen or twenty miles to get Uncle Simon to write a deed or other simple contract.

Christian C. Nave was also among the first and also among the most prominent of the Hendricks county lawyers. He was born in eastern Tennessee in 1803. He was educated for the legal profession and in the fall of 1831, at the age of twenty-eight years, left his native state for Indiana on horseback and after some investigation and inspection, arrived and settled in Danville, December 17, 1831. He had traveled all the way from his eastern Tennessee home to Danville through the woods on horseback, and when he arrived his total belongings was his mount, a few articles of wearing apparel in his saddle bags, a copy of Blackstone's Commentaries, a pistol, and five dollars in money.

Before he had permanently located himself in the county seat of Danville, he was called upon to defend, for a nominal fee, a citizen for the murder of his neighbor. It was Nave's opportunity and right well he recognized it. Being naturally of great energy and shrewdness, he at once set about the construction of a defense, in what was generally thought to be a desperate case, which resulted not only in his client's acquittal, but also in extending Mr. Nave's reputation as an able advocate throughout central Indiana and which served him well and brought him many good fees throughout his subsequent action and eventful career. He was the subject of many amusing anecdotes, never accused of wrong or unprofessional conduct. He led the Third Indiana Regiment into Mexico as colonel, was liberal and public spirited and died in Danville in 1884. He was unfaltering in the study and practice of his profession up to the hour of his death, in his eighty-second year, and in his last sickness had his daughter sit by his bedside and read to him all the current opinions of the supreme court as they appeared.

Leander M. Campbell, a Kentuckian, was admitted to the Hendricks county bar in 1854. He was an educated man, had been a previous school teacher. He had a remarkable memory and seemed always to have at hand, ready for immediate use, any legal principle or ruling that had ever before attracted his attention. His social qualities were of the very best and his acquaintance with the people of the county was so thorough that he used to say there was not a family living in the county for a period of five years that he could not tell its blood and marriage relations with all other families in the county.

In making up of juries and in the examination of witnesses this thorough acquaintance with the people was a great advantage he had over his opponents in a trial.

He was a forceful and lucid speaker, carrying always the air of sincerity and always put forth his best endeavor to win his cases in the circuit court. He disliked the supreme court and seldom appealed a case—seldom had an occasion to appeal, for he was renowned as a "verdict getter." He enjoyed up to the time of his death, in 1890, a large and lucrative practice in central Indiana and in his prime was generally regarded as the Napoleon of the Hendricks county bar.

Peter S. Kennedy, another Kentuckian, was contemporaneous with Mr. Campbell and was generally regarded as his yoke-fellow. He was a ripe lawyer, a good writer and really enjoyed presenting his argument to the supreme court better than to the circuit court or jury. In 1865 he moved with his family to Crawfordsville, where he spent the balance of his days.

In 1866 there came to the Hendricks county bar Jesse S. Ogden, a Virginian, who, for brilliancy in letters, eloquence in speech and loveableness in social intercourse, never had a superior, and perhaps never an equal, at this bar. Mr. Ogden left his mountain home in 1858 to seek his fortune in the West. He arrived in Danville in November, impecunious, but full of ambition. His first job of work was to undertake, with a negro, to cut ten cords of wood for Levi Ritter for ten dollars. He entered the Danville Academy as janitor in 1850 and thus, in services, he paid his tuition for two school years and until August, 1861, when he left his school and enlisted in the Seventh Indiana Infantry. On the 22d of March, 1862, at the battle of Winchester, Virginia, he received a severe wound in the right hand—in fact. three of his fingers were literally carried away with a minie ball and thus he was disqualified for further army service. He returned to Danville, was elected recorder of the county and while serving in that capacity spent his idle hours in reading law. He subsequently attended law school at Indianapolis and was admitted to the bar in 1866 and took up the practice of law as his life work. He at once took high rank at the bar and was elected prosecuting attorney in 1870. He was a hard worker and a close thinker and seldom went before court or jury without having the merits of his case and the law well in hand and also his course of procedure and the points in his argument fully determined. His eloquence was not excelled in central Indiana. Its excellence consisted chiefly in its grace of delivery, sweet musical voice and superb selection of his words. He spoke with ease and energy, without being boisterous, and never put himself forward or overtaxed his audience. In 1869 he formed a partnership for the practice of his profession, with his friend and comrade in the army, John V. Hadley, which partnership continued happily and profitably until Mr. Ogden's death, on February 20. 1897, in the thirty-eighth year of his age.

Many other members of the local bar deserve special mention, but space forbids. The bar from the beginning has always maintained, for strength and character, a high place among the bars of the state. It has been uniformly composed of citizens of high character—enterprising, moral, debt paying, temperate, with a very rare exception and strictly honorable with the court and with each other professionally. It has always been held that a promise or statement of fact to an opposing attorney relative to a pending cause was as binding as an order of the court. Except in cases where opposing counsel desires the facts relied on in the record preparatory to an appeal, an affidavit for a continuance or other matter is unknown to the Danville bar. If delay is desired the counsel desiring appears before the court in the presence of his opponent and states his reasons for the request. The request is often resisted, but the facts as stated upon which it rests are never called in question. The effect is that the bar is always on the most friendly terms.

Quite a number who had their early and first training at the Danville bar afterwards became eminent lawyers and jurists elsewhere. Solomon Blair, William Irvin, Joshua G. Adams and Newton M. Taylor were afterward elected to the bench in Indianapolis. Richard B. Blake was the first judge elected to the superior bench in the city of Spokane under the organization of the state of Washington and continued thereon for years and until he voluntarily resigned to take up in the city a general practice more lucrative. Enoch G. Hogate was called years ago to become dean of the law school of the State University where he still presides with great credit to himself and profit to the young men under his instructions.

John V. Hadley was the first member of the local bar elected to the circuit bench, then composed of Marion and Hendricks counties. He was first elected in the fall of 1886, re-elected in 1892, elected to the state supreme bench in 1898 and re-elected to the latter in 1904, and voluntarily retired therefrom January 2, 1911.

Thomas J. Cofer, by appointment and election, occupied the local circuit bench from the fall of 1898 to the fall of 1906.

James L. Clark was elected in 1906 to succeed Judge Cofer and in January, 1913, was appointed by the governor to the public utilities commission and is now serving thereon with much credit for fairness and commercial comprehension.

George W. Brill was elected in 1912 to succeed Judge Clark and is now occupying the bench with ability and general satisfaction.

The Hendricks County Bar Association is now composed of the following gentlemen: Thad S. Adams, Levi A. Barnett, Edgar M. Blessing, James L. Clark, Thomas J. Cofer, Zimri Dougan, James A. Downard, George E. Easley, S. A. Enloe, Fred D. Ensminger, D. P. Etris, William J. Goff, Otis E. Gulley, Horace L. Hanna, Geo. C. Harvey, Dremen Harvey, George Harvey, Jr., C. L. Hollowell, Robert T. Hollowell, John Hume, C. E. Gaston, J. W. Nichols, George T. Pattison, Charles V. Sears, J. P. Snodgrass, John C. Taylor, John W. Trotter, Alf. Walters, and William Westerfield.

CHAPTER XXII.

EDUCATION.

The growth of education in Hendricks county has been very rapid. From the very beginning of the county until the present day the thought of education has been a predominate one. The first settler thought of the learning which should be imparted to his child and until the day of school houses, or the teacher who "boarded around," the child drew his letters at his mother's knee. Of the early schools and school houses there are many interesting things which have been written. The sturdy beech trees for the most part supplied the material from which the first school houses were constructed. The walls were built of the trunks, the puncheon floors, log seats and desks arranged around the wall were likewise split from the trunk of forest trees. Heat was forthcoming from a huge fireplace at one end of the cabin; windows were opened by sawing out sections of logs and placing in the opening a rude sash, with oiled paper in place of glass.

The course of study provided by the stern pedagogue was nearly as crude as the house in which he taught. Geography, reading, spelling and arithmetic and writing were the standard subjects and whenever a pupil exhibited a dislike to them he was often helped over the difficulty by the beech rod, which reposed on two pegs above the master's desk. It is told that many of the early masters were possessed of very little more knowledge of their subjects than the pupils. Many a bright youngster came to grief because he took exceptions to assertions of his teacher.

FIRST SCHOOLS IN THE COUNTY.

In the summer of 1823 two school houses had been built, one of them in Liberty township, half a mile south of Cartersburg, and the other on Thomas Lockhart's land in Guilford township. William Hinton and Abijah Pinson were engaged as teachers. In 1824 a school was taught in Danville by Wesley McKinley. The first school in Eel River township was taught about 1829 in a house a half mile southeast of North Salem, by William Dewitt. It was said this man had fled from New Orleans for some crime, joined a pirate vessel, and with it sailed more than once around the world, finally leaving the vessel to seek a new life in the North. He was a man of intelligence and one of the best of the pioneer instructors. He died in North Salem, it is said, at the unusual age of one hundred and fifteen years. The first school in Franklin township was taught in 1831 by Judiah White, one mile south of Stilesville. The district consisted of two townships. Thomas Barker was successor to White in this school. He was a good teacher, but somewhat fond of "red-eye." Often, at noon recess, he would go to the village and return in an intoxicated condition and then would devote the afternoon to amusing the scholars by his antics. In 1831 Eli Lee taught the first school in Stilesville, in connection with his trade of shoemaker. Alfred Lineberry taught the first school in Middle township in 1835 on Samuel Hill's farm, for ten dollars per month.

BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA.

Much progress had been made in the schools of the county at the beginning of the seventies. Then was the beginning of definite organization. The log school house had long disappeared from the county. By the year 1884 there was even a vaster improvement. At this date there were to8 school buildings. 54 of these were brick and the rest of frame. There were 4,000 pupils in attendance at the brick schools, out of 7.082 in the county. There were 147 teachers, 85 of them male. The total school enrollment of this year was but 5.836. The total expenditures for school purposes in 1884 amounted to $94,303.86.

THE COMMON SCHOOLS

The common schools were first provided for by the constitution of 1816. The Legislature of 1837 provided that land sold for taxes and escheated estates should be used for public school purposes. The law provided that any public school district might draw fifty dollars from such fund for the erection of a school house. This was for the encouragement of the common schools. In 1848 the people of a district could vote for or against a tax to maintain schools from three to six months. In 1850 a special tax was authorized. The greatest impetus given the common schools came from the constitution of 1851. "Knowledge and learning generally diffused throughout a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all equitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all." Section 2 of article 8 provides for the common school fund, the principal of which can never be reduced.

In 1855 free schools were authorized in cities and towns. The grade schools and the high schools have grown up since 1873. The academies were converted into public schools and high schools in most cases.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

The county institute was established in the year 1865. In 1901 the act of 1865 was amended so that if twenty-five teachers were in attendance, thirty-five dollars could be drawn from the county treasury; if forty were in attendance, fifty dollars; if seventy-five, one hundred dollars. In 1907 the auditor was given power by the Legislature to draw his warrant upon the treasurer for one hundred dollars for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the county institute regardless of the number of teachers in attendance.

In some instances the efficiency of the township institute has been impaired through the indifference of a few teachers. For the purpose of eliminating this handicap it has become necessary to create conditions unfavorable to the development of this indifference, so that the responsibility may be fixed and co-operation attained. To this end a monthly report has to be made to the county superintendent by each institute. This report will show the enrollment, explain the cause of tardiness, absence and other irregularities, and will show in per cent. the chairman's estimate of each teacher's preparation for the day. If each teacher makes careful preparation of all the Reading Circle work and any special topic that may be required individually, the chairman reports the work well done.

Approximately three thousand dollars were spent in Hendricks county in 1913 for the support of the township institutes.

The county agriculture agent will soon be at the service of the teachers in township institute work. Joint sessions will be arranged for his convenience, so that all teachers may have the opportunity of gaining practical information which he will impart in the interest of vocational education.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEE.

In the first survey of western lands, congress set apart a section of land in every township, generally the sixteenth, for school purposes, the disposition of the land to be in the hands of the residents of the respective townships. In 1829 the township was provided with three trustees elected for one year at the September election. These members appointed a clerk. The duties of the trustees were to divide their township school lands into convenient sizes for sale and set a minimum price, not less than a dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. It was the duty of the school commissioner to sell the lands thus divided to the highest bidder.

The law of 1838 provided that a civil township should have three township trustees, selected for a term of three years, one elected each year. These appointed a clerk and a treasurer. These officers were to build roads and care for them and divide the township into school districts. There were in each school district three district trustees whose duty it was to examine and employ teachers. In 1849 one district trustee was provided for each school district in place of three. His duties were practically those of the three. He was paid seventy-five cents per day, as were also the township trustees.

In 1859 the "civil township was declared a school township," and "the trustee for such a township shall be trustee, treasurer and clerk." It was this law which created the present township trustee, though subsequent legislation has added much to his list of duties and largely increased his power.

In 1865 the voters of a school district met the first Saturday in October and elected one director. The duties of this official were to call meetings of the district voters and preside. The meeting could appoint the teacher for the district; determine the branches to be taught in addition to the common branches provided by law, and could set the term of school under two limitations. The power of employing and paying teachers belonged to the township trustee.

In 1873 the district meeting with the director lost the power of appointing the teacher. The duty fell into the hands of the township trustee. From this time to the present the office of director has gradually fallen into disuse,

In 1883 the Legislature placed some limitations upon the trustee's power in employing teachers which were removed by the act of 1901. Under this act, although the advisory board since 1890 has limited his power in two directions, viz., tax levies and the number of days he may be employed as trustee, the trustee is in complete control of the schools of his township. He has the authority to ask patrons, while taking the enumeration, what their preferences are, if any, and thus has a guide in selecting his teachers for the next year. This custom has grown out of the directors' meetings and taken their place.

The trustees of Hendricks county in 1914 are: Brown township, C. F. Pennington; Center, J. W. Whyte; Clay, William Hunt; Eel River, S. D. Noland; Franklin, T. R. Ruark; Guilford, B. W. Anderson; Liberty, C. E. Shields; Lincoln, B. A. White; Marion, Obed Underwood; Middle, R. L. Dillon; Union, J. T. Hocker, and Washington, C. M. Roark.

THE COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT.

The county superintendent was given large duties by the text book law of 1889. He makes the requisition for all books used in the county; he is the bookkeeper for each of the school book contractors; and he collects from each corporation handling the books as well as from the various dealers. A recent act of the Legislature, however, relieves the superintendent of all these duties except the matter of making requisitions.

The county superintendent has the general superintendence of the schools of his county. He must attend each township institute at least once in each school year and as often thereafter as possible, and preside over and conduct its exercises. He shall visit schools while they are in session for the purpose of increasing their usefulness and elevating, as far as practicable, the poor schools to the standard of the best. He must conduct teachers' institutes and encourage other like associations and shall labor, in every way, to elevate the standard of teaching and to improve the education of the schools of the county. In all controversies of a general nature arising under the school law, the decision of a county superintendent must first be obtained. It is his duty at all times to carry;out the orders and instructions of the state board of education and the state superintendent of public instruction. The same Legislature which enumerated the above duties of the county superintendent also relieved him of the supervision of cities and towns with superintendents

HIGH SCHOOL STATISTICS.

There are high schools at present in Hendricks county at the following towns: Amo, Clay township; North Salem, Eel River township; Stilesville, Franklin township; Plainfield, Guilford township; Clayton, Liberty township; Brownsburg, Lincoln township; New Winchester, Marion township; Pittsboro, Middle township; Lizton, Union township, and Danville, Center township. All of these high schools are commissioned by the state board of education with the exception of those at New Winchester and Lizton. The latter is to be commissioned this year. The total enrollment in 1913 was six hundred and forty-eight, with thirty-one teachers. The high schools are well regulated in the county and a course is divided into semesters of a half year, sixteen weeks each. Thirty-two credits are required for graduation, with music and drawing in addition. A system of uniform high school text books was adopted by the state board of school book commissioners on July 24, 1913, for a period of five years. This regulation does not restrict the work of the schools, for the books allowed are many and excellent texts. The high schools in the county are in excellent condition, all attention being turned towards modeling them after the most modern laws promulgated by the leading minds in the educational and legislative world. Athletics are being featured and meets are held annually, beginning with 1914, in which all the high schools of the county join. This has a tendency, and a strong one, of drawing the students closer together and promoting a healthier and better spirit. The county, as compared with the others in the state, ranks among the first six in educational excellence. Nearly all of the high schools are housed in new buildings, built according to the most scientific and hygienic rules of school house construction. New structures are going up at present at Hazlewood, Avon and Amo, the latter to cost twenty-nine thousand dollars. Consolidation is the ultimate aim of every township, and this is being largely effected. In Brown township, as there is no town, an effort will be made to establish a community center.

IQI3 STATISTICS.

The total enrollment for the year 1912-13 by townships is as follows: Brown, 170; Center, 236; Clay, 428; Eel River, 427; Franklin, 231; Guilford, 563; Liberty, 528; Lincoln, 425; Marion, 227; Middle, 304; Union, 243; Washington, 222, making a total of 4,004. Danville had enrolled 448 pupils, which raises the grand total to 4,452. This number includes the pupils in grade schools and the high schools together.

In the county there were 425 pupils enrolled in commissioned high schools; in certified high schools, 202; in non-certified high schools, 17; in private or parochial schools giving primary or secondary instruction, 74.

There were 152 teachers employed in the schools of the county in 1913, who were paid for their services, $76,844.58.

There are seventy-eight school houses in the county, seventy of them being brick and eight frame. The estimated value of all this school property is $395,500.

There were, in 1913, 6,020 volumes in the school libraries.

The enumeration of the pupils in school attendance in the county issued in May, 1914, places the number at 5,309, showing a net loss of 74 over last year.

CENTRAL NORMAL COLLEGE.

The chief educational feature of Hendricks county is the Central Normal College, located at the county seat, Danville. The college is a normal school for prospective teachers and supplies a need in the educational world which, not so many years ago, was an unsatisfied one.

The school had its origin back in the year 1876, at Ladoga, Montgomery county, Indiana. Prof. W. F. Harper and Prof. J. W. Dar.t were the founders of the school and the first term under their management saw but forty-eight students enrolled. The outlook at that time was far from encouraging and the existence of the school continued solely on account of the far-sightedness and courage of the two founders. They worked unceasingly for the good of their school and their efforts were crowned with success. At the end of the first year twelve students, having completed the course prescribed by the institution, received the degree of Batchelor of Science. Near the close of the year, Professor Darst having resigned, Frank P. Adams, of Kentucky, came and assisted Professor Harper and was afterward president of the college.

The second year of the school's existence opened in an encouraging manner. Many students came and it became evident that larger accommodations would have to be secured in order to care for the increased attendance. Efforts were made to raise enough money to build a school house adequate for the need and many people interested themselves to the extent of giving cash. However, there were others who refused to aid. This lost the school to Ladoga. On May 10, 1878, arrangements having been made, vehicles supplied by the people of Danville went over to Ladoga and hauled the teachers. their hundred and seventy-five students, and their personal belongings, including the school apparatus, over to Danville. The old Seminary building was remodeled for the use of the school. This building had been the home of the Methodist Academy. The procession through the country and the reception given in Danville were events of great importance. The good people of Danville opened their homes to the teachers and students and school was not interrupted. Classes were resumed in the new location as if nothing had ever happened. By popular subscription the citizens of Danville purchased the Academy building and the Methodist Episcopal church deeded the property to Prof. William Harper and he deeded it to Professor Adams in 1879.

On November 25, 1882, Professor Adams was called by death, at the age of thirty years.

The institution was the property of Professor Adams and before his death he requested his wife, Mrs. Ora Adams, to assume the presidency, with Prof. John A. Steele as vice-president. Every friend of the college rallied to the support of the new officials, so that there was no check in its educational or financial progress. The college building was improved, a large boarding house erected and a handsome residence constructed for Mrs. Adams.

But misfortune was again to come. In 1884 Professor Steele became ill with tuberculosis and in May, 1885, passed to his death. During the illness of Professor Steele his work gradually passed into the hands of Charles A. Hargrave, who, since April, 1883, had been his assistant in class and office. He was known as the secretary and treasurer of the college and through him the plans of the college were executed.

On July 10, 1889, President Adams was married to James A. Joseph. Desiring to be relieved of public duties, she promoted Professor Hargrave to the presidency. Miss A. Kate Huron was made vice-president and Professor Joseph, secretary and treasurer. At the close of the school year in 1890 Professor Joseph assumed the presidency. He had already begun the erection of a large additional building, now known as Chapel Hall, just across the street west of the original building. The attendance increased and additional instructors were employed. The enrollment the spring term of 1891 was seven hundred and seventy-one students.

In August, 1900, a stock company of eighty citizens of Danville bought the college of Professor and Mrs. Joseph. From that time on it has been managed by a board of trustees. The first board consisted of the following members: Thomas J. Cofer, president; G. L. Spillman, secretary; Townsend Cope, I. N. Estep, H. S. Dickey, Jonathan Rigdon, C. A. Hargrave. College officials were elected as follows: Jonathan Rigdon, president; G. L. Spillman, vice-president; C. A. Hargrave, secretary and treasurer. In 1903 both Professor Rigdon and Spillman resigned. Their successors were A. J. Kinnaman and G. W. Dunlavy. Doctor Kinnaman resigned in 1906 and Professor Dunlavy was made his successor, and John W. Laird was elected vice-president. Professor Dunlavy's health failed in two years and he retired to take up farm life. Professor Laird was elected president and still holds this position. Prof. H. M. Whisler was made vice-president.

In 1911 the college was reincorporated, under a new Indiana law, without capital stock, the stockholders donating their stock. It is controlled by a self-perpetuating board of trustees, serving without compensation. The board is as follows: Otis E. Gulley, president; George T. Pattison, secretary; W. C. Osborne, J. D. Hogate, Mord Carter, Dr. W. T. Lawson and C. A. Hargrave.

The institution stands high with the educational public and receives a large patronage. The attendance for the summer term of 1912 was seven hundred and four students. Up to this time the college has been self-supporting. It has never had any help to pay operating expenses. It has been entirely independent of church, state or endowment. Former students now fill Indiana state offices as follows: S. M. Ralston, governor; Charles A. Greathouse, superintendent of public instruction; Philip Zoercher, reporter of supreme court; Edward Barrett, state geologist; E. W. McDaniels, assistant reporter of supreme court; John W. Spencer, judge of supreme court; Edward W. Felt, judge of appellate court; James L. Clark, Thomas R. Duncan, members of state utilities commission; Thomas C. McReynolds, member of Panama exposition commission.

CENTRAL NORMAL COLLEGE LIBRARY.

This library had its beginning in the private library of a few scarce volumes of the first president of the college in 1876. For many years it contained numerous good books loaned by the professors of the college. Additions were made from year to year by purchase and donations until the number of volumes reached into the thousands, exclusive of statistical reports that are still kept, but not given shelf room.

The books have been carefully selected, the needs of the students and the college alone being considered. The general public have always been invited to use the library, but not many have accepted on account of the special character of the books. That the selections have been wisely made is known from the use of the library by the students. Those taking literary courses may be found there every day. The library is located in Chapel Hall

BELLEVILLE ACADEMY.

In the thirties a log house was erected in the southeast part of Belleville, and was later supplanted by a frame structure. In 1852 Dr. L. H. Kennedy, John Miles, Thomas Irons, James Hadley, Dr. R. C. Moore formed a stock company with a capital of five thousand dollars for the erection of an imposing and commodious brick structure for the housing of an academy. The articles of association were written by a Danville lawyer named for Witherow. Early in 1853 the new building was begun and on July 23, 1853, was dedicated by Governor James A. Wright. Shortly before the dedication L. M. Campbell, a Kentuckian, opened a school in the old frame building. He continued until November, when he joined hands with Prof. J. R. Woodfill, of Ripley county and the two moved into the new brick and began the first term of school in the academy. This academy is now out of existence.

CHAPTER XXIII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AGRICULTURE.

Hendricks county is one of the richest agricultural counties in the state. In addition to this, there is a large amount of stock raising done in the county. The presence of valuable grazing land in all of the townships is accountable for this. The tilling of the soil, with its kindred vocations, however, is the greatest industry in Hendricks.

The county has an area of four hundred and eighty square miles or three hundred seven thousand two hundred acres. Very nearly two-thirds of the population live in the country. The farmers own about nine-tenths of the taxable property. The soil of the county is well adapted to cereals, especially corn, wheat and oats. The leading cornain or which is corn, a yield of one hundred bushels per acre being not uncommon. The average to the acre, however, is about forty bushels and aggregates about two million bushels per annum.

Wheat comes next to corn, with an average of fifteen bushels to the acre. In an ordinary wheat year the county produces about four hundred and fifty thousand bushels. Oats is not raised as extensively as corn and wheat, but is considered a profitable crop for feeding purposes. Over four hundred and fifty thousand bushels are produced each year, being worth in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. There are about forty thousand tons of hay put in the mows annually, and scarcely a day passes but that you may see several loads on the way to the Indianapolis markets. Most of the hay is timothy. Clover is raised in abundance for seed and for its fertilizing qualities and is considered one of the most profitable crops in the county.

Every farm in the county has some kind of fence around it and most of the fences are in good condition. Quite a number of the old rail fences are yet to be seen, some board, hedge, picket, barbed wire, but chiefly woven wire Tiled ditches, which are in general use, have greatly increased the productiveness of the soil.

The county has many fine herds of Hereford, Shorthorn, Jersey and Guernsey cattle. Thousands of stock cattle are bought at the stock yards and fed on the pasture land. These pasture lands are mostly bluegrass, but little inferior to the bluegrass regions of Kentucky. Hogs and sheep are raised extensively and are a very profitable part of present-day farming. Poultry is also raised extensively and there is scarcely a farm but has chickens, geese and ducks.

The finest and most expensive homes in the country have been constructed by the farmers. Many of them have been equipped with all modern improvements and conveniences.

It will be interesting to the reader to present the following figures, taken from the United States census report of 1910:

Number of all farms in Hendricks county, 2,786; land area, 261,120 acres; land in farms, 254,159 acres; value of all, $28,677,219; in 1900 the value of farm lands was $14,776,661; of domestic animals, $2,518,444. The total value of crops for the year 1910 was $2,580,853. Of this amount $2,075,821 was the value of cereals and $3,949 the value of other grains and seeds. Hay and forage was worth $300,262; vegetables, $90,637; fruits and nuts, $50,730; and all other crops, $50,445.

ROADS.

The progress of the good roads movement in Hendricks county during the past few years has been truly remarkable. It is a fact that during the year 1910 there were only two and eight-tenths miles of gravel road constructed under the law for improving highways in the county. It was at this point that the improvement of highways began. By the year 1912 there was a total of two hundred and forty-seven miles of gravel road in the county. Today there is about five hundred miles of improved, gravel and macadam road in the county. The expenditures for road viewing and surveying in 1911 was $63.10; for bridges, $41,895.49. The township gravel road bonds outstanding in 1911 amounted to $204,587.01.

STATISTICS.

From the state statistician's report for 1913 there are many interesting facts concerning Hendricks county. They are as follows:

The total population of Hendricks county is 20,840 people, male, white, 10,533; female, white, 10,002; colored, male, 225; colored, female, 76; Indians, Japanese and others, 4; foreign-born, white, 172; number of dwellings, 5,204; number of families, 5,262.

To give some idea of the court business for a year, the following is given for 1910: Number of cases filed, 200; disposed of, 201; venued to her counties, 7; venued from other counties, 15; children's cases in juvenile court, 2; letters of administration issued, 48; guardianships issued, 19; decrees of foreclosures entered, 3; sheriff's sales, 22; adjudged of unsound mind, 0; marriage licenses issued, 140.

EARLY PURCHASES.

An old book in which the general store accounts were kept in an early day gives many items of curious interest. It is recorded that on June 7, 1836, Abbird Thompson bought "1 caster hat" and "1 hymn book" for thirty-five cents. Another is that Mrs. Stephen Stephenson bought in 1836 "5 yards of calico" for $1.56½. John Scott bought "½ pound of powder" for twelve and a half cents, and "one-half dozen flints" for six and one-fourth cents. Jesse Baker bought "½ gallon of whiskey" for 37½ cents and John Collins bought "1 comic almanae" for twelve cents.

ORPHANS' HOME.

In the month of February, 1903, the children from the Orphans' Home were transferred to other homes. The girls were taken from here to the Fort Wayne Home for Girls and the boys were taken to White Institute in charge of the Friends in Wabash county. Some other boys were taken to Brightside, near Plymouth, Indiana.

GAME PRESERVES.

There are three game preserves in Hendricks county stocked with various kinds of imported pheasants. The first lies in the southwest corner of Guiford township and extends into Marion county. It contains fourteen thousand acres, sixty per cent. of which is in Hendricks. One-fourth of it is timberland, mostly level, some of it rolling, with ravines and gulleys. Flowing through it from north to south is Clark creek.

The second preserve lies near the center of the county two miles north of Danville. It contains sixty-five hundred acres of land, one-fifth of which is in timber, with much copse and underbrush. A small per cent. of the lands are hilly. Most of them are level, but some of them rolling. White Lick creek, with its tributaries, supply it with water.

The third preserve lies south of the center of the county, in Clay and Franklin townships. It contains sixty-two hundred acres, one-fifth of which is in woodland, with much copse and underbrush. The lands are rather level. The east and middle branches of Mill creek supply the water. Neither has yet proved successful, chiefly on account of hawks.

The first interurban car ran into Danville at 11:05 a.m., August 30, 1906, over the Indianapolis and Western, now a division of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern.

On July 4, 1907, the Brazil division of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern was opened to Terre Haute and in the same year the Ben-Hur line was opened from Indianapolis to Crawfordsville, passing through Brownsburg, Lixton and Pittsboro.

BIOGRAPHICAL

JUDGE JOHN V. HADLEY.

To indulge in prolix encomium of a life which has been one of distinctive modesty and unpretentiousness would be most incongruous, and yet in reviewing the career of Judge John V. Hadley, long one of the most prominent and highly honored citizens of Hendricks county, feelings of admiration are prompted, for he has ever held a position of unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community where he has so long resided. As citizen, soldier, lawyer and jurist, Judge Hadley's career has been a notable one, and for this reason his life record is entitled to a conspicuous place in the annals of his county.

John V. Hadley is a native son of Hendricks county, Indiana, born on the 31st day of October, 1840, and is a son of Jonathan and Ara (Carter) Hadley, who were natives, respectively, of North Carolina and Ohio. They were the parents of seven children, of whom five grew to maturity, Enos, Harlan, William C., John V. and Mary, all being now deceased excepting John V.

The subject's paternal grandparents were Jeremiah and Sarah (Hornaday) Hadley, natives of Guilford county, North Carolina, where the father followed the vocation of farming. In 1822 they made the long and tiresome overland journey to Indiana, stopping first at Indianapolis, which at that time was but a small and unpretentious village. Because of the prevalence of typhoid fever there at that particular time, Jeremiah Hadley continued his journey westward, locating permanently near what is now Plainfield, Hendricks county. There he cleared and improved a farm, reared a family of children, and there he and his wife spent the remainder of their days, dying at advanced ages. Among their children were Jonathan, Elias, John, Ruth and others whose names are not recorded. In religion, Jeremiah Hadley was a birthright Quaker, but lost his birthright by marrying outside the church.

Jonathan Hadley, father of the subject, was reared to manhood in Guil-supreme bench Judge Hadley's decisions were characterized by a clearness, candor and breadth of view which have made them authority on many fine points of law assigned to him for interpretation. Among the important decisions written by Judge Hadley while on the supreme bench, involving the constitutionality of legislative enactments, were the following: The act concerning municipal improvements, known as the Barrett Law, 154 Ind. 467; For the Protection of Wild Game, 155 Ind. 611; An Act to Regulate Dentistry, 156 Ind. 187; the Pure Food Law, 157 Ind. 517; An Act to Deprive Ft. Wayne of Local Self-Government, 158 Ind. 126; the Weekly Wage Law, Republic Iron and Steel Co. v. State, 160 Ind. 379; the Status of the State University in Our Common School System, 150 Ind. 139; Relocation of County Seat of Newton County, 161 Ind. 616; The Right of County Assessors in Quest of Taxable Property to Examine Bank Books, 166 Ind. 631: Employers Liability Act, 171 Ind, 612; The County Option Law, 174 Ind. 60: Railroad Commission no Power to Fix Rates that are Confiscatory, 172 Ind. 113. Careful and painstaking in everything, Judge Hadley's opinions, for their uniform, unvarying excellence of workmanship, were not excelled by those of any of his brother justices. The impression that he made on the limited circle of friends and neighbors in Hendricks and adjoining counties at the beginning and during the early years of his practice, was the one he left on the larger circle of his acquaintance after years of faithful and appreciated service on the highest legal tribunal of the state, namely, that he was a man who could be relied on and trusted in all things.

On the 15th day of March, 1865, John V. Hadley was united in marriage to Mary I. Hill, who was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, on August 13, 1844, the daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Hornaday) Hill. Her parents were natives of North Carolina, who became pioneer settlers in Hendricks county, where the father followed farming. Mr. Hill died in May, 1896, in the ninety-first year of his age. Mrs. Rebecca Hill died in 1863, of typhoid fever, at the age of fifty-four years. They were the parents of seven children, Oliver, Samira, William, John, Daniel, Mary and Eliza. Mrs. Hadley's paternal grandfather, Joseph Hill, who also was a native of North Carolina, came to Indiana in an early day, sometime after the death of his wife, and located in Parke county, where he spent the rest of his days. and died. He was a Quaker in his religious belief. He was the father of a large family, of whom the following names are remembered: William, John, Daniel, Clark and Julia. Mrs. Hadley's maternal grandfather, Lewis Hornaday, spent his entire life in North Carolina. He was the father of five children, Rebecca, Susan, Ruth, Hester and Simon.

To Judge and Mrs. Hadley have been born three children, namely: Kate B., Hugh H. and Walter G. Kate B. became the wife of W. W. Buchanan, of Evanston, Illinois, and they have three daughters, Dorothy, Mary J. and Katherine. Hugh H. Hadley, who is a successful lawyer in Chicago, with residence in Oak Park, Illinois, married Madge Silverthorne, of Wisconsin. Walter G. Hadley, who has charge of his father's farm, married Jennie Christie, and they have two daughters, Jane and Ann.

Politically, Judge Hadley has been a life-long supporter of the Republican party and has always kept in closest touch with public questions and issues. In 1868 he was elected to the state Senate, serving through three sessions. Aside from this office and his judicial preferment, the Judge has never held public positions. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to the lodge at Danville, and also belongs to Jesse Ogden Post No. 164, Grand Army of the Republic, and to the Military Order of the Loyal Legion. Religiously, the Judge and Mrs. Hadley are members of the Christian church at Danville.

Thus briefly have been outlined the leading facts in the career of one who has stamped the impress of his individuality on the community in which practically his entire life has been spent. As the day, with its morning of hope and promise, its noontide of activity and accomplishment, and its evening of completed and successful efforts, so has been the life of this honored man. Easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the relations of life, his personal relations with his fellow men have ever been mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he has enjoyed to a marked degree their confidence and regard. A representative of one of the sterling old families of Hendricks county, Judge Hadley has added luster to the family name and has made a record of which his county may justly be proud.

JOHN WATT WHYTE.

The gentleman of whom the biographer now writes is widely known as one of the honored citizens of Hendricks county and for almost half a century has been a valued factor in the development of the same, prominently identified with the varied interests of his community. His well directed energies in the practical affairs of life and his sound judgment have demonstrated what may be accomplished by the man of energy and ambition. Born on a foreign soil, Mr. Whyte early demonstrated the sterling qualities of citizenship possessed by him and his success in life is due solely to his own innate manhood and unfailing energy and ambition along right lines.

John Watt Whyte was born on October 14, 1846, at Paisley, Scotland, the son of George and Elizabeth (Watt) Whyte, both of whom were natives of that town and country. George Whyte came to America before the outbreak of the Mexican war. He was a weaver by trade, being particularly expert in weaving coverlets, using of course the old-style hand loom. He followed his trade after coming to this country and after power looms came into use, practically eliminating the class of trade to which he had catered, he entered the large woolen mills of the east, operating the power looms. He was a veteran of the Mexican War, having received a wound while in service. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he enlisted in Company F, Forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, being assigned to the Army of the Tennessee. He enlisted for three years, but served until the close of hostilities. He was living in Terre Haute, Indiana, at the time of his enlistment and entered the ranks from Sullivan county. He was never a resident of this county, and died at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1870. Elizabeth (Watt) Whyte mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, followed her husband to America soon after he came over. She crossed in one of the slow sailing vessels of that time, leaving her family in the old country. After being here a short time, she returned for her children, coming back directly and bringing with her the subject of this sketch and her youngest child, George. Two other children, William and Jennie, had died in Scotland and George is also deceased, leaving the subject the sole remaining one of the family. Her death occurred at Terre Haute, Indiana, on October 10, 1856, the fall of the election of President Buchanan.

On October 18, 1868, Mr. Whyte was united in marriage with Ann Eliza Jackson, daughter of James and Mary (Jackson) Jackson, the former of whom was a native of Putnam county, this state, and the latter a native of Kentucky, having been born on October 27, 1816, the same year in which Indiana was admitted to the sisterhood of states. She departed this life July 1, 1900, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. James Jackson lived for many years in Putnam county, where he followed the trade of a blacksmith. He was considered unusually skilled in his trade and mechanics generally and many specimens of his work are still extant. He served throughout the war of the Rebellion, being identified with an Iowa regiment and his death occurred in a soldiers' home in the state of Michigan. They were the parents of six children, those beside Ann Eliza, wife of the subject, being: Sarah (Mrs. McCoy) and John, deceased; James, Thomas and William, who are still living.

Mr. and Mrs. Whyte have an interesting family of ten children, namely: Ida, deceased, who was the wife of Henry Lawson. She was the mother of three children, Urban, Eula and Ida Kate. Her death occurred March 8 1804. William, who married Blanche Pierson, resides in Muncie, Indiana. where he is employed in a garage. He is the father of one child, Mildred. George L., whose wife was Alice Leachman, is a farmer in this county and the father of one child, Joyce Roseland. Lenora married Elmer E. Brown and resides at Brownsburg in this county. She is the mother of one child. Doris. Mary became the wife of John C. Taylor, of Danville, and has one child John W. Oliver resides at home. Lurene is Mrs. Fred Scearce, of Danville, and has one child, Maurice, Walter T. married Alice Anderson of Knoxville, Tennessee, and has one child, Walter Allen. Raymond makes his home in Danville and Eunice, who became the wife of Lynn L. Bolinger. resides at Seymour, Indiana. Her husband was formerly a traveling salesman, but has recently engaged in the grocery business. They are the parents of one child. Lvnn Lewis.

Mr. Whyte was quite a small child when his mother brought him from his native Scotland and in his earlier years was moved about considerably and finally became a "bound" boy in Terre Haute, where he remained until twenty years of age, when he came to Danville on September 4, 1866. On October 15, 1864, he had volunteered for one year in Company M, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, and received his discharge, dated August 27, 1865, at Indianapolis, having seen no active duty. Since coming to Hendricks county he has spent the rest of his life here with the exception of one year at Lafavette, this state. All his life he has been connected with agricultural pursuits, although he has also worked at other trades. He was engaged in carpentry for some time and for over eight years was in the tombstone business at Danville. He has done considerable trading and was first located on a farm about three miles southeast of Danville. He traded around some and for twenty years lived on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres about two miles north of Danville. From there he came to the farm known as the Bob McCoun farm, where he has resided for the past twelve years, carrying on general farming. He has about eighty acres at present, on which he has made all the improvements, clearing the land, draining it and putting up fences, so that the farm today is in an excellent state.

Mr. Whyte's fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he has served his local lodge as treasurer for seven years. He is also a member of the local post at Danville of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Whyte is a stanch Republican and takes pride in the fact that he has always adhered to that party's ticket. His first vote was cast for General Grant as President. He takes an active interest in local politics and in 1802 was elected county commissioner, serving in that capacity for three years. During 1906 and 1907 he served as ditch commissioner and again in 1808 was elected county commissioner, serving another term of three years. In 1008 he was elected township trustee for a term of six years. assuming his office on January 1, 1000, so that he is the present incumbent of that office. In the discharge of the duties which have devolved upon him from time to time, Mr. Whyte has ever sought to be absolutely fair and impartial in his judgment and faithful to his trust at all times. The fact that he is universally well spoken of and held in high esteem shows he has succeeded in his endeavor. He is a good mixer, a most congenial companion and is regarded as a man of unswerving integrity, absolutely honest in all his dealings with his fellow men. His religious affiliation is with the Christian church, of which he has been a member since 1867. Mrs. Whyte is also a member of the same church, having identified herself with same at the tender age of seventeen years. Both are sincerely interested in the progress of that church society, giving liberally of time and means toward its support. Mr. Whyte is extremely liberal in all his views and his hand is active in advancing the welfare of the community in every way possible. A man of generous impulses and genial disposition, he readily makes friends and always retains them. Having gained by his earnest efforts and consecutive labor a competence for himself, he is ever ready to assist those struggling toward the same goal. Because of his unimpeachable career, in both private and public life, he is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the scope of the one at hand

JAMES A. DOWNARD.

In placing the name of James A. Downard before the reader as one standing in the front rank of the enterprising men of affairs and a leader of the bar at Danville, Indiana, whose influence has tended to the upbuilding of the city of his residence and the advancement of the affairs of his native county of Hendricks, simple justice is done a biographical fact recognized throughout the community by those at all familiar with his history and cognizant of the important part he has acted in the circles with which he has been identified. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which overcome obstacles and win success, and his example is eminently worthy of imitation.

James A. Downard, a prominent lawyer and abstracter of Danville, was born in New Winchester, Hendricks county, Indiana, November 15, 1855. His parents, David M. and Cassandra (Morgan) Downard, were both natives of this county. David Downard was a farmer and stock raiser and was regarded as a fine judge of stock. He was a large breeder of high grade stock of all kinds and was one of the most successful in this line in the county. He was the son of Judge James Downard, who was one of the first probate judges of the Hendricks county court. He was one of the four proprietors who laid out the town of Danville in 1825. Judge Downard came from Kentucky to Indiana, having been born in Pennsylvania and emigrating to the Northwest territory about 1811. A few years later he went to Kentucky, and in 1818 came to Indiana, first settling near Brooklyn, afterwards moving to Indianapolis and later on permanently settling in Plainfield, where his death occurred in 1846. Judge Downard married Elizabeth Curry in Pennsylvania, a descendant of a Scotch-Irish family who came from Ireland. Judge Downard and wife were the parents of ten children, David being the ninth in order of birth, and his death occurred on January 2, 1802, his wife having passed away many years before, on May 17, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. David Downard were the parents of ten children: James A., the immediate subject of this sketch; Mrs. Martha Hammond, of Danville; Mrs. Mary J. Anderson, of Anderson, Indiana; Canada H., who lives on the old home place near Hadley in this county; William, a merchant of East St. Louis, Missouri; Erie, deceased, who married Charles S. Hall, of Evansville, Indiana; Oliver, of Lynn, Indiana; Frank, of Danville, and two who died in infancy.

James A. Downard received his education in the district schools and later spent one year at Butler University and also took a course at Bryant & Stratton's Business University at Indianapolis. In 1877 he entered the law office of Cofer & Taylor to read law and one year later he was admitted to the practice of all courts in Indiana. In the same year he took up the abstract business and now has the finest set of abstract books in Hendricks county, and is recognized as an authority on land titles in the county. In 1882 he formed a connection with the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and has been their financial correspondent for this county since that time. He has carried on this threefold line of work since 1882.

namely, the practice of law, the abstract business and the insurance business. He has managed his business in such a way that he has acquired a very comfortable competence and is regarded as one of the leading and substantial men of Danville.

Mr. Downard was married May 22, 1884, to Maude L. Donaldson, the daughter of William H. and Araminta B. Donaldson, of Danville. Mr. Downard was for fourteen years on the town board of Danville, and during this period, from 1892 to 1906, he was instrumental in providing sidewalks, brick streets, electric lights, water works and a new high school building for the town. In recognition of his efficient service on the town board he was elected on the Republican ticket as county commissioner in 1910, and renominated in 1912, but went down to defeat with the rest of his party ticket. As county commissioner he has been one of the men responsible for the handsome new court house in Danville. He has been the one to take the lead in the work and has been recognized as the most important man on the board by virtue of his past experience. He has been treasurer of the Citizens' Building, Savings & Loan Association since 1882, and during his long incumbency the institution has never lost a cent or had to make a foreclosure.

Fraternally, Mr. Downard is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias, and, religiously, is identified with the Friends church. His career has indeed been a busy one and it has been as useful as busy. He and his wife move in the best social circles of Danville and are highly esteemed wherever they are known.

EDGAR W. SHIRLEY.

Among the families of Hendricks county. Indiana, whose members have worthily discharged their duties to their fellows and their community, no family takes higher rank than the Shirleys, of whom several representatives are today prominently identified with the business and social life of Danville. For many years members of this family have stood for all that is best in business, educational, moral or social life and have wielded an influence that has been potential in the development and welfare of their community, being numbered among the enterprising and progressive citizens of the county. Because of the prominence which the family has enjoyed and the close relations they have sustained to the welfare and prosperity of the locality which has been honored by their citizenships, they are eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of the one in hand.

One of the most prosperous business men of Danville, Indiana, is Edgar W. Shirley, the son of John M. and Susan (Hale) Shirley, who was born February 10, 1860, in Pittsboro, in this county. His father was also a native of Hendricks county, his birth having occurred three miles southwest of Brownsburg on June 15, 1835. His mother was born about one and one-half miles southwest of Pittsboro. James W. Shirley, the grandfather of Edgar W., was born in 1803, in Kentucky, and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1830, or before, settling on Big creek, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1893. James W. Shirley married Deborah Pressley, and they reared a family of eight children, the father of Edgar W. being the third in order of birth. John Shirley spent his whole life in the county of his birth. In October, 1852, he removed to Pittsboro, where he lived until 1873, being engaged in the mercantile business in that place. He continued in this business until July 29, 1873, at which time he came to Danville and took charge of the mercantile establishment which he had bought some years before in that place. He continued in active business until his death, which occurred October 14, 1013, and was one of the wealthiest and most successful business men who have ever lived in this county. He was married January 11, 1857, to Susan Hale, and to this union there were born two children, William J., who died in 1899, and Edgar W., the immediate subject of this sketch. John Shirley was a member of the Christian church and for many years was a trustee of that denomination. He was trustee of Middle township for several terms and was postmaster of Pittsboro for a number of years. After moving to Danville he held the office of trustee of Center township for two terms. He was a large landowner in Hendricks county, and one of its most solid and substantial citizens at the time of his death.

Edgar W. Shirley was educated in the public schools of Pittsboro, concluded the common school courses in that town, and attended Butler University, Indianapolis. Inmediately after the termination of his college course, he entered the store of his father in Danville, and has remained there continuously since that time. Upon his father's death in 1913, he succeeded him in the business firm of Shirley & Showalter. This firm has by its courteous treatment of its customers and strict integrity in all their business dealings, not only gained the confidence of the people, but have built up a large and profitable business, being numbered among the enterprising and progressive business houses of this city.

Mr. Shirley was married in 1908 to Bernice (Burk) Kendall, of Danville. Industry and probity have been the chief factors of Mr. Shirley's steady advance in business affairs and his position in the world is such as to reflect high credit upon himself and to add to the reputation of Danville as an important business center. In addition to his interests in the mercantile business, Mr. Shirley has large real estate holdings in the county. Fraternally, he is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons, having taken all the degrees, including the thirty-second. In his politics, he has been affiliated with the Republican party, although he has never held any office. At the same time he takes an active interest in the political issues of the day. He helps all public enterprises and when the new Christian church was started in Danville he donated three thousand five hundred dollars to its erection. By the exercise of sound business principles and by being energetic at all times Mr. Shirley has forged to the front and is today one of the most deserving business men of the county, where he is held in high esteem by all classes because of his honesty of purpose, his industry, courteous manner and public spirit.

JOHN W. TROTTER.

It is not an easy task to adequately describe the character of a man who has led an eminently active and busy life in connection with the great legal profession and who has stamped his individuality on the plane of definite accomplishment in one of the most exacting fields of human endeavor. Among the truly self-made and representative men of Hendricks county none ranks higher than the honorable gentleman whose name heads this sketch, who is a conspicuous figure in the civic life of the community. A man of tireless energy and indomitable courage, he has won and held the unqualified esteem of his fellow citizens. Although the law is his profession, he has won a high reputation as a real estate, insurance and business man. In fact, he has probably done more for the material advancement of Danville and Hendricks county than any other citizen.

John W. Trotter, the son of James M. and Nancy E. (Crose) Trotter, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, October 15, 1861. His parents were both natives of this county and are still living in Danville. James M. Trotter was a farmer and stock raiser and was one of Hendricks county's most substantial agriculturists, but has been living retired in Danville for several years. Mr. and Mrs. James M. Trotter are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church and have been for the past forty years. They are the parents of six children, five of whom are still living: John W.; Rose, the wife of George M. Thompson, of Lizton, this county; James

John Dl. Frotter.

W., a farmer in Eel River township; Gretta, who died in 1893, at the age of twenty-four years; Mary C., the wife of Aaron Kinder, of Danville; Retta, the wife of Robert Davidson, of Detroit, Michigan. The Trotter family is of English lineage and came to America in the eighteenth century. The great-grandfather of the present John W. Trotter came from Virginia to Indiana when he was only two years old, his parents settling in Eel River township, this county, on land which they entered from the government. James Trotter was the father of ten sons, all of whom settled in western states except three who stayed in Hendricks and adjoining counties. These three were Anderson Trotter, of Jamestown, Boone county, Indiana; William Trotter, of North Salem, this county, and James, the grandfather of John W., the immediate subject of this sketch. James Trotter, in addition to being a very successful farmer, was also the township trustee for several terms.

John W. Trotter was reared on the home place, worked as a boy on his father's farm and has never known an idle day since that time. He entered the Central Normal College, at Danville, at the age of seventeen, but after a few weeks he secured a license to teach and began his pedagogical experience before he was eighteen years of age. He taught in the county schools and at North Salem, Lizton, Brownsburg and Danville, He resigned the principalship at Lizton, after being there for three years, to take the principalship at Brownsburg. While teaching at the latter place, he was elected county surveyor, being the voungest man ever elected to a county office in Hendricks county. Upon being elected to the office of county survevor he moved to Danville in 1887, where he has continued to reside. He was elected to the office of surveyor five times in succession by majorities ranging from nine hundred and eighty-five to fourteen hundred and nineteen. His long service in the surveyor's office made him a practical man in the abstract business, and upon retiring from the surveyor's office he bought a set of abstract books and in 1894 sold a half interest in the business to George T. Pattison, who had been a professor in the Central Normal College for several years. Messrs, Trotter and Pattison then studied law together and were admitted to the bar, and for nine years, under the name of Trotter & Pattison, practiced law and conducted an abstract, real estate, loan and insurance business. During the past ten years Mr. Trotter has been alone in the business, doing a probate business and a large real estate and loan business, selling many thousand acres of western land in North Dakota. Texas and other states. He also handles large real estate deals at home and has platted and sold out many additions to towns and cities throughout the Central West. He has the largest loan business in the county, his loans amounting to three hundred thousand dollars a year. Besides making loans for corporations, he loans for one hundred and fifty private parties. He is financial correspondent for the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company for this territory and inspects lands, examines titles, prepares all papers and closes the loans in his own office, making it possible in this way to close a loan on short notice. The companies which he represents are giving the cheapest money and on the best terms of any company loaning money in Indiana. In addition to his loaning business, he does a large amount of insurance business, having eleven of the best old-line fire insurance companies. He looks after his law, real estate, loan and insurance business and his farms and buildings with the aid of one office man, and he tries not to neglect the other things of life which he considers of importance.

Mr. Trotter is now serving his fourth year as president of the Danville Commercial Club and has always devoted much of his time to its interests and the improvement of Danville. He is president of the Danville Canning Company and is a promoter and stockholder in the Danville Creamery. He is also president of the Danville South Cemetery Association, president of the board of stewards of the Danville Methodist Episcopal church, and vice-president and director of the Capitol Circuit Traction Company. It was in Mr. Trotter's office that the company was organized that built the interurban railroad from Indianapolis to Danville, and he was a director and its secretary until it was sold to a Boston syndicate. He was the engineer, surveyor and superintendent of construction in full charge of the road when it was sold. He is now interested in two other roads, which he hopes to sebuilt before long

Mr. Trotter, by native gift of what we call enterprise and diplomacy, and by hard work all the time from childhood, all through the years of his life, has developed an accuracy for details, a versatility in knowledge of business and affairs of small and large concern that make him a ready, a quick, a judicious and a decidedly big man in the business world. His experience on the farm as a boy doing all kinds of farm work, his ten years in the surveyor's office, his railroad building, his inspection of land for loans for many companies, his traveling in many states in the Union and in Mexico and Canada, have awakened in him a great interest in lands and farm property, and he deems it the safest and most stable investment that can be made. He is now the owner of nearly eight hundred acres of land in Cen tral Indiana, which he is farming, besides about eighteen hundred acres of Texas and North Dakota land which he believes will soon develop into fine farms, as the country in which these lands are located is rapidly developing. He classes himself among the farmers and stock raisers of this country and makes a specialty of stock raising and general diversified farming. Governor Marshall, recognizing his interests in agricultural affairs, appointed him as a delegate from this congressional district to the National Farm Land Congress, in Chicago, November 16 to 21, 1909. He has always been a progressive of progressives. When he bought the building known as the Trotter block, in Danville, he put an army of carpenters, masons, painters, paper hangers, plumbers and electricians at work and remodeled and modernized the building until he had a three-story building that for comfort, convenience, beauty and desirability for modern offices and living rooms, would do credit to a city five times as large as Danville.

Mr. Trotter was married to Mary E. Jeffers in 1887, and he gives a large share of the credit of his success in all his enterprises to her aid as an untiring worker at the practical affairs of life and to her encouragement. They have worked together through all these years as true helpmates and their home life has been ideal. Mr. Trotter has always taken an active interest in church affairs, and for fourteen years has been teacher of the largest Bible class in Hendricks county, teaching the normal class in which the students of Central Normal College, to the number of over two hundred, are enrolled yearly. These students are young men and women from every county in the state and from many other states, many being teachers in this and other states. He numbers his pupils in his class by thousands and regards this as his best work and productive of the most pleasure and profit. He was a Sunday school superintendent when only eighteen years of age at North Salem, and has been superintendent or assistant superintendent of the Danville Methodist Sunday school for twenty-three years.

Fraternally, Mr. Trotter is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, to which order he has belonged for the past twenty-seven years, joining the Danville Silcox Lodge in 1887. He is also a member of the encampment and Rebekahs. Mr. Trotter is a man of vigorous mentality and strong mental fiber and finds these qualities the chief factors in the carving out of a career that has been above suspicion and reproach and of honor to the county which he so ably and acceptably serves as a public and private citizen.

TAVNER NEAL.

One of the sterling citizens of Hendricks county, who is today filling an important position, is Tavner Neal, the efficient superintendent of the Hendricks county poor farm, who was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky. His parents were Charles W. and Emma S. (Bradley) Neal.

Tayner Neal has been one of those self-made men who have risen to prominence solely because of their own industry and perseverance. When he was married he and his wife started to housekeeping in a log cabin, built at the northwest corner of his father's farm. This little square log cabin speaks eloquently of the early days when they started their married life. They lived there for about two years, when they moved to their present home three and one-half miles southeast of Brownsburg, and there lived until March 1, 1914. He then took his present position as superintendent of the county poor farm. Starting out with nothing in life, he has accumulated a farm of one hundred and thirty-three acres in Lincoln township, and has taken a great deal of interest in the breeding of live stock of various kinds. He not only raises live stock but he has dealt largely in poultry. He raises pedigreed Jersey cattle, Berkshire hogs, and for several years has made a specialty of pure bred Barred Rock chickens. He is regarded as an expert chicken fancier and has taken many premiums at various fairs and exhibits in his county and other counties in the state. He is a member of the American Berkshire Record Association, and for the past twenty years has belonged to the American Poultry Association, as well as the American Barred Plymouth Rock Association. He is a progressive and well informed farmer and lectures frequently at farmers' institutes and has the honor of raising one hundred and six and one-half bushels of corn to the acre at a time when average crops in his community were about twelve bushels to the acre. When he came to his farm it was exhausted from consecutive cropping and in very poor condition. He has not only reclaimed his land, which was practically useless, but has conserved the food element in his soil. He knows, to begin with, that an ounce of fertilizer as a preventive against soil exhaustion is worth a pound of fertilizer for soil reclamation. On this basic principle he plans his crops and plants in rotation to the end that the continuous growth of one variety of crop on the same ground will not rob it of its plant food elements. Clover naturally follows corn, or some similar rotation, and the land remains fertile and only a minimum amount of fertilizer is required. Not many years ago land in Indiana in more than one part of the state was "corned" to death. Crop after crop of corn was planted until corn no longer thrived. Now it is rare indeed to find a farmer who plants corn in the same field twice in succession. He insists that at least one crop of some other farm produce must intervene between two corn plantings.

In 1885 Mr. Neal was married to Annie Turpin, the daughter of Anderson and Eveline (Reupert) Turpin, of Kentucky. Anderson Turpin was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, the son of Robison and Rachel (Powell) Turpin. Robison Turpin was the son of Jacob and Martha Turpin, and his birth occurred in Bourbon county, Kentucky, on April 7, 1805, and in 1820 he moved to Scott county, in that state. In 1834, Robison Turpin sold his farm in Kentucky and moved to Indiana, where he bought two hundred and five acres of land in the eastern edge of Hendricks county, near Brownsburg.

The Turpin family trace their ancestry back as far as Jacob Turpin. who was born in eastern Maryland in 1785, the son of William and Nancy (Henley) Turpin, who were married in Maryland in 1783. Jacob Turpin's grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and lived until he was more than one hundred years old. In 1786 William and Nancy Turpin moved to Kentucky and settled among the hostile Indians, and were compelled to live in block houses with other settlers in order to protect themselves from the Indians. Jacob Turpin married Martha Taylor in Bourbon county, Kentucky, in 1804, she being born in that county in 1786, of Scotch parentage. In 1820 they moved to Scott county, that state, and bought a farm and in the same year sold it and moved to Indianapolis when it was a town of seven hundred people. In 1829 Jacob Turpin and his wife moved to Hendricks county, settling near Clermont, where there was a cabin, log stable and five or six acres already partly cleared. Jacob Turpin died in 1849 and his wife in 1865. They had one son, Robison Turpin, born in 1805, in Bourbon county, Kentucky, who was married in 1827 to Rachel Powell, also a native of Kentucky, her birth having occurred there in 1807. Robison Turpin was engaged in farming in that state until 1834, when he sold out his holdings in Kentucky and came to Indiana, purchasing two hundred and five acres of land in Hendricks county, where he became one of the most prosperous and successful farmers of that day. He was a man of excellent business ability and judgment and when his death occurred on January 30, 1905, he was sincerely mourned by his community, having won the esteem and confidence of all by his straightforward and honorable life. Robison Turpin and wife were the parents of ten children, Anderson, the father of Mrs. Neal, being the third child. Anderson Turpin was born in Scott county, Kentucky, on October 2, 1831, and came with his parents to Indiana in 1834. He was married to Louisa Eveline Reupert, who was a native of Georgetown, Kentucky, her birth having occurred there in 1835. Anderson Turpin lived and died a farmer, passing away at Brownsburg, this county, in 1905. His wife lived until May, 1913.

Mr. Neal lends his hearty support to the Democratic party, and has been very active in the affairs of that political organization. He and the members of his family are faithful attendants of the Methodist Episcopal church and lend to it their zealous support. They are the parents of two children, Chester and Bertha. Chester married Grace Phillips and lives near his father's old home south of Brownsburg, and has one son, Marley. Bertha is still at home with her parents.

In his fraternal relations Mr. Neal has long been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Tribe of Ben-Hur. He is a man who has always been a hard worker and is highly esteemed by his neighbors because he has been a busy man. Judged by his labors, none have done more to advance the material interests of his section of the county, and as a citizen no one stands higher in the esteem and confidence of the people of Hendricks county.

CHARLES E. EDWARDS.

It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs who makes the real history of a community and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The example such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity only illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, and there is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting even in a casual way to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellow men, and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which make so much for the prosperity of the community. Such a man is the worthy subject of this sketch, and as such it is proper that his career be accorded a place among the representative citizens of the county in which he has lived for so many years. As a merchant and as a county official he has made his mark in the community and in the county where he has lived as a man of more than ordinary ability, and it is believed that a study of the life of such a man by the youth of the county will be an inspiration which will help them in their future careers.

Charles E. Edwards, the present county clerk of Hendricks county, was born August 20, 1871, on a farm in Clay township, between Amo and Coatesville. His parents were Solomon D. and Mary (Hornaday) Edwards, his father being a native of this county, and his mother a native of Morgan county, this state. Solomon Edwards is still living on the old home farm in Clay township, where he and his wife lived the simple lives of farmers all their lives. They are the parents of six children, all of whom are living: Minnie B., the wife of William O. Brown, of Clay township: Roscoe. a farmer of Clay township, who married Bertha Kendall: Charles E. the immediate subject of this sketch; Myrtle, the wife of Walter Hodgson, a farmer of Clay township; Maude L., the wife of Virley Moon, a rural route carrier out of Amo; John A., who is a merchant in Danville, who married Mary Wills. The mother of these children was called to rest April 13, 1014. She was a good Christian and lived a life above reproach, and no mother could have been more kind and loving. Her thoughts were always of others and self was forgotten. Ouiet and retiring in manner, vet she exerted a potent influence for good over those with whom her life was spent.

Charles Edwards spent his boyhood days in the manner which is customary with all farmers' lads, attending school in the winter months, and working on the farm during the summer months. He attended the country schools until he reached the eighth grade and then took the last year of his common school course in the graded schools at Coatesville. With the idea of preparing himself for the teaching profession, he attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute in the spring of 1800. Following this he taught for three years in the Coatesville schools, where he made a successful record as an instructor. He afterwards took some work in the Central Normal College at Danville. However, the call of business was not to be denied and he engaged in the mercantile business at Coatesville in his father-in-law's store, and upon the death of his father-in-law, became the manager of the store. Subsequently he became interested in the milling company at Coatesville and managed this plant for one and one-half years, at the expiration of which time he sold it out and bought a grocery and queensware business in Danville. which he conducted for ten years. Upon his election as county clerk in 1910, he sold his store and became interested with Otis E. Gully in the real estate and loan business. He was elected county clerk of Hendricks county in November, 1010, on the Republican ticket, with a handsome majority at a time when part of his ticket was defeated. In the conduct of the affairs of his office, which he assumed on July 27, 1912, he has proved himself an able and efficient administrator of the public's affairs and is making an enviable record as one of the most popular officials who have ever held office in Hendricks county.

Mr. Edwards was married December 23, 1894, to Ida A. Job, the eldest daughter of Allen and Nettie Job, of Coatesville. Her father was one of the leading merchants in that part of the county. To this union have been born two daughters: Pauline, who is now sixteen years of age and a junior in the high school at Danville, and Mary Jeannette, who is thirteen years of age and completing her common school work this year. Mr. Edwards and all the members of his family are consistent and loyal adherents of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Edwards has been a member of the board of stewards of this denomination for many years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Silcox Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Edwards is interested in the real estate and loan business with Otis E. Gulley under the firm name of Gulley & Edwards and also has land interests scattered throughout the county. He was a member of the Danville school board for five years and resigned that position when he became county clerk. Mr. Edwards is a man of splendid business qualifications, which, combined with his courtesy, genial disposition and unfailing good nature, have commended him to the good will and friendship of all who know him. His life is the record of a well balanced mental and morel constitution. In all of life relations he has been true and faithful to himself and all the trusts reposed in him and thereby he has won the unqualified confidence and respect of his fellow men.

EVERETT ROSCOE ROBARDS.

It is a well attested maxim that the greatness of a community or a state lies not in the machinery of government, nor even in its institutions, but rather in the sterling qualities of the individual citizen, in his capacity for high and unselfish effort and his devotion to the public welfare. In these particulars he whose name appears at the head of this review has conferred honor and dignity upon his locality, and as an elemental part of history it is consonant that there should be recorded a resume of his career, with the object in view of noting his connection with the advancement of one of the most flourishing and progressive sections of the commonwealth, as well as his official relations with the administration of the public affairs of the county honored by his citizenship.

Everett R. Robards

Everett R. Robards, banker, merchant, farmer and stock breeder of Stilesville, was born in that place on November 17, 1865, the son of Casper and Mary Elizabeth (Matlock) Robards, the father a native of Owen county, Indiana, his birth having occurred on September 1, 1830, and his mother a native of Stilesville, having been born there in 1843. Casper Robards was deputy treasurer of Morgan county, Indiana, from 1850 to 1855, and in 1856 established the first drug store in Stilesville. In 1860 he sold his drug store and engaged in the general merchandising business, which he continued until 1873, when his health failed and he sold out his mercantile business in that year. However, he continued to live in Stilesville until his death, which occurred on May 8, 1902. His wife, Mary E. Matlock, the daughter of James and Sarah Matlock, was only twenty-three years of age when her death occurred, leaving three small children: James, who died in 1864; Sarah Caroline, who died in 1865, and Everett R., the immediate subject of this sketch Everett R. Robards attended the common schools of Hendricks county and later took the two-years course then offered by the normal school at Danville. After leaving school he engaged in a general merchandising business in Stilesville and in 1899 he opened a private bank, which has proved to be very successful. As a business man Mr. Robards has won signal success along several different lines. As a banker he has been conducting a bank which has won the confidence of a large number of patrons. His well-stocked store in Stilesville is managed in such a way as to reflect great credit upon the owner. In addition to his banking and mercantile interests Mr. Robards also has farm lands in Hendricks, Morgan, Marion, Putnam and Scott counties, this state, and personally oversees all of them. Upon his farm in Hendricks county he breeds heavy draft horses, for which he finds a ready sale. In addition to all of these manifold duties, he has been the efficient trustee of Franklin township and has also served a term on the county council of Hendricks county. In every undertaking he has proven that close attention to business is sure to win success, when accompanied with strict integrity and high purposes.

Mr. Robards was married to Addie A. Almond, the daughter of Hiram and Angeline (Ellis) Almond, on November 20, 1899, and to this union there have been born two children, Mary Elizabeth and Everett Almond. Mrs. Robards was one of four children, the other three being Orville, who married Daisy Howard; Etta, who married K. E. Faucette, and they have one child, Warner; and Ethel, who married W. R. Robertson, and they have two children, James and Russell.

Mr. Robards was formerly a Republican, but in the split which occurred in that party in 1912 he espoused the Progressive cause, believing that in this new party there were better hopes for the future. He has always taken an active interest in the political issues of the day and even sacrificed his personal affairs in order to serve his party in office. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to Larrabee Lodge, No. 131. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Christian church of Stilesville and contribute generously to its support. The life which Mr. Robards has led has indeed been a busy one, but through it all he has kept his self respect and the tongue of censure has never had any charges to bring against him. His clean life and the honorable methods which he has used all these years in transacting his business affairs, have won for him a host of friends throughout the county.

GEORGE A. KEENEY.

Indiana has been especially honored in the character and career of her men of industry. In every section have been found men born to leadership in their vocation, men who have dominated because of their superior intelligence, natural endowment and force of character. It is always profitable to study such lives, weigh their motives and hold up their achievements as incentives to greater activity and higher excellence on the part of others. These reflections are suggested by the career of one who has forged his way to the front rank and who, by strong, inherent force and marked business ability, directed and controlled by an intelligent judgment, has stood for the last five years as one of the leading business men of Danville, Indiana.

Thrown early upon his own resources, George A. Keeney set out with the avowed determination of securing an education and how well he has succeeded is shown in the brief sketch which follows. Through the common school, through the high school, through the normal, through the state university he worked his way, and through it all he was the same simple man we find him today. Although he has seen disappointments and many discouragements, yet his optimistic nature has always been to the front and this happy characteristic has made it possible for him to win the success which is so worthily his today. It is not often that the theoretical college man and professor can go into the business world and make a success, and yet this is what Mr. Keeney has been able to do. The study of the career of such a man as this should be an inspiration to the young men who have to make their way in the world.

George A. Keeney, of the hardware and implement concern known as The Danville Hardware Company, was born on a farm at Rainstown, Hendricks county, Indiana, June 28, 1877. His childhood, youth and young manhood were spent in active work on the farm, which is the best school for practical knowledge for the young. There the boy, consciously or unconsciously, is a student of soil, climate, kinds of seed to be planted and methods of planting and harvesting, of the kinds of stock to be kept and cared for and used or raised for market. Mr. Keeney is naturally inclined to be a student of men and things and men's affairs, and his ambition to learn had ample vent in the study of the book of nature on the farm. Ambitious to train his mind and learn of history and science, he began early to inform himself from books as well as from nature. He was fortunate in being thrown upon his own resources and arose to the occasion by making his own way. He gained a much better education from the school than the average man because he worked for it. He earned money at whatever he could find to do, and worked his way through the high school two terms in Central Normal College and a four-year course in the Indiana State Normal and finally graduated from that institution. He then took two years at Indiana State University, graduating with the Bachelor of Arts degree, after which he took a term in the great Chicago University. He taught school for eight years, four years of this time in the country schools during his college life in order to earn money to pay his way. He was superintendent of the schools, one year at Pittsboro, one year at Clayton, and two years at North Salem, where he had seven subordinate teachers.

He had a head for business, and accumulated money as a teacher, a thing that is done by too few of that worthy profession. In 1909 he bought a half interest in what was then the Leak & Keeney hardware business at Danville and has been a student of that business since. His training has made it easy and the natural thing for him to devote energy to the business in hand. For him it is the natural thing to know the best and most modern in the varied and comprehensive lines of goods their large store carries, so that they can meet the demand for the tools and implements the farmer and builder use. His business and the needs and convenience of his customers is his study, and how he may serve them is his pleasure.

Mr. Keeney was married to Eldora Nelson, on September 30, 1906, and to her influence as a true helpmate Mr. Keeney ascribes any success that he has won. She was born in Jackson township, Boone county, Indiana, a daughter of Thomas J. and Alice Nelson. When she was a small child her mother died and she was reared to womanhood in the home of her uncle, George L. Leak, near Lizton. She attended high school at Lizton and at Lebanon; graduated from the teachers' course at the Central Normal College, and took about two years at the State Normal at Terre Haute. She also taught eight years in the public schools of this county, most of the time at Lizton.

Mr. Keeney is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of Danville Commercial Club. Progress, intelligent organization and unity of work by public spirited men for the public good, he promotes with his voice and work. His progressive ideas as a business man and as a citizen, and his genial nature, make him popular as a business man.

M. S. MAHAN.

The men most influential in promoting the advancement of society and in giving character to the times in which they live are two classes, to-wit, the men of study and the men of action. Whether we are more indebted for the improvement of the age to the one class or the other is a question of honest difference in opinion; neither class can be spared and both should be encouraged to occupy their several spheres of labor and influence, zealously and without mutual distrust. In the following paragraphs are briefly outlined the leading facts and characteristics in the career of a gentleman who combines in his make-up the elements of the scholar and the energy of the public-spirited man of affairs. Devoted to the noble and humane work of teaching, he has made his influence felt in the school life of Hendricks county, and is not unknown to the wider educational circles of the state, occupying as he does a prominent place in his profession and standing high in the esteem of educators in other than his own particular field of endeavor.

Professor M. S. Mahan, the present efficient superintendent of the Danville schools, was born in Sullivan county, Indiana, May 25, 1872. His parents were William and Emily (Phillips) Mahan, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of Indiana. His father followed the occupation of a farmer all his life, his death occurring in 1897, his wife having preceded him in death several years previous, in 1888. Mr. and Mrs. William Mahan were the parents of seven children, three of whom are living: Samuel, of Terre Haute; William, who is living on the home farm, and Professor M. S. Mahan, the immediate subject of this sketch.

Professor Mahan is an excellent type of the man who devotes all of his time and energy to the noble profession of instructing the youth. Since he was six years of age there has not been a year in which he was not in the school room either as a student, or as an instructor of students. He received his elementary education in the district schools of his home county and then entered the graded school at Farmersburg, where he continued for two years. After one year's service as a country school teacher he came to the Central Normal College at Danville, where he remained for three years. This was followed by two years of successful teaching in Henry county in this state. The next two years found him in charge of a school in Hardinsburg. Washington county. Indiana. From here he went to Pleasantville. Sullivan county. this state, where he was principal of the schools for one year. He then lived at Orleans for the following six years, two of which were spent as principal of the schools, and four years as superintendent. He then went to the State University at Bloomington, where he remained in continuous residence until his graduation in June, 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After his graduation from the university he was elected superintendent of the schools at Danville, Indiana, and has been in charge of these schools continuously since. Since taking charge of the schools in Danville he has practically revolutionized the course of study. He has added courses in domestic science, commercial work and manual training, and has seen the attendance nearly doubled. There are now two hundred and seventy pupils in the grades and one hundred and forty-five in the high school. All of the high school teachers but one are college graduates. He has also introduced a department of agriculture in order to meet the demand for this kind of work. In fact, the attendance has grown to such an extent that the present buildings are wholly inadequate to accommodate the pupils. It is interesting to note that he has brought about the changes in the courses of study without increasing the tax levy in Danville, a fact which should call for special mention. This has been made possible by the hearty co-operation of the town and Central Normal College in the employment of teachers for special courses. It is safe to say that no schools in the state have made as rapid or more efficient progress within the last three years than have the schools of Danville, and it is all due to the wise administration of Professor Mahan.

Mr. Mahan was married to Gertrude Webb, at Orleans, Indiana, November 26, 1902, and to this marriage there have been born two children, Margaret and Dwight, the latter deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Mahan are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is a member of its official board. They both take an active part in church work and Professor Mahan is the teacher of the Bible class in his church.

Fraternally, Mr. Mahan is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member of the National Educational Association, the Indiana State Teachers' Association and the various local organizations pertaining to educational subjects. He is the present vice-president of the Indiana State Teachers' Association. Professor Mahan is a well educated, splendidly developed man and his work as an educator has for many years been of such a high standard of excellence that his position in the front rank of his profession is universally conceded. He keeps abreast of the times in advanced educational methods and is in hearty sympathy with the practical education which is demanded by the times. His influence for good in the community of Danville is incalculable and the work which he is doing quietly and unostentatiously makes him one of the most potent forces for good in the city of Danville.

JOHN S. DUCKWORTH.

It is proper to judge of a man's success in life by the estimation in which he is held by his fellow citizens. They see him at work, in the family circle, in church, hear his views on public questions, observe the operation of his code of morals, witness how he conducts himself in all the relations of society and civilization, and are therefore competent to judge of his merits and demerits. After a long course of years of such daily observation, it would be out of the question for his neighbors not to know of his worth, for, as has been said, "actions speak louder than words." In this connection it is not too much to say that the subject of this sketch has passed a life of unusual honor, that he has been industrious and has the confidence of all who have the pleasure of his friendship.

John S. Duckworth, the present county recorder of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in North Salem, Eel River township, this county, on March 6, 1858. His parents were Pressley S. and Eliza (Woodward) Duckworth, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of this county. Pressley Duckworth was a farmer by occupation and came to Hendricks county about 1850 with his widowed mother, and settled one mile north of North Salem.

where he lived all of his life, his death occurring on April 13, 1872. His widow still survives him, and makes her home in North Salem. To Mr. and Mrs. Pressley Duckworth were born eight children: John S., the immediate subject of this sketch; Oliver E., of Jamestown, Indiana; James A., St. Louis; Mollie, deceased; Allie, deceased; Mrs. Maggie Ergenbright, of Kansas City; William, of North Salem, and Lizzie, deceased.

John S. Duckworth was educated in the common schools of his home neighborhood and remained under the parental roof until he had attained his majority. In 1873, he went to work in a saw mill and followed this occupation for twenty years. Following this he engaged in teaming and farming until his election as county recorder of Hendricks county in November, 1906. His record during his first term of office was such that he was nominated for re-election and although he had three candidates against him he carried every township in the county but two and had a majority of more than five hundred. He has taken especial care to have all the records in his office bound and preserved and kept in the most approved manner. He is distinctly a man of the people, a man who has very little education, but who has that happy faculty of being able to make the very most of all of his possibilities. He is a hard worker and deservedly popular with all classes of people.

John S. Duckworth was married October 23, 1883, to Nannie O'Rear, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newton O'Rear, of Boone county, Indiana. To this union there have been born six children: Mabel C., deceased; Fred Allen, railroad employe at Indianapolis; George P., who lives in the West; Lela and Beulah, twins. Beulah is the wife of Carl White, of Jamestown, and Lela keeps house for her father, and has been his constant companion since her mother's death, August 10, 1897; Kenneth, the sixth and last child, died in infancy.

Mr. Duckworth has always been a Republican in politics, and has been one of the most active men in the councils of his party for many years. His re-election to the office of county recorder shows the high esteem in which he is held by the citizens of his county. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church of North Salem, and is a liberal contributor to its various needs. Personally, Mr. Duckworth is a man whom it is a pleasure to know, being generous-hearted, kind and helpful. He is honest in all his dealings with his fellow men and eminently worthy of representation in a work of this character, as he is one of Hendricks county's nost valued citizens.

GEORGE W. SCEARCE.

The Union soldier during the great war between the states builded wiser than he knew. Through four years of suffering and wasting hardships, through the horrors of prison pens and amid the shadows of death, he laid the superstructure of the greatest temple ever erected and dedicated to human freedom. The world looked on and called those soldiers sublime, for it was theirs to reach out and strike the chains from off the slave, preserve the country from dissolution, and to keep unfurled to the breeze the only flag that ever made tyrants tremble and whose majestic stripes and scintillating stars are still waving universal liberty to all the earth. For all these unmeasured deeds the living present can never repay them. Pensions and political power may be thrown at their feet; art and sculpture may preserve upon canvas and in granite and bronze their unselfish deeds; history, may commit to books and cold type may give to the future the tale of their sufferings and triumphs; but to the children of the generations yet unborn will it remain to accord the full measure of appreciation and undying remembrance of the immortal character carved out by the American soldiers in the dark days of the early sixties, numbered among whom was the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch.

Among the most highly respected citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, is George W. Scearce, who was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, March 19, 1843. His parents were Ezra W., born in 1808, and Martha (Shepherd) Scearce, born in 1809, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. Ezra W. Scearce was a farmer and came to Indiana in March, 1851, locating a half mile southwest of Danville, where he lived until his death, which occurred March 30, 1885. Ezra Scearce was a great student of the Bible, a consistent member of the Universalist church, and was a man of high ideals and of a philosophic bent of mind. Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Scearce were the parents of seven children, only one of whom is living, George W. The six deceased children are James, Elizabeth, John N., Johanna K., William W. and Curtis.

George W. Scearce spent his boyhood on his father's farm and received the education which was accorded to the children of his county in the period before the Civil War, which amounted to only a few months during the winter, and consisted of reading, writing and arithmetic. At an age when most of the boys of the present-time are in high school, he left school to enter the army. When the war broke out he was only eighteen years of age, but his youth did not interfere with his plans for serving his country. At the opening of the war he enlisted in Company K, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and served three years and two months. During that time he was in thirty-one engagements, among the most famous battles in which he took part being Shiloh, Stone's River, Perryville, Franklin and Nashville, At the battle of Nashville, on December 16, 1864, he received a gunshot wound in his left hip. He was a prisoner of war for a short time, and was confined at Belle Isle, in the James river, near Richmond, Virginia. During part of his service his regiment was attached to General Streight's brigade and detailed to do field duty in destroying munitions of war and lines of communication. His brother, William W., was also a soldier in the war and was made a prisoner, being confined in the infamous Libby prison. He, in company with three others, escaped from this in the tunnel which has been made famous in history and successfully reached the Union lines. George W. Scearce was mustered in as a private, but was promoted to second lieutenant and from June 10, 1863, until the close of the war he held the rank of captain, being promoted to that rank when he was twenty years of age.

Upon being mustered out of service Mr. Scearce returned to his father's farm in Hendricks county, Indiana. On December 7, 1865, he was united in marriage to Sophia Chamberlin, who was a native of Madison, Indiana, and to this union were born five children: Harry C., of Mooresville, Indiana; Edwin A., a farmer living near Danville, this county; Martha L.; Bertha E., and Grace K., wife of C. V. Cook, assistant cashier of the First National Bank, of Danville. After his marriage Mr. Scearce took charge of the old homestead farm, where he lived until 1911, when he moved to Danville. Previous to leaving the farm for the city of Danville, he built a fine modern home in this city, where he now lives a retired life, surrounded by all modern conveniences and comforts. He has been a resident of Hendricks county for sixty-three years, having arrived in this county on the day he was eight years of age, and has lived to see the little village of Danville grow to become the flourishing little city which it is today.

Politically, Mr. Scearce is a life-long Republican and has always been more or less interested in politics. During the eighties he served as trustee of Center township and rendered faithful and efficient service to his fellow citizens during that time. He assisted in organizing the Farmers Co-operative Insurance Company, of Hendricks county, and was its secretary-treasurer for fifteen years. For the past twenty years he has been president of this insurance company, and is now acting in that capacity. He has the honor of being the oldest Odd Fellow in Danville in point of continuous membership, having joined the lodge in 1864, when he was home from the war on a furlough. He is also a loyal member of the Grand Army of the Republic and takes an active interest in the affairs of the post in Danville. His religious affiliations are with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has been a trustee and a member of the board of stewards for many years. He has always been a strong advocate of temperance, and in all the movements of his county which have had for their object the extermination of the liquor traffic he has always taken an active part. He was president of the organization at Danville which routed the saloons from that city. Though past the psalmist's allotted span of years, Mr. Scearce still retains to a remarkable extent his physical and mental vigor and takes a deep interest in all the current affairs of the community, being numbered among the enterprising men of this section of the state. He has worked hard and accomplished much, and because of his past efforts he is thoroughly entitled to representation in a work of the character of the one in hand.

SYLVANUS MABE.

Indiana was not lacking in loyalty during the dark days of the Rebellion, and no governor in all the northern states was more prompt or rendered more efficient service to President Lincoln than did Governor Morton. When the ship of state was almost stranded on the rocks of disunion, Indiana came to the front and contributed over two hundred thousand brave and valiant men to assist in preserving the integrity of the government. Prominent among the citizens of Hendricks county who served their country faithfully and well were Sylvanus Mabe and his father, James M. Mabe. Although they enlisted from Brown county, this state, they have made their home in Hendricks county for many years, the father having answered the last roll call several years ago. Today there is in Hendricks county no old soldier who is more widely and favorably known and none that can boast of a more honorable record than Sylvanus Mabe. He was loyal to his country in its hour of peril and extremity, and demonstrated on many a bloody battle field that he was ready to fight and even die for his country.

Sylvanus Mabe, the son of James M. and Anna (Noblet) Mabe, was born in Brown county, Indiana, May 31, 1844. James M. Mabe was born October 23, 1820, in Stokes county, North Carolina, and died March 5, 1896, in Hendricks county, Indiana. He was one of six children, the others being Bettie, Mrs. Mary Williamson, Mrs. Ruth Clark, William F., and Mrs. Nancy Medlock. When James M. Mabe was about ten years of age he moved with his parents to Brown county, Indiana, where he and his father entered land from the government. He never had any schooling except what he picked up in the wide field of experience, since he never had any opportunity of attending a school in Brown county while he was a lad. Sylvanus Mabe and his father, with their families, lived in Brown county until 1802, when they moved to Hendricks county. James M. Mabe enlisted in Company H, of the Eightysecond Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served from the date of his enlistment. September 18, 1862, until the close of the war. He was present at the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., in the spring of 1865. His son. Sylvanus, also enlisted, serving from August 20, 1861, until about the close of the war. He was only seventeen years of age when he enlisted in Company C, of the Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which was made a part of the Army of the Cumberland. He was engaged in the battle of Shiloh, the seige of Corinth and all of those engagements which were fought by Grant in Tennessee and Mississippi. His regiment was later transferred to the eastern part of Tennessee, where he fought in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and in the last named battle he was wounded, being struck by pieces of shell in the right knee, incapacitated from further service and within the next six months he was mustered out at Indianapolis.

James M. and Anna (Noblet) Mabe reared a large family of thirteen children: Sylvanus; Hiram, who died at the age of twenty-six; Vandever, deceased April 13, 1900, a member of Company D, Forty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, married Jeannette Anthony; William; Williamson, deceased; Levi, who died when small; Cyrus, deceased; Mary Jane, the wife of A. D. Handcher; Margaret, the wife of Oliver Craig; James, deceased; David, who married Etta Gates, and two who died in infancy.

Sylvanus Mabe received a very limited common school education in the district schools of Brown county before he enlisted in the war at the early age of seventeen. After returning home from the war he and his father continued farming on the old homestead, where he remained until his marriage, March 14, 1869, when he began farming for himself in Brown county. In 1874 he moved to Nebraska and remained there for two years, after which he came to Clay township, in this county, and settled on a rented farm of fifty acres, which he operated for the next thirteen years. He was a hard-working man who attended strictly to his own affairs and by thrift and economy he succeeded in saving enough to purchase a small farm. After he had once made a start he added to his land holdings until at the present time he is the owner of two hundred and eighty acres of fine land in Clay township. His success can be attributed only to hard work and upright dealings in all of his business transactions.

Mr. Mabe married Harriet C. Bartholomew, the daughter of Eli and Mamie M. (Fuller) Bartholomew, and to this union there have been born two children, Eli and Lorenzo F. Eli, a farmer living at Pecksburg, in this county, married Lora McCormick and has one daughter, Mabel. Lorenzo F., a miller and implement dealer living at Clayton, in this county, married Rilla Hurley, and they have one child, Lorenzo Lyle. Mrs. Mabe's parents had a family of eight children: Ira, the wife of Zibil Baldwin; John, who married Savannah Lewis: Augustus, deceased May 30, 1864; Cyrus, who married Sarah Handcher; Pamelia, who married William Cox; Harriet, the wife of Mr. Mabe; Polly, deceased 1849; Maria, deceased. Mrs. Mabe's mother died November 29, 1873. Mrs. Mabe's father died July 16, 1891, in this county. The grandparents of Mrs. Mabe on her mother's side were natives of Trumbull county. Ohio, and had a family of four children, Abial, Mary, Eli, and a Mrs. Scofield.

Mr. Mabe is a stanch Democrat, and has voted this ticket for a half century. While he has always taken an interest in political affairs he has never aspired to any public office, preferring to devote all of his time and attention to his agricultural interests. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and is one of the most active members of the post at Danville. Mr. Mabe has won an honorable name for himself in this county, because of his upright life and he and his wife are valuable members of society in this county.

EDOM R. HADLEY AND MILTON M. HADLEY.

The history of a county or state is chiefly a chronicle of the deeds and lives of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon the society of that county or state. The world judges the character of a community by those of its representative citizens and yields its tribute of admiration and respect to those whose words and actions constitute the record of a state or county's prosperity or pride. Among the prominent citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have long since passed away, but who in their day took a prominent part in the life of the community in which they lived are Edom

R. Hadley and his son, Milton M. Hadley. This father and son were good men and good citizens in the highest sense of the term and the locality in which they lived suffered an irreparable loss when they passed away. They were useful citizens of the commonwealth, men who were deeply interested in the welfare and social uplift of their fellow citizens, men who stood for the highest ideals of citizenship and all that it means. The brief history of their lives which is here given can be nothing more than a poor tribute to their worth as men who did their duty as God gave them the power to so do.

Edom R. Hadley, the son of James and Mary (Richardson) Hadley, was born in North Carolina in 1810, and when six years of age, came to Hendricks county, Indiana, with his parents, and settled two and one-half miles west of Danville on Mill creek. There his father entered land from the government and at the time of his death owned six hundred acres. Here in the wilderness and amidst pioneer conditions which have long since disappeared, Edom R. Hadley grew to manhood and here married Louisiana Vannice, daughter of Peter and Sallie (Smith) Vannice. She was born in Lincoln county, Kentucky, February 7, 1829, and came with her parents when she was three years of age to this county, where they located in the northwestern part of Marion township, near the Putnam county line. Peter Vannice entered land from the government and lived on his farm of two hundred acres until his death, which occurred in 1888, on February 9th, his wife dying three days later. It is interesting to note that had they lived until the 14th of the same month, they would have been married sixty years. Peter Vannice and wife reared a large family of eleven children, only five of whom are now living: Mrs. Joan Allen, who lives in Iowa; Samuel, of the same state: Mrs. Sarah Ferguson, of Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. Ella Hawkins, of Indianapolis; and Mrs. Louisiana Hadley, the widow of the late Edom R. Hadley. Mrs. Hadley grew to womanhood at a time when none of the modern conveniences were to be had; no pianola was found in the parlor at that time, the music then in the evenings being furnished by the wolves, which roamed the forests and howled around the log cabin. For fourteen years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Edom R. Hadley lived one mile west of Danville, at which time they moved to the present home farm of two hundred and eighty acres, three miles north of New Winchester. On this farm Mr. Hadley died in March, 1888, having lived a full and complete life in every sense of the word. He and his wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and to this church he gave his conscientious service. Three children were born to bless their union: Jennie, the wife of George W. House, of Danville, who is the mother of three children, Ida, Nettie and George; Milton M., whose history is reviewed later in this article; Charles L., who married Jennie Kurtz, and lived on a farm two and one-half miles west of Danville until his death; he left two children, Dovie and Myrtle.

Milton M. Hadley was born December 21, 1857, one mile north of Danville, and grew to manhood on the homestead farm north of New Winchester. After finishing the common and high school course at New Winchester, he entered Lincoln University at Lincoln, Illinois, from which institution he graduated in 1883, with the degree of Master of Arts. In 1887 he married Mary Fielding, a lady whom he met while attending school at Lincoln College. They entered the freshman class there together and their friendship ripened into love and this was consummated by their marriage after they left college. Mrs. Hadley was born in Chandlerville, Illinois, the daughter of James and Elizabeth (Briar) Fielding. Her father was a native of England, where his birth occurred in the city of Manchester, and here he lived until he was eleven years of age. According to the custom in his home town in England he attended school the year round, but leaving his native country at the age of eleven with his parents to come to America, his education stopped at that time. However, he was a well read man and was an omnivorous reader all his life. His parents, whose names also were James and Elizabeth, came to America and settled fourteen miles east of Beardstown, Illinois, on a farm and there they lived the remainder of their lives. Mary Fielding grew up in Illinois and it was while attending Lincoln University that she met her future husband. For a time after their marriage they lived in Kansas City, but they soon tired of city life and moved to Marion township in this county, where he resumed farming and followed this occupation until his death, December 23, 1895. They had one son, Harry, who was born August 11, 1888, and is now attending the University of Illinois, where he will receive his doctor's degree in commercial chemistry in June, 1914. Harry Hadley graduated from the Danville high school and then from James Milliken University with the degree of Bachelor of Science. The next year he took his Master of Arts degree in chemistry at the University of Illinois and will take his Doctor of Philosophy degree there this year. He is doing special research work in chemistry for the university and has a very promising future before him.

Milton M. Hadley was a man of exceptionally strong character, clean minded, and a man whom to know was to love. He was elected a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church in 1892, and at the time of his death was superintendent of the Sunday school and president of the Christian Endeavor.

Thus is shown in brief outline the careers of two men, father and son, who lived lives of remarkable purity and sweetness and whose influence was always cast for better and higher things. Their two widows are living together today and are beloved by everyone in the neighborhood.

JOHN N. PHILLIPS.

The gentleman whose name forms the caption of this sketch belongs to that class of men who win in life's battles by earnest endeavor, coupled with good judgment and in whatever he has undertaken he has shown himself to be a man of ability and honor. He has always been ready to lend his aid in defending principles affecting the public good, having ably and conscientiously served his county in the capacity of a public school teacher for twenty years, while in other phases of civic life he has so ordered his actions as to earn the endorsement and support of his fellow citizens.

John N. Phillips, the cashier of the First National Bank of Amo, was born two miles southwest of Amo on June 24, 1855. His parents were Samuel and Rachel (Newman) Phillips, of North Carolina. His grandfather, John S. Phillips, was born in Pennsylvania in 1776. His greatgrandfather, John Phillips, was a native of Germany and went to North Carolina about 1789, taking his family with him, and his death occurred shortly after settling in that state. The children of the grandfather, John S. Phillips, came to Indiana in the thirties and located in Wayne county, where he afterwards joined them and died about 1832. Samuel Phillips, the father of the subject of this sketch, came to Hendricks county, Indiana, about 1836, where all of his children were born and reared. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Phillips were the parents of nine children, two of whom died in infancy.

John N. Phillips was the sixth child in order of birth of his father's family and was reared as a farmer's lad, receiving his elementary education in the district schools and completing it by taking a course in the Central Normal College at Danville. As a boy he showed unusual intelligence and his parents were anxious to give him the best possible education. After completing his course in the college at Danville he became a public school teacher and followed that noble profession for the next twenty vears, during which time he was rated as one of the most successful teachers of Hendricks county In 1898 he retired from the teaching profession and for eight years he was engaged in the lumber business and farming. Then he, with others, organized the First National Bank of Amo, the organization articles being dated January 20, 1906. Its present officers are as follows: E. B. Owen, president; George W. Christie, vice-president; J. N. Phillips, cashier; Miller E. Kendall, assistant cashier. The bank now has a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. Phillips was married August 21, 1879, to Joanna Ratliff of Hendricks county, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Ratliff, an old and highly respected family of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips are the parents of one daughter, Elsie, who married Otis Rammel. Mr. Phillips is a member of the Friends church and an active worker in all the activities of that denomination, being especially interested in the Sabbath school work. Mr. Phillips is a man whom to know is to respect, and during his career in this county he has led a life which has been free from censure of any kind. He has always been ready to aid in the moral or material welfare of those who required assistance, and in every particular measures up to the highest ideals of the American citizen.

WILL A. KING.

It is a well recognized fact that the most powerful influence in shaping and controlling public life is the press. It reaches a greater number of people than any other agency and thus has always been used and, in the hands of persons competent to use it, always will be a most important factor in moulding public opinion and shaping the destiny of the nation. The gentleman to a brief review of whose life these few lines are devoted is prominently connected with the journalism of central Indiana, and at this time is editor and publisher of the Danville Gazette, one of the best Democratic papers of this section of the state in news, editorial ability and mechanical execution.

Will A. King, the son of E. Douglas and Ruth (Warner) King, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 5, 1864, and has lived in this county since he was fourteen years of age. His father was born in Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and came to Indiana in 1869 as editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, and also has the honor of publishing the first directory of that city. In February, 1878, he came to Danville and established the Hendricks County Democrat and in September, 1880, he started the Danville Gazette, taking his son, Will A., the subject of this sketch, into partnership with him. Shortly after starting the Gazette he accepted a position in the government printing office at Washington, D. C., and left his son in full charge of the paper.

WILL A. KING

Will A. King received a good practical education and when a small boy entered the printing office of his father, who had been a printer and newspaper man for thirty years. Under the able guidance of the latter he acquired a through knowledge of the mechanical part of the business and, being a lad of keen ability, he was soon competent to assume the control of the paper and manage it from the editorial as well as the mechanical side. As has been said, he helped his father establish the Gazette in 1880 and he has been in charge of the paper up to the present time. It has for years been recognized as the official organ of the Democratic party in Hendricks county.

Mr. King was married to Jennie Hill, the daughter of John C. and Sarah J. (Parker) Hill, and they have an interesting family of three children, Ruth A., Sarah J. and Robert H. They are fitting their children for their future careers by giving them the best possible education.

In view of the fact that Mr. King has been the editor of the leading Democratic paper of the county for so many years, it is not strange that he has been a very important factor in the deliberations of his party. Probably no other man in the county has exerted as much influence in the councils of his party as has Mr. King, and it is to his credit that he always takes his stand on the side of clean politics. Personally, he is a man who easily makes friends and, being a newspaper man, has friends in every part of the county.

JOSEPH B. FLEECE.

Specific mention is made of many of the worthy citizens of Hendricks county within the pages of this book, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored locality and whose interests are identified with its every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of action to the well-being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this number is he whose name appears above, peculiar interest attaching to this career from the fact that for the past ten years he has been prominently identified with the banking business in North Salem, during which time he has also taken a prominent part in the civic and moral advancement of his community.

Joseph B. Fleece, a banker of North Salem, was born near North Salem, July 24, 1866. His parents were Capt. Jacob and Lettie B. (Ashby) Fleece. The late Jacob H. Fleece was born near Danville, Kentucky, on June 4, 1829, and died in North Salem, November 2, 1910, a devout Christian man who was honored and respected by everyone. The parents of Captain Fleece were Charles and Mary (Harlan) Fleece, who came to this county from Kentucky and settled in Eel River township in 1836. Here Captain Fleece was reared to manhood and in October, 1853, married Lettie B. Ashby, the daughter of Silas and Nancy (Radford) Ashby. Silas Ashby was the son of Thompson and Lettie (Van Meter) Ashby. The Ashby family is a remarkable family. They trace their ancestry back to England where for centuries they have been people of honor. Thompson Ashby was born in Virginia and at the age of fourteen, with two older brothers, came to Kentucky where he grew to manhood and then married Lettie Van Meter. Her father was given a large grant of land for his services in the Revolutionary War, but lost part of it by defective title. Thompson Ashby lived the remainder of his life in Kentucky, and upon his death his widow sold his farm and brought her children to Indiana and settled between Ladoga and Roachdale in Putnam county. There she entered land, managed wisely and reared her children to useful lives. They prospered and became large land owners and today their descendants are numerous about Ladoga and are among the most highly respected people of the various communities in which they live. Lettie N. Ashby, the wife of Capt, Jacob Fleece, was born and reared near Roachdale and lived there until her marriage. After his marriage, Captain Fleece and his brother John engaged in the mercantile business at Ladoga in Montgomery county, but a year later he returned to his farm in Eel River township in this county. In 1850 he was elected county recorder of Hendricks county and served until the fall of 1861 when he resigned and entered the army. In September, 1861, he was commissioned captain of Company A, Fifty-first Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and remained in the service as captain until his resignation in September, 1862. He then returned to this county and resumed farming. In 1882 he was elected to represent this county in the lower house of the State Legislature, and was re-elected in 1884 and again in 1886, serving six years in the Legislature. He was a very successful farmer and at the time of his death owned two hundred and seventy acres of land, which he farmed until within the last fifteen years of his life when he moved to North Salem. He was a Mason and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He and his wife belonged to the Christian church, in which he was an elder for many years. Captain and Mrs. Fleece were the parents of three children: Silas F.; Joseph B., whose history is herein presented; and Lulu C. Silas F. Fleece is in the hardware business at Tuxedo, the eastern part of Indianapolis. He married Francis Davis and had three children, Aletha, Alta and Verner. Lulu married L.

C. Moore, and lives on the home farm a mile west of North Salem. They have two children, Herbert and Maynard.

Joseph B. Fleece grew up on the farm, attended the district schools and then took a course in a business college at Indianapolis. In 1888 he engaged in the merchandise business at North Salem in partnership with his brother-in-law, L. C. Moore, under the firm name of Moore & Fleece. The firm continued in business for ten years, when it was dissolved and Mr. Fleece went to Indianapolis and entered the real estate business. Two years later he returned to North Salem and became interested in the North Salem Bank with Charles W. and George B. Davis and has continued in the banking business ever since. In addition to his banking interests, Mr. Fleece owns about two hundred acres of land in the southern part of Texas near Houston and Brownsville.

Mr. Fleece was married in 1897 to Emma Williams, the daughter of Alexander and Martha (Griggs) Williams. Alexander Williams was born in Marion township, this county, June 26, 1840, the son of James B, and Eliza (Ramsey) Williams. James B. Williams and his wife were born, reared and married in Kentucky, coming to this county in 1836 in wagons. They bought one hundred and twenty acres of land in Marion township from a man who had entered the land, but was not able to make any improvement. They started in the wilderness, built a real pioneer cabin of round logs. puncheon floor, clapboard roof and stick-and-mud chimney. Alexander Williams had two sisters and five brothers, of whom he is the only one living at the present time. His mother died when he was about fourteen years of age. and his father married Eliza Tamplin, who is now living near Danville with four children by his second marriage: Matilda, Sarah, Eleanor and Tilman. James B. Williams died in 1878. In October, 1863, Alexander Williams enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry and was immediately transferred to General Sherman's command in the Atlanta campaign. Later his company was ordered to return to General George Thomas in Tennessee and was in the attack on Nashville, December, 1864, and followed Hood's army until they crossed the Tennessee river in the early part of 1865. Shortly afterwards his regiment was ordered to Washington, D. C., and was there compelled to camp in an open field without shelter in zero weather. Thence his regiment was taken by boat to the coast of North Carolina and landed at Moorhead City. His regiment was sent there in order to repair the railroad in North Carolina to connect Sherman with Virginia and ship him supplies. In North Carolina he was in several skirmishes of a minor character. He took part in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., in the summer of 1865 and was later mustered out at Indianapolis in July. Immediately after the close of the war he returned to Marion township and resumed farming. In 1871 he moved to Eel River township where he bought land and, by gradual addition. has now accumulated three hundred and twenty-one acres of land in that township. In 1907 he retired from active life and bought a home in North Salem, where he is now living a retired life. Alexander Williams was first married in January, 1867, to Anna Fassett, the daughter of Isaac and Unity Fassett. To this union one son was born, Harry. His first wife died about fifteen days after the son was born. Harry now lives two miles north of North Salem on a farm. He married Pearl Speers and has one son, Aubry, who married August Gaines and lives on a farm north of Danville. Alexander Williams was married the second time in June, 1871, to Martha Griggs, the daughter of David and Emeline (Webster) Griggs. She was born in Clark county. Kentucky, and came to Marion township in this county, when she was a babe. To this second marriage five children were born: Emeline, the wife of Joseph B. Fleece. Anna, the widow of Clarence Bryant. Flora, who received a fine education, attending the State Normal at Terre Haute and later the State University at Bloomington. She taught several terms in Hendricks county, and also at Indianapolis, but is now making her home with her father in North Salem. Dicey, the wife of Frank Branch, lives at Stockton, California, and has three children, Helen, Doris and Frances. Urban L. lives on his father's farm. He married Lydia Davis. the daughter of Smith R. and Martha Davis, and has one son, Roger. The second wife of Mr. Williams died March 8, 1910.

Mr. and Mrs. Fleece are the parents of four interesting children, Pauline, Eugene, Maurice and Harlan. Mrs. Fleece is an accomplished musician and a pleasant woman in every way. For some years before her marriage, she was a teacher of instrumental music, having received her training in the music department of the Central Normal College at Danville. Mr. and Mrs. Fleece are loyal members of the Christian church and Mr. Fleece has been a deacon in the denomination for many years. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias. In the civic life of his community, Mr. Fleece has always taken an active interest, giving his support to all movements having for their object the advancement of the general welfare of his town and vicinity. He is a genial and agreeable man to meet and enjoys a justly merited popularity among his many acquaintances.

CHARLES P. HORNADAY.

Among the strong and influential citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, the record of whose lives have become an essential part of the history of this section, the gentleman whose name appears above occupies a prominent place and for years has exerted a beneficial influence in the locality where he resides. His chief characteristics are keepness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and motive and everyday common sense, which has enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the community.

Charles P. Hornaday was born June 12, 1866, in Washington township. Hendricks county, Indiana, His parents were Anson D. and Sarah (Hanna) Hornaday, both of whom were natives of Indiana. Anson Hornaday was a farmer by occupation during all of his life and settled in Hendricks county in 1865, having come to this county from Indianapolis, where he had been a contractor. He engaged in agricultural pursuits in Washington township, and continued to reside there until his death, which occurred in 1908 at the age of eighty years. His widow is still living in Plainfield at the age of eighty-one. Anson Hornaday was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church from his boyhood. Mr. and Mrs. Anson Hornaday were the parents of six children: Ella, deceased; James P., who is now the special correspondent of the Indianapolis News with headquarters at Washington City: Charles P., the immediate subject of this sketch; W. D., of Austin, Texas, where he is engaged in the newspaper business; Mrs. Marv L. Hadley, of Plainfield, and John, who died in infancy.

Charles P. Hornaday was reared on the home farm and educated in the common schools, finishing his educational training at Plainfield Academy. He then took a course in the Indianapolis Business College, and after his graduation from that institution, engaged in the mercantile business in Indianapolis for a short time. In 1889 he came to Danville, where he followed the feed and grain business for two years. He next engaged in the grocery business and operated a grocery store for the next seventeen years, at the expiration of which time he retired from the grocery business and went to Indianapolis, where he engaged in the real estate business for three years. He then returned to Danville and in 1910 was appointed postmaster by President William H. Taft, a position which he held until 1914.

Mr. Hornaday was married November 28, 1896, to Effie M. Blair, the daughter of Clark Blair, of Washington township in this county. To this union there have been born four children, Howard B., Sarah Josephine, Mary Louise and Charles P., Jr. Mr. Hornaday is a Republican in his political views and has always taken an active interest in politics, although he had never held any public office until his appointment as postmaster of Danville. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and, with his wife, is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Indianapolis and the Commercial Club of Danville. He is actively interested in all civic matters and is prominent in all movements looking toward the betterment of his home town. He is a man who has won a large circle of friends and acquaintances and is universally regarded as one of Hendricks county's leading citizens.

WESLEY BRADY.

The gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article is well and favorably known throughout Hendricks county and particularly in the vicinity of Danville. This is not because he can claim great wealth nor because of remarkable accomplishments in mercantile life, though he has been a successful business man; but because of the fact that he is genial in manner, warm hearted, charitable and kindly to man and beast. In addition to these qualities he is a recognized authority upon the care and breeding of horses; and his proverbial kindness to the animals in his charge has shown marked results. These animals are docile and well trained, and could they speak, they would probably say, "We do our best for him because he is so kind." And this quality in him has appealed to his fellow men.

Wesley Brady is a true product of Hendricks county, having made it his home since the day of his birth, in the year 1858. His parents, George W. Brady and Delilah (Selch) Brady, were among the early inhabitants of the county, and his maternal grandparents were among the first to brave the terrors of the unbroken forest.

His father, George W., was born in Morgan county, Indiana, near Mooresville, in the year 1839, but during his childhood his parents, Merrill Brady and wife, emigrated to Hendricks county. Here, near Carter-burg, they took up their abode, and the remaining days of their lives were spent upon this homestead, he cultivating the soil and toiling diligently to acquire sustenance for the family. Mr. Brady was particularly successful as a breeder of and dealer in live stock, and the love which he bore for domestic animals, particularly the horse, was inculcated into the mind and heart of his son.

His wife, Delilah Selch, was a native of Hendricks county also, her parents being one of the early families to brave the terrors of the long, tedious journey by wagon from Kentucky, through the forest country infested by wild animals. Near the present site of Cartersburg in Hendricks county, they selected their abode and entered from the government eighty acres of land. This tract was later doubled in size, and the arduous labor of clearing away the grand old forest trees, which to-day are so highly prized, was gladly endured as they saw the cabin raised which was to be their home. During the time of building, one of the workers shot a deer at the hour for noon day rest, and at night the howling of wolves trying to get their sheep disturbed their slumbers. Here they lived the life of the pioneer, the father and sons bewing the huge trees to clear space for the garden and grain, and the mother and daughters spinning and weaving, and later, knitting and sewing by hand the products of the wheel and loom. Baking and broiling were accomplished by the open fireplace, and their table was replete with game.

Hence, we see that the subject of our sketch is truly a son of Hendricks county. His childhood and youth were spent on the farm of his father, and he was busily engaged in all the activities of the place. At the age of twenty-four years, his marriage to Kate Riggen was solemnized. She, also, is a native of Hendricks county, having been born and reared near Cartersburg. His parents took the long journey from North Carolina by wagon in the early days of this county, and purchased the tract of land which has been their homestead throughout their days.

Soon after they were united in marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Brady established their home on a farm in the vicinity of their former homes, and here he engaged in the pursuit of agriculture until the year 1909, supplementing this work, however, with the purchase and sale of horses. In this year he brought his family to Danville and entered the livery business with John W. Ader, under the firm name of Ader & Brady. In this vocation he has been at liberty to exercise all his talents in the care and training of horses, for which he is eminently fitted by heredity, experience and environment, for the love of this work is inherited from several generations of ancestors. He is now the possessor of "Guy Princeton," a horse that has sired more speed and high class road horses than any other stallion in Hendricks county. Many of his offspring have sold for sums ranging from fifteen hundred to twentyfive hundred dollars. His pedigree runs back three generations to Hambletonian Ten.

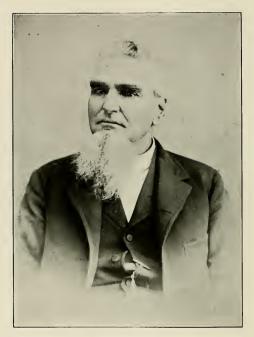

But dearly as Mr. Brady loves his horses, his home and family are of paramount importance in his life. His one daughter, Lela, is now the wife of Raymond Miles, and resides near Clayton. Though a man of few words, he is proverbially a good neighbor and stanch friend; and his many kind acts have won for him a more desirable reputation than could the possession of large wealth. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, among whom he has many devoted friends.

FRED B. SOPER.

In the early days the Middle West was often a tempting field to energetic, ambitious, strong-minded men, and Indiana was filled with them during the time she was struggling up to a respectable position in the sister-hood of states. There was a fascination in the broad field and great promise which this newer region presented to activity that attracted many men and induced them to brave the discomforts of the early life here for the pleasure and gratification of constructing their fortunes in their own way and after their own methods. It is this class of men, more than any other, who give shape, direction and character to the business of a community. Fred B, Soper, well known citizen of Center township, this county, is the son of one of the pioneer citizens of this community, his father, the late Charles Soper, for many years being one of the most substantial and prominent citizens of Hendricks county. He became identified with this section at an early date and for many years wielded a potent influence in local circles.

Fred B. Soper was born in Marion township, this county, on December 31, 1869, about one and one-half miles north of New Winchester, the son of Charles and Sarah (Underwood) Soper. Charles Soper was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, on December 5, 1823, and came to this county in 1853. He was twice married, his first wife, whom he married in Kentucky, being Nancy Bryan. Their marriage took place in 1844 and she died after coming to this county, in 1867. She left three children, namely: James, deceased; Mary Alice and Charles Clay. Mr. Soper took as his second wife Sarah Underwood, to whom were born two children, the eldest being the immediate subject of this sketch, and the youngest, William Kendricks, who departed this life July 13, 1902. Sarah Underwood was a native of Decatur county, this state, her parents originally coming from Kentucky and later coming to this county, where her father entered from the government one thousand acres of land in Marion township. She died in Lake county, Illinois, on September 13, 1909.

Charles Soper, the subject's father, was one of the leading farmers of his day, being thoroughly progressive in his work at a time when many tillers of the soil rather hesitated to depart from old established methods. He was a firm believer in modern ideas in agriculture and ever endeavored to keep right in the front rank in his chosen vocation. He first settled in Marion township, this county, on a farm of about five hundred acres, where he had excellent opportunities to work out some of his advanced theories. There he lived until the fall of 1870, when he moved to Danville, where he resided for about thirteen years. Becoming wearied of town life and hungering for the country again, he returned to the farm where the subject now lives. This homestead contains one hundred and seventy-four acres, all buildings and improvements being modern, and is one of the best conducted farms in the county. On this farm Charles Soper passed his declining years, his death occurring on January 20, 1909. He was quiet and unassuming in manner, yet with a quality of firmness and determination rarely equaled. Highly successful in his chosen field of endeavor, he won his way by his neverceasing effort, tireless energy and rare judgment and ability, yet, with all his large interests, he found considerable time to devote to his home and family, being a man of marked domestic traits. His fraternal affiliation for some years was with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but he dropped his membership in this society shortly before his death. He was a stanch Democrat in his earlier years, but later endorsed the principles of the Prohibition party and was active in its affairs as related to his community, but never aspired to office in either party. He was one of those splendid men of brains and brawn who always prove themselves such strong factors in the improvement of a new country, for, by reason of their varied qualities, they lead in the moral, educational and material advancement of their community and their influence for general uplift can never be estimated.

Fred B. Soper spent his early years at home, assisting his father in his labors and imbibing from him the principles of life and business which make him one of the leading citizens of today. He received his elementary education in the township schools, later attending the high school at Danville, from which he was graduated in due time. He chose the vocation of his father as that of his own and all the efforts of his manhood years have been spent in this direction, until he is considered one of the most progressive farmers of the county. He gives considerable attention to the breeding and raising of cattle and hogs, principally the latter. Mr. Soper has never married and he and his sister, Mary Alice, who also remains single, make their home together on the old homestead, and she unites with him in a determined effort to make their business an unqualified success.

Both Mr. and Miss Soper are members of the Christian church, being interested in its welfare and they contribute liberally of their means toward its support. Mr. Soper's fraternal affiliations are with the Knights of Pythias, being identified with the local lodge at Danville. He is a stanch Republican, firmly believing in the principles laid down by that party, and takes an active interest in political matters in his community. While never aspiring for office, his influence at the polls is a thing reckoned with by those who do seek such honors. Mr. Soper is a quiet, unassuming man, with sterling qualities of heart and mind and well liked and respected throughout a wide acquaintance. His sincere interest in those with whom he comes in contact has won for him many warm friends and both he and his sister hold an enviable position in the estimation of their friends and neighbors. It is such men as he who are the saving class in any community and of whom it can truly be said they are the "salt of the earth."

Miss Soper deals in White Leghorn chickens and has the finest poultry farm and equipment in the Middle West. She is also a club woman, belonging to the Modern Priscilla and New Era clubs at Indianapolis, and to the Lawrence School Girls' Club.

EDGAR M. BLESSING.

There are individuals in nearly every community who, by reason of pronounced ability and force of character, rise above the heads of the masses and command the unbounded esteem of their fellow men. Characterized by perseverance and a directing spirit, two virtues that never fail, such men always make their presence felt and the vigor of their strong personalities serves as a stimulus and incentive to the young and rising generation. To this energetic and enterprising class the subject of this sketch very properly belongs. Having never been seized with the wanderlust spirit that has led many of Hendricks county's young men to other fields of endeavor and other states, Mr. Blessing has devoted himself to his adopted profession and to the public duties to which he has been called, and because of his personal worth and his accomplishments, he is clearly entitled to representation among the enterprising and progressive men of his locality.

Edgar M. Blessing, the son of George A. and Margaret (Ladd) Blessing, was born in Wadena, Indiana, in 1876. He was given a good common school education, graduated from the high school at Wadena and later from the Indiana State Normal at Terre Haute in 1800. Between the time he entered the State Normal and his graduation he taught two years, and after his graduation was principal of the Plainfield high school for two years. During the summer of 1000 he was in attendance at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. In 1901 he was for five months clerk of the Indiana Boys' School at Plainfield. In the fall of 1901 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, and graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Law in June. 1904. In January, 1905, he opened a law office in Danville for the practice of law. A year later he was elected prosecuting attorney, and was re-elected in 1908. January 1, 1912, he became county attorney, which office he now fills very acceptably. He has been distinguished by his work in the office of attorney in the well known Asher and Moon cases. As county attorney he is official attorney for the board of county commissioners, and has had work of great importance for them, which he has creditably performed. He prepared all the papers for the board of commissioners in the new court house matters and prepared the transcript for the sale of the bonds for two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the proposed new court house. The bond attorneys who examined the transcript pronounced it legally perfect and could make no corrections or amendments and went so far as to compliment the work he did. In this high and difficult service for the public he evidenced capacity in his profession.

Mr. Blessing was married October 5, 1905, to Geraldine M., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. C. A. White, of Danville. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville, and are interested in all its activities. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and is worshipful master of the Western Star Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Danville. He is also a thirty-second-degree Mason and a Shriner of Murat Temple, Indianapolis.

Mr. Blessing loves the law because its purpose is the preservation for each citizen in the state of his rights for his own use. The practice of the true lawyer is the practice of patriotism, and Mr. Blessing has the high ambition to be a true lawyer. There is no nobler ambition, no greater field for usefulness, and all that is needed is time to make him eminent in his profession. He is now assistant to Prof. Solon Enloe, the head of the law department of Central Normal College, of Danville.

WILLIAM W. TROTTER.

Among the men of Hendricks county who have seen it emerge from a virgin forest to its present state as one of the finest agricultural counties in the state, there is no one who can give a more vivid picture of the steady growth of the county than William W. Trotter, who was born February 19, 1833, about two miles east of North Salem, and has spent his entire life in this county. His parents were James and Sarah (Whitt) Trotter, and his father was born in Lee county, Virginia, June, 1813, the son of James and Elizabeth (Culton) Trotter. In 1815 the Trotter family came from Virginia to Indiana and settled in Monroe county, where they remained for two or three years; from thence they went to Greencastle, Indiana, and still later to Lafavette, in this state. They finally settled in Hendricks county, where they bought a farm of two hundred acres south of North Salem. Here James Trotter, Sr., died on October 27, 1857. James Trotter, Jr., was a young man when his parents moved to this county, and shortly after coming here he married Sarah Whitt, who was a native of Montgomery county, Virginia. She had come to Indiana with the family of James Hedge, who only stayed a short time in Indiana, when they returned to their old home in Virginia. After his marriage, James Trotter, Jr., bought a farm east of North Salem, and lived there the rest of his life. He built a cabin in the woods and started life like all of the pioneers of early Indiana. William, whose history is here portraved, remembers distinctly of the clearing of that farm and all of the incidents which surrounded their pioneer home. James Trotter died February 16, 1878, his wife having passed away November 12, 1872.

William W. Trotter was married February 28, 1857, to Nancy E. Keith, who was born December 9, 1838, in Putnam county, in this state, the daughter of Bird and Hannah (Stigleman) Keith. Bird Keith was a native of Virginia, the son of James Keith and wife. He married Hannah Stigleman in Wayne county, Indiana, when he was about thirty years of age, and shortly afterwards moved to Putnam county, where they lived until 1852.

They then moved to Hendricks county and located east of North Salem, although his wife had died before he came to this county. His death occurred later at Indianapolis.

After Mr. Trotter married he engaged in farming on rented land for several years and then purchased a farm two miles east of North Salem, where he lived until February 19, 1901, at which time he retired from active farming and bought a home at North Salem, where he has since maintained his residence. Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Trotter are the parents of seven children living and two who died in infancy, the ones deceased being Jesse and Arthur T. Those living are Allen F., who lives with his father; James, a hardware merchant of North Salem; Silas B. and Oliver W., who are in the dry goods business in North Salem; silas B. and Oliver W., who are in the dry goods business in North Salem, and whose histories are given elsewhere in this volume; Charles M., a dentist of North Salem; Clarence H., agent for the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway Company at North Salem, and Nora B., who is at home with her parents.

Mr. Trotter was assessor of Eel River township from 1865 to 1867, and again from 1883 to 1891, and on several different occasions acted as treasurer for the land in his township. His father, James Trotter, had been township trustee of this same township for nine years, beginning in 1860. Mr. Trotter and his whole family belong to the Christian church, and give to this denomination their most earnest support. Mr. Trotter has been a loyal member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since April, 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Trotter have lived useful and busy lives in this county and have rearred a family of children, all of whom have became useful members of the community.

DAVID A. HIGGINS.

It is a well authenticated fact that success comes as the result of legitimate and well applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance in a course of action when once decided upon. She is never known to smile upon the idler or dreamer and she never courts the loafer, and only the men who have diligently sought her favor are crowned with her blessings. In tracing the history of David A. Higgins, of Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana, it is plainly seen that the success which he enjoys has been won by commendable qualities and it is also his personal worth that has gained for him the high esteem of those who know him.

David A. Higgins, deputy state oil inspector, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, June 30, 1850. His parents were Michael and Elizabeth (Plasters) Higgins, his father's birth having occurred in Putnam county, this state. He came to this county when he was a boy with his parents. His mother was born in Kentucky and came to this county with her parents when a small child. Michael Higgins was a farmer in Marion township, where he lived on the same farm until his death in 1904, at the age of eighty-one years. He was a member of the Christian church at New Winchester, and served as trustee of Marion township for three terms. His wife died at the age of sixty in 1882. They were the parents of six children: William, of Marion township; David A., the immediate subject of this sketch; Mary J., wife of J. L. Wilson, of Marion township; Cassandra, wife of Henry Hunt; Charles E., of Marion township, and May, the wife of Willard Kellum, who lives on the home farm in Marion township.

David A. Higgins was reared on his father's farm and received the education which was afforded by the district schools of his home township. He had more than the ordinary taste for knowledge and after finishing the common school course in his township, he attended the academy at Ladoga for two years when it was in charge of Professor M. B. Hopkins, later superintendent of instruction for Indiana. Upon the completion of his education he returned to his father's farm and followed agricultural pursuits until 1893. In addition to carrying on a general system of diversified farming he was actively engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock. In fact, this was the main source of his income. In 1893 he moved to Danville, where he engaged in the hardware business for the next ten years. In 1910 he was appointed deputy oil inspector for Indiana, a position which he is still filling.

Mr. Higgins has long been identified with the Democratic party in his county and his worth as a man is shown by the fact that he has been the county chairman of the Democratic central committee for the past eight years. Hendricks county was formerly Republican, but is now practically in the hands of the Democratic party, only two of the county officers being Republicans.

Mr. Higgins was married December 1, 1881, to Angeline Hunt, the daughter of Ithamer and Fanny Jane Hunt, who were also residents of Marion township. Mr. and Mrs. Higgins are faithful and consistent members of the Christian church at Danville and are generous in their support of its various activities. Mr. Higgins is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons. He has ever enjoyed the respect and esteem of those who know him because of his friendly manner, marked ability in public affairs and upright living, and he is regarded by all as one of the substantial and worthy citizens of this locality.

SILAS B. TROTTER

One of the influential citizens of North Salem is the gentleman to whose career the attention of the reader is now directed, a man who is ranked with the city's leading merchants and representative citizens. A man of excellent endowments and upright character, he has been a valued factor in local affairs and has ever commanded unequivocal confidence and esteem, being loyal to the upbuilding of his community and ever vigilant in his efforts to further the interests of his city along material, moral and civic lines.

Silas B. Trotter, of the firm of Trotter Brothers, of North Salem, was born in Eel River township, in this county, on March 16, 1861, and is the son of William W. and Nancy E. (Keith) Trotter, whose family history is given elsewhere in this volume.

Silas B. Trotter was given a good practical education and continued to reside on the home farm until 1886, at which time he went to the state of Missouri, where he spent one year, being employed in the railway round house. He then returned to North Salem and took up the study of telegraphy, and from 1890 to 1904 was a telegraph operator on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railway at Montelair, Dana and North Salem. In 1904 he went to Rush county, in this state, and engaged in the mercantile business until 1907. On April 1st of that year he and his brother, Oliver W., formed a partnership in North Salem, and have continued there in business under the firm name of Trotter Brothers until the present time. They handle dry goods, shoes and millinery and have built up a large and lucrative trade in the town and vicinity, owing to their courteous and gentlemanly treatment of their patrons. They purchased this business of Bymaster & Company, a firm which had been established in North Salem for twenty years in the same line. Since taking over this business they have doubled the amount of stock in different lines and have improved the store in various ways. In 1912 they erected a new brick store room, into which they moved in January, 1913.

Silas B. Trotter was married in 1894 to Louisa J. Pritchett, the daughter of Thomas C. and Mary (Stigleman) Pritchett. Her father was a farmer and one of the early settlers of the county, having come here in 1826, when he was less than one year old. His parents were natives of Kentucky, and made the overland trip from that state to this county on horseback. Mr. and Mrs. Trotter are the parents of one daughter, Mary Geraldine.

Fraternally, Mr. Trotter is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons, while religiously, he and his wife are both loyal members of the Christian church of North Salem, and are regarded by all with confidence and esteem in the community in which they live.

OTIS E. GULLEY.

In no profession is there a career more open to talent than is that of the law, and in no field of endeavor is there demanded a more careful preparation, a more thorough appreciation of the absolute ethics of life or of the underlying principles which form the basis of all human rights and privileges. Unflagging application and intuitive wisdom and determination fully to utilize the means at hand are the concomitants which insure personal success and prestige in this great profession, which stands as the stern conservator of justice, and it is one into which none should enter without a recognition of the obstacles to be encountered and overcome and the battles to be won. Success does not perch on the banner of every person who enters the competitive fray, but comes only as the legitimate result of capability. Possessing all of these requisite qualities which stamp the able lawyer, Otis E. Gulley stands today among the eminent practitioners of Hendricks county.

Otis E. Gulley, one of Danville's best lawyers and president of the board of trustees of Central Normal College, is a native of the county, having been born at North Salem on March 22, 1867. Reared to the life of a farmer's boy, he knows what kind of a life the farmer leads and this has been no small factor in his success as an attorney. The farmer in search of legal advice feels that he can have a sympathetic helper in Mr. Gulley and he finds that he is not mistaken. Mr. Gulley received his elementary education in the common schools of his township and in preparing himself for teaching he attended Franklin College for one term. He came to Danville in 1891 and was shortly after admitted to the practice of law and has continued to follow that profession, for which he seems to be especially gifted. He is peculiarly gifted in the capacity of the investigator who is never satisfied until he gets to the bottom of things. He goes around, under, over or through obstacles, revolutionizing his methods if the old ways do not meet the exigencies of the situation. Old ways may do for some men, but if a new way is better he digs it up out of the limitless field of opportunity and presses it into service. His philosophy is that there is a way to do everything if the way can but be found.

Mr. Gulley's life has been a busy one and he has had discouragements and disappointments to meet many times. Starting out as a school teacher at seventeen, he has received his education with his work. He lived in Arkansas two years and was living in that state in 1890 when the United States census was taken. He was census supervisor of the second district, which covered about half of the state. Coming back to Danville, he was elected to the office of county prosecutor two terms and was one of the best prosecutors the county ever had.

Mr. Gulley was married in 1895 to Mary Tilford, of Martinsville, Indiana, and has a handsome home two and a half miles east of Danville. Mrs. Gulley died on July 2, 1907. He is a loyal member of the Christian church and is interested in the many activities of that society. He was a stanch Republican and his high standing among the men of the state is shown in the fact that he was nominated on the Republican ticket, in 1910, for secretary of state. At the organization of the Progressive party, he became actively identified with that organization, by which he was honored with a nomination for Congress. In his fraternal relations he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, a thirty-second-degree Mason and a Mystic Shriner. He has been the president of the board of trustees of the Central Normal College for some years and takes a very active interest in the affairs of that institution. A man of sterling qualities, his honest and strictly square dealings, his upright principles and genial disposition have won for him numerous friends throughout the community in which he lives.

JOHN A. SHOWALTER.

The following is a sketch of a plain, honest man of affairs who by correct methods and a strict regard for the interests of his patrons has made his influence felt in Danville and won for himself distinctive prestige in the professional circles of that city. He would be the last man to sit for romance or become the subject of fancy sketches, nevertheless his life presents much that is interesting and valuable and may be studied with profit by the young, whose careers are yet to be achieved. He is one of those whose integrity and strength of character must force them into an admirable notoriety which their modesty never seeks, who command the respect of their contemporaries and their posterity and leave the impress of their individuality deeply stamped upon the community.

John A. Showalter, of the firm of Shirley & Showalter, was born in Henry county, Indiana, seven miles west of Newcastle, on July 15, 1854. His parents were Ashbury and Susan Ruth (Cooper) Showalter, the father being a native of Indiana, and the mother of Ohio. Ashbury Showalter was a contractor and is now living retired in Kennard, Henry county, Indiana. His wife died in 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Ashbury Showalter were the parents of five children, all of whom are living: John A. Showalter, the oldest of the family and the immediate subject of this sketch; Mrs. Anna Bouslog, of Kennard, Indiana; Mrs. Mary Cook, of Newcastle, Indiana; R. R. Showalter, of Knightstown, Indiana, and Ada, who lives with her father in Kennard.

J. A. Showalter received his common school education in the district schools of Henry county, Indiana, and when a mere boy, began clerking in a grocery store near his home. In 1880, when he was twenty-six years of age, he came to Danville, where he became a member of the firm of Shirley, Showalter & McCoun. The business was conducted under this name for about four years and a half, at the expiration of which time the firm name was changed to Shirley, Showalter & Company, Mr. McCoun retiring from the firm. This firm, starting in a modest way, has expanded both in size and stock until it is now one of the leading stores in Danville. The company employs a large number of clerks and the stock is one of the largest and most complete in its line to be found in any city the size of Danville. Courtesy and an evident desire to please all who patronize the store have been the strongest elements in the success which has accompanied the firm's efforts, and it has enjoyed at all times the full confidence of all who have done business with it.

Mr. Showalter was married September 10, 1891, to Belle C. Conrad, of Florence, Boone county, Kentucky, and to this union there has been born one child, Mary Agnes. Mr. and Mrs. Showalter are devoted and consistent members of the Christian church, of which denomination Mr. Showalter has been a deacon for many years. Politically, he is an earnest supporter of the Republican party, but his business interests have precluded his taking an active part in political affairs. Mr. Showalter is regarded as a good business man and excellent manager, and a man who possesses sound judgment and foresight, and who believes in ever pressing forward, so that his success is but the legitimate result of the efforts which he puts forth. He enjoys the respect and esteem of those with whom he mingles for his friendly manner, his business ability, his interest in public affairs and his upright living. He is regarded by all as one of the substantial and worthy citizens of the city honored by his residence.

EDWARD V. RAGLAND.

It is not an easy task to describe adequately a man who has led an eminently active and busy life and who has attained a position of relative distinction in the community with which his interests are allied. But biography finds its most perfect justification, nevertheless, in the tracing and recording of such a life history. It is, then, with a full appreciation of all that is demanded and of the painstaking scrutiny that must be accorded each statement, and yet with a feeling of satisfaction, that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the details of such a record as has been that of Edward V. Ragland whose eminently successful career is now under review.

Edward V. Ragland, a prominent real estate and loan agent of Danville, Indiana, was born February 27, 1863, in the southwestern corner of Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His parents were James and Ann (Cord) Ragland, his father being a native of this county, born March 28, 1838. The parents of James Ragland were Dudley and Ailsey (Flynn) Ragland, both of whom were born and reared in Kentucky, near Winchester. Dudley Ragland and wife came from Kentucky to Hendricks county in pioneer time and located on the Rockville road in the eastern edge of Marion township, where Dudley Ragland kept a tayern in the early days. Later he sold this farm and bought a farm near Reno, in the southwestern corner of Marion township, and later bought a farm three miles southwest of Coatesville on which he lived until his death. James Ragland was born in Marion township, and upon reaching man's estate he was married to Ann Cord, the daughter of John and Christine (Caywood) Cord. Her parents were from New England, but came to this county early in their married life and lived here the remainder of their lives. In 1868 James Ragland and wife moved to Illinois and remained there nine years. They then came back and bought a farm in Morgan county, just south of the Hendricks county line and have lived in that neighborhood ever since.

Edward V. Ragland was reared on his father's farm and remained there until his marriage. He completed his education in the common schools in this county and then attended the Indiana State Normal at Terre Haute, after which he taught for nine years in Morgan and Putnam counties, Indiana, and in Edgar county, Illinois. He retired from his teaching profession in 1891 and engaged in the general merchandise business at Broad Park, a village in the eastern part of Putnam county, which he named. There he built up a lucrative business and remained two years, whereupon he and the man with whom he had gone into partnership dissolved and he moved his stock to Lake Valley in the northwestern part of Morgan county, where he remained for the next five years, three of which he was postmaster. In 1899 he sold his store to S. M. Johnson and after a one year's residence at Martinsville, where he dealt in live stock, he bought a farm in Franklin township in Hendricks county, where he resided three and one-half years. His wife owned a farm in the immediate vicinity, part of the farm known as the Green Valley farm. In February, 1904, Mr. Ragland moved to Danville and engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business, which he has followed up to the present time. In this line of work he has been uniformly successful, listing valuable property and building up a loan and insurance business which is netting him very handsome returns. Nearly all his life Mr. Ragland has engaged in dealing in horses, even while principally interested in other lines of business. He is a breeder of high-grade road horses and owns some fine animals at the present time.

While attending the State Normal at Terre Haute, Mr. Ragland became acquainted with Rusha E. Hadley, the daughter of Jehu and Jerusha (Stiles) Hadley, and before moving to Martinsville they were married. Jehu Hadley was one of the most prominent farmers of Hendricks county. He was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, October 19, 1810, and in 1825 went with his parents, James T. and Mary (Richardson) Hadley, to Hendricks county and located in Center township. He was married August 3, 1837, to Jerusha Stiles, who was born July 18, 1819, in Vermont, the daughter of Jeremiah and Sibyl Stiles. Her father was the founder of Stilesville, locating there in 1821. Mrs. Stiles died in 1828 and was the first married woman who died there. Mr. Stiles was married again and shortly afterward died of cholera at Savannah, Missouri. In March, 1838, Jehu Hadley bought three hundred and twenty acres in section 11, Franklin township, which at that time was a swamp. The only arable part of his farm was covered with a heavy growth of timber, and many of the old settlers pronounced the farm valueless and predicted starvation for the owner, but they did not reckon with the industry and perseverance of Jehu Hadley. By incessant toil and energy he cleared the farm and drained the swamp, putting in two thousand rods of tile drainage and four hundred rods of open ditches, in addition to building a mile of levee on Mill creek, which ran through the farm. It is today known as the Green Valley Farm and is one of the show places of the county. A fine park containing an amphitheatre is on the farm and for the past thirteen years the old settlers have held their reunions there, as many as six thousand persons being present on these annual occasions. Mr. Hadley owned, at one time, six hundred and fifty acres, nearly all of which he had brought under cultivation. In 1876 he built a beautiful brick residence, probably the most costly country home in Hendricks county, costing him over ten thousand dollars. He was widely known and well respected for his many fine qualities of character. He was not only just, but a man who was generosity itself. Honorable himself, he never distrusted another man, till proved unworthy of trust. He was strong in his likes and in his dislikes, too, and vet a charitable man who was always true to his friends. He died in 1891 and his wife seven years later. He belonged to the Christian church and his wife to the Missionary Baptist.

Rusha E. Hadley was born in Danville, where she attended the public school, and later the State Normal, where she and her husband became acquainted. After leaving the State Normal School she taught for two years. making a very creditable record as a teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Ragland have two children, Sibyl, age twelve, and Christine, age eight. Christine, although only eight years of age, is an expert little horsewoman and has been entered as a pony rider in girls' riding contests since she was a very small girl. She has already participated in four horse shows and in each she won the first premium. In speaking of the event at Greencastle, where she was entered, the Indianapolis Star said, "The entry that attracted the most attention was one where the girl riders were under fourteen years of age. The prize was won by Christine Ragland of Danville, who is only eight years of age. The little girl rode a black shetland pony and took the crowd by storm. She rode like a veteran, and, indeed she is, having taken three other prizes by her riding." She rode several times around the public square at break-neck speed and thrilled the crowd by her daring.

Mr. and Mrs. Ragland are both members of the Missionary Baptist church at Stilesville and are generous in their support of their favored denomination. Since moving to Danville they have won a host of friends who admire them for their many qualities of head and heart. They are interested in all public enterprises which tend to promote the welfare of the town, and are considered valuable acquisitions to the society of Danville.

A. P. W. BRIDGES, M. D.

In this day of specialization the world demands experts in every line and he who would make the most pronounced success along any particular line of endeavor must concentrate all of his time, attention and energy on his chosen field. In the field of medicine the work of the old family doctor is now in the hands of a hundred different specialists, each treating some particular ailment and no others. There has also arisen within the last twenty-five years a new field in the department of therapeutics and medicine and one which is of great importance. This new departure will not only be the means of saving the health of hundreds of thousands of people, but it has an influence which will affect the very life of the nation itself, striking as it does at the foundations of our social fabric. The home, the school, the industrial world and every phase of society is going to be changed for the better because of this new phase of the medical profession.

Inebriety is now recognized as a disease and there has been discovered by Dr. Leslie E. Keeley, a treatment which, properly administered, results in a complete relief from the craving or appetite for alcohol and narcotics. Nearly half a million persons have been treated within the last twenty-five years and the success which has attended the use of Dr. Keeley's remedies has made his name a household word in thousands of homes. For the past twenty-three years there has been a branch of the Keeley Institute at Plainfield, Indiana, and during all but five years of that time it has been under the charge of Dr. A. P. W. Bridges, who has achieved a notable success in handling thousands of cases of inebriety and morphineism.

Dr. Bridges, the son of Rev. M. C. and Sophia J. (Doyle) Bridges, was born September 27, 1856, in Owen county, Indiana. His father was a native of Indiana and his mother of North Carolina. Rev. Bridges was born near Abington, Wayne county, his ancestors having come to Indiana from Virginia by way of Kentucky. They settled in Wayne county in the twenties and in the thirties moved to Owen county and lived there the remainder of their days, the father dying in 1900 at the age of seventy-five, the mother having passed away several years before. They reared a large family of children, but Dr. Bridges is the only one living.

Dr. Bridges received a good common school education and then took the course in the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, graduating from that institution in the spring of 1892. He started to practice at Cloverdale, Indiana, and shortly afterwards removed to Alaska, Morgan county, where he remained until he took charge of the Keeley Institute at Plainfield. Under his efficient administration the institute has made a steady growth and is now recognized as one of the best in the United States. In 1912 the buildings were completly overhauled and put in first class condition in every particular.

Dr. Bridges was first married to Emma F. Alverson, of Spencer, Indiana, in 1883, and to this union there were born five children: Ralph, who is a graduate of Depauw and Indiana Universities, and is now a professional chemist, at Plainfield; Alta, who is a graduate of Depauw University, and now a teacher in the high school, at Plainfield; and three who are still at home, Joyce. Willard and James. Mrs. Bridges died in April, 1908, and January 7, 1913, Dr. Bridges married Minnie Morgan, of Plainfield, to which union Ruth Adelaide was born, February 19, 1914.

Dr. Bridges is a thirty-second-degree Mason, a Shriner, and also holds membership in the tribe of Red Men. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and has been a trustee in the church for many years. He is a stanch Democrat and takes an active interest in the affairs of his party and was nominated by his party in 1914 for the office of county clerk. He has been the precinct committeeman from Guilford township ever since he lived there. He has been identified with the Plainfield Building and Loan Association as its vice-president for many years. He is a member of the library board of Plainfield.

It is safe to say that the work being done by Dr. Bridges is conferring a boon upon thousands of homes and the sphere of his influence is constantly increasing. His work is highly indorsed by men in every profession who see in the service he is rendering to afflicted humanity the positive means of ameliorating untold suffering and misery. Dr. Bridges is a widely read man and one whom it is a pleasure to meet, and his friends are truly numbered by the thousands.

JUDGE GEORGE W. BRILL.

It is scarce less than supererogation in outlining the leading facts in the life of Judge Brill to refer to him as a lawyer in the ordinary phraseology which meets the requirements when dealing with the average member of the legal profession. He is indeed much more than eminently successful in his legal career, as is indicated by his long and praiseworthy record at the bar and his efficient service on the bench. He is a master of his profession, a leader among men distinguished for the high order of their legal talent, and his eminent attainments and ripe judgment make him an authority on all matters involving a profound knowledge of jurisprudence and vexed and intricate questions growing out of its interpretation.

Judge George W. Brill, the son of William and Jeannette (Matthews) Brill, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, December 15, 1859. His father was a native of Virginia and his mother of Scotland. William Brill was a millwright by trade and came west when a young man, settling in Hendricks county, Indiana. Here he lived until his death, in April, 1873, his widow surviving him until 1907. They were loyal and consistent members of the Lutheran church of Pecksburg. To Mr. and Mrs. William Brill were born six children: George W., the immediate subject of this sketch; William Henry, deceased; Rachel Jeannette, the wife of L. F. Sparks; Bess, who lives with her brother, and William T., who is a furniture dealer in Danville.

Judge Brill was born on the farm near Center Valley, Liberty township, this county, and received his education in the common schools of this township. He finished his education by taking the course in the Central Normal College, at Danville, and has been granted two diplomas from that institution. Following his graduation from the college, he taught school for four years, in the meantime reading law with Hadley, Hogate & Blake in Danville. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1883, and was in continuous practice until November 16, 1913, when he went on the bench of the fifty-fifth judicial circuit of Indiana. He formed a partnership with Col. George T. Harvey in 1890, which continued until he went on the bench. This firm was very successful in every way and was in most of the important litigation of the county and central part of Indiana for the past twenty years.

Judge Brill was elected judge at the general election in November, 1913, on the Democratic ticket, and gave up a law practice of eighteen thousand dollars a year to take the judgship at three thousand five hundred. He did this only at the earnest solicitation of his friends. This was his first office, although about twenty years ago he was the party nominee for joint senator of Marion and Hendricks counties, when, though he carried Marion county by over seven hundred, he lost his home county and was defeated.

Judge Brill was married on November 23, 1883, to Emma L. Gregg, the youngest daughter of Martin and Mary Jean Gregg. Martin Gregg was county commissioner when the old court house was built and was a very estimable and substantial citizen of the county. Two children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Brill, one of whom died in infancy, while the other daughter, Gertrude Holt, is still under the parental roof. Mrs. Brill died on October 11, 1913.

Fraternally, Judge Brill is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has been in that order since 1882, during which time he has held every office in that lodge. He is also a member of the Free and Accepted Masons at Danville. Judge Brill is the owner of considerable real estate in the county, having several town properties and also farm lands scattered throughout this section. His career indicates what can be done by the young man who starts out to make his own way through life. He had no influential or rich friends or relatives to help him and can be truly called a self-made man.

FRED CREECH.

One of the youngest and most progressive farmers in this county is Fred Creech, who, although he has been a farmer only a short time, is already regarded as one of the coming agriculturalists of the county. He has had a very interesting career, during which he has traveled over a large part of the United States. He was born September 2, 1886, in Wolfe county, Kentucky, the son of Frank L. and Nancy (Riggs) Creech. His father is a Methodist minister and is now living at Van Wert, Ohio. His parents were both born in Wise county, Virginia. Fred grew up in Kentucky, and after receiving a good common school education, started to work on a farm. About ten years ago he became acquainted with a man from Hendricks county, and as a result the whole tenor of his life was changed. He came to this county, learned the structural iron worker's trade and then went to Cincinnati where he learned the marble setter's trade. He then followed these two trades until 1909, working in cities scattered all over the United States.

In 1909 he came back to this county and was married on December 28th, to Florence Hardwicke, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hardwicke. A history of the Hardwicke family is given elsewhere in this volume. To this happy union there has been born one son, Everett Farrell, a bright lad of three years.

Mr. Creech is now farming a fine eighty-acre farm in the northeastern part of Marion township and is fast picking up the intricacies of the farming profession. He is full of energy and enthusiasm and has won the respect of the entire community in which he lives.

HIRAM T. STORM.

Among the highly honored veterans of the Civil War, who are still living in Hendricks county, is Hiram E. Storm, who lost one of his legs twelve days after he was mustered into the service, in one of the hardest fought battles of the Civil War. Although he was nearly seventeen years of age when he enlisted, he came back and started to common school in order to prepare himself for some useful profession. Handicapped as he was, he was determined not to be a charge upon anyone and with grit and determination he set about to prepare himself for the profession of teaching and thirty-six years of his useful life have been spent in teaching in this and other counties in Indiana. His life history is very interesting and instructive to the coming generation and is well worthy of mention in this volume.

Hiram T. Storm, the son of Isaac and Sarah (Lunsford) Storm, was born in Putnam county, Indiana, November 26, 1845. Both of his parents were natives of Monroe county, Indiana, and when his father, Isaac, was about seventeen years of age, he left his home in Monroe county, because the surroundings of his community were such as not to be conducive to the best development of a young man. Nearly everyone was addicted to the use of strong liquor and having had a repugnance to the use of intoxicating liquors from his childhood days, he decided to settle in some place where he would be under a different environment. Accordingly he went to Putnam county and found work with a farmer by the name of Lunsford, who was a strong temperance man, an abolitionist and a worthy man in every way. It so happened that Isaac Lunsford had a daughter and, as it has often occurred before and since, the youthful Isaac fell in love with his employer's daughter, Sarah. An interesting story is connected with the life of Peter Lunsford. When he first entered government land in Putnam county, he killed one hundred and forty rattlesnakes the first spring and got so disgusted with the farm that he sold it and bought another one in the same county. Isaac and his young wife, Sarah, began life under truly primitive conditions in Putnam county, and were worthy people, who reared to large usefulness thirteen children, four boys of whom served gallantly in the Union army during the Civil War. Isaac Storms died in 1904, at the age of eighty-seven, while the bride of his youth is still living on the old home farm at the advanced age of ninety.

Hiram T. Storm lived on the home farm until the breaking out of the Civil War and on August 18, 1862, enlisted in Company C. Seventy-first Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry. The next twelve days were probably the most exciting which have ever happened in the career of Mr. Storm. His regiment in 1863 was transferred to the Sixth Indiana Cavalry, and he was rushed to Kentucky and on the 30th, twelve days after he was mustered in at Indianapolis, he was engaged in the battle of Richmond. Kentucky, one of the severest battles in that state during the whole war. Here he was severely wounded in the leg and in order to save his life, his leg was amoutated. As soon as he was able to return to his home, he came back to Putnam county and started to school. Things must have looked discouraging to him at this time, but with pluck and perseverance he applied himself to his books with such diligence that he was soon recognized as one of the best educated men in his county. As soon as he applied for a teacher's license he successfully passed the examination and for the next six years taught in Putnam county.

In 1869, Mr. Storm moved to Eel River township, in this county, and bought a farm, where he made his home until 1912. Before coming to this county he married the widow of William F. Harper, another gallant soldier, who lost his life in the Civil War. Mrs. Harper had two children by her first marriage, Melvin and Melvina Eva Harper, whose interesting careers are delineated elsewhere in this volume. After removing to this county, Mr. Storm continued teaching until 1872, when he was elected treasurer of Hendricks county on the Republican ticket. After leaving the office of county treasurer he returned to the farm and continued teaching until 1909, having completed a total of thirty-six years in the school room. He has taught the children of former pupils and in fact a few grandchildren of former pupils. He has been very successful as a business man and now owns eighty acres of land in Hendricks county, as well as his father's old home place in Putnam county.

Mr. and Mrs. Storm are the parents of two children, May and Orville T. May was the wife of Frank West, and died in January, 1897, leaving two children, Lester V. and Evalina. Orville T. was born October 31, 1869, and after graduating from the high school at Danville attended Purdue University for a term, after which he returned to the old home farm where he has since resided. Upon his marriage, in 1898, his father gave him fifty acres and since that time he has added one hundred and thirty more to his farm in this township. He was married in 1893 to Ida West, the daughter of Simpson and Julia (Weddle) West. Her father was born in Kentucky and came here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram West, in infancy. Hiram West entered land in the southeastern part of Eel River township and lived there until his death. Julia Weddle was born in Putnam county, the daughter of Benjamin and Nancy Weddle, who were natives of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Orville T. Storm have one daughter. Nellie, who is now attending the Central Normal College at Danville.

Hiram T. Storm has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1872, holding membership in both subordinate lodge and encampment. He has been a life-long member of the Christian church and is now an elder in that denomination at Lizton. Personally, Mr. Storm is a man of great force of character and enjoys a high degree of popularity in his community, possessing, as he does, those qualities of mind and heart that win and retain warm friendship.

SENATOR HORACE L. HANNA.

Senator Horace L. Hanna, of Plainfield, Indiana, was born at Greencastle, Indiana, April 1, 1874. His parents were Hon. John and Emma (Hobbs) Hanna, his father being a native of Marion county, and his mother of Jennings county in this state. His father was for many years one of the most prominent lawyers not only of Indiana, but of the middle West, and had a national reputation as a man of extraordinary ability. John Hanna was a member of Congress from the seventh district of Indiana, was an elector on the first Lincoln ticket, was appointed by President Lincoln as United States district attorney for Indiana, was a member of the territorial Legis lature of Kansas and chairman of the judiciary committee which introduced the bill for the prohibition of slavery in that state.

Senator Horace L. Hanna received a good common school and high school education in Plainfield, graduating from the Plainfield Academy in 1873. His parents had moved to Plainfield when he was about eight years of age. After graduating from the academy at Plainfield, he worked on the farm for four years, and then spent one year in DePauw University. While in DePauw he was a member of the Sigma Chi Greek-letter fraternity, and has always taken an active interest in this organization of his college days. After leaving DePauw he taught school for one year in the country near his home and then became a traveling salesman for the next four years, traveling for the Baker-Vawter Company, of Chicago. He then entered a law school in Indianapolis and graduated from the Indiana Law School in 1904 and immediately located for the practice of law at Plainfield. In 1905 he was elected to the lower house of the Indiana Legislature and re-elected in 1007. In 1000 he was elected to the Senate from Boone and Hendricks counties. having served in all, through four sessions of the Legislature, the sixtyfourth, the sixty-fifth, the sixty-sixth and sixty-seventh sessions. Senator Hanna was appointed in 1000 by Governor Hanly as chairman of the legislative committee to visit and investigate the needs of the various state institutions. While in the Legislature he took a very prominent part and was the author of many bills. He feels that the bill of most importance with which he was connected was the one making the boards of the various state institutions nonpartisan. He does not assume the entire credit for this bill, but was one of the prime movers in its passage.

Senator Hanna was married to Hortense B. Moore, December 23, 1909. She is a daughter of Patterson F., deceased, and Willie A. Moore, of Plainfield. He is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons. the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers of America. It is interesting to note that in the list of legislative celebrities which was published from time to time in the Indianapolis Star that Senator Hanna figured in a very interesting sketch in this newspaper on February 24, 1913. In this sketch he is referred to as a man who carries his point as often as any other Republican could carry it in the Indiana Senate. In fact, his optimistic and cheerful demeanor at all times has won for him a host of warm friends, who are glad to see him making a name for himself in the political arena of Indiana. He is rapidly building up a lucrative legal practice in Plainfield and surrounding territory and is universally recognized as a man of keen analytical mind who has a good grasp of the law.

JOHN W. ADER.

The farmer is the bulwark of the nation and investigation has shown that a large majority of our best business and professional men were reared on the farm. Presidents of the United States and governors of our own fair state have often come from the rural districts. George Washington was a farmer and was proud of the fact; Abraham Lincoln was reared on a farm in Spencer county, Indiana. Probably the most popular Democratic governor Indiana ever had was "Blue Jeans" Williams, who prided himself on being a farmer and defeated Benjamin Harrison for governor with the campaign cry that Harrison was a "Blue Stocking;" the Republican party has never had a better governor in this state than that plain, unostentatious farmer, James A. Mount. Verily, the farmers of to-day are the bulwark of the nation, the salt of the earth.

John W. Ader, the son of Jacob and Mary (Springer) Ader, was born March 2, 1863, in Putnam county, Indiana. His father was a native of Putnam county and his mother was born in Schenectady, New York. Jacob Ader was a farmer all his life, as was his father, Solomon, before him. The Aders, it is believed, came originally from Ireland, Solomon coming to this country from Ireland with his parents, and at first settled in Virginia. From Virginia they went to North Carolina, and Solomon, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came from that state to Indiana with his family and all his possessions in a two-wheel cart. Jacob Ader died in 1872 and his widow, some years later, married B. G. Edmundson and is still living at Clayton, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ader were the parentss of three children: Solomon, a farmer in Putnam county; Jacob, who died at the age of two; and John, the immediate subject of this sketch.

John W. Ader was given a good practical education in the common schools of his township and has supplemented his early training with wide reading and close observation of men and events. In other words he is well schooled in the affairs of the business world, an education that teachers and books cannot give. He spent his summers on the farm while he was still of school age and continued to work on the farm until his marriage, at the age of twenty-one. His father had died when he was only nine years of age and this necessitated him taking considerable responsibility on his shoulders at an early age.

Mr. Ader was united in marriage on September 11, 1884 to Jennie Shepherd, a girl with whom he had gone to school. She is the daughter of James P. and Margaret (Weller) Shepherd. She was born and reared near Mr. Ader's home in Putnam county. To this happy union there have been born six children, four of whom are living: Tressie Olive, who is a music teacher, and lives at home; Jacob, who is a student in the School of Medicine, of Indiana University, will receive the degree of Bachelor of Science in June, 1914, and the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1916. He is taking the full seven years' course which is prescribed by the university, the last three years of which is given at Indianapolis. He is a member of the Greek-letter, fraternity of Phi Gamma Delta and the medical fraternity of Phi Rho Sigma; the third child of Mr. and Mrs. Ader is Shirley Florence, who is a graduate of the high school, at Danville, and also of both the scientific and the classic courses of the Central Normal College. During the year 1913-1914 she is teaching English and art in high school at Jonesboro, Indiana; the youngest child is Helen, who is now a sophomore in the Danville high school.

Immediately after his marriage Mr. Ader went on a farm and was successful from the start, and within four years was able to purchase a general store at Groveland, which he managed no less successfully for the next five years. While he was on the farm he became interested in the buying and selling of horses and when he went into the mercantile business he continued to handle horses. In fact the handling of the horses interfered with the operation of his store, so he sold it and engaged in the buying and selling of stock exclusively. He went into partnership with Henry Underwood at Groveland in Putnam county and in the next few years laid the basis of his present substantial holdings. In 1893 he moved to Danville where he continued in the same business and in the next fourteen years became known as one of the most substantial business men of the county. He invested in land and owns some of the finest farming land to be found in the state. He also bought town property in Danville and has recently built one of the most modern and up-to-date houses in the town. In 1908 he was elected sheriff on the Democratic ticket, by a good majority, despite the fact that the county is normally Republican. His administration of the office was so satisfactory that he was re-elected in 1910 without any difficulty; his last term of office expires January 1, 1913. It is safe to say that Hendricks county never had a more efficient and popular sheriff than John Ader.

Mr. Ader is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, at Groveland, and has been a close student of Masonry for many years. He and all the members of his family are devoted and consistent adherents of the Presbyterian church, at Danville, and contribute freely of their means to the support of the various organizations of that denomination. Mr. Ader is a man who makes friends everywhere he goes and probably has as wide an acquaintance throughout the county as any other man. Personally, he is a splendid specimen of manhood, more than six feet in height and tipping the scales around two hundred and fifty. His life has been a busy and useful one and no citizen in the county is held in higher esteem by his fellow citizens than Mr. Ader. His career shows what may be accomplished by the exercise of tireless energy and upright dealings.

JAMES E. HUMSTON.

Whether the elements of success in this life are innate attributes of the individual or whether they are quickened by a process of circumstantial development, it is impossible to clearly determine. Yet the study of a successful life, whatever the field of endeavor, is none the less interesting and profitable by reason of the existence of this same uncertainty. In the life record of James E. Humston, who for many years has been identified with various interests in Hendricks county, Indiana, we find many qualities in his make-up that always gain definite success in any career if properly directed. The splendid success which has crowned his efforts has been directly traceable to the salient points in his character, for he started in life at the bottom of the ladder, which he mounted unaided. He comes of a splendid American family, one that has always been strong for right living and industrious habits, for education and morality, for loyalty to the national government, and for all that contributes to the welfare of a community, and, because of his success in life and his high personal character, he is clearly entitled to specific mention in the annals of his county.

Among the Civil War veterans of Hendricks county, who have not yet answered the final roll call, is James E. Humston, who was born in Lawrence county, Indiana, August 13, 1844, the son of William M. and Lovina E. (Glover) Humston, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. William Humston came to Lawrence county, this state, from Tennessee when a young man and resided in that county until his death, which occurred in 1872, his wife surviving him several years. Mr. and Mrs. William Humston were the parents of seven children, only three of whom are living, W. B., of Bedford, Indiana, Laura H., of Bloomington, Indiana, and James E., the immediate subject of this sketch.

James E. Humston was educated in the old-fashioned schools which were in vogue in his day and spent his boyhood days helping his father on the farm. When a mere lad of seventeen, he enlisted in Company A. Sixtyseventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served for three full years. He took part in the siege of Vicksburg, in the summer of 1863, and participated in seventeen engagements of the war. He was twice taken prisoner, first at Munfordsville, Kentucky, and held at Alexander, Louisiana, later on, having been taken prisoner twenty-seven days after he enlisted. He was never sick a day during his whole service and never missed a single roll call, excepting during time he was in prison. He participated in the battle of Champion's Hill, which history says was one of the bloodiest battles of the whole Civil War, and vet was one of the fortunate few who went through the whole service without being wounded in any way, or having his health impaired in the slightest. After the close of the war he came back to Lawrence county, Indiana, and remained there until 1868, when he went west for a short time. Upon his return to Indiana he was married in 1870 and came to Danville, this county, where he has since lived. As a farmer he has been very successful and has accumulated a comfortable competence for his declining years. While in the active work of directing his farm he raised all of the crops common to this section of the state, and also added to his income by the sale of live stock.

Mr. Humston was married February 24, 1870, to Philista T. Wood, who was born and reared in Hendricks county, and to this union were born five children: Ora Minta, the wife of Joseph M. Miller, of Clermont, Indiana; Everett E., of Beech Grove, Indiana; Lee W., of Indianapolis; Cly R., assistant cashier of the Danville State Bank, and Hallie H., who lives in South Dakota.

Mr. Humston has always taken a prominent part in Republican politics and has served his party on several occasions in conventions. He was elected assessor of Franklin township for three terms, and in 1890 was elected recorder of Hendricks county. He is financially interested in the Danville State Bank and is a director in that institution at the present time. After his term of office as county recorder expired in 1895, he moved back to his farm in Washington township, but did not take a very active part in the management of the farm. He moved back to Danville in 1905, where he has since resided.

Mr. Humston is a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and one of the gradually diminishing number who belong to the Grand Army post at Danville. His record has been one replete with duty well and conscientiously performed in every relation of life. He has been an advocate of wholesome living and cleanliness in politics as well, and has always stood for the highest and best interests of the community in which so many of his active years have been passed and wnich has been honored by his citizenship. The life history of such a man shows what industry, good habits and sound citizenship will accomplish.

WILLIAM H. NICHOLS.

The career of William H. Nichols has been a strenuous and busy one, entitling him to honorable mention among the representative citizens of his day and generation in the county with which his life has been so'long identified. Although his life record is nearing its close by the inevitable fate that awaits all mankind, his influence still pervades the lives of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances throughout the county. It is very probable that he has a larger speaking acquaintance in this county than any other living man, due to the fact that he has been identified with the office of auditor for so many years. As a private citizen, as a soldier in the Civil War and as a public official he has always been true to himself and his fellowmen and the tongue of calumny has never touched him. As a soldier he proved his loyalty to the country he loved so well and in the long marches in all kinds of situations, on the tented fields and amid the flame and smoke of battle, where the rattle of musketry mingled with the deep concussions of the bursting shell, he was always found to be a man who could be depended upon. To such as he the country is under a debt of gratitude which it cannot repay and in centuries yet to come posterity will commemorate their bravery in fitting eulogy and tell their deeds in story and in song.

William H. Nichols, one of the most highly respected citizens of Hendricks county, was born near Danville, February 24, 1841. His parents were Thomas and Patty (Hadley) Nichols, his father being a native of Virginia, who came to this county in 1821. Thomas Nichols settled southeast of Plainfield, where he lived for a short time and then removed to a farm near Danville, and later into Danville, where he lived until his death at the advanced age of ninety-two years. Thomas Nichols was one of the most important men of the county during his time. He was elected sheriff on three different occasions, being one of the first sheriffs ever elected in the county. The Black Hawk war was disturbing the settlers in 1832 and in that year he joined the local militia and went to the front, but did not see any fighting. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he was a charter member of the Danville lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, being initiated at Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nichols were the parents of nine children, only three of whom are living: O. E. Nichols, of Danville; Mrs. Julia A. Harney, who taught for thirty-eight years in Lebanon, Indiana, and W. H. Nichols, the immediate subject of this sketch

W. H. Nichols was reared in Danville and attended the public schools of this place. After finishing the course in the common schools, he became a student at Danville Academy and graduated from that institution. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted for service in Company B, One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served with distinction until the close of his term of enlistment. When a young man he started as a carpenter, learning the trade from his father, but subsequently he entered a printing office, where he worked for two years. His first public office was that of township assessor, which he held for one term. Upon the expiration of his term of office as assessor, he became deputy auditor for three years. The next four years, from 1875 to 1879, were spent in the employ of the Hadley-Homan Banking Company, of Danville. In 1878 he was elected county auditor and served from 1879 to 1883. As auditor he was very efficient and his work in this office has been recognized by every auditor from 1883 down to the present time. He was deputy for a time after 1883 and was then elected for two more terms as auditor, after which he again served as deputy auditor until January, 1012, a period of thirty-six years, and during all that time he rendered the same faithful and efficient service in this important office. It is probable that he holds the record along this line, and that no man in Hendricks county will ever again hold a county office for the same number of years.

Mr. Nichols was married in 1868 to Laura F. Cash, of Danville, and to this union two children were born, both of whom are deceased, and his wife's death occurred in June, 1899.

Mr. Nichols has been a life-long Republican and has always taken an active interest in politics. Fraternally, he is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons, and a charter member of the lodge of Knights of Pythias at Danville. In his religious affiliations he is connected with the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Nichols is a genial and unassuming gentleman who is spending his declining years in the city where he has lived all of his long and busy life. His career has been an eminently busy and useful one and during all of his public career no action of his has ever brought upon him the censure of his fellow citizens. For this reason he has won the admiration and respect of a large circle of friends and admirers.

IOSEPH N. HARGRAVE.

The subject of this review is a representative farmer and stock raiser of Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, and is known as one of the alert, progressive and successful agriculturists of this favored section of the Hoosier state. In his labors he has not permitted himself to follow in the rut in a blind, apathetic way, but has studied and experimented and thus secured the maximum returns from his enterprising efforts, while he has so ordered his course at all times as to command the confidence and regard of the people of the community in which he lives, being a man of honorable business methods and advocating whatever tends to promote the public welfare in any way.

Joseph N. Hargrave, son of Nathaniel H. and Matilda (Powers) Hargrave, was born in Johnson county, Indiana, November 6, 1873. Both his parents were natives of North Carolina and lived there until after the Civil War. Nathaniel Hargrave was in the Confederate service and served throughout the war in a North Carolina regiment. After the close of the war Nathaniel Hargrave and his wife came to Tipton county, Indiana, where they rented a farm, but within a short time moved to Johnson county, in this state, where Joseph N. was born. After a few years' stay in Johnson county the family moved to Tennessee, but in a short time returned to Tipton county, where they lived until about ten years ago. Nathaniel Hargrave then retired from active farm life and is making his home now with his children. Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Hargrave were the parents of eleven children: Susan, wife of Thomas Hendricks; Betty, who married Granville Cunningham; Thomas, who married Ida Gordon; John, who married Ollie Brown; Ida, who became the wife of Frank Winders; Dora, the wife of George Smith; Grover, who married Alda Graham; Arlie and Michael, both deceased; Della, the wife of John Samuels, and Joseph N.

Joseph N. Hargrave attended the public schools of Tipton county and received a good practical education. He then started to work on the home farm and continued to assist his father until he was about twenty-six years of age. He then married and began farming operations for himself and has proved to be a very successful and enterprising agriculturist.

Mr. Hargrave was married November 3, 1898, to Maude Johnson, daughter of Jesse and Phoebe (Law) Johnson, and to this marriage there have been born six children: Inez, Paul, Stella, Beryl, Raymond and Martha. Mrs. Hargrave's parents had a family of three children: Maude, the wife of Mr. Hargrave; Alta, who died when young, and Stella, who married Clem Watson. The paternal grandparents had two children, and the maternal grandparents had six children: Wilson, Joseph, Jesse, James, Sarah and Phoebe.

Mr. Hargrave is a Democrat in politics and takes an interest in the local public affairs of his party. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while religiously, he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and contribute liberally of their means to the support of this denomination. They are firm believers in the efficacy of church work and are very sympathetically inclined toward all movements which seek to better the welfare of the community in which they live.

SETH T. HURON.

The men most influential in promoting the advancement of society and in giving character to the times in which they live are of two classes, to-wit, the men of study and the men of action. Whether we are more indebted for the improvement of the age to the one class or the other is a question of honest difference in opinion; neither class can be spared and both should be encouraged to occupy their several spheres of labor and influence, zealously and without mutual distrust. In the following paragraphs are briefly outlined the leading facts and characteristics in the career of a gentleman who combines in his makeup the elements of the scholar and the energy of the public-spirited man of affairs.

Seth Thomas Huron, son of Benjamin A. and Katharine Huron, was born in Washington township, Hendricks county, Indiana, June 26, 1850. His entire life, except for a few brief trips away, has been spent on the farm where he was born. He received his education in the public schools of his home district, supplemented by a review course in the National Normal School, at Lebanon, Ohio. Afterwards he taught school four years, three of them being in his old home district. He belongs to a family of teachers, his father and all his brothers and sisters having been teachers. One of his sisters, Mrs. A. Kate Gilbert, made it her life work, having taught in district and city schools, and in the normal schools at Ladoga, Danville, Mitchell and Marion, Indiana, and at Central City and Fremont, Nebraska. At the latter place she is still teaching, lacking only a year of half a century engaged in her chosen profession.

August 2, 1876, Mr. Huron was married to Mary Etta Farmer, at Clermont, Indiana. She was the daughter of David and Sibby (Ferree) Farmer, early settlers of this township, coming to Indiana from North Carolina before their marriage. Soon after their marriage they moved to Iowa and Mrs. Huron was born in Jefferson county, in that state, October 19, 1856. When she was but a child her father volunteered in the Thirtieth Iowa Infantry, serving three years in the Civil War. After the close of the war he came again with his family to this county. He remained here until 1876 when he removed to Lucerne, Missouri, where he died, October 9, 1912, at the age of eighty-six years. In politics, Mr. Farmer was a staunch Republican; in religion, a firm Methodist and in every walk of life, a Christian gentleman.

To Mr. and Mrs. Huron have been born six children: Mrs. Mary E. Blair, born May 3, 1877; Frank Paul, born June 16, 1880, died March 16, 1881: Mrs. Irma R. Smith, born April 30, 1882; Flora F., born December 23, 1884, died June 15, 1894; Leroy B., born November 26, 1887, and John T., born October 16, 1890, are yet under the paternal roof and both are progressive farmers. Mr. Huron, with the constant support of his wife who, he says, helped him to attain to all that he has and is, is one among the many successful farmers of Hendricks county. His farm of near two hundred acres, known as Maple Row farm, is situated one-half mile east of Avon on the traction line and is one of the most attractive farms between Indianapolis and Danville. He believes in clover and tile drainage as the best means of conservation of the soil. He is also doing what he can to help introduce alfalfa as one of our most important crops. He feeds what the farm produces, selling the animal rather than the grain. Mr. Huron says he has always been a Republican, but never much of a politician. He served a term on the county council and a couple of terms as justice of the peace, but never sought an office nor asked any man to vote for him. The members of this family have always shown their interest in education and have ever been loyal supporters of the church. The school building is on the corner of the farm and the Methodist church is opposite it. To this church the whole family have given their membership and support in all its activities. Mr. Huron has long served on the official board as trustee and steward, and for a dozen years was superintendent of its Sunday school and both he and his wife and their children have been among its teachers and its constant attendants.

A family sketch for a county history should reach farther back from the immediate family and tell something of its ancestry. This is especially true if these ancestors had much to do in the early beginning of said history and if, throughout long lives lived in the community, they possessed such sterling qualities as to give their full measure of help in starting, sustaining and preserving measures for the common good of such community, and such qualities as have influenced and will continue to influence the community to make it a good and desirable place in which to live. It is therefore proper that this sketch include something of an older, a pioneer family.

Benjamin A. Huron, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Warren county, Ohio, December 31, 1811. He came to Hendricks county in 1832 and from the government entered the same year the land now owned by the son. He spent the remainder of his life on this farm. In December, 1835, he married Katharine Harding, who came here from Kentucky with her parents. They began at once the making of a farm and a home to take the place of a dense forest. A two-room log cabin was erected in a small clearing near the center of the tract. These first years were years of privation and hardship. The heavy timber was cut down and burned in huge log-heaps, the wife helping to pick and burn the brush as well as care for the house. In addition she helped pull, break, swingle, hackle, spin and weave flax and also spin and weave the wool from a few sheep and thus, in a measure, supply the needs of the family. The husband spent the summers in the clearing and the field, producing the small amount of grain required for their own use and at one time, when a small surplus remained, he drove, in his farm wagon, to Madison, a hundred miles away, where he exchanged it for a barrel of salt and a few groceries and in a week or so was again safe at home. He also marketed hogs at Madison, driving them the distance on foot. In the early forties a settlement having formed and a school being needed, Mr. Huron gave the ground for a school and most of the timber for a frame building and for a number of years he taught school in this building each winter. Again in 1858 he gave a new school-house site where a one-room house answered the needs until 1879 when a four-room graded school building was erected and five years later rebuilt after a fire. This fourth building still stands, so that up to the present time the district school, the "hope of the country," has never left the Huron farm.

On this farm Benjamin and Katharine Huron together toiled for many years. They lived to see the wilderness transformed into a beautiful farm on which they reared a large family of children. Their eldest died in infancy, but nine others came to bless their home, and these nine yet live, though widely scattered. The sum of their combined ages is more than six hundred years. The eldest, George A., is police judge of Topeka, Kansas, and is seventy-six years old. Frank H. is a physician of Danville and Willis B., a physician of Tipton, Indiana. Mrs. Lu A. Bennett and Miss Jennie Huron live at Clearwater, Florida. Mrs. Esther A. Kelsey lives at Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. A. Kate Gilbert, at Fremont, Nebraska; Mrs. Marv E. Ragan, at Plainfield, Indiana, and S. T., the only farmer of the family, lives on the old home farm. The two oldest sons served in the army during the Civil War, George in the Seventh and Frank three months in the Seventh and three years in the Seventieth Indiana Infantry. Frank answered the first call for troops and was among the first in the field. In the three years service he was color bearer of the Seventieth and at one time the flagstaff was shot almost in two just just above his head. Both brothers were in many hard fought battles, although neither was wounded. In politics the family have been Republican; the father was at first a Whig, but when the Republican party was organized in 1856 he at once joined it and remained with it during life. He served his township several terms as trustee and one term as assessor. February 23, 1888, he was killed by a train, on the Big Four Railroad, at the age of seventy-six years. The mother remained until August 30, 1002, when she died at the age of eighty-seven years. These two pioneers left their impress on the community where they lived so long and contributed their full share in making it the quiet and law-abiding place it is to-day.

EDWIN MORTON KURTZ.

Though several years have passed since the subject of this sketch was transferred from the life militant to the life triumphant, he is still favorably remembered by many of the older residents of Hendricks county, where for many years he was regarded as one of the leading business men of the county. Because of his many excellent personal qualities and the splendid and definite influence which his life shed over the community in which he lived so long and which he labored so earnestly to upbuild in any way within his power, it is particularly consonant that specific mention should be made of him in a work containing mention of the representative citizens of the community in a past generation. A man of high moral character, unimpeachable integrity, persistent industry and excellent business judgment, he stood "four square to every wind that blew," and throughout the locality where he lived he occupied an enviable position among his fellowmen, among whom he was universally esteemed.

The late Edwin Morton Kurtz was born in 1856 in Putnam county, Indiana, and died December 9, 1909. He was the son of Jacob F. and Eliza (Cassity) Kurtz, both of whom were also natives of Putnam county, Indiana. Jacob Kurtz was born in 1833 and was the son of Jacob and Allutia Kurtz, who emigrated from Kentucky to Putnam county in 1828. The father of Edwin M. Kurtz was reared as a farmer and followed this occupation all his life. After his marriage he lived with his parents until their death, caring for them in their old age. His father was an invalid for more than twenty years and walked on crutches all that time. He died at the age of eighty-three years. The mother was active until about one year before her death, but during the latter period she was helpless as a little child, and her death occurred at the age of eighty-two.

After the death of his father and mother Jacob F. Kurtz became the owner of the old home farm, and there he lived until 1878. He was married in March, 1855, to Eliza Cassity, who was born November 19, 1838, the daughter of David H. and Susan Cassity. Her parents came from Kentucky, settling in Putnam county, this state, in the early history of that county. In 1882 Jacob F. Kurtz purchased a farm in the northwestern part of Marion township, this county, and there he remained until his death, in 1899. He was a life-long Republican and he and all the members of his family were faithful members of the Presbyterian church. His wife is still living in Hendricks county.

Edwin M. Kurtz was reared on a farm in Putnam county, and after receiving a common school education in the district schools of that county his parents sent him to Lincoln University, at Lincoln, Illinois, where he received a college education. He came with his parents to Marion township, Hendricks county, in 1882, and two years later, on September 18, 1884, was married to Mary Florence Summers, who was born in Putnam county, the daughter of William C. and Mary (Lake) Summers. Her mother was born in 1833, on land now occupied by the city of Indianapolis, her father being Elisha Lake, a native of New Jersey. William C. Summers, father of Mrs. Kurtz, was born in 1830 near Bowling Green, Kentucky, and when about nine years of age came with his parents to Putnam county, Indiana, where he grew to maturity, and followed the vocation of a farmer all his life. In 1872 Mr. Summers moved to Kansas, locating in Rice county, that state, and there he remained the rest of his life, his death occurring in 1898. His wife is still living there at the advanced age of eighty-one years.

Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz lived in Hendricks county for one year after their marriage and then moved to Rice county, Kansas, where they reamined for two years, when they returned to Hendricks county because of the failing health of Mr. Kurtz's father and the fact that there was no one to manage the home farm. Mr. Kurtz continued to live at the old place until the death of Mr. Kurtz in 1909. They were the parents of six children: Blanche is the wife of Harry Page, who lives west of New Maysville, Putnam county, and they have four children, Maynard, Gerald, Kathryn and Muriel: Osie is the wife of Earl Maston, of Coatesville, and they have two children. Roy and Jeannette: the other four children, Lora, Lyell, Herschel and Kve, are still with their mother at home. The year before Mr. Kurtz's death he built a fine, large modern home on his farm, in which Mrs. Kurtz and the four voungest children are now living. Mr. Kurtz was a very successful farmer and at his death left a highly improved farm of two hundred and ten acres, which is one of the most productive farms in the county. He was an excellent citizen in every respect, a good neighbor, kind, unselfish, reliable, and a man whose integrity was never questioned. His life was such that his children and grandchildren will cherish his name and honor his memory.

CHARLES FRANKLIN BENBOW.

The following is a brief sketch of the life of one who, by close attention to business, has achieved marked success in the world's affairs and risen to an honorable position among the enterprising men of the county with which his interests are identified. It is a plain record, rendered remarkable by no strange or mysterious adventure, no wonderful and lucky accident and no tragic situation. Mr. Benbow is one of those estimable characters whose integrity and strong personality must force them into an admirable notoriety, which their modesty never seeks, who command the respect of their contemporaries and their posterity and leave the impress of their individuality upon the age in which they live.

Charles Franklin Benbow, of Clay township, was born in the county in which he has spent his entire life on November 2, 1867. He is the son of Harvey R. and Lydia (Atkins) Benbow, his father being a native of this county, and his mother of Kentucky. Harvey R. Benbow served his country nobly and well in the dark days of the Civil War and after returning home worked for his father on the home farm for about two years. He then married and engaged in farming on forty acres which his father gave him. To Mr. and Mrs. Harvey R. Benbow were born two children, Charles Franklin and Oscar, who married Daisy Blunk. of Clay township.

Charles F. Benbow was given the best common school education which his home township afforded, attending school in the Dover school district. He spent his summer vacations working on his father's farm, and after finishing his educational training he continued to work with his father until his marriage. About three years after he purchased seventy acres of land, part of which is now included in the present farm where he is living. He has been uniformly successful in all of his transactions and has improved his place in the way of buildings, fencing, drainage, etc., until it presents a very attractive appearance. He has inaugurated a scientific system of crop rotation which keeps the soil of his farm up to the highest point of productivity.

On December 18, 1894, Mr. Benbow was married to Nora Whicker, the daughter of Allen and Amanda J. (West) Whicker, and to this union there has been born one child, Leland W., who is still under the parental roof. Allen Whicker, the father of Mrs. Benbow, was a native of North Carolina and came to this state when a small lad with his parents. They located in Franklin township, this county, and in that township he received his education. He followed the occupations of a farmer all his life, and to him and his wife were born eleven children: Mary, who became the wife of John Bundy; George, deceased; Sinia, the wife of Louis Beasley; Simon, who married Nora Wright; Dennis married Gertrude Mason; Otto, who married Martha Schneider; Effie, deceased; Perman, deceased; Nora, the wife of Mr. Benbow and two who died in infancy. Mrs. Benbow's grandparents were Frederick and Elizabeth (Cosmer) Whicker. Mrs. Benbow's mother died April 1, 1910.

The grandparents of Mr. Benbow were Elam and Lydia (Harvey) Benbow. Elam Benbow was a native of North Carolina and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, when a young man and here he married. To this union were born five children: Thirza, Nancy, Sarah, Rhoda and Harvey, the father of Charles F. Benbow. Thirza, deceased, married Woodson Bryant, also deceased; Nancy married Eli Duffey; Sarah married William Hunt, who is mentioned specifically elsewhere in this volume; Rhoda married George Tincher.

Mr. Benbow has been a life-long Republican, but has never felt any inclination to take an active part in politics, his agricultural interests having required his attention to such an extent that he has left the political game to others. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church, at Amo, and are firm believers in the efficacy of church life in its relation to the good of the community. Mr. Benbow was treasurer of the church for a period of ten years. He is a man who is vitally interested in the educational, moral and civic advancement of his community and takes every opportunity to further every movement looking toward its welfare.

ENOCH HARLAN.

It is a pleasure to investigate the career of a successful, self-made man. Peculiar honor attaches to that individual who, beginning the great struggle of life alone and unaided, gradually overcomes unfavorable environment, removes one by one the obstacles from the pathway of success and by the master strokes of his own force and vitality succeeds in forging his way to the front and winning for himself a competency and a position of esteem and influence among his fellowmen. Such is the record of the popular citizen of Clay township to a brief synopsis of whose life and character the following pages are devoted.

Enoch Harlan, a gallant veteran of the Civil War and a prominent farmer in Hendricks county, Indiana, for three score and ten years, was born in this county, October 8, 1838. He is a son of Enoch and Rachel (Osborne) Harlan, both natives of North Carolina. Enoch Harlan, Sr., spent the most of his life in the latter state, coming to Indiana after his marriage and locating in Franklin township, where he followed the vocation of a farmer. He had always been engaged in this calling with the exception of a short time when he worked in a gold mine in North Carolina. Enoch Harlan, Sr., and his wife were the parents of eight children: Lydia, who died in 1838; John, who married Polly McAninch, and after her death, Araminta McAninch; Stephen, who married Dosia A. Johnson; Malinda, who married Jackson Ally; Mariam, who became the wife of William Holsław; Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Bottorff; Jesse, who married Jemima Robinson; Rachel, who married Madison Wright, and Enoch, the immediate subject of this sketch.

Enoch Harlan, Jr., received all of his education in the subscription schools of his home township, and when a mere lad engaged in the carpenter trade with his brother. He was following that vocation when the Civil War broke out and he immediately forsook the carpenter's bench for the battle-field and first enlisted in Company C of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served for three months. At the expiration of his first enlistment he re-enlisted in the One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry and served for about nine months, and upon the expiration of this enlistment he was enrolled for the third time with Company H, of the Eleventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, with which command he served until the close of the war. His Civil War record was a remarkable one and yet with his modesty it is difficult to get him to say anything about it.

After his return from the Civil War Mr. Harlan was married to Susanna E. Phillips, the daughter of Samuel and Rachel Phillips, and to this union were born six children, two of whom died in infancy and one, Alvin, who died at the age of five. The other three are unmarried and are all under the parental roof: Eva, Ella and Albert.

The grandparents of Mr. Harlan reared a large family of twelve children: Hiram, who married Sallie Hodson; Enoch, the father of the subject of this sketch: John, who married Rehecca Hill; Nathan, who married Rachel Jordan; Ahi and William, who died in infancy; Eleazer, who married Rehecca Hodson; Eli; Alice, who became the wife of John Hadley; Carter, who married Nancy Tates; Mary and Jesse, who married Elizabeth Borders. Enoch Harlan, Sr., died July 8, 1840, and his wife on March 14, 1871. The wife of Enoch Harlan, Jr., died November 20, 1903.

Mr. Harlan has been a life-long Republican and has been old enough to cast his vote for every Republican president from 1860 until the present time. He has never been a seeker for any political office, being content to devote all of his time and energy to his agricultural interests. He is and has been for many years a member of the Friends church, and has always been actively interested in every movement which was inaugurated by his denomination. He is still hale and hearty despite his years and enjoys life as befits a man who has lived a clean and wholesome life for so many years. His life has been so conducted that he has won the unbounded admiration of all of those with whom he has been associated, and because of his genial personality he is a welcome guest in any home in his community.

JOHN JAY CRITTENDEN CLAY.

One of the largest and most influential families in Hendricks county, Indiana, is the Clay family. They have traced their ancestry back to the Highland clans of Scotland, and from thence to Virginia, Kentucky and Indiana. Two of the most conspicuous members of this family were Henry Clay and Cassius M. Clay of Kentucky. Many members of this family are scattered throughout the central and western states of this country, and one of the most prominent branches of the family in the state is found in this county. Wherever they have been found, they are always numbered among the representative citizens of their respective communities.

John Jay Crittenden Clay was born December 17, 1853, in Eel River township, in this county, the son of James H, and Susan (Fleece) Clay, his father a native of Bourbon county, Kentucky, his birth having occurred there January 20, 1819. James H. Clav was the son of Littleberry and Arabella (McCoun) Clay, and he was married July 29, 1841, to Susan Fleece, his marriage taking place shortly after his father and wife arrived in this county. They came to Indiana about 1840, settling in the southern part of Eel River township where Littleberry Clay bought a section of land. A few years later he went to Missouri, but James remained in this county. Susan Fleece was born in Boyle county, Kentucky, near Danville, and came here with her parents, Charles Fleece and wife, in the early history of the county, Her parents settled west of North Salem near Eel River where they entered government land when that part of the county was a total wilderness. James H. Clay followed the vocation of a farmer for the remainder of his life and was a resident of this place about forty years, and here his death occurred. At one time he owned nearly a section of land, but before his death he divided it among his children, nine of whom grew to maturity: Mrs. Arabella Waters; Mrs. Mary Catherine Rose; Samuel C., of Lebanon; Mrs. Sallie Rogers, of Amo; James A., of Indianapolis; John J. C., whose history is here delineated; Nicholas, deceased; Arthur E., of Indianapolis, and Joseph F., living about six miles southwest of North Salem; one daughter, Lillie, died in infancy.

John J. C. Clay grew to manhood on his father's farm and received such education as was afforded by his home schools. When he was about eighteen years of age he learned the carpenter's trade and followed this vocation for the next four years. However, farming offered better opportunities for financial returns and he decided to engage in agricultural pursuits. Early in his career he turned his attention to the buying, feeding and breeding of live stock, and has been one of the largest shippers in the county. He has gradually added to his landed possessions until he is now the owner of over fifteen hundred acres of land in the northwestern part of Hendricks county and the northwestern part of Putnam county.

Early in life Mr. Clay was married to Mattie I. Walker. In fact, he was only a youth of nineteen when he assumed the responsibilities of married life. Mrs. Clay was reared in Eel River township, the daughter of David and Mary Walker. Her father came to this state from North Carolina. One son was born to the first marriage of Mr. Clay, Charles C., who is now living in North Salem. Mr. Clay's first wife died in 1875, and in 1881 he was married to Mary E. Ballard, the daughter of George and Margaret (Polk) Ballard. Margaret Polk was born in Wayne county. Indiana, on May 9, 1831, and came to Marion county in this state in childhood with her parents. She was married June 12, 1849, to George Ballard, and her death occurred November 25, 1808. George Ballard was born in Scott county, Indiana, January 14, 1822, and moved to Marion county in 1834, where he lived most of the remainder of his life, following the trade of a carpenter. He lived a part of the time in the city of Indianapolis, but spent his declining years at North Salem, where his death occurred in 1012. He and his wife were both members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. and Mrs. Clay have two children living and one deceased: Edna Coral, born in 1882, is the wife of Taylor Owen, and lives in North Salen; James Henry, born in 1885, married Ina Sparks, and is a farmer in this township.

Mr. Clay and his wife are both loyal and earnest members of the Christian church, and are zealous in the support of the various organizations of that denomination. He has spent most of his life in North Salem, from which point he ships a large amount of live stock annually. Personally, Mr. Clay is a man of unblemished reputation and the strictest integrity, and his private life has always been above reproach. He is a vigorous, as well as an independent thinker and has the courage of his convictions upon all subjects which he investigates. He is essentially cosmopolitian in his ideas, a man of the people and a fine type of the strong American manhood which commands the respect of all classes by reason of genuine worth. Thus he has so impressed his individuality upon the community as to win the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens and become influential in leading them to better things.

W. J. HOADLEY, M. D.

The present age is essentially utilitarian and the life of every successful man carries a lesson which, told in contemporary narrative, is productive of much good in shaping the destiny of others. There is, therefore, a due measure of satisfaction in presenting, even in brief resume, the life and achievements of such men, and in preparing the following history of the scholarly physician whose name appears above it is with the hope that it may prove not only interesting and instructive, but also serve as an incentive to those who contemplate making the medical profession their life work.

Dr. W. J. Hoadley, the oldest physician in Hendricks county, was born March 2, 1831, in Chatham county, North Carolina. His parents, Abram and Sophia (Staley) Hoadley, came to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1837. where they lived the remainder of their lives. Abram Hoadley was born in Bramford, Connecticut, in 1793, and began the practice of medicine in Chatham county. North Carolina, as a young man. His wife was a native of Randolph county, that state. After Dr. Abram Hoadley came to Hendricks county, Indiana, he practiced medicine in this and adjoining counties and was one of the best known men in Hendricks county at the time of his death in 1865. When he and his family came from North Carolina to this state. they made the long trip in a wagon and carriage, and such was the condition of the roads at that time that it took them over six weeks to make the journey. The widow of Dr. Abram Hoadley died in 1808, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. Dr. Abram Hoadley and wife were the parents of twelve children, only three of whom are now living, Abram Hoadley, who lives on the old homestead farm in Washington township, this county; Mrs. Alvira Hornaday, who is the oldest of the family and lives with her children in this county, and Dr. W. J. Hoadley, the immediate subject of this review.

Doctor W. J. Hoadley was only six years of age when his parents made the overland trip from North Carolina to Indiana. He received his primary education in his home township schools and then spent two years in Asbury University. He then took up the study of medicine and, as was the custom in those days, read in the office of his father. Although he did not graduate from the Medical College of Ohio until 1866, he had practiced medicine for nine years before that time at Pittsboro, this county. In 1866, immediately after his graduation, he opened offices in Danville and has practiced there continuously, although he is now practically retired from the active duties of his profession. He is now, and has been for the past eighteen years, secretary of the Hendricks county board of health.

W. J. HOADLEY, M. D.

Doctor Hoadley was married on April 11, 1861, to Louisa F. Shirley, the daughter of James and Demirah Shirley, a well known family of Hendricks county, and to his marriage there were born four children: Willis F., who lives in central California; Eva, the wife of Nathan J. Thompson, of this county; Harry H., who also is a resident of California; Anna May, deceased, who was the wife of Benjamin Lingenfelter. Doctor Hoadley's wife has been dead for about twenty years.

For more than eighteen years after the Civil War, Doctor Hoadley was pension examiner and was known for his absolute honesty in the conduct of this office. He bore an unblemished reputation for honesty and high integrity. While active in the practice he was wholly devoted to his profession and no man stands higher in the community than the venerable Doctor Hoadley. He is the oldest physician in the county, both as to years and as to length of service. His health is excellent for a man of his age and his physical and mental powers are intact after a busy life of over eighty-three years. He has a hopeful disposition and is of an optimistic nature and has always made it a practice to look for the silver lining on every cloud which has swept across his horizon. He is a stanch member of the Christian church and has been one of its elders for more than twenty-five years. For many years he was a Mason, but now has a demit from the local lodge at Danville.

Doctor Hoadley's father came of English ancestry, while his mother was of German descent. The Hoadleys trace their lineage back to the year 1600, when there was a man by the name of Hoadle, who reared four sons, who married and in turn reared large families of their own. Doctor Hoadley is the sixth generation from this Hoadle of 1600. There are now about eighteen hundred Hoadleys in the United States alone.

Doctor Hoadley is a remarkably strong and active man for one who has lived fourscore and three years, with a self-governed body and a rund of sterling quality. With a generous nature, he has been in the forefront among the good men of this county, leading the wonderful development that has marked Hendricks county the past seven decades. Few men here have done longer or equal service in the progress of this community.

LINCOLN A. MASTEN.

There is no calling, however humble, in which enterprise and industry, coupled with a well directed purpose, will not be productive of some measure of success, and in the pursuit of agriculture the qualities mentioned are quite essential. Among the well known and highly respected farmers of Hendricks county who have attained to a definite degree of success in their line and who at the same time have greatly benefited the community in which they have lived, is the gentleman to a review of whose career we now direct the reader's attention.

Lincoln A. Masten, the proprietor of a one-hundred-ten-acre farm in Clay township, Hendricks county, was born in this county, September 21, 1860, the son of William and Delphinia (Johnson) Masten. His father was a native of North Carolina, his birth having occurred there in 1832, while his mother was a native of Indiana, having been born here in 1833. When a small child, William Masten was brought from North Carolina to Indiana by his parents, and his father entered land from the government, south of Amo, Franklin township, and here William Masten spent his boyhood and was married. After his marriage his father gave him a small farm to start with, and being a farmer of more than ordinary ability he gradually added to his possessions. However, he did not always reside in this county. For some years he lived in Morgan county, Indiana, and for three years he farmed in the state of Kansas, but the love for his home state drew him back and he died in Greencastle, where he spent the last twenty-six years of his life, dying March 13, 1910.

William Masten was married three times, first to Janie Jackson, to which union were born three children, namely: Ursula Ann, who became the wife of Simon Allen, and they have three sons; Ellwood, who is married and is the father of a son and a daughter; Nathan, deceased, married Dora Cook, of Indianapolis, and they had a son, Otis. For his second wife William Masten married Delphinia Johnson, and to them were born four children, namely: Charles, who married Ida Ingold; Fred, who died in 1907; Rosella, who married Lewis Phillips, and Lincoln, the immediate subject of this sketch. Mr. Masten's third wife was Elizabeth Wells, of Greencastle, Indiana, who died on February 3, 1914, there being no issue to this union. The subject's mother had the following brothers and sisters: Snyder, who married Patsy Shoemaker; Euphemia Curtis; Sarah Shields; Maria Wilhite; Wesley was married twice, first to Mary Garrison and second to Sallie Bryant; Belinda McClelland, and Jesse, who married a Miss Seaton.

Lincoln Masten attended school in Morgan county, and when his parents went to Kansas he spent three years in the public schools of that state, and upon their return to Hendricks county he finished his education in the district schools of this county, after which he worked on the farm with his father until his marriage, when he purchased forty acres of land and started farming for himself. Being a man of good sound judgment and a farmer of up-to-date methods, he has been uniformly successful in all his transactions and to-day is the owner of one hundred ten acres of fine farming land in Clay township. He has his farm well improved and has a fine home and good barns and other outbuildings which add not a little to the value and attractiveness of his home.

Lincoln A. Masten was married to Rosa Sanders, the daughter of Oliver S. and Saluda (Shirley) Sanders, and to this union there have been born three children; Clarence H., Blanche G. and Sanders W. Clarence married Mary Derr, daughter of John Derr; Blanche married Thomas Wolfrom, and has one son. Maynard. The paternal grandparents of Mr. Masten reared a family of ten children, Eli, Nathan, Hanna, Mathias, Cyrus, William, Manuel, John, Reuben and David, Mrs. Masten was one of two children born to Oliver and Saluda Sanders, her sister being Minnie. Minnie married Louis Wilcox, of Los Angeles. The maternal grandparents were Aaron and Abigail Sanders and they had a family of ten children. Abraham, William, Jesse, Oliver, Ebenezer, Mary Ann, Lucinda, Emmeline, Martha and Jane. Mrs. Masten's mother's parents were Richard and Jerusha Shirley, and to them were born eleven children, Absalom, Minerya, Jennie, William, Mary Ann, Ruth, Saluda, Winerd, Stillwell, John and Benton. Absalom died at the age of twenty-two; Minerva married Joseph Scott: Jennie married James Chenoweth; William died at the age of nineteen: Mary Ann married Samuel Brazell; Ruth died at the age of twenty-four; Saluda is the mother of Mrs. Masten; Winerd died in infancy; Stillwell married Jennie Logan; John; Benton died in infancy.

Mr. Masten has been a life-long Republican and has been very much interested in politics, taking an active part in local elections. However, he is not a strict partisan, but reserves the right to vote for the best men in local affairs, regardless of political affiliations. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Methodist Episcopal church of Amo. Mr. Masten has been interested in all the civic and moral movements of the community and casts his influence in the scale in favor of all worthy causes.

QUINCY ADAMS DAVIS.

Among the earliest settlers of Hendricks county, the Davis family occupy a prominent and conspicuous part. From 1835 down to the present time they have been important factors in the material and civic advancement of the county. The Davis family, of Hendricks county, trace their ancestors back to one Josiah Davis, who, according to the records, was born about the year 1665 in Wales. The family history has recorded only one son of Josiah Davis, who crossed the Atlantic ocean about the year 1771, stopping first in Pennsylvania, thence, after a residence there of some years. he moved to Virginia and later settled near Mount Sterling, the county seat of Montgomery county, Kentucky. He was married four times and was the father of twelve children in all, six sons and six daughters. Two of these sons. Enoch and Nathan, with their families, were among the early settlers of Eel River township, in this county, and from these two sons was sprung a numerous progeny, whose descendants are now residents of Tennessee, Texas, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado, California, Washington, Oregon and probably other states.

Nathan Davis, who has been mentioned, was born in Kentucky sometime during the latter part of the eighteenth century, and married Nancy Kidd, a native of that state — After several children were born in Kentucky, Nathan, with his family, and his brother Enoch and his family, came to Hendricks county and settled in Eel River township. Nathan settled east of North Salem, bought part of his land from the government, and became the owner of more land from time to time until at his death he owned about five hundred acres of land. Nathan Davis and wife were the parents of nine children: John; Walter, the father of Quincy A., whose history is herein presented; Quincy, William, Frank, Marion, Mrs. Louisa Hunt, Mrs. John Fleece, Mrs. Catherine Tucker and Mrs. Susan Ann Riner.

Walter Davis, the father of Quincy A., was born December 12, 1822, near Mount Sterling, in Montgomery county, Kentucky, and was twelve years of age when his parents came to Hendricks county. Here he grew to manhood and here he married Mary Margaret Speers, who was born near Danville, Kentucky, and came here about 1835 with her parents, John and Martha (Mitchell) Speers. They settled about one and a half miles northeast of North Salem, where John Speers bought land and became a large owner in several townships in Hendricks and Boone counties. He bought lowland at a time when others were choosing the highlands, believing the lowland would eventually become the most profitable. To Walter Davis by his first wife were born eight children: John, Quincy A., Lafayette, Robert, Charles (the last two being deceased), Martha E., Nancy A. and Frances A. The first wife of Walter Davis died June 16, 1861, and he then married Mary A. Scott, of Montgomery county, Kentucky. To this second marriage were born six children: Walter; Lorenzo; Thomas Clarence; Edgar L.; Betty L., who died at the age of five, and Mrs. Myrtle D. Hendricks, the wife of Edgar Hendricks, of Jamestown, Boone county. The second wife of Walter Davis died in the summer of 1873 and two years later he married Mrs. Matilda (Free) South, of Danville. Walter Davis died January 11, 1893. in his seventieth year, a man highly respected and honored by everyone because of his upright and unostentations life. He was a member of the Methodist church from his childhood and so conductd his life that he was beloved by everyone who knew him.

Quincy A. Davis grew up on his father's farm and after completing his common school education in the district schools he attended Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, at Indianapolis, for eight terms, between the years of 1867 and 1870. In early manhood he clerked in a gas fitting and plumbing establishment in Indianapolis for three years and a half and also taught school for eight terms, which included one year at North Salem, near his home. In 1876 he moved to the farm east of North Salem where he has since resided. He is a man of excellent judicial ability and has the entire confidence of the community. He has served as administrator of a large number of estates, a fact which testifies to the confidence which the people of his community have in him. For thirty years he has been a farmer and has kept pace with modern movements in agriculture, so that his farm today presents a very attractive appearance.

Mr. Davis was married February 8, 1872, to Betty (Linn) Scott, who was born near Mount Sterling, Kentucky, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Scott. Her parents came to this county early in its history and lived here to a good old age. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have three children living and one deceased: Sylvan B. died at the age of three; Alden has taken the civil service examination for railway mail clerk, having passed one examination, another to be taken; he married Nora Higgins and has two children; Charles is in the blacksmith business at North Salem and Mary, who is still at home with her parents and who teaches music, having three large classes.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis belong to the Church of Christ at North Salem, and have lived true Christian lives through all of their career. Mr. Davis is a kind and courteous person, a worthy follower of Him who has been called the "world's first gentleman."

SILAS M. PEARSON.

The farmer is the bulwark of the nation and investigation has shown that a majority of our best business men, of our best lawyers, of our best men of every vocation of life, have been raised on the farm. George Washington was a farmer and was proud of the fact; Abraham Lincoln was reared on a farm in the southern part of our own state. Probably the most popular Democratic governor this state ever had was "Blue Jeans" Williams, who prided himself on being nothing but a farmer. The Republican party never had a better governor than that plain, unostentations farmer, James A. Mount. Verily, the farmer is the bulwark of the nation, the salt of the earth. To be a farmer today is to be a king among men.

Silas M. Pearson, the son of Henry and Anne (Spears) Pearson, was born in 1840, in Miami county, near Troy, Ohio. Henry Pearson was born in South Carolina in 1799 and came to Ohio with his parents when he was about twelve years of age or younger. In 1858 he came to Hendricks county, Indiana, where he lived the life of a farmer and where his death occurred in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pearson were the parents of ten children: Rebecca, deceased; Sidney, deceased; Eunice, deceased; William, deceased at the age of two years; Robert, deceased; Hiram, deceased; Silas M.; John, deceased; Henry, of Grant county, and one child who died in infancy.

Silas M. Pearson received his education in Ohio, but has supplemented the meager education which he received in the public schools with continuous reading all his life. He was married to Melissa J. Little, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Green) Little. Samuel Little was a native of Washington county, Indiana, and came to Hendricks county with his father, Alexander Little, when he was a small boy. Alexander Little was in the Legislature in 1822 when the present capital of the state received its name. He served in the first, second, eleventh, twelfth and fourteenth sessions of the Legislature. Alexander Little died in 1903 and his wife in 1883. To Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Little were born nine children: Mrs. Sarah Crawford; Elizabeth; Joseph, deceased; Alexander, deceased; Mary Ann, deceased; Robert; one who died in infancy; Melissa and Thomas. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson are the parents of seven children, five of whom are living: Edward; John, deceased; Mrs. Laura Esarey, whose husband is a member of the history department of Indiana University: Mrs. Cora Gard; Ada, deceased at four years; Mrs. Pearl Lamy and Harry.

When the Civil War broke out, in the spring of 1861, Mr. Pearson, then a young man of twenty-one years, was seized with the same patriotic fervor which caused two hundred thousand of Indiana's native sons to go to the front, and as soon as an opportunity offered itself he enlisted for the service. He was mustered in during August, 1861, in Company I, of the Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. His company was attached to the Army of the Cumberland, and was in the field three years and three months. He saw hard service in the battle of Fort Donelson and many other battles. At the battle of Shiloh Mr. Pearson had the good fortune to escape unharmed, although the men on both sides of him were shot. He was not so lucky in the battle of Champion's Hill, for on this bloody battlefield, on May 16, 1863, he was twice wounded and then taken prisoner. He lay on the battle field of Champion's Hill for twenty-four days and for eight days was without food of any kind. He remained a prisoner until the 30th of September, 1863, when he was paroled and then transferred to Company Ninety-one of the Veteran Reserve Corps, and assigned to the quartermaster's office, at Madison, Indiana, where he remained until the end of his enlistment, being mustered out at Indianapolis in 1864. Immediately after being mustered out Mr. Pearson returned to his home county and settled down on the homestead farm south of Danville, where he remained until his marriage, two years later. He lived on various farms in the immediate neighborhood and then moved to Danville, where he remained for five years. In 1898 he moved to his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres, where he is still active and able to manage his farm in a very efficient manner. He raises all the crops common to this section of the country and in addition gives considerable attention to the breeding of livestock. As a farmer he has been very successful, because he has kept pace with modern methods of agriculture.

Mr. Pearson has been a member of the Free and Accepted Masons for fifty years, having been initiated at Madison in this state, during the last years of the war. In politics, he has been a Republican since reaching his majority, but in 1912 allied himself with the Progressive party, feeling that the old-line Republicans were not conducting the affairs of the nation as they should. He keeps well informed on all the current questions of the day and is able to discuss intelligently the political issues which are before the people. Although he has always been very much interested in politics, he has never held any public offices, being content to devote all of his energies to the management of his agricultural interests. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Presbyterian church of Danville and contribute of their means to its support. Mr. Pearson is a keen, alert and progressive farmer in every sense of the word. He has always been a great reader and this has made him an entertaining conversationalist. He is a quiet man, who attends strictly to his own affairs, a man of strict integrity and high ideals, who has never failed to ally himself with all enterprises which have for their object the improvement and betterment of the conditions in the community in which he lives.

JULIAN D. HOGATE.

It is universally conceded that there are three factors which are more potent than all others in the advancement of civilization, the pulpit, the platform and the press. Of these three the press reaches places and conditions which the other two are never able to touch. Public opinion as voiced by the newspapers has as much influence in molding legislation, advancing reforms and eliminating corrupt politics as all other agencies put together. A good newspaper, one which stands for the best interests of the community, is a blessing and the good that it can do is incalculable. It is the paper of the town which often is the only means of driving graft out of city affairs and placing the government of the city in the hands of the best class of citizens. The editor of a good newspaper touches the daily life of the community on every side and the editor who does his work honestly, fearlessly and conscientiously deserves the praise of the community in which he lives. Such a man is the subject of this brief review.

Julian D. Hogate, the editor and proprietor of the Hendricks County Republican, was born in Danville, Indiana, October 14, 1868. His parents were Charles F. and Sarah E. (DePew) Hogate, his father being a native of Salem county. New Jersey, where his birth occurred June 7, 1838. He came to Indiana when he was nineteen years of age and settled in Danville, where he was employed as a clerk until the opening of the Civil War, when he enlisted first in the Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry for the three-months service and later, upon the expiration of his enlistment, he reenlisted in the One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry as second lieutenant of Company B. He served to the end of the war with honor, participating in some of the fiercest battles of that great struggle. He was a man of marked ability and popularity and in 1864 was elected on the Republican ticket to the Legislature from Hendricks county. He was one of the organizers of the Meridian National Bank, of Indianapolis, of which he was cashier until 1860, when he was appointed internal revenue collector for the sixth district of Indiana. He held this position until his death, which occurred March 16, 1874. Charles F. Hogate was twice married, his first wife being Julia A. DePew and his second wife Sarah E. De-Pew, both being daughters of Ieremiah and Ann I. DePew. To the second union were born two children, Clair, deceased, and Julian D., the immediate subject of this sketch. Charles F. Hogate was a Methodist in his religious affiliations and always took a deep and abiding interest in the affairs of his church. In the Republican party he was for years a man to whom the party looked for counsel. He was a member of the Republican national convention in 1868, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency.

Julian D. Hogate was reared in Danville, where he received his elementary education. After finishing the common and high school courses at Danville, he attended DePauw University. In 1888 he became connected with the Danville Republican as local editor, a paper which had been established in 1847. In 1890 he purchased the establishment and since that time has conducted the paper alone. His paper is the official organ of the Republican party of Hendricks county and, under the able editorial management of editor Hogate, it has forged its way to the front until it is recognized as one of the leading weekly Republican papers in the central part of Indiana.

Mr. Hogate was married October 5, 1893, to Etta B. Craven, the daughter of W. R. and Sarah E. Craven, and they are the parents of two very promising sons, who are now approaching manhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Hogate are devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville and have great faith in the efficacy of the various activities of the church. Mr. Hogate is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias. He has been a stanch Republican for many years and has served two terms as a member of the state central committee of his party. He served also as secretary of the state Senate during the sessions of 1905 and 1907 and the special session of 1908. As editor of the party organ for the county, he has been of inestimable value to his party. He has not been a rank partisan, but has stood for the better elements in his party during all these years in which he has been at the helm. He has always taken an active interest in the civic affairs of his town and every movement which seeks to uplift the community always finds in him a hearty and sympathetic supporter. He and his wife are very hospitable people, and number their friends everywhere throughout the county.

STEPHEN DOUGLAS NOLAND.

Farming was the original profession of man. Through the countless ages which elapsed since the first tiller of the soil grew the first crop, the farmer has been the bulwark of all nations. Today more attention is paid to farming than to any other profession, and there is a reason for it. When a railroad thinks of expansion, it first examines crop conditions, and when a great insurance company has money to invest, it first examines crop conditions also. When the secretary of the treasury, Mr. McAdoo, and his committee sought to locate the new American original bank, they examined the crop productions of the various bank regions. When Dun & Company prepare a general statement of business they examine crop conditions and always find the farmers' wealth most secure and increasing, and there is a reason for all of this. Land itself is the foundation of prosperity. The farmer not only feeds them all, but acts as the balance wheel and wealth builder of the nations and lives a more happy and contented life than his misguided brother. The interurban, telephone, rural mail route and automobile makes his farm a city improved estate. He is the final force that turns the wheels of factories; his land is the basis of security, the foundation of credit, the great factor of prosperity and constitutes ninety per cent. of our nation's wealth at the present time. Eliminate the farmer from Hendricks county and no other profession could exist. Thus it is that the farmer is the mainspring of prosperity in any county and the better farmers a county has the greater the material prosperity which that county will enjoy. Among the many substantial and wide-awake farmers of Hendricks county, there is no one who is making more strenuous effort for the advancement of his county's interests today than is Stephen Douglas Noland, the present trustee of Eel River township.

Stephen Douglas Noland, the son of William and Elizabeth (Underwood) Noland, was born October 10, 1852, in Putnam county, Indiana. His father was born in Madison county, Kentucky, and grew to manhood, married and reared six children there. After the death of his first wife, William Noland married Elizabeth Underwood, a native of Virginia, who had come to Kentucky with her parents when a small girl. In the fall of 1852, a short time before the birth of Stephen Noland, the family moved to Putnam county, this state, and temporarily located near Cloverdale. While in this county Stephen D., whose history is herein presented, was born. A year later the Noland family moved to Center township, in Hendricks county, and located near Danville on the land where the Mount Pleasant church is now standing. William Noland was a life-long farmer and died at a ripe old age. honored and respected by all of his fellow citizens. There were six children born to the second marriage of William Noland, of whom Stephen D. is the eldest; Melinda, deceased, was the wife of Marene Bonifield; Perry; Julia, deceased, was the wife of Walter Eastes; Mary, the wife of James Mannings, of Danville; John, of Indianapolis, who married Lulu Thrift.

Stephen Douglas Noland remained on his father's farm until his marriage. He was given such education as was afforded in his home neighborhood and in October, 1874, married Ella Whitenack, daughter of Abraham and Caroline E. (Reynolds) Whitenack. The Whitenack family originated in Holland and were driven from, or rather left, the country on account of religious differences. They belonged to the nobility and upon coming to America in the colonial days they first settled in New Jersey and later emigrated to Ohio, where Mrs. Noland was born. When she was a year old, her parents located in Eel River township, this county, between Danville and North Salem, where her father bought a farm in 1856. Here the family lived until her father's death in 1882. He was a farmer and during the summer operated a threshing machine and at other times operated a tile factory, employing more men in his various enterprises than any other man in the township. He was a life-long Democrat and at one time was nominated on the ticket for county treasurer, but inasmuch as his party was in a hopeless minority he had no chance of election. Mr. and Mrs. Whitenack reared a family of eight children, namely: Ella, Mrs. Noland; Llewellyn, deceased; Isalona, the wife of John F. Jeffries; Viola, the wife of Marshall Gardner, of Indianapolis; Levona, the wife of Harry Dean, of North Salem; Theresa, wife of G. W. Lackey, of Lawrenceville, Illinois; Oscar Odell, of Denver, Colorado, and Leon A., of Indianapolis. Mrs. Whitenack is still living at North Salem, at the age of seventy-eight years.

After Mr. Noland's marriage, he spent two years working with his father-in-law in the tile factory and then engaged in farming for himself. In 1881 he bought the farm where he now lives, two and one-half miles southeast of North Salem, on the Jamestown road. As a Democrat, he was nominated by his party for the office of township trustee and elected to this office in 1908. He is still holding this office by virtue of the fact that the 1913 Legislature increased the length of the trustee's term by two years, thus giving all trustees in the state who were elected in 1908 a six-year tenure.

Mr. and Mrs. Noland have reared a very interesting family of children, all of whom have received, or are receiving, the best educational advantages which it is possible for them to get. Mona, the oldest child, is the wife of H. F. Adams, a farmer in Eel River township, and has two children, Edna and Harmon; Ralph W., who lives in West Lafayette, is now an instructor in machine designing, heating and ventilating at Purdue University, from which he graduated in 1910 in mechanical engineering. He is a brilliant young man with a very promising future before him; he married Madge Holloway. of Lafayette; Vera is a graduate of Indiana University, completing her course in 1911, and she is now teaching history and English in the North Salem high school; Ernest D., the youngest child, is a student in Purdue University, where he is taking the full course in agriculture. Mr. Noland has always been a stanch supporter of education, believing that in the training of the mind there lies the greatest hope for our future generations. As township trustee he has been interested in securing the best possible teachers for his district schools, and, moreover, believes in paying them the best salaries which the law will allow him to pay. He has seven schools under his charge, as well as an excellent high school at North Salem, where there are now seventy-five enrolled in the high school.

Mr. Noland has been a Mason for many years and his son, Ernest, is also a member of that fraternal order. Sufficient has been said to indicate the esteem in which Mr. Noland is held by the people of his township, and it is shown that he is essentially cosmopolitan in his ideas, a man of the people on all that the term implies and, in the best sense of the word, a representative type of the strong, virile American manhood which demands and retains respect by reason of his worth, sound sense and correct conduct. None have made better use of their talent and opportunities and today he stands as one of the representative men of his county and, measured by the accepted standard of excellence, his career has been in every way eminently honorable and useful and his life fraught with good to his fellowmen at large.

WILLIAM I. GILL.

The record of William I. Gill, who is one of the leading citizens and progressive men of North Salem, Hendricks county, is that of a man who, from a modest beginning, has, without the aid of anyone, made a comfortable living, secured valuable property and laid by a competency for his old age, and at the same time won the undivided respect of all who know him as a result of his clean living and evident desire to promote the community in which he resides.

William I. Gill, the son of James and Jane E. (Williams) Gill, was born in Floyd county, Virginia, on July 21, 1847. James Gill was a brick layer by trade and in 1867, when William I. was twenty-one years of age, the family came to Indiana, settling in Eel River township, this county, where James Gill engaged in farming and also followed his trade of brick laying as opportunity presented itself, and here he lived the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1876. His wife survived him several years, dying in 1887. James Gill was a member of the Masonic order and both he and his wife were earnest and consistent members of the Christian church. They were the parents of seven children who grew to maturity and three who died in childhood. Those who lived were William I., Amanda, John T., Eli, Emma, James, Alfred and Mary.

William I. Gill was educated in the common schools of his native state, and early in life learned the brick-laying trade with his father and continued to assist his father until the latter's death in 1876. He then operated a brick yard of his own for about fifteen years at North Salem and in the mean-time engaged in contracting and building. In 1891 he erected the town hall and opera house building in North Salem. Later he built the bank building, which contains the Masonic hall in the upper stories, and since then has built most of the business houses of North Salem. He has also built all of the brick school houses in Eel River township except two, and a large number of concrete bridges over Hendricks county. At the present time he manages the opera house and also owns and operates a cement tile factory at North Salem. As a contractor he is recognized as one of the most efficient and trustworthy artisans in the county, and his various buildings are a tribute to his skill as a workman.

Mr. Gill was married in 1877 to Lydia M. Henry, who was a native of Putnam county, Indiana, and a daughter of John B. and Elizabeth (La-Follette) Henry, her father being a farmer of that county. To Mr. Gill and his first wife were born nine children: Ora, who is a bricklayer, lives at Indianapolis, and is the secretary of the bricklayers' union of that city: Mary, who became the wife of Ollie Graves, of Marion township, this county: Beryl, the wife of Otha Williams, of Brownsburg, who is engaged in the retail meat business in that place, and they are the parents of three children. Martha, Kenneth and Louise: Malta and Brewer are still under the parental roof. Malta being the telephone operator in the local exchange: Vesta is employed in the North Salem postoffice. The mother of these children died in March, 1897, and in 1903 Mr. Gill married Sarah Elizabeth Bunten, a native of Marion township, this county. She was the daughter of Henry Harvey and Frances (Robbins) Bunten. Henry H. Bunten was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, in 1818, and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1833. with his parents, William and Leanna Bunten. They entered government land near New Winchester and lived there the remainder of their lives. Frances Robbins was a native of North Carolina, the daughter of William and Leah Robbins, and came here in 1834 with her parents, who located in the northern part of Marion township, where her father entered government land. Henry Bunten was a life-long farmer and was county commissioner and also held other public offices of trust. He spent his entire life here near North Salem, his death occurring in 1899, his wife surviving him until 1902. Mrs. Gill lived at home with her parents until their death.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill are both earnest and consistent members of the Christian church and he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, both of them also belonging to the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Gill is a man of unusual business abilities and has been one of the most important factors in the upbuilding of his home town. He is a quiet, friendly man, always progressive and has always thrown his influence in favor of all worthy enterprises.

The family history of the LaFollettes, to which Mr. Gill's first wife belonged, is very interesting. The family originally came to the United States from France, during the time when the Huguenots were being persecuted, and first settled in New Jersey. The one male representative of the family who first came to America is the ancestor of a large and influential family, among whom are to be found Senator Robert M. LaFollette, of Wisconsin. Many of the LaFollettes have been prominent in the history of this state and nation and the Lafollettes of Putnam county have long been one of the prominent families of the county.

UNA DORIS ADAMS.

One of the striking characteristics of the twentieth century is the advent of women into the professional field. It has not been many years since it was thought that housekeeping was the only occupation to which a woman might aspire, and yet today we find women in all of the learned professions. It does not follow that the entrance of women into the professional life means the loss of her womanly qualities in any way. Women have made the greatest inroads into the teaching profession and here may be found some of the brightest, keenest and most charming of the sisters of Eve. Indiana has been foremost among the states of the Union in opening her higher educational institutions to women, the State University at Bloomington being the first university to open its doors to women on an equal footing with men. Since 1867, when the first woman entered the portals of Indiana University, there have gone forth thousands of well-trained young women who have become important factors in molding the life history of the state. More than a score of young women from Hendricks county have availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain a higher education, and among this number there is no one who has achieved more distinct success than has the present efficient superintendent of schools of North Salem.

Una Doris Adams was born in North Salem, the daughter of Thomas J. and Mary (Fleece) Adams, whose histories are recorded elsewhere in this volume. She graduated from the North Salem high school in 1898 and then attended the Central Normal College at Danville for two years, after which she spent several years in teaching and in 1909 received the Bachelor of Arts degree from the State University at Bloomington. She had already done high school work before entering the State University, having taught at Rock Branch and North Salem. She also taught two years in the public schools of Newcastle, this state, before graduation at the university, and after her graduation she returned to Newcastle and taught one more year, then came to North Salem and became assistant superintendent of the public schools at that place, under the superintendency of Theodore F, Martin, The following year Professor Martin became the county superintendent of Hendricks county and she was elected superintendent of the schools, a position which she has been filling ever since. As a teacher she combines both the proper educational qualifications and that tact and skill which are the necessary concomitants of every successful teacher. She is one of the very few women school superintendents in the state and it is a tribute to her ability that she is filling the position at North Salem in such a creditable manner. Miss Adams is a member of the Christian church and also belongs to the chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star at North Salem.

MAJOR JOSEPH B. HOMAN.

A man who has gained more than ordinary success and whose record as a patriotic citizen and influential business man is recognized throughout the state is Joseph B. Homan, of Danville. Mr. Homan is a native of Hendricks county, Indiana, born in Washington township on September 16, 1838, the son of Aaron and Sibelena (Faucett) Homan. His father was a native of Pennsylvania and his mother of Ohio. The paternal grandfather, Fred Homan, and maternal grandfather, John Faucett, were both soldiers in the War of the Revolution. Aaron Homan came to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1810, locating in Washington township, and in 1848 removed to Danville, where he lived until his death, which occurred at the age of eighty-five years. By occupation he was a mechanic and millwright. The mother of Major Homan died soon after removing to Danville, about 1840 or 1850. Homan then married Harriett Sandusky, who also is deceased. Aaron Homan was the father of eight children by his first marriage, three of whom are still living: Mrs. Mary J. Hadley, of St. Louis, Missouri, the widow of N. T. Hadley; John F., of Carroll county, Missouri, and Joseph B.

Joseph B. Homan received a common school education solely through his own efforts. His mother died when he was only twelve years old and he was obliged to work for his board and tuition while attending school. On April 24, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for the three-months service and from a private became promoted to the rank of a corporal. At the expiration of this term of enlistment, he went to Iowa and there enlisted in the Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and served until after the battle of Shiloh, where he was severely wounded by an artillery horse running over him. He came home on a furlough after the accident and while home helped to recruit a company from Hendricks county and Marion county, which was made a part of the Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was commissioned captain of this company, which was mustered in as Company H. Afterward he was promoted to the rank of major and was finally mustered out as lieutenant-colonel, after serving three years and seven months. His company lost nineteen men in the battle of Shiloh. Among the engagements in which the subject participated during the war were the following: Phillippi, Laurel Hill, Carrick's Ford, Chattanooga, Dalton, Tunnel Hill, Mission Ridge, Gravsville, Knoxville, Scottsboro, Brush Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Chattahoochee River, Decatur, Atlanta, Snake Creek Gap, Resaca, Kingston, in and about Dallas, Pumpkinvine Creek, Altoona, New Hope Church, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain and Pine Mountain. At the close of the war, Major Homan came home and engaged in the dry goods business in Danville, although as a boy he had learned the carpenter's trade. He continued in the dry goods business from 1865 to 1873 in Danville and then organized the Danville Banking Company. He was manager of the institution from its organization until 1884. For many years he was a large feeder and shipper of cattle, making large shipments to Scotland. Since 1885 he has been engaged in the real estate and loan business with his son, Eustace W. Homan, Major Homan was married in 1865 to Mary L. Ballard, of Greencastle, Indiana, and to this marriage there was born one son, Eustace W., above mentioned. Mr. Homan is a member of the Loyal Legion, and also an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He belongs to the order of Free and Accepted Masons and in all these fraternal organizations he takes an interested and active part. Religiously, he is a Methodist in belief and a liberal contributor to the support of this denomination. In politics he is an ardent Republican and has voted for every Republican that has been elected President. He was a delegate to the Republican national convention which nominated Garfield in 1880, and he was also at Minneapolis when Benjamin . Harrison was re-nominated, and a member of the notification committee which went to the White House and notified General Harrison of his nomination. He is now a member of the board of trustees of the Indiana Boys' School at Plainfield. Major Homan has lived to honorable ends and his admirable career has won for him the unqualified esteem of a host of friends.

JOHN HENRY BUNTEN.

The life of a farmer is one of comparative obscurity, yet such is the peculiar fitness of things that in no other station in life do we find men of sounder character and stronger principles than in the environment of the farm. Surrounded by nature, the farmer's life is one which offers fewer temptations and more facilities for developing strength than does the artificial life of the cities. And, as in the last analysis, it is character which counts, so in the end the life of an honest, upright farmer, like Mr. Bunten, may outweigh the life of a man who occupied a much larger place in the eyes of the world.

John Henry Bunten, of North Salem, was born in Marion township. Hendricks county, Indiana, on February 24, 1850, his father being a native of Mercer county, Kentucky, and his mother of Randolph county, North Carolina. Henry Harvey Bunten was born in 1818 and was the son of William and Leanna (Wilson) Bunten. When Henry Harvey Bunten was a young man he and his parents came to Marion township, this county, from Kentucky, and here William Bunten entered government land and lived the remainder of his life as a farmer. He was married to Frances Robbins. who was born in 1819, the daughter of William and Leah (Lamb) Robbins. She was a small girl when her parents left North Carolina in wagons to make the long trip across the Blue Ridge mountains and the Ohio river valley to this county, where the family entered government land in Marion township. Henry H. Bunten and Frances Robbins were married when they were both very young and lived the simple life of farmers all their lives, he dying in 1808, and his wife two years later. Henry H. Bunten was county commissioner of Hendricks county at one time, and, with his wife, was a life-long member of the Christian church, in which he was a deacon and elder for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harvey Bunten were the parents of nine children, eight of whom grew to maturity. At the present time three daughters and John H., whose history is here presented, are the only living children of this marriage.

John Henry Bunten was reared on the home farm and upon reaching manhood was given the management of the home place. He and his sister, Sarah E., stayed at home, caring for their parents until their death. Sarah E. is now the wife of William I. Gill, whose career is portrayed elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Bunten was married April 28, 1904, to Mrs. Pearl D. (Hadley) Duncan, the widow of Elmer Duncan, and the daughter of James and Jennie (Fleece) Hadley. James Hadley was born in 1847 in Marion township, this county, and was the son of Edmond R. and Sarah S. (Ragan) Hadley. Edmond R. Hadley was born in North Carolina, the son of James C. and Mary (Richardson) Hadley. When Edmond R. was a small boy, his parents came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and located southwest of Danville, where James C. entered government land. On this farm James C. Hadley lived and died, a life-long farmer and stock raiser. Edmond R. Hadley grew up on the farm and married Sarah S. Ragan, who was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, the daughter of Abner and ——— (McCown) Ragan. She came to this county in early childhood with her parents, who first settled in Putnam county, but later came to Hendricks county. After Edmond R. Hadley's marriage he was given a farm of forty acres by his father in Marion township, this county, and as the years went by he added to this until he had seven hundred acres of fine farming land at the time of his death in 1875. Edmond R. Hadley and wife were the parents of eight children, two of whom died in childhood. Three or four years before his death Mr. Hadley bought a farm in Eel River township, and here he remained for the rest of his life. James Hadley, the father of Mrs. J. H. Bunten, was married October 25. 1871, to Louisa J. Fleece, a native of Eel River township and the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Davis) Fleece. John Fleece was a child when he came to this county with his parents. Elizabeth Davis was born in this county and was a sister of Walter Davis, the father of Ouincy A. Davis. whose family history is given elsewhere in this volume. Since his marriage James A. Hadley has followed farming pursuits in Eel River township, and for the past thirty-four years he has lived in North Salem. In 1901 he sold all of his land but twenty acres, which adjoins North Salem. He owns a threshing and shredding outfit and still engages in that business. Mr. Hadlev is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while he and his wife are both members of the Christian church.

Mrs. Bunten was born in Eel River township, this county, and in 1891 married Elmer C. Duncan, the son of George H. and Nancy (Davis) Duncan. For two years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Duncan lived in this county, then went to Colorado, where they remained for the next seven years. At the time of his marriage, Mr. Duncan assisted his father in a tile factory, but upon his removal to Colorado he engaged in gardening and fruit raising. He died in June, 1900, at the age of thirty-three years, leaving his widow with one son, Glenn D. After Mr. Duncan's death his widow came back to the home of her parents and lived with them until her marriage to Mr. Bunten.

After Mr. Bunten's marriage he built his present home in North Salem, and lived there for about four years. He then returned to the farm, but two years later moved back to North Salem and now rents his farm out. He is the owner of one hundred acres of fine farming land and also has the management of forty acres adjoining, which belong to his sister.

Mr. Bunten is a stanch Republican in his political views but has never been a blind partisan in defense of his party. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and he and his wife are both members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Religiously, their affiliation is with the Christian church, to which they give their earnest and zealous support. Mr. Bunten is a man in whom everyone reposes the utmost confidence, for his word is to him a sacred obligation and he has always been ready to assist in every good work and help those in need. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the northern part of this county, and is highly respected by all-of those with whom he has come in contact and who know him personally.

DR. THOMAS J. ADAMS.

Among the men of the past generations who have been influential factors in the life of Hendricks county, the late Dr. Thomas J. Adams occupied a prominent place. Doctor Adams was born September 22, 1837, in Center township, near Danville, and died at North Salem, this county, March 13, 1908. He was the son of Solomon and Nancy (Griffiths) Adams. Solomon Adams was a native of Nicholas county, Kentucky, and in the twenties of the last century came to Switzerland county, Indiana, where he married.

After his marriage he came to Hendricks county, where he was one of the leading pioneers.

Thomas J. Adams received an academic education at the old Thorntown Academy in Boone county and began the study of medicine with Doctor Lockhart, of Danville, as his preceptor. For several years before the war he taught school in Tipton, Boone and Hendricks counties and on January 2, 1864, he enlisted at Danville in Company I, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, for three years. He served until he was honorably discharged in 1865, the close of the war. On the organization of his regiment he was appointed hospital steward and served in that capacity throughout the remainder of his service. During six months of this time he acted as surgeon, his superior officer being absent from the regiment. His regiment took part in many heavy skirmishes on Hood's campaign, being in the battles of Columbia, Franklin, Nashville and many others. Doctor Adams helped to care for the wounded. At the battle of Nashville, he remained behind several days to help gather up the wounded and send them to hospitals.

After the close of the war Doctor Adams returned to this county and at once entered Rush Medical College in Chicago, from which he graduated in 1870. However, in the meantime he had been practicing at North Salem, beginning in March, 1866, after he had had one term at the medical college. After graduation he started to practice at North Salem and was more than usually successful. He was a member of the county, state and national medical societies and had a large medical library.

Doctor Adams was married in April, 1867, to Mary A. Fleece, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Davis) Fleece. John Fleece was born in Boyle county, Kentucky, the son of Charles and Mary (Harlan) Fleece. In 1836 the Fleece family came to Hendricks county and settled in Eel River township. Elizabeth Davis was born near Mt. Sterling, Montgomery county, Kentucky, and was the daughter of Nathan and Nancy (Kidd) Davis. She was about fourteen years of age when her parents came to this county and located northeast of North Salem, where they entered government land. While Mrs. Davis was still a small girl, her parents moved to Ladoga, where the father engaged in the general merchandise business for sixteen years. Then they moved to North Salem, and after the war her father moved to Jamestown, where he again engaged in the mercantile business until his death, about fifteen years later. While living in Ladoga he served as township trustee.

Doctor Adams continued his practice in North Salem and vicinity until two or three years before his death, when a stroke of paralysis necessitated him giving up his practice. He died in North Salem, March 13, 1908. Doctor and Mrs. Adams were the parents of seven children: Galen, Una and Herbert are still living with their mother at North Salem; Beulah is the wife of Dr. C. M. Trotter, a dentist of North Salem, with one son, Richard; Percy died at the age of twenty; Herman died when he was about six years of age; Ernest, the youngest child, is a graduate pharmacist of Purdue University.

Doctor Adams was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Grand Army of Republic, and held official positions in both. He was one of those strong, sturdy individuals who have contributed largely to the material welfare of this county and was a public-spirited citizen who always stood for the best interests of his community. For a long term of years he was active in promoting the community's progress along social and moral lines, and consequently his name will long be remembered for his potent influence for good in this county.

E. E. BLAIR.

Specific mention is made of many of the worthy citizens of Hendricks county within the pages of this volume, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored locality and whose interests have been identified with every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of action to the well-being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this number is E. E. Blair, who, as a private citizen and public official in his home township, has won the esteem of his fellow citizens because of his blameless private life and his efficient public service. Some men in each community are the natural leaders in public affairs and among this number is Mr. Blair, whose training has rendered him peculiarly adapted to public service.

E. E. Blair, ex-trustee of Washington township and successful farmer, was born October 13, 1865, in the township where he has lived the most of his life. His parents were Clark and Marium Blair, who were highly respected citizens of the community in which they lived.

Mr. Blair received his common school education in his home schools and then entered Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana, where he took an agricultural course of one year, then returning to his father's farm, remained there and assisted his father until he moved on to his present farm in 1895, He purchased it from the Walter Ross heirs and has improved this tract in many ways by erecting new buildings and draining and fencing it in a way to increase its value materially. While he raises all of the crops peculiar to this section of the state, he has made a specialty of hog raising and has been uniformly successful along this line. In his farming methods he has kept abreast of the times and keeps well informed upon the latest agricultural methods so that he may keep his farm to the highest state of efficiency. He is interested in all of the farmers' institutes and special short courses for farmers, feeling that these are things in which the farmer cannot make a mistake.

Mr. Blair was married, in 1887, to Jennie Barker, the daughter of William and Louisa Barker, of Avon, this county. Mrs. Blair was born June 7, 1868, in Avon and received her education in the schools of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Blair are the parents of seven children: Nola, born July 10, 1888; Earl H., born July 21, 1891; Bessie, born December 29, 1892; Eddie E., born December 29, 1894; Everett C., born July 10, 1896; Russell B., born March 21, 1898, and Helen G., born January 23, 1900. All these children are still under the parental roof and are being given the best educational advantages by their parents.

Mr. Blair has always taken an active interest in Republican politics and in 1895 was selected by his party to make the race for township trustee and that he was elected to that important office shows the esteem in which he is held by the citizens of his township. He responded to their confidence in him by rendering to them and to the township faithful and efficient service while in the capacity of a trustee. He interested himself in the township schools, roads and everything which came within his jurisdiction.

Mr. Blair has spent his whole life in the township of his nativity with the exception of a short time in the West, when he spent about a year on a ranch in Indian territory and another year with a contracting firm in Kansas City, Missouri.

Fraternally, Mr. Blair is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons at Bridgeport, Indiana, and is actively interested in the affairs of his local lodge. In every avenue of life's activities he has performed his full part and because of his genuine worth and high character he has enjoyed to a large degree the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens.

CHARLES A. WHITE, M. D.

No other profession has accomplished, during the last century, the progress and development that have been made by the medical. The man of original thought and action, whose text-book forms but the basis of future work, has ever moved forward, taking advantage of and utilizing new discoveries in the science and looking always for better methods and surer means to the desired end. Such a man is he whose name heads this review. In considering the character and career of this eminent member of the medical fraternity, the impartial observer will not only be disposed to rank him among the leading members of his profession in his locality, but also as one of those men of broad character, culture and mental ken who have terrible struggles of the Civil war, his whole career has been replete with honor and success. He has been actuated by the highest motives, and to the practice of his profession he has brought rare skill and resource, his quick perception and almost intuitive judgment enabling him to make a correct diagnosis. He has always been a close student of medical science, keeping in intimate touch with the latest advances along that line, and he has for this reason kept thoroughly abreast of the times.

Dr. Charles A. White, one of the oldest practitioners in Hendricks county, was born in Canton, Washington county, Indiana, January 4, 1845. His parents, Maxamillian and Martha (Miles) White, removed to Hendricks county in the fall of 1850 and located in Liberty township, about two miles south of Belleville, then the largest town in the county.

Doctor White was only five years of age when his parents came to this county. He was given a good common school education and at the age when most boys of today are in school, he enlisted in the local military company which was being raised in his county. Although he was only sixteen years of age when the Civil War opened, his excess of patriotic zeal made up for his lack of years, and as soon as the opportunity offered itself he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served out his term of enlistment. As soon as he came back from the front he began the study of medicine in the office of Drs. R. C. Moore and L. H. Kennedy at Belleville and later enrolled as a student in Rush Medical College of Chicago. He was compelled to borrow the money with which to pay his school expenses, and for this he paid twelve per cent. compound interest. In the spring of 1868 he began the practice of medicine near Bloomington, Indiana, but remained there only about a year. On March 15, 1869, he formed a partnership with Dr. John Dancer at South Milford, Indiana, which was dissolved two years later. While located at South Milford, Doctor White took a second course of lectures at Rush Medical College and graduated as valedictorian of his class on February 1, 1871. In the following April he located at Wolcottville, Indiana, in partnership with Doctor Dancer and was rapidly building up a good practice when sickness in the family necessitated a change. His partnership with Doctor Dancer closed on April 1, 1873, and he at once moved to Danville, near their former home. He next went into practice in Danville with Dr. Henry G. Todd and they continued together from January 1, 1874, until March 1, 1877, when they agreed to dissolve. Doctor White then united with Dr. Wilson T. Lawson and they practiced together until October, 1870, since which time Doctor White has practiced alone.

Charles & White

Doctor White was married on January 21, 1873, to Dee A. Miller, the daughter of Tolliver B. and Matilda (Gill) Miller, and to this union there have been born two children, Geraldine Max Millar, born June 14, 1880, and Glyndon DeLaskie Miller, born November 1, 1881.

Politically, Doctor White has been a life-long supporter of the Republican party, in the councils of which he has been a prominent figure, and has frequently been a delegate to county, district and state conventions. Doctor White is a birthright member of the Quaker church, but at the age of twentyeight years he united with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has since been a consistent member. In his fraternal relations, Doctor White has been a Mason since he was twenty-one years of age and is also a member of the Royal Arch chapter and the council of Royal and Select Masters. He also belongs to the Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree; to Murat Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine: to the Knights of Pythias since 1878, and, from the age of twenty-one years, has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also an appreciative member of the Grand Army of Republic. He is a member of several medical societies, in the proceedings of which he is deeply interested. He was vice-president of the State Medical Society, president of the Seventh Indiana Councilors' District Medical Association, and has served as a delegate to several meetings of the American Medical Association. During President Harrison's administration, he served as a member of the board of pension examiners. He has for many years been medical examiner for several leading life insurance companies, is local surgeon for the Big Four railroad and for years has been a member of the Big Four Railroad Surgeons' Association. He has during the forty years of his residence in this county built up a large and lucrative practice and been a potent factor for good in all lines of endeavor. He has been a public-spirited citizen who has always made his influence felt in all enterprises looking toward the betterment of the community in which he lives. During his early years in this community, Doctor White took a great interest in horses and he was instrumental in introducing into this county a higher grade of horses than had formerly been bred here. Personally, the Doctor is unassuming and approachable, a splendid conversationalist and excellent companion. Because of his high professional standing and sterling character, he is eminently deserving of the exalted position he holds in the esteem and confidence of his fellow men.

JEREMIAH JASPER PAGE.

One of the old families of Hendricks county which traces its ancestry back to England is the Page family, whose descendants now number thousands throughout the United States. The family name "Page" indicates that the family was once connected with the nobility, some members of which were once pages to members of the royal family. Later on some members of the family were given titles and received valuable concessions from the crown with the result that many of them became immensely wealthy. There is said to be an estate of several million dollars left in England by members of the Page family to which the American branch are justly entitled. However that may be, the Pages in America have always been able to take care of themselves and have never made any effort to establish their claim to the Page fortune of England.

The Pages of Hendricks county trace their ancestry directly to Peter Page, an Englishman who came to Virginia early in the sixteenth century. Peter Page lived and died in Virginia, and to him and his wife was born Williamson Page.

Williamson Page grew to manhood in Lee county, Virginia, and there married Elizabeth McCloud, who also was a native of the same county, and the daughter of John McCloud and wife, natives of Iowa. In 1830 Williamson Page and wife came to Indiana and settled first in the southern part of Hendricks county, where Jeremiah Jasper, whose history is herein recorded, was born. He entered land in Eel River township, one mile south of where Jeremiah J. Page now lives, entering two tracts of fifty-six and one-half acres each. He moved onto his land in the fall of 1834, built his rude log cabin of notched log and started in to carve his fortune out of the wilderness. At this time there were no roads except blazed trails from one settler's cabin to another: dense underbrush filled the lowlands and covered the highlands of the county; deer, wolves, turkey and small games of all kinds were very numerous, and the county was merely a hunter's paradise. Williamson Page had been a blacksmith in Virginia and his profession was one which was a very necessary accomplishment in a pioneer community. Gradually the farm was cleared and as the sons grew up and he had increasing assistance, the farm was eventually brought under cultivation. Williamson Page and wife were the parents of a large family of children: Nellie, Nancy, Elizabeth, Stephen, Andrew J., Jeremiah J., Chesley, Robert, Williamson and Demerius. It is interesting to note that at this time there were only three families in this locality, the Pages, Fleece and Zimmerman families. The Fleece and Zimmerman families had fifteen children each, making a total of forty children in the three families, and of those forty children there are only two living today, Jeremiah Jasper Page and Mrs. Rosena (Zimmerman) Waters.

Jeremiah Jasper Page was reared under the pioneer conditions which have just been described and at the age of twenty, June 15, 1854, he was married to Ann Elizabeth Hypes, who was born August 18, 1838, in Botetourt county, Virginia, the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Pfeffly) Hypes. When she was three weeks old her family came to this county from Virginia in wagons, taking the trip of hundreds of miles through unbroken forests and enduring hunger and hardships of all kinds. The Hypes family settled in the northwestern part of Eel River township, where they entered government land, and here Jacob Hypes died in 1849. Ann Elizabeth was only fifteen years of age and her useful husband was only five years older when they were married and it is interesting to note the prenuptial agreement of these vouthful lovers, a plan which they agreed upon before their wedding day. This plan, which is guaranteed to promote domestic felicity, they have followed for more than sixty years of wedded life and have never had a quarrel. This wonderful agreement, which has never been broken throughout sixty years of wedded life, is simply this: When either one becomes cross or out of humor in any way, the other is to keep still until the irritability passes away and not enter into any discussions when angry.

The useful couple bought forty acres of new timber land entirely on credit and in a rude log cabin this fifteen-year-old bride started up housekeeping. That they worked faithfully need not be told here. Within a few years they had their first forty acres paid for and were able to buy another forty adjoining it. This happened within a few years after their marriage, and it is to be remembered that when they were married they had only the following possessions: two beds, a horse, a cow, a few chairs, a few cooking utensils and no money, and yet this happy couple enjoyed life just as much as we do today with all of our modern conveniences. The table he made out of a plank and the meat and bread which she cooked in the fireplace tasted just as good to them as our porter-house steak cooked on the gas stove of today.

Another chapter in the history of this interesting couple begins in 1866 when they sold their eighty acres of land and went to Iowa at the earnest solicitation of the mother of Mrs. Page. After reaching Iowa, Mr. Page carefully examined several prospective farms and came to the conclusion that the safest thing for him to do was to return to Indiana. Accordingly they came back to this county and purchased one hundred and forty-four acres of land in Eel River township. His success as a farmer in this county shows that he did not make a mistake when he left the broad plains of Iowa for the rolling fields of Indiana. He has prospered to a degree which he little dreamed, when, as a twenty-year-old youth, he started in married life with practically nothing. He has added to his land holdings from time to time until he and his children now own two thousand acres of land.

Mr. and Mrs. Page are the parents of eleven children: John H., of North Salem, who married Clarinda Davis and has four children; Mary Elizabeth, who married W. H. Robbins, of North Salem, whose sketch is delineated elsewhere in this volume; Samuel R., a farmer of this township, who married Rebecca Murphy and has five children; Jacob, a farmer in this township, who married Ida Thompson and has nine children; Frank, a farmer of this township, who married Ora Carpenter and has two children living; Ellen, deceased, was the wife of Daniel Robbins and died in February, 1912, her husband dying just a week before; they left one son; Joseph, who died at the age of seventeen; Belle, the wife of Amos Thompson, a farmer of this township, they have two children living; Cora, the wife of Ed Davenport, a farmer of this township, has one child living; Sarah Francis, and one other child, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Page have twenty-seven grandchildren living and twenty great-grandchildren.

Mr. Page and his wife are both loyal members of the Christian church of North Salem and have been for many years. He is a man who esteems honesty as the first essential to success and during his long career in the county he has so conducted himself that he has never been the cause of censure on the part of his neighbors. He has such a reputation for peace, that he is frequently called in to settle differences between his neighbors. Enough has been said to show the character of Mr. Page and to indicate the influence which he has had upon the growth of his township. His life has been a busy one and yet he has always found time to take his full share in the various public questions which concern his immediate-community. His career has been honorable in every way and such as to justly warrant the biographer in using that famous old saying, "This was a man."

E. B., J. A. AND L. D. OWEN.

Among the men of sterling worth and strength of character who have made an impress on the life of the locality in which they live none have received a larger meed of popular respect and regard than the gentlemen whose family name is well known throughout this section of Hendricks county, Indiana, E. B. and J. A. Owen, successful merchants of Amo, Indiana. Lifelong residence in one locality has given the people an opportunity to know them in every phase of their character and that they have been true to life in its every aspect is manifest in the degree of confidence and regard in which they are held by those who know them. In their mercantile business they have shown unusual ability and have achieved a splendid success among the followers of their profession.

Eleazar B. Owen, the son of Jonathan and Asenath (Bales) Owen, was born near Plainfield, Hendricks county, Indiana, September 7, 1837. The Owens were of Scotch descent and upon coming to America settled first in Georgia, where the grandfather, Samuel Owen, was born and grew to manhood. Samuel Owen moved from Georgia to Ohio in an early day, coming from that state to Indiana in 1828, settling in Hendricks county. The maternal grandfather was prominent in the early days as a Quaker preacher and traveled extensively in that capacity. He settled in Plainfield, where he followed the dual occupation of farming and preaching, being probably the first minister of the Friends church to locate in this county. He continued preaching and farming all of his life and in his preaching made extended trips throughout this and adjoining states, making one trip to North Carolina on horseback. He lived to the advanced age of ninety-four. Jonathan Owen came to Indiana from Ohio early in life and settled in Hendricks county, where he lived until 1865, when he moved to Illinois, where he was later joined by other members of the Owen family. Before going to Illinois he conducted a flouring mill for a few years in Mooresville, Indiana. After going to Illinois, he engaged in farming and became a successful man in that state, his death occurring there at the age of seventy-two years. To Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Owen were born several children: Eleazar B.; Anna, the widow of John T. Thompson, of Amo; Samuel, who died in infancy; Rachel C. died single; J. A.; Jemima V. (deceased), who married John Nugent; Benjamin B., a fruit grower, living near Tampa, Florida; Isaac J., an undertaker, living in Uma, Colorado; Ida, who married Wesley Thompson, of Farnam, Nebraska; Mary E., married Dr. William H. White, of Amo, Indiana.

E. B. Owen was reared in Hendricks, Morgan and Marion counties, Indiana, and also lived for a time in Illinois. His father was in business in Indianapolis for about three years at one time. In 1864 he started in business on his own account by buying a saw mill in Amo in conjunction with Benjamin L. and John T. Thompson. They conducted this mill for two years and then sold it, after which Mr. Owen and William F. Henley purchased a store of J. G. Ralston, in Amo, and this they managed for two years, when they again sold out, although a short time afterward Mr. Owen and John V. Parker bought the same store back and continued to manage it for the next six years. At the end of six months Mr. Owen bought his partner out and continued to operate the store alone until he took his brother, J. A. Owen, into partnership in 1896, since which time the firm has been known as E. B. Owen & Company. In 1886 Mr. Owen built his present two-story brick building, which, with improvements and additions, he has continued to occupy until the present time. He carries a large and well selected assortment of goods and by his genial manner and strict integrity has built up a large and lucrative business in the community. He is interested in the First National Bank of Amo, and is now president of that institution.

Mr. Owen was married to Elizabeth Hunt, of Hendricks county, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amiel Hunt, and to this marriage there have been born four children: Florence, the wife of William Hopkins, of Indianapolis; Ora Lela, who resides at home and is a teacher of music by profession; Myrtle, who is also a music teacher, and Nettie E., a teacher in the high school at Plainfield. Mr. Owen's mother is still living, at the advanced age of ninety-six years, and is remarkably active and well preserved for a woman of her years. Mr. Owen himself has always led a clean and active life and, at the age of seventy-six, he enjoys good health and is as active physically and mentally as men of fifty.

- J. A. Owen, a brother of E. B. Owen and a member of the firm of E. B. Owen & Company, was born in Plainfield, Hendricks county, Indiana, January 2, 1850. His boyhood days were spent in Hendricks and Morgan counties, Indiana, and in Illinois. He completed his education in Grand Prairie Seminary in Iroquois county, Illinois. In 1875 he came from Illinois to Amo, Indiana, and entered his brother's store as a clerk, where he continued until he became a partner in 1896. For several years his brother, E. B. Owen, was in poor health and not able to be in attendance at the store, and during his absence J. A. managed the business.
- J. A. Owen was married October 13, 1881, to Laura A. Swaim, of Hendricks county, the daughter of Thomas and Elmira Swaim. Mrs. Owen's parents came from North Carolina to Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Owen are the parents of six children: Mrs. John Stark, of Clinton, Indiana; Mrs. Don Garrison, of Amo, Indiana; Wilbur B., of Indianapolis, and two who are still at home. Edith and Dorothy.

Fraternally, Mr. Owen is a member of the time-honored order of Free and Accepted Masons, and is, as are all the members of the family, a loyal adherent of the Friends church.

Leslie Dayton Owen, the son of J. A. Owen, was born September 30, 1890, in Amo, Indiana, and received his education in the Amo schools, graduating from the local high school. After leaving school he entered the employ of the Terre Haute & Eastern Traction Company, where he remained for one year. He then became a clerk in the store of his father and uncle, where he is still employed. He was married on June 2, 1913, to Ruth Stanley, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Stanley, of Coatesville, this county. His wife's father is a merchant in Coatesville. Leslie Owen is a member of the Masonic order and a young man of more than ordinary ability, with the promise of a bright future before him. Wilbur Owen also graduated from the Amo high school and since that time has held some position with the Terre Haute & Eastern Traction Company, at the present time being employed at the Terminal ticket office in Indianapolis. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Uniform Rank, also of the Masonic order.

E. B. Owen is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, merchant in Hendricks county now living, having commenced in 1867.

LOUIS W. ARMSTRONG, M. D.

Professional success comes from merit. Frequently in commercial life one may come into possession of a lucrative business through inheritance or gift, but in what are known as the learned professions advancement is gained only through painstaking and long-continued effort. Prestige in the healing art is the outcome of a strong mentality, close application, thorough mastery of its great underlying principles and the ability to apply theory to practice in the treatment of diseases. Good intellectual training, thorough professional knowledge and the possession and utilization of the qualities and attributes essential to success have made the subject of this review emment in his chosen calling and he stands today among the scholarly and enterprising physicians in a county noted for the high order of its medical talent.

Dr. Louis W. Armstrong, a man of exceptionally high intellectual and professional attainments, was born in New York city September 21, 1875. His parents were Robert W. and Eudocia E. (Muller) Armstrong, both of whom were natives of Baltimore, Maryland. His father was a dentist, but retired from this profession early in life and devoted his energies to literary work. He came west in 1849, but always retained his home at Baltimore, where his death occurred in 1902, his wife having died in 1898. Dr. Robert Armstrong and wife were the parents of seven children, six of whom are still living: William R. and Harry J. live near Baltimore, where they have a country home; Gelston H. is an electrical engineer with the Carnegic Company, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Mrs. George F. Ludington lives at Baltimore, where her husband is in the packing business; Adelaide R. lives in Baltimore, but at present is traveling in Europe; Mrs. Wade H. Free, of Anderson, Indiana, whose husband is a prominent lawyer of that city, and was secretary of the Indiana Senate in 1913.

Doctor Armstrong was given an excellent education, all of his elementary and college training being received in the Baltimore schools. He received his degree of Doctor of Medicine from the University of Maryland, graduating in the class of 1900. He was a resident interne at the university hospital before his graduation, after which he became the first assistant resident interne and later resident physician of Bay View Hospital at Baltimore, after which, for a period of ten years, he was on the surgeons' staff at the Franciscan Hospital at Breckenridge, Minnesota, and part of this time was chief surgeon. During all this time he was division surgeon of the Great Northern Railway Company. He left the state of Minnesota and came to Danville, Indiana, in June, 1912, and bought out the office and practice of Doctor O'Brien. Since then he has built substantial additions and improved his hospital until he now has one of the finest private hospitals in the state. He specializes in surgery and has been remarkably successful along this line. Though comparatively a newcomer in Danville, he has rapidly forged to the front, and now occupies a distinct position both as a public-spirited citizen and as a physician of more than local repute.

Doctor Armstrong was married June 8, 1904, to Louise E. Hyser, daughter of Edward R. and Susan Hyser, of Breckenridge, Minnesota. Her father was a native of Boston, Massachusetts, and her mother of Germany. To this happy marriage there have been born two children, Robert W. and Margaret S., aged eight and seven respectively. Doctor Armstrong is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Order of the Eastern Star, Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also a member of the county, state and American medical associations and takes a deep interest in the affairs of all associations which concern his chosen field of endeavor. As a surgeon he is a member of the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of America, the greatest organization of its kind in the world. He and his wife are loyal and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and contribute liberally of their substance to its support.

ARCHIBALD A. FIGG.

The gentleman to a revoiew of whose life the reader's attention is here respectfully directed is recognized as one of the energetic, well known business men of Hendricks county, Indiana, who, by his enterprise and progressive methods, has contributed in a material way to the commercial advancement of the locality where he lives. In the course of an honorable career he has been successful in the manifold lines to which his efforts have been directed and, enjoying distinctive prestige among the representative men of his community, it is eminently proper that attention be called to his achievements and due credit be accorded to his worth as an enterprising citizen.

Archibald A. Figg, one of the widest known and most popular business men of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born February 12, 1866, in Floyd township, Putnam county, Indiana, the son of William H. and Louisa (Miller) Figg, his father being a native of Shelby county, Kentucky, and his mother of Putnam county, Indiana. William H. Figg came to Putnam county with his father, Asbury Figg, when he was a lad of fourteen years and the family settled in Floyd township, that county. Asbury Figg lived in that county until his death, at the age of eighty years. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Figg still live in Clay township, Hendricks county, and are among the oldest and most highly respected citizens of the community in which they have lived for so many years. William H. Figg lived in Putnam county until about twenty-five years ago, when he removed to Hendricks county, where he has continued to follow the occupation of a farmer. W. H. Figg was an ardent member of the Methodist Episcopal church all his life and in his political affiliations he adhered to the Prohibition party. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Figg were the parents of six children: Laura, the wife of John H. Summers, of this county; Archibald A., the immediate subject of this sketch; John S., of Indianapolis; James W., of Danville; Ida B., wife of Ote Hunt, of Coatesville, Indiana; Ella died in infancy, Archibald A. Figg was born, reared and grew to manhood on his father's farm, and received his education in the district schools of his home township, while early in life he was initiated into all the mysteries of farming. At the age of twenty-five years he began to farm for himself, and for a number of years he farmed in the immediate neighborhood of the old homestead. In 1898 he was elected sheriff of Hendricks county upon the Republican ticket and so efficient and popular was his administration that he secured the nomination in 1900 and a re-election. He was the first man for twenty-two years in Hendricks county to serve two terms, as there had been no man in the county for that length of time previous to his re-election who had been elected for more than one term. Before he served his county as sheriff and most of the time since then he has been more or less engaged in the auctioneering profession. He is a member of the Indiana Auctioneers' Association and was president of the association for two terms. Since leaving the sheriff's office he has been engaged in the livery business and within the last three years he has been in the automobile business as well. He is now agent for the Studebaker and Ford cars and has been a very successful agent for the companies manufacturing those cars. His twelve years of experience as an auctioneer and four years as sheriff has enabled him to call more people by their names than any other man in the county. He is a man of magnificent physique and one who attracts attention whereever he goes. His genial personality makes itself felt in all his auctioneering audiences and this fact is probably the real cause of his remarkable success on the block.

Mr. Figg was married November 23, 1913, to Mrs. Ada B. (Smith) Thompson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McKindry Smith. Mr. Figg is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and has had the honor of holding every chair in the subordinate lodge of that fraternal order. He is familiarly known throughout the county as "Colonel," and his optimistic disposition and genial manner with his friends have made him one of the best known and best liked men in the county. His sterling uprightness in all of his business transactions through the many years in which he has been engaged in business has won for him the unlimited confidence and regard of all those with whom he has had business relations. The world has too few men who shed sunshine around them, and were there more such men as Colonel Figg the world would be brighter and happier.

SAMUEL B. ENSMINGER.

The men most influential in promoting the advancement of society and in giving character to the times in which they live are two classes, to-wit, the men of study and the men of action. Whether we are more indebted for the improvement of the age to the one class or the other is a question of honest difference of opinion. Neither class can be spared and both should be encouraged to occupy their several spheres of labor and influence, zealously and without mutual distrust. In the following paragraphs are briefly outlined the leading facts and characteristics in the career of a gentleman who combines in his makeup the elements of the scholar and the energy of the public-spirited man of affairs. Devoted to the noble and humane work of teaching, he has made his influence felt in the school life of Hendricks county, Indiana, and is not unknown to the wider educational circles of the state, occupying as he does a prominent place in his profession and standing high in the esteem of educators in other than his own particular field of endeavor.

Samuel B. Ensminger, one of the oldest teachers of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born August 3, 1849, on a farm in Center township, this county, one mile northeast of Danville. His parents were Samuel J. and Mary Ann (Megee) Ensminger, his father being a native of Maryland and his mother of Kentucky. Samuel J. Ensminger came to Hendricks county, Indiana, when a young man and taught school in Crawfordsville, Montgomery county, Indiana, for a short time, and then came to Danville, where he followed the same profession. Upon the discovery of gold, in California, in 1849, he was seized with the same fever which actuated thousands of other men and went to that state, where he remained for the next twenty-two years. While in California he followed the occupation of a miner most of the time and made his headquarters at Placerville. In 1871 he came back to Indiana and later went to Tennessee, where he died at Murfreesboro, at the age of sixty-three years. His wife died December 29, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Ensminger were the parents of five children: Melville C., deceased; one who died in infancy; Henry B., deceased, who was a soldier in the One Hundred Seventeenth Indiana Regiment and later in the One Hundred Forty-Eighth Regiment; Marshall L., deceased, and Samuel B., the immediate subject of this sketch, who is the youngest of this family and the only one now living.

Samuel B. Ensminger was born on August 3, 1849, and, as his father left in May of that year for California, and did not return until 1871, he was past twenty-one years of age before he ever saw his father. He received a good education in the public schools of his county and later took a course in the academy at Danville. Being of a studious turn of mind, he was inclined toward the teaching profession and for nineteen years taught school in Center township, this county. During all of these years he farmed in the summer months and was equally successful in both occupations. His joint income from his farming operations and his teaching enabled him to increase his land holdings until he has become one of the most substantial farmers of his township. He eventually retired from the teaching profession and devoted all of his time to his agricultural interests, and continued to operate his farm until 1910, when he sold his farm and removed to Danville to spend the remainder of his days.

Mr. Ensminger was married October 26, 1876, to Amanda Worrell, daughter of William and Martha (Wilson) Worrell. She was born in Washington township, this county. Her father was a farmer who came from Virginia. He was a great man for church and upright living; was often administrator and guardian. He had a family of thirteen children, of whom Mrs. Ensminger was the youngest. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ensminger: Charlotte E... wife of Vernon Rudd, who works in the First National Bank of Danville, and Frederick DeWitt, an attorney of Danville, but now with the Prest-O-Lite Company, of Indianapolis. Frederick is a graduate of the University of Michigan.

Mr. Ensminger is allied with the Republican party and has served his party on more than one occasion in conventions. He has been the assessor of Center township and for five years and three months was trustee of the same township. He has also been ditch commissioner for Hendricks county. In all of his official work he proved to be an efficient and faithful administrator of the duties which he was called upon to perform. The Ensminger family are all members of the Presbyterian church of Danville and take an active interest in the various organizations of that denomination. Fraternally, Mr. Ensminger is a member of the Knights of Pythias of his home town. He is a jovial gentleman whom it is a pleasure to meet, and one who makes friends with all classes of people. In his capacity as a public official he was one of the most popular men who ever held office in Hendricks county. He is very widely known throughout the county, and has a large circle of warm friends, who esteem him for his record as a teacher and as a public official. It is probable there is no one, not even the minister, who comes as close in touch with the life of the community as does the school teacher, and in the nineteen years in which he taught in his home township he was brought closely in touch with life in all its phases. He has always been a practical and methodical man, as all members of the teaching profession usually are, has never known such a thing as idleness, and it can truly be said that he has been one of the most potent factors for good in the community in which he has spent so many of his years.

THOMAS C. ROSE.

The race of life is like a horse race; if one is properly started with suitable grooming, such as a good education and proper home training, he will lead in the race in after years and enjoy every moment of existence. Such home influences were thrown around Thomas C. Rose in his early years. Both father and mother were people of intelligence, religious instincts and high ideals, and their son has endeavored to uphold the honor of the family during his entire career, and Marion township has no more highly respected citizen or industrious farmer. As a gallant veteran of the Civil War he well merits an honored place in the history of this county.

Thomas C. Rose, a retired veteran of the Civil War, now living in North Salem, was born in Marion township, this county, in 1840, and has spent nearly seventy-five years within the limits of this county. He is the son of Lewis A. and Flora (Vannice) Rose. Lewis A. Rose was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, in 1801, the son of Charles and Mary (Reese) Rose. Charles Rose was born October 6, 1778, and his wife, Mary Reese, was born February 4, 1770. Lewis A. Rose married Flora Vannice August 11. 1825, and to this union were born ten children. About the year 1827 Lewis A. Rose and family came to Indiana and settled in Marion township, this county, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Lewis and his wife were members of the Presbyterian church, and at his death he owned two hundred and forty acres of land in Marion township. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis A. Rose were the parents of nine children. Two of the boys, Lewis and James, died in the Civil War, and another, Charles, died in his boyhood days, Thomas C., whose history is herein portraved, is the only one of the six sons who is living.

Thomas C. Rose stayed on the home farm until the opening of the Civil War and in 1861 enlisted in Company A, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and participated in various battles in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama. He was mustered out in 1863, because of ill health, being almost totally disabled at the time of his discharge. After regaining his health, he married Mary C. Clay in 1866. She was born in Putnam county, Indiana, and was the daughter of James Henry and Susan (Fleece) Clay.

After his marriage, Mr. Rose farmed for one year on his father's place and then came to Eel River township where he began operations on his own farm of one hundred and seventy acres, and continued to reside there until about 1900, when he moved into North Salem and retired from active work. He now rents his farm, but gives it his careful oversight.

Mr. and Mrs. Rose have one son, Webster C., who was born in 1877. He is married and is engaged in the poultry business in the state of Oregon. Mr. Rose has always been a very careful business man and has accumulated his competence through his own individual efforts. He has carried forward to careful completion whatever he undertook and his business methods have always been in strict concomitance with the standard ethics of business life. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which overcome obstacles and win success, and his example is eminently worthy of imitation by the coming generation.

FREDERICK NEWTON WRIGHT, M. D.

The art of healing has been practiced from the beginning of time and today there is no profession which offers more chance and better opportunities for alleviation of human suffering than does the medical profession. It is literally true that the physicians of this country hold its life in their hands, and the conscientious physician is he who does his duty the most scientifically and with the greatest sympathy. It is now an acknowledged fact that there is a therapeutic value in the hand clasp and in the smile of the physician and the most successful physician is he who successfully combines a magnetic smile with his healing drugs.

Frederick Newton Wright was born on June 22, 1878, in Indianapolis, Indiana, and is a son of Levi and Louisa (Martin) Wright. Levi Wright was a native of Salem, Washington county, Indiana, where he was born in 1834. His boyhood days were spent in that county at Salem, and on reaching manhood he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church and followed this noble profession until his death on July 4, 1891. For many years he preached at Ben Davis, and helped to build the church in that place. His wife was also a native of Washington county, Indiana, and is now living in Hazelwood, Hendricks county, Indiana, having remarried after her husband's death. Mr. and Mrs. Levi Wright were the parents of five children: Dr. Francis Marion Wright, of Indianapolis; William L., of Indianapolis, and Dr. Frederick N., of Hazelwood.

Frederick N. Wright spent his boyhood days in the city of Indianapolis and finished the common school course and later graduated from Shortridge high school in that city. He then entered the medical department of Indiana University, graduating in the spring of 1905, and immediately located at Hazelwood, Hendricks county, Indiana, for practice, and in the nine years which he has spent here in the active practice of his profession, he has built up a large and lucrative patronage. Doctor Wright has the necessary optimistic disposition which should be a part of every successful physician's equipment and this, coupled with his undoubted technical training, makes him one of the best physicians of the county.

Politically, Doctor Wright is a Progressive, but on account of his large practice he has not had time to take any prominent part in the game of politics. He and E. V. Milhon helped to install the Improved Order of Red Men in Hazelwood. He and his wife are both members of the Baptist church at Hazelwood.

Dr. Frederick Wright was married on May 28, 1905, to Mamie May, the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Watts) Adams, who were natives of Washington county, Indiana.

Doctor Wright is a genial man and makes friends easily because of his frank, open-hearted manner. He has a high standing in his community and is regarded as one of the coming physicians of this section of the state.

JUDGE THOMAS J. COFER.

The life history of him whose name heads this sketch has been for many years closely identified with the history of Hendricks county, Indiana. Throughout the years his life has been one of untiring activity and it has been crowned with a degree of professional success attained by comparatively few who aspire to eminence in their chosen calling. Years of conscientious work as a lawyer have brought with them not only increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession. By a straightforward, honorable course Mr. Cofer built up a large and lucrative legal business and, financially, has been proportionately successful. His life affords a splendid example of what an American youth, plentifully endowed with good common sense, energy and determination, can accomplish when accompanied by good moral principles. He achieved a splendid record at the bar at an age when most men are merely starting out on their life work, for, from the beginning, he was intensely methodical and unswervingly persistent in search of the true light and of the essentials of the legal foundation and sources of legal conception and thought, holding devoutly to the highly embellished record of equity and the sure, certain, invincible methods of practice. Therefore, success could not help crowning his efforts and attracting to him public recognition and appreciation.

Judge Thomas J. Cofer, lawyer, old soldier, public-spirited citizen and a friend of every one in Hendricks county, was born September 2, 1836, three and one-half miles north of Danville, this county. His parents, Stephen and Milanda (Ashbrook) Cofer, were both natives of Kentucky, his father coming to this county about 1831, and lived here the remainder of his life. Stephen Cofer was a plain and unostentatious farmer, who died at the age of sixty, his widow surviving him many years, her deash occurring at the advanced age of ninety-four years. Stephen Cofer and wife were the parents of eight children, only three of whom are now living: Mrs. Nellie Woods, of Oregon, Mrs. Nancy Riddle, of Kansas, and Judge T. J. Cofer.

Judge Thomas I. Cofer was born, reared and practically educated on the farm. The district schools of his day were very rudimentary, but his thirst for knowledge was such that he insisted on continuing his education. He therefore entered the Danville Academy and continued his education at Asbury University, and would have graduated from that institution had not the Civil War interrupted his career. With the first call for troops in the spring of 1861, Judge Cofer enlisted in the Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry for one year, and immediately upon the expiration of his term of enlistment he joined the Seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers. He was in the battle of Port Republic, where he was wounded in the shoulder. captured and thrown into prison, where he remained until he was paroled six months later. He then came home to recuperate, but as soon as he was able to go to the front again he enlisted in 1863 in the Ninth Regiment Indiana Cavalry, with which command he served until he was mustered out in September, 1865. He participated in the battles of Pulaski, Franklin, Nashville, Spring Hill, Rennell's Hill, Sugar Creek and many others. Immediately after the close of the war Mr. Cofer returned to Hendricks county, and was engaged for a short time in the mercantile business, studying law in the meantime. In 1872 he was admitted to the bar and has practiced in the courts of this county continuously since that time. He first entered into partnership with Judge J. G. Adams and later with Judge Newton M. Taylor. Some time afterwards he entered into partnership with Judge C. C. Hadley. which partnership was terminated in a few years and, until he was appointed judge of the circuit court in 1889, he practiced alone.' Governor Mount appointed Judge Cofer as judge of the circuit court in 1880 to succeed Judge John V. Hadley, who was elected to the supreme court at that time. He served two years as an appointee, and was then elected for six years on the Republican ticket, serving in all eight years. After leaving the bench he formed a partnership with Z. E. Dougan, his son-in-law, and the firm of Dougan & Cofer is still practicing in Danville.

Judge Cofer was married November 9, 1865, to Mary S. Scearce, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Scearce, of this county. Of the six children who were born to this marriage, four died in infancy, the two living being Mrs. Z. E. Dougan and Mrs. Dr. Thomas Barker, both of Danville. Mrs. Judge Cofe died in December, 1902.

Judge Cofer is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Loyal Legion. His career has indeed been a long and useful one in this county and has been marked with success in every particular. He is a man who is popular with every one, because of his cheerful disposition and charming personality. He can be truly called one of nature's noblemen.

ROSCOE R. LEAK.

Among the younger generations of Hendricks county farmers is Roscoe Leak, whose grandfather was one of the early settlers of the county. He is a fine type of the modern farmer who takes advantage of all the latest ideas in scientific agriculture and has the education to properly apply them. By a course which has been characterized by industry and perseverance he has established a reputation for good business methods and sound judgment in all his transactions.

Roscoe R. Leak, the son of James Hilary and Margaret (Leach) Leak, was born September 18, 1884, in Union township, this county. James Hilary Leak was also a native of this county and is the son of James L. and Amanda (Buzzard) Leak. James L. Leak was born in Kentucky in 1816, and came here about 1834 with his parents, James and Elizabeth (Vermillion) Leak. James Leak, the father, was the son of Robert Leak. James was born in Culpeper county in 1787 and came to Bracken county, Kentucky, in 1795. Elizabeth Vermillion was born in 1786 on the present site of Washington, D. C. Robert Leak and his wife, Susan, were born in England at about the close of the Revolutionary War. James H. Leak was born in this township in 1852 and spent his life up until 1909 on the farm where he was born. Margaret Leach, the wife of James Leak, was also a native of Hendricks county and was born in this township in 1865, the daughter of James M. and Elizabeth (Hamilton) Leach. She was married to James H. Leak on October 18, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. James H. Leak are the parents of two children, Roscoe, and Denie, who married George H. Dungan, of Urbana, Illinois. James H. Leak and his wife are now living in Lizton.

Roscoe R. Leak spent his boyhood days on the homestead farm and received his education in the schools of his township and the Lizton high school. After his graduation from the high school he entered the Central Normal College at Danville, graduating from the scientific course of that institution in 1906. At the age of twenty-five he married and began farming on the old homestead farm of one hundred and fifty-five acres, where he is still residing. He was married on September 15, 1909, to Minnie Noe, the daughter of John C. and Elizabeth (Selmire) Noe. John C. Noe was born in Clark county, Indiana, near Charleston, and his wife was a native of the same county. Mr. and Mrs. Noe are the parents of four children: Minnie, the wife of Mr. Leak, Henry, Nellie and May. To Mr. and Mrs. Leak has been born one daughter, Margaret.

Mr. Leak is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Lizton and he and his wife are both adherents of the Christian church, in which denomination Mr. Leak is an elder at the present time. He is a Republican in politics and takes an intelligent interest in the political questions of the day. Mr. Leak is a progressive farmer in every sense of the word and uses his brains as well as his brawn in his farming. He is a quiet and unassuming man in demeanor, yet decisive and firm in standing for what he believes to be the right thing. He is eminently utilitarian, and force of character, firmness of purpose and unswerving integrity are among his chief characteristics. Through his persistent efforts he has made for himself a place in connection with the productive energies and activities of his locality.

WILLIAM ROBERT DAVIDSON.

This is an age in which the farmer stands pre-eminently above any other class as a producer of wealth. He simply takes advantage of the winds, the warm air, the bright sunshine and the refreshing rains and, applying his own hands and skill to nature's gifts, he creates grain, hay, live stock, etc., all of which are absolute necessaries to the inhabitants of the world. Nature does much for the husbandman, so much, indeed, that it is often a question whether he fully appreciates what is thus done for him. Of course he must make proper use of his brain and his muscle, must not quail at obstacles and sit down and repine if things go wrong; on the contrary, he must ever be up and doing, with a heart for any fate. Such a man is William Robert Davidson, of Eel River township, one of the leading farmers in this locality and a man who has refused to permit obstacles to down him.

William Robert Davidson, the son of Daniel N. and Elizabeth (Davidson) Davidson, was born in North Salem, Hendricks county, Indiana, May 14, 1860. His father, Daniel N., was a son of Silas and Elizabeth (Stamper) Davidson, and was born September 6, 1832, in Breathitt county, Kentucky. Shortly after his birth, his parents moved to this state and settled about two and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, but a year later moved across in Montgomery county and entered land in the southeastern part of Clark township. Silas Davidson and wife lived there until 1855, then moved to Iowa and spent the remainder of their lives there. Daniel N. Davidson grew to manhood in this county and married Elizabeth Davidson, a native of this county and the daughter of Samuel and Susan (Dent) Davidson. Her parents were natives of Kentucky who had come here early in the history of the county. After Daniel N. Davidson was married, he and his wife went to Iowa with his parents, but three years later returned and located in North Salem, where he spent the most of his career in farming, although he has of late years been engaged in the mercantile business in North Salem. Early in life he started to study medicine, but eventually gave this up and devoted his attention to farming. He died in May, 1893, and his wife on December 31, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel N. Davidson were the parents of seven children: Oliver F., who died at the age of nine: Ida, who was the wife of William H. Vannice and died September 7, 1892; Melissa, who was the wife of A. G. Hypes and died in May, 1903; Lillie V., of North Salem; Mary N., the wife of James Oscar Emmons, of North Salem: William Robert, whose career is herein presented, and one child who died in infancy.

William Robert Davidson remained on the home farm until his marriage, after which he farmed his father's place for eight years and then, after three years' residence in North Salem, he bought ninety-two and a half acres east of his present farm, where he lived for thirteen years. He then sold this farm and moved four miles northeast of North Salem, after which he lived three years in North Salem, then bought his present farm of sixty-seven and a half acres, two miles northeast of North Salem. He has improved his farm in many ways and has brought it up to a high state of cultivation.

Mr. Davidson was married on January 13, 1884, to Rosella Crose, the daughter of James Ross and Ann Eliza (Riggin) Crose. James R. Crose was born in Marion township, this county, in 1834, the son of Andrew Jackson and Nancy (Rogers) Crose. Both his parents were born, reared and married in Nicholas county, Kentucky, and came to this county in 1831 and entered land. When James R. was about thirteen years old, his parents moved to Boone county, where Andrew J. Crose died about six months later, leaving his widow and seven children.

James Ross Crose remained in Boone county until his marriage, in 1852, to Lurancy Riley, the daughter of Allen and Levina Riley, of Boone county. His wife died in 1860, leaving one son, James Madison; two other children had died in infancy. James Madison Crose married Alice Ellington and was killed by a falling tree in Eel River township at the age of forty-two. Mr. Crose was married a second time on March 12, 1862. to Ann Eliza Riggin, who was born in 1842 in Montgomery county, Kentucky, daughter of Wesley and Ann (Wren) Riggin. She came with her parents from Kentucky to this county when she was nine years of age. They came in wagons, and consumed eight days in making the overland trip to this county. Mr. and Mrs. Riggin located about two miles north of North Salem and later moved three miles southwest of Lizton, where they made their home and spent the remainder of their lives. There were three children by the second marriage: Rosella, the wife of William Davidson: Lillie Dale, the wife of Dr. William Wiseheart, of Colfax, Indiana, and Mary Etta, the wife of Douglas S. Grimes, a merchant of North Salem. Dr. and Mrs. Wiseheart have one daughter, Nina: Mr. and Mrs. Grimes have two children. Edna and Herman C.: Mr. and Mrs. Davidson, of North Salem, have four daughters, Blanche Naomi, Murle Agnes, Nellie May and Hilda Marie, Blanche is the wife of James H. Fiscus, of North Salem; Murle Agnes is a teacher in the city schools of Muncie, having previously taught at North Salem and Connersville; the other two daughters are still at home. All four daughters graduated from the North Salem high school and three attended the Central Normal College at Danville. Murle has been a student at the State University at Bloomington.

Mr. Davidson is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has never sought or desired office of any kind, though by nature and experience he is well qualified to fill important trusts. He has chosen the quiet way rather than the turmoil and unrest, and in the quietude of home has found the content which would have been denied him in public places. A successful farmer, a kind and obliging neighbor and a worthy citizen, he has lived to honorable ends.

WILLIAM A. HOLLINGSWORTH.

The gentleman whose name heads this article is so well and favorably known throughout Hendricks county that an elaborate introduction to our readers would be superfluous; but some of the facts of his life's history cannot fail to be of interest to many.

Mr. Hollingsworth was born January 1, 1852, in Washington township, Hendricks county, the son of Samuel V, and Lydia (Mullin) Hollingsworth. His father, Samuel V., was one of the early settlers of the county. having been brought from Ohio by his own parents when a child, and living thereafter for many years in the vicinity of Plainfield. He received his schooling in the little country school, and lived the free, untrammeled life of the farm; but, though revelling in the pure air and sunshine of his surroundings, he was ambitious and sought eagerly for new avenues of employment. Never failing to grasp the opportunities for improvement which came to him, he learned the various trades of the silversmith, gunsmith and blacksmith, and became especially skilled as a wood worker, for which there was much demand in the early days, before the advent of the modern. machine-equipped furniture factory. His versatility found him ample employment aside from that of farming, and, though he spent his life in the country, it was in the various trades that he excelled. His wife, the mother of William Hollingsworth, was a native of North Carolina, coming first to Jackson county, and then to Hendricks county at the age of ten years with her parents, who settled near Plainfield. To this union were born four children, William A., Delia Catherine (Smith), Sarah Adaline and Charles Dayton.

In the year of 1883 death called the wife and mother, and in 1906 the father was carried to his final resting place.

Mr. Hollingsworth was not active in church, fraternal, or political affairs, though a consistent Republican voter; but was an excellent neighbor and interested in all movements for the public welfare at home and abroad.

The boyhood and youth of William A. Hollingsworth were spent upon his father's farm, and his education was afforded by the district school. Rural life with its labors and its pleasures became "second nature" to him, and the pursuit of agriculture in its various phases became, early in life, his chosen calling. He was married on November 13, 1873, to Ellen Hadley, who was born near Avon, the daughter of Enos and Susan (Smith) Hadley, and to them have been born five children, as follows: Florence Effie, Bertha Beatrice, Susan Belle, Samuel Vestal and Wilda Azalee. The eldest daughter, Florence Effie, was twice married, first to William Logston, one daughter being born of that marriage. Edna Logston: the second husband is Lewis Darnell, a prosperous farmer of Middle township. The second child of Mr. and Mrs. Hollingsworth is now Mrs. Earl C. Weaver, who lives in Texas and is the mother of two children, Gladys and Earl Cassius, Jr. Mr. Weaver was formerly a printer at Pittsboro and at Jamestown. Susan Belle, now Mrs. Carl Clark, resides on a farm southwest of Maplewood, in this county, and is the mother of one son, John William. The two younger children still enjoy the protection of the parental roof, being on the old homestead, which has been the abiding place of the family since March. 1874, though a new and modern residence was erected in 1012. Here Mr. Hollingsworth brought his bride the year following their marriage, and around the old house clustered all the memories of many happy years. The fifty-acre tract of land which surrounds the home is in a high state of cultivation and shows the care of an intelligent, careful, industrious man.

In the past Mr. Hollingsworth has dealt largely in live stock, having raised many choice animals for the market, and so discriminating in his judgment in this branch of his work that he found it profitable for eight years to give his time entirely to the purchase of live stock for John V. Hadley, depending upon hired help to carry forward the general work on his farm.

In the year 1904 Mr. Hollingsworth was elected trustee of Middle township and four years he served in this capacity, devoting his time and energy zealously to the service of the people.

Mrs. Hollingsworth is also a member of one of the most prominent families of Hendricks county, being the daughter of Enos Hadley, a native of this county and one of the pioneer settlers. He was born in 1825 and spent his days in his home locality. One of the very successful farmers in the vicinity, he yet found time and energy for the exercise of his talents in a still broader capacity, serving for many years as commissioner of Hendricks county, and also acting as ditch commissioner. He was actively engaged in this work until the day of his death, which occurred November 11, 1893, at the home of his son, Cassius Hadley, in Danville. His wife was a native of Henry county, Kentucky, born there January 28, 1834. Nine children were born to them: Ellen E. (Hollingsworth), James A., Horace E., Cassius C., deceased, Clara B. (Vickery), Robert S., Wilber E. and Lester B., deceased. The children have inherited the ability of the parents, and many have won for themselves enviable places in the community.

Reverting to the subject of this article, William H. Hollingsworth, we find him a man of few words, but with a kindly manner which inspires confidence not only in the home circle, but throughout the county, where he is known by a host of friends. He is a member of the Masonic order at Danville; an adherent of the Republican party, and both he and Mrs. Hollingsworth are prominent members of the Methodist church, at Bartlett's Chapel.

The living exemplification of virtuous lives, well spent for their family and the community at large, they are enjoying the fruits of their labor among a host of friends.

JOHN W. TINDER.

Among the men of a past generation who left the impress of their individuality upon Hendricks county. Indiana, there is no one who can gainsay the fact that John W. Tinder was one of nature's noblemen. To know him intimately was to be impressed with his earnestness of purpose, his purity of life and the nobility of his character. To be associated with him in daily work was to be impressed with the truth that here was a man honest, liberty loving and God fearing. He was retiring in his nature, yet he had that tenacity of purpose and that industry that pushed to successful completion whatever he undertook. He was ever an industrious man and his wonderful executive ability brought him much to do. He was justly proud of his military record, yet he rarely referred to it, and when he did it was with that modesty which revealed the unassuming man. He was an intense partisan and always took an active interest in his party's welfare, and it is doubtful if any man in Hendricks county knew more men in the county than did he at the time of his death. To a wonderful degree he held the confidence of the people and their confidence was never betrayed in the slightest degree. He was successful in the business world and his life throughout is a worthy example which the coming youth of this county would do well to emulate. In him was peace and his memory will be long cherished by those who knew him.

The late John W. Tinder, of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born January 22, 1835, in the county where he spent his whole life, and died in Danville July 8, 1903. He received such education as the common schools of his day afforded and spent all of his boyhood days on the farm where he was born. He remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age and then, on February 5, 1857, married Laura Hamrick, daughter of William F. and Jane Hamrick. The Hamrick family is one of the best known and oldest families of Putnam county, Indiana, and many of its descendants have occupied responsible positions in the affairs of the county.

Immediately after his marriage Mr. and Mrs. Tinder bought a farm in Marion township, where they lived most happily until July 2, 1862, and on that date Mr. Tinder enlisted in Company A. Fourth Indiana Cavalry, and commenced his service of three years in that memorable struggle which goes down in history as the greatest civil war the world has ever known. Upon the organization of the troops he was promoted to sergeant and was mustered out as lieutenant. He was in continuous service from the date of his enlistment until he was honorably discharged at Nashville, Tennessee, in September, 1865. He participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Dalton, Resaca, in all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro and Wilson's raid. He saw severe fighting in Kentucky at Lebanon and Perryville, and while on the Bardstown pike was wounded in the left leg below the knee. He received a furlough for two months on account of this disability, spending the time at home, rejoining his command at Gallatin, Tennessee. On the Atlanta campaign his regiment was under fire for almost four months, and after the surrender of Atlanta he returned to Nashville and was in the memorable battle of Franklin. He was always an active soldier and, possessing a hardy constitution, endured all the vicissitudes and hardships of army life with fortitude, but was never in a hospital nor captured during his period of service.

Shortly after the close of the war Mr. and Mrs. Tinder moved to Danville, where they resided until the time of his death, and his widow is still a resident of that place. Two children were born to them, both of whom died in infancy. They reared three children and gave them all the advantages of a tender mother's and father's care, namely: John O'Donnell, whom they took at the age of eight years, and who made his home with them until he died at the age of twenty-five; Linnie Wallen, who went to live with them at the age of ten, and who died in 1894, and Thomas Bence, who came into their lives when he was a child of fourteen, and who is now in the newspaper business in Danville.

Mr. Tinder had a love for politics and his interest in public affairs was one of the pronounced characteristics of his nature. He served during several campaigns as chairman of the county organization of the Republican party, and was elected commissioner of Hendricks county for four terms, and no county ever had a better or more faithful officer. He also served on the town board and at the time of his death was a trustee-elect from his ward. He was a member of Silcox Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and had been treasurer of this lodge for years. Among the monuments to his memory in his public official career is the Danville water plant, which was put in under his immediate supervision.

Such, in brief, is the life history of a man who truly lived for the service he could render to his home, to his country and to his God. His life was a blessing to the community in which he lived and, as has been said, the lives of such men do not go out, they go on.

ALFRED R. GLOVER.

This honored veteran of the Civil War is to be designated as one of the progressive and influential citizens of Hendricks county, where for many years he has maintained his home, figuring as one of the builders of the community and especially worthy of consideration in this work. He has, by his industry and sound judgment, not only improved a fine farm and gained a large competency for his old age, but he has materially assisted in the general welfare of the community, in many ways lending his valuable time and influence in the promulgation of various uplifting movements.

Alfred R. Glover, one of the leading farmers of Hendricks county, Indiana, and justice of the peace at Clayton, was born on December 19, 1841, near Belleville, this county, the son of James and Mary P. (Reagan) Glover, the former of whom was born in the northern edge of Tennessee on the Barron river in 1813. His parents both died when he was a small child and when a boy in his teens he came to Indiana, having relatives in Lawrence county, near Bedford, and also near Belleville, this county. He worked as a farm hand and saved his money, so that shortly after his marriage he was able to purchase eighty acres of land, something over two miles southwest of Clayton, and there the family took up their residence after the birth of the immediate subject of this sketch. It was on that farm James Glover passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring about 1888. Mary P. Reagan, mother of the subject, was a native of Virginia, born about 1815.

and was early left an orphan. At the age of four years she was brought westward into Indiana and was reared in the family of Major Red. They took up their residence near Belleville at an early day and in this locality she passed the remainder of her life. She remained on the home farm after the death of her husband until about two years prior to her death, when the subject built for her a home in Clayton and had nurses to care for her the remainder of her life. She passed away in 1892, surrounded by every care and comfort the subject was able to procure for her.

Alfred R. Glover grew to maturity on his father's farm south of Clayton, assisting with the work of the home place until the beginning of the Civil War. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company C. Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Gen, Benjamin Harrison, that regiment being part of the Twentieth Army Corps. As a private in the Army of the Cumberland he was with Sherman through the Atlanta campaign and was engaged in almost continual fighting after leaving Tennessee until the fall of Atlanta. At Resaca he was wounded, but made a quick recovery. It was at this battle he was in the hottest fight of his service. His regiment led the charge against the enemy and got into the fort through a rain of lead, fighting the enemy hand to hand. They captured four pieces of artillery, the only artillery captured on that campaign. In that fierce conflict of fifteen minutes, which well might have dismayed the brayest, they lost one hundred and sixty-nine men killed and wounded. After the close of the Atlanta campaign. Mr. Glover came down with typhoid fever. Up to that time he had never been off duty and now to his dismay he was ordered sent back to the hospital at Chattanooga. There he remained for some time, having the disease in so severe a form that at times his case seemed hopeless. However, he finally recovered sufficiently to be returned home, but so anxious was he to be again at the front that after a thirty-day furlough he rejoined his regiment at Alexandria, Virginia, going by rail to New York City and from thence by ship down the coast. This was in April, 1865, and when his regiment arrived at the place above mentioned he was so overjoyed that he rushed eagerly past the guards to greet his comrades in arms. He was still incapacitated on account of his illness and was not able to participate in the grand review of troops which passed before President Johnson (Lincoln having been assassinated a short time before) in Washington during May. 1865, but was able to witness that impressive sight and in June of the same year was mustered out of service and sent home. He returned to his father's farm and took up the reins of duty where he had lain them down at the call of his country.

On October 4, 1866, a little more than a year after his return from the army, Mr. Glover was united in marriage to Isabinda Estes, who was born on Mill Creek near Pecksburg, a daughter of Edward B. and Mary (Smith) Estes, both natives of Randolph county, North Carolina, and among the early pioneers of this section. Edward B. Estes, when a boy of eight years. was brought to Washington county, this state, by his parents and later came to Morgan county, where he was married. Later on he brought his family to near Pecksburg, where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land which another man had entered from the government, and there passed the remainder of his life. After his marriage, the subject purchased a farm of forty and three-quarters acres of land in section 29, in Liberty township. this county, near Hazelwood; the three-quarters of an acre was intended as a building site, the balance of the land being very wet. He carried out his plans, building a home and living there for many years until he moved to Clayton. Some time after his original purchase, he bought the eighty acres adjoining and in all has put in twenty-six hundred rods of ditching and drain tile. In this way he has disposed of the surplus moisture and has made an excellent farm of it which produces banner crops. In September, 1802, he moved into Clayton, where he bought a home, which he later sold for twenty-four hundred and seventy-five dollars, and in 1906 purchased the residence where he now resides. This is located in the northern part of Clayton, being one of the finest homes in the town, strictly modern, with private lighting plant and in the basement a fine flowing well that never runs less than an inch stream of water. Mr. Glover manages his farm and also is engaged in the coal business. In addition to his business, he has served as notary public for four years and for the past seventeen years has been justice of the peace. He was first appointed to fill out another's unexpired term and since that time has been four times elected, each time for a term of four years. He is considered remarkably wise and fair in his decisions, his long experience enabling him to see a case from all sides and also to judge correctly of the veracity of his witnesses. He is said never to have had a case reversed on appeal and in all the years he has had only four cases where a jury was called for and many cases have been venued to him from other townships. He has made for himself an enviable reputation in this line of work and by his wisdom and justice has promoted kindlier feelings among those who have been brought before him.

Mr. Glover has been twice married, his first wife having passed away on May 16, 1890. To their union had been born two children, the eldest being a son who died at birth in September, 1867. On July 24, 1875, their daughter Samantha was born. She is now Mrs. Oliver Edward Frazier and lives near Ellettsville, Owen county, this state. She is the mother of five children. Earl G., Annie, Effie, Mabel and Ruth.

On November 28, 1901, Mr. Glover was again married, his bride being Mary Frances Iones, who was born three miles south of Clayton, the daughter of John and Rose (Williams) Jones. John Jones was born in Owen county, this state, and when a small child of three years was brought to this county by his parents. John Jones, senior, entered land from the government south of Clayton and also purchased other land, making in all a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, where he lived the remainder of his life. He was an excellent man and for many years prior to his death was a minister in the Baptist church. He was a man of strong influence for good in the early days of this locality and reared his family strictly in accordance with the tenets of his chosen church society. His son John, father of Mrs. Glover. was also active in Baptist church circles, saving served his society as deacon for forty years prior to his death. The vocation of farming was his life's work and his efforts in this direction were entirely confined within Liberty township, this county. Rose Williams, mother of Mrs. Glover, was a native of North Carolina and at the tender age of two years was brought by her parents. Enoch Williams and wife, to Hendricks county, locating just east of the Jones farm, where Mr. Williams purchased land and passed the remainder of his life. Rose (Williams) Jones departed this life November 17, 1899, her husband, John Jones, junior, following her into the great beyond on May 15, 1907. It was the desire of Mr. and Mrs. Jones that their children should all be well educated, and after attending the schools near home where she received her elementary education, Mrs. Glover attended the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, and later studied at Franklin College, Franklin, this state. After teaching school for one year, she took further training at the State Normal School at Terre Haute. Then for one year she taught school in Johnson county, this state, two years in this county and three years in Page county, Iowa. She then returned to Clayton, where she has since resided. A sister, Mrs. Minnie Swindler, and a brother, J. Ulysses, are both also graduates of Franklin College. For ten years J. Ulysses Jones was connected with the United States revenue service. but is at present engaged in farming on the old homestead. Two others of the family, Wayland and Mrs. Alice Gully, attended Franklin College, Jewett, another brother, died in 1912.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Glover are members of the Baptist church at Clayton, the former having served as deacon for considerably over forty years, being ordained to that service on the same day as Mrs. Glover's father. This was in the Friendship Baptist church and Mr. Glover has continued without interruption ever since. Mrs. Glover also is active in church work, being the financial secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the White Lick association. Mr. Glover is secretary of the Crawford Industrial Home, located at Zionsville, this state, being a home for friendless children supported by the White, Lick association of Baptist churches. In politics, Mr. Glover is a Progressive, having readily endorsed the principles of the new party as laid down by the leaders of same at its birth in Chicago. Prior to that time he had been a stanch Republican. Mr. Glover is a man whose influence has ever been extended for the advancement of the best interests of his community, and is held in the very highest esteem by the friends and neighbors who have known him for years, This is the highest tribute a man can win. To live in the same community year in and year out, to be engaged in the public administration of affairs, and to rise steadily in the regard and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact is the great privilege only of those whose lives are ordered by the highest principles and who give themselves unselfishly to the best interests of others. Mrs. Glover is known as a woman possessing many admirable traits of character, of keen intelligence and broad sympathies, whose helpful hand is ever outstretched to assist in the moral and educational welfare of those about her.

JOHN ENOS LEACH.

Among the men of sterling worth and character who have made an impress upon the life of the locality in which they live there is no one who has received a larger meed of popular respect and regard than John E. Leach, whose family name is well known throughout this county. A lifelong residence in one county has given the people an opportunity to know him in every phase of his character and that he has been true to life in its every phase is manifested in the degree of confidence and regard in which he is held by all those who know him.

John E. Leach, one of the most prosperous farmers of Union township, was born July 30, 1861, in the township where he has lived all his life

His parents were James M. and Elizabeth (Hamilton) Leach, both of whom were born in Hendricks county. James M. Leach was born February 9, 1834, and was the son of Enos and Elizabeth Leach, who were natives of Kentucky. They settled in Union township, Hendricks county, in the fall of 1831, where Enos Leach entered two hundred acres. They were the parents of seven children, of whom James M. was the fifth. James M. grew to manhood in Hendricks county and was married on March 17, 1859, to Elizabeth Hamilton, the daughter of Abraham Hamilton, of Hendricks county. James M. Leach became one of the leading farmers of the county and had two hundred and seventy-one acres of fine farming land and one of the finest residences in the county. He and his wife were members of the Christian church, of which he was an elder for several years.

John E. Leach was given a good common school education and remained at home until he was twenty-five. He then began farming on land which his grandfather had entered and to this he has added seventy-eight acres, which now gives him a fine farm of three hundred and eighteen acres in this township. He has a beautiful home, excellent barn and outbuildings and keeps all these details about his place in a manner which speaks well for the taste of the owner. He has raised all of the crops which are peculiar to this latitude and in addition has supplemented his annual income by breeding a large amount of stock each year.

Mr. Leach was married September 1, 1886, to Malissa Money, the daughter of John T. and Malinda Money. John T. Money was a native of Kentucky and came to this county with his parents when he was a small boy. His wife was a native of Boone county, Indiana, and died on the Money homestead farm in this county in 1903. Mr. Money died December 11, 1906, on his son's farm south of Danville, as a result of a severe fall. Mr. and Mrs. Money were the parents of seven children: William; John, deceased; Pressley; Oliver; Malissa, the wife of Mr. Leach, and two who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Leach have reared a family of five children: Granville, Paul, Fannie E., deceased, Ralph and Emma. Paul married Mamie Kendle and lives on a farm across from the old homestead place; he has three children, Pauline, John Edward and Barbara Ellen.

Mr. Leach is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Lizton. Politically, he has always identified himself with the Republican party and takes an interest in the various political questions of the day, although he has never been a seeker for any office. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and take a deep and abiding interest in all church work, Mr. Leach being a elder in the church at the present time. Personally, he is one of the best known farmers in the township and is well liked by everyone because of his square dealings and upright manner in all things. He can now look back over his life without regret for any misspent days, for it has been such as to bring only good to himself and to others.

JACOB J. PAGE.

It is not possible in the brief history which is here presented of Jacob J. Page to enter into the interesting details of his career in an exhaustive manner. He has filled a large and important place in the ranks of success-cessful citizens in Eel River township and has done his part well. His record as a farmer and as a public-spirited citizen has been such as to gain for him the compensation and approval of his fellow citizens. His career has been a long, busy and useful one and he has contributed much to the material, civic and moral advancement of the community.

Jacob J. Page, the son of Jeremiah J. Page and wife, was born March 15, 1865, two and one-half miles west of North Salem, in Putnam county, Indiana. A complete history of the Page family is given in the biography of Jeremiah J. Page, which is found elsewhere in this work.

Jacob J. Page received a good common school education and remained under the parental roof until his marriage, when his father gave him twenty acres and, with this as a beginner, he has become one of the most prosperous and substantial farmers of the county. He has been a farmer and stock raiser all of his life, making a specialty of cattle and hogs. He has also bought and sold land at different times, and by the use of good judgment has usually been able to realize on each transaction. As he was able, he added to his possessions until he now owns nine hundred and sixty-six acres of land, all of which is improved. On his different farms he has good houses, barns and outbuildings and he takes a great deal of pride in keeping everything in an attractive manner, believing that an attractive appearance enhances the value of his property.

Mr. Page was married in 1891 to Ida Thompson, the daughter of Nelson C. and Margaret (McCreary) Thompson. Nelson Thompson was born April 30, 1843, in Boyle county, Kentucky, the son of John R. and Martha Thompson. In the summer of 1843 John R. Thompson and his family came to this county and bought a farm in Eel River township. In addition to farming, John Thompson bought and sold a large amount of live stock, especially mules and horses. Nelson Thompson grew to manhood in this county and married Margaret McCreary, the daughter of Huston and Lucinda (Jordan) McCreary. Margaret McCreary was born in Clark township, Montgomery county, her parents having come from Virginia in pioneer times and entered a homestead near New Ross, Montgomery county. After his marriage Nelson Thompson came to Hendricks county and farmed in Eel River township until his death, in April, 1906. His wife died in July, 1898.

Mr. and Mrs. Page are loyal members of the Christian church of North Salem. They are the parents of nine children, all of whom are still living at home: Asa, Cecil, Bessie, Birdie, Roxie, Mamie, Lena, Oscar and Stella. Mr. Page is a public-spirited and progressive man and has always been interested in the various movements and measures which were calculated to improve the welfare of his community. Quiet and unassuming in demeanor, he has always attended strictly to his own business and for this reason is numbered among the representative men of his community.

BENJAMIN GRAYSON EDMONDSON.

The occupation of farming, to which the major part of the business life of Benjamin G. Edmondson, one of the well known and popular citizens of Hendricks county, has been devoted, is the oldest pursuit for a livelihood of mankind and the one in which he will ever be the most independent. The subject's name has been inseparably connected with the general growth of Hendricks county, of which he has long been a resident. While primarily attending to his own varied interests, his life has been largely devoted to his fellow men, having been untiring in his efforts to inspire a proper respect for law and order and ready at all times to uplift humanity along civic and social lines.

Benjamin G. Edmondson, retired farmer of Hendricks county, who is now living in comfortable retirement in Clayton, was born in Morgan county, this state, on September 11, 1831, the son of Francis and Jane (Grayson) Edmondson. Francis Edmondson was born in Knox county, Tennessee, in 1802, where he grew to manhood and was there united in marriage with Jane Grayson. About the year 1828 they came into Indiana and settled in Morgan county, where they entered government land and remained there until the subject was about two years old, when they came to Hendricks county and entered government land south of the Walker farm, located south of the national road in Liberty township. He at first entered eighty arces, but purchased more later and was possessed of two hundred and sixty acres at the time of his death. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Baptist church and in this faith they reared their family.

Benjamin Grayson Edmondson grew from babyhood to manhood in this county, receiving his elementary education in the early schools of this district and later attending Franklin College. On October 20, 1853, he was united in marriage with Mary A. Little, who was born near Plainfield, a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Greene) Little, her father being a farmer who had come to this county from Washington county, this state. After the subject was married, he took his bride to a little cabin which he had erected and prepared for her with his own hands on a tract of land where only twenty acres were at that time cleared. He had considerable more work to do in this line and in preparing his land for cultivation he endured the hardships and privations of the early pioneers. On this first tract he lived for about three years, when he purchased the tract of forty acres adjoining, where he resided until 1867. He then moved a short distance south of Clayton, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres, to which he later added eighty acres more and then again a tract of one hundred and eight acres. He now owns about six hundred and forty acres of excellent land, in this township, all attesting to the business ability and indomitable energy of their owner. On January 14, 1888, Mrs. Edmondson passed away, being the mother of eight children who lived beyond infancy, one of whom, Rebecca, died when seventeen years of age. The seven living are Columbus, Robert A., Mrs. Lizzie Worrell, Thomas B., Joseph L., Samuel Eugene and Charles Arthur. Mr. Edmondson has the pleasure of seeing all his children in good circumstances and an excellent way of life, and has the additional enjoyment of having them all near him, as all reside in or near Clayton. All but Charles are engaged in farming, he being in the implement business. He is a skilled marksman and a trap shooter of national reputation. Robert is president of the People's Bank and Trust Company. Joe is a prosperous and successful farmer, who, in addition to the regular business of his farm, pays particular attention to a fine strain of horses and mules.

On February 29, 1888, Mr. Edmondson was again united in marriage, his bride being Mrs. Mary E. (Springer) Ader, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, the daughter of Benjamin O. and Eliza Springer. In 1856.

when she was fifteen years old, her folks moved to Decatur county, where her father entered land for himself and all his sons. In 1860 she was united in marriage to Jacob H. Ader, who was born in Putnam county, this state. His father and Mrs. Edmondson's father moved to the state of Iowa at the same time. In 1861 Mr. and Mrs. Ader came back to Indiana and located in Putnam county, near Groveland, and remained there as long as her first husband lived. His death occurred about 1872. She remained there on the farm until the time of her marriage to Mr. Edmondson. She had two sons by her first husband, John W., of Danville, and Solomon O., who still lives on the farm in Putnam county. In 1902 Mr. Edmondson purchased a residence in Clayton, where he has lived most of the time since, but he passes considerable of his time on the farm. He has made farming and stock raising his life's vocation and still continues to manage the farm. Mr. Edmondson has raised himself to an enviable position among the agriculturists of his county, entirely by his own efforts. He possesses an unfailing energy, excellent judgment and his ambition has ever been set on a goal far ahead. While seeking primarily the interests of himself and family, he has ever horne in mind his duty to his fellow man, and has proven himself a neighbor of unusual helpfulness and consideration. Through this manner of living, he has endeared himself to a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Edmondson is independent in politics, voting for the man instead of the party every time. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and give liberally toward its support. He is one of the trustees of the church and has been an honored and active member for a number of years. United in his composition are so many elements of a provident, practical nature, which during a series of years have brought him into prominence and earned for him a first place among the enterprising men of his county, that it is but just recognition of his worthiness that he receive specific mention in this work.

MARSHALL UNDERWOOD.

The biographies of the representative men of a country bring to light many hidden treasures of mind, character and courage, well calculated to arouse the pride of their family and of the community, and it is a source of regret that the people are not more familiar with the personal history of such men, in the ranks of whom may be found tillers of the soil, mechanics, teachers, as well as lawyers, physicians, bankers and members of other vocations and professions. The subject of this sketch is distinctively one of the leading citizens of the township in which he lives, and as such has made his influence felt among his fellow men and earned a name for enterprise, integrity and honor that entitles him to worthy notice in a work of the nature of this volume.

Marshall Underwood, the son of Franklin and Ella (Christie) Underwood, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, September 27, 1863. His father was born March 1, 1826, in Shelby county, Kentucky. He came to this county with his parents when he was eight years of age. His father, John Underwood, entered land in Marion township, this county, and lived on the farm which he entered, until his death in 1861.

Franklin Underwood was twice married, his first wife being Catherine Martin, to whom he was married January 24, 1850. To the first marriage were born three children: Clara, who died September 21, 1867; Mrs. Rebecca Beckley and Mrs. Sarah L. Christie. His first wife died August 13, 1859, and in 1860 Mr. Underwood married Ella Christie, who was a native of Kentucky and has been a resident of this county since she was four years of age. Her parents came to this county from Kentucky and lived near New Winchester in Marion township. To this second marriage was born one child, Marshall, whose history is herein presented. The second wife of Franklin Underwood was born in 1832 and died in 1914, at the age of eighty-one.

Franklin Underwood was a remarkable man in many ways. He was a very careful man in his business affairs, and in everything he did was honest and upright. While he was laying aside a comfortable competence for his old age, he did not neglect the affairs of a higher life to come. In 1852 he, with his wife and three of his sisters, united with the New Winchester Baptist church. In 1857 he was chosen and ordained a deacon in that denomination. In 1862 he changed his church membership to Danville and united there with the Regular Baptist church, and still later, as a matter of convenience, he placed his membership in the Palestine church, in Putnam county, Indiana, where he continued as a member until his death, May 2, 1892. Franklin Underwood was one of a family of seven and of his five sisters and one brother, all are deceased now except his sister, Mrs. Lottie McMurry, who lives at Spokane, Washington. At his death he had a farm of two hundred and eighty acres, one hundred and eighty of which was in Putnam county and the remainder in Marion township, this county.

Marshall Underwood has lived all his life in Marion township and in that township received his early training on the farm and in the district schools. He has two hundred and eighteen acres of land south of New Winchester, and has it well improved in every way. He raises live stock and also feeds much stock for the market, in addition to his general farming.

Mr. Underwood was married the first time on October 28, 1885, to Clara Johnson, a native of Morgan county, Indiana, and to this union were born two children, Mable, born July 1, 1890, and Clarence, born April 13, 1896. Mable married Glenn Brown, a farmer in Putnam county, November 10, 1912. Clarence is still with his father on the home farm. Mr. Underwood was married a second time on October 1, 1902, to Cora Thompson, a native of Hendricks county, and the daughter of Charles and Sarah Jane (Moon) Thompson. To this union was born one child, May 18, 1913, now deceased. Mrs. Underwood's father was a native of Illinois, and her mother of this county, both of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson have a family of six children: Cora, the wife of Mr. Underwood, Mavia, Maggie, James E., Effie and Charles Walter.

Mr. Underwood is a Democrat in politics, but takes no further interest in politics than to cast his vote for the candidate of his party at election time. He and his wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church and he has been a trustee in that denomination for the past six years. He is a jovial man, with a happy disposition and easily wins friends. He is a man with keen judgment and business qualities which would have made him a success in any line of business to which he might have turned. His conduct during his whole career has been exemplary and no action of his has ever brought upon him the condemnation of his fellow citizens, and thus he justly deserves the esteem and good will which his neighbors have for him.

CHARLES W. KOCHER.

Agriculture has always been an honorable occupation and at the present time the agricultural output is more than equivalent to the total output of all the factories of the United States. There is one thing in the life of a farmer which distinguishes him from men in other occupations, and that is his ability to exist independent of every other occupation. The merchant, the banker, the manufacturer and the professional man depend absolutely on the farmer's crops. A famine throughout this county would wreck the strongest bank, close the factories and bankrupt the merchants. The business man can see his business collapse within a week, but nothing short of an earthquake can ruin the farmer. Land is and it always has been, the most stable investment; panics may sweep the manufacturer out of business over night, but the farmer can survive them when every other industry falls. Therefore the farmer is the backbone of the nation and he who makes two blades of grass grow where but one formerly grew is performing the most important mission of man. Hendricks county's farmers are as good as can be found anywhere in the world and their history is the history of the material advancement of the county, and no farmer in the county is more deserving of recognition in this series of sketches than is the gentleman whose name heads this sketch.

Charles W. Kocher was born September 19, 1860, in Marion county, Indiana, seven miles west of Indianapolis, on the Hanch free gravel road. His father, Edwin Kocher, was born in Allen county, Pennsylvania, and when a child moved with his parents to a place near Columbus, Ohio. When he was eight years of age, his parents moved to Indianapolis, where Edwin F. was reared to manhood and married. Edwin F. and his father operated a blacksmith shop on West Washington street, Indianapolis, for several years. They then moved seven miles west of Indianapolis, where they lived until the death of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Kocher, he dying in 1892 and his wife in 1804.

Charles W. Kocher received his education in Marion county, Indiana, completing his common school education in the city schools of Indianapolis. In 1894 he moved to his present farm, which he has been operating for the past twenty years. As a farmer he has been uniformly successful in his crops and raising live stock, which is peculiar to this section of the state, Duroc Red hogs receiving his chief attention.

Mr. Kocher was married in 1891 to Louise J. Hurion, of Hendricks county, and to this union have been born two children, Florence, born May 27, 1892, who is a teacher in the public schools, and Harry B., born November 20, 1896, who is still at home with his parents. Mr. Kocher is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Plainfield, joining the lodge there shortly after attaining his majority. He has lived a simple, plain and unostentatious life, doing the good that he could in his community and performing all of those civic duties which are the privilege of every American citizen. He is a Republican, but never aspired for any office. Mrs. Kocher and daughter are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Avon.

DAVID W. CARTER.

David W. Carter, a twentieth-century farmer, knows very little of the disadvantages which surrounded the pioneer farmers of this state. No longer is the farmer compelled to rise early in the morning and continue his labors far into the evening. The farmer of today can do as much work in a half of a day as his father could fifty years ago in a whole day. The rural route leaves the daily paper on his door step each day, the telephone puts him in instant communication with his neighbors, and the interurban and automobile enable him to participate in all the features of city life. Surrounded by such conditions, the farmer of today can have all the advantages of the citizens of the city with few disavantages.

David W. Carter, the son of John M. and Susan (Wells) Carter, was born in 1855, on the farm where he now lives near Avon, Indiana. He was educated in the common schools of his township and later took a course in Northwestern Christian University, now known as Butler College, Indianapolis. After completing his college course he returned to his home county, where he has continued to follow the occupation of farming. In addition to raising all of the crops of this latitude, he makes a speciality of Poland China hogs and Jersey cattle. For the past year he has operated an upto-date dairy and has proved to be a very successful dairyman.

Mr. Carter was married in 1876 to Susan Hiatt, the daughter of Jesse and Achsa Hiatt, his wife being born in 1854 in Henry county, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Carter have seven children: Louis F., born in 1877, who is a farmer residing with his parents on the home farm; Mrs. Eva May Larsh. born in 1881, who is the wife of a farmer in the northeastern part of Washington township. She has three children, Raymond, Russell and Edna; John L., born in 1885, who is married and is a street car conductor in Indianapolis; Grace M., born in 1886, who is single and has attended the Metropolitian Musical College, Indianapolis, is a musician of more than ordinary ability and is now teaching a large class at home; Mary E., born in 1888, is single and living at home; she graduated from the high school at Indianapolis; Walter E., born in 1891, is an electrician and is making a special study of wireless telegraphy; Paul H. is working for the Bell Telephone Company, and Fanny. Mr. and Mrs. Carter have given all of their seven children the advantage of the best education possible and take a great deal of pride in the achievements of their children.

Mr. Carter is one of the most prosperous farmers of Washington township and his reputation as a farmer and public-spirited citizen is not confined to his local township, as is shown by his service on the county council for two terms and the township board two terms. In his official capacity as councilman, he advocated all measures which were for the welfare of his county, and took a decided stand in favor of all improvements which might enhance the value of farm property. He is a Republican in politics. Mr. and Mrs. Carter are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Avon and Mr. Carter has been a trustee of the church for several years. They are both interested in church work and are firm believers in the value of the church as a social center in the community. Fraternally, Mr. Carter has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Plainfield, for many years.

DR. E. RAY ROYER.

That "man lives not to himself alone" is an assertion that is amply verified in all the affairs of life, but its pertinence is most patent in those instances where men have so employed their inherent talents, so improved their opportunities and so marshalled their forces as to gain prestige, which finds its sphere of influence ever widening in beneficence and human helpfulness. Greater than in almost any other vocation is the responsibility that rests upon the physician, since in his hands repose at times the very issues of life and death. To those who attain determinate success must there be not only given technical ability, but also a broad human sympathy which shall pass from mere sentiment to be an actuating motive for helpfulness.

Dr. E. Ray Royer, of North Salem, was born in Stockwell, Tippecanoe county, Indiana, October 22, 1875. His parents were J. W. and Sarah (Miller) Royer, both of whom were natives of that county. His father, who traces his ancestry back to the first colonists who came to America, is a merchant at Stockwell.

Doctor Royer was educated in the common and high schools of Stockwell, and then took a course in a business college at Lafayette, Indiana. In the fall of 1899 he matriculated in the Physio-Medical College of Indiana at Indianapolis, graduating four years later. In order to better prepare himself for his life work, he spent two years as an interne in the College Dispensary of Indianapolis, thereby gaining an experience which has been of invaluable assistance to him. At the end of his interneship at Indianapolis, he settled in North Salem, engaging in the active practice of his profession, in which he has continued very successfully since. He is now company surgeon for the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway Company for Hendricks county, and, as their representative, has the patronage of all the employees of the company in this county, or of any one who become injured within the limits of the county. Doctor Royer has made a special study of the diseases of women and has had considerable experience along this line. Doctor Royer is a physician who believes in keeping abreast of the times, and to this end he keeps in close touch with the various medical associations, being a member of the county, state and American medical associations and ex-president of the Hendricks County Medical Society.

Doctor Royer was married June 19, 1895, to Cora McDole, of Stockwell, the daughter of Clinton and Ada (Anderson) McDole. Her father was a life-long farmer and upon his retirement from active life owned six hundred acres of land in Tippecanoe county. Doctor Royer and his wife both belong to the Methodist Episcopal church of North Salem, while, fraternally, he is a Mason, having membership with the Royal Arch chapter of his town, and is very much interested in the workings of that order. He and his wife have a beautiful bungalow in North Salem where they dispense genuine hospitality in a very charming fashion.

MARSHALL S. GLIDEWELL.

The present age is essentially utilitarian and the life of every successful man carries a lesson which, told in contemporary narrative, is productive of much good in shaping the destiny of others. There is, therefore, a due measure of satisfaction in presenting, even in brief resume, the life and achievements of such men, and in preparing the following history of the successful farmer whose name appears above it is with the hope that it may prove not only interesting and instructive, but also serve as an incentive to those who contemplate making the agricultural profession their life work.

Marshall S. Glidewell, the son of Thomas and Elizabeth Glidewell, was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, July 2, 1856. Thomas Glidewell's father came from North Carolina and settled near Shelbyville, Shelby county, Indiana, in 1828, where Thomas was born on November 22, 1829.

Marshall S. Glidewell came with his parents from Missouri to Marion county when he was two years old and lived in Marion county until his (21) marriage, in 1884. After finishing the common school course in his own township, he took a course in the Old Pike Township Academy, near Trader's Point, in order to prepare himself for the teaching profession. He taught one year in the Brown school, Brown township, Hendricks county, and twelve in Marion county, and was counted among the most successful teachers of these counties. The teaching profession lost a good instructor when he decided to retire from the school room and engage in farming. However, he has been no less successful as a farmer than as a teacher, and is now recognized in Hendricks county as one of the foremost farmers of the county. He is now and has been for six years the chairman of the farmers' institute, is now vice-chairman, and has taken a prominent part in the selection of a county agent for his county. His long experience in the school room has made a student of him in his agricultural affairs and there is probably no better posted man in the county on general agricultural topics than Mr. Glidewell. He has successfully combined theory and practice and in his career as a farmer he has exemplified the old saying that it takes even brains to be a good farmer.

Mr. Glidewell was married on March 20, 1884, to Laura A. Hockensmith, the daughter of Henry and Jane Hockensmith. After Mr. Glidewell quit teaching in Marion county, they removed, on Auguust 4, 1891, to Hendricks county and bought the farm on which they now reside. He took this farm, which was in a very dilapidated condition, and has now made it one of the most attractive farms of the county. He has a beautiful home and takes a great deal of pride in keeping everything about him in first-class condition at all times. He has, in addition to his general farming, made a specialty of Poland-China hogs and has shown that it takes good judgment and a knowledge of scientific feeding in order to make the raising of hogs a lucrative business. Many farmers are not cognizant of the fact that Purdue University issues bulletins which set forth in detail the scientific method of feeding, and that these bulletins may be had free of charge by application to the department of agriculture connected with the university. It is in keeping in touch with affairs of this nature that makes Mr. Glidewell stand out prominently as a progressive and up-to-date farmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Glidewell have two interesting children, who are now in college. Ivan S. and Eva O. Their oldest child, Wilma R., was born June 24, 1888, and died a year later, June 22, 1889. Ivan S., born June 9, 1891, is a senior in Earlham College at Richmond, Indiana, where he is pursuing a course in scientific chemistry. The daughter, Eva O., who was born November 14, 1883, is a sophomore in Earlham College, and is making a special study of the Latin language, preparing to teach. Mr. and Mrs. Glidewell are justly proud of their two children, who are certainly an honor to their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Glidewell have a hospitable home where they entertain their friends, who are as numerous as their acquaintances. Mr. Glidewell has lived a very useful life and has been prominent in the advancement of material, social and moral interests in his county. He always stands for such men and measures as he firmly believes will advance the best interests of the community and by so doing he has won the hearty approbation of all of those with whom he comes in daily contact. He has been a leader in his community in the use of commercial fertilizers scientifically, also advocated and put in practice sub-drainage of soils for the redeeming of land for better agriculture; also stands for good roads. He has a beautiful home, modern, as well as all of his outbuildings, which are among the best in the township.

M. H. WEHR.

One of the progressive farmers and highly respected citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, is M. H. Wehr, who takes high rank among the agriculturists of his township and vicinity. He possesses energy and determination, and has been very successful in making everything he undertakes result to his advantage, and his success in his chosen calling is attested by the fact of his having started in a humble manner and is now the owner of valuable real estate, having accumulated the same by his own efforts.

M. H. Wehr, a prosperous farmer of Washington township, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in Franklin county, this state, July 9, 1854, the son of John and Nancy (Pierson) Wehr, who were highly respected citizens of their home community. When Mr. Wehr was a small child of two years he went with his parents to Butler county, Ohio, remaining there until he was twenty-two years old, at which time he returned to Indiana, and after living four years in Franklin county he moved to Washington township, Hendricks county, in 1880, and settled on the farm where he has continued to reside since that time. As a farmer he has been a pronounced success, owing to his persistent efforts and sound judgment, and among his fellow agriculturists he occupies an enviable standing because of his business success and personal characteristics. He has carried on general farming and has also given much attention to live stock, principally horses.

Mr. Wehr was married on September 29, 1876, to Lida F. Freeland, the daughter of Alfred and Ann (Stout) Freeland, of Marion county, this state, and to this marriage were born three children: Mrs. Lillian Urmston, born September 9, 1877, and now a resident of Riley county, Ohio; Lannes S., born July 17, 1879, now a farmer of Butler county, Ohio, and Grace, born October 9, 1881, who is now making her home with her sister at Riley, Ohio. Mr. Wehr's first wife died July 9, 1884, and he was again married on September 29, 1887, to Margaret Freeland, the daughter of George and Elizabeth (Harmon) Freeland, she a native of Floyd county, Indiana, and he of Franklin county, Indiana, and now living at Lizton, Indiana.

Mr. Wehr is a Democrat in his political views and, religiously, he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church at Clermont.

ROBERT BAYLISS.

Among the native sons of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have spent their entire lives within its borders, is Robert Bayliss, a prosperous farmer of Liberty township. He was born April 18, 1867, in the township where he has spent his whole life. His parents were John William and Frances (Brill) Bayliss. John Bayliss was born in 1820 in Virginia, and came to this county in 1859, with his wife and three sons. They drove through from Virginia, following the national road through Ohio and Indiana, and located at Center Valley, in Liberty township, this county. A brother of Mrs. Bayliss, William Brill, was already here when Mr. Bayliss arrived. Here they farmed for several years on a tract of sixty acres. Later John W. Bayliss sold this farm and bought property near Hazelwood, where he spent his remaining days, his death occurring on September 30, 1909, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He was a stanch Democrat all his life and held the office of township supervisor for several years. He was an ardent member of the Methodist Episcopal church at Salem, Indiana, and was a man who lived a Christian life in every way. Frances Brill, the wife of John W. Bayliss, was born in Virginia in 1829 and is still living at the old home place near Hazelwood, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. She is still hale and hearty and, despite her years, can do a heavy day's work, either inside the home or on the farm. Mr. and Mrs. John W. Bayliss were the parents of nine children: William M., who lives in Clarence, Missouri: Marshall, of Clayton, Indiana; Edward, who died in 1911; John, a resident of Mooresville, Indiana; James, of Clayton, Indiana; Thomas, who lives in Seattle, Washington; Robert, with whom this narrative deals; Charles, who died at the age of three years; Ella, who stays at the old home place with her mother.

Mr. Bayliss was married March 25, 1893, to Lura Busby, the daughter of Smith and Adeline (Shipley) Busby, and to this union there have been born two daughters, Hazel and Helena, who are both at home with their parents.

Smith Busby, the father of Mrs. Bayliss, was born May 28, 1842, near Hazelwood, Indiana, and was the son of Miles and Ellen (Harrison) Busby. Miles Busby and wife were the parents of a family of eleven children, all of whom are deceased but Rachel, Smith and John Thomas. These children, in the order of their birth, are as follows: William, Margaret, Mary, Rachel, Susan, Lucinda, Smith, Elizabeth, John Thomas and Rebecca. Mrs. Rachel (Busby) Busby lives in this county; John Thomas is a resident of Indianapolis and is employed by Kingan & Company.

Smith Busby was married in 1863 to Adeline Shipley, the daughter of James and Mary (Borders) Shipley, and to this union were born three children: Lura, the wife of Robert Bayliss; Anda, deceased, and Elvin, who lives with his father. Mrs. Busby died in April, 1910. Mr. Busby has been a keen business farmer and now is the owner of one hundred and seventy-nine acres of excellent farming land in Liberty township, this county. He has been a life-long Democrat and a loyal member of the Missionary Baptist church from earliest manhood.

Robert Bayliss has followed agricultural pursuits in this county all his life. His boyhood days were spent in Liberty township, where he attended school and before reaching manhood he lived in Center township. He then spent one year in Marion township, where he rented a farm, and later returned to Liberty township and remained there for seven years. While in Liberty township he was married and in the same year moved to Franklin township, on his father-in-law's farm, and here he remained until 1903, when he returned to Liberty township and bought his present farm. He has forty-nine acres of excellent farming land, valued at one hundred and fifty dollars an acre. He keeps everything about his place in excellent repair and his place presents a very attractive appearance at all times.

Mr. Bayliss is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, at Hazel-wood, and of the Pocahontas Lodge of the same place. Politically, he is a Democrat, but has never been active in his party. He and his wife are loyal members of the Baptist church, at Hazelwood, and Mr. Bayliss has been a deacon in the church for the last two years. He and his wife are both faithful workers in the church and give liberally of their time and money to further the interests of the Gospel and the church in this community. Mr. Bayliss is congenial in his manner and has won a host of friends in this community. He is honest, frank and unassuming and is a man who is admired by everyone with whom he comes in contact.

JOHN W. HOLLAWAY.

The gentleman whose name heads this paragraph is widely known in Hendricks county, being one of the honored citizens of Brown township, where he is living quietly after a strenuous life of activity in connection with agricultural pursuits. His well directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment, have brought to him prosperity and his life demonstrates what may be accomplished by any man of energy and ambition who is not afraid to work and has the perseverance to continue his labors in the face of any disaster or discouragement that may arise. In all the relations of life, Mr. Hollaway has commanded the confidence and respect of those with whom he has been brought into contact and a biographical history of this locality would be incomplete without a record of his career.

John W. Hollaway is a native of this county, having been born on March 24, 1844, in the southwest corner of Brown township, the son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Coole) Hollaway, the former of whom was a native of the state of Virginia, the latter being a Hoosier by birth. Joseph Hollaway, while still a small lad, was brought to the state of Indiana by his parents, where his father, William Hollaway, entered government land near the city of Indianapolis. When a young man, in Virginia, William Hollaway served during the Revolutionary War. When Joseph Hollaway became of age, he came to Hendricks county and entered the land where in later years the subject of this sketch was born. He purchased one hundred and sixtyfour acres at that time, giving about one dollar and a half per acre, and in order to have the papers in the transfer properly made out it was necessary for him to go to the then small village of Crawfordsville, a considerable distance, which he covered on foot through what was then almost a wilderness. The land which he then purchased still remains in the Hollaway family, never having been owned under any other name. Joseph Hollaway lived on his newly acquired land for about five years before uniting in marriage with Elizabeth Coole, daughter of Frederick Coole, who was one of the early settlers near Indianapolis. Their entire married life was passed on the one place and there they reared their family of eight children. Joseph Hollaway passed from this life in August, 1895, and his wife lived until in February, 1901.

John W. Hollaway lived under the paternal roof until he was thirty years old, when he built his present home, just north of the old homestead and across the public highway. In December, 1873, he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Rice, daughter of Louis and Sophia (Harris) Rice, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. They came from families quite prominent in their respective communities in their native state, both being slave holders and people in good circumstances. The father of Sophia Harris Rice was William Harris, who upon coming to the state of Indiana entered a tract of government land where Clermont, Indiana, now is. He later disposed of that and entered land on which the northwest portion of the town of Brownsburg now stands. Louis Rice also entered government land about one mile north of the town of Brownsburg, and there he passed the remainder of his life.

To John W. Hollaway and wife were born three children, one of whom is still living. This is their son, Wilbert Forrest, who took as his wife May Offit, daughter of Alexander and May (Kelley) Offit, both natives of the Hoosier state. Wilbert and wife are the parents of four children, Russell. Esther and Byron. and a little daughter. Gladys, who died when ten years of age. One other child of Mr. and Mrs. Hollaway grew to maturity. This was their daughter Lena Leota, who became the wife of Wilbert Canary. She was the mother of one child. Paul Orlopp Canary, who was but fifteen months old when his mother died. He was then taken into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hollaway and is at present attending the Brownsburg high school and is a promising boy in his third year's work.

Both the subject of this sketch and his wife are members of the Christian church and are sincerely interested in the work of same. They live beautiful, consistent lives and their home radiates the warmth and cheer in the hearts of its owners. Mr. Hollaway has devoted the energies of his entire life to the vocation of farming and at present owns two hundred and forty acres of land, the majority being located in Brown township, all of which is in an excellent state of cultivation, showing care and close attention to modern methods of agriculture and the proper rotation of crops. Besides his farm, Mr. Hollaway owns property in Brownsburg, and while he has shown business ability of a high order and a proper desire to further his own interests, he has never lost sight of the essential qualities of a well rounded manhood and today is one of the most highly respected and esteemed citizens of his community. His quiet but kindly disposition has won for him friends all over the county, while the well regulated life he has led entitles him to representation in a biographical work of the scope intended in the present one.

FRED E. WARNER.

It is a generally acknowledged fact that journalism is one of the most important factors in twentieth-century life, exerting as it does an influence on practically every department of society. This relation is just as actual and potent in the smaller cities and towns as in the larger cities, and he who directs the policy of a newspaper, or wields the pen which gives expression to that policy, exerts a personal control over local thought and action not equalled by any other profession. Among the newspaper men of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have, by their progressive attitude toward local affairs, contributed in a very definite measure to the advancement of the community, is the gentleman whose name appears above and who is successfully publishing the Friday Caller at Plainfield, Indiana.

Fred E. Warner was born in Danville, in this county, on December 22, 1865. His parents were Dr. John T. and Mary R. (Rose) Warner, the father being a native of Long Island, New York, and the mother of Kentucky. His father came to this state before the Civil War and here met his future wife. Upon the outbreak of the war he became a surgeon in a New York regiment and served throughout that conflict in the cavalry branch of the service. Immediately after the close of the war he returned to Hendricks county and practiced medicine in Danville and Winchester until 1870. In that year he went to Neosho Falls, Kansas, his family following him one year later, and his death occurred there September 10, 1875. One year later his family returned to Danville, where his wife died in 1909. Doctor and Mrs. Warner were the parents of three children: Fred E., the eldest; Russell D., of Danville, and Clyde L., a merchant of Muncie, Indiana.

Fred E. Warner received a good education in the common schools, graduating from the high school in Danville in 1883, then becoming a student in the Central Normal College at Danville for a short time. His newspaper career began on February 14, 1884, the day on which he began working as a printer in the office of the Danville Republican. This means that for twenty years he has been connected with the printing business and during that time he has been in close touch with every phase of the work. On September 9, 1904, the Plainfield Friday Caller was established by P. W. Raidabaugh, and Mr. Warner had charge of the Danville office of the Friday Caller for six years. In June, 1912, he went to Plainfield as the managing editor of the paper, and on August 1, 1913, Mr. Warner became sole proprietor of this paper, and is now publishing it as a Republican weekly paper.

Mr. Warner was married January 4, 1893, to Julia S. Thompson, of Danville, the daughter of Jesse Thompson, and to this union there has been born one son, Clifford T., who is now a student at DePauw University, where he is a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity. Mr. Warner is a member of the Presbyterian church and has been for twenty-five years. He was formerly a member of the board of deacons in this denomination. For the past seven years he has had charge of the music at the Christian church in Danville.

A sketch of the life of Mr. Warner would not be complete without more than passing mention of his evangelistic work. For more than twenty-five years he has had evangelistic singing work of character every year. In the winter of 1911-12 he was with the J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles Alexander party for fourteen weeks in Chicago, Toronto and Brooklyn. In the following year he was with Dr. Edwin S. Stucker, of Ottawa, Kansas, in Washington City, D. C., and Brooklyn. He has also worked over the states of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Wisconsin and Michigan. During his singing and evangelistic work with various evangelists he gained fame as a tenor singer and does a large amount of concert work.

Mr. Warner has been a member of the Knights of Pythias since he was twenty-one years of age, and is also a member of the local camp of the Sons of Veterans. Politically, he has always been allied with the Republican party and has served his party in various capacities many times. He is at the present time secretary of the Republican county central committee. The only official position he ever held in the county was treasurer of the town of Danville. Mr. Warner is not only a well-trained newspaper man, a first-class musician and a believer in pure politics, but he is widely informed on all current topics. He is honest and upright in all his relations with his fellow men, and today few citizens of Hendricks county are better known and none more highly respected, for in all phases of his career since making his home here he has performed his full part as a man among men, and has earned and retains the sincere regard and confidence of all who know him. Personally, he is genial and unassuming, easily makes friends and enjoys a large acquaintance throughout the county.

GEORGE W. McHAFFIE.

Fortunate, indeed, is the family which has a history extending back more than three generations. The McHaffie family has an unbroken record going back more than three generations and including several hundred descendants. George W. McHaffie, the son of Melville F. and Mary Ann McHaffie, was born in Morgan county, Indiana, February 25, 1856. It is interesting to note that, although he was born in Morgan county, the part of the county in which he was born is now a part of Putnam county. Melville F. McHaffie was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, December 27, 1826, and his wife in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Melville came to Hendricks county with his father in 1832, his mother having died in Tennessee, and his father settled upon a farm west of Stilesville. When they first came to the county they lived in a tent for a time, and then they put up a rude log house in which they lived for several years. Melville attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood and was taught the rudiments of the three R's. Eventually he became a great buyer of mules and had more mules branded for the government than any man in the state. At one time he was also the largest land owner in the counties of Putnam and Hendricks, owning more than two thousand five hundred acres of land in the two counties. His death occurred on May 27, 1914.

Melville McHaffie was married to Mary Ann Thomas, the daughter of John and Catherine (Ulrich) Thomas, and to this union there were born ten children: Florence, who married Charles W. Bridges; Virginia, who married Thomas Bogges and has one son, Bennett; Minnie, who married Dr. N. G. Masters and has one son, Alexander; Andrew, who died at the age of seventeen; Clementine, who died in infancy; Marcus, who died at the age of three; Oscar, who married Mary Leachman and has one son, Melville J.; Ernest, who married Anna Greer and has three children, Ernestine, Robert and Maxine; Ernestine married Harry Thorpe, of Cartersburg; Mary E., who married John F. Shields and has one son, John M.

George W. McHaffie attended the district schools of his township and after leaving school became associated with his father in the live-stock business. At the age of twenty-one, June 13, 1877, he was married to Emma Cosner, the daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Walls) Cosner, and to this union there have been born two children, Marion Catherine and Mary Ann. Marion married Harry Tincher and Mary Ann married George L. Englehart and has one daughter, Emma Catherine.

Andrew and Nancy (Woods) McHaffie, the paternal grandparents of Mr. McHaffie, were both natives of Tennessee, and to them were born three children, Melville, Emeline and Jane. After the death of his first wife, Andrew married Nancy Hackett and to this marriage was born Mary Angeline. Emeline married William Robards and has three children, Andrew, Augusta and Laura. Jane died at the age of ten. Mary A. married Harvey Lee and has four children; Margaret, deceased, Charles Herbert, Edward and James.

The parents of Samuel Cosner's wife were James and Mary Walls, Samuel being born in North Carolina and his wife in Indiana. He came to this county in 1829 with his parents and settled in Franklin township, where his father entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land. Samuel Cosner was a farmer and wagonmaker all his life, but spent the latter years of his life in farming. He was born on March 31, 1825, and died on May 29, 1892. His wife was born April 17, 1831, and died May 2, 1902. To Samuel Cosner and wife were born three children: Emma, the wife of Mr. McHaffie; Annetta, the wife of William A. Snoddy. She has three children, Ethel, George and Nancy; Otis S. married Ida Hammond and has three children, Samuel, Radnor, deceased, and one other.

The grandfather, Anthony Cosner, was born in North Carolina, April 7, 1799, and died in March, 1888. He married Catherine Phillips, who was born September 27, 1799, and died on August 25, 1873. To this union were born ten children, John, Mahlon, Samuel, Lucinda, Elizabeth, Lucy, Sarah, William, Anna and Phoebe. John married Louise Whicker and after her death he married Louisa Rolley. Mahlon married Catherine Boswell and after her death married Susan Weavel. Samuel, the father of the subject of this sketch, married Nancy Walls. Lucinda married Moses Stanley and after his death she married Austin Williams. Elizabeth and Lucy both died in infancy. Sarah married William Page and after his death she married William Wilhite. William married Sarah Hine. Anna and Phoebe died in childhood.

George W. McHaffie has been a Democrat all his voting days and although he has never taken an active part in politics, he has been an active participant in local conventions. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. Owing to the upright life he has led in this community, he is held in high regard by his fellow citizens.

WILLIAM CHANDLER.

Every one of the thirteen original colonies contributed to the population of Indiana, and, as was the case in the early history of the states, it was only the most ambitious and enterprising families in the East who ventured to this new territory in the West. When Fox started a new religion in England and his followers became known as Ouakers, or Friends, no one would have thought that this new society would play such an important part in the early history of Indiana. When the Friends first came to the United States they settled in Pennsylvania, but later on large numbers of them settled in North Carolina. When it was seen in the early part of the nineteenth century that North Carolina was determined to remain a slave state, there were thousands of these good Friends who left that state and emigrated to free territory. It was from North Carolina that the Friends in Wayne county came, and Hendricks county owes an everlasting debt of gratitude to North Carolina for sending to its borders some of the best pioneers of this county. Among the many members of this church who came to Hendricks county, the Chandler family were among the most prominent.

William Chandler was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, on May 24, 1851. His parents were Jacob and Mary (Picket) Chandler. Jacob Chandler came to Indiana with his parents when he was four years of age and at first settled in Wayne county near Richmond. Shortly afterwards his parents came to Hendricks county and entered land in Guilford township, within the first five years after Hendricks county was organized. Jacob Chandler was born in North Carolina in 1819, came to Indiana in 1823 and married in 1844. Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Chandler were the parents of three sons: John, a retired farmer of this township; Hadley, deceased, and William, whose history is herewith portrayed. By her former marriage to Joab Hadley, Mrs. Chandler had five children. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler both died, he in 1892 and she in 1895.

William Chandler received his early education in his home neighborhood and early in life began to work on his father's farm. He continued to work on the farm until his marriage, when he began to operate a farm of his own. During his whole career he has lived the life of the simple farmer, going through the daily and yearly routine which is common to every man in this occupation, and year by year adding to his possession, until at the present time he has a fine farm of two hundred and ten acres.

Mr. Chandler has been thrice married, his first marriage being to Indiana Townsend on December 31, 1874; she died October 15, 1889, leaving no children, and on April 2, 1891, Mr. Chandler was married to Anna Starbuck, who died October 14, 1895. He was married to Martha E. Hadley on November 4, 1896. She was the daughter of Amos and Sallie V. Hadley, and one of six children. There have been no children by any of these marriages.

Mr. Chandler has been a life-long member of the Prohibition party, feeling that in the abolition of all intoxicating liquors should be found the greatest aid to the advancement of the welfare of our country. Mr. Chandler, as well as all of his ancestors, has been identified with the Friends church and to this he has always contributed liberally. Mr. Chandler is a man who has always been found contending; in fact, he would adhere to a conviction if all the world were against him. He lives in a comfortable home, where the spirit of genuine old-time hospitality is always in evidence, and because of his genial disposition and manly qualities of character he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

DENNIS BRADLEY WILLIAMS.

There is no positive rule for achieving success, and yet in the life of the successful man there are always lessons which might well be followed. The man who gains prosperity is he who can see and utilize the opportunities that come in his path. The essential conditions of human life are ever the same, the surroundings of individuals differ but slightly, and when one man passes another on the highway of life to reach the goal of prosperity before others who perhaps started out before him, it is because he has the power to use advantages which probably encompass the whole human race. Among the well-known citizens of this county whose efforts have been directed toward successful agriculture, is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Dennis Bradley Williams is a native of this county, born August 23, r868, in Middle township, southwest of Pittsboro, the son of John Dennis and Elizabeth Jane (King) Williams, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, the former coming from Estill county and the latter from Fleming county. Both came to Hendricks county in their early childhood, being brought here by their respective parents. John Dennis Williams was a son of William Williams, Ir., and Margaret Bradley, his wife, who was born March 16, 1812, John Dennis being born in 1835. On February 28, 1858, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Jane King, who was born July 2, 1840, the daughter of Enoch Wesley King, born in 1812, and Lucy Ann (Campbell) King, born April 23, 1815. Lucy A. Campbell was an aunt of Leander M. Campbell, one of our country's greatest lawyers. Enoch King and family settled first near Brownsburg and later moved near Pittsboro, where his death occurred in 1872, his wife living until December 21, 1877. William Williams, Jr., grandfather of the immediate subject, was born in 1800, and was a son of William Williams, Sr. After the marriage of John D. Williams, father of the subject, he purchased a tract of forty acres in Middle township, all of which was covered with dense forest. This was immediately adjoining his father's farm. In order to prepare a site for his one-room log cabin, size eighteen by twenty feet, he was obliged to fell twenty-four trees. so thick was the growth. He cleared the land of the timber, fenced and cultivated it and lived there until about 1870, when he sold it and moved midway between Danville and Lizton, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres. He remained there for about ten years, when he traded that for another eighty-acre tract just south of Pittsboro, near his old home, and took up his residence there in 1881. About three years later he bought a home in Brownsburg, where he lived until 1895, at the same time continuing the operation of his farm and his business of dealing in live stock. After selling his property in Brownsburg he purchased another eighty-acre farm, two miles from that town, and there lived until his death, November 30, 1897. He took a commendable interest in community affairs and was for many years a faithful member of Mount Zion Baptist church. The widow, who had made her home with her son, William West Williams, just south of Pittsboro, died May 27, 1914, aged seventy-three years, ten months, twenty-five days.

Dennis Bradley Williams, the immediate subject of this sketch, remained under the paternal roof until he was twenty-two years old. From his early youth he had farmed for himself, renting land in the neighborhood, and when his father moved west of Brownsburg, he then farmed that tract for him. He bought out the rights of the other heirs, after the death of the father, and now owns the eighty acres himself. In 1908 he erected a new dwelling, barns, etc., near the road and has since occupied them. Mr. Williams has been twice married, his first wife being Minnie B. Smith, to whom he was united in marriage on October 5, 1890. She was the daughter of Andrew J. and Cynthia Smith and passed from this life on January 8, 1803, their union having been without issue. On March 6, 1898, Mr. Williams was again united in marriage, his bride this time being Luey J. Warren, who was born in Perry township, Boone county, this state, daughter of William H. and Rachael D. (Peters) Warren, the former having been born at Knoxville, Tennessee, on April 29, 1837. He was a son of William and Lydia (Mc-Caslin) Warren and a brother of Calvin W. Warren, a sketch of whose life will be found elsewhere in this volume, giving particulars about parents and ancestors. William H. Warren was a boy of about ten years when the parents decided on making Indiana their future home. They loaded their possessions into a wagon and drove through. At that time there were eight children in the family. William and some of the larger children walked beside the wagon all the way, except when fording streams. He grew to manhood in Brown township, this county, and lived part of the time in Marion county, near Bridgeport. He married Rachael D. Peters, a native of Morgan county, this state, and the daughter of Presley Peters, who was a son of William Peters. William Peters had owned a large estate in Pennsylvania, which land is now thought to be covered by the city of Harrisburg, and he owned other land besides. After his death his son, Presley, started to prove his title to this land and died before he succeeded in completing his claim, and therefore the heirs failed to get this valuable land.

After his marriage to Rachael Peters, William H. Warren farmed in Boone county until about 1894, when he sold his farm there and moved two miles west of Brownsburg, where he purchased a farm and has since resided.

To the subject and his wife have been born two children, Russell E., born August 13, 1907, and Elbert Wesley, born December 25, 1910. When John D. Williams, father of the subject, started in life for himself, he was wholly without funds and bought a tract of wild land for six hundred dollars on credit. He built a little cabin home and from that pushed his way onward to success. He was of a jovial and sunny disposition and had many friends and was widely known. He had but few advantages in the way of schooling when a youth, but was highly intelligent and actively interested in public affairs. He possessed a sound judgment which was invaluable to him and of great assistance to his many friends who relied on his advice. He was a man without malice, sociable and friendly, a devout Christian and unusually well versed in the Bible for a man of his educational advantages.

Mrs. Williams is a very methodical woman; she reads the Bible through once a year and has read it to her husband. She has an excellent memory and kept a written account of all affairs of interest.

JOHN WALTER LAIRD.

Not too often can be repeated the life history of one who has lived so honorable and useful a life and attained to such notable distinction as he whose name appears at the head of this sketch, one of the most successful and distinguished educators that the state of Indiana has produced. His character has been one of signal exaltation and purity of purpose. Well disciplined in mind, maintaining a vantage point from which life has presented itself in correct proportions, guided and guarded by the most inviolable principles of integrity and honor, simple and unostentatious in his selfrespecting, tolerant individuality, such a man could not prove other than a force for good in whatever relation of life he may have been placed. His character is the positive expression of a strong nature and in studying his career interpretation follows fact in a straight line of derivation, there being no need for indirection or puzzling. His career has been a busy one and his name is respected by all who have had occasion to come in contact with him or who have knowledge of his life work. As an educator, President Laird stands in the front rank in Indiana. He has dignified and honored his profession, for his life has been one of consecration to his calling, and well does he merit a place of honor in every history touching upon the lives and deeds of those who have given the best of their powers and talents for the betterment of their kind.

John Walter Laird, president of Central Normal College, Danville, Indiana, was born in Oswega, Kansas, September 2, 1871, and is the son of Alvin and Levina Rebecca (Somsel) Laird, both parents being natives of Ohio. His father served three and one-half years in the Civil War in Company H. Ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out as a corporal in his regiment. After the close of the war he returned to Ohio, where he engaged in farming. In 1882 he removed to Howard county, Indiana, and continued his farming operations there until his death in 1909, at the age of sixty-three years, his wife dying the same year. He was commander of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Galveston, and a trustee in the Universalist church in the same place.

JOHN W. LAIRD

To Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Laird were born eight children: D. C., a farmer living near Lucerene, Cass county, Indiana; John W., the immediate subject of this sketch; Charles, deceased in 1909; Frank, a carpenter of Kokomo; Lola R., who was the wife of Albert Downhour, of Cass county, this state, but who died in 1913; Homer Lester, of Fullerton, North Dakota; Jennie, deceased at the age of sixteen, and Joseph, who died in infancy.

John W. Laird was born on a ranch near Oswego, Labette county, Kansas, to which place his parents had moved soon after their marriage. He received his primary education in West Sonora, Preble county, Ohio, where his parents had removed when he was a small lad. His educational training was continued in the Galveston schools in Cass county, this state, and he graduated from the high school at that place in 1801. He immediately began teaching in the district schools of his county, attending " the county normal school at Kokomo during the summer months. In the spring of 1803 he entered the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute, Indiana, and continued his studies there until the fall of 1895, when he accepted the superintendency of the Galveston schools. He continued at the head of the schools of this place for one year, when he returned to the State Normal School and graduated in the spring of 1897. Upon finishing his course he accepted the position as head of the history department at the Marion Normal School, where he remained until August, 1898. In September of that year he entered the junior class at the State University at Bloomington, and graduated in August, 1000, majoring in the subject of philosophy. Upon his graduation from the university he returned to the Marion Normal School in 1900 as the head of the history department and also had general charge of the department of education. He remained on the faculty of the normal school until August, 1906, when he left to enter Harvard University in order to continue his studies in history and economics under Professors Channing, Hart and Taussig, of that institution. After completing one year's residence in study at Harvard, he was elected vice-president of the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, and one year later became the acting president of the same institution. In 1909 he was elected president by the board of trustees and has since been the head of the school. Professor Laird has brought to the presidency a mind and body both well fitted for the complex duties connected therewith, for, be it emphasized, the office of an institution like this is no sinecure. The growth of the Central Normal College since President Laird became its head is the highest testimonial that could be paid to his ability and foresight as an executive and to his eminent standing as a broad-minded. scholarly and progressive educator. Since assuming the responsible position which he now holds and so signally honors, the advancement of the college has kept pace with the leading institutions of the kind in the United States. The course of study has been developed and the state board of education has recognized the superior quality of work which is being done in the institution. It has been accredited as one of the standard normal schools and also has an approved school of music. President Laird's slogan for the "Greater C. N. C." has not been used in vain, for within the short time in which he has had charge of the institution its growth has been truly remarkable. It is admittedly one of the best normal schools in the country and its work is of a standard which compares favorably with similar institutions everywhere. At the present time there are good prospects for a new building, and within the next year or so the college will enter upon a new era of prosperity. President Laird exercises the greatest care over the buildings and grounds, looks after the comfort and welfare of the students and is indeed proud of his school and jealous of its good name and reputation. It is easily understood why he enjoys such great popularity with all connected with the institution, and is well and favorably known to the educational circles throughout the country. President Laird has made special study of the subjects of history and economics and has also done wide and intensive reading in the field of English literature. His services are in signal demand as an instructor in township and county institutes, where he gives lectures on English literature and history. He also gives a large number of commencement addresses each year throughout the state. President Laird is much interested in the study of nature and his beautiful home is at the edge of Danville, where he makes a specialty of raising fine poultry and different kinds of small fruits. He now has more than fifty different kinds of apples on his farm. He has also made a special study of birds and has many different kinds nesting on his home place.

John W. Laird was married on August 15, 1900, to Daisy E. Lowder, the eldest daughter of Dr. Lindsay Lowder, of Bloomington, Indiana, and to his happy marriage there have been born three children: Alice Rebecca, born 1902 and died in infancy; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1905, and Martha May, born in 1908. Mrs. Laird is a woman of gracious and charming personality and their home is the center of a large social circle.

President Laird and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and are earnest and faithful in the observance of their religious obligations and privileges. Personally, President Laird is genial and easily approached and enjoys to a marked degree the confidence of all who are thrown in contact with him. Though first of all an educator, and making his work as such paramount to every other consideration, he has not been remiss in his duty to the community in which he resides nor unmindful of his obligations as a citizen. Although he is a Republican in politics on national issues, he is not a strict partisan and, particularly in local affairs, gives his support to the best qualified candidate irrespective of party lines. He is a member of the Sons of Veterans and the Knights of Pythias, and also of the Greek-letter fraternity of Phi Gamma Delta. Though now only in the early prime of life, he has achieved success such as only few attain, but, not satisfied with past results, he is pressing forward to still wider fields and higher honors, although his place among the eminent men of his day and generation is secure for all time to come.

EDGAR E. FOUDRAY.

The gentleman to whom the reader's attention is now directed was not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, but in spite of these, by perseverance, industry and a wise economy, he has attained a comfortable station in life, and is well and favorably known throughout Hendricks county as a result of the industrious life he has lived here for so many years, being regarded by all who know him as a man of sound business principles, thoroughly up to date in all phases of agriculture and stock raising and as a man who, while advancing his individual interests, does not neglect his general duties as a citizen.

On the paternal side, the subject's ancestral history is traced as follows:

(I) John Foudray, the great-great-grandfather, was born in France some time during the latter part of the sixteenth century, but, because of the Huguenot persecutions by the Catholics, he was compelled to flee from home.

(II) John Foudray, the great-grandfather, was born in the state of Delaware about 1737, and he was the father of (III) John Wood Foudray, who was born on April 5, 1787. The latter married Martha Martin, who was born on November 2, 1787. Among their children was (IV) John Elbert Foudray, father of the subject of this sketch, and who was born on March 12, 1817, his death occurring on August 27, 1878, at the age of sixty-one years and five months. He married Adelia Green, who was born on March 23, 1817, the daughter of Moses and Elizabeth Green. Her death occurred on April 12, 1895, at the age of seventy-eight years. Of the children born to the last-named couple, Charlotte, who became the wife of James A. Morrison, died on January 28, 1878, and James Elbert died on January 16, 1910. The subject's maternal grandfather was killed by Indians when his daughter, the subject's nother, was but one year old.

Edgar E. Foudray, the son of John and Adelia (Green) Foudray, was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, October 20, 1853, and received his education in the public schools of that city. He lived there until he was twenty-one years of age, when he went to Stephenson county, Illinois, where he married, and there he remained until 1880, when he came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and settled in Washington township, on the farm where he now lives. While he is a farmer of more than ordinary ability, he has made a particular specialty of dairy cattle and conserves his energy in that direction. He has the most sanitary and up-to-date dairy farm in Washington township and one of the best in central Indiana. His products find a ready sale in Indianapolis and his plant and equipment has been pronounced by the state inspectors as one of the best in the state.

Mr. Foudray was married October 20, 1874, to Emma A. Wolfe, the daughter of Michael and Hettie (Cable) Wolfe. Mrs. Foudray was born in Stephenson county, Illinois, and is one of the oldest of twelve children. They were narried while Mr. Foudray was living in Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Foudray have been born eight children: Esther L., born September 1, 1875, and died November 2, 1881; Mrs. Ida M. Hadley, born August 11, 1876, now living in Minnesota; Mrs. Lottie M. Davis, born November 5, 1878, now living in Indianapolis; Mrs. Carrie A. Miller, born July 9, 1881, now resides in Central City, Iowa: Mrs. Emma G. Coleman, born November 7, 1884, now living in Indianapolis; Mrs. Martha C. Stiles, born March 9, 1887, also a resident of Indianapolis; Edgar E., born December 8, 1889, who is still under the parental roof; Mrs. Marietta E. McClellan, born April 6, 1803, lives on a farm in Marion county, this state.

Politically, Mr. Foudray is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in the affairs of his party. Religiously, he and his family are faithful and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which they give their active support.

Mr. Foudray's life has been an active and busy one and the systematic and honorable business methods which he has followed have succeeded in gaining him the confidence of those with whom he has had business dealings, and the respect and esteem of all who know him.

ROLLIE GARNER.

There is no calling, however humble or exalted, but what may be productive of some measure of success, if enterprise and industry, coupled with a well directed purpose, form the motive force of the person directing the same, and in no case is this fact more apparent than in agricultural pursuits. This fact applies to Rollie Garner, the immediate subject of this sketch, who, by industry and honesty, is succeeding well in his chosen vocation and who, while applying himself primarily to the interests of his family, has so ordered his mode of life as to win the esteem of those with whom he comes in contact and in every avenue of life has proven himself a worthy citizen.

Rollie Garner is a native of this county, born on April 23, 1870, in Brown township, the son of Harrison B. and Frances (Lowder) Garner. Harrison Garner was born in Kentucky, in 1828, the son of Solomon and Deborah Garner, who came to this county in 1832 and settled on the farm near where the subject was born. They entered this land from the government, cleared it and established a happy home, where they lived the balance of their lives. Frances Lowder, mother of the subject, was a native of North Carolina, born in 1832, the daughter of Solomon and Sarah Lowder. In 1836 the Lowder family came to this county and settled southwest of Brownsburg. A few years later, her father started back to North Carolina on horseback, to settle an estate in which he was interested, and was never heard from again. The mystery of his disappearance has been unexplained through all these years. When the family first came here, they made the journey overland in wagons, and upon settling in this county they entered land from the government, and here the widow passed her remaining days and the family grew to maturity. After Harrison Garner's marriage he took up his residence on the farm which his father obtained in pioneer days, and died there in 1902. His wife followed him into the great beyond in 1907. There were nine children in the family, of whom the subject was the youngest and he was twenty-eight years old before there occurred a death in the family.

In 1894, on March 4th, the subject was united in marriage with Ella Hufford, who was born in Lincoln township, the daughter of Gideon Franklin Hufford and wife. For four years previous to marriage Mr. Garner had farmed his father's farm on shares and for two years after his marriage this same arrangement held good. He then moved to Washington township, one mile east of Avon, and for four years farmed on land given him by his father-in-law. Here he built a house and in September, 1900, he moved to his present location, a farm of seventy-five and one-half acres two miles west of Brownsburg. To Mr. and Mrs. Garner have been born ten children, of whom the eldest, Hazel Marie, born in 1896, passed away on February 8, 1898. Those remaining are Edna Blanche, Bernice, Irene, Hubert Franklin, Mabel and Merle, twins; Harrison Harold, Inez Roberta, Lois Ernestine, Edith Frances and Johanna Lee.

Mr. Garner's fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias, of which he has been a member for some time. He is a man of marked domestic traits, kind and considerate to his family, honest and reliable in all his dealings and a thoroughly good, helpful neighbor. Because of his genial disposition and genuine worth he is liked and respected by all.

JOHN A. GIBBS.

John A. Gibbs, whose life history now comes under brief review, is one of the solid men of brain and substance who in the aggregate have given to Hendricks county, Indiana, the excellent reputation which it bears for prosperity and a high plane of life among the sister counties of the state. After all, the history of a community is but the reflection of the lives of its leading citizens and it is such stalwart men as he whose sketch the biographer now takes up, who are the bone and sinew of the moral, material and educational life of this county.

John A. Gibbs, well known farmer of Lincoln township, Hendricks county, was born in Brown township, this county, February 4, 1868, being the son of William Gibbs, born in 1825, and Elizabeth (Burden) Gibbs, born in 1826. Both parents were natives of England, where they remained until after their marriage, when, desiring to try their fortunes in the New World, they left their native heath and landed on American soil about the year 1850. They came almost directly to Bridgeport, this state, where he engaged in gardening and remained there for several years. About the year 1867 they came to this country, locating in Brown township, where he farmed the rest of his life. William Gibbs departed this life on November 24, 1903, in his eightieth year, and his wife passed away some years before him, on April 28, 1897, at the age of seventy-one years. He had aligned himself with the Democratic party upon becoming an American citizen and was a faithful member of the Methodist church, his wife being identified with the Baptist church.

John A. Gibbs grew to manhood on the homestead in Brown township. attending the district schools of the locality and receiving from his father careful training in the secrets of successful husbandry. He has been engaged in farming all his life and remained in Brown township until in 1911. when he went to Marion county, this state, where he only remained for one year and in the spring of 1012 moved to his present home in the southeastern part of Lincoln township, where he has since resided. In 1891 he was united in marriage with Catherine Hogan, who was born and reared in Brown township, being the daughter of Michael and Bridget (Cassidy) Hogan, both of whom were natives of Ireland, the former born in county Conemaugh and the latter in county Galway. There they grew up and were married before coming to America. This was prior to the Civil War and they came immediately to this county upon arriving in the country and here lived the remainder of their days. They owned a farm of eighty acres and it was here the wife of the subject was born. Michael Hogan passed from this life on June 24. 1912, his wife having preceded him on November 27, 1911. Both were Catholic.

Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs have three living children, the eldest being William. who was born May 28, 1892. He is a graduate of the Brownsburg high school, attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute for two years and is at present finishing his third term as teacher in the schools of the western part of Marion county. The second son is Clarence, born July 30, 1804. who is his father's assistant in the work of the farm. James, who was born March 24, 1897, passed from life June 29, 1913, at the age of sixteen years and four months. Monica Catherine, sole daughter of the family, was born December 13, 1906. Mrs. Gibbs' parents settled in Brown township when it was nearly all timber and swamp. They first directed their efforts to making a small clearing and erecting a cabin home and gradually reclaimed the land from the wilderness and swamps and improved living conditions as rapidly as they could. By much labor and tireless effort, they in time had made of their land a fine farm, one fit to compare with any of its size in the county. During the war, Michael Hogan was drafted into the army. In view of the fact that he had a wife and five small children, he felt his greater duty was to remain beside them and by paying five hundred dollars he secured a substitute.

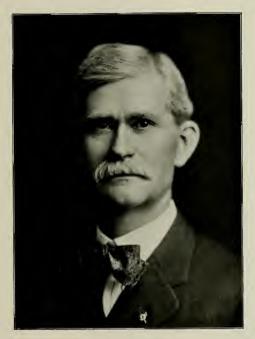

William Gibbs, father of the subject, was twice drafted. He had a wife and six children to support and, too, felt that his greater duty was to remain home and care for them. Each time he was forced to buy a substitute, costing him in all sixteen hundred dollars and so crippling him financially that he lost his farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs are both communicants of the Roman Catholic church and his fraternal affiliations are with the Improved Order of Red Men. His life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance and the systematic and honorable methods which he has ever followed have resulted not only in gaining the confidence of those with whom he has had dealings, but he has been able to hold friends so gained throughout the years. He is a public-spirited man, well and favorably known throughout the township for his honesty and uprightness in all his business dealings.

THAD, S. ADAMS.

Enjoying distinctive prestige in a profession which requires of those who adopt it a strong mentality and painstaking preparation, together with a natural aptitude for its duties and responsibilities, Thad S. Adams is one of the essentially representative lawyers of Danville. He has built up a lucrative clientele and a wide reputation as an able and successful lawyer and has been connected with some of the most important cases in the local courts. As a public-spirited citizen he readily lends his aid to every cause having for its object the moral and material advancement of his community.

Thad S. Adams is a native of Hendricks county, born in Union township November 6, 1853, the son of Solomon and Nancy (Griffith) Adams. Solomon Adams was born in Nicholas county, Kentucky, in 1799, a son of Thomas Adams. He grew up in Kentucky and there married Nancy Griffith, who was born in Bath county, Kentucky, in 1811, a daughter of Jackson Griffith. While she was a child her parents removed to Switzerland county, Indiana, where she grew up. Solomon Adams and wife came to Hendricks county in an early day, and he entered government land in Marion township, where they lived for some years and then removed to Union township and entered other land and established their permanent home. He was a lifelong farmer and for many years was assessor of Union township. He was originally a Douglas Democrat, but from the opening of the war he was a Republican. He and his wife were charter members of the Christian church at Lizton. Solomon Adams died in 1863 and two weeks later his wife followed him in death. Of the eleven children born to Solomon and Nancy Adams four were in the Union army during our great civil conflict. Gabriel H. Adams and Joshua G. Adams were in the Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers. Dr. Thomas J. Adams and Hiram F. Adams were members of the Ninth Indiana Cavalry. Hiram was killed in Mississippi while in the service. Dr. Thomas J. was in active service until the close of the war, after which he located at North Salem, Hendricks county, and is mentioned at length elsewhere in this volume.

Thad S. Adams was but ten years old when death deprived him of his parents. For the following two years he lived with a brother in the state of Illinois, and then came to North Salem, Hendricks county, and made his home with another brother, Dr. Thomas I. Adams. During these years he attended the public schools and worked by the month on a farm until he was seventeen years of age, when he began teaching school, which enabled him to attend Northwestern University at Indianapolis. After leaving the university, he came to Danville in 1875 and took up the study of law in the office of Adams & Cooper, the senior member of this firm being his brother, Joshua G. Adams. While reading law he also taught school for two or three years. About 1878 he was admitted to the bar on motion of the late Leander M. Campbell, who afterwards became his father-in-law. He has been engaged in the practice of law in Danville since that time, and during these years has attained to distinctive prominence and success as an able advocate and well fortified counselor at law. His course has been such as to retain to him at all times the unqualified respect and esteem of his professional brethren, as well as the public at large. In 1880 he was appointed by Governor Hovey prosecuting attorney, and his fitness for the place was so readily recognized that he was, in 1800, nominated and elected for the regular term, thus serving in all four years.

On May 6, 1880, Mr. Adams was married to Effie A. Campbell, a daughter of Leander M. and Matilda (Hammond) Campbell. A sketch of Leander M. Campbell appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Adams was born and reared in Danville, graduating from the Central Normal College with the class of 1879. To this marriage were born three children, Ruth Adams, L. M. Campbell Adams and Donald Griffith Adams, the two sons residing in New York City where they are associated with the National Surety Company. Miss Ruth is at home. All three of the children are graduates of Indiana University.

Mrs. Adams was called by death May 14, 1913. She was a woman of rare culture, active in civic and church affairs, and of wonderful executive ability. She took a broad and kindly interest in the community welfare, and she was beloved by everybody in the community who had known her since girlhood. She was a life-long member of the Christian church and active in many departments of church labor.

Thad S. Adams is a prominent Mason, being identified with the Scottish Rite and the Mystic Shrine. He is a man who has always shown a deep and abiding interest in all that concerns the welfare and progress of his native county, and here he maintains a secure hold upon popular confidence and esteem.

CECIL FORREST PREBSTER.

Among the younger agriculturists of Hendricks county, Indiana, is the subject of this sketch, who, while still a young man, has devoted several years to this particular line of effort. The younger generation of farmers have started out upon their life work in their chosen vocation with considerable to their advantage over the conditions met by their fathers and grandfathers. The advantages for education are so vastly superior to those enjoved by the youth of an earlier generation, and this education permits the men of the present day to profit by the vast experience of others in scientific research work as related to farm life, whereas those of an earlier time were far more handicapped in their chosen work. Then, too, the men of the present day find the lands in the Hoosier state at least all prepared for their efforts, whereas the farmers of an earlier day found themselves face to face with the gigantic task of removing primeval forests, draining swamps, breaking the virgin soil and the thousand and one hardships met with and conquered by our pioneers, to whom we of a later day owe an unending obligation.

Cecil Forrest Prebster was born on April 17, 1881, on a farm about two miles west of Brownsburg, this county, being land which was originally entered from the government by his paternal great-grandfather. He is the son of Anderson and Alice Prebster, and is one of a family of two children; the other is a daughter, Bertha Eleanor, who is the wife of Fred Smith, a farmer of this county, and the mother of two sons, Leo Walter and Milby Alonzo. Anderson Prebster, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in Lincoln township, this county, in 1853, the son of Emanuel and Mary (Milby) Hollett-Prebster. Emanuel Prebster was born in southern Ohio, the son of John Adam and Christina (Bartlett) Prebster, and John Adam Prebster was a native of Germany, who in early days emigrated to this country, settling in New York state, where he met and married Christina Bartlett, also a native of Germany. They remained for a short time in New York, later coming to southern Ohio, where their son, Emanuel, was born, and there remained until he was about twenty-one years of age. Emanuel was the oldest of four sons, the others being Reuben, Frederick and Christian, and these, together with the father, came to this county about the year 1834, the father having entered a tract of land here the year previous. Frederick married Eliza Surber and lived in Lincoln township, where for many years he was engaged in farming. Reuben and Christian never married and spent their lives west of Brownsburg on land which they had entered from the government. In 1850 Emanuel Presbter was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary (Milby) Hollett, widow of Mark Hollett, deceased. She was born in North Carolina and was left an orphan through the death of her mother while she was still small, and the loss of her father at sea. When about nine vears old she was brought to this state by an aunt, who settled near Richmond. At the age of sixteen Mary Milby was united in marriage with Mark Hollett and they made their home near Richmond. During the forties they came to this county, where they made their home near Brownsburg, and they later moved to Iowa, where Mr. Hollett died a victim of cholera. His death left his young widow and family of five children among strangers, and Mr. Baxter, stepfather of Mark Hollett, made the long journey overland in a covered wagon to Iowa, bringing the widow and children back to this vicinity. Here, sometime later, she was united in marriage with Emanuel Prebster and they made their home west of Brownsburg on land which had been entered from the government by his father, of which he owned one hundred and fifty acres. His death occurred in January, 1800, and she died in 1907. At their death they left three children, Eliza Christina, Anderson and Everson. Eliza C. became the wife of John Henderson and lived on the home farm which she inherited from her father. She passed from this life February 6, 1913. Everson Prebster also lives on the home farm where his father died. He married Ella Harding and they have two children, Beulah and Lessie.

Anderson Prebster remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage in 1880 to Alice Clark, who was born in Brown county, this state, the daughter of Franklin and Mary (Baker) Clark, the former of whom was born in Kentucky, where he grew to years of maturity. He then came to this state, where he met and married Mary Baker, who was born not far from Indianapolis, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Caylor) Baker. Henry Baker was a native of Maryland and Elizabeth Caylor was born in Ohio. Franklin Clark, father of Alice (Clark) Prebster, was a carpenter all his life and followed his trade most of his active years in Indianapolis. In 1875 he moved to Brownsburg, where he spent his declining years quietly, and there his death occurred in 1903. For about four years during the sixties he had resided in Tipton, this state, and there his wife died in 1868. Immediately after his marriage, Anderson Prebster established his home in the log house in which he was born and there remained for thirteen years, when he moved to another house he had built on the same farm, where he remained until 1906, when he built at the edge of Brownsburg, where he still resides. In addition to this home, he owns ninety acres of farm lands, on which his children live, having disposed of part of the acreage of which he was once possessed.

Cecil Forrest Prebster, son of Anderson Prebster and the immediate subject of this sketch, attended the district schools of the township when a boy, later graduating from Brownsburg high school. This was in 1901, and since that time he has been engaged in farming the land on which he was born. On March 25, 1906, he was united in marriage with Bertha Thompson, daughter of Jesse and Mary (Mitchell) Thompson, and born in Pittsboro, where she passed her girlhood with the exception of six months spent at North Salem. She was graduated from the Pittsboro high school in 1904. Jesse Thompson, father of Mrs. Prebster, was born in Madison county, Kentucky, where his mother died when he was still a small boy. His father remarried and Jesse remained with him until he grew to manhood, when he came to this state and county and here met and married Mary Mitchell. She was born in Starke county, North Carolina, a daughter of William and Rachel Mitchell, who came to this county when she was but three or four years old. They located near Raintown. After Jesse Thompson was married he made his home in Pittsboro, where he has followed various pursuits, being engineer of the mill at that place, also engaged in farming, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil F. Prebster have a family of three children, Maurice Thompson, Marian Alice and Dorothy Aileen, and both are members of the Christian church, with which also both parents are identified. The Prebster family is one of the oldest and best families of the county and in the immediate subject of this sketch the family has a member who is progressive, alive to the opportunities of the present and courteous and agreeable in manner.

CALVIN W. WARREN.

Not all men are born to be leaders of their kind or to take a prominent part in any phase of life. It is the exceptional few who rise above their fellows and come to be known far or near as belonging to this class. Such men have the leading parts in the scheme of life and stand as the representatives of the great masses of honest, industrious and patriotic citizens who are the real stamina of national life. The foremost figures in our country today would lose their significance were there not back of them in almost countless numbers these sober, honest, quiet lives which are the bone and sinew of a prosperous country. To this latter class of dutiful and patriotic citizens the subject of this sketch belongs.

Calvin W. Warren, residing two miles northwest of Brownsburg, was born October 12, 1842, at Knoxyille, Tennessee, the son of William and Lydia (McCaslin) Warren, both of whom were born and reared in Guilford county, North Carolina. William Warren was a son of Henry Warren and Lydia McCaslin was the daughter of John McCaslin. The subject's parents were married in their native state before they left it and took up their residence in Knox county, Tennessee, where they remained until 1850. By that time they had a family of ten children, eight of whom they brought with them to this state, making the trip in a wagon. Two of the older children had made the trip the year before on foot the entire distance. When first coming to this state, they located in Brown township, Hendricks county, but later moved near Bridgeport, in Marion county, and there the parents passed the remainder of their lives, he dying in Marion county and she in Hendricks county.

Calvin W. Warren grew to manhood on the home farm in this county, where he remained until in 1863, when, in response to the promptings of patriotism, he enlisted for service in the Seventeenth Indiana Battery, Light Artillery, where he remained for three years, during which time he saw much active service. He was stationed around the upper Potomac river, around Harper's Ferry and Baltimore and was in the battles of Winchester, Cedar Creek and Fisher's Hill. During the earlier part of the day's engagement at Cedar Creek, the subject and his companions were thankful to be able to effect a retreat from the enemy, but rallied their forces and in the afternoon the tables were turned and they routed the enemy to a finish. He was especially fortunate during his service in that he came through so many close places without even a wound. He was mustered out of service on July 8, 1865, and immediately returned to this county and has been engaged in farm work near Brownsburg ever since.

Mr. Warren has never married and makes his home with his brother William H., west of Brownsburg. Politically, Mr. Warren has always been identified with the Republican party, to which he has given his loyal support throughout the years. He is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Warren has lived a quiet, retired life and has ever so conducted himself as to win the trust and confidence of those with whom he came in contact. He is known as a man of excellent character, sober and industrious. During his youth he was denied many advantages in the way of education, but has become a great reader and is well informed on many subjects.

GIDEON FRANKLIN HUFFORD.

Among the various peoples of the earth that go to make up the cosmopolitan population of these United states of ours, none have contributed to our national life more excellent habits and traits than those who came originally from Germany. The descendants of those people are distinguished for their thrift and honesty, and these two qualities in the inhabitants of any country will in the end alone make that country great. These two attributes, together with the liberal quantity of sound sense which is also a characteristic of the German people, will enrich any land and place it among the leading nations of the world. Descended from this excellent people is the immediate subject of this brief sketch.

Gideon F, Hufford is a native of this county, born on May 13, 1836, in Washington township, the son of Joel and Eliza Jane (Miller) Hufford. Joel Hufford was born in 1808 at Carlisle, Nicholas county, Kentucky, and was descended from Christian Hufford, who emigrated to this country from Schwartzenau, Germany. Louisa Jane Miller was born on December 8, 1813, in Kentucky, and was united in marriage with Joel Hufford August 31, 1830. About two years later they came to Indiana, locating at once in Hendricks county. They made the trip from their native state in a one-horse wagon, which contained all their worldly possessions. They had belonged to families of prominence in Kentucky and had always been accustomed to having their work done by slaves, but they readily adjusted themselves to conditions in the state of their adoption, entered a tract of eighty acres from the government, which they proceeded to clear and convert into a comfortable and happy home for themselves and family. They were excellent people and stood high in public estimation.

On February 22, 1862, the subject was united in marriage with Mary Jane Stout, who was born on May 4, 1846, in the western part of Marion county, near Clermont, being a daughter of David and Joanna (Herd) Stout. David Stout and wife were both natives of the state of Ohio, were married there and soon went to Illinois. They remained there but a short time, however, when, being dissatisfied, they came back to Indiana and settled in Marion county, where they lived the rest of their lives. After marriage, Gideon F. Hufford purchased a farm about a mile and a half south of Brownsburg, this county, and in time became the owner of three hundred and forty acres of excellent land, part of it at Tilden and another tract on the Rockville road in Washington township. In 1895 he removed from the farm south of Brownsburg and took up his residence on his Tilden farm and there passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring January 28, 1903. He was a faithful member of the Baptist church and lived a life in strict conformity with the teachings of that faith.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hufford were born nine children: George F., Delilah F., Carrie, Joel V., Theodore N., Ella, Julia, Edgar and John T. In August, 1892, George mysteriously disappeared and has never since been heard from. Delilah died in infancy. Carrie is the wife of Theodore P. Garner and lives in Brown township. Joel married Alice Hughes and lives in Lincoln township. Theodore died in infancy. Ella is the wife of Rolla Garner and resides in Lincoln township, and Julia is the wife of Edgar Beaman and lives in Middle township. Edgar married Effie M. Cummings on March 7, 1907, and lives at Tilden. They have two children. Marshall and Walter. Edgar lives on the homestead and manages it for his mother, who has resided there ever since the death of the subject. John T., the youngest son, married Tillie C. Nash in October, 1905, and they live one mile south of Brownsburg on the Plainfield road.

A review of the life of the honored subject of this memoir is of necessity brief and general in its character. It would far transcend the limits of this article to enter fully into the interesting details of the career of the late Gideon F. Hufford, touching the struggles of his earlier life and the successes of his later years. He filled his place in the ranks of the sterling, energetic and public-spirited citizens of his day and generation, and the memories which attach to his name and character form no inconsiderable chapter in the history of this, his native county, where his entire life was passed.

GEORGE MACOMBER.

The two most strongly marked characteristics of both the East and the West are combined in the residents of the section of county of which this volume treats. The enthusiastic enterprise which overleaps all obstacles and makes possible almost any undertaking in the comparatively new and vigorous Western states is here tempered by the stable and more careful policy that we have borrowed from our Eastern neighbors, and the combination is one of peculiar force and power. It has been the means of placing this section of the country on a par with the older East, at the same time producing a reliability and certainty in business affairs which is frequently lacking in the West. This happy combination of characteristics is possessed by the subject of this sketch. Born, reared and educated in Pennsylvania, he came to Indiana as a young man and Hendricks county may count itself fortunate in having him as one of its citizens. He came first to this county as a teacher in our schools, and his whole record since he has been here has been a most worthy one. From the school room he went into the mercantile business, and from the mercantile business he was called by his party to take the office of county treasurer. George Macomber is a man whom Hendricks county delights to honor.

George Macomber, now serving his second term as treasurer of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born December 2, 1869, in York county, Pennsylvania. George Macomber familiarized himself with the life of a farmer, during his boyhood and youth, by working at it on his father's farm. He is the son of W. Z. and Harriett (Messersmith) Macomber, and is of good American ancestry. His paternal great-grandfather, Doctor Zenas Macomber, was a Revolutionary hero of prominence, was one of General Washington's horse guards, and, daring all for freedom, was carried from the battle-field of Paoli with nineteen wounds.

From the common schools George Macomber went to high school, where he graduated. Entering normal college, he pursued the prescribed course to graduation and then took a special course in the State College of Pennsylvania. After teaching in the country schools, he came to Indiana about 1897, as teacher in the Indiana Boys' School at Plainfield in Hendricks county, and remained with his duties in that institution until he resigned to assume the superintendency of a similar institution in Missouri. He returned to Hendricks county in 1906, and engaged in the mercantile business by opening a hardware store in Plainfield, in the community where he was well known and respected as a man who had made a success of what he tried to do. That business he continued to have personal charge of until he left it in a manager's hands in 1912 to take charge of the office of treasurer of Hendricks county, to which he had been elected. Without opposition, his party nominated him in their county convention to succeed himself, because he had shown high-grade ability, fidelity to duty as a servant of the people, and because of his manly and accommodating method of waiting upon those who have business with him as a county official.

On November 2, 1899, Mr. Macomber married Mattie E. York, daughter of P. M. and Elizabeth (Hornaday) York, who were early residents of Hendricks county. Mr. and Mrs. Macomber hold their membership with the Methodist church at Plainfield, of which church he has been treasurer. He has had the advantages of fraternal organizations, and has been honored by his brothers in those orders with offices of trust and responsibility. He is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias lodge at Plainfield; past master of the Masonic lodge; a member of the chapter and council of the York rite of the Masonic order at Danville; thirty-second-degree Mason of the Indiana Consistory, Scottish Rite, and the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Macomber's broad education and the careful method that is natural to him equips him in an unusual degree to do the public good service. The state board of accountants have highly commended the accuracy and evident methodic care shown by his official books.

Mr. Macomber is popular as a gentleman of education and of progressive make-up, and has the public respect and admiration for the excellent manner in which he has demeaned himself as a public official, in which capacity he has been watchful, faithful to the county's best interests and attentive to the opportunity to bestow favor upon all who have had business with him.

CHARLES A. CUMMINGS.

Among the most successful citizens of this county who rank high in personal attainment, is the gentleman whose name heads this paragraph, a man whose expert services have been requisitioned in thirty-two states of the Union and who has conferred honor and dignity upon the locality where he resides in Lincoln township, Hendricks county, Indiana. Charles A. Cummings, the well-known builder of bridges, is also one of the leading farmers of this county, owning an excellent farm of one hundred and twenty acres in the township mentioned above, where he engages in general farming, assisted by one of his sons. Mr. Cummings has attained to his enviable position through unflagging perseverance and boundless enterprise and among other characteristics which have contributed largely to his success is that rare ability to use men so as to subserve his purpose and at the same time assist them.

Charles A. Cummings was born on April 24, 1859, in Botetourt county, Virginia, the son of William and Maria (Boose) Cummings, the former of whom was born in Bath county, Virginia, and, while it is not definitely known, it is believed that his parents were both natives of Scotland. Maria Boose, mother of the subject, was born in Botetourt county, Virginia, the daughter of natives of Germany who had first settled in Pennsylvania and from there went into Virginia, where they lived out the remainder of their lives. William and Maria Cummings lived their lives in Virginia, where they were engaged in farming. Their son Charles, the subject, remained with them until about twenty-one years old and then, in 1880, went to Springfield, Ohio, where he had a brother. He engaged in agricultural work for a short time, and then his brother, Douglass B. L. Cummings, who was engaged in the steel bridge construction business, took young Charles A, into partnership and so began his career in that line of work in which he has proved so proficient. They went to Peoria, Illinois, where they continued in their chosen business and after about two years went to Indianapolis. This was in the spring of 1883. The year previous, while in Peoria, the subject had been united in marriage with Emma Sweat, a native of that city and the daughter of James B, and Elizabeth (Hines) Sweat. The father was a native of Maine and the mother had been born in Ohio. After their marriage they had gone to Peoria county, Illinois, and engaged in farming, where they lived the remainder of their lives. At the outbreak of the Civil War, Mr. Sweat enlisted for service, and while at the front took sick and died. His widow, mother of Mrs. Cummings, passed away at her home in Illinois in 1008. After coming with their wives to Indianapolis, the Cummings brothers associated themselves with W. B. Bassett, C. L. Rose and W. W. Winslow, forming what was known as the Indianapolis Bridge Company. For about two years they made combination iron and wooden bridges and in about two years built a factory at the Bee Line tracks near East Michigan street. Here for about ten years they engaged in the manufacture of steel and combination bridges and then turned their attention to steel bridges exclusively, Mr. Cummings acting as superintendent of the plant most of the time. They also took contracts for bridges, which they made and erected. About the year 1803 their company was succeeded by the Indiana Bridge Company and then the subject and his old associates separated, each carrying on bridge contracting independently of the others. Mr. Cummings took the contract for the erection of the Kentucky avenue bridge over White river in the city of Indianapolis. This was in 1804, during the time Coxev and his "army" made their famous march. In accepting the contract for the erection of the bridge, Mr. Cummings had agreed to use local workmen as much as possible and the unemployed came to him in such numbers and were so wild for work that the police department was called upon to disperse the crowd. There were times when there would be fully two thousand men looking for employment in the construction of the bridge and at that time laborers were paid only sixty cents a day. Now the cheapest labor he employs costs thirty cents per hour and some of his laborers make as much as four dollars per day. The year previous to the construction of the Kentucky avenue bridge, Mr. Cummings and his brother took the contract for the erection of the bridge over the Ohio at Wheeling, West Virginia, and resting on the island midstream. For awhile Mr. Cummings was associated with David Braden on several bridge contracts. It was David Braden after whom the subject's voungest son was named.

It was in the year 1897 that Mr. Cummings came to this county and purchased land, setting himself up as a farmer. He first purchased one hundred and twenty acres in the southwestern part of Lincoln township and at one time owned as much as two hundred acres. However, he has disposed of different tracts until he now owns the same amount with which he first started. He still continues the bridge business and in addition has his farm home, where the family have been reared. There are four children, Delmar, Effie, Wands and Braden. Delmar was born in 1883 and married Ethel Frisbie. He lives on a farm near his father, and has two children, Clayton and Gertrude. Delmar was associated with his father in the bridge business until about two years ago when he became superintendent of erection for the Central States Bridge Company of Indianapolis. Effie, who was born in 1886, is the wife of Edgar Hufford and has two children. Marshall and Walter. Wands, born in 1888, married Blanche Kennedy and lives near his father. They are the parents of two children, Russel and Lloyd. He is engaged in farming. Braden, the youngest of the family, was born in 1894 and remains at home as the assistant of his father, both in conducting the farm and in carrying on the work of bridge erection.

Mr. Cummings' fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he has been a member since 1888, and both he and his wife are members of the White Lick Presbyterian church. The family is among the leading ones of the township, broad-minded, of advanced ideas and delightful to meet. Mr. Cummings' business has taken him all over the United States and he thoroughly enjoys travel, but the trip he considers most enjoyable of all was one it was his privilege to take in 1912. He had been engaged in bridge work in Georgia and the Carolinas and Mrs. Cummings had been with him a great deal of the time. In the fall of that year they started to drive home in a buggy, leaving King's Mountain in North Carolina. They arrived at Danville, this county, seventeen and one-half days after, having crossed eight mountains and encountering some roads so rough it was necessary to hold the horse up. Roads were often only wide enough for one vehicle and passing would have been impossible. Mr. Cummings is a man of unusual strength of character and ability, one who impresses his individuality upon the locality honored by his residence. By a life of consistent action and thought, he has earned the high standing which he now enjoys and it is a pleasure to give him representation in a work of the scope of the one at hand.

JOHN U. RICE.

The sketch which now comes before the reader is a brief review of the career of John U. Rice, one of the older residents of the county and a man of sterling worth, who through long years of residence here has so conducted his affairs of life as to win the honor of all. His name has been inseparably connected with the general growth of Hendricks county, of which he is a native and where, in fact, he has spent the major portion of his life. While primarily attending to his own varied interests, his life has been largely devoted to his fellow men, having been untiring in his efforts to inspire a proper respect for law and order and ready at all times to uplift humanity along civic and social lines.

John U. Rice was born on October 25, 1839, about a half mile north of Brownsburg, the son of Lewis and Sophia (Harris) Rice, both of whom were natives of the state of Kentucky, coming from either Scott or Bourbon county, the former having been born January 8, 1806, and the latter on June 27, 1811, being the daughter of William and Nancy (Barrett) Harris. When young, she was brought to this state by her parents, who came direct to Hendricks county and located near Brownsburg. Lewis Rice came to this state when twenty-one years old, locating north of Brownsburg, and there he met and married Sophia Harris. He was a farmer in this county the remainder of his life and died here on March 25, 1865, at the age of fifty-two years. His wife lived several years after he died, passing away on April 11, 1880, at the age of sixty-four years.

The subject was one of a family of nine children, all of whom grew to maturity. He passed his boyhood on the paternal homestead north of Brownsburg, attending the early subscription schools of the day, and in early life was apprenticed to the carpenter trade. He worked at this for some time and in wagon shops in and near Brownsburg, and on October 21, 1864, he was united in marriage with Mahala I. Montgomery, who was born in this county on November 2, 1840, being the daughter of Samuel and Mary (Fox) Montgomery, the former a native-born Hoosier and the latter coming here from Virginia. Immediately after marriage, Mr. Rice went to Illinois where he spent three years at his trade and farming part of the time. He then returned to this county and purchased a portion of the old homestead and there resided until 1870. At that time he purchased a forty-acre tract in the southeastern part of Lincoln township and has lived there since. Mrs. Rice passed from this life on August 12, 1909. For years she had been a faithful member of the Christian church and was a woman highly esteemed by those who knew her. Mr. Rice has added to his original possessions from time to time, until he now owns one hundred acres of as excellent land as the county can boast.

Mr. and Mrs. Rice were the parents of two children, Etta and Everett Harland. Etta is the wife of George Salmon and resides in Indianapolis. Mr. Salmon is a traveling salesman. They have one daughter, Mary. who is the wife of Earl Hubert Duling, who was born on March 5, 1884, in Grant county, this state, the son of John and Lydia Duling. He now resides on the Rice homestead in Lincoln township and is the father of two sons, Byron Montgomery and Meredith Earl. Everett Harland Rice lives in Daviess county, this state, where he is engaged in farming. His wife was Laura Pike and they are the parents of three children, John Walker, Mamie Belle and Clara, all of whom are married. John Walter married May Stiles and they live in Los Angeles, California. Mamie Belle married Chester Cohee and lives at Elizabethtown, this state. She is the mother of a little son, Randall. Clara married Ernest Boyer and lives near Columbus, Indiana.

Mr. Rice holds his religious membership with the Christian church in Brownsburg, of which his wife also was a member, and he is one of the most faithful members of that society. Personally, Mr. Rice is a man of clean character and has ever exerted a healthful influence in the community, giving his support to every movement which promises to advance the welfare of the locality in any way. Because of his genuine worth he enjoys the sincere respect of all who know him and is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of the one in hand.

PATRICK M. LONG.

It is generally considered by those in the habit of superficial thinking that the history of so-called great men only is worthy of preservation and that little merit exists among the masses to call forth the praises of the historian or the cheers and appreciation of mankind. A greater mistake was never made. No man is great in all things and very few are great in many things. Many by a lucky stroke achieve lasting fame who before that had no reputation beyond the limits of their neighborhoods. It is not a history of the lucky stroke which benefits humanity most, but the long study and effort which make the lucky stroke possible. It is the preliminary work, the method, that serves as a guide for the success of others. Among those in this county who have achieved success along steady lines of action is the subject of this sketch.

Patrick M. Long, one of the foremost agriculturists of Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, is a native of the Emerald Isle, born in county Galway on March 26, 1856, being the son of Patrick and Bridget (Sheridan) Long, both of whom were natives of the same county. They emigrated to America when the subject of this sketch was but eight weeks old, there being one child older. The voyage was a long and tedious affair, it being seventeen weeks from the time they left Europe until a landing in New York harbor was effected. The little family remained in New York until in 1864, when they went to Canada, where the father secured employment in the construction of a railroad. They remained there but one year and then came direct to Indiana, locating in Marion county, where Patrick, senior, secured work on farms by the month. For three or four years he followed this line of activity, when he came to Hendricks county and leased a farm in the eastern part of Brown township, where the family resided about twenty-seven years. In the beginning he was to clear the land up and raise whatever crops he could. At the end of that time, he arranged to rent the farm and this contract was in force until 1890, the family residing thereon until in 1886, when they moved to the farm where the subject now lives in the western portion of Brown township. Patrick Long, senior, had purchased this farm in 1879. It consisted of some eighty acres and this he farmed in connection with the rented land, which gave him in all about one hundred and eighty acres of excellent farming lands. He was a man deserving of the highest honor and esteem, for by his own unaided efforts he attained to a position of prominence and while primarily seeking the interests of himself and his immediate family, he so ordered his life as to win the esteem and respect of all who knew him. His death occurred on November 28, 1903, his wife having preceded him some years. She died March 28, 1881.

Patrick M. Long was one of a family of seven children and lived in the old home until the time of his marriage, when he brought his bride to the paternal roof, where they have since made their home. Upon the death of his father, he came into possession of the homestead. Shortly before his father's death, the subject of this sketch purchased twenty acres adjoining the home place, which gives him a tract of one hundred acres. This farm is considered about the best drained land in the county and Mr. Long conducts his business along modern scientific methods. There is an air of prosperity and happiness all about the place and especially about the comfortable home, which is beautifully situated in a large grove of maples.

On January 31, 1894, Patrick M. Long was united in marriage to Kate Tarpey, a daughter of James and Nancy (Dugan) Tarpey, both of whom were natives of county Galway, Ireland, and came to this country in 1862. They came direct to Hendricks county, Indiana, locating in the town of Plainfield, where they lived for some time. They then purchased land in Boone county, where they made their home until 1873, when they returned to Hendricks county, purchasing a farm about one mile south of where the subject of this sketch resides. It was on that farm that Mrs. Tarpey breathed her last on May 30, 1905, and in the following year Mr. Tarpey went to make his home with his daughter, wife of the subject of this sketch, and in their home his death occurred on November 20, 1913. To Mr. and Mrs. Long have been born six children, four of whom survive, namely: Delia, Thresa, Patrick Francis and James, all of whom are still at home.

Mr. Long is a stanch supporter of the Democratic party, taking active interest in the affairs of same. For one term he served as township trustee, and at the time he assumed the office there was a large indebtedness owed by the township. When his term had ended, he had paid off and turned over to his successor in cash enough to reduce the indebtedness about one-half without having increased the tax levy. This, Mr. Long feels, was a pretty good showing and he has just cause for that opinion. He also served as road supervisor for two years and was on the township advisory board for two years and in the discharge of the duties of these various offices he met with almost universal approbation. Mr. Long and his family are communicants of the Roman Catholic church, living strictly in accordance with the tenets of that faith. The family is highly respected and regarded as one of the leading families of the community, their hospitality being of that genuine order which welcomes friend and stranger alike. Mr. Long is a man of good business ability, strict integrity and fine personal address and because of his genuine worth and high character he has long enjoyed a splendid reputation in the community where he lives. He gives his support to all movements for the advancement of his fellow citizens and is numbered among the representative men of Brown township.

JOHN P. MORAN.

The people who constitute the bone and sinew of this country are not those who are unstable and unsettled, who fly from this occupation to that, who do not know how to vote until they are told, and who take no active and intelligent interest in affairs affecting their schools, churches and property. The backbone of this country is made up of those families who have made their homes; who are alive to the best interests of the community in which they reside; who are so honest that it is no trouble for their neighbors to know it, and who attend to their own business and are too busy to attend to that of others; who work on steadily from day to day, taking the sunshine with the storm, and who rear a fine family to a comfortable home and an honest life. Such people are always welcome in any country and in any community. They are wealth producers and this country is blessed with many of them, among whom is the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch.

John P. Moran, one of the county commissioners of Hendricks county, Indiana, was born June 16, 1861, in Marion county, Indiana, the son of Peter and Bridget (Mullin) Moran, both natives of Ireland. Peter Moran was born in county Waterford, Ireland, and his wife in Galway. From their native land they went to England before their marriage and in that country they were married. After the birth of two children, they came to America and settled in Marion county, Indiana, two miles north of Clermont. Here Peter Moran was living at the time of the Civil War, and, although he had been in the country only a short time, yet he was willing to sacrifice his life for his adopted country. Accordingly he enlisted on August 18, 1862, in Company F, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served until he was captured and placed in Libby prison. He was one of the few men who made that memorable escape through the tunnel which was dug by the prisoners. However, he was not as fortunate as some of them, for he was recaptured and again thrown into the prison, where he shortly afterwards died. Peter Moran and his wife were the parents of four children, Mary and Ellen, who were born in England, and Hannah and John, who were born in this country.

John P. Moran was only about one year old when his father enlisted for service in the Union army and consequently never remembered seeing him. When he was four years of age his mother moved to Hendricks county, this state, and here he received his education. He was a remarkably bright youth and quickly forged his way to the front. While still a young man, he was given employment at the Boys' School at Plainfield as night watchman. He was promoted several times, was an officer four years and for twelve years was assistant superintendent of that school under T. J. Charlton. At the expiration of that time he went to Morganza, Pennsylvania, where he served under J. A. Quay for two years and eight months as first officer of the Boys' Reform School at that place. He then came back to Hendricks county, this state, and settled on a farm in Center township, where he is still living. He owns a fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres, which is thoroughly modern in every respect.

Mr. Moran was married December 2, 1896, to Eliza Nevells, the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Tinder) Nevells, and to this marriage has been born one son, John, who is still residing with his parents.

Mr. Moran has been a life-long Democrat and has always taken an active part in politics. He is a man of education and has been frequently consulted by the leaders of his party in the county, his advice being usually followed. In 1912 his party placed him in nomination for the office of county commissioner and he was elected by a large majority, bringing to bear in this important office those excellent qualities which made him a success in his school work.

Mr. Moran and his son are earnest and devoted adherents of the Catholic church and give to it their zealous support at all times. Mrs. Moran is a member of the Christian church. Earnest purpose and private energy, combined with excellent judgment and every-day common sense, have made Mr. Moran a man of influence in his township and county. Starting in life with practically nothing but his keen mind and willing hands, he has won a place where he is universally regarded as one of the representative men of his county. He has been an active participant in every measure which he felt would benefit his community and has contributed in no small way to the growth of his township and county and to the advancement of its best interests.

JOSEPH H. AIRHART.

One of the most enterprising of our younger generation of farmers in Johnson county, who has believed from the outset of his career that the "wisdom of yesterday is sometimes the folly of today," and that while the methods of our grandfathers in tilling the soil were all right in their day, yet in the twentieth century we are compelled to adopt new methods and farm along different lines, in view of the fact that conditions of climate, soil, grains, etc., have changed since the days of the pioneers. He has been a close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his chosen life work and he has, therefore, met with encouraging success all along the line. Judging from his past record, he will undoubtedly achieve much in the future years and take his place among the leading agriculturists of a community noted for its fine farms and adroit husbandmen.

Joseph H. Airhart, proprietor of a fine farm of one hundred and twenty acres, considered one of the best improved farms in the county, located in the northwestern portion of Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in Boone county, this state, on September 6, 1876. He is a son of Jacob and Mary E. (Gill) Airhart. Jacob was one of a family of six children and was brought by his parents from their native state of Virginia while he was still quite young. His father, Peter Airhart, was a son of a native of Holland who had emigrated to America in the early days and settled in Virginia. Upon coming to Indiana, Peter Airhart settled in Boone county, where he entered land from the government and lived thereon the rest of his life, and on that same land the subject of this sketch first saw the light of day. Mary E. Gill, mother of the subject, was one of a family of seven children born to Washington and Fanny (Gibson) Gill, and was brought to the state of Indiana from their old home in Kentucky while still quite a small child. Her father entered land from the government in Boone county, near Advance, and there passed the remainder of his life. Jacob Airhart was twice married, his first wife being a Miss Bowman, to whom he was married in the early fifties. She lived for about ten years thereafter, leaving two children at the time of her death. He continued to live on the old home place after his second marriage, some time in the sixties, to Mary E. Gill, and there his death occurred in 1887. By his second wife he had a family of five children, of which the subject of this sketch is one.

Joseph H. Airhart was but eleven years old at the time of his father's death and three years later his mother also died. From that time on until he was twenty-one years of age, he was practically homeless, making his home with whomsoever he could secure work. In 1807 he was united in marriage with Mary E, LaFollette, a cousin of Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin. She was a daughter of Milton and Elizabeth J. (Grider) LaFollette, originally from Putnam county, this state. Her father died when she was four years old and the mother continued to keep up the home near Shannondale, where the present Mrs. Airhart lived until the time of her marriage to the subject. In 1808 Mr. Airhart purchased a tract of eighty acres near Lebanon, in Boone county, on which he resided for three years. He then came to Hendricks county and purchased his present farm of one hundred and twenty acres in Brown township, which is considered one of the best-cared-for farms in the county, fully attesting what up-to-date scientific methods in agriculture can accomplish when coupled with energy and untiring effort. The vocation of the farmer is coming more and more to be regarded as the ideal life, that in which a man has opportunity to display ability of the highest order and in which vocation he is more independent than in any other. Time was when, after a season of arduous labor, the farmer was forced to take for his produce whatever he could get; now he makes prices himself and so rules the markets of the world.

Mr. Airhart's political preferences are with the Democratic party, of which he has been a stanch supporter for many years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 839, and the religious membership of himself and wife is with the Christian church, of which he is an earnest member. Mr. and Mrs. Airhart have one child, Fern Evadna, who remains at home. They are considered among the leading citizens of their community, their home extending genuine hospitality to friend and stranger alike. Personally, Mr. Airhart is friendly, a good mixer, and wins and retains friends without effort, for he is at all times a gentleman, obliging, unassuming and honest to the letter in his dealings with his fellow men. His life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance and the notably systematic and honorable methods he has followed have won for him the unbounded confidence and regard of all who have formed his acquaintance.

JOHN A. ADAMS.

Among the leading citizens of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, Indiana, none stand in better repute than John A. Adams, the well-known mill and elevator man, who, by reason of his business qualifications, has done much to enhance the commercial life of the town. Also during the years of his residence there, he has taken an active part in the administration of civic affairs and has ever done all within his power to promote the moral, material and educational life of the community.

John A. Adams was born on December 23, 1853, in Washington township, this county, the son of John C. and Sarah E. (Park) Adams, both of whom were born in Kentucky. John C. came from Estill county and probably Sarah E. Park did also. John C. was the son of James and Eleanor Adams, who came from Kentucky and located in this county near Danville, where they engaged in farming. John C. grew up in this county and all his life was engaged in farm work, owning land in Washington township, where he lived up to the last two years of his life. These were passed in Lincoln township, where his death occurred in 1865. Sarah E. Park, his wife, was a daughter of John and Malinda (Robinson) Park, who came from Kentucky and located in Boone county, in the early forties. She survived her husband a number of years, her death occurring in 1893.

John A. Adams passed his boyhood days on the home farm, receiving his elementary education in the district schools of that locality, later attending the Central Normal College, at Danville. He assisted on the home farm and in 1886 became identified with the milling business at Brownsburg. At that time a stock company was organized, of which he was a member, and later he and Mr. Lingerman purchased the interests of the other members of the company and have since operated the mill in partnership. In 1901 they also became owners of the elevator and in 1910 remodeled the mill, adding corn shellers and a cleaning apparatus. Their mill has a capacity of fifty barrels daily and they make an excellent grade of flour, under the trade name of "Best Imperial." In addition to their milling and grain business, they also deal in coal and are numbered among the progressive business men of the town and county.

In politics, Mr. Adams is a Republican and has shown a deep interest in the welfare of the town. He has been secretary and treasurer of the town, a member of the town board and also a member of the school board, and in meeting the obligations thus devolving upon him has ever thrown his influence on the side of the greatest good to the greatest number.

In 1885 Mr. Adams was united in marriage with Jennie S. Wells, who was born in Middle township, this county, a daughter of Simon and Nancy S. (Smith) Wells. The Wells family came to this county at an early day, being numbered among its pioneers. Their original home was North Carolina. The Smith family came to this county from Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have one son living, Harold W., who is attending Indiana University, at Bloomington, and is a promising young man. Mr. Adams' fraternal affiliations are with the time honored body of Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias and both he and his wife are consistent members of the Christian church. Mr. Adams is an honest, unassuming man of affairs, who earnestly desires to adequately fill his place in life and be of lasting assistance to those whose lives touch his.

CHARLES TANSEL.

In preparing a review of a man's life, it is not the biographer's part to give voice to a man's modest opinion of himself and what he has done, but rather it is his part to leave upon record the verdict establishing his character, which is the consensus of opinion among his friends and neighbors. "Actions speak louder than words" is a true saying, and while a man might give voice to the most lofty principles, his life must be in accordance with them else the words carry no weight. The subject of this sketch is held in high regard by those with whom he comes in contact and it is, therefore, apparent that throughout the years his manner of living has been such as to win this high tribute.

Charles Tansel was born on September 16, 1860, in the western part of Marion county, near the town of Clermont, being the son of Peyton and Mary (Myers) Tansel. Peyton Tansel was born in Kentucky in 1821 and at the age of eight years was brought to Indiana by his parents, who settled along Fall creek, north of Indianapolis. After staying there a short time, they came to the western part of Marion county and there made their permanent home. Here it was that Peyton passed his boyhood days, grew to manhood and married. He was thrice married, his first wife being a Miss Patterson, who died in a few years, leaving a son and daughter. His second wife was Mary Myers, the mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, who died when the subject was a babe of two years. Later Peyton Tansel married Mary Moon and to their union were born three children, two of whom died in infancy and one son, Tinsley, survives. Peyton Tansel's entire life was spent in the western part of Marion county and there his death occurred in 1903, his widow surviving until 1906, having continued to live through her widowhood on the homestead.

Charles Tansel remained under the paternal roof, assisting his father in the work about the homestead, until the time of his marriage, in March, 1800, to Emma Tucker, who was born in Shelby county, this state, a daughter of Cornelius Frazier and Phoebe (Brant) Tucker, both natives of Shelby county. Cornelius Frazier Tucker was a son of James Tucker, a pioneer citizen of that county who had acquired considerable land there and for many vears before his death was regarded as one of the leading citizens of the community. Phoebe Brant, mother of Mrs. Tansel, was a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Chance) Brant, and died when her daughter Emma was six years old. Frazier Tucker then married Martha Blake and in 1884 moved a short distance east of Clermont, where they purchased a farm and lived there until 1905, when they retired from the active duties of farm life and went to Clermont to end their days in quietness. He lived but two months after leaving the farm and his widow passed away on Christmas day, 1912, in the city of Indianapolis. Emma Tucker remained with her father until the time of her marriage to the subject, and immediately afterwards they established their home on the farm where they now reside in Lincoln township, this county. This farm comprises eighty acres and on it Mr. Tansel carries on general farming and kindred interests. To Mr. and Mrs. Tansel has been born one son, Herbert, whose birth occurred in 1900. Mrs. Tansel was one of a family of three children; a baby brother died when two years old and the third member is Mary, wife of Oliver P. Morgan, who lives in Clermont.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tansel are devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church and give liberally of their time and means to further the cause of that society. They are both quiet and unassuming in manner and cordial in their relations with friends and neighbors. Mr. Tansel stands as an example of what may be accomplished by any man who is not afraid to work and will put brains into whatever he does. By honest effort and thrift he has amassed a competence and his kindliness and good nature have endeared him to the large number of people with whom he comes in contact.

LUCIAN G. FUNKHOUSER.

Among the earnest men whose enterprise and depth of character have gained a prominent place in the community and the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens is the honored subject of this sketch. A leading farmer and stock raiser of the township in which he resides and a man of decided views and laudable ambitions, his influence has ever been exerted for the advancement of his kind and in the vocation to which his energies are devoted he ranks among the representative agriculturists of the county.

Lucian G. Funkhouser, who is successfully operating his farm of eighty acres in Brown township, Hendricks county, devoting especial attention to his excellent strain of Poland China hogs, is a native of this county, having been born June 22, 1867, not far from his present place of residence. He is the son of Joseph and Nancy E. (King) Funkhouser, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, coming to Indiana in his boyhood with his parents, who settled in Hendricks county, near the center of Brown township, where they purchased a farm of eighty acres. Joseph F., who was the son of Martin F., lived at home until the time of his marriage, when he made his home for a time on rented ground, later purchasing a farm, a portion of which is included in the farm now owned by the immediate subject of this sketch. They were the parents of seven children, one of whom died in infancy.

Lucian G. Funkhouser remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage, having received his education in the schools of Hendricks county. In 1890 he was united in marriage with Myra E. Crane, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Cox) Crane, of Boone county, and at that time built the house which has since been their home. James Crane, father of Mrs. Funkhouser, was a native of the Hoosier state and the son of Stephen and Mary (Ross) Crane. Stephen Crane was a native of Ohio and the son of John and Letitia Crane. Mary Ross Crane was a daughter of John Ross and was of Scotch ancestry. Elizabeth Cox Crane, mother of Mrs. Funkhouser, was born in the state of Kentucky and was the daughter of John and Rebecca (Howard) Cox, both native to Kentucky. Rebecca Howard was a daughter of Ellen (Ford) Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland. James Crane served a short time in the War of the Rebellion. He was a member of Company A, Seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was in service three months. After returning home, he went to Colorado where he engaged in labors in the gold fields. He and his wife were the parents of four children, Myra E. remaining at home until the time of her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Funkhouser have been born seven children, five of whom are living. Sallie, one of the daughters, is the wife of Carl Herring, the son of Phillip and America (Walker) Herring, of Brown township, where the young people reside just south of Mr. Funkhouser's home. There still remain under the parental roof Hazel, Mary, Loyal and Harry.

Mr. and Mrs. Funkhouser are both members of the Christian church and give liberally of their time and means toward its support. Their home is the center of an interesting social life and both children and parents have a wide circle of friends by whom they are much admired. Mr. Funkhouser is a most companionable gentleman, honorable and reliable in all his dealings, and he ranks among the enterprising and public-spirited citizens of the community in which he resides, manifesting an active interest in whatever pertains to the progress of his county and co-operates with others in forwarding all measures whereby his fellowmen may be benefited. Because of his high principles and his success in life, he is held in high favor by his fellow citizens.

ALFRED S. LINEINGER.

An enumeration of the representative citizens of Hendricks county would be incomplete without specific mention of the well known and popular gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. A member of one of the old and highly esteemed families of this locality and for many years a public-spirited man of affairs, he has stamped the impress of his individuality upon the community and added luster to the honorable name which he bears, having always been actuated by a spirit of fairness in his dealings with the world in general and leaving no stone unturned whereby he might benefit his own condition as well as that of his friends and the favored section of the great commonwealth in which he has been content to spend his life. Straightforward and unassuming, genial and obliging, Mr. Lineinger enjoys the good will and respect of a wide circle of friends throughout this part of the state. Alfred S, Lineinger, ex-county commissioner, is a native of this county.

ALFRED S. LINEINGER

born on July 1, 1853, the son of Aaron and Margaret (Duzan) Lineinger, the former of whom was a native of Ross county, Ohio, born July 28, 1822, and the eighth child in a family of twelve children. Margaret Duzan was a native of Kentucky, having been brought to this state when quite young. Her parents first settled in Monroe county, coming to Hendricks in 1825. She was born March 17, 1814, in Fleming county. Kentucky, and departed this life March 31, 1805.

Aaron Lineinger left his boyhood home in Ohio at the age of twentyone years and, in company with Jacob M. Duzan, went to Iowa. There they remained but one year, engaging in agricultural work, when they came eastward to Indiana and settled in this county. In Center township they purchased eighty acres of land in equal partnership, for which they paid four hundred dollars. Two years later Aaron bought out Duzan's interest for eight hundred dollars. Duzan left for Middle township, where he purchased eighty acres of land for the price he had received from Aaron Lineinger for his forty acres. Aaron Lineinger remained on this farm for the remainder of his life, carrying on general farming with particular attention paid to grain and stock. He deeded this land to the subject about 1902 and there his death occurred on December 22, 1912. He had been a helpless invalid the latter part of his life, and at his death was survived by his brother John, who departed this life, January 14, 1914, in his ninetieth year. On July 21, 1848. Aaron Lineinger was united in marriage with Margaret Duzan and to this union were born two children, Samantha, who became Mrs. Ensminger, and the immediate subject of this sketch. Aaron Lineinger was a man of studious habits and excellent business qualifications, an affectionate husband and father and a kind and helpful neighbor. He enjoyed the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances, many of whom were warmly endeared to him by various acts of kindness. He was a stanch Republican, but was never the incumbent of any public office. His fraternal affiliation was with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he had been a member since 1864. While not a member of any church, he had been reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and gave much assistance to that society in various ways. His was a well-rounded, well-balanced life. While seeking primarily the welfare of himself and those nearest to him, he never forgot the claims of his less fortunate brethren and throughout his life here he took an active part in any movement having as its ultimate object the betterment of the moral, educational or material life of the community.

Alfred S. Lineinger spent his boyhood days in Center township and grew to manhood on the farm where he now makes his home. His early education was obtained in the township schools, later attending the academy at Danville. On March 8, 1877, Mr. Lineinger was united in marriage with Sarah A. Hollingsworth, daughter of Samuel V. and Lydia (Mullen) Hollingsworth, of Washington township, this county. To their union have been born three children, two of whom died in infancy, the surviving member being their son Floyd, who is a farmer, living on a part of the subject's homestead. Floyd married Bernice Euseba Wiley, a native of this county, and their union is without issue. Mr. Lineinger originally owned three hundred and twenty acres of excellent land, located on the Danville electric line, but about one year ago sold one hundred acres of this at a price of one hundred and thirty dollars per acre. This was at considerable profit, as he paid thirty-five dollars per acre for the same land twelve years earlier.

Mr. Lineinger is a stanch Republican, very active in local politics. He gave nine years' service on the board of county commissioners. He was elected in the fall of 1900, taking his seat in January of 1902 and served until January, 1911, from district number two. During his years of service on the board the subject of the erection of concrete bridges came before that body, and several excellent bridges were constructed during the subject's term of office. Mr. Lineinger's fraternal affiliations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Free and Accepted Masons, and the Tribe of Ben-Hur, being associated with these bodies through the local lodges at Danville. He has filled the various chairs in the first two societies mentioned and has also been a member of the grand lodges of those same societies. He is also chief of the Tribe of Ben-Hur in his local lodge. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lineinger are members of Bartlett chapel (Methodist Episcopal), Mr. Lineinger serving that society as trustee for many years. Both he and his wife are earnestly interested in the welfare of that society and do much toward the support of same.

Like his father, Mr. Lineinger is a man of excellent business ability and sterling qualities of heart and mind. He stands high in public estimation by reason of his many years of unquestioned uprightness of his and the helping hand he is ever ready to extend to those in need. He is a man of genial, though quiet, temperament; active and progressive in all his ideas. He is one of the leading men of the county in his chosen vocation and both his public and private life have ever been above reproach. Needless to say, a man of so many engaging qualities is not only highly respected, but also is warmly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

JAMES W. PHILLIPS.

All callings, whether humble or exalted, may be productive of some measure of success if enterprise and industry, coupled with a well directed purpose, form the motive force of the person directing the same, and in no case is this fact more apparent than in agricultural pursuits. It is a well authenticated fact that success comes as the result of legitimate and well-applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance as well as the above enumerated qualities. When a course of action is once decided upon, these attributes are essential. Success is never known to smile upon the idler or dreamer and she never courts the loafer, only those who have diligently sought her favor being crowned with her blessings. In tracing the history of the prosperous and influential agriculturist whose name forms the caption of this biographical review, we find that the above-named elements have entered largely into his make-up and therefore we are not surprised at the large and ever-growing success which he has attained.

James W. Phillips was born in Jefferson county. Indiana, on April 7. 1837, the son of Thomas and Susan (Wilson) Phillips, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. When young, they were brought to Kentucky with their parents, and later came to Indiana with their families, their marriage not taking place until after they had become residents of the Hoosier state. Thomas Phillips was killed by a tree falling on him while felling timber, at the time the subject of this sketch was fifteen years old. Being the oldest of the family, many of its burdens and responsibilities then fell upon his young shoulders and he remained at home for a number of years, assisting the mother in the care and support of the family of younger brothers and sisters. In 1861 Mr. Phillips was united in marriage with Lydia Gray, whose death occurred in 1870. She was the mother of two children, namely: Charles H., who died at the age of twenty-nine years, never having been married, and Clarence B., who took as his wife Leoda Wilson. By this wife he has two children, Wilma, who makes her home with her father, and Harold, who has always been under the care of his maternal grandmother, his mother having passed away when he was only four days old. Clarence B. chose as his second wife Cornelia Pearcy, by whom he has one child, Otis, residing with his parents.

In 1881 Mr. Phillips was united in marriage with Melvina Gray, a sister of his first wife, by whom he has six children. Lydia and Melvina Gray were the daughters of Hiram and Roxy (Young) Gray, the former from Clermont county, Ohio, and the latter of whom was a native of New York. They were married in 1834 and lived for several years in Ohio. Wishing to better their fortunes, they removed to the state of Kentucky, where they remained for only a year and, being dissatisfied, returned to their former home in Ohio. They later came to Indiana and settled in Jennings county. where Melvina was born. When she was ten years old, the family moved to Missouri, making the trip overland in covered wagons. They were there eight years, when the death of the mother occurred, and the father brought his family back into Indiana and settled in Hendricks county about two and one-half miles northeast of Brownsburg. Here he purchased a farm, where he lived for a number of years, later disposing of it and purchasing property in Brownsburg, where he lived until his death. Of Mr. Phillips' family by his second wife, the eldest is Iva Jane, wife of Harry Bell, a resident of Brownsburg. They have a family of three children, Mabel, Horace and Grant. Mr. Phillips has three children remaining at home, Hiram, Roy and Delta. Susan, another daughter, married James Smith and they are engaged in agricultural work in Boone county. They have a family of four children. Lloyd, Esther, Kellar and Noble. Ruth, another daughter, is the wife of Riley Smith and they live on his father's farm, one mile west of the Phillips home.

James W. Phillips first came to Hendricks county in 1865 and for two years lived on rented farms, after which time he purchased the home where he has since resided. Mr. Phillips is a graduate of a military school, being second lieutenant of his company at the time of his graduation. During the dark days of the sixties, while not at the front, he was busy in the work nearer home. He did service in the Jefferson county militia, assisting in the pursuit of Morgan and his raiders. He also helped guard Confederate prisoners which were brought to Indianapolis. He had three brothers at the front, one of whom died while in service, having contracted a serious illness while on duty. He also had three brothers-in-law in the war, one of whom starved to death in Andersonville prison. Politically, Mr. Phillips is a strong supporter of the Republican party and, while not a seeker after office for himself, his influence at the polls is a thing reckoned with by those who do seek such honors. Mrs. Phillips is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and, while Mr. Phillips does not hold church membership anywhere, his sympathies would seem to be with the society chosen by his wife, for he gave the site on which the Corinth Methodist church is erected and has in other ways assisted financially in its support, while Mrs. Phillips gives much of her time to further the interests of the society. Mr. Phillips has ever shown himself worthy of the high esteem in which he is held. His life has been filled with activity and usefulness, while his untiring energy and ability have secured for him a conspicuous and honorable place among the citizens of his community. His strict integrity and unpretending bearing have elevated him in the confidence of his fellow citizens, and his influence has always been exerted in the interests of those things which have helped to elevate his fellow men socially, morally and educationally. Because of his successful career and his high personal character, he is eminently entitled to representation among the leading men of his county.

WILLIAM J. NASH.

Success is only achieved by the exercise of certain distinguishing qualities and it cannot be retained without effort. Those by whom great epoch changes have been made in the political and industrial world began early in life to prepare themselves for their peculiar duties and responsibilities and it was only by the most persevering and continuous endeavor that they succeeded in rising superior to the obstacles in their way and reaching the goal of their ambition. Such lives are an inspiration to others who are less courageous and more prone to give up the fight before their ideal is reached or definite success in any chosen field has been attained. In the life history of the honorable gentleman whose name forms the caption of this article we find evidence of a characteristic that always makes for achievement—persistency, coupled with fortitude and lofty traits, and as a result of such a life Mr. Nash stands today one of the representative citizens of Hendricks county.

William J. Nash was born in this ccunty on June 9, 1849, the son of Isaac C. and Cilicia (Wilson) Nash, who at that time resided about three-quarters of a mile northeast of Brownsburg. Isaac C. Nash was born in Ohio on March 27, 1817, and when small was brought to Indiana by his parents, Thomas J. Nash and wife. Cilicia Wilson, mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, was a native of Virginia, born on March 1, 1817, and was also brought to this state by her parents while still a small child. Both the Nash and Wilson families entered tracts of government land some three miles southwest of where the town of Brownsburg now is, in what was then almost a wilderness. It was there that Isaac C. and Cilicia grew to years of maturity, meeting the pleasures and privations of pioneers, and eagerly taking advantage of the meagre opportunities for education afforded them by the early subscription schools, while doing their share of the work about their respective homes. On January 28, 1841, they were united in marriage and for about a year lived on his father's farm. They then secured forty acres of government land about one mile northeast of Brownsburg, all located in virgin forest. It took several years of strenuous labor to convert this tract into well cultivated fields. Their first home on that land was a log cabin with a nice log barn near by, and in that cabin home the subject of this sketch first saw the light of day. Later on a commodious frame house was built, and there Isaac C. Nash passed his remaining years, his death occurring September 25, 1897. His wife had preceded him a number of years, having passed away on December 24, 1860. They were the parents of nine children, those beside the subject being John A., Mary E., Clarinda, William J., Edward F., Alvertus, George A. and Cilicia.

William I. Nash remained at home with his father until the time of his marriage, in the meantime attending the district schools of his neighborhood and receiving from his father careful instruction in the secrets of husbandry. On November 2, 1870, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth McCray, who was born November 6, 1853, the daughter of Richard and Sarah (Avery) McCray, the latter dying when Elizabeth was a babe of but six months. She was the only child of that union and after her mother's death she was cared for by her mother's people. Richard L. McCray and Sarah Avery both were natives of Indiana, having been reared in Marion county, the former the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Lucas) McCray, both of whom were born in the state of Ohio. Richard L. was born July 7, 1828, near Connersyille, this state. The parents of Sarah Avery were Solomon and Fanny (Hawkins) Avery. Some two years after the death of his first wife, Sarah Avery, Richard L. McCray remarried, going directly to Iowa, where he located near Prairie City. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted as second lieutenant in Company G, Twenty-third Regiment Iowa Infantry, and at the battle of Black's River Bridge, near Vicksburg, Mississippi, on the 17th of May, 1863, he was killed by sharpshooters while on the skirmish line. He was captain of his company at the time of his death. Shortly after going into service he was raised to first lieutenant, and not long after that was commissioned captain. Some time after his death, his widow and children returned to Indiana. He was a man of unusual and lovable qualities of heart and mind, looking at life in a sweet and serious way, as evidenced by this sketch inscribed on the fly-leaf of his much beloved copy of Holy Writ: "Richard L. McCray, son of Samuel and Elizabeth McCray, born in Fayette county, Indiana, near Connersville, July 7, 1828. At an early period in life he evidenced a love of music and spent a great portion of his childhood days singing the familiar airs of those days. When in his sixth year, his father moved to Marion county near the capitol of Indiana. At the age of eighteen he left home to learn the joiners and framers' trade, but in this he made but little proficiency and returned at the age of twenty-one to the home of his childhood. In his twenty-second year he obtained this book of Adam Shambaugh. At the age of twenty-five he joined the Christian church at North Liberty, in accordance with the teachings of this Holy Book." He was a singing-school teacher while young, and also taught school. He was a very religious and good man and, in addition to carrying on the regular work of his farm, was also a minister of the Gospel. During his service in the army he acted in the capacity of chaplain of his company.

After the subject's marriage he established his home on a sixty-acre farm which his father owned about a mile and a half northeast of Brownsburg and there they lived for four years. He then purchased eighty acres directly east of the Bethesda church in Brown township, and there the family lived for fourteen years. He then traded that for one hundred and twelve acres of land in Boone county, remaining there nine years, when he again traded that for another farm in Boone county, but never lived thereon, for he almost directly turned that for the one hundred and fifty acres where he now lives, a short distance north of Brownsburg. To Mr. and Mrs. Nash have been born four children, namely: Clarinda, the wife of W. J. Everitt, of Indianapolis. They have two children, Chauncy and Edith. The second child, Olna Isaac, married Elma Smith and they reside on Mr. Nash's farm about a quarter of a mile from subject's residence. They have two boys, Carl and Clifford. Sallie married D. F. Smith and lives a short distance northwest of Brownsburg. She is the mother of five children, Lester, Millie, Victor, Harold and June. The youngest daughter, Ova L., married Porter Phillips and lives in Los Angeles, California. They are the parents of two boys, Avery and William M. Mr. and Mrs. Nash are both members of the Christian church and the family is regarded as among the foremost of the community. Mr. Nash has always been regarded as a supporter of movements having for their object the material advancement of the community, while his influence in promoting the social and moral welfare of his fellow men has been second to none. He has always been regarded as a man of upright principles, industrious and kind-hearted to those in need and few men in the community are more favorably known than he. By reason of the excellent business judgment which he possesses, coupled with his untiring energy and ceaseless endeavor, he has succeeded well financially, and while so doing never lost sight of the principles that make for strong, upright manhood. Consequently, he has the admiration and respect of those who know him.

LUKE W. DUFFEY.

It must be conceded that in this age of enterprise and marked intellectual energy, the successful men are those whose abilities lead them to assume the responsibilities and labors of leaders in their respective fields of endeavor. Success is methodical and consecutive and represents the concrete result of the determined application of individual abilities and powers along rigidly defined lines of labor, whether mental or manual.

Luke W. Duffey, a Hendricks county boy, has acquired a wide reputation as a real estate operator, and his operations have included the handling and improving of many properties of important order. He is also a recognized factor in the "Good Roads" movement in America and as chairman of the good roads committee of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce has been one of the most enthusiastic workers in the commendable cause of good roads. As a frequent delegate to the American Road Congress he has wielded a potent influence both as a worker and as an orator. He is a forceful and logical speaker on road betterment, a subject to which he has given much study and on which he is now recognized as an authority, having been appointed by Governor Ralston to lead a state highway commission as its secretary. He was elected by the Indianapolis Real Estate Board to make the address for Indianapolis in the convention at Winnipeg, Canada. in 1913, where there were seventy-five cities represented, and a correspondent for an English newspaper gave him rating and credits over the Springfield, Ohio, representative who won the contest in which they were participating.

Mr. Duffey is a native of Hendricks county, born October 24, 1879, the son of Squire Eli F. and Nancy J. Duffey, who are now residents of Plainfield, this county. He is a grandson of Michael Duffey, who settled at Belleville, Liberty township, Hendricks county, in 1842, and whose father fought under Washington in the memorable revolutionary struggle to free the American colonies. On the maternal side he is the grandson of Elam Benbow, who came from Carolina and settled in Clay township, Hendricks county, in 1828 with his father, the latter entering a quarter section of land upon which a portion of the present town of Amo is situated.

After finishing his common school education, Luke Duffey entered the Central Normal College at Danville in the autumn of 1807. He completed the course in law and was admitted to the Hendricks county bar August 4. 1000. While in attendance at the college he worked in private families for his board and took care of the office of Brill & Harvey for the privilege of using the books and getting better acquainted with the routine of work in a law office; here he developed a definite knowledge of the statutes of descent, becoming an expert titleman and thereby developing his real estate talent. He later became interested in the real estate business and has since devoted his energies and talents to this field exclusively. His success was assured from the first. Extensive deals soon gained for him a reputation that reached far beyond the boundaries of Hendricks county, and in 1910, seeking a larger field, he removed to Indianapolis and established the Luke W. Duffey Farm Sales Company, with offices at No. 8 West Ohio street, a large and substantial enterprise, specializing in farm lands, though buying and selling realty of all kinds in various parts of the country.

Mr. Duffey has probably done as much as any man living to boom his home county. He has laid out three of the finest additions to the town of Plainfield and constructed more than a score of their most beautiful and substantial homes, and to him must be given credit for the appearance of the great western wing of Indianapolis, which has sprung up like a mush-room in response to some able advertisements that he has written on the advantages offered in that section lying west of Eagle creek and between the Hendricks county line and the city proper. He has platted the Sterling Heights tract, Lookout Plaza, Duffey's Second Addition to Lookout Plaza, Lookout Garden, and is credited with having first conceived the idea of this territory as a town site, which has now something like two thousand homes to evidence his judgment as a far-seeing real estate man.

Mr. Duffey is also proprietor of the famous Hotel De Hoss, the largest livery in the state of Indiana. He has always been interested in the live stock business and is a frequent speaker and judge at stock shows and conventions. He is a member of the Indianapolis Real Estate Exchange and was appointed vice-chairman of the agricultural development committee of the International Real Estate Exchange, the purpose of which is to co-operate with the House and Senate committees of Congress, with the Canadian Parliament and with the National Bankers Agricultural Committee to bring about improved farming conditions. He is a Mason, a Knight of Pythias and a Modern Woodman; he holds a birthright membership in the Quaker church, and is an active member of the Indianapolis Commercial Club.

Luke Duffey is a progressive and public-spirited citizen with a program. Poverty did not dishearten him, misfortune deter him, nor hardships turn him a hair's breadth from his course. His whole nature is dominated by the spirit of progress. He has shown marked executive ability and has handled his independent business with much of prescience and skill, so that his operations have yielded to him due returns and have proved of value to those whom he has served in his professional capacity. His success is the more gratifying to contemplate on the score that it represents the direct results of his own labors and ability. He has been dependent on his own resources from early youth, and has made his business career by his own indomitable energy, and the scrupulous care and honor he gives to every transaction entrusted to him as given him a large and growing patronage. Personally, he is genial, obliging and is universally popular.

HERSCHEL ELSWORTH DAVIS

To write the personal record of men who have raised themselves from humble circumstances to a position of responsibility and trust in a community is no ordinary pleasure. Self-made men, men who have achieved success by reason of their personal qualities and left the impress of their individuality upon the business and growth of their place of residence and affect for good stich institutions as are embraced in the sphere of their usefulness, unwittingly, perhaps, build monuments more enduring than marble obelisk or granite shaft.

Herschel Elsworth Davis is a Hoosier by birth, born in Boone county on September 9, 1861, the son of Speer Bruce and Mary Ann (Smith) Davis, the former of whom was born in Scott county, Minnesota, the latter being a native of Hendricks county, having been born near Brownsburg. Speer B. Davis was a young physician who came to Hendricks county in 1855 and took up the practice of his profession in Brownsburg and Boone county. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted and for three years served as surgeon on the hospital corps. In 1858 he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Smith, of Boone county, whose death occurred while he was at the front. They had two little sons and one of them also died while the father was absent. At the close of the war, Doctor Davis returned to his home in Boone county and took the remaining child, the subject of this sketch, to his former home in Minnesota, there to be cared for by his people. When the subject was seven years of age, he was again thrown on the mercies of the world owing to the complete disappearance of his father, who was not heard from for a great many years. In the meantime, the Smiths, parents of the subject's mother, sent to Minnesota and had the child returned to Boone county and to them, and there he remained until his marriage.

On March 8, 1887, Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Anna Lumpkin, a daughter of George W. and Sarah (Harrison) Lumpkin, born in Boone county, Indiana, on April 30, 1866. George W. Lumpkin was a native of Tennessee, born on December 8, 1825, while Sarah (Harrison) Lumpkin, daughter of Eli and Rachel Harrison, was a Hoosier by birth, born in Kokomo on September 2, 1828. Eli Harrison was first sheriff of Howard county, Indiana. George W. Lumpkin came from a family who had early settled in Tennessee and was a son of Richard and Rebecca Lumpkin, the former of whom was a soldier of the War of 1812. After his marriage, Mr. Davis continued to reside in Boone county on a rented farm for about a year, when he came over into Hendricks county and lived on rented land for four years. At that time he purchased his present farm of thirty-four acres, which was absolutely without improvement and in an almost primeval condition. It cost him thirty dollars per acre and recently he refused an offer of two hundred and twenty-five dollars per acre, preferring to remain on the land he has so finely improved and to enjoy the fruits of his labors. For ten years Mr. Davis did gardening and attended the city market in Indianapolis during all that time. His ceaseless effort and untiring energy have won him material success and while winning a competence he ever conducted his business in such manner as to receive the confidence and respect of those who knew him, as well as from his business acquaintances. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have one child, a daughter Emma, who remains at home. She attended Brownsburg high school and early displayed marked musical ability. After the conclusion of her high school work, she took up the study of music in Indianapolis, attending the Metropolitan School of Music for three years, and has made herself an artist of no mean ability. She now teaches instrumental music in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis and Miss Emma are all members of the Christian church and take an active part in the affairs of same. Mr. Davis' fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias and in the work of that order he takes a pleasurable interest. Mrs. Davis is engaged in the poultry business, making a specialty of White Wyandottes and is doing well with them, shipping more poultry and eggs than any one else in her community. The family is placed among the leading ones of the community and stand high in public estimation. Mr. Davis' career, although strenuous and to a marked degree progressive and successful, has always been characterized by honest dealing. He is well known throughout the county and highly respected by all because of his clean life and upright and honorable dealings with his fellow men.

JAMES M. OGDEN.

Indiana has always been distinguished for the high rank of her bench and bar. Perhaps none of the newer states can justly boast of abler jurists or attorneys. Many of them have been men of national fame, and among those whose lives have been passed on a quieter plane there is scarcely a town or city in the state but that can boast of one or more lawyers capable of crossing swords in forensic combat with many of the distinguished legal lights of the country. While the growth and development of the state in the last half century has been most marvelous, viewed from any standpoint, yet of no one class of her citizenship has she greater reason for just pride than her judges and attorneys. In James M. Odgen are found united many of the rare qualities which go to make the successful lawyer and jurist. He possesses perhaps few of those brilliant, dazzling, meteoric qualities which have sometimes flashed along the legal horizon, riveting the gaze and blinding the vision for the moment, then disappearing, leaving little or no trace behind; but rather has those solid and more substantial qualities which shine with a constant luster, shedding light in the dark places with steadiness and continuity.

James M. Ogden, a successful lawyer, lecturer and author of Indianapolis, was born in Danville, Indiana, April 5, 1870. His parents were Jesse S. and Mary A. (Carter) Ogden. His father, Jesse S., was a remarkable man and the reader is directed to his sketch elsewhere in this volume for the story of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Odgen were the parents of three children, Rev. Horace G., D. D., of Jamestown, New York, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church of that place; Mrs. Adella L. Duvall, a prominent soprano singer of Delaware, Ohio, and James M., of Indianapolis.

James M. Ogden received his elementary and high school training in the public schools of Danville. He was only seven years old when his father died, and grew up without a father's care, but no mother ever looked after the welfare of her children more solicitously than Mrs. Ogden. After his graduation from the high school at Danville he taught school in the districts in Hendricks county for one year, and then entered DePauw University at Greencastle, making his own way through college, and graduated in 1804 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. During the next two years he was principal of the high school at Kendallville, Indiana, and saved his money in order to enter the law school at Harvard. From 1806 to 1800 he was in attendance at the Harvard Law School and graduated in June, 1800, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He then returned to Indiana and began the practice of law in the office of Judge Byron K. Elliott, and continged with him for eighteen months, since which time he has practiced alone with offices in the State Life building, Indianapolis. He is a frequent lecturer on legal topics and is one of the regular lecturers before the Indiana Law School in Indianapolis. He has a high reputation as a legal writer and in his volume on "Negotiable Instruments," published in 1909, he has written a book which has received the high commendation of jurists throughout the country. His first work in the line of legal writing was in connection with Judge Byron K. Elliott, whom he assisted in his four-volume edition on "Evidence". He has also written many special articles for encyclopedias of law. He has conferred a boon upon Indiana lawyers by publishing a volume entitled "Indiana Lawyers' Manual of Practice," a volume which should find a place on the shelves of every lawyer in the state. His law practice is not confined to Indianapolis and Marion county, but he has many clients also in adjoining counties. He is rapidly forging to the front as one of the men who really understand the law and are able to give a sympathetic reading of the same. The poetical truth concerning the tempering of justice with mercy finds a willing follower in him, a fact which has gained for him clients of a high class.

Mr. Ogden has always taken a prominent part in Republican politics, and was the nominee of his party for the House of Representatives from Marion cotunty in 1906. Although he was defeated, he led the legislative ticket, which is an indication of the popularity in which he is held in his county. He has frequently been urged to make the race for Congress and has been offered the nomination for various judgeships in Indianapolis, but has always declined, feeling that he could do more good in his private practice. For many years he has been the attorney of the foreigners in Indianapolis and has been highly complimented for his work in looking after their interests. He is a member of the Indianapolis Bar Association, and has been officially connected, either as an officer or on its various committees, for the past ten years. He is a member of the Indiana Bar Association, and takes an active interest in the annual meetings of the association.

Fraternally, Mr. Ogden is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Modern Woodmen of America. While in college he was a member of the Sigma Chi Greek-letter fraternity, and still interests himself in this organization of his college days. He is now one of the board of trustees of DePauw University. He is a member of the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Indianapolis, and has served in that capacity continuously for the past twelve years. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, and a member of the official board of the Meridian Street Methodist Episcopal church, of Indianapolis.

James M. Ogden was married November 11, 1903, to Bess Alice Dean, daughter of Irving M. and Cora (Laycock) Dean, of Indianapolis, and to this happy union there have been born three children, Elizabeth Ann, deceased; Mary Ann and James M., Jr. Mr. Ogden is a man who is devoted to his domestic life and the Ogden home is the center of many hospitable gatherings of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Ogden has led a very busy and useful life and now he is in the prime of his usefulness to society and the future only can reveal what good he may yet accomplish.

THOMAS J. NASH.

It is not an easy task to describe adequately a man who has led an eminently active and busy life, and who has attained a position of relative distinction in the community with which his interests are allied. But biography finds its most perfect justification, nevertheless, in the tracing and recording of such a life history. It is, then, with a full appreciation of all that is demanded and of the painstaking scrutiny that must be accorded each statement, and yet with a feeling of satisfaction, that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the details of such a record as has been that of the honored subject of this sketch, whose eminently honored and successful career now comes under review.

Thomas J. Nash, whose entire life has been passed within the borders of Hendricks county, first saw the light of day on December 22, 1851. He is the son of Isaac C, and Cilicia (Wilson) Nash, the former of whom was a native of Ohio and the latter a native of Virginia, both coming to Indiana from their native states when children. Isaac Nash was a son of Thomas Nash, who settled just south of Brownsburg. When he was about twenty-one years old, Isaac Nash was united in marriage with Cilicia Wilson, and they took up their abode on a farm of forty acres lying about one mile east of Brownsburg and for this whole farm he gave but one hundred and fifty dollars. They lived there the remainder of their lives and there reared their family of nine children, of whom Thomas J., the immediate subject of this sketch, was one.

Thomas J. Nash remained under the paternal roof until in 1882, when he was united in marriage with Emma A. Patterson, daughter of Daniel and Sarah (McDaniel) Patterson, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. coming soon after their marriage to Hendricks county, this state. Emma A. was one of their family of four children and remained with her parents until the time of her marriage. Directly after their marriage, the subject and his wife took up their residence on a farm about a mile and a half west of Brownsburg, where they remained two years, when they purchased a farm containing one hundred and eight acres, located about three-quarters of a mile north of their present location. There they remained for fourteen years, when they purchased their present home place of one hundred and sixty-one acres, which is about one mile north of Brownsburg. Mr. Nash has engaged in agricultural work all his life and his untiring energy, combined with business ability of a high order and the employment of up-to-date methods in the conduct of that business, has proved him to be a man capable of handling affairs even more complicated than those to which he has given his attention. Mr. and Mrs. Nash are the parents of four children, one of whom, a son, Harvey, died in infancy. Lilly, a daughter, became the wife of John T. Hofford, a son of Frank and Mary A. Hofford of near Brownsburg, and they make their home just south of Brownsburg. They have two children, Floyd and Loran. Leroy, a son, married Ellen F. White, daughter of Ernest and Nettie (Anderson) White, of near Brownsburg. Leroy resides just across the public highway from his parents and they have one child, Leona. The only child remaining with Mr. and Mrs. Nash is their daughter Mabel.

Mr. and Mrs. Nash are earnest members of the Christian church, to the support of which they give liberally, and in their younger years gave much active service toward furthering the work of that society. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nash have been unsparing in their efforts to make their home attractive and helpful to others and a cordial welcome has ever awaited both friend and chance caller alike. Mr. Nash has been a consistent man in all that he has ever undertaken and his career in all the relations of life has been absolutely without pretense. His actions are the result of careful and conscientious thought and when once convinced that he is right, no suggestion of policy or personal profit can swerve him from the course that he has decided upon. He is essentially a man of affairs, sound of judgment and far-seeing in what he undertakes and he has won and retains the esteem and confidence of all classes.

J. HAROLD GRIMES, M. D.

Although but a short time a resident of Danville, the subject of this sketch has, by his professional ability and high personal character, already stamped his impress upon those with whom he has come in contact and is rightly numbered among the most progressive and enterprising physicians of this city. In the realm of medicine and surgery he has had the best training which the colleges of this country can give and his record as a student is sufficient to warrant him success in his chosen profession. He is a man of fine intellectual and professional attainment, of most gracious personality and of strong character, and he has started in his career with the one end in view, namely, to alleviate human suffering. He is devoted to his chosen vocation and has lent honor and dignity to the medical profession, having due regard for the higher standard of professional ethics and exhibiting marked skill in the treatment of diseases.

J. Harold Grimes, the youngest practicing physician in this county, was born in Millville, Pennsylvania, January 26, 1887, the son of Robert Bryson and Mary (Johnson) Grimes, who were both natives also of Pennsylvania, and are now living in Catawissa, that state. Robert B. Grimes is a foremost merchant in that town.

Doctor Grimes graduated from the Millville high school in his native state and then finished the course at the Bloomsburg State Normal School. He then began the study of medicine at Chicago University in the fall of 1908, graduating from this institution in 1912. From the time of his graduation until he opened his office at Danville, he was in St. Mary's Hospital at Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he made an enviable record as an interne. He located in Danville, Indiana, on July 15, 1913, and opened up an office for the general practice of medicine, including surgical work of all kinds. He is a member of the Michigan State and Kent County (Michigan) Medical Societies, also the Hendricks County Medical Society, the Indiana Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while socially, he is a member of the Greek-letter fraternity, Phi Delta Theta.

On June 3, 1914, Doctor Grimes was married to Ruth Rooker Parr, the daughter of John and Pearl (Rooker) Parr. John Parr is a retired farmer and land owner of St. Charles, Missouri.

Doctor Grimes has a brilliant future before him and with the technical training which he has had, he promises to be one of the leading physicians of this section of the state within the next few years.

WILLIAM W. GIBBS.

The true measure of individual success is determined by what one has accomplished. An enumeration of those men who have succeeded in their special vocations in Hendricks county and at the same time are impressing their personalities on the community, men who are conferring honor on the locality in which they reside, would be incomplete were there failure to make mention particularly of the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, for he is an important factor in the business life of his community. The splendid success which has come to him has been the direct result of the salient points in his character, for, with a mind capable of laving judicious plans and a will strong enough to carry them into execution, his energy, foresight and perseverance have carried him forward to a position in the front rank of the successful men of his community. He has carried forward to a successful completion whatever he has undertaken and his business methods have ever been in strict conformity with the standard ethics of commercial life. He has taken an intelligent interest in the civic life of the community and has earned the high regard in which he is held by all who know him.

William W. Gibbs is a native of the state of New York, being born near the city of New York on December 28, 1854, a son of William and Elizabeth (Burden) Gibbs, both of whom were natives of Devonshire, England, the former being the son of John and Betsy Gibbs. William and Elizabeth Gibbs emigrated to the United States in 1844, settling in New York, where they resided for two or three years, afterward coming westward to Indiana and locating in Marion county about five miles south of the city of Indianapolis, and there they remained for about fifteen years. They then came to Hendricks county where they bought a tract containing eighty acres in Brown township, and on that land they passed the remainder of their lives.

William W. Gibbs was one of a family of ten children and when he was but eleven years old his father was drafted for service in the War of the Rebellion, which, owing to his large family and their limited circumstances, worked considerable of a hardship on him. He felt it was out of the question for him to go to the front, leaving his wife and helpless little ones, and through the kindness of a brother-in-law and a Mr. Everitt he was provided with the necessary amount to purchase his exemption. This cost him thirteen hundred dollars, and this amount he repaid as rapidly as he was able. William W. Gibbs remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage, assisting his father in the work of the home farm and also working out through the community by the day or month. After marriage he lived for one year on the farm where he now lives and then rented a tract of land in Boone county, where the family resided for twelve years. They then came back to the farm in Hendricks county and have remained thereon for over nineteen years. Mr. Gibbs is considered one of the most successful farmers in the county, displaying business ability of a high order in the conduct of his affairs. This, coupled with untiring energy and a boundless ambition, have placed him high in public estimation.

On May 30, 1882, Mr. Gibbs was united in marriage with Mary A Sandusky, daughter of James and Susan (Morgan) Sandusky, the former being a native of Kentucky. His father, Jacob Sandusky, was a man of considerable means and large sympathies. He owned a large plantation and was also a large slaveholder. He treated his people with kindness and consideration, being regarded as an ideal master, and at the beginning of the agitation of the slavery question he freed his colored people. Susan Morgan, mother of the wife of the subject, lived in Indianapolis at the time of her marriage and, when her daughter Mary was but four years old, she departed this life, leaving also a little son. The father took his children to Kentucky, the old home, to place them in the care of relatives. There they remained until the time of his second marriage, some two years later, when he brought his little family to the farm which his father had given him in Brown township, this county. It was an unusually large farm for this section of the country, consisting of some eight hundred and eighty acres, and on this estate Mary A. Sandusky lived until the time of her marriage to the subject. To their union has been born one child, Forest Chester, who remains at home. This son completed the grade schools when remarkably young and took up his work in high school, intending to secure an excellent education. However, ill health compelled him to close his books and he took up work on the farm, being his father's assistant and devoting his energies to the study of the best manner of handling crops, stock, etc., along approved scientific lines.

Mrs. Gibbs is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and the family is regarded as among the leading ones of the county. Mr. Gibbs has ever enjoyed the esteem and respect of those who know him for his friendly manner, his business ability, his interest in public affairs and upright living and he is regarded by all as one of the substantial and worthy citizens of the community in which he resides. In addition to his regular duties, Mr. Gibbs finds time for some outside connections and is connected with the Brownsburg State Bank, being a stockholder in same. He is, therefore, eminently entitled to specific mention in a work of the scope intended in the present one.

HARRISON S. BARLOW.

To a great extent the prosperity of the agricultural sections of our country is due to the honest industry, the sturdy persistence, the unswerving perseverance and the wise economy which so prominently characterize the farming element of the Hoosier state. Among this class may be mentioned the subject of this life record, who, by reason of years of indefatigable labor and honest effort, has not only acquired a well merited material prosperity, but has also richly earned the highest esteem of all with whom he is associated.

Harrison Smith Barlow is a native of this county, having been born in Lincoln township, about three miles southwest of Brownsburg, on October 15, 1860, the son of Harvey Rice and Sarah Jane (Smith) Barlow. Sarah Smith was a native of the state of Kentucky and came to Indiana while young and it is thought possible that Harvey Rice Barlow also came from the same place. Sarah Smith's father, whose wife was named Hannah, entered a tract of land from the government, this land lying near Danville, this county. There they lived for a number of years, the mother dying while Sarah was still a small child. After his marriage, Harvey Rice Barlow purchased land in Washington township and there he built a saw and grist mill, which was run by water power. He later traded this business and farm for a tract of land about three miles south of Brownsburg and there passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1872. The mother died in 1896. It was on this farm that the subject of this sketch first saw the light of day, being one of a family of seven children. He remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage, when he purchased the farm where he was born. About 1902 or 1904, Mr. Barlow sold the old homestead and purchased a farm some two miles southwest of Brownsburg, where he lived for some six or eight years, when he purchased his present farm of fifty-two acres something over a mile northwest of Brownsburg. Here he carried on general farming and its kindred interests. At one time, Mr. Barlow gave particular attention to the raising of fancy vegetables, always having an elaborate display at both the state and county fairs.

On March 15, 1882, Mr. Barlow was united in marriage with Emma B. Fogleman, a native of North Carolina and the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Ferguson) Fogleman, her birth occurring about 1865. Elizabeth Ferguson, her mother, was a daughter of Archibald and Sarah Ferguson. William Fogleman left his original home in North Carolina and removed to Missouri when Mrs. Barlow was a child of three years. They lived there some three years and then came eastward again, stopping in Indiana, where they located in Hendricks county, in the town of Plainfield. Mr. Fogleman was a carpenter by trade, and both he and his wife died when Emma B. was fifteen years old, she being one of a family of three children. After the death of her parents, she was taken into the home of William Hadley, a brother of Judge Hadley, and remained there until the time of her marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Barlow have had three children, one of whom, Charley Ambrose, died when thirteen years of age. Gertie, a daughter, is the wife of Wilbur Lowder and they have two children, Herbert and Annis. Their home is about one mile north of that of the subject. The other child, Clara William, married Willis Pruitt and they live on a farm in Marion county, about seven miles northwest of the city of Indianapolis.

Politically, Mr. Barlow has always been identified with the Republican party, taking an active interest in its campaigns. He served as road supervisor for twelve years, and during that time did much to improve the highways of the county. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian church, both he and his wife being members of same and taking an active interest in the society, contributing of both time and means to further the cause. His fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, in the work of which societies he takes a keen interest, and Mrs. Barlow is a member of the women's degrees of these orders, being both a Daughter of Rebekah and a Pythian Sister. She also belongs to the Woman's Relief Corps.

There is much that is commendable in Mr. Barlow's life record, for he has been found true to duty in every relation, whether of a public or private character, and while energy and untiring industry have been salient features of his business career, he is equally well known for his uprightness and the honorable methods he has always followed and for his loyalty to any trust imposed in him. Because of his genial and unassuming disposition and his genuine worth, he enjoys a well deserved popularity throughout his county.

ELMER L. FUSON.

The gentleman, to a brief review of whose life and characteristics the reader's attention is herewith directed, is among the favorably known and representative citizens of Amo, Hendricks county, Indiana. By his indomitable enterprise and progressive methods he has contributed, in a material way, to the advancement of his locality and during the course of an honorable career is fairly successful in his business enterprise, being a man of energy, sound judgment and honesty of purpose, and is thus well deserving of mention in this volume.

Elmer L. Fuson, the son of R. A. and Elvira (Allison) Fuson, was born in Crawford county, Illinois, January 20, 1872. R. A. Fuson was educated in Crawford county, Illinois, and after leaving school worked, for a time, on the farm. He then began preaching in the Missionary Baptist church, and continued in the service of the ministry for the remainder of his life. He married Elvira Allison, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Allison, and to this union four children were born, Thomas C., Elmer L., Martha A., who married Thomas Smork, and Mary, who died at the age of seven.

Elmer L. Fuson was fortunate enough to be educated in several different states, his father's occupation as a minister taking him to many different localities. He attended school in Kansas, Illinois and Indiana, and several schools in each state. Upon reaching mature years he took up the barber trade, at Brownsburg, Indiana, and after he had mastered the trade, he located in Amo, this countys, where he worked for about six years. He then took up the insurance business, life, fire and accident, and has continued in that line of endeavor since. He has made a special study of the insurance business and is now recognized as one of the prominent insurance men in the central part of the state. He is claim agent for the Farmers National Life Insurance Company, of Chicago, Illinois, an organization incorporated under the laws of Indiana. He has made a wonderful success as an insurance man and has built up a very lucrative business.

Mr. Fuson was married February 14, 1894, to Flora Garrison, the daughter of Joel and Amanda (Bryant) Garrison, and to this union have been born four children, Madeline and Gwendolene, who died in infancy; Wendall and Wenfred, twins, born March 5, 1901.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Fuson was Judson A. Fuson, a native of Ohio, who came as a young man to Illinois, locating in Crawford county, where most of his children were born. He then went to Missouri, where he lived until his death, at the age of eighty-six years. He was a minister, in the Missionary Baptist church, during all his life. He was married to Elizabeth Taylor and to this union nine children were born, John L., Stephen A., William, George B., Roland A. (father of the immediate subject of this sketch), Alvin, Mary, Jane and Alice. William Fuson, the great-grandfather of Elmer L. Fuson, was a native of Virginia and was a minister in the Missionary Baptist church for sixty-five years.

Mr. Fuson has been a prominent Republican and has taken an active interest in politics, both in local and state conventions. He was appointed deputy state oil inspector by Governor Frank J. Hanly and served in this capacity for three years. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, at Coatesville, Indiana, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being treasurer of the latter lodge. Mr. Fuson has made a pronounced success of his new line of work and deserves great credit for branching out in a new line of business. He is rapidly building up a list of clients in Amo and vicinity, and in the course of a few years he promises to be one of the most prominent and influential insurance men of the state. With his genial personality and cheery way of talking there is no reason why he should not continue to be as successful in the future as in the past. By his honest dealings he has won the confidence of his associates and it is confidence that spells success. His life shows what a young man can do who starts out with nothing, and is determined to succeed in spite of all obstacles and hindrances.

LEON EATON.

One of the best known and most enterprising of the younger agriculturists of Hendricks county is Leon Eaton, now in the very prime of life and usefulness, and his influence as an honorable, upright citizen is productive of much good upon all with whom he comes in contact. His past success gives assurance of something yet to come, and he is evidently destined to continue a potent factor for substantial good for many years to come. The farm he is tending, now belonging to his mother, is one of the fine farms in Brown township, which he conducts in a manner that stamps him as fully abreast of the times.

Leon Eaton is a native of Brown township, having been born here on October 1, 1881, the son of Henry I. and Allie (Herring) Eaton, both of whom were also natives of Brown township, Hendricks county, the former being the son of Greenup and Cynthia (Watson) Eaton and the latter the daughter of Jackson and Isabelle (Worrel) Herring, who were both natives of Harrison county, Kentucky. When quite small, both were brought to Indiana by their respective parents, both families locating near Clayton in Hendricks county, where the young people in question grew to manhood and womanhood and where their marriage was later solemnized. There were four children in their family, Allie, mother of the subject of this sketch, remaining under the parental roof until the time of her marriage.

Henry I. Eaton, father of the subject, remained on his father's home. some two miles north of Brownsburg, until the time of his marriage in 1870. when he took up his residence on a farm about five miles northwest of Brownsburg, living there about a year and a half. After that, they made several changes in their place of residence, at one time residing in Indianapolis, again in Danville, where he owned a livery stable, which he later sold and returned to the farm. In November, 1898, he was elected sheriff of Hendricks county on the Republican ticket, having always taken an active interest in that party's affairs. He served as sheriff for two years, after which he received the appointment as superintendent of the Hendricks county farm. There he lived for eighteen months, resigning before the expiration of his term. He then became deputy sheriff under Sheriff Figg, serving in this capacity until September, 1904, when he removed to the home now occupied by his family and where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring January 20, 1906. Henry I. Eaton was a man of great force of character and was rightly regarded as one of the leading citizens of his community. He was a member of the Knights of Pythias and, although not affiliated with any religious body, he was a loyal supporter of the Baptist denomination, doing all within his power to further the interests of that organization.

Leon Eaton has lived under the paternal roof all his life, attending the schools of Hendricks county when a boy. In March, 1906, he was united in marriage with Edna M. Herring, daughter of Thomas and Tira (Watson) Herring, natives of Hendricks county, residing near Brownsburg. He brought his bride to his mother's home and there they have since resided. To their union have been born four children. Wallace Edward, Keller Allen Mary Constance and Lawrence Leon. Mr. Eaton is an active member of the Republican party, serving as township committeeman and also serving as a deputy sheriff both under his father and Sheriff Figg. although never having been sworn into that office. His fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias, Mrs. Eaton being a Pythian Sister. Mrs. Eaton is a charming woman with a host of friends. She is a graduate of Brownsburg high school and active in social affairs of the community. Mr. Eaton is wide awake to the best interests of the community and gives a wholehearted support to all movements for the good of his fellows. He has a wide acquaintance and is well liked by all who know him.

PERRY HUNT.

One of the conspicuous names on the list of Hendricks county agriculturists is Perry Hunt, owner of two hundred acres of excellent land in Marion, Center township, a gentleman of high standing, to whom has not been denied a full measure of success. Long recognized as a factor of importance in connection with the farming and stock-raising industries here, he has been prominently identified with the material growth and prosperity of this part of the state, his life having been closely interwoven with the history of the county where he has been content to live and follow his chosen vocation throughout his life.

Perry Hunt was born on August 8, 1858, on the old homestead farm in Marion township, this county, the son of Ithamer and Fanny Jane (Bush) Hunt. Ithamer Hunt came of an old American family of English ancestry. Both his grandfathers were named Hunt and were distantly related. Eliezer Hunt was a farmer in Guilford county, North Carolina, where he passed away at the age of eighty years. His son Asher was born in that county, was rearred a Quaker and married Jane Hunt, daughter of Abner and Mary (Starley) Hunt, who was a very distant connection. Asher Hunt came westward into Indiana, where he settled in Sullivan county and entered about two hundred acres of government land, which he put into cultivation and where he lived for about sixteen years. At the end of that period he came to Hendricks county and purchased a farm in the eastern part of Marion township, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in his eighty-fourth year. He was twice married. His first wife died in Sullivan county and he again married, his second wife being Abigail Foster. Both he and his wives were Quakers, honorable and industrious and highly respected by all.

Ithamer Hunt, son of Asher Hunt and father of the immediate subject of this sketch, was a Hoosier by birth, born while his father was living in Sullivan county, and was fourteen years of age when his father came to Hendricks county. He passed his youth and early manhood under his father's roof and when twenty-five years of age was united in marriage with Fanny Jane Bush, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Norton) Bush, the former of whom was one of the pioneers of this county, having come here from Kentucky at an early date. He was an honorable and upright citizen who did much for the community at that early date. He died at the age of fifty-three years. Ithamer Hunt was a thoroughly good man, absolutely honest both with himself and others. He lived a strictly religious life, adhering firmly to the principles of his life. He was a very prosperous man and won his way through persistent energy and excellent management. He was a life-long farmer and at his death owned something over six hundred acres. His death occurred on May 14, 1903, at his home on the New Winchester road, at the age of eighty-one years. He had a birthright in the Friends church for twenty-one years, but afterwards became a member of the Baptist church. He was a consistent and faithful member and a liberal contributor to all benevolent and religious objects. He never sued nor was sued, avoiding all controversies and litigations, and never paid a cent of interest, so conducting his business, which was considerable, that interest was not incurred. He was a devoted husband and, while a strict disciplinarian, was a kind and loving father and a genial and helpful neighbor. He was a thoroughly manly man and a devout Christian, absolutely without ostentation, cant or hypocrisy. He was a man of peace, quiet and unobtrusive. never used profane language nor intoxicating liquors in any form. In politics he was a stanch Republican although taking no active part in the affairs of the party.

Perry Hunt grew from childhood into manhood on the homestead, remaining under his father's roof until the time of his marriage, in the meantime receiving from his father instruction in the secrets of successful agriculture and having firmly implanted on heart and mind the right principles of life. After marriage he came to his present farm, or, more properly speaking, eighty acres of it. He has increased the size of his farm to two hundred acres, winning his increase by persistent effort, untiring energy and good management. His farm is one of the best in the community, with excellent residence and other buildings, and all attest to the up-to-date methods of the owner. He is progressive in his work, putting brains as well as brawn into whatever he undertakes. In addition to his general work, he gives particular attention to two excellent strains of cattle, Polled Durhams and Shorthorns. He raises for the market and also breeding purposes and is now giving especial attention to a herd which he intends to exhibit. He is an excellent judge of stock and takes great interest and pride in this phase of his business.

In politics Mr. Hunt is an old-line Republican and takes an interest in local politics, while never desiring an office. Both he and his wife are members of the Friends church at Hadley and contribute generously of their time and means to fostering the principles of that society.

On August 21, 1882, Mr. Hunt was united in marriage with Loretta E. Hadley, daughter of Mathias and Matilda Hadley, the former of whom was a native of Hendricks county and died at his home in Clay township in 1895. The wife preceded him one year into the great beyond. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hadley were members of the Friends society and lived quiet, useful lives. While earnestly desiring every good for the varied life of his community, Mr. Hadley chose to do his share quietly. He did not care for public office, nor for any lodge. They were the parents of eleven children, two of whom died in infancy. Those beside Loretta, wife of the subject, are Leora (Mrs. Harvey); Alzora, who died in California, where she had made her home; Orlando, who died at his home near Indianapolis; Ozella (Mrs. Furnace); Orien, who lives on the homestead farm in Clay township, this county; Ozro, deceased, who lived in Plainfield; Orvis, who resides at Amo, and Elnora (Mrs. Shirley), who also lives in Clay township, just west of the old homestead.

To Mr. and Mrs. Perry Hunt have been born five children, namely:

Fauna, who married Clay A. Vannice, a native of this county, born near New Maysville. He is a farmer and they reside in Center towship, south of Danville. They have no children. Ona R. is a school teacher, teaching one year in Marion. The two years previous she taught in the schools of Center township. Her early education was received in the township schools near her home; later she attended the high school at Danville, from which she was graduated, and later she studied for a year at Earlham College, Richmond, this state. Later on, she took a twelve-weeks teachers' course at the Danville Normal College. Ray, the youngest of the family, remains at home. However, he has taken the short course at Purdue University, Lafayette. Two children died in infancy.

Perry Hunt is a worthy son of his father and stands high in public estimation. He is a kind and loving husband and father and an excellent neighbor in every respect. He has proven himself an honorable member of the body politic, proving himself thoroughly worthy of confidence and esteem in every phase of life. He has never fallen below the dignity of true manhood nor in any way resorted to methods that have invited criticism or censure. As a citizen he is easily ranked with the most influential of his compeers and is ever looking toward the betterment of his community. His course has ever been such as to win from those who know him nothing but praise for his broad-mindedness and excellent qualities of heart and mind.

ANDREW S. GARNER.

Agriculture has been the primal source of man's dominion on earth ever since the existence of labor and has been the pivotal industry that has controlled, for the most part, all of the fields of action to which his intelligence and energy have been devoted. Among the sturdy element of Hendricks county whose labors have profited alike themselves and the community in which they live is the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch and, in view of the consistent life record lived by the subject, it is particularly fitting that the following short record of his career be incorporated in a book of this nature.

Andrew S. Garner, enterprising citizen and successful farmer of Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born on the family homestead, the home which he now occupies, on March 9, 1852, being the son of Harrison and Frances (Lowder) Garner. Harrison was a son of Solomon and Deborah Garner, who came originally from Kentucky. Francis Lowder, mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, was a daughter of Solomon and Jane (Leonard) Lowder, and was born in the state of North Carolina, being brought to Indiana by her parents while still a small child. Harrison Garner was eight years old when his parents came to Indiana and his father entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in Brown township, Hendricks county, part of which tract the subject now resides on. This land was then in virgin forest and Solomon Garner began the laborious task of converting his wilderness into well tilled fields and a comfortable home. Before his death Solomon Garner deeded the forty acres south of the road to his son, Harrison, who lived thereon until his death. Harrison Garner never had advantages in the way of schooling, and grew to manhood wholly untutored in the way of books. However, he was of an ambitious and inquiring turn of mind and after his marriage he attended a night school, where he learned to write, and became still more determined to educate himself. He became, through his own efforts, a man who was considered well read, for his time and community, and was regarded as one of the leading men of his day. He was an earnest advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and took an active part in the administration of its affairs in his locality. He was one of the first road officers in Brown township, and, through his efforts, much was accomplished in this line. He served as road supervisor for a number of years. He was married to Frances Lowder, in 1851, and to their union was born a family of nine children, the subject of this sketch being the oldest child of the family.

Andrew S. Garner attended the district schools of Hendricks county when a youth, and remained at the family home until the time of his marriage, in the meantime receiving, under intelligent direction of his father, the secrets of successful agriculture. His marriage to Marguerite Adams, daughter of John Adams, took place on February 14, 1877, and they took up their abode on a farm about one mile northwest of his father's home, residing there until the time of the wife's death in 1880. After the death of his wife he came back to his paternal home where he remained for ten years. In 1890 he chose as his second wife, Emily J. Leonard, daughter of Lindsey and Amanda (Spencer) Leonard, both of whom are natives of North Carolina. They came to Indiana about 1861, locating in Hendricks county, where Emily J. was born, near Amo, on June 2, 1872. After his second marriage Mr. Garner again moved to his farm and there remained until the death of his parents, when he came back to the old homestead and has since resided there. Mr. Garner has two children by his second wife, namely: Mary F., who was graduated from the Brownsburg high school and is now studying music at the Indianapolis Conservatory of Music, Indianapolis. The second child is Walter Lee, now a student at the Brownsburg high school.

Politically, Mr. Garner is a staunch Democrat, as was his father before him, and he also takes an active interest in the party's work. Some years ago he was road supervisor and the highways, under his care, were in as excellent a state as it is possible to keep them. While not a member of any church. Mr. Garner is interested in the affairs of the Baptist church, of which his wife is a member, and to the support of which he contributes. Mr. Garner's career has been one of honor and trust. He has been a consistent man in all that he has undertaken and his actions in all the relations of life have been absolutely without pretense. He has ever been anxious to do all in his power to further the moral or material interests of his community and his family stand high in the regard of all who know them. He is, therefore, eminently entitled to representation in a work of the scope of the one in hand.

WILLIAM PENNINGTON.

An enumeration of the representative citizens of Hendricks county would be incomplete without specific mention of the well known and popular gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. A member of one of the old and highly esteemed families of this locality and for many years a public-spirited man of affairs, he has stamped the impress of his individuality upon the community and added luster to the honorable name which he bears, having always been actuated by a spirit of fairness in his dealings with the world in general, and leaving no stone unturned whereby he might benefit his own condition as well as that of his friends and the favored section of the great commonwealth in which he has been content to spend his life. Straightforward and unassuming, genial and obliging, Mr. Pennington enjoys the good will and respect of a wide circle of friends throughout this part of the state.

William Pennington, who enjoys an enviable reputation in his part of the county because of his eminent success as a farmer, is a native of the Hoosier state, having been born in Boone county on August 12, 1841, the son of Isaac and Delpha (Guilliams) Pennington, the former of whom was a native of Kentucky, the latter being from Virginia. When nine years old she was brought by her parents to Putnam county, and from there they went to Hendricks county, locating in the northern portion of Brown township. She was a daughter of Richard and Rosani (Scott) Guilliams, both natives of Germany, who came to this country while yet children. Richard Guilliams was a son of William and Delpha (Hunter) Guilliams, and was a patriot in the War of 1812. Rosani Scott Guilliams was a daughter of William and Christena (Sellers) Scott, William Scott also being a hero of the War of 1812. Isaac Pennington, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, came with his parents to Jamestown, Indiana, when he was about ten years old. He remained under the parental roof until his marriage, on September 18, 1836, when he took up his residence on a farm in Boone county, just west of Fayette. He was a stanch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party and was considered one of the leading men, of his community in his day. He was the father of a family of seven children, of whom the subject of this sketch was one.

William Pennington passed his boyhood in Boone county, receiving his education in the district schools of that county, and later assisting his father in the work about the home place. In 1862, near the beginning of the Civil War, he enlisted for service in Company G, Seventy-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and saw much active service. He was in the battles of Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Perryville and other engagements. During the battle of Stone's River he was taken prisoner and was confined in Libby prison for sixty days. He was sent to Annapolis, Maryland, from there, and thence home. Four months after his capture he was back with his regiment and served without special incident until the close of the war, being mustered out of service at Nashville, Tennessee, in June, 1865. He returned to his father's home, where he remained until in 1868, when he was united in marriage to Lucinda Doval, born October 5, 1852, a daughter of Edward and Sarah Ann (Howard) Doyal. They were natives of Lewis county, Kentucky, who had come to Indiana in 1830, and settled in Hendricks county in the northeast part of Brown township. Edward Doyal was a son of John and Christena Ann (Davis) Doyal. John Doyal was a native of the state of Pennsylvania, where his father had settled when he emigrated from Ireland. Christena Ann Davis was a native of Maryland and was of French ancestry. Sarah Ann Howard, mother of Mrs. Pennington, was born in Kentucky, but both her parents, Samuel and Ellen (Fort) Howard, were from Baltimore, Maryland. After his marriage the subject of this sketch lived on a rented farm in Boone county for two years and at the end of that time he removed to the farm where he now resides, which farm was left to him by his wite's father, Edward Doval. There they have passed a great many years, rearing and educating their family of eight children, having lost but one Charles F., the eldest son, took as his wife Lela Shirley, daughter of Levi and Jane (Roberts) Shirley, and they make their home in the northeastern part of Brown township. They are the parents of two children, Ova and Hazel, both of whom are attending school in Indianapolis. Ova graduated from Manual Training high school in 1914. Charles F. Pennington is one of the leading men of his community and is at present serving as trustee of Brown township, the duties of which position he is discharging in a manner highly satisfactory to every one. He is engaged in teaching in the public schools, having taught twenty-five consecutive terms. Dora F., a daughter of Mr. Pennington, is a teacher of English in the city schools of Indianapolis. having received her higher education at the State Normal School, at Terre Haute, and also being a graduate of Indiana University at Bloomington. Ernest L. married Ava Brouhard, daughter of Marion Brouhard, of near Zionsville, Indiana, and lives at Wichita, Kansas, where he is a carpenter and contractor. He is the father of one daughter, Frances. Bertha also is a teacher in the public schools of the state, being stationed at present at West Baden, Indiana, where she is instructor in domestic science. She is a graduate of Shortridge high school at Indianapolis, spent three years in study at Butler College, Indianapolis, and took her special training in domestic science at Bradley Institute, Peoria, Illinois. Three of the children, Edward I., Clarence O. and Harley W., remain at home with Mr. and Mrs. Pennington.

Mr. Pennington's mother is still living, at the advanced age of ninety-seven years, and has the distinction of being the oldest woman in the county. She is hale and hearty in spite of her years and still retains an excellent memory. For many years she has been a member of the Baptist church. Mrs. William Pennington is a member of the Christian church, to the support of which Mr. Pennington contributes, although not a professor of religion himself. He is considered among the foremost farmers in the county and his farm of one hundred and fifty-five acres shows what up-to-date methods in agriculture can accomplish. Mr. Pennington stands in the fronk rank as a man who honors his calling in the present day and, because of his industry, integrity and genuine worth, he stands high in public estimation. As a citizen he easily ranks with the most influential in his community and is ever looking toward the betterment of those about him. Upright in every relation of life, he is eminently worthy of mention in a biographical work of the scope intended in the present one.

JAMES L. DARNELL.

There could be no more comprehensive history written of a city or county, or even of a state and its people, than that which deals with the life work of those who, by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have placed themselves where they well deserve the title of "progressive," and in this sketch will be found the record of one who has outstripped the less active and less able plodders on the highway of life, one who has not been subdued by the many obstacles and failures that come to every one, but who has made them stepping stones to higher things and at the same time that he was winning his way in the material affairs of life gained a reputation for uprightness and honor.

James L. Darnell, the proprietor of the "Yaller Front," was born in Danville, August 25, 1854. His parents were John F. and Virginia (Dicks) Darnell, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of Indiana. John F. Darnell came to Hendricks county when a small boy with his mother and located in Danville. He was a carpenter by trade, but later went into the mercantile business, which he managed until his death, in 1897. His wife died about four years later. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Darnell were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living: Charles S., of Indianapolis, Indiana; Dora, the wife of A. S. Pierce, of Colorado; Kate, the widow of Frank Gladden, of Texas; Rhoda May Howell, of St. Louis, Missouri; Mrs. Jennie Calvert, of Texas, and James L., the immediate subject of this sketch.

James L. Darnell was educated in the public schools of Danville, and at the age of eighteen became a salesman in an Indianapolis clothing store, remaining there for eight years. He then began to indulge his desire for travel and for the next two years was salesman for the Famous Shoe and Clothing Company, of St. Louis. Following this he worked for mercantile establishments in New Orleans, Denver, Springfield, Missouri, and other places in the West, spending a short time working in San Francisco. He then returned to Indianapolis, where he remained for a short time, but the wanderlust seizing him, he went west again and took service with a farmer near Keokuk, Iowa, at fifteen dollars per month. He had the management of twenty to thirty farm hands, and he had the native ability to do his work well. The owner recognized his capacity and increased his salary to forty dollars per month and gave him the entire management of the farm. However, he soon returned to Indiana because of his father's declining health, and for five years before his father's death he was in his father's store. Upon the death of the latter he continued the grocery business and has been remarkably successful. He is a very popular and prosperous grocer and is one of the busiest and most enterprising merchants in this part of the state.

Mr. Darnell was first married in 1878 to Nancy Reed, of Danville, and to this marriage there were born three children: Edith, the wife of C. P. Bond, of Boston, Massachusetts; Ralph, deceased, and Bessie, the wife of Rev. George Kline, of Glenwood Springs, Colorado. Mrs. Darnell died in 1891, and in 1895 Mr. Darnell was married to Margaret Cook, the daughter of Silas and Mary Cook, of Danville.

James Darnell is a Democrat in politics, but has never taken an active part in the political game. Faternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and, religiously, is affiliated with the Presbyterian church, having long held the office of deacon in that denomination. Mr. Darnell is one of the most active members of the Danville Commercial Club and is one of the most enthusiastic boosters for a greater Danville. He has given a great deal of thought and energy in organizing the Business Men's Club, of Danville, in order to bring factories and capital to his local town. He is interested himself in the Danville Creamery and Danville Canning Company, being a stockholder in both companies. He is a broad, generous and worthy business man and citizen. His store, familiarly known as the "Yaller Front," is rapidly becoming a household word in Hendricks county, and by his accommodating, genial and business-like way, he has built up a large business.

JOEL B. GARRISON.

Among the men of Hendricks county who have been important factors in the building up of the county is Joel B. Garrison, who, as a farmer and blacksmith, has been a prominent citizen of the community in which he lives for more than a half century. He was born in Putnam county, Indiana, December 6, 1845, the son of Jeremiah and Rebecca (Shaw) Garrison, both natives of New Jersey, who, after their marriage on January 24, 1826, came to Indiana and settled in Hendricks county early in the thirties. They remained in this county only a short time, when they moved to Putnam county, but after a short stay in that county they returned to Hendricks county, where they remained for the rest of their lives. Jeremiah Garrison was a shoemaker and followed this trade all his life. He was married three times, and to him and his wife, Phoebe Whit, were born three children, Phoebe, Edward and Jane. His second wife was Ruth Erskine and to this marriage were born three children, Archibald, Mary J. and Sallie. His third marriage was to Rebecca Shaw and to this last marriage nine children were born, Ann, Eleanor, Arminda, Rebecca, Joseph, Charles W., Francis, Eliza and Joel. Ann married Thomas B. Borders; Eleanor died in childhood; Amanda married James Vermillion, and after his death, William Alley; Rebecca, deceased; Joseph married Susan Zearing; Charles W. married Jerush Wilcox; Francis married Josie Laton; Eliza married Jesse Brazer.

Joel B. Garrison attended the common schools, near Stilesville, Indiana, for only a short time. When he was eighteen years of age he enlisted in Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served from February 25, 1864, to July 7, 1865. He then returned to his home and engaged in the blacksmithing trade, which he followed for about thirty-five years. He then purchased a farm and since that time has devoted himself to agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Garrison was married January 19, 1869, to Amanda Bryant, the daughter of Silas and Matilda (McCormack) Bryant, and to this union were born four children: Flora Alice, who married Elmer Fuson, and has two children, Winifred and Wendall; Rossie became the wife of Osro Hadley and has one child, Ethelyn; Don A., who married Bernice Owen and has one child, Helen Lucile; Elsie, who married O. Harper.

Mrs. Garrison's parents had a family of nine children: Lucy, the wife of Martin Sims; John married Ruth Sharp; Amanda, wife of Mr. Garrison; Nancy, wife of Mr. Balldock; Clementine, deceased; William, who married Helen Stingler; Anderson, deceased; Albert, and Woodford, who married Mary Clark. Mrs. Garrison's father had the distinction of being the first white child born in Hendricks county. His death occurred in 1899 and his wife died in 1913.

Joel Garrison, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. Jeremiah Garrison, the father of Joel B., died June 5, 1857, his wife having died ten years previously, October 15, 1847.

Mr. Garrison has been a life-long member of the Republican party, although he has never had any political office. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and holds his membership in the Baptist church of Stilesville. During his long and busy life in this community he has so conducted himself as to win the sincere respect and esteem of all who know him.

R. M. HADLEY

The two most strongly marked characteristics of both the East and West are combined in the residents of Indiana. The enthusiastic enterprise which overleaps all obstacles and makes possible almost any undertaking in the comparatively new and vigorous Western states is here tempered by the stable and more careful policy that we have borrowed from our Eastern neighbors, and the combination is one of unusual force and power. It has been the means of placing this section of the country on a par with the older East, at the same time producing a reliability and certainty in business affairs which is frequently lacking in the West. This happy combination of characteristics is possessed to a notable degree by the subject of this review. R. M. Hadley, of Plainfield. He is too well known to the readers of this work to need any formal introduction here, for he not only comes of a family whose name is deeply engraved in the financial, commercial, professional and industrial history of this section of the state, but he himself is filling a large place in the public affairs of his community. Recognized as a man of strong and alert mentality, deeply interested in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community along material and civic lines, he is regarded as one of the progressive and enterprising men of his city and county.

Among the native sons of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have risen to a place of prominence in their community, there is no one who has filled a higher niche in his home town than R. M. Hadley, who was born November 23, 1863, in Washington township, this county. His parents were Hiram and Mary Elizabeth (Martin) Hadley, the father being a native of this county and his mother of Fulton county, this state. His father was a farmer by occupation and after his marriage went to Nebraska, where he lived the remainder of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Hadley were the parents of seven children: Ollie and Effie, both deceased; R. M., the immediate subject of this sketch; C. L., of Plainfield, Indiana; Lucinda, deceased; James G., of Plainfield, and D. F., of New York.

R. M. Hadley was educated in the district schools of Washington township, this county, and spent his boyhood days when not in school working on the home farm. He accompanied his parents to Nebraska, and upon reaching his majority he engaged in the grocery business at Fairmount, Nebraska, and subsequently conducted the same business in Lincoln, that state, for a number of years. Later, for a few years, he traveled out of Lincoln for a wholesale grocery house, afterwards being transferred to Indianapolis, and after traveling out of Indianapolis for six years he came to Plainfield in February, 1908, and purchased the dry goods store of A. J. Shaw, which he has conducted since that time. Mr. Hadley carries a large and well-elected stock of dry goods and kindred lines, caters to the trade and by his courtesy and evident desire to please his customers has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative patronage in Plainfield and surrounding country.

Mr. Hadley was married December 31, 1885, to Adah Keith, of Fairmount, Nebraska, the daughter of Calvin and Abbie Keith, and to this union there have been born two children, Claude, deceased, and Hiram Irvin, twenty-two years of age, who is now in the piano business in Plainfield. Fraternally, Mr. Hadley is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and, with his wife, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Plainfield and for many years has been one of its trustees. Politically, Mr. Hadley is a Republican, but has been too busy a man to devote much attention to public affairs, though his party did elect him to the office of town treasurer, in which he rendered valuable service for his fellow citizens. Also he was prevailed upon to accept the office of town clerk and is now filling that position in a very satisfactory manner. In the civic life of the community Mr. and Mrs. Hadlev have been potent factors for the development of the best interests of the people. Mr. Hadley is a man of pleasing address and easily makes friends with all with whom he comes in contact. Because of his upright character and marked ability and pleasing disposition he is numbered among the most popular residents of Plainfield.

EDWARD F. NASH.

Among the earnest men whose enterprise and depth of character have gained a prominent place in the community and the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens is the honored subject of this sketch. A leading farmer of the township where he resides, and a man of decided views and laudable ambitions, his influence has ever been exerted for the advancement of his kind, and in the vocation to which his energies are devoted he ranks among the representative agriculturists of the county.

Edward F. Nash, member of a family who for years have been numbered among the good citizens of this county, was born on December 24, 1853, and has the distinction of having lived his entire life within the bounds of Hendricks county, one of the favored regions of the state. He is a son of Isaac C, and Celicia (Wilson) Nash, the former being a native of the Buckeve state, being born in Madison county on March 27, 1817, and when only eight years old he was brought to Indiana by his parents, Thomas and Hannah (Brown) Nash, the family locating about two and one-half miles south of Brownsburg. Isaac remained under the paternal roof until the time of his marriage, attending the early schools of Hendricks county in his boyhood, and later being instructed in the secrets of successful agriculture. under the tuition of his father. He was twice married, his first wife being Celicia Wilson, mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, to whom he was united in marriage on January 28, 1841. Celicia Wilson was a native of Virginia, born on March 1, 1817, the daughter of William J. and Nancy Wilson. They came to Indiana when Celicia was twelve or fifteen years of age, and settled on a farm some four miles south of Brownsburg, where they reared a family of eleven children. Celicia always resided at home until the time of her marriage. Her death occurred on December 13, 1860. and she left a family of nine children, the youngest a babe but three days old. About that time three deaths occurred in the Nash family, coming quite close together. At the time of the marriage of Isaac C, and Celicia Wilson Nash his entire family, including parents, brothers and sisters, moved out west, leaving him the sole representative of the family in Hendricks county, His parents he never saw again, their deaths occurring while they were residents of Missouri.

On April 19, 1864, Isaac Nash was united in marriage with his second wife, Eliza Jane Faucett, daughter of Joseph and Rebecca N. (Hurron) Faucett. This union was without issue. Mrs. Nash's death occurred on July 24, 1909, lacking a short time of attaining her eighty-seventh year. Isaac C. Nash died September 25, 1897. He was regarded as one of the leading men of his community and was one of those unselfish men who did all within his power to advance the moral and material welfare of his friends and neighbors, often neglecting his own work to assist in something partaking of a public nature. He hauled the logs used in the erection of the first business house in Brownsburg, driving a yoke of oxen. In his later life he enjoyed telling of how he would help his neighbors all day, in rolling logs, returning home near nightfall and would work until midnight on his own land endeavoring to get it into proper shape for cultivation. He was a rigid churchman, being a member of the Presbyterian church, and took an active part in futhering the cause of that society.

Edward F. Nash received his early education in the district schools of his community, remaining with his father until twenty-six years old, at which time he was united in marriage with Sarah C. Garner, daughter of Harrison B. and Frances (Lowder) Garner. The Garners were originally from Kentucky, the Lowders coming to Indiana from the Carolinas. After marriage Mr. Nash took up his residence on a farm owned by his father and about three-quarters of a mile from the old home place, being some two miles northeast of Brownsburg. There they lived until 1881, when they removed to the present home, about two and one-half miles northwest of Brownsburg. Mrs. Nash died on March 27, 1896, leaving two children: Bertha, wife of Benjamin C. Weddle, son of Simon and Angeline (Bishop) Weddle, of Hendricks county. Bertha has one son, Marion, living and a little son, Paul, died when seven years old. The second child of Mr. Nash is Effie, who became the wife of Thomas L. Burns, son of James and Rebecca (Patterson) Burns, of Hendricks county. Effie is the mother of five sons, Laurel, Louis, Leroy, Norman and Aubrey.

Mr. Nash's religious affiliation is with the Baptist church, the family identifying itself with the workings of same. He is also a member of the Brownsburg Horse Thief Detective Association and does all within his power to further the interests of all in his community. He is a man of sound practical intelligence who is keenly alert to everything relating to his interests and, in fact, with all that concerns the prosperity and advancement of his community. Because of his splendid personal characteristics and his genuine worth, he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him and is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of the one at hand.

NATHAN H. KENDALL.

In every district we find a few sturdy families who grow up and develop with the country, by their industry and steadfastness adding to the stability of the community as a whole, becoming an integral part of the social and business life of the place, and by their inherent conservatism adding a dignity to those undertakings with which they are associated.

To such a family belongs the subject of this article, Nathan H. Kendall. Long a resident of Liberty township, though unassuming and unaggressive, he has been closely associated with the educational and religious growth of the surrounding country until his name is well known far beyond the confines of his immediate neighborhood. He is the only son of Ahimaac and Minerva Kendall and descends from a long line of sturdy, industrious tillers of the soil. Like his ancestors, he has established himself as a substantial member of the commonwealth, well known and highly esteemed.

More than a century ago, before the days of steam and electricity, Mr. Kendall's grandparents, Nathan and Ruth Harvey, left their home in North Carolina, taking the long and perilous journey westward, finally selecting for their abiding place a spot in Parke county, Indiana. To them, in 1832, was born a daughter, Minerva, who grew to maturity and married Ahimaac Kendall, a young farmer. His parents, James and Sally (Bayles) Kendall, were also natives of North Carolina. They, too, braved the terrors of the long, lonely journey westward, obtaining land from the government in Morgan county, Indiana, near the present site of Mooresville. Here their son, Ahimaac, was born in 1833. Six years later they moved to Hendricks county and here their son was married to Minerva Harvey. Like their parents, the young people spent their days upon the farm, becoming substantial members of society. To them were born four children, Nathan H., Sallie A. (Robinson), Mary A. (Stipe), and Lydia E., single and living with her mother.

Though he belonged to no lodges and aspired to no political office, Ahimaac Kendall was esteemed by all who knew him as an intelligent, loyal citizen and an influential member of the Friends church at Mill creek. Death came to Mr. Kendall at the ripe age of seventy-nine years, on November 11, 1912, he being at that time near Danville, Hendricks county. His widow now resides with a daughter near New Winchester. Nathan H., his only son, was born November 30, 1856, in Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, two miles southeast of Amo. Here Nathan spent his boyhood and received his schooling, and here, in 1877, he was married to Mary E. Smith. At the age of thirty years he came to Liberty township, his present home, where he purchased one hundred sixty acres of good land. This is now a beautiful country home in that most ideal setting, a well cultivated, liberally stocked farm. Surrounding Mr. Kendall are the fruits of his toil, the tangible evidence of a life well spent—surroundings which say to the most casual beholder, "Within abides a man of sterling worth."

That Mr. Kendall has the highest confidence of his fellow men is evidenced by the fact that he was selected for ten consecutive years as director of the schools of his district, before the present system of graded schools was introduced into the township. For twelve years, also, he has been an elder in the Christian church at Clayton, where Mrs. Kendall is also an influential member. In politics, he was known as a Republican until the formation of the new Progressive party, in 1912, since which time he has lent his influence to its growth.

Mr. Kendall is the father of five children, Owen, Milber, Marcena, Goldie and Ethel. Owen, the eldest son, married Nellie Ratliff, and resides in Liberty township. He, too, follows the pursuit of agriculture, and has one child. Villa. Milber, the second son, married Effie Woods, and lives on a farm two miles southwest of Pecksburg. He holds a position of responsibility in the First National Bank of Amo. Goldie, the eldest daughter, is the wife of Cecil Martin, a farmer, and lives near her father. She is the mother of one daughter, Audrey. Ethel is in far-away South Dakota, her husband, Earl Given, being instructor in the Indian school at Smithwick. Two children, Dean and Elenore, have been born to them.

This history would not be complete without further mention of Mr. Kendall's most faithful ally in all his undertakings, his devoted wife, and her family. Mrs. Kendall was the second of nine children born to Asa and Julia (Trullinger) Smith. These were Emma, who married George Beemer, Mary (Mrs. Nathan Kendall), Margaret (Mrs. Hitchens), Frank, Catherine (Mrs. Kenneth), Theodore, Edward, Charles and Delia.

Asa Smith, the father, was born in Kentucky, but while yet an infant was brought by his parents to Covington, Fountain county, Indiana. Here they remained until he grew to manhood, moving to Vermillion county and later to Danville, Illinois, when Asa was about twenty-five years of age, their son accompanying them. This was his home until death called him, October 15, 1910. He led the life of a farmer, taking no active part in lodges nor political affairs, giving his energies to his home and family. He and Mrs. Smith were both affiliated with the Missionary Baptist church.

HENRY SIMPSON COX.

Among the citizens of Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, who have built up comfortable homes and surrounded themselves with valuable landed estates and personal property, few have attained a higher degree of success than the subject of this sketch. With few opportunities except what his own efforts were capable of mastering and with many discouragements to overcome he has made an exceptional success in life and in his old age has the gratification of knowing that the community in which he resides has been benefited by his presence and his counsel.

Henry Simpson Cox, one of the largest landowners in Clay township. Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in the township where he has lived for the past sixty-six years. He is the son of William and Lucy (Plasters) Cox, and was born on September 12, 1848. William Cox was a native of Morgan county, and his wife was born in this county. William Cox moved to this county when he was a young lad with his parents and after leaving school he worked on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. He then married Lucy Plasters, the daughter of William and Polly (Cleveland) Plasters, and rented land for a few years, after which he purchaeed a farm in Middle township, where he lived until his death, April 15, 1881, his wife surviving him until 1884. To Mr. and Mrs. William Cox were born six children: John M., who died in childhood; William D., who died from injuries received from being kicked by a horse; Mary C., the wife of Stephen Morbley; James M., who died in infancy; Charles, who married Fanny Leachman, and Henry Simpson.

Henry Simpson Cox attended school in the rude log structures of his day, and received a practical education in the three "R's," which were the only subjects in the curriculum at that time. He was early taught all of the ins and outs of farming life by his father, and when he married and started to operate a farm of his own, at the age of twenty-five, he was well equipped for the profession of farming. As a successful tiller of the soil he has few peers in the county and his farm of two hundred and nineteen acres bears glowing testimony to his success along agricultural lines.

Mr. Cox was married, February 3, 1874, to Mary Frances Flynn, daughter of Alfred and Artemesia (White) Flynn, and to this happy marriage have been born four children: Eva, who married Gus Bartholomew, and they have two children, Edgar and Hazel; Jennie married Frank Stanley; William Dayton, who is unmarried and still at home, and Alice, who also is under the parental roof.

Mincher Cox, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was one of the thousands of North Carolinians who came to this state. He came here as a young man and first settled in Morgan county, near Mooresville, where he farmed and engaged in the buying and trading of horses. He seemed to have been an adventurer of more than ordinary pretensions. We are told that on one of his numerous horse-selling trips he took a small pacing horse and drove it from Morgan county to Chicago, but when he reached the outskirts of that city a trapper offered him twenty acres of land for the horse, but his offer was refused. It is not related, however, just what he did get for the horse. Mincher Cox married in Morgan county and afterwards moved to Clay township, in Hendricks county, where he remained for about eight years. The wanderlust then seized him and he moved to Grant county, Indiana, where he remained until his death. He married Sarah Nichols, and to this union six children were born, all of whom are deceased: William, the father of Henry Simpson; Lydia, who married John Scharey; Harriett married Daniel Hollingsworth; Louisa became the wife of Austin Williams; James A., who married Lena Hathaway, and Thomas, who died unmarried.

The mother of Henry Simpson Cox was the daughter of William and Polly (Cleveland) Plasters, and was one of nine children, the others being as follows: John, who married Rebecca Bullard; Betsy became the wife of Michael Higgins; Eveline became the wife of Cyrus Moore; Phoebe married Alfred Stanley; Jackson; Polly became the wife of Buckner Highton; William married Mary Burgner; Sallie became the wife of Bunk Burnett, and Lucy, who married William Cox.

The father of Mrs. Henry S. Cox was Alfred Flynn, a native of Kentucky. He was reared on a farm in that state and after his marriage moved to Clinton county, Indiana, where he remained for about six years. He then moved to Hendricks county and located on a farm in Middle township, where he remained until his death, November 10, 1908, his wife having preceded him in death in 1898. He had married Artemesia White, the daughter of William and Polly White, and to that union were born nine children: Mary Frances, the wife of Henry S. Cox; John, who married Martha Arnold; Nancy, who became the wife of Thomas Day; Louisa, who married Frank Burchman; George; William; Frank; Ella, who married William Smith; Ollie, who married Josie McCall.

Mr. Cox has been a life-long Democrat and has taken an active interest in the deliberations of his party. Some idea of the popularity which he has throughout the county is shown by the fact that he was elected in November, 1912, as commissioner of Hendricks county, despite the fact that Hendricks is a strong Republican county. In this important office he has shown that he has that admirable judgment and good common sense which is the making of a good and efficient public official. Mr. Cox is a man of genial personality and numbers his friends in every corner of the county. He is a man who has the welfare of his county at heart and is using his best efforts to improve his home county in every possible way.

A. EMMETT BLY.

It is one of the beauties of our government that it acknowledges no hereditary rank or title, no patent of nobility save that of nature's, leaving every man to establish his own rank by becoming the artificer of his own fortune. Places of honor and trust, rank and preferment thus happily placed before every individual, high or low, rich or poor, to be striven for by all. but earned alone by perseverance and sterling worth, are most always sure to be filled with deserving men, or at least by those possessing the energy and talent essential to success in contests where public position is the prize. A. Emmett Bly, the subject of this review, affords a conspicuous example of the successful, self-made American, who is not only eminently deserving of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens, but also possesses the necessary energy and talent that fits him to discharge worthily the duties of the responsible place with which he has been honored by the people of his county. A man of vigorous mentality and strong mental fiber, he finds those qualities the chief factor in the carving out of a career that has been above the suspicion of reproach and of honor to the county which he so ably and acceptably serves

A. Emmett Bly, one of the most successful business men of Plainfield, Indiana, was born three miles southeast of Danville, Indiana, on November 24, 1878, the son of Joseph and Lydia (Morgan) Bly, who were both natives of this county also. His father is a farmer and lives north of the depot in the same house where Judge John V. Hadley, the editor of this work, was born. He was a huckster by trade for eighteen years, but within the last few years he has been operating a farm, which is owned jointly by himself and son, A. E. Bly. The grandfather of Mr. Bly was Joseph Bly, a native of Crab Orchard, Kentucky, who came to this county when a voung man and settled at North Belleville, where he followed the occupation of a farmer all his life. He was married to Mary Powers, and to them were born several children, Joshua, Joseph, William, John, Jane, Lizzie and one child who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bly reared a very interesting family of eight children: Alta, the wife of Frank Stout, of Indianapolis; John Dott, who died November 20, 1005, at Phoenix, Arizona, had been associated with A. Emmett in the dry goods business for some years. They started in business together in August, 1896. The two brothers had been agents for the Indianapolis News, Sun and Journal, and their mercantile success was formed upon the pennies earned and saved in the sale of newspapers. They won the state prize from the Indianapolis News for the largest number of sales. John Dott Bly was born July 22, 1877, and was cut off in early manhood when he was giving great promise of a brilliant career. He was superintendent of the Suuday school, very active in the fraternal order of the Knights of Pythias, and an exceptionally bright young man. The third child of Joseph Bly is A. Emmett, the immediate subject of this sketch; Daisy, the wife of Robert Copeland, of Plainfield; Ralph, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Plainfield; Robert, who is employed in the Boys' Reform School at Plainfield; Okal, wife of Frank Waggoner, and an infant child who died at the age of three weeks.

A. Emmett Bly was born on his father's farm and educated in the public schools of his home county and attended the Central Academy at Plainfield. At an early age he engaged in the mercantile business, purchasing the small stock of dry goods owned by W. E. Phillips, when he was only seventeen years of age. A few days later his brother, John Dott, eighteen years old. who had been mentioned before, came into the business as an equal partner and the store was a money maker from the beginning. The two youthful merchants seemed to have the innate ability which characterizes successful business men and their success was assured from the start. No more popular young men ever started in business in Plainfield than the two Bly brothers, and their business transactions were such as to win for them the confidence of their rapidly increasing patronage. Mr. Bly now carries a large and well selected stock of goods, valued at fifteen thousand dollars, and enjoys his full share of the patronage of the people of his vicinity in the lines which he handles. He is splendidly qualified in every respect for a business career, and by his unfailing courtesy and untiring and persistent industry, systematic and honorable methods, he has gained the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact.

A. Emmett Bly was married on June 25, 1905, to Louise Juanita Lowry, the daughter of Orville and Frances (Utterback) Lowry, and to this happy union there have been born two children, Karl Dott, born February 26, 1910, and Melba, born March 4, 1912. The family residence is one of the most attractive and comfortable modern homes in Plainfield, and here the many friends of the family are delighted to gather, where they are always assured of a hearty welcome and an enjoyable hour. Mrs. Bly is a woman of many gracious qualities of character and possesses intellectual ability of a high order. She is an ideal wife and mother, and her husband attributes no small amount of his success to the comfort and counsel of his wife.

Mr. Bly's remarkable success in business has brought him into close connection with the financial life of his community. He is now a director in the Citizens State Bank of Plainfield, has landed interests in Texas, Georgia, and in his home county, where he and his father own one hundred and four acres. His interest in education and the intellectual advancement of his community is shown in the fact of his live interest in the public library of his town. He is now a member of the library board. Officially, he is connected with the township advisory board of Guilford township as its secretary. His father was trustee of this township in 1904, and made an excellent record in that important office. When he took charge of the office, the township was in debt, and he not only repaired the roads of the township and made many improvements, but cleared off the indebtedness of the township and left a large surplus at the end of his term of office. Mr. Bly is a member of the Friends church and contributes generously of his means to its support. Fraternally, he is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Free and Accepted Masons. His political party has recognized his influence and ability by selecting him as a delegate to the state convention, and he has for many years been a delegate to the Republican conventions, both county and state.

The success of A. Emmett Bly is a real story and needs no flattering statements to show what may be accomplished by a genuine lover of good, honest work. His rise from a country newsboy to a leading merchant and substantial citizen while yet a young man is a story of fact rarely equaled even in this day of phenomenal successes, and yet through it all he has maintained that sympathy with his fellow citizens which endears him to everyone with whom he comes in contact. Personally, he is a pleasant gentleman and is not only held in high esteem for his abilities, but for his public-spirited nature, his wholesome private and social life and his position is secure as one of Hendricks county's most influential citizens.

ERNEST COOPER, M. D.

There is no class to whom greater gratitude is due from the world at large than the self-sacrificing, sympathetic, noble-minded men whose life work is the alleviation of suffering and the ministering of comfort to the afflicted, to the end that the span of human life may be lengthened and a great degree of satisfaction enjoyed during the remainder of their earthly sojourn. There is no standard by which their beneficent influence can be measured; their helpfulness is limited only by the extent of their knowledge and skill, while their power goes hand in hand with the wonderful laws of nature that spring from the very source of life itself. Some one has apply said, "He serves God best who serves humanity most." Among the physicians and surgeons of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have risen to eminence in their chosen field of endeavor is the subject of this review, whose career has been that of a broad-minded, conscientious worker in the sphere to which his life and energies have been devoted and whose profound knowledge of his profession has won for him a leading place among the most distinguished medical men of his day and generation in the city of his residence.

Dr. Ernest Cooper, the son of William B, and Rachel (Ritter) Cooper. was born in Guilford township, Hendricks county, Indiana, June 8, 1870. His father was a native of North Carolina and his mother of Hendricks county, Indiana. William Cooper came to Hendricks county in 1850, when about eighteen years of age, driving through in a wagon. He was a farmer all his life and continued that occupation until his death, which occurred in 1803, at the age of sixty-one, his wife having preceded him in death in 1879, at the age of thirty-eight. To Mr. and Mrs. William Cooper were born twelve children, four of whom are living: Mrs. Etta Wolfe, of Clearwater, Florida; G. A., of Oregon; Everett, of Escondido, California, and Ernest.

Ernest Cooper was reared on the home farm and enjoyed all the pleasures which fall to the lot of the ordinary farmer's boy. He secured his elementary education in the district schools of his township, and at the age of nineteen entered the Central Academy at Plainfield, this county, working his way through the four-years high school course. After his graduation, in 1803, he taught school in his home township for two years and worked on his uncle's farm in the summer seasons. While he was attending the school at Plainfield he slept in a doctor's office and here he got his first taste of medical life. Although he had but little money, he was determined to secure a medical education, and with that end in view he entered the Indiana Medical School at Indianapolis in 1895 and worked his way through, finishing with the class of 1898. Upon the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he enlisted as a private in the hospital corps of the regular army and served during the summer and fall of 1898. Within the first four weeks of his service he was promoted to acting hospital steward and mustered out as such. Returning to his home county, he began the active practice of medicine at Plainfield as a partner of Doctor Carter and continued this partnership for the next seven years, since which time he has practiced alone. He has built up gradually a large and lucrative practice, and in 1911 he built his present modernly equipped office brick building, which is fully equipped for general practice and all kinds of surgical work. At the present time he is in charge of the Boys' Reform School at Plainfield, and has had this important position for the past five years. He has served four years on the pension board, several years as health officer, and is also surgeon for the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction Company at Plainfield.

Doctor Cooper was married on June 12, 1900, to Eleanor Hanna, daughter of Hon. John Hanna, ex-congressman and one of the notable men of Indiana. Doctor and Mrs. Cooper are the parents of two daughters, Portia E., aged ten years, and Lucia V., aged seven.

Doctor Cooper is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias and Improved Order of Red Men, and takes a very active interest in lodge circles, for the past seven years having been treasurer of the Masonic lodge at Plainfield. He is a member of the Hendricks County, State and American medical associations. He and his wife hold affiliations with the Friends church and contribute generously of their means to its support. He has been a life-long Republican in politics, but, in accordance with the usual custom of physicians, he does not take an active part in political affairs, deeming it better to devote all of his time and attention to the medical practice.

Doctor Cooper has won his success only through hard work and diligent study. His life history is the history of a man who has struggled through his boyhood and manhood to attain the position which he holds today. He met with a very unfortunate mishap on July 22, 1910, when an accidental discharge of a shotgun so crippled his left leg that it was necessary to amputate it. The fortitude which he showed upon this occasion is characteristic of the indomitable courage of the man and stamped him as a man of unusual character. His whole life has been one of struggle, and now that he has reached a place where his practice is sufficiently lucrative to enable him to enjoy life he takes a supreme pleasure in helping those less fortunate. He and his good wife are the centers of a happy home and dispense hospitality to a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

JACOB E. O'NEAL.

The office of biography is not to give voice to a man's modest estimate of himself and his accomplishments, but rather to leave upon the record the verdict establishing his character by the consensus of opinion on the part of his neighbors and fellow citizens. In touching upon the life history of the subject of this sketch the writer aims to avoid fulsome encomium and extravagant praise; yet he desires to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life—a life characterized by perseverance, energy, broad charity and well-defined purpose. To do this will be but to reiterate the dictum pronounced upon the man by the people who have known him long and well.

Jacob E. O'Neal, the son of William H. and Elizabeth (Keller) O'Neal, was born in Putnam county, Indiana, January 18, 1863. He died August 27, 1907, and she lives with her children. William O'Neal was not fortunate enough to receive very much schooling, but was given a practical education at home. He hired out by the month until grown, then was married and at the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. Prior to the war he married Elizabeth Keller, the daughter of John Keller, and to this union there were born nine children: Naomi, wife of Mahlon Sechman; Florence, wife of John Robinson; Lorenzo, who married Sarah Knetzer; Mary, wife of Phillip Masten; Robert; William S. married Ida Bryant; Julia, wife of Oliver P. Phillips; Nora B., wife of Dayton Kersey, and Jacob E., the immediate subject of this sketch.

Jacob E. O'Neal received his elementary education in the district schools of Putnam and Hendricks counties and after leaving school worked on the farm with his father until his marriage. He then rented a farm and, by strict management and sound judgment, he was sufficiently successful to enable him to purchase his present farm of one hundred eight acres in 1900. As a farmer he has made a pronounced success and is considered one of the successful stock raisers of the county.

Mr. O'Neal was married to Anna J. Harlan, the daughter of Jesse E. and Jemima (Robinson) Harlan, and to their marriage have been born three children, Claude E., Frank H. and Sadie F. Claude, who is a professor in the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, married Mabel Hostetter. Frank is still under the parental roof. Sadie married Schuyler Arnold and will live in Stilesville.

Jesse Harlan, father of Mrs. O'Neal, was born in North Carolina and his wife, Jemima Robinson, was a native of Kentucky, and they were the parents of twelve children: William R., who died in infancy; Benjamin F., who married Ella Kendall; Levi, who married Flora Pike; Henry, who married Ella Lisby; Lydia, who became the wife of Willett Klein; Sarah, wife of Frank Snodgrass; Mary, who became the wife of Smith Harlan; Charles, who married Lora Wise; Anna, wife of Jacob E. O'Neal; Clara, wife of Marion Grimes; Retta, wife of Virgil Rollings; Lula, unmarried. Mr. Harlan lives in Clay township; his wife died on July 30, 1895.

The paternal grandparents of Mr. O'Neal had a family of seven children, James, George, William H. (the father of Mr. O'Neal), Henry, Lavina, Elizabeth and Emmeline. Mr. O'Neal's maternal grandparents reared nine children, John, Steven, Jesse, Enoch, James, Elizabeth, Melinda, Marion and Rachel.

Mr. O'Neal is a member of the Progressive party, having allied himself with that new organization in the fall of 1912. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, while, religiously, he and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Coatesville, Indiana, and are actively interested in the various organizations of that church. Mr. O'Neal has always taken an active interest in political life and has been assessor of his home township for four years and county treasurer for two years, performing the important duties of these offices in a very satisfactory manner. In his public career, as well as in his private life, he has been a man who conducted all of his business in a straightforward and upright manner, thereby winning the esteem of his fellow citizens.

SANDERS SMITH.

The following is a sketch of a plain, honest man of affairs, who, by correct living and a strict regard for the interests of his patrons, has made his influence felt in Plainfield and won for himself distinctive prestige in the professional circles of that city. He would be the last man to sit for romance or become the subject of fancy sketches, nevertheless his life presents much that is interesting and valuable and may be studied with profit by the young, whose careers are yet to be achieved. He is one of those whose integrity and strength of character must force them into an admirable notoriety, which their modesty never seeks, who command the respect of their contemporaries and their posterity and leave the impress of their individuality deeply stamped upon the community.

Sanders Smith, the restaurant man of Plainfield, and one of the most public-spirited citizens of that little city, was born February 18, 1854, near Hall, Morgan county, Indiana. His parents were Henry B, and Jane (Carder) Smith, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of Indiana. Henry Smith was one of the best farmers of Morgan county, and spent all of his life tilling the soil in that county, his death occurring there May 13, 1010. Henry Smith was a Democrat of the old school and was a man of more than ordinary education and strength of character. He and his wife were loyal members of the Christian church and great students of the Bible. His wife was one of the best informed Bible students in the county where they lived and was a daughter of John Carder, who was probably the best Bible student in this section of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith were the parents of nine children, five of whom are living: Sanders, the immediate subject of this sketch; Harvey M., of Mooresville, Indiana; Stephen, of New Orleans: Henry K., of Hall, Morgan county, this state: Rena Smith, of Indianapolis.

Sanders Smith was born and reared on his father's farm and received all his education upon the farm and in the district schools of his home neighborhood. He continued working on the home farm until he was twentyfour years of age, at times working for farmers in the vicinity of his home for a few months at a time. He also clerked in a store at Hall, Indiana, for about two years, and in 1881 he came to Plainfield and established a restaurant and confectionery store. In 1886 he concluded he could better his fortunes by removing to Danville, and the next four years of his life were spent in that city, where he operated a restaurant and confectionery store on the east side of the public square. However, in 1890, he decided to return to Plainfield, and he has continued in the restaurant and confectionery business in that place since. He now has a building of his own and has one of the most complete and fully equipped restaurants and soda fountains in the state. He freezes his own cream by electricity and has installed all the latest devices for the convenience of his patrons, having an equipment which will compare favorably with any town of the size of Plainfield in the state.

Mr. Smith was married March 25, 1875, to Olive L. Seaton, daughter of George W. Seaton, of Morgan county, this state, and to this union there has been born one daughter, Iva E. Seaman, the wife of Dr. H. L. Seaman, who is now living with her father. Mrs. Seaman has one daughter, Olive Emma.

Mr. Smith takes an active interest in politics and is a Democrat of the Bryan-Wilson stamp, believing thoroughly in the motto of having the people rule. He attended the Denver convention in 1908, and also the inauguration of President Wilson, in March, 1913. His party has tried to prevail upon him to accept office, at different times, but he has always refused. He is well posted on all public questions of the day and has a knowledge of all the important issues, which makes him a very entertaining conversationalist. He is one of the most influential factors in the councils of his party in his section of the county, and his opinion is always sought during the campaigns. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and at present is master of exchequer of Plainfield Lodge No. 50. He is also a member of Uniform Rank No. 33, of Plainfield. He has been active in the Knights of Pythias work for many years and helped to build the present castle hall in his home town, Mr. Smith is one of the most progressive civic workers in the town and helped to get the present town incorporated and was one of the men who led the fight for water works and electric lights, sidewalks and other improvements. During his whole life in Plainfield he has tried to make the town a better place to live in and how well he has succeeded is very apparent to the casual visitor. Such men as Mr. Smith are a blessing to the community in which they live, and the study of the career of such a man should be of help to the young men who are to become the future citizens of Plainfield and the surrounding community. Mr. Smith is a genial man in his relations with his fellow citizens, and because of his high character has won the esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances which he has scattered thoroughout the county.

WILLIAM W. SAWYER.

It is proper to judge of the success of a man's life by the estimation in which he is held by his fellow citizens. They see him at his work, in his family circle, in church, hear his views on public questions, observe the operation of his code of morals, witness how he conducts himself in all the relations of society and civilization and are, therefore, competent to judge of his merits and demerits. After a long course of years of such daily observation, it would be out of the question for his neighbors not to know of his worth, for, as has been said, "actions speak louder than words." In this connection it is not too much to say that the immediate subject of this sketch has passed a life of all unusual honor, that he has been industrious and has the confidence of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

William W. Sawver, a life-long farmer, now living in comfortable retirement in Clayton, Hendricks country, Indiana, was born on October 23. 1846, near Hazelwood, this county, the son of John and Nancy (Martin) Sawver. John Sawver was a native of Randolph county, North Carolina, born in 1704, and died in this county in 1860 at the age of seventy-five years. He received his early education in the schools of his native state. coming to Indiana soon after his marriage. He first settled in Marion county and entered land from the government in different places in the state, and some time in the thirties he came to this county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was twice married. By his first wife he became the father of six children, namely: Iredel, Eli, Irena, Nathan, Elizabeth and John, Jr., all of whom have passed from this life. His second wife was Nancy Martin, also a native of North Carolina and the daughter of John B. and Iane (Cravens) Martin. She died in the winter of 1802, on January 21st, at the age of seventy-seven years. She was the mother of eight children, but one of whom besides the subject is living, Araminta. Those deceased are Eliza, Mary, Rhoda, Theodore, James C., and Daniel C., who died at the front during the Civil War. John Sawver followed the vocation of farming all his life and was an honored man in the community. After the Republican party came into existence he was a strong advocate of its principles, but never took an active part in the administration of its affairs. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church and a man of influence in his locality.

William W. Sawyer passed the years of his early youth on the homestead, in this county, and at the opening of hostilities, at the beginning of the Civil War, fired with love for his country, he enlisted in August, 1862, for three years in Company G, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He served in the Army of the Tennessee under General Sherman and also, under the leadership of that great man, he made the famous march to the sea. He was captured en route at Statesboro, Georgia, on December 4, 1864, and sent to the rebel prison, at Florence, South Carolina. At the time of his capture he was detailed as a mounted scout and as such was taken by the enemy. On March 1, 1865, he was paroled and remained as a paroled prisoner until the close of the war, when he was mustered out of service and received his honorable discharge, at Camp Chase, Ohio, on June 18, 1865. On August 13, 1864, during the siege of Atlanta, he was wounded in the leg and received an injury in the head at the battle of Jonesboro, on September 1, 1864. However, he did not go to a hospital with either of these injuries. After the close of the war, Mr. Sawyer returned to his native county, where he engaged in farming, which line of work he followed all his active life, living in the vicinity of Hazelwood, Liberty township, this county. He has been highly successful and has owned land in both Hendricks and Morgan counties. In 1913 he disposed of his farming interests and, with his family, moved to Clayton, there to spend his remaining days in well deserved rest from the active duties of life.

On April 16, 1867, Mr. Sawyer was united in marriage with Martha York, a daughter of Nathan and Rebecca (Folgeman) York, born on December o. 1840. Nathan York was a native of North Carolina and came to this state, and perhaps this county, with his parents when but a young man. His father, Barney York, entered land from the government, in Liberty township, and there it was that Nathan York grew to manhood. He was born in North Carolina, in 1820, and died on his farm, in this county, on August 30, 1806. at the age of seventy-six years. In this county he met and married Rebecca Fogleman, also a native of North Carolina, who had come with her parents to this state, making the journey overland in a cart. They settled first in Morgan county. When her grandfather, Barney York, arrived in this county he found himself possessed of but ten cents, not considering his most valuable assets in the way of unlimited energy and ambition. He succeeded so well in his efforts that he became possessed of considerable land and at his death left forty acres to each of his children. Rebecca (Fogleman) York, who was born in 1833, died in this county in 1884. She was the mother of twelve children, three of whom have passed away, being Francis Marion, Laura and Oscar. Those remaining besides Martha, wife of the immediate subject of this sketch, are: Amanda (Mrs. Richardson), Asbury, Sylvester, Lucinda Ella (Mrs. Kwitt), Mary Alice (Mrs. Rhodes), Louisa (Mrs. Brantlinger), Dayton and Myrtle,

Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer are the parents of twelve children, as follows: Jerome T., born in 1868, died in 1872; Ida Belle, born in 1870; Dayton M., born in 1872; Minta A., born in 1874 and died the same year; Walter, born in 1875; Arlington, born in 1878 and died in 1881; Charles, born in 1881 and died the same year; Mary Myrtle, born in 1882 and died in 1897; Oscar, born in 1885 and died the same year; Vonnie O., born in 1886 and died in 1888;

Arthur, born in 1888, and Viola, born in 1891. Ida Belle, the eldest daughter, became the wife of Robert M. Kwitt, a farmer living close to Hazelwood, this county. They are the parents of six children, one of whom, Edward, died in infancy. The ones remaining are Mattie, Mamie, Mary, Dewey and Fernando. Mattie, their eldest daughter, is the wife of John McDade and resides in Clayton. She is the mother of four children, Dessie, Sylvan, Jewel and Hobart. Mamie, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Kwitt, is the wife of Walter Rushton, a farmer living in Putnam county. She also is the mother of four children, Lawrence, Ethel, Dorothy and Walter Glenn. Mary, the third daughter, is the wife of Edgar York and resides in Irvington, Indianapolis. They have two children, Mary Etta and John Robert.

Dayton, eldest living son of the subject, married Annie Duncan and lives at Hazelwood, this county. They are the parents of seven children, two of whom, Dovey and Claire, have passed away. The others are Maude, Hubert, Sylvia, Doris and Lowell. Sylvia is the wife of Archie Johnson and lives near Hall, in Morgan county. She has one child. Walter, another son of the subject, married Grace Lewis and lives at Martinsville, Indiana. They are the parents of six living children and have lost a babe which died in infancy. Their children are Archie, Martha, William, Howard, Merrill and Lloyd. Arthur, youngest son of the subject, resides in the capital city and is connected with the Indianapolis Life Insurance Company, with offices in the Board of Trade building. Viola, the youngest daughter, became the wife of Guy Boyd, a farmer of Franklin township, this county. She is the mother of one child, Rita Virginia.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer are consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church at Clayton, and have reared their family in strict accordance with the tenets of that faith. The family is one of the most highly esteemed in the community, and the home radiates kindliness and good cheer even to the passing stranger. Mr. Sawyer's fraternal affiliation is with the time-honored body of Free and Accepted Masons, holding his membership in blue lodge No. 463, at Clayton, in the workings of which he is keenly interested. Politically, he is a Democrat and has ever had an active interest in local politics. Mr. Sawyer is a most agreeable man to meet, of pleasing personality and kindly address. These are merely the outward indications of a heart in tune with the world and with broad sympathies for his fellow men. He is a man well informed on current events of the day, both at home and abroad, and takes keen delight in promoting any cause having, at its ultimate object, the uplift of mankind in any way whatsoever. Mr. Sawyer has the unqualified admiration and esteem of all who know him, which is a fitting tribute of which he is eminently worthy. To live for years in one community and steadily rise in public estimation indicates that the recipient of this gratifying regard has so lived as to be truly worthy of it. It means a life the principles of which have been the highest along all lines; it means helpfulness and charity in the broadest sense for friends and neighbors.

REV. ROBERT NATHAN HARVEY.

No estimate of the immense amount of good that comes from a long, active and useful life like that of Rev. Robert Nathan Harvey, the well known minister of Clayton, Hendricks county, Indiana, can be made, for it is far-reaching in its effects and will continue through coming generations, lee the "light that shines more and more unto the perfect day." Few lives lave been so unselfish, so pregnated with good deeds and so controlled by an insatiable desire to be kind and beneficial to his fellow men, but, notwith-standing the unbounded influence he wields in moulding public opinion and of the high tributes of praise freely accorded him by a vast horde of admirers wherever he is known, he is entirely unassuming and unpretentious, content in the thought that he is continuously putting forth his best efforts in following the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene.

Rev. Robert Nathan Harvey, a retired minister of the Baptist church, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, April 26, 1831, and is now living in quiet retirement at Clayton, Hendricks county, this state. His parents were Robert and Abigail (Sumner) Harvey, the father a native of North Carolina, where his birth occurred July 12, 1780, and his mother was born in Virginia, July 4, 1791. They were married August 25, 1814, and soon after their marriage they came west and settled on Noland's fork, in Wayne county, Indiana, where they lived until September, 1836, when they moved to Hendricks county. They came in wagons and drove their live stock with them. They located a half mile north of Pecksburg, where they bought three hundred and twenty acres of land from Jehu Hadley, only a few acres of which had been cleared. There they reared a family of seven daughters and three sons. The mother spun the flax and carded the wool to make the clothes for the family and was regarded as one of the experts in this line. In 1856, at the third annual fair of Hendricks county, she won the first and second premiums on linsey, which was woven by herself. The oldest son, Jonathan S., studied law and practiced for years in LaPorte county, Indiana, going then to Danville, where he was elected to the Legislature. He was a member of both the House of Representatives and the Senate and several years before the war was elected treasurer of state on the Whig ticke. At the time he made his race for this office, one of his political opponents said of him that "God never made an honester man than he." Robert Harvey, Sr., farmed all his life on the farm where he first settled in 1836, his deah occurring in 1871, his wife surviving him one year.

Rev. Robert Nathan Harvey grew up on his father's home farm and early in life learned the blacksmith's trade at Danville, after which he ercted a blacksmith shop at Clayton before the town was laid out. He was at Cayton when the town was platted and laid out and bought a town lot, and some time afterward traded his town lot for furniture to go to housekeeping with.

Mr. Harvey was married September 26, 1852, to Sarah Ann Shirly, who was born at Gosport, Indiana, October 20, 1833, the daughter of Wiliam and Mary (Worrell) Shirley. Her father and mother were bob reared in Kentucky and married there. Her father followed the trade of tailor until late in life. When Mrs. Harvey was seven years of age her parents moved to Belleville, in this county, where her father gave up his trade as a tailor and engaged in farming near Clayton. After his children grew up he went into the dry goods business at Pecksburg, and was engaged in that line of business until his death. After Mr. and Mrs. Harvey were married they lived on the farm and he farmed and operated a blacksmith shop, which occupations he continued to follow for the next twelve years, at which time he bought forty acres of land near the village of Pecksburg and on this farm lived until December 28, 1912, at which time his house and all its contents were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of three thousand dollars. with only an insurance of eight hundred dollars. At that time he bought his present home in Clayton.

Mr. Harvey joined the Baptist church at Clayton in 1861, at a time when the church at Amo was being organized. He and eight others became the charter members of this church in 1866 at Amo, and now there are only three of the charter members of this church left, Mr. Harvey and his wife and Melissa Justus. On July 29, 1869, Mr. Harvey was ordained to the ministry of the Baptist church and was stationed at New Bethel, Putnam county, Indiana. From that time for the next thirty-five years he was never without a charge and during his entire pastorate was in charge of fourteen of the twenty-one churches in the White Lick Association, spending eleven years as pastor of the Lawrence Baptist church and eight years at Brookfield. For twenty-three consecutive years he was moderator of the White Lick Baptist Association and for three years was moderator of the Indianapolis Baptist Association.

Reverend and Mrs. Harvey have been the parents of three children, the youngest, Frank Lincoln, dying at the age of eight months, the other two children being George A., of Clavton, and Dr. W. D. Harvey, who is president of the Indianapolis Regalia Company. Doctor Harvey was a successful physician before he went into his present business, and is equally successful in his new profession. Doctor Harvey married Cecelia Hadley, who died leaving one child, and he afterwards married Lydia Theal. George Harvey, the oldest son of Rev. R. N. and Mrs. Harvey, was for many years a dealer in threshing machines and engines at St. Louis, Missouri. He now lives in Clayton and has a fine farm two and one-half miles southwest of that town. He was married in 1875 to Lucy M. West, the daughter of Columbus and Tabitha (Staley) West. Columbus West was born one mile south of Pecksburg, this county, and was the son of Abraham and Sina (Hadley) West. Tabitha Staley was born in Morgan county, Indiana, the daughter of Eli and Mary (Tripps) Staley, who came to Morgan county, Indiana, from North Carolina in pioneer times. George Harvey and wife have one child. Herbert S., born in 1877, who married Fannie Harkrider, and they have one son, Raymond.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have been married over sixty-three years. All the friends of their youth have passed away and gone. He is the last one of the family living. During the course of his life of nearly four score years in this state there has never been raised the breath of suspicion against his name. He has taken a prominent part in public life during his whole career and has been county commissioner and for years was justice of the peace of Clay township. No case which he tried was ever appealed, showing that he used good judgment in his decisions. He married hundreds and hundreds of couples and only five of them were ever divorced. On his eighty-second birthday he was remembered by people from all over the United States, and one hundred and sixty-three cards of congratulation from his church members, showing the high esteem and affection in which he is regarded by his many friends. It is interesting to note that in all of the churches in which he has officiated there has never been any quarrel in the church, a fact which speaks well for his tact and good judgment in handling his congregations.

Rev. R. N. Harvey has always been interested as a public citizen in politics and cast his first vote in 1852 for Scott, and has never missed voting for a Republican candidate for President since that time and only missed two elections in the township. He attends all primaries and local conventions and, all in all, he is a man who has devoted his high talent to worthy purpose and when he "wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams," the community will have lost one of its best loved characters.

JESSE S. OGDEN.

It is eminently fitting to judge of the success of a man's life by the estimation in which he is held by his fellow citizens. They see him at his work, in his family circle, in church, hear his views on public questions, observe the operation of his code of morals, witness how he conducts himself in all the relations of society and civilization, and are therefore competent to judge of his merits and demerits. After a long course of years of such daily observation it would be out of the question for his neighbors not to know of his worth, for it has been truly said that "actions speak louder than words." It is safe to say that no man in Hendricks county wielded so much influence for a man of his age as did the late Jesse S. Ogden, who died in that county in 1877, at the early age of thirty-seven years. He was a man among men and "the elements so mixed in him that the whole world might stand up and say, This was a man."

Jesse S. Ogden, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ogden, was born in West Virginia, near Winchester, in 1839, and died February 10, 1877, just at the time when he was at the height of his success and popularity. The Ogden family trace their lineage back to colonial times and the members of his family occupied many places of trust and responsibility in the history of early Virginia. John Odgen and his family came to Indiana and settled in Hendricks county early in its history. Jesse S. Ogden was educated in the public schools of Danville, the Danville Academy and the Northwestern Law School at Indianapolis. His education was interrupted by the opening of the Civil War and he laid aside his books for the musket and answered the call of Governor Morton for troops. He enlisted in Company H, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served until he was wounded at the battle of Winchester, Virginia. After he was mustered out of the service on account of disability he returned to Hendricks county, Indiana, where he continued to reside until his death. He completed his legal education in Indianapolis and then formed a partnership with Judge John V. Hadley. Immediately after the close of the war he was elected recorder of Hendricks county and later prosecuting attorney of his home county. He was always interested in the principles of the Republican party and was honored by being elected to the House of Representatives in 1874. He had a brilliant career before him and would undoubtedly have occupied a much higher place in the political and official life of Indiana had he not died at such an early age. He was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and in his church affiliations was identified with the Methodist Episcopal church. His widow is still living and makes her home with her son, Rev. Horace G. Ogden, at Jamestown, New York.

Jesse S. Ogden was married to Mary A. Carter, of Danville, and to this union were born three children. Rev. Horace G., D. D., of Jamestown, New York, who is now pastor of the first Methodist Episcopal church of that place; Mrs. Adella L. Duvall, of Delaware, Ohio, who has won renown as a soprano singer, and James M., a successful lawyer of Indianapolis.

That Jesse S. Ogden was a remarkable man in more ways than one, is indicated in the striking document which he wrote a short time before his death. When he was told that he did not have much longer to live, he accepted the inevitable decree like a martyr, and, looking calmly into the face of death, he composed a creed for the guidance of his little children, whom he was about to leave. In all the range of literature and in all the annals of philanthropy there may not be found a more comprehensive summary or a stronger code of morals than he composed under such strange conditions, and it is safe to say that this document, teeming with a father's love, has fulfilled the mission for which the fond father wrote it. In view of the exquisite beauty of language and the lofty purity of thought which are embodied in this remarkable document, and believing that future generations may profit by the words, it is reproduced here just as it was given to his children on January 18, 1877, less than one month before his death. "My Dear Children:

"If I were to undertake to tell you how much I love you and how solicitous I am for your welfare and happiness in this life and in the life to come, you could not understand me, for you are too young to comprehend it. It was my sincere wish to live long enough to superintend your education and see you fairly started on the perilous journey of life. This coveted pleasure will be denied me. You will never know what it is to have a father to assist and guide you. You will be compelled to struggle unaided and alone, against the many vicissitudes and hardships of this life without light or counsel from me. I can not leave you any great patrimony and even if I could it might prove to you a curse rather than a blessing. Since I leave you nothing more substantial, I thought it prudent to cull out of my own limited wisdom and experience some plain and simple maxims which, if practiced, I am sure will make you estimable citizens of society and prepare you for that eternity whose shadow ever encompasses your footsteps.

"First of all, revere God and keep his commandments.

"Unite with some church whose tenets accord nearest with your conscience, and attend faithfully to your religious duties.

"Avoid all pomp and bigotry in religion. All true religion is embodied in one word—Charity: charity that embraces God with one arm and all humanity with the other. All else is counterfeit.

"Now let me call your attention more particularly to some plain rules of conduct in your relations to society, and for your own personal guidance.

"Above all things be truthful. And if you are truthful, then you will be honest—and these two constitute the cardinal virtues of a good life.

"Again, be industrious. Labor assiduously, and complete with thoroughness whatever you undertake. Indolence is the mother of poverty, unhappiness and crime.

"Be independent and self-reliant. Learn some independent trade or profession where you can receive the rewards of your own industry.

"Practice economy, without being miserly. Give according to your means to worthy objects of charity—and be sure they are worthy.

"Pay as you go. I repeat it, pay as you go! This is the true secret of all substantial success. The percentage of your creditor will make you a bank-rupt if you run in debt.

"If possible, secure for yourself a competency, without striving to become rich. Get no wealth at the expense of conscience. If fortune should favor you, in your prosperity do not forget the poor and needy.

"Be courteous. Politeness is the highway to popularity and station.

"Seek the society of the pure and learned; avoid the low and vulgar. Your position and standing in society depend on the observance of this rule.

"Read good books, such as have received the commendation of competent critics. Do not stuff yourselves on the current trash of the day—it is as reprehensible as gluttony. Time is the best critic. The books that survive his touch deserve to be studied.

"Be temperate in all things. Touch not the intoxicating bowl. It is full of vice, violence, misery and poverty. I beg you touch it not.

"Govern your temper. It is a fiery steed, and, unless put under severe discipline, will carry you into all manner of difficulties. Coolness is the ballast of a wise head.

"Be cleanly and dress neatly, without ornamentation. The sloven carries with him the highest evidence of his thriftlessness and ill breeding, while on the other hand the brainless fop is equally abhorrent.

"Avoid all affectation and dissimulation. Be natural and sincere. Have the courage to say 'no' where your honor or integrity might suffer.

"Economize your time; do not procrastinate. Remember that you can not recall a single moment of your lives. There are no pauses in the steady, ceaseless revolutions of the ponderous wheel that hurries you on to the end. Make sure, then, of each moment, and out of it extract something for your moral, intellectual or financial progress. Recreate your minds with manual labor, your bodies with study.

"Remain at home at night. Let me entreat you not to mingle with the vile gossiping crowd on the street corners or in some den of iniquity. It is in such company that bad habits are contracted and moral depravity has its origin.

"Obey your dear mother in all things. She understands your rights and duties, and will make no unreasonable demands of you. Strive to make her life pleasant and happy.

"Last of all, revere your country and obey her laws. Cherish her institutions of freedom and the rights of man. If these should be threatened, sacrifice your lives rather than see them perish.

"I might multiply indefinitely the minor duties of life; but I hope by the observance of these maxims, you will be actuated by higher motives, a higher faith, a broader philanthropy and a sublimer patriotism than myself. God knows how sincerely I yearn for such a consummation. If I only knew you would grow up into perfect manhood and womanhood I would die content.

"On each recurring anniversary of my death, I desire you to read this and resolve that you will observe these simple precepts with renewed fidelity. As you read them, may they be to you as a message direct from my home in that celestial city where I expect to take up my everlasting abode.

"May God bless and preserve you from all harm and save you finally in heaven, is my parting benediction. Farewell.

"Your much afflicted, but affectionate father,

"J. S. Ogden.

"P. S.—I desire Horace to keep in his possession this original manuscript, and that he furnish James and Adella each with a copy when they grow up and separate from each other.—J. S. O.

"January 18, 1877."

D. MONROE REYNOLDS, M. D.

It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that move a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestation in the career of the individual under consideration. In view of this fact, the life of the successful physician and public-spirited man of affairs whose name appears above affords a striking example of well-defined purpose, with the ability to make that purpose subserve not only his own ends but the good of his fellowmen as well. Doctor Reynolds holds distinctive prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and intellectual discipline of a high order, supplemented by the rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge, with the skill to apply the same, without which one cannot hope to rise above mediocrity in ministering to human ills. In his chosen field of endeavor, Doctor Reynolds has achieved a notable success and an eminent standing among the medical men of his county. In addition to his creditable career in one of the most useful and exacting of professions, he has also proved an honorable member of the body politic, rising in the confidence and esteem of the public, and in every relation of life he has never fallen below the dignity of true manhood nor in any way resorted to methods that have invited criticism or censure.

met and married Angeline Holliday, who was a native of that county and a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Hayworth) Holliday. Her parents came to Illinois from North Carolina. William P. Reynolds and wife remained in Illinois for a number of years and about the year 1904 they returned to Indiana and located near Mooresville, where they now reside.

D. Monroe Reynolds passed his boyhood days on the homestead in Illinois, attending the township schools, where he received his elementary education, and later attending the Vermillion Academy, at Vermillion Grove, that state. Having decided to make the practice of medicine his life work. he matriculated in the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, from which seat of learning he was graduated in the year 1000. For one year after graduation he was an interne at Saint Vincent's Hospital, in Indianapolis, and after completing his course there he located in Clayton, Hendricks county, Indiana, where he has since resided in the practice of his chosen profession. In 1902 Doctor Reynolds was united in marriage with Joanna Buchanan, born at Huntington, this state, a daughter of Samuel Buchanan and wife. She passed her girlhood in her native town, attending its schools and, being a young woman of intelligence with a broad outlook on life, decided to enter the ranks of trained nurses. She was received for training in Saint Vincent's Hospital, Indianapolis, and it was there she and Doctor Reynolds first met. Doctor Reynolds and wife have one son, Russell Perry, a remarkably interesting child of four years. In addition to his professional duties, Doctor Reynolds gives attention to the operation of a farm, comprising two hundred acres, which he owns near the town of Mooresville, this state. Up-to-date methods of agriculture are followed in handling the business of this farm. Doctor Reynolds is also interested in the People's Bank, at Clayton, which he assisted in organizing in the fall of 1912. Doctor Reynolds' career, since locating in Clayton, has not only been successful from a scientific standpoint, but he has gained for himself the sincere regard and confidence of the entire community. A high order of skill in his calling, a broad-minded sympathy with the sick and suffering and an earnest desire to help others, have combined to make him unusually successful and he is held in the highest esteem by his brother physicians because of his genuine worth. Genial and cheerful, he carries sunshine and comfort into every sick-room which he enters, winning at once the confidence and co-operation of his patients. Indeed, he is a welcome visitor in any company which he chooses to enter, for he possesses to an eminent degree those qualities which commend a person to the good will of others.

Fraternally, Doctor Reynolds is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, having attained the Royal Arch degree in the York Rite bodies, has the thirty-second or Scottish Rite degree and is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. Doctor Reynolds was reared in the Quaker faith, his father being a member of the Old-Style church and his mother of the progressive branch, but in 1913 Doctor Reynolds identified himself with the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Reynolds also is a member, both taking an active part in the affairs of the church and doing all within their power to forward its work. Doctor Reynolds is still a young man and his useful life, as one of the world's workers, has been one of devotion to his calling, with an earnest desire to assist in the betterment of his community along moral, educational and material lines as well. The opening vista of years holds much of promise for him and, through him, for the community honored by his residence.

WILLIAM COSNER.

Among the men who have been material factors in the development of Hendricks county, there is no one who occupied a more prominent position than the late William Cosner. In every community there are some men who are known for their upright lives, strong common sense and moral worth rather than for their wealth or political standing, and among such men was Mr. Cosner, who was not only a progressive man of affairs, successful in business pursuits, but a man of modest and unassuming demeanor, a fine type of the reliable, self-made American, a friend to the poor, charitable to the faults of his neighbors and ready to unite with them in every good work and active in the support of laudable purposes. He was a man who in every respect merited the high esteem in which he was universally held, for he was a man of public spirit, intellectual attainment and exemplary character.

William Cosner was born in Wayne county, Indiana, August 25, 1835, and died in Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, April 3, 1912. His parents were Anthony and Catherine (Phillips) Cosner, both of whom were born and reared in North Carolina. After their marriage they moved from that state to Indiana, settling in Wayne county, where they lived for five years, at the expiration of which time they moved to Hendricks county and located near Amo. Anthony Cosner here entered government land and started to carve out his fortune from the virgin wilderness. He built a log cabin, cleared the land and started to make a comfortable living for his large family. To Anthony and Catherine Cosner were born nine children: John, who married Eliza Whicker and, after her death, Louise Rolly; Mahlan marmied first, Catherine Boswell, second, Susan Weavel, and after her death, Elizabeth Bloom; Samuel, who married Nancy Walls; Lucinda, who became the wife of Moses Stanley, and after his death married Austin Williams; Sarah married William Page and, after his death, William Wilhite; Ann and Elizabeth died in infancy. The paternal grandparents of William Cosner reared a family of seven children, Anthony, father of the subject of this sketch, Mary, Hannah, Lovey Peggy, Elizabeth, William and Sarah. Anthony Cosner died in 1889, while his wife died in 1873.

William Cosner received his education, which was very limited indeed, in the schools of his home township. While still a small boy he started to work on his father's farm, where he continued to labor until his father's death, in 1889. However, before that date he built a home of his own and his father made his home with him.

William Cosner married Sarah E. Hine, the daughter of Winfield and Catherine (Reed) Hine. They were married during the Civil War, in April, 1862, and to this union were born two children. Elma Leota and Alda Ketura. Elma Leota married Phineas Purcell, and has two children, Roy and Flora; the latter lives with her grandmother; Roy married Elizabeth Miller and has three children, Max, Elma L. and Dorothy. Alda married Walter Moon and has three children, Wilbur, Adna and Larue.

Mrs. Cosner's parents came from North Carolina to this state and first located near Coatesville in 1852. After remaining there for a short time they moved to Franklin township, this county, where they lived until their death. They were the parents of nine children: Sarah, the wife of Mr. Cosner; Mary, wife of Scott Askren; Loren married Nettie Wilcox; Leroy, deceased in infancy; Emma, wife of Albert Masten; Lucinda, wife of Milton Patterson; Jane, wife of James Hollowell; Laura and Roxey, who are unmarried, live in Danville. The mother of these children died January 17, 1899, and the father two days later. Mr. Cosner's maternal grandparents reared a family of eight children, Joseph, Winfield, Eli, Nathaniel, Louis, Roginia, Nancy and Iane.

Mr. Cosner was a life-long Republican and cast his first vote for John C. Fremont in 1856. He never asked his party for public office, being content to serve as a private in the ranks, doing what he did in the local caucuses and primaries. His religious faith was that of the Baptists and throughout his long life he was a strong believer in the teachings of that denomination and lived according to these doctrines." His life was characterized by its Christian beauty and character and it should be a model for coming generations in Hendricks county.

JOHN HENRY HALL.

Clearly defined purpose and consecutive effort in the affairs of life will inevitably result in the attaining of a due measure of success, but in following out the career of one who has attained success by his own efforts there comes into view the intrinsic individuality which makes such accomplishment possible, and thus there is granted an objective incentive and inspiration, while at the same time there is enkindled a feeling of respect and admiration. The qualities which have made Mr. Hall one of the prominent and successful men of Clayton, have also brought him the esteem of his fellow townsmen, for his career has been one of well directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods.

John Henry Hall, who is living in comfortable retirement from the active duties of life, in his commodious home in Clayton, was born in 1837, at Zanesville, Ohio, the son of Greeneberry and Lydia (Thomas) Hall. He was a posthumous child, his father's death having occurred before his birth and he had the misfortune to also lose his mother before he was three years old. At his mother's death he was taken into the home of his maternal grandfather, Joseph M. Thomas, who was born and reared in Reading county, Pennsylvania. When the subject was about three and one-half years old, his grandfather moved to McConnellsville, Morgan county, Ohio, where he followed his trade of carpenter and millwright. There they remained until the subject was sixteen years of age, when the family removed to Clayton, where the years intervening until the outbreak of the Civil War were passed in quiet pursuits. Fired with a love of country, late in August, 1861, Mr. Hall enlisted in Company B, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was with that regiment all through the three years service. In the winter of 1862 he was for several weeks confined in Windmill Hospital, and in June, 1864, at the crossing of the North Anna river, in Virginia, he was wounded while starting a skirmish line, running onto a rebel enforced skirmish line. He engaged in many of the leading battles of the war, among them being Green Brier, in West Virginia, Kernstown (generally called the battle of Winchester), and Port Republic. He was then placed in the Army of the Potomac and with that division was in the engagements at Fredericksburg. Cedar Mountain, the second battle of Bull Run, under General Pope, South Mountain and the battle of Antietam. He also was at Gettysburg and after that spent the winter in Virginia and on May 5th their division was brought into the battle of the Wilderness, that seven days of terrific fighting. He was also at Petersburg when the "Crater" was blown up and distinctly saw the explosion, being comparatively near at the time. In the latter part of September, 1864, he was mustered out of the service and came back to his home in Clayton, having come through his severe experiences in an exceptional manner. While still a youth and prior to his service in the army, he had learned the painter's trade and had worked at it for about three years. After his return home from the front, he engaged in the sewing machine business for a couple of years and then became connected with a Philadelphia publishing house, for whom he was on the road for about twenty-five years. They were publishers of maps, and his work took him all over the eastern, central and middle western states, preparing new maps and making corrections in ones then existing. After he severed his connection with his firm, on account of failing health, he settled down at Clayton again, where his home and family had always been.

Mr. Hall's political sympathies were with the Republican party and after quitting the road he began taking an active interest in local politics and was elected township trustee, which position he held for five years, the term having been extended by a Democratic Legislature, although he was of the opposition party. Then for six years thereafter he served as president of the county council and otherwise served his party. He was engaged in the coal business for four or five years and about the year 1908 retired from active business. Mr. Hall is one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Clayton, a broad-minded man, well posted on current events and with a farreaching influence for good in his community.

In October, 1867, Mr. Hall was united in marriage with Angeline Sherman, born in Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, this state, near the town of Fortville. She is the daughter of Alonzo D. and Sarah (Hammond) Sherman and grew to womanhood on the place where she was born, but was living with her uncle, George Hammond, at the time she met Mr. Hall. To their union was born one daughter, Ora May, who passed from this life in 1891, at the age of twenty-two years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hall are devout members of the Christian church and give liberally toward the support of the local organization. Mr. Hall's fraternal affiliations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Hall is widely known as one of the most sagacious business men of his community and as a citizen of much public spirit, always interested in the common good. He has many friends and is a pleasant, sociable gentleman. He has always stood for progressive ideas, wholesome living and patriotism, and although his life has been without incident of a marked unusual nature, it has shown that steady, consecutive endeavor, coupled with honesty of purpose, will accomplish large results in the end.

ROBERT A. EDMONDSON.

It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs that makes the real history of a community and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The examples such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish and there is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting, even in a casual way, to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellowmen and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which make so much for the prosperity of a community. Such a man is the worthy subject of this sketch, and as such it is proper that a review of his career be accorded a place among the representative citizens of the town and county in which he resides. Additional interest attaches to his career owing to the fact that his entire life has been passed within the bounds of this county.

Robert A. Edmondson was born on December 18, 1860, about two miles south of Clayton, the son of Benjamin G. Edmondson. When he was six or seven years old they moved to within a short distance south of Clayton, and there he grew to manhood, attending the schools in Clayton, where he received his elementary education, and later studying at the Central Normal College. After completing his studies at Danville, he taught school for two terms. On April 22, 1883, he was united in marriage with Della Appleby, born in Owen county, this state, the daughter of John and Rachael (Reitzel) Appleby, both of whom were reared in Hendricks county and were descendants of some of the earliest pioneer families of this locality. John Appleby was a farmer and lived for a time in Owen and Greene counties, later returning to this county about the year 1880. For one year he lived on the John

V. Hadley farm, also resided near Belleville and later near Plainfield and finally purchased a farm near Avon, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring there, where his widow continues to live.

After marriage, Mr. Edmondson went to farming for himself, spending about twelve years in Morgan county, where he purchased one hundred acres of land to begin with and has since added fifty-four more. He also owns more land adjoining it on this side of the county line. In the fall of 1805 he purchased a farm of thirty-six acres about a half mile south of Clayton, near where his boyhood days were passed, and there he erected a comfortable home right in the midst of a beautiful walnut grove, where he has since resided. Later he added eighty-five more acres to this tract and in all is possessed of some three hundred and fifty acres of land, all in an excellent state of cultivation, each acre attesting to the ability of the owner and marking him as one of the most up-to-date agriculturists of the county. In addition to his farming interests, Mr. Edmondson finds time to devote to other lines and since 1888 has been a notary public and has served several times as executor or administrator of estates. During the summer of 1012 he took an active part in organizing the People's Bank and Trust Company of Clayton, which institution he has served as president since its organization. This company opened for business October 16, 1012, Clement Earl Kelley having been largely instrumental in bringing it into existence. The officers of the company are R. A. Edmondson, president; Amos L. Mitchell, vice-president; C. E. Kelley, cashier. The directors are R. A. Edmondson, Amos L. Mitchell, William G. Peck, W. F. Martin, Charles B. Worrell and Charles M. West. The company does a regular banking business and also acts as administrator, executor or trustee, sells insurance and deals in real estate, etc. The capital stock is twenty-five thousand dollars, fully paid up, and the total assets in September, 1913, were nearly ninety thousand dollars. It owns its own building, built expressly for its occupancy and being a thoroughly modern business block.

Politically, Mr. Edmondson is a Democrat and active in local politics. In 1900 he was elected trustee of Liberty township, this county, which office he held a little over four years, his term expiring January 1, 1905. He was the first Democrat to be elected trustee of that township, receiving a majority of sixty-five votes, when previously it had been going to the opposition by a majority of something near two hundred. Mr. Edmondson, therefore, was entitled to feel some elation over his victory, which was a distinct tribute to the popularity which he so richly deserves.

To Mr. and Mrs. Edmondson have been born five sons, the eldest, Clarence Virgil, who married Mary Hopkins, residing two miles south of Clayton on the national road, where he is engaged in farming. He has two children, Walter and Esther. John Benjamin married Pearl Richardson and lives on the southern line of this county, where he owns a home of his own and is engaged in farming. He graduated from the agricultural department of Purdue University in 1911, and spent one year under the state geologist in soil survey work in Owen and Morgan counties and for one year was assistant editor of the Farmers' Guide, a periodical published at Huntington, this state. Ralph W. married Osie Scott and lives on the subject's farm in the northern edge of Morgan county, which farm he operates in connection with his father. He is the father of one son, Lowell Robert. Samuel is attending Purdue University and will graduate in the spring of 1914 from the agricultural department, and Roy is also taking the agricultural course at the same university.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Edmondson are members of the Presbyterian church at Clayton, to which they contribute liberally of their means, having a sincere desire in seeing the rapid advancement of that society. Fraternally, Mr. Edmondson is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the workings of which order he takes a quiet interest. He is a man of excellent business ability, strict integrity and fine personal address and, because of his genuine worth and high character, he has long enjoyed a splendid reputation in the community honored by his residence. He gives his support to all movements for the advancement of his fellow citizens and is today numbered among the representative men of Hendricks county.

COLUMBUS F. EDMONSON.

The biographer takes pleasure in presenting a few facts in the career of the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, one of the best known citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, who by industry, perseverance and integrity has won for himself an enviable position in the financial standing of the community, and at the same time has so closely followed the correct principles of life that he stands today high in public estimation and regard. He has worked his way from an humble beginning to his present situation, which fact renders him the more worthy of the praise that is duly accorded him by his fellow men.

Columbus F. Edmonson is a native of Hendricks county, having been born in 1854 about two miles south of Clayton, the son of Benjamin G. Edmonson and wife, the sketch of whose lives appear at length elsewhere in this volume. The subject remained on the home farm until the time of his marriage on September 9, 1877, to Amy Thrift. She was born near Mount Ayer, Ringgold county, Iowa, the daughter of James and Sarah rane (Brown) Thrift. Both her parents were born and reared in North Carolina. being natives of Randolph county, and were married before coming to the Hoosier state, where, in 1856, they located in Hendricks county in Eel River township, near North Salem. James Thrift was a son of David and Lydia (Parsons) Thrift, and his wife, Sarah Jane Brown, was the daughter of William and Susan Brown, all of whom were natives of North Carolina and came to this county at the same time. The Browns located near Avon and the thrifts in Eel River township. James Thrift and wife moved to Iowa after a short residence here, but returned because of his mother's failing health. After his mother's death, they returned to Iowa, where he purchased a farm and passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1899. His widow returned to this county and made her home with the subject and wife until the time of her death, March 13, 1013. Mrs. Edmonson remained with her parents in Iowa until the time of her marriage to the subject, after which event they began farming for themselves on a farm owned by Mr. Edmonson's father, which was located about two and one-half miles south of Clayton. There they remained until 1879, when they bought the Mitchell farm of one hundred and seven acres on the National road, where they remained until 1905, at which time they moved to Clayton, where they have since resided. Mr. Edmonson has been signally successful in his endeavors and has acquired considerable real estate. He has in all about two hundred and eighty acres in his homestead south of Clayton, he owns two hundred and sixty acres in Henry county near New Castle and is also interested in the Coldwater Land Company, which corporation owns cotton lands in the Mississippi delta. In addition to his general farming, he for many years bought and shipped live stock and became widely known in this connection. He is now actively interested in lumber yards located at Amo and Ben Davis, this county.

To Mr. and Mrs. Edmonson have been born four children. Alva, the eldest, married Florence Hanna, of Plainfield, daughter of Congressman Hanna. They reside in Chicago, where he is associated with the White Steamer Automobile Company as a salesman. He received his early education in the schools of Liberty township, later graduating from Plainfield Academy. He then entered the mechanical engineering department of Purdue University, having been graduated therefrom in 1904, when he immediately became associated with the automobile company above mentioned. He is the father of one little daughter, Cornelia. Blanche, eldest daughter of Mr. Edmonson, attended Milliken University at Decatur, Illinois, after graduating from Plainfield Academy. She is the wife of Walter Thompson and lives on a farm on the National road. She is the mother of two children, Elizabeth and Luanna. Frank, who was graduated from Purdue University in 1909, is also engaged in farming, being located about two and one-half miles southwest of Clayton. He married Ollie Swearingen, of Mooresville. Ruth, the youngest daughter, is at present attending high school at Clayton.

The family is one of the most highly esteemed of the community, being known as people of broad minds and laudable ambitions, and many are the influences for good which radiate from their home circle. The family is identified with the Presbyterian church, of which both Mr. and Mrs. Edmonson are members and to the support of which they contribute generously. Mr. Edmonson's fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he has been a member for some time. He is aligned with the Democratic party and takes a keen interest in the administration of that party's affairs. While not desiring office for himself, he is known to wield a definite influence at the polls and is, therefore, reckoned with by those seeking the honor of public service. Mr. Edmonson has always been regarded as a man of high principles, honest in every respect and broad-minded. A man of good character, kindness of heart and ever willing to aid in any way any cause for the betterment of the community and the public with whom he has to deal, he is held in high favor and the utmost respect by all who know him.

JOHN H. BUNTEN, JR.

That the plenitude of satiety is seldom attained in the affairs of life is to be considered a most beneficial deprivation, for where ambition is satisfied and every ultimate end realized, if such be possible, apathy must follow. Effort would cease, accomplishment be prostrate, and creative talent waste its energies in inactivity. The men who have pushed forward the wheels of progress have been those to whom satisfaction lies ever in the future, who have labored continuously, always finding in each transition stage an incentive for further effort. Mr. Bunten is one whose well-directed efforts have gained for him a position of desirable prominence in the agricultural circles of Hendricks county, and his energy and enterprise have been crowned by a gratifying degree of success.

John H. Bunten, Ir., one of the most prominent stock breeders in central Indiana, was born September 2, 1869, in the township where he has resided all his life. His parents were John and Rebecca (Call) Bunten, his father being a native of Kentucky, coming to this county with his parents when he was five years of age. John Bunten, Sr., was born in 1818, and when his parents came to Marion townhip, this county, in 1823, his father, William Bunten, entered six hundred and forty acres of land from the government, where John H. now lives. John Bunten, Sr., married Rebecca Call, the daughter of John and Julia Call, who also were natives of Kentucky. They came to this township early in its history and entered a large tract of land here. John Bunten, Sr., died in 1895, and his wife passed away at the age of eighty. They reared a family of twelve children, eight of whom are still living: Mrs. Anna M. Wright; Laura B.; Elmer, deceased; Oliver M., deceased; John H., the immediate subject of this sketch; Nora M., deceased; Thomas O.; Edgar, deceased; Alice R.; Obediah; Roscoe G., and one who died in infancy. Laura B. Bunten is a successful breeder of pure-bred Buff Rock and Buff Orpington chickens.

John H. Bunten has never married and now lives with his sister, Laura B., on the old homestead farm. He received his common school education in the district schools of Hendricks county, and has spent his entire life on the farm where he was born. He has made a fine reputation as a breeder of fine live stock and makes a specialty of Poland-China hogs, handling only the best and purest breeds. He also handles Shropshire sheep and keeps his herd to a high state of efficiency. For several years he also kept pedigreed Shorthorn cattle, but recently disposed of his herd and now deals only in hogs and sheep. He has yearly sales for his stock, at which there are large crowds of buyers present and high prices are paid for his stock. He advertises his sales widely and thus brings together prominent buyers from all parts of the state, who are anxious to secure some of his well bred stock. Mr. Bunten is considered an expert judge of hogs and is a member of the National Association of Poland-China Breeders. On his farm of two hundred acres he raises considerable grain and other crops, but his main attention is devoted to live stock.

Mr. Bunten is Republican in politics, but has never taken an active interest in the affairs of his party. He has never felt inclined to indulge in the various political fights which feature campaigns, preferring to devote his attention to his live stock and other interests. He is well known throughout the county and is regarded everywhere as a man of his word and one whose integrity is never questioned in the slightest degree. He is a quiet, unassuming and genial man and has many warm personal friends throughout the county. His sister, who lives with him, is also interested in the success of her brother and has contributed in no small measure to his success. They are very hospitable people and are highly esteemed by every one in their neighborhood.

AMOS L. MITCHELL.

Although not an old man in years, the gentleman whose life record is herein outlined has in no uncertain manner stamped his individuality upon the locality where he resides, being an excellent representative of that type of the much-heralded American business man—the type that does things. He is one of the most progressive agriculturists of the county, conducting his business along lines approved by science and good usage. He believes that for a greater amount of money invested in a business and properly managed, one earns a greater per cent. of profit, and, therefore, all facilities for the conduct of his business are the most up-to-date obtainable. There are individuals in every community who, by reason of pronounced ability and force of character, rise above the heads of the masses and command the unbounded esteem of their fellow men. Characterized by perseverance and a directing spirit, two virtues that never fail, such men always make their presence felt and the vigor of their strong personality serves as a stimulus and incentive to the voung and rising generation. To this energetic and enterprising class the subject of this review very properly belongs.

Amos L. Mitchell was born on October 21, 1871, in Liberty township, this county, the son of William C. and Elizabeth (Wills) Mitchell. William Mitchell was a native of Tennessee and when five years old was brought to this state by his parents, Samuel and Polly Mitchell. The family settled in Liberty township, where Samuel engaged in farming. He was also a minister of the Presbyterian church and preached in Hendricks and Carroll counties. He later moved to Carroll county and there his death occurred as a result of injuries received in a runaway accident. His son William, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, passed the days of his boyhood and youth in Liberty township and all his life was engaged in farming. During the dark days of the sixties he gave three years of service to the Union. He enlisted as lieutenant of Company C. Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and a short time after enlistment was made captain. His regiment was part of the division known as the Army of the Potomac and went all through the various engagements of the Cumberland campaign, later going with General Sherman on the famous march to the sea. He received his honorable discharge from the army in July, 1865, and immediately returned to his home in this county, where he gathered up the threads of life where he had laid them down to answer the nation's call. He owned a farm of two hundred and forty acres and there lived out the remaining number of his days. In this farm the subject of this sketch now owns a half interest. William Mitchell's death occurred in 1807, in his sixty-third year. He was the father of seven children. Those, beside the subject and a little son Alva, who died in infancy, are: Mary L. (Mrs. Candy); Charles, deceased; Nanny Garrison (Mrs. Reid), who is now a widow; Howard, and Belle, who married Vinson S. Hamlin and lives west of Clayton. In his early manhood Mr. Mitchell had united with the ancient order of Freemasonry, in which order he kept his membership until a short time before his death. He was also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and his religious affiliation was with the Presbyterian church. Politically, he was a Democrat, but had never taken an active interest in politics.

Amos L. Mitchell spent his early days on his father's farm, learning from him the secrets of successful husbandry and in his boyhood days attended the district schools of the township, where he received his elementary education. Later in life he took the three-year philosophical course at De-Pauw University, Greencastle, this state. He chose farming as his life's vocation and all his efforts have been expended along this and kindred lines. In addition to his home farm, located a short distance north of Clayton and comprising some hundred and twenty acres, he also owns three hundred acres of cypress timbered land in Obion county, western Tennessee. About one hundred and sixty acres of this is now under cultivation, the entire acreage being turned to the production of cotton. His home farm is in perfect condition, showing the master mind, and all buildings, etc., are in the best possible condition and thoroughly modern. On this farm is what is considered the best barn in the county. In it is every possible convenience, including two large silos and a modern machine milker. Mr. Mitchell operates a fine Holstein dairy, having sixty-six head of partly pure bred stock. On January 1, 1914, he purchased at Toledo. Ohio, a number of these fine bred cattle, which came to him from one of the famous homes of the breed in Canada. In addition to his dairy herd, he is also a breeder and has some fine specimens of this excellent breed to dispose of. Mr. Mitchell is progressive in every sense of the word and this, coupled with his untiring energy and high ambition, marks him as a business man of unusual ability. He is a man of genial temperament and a most delightful companion. He is a friend to all and gladly extends a helping hand wherever he sees an opportunity to do good. Any cause having as its object the promotion of the moral, social or educational life of the community finds in him an earnest advocate and, needless to add, such a man stands high in public estimation, while by a large number of close friends he is held in warm regard.

On October 2, 1896, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Myrtle Rains, daughter of Hiram and Sarah (Owen) Rains. She is the grand-daughter of Hiram Rains and is his adopted daughter, having been adopted by him at the age of nine months. To Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have been born two sons, Owen and Richard. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell are earnest and sincere members of the Presbyterian church at Clayton and give liberally toward the support of the local society. Mr. Mitchell is a Democrat, but does not find much time to devote to his party, having his hands well filled with his large and growing business.

MARK MILLS SHORT.

Among the best-known citizens of Hendricks county is the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. A member of one of the old and highly esteemed families of this part of the state, he is a public-spirited man of affairs and, while still young in years, has stamped the impress of his individuality upon the community and added luster to the honorable name which he bears. Always scrupulously honest in all his relations with his fellow men, he has left no stone unturned whereby he might benefit his own condition as well as that of his neighbors and friends and consequently he has long ago won the favor of a great number of people of this county. Among the progressive young business men of this section, there is none who stand higher than he and, in view of what he has already accomplished, it is safe to predict that his kindly influence will grow through the coming years, bringing still greater good to the locality honored by his residence.

Mark M. Short was born on May 22, 1870, in Center township, this county, the family at that time residing just north of Clayton, and is the son of Benjamin Franklin and Lydia Jane (Coble) Short, the former of whom first saw the light of day on June 24, 1834, at Centerville, Wayne county, this state, and the latter being a native of this county, born on March 31. 1843, on what used to be known as the Coble farm, located about three miles east of Stilesville. Benjamin Franklin Short was the third in a family of seven children, and, when a small child, was taken by his parents to Missouri, where for a year they resided near Hannibal. However, being dissatisfied with the conditions of that region, they returned to the Hoosier state, this time taking up their residence in Hendricks county, where the family since resided. He attended the early subscription schools of his day, pursuing his search after knowledge alone and unaided through many difficult subjects, and when a young man he labored as an instructor of youth, beginning first at Hall, Morgan county, in 1857 and later teaching at the Lake David, Christie and Spicklemire school houses, all being old educational landmarks. He later gave his attention to farming, at which he passed the majority of his years, and a few years before his death he retired from active labor on the farm and became a citizen of Clayton, there to pass his remaining years in quietude. He passed from this life on October 2, 1908, being in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was twice married, his first wife being Mary A. Stephenson, to whom he was united on September 2, 1858. She died at Danville on February 15, 1872, their union being without issue. On April 13, 1873, Mr. Short was again united in marriage, his bride being Lydia I. Coble. To their union were born three children, namely: Otis William, now living in Missouri; Charlees Young, who lives in Coatesville, this county. and the immediate subject of this sketch. At his death these three sons and the widow survived. For many years he had been a devout member of the Christian church and ordered his life in accordance with the tenets of that faith

Lydia Jane Coble, mother of the subject, was the youngest in a family of ten children, being the daughter of George and Mary Coble. She was of a quiet, retiring disposition and of great strength of character. When young she availed herself of all possible opportunities for improvement and acquired a good general education as well as skill in all the arts and duties that fall within the sphere of a devoted wife and mother. On December 4, 1865, she united with the Cherry Grove Methodist Episcopal church, later transferring her membership to the Clayton church when they took up their residence there, and remained a devout and faithful member of the church militant until her passing away. After the death of her husband, she remained in her home in Clayton until failing health made her dependent on the loving care of children. She died March 17, 1911, in her sixty-eighth year. She had lived to see her sons established in life, and, happy in their happiness, had been content to go the way of all mankind. She was also survived by a brother, Elihu Coble, of Stilesville, and a sister, Mrs. John Worrell, of Clayton.

Mark M. Short spent his boyhood days on the homestead farm in Center township, near the Liberty township line. He attended the district schools of that locality, where he received his elementary education, finishing his studies at Clayton. In 1805 he left Center township and moved north of Clayton, where he farmed for about one year, when he disposed of his holdings and moved to Clayton. On September 11, 1901, Mr. Short was united in marriage with Ruth A., daughter of Thomas I, and Tilitha (Tudor) Miles. After marriage he took up his residence on the farm where he now makes his home and carries on general farming in addition to operating a dairy. He owns in all about three hundred acres of land, seventyfive of this being in his residence farm. In addition to his farm duties, he owns and operates the health resort known as Camp Short, located on his farm about three miles northeast of Clayton. This is a beautiful spot, in an ideal stretch of country, and is known for its sparkling spring of artesian water of rare qualities. There are many visitors to this place throughout the year who come for the waters and Mr. Short now has a summer home there. It is a very attractive place and especially conducive to recreation during the summer season.

Mr. Short's fraternal affiliations are with the Free and Accepted Masons and also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holding his membership in these two bodies through the local lodges at Clayton. In politics, Mr. Short is a "stand-pat" Republican and an earnest advocate of the principles of that party, although not taking any active part in the administration of his party's affairs. He is a man of quiet and retiring disposition, but genial and friendly and counts his friends and acquaintances in great numbers. The family is regarded among the first of their community, a charming family circle wherein the two children, Paul M. and Helen L., are being trained so as to fit them for useful and happy lives when they come to years of maturity. Mr. Short is a man of sterling honesty and strict integrity who has the trust and confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. His past record and personal character justify the belief that the future holds in store for him far greater success than he has already achieved and a wider range of usefulness to mankind than has yet been his privilege.

THOMAS HOWARD MITCHELL

Almost all of the great men of history come from the farm. Few heroes have come from the slums and fewer still from palaces. To call a man a farmer is to class him in the same scale as George Washington, our first President; Abraham Lincoln, our martyred President, or any one of a dozen governors of Indiana. It is plain common folk who have characteristics. In cultured, select society every one is alike; they all appear to have been poured into the same mold. In a wealthy club all men's clothes are new, they all look alike, and especially since they are all cut by the most fashionable tailors, while among people who have but one week-day suit the garment becomes creased and molded to the body. Indeed, it is the farmer who is to save our nation today, as his is the hand which holds the purse-strings of the land.

Thomas Howard Mitchell, the son of Columbus and Elizabeth (Wills) Mitchell, was born May 22, 1869, on the National road south of Clayton, Hendricks county, Indiana. Since the family history of the Mitchells has been traced in the sketch of Amos Mitchell, a brother of Thomas H., in another part of this volume, the reader is referred to that sketch for the genealogy of the Mitchell family.

Thomas H. Mitchell has lived all of his life on the farm where he was born. He received a good, common-school education and early began the life of a farmer, and is now the owner of one bundred and twenty acres of land which he has well improved in every way. While raising all the crops common to this locality, he has made a specialty of the dairy business. He keeps thoroughbred Holstein cattle for his dairy herd, and has a barn which has been built especially for dairy purposes. It is equipped with all the modern conveniences and contrivances for the sanitary protection of milk. He has patent milking machines installed in his barn and this is the only dairy in the township which has them. His equipment in the barn is run by gas engines. In addition to his farming and dairying, he also manages a threshing machine outfit during the summer season, and for the past four years has added not a little to his annual income from the operation of this outfit.

Mr. Mitchell was married September 30, 1891, to Ella Givan, the daughter of George M. and Ann Givan. George Givan was born June 19, 1827, in Dearborn county, Indiana, and was a lifelong farmer and carpenter. His parents were Gilbert T. and Sarah (Merrill) Givan, who were natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively. They came to Dearborn county, Indiana, early in its history and lived on a farm there for over fifty years

George Givan died May 29, 1906, his wife having passed away several years previous, on November 11, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. George Givan were the parents of eleven children, John F., Mrs. Mary Bell Bruce, Sanford E., Mrs. Harriet J. Smith, Sarah E., Mrs. Eva A. Farquer, Charles M., Mrs. Ella J. Mitchell (the wife of Thomas H. Mitchell), Harry R., Erving, deceased, and Mrs. Cora A. Slater.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have one child, Carl Columbus, born April 26, 1894, who is still with his parents. The family are all members of the Presbyterian church at Clayton, Indiana, and Mr. Mitchell has been an elder in the church for the past ten years. Politically, he is a Democrat, but has never been inclined to take a very active part in politics. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and is now serving his fourth year as master of the lodge at Clayton. He is a man of splendid characteristics which have won for him a wide circle of friends in the community where he has lived his whole career.

SAMUEL BARBER.

A review of the life of the honored subject of this biographical sketch must of necessity be brief and general in its character. To enter fully into the interesting details of the career of Mr. Barber, touching the earnest and persistent efforts of his earlier years and successes of later days, would far transcend the limits of this article. He has filled a large place in the ranks of the enterprising and public-spirited men of his day and has been an important factor in the growth and development of North Salem's industrial and commercial interests.

Samuel Barber, a prominent retired business man of North Salem, Indiana, was born April 25, 1840, in Montgomery county, this state, the son of John and Annie (Cunningham) Barber, both of whom were born in Botetourt county, Virginia, where they grew up and where they were married. Shortly after their marriage, they came to Indiana and entered government land near Ladoga, Montgomery county, where they lived for about thirty-five years. Some years before the Civil War they came to Hendricks county and settled about one and one-half miles north of North Salem, but after a short time they went back to Montgomery county, and still later went to Boone county, this state, where they located on a farm near Jamestown, where they lived for the remainder of their lives. John Barber and his wife were the parents of two children, Samuel and Eliza. Eliza married Roland Alexander and died about the year 1878.

Samuel Barber lived with his parents until his marriage, at the age of twenty. He was married September 9, 1860, to Mary Ann Robbins, a native of North Carolina. Her parents, Jacob and Barbara Robbins, came from North Carolina and settled three miles south of North Salem when Mrs. Barber was only about one year old. After his marriage Mr. Barber operated a farm near North Salem for about fifteen years, after which he engaged in the lumber business at North Salem, which he followed for the rest of his active life. He was in partnership with F. M. Davis until the latter's death, which occurred in 1887, and from that time until 1909 he managed the business alone. In the latter year Smith Davis became a partner and the business is still continued under the firm name of Barber & Davis. In addition to his lumber interests, Mr. Barber owns a farm of eighty acres north of North Salem, and also formerly owned two hundred acres of good land in addition, which he gave to his daughter, Annie, the only child of his first marriage. The first wife of Mr. Barber died July 9, 1908, and on February 2, 1910, Mr. Barber married Mrs. Mary Jane Cusick, the widow of Joseph Cusick, who was born at Freeburg, near Belleville, Illinois, the daughter of George W. and Martha (Smith) Smith. In 1865 her parents moved to Douglas county, Illinois, where she grew to womanhood and married Mr. Cusick. After her marriage she lived at Terre Haute until her husband died, in July, 1907, after which she moved to Newman, Illinois, where she remained until her marriage to Mr. Barber. Annie, the only child of Mr. Barber, married Elbert Hays, and has one daughter, Hattie. Mr. and Mrs. Hays live on the home farm of Mr. Barber which he bought.

Mr. Barber has been a life-long Republican in politics, and has always taken an active part in the councils of his party. He and his wife are consistent members of the Christian church and he is a member of the board of trustees. For a man of seventy-four years, Mr. Barber is remarkably well preserved and active, and would easily pass for a man twenty years younger. His long life in this community has made him an influential factor in the growth of the town and vicinity and because he has always been ready to lend his aid and support to all laudable measures and enterprises for the welfare of his community, he is very popular with the people of his town and vicinity.

JOHN C. RYNERSON.

It is always pleasant and profitable to contemplate the career of a man who has won a definite goal in life, whose career has been such as to command the honor and respect of his fellow citizens. Such, in brief, was the record of the well-known agriculturist whose name heads this sketch, than whom a more whole-souled or popular man it would be difficult to find within the limits of Hendricks county, where he maintained his home and where he labored not only for his individual advancement and that of his immediate family, but also for the improvement of the entire community, whose interests he ever had at heart.

John C. Rynerson, whose death occurred on May 17, 1914, was born on March 7, 1835, in Liberty township, this county, the son of John and Elizabeth (Cunningham) Rynerson, the former of whom was a native of Salt River, Mercer county, Kentucky, and was a life-long farmer. He was born in Kentucky in 1795 and died in Owen county, this state, in 1864, at the age of sixty-nine years. When he first came to Hendricks county it is thought that he probably entered government land about one mile northeast of Clayton. He later returned to Kentucky, but after a short time again came to Indiana, this time locating in Belleville, this county, at the time when the immediate subject of this sketch was four years old. In addition to his duties as a farmer, he was a minister in the Missionary Baptist church, devoting all the time possible to the work of the Gospel in different counties in the state. He took an active part in politics during the dark days of the Civil War and was an extremist against slavery. He was a stanch Republican, being among the first to affiliate with the party at its birth. He never held any offices, but was at one time active in the race for delegate to the constitutional convention. He did not belong to any secret orders, giving all his time to his ministerial labors and the work of conducting his farm. He had an excellent farm in Liberty township, which he had wrested from the grasp of the wilderness. He was twice married, his first wife being Elizabeth Cunningham, by whom he became the father of eleven children, namely: William L., deceased, as are also James H. and Thomas Christopher. The fourth child was Ary Adeline (Mrs. Willis) and the fifth child in order of birth was the immediate subject of this sketch. Mary Ann (Mrs. Worrell), Sarah Frances (Mrs. Worrell), Laura (Mrs. Goss), and Elizabeth (Mrs. Moon), all deceased. Two other daughters are Jane (Mrs. Worrell) and Martha (Mrs. Cooper). The first Mrs. Rynerson was a native of Mercer county, Kentucky, and died at the age of forty-one years, in 1853. Her parents were also natives of the same county in Kentucky.

Mr. Rynerson chose as his second wife Sarah Goss, daughter of George and Mary (Goss) Goss, both of whom were natives of Owen county, this state. To this union were born five children, three of whom are dead. These are Justin, Jessie (Mrs. Eaton) and Eddie (Mrs. Goss); the surviving members of the family are Merlin and George.

John C. Rynerson received his schooling in the township schools of this county and when quite young began to take an active interest in the home farm. He has devoted the entire efforts of his life to the vocation of farming and is unusually well informed along this line. He owns one hundred and three acres of excellent land located close to the Pennsylvania railroad tracks in Liberty township, this county.

On October 24, 1860, Mr. Rynerson was united in wedlock with Sarah Jane, daughter of James and Salinda (Darnell) Ferguson, the former of whom was a native of Virginia and the latter born at Mount Sterling, Kentucky. He was a carpenter and also farmed some. When but fourteen years of age, he came with his father from their native state. He was born in 1816 and died in Liberty township in 1872. With his parents he settled about two miles northeast of Clayton. On February 28, 1839, he was united in marriage with Salinda Darnell, whose parents had come to the Hoosier state from Mount Sterling, Kentucky. Her death occurred in 1863 on the homestead in Liberty township. They were the parents of nine children, the eldest of whom was Sarah Jane, wife of the immediate subject of this sketch; Martha A. (Mrs. Jackson), Frank C., Mary (Mrs. Robinson), Alonzo, all of whom are living. Those who have passed away are Louisa E. (Mrs. Haynes), Alice (Mrs. Thompson), Enma, who died when seven years old, and one babe which died in early infancy.

To Mr. and Mrs. Rynerson have been born a family of seven children, two of whom, John Lucien and Jennie Belle, died when young. Viola, the eldest daughter, married Milo McCormick, who is a farmer and trader and resides in Clayton. They have no family. Minnie became the wife of Ora Mountain (now deceased), a hardware and implement merchant at Clayton. He died in 1913, leaving two children, Paul and Carl, both of whom reside at home and Paul now manages the business for the widow. Elizabeth is the wife of John Lucas, of Des Moines, Iowa. He is now retired from active labors, but has filled various offices for the past sixteen years, being ex-treasurer of his county. They are the parents of two children, Noble and Chester. William took as his wife Anna Downing and they have two children, Hazel and Calvin. He is an operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company and is at present stationed somewhere in Colorado. Ernest married Maude Pruitt and lives on his father's farm in Liberty township. He is the father of one son, Max.

Mr. Rynerson's political affiliation was for many years with the Republican party. His first vote after reaching his majority was cast for Fremont. the Republican nominee for President in 1856, and during his earlier manhood he was a most enthusiastic Republican, but of later years he has been, rather independent in his politics, choosing the man in preference to the party or platform. Mr. Rynerson is a member of the Christian church at Clayton and, together with his wife, does all within his power to promote the cause of the church. He has served his society as deacon for many years. His fraternal affiliation is with the ancient order of Freemasonry, being a member of Lodge No. 463 at Clayton. Mr. Rynerson is a man of unusually fine character, standing "four-square to every wind that blows." His is a well-rounded and useful life, showing true blue in all his relations with his fellow men. He is quiet and unassuming, a man of sterling qualities and well grounded principles, and during the years of his residence here he has endeared himself to a great circle of friends and acquaintances who regard him with all confidence and esteem. While Mr. Rynerson has exceeded man's allotted span of three score-years and ten, being seventy-nine years old at this time, he is hale and hearty, unusually well preserved both bodily and mentally.

DAVID B. WILLS.

David B. Wills belongs to that class of men who win in life's battles by sheer force of personality and determination, rather than by the influence of friends or freak of fortune, and in whatever he has undertaken he has shown himself to be a man of ability and honor, true to whatever trusts have been imposed in him. Mr. Wills was born in Clayton, Hendricks county, Indiana, on October 25, 1856, the son of Amos Stewart and Lucinda (Tateman) Wills.

Amos S. Wills was born in Montgomery county, Kentucky, in 1809, and came to Hendricks county in 1831 where he settled north of Clayton and entered land from the government. He had received a fairly good education in his native state and was by natural ability a leader among men. He was a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and a devout member of the ancient order of Freemasonry, of which order he became a member soon after attaining his majority. Prior to coming to this state, he was united in marriage with Lucinda Tateman, born in his native county on May 8, 1815. Shortly after coming to Hendricks county, Mr. Wills was elected to the office of justice of the peace, which office he held for sixty consecutive years, a truly enviable record. So wise and impartial was he in his administration of justice that in all his years of service he had never had a decision of his reversed on appeal. His death occurred at Clayton in 1802. and was a distinct loss to the community. In every community some men are known for their upright lives, strong common sense and moral worth. rather than for their wealth or political standing. Their neighbors and acquaintances respect them, the younger generations heed their examples and when they "wrap the drapery of their couch about them and lie down to pleasant dreams," posterity listens with reverence to the story of their quiet and useful lives. Among such men of a past generation in Indiana was the late Amos Stewart Wills, who was not only a progressive man of affairs, but a man of modest and unassuming demeanor, a fine type of the reliable, selfmade American, a friend to the poor, charitable to the faults of his neighbors and who always stood ready to unite with them in every good work and active in the support of laudable public interests. He was proud of the grand state of Indiana and zealous of its progress and prosperity. He was a man who in every respect merited the high esteem in which he was universally held, for he was a man of public spirit, intellectual attainments and exemplary character. During the latter years of his life, both he and his good wife made their home in Clayton with the immediate subject of this sketch, and there she, too, passed away in 1897. While Amos S. Wills never united with any church, yet throughout his life he lived the life of a devout Christian and no communicant could order his life more carefully nor more in conformity with the principles laid down by the Master than did he. He was a regular attendant on the services of the Christian church and contributed liberally of both time and means to further the great cause. In all his activities in this direction he was ably assisted by his devoted wife. They were the parents of thirteen children, one of whom, William Henry Harrison, died in infancy and Lena Leota passed away at the age of sixteen years. Several others of the family have passed away, being James Irwin, Elizabeth (Mrs. Mitchell), John W., Parker, Mary Ruth and another infant. Those remaining, in addition to the immediate subject of this sketch, are Eldridge, Nancy Jane (Mrs. Garrison), Taylor Allen and Lilly Belle (Mrs. Farquer).

David B. Wills passed the years of his early boyhood on the home farm, attending the township schools and assisting in the home work. Deciding against the vocation of farming as his life work, at the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, which he followed for nearly thirty years, confining his efforts largely to work within the limits of this county. About 1901 he associated himself with a partner and engaged in the lumber business, later purchasing his partner's interest. He has continued alone in this enterprise and by his ability and energy has built up a large and thriving business. Mr. Wills is a worthy son of his excellent father and has come to his position as one of the leading business men of Clayton through the practice of the principles implanted in him during his childhood. Mr. Wills' religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian church, of which he is an active and devout member. His fraternal affiliation is with the Free and Accepted Masons, being a member of Lodge No. 463 at Clayton. Politically, he is a Republican with decidedly progressive views. His integrity has ever been unassailable, his honor unimpeachable, and he stands now, as he has stood in the past, one of the successful men and representative citizens of the day and generation. He is a busy man, but he finds time and opportunity to take an interest in matters pertaining to the progress and growth of his community and county and keeps abreast of the times on all questions of vital interest. Mr. and Mrs. Wills are the parents of seven children, three of whom have passed away. These are Carl, Esther and Helen, who died in infancy. The others are Eva, Luella, George and Frank, the last three named remaining at home.

LEANDER M. CAMPBELL.

The gift of life is so mysterious that when that other mystery which we call death interrupts the current of human hopes and aspirations, we know not in what new channel the spirit may be turned, but if the life has been characterized by uprightness and honor everything that it has touched in its onward passage must have received a beneficent inspiration.

In the various relations of life the late Leander M. Campbell, of Danville, gave to the world the best of an essentially strong, noble and loyal nature; his life was guided and governed by the highest principles of integrity and honor; he was humanity's friend and his nature was attuned to tolerance and sympathy. Mr. Campbell was a pioneer member of the Hendricks county bar, and for a long lapse of years he was recognized as one of the leaders of his profession, figuring prominently in nearly all the important litigation of the county. His fine capabilities and upright character endeared him to a large circle of friends, and he was honored by a lucrative clientele and called to positions of high official trust, being at different times a member of both houses of the Indiana Legislature.

Leander M. Campbell was a native of Lewis county, Kentucky, born February 12, 1833, and he was a son of Lewis and Susan Campbell, both of whom died in the state of Kentucky. Leander was educated in the common schools of his community, and studied law with his brother in Maysville, Kentucky. He came to Indiana before attaining his legal majority, and settled on section 17 in Middle township, Hendricks county, in 1852. He was too young to be admitted to the bar, and so he taught school for a few years, being at one time principal of the Belleville school. A few years later he was admitted to the bar and was actively engaged in the practice of his profession up to the time of his death. As a lawver he showed abilities of the most solid and definite order, gaining success by close application and the effective employment of his talents, and ever observing those unwritten ethics through whose influence the dignity and honor of the profession are maintained. He was not long in attending high prestige as one of the representative members of the bar of Hendricks county, a bar notable at the present time, as in the past, for the professional brilliancy and marked precedence of its general personnel. Broad and comprehensive knowledge of the law and a distinct facility in its application, both as a trial lawyer and a counselor, enabled him to build up a very substantial practice. This success in the work of his profession was cumulative and his prestige grew apace, so that at the time of his death he stood in the front ranks as a lawyer.

As a citizen Mr. Campbell occupied an equally high place in the community, being ever mindful of those moral obligations that the highest citizenship entails. His long residence in the county gave him an extensive acquaintance and endeared him to many people who will be moved to appreciation and admiration of this brief tribute to a man essentially simple and unostentatious in his tastes and habits, one of the world's faithful and productive workers whose success was worthily won.

Leander M. Campbell was first married September 19, 1852, to Matilda Hammond, by whom he had four children, only one of whom is now living, Mrs. Cora Campbell Barnett, of Indianapolis. On June 15, 1867, he was married to Lucinda Hamrick, a daughter of A. D. and Eliza (Simpson) Hamrick, both natives of Mason county, Kentucky. The Hamrick family is one of the most prominent families of Putnam county, Indiana, members of the family figuring largely in the political and civic life of the county for several generations. A. D. Hamrick was a prosperous farmer and lived to the venerable age of ninety-two. He was a prominent politician and Republican party worker, being a special friend of Governor Oliver P. Morton. His father was in the Revolutionary War.

Leander M. Campbell was a stalwart in the camp of the Republican party, and he was an effective exponent of its principles and policies. Fraternally, he was a prominent Odd Fellow. Mr. Campbell died at his home in Danville June 16, 1890. Mrs. Campbell, a woman of rare culture and charming personality, still resides in the Danville home, a home endeared to her by the associations of the past, long known for its generous and refined hospitality.

Viewed in its clear perspective, the life of Leander M. Campbell counted for much. He made for himself a secure place in popular confidence and esteem, and while he now rests from his labors, his name is graven deeply in the hearts of a legion of friends who came in touch with his large and generous influence.

JONATHAN F. PHILLIPS.

In placing the late Jonathan F. Phillips in the front rank of the leading men of his community, justice is rendered a biographical fact universally recognized throughout the locality long honored by his citizenship by those at all familiar with his history. Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, he contributed much to the material, civic and moral advancement of his community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart and the straightforward, upright course of his daily life won for him the esteem and confidence of the circles in which he moved, and, although he is now sleeping the "sleep of the just," his influence still lives and his memory is greatly revered.

Jonathan F. Phillips, who was the owner of one hundred and rifty acres of fine farming land in Clay township, this county, was born in the township where his entire life was spent, on April 16, 1840, and died in the home where he spent so many happy years, October 28, 1907. He was the son of Samuel and Rachel (Newman) Phillips, his father being a native of North Carolina, his birth having occurred there on July 6, 1808, while his mother also was born in the same state on March 16, 1818. When Samuel Phillips was a young man he and his parents came to Wayne county, Indiana, where they remained until the death of his father, which occurred about one year later. He, with his mother, came to Hendricks county, settling in Clay township, where he remained until his death, which occurred July 31, 1880. Samuel Phillips was married to Rachel Newman, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Pool) Newman, and to this union were born nine children: Jonathan, the immediate subject of this sketch; Susannah, born November 11, 1841, who married Enoch Harlan; Albert Lorenzo, born March 27, 1844; Lewis, born December 12, 1846, married Rozella Masten; Samuel E., born November 5, 1849, deceased; Sallie, born July 10, 1852, married William Shirley; John N., born June 24, 1855, married Joanna Ratcliff; Oliver P., born October 28, 1858, first married Ella Swain, and after her death he married Addie O'Neal; Emery, born November 3, 1863, first married Rosa Justice, and after her death, Martha Parker.

Jonathan F. Phillips received all of his common school education in the district schools of Clay township, and when still a very young man he began to work on the farm. He continued to reside on the home farm, helping his father, until his marriage, which occurred on March 23, 1868, at which time he was married to Makina Couch, who was a daughter of Samuel and Lydia (Hunt) Couch, and to this union were born five children: Alma C., who is a teacher and a very cultured woman; Lora, the wife of Milton West; Aldus W., who married Edna Atkins and has three children, Myron A., Mary M. and Edith Alma; Amanda died at the age of twenty-two years; Olney W. is unmarried and at home with his mother.

The parents of Mrs. Phillips were both natives of North Carolina, where they lived all their lives. They reared a family of five children: Tilghman, who married Eusebia Stanley; Steven, who married Rena Nowlin; Makina, the wife of Mr. Phillips; George married Mary Peratt, and Walter, who is unmarried. Mrs. Phillips' father died in 1847 and her mother in 1893.

Mr. Phillips was a life-long Republican and, while favoring the principles of that party, he was not a partisan to the degree that blinded him to the faults of local candidates on his own party ticket. He always reserved the right to cast his vote in local elections for the best candidate, irrespective of party. He was always a loyal member of the Grand Army of the Republic, having served for sixteen months during the Civil War in Company B, One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Volunteer Infantry. His service was eminently satisfactory and upon an honorable discharge from the service he returned to Hendricks county. He and the members of his family were loyal and devoted adherents of the Methodist Episcopal church, and during his life he was a regular attendant on the services of that denomination. He was always a sympathetic and ready helper in all enterprises which had for their object the welfare of the community. His upright and manly life won for him a large circle of friends throughout the township who sincerely mourn his loss.

MORDECAI CARTER.

A review of the life of the honored subject of this biographical sketch must of necessity be brief and general in its character. To enter fully into the interesting details of the career of Mr. Carter, touching the earnest and persistent efforts of his earlier years and successes of later days, would far transcend the limits of this article. He has filled a large place in the ranks of the enterprising and public-spirited men of his day and has been an important factor in the growth and development of Danville's industrial and commercial interests. Within the past few years he has become identified with banking and other financial institutions in Indianapolis, although he still retains a part of his interests in Danville.

Mordecai Carter, vice-president of the Continental National Bank and president of the State Savings and Trust Company, both of Indianapolis, was born near Plainfield, Hendricks county, Indiana. His parents, Newlin and Beulah (Hunt) Carter, were both natives of this county, his father living the life of a farmer until his death, in July, 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Newlin Carter reared a family of eight children, seven of whom are living: Dr. Amos Carter, of Plainfield; Mrs. Lydia H. Cope, of Plainfield; Mordecai, the immediate subject of this sketch: Mrs. Sarah S. Gilbert, of Grand Junction, Colorado: Caleb H., vice-president of the American State Bank of Indianapolis: Mrs. Margaret Mills, of West Newton, Indiana; Alonzo J., of Yorba Linda, California, and Rachel Elina, who died in February, 1912. Mr Carter was born on his father's farm and lived there until he was nearly grown. He received his common-school education in the district schools of his home township and then entered the high school at Plainfield. Immediately after leaving high school he engaged in the hardware and lumber business at Plainfield, where he remained for two years. He then went into the implement and buggy business, which he followed for the next two years, at the expiration of which time he was appointed deputy auditor of Hendricks county under John Kendall and served in that capacity from 1885 until 1888.

Upon retiring from this position, he was offered the position of general bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Danville and served in that capacity until 1805, when he succeeded Capt. B. F. Thomas as cashier of the bank. He proved to be a close student of the banking problem and such was the confidence of the directors of the bank in his ability that in 1800 he was elected president of this institution. He was also elected secretary of the Danville Trust Company, which positions he held until 1909, when he was instrumental in the organization of the Continental National Bank, of Indianapolis. Since the organization of the latter institution he has become its vice-president and is occupying that important position at the present time. In 1913 he was elected president of State Savings and Trust Company, which was organized in June of that year. The directors chose Mr. Carter on account of his ability and practical banking experience. He was the first secretary for two years of the Indiana Bankers' Association upon its organization in 1897. He is also president of the Lindhurst Realty Company, of Indianapolis, and a director and one of the incorporators of the Klondyke Milling Company, of Danville,

Mr. Carter has always taken a great interest in public affairs and has allied himself with the Republican party. In 1908 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature from Hendricks county, and was re-elected in 1910. While in the Legislature he was appointed one of the four commissioners to investigate and report on a state penal farm.

Mr. Carter was married in 1888 to Laura Kellum, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Kellum, of Friendswood, Indiana. They have two children, Lucile, who is now a student in the University of Illinois, and Leland K., who is a student at Westtown, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Carter died on March 15, 1895.

Mr. Carter has been a life-long member of the Friends church and contributes liberally to the support of that denomination. In his fraternal affiliations he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Socially, he is a member of the Columbia and Marion Clubs of Indianapolis. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the board of directors, and of the finance and house committees. While living in Danville he took an active part in every movement which had to do with the welfare of the town. He has been for many years a trustee and one of the stanchest friends of the Central Normal College. He was one of the organizers and prime movers of the movement to get the Carnegie library in Danville, and was appointed by the court as one of the trustees of the library. He was president of the Indiana Library Trustees' Association in 1911.

It is readily seen that Mr. Carter has been a very busy man all of his life and yet, in spite of the multitudinous activities of his life, he has never allowed the pursuit of wealth to warp his kindly nature. He is indeed a representative of that sterling type of the world's workers who have furnished much of the bone and sinew of the country and added to the stability of our country and its institutions. He has preserved his faculties and the warmth of his heart for the broadening helpful influence of human life and is a kindly genial friend and a gentleman whom it is always a pleasure to meet.

GEORGE T. PATTISON.

The life history of him whose name heads this biographical sketch has been for many years closely identified with the history of Hendricks county, Indiana. Throughout the years his life has been one of untiring activity and it has been crowned with success both as an instructor in school and college, and as a lawyer. Years of conscientious work as a lawyer have brought with them not only increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession. His life affords a splendid example of what an American youth, plentifully endowed with good common sense, energy and determination, can accomplish when accompanied by good moral principles. From the beginning, he has been intensely methodical and unswervingly persistent in search of the true light and of the essentials of the legal foundation and sources of legal conception and thought, holding devoutly to the highly embellished record of equity and the sure, certain, invincible methods of practice.

George T. Pattison, one of the leading attorneys of Danville, was born in Henry county, this state, July 18, 1857. His parents were William B. and Susan A. (Colville) Pattison, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. His father is still living with his son, George T., at the advanced age of eightynine years, while his mother's death occurred in 1912, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Pattison were the parents of four children, two of whom are living, Mrs. Keturah Keitner, of Indianapolis, and George T.

George T. Pattison received his education in the district schools near Elwood, Indiana, and later attended school in the city of Elwood, his father having moved from Henry county to Madison county. Indiana, during his boyhood. Subsequently he attended the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, for eighteen months, after which he taught school for three years, making a successful record in that profession. In 1883 he entered the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, and graduated from that institution two years later. He then engaged in the teaching profession and followed it continuously and successfully for the next twelve years, all of his teaching being in the Central Normal College. He had full charge of the commercial work in the college until he began the study of law and abstracting in 1897. In 1904 he began to devote his entire time to his law practice and associated with Judge J. L. Clark until Judge Clark went on the bench.

Mr. Pattison was married in August, 1886, to Jennie M. Downard, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Downard. Mr. and Mrs. Pattison have three children: Marion, the wife of Carl Hawley, of Toledo, Ohio; Albert, who is now attending the Central Normal College, and Ruth, who is a student in the high school at Danville.

Mr. and Mrs. Pattison are devoted and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville, and for many years Mr. Pattison has been a member of its official board. He is also secretary of the college board of trustees and has held that important position for many years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is at present the district deputy of the district in which the Danville lodge is situated. He was a member of the school board of Danville for nine years and was no small factor in building up the schools of the city to their present high standard. Politically, Mr. Pattison has been a life-long Republican, and has taken more or less interest in local campaigns. However, he has not held any public positions at the hands of his party.

Mr. Pattison's life has been a busy and useful one and his career fully exemplifies what can be accomplished by a man who is filled with the determination to succeed in life. As a public school teacher for many years and later as a college professor, he was a factor of great power in molding the lives of young people. In his official capacity as a member of the school board he was instrumental in employing high grade teachers in the city schools of his resident town and in every way he encouraged the educational life of the community. Whether his work has been in the school room, the lodge room, in his law practice or wherever he has been found, it can be truly said of him that he was always animated by high ideals and the desire to treat his fellow man with exact justice. He has attained to an enviable standing in the legal profession of his county and his reading of the law is always characterized by that fine sympathy which is the true mark of great advocates. He is a man of genial personality and makes friends with all with whom he comes in contact.

ELMER HODSON.

The student interested in the history of Hendricks county does not have to carry his investigations far into its annals before learning that Elmer Hodson has long been one of its most active and leading citizens in its agricultural and stock-raising interests and that his labors have been a potent force in making this a rich agricultural region, for through several decades he has carried on general farming, gradually improving his valuable place, and while he has prospered in this he has also found time and ample opportunity to assist in the material and civic development of the county.

The subject's ancestral record, in brief, is as follows: On the paternal side, the great-grandparents were George and Mary (Thacher) Hodson; great-grandparents, Robert and Rachel (Mills) Hodson; grandparents, Jesse and Mary (Wilson) Hodson, whose children were Robert W., Jesse W., Jeremiah W., Eli W., Elizabeth W., Rachel W., Mary W., and Joel W. Mary Wilson was a daughter of Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Saferight) Wilson. On the maternal side, the grandparents were Samuel and Rebecca (Binford) Parker, the former being a son of Joseph or Josiah and Martha (Peel) Parker, and the latter a daughter of James and Hannah (Crew) Binford. To Samuel and Rebecca Parker were born the following children: Silas, John, James, Josiah (died in young manhood, single), Hannah Jane (mother of the subject), Martha Ann, and Angelina, who married a Mr. Brown and died about a year later, leaving a baby girl who died about six weeks after her mother's death.

Elmer Hodson, the son of Joel and Hannah Jane (Parker) Hodson, was born in the house in which he is now living on June 15, 1866. His father was born in North Carolina on August 3, 1817, and came to this state with his parents in 1831. They located in Mill Creek settlement, but after a year's residence there, they entered land in Clay township in 1832. A few years later Joel Hodson entered six hundred and forty acres of land in Iowa, and held it for a number of years, and when he sold it at a good price he invested the proceeds in land in this county. He spent his whole life in this county from the time he came here in 1831 until his death, which occurred June 3, 1911. His first wife was Charlotte Brown, and to this marriage was born one child, Brazeldon B., who married Ann Bryant. After the death of his first wife, Joel Hodson married Sarah A. Hill, and to this marriage there were born three children: John R., who married Ella Masten, and after her death, Mrs. Lydia Jessup; Jesse C. married Ruth Masten; Jennie married James Kendall, and after his death, Samuel Pitts. After the death of Mr. Hodson's second wife he married Hannah Jane Parker, and to this union there were born four children: Mary, wife of Samuel Atkins; Rebecca became the wife of Jesse Branson; Martha married Nathan Carter, and Elmer, the immediate subject of this sketch. Hannah Parker, the mother of Elmer Hodson, was born in Rush county, Indiana, February 17, 1829; and died in Clay township, this county, May 3, 1904.

Elmer Hodson received his education in the schools of his home township and early in life started to work on his father's farm. When he became of age his father gave him a farm of his own, and on this place he has spent his entire career. He is recognized as one of the most scientific farmers of the county, keeping abreast of all the latest methods in agriculture and having his farm well supplied with all the necessary farming machinery and accessories.

Mr. Hodson was married to Luella Hadley, the daughter of Samuel J. and Locadia (Brown) Hadley, and to this marriage has been born one child, Vera Jane, who is now attending Earlham College, and will graduate in June, 1914. The parents of Mrs. Hodson were both natives of this state, her father's birth having occurred in Morgan county, where he spent his entire life. He was a farmer and at the time of his death he was the owner of two hundred and forty acres of land. To Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Hadley were born six children: Cornelius, who first married Elsie King, and after her death, Mattie ——, and after her death, Marcella Clark; Elva married Joshua Hunt; Sarah Jane married Harry Thompson; Luella, the wife of Mr. Hodson; Vinton, deceased; Elizabeth married Alva R. Shirley, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Hodson has been a Republican in politics from conviction, feeling that in the principles set forth by that party the welfare of the nation would be best conserved. His interest in politics has been that of the public-spirited citizen, who has a civic interest in his country's welfare, but is not particularly concerned in holding office himself. He is a member of the Friends church at Mill Creek and Mrs. Hodson belongs to the society at Amo, both being interested in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the community in which they live. Mr. Hodson's upright life and courteous dealings have won for him the esteem of a wide concourse of friends throughout the locality in which he has spent his life.

ROBERT OPIE CHRISTIE.

The history of many Indiana families takes us back into colonial times, and it is a source of satisfaction to trace the history of a family from the seventeenth century up to the present time. The Christies of Hendricks county trace their ancestry back to colonial times, where they have found that the original founder of the family was educated for a Catholic priest. However, his relatives objected so vigorously to his espousal of the Catholic faith that he left England and came to this country, where he could worship as he pleased. He settled in Virginia and in the course of time married a woman of refinement and culture who lived in the city of Philadelphia. To this marriage there was born one son, James, who, in turn, married and became the father of William, the founder of the Hendricks county branch of the Christies. James Christie enlisted in the Revolutionary War when a very young man and served for seven years. James married Sarah Lemond and settled in Franklin county, Virginia, on the James river, where he lived until 1803. He then moved to Lincoln county, Kentucky, and a year later he moved with all his family to Shelby county, in the same state, where he taught school until his death. William was the third of the ten children born to lames Christie and wife.

William Christie was born in Virginia, August 25, 1786, and was sixteen years of age when his parents moved to Kentucky. Therefore, he had but little chance for schooling, although his father taught all of his children to read and write at home. He acquired a fair knowledge of law and, being a wide reader, he was well versed in the topics of the day. On August 15, 1805, when only nineteen, he was married to Sarah Miles, who died a year later, leaving an infant daughter, Mary. On February 20, 1810, William married Elizabeth Miles, a cousin of his first wife. At the opening of the War of 1812 he enlisted and served throughout as the captain of a pack-horse company. After his return from the war he lived on a farm in Kentucky and held some minor offices in his county. In the fall of 1836 he moved to Hendricks county, Indiana, where he lived until his death, May 30, 1878. He died in the faith of the Regular Baptist church, to which he had belonged for nearly seventy-five years.

Robert Opie Christie, the great-grandson of William Christie, was born December 4, 1872, in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His parents were James P. and Amantha Ann (Yowell) Christie, his father being born in this county on November 19, 1844. James P. was married in 1871 to Amanthis Ann, the daughter of Walker and Eliza (Duvall) Yowell. Walker Yowell was a native of Virginia and came west to Kentucky with his parents when he was a small boy. He grew to manhood and married in that state. In 1854 he came to Hendricks county and located on the farm in Marion township where James Christie now lives. He lived on this farm of eighty acres until his death, in 1902, at the age of eighty-four, having been born in 1817. His wife was born in Kentucky and died in Marion township, this county, in 1885, at the age of fifty-six.

James P. Christie was the second son of eight children born to John and Lucinda (Bush) Christie. John was a native of Kentucky, being born in that state January 15, 1816, and dying in this county October 8, 1888. He was farmer and carpenter all his life, and took quite an interest in public affairs. He was a Democrat and was elected supervisor several times in his township. His wife was a native of Kentucky, but came to this county when a small girl with her parents and was reared in the county. She died in 1891. Mr. and Mrs. John Christie were the parents of eight children: William P., James, Thomas J., Sarah Elizabeth (deceased), Lemon M., John Wesley (deceased), Frank Douglass and George Washington.

James P. Christie spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, receiving his schooling in the district schools of the neighborhood. He worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-eight and then moved to his present farm of one hundred and eighteen acres. He has been a road supervisor for the past thirty years. His wife, Amanthis Ann Yowell, was born in Kentucky in 1851 and has lived in this county since she was four years of age. To James P. Christie and wife have been born three children: Robert O., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Beatrice Hadley and Herbert D.

Robert O. Christie was educated in the schools of his home township and then spent three terms in the Central Normal College of Danville. He started farming on his present farm, which is a part of the old homestead farm. In addition to a general system of farming, he specializes in cattle breeding, raising Shorthorn and Durham cattle for the market. He has a fine herd on hand at all times and is an expert judge of cattle. He is regarded as one of the best stock raisers in central Indiana, and is rapidly coming to the front as one of the leading cattle experts of the state.

Mr. Christie was married on October 9, 1895, to Clara Rogers, the daughter of Chilin and Sallie (Clay) Rogers. Her parents are natives of this county and are now living retired at Amo, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Christie have had two children, but both died in early childhood, Gladys R. at the age of six and Ruth at the age of two and a half.

In his political relations, Mr. Christie has always voted the Democratic ticket, believing in the principles advocated by that party. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has been a member of the Friends church since he was seventeen years of age. He is now an overseer in the church. His wife is a member of the Christian church at New Winchester. Mr. Christie is a genial man and has always been a hard worker. He is a man who has favored all civic enterprises which might help the community and because of his public spiritedness he is justly regarded as one of the representative men of the county.

CLARENCE C. WHICKER.

The best history of a community or state is that which deals most with the lives and activities of its people, especially of those who, by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have forged to the front and placed themselves where they deserve the title of progressive men. In this brief review will be found the record of one who has outstripped the less active plodders on the highway of life and achieved a career surpassed by few of his contemporaries, a career of marked success in agricultural affairs and a name which all men who know him delight to honor owing to his upright life and habits of thrift and industry.

Clarence C. Whicker, the son of Frederick and Louisa S. (Duley) Whicker, was born in Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, January 1, 1859. His father was also a native of this county, his birth having occurred in Clay township on February 24, 1833, and he spent his entire life in the county of his birth, his death occurring on November 22, 1913. Mrs. Frederick Whicker was born near Flemingsburg, Kentucky, November 1, 1832, and died March 27, 1868. The paternal grandfather of Clarence C. Whicker was born in Salem, North Carolina, April 3, 1794, and died October 29, 1853. He married Elizabeth Cosner, daughter of John and Abigail (Pike) Cosner, and to this union were born the following children: Mrs. Dorinda Stanley, Mrs. Eliza Cosner, John C., Louis, James, Abigail, Mary, Luretta (who married Parnell Kennell), Frederick (father of the subject), Elizabeth, Allen (who married Amanda West), Sarah, who died unmarried. The Whicker family are very fortunate in having their family history traced back in an unbroken line for five generations. James Whicker, the greatgrandfather of Clarence C. Whicker, was born near Liverpool, England, February 16, 1765, and died in Salem, North Carolina. His second wife, Mary Dean, was born July 25, 1770, and died at the age of one hundred and three at Salem, North Carolina, and to this union there were born six children: Sarah, born April 10, 1780; Benjamin, June 20, 1784; William, March 1, 1789; James, January 13, 1791; Frederick, April 3, 1794; Eli, July 23, 1803. John Cosner, the maternal grandfather of C. C. Whicker, was born May 8, 1768, and died December 15, 1840. He married Abigail Pike. who was born October 3, 1770, and died January 1, 1861. To Mr. and Mrs. John Cosner were born ten children: Nathan, born August 20, 1703; Mary, January 1, 1795; Elizabeth, May 5, 1797; Anthony, born April 7, 1799; John, January 18, 1804; Sarah, January 21, 1801; William, January 11, 1806; Lovey, May 26, 1808; Hannah, June 10, 1811; Peggy, May 21, 1814.

Frederick Whicker received his common school education in the district schools of his township and worked on his father's farm until the latter's death, which occurred when the son was nineteen years of age. He then went to farming for himself and soon afterward bought a farm of forty acres in Clay township, this county. He was a very successful farmer and in the course of a few years had one hundred and sixty acres of good farming land. In the spring of 1861 he moved to Ben Davis, remaining there until October, 1875, when he returned to Franklin township, Hendricks county, and again resumed farming, and here he continued to reside until twelve years before his death, when he retired from active work and removed to Stilesville, this county, where he died November 22, 1913. In the spring of 1858 Frederick Whicker married Louisa S. Duley, and to this union there were born two children, Clarence C., the subject of this review, and Franz F., of Franklin township. The subject's maternal great-grandparents were Zadock and Susanna (White) Duley, whose families had been located in Virginia for two and a half centuries. Eventually they moved to Fleming county, Kentucky, where their deaths occurred. Their children were as follows: John, single; Hiram, who married Sophia Northcut: Charley, who also married Sophia Northcut; Henry married Martha Mershon; Susan, the wife of Henry Sweet; Jane, single; Ann, the wife of James Wilson; Polley, the wife of Thomas Money. Of these, Henry Duley, the subject's grandfather, was born April 4, 1800, and died July 2, 1846. On January 6, 1825, he married Martha Mershon, who was born January 11, 1804, and died July 16, 1881, and their children were as follows: America, single; John C., born September 7, 1828. who married Heba Hord; Louisa S., the subject's mother; Frances, wife of Philip Pratt; Henry C., born September 26, 1836, married Athalinda Redmond; William, born July 14, 1830, married Malinda Wood. Daniel Mershon, the father of Mrs. Martha Duley, was of French Huguenot descent, though a resident of Virginia, where he married Effie Hamilton. Their children were as follows: Susan married Jesse Turner: Martha married Henry Duley; Sallie married James Jones; Eliza became Mrs. Allsup; Fannie married Washington Wills; Benjamin married Miss Gorganay; Eli married Miss Bell; James married and died young; Cornelius died young. In 1868 Mrs. Louisa Whicker died, and subsequently Mr. Whicker married Martha A. Robinson, the daughter of John and Martha Robinson, and to this union one child was born, Mildred Mary, who died October 10, 1881. Mrs. Martha A. Whicker was a daughter of John and Martha A. (Hughes) Robinson, of Kent county, England. She was born at Covington, Kentucky, September o, 1844, and died at Stilesville May 10, 1014, in the seventieth year of her age. She joined the Methodist Episcopal church in 1886 and, until her health failed, was a regular attendant of church and Sunday school.

Clarence C. Whicker attended his first school in Marion county, Indiana, near Ben Davis, but his school advantages were very limited. However, he has kept apace with modern improvements in agricultural work and on the current topics of the day, so that he is now able to discuss intelligently the leading current events. He worked on his father's farm until 1897, when he married and began farming on his own account, locating then on his present place, known as the John Grimes farm, on the Amo and Stilesville road. He first bought one hundred and sixty acres in 1892, to which he added one hundred acres in 1896, and all but about thirty-five acres is in a high state of cultivation. In 1910 he built the splendid fifteen-room residence and has made many other permanent and substantial improvements. He carries on general farming operations, also giving proper attention to live stock. In addition to a diversified system of farming he engaged in stock raising and was successful from the first in this line of work.

Mr. Whicker married Iva Wallace on April 20, 1897, the daughter of Thomas L. and Alamanza (Kirkham) Wallace, of Tipton county, this state, and to this union there have been born two children, Louis and Clarice Crista. Mrs. Whicker's parents are natives of Indiana, her father having been born in Tipton county, and her mother in Morgan county, and they were the parents of three children, Victoria, the wife of Orin L. Osborne, and they have two children, Carodine and Blythe; Cora married Elvin McClelland, and has two children, Emil and Doris.

Mr. Whicker has allied himself with the new Progressive party because he feels that it offers the best solution for all those evils which beset our nation today. He and his wife take an active interest in the various affairs of the neighborhood in which they live which seek the public welfare. Mrs. Whicker is a loyal and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church at Stilesville. As a farmer Mr. Whicker has been very successful, having devoted all his energies to agricultural pursuits and has met with the success which he merits. He is a practical and methodical farmer and has always given his personal attention to the various details of his farm work with the result that he has an enviable standing in the community because of his ability and success in his chosen vocation. He has been successful in the accumulation of material wealth, being the owner of two hundred and sixty acres of fine farming land in Franklin and Clay townships in this county.

JOHN J. DUGAN.

It has been often said that the versatility and virility of the American people have been brought about largely by the continual introduction of new elements through the assimilation of the better class of our immigrant population. One small country beyond the seas has furnished its full quota of desirable citizens, and the brilliant thought and quick wit of these gentlemen are proverbial. Not a few of our most brilliant statesmen and men of affairs have been either natives of "Ireland, the Beautiful Isle of the Sea," or were descended from sturdy Hibernian stock. One of the conspicuous successes of this character in Hendricks county is John J. Dugan, the son of Michael and Margaret (Hughes) Dugan.

In some respects a true son of Erin, he is none the less a loyal American and a Hoosier, being widely known and generally respected in the community in which he was born and bred. He, himself, is a name e of Hendricks county, having first seen the light of day upon his father's farm in Middle township, on the 4th day of March, 1882, and since that day he has lived in and worked lovally for the interests of this county. His father, Michael, and his mother, Margaret Dugan, were both natives of Galway, Ireland. They came to America in their youth, Michael being but nineteen years of age when he reached this country. He immediately found an abiding place on a farm near Brownsburg, Lincoln township, this county. Later he came to Middle township and, by hard work as a farmer and frugal habits, came into possession of a large tract of land about four miles north of Pittsboro. Here the remainder of his life was spent, toiling diligently and intelligently for the sustenance of himself and his family, and also looking forward to his later years when he need no longer toil for necessities, but could enjoy the fruits of his labor. His faithful wife was an unfailing source of help and strength and to her efforts, in no small measure, his success is due. To them were born eight children, seven of whom are still living to carry out into the world, for generations to come perhaps, the name and teachings of their father. These children are Martin, Katherine (Collins), Ellen, Delia, Mary, Patrick, John J., and Anna, whom death called. The devoted mother still enjoys the home of her youth, ably assisted in its management by her children. Michael Dugan was a firm adherent of the tenets of Jefferson, always voting the Democratic ticket. Though very progressive in his ideas and active in affairs touching the public welfare in his community, he aspired to no political office, finding ample field for his abundant energy in his immediate surroundings.

His son, John J. Dugan, is one of the thoroughly progressive, representative men of the county. Abreast of the times and thoroughly informed on all questions pertaining to the public welfare, his judgment is largely relied upon by many of the neighboring citizens. His education was received in the schools of the township, but he has never ceased to study. Like his father, he is a stanch Democrat, and was elected to the Legislature on this ticket at the election in 1912, which office he has filled with great credit, devoting his energies to the service of the people as conscientiously as he has always worked for his own success.

Mr. Dugan is one of the very successful farmers of the locality, caring for the homestead of his childhood, a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, which by its appearance shows the intelligent care it has received. Here he engages in general farming, devoting considerable attention to the breeding of live stock, particularly hogs, a large number of which are marketed by him yearly.

Mr. Dugan is unmarried and has taken no interest in fraternal affairs. He is a prominent member of the Indiana Democratic Club, and also a member of the St. Malachy Catholic church at Brownsburg. A man of wide acquaintance, sound judgment, decisive and straightforward in all his dealings, he stands as an exemplary citizen, one of the truly representative men of the county.

VIRGIL S. WATSON.

There is no more important factor in the history of a town than the newspapers, and it is often true that it is the newspapers of a town which are largely responsible for its prosperity. The influence of a good newspaper cannot be over estimated. In it the people read from week to week not only of the happenings of their own county and state, but news from all over our country and the world as well. Every weekly newspaper in every town of Indiana gives the main facts of the world's history from week to week. It places in the hands of the readers the most important events which happen any place in the world. No great invention is made which is not exploited in the newspapers. Every newspaper now which depends upon the rural districts for much of its support prints from week to week a special page for the farmer. Among the newspapers of Hendricks county which are doing their full share in advancing the interest of the state, there is no paper doing more brilliant work for the good of the county than the Brownsburg Record, which is now owned and edited by Virgil S. Watson.

Mr. Watson, the son of Thomas J. and Amanda (Wright) Watson, was born November 4, 1869. in Camden, Preble county, Ohio. His parents were both natives of Hendricks county, Indiana. The parents of both families came directly from Kentucky and were among the earliest settlers of this county. Thomas J. Watson was a successful farmer in this county and was largely interested in the buying and selling of stock. He and his wife were the parents of three children, Virgil S. being the only one of the children now living.

Virgil S. Watson was educated in the common school of Middle township, in this county, and being a young man of intellectual ability it was natural that he should take up school teaching. He taught school in this county for three years and in the meantime he attended the Central Normal College, at Danville, in order to equip himself for more successful work in the school room. However, in compliance with the wishes of his parents, he abandoned the school room, and remained at home to assist in looking after the business of his father's farm, where he remained until he was forty years of age, when he went to Lebanon, Indiana, where he became engaged in newspaper work, for the Indianapolis News. A year later he bought the Brownsburg Record, assuming the management of the newspaper on June 10, 1912. In politics he is a Republican. He runs a modern job printing plant in connection with his newspaper, and adds not a little to his annual income by his job work. He is prepared to do all sorts of job printing on short notice, and the excellence of his work brings him a continually increasing amount of business.

Mr. Watson was married, June 29, 1904, to Angie Belle Herring, daughter of Phillip B. and America (Walker) Herring, and they are the parents of two children, Hazel Bernice and one son who died in infancy. They are members of the Methodist Protestant church and contribute liberally of their substance to its support.

Mr. Watson is a man of high character and is giving the people of his community a paper which stands for the best interest of Brownsburg in every respect. He advocates all measures and movements which he feels will redound to the credit of his home town and be of benefit in any way to the citizens of the community.

ALLEN WHICKER.

Among the citizens of Hendricks county who have built up comfortable homes and surrounded themselves with large landed and personal property, none have attained a higher degree of success than Allen Whicker. With few opportunities except what his own efforts were capable of mastering and with many discouragements to overcome, he has made an exceptional success of life and in his old age has the gratification of knowing he has the respect of the community in which he has resided all his life, and that it has been benefited by his presence and counsel. He is a link between the old days and the new, for his boyhood days were spent in truly pioneer conditions. Settling in a virgin wilderness, he helped his father to clear the forests, drain the fields and raise the first crops on some of the best land in Hendricks county.

Allen Whicker, the son of Fred K. and Elizabeth (Kosmer) Whicker, was born two miles southeast of Amo, Hendricks county, Indiana, March 20,

ALLEN WHICKER

1837. His grandfather, James Whicker, was in the Revolutionary War, His grandmother, on his mother's side, was Abigail Pike, who lived to be ninetysix years of age. She was a great patriot during the Revolutionary days, and when the subject of this sketch was a small boy she told him many stories of the dark days of the Revolution. Her husband was a native of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. James Whicker, the grandparents of Allen Whicker, lived all their lives in North Carolina, and it was in that state that Fred K. Whicker was reared and married. Mr. and Mrs. Fred K. Whicker reared a large family of twelve children, six of whom were born in North Carolina and six in Indiana. They moved from North Carolina to Indiana shortly before Allen Whicker, the subject of this sketch, was born and located in the virgin wilderness south of Amo. Here they built a cabin of logs, with a puncheon floor and riven door, the entire building being erected without a nail. Wild game of all kinds was abundant in the woods, turkeys, squirrels, deer and all kinds of fur-bearing animals. In order to prepare the land for cultivation they cut down the magnificent oak, walnut and hickory trees and piled them in big heaps and burned them. Timber which was burned in those early days would now be worth several hundred dollars per acre at the present price of lumber. Fred K. Whicker died at the age of sixty-one and his wife at the age of seventy-eight.

Allen Whicker is the eleventh child in order of birth and the only one living of the twelve born to his parents. He has spent his whole life in this county. He attended the subscription schools in his boyhood days and received a limited education at the three-months terms, which was the length of the school year in his time. He continued to live and work on the homestead farm until he was twenty-five years of age, when he married and bought forty acres of land of his own adjoining the homestead farm. He has been remarkably successful as a farmer and from time to time has added to his possessions until he is now the owner of five hundred and fifty acres of as fine land as can be found in the county. He has for many years made a specialty of cattle feeding and is recognized as one of the largest cattle feeders of the county. He has, in addition to his raising of cattle, also raised large numbers of horses and hogs for the market.

Mr. Whicker was married October 30, 1861, to Amanda West, of near Amo, and to this marriage there have been born six children: Mary, the wife of John Bunny, of Amo; Lina, the wife of William Lewis Beasley; Nora, the wife of Frank Bersbow; Simon, a merchant at Amo; Dennis, who lives near Indianapolis, and Otto, who now operates the home place. Mr.

Whicker retired in 1913 from active farm life and divided his land among his children and now lives in Amo. His first wife died in 1901, and on May 25, 1903, he was married to Mrs. Ruth (Masten) Shirley, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Masten. Mrs. Whicker had a son, Walter Hodson, by a former marriage, who resides in Clay township, west of Mr. Wicker's place.

Mr. Whicker is a loyal member of the Baptist church of Amo and is a liberal supporter of its various activities. He is a man of sound judgment and sterling integrity and has made his success in life by strict attention to business, starting out with small capital, but a stout heart and willing hands, and he has risen to a place of prominence among the representative citizens of his county. Although he has been very successful in accumulating a goodly share of this world's goods, he has not neglected those finer and higher things in life, but has always identified himself with all movements which tend to elevate the general welfare of the locality in which he has lived for so many years.

FRANZ F. WHICKER.

The office of biography is not to give voice to a man's modest estimate of himself and his accomplishments, but rather to leave upon the record the verdict establishing his character by the consensus of opinion on the part of his neighbors, friends and fellow citizens. The life of the honorable subject of this review has been such as to elicit just praise from those who know him best. This has been brought about because he has always been loyal to all trusts imposed upon him and has been upright in all of his dealings with his fellow citizens, at the same time lending his support to the advancement of any cause looking toward the welfare of his community.

Franz F. Whicker, the son of Frederick and Louisa (Duley) Whicker, was born in Marion county, Indiana, January 15, 1866. The Whicker family has a very interesting history, but inasmuch as it is given in detail in the sketch of Clarence C. Whicker, elsewhere in this volume, it is not repeated here.

Frank F. Whicker attended the common schools in Franklin township, this county, and the ncompleted his education by taking a course in the Central Normal College at Danville. After finishing his college work he returned to his father's farm, where he continued to reside until his marriage. He then began farming for himself, first starting out as a renter. He has been a successful farmer and stock raiser and today has one hundred and sixty acres of as fine farming land as can be found in the county. He keeps his farm in a high state of cultivation and every thing in good repair at all times, thus making his farm one of the most attractive in the county.

Mr. Whicker married Anna Stark, the daughter of W. J. and Amanda (Adams) Stark, and to this union there have been born three children, Fred J., Floyd L. and Mildred A. All of the children are still at home. Mrs. Whicker's parents were both natives of Missouri, her father being deceased (September 2, 1905) and her mother still living. Mr. and Mrs. Stark reared a family of ten children, Ella, Joseph, Anna, Samuel, Arthur, Everett, Floyd, Nora, Leslie and Jane.

Fraternally, Mr. Whicker is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics he is allied with the Republican party and has been a firm follower of the great leaders of that party. He has, however, never been a candidate of his party for any office, preferring to serve in the ranks. He and his excellent wife are both people of broad sympathies and take an intelligent interest in the welfare of those about them, and, because of their genial dispositions and high character, they enjoy a large popularity in the community where they have spent so many years.

ELBERT M. MURPHY.

The prosperous farmer whose history is here portrayed is a man who, by his own efforts, has worked his way from a modest beginning to a position of influence in his community. His life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance, and the systematic and honorable methods he has followed have won for him the confidence of his fellow citizens in Hendricks county, whose interests he has ever had at heart and which he has always labored to promote. As township trustee and as county commissioner for many years, he rendered faithful and efficient service to the citizens of the county. As a farmer he has shown by example what can be accomplished by scientific agriculture, and his farm today may fairly stand as one of the best farms in every way in the county.

Elbert M. Murphy, a fine type of the modern farmer, was born February 6, 1863, in Franklin county, Indiana. His parents were Henry W. and Elizabeth (Howell) Murphy, his father being a native of Franklin county, his birth having occurred there in 1833. Henry W. Murphy married Elizabeth beth Howell, who was also a native of Franklin county, and they continued to live in that county until 1864, when they moved to Decatur county, this state. After a residence of sixteen years in that county, they moved to Marion county and settled on a farm south of Indianapolis, where they have since continued to reside.

Elbert M. Murphy was reared in Marion county, Indiana, and married there in 1884 to Mary J. Miles, the daughter of John and Rosanna (Fowler) Miles. Her father was a farmer of Marion county and died there when she was about six years of age. Her mother continued to reside on the farm until Mary, the wife of Mr. Murphy, grew to womanhood, and then moved to Indianapolis, where she now lives. To Mr. and Mrs. Murphy was born one child, Gladys E., in 1892, who died in 1893, at the age of ten months.

After his marriage Mr. Murphy bought ninety-one acres of land near North Salem in this county and from time to time added to his holdings until he is now the owner of three hundred and sixty-eight acres in this county. When he first started farming in the county there were few improvements on his farm and they were of small value. He gradually improved his farm, built a fine, large barn and other outbuildings and has made a scientific study of farming efficiency, in order to accomplish the most with the least amount of labor. In other words, he uses his brains as well as his muscle, and the result has been very gratifying to him. He now has a fine home which compares very favorably with the best country homes in the state and adds greatly to the appearance as well as to the value of his farm. While he carries on a general system of farming, he makes a specialty of feeding live stock and has found this a very lucrative diversion from his regular farming.

Mr. Murphy has been a life-long Republican, taking an intelligent interest in all political matters and an indication of his popularity in his township is shown by his election, in the fall of 1894, to the office of township trustee, an office which he held for five years five months. In 1901 he was nominated by his party for commissioner of his district and was elected without any trouble whatever. Following his election, he was appointed on November 1, 1901, to fill out the unexpired term of his predecessor, and then held office until the end of his term. He gave such excellent satisfaction that he was twice re-elected and held the office of county commissioner continuously for ten years, his last term expiring January 1, 1912. For this long period of ten years he advocated every movement which would be nefit his county and fought against any measure which he thought would be detrimental to the best interests of his county. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of North Salem and take an active interest in all kinds of church work. Mr. Murphy is a trustee of the church and of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital of Indianapolis, and has been no small factor in the erection of that memorial to the Methodists of the state. Fraternally he is a member of North Salem Lodge No. 142, Free and Accepted Masons. He is universally regarded as one of the most prominent and progressive farmers of the county and, judging by his achievements of the past, he promises to maintain his reputation for many years yet to come. He is well informed on all the current topics of the day and is a broadminded genteel, highly respected man who has always stood high in the community of his residence.

JACOB O. BURGAN.

The history of Hendricks county, as an integral part of the great commonwealth of Indiana, reveals the handiwork of many a great and noble soul who wrought heroically and unselfishly. Her splendid homes, her highgrade institutions, her happy, prosperous people speak volumes of some one's steadfastness of purpose, of some one's strength of arm, courage of heart and activity of brain. Among the men of this county who have been actively identified with the commercial life of Lizton for many years, is Jacob O. Burgan, the present postmaster. Today we have a division of labor which was not dreamed of fifty years ago and in a small village there are frequently as many as two score occupations represented. Each man fills his particular part and the minister is no more important than the blacksmith, the teacher is of no more intrinsic value to the community than the section boss, and the barber performs as useful a mission in life of the community as any of the others. Society needs all of these professions and it would be impossible to determine the approximate value of each one to the general welfare of the community.

Jacob O. Burgan, postmaster and merchant of Lizton, was born June 17, 1865, in Eel River township, Hendricks county. His parents were Alexander and Pernetia (Toney) Burgan. Alexander Burgan was born in Floyd county, Virginia, January 20, 1825. The Burgan family originally came from Sweden and probably have as complete and detailed a family genealogy worked out as any family in Hendricks county. At the present they have the ancestral tree traced back to eight generations. The first Burgan of whom they have definite record was Jonathan, who was born in Sweden in 1560. He had one son, John or Jonnie, who was also born in Sweden in 1601. John married in due course of time and had one son, Yerick, who was born in the land of his father in 1640. Yerick went to Germany, where he married and had one son, Jacob, who was born in that country in 1695. Jacob grew to manhood, married and had one son, by the name of James, who was born in Germany in 1744. James was the first one of the family to come to this country and settled in Maryland about the last quarter of the eighteenth century, where he married and had one son, Isaac, born in 1786. Isaac grew to manhood, went to Virginia, married and had one son by the name of Alexander. Alexander came to Hendricks county, Indiana, married here and became the father of Jacob O. Burgan, whose history is herein portrayed.

Alexander Burgan spent his boyhood days upon the farm which his father entered in Union township and, upon his marriage to Prenetia Toney, moved to his own farm of forty acres adjoining the old homestead farm. He lived on two or three different farms in the township and five years before his death he moved to Lizton, where he remained until he passed away September 28, 1879. Alexander Burgan and wife were the parents of five children: John Wesley, who died in 1883; Tranum, of Indianapolis; Harvey, of Indianapolis; Jacob O., the subject of this review, and Mrs. Almanda Swift, of Kokomo, Indiana.

Jacob O. Burgan was given a good practical education in the schools of his township and when twelve years of age moved to Lizton with his parents, where he has spent the remainder of his life. While still a young man he learned the barber trade and for sixteen years operated a barber shop in Lizton. He then engaged in the retail meat market and mercantile business which he continued up until his appointment as postmaster in 1904. He has been postmaster at Lizton for the past ten years, during which he has given conscientious attention to the duties of this official position.

Mr. Burgan was married September 10, 1902, to Margaret, the daughter of John and Sue (Vandever) Halfaker. John Halfaker was a native of Johnson county, Indiana, but several years ago moved to Hendricks county and settled in Middle township where he owns a fine farm about two miles north of Pittsboro. Mrs. Halfaker is a native of Boone county, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Halfaker are now living at Pittsboro.

Mr. Burgan is a member of the Knights of Pythias and he and his wife are members of the Pythian Sisters. He was also a member of the Improved Order of Red Men. Politically, he has always been a Republican and has been interested in the activities of his party. He and his wife are both members of the Christian church of Lizton, to which they give freely of their means. Mr. Burgan has lived a successful and honorable life and has exercised those qualities of generosity, hospitality and loyalty to friends, with the result that he is a man who is much admired and esteemed by all with whom he comes in contact.

GEORGE ORF.

To write the personal records of men who have raised themselves from humble circumstances to positions of responsibility and trust in a community is no ordinary pleasure. Self-made men, men who have achieved success by reason of their personal qualities and left the impress of their individuality upon the business and growth of their place of residence and affect for good such institutions as are embraced in the sphere of their usefulness, unwittingly, perhaps, built monuments more enduring than marble obelisk or granite shaft. Of such we have the unquestionable right to say belongs the gentleman whose name appears above.

George Orf, the son of Adam and Catherine Orf, was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, September 24, 1863. His parents died when he was very young and he was reared in an orphans' home and for this reason knows very little of his family history. He came to Hendricks county when a small boy of five years and made his home with Addison Hadley, remaining there until he was nineteen years of age. He then went to Butler county, Ohio, where he worked on a farm for three years, after which he returned to Hendricks county, Indiana. Until 1910 he rented farms, being very successful as a renter and making a very satisfactory tenant. In 1910 he purchased his present farm of forty acres in Clay township, which he is now improving in every way and bringing to a high state of cultivation.

George Orf was married September 11, 1890, to Hattie Henderson, the daughter of Alpheus and Maria (Lancaster) Henderson, and to them have been born the following children: Lucy, Claude, Elizabeth, Chloe, Vera, Kenneth, Dorcas, Ruth, Ernest A., deceased, and Georgia. Lucy is the wife of Hurley Rector and has one child, Mark. Mrs. Orf's parents had a family of six children, William, Hattie, James C., Sarah, Jesse and Mary A. William married Minnie Cassidy; Hattie is the wife of the subject of this sketch; Joseph married Eva Kersey; Jesse married Mattie Sanders;

Sarah died in infancy; Mary became the wife of Fred Cassidy. Mrs. Orf's father died May 23, 1907. Mrs. Orf's grandparents were both natives of North Carolina and had a family of three children, James Alpheus, Marinda and Clark.

Mr. Orf is a Republican and takes an active interest in local politics, although he has never been a candidate for any public office. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and in his religious faith is an adherent of the Friends church of Danville. He is a fine example of the self-made man, who, starting out with nothing, by the sheer force of will and determination rears a family to a life of usefulness and becomes an important factor in the welfare of the community. This he has accomplished because he has been upright in all of his dealings and willing to do his share in the life of the community and because he has done this he has won the respect and sincere regard of all of those with whom he has been associated.

JACOB L. KURTZ.

The best title one can establish to the high and generous esteem of an intelligent community is a protracted and honorable residence therein. Jacob L. Kurtz, one of the best known and most highly esteemed men of Hendricks county, Indiana, has resided in this locality all his life and his career has been a most commendable one in every respect, well deserving of being perpetuated on the pages of a historical work of the nature of the one in hand. Like his sterling father before him, he has been a man of well-defined purpose and never failed to carry to successful completion any work or enterprise to which he addressed himself. Beginning life in a new country and under many unfavorable auspices, he let nothing deter him and before the lapse of many years he had a fine farm under cultivation. Knowing that the country was destined to take a high rank in the productive and rich localities of the North, he applied himself very closely to his work and waited for the future to bring its rewards, and today he is one of the substantial men of his county.

Jacob L. Kurtz, who is now living retired in Danville, was born on July 22, 1854, in Putnam county, this state, the son of Henry F. and Margaret (Vannice) Kurtz, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. Henry F. Kurtz came to Putnam county, Indiana, with his father from Kentucky, and lived in that county until his marriage and in Hendricks county the remainder of his life. Henry Kurtz served in the Civil War as a member of the Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry and gave three years of his life to that memorable struggle. On July 22, 1864, on the tenth birthday of his son, Jacob L., he was taken prisoner and was held seven months, four months being spent amid the horrors of Andersonville prison. Upon his return from the war he settled in Marion township, this county, where he lived until his death, June 10, 1913. His wife died on May 28, 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kurtz were the parents of eight children: Caroline Francis, the wife of John F. Underwood, of Danville; Jacob L., the immediate subject of this sketch; Eliza, the wife of James A. Hadley, of Danville; William H., who died in infancy; Jennie, the widow of Charles Hadley, of Danville; Charles, whose present home adjoins the old homestead in Marion township; Oscar, a farmer of the same neighborhood in this county, and Wilbert, who died in infancy.

Jacob L. Kurtz received his common school education in the district schools of Marion township and lived the life of the ordinary farmer's boy until he grew to manhood. He worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-five years of age, when he married and began to farm for himself on the farm adjoining his father's farm. Here he continued to live until his removal to Danville, on August 15, 1913. Mr. Kurtz was very successful in his farming operations and when he left the farm in the fall of 1913 he left behind him a record of fifty years' splendid service as one of the leading agriculturists of the county. He kept apace with modern methods of agriculture and introduced the latest improved machinery and as a result his farm was one of the most highly improved and best equipped farms in the county.

Jacob L. Kurtz was married January 12, 1881, to Lucy Tinder, of this county, daughter of William and Catherine Tinder, and to this union there were born five children, three of whom are living, Everett, an attorney in Miami, Florida, and Asa and John, farmers of this county. His first wife died December 9, 1886, and on August 15, 1888, Mr. Kurtz was married to Jennie Tinder, a sister of his first wife, and to this union there has been born one son, Lawrence Stanley, who is now a student in the high school at Danville.

Mr. Kurtz has always been affiliated with the Republican party, but has never taken an active interest in the deliberations of this party. In his religious faith he has adhered to the Presbyterian church, and at the present time is a ruling elder in that denomination. Mrs. Kurtz is a member of the Regular Baptist church. Fraternally, Mr. Kurtz is a member of the Knights of Pythias, holding his membership at North Salem. Mr. Kurtz, who is now in the evening of life, can look back upon a career which was well spent in every particular. He can have the satisfaction of knowing that he has never done anything which would bring upon him the censure of his fellow citizens. Personally, he is genial and unassuming and easily makes friends. He is a man of good habits and kindly impulses and is deservedly popular in the community where he has spent his whole life.

JOHN F. STEVENSON.

Among the representative citizens and prosperous farmers of Hendricks county, Indiana, is the gentleman whose name appears above, who is the owner of a fine landed estate in Marion township, and is carrying on the various departments of his enterprise with that discretion and energy which are sure to find their natural sequence in definite success, having always been a hard worker, a good manager and a man of economical habits, and, being fortunately situated in a thriving farming community, it is no wonder that he stands today in the front rank of the agriculturists of this favored locality.

John F. Stevenson, the son of Patton and Elizabeth (Ragland) Stevenson, was born in 1852 in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His father's birth occurred in Kentucky in 1798, and after reaching maturity he came to Hendricks county, Indiana, settling in Marion township, near New Winchester. Patton Stevenson was married three times, his first marriage occurring before he came to Indiana, and to this union there were three children born, all of whom are deceased, Vincent, Mrs. Sallie N. Pierson and Morgan. After the death of his first wife, Patton Stevenson married Catherine Brandenburg, and to this marriage were born three children, Tolliver, deceased; Squire and Mrs. Susan Ann Graham. His second wife died and he afterwards married Elizabeth Ragland, a native of Kentucky, and to his third marriage were born six children, Patton, deceased; Elsie Jane, deceased; Mrs. Pattie Graham; George Howard; Mrs. Cassandra Flynn, deceased, and John F., the immediate subject of this sketch. Patton Stevenson was a quiet, hard-working farmer, who accumulated an estate of over three hundred acres of excellent land in Marion township. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church and in his church affiliations he was both consistent and faithful. Politically, he was a Democrat, but was never active in the councils of his party.

John F. Stevenson received his early education in the district schools of his home neighborhood and lived at home until his marriage, which occurred in 1875, at which time he was united to Paulina Harris, the daughter of Thomas W. and Eliza Jane (Stephenson) Harris. Her father was a native of Kentucky and came to Putnam county, Indiana, with his parents at the age of four years, settling in Jackson township. William Harris came from Kentucky at an early date and entered a large tract of land from the government in Putnam county, and his son, Thomas W., spent his entire life on this farm, his death occurring January 5, 1910. He was one of the largest land owners in the county and had over one thousand acres at the time of his death. His wife is still living on the old homestead farm in Putnam county at the advanced age of eighty-four. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Harris were the parents of three children, William, Paulina, wife of Mr. Stevenson, and Melinda, deceased.

Mr. Stevenson began farming one mile south of his present farm and lived there for thirty-two years, coming to his present place on October 16, 1907. His farm of nine hundred twenty acres, two hundred of which is in Putnam county, is one of the largest individual farms in central Indiana. He has brought it to a high state of cultivation and has improved it in every way until it is one of the model farms of the county. It is needless to say that he has been a successful farmer, since his place will bear witness to his ability along agricultural lines. He still has active charge of the management of his farm and takes an active interest in everything which pertains to the conduct of his large estate.

Mr. Stevenson has long been a member of the Democratic party, but has never held any public office or evinced any desire along that line. His extensive land holdings have necessitated his concentrating his attention upon his property interests with the result that he has had little time to mingle in politics. He and his wife are loyal and consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church at New Winchester, and are generous and willing contributors to its support. Mr. Stevenson has always been a hard worker, and although he has been very successful along material lines he has never allowed his success in worldly affairs to blind him to the higher duties which he owes to society. Thus he has always been a supporter of all public-spirited movements in his community and all worthy enterprises enlist his hearty cooperation. Consequently he is highly esteemed by all of those with whom he has been associated.

JOHN E. VESTAL.

It is not an easy task to describe adequately a man who has led an eminently active and busy life and who has attained a position of relative distinction in the community with which his interests are allied. But biography finds its most perfect justification, nevertheless, in the tracing and recording of such a life history. It is, then, with a full appreciation of all that is demanded and of the painstaking scrutiny that must be accorded each statement, and yet with a feeling of satisfaction, that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the details of such a record as has been that of the honored subject whose life now comes under review.

John E. Vestal, the son of Benjamin and Anna Vestal, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana. His father also was a native of Hendricks county, his grandfather having come from North Carolina in the early history of the state. The Vestals trace their ancestry back to colonial times and have even traced a direct descent back to the Vestals of old England. The mother of John E. Vestal was born in Hendricks county, and both his father and mother are still living at the hearty age of eighty years, making their home with their son, John E. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Vestal were the parents of five children: Willis S., born May 11, 1858, and died October 8, 1875; Mrs. Alice Mills, born April 9, 1866, the wife of Elwood Mills, a farmer of this county; Benjamin Corydon, a farmer and stock raiser of Washington township, married Cora Belch; Charles Louder, born January 18, 1873, a farmer of Guilford township, married Sallie Parks and has one dauether. Esther.

John E. Vestal received his early education in the district schools of his township, and early in life began to follow the occupation of a farmer. There is no angle to the agricultural profession which he does not understand, and has always made it a point to keep in close touch with all the latest ideas on farming. A glance at his fields of corn and wheat will convince the casual onlooker that he has been a successful farmer. On his farm of three hundred and sixty acres he raises all of the crops of this part of the state as well as a large amount of stock annually for the market. However, he has made a specialty of stock raising, as his father did before him; his father had the reputation of being one of the best stock raisers in the central part of the state. His son is following in the footsteps of his father.

Mr. Vestal was married December 28, 1887, to Antoinette Moore, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Moore, of Plainfield.

Mr. Vestal is a member of the Friends church and a generous supporter of its various activities. In his political relations he has always adhered to the Republican party, but has never been a seeker for any public office. However, he was treasurer of Hendricks county in 1904 and 1905. Mr. Vestal is a man of vigorous mentality and strong moral fiber, and has achieved great success in his calling and is eminently deserving of the esteem in which he is held in the community where his entire life has been spent.

JOHN T. LEE.

It is always pleasant and profitable to contemplate the career of a man who has won a definite goal in life, whose career has been such as to command the honor and respect of his fellow citizens. Such in brief is the record of the well known farmer whose name heads this sketch, than whom a more whole-souled man it would be difficult to find within the limits of Hendricks county, where he has long maintained his home and where he has labored not only for his own individual advancement and that of his immediate family, but also for the improvement of the entire community, whose interests he has ever had at heart.

John T. Lee, well known farmer of Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, who was born in this county on April 19, 1864, about three miles north of Plainfield, is of Irish parentage, being the son of John and Catherine (Dugan) Lee, both of whom were natives of county Galway, Ireland. John Lee (father of the subject) was bereft of both parents while still a boy and emigrated to America when twenty years old, landing at Quebec in Canada. He remained in the Dominion for one year, when he came direct to Hendricks county, Indiana, where he passed the remainder of his life. When first coming here he worked out among the farmers of the county by the month, and for three or four years after his marriage, in 1861, continued this mode of employment. Then, with the aid of a brother, he purchased a forty-acre farm near Tilden. There he lived for perhaps a couple of years, when he disposed of that land and bought the forty-acre tract where the subject of this sketch now makes his home. John Lee was energetic, thrifty and prosperous and to his original forty acres he added from time to time until at the time of his death he had accumulated one hundred and fifteen acres of excellent farming land. His death occurred on July 4, 1879, preceding his wife by a number of years, as her death took place on June 26, 1904.

John T. Lee, subject of this sketch, received his education in the schools of Hendricks county. He was one of a family of six children and remained under the paternal roof until the time of his marriage, in 1902, to Ellen E. Flynn, born in Marion county, Indiana, on April 15, 1870, the daughter of Patrick and Mary (Kelley) Flynn, both of whom were natives of Ireland, the former coming from county Roscommon and the latter from county Galway. They both came to this country when about seventeen or eighteen years of age, both landing in New York City. Patrick Flynn worked in New York for a few months and then went into New Jersey, where he was employed on a truck farm for seven and one-half years. Mary Kelley went direct to Philadelphia, upon landing in this country, where she worked for a short time and then went to Woodbury, New Jersey. It was there she and Patrick Flynn met and were married. They came to Indiana in 1857, settling in Marion county, where they remained one year, and then removed to Hendricks county, southeast of Plainfield, where for four years he worked on various farms for a share of the crops. He then returned to Marion county, where he purchased a farm and lived there the balance of his life, his death occurring February 18, 1901. He outlived his wife, who passed away on July 13, 1888. It was on this homestead in Marion county that Ellen E. Flynn was born in an old log cabin, and there she lived until the time of her marriage, with the exception of one year spent in the city of Indianapolis.

After Mr. Lee's marriage, he took his bride to his old home where he and his mother had lived for several years and where the subject is living at the present time. The farm is about six miles northeast of Brownsburg and is in an excellent state of cultivation. Mr. Lee, in addition to general farming, pays considerable attention to a good grade of live stock, it being his belief that no strain is too good for general purposes.

Politically, Mr. Lee has always given his support to the Democratic party, in the affairs of which he has always taken an active, though quiet, part. His fraternal affiliation is with the Ancient Order of Hibernians and both he and his wife are communicants of the Roman Catholic church. Mr. and Mrs. Lee have but one child, a daughter, Mary Catherine, who remains at home with them. The family is one of the most highly respected in the community and Mr. Lee does his full duty as a citizen in all the affairs of the locality affecting the moral, social or material welfare of his fellow citizens. He is a man who makes friends and holds them by reason of his sterling worth. He is well known in Hendricks county and is eminently deserving of mention in a book of the scope intended in the present work.

ARTHUR SPEARS.

In touching upon the life history of the subject of this sketch the writer aims to avoid fulsome encomium and extravagant praise; yet he desires to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life—a life characterized by perseverance, energy, broad charity and well-defined purpose. To do this will be but to reiterate the dictum pronounced upon the man by the people who have known him long and well.

Arthur Spears, a progressive farmer of Eel River township, was born February 28, 1865, on the farm where he is now residing, two and one-half miles northeast of North Salem, Hendricks county, Indiana, the son of Robert K. and Jane (Trotter) Spears. Robert Spears was born near Danville, Boyle county, Kentucky, in 1834, and came to this county with his parents, John and Martha Spears, the year following. They located about two miles northeast of North Salem, where John Spears entered a large tract of government land and farmed for the remainder of his life. He started in as a pioneer in every sense of the word, built a rude log cabin in the woods, cleared his ground and opened the way to civilization in this part of the county. He was a Whig in politics until the Republican party was formed in 1856, and then voted for the Republican candidates until his death. Robert K. Spears was reared on this farm under these primitive conditions, and upon reaching manhood was married to Jane Trotter, the daughter of Isaac and Lucy (Simms) Trotter, natives of Virginia, who had come to this county in an early day. After his marriage Robert K. Spears followed the vocation of farming the rest of his life on the farm where Arthur now lives. He was a Republican in politics, was a trustee of his township and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He died September 15, 1910, while his wife's death occurred January 10, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Spears reared four children, Adelia, deceased, who was the wife of William Dean, of North Salem; Arthur; Annie, deceased, who was the wife of Nathan Tucker, and Omar, who died at the age of thirty-two years.

Arthur Spears has spent his entire life upon the farm where he is now living, with the exception of about ten years when he was a molder. At the age of twenty-three he went to Indianapolis and learned the molder's trade, and for the next ten years was employed at that trade in that city, Cincinnati and St. Louis. He has also been in California for two years on a fruit ranch, but has always considered this county his home. He is the owner of one hundred and eighty-seven acres of excellent farming land in this township, two residences on his farm, excellent barn and silo, and all of the modern improvements, machinery and accessories which constitute the successful farmer's equipment.

Mr. Spears was married September 13, 1896, to Anna Walton, who was born at Winterset, Iowa, on a farm, the daughter of Amos and Letitia (Gowin) Walton. Mrs. Spears' mother was born in this county and her father in Ripley county, this state. Her parents were married in Hendricks county and then went to Iowa, where they lived the remainder of their lives. The father is deceased, and her mother is now living at Adel, in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Spears are the parents of two children, Gerald and Mary. Mr. Spears is a man of progressive ideas and tendencies and has made a decided advancement in the location to which his energies have been devoted for so many years. As a citizen he is wide-awake and enterprising and a typical representative of the large and intelligent class of yeomanry which give character and stability to the body politic, and to which Indiana is so largely indebted for the proud position which she today occupies among her sister states.

JOSEPH S. CARTER.

Among the successful, self-made men in Hendricks county whose efforts and influence have contributed to the material upbuilding of the community, Joseph S. Carter occupies a conspicuous place. Being ambitious from the first, but surrounded with none too favorable environment, his early youth was not especially promising, but, resolutely facing the future, he gradually surmounted the difficulties in his way and in due course of time rose to a prominent position in the commercial, agricultural and financial circles of his community, besides winning the confidence and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact, either in a business or a social way, and for years he has stood as one of the representative men of the locality honored by his citizenship.

Joseph S. Carter, the son of William K. and Mary (Crouch) Carter, was born in Davidson county, North Carolina, August 30, 1851. His grandfather was Richard Carter, a native of Scotland, who married Sarah Tigg. His maternal grandfather was Richard Crouch, a native of Germany. Richard Carter came to America from Scotland when he was a lad of sixteen and settled in North Carolina. He was one of four brothers, and was a pioneer school teacher in North Carolina, dividing his time between farming and teaching. He was in the War of 1812 and also in the Black Hawk War in 1832, and lived to be over eighty years of age. The school building in the county in which he taught for so many years is still known as the Carter school, although there have been several buildings erected on the same ground, the present building being a structure of four rooms. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carter were the parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters. At the time of the discovery of gold in California three of the brothers removed to that state, where they have since made their homes. They have married, reared families in that state and have been very successful. Some of them have made visits back to the old home. William K. Carter, the father of the immediate subject of this sketch, took part in the Mexican War. after which he returned to his home in North Carolina, where he followed the occupation of a farmer. He was for a number of years the overseer for a large plantation owner by the name of Joseph Spurgeon, and had seventyfive negroes under his charge. He did not marry until after he came back from the Mexican War, and after a number of years as overseer he engaged in farming on his own account. At the opening of the Civil War he enlisted in the Confederate army in Company I, Forty-second Regiment North Carolina Infantry, and served throughout the war. He took part in scores of battles in many states, having fought in the West at the battle of Vicksburg and in the East in the battle of the Wilderness. He was severely wounded in one of the last engagements of the war and never fully recovered from the effects of this disability. After the close of the war he returned to his home in North Carolina and lived there until he was about fifty years of age, a highly respected farmer. Mr. and Mrs. William Carter were the parents of nine children, only two of whom are now living, Joseph S., the immediate subject of this sketch, and Mrs. Margaret Everhardt, of Thomasville, North Carolina.

Joseph S. Carter was reared in North Carolina and received his education at the Carter school, which has been mentioned, and Piney Grove and Wautown, a suburb of Old Salem, North Carolina. At the age of nineteen he started out to seek his fortune and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, arriving at Amo on the 24th day of November, 1869. He took employment with the farmers of the neighborhood and worked in this line for about three years, after which he bought forty acres of land south of Stilesville, this county.

but did not move onto this farm. Later he purchased forty acres one and one-half miles south of Amo, and to this small beginning he has added acreage from time to time until he is now the owner of four hundred and fitty-five acres of fine farming land in the county. He has made a remarkable success as an agriculturist, and has gained a reputation as a feeder of stock which cannot be excelled in the county. He nas made a specialty of raising corn and hay and then feeding all of it on his farms. At one time he, in partnership with Jacob Phillips, had seven hundred hogs, which they were fattening for the market. This was in the year 1874, at the time of the famous grasshopper plague in Kansas, when they were able to buy hogs in that state at their own price. Mr. Carter has exercised wonderful judgment in all his financial transactions, with the result that he is now recognized as one of the most substantial farmers of Hendricks county.

Mr. Carter was married on January 26, 1873, to Sarah J. Masten, of this county, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Masten, and to this union there have been born four children: Arthur L. married Maude Underwood, and now lives on a farm of one hundred sixty acres west of Amo; Charles Burton married Nellie Hazlett and resides on a farm one-half mile south of Amo; Lewis, who died in infancy, and Ada, who married William Everett Atkins, and they have one son, Howard Carter, four years old, who is the delight of his grandfather's heart.

Mr. Carter now resides on the Masten property adjoining Amo on the south, where he has a fine modern home, with all the conveniences of the city. He was unanimously elected as a member of the town council of Amo and has taken a very active interest in the affairs of the town. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his church relations he is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church of Amo and contributes liberally of his means to its support.

Mr. Carter is a fine type of the self-made man, and although he only had twenty-five dollars when he landed in this county, in 1869, he has, by thrift and economy, accumulated a very comfortable fortune. In addition to his heavy landed interests, he has a large amount of money loaned on mortgages. Mr. Carter is a genial man, pleasant to meet and has a host of friends throughout the county. He helped organize the First National Bank at Amo, Indiana, being a charter member and was a director.

ROBERT BELL.

That the plenitude of satiety is seldom attained in the affairs of life is to be considered a most beneficial privation, for where ambition is satisfied and every ultimate end realized, if such be possible, apathy must follow. Effort would cease, accomplishment be prostrate and creative talent waste its energies in inactivity. The men who have pushed forward the wheels of progress have been those to whom satisfaction lies ever in the future, who have labored continuously, always finding in each transition stage an incentive for further effort. Mr. Bell is one whose well directed efforts have gained for him a position of desirable prominence in the agricultural circles of Hendricks county, and his energy and enterprise have been crowned by a gratifying degree of success.

Robert Bell is a native of this county, born on February 28, 1845, in what is now Lincoln township, being the son of Moses and Jane (Harbison) Bell, both of whom were natives of Ireland, coming to the United States from county Down about 1832. They entered eighty acres of government land about one mile south of Brownsburg, and after a few years they purchased from a Mr. Dunn forty acres which joined their farm on the east. Later on they purchased another eighty-acre tract about two miles south of the land they first owned, where Moses Bell passed the remainder of his life. Moses Bell was the son of John Bell, who died in Ireland, and it is thought his mother's maiden name was Jane Troutman, but this is not known positively. Moses Bell was one of the leading citizens of his day and community and deserved much credit for the station to which he attained. He arrived in Hendricks county a stranger from another land, without means, and at the time of his death he occupied an enviable place in the regard of those who knew him and had amassed considerable of this world's goods. He ever conducted himself so as to win the confidence and esteem of those with whom he came in contact, and throughout his life in this section he was always glad to endorse any movement having for its ultimate aim the betterment of the moral or material good of the community. He was a stanch supporter of the Republican party and took an active interest in the administration of that party's affairs. He filled one or two minor offices at different times, discharging his duties in a manner satisfactory to all.

Robert Bell was one of a family of five children, himself being the only one remaining out of the family. John died in infancy and Isabelle, Eliza J. and Mary A. died later in life. Robert Bell's mother died when he was but nine years of age, when the eldest sister assumed the duties of the homekeeper and acted in this role until her death. After that, the father made his home with the subject. Mr. Bell remained at home until the time of his marriage, on September 26, 1868, receiving under the careful guidance of his father instruction in the labor of husbandry. After marriage, he continued to live on the home farm until the father's death, when he purchased property in Brownsburg and has since divided his time between the home in town and the farm.

Mrs. Robert Bell was Miss Mary A. Barlow before her marriage, a daughter of Theophilus and Susan A. (Moberly) Barlow. The Barlow family were originally from Kentucky, but came to Indiana at a very early date in the state's history and settled in Hendricks county. They at one time owned a very large tract of land about three miles south of Brownsburg. Mrs. Bell was one of a family of nine or ten children and remained under her father's roof until the time of her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Bell have been born ten children, three of whom died in infancy. Clyde W. married Mary Cook and died February 7, 1905, leaving one child, a boy, Fave. A little daughter, Melvina, had preceded him into the life beyond. Lloyd S, went to Canada when a young man and there married a young lady who died when their child Robert was a year or two old. Lloyd and his son Robert are living on a homestead in British Columbia. Grace J. and Ernest E. were twins; the latter never married and lives in Brownsburg. Grace J. met her death when her father's home was destroved by a fire caused by exploding gasoline. She left a young son Vance, who lives with his grandfather and is a promising boy, attending high school in Brownsburg. Charles H. married Ida Phillips, daughter of James and Melvina (Gray) Phillips. They reside in Brownsburg and have a family of three children, namely: Mabel Elizabeth, Horace and Thomas Grant. Nellie S, has been twice married. Her first husband was Thomas Anderson and when a widow she married Walter Roach. She was the mother of four children, one only by the first husband, and all have passed away except one son, Lawrence Roach. Myrtle Z., another daughter of Mr. Bell, died when twenty-one years of age, and Estella C. and Clara P. were the names of two little daughters who died in infancy.

Mr. Bell's religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian church, of which he is an active and consistent member. He is a man of generous impulses and genial disposition, who readily makes friends and retains them. He has been a stalwart Republican ever since attaining his majority and for his party has served as road superintendent and road supervisor at different times. His conscientious discharge of the duties thus devolving upon him met the approval of all concerned. In addition to the general farming conducted by Mr. Bell, he has given particular attention to the breeding of shorthorn cattle, and has been the most active stock buyer and shipper in the township for the past twelve years. For seven years he was in the farm implement business in Brownsburg and prides himself on the fact that his sales for one season have never been equalled in that town. Among other implements, sold that season, he disposed of thirty-eight binders and twentyeight mowers, an enviable record truly. In common with all men of affairs, Mr. Bell has met with reverses at different times, but he has not permitted himself to be permanently handicapped by them, but has with renewed effort set himself to repair the breach. At the time of the death of his daughter, Grace, his town house was destroyed, at a loss of eighteen hundred dollars, and the same spring the house on the farm was also destroyed by fire. These material losses were small indeed to him when compared with the great loss which could not be replaced. Mr. Bell is a man of sterling qualities of character, patient and scrupulously honest in all the relations of life, hospitable and charitable, and he has gained the approval and high esteem of his fellow citizens because of his upright life. Because of his earnest character and business success he is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of the one at hand.

THOMAS KINNEY.

A man's reputation is the property of the world, for the laws of nature have forbidden isolation. Every human being either submits to the controlling influence of others or wields an influence which touches, controls, guides or misdirects others. If he be honest and successful in his chosen field of endeavor, investigation will brighten his fame and point the way along which others may follow with like success. The reputation of Thomas Kinney, one of the leading citizens of Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, having been unassailable all along the highways of life, according to those who have known him best, it is believed that a sketch of his career will be of benefit to the reader, for it has not only been one of honor but of usefulness also.

Thomas Kinney, one of the most successful farmers of the county, was born not far from his present home on April 4, 1869, the son of John and Bridget (Mullin) Kinney, both of whom were natives of county Galway, Ireland. They emigrated to America early in their married life and came directly to Indiana, where for a short time they lived in the city of Indianapolis. John Kinney then secured work on a farm in Marion county and in this way passed about seven years. By judicious saving he was able, at that time, to invest in a farm and found a tract of forty acres on the Hendricks-Boone county line that was what he desired, the farm being located in Hendricks county. The family lived there for two years, and it was during that period that the subject of this sketch was born. That tract was then disposed of and a farm of one hundred and ten acres in Brown township, Hendricks county, was then purchased, being the land on which subject now resides. John Kinney was a man eminently deserving of a great amount of credit, for through his own perseverance and untiring energy he was able to accumulate a considerable property, at the same time making a good living for his family, and so ordering his life as to win the confidence and respect of his fellow men. His death occurred in 1909, his wife having preceded him by ten years. They reared a family of three children, only one of whom married. Thomas Kinney has remained unmarried, and so has his sister Delia, the two of them making their home in the old homestead. Owing to the ill health of Miss Delia Kinney, her brother has a man and his wife to assist them about the place, the wife looking after the housework and the husband doing the duties about the farm, Mr. Kinney acting merely as an overseer

Mr. Kinney conducts his business in such a manner as to attest his excellent business ability and in addition to the general farming carried on, he also gives particular attention to his stock, believing that care and attention to this phase of farm work greatly repays the time and labor expended. He also takes great pride in the quality of grain produced and to this end is a student of proper methods of agriculture along modern scientific lines and the proper rotation of crops. His farm shows the thought and care put into it and is one of the up-to-date farms of the county.

Politically, Mr. Kinney is an ardent supporter of the Democratic party and ever since attaining his majority he has taken a deep interest in public affairs. While not desiring offce for himself, his influence has ever been considered by those seeking that honor, as he has ever been desirous of seeing the right party in the right place. Both he and Miss Delia are communicants of the Roman Catholic church and their lives are consistent with its teachings. Mr. Kinney is quiet and unassuming in his manner and because of his success in the material affairs of life, his influence in local matters and the unblemished character which he bears, there is accorded to him the fullest measure of popular confidence and esteem throughout the community.

IOHN WALSH.

Though several years have passed since the subject of this sketch was transferred from the life militant to the life triumphant, his personality is still fresh in the memory of many of the citizens of Hendricks county, and especially Brownsburg, where the latter years of his life were spent. Because of his many excellent personal qualities and the splendid and definite influence which his life shed over the various communities in which he lived and which he labored so earnestly to upbuild in any way within his power, it is particularly consonant that specific mention should be made of him in a work containing mention of the representative citizens of the county. A man of high moral character, unimpeachable integrity, persistent energy and excellent business judgment, he stood "four square to every wind that blew" and throughout the locality where he lived he occupied an enviable position among his fellow men, by whom he was universally esteemed.

John Walsh was born in county Galway, Ireland, in March, 1835, being the son of John and Hannorah Walsh, both of whom were natives of that county and passed their lives therein. The subject came to America in 1863, coming direct to Hendricks county and locating at Plainfield, which he considered his home for many years, while hiring out at farm work. He later purchased eighty acres of land three miles north of Brownsburg, where he lived for ten years. He then disposed of that tract and rented a farm two miles south of Brownsburg, where he made his home for two years, later purchasing property in the town of Brownsburg, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring September 7, 1910. After locating in Brownsburg, he engaged in the grocery business and later in the saloon business for some time, continuing therein until his retirement from active business pursuits.

On February 14, 1874, Mr. Walsh was united in marriage with Mary Ann Fahy, who was born March 17, 1862, in Franklin county, Ohio, being a daughter of Edward and Margaret (Hart) Fahy, both of whom were born in county Galway, Ireland. Edward Fahy first came to America about the year 1853, and after living here for a while he returned to his native land, where he remained for six years. He then returned to the United States and located in Brown township, this county, where he purchased a farm and passed the remainder of his life. Mary Ann Fahy was one of a family of eight children, the others being Martin, Thomas, Margaret, Kate, Edward, Patrick and Bridget.

To John Walsh and wife were born a family of seven children, namely: Nora, who is employed as saleswoman in a store in Brownsburg; Margaret, who is Mrs. James Tarpey and lives on a farm in Brown township, this county. She is the mother of three daughters, Fanchon, Mary and Martha. The third child of the family was Mary, who died when small. Catherine is a teacher in the public schools of Hendricks county, being stationed at present in Brownsburg. John is an undertaker and is associated with the Evans undertaking establishment in Brownsburg. Two children out of this family, Edward and Vina, remain at home with the mother. The entire family are communicants of the Roman Catholic church, and stand high in public estimation by reason of their sterling worth and many excellent qualities. While John Walsh's life on earth has closed, he still lives through the lives of the children he sought in every way to rear to perfect manhood and womanhood.

JACOB LOCKHART.

The gentleman to a review of whose life the reader's attention is here respectfully directed is recognized as one of the energetic, well-known farmers of Hendricks county, who by his enterprise and progressive methods has contributed in a material way to the advancement of the locality where he lives. As a mere lad of sixteen he joined the army during the Civil War and served his country gallantly and faithfully for two years. In the course of an honorable career he has been successful in the manifold lines to which his efforts have been directed and, enjoying distinctive prestige among the representative men of his community, it is eminently proper that attention be called to his achievements and due credit be accorded to his worth as an enterprising citizen.

Jacob Lockhart, probably the youngest soldier who went to the front during the Civil War, and now a prosperous farmer of Eel River township, was born April 14, 1847, one mile east of Martinsville, Morgan county, Indiana. His parents were Jorman and Leah (Robbins) Lockhart, the father a native of Kentucky, who came to Indiana with his parents, who settled near Martinsville. His father had at one time been a man of means in Kentucky. but lost a great deal of his wealth by trying to help some of his friends. When Jorman Lockhart became of age in Morgan county he entered forty acres of land from the government and there lived and died. Jacob, whose history is here given, was but three years of age when his father died. Leah Robbins, the mother of Jacob, was born in 1825, in North Carolina, the daughter of Jacob and Barbara Robbins. Her parents came to Indiana from North Carolina, making the overland trip in wagons, and about the year 1830 settled in the north part of Marion township, Hendricks county, where her father bought forty acres of land with a log house on it, and on this farm he died, leaving his widow and their children.

After the death of Jorman Lockhart his widow was left with four children, William Thomas, Jacob, James M. and Sarah E. Mrs. Lockhart then moved to her father's farm in Marion township, this county, and here they lived until after the war. William Thomas served in the war in Company H, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, until June, 1864, when his arm was shot off in the battle of the Wilderness and he was compelled to return to his home. He died in 1873. James farmed in Eel River township until his death, in 1913. Mrs. Lockhart died about 1894.

Jacob Lockhart was reared in Hendricks county, and when a stripling youth of sixteen he enlisted on November 25, 1863, in Company I. Ninth Indiana Cavalry, One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment, under General Wilson, and participated in all the marches and engagements under his command until his final muster in 1865. His service extended through Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi and, although he was never wounded, he had many a narrow escape from being captured.

After the close of the war Mr. Lockhart returned to his home in Hendricks county and, although still only a boy of eighteen, he bought a little patch of ground of about five or six acres, on which he worked for two vears, selling out in 1867. Afterwards he bought thirty-two acres near his present home and a part of his present farm. Here is where the fine qualities of Mr. Lockhart are made manifest. He showed indomitable courage and pluck, which is characteristic of successful men and which has brought him that prosperity which he now enjoys. He went into debt for the thirtytwo acres, but, with heart to work, saved his money and, by good management, persevering industry and thrift, soon had the farm paid for and had purchased more land adjoining. He now married and he and his good wife worked hand in hand, Mr. Lockhart attributing no small part of his success to the faithful help which his wife rendered him in their early struggles. He kept adding to his land holdings until he is now the owner of six hundred and eighty-one acres of fine farming land. This does not include the eighty acres which he gave to his son. He raises a large amount of live stock and pays especial attention to sheep and cattle, having at one time had nine hundred sheep and lambs on his farm.

Mr. Lockhart was married on March 5, 1870, to Adeline Davis, the daughter of Walter Davis. Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart are the parents of four children, Oscar and Ruby, who are still with their parents, and twins, who died in early childhood. The family are members of the Christian church. Mr. Lockhart is a loyal and faithful member of the Grand Army of the Republic, which was organized in 1866 at Decatur, Illinois. It is interesting to note that the first national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic was held at Indianapolis in 1866, and that today there are more than five thousand Grand Army posts in the United States. Mr. Lockhart believes that a good recipe for success is to attend strictly to one's own business, keep your credit good and refrain from intoxicating liquors and tobacco of all kinds. He has endeavored at all times to live such a life as to keep himself free from the censure of the world. He has been a man of domestic tastes and has been devoted to his wife and family, and yet has taken his full share in the life of the community in which he has lived.

ALBERT L. WEBB.

Fealty to facts in the analyzation of the character of a citizen of the type of Albert L. Webb is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of standing and affairs, more than any other consideration, that gives character and stability to the body politic and makes the true glory of a city or state revered at home and respected abroad. In the broad light which things of repute ever invite, the name and character of Albert L. Webb stand revealed and secure and, though of modest demeanor, with no ambition as a leader of men, his career has been signally honorable and it may be studied with profit by the young entering upon their life work.

Albert L. Webb, for sixteen years postmaster for the town of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born January 29, 1863, the son of Ira C. and Lorinda (Shirley) Webb. Ira C. Webb was born in New York state and when about sixteen years old came westward, with his mother, to live with a brother of hers who had located near Pittsboro, this county. There he made his home until the time of his marriage to Lorinda Shirley daughter of William P. and Lydia (Pugh) Shirley, both of whom were natives of North Carolina who had located in Marion county, this state. Albert L. Webb was the only child of this union and when one year of age was taken to live with his mother's parents, where he remained until his marriage on February 7, 1883, to Florence Messick.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Webb farmed for a year or two and in 1897 Mr. Webb was appointed postmaster at Brownsburg, which position he held until July 1, 1913. In 1904 he opened and operated Brownsburg's first hotel, which was located in the Hunter block, he and wife operating it in connection with the postoffice. At the end of four years, they disposed of this hostelry and Mrs. Webb took charge of a stationery store which had been run in connection with the postoffice. In 1913, after giving up the postoffice, Mrs. Webb enlarged her store when the postoffice was moved across the street from its former location. She deals in stationery and notions and is succeeding admirably. Mr. Webb is a painter and paperhanger by trade and has followed that occupation for the past thirty years in addition to his business interests elsewhere.

Mrs. Webb was born November 11, 1864, in Greencastle, Indiana, the daughter of Samuel and Armilda (Lynch) Messick. They were both natives of the Hoosier state, Samuel being born in Ladoga, a son of John Messick, who was an extensive landholder near Ladoga. Mrs. John Messick died when her son, Samuel, was quite a small infant. Armilda Lynch, mother of Mrs. Webb, was a daughter of Colonel John and Lucy Lynch and was twice married. Her first husband was John McGinnis and to their union were born four children, William, Lucy, Elizabeth and Ella, the first born dying in infancy. William McGinnis was operator for the Big Four Railroad Company in Brownsburg for eight years. After the death of John McGinnis, his widow married Samuel Messick, by whom she had one child, Florence, the present Mrs. Webb. When Florence was fifteen years old, her mother departed this life. To Mr. and Mrs. Webb have been born five children, namely: Raymond A., who is engaged in insurance business; Eugene, who graduated from high school in 1913 and now operates a tailoring and pressing establishment in Brownsburg; Neil, who is still in school; Chester, the second child, died at the age of nineteen months, and the fourth child died when twelve weeks old, having never been named.

Mr. Webb is a member of the respected order of Freemasonry and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He is interested in the welfare of the Christian church, of which Mrs. Webb is a member, and takes a very active part in the affairs of the church. She also belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star, the Daughters of Rebekah and the Pythian Sisters. She filled the chair of district deputy grand chief in the last named order. Mrs. Webb is a woman of many excellent qualities and no small business ability and numbers her friends on a large scale. She is a lady of splendid personal qualities of character and liked by all who know her. Mr. Webb has become well and most favorably known throughout the community for his loyalty to the truth, his uprightness in business, his public spirit and his friendly disposition. He and his wife are among the most influential and popular citizens of their community, being abreast of the times in every way and always willing to give their time and substance, if need be, to further any movement looking to the betterment of the locality where they reside. religiously, socially or educationally.

JAMES W. RUSE.

It is with pleasure that the biographer has an opportunity to place before the readers of this work the life record of the honorable gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, for he is deemed eminently worthy of representation along with the best and most industrious citizens of Hendricks county, owing to the fact that he belongs to the energetic and enterprising class that has made this favored section one of the most noted and richest in the great Hoosier state and has the added credit of having raised himself to this enviable position solely through his own efforts, his early years having been a time of hardship for him. Enjoying distinctive prestige as a farmer, he has achieved marked success, while his practical intelligence, mature judgment and sound business principles have had much to do in moulding public sentiment in the community where he has long maintained his home.

James W. Ruse is a native of the state of Ohio, born in Perry county, near New Lexington, on January 19, 1857, the son of George and Clara (Brown) Ruse. The mother died when the subject of this sketch was but five years of age, leaving two other children besides him. The father kept the little family together for two years, until the beginning of the Civil War, when he enlisted in Company C. Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving throughout the rebellion. Previous to becoming a soldier he took as his second wife Maggie L. McPherson. When the subject of this sketch was seven years old, his father bound him out to one Charles VanNatta, of Perry county, Ohio, Mr. VanNatta was a good master to him, permitted him to go to school whenever possible, and gave him good training in agricultural work. When he became of age and the period of his bound service was over, he received from Mr. VanNatta the customary compensation. This was the gift of a horse, saddle and bridle or its equivalent in money. Mr. Ruse chose the money, receiving one hundred and twenty-five dollars. For a year thereafter he worked for one of the farmers in that community and at the end of that time was married and came to Indiana, locating in Marion county. He was there but a short time, when he removed to Hendricks county where he rented the Arbuckle farm, an eighty-acre tract, and lived thereon for four years. He then moved in with the Prebster brothers on their farm a mile and a half west of Brownsburg. They were unmarried and too old to work their farm and Mr. and Mrs. Ruse cared for them and their farm for four years. During that time they bought one hundred and six acres adjoining the Prebster land and built a home on it and after the four years with Prebsters spent three years on their own farm. They then moved back with the Prebster brothers and remained with them for thirteen years, a total of seventeen years, or until the death of Christian Prebster. They then moved onto their own farm. taking Reuben Prebster into their own home and cared for him until his death, a year and a half later. In consideration of the care given by Mr. and Mrs. Ruse. Reuben left the Prebster farm to Mrs. Ruse. Mr. Ruse then bought property in Brownsburg and built thereon a comfortable home where he has since resided.

After the close of the war, George Ruse, father of the subject of this sketch, came to Indiana and settled in Marion county for a time, later coming to Hendricks county. He took up his residence near Brownsburg and there passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring on September 21, 1906.

On January 28, 1880, Mr. Ruse was united in marriage with Jennie Nixon, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Diller) Nixon, both being natives of Ohio. Her mother died when Mrs. Ruse was a little girl of six years and she remained in the eare of an elder sister until her tenth year, when she went to make her home with an aunt, remaining there four years. She then began earning her own way in the world, but continued to make her home with her sister until the time of her marriage to Mr. Ruse. To their union has come one child, George E., born February 4, 1883. He is married, his wife being Elva Lowder, daughter of James Lowder, of Brown township, this county, and they have two interesting children, Raymond L. and Lois Irene. The subject takes just pride in these two children, dividing his time between them and the work of his farm. He has always been considered one of the best farmers in his section, conducting his business in a manner to win and retain the respect and confidence of his fellow men, and the success he has won has come to him as a result of untiring energy and wise management.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ruse are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, being considered among the most earnest of its members. They give liberally of both time and means to further the cause of that society. Mr. Ruse takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of the community as affecting the educational, moral and material welfare of the people and gives his support to every worthy benevolent or charitable object. He has lived and labored to worthy ends and is one of the sterling citizens and representative men of his community.

JOHN F. BROWN.

It is proper to judge of the success of a man's life by the estimation in which he is held by his fellow citizens. They see him at his work, in his family circle, in church, hear his views on public questions, observe the operation of his code of morals, witness how he conducts himself in all the relations of society and civilization, and are, therefore, competent to judge of his merits and demerits. After a long course of years of such daily observation, it would be out of the question for his neighbors not to know of his worth, for, as has been said: "Worth makes the man" and "Actions speak louder than words." In this connection it is not too much to say that the subject of this sketch has passed a life of unusual honor, that he has been industrious and has the confidence of all who have the pleasure of his friendship.

John F. Brown, well known citizen of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in Brown township, this county, in the part now known as Lincoln on November 4, 1854, being the son of Daniel and Polly N. (Ballard) Brown, both of whom were natives of the state of Kentucky and were brought to Indiana in their childhood by their respective parents. Daniel Brown was the son of Daniel Brown, Sr., whose wife, Elizabeth (Short) Brown, was a native of Delaware. The father of Polly Ballard, mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, was Beverly Ballard, originally from Kentucky, a man well known in his community. Upon coming to Indiana, Daniel Brown, Sr., settled in Hendricks county, where he acquired government land in Brown township, about three miles east of Brownsburg, and there he passed the remainder of his life. He was one of two brothers who came at the same time to this locality and from them the settlement which became the town of Brownsburg got its name. Daniel Brown, Sr., was the father of a family of eleven children, among them being Daniel, Jr., father of the immediate subject of this sketch. Daniel Brown, Ir., remained under the parental roof, assisting his father in the work about the home place, until the time of his marriage. He then took up his abode on a farm near that of his father, and passed the remainder of his life there his death occurring in February, 1862. The widow continued to live on the home place, surrounded and assisted by her children, and there her death occurred on March 23, 1883. She was the mother of eight children, four of whom died in infancy.

After his mother's death, John F. Brown continued to reside on the home place and in 1886 was united in marriage with Dora B. Gore, daughter of Silas and Sarah (Barnes) Gore, the former of whom was a native of Virginia and the latter a Hoosier by birth, having been born in Shelby county. In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Brown arranged to rent out their farm and took up their residence in Brownsburg. At that time he also purchased a farm on the edge of the town, three acres of which were within the corporation, and there they lived for nine years, building their present home on Main street in 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Brown were the parents of two children, one of whom died in infancy, the other being Grace, wife of Byron Ayres, son of John L. and Ella (Gorham) Ayres. Byron Ayres was born in Brownsburg and has lived in or near there all his life, at present residing on the Gorham farm one mile east of Brownsburg. He and his wife have one child, Agatha Leona.

Politically, Mr. Brown gives his support to the Democratic party and takes a deep and commendable interest in public affairs. He served as a member of the advisory board for a number of years, discharging the duties of that position in a way satisfactory to all. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Presbyterian church, in the affairs of which Mr. Brown also takes an interest, although not being a member himself. All throughout his life, Mr. Brown has given evidence of unflagging energy and ambition and has won for himself a competency, being possessed of his excellent home in Brownshurg and one hundred and thirty acres of the old homestead. He is a man of many praiseworthy traits of character, being scrupulously honest in all his dealings with the world, generous and pleasant, possessing rare fortitude and good judgment, advocating clean policies, wholesome living and honesty in business. Needless to add that such a man has a host of friends and stands high in the estimation of all who know him.

GABRIEL NICHOLAS RUDD.

Conspicuous among the representative men and public-spirited citizens of Hendricks county. Indiana, was Gabriel Nicholas Rudd, who died on January 8, 1913, at a time in his career when he was a most useful member of society. He made his influence felt for good in his community and was a man of such sterling worth that his name will be long remembered by those with whom he was closely associated. His life had been interwoven with the interests of the community in which he resided and his efforts were always for the material, moral and intellectual advancement of the same. The well regulated life he led gained him the respect and admiration of all of his fellow citizens and the heritage he leaves to his widow and children is that of a life well spent in the service of his fellow men.

Gabriel Nicholas Rudd was born May 9, 1873, in this county and died January 8, 1913, his death being the result of injuries received in a railroad wreck at Terre Haute, Indiana. His parents were Jehu and Sarah (Lasley) Rudd, both of whom were natives of this county. Jehu Rudd received his education in his home schools and, after leaving school, worked on his father's farm until his marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Jehu Rudd were the parents of eight children: Norton, who married Josephine Osborn; Orpheus, who married Anna Hastings; Thomas, who married Alice Adams; Zula, the wife of Oscar Smith; Gabriel, the immediate subject of this sketch; Ray, who married Alice Wright; Grace, who died at the age of eight years, and Erwin, who is unmarried.

Gabriel N. Rudd received a good, common school education and from his boyhood up was a youth of more than ordinary seriousness, and was taught to look upon the better and brighter side of things. As a boy he knew what it was to work and when he was only fifteen years of age he came to Indianapolis and learned the box-making trade. He continued to reside in Indianapolis until two years after his marriage, when he moved to Clay township, Hendricks county, where he remained the rest of his life. As a farmer he was recognized as an up-to-date agriculturist, who kept fully abreast of all the latest advances in farming methods.

Mr. Rudd was married on September 28, 1895, to Luella Kendall, the daughter of Harry and Mary Kendall, and to this union were born three children, Lottie Verenia, who died at the age of seventeen months; Eloise and Theodore. Mr. Rudd was very much attached to his family and was essentially a domestic man in his tastes. He was never happier than when seated by his own fireside, and the joys of conjugal bliss were made complete by the chatter of his little children and the gentle voice of his loving wife.

Mr. Rudd was affiliated with the Republican party, but was never actively engaged in the campaigns of his party. He was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons at Indianapolis, belonging to Center Lodge. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Amo, Mr. Rudd being a trustee at the time of his death. He always took an active interest in religious affairs, believing the church was the greatest single instrument for good in our country. He lived such a life that he could "wrap the drapery of his couch about him and lie down to pleasant dreams," with the assurance that his sleep was only to be an awakening in a better and brighter world.

JAMES F. HARDIN.

Clearly defined purpose and consecutive effort in the affairs of life will inevitably result in the attaining of a due measure of success, but in tollowing out the career of one who has attained success by his own efforts there comes into view the intrinsic individuality which made such accomplishment possible, and thus there is granted an objective incentive and inspiration, while at the same time there is enkindled a feeling of respect and admiration. The qualities which have made Mr. Hardin one of the prominent men of Brownsburg have also brought him the esteem of his fellow townsmen, for his career has been one of well-directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods.

James F. Hardin, the present postmaster of Brownsburg, was born in Boone county, this state, on August 20, 1865, the son of William Elliott and Hannah Elizabeth (Lackey) Hardin, both of whom were natives of this state. William Elliott was born in Marion county and Hannah Elizabeth Lackey was born near Red Key. William Elliott Hardin was a son of Isaac I. Hardin, of Kentucky, and was one of a family of six children. The father was engaged in agricultural pursuits and young William Elliott remained at home until the time of his marriage, in the meantime receiving from his father instructions in the secrets of agriculture. After his marriage he lived in Marion county for a time and then moved to Boone county, where he had purchased an eighty-acre farm in the southeastern part of that county and there they lived for a few years. It was on that farm the immediate subject of this sketch was born and, when he was five or six years old. William Elliott Hardin traded that tract for a farm of sixty acres located about two miles north of the town of Lebanon. There he lived for some five or six years, when he moved to Lebanon and later back to Marion county to the farm of Isaac, his father, where they lived for some three or four years, or until the death of Isaac Hardin. William Elliott Hardin then moved to Clermont, near Indianapolis, when he remained for six years, engaged in the sawmill business. After selling that business, he moved to Brownsburg, where he passed the remainder of his life. His death occurred on October 25, 1893, being killed while working about a clover seed huller. He was a man of quite a mechanical turn of mind and after moving to Brownsburg he purchased a complete threshing outfit, in which he seemed to take much pleasure aside from the profit derived from the operation of same. His wife, Hannah Elizabeth, passed from this life in August, 1909.

James F. Hardin was one of a family of seven children, the others being Isaac, Matilda J., Anna, Ella, Kinkley and Claude. James F. remained at home until the time of his marriage, assisting his father in his various ventures. After marriage he made his home in Brownsburg, but for ten years was on the road for the McCormick Harvester Company. He decided to settle down to a business which would permit him to be more at home, and decided upon the jewelry and optical business. He went to Indianapolis to learn his trade, often walking the distance in order to save the expense of travelling otherwise. He was diligent in his work and in a remarkably short time felt justified in attempting business on his own responsibility, and opened up a business in Brownsburg where he has continued until the present, making for himself an excellent reputation in his chosen field of endeavor.

On November 3, 1805, Mr. Hardin was united in marriage with Maggie L. Cook, who was born November 23, 1871, in Brownsburg, the daughter of Nathan and Mary J. (Moses) Cook, both natives of Ohio, having been born near Hillsboro. When but fifteen years old, during the nation's hour of trial in the early sixties, young Nathan J. Cook enlisted as a drummer boy in Company A. Fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. However, he never served in the capacity in which he enlisted, for, being large for his age, he shouldered a musket and went to the front. Soon after the close of the war he was married in his native Ohio and not long after that brought his wife to Indiana, coming direct to Brownsburg where he was connected with the sawmill and lumber business. On October 12, 1808, the boiler in his sawnill exploded, killing him outright. The same explosion also blew out one side of the residence occupied by the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Nathan Cook lived some years after her husband, her death occurring on October 19, 1910. They had a family of six children. Those besides the wife of the subject are Cora, Glenn. Eveline, Lottie and Walter. Maggie L. remained at home with her parents until the time of her marriage to subject. Nathan Cook was considered one of the leading men of the town in his day and did much to advance its best interests, both morally, educationally and materially. He was active in local politics and served as town trustee for a term or two. His manner of life was such as to win the friendship of his fellow men and he retained their high regard.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardin have one son, James Gordon, who attends the grade school of Brownsburg. Mr. Hardin's political affiliation is with the Democratic party, in the administration of whose affairs he has ever had a keen interest. He has been one of the town's trustees for two terms and was town marshal for one term, serving seven years in all, and in the discharge of the duties this devolving upon him he showed a spirit of equity and broad-mindedness that stamped him as a worthy citizen. On July 1, 1913, Mr. Hardin received the appointment as postmaster of Brownsburg, which position he now occupies. While not a member of any church, Mr. Hardin has been active in religious circles, and has done much to assist the local society of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mrs. Hardin is an earnest and consistent member. In all the elements of good citizenship, Mr. Hardin is all that a man should be and because of his genuine worth and the high personal character he possesses, he enjoys a well deserved popularity throughout the county.

THOMAS MORAN.

It was remarked by a celebrated moralist and biographer that "there has scarcely passed a life of which a judicious and faithful narrative would not have been useful." Believing in the truth of this opinion, expressed by one of the greatest and best of men, the writer of this review takes pleasure in presenting a few facts in the career of a gentleman, who, by industry, perseverance, temperance and integrity, has worked himself from an humble station to a successful place in life and won an honorable position among the well known and highly esteemed men of the locality in which he resides.

Thomas Moran, well known farmer of Lincoln township, Hendricks county. Indiana, was born in Franklin county, this state, on January 27, 1870. the son of John and Bridget (Haley) Moran, both of whom were from county Galway, Ireland. As was quite a custom among young Irish sweethearts years ago, they would decide to try their fortunes in the new world, being unable to see much in the way of opportunity ahead of them in their native land. The young man would come to America first, and after he had attained a competence, or saw an opportunity for his sweetheart to make her own way for a while, he would send for her and they would usually marry soon after her arrival. In this way John Moran and Bridget Haley became emigrants to America. The former came direct to Hendricks county where he worked out by the day among the various farmers around Brownsburg. After his marriage, he moved to Franklin county for a couple of years, and it was while they lived there that the subject of this sketch first saw the light. John Moran had saved all the money he possibly could aside from actual living expenses, and was enabled to purchase a small farm in Hendricks county, where he lived the remainder of his life, his death occurring in July, 1005. The wife still lives, making her home with her son, Patrick C. Mr. Moran was a stanch Democrat, having aligned himself with that party upon acquiring American citizenship, and the family were communicants of the Roman Catholic church. They had a family of five children. Besides the subject, there were Morton, Patrick, Sarah and Delia.

Thomas Moran remained under the parental roof until sixteen years of age, having attended the schools of their home district, and at that time hired out as a day laborer. He continued in this line of work for about sixteen years, when he purchased sixty acres of land, making a payment of nine hundred dollars down on same. On that property he lived for about five years, when he traded it in on his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres, situated about three and one-half miles east of Brownsburg. There he engaged in general farming, raising about the average crops, devoting particular attention to thoroughbred short-horn cattle and Poland China hogs, in all of which he is signally successful.

On February 16, 1909, Mr. Moran was united in marriage with Bridget Corliss, born February 1, 1868, in this county. She is a daughter of Thomas and Julia (Collins) Corliss, both of whom emigrated from county Galway, Ireland, when young and unmarried. He came first to this county and after their marriage they bought eighty acres of land near Brownsburg and to this they added from time to time until at their death they were possessed of some three hundred acres. Mrs. Moran remained with her parents until she was about twenty-five years of age, when she entered domestic service and continued to make her own way in the world until the time of her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown has been born one child, a daughter, Marguerite Mary. Both Mr. and Mrs. Moran are communicants of the Roman Catholic church and, politically, Mr. Moran is affiliated with the Democratic party.

On his farm Mr. Moran is enjoying life to the full, realizing, as the public at large is realizing more than ever, that the farmer today is to be envied rather than his condition deplored, as was at one time the case. Mr. Moran's life has been one of unceasing activity and perseverance and the notably systematic and honorable methods he has followed have won for him the unbounded confidence and regard of all who have formed his acquaintance. He has worked his way from an humble beginning to his present station, which fact renders him the more worthy of the praise that is duly accorded him by his fellow men.

SMITH R. DAVIS.

Among the strong and influential citizens of Hendricks county the record of whose lives have become an essential part of the history of this section, the gentleman whose name appears above occupies a prominent place, and for years he has exerted a beneficial influence in the localities honored by his residence. His chief characteristics are keenness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and motive and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the community.

Smith R. Davis, than whom no resident of North Salem, Hendricks county, Indiana, enjoys a higher degree of popular confidence and regard, is a native of Hendricks county, born in Eel River township on the 20th day of July, 1845, and is the son of Benjamin Franklin and Jane (Russell) Davis, being their only child. Benjamin Franklin Davis came to Hendricks county in 1820, when six years of age, with his parents, Enoch and Nancy (Hart) Davis. They came from near Mount Sterling, Kentucky, to which locality Enoch Davis' father had gone from his native state of Virginia, taking with him his bride. Enoch Davis was the father of a family of nine children, of whom Benjamin Franklin was one. After coming to Hendricks county, he obtained a tract of government land about a mile and a half northwest of North Salem, where he passed the remainder of his life. In this same locality his son, Benjamin Franklin Davis, settled at the time of his marriage to Jane Russell in 1844, purchasing a tract of land near his father's home. However, he did not remain on this place long, but during his life bought and sold several pieces of ground in and around North Salem, in which town his death occurred in 1909. Jane (Russell) Davis, his wife, was a daughter of Silas Russell and was one of a family of nine children. She was a native of Kentucky and in 1842 came to Hendricks county with a neighbor, thereafter, until the time of the marriage, making her home with her brother, Smith Russell, who came to this county some time before.

Smith R, Davis remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage to Jane C. Brown, in 1866, shortly afterwards purchasing the farm adjoining his home. Jane C. Brown was the daughter of George M. and Martha (Dermott) Brown, and her death occurred in 1873. She left one child, Benjamin Marshall Davis, who is professor of nature study and agriculture at the Miami University at Oxford, Ohio. Benjamin Marshall Davis is married and had one daughter, Catherine L., who died at the age of eighteen years. In 1875 Mr. Davis took as his second wife Martha (Robbins) Kesler, daughter of John and Lydia (Parsons) Robbins, and to their union has been born one child, Lydia Jane, who is now the wife of Urbin L. Williams, son of Alexander M. and Martha (Griggs) Williams. Lydia Jane and Urbin L. Williams have one child living, Rodger Davis Williams. All are residents of North Salem.

Politically, Mr. Davis gives his loyal support to the Republican party, being active in the affairs of same. He was appointed as township trustee of Eel River township and served for two terms, 1887 to 1889, and was again elected, serving from 1900 to 1905. Since removing to North Salem he has been active in the party's affairs, as related to that city, and is at present serving as town clerk and treasurer of North Salem. His fraternal affiliations are with the time-honored body of Free and Accepted Masons and also the Knights of Pythias. Both Mr. and Mrs. Davis are members of the Order of the Eastern Star, and both hold church membership with the Christian church, doing all within their power to further the interests of that society. It was in 1890 that Mr. Davis removed his family to North Salem and disposed of his farm holdings in 1900, since which time he has devoted his time and energies to the political work devolving upon him and in the conduct of the affairs of his home.

Mr. Davis is a veteran of the Civil War, having served toward the close of the war as a corporal in Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. His father, who was also an officer, being lieutenant in Company F, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. However, the father, Benjamin Franklin Davis, was not able to finish the campaign, having contracted pneumonia soon after the company went into service and being thus incapacitated.

Mr. Davis is a man whom to know is to admire, for he has led a most exemplary life, and has sought to do his duty in all relations with his fellow men, being a man of honor, public spirit, charitable impulse and unswerving integrity and enterprise; consequently, he is eminently deserving of mention in a history of his county, along with other well known and representative citizens.

THE BROWNSBURG STATE BANK.

The history of banking in Indiana goes back to the year 1814, when the Territorial Legislature of Indiana passed an act providing for a central bank, with fourteen branches. The Constitution of 1816 provided for a bank, part of whose stock should be held by the state of Indiana, and this continued in effect until the adoption of the new Constitution of 1851, since which time the state has had no interest in any bank. The banks of Indiana have passed through many crises and during the internal improvement era of Indiana, many of them were forced to surrender their charters. Since 1851 the Legislature of the state has passed many laws providing for the organization of banks and at the present time the banking system of Indiana is founded upon as good a statutory basis as can be found in any of the states of the Union.

The Brownsburg State Bank was organized April 1, 1908, with the following officers: Joseph A. Tharp, president, and John L. Marsh, cashier.

The bank has had a very prosperous career since its organization and at the close of the fiscal year, October 21, 1913, it issued the following statement of its financial condition: Resources—Loans and discounts, $102,945.90; overdrafts, $138.52; bonds and securities, $4,592.00; banking house, $4,000.00; furniture and fixtures, $3,000.00; other real estate, $1,466.92; due from banks and trust companies, $26.847.52; cash on hand, $7,094.90; cash items, $5,518.60; current expenses, $710.01; total resources, $156,314.37. Liabilities—Capital stock paid in, $25,000.00; surplus, $3,000.00; exchange, discounts and interest, $3,280.62; demand deposits, $85,018.69; time deposits, $39,967.96; due to banks and trust companies, $47.10; total liabilities, $156,314.37.

The bank does an ever-increasing business and justly merits the success which has come to it. Its officials enjoy the confidence of Brownsburg and vicinity, and this fact alone is one of the most valuable assets of the bank. A good bank is an important factor in the material advancement of any community and the Brownsburg State Bank is performing a useful service for all the varied interests of this locality.

WILLIAM H. SHIELDS.

One of the conspicuous names on the list of Hendricks county agriculturists is William H. Shields, proprietor of a fine farm in Franklin township, a gentleman of high standing to whom has not been denied a full measure of success. Long recognized as a factor of importance in connection with the farming and stock raising industries here, he has been prominently identified with the material growth and prosperity of this part of the state, his life having been closely interwoven with the history of the county where he has been content to live and follow his chosen vocation for over a half century.

The Shields family is one of the oldest and most highly respected families in Hendricks county and has for nearly three-quarters of a century been a prominent factor in the material welfare of this section. The Shields family came from Tennessee early in the history of the state and first settled in Owen county, Indiana, the paternal grandfather, Henry Shields, dying in Putnam county. John H. Shields, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Putnam county, Indiana, January 16, 1834. His parents were Henry and Jane (Dick) Shields, both of whom were natives of Tennessee.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN H. SHIELDS

Henry Shields came to Putnam county in 1829, where he immediately entered eighty acres of land from the government and proceeded to make his home in this wilderness. He settled in the heavy timber near Greencastle, clearing the land and erecting a hewed-log cabin. He was active and industrious, became widely known and stood high in the esteem of those who knew him. Mr. Shields resided in this county until his death, in 1889. His wife, Jane Dick, the daughter of Jacob Dick, was a woman of more than ordinary intelligence and took a great deal of pride in her children. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Shields were the parents of eight children: Jacob, who married, first, Mary Elrod, and after her death, Ann (McCarty) Cox; William, whose death occurred in his twenty-second year; Harriett, the wife of Harrison Elrod; Mary, wife of John Phillips; Louisa, wife of Jacob Phillips; Elvina, wife of Joseph Elrod; James, who married Mary Gibbons; John H., the father of the subject of this sketch.

John H. Shields married Phoebe Garrison, the daughter of William and Lavina (Reese) Garrison, and to this union there was born one son, William Harrison, the subject of this sketch. After the death of his first wife, John H. Shields married Amanda J. Mason, the daughter of Anselm and Alice (Shouse) Mason. The parents of the first wife of John H. Shields reared six children, Mary, Elizabeth, Harriett, Phoebe, John and Pickney; the parents of the second wife had eight children, Harriett, Eliza, Josephine, Amanda, John, Merritt, Weekly and Wickliff.

As a boy of ten years, John H. Shields assisted his father in driving stock from Putnam county to the market at Lafayette, and also hauled wheat to that place, receiving fifty cents a bushel for it.

John H. Shields is one of the oldest and most successful farmers in the county, and his farm of one hundred and ninety-eight acres, partly in Franklin township and partly in Putnam county, has the reputation of being one of the best improved and most productive of the farms in central Indiana. He has been a life-long Democrat in politics and always casts his ballot for the candidates of that party. He and his wife are loyal members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Coatesville, and contribute liberally of their means to its support.

William Harrison Shields, proprietor of two hundred and fifty-one acres of land in Franklin township, this county, is the only son of John H. Shields. He received his education in the Putnam county schools, and when a small lad started to work on his father's farm. Upon his marriage, in 1884, he bought a farm in Hendricks county and began a very successful career as an agriculturist in this county. Before his marriage he attended school for a time in Valparaiso University and since leaving college he has always been interested in the current events of the day. He also makes it a practice to keep in touch with the latest improvements in farming methods, and the result is that he is now one of the most progressive farmers of the county.

William H. Shields was married to Julia A. Newman, the daughter of John L. and Maria (Phillips) Newman, on October 1, 1884, and to this marriage there have been born two children, Stella and Callie, both of whom are still under the parental roof. Mrs. Shields' parents were both natives of Randolph county, North Carolina, her father's birth having occurred in 1820. He came to Hendricks county, Indiana, when he was eighteen years of age and settled on land which his father had previously entered from the government. He married Maria Phillips, daughter of Eli and Elizabeth (Lanous) Phillips, and to this union there were six children born: Laura, who died at the age of six years; Jane, the wife of G. Robinson and the mother of three children. Edward, Joseph and Cordelia; Mary, wife of Frank Johnson, who has two children, Clarence and Luna; Martha married Frank Masten and has three children, Hezzie, Aldie and one who died in infancy; George, who died at the age of sixteen years. The father of Mrs. Shields died on February 20, 1802, her mother having passed away in 1886.

William H. Shields has been a prominent factor in the material, social and moral welfare of the community in which he has lived for so many years. In his religious relations he has been identified with the society of Friends and takes an active interest in the affairs of his church. Politically, he is allied with the Democratic party, although he has never been active in local politics. He is interested financially in the First National Bank of Coatesville and is a director in that institution at the present time. Mr. Shields and his wife have always been interested in all movements which seek to elevate the general welfare of the locality in which they live, and all movements looking to this end find ready and sympathetic helpers in them.

CHARLES H. JORDAN.

Specific mention is made in the following paragraphs of one of the worthy citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, one who has figured in the growth and development of this favored locality and whose interests have been identified with its progress, contributing in a definite measure in his particular sphere of action to the well-being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Additional interest also attaches to his career from the fact that practically his entire life has been passed within the borders of this county. Earnest purpose, mature judgment and every-day common sense are among his prominent characteristics and he has merited the respect and esteem accorded him by all who know him.

Charles H. Jordan is a native of Hendricks county, being born about four miles east of Danville, on September 2, 1849, the son of Joseph W. and Anna M. (Faucett) Jordan, the former of whom was born in Preble county. Ohio, the son of Joseph Jordan. Joseph W. Jordan, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, came to Indiana when a young man and soon after arriving in Hendricks county he met Anna M. Faucett, their marriage taking place soon thereafter. They resided east of Danville until about the year 1850, when they removed to the farm where Charles H. Jordan now lives. Anna Faucett was the daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Ross) Faucett, who it is thought came to Indiana from Ohio, their native state. To Joseph W. and Anna M. (Faucett) Jordan were born five children, three of whom died in infancy. Joseph W. Jordan rendered valuable services to his country at the time of the Civil War. At the beginning of hostilities, he enlisted in Company I. Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served but three months, when he returned home and organized Company K of the Seventy-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, being commissioned captain of same by Governor Morton, and in this capacity he served until near the close of the war, when he returned home owing to ill health. Joseph W. Jordan's death occurred in 1885 and his wife died in 1004. He was considered one of the leading men of his day in his community and was a man greatly honored and respected by a vast number of acquaintances.

Charles H. Jordan received his elementary education in the district schools of Hendricks county, later spending two years in study at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. All the business efforts of his life have been devoted to agricultural pursuits and he is an advocate of modern methods in farming. In 1881 Mr. Jordan was married to Arlen F. Glidewell, a daughter of Leander and Hannah (Hightshue) Glidewell, both of whom were natives of the Hoosier state. Leander is the son of Lewis and Nancy (Talbert) Glidewell, and Hannah Hightshue was the daughter of Nicholas and Jane (Runnells) Hightshue. To the subject and his wife were born four children, namely: Cassie B., the wife of Chester Brunes. They reside three miles southeast of Danville and have a family of three children, Mildred, Glendon and Cecil. Harry C. took as his wife Lilly Lemon, and they live on a farm four miles northwest of North Salem with their two children Joe and Fern. Estella Ruth remains under the parental roof and is a teacher of music. She is a graduate of the Central Normal College at Danville. Joseph C. also remains at home.

Mr. Jordan's fraternal affiliations are with the honored body of Freemasonry, in which he has advanced to the chapter, or Royal Arch, degree and to the council of Royal and Select Masters. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jordan are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Although not a member of any church society, Mr. Jordan's religious sympathies are with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mrs. Jordan is an earnest and active member. Quiet and unassuming in his relations with his fellow men, Mr. Jordan has applied himself to the business of his farm and the care of his home and family. His career has been a consistent and honorable one, and because of his staunch integrity he is entitled to and holds the sincere confidence and good will of all who know him. He has been one of those solid men of brain and substance so essential to the material growth and development of a community and whose influence has been willingly extended in behalf of every deserving enterprise that has for its object the advancement of the moral welfare of the community.

ORA COCKERELL.

For thousands of years, since the earliest days of civilization, the work of the carpenter has been a necessity among men and has been honored by numbering among its ranks some of the brightest lights of history. Since the multitudes of mankind have forsaken tents of skin and huts of clay and have sought for their shelter houses built of wood, the carpenter has plied his trade, advancing and perfecting the details of building as the centuries have passed, until the primitive houses of our ancestors have given place to the present type of building, and our homes, stores and public buildings are marvels of convenience and luxury. Many new inventions in machinery and tools have come to facilitate the work in recent years, and yet, in many of the essentials, the fundamental principles of carpentry have not changed since the days when the Lowly Nazarene stood at his bench in Nazareth, and dignified for all time the profession of carpentry. Today the builder finds his opportunities unlimited, and his profession numbers among its thousands many men of education, ability and wealth.

In our midst we have one member of this profession who is well known and holds an enviable position in the community, Ora Cockerell, the son of a carpenter, was bred to the use of tools. He was born December 8, 1872, in Middle township, Hendricks county, the son of Andrew Jackson and Mary Jane (Griffith) Cockerell.

Andrew Jackson Cockerell was a native of Carroll county, Kentucky, but emigrated to Hendricks county in 1856, making the journey alone and taking up his abode in Middle township. Here he followed the carpenter's trade. building some of the stanch, heavily-timbered houses which still stand as evidence of the thorough workmanship done upon them. Later he learned to be a wagon-maker, but devoted comparatively little time to this work. He was married to Mary Jane Griffith, a native of Hendricks county, who proved a devoted wife and mother. To them were born nine children, as follows: Benjamin Thomas, who died in 1902; Henry Marshall, James Wesley, Willis Elmer, Eva Jane (Pounds), Rosa (Hicks), Ora, the immediate subject of this article, Nettie Marie, who died in January, 1887, and Alice (Davis). In the year 1887 death deprived Andrew I, Cockerell of the companionship of his faithful wife, leaving him a large family of children to rear without her aid and encouragement. He proved himself a kind, patient father, teaching by example as well as precept, and instilling the principles of temperance, sobriety and industry into his boys. He was a member of no church and took no active part in politics, although a consistent adherent of the Democratic party, finding his associations and limiting his outside activities to the local lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of whih he was a member, and to the various social affairs of the neighborhood. He died in 1906, leaving a large, respected family to perpetuate his name and teachings, and many friends who revere his memory.

Ora Cockerell spent his boyhood days in Middle township, Hendricks county, attending the elementary schools of the township, and at the early age of fifteen years learning the carpenter's trade. On December 23, 1896, he married Alta Estella Roseboom, and to them have been born four children, three sons, Paul Gilbert, Charles Harold and Frank, all of whom the allwise Father saw fit to take unto himself in their childhood; and one daughter, Genevieve May, who is the constant companion of her mother and the source of inspiration to her father.

Mr. Cockerell is a man of few words, quiet and unassuming, but his judgment in business affairs is unquestioned, and his advice in public affairs at all times carries great weight with his associates. His life has been one of accomplishment for himself and the community. Starting in life with little capital save his own knowledge of his chosen trade, he has worked conscientiously and well, first as a good carpenter and later as a successful contractor, upon whose word clients can safely depend. His own home is visible evidence of his ability as a builder, being a beautiful, modern structure, thoroughly equipped with every convenience for the comfort of the family and to facilitate the work of the home. The fact that he has twice been elected a member of the town board of Pittsboro, serving two terms in this capacity (from 1906 to 1908 and from 1911 to 1913), speaks more eloquently of the high esteem in which he is held by his fellow men than any words of ours could do.

Firm in his convictions and unswerving in adherence to principle, his political affiliations have not always been with the most popular party; but he has worked diligently for and looked forward to the abolishment of the liquor traffic and its attendant evils in his own community and throughout the nation, and to this end has consistently allied himself with the Prohibition party. Fraternally, he is a member of the Pittsboro Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Knights of Pythias, at Brownsburg, and the Improved Order of Red Men at Lizton. He is a member of the Baptist church of Pittsboro, while Mrs. Cockerell has her membership in the Methodist church.

The K. of P. building at Lizton, the Sawyer block and Hayworth block at Pittsboro, and numerous other buildings throughout the county speak of his ability as a builder, while his reputation for strict integrity, honor, industry and the performance of all good works in his power for the community at large, speak of a life of service, well spent and productive of marked results for himself and his neighbor.

JOSEPH G. WALTER.

The pursuit of agriculture in itself seems to make a peculiar appeal to those characteristics in mankind which tend toward and develop the true and sincere in character. Nearer, in his daily life, to the beautiful heart of nature than any other man, witnessing in all around him the wonders which the Almighty daily performs; seeing in the sprouting of the seed, the purling of the brook and the habits of live creatures the miracles which are hidden from the cliff dweller of the crowded city, is it small wonder that he is uncontaminated by the petty, mean things of life. And as he sees these things in his daily life and work, his nature deepens and truth and sincerity become his natural attitude toward life and his fellow men.

It is of such a man we wish to speak in this article. Joseph G. Walter was born January 29, 1848, in Middle township, Hendricks county, the son of William Eli and Caroline (Reynolds) Walter. His boyhood was spent upon the farm of his father, and here he roamed the fields and learned the fundamental principles of his vocation. He attended the schools of the township, assisting his father with the work of the farm in his spare time.

In 1872 Mr. Walter was married to Virginia Dickerson, but in the year 1880 death called her from him. In 1891 he again married, Azzie Pierson, the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Jones) Pierson, becoming his wife. Three children have come to bless this union, all of whom are still at home with their parents.

During his early life, Mr. Walter was at one time seized with the desire for a change, and this wanderlust led him to seek new scenes and new faces and new occupations in the far West. The beautiful state of Colorado eventually became his goal and there, for five years, he engaged in the work of mining silver, but the love of home and the memories of the green fields of his native county were strong within him and he finally turned his back upon the glories of the beautiful Rockies and returned to the Hoosier state. Here he has since remained, eventually purchasing a farm of about sixty-four acres, lying both in Middle and Union townships, and this tract, with its comfortable house and well-kept buildings, is one of the well known homesteads of the locality.

The subject's father, Eli Walter, was a native of Fauquier county, Virginia, but emigrated while still a young man, to Hamilton county, Ohio, remaining in this place about two years. A residence of about five years in Wayne county followed, and there he met and married Caroline Reynolds, a native of the state of New Jersey. Eleven children were born to them, as follows: Sarah, John W., Nancy Rachel, Lucy Jane (Anderson), Alexander, Joseph G., Martha C. (Thompson), George. Benjamin, William and an infant who lived but a few hours. Of these children but three survive, Joseph G., Lucy Jane and Martha C. Mr. Walter entered land from the government in St. Joe county, and also in Tipton county, this state, but it was in Hendricks county that he chose to spend his days and rear his family. He was untiring in his efforts upon the farm, giving his time and energy to the successful cultivation of the soil, drawing therefrom sustenance for his large and growing family. The faithful wife and mother was called from this earth to her final rest in 1857, and for thirty-three years thereafter he found his comfort in his home and children, until death called him in 1890.

In manner, Joseph G. Walter is quiet and unassuming, yet sociable withal and a man to inspire confidence. His reputation for honesty and veracity is unquestioned and his friends speak of him as a man "whose word is as good as his bond." He is a firm believer in the tenets of the Republican party; a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Pittsboro, and is also affiliated with the Masonic order of that place. He has aspired to no political office, devoting his energies to his home, his farm and the improvement of his surroundings, but in all questions touching the welfare of the community at large he shows a vital interest. Though not an active member of any church, his sympathies are with the Christian denomination. Both he and his wife are devoted to their three children and are popular with the young people in their vicinity.

A man of large acquaintance, many friends and a host of well wishers, his life has been a source of uplift to those with whom he has come in contact, and the community at large is the better for his having lived in it. Thus has he fulfilled man's highest mission in life, to so live that when he is called from hence he shall leave the world better than he found it.

CYRUS H. MASTEN.

One of the best farmers of Hendricks county, who by virtue of his strong individual qualities has earned his way to a high standing in the estimation of his fellow citizens, is Cyrus H. Masten, who, by sheer force of character and persistency, has won his way from a humble beginning to a place of influence and prominence in the community where he has been active for many years. As a young man he taught school for nine years and the training and discipline which he acquired as a result of his teaching experience has made him a valuable man in the life of the community. He always keeps well informed upon all the latest methods of agriculture and comes as near being a scientific farmer as any one in the county.

Cyrus H. Masten, the proprietor of one hundred and thirty acres of fine land in Franklin township, was born July 2, 1854, in the county where he has lived his entire life. His parents were John and Sarah (Harvey) Masten, his father being a native of North Carolina, while his mother was born in Ohio. John Masten came to Hendricks county, Indiana, at the age of five, with his parents, who were farmers, and, after a limited education in the subscription schools of that period, he started to work on his father's farm. While still a young man he married Sarah Harvey, the daughter of Nathan and Ruth (Jones) Harvey, and to this union there were born eight children: One who died in infancy; Ruth, who first married Clark Hodson, and after his death, W. R. Shirley, and later Allen Wicker; Emory, who married Emma Mendenhall; Elmer and Anna, both unmarried and living in Amo; Sarah, deceased; Milo, deceased, and Cyrus, the immediate subject of this sketch.

MR. AND MRS. CYRUS H. MASTEN

Cyrus H. Masten was interested in education from the time that he took his first reader to school, and before he completed his education he had finished the common school course and also the courses at Valparaiso University and the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute. With this preparation he started to teach in the public schools of his county and for the next ten years he was one of the most successful teachers in the county. The teaching profession lost an able instructor when he decided to retire from the school room and engage in farming. He had taught two years before he graduated. As a farmer he has been no less successful than as a teacher, and the same qualities which brought him success in the school room have been of benefit to him in his agricultural career.

Mr. Masten was married to Laura E. Hadley, the daughter of Jehu and Jerusha (Stiles) Hadley, and to this union there were born five children, Verne, Ray H., Floy (who married Ralph Shields and has one child, Donnas Lucile), Earl H. and Eva. The parents of Mrs. Masten were prominent citizens of this county, and raised an interesting family of ten children: Nancy, wife of William Daggy; Mary, wife of Dr. H. Gibbons; Henry, unmarried; George, deceased; Sybil, wife of W. Wilson; Marcus, deceased; Alice, wife of D. B. Matlock; Laura, wife of the subject; Jerusha, wife of Edward Ragland; Jehu, who married Olive Wilhite. The latter two are twins. The mother of Mrs. Masten died in 1800, and her father in 1804.

Mr. Masten is a Progressive in politics, having joined that party upon its organization in the fall of 1912, because he felt that in the principles advocated by that party there was a splendid opportunity for improving the condition of the community at large. He and his wife are devoted members of the Christian church at Stilesville. Indiana, and are interested in all of its various activities. Mr. Masten has always been active in all movements looking toward the welfare of his locality. He has always been a sympathetic and ready helper of all public enterprises. He is a genial man and one who has a host of friends throughout the township and county who admire him for the sterling uprightness of his character.

ELMER SMITH.

The following is the sketch of a plain, honest man of affairs, who by correct methods and a strict regard for the interests of those with whom his business interests brought him into contact, has made his influence felt in Brownsburg and vicinity and has won for himself distinctive prestige in the business circles of that city. He would be the last man to sit for romance or become the subject of fancy sketches; nevertheless his life presents much that is interesting and valuable and may be studied with profit by the young whose careers are yet to be achieved. He is one of those whose integrity and strength of character must force them into an admirable notoriety, which their modesty never seeks, who command the respect of their contemporaries and their posterity and leave the impress of their individuality deeply stamped upon the community.

Elmer Smith was born May 2, 1873, in Pike township, Marion county, Indiana, the son of Elijah and Evelin (McCurdy) Smith, the former of whom was born in Brown township, Hendricks county, on September 29, 1846. He was the son of Thomas D. and Susan (Ford) Smith, natives of Kentucky, who, soon after their marriage, came to Indiana, making the journey on horseback. Thomas D. was the son of Isaac Smith, who was a native of North Carolina and went to Kentucky with his father when a boy. He later moved to Indiana and settled about four miles southeast of Brownsburg in Hendricks county.

Elijah Smith, father of the subject, was one of a family of nine children and lived at home until the time of his marriage, being in the meantime instructed by his father in the proper methods of agriculture. After his marriage, he took up his residence in Marion county, this state, where he had rented a farm on Eagle creek. There he made his home from 1870 to 1900, having purchased one hundred and forty acres of land thereabouts. In 1900 he disposed of a portion of this land and removed to Brownsburg, where he purchased property and now resides. In 1870 Elijah Smith was united in marriage with Evelin McCurdy, daughter of David and Nancy (Hill) McCurdy, and in July, 1902, she died, leaving two children, the subject of this sketch and his brother, Alvin A.

Elmer Smith remained at his father's home until the time of his marriage, having received his education in the district schools of Marion county. After his marriage he took up his residence on a farm he had purchased adjoining that of his father. He remained there until 1903, when he removed to Brownsburg, where he resided for about nine months, and in August of that year he took up his residence on a farm which he had purchased in Brown township, this county. There he lived for three years, when he returned to Brownsburg. In the spring of 1907 he engaged in the retail hardware business in Brownsburg, and remained in that connection until the spring of 1910, when he disposed of his business and engaged in the sale of real estate. For two years he worked at this line and in March, 1012, opened up the first garage in town, known as Smith's garage. He also has the distinction of having started the first hardware business in the town, and on February I, 1914, he again opened up a hardware business in connection with his garage. Mr. Smith has been eminently successful in the various business ventures in which he has engaged and in addition to his present thriving business, owns forty acres of land on the eastern edge of Brownsburg besides the property adjoining his residence, also another house and lot and five lots in the Johnson-Hughes addition to Brownsburg and his business property. He has at various times owned different pieces of property in the town, as well as farms in both Marion and Hendricks counties, all of which he has handled in a way to his own rightful advantage. While engaged primarily in fostering his own interests, Mr. Smith has ever so ordered his principles of private life and business as to win the confidence and respect of those with whom he comes in contact.

On December 29, 1897, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Maud E. Delong, born February 3, 1882, daughter of F. A. and Mollie (Matthewes) Delong, at present residing near Traders Point, this state. Mrs. Smith, however, was born in Michigan. Her father, F. A. Delong, came originally from Boone county, this state, being the son of David and Sally Delong. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have a family of four children, Elva, Mary, Freeda and Russell, all living with the parents. The family is identified with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Smith is an active and consistent member, and his fraternal affiliations are with the time-honored body of Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Order of the Eastern Star and the Daughters of Rebekah. Mr. Smith has all his life been aligned with the Democratic party and has taken an active interest in its affairs. While not an aspirant for office himself, he has taken a keen interest in seeing the right man go into the right place and his influence is a thing reckoned with by those seeking public office. Mr. Smith was elected justice of the peace for his community recently, but refused to serve, at the same time appreciating the honor conferred upon him. He also made the race for county commissioner in 1914. Mr. Smith has always been regarded as a man of high principles, honest in every respect and broad-minded. A man of depth of character, kindness of heart to the unfortunate and ever willing to aid in any way any cause for the betterment of the community and the public with which he has to deal, he is, consequently, held in high favor and the utmost respect by all who know him. Genial and sociable in his temperament, he has a host of friends and retains them throughout the years.

JONATHAN LOWE.

In the early days, when our state was young and sparsely settled, the riches of the earth seemed inexhaustible, and after the arduous labor of clearing away the grand old forests which covered so much of the ground was accomplished, the pioneer farmer found the land fallow and black, ready to produce bountiful harvests each season, without the necessity for specialized training in the science of food production. But gradually, as the magnificent tracts of forest land became more and more scarce and population increased, more was demanded of the soil. And gradually, also, pests of various kinds multiplied to interfere with the growth and blight the maturity of the fruits of the land, until now, agriculture has become a science in itself, and men of high intelligence and broad education find a profession worthy of their utmost effort. This condition of affairs has brought prominently to the front the broad minded, highly educated, specialized agriculturist of today, and with such a man our sketch has to deal.

Jonathan Lowe, son of Nathan B. and Sarah (Coffin) Lowe, is a splendid example of this class of progressive, up-to-date farmer. Himself a product of Hendricks county, he was born October 4, 1880, in Middle township. Here he spent his boyhood on the farm of his father, attending the township schools, and after graduating there, taking the full course in the high school at Lizton. This was followed by two terms in the Central Normal College at Danville.

Mrs. Jonathan Lowe is also a member of a well-known family, being the daughter of William H. Walter, one of the early inhabitants of the county, a successful farmer, and the father of eleven children, as follows: Mrs. Martha Carrie Overstreet; Orrie, deceased; George Elvin and Charles, twins, the latter of whom death claimed in 1912; Mrs. Mertie Keeney; Mrs. Mary A. West; Mrs. Elizabeth Alice Leak; John A.: Jessie Mable, the wife of the subject; Ernest R., and Marion, who died in infancy. Mr. Walter was a member of Company B, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, enlisting shortly before the close of the war and remaining in the service until peace was declared, being mustered out at Indianapolis in July, 1865. He was married in the year 1866 to Anna Eliza Talbert, a native of Hendricks county, and found in her a faithful helpmate and a devoted mother to the children which she bore him. Mr. Walter passed away April 20, 1907. His widow still survives, a well-known and respected resident of Middle township, this county.

Jonathan Lowe and his wife are widely known for their broad mindedness, activity in church and social affairs and the progressive spirit which dominates their undertakings. Mr. Lowe takes great pride in the upkeep of his buildings and the improvement and development of his farm of forty acres, which is a part of the tract of six hundred and forty acres entered from the government by his maternal grandfather. The famous old beaver dam is located on the south part of this ninety acres, and although it is now mostly filled in, it is an interesting landmark, having formerly been considered the best in the county.

On October 4, 1908, Mr. Lowe was married to Jessie Mable Walter, who also is a native of Hendricks county, and one year later the young couple began their residence on the farm which they now occupy. Two sons, Joel Walter and James Elvin, have come to brighten their home.

Mr. Lowe is of Scotch-Irish descent, through his father, Nathan B. Lowe, the son of William and Grace Lowe, of Backcreek township, Randolph county, North Carolina, honest, sturdy adherents of the Quaker church. In 1860 Nathan Lowe migrated to Rush county, Indiana, and a year later came to Hendricks county, where he remained until the day of his death, the 3d day of January, 1903. He was a well-informed, broadminded man, a successful farmer and a useful member of the community.

Early in life he was married to Sarah Coffin, a native of Hendricks county, and to them were born six children: Lydia J. and James (both deceased), Elizabeth Grace, Joseph C., Jonathan and Sarah Alice. His wife was the youngest daughter of Joseph I. Coffin, a large land owner, aggressive in business affairs, though quiet and conservative in manner. One of the early settlers in the county, he entered from the government six hundred and forty acres of land, and by his diligent efforts this and much surrounding land was provided with adequate drainage, greatly enhancing its value and rendering much of it available for valuable farming land which otherwise could not have been cultivated. An inherent trait of character was the desire to use the very best methods of work, and to this end he made the first plows which were used in Hendricks county. This trait is still evident in his descendants.

The most modern methods of work are sought and used in all departments of Mr. Lowe's work, supplementing his own energy and practical foresight by the use of modern tools and machinery. He is interested in the breeding of live stock, which he considers an essential feature on the successful, modern farm. He is a consistent Republican voter and has taken an active part in politics, while his influence is felt in all movements touching the general welfare of the community. Strictly honest, clean cut and decisive in his dealings, he enjoys the fullest confidence of his associates. The Methodist church at Lizton, of which he and his wife are active members, has shown its faith in his integrity by electing him trustee and treasurer of its board of finance. Altogether he stands for what is highest and best in the life of the modern agriculturist.

JOHN A. LEAK.

Few farmers in the locality of which this history treats seem to understand better the way in which to manage Indiana soil in order to get the largest returns from it than John A. Leak, of Union township, a man who has succeeded because he has given his exclusive attention to his individual affairs, studied carefully the relation of soil to crops, climate and all the phases relating to improved farming.

John A. Leak was born January 28, 1858, in the township where he has lived his whole life. He is the son of Landrum and Sarah (Leach) Leak, both his father and his mother being natives of Kentucky. Landrum Leak was born in 1818 and came to this county with his parents, James and Elizabeth Leak, in 1835, when he was seventeen years of age. He grew to manhood under pioneer conditions and became a successful farmer in the township. He was twice married, his first marriage being to Evaline Martin, and the second marriage to Sarah Leach. There was one son born to the first marriage, James M., who died in 1888. To the second marriage were born four children: Mrs. Evaline Jeger, of New Mexico; William L., of Anderson, Indiana; John A., whose history is herein delineated, and George B., a twin brother of John A., who died about 1902. Landrum Leak died in 1890 on a farm in Union township.

John A. Leak received such education as was afforded by his home school in Union township and the two years before his marriage in 1885 he spent in Tennessee. Upon his marriage, Mr. Leak moved to Johnson county near Greenwood, where he farmed for six years; he then went to Kokomo and entered the grocery business and followed this for the next four years, after which he moved back to Hendricks county and settled on the old homestead farm which he rented for two years. He then bought twenty-seven acres one mile south of his present farm, and lived on it three years, when he bought sixty acres where he now lives and later added another forty acres, a total acreage now of one hundred acres. Mr. Leak has been sufficiently progressive to keep abreast of the latest developments in agricultural methods and has won a full measure of prosperity in his present location. He has not only been an important factor in the agricultural life of his community, but he has also been interested in the Citizens Bank at Lizton, in which he is a stockholder and director at the present time.

Mr. Leak was married February 25, 1885, to Nevada Leak, the daughter of James M. and Mary (Dickey) Leak. The biography of James M. Leak, given elsewhere in this volume, gives the ancestry of that branch of the Leak family to which Mrs. John A. Leak belongs. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Leak have two very promising sons living; one son, Warren, died in infancy, the other two sons being Roy and Glenn. Both of the boys graduated from the Lizton high school and later spent two terms in the Central Normal College of Danville. After they began to teach, they spent one year in the State Normal School at Terre Haute in order to qualify themselves for better work in the school room. Roy is now teaching at Stilesville, this county, and Glenn teaches in Marion county, near University Heights.

In his fraternal relations, Mr. Leak is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Lizton, while politically he has long been identified with the Democratic party, but has never been a candidate for any public office, preferring to devote his attention to his agricultural interests. He has a fine residence, which he has recently remodeled and improved in many ways, a large barn, good outbuildings and various other improvements which render his farm a very attractive place. Mr. Leak is a self-made man in every respect and has been a hard worker all of his life. He is a pleasant man to meet, congenial in all of his relations with his fellow men and has always make it a point to identify himself with all worthy public measures.

WILLIAM HENRY APPLEBAY.

Among the old and highly respected farmers of Hendricks county there is no one who stands higher in the esteem of his fellow citizens than the gallant old veteran whose name forms the caption of this sketch. His three-score and ten years have been spent within the limits of this county with the exception of the two years when he served his country so nobly at the front. For the past fifty years he has been actively engaged in agricultural pursuits in this county and the years of his residence here have but served to strengthen the feeling of admiration on the part of his fellow men, owing to the honorable life he has led and the worthy example he has set the younger generation.

William Henry Applebay, one of the youngest soldiers who enlisted from this county for service in the Civil War, was born in Center township, Hendricks county, Indiana, December 2, 1844. His parents were William and Sebith (Sears) Applebay, the father being a native of Lincoln county, Kentucky, born in 1815, and his mother a native of Clark county, Kentucky, born in 1818. The grandparents of William Henry Applebay were Philip and Mary (Walker) Applebay, who reared a large family of ten children. After the death of his first wife Philip Applebay married Susan Dancer and to this second marriage were born seven children. William Applebay, father of the subject of this sketch, came to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1839, locating in Danville, where he remained for the succeeding eighteen years. He then moved to Franklin township, this county, where he remained until his death, which occurred on May 11, 1863. To Mr. and Mrs. William Applebay were born twelve children: Wesley, who married Sarah Fisher, and they were the parents of three children; Mary, who married William H. McCloud, and they are both deceased, and to this marriage were born nine children; Maria died unmarried; William H., the immediate subject of this sketch; Mariah, Milton, Susan, David and Nancy, twins, Martha, Amanda and Isabelle. Nancy, Martha and William H. are unmarried and living today.

When the Civil War broke out William H. Applebay wanted to enlist at once, but on account of his age the local recruiting officer would not take him in. As soon as he reached the age of eighteen he enlisted in Company E, Seventy-eighth Regiment, under Captain A. J. Lee, and served two months. Later he enlisted in Company B, of the Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain J. M. Lee, and was immediately transferred to General Sherman's Twentieth Corps in eastern Kentucky. He was in the eastern part of Tennessee and in March, 1864, started with General Sherman on his memorable march to the sea. He was in all the battles from Resaca, in the northwestern corner of Georgia, through Dalton, Atlanta to Savannah, which was reached on the 25th of December, 1864. He was in the rear and around Atlanta during the months of June and July of that summer. In the spring of 1865 his company was attached to the brigade which went north with Sherman to South Carolina and North Carolina, and he was headed for Greensboro to the surrender of General Johnson to General Sherman in April, 1865, at Greensboro, North Carolina. He served one year and a half in a creditable manner, after which he was mustered out at the close of the service and returned to his home in Hendricks county. Indiana.

When Mr. Applebay enlisted in the army his mother was a widow with a large family of small children. He was their main support, for they were poor and owned no land. He fixed up an old log cabin for them to live in during his absence, but while he was in the service the owners of the cabin put the mother and children out of their little home. However, she bravely struggled to keep the family together, spinning and weaving and making their clothing and doing a man's work as far as was necessary. She was a woman of strong character and reared her children to honorable and respected manhood and womanhood.

For the past half century Mr. Applebay and his two sisters have lived in Franklin township. None of them has ever married, their affection for each other being such that they have always led a very happy existence in their home life together. Here on his farm Mr. Applebay has lived the simple, plain and unostentatious life of a farmer, doing all that came in his way in the best possible manner. Year in and year out he has taken his part in the community's affairs, has been a factor in local politics, although he has never held any office aside from that of district central committeeman. He has always been a factor in the church at Stilesville. In fraternal affairs he has been a Mason for forty years and is one of the best informed men on Masonry in the county. He has passed through all the chairs of the lodge from tyler to worshipful master. It is needless to say that he is a loval and enthusiastic member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the Greencastle Post has no more loval member than Mr. Applebay. He is one of those genial, whole-souled men who always meets every one with a smile. It is his habit to always see the silver lining of the darkest clouds, and his optimistic nature has made him a general favorite with all in the community where he has spent his threescore and ten years. It will not be many years before he will answer the last roll call and when his hearty voice is no more heard in the streets there will have been gone one friend who figured largely in the daily life of this locality. His whole life has been characterized by honesty, truthfulness and all those qualities which mark him as a true citizen.

ELI H. ROSS.

The history of the Hoosier state dates from December 11, 1816. It is the record of the steady growth of a community planted in the wilderness in the last century and reaching its magnitude of today without other aids than those of continued industry. Each county has its share in the story, and every county can lay claim to some incident or transaction which goes to make up the history of the commonwealth. After all, the history of a state is but a record of the doings of its people, among whom the pioneers and their sturdy descendants occupy places of no secondary importance. The story of the plain, common people who constitute the moral bone and sinew of the state should ever attract the attention and prove of interest to all true lovers of their kind. In the life story of the subject of this sketch there are no striking chapters or startling incidents, but it is merely the record of a life true to its highest ideals and fraught with much that should stimulate the youth just starting in the world as an independent factor.

Eli H. Ross, the son of Alexander and Bethiah (Hurain) Ross, was born March 13, 1848, on the farm in Washington township where he is now residing. Alexander Ross was born near Redstone, Pennsylvania, in 1807, and came with his parents to Warren county, Ohio, in 1808. After remaining there a short time, they moved to Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1832, where Alexander Ross bought a farm from Benjamin Abbott Hurain, who had entered same from the government several years before. The wife of Alexander Ross was born August 22, 1809, in Warren county, Ohio, and died June 1, 1884. Alexander Ross, who died in 1858, was a farmer and was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His father, John Ross, was in the War of 1812, and his father, Alexander Ross, greatgrandfather of the subject, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. John Ross had fourteen grandsons in the Union army during the Civil War. He was a resident of Hendricks county and a farmer by vocation.

Eli Ross received his common school education in the schools of Washington township and early in life began to work upon his father's farm. That he was an apt student under his father's tutelage is shown by the fact that he is today one of the most progressive farmers of the township. He was married in 1889 to Linna C. Barker, the daughter of Robert and Dorcas Barker, of Hendricks county. Mrs. Ross was born in this county November 23, 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Ross are both consistent and faithful members of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal church at Avon. Mr. Ross is a member of the Republican party, and has always been more or less interested in political affairs. His party nominated him for township assessor and he was elected, holding the office for four years. He was constable and is at present on the advisory board of the township.

JOHN W. FIGG.

Whether the elements of success in life are innate attributes of the individual or whether they are quickened by a process of circumstantial development, it is impossible to clearly determine. Yet the study of a successful life, whatever the field of endeavor, is none the less interesting and profitable by reason of the existence of this same uncertainty. So much in excess of those of successes are the records of failures or semi-failures, that one is constrained to attempt an analysis in either case and to determine the measure of causation in an approximate way. But in studying the life history of the well known resident and popular citizen of Amo, whose name forms the caption of this sketch, we find many qualities in his makeup that always gain definite success in any career if properly directed, as his has evidently been done, which has resulted in a life of good to others as well as in a comfortable competence to himself.

John W. Figg, the proper and efficient superintendent of the Plainfield schools, was born in Putnam county, Indiana, December 13, 1859. His parents were Robert P. and Abigal (Layton) Figg. His father was born in Kentucky in 1837 and came to Indiana with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis (Asbury) Figg, in 1848 and settled in Putnam county. His mother came from Pennsylvania with her parents to Ohio and later the family settled in Putnam county, this state, where she met Robert Figg. When the Civil War opened, Robert Figg enlisted, in December. 1861, in the Sixty-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died in March, 1862, at the age of twenty-four, leaving his widow and three small children. John W. Figg, the leading subject of this sketch, was only three years of age at the time. The other two children were Elizabeth, who died at the age of twenty-two, leaving her husband, Joseph Warren, and one son, and Rebecca Olive, who married Myron Stanley. She died at the age of twenty-one, leaving one daughter, Elizabeth.

John W. Figg was reared by his grandfather, Francis Asbury Figg, in Putnam county, and was given a good common school education. As a lad he showed promise of future ability along educational lines, and his grandfather sent him to the Central Normal College at Danville and after that he taught eight years in Putnam county. Then, in order to better prepare himself for teaching, he entered the State Normal School at Terre Haute in 1805 and graduated in 1001. Later he went back and took postgraduate work there. In 1894 he was elected county surveyor of this county, and was re-elected in 1896, but resigned in April, 1898, to take additional work in the State Normal School. In August, 1898, he was elected county superintendent of schools and served in that capacity for three years. In May, 1912, he was selected superintendent of the Plainfield schools and has served in that capacity ever since. As a public school superintendent he has been a success, having all of those qualities which a successful superintendent should have. Under his management the schools have increased their enrollment, broadened their curriculum and become an increasingly important factor in the life of the community.

Professor Figg was married in 1883 to Isabell Allee, and after her death, in 1894, he married Osie Stuart, on June 3, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Zeno Stuart, the parents of Professor Figg's second wife, had seven children, four of whom are still living.

Mr. and Mrs. Figg are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Amo, and as a Christian man Professor Figg has wielded a potent influence in this community, while as a public-spirited citizen he has given his earnest support to all movements for the advancement of the general welfare. He possesses a rare equanimity of temper and kindness of heart, which has won for him the sincere regard of all who know him. His mind is rich with the fruits of a life of reading and observation; in fact, he has believed thoroughly and absolutely in doing well whatever he has undertaken. He has at all times enjoyed the confidence of all those with whom he has associated.

CHARLES ROARK.

Improvement and progress may well be said to form the keynote of the character of Charles Roark, a well known and influential farmer and present trustee of Washington township, and he has not only been interested in the work of advancing his individual affairs, but his influence is felt in upbuilding the community. He has been an industrious man all his life, striving to keep abreast the times in every respect, and as a result every mile post of the years he has passed has found him further advanced, more prosperous, and with an increased number of friends.

Charles Roark, the present trustee of Washington township, was born in 1868 in the country where he has always resided. His ancestry is Irish, his grandparents having been born in Ireland, and coming to this country early in the nineteenth century. They first settled in Pennsylvania and later in Butler county, Ohio, from whence they came to Franklin county, Indiana. Caleb and Emily Roark, the parents of Charles, were born and married in Franklin county, Indiana, and came to this county shortly after their marriage, where they reared a family of four children: Fletcher, who is married and a street car motorman in Indianapolis; Jones, who is married and a farmer in Washington township, this county; Charles, single, who is at present the trustee of Washington township; Mary, who is single, and is now keeping house for her brother Charles on the old home place.

Charles Roark received his education in the district schools of his neighborhood and early in life began to work upon his father's farm. For four years he has been farming the Roark homestead place and has improved the farm in many places, putting in ditches, building fences and improving the outbuildings. He is regarded as one of the professional farmers of the township and a man of wideawake and progressive ideas. An indication of the esteem and regard with which he is held by his fellow citizens is shown by the fact that he was elected trustee of his home township, an office which he has been filling to the entire satisfaction of all of the citizens of the township, irrespective of party affiliations. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge at Plainfield, and also a member of the Salem church in his home township. Politically, he is a Democrat. He has hosts of warm friends throughout the township and, because of his reputation for honesty and integrity, he is esteemed by everyone with whom he is associated. As township trustee he has had management of the schools of the township and has been very much interested in securing the best teachers possible and keeping the schools up to the highest state of efficiency. He has also been interested in road building and is taking an advanced step in getting the roads of his township in good condition. It is safe to say that the township has never had a more proper or proficient official than Mr. Roark.

FREDERICK V. BEELER.

The biographies of enterprising men, especially of good men, are instructive as guides and incentives to others. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish. Some men belong to no exclusive class in life, apparently insurmountable obstacles have in many instances awakened their dormant faculties and served as a stimulus to carry them to ultimate success, if not renown. The instances of success in the face of adverse fate would seem almost to justify the conclusion that self-reliance, with a half chance, can accomplish any object. The life of Frederick V. Beeler, well-known and successful merchant of Friendswood, Hendricks county, is an example in point, for by his individual efforts and close adherence to his every duty, he has overcome the obstacles encountered on the highway of life and is now very comfortably fixed regarding this world's affairs and has at the same time won a reputation for right living among his fellow men.

Frederick V. Beeler, one of the most highly respected merchants and business men of Friendswood, was born in Morgan county, Indiana, November 25, 1851. He is one of nineteen children born to Jonas Vestal and Elizabeth (Copenhaver) Beeler, and one of the sixteen who grew to maturity. Jonas Beeler was also a native of Morgan county and some years after his marriage he moved to Marion county, where he bought a farm and lived most of the remainder of his life, dying in 1904. The mother of Frederick V. was born in Ohio, her parents coming from Pennsylvania. She died in 1902.

Frederick V. Beeler was educated in the common schools of Morgan and Marion counties, and early in life was put on his own resources. The success which he now enjoys has been the result of constant effort and unremitting diligence. At the age of nineteen he left home and until he was twenty-five years of age worked at odd jobs, most of the time doing farm work of some kind. When he was twenty-five years of age he started in the huckster business, and for the next thirty-seven years he operated a huckster wagon in connection with a store at Friendswood. His personality and general reputation for honesty and integrity has always given him the confidence of his fellow citizens and he has occupied many public and private positions of honor and trust. He was agent for the Vandalia railroad at Friendswood for fourteen years, and has been agent for the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction Company for the past five years. He was postmaster for eight years, serving during Cleveland's administrations. In fact in everything in which he has engaged he has been signally successful, and his every action has denoted the man who inspires confidence because of his unrightness and frankness in dealing with his fellow men. He has a general store at Friendswood, in which he carries a large and selective stock of up-to-date goods such as are found in stores of this kind, and has a very extensive and lucrative trade in the town and surrounding country. He also has holdings in real estate in the town and county, and is now recognized, after many years of toil, as one of the successful men of the community.

Frederick Beeler was married December 7, 1873, to Ella Jewell, the daughter of Basil and Mary (Wier) Jewell. Her father was a farmer of Sullivan county and a lieutenant in the Civil War. To Mr. and Mrs. Beeler have been born three children: Arthur, born September 11, 1875, who has been married twice, his first wife being Sadie Mull, and his second wife Lulu Rush. There was one daughter, Louisa, born to the first marriage. Arthur is a contractor in Irvington; Charles J., born November 1, 1876, is now with his father in his store at Friendswood. He married Elizabeth Van Cleve; Orpha, born April 6, 1879, who married O. K. Osborn, a druggist of Martinsville; they have one son, Frederick V. Osborn, who is named after his mother's father.

Mr. Beeler is a stanch Democrat, and has always been interested in politics, taking an active part in both local and state campaigns. He has been well rewarded for his services to the party by being appointed postmaster of Friendswood under both of Cleveland's administrations, and the service which he rendered to his fellow citizens showed that he was well worthy of the position. He is a valued member of the Free and Accepted Masons of West Newton, and also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Morgan Lodge No. 211, Mooresville. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and have been regular attendants for more than thirty years. Mr. Beeler has always been very much interested in church affairs and is now a class leader in his church. He is a worthy representative of that type of self-made man who have been important factors in every community of our commonwealth. During his long and industrious career, he has not only gained the confidence of his fellow citizens, but as a man of force of character he has gained the respect and admiration of all of those with whom he has come in contact.

ALPHEUS OSBORN.

It is with marked satisfaction that the biographer reverts to the life of one who has attained success in any vocation requiring definiteness of purpose and determined action. Such a life, whether it be one of calm, consecutive endeavor or of sudden meteoric accomplishments, must abound in both lesson and incentive and prove a guide to young men whose fortunes and destinies are still matters for the future to determine. The subject of this sketch is distinctively one of the representative agriculturists of Hendricks county. For a number of years he directed his efforts toward the goal of success and by patient continuance in well-doing succeeded at last in overcoming the many obstacles by which his pathway was beset, and is today considered one of the foremost farmers of the county.

Alpheus Osborn, the son of Charles and Asenath (Hyatt) Osborn, was born in Randolph county, North Carolina, November 27, 1841. Charles Osborn received only three months' schooling, but from early boyhood was compelled to work early and late upon the farm. Upon his father's death he inherited the home farm and continued the operation of this tract until his marriage. In the fall of 1850, when Alpheus was only nine years of age, the father came to Indiana, settling in Clay township, Hendricks county. He had learned the blacksmith's trade in his native state and had followed this vocation for some time, but when he came to Hendricks county he discontinued the blacksmithing business and devoted all of his attention to his agricultural interests, which he continued to follow until his death. He married Asenath Hyatt, the daughter of Cuthbert and Hannah Hyatt, and to this union there were born five children: Elizabeth, the wife of Robert B. Reynolds; Hannah, who became the wife of John Newman; Cuthbert, who married Minerva Grime, and, after her death, wedded Asenath Carter; Martha Sybil, the wife of Jonathan Carter, and Alpheus.

Alpheus Osborn received some education in North Carolina and completed his educational training in this county, having come with his parents to Indiana when he was nine years of age. He worked on the farm with his father until he was twenty-one years of age.

Mr. Osborn was married to Emily L. Wheeler, the daughter of Alfred and Lydia Wheeler, on August 25, 1866, and to this union there were born five children: Allen E., who married Ella Phillips, and after her death, Leona Smith, and is the father of one child, Dewy H.; Senith E. is the wife of Elmer Wells, and they have two children, Ernest and Alpheus; Lydia J. is the wife of Morton Rudd, and they are the parents of three children, Albert, Lewis and Cecil; Albert married Blanche Wymer, and has one child, Lydia, who first married Roy Cooper and second Marshall Adams, and has one child, Leslie by the first marriage, and two children. Mildred and Josephine, by second marriage; Cecil married Ruth Gladstone; Mary, the fourth child of Mr. and Mrs. Osborn, married Arelius Dilworth, and has two children. Elsie and Edith; Elsie married Hulbert Keys, and has two children, married Helen Daniels.

The father of Mrs. Osborn was born in Guilford county. North Carolina, where he married Lydia May, also a native of that state, and in the fall of 1864 they came to this county and located in Clay township, where they reared a family of ten children: Mary, the wife of Peyton Cox; Malissa died at the age of twenty-seven; Lula married Frank Beard; Alonzo married Matilda Smith; Emma, the wife of Mr. Osborne; Irene, deceased; Francis, deceased; Alfred, deceased; Addison, deceased; Corina married first John Pate, who is dead. The paternal grandparents had seven children: Jesse, who married Lydia Bales; Charles, father of Alpheus Osborne; Samuel and Nathan, deceased; Daniel married first Lydia Walker and after her death Lydia Anthony and Rachel and Lydia, deceased. The paternal grandparents reared a family of nine children: Austin, who married Miss Armfield: Manloe, who married Phoebe Beard; William married Ruth Beard; Elijah married Miranda Fry; Alfred, who married Lydia Macy; John, who married Miss Tucker; Mary became the wife of Dicks Coffin; Cynthia, the wife of Isaiah Dillon; Kazia, who married William Davis.

Mr. Osborn has been a Republican ever since the founding of the party, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. Although he has been a Republican for a half century he has never appealed to his party for an office. He is a member of the Friends church and takes an active interest in all of the work of the church. His has been a useful life and one which reflects credit upon himself, and through all the years in which he has lived in this county his record has been such as to win him a place among the representative men of Hendricks county.

ALVA A. ROSS.

The gentleman to whom the reader's attention is now directed was not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, but in spite of these, by perseverance, industry and a wise economy, he has attained a comfortable station in life, and is well and favorably known throughout Hendricks county as a result of the industrious and honorable life he has lived. He is a modern and scientific agriculturist, thoroughly up-to-date in all his methods and, while advancing his individual interests, he does not neglect his duties as a citizen.

Alva A. Ross, the son of Joseph and Susan Ross, was born at Avon, Indiana, in Hendricks county, May 21, 1857. His parents were born and reared near Cincinnati, Ohio, and moved to Avon, Indiana, several years before the War of the Rebellion and remained there until Alva A. was about ten years of age, when they moved to the farm where Mr. Ross is now living.

Alva A. Ross received his education in the common schools of Washington townshp and started early in life to learn the practical side of farming. That he is well acquainted with all of that store of information which the successful farmer must have at his fingers' ends, is shown by his well-kept farm of today. While he carries on a general system of farming, he has made a specialty of raising black and white Crested Black Polish chickens and white Indian Runner ducks. He has not only found this a pleasure, but a profit as well, and is now recognized as one of the leading poultry fanciers of Indiana. He has won several prizes of silver cups at Indianapolis at poultry shows and in 1911, 1912 and 1913 won the silver cup for his Indian Runner ducks at Danville.

Mr. Ross was married on November 5, 1879, to Emma Swank, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Swank, of Center township, this county. Mrs. Ross was born October 19, 1857, and to this first marriage of Mr. Ross were born three children: Mrs. Ethel Strickler, of Danville, who was born August 10, 1880; Mrs. Hazel McClain, of Washington township, this county, who was born May 2, 1885, and Flora G., who was born March 7, 1888, and died April 29, 1888. The mother of these children died August 11, 1889, and subsequently, in 1894, Mr. Ross married Ida Keith, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Keith.

Fraternally, Mr. Ross is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Danville, while religiously, he and the members of his family are faithful and consistent members of the Regular Baptist church. He was a Republican until 1912, but since then has been a Progressive. He and his wife are members of the Rebekahs at Danville, and Mrs. Ross belongs to the Woman's Relief Corps. Mr. and Mrs. Ross are popular members of the social circles in which they move, and have long been regarded with esteem and respect by all who have the honor of their acquaintance.

ELIEL NEWBY.

Dependent very largely upon his own resources from his early youth, Eliel Newby, of Guilford township, has attained no insignificant success, and though he may have, like most men of affairs, encountered obstacles and met with reverses, he has pressed steadily forward, ever willing to work for the end he had in view. His tenacity and fortitude are due, no doubt, in a large measure, to the worthy traits inherited from his sterling ancestors, who were among the early pioneers of Hendricks county. The first Newbys resided in Hendricks county more than eighty-five years ago, and during all of these years the Newbys have been influential in the material and civic advancement of their county, and by their high ideals and good principles have ever thought to perpetuate the proper views of life.

Eliel Newby, the son of Harmon and Rebecca (Hyatt) Newby, was born in Guilford township, this county, November 5, 1862. Harmon Newby was born in this county on the same farm which was pre-empted by his father in this township in the year 1828, thereby giving the Newby family eighty-six years of history in this county. Harmon Newby left Hendricks county for Kansas in 1881 and lived and died on a farm which he purchased in that state. Mrs. Harmon Newby was born in Randolph county, Indiana, and met her husband in Hamilton county, where she moved with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Harmon Newby were parents of five children: William, a farmer in the state of Washington, married and has two children; Stephen, a blacksmith of Jasonville, who is married and has three children; Jesse, a farmer of Hamilton county, who is married and has six children; Eliel, whose history is herein presented; Thomas Emory, of Kansas, who is married and has one child. Harmon Newby and his wife both died in Kansas in 1800.

Eliel Newby attended the district schools of Guilford township, and at an early age decided that he wished to become a farmer. Until his marriage he worked on his father's farm and on the other farms in the immediate neighborhood, with the result that when he was married he was already one of the best farmers in his township. In this day of specialization it is becoming increasingly customary for farmers to have some hobby, and with Mr. Newby it is fruit raising. Some years ago he became interested in the culture of small fruits and has now under cultivation several acres of his farm in fruits of various kinds, and has found it a very lucrative addition to his regular income from his farm. He owns ten acres of land, of which five are in orchard.

Mr. Newby was married February 19, 1889, to Mary A. Zimmerman, of Washington township, the daughter of Joel and Elizabeth (Cole) Zimmerman. Mrs. Newby's father was a wagon builder by trade and reared a family of seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman are both dead. He died on December 25, 1904, and she on April 15, 1902. There have been five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Newby: Jessie Mae, born April 10, 1800, who is the wife of Charles A. Johnson, of Indianapolis; Florence E., born April 30, 1892, who is still at home; Horace E., born November 18, 1894; Fred E., born April 18, 1896; Lester J., born May 9, 1901. The members of the Newby family are adherents of the Friends church. Mr. Newby has achieved success, because he has given attention along right channels and has been an advocate of honest living and dealing with his fellow men. Though never animated with great ambition for public honor, he has ever lent his aid in serving the general interests of his locality, and is well fortified in his convictions, being at all times public spirited in his attitude towards all things for the benefit of the locality in which he lives. Politically, he supports the Republican party, while, religiously, he is a birthright member of the Friends church.

THOMAS BRITTON KINNAN.

The following is a sketch of a plain, honest man of affairs, who, by correct methods and a strict regard for the interests of his fellow men, was for many years one of the prominent residents of Hendricks county. As postmaster of one of the important towns of the county and as recorder of Hendricks county, he won for himself distinctive prestige in the history of the locality. He would be the last man to sit for romance or become the subject of a fancy sketch, but nevertheless his life presents much that is interesting and valuable, and may be studied with profit by the young, whose careers are yet to be achieved. He is one of those whose integrity and strength of character have forced themselves to the front and as a result he has commanded the respect of all those citizens of his county who have known him so many years.

Thomas Britton Kinnan was born near Vernon, Jennings county, Indiana, April 27, 1846. He is one of nine children born to Thomas and Katherine Ellen Kinnan. His father was a native of New Jersey and his mother of Maryland. They first settled in Jennings county, Indiana, about 1845. He went to Iowa in 1852, from Wayne county, Indiana, and died in 1852. The mother died in Marion county, Indiana, in 1885.

Thomas B. Kinnan was educated in the common schools of Marion and Hendricks counties and when a young man came to Plainfield, Hendricks county. Here he was married March 2, 1869, to Mary Barker Conarroe, and to this union have been born two children, Harry Joel and Daisy Britton. Harry J. was born June 23, 1871, and was married on May 30, 1908, to Rose Althea Myers, and lived at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was a seedsman until he removed to Indianapolis, Indiana. The daughter, Daisy Britton, was born July 8, 1881, and was for many years a teacher in the public schools. She was married on January 17, 1907, to Robert Clark Coffy, of Indianapolis, and has one daughter, Katherine, who was born May 22, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Coffy are now living in Tacoma, Washington.

Mr. Kinnan was appointed postmaster at Plainfield by President Arthur in 1883, and served until the incoming Democratic administration of Cleveland. In 1886 he was elected recorder of Hendricks county on the Republican ticket and served in that office for four years. His son, Harry J., was chief deputy under his father during his full term of office. As postmaster and as recorder Mr. Kinnan was an efficient official and administered the duties of his important offices with judgment and ability. Mr. Kinnan lived in Hendricks county until 1904, when he moved to Indianapolis, and in the fall of 1910 removed to Guilford township, where he bought six and one-half acres of land.

Mr. Kinnan is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Grand Army of the Republic. He and his wife are members of the Christian church, of which they are faithful and loyal supporters. Mr. Kinnan has led a busy and useful life, and as a public official and as a private citizen he has lived such a life as to merit the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens. He enlisted on August 10, 1862, in Company C, Seventieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under General Harrison, for eight months and re-enlisted in Company I, Sixty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was discharged April 10, 1866, and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Danville, Indiana.

HORACE REEVE.

In his special line of effort, probably no man in central Indiana has achieved a more phenomenal success or a larger record than Horace Reeve, who is not only a farmer of large importance, but is also a dairyman of high reputation. For a quarter of a century he has given his particular attention to the dairy business and because of the eminent success which he has achieved he has gained a reputation which extends far beyond the borders of his own locality. Sound judgment, wise discrimination and good common sense have so entered into his make-up as to enable him to carry on his business along lines that have insured his success. Because of his splendid record and his high personal qualities, he is eminently deserving of representation in the annals of his county.

Horace Reeve, the youngest of six children of Charles and Malinda (198sup) Reeve, was born in Guilford township, this county, November 7, 1853. The other five children of the family were: Jonathan F., deceased; John J.; Sarah; Hadley, deceased, and Mary. Charles Reeve was born in New Jersey in 1816 and came with his parents to this county in his youth. His parents first settled in Marion county, near Indianapolis. Charles Reeve was a man of more than ordinary ability and before he reached his majority he was engaged by the local authorities to teach school in his own township.

and for the next three years he followed this profession and was still teaching when he was married. His wife was the daughter of John and Ruth Jessup, of Guilford township; she died at the age of forty-two. Charles Reeve lived on the farm on which he moved in 1858, until his death, in 1807.

Horace Reeve received a good education at home at the hands of his worthy father and in the subscription schools, which were conducted in his neighborhood. After completing his common school education he worked for his father on the home farm.

Mr. Reeve was married February 4, 1881, to Flora E. Allen, and to this union was born four children: Alice M., deceased at the age of nine; Wendell A., born September 26, 1884, a graduate of Earlham College and now with the Utah Copper Mining Company at Bingham, Utah; J. Evelyn, of Indianapolis, who married Lawrence H. Barrett, a member of the Evans Milling Company, has two children, John R. and Barbara; Wilma, born in 1890 and a graduate of Earlham College. The first wife of Mr. Reeve died April 1, 1898, and on May 28, 1900, he was married to Olma Hadley, the daughter of Atlas and Elizabeth Hadley. His second wife died July 11, 1905.

Mr. Reeve has been a life-long supporter of the Republican party, but has never been active in politics. His interests for the past twenty years have been centered in his dairy, and he has at the present time one of the most expensive and successful dairies conducted by any farmer in central Indiana. The state board of inspection has complimented him upon the arrangement and equipment of his dairy and upon the sanitary manner in which it is managed. Mr. Reeve takes an interest in every department of public life which affects his fellow citizens and the general advancement of the community and has been an efficient influence in its progress and achievement. He is a faithful member of the Friends church, as are the other members of his family and takes a deep interest in the spiritual work of the church. His career has been a consistent and honorable one throughout, Because of his integrity and accomplishment, he is entitled to the sincere confidence and good will of all who know him. He and his good wife have raised a family which is an honor and credit to them, and in these children may be seen the influences which have molded their characters and made them the valuable members of society which they are today. The family residence is one of the most charming homes in the community, being substantially built of brick and surrounded by a spacious and well-kept lawn and beautiful forest trees.

SOLOMON D. EDWARDS.

Among the enterprising and progressive citizens of Hendricks county none stands higher in the esteem of his fellow citizens than the gentleman whose name forms the caption of this sketch. He has long been actively engaged in agricultural pursuits in this county and the years of his residence here have but served to strengthen the feeling of admiration on the part of his fellow men owing to the honorable life he has led and the worthy example he has set to the younger generation, consequently the publishers of this biographical compendium are glad to give such a worthy character representation in this work.

Solomon D. Edwards, the son of John and Beulah (Perkins) Edwards, was born in Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, on August 27, 1847. His father was a native of North Carolina and came to Indiana in 1833, settling near Coatesville, in this county, and here he met his wife and after their marriage he entered some government land, which he cleared and improved upon until about 1861, at which time he purchased a farm of one hundred and forty acres near Plainfield, which he sold after a few years and went to Oregon. There he settled near Newberg and divided some of the land adjoining that town into town lots and sold them. He remained in Newberg, Oregon, until his death, becoming one of the substantial citizens of that town. To John and Beulah (Perkins) Edwards were born seven children: Asa, who married Lavina Kenworthy; John, who married Lucinda Hodson; Nathaniel; Abagail, wife of Henry Ballinger; Lorriane, wife of Fred Downing; Nancy, wife of Levi Crews, and Solomon D.

Solomon D. Edwards attended school in the district schools of his home township and after leaving school he worked on his uncle's farm until the latter's death. On January 4, 1866, he married Mary Hornaday, who was born February 4, 1847, the daughter of Daniel and Delilah (Farmer) Hornaday, and to this union were born six children: Minnie B., the wife of W. O. Brown, is the mother of four children, Harold, Harley, Hildred and Hallie; Roscoe, who married Bertha Kendall and has three children, Christian, Kenneth and Bernard R.; Charles E., who married Ida Job, and they have two children, Pauline and Mary; John, who married Mary Wills, and has one child, John, Jr.; Myrtle, who became the wife of Walter Hodson, has two children, Blair and Dalta; Maude married Verle Moon and has two children, Percy and Iona. The parents of Mrs. Edwards had a family of four children: William, who married Nettie Baker; Martha, the wife of Emery Triddle; Mary, wife of Mr. Edwards; Eliza, wife of L. Marten. Mrs. Edwards died on April 13, 1914.

Mr. Edwards is allied with the new Progressive party, believing that in the principles advocated by it will be found a solution of most of the great political questions before the American people today. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, while in his religious faith he holds to the Friends church, and is interested in the efforts of his church to better the condition of the community in which he lives. Mrs. Edwards was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Edwards has lived nearly three-score and ten years in this county, and during all of that time his influence has ever been on the right side of all civic and moral questions pertaining to the welfare of the community. For this reason he is rightly regarded as one of the representative men of Hendricks county, and is well worthy a mention in this biographical volume.

From an obituary published at the time of Mrs. Edwards' death, the following beautiful words are quoted:

"No mother could have been more kind and loving; her thoughts were always for others and self was forgotten; always ready to lend a helping hand to those in need. She had been looking forward to the time when life's work would be over and expressed herself as waiting for the summons and that the change would be a happy one. When alone much of her time was spent in singing the sweet songs of Zion and talking to Jesus.

"She wanted her flowers while here that she might enjoy them, and this desire was realized by the kind and affectionate devotion of her dear ones.

"She leaves a husband, six children and thirteen grandchildren, one sister and many friends who will sadly miss her. The family circle is broken, mother has passed into the beyond, and her voice no more you will hear; her memory will ever be sweet to you.

"'Dearest Mother, thou hast left us.

And our loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God who has bereft us;
He our sorrows all can heal.'

"The following lines were favorite songs of her's:

"'Fade from my sight each glittering gem, Vanish each glittering diadem; Pleasure no more I find in them, Jesus was crowned with thorns. Not for me are those fading joys, Not for me are those earthly toys, Mine be the tears at Jesus' feet, Mine be eternal day. What though my life be full of tears. Sorrow may crown my weary years; Mine be the hope when Christ appears, Mine be eternal joy.'

"Another one was:

"'O could I soar to worlds above, That blessed abode of peace and love, How gladly would I mount and fly On angel's wings to worlds on high.'"

HENRY D. BARLOW.

Prominent in the affairs of Hendricks county and distinguished as a citizen whose influence is far extended beyond the limits of the community honored by his residence, the name of Henry D. Barlow stands out a conspicuous figure among farmers of the locality of which this volume treats. All of his undertakings have been actuated by noble motives and high resolves and characterized by breadth of wisdom and strong individuality and his success and achievements but represent the result of fit utilization of innate talent in directing effort along those lines where mature judgment and rare discrimination lead the way.

Henry D. Barlow, the son of James M. and Sarah E. Barlow, was born September 9, 1874. in Brown township, this county. His father was born September 13, 1845. in Washington township, Hendricks county, Indiana, the son of Harvey R. and Sarah E. (Smith) Barlow. Harvey Barlow and wife were the parents of eight children: Hannah Jane, deceased; James M., whose sketch is presented elsewhere in this volume; Ruth Ann Osborn; Mrs. Myra Alice Medsker, deceased; Harrison S.; Harvey M., and two who died in infancy. The great-grandfather of Henry D. Barlow was Enoch Barlow, whose father was a Revolutionary soldier. Enoch Barlow came to Indiana in 1828, settling near Brownsburg, in this county, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there November, 1837, his widow surviving him some years, her death occurring in June, 1856.

Henry D. Barlow was accorded such education as was given in the district schools of his township, and at an early age began to work upon his father's farm. He has lived on the place where he is now residing since he was ten years of age. He has improved his farm and stocked it with modern farming implements and all the necessary accessories for successful farming, and as a tiller of the soil he has been one of the most successful and progressive of his township. He combines the raising of grain with the buying and selling of live stock and thereby, by the use of good judgment, he has been more than ordinarily successful.

Mr. Barlow was married September 9, 1896, to Minnie M. Douglass, daughter of John H. and Mary S. Douglass, of Guilford township, this county. She was born November 17, 1876, in Plainfield, and was educated in the common schools and academy of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Barlow are the parents of six children: Josephine Barlow, born May 11, 1897, died August 18, 1899; Milton Paul, born April 16, 1901, and now a pupil in the Plainfield schools; Helen, born April 18, 1905; Marjorie, born October 13, 1907, died July 23, 1909; Mary Elizabeth, born June 19, 1911; Frank Phillips Barlow, born May 21, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Barlow are very proud of their children and are giving them every educational advantage in order to equip them for useful careers in their later life.

Mr. Barlow is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, both subordinate and encampment, and also of the Knights of Pythias, both lodges being at Plainfield. Mr. Barlow is a man whom to know is to admire, for he has led a most exemplary life and has sought to do his whole duty in all relations with his fellow men. He is a man of honor, public spirit, charitable impulses and unswerving integrity and enterprise, and is consequently deserving of mention in a history of his county.

WILLIAM ALLEN MILLS.

Fealty to facts in the analyzation of the character of a citizen of the type of William Allen Mills, a well-known and successful resident of Guilford township, is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community honored by his residence, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of standing and affairs, more than any other consideration, that gives character and stability to the body politic. While advancing his individual interests, he has never lost sight of his obligations to the community in general, where for many years he has held a high place in popular confidence and esteem.

The state of Ohio has often boasted that it has furnished some of the best citizens of every state west of it, and the history of Hendricks county shows that many of the best citizens of this county were born in the good old Buckeye state. William Allen Mills, the son of James and Ruth (Walton) Mills, was born in Ohio on September 20, 1849. James Mills was born in 1818 in Ohio and died in this county July 31, 1903. His wife was born in Ohio in 1826 and died April 30, 1901, in this county. A few years after James Mills was married he and his family came to Hendricks county and settled in Washington township on one hundred and sixty acres of land, which is now the home of Edward Mills, the brother of William Allen.

William Allen Mills received his early education in Richmond, Indiana, and early in life showed an aptitude for books. Before reaching his majority, he started to teach school and for three years followed this noble profession. In the meantime he attended Earlham College at Richmond, in order to better prepare himself for teaching. However, upon his marriage, in 1874, he decided to leave the school room and engage in farming and in 1875 he moved on to the farm where he now lives. The experience gained in the school room has not been amiss upon the farm, and the same perseverance and attention to details which made him a successful teacher has brought a full share of success to him in his agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Mills was married October 28, 1874, to Eliza Candace Spray, the daughter of J. W. and A. W. Spray. Mr. Spray died in 1902, and his widow is still living, aged eighty-seven years, and now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Mills. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mills: Walton, of Indianapolis, who is married and has one daughter; Abbie, of Indianapolis, who married Ernest Hawkins, a nurseryman, and has three children, Clarence, Mary and Catherine E.; Clarence, deceased; Maurice, a nurseryman of Indianapolis; James, who will graduate from a veterinary college, Indianapolis, in 1914; John, who was born in 1894 and attended the Plainfield Academy. He intends to follow the occupation of his father.

Mr. Mills gives his support to the Republican party and takes an interest in the political issues of the day, although he has never been a candidate for any political office. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Center Friends church, Marion county. He lends his support to all public enterprises which are for the public welfare of his community and is known as a public-spirited man whose influence is always on the right side of every public question. During his long residence in this township he has always been regarded as a man of upright principles, kind-hearted to those in need. Few in this community are better or more favorably known than he.

IOHN TUCKER.

The history of the loyal sons and representative citizens of Hendricks county would not be complete should the name that heads this review be omitted. When the fierce fire of rebellion was raging throughout the Southland, threatening to destroy the Union, he responded with patriotic fervor to the call for volunteers and in some of the bloodiest battles for which that great war was noted proved his loyalty to the government he loved so well. During a useful life in the region where he lives he has labored diligently to promote the interests of the people, working earnestly and with little regard for his personal advancement or ease. He has been devoted to the public welfare and in all of his relations his highest ambitions have been to benefit the community and advance its standard of citizenship.

John Tucker, a worthy farmer and gallant veteran of the Civil War and son of a Civil-war veteran, was born January 16, 1845, in Guilford township, this county. His parents were Thornton and Margaret (Bryant) Tucker, the father being a native of Virginia and his mother of Kentucky. Thornton Tucker came to this county from Virginia with his sister when he was fourteen years of age and lived here the remainder of his life. After his marriage he located on a farm which he purchased from John Pritchett. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War Thornton Tucker was forty-four years of age, his two oldest sons, William and John, were less than twenty, but before the close of the war the father and two sons enlisted in the service. The father enlisted in Company D, Twenty-ninth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged June 28, 1865. He died in October of the same year from disease which he contracted in the army. John enlisted February 28, 1863, in the Second Indiana Battery of Field Artillery, and was discharged July 3, 1865. He was with Banks in the Red River campaign in the Southwest and in all of the campaigns of the West during the last two years of the war, being also at the battle of Nashville. Mr. and Mrs. Thornton Tucker were the parents of ten children: William; John, whose history is briefly reviewed in this article; Mary A., deceased; George, deceased; Harriett E., deceased; Louisa J., deceased; Milo A.; Florence E.; Clara D., deceased; Hiram D., who died in infancy.

The mother of these children died December 30, 1895. Immediately after the close of the war John Tucker returned to his home county and started in life as a farmer, and has continued at that occupation all his life. He was married August 25, 1869, to Margaret J. Almond, the daughter of James and Emily (Wier) Almond. Mr. Almond was a farmer in Guilford township and he and his wife reared a large family of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. John Tucker have long been faithful members of the Christian church and to that denomination they render generous support in all its activities. He has been a life-long Republican and is interested in the various political features of the day. He keeps well informed on important questions of the hour and is able to give reasons for his views on the various questions which are today confronting the American people. Because of his sterling work, uncompromising integrity, courteous manners and congenial disposition, he has won and retained the warm regard of all with whom he associates.

ERASMUS D. THOMAS.

The true measure of individual success is determined by what one has accomplished. An enumeration of those men of a past generation who were successful in their life work and at the same time left the impress of their strong personalities upon the community, men who won honor and recognition for themselves, and at the same time conferred honor on the locality in which they resided, would be incomplete were there failure to make specific mention of the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, for, although Erasmus D. Thomas is now sleeping the sleep of the just, his influence still pervades the lives of those who were so fortunate as to enjoy his acquaintance and his name is deeply engraved on the pages of Hendricks county's history. His life was a busy one, for he never allowed anything to interfere with his Christian obligations or the faithful performance of his church duties, so that his entire religious life was a steady effort for the worth of Christian doctrine, the purity and grandeur of Christian principles and the beauty and elevation of Christian character. Pure, constant and noble was the spiritual flame that burned in and illumined the mortal tenement of the subject of this memoir, and the superficial observer can have but small appreciation of his intrinsic spirituality. His faith was fortified by the deepest study, and the Christian verities were with him the matters of most concern among the changes and chances of this mortal life.

Erasmus D. Thomas, one of the grand old men of Hendricks county, was born in Fayette county, Indiana, November 13, 1821, and died near Danville, Indiana, June 16, 1907. He was the son of David S. and Phoebe (Cole) Thomas, both natives of New York, where they were reared and married. They came to Indiana shortly after their marriage, settling in Fayette county, where they entered land from the government before Indiana was admitted to the Union in 1816.

Erasmus D. Thomas secured a very limited education in the schools of Fayette county, and when a young man resided a short time in Tipton county. He helped lay out the town of Tipton while that county was a wilderness, and was one of its first town officers, in pioneer times. He moved from there to Hancock county, then settled near Acton for a short time. In 1864 he moved to Hendricks county, and lived on a farm northwest of Danville in Center township. His whole life was spent in the service of God and man, either as a minister of the Gospel or as a teacher of the youth. For more than fifty years he was in the active service of teaching the glad tidings of salvation. Before entering the ministry he was engaged in teaching in the public schools for a time. Forty-four years of his ministry were in Danville, where he had charge of the Baptist church. The good that such a man can do is incalculable. He preached in a period when ministers were very poorly paid indeed, and when it was thought that they should live even as did the disciples of Biblical times.

Rev. E. D. Thomas was twice married, his first wife being Mary G. Thompson, of Fayette county. To this first marriage there were born eight children, all of whom are living: John, of Winnepeg, Canada; Mrs. Phoebe E. Morgason, of Bedford, Iowa; Charles, of Enterprise, Oregon; Lewis E., of Ashley, Ohio; Mrs. Hattie Tinder, of Fairchild, Washington; William W., living between North Salem and Montclair; Albert M., of Marion county, Indiana; Erasmus W., pastor of the Baptist church in Danville, who succeeded his father as pastor of this church; Edward D., of Seattle, Washington, and Marshall, of Cordelle, Georgia. His first wife died in 1870, and, in 1871, Mr. Thomas was married to Mrs. Mary E. (Rosborough) Holcombe, of Gibson county, Indiana, and she is still living with her daughter in Indianapolis. She was a daughter of James and Sarah (Waters) Rosborough, a highly respected family of Gibson county in this state. To this second marriage were born six children: Dr. Harvey C., of Indianapolis:

Joseph, who died in infancy; Frank W., of Sacramento, California; Mary T., the wife of Dr. A. C. Pebworth, of Indianapolis; Raymond D., of Indianapolis; Mrs. Nellie Mitchell, with whom the mother makes her home in Indianapolis.

The life of the late Rev. E. D. Thomas was indeed a busy one, and during more than three score years he served his God and his fellow men faithfully in the pulpit and in the school room. Always calm and straightforward, when he believed he was on the right path nothing could swerve him from it, and to him home life was a sacred trust, and his greatest enjoyment was in his children and his children's children. His life was a blessing and a benediction to the community in which he spent so many of his years, and his memory will long be revered by his many friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM C. OSBORNE.

The career of William C. Osborne, the president of the First National Bank, of Danville, presents many interesting incidents, but in this brief record it will not be profitable to go into his life in detail. Prominently identified with banking interests of Danville and Hendricks county for twenty years, he has made his influence felt in the financial circles of his community during that time. His father and grandfather were identified with the First National Bank of Danville early in its history, and some member of the family has been connected with this institution for the past half century. In the course of the half century which has elapsed since this bank was established Danville has grown from a mere village to a prosperous little city, with well paved streets and beautiful residences. During all of these years the bank has constantly enjoyed the fullest measure of public confidence, passing through every period of general financial stringency with stability unshaken and credit unimpaired. The bank conducts all the departments of commercial banking, making loans, discounts, the buying and selling of government bonds and exchange, issuing foreign drafts, letters of credit and making commercial loans. The safe deposit vaults are equipped in the most approved and modern manner and afford excellent facilities of the safe keeping of papers and valnables.

William C. Osborne, the son of Edmund and Martha (Cook) Osborne, was born January 16, 1865, on a farm near Kokomo, in Howard county, Indiana. His father was a native of Orange county, this state, but came to

WILLIAM C. OSBORNE

Hendricks county when a young lad with his parents and lived here until after his marriage, when he moved to Howard county, where he followed the occupation of a farmer for many years, and late in life moved to Hendricks county, where his death occurred. Edmund Osborne and wife were the parents of five children: John H., deceased; William C.; Rosaltha; Lindley M., and Emma, deceased.

William C. Osborne received his education in the common schools of Howard and Hendricks counties, this state, and then entered the Westtown Schools, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a school under the management of the Friends church. After leaving school he began teaching and for several years followed this profession, during which time he taught in several states in the Union. He incidentally carried on farming to some extent while teaching. In 1895 he permanently located in Danville and became associated with the First National Bank as bookkeeper. He rapidly acquired the rudiments of banking and in the course of ten years has risen from the position of bookkeeper to that of the presidency of the bank. He was made cashier in 1800, and in 1900 was elected president, which position he still holds. Mr. Osborne is an able and far-seeing financier, being progressive and conservative and has had for officers men of the highest integrity and business ability. The policy of the bank is conservative and its business is largely confined to commercial banking, a very large percentage of its deposits being individual and mercantile deposits with sufficient bank deposits to furnish an excellent par list for all of its customers.

Mr. Osborne was married October 24, 1900, to Christine Rogers, daughter of Jonathan and Anne (Valentine) Rogers, natives of Wayne county, Indiana, but living in Georgia at the time of the marriage of their daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne are the parents of five children, Anne Martha, Florence, Elizabeth, Miriam E, and Edmund R., all of whom are still at home with their parents.

Mr. Osborne takes an active interest in everything pertaining to the civic, moral, intellectual and commercial welfare of his county, city and community. A Republican in politics, Mr. Osborne has always taken an active interest in political affairs, but has never felt that he could spare the time from his banking interests to take an active part in political campaigns. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Central Normal College of Danville, an educational institution which has the name of doing good work in its chosen field. He is also president of the board of trustees of Earlham College Endowment Fund. He was president and one of the organizers of the Indianapolis, Danville & Western electric line, the company which built the present road between Danville and Indianapolis, and much of the success of that early company was due to his untiring efforts. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while he and all of his family are earnest members of the Friends church, to which they contribute generously of their time and substance. Mr. Osborne is a man of good business abilities, sterling integrity and fine personal address, and the history of his county would not be complete without a record of his achievements.

JOEL NEWLIN.

When such men as Joel Newlin die, not only the public heart is filled with sadness and abiding sense of loss, but there is within the sanctuary of his own household a depth of sorrow that cannot be fathomed, for with all his business ability and public usefulness, it was perhaps in his domestic life and social relations that Mr. Newlin appeared to the best advantage. According to those who knew him best, no one ever heard a whisper against his integrity. He was a temperate, well-controlled man and the idol of his family; he was of a genial, social nature, full, at times, of a quaint, homely, simple humor, that had about it the freshness of childhood; he loved his children and young folks in general, and many a young man was helped and encouraged by him in starting out in life. He was a very agreeable companion, manifesting a desire to please those with whom he came in daily contact and he left to his friends, as his choicest legacy, the remembrance of a character without a stain.

Joel Newlin, one of the best loved men of Hendricks county, was born August 26, 1824, in Clinton county, Ohio, and died in Guilford township, Hendricks county. Indiana, January 21, 1913. His parents were John and Esther (Stubs) Newlin, he being one of twelve children, all of whom are now deceased. John Newlin came from North Carolina and settled in Ohio, where he lived his whole life. After the death of John Newlin in Ohio, his widow and the family came to Hendricks county, settling in Guilford township March 31, 1834. In the fall of 1835 the widow of John Newlin bought the farm where the family have since lived.

Joel Newlin, thus early bereft of a father's love and care, helped to assume the responsibility of caring for the family, and the strength of character which was thus developed proved of very much assistance to him in his later life. He received only a meagre education and upon reaching young manhood he was married, on August 13, 1846, to Mary Osborn, and to this union were born six children, Anna, Addison, Elias, David, Martha and Calvin.

Calvin Newlin, the youngest of the six children born to his parents, was born on February 5, 1863. He was reared on the homestead farm and received his education in the schools of his township. He was married on August 13, 1885, to Lenora Haworth, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard M. Haworth, of Clinton county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Newlin are the parents of six children: Bertha, born in October, 1886; Ada M., born May 7, 1890; William McKinley, born February 7, 1892: Edna, born May 15, 1895; Grace, born March 29, 1897; Evelyn, born December 23, 1904. Calvin Newlin, as well as all the members of his family, is a member of the Friends church, and to which they give freely of their means. Mr. Newlin has always farmed on the old home place on which his father lived for seventy-eight years. The subject carries on general farming on one hundred and fifty-seven acres of land. He never aspired for office and votes the Republican ticket. His father was an old-line Whig and later a Republican.

DR. EMMETT T. DAVIS.

Success in what are properly termed the learned professions is a legitimate result of merit and painstaking endeavor. In commercial lines one may come into possession of a lucrative business through inheritance or gift, but professional advancement is gained only by critical study and consecutive research. It has only been within the last few years that special attention has been paid to the diseases of live stock, but now there are scores of colleges which have special chairs devoted to diseases of horses, cattle, swine, etc. In large cities there are men who do nothing else but minister to canine ills, and feline doctors who cater only to the special diseases of cats. Dr. Emmett T. Davis has the honor of occupying the first chair in any veterinary college in the United States on diseases of swine. The study of equine diseases has only recently been reduced to a scientific standard and gradually scientists are classifyving and describing the treatment for diseases of domestic animals of all kinds. There is no greater preventive of disease which has a wider use today than the serum which is being manufactured by Dr. Davis & Son for the prevention of hog cholera. This remedy has proven of inestimable value to the farmers of the United States.

Dr. Emmett T. Davis was born in 1868 in Belleville, Indiana. His parents were David W. and Amanda (Newby) Davis. The father of David Davis was born in North Carolina and came to Indiana territory before 1816, and as soon as the United States government acquired what is known as the New Purchase in central Indiana he entered one thousand acres of land in what is now known as Hendricks county. David W. Davis and wife were the parents of four children: Alva Eugene, Arthur M., Emmett T. and Evon B. David Davis, who was born in Hendricks county, and here followed farming, is now living near the gulf coast in Alabama.

Doctor Davis received his elementary education in the common schools of his county and early in life became interested in the diseases of animals, particularly the diseases of horses and hogs, and has made it his life work, specializing upon the diseases of swine. For many years he was the leading practitioner in his line in central Indiana and when the Indiana Veterinary College was established, at Indianapolis, the chairs of swine diseases and diseases of cattle and their treatment was created for his occupancy. A serum, which he has produced after many years of experimenting, for the prevention of hog cholera, has made his name known throughout the United States by men who are interested in the raising of swine. He has associated with him in his practice his sons, Dr. LaRue and Roger. However, he devotes a great deal of time as an instructor in the veterinary college at Indianapolis and to the manufacture of the hog cholera serum. He has a well-equipped hospital where the best of care is given to hogs, cattle, horses and other animals.

Doctor Davis was married August 18, 1889, to Clarice Deacon, the daughter of John and Catherine (Larue) Deacon. His wife was born January 3, 1869, in Shelby county, Indiana. She came to this county with her parents when she was a small child. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two children. Larue, who is following in the footsteps of his father and is already recognized as an expert in the diseases of animals, was born January 13, 1890, and was married on October 28, 1911, to Hortense Reeder, who died ten months later. Roger, the second son of Doctor and Mrs. Davis, is studying in the Indiana Veterinary College, and will join the firm of Emmett T. Davis & Son upon his graduation.

Politically, Doctor Davis is a Progressive; fraternally, is a Mason, Odd Fellow and Red Man, while his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal church.

JAMES M. LAWLER.

It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs that makes the real history of a community and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The examples such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, and there is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting, even in a casual way, to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellow men and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which make so much for the prosperity of a community. Such a man is the worthy subject of this sketch, and as such it is proper that a short outline of his career be accorded a place among the representative citizens of his community.

James M. Lawler, one of the leading farmers of Brown township, is a native of this county, having first seen the light of day on July 27, 1851, being the son of Nicholas and Anna (Buchannon) Lawler, the latter being a native of the Blue Grass state and the daughter of Levi Buchannon. Mr. Lawler has the distinction of having lived on the same farm all his life with the exception of four years, two of which were passed in another portion of the same township.

On December 28, 1876, James M. Lawler was united in marriage with Mary E. Wilson, daughter of Jones and Telltha (Lumpkins) Wilson, of Boone county. The Lumpkin family originally came from Putnam county, this state, and after taking up their residence in Boone county became acquainted with the family of Wilson, Jones Wilson having passed the greater portion of his life in that county. To Mr. and Mrs. Lawler have been born three children, the eldest of the family being Charles O., whose wife was Ethel McDaniel, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Gossett) McDaniel, citizens of Brown township, Hendricks county. Charles O. Lawler resides in Indianapolis and is the father of two children. Esther and Mildred. Stella M., Mr. Lawler's oldest daughter, became the wife of Homer Smith, of Boone county, son of Anderson and Mary (Layton) Smith. Their home is in Brown township, just west of that of the subject, and they also have two children, Irene and Hazel Ruth. The third child of the subject is Dora A., who remains at home with her parents.

Mr. Lawler has devoted the energies of his life to the conduct of his business as an agriculturist and to the keeping and protecting of his home, being a man of decided domestic traits. His farm is generally conceded to be one of the very best farms in the township and to this praise he is certainly entitled, being one of the most energetic men of his community. Quiet and unassuming in his relations with his fellow men, he nevertheless, by reason of his sterling worth and excellent qualities of head and heart, has won an enviable place in the respect of his fellow citizens and is, therefore, eminently entitled to representation in a work of the scope intended in the present one.

JOHN Q. A. MATTERN.

Among the men of Hendricks county who have served their county with distinction as private citizens and public officials is John Q. A. Mattern, a prominent farmer and stock raiser of Guilford township. There are certain characteristics which are found in men who are destined to act as leaders in their communities, and among these are perseverance, honesty and sincerity of purpose. These characteristics are strikingly exemplified in the man whose history is herein delineated and consequently he is justly regarded as one of the representative citizens of his county.

John A. Mattern, the son of John W. and Anna (Woodrow) Mattern, was born in Marion county, Indiana, on February 11, 1846. His parents were natives of Pennsylvania and reared a family of four children.

John Q. A. Mattern received a common school education and at an early age began to work on his father's farm. When a young man he began farming for himself as soon as married and by good management and close application to his agricultural interests he has acquired a farm which is one of the best in his township, it comprising three hundred and sixty acres in one body. He has always been very actively engaged in the stock-raising department of farm work and for fourteen years was a stock commissioner at the stock yards in Indianapolis. However, he has not allowed his material welfare to blind him to those civic duties which every citizen should perform. He has served as treasurer and county commissioner of Hendricks county, and in both capacities rendered faithful and efficient service to the citizenship of the county.

Mr. Mattern was married on October 6, 1869, to Dana Mills, the daughter of Jehu Mills, of this county. His wife was one of five children, two of whom died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Mattern are the parents of four children: Edwin, born February 9, 1871; William, born January 3, 1880, who married Jessie Smith and has two children, and is now in the stock commission business at Indianapolis; Laura A., born September 16, 1886, married Earl Hoffman, a farmer in Marion county, Indiana; Leota, born July 28, 1888.

On February 20, 1864, Mr. Mattern enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served under General Sherman in the famous Atlanta campaign, his military record being characterized by courage of a high order.

Politically, Mr. Mattern has been a life-long Republican; fraternally, he belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic, while his religious membership is with the Friends society.

WILLIAM P. CLARK.

In examining the life records of self-made men, it will invariably be found that indefatigable industry has constituted the basis of their success. True, there are other elements which enter in and conserve the advancement of personal interests—perseverance, discrimination and mastering of expedients—but the foundation of all achievement is earnest, persistent labor. At the outset of his career Mr. Clark recognized this, and he did not seek any royal road to the goal of prosperity and independence, but began to work earnestly and diligently in order to advance himself, and the result is that he is now numbered among the progressive, successful and influential business men of Hendricks county.

William P. Clark, the son of Alfred and Sarah (Aker) Clark, was born January 28, 1851, in Butler county, Ohio. Alfred Clark was born in Butler county, Ohio, in 1820, his wife being born near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in July, 1834. She came to Butler county, Ohio, when she was seven years of age with her parents, and is still living in Irving, Indiana.

William P. Clark came with his parents from Butler county, Ohio, to Marion county, Indiana, when he was two years old and lived there until 1875, when he moved to the farm where he is now living. He was married April 14, 1880, to Elma Anderson, daughter of Edward and Amanda (Willits) Anderson. Mrs. Clark was born near Knightstown, Indiana, February 22, 1862. Her mother died when she was only nine months old and she was taken to her grandmother's at Noblesville, Indiana, where she lived until she was nine years old. She then went to the home of Isaac Harden, in Washington township, Hendricks county, where she remained until her marriage to Mr. Clark.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark have four children: Leola May, who was born March 17, 1881, and died after reaching womanhood, having married Harry Gray; Walter Raymond, who was born November 19, 1883, and died March 20, 1887; Sarah Louisa, born May 2, 1886, died March 9, 1887; and Alford A., the only child living, was born November 14, 1888. He married Merley Sarkey, daughter of Charles and Viola Sarkey, of Clermont, Indiana, and is living with her father on the old home farm.

The subject carries on a general farming business, also raising Poland-China hogs and Shorthorn cattle, and has one hundred and sixty acres on the home place, besides forty acres in Wayne township, Marion county, Indiana. He votes the Democratic ticket. Mrs. Clark is a member of Shiloh Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Clark built his fine home in 1908 and put up every building on the farm. He made all of the improvements just as they stand, for when he got the farm it was badly run down. He has laid over two thousand rods of drain tile.

THEODORE T. MARTIN.

Theodore T. Martin, the superintendent of Hendricks county schools, was born on a farm in Orange county, Indiana, August 25, 1882. His parents were Charles and Mary Ann (Ferguson) Martin, his father being a native of Germany and his mother of Indiana, her people coming from England to North Carolina and then to Indiana. Charles Martin was a machinist and later a farmer.

Superintendent Martin graduated from the public schools of his home county and later entered Central Normal College, at Danville, in 1901, where he pursued high school work. He taught three years in the district schools of Orange county, one year in the city schools of Summitville, Madison county, and four years in Hendricks county.

Mr. Martin graduated from the teachers' course (Central Normal College) in 1905; from the scientific course at the same institution in 1906 and from the Indiana State Normal School, at Terre Haute, Indiana, in 1909; he has since been a student in Indiana University.

In 1907 Mr. Martin was chosen principal of the Avon high school, Hendricks county, and continued there for two years. In the fall of 1909

THEODORE T. MARTIN

he became superintendent of the North Salem schools, Hendricks county, and remained there for the succeeding two years. In June of 1911 he was elected county superintendent of Hendricks county public schools by the county board of education, and was the first Democrat to hold the office in this county.

Mr. Martin was married to Eva Marie Osborne, of Clinton county, in December of 1906. They became acquainted while attending Central Normal College.

In January of 1912, in co-operation with the county board of education, Mr. Martin caused a large wall map of the county to be made and placed in every schoolroom of the county so that a study of local industries, location of town, township and county places could be determined, and a familiarity with home conditions be included in the public schools. In January of 1914 the same board, in co-operation with members of the farmers' organization, procured the services of a county agricultural agent for the leadership in developing scientific farming through the county and supervising the teaching of agriculture in the public schools.

Mr. Martin is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville, and is a member of the Masonic lodge of North Salem. While performing his duties as county superintendent he has followed the worthy example of his predecessors and has conducted the educational affairs free from political influence and has tried to place merit as his guide.

HON. JAMES MILTON BARLOW.

It is a pleasure to investigate the career of a successful, self-made man. Great honor attaches to that individual who, beginning the great struggle of life alone and unaided, gradually overcomes environment, removing one by one the obstacles from the pathway of success, and by the master strokes of his own force and vitality succeeds in forging his way to the front and winning for himself a position of esteem and influence among his fellow men. Such is the record, briefly stated, of James M. Barlow, for several decades recognized as one of the most substantial and representative citizens of Hendricks county, to a brief synopsis of whose life and character the reader's attention is herewith directed. His protracted residence in this county has made his name widely and familiarly known. His life and the history of this locality for a period of nearly a half century has been pretty nearly one and the same thing, and he has lived to see and take a prominent part in the later growth of the community. He is a progressive man in the broadest sense of the term. Realizing the wants of the people, he has tried to supply the demands of his constituents generously and unsparingly. His has been a life of honor and trust, and no higher eulogy can be passed upon him than to state the simple truth that his name has never been coupled with anything disreputable, nor has there been the shadow of a stain upon his reputation for integrity and unwavering honesty. He has been a consistent man in all that he has undertaken, and his career in the various relations of life has been utterly without pretense. Because of his earnest life, high attainments, well rounded character and large influence, he is largely entitled to representation in a work of this character.

James Milton Barlow was born on September 13, 1845, in Washington township, Hendricks county, Indiana, and is the son of Harvey R. and Sarah E. (Smith) Barlow, the former born April 1, 1818, in Scott county, Kentucky, and the latter born in Henry county, Kentucky, December 8, 1822. To these parents were born eight children, four sons and four daughters, of whom four still survive, namely: The first born died in infancy; Hannah Jane C. died in early youth; James M., the subject of this sketch, was next in order of birth: Ruth Ann lives in Marion county; a daughter, who died in infancy; Mrs. Myra Alice Medsker died at the age of forty years, leaving a husband and eight children; Harrison S., of Brownsburg, Indiana; Harvey Morton, of Brownsburg. The subject's paternal grandfather, Enoch Barlow, was the son of a Revolutonary soldier and he himself was one of the early settlers in Scott county, Kentucky, his birth having occurred in Virginia. Eventually he moved to Indiana and in September, 1828, settled near Brownsburg, where he spent the remainder of his days, his death occurring in November, 1837. He was survived a number of years by his widow, who died on June 16, 1856. They were the parents of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters. Harvey R. Barlow was a man of considerable prominence in his community and was captain of a company of state volunteers. Harvey R. Barlow came to Indiana at the age of ten years at the time of his father's death and took upon himself the management of the home farm. He was of necessity deprived of educational advantages, two months comprising the entire period of his attendance at school. However, he was of a studious disposition and by the most persistent efforts acquired a splendid education. so that for many years he was enabled to teach school to the entire satisfaction of parents and pupils. His death occurred on August 5, 1872. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah J. Smith, and who was a native of Kentucky, died at the age of seventy-three years. She came to this state in 1837, and was a woman of splendid qualities of character, an ardent Presbyterian and rearing her children in that faith. In the early life of Hendricks county, Harvey Barlow was prominent and progressive in his methods, having built the first saw- and grist-mill in the county. He was a man of strong character and forceful personality, and in the community where he lived he was held in high esteem.

James M. Barlow received his elementary education in the public schools and then became a student in Wabash College. On April 30, 1864, when but eighteen years of age, he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, with which he rendered valiant service until receiving an honorable discharge in September, 1864. He took part in a number of hotly contested engagements and arduous campaigns, and received a certificate of thanks from President Lincoln and Secretary of War Edwin H. Stanton, for valuable services rendered by him during the Atlanta campaign. Mr. Barlow has been a very active man and at the close of the war he went on the road as a traveling salesman for Powers & Weeks, lithographers of Cincinnati, Ohio, with whom he remained for two years. He then engaged in teaching school and was thus employed in twenty-two different schools, gaining an enviable reputation as a professional teacher and good administrative officer. For awhile he also gave some attention to auctioneering, in which he was successful, and also owned and operated a butcher shop in Brownsburg, and also a drug store. Then he was employed as bookkeeper for a firm in Pittsboro, in which position he gained a good, practical experience. In young manhood, by rigid economy and wise management, he succeeded in acquiring a small farm, which he operated with such good success that he was enabled to add to it from time to time, until at length he became the owner of seven hundred acres of fine farming land, of which he has given four hundred acres to his children, owning now three hundred acres of land. Aside from his farming interests, Mr. Barlow is identified with the Van Camp Packing Company, of Indianapolis. Strong and forceful in his relations with his fellow men, he has gained the good will and commendation of all with whom he has been brought in contact, ever retaining his reputation among men for integrity and high character and never losing that dignity which is the birthright of a gentleman. The splendid success which came to Mr. Barlow has been directly traceable to the salient points in his character, for he started in life at the bottom of the ladder, which he mounted unaided. He is a splendid example of the virile, progressive, self-made man, who believes in doing well whatever is worth doing at all.

Politically a Republican, Mr. Barlow has for many years been active in public affairs, and has been an important and influential factor in many movements for the welfare of his state. In 1807 and 1800 he was representative from Hendricks county in the Legislature, and in 1901-2-3 was a member of the Senate, representing the district of Boone and Hendricks counties. In these bodies his ability was recognized and he was placed on several of the most important committees. He was chairman of the agricultural committee, chairman of the committee on reformatory institutions, and on a number of other important committees in both bodies. He served his community as justice of the peace for four years, and a noteworthy feature of his administration of the office was that he was influential in having many cases settled out of court, thus saving useless litigation and expense. His decisions as justice of the peace were marked by a high sense of fairness and justice. never having a decision reversed in the higher courts. Fraternally, Mr. Barlow has been a member of Lodge No. 188, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, for forty-eight years. He is also a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, Lodge No. 167, and at present a member of Post No. 186, Grand Army of the Republic. He was a charter member of John A. Hollett Post No. 242, Grand Army of the Republic. In the Knights of Pythias, Mr. Barlow has been quite prominent, having taken an active part in the organization of the Uniform Rank, being elected major of the First Battalion of the First Regiment, this being the first regiment ever organized in this body, and the first and oldest regiment in the world. Mr. Barlow served as chief of staff of Commander in Chief Thomas J. Stewart, of Pennsylvania, when the Grand Army of the Republic met at San Francisco, and has for many years been prominent in the various councils of this veteran organization. For twenty years Mr. Barlow served as president of the Old Settlers' Picnic, one of the popular and prominent organizations of Hendricks county, an annual feature of which was an address given by the governor of the state. Religiously, Mr. Barlow has for many years been a faithful and earnest member of the Presbyterian church, of which he is an elder, and in 1903 was one of the delegates from Indiana to the general assembly of the church which met at Philadelphia. Mr. Barlow is a public spirited man in all that the term implies and is actively interested in enterprises tending to promote the general welfare, withholding his support from no movement for the good of the locality honored by his residence. His personal relations with his fellow men have ever been mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he is highly regarded by all, being easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the rela-

On May 17, 1871, Mr. Barlow was married to Sarah E. Hornaday, a daughter of Isaiah Hornaday, a farmer of Washington township, this county, and was one of eight children, five of whom are now living. To this union have been born eight children: William E., of Minneapolis, a teacher in the public schools, having charge of the manual training department in the South high school. He is married and the father of four children; Henry Dickerson, a farmer on the old homestead in Washington township, has four children living; Walter Harvey, a farmer in Guilford township, has four children; Myrtle, of Plainfield, who married Fred Brudford, a merchant of that city; Virgil M., who lives in Missouri, married Edith Anderson; Albert Paul, of Plainfield, a merchant, married Marie Hollingsworth; Harrison Porter, who died at the age of three years, and Mary S., the youngest in order of birth, who is attending college at Terre Haute, Indiana.

HUGH J. WOODY.

Fortunate is he who has back of him an ancestry honorable and distinguished, and happy is he that his lines of life are cast in harmony therewith. Hugh J. Woody, a well known and progressive citizen of Pittsboro, Hendricks county, Indiana, has succeeded well at whatever he has attempted to do and, although he is a plain, conservative gentleman, no doubt if he had sought to be a leader of men and achieve public distinction, he would have found that nature had provided well for him in the way of the proper equipment and that he only needed to call into proper use the dormant faculties.

Hugh J. Woody, the manager of the grain elevator at Pittsboro, was born February 21, 1865, one mile south of Plainfield, in Guilford township, this county. His parents were Miller and Margaret (Lacey) Woody. Miller Woody was born in North Carolina on May 15, 1836, and died in Nowata, Oklahoma, January 13, 1909, at the age of seventy-two. He moved to Hendricks county at the age of fifteen years with his parents and on September 8, 1858, was married to Margaret Lacey, of Plainfield. He lived in this county for a number of years near Pittsboro and then moved to Oklahoma, in what was then called the Cherokee strip, in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Miller Woody were the parents of seven children: Mrs. A. M. Hawkins, of Indianapolis:

H. J., of Pittsboro; Mrs. J. D. Reynolds, of Coffeyville, Kansas; C. F.; Mrs. Frank McCartney; Mrs. A. H. Gillespey, and Walter, of Nowata, Oklahoma. Miller Woody died at the home of his son-in-law, A. H. Gillespey, who was an alderman in the city of Nowata, Oklahoma. Margaret Lacey, the wife of Miller Woody, was a native of this county and died in 1877.

Hugh J. Woody spent his boyhood days in this county and early in his twenties became associated in the grain elevator business at Pittsboro and has been identified with that industry for the past twenty-seven years, fifteen years of which he has been the general manager of the company at Pittsboro.

Mr. Woody was married December 4, 1890, to Cora E. Hedge, the daughter of Chester and Sarah (Gott) Hedge. Chester Hedge was born March 4, 1840, in Pulaski county, Virginia. After his death his widow married James Mallory Leak, whose history is given elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Hedge were the parents of five children: Cora E., the wife of Mr. Woody: Myrtle R.; Mary E., deceased; Ernest E. and Charles O. Mr. Hedge was a stanch Republican and a member of the Christian church, being a deacon in that denomination. He had an enviable war record, having enlisted in March, 1862, in Company F, Fortieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, took part in the campaigns in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, and among many other battles participated in the engagements of Resaca, Jonesboro, Mill Springs, New Hope Church, Peach Tree Creek, Dallas, Rocky Faced Ridge, Atlanta, Lost Mountain and Franklin. At the latter battle he was captured, but escaped by plunging into the river and diving, and, although he was shot at several times, he made his escape safely. He was mustered out in 1865 at Indianapolis and died January 8, 1912, at Riner, Virginia. He was a member of George A. Kendall Post No. 499, Grand Army of the Republic, at Lizton,

Mr. and Mrs. Woody have three children who are still at home, Merle, Clara and Miller. Mr. Woody is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men at Lizton and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Pittsboro. While he casts his vote for the Republican party, yet he has never been an active worker in the ranks, preferring to devote all of his attention to his business. Religiously, he is by birthright a member of the Friends church, while his wife holds her membership in the Christian church. He is a man of optimistic nature, kind, considerate and one who is devoted to his home circle. He is a man to admire and esteem, for his industry and exemplary character has made him one of the highest respected citizens of his community.

CUNNING HERBERT STEWARD.

Among the thriving farmers and stock raisers of Eel River township is Cunning Herbert Steward, who, although a resident of this county only three years, has nevertheless demonstrated his ability as a farmer of the first rank. He has tried to measure up to the standard of correct citizenship and this township is proud to number him among its progressive and representative residents.

Cunning Herbert Steward, the son of Maurice and Lou (Yeager) Steward, was born in 1883 in Morgan county, Indiana. Maurice Steward was born at Brooklyn, Morgan county, and his wife was a native of the same county. Maurice Steward is the son of William and Serelda (Rinker) Steward, and his wife was the daughter of Whalen Yeager and wife. The wife of Maurice Steward died in 1893, leaving five living children, and one who died in infancy. Shortly after Mrs. Steward's death her husband and the children moved to Putnam county, this state, and settled on a farm near Maysville. Maurice Steward is now living on a farm near Delma, in Putnam county.

Cunning H. Steward received a good common school education in the Putnam county schools and worked out by the month for twelve years, until his marriage. In 1910 he became interested in the buying and selling of horses, but after his marriage he turned his attention to farming and the feeding of cattle for the markets. In September, 1911, he bought forty acres where he now lives in the southeastern part of Eel River township and adjoining eighty acres which belongs to his wife. Their farm of one hundred and twenty acres is very fertile and under the present excellent system of tillage produces abundant crops of wheat, oats, corn, hay, vegetables, fruits, etc. Mr. Steward makes a specialty of no particular crop, but gives his attention to general farming in which his success has been more than ordinarily gratifying. For the past three years he has been interested quite extensively in the raising of cattle, which he finds more remunerative than agriculture alone, and by a judicious combination of the two he has achieved his greatest success.

Mr. Steward was married May 7, 1911, to Murl Case, a native of this township and the daughter of Lewis and Josie (Call) Case. Lewis Case, the son of Rev. John and Julia Case, was born near Maysville, Kentucky. John Case was a Baptist minister who came from Kentucky to Putnam county early in the history of that part of the state and entered government land near New Maysville. He and his good wife reared a family of thirteen children, all of whom grew to maturity. He became one of the most substantial farmers of the county and presented several of his children with a farm upon their marriage. All of his children are now deceased. Lewis Case was a lifelong farmer and stock dealer and owned two hundred and sixty acres of land in the southeastern part of Eel River township, where he lived until his death, in April, 1904. Josie Call, the wife of Lewis Case, was a native of Kentucky, the daughter of John and Julia Call, and came to this county with her parents when she was about three years of age and lived here until her death in 1906.

Mr. Steward is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Daughters of Rebekah and Order of Eastern Star. His wife is also a devout member of the Christian church. Personally, Mr. Steward is a very popular man, and with a personality which endears him to his many friends. He is honest, straightforward and upright in all the relations of life and he and his wife are favorites with a wide circle of friends.

OSCAR HADLEY.

Under a popular form of government, like ours, where the democratic idea of equality is as fully developed as the present imperfect condition of mankind will permit, we expect as its legitimate result the triumph of individual worth and energy over all the competition that wealth and class may array against them. Here the avenues of wealth and distinction are fully opened to all, which fact enhances rather than detracts from the merits of those whose energy and integrity have triumphed over all obstacles intervening between an humble position and the attainment of those laudable ends. Obscurity and labor, at no time dishonorable, never assume more attractive features than when the former appears as the nurse of those virtues which the latter, by years of honest and persevering effort, transplant to a higher and richer soil; hence the biographer of those men of exceptional worth whose active enterprise has won for them the distinction, pre-eminence and commanding influence in the society in which they move must be replete with facts which encourage and instruct.

Oscar Hadley, president of the Standard Live Stock Insurance Company, of Indianapolis, has for many years held marked prestige in business and civic circles, occupied important official trusts, and by the exercise of those talents and qualities which were cultivated from his youth, reached an honorable position in the public mind and earned the respect and high regard of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Hadley was born on a farm in Guilford township, near Plainfield, Hendricks county, Indiana, May 3, 1858, and in order of nativity is the fifteenth of the sixteen children born to Elias and Lucinda (Carter) Hadley, the former of whom was born in the state of North Carolina and the latter in Butler county, Ohio. Elias Hadley was a boy when his father, Jeremiah Hadley, removed with his family from North Carolina to Butler county, Ohio, where he was reared to maturity and received the limited educational advantages offered by the primitive schools of the pioneer days. Prior to the attaining of his legal majority, Elias Hadley came to Indiana and selected a favorable location in Hendricks county, after which he returned to Ohio and there married Lucinda Carter, who was then in her seventeenth year. Immediately after their marriage the young couple came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and established their little home in a pioneer log house erected on the land in Guilford township which he had secured from the government, and which represented at that time a veritable forest wilderness. His father also removed to the locality at the same time and both secured tracts of government land, on a portion of which the town of Plainfield now stands. Here the young man and the old grappled vigorously with the giants of the forest and in due time reclaimed their farms to civilization. Jeremiah Hadley and his good wife passed the residue of their lives in Hendricks county, and on their old homestead Elias and Lucinda (Carter) Hadley continued to reside until they, too, were summoned to the life eternal, honored pioneers of the county in which they took up their abode about the year 1822. Elias Hadley was seventy-five years of age at the time of his demise, and his devoted wife passed away at the venerable age of eighty-four years, a true mother in Israel, whose children may well "rise up and call her blessed," and whose memory they hold in lasting reverence. Both she and her husband were zealous members of the Christian church, and in politics he was originally a Whig, and later a Republican, having united with the "grand old party" at the time of its organization. Of the sixteen children nine are now living. The Hadley family has been one of the best known and most highly honored in Hendricks county for many years. and its members have contributed in liberal measure to the civic and industrial development of that favored section of the state. Twelve of the sixteen children in the Hadley family lived to maturity and all were members of the same church.

Oscar Hadley was reared as a farmer boy on the old homestead farm which was the place of his nativity. His boyhood days gained to him through personal experience an appreciation of the dignity and value of honest toil. He early learned the lessons of industry, self-reliance and sturdy integrity that have proved so potent in the guiding and guarding of his career as a man among men. After completing the prescribed course of the public schools, Mr. Hadley continued his studies for one year at Butler College, at Irvington, and much of his business career has been one of intimate and successful identification with general farming and stock growing, in which latter department of industry he has gained a specially wide reputation as a successful breeder of high-grade cattle. For many years he has been numbered among the representative farmers and stock raisers of Hendricks county, where he owns a fine landed estate of two hundred and fifty acres. equipped with the best of improvements in all lines. He holds prestige as one of the leading exponents of agriculture and stock enterprises in the entire state. For several years he has been a member of the Indiana state board of agriculture, of which he served as president in 1000, giving to the work of the organization the benefits of his wide and practical experience and fine administrative ability. In 1902 Mr. Hadley became one of the organizers and incorporators of the Polled Durham Breeders' Association of the United States, the largest and most substantial organization of its kind in the world. and of which he was elected president in 1908. He has made a specialty of the breeding of the Polled Durham cattle, and on his farm are to be found the finest of specimens of this breed. He is a member of both the state and National Shorthorn Breeders' Association.

A man of fine intellectual attainments and forceful personality, Mr. Hadley has naturally taken a laudable interest in public affairs in Indiana and done all in his power to conserve its progress and prosperity. A stalwart in the camp of the Republican party from the time of attaining his legal majority, he has rendered most efficient service in the promotion of its cause and has been a prominent factor in connection with the party work in his native state. His eligibility for positions of public trust was early recognized in his home community, where, it may be said, he set at naught all incidental application of the scriptural adage that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." At the age of twenty-one he became a precinct committeeman of his party in his home precinct, and he was chairman of the precinct committee for his township for a continuous period of fifteen years. The first elective office to which he was called was that of trustee of his native township, of which position he continued incumbent for five and one-half years, at the close of which, in 1900, he was nominated and elected treasurer of Hendricks county. Local political precedent prescribes that in this county the county treasurer shall not become a candidate for a second term, and thus Mr. Hadley served only the one term, within which he showed marked ability in handling the fiscal affairs of the county.

In 1906 Mr. Hadley's name was placed before his party as a candidate for state treasurer, and after a spirited preliminary campaign he was duly nominated for this office in the Republican state convention of that year. In November of the same year he rolled up a gratifying majority at the polls, having led the ticket, and on the 10th of February, 1907, he assumed the duties of the office. Within his term of two years he amply justified the wisdom of the people's choice, bringing to bear marked capacity for handling the details of the work and doing much to improve the system of handling the fiscal affairs of the state. Popular appreciation of his fidelity, ability and integrity of purpose was indicated both in his nomination as his own successor by his party in the state convention of 1908, and also by the unequivocal support accorded him in the ensuing election, through which he was returned to office for a second term of two years, which expired on the 10th of February, 1911. His record as state treasurer was signally clean, straightforward and successful, redounding alike to his credit and to the conservation of the best interests of the commonwealth. His administration is generally conceded as one of the best the office ever had.

Upon leaving official life Mr. Hadley became identified with the Standard Live Stock Insurance Company of Indianapolis, of which he was one of the organizers and incorporators, and he has served as president of this corporation continuously since its organization to the present time. The Standard Live Stock Insurance Company is the largest organization of its kind in the world, having a capitalization of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and having business in many states of the Union.

Mr. Hadley is vice-president of the First National Bank of Plainfield, being also a director and one of the organizers of this well-known Hendricks county bank.

Fraternally, Mr. Hadley is a member of the Masonic order, in which has taken the capitular degrees, being affiliated with Plainfield Lodge No. 653, Free and Accepted Masons, in Plainfield, and with Danville Chapter No. 46, Royal Arch Masons, of Danville. He also holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Hadley was married March 10, 1880, to Emma Talbott, daughter of Lorenzo Talbott, a well-known stock dealer and farmer. Three children were born of this union: Chester, born February 26, 1882, is engaged in the nursery business at Danville, Indiana; Vivian, born December 18, 1885, is the wife of Dr. T. A. Bryan, of Mattoon, Illinois; Nancy, born October 20, 1880, lives in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Hadley are consistent members of the Christian church. The Hadley home is at No. 2745 College avenue, Indianapolis.

DANIEL M. JONES.

Descended from a family who were in Indiana when it was admitted to the Union in 1816 is Daniel M. Jones, whose history is briefly reviewed in the following pages. He is distinguished as a citizen whose influence has extended far beyond the community honored by his residence and he has for years stood out as a conspicuous figure among the successful farmers of his township and county. All of his undertakings have been actuated by noble motives and high resolves and characterized by that breadth of wisdom which distinguishes strong men. His success and achievements along agricultural lines represent the result of fit utilization of innate talent, directed along those lines where mature judgment and rare discrimination lead the way.

Daniel M. Jones, the son of Samuel and Nancy (Ramsey) Jones, was born August 12, 1849, in Morgan county, Indiana. His father was born May 24, 1803, in Tennessee, and his mother on March 25, 1812. Samuel Jones came to Indiana with his parents in 1815 and settled in that part of the state which was still under the control of the Indians. It was bought from the Indians by the United States government in the fall of 1818 and from it the territory in which the Joneses located was organized into Morgan county. Samuel Jones died in 1875 and his wife in 1898. They were the parents of eight children, only two of whom are now living, Daniel M., and Mrs. Elizabeth A. Snipes, of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mr. Jones was educated in the common schools of Hendricks county and later at Lafayette Farmers Institute. Early in life he decided that he wished to follow the occupation of his father. In accordance with the customs of those days, he was married very young and when nineteen years of age led to the nuptial altar Nancy Blair, of Guilford township, of this county, their wedding day falling on September 30, 1868. Immediately after their marriage they went to housekeeping on the farm where they have lived their married life of the past forty-six years one mile east of Plainfield. Mr.

Jones has always been a successful farmer and, while he has been very careful, he has not let his conservatism hinder him in taking advantage of all the latest improvements in farming. He has wisely divided his attention between the raising of grain and stock, with the result that he has acquired in the course of the last half century a very comfortable competence. He now has a fine farm of three hundred and seventy acres, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and productivity. He has taken a great deal of interest in farmers' institutes and stock farm courses as provided by our excellent state school.

Mr. Jones has been a life-long Republican, but has never indulged in the fervor of political campaigns. Religiously, he is a member of the Friends church and has always been an active worker in this denomination. He has always had the best interests of this locality at heart and has sought to advance them in whatever way possible. His career has been characterized by untiring energy, uncompromising fidelity and an earnest desire to serve his fellow men. He has been very much interested in education and particularly in the career of Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, to which he has subscribed liberally. He has been a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Plainfield for the past twenty years, being active in lodge work. Such has been his life during his long career that he has at the same time won and retains the high esteem of all with whom he has come in contact by the honorable course which he has at all times pursued.

NATHANIEL CLARK GOSSETT.

Agriculture has been an honored vocation from the earliest ages and, as a usual thing, men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free out-door life of the farm has a decided tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self-reliance which characterizes true manhood and no truer blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with nature in the healthful, life-inspiring labor of the fields. It has always been the fruitful soil from which have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's great warriors, renowned statesmen and distinguished men of letters were born on the farm and were indebted largely to its early influence for the distinction which they have attained.

Nathaniel Clark Gossett, one of the many successful farmers of Brown township. Hendricks county. Indiana, is a native of this county, born on a farm of which his present holdings constituted a part, on January 28, 1856, being one of twelve children of Nathaniel Walton and Mary Greenfield (Fox) Gossett, the former of whom was a son of John and Dorcas (Clark) Gossett, John Gossett was a son of Thomas and Sarah (Walton)Gossett. Dorcas Clark, paternal grandmother of the immediate subject of this sketch, was a daughter of Samuel E. and Rachael (Bratton) Clark, the former of whom was a veteran of the War of the Revolution. Mary Greenfield Fox, mother of the subject of this sketch, was a daughter of John and Hannah (Barker) Fox, and both she and the father of the subject were natives of the state of North Carolina, being brought to Indiana by their parents while they were still children. Nathaniel W. Gossett was twelve years of age at that time, while Mary Greenfield Fox was but eight years old. Both families settled in Hendricks county, about two and one-half miles north of Plainfield. Here the young people in question grew to maturity and there their marriage was later solemnized Nathaniel W. Gossett spent his boyhood days on the paternal farmstead. where he early learned the secrets of successful agriculture under the intelligent direction of his father. He devoted himself assiduously to the cultivation of the soil all his life and was eminently successful in his chosen vocation. At the age of nineteen he was married and at that time purchased a portion of his father's farm, remaining on that tract until in 1853. His original holdings were then disposed of to advantage and he purchased two hundred and ten acres of land in the northeast portion of Brown township. Hendricks county, where he passed the remainder of his life. His death occurred on October 28, 1903, and at that time he was living, together with his son, Nathaniel C., the immediate subject of this sketch, in a house he had built on his farm some distance from the old homestead, having disposed of all but eighty acres of his original farm. A short time before his death he sold that tract to the subject of this sketch, who has continued to reside there. There too, the mother of subject passed away on October 23, 1010. Mr Gossett has never married. He keeps his farm up to the highest type of modern agricultural methods and conducts his business in such a manner as to win for himself the reputation of being a thorough agriculturist. Mr. Gossett's oldest brother was one of the leading men of his community, serving as county superintendent of school for several years. He was also a veteran of the Civil War. Personally, Mr. Gossett is a man of strong personal qualities, easily makes friends and always retains them. United in his composition are so many elements of a provident, practical nature, which during a series of years have brought him into prominence and earned for him a first place among the enterprising men of his county, that it is but just recognition of his worthiness that he receive specific mention in this work.

ALBERT WESLEY BEAMAN.

Among the progressive farmers of Hendricks county Albert W. Beaman occupies a prominent place for the reason that he is a man of education and self confidence. Real self confidence is not a matter of many words, but it is the quiet chap with square jaw and the silent tongue who is the man to be afraid of. He is the man who wins. Out of self confidence grow enthusiasm and earnestness, and for the man who is in earnest nothing is impossible. Many of us make the mistake of not taking ourselves seriously. If we are inclined to look upon life as a joke it is pretty certain that the joke is on us. Mr. Beaman is a man who has believed in himself; he has selected a goal and marched straightforward toward it. Although he has found many difficulties in his way, he has believed that they were only there in order to prove his strength, to test his self confidence. One by one he has cleared the difficulties out of his way and today he stands a self-reliant, aggressive man who takes a prominent and influential part in the community where he lives.

Albert Wesley Beaman, the son of Adam and Rebecca A. (McDaniels) Beaman, was born February 22, 1874, in Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana. Adam Beaman was a native of Boone county, this state, who came to Hendricks county after he was married, settling in Brown township, on eighty acres of land. He died in March, 1909. Rebecca A. McDaniels, the mother of Mr. Beaman, was born in Hendricks county in April, 1844, her birth occurring about one mile west of Brownsburg, and she is still living at Pittsboro, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Adam Beaman were the parents of seven children, Charles S. Willard E., Otis B., deceased, Albert Wesley, William Edgar, Ada, deceased, George Byron, deceased.

Albert W. Beaman spent his earlier life on a farm in Brown township, where he was born in a log cabin. This log cabin, around which cluster so many memories of the Beaman family, was destroyed by fire in May, 1879, when Albert was five years of age. When he was born this farm was an unbroken forest and his boyhood days were alternated between his school books and the clearing. He was quick to learn and acquired knowledge readily and easily. Upon his finishing his common school course, he was sufficiently advanced to receive a teacher's license, and for two years taught school in Brown township, in this county. However, he preferred the life of a farmer, and upon his marriage began to farm and has since continued to follow that vocation, but taught one term near home recently, in Middle township.

In the fall of 1900 Mr. Beaman bought the farm where he has since resided, in the east edge of Middle township, near the Boone county line.

Mr. Beaman was married October 20, 1895, to Ona Kennedy, and to this union have been born three children, Byron Page, Edith Evangeline and Ernest Clifford. Mr. Beaman is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men at Fayette, Indiana, and in politics has always adhered to the principles of the Democratic party. While he has been active in the councils of his party, yet he has never been an aspirant for any office, but willing to serve in the ranks as a private. Mr. Beaman is a keen, business farmer, frank and plain spoken and is able to converse intelligently upon any topic of current interest. He is one of the clean-cut type of modern farmers who are the backbone of our nation today and help to make us the greatest nation on the face of the earth.

JOHN L. GUNN.

Practical industry, wisely and vigorously applied, never fails of success. It carries a man onward and upward, brings out his individual character and acts as a powerful stimulus to the efforts of others. The greatest results in life are often attained by simple means and the exercise of the ordinary qualities of common sense and perseverance. The every-day life, with its cares, necessities and duties, affords ample opportunities for acquiring experience of the best kind and its most beaten paths provide a true worker with abundant scope for effort and self-improvement. The life history of John L. Gunn exemplifies what may be accomplished by a man who sets a high ideal in life and then has the courage to follow it all through his career. His life has additional interest because of his gallant service in the Civil War, in which he fought three years.

John L. Gunn, the president of the Citizens' State Bank of Plainfield, was born March 16, 1837, on a farm in Rush county, Indiana. His parents were Dr. John L. and Lydia (Hornaday) Gunn, his father being a native of Virginia and his mother of North Carolina. Doctor Gunn came west when a young man and first settled in Kentucky. He then moved into Indiana, but died shortly after coming into this state, in fact, dying a few months before John L., the subject of this sketch, was born. Doctor and Mrs. Gunn had one other child, Mrs. John Weir, who died in 1911. The widow of Doctor Gunn later married John V. Hadley and moved to Hendricks county when John L. was two years of age.

John L. Gunn was reared as a farmer's lad, attended the rude district schools of the ante-bellum days and then entered Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, where he completed his education. While in the University he was a classmate of Judge John V. Hadley, of Danville, and the late Col. Eli Ritter, of Indianapolis. Shortly after leaving college the Civil War opened and when the President's call was issued he enlisted in Company I, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was in the service for nearly three years and was mustered out as a duty sergeant. He participated in all of the battles of the Atlanta campaign, being in the battles of Buzzard Roost, Resaca, Peach Tree Creek, Marietta, Ringgold and many others. In the engagement at Hickory, Georgia, he was injured by the bursting of a shell near him.

Mr. Gunn was first married in 1858 to Caroline Cox, of Hendricks county, and to this marriage were born two daughters, Mrs. Lillie D. Belle, of Indianapolis, and Mrs. Laura L. Pike, of Plainfield. Some years after the death of his first wife Mr. Gunn married Mrs. Mityline Tomlinson Bryant, of Hendricks county. There have been no children by the second marriage.

Until twenty years ago Mr. Gunn was actively engaged in agricultural pursuits and his success was entirely commensurate with his efforts. He was recognized as one of the best farmers of Guilford township and when he retired from the active management of his place he had one of the most up-to-date farms in the township. He still retains his farming interests and also has valuable property adjoining the town of Plainfield. After moving to Plainfield he became one of its most progressive citizens and has been an enthusiastic advocate of local improvements, and during his service of six years on the town board of Plainfield he started the agitation for sidewalks and electric lights. For the past six years he has been president of the Citizens' State Bank of Plainfield and in that capacity has proved to be an able administrator of the various financial problems which come before the bank.

Mr. Gunn has always been a Republican until the organization of the Progressive party, but has never held any office except that of town councilman of Plainfield. He is a man who has always kept his mind open to new ideas and keeps abreast of the best thought. In the course of his long life in the county he has won a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM DAVIS LEWIS.

Among the sturdy pioneers of Hendricks county, those who have made it their abiding place since its early days; who have seen it grow and develop from a sparsely settled country district to its present condition of prosperity, none is better known than the subject of our present sketch. A resident of the county for home than seventy years, he has proven himself loyal to the place of his birth, giving largely of his time, his thought and his influence to promote the growth and development of the commonwealth.

William Davis Lewis, the son of Stephen Taylor and Nancy (Hornaday) Lewis, was born October 10, 1843, in Union township, this county, north of the town of Lizton. Here he spent his boyhood, learning the rudiments of his life's vocation, that of husbandry; laying the foundation of the sagacity and strength of physique which make for success in that calling. Here, also, in the township schools he received his schooling, attending the common schools, when he could, until the war broke out, and after the war, with characteristic ambition, going to Danville for a further term of study in the Danville Academy.

On October 7, 1861, in response to his country's call for volunteers to come to her defense, he left the peaceful, protected life of the farm and enlisted in the Army of the Cumberland, becoming a member of Company C, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteer Infantry. For three years he remained with his regiment, engaging with great bravery in all its battles, enduring all the hardships and deprivations of the campaigns, having several very narrow escapes, and when his term of service expired he re-enlisted for another term of three years, and served until the close of the war. He was mustered out of service on the 13th day of December, 1865, but after peace was declared, he was sent to San Antonio, Texas, returning to Indianapolis on January 13, 1866. He was taken prisoner with his regiment near Rome, Georgia, and narrowly escaped the horrors of Libby prison, finally, however, receiving his parole. At the close of the service he was mustered out as a lieutenant. After leaving the service he came back to Hendricks county, followed farming and attended Danville Academy.

On February 3, 1870, he was married to Mary Evaline Parker, the daughter of William G. and Martha (Wells) Parker. Like their forefathers, the young people clung to the peaceful life of the farm, building for themselves a homestead on a twenty-eight-acre tract of land, most of which is now within the limits of Pittsboro, where they still reside, enjoying the fruits of their industry and thrift. During their long-continued residence in the county, William Davis Lewis and his wife have stood for all that is best and noblest in the life of the community. Devoted members of the Christian church, that body has shown its appreciation of his sterling qualities and deep spirituality by electing him a deacon of the church for twenty-five consecutive years, and also making him one of the trustees of the church property. One daughter has blessed their union, now Mrs. Ella G. Todd. She is the mother of two sons, William Lewis and Clifford Parker, and resides in Worcester, Massachusetts.

The ancestors of Mr. Lewis, for generations, have engaged in the pursuit of agriculture. His paternal grandfather, Stephen Lewis, was a native of Rush county, spending his days until death called him on the homestead farm, north of Rushville. Here his zon, Stephen Taylor Lewis, the father of the subject of this article, was born and reared. In 1837 Stephen left the home to his father and came to Hendricks county. Here he entered from the government forty acres of land north of Lizton, in Union township. This he later sold and purchased eighty acres east of Lizton, which became his permanent home until his death, December 13, 1855. He was the father of five children, Stephen, Hannah Jane, John H., William Davis and Thomas D., of whom the subject is the only survivor. While yet a resident of Rush county, Stephen Taylor Lewis was married to Nancy Hornaday, and throughout his life she remained his faithful companion, rearing their family and remaining on the homestead farm until her death, six years after the demise of her husband. Death came to her on April 3, 1850.

The wife of William Davis Lewis was also the daughter of a farmer, William G. Parker, a native of Kentucky. He, however, spent much of his time trading in live stock, and for a number of years was a merchant. He was the father of nine children, as follows: Mary Evaline (now Mrs. Lewis), Oliver Wilson, Sarah Jane (deceased), Robert Ellsworth, William M., Ruth A. (deceased), and two little ones who died in infancy. Mr. Parker passed away in the year 1877. His wife was a native of North Carolina, and still survives, an honored member of the household of her daughter, Mrs. Lewis

In manner, Mr. Lewis is quiet, unassuming and sincere, having a personality which invites the confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. He served as commander of Thomas Ashby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, two or three terms. For forty-three years he has been a member of the Masonic order, and bears the honor of being the oldest member of this organization in Hendricks county. He was initiated October 19, 1869, at Brownsburg. Although a stanch Republican in politics and progressive in his ideas, he has never aspired to hold office, preferring to devote his energies to the social and religious life of the community; and his wholesome, godly example has not been without great influence for good, which is evidenced by the high regard in which he is held by a host of friends and neighbors.

WILLIAM EDGAR BEAMAN.

A farmer of Hendricks county, Indiana, who has a true love for his occupation is William E. Beaman, who has not been content to farm exactly in the same manner as his ancestors, but has moved from the beaten path and tried to keep pace with all the modern scientific methods of agriculture. For this reason he has been more than ordinarily successful and can attribute his measure of success to the fact that he has combined brains with brawn, a combination which is sure to yield a gratifying result when properly pursued.

William Edgar Beaman, the son of Adam and Rebecca A. (McDaniel) Beaman, was born February 14, 1876, in Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His father was native of Boone county, this state, and came to Hendricks county after his marriage, settling in Brown township on an eighty-acre farm and here he lived the life of a farmer, dying on March 15, 1909. He was a man who loved a simple, plain and unostentatious life and was capable of an enormous amount of hard work. When he was a young man he had a great reputation as an athlete. In the days when wrestling was in vogue, there was not a young man in the neighborhood who could lay him flat on his back. His wife was a native of this county, and was born near Brownsburg, in April, 1844, and she is still living at Pittsboro, this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Adam Beaman were born seven children: Charles S., Willard E., Otis (deceased), Albert Wesley (whose history is given elsewhere in this volume), William Edgar, Ada V. (who died in infancy), and George B. (deceased).

William Edgar Beaman received a good, practical education in his township school and almost completed high school. He remained at home until his marriage, assisting his father on the home farm, taking part in clearing land and learning by experience. He then began farming north of Pittsboro, where he remained nine years. In 1907 he bought his present farm of eighty acres, on which he conducts a general system of farming.

Mr. Beaman was married October 9, 1898, to Julia Hufford, the daughter of Gideon Franklin and Mary Jane (Stout) Hufford. Gideon Hufford was a native of Hendricks county, his birth having occurred in Washington township, and he spent his life in the pursuit of agriculture, and died in 1903 at Tilden, Indiana. Mrs. Hufford was a native of Marion county, this state, and is still living in this county, near Tilden, on the old homestead farm. Mr. and Mrs. Hufford were the parents of nine children: George F., deceased; Delilah, who died when young; Mrs. Carrie Garner; Theodore Newton, deceased; Joel V.; Mrs. Ella Garner; Julia, the wife of Mr. Beaman; Edgar and John T. Mr. and Mrs. Beaman have four children, Doris M., Wilford Lawrence, Frances Isabel and Edgar.

Fraternally, Mr. Beaman is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Pittsboro, and, politically, holds his affiliation with the Democratic party. He is a liberal and broad-minded farmer, who makes a deep study of farming as a practical profession, is of a decided mechanical turn of mind, and believes in the strict honesty of all men and is quick to resent any unfairness to himself or to any of his fellow citizens. He is strictly honest himself and believes in the Golden Rule in every-day life.

THOMAS JACOB SANDUSKY.

Hendricks county is fortunate in that she numbers among her prominent families many who are not only natives of the place themselves, but whose ancestors as well found here an abiding place of peculiar attraction. Many of our early settlers came to this locality from other states, some even from abroad; but, after long and ofttimes perilous journeys, they appear to have found here what they sought, comfortable homes and the means of maintaining the same. Here their children and grandchildren were born and bred, some of them going out into various professions, and some loyally following in the footsteps of their fathers, tilling the soil, cultivating and improving not only their farms, but building roads and draining swamp lands, paving the way for the greater affluence of the present generation.

Among these early settlers, the father of the subject of this article should be mentioned. James Sandusky was born in the year 1821 in Bourbon county, Kentucky, but came to Brown township, Hendricks county, in the year 1864. At that time this locality was uncultivated and swampy, a veritable wilderness of undergrowth. But Mr. Sandusky was alive to the possibilities of the place and did not hesitate at the hard work involved in clearing and draining a tract of land in order that it might become a suitable location for human habitation; and the development of the place has proved the soundness of his judgment.

On the 5th day of November, 1846, Mr. Sandusky was married to Agnes Sandusky, of Vermillion county, Illinois; but five years later they were separated by the death of his wife, she passing away September 5, 1851. He was later married to Elizabeth Susan Morgan, also of Vermillion county, Illinois, who became the mother of two of his children, Thomas Jacob (the subject of this sketch) and Mary Agnes (Gibbs). She was born May 29, 1826, and was called to her final home May 11, 1862. For the third time he sought and found a companion in Josephine Knaus, of Marion county, Indiana, she being a native of Sigmaringen, Germany. To this union were born four children, Elizabeth (Strawnyer), Antoinette (Beard), Josephine (Arbuckle), and Hannah (Coffman), deceased.

Mr. Sandusky followed the pursuit of agriculture throughout his life, and when death called him, in 1893, he went from his own homestead to his final resting place. He was a member of the Masonic order and affiliated with the Democratic party.

Thomas J. Sandusky, the immediate subject of this article, was born May 14, 1856, in Decatur county, Indiana, coming to Hendricks county with his father in 1864. On the 3d day of August, 1882, he was married to Susan E. Gibbs, a native of Marion county, this state. Her parents, William and Elizabeth (Burden) Gibbs, were both born natives of England, but emigrated to this country not long after their marriage. He found his highest efficiency in the wholesome, natural life of the farm, and here he brought his wife. Eleven children were born to them, as follows: Thomas, born in England; Mary; Anna, deceased; William; Daniel; Homer, deceased; Theodore, deceased; Susan, now Mrs. Sandusky; Merritt; John and Everitt. Death claimed the wife and mother in 1903, and six years later the father was called. To Mr. and Mrs. Sandusky were born two children, Ida M. (now Mrs. Everett) and Grover T.

After his marriage, Thomas Sandusky continued the work taught him by his father, clinging to the life of the farmer, and very successfully he has proven. His farm shows the results of the labor and care expended upon it, being in a high state of cultivation, well kept and showing the careful management which has characterized his labors. He is particularly interested in his live stock, taking great pride in his sheep, of which he raises a goodly number.

In manner, Mr. Sandusky is quiet and unassuming, but sociable withal; a progressive man and an excellent neighbor. He is a firm believer in Democratic principles as promulgated by Jefferson; is affiliated with the order of Knights of Pythias at Brownsburg, and both he and Mrs. Sandusky are well known members of the Methodist Protestant church, he being a trustee of this organization and she a charter member. He is also a trustee of the parsonage at Lebanon, Indiana. That he is well and favorably known throughout the surrounding country is evidenced by the fact that he has served as justice of the peace of Brown township for ten years, from 1878 to 1888; and later was elected township trustee, serving in that capacity from 1805 to 1900. In both offices he was known as a conscientious, honorable officer, exercising his powers with discretion and sound judgment. Altogether his life has been a thoroughly successful one, a splendid example to the community at large, and by the coming generation his name will be remembered with high regard.

CLARKSON B. THOMAS.

Devoted to the noble work which his profession implies, the gentleman whose career we essay to briefly outline in the following paragraphs has been faithful and indefatigable in his endeavors and has not only earned the due rewards of his efforts in a temporal way but has also proved himself eminently worthy to exercise the important functions of his calling, by reason of his ability, his abiding sympathy and his earnest zeal in behalf of his fellow men. His understanding of the science of medicine is regarded by those who know him as being broad and comprehensive, and the profession and the public accord him a distinguished place among the men of his class in Indiana. His has been a life of earnest and persistent endeavor, such as always brings a true appreciation of the real value of human existence—a condition that must be proflife of good results in all the relations of life.

Clarkson B. Thomas, the son of David and Lydia (Brantinghan) Thomas, was born in Harrison county, Ohio, March 14, 1877. Both his parents were natives of Ohio and his father is now a prosperous farmer living in Plainfield, where the family removed in 1889. The family are devoted and consistent members of the Friends church and are liberal supporters of that denomination. Mr. and Mrs. David Thomas are the parents of five children: Mrs. Eva T. Carter, of Plainfield; Dr. Clarkson B.; Anna L., deceased; Rachel Emma, of Plainfield, and Mrs. Sina Althea Thomason, of Springville, Iowa.

Doctor Thomas received his elementary education at the Friends School at Sugar Grove, Hendricks county, and later attended the Friends Boarding School at Barnesville, Ohio, where he completed his high school training. In 1898 he entered the Physio-Medical College at Indianapolis and graduated with the class of 1902. He at once began the active practice of medicine at Plainfield and has been uniformly successful since he started in this work. He is a member of the Hendricks County, Indiana and American medical societies.

Doctor Thomas was married on June 3, 1903, to Alice E. Hayworth, the daughter of Isaiah M. and Mary Hayworth, of Wilmington, Ohio. Doctor and Mrs. Thomas have one adopted daughter, Phyllis. Both he and his wife are loyal members of the Friends church and are interested in all the activities of their chosen denomination. Doctor Thomas is devoted to his life work and feels that in this there is a chance for doing a great amount of good for suffering humanity. He is a great reader and close observer and keeps well informed upon all the latest methods of treating disease. His affable and genial manner readily win friends and he and his good wife are admired by all with whom they are associated.

JOEL JESSUP.

To attain a worthy citizenship by a life that is always honored and respected even from childhood deserves more than mere mention. One may take his place in public life through some vigorous stroke of public policy, and even remain in the hearts of friends and neighbors, but to take the same position by dint of the practice of an upright life, and without a craving for exaltation and popularity, is worthy of the highest praise and commendation. The late Joel Jessup, one of the successful farmers and public-spirited citizens of Hendricks county, who was well known throughout this community, was a man respected and honored, not because of the vigorous training of his special talents, but because of his daily life, each day having been one that was above criticism and passed upon in the light of real, true manhood. Strong and forceful in his relations with his fellow men, he not only made his presence felt, but also gained the good will and commendation of both his associates and the general public, ever retaining his reputation among men for integrity and character, no matter how trying the circumstances, and never losing that dignity which is the birthright of a gentleman. Consequently his influence for good in the general life of his community was most potent, and he will long be sadly missed from the various circles in which he moved and over which his influence was like sunshine on a field of ripened wheat,

MRS. MARIA JESSUP, M. D.

JOEL JESSUP

The late Joel Jessup was born in Guilford township, this county, April 6, 1832, and died on the old homestead farm, October 4, 1908. He was one of five children born to Joseph and Rachel (Jackson) Jessup, the other four children being Mary, Jackson L., Lethy and Mahalia Jane. Joseph Jessup and his wife were both natives of North Carolina, coming to this county shortly after their marriage in 1820 and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land. The deed for this land, signed by President John Quincy Adams, is still in the family and is a treasured relic, which is very much cherished. Joseph Jessup died at the age of seventy and his wife at the age of seventy-eight, both having been born in the latter part of the eighteenth century.

Joel Jessup was given a very meager education, since the schools of his day were open but two or three months in the winter time and then offered very limited advantages. While Mr. Jessup was in the school room but a very short time, yet he laid the foundation for a desire for knowledge and, being a great reader all his life, he was, for a man of his age, well informed on most all subjects of the day. During all his life he lived on the farm and as a farmer was sufficiently progressive in keeping abreast of the times. As a boy he had to labor without any of the modern inventions, and as the modern agricultural implements came into use he added them one by one to his equipment until at the end of his life he was as well equipped for agriculture as any farmer in the county. He is remembered not so much for his success on the farm, as for his work in the community at large, work which was directed along moral and civic lines.

Mr. Jessup was married August 12, 1852, to Louisa Moon, and to this marriage were born four children: Harrison, born August 20, 1853, who was a farmer all his life and died December 30, 1905, leaving a widow and two sons. Walter and Carlos; Theodore W., born January 19, 1855, and died November 26, 1878, leaving a widow and two children, Nellie and Wallace T., the latter living on a part of the old homestead place; Jessie, born September 10, 1856, who married Jesse Allen, of West Newton, Marion county. Indiana, and they have four children. The Allen family are now residents of Pasadena, California; William S., born April 11, 1858, who married Femma Card, and they have four children, Louisa, Halstead, Donald and Mary Eleanor; William is now living on a part of the old home farm.

The first wife of Mr. Jessup died August 20, 1885, and two years later, on June 22, 1887, he was married to Dr. Maria Allen, the daughter of Preston and Susannah (Jessup) Allen. Her father came from Ohio and she was one of four children. She was educated in the local schools and at Spiceland Academy in Henry county, this state. She taught school for twenty years and it was not until she was thirty-eight years of age that she entered the Woman's Medical College of Chicago, Illinois (now a part of North-western University), from which she graduated three years later. She was married to Mr. Jessup two months after she graduated and has practiced for the past twenty-seven years in Hendricks county, Indiana. She ranks as one of the most prominent women practitioners in the state. She is a woman of great strength of character and with a tender and sympathetic feeling which should be the necessary concomitant of the technical experience needed for the successful physician.

Mr. Jessup had a birthright in the Friends church and throughout his whole life was a firm believer in the doctrines as set forth by that church. Being naturally of a quiet and reserved disposition, one had to know him intimately to appreciate his real depth of Christian spirit. He was of a deeply religious nature and a careful student of the Bible, and his great faith in Christ was built on its teachings. As might be inferred, his politics were in keeping with his faith and he was a Prohibitionist of the most radical kind all his life. Such men as Joel Jessup are a blessing to any community, because of their advocacy of wholesome living, pure politics and honesty in every-day life. Such men raise the standard of civic morality in every community, and their example is such as to help those who are starting in life.

AMOS C. WEAVER.

Among the worthy citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, whose residence here has contributed in no small degree to the prestige of the community is Amos C. Weaver, now living a retired life in Indianapolis, Indiana. He lived in this county from the time of his birth until 1903, when he retired from active business and removed to Indianapolis, where he now resides at No. 2019 Central avenue. Mr. Weaver is a man who, while laboring for his individual advancement, has never forgotten his obligations to the public and his support of such measures and movements as have been for the general good could always be depended upon. Although his life has been a busy one, his private affairs making heavy demands upon his time, he has never allowed it to interfere with his obligations as a citizen and neighbor. Through the long years of his residence in this community he has ever been true to the trusts reposed in him, whether of a public or private nature, and his reputation in a business way has been unassailable. Possessing in a marked degree those sterling traits which have commanded uniform confidence and regard, he is today honored by all who know him and is numbered among the representative men of Hendricks county. He is one of the few remaining veterans of that great struggle which threatened to sever the Union in the sixties and special honor is due him for the four long and bloody years which he spent on the battle fields of the South.

Amos C. Weaver, now living a retired life in Indianapolis, was born in Middle township, Hendricks county, Indiana, August 15, 1841. His parents were Thomas Jefferson and Anna (Hollis) Weaver, both natives of Kentucky, he being born in 1805 and she in 1807. After their marriage in Kentucky, they came to Indiana in 1836 and settled on a farm in Middle township, this county, where they lived the remainder of their lives. He died April 3, 1873, and his widow passed away November 10, 1886. They were the parents of eight children, the subject of this sketch being the only one living. The children, in the order of their birth, are as follows: William died at the age of seventeen; John B. died at the age of seventeen; Amanda Jane, who married Paxton Alexander, and died in 1854, at the age of twentytwo; Mary Matilda, who married Carlo Gadson, and died in May, 1864, at the age of twenty-two; James Lewis, who died in infancy; Amos C., the only one living; Ellis, who died in 1910, was a member of Company B, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for two years and was then attached to Battery B of the Fifth Regiment. Ellis was a recorder of Hendricks county at one time and one of the prominent citizens of the county; the eighth and youngest child was Taylor, who died in infancy.

Amos C. Weaver was reared on the farm and went through all the experiences common to boys on the farm. He attended school in the old log school houses of Middle township a few months each winter, and proved to be a very apt pupil. As soon as he had secured all the education he could get in the country schools he started to take the course in Northwestern University at Indianapolis. In order to get money to continue his education he taught school at Pittsboro, in his home county. The year 1861 found him twenty years of age and a teacher in Pittsboro, but when President Lincoln issued his call for troops, in the spring of 1861, young Weaver forsook his books and answered the call. He was mustered into the service on October 8, 1861, in Company A, Fifty-first Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out March 22, 1865. His company was attached to the Army of the West, and he saw service in scores of the fiercest battles which were fought in the West. Among these were Shiloh, Perryville, Corinth, Stone's River, Lookout Mountain, and many other skirmishes and forays of lesser importance. He was wounded at Dalton, Georgia, on August 15, 1864, by a minic ball, which shattered his foot. The army surgeons wanted to amputate his foot, but he objected so strenuously that they dressed it the best they could and let him go. He was in a very precarious condition for some time, but finally fully recovered, due to his wonderful physical constitution. A few weeks before he was shot he had been elected captain, but his commission did not arrive until after he was laid up in the hospital. He was sent home in November of 1864 and mustered out on March 22, 1865.

In the spring of 1865 Mr. Weaver was elected trustee of Middle township, and his administration of the duties of the office were so satisfactory that he was re-elected in the spring of 1867. While he was trustee he started in the mercantile business at Pittsboro, and continued in the business after his term as trustee had expired. For thirty-two years he operated a general store at Pittsboro and by his strict integrity and upright business dealings he accumulated a goodly share of this world's goods. In addition to his mercantile establishment he was interested in farming and stock raising during most of his life in Hendricks county, and now owns three hundred and seventy-three acres of fine land near Pittsboro. Fortune has seemed to smile on all of his undertakings and he has usually realized a substantial profit on all his investments. In 1903 he retired from the active charge of business cares and is now getting a well-earned rest after years of hard labor.

Mr. Weaver was married September 3, 1865, to Miriam Wells, the daughter of George Washington and Fanny Wells, of Middle township, this county. They are the parents of five children, all of whom have grown to maturity: Hollis H., a merchant of Greentown, Indiana; Chester A., a farmer living near Pittsboro; Urban R., who is a traveling salesman for a bankers' supply company of St. Louis; Grace D., who is the wife of John F. Wood; and Francis Pearl, who is the wife of B. O. Kile and lives near Galveston, Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have been extensive travelers and have been across the continent to California, south to Florida, Georgia and every state on the gulf of Mexico. They have also traveled in Mexico and Canada and throughout the eastern part of the United States. They are both members of the Christian church, and Mr. Weaver is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Grand Army of the Republic. At one time he was commander of Thomas Ashby Post No. 451, at Pittsboro. He has been a life-long Republican and has never seen any reason why he should change his allegiance to any other party. He has never held any office except that of trustee, which was immediately after he came home from the war.

Mr. Weaver has been a man of exceptional business ability, sound discretion and absolute integrity, factors which contributed to his success in a large degree. During all the years of his active career his life has been characterized by duty well performed, by faithfulness to every trust reposed in him, by industry, thrift and wisely directed effort, which has resulted in the acquisition of a liberal share of this world's goods, besides earning a reputation which has never been tarnished by the commission of a single unworthy act. During his long life in Hendricks county he made friends everywhere, and when he left the county, in 1903, he was one of the widest known men in the county. His career is certainly to be admired and is a worthy example to put before the people of the coming generation.

W. A. RUSHTON.

One of the most difficult literary tasks is to write an unexceptionable review of a living man. If the life is worthy of record there is always danger of offending that delicacy which is inseparable from merit; for even moderate praise, when it meets the eyes of the subject, is apt to seem fulsome, while a nice sense of propriety would not be the less wounded by a dry abstract containing nothing but names and dates. To sum up a career which is not yet ended would appear like recording events which have not yet transpired, since justly to estimate the scope and meaning of a history it is important that we have the closing chapter. In writing biographical notice, therefore, the chronicler from the moment he takes up his pen should consider the subject as no longer among his contemporaries, for thus he will avoid the fear of offending by bestowing praise where it is merited and escape the risk of giving but a fragmentary view of that which must eventually be taken as a unit. At some risk, therefore, the writer assumes the task of placing on record the life and character of a man who, by the force of strong individuality, has achieved eminent success in the vocations to which he has addressed himself and has won for himself an enviable place among the leading men of the city and county honored by his citizenship.

W. A. Rushton, one of the leading citizens of Plainfield, Indiana, was born in Liberty township, Hendricks county, Indiana, April 4, 1874. His parents were Ira and Talitha (Bray) Rushton, both of whom were natives of this county. His father was a leader in church work and helped to establish the Salem Methodist Episcopal church. Ira Rushton was born August 13, 1830, and died November 22, 1912, spending his entire life in Hendricks county. His widow is still living on the old home farm in Liberty township. Mr. and Mrs. Ira Rushton were the parents of twelve children, nine of whom are still living: Mrs. Evaline Cravens, of Hinsdale, Kansas; Mrs. Laura E. Morrison, of Liberty township; James W., of Indianapolis; Carrie, of Amarillo. Texas; Guy, of Liberty township; Mrs. Ola M. McCracken, of Monrovia, Indiana, and two sons who are still at home, Howard and Raymond.

W. A. Rushton was reared on his father's farm and spent the life of the ordinary farmer's boy until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving his education in the district schools of his nieghborhood and later took a high school course at Belleville. With the intention of taking up teaching as a profession, he enrolled in the Tri-State College at Angola, Indiana, where he took the teachers' course. He began teaching in 1897 and only taught a part of one year. In 1808 he took up his present life work of an undertaker, and has continued in that business until the present time. He started in with the late William H. Hiss, a furniture dealer and undertaker of Plainfield, and remained with him for three years. He then went to Indianapolis and was manager of the Flanner & Buchanan undertaking establishment for four years. In January, 1905, he bought out William Hiss, of Plainfield, and has since conducted the business under his own name. He understands every phase of his business, being an especially competent embalmer, and because of his painstaking attention to the important duties incumbent upon him in his profession, and his innate courtesy in all his associations with his patrons, he has earned a warm place in the esteem of those who know him.

While working in Indianapolis, Mr. Rushton was married, on October 28, 1903, to Cophine Mills, daughter of William H. and Anna Mills, of Hendricks county, and to this union there have been born two daughters, Lois Mona and Marcia Dena.

Mr. Rushton has been affiliated with the Democratic party since reaching his majority, but owing to the nature of his business he has never been active in politics. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Friends church and are very active in the various departments of the church work of that denomination. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Free and Accepted Masons. Mr. Rushton has taken an active interest in the civic and moral life of his community, and is at present acting as president of the Plainfield library board and takes a very active interest in the management of the local library. His standing in the State Funeral Directors' Association is shown by the fact that he has been president of the state association and also secretary. He has also been secretary of the local Masonic lodge and is past chancellor of the lodge of Knights of Pythias. Mr. Rushton is a man who is always found in hearty accord with all movements which have for their object the advancement of the educational, moral, social or material welfare of his community. He is a man of large experience, sound judgment and sagacity and is a keen observer of public events, and on which he holds decided convictions. He is a man of positive character and sterling worth, and his value to the community is evidenced by the high position which he has ever held in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

JAMES C. STAFFORD.

James C. Stafford, one of the large number of physicians in the same family, was born September 14, 1881, near Newcastle, Henry county, Indiana. His parents, John E. and Alpharetta (Nicholson) Stafford, were both natives of the same county and were born on adjoining farms. His father is a prosperous farmer in Henry county, Indiana, today, both parents being still living. Doctor Stafford is the only child in the family.

Dr. Daniel Hastings Stafford, the subject's grandfather, graduated from the Physio-Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1866, and practiced mostly in Henry county, Indiana, where his death occurred in 1900. He had three sons who were doctors, James A., of Newcastle, Indiana; Lindley, deceased, and William H., deceased, who practiced at Blountsville, Indiana. Daniel H. Stafford had also four grandsons who were doctors, W. H., of Newcastle; C. A. and Lindley H., at Indianapolis, and James C., of Plainfield.

Doctor Stafford received his common school education in district schools of his home neighborhood and then graduated from the Rich Square high school in Henry county in 1898. Since this was only a three years' course, he graduated from the Newcastle high school in 1901 and then spent one year in the State University at Bloomington, Indiana. However, the call of the physician was not to be denied, and as a result he decided to enter the Indiana Physio-Medical College at Indianapolis, where he took the full four years' course, entering the fall of 1904, and graduating with the class of 1908. He came to Plainfield in November, 1908, and here he opened up an office for the general practice of medicine, and has never regretted his choice of locations. His practice has gradually improved and he now has his share of the patronage of the community.

Doctor Stafford was married August 13, 1905, to Lura White, the daughter of Joseph and Sarah White, of Linden, Montgomery county, Indiana, and to them have been born three children. James Linden, born March 31, 1907; Lura Catherine, born August 13, 1909, and William Clayton, born June 10, 1913. Doctor Stafford is a member of the Hendricks county and Indiana State medical societies, and is a wide reader of all kinds of medical literature. He keeps well informed on all the progressive methods of treating disease and his office is well equipped with all the up-to-date appliances which are found in the modern office of the best physicians.

Doctor Stafford is a member of the Knights of Pythias, holding the office of past chancellor of the Plainfield lodge of that order. Although he was reared a Republican, he is not a partisan by any means, but in all local elections he votes for the man rather than for any particular party. However, he is well read on the political issues of the day and can discuss them intelligently. It is an interesting fact that there have been eight physicians in the Stafford family, the original Doctor Stafford having been born at Greensboro, Indiana, his parents coming to this state from North Carolina in an early day.

Doctor Stafford gives all his time and attention to his practice and is rapidly being regarded as one of the most successful physicians of this section of the state. As a successful physician he has made friends throughout the county and retains the respect and esteem of all classes of people.

JOSHUA S. THARP.

The biographies of enterprising men, especially of good men, are instructive as guides and incentives to others. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish. Some men belong to no exclusive class in life; apparently insurmountable obstacles have in many instances awakened their dormant faculties and served as a stimulus to carry them to ultimate renown. The instances of success in the face of adverse fate would seem almost to justify the conclusion that self-reliance, with a half chance, can accomplish any reasonable object. The gentleman whose life history is herewith outlined is a man who has lived to good purpose and has achieved a splendid success. By a straightforward and commendable course he has made his way to a respectable position in the business world, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his county and earning a reputation as an enterprising, progressive man of affairs which the public has not been slow to recognize and appreciate.

Joshua S. Tharp, one of the representative citizens of Brownsburg and for some time president of the Brownsburg Bank, was born on November 8. 1838, in Hendricks county, Indiana, and is the son of James and Mary (Yount) Tharp, the former of whom was a native of Shelby county, Kentucky, and a son of John and Rebecca (Lee) Tharp, both natives of that county, who came to Indiana at a later date, settling in Hendricks county about five miles north of Danville. James Tharp remained under the parental roof in the Kentucky home until he was eighteen years of age, when he married, and together he and his young wife came to Hendricks county. Indiana, on horseback, leading a pack horse with a few of their cherished possessions. This was in 1828 and they took up their abode west of Danville. on Mill creek, being among the very first settlers in that locality. He was among the very few who did not enter government land, and he passed the remainder of his life on the home place he secured when first coming to Indiana. He was the father of ten children, among whom was Joshua S., the immediate subject of this sketch.

Joshua S. Tharp remained with his father until he was twenty-one years of age, when he was united in marriage with Mary J. Fausset, when they took up their residence on his grandfather's farm, where they remained for fifteen years, making their home with his uncle, William Tharp, until the time of his death. They then took up their residence on their own farm, about a half-mile north of his uncle's homestead, and there they resided for twenty-five years. They later removed to Pittsboro, where they remained for less than a year, and from there came to Brownsburg, which they have since made their home. Mr. Tharp disposed of his farm north of Danville in 1906, when he purchased one hundred and sixty acres in Brown township, Hendricks county, and also purchased town property in Brownsburg, two of the pieces being business blocks.

Mr. Tharp has been twice married. His first wife, Mary J. Fausset, who died in 1883, was a daughter of Robert Fausset and wife. To Mr. Tharp, by his first wife, were born ten children, namely: Willard, who died young; Isaac Wesley, who married Julia Noland and has four children, one of which died in infancy and the others being married; Edith, the eldest, is the wife of Raymond Smith and lives north of Danville; Clarence, who married Lessie Day, lives on the same farm north of Danville; the other child is Hollis, who remains at home. Another son of Joshua S. Tharp, James, died while young. Arie O, became the wife of William S, Elmore, residing a mile and a half south of Pittsboro, and have a family of eight children. William R. resides in Indianapolis. His wife was an Indianapolis girl and they have a family of three children. Cora E. married Dan Hendricks and is living about five miles north of Danville. Geneva married Willard O. Johnson. They reside northeast of Pittsboro and have a family of four children. Florence, who resides in Lizton, is the wife of Edgar Biggs and has one child. H. Edgar Tharp married Minnie Graham and lives four miles north of Brownsburg. He is an auctioneer and is very well known all over the county. Mary J., the youngest child, died while young. In 1885 Mr. Tharp united in marriage with Rachael R. (Hendricks) Harrison. She is the daughter of Peter and Mary Ann (Woodworth) Hendricks and was born in Putnam county, Indiana, near Maysville, in 1845. Her parents were natives of the state of Kentucky, coming to Putnam county soon after their marriage. They raised a family of nine children. In 1860 she was united in marriage with Benjamin Harrison, whose death occurred in 1882. To their union were born eight children, four of whom are still living. Ora, one of her daughters, is the wife of Eddie Jack and the mother of four children. They live in Indianapolis. William H., a son, married Carrie Pelcher and they reside with their four children in Centralia, Washington, Francis M. took as his wife Hattie Thomas and they also have a family of four children and make their home north of Danville. Edgar, who has two children, married Marie Craven and makes his home in Tipton.

Politically a Democrat, Mr. Tharp has been for many years actively interested in the welfare of his community. He served on the county board of review in 1913 and also in 1914, and is one of the best posted men in the county as to land valuations of the county. He has ever done all within his power to advance the moral and material interests of his locality. That Mr. Tharp is enterprising in his operations is evidenced by the fact that his business interests are varied. He was president of the Brownsburg Bank, both as a private bank and since it was made a state bank; buys and sells wool, sells insurance and has many other duties devolving upon him in connection with the property he owns both in town and country. For twenty-seven years he was a director of the Hendricks County Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and both Mr. and Mrs. Tharp are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. Religiously, they are members of the Baptist church and are sincerely interested in the workings of same.

Mr. Tharp is a man who has ever made his influence felt for good in his community, being a man of sterling worth, whose life has been closely interwoven with the history of the community in which he resided. The well regulated life he has led, thereby gaining the respect and admiration of all his fellow citizens, entitles him to representation in a biographical work of the scope intended in the present one. Genial and unassuming in his relations with his fellow men, he has won and retains the confidence and good will of all with whom he comes in contact.

RICHARD D. PLUMMER.

The Plummer family has been identified with the history of Hendricks county, Indiana, since 1825, and during this period of nearly ninety years they have taken their part in the civic, moral, educational and religious life of their respective communities in such a way as to stamp them as a family of excellent characteristics. Richard D. Plummer has spent his whole career of more than three score years in this county, and no more public-spirited citizen has ever lived within the limits of the county. The interests of his county has been one of the mainsprings of his actions and he has done many disinterested deeds which stand to his credit. Starting life under pioneer conditions, he has risen to a position of prominence and during his long career in the county has aided in every way the growth of its material interests and the progress of its prominent industries.

Richard D. Plummer, the proprietor of three farms in this county, aggregating three hundred and eighty-nine acres, was born on June 24, 1848, in Eel River township, this county. He is a son of Joseph and Ann (Day) Plummer, his father being a native of Greene county, Ohio, born on October 17, 1813, the son of Levi and Mary Plummer. Levi Plummer was born in Maryland and his wife in this state, and in 1815 they came to Fayette county, Indiana, where they lived for five years. They then moved to Morgan county, this state, and, after a residence of five years in that county, came to Hendricks county and spent the remainder of their days in this county.

Joseph Plummer, the father of Richard D., was reared to manhood amid the scenes of pioneer life in this county and received only a meager common school education. He was married August 2, 1832, to Ann Day, in Morgan county, this state, and to this union were born nine children, Mary, Martha, Thomas, Levi, Hannah, Fannie, John, Ann and Richard D. The mother of these children died January 18, 1870, and on May 14, 1872, Joseph Plummer married Lydia Burgen, the daughter of Isaac and Sarah Burgen, who were among the early settlers of Hendricks county. In the spring of 1835 Mr. Plummer settled in the eastern portion of Eel River township, where he lived the life of a prosperous farmer until his death, in November, 1896. He had started in life with nothing, but by careful business methods and strict attention to his business he became the owner of five hundred and sixty-five acres of excellent farming land in this county.

Richard D. Plummer has lived his whole life in Eel River and Center townships. He attended the rude log school houses of his home neighborhood during his boyhood days and assisted his father on the farm during his summer vacations. The schools of that day were only three months in length and the instruction was confined principally to reading, writing and arithmetic. Mr. Plummer has devoted his whole life to agricultural pursuits and has met with a measure of success which has been commensurate with his efforts. He married in 1872, and in 1876 bought his first farm of eighty acres, and to this he has added from time to time until he is now the owner of three hundred and ninety acres of land in the county. He is a man of powerful physique and has done a great deal of hard manual labor in his time. In the days when wheat was cut with the cradle, he could cut as much wheat as any man in the neighborhood and keep it up day after day.

Mr. Plummer was married August 20, 1872, to Mary E. Margason, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Griggs) Margason, early settlers of Center township, this county. The Margasons came from Kentucky to Jefferson county, Indiana, and later settled in this county, where they purchased land in Center township. Mr. and Mrs. Plummer are the parents of five children: Horace, a manufacturing jeweler and engraver in Indianapolis, with offices in the State Life building in that city; Marsalice, who is now in the West; Lydia is the wife of Richard Harrison, of Danville, and the mother of two children, Roy and Evangeline; Lula, who is still living with her parents; Oliver Earl, who is the chemist for a gypsum factory in Ohio, was recently married to Dora Padget.

Politically, Mr. Plummer is a supporter of the Republican party. The high standing which he occupies among the agriculturists of Hendricks county is attributable largely to his indefatigable perseverance and untiring energy. While his private affairs naturally receive the major portion of his time and attention, yet he is interested in matters of public interest and is prominent in the local affairs of his community. In business circles he is respected by all with whom he comes in contact and occupies a foremost position among the representative citizens of his county.

JOSEPH C. MORGAN.

The following is a brief sketch of one who, by close attention to business, has achieved marked success in the world's affairs and risen to an honorable place among the enterprising men of the county with which his interests are identified. It is a plain record, rendered remarkable by no strange or mysterious adventure, no wonderful and lucky accident and no tragic situation. Mr. Morgan is one of those estimable citizens whose integrity and strong personality must force them into an admirable notoriety, which their modesty never seeks, who command the respect of their contemporaries and their posterity and leaves the impress of their individuality upon the age in which they live.

Joseph C. Morgan, a plasterer and public-spirited citizen of Plainfield, was born April 3, 1859, at Monrovia, Morgan county, Indiana. His parents were William H. and Maria (Marvin) Morgan, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of Ohio. His father was born in 1824 and learned the trade of a plasterer in Kentucky before coming to Morgan county, in 1855. In 1863 William Morgan moved to Plainfield, Indiana, where he followed his trade until his death, in 1894, at the age of seventy. He was a prominent Mason and was always very much interested in the affairs of the lodge. Mr. and Mrs. William Morgan were the parents of seven children, all of whom are living: Joseph C., the immediate subject of this sketch; O. P., of Plainfield; Mrs. Rolena Hagee, of Plainfield; Mrs., who has been a teacher in the Plainfield schools for the past twenty years; Nannie, of Monrovia, Indiana; and Mrs. Minnie Bridges, the wife of Doctor Bridges, of Plainfields.

Joseph C. Morgan was given a good practical education in the public schools of Plainfield, and when a small lad began to help his father. He was thus early initiated into all of the details of the plasterer's trade and there is no trick in the trade with which he is not familiar. It is safe to say that there is no more efficient and artistic workman in this section of the state than Mr. Morgan, and as a result he has always had all the work he could handle, and yet his customers have been perfectly satisfied with his work in every particular.

Joseph C. Morgan has never married, but for many years has lived with his aunt in Plainfield. He owns a fine home, which is equipped with all the modern conveniences. In his fraternal relations he is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for the past twenty-five years. He has always voted the Republican ticket, and while he keeps well informed on all the current questions of the day, he has never been a seeker after political preferment.

The family history of Mr. Morgan is of more than ordinary interest, and he is justified in being proud of his progenitors on both sides of the family. His mother's father, Clare Marvin, was a pioneer of Morgan county, Indiana, having settled near Monrovia about 1840. Clare Marvin was born in New York city, and was in the War of 1812, taking part in the siege of Baltimore. The Marvin family is of English descent, the first representative of the family coming to America in 1793. Nancy Marvin, another one of the early members of the family to come to America, was born in London in 1788, and died in Morgan county, Indiana, in 1892, at the advanced age of one hundred and four years. She retained her faculties to the last and it was from her that most of the family history has been obtained.

Joseph C. Morgan has lived a life of usefulness and has always taken an active part in the civic life of the community where he has resided for so many years. Personally, he is genial and companionable, enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout this section of the state, and is a popular member of the circle in which he moves.

JONAH S. BRILL.

The biographies of enterprising men, especially of good men, are instructive as guides and incentives to others. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what it is in the power of each to accomplish. Some men belong to no exclusive class of life; apparently insurmountable obstacles have in many instances awakened their dormant faculties and served as a stimulus to carry them to ultimate renown. The instances of success in the face of adverse fate would seem almost to justify the conclusion that self-reliance, with a half chance, can accomplish any reasonable object. The gentleman whose life history is herewith outlined is a man who has lived to good purpose and achieved a splendid success. By a straightforward and commendable course he has made his way to a respect able position in the business world, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his county, and earning a reputation as an enterprising and progressive man of affairs which the public has not been slow to recognize and appreciate.

Jonah S. Brill, one of the successful and enterprising farmers of Hendricks county, who is now living a retired life in Plainfield, was born May 26. 1851, in Frederick county, Virginia. His parents, John Harrison and Sarah Ann ((Millhorn) Brill, were both natives of Virginia, his father's birth occurring December 6, 1810, and died January 6, 1804, while his mother was born May 14, 1821, and died January 6, 1870. John H. Brill was a stage driver for many years and covered the route from Winchester, Virginia, to Knoxville, Tennessee, When Jonah S, was about one year old, his father came with his family to Indiana, settling in Liberty township, Hendricks county, where they lived until 1867, when they moved to Sheridan county, Missouri. John H. Brill and his wife both died in that state. They reared a large family of thirteen children, nine of whom are living, Dr. James H. Brill, of Indianapolis; Mrs. Mary F. Lambert, of Hadley, Hendricks county; Jonah S., the immediate subject of this sketch; Mrs. Eliza Morgan, of Springfield, Missouri; Mrs. Rachel E. Needham, of Mountain Grove, Missouri; Amos M., of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Elizabeth C. Coctrell, of Okmulgee, Oklahoma; Charles W., of Lampher, Colorado, and Mrs. Harriett E. Elliott, of Forest Green, Missouri.

Jonah S. Brill came to Hendricks county from Virginia with his parents when he was a mere babe in arms and has lived here all his life except five years, when he lived in Sheridan county, Missouri. His education was received in this state and he finished his educational training in Missouri, where he lived from 1867 to 1872. At the age of twenty he began to learn the trade of a carriage trimmer in Indianapolis, and continued to work at this occupation for six years. He then took up farming in Liberty township, this county, and continued to follow the vocation of a farmer until 1897, when he removed to Plainfield and left the active operation of the farm to younger hands. A few years ago, in 1907, he sold his farm and is now living a retired life in Plainfield.

Mr. Brill was married October 27, 1880, to Nannie Williams, the daughter of Nathan C. and Katherine (McPherson) Williams. The one child born to this union died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Brill are both devoted and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Plainfield. Fraternally, Mr. Brill is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, but has never taken an active part in politics, although he has always voted with the Democratic party. Mr. Brill has the reputation of a progressive man of affairs, is broad minded and public spirited, and has not been backward in giving his support to every movement for the upbuilding and development of his community. Personally, he is a most companionable man and is an appreciative member of the circles in which he moves.

Mrs. Brill was born in Liberty township, Hendricks county. Her parents were both natives of North Carolina and both came to Hendricks county, Indiana, when they were small children, grew up and married here, and lived in Liberty township. He was a farmer. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They had two children. One son, Luther, who was born in 1850, married Catherine Wheatley, and died in 1876. Nathan C. Williams died February 14, 1886; his wife died December 24, 1892.

MARTIN LUTHER JOHNSON.

Among the thriving farmers and stock raisers of Hendricks county the gentleman whose name introduces this article is especially conspicuous. Starting out with practically no capital or assistance, he has gradually forged to the front and has long since become one of the substantial citizens of his community, which he has seen develop to a foremost position in agricultural importance, and it is useless to add that he has played an important role in this work, having always had the affairs of his locality at heart and ready at all times to further any laudable undertaking having as its object the general good.

Martin Luther Johnson, one of the prosperous farmers of Middle township, was born in 1853 in Boone county, Indiana. His parents were Patrick and Clemens (Hanna) Johnson. Patrick Johnson was a native of Kentucky and came in 1829 to Boone county with his parents when he was eleven years of age. His father entered eighty acres near Brunswick, upon first settling in Boone county, but in 1865 moved into Hendricks county and bought one hundred and sixty acres of land in Brown township. He received his deed on the same day that Lincoln was shot, April 14, 1865. Patrick Johnson, in addition to his farming, bought and sold a large amount of stock, driving his stock to Indianapolis to market. He continued to farm his one hundred and sixty acres until about two years before his death, which occurred November 22, 1906. The wife of Patrick Johnson was a native of Kentucky, who came to Boone county with her parents when a small girl. She died in 1905. Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Johnson were the parents of a large family of thirteen children: George H., Mrs. Mary Johnson (deceased), James F., John C., Albert N., Martin Luther, Mrs. Nancy E. Burks, Mrs. Martha Caroline Cassaday, William P., Wilson T., Willard P., Mrs. Hanna Florence Davis and Herbert M.

Martin Luther Johnson spent the first twelve years of his life in Boone county and there received part of his education. After moving to this county he attended school for several years, receiving most of his schooling in Hendricks county. When he was married he only had twenty acres, but by honest endeavor and hard toil he has added to his land holdings from time to time, until now he owns a farm of one hundred and forty acres. He raises the crops of this locality and adds to his annual income by handling a considerable amount of live stock every year. In 1899 he built a large barn and has his whole farm improved in every way, in order to produce the best results with the minimum amount of effort. For fifteen years he operated a threshing machine outfit in connection with his farming, deriving no small income from this line of business.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1876 to Leonora Schenck, the daughter of Isaac Harvey and Nancy J. (Harris) Schenck. Isaac Schenck was born in Butler county, Ohio, and his wife in Pulaski county, Kentucky. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Schenck settled in Brown township, where he died in 1895 and she in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Schenck were the parents of eleven children: Mary Elizabeth, deceased; Mrs. Rebecca A. Young, deceased; Tighman Howard, deceased; Mrs. Caroline Pitzer, deceased; Mary Ellen, deceased; Levi H.; Samuel Riley; James B.; Leonora, the wife of Mr. Johnson; Thomas Jefferson and George. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are the parents of seven daughters, six of whom are living and five are married. Emma is deceased. The daughters living are: Mrs. Della Garner, Mrs. Ota Weaver, Mrs. Luella Stonebreaker, Mrs. Pearl Coleman, Miss Mary Etta Johnson and Mrs. Fern Hubble.

Politically, Mr. Johnson has always advocated the principles of the Republican party and has never seen any reason why he should change his adherence to that of any other party. He and his wife are members of the Regular Baptist church and he is a deacon and trustee in the church. Mr. Johnson has made a success of his life work, because he has been a hard worker and honest in his dealings with his fellow men. He is known among his friends and neighbors as a man who deals justly and a man who has acquired his present position, only through the dint of saving, honesty and good management. He is a man of strong will and obliging, a friend to the needy and distressed, one of those sterling men who makes good in any community.

REV. JOSEPH N. GREENE.

The life of the scholarly or professional man seldom exhibits any of those striking incidents that seize upon public feeling and attract attention to himself. His character is generally made up of the aggregate qualities and qualifications he may possess as these may be elicited by the exercise of the duties of his vocation or the particular profession to which he belongs. The highly honored and esteemed subject of this sketch is a man of well rounded character, sincere, devoted and loval, so that there are many salient points which render consonant a tribute to him in this compilation. He has not been content to hide his talents amid life's sequestered ways, but has by force of will and a laudable ambition to succeed, forged to the front into a position which stamps him as a man of extraordinary ability. His life has been one of hard study and he stands today a man well equipped to perform his work in life. There is no higher calling than that of a minister of the Gospel and the good that he does never receives its full reward in this world. Rev. Joseph N. Greene has not only made a notable success as a minister, but has also earned a wide reputation as a lecturer on Shakesperian subjects. In addition he has entered the literary field and produced three books which have added not a little to his prestige.

Rev. Joseph N. Greene, now pastor of the Broadway Methodist Episcopal church of Indianapolis, and a former resident of Danville, Indiana, was born in Valparaiso, Indiana, June 25, 1868. His parents were Nelson and Mary Jane (Funk) Greene, his father also being a minister in the Methodist church. Nelson Greene was a native of Ohio and came to this state as a young man, married at Warsaw and was a pastor in the Methodist churches of Indiana for more than half a century. Among the places where he held charges were Warsaw, Valparaiso, Brazil, Greencastle, Marion and Danville. He first came to Danville about 1869 and upon his retirement from the ministry he bought a home in that town and continued to reside there until his death, September 29, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Greene were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living: Mrs. M. A. Keeney, of Danville; Edward J., of Danville; Charles, of West Lafayette; Mrs. John F. Way, of Mitchell, South Dakota; Anan C., of South Bend, Indiana. His widow, the mother of Rev. Greene, is still living at Danville at the advanced age of eighty-six.

Rev. Joseph N. Greene received his elementary and high school education in the public schools of Danville and his theological training in the Boston School of Theology, graduating from the latter institution in 1897. Immediately after graduating from the high school he went into business in Danville, but within a short time he began to make preparations to enter the ministry. By the time he was twenty-six years of age he had passed all of the examinations and was admitted to the Northwest Indiana conference. Then in order to prepare himself for more efficient work he entered the Boston School of Theology and after completing the course in that school he received a call to the Grace Methodist Episcopal church at Terre Haute (1897-1899). The appointments which he has held since that time are as follows: Williamsport, Indiana (1800-1901); Maple Avenue church, Terre Haute (1901-1905): Brazil, Indiana (1905-1919): Watertown, South Dakota (1919-1912); Broadway church, Indianapolis (1910 to the present time). All of these appointments have been under the Northwest Indiana conference except the Watertown charge, which was under the jurisdiction of the Dakota conference, and the Broadway, Indianapolis, charge, which is in the Indiana conference.

Rev. Greene was married to Adah L. Titus, of Williamsport, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse W. Titus, on October 18, 1900. They have one son, Warren Nelson, born October 18, 1912.

The minister who can reach the public through the printed page is an exception and if he can do so his field of usefulness is vastly increased. Rev. Greene is one of the very few ministers who can write as well as preach, and two of his books have had many favorable notices. His first volume was entitled "The Gospel in Literature" and is a book of genuine merit. In it he displays a wide range of scholarship and erudition which gives to the book a solidity often lacking in volumes of a similar nature. His second publication, "The Funeral," is for the use of ministers and the hearty reception which it has received indicates that it is of real worth. A third book, under the title "The Exalted Fisherman," has just been issued by the Methodist Book Concern of Cincinnati and New York.

Rev. Greene has always been a student of literature and has made a special study of Shakespeare. He frequently gives lectures on Shakesperian subjects before literary clubs, on such topics as "The Women of Shakespeare," "The Supernatural in Shakespeare," "Hamlet," and "Retributive Justice in Shakespeare." In these lectures he displays a deep insight in the literature of the Elizabethan period and analyzes the mysteries of the Bard of Avon in a manner which bespeaks the profound student.

It is interesting to note that while Rev. Greene was the pastor of the Brazil church, he was the moving figure in the movement to increase the attendance of the Sunday school. The result has been that the Sunday school in that town now is the largest in the world.

Rev. Greene is quite actively interested in public affairs, taking the part of a good citizen in public measures and reforms; strong and alert, energetic and persistent, he has had marked influence for good in his community. In his politics he is independent, always voting for the best men regardless of their political affiliations. In all the pastorates he has held he has been popular and has built up the congregation, strengthened the work in all its departments and quickly won his way into the affections of his parishioners. He is profoundly versed in theology, a scholarly, high-minded, whole-souled gentleman, fearless in his denunciation of sin wherever found and, above all, a man who has the courage of his convictions. As a pulpit orator he is surpassed by few, always logical, forceful, earnest and often truly eloquent. Truly, he is a born leader of men, and as Shakespeare has said, "His life was gentle and the elements so mixed in him that the whole world might stand up and say, This was a man."

FRANK JOHNSON.

Agriculture has been an honored vocation from the earliest ages and as a usual thing men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free, out-of-door life of the farm has a decided tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self-reliance which characterizes true manhood and no truer blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with nature in the healthful, life-inspiring labor of the fields. It has always been the fruitful soil from which have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's great warriors, renowned statesmen and distinguished men of letters were born on the farm and were indebted largely to its early influence for the distinction which they have attained.

Frank Johnson, the proprietor of three hundred and twenty acres of fine farming land in Franklin township, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in Morgan county, this state, April 20, 1858. His parents were Wesley and Mary (Garrison) Johnson, his father being a native of North Carolina and his mother of Indiana. When Wesley Johnson was about seven years of age he came to this county from North Carolina with his father, who entered government land in Morgan county. Wesley Johnson received the very meager education which was afforded by the subscription schools of his day and when a mere lad started to work on his father's farm, where he learned as a lad all those lessons which must be a part of every successful farmer's equipment, and his success in after life may be in a large part attributed to the excellent teaching received at the hands of his father along agricultural lines. He continued on the farm with his father until his marriage, and, in fact, lived all of his life on the farm, except one year which he spent in Danville. Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Johnson were the parents of two children, Frank, the immediate subject of this sketch, and Elizabeth, who married Oscar Weasner, and they have four children. Lee. Mary, Ina and Willis.

Frank Johnson was educated in the common schools of Hendricks county and during his school days he worked on his father's farm during the summer, so that by the time he was twenty-one years of age he had received from his father a practical course in agriculture. When he reached his majority he married, rented a farm and started in to make his fortune with his good wife. How well they have succeeded may be seen by the most casual observer who passes by his spacious residence and notes the broad fields which are his today. As a farmer and stock raiser he is the equal of any in this county of excellent farmers and his success is due to his persistent and persevering energy and good judgment in all things which pertain to the agricultural life.

Mr. Johnson was married January 20, 1879, to Mary Newman, the daughter of Lacy and Maria (Phillips) Newman, and to them have been born two children, Luna, who died May 3, 1899, and Clarence, who married Mabel Gambold, and they have three children. Allen, Edwin and Helen. Mr. Johnson's wife's parents were both natives of North Carolina, her father having come from that state to Indiana when he was eighteen years of age and settled with his father upon one hundred and sixty acres of land which he entered from the government. Mr. Newman died in 1892, his wife having passed away six years previous. Mr. and Mrs. Newman were the parents of six children: Laura, who died at the age of five years; Jane, who married Galen Robinson; Mary, the wife of Mr. Johnson; Martha, who married Frank Masten; George died at the age of seventeen years; Julia married Harrison Shields.

Mr and Mrs. Johnson are both consistent and loyal members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Stilesville, in the affairs of which they are much interested, Mr. Johnson being a trustee of the church. Mr. Johnson has been a stanch Republican for many years and although he takes a deep interest in the current questions of the day and political issues of the hour, he has never been a seeker for any public office. His extensive farming interests have demanded his time and attention so that he has not felt inclined to bother himself with the question of holding office. Mr. Johnson has a fine residence and keeps his farm in a highly cultivated state of improvement at all times. He has a reputation for honesty and integrity which has been the direct result of his square dealings throughout his long years of residence in this county. He is a man who has won the esteem of his fellow men by the daily touch of his life.

CHARLES W. NEAL.

Among the well known farmers of a past generation who have been instrumental in placing Hendricks county in the front ranks of the agricultural counties of Indiana, was Charles W. Neal, who was born in Bourbon county. Kentucky, March 29, 1834, and died March 18, 1905, on his farm in Lincoln township, this county. His parents were Nathaniel and Sallie (Sandusky) Neal, his mother dving at his birth. She was the daughter of Jacob Sandusky, of Bourbon county, Kentucky. In the early history of the state Jacob Sandusky came to Indiana with twenty thousand dollars in his belt and walked around over the central part of the state barefooted and looking like a tramp in order to quietly pick out the best lands. He bought eleven hundred acres where Irvington now stands and four hundred and eighty acres two and one-half miles south of Brownsburg, six hundred and forty acres in Decatur county, this state, north of Greensburg, eight hundred acres in the south edge of Boone county and other lands in the central part of the state. However, he did not live on any of these tracts, but continued to reside in Kentucky, coming back to Indiana each year to look after his property and pay his taxes.

Charles W. Neal never knew what it was to have a mother's protecting care and when he was four years of age he was taken away by relatives on horseback to Illinois, where he was kept for six years. He was then taken back to Kentucky, but remained there only a short time before he took a yearling colt, with a sheepskin for a saddle and a rope bridle, and, fording the Ohio river, he returned to his relatives in Illinois. The first pair of shoes the lad had he earned by driving oxen at ten cents a day. He again returned to Kentucky and spent the remainder of his boyhood days, and in that state he was married, July 4, 1861, to Emma S. Bradley, the second of seven children born to Shelton and Mildred (Simpson) Bradley. His wife was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, near Paris. It is interesting to note that both Charles Neal and his wife had been reared on farms where slaves did most of the work, and that neither of them had learned much of the hard realities of life when they were married. From his grandfather, Jacob Sandusky, he inherited four hundred acres of land two miles south of Brownsburg in Hendricks county, and in 1864 he and his wife came to this county to live. The only road to his farm was a blazed trail through the forests, swamps and underbrush, and the farm certainly could not have looked very inviting to him on the day on which he first saw it, as the land was low, wet, covered with a thick mat of underbrush. This was probably one reason why it had not been settled sooner. The Civil War had swept away what his family and relatives owned in Kentucky and that was one reason why he and his young wife decided to come to Indiana. They probably had little notion of the four hundred acres which was waiting for them in this county. Neighbors in Kentucky prophesied disaster for them in the new country, but Charles and his wife were not to be dismayed and with their little children they started in with brave hearts to make a living on their farm. For the first five years he did little farming, spending most of his time hunting. However, dire necessity made him forsake his gun for the hoe and axe, and he gradually began clearing his land and dealing in live stock, buying and selling throughout the county. He cleared his land, rolled his logs, burned brush just as though he had always been used to it, drained his land, improved and fenced it, erected buildings and built a house which was one of the best in the county at that time. It must be remembered that he had lived in a state where white men did little work and where the slaves did all of it, and for this reason it took some time for him to understand that in Indiana white men did all of the work.

Charles W. Neal was a frank, plain-spoken man, even blunt of speech, but he had a host of friends who admired him for his sincerity. He was a man all the way through and was respected for his rugged honesty. He died in 1905, and his wife on September 27, 1908. Four children were born to them: Tavner, whose history is given elsewhere in this volume; Claudia, the wife of Alonzo Turpin; Forest, who is living; Lorenzo, deceased. The children all live in the southern part of Lincoln township, or near the old home farm.

E. W. SAWYER.

The history of a county or state, as well as that of a nation, is chiefly a chronicle of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon society. The world judgés the character of a community by those of its representative citizens and yields its tribute of admiration and respect to those whose works and actions constitute the record of a community's prosperity and pride. Among the prominent citizens of Hendricks county who are well known because of their success in business affairs and the part they have taken in the civic affairs of the locality is he whose name appears at the head of this article and who is now the efficient and popular president of the Pittsboro Bank.

E. W. Sawyer, a business man of thirty years' experience in Pittsboro. Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in Sterling, Massachusetts, in 1854. He was given an excellent education and completed his schooling by graduating from the Lancaster Academy. He spent his boyhood and early manhood in the state of Massachusetts, where he operated a news-stand at Leominster for several years. In 1881 hc came to Indiana and settled in Pittsboro, this county, where he worked for Oliver W. Hill in his general store. He showed a marked aptitude for business and in 1888 he was able to engage in business for himself. His worth as a citizen and the popularity in which he was held in his own town is shown by the fact that he was appointed postmaster of Pittsboro by President Benjamin Harrison in 1888. In 1805 he built the Sawyer block in his home town and continued in business for the next ten years in this building. In 1909 he was elected president of the Pittsboro Bank and has continued to hold this important office since that time. In addition to his mercantile and banking interests he has also been interested in agriculture, having bought in 1898 the Samuel Hill farm of one hundred and forty acres, which he still owns and manages. He has proven as successful in the management of his farm as he did in his mercantile business. He is now living retired in Pittsboro, having given up the active management of his store and farm.

Mr. Sawyer was married to Forest Dean Hill in 1884, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Hill. He and his wife are members of the Christian church in Pittsboro and take a very active interest in the various organizations of the church. Mr. Sawyer was elected a deacon and trustee of the church in 1905. He has made his way in the business world because he has led a straightforward and commendable course in all of his business transactions, and has won the admiration of the people of Pittsboro and vicinity because he has been a progressive man of affairs. He is a broad-minded and publicspirited citizen, who has not been backward in giving his support to every movement for the upbuilding and advancement of his community. Personally he is a most companionable man and is a popular member of the circles in which he moves.

EeW Sanger

J. WESLEY AYERS.

The science of agriculture—for it is a science as well as an art—finds an able demonstrator as well as successful practitioner in the person of J. Wesley Ayers, who is widely known in Hendricks county, Indiana, maintaining a very productive and desirable farm in Franklin township. He comes of a very highly honored pioneer family, members of which have played well their parts in the general development of this favored section of the great Indiana commonwealth.

- J. Wesley Ayers, the son of William P. and Mary E. (Bell) Ayers, was born in Danville, Indiana, April 4, 1865. His father was a native of Maryland, while his mother was born in this county. William P. Ayers came to Indiana from Maryland with his parents when he was about four years of age. He received his education in this county, and after leaving school he worked on his father's farm until his marriage, at the age of twenty. To Mr. and Mrs. William P. Ayers were born ten children: Laura, the wife of Aaron Aldredge; Leander; Alice, who married Bradley Tout and, after his death, Henry Roland; Miranda, the wife of Frank Ryland; Dora, who married James West; Clara, the wife of Charles Garrison and, after his death, Frank Whitlock; Charles, who married Delia Denny; Otis, deceased; Albert, and J. Wesley, the immediate subject of this review.
- J. Wesley Ayers secured his education by attending the common and high schools of Danville and attended the Central Normal College of Danville, and upon the completion of his education he came to Indianapolis, where he was in the employ of the Sherman, Occidental and Stubbins hotels as clerk for about four years. Upon the death of his father at Danville, he removed to the latter place and took up his father's occupation as brick maker and contractor, and for the succeeding eight years he followed this line of business, erecting, among other buildings, the First National Bank building, of Danville. He then purchased a farm and began operations as an agriculturist, securing his first farm of sixty-two acres north of Danville, and he managed this place for the next ten years, after which time he sold this tract and bought sixty acres two and one-half miles east of Danville. Two years later he sold this land and purchased his present farm of sixty acres in Franklin township, known as the William Tincher farm. a farm which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and made attractive with a good home, outbuildings and other extensive improvements.

Mr. Ayers was married April 2, 1908, to Ambrosia Hurst, the daughter of Charles R. and Mary E. (Bence) Hurst, and to this union there has been born one child, Mary Elizabeth. Mrs. Ayers' parents were both natives of Harrison county, Indiana, and Mrs. Ayers was born in that county. She has one brother, John, who married Frankie E. Thomas, and they live near Corydon. Indiana.

Mr. Ayers has identified himself since his majority with the Republican party, but has never been an active participant in the campaigns of his party. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and also of the Sons of Veterans. He and his wife are loyal and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville, and are liberal contributors to the support of this denomination. Owing to his genuine worth as a man and his genial disposition, he easily wins friends and has always retained them. He enjoys a marked degree of popularity in the locality where so many of his active years have been spent.

JESSE MASTEN.

The student interested in Hendricks county, Indiana, does not have to carry his investigation far into its annals before learning that Jesse Masten has long been one of the leading and active representatives of its agricultural interests and that his labors have proven a potent force in making this a rich farming region. Through several decades he has carried on farming, gradually improving his valuable place, and while he has prospered in this he has also found ample opportunity to assist in the material development of the county, and his co-operation has been of value for the general good.

. Jesse Masten, the proprietor of five hundred and fifty-five acres of fine farming land in Franklin township, Hendricks county, Indiana, was born in this township, February 26, 1847, the son of Reuben and Margaret (Garrison) Masten, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. Reuben Masten received his education in that state and after leaving school he worked on his father's farm for a few years. After his marriage in North Carolina, he, together with his father, moved to Daviess county, Indiana, but remained there only a short time. He then came to Hendricks county and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land from the government in Franklin township, and there he lived the simple, unostentatious life of a farmer and was very successful in all his undertakings, having four hundred and seventy acres of land at the time of his death, October 10, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Masten were the parents of eleven children: Hezekiah, who married Ann Jackson; John, deceased; Derias, who married Margaret DeMott; Mahala, the wife of David Pike, both deceased; Mary, who married Marshall Roberts, deceased; Matthias, who married Nancy Elmore; Harry, deceased; Sarah, deceased; Ann, deceased, who married L. Buis; Emmazetti, the wife of John Hodson, of Coatesville, Indiana, and Jesse, the immediate subject of this review.

Jesse Masten received the best education which the country schools of Franklin township afforded in the stirring days preceding the Civil War. His education was naturally limited because there were no schools which really merited the name. After completing his meager educational training, he started to work with his father on the home farm. The land which his father had entered was a virgin forest, and the sound of the axe and the crackle of the burning brush was the finest kind of music to the ears of the pioneers of that day. While still a young man he was married to Mary Ellen Baird, the daughter of Boles and Emmeline (Coons) Baird, and to this union there were born six children: Irene, who married Albert Smith, and is the mother of three children, Nina, Carl and Jesse; Ira, who married Ida Bowen, and they are the parents of three children, Mabel, Vivian and Mary; Maude, who married Frank Powers, and is the mother of two children, Lucile and Ralph; Arthur married Elizabeth Powers, and Clyde and Willis, who are unmarried and at home.

Mrs. Masten's parents were both natives of Kentucky and reared a family of eight children: William, who married Katic Starkey; Lucinda, the wife of Wesley Richardson; Eliza became the wife of Martin Mason; Benee, married Allie Bandy; Mary, wife of Mr. Masten; Frankie married Jacob Shoptaugh; Clay married Eva Marshall; Charles, deceased.

Mr. Masten was reared to the life of a farmer and has never seen any good reason to forsake that time-honored calling, in which he has met with such distinctive success. On his splendid farm of five hundred and fifty-five acres in Franklin township he carried on general farming and also gives considerable attention to the breeding and raising of high grade live stock, having found this to be a very valuable and profitable auxiliary to his agricultural interests. His farm is well improved in every respect and is a pleasing sight to the passerby.

In politics Mr. Masten is a Progressive, having allied himself with that party upon its organization in the fall of 1912. He and his wife are interested in all movements looking toward the welfare of the community in which they live, Mrs. Masten being a member of the Missionary Baptist church at Coatesville. Mr. Masten is financially interested in the First National Bank at Coatesville and is now vice-president of that institution.

JOHN A. WEST.

Among the strong and influential citizens of Hendricks county the record of whose lives have become an essential part of the history of this section, the gentleman whose name appears above occupies a prominent place and for years he has exerted a beneficial influence in the locality where he resides. His chief characteristics are keenness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and motive, and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the community.

John A. West, the proprietor of one hundred six and a half acres of land in Clay township, Hendricks county, was born March 8, 1867, in the county where he has spent his entire life. His father was also a native of this county, his birth having occurred near Pecksburg, in 1833, and died in Clay township, March 5, 1908. Columbus West, father of the subject, received a limited common school education in the schools of his day, and worked on his father's farm and in the grist mill and, after his marriage, began farming on a forty-acre tract which was given him by his father. He proved to be a remarkably successful farmer, and at one time had eight hundred and sixty acres of fine land in the county. He married Tabitha Staley, and to this union eight children were born: Ellen, deceased; Lucy, the wife of George Harvey; Jane, who married John Baron; Morton married Effie Walls; George married Alva Walls; Henry, who first married Albia Harlan and, after her death, Mary Bartholomew; Milo, who married Naomi Barow, and John A., the immediate subject of this sketch.

The West family trace their ancestry back to North Carolina, Abraham West, grandfather of John A., being a native of North Carolina, who came to Hendricks county with his parents when he was a small boy. Upon reaching manhood he married Sinia Hadley, and to this union nine children were born: William; Washington, who married Lucinda Staley; Columbus, the father of John A.; Diego, who first married Endemile Asher, and, after her death, Elizabeth Whicker; Sipio, who married Della Parker; Ellen, deceased; Narcissus, who married Alpeus Harlan; Amanda, the wife of Allen Whicker; Malissa, the wife of Milton Asher, and who married Manly Justice after the death of her first husband.

John A. West attended the district schools of Clay township, and was early initiated into all the mysteries of agriculture by his practical father. Upon becoming of age his father gave him a farm and he immediately decided to provide a helpmate for himself. Accordingly he was married to Ada B. Harrison, the daughter of William and Eliza (Bartholomew) Harrison, and through the many years during which they have walked together theirs has been truly a happy marriage. His wife's father was a native of Hendricks county, and followed the occupation of a farmer all his life. His wife. Eliza Bartholomew, was the daughter of Benjamin and Sabina (Johnson) Bartholomew, and to them were born five children, Iva, Oscar, Ada (the wife of Mr. West), Benjamin and Wilma. Iva married Luther Trester; Oscar married Nettie Rushton: Benjamin died when small and Wilma is still unmarried. William Harrison was born in 1834 and died in 1873. His wife was born in 1837, and her death occurred September 23, 1913. Thomas Harrison, the father of William Harrison, was a native of Kentucky, and later moved to Tennessee, from which state he moved to Hendricks county, Indiana, early after his marriage. He was married to Nancy Bryan, and to this union six children were born: John, who married Margaret Clark: Martha, the wife of Reuben P. Wall: William, who married Eliza Bartholomew; James and Nathan died when young: Thomas died in 1853 the grandmother surviving nearly a half century afterwards, passing away in 1899.

Mr. West has always east his ballot for the Republican party, because he felt that in this party were the leaders who were well qualified to direct the destinies of the nation. In his fraternal relations he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while, religiously, he is a loyal and consistent member of the Baptist church at Amo. He has always taken a keen interest in the various movements of his locality which were organized for the purpose of civic or intellectual betterment, and has always been a sympathetic helper in all such movements. His clean life and integrity of high rank have won for him the approbation of a large number of friends throughout his home township. Mr. and Mrs. West have an adopted daughter, Carrie Trester, born February 2, 1893.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

One of the sturdy pioneers of Hendricks county who has lived within its borders for more than three score and ten years is James Montgomery. His family were among the very first people in the county and during the whole history of the county the Montgomerys have been important factors in the material advancement of the county. They have seen the wilderness and swamps give way to broad, cultivated fields and flourishing towns and villages, and in all this change they have borne an honorable part.

James Montgomery, the son of George and Nancy (Sturman) Montgomery, was born near Plainfield, Hendricks county, in 1841 and has spent his whole life in this county. When he was two years of age his father moved from Plainfield to Marion township and in this township James Montgomery has lived since that time. He was given the best education afforded by the subscription schools of his time and at an early age began to assist his father upon the farm. He remained at home until his marriage, at the age of twenty-one, when he started out for himself on a farm adjoining his father's, and remained on the same farm until he retired from active life.

Mr. Montgomery was married in 1862 to Margaret Tharp, the daughter of James and Mary Tharp. A history of the Tharp family is given in the life of Joshua Tharp which is delineated elsewhere in this volume. To this first marriage there were born three children: George B. McClellan, who married Catherine Riggles, and has six children, Gertrude, Homer, Era, Harley, Lantus and Mary. George is now farming one mile west of New Winchester, but was formerly a merchant at Hadley and New Winchester. Louise Catherine, the second child of Mr. Montgomery, was the wife of John Neville, and died in November, 1900, leaving one daughter, Nellie. Nellie is the wife of Urban Olsen, of Pittsboro, and has one daughter, Louetta. The youngest child of Mr. Montgomery by his first marriage is Erasmus, who married Addie Patterson and has four children, Herschel, Lawrence, Clarence and Mabel. Erasmus is a farmer and lives in Union township near Montclair.

The first wife of Mr. Montgomery and the mother of the three children above mentioned died in 1869, and on November 17, 1870, Mr. Montgomery married Sarah Baker, the daughter of Jesse and Margaret (Clark) Baker. She was born in Putnam county in 1853. Her father was born near Lexington, Kentucky, the son of Andrew and Martha (Griggs) Baker, was reared in his native state, married Margaret Clark, of the same state, in 1852, and immediately brought his young bride to Hendricks county. In the following year they moved to Putnam, but in a short time came back to Hendricks county. For fourteen years he was assessor in this county and then, after moving back to Putnam county, he was an assessor in that county for five years. He was also deputy assessor for a number of years under others who did not understand the work. He was regarded as the most expert man in this line of business that either county ever had. He was a Democrat and, with his wife, an attendant of the Regular Baptist church. He died February 22, 1909.

By the second marriage there were four children, Nancy Jane, Oscar, Florence May and Charles Harlan. Nancy Jane was born June 17, 1872, and died June 18, 1890. Oscar was born April 14, 1878, and was married April 20, 1808, to Sallie Lane, the daughter of Thompson and Josephine (Creech) Lane. She was born in Tennessee and came to Hendricks county with her parents when she was five years old. They lived at North Salem until 1010 when they moved to a farm near Danville, where they now reside. Oscar and his wife have three children, Mabel, Gladys, Mary Blanche and Walter Raymond. Florence May has been married twice, her first husband being Otha Sheets, and to this union there was born one daughter, Anna Mae; the second marriage of Florence May was to Thomas Cox and to this union there have been born two sons, Roy Harlan and James DeWayne. Mr. and Mrs. Cox live in Indianapolis at the present time. Charles Harlan, born September 25, 1885, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, lives at New Castle where he manages a sales stable. He married Hallie Peyton and has one son. Donald Edwin.

James Montgomery began manufacturing tile about 1884 near his home and continued in that business along with his farming for eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery are both members of the Regular Baptist church and are interested in all the activities of their denomination. Mr. Montgomery is a genial and unassuming man whose friends are numbered by his acquaintances.

COL GEORGE C. HARVEY

George C. Harvey, a prominent lawyer of Danville, was born on August 9, 1860, on a farm near Rockville, Parke county, Indiana, the son of George C. and Martha Ann (Thompson) Harvey, his father also being a native of Parke county, and his mother of Kentucky. His mother was the daughter of James L. Thompson, a very prominent Methodist minister and author of a volume of sermons. His father was a young farmer at the opening of the Civil War and enlisted for service on September 15, 1861, in Company I. Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in as captain and participated in the battles of Fort Henry and Donelson in the spring of 1862 and was killed on the first day of the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862. His mother was left with three small children and reared them to lives of usefulness and honor. She never remarried and is still living in Danville at the age of seventy-six. These children were James H., of Yazoo City, Mississippi: Mrs. Mary T. Hadley, the widow of Otis C. Hadley, who is now a teacher of art in the public schools of Lebanon, Indiana. For a number of years she was at the head of the art department in the Danville schools, and also the Central Normal College. She teaches for the love of art and cares nothing for the financial side of the profession. The third child is George C. Harvey, the immediate subject of this sketch, who was only about one year old when his father was killed in battle.

Col. George C. Harvey was born in a log house which is still standing in Parke county about half way between Rockville and Bloomingdale. After his father's death in the Civil War, his mother, with her three children, moved to Attica, where they lived for a few years. Later they moved to Rockville. where they lived until 1875, when they came to Hendricks county. George C. Harvey then went on the farm of his guardian and remained there until the fall of 1879, when he entered Wabash College and completed the fouryears course. He worked his way through college by putting in crops in the summer time and doing railroad contract work and, in fact, anything he could find to do. He at times worked in the auditor's office at Danville in order to make a little money to continue his course in college. While his vacation periods were as busy as they could possibly have been, he was not less employed while in school. In addition to carrying full college work and doing chores on the side, he read a great deal of law in the offices at Crawfordsville. In the summer of 1883, upon his graduation, he went into the office of Thaddeus S. Adams, of Danville, and continued with him until the spring of 1887, but not as a partner. He was admitted to the bar in 1884, but had been deputy prosecuting attorney before that time in the justice of peace court, and might have been admitted to the bar before 1884, but he did not care for his admission until he had had a case in the circuit court. In July, 1887, he formed a partnership with George W. Brill, the present judge of Hendricks county, and this partnership continued until Judge Brill was elected in 1912. Colonel Harvey has won an enviable name for himself in court and is known throughout the central part of Indiana as one of the best jury lawyers. He has had more than thirty murder cases in court, and has had a very large share of success in the general practice of Hendricks county. Recognizing his keen ability as a lawyer and as an analytical student of the law, corporations have frequently engaged him as counsel, and he has always been able to give good service to his clients.

Colonel Harvey was married November 8, 1887, in Flemingsburg, Kentucky, to Lillian D. Drenan, the daughter of James P. and Mahala Drenan, of that city. To this union there have been born four children, Drenan R., born April 6, 1889, who is now practicing law with his father; George R., born August 17, 1890, who is also associated with his father in the practice of law; Martha A., born April 22, 1895, and John Parke, born June 10, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey are justly proud of their four children, and they have given them every educational advantage possible in order that they might be the best equipped for their future careers. It is a satisfaction to the parents to know that their children have fulfilled their expectations in every way and are in a fair way to make themselves recognized factors in the community in the future.

Colonel Harvey was elected clerk of the city of Danville on four different occasions, a fact which attests his popularity in his home town. He was a member of the military staff of Governor Chase, and also of Governor Matthews with the rank of colonel. He has also been chief inspector of the infantry of the state. In 1890 he was elected colonel of the Sons of Veterans of the state of Indiana, and since that time has held the office of judge advocate general of the Sons of Veterans of the United States. He is a member of the Loyal Legion, the Free and Accepted Masons, both of the chapter and council, and while in college was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi Greek-letter fraternity. In his political relations he is a member of the Republican party and saw no reason in the fall of 1912 why he should sever his connection with that old and established party. Colonel Harvey is vice-president of the Klondike Milling Company, of Danville, and is financially interested in that company. He is one of the directors of the Columbia Club of Indiana.

anapolis and a stockholder in the same. Colonel Harvey has been a prominent figure in Hendricks county for many years and is still regarded as one of the best men of the Hendricks county bar. As he approaches the fall of life he will have the satisfaction of letting his mantle rest upon the shoulders of his two worthy sons, who are fast qualifying themselves to take up the work which their father has so well done in the past.

WILLIAM HUNT.

Hendricks county, Indiana, enjoys a high reputation because of the high order of her citizenship, and none of her citizens occupies a more enviable position in the esteem of his fellows than the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch. A residence here of nearly seventy years has given his fellows a full opportunity to observe him in the various lines of activity in which he has engaged and his present high standing is due solely to the honorable and upright course he has pursued. As a leading citizen of his community he is eminently entitled to representation in a work of this character.

William Hunt, a gallant veteran of the Civil War and a prosperous farmer of this county, was born in Clay township, July 31, 1845, and has spent his three score and ten years in the county of his nativity. His parents were Albert and Lucinda (Hayworth) Hunt, his father being a native of North Carolina and his mother of Virginia. Albert Hunt came to this state when a small boy with his parents and located in Clay township, this county, where his father became one of the heaviest land owners of the county, having six hundred and forty acres of land at the time of his death, July 24, 1856. Albert Hunt was born August 10, 1818, and his wife, Lucinda Hayworth, was born February 18, 1821. They were married August 10, 1841, and to this union five children were born: Ira, who was killed in the battle of Gettysburg on July 3, 1863, was a member of Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry; Rachel died in childhood: David married Melissa Hunt and has five children, Frank, Ira, Ida, Steven and Harry; David died September 3, 1900; Beulah died when young; William, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the third in order of birth of the five children born to his parents.

William Hunt was educated in the district schools of his home township, and since he was only sixteen years old when the Civil War broke out, he was not old enough for service. However, as soon as he reached the age of eighteen he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served for about eight months. At the close of his service he returned to his home county and worked at farm labor in his home township for about two years. He then married and went on to a farm of fifty-two acres, which he had inherited, and here he continued to reside for the next twenty years. He then moved to Amo in his home township, where he lived for the next fourteen years, at the expiration of which time he bought the farm of ninety-five acres on which he is living at the present time.

William Hunt was married September 7, 1869, to Sarah E. Benbow, the daughter of Elam and Anna (Harley) Benbow, and to this union there has been born one child, Ettie, who married William E. Christie, and is the mother of four children, Iso, Blanche, Hubert and Christine. Iso married Stanley Hadley and has one child, J. Edward. Mrs. Hunt's father was a native of North Carolina, and her mother of Virginia. Elam Benbow came to Hendricks county about 1826 with his parents, who settled west of Amo, and he remained on the same farm until his death in 1892. His wife died in 1852. leaving a family of five children: Harvey, who married Louisa Atkins; Thirza, the wife of Woolson Bryant: Nancy I., the wife of Eli Duffey: Sarah E., wife of Mr. Hunt; Rhoda, the wife of George W. Tincher. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Hunt were Asher and Rachel (Johnson) Hunt. They reared a family of seven children: Elizabeth, wife of Ira Carter: Caleb, who married Mary Dickson; Eletha, the wife of Aaron Benbow; Albert, father of the immediate subject of this sketch; Margaret, wife of Mordecai Carter; Cynthia, wife of Newby Hodson; Beulah, who married Newton Carter, and Elmina, the wife of Jav Kersev.

Mr. Hunt's wife died March 14, 1907, since which time he has been making his home with his children. He has been a life-long Republican, and his party recognized his sterling worth by electing him as township trustee for a term of six years. Religiously, he is affiliated with the Friends church, and has been an overseer in this denomination for the past twenty years. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is one of the most active members of the post at Amo. William Hunt has spent a busy and useful life and now, in the declining years of his career, he can look back over a life which has been one of usefulness to his fellowmen, and his career during the long years of his residence in this locality has won for him a host of warm friends.

GUY HARLAN.

One of the best known and enterprising of the younger agriculturists of Hendricks county is Guy Harlan, now in the very prime of life and usefulness, and his influence as an honorable, upright citizen is productive of much good upon all with whom he comes in contact. His past success gives assurance of something yet to come, and he is evidently destined to continue a potent factor for substantial good for many years to come. He lives on a fine farm in Franklin township, this county, which he conducts in a manner that stamps him as fully abreast of the times.

Guy Harlan, the son of Smith and Barbara (Masten) Harlan, was born in Franklin township, Hendricks county, Indiana, June 24, 1885. Both of his parents were also natives of Hendricks county, his father having followed the occupation of a farmer all of his life until his retirement in 1913, when he moved to Indianapolis. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith Harlan were born four children: Harry, who married Daisy Quirk; Londa married Sylvia Hurst; Carey, unmarried, and Guy, the immediate subject of this review. The paternal grandparents of Guy Harlan were Jesse and Elizabeth (Boarders) Harlan, and to them was born one son, Smith, the father of the subject.

Guy Harlan spent his boyhood in the manner of lads who are reared on the farm, attending the district schools of his neighborhood in the winter menths and working on his father's farm during the summer. After finishing the course in the schools of Amo, Indiana, he worked as a lineman for the Big Four and the Terre Haute & Eastern Railway Company for three years He then began farming as a hired hand and worked for various farmers in his home locality until March, 1913, when he moved on to his father's farm. He is now improving this farm and bringing it to a good state of cultivation. He has started a system of crop rotation which will increase the productivity of the soil, and in the short time in which he has had the management of the farm he has shown that he will be a successful farmer in the future.

Mr. Harlan was married October 3, 1908, to Ella Underwood, the daughter of George and Nancy (Scott) Underwood. His wife's parents were natives of Kentucky and were married in that state, living there until 1902, when they located south of Clayton, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Underwood were the parents of nine children: Rosa, the wife of George Bennett; Mary, deceased; James, deceased; Georgia, the wife of David Dispain; Maria, the wife of Joseph Ratliff; Mattie, who married John Van Cleave; William, who married Emma Seraggs; Ella, wife of Mr. Harlan; Emma, wife of Isaac Hendren. Mrs. Harlan's grandparents were Isaac and Maria (Druin) Underwood, and to them were born the following children: Nancy, Hiram, Thomas, Sallie, Ulyses, William, Martha and George.

Mr. Harlan is a Socialist in politics, because he believes that the unrest and distress in this country is due to the unjust advantage which is taken of the laboring class by the capitalists of the country. He feels that in the tenets of the Socialist party there are the principles which, if judiciously applied, will alleviate much of the suffering in this country. Owing to the fact that his party is in a minority in his home county, he has never had any opportunity to hold public office, and, in fact, never expects to. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and the Knights of Pythias, and takes an active interest in the workings of these fraternal organizations. Mr. Harlan is a man who has worked for what he has and knows how to sympathize with the laboring man. He is a man of such genial disposition that his friends are as numerous as his acquaintances. By his upright manner of living he has justly won the esteem of all of those with whom he is associated.

AMOS KERSEY.

The Union soldier during the great war between the states builded better than he knew. Through four years of suffering and wasting hardships, through the horrors of prison pens and amid the shadows of death. he laid the superstructure of the greatest temple ever erected and dedicated to human freedom. The world looked on and called those soldiers sublime. for it was theirs to reach out the mighty arm of power and strike the chains from off the slaves, preserve the country from dissolution, and to keep furled to the breeze the only flag that ever made tyrants tremble and whose majestic stripes and scintillating stars are still waving universal liberty to all the earth. For all their unmeasured deeds the living present can never repay them, Pensions and political power may be thrown at their feet; art and sculpture may preserve upon canvas and in granite and bronze their unselfish deeds, history may commit to books and cold type may give to the future the tale of their sufferings and triumphs; but to the children of the generations yet unborn will it remain to accord the full measure of appreciation and undving remembrances of the immortal character carved out by the American soldiers in the dark days of the early sixties, numbered among whom is the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch.

Amos Kersey, the owner and proprietor of three hundred and forty acres of land in Clay township, this county, was born October 10, 1843, in the township where he has lived all his life. His parents were James and Elizabeth (Hodson) Kersey, both of whom were natives of North Carolina, his father being born in that state on February 22, 1801. James Kersey was educated and married in North Carolina, coming to Indiana about 1830. He and his wife first located in Wayne county, this state, and in 1832 James came to Hendricks county and located in Clay township, where he entered three hundred and twenty acres of land from the government. Shortly after coming to this county he took up the study of medicine and studied under Doctor Parker, of Winchester, Indiana. After completing his course he practiced his profession in this county until his death, in 1883. To Dr. James C. and Elizabeth Kersey were born nine children; Jesse, who died at the age of nineteen; Abigail, the wife of Peter Elliott; James, deceased, who married Elmina Hunt, also now deceased: Rachel, deceased: Mary, who became the wife of Abraham Williamson; Isaac, who married Cassie Storms; Jonathan, who married Anna Jane Benbow, and, after her death, Addie Cressin; Ezra was killed in the Civil War, and Amos, the immediate subject of this sketch.

Amos Kersey was educated in the common schools of his home township and worked on his father's farm until the opening of the Civil War. He then enlisted in Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served a little more than three years. His regiment was transferred to the Army of the Potomac and participated in the first and second battles of Bull Run, Winchester, Antietam and in the three-day struggle at Gettysburg in July, 1863. His regiment was then transferred to Sherman's army and he made the famous march to the sea through the state of Georgia and participated in all the battles of the famous Atlanta campaign. Upon returning from the war he engaged in farming with his father and continued in partnership with him until the latter's death, in 1883. He then bought two hundred and ten acres of his father's farm and began to build up a landed estate of his own. He has added to his possessions from time to time until he now has three hundred and forty acres of land in this township.

Mr. Kersey was married on September 24, 1867, to Mary Catherine Cassity, the daughter of Lewis Clements and Ann Jane (Knetzer) Cassity, and to this marriage there have been born eight children: Ann Jane, the wife of William Powers, of Plainfield, who has four children, Ernest Gladys, Horace, and one who died in infancy; Ernest married Eunice Montgomery and has two children, Kathleen and Beryl; David is unmarried and living in the West: Ezra is unmarried and is still at home: Clarence married Florence Hodson and has four children, Gladys, Theodore, Virgil and Lucile: Eva married Claude Henderson and has four children, Hazel, Cecil, Clyde and Carroll: Charles married Menti Seckman, and they have two children. Naomi and Edna; Carrie married Arthur Brooks; Mary is unmarried and still at home. The Cassity family is of Irish descent. Lewis Clements Cassity was born near Owensville, Montgomery county, Kentucky, on October 31, 1822. and died at North Salem, Indiana, in April, 1905. He was the son of David Cassity, whose father emigrated with Daniel Boone from Virginia to Kentucky, where he reared his family. He married Polly Clements and their seven children were Lewis C., Levi, Elizabeth, Emma, Mary and two who died in infancy. Polly Clements Cassity was the daughter of Roger and Hannah Clements, of Bourbon county, Kentucky, Roger Clements was a large slaveholder, and at his death all but four of the slaves were dispersed with, the widow bringing two of them to Indiana. She settled in Boone county, near her two sons, Phillip and John, where she died. Grandmother Cassity also brought two of the slaves to Indiana. Lewis C. Cassity's maternal grandmother was a Hathaway. In 1834 David Cassity came to Indiana, locating in Putnam county, three miles southeast of Bainbridge. Lewis C. Cassity was brought to Putnam county, Indiana, in childhood, and was there reared and married. His wife, Ann Jane Knetzer, was born in Mason county, Kentucky, in 1827. Her paternal great-grandparents were natives of Germany, who, upon their emigration to America, first settled in Virginia for a short time, and there was born Charles Knetzer, Mrs. Kersev's grandfather. Later the family moved to Kentucky, where the parents died on the same day from cholera. Charles Knetzer, who was born on August 18, 1793, married, in Kentucky on September 23, 1819, Catherine Gill, of German descent, who was born June 23, 1804, and died January 9, 1879. The latter's mother, who was of Welsh stock, bore the family name of Moss, her grandparents having settled on what was known as the Lockridge farm near Greencastle, Indiana. Their daughter, Lydia Ann Moss Bradley, died at Peoria, Illinois, about ten years ago, at the age of ninety-four years, leaving an estate valued at four million dollars, which she willed to the city. Catherine Gill's parents remained in Kentucky, where they owned slaves, and upon their deaths, their children all came to Indiana excepting a son and a daughter who remained at the old homestead, retaining their slaves until emancipation.

To Lewis C. and Ann Jane Cassity were born five children: Mary Catherine, the wife of Amos Kersey; David, deceased; Andrew, who married Margaret Snyder; one who died in infancy and Levi, of Montana. The mother of these children died in April, 1858, and Mr. Cassity afterwards married Pauline M. McCoy, the daughter of George and Julia (Raglan) McCoy, who were natives of Kentucky, but married in Indiana. To this second marriage thirteen children were born: Armilda, the wife of William Weller, died in May, 1878, about seven months after her marriage, her husband being now deceased; Cyrilda, the wife of James Johnson; Lodusky, who became the wife of Walter Pugh; Lucretia, the wife of William Robinson, who died and she afterwards married Andrew Bales; Emma, the wife of James Owen; Jacob; Cassie, who married James Horton; Lewis; Albert M.; Otho, who died at the age of two years; Oscar, who married Miss Robinson; Ambrose, who married Miss Aggers.

Mr. Kersey has been a Republican through all his voting years, but has never been a partisan in the strict sense of that word. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is a birthright member of the Friends church and has always been active in church affairs. His wife holds membership in the Christian church of Winchester, Indiana. Mr. Kersey has been a hardworking man all of his life and now, in the twilight of his career, he can look back over a life well spent in the service of his fellow men. He has ever been ready to lend his influence to all worthy movements and by so doing he has won a large number of friends throughout the county where he has spent his three score and ten years.

JOHN C. WALKER.

Though he whose name stands at the head of this review has passed from the life militant to the life triumphant, he will for many years to come be favorably remembered by the residents of Clayton, Hendricks county, Indiana, and in fact by many throughout the county and in an even yet larger field. Because of his many excellent personal qualities and the splendid and definite influence which his life shed over the entire locality in which he lived so long and which he labored so earnestly to upbuild in any way within his power, it is particularly fitting that specific mention should be made of him in a work containing mention of the representative citizens of the community in which he lived and labored so long. A man of high moral character, unimpeachable integrity, persistent industry and excellent business judgment, he stood "four score to every wind that blew" and throughout his wide circle of friends and acquaintances he was universally admired and esteemed.

John Columbus Walker was a native of this county, having been born near Belleville on February 22, 1847, and he departed this life at his home in Clayton on October 29, 1913, aged sixty-six years and eight months. He was left an orphan in early childhood and was reared by an uncle who lived in Liberty township, this county. Robert Walker, the uncle, saw that he received a good education, and in early youth he attended the Belleville schools, later finishing at what was known as the Belleville Academy. When only a little over fourteen years of age, with his bovish soul on fire for humanity and love of country, he heard the call to arms and on April 24, 1861, he was entered in the nation's ranks as a private in Company A. Seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry. On August 2, 1861, his term having expired, he was mustered out of service, but he could not be content to remain at home with the wrong still unrighted, so he again enlisted on June 18, 1862, this time as a member of Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and remained at the front until the expiration of his term of enlistment, which was the following September. He again returned home, but again becoming dissatisfied with his idleness, once more joined the forces of the nation's patriotic sons, this time as a member of Company A, One Hundred and Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. This was on July 22, 1863, and he remained in service until February 24, 1864, when he was mustered out. This time he remained at home something over a year, but, the nation still being engaged in conflict, he felt his duty strong once more and again donned the blue and was enrolled as a private in Company K, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment, on March 15, 1865, remaining in service until he received his honorable discharge on September 5, 1865, the great war having ended in the meantime. All this he went through before he reached his majority and upon his return home he proceeded to lay the foundation which later proved his right to be considered one of the very foremost agriculturists of the county. He began in an humble way as a farm laborer, then became a renter and in due time made his first modest purchase of land, which served as the nucleus of his excellent farm of six hundred acres, all in exceptionally good state of cultivation and, in addition to his own holdings, he was caring for one hundred and sixty acres of the Miles estate at the time of his death. He owed his success in life solely to his own efforts, possessing indomitable will and energy, unlimited perseverance and a high degree of business ability, which, combined with correct principles of life, wrought most excellent results. His home was located about two miles south of Clayton on the national road and was a commodious ten-room brick house, most beautifully located. He took up his residence there in 1870 and remained there until the fall of 1908, when he purchased a large and modern home in Clayton, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Mr. Walker was twice married, his first wife being Martha Ann Miles, with whom he was united in marriage on October 20, 1870. This union was without issue, and in 1874 Mr. and Mrs. Walker adopted a little daughter, who is now Mrs. Florence Bray, of Indianapolis, and with her three sons cherishes most happy memories of a kind father. Mrs. Walker departed this life on December 22, 1801, and on March 5, 1806, Mr. Walker was again married, his bride being Jeanetta S. Mays, who was born in Center Valley, four or five miles south of Clayton, being a daughter of Stephen R, and Mary Frances (Tate) Mays. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mays were born and raised in Orange county, North Carolina, near Hillsboro, where his birth occurred in 1834 and hers in 1838. They were married in their childhood home on December 30, 1852, and in 1859 they came to the Hoosier state, locating near Center Valley. Mr. Mays was a blacksmith, which trade he followed, and in addition to this was a considerable dealer in horses and other live stock. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church and his fraternal affiliation was with the Free and Accepted Masons, of which order he became a member in 1863. Mr. Mays departed this life on December 10, 1906, and he met death with the high courage of a true Christian. Mrs. Mays' death occurred on July 24, 1913, at the advanced age of seventy-five years. Her life was guided by her faith and under all circumstances, whether pleasant or otherwise, her countenance ever exhibited her sweet spirit of hopefulness and resignation and her peace with God and the world. Mrs. Walker was but six years old when her parents brought her to Belleville and she attended the schools of the village during her girlhood, later finishing at the academy. To Mr. and Mrs. Walker were born two children. The eldest was a little daughter, Helen M., who passed away when a babe of but six months. She was born on July 14, 1897. Edward Raymond, the son, was born December 19, 1903, and is a bright and promising boy.

Mr. Walker's political sympathies were with the Republican party and he was ever active in local politics. During the fall of 1867, while a religious revival was in progress at the Baptist church of Belleville, he was brought under personal conviction and made his peace with God, but for many years failed to unite with any church society, while living the life of a consistent Christian and assisting in the material support of different church societies. However, in June, 1913, he united with the Clayton Presbyterian church, of which his wife and son are also members. Mr. Walker's fraternal affiliation was with the ancient order of Freemasonry, being a member of Lodge No. 463 at Clayton. He received the thirty-second, or Scottish Rite, degree at Indianapolis in 1911 and also at that time became a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Walker was a man among men, ever ready to assist all who were doing all in their power to assist themselves. He was averse to doing kind deeds that the public might know of, and doubtless many are the benevolent acts placed to his credit of which the world knew nothing. He was a man of good business judgment and executive ability, and spurned taking advantage of his fellow men in any way, believing always that a square deal was the only course. In all the elements of manhood and good citizenship, Mr. Walker was all that a man should be and the enviable place which he held in the hearts of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances was but a fitting tribute to one eminently deserving.

FRED G. SHIRLEY.

It is a well authenticated fact that success comes as the result of legitimate and well applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance in a course of action when once decided upon. She is never known to smile upon the idler or dreamer and she never courts the loafer, only the men who have diligently sought her favor being crowned with her blessings. In tracing the history of the influential farmer and representative citizen of Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, whose name forms the caption of this review, it is plainly seen that the prosperity which he enjoys has been won by commendable qualities and it is also his personal worth that has gained for him the high esteem of those who know him.

Fred G. Shirley, the proprietor of one hundred and twenty acres of fine land in Clay township, this county, was born on the farm where he is now living February 2, 1873. His parents were William R. and Sallie M. (Phillips) Shirley, his father being a native of this county, born in 1845, and his mother also a native of Hendricks county, her birth having occurred in about 1855. William R. Shirley received a good common school education and when a young man engaged in the general merchandising business at Pecksburg, Clay township, in connection with his father. He continued with his father in the store until his marriage, and shortly afterwards he bought forty acres, part of this land being included in the farm of Fred G. Shirley. He continued to reside on this farm until about 1900, when he retired from active farm life and moved to Danville, where he remained until his death, August 4, 1902, his wife having preceded him in death some years previous in 1898. Sallie M. Phillips, wife of William R. Shirley, was the daughter of Samuel and Rachel (Newman) Phillips. Mr. and Mrs. William R. Shirley were the parents of four children: Etta L., who married Wilson J. Shaw, of Danville, and they are the parents of five children, Erver, Ina, Merrill, Ralph and Phillip; Fred G., the immediate subject of this sketch; Alva R., who married Elizabeth Hadley and has one child, Mildred, and one who died in infancy.

Mr. Shirley attended chool for two years in the village of Pecksburg and completed his common school education in the Dover school house in Liberty township. After finishing the common school course he entered the Central Normal College at Danville, where he made a very satisfactory record as a student. Upon the completion of his educational training he returned to his home and worked with his father until his marriage, which occurred on March 16, 1898, to Elnora Hadley, the daughter of Mathias and Matilda (Bringle) Hadley, and to this union there have been born three children, Wendell, Lois and Geneva. Mathias Hadley was a native of Hendricks county, Indiana, and to him and his wife, who was the daughter of Solomon and Cynthia (Suits) Bringle, there were born eleven children, two of whom died in infancy. The other nine lived to maturity and all of them married; Leora, married James Harvey; Alzora became the wife of Dr. William Marshburn; Loretta married Perry Hunt; Orlando married Eva Dickerson; Ozella married Miles Furnas; Orien married Mary Stanley; Ozro married Rossilee Garrison: Orvis married Catharine Cosner: Elnora married Fred G. Shirley. Mrs. Hadley died in 1894, and her husband the year following. John Hadley, Mrs. Shirley's paternal grandfather, was a native of North Carolina, and married Elizabeth Johnson, who also was born in that state. They reared a very large family of children.

Mr. Shirley allied himself with the new Progressive party in the fall of 1912, because he felt that this new party had a platform which, if properly carried out, would redown to the welfare of the country at large. In his religious affiliations he has been a member of the Friends church since 1912, and has always taken a very active part in the affairs of this denomination, being a trustee in the church at the present time. The life which Mr. Shirley has led stamps him as a man who has the interest of his community at heart, and one who is not only concerned with his individual advancement, but takes a keen interest in the welfare of his friends and neighbors. Such men are a help to the community in which they live, and because Mr. Shirley is such a man he has won the esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM WALLACE LEACH.

There are very few farmers in Hendricks county whose memory goes back to the time when there were but two roads in the county, the National road and the old State road. In those days, back in the thirties, it was possible to go out and shoot deer any place in Hendricks county, and wild turkeys, squirrels and small game of all sorts were as abundant as English sparrows are today. William Wallace Leach, who has lived in this county nearly eighty years, has seen as many as ten deer in a herd in his boyhood days in this county, and flocks of wild turkeys numbering hundreds. As he travels around over the highly improved roads of his county now in his automobile his mind goes back to the time when in order to get to his home he had to follow a bridle path. The complete history of such a man as William Wallace Leach would be a history of Indiana for eighty years, civic, educational and moral.

William Wallace Leach, retired farmer of North Salem, was born in Bath county, Kentucky, October 15, 1835, the son of Meredith and Eliza (Allison) Leach, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, where they were reared and married. In 1836, when William Wallace was only one year old, his parents moved to this county and settled south of Lizton, in Union township, where his father entered government land. The axe of man had never touched a tree on this farm and here in this primitive wilderness Meredith Leach and his young wife began housekeeping and here they remained the rest of their lives, his death occurring in 1859, while his wife survived him a few years. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith Leach were the parents of seven children, of whom William Wallace, whose history is portrayed here, is the oldest, the other in the order of their birth being as follows: James Valentine, deceased; Mary L., deceased wife of Amos Rook; Martha Jane, the deceased wife of Moses Rawlings; Sarah Ann. the widow of Jeptha West;

Amanda Louisa, the widow of William Harrison, and Francis Edna, who died in childhood.

William Wallace Leach was reared amid these primitive conditions. hearing the music of the axe in the daytime, and yet he probably spent as happy a hovhood as any of the boys of today. A very meager education was his, because the schools in his day were confined to three "R's" and very little of that. In February, 1862, he was married to Margaret F. Clark, who was born November 29, 1841, in Union township, this county. Her parents were Silas Garrett and Mary Ann (Mount) Clark. Silas Clark was born in Kentucky, near Lexington, the son of William and Francis (Blades) Clark, and came to this county early in its history and here married Mary Ann Mount, the daughter of Alfred and Margaret Mount, the same family which gave a governor to the state of Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Clark reared a large family of eleven children, only four of whom are now living. The sons are: William, of Missouri: James Thomas, of Bloomington, Indiana, and Henry Washington, of Iowa. Two other brothers, George and John, died in the West. Of the five daughters, Sarah Elizabeth married Thomas Stewart; Iane became the wife of John Russell; Rhoda Ann, the wife of Linden Wade, and Ella died when a young woman.

When Mr. Leach was married he already owned forty acres of land in Union township, and here the young couple started in life. He rented land in addition to his own for farming, and by thrift and ecomony was enabled to save some money, and in a few years bought another eighty acres near his first farm. In 1844 he traded for a farm of sixty-five acres near North Salem and moved into North Salem, where he engaged in the grocery business for six years. He was also in the dry goods business for a part of the time when he lived in North Salem. He then traded his grocery for a farm two and one-half miles northwest of Salem, at the same time selling his sixty-five-acre farm and buying one hundred acres adjoining the farm for which he traded, making him a total of one hundred and eighty acres of land, which he still owns. He lived on this farm for about five years and then bought property in North Salem, where he has lived for the past twelve years.

Mr. Leach is usually a Democrat in politics, although he does not hesitate to vote for the best men in local elections irrespective of politics. Mr. and Mrs. Leach have now been married for more than fifty-one years and are both enjoying good health at the present time. They are both able to read without glasses, have good hearing and are cheerful and genial at all times. In recent years they have made several trips to Hot Springs, Arkansas, and to Florida, and are frequently seen in good weather in their automobile driving around the roads of Hendricks county, enjoying themselves as if they were fifty years younger.

AUBREY C. PEBWORTH, M. D.

The man who devotes his talents and energies to the noble work of ministering to the ills and alleviating the sufferings of humanity is pursuing a calling which in dignity, importance and beneficial results is second to none other. If true to his profession and earnest in his efforts to enlarge his sphere of usefulness, he is indeed a benefactor of his kind, for to him more than any other man are intrusted the safety, the comfort, and, in many cases, the lives of those who place themselves under his care and profit by services. It is gratifying to note in the series of personal sketches appearing in this work that there remain many native sons who are maintaining the prestige of their county in other fields. Many have gone to other parts of the state and yet they look back to Hendricks county as their real home. Among the many citizens who were born in this county and then left for wider fields is Aubrey C. Pehworth, a successful physician of West Indianapolis.

Aubrey C. Pebworth, the son of James H. and Marcia (Carrington) Pebworth, was born near Danville, Indiana, December 28, 1877. His father was a native of Shelby county, Kentucky, and his mother spent all of her life in Hendricks county. James Pebworth came to this county with his parents when he was a small boy and followed the life of a farmer until his death, September 13, 1910. He served in the Civil War and a wound in the head which he received at the battle of Lookout Mountain was finally the cause of his death. Mr. and Mrs., James Pebworth were the parents of six children: Mrs. Morton Ellis, of Pittsboro; Mrs. Frank A. Haynes, of Pittsboro; Eva, one of the best known teachers of Hendricks county; Dr. Aubrey C., the youngest of the family, and two others who are deceased.

Doctor Pebworth received his common and high school education in the schools at Pittsboro, in his native county, and immediately after his graduation entered the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons at Indianapolis. Upon finishing his medical course in 1905 he at once began the practice of medicine in West Indianapolis, where he has been very successful. During the period of his professional practice in that community, Doctor Pebworth has not only gained the respect of his confreres in his chosen field, but has also sustained a sound reputation for uprightness and nobility of character in all the relations of life. He has realized that to those who attain determinate success in the medical profession there must not only be technical ability, but also a broad human sympathy which must pass from mere sentiment to an actuating motive for helpfulness.

Doctor Pebworth was married on August 9, 1905, to Mary Thomas, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. E. D. Thomas, and to this happy union there have been born two children, James T. and Robert C. The Doctor is a member of the Marion county and Indiana state medical societies and is interested in all the meetings of these organizations. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and also belongs to the Indianapolis Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. Politically, he is allied with the Progressive party. In his church relations he is a member of the Christian church, while his wife retains her connection with the Baptist denomination. Mrs. Pebworth is secretary of the Hendricks County Society for Indianapolis. She is a graduate of the teacher's course at the Central Normal College of Danville and was a teacher in the public schools before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Pebworth are genial and hospitable people who have gained a wide circle of friends in the community where they live.

WILLIAM R. McCLELLAND.

It cannot be other than interesting to note in the series of personal sketches appearing in this work the varying conditions that have compassed those whose careers are outlined, and the effort has been made in each case to throw well focussed light on to the individuality and to bring into proper perspective the scheme of each respective career. Each man who strives to fulfill his part in connection with human life and human activities is deserving of recognition, whatever may be his field of endeavor, and it is the function of works of this nature to perpetuate for future generations an authentic record concerning those represented in its pages, and the value of such publications is certain to be cumulative for all time to come, showing forth the individual and specific accomplishments of which generic history is ever engendered.

William R. McClelland, the present general agent for the State Life Insurance Company of Indiana, was born in Wayne township, Marion county, Indiana, June 21, 1848. His parents were Jonathan D. and Eliza J. (Wilson) McClelland, his father being a native of Union county, Indiana, and his mother of Kentucky. Jonathan McClelland was born in 1816, the year Indiana was admitted to the Union, and came to Marion county, this state, with his father, Francis McClelland, when he was a small boy of six years. Francis McClelland settled on a farm in Marion county, near the Hendricks county line, on land which he entered from the government. He lived on this farm until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan McClelland were the parents of seven children, only three of whom are living, Charles, of Danville, Indiana; James, of Ponca, Oklahoma, and William R.

WILLIAM R. McCLELLAND

William R. McClelland was born on his father's farm in Marion county and educated in the district schools of his home neighborhood. He continued to work on his father's farm until he was twenty-four years of age, when he went to Danville and entered the employ of a dry goods firm as a clerk. A few years later he started out in business for himself, engaging in the furniture and undertaking business in Danville, in which business he continued for about twenty-five years. He left the furniture and undertaking business to become identified with the State Life Insurance Company as general agent, and in 1905 removed to Indianapolis, where he has since continued to reside.

Mr. McClelland has always taken a prominent part in Republican politics in his county and has been signally honored by his party on several different occasions. He served as county clerk of Hendricks county from 1884 to 1888, was a member for four years of the board of control of the Indiana Boys School at Plainfield, and was a member of the school board at Danville for ten years. In all of these positions he showed himself thoroughly familiar with the duties of his office and proved himself to be not only an able and efficient official, but one who won the confidence of the citizens of the county.

Mr. McClelland was married to Sarah E. Nichols in 1872, a daughter of James and Rachel Nichols, who were both members of pioneer families of Hendricks county. Mrs. William McClelland died on March 16, 1912, leaving one son, Harry Nichols, who is married and has one son, William Pearce. aged two years. Harry Nichols is in the auditing department of the State Life Insurance Company, and resides in Indianapolis.

Mr. McClelland has been a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and has been a member of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal church for more than forty years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with which order he has been identified for more than forty-two years, and has held every office in Silcox Lodge No.

123, at Danville. On different occasions he has represented his local lodge in grand lodge.

Thus far Mr. McClelland's life has been one of strenuous activity and by reason of the success with which it has been attended, his friends are justified in predicting for him a still greater sphere of usefulness and efficiency. As a citizen of Hendricks county for many years he stood high in the esteem of his fellow men. Whether as a merchant or as a public official, his influence was always public-spirited and progressive, and at all times he was found willing to lend his aid and influence in behalf of enterprises for the material benefit and advancement of his city and county, and for the intellectual, social and moral good of the people. He is a man of social tendencies, kind, obliging, unassuming and straightforward and honorable in all the relations of life, and is universally respected and popular among his large circle of friends and acquaintances.

CHARLES RELANDER.

There are few natives of far-away Sweden in Indiana and still fewer in Hendricks county, but the few who have come to our state have been among our best citizens. No country of the old world has sent to us better and more substantial people than Sweden and fortunate, indeed, is the community that can boast of Swedish descendants. They are always loyal to their adopted country and are a valuable asset to the locality in which they settle.

Charles Relander, the son of Nels and Lottie (Ericson) Relander, was born in Grenna, Sweden, in 1843, and lived there till eighteen years of age, then went to Stockholm, the capital of the country. He received a good practical education in the public schools of Grenna and early in life started to learn the bricklayer's trade. At the age of twenty-four he came to America to seek his fortune and made his first stop at Chicago. In 1869 he came to Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana, landing in the town for the first time on June 17th. He at once began work on the Big Four railroad, which was then being built through the county, and for the next twenty-eight years continued in the employ of this company. For twenty-one years of this time he was section boss and during that time saved his money so that he was enabled to buy an eighty-acre farm in Center township, this county. In 1897 he retired from the service of the Big Four and went onto his farm where he has since remained. Since taking up farming he has added another eighty acres to his farm and now owns one hundred and sixty acres in Center township. He has been a success as a farmer and stock raiser, despite his long years at another occupation. He has shown his ability by adapting himself to a new occupation without having had any previous experience in it, and in the course of a few years being recognized as one of the leading farmers of his township.

Mr. Relander was married in 1870 to Mary Elizabeth Curtis, the daughter of Peter and Sarah (Kirkendall) Curtis. The grandfather of Mrs. Relander was Peter Curtis, who was born in 1763 in Virginia and served for five years in the Revolutionary War. He was at the battle at Guilford Court House in North Carolina in 1781, and was later married at that place. He and his young bride then settled in Kentucky and there, in Garrard county. Peter, Ir., the father of Mrs. Relander, was born on February 14, 1808. Peter. Jr., grew up in Kentucky and on Christmas Day, 1827, was married to Sarah Kirkendall, the daughter of Richard and Betsy (Reed) Kirkendall, She was born in Garrard county, Kentucky, September 18, 1811. Her father was of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry and her mother of Irish parentage. In 1820 Peter Curtis and wife came to Indiana and settled near Crawfordsville, shortly after moving into the town, where Mr. Curtis followed the trade of a blacksmith for several years. About the year 1840 he moved to Hendricks county and bought the Scearce farm, half a mile west of Danville. The family lived here for a number of years and then moved into Danville where the father and mother spent the remainder of their days, he passing away in 1800 and his wife in 1802. During the Civil War they had charge of the Hendricks county poor farm, which at that time was south of the present location. Mr. Curtis was a strong Republican and was also a great student of Masonry. To Peter Curtis and wife were born twelve children, four daughters and eight sons, two of the sons dving in childhood. The other six sons served in the Civil War, one of them, Ambrose, dying in the service. Mary Elizabeth Curtis, the wife of Mr. Relander, was born on the Scearce farm, on December 21, 1851.

Mr. and Mrs. Relander are the parents of five children, Charlotte, Pearl, Fred, Frank and Edward. Charlotte is a graduate of the Central Normal College at Danville, class of 1895, and has taught continuously since that time. She taught three years in the district schools and since then in the Danville schools. She is a very successful teacher, a wide reader, has an excellent library of her own and is an entertaining conversationalist.

Pearl is the wife of Claude C. Rivers and lives in Yorba Linda, California. Fred is a farmer at Exeter, California. He married Lessie Pearcy and she died in February, 1912, leaving two sons, Pearcy and Clifford. Frank died in 1894, at the age of eleven. Edward is an electrician and lives at Lebanon, Indiana. He married Flossie Dinsmore and has one daughter, Geraldine.

Mr. Relander is a stanch Republican and takes an active interest in local politics. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife have long been faithful members of the Christian church at Danville, to which they contribute liberally of their means. Mr. Relander is a man who has made everything he has today, and now in the evening of life can look back over a career which has been well spent in every way.

WILLIAM T. HIGGINS.

One of the oldest and best known families in Hendricks county is the Higgins family, six generations of whom have lived in this county. David Higgins, the first of the family to come to Indiana, was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, in 1795. His wife, Helen Mudd, was a native of Maryland, whose parents had moved to Kentucky from their native state. Soon after their marriage, David Higgins and his young wife set out for Indiana, and in the spring of 1821 they stopped for a short time in Lawrence county. Later they moved on north and located about four miles south of Greencastle. In 1831 they came to Hendricks county and settled the southeast quarter section 33, in Marion township, this land having been entered in 1828 by Thomas, the brother of David. On this farm David Higgins spent the rest of his life, dying in 1851, his wife surviving him several years. He proved to be a successful farmer and at the time of his death owned fifteen hundred acres of land in the county.

Michael Higgins, the father of William T., was born in Putnam county, August 5, 1823, and spent his boyhood days on his father David's farm. He was married on October 7, 1847, to Elizabeth Plaster, the daughter of William Plaster, an early settler of Middle township, this county. Mrs. Michael Higgins was born September 30, 1822. To Mr. and Mrs. Michael Higgins were born six children, William T., David A., Mrs. Mary Jane Wilson, Mrs. Cassandra Hunt, Charles E. and May. Mrs. Michael Higgins died August 15, 1883. He was the largest land owner in Marion township at one time, having eight hundred and eighty acres of valuable land in this township. Michael Higgins was a truly remarkable man and his ability was recognized by every one. He served his township as trustee and his county as treasurer, filling both offices to the entire satisfaction of his fellow citizens. He was a hard worker, a good manager, diligent, thrifty and persistent in carrying out his plans. He was of unusually upright character, strictly moral and took an active stand for righteousness and the betterment of humanity. He and his wife were members of the Christian church and lived up to the teachings of the church as near as they possibly could. He died in April, 1903, a man who was loved by everyone with whom he came in contact.

William T. Higgins, the son of Michael Higgins and wife, was born October 2, 1848, in the township where he has spent his whole life. He lived at home until his marriage to Mary Underwood on January 23, 1877. She is a sister of Obed Underwood, a sketch of whom, elsewhere in this volume, gives the family history of the Underwood family. William began farming for himself about two miles northeast of New Winchester on a farm of his own. About two years after his marriage he moved to his present farm in the northwest part of Marion township. He has been very successful, as is shown by his present farm of five hundred and sixty acres, of which four hundred acres are cultivable. He was formerly a heavy dealer in live stock, but has confined his energies to the raising of grain in the last few years. He has made many improvements on his place and has a very comfortable and attractive home.

Mr. and Mrs. Higgins have three children: Oscar, born in 1878, who graduated in the New Winchester high school, and later married Olive Oakley, the daughter of James and Ellen (Ader) Oakley. James Oakley, born and reared in Putnam county, was the son of Lafayette and Mildred (Harris) Oakley. Mildred Harris was born in Kentucky and came to Putnam county in early childhood with her parents. Her mother's maiden name was Neeves. Lafayette Oakley also came from Kentucky in childhood and settled with his parents in Putnam county. Ellen Ader was born and reared in Putnam county and was the daughter of Adam and Margaret (Chatham) Ader. After Oscar Higgins, the eldest son of William T., was married he farmed in Putnam county for one year and then moved to his present home on his father's farm. Oscar and wife have two children, Edna Merle, and Virgil Wayne, who died recently.

Clay, the second child of William T. and wife, died at the age of thirteen and the youngest son, Earl Glendon, is still at home. The wife and mother died in April. 1893. Politically, Mr. Higgins is a Democrat, though he has never aspired to public office. Religiously, the members of his family affiliate with the Christian church.

JOHN R. GARNER.

All callings, whether humble or exalted, may be productive of some measure of success, if enterprise and industry, coupled with a well-directed purpose, form the motive force of the person directing the same, and in no case is this fact more apparent than in agricultural pursuits. It is a well authenticated fact that success comes as the result of legitimate and well applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance as well as the above enumerated qualities. When a course of action is once decided upon, these attributes are essential. Success is never known to smile upon the idler or dreamer and she never courts the loafer, only those who have diligently sought her favor being crowned with her blessings.

John R. Garner was born in Brown township, Hendricks county, Indiana, on December 14, 1861, about one and one-half miles northwest of his present home, being a son of Solomon B, and Deborah (Lyons) Garner, both natives of Bath county, Kentucky. They had been married several years before they brought their family to the Hoosier state. After coming here they settled on the farm where the immediate subject of this sketch was born. This farm comprised some two hundred acres, being land which Solomon Garner had entered from the government and on which he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1861. His wife died on the same place in 1880. There were nine children in their family, but one other besides the subject living today.

John R. Garner passed his youth and early manhood under the care of the parental roof, remaining there until first married, on December 17, 1871, to Sarah A. Jones, daughter of Benjamin and Nancy (Dodson) Jones, both of whom were from the state of Kentucky, and who took up their abode in Brown township, Hendricks county, upon coming to Indiana. Sarah A. Jones, first wife of the subject, died on November 17, 1888, leaving two children, the eldest being Viola, who is the wife of Robert Davis, of Rossville, Illinois, where they live at the present time. They are the parents of a family of nine children, namely: Ruth, Lucretia, Mary, Esther, Ralph, Agnes, Edith, Randle and Arthur. The second child of Mr. Garner by his first wife is a son, Arthur, who chose as his wife Della Johnson, daughter of Martin and Norah Johnson, of Hendricks county. They make their home in Middle township, Hendricks county, and the parents of three children, Russell, Crystal and Catherine.

After his first marriage, John R. Garner took up his residence on a tract of forty acres, being part of the land originally entered from the government by his father, and there they lived for eighteen years. In 1890 he took as his second wife Sarah A. Jones, daughter of Uriah and Frances (Kenneday) Jones. Uriah Jones was the son of Benjamin and Nancy (Moore) Jones, who were of Kentucky nativity. The parents of Frances (Kenneday) Jones were also from that state. Mr. Garner's wives were of the same name, the first wife being a half aunt of the present Mrs. Garner. After his second marriage, Mr. Garner built his present home, where they have since resided. There is one child, Ethel, by the second marriage, who remains at home.

Mr. Garner recalls with interest the methods of farming which were in vogue in his younger days, when he plowed with a yoke of oxen. He also has used the reap hook for harvesting grain, before the days of reapers or any of the farm machinery now thought necessary by the smallest and poorest of agriculturists. He also recalls with pleasure the days of sugar-water gathering time and the work of the sugar camp, which became quite a social affair for the neighborhood and was eagerly looked forward to from year to year. Then, too, the sugar so made was the entire supply of the pioneer families for the ensuing year. Mr. Garner has always confined his efforts to the vocation of farming and has seen this labor grow from one of the most arduous of occupations, with its attendant comparatively small remuneration, to an up-to-date business, wherein machinery of all kinds is employed as well as modern and scientific methods and the farmer has become the most independent man in any line of business.

Mr. Garner's religious affiliation is with the Baptist church, of which his wife and daughter are also members, and the entire family contribute of time and means to furthering the cause of that church society. By a straightforward and commendable course, Mr. Garner has made his way to a respected position among his associates, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his neighborhood as a broad-minded and upright citizen whose line of conduct has ever been above reproach.

WILLIAM M. ROSE.

To a great extent the prosperity of the agricultural sections of our country is due to the honest industry, the sturdy persistence, the unswerving perseverance and the wise economy which so prominently characterize the farming element of the Hoosier state. Among this class may be mentioned William M. Rose, who, by reason of years of indefatigable labor and honest effort, has not only acquired a well merited material prosperity, but has also richly earned the highest esteem of all with whom he is associated, as is shown by the fact that he has been entrusted with important official positions, the duties of which he has most faithfully and ably discharged, thus eminently meriting the high esteem in which he is universally held.

William M. Rose, a prosperous farmer of Eel River township, was born November 23, 1859, in Putnam county, near the Hendricks county line. His parents were Lewis M. and Margaret (Kelley) Rose. Lewis M. Rose was the son of Lewis A. Rose and wife, who were natives of Kentucky and lived in the vicinity of Bowling Green. Lewis M. Rose married Margaret Kelley, the daughter of William and Malinda (West) Kelley. William Kelley was born in Nashville, Tennessee, and came here as a young man, entering one hundred and sixty acres of government land near New Winchester. However, he did not farm, but became the pioneer merchant of New Winchester, where he died early in life. Melinda West, the wife of Mr. Kelley, was born in Kentucky and came here with her parents and located near New Winchester, where she grew to womanhood and on February 22, 1855, married Lewis M. Rose. After his marriage Lewis M. Rose moved to near New Maysville, where he lived until the breaking out of the Civil War, In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, Ninetv-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and died while in the service in the following January. For several years after his death, his widow remained on the farm near New Maysville, and later married James Haves, and moved to his farm in the northwestern part of Marion township, in this county, where she still resides. Lewis M. Rose and wife were the parents of three children, one of whom died in infancy, the other two being William M., and Mrs. Alice Dooley, of Danville.

William M. Rose grew up on his stepfather's farm and after completing the course in the common schools in his neighborhood, he then attended the normal school at Ladoga for two terms. After his marriage, he began farming in Marion township near his mother and there remained until 1905. He already owned a farm when he was married and in 1905 sold this and bought one hundred and ninety-three and a half acres about a mile northeast of North Salem, where he still lives. On his new farm he has built a fine residence, good barns and improved the place in every way. As a farmer he ranks among the first in the township and divides his attention between the raising of grain and the production of live stock.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM M. ROSE

Mr. Rose was married on August 21, 1884, to Amanda Bowen, who was born in Putnam county, Indiana, December 9, 1860, the daughter of James and Nancy (Higgins) Bowen. Nancy Higgins was born in this township, her parents coming to this county from Mercer county, Kentucky, in 1821. James Bowen was reared in Putnam county, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Rose are the parents of three children, all of whom are at home, Ethel C., Edith Lottie and Edward Maurice.

Mr. Rose and his family are all members of the Christian church and to this denomination render faithful and zealous support. Mr. Rose has been an honorable, upright, industrious and temperate man all of his life, and has performed well his part in the body politic. No one questions his standing as one of those citizens who always stand for the best welfare of the commonwealth.

MURAT W. HOPKINS.

This biographical sketch has to do with Murat W. Hopkins, who has for a number of years been recognized as one of the successful lawyers of Indianapolis. As a citizen he is public spirited and enterprising; as a friend and neighbor, he combines the qualities of head and heart that have won confidence and respect; as an attorney, he is easily the equal of his professional brethren at the Marion county bar.

Murat W. Hopkins, now one of the leading attorneys of Indianapolis, and formerly a resident of Hendricks county, Indiana. was born in Brown township, this county, on October 20, 1857, the son of William and Ruah (Harding) Hopkins, his father being a native of Maryland and his mother of Kentucky. William Hopkins was a farmer all of his life, coming to Hendricks county, Indiana, about 1840, and locating in Brown township, where he followed the occupation of a farmer until his death, which occurred in 1891. William Hopkins was one of the prominent citizens of the county in that early day, and for many years served as trustee of his township. He also held many other appointments of trust and frequently served as administrator or guardian. Mrs. William Hopkins died in 1907. They were the parents of six children. Mrs. Sarah Lawhead, of Newburgh, New York; Erastus, of Marienthal, Kansas; Wyatt, deceased; Liston, of Salem, Oregon; Everett, who lives on the old home place two and one-half miles north of Brownsburg, and Murat W., the immediate subject of this review.

Murat W. Hopkins was born and reared on his father's farm, receiving his elementary education in the district schools of his home township. He taught in the public schools of this county and then attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute, after which he entered the State University of Iowa City, where he received his degree of Bachelor of Law in 1881. The following year he began the practice of law at Danville, and continued there until 1891 when he went to Indianapolis, at which city he has built up a successful practice in general work and specializing in legal work relating to corporations. He has been a constant student of the law and during his practice of nearly twenty-five years in the Capitol City he has enjoyed a successful practice and now occupies an influential position among the lawyers of that city. He is a member of the Indianapoli's Bar Association, the Indiana Bar Association and the American Bar Association.

Mr. Hopkins was married on April 20, 1882, to Allie L. Montgomery, of Mattoon, Illinois, who was formerly a resident of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, and was a daughter of Tyra and Caroline (Lockhart) Montgomery. Her grandfather was Thomas Lockhart, a pioneer Christian preacher of Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have two daughters, Kate Elliott, the wife of Wendall Coval, of Indianapolis, and Caroline Ruah. the wife of Donald Gordon, of Metamora, Indiana.

Mr. Hopkins has been affiliated with the Democratic party since he reached voting age and has always taken an active interest in the affairs of his party. However, he has not felt inclined to enter into the siruggle for any official position, being content to devote his time and energy to his interesting and successful legal practice. He is a member of the Indiana Democratic Club at Indianapolis, and he is also a member of the Art Association of that city. Fraternally, he belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, is a Scottish-Rite Mason, and belongs to the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Hopkins, in his public and private life, is regarded as a man of high integrity, with kindly impulses for his fellow citizens and always ready to help those who are deserving of assistance. His love of good books has caused him to accumulate a goodly sized private library, in which can be found many old, rare, interesting and valuable volumes. In his law library is to be found one of the very few complete sets now in existence of the session laws of Indiana enacted by the General Assembly since the formation of the state. There will also be found in his law library original volumes of the Indiana territorial laws, enacted before the state was organized.

CALVIN T. HAULK.

In the agricultural circles of Hendricks county, Indiana, a county noted for the degree of success attained and the high standing of its citizens following that vocation, there is no one more deserving of favorable comment than he whose name is found at the head of this paragraph. He is descended from some of the earlier families of the county, men and women who endured all the privations and sufferings of the early pioneers. The attributes of their stalwart characters still find expression in their sons and daughter: of today and the energy, perseverance and enterprise which Calvin T. Haulk has exhibited in carrying his plans to successful execution mark him worthy of the ancestors who did so much to impress upon this locality in its early days the principles of correct living and advanced ideas.

Calvin T. Haulk was born on December 28, 1870, in eastern Tennessee, the son of Andrew and Seda Emeline (Ottinger) Haulk, both of whom were natives of the same state, the former having been born in Greene county and the latter in Cook county, the daughter of Thomas and Lavina (Ottinger) Ottinger. Thomas was born in Virginia and Lavina in Pennsylvania and, despite the similarity of name, there was no relationship existing between the two families. Andrew Haulk, father of the immediate subject, was born on fanuary 1, 1847, and was the son of William Haulk, also a native of Greene county. Tennessee. All his life Andrew was engaged in farming in his native county and died there on August 3, 1872, leaving his widow and three small children, namely: Calvin (the subject), Wade and Malvina. Early in her widowhood, Mrs. Andrew Haulk brought her three children to the home of her brother, Wylie Ottinger, who lived near Whitestown, Boone county, this state, and in February, 1883, she again united in marriage, this time becoming the wife of Jacob Neese, also a native of Cooke county, Tennessee, and a son of Abraham and Mollie (Blazer) Neese. When Jacob Neese was twelve years old, his parents left their native state and came to Boone county, where they passed the remainder of their lives. They left Tennessee during the Civil War, making the journey all the distance in a wagon, bringing with them only a few of the most precious of the family effects. Jacob Neese grew to manhood on the home farm in Boone county and about the year of 1900 he and his wife came into Hendricks county and now reside in the southeastern part of Lincoln township. To their union have been born five children, Wesley, Delia, Charles, Grace and Earl. Mr. Neese is identified with the Methodist Episcopal church and his wife is a member of the Lutheran society.

Calvin T. Haulk remained with his mother until the time of his marriage. In his boyhood days he attended the district schools of their locality, where he secured the rudiments of a good education, and after leaving school he engaged in farm work, working out among the neighbors. On December 16, 1803, he was united in marriage with Addie B. Isenhouer, who was born July 9, 1872, in Boone county, near Whitestown, and is the daughter of William W. and Mary (Claman) Isenhouer. William W. Isenhouer was born in Boone county in 1850, being a son of Jonathan and Margaret (Whisnand) Isenhouer. His parents were also natives of Tennessee and early in their married life made the journey through the wilderness from Monroe county to Boone county, this state, about 1848. They came on horseback, carrying their oldest son, following the faint trails through the forests, fording streams, and in due time reaching the new country. They did not stay long in Monroe county, coming almost directly to Boone, where there were few traces of civilization at that early date. They entered a tract of government land which was heavily timbered, and this they removed first of all so as to erect a cabin home. Gradually they reclaimed the soil from the grasp of the wilderness, gradually acquired greater comforts in the home, and on this homestead near Whitestown they lived to a good old age. They celebrate their golden wedding anniversary November 9, 1887. His death occurred in August, 1894, and she survived until December 24, 1911, age ninety-two years, eleven months and three days. Isaac and Rebecca Whisnand, parents of Margaret and Rebecca Whisnand, come from eastern Tennessee in 1830, and settled near Bloomington, Monroe county, which at that time comprised but a few cabins and was called Hendersonburg. There they settled on a farm, where they spent the remainder of their days and died. Isaac Whisnand was opposed to matters religious and did not train his children in any faith. Margaret obtained possession of a Testament by stealth and kept it hid from her father under a sugar trough, where she went to read it and pray. Its beautiful truths appealed to her girlish heart and the joined the Methodist church at Whitestown. At that time the society had no church building, but a short time after an edifice was erected in which the society worshipped for a number of years. Within the last few years it was torn down, and she alone was living of its members at the time of its erection. Her husband also became a member at the time of its erection. Her husband also became a member of that church through her ministrations. William W. Isenhouer was united in marriage with Mary Angeline Claman in 1870. She was born in Monroe county, this state, being the daughter of William and Rebecca (Whisnand) Claman. William Claman was the son of John Claman, a native of West Virginia, who, with his wife, come to Indiana about 1835. In 1836 William Claman married Rebecca Whisnand, who was a twin sister of William W. Isenhouer's mother. After marriage, William W. Isenhouer settled down to farming and stock raising near Whitestown where he remained until 1883, when he removed to Missouri where the family staved a year and then returned to the old home near Whitestown. In 1886 they again left the farm, this time taking up their residence in Lebanon, Boone county, and in 1006 left the Hoosier state, going to Arkansas, where his death occurred in 1909. His widow still resides in that state. William W. Isenhouer was a most affectionate husband and father, a man of marked domestic traits who was never happier than when doing something for those he loved. He was a faithful friend and neighbor, always obliging and selfsacrificing and ever anxious to extend a helping hand to those in need, even at the cost of self denial. For many years he was in poor health, but was of such a sincere and cheery disposition that he habitually looked on the bright side of life and bore his affliction in a spirit of meekness. For many years he and his wife had been faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church and through its teachings he found the beautiful way of life that even suffering could not darken for him.

After marriage, the subject and wife lived in Boone county on a rented farm and in March, 1904, purchased the farm where they now reside in the southeastern part of Lincoln township, this county. The farm comprises sixty-three acres and is in an excellent state of cultivation. To Mr. and Mrs. Haulk have been born five children, namely: William Russell, born March 25, 1895; Ernest Isaac, born September 27, 1897; Ray Andrew, born December 19, 1899; Ruth Annabel, born January 2, 1905, and Margaret Evangeline, born February 26, 1911. Both Mr. and Mrs. Haulk are devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church, she having united with that society at the early age of thirteen.

In politics Mr. Haulk is a Republican, though taking no active interest in politics, and his fraternal affiliations are with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a self-made man, who has worked hard to get ahead in financial matters and has displayed the marked economy which is a distinct trait of the enterprising American farmer. He went into debt in the purchasing of his farm and then his efforts were bent to discharging that obligation and acquiring all modern comforts to make more pleasant the daily life. No longer is the vocation of farming looked upon as one of hardship and privation. for more and more the American public is coming to realize that the man who is most independent, who has the opportunity to most fully live and enjoy life, is the farmer. All the conveniences of the modern home of the city are within his reach and in addition he enjoys the freedom and independence known in no other vocation. Mrs. Haulk's family were among the first in this section of the country and have many interesting experiences to tell. There were no matches and fire was kept constantly burning. If by any chance this should become extinguished, it was a laborious task to carry fire from the nearest neighbor, possibly some distance away. Tallow candles and "dips" furnished the illumination and the big fireplace was where the meals were prepared. How changed are all these conditions, brought about by men of foresight, energy and thrift, and in this class of worthy citizens the subject of this sketch well belongs.

AMOS D. McCORMICK.

Among the many sons of Hendricks county who have left their native county for wider fields is Amos D. McCormick, who is at present the manager of the Capitol Lumber Company yards Number Two, of Indianapolis. He is one of those strong, self-reliant and determined characters who are occasionally met with and who are of such a distinct type as to seem to be born leaders. Not that Mr. McCormick courts that distinction, for he is entirely unassuming, but his force of character and his zeal and energy in whatever he undertakes naturally places him at the head of the crowd. He has held a number of positions and wherever he has been he has rendered faithful and efficient service to those who employed him. His life has been one of unceasing industry. The perseverance and the systematic and honorable methods he has followed have not only won for him the confidence of his employers, but of his fellow citizens as well. He is a man whom Hendricks county may be justly proud to claim and it is safe to say that he is just as proud of his home county.

Amos D. McCormick, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Aquilla S. McCormick, was born February 24, 1870, northeast of Cartersburg, Hendricks county, Indiana. He remained at home until eighteen years of age and then started to clerk in the store of Pruitt Brothers at Cartersburg, where he remained for three or four years. He then went to work in the store of W. T. Jordan at Pittsboro where he remained until he was twenty-six years of age. He then went into the poultry business at Cartersburg and followed this for the next two years, when he went to farming on the farm where he was born. He was ambitious, however, to get into the business world and when the opportunity presented itself he left the farm and took a position with a lumber company. On March 1, 1901, he went to Linton and took a position with the Greer-Wilkinson Lumber Company, the largest lumber company in Indiana, having at that time forty yards throughout the state. He remained with this company a little more than two years and then went into the employ of the New Union Lumber Company at the same place as manager of their yards. From there he went to Indianapolis in the winter of 1906 and became estimator for the Burnett-Lewis Lumber Yards Company. Two years later he resigned his position and then spent a year at Los Angeles, California, with the Wells Fargo Express Company, but his love for the lumber business drew him back into that again and in 1008 he returned to Indiana and became manager of the New Union Lumber Company at Jasonville. He continued there until August 20, 1011, when he took his present position as manager of the Capitol Lumber Company, yard Number Two at Forty-eighth street and Monon railroad in Indianapolis. He has a thorough knowledge of the lumber business in all its details and is rapidly pushing to the front as a capable man in that line of business.

Mr. McCormick was married in 1895 to Kate Brent, the daughter of George and Marion (McVay) Brent. His wife was born on the old Brent homestead, one and one-half miles southwest of Pittsboro. Her father was born on a farm near Campbellsburg, Kentucky, about 1844 the son of Sanford Brent and wife. He came to Hendricks county while a young man and was married to Marion McVay, the daughter of Molar and Mary (Bradshaw) McVay. The Bradshaws were early pioneers of this county. George Brent was a farmer all of his life, and died March 16, 1879, at the early age of thirty-five. After his death his widow married Dr. J. S. French, of Crawfordsville, and has lived in Pittsboro ever since. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick have one son, Edwin, born February 2, 1901. They still own the farm which was entered by Mr. McCormick's grandfather.

Mr. and Mrs. McCormick are members of the Third Christian church of Indianapolis and liberal supporters of that denomination. Mr. McCormick is a man of excellent parts and by his strong and vigorous personality has won success in his chosen field. He thoroughly understands every phase of the lumber business and because of this fact he is a very valuable man to the company which employs him. He is a wide reader and a close observer of men, and enjoys a large acquaintance among the business men of Indianapolis. He is a man of integrity and honor and lends his support to all measures which make for the welfare of his community, and, for this reason is deservedly held in high regard by all who know him.

OBED UNDERWOOD.

In placing Obed Underwood in the front rank of the farmers of Hendricks county, simple justice is done to a biographical fact universally recognized by all who are familiar with his history. A man of sound judgment, wise discretion, thorough agricultural knowledge and business ability of a high order, he has managed his affairs with splendid success and has so impressed his individuality upon the community as to gain recognition among the leading citizens and public-spirited men of affairs.

Obed Underwood, the son of William and Harriett (West) Underwood, was born at Winchester, this county, on September 21, 1854. William Underwood was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1824, the son of John and Rebecca (Radford) Underwood. When William was still a small lad his parents came to Hendricks county, Indiana, where they entered a large amount of government land in Marion township, and here they spent the remainder of their lives, rearing a family of seven children, William, the father of Obed, being the eldest child; Franklin, Charlotte, Elizabeth, Catherine, Sarah and Ellen. William Underwood was reared in this township and married Harriett West, who was a native of Kentucky, the daughter of Isaac and Polly Ann West. She came to this county when a child with her parents. Her father, Isaac West, now deceased, was one of the early pioneers of Hendricks county. He was born in Wayne county, Kentucky, and was a son of Alexander and Sarah West. He had no educational advantages in his youth and was early compelled to earn his own living. He married in Kentucky and his wife, Polly, the daughter of George Turner, came to Indiana in 1827 with her parents and settled in the woods one mile south of New Winchester, where they entered one hundred and sixty acres of land from the government. Here they lived until the death of Mr. Turner, who lived to the advanced age of ninety-four years, and died on August 29, 1898, having lived in this county seventy years. He began life with nothing whatever, and by hard work, honesty and indomitable courage, succeeded in clearing up a farm of two hundred and sixty-five acres. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church, a man noted for his honesty and integrity and was held in the highest esteem by every one. His wife died December 15, 1887.

After his marriage William Underwood, the father of Obed, began life on his own account as a farmer and so successful was he that at the time of his death he had six hundred acres of land in the county. He died September 1, 1875, at the age of fifty-one. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife died April 7, 1912, on her eighty-fourth birthday. To Mr. and Mrs. William Underwood were born six children: John F., who lives in Danville; William I, and Robert L., of New Winchester; Mary Ellen and Angeline, deceased, and Obed, of whom this narrative speaks.

Obed Underwood was reared in this county, spent his early days in the school room, and upon reaching manhood was married to Louie Bousman. the daughter of John and Mary (Havnes) Bousman, of Marion township. Her parents came from Clinton county. Ohio, about 1854 and located in Marion township, this county. Mr. Bousman was a carpenter by trade, although after he came to this township he bought a farm and continued farming and carpentering. In 1879 the Bousman family bought property in Danville, where they lived the remainder of Mr. Bousman's life, his death occurring February 5, 1904. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while he and his wife belonged to the Christian church. Mrs. Bousman is now living with Mr. and Mrs. Underwood at New Winchester. After his marriage, Mr. Underwood started farming for himself and became the owner of various farms in Marion township. In September, 1912, he retired from the active management of his farm and moved to New Winchester, where he is living a life of ease and comfort. In politics he is a Democrat and as a representative of his party has served as township trustee on two different occasions, being elected the first time in 1000 and again in 1904. He was an able and efficient official and served his party and the citizens of his county, irrespective of their political faith, equally well.

Mr. Underwood has two daughters, Maude and Jessie. Maude is the wife of Arthur Carter and lives in Clay township; Jessie is the wife of Olson

Hunt and lives in the eastern part of Marion township, and has one daughter, Marvel. Mr. and Mrs. Underwood are faithful and consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church and are interested in the various activities of that denomination. Mr. Underwood is a man who is well known throughout the community and is highly esteemed by all who know him, since he has for many years been a potent factor in the civic life of the community.

NATHAN ADDISON TUCKER.

Hendricks county is indebted, perhaps, to the Tucker family as much as to any other for its wondrous transformation to one of the choicest sections of the Hoosier state, for members of this family have been leaders in agricultural, industrial and civic affairs since the early days. Each, with a fidelity to duty and a persistency of purpose peculiar to that class of men who takes the lead in large affairs, has performed well his duty in all the relations of life, and while advancing their own interests they have not been unmindful of the general welfare of their fellow citizens. Thus they rightfully deserve an honored place in the history of this locality.

Nathan A. Tucker, the son of Dandridge and Catherine (Davis) Tucker, was born four miles northeast of North Salem, November 27, 1853. The reader is referred to the history of Dandridge Tucker, elsewhere in this volume, for a complete family genealogy of the Tucker family.

Nathan A. Tucker was reared on his father's farm and after taking the course in the local schools he attended Valparaiso University and Wabash College. Upon his return from college he worked with his father on the farm until his marriage.

Mr. Tucker was married September 15, 1880, to Mary E. Carriger, of Boone county, Indiana, the daughter of George and Sarah (George) Carriger, who came from Tennessee to Indiana in 1840 and located in Boone county. Upon his marriage, in 1880, Mr. Tucker started farming on eighty acres which was given him by his father, and he has proved to be a very successful farmer, since he has by his own energy and persistence added to his farm from time to time until he now has two hundred and eighty acres of excellent farming land in the county. He has his farm highly improved in every way and it presents a striking appearance to the passerby. His home is placed back from the road and is approached by a gravel roadway, Imed on both sides with beautiful shade trees at regular intervals. The house is placed upon an eminence, which renders it conspicuous in all directions and from which an excellent view may be had all over his farm. He has good barns, outbuildings and all the equipment which characterizes the successful farmer of today. He raises all the crops of this latitude and makes it a point to feed most of his grain to his own stock, his annual sale of hogs, cattle and sheep adding not a little to his yearly income.

The first wife of Mr. Tucker died in November, 1892, and in October, 1894, he was married to Anna M. Spears, who died two years later and Mr. Tucker now lives on the old home farm with his children. There is no more interesting family of children in Hendricks county than Mr. Tucker's and no children in the county who have been given better educational advantages. He has three sons and three daughters and all of them have graduated from the North Salem high school, while the three sons are all DePauw University men. The sons are Lee, Carl A., and George D., while the daughters are Sarah Catherine. Etta Agnes, and Louisa J.. the last named being the only one of the six children married. She is the wife of Logan R. Owen and lives one and one-half miles north of North Salem. Agnes and Lee are both teaching at North Salem, and all of the children, except the married daughter, are living with their father.

Mr. Tucker is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his children are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. His home is one where genuine hospitality always manifests itself, and he is justly proud of his fine children, who have all prepared themselves for useful members of society.

PETER GREELY.

The life history of Peter Greely, one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, shows what industry, good habits and stanch citizenship will accomplish in the battle for success in life. His record shows duties well and conscientiously performed in all the relations of life. Born on a foreign soil and coming to this county many years ago, he has grown into the life of his adopted country and has played his part in the drama of civilization. He has ever been an advocate of wholesome living and has always stood for the highest and best interests of the community in which he has so long resided and which has been honored by his citizenship.

Peter Greely was born in 1840 in county Galway, Ireland, the son of John and Bridget (Eagan) Greely, the mother dying when Peter was a child of three years. The subject grew up in Ireland, remaining on his native soil until twenty-four years of age, when, in 1864, in company with thirteen other young men and girls, he set out to try his fortune in the new world. They had a delightful voyage and landed in New York, where all found friends. Peter had a sister in this county, Mrs. Margaret Corliss, who had come to America in 1860, locating near Brownsburg and had married a year later. Mr. Greely had owned a farm in Ireland and was well versed in the secrets of husbandry and upon reaching his sister's home he found that her husband owned a farm of forty acres in Brown township, later moving to Lincoln township, where he had one hundred acres. Thus it was but natural that Mr. Greely should turn to the work with which he was familiar, and he worked among the farmers until in 1869, when he purchased sixty-eight acres one mile northeast of Brownsburg. At the time he bought this land it was covered with dense thickets and timber and was very swampy, the thickets so dense in some places one could scarcely see ten feet ahead. There were but ten acres cleared and the only building was an old log house. He proceeded to clear this land, drain and tile it and has today some of the finest land in the county, land for which he has refused two hundred dollars per acre. He now has one hundred and forty acres in all. In 1908 his home burned, and he then erected the handsome and commodious dwelling in which the family now resides.

In 1870 Mr. Greely was united in marriage with Margaret Dugan, who was born in county Galway, Ireland, the daughter of Patrick and Nora (Dugan) Dugan. She and Mr. Greely were acquainted in Ireland and she came to America soon after Mr. Greely did, finding friends in Indianapolis and in her earlier days here worked in farm homes near the city. To their union were born ten children and throughout the years Mrs. Greely proved herself to be a most devoted wife and mother and a woman highly respected by friends and neighbors. Her death occurred at midnight on March 1, 1910. John, the eldest son, married Mrs. Isa (Ulrv) Maloney, a widow, and they live two miles northeast of the subject. Nora is the wife of Thomas O'Connell and resides in Indianapolis. Her husband is foreman for the Grocers' Baking Company, They have two children, Leo and Catherine, Bridget Delia is unmarried and makes her home in Indianapolis. Michael is teaching school at Paoli, this state. Margaret is a stenographer in Indianapolis. Patrick is on the farm with his father, and Kate also remains at home. Nellie is an instructor in the high school at Sunman, Indiana, having attended both Butler College, Indianapolis, and the State University at Bloomington. Mary lived to the age of twenty-two years and Kate died when three years old.

The entire family are devout members of the Roman Catholic church. When a youth in Ireland, Mr. Greely received an excellent education, being versed in Latin, German and the Gaelic tongues, as well as many other subjects. He is an unusually well read man and exceedingly well versed in the Bible and history pertaining to it. He is a man of high ideals and strong convictions and throughout his life has lived according to his ideas of the essential qualifications of perfect manhood. He is a man of influence among his neighbors and highly respected by all.

JAMES B. DOOLEY.

The gentleman whose biographical record is here given was for a long lapse of years one of the substantial farmers and honored citizens of Hendricks county. His well-directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment have brought him a fair measure of prosperity, and his life demonstrates what may be accomplished by the man of energy and ambition who is not afraid to work and has the perseverance to continue his labors in the face of seemingly discouraging circumstances. As a native son of Hendricks county he patriotically served his country during our great Civil War, and in all the relations of life he has commanded the respect and confidence of those with whom he has been brought in contact.

James B. Dooley was born in 1837, about one mile west of Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana. He is a son of Moses and Elizabeth (Bohannan) Dooley. Moses Dooley was born in Virginia in 1799, and at the age of thirteen years came to the state of Kentucky with his mother, his father having died in Virginia. The mother and son lived in Shelby county, Kentucky, and there Moses grew to manhood and married Elizabeth Bohannan, a native of that state. In pioneer days Moses Dooley and his wife came to Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana. That was a primitive day, and he assisted in the clearing of timber from the court house yard in Danville. Their eldest child, Martha J., was born in Kentucky, and their other children were born in Hendricks county. Moses Dooley's first farm was one mile west of Danville, but later he moved to a farm of one hundred and sixty acres situated between Belleville and Clayton. He met with pecuniary misfortune by going security for a friend and crediting others, which caused him to lose his farm. He had only three hundred and fifty dollars left, but later succeeded in buying another farm six miles northwest of Danville, in Marion township, where his son, James B., the immediate subject of this sketch, grew to manhood.

James B. Dooley was married in 1860 to Mary Buntin, daughter of Harvey Buntin and a sister of John H. Buntin, of North Salem, Hendricks county. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company H of the Ninety-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee under General Logan and General Sherman. Major J. B. Homan, of Danville, was captain of this company and Rev. D. R. Lucas was chaplain. Mr. Dooley participated in some of the important battles of the war, among them being the battles of Dalton, Resaca, Atlanta, and many other engagements incidental to the march to Atlanta. With his company he accompanied Sherman to the sea, and was near Raleigh, North Carolina, when Johnson surrendered to General Sherman. The Ninety-ninth Regiment did as much marching as any in the service. Before going on the Atlanta campaign it saw much hard service at Haines Bluff during the siege of Vicksburg. They also participated in the battle of Mission Ridge and many other noted engagements. From Raleigh the horses and mules and artillery were loaded on cars and shipped to Washington, and the infantry was obliged to walk. They marched through Petersburg, Richmond and on to Washington, where they participated in the Grand Review, Mr. Dooley receiving an honorable discharge at the close of the war.

After the war Mr. Dooley returned to Hendricks county, reaching home on June 15th, a late time of the season for a farmer to start work. His good wife had saved five hundred dollars from money he had sent her from the front, and she, like many other patriotic women of that day, had, by dint of hard work in the harvest fields and by other heavy labor, managed well. He was thus enabled to buy a small farm, chiefly on credit, which he was able to dispose of the following spring at a profit. He then purchased twenty acres, paying cash, and this gave him a substantial start. He subsequently traded this and secured more land in Marion township, and in time became the owner of a good sized farm, a part of which, however, was inherited by his wife. He and his wife had eighty acres in one tract and he had fifty-two acres in another part of the township, where the family home was established. He farmed there until he was unable longer to bear the burden of active work.

To James B. and Mary (Buntin) Dooley were born four children: Hattie, the first born, is the wife of William Bowman, and they live at Maplewood, Indiana, and have two children, Ernest and Homer. Minnie is the wife of Edward Dow and they live on East Twelfth street. Indianapolis. and have six children, Mary, Lora, Ruby, Vivian, Phyllis and Byron. Lizzie is the wife of John Crosby, a successful farmer, and they live two miles north and three-quarters of a mile east of New Winchester, Indiana, and they have two children, Ray and Carlos, both now students at Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana. Lester, the voungest by Mr. Dooley's first marriage, died at the age of eighteen months. The first Mrs. Dooley died in 1903. She was a faithful member of the Christian church at New Winchester, and a woman of many lovable traits of character. On November 17, 1908, Mr. Dooley was married to Mrs. Leanah (Buntin) (Walton) Wright, a sister of his first wife. She was born about two miles west of New Winchester and grew to womanhood in Marion township. In January, 1861, she married William Walton. One son, Amos McClellan Walton, born of this union, died at the age of two years, of diphtheria. Mr. Walton and Mr. Dooley enlisted for service in the Civil War at the same time and in the same company, and were together until Mr. Walton's death by typhoid fever, near Lagrange, Tennessee, in the winter of 1862-3. Mrs. Walton later married John Wright, a native of Marion township, a son of William Wright and wife, who were pioneer settlers in Marion township. William Wright was in Missouri at the time the Civil War began and came home and enlisted in the state militia which was called into service at the time of Morgan's raid. Mr. Wright was a farmer and did a great deal of teaming and hauling timber. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wright lived for seven years in the state of Illinois, when Mr. Wright's health failed and they then returned to Hendricks county, where he died. Mrs. Wright remained a widow twenty-four years, during which time she lived on a farm in Marion township. There were seven children born of her marriage to William Wright. Lena is the wife of Otis Hedge and they live near Valley Mills, and they had two children, only one living, Edna, who is the wife of Chester Jay. Retta, the second child, died at the age of twenty-one. Oscar Wright is a grocer and horseman at Franklin, Indiana. Maude is the wife of Fred Sears and they live in the eastern part of Marion township, Hendricks county, and have one daughter, Maxine. Donna was the wife of Charles Graham and both are deceased, leaving two children, Vesta and Bernice. Alice is the wife of Raymond Rudd and they live at Franklin, Indiana, where Mr. Rudd is a partner with Oscar Wright in the grocery business; they have two daughters, Farrell and Leanah. Homer Wright has been a government employe in the Indianapolis postoffice for past eight years and makes his home with his mother and Mr. Dooley.

James B. Dooley is retired from active life, and on September 15, 1909, removed to his present home at No. 1902 Commerce avenue, Indianapolis, which they had bought a year before. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and he belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic. Politically, he was formerly a Republican, but is now allied with the Progressive party.

Mr. Dooley has always been a loyal and patriotic man, loyal to the laws of his country in times of peace and patriotic in defense of the flag in times of peril. He was one of six sons, of whom five were soldiers in the Civil War, and none of them were in the same regiment. Henry was wounded and Arthur was captured and confined in a Confederate prison, but all came home alive.

DANDRIDGE TUCKER.

Among the families of Hendricks county who have descended from Revolutionary stock is the Tucker family, whose history is not only of general interest, but of especial interest to the many descendants of that illustrious family.

Dandridge Tucker, one of the most highly respected and best beloved men of Hendricks county of a past generation, was born in Casey county, Kentucky, March 3, 1827, and died in Danville, in this county, on June 18, 1892. He was the only son of Lee and Miranda (Durham) Tucker. Lee Tucker was one of the first pioneers in Hendricks county, and was born in Bedford county, Virginia, May 4, 1803. Lee Tucker was the eldest son and third child of a family of ten children, born to Dandridge and Nancy (Settles) Tucker, who were also natives of Virginia. The father of Dandridge Tucker was William, a soldier of the Revolutionary War for seven years.

William Tucker, who grew up in Virginia, married Nancy Settles, and their son, Lee, became the father in turn of Dandridge, whose history is herein presented.

Lee Tucker, the father of Dandridge, was eight years of age when his parents moved from Virginia to Casey county, Kentucky. He was reared to manhood on his father's farm in Kentucky and married, on March 7, 1826,

DANDRIDGE TUCKER

Miranda Durham, the daughter of Thomas and Frances (Moss) Durham, natives respectively of Virginia and Maryland. Miranda (Durham) Tucker was born December 16, 1805, in Mercer county, Kentucky, and after his marriage he and his wife continued to live on the old homestead farm until the fall of 1831, when, on account of his opposition to slavery, he came to Indiana, arriving in Eel River township, Hendricks county, on September 12, 1834. He immediately entered one hundred and sixty acres of unimproved land in this township, and afterwards entered one hundred and twenty acres more. When Lee Tucker and his family came here in 1834, practically the only cleared land in the township was that of Isaac Trotter, all the rest of the township being a dense wilderness. In 1826 Mr. Tucker and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal church in Kentucky and soon afterwards he was appointed class leader. Upon coming to Indiana he organized a church society of six members and his own house served as the place of worship for some time. Later he organized the first Sabbath school in Eel River township, which was also held in his own home. He served as class leader, steward and trustee in the church until his death. His house was always the rendezvous of the ministers, and no man in the county ever took a more hearty interest in this work than did Lee Tucker. He was an earnest advocate of temperance and was the first man in his township to refuse to furnish intoxicants at his log rollings or in the harvest field. Politically, he was an oldline Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he became affiliated with that political institution. He was always among the foremost to aid in every good cause. His death occurred June 23, 1884, his wife having passed away July 24, 1872. Three children were born to Lee Tucker and his wife: Lee Ann, the wife of John Durham: Dandridge, and Francis. who died when seven years old. In addition to rearing these children of their own, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Tucker reared eight orphan children, all of whom grew to be useful members of society.

Dandridge Tucker, reared by such parents, could not help but be a man who would be an ornament to any community. Coming to this county when he was seven years of age with his parents, he spent the rest of his life here. He assisted his father to clear and improve the home farm and was given the meager education which was afforded by the subscription schools of that period. He was married on May 5, 1850, to Catherine Davis, who was born March 11, 1830, in Montgomery county, Kentucky, the daughter of Nathan and Nancy (Kidd) Davis, her parents coming to this county in 1835. To Dandridge Tucker and wife were born four children, David Lee and Nathan

A., whose histories are presented elsewhere in this volume; Miranda F. and Robert E.

After his marriage in 1850 Dandridge Tucker settled on the farm where his sons, Nathan and David, now reside, and gradually improved the farm until it was as productive as any in the county.

Religiously, Mr. Tucker was a loyal and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church and his wife of the Christian church. His wife died February 15, 1883, and some years later he married Jennie Hadley.

Mr. Tucker was always an active worker in the Republican party, and in 1847 he was appointed township trustee. He was elected treasurer of the board and served in that capacity until the new Constitution was adopted in 1852. He was a great student of Masonry and was one of the oldest representatives of the grand lodge of Indiana. He had taken all of the degrees and was one of the first thirty-second-degree Masons in the state. He was a man of broad, generous character, a good citizen in every sense of the word and a man who was indeed and in truth "four square to every wind that blew."

DAVID LEE TUCKER.

The Tucker family have played an important part in the history of Hendricks county. The history of this family, which has been traced back through the Revolutionary War, discloses the fact that its members have always played an honorable and prominent part in the affairs of the various communities in which they have resided.

David Lee Tucker, who has lived more than three score years in this county, is a man who stands high in the estimation of his neighbors and friends, whose interests he has always sought to promote while endeavoring to advance his own. He is a man of courage, self-reliance and of the utmost integrity of purpose, with the result that he has earned a full share of this world's goods and at the same time has taken a part in the civic life of the community in which he lives. He is a son of Dandridge Tucker and his birth occurred February 13, 1852, on the farm where he now lives m Eel River township, this county. Since the Tucker family history is given in the sketch of Dandridge Tucker, the reader is referred to that biography for the ancestry of David Lee Tucker.

David L. Tucker grew up on the farm where he is now living and after completing his common and high school education in the North Salem schools he attended Wabash College. He was married December 31, 1903, to Lillian G. Overstreet, the daughter of Aaron and Catherine (Elder) Overstreet. Aaron Overstreet, the son of James and Susan Overstreet, was born in Casey county, Kentucky, January 10, 1826. He was reared in Kentucky, and on December 24, 1850, married Catherine Ann Elder, and two years later came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and after living in several different parts or the county he settled in Union township. In August, 1862, he enlisted for service in the Union army in Company G. Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served during the remainder of the war. He was in the battles of Jacksonville, Chattanooga, Vicksburg, all of the battles of the Atlanta campaign, and was with Sherman on his march northward from Savannah to the final surrender at Guilford court house in the spring of 1865, and in August of that year he was mustered out of the service, when he immediately returned to this county, where he lived as a farmer until his death, which occurred June 22, 1910. To Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet were born twelve children. Both Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet were active members of the Christian church, and, fraternally, Mr. Overstreet was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and also of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was an honest, industrious man who had great faith in the better side of human life. He was truthful and optimistic to a marked degree and not only mild when life looked dark and gloomy, but believed that the man who is worth while he is the one who will smile when everything goes against him.

Mr. Tucker has one hundred and sixty acres of well improved land in Eel River township, where he grows all the grains, vegetables and fruits common to this section of the state. He devotes a great deal of time and attention to live stock and has earned a reputation more than local as a cattle taiser. He is a man of progressive ideas and tendencies, and by adopting modern methods of farming and keeping in touch with the more advanced thought on the matter of agriculture and stock raising, has achieved definite success. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Jamestown, while, religiously, he and his wife are both members of the Christian church at North Salem. He is a man of keen business discernment, is able to foresee with remarkable accuracy the probable outcome of a transaction, and is by nature a man always on the alert, progressive, yet scrupulously honest, straightforward and unassuming, obliging and courteous, kindly and hospitable and he numbers his friends only by the limit of his acquaintances, and has won the good will and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact.

CHARLES E. KURTZ.

In the history of Hendricks county, as applying to the agricultural interest, the name of Charles E. Kurtz occupies a conspicuous place, for through a number of years he has been one of the representative farmers of Marion township, progressive, enterprising and persevering. Such qualities always win success, sooner or later, and to Mr. Kurtz they have brought a satisfactory reward for his well-directed efforts, and while he has benefited himself and community in a material way, he has also been an influential factor in the educational, political and moral uplift of the community favored by his residence.

Charles E. Kurtz, the son of Henry and Margaret (Logan) (Vannice) Kurtz, was born in Marion township, this county, September 10, 1867. His father was born in Nelson county, Kentucky, February 10, 1823, and was brought to this state by his parents when six months old. They settled in Putnam county on a farm, where he was reared and, with the exception of the three years he spent in the army during the Civil war, he always resided on the farm. He was married October 9, 1851, to Margaret Logan Vannice, the daughter of Lawrence and Caroline Vannice, after which they settled on a farm, where they continued to live the remainder of their lives, the farm at the time they took it being an unbroken wilderness. At the opening of the Civil War there were four little children in the family and when the husband and father enlisted, on August 13. 1862, to battle for the Union, he left his family not knowing whether he would ever see them again. He enlisted in Company G, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, and, with his regiment, participated in all the campaigns and battles of that command until July 22, 1864, when in the great two-days battle at Atlanta, he was taken prisoner and confined to the stockade at Andersonville. He was in this historic prison from August 1, 1864, until October 24th of the same year, and during this time he experienced all the horrors and privations of that terrible prison pen. From Andersonville he was taken to the stockade prison at Florence, South Carolina, and confined here for three months. On February 28, 1865, he was exchanged and sent north, being almost dead from the hardships he had endured. He arrived home March 22, 1865, and, since the war was nearly at an end, he did not re-enlist. While in the army he wrote home as frequently as the mails would permit and his letters give thrilling glimpses of the battles, marches and incidents through which he was passing. Many a day his loving wife took the little flock to the forest to gather such wood as she could find for fuel. Many a night she put the children to bed, extinguished the light and sat with her face pressed against the window, where she saw men pass along the road to meet and plot against the government for which her husband was risking his life, but he returned and their happy life was resumed and they lived for fifty years after this terrible struggle was over. In 1901 they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary and in 1911 their sixtieth anniversary, and on these occasions abundant testimony was given of the high regard with which this venerable couple was held. To them were born eight children: Mrs. Caroline F. Underwood; Jacob L.; Mrs. Eliza Hadley; William H., deceased; Mrs. Jennie Hadley; Charles E., Oscar and Wilbur, deceased. Living together for more than sixty years, they were separated in death only a few days, Mrs. Kurtz dying on May 28, 1913, and he dying a few days later, on June 8, 1913.

Charles E. Kurtz received his education in the district schools of his township and grew to manhood on the home farm, part of which is now owned by him. He has operated his present farm since his boyhood days and has improved it in every way. The farm is well drained, well fenced, and he has a fine home, excellent barns and other outbuildings, the place being a model of neatness and convenience. While he raises all of the crops peculiar to this latitude, he makes a specialty of stock raising and breeding. He breeds Hereford cattle and ships them to all points in the United States. He has taken part in many fairs and expositions and has won many prizes away from his home county and in different states. He has displayed his cattle at the International Stock Show at Chicago and has carried off prizes, winning over cattle from all over the United States. He also is a breeder and raiser of Spotted Poland China hogs and finds a ready sale for his surplus stock.

Mr. Kurtz was married in 1892 to Alice Henry, daughter of Thompson and Esteline (Jesse) Henry. Thompson Henry is a native of this county and grew to manhood on the old Nathan Tucker farm in Eel River township. He and his wife, who also was a native of this county, are now living retired at Jamestown. They reared a family of eight children, Jesse, George H., Oliver, Alice, Effie, Mattie, Reddie G., deceased, and one who died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz have four children, all of whom are at home, Ralph, Verla P., Henry H. and Charles E. Mr. Kurtz is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias at North Salem. and also is a member of the Royal Arch Masons at Danville. He is a Republican in politics and has always taken a more or less active part in local political affairs. He has been a member of the Hendricks county council and in that capacity has stood for all measures which promise to better the condition of the county. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Presbyterian church at New Winchester and are generous contributors to its maintenance. Mr. Kurtz has been a hard worker all of his life and is richly deserving of the success which has come to him. On his fine farm of two hundred and eighty acres he has the opportunity to show what a progressive farmer can accomplish and it needs but a glance over his welltilled fields to show that he has taken advantage of the opportunity. Such men are welcomed in every community, and the greater the number of this class the better it is for the community, for it is people who live in any locality which really make it what it is. Therefore, Mr. Kurtz can be justly regarded as one of the best representative men of Hendricks county today.

MARTIN HESSION.

The history of the Hoosier state is not an ancient one. It is the record of the steady growth of a community planted in the wilderness in the last century and reaching its magnitude of today without other aids than those of continued industry. Each county has its share in the story, and every county can lay claim to some incident or transaction which goes to make up the history of the commonwealth. After all, the history of a state is but a record of the doings of its people, among whom the pioneers and the sturdy descendants occupy places of no secondary importance. The story of the plain common people who constitute the moral bone and sinew of the state should ever attract the attention and prove of interest to all true lovers of their kind. In the life story of the subject of this sketch there are no striking chapters or startling incidents, but it is merely the record of a life true to its highest ideals and fraught with much that should stimulate the youth just starting in the world as an independent factor.

Martin Hession, the subject of this review, was a native of Ireland, born in county Galway, and about the year 1834, when fourteen or fifteen years of age, he came unaccompanied to America. His mother had died previous to his coming, and some time after he had established himself in the new land his father joined him. He was the son of Daniel and Sarah Hession and was one of a family of four children, the others being Charles. Michael and Ellen. Mr. Hession first set foot in the new world at New Orleans, after a long and tedious journey in the sail boats of that day, and remained there for about two months before coming to Indiana. After arriving in Indiana, he found friends in both Marion and Hendricks counties and worked out among them on their farms at day labor. In this manner he employed himself for eight or nine years, when he felt able to invest in a farm for himself and purchased a forty-acre tract in the eastern portion of Brown township, this county. He lived there for three or four years, when he sold it and bought a forty-acre farm in Boone county. There he resided for two years, when he traded that farm to a brother for forty acres in Brown township, when he again became a citizen of Hendricks county, and has since remained here. Mr. Hession has carried on general farming and kindred interests and, by reason of his unfailing energy and tireless efforts, he has prospered. The forty acres secured from his brother has formed the nucleus for his present holdings, comprising three hundred and fifteen acres of as fine land as the county can boast, and the reputation of Hendricks county for excellent soil is well known.

On January 4, 1860, Mr. Hession was united in marriage with Mary Hagon, who was born in September, 1840, in county Galway, Ireland. Her parents died in the old country when she was young and when but fourteen years of age she journeyed to the United States alone, landing at New Orleans and coming directly to Marion county, this state, where three of her brothers and one sister were already settled. These were John, Michael, Martin and Kate. After arriving at the home of her brothers she went out as a domestic to service on various farms in Marion county and in this way made her own way until the time of her marriage. Her parents were James and Bridget Reddington. To the union of Martin and Mary (Hagon) Hession have been born nine children, two of which have passed away. The others are: James, who married Belle Sharkey and resides on a farm about one mile north of the subject; Sarah is the wife of Martin Hession and lives on a farm in Middle township, this county; Delia married Darby Mulrine and lives in Indianapolis. Her husband is employed by Kingan & Company, Limited. They have two children, Nora and Martin. Martin F. married Nellie King, of Indianapolis, and they reside just east of the subject's home; Daniel, John and Mary remain at home; they are the parents of three children, namely: Elizabeth, Mary and Martha. Charles died when thirty-three years and six months of age and a little daughter, Julia, died in infancy. The family is considered one of the very best in the community and has a host of friends. The atmosphere of the home is thoroughly hospitable and both friends and strangers find appropriate welcome there. Mr. Hession, after a strenuous career, has practically retired from active duties and is enjoying the fruits of many years of unceasing labor. There is much that is commendable in his life's record, much that might well be an inspiration to young men with life before them and without influential friends to come to their aid. By his own effort and right principles of living he has not only won for himself an enviable competency for his declining years, but has so conducted his affairs with his fellow men as to win for himself the reputation of one absolutely trustworthy and honorable in his business dealings, and worthy in every respect of the warmest personal friendship. The entire family are communicants of the Roman Catholic church and give liberally of their substance to its support.

WILLIAM S. DICKERSON.

Among the earnest men whose enterprise and depth of character have gained a prominent place in the community and the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens is the honored subject of this sketch. A leading farmer and stock raiser of the township in which he resides and a man of decided views and laudable ambitions, his influence has ever been exerted for the advancement of his kind, and in the vocation to which his energies are devoted he ranks among the representative men of the country.

William S. Dickerson, the son of Ennis and Anna (Ross) Dickerson, was born February 24, 1865. in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His father was a native of Virginia, and came to this state with his parents, Andrew R. and Mahila (Dodd) Dickerson, when but a small boy. They settled in Marion township about three and one-half miles north of New Winchester. Here Andrew R. Dickerson bought a forty-acre farm which had been entered by Paul Faught, and is known as the old Dickerson homestead. Ennis Dickerson was a member of the Friends church and a farmer in this county until his death, in 1899. He was an invalid most of his life, but in spite of this affliction he was a hard worker and successful in life. His wife, Anna Ross, was a native of Kentucky and came to this county with her parents when she was a small child. She is now seventy-four years of age and is living in Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Ennis Dickerson were the parents of six children: John Calvin, deceased; William S., whose history is herein set forth; Mrs. Eva E. Hadley; James Ora; Frank O. and Ella, who died at the age of eight.

William S. Dickerson spent his boyhood days on the farm, and lived with his parents until he was twelve years of age in Marion township. They then removed to Center township, near Mill Creek, where he remained until he was nineteen years of age, returning to care for his grandmother, with whom he lived until his marriage. He moved on his present farm of fifty-three acres in 1905, and has improved his farm until it presents a very attractive appearance in every way, built fences, put up buildings and a neat country home.

Mr. Dickerson was married January 30, 1887, to Lizzie Faught, the daughter of Henry H. and Martha I. (Armstrong) Faught. H. Faught was born August 23, 1841, in this county, the son of George Washington and Annie Jane (Hayes) Faught. George Faught was reared in this township, being born in 1818, the son of Paul and Elizabeth (Liszt) Faught. Paul Faught was one of the first settlers to enter land in this county. His wife, Elizabeth, died April 26, 1860, and he died one month later, May 26, 1860. Their son, George W., lived and died in the same locality and was a farmer all of his life, dving June 26, 1880. His wife, Annie Jane, died September 4, 1874. Henry H., the son of Mrs. Faught, was married August 27, 1863, to Martha J. Armstrong, the daughter of William and Mary Ann (Ross) Armstrong. William Armstrong was born in 1818 in Shelby county, Kentucky, the son of Levi and Susan (Johnson) Armstrong. Levi was born February 27, 1791, and his wife in 1793. Levi was a son of George, born in 1763, and Sarah Armstrong, born in 1766. The Armstrong family has traced their ancestry back to a much earlier date in the state of New York. They came to Kentucky in wagons and have lived in that state for several generations. William Armstrong grew up in Kentucky and in 1837 married Mary Ann Ross, a native of Kentucky. Soon after marriage they came to Indiana and settled near New Winchester, where they lived and died. His first wife, the mother of Mrs. Faught, died in 1875. In 1876 he married Amanda Harris, and died July 15, 1800, at the age of eighty-one, having spent a very busy and useful life. After Henry H. Faught was married he moved to Edgar county, Illinois, where he remained for five years. He then came back to Marion township, Hendricks county, and located two miles north of New Winchester on a farm, which belonged to his father. After his father's death, Mr. Faught bought his brother's interest in the farm, thus becoming the owner of one hundred and twenty acres. He lived here the rest of his life, farming and trading in live stock. He was a Mason and both he and his wife were members of the Christian church, although at the time of their marriage she was a member of the Baptist church. He died March 30, 1911, after nearly half a century of married life. He was an earnest believer in the faith of the Gospel and his life was one devoted to making friends and keeping them. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Faught: George W., a clothing merchant of Indianapolis, who married Mrs. Catherine (Morris) Adams: they have one child, Cecil. Dora May, the deceased wife of John C. Himes of Ladoga. She left one son, Fred C., who was only nine months old at the time of his mother's death. He was reared by Mr. and Mrs. Faught and has been a member of the home ever since. Lizzie Etta is the wife of W. S. Dickerson and has two children, Harry B., born February 8, 1800, and Lester F., born January 26, 1805.

Harry B., the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Dickerson, married Kate Christie July 2, 1911, and is a farmer in Putnam county. Lester is still at home with his parents. Mr. Dickerson is a Democrat, but is not active in politics. His wife is a member of the Christian church at New Winchester, Indiana. Mr. Dickerson is liberal in his views and charitable to the faults of his neighbors. He has advanced ideas on farming and does not hestitate to put them into operation, with the result that he is rightly regarded as one of the representative farmers of this county.

FRED ALBERT HAYS.

The subject of this review as one of the most enterprising of our younger generation of farmers in Hendricks county, who has believed from the outset of his career that the "wisdom of yesterday is the folly of today," and that while the methods of our grandfathers in tilling the soil were all right in their day, yet in the twentieth century we are compelled to adopt new methods and farm along different lines, in view of the fact that conditions of climate, soil, grains, etc., have changed since the days of the pioneers. He has been a close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his chosen life work, and he has therefore met with encouraging success all along the line, and, judging from his past record, he will undoubtedly achieve much in the future years and take his place among the leading agriculturists of a community noted for its fine farms and adroit husbandmen.

Fred Albert Hays, the son of James and Mary (Kelley) Hays, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana, June 3, 1876. His father was born in this township March 10, 1836, the son of John and Catherine (Munday) Hays. John Hays was a native of Virginia and was a son of William and Mary Hays. When John was about eight years of age his parents moved to Mercer county, Kentucky, and there he grew up and married Catherine Munday, who was a native of Mercer county, the daughter of Woodson and Nancy Munday. In 1829 John Hays and his wife came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and entered land not far from New Winchester, where they lived, reared their family and there they both died. John Hays was a life-long farmer and owned between three and four hundred acres of land at the time of his death. James Hays, the father of Fred Albert, is one of nine children, only two others being alive at the present time, Harvey Hays, of New Winchester, and John Thomas Hays, who lives two miles southwest of Danville, in Center township.

James Hays was married twice, his first wife being Mary Kelley, a native of this county and the sister of his second wife. After his marriage on March 24, 1857, he began farming on the place where he is still living. At that time the land was heavily timbered and he had to clear off a plot of ground large enough to build his cabin, a task of no small magnitude in those days. On this farm he has built three houses, his first two having been destroyed by fire. To his first marriage there were born four children: Annie Belle, the wife of James Clark, of Danville, died in 1898, leaving three children, Mabel, Rennice and Carlos; Hattie lives south of New Winchester, where she owns a farm; Frank, who married Ida Myrtle Sears, the daughter of Jeptha and Emily (Hamrick) Sears, lives on a farm adjoining his father's place on the east. He has a farm of one hundred and twenty-seven acres; the youngest child of this first marriage is Fred Albert, whose history is herewith outlined. After the death of his first wife, in 1882, James Hays married Mrs. Margaret (Kelley) Rose in 1889, who was a sister of the first Mrs. James Hays. She is the mother of William M. Rose, of Eel River township, this county, whose history will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Fred Albert Hays spent his early days on his father's farm, and has been a tiller of the soil all his life. He moved to his present farm in March.

1902, and now has one hundred and twenty acres of land which he operates in an up-to-date manner. In addition to his general farming he makes a specialty of buying, feeding and selling cattle.

Mr. Hays was married June 2, 1901, to Emma L. Hardwick, the daughter of Warren and Nancy (Graham) Hardwick. Warren Hardwick was born September 25, 1839, in Marion township, this county. He was the son of Silas and Rhoda (Cook) Hardwick. Silas Hardwick was born about 1809, in Montgomery county, Kentucky, and moved to Shelby county, in the same state, when a child, where he remained until 1830. In 1832 he came to Hendricks county, Indiana, with his parents, Charles and Elizabeth Hardwick. Charles Hardwick entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land in Center township, Hendricks county, and one hundred and sixty acres in Marion township. Both Charles and his son, Silas, were blacksmiths and started the first shop in Danville. Silas Hardwick was an all-around mechanic, a good carpenter and an excellent cabinet-maker and in addition was a farmer of more than ordinary ability. Warren Hardwick grew up on the home farm and received his education in the old academy at Danville. He taught school for several terms in Indiana. Illinois and Iowa, and was married March 16, 1871, to Nancy G. Graham, the daughter of Young W. and Emily (Harris) Graham, Mr. Graham came from Mercer county, Kentucky, in November, 1840, and bought two hundred acres of school land in section 16, of Marion township, this county, and here his death occurred on April 22, 1846, at the age of thirty-five years. his wife surviving him for forty years, her death occurring on April 14. 1886. Warren Hardwick spent the rest of his life in Marion township, where he followed the occupation of a farmer and stock raiser. He became the owner of several fine farms and owned nine hundred acres in Marion township. Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick reared a large family of eight children, one of whom died in infancy; the other seven are still living and are as follows: Glenn; Silas; Emily L., the wife of Mr. Hays; Everett W.; Harry J.; Florence R., the wife of Fred Creech, and Bessie E. In the fall of 1907 Mr. Hardwick bought a fine residence on the Danville and North Salem road, where he lived until his death, which occurred May 6, 1000. Mrs. Hardwick and all her children except the two married daughters still reside at this home. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hays have a daughter, Irene, born May 8; 1902.

Mr. Hays is a Democrat in politics, but has never been active in the affairs of his party. He is interested in all public enterprises and takes a kindly interest in the welfare of his fellow citizens. His wife is a member of the Missionary Baptist church at New Winchester and is a woman of refinement and culture who adds grace and charm to the home. Mr. Hays is a congenial man and one who is well liked by every one. He and his wife are prominent in the best social circles of their community and still have many years of usefulness before them.

WARREN HARDWICK.

The Hardwick family have been in Hendricks county since 1832 and from the day that the first representative of the family arrived in the county until the present time they have played an important part in its history. They belong to that early group of pioneers who paved the way for the present civilization of the county and in all of these years they have always taken a leading part in promoting public enterprises which affected the weal of their community.

The Hardwicks trace their ancestry back to the latter part of the eighteenth century, the first of the family to come into this county being Charles Hardwick, who was born during the Revolutionary War. Silas, the son of Charles and Elizabeth (Crook) Harwick, was born in 1800 in Montgomery county, Kentucky, and came with his parents to this county in 1832. Charles entered one hundred and sixty acres in Center township and he and his son Silas at once opened the first blacksmith shop in the little village of Danville, Silas being an excellent mechanic, carpenter and cabinet-maker.

Silas Hardwick married Rhoda Cook and they were the parents of Warren, whose interesting career is briefly set forth here. Warren Hardwick was born September 25, 1839, on the New Maysville road in the northeastern part of Marion township. He grew to manhood on the home farm and after completing the course in the common schools of the neighborhood, he attended the old Methodist Academy in Danville. He then taught school for several years in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, and made an enviable record as a teacher.

Mr. Hardwick was married March 16, 1871, to Nancy E. Grahani, the daughter of Young W. and Emily (Harris) Graham. His wife was born in Marion township, her parents having come from Kentucky in the fall of 1840. Mr. Graham entered two hundred acres of school land in section 16 in Marion township and died on this farm on April 22, 1846, his wife surviving him until April 14, 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick have reared a family of eight children, seven of whom are still living: Glenn; Emily L., wife of Fred A. Hays, whose history is given elsewhere in this volume; Everett W.; Harry J.; Florence R., the wife of Fred Creech, whose career is presented in another part of this volume, and Bessie.

After his marriage, Mr. Hardwick retired from teaching and devoted the remainder of his life to farming and stock raising. He was very successful and at the time of his death owned several fine farms, aggregating more than nine hundred acres. In the fall of 1907 he purchased a fine residence on the Danville and North Salem pike and there his widow and all the children except the two married daughters are now living. Mr. Hardwick enjoyed his new home only two years, passing away on May 6, 1909.

Mr. Hardwick was a man of unusual power and concentration and achieved success because he was a skillful manager and a keen observer of men and conditions. His career was such that his honesty and integrity were never questioned and the result was that he was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances in the county.

GEORGE MONTGOMERY

In the year that the United States opened up its second war for independence there was born in the state of North Carolina a lad whom destiny was to make one of the pioneers of Hendricks county as well as one of its wealthiest men. North Carolina has sent its thousands into Indiana, but no one of its early emigrants made a more pronounced success in the Hoosier state than did the youngest, who uttered his first cry on July 22, 1812. On this date there was born in the old state of North Carolina George Montgomery. His father was Samuel Montgomery and he came from sturdy old colonial stock, that could handle the musket and hoe with equal facility.

The first pictures of young George were filled with the terrible struggle which was then being waged between the United States and England, and those were stirring events which were happening just one hundred years ago. The girl whom he was to marry was born in the same year that General Jackson won his famous victory at New Orleans, and when Nancy Sturman, who was his future wife, was born, on February 27, 1815, the territory of Indiana was just getting ready to apply to Congress for state-hood.

When George Montgomery and Nancy Montgomery were married they at once, if not before, began to plan to go West. It must have taken brave hearts to face a trip in those days to the plains of the Mississippi, but our grandfathers and grandmothers were never daunted by any fears. So George and Nancy talked it over with his people and her father and mother with the result that in the spring they decided to cast their fortunes in the rising state of Indiana. They induced the Sturmans to accompany them and the little party made their overland journey in the spring of 1837, arriving in Hendricks county, Indiana, when nature was at her loveliest. George and his young bride settled at Plainfield and the Sturmans located in Marion township. For seven years George worked as a farm hand for Jonathan Hadley, at the end of which time he felt able to purchase a forty-acre farm in Marion township. When they first located at Plainfield they occupied a rude log cabin with a dirt floor and a bed which was built into the wall. In this cabin their first three children were born and here was where they planned how they could buy the little farm. When they moved to the farm they put all of their possessions on a small sled and to the casual onlooker it would hardly have seemed possible that in a few years this little family would be one of the wealthiest in the whole county. But George Montgomery was a man who knew how to work and, what is more important, how to save his money. The result was that in the course of a few years he owned seven hundred and forty-five acres of land and was considered one of the wealthiest and best known men in the county. It is not every man who can start out in life with a wife, thirty-seven cents in cash and a roan horse, as did Mr. Montgomery, and accumulate over seven hundred acres of land, but that it has been and can be done is strikingly shown in his case. He and his good wife also reared a family of eight children: Julia, who died September 16, 1907, at the age of seventy-two; Jonathan, who was born October 11, 1836, and died June 6, 1851; Hannah, who was born December 31, 1839, and married Taylor Mills; James, who was born December 14, 1841, and whose life history is set forth in this volume; Harlan, who was born July 6, 1843, and is now living at Bedford, Iowa; Samuel Thomas, who was born February 12, 1846, and died June 28, 1869; Mary Jane, who was born September 17, 1848, and died August 3, 1851; and Tyra, who was born December 9, 1852, and whose history is presented elsewhere in this volume.

The mother of these children died April 8, 1881, at the age of sixty-six, and the father lived to the ripe old age of ninety-one, not passing away until October 26, 1903. They were truly good people and were a blessing to the community in which they lived so many years. The day of the log cabin is gone, the dirt floor is passed away forever, but the memory of such people as these will never die. They fought the good fight and the victory is theirs and their children and grandchildren shall always have cause to cherish their memory with filial reverence.

TYRA MONTGOMERY.

Descended from an illustrious family, one of the earliest pioneers of Hendricks county, Tyra Montgomery is an excellent type of the sturdy sons who have placed this county in the foremost ranks among the agricultural counties of the state. He has been one of the factors in the material development of his particular locality and has always been foremost in lending his encouragement to worthy causes of every kind.

Tyra Montgomery, the son of George and Nancy (Sturman) Montgomery, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, in 1852. Inasmuch as a history of George Montgomery is presented elsewhere in this volume, it is not necessary to go into detail concerning his interesting career at this place. Suffice it to say that he was one of the best known of the early pioneers of the county and a man who left a deep impress upon the county.

Tyra Montgomery received an excellent common school education and continued to reside under the parental roof until after his marriage. As a boy he was ambitious and worked his own way through the graded schools at Amo by working out and fattening hogs of his own, thus early showing a dependence upon his own efforts. At the age of twenty-three he was married to Amanda Wilson, the daughter of Peter and Delilah Wilson, and to this union there were born two children, Alice and Grace Ann.

Mr. Montgomery continued to farm until 1891, when he decided to quit farming and go on the road for the Huber Threshing Machine Company. He was in the employ of this company for the next seven years, part of the time being on the road and part of the time in their offices doing clerical work of various kinds. He is an expert penman and accountant and made a valuable man in the office for that reason. In 1898 he returned to Marion township and married Mrs. Mary Riley, the widow of William Riley, she being a native of Orange county, Indiana. She is the daughter of Mahlon and Charity (Morris) Leonard, and has one daughter by her first marriage, Nora, who has been adopted by her stepfather.

Mr. Montgomery is a stanch Democrat, but does not take an active part in the political game, preferring to devote his time and energies to his agricultural interests. He has two highly productive farms. One consists of eighty acres near the northwest part of Danville, where he has just built a modern home in a beautiful location commanding a very broad view of the country. His other farm is one of eighty acres in the northeast part of Marion township. The family are very fond of music and have several musical instruments in the house, the daughter being an accomplished musician. Mr. Montgomery is a very genial man who easily makes the stranger feel at home and is known throughout the neighborhood as a man who is charitable to the faults of others and who tries to help all those who are in distress in any way. He has a big, whole-souled heart, which makes him friends everywhere he goes.

OLIVER SAYER GOWIN.

The one of whom this narrative speaks is one of those strong, self-reliant and determined characters who are occasionally met with and who are of such a distinct type as to seem born leaders of their fellow men. Not that Mr. Gowin courts that distinction, for he is entirely unassuming, but his great force of character and his zeal and energy in whatever he undertakes naturally places him at the head of the crowd, and he has been a potent factor in the development of Hendricks county, where he has long maintained his home and where he is well known to all classes for his honorable and industrious life, both in private and public.

Oliver Sayer Gowin, the son of Steven and Eliza (Debery) (Walton) Gowin, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana, two miles from his present farm, on October 16, 1854. His father was left an orphan at a tender age, his parents, James and Mary Gowin, both dying shortly after his birth in Virginia. He was sent to Frankfort county, Kentucky, where he was reared to manhood by his uncle. Steven Gowin was twice married, his first wife being a native of Kentucky, and to this first married, riage were born twelve children, only one of whom. Iane, is living at the present time, the other eleven being as follows: Etna, James, William, Allen, Sarah, Mary, Steven Merritt, Elizabeth, Robert, John and two unnamed, who died in infancy. After his first marriage, in Kentucky, Steven Gowin moved to Ripley county, Indiana, where his first wife died, and some time after this he was married to Mrs. Eliza (Debery) Walton, and to the second marriage six children were born: Love, deceased: Emily Adeline: Oliver Saver, whose biography is set forth in this review; Alexander Campbell Buchanan: Cynthiana Ellen and Ann Eliza. While living in Ripley county, this state. Steven Gowin purchased a farm, but in 1852 he sold this place and moved to Hendricks county, where he settled in Marion township, about seven miles northwest of Danville. Here he purchased eighty acres and later added thirty acres more, and on this farm of one hundred and ten acres he lived the remainder of his life. He was a Whig in politics in the early days, and upon the dissolution of that old party, in 1852, he became a Democrat. He was a member of the Christian church at New Winchester and a man who was well known and highly respected in the community where he lived.

Oliver Sayer Gowin, the third child of his father's second marriage, was given his elementary education in the district schools of Marion township and spent his boyhood and early manhood days on his father's farm. Upon reaching his majority, in 1875, he was married to Mary E. Blanton, the daughter of John and Delilah (Ragland) Blanton. John Blanton was born in Kentucky in 1811 and came to Hendricks county with his parents when a young man. He was a farmer all his life and died in 1873. His wife was also a native of Kentucky, her birth having occurred there in 1825, and her death occurred in this county in 1907, at the advanced age of eighty-two.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Gowin have seven children: Esther Ann, the wife of Daniel Dodds, a farmer of Eel River township, in this county; Alva Porter, who married Mamie Rooker, and who lives on a farm in Marion township, this county; he has four children living and one who died in infancy. Cecil, Ollie, Jennie and Raymond; Charles, who died at the age of thirteen; Edgar M. married Emma Eggers, and is a farmer in Marion township, has one daughter, Dorothy, living, while three children died in infancy; Lilly Tessie, who became the wife of Maurice Sutherlin, who was formerly a teacher, but is now a farmer in Putnam county, this state, and they have one son, Howard; Mamie, the wife of Allen Eggers, a farmer of Putnam county, Indiana, and Clarence B., the youngest in order of birth, who is still under the parental roof.

Mr. Gowin has been a farmer since the age of ten, starting out at that early age by renting a small tract from his father and tending his crops with the enthusiasm which characterizes boys of that tender age. Upon his marriage, he rented a farm of eighty acres four miles northwest of New Winchester and remained on this farm for the first three years of his married life. He then moved to the eighty acres adjoining his present farm and lived here for twelve years, after which he moved to his former farm of eighty acres and spent the next three and one-half years there. He then returned to his other eighty acres and, after living there for about a year and a half, he moved to his present place in 1895, where he has since resided. By close attention to his business and by good management he has succeeded in accumulating a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres. He is what the world delights to honor, a self-made man, and is not at all ashamed of the fact that he started out in life with nothing.

Mr. Gowan is a Progressive Republican and is well informed upon all the political questions of the day, being a wide reader of magazines and newspapers. He has never held any office except that of township supervisor. He and his wife are members of the Christian church at New Winchester, and he has been a trustee of the church for a number of years. Mr. Gowan has managed his affairs in such a way as to keep his reputation unblemished before the world, and in his whole life of three score years in this county no act of his has ever been the occasion for censure upon the part of his fellow citizens. He has lived the quiet, unostentations life of the good American citizen and is an honor and credit to the community in which he lives

BERTRAND M. O'BRIEN, M. D.

Hendricks county, Indiana, has reason to take pride in the personnel of her corps of medical men from the earliest days in her history to the present time, and on the roll of honored names that indicates the services of distinguished citizens in this field of endeavor there is reason in reverting with gratification to that of Dr. Bertrand M. O'Brien, of Danville, who has attained eminence in his chosen profession and for a number of years has stood among the scholarly and enterprising physicians in a community long distinguished for the high order of its medical talent. He realized early that there is a purpose in life and that there is no honor not founded on worth and no respect not founded on accomplishment. His labors have been eminently worthy because they have contributed to a proper understanding of life and as problems.

Bertrand M. O'Brien, the son of John O. and Rachel (Anderson) O'Brien, was born in Putnam county, Indiana, October 5, 1880. His father was born in county Tipperary, Ireland, in May, 1810, and was the son of James O'Brien. At the age of twenty-one John O'Brien came to America and for the first four or five years worked on the steamboats on the Mississippi river. He then came to Greencastle, where he worked for three years and then moved to Hamrick Station, bought land and followed the occupation of a farmer for the remainder of his life. His wife was a native of Putnam county, this state, and a woman of great strength of character. John O'Brien became a prominent citizen of Hamrick Station and vicinity and as an indication of the esteem in which he was held by his fellow citizens it may be noted that he was elected as township trustee on two different occasions, and served with fidelity and efficiency throughout his whole term of office. He was a member of the Catholic church, while his wife adhered to the Christian church. His death occurred February 6, 1905, and his widow is still living in New Winchester, this county.

Dr. Bertrand M. O'Brien was reared on the home farm and while a youth farmed on the shares in the neighborhood in order to get money for his education. After graduating from the Manhattan high school in his county, he attended the Central Normal College at Danville. However, he was determined to obtain a medical education, and he entered, in the fall of 1800, the St. Louis College of Physicians and Surgeons, and worked his way through, graduating with honor in April, 1903. He at once began the practice of medicine at Hazelwood, in Putnam county, this state, but after a year he entered into a partnership with another physician at Filmore. This partnership continued for one year, after which he came to New Winchester on March 1, 1905, where he has since continued to reside. Here he has built up a very large and lucrative practice and is justly regarded as one of the best physicians of this section of the state. In 1913, in order to keep fully abreast of the times, he took a post-graduate course at the State University of Illinois, at Chicago. He is a wide reader of all literature bearing upon his profession and takes a deep interest in all the associations which deal with his profession.

Doctor O'Brien was married May 18, 1902, to Candace Bowman, the daughter of John M. and Sarah Bowman. Her father is a farmer in Putnam county. Doctor O'Brien and wife are the parents of two children, Berenice and Waldo. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while he and his wife are both members of the Christian church of New Winchester. The Doctor is a very genial gentleman to meet and has an ever-increasing number of friends who take delight in his success. His career is a splendid example of what can be accomplished by a determined American youth when he makes up his mind to qualify himself for any particular profession and should be a source of inspiration to others who are forced to make their own way in the world. Doctor O'Brien is just entering into the period of his life where his usefulness is increasing and in the course of time he bids fair to become one of the most valuable members of the community in which he is living.

HENRY C. RODNEY.

Among the citizens of Hendricks county who have built up comfortable homes and surrounded themselves with many of the luxuries of life, no one has attained a higher degree of success than Henry C. Rodney. His story reads like a romance, for there appears to be much of accident and the whims of fortune in his life's career. His family history goes back to France on one side and England on the other, and if his father had not been a Confederate soldier he would not be represented in this volume today. Michael Rodney, the father of Henry C. Rodney, was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, on July 4, 1845. His father was a native of England and his mother was a French woman. Michael's father was a merchant in New Orleans, and he had two brothers who were sailors, and one is still a pilot at the ietties at the mouth of the Mississippi River. Michael C. Rodney received part of his education in the common schools at New Orleans, then went to France for a year. On returning to New Orleans during the Civil War, he was immediately drafted into the Confederate army and sent to the front, and participated in the fighting around Vicksburg. Upon its surrender, he was captured and sent to Camp Morton, at Indianapolis, where he was released after eighteen months. After his release he was absolutely friendless, penniless and a mere lad less than twenty years of age. He started out to walk from Indianapolis and, going in a westerly direction, he came across J. M. Crawford, who lived southwest of Clayton on the National road. Mr. Crawford thought him a likely looking youth, took him in and gave him employment, retaining him for two or three years. Later he worked for Milo Moon on the Sprague farm. He then married Caroline Hufford, the daughter of Henry and Hulda (Snodgrass) Hufford, and after his marriage he moved to eighty acres of land in Center township, this county. About thirty-two years after he had gone into the Civil War he returned to New Orleans, where he found his mother and brothers still living, his father having died in the meantime. Mrs. Michael Rodney died July 16, 1905.

Henry C. Rodney, the eldest child of Michael C. and Caroline Rodney, was born on January 10, 1870, about three miles southeast of Danville. He was reared on the home farm and attended the neighborhood schools of his township. At the age of twenty-two he was married to Effie M., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gibbs. Mr. Gibbs was born on February 12, 1845, in Washington township, this county, and died January 15, 1905. He was the eldest son of George A. and Louisa (Hubbard) Gibbs. His father, George A. Gibbs, was born on August 2, 1822, in North Carolina, the son of Thomas and Tabitha Gibbs. In 1826 George A. Gibbs, with his parents, moved to Morgan county, Indiana, and in 1830 to Hendricks county, this state, where they settled in Washington township. George A. Gibbs was reared on this place and followed the vocation of a farmer all his life. He began life in limited circumstances, but became well to do, owning at the time of his death two hundred and seventy acres of land. He married, in 1842, Louisa Hubbard, who was born near Mobile, Alabama, in 1827, the daughter of Samuel Hubbard. She came to Washington township when she was a girl of about sixteen years of age. George Gibbs and wife were loyal and earnest members of the Methodist church and active and liberal in its support. He was interested in everything that pertained to the betterment of the community. He helped to organize the church at Bartley's Chapel, and was a leading member and superintendent of the Sunday school at that place His death occurred in the early eighties. His wife still survives him and is a sincere Christian also and is still living a quiet, unostentatious life. She is remarkably well preserved for a woman of her years, being now eightyseven years of age, and, if occasion requires, she can do the family washing, hitch up the horses or even climb into the mow and throw down the hay for the horses. Henry Gibbs grew up on the farm of his father and in July, 1863, enlisted in Company A, One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He served for six months in Tennessee and Kentucky. In 1868 he married Elizabeth Van Treese, who died October 11, 1911.

After his marriage, in 1892, Mr. Rodney began farming two miles southeast of Plainfield, and after remaining there for a year he moved to what is known as the Jordan farm, in the southeastern part of Center township, where he remained for three years, at the expiration of which time he moved to a farm one mile west of Plainfield, where he lived until 1898, when he moved to his present farm of two hundred and ten acres. However, he did not purchase all of this farm in 1898, but has added to the ninety-six and one-half acres which he bought at that time until he is now the owner of that amount of acreage. He raises all the crops common to this section of the country and also devotes considerable amount of attention to live stock.

Fraternally, Mr. Rodney is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and, with his wife, belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, to which he is a liberal contributor. They are the parents of two children, Rollie and Clifford, who are being given the best advantages for an excellent education.

Politically, Mr. Rodney is a Progressive, feeling that in the principles as laid down by that party the welfare of the country will be advanced. His career has been a busy one, and it has been no less useful than busy, since he has always been an advocate of every enterprise which has for its object the improvement of his community. Being a man of pleasing personality, he has won a large circle of friends, who esteem him for his genuine worth as a man.

ROBERT WESTERFIELD.

One of the enterprising and successful farmers of Hendricks county, Indiana, who has succeeded in his chosen vocation solely through his own courage, persistency and good management, is Robert Westerfield, of Center township, a man who believes in lending what aid he can to his neighbors and the general public while advancing his individual interests, consequently he is regarded as one of our best citizens in every respect.

Robert Westerfield, the son of Davis and Betsey (Carter) Westerfield, was born in 1855, near Keokuk, Jowa. His parents were both natives of Kentucky, his father born in Mercer county and his mother in Washington county, that state. David Westerfield was a son of James Westerfield, who was a native of New Jersey, and came to Kentucky with his parents when he was six years of age. While James Westerfield was still a small boy the Indians came to their settlement and the settlers were compelled to flee to the fort in which Daniel Boone was also a refugee, and here they stayed for six months. James Westerfield grew up near Harrodsburg, the old fort being within two hundred yards of the present court house there. It is interesting to note that the fort was built around a large spring, which is still flowing. James Westerfield became county surveyor of Mercer county, and died in that county in 1866, being one of the prominent citizens of the county. David Westerfield was reared in Kentucky and there married Betsey Carter, who was born in Washington county, near the Mercer county line. David and wife lived in Kentucky until after seven children were born, then moved to Iowa, where they settled on a farm near Keokuk, and where they remained for about two years. During their sojourn in Iowa, Robert was born. In 1855 the family returned to Kentucky, where another child was born, and where the mother died in the spring of 1857. Shortly afterwards David Westerfield married and to this second marriage two children were born, after which the second Mrs. Westerfield died and Mr. Westerfield again married and to the third marriage nine children were born.

David Westerfield, although he was a citizen of Kentucky and his father an extensive slave owner, enlisted in the Nineteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers and fought for the Union nearly four years. He was in the siege and capture of Vicksburg, and he had a son who took part in the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, which was fought only four miles from his home. Robert Westerfield was then a boy of only eight years and could distinctively hear the cannon and musketry on that memorable 8th of October, 1862. He thought it was thunder in a clear sky until he saw both armies pass their home.

When David Westerfield was married the second time in 1857, Robert, then a mere lad of fourteen, left home and went to Illinois, where he hired out to work by the month. In August, 1874, he came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and located in Liberty township, where he has lived since. He hired out as a farm hand and his entire life has been spent in agricultural pursuits. Having left his home at so early an age, he has known what it is to meet all kinds of hardships and discouragements. His father was financially broken up during the Civil War, and his grandfather, James Westerfield, who owned more than seventy slaves at the time they were freed, was also financially ruined. Robert Westerfield started life from a very small beginning, indeed, as he landed in Illinois at the age of fourteen years with only thirty cents in money, and when he came to Hendricks county in 1874 he had fifty dollars, a horse, saddle and bridle, but, being of a frugal, thrifty turn of mind, he saved his money so that he was able to get married and start to housekeeping. He bought a team and started in to farm on his own account, settling on a tract in Liberty township, this county. At the end of three years he engaged in teaming and followed this occupation for the next three years. In 1885 he began farming operations in Center township, where he lived until 1896. The year previous to that he purchased eighty acres of land southeast of Danville and in the spring of 1896 moved to this place, and in the fall of that same year his barn, crops, wagons and tools were all destroyed by fire, but, with indomitable courage and energy, he started in anew, rebuilding his barn, purchased new tools, machinery and wagons and was soon on his feet again. Within a few years he was able to purchase forty acres additional, and is now the owner of one hundred and twenty acres of fine farming land in Center township.

Politically, Mr. Westerfield is a Democrat and has always been actively interested in the deliberations of his party. During the past twenty-eight years he has been precinct committeeman every year but two, and served on election boards from the time the Australian ballot was introduced in 4883 down to the present time. He has also frequently been a delegate to the state conventions of his party. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, both subordinate and encampment.

In 1876 Mr. Westerfield was married to Elizabeth Lookebill, the daughter of Peter O. and Nancy (Faircloth) Lookebill, both natives of North Carolina, who came to this county in 1853. Mrs. Westerfield was born in Liberty township, this county, and grew up near Clayton. Her mother died at the home of Mr. Westerfield on Thanksgiving day, 1909. Mrs. Westerfield's father was a soldier in the Mexican War, and also served in the Civil War, being a member of the Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. To Mr. and Mrs. Westerfield have been born fifteen children, ten of whom are living. Of the five who are deceased, four died in infancy and Lulu was killed in a railroad accident at the age of fifteen. The ten living children are Oliver, who married Lillie Petty, and lives on the home farm with his father; he has three children, Hubert, Florence and Beulah; James William married Mrs. Nora Cornet, and lives at Brownsburg, and has one daughter, Mary Elizabeth. William has been principal of the schools at Brownsburg, and now holds the same position at Pittsboro; Amos lives at Newton, Kansas, and married Birdie Johnson, and has four children, Leo, Harold, Oral and Mary Elizabeth; Rose became the wife of Alfred Williams and lives at Racine, Wisconsin, and his three children, Leona, Alfred and Robert; Harlis married Elsie Miklesby, and also lives at Racine, Wisconsin, and has one son. Harlan: Emma married Wiley Stone and resides in Liberty township, this county; Clede is in Racine, Wisconsin, while the other children, Calla, Lilly, Robert, Melvin and Martha Ellen, are still under the parental roof.

Mr. Westerfield has ever enjoyed the respect and esteem of those who know him for his friendly manner, business ability, his interest in public affairs and upright living, and he is regarded by all as one of the substantial and public-spirited citizens of the locality.

CAREY M. HAMRICK

An enumeration of the representative citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, would be incomplete without specific mention of the well known and popular gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. A member of one of the old and highly esteemed families of the central part of the state and for many years one of the public-spirited men of affairs, he has stamped his individuality upon the community and added luster to the honorable name which he bears, having always been scrupulously honest in all his relations with his fellow men and leaving no stone unturned whereby he might benefit his own condition as well as that of his neighbors and friends, consequently he has long ago won the favor of a great number of people of Marion township, where he maintains his home.

Carey M. Hamrick, the son of William F. and Dicey (Blackburn) Hamrick, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana, July 10, 1855. A complete history of his father, William F., is given in the history of Mrs. I. A. Tinder, which may be found elsewhere in this volume. Carey M. Hamrick was reared on the home farm and was given such education as was afforded by the subscription schools of his period. Upon reaching manhood, he was married to Aggie Smith, the daughter of William and Harriett Smith, and her birth occurred on August 6, 1855, near Taylorsville, Kentucky, and came to Danville, Indiana, with her parents several years before her marriage. The one child which was born to this union died in infancy, and the wife and mother died October 29, 1890. Mr. Hamrick then married, on September 25, 1894, Florence Wheeler, the daughter of Harper and Elizabeth (Scott) Wheeler, of Clay township, this county. Harper Wheeler was the son of Elijah and Melinda Wheeler, who came from North Carolina to Clay township. Elizabeth (Scott) Wheeler grew up in Union township, this county, where her parents settled upon their arrival in this county from their native state of Pennsylvania. Mr.

and Mrs Wheeler both died when their daughter, Florence, was a small child and she was then taken into the home of Joseph Ferce, of Danville, and there reared to womanhood.

After his second marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick moved to the north-eastern part of Marion township, where they purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, on which they now reside. They have one son, Clarence, born October 26, 1895, who graduated in the spring of 1914 in the high school at North Salem. Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick are both devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Danville and are active participants in all of the various departments of their church work. Mr. Hamrick has never taken an active part in politics, or sought for public office, being essentially a domestic man of modest and retiring disposition. He is an entertaining conversationalist and often regales his younger friends with stories of the days when the old court house was being started, as well as the stirring incidents of the Civil War. He is a well read man and is well informed on all the current issues of the day. He has a large list of friends in the county who honor him for his many sterling qualities of character and apright manner of living.

DAVID A. CLEMENTS.

The biographies of successful men are instructive as guides and incentives to those whose career are yet to be acheived. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and consecutive endeavor strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish. The gentleman whose life history herewith is briefly set forth is a conspicuous example of one who has lived to good purpose and achieved a definite degree of success in the special sphere to which his talents have been devoted.

David A. Clements, the son of John N. and Mary V. (Hendron) Clements, was born in North Salem, Hendricks county, Indiana, on January 22, 1858. John N. Clements was born in Clements Valley, Kentucky, and grew up and married in that state. Mary V. Hendron was a native of Virginia. Immediately after their marriage the young bridal couple took their honeymoon trip to Putnam county, Indiana. They came through on horseback, following blazed trails, forded rivers and threaded their way through the wilderness. They located first in Putnam county, afterwards going to Boone county, this state, but after a short stay in that county, settled in Eel River township, Hendricks county, about one and one-half miles south of North

Salem, in what was then known as the Round Town neighborhood. There they started pioneer life with their rude log cabin and all that went with it. They lived here until David A. was sixteen years of age, when they moved into North Salem and spent the remainder of their lives. The panic of 1873 brought disaster to the family and the farm had to be sold. John N. Clements and two sons, John E. and George H., were in the Civil War and served throughout that fierce struggle. John N. Clements enlisted three times and was wounded twice and permanently disabled. After the panic of 1873 he recovered his finances and died in comfortable circumstances. He was a stanch Republican all his life and active in the party organization. Religiously, he was a member of the Regular Baptist church from boyhood, his father being a Baptist minister. He lived to be ninety-one years of age, his wife dying at the age of sixty-five.

David A. Clements received his education in the district schools of his township, and when he was sixteen years of age he moved with his parents to North Salem, where he completed his educational training, after which he started to learn the trade of a machinist and for fourteen years was an engineer at North Salem in a flouring mill. He was then left without a position upon the burning of the mill. He came to Indianapolis, where he worked for about sixteen months in Wasson's department store, following which he was appointed superintendent of the Hendricks county poor farm and held that position for six and one-half years, his term ending March 1, 1914. After leaving the county farm he purchased a farm near Brownsburg, where he now resides.

Mr. Clements was married September 14, 1880, to Lettie M. Waters, the daughter of Harney Waters, and to them has been born one daughter, Anna Maude, wife of U. W. Parsons, a lumber dealer of Brownsburg, and they have two children, David Vanuel and Beatrice Pauline. They also had a daughter, Maurine. who died on Christmas day, 1913, at the age of two years and seven months. Mr. and Mrs. Clements were the parents of three other daughters: Della G., who died at the age of two years; Nellie C., who died at the age of two years.

The father of Mrs. Clements was born in Kentucky December 7, 1842, and was the son of William and Julia Ann (Waters) Waters. When he was a babe in arms his parents moved to North Salem, where his father followed farming all his life. In the fall of 1862 Nathan Harney Waters married Rosena Zimmerman, the daughter of John and Nancy (Myers) Zimmerman. He was born near North Salem, his parents coming here from Kentucky. The Zimmermans were a well-known pioneer family and reared a family of fifteen children. For the past ten years Mr. Waters has been sexton of the Fairview cemetery at North Salem. He and his wite are members of the Christian church and have been married for more than a half century.

Fraternally, Mr. Clements is a member of the time-honored order of Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife both belong to the Order of the Eastern Star. Religiously, Mr. Clements and his family are loyal and consistent members of the Christian church at North Salem and are interested in all of the work of that church. They have a hospitable home and have a large number of friends and acquaintances who esteem them for their many good qualities.

WILLIAM R. BOWMAN.

Many states in the Union have contributed to the present population of Hendricks county, Indiana, but it is probable North Carolina furnished as many of the early pioneers of this county as any other state in the Union. Most of the people who came from North Carolina to Indiana in the early history of the state were members of the Friends church, who left the state of their nativity because of their opposition to slavery. When North Carolina changed her constitution in the early part of the nineteenth century, she permitted slaves to be held in that state, and as soon as the Friends found that slavery was to be tolerated they made preparations to leave the state. Wayne county, Indiana, was practically settled by North Carolina Friends, and other counties in the state received large delegations of native citizens of North Carolina. Wherever these native sons of North Carolina settled, they became prosperous and influential citizens.

Among the Friends of North Carolina who settled in Hendricks county, there is no one who has led a more highly respected and honorable career in this county than William Romulus Bowman, who was born March 22, 1850, in Guilford county, 'North Carolina. His parents were Richard and Polly Ann (Little) Bowman, natives of Guilford county, that state. Richard Bowman was a farmer in his native state and spent all of his days there. His wife was born in 1823, and died in October, 1910, in her native state. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bowman were the parents of ten children: Leroy W.; Lysandry A., deceased; Mary, deceased in infancy; William Romulus, whose history is here presented; Cornelia, deceased; Edmond, a resident of North Carolina; Martha, deceased; Rufus, of North Carolina; Victor, deceased, and Mrs. Nanna Enima Hoggins, who lives in North Carolina. Richard was a great worker in the church, as was his wife.

William R. Bowman spent his boyhood days on his father's farm in North Carolina, but upon reaching his majority he came to Henry county, Indiana, and shortly afterwards went to Rush county, this state, where he remained a year. He then removed to Hamilton county, Indiana, and three years later came to Hendricks county, where he remained for the next three years, later going to Morgan county, Indiana, where he married, after which he returned to Hendricks county in 1881 and settled on his present farm.

William R. Bowman was married on December 12, 1878, to Jane Rachel McCollum, the daughter of Joseph and Matilda (Weesner) McCollum, Joseph Milton McCollum was born April 24, 1828, in Randolph county, North Carolina, and, when a young man, came to Guilford township, Hendricks county, Indiana, where he worked for Mr. Blair and others. When he came to the county he had sixty-five cents and two suits of jeans and spent thirty cents of his capital for a Bible. He worked for a short time in this county, then went to Morgan county, where he worked two years for Mr. Weesner, and while working there he became acquainted with Mr. Weesner's daughter, and subsequently married his employer's daughter in Morgan county, and began farming for himself in that county. He bought eighty acres of land in Monroe township, that county, and by diligent effort and thrift he and his wife accumulated nearly three hundred acres before his death, which occurred on July 15, 1008, at the advanced age of eighty. Joseph Milton McCollum was a great Bible student all his life and was a prominent worker in the Friends church at West Union, Morgan county. Throughout his life in that county he was an active worker in the church and attributes his success to the fact that he was one of the tithers of his denomination. Mr. McCollum was a prosperous farmer and specialized in the raising of Poland China hogs. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Milton McCollum were the parents of nine children: Mrs. Delphiana Lawrence, who is living in Kansas; Mrs. Elnina Johnson, of Liscomb, Iowa; Mrs. Mary Page, who resides on the old home place in Morgan county, Indiana; Jane, the wife of Mr. Bowman; Louisa, deceased; John L., who lives in Michigan, and twins who died in infancy. Mrs. McCollum, now eighty-nine years of age, is living with Mr. and Mrs. Bowman. She came from her home in North Carolina to Henry county, Indiana, when a small child with her parents and soon afterwards the family came to Morgan county, Indiana, where they both died. The father lived to the advanced age of ninety, and her mother passed away at the age of sixty-six. Mrs. McCollum is now an invalid, and has been for eight years, but is kindly cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Bowman.

William R. Bowman and wife are the parents of five children: John Alfred, who died at the age of fourteen months; Urban, who married Elsie Thompson and has three children, William Harold, Blanche Maria and Richard Merlin; Urban is a farmer living in Marion county, near Bridgeport; Milton Richard, the third child of Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, married Ione Dillon; he is a skilled machinist at Bridgeport, Indiana; William Gurney died at the age of twenty years, and Jennie died in infancy.

Mr. Bowman and his wife are both faithful and loyal members of the Friends church and give to it their earnest and zealous support. Politically, Mr. Bowman is a Prohibitionist, feeling that the principles as advocated by that party, if put into effect, would insure the more rapid advancement of civilization in this country. Mr. Bowman has been a resident of this country for about forty years, and in that time has impressed his individuality upon his community. He is a man of generous impluses and a firm believer in those principles of honesty and integrity which he has always employed in his business. He is a man essentially of domestic taste and is devoted to his family and to his church, and because of the clean and wholesome life which he has lived in this county he has won the esteem of his friends and neighbors.

JAMES E. DAUGHERTY.

A farmer of Hendricks county, Indiana, who has attained to a position of influence in his community is James E. Daugherty, one of the native sons of the Hoosier state, whose life of more than three score and ten years has been spent wholly within this state, and he has been a witness of the remarkable growth which has taken place during that long period. He has always led a quiet life and during his long career he has never forsaken the soil and the independent existence which characterizes the successful farmer.

James E. Daugherty, the son of James and Mary Ann (Mills) Daugherty, was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, February 8, 1841. His parents were natives of Kentucky, and came to this state and settled in Montgomery county in 1830. His mother died on July 31, 1872, at the age of sixtysix years, and his father died at Ladoga, Indiana, on January 9, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Daugherty, Sr., reared a family of five children: Wesley W., who died March 10, 1902; Mrs. Nancy Lee Stover, who died March 12, 1908; Mrs. Catherine Bird, who died in August, 1881, and Mrs. Minerva Harshberger, who died March 12, 1906; James E., whose history is here presented.

James E. Daugherty was reared on his father's farm in Montgomery county, Indiana, and received his education in the schools of his home neighborhood. He was married May 27, 1869, to Eliza Jane McCoun, who was the daughter of John W. and Melvina (Talbott) McCoun, and born in Jackson township, Hendricks county, on August 31, 1849. To this union were born the following children: Henrietta, who married Homer Paterson and died on August 21, 1899; Edgar, a farmer in Center township; Charles, Mary and Grace, who are at home.

In the fall of the same year he was married, Mr. Daugherty bought a farm in section 31, Center township, Hendricks county, Indiana, and he proved to be a very successful farmer from the start of his agricultural career. As a result of his thrift and economy he was able to add to his possessions from time to time until he is now the owner of five hundred and fifty-six acres of well improved land in the county. In addition to his heavy farming interests, he has engaged in the buying and selling of all kinds of live stock. He raises considerable live stock himself, making a speciality of pedigreed Shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs.

Politically, Mr. Daugherty is a Democrat, while in religion the family are identified with the Christian church. Mr. Daugherty has given satisfaction as executor of several estates.

REV. PETER W. RAIDABAUGH.

There is no earthly station higher than the ministry of the Gospel, no life can be more uplifting and grander than that which is devoted to the amelioration of the human race, a life of sacrifice for the betterment of the brotherhood of man, one that is willing to cast aside all earthly crowns and laurels of praise and fame in order to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene. It is not possible to measure adequately the height, depth and breadth of such a life, for its influences continue to permeate the lives of others through successive generations, so the power it has can not be known until the "last great day when the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." One of the self-sacrificing, ardent, loyal and true spirits that has been a blessing to the race, who has left in his wake an influence that ever makes the world brighter and betters the lives of those who follow, is the Rev. Peter W. Raidabaugh, whose life forcibly illustrates what energy, integrity and a fixed purpose can accomplish when animated by noble aims and correct ideals. He has ever held the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people among whom he has labored, and his career can be very profitably studied by the ambitious youth standing at the parting of the ways.

A man who has played a large part in the work of the Friends church and its allied organizations is Peter W. Raidabaugh, of Plainfield. A man of broad scholarship, fine business ability and lofty ideals, he has long occupied a conspicuous place as a churchman and as a citizen of the community where he has resided. He was born in Lewisburg, Union county, Pennsylvania, March o. 1840, the son of Adam and Eve (Winegarden) Raidabaugh. Both of his parents were natives of Pennsylvania, his father being a plasterer and a man of more than ordinary ability. He was a prominent Mason and Odd Fellow and was an officer in the grand lodges of both orders. He had the reputation of being one of the best informed men on Masonry in the whole state. He died in the state of his nativity in 1802 and his widow survived him just ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Adam Raidabaugh were the parents of six children, all of whom are living: George P., of Baltimore, Maryland: Daniel, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania; Charles A., of Atchison, Kansas; Minerva, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania; Henry W., of Baltimore, Maryland; and Peter W., the immediate subject of this sketch.

Peter W. Raidabaugh was educated in the public schools of Lewisburg. Pennsylvania, and very early in life decided that he would make the ministry his life work. When he was only twenty years of age he began to fill the pulpit in the Evangelical Association church and at the age of thirty-two he was the presiding elder of the Lewisburg district of the Central Pennsylvania conference, of that church. He continued in the ministry until 1883, when he was elected editor of the Sunday school publications of that church. He then moved to Cleveland, Ohio, where he lived for the next ten years. In 1880, on account of a division in the Evangelical Association, resulting in two denominations, the subject did not feel clear to go with either faction and he united with the Friends church and was immediately installed as pastor of the society at Cleveland, retaining this charge for two years. The Publishing Association of Friends then put him in charge of the Sunday school and other publishing interests of the Friends church throughout the United States and Canada, and he located at Chicago. In addition, he was editor of the Christian Worker until 1894, when the paper was consolidated with the Friends Review of Philadelphia, and the two papers merged into the American Friend, the present church organ; and since that time Rev. P. W. Raidabaugh has given all of his time to the editing and publishing of the Sunday school literature of the Friends church, with his headquarters at Chicago. The business was removed to Plainfield in 1901 and remained there until 1913, when it was transferred to the Friends Bible School Board at Fairmount, Indiana. In 1904 he bought the Plainfield Progress and changed the name of the paper to the Friday Caller, and, with his son Walter as editor, the paper was a decided success. He sold the paper in 1910 to C. C. Cumberworth, but two years later he took it back again, and finally disposed of it in 1913 to Fred E. Warner, the present editor and owner.

Reverting to an earlier period in Rev. Raidabaugh's career, during the year 1885, while he was serving as Sunday school editor in the Evangelical publishing house at Cleveland, Ohio, a city election occurred, the question of closing the saloons on Sunday becoming the leading issue in connection with the election of councilmen. Rev. Raidabaugh being a resident of the twenty-third ward, the largest resident ward of the city, he was requested by a large number of citizens to stand for election to council on the Republican ticket. At the primary he was nominated over two other candidates and was subsequently elected. For two years he was active in the affairs of the city, being chairman of the committee on printing and a member of the committees on fire and water and on ordinances. His voice and vote were constantly used in favor of a higher moral tone for the city.

After the incorporation of the town of Plainfield, Rev. Raidabaugh became the first treasurer of the town, and was re-elected, serving for six years, with eminent satisfaction to his fellow citizens.

In 1889 Rev. Raidabaugh was sent as a delegate from the state of Ohio to the first world's Sunday school convention, held in the city of London, England.

Rev. P. W. Raidabaugh now finds himself out of active business for the first time since early manhood, although he is still the pastor of the Friends church at Bridgeport, Indiana, and has been in charge of that church for the past ten years.

Rev. P. W. Raidabaugh was married October 15, 1872, to Sarah W. Walter, of Union county, Pennsylvania, and to this union there have been born three children: Walter, who was a very promising young man and associated with his father in the newspaper at Plainfield, and died in 1910; Mrs. Elizabeth Newsom, of New York city, and Helen, deceased.

Rev. P. W. Raidabaugh has lived an eminently useful life. He has always been calm and dignified, never demonstrative, yet his life has been a persistent plea, both by precept and example, as well as by written and spoken word, for the purity and grandeur of right principles and the beauty and elevation of wholesome character. He has always had the greatest sympathy for his fellow men and has ever been willing to aid and encourage those who were struggling to aid themselves against adverse fate, yet in this, as in everything else, he was entirely unostentatious. To him home life has been a sacred trust and the church a sanctuary of faith, and nothing has ever been able to swerve him from the path of rectitude and honor.

WILLIAM HENRY ARNOLD.

Practical industry, wisely and vigorously applied, never fails of success. It carries a man onward and upward, brings out his individual character and acts as a powerful stimulus to the efforts of others. The greatest results in life are often attained by simple means and the exercise of the ordinary qualities of common sense and perseverance. This everyday life, with its cares, necessities and duties, affords ample opportunities for acquiring experience of the best kind and its most beaten paths provide a true worker with abundant scope for effort and improvement. The fact having been recognized early in life by the subject of this sketch, he has seized the opportunities that he encountered on the rugged hill that leads to life's lofty summit where lies the ultimate goal of success, never attained by the weak, ambitionless and inactive. Mr. Arnold is carrying on the various departments of his enterprise in Hendricks county, Indiana, with that discretion and energy which are sure to find their natural sequence in definite success, and in such a man there is particular satisfaction in offering in his life history justification for the compilation of works of this character-not necessarily that the careers of men of Mr. Arnold's type have been such as to gain them wide reputation or the admiring plaudits of men, but they have been true to the trusts reposed in them, have shown such attributes of character as entitled them to the regard of all and have been useful each in his respective sphere of action, while at the same time he has won and retained the esteem of all with whom he has come in contact as a result of his industrious and upright career.

William Henry Arnold was born on September 15, 1852, in Putnam county, this state, the son of Richard and Levina (Potts) Arnold, the former of whom was a native of Kentucky and came to Harrison county, this state, with his parents, Richard, Sr., and Rebecca Arnold, being but five years of age at that time. Richard, Sr., was born in Kentucky on March 15, 1765, and Rebecca was born in the same state in July, 1773. Their marriage took place in 1790 and Richard, Jr., was born August 1, 1805. He grew to manhood in Harrison county, this state, and was there married on November 10, 1825, to Levina Potts. His life-long vocation was that of farming and at an early date in the history of this section he came to this county, settling on what is now known as the old Bowen farm. Here he probably entered about a quarter section of government land. He was a hard working man and cleared up his land, nicely fencing it and preparing it for cultivation. He remained on this farm for several years and then sold out and moved to Arkansas. He made the trip overland in a covered wagon. but so disappointed was he with the prospects upon arriving there that he did not even unload his wagon, but after a short rest started back to the good old Hoosier state. He went to Putnam county, where he obtained a farm and where he remained for several years and reared his family. He later disposed of this property and returned to this county, taking up his residence in Franklin township. Near the close of his life he retired from active farm work and went to Stilesville to live, his death occurring there. Levina Potts, his wife, who was a Kentuckian by birth, also died at their home in Stilesville. They were the parents of fifteen children, Iacob, Beckie, Margaret, Nancy, Maria, Rebecca, Richard, Malinda, John, Vina Ann, Columbus, and an infant, all deceased. These living, besides the subject, are George and Alonzo.

William Henry Arnold spent his boyhood days in this county, coming with his parents from Putnam county when fourteen years of age. When a youth he attended the early schools of the township, acquiring the best education the opportunities of that day afforded in this community. On September 22, 1876, he was united in marriage with Sarah Cosner, daughter of John and Louisa (Rolla) Cosner. She is a native of this county, having been born at Stilesville. John Cosner was a native of North Carolina, born there on May 9, 1822, and died at Stilesville on January 31, 1893. He was a farmer all his life, a man of excellent character and ability. He was twice married, his first wife being Eliza Wicker, to whom he was united in marriage in 1846. Her death occurred on November 1, 1848, and she left one child, a son, Alfred. In 1851 John Cosner was again married this time to Louisa Rolla, and by this marriage became the father of six children. Besides Sarah, wife of the subject of this sketch, there are Miranda, Elizabeth, Leander, Lafavette and Margaret, Louisa (Rolla) Cosner was a native of Ohio, born February 16, 1834, and died at Stilesville, this state, on October 24, 1883. To the subject and his wife have been born three children, Glenn, Earle and Irvin. All his life Mr. Arnold has been engaged in farming and kindred pursuits. Shortly after his marriage he came to reside on his present farm, containing one hundred and sixty acres. is one of the best farmers of the county, progressive in all his methods. is thorough and systematic in his work, makes a careful study of his soil and determines by scientific methods what it is best adapted for and then proceeds to carry out his theories with energy and ability. The soil with which he has to deal is exceptionally fine and for the last five years he has put a great deal of thought and labor on the nursery business, devoting particular attention to fruit trees, etc. He is the originator of an excellent pear known as the "Arnold" pear, which has acquired a wide reputation and is highly advertised by nurserymen. Mr. Arnold has been highly complimented on his success in this line of endeavor by men who have devoted a life of study and experiment to the same line. In addition to this line of work, he has considerable reputation as a raiser and breeder of cattle and at all times feeds considerable stock. He is an eminently successful man and has won his enviable position through tireless endeavor and well directed energy. He is a great reader, a deep thinker, a thoroughly sound and sane man and. as may be expected, is a delightful companion.

Mr. Arnold's political affiliation is with the Democratic party in the affairs of which he takes a quiet, though keen, interest. He is too busy with his own affairs to desire public office of any sort, but at one time was induced to serve as township supervisor, which place he held for four years. Mrs. Arnold is a member of the Missionary Baptist church at Stilesville, and while Mr. Arnold is not connected with any church society, he is interested in the progress of all. The family is one of the best known and most highly respected in the county, with a strong influence for right in all phases of life. Mr. Arnold can honestly claim all the honor accorded him for what he has accomplished, for he started in life with practically nothing, but is now one of the substantial men of his community as a result of his close application to business and his persistency. He has a host of friends, for his life has been honorable in every respect.

GEORGE W. WISE.

Among the honorable and influential citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, is the subject of this brief review, who has here maintained his home for many years, winning a definite success by means of the agricultural industry, to which he has devoted his attention during the years of an active business life. His career has been without a shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil, and thus he has ever commanded the confidence and esteem of his fellow men.

George Washington Wise, the proprietor of a one-hundred-and-fifty-acre farm in Marion township, this county, was born in Granger county, Tennessee, in 1845. His parents were William and Patience (Sherrod) Wise, both of whom were natives of Wayne county, North Carolina, where they were reared, married, and spent their earlier married life, later moving to Tennessee, where they remained until their death, which occurred in 1875. George W. Wise lived in Wayne county, North Carolina, until sixteen years of age, and then went to Garrett county, Kentucky, where he had relatives, with whom he lived until he grew to manhood and married.

Mr. Wise was married in 1866 to Nancy Jane Mallicoat, the daughter of Joel and Martha (Allen) Mallicoat. George Wise and his wife were playmates when they were children in Tennessee, and the friendship which was established in those early days was broken when he moved to Kentucky, but after Nancy Mallicoat grew to young womanhood she happened to go on a visit with her brothers to Kentucky, and visited in the same neighborhood where George was working, and they again met, and the friendship which was the joy of their childhood days ripened into a deeper affection with the result that they were united in marriage before her return to her native state. Her father was a prosperous farmer in Tennessee and a man of fine character in every way. He lived to an advanced age, his death occurring in his ninety-third year on October 20, 1910, and when he passed away it was said that he did not have an enemy in the world. His wife, the mother of Nancy, died when she was only four years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Wise remained in Kentucky but five years after their marriage, and then came to Hendricks county, where they located in the eastern part of Marion township in July, 1873. In this township they have lived for the past forty years. At first they were not able to purchase a farm, having come here with practically nothing, and as a result they had to rent land, but they were industrious and frugal and managed so that they might save and have a home of their own. They first bought sixty acres of land just west of New Winchester, and from time to time added acre by acre to this until they now have one hundred and fifty acres of fine farming land, all of which is clear of encumbrances of any kind. They have done this and yet have played an important part in the material, social and moral welfare of their community. They have one son, William Henry, who was born in 1867. He married Ida Lasley, the daughter of Gabriel and Nancy Lasley, and is now living at Gonvick, Minnesota, where he is following the occupation of a farmer. He and his wife have nine children living, Clyde, Minnie, Fred, Martha, Willam, Fanny, Gertrude, Kitty V. and Ida May. Paul died when he was three and one-half years old.

Mr. Wise has lived a clean, upright and straightforward life and there is not a man who has ever had cause to question his integrity. His and his wife are loyal members of the Baptist church at Danville and are firm believers in the efficacy of church work. They have always stood for the best ideals and have always endeavored to cultivate that sweetness which is the saving grace of civilization and the benediction of mankind in general.

SAMUEL C. McCOUN.

The subject of this sketch is one of those strong, self-reliant and determined characters who are occasionally met with and who are of such a distinct type as to seem to be born leaders of their fellow men. Not that Mr. McCoun courts that distinction, for he is entirely unassuming, but his great force of character and his zeal and energy in whatever he undertakes naturally place him at the head of the crowd, and he has been a potent factor in later years in the development of his community. While still a young man, Mr. McCoun has attained a degree of success which might well be the pride of one of a far greater number of years, and which promises great things for a wider field of influence as the years go on. He is well known to all classes for his honest and industrious life, both in private and public.

Samuel C. McCoun was born on March 25, 1884, on the old homestead farm, northwest of Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana, and he is the son of John W. and Elizabeth (Carrington) McCoun. John W. McCoun was a native of the state of Kentucky, born in 1821 at Winchester, that state. When but five years of age he was brought to Indiana by his parents, James and Eliza McCoun. They first settled in Marion township, this county, where they farmed for about fifteen years. They were among the large land owners of the county and it is believed that they had entered from the government the land which they possessed. They went to Putnam county, this state, accompanied by their son, John W., and about the year 1856 moved to Missouri. There John W. remained for about a year, when he returned to Center township, this county, and farmed here until his death, in 1900, on the homestead farm. John W. McCoun was considered one of the successful farmers of his community, being very methodical and thorough in his work. Beside the attention he gave to general farming. he took great interest in his herd of Shorthorn cattle, which was truly a pride. He raised considerable stock at all times. John W. McCoun had no fraternal affiliations whatever, and in his early life had been aligned with the Whig party, later endorsing the platform of the Democratic party. He always took a keen interest in politics, but never aspired to office of any sort. For many years he was a faithful member of the Christian church and ordered his life according to the tenets of that faith. He was twice married, his first wife being Melvina Talbott, of Putnam county, by whom he had a family of seven children, namely: John T., deceased; James L., deceased; Eliza, Mrs. Daugherty; Amelia, Mrs. Williams; Robert; Anne, Mrs. Johnson; and Boone. The first Mrs. McCoun died in 1880 and his second wife was Elizabeth Carrington, by whom he had one child, the subject of this sketch. She is a native of Hendricks county, born in 1839, and makes her home on the old homestead with her son, the subject.

Samuel C. McCoun spent his boyhood days on the home farm in Center township, this county, attending the township schools, and later took a two-year agricultural course at Purdue University, at Lafayette, this state. In addition to general farming, he makes a specialty of raising and breeding Berkshire hogs, and has raised and sold many animals of value. His farm is known as the Locust Grove farm and consists of two hundred and eighty-eight acres of excellent land, having the advantage of being located close to the city of Danville. Every bit of this land is under careful cultivation and observation and in addition there are many large and substantial buildings, one large building being devoted exclusively to the raising of hogs. The farm residence is a handsome brick structure of modern design, considered one of the finest homes in the county. Mr. McCoun is a most progressive farmer and an indefatigable worker. He is considerable of a student along the line of his vocation and uses his technical knowledge to the best possible advantage. He is generous in this respect, not retaining the results of his studies for his own use alone, but being glad to be of assistance to others, and in that way he is making for himself an enviable name throughout the county.

On November 15, 1905, Mr. McCoun was united in marriage with Mabel McCoun, a native of Hendricks county, and a daughter of Edward and Alice (Steward) McCoun. To their union has been born one child, Alice.

Mr. McCoun's fraternal affiliation is with the ancient order of Freemasonry, being identified with Lodge No. 26 at Danville, and he is also a chapter member of the Order of the Eastern Star. Since attaining his majority, Mr. McCoun has been identified with the Democratic party and of later years takes the more progressive view of the leaders of that party. While not a member of any church, Mr. McCoun's religious sympathies are with the Christian church, of which his wife is a member and to whose support he contributes of his means. Mr. McCoun is a man of sterling character, quiet and unassuming in his manner, with a kindly word for his neighbors, of excellent personal habits and undoubted veracity. Needless to say, such a broad-minded and helpful man stands high in public estimation and has won to himself many who hold him in high regard.

MELVILLE C. ENSMINGER.

A community is judged largely by the lives of comparatively few of its members. Few residents of Hendricks county were as widely and favorably known as the late Melville C. Ensminger, whose life's record was finished November 11, 1901. No man stood higher in the esteem and confidence of the community in which he resided than he, and his whole life was of such a nature as to justify the statements that he was man "whom to know was to love."

Melville C. Ensminger, son of Samuel J. and Mary (McGee) Ensminger, was born November 19, 1842, on what is known as the old Ensminger homestead, northeast of Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana, and died November 11, 1901, the result of injuries received in a railroad accident, which occurred between Danville and his home. He was descended from one of the pioneer families of the county, a history of which is given in the sketch of his brother, Samuel B. Ensminger, elsewhere in this volume. He grew to manhood on the farm where he was born and reared, receiving his education in the old Danville Academy. After leaving school he taught for twelve years, and in the meantime read law for three years with Col. Christian Nave, of Danville, and was admitted to the bar, but never engaged in the active practice of the profession, spending his entire life upon the farm.

Mr. Ensminger was married December 31, 1874, to Samantha A. Lineinger, the daughter of Aaron and Margaret (Duzan) Lineinger. A sketch of the Lineinger family is given in the biographical mention of Alfred S. Lineinger, elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Ensminger was born and reared a short distance east of Danville and has lived in that neighborhood all her life. To this marriage have been born four children, three sons and one daughter, Mary, who died at the age of three months. The three sons are Julian, Aaron M. and Chesley Bailey. Julian married Esta May Smith, the daughter of William and Viola Smith, and they live four miles northeast of Danville on one of the farms which was owned by his father. The other two sons and Mrs. Ensminger live on the old home farm east of Danville. For two years after his marriage Mr. Ensminger continued to reside on the farm where he was born, at which time he moved to a farm which he inherited from his mother. From time to time he purchased more land and at the time of his death he was owner of two hundred and eighty-five acres of fine farming land. He built a fine, attractive home and had good barns and other outbuildings and all his farms were in first class shape in every particular. He carried on extensive farming and stock raising and was considered one of the most substantial farmers of the county, having farmed for many years about four hundred acres.

Mr. Ensminger was a Republican in politics all his life and actively interested in the welfare of his party. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, his father having been a Methodist minister, and he was reared in the faith of that denomination and was a liberal contributor to its support. He was a man of strong convictions, earnest, fearless and frank in his denunciation of what he considered was wrong. He was a man of strong domestic tastes, loving his family and home, and took great enjoyment in providing for his family. He was a close student and great reader, and a man whom it was a pleasure to meet. His life was well spent and affords a good example for the coming generation of the county. Aaron M. Ensminger, the son who remains on the home farm, is actively engaged in the buying and raising of shorthorn cattle and graded stock.

CHARLES P. DUNCAN.

Among the younger farmers of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have built up a comfortable home by their own efforts is Charles P. Duncan, of Liberty township, who was born June 12, 1880, on the farm where he is now living. His parents were William G. and Matilda (Barnes) Duncan. William Duncan was a native of this county, his birth having occurred on June 21, 1843, and his death occurred June 17, 1011. William Duncan was the son of Charles and Delilah (Blunk) Duncan, and he spent his entire life in this county, with the exception of four years, when he was in the Civil War. He enlisted in 1861 in Company A, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for the three-year service. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and after serving two and one-half years he re-enlisted and served until the end of the war, being mustered out in July, 1865, at Indianapolis. He was with Sherman on his famous march to the sea and took part in all those hard-fought battles and skirmishes which characterized that campaign. He was disabled and sent to the hospital on account of injuries, but recovered sufficiently to rejoin his regiment and be with them when they were mustered out. Immediately upon the close of the war William Duncan returned to this county and resumed farming. He was a prominent citizen of his township and served on the advisory board for some years. He was a member of the Christian church and a deacon in that denomination on all occasions. He was a strong believer in righteous living and upright conduct in all business affairs.

The wife of William Duncan, Matilda Barnes, was a member of one of the pioneer families of this county. Her family history appears elsewhere in this volume in the sketch of W. D. Barnes, who is a brother of Mrs. Duncan. She is still living in Hazelwood, this county.

Charles P. Duncan spent his boyhood days on the home farm southwest of Hazelwood and received his education in the district schools of his township. He has spent his whole life on the farm where he is now living with the exception of ten years he spent on a rented farm of one hundred and eight acres in Franklin township, this county. He now owns eighty acres, which includes the old farm, and is bringing the farm to a high state of cultivation by his skillful system of crop rotation. After leaving Franklin township, this county, he bought sixteen acres north of his present farm, but sold this in the fall of 1913 before moving to where he now resides.

Mr. Duncan was married March 31, 1902, to Nida Skaggs, a daughter of Lee and Anna (Kavanus) Skaggs. Lee Skaggs was born in Tennessee, and his wife was a native of Liberty township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Skaggs are now living at Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are the parents of five children, Ollan, who died at the age of five years, Lloyd, Chrystine. Pauline and Kathryn Dee.

Mr. Duncan is an active Republican, but has never been identified as an aspirant for any public office. He and his wife are members of the Church of Christ at Hazelwood, and both take an active part in the affairs of their church. Mr. Duncan is a quiet, unassuming man, with a friendly disposition. Because of his high character he is respected by every one with whom he has been associated. He and his wife are the owners of a beautiful home, where they entertan their many friends with genuine hospitality.

WILLIAM S. ELMORE.

Hendricks county is widely known for its beautiful homes, rich, fertile farms, the high state of cultivation to which its land has been brought, and, above all, for the very active, progressive farmers who reside within her borders. These are business men in the best sense of the word—men who work with their hands to produce sustenance for their fellow men, as well as their own immediate families, yet guided by an active intelligence which lifts their toil above drudgery and places them in the front rank of our independent, prominent citizens. In this admirable class of clean-cut, broadminded men, few are better known throughout the county than the subject of our present sketch. Born in Franklin township, he has been ready to grasp the opportunities which lay nearest him, and by his unremitting energy has given to the world a large family of useful citizens and amassed for himself a competence.

William S. Elmore, son of John and Mary (Wood) Elmore, was born October 23, 1864, and received his education in the schools of Franklin township. Here his youth was spent, living near to nature and learning from his father many of the principles of the science of agriculture; and that he has continued to study and put into practice these principles and theories is evidenced by his success as a farmer.

On the 20th day of March, 1887, he was married to Ollie Tharp, a native of Center township, this county, a daughter of Joshua Tharp and wife; and after seven years of residence in the environment of his youth, he brought his family to Middle township and there purchased his present home, a beautiful, productive, well-kept farm of eighty acres. Nine children have been born to them, as follows: Mabel (Mrs. Sparks), Cecil (who died in infancy), Roy, Gladys, Ova, Jesse, Byron, Charles and Robert.

The father of the subject, John Elmore, is also one of the well known citizens of the county. One of the early pioneers, he has watched with pleasure the changes and improvements which have come to the surrounding country, and now, in his declining years, after a long and fruitful life, he is spending his days "beneath his own vine and fig tree," the homestead where his family has been reared. Finding his greatest happiness in the independent life of the farm, he has spent his days tilling the soil, living near to the heart of Mother Nature and rearing a large family to perpetuate his name and principles, and revere his memory in the future.

John Elmore was born March 11, 1832, in Monroe county, coming to Hendricks county with his parents, Samuel and Elizabeth Elmore, in 1834, while he was yet a child. They made their permanent home in Franklin township, where they entered land from the government. There John Elmore grew up amid pioneer surroundings, later, however, purchasing a tract of land in Union township, where he has since remained. In the year 1853 he was married to Mary Wood, who was also a native of this state. Six children were born to them, Jerry, Moses, William S., Martha (Warren), Minnie (Montgomery) and Emaline (Foxworthy). In the year 1877 the faithful wife and mother passed away. About two years later he was married to Fanny Elmore, of Kentucky, and to them one child was born, a daughter, Elizabeth, now Mrs. Woodward. Mrs. Elmore died in July, 1012. Mr. Elmore has been a home-loving man, devoting his time to the family, which has carried his influence abroad; but he has also been interested in the various movements for the good of the community which have taken place during his long residence. A stanch Democrat, he has adhered strictly to the principles of his party, active in promulgating the principles of true Democracy at all times, and now happy in its supremacy. His son William. like his father, is a firm believer in the teachings of Jefferson, and has consistently voted the Democratic ticket. Fraternally, William is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Pittsboro, and, with his wife and four of his children, is a member of the Christian church of that place, Personally, the subject of this sketch is genial, broad minded and well informed, a man who holds the confidence of the community at large. Mrs. Elmore, who has been his best friend and most helpful ally in all his undertakings, has a charming personality and is widely known and greatly admired among the young people of the community, many of whom have enjoyed her hospitality. Taking a deep interest in the social, as well as the spiritual life of the church to which she is devoted, she is indeed a worthy helpmate for a prominent citizen.

ROBERT E. PARKER.

Middle township, Hendricks county, has been especially honored in the character and career of Robert E. Parker, who, in the face of obstacles that would have discouraged and defeated many another, has forged his way to the front by a strong inherent force and well directed intelligence and judgment and who for many years has ranked among the substantial and prominent men of this locality, few having occupied a more honored place in the estimation of his fellow citizens than he. He is a man of public spirit, who, while laboring for his individual advancement, has never neglected his broader duties to the public in general, and his character has been exemplary in all the relations of life.

Robert E. Parker, the son of William G. and Martha (Wells) Parker. was born in Pittsboro, Indiana, in 1863. William Parker was a native of Kentucky and when a small boy came to this county with his parents. Upon reaching manhood he remained on the farm for a time and later engaged in the mercantile business in Pittsboro for a number of years. During the war he bought and shipped mules for the government and throughout his whole life he was interested in the buying and selling of stock. In 1872 William Parker moved to Indianapolis, but four years later moved back to Pittsboro, where he remained until his death, January 8, 1877. While he was primarily interested in business ventures of one kind and another, he was, nevertheless, greatly interested in politics and always took a prominent part in the affairs of his community. He was trustee of his township for eight years and was always active in Republican politics. Mrs. William Parker was born in North Carolina and came in a wagon to this county with her parents when she was a small girl. She is still living in Pittsboro. Mr. and Mrs. William Parker reared a family of nine children: Mrs. Mary E. Lewis; Loyd; Wilson; Jennie, deceased; Robert E., whose history is herein presented; William; Ruth, deceased, and two who died in infancy.

Robert E. Parker received his education in the school of Pittsboro and Indianapolis, a part of the time in Indianapolis, while his parents were living there from 1872 to 1876, and later in Pittsboro. Upon the death of his father in 1877, he went on to the home farm, where he has resided since. In addition to his general farming, he also raises hogs and good road horses, which he finds a very successful and lucrative part of his farming.

Mr. Parker was married August 21, 1890, to Mary E. Dillon, a native of Middle township, daughter of Luke and Julia (Ashby) Dillon, and to this marriage were born three children, Chester, Margaret, deceased, and Edgar. On January 22, 1905, Mr. Parker was married to Cora Keeney, the daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Bursott) Keeney. Charles Keeney is a native of Montgomery county, Indiana, and now lives with his son-in-law, Mr. Parker. He owns a farm in Raintown. Mrs. Keeney was a native of Kentucky and died in 1909. Mr. and Mrs. Keeney had eight children: Mrs. Sarah J. Money, David D., Mrs. Olive Ann Ellis, Cora (the wife of Mr. Parker), Orin F., George, and two who died in infancy.

Mr. Parker takes a keen interest in politics and has been identified with the Republican party since he was able to cast his first ballot. He has never been tempted to make the race for any office, being content to devote his time to his agricultural interests. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and is a devout member of the Christian church, in which he has been a deacon for many years. Mrs. Parker is a member of the Baptist church. His earnest labors and honest dealings with his fellow men have resulted in a large measure of success in a material way, and at the same time he has won the confidence and admiration of his neighbors and fellow men.

CHARLES EVERETT KESLER.

The prosperity of a town depends in large measure upon the activity and aggressiveness of its business men, and Pittsboro, in this respect, is to be congratulated upon the progressive, energetic spirit shown by her merchants. Among these few, if any, are more widely known throughout the district nor more highly respected than the man who supplies the hardware, tools and farming implements of various kinds used in the surrounding country.

Charles Everett Kesler, the leading hardware dealer of this place, was born April 7, 1881, on a farm near Danville, Hendricks county. He is truly a son of the county, both parents, John C. and Sarah (Pierson) Kesler, being also native to the place. Here they both spent their childhood and youth, receiving their schooling in the township schools; both trained to the free, natural life of the farm, finding not only their work but their pleasure also in compelling the good earth to yield her abundance for the sustenance of themselves and their family. Congenial in their tastes, both were content to remain in the home of their childhood and youth until, in 1908, they were separated by the death of the faithful wife. Five children were born to them, as follows: Nettie (Dinsmore), deceased; Myrtle (Woods); Novella; Ernest, deceased also; and Charles Everett, the subject of this article.

Charles Everett Kesler was married October 11, 1900, to Lucena Dinsmore, daughter of William Frank and Rachel (Holmes) Dinsmore. Two sons have come to them to brighten their home. Floyd Eugene and Harrold Glenn. Mrs. Kesler was born and reared in Boone county, as were also both her parents, who are still residing in that place, being well known and generally respected. Mr. Dinsmore is the holder of eighty acres of well cultivated, productive land, and by his industry, thrift and intelligent management of this farm, together with the never failing assistance of his faithful helpmate, he reared a large family and laid up for his declining years a competence. Fourteen children have been born to them: Jacob, Eliza (Ragsdale). John. Charity (Bailiff), Mary (Linton), Dora (Griggs), Marion, Della (Wiley), Lucena (Kesler), Artie, and four others whom death has claimed, two of them in infancy.

Mr. Kesler spent his boyhood days upon the farm with his father, receiving his elementary education in the township school and later attending the high school of Pittsboro. Here he remained until his marriage, when he left the farm and entered the grocery business at New Ross. After two years in this place, he sold the grocery and spent a year at Advance as proprietor of a livery barn. Disposing of this, he returned to Pittsboro, continuing in the livery business, however, for two years more. Following this, he was owner of a restaurant for a year, after which he acquired his present thriving establishment. His varied experiences in the business world and his wide acquaintance throughout the county have proven vauable assets in this field, and his genial manner and shrewd business acumen have been large factors in its upbuilding. Hence, after five years as an active, energetic dealer in hardware and implements, we find him crowned with success in business, the possessor of hosts of friends and enjoying to the fullest the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

However, his activities have not been confined solely to the upbuilding of his financial success, for he is interested in several fraternal orders, being a member of the Knights of Pythias at Brownsburg; the Red Men at Advance, and the Haymakers. He is affiliated with the Republican party and is a strong advocate of its doctrines, and, while not a member of any church, is in sympathy with the Baptist church of Pittsboro, where his wife is a member.

GEORGE D. JUNKEN.

That life is the most commendable that results in the greatest good to the greatest number, and of the thousands of occupations which are open to the citizens of the United States today, there is no one in which there is a better chance to help mankind than in the profession of teaching. It is not necessary that one have a college education, a fine brick building and a well stocked library in order to make a successful teacher. What is essential is that natural sympathy and tact which always characterizes the most successful teachers. In the record of George D. Junken, of Hendricks county, we have the life history of a man who has spent thirty-five years of the best part of his life instructing the youths of his county, and during all of those years he has tried to instill the right principles, aim and ideals into his pupils. His actions have always been the result of careful, conscientious thought, and, once convinced that he is right, no suggestion of policy or personal profit could swerve him from the course on which he had decided.

George D. Junken, who is now living retired at Pittsboro, this county, was born in Middle township November 8, 1850. His parents were David A. and Margaret (Danner) Junken. David A. Junken was born December 24, 1825, in Wayne county, Indiana, and lived there until his marriage. He and the girl whom he had selected for his wife added to the gaiety of the country in 1847 by being married on July 4th of that year, and immediately after the ceremony mounted their horses and took their honeymoon trip through the dense forests and along the blazed trails to this state, and after a short time in Rush county, they settled in Middle township, this county. David's father had been here before this time and had entered about twelve hundred acres for his children near Pittsboro, so that the young bridal couple already had a farm to settle upon when they reached their destination. David was a blacksmith and a mechanic of more than ordinary ability and followed this trade in Pittsboro for the first fifteen years after coming to this county. He then went onto the farm and continued to farm until 1883, when he went into the hardware and grocery business at Pittsboro. Eight years later he sold out a successful business and retired from active life. He built the fine brick business block where his store was established. He had commenced in a rented brick building, which burned down two years after he went in business, and then he built the brick building which is still standing in Pittsboro. About two years after he sold out the store he went blind, but suffered his terrible affliction patiently until the end. He died March 18, 1907, and his wife two years later. Both of them were consistent and devoted members of the Christian church and he was a member of the Masonic order. Mr. and Mrs. David Junken reared a family of seven children: James, who died in infancy, George D., Joseph M., William N., Oliver P., Alonzo Frank, and one who died in infancy.

George D. Junken spent his boyhood days in Middle township and received his education in the township and high school at Brownsburg. Later he began teaching in 1870 and for the next thirty-three years taught in Middle and Brown townships, teaching his last year in 1905. During this long service in the school room, he taught the children of some of the children who had gone to him in his earlier years of teaching.

For the past eight years he has done the assessing and gathering of statistics of his township, and knows his township most thoroughly. Probably he could describe every piece of land from memory, and tell the owners thereof. His work was said by the county board to be the most accurate, and his records kept the best, of any assessment records in the county.

Mr. Junken is a member of Pittsboro Lodge No. 620, Free and Accepted Masons, and of Danville Chapter No. 46, Royal Arch Masons, and has been a life-long Republican, although, due to the nature of his profession, he has never taken an active interest in politics. He and his wife are both members of the Christian church at Pittsboro and he has been an elder in the church for the past twenty years. He has often been called on to conduct the services at funerals, knows the people thoroughly, and for years past has written the obituaries of most of those who have died in his community.

Mr. Junken was married October 24, 1875, to Sallie J. Waters, and to this union have been born two children, Mrs. Gertrude Goebel and Mrs. Lutie J. Worrell. Mr. Junken is a quiet, unassuming man and no one in the township has a higher standing in every way than he. His influence has always been cast in favor of all worthy enterprises and measures, and everything which he has done has been directed toward the betterment of his community.

JAMES MALREY LEAK.

A half century ago, more than two hundred thousand of Indiana's young men, strong and active in body, exulting in their young manhood, offered themselves for their country's service, and of these many thousands who went from Indiana there are today but few left and these few are old men who have long ago passed their meridian and are now looking eagerly forward to the time when they will answer the last roll call. The soldiers who fought so bravely in the Civil War soon will all have passed to another world, but so long as this nation shall endure, their memory will be revered high above other men. Hendricks county sent many brave young men to the front, but no man fought more valiantly than James M. Leak, who, through four long years of hard service, participated in some of the bloodiest battles of the war. Although he was twice wounded before his four years' enlistment was up, yet such was his courage and patriotism that he re-enlisted in February, 1865, as a substitute and served until his final discharge at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1865,

James Malrey Leak, a distinguished veteran of the Civil War and one of Hendricks county's best loved citizens, was born October 20, 1841, in Bracken county, Kentucky. His parents were Louis and Elizabeth Leak, who were both natives of Kentucky. Louis Leak was born in Kentucky in 1808, grew to manhood and was married there before coming to this county. Early in the history of this county he and his family entered eighty acres in Union township, north of Lizton, where he farmed until his death. He was a public-spirited citizen and was township trustee for several terms. He and his wife were both members of the Christian church. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Leak were the parents of nine children: Mrs. Susan Jane Runnels, who died in 1859; David V., who married Julia Ann Waters and died September 4, 1912; Belle, deceased, the wife of Allen Hayden; John Robert, deceased; James Malrey, whose career is herein set forth; Francis Marion, born January 15, 1843, and died in April, 1903; William M., of Missouri, died in 1911; Nancy Ann, of Danville, the wife of Allen Bell, and Minerva, who was the wife of Woodson Bell, died in 1867.

James Malrey Leak grew to manhood on the old home farm and when twenty years of age enlisted for service under his country's flag. He was mustered into Company H, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for three years, in August, 1861, and was first assigned to the Army of the West, but later transferred to the East and his regiment was made a part of the Army of the Potomac. While serving in Virginia he was twice wounded in battle, first at Fairfax Gap and later at Spotsylvania Court House. At Louisville, Kentucky, at the end of his three years' enlistment, he re-enlisted in February, 1865, as a substitute for a man who was drafted in this county. While acting as a substitute, he received five hundred dollars in money and a deed for forty acres of land in Union township. He was finally mustered out August 27, 1865, at Louisville. Kentucky, after having seen four years of service in the midst of the bloodiest civil war which has ever happened in the history of the world.

Immediately after his discharge, Mr. Leak returned to this county and commenced farming in Union township. He was married August 6, 1865, to Mary Dickey, who died November 9, 1872, leaving one daughter, Vada. Vada married John A. Leak, whose history is delineated elsewhere in this volume. James M. Leak was married a second time to Margaret (Davidson) Winters, who died February 15, 1899. There were two children born to this second marriage, Eva, who died December 24, 1887, and Omer, a farmer of this township, who married Bessie Walter, having one daughter, Lurene. After the death of his second wife, Mr. Leak was married to Mrs. Frances (Gott) Hedge.

Mr. Leak continued in active service on the farm until December, 1905, when he retired from the farm and moved to Lizton. Politically, Mr. Leak is a Republican of the progressive type, and has been voting the Republican ticket ever since the days of Abraham Lincoln. While he has always taken an intelligent interest in politics, he has never been a seeker after political preferments. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Lizton. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and he is a deacon in that denomination. He is a man who is always willing to help those in distress and has lived a life of a quiet, unostentatious farmer ever since the day he returned from the battle field of the sixties. He is an ideal citizen in every respect and is highly honored and respected by every one in the community.

CHESTER ALVIN WEAVER.

It is generally considered by those in the habit of superficial thinking that the history of so-called great men only is worthy of preservation and that little merit exists among the masses to call forth the praises of the historian or the cheers and the appreciation of mankind. A greater mistake was never made. No man is great in all things. Many by a lucky stroke achieve lasting fame who before that had no reputation beyond the limits of their immediate neighborhoods. It is not a history of the lucky stroke which benefits humanity most, but the long study and effort which made the lucky stroke possible. It is the preliminary work, the method, that serves as a guide for the success of others. Among those in Monroe county who have achieved success along steady lines of action is the subject of this sketch.

Chester Alvin Weaver, former merchant of Pittsboro and now one of the leading farmers of Middle township, was born in Pittsboro, Indiana, December 7, 1867. He is the son of Amos C. and Marian (Wills) Weaver. Amos Weaver is also a native of this township and is now living retired in Indianapolis. He formerly operated a drug store at Pittsboro for five years, afterwards he built a store building and engaged in the dry-goods business in 1872. continuing this for the next thirty years. Mrs. Amos C. Weaver was also a native of this county and is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Amos Weaver are the parents of five children, Hollis, Chester Alvin, Mrs. Grace Wood, Urban and Mrs. Francis Kyle.

Chester Alvin Weaver received his early education in the Pittsboro chools. Upon reaching his maturity he went into his father's store. In 1887 his father sold out to his sons and they continued to operate the store for the next ten years. In 1897 Chester Alvin bought out the interest of his brothers and managed the store himself until 1905, continued to live in Pittsboro three years after selling the store and then bought a farm or one hundred and sixty acres, one mile northeast of Pittsboro, where he is now residing. He handles a great deal of stock, buying and selling all the time. He also makes a specialty of raising chickens and turkeys, and has his farm improved in such a way as to net him the largest maximum income annually. While he was prosperous as a business man, he is no less successful in the agricultural field, and is rapidly forging to the front as one of the leading farmers of the township.

Mr. Weaver was married September 16, 1897, to Nell Dillon, the daughter of Luke and Julia (Ashby) Dillon. Luke Dillon, a native of Kentucky, and a Union soldier, came to this county immediately after the war and settled in Middle township about one and one-half miles west of Pittsboro. He dealt a great deal in real estate. He returned to Hillsboro, Kentucky, about 1900, where he is still living. Mrs. Dillon was also a native of Kentucky, and died in 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Dillon were the parents of nine children: Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Parker, deceased; Edwin; Nellie, the wife of Mr. Weaver; Thomas L.; Mrs. Daise Buergelin; Mrs. Margaret Leachman; Mrs. Emma Biggs; Mrs. Lora Duntington and Mrs. Ruth Pavey. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have a daughter, Frances, and a son, Marvin.

Mr. Weaver is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias. Owing to the nature of his business he has never taken an active part in politics, although he now takes more interest in public affairs than ever before. He is a member of the new Progressive party and believes in the principles which are advocated by the leaders of this party. He and his family are members of the Christian church, to which they give freely of their means. Mr. Weaver is a farmer who has gone into this profession simply because he likes it and enjoys the life which is the lot of the farmer. He is a man of excellent judgment, good business discrimination and one who is thoroughly honest and upright in all of his dealings. In his county he represents the Home, Hartford and Phoenix fire insurance companies and does a large amount of business throughout the county. #### CALVIN WARRICK.

As a farmer, public official, soldier or private citizen, Calvin Warrick was always true to himself and his fellow men, and the tongue of calumny has never touched him. As a soldier he proved his loyalty to the government he loved so well on the long and tiresome marches in all kinds of situations, on the tented field and amid the flame and smoke of battle, where the rattle of the musketry, mingled with the terrible concussion of the bursting shell and the deep diapason of the cannon's roar, made up the awful chorus of death. To such as he the country is under a debt of gratitude which it can not repay and in centuries yet to be posterity will commemorate their chivalry in fitting eulogy and tell their deeds in story and in song.

Calvin Warrick, a distinguished veteran of the Civil War and a prosperous farmer of Middle township, was born in Rush county, Indiana, October 19, 1840. His parents were Edward H. and Ruth (Whiteman) Warrick. Edward Warrick was a native of Delaware and a school teacher in his young days, and taught in Rush county before moving to Hendricks county. He came to this county when Calvin was about four years of age and bought eighty acres two miles north of Brownsburg, which he farmed until 1858. He then sold it and made a prospecting trip through the West, but decided that Indiana was good enough for him, and returned to Hendricks county where he bought two hundred acres in Middle township. He lived on this farm until his death. October 30, 1864. Mrs. Edward Warrick was a native of Virginia and died in Nebraska in December, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Warrick were the parents of eight children: Samuel, who died in 1912, Mrs. Ann Crawford, Calvin, Amos, Mrs. Esther E. Hale, Mrs. Mary Jane Job, Mrs. Harriet Talbott, and Mrs Madora Towell.

Calvin Warrick was given a good education under the tutelage of his father and grew to manhood on the farm in this county, with the exception of a year or so spent in the West. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, on September 14, 1861, in Company B, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. His regiment was attached to the Army of the Potomac and he participated in all of the engagements in which his regiment participated, and was mustered out December 20, 1864.

On December 14th of the same year Mr. Warrick was married to Evaline Smith, the daughter of Joel and Susan Smith. Joel Smith was a native of Kentucky, as was his wife, and after their marriage they came to this county and entered two hundred acres near Brownsburg, where they lived until their deaths. He died in 1863 and she seven years later. Mr. and Mrs. Joel Smith were the parents of eleven children: William Jackson; Benjamin Thomas; Mrs. Almanda Rupp; Mrs. Nancy Susan Wells; Levi; Alfred. deceased; America; Lucinda, deceased; Evaline, the wife of Mr. Warrick; Mrs. Henrietta Ward and Mrs. Mary Ann Hughes. Mr. and Mrs. Warrick have five children, all of whom are living, Shiles M., William E., Oliver C., Edward H. and Mary May. Mary May married Fred Parker, who farmed a part of Mr. Warrick's farm.

Mr. Warrick has farmed in this county since he was sixteen years of age, with the exception of the four years which he spent in the war. When a boy he had to walk two miles to school and incidentally had to perform all of those chores which the boys of his day had to perform each day. In addition to his general farming he has always handled a great deal of live stock, especially cattle. He always kept a high-class grade of shorthorn cattle.

Mr. Warrick is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Free and Accepted Masons at Pittsboro. He has been a life-long Republican, and was old enough to cast his first vote for the second election of Lincoln in 1864. At the close of the war he served two years as assessor of Middle township and at one time made a strong race for nomination for county auditor. As a rule, however, he has never taken an active interest in politics generally, preferring to devote his energies to his agricultural affairs. Mr. and Mrs. Warrick are both members of the Baptist church and contribute generously to its support. He is a keen business man, un-assuming in manner and a good friend who is always glad to help any one in distress.

FRANCIS H. HALL.

The character of a community is determined largely by the lives of a comparatively few of its members. If its moral and intellectual status be good, if in a social way it is a pleasant place in which to reside, if its reputation for the integrity of its citizens has extended to other localities, it will be found that the standards set by the leading men have been high and their influence such as to mold their characters and shape the lives of those with whom they mingle. In placing the subject of this sketch in the front rank of such men, justice is rendered a biographical fact universally recognized throughout Hendricks county by those at all familiar with his history. Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, he has contributed much to the material advancement of the community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart and the straightforward, upright course of his daily life have tended greatly to the moral standing of the circles in which he moves and given him a reputation for integrity and correct conduct such as few achieve.

Francis H. Hall was born in Canfield, Ohio, January 28, 1839. His parents were Solomon and Maria (Austin) Hall, his father being a native of New York state and his mother of Connecticut. Solomon Hall was a carder and fuller by trade and, when a young man, came west and settled in Ohio, where he married. In 1849 he went to Iowa with his family, when Francis H. was about eleven years of age. He remained in Iowa about three years, when he returned to the east, settling in Wells county, Indiana. After a three years' residence in that county, he removed to Danville in the spring of 1856, and subsequently moved to Needmore, about five miles west of Danville. A few years later he moved to Groveland, in Putnam county, Indiana, where he engaged in the mercantile business, and there he spent the remainder of his life, death occurring at the age of eighty-two years. Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Hall were the parents of nine children, five of whom are still living: Mrs. Ella Dooley, who is living in California; Mrs. Sarah J. Blatchley, of Putnam county, Indiana; Chester F., of Danville; Seldon, of Alexandria, Indiana, and Francis H., of whom this is written.

Francis H. Hall received his education in three different states, Ohio, Iowa and Indiana, and, being a youth of observing mind, he acquired no inconsiderable education from the extensive journeys made by his parents back and forth across the Mississippi valley. At the opening of the Civil war in 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served three years and nineteen days with the Union army. He was with General Grant at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Iuka and was in the terrific siege of Vicksburg in 1863. He was a participant in the battle of Champion's Hill, Mississippi, which history has recorded as the bloodiest battle of the whole struggle. He was with General Banks on his campaign in Arkansas and Oklahoma, being in the ordnance department at that time. He proved a valiant and courageous soldier and served faithfully in all the engagements in which his regiment was a participant. After the close of the war he returned to Putnam county. Indiana, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and began to make a specialty of fine cattle to feed for the markets. He claims to be the oldest cattle feeder in Hendricks county. having fed a bunch of cattle each year for the market for the past forty-three years without missing a single year. In 1897 he came to Danville to spend the remainder of his days, but he still keeps in close touch with his farm in Putnam county, on which his son is now residing. In addition to his farming and stock raising interests, Mr. Hall is president of the Danville State Bank, and is now serving his second term in that capacity.

Mr. Hall was married in 1866 to Rebecca Keith, and to this union has been born one son. Owen Hall, who manages his father's farm in Putnam county and also has a farm of his own adjoining his father's. Mr. and Mrs. Hall had one son, Homer S., who died at the age of thirty-four in Monrovia, California. He was a brilliant and promising young man, a graduate of Depauw and Leland Stanford Universities, and was building up a fine reputation as a civil engineer.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall are devoted and consistent members, he of the Presbyterian and she of the Methodist church at Danville and contribute generously of their means to these societies. Mr. Hall has been voting the Republican ticket for more than fifty years and, although he has been active in the councils of his party, he has never been a candidate for public office. Mr. Hall has always been a man of high civic ideals and a warm and sympathetic supporter of all measures and enterprises tending to advance the general welfare of the community. He was truly the architect of his own fortune, and upon his entire career there rests no blemish, for he has always been true to the highest ideals and principles in business, moral and social life and has been one of the world's noble army of workers, having lived and labored to worthy ends.

JOSEPH FLEECE CLAY.

One of the most distinguished families which has come to the United States from Scotland is the Clay family. Their descendants are now found scattered throughout the United States. Among the most distinguished members of this family may be mentioned Henry and Cassius M. Clay, of Kentucky, men who were leaders in national life when they were in the height of their career. One of the members of this family who was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, and has brought honor on the county of his birth is Joseph Fleece Clay, who was formerly a sheriff of Marion county, but now a resident of Putnam county, Indiana.

Joseph F. Clay, the son of James Henry and Susan (Fleece) Clay, was born in Hendricks county September 1, 1865. His father was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, January 20, 1819, the son of Littleberry and Arabella (McCoun) Clay. James H. Clay and Susan Fleece were married July 29, 1841, their marriage taking place shortly after his parents arrived in this county. Littleberry Clay and his family came to this county in 1840 and purchased a section of land in Eel River township. After living in this county a few years Littleberry Clay and part of his family went to Missouri, but James H. remained in this county the remainder of his days. Susan Fleece was born in Boyle county, Kentucky, near Danville, and came to Hamilton county with her parents. Charles Fleece and wife, in the early history of the county. Her parents entered land west of North Salem, near Eel river.

James H. Clay followed the vocation of a farmer all his life. During the forty years of his residence in this county he was one of the prominent and influential citizens. At one time he owned nearly a section of land, but before his death he divided it among his children, nine of whom grew to maturity: Mrs. Arabella Waters; Mrs. Mary Catherine Rose; Samuel C.; Mrs. Sallie Rogers, of Amo; James A., of Indianapolis; J. C., whose history is found elsewhere in this volume; Nicholas, deceased; Arthur E., of Indianapolis; Joseph F., whose history is here recorded, and one daughter, Lillie, who died in infancy.

Joseph F. Clay was educated in the common schools of Eel River township and later attended the graded school at North Salem. Early in life he decided to follow the vocation which had brought such pronounced success to his father. After his marriage he began to farm and at the same time devote a great deal of attention to the raising of stock. In fact, he soon found that there was more money in the raising of stock than in the raising of grain, and within a few years left the farm and moved to Indianapolis, where he engaged in the live stock business in connection with Messrs, Stockton & Gillespie, the firm being known as Stockton, Gillespie, Clay & Company. He was connected with this company for the next thirteen years, and left it to take the office of sheriff of Marion county, to which he was elected in the fall of 1906. He served one term and then returned to his farm in Jackson township. Putnam county, where he is the owner of four hundred and seventy acres of fine farming land. He is now engaged in farming and stock breeding, paying most of his attention to stock.

Mr. Clay was married February 15, 1888, to Olive Thomas, daughter of John H. and Mary (Davidson) Thomas. John H. Thomas was a life-long farmer of Putnam county, this state, dying in that county at the age of seventy-three in 1903. To Mr. and Mrs. Clay has been born one daughter, Eula, the wife of Armin Krutzsh, who is now living on the farm of Mr. Clay. Mrs. Clay died March 11, 1911.

Mr. Clay has been an active Republican in politics and has been influential in the councils of his party. His worth as a citizen and his ability as a man is shown by the fact that he was nominated by the Republicans of Marion county for the responsible position of county sheriff and subsequently elected to that important position. In the discharge of his duties he was fearless and honest and won the esteem of all with whom he was associated while in the management of his office. He is a member of the Third Christian church at Indianapolis. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to Oriental Lodge at Indianapolis. He is also a member of Raper Commandery, Knights Templar, Keystone Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the Mystic Shrine at Indianapolis. He also holds his membership in the Columbia Club and Marion Club, two of the most influential clubs of the capital city. Mr. Clay has been remarkably successful in life, and in everything he has done he has commanded the respect and confidence of all those with whom he has been brought into contact. His life amply demonstrates what may be accomplished by a man of energy and ambition who is not afraid to work, his success being the result of his well directed efforts, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment.

FTHOR V. MILHON

A business man of Hazelwood, Indiana, who has made a pronounced success in life is Ethor V. Milhon, who, by the exercise of keen business ability and honest dealings, has built up a trade in a small town which is little short of marvelous. There are some men who are naturally gifted with the business instinct and this fortunate characteristic is the secret of the success of Mr. Milhon. Starting with a very small store, he has gradually worked up to a position where he has a business which is out of all proportion to the size of the town where he is located. In addition to his business interests, he has not failed to take a prominent part in the body politic, and every worthy enterprise which is for the good of the public has found in him a sympathetic and ready helper. His life has squared with right ideals, and for this reason he is highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

The postmaster, merchant and banker of Hazelwood was born in Liberty township, near Hazelwood, Hendricks county, Indiana, on November 26, 1870, the son of George W. and Susan Catherine (Richardson) Milhon, who were among the most highly esteemed residents of this township. George W. Milhon was born January 3, 1843, in Belmont county, Ohio, the son of George and Mary Ann (Hatbringer) Milhon. George Milhon, Sr., was a native of Virginia, and was born near Winchester, in that state, October 16, 1812. His wife was born in the same state August 12, 1812, and after their marriage George Milhon and wife left Virginia and settled in Belmont county, Ohio, where they farmed for several years and then came to Indiana, settling in Nashville, Brown county. In 1860 they came to Hendricks county and settled in Liberty township. Here George Milhon, Sr., followed farming, but after two years returned to Nashville in Brown county, this state, where his death occurred December 30, 1879, while his wife died on the first day of the year 1880. He and his wife were loyal members of the Methodist Episcopal church and they reared a family of eleven children; Sarah Elizabeth, deceased; Mrs. Rebecca Jane Doan; John Henry, deceased; Mrs. Rachel Anna Marshall; George W., the father of the subject of this review; Martha Ann. deceased: Norris: Jane: James: Mrs. Mary Catherine Purcell and Mrs. Lucinda Davis. George W. Milhon was married January 20, 1870, to Susan Catherine Richardson, daughter of William B, and Mary E. (Hurd) Richardson. William Richardson was a native of North Carolina and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, with his parents, Daniel and Dorcas Richardson, in the early history of the county. The Richardsons entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land in the county and on this farm William Richardson grew to manhood. He was born December 9, 1831, and died in November. 1881, in this county. His wife was born near Frankfort, Kentucky, October 30, 1831, and is still living. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Richardson were married November 24, 1850, and to their union were born seven children: Mrs. Milhon; Mrs. Martha Jane Oliphant; Mrs. Elizabeth D. Barnes; Joshua Newton: William Alfred, deceased; Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Hiatt, deceased, and Mrs. Emma Burzite. Mrs. Richardson has twenty-nine grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. George William Milhon are the parents of seven children, five living and two deceased; Ethor V., whose history is here presented: Mrs. Effie May Cooper, deceased: Everett Newton; Mrs. Mary E. Stout; Maude A., deceased; Mrs. Hattie B. Patterson and James W. Everett Newton Milhon married Hattie Wrightman and lives in Mooresville, Indiana, where he is chief engineer and superintendent of the telephone company of that place, and has two children, Irvin and Roy; Mary E. Milhon married Calvin Stout, of Hazelwood, a farmer and the president of the Hazelwood Bank, and has one child, Lenore; Hattie D. Milhon married Mark Patterson, a farmer living east of Hazelwood, and they have two sons, Ralph and Maurice; James W. Milhon married Maude Johnson and they live on a farm of this township, and have one child, Sylvan J.

George William Milhon enlisted in June, 1862, in Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for the three-months service in the Union army in Kentucky and served four months before he was discharged. He then returned to Hendricks county and has lived the life of a farmer since. He is the owner of a fine farm of one hundred and seventy acres, most of which lies in Hendricks county. He and his wife are zealcus members of the Regular Baptist church of Center Valley, and have rendered generous assistance to the church in every way. Mr. Milhon came to this county without a cent and has achieved success solely through his own determination and square business dealings. He has bought and sold much stock and has shipped hundreds of car loads from this county. He is a man well liked by every one and is still in good health and enjoying life.

Ethor V. Milhon spent his boyhood days on the home farm and received a practical education in the schools of Liberty township. After finishing the common school course he graduated from a business college at Indianapolis, and the business education which he there received has been of incalculable benefit to him in his later career. Early in his life he started in the grocery business at Hazelwood with a small stock of about three hundred dollars worth of goods and went into debt for this. His store was only a small box of a place, but by hard work and square dealings he has met with wonderful success. He gradually built up his store, increased his stock, secured better buildings and, later on, took in C. E. Shields as a partner. The firm of Milhon & Shields continued for about four years and then Mr. Milhon bought out his partner's interest and continued to conduct the business alone. In 1898 Mr. Milhon erected a modern two-story brick building, one hundred by thirty feet in size, and moved his stock of goods into this. The second floor is used by the Improved Order of Red Men.

In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Milhon is interested in the banking business in Hazelwood. He was elected cashier of the Hazelwood Bank in 1005, an institution which had been organized previous to that year under the name of the E. Milhon Bank. It had been organized in 1898 by Mr. Milhon and continued as a private bank until 1005, when it was reorganized as the Farmers Bank of Hazelwood. The new bank occupies part of the new building which was erected by Mr. Milhon and has commodious quarters where it transacts a rapidly-increasing business. In addition to his mercantile and financial interests, Mr. Milhon has also been the postmaster of Hazelwood for the past twenty years and still occupies that responsible position. Mr. Milhon enjoys an immense trade from Hazelwood and the surrounding community. The farmers from as far as ten miles come to Hazelwood to do their trading. He is a clever advertiser and appreciates the value of scientific advertising. In fact, such is the excellence of his work along this line that he has received numerous comments from dry goods magazines throughout the country on the excellence of his advertising.

Mr. Milhon was married July 4, 1893, to Ida Hazlewood, daughter of Benjamin P. and Eunice A. (Thomas) Hazlewood, and to this marriage there have been born two children, Sylvan, who died in infancy, and Emery J. Fraternally, Mr. Milhon is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons at Monrovia, Indiana, the Knights of Pythias at Mooresville, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Monrovia and the Inproved Order of Red Men at Hazelwood. Mrs. Milhon is a loyal and faithful member of the Missionary Baptist church, and also belongs to Order of the Eastern Star and the Daughters of Pocahontas. Their son Emery is affiliated with the Red Men. Politically, Mr. Milhon has always espoused the cause of the Democratic party, but the business cares which have demanded all of his attention have prevented him from taking any active part in politics. Enough has been said of the life history of Mr. Milhon to show that he has been a man of keen business judgment, combined with that tact and personality which render him a successful man of the world. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that he has been busy with his many interests, he has not neglected to take an active part in the life of the community about him, but has contributed his share to all worthy enterprises in his locality. He has been in the milling business for the past twenty years at Hazlewood, his trade extending twenty miles out.

WILLIAM H. STEVENSON.

It is both pleasant and profitable to study the life record of such a worthy gentleman as he whose name forms the caption of this review, for in it we find evidence of traits of character that can not help making for success in the life of one who directs his efforts, as Mr. Stevenson has done, along proper paths with persistency and untiring zeal, toward worthy ends. Having had as his close companion through life, upright principles, these worthy traits of character have resulted, as we shall see, in blessing to himself, his family and those with whom he has come into contact.

William H. Stevenson, the son of Morgan and Rhoda E. (West) Stevenson, was born February 2, 1862, in Marion township, about four miles west of Danville. Morgan Stevenson was a native of Kentucky and came with his parents, Payton and Sarah Stevenson, to this county when a small boy. He became a farmer and continued to follow that occupation until his death, February 14, 1888. His wife died October 24, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Stevenson were the parents of ten children: Mrs. Sarah E. Thompson; Harriet, deceased; Mrs. Lottie Tinder; Evaline, deceased; William H., whose biography is herein delineated; Mary Etta, deceased; Flora (Mrs. Hiram Gooch) is deceased; Edgar, Isaac and Charles.

After receiving a good common school education, William H. Stevenson remained on the home farm until his marriage and for the first eight years after his marriage he lived on a rented farm. He was thrifty and, with the assistance of his wife, was able to lay aside some money each year. In 1895 they purchased sixty-seven acres from the old Stevenson homestead, but four years later sold this and bought the one hundred and fifty-four acres in Union township, three miles south of Lizton, where they now live. While following general farming he has always raised some stock each year and from the sale of this he has added not a little to his annual income. He has improved his farm in many ways, until it now presents a very attractive appearance.

Mr. Stevenson was married December 11, 1887, to Mary C. Flynn, the daughter of John D. and Virginia W. (Harris) Flynn. John D. Flynn was a native of this county, his father having come to this county from Kentucky. He died January 24, 1888. His wife also was a native of this state, and died April 12, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Flynn were the parents of four children: James, deceased; Mary C., the wife of Mr. Stevenson; Nicodemus, deceased, and Mrs. Virginia Ann Christey. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson have one son living, Ray. He married Beulah Harbison, and has one son, Loyd.

Mr. Stevenson has been a life-long Democrat and, while he is interested in the local candidates of his party, he has never taken an active interest in the general campaigns of his party. He and the members of his family are adherents of the Missionary Baptist church and contribute generously of their means to its support. Mr. Stevenson is a very pleasant man to meet and he is in every sense of the word one of the sterling representatives of the twentieth-century man of affairs of Hendricks county.

HARRY E. SANDERS.

It is always pleasant and profitable to contemplate the career of a man who has won a definite goal in life, whose career has been such as to commend him to the honor and respect of his fellow citizens. Such, in brief, is the record of the well-known agriculturist whose name appears at the head of this brief review, than whom a more whole-souled or popular man it would be difficult to find within the limits of Hendricks county, where he has long maintained his home and where he has labored not only for his own individual interests and that of his immediate family, but also for the improvement and welfare of the entire community, whose interests he has ever had at heart.

Harry E. Sanders, the son of Henry and Julia A. (Gossett) Sanders, was born in Plainfield, Indiana, October 10, 1870. His father was a native of Favette county. Ohio, his birth occurring there in July, 1826, while his mother was born in North Carolina in January, 1828. Henry Sanders came to Indiana in 1836 with his parents, settling in Washington township, this county, and here Henry Sanders was reared, grew to manhood and, in October, 1847, was married to Julia A. Gossett, and to this union were born seven children: Alva W., of Galveston, Texas, who is connected with the shipping industry of that city; Mrs. Mary A. Zeller, who was born in 1850, was twice married, both of her husbands being now deceased, and she has three children living; Mrs. Emma E. McGrew, whose husband is deceased. has one child and is a resident of Indianapolis; Albert P., deceased, and who was married to Emma Inskip, had one child; William E., of Chicago, who is a real estate dealer, married Ida Coffee; Dr. Frank E., who is a practicing physician of Culver, Indiana, is married and has one son. Henry Sanders died in 1896, and was survived by his widow several years, her death occurring in 1905.

Harry E. Sanders, whose history is here briefly reviewed, was reared on the farm in Washington township, and attended the public school of his home neighborhood, receiving a good, practical education, and early in life decided that he wanted to follow the agricultural profession, and with this end in view applied himself to the acquisition of all the information which would assist him in making a success of this calling.

Mr. Sanders was married October 17, 1905, to Emma L. Saunders, whose father was a merchant of Zanesville, Ohio. Mrs. Sanders is a woman of refinement and culture and adds grace and charm to their elegant home. Mr. Sanders has, in addition to his regular farming duties, taken an active interest in civic affairs and as a member of the county board of commissioners has been one of the prominent factors in the building of the new two-hundred-and-seventy-five-thousand-dollar court house at Danville. This building embodies all of the latest and most modern ideas in court house architecture, and when completed will be one of the finest of its kind in Indiana. He has also been on the advisory board of his township, and in both capacities he has shown a capability and adaptability for public work which renders him an efficient servant of his fellow citizens. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Sanders is now in the prime of life and usefulness and has many years of active service before him and the work which he has done in the past speaks well for the future. His native ability, business success, high character and sterling integrity have won for him the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

WILSON D. BARNES.

It is with pleasure the biographer presents the following sketch, that of a plain honest man of affairs, who by correct methods and a strict regard for the interests of his patrons has made his influence felt in Hazelwood and won for himself distinctive prestige in the business circles of that community. Of sterling German ancestry, Mr. Barnes is a man whose integrity and strength of character commands the respect of his contemporaries and who leaves the impress of his individuality upon the community honored by his residence.

Wilson D. Barnes was born in 1852 near Stilesville, Hendricks county, Indiana, the son of Stephen A. Barnes and Lydia Ann Long, his wife. Stephen A. was born in Pennsylvania in 1805, a son of William Barnes, who with his wife emigrated to America about the year 1800. He located in Pennsylvania and there passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring while his son Stephen A. was still a youth. Later on, Stephen A. Barnes and his mother came westward into Indiana and located in Miami county. They remained there a short time, when both came into Hendricks county, where ne secured a tract of government land about one mile south of Stilesville and there he lived the balance of his life, farming the tract of land he had secured in a wild state, but which he had with much labor converted into a wellcultivated farm. In the early days he was a bricklayer and helped build the first brick flues which were erected in the then growing town of Indianapolis. The first chimneys had been simply primitive affairs of mud and sticks. Lydia Ann (Long) Barnes, mother of the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in Ohio probably about 1810 and came to Indiana with her parents while she was still a girl, the family locating near Stilesville. Her death occurred when the subject of this sketch was but seven years old, in August, 1859. Stephen A., the subject's father, lived for many years thereafter, his death occurring August 27, 1883. After the death of his first wife, Stephen A. Barnes married the second time, his bride being Mary Ann Davis, whose death occurred several years after he passed away.

Wilson D. Barnes grew up on the homestead near Stilesville, and remained with his father until eighteen years old, when for a few years he worked out as a farm hand. On January 11, 1877, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth D. Richardson, who was born near Hazelwood, this county, a daughter of William B. and Mary (Hurd) Richardson, the former of whom was a native of North Carolina and a son of Daniel and Dorcas Hurd. When William B, was a young man, he came to Indiana with his parents. They made the long journey in a wagon, William B, walking about half the distance. They settled near Hazelwood at an early date. Mary Hurd, mother of Mrs. Barnes, was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Joshua Hurd, who came to Indiana, settling in Montgomery county, when she was but a small child. William B. Richardson and wife passed the remainder of their lives on the farm near Hazelwood, where he carried on general farming and in addition did considerable trading and selling of live stock. He was one of the influential men of the community and a good citizen in every respect, having served three years in the Union cause during the dark days of the sixties. He was a man highly esteemed and respected and because of the unbounded confidence which friends and neighbors reposed in him, he was often appointed guardian for minors and acted as administrator in settling up the business of many an estate.

For two years after his marriage, subject carried on farming near Hazel-wood, and then, in the spring of 1880, he engaged in the mercantile business at Hazelwood. In this business he continued for about ten years, when he disposed of his interest and purchased a farm south of Hazelwood. This farm contains seventy-five acres, which he still owns. After about nine years spent on the farm, he again engaged in business in Hazelwood and since that time, with the exception of two years, he has been so engaged.

To Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have been born five children, two of whom have passed away. These are Arthur D., who died when about twenty months old, and Lillie D., who lived to be eighteen years old, her death occurring in 1904. Those living are Minnie, who is the wife of R. D. Stone, the proprietor of the telephone system at Clayton. Myrtle E. remains at home and Conrad W., who was born in 1887, married Emma Turner, of Indianapolis, and is in partnership with his father in the store at Hazelwood. Both Mr. and Mrs. Barnes are members of the Missionary Baptist church, being devoted and consistent members of the same. For most of the last twenty years Mr. Barnes has served the society as church treasurer. The success attained by Mr. Barnes in his business affairs has been greatly owing to his steady persistence, stern integrity and excellent judgment, qualities which have also won for him the confidence and esteem of the public to a marked degree. Personally, he is a man of quiet and unassuming disposition, though genial and friendly in his relations with others, and he has for many years enjoyed a wide acquaintance and large prestige throughout Hendricks county.

CHARLES E. SHIELDS.

Hendricks county, Indiana, is known as one of the best counties of the state and, as the reputation of a locality is but a reflection of the quality of its citizenship, it goes without saying that this county numbers among its citizens many men who in one way or another have given of their time or ability to further such enterprises as make for the advancement of any community in its moral, educational or material life. Such a citizen is Charles E. Shields, who by reason of unusual ability and enterprise has taken his place among the foremost citizens of the county, and while primarily considering the interest: of himself and those dearest to him, has at the same time accomplished much for the public good.

Charles E. Shields, present trustee of Liberty township, Hendricks county, was born on July 28, 1872, near Lake Valley, Morgan county, this state, the son of David and Frances (Pruitt) Shields, both of whom also were born in the same county. David shields was a son of David Shields, Sr., who was born and raised in North Carolina, coming to this state some time after his marriage, bringing with them two or three children. They accomplished the journey from their native state in the early days, coming overland in a wagon, passing through the state of Kentucky. They located in Morgan county, where they passed the remainder of their lives on the farm which they had secured.

David Shields, Jr., grew up in Morgan county, receiving what education the early schools of the day afforded and employing his time in agricultural labors. He was a veteran of the Civil War and died in 1881, when the subject of this sketch was but nine years old, his wife having died three years previous. After the death of his father, the subject was taken into the home of his uncle, Harrison Shields, near Eminence, Morgan county, and there remained until he was fifteen years of age. At that time he came to friends in Liberty township, this county, and attended Central Normal College at Danville, while also engaged in farm work. However, this was not the chosen vocation of his life, and about 1898 he formed a partnership with E. V. Milhon and together they engaged in the mercantile business at Hazlewood, which partnership remained in force about three and one-half years. Prior to the dissolution of that partnership, these two gentlemen had organized and constructed what is known as the Hazelwood Telephone System, and in 1902 Mr. Shields disposed of his interest in the mercantile business to Mr. Milhon and purchased Mr. Milhon's interest in the telephone company. Also, in connection with their mercantile business, the two partners had operated a private bank, and at their dissolution Mr. Shields' interests in this went to Mr. Milhon, the subject desiring to devote his entire time to the operation of the telephone business. This business he retained until January 1, 1912, by which time it had assumed considerable proportions and had proven of untold value to the community.

Mr. Shields has always been a strong adherent of the Republican party and always took an active interest in local affairs pertaining to same. In 1908 he was elected township trustee and by reason of the legislative change made in the length of term of office of township trustees, he holds his seat until January 1, 1915. Mr. Shields' fraternal affiliations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men, and in the workings of these orders he takes a commendable interest.

On July 9, 1899, Mr. Shields was united in marriage with Sylvia Burch, who was born near Bloomington, Monroe county, this state, a daughter of William H. and Susie (Sparks) Burch, both of whom were born and reared in the same county and were throughout their lives very active in promoting the interests of the Baptist church. Mr. Burch's vocation was that of farming, as was also that of his father, Charles Burch, who with his wife, Jane, came from their native state of North Carolina and settled in Monroe county in the early thirties and there he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring December 23, 1905. His widow still resides in Bloomington, at an advanced age. Susie Sparks Burch, mother of Mrs. Shields, was a daughter of William and Nancy Sparks, who also came from North Carolina, making the long journey overland in a wagon. They arrived in Monroe county about 1835, where they spent their remaining days. Mrs. Shields received her elementary education in the district schools of Monroe county, later attending high school in Bloomington and the Central Normal College at Danville, from which latter institution she obtained her certificate qualifying her to teach school and for six years she followed this profession, teaching four years in Monroe county and two in Hendricks county. To Mr. and Mrs. Shields have been born three children, the eldest being Joy June, who was born in June, 1900, and died in December, 1906. The two remaining are Myrth and Jewel.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Shields are active members of the Church of Christ and have been largely instrumental in bringing about the excellent conditions existing in the local body at Hazelwood. Mr. Shields and two other members purchased and donated the site for the new church building, which was completed and dedicated to its high calling on October 30, 1910. The church society was organized in March, 1909, and since the time of its organization Mr. Shields has served as trustee and elder, being active in bringing about the speedy erection of the church edifice, which is a handsome structure, costing between nine and ten thousand dollars. Prior to the completion of this structure, the society held its meetings in Red Men's hall. Mrs. Shields is not behind her husband in good works, for since the organization of the Ladies' Aid Society, in connection with the church, she has been very active in the work falling within its scope, and was the first president of the local organization, which has the reputation of being one of the most proficient and finely organized societies in the state. She is deeply interested in the National Mother Congress. Mr. and Mrs. Shields are among the very best people of the community, both being full of interest in the lives of others and sincerely desirous of accomplishing all the good possible for their community. In view of Mr. Shields' public activities, it is especially fitting that a biographical sketch of his career be incorporated in a work of the scope intended in the present volume.

FRANCIS M. HARRISON.

It was once remarked by a celebrated moralist and biographer that "there has scarcely passed a life of which a judicious and faithful narrative would not have been useful". Believing in the truth of this opinion, expressed by one of the greatest and best of men, the writer of this review takes pleasure in presenting a few facts in the career of a gentleman who, by industry, perseverance, temperance and integrity, has worked himself from an humble station to a successful place in life and won an honorable position among the well known and highly esteemed men of the locality in which he resides.

Francis Marion Harrison, the son of Benjamin and Rachael (Hendricks) Harrison, was born in Eel River township. Hendricks county, March 11, 1873. Benjamin Harrison was a native of Boone county and reared to manhood and married in that county. His father was a cooper at Lafayette and followed that trade until his death. Benjamin Harrison came to Hendricks county about 1870 and operated a saw-mill northeast of North Salem for a number of years. He sold his mill and then ran one in Boone county for a number of years. He then returned to Hendricks county, Union township, and operated a saw-mill at Montclair until his death at that place in 1881. The wife of Benjamin Harrison was also a native of Boone county and is still living at Brownsburg. After the death of her husband in 1881, she married Joshua Tharp, a farmer and banker at Brownsburg. Benjamin Harrison and wife were the parents of eight children: George, deceased; Frank, deceased; John, deceased; Ora; William: Oliver, deceased; Francis Marion and Edgar.

Francis M. Harrison was reared to manhood in Hendricks county and has lived north of Danville since he was fifteen years of age. He began operating his present farm in 1910, having formerly operated a farm of eighty-three acres in Marion township for ten years. He sold his Marion township farm and bought his present farm of ninety acres in Center township. He carries on general farming and also raises considerable live stock for the market. He is a man with excellent ideas concerning agriculture and takes an interest in farming institutes and all other organizations that are of benefit to the farmer.

Mr. Harrison was married in August, 1895, to Hattie May Thomas, the daughter of Lewis and Louisa (Talbott) Thomas. Lewis Thomas was a native of Fayette county, Indiana, and came with his parents to this county when he was ten years of age. His father, Erasmus Thomas, was born in Fayette county November 13, 1821, and moved to Hendricks county in 1864. Erasmus Thomas was the first auditor of Tipton county. Indiana, and helped to lay out the present town of Tipton. He held the office of auditor for one year, then refused to hold it any longer because of the meager salary which was attached to the office. He never held any offices in Hendricks county, but farmed and served as a regular Baptist preacher for over forty years, preaching in the Danville church for a long time. He died in 1897 on the homestead farm. His son, Lewis, the father of Mrs. Harrison, was reared to manhood in this county and qualified for the Regular Baptist uninistry. He is still active as a Baptist minister at Ashley, Ohio, where he has been for the past thirty years. Mrs. Lewis Thomas is a native of Center township, this county, and died February 7, 1877, on the old homestead farm, four and one-half miles north of Danville. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are the parents of four children, all of whom are still under the parental roof, Benjamin, Mildred, Aria and Mary.

Mr. Harrison is a member of the Republican party, but has never taken any further part in politics than to cast his vote for his candidate at the regular election. However, he takes a deep interest in the main questions of the day and keeps himself well informed as to the progress of events of the nation by reading the newspapers and magazines. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Danville. He and his wife are faithful members of the Regular Baptist church. Mr. Harrison is a man who has always been interested in the various public-spirited enterprises of his community and only lends his assistance to such as he deemed worthy. He is congenial by nature and has a personality which attracts friends, whom he easily retains because of his fine qualities of character.

WILLIAM W. QUINN.

William W. Quinn, of Cartersburg, Hendricks county, now living in comfortable retirement after many years of unceasing activity in connection with agricultural pursuits, is one of the best known citizens of the county. His well directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment have brought to him prosperity and his life demonstrates what may be accomplished by any man of energy and ambition who is not afraid to work and has the perseverance to continue his labors in the face of any disaster or discouragement that may arise. In all the relations of life Mr. Quinn has commanded the confidence and respect of those with whom he has been brought into contact and a biographical history of this locality would not be complete without a record of his career.

William W. Quinn was born on April 1, 1837, in Union county, Indiana, the son of John and Sarah (Bright) Quinn, both of whom were born and reared in Fleming county, Kentucky. They were married there prior to coming to this state about 1820. They located in Union county immediately upon coming to Indiana, and there passed the remainder of their lives. John Quinn was a life-long farmer and when he first took up his residence in Union county it was then not much more than a wilderness. One man filled all the county offices. John Quinn's death occurred when the subject of this sketch was a lad of but fourteen years. He left a family of thirteen children, the youngest being the subject, who is now the only surviving member of the family.

The subject passed his boyhood on the home farm in Union county, obtaining such education as the early subscription schools of the time afforded and receiving early instruction in the secrets of successful farming from his father, who was quite skilled in his chosen vocation. Mr. Quinn has been twice married. On March 8, 1877, Mr. Ouinn for the second time stood before the alter of Hymen, his bride being Nancy L. Clevenger, of Wayne county, this state, a daughter of Samuel and Ruth (Sparh) Clevenger, the former a well-known farmer of Abbington township. Wayne county, where he resided for many years. Immediately after marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Ouinn established their home in Jackson township, Decatur county, this state, where he engaged in farming for ten years. Then in 1887 they came to this county, arriving at Cartersburg on March 3d of that year. In this county Mr. Quinn purchased a fine farm of two hundred and sixteen acres a short distance northwest of Cartersburg and there he resided until March 12, 1902, when he moved into Cartersburg, and on December 2, 1902. he moved into his present home, which he had erected. Mr. Ouinn also owns two hundred and ten acres of farm lands in Marion county, this state: in all, his holdings now amount to considerably over four hundred acres. In addition to general farming, Mr. Ouinn pays particular attention to the raising and selling of live stock, and in this branch of his business especially he has made an unqualified success. All this has been brought about through his untiring energy and ambition, coupled with unusual executive ability and the fact that he has ever sought to keep abreast of the times in his chosen work

To Mr. and Mrs. Quinn was born one son, Harlan Everett, who first saw the light of day on September 29, 1888. He married Maude Holderman and is the father of two sons, William Lee and James Harry. Everett now has charge of affairs on the farm which the subject left upon taking up his residence in Cartersburg.

Mr. Quinn's fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a member of the local lodge at Danville. Politically, he is independent. Mrs. Quinn is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Quinn is a man of positive temperament, strong in his convictions, and when once having thought out a course of action, he is determined in its execution. With these stronger characteristics, he is genial and friendly and is highly esteemed by friends and neighbors who know him for his sterling worth and unvarying uprightness of character.

ALBERT JOHNSON.

Hendricks county, Indiana, enjoys an enviable reputation because of the high order of her citizenship and none of her citizens occupy a more favorable position in the estimation of his fellows than the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch. The son of an unusually strong and progressive man, to whom the early development of this county is highly indebted, Albert Johnson is himself numbered among the leading citizens of his native county. His continued residence here has but strengthened his hold on the hearts of the people with whom he has been associated and no one today enjoys a larger circle of friends and acquaintances, who esteem him because of his sterling qualities of character and his business ability. He is, therefore, eminently entitled to representation in a work of this character.

Albert Johnson was born on September 19, 1843, about one and onehalf miles northwest of Bridgeport and near the eastern line of Hendricks county, being the son of Jeremiah and Susanna (Johnson) Johnson. Jeremiah Johnson was a son of Aholiab and Hannah Johnson, and was born at Killingly, Windham county, Connecticut, on August 23, 1792, and when three or four years old removed with his parents to Stafford, in Tolland county, Connecticut. With the exception of about three years passed at the home of his mother's father, Jeremiah Bacon, at Middletown, Connecticut, he continued to live with his father and work at farming and getting such education as the opportunities of that day afforded him. He taught several schools in the winter time before he was twenty-one years of age. In 1813, during the war with Great Britain, he served as a volunteer in the state militia of Connecticut for about seventy days, being placed on duty to guard the fort at New London and vicinity, for which service he, long afterwards, obtained a bounty of land from the government. After the close of his military service, he went as far south as Washington, D. C., seeking his fortune, and for a short time was employed in the reconstruction of the capitol building, it having been burned by the British. However, he soon tired of this class of labor and, believing there was in store for him an easier way of gaining a livelihood, he journeyed to Baltimore, where he shipped on a private armed sloop bound for a cruise. He took an immediate dislike to that sort of life and was discharged at one of the West Indian islands called Virgin Gorda, from whence he returned to his father's home in Stafford. There for one term he taught the district school, numbering not less than one hundred pupils, and early in the spring of 1815 he started with a small trunk, containing a few articles of wearing apparel and about fifty dollars in money, leaving the balance of his savings placed on interest. He was bound for the great new West and travelled by stage to Philadelphia. There he placed his trunk on one of the large wagons constantly passing between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh and betook himself on foot to the latter place. There he fell in company with another Eastern man of like ambition as himself, and the two constructed a flat boat which they loaded with coal and floated down the Ohio river to Cincinnati, where boat and cargo were both sold for whatever they would bring. From Cincinnati he soon went to a German village about twenty miles northwest of that city and there he was soon engaged in teaching the Germans the English language and such other rudiments of education as circumstances permitted. There he continued until such time as the authorities of the new state of Indiana fixed the place for the site of the new state capitol, the present Indianapolis. He soon learned of the fact and, seeing for himself an opportunity in connection with that circumstance, he hired a couple of men, each having a four-horse team, and loaded them with provisions and such other articles as were necessary in a new settlement. Leaving his German friends, he started through the then unbroken forest for the future city, fording streams and cutting the way through the woods, guided only by a small compass. After much time and endeavor and enduring many hardships, he at length reached the place of his destination. Here he detained the two teamsters until they. together with such assistance as those already there could afford, had built for him a log cabin, being the third house in the new capitol of Indiana. His first dining table was the head of a flour barrel, his first plate a clean maple chip and his first bedstead was framed into the corner of his cabin. He at once opened up and began disposing of his stock of provisions, powder, lead, etc., and became one of the earliest promoters of the place. When the first brick court house was built (which was also used as a state house for several years) he took the contract for the brick work and, in company with John Johnson (one of whose daughters afterward became his wife). made the brick and completed the contract to the satisfaction of the authorities. At that time money was a very scarce article and the state obligations with which he was paid for his work were heavily discounted and had it not been for the money which was due him in Cincinnati, which was collected by friends and sent him as fast as possible, he would probably have become bankrupt. However, he remained in the growing village of Indianapolis for a number of years, doing all within his power to foster its dignity and growth. He was generally reasonably successful in business, though sometimes he suffered heavy losses as once when bringing a boat load of salt up the Wabash river, the boat suddenly sank and boat, cargo and wearing apparel of himself and associates was lost. They were thankful to escape with their lives and had to beg and walk their way home, a distance of over one hundred miles. He invested his savings in land at government prices, which of course advanced in value as the county became settled. When the National road was built west from Indianapolis, he laid out the village of Bridgeport on land which he owned, and built a hotel. steam mill and a store. When the plank road was built he took an active interest in it and gave right of way through all his land. He later gave ground for a depot at Bridgeport and did much otherwise to encourage the building of the railroad. He was active and energetic in business and did much to promote the cause of education and scientific agriculture in the state. On his own farm he kept abreast of his times and did much to improve the breed of cattle throughout his community by importing improved breeds from other states.

Jeremiah Johnson came from pure English ancestry and, according to family tradition, some of them left England and settled in Massachusetts on the restoration of Charles II, finding it expedient to do this on account of their participation in the Civil War as soldiers and partisans of Cromwell. Jeremiah Johnson reared a family of nine children, seven sons and two daughters. He survived his wife and both daughters several years and departed this life at Clayton, this county, on March 20, 1876, having passed a life of unusual activity and usefulness. His influence over the moral life alone of this section of the state can not be estimated and his generous contributions to the material advancement of the community certainly can be surpassed by none. Such men as he are the heart and bone and sinew of a new community.

When Albert Johnson was a boy he lived on the home farm and at Bridgeport for a short time. About 1850 the family moved about three.

miles east of Bridgeport, near where Ben Davis now is, and resided there until 1855 and then moved to Liberty township, this county, when the immediate subject of this sketch was about twelve years old. Here he grew to manhood on his father's farm, attending the early schools of the district and later attending the academy at Danville in the winter of 1850-1860. He returned home after one year spent in Danville, in a very poor state of health and for four years was almost an invalid. In 1876 he left the farm and removed to Clayton, but continued to operate the farm until in 1880. when he engaged in the mercantile business at Clayton in partnership with his brother and Edwin Johnson, L. D. Johnson also being a partner, under the firm name of Johnson Brothers & Company. In connection with that business, he and his brother did a little private banking business. In 1886 the brother died, but the mercantile business was continued under the same name, the banking business, however, having the name changed from Johnson Brothers to Albert Johnson & Company, the widow having retained her interest in the firm and the business being conducted along the lines of a private bank. In 1806 the mercantile business was disposed of and the banking business continued as before. In 1905 the banking business was reorganized under the private banking law, retaining the same firm name. On January 28, 1907, Lorenzo D. Johnson, former partner with Johnson Brothers in the mercantile business, became a member of the banking firm in company with the subject, his daughter and brother's widow, the bank at that time being capitalized at twenty thousand dollars. They continued under the old firm name until May 1, 1912, when they reorganized under the state banking law and converted the institution into a state bank with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars, fully paid up, and with a surplus of twelve hundred and fifty dollars. They were officered as follows: Albert Johnson, president; J. C. Walker, vice-president, and L. D. Johnson, cashier, with those three also acting as directors. The present directors are Eugene Edmundson, Milton A. West, L. D. Johnson and Albert Johnson. Mr. Walker has recently died.

On October 20, 1867, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Mary E. Snoddy, daughter of George W. and Nancy (Fitzgerald) Snoddy, of Morgan county, this state. Mr. Snoddy was a farmer and stock raiser and was also a minister ordained in the Christian church. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have been born four children. One daughter, Annie, died when ten years old. Their daughter Gertrude is the wife of O. W. Greene and lives in Kansas City, Missouri. She is the mother of two children, Marian and Emily. Emma C. is the wife of B. M. Davis and resides at Oxford, Ohio, Mr. Davis being a professor in Miami University. Arthur A. is a civil engineer located in Indianapolis. His wife was May Brayton, daughter of Dr. A. W. Brayton, of Indianapolis.

In 1890 Mr. Johnson moved to Indianapolis, taking up his residence in Irvington, so as to be near Butler College, where he wished to educate his children. He, however, retains his interests in Clayton and considers this his permanent home. Mr. Johnson is a man of sound and practical intelligence, keenly alert to everything relating to his interests, and, in fact, with all that concerns the advancement and prosperity of his community. Because of his splendid personal characteristics and his genuine worth, he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him and he has an unusually wide and varied acquaintance.

LORENZO D. JOHNSON.

In past ages the history of a country was comprised chiefly in the record of its wars and conquests. Today history is largely a record of commercial activity, and those who are foremost in the annals of the nation are those who have become leaders in business circles. The conquests now made are those of mind over matter, and the victor is he who can most successfully establish, control and operate business interests. Mr. Johnson is unquestionably one of the strongest and most influential of the men whose lives have been an essential part of the history of Hendricks county. Tireless energy, keen perception, honesty of purpose, genius for devising and executing the right thing in the right place and time are the chief characteristics of the man. These, combined with everyday common sense and guided by strong will power, are concomitants which will insure success in any undertaking.

Lorenzo D. Johnson, cashier of the State Bank of Clayton, is a Hoosier by birth, having first seen the light of day in Morgan county on May 14, 1851, the son of Hezekiah K. and Eliza (Greene) Johnson. Hezekiah K. Johnson was born in North Carolina in 1809 and married Miss Greene there before he came to Indiana, where they located in Morgan county. In 1865 he removed to Clayton and at that time he gave up the vocation of farming, which he had followed all his life, and engaged in the general merchandise business. He opened up his business in 1868 on the spot where the traction station now stands. He continued in this business until his death, in 1870. His widow followed him into the great beyond one year later. In addition to his business as an agriculturist and merchant, he was also a minister of the Gospel and an earnest and sincere man in all the relations of life.

Lorenzo D. Johnson received a good schooling in his youth and after completing his studies he went into his father's store and at the time of his father's death took charge of it and operated it until 1873. At that time he disposed of it to Howland & Spotts, of Danville, but continued with them until they sold it to Mr. Field, of the old publishing firm of Merrill, Field & Company of Indianapolis. After Mr. Field purchased the store, Mr. Johnson continued in his employ with full charge of the store and did not see the new proprietor until six weeks after the purchase was made, the former owners having simply turned keys, books, etc., over to Mr. Johnson. After leaving Mr. Field, Mr. Johnson took a position with Clark & Harris and was with them until 1880, when he became a partner with Albert and Edwin Johnson in their mercantile business, under the firm name of Johnson Brothers & Company. He was with them until 1896, and was then employed in the private bank of Albert Johnson & Company and in the year 1907 became a partner in that bank with the position of cashier. In this capacity be continued with the bank through its reorganization into the State Bank of Clayton in 1012 under the state banking laws. He was elected cashier of the new organization and continues in that capacity at the present time.

On June 18, 1873, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Frances V. Garrison, daughter of John and Sarah (Nichols) Garrison, the former being the son of Josiah Garrison, an early settler here who came from New Jersey. John Garrison was engaged in farming here throughout his life. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have been born two children, Mary and Dee. Mary is the wife of J. Mark Black, of Indianapolis. She is the mother of three children, Dorothy, Frances and Robert L. Their daughter Dee is the wife of Dr. B. R. Quinn, of Indianapolis. She is the mother of two children, Maxine and Russell.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Clayton and contribute liberally of time and means to further the cause of that society. They are considered among the very best people of the town and in their comfortable and commodious home there is ever found a cordial welcome for friend and stranger. Mr. Johnson is a man of quiet manner, unassuming in every particular and a man who wins and holds a large number of friends through his innate kindliness and obliging manner. He is a busy man, but he finds time and opportunity to take in matters pertaining to the progress and growth of his community and county, keeping abreast of the times on all questions of vital interest and being regarded as a leading citizen in the locality long honored by his residence.

IAMES THOMAS LEAK.

The valuable man to any community is the man who does things; and, with this criterion, it is safe to say that James T. Leak is one of the most important men in Union township, this county. He is a splendid example of the progressive, self-made man who believes in doing well whatever is worth doing at all. He is a man of discernment and sound judgment, broad-minded and at the same time a follower of the principles embodied in the Golden Rule in all his relations with his fellow men. Daily contact with our fellow citizens so familiarizes us with their many virtues that we ordinarily overlook them, and commonly underestimate their possessor. Nevertheless, though the man may pass away, his deeds of virtue live on, and will, in time, do him the justice which he failed to receive during his life time. However, the many good qualities of Mr. Leak are fully recognized and appreciated by his fellow citizens, who long ago placed their stamp of approval upon his life.

James Thomas Leak, a prosperous farmer and banker of Lizton, this county, was born February 14, 1857, in Union township. His parents were George W. and Sarah G. (Leach) Leak. George W. Leak was born October 17, 1828, in Bracken county. Kentucky, and came with his parents, William and Eliza (Kitch) Leak, to this county when he was about eight years of age. William Leak settled in Union township on a farm adjoining the present town of Lizton and farmed there until his death, September 11, 1845. George W. Leak grew to manhood in this county and was first married January 10, 1850, to Sarah Leach, who died February 30, 1868. To this first marriage were born six children: Matilda Jane, deceased; Mrs. Lucinda M. Hickman; James Thomas, whose career is portrayed in this connection; Elizabeth Ann. deceased; William E., deceased, and Enos Alonzo. After the death of his first wife, George W. Leak was married to Ann Burnett and to this second marriage were born five children: Mary E., deceased; Mrs. Hattie M. Dowden; Mrs. Georgia Lillian McHenry; Myrtle, deceased, and Bertha O.

JAMES T. LEAK

James T. Leak received his education in the schools of Union township and remained at home until his marriage, at the age of twenty-one, when he went to farming for himself. He devoted his attention to this vocation until 1902, when he retired from active farming and moved to Lizton. As an agriculturist he carried on general farming, raised all the crops common to this locality and gave a considerable share of his attention to the breeding and raising of live stock. His farm is well improved, he has a comfortable and attractive residence, well arranged barns and other features which show him to be a man of wise discrimination and good judgment. In 1900 Mr. Leak became interested in banking and when the Citizens Bank at Jamestown was organized in that year he became a stockholder and director in the same and has been officially connected with that financial institution since its organization. In 1902 he moved to Lizton and became the cashier of the Lizton Bank upon its organization December 1, 1910, and is still filling that responsible position to the entire satisfaction of the board of directors of the bank.

Mr. Leak was married October 17, 1878, to Susan D. Young, the daughter of Melton and Susan (Parrish) Young. Melton Young was born in Kentucky, his wife in South Carolina and they were married in Putnam county, Indiana. Upon their marriage they moved to Montgomery county, near Ladoga, and later to New Ross, in the same county. Some years before his death Mr. and Mrs. Young moved to Lebanon in Boone county, where Mrs. Young died August 9, 1890, and Mr. Young June 20, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Young were the parents of fifteen children: Mrs. Lucretia Dale, deceased; Thomas F.; Reuben E., deceased; James D.; Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Scott; Mrs. Rachel C. Bailey; Susan D., the wife of Mr. Leak; John; George; Mrs. Lucinda Apple, deceased; Ora E.; Mrs. Emma Frame; Mrs. Estella Scott; Mrs. Ella Myer, and Mrs. Sarah Ann Harrison, deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Leak are the parents of two children, Sarah Essie, the wife of Ira O. Dale, a farmer of Middle township in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Dale have one daughter, Susan Fern. The other child of Mr. and Mrs. Leak is Milton Edward, a farmer in Union township, this county. He married Edna Wright and has two daughters, Mary Blanche and Susan Helen. Mr. Leak is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias at Lizton, having had his membership transferred from the Danville lodge to the lodge at Lizton upon its organization at the latter place. He has been a life-long Republican, but has never taken an active interest in politics. Mr. Leak is a plain-spoken man in his manner and yet with that honesty of speech and straightforwardness which indicates the man of solid worth; is quick to grasp the situation, alert to carry it out and persistent in following it to his final conclusion. He is a man who has won a host of friends because of his clean, open life and the interest which he has always taken in all good movements in the community.

HENRY HUNT.

The United States has drawn its people from every corner of the globe and, while we have citizens in Indiana representing scores of different countries, it is nevertheless true that the bulk of our citizenship are of English descent. We always refer to England as our mother country, and it is true that she has furnished the great majority of our citizens of today. The Hunt family of Hendricks county are fortunate in having traced their family history through past generations, and in the history of Henry Hunt, who is here presented, his ancestry can be traced back to the middle of the eighteenth century directly. To state in biblical fashion, the first descendant whose history is accurately recorded is Eleazer, whose son was Asher, whose son was Ithamar, whose son was Henry, whose son was Olsen. The Hunt family trace their ancestry back to England, where they were an honorable and distinguished family in the colonial period. Eleazer Hunt was a farmer of North Carolina in the latter part of the eighteenth century and died in that state at the age of eighty. His son Asher was born in Guilford county, that state, and was reared a Quaker, marrying Jane Hunt, the daughter of Abner and Mary (Starley) Hunt, who was a very distant relative Asher Hunt came to Sullivan county, Indiana, from North Carolina and entered two hundred acres of land on which he lived for the next sixteen years. He then came to Hendricks county where he bought a farm in the eastern part of Marion township, dying there in his eighty-fourth year. He and his wife, as well as the children, were Ouakers.

Asher Hunt was twice married; his first wife died and he then married Abigail Foster. He was a man of unimpeachable character, industrious, honorable and one who was universally respected by all who knew him. Ithamar Hunt, the son of Asher, was born in Sullivan county, Indiana, March 17, 1822, and came with his parents to Hendricks county when he was fourteen years of age. At the age of twenty-five he married Frances J. Bush, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Norton) Bush. John Bush was a native of Kentucky, who came to Hendricks county and was one of the early pioneers of the county, dying at the age of fifty-three. Ithamar Hunt was a farmer all of his life and at his death, on May 14, 1903, in New Winchester, he had over six hundred acres of fine farming land in the county. He was a birthright member of the Friends church for twenty-one years and then joined the Baptist church. He was a consistent and faithful member and a liberal contributor, not only to his own church, but to others and to all benevolent enterprises. He was a good man in every sense of the word, an honest man with himself and with others. He was a devoted husband, a loving and kind father, an accommodating and genial neighbor, a manly and devoted Christian, one without ostentation or hypocrisy. He was a man of peace, quiet and unobtrusive. He never swore, never used liquor, was never sued, never paid a cent of interest—all in all, he was one of nature's noblemen.

Henry Hunt is a worthy son of a worthy father. He received his education in the schools of his neighborhood and remained under the parental roof until he was married at the age of twenty-five, although he had been farming for himself since he was twenty-one. After his marriage, he lived for the first year on the Rockville road and then built his present home in 1878 and has resided there continuously since that time. He is a farmer exclusively and no one in the county raises better crops than does he. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs and, as a Republican, was elected trustee of Marion township in 1894, rendering faithful and efficient service to his fellow citizens for nearly five years in that capacity. His farm of two hundred and sixty acres, together with his wife's farm of one hundred and sixty, is a fine example of an up-to-date farm in every respect. He takes a great deal of pride in keeping everything in good repair and his buildings are always neat and attractive in appearance.

Mr. Hunt was married April 1, 1877, to Cassandra R. Higgins, the daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Plaster) Higgins. She was born in Marion township and has lived most of her life there, spending four years at Ladoga before her marriage. They have one son, Olsen, who was born March 6, 1881. He married Jesse Underwood, the daughter of Obed Underwood, and has one daughter, Marvel. He lives on a farm in Marion township. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are both devout members of the Christian church of New Winchester, and subscribe liberally to its support. Mr. Hunt is one of the best known men in his township, a man of excellent character, a good neighbor and one who has always stood for the best welfare of his community.

ALEXANDER RAMSEY.

The importance that attaches to the lives, character and work of the early settlers of Hendricks county and the influence they have exerted upon the cause of humanity and civilization is one of the most absorbing themes that can possibly attract the attention of the local chronicler. The late Alexander Ramsey was a man whose great influence upon the early history of this county was an important factor in developing the part of the county in which he settled.

Alexander Ramsey was born in Clark county, Kentucky, June 21, 1821. and died in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana, January 21, 1801. He was the son of Andrew and Jennie (Browning) Ramsey. Fate seems to play an important part in the lives of some people and in the cause of Alexander Ramsey it was the cause of his remaining in this county. When a young man he came to this county to visit his two sisters who were living in the county and while here he met a pretty little maid by the name of Martha Jane Flynn. It was a case of love at first sight and he who came merely to visit remained to marry and settle in this county. His wife was born October 14, 1838, in Marion township and on December 18, 1856, they were married, she being only eighteen years of age at the time of her marriage. This youthful bride of fifty-eight years ago is still living and enjoying good health. She is the daughter of James and Lucy (Miller) Flynn, her father being born in Clark county, Kentucky, in 1807. He was first married to Lucy Rigney and, after her death, to Lucy Miller in 1833. His second wife was born in Clark county, Kentucky, in 1816, the daughter of Michael and Mary Miller, who had come from Virginia to Kentucky. James Flynn lived in Kentucky until 1840 and then came to Marion township, this county. He and his wife made the trip overland on horseback, passing through the little village of Indianapolis and over the swamp which is now occupied by Danville. He became one of the earliest settlers and was one of the most prominent farmers of the county, having over five hundred acres of land at the time of his death, August 11, 1885. He paid one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre and the same land today could not be bought for one hundred and twenty-five dollars per acre. Mr. Flynn was a progressive farmer and owned the first threshing machine in this section of the state.

After Mr. Ramsey and his young bride were first married they returned to Kentucky, where they lived on a farm of Mrs. Ramsey's uncle for two years. They then returned to Hendricks county and bought a farm of one hundred and thirty acres near New Winchester for twenty-seven dollars per acre, and later they purchased seventy acres more, making a total of two hundred acres which is still owned by the family. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey reared a family of six children: Mary Catherine, who married William J. Underwood; Samuel A., born February 27, 1850, who has never married, but has spent his whole life on the home farm. He and his mother have lived together on the old homestead since his father's death; John Allen, who lives in Danville, Indiana; Obie L., who lives at New Winchester, where he operates a saw-mill and runs a threshing machine in the summer; Anna May died March 2, 1881, at the age of ten as the result of an injury she received at school.

Mr. Ramsey was a member of the Missionary Baptist church and was a faithful attendant upon all the services of the church. He was a man who was always very considerate of the rights of others and absolutely honest and straightforward in all of his dealings. He was held in high respect and esteem by everyone with whom he was associated and his life in every particular was above reproach. He was essentially a man of domestic tastes and lived for those who were pearest and degrees to him.

JOHN S. RAGAN, M. D.

It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that have moved a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestation in the career of the individual under consideration. In view of this fact, the life of the physician and public-spirited man of affairs whose name appears above affords a striking example of well defined purpose, with the ability to make that purpose subserve not only his own ends but the good of his fellow men as well. Doctor Ragan has long held prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and intellectual discipline of a high order, supplemented by rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge with the skill to apply the same. In his chosen field Doctor Ragan has achieved a notable success, which has been duly recognized and appreciated throughout the section of the state where he lives.

Dr. John S. Ragan, one of the oldest practicing physicians in Hendricks county, was born July 5, 1849, in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana. His parents, James M. and Lucy A. (Smith) Ragan, were both natives of Kentucky and came to this county early in their lives with their parents. Abner Ragan, the father of James M., came from Kentucky first and settled in Putnam county, but soon moved over into Hendricks county, where he lived until his death in 1864. Abner Ragan was twice married, his first wife, Mary, and the mother of James, being of the MacCoun family. Zachariah Smith, the maternal grandfather of Doctor Ragan, was a native of Kentucky and came to Hendricks county early in its history, settling in Marion township. He married Agnes Dicken and they reared a family of seven children. James M. Ragan was a farmer and stock raiser all his life and he and his wife died in the faith of the Christian church. They both passed away in 1872, having reared a family of eight children: Mary, deceased; John S.; Abner, deceased; Zachariah, of North Salem, Indiana; Reuben Samuel, deceased; James, of Colorado; William H., of Plainfield, and Milton B., deceased.

Doctor Ragan spent his boyhood days on the farm and attended the district schools of the neighborhood. After spending two years in the Ladoga Academy he began teaching and taught school for the next nine years, the last two years being principal of the North Salem schools. While still teaching he began the study of medicine and in 1887 took his first course of lectures in the Cincinnati Medical School. As was customary in those days, he began to practice before he had finished his medical course. He started to practice at Avon in Hendricks county and after his graduation in the spring of 1879 from the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis he returned to Avon and continued to practice there for the next seventeen years. After practicing a year at Denver, Colorado, where he had gone for his wife's health, he returned to Avon and remained two years. In 1805 he went to Plainfield and in 1004 became the physician at the Boys' School, having complete charge of all the medical work for the next four years, after which he devoted most of his time to his general practice in Plainfield and vicinity until 1913, when he was again given full charge as physician at the Boys' School, having given up his practice entirely. Doctor Ragan has always taken an active interest in the various medical organizations with which he has been connected and has been president of the Hendricks County Medical Society. He also belongs to the Seventh District and Indiana medical societies.

Doctor Ragan has been married twice, his first wife being Jennie L. Vickery, to whom he was married January 1, 1880. She was born in Hendricks county and was the daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Vickery. To this marriage there were born two children, Dr. Charles E. Ragan, of Clinton, and Mrs. Ralph Bly, of Plainfield. Doctor Ragan's first wife died June 21, 1892, and on February 14, 1894, he was married to Mary E. (Huron) Cooper, the daughter of Abbott and Katherine Huron, of Hendricks county. There are no children by the second marriage, but his wife has one daughter by her former marriage, Katherine V. Cooper, who is a teacher in the public schools of Clearwater, Florida.

In politics, Doctor Ragan has affiliated with the new Progressive party, but the nature of his profession precludes him from taking a very active part in politics. He is a loyal member of the Christian church and has been an elder for the past twenty years. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Doctor Ragan has a large number of friends throughout the county who esteem him for his many sterling qualities. He takes an intelligent interest in the civic life of the community and his influence can always be found on the right side for the welfare of the community honored by his residence.

BENJAMIN W. ANDERSON.

It is not an easy task to describe adequately a man who has led an eminently active and busy life, and who has attained a place of relative distinction in the community with which his interests are identified. But biography finds its most perfect justification, nevertheless, in the tracing and recording of such a history. It is, then, with a full appreciation of all that is demanded and of the painstaking scrutiny that must be accorded each statement, and yet with a feeling of satisfaction, that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the details of the record of Benjamin W. Anderson, one of the most substantial farmers and business men of Plainfield.

Benjamin W. Anderson, president of the First National Bank of Plainfield, was born in Washington township, Hendricks county, Indiana, on August 29, 1862. He is the son of Thomas T. and Anna (White) Anderson, his father being a native of Obio and his mother of Wayne county, Indiana. Thomas Anderson was a farmer and brick mason and came to this county before the war, settling in Washington township, where he bought a quarter section of land. After living on it three years, he removed to Six Points, in the same county, where he farmed for the next nine years. He then moved to Iroquois county, Illinois, where he died in 1873. His widow died September 24, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Anderson were the parents of four children, two of whom are living, Benjamin W. and Eli H., both of whom have lived all their lives in the county of their nativity.

Benjamin W. Anderson, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in a log cabin in the clearing on his father's farm and received the limited education which the district schools of his time afforded. He then completed his schooling by attending the Central Academy at Plainfield. His whole life has been spent upon the farm and he is recognized as one of the most progressive farmers of the community. In addition to his crops of grain, he has always handled considerable live stock and no small part of his success has come from that side of his business. That he has been successful is shown by the fact that he was one of the principal organizers and stockholders in the First National Bank of Plainfield. He became president of the institution on December 24, 1903, and has held that important place up to the present time. In politics he has always taken an important part in the success of the Republican party and in the fall of 1908 was elected to the office of township trustee, an office which he is still holding. This is accounted for by the fact that the last Legislature extended the term of office to six years.

Mr. Anderson was married on July 16, 1912, to Mrs. Minnie (Mills) Hadley, the daughter of Aaron and Hannah Mills, and to this uunion there has been born one son, Benjamin Eli. Mr. Anderson has been a lifelong member of the Friends church and is now one of the board of trustees of the Western Yearly Meeting. He is an elder in the church and is superintendent of the Sabbath school at Plainfield at the present time. He is one of the trustees of Central Academy and is very actively interested in all matters pertaining to education. He is a charter member of Plainfield Lodge No. 653, Free and Accepted Masons. In addition to his farming, stock-raising and banking interests, Mr. Anderson is interested in the mill and grain business with Hubert Brown, the firm name being the Plainfield Milling Company. Mr. Anderson has been one of the valued citizens of his community and has been a hearty supporter of all enterprises which seek to ameliorate the condition of his fellow citizens or better the conditions of the county where he has spent such a busy life.

JOSEPH LANE WILSON.

Among the farmers of Hendricks county whose careers extend over a period of more than three score years is Joseph Lane Wilson, who comes from one of the oldest pioneer families of the state. Such people are welcomed in any community, for they are the empire builders and as such have pushed the frontier of civilization ever westward and onward, leaving the green, wide-reaching wilderness and the far-stretching plains populous with contented people and beautiful with green fields.

Joseph Lane Wilson, the son of Peter and Delilia (Case) Wilson, was born March 31, 1848, in Putnam county, Indiana. His father, who was born in Monroe county, Indiana, February 17, 1821, was the son of John C. and Frances (Wilson) Wilson, both natives of Kentucky who came to Putnam county in the early history of Indiana and settled near Greencastle. John C. Wilson, who was born in Kentucky September 2, 1795, and who died in 1870, was the son of Peter and — (Sears) Wilson, who were natives of Tennessee, but came to Kentucky, where they lived most of their lives. Frances Wilson also was a native of Kentucky, born July 29, 1797. John Wilson, the grandfather of Joseph Lane, entered land near where the town of Bainbridge stands and here Peter grew to manhood. In 1838, after Peter was grown, his father entered another tract in Putnam county about three miles southwest of New Winchester, and on this farm Peter made his home after marriage, which occurred on December 10, 1840, and reared his family. His wife, Delilia Case, was born April 8, 1820, the daughter of John and Julia (Finney) Case, and died March 11, 1887. Peter Wilson died on July 14, 1803. John Case was born May 15, 1795, and his wife Julia was born May 30, 1802.

The children born to Peter and Delilia (Case) Wilson, with the dates of their births, are as follows: Jelia F., July 27, 1843; John W., March 2, 1845; Ann M., May 2, 1846; Joseph L., March 31, 1848; Weden F., September 13, 1849; Michael T., July 21, 1851; Lewis C., June 13, 1853; Robert C., June 8, 1856; Amanda E., August 3, 1859.

Joseph Lane Wilson grew up on the farm entered by his grandfather, and received his meager schooling in the subscription schools of the period. He remained on the home farm until his marriage, which occurred in 1874. His wife was Mary J. Higgins, the daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Plaster) Higgins, a sketch of whose family is given elsewhere in this volume. To this marriage there was born one son, Edgar, who now lives on the farm where his father was reared. Edgar was married in 1898 to Letha Thomas, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Page Thomas. Edgar and wife have two children, Mary and Nellie.

The Case family, Mr. Wilson's mother's people, were among the earliest settlers of Putnam county, their ancestors having come from Connecticut in an early day and thence to Indiana. Two of the family, Leonard and Zachariah Case, recently died at Cleveland, Ohio, leaving a large estate which has not yet been settled. They were unmarried and left no will disposing of their fortune.

Mr. Wilson has lived more than forty years in Marion township and in that time has always been interested in the welfare of the community He is a public-spirited citizen who has never refused to assist in any movement which promised to benefit his locality in any way and for this reason is justly looked upon as one of the representative men of the county.

TOLIVER WORRELL.

The gentleman whose name heads this sketch is widely known in Hendricks county, Indiana, and is one of the honored citizens of Danville, where he is living after a strenuous life of activity in connection with agricultural pursuits. His well directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment have brought him prosperity, and his life demonstrates what may be accomplished by any man of energy and ambition who is not afraid to work and has the perseverance to continue his labors in the face of any disaster or discouragement that may arise. In all the relations of life Mr. Worrell has commanded the confidence and respect of those with whom he has been brought into contact and a biographical history of this locality would not be complete without a record of his career.

Toliver Worrell, the son of James and Elizabeth (Kenny) Worrell, was born in Carroll county, Virginia, on February 22, 1848. Both his parents were natives of Virginia and lived and died in that state. His father was a farmer and for many years was a justice of the peace in Carroll county. In Virginia at that time each county had three justices and these composed the county court. James Worrell was the presiding justice of this court for several years in his home county. Mr. and Mrs. James Worrell were the parents of eleven children, Toliver being the youngest. Four of these children are still living, William K., of Indianapolis; Robert L., of Tilden, this county; Mrs. Ellen H. Cook, of Indianapolis, and Toliver Worrell, the immediate subject of this sketch.

Toliver Worrell was reared on his father's farm in Virginia and received a good common school education in his home schools. At the age of twenty-one he came to Indiana, locating near Avon, Hendricks county. He rented a farm and continued to manage it for about two years, after which he moved to Middle township, near Pittsboro, this county, where he remained only one year, removing to Lincoln township at the end of that time, where he farmed for the next five years. He then settled permanently in Middle township, near Pittsboro, and remained there until 1902, when he removed to Danville, where he has continued to reside. Shortly after moving back to Middle township the last time he bought a farm there and has added to it from time to time. He still owns this tract and has now general supervision of the management of the farm.

Toliver Worrell was married to Julia O. Parker, of Middle township, Hendricks county, in 1875. Two children by this marriage are living in this county, N. E. and J. O. Worrell. His first wife died January 5, 1881. In 1900 Mr. Worrell married for his second wife Katherine Miller, the daughter of John and Ann (Bartley) Miller, of Washington township.

Mr. Worrell has been a Republican since reaching his majority and has always taken more or less of an active part in politics. For the past fitteen years he has been a member of the county council of Hendricks county, and has taken an active interest in the affairs of his home county. In private life he is broad-minded and liberal, keeping abreast of the times and in touch with current thought. He stands high in the esteem of those with whom he mingles and has many warm friends who esteem him for his many worthy qualities. Quiet and unostentatious, and seeking the sequestered ways of life rather than its tumult and strife, he has ever attended strictly to his own affairs and made better all who came within the range of his influence.

NICODEMIS HARRIS.

The sixty years which Nicodemis Harris has spent in this county have brought him in close touch with a large number of people and the reputation which he holds for square dealing and upright conduct in all things stamps him as a man who has lived a life above reproach. It is a well-established fact that a man can not live unto himself, but must be a part of the society which makes up his particular community. Mr. Harris has always taken a conspicuous part in the various movements which have had to do with the welfare of his locality and is rightly regarded as one of the representative men of Hendricks county.

Nicodemis Harris, the son of Nicodemis and Bedial J. (Davis) Harris, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, March 4, 1851, and has spent his whole life in the county of his nativity. His father was born September 29, 1810, in Mercer county, Kentucky, and his mother was also born in the same county, January 12, 1814. His parents were married in Kentucky and came to Hendricks county shortly after their marriage, arriving in Marion township in 1833. The grandparents of Nicodemis, Jr., were Frederick and Nancy (Higgins) Harris, who came from their native state of Virginia to Kentucky by way of the Ohio river. They first settled at Fort Harrod and later entered land in the vicinity of the fort.

Nicodemis Harris, Sr., applied for government land in 1833 and in 1834 he received a deed written on genuine sheep skin and signed by President Andrew Jackson. This deed is now a very highly prized document in the hands of Nicodemis, Jr. His deed called for one hundred and thirty-four acres in Marion township. Later he entered eighty acres in Putnam county, just across the township line to the west. He lived the life of a plain farmer all his life, and died in his seventy-minth year, in 1889. His wife passed away in January, 1896. She was an ardent member of the Missionary Baptist church at New Winchester and a woman of exceptionally strong character. Mr. and Mrs. Nicodemis Harris, Sr., were the parents of eight children: Frederick, Joseph, Thomas, Mary, John, Mrs. Virginia Flynn, Nicodemis, Jr., and William. All of the children are deceased except the last two, Nicodemis and William.

Nicodemis Harris has spent all his life on the farm, doing all the work which falls to the lot of the average farmer. He received a good practical education in the district schools and has supplemented it by wide reading since leaving school. He lived with his parents until they both passed away and was very solicitous in his care of them. He and his brother william have always lived together and are very much attached to one another.

Mr. Harris was married in 1893 to Rosa Edwards, the daughter of Joshua and Mary (Casey) Edwards. Joshua was a native of North Carolina, being born in that state in 1820. He came to Indiana with his parents when he was a lad of ten. His father, John Edwards, entered government land near Coatesville, this county, and on this farm Joshua was reared to manhood. His wife was a native of Ireland and came to this county with her parents when a small child. Mr. Edwards died January 18, 1905, and his widow passed away on July 18, 1909.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards reared a family of fourteen children, only four of whom are living: Mrs. Nora Pickett; Rosa, the wife of Mr. Harris; Eliza and Isaac. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have two sons who are still under the parental roof, Hilden and Frederick.

Mr. Harris is a stanch Democrat, but confines his political activities to the casting of his vote upon election days. He is a congenial man to meet and is well known in his county as an excellent judge of good stock. He and his family have many warm friends in the community in which they live who esteem them for their good qualities of head and heart.

CANADY H. DOWNARD.

There can be no more comprehensive history written of a city or county, or even of a state and its people, than that which deals with the life work of those who. by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have placed themselves where they may well deserve the title of "progressive," and in this sketch will be found the record of one who has outstripped the less active and less able plodders along the pathway of life. Canady H. Downard is one who has not been subdued by the many obstacles and failures that come to every one, but has made them stepping stones to higher things and at the same time that he was winning his way in material things of life gained a reputation for uprightness and probity.

Canady H. Downard, the son of David M. and Cassandra (Morgan) Downard, was born in Marion township, Hendricks county, Indiana, on December 23, 1862. His parents were both natives of this county, his father being a farmer and stock raiser and one of the substantial men of the township. The grandfather of Canady H. Downard was Judge James Downard, who was one of the first probate judges of the Hendricks county court and had the honor of laying out the town of Danville in 1825. Judge Downard was a native of Pennsylvania, came to the Northwest territory about 1811, removed to Kentucky a few years later and settled near Brooklyn, Indiana, in 1818. He afterwards moved to Indianapolis and shortly afterwards permanently located in Plainfield, where he lived until his death in 1846. To the subject's father were born ten children: James A.; Mrs. Martha Hammond, of Danville; Mrs. Mary J. Anderson, of Anderson; Canady H.; William, of East St. Louis; Erie, deceased; Oliver, of Lynn, Indiana; Frank, of Danville, and two who died in infancy.

Canady H. Downard was reared on the farm and received his common school education in the Marion township schools. He then took a course in the Central Normal College at Danville, after which he returned to the farm, where he has continued to live until the present time. In 1889 he was married to Nettie Hamrick, the daughter of William F. and Dicy (Blackburn) Hamrick. Mr. Hamrick was born in Flemingsburg, Kentucky, and came to this county in his boyhood with his parents, who settled in Marion township. He became one of the most successful farmers in the county and owned seventeen hundred acres at the time of his death. His wife was born in Madison county, Kentucky, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Blackburn. Mr. Hamrick was in the dry goods business for a time at Danville, but sold out and devoted his energies to the raising of Hambletonian horses and other fine stock. In his early life he was a Republican, but later in life he became a Prohibitionist. He and his wife were members of the Friends church. She died in 1808.

After Mr. Downard was married he began farming in Marion township and has always lived in that township with the exception of five months when he lived in Danville. He now has a fine farm of three hundred and twenty-five acres which he keeps in a high state of cultivation and in excellent repair at all times. He pays particular attention to stock raising and has made a success of it. He is a man of more than ordinary business ability and is able to grasp a proposition and determine its value very accurately. He is a quiet, sociable and pleasant man to meet and makes a stranger feel at home in a short time. His career has in every way been commendable and accounts for the high esteem in which he is held in the community in which he lives.

JAMES L. McCOUN.

The success of men in business or any vocation depends upon character as well as upon 'knowledge, it being a self-evident proposition that honesty is the best policy. Business demands confidence and where that is lacking business ends. In every community some men are known for their upright lives, strong common sense and moral worth rather than for their wealth or political standing. Their neighbors and acquaintances respect them, the younger generations heed their example, and when they "wrap the drapery of their couches about them and lie down to pleasant dreams" posterity listens with reverence to the story of their quiet and useful lives. Among such men of a past generation in Indiana was the late James L. McCoun, of Danville, Hendricks county, who was not only a progressive man of affairs, successful in material pursuits, but a man of modest and unassuming demeanor, well educated, a fine type of the reliable, self-made American, a friend to the poor, charitable to the faults of his neighbors and who always stood ready to unite with them in every good work and active in the support of laudable public enterprises. He was proud of Danville and of the grand state of Indiana and zealous of their progress and prosperity. He was a man who in every respect merited the high esteem in which he was universally held, for he was a man of public spirit, intellectual attainments and exemplary character.

James L. McCoun, one of Danville's best known citizens, was born in Putnam county, this state, on November 7, 1844, and died at his home in Danville, December 25, 1909. He was the son of Ward McCoun, one of the early pioneer settlers of the state. For many years Mr. McCoun was in the dry goods business in Danville, having associated with him in the firm his sons, Charles and Raleigh, and his nephew, James McCoun. He had made a success in business ranks and was regarded as one of the most substantial citizens of the town.

Mr. McCoun was married on August 12, 1863, to Fidelia McCoun, and to this union were born three sons, John S., who died February 18, 1880; Charles L. and Raleigh B., who are both now living in Danville. He was a loving and affectionate husband and father and was greatly interested in his domestic life. No father ever cared for his boys and looked after their welfare any more conscientiously than did he.

Mr. McCoun was a man among men, always stood for the right and considered those around him and those with whom he came in contact, and was always willing that others should have their own views on any subject, although they might be different from his own. On the other hand, he would never compromise when he thought he would be doing something wrong. As a friend he was true in every respect and any one in considering him on any question for the good of the community, always knew he was to be found on the right side. As a member of the Christian church he was one of the most faithful and there is no place outside of his home relations where he will be more missed than in the Christian church of Danville, where he had been a member for many years and where he had been an elder, serving faithfully and conscientiously. He was faithful in his attendance, not only at the regular Lord's day services of the church, but when in health was seldom absent from the mid-week prayer meeting, and those who attended these mid-week meetings always said that the talks of Mr. McCoun were very inspirational.

The funeral services were held in the church where he had so long been a devoted member, and were conducted by the Rev. Goodnight and Rev. Elvet E. Moorman and Rev. Edgar Fay Daugherty, a former pastor of the church, who delivered a sermon which was a masterpiece. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in Danville and the church was filled with relatives and hundreds of sympathizing and sorrowing friends. Mr. McCoun was prominent in all that counts for the ideal man. He had character of the highest type and stood for the best things. He was a part and parcel of those thoughts which are pure and his actions squared with his thoughts. He had the faculty of becoming interested in the daily affairs of the people about him and when one met him he felt at once that Mr. McCoun was genuinely sympathetic and sympathetically genuine. Some way or other one felt that there was just a little more sunshine in the world after he met him. Any movement that had for its object the betterment of his home town met with his hearty support. It can be truly said that his faith, his conscience, his purity, his spiritual service have passed from this world to the better world to come.

JOHN E. ENGLISH.

More than half a century has dissolved in the mists of the past since John E. English was born and during that momentous period he has witnessed and taken an active part in the general development of Hendricks county and is highly esteemed as one of its respected and worthy farmers, and during that time his integrity has never been questioned, nor has anything savoring in the least of dishonor ever attached to his name or reputation. He has ever tried to measure up to the standard of correct manhood and Hendricks county is proud to number him among its representative men.

John E. English, the son of Myzeal and Malinda (Arnold) English, was born four and one-half miles north of Danville, Indiana, on March 30, 1856. Myzeal English was a native of New Jersey, as were his parents. He came to this county with them when he was about eight years of age. Jonathan English, the father of Myzeal, entered land near the town of Danville and here he lived until his death. Myzeal English received schooling in the subscription schools of that day, and from his boyhood up had an overwhelming thirst for knowledge. When a mere youth he decided that he wanted to become a physician and with that end in view "read" medicine, as was the custom in those days, with some of the local physicians of his neighborhood. Afterwards he practiced in Hamilton and Boone counties for a number of years and later taught school in Center township for several terms. He was a man of great force of character and was one of the most influential men in the community. In addition to being a practicing physician, school teacher and farmer, he was, for a long time, a justice of peace in Union township. Because of his reputation for honesty and uprightness, men with grievances preferred to have them tried before Doctor English. Doctor English had a farm a mile and a half south of Lizton, after his return from Boone county, and on this farm of ninety-seven and a half acres he spent his spare time. He was married in March, 1854, to Malinda Arnold. To this union were born six children: George, of Shelby county, Indiana; John, whose history is herein portrayed; Mrs. Mary E. Jane Rutledge; Mrs. Sarah Helen Hamilton, deceased; Mrs. Eva Ogle and Charles H. Doctor English was a Democrat his whole life, but never held any public office other than that of justice of peace. He died May 31, 1906, of paralysis on his farm south of Lizton. His wife died December 3, 1907.

John E. English was given a good education by his worthy father and assisted on the home farm until his marriage. He was married October 25, 1882, to Florence Talbott, the daughter of Willis and Nancy (McCoun) Talbott. Willis Talbott was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, and in that state married Nancy McCoun in November, 1840. In February, 1841, the young couple came to Hendricks county on horseback and settled first on a farm in the south part of Eel River township, where they lived a few years, then moved to the first farm south of the present home of Mr. English and here spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Talbott was born in 1811 and died in 1881 and his wife died in 1898. There were eleven children in the Talbott family: Aria, deceased; Mrs. Rachel Griffes, deceased: John T., deceased; Dr. Robert C., of California; Nicholas L., deceased; Charles W., of California; Mrs. Mary L. Thomas, deceased; Nanny, deceased; Mrs. Scottie Sheets; Henry Clay, deceased, and Florence, the wife of Mr. English. Mr. and Mrs. English have two children, Mrs. Erie Inez Conn, deceased, and Willis M., who is salesman for the Stewart Talking Machine Company at Indianapolis. He married Helen Foore.

Mr. English is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Danville and the Knights of Pythias at Lizton. He and his wife are members of the Daughters of the Rebekah at Danville. While he has been a stanch Democrat all his life, he has confined his party activities to the casting of his vote at election time. As a citizen of the community and as the head of the family, Mr. English has been true in every relation of life to his highest ideals, and in no situation has he fallen short of the full measure of men. He has always been found on the right side of all questions affecting the public welfare and his life has been a credit to the county honored by his citizenship.

RICHARD T. DORMAN.

The career of the well-known gentleman whose name forms the caption for this biographical memoir was a strenuous and varied one, entitling him to honorable mention among the representative citizens of his day and generation in the county with which his life was so closely identified for so many years. Although he passed to the great beyond March 22, 1914, yet his influence still pervades the lives of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances who delighted to bonor him. As a private citizen, as a man of business, as a valiant soldier of the Civil War, he was always true to himself and his fellow men, and the tongue of calumny never touched him. Although he had been in this country but two short years when the Civil War opened, he went to the front and fought as bravely for his adopted country as any of her native sons.

Richard T. Dorman, who lived a retired life in Indianapolis for about one year after a long and successful business career in Hendricks county, was born April 10, 1843, in Brighton, England. Both of his parents were natives of England, and his father, Richard, never came to America. After his father's death his mother. Ann (Kent) Dorman, came to this country with her five children, landing in New York in 1860. While Richard, the subject of this sketch, remained in New York for some time, his mother and the other children went on to Kansas, where the mother died several years ago. The five children are as follows: Richard T., the oldest one of the family; James, who is now living in Kansas; Alfred, deceased; John, now a resident of Kansas; and Henry, who lives in Washington.

Richard T. Dorman was seventeen years of age when he first saw the shores of this country and for the first eight months of his life in the New World he worked in the city of New York. In 1861 he came west and finally stopped in Hendricks county, Indiana, where he found employment on the farm of Jack Parker, a farmer living south of Pittsboro. He continued to work for him until September, 1862, when he enlisted in Company H, Ninetyninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He served until the close of the war and participated in thirteen engagements, among which were the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and all the battles which General Sherman fought in his famous campaign to the sea. At Dallas, Georgia, he was shot in the head on June 13, 1863, but his heavy cap saved him from fatal injury.

Mr. Dorman came back to Hendricks county after he was mustered out and at once enrolled as a student in the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis. After remaining in school for some time he was compelled to take up some occupation for a living and, getting an opportunity to learn the plasterer's trade, he took that up and followed it until 1875, when he started in the mercantile business at Pittsboro, in Hendricks county. He was very successful from the start and for the next thirty years he maintained a general store in that place. He was a worthy representative of that foreignborn element in our population which has played such an important part in the development of our state. During his long business career he not only gained the confidence of his fellow business men, but as a man of force of character, upright and honest in his dealings with his fellow citizens, he gained the esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances in Hendricks county.

In 1902 Mr. Dorman sold his store at Pittsboro and removed to his farm in Putnam county, where he lived until 1911, but the call of the counter and the jingle of the cash register took him back into the business world again. He went to Elwood, Indiana, in 1911 and engaged in the mercantile business for eight months, but Father Time induced him to sell out and retire permanently from active business and he took his advice. He went to Indianapolis, where he lived until a few days before his death, when he moved to Brownsburg.

Mr. Dorman was married in 1873 to Seralda J. Dillon, who was born in Pittsboro. They are the parents of a very interesting family of ten children, all of whom are living but one. The children, in the order of their birth, are as follows: Ivan, of Martinsville, Indiana; Earl, who is an officer in the Fourth United States Cavalry, and now stationed in Hawaii; Erwin, of Montana; Ulrey, who is connected with the government survey service in New Mexico; Hubert, who is a solicitor for the Metropolitan Business College of Chicago; Clifford, who is now studying to be an electrical engineer; and three who are still under the parental roof, Alma, Mina (now Mrs. I. C. Gharst) and Kent. Mr. and Mrs. Dorman had just pride in their children and gave them the best education obtainable. They are all making a success in life and reflect honor on their parents.

Mr. Dorman was a life-long Republican, but was never a candidate for any public office, feeling that his business affairs demanded all of his time. However, he always kept in touch with the current issues of the day and discussed them intelligently. He was a consistent adherent of the Christian church and always contributed to the support of that denomination. Personally, Mr. Dorman was a man of clean character and ever exerted a wholesome and healthful influence in the community, giving his support to every movement which promised to advance the welfare of the localities in which he lived.

CHARLES C. CLAY.

Charles C. Clay, the son of John J. Crittenden Clay and Mattie (Walker) Clay, was born November 23, 1874, in Eel River township, this county. He was given a good common school education in the district schools of his home neighborhood, and early in life decided to devote his attention to agriculture and stock raising. His father had been a successful farmer and stock dealer and he worked with him until his marriage, and in this way received a practical education along those lines which he intended to make his life work. He continued to reside for two years after his marriage on his father's farm and then bought a farm one and one-half miles west of North Salem, which, with forty acres that he had inherited from his grandmother, gave him a fine tract of two hundred and fifty-five acres. Here he lived for seven years, and then moved into North Salem, where he has since resided. He still manages his farm, but puts most of his attention to the buying and shipping of live stock in car load lots. He keeps his farm well stocked at all times by buying the cattle in the city markets and placing them on his farm for fattening. In this way he makes use of all his own feed and grain which is raised on his land.

Mr. Clay was married in October, 1897, to Adina Emmons, daughter of James M. and Elizabeth (Trotter) Emmons. Her father was born October 28, 1828, in Giles county, Virginia, the son of Jehu and Sarah (Henderson) Emmons. When James M. was about eight years of age his parents moved to this state and located in Marion township, this county. About three years later they permanently located in Eel River township, where they lived the remainder of their lives. James M. Emmons was married in January, 1853, to Elizabeth Trotter, a native of this county and the daughter of James and Sarah (Whitt) Trotter, early pioneers of Hendricks county. After his marriage, James M. lived at North Salem, where he followed the trade of a carpenter and became a prosperous contractor and builder, an occupation which he followed the remainder of his life except when holding public office. In 1878 he was elected sheriff of Hendricks county and four years later was re-elected. Upon leaving the sheriff's office he bought a farm two miles south of North Salem, where he lived for ten years. He then sold his farm and moved to North Salem, where he has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Emmons reared a family of eleven children, eight of whom are still living: Oscar, of North Salem; Jewel, of Indianapolis; Leonidas, of Texas; Eldred, of Nebraska; Sarah Catherine, the wife of Nathan Davis, of Denver, Colorado; Ida, the widow of Wilson Haynes; Gertrude, the wife of Thaddeus Banta, of Decatur, Illinois, and Adina, the wife of Mr. Clay. The mother of these children died September 6, 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Emmons were both members of the Christian church.

Mr. Clay is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife are both consistent members of the Christian church of their town. They are the parents of four children, Mary, Emmons, Josephine and John J. C. Mr. Clay is one of the sterling and substantial citizens of North Salem, a man whose strong qualities demand respect, and whose congenial manner has won him many friends.

SAMUEL SHERMAN WATERS.

It is not given to all men to do more than one thing and do it well, but in the case of Samuel S. Waters it is found that he has followed three distinct professions and in each has given equally efficient and faithful service. Each position which he has held has called for special attainment and qualifications and in each case he has measured up to the full requirements of the position. For twenty-five years he was a successful school teacher in this county and then he entered the newspaper business at North Salem and in this was equally successful; later he was appointed postmaster of North Salem and as a result of civil service examination he holds this office as long as he performs his duties properly. With his superior qualifications and with his attention to his business, it means that he will hold this office as long as he lives, or until he resigns. His life has been a busy one.

Samuel Sherman Waters, son of Isaac B. and Elizabeth Ann (Watts) Waters, was born February 6, 1865, about three miles northeast of Brownsburg. The father, Isaac B. Waters, was born March 10, 1832, in Brown county, Ohio, and was the son of Philip and Lydia (Gardner) Waters. Philip Waters and his wife came to Hendricks county in 1834, when Isaac

B. was two years of age, and entered one hundred and twenty acres of land on November 3, 1834. Philip Waters died in 1851, at the age of fifty-one. having been born in Brown county, Ohio, in 1800. His wife died in 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Philip Waters were the parents of twelve children, Isaac being the only one who is living: the eleven deceased are as follows: Cary, Benjamin, Lucinda, Revnolds, Joseph, John, Raszilla, Matilda, and three who died in infancy. Isaac B. Waters was first married in 1858 to Elizabeth S. Walter, and to this union were born three children, two who died in infancy and Mrs. Fannie Williamson. Isaac B. Waters married his second wife, who was Elizabeth A. Watts, on November 19, 1863, and to this union were born five children, three dying in infancy, Samuel Sherman, whose history is herein given, and John T. Isaac Waters has lived in this county practically all of his life, spending two years, from 1865 to 1867, in Illinois, In addition to his farming, he was also a carpenter and cabinet-maker and in 1868 he went into the undertaking business. This he followed until 1904. when he transferred his business to his son John, who followed the same until 1913, when he sold out to W. C. Hicks. Isaac B. Waters was one of the progressive business men of Pittsboro. He built the block where he conducted his undertaking and furniture establishment, later selling this to Howard Stanley. He was very much interested in Masonry and had served seven terms as master of the Pittsboro lodge. He was justice of the peace for several years and was elected three times afterwards, but declined to serve. In addition to his career as a private citizen, he served a short time in the Civil War, enlisting October 1, 1864, in Company C, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and fought in the battles in North Carolina under Sherman in the spring of 1865. He was discharged June 10, 1865, at Washington, D. C., and mustered out in July following.

Samuel S. Waters has lived in this county all of his life with the exception of two years when his parents were in Illinois. After graduating from the common schools, he attended the Central Normal College at Danville and then began teaching school in this county. For the next twenty years he was engaged in teaching at and near Pittsboro, Lizton and North Salem and was regarded as one of the most successful teachers of the county. In 1906 he bought the North Salem Herald of B. M. Pace and continued as editor for the next seven years. In 1909 he was appointed postmaster of North Salem and later took the civil service examination and, the office being in the fifth class, he will retain the position as long as his services are satisfactory. Two rural routes out of Pittsboro serve about three hundred rural patrons.

In February, 1889, Mr. Waters was married to Ethel Wills, the daughter of J. M. and Alice (Dillon) Wills, of Pittsboro. To this marriage have been born two children, Horace Monroe and Mary Alice. Mr. Waters is a member of the North Salem lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. He has a pleasant and attractive home in Pittsboro, where the spirit of genuine hospitality is always in evidence and where he and his wife delight to entertain their many friends. He has always been a man of public-spirited energy and while a resident of Pittsboro has given his hearty support to all movements of a public nature which were directed towards the welfare of the community. He has been true to life in its every phase and the feeling of the community towards him is shown in the confidence and regard in which he is held by all who know him.

BERT A. WHITE.

Among the well-known and ppoular citizens of Hendricks county is Bert A. White, a business man of Brownsburg and the trustee of Lincoln township. He is a man who, by the exercise of his keen faculties, soundness of judgment and honest dealings with his fellow men, has earned a comfortable competency and is justly deserving of the high esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens.

Pert A. White, the son of Vincent and Cassandra (Black) White, was born August 8, 1867, in the township where he has always made his home. Vincent White was a native of Kentucky, and when about six years of age came to Indiana with his parents, Asa and Margaret (Hunter) White, who settled in Hendricks county. Asa White was a wagon-maker by trade and first settled in Danville, where he operated a shop for a few years, but later purchased a farm and continued his wagon making on the farm for the rest of his life. He made the wagons at times when he was not able to work on the farm, and in this way added not a little to his amual income. Vincent White was rearred on his father's farm and followed the occupation of a farmer all his life. After his marriage he lived on a farm near his father's place for a time and then moved to his wife's father's farm, where he lived twenty years. He is now living retired in Brownsburg. Cassandra Black, the wife of Vincent White, was born in Kentucky, coming here with her parents, John and Virginia (Campbell) Black, when she was a small child.

Bert A. White grew up near Brownsburg and has lived in the town of Brownsburg since he was twenty-one years of age. Most of his life he has been engaged in the meat business, and much of this time has conducted a meat shop in Brownsburg. He and his brother-in-law, Edgar Thompson, were in partnership for a time, and within ten years they sold and bought back their place of business several different times. From 1899 to 1903 Mr. White was a live-stock broker in the stock yards at Indianapolis, but again returned to Brownsburg, where he engaged in the meat business with his brother-in-law. Upon his return from Indianapolis he and his brother-in-law also operated a saw-mill for two years, afterwards selling the mill and engaging again in the meat business, which they continued until 1912, when Mr. White retired from this business altogether.

In 1908 Mr. White was elected as trustee of Lincoln township, and since 1912, when he closed out his meat business, has given his entire attention to the duties of this important office. Since the 1913 Legislature extended his term of office two years, he is still holding the office and his term will not expire until the end of 1914. He attends strictly to the various duties connected with this position and is making a very competent and efficient official. There is no more important office in the United States than that of the humble trustee, and no other official handles as much real power as does he. He is both an administrative and legislative official and is practically the king within his own balliwick.

Mr. White was married June 16, 1889, to Mary E. Thompson, the daughter of Squire and Millicent (Griggs) Thompson, both of whom were born, reared and married near Richmond, Kentucky. Squire Thompson was the son of Jesse and Mary (Little) Thompson, both of whom lived and died in Kentucky, and his wife was the daughter of Martin and Eliza (Burgess) Griggs, who were also life-long residents of Kentucky. The Thompsons came to Indiana and settled in Hendricks county about 1870. Squire Thompson was a stock buyer and moved to Brownsburg about 1881, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1006. He was an active Republican and he and his wife are loval and consistent members of the Christian church. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias and was known as a very industrious and progressive man in every way. He was a public-spirited citizen, who was always on the alert for the welfare of his community. His wife died in 1905. Mr. and Mrs. White are the parents of four children: Bessie A., the wife of William H. Cosby, of Indianapolis, has one son, Harold; Nellie, William Leslie and Herbert, the last three named being still under the parental roof.

Mr. White lends his support to the Democratic party at all times and has always been a prominent figure in the caucuses and conventions of his party. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Tribe of Ben-Hur, taking an active interest in the workings of these fraternal orders, while he and his wife are both loyal and consistent members of the Christian church, to which they give their zealous support. He and his wife have worked hard for their success and they made what they have honestly and they can claim a wide circle of friends here who rejoice with them in their prosperity. They started out in life without much in the way of worldly goods, but have worked hard together, have been economical and managed well and for this reason they have the entire respect and esteem of all who know them, for their lives have been above reproach and they are regarded as good neighbors and obliging friends.

PHILLIP B. HERRING.

The psalmist says that three score and ten years is the allotted span of man's life and yet there are scores of people living in Hendricks county who have passed that age and hundreds of others who are just approaching it. Among the latter is Phillip B. Herring, who was born in 1846 in Hendricks county, near Clayton. His parents were Azriah and Ellen (Beasley) Herring, both natives of Kentucky, who both came to this county in early days with their parents and were married at Belleville. Azriah Herring worked by the day at various kinds of employment for the first ten or twelve years after his marriage, when he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land in the western part of Brown township. On this farm he lived for the next thirty years, when he sold it and bought another farm in the northwestern part of the same township, where he lived until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Azriah Herring reared a family of fourteen children.

Phillip B. Herring lived under the parental roof until he was married in 1874 and often laughs because he was married at seven o'clock on the morning of January 1st, saying that for once he started the new year right. Previous to his marriage he had purchased thirty-three acres of land where he now resides, and since that time has added twenty-seven acres more until he is now owner of sixty acres of as fine farming land as can be found in the county. On this farm he has a good house and large and commodious barns and outbuildings, and has his farm well improved in every way.

Mr. Herring was married to America Walker, the daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Ann (Menefee) Walker, who were both natives of Kentucky, coming to this county after their marriage, settling in Washington township about 1862, but later buying forty acres of land in Brown township. America Walker was one of three children living at home when she was married. Mr. and Mrs. Herring are the parents of four children: Minnie Alice, who married Conrad Marker, the son of Amos and Laura Marker, and they live just across the road from Mr. Herring and have a family of four children, Lawrence, Cleo, Eula L. and Violet A.; Angie Belle is the wife of Virgil S. Watson, the editor of the Brownsburg Record, whose history is given elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Watson have one daughter, Hazel Bernice; Mary E., who lives at home, and Carl C., who married Sallie Funkhouser, the daughter of Lucien and Mira (Crane) Funkhouser. Carl is a farmer living in this township.

Mr. and Mrs. Herring are both loyal and faithful members of the Methodist Protestant church at Brownsburg and give it their zealous support, having always been interested in the activities of this denomination. Mr. Herring, in addition to his farming interests, made a specialty of breeding fine horses and has won several prizes at the county and state fairs with some of his best stock. In recent years he has retired from active work and at the present time is only supervising the management of his farm. He is a well preserved man, despite his sixty-eight years, and has a host of friends wherever he is known. Through his long residence in this county he has gained an enviable reputation for his integrity and generosity, and is justly regarded as one of the representative men of his community.

GEORGE B. DAVIS.

There is nothing which stimulates a man to deeds of worth and a life of uprightness and rectitude more than the recollection of the strength of character and examples of right living which have been shown by his forbears. In this respect Mr. Davis is fortunate beyond the majority of men in being descended from a line of men who have been in their communities men of strength and influence, doing their duty well, whether in the peaceful pursuits of ordinary life or in positions of public trust. A heritage of such memory of the lives of one's forefathers is of more value than a heritage of material wealth. In the business affairs of North Salem the subject of this sketch occupies a position of importance and among those who are today conserving the commercial and industrial prosperity of this community none occupy a higher standing among their associates than he whose name appears at the head of this sketch.

George B. Davis, a banker of North Salem, was born April 14, 1869, near this town. His parents were Francis Marion and Sarah E. (Brown) Davis. Francis Marion Davis was born near North Salem in 1837, the son of Nathan and Nancy Davis, who came to this county about 1833 from Mount Sterling, Kentucky. Nathan and Nancy Davis spent the remainder of their lives in North Salem, dving here in the early history of the state. Francis Marion grew up to manhood in this county, farmed, operated a sawmill, flour-mill, a planing-mill, dealt extensively in lumber in Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, and was one of the most enterprising business men who ever managed a financial transaction in this county. He was active up until the time of his death in 1887. He was a member of the Masonic order, active in the Christian church, a public-spirited citizen, who was very frank in his manner. His wife, Sarah E. Brown, was born near Cove Spring, Kentucky, and came to this county early in childhood with her parents, George M. and Martha Brown. Later her parents moved to Crawfordsville, where her father spent his last days. His mother still lives in North Salem.

George B. Davis was given a common school and high school education in his home town and then attended Butler College for four years, after which he graduated from the State University at Bloomington in the spring of 1894. He received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Butler College, and the degree of Bachelor of Laws from Indiana University. Before he had finished his course at Bloomington, he had become part owner of the North Salem Bank and to this financial institution he has devoted his time ever since leaving college.

The North Salem Bank was organized in 1891 by Pritchard & Son of Illinois. In 1893 they sold it to C. W. Davis, G. B. Davis and Samuel R. Stewart. Soon after this, Mr. Stewart sold his interests to J. B. Fieece and the bank is now owned by C. W. Davis, G. B. Davis and Samuel R. Stewart. The deposits now average one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and it is considered one of the strongest and safest private banks in central Indiana. It is well managed and is an institution which has won the confidence of the people of North Salem and vicinity, because all of the owners are upright men of excellent education.

Mr. Davis was married in December, 1897, to Lulu C. Duncan, the daughter of George H. and Nancy (Davis) Duncan. She was born and reared in Eel River township, this county, near North Salem, and received her education in the North Salem schools. Her parents were both born and reared in this county and have spent their whole life here. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have three children: Rollin, aged eleven; Mildred, aged nine, and Mary Eunice, aged six. The family are members of the Christian church and Mr. Davis is president of the board and treasurer of the church. Mr. Davis is a man of unassuming demeanor in his relations to his fellow men. among whom he enjoys a well deserved popularity, and has, without reserve, always been for the best things in life for the community honored by his residence and here his name has become known for his sterling character and worth.

GRANDISON EATON

If for no other reason, the life history of Grandison Eaton, well-known citizen of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, Indiana, should be contained in this work because he is one of the honored veterans of the great War of the Rebellion, who unhesitatingly gave up the pleasure of home associations and the opportunities of business and offered his services and his life, if need be, in order that the nation might be perpetuated and the Star and Stripes saved from treason and hishonor; but there are other reasons, one of which is that he has led a life of honesty and sobriety and another is that he has done much for the general good of his community here.

Grandison Eaton, a distinguished veteran of the Civil War and publicspirited citizen of Brownsburg, was born in Hendricks county, September 13, 1837, and has spent his whole life within the county. His parents were Greenup and Mahala (Turpin) Eaton. Greenup Eaton was born in 1813 in Bourbon county, Kentucky, and came to this county in childhood with his parents, his father dying soon after their arrival in this county. Mahala Turpin was born in Scott county, Kentucky, in 1815, and reared to young womanhood near Clermont, in Marion county, this state. ' She was the daughter of Jacob and Martha Turpin, who came from Kentucky among the early pioneers. Jacob Turpin was born in 1785 in the eastern part of Maryland and was a son of William and Nancy (Hanley) Turpin. William Turpin's father was a soldier of the Revolution and lived to the advanced age of over one hundred years. In 1786 William and Nancy Turpin left Maryland and went to Kentucky, and for the first few years were compelled to live in a block house with the other settlers of the community for safety, as at that time the Indians were on the war path and practically all of the settlers of Kentucky were gathered in the block houses scattered throughout the state. Jacob Turpin married Martha Taylor in Bourbon county, Kentucky, in 1804. Martha Taylor was born in 1786, of Scotch ancestry. Jacob Turpin and his wife moved to Scott county, Kentucky, and in 1820 came to Indianapolis when it had not even yet reached the dignity of a village. In 1829 Jacob Turpin and his wife moved to the eastern part of Hendricks county, near Clermont. At that time there were no bridges nor roads and the farm on which they settled was a virgin wilderness in every respect. Jacob Turpin started in to clear the ground and make a home. He died in 1849 and she in 1855.

Greenup Eaton, the father of Grandison, whose history is here presented, came from Marion county, Indiana, to Hendricks county while still a boy and hired out to the farmers in this county to work by the day. He married Mahala Turpin, and to them were born four children, James Samuel, William Harrison, Grandison and Ruann. When Grandison was about three years of age his mother died, and his father afterwards married Melinda Smith, and to this second marriage five children were born, Reuben, Thomas, Willard F., Fannie and Mahala J. The mother of these children died after Mahala was born, the latter being then reared by Moses Gwinn. Some time after the death of his second wife, Greenup Eaton married Cynthia Watson, and to his third marriage were born seven children: Marcelite, the wife of Joseph Jones; Luna, the wife of Oliver Parsons; Estella, who married William Ellis; Henry, who was at one time sheriff of Hendricks county, and Charles and Allen, both of whom died in infancy.

Greenup Eaton made his home two miles north of Brownsburg, where he operated a brick yard and also followed the trade of a bricklayer. He was one of the first men to place brick on the ground for the erection of the present insane asylum at Indianapolis. He and two other brick men ran a race to see which one would be the first to get a load of brick on the ground and he was the winner. He was a man who was intensely devoted to his country and had a deep-seated hatred of slavery. When the Knights of the Golden Circle began their nefarious operations in Indiana, he waged incessant war against them, and did everything that he could to break up their organization in his county. Four of his sons, William Harrison, Grandison, Reuben and Thomas, went to the front and all of them made valiant soldiers for the Union. He died in 1866, a man universally honored and respected.

Grandison Eaton, the son of Greenup Eaton by his first marriage, grew up on the home farm and in September, 1861, enlisted in Company B, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. A large number of Hendricks county boys were in this same regiment, among whom was Judge John V. Hadley, editor of the historical section of this volume. Eaton was at the front nearly four years and served in many of the most important battles of the Civil War, among which were the battles of Gettysburg, Antietam, Spotsylvania, Chancellorsville, second battle of Bull Run and many others of minor importance. After being mustered out, he returned to this county and resumed his trade of brick-making and brick-laying. This has been his life work until a few years ago when he retired from manual labor. He has built a majority of the brick structures in and around Brownsburg, his first experience being before the Civil War opened during the Lincoln campaign, when he laid the brick in the building which is now occupied by the Hunter Bank of Brownsburg. Mr. Eaton has prospered because of his industry and good business abilities and now owns the postoffice building, the two buildings across the street from the postoffice, the second building east of the postoffice, the property occupied by the telephone exchange and residence properties in the town. As a contractor he has always rendered good service and his buildings will remain for many years to come as monuments to his honest labor.

Mr. Eaton was married January 8, 1865, to Mary S. Lawler, who was born in 1841, near Clayton, this county. Her parents were Nicholas and Ann (Buchanan) Lawler, natives of Kentucky, who came to Jennings county. Indiana, and from thence to this county in an early day. Nicholas Lawler was a life-long farmer.

Politically, Mr. Eaton has been a life-long Republican, and has always kept abreast of the times in political matters, although he has never been a candidate for any public office. He is a great reader of all kinds of literature and has always been deeply interested in the local history of his county. He is a loyal member of the Grand Army of the Republic, which was established in 1866 at Decatur, Illinois, and takes a prominent part in all the Memorial day services in his county. It is interesting to note in this connection that the Grand Army of the Republic reached its highest membership of four hundred thousand four hundred eighty-nine in 1890, and that today it has been reduced by death to less than one hundred and seventy-five thousand. The Grand Army of the Republic has held a national encampment every year since 1866 excepting 1867, and has gathered in nearly every important city in the United States. It was the originator of May 30th as Memorial day, the first Memorial day being celebrated in the year 1868. Mr. Eaton is a public-spirited man who has been a prominent factor in the business life of Brownsburg. He is a sociable man, highly esteemed and one of those whole-souled, genial men whom every one likes to meet.

CLARK H. SELLARS.

Self-assertion is believed by many people to be absolutely necessary to success in life, and there are good reasons for the entertainment of such belief. The modest man very rarely gets what is due him. The selfish, aggressive man elbows his way to the front, takes all that is in sight and it sometimes seems that modesty is a sin, with self-denial the penalty. There are, however, exceptions to all rules, and it is a matter greatly to be regretted that the exceptions to the conditions are not more numerous. One notable exception is the case of the honorable gentleman whose life history we here present, who possesses just a sufficient amount of modesty to be a gentleman at all times, and yet sufficient persistency to win in the business world and at the same time not appear overbold. As a result of these well and happily blended qualities, Mr. Sellars has won a host of friends in Guilford township, Hendricks county, where he is well known to all classes as a man of influence, integrity and business ability.

Clark H. Sellars, one of the prominent farmers and stock raisers of Guilford township, this county, was born October 26, 1869, in the township where he has always resided. His parents were John and Adaline (Coble) Sellars. His father was one of the leading ministers of the Friends church and preached at Mooresville for the most of his life. The grandparents on both sides came from North Carolina, and originally from Germany. John Sellars was married twice and to his first marriage was born seven children. His first wife died in March, 1806, and a few years later he married Rebecca Doan. The seven children of the first marriage are as follows: Albert H., deceased, who married Ida Hight; William, of LaMar, Missouri, who married Rosa Fogleman and has five children living and two deceased; Dossie, of Morgan county, the wife of W. O. Latta, a farmer, who has six children living and two deceased; Charles, of Indianapolis, who married Violet Moore: Clark H., of whom we are writing: R. D., a farmer of Morgan county. who married Sallie Sumner and has three children living and one deceased; Addison, a merchant of Mooresville, who married Maud Scruggs and has two children. Mrs. John Sellars died in 1896 and her husband five years later, having lived on the same farm in Guilford township for thirty-one years previous to his death.

Clark H. Sellars was married August 23, 1893, to Flora C. Thompson, the daughter of John S. and Martha E. (Latta) Thompson. John S. Thompson was a farmer of Morgan county and a veteran of the late Civil War, dying in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Clark H. Sellars are the parents of five children: Pearl Marie, born February 7, 1894, who, after graduating from the Mooresville high school, began teaching school and has continued at that profession up to the present time; Claire J., born January 27, 1896, who is a graduate of the Mooresville high school and the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute; Dorrett Laurene, born January 29, 1899, a graduate of the Mooresville high school; Grace Hildren, born January 19, 1901; Paul Lee, born January 13, 1904.

Mr. Sellars and the members of his family are adherents of the Friends church and are generous supporters of all of the organizations of their church. Mr. Sellars has allied himself to the new Progressive party, because he feels that in the principles advocated by this party the welfare of the nation will be the best served. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. Mr. and Mrs. Sellars have reared a very interesting family, and have had the pleasure of seeing their children rise to lives of honor and usefulness. They have given them the advantages of the best educational institutions in the state, and they have responded by doing their part in a very satisfactory manner. Mr. Sellars is one of the most substantial men of the county, and has helped very materially in the advancement of his community, giving his support to all worthy enterprises and measures.

MARION BAILEY.

An enumeration of those men of the present generation who have won honor and public recognition for themselves in Hendricks county, and at the same time have honored the locality to which they belong, would be incomplete were there failure to make specific mention of Marion Bailey, of Union township. The qualities which have made him one of the prominent and successful men of Hendricks county have also brought him the esteem of his fellow men, for his career has been one of well directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods. Yet he has not neglected to take his part in the public life of his community.

Marion Bailey, the president of the Lizton Bank and vice-president of the Citizens State Bank at Jamestown, was born December 1, 1854, near St. Paul. His parents were John and Catherine (Emdy) Bailey. John Bailey was born in Butler county, Ohio, September 19, 1827, and came with his parents to Shelby county, Indiana, when a small boy. In 1861 John Bailey with his family, moved to this county and settled in Union township near

MR. AND MRS. MARION BAILEY

Lizton, where he followed the life of a farmer and stock raiser until his death in 1902. The wife of John Bailey was a native of Shelby county, Indiana, and died in 1855, when Marion was only one year of age. John Bailey was the father of fourteen children: Mrs. Elizabeth Smith; Sarah, who died at the age of two; Mrs. Eva A. Campbell, and Marion, whose history is herein delineated, are the children of his first wife, Catherine Emdy. Mrs. Mary E. Dale; George W.; Peter N.; Mrs. Ellen Hall; Mrs. Nettie Hedge; Mrs. Nora E. Lee; Edgar; William, who died at the age of three; John T., and one child which died in infancy, are children by his second marriage, to Rebecca J. Reed.

'Marion Bailey was given a good education in the schools of Lizton and Jamestown and assisted his father on the farm until his marriage, at the age of twenty-three. He was married November 15, 1877, to Rachel C. Young, the daughter of Milton and Susan Young, and to this union have been born five children. The first died in early infancy: Harry E., who married Dora Brown; Harry is a farmer living near Lizton and has two children, Buford E. and Veletia; Artie M., a farmer of Boone county, who married Nora Coombs and has two children, Kenneth and Earl; Luna A., the wife of Stewart Pritchett. a farmer of Boone county, has two children. Thelma and Lorin; Goldie Vesper, a farmer of this township who married Ruth Keeney and has one child, Ranold Marion.

Immediately after his marriage, Mr. Bailey began farming in Union township and has been a successful farmer from the beginning and now owns three hundred and eighty-seven and a half acres in this county and Boone county. In 1903 he made his first venture in the banking business and upon the organization of the Citizens Bank at Jamestown, in Boone county, he became vice-president and has continued in that capacity up to the present time. Pre-eminent among his many good qualities is that of sound financial judgment and an ability to grasp facts and infer their practical significance with almost unerring certainty. After once engaging in the banking business he became interested in it and began to make a study of practical banking. In 1910 he helped to organize the Lizton Bank and has been president of that financial institution ever since its organization. Both of the banks with which he is connected are in a flourishing condition and have gained the confidence of the community which they serve.

However, Mr. Bailey's life has not always been devoted to business, for he has taken a prominent part in the public affairs of his community and state and for the past thirty years has been one of the prominent figures in Democratic politics in his county and for the last ten years a conspicuous figure in state politics. His first official position was trustee of his township. an office which he held from 1888 to 1805; he then served as a member of the county advisory board, getting his appointment through the governor, then served three years on the state board of charities and correction, this board being composed of three citizens of the state selected by the governor. Mr. Bailey's first entry into state politics was in 1906, when he was nominated by the Democratic state convention for state auditor, and, although the whole Republican ticket was elected in that year, he was defeated by only thirtytwo votes. In 1908 the Democratic state convention recognized in him a man of great ability and a man who would make an effective appeal to the voters of the state, and they again placed him before the Democrats of the state on the ticket for state auditor. Again, however, the fortunes of politics were against him and this time he was defeated by a vote of only one hundred and twenty-eight out of a total of nearly six hundred and fifty thousand votes. It will be seen from what has been said of Mr. Bailey that he is a man of marked ability along many lines. As a political leader his convictions of right and wrong have been sharply separated and he has always taken a positive stand for clean politics and better political conditions generally. He has always heartily endorsed the maxim that he serves his party best who serves his country best, and upon all questions involving the material, moral and educational interests of society he has always endeavored to ascertain the right involved, with a view of acting in conformity therewith.

Mr. Bailey is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Improved Order of Red Men and Pythian Sisters at Lizton; the Free and Accepted Masons at Jamestown and the Royal Arch Masons at Danville. He is also a member of the Indiana Democratic Club, Indianapolis. Mr. Bailey has a reputation as a hard worker and a man of good judgment and honest principles. He is a self-made man and one who has in every respect merited the high esteem in which he has been universally held. He has been recognized as a man of public spirit, intellectual attainment and exemplary character.

MILLARD TYRA HUNTER.

No citizen is better or more favorably known in Hendricks county today than Millard Tyra Hunter, the president of the Hunter Bank, of Brownsburg. He has witnessed the wonderful development of this locality and played no inconspicuous role in the growth of the same, for he has had its interest at heart and was ever ready to do his full share in the work of progress. As a farmer he was one of the most successful in the county, and as a merchant he was no less successful, while as a banker he has shown those business qualities which mark him as a man of more than ordinary ability.

Millard Tyra Hunter, a banker of Brownsburg, was born April 14, 1851, in Middle township, this county. His parents were Lewis S. and Elizabeth A. (Parker) Hunter. Lewis S. Hunter was born in 1813 in Fleming county, Kentucky. His father died when he was only three months old and when he became of age his mother came from Kentucky and settled in Middle township. There Lewis Hunter married and afterwards lived the life of a farmer until 1852, when he came to Brownsburg and engaged in the general mercantile business, in which he continued until the opening of the Civil War, when he sold out and resumed farming. He owned a farm one mile east of Brownsburg, but lived in the town. Lewis S. Hunter was an active Republican and in the early days was appointed county tax collector. He, with his wife, were members of the Christian church and he was a man who was highly respected by his neighbors. He died in January, 1892, and his widow survived him five years.

Millard Tyra Huunter received his education in the Brownsburg schools and after his graduation from the high school attended Butler College. After leaving college he returned to the farm and later clerked for Cope & Hunt in their store in Brownsburg. After his marriage Mr. Hunter went to farming for himself east of Brownsburg and remained on the farm about twelve years. He then moved into Brownsburg and engaged in the dry goods business, although he still managed his farm, and has never entirely relinquished his agricultural interests. He continued in the dry goods business until 1907, when he discontinued this line of endeavor and opened the Hunter Bank at Brownsburg, of which he has been president since its organization. This bank has had a remarkably successful career since the date of its organization, and the following statement, which was issued at the close of its business on October 21, 1913, shows the remarkable progress which it has made in seven years: Resources-Loans and discounts, $160,422.87; overdrafts, $530.81; furniture and fixtures, $1,400.00; due from banks and trust companies, $47,478.93; cash on hand. $4,484.08; cash items. $1,276.35; current expenses, $2,082.00; total, $217,675.04. Liabilities-Capital stock paid in, $10,000.00; surplus, $2,500.00; demand deposits, $150,121,34; demand certificates, $42.053.00; exchange, discounts, etc., $4,000.00; total, $217,-675.04.

The bank seeks to serve the town of Brownsburg and vicinity and is doing an ever-increasing business, which is a tribute to the business ability of Mr. Hunter and the confidence which the people of the community have in him.

Mr. Hunter was married in the fall of 1879 to Mary Larsh, who was born in Clermont, Indiana, and came to Brownsburg when she was about twelve years of age with her parents. Mr. Hunter is a Republican in politics and has served as trustee of Lincoln township, although he is not active in politics at the present time. He and his wife are loyal members of the Christian church of Brownsburg, and give it their zealous support. Mr. Hunter is a man who has shown rare business qualities, and in all of his financial dealings he has so conducted himself that he has won the hearty approbation of his fellow men. He is a worthy scion of one of the old and influential pioneer families of this locality, and has kept untarnished the good name which his ancestors ever bore unsullied.

CLEO L. HUNT.

It cannot be other than interesting to note in the series of personal sketches appearing in this work the varying conditions that have compassed those whose careers are outlined, and the effort has been made in each case to throw well focused light onto the individuality and to bring into proper perspective the scheme of each respective career. Each man who strives to fulfill his part in connection with human life and human activities is deserving of recognition, whatever may be his field of endeavor, and it is the function of works of this nature to perpetuate for future generations an authentic record concerning those represented in its pages, and the value of such publications is certain to be cumulative for all time to come, showing forth the individual and specific accomplishments of which generic history is ever engendered.

Cleo L. Hunt, the cashier of the Hunter Bank of Brownsburg, was born in Brownsburg, April 15, 1880. His parents were Cyrus N. and Julia A. (Hunter) Hunt. Cyrus N. Hunt, the son of Cyrus Hunt, Sr., was born at Belleville, this county, and was a merchant in Brownsburg from about 1867 until his death in January, 1891. He was a member of the Christian church, and was prominent in local public affairs of his community. Cleo L. Hunt was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Hunt.

Cleo L. Hunt was first educated in the common schools, and graduated from Shortridge high school at Indianapolis in 1899, after which he entered Butler College and graduated from that institution in 1904. While in college he took a prominent part in college activities and was a member of the Greek-letter fraternity of Phi Delta Theta. After graduating from college he returned to Brownsburg, and when the Hunter Bank was organized in 1907 he was elected cashier and has continued in that capacity until the present time. He has shown ability to grasp financial matters in a comprehensive manner and his usefulness to the bank is increasing year by year.

Mr. Hunt was married in 1908 to Lura Harold, the daughter of Dr. Cyrus N. and Ella (Spencer) Harold, of Indianapolis, Doctor Harold is a practicing physician in Indianapolis, and was born near Carmel, Indiana, his wife being a native of Henry county, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are both devout church members, he belonging to the Christian church, while she holds her membership in the Friends church. Mr. Hunt is a man of strong intelligence and good judgment and with the qualities of business management which he has developed he will become increasingly useful to society as he grows older. He is a man of pleasing personality who easily makes friends, and because of his splendid qualities of head and heart his friends are as numerous as his acquaintances.

JAMES NELSON LOCKHART.

In the removal of James N. Lockhart from this mundane sphere on the last day of 1912, there was removed another of those prominent farmers of this county who have made their way in life by force of their own merit and industry from small beginnings to great success and his memory will long be revered and his influence felt for good in this section of our commonwealth. He was of a turn to win the confidence and good will of those with whom he came into contact, and to retain their esteem and friendship without effort. He was a man of absolute honesty, always on the advance and managed his agricultural interests with a skill and prudence which came of a practical knowledge of every branch of the business.

James Nelson Lockhart was born near Martinsville, in Morgan county, this state, in 1848, and died at his home in Eel River township, this county, December 31, 1912. He was the son of Jarman and Leah (Robbins) Lockhart, and a brother of Jacob Lockhart, whose history is found elsewhere in this volume and contains the ancestry of the Lockhart family. John Lockhart died when James was a small boy and the widow and her four children moved from Morgan county to Marion township, in this county, on her father's farm. Here James grew to manhood and as soon as he was old enough to do a day's work he started to work for his uncle, William Robbins, for whom he worked several years, saved his money and rented a farm, to which he took his mother and some of his brothers and sisters.

James M. Lockhart was naturally a man of keen discernment and good business qualities, and saved his money with the intention of investing in land. In 1888 he bought a farm, but four years later sold it and bought one hundred and eighty-four acres one mile south of North Salem. This farm he improved and brought to a state where it is the equal of any in the county in productivity. He is an excellent and capable farmer, because he really loves his occupation, and for this reason has been able to live a contented and at the same time successful life.

Mr. Lockhart was married in February, 1895, to Mrs. Anna (Rook) Weakley, who was born at Phillipsburg, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Amos D. and Margery (Currey) Rook. Her parents came to Hendricks county after the close of the Civil War, and after a temporary stop in Putnam county, near Roachdale, this state, they permanently located in this county near Montclair. The Rook family moved to Kansas some years after they came to this county, where they lived for a short time, and while in that state, in 1884, Anna Rook married Thomas Weakley. Mrs. Rook died in 1870 and Mr. Rook survived her many years, his death occurring in 1012. Thomas Weakley, the first husband of Mrs. Lockhart, was born near Pittsboro, this county, and was a son of Perry and Arthusa (Smith) Weakley. When he was nine years of age his parents moved to LaBette county, Kansas, when there were only twenty-six white settlers in that county. In 1888, five years after he and Anna Rook were married, he came back to this county and died a year later, leaving his widow and two sons, Claude and Paul. Claude married Pearl Baggs, of Edelstein. Illinois, and lives on the old Lockhart farm one mile south of North Salem. Paul is living with his mother in North Salem at the present time. To Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart was born a daughter, Bertha Clare, who was born near North Salem, and who remains at home and is attending school.

After Mr. Lockhart was married in 1891, they lived on a farm near Montclair until 1903, when they moved to a farm one mile south of North Salem, which he had previously purchased. In 1907 Mr. Lockhart purchased a home in North Salem, where he lived until his death. Mr. Lockhart was a life-long Republican, althought he never aspired to any office at the hands of his party. He and his wife were both members of the Christian church and gave it their earnest and consistent support. At the time of his death Mr. Lockhart owned one hundred and eighty-four acres of land and three acres in North Salem.

The community lost one of its best citizens when Mr. Lockhart passed away. He was a man of essentially domestic tastes and was usually to be found at home with his family. He was a man who was honest and upright in all of his dealings and one who was highly respected by all with whom he came into contact. He was a man of modest and unassuming demeanor, a fine type of the reliable, self-made American, a friend to the poor, and a man who united with his neighbors in every good work.

HON, SAMUEL H. ELROD.

True biography has a more noble purpose than mere fulsome eulogy. The historic spirit, faithful to the record; the discerning judgment, unmoved by prejudice and uncolored by enthusiasm, are as essential in giving the life of the individual as in writing the history of a people. Indeed, the ingenuousness of the former picture is even more vital, because the individual is the national unit, and if the unit be justly estimated the complex organism will become correspondingly intelligible. The world today is what its leading men have made it. This is especially true of those whose influence has passed beyond the confines of locality and permeated the larger life of a state.

Indiana has been the birthplace and early home of many men who have gained honor and distinction in the newer states of our great West. Of this number, notable mention is due Hon, Samuel H. Elrod, former governor of South Dakota, recognized today as one of the strong and noble characters of that great commonwealth. A man of superior ability and great usefulness, a citizen representative of the utmost loyalty to every obligation of citizenship, he has given much to aid and sustain the civic and material prosperity of his adopted state, and his name is enshrined in the hearts of the people of South Dakota as one who has always given of his best.

Samuel H. Elrod was born in Clay township, Hendricks county, Indiana, May I, 1856, a son of Jesse F. and Lydia (Pursel) Elrod. Jesse F. Elrod was born in Stokes county, North Carolina, from which county came many of the early settlers of Hendricks county, Indiana, and about 1836 he came to Indiana, settling in Clay township, this county. Lydia Pursel was a native of Marion county, Indiana, born on Fall creek, now almost within the limits of Indianapolis. Both parents are now deceased.

Samuel H. Elrod was born on the farm, his father being a pioneer farmer. As a boy he was inured to hard work and had little opportunities for acquiring an education. At the age of twenty, however, he entered DePauw University at Greencastle, and "worked his way" through the university course, earning the necessary money by doing janitor and other work. He also studied law while at DePauw. He graduated from the university in 1882, and went to South Dakota the same year. He went to Clark, that state, on a construction train, to make his home there when there was not a dwelling on the town site. He was admitted to practice law in South Dakota by Judge Kidder, one of the pioneer jurists of the state, at Watertown in 1882. He did a large land and law business from the outset.

Taking an active interest in politics, Mr. Elrod was not long in attaining a prominent place in the councils of his party, and his fine abilities soon won notable recognition from the body politic. He was a member of the first South Dakota constitutional convention, and has served five terms as state's attorney for Clark county. He also held the office of county judge for one term during territorial days. In 1898 he was a candidate at the Republican state convention at Mitchell for the nomination for Congress, but was defeated. In 1904 he was nominated by the Republican party for governor of South Dakota, and he was triumphantly elected at the ensuing election. During this campaign he won the sobriquet, "Honest Sam," an endearing title by which he is now known all over the state, and the public prints often speak of him as the "Abe Lincoln of South Dakota."

As chief executive, Governor Elrod measured up to the stature of any predecessor in all that concerned purity and strength of administration. There was never a period in his illustrious career when his mental equipment was not recognized by friend and foe alike as of a superior order. None ever failed to credit him with high moral purpose, true nobility of character, sterling sense of justice, able and comprehensive statesmanship and firm adherence to the loftiest of political, social and business ideals. The almost unanimous concession to his worth disarmed the temporary determination due to partisan exigency, for there was none who could debauch his integrity or swerve his independence. His judgments found respect without reference to party predilections. Reared as a farmer boy, it was but natural that his sympathies should be with the agricultural interests of his state, and no executive perhaps did more for the farmers of South Dakota than Governor Elrod. The Dakota Farmer pays this splendid tribute to him:

"From the moment Governor S. H. Elrod was sworn in as the chief executive of South Dakota, in season and out of season, he has stood by every measure that would possibly benefit the agriculturists of his state. Before in these columns we have enumerated not less than half a dozen distinctively agricultural and live stock measures that had his constant support during the last session of the Legislature, a number of which, we believe, could never have become laws without it, and now we must record one more, and in our estimation, among his crowning achievements in this line. We refer to the securing of what was known as the 'Fishback quarter' of one hundred and sixty acres of splendid land for the agricultural college and experiment station at Brookings. This splendid piece of land, as many know, was literally located in the very heart of the farm school grounds. It came up to the very doors of the college buildings on two sides, and was not only in every way perfectly adapted to the work and needs of the school, but was fast advancing in price and being clamored for by many far-sighted investors to be laid out in building lots. Much more than the price given could have been had for it for this purpose. The troubles relating to getting title to this land are too complicated to explain. It is enough to say that repeatedly, during the long-drawn-out time, this title was in jeopardy, the timely and personal interference of the governor saved it from going from the state forever."

Governor Elrod did not disappoint any intelligent opinion of his exceptional qualities of head and heart by retirement from public life, but, on the contrary, has continued to add to acquired esteem by a constant display of ability and usefulness which is continually recognized and appreciated. He returned to the practice of his profession, and is now actively engaged therein at Clark, South Dakota. In the practice of law he has achieved an enviable reputation. Years of conscientions work have brought with them not only increase of patronage, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wise and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession.

Samuel H. Elrod is a plain man, a man of that plain and noble class that constitutes the creative capacity and the true manliness and worth of a community. He loves South Dakota, and is very optimistic regarding the future of his adopted state. In his little home city of Clark he is peculiarly active in every movement having for its object the moral and material betterment of the community, and here it is that he is revered with a sentiment akin to idolatry. He has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for many years, and is a member of the official board of this denomination at Clark. He has never used liquor or tobacco in any form.

Mr. Elrod married Mary Ellen Masten, who also was a native of Hendricks county. Indiana, being born near Coatesville. They have two children, Barbara and Arthur, the latter named for ex-Governor Arthur C. Mellette, who was always a warm friend and patron of Mr. Elrod.

ELEAZAR B. CARTER.

Fealty to facts in the analyzation of the character of a citizen of the type of Eleazar B. Carter is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of standing and affairs, more than any other consideration, that gives character and stability to the body politic and makes the true glory of a city or state revered at home and respected abroad. In the broad light which things of good repute ever invite, the name and character of Mr. Carter stand revealed and secure and, though of modest demeanor, with no ambition to distinguish himself in public position or as a leader of men, his career has been signally honorable and it may be studied with profit by the youth entering upon his life work.

Eleazar B. Carter, one amongst the oldest farmers of the county, was born fifth month 30, 1844, in the county where he has spent his entire life. His parents were Samuel and Susanna (Bales) Carter, his father being a native of North Carolina, his birth having occurred ninth month 26, 1817, while his mother was a native of this county, born second month 18, 1822. Samuel Carter came to this state from Carolina when he was a lad of six years, his parents locating on a farm south of Plainfield. On his farm, which his father entered from the government, Samuel Carter was reared and received his meager education in the subscription schools of that period. Upon his marriage, tenth month 22, 1840, he moved to Liberty township on a farm of eighty acres which has father gave him and remained there until his death, which occurred twelfth month 15, 1876, his wife surviving him several years, her death occurring on fourth month 4, 1885. Samuel Carter married Susanna Bales, the daughter of Eleazar and Ann (Millikan) Bales on tenth month 22, 1840, and to this union there were born nine children: Ira, born second month 7, 1842, died seventh month 15, 1864; Eleazar B., born fifth month 30, 1844; Asenath, born eleventh month 7, 1845, who married Cuthbert Osborn; Jonathan, born seventh-month 8, 1848, who first married Sybil Osborne, and after her death, Levina Coffin, and for his third wife, he married Sidney Sacre; Evan, born first month 29, 1851, who married Sarah J. Weasner; Alvin, born seventh month 13, 1854, died eleventh month 5, 1862; Nathan S., born ninth month 22, 1857, married Martha Hodson; Dayton H., born eighth month 19, 1861, died fifth month 31, 1906; Elva, born first month 14, 1866, married Louis Stokes.

Eleazar B. Carter received the best education which was accorded by the old-fashioned subscription schools of his day, and at an early age began to help his father on the home farm. He remained on the home farm until his marriage, which occurred ninth month 18, 1869, and then rented a farm for the first five years of his married life. At the end of that time he had saved enough money to buy the farm on which he is now living. As a farmer he is wide-awake and thoroughly up-to-date in all the latest improved methods of agriculture. He keeps himself well informed on the best ideas pertaining to scientific farming and is recognized as a farmer of more than ordinary ability. He divides his attention judiciously between grain and stock raising and has been uniformly successful as a stock breeder and raiser.

Mr. Carter was married ninth month 18, 1869, to Mary Ellen Nichols, the daughter of Erasmus and Elizabeth (Stanley) Nichols, and to this union there has been born one child, Luella, who married William B, Newlin, Mrs. Carter's parents were old settlers in Hendricks county, her father, Erasmus Nichols, being born in Pennsylvania, but came to Nelson county, Kentucky, when he was about three years of age with his parents, where he remained until 1821, when his parents removed to Indiana and located in Hendricks county. As a young man Erasmus helped to clear the ground which is now occupied by the county court house at Danville. He was married ninth month 8, 1825, to Elizabeth Stanley, whose birth occurred in Virginia, but who emigrated to this state with her parents when a small child. To Mr. and Mrs, Erasmus Nichols were born fourteen children: Thomas, born fifth month 26, 1826, who married Jane Brown, deceased first month 7, 1863; Eliza, born first month 17, 1828, married Israel Brown and her death occurred first month 10, 1877; Rachel, born eleventh month 14, 1829, died eighth month 16, 1831; Matilda, born tenth month 16, 1831, married Samuel Hastings, and her death occurred on seventh month 19, 1906; William, born seventh month 3, 1834, married, first, Luzenia Newman, and after her death, Emily Johnson; Jane, born first month 22, 1836, married John Stewart, and her death occurred eighth month 6, 1907; Martha, born tenth month 24, 1837, married Jared Stewart, and she died in 1909; Sarah, born tenth month 22, 1839, died fifth month 10, 1842; Nathan, born twelfth month 4, 1841, died ninth month 11, 1843; Lucinda, born second month 6, 1844, died eleventh month 1, 1846; James, born third month 9, 1846, married Rachel Nichols; Matthew, born fourth month 4, 1848, died sixth month 5, 1872; Susannah, born second month 19, 1850, died seventh month 26, 1851, and Mary E., born second month 6, 1852, married Eleazar B. Carter. Samuel Carter was born ninth month 26, 1817, and died on twelfth month 15, 1876. His wife was born second month 19, 1822, and died fourth month 4, 1885.

Eleazar B. Carter has been a Republican since reaching his majority and has never seen any valid reason why he should leave his party for that of any other. He remained true to the old party in 1912, when thousands saw fit to change their allegiance to the new Progressive party. In his church relations he has been a life-long member of the Friends church. He is financially interested in the First National Bank, of Amo, and is now a director in that institution. Mr. Carter has lived a simple, honest and unostentatious life, doing good wherever he could, speaking kindly of his neighbors, charitable to the faults of others, and his whole career has been of such a nature as to gain for him friends throughout the community in which he has spent his entire life.

WILLIAM W. GORE.

Dependent very largely upon his own resources from his early youth. William W. Gore, of Brown township, has attained no insignificant success, and though he may have, like most men of affairs, encountered obstacles and met with reverses, he has pressed steadily forward, ever willing to work for the end he has in view. His tenacity and fortitude are due, no doubt, in a large measure to the worthy traits inherited from his sterling ancestors, whose high ideals and worthy principles he has ever sought to perpetuate in all the relations of life.

William W. Gore was born near Shelbyville, Shebly county, Indiana, October 10, 1864, the son of Silas and Sarah (Barnes) Gore, both natives of Virginia, being brought by their parents to Indiana while still quite small. Sarah Barnes' parents entered land from the government in Shelby county and lived there the remainder of their lives. Silas Gore's parents died while he was still quite young and as he grew older he took up the carpenter's trade and was the leading carpenter in Shelby and Rush counties until about 1874. Building a house or barn was in those days a far more laborious task than it is today and when he took a contract for a building, it meant that he had to prepare the timbers used in same. As saw-mills were not then in use, he would go out into the woods, select his trees, fell them and hew out all of the required boards, rafters, sills, etc. This was naturally a very slow process and he considered he had done well when he built two buildings a year. He was married when twenty-five years old and to him and his wife were born four-teen children. In 1874 he moved to North Manchester, Indiana, and established a tile manufacturing business. At the end of five years he sold this factory and moved to Howard county, this state, where he built another tile factory near Greentown. This he operated for some four years, when he came to Hendricks county and built another factory about a mile and a half east of Brownsburg. While the family resided in this county the mother died, and three years after coming here Mr. Gore took his family back to Howard county, where he purchased a small piece of land and retired from active business. There he passed the remainder of his life.

William W. Gore remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage, on November 7, 1884, to Rosie Moore, who was born December 8, 1861, near Avon, Indiana. She was a daughter of George W. and Sarah Jane (Williams) Moore, both of whom were originally from Chillicothe, Ohio, being brought here by their respective parents while they were still young, unmarried people. Both families settled near Avon. Rosie Moore was one of a family of fourteen children and remained at home until the time of her marriage to the subject. Sarah Jane Williams, mother of Mrs. Gore, was a daughter of Ezekiel and Sally Williams.

After his marriage, for eight years Mr. Gore worked on a farm by the day. Six years of this time was for one man. He then rented an eighty-acre farm four miles northeast of Brownsburg and lived there three years. He later rented seventy-two acres north of Brownsburg, where he lived one year and then contracted for the renting of a hundred-acre tract about five miles northeast of Brownsburg. Here he resided for eleven years. He then was able to purchase a ninety-two-acre tract directly across the public highway from the Lawler school house, where the family now lives. To Mr. and Mrs. Gore have been born three sons, Oscar, Atlas and Roy, all of whom are still at home. Mr. Gore is considered one of the up-to-date farmers of the township and, while he raises excellent crops, he does not specialize in any particular line nor raise any fancy stock for selling, yet he always has quite a quantity for marketing. By his own unfailing energy and determination to succeed, Mr. Gore has mastered the obstacles that confronted him and has won an excellent degree of success, at the same time so ordering his life as to win the confidence and respect of all who know him. He is a stanch supporter of the Democratic party and takes an active interest in that party's affairs, having served as road supervisor for two years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gore are members of the Christian church, to which they give liberal support. Mr. Gore is a man of splendid personality and because of his industrious habits and persistent energy, he has attained definite success in his vocation and enjoys the respect and esteem of the community in which he resides.

IOHN WESLEY HUNT.

The late John Wesley Hunt, of Eel River township, this county, who, many years ago, passed on to the silent land, was a man whose name is enrolled very high on the list of honored and worthy citizens of a past generaton in this county. He was a man who made a persistent effort to lead a life in every respect in harmony with the higher rules of ethics and established morality, and, being industrious and public spirited, he did a great deal for the general good of the community honored by his citizenship. When he passed away he left what is much more to be desired, a good name and an untarnished reputation. He was one of the many gallant boys in blue who went from Hendricks county to fight for the country's flag, and in that struggle he contracted a disease which ultimately caused his death. It is a pleasure to record the life history of a man such as Mr. Hunt, a man whose fine character and generous qualities of mind and heart won for him a high place among the men of his generation.

John Wesley Hunt was born near North Salem, Hendricks county, in 1838, and died in 1892 on the farm where he was born. His parents were Johnson and Louisa (Davis) Hunt. Johnson Hunt was born in 1816 in Kentucky, near Mt. Sterling, and came to this county when he was sixteen years of age. The Johnsons in Kentucky were slave owners and up to the time when he came to this county Johnson had never performed any manual labor. However, upon coming here, he at once became imbued with the spirit of work, and during his long life in this county there was no man who was more industrious and attended more strictly to his own duties than Johnson Hunt. Shortly after coming to this county he married Louisa Davis, the daughter of Nathan Davis, and his first wife, whose genealogy is presented elsewhere in this volume in the sketch of Quincy A. Davis. Upon his marriage Johnson Hunt bought a farm north of North Salem and started in to carve out his fortune in the virgin wilderness. He added to his holdings from time to time, until at his death, on September 15, 1876, he was the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land in this township. His wife died June 25, 1866.

John Wesley Hunt grew to manhood on the home farm and upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in 1861 in the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and in six months after his enlistment he was taken sick and for a long time was unable to be on duty, being finally honorably discharged because of total disability. He returned to this county and in 1866 married Nancy Davis, a native of this county and the daughter of Jesse and Minerva (Zimmerman) Davis.

Jesse Davis was born near Mt. Sterling, Kentucky, the son of Enoch and Nancy (Hart) Davis. Enoch Davis and his family came to Hendricks county. Indiana, in pioneer times and settled two miles northwest of North Salem. Their first home was nothing but a rude log cabin, with dirt floor, pole bed and a stick-and-mud chimney, and their household possessions consisted of one skillet and one kettle. Practically everything they used they made themselves. They ground their own meal, spun the cloth and made their own clothes, were their own doctors, teachers, nurses and, in fact, were practically a community unto themselves for some years. Minerva Zimmerman was born in Montgomery county, Kentucky, and was the daughter of John and Nancy (Myers) Zimmerman. John and Nancy Zimmerman were the parents of fifteen children and were among the first settlers in Eel River township, where they entered government land. Each one of the children received a farm on which to start a home and all of them became the heads of families whose descendants are still among the best known people in the county. Jesse Davis was a life-long farmer and a man who was well worthy the respect of his nieghbors. He and his wife were both devout members of the Christian church.

After the marriage of John W. Hunt, he operated a saw-mill for three years in the northeastern part of Eel River township, on land which Jesse Davis had entered, after which time he discontinued the operation of the mill and sold the land and moved to the farm now occupied by Grant Sellers, west of North Salem. About 1887 he built a beautiful and attractive residence there and remained on that farm until late in life. For the last ten years of his life he was in poor health, but still remained on the farm until his death, in 1802.

Mr. and Mrs. Hunt were the parents of four children: Ada Catherine, the wife of Grant Sellers, who now lives on the old home farm in the house built by her father, and they have two children, Benjamin Franklin and Rhoda Catherine; Ewell Emmett, born January 24, 1875, has lived on the home place all his life and now owns sixty-seven acres of the home place. He and his mother have lived together since the death of his father. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and is also an earnest member of the Christian church. He has allied himself with the new Progressive party. The other two children are deceased, one being a twin brother of Ewell E., who died in infancy, while Lena Ann died at the age of seventeen years.

Politically, Mr. Hunt was a stanch Republican and was always active in the councils of his party, although he never held any office. He was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife were both devout members of the Christian church. The people of this county of a past generation remember John W. Hunt as a man of irreproachable character and one who was always ready to accommodate anyone and ready to help those who were in need and distress. He was the architect of his own fortune and upon his entire career there rests no blemish, for he was true to the highest ideals and principles in life. He lived and labored to worthy ends and as one of the sterling citizens and representative men of Hendricks county in the generations that are now numbered with the irrevocable past his memory merits a tribute of honor on these pages.

DR. FRANK E. HILL.

Success in this life most always comes to the deserving. It is an axiom demonstrated by all human experience that a man gets out of this life what he puts into it, plus a reasonable interest on the investment. The present age is essentially utilitarian and the life of every successful man carries a lesson which, told in contemporary narrative, is productive of much good in shaping the destiny of others. There is, therefore, a due measure of satisfaction in presenting, even in brief resume, the life and achievements of such men and in preparing the following sketch of the well-known dentist of Brownsburg the biographer is sensible of the pleasure of his task, especially in view of the fact that the subject has given some of the best years of his life to his love of country and has received from a grateful nation a tribute of acknowledgment of services rendered.

Frank E. Hill, who is successfully practicing dentistry at Brownsburg, this county, is a native of the Hoosier state, having been born in LaGrange county on July 31, 1880, the son of John C. and Sarah L. (Baker) Hill, John C. Hill was a farmer in LaGrange county for many years and was following this vocation at the time of his death, which occurred April 4, 1907. His wife died April 30, 1914. Doctor Hill lived on the home farm when a boy, attending the district schools of their locality and later attended the high school at LaGrange. The last two years of his high school course he studied at a town in Illinois where he had a brother-in-law instructor in the school. After finishing his high school course he returned to his home and enlisted in the United States navy, where he spent four years, serving on seven or eight different ships, and in this way travelled to all parts of the world. He was with the United States Ship "Bennington" in 1905 when, in the harbor at San Diego, California, her boilers exploded and seventy-seven men, more than half of her crew, were killed outright. Sixty-six of the victims were buried in one grave. At the time of the explosion, Mr. Hill was connected with the commissary department and was himself on the sick list. At the very instant the explosion occurred, he was in the act of coming up the stairs from the sick bay and as a result of escaping steam and flying debris his eyes were injured so as to seriously impair his sight for some time. He also had two toes so badly scalded that it was necessary to amputate them, but, despite his injuries, he immediately returned to the hold and assisted in rescuing injured men from alley-ways, engine rooms and compartments, right in the midst of the scalding steam. Two men fell dead right at his feet and today, after the lapse of so many years, he still suffers from the nervous shock of that trying ordeal. On two occasions on regaining the deck with injured men he fell in a dead faint, resuming his labors as soon as consciousness returned and keeping at his task as long as it was necessary. In recognition of the endurance and bravery he displayed on that occasion, the government has awarded him a medal, which takes the form of a bronze star pendant and was made at a United States mint. On the reverse side is the following inscription: "For extraordinary heroism displayed at the time of the explosion of a boiler of the U. S. S. 'Bennington' at San Diego, California, July 21. 1905." Doctor Hill, in addition to the medal above mentioned, was also given one hundred dollars in money and a button of the Legion of Honor, the latter being awarded only for the saving of human life. During his service in the navy, he accumulated many curios and mementoes from foreign lands and has many interesting and thrilling experiences to relate. On many occasions he displayed marked bravery and inasmuch as he is the son of a veteran of the Civil War, this trait may be unusually strong in him. His father served for three years and ten months as sergeant of Company H, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, passing through many serious conflicts, the evidences of which he bore on his body to his dying day. He was an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

DR. AND MRS. FRANK E. HILL

A short time after the explosion at San Diego, Doctor Hill's term of enlistment in the navy expired and he returned to his home. In 1906 he matriculated at the Indiana Dental College at Indianapolis, from which he was graduated in 1909. He immediately after graduation came to Brownsburg where he engaged in the practice of his chosen profession and has resided here since. In 1908 he was united in marriage with Lulu C. Wilson, who was born at Bloomington, Indiana, a daughter of Samuel S. and Serepta Wilson. Her parents now reside near Center Point, Clay county, this state, where her father is engaged in farming.

Doctor Hill has made rapid strides in his profession and has the distinction of being the only dentist in Brownsburg and vicinity. He holds his fraternal affiliations with the time-honored body of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he has attained the fifth degree. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of the Macabees. While he is not a member of any church, Mrs. Hill belongs to the Christian church and in the welfare of that church Doctor Hill is interested. In the public life of the community where he resides, Doctor Hill takes an intelligent interest. He is a man of strong character and marked ability and because of these elements and his genuine personal worth, he enjoys a marked popularity in the locality honored by his residence.

JOHN MILTON SMITH.

The life of John Milton Smith has been characterized by public-spirited and generous acts. Honesty and steadfastness of purpose have marked his career throughout and his many friends regard him as one of the most intelligent and progressive citizens of Hendricks county. He has always exercised an influence for the general good of his community, and, although meeting with many discouragements and obstacles along his pathway, his optimistic nature has never forsaken him. He was not favored by inherited wealth or the assistance of influential friends, but in spite of this he has, by his perseverance, industry and wise economy, attained a comfortable station in life.

John Milton Smith, the son of Jacob and Margaret (Cooper) Smith, was born in Boone county, Indiana, October 20, 1867. Jacob Smith was born in Hendricks county in 1840 and was the son of Reuben and Melinda (Turpin) Smith. Reuben Smith was one of the earliest settlers of Boone county, but at the time when Jacob was born he was living in Hendricks county. Melinda Turpin was born in this county southeast of Brownsburg and was the daughter of Jacob Turpin, who was among the earliest pioneers of the county. The Turpins came to this county from Scott county, Kentucky. When Jacob Smith was three years of age his parents settled southeast of Lebanon, in Boone county, and there the family home was maintained until the death of Jacob Smith, on October 10, 1013. Margaret Cooper, the wife of Jacob Smith, was born and reared in Marion county, the daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Moore) Cooper. Samuel Cooper and his wife came to Marion county from Ohio, making the overland trip on horseback and carrying one small child with them. Samuel Cooper became one of the first settlers of Marion county. For some years after settling there they were greatly annoyed by the thieving of the Indians. One day Mr. Cooper took his gun and threatened to shoot the first Indian he saw around his house, and the result was that there was no more thieving on his property.

Jacob Smith, father of him whose history is here recorded, was a worthy man in every respect; a soldier of the Civil War, serving in the Seventy-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, as a fifer; an active member of the Baptist church, and a man who was highly respected by every one who knew him. His widow is still living in Boone county, this state.

John Milton Smith received his education in the schools of Boone county and remained on the home farm until 1889. He then came to North Salem, this county, and engaged in the dry goods and grocery business in partnership with Elijah Shirley. Two years later he sold out his interest in this store and spent a year in Terre Haute, Indiana, and Vandalia, Illinois, after which he returned to North Salem and worked for two years in a grocery store. He and his brother-in-law, John W. Lackey, then formed a partnership and engaged in the grocery business again in North Salem for the next four years. Mr. Smith then sold out his interests and for the next five years engaged in agricultural pursuits in this township. He then bought one hundred and seventy-three acres of land northeast of North Salem, and three years later sold that farm and bought another tract of one hundred and fifty acres northwest of North Salem. His last farm adjoins the corporation line of the town.

Mr. Smith was married on March 3, 1891, to Ona Smith, a native of this county and the daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Rogers) Smith. Samuel Smith was a native of this county and his wife of Kentucky. Samuel Smith was a carpenter by trade and also owned a farm northwest of North Salem; his death occurred when Ona, the wife of John M. Smith, was a small girl. Mr. and Mrs. John M. Smith are the parents of four children, Fred, Kenneth, Lucile and Nellie, all still at home.

Fraternally, Mr. Smith is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and takes an active interest in the lodge at North Salem, where he is now serving his third term as master of the lodge. He and his wife are both devout and faithful members of the Christian church. Mr. Smith possesses the happy faculty of not only making friends, but of binding them to him by his good qualities of hand and heart.

GEORGE EDGAR DAVENPORT.

The commercial world has come to recognize the farmer's importance and has surrounded him with many conveniences not thought of fifty or one hundred years ago. The inventor has given him the self-binder, the riding plow, the steam thresher and many other labor-saving devices. And the tiller of the soil has not been slow to take advantage of the improvements thus invented and offered. Among the up-to-date farmers of Hendricks county is George Edgar Davenport, of Eel River township, who was born February 7, 1874, in the township where he is now residing the son of George Russell and Drusilla (Pennington) Davenport.

George Davenport's father was a native of this county, and his parents, William and Nancy (Dotson) Davenport, were natives of Virginia, who came from that state to Indiana shortly after their marriage on horseback and entered land southeast of North Salem, in this township. William Davenport died while George R. was a small boy. On reaching manhood he married Drusilla Pennington, who was born in this township about one and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, the daughter of Hampton and Nancy (Dent) Pennington. The Pennington family came from Virginia and entered land in this township, Mr. Pennington dying at the early age of forty-two and leaving a large family. When the family arrived in this county there were very few settlers here, and they had to blaze a trail through the woods in order to get to the land which they had entered. He and his good wife built a rude hut around a big rock, and used the rock to cook upon. An interesting instance happened when they built their first fire on the rock. It was cool weather and the rattlesnakes had collected under the rock, and when the rock became heated they crawled out from underneath the stone and Mr. and Mrs. Pennington killed them one by one as they emerged from underneath the rock. The widow of Hampton Pennington never remarried, but reared her children and lived to the good old age of eighty years.

After his marriage, George R. Davenport made his home southeast of North Salem, on what is known as the Alexander Williams farm. He and his young bride started in housekeeping under conditions which would discourage any but the most courageous of young couples. They lived in a rude log cabin and their bedstead was made by boring holes in the wall and supporting the outer corner by a stake driven in the ground. The cooking was all done in the fireplace, of course, and with the rudest of cooking utensils. Under such conditions they began their married life and no doubt they were just as happy as the young married couples of today, who start under the most auspicious circumstances. During the war Mr. Davenport met with severe losses, one of the most severe being the paying of a note on which he had gone security. They lived west of North Salem until the death of Mrs. Davemort. in 1898, when they moved to Putnam county, this state, and bought the farm near Barnard. There were six children by Mr. Davenport's first marriage, five of whom are now living. Some time after the death of his first wife, he married again, but the second wife died two years later.

George Edgar Davenport received a good common school education and at the age of twenty was married and began to farm with his father. A year later he bought a small farm about three miles northwest of North Salem, on which he lived for four or five years. He then moved to his father-in-law's farm, where he remained for the next two years, and then spent the two following years in the creamery business in Mulberry Grove, Bond county, Illinois, after which he returned to Hendricks county and bought forty-six acres west of North Salem and, in 1909, bought his present farm of eighty acres two and one-half miles south of North Salem. He now has eighty acres in this township. He has very valuable and desirable land and his farm is one of the most attractive farms in the township, the improvements embracing everything modern, convenient and suitable for up-to-date farming. He has paid particular attention to the raising of cattle and hogs and has met with encouraging success in this line of agriculture.

Mr. Davenport was married November 9, 1894, to Cora Page, the daughter of Jeremiah J. Page, whose family history is recorded elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Davenport are the parents of two children, Kenneth and one child who died in early infancy. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife both belong to the Order of the Eastern Star. They are both devout and faithful members of the Christian church and to that denomination give their hearty support. Mr. Davenport is a man of strong character, whose success is the indication of his good business judgment, and he is widely known in this section of the county and wherever known is well liked and esteemed.

JOSEPH LAMB.

Though no land is richer in opportunities or offers greater advantages to its citizens than America, success is not to be attained through desire, but must be persistently sought. In this country "labor is king," and the man who resolutely sets to work to accomplish a given purpose is certain of success if he has but the qualities of perseverance, untiring energy and practical common sense. One of the worthy citizens of Hendricks county who, through diligence and persistent efforts, has attained definite success and has won the respect of all who know him through his fair dealing with his fellow men is Joseph Lamb, who has spent his whole life in this county.

Joseph Lamb, the son of Joel and Eunice (Lamb) Lamb, was born in 1846 in Marion township, this county. His parents were both natives of North Carolina, where they were married, and shortly after this event they put all their possessions in a one-horse wagon and made the long overland trip from North Carolina to this county. They located in Marion township, where they entered forty acres of land from the government, but after a year they became discouraged and went to Ohio; but Ohio offered no better opportunities, so they returned to Hendricks county, mortgaged their forty acres and purchased forty acres more, then, with the thrift and frugality which characterized our pioneer forefathers, they started to work to clear the farm and pay off their debts. Joel Lamb was a life-long farmer and as the years went by his efforts were increasingly successful until at his death he was the owner of two hundred and forty acres. Mr. and Mrs. Joel Lamb were the parents of fourteen children, of whom seven died in childhood and seven reached maturity. The mother of these children died about 1870, and afterward the father went to Kansas, where his death occurred in 1883.

Joseph Lamb, one of the seven children of his parents who grew to maturity, remained on the home farm until his marriage, at the age of twentyfive, at which time he married Ella Montgomery, a native of Union township, this county, and the daughter of James and Rebecca (Tharp) Montgomery. The Montgomery family came from Pennsylvania to this county early in its history, settling near Lizton.

Upon his marriage Mr. Lamb began farming on the old home farm, but two years later he moved to the eastern part of Eel River township, where he bought eighty acres of land where he is now living. In 1886 his house, with all of its contents, was destroyed by fire, after which he built the residence in which he is now living. In 1888 his wife died, and in the same year his barn, with all of its contents, was destroyed by fire.

Mr. Lamb was married the second time on July 8, 1891, to Carrie E. Gossett, a native of Brown township, this county, and the daughter of Thomas A. and Nettie M. (Combs) Gossett. Thomas Gossett was born near Plainfield, the son of Nathaniel W. and Mary G. Gossett, who were natives of North Carolina. Thomas Gossett was born December 21, 1841, and was the eldest of a family of five brothers and seven sisters. He began teaching in the public schools in 1860 and, with the exception of the four years which he spent in the Civil War, he was engaged in public school work until February, 1899. Six years of this time he spent as county superintendent of the Hendricks county schools.

Mr. Gossett had a very interesting and at the same time a most harrowing experience during his four years' service in the Civil War. He enlisted in August, 1861, in Company I, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and during fifteen months of the four years he was incarcerated in five different prisons, Lynchburg, Belle Isle, Richmond, Virginia, Andersonville and Milan, Georgia. In the latter prison he contracted scurvy and his legs had to buried in the ground up to the trunk of his body in order to give him relief and to keep them from rotting off. The disease never left him until his death, and he was a constant sufferer from it. In May, 1898, one of his feet had to be amputated, and in April, 1899, he finally died, having made a life-long fight against the disease. He was a good man in every sense of the word and was responsive to all of the Christian virtues. He was a good soldier, both physically and spiritually, and fought a brave fight for over fifty years.

The second wife of Mr. Lamb is a woman of great refinement and culture and before her marriage she attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute and was a teacher for three years. Mr. and Mrs. Lamb are the parents of four children, Loren W., Roy R., Nettie Esther and Ralph E. Loren married May Young and lives near his father, and has one son, Russell Floyd.

Fraternally, Mr. Lamb is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his wife is a zealous member of the Christian church. Mr. Lamb has a fine farm of one hundred and forty acres, on which he carries on a diversified system of farming in addition to raising a considerable amount of live stock each year. Personally, he is a man of genial and kindly impulses and has won a host of warm and loyal friends in the community which has been honored by his citizenship.

JOHN DURHAM.

Hard and laborious effort was the lot of John Durham during his youth and early manhood, since he was born at a time when this county was a primeval wilderness. His fidelity to duty has won for him the respect and confidence of those with whom he has been thrown in contact, and by patient continuance in good service he has gradually risen from an humble station in life to his present high standing among the leading men of Hendricks county.

John Durham was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, on May 3, 1838, and is the son of John and Mary M. (Fields) Durham, both of whom were born and reared in Boyle county, Kentucky, and were married there before coming to this state. The father of John Durham, Sr., and grand-father of the one of whom this chronicle speaks, was also called John. The grandfather was born in Virginia and came to the state of Kentucky at the age of nine with his parents and lived in a fort at Harrodsburg for a year or so because of the Indian troubles. Mary M. Fields was descended from Irish ancestry, her grandfather coming from Ireland to this country in an early day. John and Mary Durham came from Kentucky to Montgomery county, Indiana, in 1835, locating near Waveland. The grandfather of John Durham came also and entered a large amount of government land and gave a farm to each one of his children, on which to start in life.

John Durham grew up in this new environment and lived at home until his marriage, which occurred on December 22, 1865, to Lee A. Tucker, a native of this county and the daughter of Lee and Miranda (Durham) Tucker. His wife is a grandmother of Nathan and David Tucker, whose history may be found elsewhere in this volume. Miranda Durham was born in Boyle county, Kentucky, the daughter of Thomas Durham, her father being a distant relative of John Durham.

After Mr. Durham's marriage, in 1865, he came to Eel River township, this county, and began farming about half-way between Jamestown and North Salem, where he remained from December, 1865, until the fall of 1913, a period of forty-eight years. During his long career as a farmer he has seen many ups and downs and has encountered obstacles of all kinds, and yet has maintained his cheerful disposition through it all. Success has crowned his efforts and today he is the owner of five hundred and twenty acres of fine farming land in this township. However, recently he has given away all of this land but one hundred and eighty acres, dividing it among his children.

Mr. and Mrs. Durham were the parents of seven children: Charles Omer, physician and now coroner of Marion county, Indiana, who married Mary Maley, and has one daughter, Frances; Frank C., deceased, who was a lawyer in Indianapolis for a time and later in Chicago, and died in the latter city in 1909; John L., who is on the old home farm north of North Salem, is married to Adeline Clark and they have two children, Glenn and Walter; Clarence S. is in Missouri; Harry C. and Thomas G. both live at North Salem and are engaged in farming, while Mary F. is at home with her father. The mother of these children died in 1911.

Mr. Durham has been a life-long Democrat and has always taken an intelligent interest in public affairs. He has twice been elected as trustee of Eel River township, his last term ending in 1883. He has always kept in touch with the times and the trend of current thought, and has always discharged the duties of citizenship in the intelligent manner becoming the level-headed American citizen of today. He has taken a deep interest in whatever makes for the material advancement of the community and endorses all worthy enterprises whereby his fellow men will be benefited and made better.

OLIVER PERRY OWEN.

Among the thriving agriculturists and stock men of Hendricks county. Indiana, Oliver Perry Owen has been especially conspicuous for many years. Few men of his experience have achieved such marked results, none occupy a more prominent place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow men, and it is safe to presume that his example and influence have done as much to promote the general interests of the locality as any other agency in the vicinity of North Salem, where he maintains his beautiful home.

Oliver Perry Owen, a stock man and farmer living one and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, was born December 23, 1855, in the northwestern part of Eel River township, in this county. His parents, Horatio and Margaret (Sears) Owen, were both natives of Clark county, Kentucky, where they lived until after their marriage and removal to this county in 1833, when they entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land in the northwestern part of Eel River township, where they lived until 1867. They made the trip from their native state to this county in a wagon and began life under truly pioneer conditions. Horatio Owen sold his farm and moved about one and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, where he bought another tract of one hundred and sixty acres. Being a man of thrift and economy, he was enabled a few years later to add eighty acres more to this farm and at the time of his death, April 4, 1881, he was the owner of two hundred and forty acres of well-improved land in this township. His wife died February 11, 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Horatio Owen were the parents of nine children, two of whom died in infancy; Hamilton died in 1867, at the age of twenty-two years; William died at the age of thirty-two, leaving a widow and one son; Elizabeth, who died in the seventies, was the wife of James McCloud; Rebecca was the wife of Joseph Camplin and died in September, 1881; Keziah died in 1906 and was unmarried. The other two are James M. and Oliver P., and these are the only two of the original nine children who are living at the present time.

Oliver Perry Owen remained on the home farm until his marriage, which occurred on November 21, 1880, when he was united to Florence M. Duckworth, a native of this township and the daughter of James J. and Mary E. (Mark) Duckworth. James J. Duckworth was a native of Kentucky and, after his father's death in that state, came with his mother to Indiana, settling near North Salem, this county. Here he married Mary E. Mark, and engaged in farming until about 1879, when he moved into North Salem, but continued to manage his farm. His wife died in 1877, and his death occurred on January 3, 1911. He was a Mason and a devout Methodist, while his wife belonged to the Christian church.

After his marriage, Oliver P. Owen began farming on the place where he now lives, about one and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, and has continued to reside here until the present time. He started in life with one hundred and thirty acres of land and has since added ninety-seven acres more to his homestead, which is a very productive and desirable farm, on which stands an attractive and comfortable home and substantial and convenient outbuildings. In connection with general farming he raises various kinds of live stock, in which he has been very successful, and is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished, for it has been done in an honest manner, through hard work and skillful management.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen are the parents of four children: Taylor W., who married Edna Clay, lives in North Salem; Logan married Jennie Tucker and lives on a farm one mile north of North Salem; Maggie died at the age of eleven months; Ruth is at home with her parents. Mr. Owen is a hard worker, a man of rare foresight and business ability, and has prospered from year to year and thus developed one of the best farms in the township. He has been instrumental in the upbuilding of his community and is well known and highly respected throughout this part of the county.

PLEASANT A. HACKLEMAN.

The Hackleman family is one of the pioneer families of Indiana, the first representative of the family who came to Indiana being Abram Hackleman, who came to Indiana before it was admitted to the Union in 1816. The first members of the family lived in Rush county, Indiana, and later in Hancock county. The various members of the family have taken an active part in the community life wherever they have settled and have always been numbered among the substantial citizens of their respective communities.

Pleasant Alvie Hackleman, the son of Abram and Martha (Manwaring) Hackleman, was born October 30, 1873, in Rush county, Indiana. Abram Hackleman was born in Rush county, Indiana, September 6, 1835, the son of Richard and Hannah (McCune) Hackleman, Richard Hackleman was a native of South Carolina, the son of Abram Hackleman, and came with his parents to Rush county, this state, when a small boy, and when he was grown Rushville contained only three houses. He was a tax collector in the early history of the state, and rode on horseback from house to house collecting the taxes. He was a lifelong farmer and in the early history of the state ran a small grist-mill in the central part of Rush county. In the latter part of the thirties Richard Hackleman moved to Hancock county, Indiana, and bought a farm, living there the remainder of his life. He took a great interest in public affairs and served twenty-one years as justice of the peace, retiring from that office against the wishes of his neighbors. Hannah McCune, the wife of Richard Hackleman, was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Franklin county, Indiana, with her parents, where she lived until her marriage.

Abram Hackleman lived in Hancock county with his parents until he was of age and then moved to Rush county, where he followed farming for a few years. Later he moved back to Hancock county and upon his father's death he bought out the heirs of the estate and remained on the old home farm several years. About twenty years ago Abram Hackleman moved to Boone county and located two miles west of Jamestown, buying two hundred acres in one place and over three hundred in another, and is now the owner of over five hundred acres of highly improved land in Hendricks and Boone counties.

Abram Hackleman was married in 1858 to Martha Ann Manwaring, the daughter of Solomon Manwaring and his first wife, and was a native of Sullivan county, Indiana. Solomon Manwaring was born in Franklin county, Indiana, but lived the most of his life in Sullivan county, his first wife dying when Martha was an infant. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Abram Hackleman; Rosa Belle, who married Thomas Trotter and died in 1908, leaving two children, Lena and Fred; Pleasant A., whose history is here recorded, and James Harlan, who lives on his father's farm in Boone county, this state, and was married in 1900 to May Burns, of Decatur county, Indiana, and they have four children, Velma, Wayne, Grace and Ward. Mrs. Abram Hackleman died in 1902.

Pleasant A. Hackleman spent the earlier part of his boyhood in Rush county, and later removed to Hancock county with his parents, who afterwards moved to Marion county, where they remained for a short time, and when he was about twelve years old the family moved to the southern part of Boone county, about two miles west of Jamestown, where his father has since resided.

Pleasant A. Hackleman grew to maturity on the home farm and received his education in the schools of Rush, Marion and Boone counties, and upon reaching the age of twenty-one he was married, on March 2, 1895, to Catherine Robbins, the daughter of Benjamin and Dora (Davidson) Robbins. Benjamin S. B. P. Robbins was born in Marion township, this county. on December 11, 1836, and was the son of Benjamin and Ruth (Parker) Robbins. Benjamin Robbins was born in North Carolina, the son of William and Leah (Lamb) Robbins. Ruth Parker was born in North Carolina in 1812, and in that state she was married to Benjamin Robbins. After two children were born to them in that state, they moved, about 1830, to Ohio. and a year later came to Indiana and entered land in Putnam county. Benjamin Robbins was a carpenter by trade, and when he came to Putnam county he selected land on which there was water power, and he at once built a large mill five stories in height on Eel river, a mile south of Barnard, and after a time he hired a miller to operate the mill and he himself went to New Winchester and erected a steam saw-mill, living at the latter place from about 1850 until his death in 1858, at the age of forty-seven. His death was caused by paralysis. Ruth Parker, the wife of Benjamin Robbins, was the daughter of John and Katherine (Parsons) Parker. John Parker was a physician and lived his whole life in his native state of North Carolina. Mrs. Ruth (Parker) Robbins died in 1877. Benjamin Robbins, Jr., grew up under the parental roof and assisted his father in the saw-mill at New Winchester in early life. In 1874 he married Dora Davidson, the daughter of Samuel and Rena (Parsons) Davidson, of North Salem. Samuel Davidson was born in Kentucky, and came to this state with his parents early in life. His wife was a native of North Carolina, who came here with the Robbins family, to whom she was related. For a time before his marriage, Benjamin S. B. P. Robbins clerked in a store at North Salem, part of the time in a hardware store and the remainder of the time in a drug store. After his marriage he farmed for four years, then he and John Fleece built a store room and engaged in the hardware business. He managed the store for some years and then Mr. Fleece sold out his interest and Mr. Robbins put in a grocery stock and conducted a store for about three years, when he sold the building and built a new business block. However, he did not engage in business again, but re-entered the carpenter trade and has since that time put up a large number of residences and many large barns in and around North Salem. He has also farmed to some extent, owning a small farm southeast of North Salem. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins are the parents of three children, Katherine, Barton and Thomas. Barton is a carpenter and builder of North Salem and married Jennie Pace, and has one son, Jack: Thomas lives in Indianapolis and is a barber and carpenter. Mrs. Robbins died July 1, 1911, and about three months later Mr. Robbins went to live with his son, Barton, at North Salem. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins were both life-long members of the Christian church.

After Mr. Hackleman was married he went to farming on eighty acres which his father had given him on the county line between Boone and Hendricks counties. He has been very successful as a farmer and has acquired additional land from time to time and is now the owner of over two hundred acres of as fine land as can be found in the state. When he went on the farm it was almost bare of improvements, but he has spent a great deal of money in making it a model farm. He has built a splendid and attractive home, good barns and other outbuildings, ditched and drained it and made it one of the most attractive farms in the county.

Mr. Hackleman has allied himself with the Republican party and takes a deep interest in all the political questions of the day. His success in life has not come about without earnest effort on his part and his perseverance and industry have been handsomely rewarded. In addition to his landed interests, he holds stock in the Citizens State Bank, of Jamestown. He and his wife are members of the Christian church at Jamestown, and he is a deacon in this denomination. Mr. and Mrs. Hackleman have two children, Ona Gladys and Nellie Marie.

HORACE GREELEY COOK.

Life is pleasant to live when you know how to make the most of it. Some people start in life as if they had weights on their souls or were afraid to make the necessary effort to live up to a high standard. Others, by not making the proper study of the conditions of existence, or by not having that blessed trainer, a good and intelligent mother, are side-tracked at the outset and never seem thereafter able to get back on the main track. Much depends on the start, just as it does in a race. It would seem from the large success that has attended the efforts of Horace Greeley Cook, farmer and stock man of Hendricks county, that he not only got a proper start on the highway of life, but that he has been able to maintain the proper course all the while; but those who know him, his methods and innate characteristics, are not at all surprised that this is so.

Horace Greeley Cook, a native of this township, was born November 5, 1853, and is the son of Henderson and Nancy J. (Banta) Cook. Henderson Cook was born near Mt. Airy, North Carolina, and was the son of and Edith (Jackson) Cook. Henderson Cook grew to manhood in North Carolina, and when a young man came to this county on horseback, and for a short time managed a hotel at Belleville. While living at Belleville, he was married to Nancy J. Banta, the daughter of Cornelius and Rebecca (Eccles) Banta. Mrs. Cook was a native of Indiana and was reared in Hendricks and Ripley counties. After his marriage, Henderson Cook traded in live stock and during the Civil War bought horses and mules and sold them to the government. In 1872 he moved to a farm northwest of North Salem, which he already owned, and lived there until two or three years before his death, when he moved into North Salem, where he died in September, 1884. He was a staunch Republican all his life and was once nominated by his party for the office of sheriff, but did not care enough for the office to make a canvass. His widow now lives at Los Angeles, California. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson Cook were the parents of seven children, five of whom are living: Mrs. Luella Myers, whose husband is city auditor of Los Angeles, California: Mrs. Edith

R. Jones, of San Francisco; Edward and Charles M., both of whom live in Los Angeles, California, and Horace Greeley, whose history is here presented.

Horace Greeley Cook remained on the home farm until he was nearly twenty-eight years of age. He received a good common school education and later attended the academy at Belleville. Upon his marriage, in 1881, he bought forty acres in the northern part of Marion township and lived there with his wife's mother for three years. After his father's death he moved to his father's farm and remained there until 1900. He then bought the farm of one hundred and sixty-three acres which he now owns, three miles north of North Salem.

Mr. Cook was married August 28, 1881, to Hattie Walker, the daughter of David and Mary (Robbins) Walker, of Eel River township, David Walker was born June 4, 1828, in Virginia and came to this county with his parents when a small boy, they settling on what is now the Michael Higgins farm. The parents of David Walker were Goodloe and Rebecca (Henderson) Walker. Upon reaching his majority, David Walker married Mary Robbins, who was born in Randolph county, North Carolina, and is the daughter of John and Lydia (Parsons) Robbins. Lydia (Parsons) Robbins lived to be ninety-five years of age. Mary Walker came, with her parents, in early childhood to Ohio and three years later came to Indiana, her father entering one hundred and sixty acres of government land in Marion township, this county, about 1835, and lived there the remainder of his life. After David Walker was married he followed carpentering and contracting and lived the most of his life in the southern part of Eel River township. He enlisted in Company B, Seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and died in a military prison in Florence, South Carolina, December 4, 1864, leaving a widow and three children living. Mrs. Walker remained on the farm until her children were grown and married and in 1872 she married David Jones, an ex-soldier of the Civil War, who died less than a year later. Mrs. David Walker Iones now lives with her daughter, Mrs. Cook.

Mr. Cook was allied with the Republican party until 1912, when he united with Progressive party, believing that the principles advocated by this new party were better suited to the modern conditions of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Cook are the parents of two children, Nellie and Edith. Nellie is the wife of Roy M. Sharp and lives four miles east of Ladoga on a farm; she has one daughter, Hariett Catherine. Edith is still at home with her parents. The one son born to Mr. and Mrs. Cook died in early infancy. Mr. Cook and all the members of his family have been adherents of the Christian church and give to it their earnest support. Mr. Cook has long taken an interest in the affairs of his vicinity and county and identifies himself with all worthy measures of a public nature. For the exercise of grit, economy, perseverance and honesty, Mr. Cook has not only won material success, but, what is still better, he has the esteem of all with whom he has come into contact.

ALFRED COX.

He whose career now comes up for review has for many years been a citizen of this county and a brief sketch of his life will show what any young man can hope to accomplish who has in his mind a definite aim and stead-fastly pushes toward that goal. His career has been a most commendable one in every respect. Beginning life under none too favorable auspices, he allowed nothing to deter him, and by persistent industry and the exercise of sound sense in his operations, he has gained the rewards for which he labored and is today numbered among the substantial and influential men of his community.

Alfred Cox is a native of the Buckeye state, born on February 27, 1853, in the suburbs of Cincinnati. He is the son of William and Ann (Reeves) Cox, the former born in Londonshire, near the city of London, England, and there grew to manhood. He was twice married, his first wife being a native of his county and when they came to America they had a family of two daughters and one son. The wife died while they resided near Cincinnati, and there some time later he was united in marriage with Ann Reeves. She, too, was a native of England, having been born in Yorkshire, and was brought by her parents to America when a small child of three years. To this union were born three children, among them being the immediate subject of this sketch. All the children were born while the family lived in Cincinnati, where the father was a gardener and florist and also interested in fruit growing. He was also a landscape gardener of no mean ability and it was he who laid out Spring Grove cemetery on the north side of Cincinnati. Later he removed to a place near Chicago, but only staved there three years when he came to Marion county, this state, and located his family about three miles south of the city of Indianapolis. There his death occurred in 1866, at the time the subject of this sketch was fourteen years old. Young as he was, Alfred Cox assumed his position as "man of the family" and, under the guidance of a wise mother, carried on the business his father had left. The mother lived a widow for a good many years, passing away in 1892. In October, 1882, the subject, together with his mother and her brothers and sisters, purchased an eighty-acre tract in the southeast portion of Lincoln township, Hendricks county, and there resided for some time. Later on however, the subject purchased the interests of the others and held the land under his own title. When the family purchased the tract in question, there were but twelve acres cleared of timber and fit for cultivation. The subject has cleared the balance of it and set out a large orchard numbering some two thousand trees. These are mostly apple, but there are a few specimens of pears and cherries. He also carries on general farming on a tract of one hundred and sixty acres which he owns and which lavs partly in Lincoln and partly in Washington townships. He also owns a farm of two hundred and five acres north of Clermont, Marion county. In his earlier days he did considerable gardening and has attended the city market of Indianapolis from the time he was eight years old and has the distinction of being the oldest attendant on market in point of years of service. At one time he handled cut and potted flowers, also live and dressed poultry, but now confines his efforts mostly to fruits, having made for himself an enviable reputation among the patrons of the market.

MR. AND MRS. ALFRED COX

In June, 1888, Alfred Cox was united in marriage with Anna Anderson, who was born at Milk Creek in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania. She was a daughter of Abner and Catherine (Householder) Anderson, the former of whom was of excellent Scotch-English ancestry and the latter of sterling German strain. They came to Indiana in the year 1870 and located at Knightstown, where they remained for a year and then moved to Indianapolis where the father passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring about 1873. In early life he had been a farmer, but later took up carpentry. His widow still resides in Indianapolis on Beville avenue and is enjoying good health and clear faculties at the advanced age of seventy-eight.

Mr. Cox's religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is a consistent member, giving of his time and means to further its good works. His fraternal affiliation is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he has been a member for a number of years in the local lodge at Brownsburg. Mr. and Mrs. Cox have an attractive and comfortable home in Lincoln township, the excellent condition of the farm land attesting the thoroughness of the owner, while the air of the home is that of genuine hospitality. Throughout his life, Mr. Cox has shown himself entirely worthy of the high esteem in which he is held. His life has been filled with activity and usefulness, while his untiring energy and ability have secured him a conspicuous place among the citizens of his community. In 1911 Mr. Cox agitated the proposition of good roads in Lincoln township and secured a successful petition for an improved road running two and a half miles south from Brownsburg, thence two and a half miles east; also three miles on the county line, running north from the Crawfordsville road. When it was decided to build the roads, he was made superintendent of the work. His strict integrity and unpretending bearing have elevated him in the confidence of his fellow citizens and his influence has always been exerted in the interests of those things which help to elevate his fellowmen in any way.

MELVIN AND MELVINA HARPER.

Descendants from an old and honorable pioneer family of this county, Melvin Harper and his sister Eva are among the most highly honored and respected citizens of Eel River township. Their father was a gallant veteran of the Civil War, who died in the service of his country during that terrible conflict. The Harper family came originally from Virginia in the early history of the state and have numbered many worthy descendants since crossing the Alleghanies. William Forrest Harper, the first one of the family to be born in this county, was born near New Winchester, March 4, 1836, and died July 22, 1865, in Pulaski, Tennessee. The father of W. F. Harper was a native of Virginia, who came to Kentucky and married a girl by the name of Harper, but no relation to his parents or the family. The young couple came from Kentucky to this county on horseback and about eight years after settling in this county the father of W. F. Harper died, leaving his widow and seven sons. The widow never remarried, but remained on the farm with her children, where all seven of whom grew to manhood. In 1878 the mother of W. F. Harper went to Mitchell, Indiana, to live with one of her sons.

William F. Harper was reared to manhood at New Winchester, although he spent a year or two in Kansas before the war. He was married February 3, 1858, to Sarah E. Christy, a native of Putnam county and the daughter of William and Julian (Buntain) Christy. William Christy was born in Monroe county, Virginia, August 7, 1816, and died in Putnam county. Indiana, March 27, 1889. He came to Indiana when a small boy with his parents, James and Elizabeth Christy, and lived for a short time in Hancock county. Later his parents moved to the eastern part of Putnam county, where he spent most of his iife. William Christy was married January 13, 1835, to Julian Buntain, the daughter of William and Leannah Buntain. Julian Buntain was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, December 8, 1814, and came to Indiana with her parents when a child. She was an earnest Christian from the age of eighteen, when she united with the Cumberland and Presbyterian church near New Winchester. Afterward she became a member of the Baptist church at Bethel. She died June 13, 1905, at the advanced age of ninety. William Christy was reared by pious parents and early in life joined the Methodist Episcopal church and in 1848 united with the Missionary Baptist church at Bethel in Putnam county, after which he decided to enter the ministry and was ordained in 1870 and continued to be an active minister until his death.

After William F. Harper married in 1858, he started farming on his wife's father's farm southwest of Coatesville, and remained there until he enlisted in the Civil War in 1865 except two years on a farm that he owned just north of New Winchester. He enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on February 15, 1865, and died in Pulaski, Tennessee, July 22, 1865. He was endeared to all who knew him and a man who led an upright Christian life in every way. He left a widow and two children, Melvin Carey and Melvina Eva, whose careers are set forth in this connection.

After the death of William F. Harper, his widow married Hiram T. Storm on December 25, 1867, and made their home four miles northeast of North Salem, the place now occupied by Melvin C. and his sister Eva. To this second marriage have been born four children, only one of whom is living. Orville Storm. Mrs. Storm, the mother of Melvin C. Harper and his sister, died April 28, 1912, at the age of seventy-three. Some years after her marriage to Mr. Storm, she left the Baptist church, since there was none near her home, and united with the Christian church and remained an earnest member of that denomination until her death.

Melvin Carey Harper, the son of William F. Harper and Sarah Elizaheth Christy, was born August 14, 1862, near New Winchester in this county.
When he was five years of age his mother remarried and she and her family then moved to his present farm. At the age of cleven his stepfather was elected treasurer of Hendricks county and for the next five years Melvin C. and his sister lived in Danville, where they attended school. After finishing the high school at Danville, Melvin entered DePauw University at Greencastle. At the age of twenty-two he went to Kansas and entered a government claim in Comanche county, forty-five miles from a railroad, and started in to improve his claim. When he went to Kansas, his sister Eva went with him and they lived there together on his claim for seven and one-half years.

They then came back to North Salem and lived upon the farm where they are now residing. Neither brother or sister has ever married, but have lived for each other through all these years, since the death of their father in the Civil War.

Melvina Eva, the sister of Melvin, is a finely educated woman. She attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute for two years and has spent several years in teaching. She taught five years before going to Kansas with her brother and taught seven years while they were living in Kansas. When they returned to this county she taught three years more, but several years ago retired from teaching and is now living with her brother on the farm. They have one hundred and fifty-five acres of fine farming land and Mr. Harper owns eighty acres in Marion township. He was a Republican up until the fall of 1912, when he allied himself with the new Progressive party. Mr. Harper is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at North Salem and he and his sister both belong to the Daughters of Rebekah and the Christian church. She is also a member of the Woman's Relief Corps at Lizton. She is also a member of the "Lawrence School Girls," an organization of ladies who attended the Danville public school during the years of 1873-1875. This worthy couple have lived lives of usefulness in this county and their influence has always been found on the right side of all public questions which affected the welfare of their community in any way. They have many warm friends in the township, who esteem them for their many good qualities.

CHARLES F. MARTIN.

Realizing that every day is a fresh beginning and that every morning the world is made new, Charles F. Martin, of Jamestown and Eel River township, is too well known to the people of Hendricks and surrounding counties as a financier and farmer to need any formal introduction here. He forged his way to the front, from a beginning none too auspicious, by courage-ously removing, one by one, the obstacles he found in life's pathway, for he was well aware that clearly defined purpose and consecutive effort in the affairs of life will inevitably result in the attainment of a due measure of success. In following out the career of one who has achieved the coveted goal by his own efforts there comes into view the intrinsic individuality which made such accomplishment possible, and thus there is gained an incentive and inspiration, while at the same time there is enkindled a feeling of respect and admiration. The qualities which have made Mr. Martin one of the prominent and successful men of this locality have also brought him the esteem of his fellow men, for his career has been one of well-directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods.

Charles F. Martin, president of the Citizens State Bank of Jamestown, and prosperous farmer of Eel River township, was born on August 20, 1851, in this township, on the farm where he is now residing. His parents were Levi and Emmeline (Fullen) Martin. Levi Martin was born in Union county, Indiana, on March 10, 1826, and was the son of James and Mary (Hendricks) Martin. Levi Martin came to Hendricks county in 1833 with his parents, who purchased land near where Charles F. is now living and remained there until their deaths, James Martin's death occurring in 1849. Levi Martin grew to manhood on the home farm and married Emmeline Fullen, who was born in this county and was the daughter of Charles and Sarah (Lawson) Fullen, early settlers in this locality.

Charles F. Martin grew up on the farm and enjoyed such educational advantages as were afforded by his home schools and later was given an academic and commercial course at Indianapolis. Returning to this county, he taught school for three years and then engaged in farming, and has lived the life of a farmer ever since. He has been very successful as an agriculturist and is now the owner of three hundred and fifty acres of land which he has improved and brought to a high state of productivity. In addition to his landed interests, he is one of the stockholders and organizers of the Citizens State Bank of Jamestown, which bank was organized in June, 1903, with a capital stock of thirty thousand dollars. In 1913 the net profits of the bank were ten thousand dollars, with deposits amounting to nearly two hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Martin has been president of the bank from the time of its organization and has had the satisfaction of seeing it grow in strength and enlarge its usefulness to the community. While Mr. Martin has been busy with his financial and agricultural interests he has not neglected his duty as a citizen of the township. In 1888 he was elected on the Republican ticket to the office of trustee of his home township and filled this responsible office to the entire satisfaction of his fellow citizens, irrespective of party.

Mr. Martin was married in 1880 to Miranda Frances Tucker, of Eel River township, the daughter of Dandridge Tucker and a sister to Nathan and David Tucker, whose biographies are given elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are the parents of five children, Paul, Levi Lawson, Charles Russell, Maude and Emma Catherine. Paul, Maude and Emma have been students of Butler College at Indianapolis and Emma graduated in 1911.

Lawson graduated from Purdue University in 1910, and Russell graduated from the agricultural department of that institution in 1914. Paul is now assisting his father on the farm. Lawson is principal of the schools at Darlington, Indiana. Maude has charge of the musical department of Hazel Green Academy, at Hazel Green, Kentucky; Emma is principal of the public schools at Mace, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are justly proud of their children, who have been given the advantages of the best educational institutions of the state and are filling useful places in society.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin have a beautiful country home one mile east of Jamestown, on the interurban line between Indianapolis and Crawfordsville. Mr. Martin is equally at home on the farm, in the bank and in all the activities of his community. He is an obliging, courteous, public-spirited and progressive man, who has performed useful service to his community and is rightly regarded as one of the most progressive men of his township.

REV. WALTER M. BENSON.

Among the men of Hendricks county who have been potent factors for good, there is no one who occupies a more prominent position than Rev. W. M. Benson. For more than a score of years he was a public school teacher in various counties in the state and for the past thirty-five years has been in charge of the Baptist church of North Salem and other Baptist churches in this section of the state. In addition to his teaching and ministerial work, he has also found time to engage in farming. It would be impossible to estimate the beneficent influence which has followed his work in all of these lines of activity. For more than forty years he has been a resident of this county and in all that time he has never neglected an opportunity to serve his fellow men.

Rev. Walter M. Benson, the son of John Harley and Mary Ellen (Minor) Benson, was born in 1833 in Pendleton county, Kentucky. He was two years of age when his parents moved to this state, where his father entered land in Rush county and lived there the remainder of his life. Walter Benson lived on the home farm until he was twenty years of age and then taught school in Rush county for three years. He secured his education in the subscription schools and then attended Fairview College, an institution of learning on the line of Rush and Fayette counties, which was presided over by A. R. Benton and Rev. Van Buskirk, the two famous educators of early Indiana.

In 1856 Walter Benson moved to the southern part of Marion county, near the Johnson county line, and for the next twelve years taught in Marion county, and followed this with six years of teaching in Johnson county. Five years of the time he was teaching in Marion county he had to teach in a log school house and only recently Rev. Benson had the pleasure of giving a lecture in that locality and met a number of the old people of the neighborhood who were his pupils fifty years ago. While teaching in Marion county, he also served as county trustee for two terms, while at the same time he managed a farm of his own.

Rev. Benson came to Hendricks county in October, 1860, and bought a farm a short distance southeast of North Salem in Eel River township. He finished clearing the land, ditched, fenced and otherwise improved it, Up to the time that Rev. Benson came to Hendricks county, he had been preaching and farming, although he had for years been taking an active interest in church work. A year after coming to this county, he definitely decided to enter the ministry and was ordained as a regular minister in the Baptist church. For the next thirty-five years he was in charge of the Baptist church at North Salem, and for twenty-five years had charge of three other churches at the same time. He has the gift of natural oratory and is a man of great fluency of speech. During the thirty-five years in which he was in the active ministry, he not only served his charges faithfully and well, but also found time to take part in public affairs, was twice elected trustee of Eel River township and served both terms to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He has also been able to keep his farm in operation and, due to the fact that he is a man of wonderful physique, he has never shirked manual labor, but has always been able to do his part in the field. He is proud of the fact that he is one of the best corn huskers in the county and from the age of sixteen has been able, until a few years ago, to husk three rows while the ordinary man was husking two.

In 1857 Rev. Benson was married to Mary Jane Vandever, who was born and reared in Marion county, the daughter of James and Sarah (Tucker) Vandever. She was one of his pupils when he taught in the old log school house in Marion county, and the romance which begun in that rude building continued through more than fifty years. She lived to celebrate her golden wedding anniversary in 1907 and did not pass away until three years later, dying March 16, 1910. She was a wonderful woman in many ways, well versed in the Scriptures, clear and keen of intellect and helpful to her husband in his understanding of the Bible. Four children were born to bless this union: Homer A., a life insurance man of Indianapolis, who married Jennie Miller, of Fayette county, and has one son, Neal: Mary E., the wife of J. S. Davis, of Gosport, has two children, Minor and Clarence; Hattie E., the wife of A. B. Davenport, a farmer of this county, has eight children, Herschel, Alberta, Edith, Maurice, Mary, Thelma, Frank and Beatrice; Eva Gertrude, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Benson, is the wife of Everett Gregory, of Gosport, and has two children, Honor and Marion.

This biography is but a feeble tribute to the wonderful amount of good which has been accomplished by Rev. Benson. He is a typical man of wonderful strength and energy, who can do many things, and do them all well. As a teacher, as a minister of the gospel, as a public official and as a private citizen, he has taken his share of the burdens of the community. He is a man who has always been trying to serve his fellow men. As a student of the Bible, he has few equals, has a wonderful memory and knows a large part of the Bible by heart and can repeat chapter after chapter without the slightest hesitation. He is a man of imposing appearance, tall, well built and with a personality which endears him to all who come in touch with him.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN PAGE.

There is no more up-to-date farmer or public-spirited citizen in Eel River township, Hendricks county, Indiana, than William Franklin Page, a man who has won success in his chosen line of endeavor, because he has worked for it along legitimate lines and has dealt fairly with his fellow men.

William Franklin Page, the son of Jeremiah J. Page and wife, was born September 29, 1865, in Putnam county near the Hendricks county line. The Page family history is recorded in the biography of Jeremiah J. Page, elsewhere in this volume.

William F. Page remained on the home farm until his marriage. He received a good common school education, and from his father learned all the finer points in agriculture. On October 10, 1893, Mr. Page married Ora Carpenter, the daughter of Fielding J. and Eline (Smith) Carpenter. Fielding J. Carpenter was born February 1, 1854, in Morgan county, Indiana, the son of Felden and Sally (Leathers) Carpenter. Felden Carpenter came to Indiana in boyhood and settled in Morgan county among the first settlers of the county. Sally Leathers also came from the same part of Kentucky and settled with her parents in Morgan county. Felden Carpenter farmed all of his life as did his father, Daniel, before him. Fielding J. Carpenter grew up on the home farm in Morgan county and in 1875 married Eline Smith, who was born and reared in Wabash county, Indiana, the daughter of Benjamin and Sally Smith. In 1876 Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter moved to Hendricks county and lived here ever since except two years' residence in Montgomery county. Mr. Carpenter's first wife died January 21, 1891, leaving six children, Cora. Ora. Edgar, Cleveland, Alta Opal and an infant, deceased. Mr. Carpenter was married on October 18, 1891, to Ella Soots, daughter of John and Mary Adeline (Newman) Soots, of Eel River township. Her parents were both reared in this county. To this second marriage of Mr. Carpenter have been born six children: Verley Esther, deceased; Hazel Fern; Edith Marie; Cecil Dewey, deceased; Herndon and Victor Hugo.

Before his marriage Mr. Page had been farming the land where he now lives and after his marriage he built a home and has since resided there. He has one hundred and twenty-five acres of excellent farming land which he has brought to a high state of cultivation. While he carries on a general farming, he has made a specialty of raising Poland China hogs and has been very successful on this line.

Mr. and Mrs. Page are the parents of two living children, Estal, born February 18, 1903, and Dorothy May, born November 22, 1911, while Nina Esther and an infant are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Page are both members of the Christian church and give it earnest support. Mr. Page is a man who is respected by everyone because of his quaint and wholesome life. He and his wife number their friends everywhere throughout the community.

WILLIAM H. ROBBINS.

There are certain characteristics which are always prominent in successful men, and among these perseverance and sterling worth are always to be found. William H. Robbins affords a fine example of the successful, self-made man, who has the necessary talents and forcefulness which have made him successful as a man of the world. His career shows that he has a versatility which is not possessed by every one. During the course of a long and busy career he has been a farmer, a carpenter, a stone mason, a merchant and an undertaker, and, what is more remarkable, he has made a success at each calling. However, his career has been pre-eminently that of a farmer, and in this vocation he has made his greatest success. He is a man of strong fiber and vigorous mentality and has earned high words of commendation from those competent to form a correct estimate of the man and his accomplishments.

William H. Robbins, the son of Lamech and Emily (Blanton) Robbins, was born December 5, 1840, in Eel River township, this county. His father was born in North Carolina in 1820, the son of Jacob Robbins. Jacob Robbins, with his family, came to this county when Lamech was a small boy, settling on a farm in the southern part of Eel River township. Here Jacob Robbins purchased a farm and here he continued to reside the rest of his life. and here his son, Lamech, grew to manhood. Upon reaching his majority he married Emily Blanton, who was born near Crab Orchard, Kentucky, and came to this county with her parents when a small girl. After his marriage. Lamech Robbins bought forty acres of land east of Montclair, this state, and following that lived four years in Iowa. Upon his return to this county he bought a farm three miles east of North Salem, but later sold this tract and, in 1894, bought one hundred and sixty acres two miles west of North Salem. His first wife died during the latter part of the eighties, and some time later he married Delilah Blanton, the widow of John Blanton, who was a brother of his first wife, and after his second marriage he moved one-half mile east of North Salem, where he lived until three years before his death, He was compelled to retire from the farm on account of a severe stroke of paralysis and spent his remaining days in North Salem. Mr. and Mrs. Lamech Robbins were the parents of eleven children, eight of whom grew to maturity, although there are only four of them now living: Frances, the wife of David Henry, of Jamestown; William H.; James, of Roachdale, Indiana, and Jacob, a farmer of this township.

William H. Robbins lived on the home farm until his marriage, and in 1873 married Mary Page, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Page, whose family history appears elsewhere in this volume. She was born in Jackson township, Putnam county, Indiana, and her parents are still living in this township. After his marriage Mr. Robbins began farming on a place adjoining his father's farm, his father having given him twenty acres upon his marriage and from time to time has added to this until he is now the owner of eighty-three acres. While he has been a farmer the most of his life, he has also, as the opportunity presented itself, been a carpenter and stone mason. Since 1903 he has lived in North Salem, where he has been engaged in mercantile pursuits.

Mr. and Mrs. Robbins are the parents of four children: Lillie, who died in childhood; Oliver, who married Clara Barnard, and lives one mile west of Maysville, where he owns a farm of one hundred acres; Frank is married to Iva Dodds and lives three and one-half miles northwest of North Salem, where he owns a farm of one hundred and ten acres; they have four children, Verle, Nina, Ruby and Irene; Myrtle is the wife of Samuel Kent, a grocer of North Salem, and has one daughter, Inez.

Mr. Robbins was a Republican until the fall of 1912, when he cast his political lot with the Progressive party. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and give to it their earnest support. Mr. Robbins has a wide acquaintance throughout the county and is popular with all classes of people. He is friendly and congenial by nature and frank in his manner and has a personality which easily wins and retains friends. He is a man of sterling qualities of character and commendable habits, and his influence for good has been the most prominent characteristic of his life in this community. He has always believed in assisting others while working for his own advancement and is sympathetically in favor of all worthy public enterprises.

OLIVER W. TROTTER.

The best history of a state or county is the one that deals most with the lives and activities of its people, especially of those who, by their own endeavors and indomitable energy, have forged to the front and placed themselves where they deserve the title of progressive men. In this brief review will be found the record of one who has outstripped the less active plodders on the highway of life and among his contemporaries has achieved marked success in the business world, the name of Oliver W. Trotter being honored by all owing to his upright life and habits of thrift and industry.

Oliver W. Trotter, of the firm of Trotter Brothers, of North Salem, was born in Eel River township, this county, in 1865, the son of William W. and Nancy E. (Keith) Trotter, who are represented elsewhere in this work.

Oliver W. Trotter was given a good, common-school education and lived on the home farm until 1898. He then began working in the dry goods store of Moore & Fleece, of North Salem, where he was employed for some years. He then entered the employ of J. W. Sparks, remaining with him until 1907, when he and his brother, Silas B., bought the store of Bymaster & Company, which they have continued to operate since that time.

Mr. Trotter was married in 1903 to Mamie Conover, the daughter of John D. and Ellen (Weible) Conover. Mrs. Trotter's mother was born in Cape May county, New Jersey, in 1831, the daughter of Thomas and Mary Ann (Heritage) Weible. In 1840 her parents moved to New Albany, in this state, where they lived until 1870. Her father was a boat-builder in the ship yards there. In 1853 Mrs. Trotter's mother was married to Samuel Conover. the son of J. D. and Soffronia Conover. Samuel Conover was engaged in clerical and commercial work at New Albany, and his death occurred there in 1861, leaving his widow with three small children. William, Walter and Lydia. William lives in Indianapolis; Walter died in his seventeenth year and Mrs. Lydia Walker lives in North Salem. Some years after her husband's death, Mrs. Conover married John Conover, of Ohio, a steamboat man on the river. In 1870 they established their home at North Salem, in this county, and Mr. Conover continued to work on the river as captain of a steamboat until several years later, when he retired from active work and permanently settled at North Salem, where he lived until his death in 1882. To the second marriage of Mrs. Conover there was one daughter born, Mamie E., now the wife of Oliver Trotter. In 1887 Mrs. Conover married John W. Clements, a native of Kentucky and long a resident of North Salem. He was a soldier in the Civil War in Company C, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served three full years in the war, after which he lived the life of a farmer in this county until his death, which occurred in North Salem, March 24. 1905. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Clements has continued to reside in North Salem, and now enjoys good health, despite her advanced age of eighty-two years.

Mr. Trotter has made his way in life by force of his own merit and industry from a small beginning to a place of comparative success. He is a man of absolute honesty, always on the advance and has managed his share of business with a skill and prudence which comes of a practical knowledge of the various branches of the business.

THOMAS C. DAVIS.

Judging from the success that has attended the efforts of Thomas C. Davis, one of Hendricks county's leading farmers, he got a proper start in life and, although he has made some mistakes, yet he is today one of the splendid examples of our modern farmers. Much, if not all, depends upon the start in the battle of life, just as in the beginning of a race. The horse that gets the best start, all other things being equal, will almost invariably win. Realizing at the outset of his career that it took indomitable courage, unfaltering integrity and unfailing industry to achieve the best results, Mr. Davis began shaping his course gauged by proper ideals and is today eminently deserving of the reward that has so lavishly attended his efforts.

Thomas C. Davis, the son of Walter and Mary (Scott) Davis, was born June 15, 1871, about two miles east of North Salem, in this county. The history of the Davis family is fully portrayed in the sketch of Quincy A. Davis, which will be found elsewhere in this work.

Thomas C. Davis grew to manhood on the farm where he was born and received his education in the schools of his home township. He was married on February 28, 1892, to Ella C. Leach, the daughter of James M. and Elizabeth (Hamilton) Leach. James M. Leach was born in Hendricks county, February 9, 1834, the son of Enos and Elizabeth Leach, who were both natives of Kentucky. Enos Leach and his wife came to Indiana from Kentucky in 1831 and entered two hundred acres of government land in Union township, this county. James M. was one of seven children born to his parents, and grew to manhood in this county. He married Elizabeth Hamilton, March 17, 1859. She was the daughter of Abraham Hamilton, of this county. James M. Leach is one of the leading farmers of the county. He and his wife are loyal members of the Christian church and Mr. Leach has served as an elder in that denomination for many years.

After Mr. Davis was married he engaged in farming for himself on eighty acres which he had bought south of Montclair, in Union township. In 1893 he moved to his present home, two miles east of North Salem, where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land. He has within the past twenty years made extensive improvements on his farm in the way of rebuilding his house, erecting a new barn, outbuildings and fencing of various kinds. Success has come to him as a reward of his efforts and from time to time has been able to add to his holdings until he is now the owner of two hundred and seventy-seven and one-half acres in this township.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of two children, Jewel, born April 28, 1893, who died when she was about six months of age, and Mamie L., who was born February 27, 1895, who is still at home with her parents. All the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of North Salem and earnest in their support of that denomination. Mr. Davis is a Republican and takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of his party. He has served several years on the advisory board of his township, a place of honor and trust which carries with it a salary of only five dollars per year. This position was a tribute to him as a public-spirited ceitizen, since it came to him unsought and shows the confidence which his fellow citizens had in his ability and integrity. He has one of the finest sugar camps in the township. He carries on general mixed farming, giving attention to both live stock and grain.

MICHAEL FELIX HESSION.

It is not an easy task to describe adequately a man who has led an eminently active and busy life and who has attained a position of relative distinction in the community with which his interests are allied. But biography finds its most perfect justification, nevertheless, in the tracing and recording of such a career. It is, then, with a full appreciation of all that is demanded and of the painstaking scrutiny that must be accorded each statement, and yet with a feeling of satisfaction, that the writer essays the task of touching briefly upon the details of such a record as has been that of the respected subject whose life now comes under review.

Michael Felix Hession, who in many respects is one of the most prominent citizens of Brown township. Hendricks county, Indiana, was born on a farm in Boone county, this state, on September 15, 1868, the son of Michael and Catherine (Hogan) Hession, both of whom came from county Galway, Ireland. Both remained on the "old sod" until grown, when each came to this country and direct to Indianapolis, where they were married. Soon after their marriage they came to this county and purchased a farm in the eastern part of Brown township, where they lived for four or five years, when they traded that tract of land for eighty acres in Boone county, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Michael Hession died January 1, 1903, his wife having preceded him in June, 1891. They reared a family of eight children, among them being the subject of this sketch.

Michael F. Hession remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage in 1894 to Sarah Mullin, daughter of Patrick and Mary (Tarpy) Mullin, both of whom emigrated from county Galway, Ireland. Mary Tarpy was left an orphan when but ten or twelve years old and soon thereafter took the long journey to this country alone. She made her home with various families until the time of her marriage to Patrick Mullin. After their marriage, they purchased a tract of forty acres in the eastern part of Brown township, this county, where they made their home for some fifteen or twenty years, and here it was that their daughter Sarah, wife of the subject of this sketch, was born. In 1879, Mr. Mullin bought eighty acres of land in Middle township, on the Hendricks-Boone county line, retaining the original forty acres, and the following year he moved to his new farm and resided there at the time of his death in 1801. Mrs. Mullin passed away in 1888. They had a family of eight or nine children, of whom but three are living. The daughter, Sarah, continued to reside at home until the time of her marriage to the subject, and they afterwards lived for seven years on this same farm. After disposing of it, they purchased their present farm of one hundred and twenty-seven acres, three miles north of Brownsburg. In addition to this, Mr. Hession also owns a farm of forty acres in Boone county, being land which his father gave him at the time of his marriage. Mr. Hession carries on general farming and other lines incident thereto and is thorough and upto-date in his methods. Mr. and Mrs. Hession have an interesting family of five children, namely: Mary Catherine, Theresa Marguerite, Thomas Leo, Esther Helena and Elizabeth Winifred. There is also one child dead.

Politically, Mr. Hession has always been identified with the Democratic party and, while not taking an active part in its affairs, has ever had a quiet interest in same. The family are communicants of the Roman Catholic church and are highly esteemed in their community. In the public life of the locality, Mr. Hession takes a commendable interest, always being in the ranks of those desiring the betterment of the moral and material life of the community. His straightforward manner of living has won him an enviable place in the regard of those with whom he comes in contact.

OSCAR H. WISEHEART, M. D.

Among those men of sterling attributes of character who have impressed their personality upon the community of their residence and have borne their full share in the upbuilding and development of Hendricks county, mention must not be omitted of Dr. Oscar H. Wischeart, of North Salem, where he has long maintained his home and where he has exerted a strong influence for good on the entire community, being a man of upright principles and desirous to see the advancement of the community along moral, educational and material lines. Mary E. Ryner was a native of Ohio, the daughter of Adam and Martha Ryner, and came with her parents to Putnam county, Indiana, where they also entered land from the government and lived there the remainder of their lives. John D. Wiseheart, Sr., grew to manhood in Putnam county, and in 1861 married Eliza Iane Clemmons, the daughter of Joseph N, and Caroline (Garrett) Clemmons. Joseph Clemmons was born in Maryland, near Hagerstown, and after the death of his parents in that state he came to Center township and followed the occupation of a farmer for the rest of his life. Caroline Garrett was born in Randolph county. North Carolina, the daughter of Caleb and Mary Garrett. Caleb Garrett was a physician who came to Salem. After his marriage John D. Wiseheart, Jr., lived for a short time on his father's farm and in 1862 volunteered as a soldier, but was refused because of physical disability. A year later he again volunteered and because there was a dearth of men he was accepted as a member of Company H. Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry: The company was sent to Baltimore, where they were stationed in the forts surrounding that city. Here he served one year and then mustered out, immediately after which he returned to Indiana, and he and his wife moved to Iowa, where they lived for a year and a half. They then sold their farm and returned to Indiana, purchasing a farm four and onehalf miles from North Salem, and on this farm of one hundred and fifty acres they lived until the fall of 1904, when they moved into North Salem and retired from active life. Mr. and Mrs. Wiseheart are both active members of the Presbyterian church in New Winchester. They have reared a family of five children: William H., a physician of Colfax, Indiana, who married Lillian Crose, and has one daughter. Clifford, and Victor H., who died in 1911, at the age of twenty-six. His wife, Catherine Cameron, died four months after their marriage.

Dr. Oscar H. Wiseheart grew up on his father's farm in Marion township, and after completing the course in the common schools he entered the Central Normal College at Danville, and later the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, graduating in 1898. Immediately after his graduation, he began the active practice of his profession at North Salem and has continued in the practice there for the past sixteen years. Doctor Wiseheart has built up a very lucrative and satisfactory practice in his town and vicinity and has been very successful as a general practitioner.

Doctor Wiseheart was married in 1800 to Eva Morton Hadley, the daughter of Gillam and Harriett (Kissler) Hadley, of Eel River township, this county, and to this union have been born two children, Harriett Louise and Robert Hadley. Doctor Wiseheart and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons in North Salem. He is the oldest physician in years of practice at North Salem and has succeeded in building up an enviable reputation as a physician who keeps fully abreast of the times in every particular. Doctor Wiseheart is a man whose heart is in his profession and never fails to respond to the call of the sick and suffering. He is a man of character, of stern honesty and one who inspires that confidence which is as necessary to the patient as are the medicines which are given by the physician. His personality is pleasing and the deep sympathy which he feels for his patients endears him to them and thus renders him the more efficient in his services. He and his wife move in the best social circles of the town and vicinity and are deservedly popular among all classes.

CALVIN STOUT.

The Stout family have been in Hendricks county for the past threescore and seven years. Samuel Stout, the grandfather of Calvin Stout, whose history is portrayed in this sketch, was born in North Carolina in the year 1800, the same year in which Indiana territory was carved out of the Northwest territory. Samuel Stout married in North Carolina and came to this county in 1837, with his family, consisting of his wife and two sons, William H., the father of Calvin and Luther. William H. was born September 15, 1849, in this county and died in 1896, his father, Samuel, the grandfather of Calvin, dying on October 4, 1875, in this county. William H. Stout was married on March 21, 1872, to Martha M. Curtis, who was born March 28, 1853.

in Morgan county. Indiana. She was the daughter of Calvin and Rosa (York) Curtis. Martha, the wife of William H. Stout, died June 8, 1910, on the old home farm.

Calvin Stout was born February 13, 1873, and spent his boyhood days on his father's farm. In 1896 he moved to his present farm where he is now operating one hundred and forty-six acres. He follows a general system of farming. He has a nice country home and has his farm improved with good outbuildings.

Mr. Stout was married August 30, 1895, to Mary Edna Milhon, who was born on May 17, 1877, the daughter of George W. and Susan Catherine (Richardson) Milhon. The history of George W. Milhon, which is found elsewhere in this volume, gives the ancestry of this family. Mr. and Mrs. Stout have one daughter, Lenore Magdalene, who was born on July 22, 1902.

JAMES S. DODDS.

Although the biography of the substantial citizen which is here presented is only the plain story of a farmer, yet it contains many incidents which will be interesting to the general public and especially to the many descendants of the honored subject. While James S. Dodds has been a resident of Hendricks county only a very short time, nevertheless his interests have been closely identified with this county and with the town of North Salem, where he has been doing much of his business for a long time.

James S. Dodds was born in Garrett county, Kentucky, on January 17, 1845, and is now living a retired life in North Salem, Hendricks county, Indiana, having moved there in the fall of 1913. He is the son of Samuel and Margaret E. (Ramsey) Dodds, both of whom were natives of Kentucky and who came to Putnam county, Indiana, when he was a child of five years, and located in Jackson township, where his father bought a farm and spent the remainder of his life.

James S. Dodds grew to manhood on his father's farm and when he was eighteen years of age he enlisted, in July, 1863, in Company I, One Hundred Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Union army. His company was attached to the Army of the Cumberland, under General Wilcox, and performed guard duty along the Cumberland river in Tennessee during all his service. Upon his discharge in February, 1864, he returned to his father's farm in Putnam county, where he remained until his marriage, which occurred in 1867, when he was united to Lizzie Case, a native of Putnam county and the daughter of Joseph and Louisa A. (Perkins) Case. She died in 1875, leaving one daughter, Ida G., who married John Wilson and whose death occurred in September, 1903. In March, 1880, Mr. Dodds married Sarah E. Rust, a native of Kentucky and the daughter of Matthew and Eliza Ann (Troutman) Rust. She came with her parents to Jackson township, Putnam county, Indiana, when she was six years of age and lived there until her marriage. To this second marriage were born three children, Iva C., the wife of Frank Robbins, a farmer of Montgomery county, and they have four children, Verlie, Nina, Marie Ruby and Irene; Eliza E. is the wife of Lona Page, a farmer of Putnam county, who has one daughter, Lottie; Vela V., the wife of Elza Page, who is a brother of Eliza's husband and a farmer of Putnam county, and he and his wife are the parents of two children living, James J. and Hazel, one of their children dying in infancy.

Mr. Dodds began farming on rented land in 1867, at the time of his first marriage, and six years later bought forty acres of land in his home township, where he lived until he moved to North Salem in 1913. Being a man of thrifty and frugal habits and assisted by an economical wife, he was able to add to his farm from time to time until he is now the owner of one hundred and thirty-four acres of fine farming land in Jackson township, Putnam county. He has been a life-long farmer and early learned the secrets of successful agriculture. He raises all the crops common to this locality and has also given a due share of time and attention to the raising and breeding of live stock, in the handling of which he has met with splendid success. He is a practical, methodical man in all he does and his efforts have been rewarded by a due meed of success.

Mr. Dodds has been a member of the Baptist church at North Salem for many years, and is now serving as trustee and deacon in that denomination. He was a member of the building committee which repaired the old church at North Salem, making it modern in every way. An interesting incident in Mr. Dodds' career was his short career in Indianapolis. In 1873 he moved to Indianapolis, believing that he was able to live a life more suited to his liking in the city, but the panic of that year swept over the country and within a very few months he was back on the home farm again and never left it until he moved to North Salem last year. He has hosts of friends in North Salem and in the township in which he lived for so many years in Putnam county. While he has been successful in his private affairs, he has also interested him. self in the welfare of the community, and there is no one in the town of his residence who enjoys a greater degree of respect and esteem than does Mr. Dodds.

ARTHUR M. DAVIS.

The history of the branch of the Davis family which is represented in Hendricks county goes back to a period which antedates the organization of Indiana territory in 1800. Before the name Indiana was ever coined and while George Washington was still in his prime, Evan Davis was born June 8, 1796, near Raleigh, North Carolina. In that same state, on June 17, 1797, was born a girl by the name of Rebecca Marshall and in the historic state of North Carolina these two children grew to young manhood and young womanhood. They were married when very young and shortly after their marriage made the long overland trip from North Carolina to Indiana, and settled in Hendricks county a year before the county was organized, in 1822. Evan Davis entered six hundred and forty acres of land in this county as soon as the land was opened by the government for sale, and added to this from time to time until, at his death, he was the owner of about two thousand acres of excellent land in this county. He died on November 9, 1854, and his wife in the year following. Evan Davis and two of his neighbors founded the first Methodist church in this county, the Salem Camp-meeting church, and contributed both spiritually and financially to its success. He was a large raiser of stock, principally hogs and cattle, and drove his stock overland to Madison. on the Ohio river. He brought the first shorthorned bull into this state and introduced this excellent breed of cattle to the farmer. He also raised sheep and the wool from his own sheep made the clothing for the family. In North Carolina Evan Davis owned slaves, but the girl he married was a Quaker and she was very much opposed to slavery. When they were married he promised to free all of his slaves, and before they left North Carolina for Indiana he gave them their freedom. Evan Davis built the first grist-mill in this county and later built two others, but none of them are now standing. He laid out the first graveyard in the county on his own farm and called it the Davis graveyard. At first it was devoted to the immediate family and relatives, but later charity bodies were allowed to be placed in the graveyard, through the courtesy of Mr. Davis. He was a Democrat in politics, but never held office; he was a power spiritually in his community, and never seemed to weary of doing good for his fellow men.

David Wesley Davis, the father of Arthur M. Davis, whose history is here portraved, received his education in the schools of his township and later attended Antioch College, in New York state, where he took a literary course, specializing in mental psychology and general literary subjects. He also attended DePauw University at Greencastle, Indiana, and pursued literary subjects. David Davis was married September 9, 1858, to Amanda E. Newby, and to this marriage were born six children: Alva E., Arthur M., Emmett T., Evan B., and two who died in infancy. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War, David W. Davis enlisted in Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served under Sherman and Thomas, participating in the famous march to the sea in the summer of 1864. He served through the Rebellion with much courage and loyalty and was mustered out of the service, without being wounded or having himself impaired. He was a charter member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Belleville, Indiana, and a member of the Grand Army post at Danville. He is a charter member of the Methodist church at Belleville and has helped to build two or three churches in the county. In 1911 Mr. and Mrs. David W. Davis moved to Fairhope. Mabama, near Mobile, where they are now making their home. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary September o. 1013, at the home of Arthur M. Davis, their son, Arthur M. Davis has lived on the old homestead farm all his life with the exception of ten years which he spent in Mexico as a mining engineer. While in Mexico, he was chosen as general manager of a group of silver mines at Parral, and learned the business by hard knocks and practical experience. He is an authority on the subject of silver mining, and has a great capacity for the detail work which naturally accompanies work of this nature. He received a common school education in his home schools and later spent one year of study in Germany. This was followed by six years of practical study in the mines of this country and Mexico. He came back from Mexico and settled on his farm on June 30, 1908, where he is now living the quiet life of a farmer. He now farms three hundred and twenty acres, the farm being a part of the same which his grandfather entered in 1822. Everything about his farm is kept in a very attractive manner, showing that its owner is a man of discriminating taste and good judgment. He raises a great deal of stock and specializes in Duroc hogs and Guernsey cattle, and ships much of his stock to distant points. He also raises shorthorn cattle and is considered a good judge of all kinds of live stock.

Mr. Davis was married August 9, 1905, to Minnie F. Little, the daughter of Thomas H. and Louisa A. (Parsons) Little, and to this marriage has been born one son, Arthur Marshall, Jr. Mr. Davis is a member of the Masonic fraternity at Plainfield and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at same place. In politics, he is a stanch and active Republican and has lent his influence to the support of the candidates of that party. The nature of his business has kept him from taking any active part in politics, or aspiring to any public position. Mr. Davis is a conservative business man who has proved as successful in the farming business as he did in his mining business. He has built up a name for himself in the county and township as a man who does things. He is well liked by all his neighbors and there is no one in the county who is quicker to lend a helping hand in time of trouble than he, and for this reason he is justly regarded as one of the representative men of his county.

DR. HERBERT C. SEARS.

The life of the distinguished dentist and public-spirited man of affairs whose name appears above affords a striking example of well defined purpose, with ability to make that purpose subserve not only his own ends but the good of his fellow men as well. He has long held prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality, intellectual discipline of a high order and a thorough mastery of technical knowledge with the skill to apply the same. He has had that rigid professional training which has enabled him to stand among the front rank of his profession in central Indiana.

Dr. Herbert C. Sears, the son of R. B. and Sarah F. (Cash) Sears, was born in Carrollton, Missouri, January 6, 1878. His parents were both natives of Danville, Indiana, where his father followed the profession of dentistry for twenty years. Dr. R. B. Sears traveled a great deal in his younger days and settled in Danville permanently in 1884, and continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred June 13, 1909, he and his son practicing the last few years together. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and also a member of the Masonic order. He was a veteran of the Civil War, having served for four years in the Fourth Indiana Cavalry. The paternal grandfather of Dr. H. C. Sears, who was Wesley B. Sears, came to this state from Kentucky, settling in Hendricks county in the early history of the state of Indiana. Dr. R. B. Sears and wife were the parents of two children, one son dying in infancy, and the other being the immediate subject of this sketch. The widow of Dr. R. B. Sears is now living in Indianapolis, at No. 1560 College avenue. Of the Cash family, there have been six generations in Hendricks county.

Dr. H. C. Sears received his elementary education in the Danville schools and took his professional course in the Central Dental College at Indianapolis, commencing his active practice in 1900 in his father's office, and continued to practice in this office until the summer of 1913, since which time he has been in the Hendricks building. In his practice he has built up a reputation for good, honest work and has his share of the patronage of the county.

Doctor Sears was married on June 26, 1906, to Ina B. Conn, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Conn, of Danville, and to this union there has been born one son, Herbert Edward. Doctor Sears is a member of the Masonic order, belonging to the Royal Arch chapter and the council of that order. In politics, he is affiliated with the Republican party, but the nature of his profession precludes him from taking an active interest in politics. He is a genial and unassuming man, who has a large circle of friends and acquaintances throughout the county and is rightly considered as one of the representative men of Danville and vicinity.

ELMER B. ARBUCKLE.

Among the citizens of Brown township. Hendricks county, Indiana, who are engaged in rural pursuits and who believe in following twentieth-century methods, is Elmer B. Arbuckle, farmer and stock raiser. He comes of a splendid family, one that has always been strong for right living and industrious habits, for education and morality, and for all that contributes to the welfare of the community. Such people are welcomed anywhere, for they are empire builders and as such have pushed the frontier of civilization ever westward and onward, leaving the green, wide-reaching wilderness and the far-stretching plains populous with contented people and beautiful with green fields; they have constituted that sterling horde which caused the great Bishop Whipple to write the memorable line "Westward the course of empire takes its way."

The subject of this sketch was born in Indianapolis, this state, on March 13, 1875, being the son of Marion and Eliza (Halloway) Arbuckle, the former of whom was also a Hoosier by birth and was the son of John and Elizabeth Arbuckle. Eliza Holloway was a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Holloway and was united in marriage with Marion Arbuckle on December 10, 1871. They took up their residence in Indianapolis, where they continued to live for some time, when they came to Hendricks county and purchased a small tract of thirteen acres in Brown township. There Marion Arbuckle passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring on December 2, 1879. Mrs. Eliza Arbuckle is still living, residing in Lebanon, Indiana, where she owns her home and lives in comfort. She also possesses a tract of some sixty acres in this county, it being just across the highway from the holdings of the subject of this sketch. Marion Arbuckle was one of the patriotic sons of the Union who went to the front during the dark days of the sixties, having been a member of the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

Elmer B. Arbuckle was one of a family of three children and remained at home until the time of his marriage, November 26, 1898, to Naomi Huddleston, daughter of Fielding and Elizabeth (Patterson) Huddleston, the former of whom was a native of Kentucky, the son of William and Susan (Phillips) Huddleston. The family were prominent in their community, being prosperous slave holders, with a large plantation. Fielding Huddleston came to Indiana when he was about thirty years old and located in Hendricks county, where he purchased land in the northwestern part of Lincoln township. Elizabeth Patterson, mother of Mrs. Elmer B. Arbuckle, was a daughter of Daniel and Sarah (McDaniel) Patterson and the mother of seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Arbuckle have two children living and one, Annis Hester, died when eight years old. Clarence William and Edith Irene are the two remaining, both of whom are with the parents. Mr. Arbuckle has associated with him his son, now twelve years of age, and, despite his extreme youth, the lad shows remarkable intelligence in acquiring information regarding the origin, care, etc., of the different classes of high-grade live stock on the farm, giving particular attention to the hogs. Mr. Arbuckle makes a specialty of spotted Poland China hogs and exhibits at all the state fairs in the Central West and East. He comes in contact and competition with the very best breeders of this class of live stock and prides himself on the fact that he always gets a generous share of the ribbons. He has the distinction of being the originator of the improved spotted Poland China breed and was instrumental in having a history of the hog written, which proves interesting to the layman as well as fancier. In this history the hog was traced to its origin and developments and improvements noted from time to time. Mr. Arbuckle also has a thoroughbred Percheron stallion, but has not had him on exhibit for about three years. He is also interested in poultry, having many fine birds and specializing on single comb buff Orpingtons. These he exhibits at all the big poultry shows of the world and has an enviable record for his pens. Mr. Arbuckle has attained merited distinction in his chosen field of endeavor, due in no small measure to his excellent business ability and the untiring energy and unfailing determination to win out. He stands today well to the front of those engaged in this class of work and has in training his capable young son, who is in a fair way to accomplish still greater things.

Mr. Arbuckle's fraternal affiliations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Improved Order of Red Men, and in the workings of these various societies he takes an interest. While not a member of any church society, his sympathies are with the Baptist church, of which Mrs. Arbuckle is an active member. In every avenue of life's activities he has performed his part to the best of his ability, believing that anything worth doing at all is worth doing well, the result being that he has won and retains to a notable degree the sincere respect and confidence of all who know him. He has a vast number of acquaintances, among whom are many loyal, stanch and devoted friends, and wherever he goes he receives a hearty welcome. His life has been filled with activity and usefulness, while his sincere interest in the moral and material welfare of the community has gained for him a conspicuous place among the leading men of the county. Because of his high personal character and his genuine worth as a man and a citizen, he is specifically entitled to mention in a work of this character.

WILLIAM N. LAKIN.

The record of William N. Lakin contains many points of more than ordinary interest. As a mere lad of eighteen he enlisted for service in the Civil War and saw two years of service. As a public official, he ranks as one of the most efficient which Hendricks county has ever had, while as a private citizen and business man his reputation has been above reproach and in all the years which he has lived in this county his life has been replete with well defined purposes and he has so carried himself in his daily life that he has won the influential place in business circles and the high personal standing among his fellow citizens which is his today. His life has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance and the systematic and honorable methods which he has followed have resulted not only in gaining the confidence of those with whom he has had dealings, but also the building up of a large and prosperous business.

William N. Lakin, the son of William H. and Lucinda (Sargeant) Lakin, was born in Shelby county, Illinois, on February 9, 1845. His father was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, March 22, 1814, and his mother was a native of Virginia, her birth having occurred on September 17, 1816. His grandfather, Joseph Lakin, came from Maryland and settled in Indiana, dying in Hamilton county in 1838. His wife, Margaret Simmons, died in 1850. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Lakin were John and Mary Sargeant, he a native of Virginia and she of Kentucky. They moved to Illinois in an early day, and there his wife's death occurred in 1821, while he died in 1840. Joseph and Margaret (Simmons) Lakin reared a family of fourteen children, the father of William N. Lakin being the eleventh child in order of birth.

William H. Lakin, the father of William N. Lakin, moved from Illinois to Boone county, Indiana, in 1846, when the subject of this sketch was about one year old, and continued to reside there until 1859, when he permanently settled in Hendricks county, at Plainfield. Here he continued in the black-smithing business until his death, in 1900, at the advanced age of eighty-six years, his wife having preceded him in death about two years previous, in 1898. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lakin were the parents of ten children, William N. being the fifth child in order of birth. Five of these children are still living in 1013.

William N. Lakin spent his boyhood days in Boone county, coming to Plainfield with his parents, in 1859 when he was fifteen years of age. He started in as a small boy in his father's blacksmith shop, and before he joined the army, at the age of eighteen, he was an expert smith. In 1863 he enlisted in Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served three months, the term of his enlistment. Immediately after the expiration of his three-months service he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. His second enlistment was for six months, but he served eight months before he was mustered out. During this time he saw service in eastern Tennessee. At the expiration of his second enlistment in February, 1864, he was mustered out and returned to his home, but immediately re-enlisted in the Second Indiana Battery of heavy artillery, and was sent with his command to Nashville, Tennessee. He took part in the battle of Nashville and after that performed guard duty until the close of the war. Immediately after being mustered out of the service he returned to his home county and established a blacksmith shop in Plainfield, which he conducted until 1868, when he moved to Danville, where he continued to follow his trade as a blacksmith for a few years, after which he removed to Coatesville, this county, where he opened a blacksmith shop and later went into the buggy, implement and harness business, which he still continues. He has been very successful in his line of endeavor and has built up a large and lucrative trade in Coatesville and the surrounding community.

Mr. Lakin was married in September, 1867, to Betty J. Cooke, of Hamilton county, this state, the daughter of Joshua and Hannah Cooke, and she died in 1870, leaving no children. In 1872 Mr. Lakin was married to Louisa C. Gamble, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Gamble, of Coatesville, and to this second marriage there has been born one child. Otto, Mr. Lakin has been a life-long Republican and has always taken an active interest in local politics. An indication of his popularity and the respect with which he is regarded in the county is shown in the fact that he was elected as treasurer of Hendricks county in 1898. He filled this responsible position to the entire satisfaction of the citizens of the county. He is financially interested in the First National Bank, of Coatesville, being a director in that institution. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons. the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic. He and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Coatesville. Mr. and Mrs. Lakin are highly respected members of society and have a wide circle of friends and acquaintances who esteem them for their many good qualities.

Otto F. Lakin, son of W. N. Lakin, was born in Coatesville, October 23, 1872, and spent his boyhood in that town. After graduating from the Coatesville high school he attended DePauw University for two years, after which he was in attendance at a business college at Indianapolis. After spending some years in Indianapolis he came to Coatesville in 1894 and worked for his father. He then took up the undertaking business and now has a furniture store in connection with his undertaking establishment. His store is stocked with fine, up-to-date furniture, and in all lines of his business he is thoroughly modern in his methods and ideas.

Mr. Lakin was married in 1896 to Maude McAnich, the daughter of S. W. and Agnes McAnich, and to this union there have been born three children, Agnes, Russell and Mary Catherine.

Fraternally, Otto Lakin is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he has attained the degrees of the Royal Arch chapter; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has occupied all the offices in the lodge, and holds membership also in the Knights of Pythias.

DANIEL SIGLER HAZLEWOOD.

Among the prosperous farmers of Hendricks county, Indiana, who have descended from distinguished ancestry is Daniel Sigler Hazlewood. His grandfather was one of the first pioneers to settle in this county. Daniel S. Hazlewood was born September 9, 1873, near Hazlewood, Liberty township, Hendricks county, Indiana, his birth occurring in a log cabin on the old home farm which was erected by his father. His parents were James B. and Jane (Stout) Carter Hazlewood.

James B. Hazlewood was also born near Hazlewood on August 16, 1837, and was the son of Daniel Hazlewood, who was a native of Virginia, and when a young man came to Kentucky, where he married, and soon after his marriage he came to Liberty township, this county, with his two children, James and Benjamin. He entered land from the government and later added to his first entry until he was the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of good land in the township. He was a skillful mechanic and followed this trade at his home and in the town of Hazlewood. He and his family were all members of the Missionary Baptist church. Mary Alspaugh, the mother of James B. Hazlewood, was a daughter of Isaac Alspaugh, who was a native of Kentucky.

James B. Hazlewood was married in 1865 to Elizabeth Jane (Stout) Carter, the daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Ruston) Stout. Jonathan Stout was a native of North Carolina and came to this county in an early day with his parents. Mr. and Mrs. James Hazlewood were the parents of three children: Logan, deceased; Mrs. Addie Kivitt, deceased, and Daniel Sigler, whose history is here presented. Daniel Hazlewood, the grandfather of Daniel Sigler, whose history is here presented, had a family of six children: Benjamin; Joseph; James, the father of the subject; Mary, deceased; Jane, who died in early youth, and one who died at the age of nine years. James Hazlewood spent his boyhood days in this county and his whole life was spent on the farm where he was born. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Grangers organization which arose in this state in the seventies.

He was a life-long Democrat and always took an active part in politics. Religiously, he was a member of the Missionary Baptist church at Hazlewood and was a clerk in the church for many years. He died in 1897 on the home place near Hazlewood. He was a progressive farmer in every sense of the word and was a hardworking man all his life. He was a man of liberal ideas and always took an active interest in all public enterprises. The town of Hazlewood was named after his father, Daniel Hazlewood.

Daniel Sigler Hazlewood spent his boyhood days in the township schools of Liberty township, and at the same time assisted his father on the home farm. He has lived his entire life upon the farm where he was born, raising all the crops indigenous to this latitude and putting a part of his attention to the raising of live stock. Mr. Hazlewood was married on March 22, 1899, to Cordelia Maud Wooden, the daughter of Robert S. and Cordelia Jane (Wilhite) Wooden.

Robert Sanford Wooden, the oldest son of Joshua and Penelope Wooden, was born in Oldham county, Kentucky, August 4, 1845, and died at his home, three miles west of Hall, Indiana, August 30, 1913, at the age of sixty-eight years. He, with his parents, came to Indiana in 1851, where they lived for three years on the Samuel Hadley farm south of Monrovia, after which they moved to the old Wooden homestead in Adams township, Morgan county, where Robert S, grew to manhood. He united with the Methodist Episcopal church at Mount Zion in 1865, and in 1866 went to Everett, Cass county, Missouri, where he engaged in teaching. Four years later he returned to Morgan county, Indiana, and taught in Adams, Ashland, Gregg and Jefferson townships, that county. While in the West he had united with the Christian church, but upon his return home he reclaimed his membership with the Methodist Episcopal church at Mount Zion and continued a faithful member of that congregation until his death. On July 16, 1871. Mr. Wooden was married to Cordelia Wilhite, and to this union were born six children, Attie, Leslie, Guy, Maud, Hugh and Charles. On June 5, 1885, two angels visited their home. One was the angel of life, who brought with him the gift of the baby son, Charles, and the other was the angel of death, who took their mother home to God. For three years he struggled on alone, caring as best he could for the family of little children, and then, on January 1, 1888, he was married to Sarah Ellen Fisher, thus bringing into the home one who has been to the children a devoted mother, counsellor and friend, and who has never tired in her efforts to make home what it should be. Mr. Wooden was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and was worshipful master of the local lodge at the time of his death. In the fall of 1901, Leslie, the oldest son, went west and has not been heard from since, so it is supposed by the family that he is dead. "Uncle Bob," as he was familiarly called, was a friend to everyone, and because of his jolly, loving disposition, he was always cheerful, and if he ever had troubles or disappointments he never discussed them with his friends.

Daniel S. Hazlewood is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons at Hall, Indiana, and the Improved Order of Red Men at Hazlewood. He is also a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and the Pocahontas lodge.

Mr. and Mrs. Hazlewood are the parents of three children, Gladys, Roy and Geneva. He and the members of his family are members of the Missionary Baptist church at Hazlewood and take a zealous interest in all of its activities. Mr. Hazlewood is a trustee of the church. Politically, he is a Democrat, but has never taken a very active part in the game of politics.

EARL DUNCAN.

The men who till the soil are the men who stand at the foundation of the prosperity of our country. The profession of farming is one which antedates all others, and the only one which can exist independently of any other, and for this reason the farmer is the backbone of the nation. It is the product of his hands which fills the banks, turns the wheels of the factory and directs all the industries of the country. Farming is really the basic industry, and he who causes two blades of grass to grow where one formerly grew, is performing as useful a mission in life as the man who builds a flying machine, constructs a battle ship or digs the Panama canal.

Earl Duncan, the son of William G. and Matilda (Barnes) Duncan, was born in Liberty township, Hendricks county, Indiana, November 11, 1878. William G. Duncan was one of the early pioneers of this county, and the history of the Duncan family may be considered typical of the history of many of the older families of this county, and it may be found elsewhere in this volume in the sketch of Charles P. Duncan, a brother of the subject of this sketch.

Earl Duncan spent his boyhood days on the home farm and received a good, practical education in the district schools of his home township. Marrying at the age of twenty-three, he immediately engaged in farming south of Amo, this county, and a year later moved to his father-in-law's farm of one hundred and seventeen acres which he is now managing. In addition to raising all the crops of this locality, he makes a specialty of feeding hogs for the market, and he has gained the reputation of being one of the best hog raisers of the county, this branch of agriculture adding very materially to his annual income. He is a progressive farmer and does not hesitate to take advantage of the latest developments of machinery and the newest ideas in the culture of crops.

Mr. Duncan was married on October 9, 1901, to Ada Reitzel, the daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Norton) Reitzel, and to this marriage have been born three sons, Wendell, Russell and Ralph.

George Washington Reitzel was born August 20, 1847, in Hendricks county, Indiana, and is the son of Daniel and Melvina (Burks) Reitzel. Daniel Reitzel was born in North Carolina, and came to Hendricks county, Indiana, with his brother, David, and brother-in-law, Joshua Pickett, when he was twenty-one years of age. Here Daniel Reitzel entered one hundred and sixty acres of land from the government, and two years later sold one hundred acres of his farm to Israel Jackson and sixty acres to David Reitzel. and he then returned to North Carolina, but shortly afterwards returned to this county and bought land in Clay township. Later he went into Hamilton county, but again returned to Hendricks county and bought a farm in Liberty township. He afterwards sold this and purchased a farm in Clay township and in the fall of 1860 went west, where he bought a farm and died in 1873. Melvina Burks was born in Kentucky, and came to Putnam county, Indiana, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Burks, when a babe in arms. She died in 1878. Daniel Reitzel helped to build the first Lutheran church about one and three-fourths miles south of Pecksburg, this county, which was a rude log structure. Mr. Reitzel was very highly respected and esteemed in this county. He was twice married, and by his first marriage he had one daughter, Rachel Appleby, who lives east of Avon, Indiana. By Mr. Reitzel's second marriage there were nine children: Allen, who lives in Pecksburg, this county; George, the father of Mrs. Duncan; Ambrose, also a resident of Pecksburg; William, of Peru, Indiana; John, of Franklin township; Marcus, of Indianapolis, and three daughters who died in infancy. George W. Reitzel was married in 1883 to Lizzie Norton, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca (Harlan) Norton, and her death occurred in 1895. To this marriage there were born two children, Mrs. Ada Duncan, and Mrs. Hazel Patterson, of Hazelwood, Indiana. In 1907 George W. Reitzel was married to Julia Henderson and to this marriage were born two children, Helen and William Allen. Mr. Reitzel has been a prosperous farmer in the county and is now the owner of two hundred and sixty-nine acres of good farming land in Liberty and Franklin townships. He is a member of the Masonic order at Clayton and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Monrovia. Mr. Reitzel is a Republican in politics and a loyal member of the Lutheran church, of which he is now the only trustee.

Mr. Duncan is a Republican in politics and takes an active interest in the affairs of his party. He has been road superintendent for the past six years, his last term expiring January i, 1914. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men at Hazelwood. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are both members of the Christian church at Hazelwood and he has been a trustee of the church for the past three years. Mr. Duncan is a man of high ideals, straightforward and unassuming, and commands the respect of all with whom he comes in contact.

CHARLES R. REED.

Among the honorable and influential citizens of Hendricks county, Indiana, is the subject of this review, who has here maintained his home for many years, winning a definite success by means of the agricultural industry, to which he has devoted his attention during the years of an active business life. His career has been without shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil, and thus he has ever commanded the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

Charles R. Reed is a native of the old Hoosier state, having been born in Marion county about two miles south of Clermont, near the Hendricks county line, on January 11, 1860, being the son of Thomas J. and Lucy (Hamilton) Reed, both of whom were natives of Ohio. Both came to Indiana in the early forties with their respective parents, while they were still small children. Thomas J. Reed was a son of Jediah and Catherine (Negelie) Reed, the former being of Scotch-Irish descent, while the latter was of German origin. From her native state of Pennsylvania she came to Ohio, where she and Jediah Reed were married. Jediah Reed was a tanner and carpenter by trade and after his marriage he came to Indiana and settled near Indianapolis, which was at that time but a thriving village. He often told of how he had hunted on the ground where the Marion county court house now stands. After residing in Indianapolis for a time, he removed to near Clermont, where he worked for David McCurdy for several years. He then came to Hendricks county, where he operated a tan yard for Thornton Gorham in Lincoln township. About 1858 or 1859 he purchased land in Lincoln township near Clermont and lived in that vicinity until his death. Thomas J. Reed, father of the subject of this sketch, purchased a tract of forty acres south of Clermont about 1860 or 1861. He later sold that and moved to Hamilton county, and it was while residing there that his wife (mother of the immediate subject of this sketch) died. After the death of his wife, Thomas J. Reed sold his farm in Hamilton county and came back to Hendricks county, where he bought forty acres in the southeastern part of Brown township and resided in that vicinity until his death. He was one of the prominent men of the community in his day, a man much honored and respected, and served the township as justice of the peace for a great many years.

Charles R. Reed was one of a family of six children and remained with his parents until some fifteen or sixteen years of age, when he secured his first work as apprentice to the tile-makers' trade. On August 20, 1885, he was united in marriage with Sarah Ettie Ballard. After his marriage, he purchased fifty acres of land in the southeastern part of Brown township and has resided there ever since. Mrs. Reed was born just across the public highway from her present home, on August 28, 1863, being the daughter of James and Sarah (Corbly) Ballard, the former from Scott county, Kentucky, and the latter a native of Maryland. Both came to Indiana when quite young. Sarah Corbly's oldest brother. Richard by name, enjoyed the distinction of being the first white child born in Marion county. After James B. Reed and Sarah Corbly were married, they entered the one hundred and sixty acres where Sarah Ettie was born and lived there the remainder of their lives, rearing an interesting family of thirteen children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Reed has been born one son, Earl Chester, who married Flo Erie Smith, daughter of Henry and Allie (Hilton) Smith. Earl Chester Reed lives about one-half mile north of Tilden, Indiana, on a farm belonging to his father-in-law. He entered Wabash College, but was forced to abandon his idea of completing his course, owing to ill health. He has one child. Reuel Irvin.

While Mr. Reed is not a member of any church, he is interested in the Christian church, of which his wife and son are both members and are deeply interested in the affairs of that society. Fraternally, Mr. Reed is a member of the time-honored body of Free and Accepted Masons, and both he and his wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star. His career thus far has been a consistent and honorable one and, because of his stanch integrity and his accomplishments, he is entitled to hold the sincere confidence and good will of all who know him. He has been one of those solid men of brain and substance so essential to the material growth and prosperity of a community and whose influence has been willingly extended in behalf of every deserving enterprise that has for its object the advancement of the moral or material welfare of the community.

JOHN RAYMOND MILES.

Hendricks county is able to boast of many old and prominent families, men and women whose ancestors for several generations have written their names upon the pages of the history of the county. Among these, the names of Miles and Brady are well known, and in our present article we wish to speak of both.

John Raymond Miles, one of the prominent young farmers of the locality, first saw the light of day upon the farm where he now resides, a trifle less than two miles northeast of Clayton, on the 21st day of May, 1883. He is the son of Thomas J. Miles, a prominent and influential farmer of this locality. This gentleman, of whom we have spoken elsewhere in this volume, was born in 1842 near Belleville, a son of John and Martha Miles. Here he spent his youth and received his schooling, and here, later, he met and married Tabitha Tudor, whose birth occurred in Morgan county, in 1852.

The immediate subject of this article, John Raymond Miles, spent his childhood and youth upon the homestead farm, receiving his schooling in the township schools, and as he grew to manhood and assisted his father with the various activities of the place, he was taught the best agricultural methods of the time, and to this wise training his present success is largely due.

In the year 1905 was solemuized Mr. Miles' marriage to Lela Brady, whose birth also occurred in Hendricks county. In fact her ancestry dates back to many generations of Hendricks county citizens. Her parents, Wesley and Catherine (Riggins) Brady, were also born in Center township, and here, after their marriage, their homestead was established. Mr. Brady was a most successful farmer, aggressive and intelligent, but his greatest business successes have been in the breeding and sale of fine live stock, in which department he is an authority. In the year 1004 he disposed of his farm and moved into Danville, engaging there in the livery business and dealing largely in fine horses

Mrs. Miles remained in the home of her parents until her marriage, receiving her schooling in the neighboring schools, but when, in 1905, she was married to Mr. Miles, the young people established their home in Clayton and for two years they resided here while Mr. Miles continued his agricultural pursuits upon the farm of his father, the homestead where he was born. As time elapsed, however, it seemed advisable for the young people to take up their abode also upon the farm, and here they have remained. Mr. Miles is now the owner of this beautiful estate, including three hundred and ninety acres of land. A successful farmer he has proven, combining industry and energy with modern methods and sound judgment, and, although a young man, he is already widely known and highly esteemed as a successful business man and also for his sterling qualities. A little daughter, May Geraldine, came to bless their home on the 5th day of January, 1906, and is now her mother's able assistant. Their home is noted for its genial hospitality, and the charming social graces of the hostess and the warmth of welcome extended by the host have endeared the family and their home to the many friends who surround them

WILLIAM BAXTER VESTAL.

The gentleman of whom this chronicle speaks is one of the honored pioneers of Hendricks county, Indiana, and for over a half century he has been a valued factor in the development of the same, prominently identified with the varied interests of his community. His well-directed energies in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his own business interests and his sound judgment have demonstrated what may be accomplished by the man of energy and ambition, who, persevering often in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles, proves that he is the possessor of those innate qualities that never fail to bring success if properly directed, as they have evidently been in the case of Mr. Vestal.

William Baxter Vestal, a son of Gabin and Catherine (Richards) Vestal, was born in Guilford township, this county, October 29, 1849. The early education of Mr. Vestal was received in the subscription schools of his township of that day and when a young man of twenty he went to Indianapolis and took employment with the George Merritt Company, manufacturers of woolens, with which firm he remained for twenty-five years, being advanced from time to time to positions of additional responsibility until, when he left there in 1894, he was the general manager of the company. In the latter year he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Guilford township, this county, on which he has been living for the past twenty years.

Mr. Vestal was married March 12, 1874, to Emma McCall, the daughter of James and Susan McCall, of Lancaster, Ohio. Her father was a carriage maker of that place. Her mother is a second cousin of Gen. William T. Sherman of Civil-war fame. Mrs, Vestal was one of six children born to her parents, and Mr. and Mrs. Vestal have a family of four children; Frank L. of Anderson, Indiana, is now chief engineer of the Union Traction Company; he married Esther Moore, the daughter of John S. Moore, of Plainfield. He was born October 5, 1875, and was educated in the academy at the latter place. He and his wife are the parents of one daughter, born in June, 1003. Catherine May, born April 2, 1878, is the wife of Halstead H. Mills, of Detroit, Michigan, who is a boiler inspector for the Hartford Insurance Company, and they have two children, Jeannette, born November 25, 1906, and Georgia B., born February 4, 1909. Georgia Emma, born August 24, 1881, is the wife of Wilbur Sherfy, of Billings, Montana, a civil engineer, a graduate of Purdue University, and now in the employ of the United States reclamation service. William Baxter, Ir., the youngest one of the children, was born September 13, 1887, and received his education at the Montana State College. He is now the assistant engineer of the city of Bozeman, Montana, and has charge of the special train which makes an annual tour through the state of Montana, advertising his city.

Mr. and Mrs. Vestal are both consistent and faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Bridgeport, and contribute liberally of their substance to its support. In his fraternal relations Mr. Vestal is a member of the blue lodge, council and chapter of Masons, and also holds membership in the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Vestal has always been a Republican in politics and has been very active in the councils of his party, and in 1901 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature from Hendricks county and served in that law-making body with distinction to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. The Legislature passed a law organizing advisory boards in each township in the state, and Mr. Vestal became the chairman of the first advisory board of his home township. In fact, he has always been interested in the public welfare of his community and has never forgotten the obligations which he owes to the public. His support of such measures and movements which make for the general good can always be depended upon and he is, in the full sense of the term, a representative and self-made American and thoroughly in harmony with the spirit of the advanced age in which he lives. He has not permitted the accumulation of wealth to affect in any way his actions toward those less fortunate than he.

CHARLES W. MILLS.

Among the men of Hendricks county who have wandered far from their native heath and won success in foreign fields is Charles W. Wills. When a young man he enlisted in the regular army and for three years was under the command of the President of the United States. He was shifted hither and thither over the extensive territory of our nation from Puerto Rico to the far Philippines on the west. During all of his service he conducted himself as a genuine American soldier and upon the expiration of his enlistment he became a general contractor of Indianapolis. Still later he engaged in the manufacture of automobiles, but the call of the farm was not to be disobeyed and several years ago he moved onto the old homestead farm, where he is now living the life of the plain and unostentations farmer.

Charles W. Mills, one of the distinguished sons of Hendricks county, was born in Guilford township, October 24, 1870. His parents were William P. and Olive (Mattem) Mills, his father being born in Ohio September 17, 1846. William P. Mills came to Indiana when a youth with his parents and settled in Guilford township, and on the home farm which his father left him he lived all of his life until he retired at Plainfield a few years ago, with the exception of a few years when he was in the general merchandise business at West Newton, Marion county. The wife of William P. Mills was born at Bridgeport in Marion county in 1849. Her ancestors came from Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively. Her father was a blacksmith by trade and died in 1803, her mother having passed away in February, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. William P. Mills were the parents of three children: Charles W., whose career is herein presented to the reader; Pearl C., born March 10, 1876, and a widow of Elbin C. Hadley; Henry Halstead, born October 26, 1880, who is at present a boiler inspector for the Hartford Insurance Company of Detroit. Henry married Catherine Vestal, of Plainfield, and has two children, Jeanette and Georgia.

Mr. Mills received his education in the common schools of Guilford township and later graduated from the academy at Plainfield. He then took a complete course in the Indianapolis Business College, after which he enlisted for three years as a soldier in the United States regular army. After his enlistment had expired he settled in Indianapolis, where he went into the contracting and building business for a number of years, after which he disposed of his business and entered into the automobile manufacturing business and continued at that for seven years in Indianapolis. Upon his father's retirement from the farm, he took charge of the old home place and has been no less successful in the farming profession than he was as a manufacturer and contractor. In the time he has been on the old home place he has improved it in various ways and is rapidly bringing the farm to a higher state of productivity.

Mr. Mills was married October 12, 1902. to Levada O'Mullane, of Owen county, Indiana, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O'Mullane. To Mr. and Mrs. Mills have been born five children, all of whom are still at home: Dorothy Pearl, Charles Julian, Beverly O'Mullane. Max Owen and Sherman Eugene.

Mr. Mills and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Bridgeport. He lent his support to the Democratic party and is in hearty sympathy with the Bryan-Wilson movement in Indiana at the present time. Mr. Mills' life has been one of action and persistence and the systematic and honorable methods which he has followed have resulted in not only gaining the confidence of those with whom he has had dealings, but also in elevating him in the esteem of his fellowmen. He is a man of pleasing address and is noted for his hospitality and kindliness.

ELI H. ANDERSON.

The agricultural interests of Guilford township, Hendricks county, have an able representative in Eli H. Anderson, a man who has succeeded in his chosen life work because he has worked persistently along such lines as cannot well fail in bringing success. He never lets the grass grow under his feet, but is always busy, and he believes in doing well whatever he attempts; thus, by having system in all his work, he has forged to the front and is in every way deserving of the respect in which he is held by all who know him.

Eli H. Anderson, one of the most extensive land holders of Hendricks county, was born March 18, 1865, in the town of Mooresville. His parents were Thomas C. and Anna (White) Anderson, his father being a native of Ohio and his mother of Wayne county, Indiana. Thomas Anderson, a farmer and brick mason, came to Hendricks county before the war and settled in Washington township, where he bought a quarter of a section of land. After three years' residence on this farm, he moved to Six Points, in this county, where he farmed for the next nine years. The remainder of his life was spent in Iroquois county, Illinois, where he died in 1873. his wife dying September 24, 1808. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Anderson were born four children, only two of whom are living, Benjamin W., whose history is set forth in this volume, and Eli H.

Eli H. Anderson is proud of the fact that he was born in a rude log cabin in the midst of a little clearing which his father had made on their farm. In this little cabin, surrounded by very primitive conditions, he and his brothers and sisters grew up. Their parents were ambitious for their children and gave them the best schooling which the neighborhood afforded. Hard work was the portion that was deeded out to the children of the Anderson family and what they profited by this is shown in the success that has attended the two living children, Eli and Benjamin. The whole life of Eli H. Anderson has been spent upon the farm and there is no feature of farming life that he does not thoroughly understand; he has made it his life study, and now, in the present day when the teaching of agriculture is becoming general throughout the country, it seems that farming is to be raised to the dignity of a profession.

Mr. Anderson was married February 27, 1901, to Lucille Nysewander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Nysewander. Mrs. Anderson was born near Plainfield and is one of a family of eight children, both of her parents being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have two sons, Benjamin Rufus, born September 2, 1903, and Clifford Eli, born March 9, 1005. Mr. Anderson is a member of the Knights of Pythias and is interested in the activities of the lodge. He lends his strong support to the Republican party. Religiously, he is a member of the Friends church, and may always be found in hearty co-operation with those who are advancing the welfare of his community. Mr. Anderson has been a life-long farmer and has been living on his present farm of four hundred and forty acres for the past fourteen years, where he does general farming which is peculiar to this locality. He has made a specialty of stock raising and finds this a valuable addition to his yearly income from the farm. In all the relations of life he has proved a man among men and because of his sterling qualities and stanch integrity he is well deserving of the confidence which has been placed in him by his fellow citizens.

JOHN L. PORTWOOD.

Agriculture has been an honored vocation from the earliest ages and, as a usual thing, men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free, outdoor life of the farm has a tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self-reliance which characterize true manhood and no greater blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with nature in the healthful, life-inspiring labor of the fields. It has always been the fruitful soil from which have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's scholars and distinguished man of letters were born on the farm and are indebted to its early influence for the distinction which they have attained.

John L. Portwood was born in Estill county, Kentucky, on January 17, 1867, the son of Leonard and Martha (Portwood) Portwood, both of whom were natives of that state. Martha Portwood was a daughter of Joseph and Susan (Gentry) Portwood. The family were slave holders, as were most Kentuckians of that day who were at all blessed with this world's goods. Leonard Portwood, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, was also an owner of slaves, having three at the time of the opening of the late rebellion. John L. Portwood was a child of but twenty-two months of age when his father, Leonard, departed this life, and the widow continued to operate the plantation with the assistance of her older sons. The subject lived with his mother until the time of his marriage, when he came to Indiana, locating in Hendricks county, where he engaged in agricultural work, hiring out by the month to farmers in the community. He continued in this way for four years, saving as best he could and at that time he was able to purchase one acre of ground about a mile and a half east of Brownsburg. He put this acre into an excellent state of cultivation, raising small garden truck thereon and also rented a larger tract of land close by, where he carried on general farming. He was in a way to prosper and at the end of four years had earned and saved sufficient money to purchase forty acres of land, located something over two miles northeast of Brownsburg. There he lived for two years, when he sold it and bought a forty-acre tract four miles northeast of Danville. There he lived for two years, and in 1906 sold it and purchased the seventy acres where he now resides, some three miles north of Brownsburg. Mr. Portwood has never specialized on any particular line of crops or stock, simply carrying on general farming, but this he has made pay him well, owing to his unfailing energy, untiring effort and excellent business ability. In his youth he received but a limited education, but has endeavored to overcome this handicap in every possible way and has won out through his pluck and determination. When Mr. Portwood arrived in Brownsburg from Kentucky he had but fifty cents in his pocket and through his own judicious management and effort he has made for himself his comfortable home and well cultivated acres.

In 1804 Mr. Portwood was united in marriage with Rhoda Richardson, who was born December 10, 1877, the daughter of Basil and Amy (Thompson) Richardson. All were natives of Kentucky. Amy Thompson was a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Riddle) Thompson and Basil Richardson was a son of David and Polly (White) Richardson. To the subject and wife have been born nine children, namely: Avery L., John, Nora, Bertha, Chester, Herman, Hazel, Martha and Lucile, all of whom are with the parents. The family is highly respected and considered among the leading citizens of the community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are members of the Christian church and give of time and means to further the cause of that society in their community. Mr. Portwood is a man whom to know is to admire, for he has led a most exemplary life and has sought to do his duty in all relations with his fellow men, being a man of honor, unswerving integrity and enterprise, consequently he is eminently deserving of mention in a history of his county, along with other well-known and representative citizens.

JOHN HADLEY ALMOND.

The present age is essentially utilitarian and the life of every successful man carries a lesson which, told in contemporary narrative, is productive of much good in shaping the destiny of others. There is, therefore, a due measure of satisfaction in presenting, even in brief resume, the life and achievements of such men, and in preparing the following history of the progressive farmer and dairyman whose name appears above, it is with the hope that it may prove not only interesting and instructive, but also serve as an incentive to those who contemplate making agriculture their life work.

John Hadley Almond, the son of Pleasant and Minerva J. (Hadley) Almond, was born near Plainfield, Indiana, October 12, 1865. His parents were both natives of Hendricks county, his father dying December 10, 1907, on the farm which he bought in 1857; his wife died on the old home farm on October 26, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Pleasant Almond were the parents of four children: Theophilus, who died in April, 1893; Roscoe; John Hadley; and Sarah C., who died October 8, 1873.

John H. Almond received his education in the district schools and completed his course in the Plainfield Academy. Until his marriage he worked on his father's farm and immediately after his marriage he went onto a farm of his own, where he has continued with uniform success up to the present time as a farmer and stock raiser. Though he has not neglected his general farming, he has paid special attention to his live stock business. At present he is conducting an extensive dairy and has had remarkable success in this line of business.

Mr. Almond was married March 13, 1889, to Emma J. Hadley, of Morgan county, the daughter of Zimri and Luretha Hadley, and to their union have been born four children: Luretha M., born February 28, 1892, and died August 27, 1913; Eliza O., born June 10, 1895; Laura L., born April 21, 1896; Earl C., born September 23, 1898. Eliza and Laura have both graduated from the Central Academy and the youngest child is now in the academy. Mr. and Mrs. Almond are giving their children the advantages of an education and have assisted them in every way to prepare themselves for their teacher's career.

Mr. Almond has been a stanch supporter of the Republican ticket and has taken a part in the local conventions of his party, although he has never been a candidate for any office at the hands of his party. He and the rest of his family are loyal members of the Friends church and are interested in all of the activities of that denomination. Mr. Almond is one of those men who has a splendid personality and has always been an energetic and enterprising citizen who has attained a definite success because he worked for it. For this reason he justly merits the respect and esteem which has been so willingly accorded him by his fellow citizens.

COL. JOHN T. BARNETT.

There is one profession which has enrolled very few men from Hendricks county and that is the military service of the United States. Col. John T. Barnett was the first man of the county to graduate from West Point Military Academy, and the second man from the county to command a regiment during a war. He has had a long and varied career in the service of his country, and since his retirement, on account of disability, he has been no less active in civil life.

Col. John T. Barnett, who is now living at No. 2001 North Delaware street, Indianapolis, Indiana, was born three miles west of Danville, September 2, 1851, on the same farm which his father entered from the government. His parents were William and Nancy (Buchanan) Barnett. His father was a native of Fluvanna county, old Virginia. William Barnett, with his parents, came west and settled in Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1808. About 1832 William Barnett came to Hendricks county, Indiana, and bought and settled on the farm where he lived the rest of his life.

Nancy Buchanan Barnett was a direct descendant of the famous Scottish scholar, historian and poet, George Buchanan, of the Scottish clan of Buchanan. Her grandfather, Alexander Buchanan, came direct from Scotland to this country about 1760. She was born and raised near Versailles in Woodford county, Kentucky. With her father she came to Hendricks county, Indiana, as a young woman and settled near old Belleville. She was united in marriage to William Barnett about 1840.

William and Nancy Barnett were prominent and active members of the Missionary Baptist church throughout their lives, he being clerk of the church from the time he came to Hendricks county till his death. He died in 1875, at the age of seventy-one years. His widow, Nancy Barnett, lived on said farm till her death in 1800 in the seventy-ninth year of her life.

To William and Nancy Barnett were born seven children, five of whom are still living: Levi A. Barnett, of Danville, Indiana; Mrs. Harriet Ellen McKitrick, of Indianapolis, Indiana; Dr. Eli S. Barnett, of Salt Lake City, Utah; Mrs. Nancy A. Whatley, whose husband is an eminent physician of Parral, old Mexico; and Col. John T. Barnett, the immediate subject of this sketch.

Col. John T. Barnett received his early education in the district schools of his township and the old Danville Academy. After teaching school about one year he entered Asbury (De Pauw) University in the fall of 1871, and he completed the freshman year with the class of 1875. Receiving an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, upon the recommendation of Gen. John Coburn, the then congressman, he entered said academy in June, 1873. He graduated from the Military Academy in June, 1878, number fourteen in his class. He stood specially well in his class in mathematics and allied subjects. Colonel Barnett was obliged to remain out of the academy one year on account of severe illness from typhoid fever. He was assigned to the Fifth United States Cavalry as second lieutenant United States Army.

After the customary graduating leave of absence, he joined the Fifth United States Cavalry October 1, 1878, at Fort D. A. Russell, near Cheyenne, Wyoming. He was in active service during the next eight years, and served at various posts with his regiment and on detached duty in Wyoming and Texas. In 1886, he was compelled to retire from active service on account of disability incurred in line of duty, since which time he has been on the retired list of the United States Army. After his retirement he settled in Danville for awhile, but his health still remained very precarious. He suffered from nervous prostration, and spinal anemia which was largely brought on by mountain fever and the high altitude in which he served during his active service.

In 1893 Colonel Barnett moved to Indianapolis and settled on Meridian street, where he lived for about one year. His health having somewhat improved, he removed to Piqua, Ohio, in the spring of 1894 and engaged in the hardware business. He became principal owner, president and manager of the Barnett Hardware Company at Piqua and remained as such till 1899, when he disposed of his interests and returned to Indianapolis, where he now lives at the corner of Twentieth and Delaware streets. Upon his return to Indianapolis he engaged in the manufacturing pharmaceutical business for a short time till a return of his old disease caused him to give it up. When he again became improved in health he engaged in his present real estate, loan and insurance business. His office is now at No. 50 North Delaware street, Indianapolis.

In 1893 Colonel Barnett was appointed by Governor Matthews, assistant inspector general of the Indiana National Guard, with the rank of major, which position he held till about 1895, when he resigned on account of absence from the state. At the beginning of the Spanish-American war, Colonel Barnett offered his services to the secretary of war and to the governors of Ohio and Indiana.

The Governor of Indiana availed himself of his valuable services and he was appointed colonel and commander of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry in May, 1898, and he at once took his regiment to Camp Alger, Virginia. The regiment was stationed at Camp Alger, Thoroughfare Gap, Virginia, Camp Meade, Pennsylvania, and was mustered out of the service at Camp Mount, Indianapolis, about the middle of November, 1898. While at Camp Alger, Colonel Barnett commanded the Second Division of the Second Army Corps for a short time, and his brigade for about one-half of the time he was in the service.

On the 18th of December, 1879, Colonel Barnett was married to Emma Charlotte Peirsol, the only daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth J. Peirsol, a prominent family of Hendricks county, Isaac Peirsol being a successful merchant and banker of Danville. To Colonel and Emma C. Barnett two children were born: William P., who died at birth, February 14, 1881, and Chester P., born January 14, 1887. Emma C. Barnett died in May, 1892, and in the following year Colonel Barnett married Cora C. Campbell, the daughter of L. M. Campbell, a prominent lawyer of Danville, Ind. No children were born of this second marriage.
