HISTORY OF WAYNE COUNTY.

CHAPTER I.

THE CITY OF RICHMOND.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE BEAUTIFUL AND PROSPEROUS CITY.—INTRODUCTORY.—SURROUNDINGS.—RANK.—PROGRESSION.—THE CITY PLATTED, 1816.—INCORPORATION.—FIRST OFFICERS.—EARLY ORDINANCES.—FIRST EVENTS.—EARLY INHABITANTS.—VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT.—TEMPERANCE.—LIBRARIES.—THE RICHMOND AND BROOKFIELD CANAL PROJECTED.—ITS FAILURE.—EARLY BUSINESS INTERESTS IN DETAIL.

The city of Richmond, Ind., stands without a rival in the beauty of her location, the wealth of her surroundings, the solidity of her growth, and in the refinement, culture and hospitality of her citizens. The rich agricultural country which lies all around her, the great productiveness of which finds a market at her door, the enterprise and energy of her business men, all combine to make her what she is—the Queen City of the State. Resting proudly upon the banks of the beautiful and winding Whitewater, looking upon its clear waters, and the valley itself a beautiful panorama of scenic magnificence, why indeed should not Richmond be proud and her people glory in the brightness of the present, and a future even more glowing in its promises?

Richmond stands upon an oval crest on the east bank of the Whitewater River, or what is called its East Branch, and the beauty of its location is enhanced by its perfect drainage which all tends to the valley and the waters of the Whitewater a hundred feet below, thus making it in healthfulness without a peer in the State. Her death rate is wonderfully low, as stagnant pools and miasmatic bottom-lands form no part of her surroundings, and the pure air which is found here is not of an enervating nature, but gives energy to the man and elasticity to his steps. Her situation being a salubrious one has been one great cause of her rapid progress to material wealth. The soil is mostly loam, over a subsoil of gravel, and this rests upon the limestone rock which underlies the whole country. The channel of the Whitewater will average from 400 to 500 feet in width, and the bed of the stream is fully 100 feet below the site of Richmond. The stream is formed by three smaller branches which come from the north, the northeast and the east, called respectively the West Fork, Middle Fork and East Fork of the East Branch of the Whitewater, and in ages past has cut for itself a winding channel through the soil and the underlying nearly horizontal strata of limestone rock. Take the city thus altogether with its wealth, location, its climate of rare life-giving qualities, and it is a marvel in the history of the State. It is substantially built, and it has within its area a large number of massive brick and stone blocks that in architectural beauty, finish and solidity will vie with any city in the State. Its educational advantages are superior, and its societies, lodges, industrial homes, all show that charity is engrafted in the hearts of the people. Its business and manufacturing interests and its great freighting facilities give it a prominence as one of the leading commercial centers of the State, while its future in this regard is destined to place it ever in the front rank of commercial cities. Its wide and well-paved streets, its beautiful residences and cultivated surroundings, its fine churches and public-school buildings, give to it not only a home-like appearance, but metropolitan in its make-up, showing that its citizens have seen much of this world and profited by their opportunities.

Richmond is situated nearly due east of Indianapolis, the capital of the State, a distance of sixty-eight miles, north of Cincinnati about seventy-four miles, and on no less than three trunk lines of railway. Its local lines of travel and communication from every section of the county and in the adjoining State is by well-graveled turnpikes, besides the railroads, which give every portion of the county railroad communication and turnpike with their capital city and the commercial emporium of Central Western Ohio and Eastern Indiana. The freedom of access to all parts of the country and the facilities thus given the people to find a large and healthy market for all articles brought within her limits, has caused Richmond to grow and prosper. There has been no period when speculative activity ran riot, followed by business stagnation, taking years to recover. Thus, if she has not grown as rapidly as some Western towns, neither has she suffered the depression which has caused not only the ill effect of too rapid growth, but has actually caused the death of many thus affected.

Richmond ranked the eighth city in population in the State and sixth in wealth in 1875, and while in that year her debt amounted to $186,972, it is now, Jan. 1, 1884, less than $40,000. This latter sum will be due in 1889, and will all be promptly paid at maturity, showing the healthy financial standing of the city. Now, with a population close on to 15,000, comparatively speaking free from debt, with schools, colleges and churches, with beautiful surroundings, handsome residences, massive business blocks and energetic, refined and cultivated people, there is nothing in the future of Richmond but what promises a rich fruition.

The progress of Richmond from 1816 to 1884, in general terms, has thus been given, but her growth in detail requires more space, and it will be given here, and also the names of those who contributed to her prosperity, by engaging in business, and by such acts as have shown them public-spirited citizens. Richmond's advancement has been due to the energy and far-sighted people of every generation that have found a home within her limits, and this has placed her in the proud position she holds among the cities of the country.

WHEN PLATTED.

Richmond was the third village platted in Wayne County, Salisbury being first, in 1811, Centerville second, in 1814, and Richmond third, in 1816. Nearly a decade had passed since the county had been first settled. Fully three-fourths of that time the ground upon which Richmond stood had been cultivated as a farm, and corn and other productions had been annually raised where now stand massive blocks of brick buildings and other evidences of a progressive age and an energetic people.

The ground was owned by John Smith and Jeremiah Cox, and the former proposed to Mr. Cox to lay out a town. This Mr. Cox at first declined, saying, "I would rather see a buck's tail than a tavern-sign." Notwithstanding this refusal Mr. Smith went ahead and employed David Hoover to lay off a portion of his land for a town, who did so, along Front and Pearl streets, which was the extent of the town plat at that time. In Dr. Plummer's history he says: "That it is well to look into the early history of Richmond, for recent as the facts comparatively are (this was in 1857) it is already said that Richmond was begun in 1818. The truth appears to be that that part of the town lying south of Main street (then a section line and dividing the lands of John Smith and Jeremiah Cox) was laid out in 1816, and, as it appears from the form of the lots, without regard to the variation of the magnetic needle. Two years afterward Jeremiah Cox made his addition on the north side of Main street. This was in 1818."

The explanation given why North Front street was run along the brow of the hill at an acute angle of  $47^{\circ}$  with Main street is thus stated: "At the time the town was platted by David Hoover, there ran along the brow of the hill," says Dr. Plummer, "a country road, the first, perhaps, in Wayne County. As no splendid anticipations of future greatness were entertained for the new town by its proprietors, no provisions were made for coming necessities, the present alone being considered. To continue South Front street directly north would run it into wet ground unsuitable for a street, or for building lots; besides, the street would ultimately run into the river. On the hill a road was already established; no ground would again have to be relinquished for a street, forty feet being probably the width of this road, and the corners of Main and Front streets became important points."

These are the old streets, and for a long while were the only ones in Richmond.

From the MSS. of David Hoover we find that the town was first called "Smithville," after the proprietor, but the name not giving satisfaction, Thos. Roberts, James Pegg and himself were chosen to select another. Roberts proposed "Waterford;" Pegg, "Plainfield," and Mr. Hoover, the writer, Richmond, and the last was approved by the lot owners. Richmond seemed to grow, but it was slow. It seemed to hold all it received, and continued to grasp the future with a steady hand and progress, the population being 453 in 1824; in 1826, 648, of which 16 were colored; and in 1828, 824, of which 427 were white males, 347 white females, and 50 colored persons.

INCORPORATION.

In an ancient-looking pamphlet printed by Elijah Lacey, at Richmond, in 1823, and containing the ordinances enacted by the trustees of the town of Richmond in the preceding years, we find the following record:

"Agreeably to the provisions of an act of assembly passed Jan. 1, 1817, the citizens of the town of Richmond convened on the 7th of the 9th month (September), 1818, at the house of Thomas and Justice, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they wished said town to be incorporated; and pursuant thereto made choice of Thomas Swain, President, and Ezra Boswell, Clerk, who, after being legally qualified, entered upon the duties of their offices; and on taking the state of the polls, it appeared that there were twenty-four votes in favor of incorporating, and against it, none.

"THOMAS SWAIN, Pres.

"EZRA BOSWELL, Clerk."

"At a meeting of the citizens of the town of Richmond, for the election of trustees, held at the house of Thomas and Justice on the 14th of the 9th month (September), 1818, it appeared on comparing the polls that Ezra Boswell, Thomas Swain, Robert Morrisson, John McClain and Peter Johnson were duly elected.

"THOMAS SWAIN, Pres.

"EZRA BOSWELL, Clerk."

The "house of Thomas and Justice" thus brought into notice by the foregoing was a new frame building erected on the northeast corner of Main and Front streets, and was designed for a store, though then unoccupied. In speaking of the owners of this building and the first trustees elected Dr. Plummer said Thomas and Justice were both carpenters, and were both dead at the time of his writing, 1857, and three of the five trustees had also crossed the dark river. Robert Morrisson, whose memory is treasured now, and Peter Johnson were then living; Ezra Boswell, the brewer, with his mutilated eye; John McClain, the blacksmith, with his ample physical frame, were well remembered by the citizens of later date. Thos. Swain, the President, was a dark-skinned, stoop-shouldered man, and one of solid sense. Such was the beginning of Richmond.

The first of the ordinances in the pamphlet above mentioned defines the duties of the corporation officers. The second, "For restraining immoral and pernicious practices," is here given entire:

"SEC. 1. Be it ordained by the President and Trustees of the Town of Richmond, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, who shall have attained the age of fourteen years or upward, to engage on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, in sporting, rioting, quarrelling, or common labor, works of necessity and charity excepted, within this corporation; every person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of two dollars.

"SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That it shall be unlawful for any tavern-keeper, or other person, to sell or barter spirituous liquors within this corporation, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, except to travelers, or to persons who may want it for medical purposes; every person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of two dollars.

"SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, That if any person who shall have attained to the age of fourteen years, or upward, shall profanely curse, damn, or swear, within this corporation, such person, on conviction thereof, shall be fined one dollar “SEC. 4. Be it further ordained, That if any person or persons shall, on any occasion, or under any pretext whatsoever, discharge any gun, pistol, fuzee, or any other kind of fire-arms within this corporation, such person or persons, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in the sum of fifty cents, for each and every such discharge.

“SEC. 5. Be it further ordained, That should any person or persons unnecessarily run or gallop any horse, mare or gelding within the limits of this corporation; or should any person or persons play at long-bullets along any street or alley within this corporation, such person or persons shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in the sum of one dollar for either or each of the offenses enumerated in this section.

“SEC. 6. Be it further ordained, That if any person or persons shall be guilty of an assault, or an assault and battery, of a riot, rout, or affray, within the bounds of this corporation, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of two dollars for each and every such offense.

“SEC. 7. Be it further ordained, That if any person shall drink ardent spirits to excess, so as to become drunk, within this corporation, such person shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of one dollar for every such act of drunkenness.

“SEC. 8. Be it further ordained, That all prosecutions shall be commenced within ten days after the offense shall have been committed.

“JOHN SCOTT, Pres.

“ JOHN WRIGHT, “ LEVI JESSUP, “ GEO. SPRINGER, “ HENRY DUNHAM, “ ELIJAH LACEY,

“ Attest: ELEAZER HIATT, Clerk.

“Oct. 26, 1822.”

Another ordinance of the same date fixes the rates of license of "wax-figure and puppet show exhibitions" at from $2 to $3. Market days were fixed as the third and seventh day in each week, to continue until nine o'clock in the morning, during which time it was unlawful for any person to trade "in any other place in this town, except the Market House," under a penalty of 50 cents for each offense.

In 1834 a special charter was granted by the Legislature and John Sailor was elected First Burgess; Basil Brightwell, Second Burgess; John Finley, Daniel P. Wiggins, Benjamin Fulghum, Samuel Stokes, William S. Addleman, John Suffrins, William Dulin, Edmund Crover, Albert C. Blanchard, Caleb Shearon, John Hughes, Joseph Parry and Joseph P. Osborn, Councilmen; Jacob Sanders, Assessor; Eli Brown, Treasurer, and Isaac Barmes, High Constable. These officers only held until the regular spring election in May, when a new election took place, which resulted as follows:

First Burgess, John Brady; Second Burgess, Basil Brightwell; Councilmen, John Suffrins, Daniel P. Wiggins, John Sailor, Samuel Stokes, Albert C. Blanchard, William S. Addleman, Samuel W. Smith, Caleb Shearon, William Dulin, John M. Laws, Joseph Block, Alexander Stokes, David Hook; Assessor, Jacob Sanders; Treasurer, Eli Brown; High Constable, Charles O'Harra.

Richmond was governed under this borough charter until 1840, when it was incorporated as a city, under a charter adopted by the citizens, and on the 4th of May the following officers were elected:

Mayor, John Sailor; Councilmen: First Ward, Basil Brightwell, Benjamin Strattan; Second Ward, Henry Hollingsworth, William Cox; Third Ward, William Parry, Irvin Reed; Fourth Ward, Nathan Morgan, Stephen Swain; Treasurer, John Haines; Marshal, Jesse Meek; Assessor, Eli Brown.

EARLY EVENTS.

John Smith opened the first store in 1810. Robert Morrisson started another in 1814; then these two formed a partnership under the firm name of Smith & Morrisson, and a few years later were succeeded by the firm of Smith & Frost. This store was on lot 45, Pearl street. Edward Frost afterward kept a store on lot 33, Front street, in 1823.

The first brick house was built in Richmond by Jno. Smith, in 1811, and was considered the finest building of the kind in Indiana Territory.

The first tavern erected was on lot No. 6, South Pearl street, in 1816, by Philip Harter, who kept it for several years. It was burned down in 1827. The first church was a log one, and was warmed by large fires made of charcoal in sugar kettles.

The first hewed-log house erected in Richmond was on Charles W. Starr's farm, near a tanyard.

The first postoffice in Richmond was established in 1818, and Robert Morrisson was commissioned as Postmaster, the office being opened in a frame building at the southwest corner of Main and Front streets. It was next kept in a frame building on the northwest corner of Main and Pearl streets.

The first regular arrivals of mail in 1818 was once every two weeks; but as it had to be carried on horseback, and high water was frequent and bad roads a drawback, the mail frequently failed to get in oftener than once a month. The yearly receipts amounted to from $10 to $12, which at this time, January, 1884, would not be one day's receipts of the present Richmond postoffice.

About 1820 a two-story brick building was erected on the northeast corner of Pearl and Main streets, and was kept as a tavern by Jonathan Bayles; and another frame building on the southwest corner of Main, kept by Ephraim Lacey. The latter was discontinued in 1828.

According to an old manuscript in the hands of the late Charles F. Coffin, the following families were living in the county in 1807-'8--men mostly citizens of Richmond a few years later. The number in each family is also given. It was published by Dr. Plummer in his history of Richmond:

These were among the first settlers of the county and city, and average over six persons to the family.

Richmond was slowly progressing. Every year served to add something to her population and to the solidity of her standing as a growing village. Streets had been made, but little improved, and the general progress had been in other directions. In 1826, a decade after coming into existence, an effort was made to improve the streets and in other ways show a more progressive spirit on the part of the citizens. Where the village streets and sidewalks had all been one and cattle roamed freely, sidewalks were attempted, some gutters made; a few even went so far as to plant trees in front of their residence lots, horse racks were set back from the street, and a general air of progress was manifested. In this respect the following editorial from the Public Ledger, in 1827, shows that the editor was fully abreast, if not in advance, of the times. Certainly his remark would not be out of place at this day:

“Village Improvements.—The streets of our village, though considerably improved last year, yet require much labor to render them complete. In a number of places, after rain, water stands until evaporation carries it off. This is not only disgusting to the sight, but injurious to the health. Such things ought not to be in a village improving as this is. It belongs to the appropriate officers to take the lead, and then individuals no doubt will contribute their exertions. Besides improvement of the streets, there are other subjects worthy the attention of the citizens. Shade trees form so delightful a prospect, so much enhance the beauty and interest of a place, and are withal so wholesome, that every owner of a lot should set them out in front of it. The labor and expense would be trifling.

“Protection against fire is much needed. Built as the houses principally are, of wood, a single fire might sweep at once the promising village into ruins. All these subjects are worthy of attention, and ought to be acted upon.”

It is supposed that these suggestions were acted upon, for shade trees were soon found along the streets, and no serious fire had for years made the village its victim.

The Richmond Temperance Society was formed in the winter of 1832-'3. It progressed very well the following year. E. Grover was its Secretary, and March 30, 1834, Jno. D. Vaughan, at the request of the society, delivered a temperance address which was attended by nearly all the citizens. The society did not last many years. Intemperance was not a habit among the citizens, though a good deal of liquor of one kind and another was consumed. Common whisky was the leading article.

The Richmond Library was incorporated and established in 1826. Its collection of books for a year or two was very small and a family book-case would have held them all. There was no library building, and the books were moved from place to place, as the trustees could find a librarian to take charge of them. In 1834 the “Young Men’s Library” was incorporated and the books of the Richmond Library were ordered sold by a majority of the shareholders. The reason given by some was that they wished to patronize the Young Men’s Library. This was on June 18, 1834. They were sold, but that is the last record found of either of the associations.

The coldest day Richmond had experienced up to date was on Saturday, the 12th of March, 1836. Snow had fallen to the depth of eight inches the night before, and on that morning the thermometer stood seventeen degrees below zero.

In the Richmond & Brookfield Canal, which was never finished, though $45,000 was expended, Richmond took stock to the amount of $50,000. This was in 1838. The distance was thirty-four miles. A big freshet nearly ruined the work and it was finally abandoned. This was the only attempt ever made to build a canal to Richmond.

EARLY BUSINESS INTERESTS.

How Richmond progressed as a business point may be gathered from the number of business houses in operation in 1824. There were then eight dry-goods and grocery store or general stores, keeping a little of everything called for in the mercantile line; seven blacksmith-shops, four hatters, four cabinet-makers, six shoemakers, three tailors, three coopers, three potteries, one gunsmith, one saddler, one pump-maker, one bakeshop and a steam distillery, besides carpenters, stone-masons, plasterers, etc. The Public Ledger, which gave this list, wound up with the statement "that of professional men there were but two physicians, and of lawyers we have NOT ONE!"

To give these more in detail would perhaps be best, thus showing who it was that conducted the business interests of Richmond in its infancy. As the village became known, new arrivals came and located, many of them entering into some kind of mercantile business, thus causing those who had laid the foundation of a future city to divide the trade of the village with them. Among the first to arrive was Edward L. Frost, from Long Island, N. Y., with whom John Smith was for a short time associated in trade. He was the first merchant in town after Robert Morrisson, and afterward traded alone on Front street, south of Main, and removed to the southeast corner of Main and Pearl streets. Philemon H. Cross was a clerk for his brother Edward, and subsequently became a partner.

John Suffrins, a native of Virginia, came to Richmond and commenced business in August, 1818, on the east side of North Front street, near Main, and soon after bought the Thomas and Justice building, on the northeast corner of Main and Front streets. James McGuire, after Suffrins, traded a short time at the latter place. Atticus Siddall, who had taught school in the village, succeeded Frost at Ham's corner. He was for some time alone, afterward with Dr. Cook. About the year 1822 John Wright, a native of Maryland, commenced business on Main street, between Front and Pearl streets, where he remained a few years. He sold his business to his son-in-law, Basil Brightwell, who also built a flouring mill on the site of Jackson, Swayne & Dunn's woolen mill, below the national bridge. He afterward became embarrassed, and fearing bankruptcy, committed suicide.

Joseph P. Plummer, from Baltimore, came to Richmond in 1823, and commenced business on South Front street, from whence he removed to his new frame store, corner of Main and South Front, since known as Plummer's corner.

Joseph P. Strattan, a native of Virginia, came here in 1824 or 1825; was first a clerk for Edward L. Frost, and afterward for Robert Morrisson. Strattan, then in partnership with Morrisson, commenced trade at the corner first occupied by Morrisson, a building having been removed to that place—firm, J. P. Strattan & Co. Strattan having formed a partnership with Daniel Reid, a clerk of Morrisson (firm, Strattan & Reid), Morrisson sold them his remaining stock of goods, and retired finally from the mercantile business. After about three years Strattan bought out Reid, and a year or two after sold out to his brother, Benjamin Strattan, and bought a farm four miles north of town about the year 1833.

David Holloway, who had removed in 1813 from Waynesville, Ohio, to Cincinnati, came in 1823 to Wayne Township, and bought the homestead of Judge Peter Fleming, near the State line, and, in 1825, removed to Richmond, and commenced business on the northeast corner of Main and Front streets. After a few years of successful business he retired, and was succeeded by William Hill, son of Robert Hill, an early settler.

Jeremy Mansur, an early settler, and for several years a skillful edged-tool maker at Salisbury, and for many years a farmer about three miles west from Richmond, commenced the mercantile business in the city in 1831, on the southwest corner of Main and Pearl streets, known as Plummer's corner, and continued the business about eight years.

Edmund Evans, of English birth, who came from Baltimore with a grown-up family about the year 1831, and bought a farm a short distance southeast from town, started, some years after, a wholesale and retail leather store, to which he finally added dry-goods. His store was on Plummer's corner, and had been previously occupied by Jeremy Mansur.

Isaac Gray, from Virginia, came to Richmond in the fall of 1827, and was in the mercantile business about two years. His store was on the ground now occupied by T. J. Bargis's stove store, on Main street, north side, between Pearl and Front streets.

Oren Huntington, from Massachusetts, came to Richmond in September, 1831, and went the next year to Anderson. He returned in 1838, engaged the next year as clerk for Samuel Fleming, a son of Judge Peter Fleming, and in 1840, in company with Nathan Wilson, bought Fleming's stock in trade, which a year or two afterward they sold to Cook and Siddall. In or about the year 1844 he resumed trade, and in 1845 sold his goods to Joseph P. Strattan for a farm a few miles north of Richmond. After a few years of farming, exchanged his farm with Benj. Fulghum for his brick house, corner of Main and Franklin streets, which had been fitted up for a public house. He soon remodeled the house, and established a first-class hotel, known as the Huntington House.

Benjamin Strattan came when a youth and served several years as clerk for J. P. Strattan & Co., and afterward for Strattan & Reid. Afterward he bought the goods of his brother, Joseph P., then sole proprietor, and subsequently the building of Morrisson. He continued business, alone and in partnership, many years.

Joseph W. Gilbert, from Pennsylvania, came to Richmond in 1835, and commenced the mercantile business on Main street, between Marion and Pearl, and discontinued the business in or about 1852. In 1855 he built the brick block on what is known as Gilbert's corner. During a part of the time he was in trade, he also kept a public house. He was also for twenty-eight years a mail-contractor and large stage proprietor, having lines running to Dayton, Indianapolis, Wabash and other places.

As early as 1825 Warner & Morrisson (Dr. Warner and Robert Morrisson) advertised "drugs and medicines, oils, paints, dye-stuffs, patent medicines, etc." The first store confined to a separate branch of trade, and comprising a considerable stock of goods, was a drug store, established by Irvin Reid, in 1833, embracing, besides drugs and medicines, those articles usually accompanying, as paints, oils, dye-stuffs, etc., and an assortment of books and stationery. After a few years he dropped the book business and continued the drug business until 1852. In 1859 he engaged in the hardware trade, which is still continued under the firm of Irvin Reid & Son.

In 1836 or 1837 Jesse Stanley established a bookstore, which he continued but a short time. After Stanley, William R. Smith and Swain kept a bookstore. Benjamin Dugdale established a bookstore, which was continued by him for many years until his death, and by his sons for some years after.

The first independent grocery store, says Dr. Plummer, was commenced in 1838, by Haines & Farquhar. In 1846 Benton & Fletcher established a hardware store. They dissolved partnership and divided the stock, Benton continuing at the stand of the firm, now Citizens' Bank corner, and Fletcher removing to the west side of Main street, between Pearl and Marion.

Philip Harter, the first tavern keeper, had a sign swinging near a log building on lot 6, South Pearl street. Another early tavern was kept at the northeast corner of Main and Pearl, sign of a "green tree," by Jonathan Bayles, and another, of later date, on Front street, near the southwest corner of Main, by Ephraim Lacey. Harter soon afterward kept a tavern at the corner of North Pearl and Main, where the Citizens' Bank now stands. Another tavern was kept on Gilbert's, corner northwest corner of Main and Marion first by Abraham Jeffries, afterward by several different persons.

Richard Cheeseman was an early settler; lived on South Front street; kept a tavern several years. John Baldwin, an original Carolinian, early kept a tavern and store at the Citizens' Bank corner. Next to Baldwin, Wm. H. Vaughan occupied the stand for several years, and the tavern was discontinued. Vaughan had previously kept for a time the Lacey stand on Front street. Patrick Justice early kept a tavern on North Front street, near Main, for several years. He afterward kept a public house which he built in 1827, near the extreme limits of the town, now the southeast corner of Main and Fifth streets.

Benj. Paige, a New Englander, father of Ralph Paige, later a merchant on Main street, kept a tavern previous to 1830, at the corner originally owned by John C. Kibbey, an early inn-keeper, and known as Meek's corner, northeast corner of Main and Marion.

John Smith started a liquor store in 1825. John Hunt is said to have been the first blacksmith in Richmond. He built a shop on South Front street, east side, in 1816. Lewis Burk cut in one day the logs for the building, including the ribs and weight poles, on Smith's land, about two squares east, for 75 cents, the job being considered about three days' work. John McLane was probably the next blacksmith (some think the first) in the town. He and his son John and Isaac Jackson were the principal smiths until after 1820. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of the town, elected in 1818.

Archibald Wasson, an early settler near Ohio line, removed to town, in 1829, and carried on the blacksmithing business for many years. Jehiel, a son of his, came in 1831, and worked at the same business several years, on Main street, east side of the town. John H. Thomas came from Delaware with a young family and has worked at blacksmithing. George McCullough, about the same time, from the same place, carried on the business many years, on Franklin street, near Main; afterward became a partner in the firm of Horney & Co., in the manufacture of plows, near the railroad depot. He was for several years foreman in the iron department.

David Maulsby, from Maryland, about 1830, purchased on Pearl and Spring streets. He carried on his trade, of blacksmith, successfully for a number of years, and retired, leaving the business in the hands of his only son, John L. Maulsby.

Mordecai Parry, a brother of William, was for many years a blacksmith in Richmond.

The first carpenters in Richmond are supposed to have been Stephen Thomas and his partner, Wm. Justice, who were followed, within a few years, by Peter Johnson, Joshua and Benjamin Albertson, Evan Chapin, Mark Reeves, father of Mark E. and James E. Reeves. Thomas Stafford, who lived on Middle Fork, built several houses in the town. Charles Cartwright came in early, and was an extensive house-builder. John Hughes, from Pennsylvania, a carpenter, worked at his trade in Richmond many years. David Vore, also from Pennsylvania, a carpenter, worked at his trade until his death, in 1866.

Nathan Morgan, from New Jersey, was an early cabinet-maker, and for many years the principal undertaker in the town and vicinity. David Hook, an early cabinet-maker, carried on business a number of years. Jonas Gaar had a cabinet-shop at the south end of Front street. He is senior partner of the firm of Gaar, Scott & Co., of the Gaar Machine Works.

Abraham Phillips, from Pennsylvania, in 1838, established a shop in South Pearl street; afterward removed to west side of Main street, a few doors east from the corner of Marion, where he soon after (1840) erected the building owned by him, and occupied by James Elder, as a bookstore. In 1856 he and James M. Starr built the hall nearly opposite. Having leased his interest in the hall to Starr, it was called "Starr Hall," until January, 1865, when Phillips bought Starr's interest, since which it has been known as "Phillip's Hall."

Among the early mechanics in Richmond was Henry Dunham, a tailor, near the junction of Pearl and Front streets. He came in 1819. Robert Dilhorn, a tailor, early from the East to Cincinnati, where he was "wagoned up" by the assistance of the Friends. He pursued his business until his decease many years ago. John Lowe came early; worked a long time as a journeyman tailor, and married a daughter of Levi Johnson.

Isaac E. Jones came from Ohio in 1824. He carried on the tailoring business several years. He afterward, in company with Warner M. Leeds, his brother-in-law, built a saw-mill and other machinery near where Nixon's paper-mill is. He was also the founder, though on a comparatively small scale, of the Spring Foundry, now the "Gaar Machine Works."

John H. Hutton was also one of the early tailors. Hermon B. Payne came from Ohio when a youth, and worked at tailoring. He afterward studied law, and now practices in Richmond. Abraham Earnest was a tailor and followed his trade for many years. He was from Ohio, also. Samuel E. Iredell worked successfully at the same business for many years.

Silversmith and watch repairing was carried on by Jno. M. Laws. He was from Philadelphia. James Ferguson carried on the same business, coming from New Paris, Ohio. He married here.

Chas. A. Dickinson, son of Solomon Dickinson, came from Philadelphia, and carried on the watch and jewelry business until the year 1867. His son, Henry C. Dickinson, succeeded to his father's business. A brother, Robt. B., is also in the same business.

Elijah H. Githen, a native of New Jersey, came to Richmond in 1833 and carried on the chair-making business for fourteen years. He then after a short absence entered the grocery trade. His brother, Griffith D. Githen, was also a chair-maker, and carried on the business till 1869, when he moved from the city. One other, Elisha Fulton, worked at the business a short time, then removed from the town.

The leading hatter was Eli Brown, who came from North Carolina in 1815. He monopolized the trade for several years. In 1828 he entered into a general mercantile trade which he continued until 1863, when he sold out and removed to a farm, and died in 1867, aged seventy-five years.

Not long after Mr. Brown, in 1820, came Caleb Shearon, from Maryland. He succeeded in accumulating a fine estate in the same line of business. His death occurred in 1850.

John Suffrins, as has been already stated, was an early merchant, and afterward went into the hat-making business. He was still a dealer in hats and caps on Main street, between Pearl and Marion, in 1872. He came in 1818.

Achilles Williams, from North Carolina, came to Richmond in the autumn of 1818, and established himself in business as a saddler and harness-maker, the first of that trade in the town. He continued the business many years. Nathaniel Lewis, between the years 1826 and 1830, occupied as a saddle shop a long one-story frame building on the southwest corner of Main and Marion streets—now Ralph Paige's corner.

John Brady, a young man from Ohio, a saddler by trade, carried on business in town, and held the office of Justice of the Peace. He removed to Marion, Ind. Wm. L. Brady, his brother, came when a youth, about the year 1826, and served an apprenticeship with his brother John, and carried on, successfully, the saddle, harness, and trunk trade.

Daniel P. Wiggins, from Long Island, N. Y., came to Richmond in 1823. Being a tanner, Morrisson employed him to take charge of his tannery, and, a few years after, admitted him as a partner. Walter Legg and John Wilcoxon worked in the yard. Wiggins and his sons afterward purchased the tannery built by Smith, and the Morrisson tannery was discontinued.

In July, 1857, Job Curme and his son Arthur A. commenced a trade in leather and findings, at old No. 11 South Pearl street. The next year they commenced the tanning business near the Bush Mill, with one vat. In 1860 Job Curme sold his interest to Isaac D. Dunn, and the store was removed to 47 Main street, and the tannery to its location on Washington and Cliff streets. In 1865 Andrew J. Coffman and Dewitt C. McWhinney became partners—firm name, Curme, Dunn & Co.—and their store was soon after removed to its present location, 297 Main street, with John J. Harrington as partner.

Among the early shoemakers in Richmond was Patrick Justice, elsewhere mentioned as a tavern-keeper. Jonathan Moore, quite a young man, from his father's home, two and a half miles southeast of town, as early as 1829 set up a shoe-shop on the northeast corner of Main and Fifth streets, where the Tremont House now stands, then at the extreme border of the town. He continued in business without interruption for more than forty years.

Owen Edgerton, early from Carolina, worked many years at shoemaking. In 1866 he retired. Joseph Ogborn, also an early shoemaker in Richmond, retired after many years, and died in 1869.

One of the early mechanics of Richmond, and probably the first wagon-maker, was Adam Boyd, who came about the year of the incorporation of the town, 1818. He was also Justice of the Peace.

At a later date came Anthony Fulghum, from North Carolina, who had his shop at the northwest corner of Main and Marion streets, since known as Gilbert's corner. He lived but a few years, and the business was continued by his son Benjamin. Benj. Fulghum bought a lot on the southeast corner of Main and Franklin streets, now the Huntingdon House corner, where he built a frame shop and dwelling, and carried on business extensively, especially carriage making.

Samuel Lippincott commenced carriage-making in 1840, corner of Main and Franklin streets.

Potters were among the early mechanics of Richmond. A pottery was built on South Front street, and is said to have been occupied by Eleazar Hiatt, Isaac Beeson, Geo. Bell, a mulatto, and John Scott. The last died of cholera in 1833. Samuel and Edward Foulke, young men, settled early in Richmond, and carried on successfully the potter's trade. There has been no pottery in Richmond for many years.

Solomon Dickinson, a tinsmith, from Philadelphia, in 1821, settled on Front street, near Ezra Boswell's, where he resided until his death. His shop was on Main street, between Marion and Pearl. He was also a dealer in stoves. After his death the business was continued by Edmund Dickinson, a son, near the northwest corner of Main and Front streets.

Andrew Reid, a brother of Daniel Reid, was the first gunsmith.

Charles Newman, from Pennsylvania, early set up a turning shop on Franklin street, north of Main, where he continued the business, having improved his establishment.

Matthew Rattray, a native of Scotland, a weaver, came in 1822, and had a shop on South Front street.

Lewis Baxter, an early settler, was a bricklayer and stonemason.

CHAPTER II.

THE GROWTH OF RICHMOND.

THE CITY IN 1840.—AN OLD SETTLER'S RECOLLECTIONS OF RICHMOND IN 1847.—AN INTERESTING REVIEW.—A DECADE LATER.—THE ADVANCE OF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.—STATISTICS OF BUSINESS AND POPULATION.—BOARD OF TRADE.—BUSINESS EXCHANGE.—CITY OFFICERS FROM 1840 TO 1884.—THE POSTOFFICE.—POSTMASTERS FROM 1818 TO 1884.—POST-OFFICE BUSINESS.—FREE DELIVERY ESTABLISHED.—STREET RAILROADS.—EXPRESS COMPANIES.—GAS WORKS.—THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.—WATER WORKS.

RICHMOND IN 1840.

On a map of Richmond, published by William Dewey in 1840, the following statements among others are to be found:

“The Richmond & Brookville Canal is now under construction.” “The population (of the city) is about 3,000.* The town contains two woolen factories, a paper-mill, an oil-mill, two foundries and machine shops, two merchant flouring mills, a last factory, several carriage factories, besides numerous other manufacturing establishments. It has two literary and scientific societies, one of which has a large collection of minerals, shells and other curiosities. A splendid Episcopal church is about to be erected, and the Orthodox Friends are building in the vicinity of the town a large and beautiful seminary. Its schools, both male and female, are numerous and well conducted. Its business is extensive, and its facilities for trade must shortly be very great. The Richmond & Brookville Canal is intended to connect with the Whitewater Canal at Brookville which will open a water communication with Cincinnati. Macadamized roads in various directions are in contemplation.”

A GROUPING OF INTERESTING FACTS.*

On the 9th day of December, 1847 (now thirty-six years ago), the writer first set foot within the precincts of this fair city and here he has ever since remained. It was then a mere village of some 2,500 inhabitants, acknowledging John Saylor as its chief executive and head. Elected first in 1840, he continued in office until 1852, when he was succeeded by the late John Finley, Esq.

At that somewhat distant period the Friends, or Quakers, as they were commonly called, exercised a very marked influence over the society about them; their numbers being much greater then than now in proportion to the population. They were a thrifty, honest, intelligent people, possessed of many virtues, while their wives and daughters were the peers of any in the land.

As a people, however, they were rather non-progressive and lacking in that spirit of worldly enterprise so remarkably manifest at the present day. They were, however, tenacious of their religious ideas, and rigid in regard to its teachings and observances. To one not of their faith and unaccustomed to their mode of thought or manner of life, there seems to be an ever-present feeling of restraint and repression—a sort of mental and physical embargo—by no means congenial to the youthful brawn and brain. Mirthfulness was rarely encouraged, and if indulged in, was quiet and subdued; while demonstrations of gayety were rare and guarded. Speech was as silver, but silence was golden. The brilliant hues of beautiful flowers and the happy gleeful songs of birds seemed inappropriate to their surroundings.

Music and singing were but little understood or cultivated by the people of the time, and by members of their society in no degree whatever. Such practices were regarded as sinful, and as unbecoming the dignity, gravity and soberness of that peculiar people. Their speech and attire were alike of the plainest kind, and every color worn was in harmony with both. Under the shadow of their influence even pastors of other denominations discouraged the wearing of gay colors. Broad-brimmed hats and plain silk bonnets wholly unadorned were everywhere to be seen. A bearded face was the merest exception to the general rule, and was not unfrequently the subject of comment and criticism, while the unfortunate mustache was held in still greater disfavor, as the wearer was supposed to be of that class whose ways are dark and whose deeds are evil.

The good people of the village were generally distinguished for simplicity of habits and manners. But little effort was made in the direction of personal adornment or display. We distinctly remember that eight yards of material constituted a pattern for a lady's dress, and sometimes even less would serve. But times have changed, both larger views and ampler garments now hold sway. We remember also that the female head-gear did not then consist of those indescribable nondescripts now so fearfully and wonderfully formed, but simply and in fact, a hat or bonnet severely plain.

The folly and extravagance of display and dress came by degrees and were the results of increased wealth, the war and foreign innovation.

At that day good boarding could be had for $1.50 a week, and the hire of a horse and buggy was but $1.25 a day.

We had neither railroads nor turnpikes (excepting the turnpike to Boston) while gas-light, telegraphs and telephones were as yet of the things to come. But a "coach and four" used to carry the mail for "Uncle Sam" and the few unlucky passengers whose business, or necessity, required them to be abroad in the land.

Cattle, hogs and sheep were then driven by thousands, in great droves along the national road on their way to some Eastern market. The surplus products of the country commanded but a nominal sum. Hauling by wagon was too expensive and our present facilities for transportation were not yet in existence. At that time all the business of the village was contracted on threesquares of Main street, lying between Front (on which the court-house now stands) and Franklin, which is now known as Seventh street, that between Front and Pearl streets (now Fourth and Fifth) doing much the greater part.

No mercantile business whatever was done any where off Main street. A shabby old market-house stood in the middle of South Pearl street, about 150 yards from Main. On the present site of Reed and Vanneman's business block—corner of Noble and Fifth streets—and nearly opposite the west end of the passenger depot was located Kenworthy's tannery, the only structure in that vicinity.

Where the passenger depot now stands with its immediate surroundings was an enclosed field, and on the west front of it was the "Quaker walk" leading to Friends' Orthodox Meeting House, a large plain, two-story brick structure erected in 1823. The "walk" referred to was partly planked and separated from the main road by a row of posts. The writer distinctly remembers seeing a horse and buggy, with two occupants, stick fast in the mud in front of where now stands the Avenue House, immediately north of the railroad crossing. The brick business block now occupying the east side of Fort Wayne avenue and covering a full square in length and forming something of a triangle, stands upon "made ground," formerly a stagnant pool whence came in spring time the doleful music of the frog.

This was then the property of Charles W. Starr, by whom it is said to have been offered for sale for a few hundred dollars without finding a purchaser. On one occasion the writer remembers this pool furnished water to extinguish a neighboring fire. The old Starr House, subsequently known as the "Meredith" and "Tremont" corner of old Fifth (now Eighth) and Main, was considered "away out of town." Even the Huntington House was thought to be inconveniently far from business. An old "mile stone" used to stand on the north side of Main street, between old Seventh and Eighth, marked "one-half mile to Richmond." Beyond Franklin street (now Seventh) there were but few buildings, and Sixth street (now Ninth) had as yet no existence. At least was either orchard, open field or wood. Basil Brightwell, Benjamin Strattan, Thaddens Wright, Jesse Meek, John Haines, William Blanchard, John M. Laws, Wm. S. Wat, Wm. Petchell and Ralph A. Paige were our dry-goods dealers, not one of whom is in the business at the present day and only four of the ten survive, to-wit: Wright, Watt, Paige and Strattan. Their companions have all gone hence, where barter and exchange are unknown and the weary are at rest. Although not in business here at the time referred to, Daniel B. Crawford was nevertheless a citizen of this vicinity for years before and since 1850, and has been a leading and prosperous dry-goods merchant. He has also been identified with various other interests of the city and county, both secular and religious, until his name has become as familiar as household words.

Messrs. Fletcher & Benton first sold hardware on the southeast corner of old Front and Main streets, afterward known as "Hestor's Corner," immediately east of the court-house. Subsequently, Thomas Benton alone engaged in the business, in an old brick building, where the Richmond National Bank now stands.

A single member of the old Wiggin's firm (Charles O.), with some added juniors, continues to hold forth at the old stand as in the days of yore.

William L. Brady was also a pioneer, and was successfully engaged in the harness trade. Samuel and William Lynde will be remembered as among our principal grocers. Neither must we omit Elijah Givens in the same branch of trade. The former long did business where George W. Barnes for so many years dispensed his excellent family supplies, and where Joseph A. Knabe now caters to the public wants. The drug business was in the hands of Messrs. George Doxey, Irwin Reed and Dr. Joseph Howels, the former of whom died here during the prevalence of the cholera in 1849, and the latter is now engaged in the practice of medicine in this city; while Mr. Reed has for many years past been a dealer in hardware, on the southwest corner of Main and Franklin streets. To him has been vouchsafed the most extensive business career, in point of time, accorded any member of this community, crowned, too, with ample success. These gentlemen were succeeded by Drs. James R. Mendenhall, John T. Plummer and Lewis H. McCullough, each of whom continued in the business some years.

Hon. David P. Holloway, for many years past a resident of Washington City, and lately deceased, was in the book trade at the time of my advent into the village, and was located in an old frame building on the south side of West Main street, near the corner of Front—now Fourth street. Dr. J. R. Mendenhall soon afterward became his successor and our former city Civil Engineer. Hon. Oliver Butler was his business manager for years. The writer first greeted the public here in the capacity of salesman for Strattan & Wright, whom he faithfully served for five long years, for the meager salary of $15 per month and board, saving therefrom, by the strictest economy, his first $500, a result utterly out of the question in these times of increased values and multiplied temptations, from no greater pay. It was my good fortune to find a home in the family of "Uncle" James and "Grandmother" Hunnicutt, who kept the only boarding-house of the time, which was quite liberally patronized, as well it might be when we remember that they charged but $1.25 per week for board. Their house was headquarters for many old-time "Friends" during "yearly meetings." They were most truly a kind old couple, called hence this many a year.

Thomas L. Bargas and Isaac L. Dickinson dealt in stoves and tinware. William Show and Isaac Paxson, Sr., supplied the city with meats. Mark Lewis and William Mason, who soon after came to the rescue, furnished bread, cake and crackers. John Saffins, the latter then, and for many years after, took care of the cranial department of the multitude, and C. A. Dickinson and J. B. Hunnicutt supplied our wants, real or imaginary, with jewelry, watches, etc. The former still continues in the trade; the latter has retired from the stage of action. J. W. Gilbert, Daniel Sloan and K. Brookens catered to the wants of the public as hosts. There was but one moneyed institution, known as the "Old Branch Bank," Elijah Coffin, Cashier. The building adjoined the Richmond National Bank on the east, and was removed a few years since to make room for other improvements.

Our lawyers were Stephen B. Stanton, James Perry and William A. Bickle. The former is deceased, but Perry and Bickle still continue in practice.

The medical profession was ably represented by Drs. John

T. Plummer and William B. Smith, both of whom have long since paid the debt that nature owes. A. U. Newton was the only dentist of the time, and was for several years without a rival, until William R. Webster located here. The first named still continues to serve the public, while the latter has passed to that bourne from which no traveler returns. They were both good men, and professionally equal to the requirements of the times.

Milton Hollingsworth is deserving of special mention as being one of Richmond's foremost teachers. Earnest, capable and efficient, he was beloved and esteemed by his pupils, admired and respected by all. He, too, has gone to his reward.

John K. Boswell was the first daguerrean artist of my recollection, here. His work was a credit to his profession, and specimens of his in the writer's possession will bear comparison with that of the present day.

James Elder was Postmaster during 1847-'48, and it is in my recollection that he also dealt in books and paper. He recently informed me that during his administration, single letter postage ranged from 5 to 10 cents, according to distance transmitted. Speaking of postal matters reminds me that about this time letter envelopes first made their appearance, and their utility being so manifest, were not long in gaining public favor. Not so, however, with the equally useful steel pen, for, although upon the market for years, they were first beginning to win their way to public favor and appreciation. N. S. Leeds was the first citizen of Richmond to learn the art of telegraphing, which he did at Dayton, Ohio, some time during 1848, for the purpose of serving a company who put up a line along the national road in that year. Their office was located on the north side of West Main street, between Pearl and Marion, in the room now owned and occupied by James J. Jordan, as a fancy grocery store. L. H. McCullough soon after learned to manipulate the instrument, and became the former's successor. For lack of patronage or some other cause unknown to the writer, the enterprise proved a failure, and the line went down. Mr. Leeds has responded to a message from the eternal world, while Mr. McCullough still toys with the subtle fluid, in its various moods. It may be of interest in this connection to state that the latter gentleman was the first person to introduce coal oil into this city for the purpose of illumination. This was in 1858, and the oil so used was distilled from coal by some enterprising individual of Covington, Ky.

It may be said of the amusements of that day, that they were neither varied nor numerous, picnics in summer and balls and parties in winter constituting about all the diversions of that period. Lectures, concerts and theatricals were not in vogue. The reigning influence seemed to be adverse to anything of a happy or joyous nature. The piano had but two representatives in the town. And as for sewing machines, alas! they were not, unless, indeed, we dare, without irreverence, apply the term to Eve's fair daughters, those blessed earthly ministers, who are ever ready to repair our garments or relieve our woes.

The press, that mighty engine, had its representatives in two weekly journals, the Palladium and Jeffersonian, respectively Republican and Democratic in politics. The former was for many years published by Holloway & Davis. The Jeffersonian was presided over by James Elder, Esq.

In those "good old days" there were no women in the profession; none as teachers in the schools. They were unknown to the editorial chair, nor had they a place at the desk, the case or the counter. With rare exceptions they were deemed incompetent for places of trust, or responsibility. Man's estimate of woman was not credible to his head or heart. His bigotry and selfishness were a bar to her advancement. But thanks to a dawn of a higher intelligence and the spread of more liberal views, the day of her deliverance has come. The shackles of prejudice and superstition are falling about her, and she is free to pursue whatever occupation or calling she may choose. A universal culture has taken the place of a partial education. A better system of schools, the press, and the facilities for travel and intercourse, owing to a growing disposition to investigate all subjects, taking nothing for granted, have combined to elevate and fit her for the active duties of life. She is freer, stronger, more selfreliant than her sisters of any age. May the bondage of hand or brain be hers no more, while the freedom of thought and the freedom of speech continue to be the just inheritance of a free and independent people.

We might very properly supplement these hasty sketches by briefly tracing the career of such early settlers as John S. Newman, David Hoover, Chas. W. Starr, Robert Morrisson, Albert C. Blanchard, Elijah Coffin, John Finley and many others, whose lives have left their impress upon this community, but such an undertaking would transcend the original purpose of the papers, as well as the needful information and ability of the writer. We trust, however, that the subject may yet receive the consideration it so justly deserves, at the hand of some one fully competent to the task.

At the period of my coming, as before stated, we had no railroads, but one turnpike, no telegraph, and no telephones. At the present day they radiate in all directions and encircle us round about. Then communication with the outer world was slow and difficult; now we have almost unlimited facilities for transportation and travel, and almost instant communication with the uttermost parts of the earth. Behold! what a marvel has been wrought; what wondrous changes in the brief space of less than two scores of years.

A DECADE LATER—1857.

In 1857 the corporation limits of the city of Richmond extended north and south one and a half miles, and east and west about three-fourths of a mile.

At this time there was one public-school building, 71 x 61 feet in size and forty feet high, of brick, costing $14,000.

The Starr Hall, erected at a cost of $10,000 by James M. Starr, was ninety-five feet long, forty feet wide and three stories high.

A public square, the gift of John Smith, covered one acre of ground, fences put in, grass and shade trees planted.

The city then had three fire engines.

The gas-works were erected, and the town first supplied with gas in 1855.

There were three banks in the city, the Citizens' Bank,

Wayne County, afterward People's Bank, and branch of the Bank of the State of Indiana, all north of Main street.

A thorough system of drainage, grading and paving was inaugurated in 1848.

The first daily mail between New Castle and Richmond was started Feb. 1, 1854, by railroad.

In the vicinity of Richmond in 1857 there were twenty-two flouring mills, twenty-four saw-mills, one oil-mill, two paper-mills, and a large number of woolen factories. There were two large brick boarding schools within a mile or two of the city, one west and the other south; several extensive nurseries; a horticultural establishment; two sash, blind, door and flooring mills; a cutlery manufactory; a shoe-peg manufactory; a soap and candle factory. In addition to this in the city of Richmond there were three coal yards, machine shop, manufacturing of agricultural implements, six carriage manufactories, etc., etc.

ADVANCE OF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

Richmond steadily grew and prospered, her most flourishing period being the decade between 1850 and 1860, when it gained over 5,000 in population. Its slowest growth was between 1830 and 1850. The civil war was no detriment to her advancement. While the county suffered severely, owing to the large force placed in the field, Richmond, being a center for military purposes, was sustained in her growth, that growth being nearly fifty per cent. for the decade between 1860 and 1870. Not only was this period of a quarter of a century one of advancement in point of population, but its material interests developed in a ratio equally as great. The city expanded its limits, and its growth was of a solid and endurable kind. Railroads were built, gravel roads and turn-pikes made, and the cultivation of soil increased by a thorough farming population. These all combined to make Richmond's advancement one of substantial prosperity.

In the "Board of Trade Review," the following exhaustive statistics of her business interests can be read with pleasure as well as profit :

BOARD OF TRADE.

The Board of Trade was organized in 1869, and was an active agent in developing and giving publicity to the manufacturing and other business interests of the city, necessary to the public welfare, and which could hardly have been otherwise accomplished. It was suffered to lapse, but again recovered in 1874. The business of that year the board determined to report, and one of the most complete statistical works ever issued was the result of their labor. Why such an institution was allowed to die, or go out of existence, is hard to explain, and certainly was not creditable to the business men of the city. A better advertising medium for the trade of Richmond was never issued, or the reputation of the business men of the city for energy and progressiveness never better held up and exemplified.

BUSINESS MEN'S EXCHANGE.

After this so successful, though, as it proved, spasmodic effort, the association was again allowed to lapse, and in 1880 an effort was made to form an association under the above name, which was accomplished Dec. 31, 1880. J. W. Grubbs was elected President, Jos. G. Lemon, Vice-President, and A. E. Crocker, Secretary and Treasurer. The Directors were: W. C. Starr, C. B. Hunt, T. W. Haynes and W. I. Dulin, all of whom, including the officers, still hold their positions.

It may be said that this organization is a successor of the Board of Trade, but what it has done to give the business interests of Richmond any name beyond its local limits is at present hard to say. It appears to be simply a board of arbitration among the business men, but has nothing of the character of a Board of Trade, with its annual report or "Trade Review." It would be of great importance, if this association should make an annual report as one of its features, and scatter a few thousand copies in the outside world. This would be like casting bread upon the waters, and it is doubtful if many days would elapse ere the return could be both seen and felt. Such an effort is worthy of the business talent of the city.

CITY BUILDING.

The Warner building, in which the city offices are, was erected by Dr. Ithamer Warner, an early physician, and a much honored citizen of Richmond. It was built for a residence, public hall, etc. Dr. Warner died in 1835, and in his will gave the town the rental of the property. The greater portion of the building is rented to various parties for school purposes, and brings in a revenue of about $400 per year.

CITY LIMITS.

The city of Richmond has been extended from time to time during the past seventy years of its existence, and in its limits is now embraced an area of two and a half miles east and west, and two miles north and south. It is likely that quite a large addition will soon be made covering ground recently purchased by a syndicate, and lying on the opposite or west side of the Whitewater River.

Prior to 1840, the original plat of Richmond, as laid off by John Smith, had received eight additions made by Jeremiah Cox, Charles W. Starr, Isaac Jones, Achilles Williams, Robert Morrisson, Caleb Bond, Jesse Iden and Joseph Plummer. As is shown by a map made by William Dewey in 1840, no lots had been laid off farther east than what is now Eleventh street, on the north side of Main. Above North B street, Sixth street (now Ninth) was the limit of the lots, and they extended as far north as Vine (now North D) street. There were but few lots marked off northwest of Front street and Fort Wayne avenue, all of which are now known by the latter name. A triangular piece of land lying between Fort Wayne avenue and Washington avenue, and extending north to High street, is marked "Northern Liberties" on the map, and was at the extreme northern limit of the platted portion of the city.

South of Main street, South street (now South E street) marked the southern limit; Marion street (now South Sixth) was the eastern limit of lots as far north as Market (now South B); and the extreme eastern limit was Sixth (now Ninth street), with the exception of one tier of lots in a block adjoining Main and extending south to South A.

POSTOFFICE.

The office was established in 1818, and Robert Morrisson became the first Postmaster. The growth of Richmond may be gathered from the fact that the receipts the first year were a trifle over $9, and postage nearly or quite ten times its present rate. The receipts in 1824 were less than $25. In 1856 they reached the sum of $1,406.13. The "Board of Trade Review" for 1875 gives the following interesting statistics of the business of the office for the preceding year, that of 1874 :

STREET RAILROADS.

Richmond has so far progressed in metropolitan ways as to have street railways. These were first started in running order in September, 1873. In March of that year, a charter was granted to S. C. Mendenhall, its projector, William S. Reid, D. K. Zeller, Isaac C. Teague, Abijah Moffitt, Dr. Houghton, C. F. Coffin and Joseph Dickinson. S. C. Mendenhall was elected President; C. F. Coffin, Treasurer, and Joseph Dickinson, Secretary. In 1876 Isaac C. Teague leased the road for one year, at the expiration of which time, the spring of 1877, the company sold out to J. F. Miller, when the present Street Railroad Company was formed. The Superintendent of the road is F. M. Francisco, who has acted as such from 1873 to 1876, and from 1880 to the present time. There are about three and a half miles of road in operation at this time. The cars run from the court-house to Glen Miller, and from Main and Eighth street to the Union Depot. The company have five cars and good stable accommodations on Seventh street. The directory is composed of William E. Bell, Thomas Rose, J. C. Ratliff, J. F. Miller and James Turner. J. C. Miller, President; J. C. Ratliff, Vice-President, and H. I. Miller, Secretary and Treasurer.

EXPRESS COMPANIES.

The first express office opened in Richmond was by Locke & Co., who were succeeded by the American Express Company. Then came next the United States Express Company, in 1863. M. Y. Graff was the agent of both companies at the time the latter opened its office until his death in 1865, when his son, P. C. Graff, succeeded to the agency. Another office called the Merchants' Union Express was opened a few years later, with E. G. Hibberd as agent, but it was soon merged into the American, and the agent of the two first, P. C. Graff, still continued to hold the position, until the United States Express Company opened a separate office. This latter company appointed J. Izor as their agent, who served until his death, when D. P. Hiatt was chosen to fill the vacancy. Messrs. Graff and Hiatt filled the position of agents of the two companies until they again occupied one office, when Mr. Graff was continued as the agent of both. On Nov. 1, 1881, the Adams Express Company opened its office in Richmond, and occupied for a month the same office with the other companies, Mr. Graff acting for all. Soon after, the United States opened a separate office, appointing a Mr. Richey, of Muncie, Ind., its agent. He resigned the next year, 1882, and T. C. Davis succeeded him, who still holds the position, Mr. Graff being the agent of Adams and American until June 1, 1883, when the American retired from the field, turning its territory over to the Adams and United States Express companies, Mr. Graff still being the agent of the Adams.

GAS-WORKS.

In July, 1854, a charter was obtained by Charles Collier for the Richmond Gas Light and Coke Company. The company was organized in June, 1855, with a capital of $25,000. Its stockholders were Charles Collier, Robert Morrisson, William Cain, John T. Plummer and William R. Webster. John T. Plummer was its first President; William R. Webster, Secretary; William Cain, Treasurer. The works were built by Charles Collier, and completed in December, 1855. In December, 1856, they were leased to Starr & White (James M. Starr and Benjamin C. White), who carried on the business for about thirteen years. A new charter was granted in 1870. J. M. Starr was then President, and Benjamin Starr, Secretary. The receipts for gas for that year were $19,000. Ninety-one street lamps were supplied and over 700 private consumers. In 1871 the capital stock of the gas company was raised to $100,000. In 1882-'83 the works were entirely rebuilt and supplied with new machinery. The capacity of the works is now 500,000 feet per day. Two hundred and twenty-eight street lamps and about 1,100 private consumers are now supplied by them. Mr. Starr has owned the entire works since 1868. C. C. Binkley has served as Secretary since 1874.

RICHMOND INDUSTRIAL ASSOCIATION.

This association was organized in 1870 as a joint stock company, to conduct the business of ordinary county agricultural societies on an amplified and more diversified basis. Thirty-three acres of suitable ground were secured in the northeast corner of the city corporate limits, alongside of the tracks of the Columbus, the Dayton and the Cincinnati railroads. This ground was improved by the erection of appropriate buildings for the exhibition of the fine arts, fruits and other products of the soil, live stock, manufactures, agricultural implements, farm products, and all the usual variety of articles spread out at agricultural fairs. An excellent time-track was constructed, and abundant stables and sheds provided.

Fairs were held for a few years, but the association finally died, and is mentioned here only as a record of the past.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The first regularly organized fire company in Richmond seems to have been formed in 1830. According to information furnished by John A. Wright, who was secretary of the meeting, the citizens met at Jeffries' tavern on the 6th of December, 1830, and fifteen names were enrolled as members of the company, viz.: Benj. Fulghum, Aaron Pleas, William Dulin, Lewis Burk, Jesse Stutler, Zimri Strattan, Ephraim Rulin, Levi P. Rothermel, Abraham Jeffries, Wm. N. Cammack, Job W. Swain, Jehiel Wasson, John A. Wright and Leander Cary. Job Swain presided.

Prior to this meeting a fire engine had been bought, in 1829, for $600. It was an oblong box, 4 x 6 feet, and one foot deep, mounted on wheels. It was moved by a rope, to which pins for the hands to grasp were attached at suitable distances. About midway on each side of the box and attached to it were fixed upright standards for the support of the operating machinery. The latter consisted of a cross-shaft with two cranks placed at right angles with it and opposite each other; this shaft was provided with suitable bearings in the uprights. Another shaft, similarly arranged, was placed above the first, and at each end of it was a driving-wheel, the cogs of which were geared into pinions on either side of the shaft. The driving-wheels were each provided with pin handles for turning, of sufficient strength for six men at each wheel. The bottom of the box supported two cylinders, which were attached to it, and constituted the pumps. They were about four inches in diameter and twelve in height. Piston rods, with valve heads, working in stuffing boxes which formed the tops or caps of the pumps, were connected with the cranks of the shaft, by the revolutions of which the pumps were worked. A branch pipe connected the bottoms of the pumps, terminating in a common orifice, to which the hose and to that the nozzle was attached. Orifices opened from the lower end of the pump, connecting this with the box in which the water was stored, and thus performing the functions of the modern suction hose. The box, or tank, was filled with water by buckets brought by hand.

Until Feb. 6, 1833, the company met at Jeffries' hotel. They then changed to the Warner building, now the city building.

A new company was formed in 1832, with the following members. It will be seen that the list includes most of the business men of that period: Ithamer Warner, James Henry, Jonas Gaar, James Stuckey, Alexander Price, David Hook, William Cox, John Suffrins, Benjamin Fulghum, Zimri Stratton, Andrew Furguson, Rese Jones, Matthew Rattray, Banner Lawhead, W. N. Cammack, John T. Smith, Alexander Moore, Aaron Johnson, L. P. Rothermel, John Brady, Lewis Burk, Wm. Sutherland, Wm. Wiggins, Daniel Morrisson, Samuel Springer, Samuel T. Ogborn, Abel Thornburg, Thomas J. Larsh, John Way and Ira S. Center. Benjamin Fulghum was President; Matthew Rattray, Vice-President; William Cox, Secretary, and Ithamer Warner, Treasurer. This company offered its resignation to the trustees of the town in January, 1834, and it was accepted.

In the early part of the fourth decade of the present century, a man named Quiner moved to Richmond from Massachusetts. He gave a glowing account of an engine which was then being manufactured in Boston, and induced the citizens of Richmond to purchase one. In 1836 the engine afterward famous as the "Old Hunker" reached this town, having come from Boston to Cincinnati, whence it was transported by "prairie schooner" to its destination. This engine had a suction hose and was considered a marvel. The bucket company was no longer necessary to supply water. An engine-house was erected on Pearl street, and for better water-supply large wells were dug in several parts of the town.

The earliest record now in existence is a minute-book of the proceedings of the "Old Hunker Fire Co., No. 2," under the date Feb. 6, 1850, when a constitution and by-laws were adopted and the following officers chosen: W. L. Farquhar, President; W. T. Shearon, Vice-President; S. R. Jamison, Secretary; Wm. W. Rattray, Treasurer; E. H. Page and John Stanton, Directors.

In 1854 the "Old Hunker" Company was reorganized with John M. Paxson, President; J. L. Meek, Vice-President;

W. T. Mendenhall, Secretary; and Thomas Vickers, Treasurer.

The third engine of the city was purchased at Cincinnati, Nov. 6, 1850. It was known as the "Rowboat." The bill described it thus:

"One twenty-men horizontal fire-engine.....	$1,000
300 feet copper-twist hose and coupling.....	210
One fire-hat and trumpet. . . . .

"Total.....$1,210"

It appears that Company No. 3 was organized Dec. 14, 1850, under the name of the Hoosier Fire Company, and at a subsequent meeting adopted the constitution and by-laws of the Franklin Fire Company of Cincinnati. J. H. Hutton was chosen President; Jesse M. Hutton, Vice-President; A. W. Mendenhall, Treasurer; S. F. Fletcher and John Conley, Directors; Ezra Smith, Messenger.

At a meeting held April 2, 1853, the city council was asked to remit taxes to the amount of $3 to members of the fire companies. The request was granted, and this was the first instance of the fire-men of Richmond being allowed remuneration.

"Old Hunker" continued in use until 1857, when the city purchased an engine known as the Quaker City engine, to take its place, at a cost of $1,579. The former was kept "boarding round," without a home, until 1855, when J. L. Meek and E. H. Page succeeded in raising a fund by subscription for the erection of Engine House, No. 2, at a cost of $1,162. In 1857, the Hoosier Company erected a house for their engine, "The Rowboat," just north of the city offices, at a cost of $2,390.

In the fall of 1858 Washington Fire Company, composed principally of Germans, was organized. They erected a house in 1859, on a lot donated by John J. Conley, had a second-hand-engine, and did efficient service. They bought another old engine in Dayton in 1863. This was the last hand-engine purchased.

The question of procuring a steam fire-engine was agitated by several prominent citizens in 1859, but nothing was accomplished until the following year. An engine was purchased by the city council in 1860, and a house for it erected at a total cost of $6,577.

The Mechanics Fire Company, No. 4, was organized Jan. 6, 1861, with J. M. Gaar, President; E. H. Page, James M. Smith, W. G. Scott and J. W. Starr, Vice-Presidents; J. M. Blanchard, Secretary; and Thomas Newby, Treasurer. The fire companies in 1861 were therefore Washington (No. 1), Quaker City (No. 2), Hoosier (No. 3), and Mechanics (No. 4), each having about 100 men.

One of the first fires which the steamer was called upon to subdue was that of the pork-packing house of Vanneman, Reid & Co., which raged for fifteen hours.

In 1866 a hook and ladder company was organized and equipped at a cost of about $1,000. In 1871 No. 4 was exchanged for a new engine. In 1872 a second steamer was procured by exchanging two of the hand-engines and paying the difference, and in the same year the fire department of the city was made a paid department. The National Fire-Alarm system of electric alarms was adopted in 1876 at a cost of $4,750. An inventory of the property belonging to the fire department, made May 1, 1883, shows that the total value of the same is $22,746. Total expenditures for the year (including $8,513.36, paid in salaries), $12,322.95. Nine horses are in the service of the department.

WATER-WORKS.

At the present writing, appearances indicate that water-works in the city will soon become an established fact. The Richmond Water-Works Company was incorporated July 16, 1883, with the following Directors: S. L. Wiley, John W. Grubbs, S. R. Wiggins, D. K. Zeller, Ellis Thomas and W. P. Hutton. Capital stock, $250,000. Feb. 19, 1884, the company was fully organized with the following officers: A. E. Crocker, President; J. W. Grubbs, Vice-President; J. A. Norton, Secretary; W. P. Hutton, Treasurer.

Operations will soon be commenced, and it is expected that the works will be completed during the year 1884. The Holly system with the Wiley improvement will be used.

INDUSTRIAL INTERESTS OF RICHMOND.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE INDUSTRIAL WEALTH OF THE CITY.—INTRODUCTORY.—EARLY MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENTS.—EARLY TANNERIES, MILLS, BREWERIES, CARDING AND WOOLEN MILLS, FOUNDRIES, COTTON MILLS, ETC.—LEADING MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENTS OF LATER TIMES.—HISTORICAL ACCOUNTS OF THE LEADING INDUSTRIES OF TO-DAY.—THE FOUNDERS AND INCORPORATORS.—BUSINESS CHANGES.—PRESENT PROPRIETORS AND AMOUNT OF CAPITAL INVESTED.—THE BANKS OF RICHMOND.—SUMMARY OF BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The city of Richmond has become noted as the seat of important manufactories, ranking high in this respect among the cities of the West. Its industrial growth began early and has been gradual but constant. The early settlers perceived that the inland situation of the town, at a time when railroads were unknown, precluded extensive commercial relations with the rest of the world, and therefore wisely devoted themselves to fostering and encouraging home interests, establishing manufactures and thus laying the permanent foundations of the future greatness and prosperity of the city. The advent of railroads gave an impetus to business of every kind, making the beginning of an era of more rapid development. Few cities in the West—few, indeed, anywhere in the country—have, in proportion to population, a greater variety and extent of business interests than Richmond. The city is steadily and rapidly increasing in wealth, population and commercial importance.

In this chapter will be found a brief account of some of the earliest enterprises of the city, together with carefully prepared sketches of the most important establishments of the present time. Many more might be mentioned, but want of space forbids an account of any except leading industrial interests.

EARLY INDUSTRIES.

A tannery was started in Richmond in 1818, by John Smith, and operated by Joseph Wilmot. Another of seventy vats was established by Robert Morrisson during the same year. It was located on the north side of Main street, between Washington and Green streets.

Early grist-mills are elsewhere mentioned. One of the first industries of the town was a brewery, established by Ezra Boswell, about 1816. His shop was on Front street, north of Main. It is said that he had a good patronage.

About the year 1818 Daniel S. Anthony erected a carding-mill at the junction of Fort Wayne avenue and old Pearl street (now Fifth street), where he carried on business several years. The machinery used in the old mill was rude and primitive but it served a useful purpose. The motive power was horse-power, a single horse in a tread-mill. Mr. Anthony returned to the East and settled in Jewett City, Conn., where he became a wealthy and prominent citizen and served several years as a bank president. He was born in Rhode Island in the latter part of the last century and is a first cousin of Senator Anthony. He was still living in January, 1884.

Christian Buhl, a German, established a brewery as early as 1830, on Main street. He continued the business several years, making money rapidly for those days.

Near the present site of the gas-works a woolen factory was established by Philip Harter, about 1827. It was run only about five years. The water-power was furnished by springs, part of the water being conducted by pipes under the river, from a source near William Baxter's residence, and the rest from the east side of the river.

Near the same period Job W. Swain and Jonas Gaar erected a carding-mill on South Front (now Fourth street). They operated it in the winter season only, Gaar working as a cabinet-maker and Swain as an iron-worker during the rest of the year. They worked in this manner until the fall of 1835, when they commenced the manufacture of woolen machinery and general jobbing work.

In 1831, Grover & Williams erected a foundry for the manufacture of stoves, plows, etc., In 1836 Swain & Gaar consolidated their business with that of Grover & Williams, and the firm of Thornburg, Haynes & Co. was formed, Abel Thornburg and John Haynes being among the proprietors. They made woolen-mill machinery and did a large amount of casting, employing from seventy-five to one hundred men; but in 1838 they were overtaken by misfortune. A little later they were succeeded by Ellis Nordyke and Shipley Foulke, who carried on a less extensive business, manufacturing stoves principally. The machine shop and foundry were subsequently in the hands of different proprietors and finally were abandoned. The lot is now occupied by the county jail.

About 1828 a silk factory was started, near the site of the Green street mill, by George W. Rowlett, who carried on the business a number of years. He brought cocoons to Richmond and raised the silkworms here, in a building on the corner of Twelfth and Main streets. Mr. Rowlett also brought to the county the first shingle machine for cutting shingles with a knife from steamed lumber. This he located two miles north of Richmond, on the Union Branch turnpike, whence he afterward removed it to a location near Washington. He removed to Jay County later, and there engaged in farming until his death, in 1857. Mr. Rowlett was a native of Philadelphia, born of English parents. His grandfather was a native of France. The name was originally spelled Roulette. Mr. Rowlett was a noted mathematician, and gained a high reputation as a school-teacher. Two of his sons, O. B. and J. V., who are elsewhere mentioned, are both in business in Richmond, and are the inventors of valuable machinery.

Jesse Clark, who came from North Carolina, built the first fulling-mill in the county, two miles north of Richmond. After a few years he transferred the machinery to a building which stood on or near the present site of the Green street flouring mill. Samuel Test and Warner M. Leeds leased the mill and added machinery for carding, spinning and weaving. In 1825 the property was leased to Levinus, Thomas W. and Dean King. In 1827 the Public Ledger stated: "The Messrs. King are extending their woolen factory with laudable enterprise. They have recently commenced the manufacture of broadcloth, in a manner which does them credit. They have also commenced the manufacture of blankets." Levinus King became sole proprietor in 1834. Three years later a company known as the Richmond Trading and Manufacturing Company was formed. Its members were Levinus King, of the woolen-mill; Warner M. Leeds and Isaac E. Jones, owners of the paper-mill; and James R. Mendenhall, proprietor of the Cox grist-mill. The company continued business until 1843. Mr. King then took charge and ran the mill until 1853. It was afterward changed to a flax-dressing mill.

Two Englishmen, direct from London, began the establishment of a brewery in 1827, which the Public Ledger predicted would be successful. The editor also thought that "the wholesome beverage should take the place of the burning whisky which is now so common." This brewery was at the old Cushman distillery.

Even in 1827 the manufacturing interests, the foundation of the future prosperity of Richmond, had already become large in comparison with the size of the town. Encouraged by the outlook, the editor of the Ledger called for the establishment of a satinet factory and a cotton factory. The latter soon appeared.

About 1831 Charles W. Starr built a cotton factory just above the bridge on the Williamsburg turnpike. It was operated by him several years and then sold to Job Swain, who sold the mill machinery and established a peg-factory in the building. Isaac E. Jones afterward converted it into a silk-factory. This was succeeded by a grist-mill, called the Spring Mill. Joseph P. Laws bought the property later and established a tannery, which also passed out of existence.

A woolen factory was started by William Bancroft about 1835, in a mill on the site afterward occupied by Mering's grist-mill. It was afterward managed by Caleb Shreve, Levinus King and Christian Buhl, successively, and then discontinued.

The old cotton factory which was started in 1826 by Samuel Smith was afterward the property of Chas. W. Starr, and the cotton-mill was abandoned in 1836; then the building was turned into a shoe-peg factory, and from that to a machine shop, and then to a silk factory in 1842. This proved a failure and the next was a grist-mill, and last a tannery. This building that had been used for so many different kinds of business, and nothing long, was located near the present site of the Gaar Machine Works.

PROMINENT INDUSTRIAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

Book Bindery.—The only establishment of this kind in the city is that of Nicholson & Bro., established in 1870. They employ from twelve to fifteen hands in this department and the manufacture of blank books and paper boxes. The building devoted to this business is two stories, 30 x 60 feet in size. This firm have long been engaged in the book and stationery trade in Richmond and have a first-class establishment.

Cain's Lumber Yard.—In 1872 W. E. Dulin commenced the lumber business at the southeast corner of Eleventh and Main streets. In 1878 he sold out to William Cain, who still continues the business. He has two yards, one at the corner of Eleventh and Main streets, and the other on Eleventh Street, both having an area of 33,000 feet. The amount of lumber handled is over 3,000,000 feet annually.

Cary, Rowlett & Co., 1100 North E Street.—This firm began business Jan. 1, 1884. The firm consists of Alonzo Cary, O. B. Rowlett and Henry Farmer. They manufacture the check-rower (for use in planting corn) and the Hamilton corn-planter. Mr. Farmer is the patentee of both of these inventions. The planter was manufactured exclusively by the Farmer Manufacturing Company during 1880 and 1881. Messrs. Cary and Rowlett were engaged in the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds from 1877 until 1884. The firm now employ about a dozen men, and are making a specialty of the check-rower.

Champion Roller Milling Co.—This was organized as a stock company July 1, 1883. The building used is a three and a half story brick. It was erected in 1877, designed as a mill for the manufacture of linseed oil, and was used for that purpose by the company, Kendall, Barnes & Co., until July 1, 1882, when the firm was changed to Kendall, Reeves & Co., who continued until 1883. Then the company formed and arranged for the manufacture of flour under the new patent process. The mill is now in successful operation, with a capacity of 200 barrels every twenty-four hours. The machinery is run by a steam engine of sixty horse-power. About fourteen hands are employed. The Directors of the company are : Jas. E. Reeves, F. M. Clark and Arthur Reeves, the former being President, and the latter Secretary and Treasurer.

Champion Roller Skate and Wagon Company.—This company began business in January, 1884, and was incorporated Feb. 6, 1884, with a capital stock of $15,000. J. F. Reeves is President of the company; Reuben Mysick, Secretary and Treasurer; and J. V. Rowlett, Manager. They manufacture the J. V. Rowlett patent Champion roller skates and children's toy wagons patented by J. V. Rowlett. The manufactory is located at 1122 North E street.

Chase Piano Company.—The manufacture of pianos as now carried on, and the high reputation the pianos have gained, have been a source of pride to the city of Richmond for the past five years. The Trayer Piano Company was started in June, 1875, with George Trayer as President, and Richard Jackson as Secretary and Treasurer. The company continued for three years with limited means, but with an improving business, which gave assurance of success, as only increased capital was needed. This was secured in September, 1878, when the present company was formed with a capital stock of $100,000, of which $87,000 was paid in and the Chase Piano Company became the successor of Trayer Piano Company. The company secured twenty-three acres of ground and the finest water-power on the Whitewater. Their factory is a large four-story building, and such additions as needed, all covering a space of 70,000 square feet.

They commenced business by turning out one piano a week, but, in 1882, they employed 125 hands, and paid out $55,000 in wages. The past year, 1883, 150 hands, all skilled workmen, have been employed, and their labor account exceeded $65,000. The company have six patents secured, and issued to M. J. Chase, a skilled mechanic, whose inventive genius is still at work. The Chase piano is now rapidly coming into use as inferior to none, and standing in the front rank of musical instruments. The present officers of the company are: James M. Starr, President; Chas. F. Coffin, Vice-president; Benj. Starr, Secretary and Treasurer; and M. J. Chase, Business Manager.

Church, School and Office Furniture. — These works, Haynes, Spencer & Co., proprietors, probably the most extensive in the West, had a small beginning in 1866 by John Allen. Later, G. H. Grant became a partner, then owner, and took in with him Joshua Nickerson and William Wootin. Their business was small, and their factory was a small frame building, of about 1,700 square feet of space, which served as finishing-room, salesroom and office combined. In 1871 T. W. Haynes purchased William Wootin's one-third interest. That year they purchased ground, to erect works of their own. In 1873 Grant & Haynes purchased Nickerson's interest, and then sold the same to William F. Spencer. The partnership thus formed continued for five years when Grant sold his interest to his remaining partners. Messrs. Haynes and Spencer then formed a joint stock company, with a capital of $75,000, with T. W. Haynes as President, and William F. Spencer, Secretary and Treasurer. They have one building, 80 x 25, and another 60 x 55, four stories high. Their mill was burned in July, 1881, with a loss of $35,000, and insurance of $17,000. A new building was erected, four stories high, 100 x 45 feet, and an L, 80x50 feet, and completed within eighty days. Another fire the same year destroyed about $5,000 worth of furniture. The past year, 1883, a purchase of ground was made and a four-story brick building was erected, 60 x 140, and a foundry, brick, 60 x 130. They have now about 100,000 feet of floor room, employ 200 hands, and do a business of $250,000 per annum. Their goods are to be found in almost every civilized country. The present Vice-President is Charles H. Coffin.

City Carriage Works.—This factory, located at 7, 9 and 11 South Sixth street, was established in 1857, by S. B. Lippincott. After several changes of owners it was purchased in 1877 by Philip Schneider, the present proprietor. The main building is two stories, 40 x 80 feet. A three-story building, 25 x 50 feet, is also occupied by the works. From twenty to twenty-five men are employed. Phaetons, carriages, buggies and spring wagons are manufactured.

City Mill Works.—These works were founded Aug. 22, 1876, by Joseph G. Lemon. Shortly afterward a stock company, styled the Richmond City Mill Works, was formed. The officers were Christian Fetta, President; Nathaniel W. Briggs, Secretary and Treasurer; and C. F. Walters, Manager; Directors: A. E. Crocker, N. W. Briggs, J. G. Lemon, C. F. Walters, Christian Fetta and James M. Starr. The company purchased the property of the Malleable Iron Works, which had succumbed to a financial disaster, and added to it both large and valuable improvements. Opening in the fall of 1876, they have been progressive and prosperous. They are giving employment to 125 hands, have a 100 horse-power engine to run their machinery, and manufacture exclusively flouring-mill machinery. Their sales in Indiana and adjoining States exceed $300,000 per annum. Present officers are: J. G. Lemon, President; L. T. Lemon, Secretary and Treasurer, and C. F. Walters, Manager of the works. The dimensions of the buildings occupied by the works are as follows: Main building, 60 x 150 feet, with a wing of the same size; stone shop, 60 x 100; foundry, 50 x 60; blacksmith shop, 40 x 50; wood-working shop, 32 x 100.

Coffin Works.—The coffin works of Ezra Smith & Co. are as widely known as any other manufacturing institution in the city of Richmond. The business when started in the fifties was a sash, door and blind factory, owned by Jno. Hillowpeter, and in 1859 he was succeeded by Ezra Smith & Co. They continued the business, including lumber and building material, until Jan. 1, 1872, when an incorporation was effected, with a capital stock of $50,000, and the coffin works became a fixed fact. The success of the company has been scarcely paralleled by any single business interest in the city. It has increased its resources to a paid-up capital of $100,000. On the organization of the company new buildings were erected, consisting of a four-story brick, in all covering a working space of 48,000 square feet. Their engine is of forty-five horse-power, and sixty hands are employed in their business, which now extends to every part of the Union.

Dunham & Co.'s Lumber Yard.—E. B. & G. H. Dunham, under the firm name of E. B. Dunham & Co., engaged in the lumber business at 513 North Twelfth street, in 1868, and have since conducted a large business. They also carry on extensive lumbering operations in the State of Tennessee, and send their products to almost every part of the Union.

Empire Steel Plow Works.—The manufacture of steel plows was commenced in 1832 by Solomon and David S. Horney. About eight years later Solomon Horney became sole proprietor, and so continued until 1848, when he was again joined by D. S. Horney, who remained in the business until 1850. Solomon Horney continued alone until 1852, when he took George McCullough into partnership. In 1853 Elwood Patterson became a partner. These three, under the firm name of S. Horney & Co., continued business until 1876, when Horney retired. McCullough also withdrew two years later, and Elwood Patterson has since been sole proprietor.

The early business was carried on on a small scale, but the establishment now takes rank among the first in the city. At first, cast and steel plows were manufactured, but for the past thirty-four years steel plows exclusively have been made. The factory was originally on the corner of Fort Wayne and Washington avenues, but since 1867 has been in its present location, 283 Fort Wayne avenue. The shops occupy an area of 17,000 square feet. About twenty men are regularly employed, and about 4,000 plows made annually.

Fleecy Dale Woolen-Mills.—The site of this mill, on the East Fork of the Whitewater, was first occupied by a saw-mill. In 1825 Benjamin Hibberd bought the site and established a woolen-mill. About 1849 the property was purchased of Mr. Hibberd by Benjamin Bond and Alpheus Test, and operated by them several years. Samuel Nixon and Ezekiel Aikin were the next owners and carried on business until 1867, when Ezekiel Aiken and Samuel Porter became proprietors. This firm continued to do business until 1878 under the name E. Aiken & Co. Mr. Aiken then became sole proprietor. He died in 1881, and the business has since been conducted by his heirs. The main building is of wood, three stories high, T-shaped, containing an area of about 12,000 square feet. There is also an addition, two stories high, 18 x 36 feet. Themill is provided with new machinery. A large amount of weaving was formerly done, but at present the manufacture of yarn is the principal work.

James W. Moore is a son of David and grandson of Alexander Moore, who was a lineal descendant of Irish ancestors, and married Jane Homan. David Moore was born in Uniontown, Pa., Oct. 6, 1811, and was left an orphan at an early age, with little means. He had an innate love of knowledge, and by self application, with little assistance, acquired a good education. He came to Wayne County in an early day and for several years taught school; subsequently engaged in the mercantile business in Centreville. In 1847 he located in Connersville, Ind., where he was soon after elected Secretary of the Whitewater Canal Company, serving until his death, Feb. 12, 1852. He left a widow and four children.—Jacob R., of Indianapolis; Emma J. Richardson, of Cincinnati, Ohio; James W. and Martha E. Gossett, of Indianapolis. His wife, to whom he was married Sept. 21, 1837, was Catharine, daughter of Elijah Fisher, an early settler of Centreville. Elijah Fisher was born in Kentucky about 1782, and about 1800 married Nancy Meek, daughter of Jacob Meek, of Kentucky. In 1804, with his wife and one child, he came to Wayne County, Ind., his wife riding a horse and he walking all the way. They located near Richmond where he carried on farming. After his permanent settlement, his parents and nine other children joined him in Wayne County. He was the father of ten children—Jacob, John, Jennings, Nancy, Permelia, Betsey, Effie, Catherine, Ronan and Martha. Although a member of no church he favored the Baptist church, in which he was reared. He died in Centreville in 1852. Of his children, four girls—Permelia, Catherine, Ronan and Martha—are living. Permelia, now the widow of Thomas Gentry, resides in Centreville and believes herself the eldest native-born resident of the county. James W. Moore was born in Centreville, Sept. 2, 1844. He was reared in his native county, and in Greenfield, Ind., where he obtained a fair education. He returned to Centreville in 1866, and in April, 1871, was appointed Deputy Clerk of Wayne Circuit Court, serving under Colonel W. W. Dudley until January, 1876, when he was appointed Clerk to fill an unexpired term. In the fall of the same year he was elected to the office by the Republican party and served till the fall of 1880. Since then he has been engaged in the Quaker City Chair Factory. He was married to Louise J. Rupe, a native of Economy, Ind., born Feb. 5, 1850, a daughter of Henry B. and Jane Rupe. They have three children—Henry A., Emma R. and Nellie L.

Fry Brothers Sash and Door Factory.—In 1875 H. Cadwallader & Co. began the business at present carried on by this firm. It included the manufacture of doors, sash, blinds, frames, moldings, desks and pumps. The business was carried on by the above firm three years, when the present proprietors succeeded. In 1880 the firm changed to Fry & Hadley, but in 1881 the name became Fry Brothers. The firm consists of James E. and C. A. Fry. They employ fifteen men on an average and occupy 18,215 square feet of room. The factory is located at 17 and 19 South Eleventh street.

Fulton Boiler Works.—These works were established by their present proprietor, Jerry Cowhig, in 1876. The shops, located north of the Union depot, are 45 x 110 feet in size. Employment is given to from twenty to twenty-five hands and every kind of steam boiler and sheet iron work is manufactured.

Gaar, Scott & Co.—The extensive establishment of this company stands foremost among the many industrial interests of Richmond and is among the leading manufactories of the kind in the country. The works, and the wide reputation which their products have gained, have been largely instrumental in adding to the industrial greatness of Richmond.

In 1836 Isaac E. Jones commenced the manufacture of stoves in a building which now stands on the corner of Sixth and North F streets, to which location it was removed in 1856 to make room for a machine shop. Three years later (1839) Jesse M. and John H. Hutton became the owners. They enlarged and renovated the establishment and called it the Spring Foundry. In 1841 they made the first threshing machine ever built in Indiana. It was of the style known as the "chaff piler." Messrs. Hutton managed the business until 1849 and then sold to Jonas Gaar, Abram Gaar, John M. Gaar and William G. Scott, who, in 1852, began the manufacture of threshers. These gentlemen conducted the business under the firm name of A. Gaar & Co. until April 1, 1870, when the firm of Gaar, Scott & Co. was incorporated, with a capital of $400,000. From a modest beginning, their business at the above date had grown to about $350,000 per year and employed 200 hands. In 1874 the company was reorganized under the same name with a capital of $350,000. The present capital is the same. The present officers of the company are Abram Gaar, President; Joseph B. Craijhhead, Vice-President; Wm. G. Scott, Secretary; Jno. Milton Gaar, Treasurer.

The establishment now occupies nearly nine acres of ground and fifteen buildings, with a floor room amounting to several acres. The principal buildings are as follows: Main building, four stories, brick, 40 x 150 feet, T-shaped; machine shop, 50 x 190 feet, three stories, brick; molding room, 50 x 140 feet; boiler-shops, brick, 138 x 110 and 38 x 120 feet; blacksmith shop, 40 x 90 feet; supply room, 30 x 70 feet; engine house, 30 x 70 feet; warehouses, one a three-story, brick, with slate roof—size, 50 x 200 feet; and the others, 60 x 100 feet, and 40 x 70 feet. The works are fitted throughout with the best of machinery, which is driven by a steam engine of 250 horse-power. The company manufactures portable engines of every kind, plain and traction, and steam and horse-power threshing machines. The separators made by Gaar, Scott & Co. were awarded first premiums in 1860, by the United States Agricultural Society, and at the Centennial Exhibition of 1876.

They have also taken numerous premiums at State fairs, as have also the engines made by this company. The machines are in use in nearly all of the States and Territories of the United States, as well as in Sweden, Russia, and other foreign countries. The number of engines made in 1883 was 540; number of threshing machines, 500.

About 400 men are constantly employed, and the pay-roll amounts to $250,000 yearly. No interest of this section of the State is more substantial and prosperous, and none has merited greater prosperity.

Grain Elevator.—The Depot Grain Elevator was established by Mitchell & Benson prior to 1861. This firm was succeeded by Bush & Co. about 1870 and by H. M. Van Frank in 1874, who enlarged the buildings and carried on a larger business. The main building is three stories, 60 x 120 feet. Mr. Van Frank failed in 1883.

Grant & Hempleman, manufacturers of church and school furniture. This firm was organized in 1878, and has since conducted a very prosperous business. Their manufactory now ranks among the leading enterprises of the city. Geo. H. Grant, the senior member of the firm, was the first to engage in the manufacture of this kind of furniture in Richmond, where he has been in business almost constantly since 1865. Mr. Hempleman has also been in the same business for a long time. The firm make and sell over thirty different styles of church furniture and thirteen of school furniture. Their products are in use in more than twenty States of the Union, and are unsurpassed in style and quality.

Green Street Mills.—The present building was erected in 1864, by Marmon, Nordyke & Co., and is seven stories high, 30 x 36 feet. It has a fine water-power and also a steam attachment, which was added in the spring of 1883. The building was first occupied by H. C. Wright as a flouring-mill until 1876, when it was purchased by C. G. Carpenter. Originally the mill started with four run of burrs, and this continued until 1883. In the spring of that year the mill was renovated and provided with improved machinery of the patent roller process, and is now one of the most complete flouring establishments in the State. There is $25,000 of invested capital.

The builders of this mill started the business as early as 1855, but on leasing the building as above removed from the city.

Hames and Chain Works.—These works were first started as early as 1832, on a small scale, by Wm. Cunningham, and carried on by hand. Since that time the business has changed hands several times, finally becoming the property of W. C. Starr, in the year 1866. The business had grown considerably during all those years, was carried on by steam, and was located on Smith street, near Pearl.

In 1872 Mr. Starr removed to his present location, having erected a two-story brick building, 60 x 74, and a one-story back-shop, 58 x 67 feet in size. The chain works were added in 1875, and the business has now assumed much importance. The works are conducted by W. C. Starr & Son, employing sixty-five hands and a motive power of forty-horse steam-engine.

Hoosier Drill Company.—The manufacture of the Hoosier drills was begun by Joseph Ingels at Milton, Wayne County, in 1857, under patents of his own. He continued until 1867, when a stock company was formed, which continued until 1873, when it was re-organized, J. M. Wescott becoming the principal stockholder. They manufacture grain drills, corn drills, hay rakes and broad-cast seeders. These articles have a wide-spread reputation and the demand is ahead of the supply.

The works were removed from Milton to Richmond in 1878, where during the year large and greatly improved works had been erected, which were taken possession of in October of the same year. Since then additions to the works have been made rendering them still more complete in every respect for the more perfect and rapid manufacture of their wares. The latest addition was a new engine-house and a fine engine of 150 horse-power. The buildings constituting the works are four in number, or the main building and additions. The main building is 50 x 350 feet, and four stories high; a wing 100 x 50 feet, same height; foundry, etc., 130 x 80, one story high, and another building same, 85 x 50 feet.

The officers of the company are: J. M. Westcott, President; F. A. Wilke, Secretary; O. Hollingsworth, Treasurer, and J. A. Carr, Superintendent, all stockholders in the company. The capital stock when incorporated was $60,000 but is now represented by a much larger capital. It is one of the largest and most prosperous manufacturing interests of the city.

Ice Dealing.—This business, from a very humble beginning, has grown to important proportions. It was begun in 1837 or 1838 by Irvin Reed, who at the time was engaged in the drug business, near the corner of Sixth and Main. The demand for ice for use in case of sickness probably led him to engage in the business. He kept the ice in his cellar and sold it at about three "bits" per bushel. He continued the business for more than a decade, occasionally making small shipments to Knightstown and other points. During this time he brought the first fresh oysters to Richmond by stage from Baltimore. About the same time a Frenchman named Bouche kept a saloon and did a small business in ice and oysters. William Mashmyer, A. Lewis, J. W. Chandler and others afterward dealt in ice on a small scale. Lewis increased the business, and was succeeded by John Hawkins, after two or three years, who carried it on more extensively.

In 1864 J. W. Brannon and Charles Live started in the business and leased the Thistlewaite Pond. They put up about 500 tons per year at that time. In 1877 the present firm, Hawkins & Brannon, was organized, consisting of David Hawkins, son of John Hawkins, above named, and J. W. Brannon. The firm now sell about 8,000 tons yearly, which is delivered in all parts of the city. They employ eight or ten hands and four delivery wagons.

Iron Fence Manufacture.—Samuel Marlatt commenced a general blacksmithing business at No. 123 Fort Wayne avenue in 1877. He is now principally engaged in the manufacture of iron fences, railings, shutters, doors, etc., both of plain and fancy designs.

Liberty Avenue Flour Mills.—This mill was erected in 1868 by Leroy M. and Lafayette Larsh, and at first called the Canal Mills. In 1874 L. M. Larsh retired and Corwin S. Larsh became a partner, the firm becoming Lafe Larsh &

Bro. The mill is 46 x 50 feet and has a capacity for manufacturing eighty barrels of flour per day of twenty-four hours.

Malleable Iron Works were started in 1871, by E. D. Palmer and H. H. Fetta. They were operated only a few years.

Main Street Brewery.—The main building of the present Main Street Brewery was started by Christian Buhl, who established a brewery in Richmond as early as 1830. In 1869 it was purchased at sheriff's sale by Emil Minck, its present proprietor. Mr. Minck has made several improvements and carries on quite an extensive business. His son, Emil Minck, Jr., is associated with him in the management of the establishment.

Pork Packing.—This establishment was commenced in the winter of 1853-'4, by William Wiggins and William S. Reid, for buying and slaughtering pork. On the death of Mr. Wiggins, soon after, Jeremy Mansur joined Mr. Reid. Mansur & Reid carried on the business until 1861 or 1862, when Mr. Mansur retired, and G. W. Vanneman, C. C. Beeler and John P. Smith became partners of Mr. Reid, since which time the business has been continued under the firm name of Vanneman, Reid & Co. In 1867 this establishment took the name of "Charter Oak Pork House." It has the capacity to slaughter and take care of about 900 hogs a day, or about 20,000 in a season, lasting about twenty days. The average number actually handled within the last three years, prior to 1870, was about 14,000 a year, and the value of the pork annually slaughtered and sold, about $250,000. This establishment was once destroyed by fire, but was promptly rebuilt. Nearly 20,000 were slaughtered in 1870, and in the season of 1871, 20,638. In 1874 it was the third in size in the State of Indiana, with the credit of packing the heaviest average hogs in the State. In 1875 the present firm of Reid, Beeler & Co. became the owners, the firm being W. S. Reid, C. C. Beeler, John P. Smith and E. G. Hibberd. They have all the new improved and necessary machinery for their business with a capacity of 1,000 hogs per day. Their works and yards cover six acres.

Quaker City Chair Works were established by W. B. Hadley and Theodore Newman, on South Eleventh street, in 1879. In 1880 James W. Moore became a partner under the above name. Double cane-seat chairs are a specialty. Of all kinds, about forty patents are made, including the perforated-seated chairs. They employ thirty-three hands and also have a large repair shop, from which they give out work to a large number outside. They are doing a prosperous business of over $40,000 a year and improving. Theodore Newnan is the manager, with a practical knowledge of the business in all its branches.

Quaker City Mill.—This mill is located just outside of the city limits, on the New Paris pike, and is now owned by F. H. Stafford. It is one of the oldest mill-sites in the State, a landmark of olden times, well-known to the pioneers who came from far and near to secure its services in turning their corn into meal and wheat into flour. Customers patronized the "Moffitt Mill," for it was known as such as far west as Indianapolis and north to Ft. Wayne. Charles Moffitt built the first mill in 1815. It was repaired and renewed and changed owners several times. It was built of solid hewn-oak logs and remained standing with its additions and repairs until April 9, 1883, when it was destroyed by fire. The then and present owner, F. H. Stafford, erected upon the old site a substantial brick structure at a cost of $6,000 and furnished it with all the latest and best mill machinery. It is run by water-power. The original dam remained intact until 1873, when it was replaced by the present one. The old site has been owned and the mill operated in the past seventy years as follows: First came Chas. Moffitt, then his son Hugh became the next owner. Benj. Fulghum purchased a half interest, and the firm was Moffitt & Fulghum. The next firm was Kenworthy & Fulghum, Wm. Kenworthy purchasing Moffitt's interest. Then came Kenworthy & Son, Jesse Kenworthy purchasing Fulghum's interest. Ezra Hill and Henry Wetherell bought out the Kenworthys, and Ezra Hill, in turn, bought out his partner. Then, in 1874, the present proprietor became half owner which continued until 1879, when Mr. Stafford purchased his partner's interest and became sole proprietor. He failed in 1884.

Richmond Caster Works.—These works were started by an incorporated company, with a capital stock of $15,000 on May 9, 1881. Since then the capital has been doubled and all paid in. This increase was made May 12, 1883. They control two patents of H. Ogborn, the first being issued April 9, 1881, and the second March 6, 1883. They are both furniture casters. The latter the company manufactures exclusively. A grain-drill caster, patented by S. C. Mendenhall, and reissued by Harrison Ogborn Nov. 22, 1881, is also controlled by this company. Present officers: Jas. M. Starr, President; H. Ogborn, Vice-President; C. B. Hunt, Secretary; Benj. Starr, Treasurer. The rapid extension of their business will again require a further addition to the capital stock in the near future.

Richmond Chair Company.—The original chair-works, started by Wm. Crawford in 1877, were sold by him in 1881 to H. D. Bond, who was succeeded in the same year by J. E. Thomas and Daniel Surface. This firm continued business until 1883 when Mr. Surface took entire charge. The Richmond Chair Company is an incorporated body, with a large capital. They make forty styles of chairs, many of which are patented. Their buildings are a two-story frame structure, 50 x 105 feet, and a three-story brick building, 40 x 60 feet. The company do an extensive business, employing about fifty-five hands. Their establishment ranks among the leading interests of this section. The works are located on the southwest corner of Thirteenth and North E streets.

Richmond City Mills.—About the year 1825 Thomas Newman erected a grist-mill on the West Fork. About 1853 Thomas Hunt purchased the property from Newman's heirs. It was afterward owned by Timothy Thistlewaite and then by Davis Bush, who, in 1869, remodeled, enlarged and improved it. In 1877 Thomas and John Hunt became the owners, and are still carrying on business under the firm name of Hunt & Brother. The mill is four-stories high, 60 x 100 feet. It has been improved from time to time and provided with first-class machinery. Its capacity is about 100 barrels of flour every twenty-four hours. Large shipments are made to Eastern cities.

Richmond Machine Works were originally established in 1860 by Bayleis, Vaughan & Co. and continued by them until 1872, when it became an incorporated company with a capital stock of $100,000, under the same name and stockholders, and in 1882, ten years later, assumed the name at the head of this article. Jos. M. Bayleis, as President, and And. Vaughan, Secretary, were the first officers of the company in 1872, and the former was succeeded by B. P. Perry, a leading stockholder in the company, in July of the same year. Mr. Perry is still President. In 1874 Mr. Vaughan retired from the secretaryship, and Mr. L. H. Bunyan assumed the office and still holds it.

Their work embraces saw-mills, engines, tile-mills and general work manufactured in such establishments. They have a forty horse-power steam-engine and employ an average of fifty hands throughout the year. The buildings composing their extensive works are as follows:

Finishing room.....	40 x 80 feet.
Blacksmith shop.....	25 x 50 "
Foundry.....	50 x 100 "
Wood-work shop.....	30 x 60 "
Another of same.....	40 x 60 "
Pattern shop.....	40 x 40 "
Pattern room.....	40 x 60 "
Wood-work room.....	30 x 60 "

Richmond Paper-Mills.—The question of establishing a paper-mill in Richmond received attention as early as 1827, and in a copy of the Public Ledger of that year it is announced that "Mr. Smith is progressing finely with his paper-mill." The death of the projector in 1828 caused the work to be suspended, but in 1830 a paper-mill was put in operation by Leeds & Jones, with John Easton, Superintendent. The mill afterward passed into the possession of the Richmond Manufacturing and Trading Company, and afterward Nixon Brothers became the owners. The mill was destroyed by fire about 1871 but was rebuilt. The mills are now owned by Thomas Nixon. The capacity is 3,000 pounds of paper per day. Twenty-five hands are employed. The motive power is furnished by three steam engines, amounting to eighty-six horse-power, and a forty horse-power water-wheel. The establishment occupies several acres of ground, and manufactures manilla, roll-bag and wrapping paper. The dimensions of the buildings are as follows: 30 x 60 feet, three stories; 20 x 30, three stories; 24 x 60; 24 x 100; 25 x 30; 40 x 40, three stories; 20 x 20; oiling sheds, 20 x 40, and carpenter shop, 16 x 40.

In 1853 Timothy Thistlewaite, Miles J. Shinn and Joseph C. Ratliff started a paper-mill and operated it for some time. It was afterward run by Mr. Thistlewaite, who discontinued the manufacture of paper and added the power to that of his grist-mill.

Richmond Tannery and Collar Works.—In 1859 Job and Arthur A. Curme, under the firm name of Curme & Son, started a small tannery one-fourth of a mile north of the city limits. At the end of four years Job Curme retired and was succeeded by Isaac D. Dunn, when the tannery was removed to its present location. In 1868 another partner was admitted and the firm became Curme, Dunn & Co. In 1874 the concern was incorporated with a capital of $100,000, with A. A. Curme, President; I. D. Dunn, Vice-President, and J. J. Harrington, Secretary and Treasurer. In 1877 the buildings were burned, but they were at once rebuilt on a more extensive scale. The firm owned two squares on North Third, between C and D streets, on which are one brick building, two stories high, 50 x 300 feet, two bark houses, two main buildings, etc. About sixty hands were employed. The tannery has a capacity of 200 hides per week, and the manufactory of horse-collars is the largest in the State. The firm failed in 1883 and the property is now in the hands of an assignee.

Richmond Valley Mills.—These mills were destroyed by fire in 1883. The original of the establishment was a pioneer chopping-mill and grist-mill. It was owned by John Underwood as early as 1830, and was afterward converted into a woolen-mill by Bancroft, as already stated. After many changes of owners and considerable improvements, the property was bought in 1856 by Jacob Mering, who in 1857 sold it to Luther M. Mering, its last owner. Under Mr. Mering's management a large milling business was carried on, and about 20,000 barrels of flour made yearly. The building was 40 x 60 feet, and four and a half stories high.

Richmond Woolen Mills.—This mill was established by Alpheus Test in 1856. It was on one of the oldest mill-sites in the county. The water privilege was first used for a grist-mill and saw-mill by Atticus Siddall and Edward Wright. In 1856 Mr. Test bought the site and erected a frame building for a woolen-mill. In 1858 the building and contents burned, involving a loss of $10,000. In the spring of 1859 he erected the present factory, a brick building 30 x 60 feet. In 1865 Alpheus Test sold the property to William, Rufus, Oliver and Lindley M. Test. L. M. Test sold his interest a year later, and the other three brothers conducted the business until February, 1882, when William and Rufus Test became sole proprietors. In 1866 the mill was damaged by fire to the extent of $15,000, but was at once remodeled. In 1868 a stone dye-house, 25 x 50 feet, was erected, and in 1871 a large stone building, 50 x 100 feet, was erected, and is used for carding and spinning rooms. The firm employs from fifteen to seventeen operatives, and uses about 75,000 pounds of wool per year.

A woolen-mill was established in 1865 by Richard Jackson and Elias H. Swain, on the site of the old Cox grist-mill. A little later Henry C. Dunn was admitted to partnership, the firm becoming Jackson, Swain & Dunn. They had for a factory a five-story wooden building, and gave employment to about seventy-five persons. The mill was destroyed by fire in 1871.

The Robinson Machine Works were founded in 1842 by Francis W. Robinson. He was born in Baltimore, Dec. 9, 1810, removed to Wilmington, Del., and thence to Philadelphia, where he remained until his nineteenth year, during which time he learned the trade of a house-carpenter and builder. In 1829 he moved to Indiana bringing with him his youngest sister. He settled in Richmond in the year 1833 or 1834, and followed his trade until the year 1842, when he commenced business on the present site of the Robinson Machine Works, in a small way, running the establishment by a horse-power which had formerly been used by Robert Morrisson and Daniel P. Wiggins for grinding bark.

The popular threshing machines of that day were called "chaff pilers," and "traveling threshing machines," but neither kind separated the grain from the chaff. After a few years Mr. R. bought out Edward Borton & Son (then engaged in the same business), and began the manufacture of "traveling separators," and shortly substituted steam for horse-power, and began the building of improved threshers and separators with separate horse-powers. About 1860 he commenced manufacturing portable farm engines and "Pitt's" separators, having patented some valuable improvements making them successful "grain-saving" machines and rapid threshers.

Up to 1858 he was sole proprietor, and was his own superintendent, foreman, book-keeper, collector and salesman, when Jonas W. Yeo, his son-in-law, became associated with him. Afterward R. H. Shoemaker purchased an interest in the business, and in 1872 the works were incorporated under the name of the "Robinson Machine Works," the incorporators being F. W. Robinson, Jonas W. Yeo, R. H. Shoemaker and R. H. Swift. In 1872 H. E. Robinson, son of F. W. Robinson, bought the interest of R. H. Shoemaker. In 1877 the affairs of the incorporated company were wound up, and in 1878 the firm of Robinson & Co. came into possession of the works, and the firm of Robinson & Co. is now composed of Francis W. Robinson and Henry E. Robinson.

The machinery now built at the works is protected by numerous patents, being the inventions and improvements of F. W. Robinson, including a patent steam-engine governor, patent revolving straw-stacker, patent clover attachment to threshing machines, and numerous patents for improvements in threshers, engines, etc.

They manufacture steam-engines, boilers, threshers, horse-powers, saw-mills, drag-saws, etc.

The works comprise a machine shop, carpenter shop, wood-working shop, boiler shop, smith shop, foundry and two warehouses. The motive power is a steam-engine of fifty horse-power.

Since 1878 Robinson & Co. have added to the real estate by purchase of a lot on Main street, 60 x 150 feet, on which is their commodious three-story brick office building; a lot on North Third street, 60 x 145, adjoining the shops on the north, to be occupied by a three-story brick warehouse; also three lots on North Third street for storing lumber, etc. The capacity of the works is about $150,000 per year in product. The machinery made is in use in almost every State in the Union, but more especially in Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri.

Saddlery and Collar Manufactory.—This business is carried on by Wiggins & Co., at 509 Main street. It was begun many years ago by D. P. Wiggins and continued by his sons, a tannery then being operated in connection with it. In 1872 was formed the present firm of Wiggins & Co., consisting of Charles O. Wiggins, George Wiggins and Frank Wiggins. The original building on the present site was erected by D. P. Wiggins in 1835. The present building is of brick, three and one-half stories high, 20 x 100 feet. The first floor contains the office and salesroom; the second, a stock of trunks and valises; and the third floor is devoted to saddlery and harness making, in which from eight to twelve men are employed. Two other buildings are used in the manufacture of horse-collars, in which department from fifteen to twenty men are employed. The firm has a large wholesale trade in the Southern, Western and Northwestern States.

Sash, Door and Blind Manufactory.—The sash, door and blind manufactory and planing mill of Wm. H. Middleton & Co. ranks among the leading industries of Richmond. The planing mill was first started in 1871 by Wm. Cain & Son. In 1875 the firm was T. P. Cain and J. M. Baylies, who were succeeded in 1879 by the present company, composed of Wm. H. Middleton, S. B. Williamson, H. W. Talhelm and August Kamp, under the firm name of Wm. H. Middleton & Co. They have a three-story brick building, 40 x 100 feet, and an engine room 20 x 30 feet, with a forty horse-power engine to conduct their manufacturing operations. Further additions will have to be made to meet the growing demands of their business.

School Supplies.—The manufacture of school supplies is conducted by Moon & Haynes, the latter entering the partnership in February, 1883. Mr. Moon is a natural mechanic with inventive powers of no inferior order. He has taken out several patents for articles manufactured by the firm. They are conducting a successful business of $30,000 per year.

Sedgwick Wire Fence Company.—The manufacture of wire fence was begun by Sedgwick Brothers in 1879. On the 5th of August of that year Isham Sedgwick secured a patent on a loom for weaving wire into double-twist net work. The loom is a most ingenious labor-saving device, and with its aid the fence can be made cheaply and rapidly. Buildings were erected in 1880 for the use of the firm and occupied in April. There have been additions, and the factory now comprises four of the following dimensions: 40 x 60 feet, two stories; 25 x 60 feet, two stories; 42 x 86, four and a half stories; and the last, erected in 1882, 14 x 80, three stories high. This gives ample room. The proprietors have increased their business from eighty miles of fence in 1881, to 140 miles in 1883, and their wire gates from 1,000, in round numbers, in 1881, to 9,000 in 1883. They have now improved their machines to twenty-five times the capacity of hand labor, which was used exclusively in England, when the wire fence was first made. Each loom has a capacity of 100 rods daily, and six of these looms are in operation. Twenty hands have steady employment and steam-power is used. The territory in which their work is found now covers the United States and Canada, and their sales are only limited by the capacity of their works.

The Sinex Plow Company was incorporated as a joint stock company in 1874 with a cash capital of $8,000. The company is composed of William Sinex, President, John B. Sinex, Secretary and Treasurer; Charles Sinex and Chas. W. Sinex's heirs. The works of the company are at 174 and 176 Fort Wayne avenue, and occupy two buildings covering an area of 2,500 feet. The company employs from fifteen to twenty workmen and their products are sold extensively in the Middle, Western and Southern States. The plow of which a specialty is made is known as the Original Empire plow, which has taken over thirty premiums at State fairs. The first plow of this kind was made by Wm. Sinex, in 1849. Mr. Sinex, the President of the company, is a native of Delaware and a blacksmith by trade. He located in Richmond in 1838 and has resided in the city ever since, with the exception of about four years.

Spring Grove Oil Mill.—This establishment, situated one-fourth of a mile north of the city, dates back to 1853, when D. S. Burson and I. P. Evans erected a frame building and engaged in the manufacture of linseed oil. This firm continued business until 1861 when D. S. Burson became proprietor. The following year he was succeeded by J. W. Burson & Co. who operated the mill until the death of J. W. Burson in 1871. The building was destroyed by fire in February, 1864, but rebuilt soon after. The mill was not operated from 1871 to 1876. In the latter year Kendall & Barnes rented it and carried on business until August, 1877, when the present proprietors, Evans, Ferguson & Reeves took charge. The daily capacity of the works is twenty-five barrels. Both steam and water power are used. Fifteen hands are employed. The mill is superintended by T. E. Kinsey who has had ten years' experience in the business.

Union Carriage Factory.—This factory was established by Peter Crocker in 1854. The business was afterward conducted by Shute & Brandell, and Shute & Bolin, and since 1880 by Geo. W. Bolin & Co. The building is located at 911 and 913 Main street. It is three stories high, of brick, and is 23 x 116 feet. In the rear is a building 50 x 50 feet, which contains the wood-working and smith shops. The firm does a large business in the manufacture and sale of carriages and sleighs.

Wayne Agricultural Company.—One of the foremost industrial establishments of the State is carried on by the above firm. The business began in a small way in 1858, when Davis, Lawrence & Co., of Wayne County, organized for the purpose of manufacturing agricultural implements. They made chiefly grain drills and reapers. Their business grew rapidly, and in 1872 an incorporated company, with a capital of $100,000, was formed, and the facilities much extended. In 1875 the manufactory was moved to Richmond, and the main building, now occupied by the company, erected on the northeast corner of Fifteenth and North F streets. Other buildings have been erected from time to time, as the needs of the business demanded, until now the works cover an area of 64,250 square feet. The main building is two stories high, of brick; it is L shaped, one wing being 60 x 290 feet, and the other 60 x 160 feet. The firm employ nearly 200 workmen and traveling salesmen, and pay out in salaries nearly $100,000 per year. Jesse P. Fulghum, who has long been in the employ of the company, has made many valuable improvements and inventions. The last of his patents, and the most valuable, embodies the principles on which the Richmond Champion grain drill is constructed. All his patents are controlled by the Wayne Agricultural Company. Among the manufactures of this establishment are grain drills, the Richmond force-feed broadcast seeder, the Richmond Royce self-rake reaper, the improved Richmond mower, the Indiana walking cultivator, Moon's patent lever cutting box and the Champion corn drill. These implements are sold extensively throughout the whole country. The officers of the company are: L. L. Lawrence, President; William Baxter, Vice-President, and Thaddeus Wright, Secretary and Treasurer. The establishment is the second in size and in importance of all the industries of the city.

Wayne Creamery was established May 1, 1881, by G. C. Stevens for the Indiana Farmer Company. It was conducted in the interest of this company until the summer of 1882, when it was purchased by Henry T. Burns, J. J. Russell and G. C. Stevens. In August, 1883, it passed into the hands of John G. Chandler, W. A. Howard, G. C. Stevens and C. E. Shute, by whom the business is now carried on. The creamery gives employment to twenty-five men, eighteen or twenty of whom run wagons in the country, where cream is purchased. The capacity of the business is 1,000 pounds of butter daily. The proprietors have recently added to their business a wholesale house, wherethey sell foreign and domestic fruits and vegetables. The business of the company in 1883 amounted to $75,000.

Whitewater Tannery.—This establishment, one of the oldest in the State, is the outgrowth of the two primitive tanneries started by John Smith and Robert Morrisson in 1818. Morrisson's tannery was on the site now occupied by the Robinson Machine Works, and Smith's was on the present location of the Whitewater Tannery. About 1826 Daniel P. Wiggins became Morrisson's partner, the style of the firm being Morrisson & Wiggins. They continued business until 1845, when the Morrisson tannery was abandoned. Meantime the Smith tannery had been operated by various parties. About 1843 D. P. Wiggins became a partner of Caleb R. Williams in the saddlery and harness-making business, of which he became sole proprietor in 1846. At the latter date, with his sons, Mr. Wiggins purchased the old Smith tannery, which was operated for several years in the firm name of D. P. Wiggins & Sons, who also continued the saddlery and harness business. Mr. Wiggins soon retired to his farm, south of the city. About 1858 his sons became the owners of both the tannery and the harness shop, which they continued to manage jointly under the name of Wiggins & Co. until 1872. Stephen R. Wiggins & Son then took the tannery, and Charles O. Wiggins & Sons the harness department.

The old Smith tannery was a small affair, but its capacity was increased from time to time, and the establishment has greatly extended its facilities under the present owners. The works occupy about one acre of ground, and are supplied with all modern improvements. They have 108 vats, and have a capacity for tanning 200 hides per week. The annual product aggregates nearly $100,000. About twenty-five men are employed.

Zeller & Co.'s Cracker Factory.—This somewhat famous factory started in a small way about 1860. Mark Lewis and Stephen Wilson started the enterprise, which continued with various changes of owners until 1866, when it was purchased by J. S. & D. K. Zeller. They enlarged its capacity and removed from North Ninth street to 915, 917, 919 and 921 Main street, where the brothers erected a building of which they took possession in August, 1869. At this place and time they had arranged for a capacity of fifteen barrels of flour per day. On Jan. 1, 1872, they took in as partner Benj. F. Crawford, J. S. Zeller retiring from the firm, and changed the firm's name to Zeller & Co., J. G. Zeller, D. K. Zeller and B. F. Crawford constituting the firm. In 1874 they started a branch factory at Mansfield, Ohio. Seven years later they dissolved partnership, Mr. Crawford taking the Mansfield business except a portion sold to a Mr. Taylor, and the Messrs. Zeller concentrating their interest in Richmond. This was in October, 1881. They built a fine brick addition, three stories high and 50 x 52 feet in size, and enlarged their works to forty barrels per day, and then still further to seventy barrels of flour every twenty-four hours. This is now one of the largest factories of the kind in the State. A business of $130,000 per annum has been built up from a very small beginning.

Richmond Rose Nursery.—This nursery is under the proprietorship and care of Hill & Co., who have erected for their business two glass-houses 18 x 100 feet, and four similar houses 10 x 100 feet in size. It is, as its name indicates, a rose nursery, there being nearly 300 varieties of this beautiful plant, and some of the finest of European roses among their number. It is in every respect a tribute to the taste, skill and culture of its proprietors. Perhaps the citizens of no city in the West have a more lovely or entertaining sight than those of Richmond, when this magnificent rose garden is in bloom and its fragrance fills the air. To this temple of floral beauty all visitors are taken, as being among the most beautiful sights which environs one of the handsomest cities in the West.

BANKS.

Richmond National Bank.—This is one of the oldest banking institutions in the State, being the outgrowth of the State Bank of Indiana, which was established in 1834 with Achilles Williams as President; Elijah Coffin, Cashier; and Charles F. Coffin, Teller. The bank was chartered for twenty-one years, and the cashier and teller held their respective offices during that time. The presidency was held from 1836 until the expiration of the charter by Albert C. Blanchard.

In 1855 the bank was reorganized as a branch bank of the State of Indiana, with A. C. Blanchard, President, and C. F. Coffin, Cashier. This bank continued business until 1865 and was then reorganized as the Richmond National Bank, with a capital stock of $230,000. At this time Charles F. Coffin was elected President, and has held the office ever since. Albert H. Blanchard was chosen Cashier. The first Directors were: C. F. Coffin, A. H. Blanchard, Stephen R. Wiggins, James L. Morrisson and James W. Smith. In 1873 Charles H. Coffin was elected Cashier, which position he still holds. He is also Vice-President. The present Directors are: C. F. Coffin, S. R. Wiggins, David J. Hoerner, Elwood Patterson and Chas. H. Coffin. The present capital is $250,000, with $35,000 surplus fund. The bank transacts a large business. It was among the last banks in the country to suspend specie payments and among the first to resume them. The bank has always taken great pride in assisting and fostering the manufacturing interests of the city. The building occupied by this bank is located at the northeast corner of Fifth and Main streets. It was erected in 1856, is of brick, with iron and stone front, three stories high, with a frontage of thirty-three feet, and is well adapted to the banking business. The office is spacious and well arranged.

First National Bank.—The First National Bank of Richmond was organized and commenced business under the authority of the controller of the currency July 13, 1863. Its charter, which James E. and Mark E. Reeves were instrumental in securing, extended nineteen years. The capital stock was $200,000. The first officers were James E. Reeves, President; Edward W. Yarrington, Cashier; Directors: James E. Reeves, Lewis Burk, Andrew F. Scott, John W. Grubbs, John H. Moormann, Joshua Holland, Isaac P. Evans, James Van Uxem, Jr., and William S. Reid. This was the second national bank to commence business in the State and the seventeenth in the United States. From the first to the present time it has ranked among the leading financial institutions of Indiana. The present capital is $200,000, with a surplus fund of $100,000. Its average annual deposits exceed $500,000. In 1873 the present banking-house on the corner of Main and Seventh streets was erected. It is a spacious and well-arranged business building and is a credit to its originators. The building is of brick, three stories high, with a stone front and Mansard roof. The present officers of the bank are as follows: James E. Reeves, President; C. W. Ferguson, Vice-President; J. F. Reeves, Cashier; Directors: J. Van Uxem, D. B. Crawford, J. W. Grubbs, J. H. Moormann, C. W. Ferguson, A. M. Reeves, J. F. Reeves and J. E. Reeves.

Second National Bank.—This institution was organized March 2, 1872, with a capital stock of $200,000. This amount was reduced Jan. 1, 1881, to $150,000, which is the present capital. The surplus fund is now $50,000. Andrew F. Scott was elected President, and John B. Dougan, Cashier; both still continue in office. The original Directors were: Jacob B. Julian, Oliver T. Jones, James Forkner, Jesse Cates, Andrew F. Scott, William G. Scott, John M. Gaar, Joseph Jackson and C. C. Beeler. A number of changes have since taken place. The present Directors are: William G. Scott, Abram Gaar, A. F. Scott, John M. Gaar, Thomas W. Roberts, Ellis Thomas, Howell Graves, Robert Cox and J. B. Dougan. The Second National Bank building, northwest corner of Eighth and Main streets, was erected by A. F. Scott in 1862, and bought by the bank in 1872. Soon after the organization of the bank, Gaar, Scott & Co. bought out a number of the stockholders from the western part of the county, and have since held a controlling interest. The bank is one of the substantial institutions of the city, and has had a successful career from the beginning.

The Farmers' Bank of Richmond, a private banking institution established by Stanley, Esteb & Co., began business in February, 1877, and continued until the fall of 1883, when it suspended with large losses to stockholders.

The Provident Life Association of Richmond was organized Dec. 31, 1879, and was the first life-insurance company ever formed in the city. The incorporators were: Isaac P. Evans, D. W. Marmon, Wm. B. Hadley, Jesse W. Brooks, J. F. Reeves, James M. Starr, J. R. Preston, Eli Stubbs, Dr. J. R. Weist, and Samuel Bellis. On the 1st of November, 1883, the association became incorporated with the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society of New York City.

WERNLE ORPHANS' HOME.

This beautiful retreat for those who have been left orphans and homeless is situated about two miles southeast of Richmond. The building itself was originally erected as an institution of learning by the Friends' society, but was subsequently disposed of, and for a short time used as a Health Reform School. This not being a success, the buildings and grounds were neglected and the property involved by mortgage. In 1877 the Joint Synod of Ohio elected a Board of Trustees, consisting of Revs. L. O. Loewenstein,——. Trebel, H. Wickemeyer, E. Cronmet, F. H. Meiser, and Messrs. John Smith, of Hamilton, Ohio, Henry Cutter and John Spellman, to secure a location for an orphan home. This property attracted their attention, and it was purchased in 1879. The appointment of the Rev. Schuh, of Detroit, Mich., as soliciting agent in behalf of this great work of charity added materially to securing it by purchase. Among those who contributed to this worthy object was the Rev. Wernle, of Galion, Ohio, in whose honor the institution was named, the reverend gentlemen contributing $500. This purchase was for the building and ten acres of ground, but since then twenty acres more have been added, making thirty, and the building, originally 108 x 58 feet in size, has been added to by a wing of 25 x 40 feet and two stories high, the same as the main building, with all the necessary out-buildings. The main building and wing are of brick, of pleasant outline and substantial work.

The Home was placed under the charge of the Rev. John Dingelday Feb. 28, 1879, and he was duly installed March 4, 1879. The Home was dedicated to its great work on the same day.

This institution is now (Jan. 1, 1884) the home of ninety-seven inmates, while at times over 100 have received its fostering care at a time.

There is employed in the building one regular teacher, the housefather also assisting, who also holds religious service every Sabbath evening. The institution has prospered, and deserves the recognition of a charitable and Christian people.

Space will not allow a full return of all the years, but enough is here given to show the scope of its duties and the great and good results of this important charitable institution. The report of the past year, 1883, is annexed:

The number of inmates at the commencement of the year was: adults, fifteen; children, seven; admitted as members of the family, adults, thirty; children, sixteen; transient adults, ninety-six; children, fifteen; homes procured for adults, twenty-seven; children, thirteen; sent to friends, adults, twenty-six; children, eleven; sent to insane asylum, one; left without permission, three; died, one child; number of prisoners cared for fifty-three; number in the Home at present, adults, eight; children, six; prisoners, one; total cared for, 236.

The Board of Managers for 1883 is as follows: Martha Valentine, Agnes Gaar, Margaret Dennis, Mary F. Thomas, Libbie Candler, Sarah A. Iliff Davis, all of Richmond, Ind., and Abbie Dudley, Washington, D.C.; Anna Votaw, Chester; Lizzie Hill, Lavina Pierson, Rebecca Moorman, Princella Thomas, Fountain City; Narcissa Cox, Elizabeth Commons, Cox's Mills; Abbie Hill, Anna N. Harn, Arba.

The officers of the Board are: President, Sarah A. Iliff Davis; Vice-Presidents, Anna Votaw, Lizzie Hill, Narcissa Cox; Secretary, Margaret Dennis; Physician, Mary F. Thomas; Matron, Susan Hampton.

The Corporate Committee: Mary Henley, Carthage; Priscilla Parker, Walnut Ridge; Mary A. Gilbert, Louisville; E. Bogne, Fairmonnt, and Sarah Unthank, Chester.

The Trustees are: William L. John, D. K. Zeller, Martha Valentine, Agnes Gaar and William Hill.

ORPHANS' HOME.

The Orphans' Home, Earlham Place, was inaugurated from a fund of $10,000, known as the "Morrisson Relief Fund." The work began in the year 1859, at 200 South Fifth street. The building used belonged to the city, and was given rent free as long as it was used, some twenty years. The interest of the money only was expended, that being the condition by which the fund was donated.

An organization was formed under the above name when the fund could be utilized with the following officers, viz.: Mrs. Lydia C. Morrisson, President; Mrs. Caroline M. Reeves, Vice-President; Mrs. Lizzie E. Barnes, Secretary, and Mrs. Sarah W. Webb, Treasurer.

The Home was removed to Earlham Place in 1881, into a building purchased by the county commissioners at a cost of $6,000, for the special use of the Home, which they still occupy free of charge. The county commissioners also, in addition to the use of the property, donate each year the sum of $800 toward defraying its expenses. This Home takes all the children from the county poor-house that are healthy and in such condition that will admit of educating and training for the active duties of life. The object of this institution is to educate, train and give a good home to children until a suitable one can be found for them, taking them at any age under fourteen years.

There is employed in this Home a matron, an assistant matron and one kitchen girl, all the rest of the work being done by ladies who are interested in caring for helpless children. Several ladies have for years been giving one day each week to the special care of those children, aiding in the work for the clothing and many other attentions necessary to their well being. This work began with but three or four children, but for several years it has had an average of eighteen, and at the present time has twenty-nine children as inmates of the Home.

HOME FOR FRIENDLESS WOMEN.

In the year 1868 a few Christian women, seeing the great necessity of some strong effort being made to protect and redeem the homeless, friendless and fallen women of this city, met for the purpose of devising some means by which this great work could be accomplished. An organization was effected and the following officers appointed: President, Mrs Rhoda Coffin ; Vice-President, Mrs. Iliff Davis ; Secretary, Mrs. Rachel Mendenhall, and Treasurer, Mrs. Mary Jackson. A membership fee was charged which realized $150 for the Home and the donations were enough to care and support a few of those that needed such care. At first the inmates were boarded, but this proving unsatisfactory a house was rented and furnished, the rent being paid by the city as its donation to the Home. The work proving of inestimable value, Chas. T. Price urged the erection of a suitable building for the purpose and donated $500 and his services to superintending the erection, which was accepted, and a spacious Home was built at a cost of $9,000. In 1869 the Home was selected as a Woman's prison, and female prisoners were taken from the common jail and placed here. The past year, 1883, a prison building was added at a cost of $1,000, thus making a Reformatory Institute and Woman's Prison, the first of the kind in the State of Indiana, antedating the State institution some two years, and also being the first of the kind in the country.

Mrs. Coffin remained President of the institution for three and a half years, when, her health failing, she was compelled to resign. Mrs. Iliff Davis was elected to the office, which she has most ably filled to the present time. The first nine years the Home took care of 757 adults and 296 children, and out of this number homes were provided for 243 adults and eighty-four children—a work of Christian charity that redounds not to the credit of the Home, but to the city of Richmond.

Y. M. C. ASSOCIATION.

This association came into existence April 23, 1867, and was conducted under a constitution and by-laws. Its first officers were: President, Chas. F. Coffin ; Secretary, Almon Sampson. This continued until 1875, and much good resulted from its labors, but it was then allowed to droop and die. Nov. 26, 1876, it was again resuscitated, with more flattering prospects, and Edward Bellis was chosen President; Clayton B. Hunt, Secretary and T. G. Thompson, Chairman of the Devotional Committee.. An office, under this management, was created called a General Secretary, who was the superintendent, in reality, of the association and gave his time to its progress. A. B. Charpie acted in this capacity for a year and then resigned the work to accept a ministerial call. Sept. 26, 1879, H. B. Hudson was appointed General Secretary to succeed Mr. Charpie, but resigned his trust Nov. 17 following, and A. M. Dawson was asked to take the vacant place which he accepted, but only for a limited time, closing his labors as Secretary Feb. 1, 1881. C. A. Boyle received the appointment Feb. 9, 1881, and resigned the following September, from which date, Sept. 26, 1881, until Sept. 8, 1882, the office of General Secretary was allowed to remain vacant. During this time T. G. Thompson superintended the work, and since Sept. 8, as above, has held the office of General Secretary, devoting his time to its duties.

The good results which had followed from the reorganization of the association encouraged those engaged, and it was decided to form an incorporated association and provide a building fund for the erection of a suitable building to carry on their labor of love. The association was therefore duly incorporated under the laws of the State, and the following Trustees elected: D. K. Zeller, Timothy Nicholson, Abram Gaar, E. E. Beetle and H. H. Meerhoff.

A building fund was started in May, and now has a nucleus of $276.

The annual session was held Dec. 17, 1883, when the following Board of Managers was chosen: Chas. A. Francisco, Geo. C. Williams, one year; Edward Bellis, William J. Hiatt, two years; L. H. Bunyan, three years; T. G. Thompson, General Secretary; Mr. Ed. Bellis was chosen President; Geo. C. Williams, Vice-President; C. A. Francisco, Secretary and Treasurer.

The Treasurer then made the following report:

EARLHAM COLLEGE.

This institution is located about one mile west of the city of Richmond, and is owned and controlled by the society of Friends. Its origin and history are briefly as follows: In the year 1821 the various meetings of Friends in Indiana and Western Ohio, which had hitherto been subordinate parts of Baltimore and Ohio Yearly Meetings, were organized into what was subsequently known as Indiana Yearly Meeting. In 1830 a committee appointed by that body to consider the subject of education, recommended to the subordinate meetings the establishment of schools to be under the care of committees appointed by said meetings. These schools were to be taught by members of the church, and were to be distinguished from the public schools chiefly by the care bestowed upon the moral and religious training of the pupils, which was, of course, to be in harmony with the doctrinal views entertained by the church.

The advice of the committee resulted in a system of schools maintained and conducted by Friends, and reporting annually through their supervisory committees to the Yearly Meeting. In 1834 seventy of these schools were reported; in 1838, 100; and in 1855 the maximum number, 129.

As early, however, as 1832 the need of a higher school was urged in the Yearly Meeting, partly (perhaps chiefly) that the lower schools might be furnished with properly qualified teachers. A committee was appointed to receive subscriptions for the new enterprise. At that time there were few Friends in the West who possessed any considerable means. Voluntary contributions came in very slowly, and it was not until five years had passed that a committee was authorized to proceed with the work of erecting buildings. Various causes, among which was the financial crisis of 1837, still conspired to disappoint the friends of the movement; and nearly ten years more had elapsed before the school was opened under Cornelius Douglass, its first Superintendent, and Lewis A. Estes and Huldah C. Hoag, its first teachers. The institution was known as Friends Boarding School.

The report to the Yearly Meeting in 1850 contains the following paragraph :

“The examination of the scholars shows that their instruction has been thorough; and from the course of instruction now, we are gratified in believing that the necessity is taken away for our young people to resort to institutions out of the pale of our society for a more thorough or extended education.”

The studies which, according to the same report, had been actually pursued during the year embraced about two-thirds of all now included in the preparatory course, and one-fourth of all in the collegiate course. There had been an average of “fifty-three pupils, male and female.” The school year consisted of two sessions of twenty-three weeks each. The charge for board and tuition per session was from $30 to $35.

The influence of the school soon began to be felt in all the neighborhoods of Friends in the West. The thirst for higher knowledge became more general; and a still more extended and systematic course of study was adopted. In 1859 the institution was empowered to confer degrees upon its graduates, and its name was changed to EARLHAM COLLEGE.

In 1867 "the duties devolving upon the superintendent" were "divided into those of president and treasurer." Since that time there has been, until recently, no essential change in the organization of the institution, though numerous improvements have taken place in the courses of study, the appliances for instruction, and the provisions for the comfort and convenience of the students.

In the general control and management of the institution, however, a very important change has taken place. The Yearly Meeting which originated the work has become two large bodies, one still known as Indiana Yearly Meeting, and held at Richmond; the other, Western Yearly Meeting, held at Plainfield, Ind. The college property is now held and its affairs controlled by a Board of Trustees appointed by the two bodies, each body electing twelve. The president of the faculty is an ex-officio member. This change was effected in 1881. The wisdom of placing the entire control in the hands of a small number of carefully selected men and women has been clearly demonstrated by the rapidity and the intelligence with which various improvements have been planned and executed since the new board entered upon the discharge of its duties.

The college buildings at present will comfortably accommodate 140 students as boarders, besides a considerable number of day students. Ample provision is made for heat and light, for the cleanliness of the apartments, and for the care of the sick.

The grounds are ample, embracing extensive play-grounds, a beautiful lawn, groves, and long walks shaded with various kinds of trees. The entire enclosure known as the "college grounds" contains 120 acres.

The appliances for instruction are, in some departments, quite superior. The cabinet contains many thousand excellent specimens, illustrating the various natural sciences, and is regarded as one of the finest collections in the Mississippi Valley. The observatory, situated near the main building, contains an equatorial telescope with an object glass of six and one-fourth inches aperture, and a focal length of eight feet; a transit instrument of five feet focus, and an astronomical clock.

The college is also in possession of excellent surveying instruments, a good assortment of philosophical apparatus, and a convenient chemical laboratory with the necessary appliances for qualitative analysis.

The libraries contain upward of 5,000 volumes, among which are many valuable reference books. The reading-room is furnished with the best of magazines, reviews, religious periodicals and newspapers. To these and to the reference libraries students have daily access.

The courses of study, both scientific and classical, are quite comprehensive, and will compare very favorably with those of any other college in the State; and the instruction has usually been in the hands of professors and teachers well qualified for their positions.

The supervision of the work has devolved upon men of excellent ability. Barnabas C. Hobbs, LL.D. having been its first President. For about fifteen years the duties of that position have devolved upon Joseph Moore, LL.D., who has, by his extensive attainments in science, his unusual ability in imparting knowledge, and the pure and inspiring influence of his character and teachings, made himself honored and beloved by all who know him. The cabinet is chiefly the result of his untiring labors, its corals—said to surpass in variety and beauty any other collection in the West—having been nearly all obtained by him on the Sandwich Islands. President Moore, in the summer of 1883, resigned on account of ill health, but was at once elected Professor of Natural Science.

Of the character of the work at Earlham there could be no better proof than the reputation which its older graduates enjoy as intelligent, capable, Christian citizens. Many of them hold positions of honor.

The present condition of the college is highly satisfactory, and the prospect for the future is very encouraging. At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees, Prof. J. J. Mills was chosen President of the college. He will enter upon his duties at the beginning of the next college year (September, 1884).

Allen Jay is the efficient Treasurer and Business Manager.

Plans are on foot for the erection of a new college building. A plan is also well nigh completed for the union of the Friends' academies and the college in an efficient educational system.

A COMMERCIAL COLLEGE

was first established in Richmond in 1860 by Wm. Purdy, who, after two years of labor, disposed of his work to Messrs. Hollingsworth & Gentry. In 1866 Mr. Hollingsworth became sole proprietor. He carried on the business successfully and the college became, under his thorough management, a well-known institution for receiving a practical education. At the death of Mr. Hollingsworth, B. W. Barrows succeeded to the business, and in 1876 the latter disposed of it to Jno. K. Beck. The latter gentleman was eminently successful as a business educator, and the attendance increased until 1882 when it became necessary to secure more permanent help and he associated with him Mr. F. C. Fulgham. Besides a full commercial education, a department of telegraphic instructions was added in 1881 with lines, batteries and all the practical details of the business. The college is now in a prosperous condition, and in appliances and thorough course of studies ranks among the best institutions of the kind in the West, and stands noted among the business and progressive interests of the city.

ODD FELLOWS.

In the city of Richmond there are four lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, numbered respectively 41, 199, 212 and 254.

Whitewater Lodge, No. 41, I. O. O. F., of Richmond was instituted May 21, 1847, by Special Deputy George Page Chapman, of Indianapolis.

The names of the charter members were: Edwin Irwin, W. L. Farquhar, William P. Wilson, Sedate Bickmore and Thomas Vickers—five in all.

Officers: W. P. Wilson, N. G.; Sedate Bickmore, V. G.; Edwin Irwin, R. S.; Thomas Vickers, Treasurer.

In 1858 No. 41 instructed her Board of Trustees to purchase a corner lot, then a little too far east to be of value for business, but now in the very heart of the city. This lot was held by No. 41, until December, 1867, when it was sold to the Board of Trustees of the Odd Fellows' Hall Building Association for 400 shares of capital stock of said association; value of each share, $25. Under the management of this Board of Trustees, with a capital stock of $32,000, a good substantial three-story building was erected. In the third story of this building the lodge hall, Encampment hall, and suitable ante-rooms are located, giving to the order in this city pleasant rooms that are commodious enough for their present and future use. The lodge hall and ante-rooms were fitted up in good taste and comfort by the four lodges jointly, under the supervision and management of a union Board of Trustees. The Encampment hall was furnished and thoroughly fitted up by the Oriental Encampment, No. 28, under the direction of a special committee appointed for that purpose, who discharged their duty so well that entire satisfaction was the pleasant result of their labor. This lodge has sixty-four Past Grands and 195 contributing members, and its resources amount to $25,947.90.

Woodward Lodge, No. 212, I. O. O. F., at Richmond, was instituted Aug. 30, 1859, by D. D. G. M. E. A. Jones. The charter members were: A. J. Shinn, A. W. Mendenhall, O. H. P. Little, R. Doble, O. H. Shearon, S. Sinex, D. P. Grave, W. P. Wilcoxon, E. C. Pyle, John Harrington, T. J. Newby, H. R. Leeds, W. W. Foulke, W. W. Hewitt and Geo. Hoover. First officers: E. C. Pyle, N. G.; Wm. W. There were twenty-two of them in all; a part of the members of Stidham Lodge, No. 261, were from Woodward, as also all the charter members of Rinehart Lodge, and nearly all of Webster Lodge.

There are but few, if any, lodges in the jurisdiction of Indiana that have been drawn on so heavily, and yet but few can make a better showing at present. The year ending December, 1874, this lodge numbered 161 contributing members, with $7,258.27 as resources of the lodge.

Woodward was the first lodge in the State that expelled a member for selling intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage. This lodge has Past Grands, 44; contributing members, 151; resources $6,800. The present officers are: George W. Reynolds, N. G.; John F. Rowlett, V. G.; James A. Reed, Sec.; E. E. #### MASONIC.

Webb Lodge, No. 24, F. & A. M.—From the oldest record in possession of this lodge it is gathered that on the 7th of October, 1823, the Grand Lodge of Indiana granted a charter to its "trusty and beloved brethren," William Pugh, W. M.; James R. Mendenhall, S. W., and William Vaughan, J. W., who, with other brethren, were authorized to "hold a just and true lodge of F. & A. M. in the town of Centreville, Ind." Such was the beginning of Masonry in Wayne County. The charter, dated at Madison, was signed by John Sheets, G. M.; Jonathan Jennings, G. S. W.; Thomas Posey, G. J. W.; and Walter C. Keen, G. Sec. The "regular communications " and "called meetings " were held at Centreville, beginning on Nov. 7, 1823. " Young's History " mentions the names of other first officers, as follows: John Suffrins, Treas.; John C. Kibbey, Sec.; Samuel Evans, S. D.; and William M. Doughty, J. D.; and further states that "the lodge met alternately at Centreville and Richmond until 1833, when a charter was granted to Samuel Fleming, John Finley and William S. Addleman, to be held at Richmond." The old record shows that meetings were held at Centreville until 1825, and on the 31st of December of that year the first meeting was held in Richmond, in a room rented for six months of John C. Kibbey. At that time it was voted that "all members living west of the old boundary line be exempt from the payment of dues for six months." The dues required by the lodge were " 25 cents per month, and 25 cents for each festival." The records show that every meeting was opened on the E. A. degree, and that all business relating to the good of the order was done in that degree, save balloting for second and third degrees. The applicants were "elected, admitted within the lodge, and initiated in ancient form." The minutes invariably show that the lodge was "closed in peace and harmony, and adjourned to the next regular communication."

July 22, 1826, the lodge adjourned to Centreville for the ensuing six months. The records show that this system of alternately meeting six months in each of the two towns was kept up until January, 1828, when the lodge adjourned to Richmond, where it continued to hold regular meetings until July 23, 1831, and here the record abruptly ends.

The organizing members of Webb Lodge were: Bartholomew McCleary, John Suffrins, Philip Mason, John C. Kibbey, Jacob Vandergriff, Loring A. Waldo, William Doughty, J. W. ## MINERAL CABINET.

CONTRIBUTED.

The cabinet of Mrs. Mary P. Haines is worthy of mention embracing many thousands of specimens in the several departments of natural history, minerals, fossils, shells, birds, and botanical specimens; also many relics of Mound-Builders, and other objects of interest from different parts of the world. Her collection has been pronounced by persons competent to judge, one of the finest and most extensive private collections in the State.

The fossils of the Paleozoic rocks are well represented from the earliest recognized remains of organic life—the Eozoon Canadense of the Archaean period—to the Upper Coal Measures. The Lower and Upper Silurian, Devonian, Sub-Carb. and Carboniferous formations being the most numerous represented. There are also many species from the later epochs, especially the Cretaceous and Tertiary, both of this and foreign countries, in all, some 1,500 species of fossils. The Conchological department contains some 1,500 species, including land and fresh-water shells from this and foreign countries, and marine shells from the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian and Southern oceans, among them some very unique and rare specimens.

The minerals are many of them beautiful and valuable, and number over 1,000 specimens. Two cases of birds contain fifty specimens. Relics of Mound-Builders, various flint implements, beads, etc., and other Archeological specimens and objects of interest from foreign countries. In botany, the Cryptogams are largely represented by foreign, as well as native species: Musci, 500 species. Filices, over 400 species. Marine Algae, over 250 species, Lichens, over 250 species, and about 100 species of Hepaticae.

Of Phanerogams, or flowering plants, the collection contains some 500 species.

MORRISON LIBRARY.

In the intellectual and moral world, as in nature, silent influences and forces are often the most powerful. "The great means of self-education is through books—through much reading of books." Hence the history of a city, township, county or State would be sadly incomplete if it failed to give an account of its libraries.

ROBERT MORRISON, the founder of the library which bears his name, was born in Orange, now Allamance, County, N. C., on the 19th day of October, 1786, and removed to the present locality of the city of Richmond in the spring of 1810, at which time the present site of the city was an almost unbroken wilderness. From that time his residence remained unchanged, and he was ever a prominent and active participant in the enterprises which have converted a mere wild into a city of 20,000 inhabitants. His energy, integrity, and devotion to business resulted in the accumulation of a handsome fortune. The poor of our city will bear grateful testimony to his liberality and kindness of heart. But these gifts to the needy, although numerous and liberal, did not satisfy his benevolence; and believing that a public library would be more conducive to the public good than any other expenditure of the same amount of means, he purchased lot 35, in that part of the city laid out by Jeremiah Cox, corner of Broadway and Marion streets, and erected a library building thereon. The building contains, in addition to the library-room, a dwelling for the librarian, and an office for the township trustee, and the library committee.

The library-room is arranged and fitted up in the most approved modern style. The cost of the lot and improvements was $12,500.

He then placed in the hands of a committee, consisting of Jesse P. Siddall, Jesse S. Wilson, John Nicholson, Timothy Nicholson and Dr. O. P. Baer, the sum of $5,000, which they were to appropriate in purchasing books, to be placed in the building erected by him. He had previously invested $500 in books, which are now in the library. The total donation for lot, improvements and books, amounts to $18,000, all of which he devised to "Wayne Township, of Wayne Co., Ind.," in trust, for the benefit of the inhabitants of said township forever. The township library is placed in the same room, and will form a part of "the Morrisson Library."

The library is placed under the control of a library committee, consisting of four persons; which committee is to adopt the by-laws, rules and regulations, appoint the librarian, purchase books, and have the general supervision of the library and buildings. The committee consists of James W. Smith, as Township Trustee, and Jesse P. Siddall, Lydia J. Morrisson and Timothy Nicholson. The Township Trustee shall always constitute one of the committee. Vacancies in the committee are to be filled as follows: The first vacancy, by the township trustee; and the next two vacancies by the "common council" of the city of Richmond. Afterward, whenever a vacancy occurs, it is to be filled by the trustee or council, whichever made the prior appointment then vacant, so that two of said committee will always have their appointment from the council, and one from the township trustee. Any member of the committee may be removed by the concurrent action of the trustee and a majority of the council.

In case the trustee or council, or either of them, at any time fail, neglect or refuse to perform the duties assigned them, then the judge of the Wayne Circuit Court, or of any other court of record in said county, is to perform the duties assigned to the defaulting party or parties. Said real estate and books being devised for the use of the inhabitants of said township forever, the judge aforesaid is empowered to do whatever may be necessary to enforce its appropriation to the uses specified.

Thus, by the munificence of one of its citizens, the township is now the owner of a permanent public library, the use of which is free to all of its inhabitants.

A life-sized portrait painting of the donor hangs on the western wall of the library room. This was purchased by contributions from our citizens.

The library, in July, 1864, opened with about 6,000 volumes of books, which number has been increased to more than 12,000.

The "Manual Labor and Working Men's Institute," of this city, influenced solely by a generous desire to promote the public good, removed their valuable library to the same building, and it forms a part of the Morrisson Library.

The library committee adopted the following Rules and Regulations for the government of the library:

RULES.

1. The officers of the Morrisson Library shall be a president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary and librarian, all of whom, except the librarian, shall be members of the library committee.

2. The library shall be open daily, except on Sundays, Christmas, New Year, Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, from 9 to 12, and from 1 to 5 o'clock. It shall also be open on Saturday evening from 6 to 8 o'clock, specially for mechanics and business men.

3. The librarian shall keep a catalogue of the books, properly number and arrange the same; keep the room and books in good order; an entry of books taken from the library and their return, and the name and residence of the persons taking the same; note down fines and penalties for the injury, destruction or overkeeping of books; see that the rules governing the library are enforced; collect all fines and penalties; carefully examine returned books, and note down any injury to or defacement thereof; have the exclusive right to take books from the shelves, and replace them when returned; keep the cases locked and permit no one to handle books on the shelves; label the books; place on each book the number of the case to which it belongs, and the number of the shelf and the number of the book on the shelf; at each monthly meeting of the committee report in writing all violations of these rules, also all volumes needing repairs, or unfit for use; record the names of donors of books and a list of the books donated by each person, which donation shall be acknowledged by the committee through the city papers; make an annual report of the condition of the library to the committee at their August meeting.

4. If any person lose, deface or injure a book, or set of books, he shall make compensation therefor to the librarian, and if such book be one of a set, he shall either replace the set or pay the full value thereof, and may then receive the remaining volumes as his property.

5. Writing or marking in a book, or turning down any portion of a leaf, is prohibited, and the librarian shall assess a fine therefor.

6. Heads of families and their children under eighteen years of age are entitled to not more than four volumes at the same time, and single persons to one, to be retained twenty-one days; and a fine of five cents per week or fraction of a week, for each volume, shall be paid for detention longer than the time allowed.

7. No person shall be permitted to take a book from the library so long as any fine assessed against him remains unpaid.

8. Parents or guardians sending small children to the library must send an order with them to ensure a book.

9. Such books as may be designated by the library committee shall not be taken from the library-room, but be kept as works of reference, and consulted there only, except by permission of the library committee.

10. No smoking or chewing will be allowed in the library-room.

11. Books detained one week longer than allowed shall be sent for by the librarian, and the expense incurred be assessed against the person guilty of such detention.

12. Juvenile books will not be exchanged until they have been kept three days.

13. Books must be selected from the catalogue, and the selection should be made before coming to the library; and the case, shelf, number and name of the book written down and furnished to the librarian, just as they are printed in the catalogue.

14. Catalogues will be furnished by the librarian for 50 cents each.

15. Persons taking books from the library shall not loan them to others.

16. Any person who repeatedly and willfully violates the rules of the library will be excluded from its use.

17. No book taken out shall be renewed until the expiration of one week from the date of its return.

18. Persons between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one years, and anyone under eighteen whose parents are non-residents, shall be entitled to a book upon furnishing the secretary with a satisfactory written guarantee for compliance with the rules.

19. No person shall be entitled to the use of the library who is not a resident of the township.

In 1876 a complete catalogue of all the books in the library was published. This catalogue is arranged on the "Dictionary plan." Each book is entered under the author, subject and title, and the whole arranged in one alphabetical series, containing over 300 octavo pages. Three supplementary catalogues of "additions" have also been published and distributed gratuitously to the patrons of the library.

The library was opened in July, 1864, with Jesse H. Brown for Librarian. A few weeks after the opening he was appointed Superintendent of the Richmond City schools, and he resigned his position as Librarian. Mrs. Sarah A. Wrigley was then chosen Librarian, an office which she has ever since filled with great satisfaction and unusual efficiency.

For the first sixteen years, viz., from 1864 to 1880, the only income available for the purchase of new books was that arising from the rent paid by the Librarian for her apartments, and the fines collected for violations of the library rules; and during this period the average number per annum of new volumes purchased was only 200.

The State Legislature in 1879 passed an act directing the township trustees to levy a small tax for the purchase of books, and for the last four years an average of 600 volumes per annum have been added to the library.

In 1871 there were only 1,475 names on the Register. Last year the list of readers numbered 4,688, to whom were issued 53,339 books.

The library-room is literally filled with books, and the committee will soon be compelled to enlarge the building to secure room for future purchases.

The library has been very useful in the education of the present generation, and its increasing influence will do far more in the future, both for the general public and for the public schools of the township.

In the Librarian's report for 1881 she says: "Our readers exhibit unabated interest. Every year shows a more thorough appreciation of library privileges. Books of reference are coming into general use, and the school children are learning to consult histories and biographies in connection with their studies. Lives of prominent men, stories founded on American history and late books of travels have to some extent taken the place of sensational stories." And in her report for 1883 is this statement: "Reading clubs and societies for intellectual improvement are rapidly increasing in the township, and they frequently exhaust our collection of books on a given subject." Thus has Morrisson Library increased in usefulness and popularity as a model institution, and we trust its committee and its patrons will heartily unite in measures which shall render its growth and value in the future far greater than in the past.

LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Richmond having secured the location of the State Lunatic Asylum, which is to be commenced the present year, 1884, the following description from a Richmond paper will not be out of place here:

The commission to locate and construct the new insane asylum adopted the cottage plan for the Richmond institution, and it will be arranged for 400 patients. The main building will have a frontage of 500 feet and will be two stories high, with an attic. The center will be an open court with an administration building in front, and a cooking, baking, etc., department in the rear on the ground floor, and the chapel or amusement hall above. The wings will be for patients under observation when first admitted, one for men and the other for women. Each wing will have two wards and each ward will accommodate twenty-three patients. As soon as classified the patients will be sent to one of the cottages, of which there are to be sixteen, with a capacity of about twenty inmates each. These cottages are to be scattered over the ground in the rear of the main building, conforming to an irregular indented circle about 1,000 feet in diameter, and so situated as to be under easy observation. No two of these cottages will have the same architectural appearance and each will be planned to care for a particular class or grade of patients .

The commission has been animated by a desire to give the cottage system such an opportunity to verify its claim to superiority as it has not had anywhere in the world before. At other places cottages have not entertained all classes of the insane, but the Richmond asylum is to have the honor of demonstrating whether the plan is competent to successfully manage all classes and grades of unsound minds, as the institution will be required to receive and take care of all applicants.

THE HISTORY OF METHODISM.

Methodism was introduced to the city of Richmond, Ind., under the preaching of Rev. Russell Bigelow, in the year 1822. It was difficult to obtain a house in which to hold a Methodist meeting, but at length permission was granted to hold such services in a small school-house. There Mr. Bigelow preached his first sermon, and organized a class of seven members. Geo. Smith was appointed leader. It was not long until the school-house was taken from them. Preaching and class-meetings were then removed to a small room occupied by Mrs. Pearson as a dwelling. A short time after this Mrs. Pearson moved away from the city and the class was discontinued.

In the autumn of 1825 Rev. James Havens determined to make another effort to establish Methodism in Richmond. A small house in the lower end of town, remote from any other residence, occupied by Isaac Jackson as a dwelling, was obtained and preaching established and a class organized. From that period Methodism has maintained a place in Richmond.

The first two days' meeting was held on Saturday and Sunday, June, 1828. Stephen R. Beggs who had pastoral charge appointed the meeting, and was assisted by several local preachers. In the course of events it became necessary to vacate the room which was occupied by the meetings and a small house occupied by James Henry was next obtained. This house was soon found to be too small. The male members were called together, a subscription was taken, and a small frame church built on the site of what has since been known as Pearl St. M. E. Church. Richmond was made a station in 1838. The membership at this date numbered sixty-five in and around the town. There were three classes, of which D. B. Crawford, Joseph Kern and Stephen Thomas were the respective leaders. The following ministers have served as pastors, in the order in which they are named since Richmond became a station: John W. Sullivan, A. Tarkington, J. H. Hull, R. S. Robinson, A. Conwell, W. W. Wheeler, J. M. Stagg, C. W. Miller, J. H. Hull (2d term), Dr. Wm. H. Goode, Thomas Webb, J. W. Stafford, S. C. Cooper, Augustus Eddy, V. M. Beamer, H. N. Barnes, Jacob Colclazer, J. W. T. McMullen, Dr. T. S. Johnson (now missionary in India), Dr. C. N. Sims, N. H. Phillips, R. Tobey, J. V. R. Miller, N. Gillam, R. H. Sparks, W. J. Vigres, A. W. Lamport.

Since the organic law of the Methodist Episcopal church went into effect in the year 1864, by which the pastoral term was lengthened to three years, every pastor in charge of the original church, beginning with the name of R. Tobey, has served a full term of three years.

In the year 1853 the old frame building was removed to South Tenth street, where it may still be seen and where it is now occupied as a dwelling, and a new brick church was erected on the old site. The annual session of the North Indiana Conference was held in the new church in the autumn of 1853 at which time the church was dedicated by the presiding Bishop, E. R. Ames. Under the pastorate of Rev. N. H. Phillips the parsonage, which had been erected some years before on the lot adjoining the church, was enlarged and beautified at an expense of about $1,200. In 1866, under the labors of Rev. R. Tobey, the church was completely renovated, painted outside, remodeled inside, the lecture-room re-seated, walls frescoed, and new carpets provided at an expense of about $3,500. Under the labors of Rev. R. H. Sparks, a hurricane blew in the west end of the church building doing much damage to the interior. The damages were promptly repaired. During the pastorate of Rev. W. J. Vigres a complete renovation and refurnishing of the church occurred. The auditorium was newly frescoed and furnished with new seats, the windows reshaped and stained glass put in. The expense for these improvements was about $2,700. Under the labors of Rev. A. W. Lamport, the parsonage was again repaired, new rooms were added in brick, the old rooms were modified and modernized, the whole costing the sum of $1,240. During the third year of his service as pastor the trustees were encouraged to undertake the erection of a new church edifice at a point further east in the city. Lots were accordingly purchased on the southwest corner of Main and Fourteenth streets. The location is admitted to be one of the finest in Richmond. The new edifice is already under way. It is unique and modern in its style of architecture and wholly unlike any other church in the city. The auditorium, which will seat about 500, and the lecture-room, which will accommodate about 700, are both on ground floor, and so arranged as to open together by means of folding doors, thus furnishing a seating capacity for about twelve to thirteen hundred people. The lecture-room is divided into one main room, a spacious gallery and four smaller rooms, which are well adapted to the service of Sunday-schools. The basement, which extends under the whole building, will be finished into church-parlors, dining-room, furnace-rooms, etc. The building will be surmounted by a graceful steeple about 150 feet high. A church office is in connection with the auditorium and choir gallery. The floor in the auditorium is made on an incline toward the pulpit. The building is of pressed brick with stone finish and will probably be heated with steam. The roof is of slate, and the whole finish without and within will be as complete as possible. The entire expense of the building, including wells, cistern, walks, fencing, carpets and great organ, will probably not exceed $40,000. For the convenience of those living at a distance, carriage-sheds will be provided. In closing this brief history it can truthfully be said that the First Methodist Episcopal Church which is now the outgrowth, both in name and fact, of the original Methodist Society of Richmond, remains in a healthful and hopeful condition. Its members are united in faith and feeling, and in the purpose to hand over the present strength of their society to a grander and even more blessed career in the future. Many extensive revivals and wonderful ingatherings of members have occurred during the history of this church thus far. Prominent among them are those which occurred under the pastorates of Revs. R. S. Robinson, C. N. Sims, R. Tobey.

In the month of August, 1858, forty-two members withdrew from the original church and organized a new society under the name of Union Chapel, now known as Grace Church. In the autumn of 1866 forty members more withdrew and organized a third society. After a short career this society disbanded and its membership was merged into the other two churches.

GRACE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was originally an offshoot from Pearl Street (now First) Church, forty-two of its members having withdrawn on account of the restriction in regard to seating, and on the 24th day of August, 1858, organized a new society known as "Union Chapel." They purchased a building on Main street, having business rooms below and a large hall-room above, fitting up the latter for church purposes. It was dedicated, Sept. 26, 1858, D. W. Clark (afterward Bishop) officiating. The congregation continued to worship in this house until Jan. 24, 1869, at which time, the old building having been disposed of, a new one, erected the year previous, more commodious and more eligibly situated, was ready to be occupied in part. On the 26th of September of the same year, the whole house being completed, it was formally dedicated by Bishop Ames, and the name changed to "Grace Church."

This building occupies the southwest corner of Tenth and North A streets, and is a beautiful and imposing structure of the Gothic order of architecture. It is brick and stands upon the ground 100 x 54 feet, two stories, slate roof, surmounted by a graceful belfry and spire 130 feet in height. The audience-room on the second floor is capable of seating 700 persons. The walls and ceiling are handsomely frescoed in oil, which with the stained-glass windows, wood-work finish of varnished ash, gives the interior a highly ornamental and artistic appearance. It contains a very fine-toned organ with 1,075 pipes and twenty-four stops. The basement is conveniently arranged for Sunday-school and prayer-meeting purposes, being seated with chairs and having an ample supply of private rooms for church and Sabbath-school classes.

The cost of the building, including site, was about $40,000, and improvements have since been added to the value of between $3,000 and $4,000.

At its first organization a portion of the seats were owned by members, which gave it the name of "pewed church," but this feature becoming unpopular, it was abandoned at the opening of the new house of worship. The seats are now entirely free.

This church has enjoyed the ministrations of some of the most talented and popular pastors of the North Indiana Conference, to which it is attached. Rev. J. V. R. Miller served from its first organization until the spring of 1860; Rev. F. A. Hardin, one year, until the spring of 1861; Rev. A. Greenman, one year, until the spring of 1862; Rev. W. H. Goode, one year, until the spring of 1863; Rev. A. S. Kinnan, two years, until the spring of 1865; Rev. William Wilson, three months following, when he resigned; Rev. A. Marine came to fill out the conference year on the 13th of November, and remained until the spring of 1868; Rev. A. S. Kinnan, a former pastor, returned, remaining about a year and a half, when he resigned; Rev. E. B. Snyder came on the 5th of January, 1870, to supply the vacancy, and continued until the 1st of October, 1871, when he was transferred; Rev. A. A. Brown, sent to fill out the year, remained until July, 1872, when he resigned, and the Rev. S. L. Yourtee, sent to fill out the year, was superseded in the spring of 1873 by Rev. R. N. McKaig, who remained until the spring of 1876; Rev. A. Marine, a former pastor, followed, remaining until the spring of 1879; Rev. H. A. Buchtel, three years, until the spring of 1882; Rev. Frost Craft succeeded, and continues pastor at this date (January, 1884).

From the small beginning the membership of this church has steadily increased until it now numbers 440. During its short history there have been three or four revivals of religion worthy of mention: One in the winter of 1865-'66, under the ministry of A. Marine, when about forty persons were added to the membership; one in the spring of 1869, under A. S. Kinnan, when 174 were added; one in the winter of 1881-'82, under H. A. Buchtel, when about thirty were added; and one in the winter of 1882-'83, under Frost Craft, when 114 were added.

The Sabbath-school of the church, organized at the commencement, has had a very prosperous career, gradually increasing in numbers until it now has an average attendance of about 400 scholars and teachers. It has had in all five superintendents, C. C. Binkley, now in charge, occupying that position for nearly fifteen years.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH.

This church was organized in the year 1860. The members, some thirteen in number, met at the house of Mr. Fiske, on South Seventh street, and in 1861 built a church edifice on the corner of Sixth and B streets. This continued only one year, when the church society disbanded and was not again reorganized until 1871. The association then erected a brick church on the corner of B and Seventh streets, at a cost of $5,000. It had the above membership of thirteen, of which the only survivors are: Frederick Hutfielder and wife, and Wm. Gauding and wife.

The church has not grown much in membership, but it has a large and influential congregation who attend its service, many of which should join and add their influence for good to the noble few now united together for the good of the church.

The ministers who have officiated as pastors are: Revs. William Dunkard, Batrim Weaver, Helwish, Fricken, Martin, Fishback and Schruoff; the last two are still with them.

The present membership is eighteen.

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

This is the oldest colored church in the city, the organization being effected in 1845. Their first meeting was in an old log dwelling on South Fifth street. Later an old frame building was secured for a season, and then service was held at the residences of the members for something like two years.

In 1858 they purchased an old frame building and moved it to South Sixth street, where the colored school now stands, and, putting it in comfortable repair, used it for ten years as a place of worship.

In 1868 they took possession of the church on the corner of Sixth and B streets. Their church is a good and substantial brick building, the property being valued at $5,000. It will seat comfortably some 300 persons.

The organization began with a membership of fifteen, four of whom are yet living, viz. : Henry Belle, Nathaniel Jones, Eliza Outland, Eliza Ladd; and the charter members who are not living, are as follows: William Davisson and wife, Cornelius Overman and wife, Charles Overman and wife, Adam Carpenter and wife, George Belle, Fannie Olbertson, Richard Rush, Matild Rush, Mary Overman, Milton Ladd, Sharlotta Benbow.

The ministers who have had charge of the pastorate, and have worked to enlarge its sphere of usefulness are as follows, in the order named. They are all that were remembered:

Revs. Robert Jones, Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Bass, Daniel Winslow, Thomas Strawther, William C. Travan, Frederick Myers, C. C. Joiner, Daniel Winslow (second term), Nathan Michum, Johnston Michum, Nathan Michum (second term), J. M. Townson, A. T. Hall, Dr. Willis Revels, W. S. Lankford, L. D. Crosby, W. C. Travan (second term), J. McSmith and C. H. Thomas, present pastor.

This church has a membership at present of 186, and was organized by the Rev. Bishop William Paul Quinn.

WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH—COLORED.

There arose a division in the African Methodist church upon school matters, which resulted in April, 1868, in a division, a few of the members leaving, and the above-named church was formed by Elder C. W. Clemens, deceased. In its early history it applied to the Miami Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists of America for admission, and were accepted, and still hold their membership. The church is congregational in its form of government, their preachers being chosen by the church without definite limits as to the length of their pastorates.

At the time of its organization but four members united, viz.: Joseph and Caroline Moore, Wm. Green and Benj. Pickett, Mr. Jos. Moore serving as Class Leader for several years, and until his death. Mrs. Caroline Moore, called the mother of the church, is now the only member living of the original four, and furnished the facts of which this history is composed.

The organization was at the house of Mr. Moore, but they now have a neat frame church building and a handsome parsonage. The church is 32 x 42 in size with a vestibule 8 x 12 feet. It is neatly finished and furnished, and lighted with ten gas jets. There is yet due on the church property a little over $800, but with a present membership of nearly sixty, they hope to be soon free from debt.

A regularly organized Board of Trustees belong to this church as follows: Steven Riley, T. H. Johnson, D. Eckels, Joseph Rolston, Amon Dunken, Frank Rolston and William Freeman. Mr. J. C. Moore is the efficient church Clerk.

Connected with this church is a thriving Sabbath-school, numbering between sixty and seventy pupils, with the following competent corps of officers, viz.: Mr. T. H. Johnson, Superintendent, with Miss Lucy Reid, Assistant; Organist, Prof. O. C. Huddleson; Secretaries, Miss Emma Moore and Miss Julia Garrett; Treasurer, Miss Sarah Johnson; Bible Class, No. 1, taught by Elder S. M. Smothers; Bible Class, No. 2, taught by Mrs. Lydia Hunter; Infant Class, No. 3, taught by Mrs. Annie Young; Class No. 4, taught by Mrs. Mary McKinney; Class No. 5, taught by Miss Lizzie Moore. The school meets at 2 o'clock p. m., every Sabbath.

Pastors serving this church in succession from its organization have been as follows: Elder C. W. Clemens, two years; Rev. ——— Gleason, one year; Rev. Silas French, one year and six months; Rev. Anday Ferguson, one year; Rev. A. A. Dison, six months; Rev. Adam Collens, six months; Rev. ——— Brookshare, two years; Rev. S. M. Sane, one year; Elder C. W. Clemens, two years; Elder H. C. Pierce, three years, and Elder S. M. Smothers, the present pastor, who took charge Sept. 24, 1883.

PRESENT BOARD OF STEWARDS.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS. 1.

The Society of Friends is the oldest established Christian denomination in Richmond or Wayne County, being, in fact, co-equal with the settlement of the county. In February, 1806, David Hoover and three other young men, all members of the Society of Friends, reached the vicinity of Richmond and Mr. Hoover located, remaining on his farm until his death, only a few years since. In August of the year 1806 Jeremiah Cox and a few others of the denomination of Friends joined the first settlers, Mr. Cox locating on the land upon which the principal part of Richmond now stands, north of Main street, and which he laid out.

In the fall of 1806, November, John Simpson, a member of the society, held a meeting at the cabin of Jeremiah Cox which was attended by about twenty persons. This was the initial movement of the society to form a closer union, which continued at intervals until the following summer of 1807. Then a Friends' meeting was commenced in a cabin upon Jeremiah Cox's land, and was kept up until duly established by the church. In August, 1807, this meeting was "indulged" by the West Branch Monthly Meeting. There were then eighty-four members, old and young, thirty-five of whom attended the first "indulged" meeting. It continued to be held as such until 1809, when the Whitewater Monthly Meeting was established by the Miami Quarterly Meeting.

In the fall of 1808 a meeting-house was erected, the first in the county, of logs, twenty-four feet square, near the south-east corner of the old burying-ground of the Friends. Not long afterward an addition was built to this church, also of logs and of the same dimensions, and this place of worship was used until the erection of a new building in the year 1827. At the time of this enlargement, late in the year of 1808, there were 248 members belonging to the meeting, of all ages, and the society had a visit from the Rev. Stephen Grellet, who preached an interesting sermon from the text, "Children, have ye any meat?" On the 30th of September, 1809, the Whitewater Monthly Meeting was opened, and was the first established meeting held in Indiana, and there were 265 Friends, old and young, then residing in Richmond and vicinity. In the year 1811 Thomas Roberts removed to Whitewater and settled on the farm where his son Jonathan now lives, and upon which the new Yearly Meeting house stands. He died in 1840 aged eighty-two years. Sam'l Charles, another prominent Friend, settled on a farm now occupied by his grandsons in part, in 1812. His death occurred in 1849, aged ninety-one years. Chas. Moffitt was another early pioneer of the church, a son-in-law of Jeremiah Cox. His home was the farm on which the old log church was built. He came in 1811, and died in 1845, in the seventy-third year of his age. In the month of June, 1812, the West Branch Quarterly Meeting was established by the Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and Whitewater Monthly Meeting was attached thereto, which caused the members of the latter to make a journey of forty miles, nearly due east, to attend the Quarterly Meeting. The Ohio Yearly Meeting was organized in 1817.

In the year 1815, nine years after the first settlement of Friends, the Whitewater Monthly Meeting was composed of the following subordinate meetings, viz.: Whitewater, West Grove, Silver Creek, Middle Fork, Elkhorn and Chester, and numbered 165 families, 800 to 900 members, with four or five recorded ministers.

The first Constitution of Indiana, adopted at Corydon, the then capital, sat nineteen days, and Jeremiah Cox was one of the members of the convention. The same year Richmond was laid off by John Smith.

On the 4th of January, 1817, the Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was held. Of this meeting William Williams, in his journal, said: "On the first day of the first month, 1817, there was a new Quarterly Meeting opened at Whitewater meeting-house, which was a great satisfaction to many minds; yet we felt sorry to part with our dear Friends of West Branch, a number of whom were present."

On the 8th of October, 1821, the Indiana Yearly Meeting was established and held. Benjamin Hopkins was Clerk, and George Carter, Assistant. It was composed of five Quarterly Meetings, viz.: Miami, West Branch, Fairfield, Whitewater and Blue River. It was held in the old log meeting-house, and in the shed attached to it. The increase in members caused a desire to erect a new and more commodious place of worship, and it took shape in the appointment of a committee, or Board of Managers, viz.: Jeremiah Cox, Samuel Charles and Thomas Roberts, and a plan for a house was adopted. This plan was changed the following year, 1822, and John Charles added to the committee. The latter and Jeremiah Cox resigned the following year, and Charles Moffitt was added, the board being then composed of the following named Friends: Samuel Charles, Thomas Roberts and Charles Moffitt, who continued to act until the building was completed in 1829. They kept a minute account of the expenditures, making their report in detail, and this account is in the possession of the grandchildren of Mr. Samuel Charles. The house was first occupied in an unfinished condition, in 1824. The board faithfully carried out their trust, and the cost was about $7,000 in round numbers. In 1826 the Yearly Meeting authorized the holding of Quarterly Meetings, held at Whitewater, at the Yearly Meeting house. From the meetings thus established there has since been three large Yearly Meetings set off: Western, Iowa and Kansas, having 25,000 to 30,000 members.

The present Indiana Yearly Meeting is composed of thirteen Quarterly Meetings, and has a membership of 18,000.

The Whitewater Monthly Meeting at present consists of the following preparative meetings, viz.: Whitewater, Richmond (held on South Eighth street), and Twelfth Street, all in the city of Richmond; Smyrna, a few miles north, and Orange, a few miles south of the city, all of which have from time to time been established by the old original meeting. The Monthly Meeting has a total membership of about 1,200.

The Whitewater Quarterly Meetings are held in the city of Richmond, in June and December, composed of five Monthly Meetings, all of which are in Wayne County, except one, and have a membership of 2,500. Two other meetings are held at Dublin, and one at New Garden, all in Wayne County. The New Garden Meeting consists of three Monthly Meetings, and about 1,200 members, which shows in the county of Wayne, where the Friends first settled in Indiana, a membership of 3,700 at this time, or Jan. 1, 1884.

These facts have been given us by Elijah Coffin, and in closing his memorandum he said in substance: "That the Society of Friends unite with the views of most of the orthodox churches in all the essentials and fundamental doctrines of Christianity. They believe in the freedom of public worship. In the early days of the Christian Church the first gospel messenger was a woman, and they believe that women were called equally with men to preach the gospel. The result of 200 years' experience has been to the effect that they are equally efficient. Women can be ministers and be none the less loving as mothers, wives and daughters. Theirs, the Society of Friends, was a gospel of peace; hence their members cannot enlist in the armies of the world. If called upon to fight, the reply should be : ' We are Christians and cannot fight. It is better to obey the laws of God than man, and leave the reward to God.'

" The society stands firmly opposed to the death penalty, believing man has no right to take that which he cannot bestow. It also takes strong grounds in favor of temperance. From the earliest days of its history we have taught that the traffic in liquors should be restricted to its use for medical and mechanical purposes. The society feel it to be the duty of its members to co-operate with any movement that has for its object the suppression of the vice of intemperance." The value of their church property in Richmond is, for the Twelfth street property, $36,000; Eighth street property, $15,000 ; and Whitewater, $8,000.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS. 2.

In the years 1827 and 1828 there was a division in the Society of Friends, and that part of the body to which this article refers, believing firmly in the doctrines and testimonies of the society, withdrew, and have held their meetings since, in order, as stated in the minutes of the Yearly Meeting, held the 29th of September, 1828, "As much as possible to preserve the unity and harmony of our religious society, and to maintain our principles on their ancient foundation, and according to our present discipline."

The first meeting held at Richmond after the division was in the woods, near where the railroad shops now stand, and was attended by about 140 members. Several meetings of conference were afterward held in the public-school building, for the purpose of procuring a place for worship.

An upper room in a tavern located on Main street, between Eighth and Ninth streets, was accordingly selected for that purpose.

In the fall of the same year Friends held their Yearly Meeting at Waynesville, Ohio, where it was decided to hold it alternately at Waynesville, Ohio, and Richmond, Ind.

Soon after the Yearly Meeting in 1828, a public meeting was held in a large barn, near Richmond; the room in the tavern was thought too small to accommodate the number likely to assemble. The meeting was large and satisfactory.

On the 24th of September, 1828, a committee was appointed to select and purchase a lot on which to erect a meeting-house; a piece of ground, containing three-fourths of an acre, was selected at the junction of Fort Wayne avenue and Sixth street, for which, in conjunction with the Quarterly Meeting, was paid $100.

Upon this lot was erected a frame building 40 x 60 feet, under the superintendence of the following committee: Robert Morrisson, Enos Graves and Charles W. Starr. The house was completed and meetings were held in it in 1830. A few years later another building of like material and dimensions was erected on the ground, which was designed for the accommodation of the Yearly Meeting, and in the interval it was used for a Friends' school, and was largely attended by them and others.

In 1864 this property was sold, and a lot, consisting of one entire square of ground, situated between Eleventh and Twelfth and North A and B streets, was purchased of the Charles W. Starr estate, for the sum of $5,000.

In 1865 a plain, substantial, brick building, capable of holding 1,600 persons, was erected at a cost of $12,745.64. The Yearly Meeting was held in this house, in the fall of 1865.

Three years later a large two-story brick structure, intended for an academy, was erected on the ground at a cost of $10,000, in which, for several years, a well-conducted school was sustained under the auspices of the society.

This building is now used by the "Richmond Normal School."

Their property, in total, is about $50,000.

While the membership of this branch of the society is not large, it includes members in whose daily lives may be found the elements of the true friend, as held by the early founders of the society, as well as active and earnest workers, well known for their zeal and integrity in promoting the welfare of the oppressed, irrespective of race or color, as well as some of the most popular and influential citizens of Wayne County.

ST. PAUL'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first Episcopal services were held in Richmond, in February, 1837, by Rt. Rev. Jackson Kemper, in the upper room of the City Hall (old Warner building). No effort was then made to organize a church. In April or May, Rev. Gresham Waldo commenced holding services in the lower room of the same building, but left on account of poor health after about two months. About the 4th of July, 1837, Rev. Geo. Fiske located in Richmond by the advice of Bishop Kemper. He held services in the old frame church on Fort Wayne avenue, where the First M. E. Church now stands. He continued his missionary labors until Feb. 12, 1838, when St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church was organized. The meeting for the purpose of forming a congregation was held at the law office of James W. Green. Rev. Mr. Fiske was Chairman; Ebenezer T. Turner, Secretary; E. T. Turner and Hermon B. Payne were elected Wardens; James W. Borden, Wm. S. Addleman and George Arnold, Vestrymen. The lower room of the Warner building was leased as a place for worship, in June, 1838. Sept. 10, 1838, steps were taken toward building a church edifice, to cost from $4,000 to $6,000, and a building committee was appointed. A church lot was selected in 1830, and on the 23d of May of that year the church was legally incorporated. H. B. Payne and J. W. Green were chosen Wardens, and J. W. Borden, Stephen B. Stanton, John D. McClelland and George Arnold, Vestryman. The church building was partially finished in 1841, and the basement used as a place for services. The parsonage was built in 1843 at a cost of $354.50. The church building was completed in 1849, and consecrated Dec. 20, by Bishop Upfold.

Rev. Mr. Fiske tendered his resignation as rector April 21, 1851, but it was not finally accepted until Nov. 20, 1855. His health, long impaired, gave way, and he died in February, 1860. The present rector, Rev. John B. Wakefield, was elected Dec. 3, 1855, and has been an earnest and devoted laborer for the Master during the long period of his pastorate. The church had a hard struggle for life in its early years, but was brought safely through its troubles aided by such devoted men as Rev. Mr. Fiske, Stephen B. Stanton, Wm. S. Addleman, H. B. Payne and others.

The number of communicants in 1839 was twelve; in 1855, fifty-two; in 1883, 154. Value of church property, about $20,000. The church has one of the finest organs in the West.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church was organized in Richmond, Ind., Nov. 15, 1837, by a committee of the Oxford Presbytery. Thirty members united together composing the organization, and two others joined the day following. John Dougan, Jno. B. Taylor and Wm. McGathery were chosen Elders, and the Rev. Charles Sturdevant was chosen as their pastor. They had no place of worship of their own for three years, but had the use, occasionally, of the school-house, and the church of the Associate Reformed (now U. P.) church. Their first church building was erected in 1840, near its close, at a cost of lot and ground of $800, being improved in 1847 and continued in use until 1854. The present church edifice was commenced in 1850, but not fully completed until the first of the year 1854, when it was dedicated Feb. 5, of that year. The lot was a donation to the church from Chas. W. Starr. The church cost something over $5,000, and since then in repairs and improvements some $3,000. The ministers have been Rev. Charles Sturdevant, from organization to 1841; Rev. Thomas Whallon, from 1842 to 1845; Rev. R. A. Naylor, from 1845 to 1846; Rev. Francis P. Monford, from 1847 to 1851; Rev. Henry L. McGuire began his labors here in July, 1852, and continued until Sept. 4, 1853, when he was summoned to his rest, greatly lamented by the church; Rev. Chauncy Leavenworth, from 1854 to 1856; Rev. John F. Smith, from 1857 to 1859; Rev. W. H. Vandaren, from 1860 to 1863; Rev. J. R. Geyer, six months in 1864; Rev. Lucius W. Chapman, from 1865 to 1870; Rev. Isaac M. Hughs, present pastor, commenced labor here July 17, 1870, was installed pastor Oct. 20, 1870.

The church has been free from debt since 1870, and has a membership of 275. The Sabbath congregations are large. The singing is congregational and led by a pipe organ. Weekly prayer-meetings are held every Thursday evening. The Sabbath-school meets at nine o'clock every Sabbath morning, and teachers meeting every Monday evening. There have been organized by the members of this church, the Ladies' Aid Society, The Women's Prayer-Meeting and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. There have been few more prosperous churches, or one by their works more deserving.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church, at the time of its organization, was called the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. The records of this church prior to October, 1842, having been lost, the few facts of its early history here given are furnished chiefly from recollection, by one who was a member at the time of its organization. At the time of his settlement here, there were but few Presbyterians in this vicinity. The first sermon from a Presbyterian minister is supposed to have been preached by Alexander Porter, in 1824. Only occasional preaching, however, was had for many years. The first pastor, or settled minister, was William M. Boyce, in 1835 or 1836. A frame meeting-house was built on Pearl street, south of Main. Among those who became members at and near the time of the organization were: Robert Grimes, Daniel Reid, A. Grimes, Jeremiah L. Meek and John Reid, with their wives, Widow Grimes, Mary Kibby, James McFadden, Mary Davidson, Isaac Conley. Robert Grimes and Daniel Reid were chosen Elders. The name of Joseph McCord appears on record as an Elder at a meeting of the session in 1843. The pastorate of Mr. Boyce terminated in 1851; after which the church had for many years no settled pastor or stated preaching. In 1858 it assumed the name of the United Presbyterian Church, and Adrian Aten became its pastor. In August, 1862, Robert Grimes, one of its Elders, died. In October, 1863, William S. Reid and John J. Conley were chosen Elders. In 1864, it is believed, the labors of Mr. Aten as pastor ceased; and on the 7th of May, 1866, Nixon E. Wade was ordained and installed. About the same time the society decided to build a new house of worship; and in November following (1866) William S. Reid was chosen "to take the entire superintendence of the new church building." David H. Dougan was elected Treasurer, and Daniel Reid, John J. Conley and David H. Dougan, Trustees for the ensuing year. On Sabbath, Sept. 15, 1867, the congregation entered their new house of worship for the first time. The opening sermon was preached by William Davidson, D. D., of Hamilton, Ohio. July 17, 1869, A. M. Weed was chosen an Elder. In February, 1870, Rev. Joseph W. Clokey commenced his labors, and was installed April the 28th following. The church was not fully finished until 1869, when it was dedicated by the Rev. William H. McMillan, of Xenia, Ohio. The Trustees at the time were Daniel Reid, John J. Conley and David H. Dongan. The Elders at this date, 1884, are: William S. Reid, Andrew F. Scott, James W. Smith and T. W. O. Braffett; Deacons, Frank H. Glass, Lucius W. Roberts, Alfred Lefevere and ——— McPherson. The church liabilities at its completion were assumed by W. S. Reid and A. F. Scott, and the church is free from debt. It is a handsome edifice, built in the Gothic style, and in size 39 x 70 feet, with a seating capacity of about 400.

NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH.

The New Jerusalem Church, of Richmond, was, through the instrumentality of Dr. O. P. Baer, organized late in the year 1849, the Doctor making his home in Richmond that year. There were but few members of the new church society then residing in the city, but the few cordially united with Dr. Baer in organizing a society for the good of the church. The society was composed of the following members: Dr. Joseph Howells and wife, James Austin and wife, son and three daughters, Daniel Roberts and wife, Jacob Purington and wife, Mr. Pullen and wife, and Dr. O. P. Baer and wife. Meetings were held at each other's houses, by some one reading either a sermon, or certain portions of the writings of the new church.

Owing to removals, the society failed to sustain itself, and within eighteen months went out of existence. Owing to the few members no minister was regularly engaged, and preaching was had only occasionally. This was continued, even after the organization failed, to 1867. During this non-existence of the society, services had been held at different times, conducted by Revs. J. P. Stewart, Sabin, Hough, Dr. Channs, Henry Miller and others. In the spring of the latter year, 1867, Dr. Baer engaged the Rev. G. N. Smith, of Urbana University, to preach once a month at his residence. The audience at first was small, but it grew rapidly, each meeting presenting new faces and earnest hearers, until the house became too small to accommodate all who came. The meetings often terminated in a pleasant religious conversation, of questions and answers, intellectually enjoyed by all as a feast of good things for the soul. This season of spiritual feasting lasted until the early spring of 1869.

The need of a hall became apparent, and not finding a suitable one it was decided to build. The society having grown and strengthened, a new organization was effected early in March, 1869, with the following named persons signing the constitution and by-laws: O. P. Baer, Emma J. Baer, Francis Pruyn, Achsah Pruyn, Mrs. John Chandler, David Strawbridge, Mrs. S. A. Wrigley, Miss Julia H. Finley, M. L. Crocker, Lizzie Crocker. These members are what might be called charter members, who worked for the building of the temple, and its furnishing, to its dedication. All things now being in readiness, first of all a purchase was made of the southeast corner lot on Franklin and Walnut streets for $1,500, paying $1,000 down, and $500 in six months. A subscription list was then started, and at the same time the contract for erecting the edifice was let to Mr. Thomas Roberts. Two thousand dollars were subscribed and promptly paid by the citizens of Richmond, and $500 from parties elsewhere. The lot, building and furnishing cost $7,500. Before the dedication of the temple the entire debt was canceled by Dr. Baer. Dedication services occurred on Jan. 21, 1870, conducted by Rev. George Field, aided by Rev. F. Sewall. On the 26th of February a Sabbath-school was instituted, with Dr. Baer, Superintendent. During this season (1870) there were added to the society, properly called the New Jerusalem Church Society, the names of Mrs. John Finley, Mr. Thomas De Yarmon, Dr. Joseph Howells and three daughters, Mary E. Baer, Florence Chandler, and Rev. George Field and wife. Rev. G. Field was engaged as minister, and served the society for more than two years. Mr. Field then left for Detroit, and the society was without a regular minister for more than a year. Mr. De Charms, a licentiate, read sermons for three months during the summer of 1873, and during the following winter the society was richly entertained by one of the finest sermonizers in this or any other country, Judge Plants, of Ohio. Rev. G. N. Smith was again engaged in 1874, and preached for two years, after which Rev. E. A. Beaman was engaged to preach the first Sabbath of every month, now over six years.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church cannot be said to have been organized in 1865, but some twenty members of that denomination united to hold service in the winter of 1865-'66, and they met first in a room over Engine House No. 2; then in the late spring, in a school-room on the north side, and from there to Phillips' Hall which they occupied until they were organized and sufficiently strong, financially, to erect a place of worship of their own, which was done a few years later. The church is a good substantial brick edifice, neatly and comfortably furnished. It is located on North Eleventh street, on the west side, north of Main street.

The original members as nearly as can be obtained were: Mr. and Mrs Daniel Thompson, Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Newport, Mr. Agenbroad, Mr. F. Deal, Mrs. Conover, Mr. Griggs, Mrs. Jane Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Smith of the country, Dr. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Black and daughter. The pastors were as follows: Mr. Agenbroad, served two years; Mr. Wilkenson, two years; Mr. Benton, one year; Mr. Moorehouse, one year; Mr. Smith, one year; Mr. Agenbroad (second term) two years; Mr. Roup, one year. The membership now numbers 104. Rev. Allen is the pastor in charge at the present time.

MT. MORIAH BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Mt. Moriah Baptist Church, colored, was organized in 1865, with only five members. The church grew but slowly and in a few years ceased to exist. Its pastors were the Revs. Trevans, Davis and Shoecraft. It was reorganized about the year 1872, and since that time has steadily grown, although but few members united at the start. In 1880 it had twenty-eight members. Since that time it has advanced greatly, under the pastorate of the Rev. Benj. Smith. Its ministers have been the Revs. Geo. Pass, Benj. Gardner, Brunwell, Polly, Benj. Gardner again, and the present pastor, Benj. Smith. It has now a membership of seventy-eight and its future is promising for good.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH, SOUTH NINTH STREET.

This congregation was organized by Rev. Elijah Goodwin, Nov. 21, 1859, in Warner Hall, eight members being present whose names were as follows: James Boyd and wife, James B. Posey and wife, Thomas Little, David Thomas, Benlah Graves and Elizabeth Horsman. Three of the above members are still living, one (David Thomas) in Richmond.

This congregation had no regular place of worship, but met from place to place as could be best secured until 1878, when the present church building on South Ninth street was erected at a cost of nearly $4,000.

The pastors having charge of this church since its organization were as follows: Revs. Elijah Goodwin, A. J. Hobbs, Dr. G. W. Thompson, A. J. Loughlin, all of whom were in the work before the building of the house; and since the new church has been occupied the pastors have been, Revs. J. F. Sloan, J. L. Parsons, F. J. Morgan. The Rev. Mr. Morgan is the present pastor of the church which now numbers about 100 members.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This church denomination was among the early organizations, members of the church settling in Richmond in 1834. These were German immigrants consisting of two families and three single persons, men. They continued to increase for the next ten years, when, for the first time they were served with a minister of their own faith in the person of Rev. I. C. Schulz, who settled in Richmond in 1844, and organized the members under the name of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Twenty-three persons joined the church at its organization, their names being as follows: John Peterson, Christopher Schofer, Eberhard Menke, Henry Juergens, Dieterich Hochne, Christopher Juergens, William Schulz, Harmon Shofer, Eberhard Frauman, Adam Schnelle, Clanior Fetta, W. K. Rosa, Henry Eggemeier, Bernhard Knollenberg, Henry vor dem Feld, Dieterich Sitloh, Harmon Sitloh, John Eggemeier, Gerhard Juergens, Henry Klute, Henry Shofer, Gerhard Schnelle and John Hill.

From this number there were chosen the following officers: Christopher Shofer, John Peterson, Eberhard Menke, Henry Juergens, Dieterich Hoehne and Christopher Juergens. In 1846 they built a house of worship, 30 x 50 feet, situated on South Fourth street, between C and D, then Front, street. Rev. I. C. Schulz resigned in 1849 after faithful labor in the congregation and parochial school which he organized, also, at the beginning. Rev. J. G. Theis was his successor, and during his time of service the congregation increased so that they were obliged to enlarge their church building.

There was a division in the church while under the pastoral charge of the Rev. J. G. Theis, a part of the members leaving and forming a new church organization of the same denomination in another part of the city. In 1854 the church edifice was considerably enlarged to meet the growing demand of the church, the basement being used for a school. The Rev. J. G. Theis remained in charge until 1856, when he was succeeded by the Rev. C. Schadow, who was installed as their regular pastor. The pastor had also, up to this time been the teacher of the school, but the work became too great, and in 1857 they employed a regular teacher in the person of August Mueller, thus more equalizing the burden. During the ministerial labors of the Rev. C. Schadow, a serious trouble arose which threatened the existence of the church. This, however, was avoided, the reverend gentleman, in 1862, resigning. His successor, the Rev. G. Loerrenstein, succeeded in restoring the church to peace, and, his able and truly Christian labor, resulted in an increased membership and a harmonious congregation. This prosperity caused the enlargement of the church to its present size, in the year 1874. The audience-room will seat 600 persons. The church edifice and pastor's residence, including lot, is valued at $15,000. After thirteen years of successful labor, the Rev. G. Loerrenstein resigned his charge and was succeeded by the Rev. H. Wickemeyer in 1876, who proved a worthy successor, and who is still in successful discharge of his pastoral duties. The membership is 155. There are three teachers employed now in the school, with an attendance of 174 children. The church is in a truly prosperous condition, and free from debt.

ST. PAUL'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN.

This church was established in the year 1853, and their first service was in a school-house, located on the corner of South Seventh and B streets. A few years later a good, substantial, brick edifice was erected, which is still occupied, on the south side of Seventh street, and which since, in 1869, was improved by the building of a tower, and in 1874, still further improved and repaired. The original members were: David Knollenberg, David Sittlah, Christian Schofer, Christian Fetta, Aaron Turner, Henry Brakensick, Jurgens Hasenkoester, William Thiemen.

The pastors who have served the church are: Revs. Mr. Schramm, Frederick Rensch, John F. Grossow, Mr. Kuch, J. D. Severinghans, G. Schultz, D. G. Rehsteiner, H. Wicke-meyer, G. W. Enders and John J. Young, who is the present pastor.

The present membership is 476.

It has also a neat parsonage which cost $3,000.

There is a Sabbath-school kept up with an average attendance of 355.

A handsome and commodious brick school-building was erected in 1863, with accommodations for 125 pupils or students, and is strictly a parish school. The past year, 1883, it had an attendance of fifty-five students. The value of their entire property is placed at $25,000.

The following persons compose the church council of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church:

Elders, Henry Temme, Pres.; Frederick Jahnke, Sec.; Eberhardt Bettenbrock, Treas.

Trustees, William Bartel, Jacob Goetz, John H. Rosa.

Deacons, Henry Knollenberg, Frederick Heitbrink, John H. Meerhoff, Henry Klopp.

ZION'S CHURCH.

The Evangelical Association of Zion's Church first met as an organization in 1864, their service being held in a small frame building near the First Ward school. They occupied this place for nearly two years. The church or association then divided. The two branches, the Evangelical Association and the German Methodist, commenced with a membership of twenty. On the separation, the above association of Zion's Church held their meetings at the old engine-house at the end of South Sixth street. They did not worship there long, but erected a church edifice of their own at a cost of $4,000. A list of the original members are not on record, but Mr. J. C. Burkhardt is the only one living.

Names of pastors—Revs. Edward Evans (the first), G. Schmoll, John Hoffman, Joseph A. Maier, J. K. Troyer, William King (same year), Henry Prechter and J. Schmielli, under whose care and supervision the church-house was enlarged at a cost of $1,300. Revs. George Boederer, A. O. Roher, F. Launer, and William Wiedenhoeft, who is the present pastor. The present membership is twenty-two.

CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

The first Catholic settlers in and about Richmond were J. H. Moormann, Thomas, John and Daniel O'Hara, Joseph Brokamp, Peter Schindler, John Ryan, Charles Boushie and Peter Essenmacher, all of whom, excepting the first named, are now dead.

The Catholics of Richmond were visited for the first time by a Catholic priest as early as 1836; it was the Rev. Jos. Ferneding, residing at New Alsace, Dearborn County. A paper left by Father Ferneding mentions Richmond as one of his many missions, stating that it had about ten families. He celebrated mass at the houses of Charles Boushie and Joseph Brokamp, visiting the place about twice a year until 1840.

Until 1845 Rev. Michael O'Rourke, residing at Dover, Dearborn County, paid occasional visits; but from June, 1845, until August, 1846, the Rev. Vincent Bacquelin, residing at St. Vincent's, in Shelby County, visited Richmond every two or three months.

The first resident priest at Richmond was the Rev. John Ryan. He came in August, 1846, and remained until June or July, 1848.

It was at the time of Father Bacquelin's visits that a lot was secured on which to build a church. The Hon. Sam. E. Perkins, Judge of the Supreme Court of Indiana, residing at Richmond, proposed to donate the lot on Marion street, on which the parsonage now stands; however, the lot west of it was preferred. It was also the property of Judge Perkins, and he sold it to the Catholics for $100, of which sum Father Bacquelin paid $25. During Father Ryan's time the cornerstone for a brick church was laid, to be known as

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.

At the solemn blessing of the new church in 1847 by Bishop de la Hailandiere, who had donated $500 on condition that the church be built of brick, were present the Rev. Andrew Bennett, of Dover, Dearborn County, and the Rev. James F. Wood, then pastor of the Cathedral in Cincinnati, now Archbishop of Philadelphia, whose parents at that time lived in Richmond. After Father Ryan's departure the Rev. Wm. Engeln, of Blue Creek, visited Richmond a few times.

In May, 1849, St. Andrew's received its second resident pastor in the person of the Rev. William Doyle. He remained until August, 1853. The Rev. John B. Merl came next, and remained until June, 1858. Next the congregation was attended by the Rev. Henry Peters, of Connersville, until March, 1859. From March to December, 1859, the Rev. G. H. Ostlangenberg visited Richmond from Brookville.

On Dec. 25, 1859, the Rev. J. B. H. Seepe was appointed resident pastor, and remained at Richmond until September, 1868. In 1860 Father Seepe built the present church, 120 x 60 feet. In 1865 a new school-house was erected; the first school-house had been in existence since 1847 or 1848. In 1867 Father Seepe bought twelve acres of ground for cemetery purposes.

The Rev. Ferdinand Hundt was the pastor from November, 1868, until 1877. In 1870 the tower and spire of the church were finished, and in 1874 the cemetery ground was much improved and the beautiful mortuary chapel erected.

The Rev. J. H. Seibertz is the present pastor of St. Andrew's. He took charge in August, 1877. In 1878 he built an addition to the school-house. On his arrival a huge debt was resting heavily upon the congregation. It is not yet entirely removed, but very much lightened, with brighter prospects in the not distant future.

The congregation numbers 240 families. One lay teacher and four Sisters of St. Francis teach 230 children.

Father Seibertz was born on Jan. 20, 1841, in Ockenfels, Rhine Province, Germany, and emigrated to this country June 24, 1862. He was ordained at Vincennes by Bishop de St. Palais, as follows: Tonsure and Minor Orders, June 29; Subdeacon, Dec. 8; Deacon, Dec. 17; Priest, Dec. 21, 1864. His mission prior to St. Andrew's was Dover, Dearborn County, where he built the church.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

In 1860 the Irish or English-speaking Catholics of Richmond, who had hitherto worshiped in St. Andrew's Church, resolved on separating from their German brethren. They bought a church property that had been used by English Lutherans, of Louis Burke, for $8,000, to be paid in installments of $1,000 a year. The church soon began to look like a Catholic church.

For a short time St. Mary's Church was visited by Rev. John Contin, and after him by Rev. John Gueguen. In October, 1860, a resident pastor was appointed in the person of Rev. Aeg. Merz, who from there also attended Centreville, Washington and Hagerstown, in Wayne County, and New Castle and Middletown, in Henry County. He remained until September, 1863, when the Rev. J. M. Villars succeeded him. The next pastor was the Rev. Francis Moitrier, who resigned October, 1872.

The Rev. D. J. McMullen took charge of the congregation in October, 1872, heavily burdened with debts. But his administrative abilities soon ordered affairs. The congregation became united, and the debt has been very considerably reduced. In a few years, no doubt, the church could be consecrated.

Father McMullen was born at Newry, County Armagh, Ireland, on Feb. 23, 1838. Shortly after, his parents moved to a farm near Celbridge, County Kildare, within eight miles of the city of Dublin. At the close of 1848 he sailed for America. Most of his studies were made at St. Mary's Seminary, Perry County, Mo., and at the St. Louis University. He was ordained by Bishop de St. Palais at St. Meinrad; Subdeacon, June 17; Deacon, June 18; Priest, June 21, 1867. Aug. 5, 1867, he arrived in Indianapolis to assist in St. John's Church and attend these stations: Greenfield, Cumberland, Fortville, Plainfield, Brownsburg, Franklin and Edinburgh. He continued here until October, 1868, when he was assigned to Rushville, Rush County. In October, 1872, he was appointed pastor of St. Mary's Church, Richmond. The congregation numbers about 150 families, with an attendance of 170 children at school.

Father McMullen also attends Fountain City, north, and Centreville, west, of Richmond, in each of which stations a few Catholic families reside.

The cost of entire church property including cemetery (which cost $8,000) amounts to nearly $60,000.

CHAPTER VI.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Ezekiel Aikin, deceased, was born in 1812, in County Donegal, Ireland, and when quite a child came to America with an uncle. He lived in Wilmington, Del., where he learned his trade, and was there married to Elizabeth Porter, who was born in Ireland in 1827. They were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are still living. He came West with his family and first settled in Ohio on the State line, and worked in the mills of Richmond., and finally settled in Richmond, where he died in 1881. He was foreman of the woolen-mill for quite a while, and later became proprietor of the mill. In the latter part of his life he joined the Presbyterian church, to which his widow and most of his family belong. His son, James P. Aikin, was born and reared in Wayne County. He learned his trade in the Fleecy Date Woolen Mills, and is now Superintendent of the same.

W. W. Alexander is a native of Camden, Preble Co., Ohio, of Irish ancestry. He was reared in his native county and enlisted in the late war, on the first call for volunteers, in the Twentieth Ohio Infantry. He afterward enlisted in the Thirteenth Missouri Infantry, which was afterward changed to the Twenty-second Ohio Infantry, serving in said company three years. He came to Richmond in the fall of 1864, and immediately became connected with the Volunteer Fire Department, being Foreman of the hose part of the time. Since its organization as pay department he has served in minute department until his election as Chief, in 1879, since which he has held that position by being annually re-elected. The company is well organized and managed, and as Chief of the Fire Department Mr. Alexander has shown his efficiency.

Jonathan Baldwin was born in Guilford County, N. C., Dec. 4, 1815, a son of John and Charlotte (Payne) Baldwin, natives of North Carolina, his father born Nov. 4, 1781, and his mother, Aug. 4, 1778. His parents were married in 1803, and in 1825 came to Wayne County, Ind., and settled in Clay Township. They bought a farm of ninety-three acres and entered a quarter section of wild land, which he gave to his two sons. The father died in 1856 and the mother in 1857. They were members of the Society of Friends. They had a family of nine children. Four are now living, of whom our subject is the next to the oldest. He has lived in Wayne County since ten years of age. He by his own efforts obtained a liberal education and taught school several terms. He was married in 1836 to Mary A., daughter of Jesse Albertson, and a native of Wayne County, born in 1815. Soon after his marriage his father gave him $100, and he entered eighty acres of land in Hamilton County, Ind., where he spent two years. In 1838 he returned to Wayne County and bought a farm in Clay Township. He remained there till 1878, when he moved to a farm two miles from Richmond, and in 1881 to Earlham place, West Richmond, on the land where he now lives. He has always followed farming and stock-raising, and has been very successful. He was a member of the Board of County Commissioners three terms, or nine years. At the June term of Com. Court, 1875, there were thirty-six applicants for a license to retail spirituous liquors. Mr. Baldwin, being conscientiously opposed to a license law, resigned being a member of the board rather than grant license under said law. He and his wife reared a family of five children, four of whom are still living, all good citizens of this county. He has been an active member of the Society of Friends many years, and is an enthusiastic worker in the temperance cause.

N. H. Ballard, M.D., corner North Ninth and A streets, Richmond, Ind., is a son of Barclay, grandson of Thomas, and great-grandson of Barclay Ballard, of English descent, but of Virginian birth, and in religious faith, Quakers. His great-grandfather died in his native State. Thomas Ballard, in 1846, came to Richmond, Ind., from Warren County, Ohio. The maternal ancestry were of New England birth, the grandparents Heywood moving from Carlisle, Mass., to Clermont County, Ohio, about 1820. N. H. Ballard is a native of Ohio and came to Richmond, Ind., in 1860. In 1878 he began reading medicine with J. R. Weist, and remained with him till March, 1883, having graduated from the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1881. He took a course at the Rush Medical College, Chicago, and graduated in April, 1883. He has a good practice, having gained considerable reputation as a surgeon. He is a member of the City, County, District and State Medical societies, and is Secretary of the Wayne County Medical Society. He is also a member of the Alumni Association of the Medical College of Ohio (Cincinnati). He belongs to the Masonic fraternity.

G. Balling, stone contractor, was born in 1848, in Bavaria, Germany, where he learned the stone-mason's trade, and in 1869 emigrated to the United States, locating in Richmond, where he has since resided. In 1876 he began contracting in this city, and since that time has done work on many public and private buildings,—among which may be mentioned Hoosier Drill Works, Hittle block, Jackson's corner, Dickason's corner, Westcott's, Bell's and Kendal's residences,—and is one of the leading stone-masons of Wayne County. In connection with his trade he has carried on a grocery and provision store since July, 1883, corner of Southeast and Sixth streets. He was married in 1872 to Louisa Selmoning, who was born in 1849, in Holland.

B. P. Bethge, manager of the Union Depot restaurant, Richmond, Ind., is a native of Columbus, Ohio, but since 1874 a resident of Richmond. The restaurant of which he has charge is the outgrowth of a small beginning, being at first but a lunch stand, but in 1868 P. Merkle & Co. became the proprietors, and after the erection of the present spacious depot secured a room 47 x 19½ feet in size, and now keep a first-class eating-room. Mr. Merkle is an old, experienced man in the business, but being a resident of Columbus the management is given to Mr. Bethge. Meals are served to all trains at reasonable rates.

Thaddeus W. O. Braffett, Auditor Wayne County, Ind., was born in Bradford County, Pa., April 12, 1829, a son of Alfred and Eliza (Long) Braffett, his father a native of Pennsylvania, of French descent, and his mother a native of Vermont, of English descent. In 1831 his parents removed to Ohio, settling near old Fort Black, built as such by General William Henry Harrison, near New Madison, Darke Co., Ohio; subsequently moved to Braffetttsville in the same county, and in 1839 removed to New Paris, Preble Co., Ohio, where his father died in the year 1865, and where his mother still lives, now in the eightieth year of her age. Our subject is the second of five children. He received a commercial school education and followed merchandising with his father until the year 1855. In 1857, having lost his wife, he went to California and spent three years in the mining interest, returning in 1860. In January, 1861, he went to Geneseo, Ill., taking charge of a wholesale and retail dry-goods and agricultural house. When the first gun was fired on Fort Sumter, he at once offered his service to the Government as a private soldier and enlisted in Company B, Ninth Illinois Cavalry; was promoted to Sergeant, Lieutenant and Captain of his company. The regiment went into camp at Camp Douglas, Ill.; from there to Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., and later was ordered to Pilot Knob, Mo., where his regiment was first engaged in battle with the guerrilla bands of the Rebel Colonel Pickett; the regiment, with others of infantry, was placed under the command of General Steele, and took up marching orders to join General Frank Siegel at Pea Ridge, but with guerrilla bands and bushwhackers in front impeding the march, the battle of Pea Ridge was fought before General Steele's arrival. They were then ordered to Jacksonsport, Ark., where, after its arrival, communication was cut off by the rebels, but the timely arrival of General Curtis's command from Pea Ridge relieved them from all being captured as prisoners of war. Under General Curtis the command was ordered to Little Rock, Ark., having to fight their way all along the line of march for two weeks. With superior numbers of rebels in front, the line of march was changed to Helena, on the Mississippi River. From constant exposure, forward marches and attacks by guerrilla bands in front and rear, the little army of General Curtis was badly cut to pieces. On arriving at Helena they went into camp on the low grounds and disease easily took hold of the men, and of those left, one-third of Captain Braffett's company died. After two months in camp, the regiment was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., Captain Braffett contracting the malaria disease that carried so many of his company to death; laid at Helena for two months almost dead, but rallied sufficiently to return to his home, then at New Paris, Ohio. After a short furlough he again returned to his regiment, but the old disease again took hold of him, and prostrated him lower than ever. On account of this disability, he reluctantly tended his resignation. He was discharged in January, 1863, returning to his home, then in Richmond. In 1865 Captain Braffett was elected Assistant Clerk (by the Republicans) of the Indiana House of Representatives, also Assistant Clerk of the special session of that body in the same year, and Journal Clerk of the Indiana State Senate in 1869. Subsequently he became the traveling agent for the wholesale grocery house of William Glenn & Sons, Cincinnati, Ohio, whom he represented for several years and afterward connected himself with the New York house of Francis H. Leggett & Co. In 1880 he resigned his traveling agency and was appointed Deputy Clerk of the Wayne Circuit Court, which position he held for three years, having been (in the meantime) elected Auditor of Wayne County, which responsible office he is now filling, having entered upon his duties Nov. 1, 1883. Captain Braffett is a Mason of high rank, having taken all the degrees conferred by that order in the United States (save the Thirty-third degree). He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was married in 1849 to Sarah A. E. Ireland, of New Paris, Ohio, who died in 1855, leaving three children. One son and daughter reside in Cincinnati, Ohio, and one daughter in Richmond; all married. In January, 1862, Captain Braffett, while in the army, was married to Miss Lizzie J. Mitchell, of Oxford, Ohio. They have three children—two sons and one daughter (unmarried). They reside at No. 36 South Thirteenth street, Richmond. Captain Braffett and family are active members of the United Presbyterian church.

G. R. Boslow was born in Monroe, Mich., in 1833, the youngest of a family of eight children of John and Mary (Condon) Boslow, his father a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1787, and his mother a native of New Brunswick, born in 1796. His parents were married in 1812. His father died in Green County, Wis., April 17, 1848, and his mother in Richmond, Ind., in 1880. His father was a patriot of 1812 and was subsequently connected several years with the Lake Erie & Mad River Railroad. His grandfather, Jacob Boslow, was a native of Germany and died in Brantford, Ontario, Canada, at the age of 101 years. The name was originally spelled Boughslaugh and has been changed by the present generation. Our subject spent his early life in Brantford, Ontario, Green County, Wis., and Hardin County, Ohio. In 1852 he became connected with the Lake Erie & Mad River Railroad, being engaged in relaying the track. He afterward was employed as conductor on the road fourteen years. He then went on the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad, and in 1867 came to Richmond and was employed on the Chicago & Great Eastern Road, remaining there till April, 1883. Mr. Boslow has been a member of the Masonic fraternity and has taken all degrees, including the Knights Templar. He was married to Miss Mary E., daughter of Jacob Holmes, of Kenton, Ohio. They have a family of three children.

Ezra Boswell, deceased, was born in 1788, in England. He learned the trade of a brewer in his native country, and came to the United States in the early part of the present century, settling in North Carolina, where he was married to Elizabeth Kindley. He carried on brewing in North Carolina till 1816, when he moved to Richmond, Wayne Co., Ind., and erected the third frame house in the city, which is still standing on Fort Wayne avenue. He followed his trade in Richmond till his death in 1831. His widow survived him till 1848. They had eleven children, six of whom survive—Anna, widow of Andrew Reid; Daniel K., residing in St. Louis; Rebecca C., wife of Andrew S. Wiggins; Mary, wife of Edward Kindley, who is practicing law in Savannah, Mo.; John K., inventor and patentee of Boswell's Patent Fruit

Drier, now of Thayer County, Neb., and Sarah S., wife of Alanson Sponsler, of Thayer County, Neb. Mr. Boswell was a member of the Friends' Society and in politics was a Whig. His daughter, Rebecca C., is an active worker in the W. C. T. U. She is one of the Trustees of the Home of the Friendless.

Howard Campbell, assistant superintendent of the firm of Gaar, Scott & Co., was born in Wayne County, Ind., a son of Thomas Campbell. He learned the pattern-maker's trade, which he has since superintended. He was married to Maggie Beeler, of Wayne County, who is a daughter of C. C. Beeler.

Thomas Campbell, of the firm of Gaar, Scott & Co., is a son of William and Elizabeth (Parsons) Campbell, his father having died when our subject was a child, his mother surviving him twenty-four years. Thomas learned the carpenter's trade in Pennsylvania, completing it in New York, and in the spring of 1845 he came to Richmond, Ind., and commenced working as a journeyman in the wood shop of J. M. and J. H. Hulton's spring foundry, and for a number of years he was foreman of the pattern shop. He is at present a stock holder in the same firm. Walter T. Carpenter, Trustee of Earlham College, and retired farmer, West Richmond, Ind., is of Welsh descent. His paternal ancestor, seven generations back, Ezra Carpenter, was born in Wiltshire, Wales, in 1550. His two sons were—Richard, born May 15, 1593, and William, born Aug. 28, 1601. The latter never married, became very wealthy and died in England in 1701. The former emigrated to America when a young man and died June 11, 1669. To him were born two sons—Ephraim, in 1623, and John, in 1627. The eldest of these sons was the father of Ephraim, who was born March 4, 1653, about the time of the conversion of the family, under the preaching of George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends. His fourth child, Timothy Carpenter, was born Dec. 19, 1665, and was the father of John, of Oysterberry, who was born June 13, 1690. The latter's eldest son, John, the latter, was born Jan. 7, 1714, and lived and died in New York. His second child was Abram, born in Westchester County, N. Y., Dec. 27, 1738. The tenth of Abram's children, Isaac, was born in Westchester County, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1779, and in maturer years settled in Clinton County, Ohio, where he died Feb. 5, 1836. His wife was Mercy Frost, born in Westchester County, N. Y., in 1781, and died in Ohio in 1816. Of their six children, Walter T. is the fifth, and was born in Albany, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1811. He was reared on a farm in Clinton County, Ohio, and afterward was engaged in merchandising in Wilmington, Ohio, and subsequently in Cincinnati. From 1847 to 1857 he was farming in Warren County, Ohio, and in the latter year moved to Richmond, where he soon after became Superintendent of Earlham College, then a boarding school. He filled the position fifteen years and at the same time was one of a committee of twelve who had charge of the college. In 1880 the management of the college was changed, and control of its affairs vested in twenty-four trustees, Mr. Carpenter being one of the number. Since his appointment as Superintendent of the college, he has lived rather retired on his farm near Richmond. He married Susan Mabie fifty years ago, who was born in New York Dec. 27, 1811. He contributed toward the building up of its benevolent societies, assisted in laying the foundation of the banking interests of the county, and was one of the most influential members of the Society of Friends.

He was the son of Bethuel and Hannah (Dicks) Coffin, and was born in New Garden, Guilford Co., N. C., Nov. 17, 1798. He received a fair education for the early part of the nineteenth century, and taught school some time in his native State. Feb. 2, 1820, he was married to Naomi Hiatt, and settled on a farm in his native county. In 1824 he came to Indiana and located in Milton, Wayne County, and resumed the occupation of teaching. In 1829 he opened a store in Milton, and his fidelity and ability became known to a wholesale firm of Cincinnati, who made him a liberal offer as clerk, and in 1833 he abandoned his store and removed to Cincinnati, remaining there a year and a half. At that time a branch of the Indiana State Bank was located at Richmond, and Mr. Coffin was chosen its Cashier, a position he was admirably fitted for. He therefore, in November, 1834, removed to Richmond. He was the bank's Cashier, holding the position twenty-four years, the limit of the charter. At a final meeting of the Board of Directors, Dec. 24, 1858, the following resolution was offered by Robert Morrisson and adopted: "It is unanimously resolved, That in consideration of the able and faithful services of Elijah Coffin, as Cashier of this branch, from its first organization till its close, and the fidelity and promptitude with which he has discharged the various and important duties confided to his care, the board embraces the opportunity to express upon our minutes the high sense entertained of his official services and private worth." With the closing of the bank Mr. Coffin gave up secular business. His religious affiliations were unabating and unswerving in the Society of Friends. He was at an early age Clerk of the Yearly Meeting in North Carolina, and in 1827 was appointed Clerk of the Indiana Yearly Meeting. Nothing was too arduous for him if it tended to the upbuilding of the society and of mankind. He was a friend of education, Sabbath-schools, and all associations to promote the circulation of tracts and the reading of the Scriptures. He was for many years a life member of the American Bible Society. His death occurred Jan. 22, 1862, and his wife followed him June 14, 1866. Their children were—Miriam A., Charles F., William H., Eliphalet, Caroline E., Mary C. and Hannah, three born in North Carolina and four in Wayne County. Charles F. has, during the greater portion of his life, been in the banking business in Richmond. He was one of the original proprietors of the Citizens' Bank, established in 1853; was Cashier of the Richmond branch of the Bank of the State, and been President of the Richmond National Bank since its organization. After the death of his father he was chosen to fill many of the important positions of the church, and the part taken by his father has been continued by him with equal interest and ability. He married Rhoda Johnson, who is also an able and active worker in the Society of Friends. Their children are—Elijah, Charles H., Francis A., William E. and Percival.

He has been identified with many of the business interests of Richmond, and since 1881 has been a stockholder and Vice-President of the manufacturing establishment of Haynes, Spencer & Co., Richmond. Although the land was in the unbroken forest it had a frame house on it, a thing rarely seen in those days. He continued agricultural life till 1850, when he moved to Richmond and became established in the mercantile business, and has now one of the oldest dry-goods and carpet houses in the city, doing business under the firm name of D. B. Crawford & Son. Mr. Crawford has held at various times different offices of honor and trust in the city and county. He was County Commissioner from 1850 till 1870, with the exception of six years. He has been a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church many years and has always been a liberal supporter of its interests. He was one of the building committee of the new Methodist church on East Main street. He was married in Baltimore, Md., June 10, 1828, to Agnes Corrie. He then went into the shop of Gaar, Scott & Co. to learn the molder's trade and has since been in their employ, and since 1858 has been foreman of that department. In later life he became more liberal in his views and adhered to the doctrine of Swedenborg. He married Jane Eiver, and she died in New Bedford, Mass., leaving five children. He subsequently married Alice Eiver, a sister of his first wife, who died in 1850, leaving seven children. He died in 1855. Our subject is his tenth child. When sixteen years of age he began learning the carriage-maker's trade, working at it fourteen years. He was obliged to abandon his trade on account of ill health and was employed as salesman for Zimmer & Emswiler. In 1861 Mr. Zimmer retired from the firm and Mr. Crocker bought a half interest in the business. Henry T. Davis, M. D., Richmond, Ind., was born on the Island of Nantucket, Mass., Sept. 29, 1836, the oldest son of Henry W. and Lydia Cartwright Davis. Born in rugged New England and reared on her stormy coast, he inherited a robust constitution and imbibed the energizing influence of his early surroundings. The subject of this sketch was educated under the public-school system of his native island. An apt scholar, he found no difficulty in maintaining his rank in his class; his special taste, however, was for mathematical studies, in which he excelled. Having completed his school life at the early age of seventeen, he commenced the study of medicine with William P. Cross, M. D., of Nantucket. For three years this was continued, during which time he attended two courses of lectures at the Cleveland Medical College, subsequently graduating at the Homeopathic Medical College of Missouri, St. Louis. During the year 1857 a few months were spent in the South, where, finding no satisfactory location, he again turned toward the New England States, but on his way was arrested by the thought that to return was no evidence of success. Suddenly he determined to try the West, and without any particular point in view he drifted to Richmond, Ind., his present residence, where the evidences of thrift and prosperity arrested his course and determined his future. The following year he was married to Louisa G. McDonald, of Oxford, Ohio, and to her rare endowments he attributes much of his subsequent success in life. Having no aspirations except to succeed in his profession, twenty years of fixed residence, with hardly a month's respite, have resulted in a competency that is satisfactory and a professional reputation that is unquestioned. Buoyant of disposition and of untiring energy, he has overridden many obstacles in life and resolved what would otherwise have been failures into success. Enthused with local pride he has served since 1869, except a brief interval, as a member of the City Council, and for a similar period as President of the Board of Health, sacrificing much time to promote the city's interests. He is a member of the Knights Templar and the Masonic Order. He is also a member of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church. Of unblemished personal character, he still lives one among the many examples of what energy and application will accomplish.

The two latter died in childhood. Mrs. Dodge died in May, 1844. In August, 1849, Mr. Dodge married Nancy Ann Robey, who was born Aug. 13, 1803. Mrs. Dodge is a member of the Christian church. He lived with his parents on the farm until he was sixteen, received an academical education in Richmond, since which time he has engaged in mercantile pursuits, eleven years being devoted to the lumber trade. He has served two terms as a member of the City Council, and is now one of the Directors of the Richmond Business Men's Exchange, and has always taken an active interest in the growth and prosperity of his native city. When twelve years of age he began clerking in a dry-goods house in Harrisburg, Pa., remaining there until his parents came to Indiana. In December, 1847, he came to Richmond, obtaining employment of Strattan & Wright, afterward Benjamin Strattan, remaining with them for five years. In 1855 he accepted a position in the Citizens Bank, tendered him by Morrisson, Blanchard & Co., proprietors, remaining there until March, 1857, when he formed a partnership with Christian Zimmer, the firm name being Zimmer & Emswiler. Three years later Mr. Zimmer retired from the firm, and Mr. Emswiler became associated with Alvin E. Crocker. After six years of successful business, Mr. Crocker retired from the firm and Mr. Emswiler continued alone about two years. Disposing of his stock he retired from the active duties of the merchant to a less perplexing and more quiet life. He is not a member of any religious denomination, but does not, therefore, have less faith in every good work, moral and intellectual, which tends to the elevation of his race. He has been twice married. His first wife was Martha A., daughter of Andrew and Mary Finley, and a niece of John Finley, Esq., for many years Mayor of the city of Richmond.

They had three children—Charles F., Albert F. and Mary Alice, the latter of whom alone survives. Mrs. Emswiler died April 6, 1877. Mr. Emswiler afterward married Attilia R., daughter of George W. Goodrich, of Peru, Ind. She departed this life Feb. 20, 1881, aged thirty-nine years.

His mother was a native of Burlington, Vt., and a lineal descendant of General Zachary Taylor. His parents were married in 1821, and in 1839 settled in Butler County, Ohio, where his father died Aug. 1 and his mother Aug. 17, 1849, of cholera. His father taught a school of thirty-five pupils near Middletown, five of whom were his own children. At the death of his parents the family were left in limited circumstances, and the four youngest children were provided with homes, while the older ones went to learn trades. Our subject carried brick for masons until the November following his parents' death and then began learning the blacksmith's trade with Kline & Lockwood, serving an apprenticeship of three years. He received $3 a month and his board and washing the first year, $4 a month the second year, and $5 the third year. During the entire time he lost but nine days, three of which were occasioned by the death of a sister. In the fall of 1852 he opened a shop in West Milton, Ohio, which he carried on till 1859, when he worked as a journeyman in Eaton, Indianapolis, and Richmond, in the latter place for S. R. Lipencott. They took part in the closing scenes of the battle of Perryville, in the battles of Stone River and Chattanooga, and also all the battles incident to the Atlanta campaign. Feb.

4, 1865, he was mustered out on account of expiration of his term of service and was recommended by Governor Morton as Major and assigned to the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Infantry and served till September, 1865. Three of his brothers served through the entire war as Captains and all returned home uninjured. After his return home he formed a partnership with D. B. Strattan and carried on a blacksmith shop till September, 1878, when a partnership was formed with J. J. Chase, under the firm name of Chase & Finney, and carried on a rag house four years. In 1869 he was appointed Assistant Assessor in the Revenue Department, and served till the office was abolished. In February, 1880, he was elected by the Upper and Lower House of Indiana to the office of Director of the State prison, South, at Jefferson, and Oct. 1, 1883, was elected Chief of Police of Richmond. In 1853 Mr. Finney joined the Odd Fellows fraternity at Eaton, Ohio, and in 1865 transferred his membership to Lodge No. 254, Richmond. He has represented the lodge and encampment in the Grand Lodge and Encampment of the State, and has held all the important offices of both lodge and encampment. He is also a member of the A. P. A., the Red Men, Knights of Pythias, and is now Quartermaster of Sol. Meredith's Post, No. 69, G. A. R. Politically he is a Republican. His father was so much an Abolitionist that he would not support General Taylor, and used to say to his sons, "I may not live to see it, but you, my boys, will see, ere twenty years go over your heads, that there will be no Whig and Democratic parties, but in their stead a Union and Anti-Union party, and a great war between the North and South where rivers of blood will flow, and when that time comes I want you to be on the side of freedom, right and justice." Mr. Finney has been true to his father's injunction and takes an active part in all political matters. He was reared in the Methodist church, and though not a member of any church has a preference for that denomination. He was married Dec. 26, 1855, to Sallie A. Long, of Eaton, Ohio. They have three daughters—Cora L., now Mrs. J. E. Jones; Lizzie M., now Mrs. Will H. Campbell, and Ida. The two eldest are graduates of the Richmond High School and were teachers in the city schools several years.

J. G. Ford is a native of Oxford, Chester Co., Pa., born March 6, 1845. In April, 1861, he entered the Signal Service of the United States Army and served till October, 1865. He endured many hardships and privations; was with the fleet that sailed from Fortress Monroe to Port Royal, S. C., March 28, 1867. He was employed as switchman on the C. & G. E. Railroad, at Chicago, Ill., and has been eighteen years in the employ of the road, now known as the Pan Handle Railway; he having the position of brakeman, baggage-master, bill clerk, baggage agent, and in December, 1882, was appointed baggage agent at Richmond, Ind. Mr. Ford is a member of Lodge No. 196, F. & A. M., and Banner Lodge, No. 359, I. O. O. F., New London, Pa.

Simon Fox, merchant tailor, No. 714 Main street, Richmond, Ind. There is, perhaps, no firm in Richmond, in the same line of business, so well known as that of Simon Fox. Commencing the business as junior member of the firm of Kern & Fox, merchant tailors, in the building now occupied by Irvin Reed & Sons, in 1865, this house is deserving of more than ordinary mention. Continuing as a member of that firm for five years Mr. Fox purchased the interest of his partner and removed to the northeast corner of Sixth and Main streets, where he remained for over ten years, establishing an extensive trade throughout this and adjoining counties. On the 2d of March, 1881, he removed his stock of goods to No. 714 Main street, in Vaughan's new block, the largest and handsomest business structure in the city. The store-room is 18 x 95 feet in size, fitted with walnut counters, a handsome all plate-glass front, with a stock of piece goods equal in variety, quality and selection to any similar concern in the State. Mr. Fox, in busy seasons, employs about twenty hands. Mr. Fox is a native of France; came to America in 1855, and has been a resident of this city eighteen years. He has attained the rank of leader in his line of business, and is, deservedly, so credited.

Robert Furnace, M. D., was born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1830; a son of Seth and Dinah (Kindley) Furnace, his father of English and his mother of German descent, he being able to trace his ancestry to 1630 on the father's side and to 1680 on the mother's. For many generations the ancestors have been Friends, his grandmother and mother both being ministers in that society. He, for many years, has been an acknowledged minister and since coming to Richmond has been prominently identified with and has labored efficiently for the society. The family has figured prominently in political circles, a great uncle, Wilkinson Furnace, having represented Ohio in the United States Senate. The Furnace family settled in Ohio from South Carolina in 1803, in Miami and Warren counties, our subject's grand-parents locating in the latter county. His mother was a native of that county and his father of South Carolina. To them were born four children—Davis, Robert, Mary, and an infant (deceased). Dr. Furnace was reared a farmer, but began reading medicine in Waynesville, Ohio, and in 1863 began the practice of his profession. He graduated from the Homeopathic department of Pulte Medical School, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1875, after having practiced thirteen years. He came to Richmond in 1881, where he now has a good practice. He was married in 1853 to Bethiah Mosher, a native of what is now Morrow County, Ohio. To them have been born eight children, but five of whom are living—Mary, wife of William T. Frame; Seth W., Eunice, Phœbe and Robert H.'

Abram Gaar.—In all ages there has been no class of literature more sought after in public libraries, and its pages more earnestly perused, than that of biography, and especially is the history of men's lives interesting, who entered the wilds of any new country and claimed the virgin soils as their heritage. The reader finds it wonderfully absorbing from the first to the last chapter, and then there is a powerful impulse to read it over and over again. The trials, and successes of the early settlers; their wars and treaties with Indians; captures, escapes and almost miraculous recoveries of women and children; great conspiracies, which only lacked success to change the history of our country and turn backward for a whole century the course of civilization; romance, sentiment, toil, tribulation and gigantic achievements of a class of brave and hardy men and women, of whom their descendants can not learn enough, will probably never find a more complete and attractive record than in the present volume.

Had not Homer tuned his lofty lyre, observes Cicero, the valor of Achilles had remained unsung. The valor of our pioneers was never surpassed, and with another Homer to celebrate their achievements the grandest epic in all literature would enrapture our age.

In the class of pioneer settlers of Wayne county to whom such honors are due, we record that of the Gaar family, who have from 1807 brilliantly marked a pathway in the history of Wayne County.

The family are of German extraction, but the time the ancestors first stepped on American soil is not definitely known. Abraham Gaar (grandfather of the President of Gaar, Scott & Co.'s Machine Works) was born in Hanover County, Va., Feb. 28, 1796, and grew to manhood in his native State, a living witness to many of the hardships of the war that freed America from English tyranny. He married Dinah Weaver who was also a native of Virginia and of German extraction. In 1805 they with their family moved to Kentucky, but afterward thought a more desirable location could be found and accordingly, in the spring of 1807, made their advent into what is now Boston Township, Wayne Co., Ind. Here Abraham entered from the Government a quarter-section of wild land. The programme was first to fell the trees and open out a spot on which to raise the necessities of life together with that of erecting a rude log cabin in which to move his family. Ere long the bleak winds of winter began to play about the pioneer's home, and chinking and plastering the openings in the log hut became a duty, in order to secure comfortable quarters for the winter. Even in this early day, when churches and the glad tidings of salvation were seldom proclaimed aloud, this noble family never neglected the duty to their God, hence were ever faithful members in the regular Baptist church and were noble assistants in establishing a church of their choice. They were ever active in every good work. He succeeded well through life; although he came to Wayne County comparatively poor, by good management, willing hands and a brave heart he accumulated a good property. Aug. 20, 1861, ended the earthly career of one of the noblest pioneers of Wayne County, viz.: Abraham Gaar. His wife, Dinah, died Sept. 26, 1834, aged sixty-six years, ten months and one day.

They were the parents of eight children—Jonas; Fielding, who died in Utah; Larkin, who now resides on the old homestead in Boston Township; Abel, now resides in Michigan; Fannie, deceased, wife of William Lamb, of Iowa; Rosa, deceased, wife of John Ingels; Martha, wife of Jephtha Turner, and Eliza J., wife of Thomas Henderson, of Iowa. Jonas, the father of our subject (Abram), was born in Madison County, Va., Feb. 1, 1792. He and his younger brother, Fielding, were both soldiers in the Indian war of 1812, doing duty on the frontier in defense of the homes and lives of the border settlers. Jonas being a youth of fifteen when his father settled in Eastern Indiana among the wilds of nature, it became his duty to assist in clearing up his fathers farm, which he nobly performed. On reaching his majority, having acquired a limited education only, in the pioneer schools, he thought it advisable to take up some trade and accordingly settled upon that of cabinet-making, and in 1820 settled in the hamlet of Richmond to conduct his trade, where he continued several years. He was a man of progress and advancement, and in 1835 he, in company with Abel Thornley and Job W. Swain, established a foundry and machine shop, which was put into operation by the water draining from a swamp into the river near where the present county jail is located. This enterprise only survived a few years, and for about one decade he was identified with other interests. In 1849 he, together with his sons Abram and John M., and son-in-law, Wm. G. Scott, bought of Jesse M. and John A. Hutton, their machine works, which later grew into the extensive spring foundry, subsequently into the Gaar Machine Works, and lastly into the Gaar, Scott & Co.'s Machine Works. Jonas Gaar lived to be identified in the history of the above works until June 21, 1875, when death released his earthly cares. He was through life an active worker in all causes tending to elevate society and to the upbuilding of mankind. His wife, to whom he was joined in 1818, was Sarah Watson, a native of Kentucky, and died Nov. 8, 1863. They had eight children—Abram, born Nov. 14, 1819; Malinda, born Nov. 11, 1821; John Milton, born May 26, 1823; Samuel W., born Oct. 22, 1824; Fielding, born Jan. 1, 1827; Emeline, born June 16, 1829; Elizabeth, born July 27, 1831; Fannie A., born Oct. 5, 1833. Abram, the eldest of the family, and now President of the Gaar, Scott & Co. Machine Works, is a native of Wayne County. His father moved to Richmond when he (Abram) was in infancy, hence he has been almost a life-long citizen of the city of Richmond. His boyhood and youthful days were spent in his father's cabinet shop together with some time in the primitive schools of that day. Having been an apprentice with his father a few years, in 1835, when his father engaged in the foundry, Abram being a natural mechanic, worked at pattern-making, building wooden machinery, etc., though but about eighteen years old, but misfortune soon over-took his father and Abram was soon out of employment in that institution. During the years of 1839 and 1840 he worked with Ellis Nordyke at millwrighting. At this period hard times were inevitable and he gave up mechanics for a time and turned his attention to a literary pursuit. He attended school for some time and in 1842 closed his last session with James M. Poe as teacher. In 1843 he resumed mechanical labor by engaging with J. M. & J. H. Hutton in the Old Spring Foundry machine shops. Here he devoted his time closely letting his wages stand until 1849 when he, his father, brother J. M., and brother-in-law Wm. G. Scott bought the foundry and started under the name of A. Gaar & Co. Here the foundation was laid for the future extensive manufactory of Indiana. From this junction to the present Mr. Garr has been closely identified with the works. Politically Mr. Gaar was reared a Democrat and so continued until the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, when he left the party and became a Republican from that time forward, although he is not an office seeker. He belongs to no secret order, but has at all times been in sympathy with and advocated the cause of temperance. In 1867 Mr. Gaar became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which his wife, to whom he was joined March 26, 1851, also belongs. He has always been a liberal contributor in all enterprises tending to elevate mankind and society, and toward the erection of the First Methodist Church in Richmond in 1883, he contributed over $5,000. In 1868 he was elected one of the Trustees of the Home for the Friendless Women, where he served about nine years without remuneration, which he did cheerfully. In 1876 he erected a very superior residence on his farm two miles from the city, where he now lives with every comfort and pleasure necessary to life.

C. A. Gaar, pattern-maker, son of A. Gaar, was born April 13, 1859, in Richmond, where he has always resided. He learned the pattern-maker's trade, and has worked in the establishment of Gaar, Scott & Co. several years. He was married to Fannie McMeans, who was born Oct. 5, 1864, and is a daughter of A. L. McMeans, of this city.

John M. Gaar, of the firm of Garr, Scott & Co., is a son of Jonas Gaar. He was born in Richmond, May 26, 1823, and in early life he learned his trade in his father's shop. He has been connected with the extensive machine works from its organization as stockholder and Director, and has served most of the time as Treasurer. Within the last few years he has devoted his time to stock-raising and attending to his extensive farm in Henry County, Ind. He was married Jan. 20, 1848, to Hannah A. Rattray, who died June 6, 1849, and Sept. 16, 1856, he was again married to Helen M. Rattray, who was born March 2, 1840.

Samuel W. Gaar, of Gaar, Scott & Co., was born Oct. 22, 1824, in Richmond, a son of Jonas Gaar. He received a limited education in the common schools, and when fourteen years of age began working in the blacksmith's shop of the Richmond foundry, remaining there till 1841, having been one of the leading smiths for a number of years. When the machine works were reorganized and changed to Gaar, Scott & Co., he became one of the stockholders. Oct. 19, 1865, he married Mrs. Elizabeth (Kirklen) Townsend, widow of William Townsend, and a native of Preble County, Ohio, born in 1832. She has four children—Clinton, William, Henry and James. Mr. Gaar has been a member of the I. O. O. F. fraternity a number of years.

Jacob Getz was born in Wirtemberg, Germany, in December, 1832, a son of John and Mary Getz. His parents were in limited circumstances, and being one of five children, his educational advantages were meager. His parents died when he was quite young, and in 1854 he came to America and settled in New Jersey. In 1857 he removed to Ohio, and in 1858 to Richmond, Ind. He worked in the oil-mill till 1861, when he enlisted in Company D, Eighth Indiana Infantry, for three months. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted for three years in Company C, Second Indiana Cavalry. He participated in the battles of Pittsburg Landing, Vinegar Hill and Gallitan. In the fall of 1864 he returned home and again went to work in the oil-mill, remaining there seven years. He then opened a grocery and provision store at No. 829 North Tenth street, where he is doing a good business. He was married in 1866 to Setta Sheibler. They have two children—John J. and Clara E. Mr. and Mrs. Getz are members of the St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church. He is a member of the Odd Fellow's order and the German Benevolent Society.

Josiah Gilbert was born in Wales, and when a child was brought to America by his parents. He grew to maturity in North Carolina, and married Mary Nixon, a native of that State. About the year 1812 he moved with his family to Wayne County, Ind., and entered a large tract of land, a part of which lies in the south part of Richmond. He cleared and cultivated this land to a considerable extent, and about 1830 he entered a large tract of land in Dudley Township, Henry Co., Ind., where he resided till his death. His wife survived him several years. Of his children, Morris, the second youngest, was born in 1817, south of Richmond. He followed farming through life, and died in Plainfield, Ind., in February, 1880. He was twice married. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of John Elliott, of Wayne County, and to this union two children were born. J. B., the youngest, was born in Henry County, Ind., in 1840, and in 1860 came to Richmond, where he was employed as clerk till 1866, since which he has been in business for himself, and is the oldest boot and shoe merchant in the city. Since 1869 he has occupied the store at 820 Main street, where he carries a full line of boots and shoes, and has in his employ eight regular salesmen and three workmen. He is a genial good fellow and has a big trade.

Isaac A. Gormon, Sheriff, Wayne County, Ind., was born in Highland County, Ohio, Dec. 25, 1847, a son of John W. and Priscilla (Johnson) Gormon. When sixteen years of age, Sept. 3, 1863, he enlisted in Company E, Seventh Indiana Cavalry, but only served four months, when his father took the proper steps to have him released. In 1864 he began working at the blacksmith's trade at Louisville, Ind., and subsequently worked at different places in the State, and came to Richmond in 1866, worked in different shops, and in 1868 commenced work for Stratton & Finney; worked seven years. He then opened a shop with William L. Thomas. In 1878 he was appointed Deputy Sheriff under William H. Trindle, and in the fall of 1882 was elected Sheriff, running ahead of his ticket by several hundred. Politically he is a Republican. He is a member of the Odd Fellows' fraternity, having taken all the degrees, and also in the encampment. In 1875 he represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge of Indiana. He is also a member of the order of Red Men, the Independent Order of Mechanics, and a charter member of Iola Lodge, No. 53, K. of P. Mr. Gormon was married in 1871 to Mrs. Mary E. (Strickler) Moore, daughter of John Strickler. They have one son.

ing to Richmond. His wife died in Delaware. They were the parents of five sons—Enos, Jonathan, Jacob, Nathan and John. The four former came to Wayne County, but the latter remained in Delaware. Enos settled about four miles northeast of Richmond, and cleared a farm. He brought a family of wife and six children with him, none of whom are living. Jacob brought a wife and eight children to Wayne County, only one of whom, Joseph C., now lives in Wayne County. He was by trade a tailor, but only worked at it a little after coming to the county. He was a strong anti-slavery man and a staunch Whig and Republican. He died soon after Lincoln's proclamation. Nathan settled three and a half miles from Richmond, and followed farming through life. The great-grandfather of our subject was born in Wales, but was banished from his native land when a young man, on account of his Protestant ideas, and came to America, locating in the Atlantic States. His family consisted of three sons and two daughters. James settled in Richmond, Va., where he became wealthy. One daughter married a Mr. Lynch, founder of Lynchburg, Va. Of Robert and the other daughter but little is known. Obediah, the grandfather of our subject, was a Quaker preacher, and settled in Guilford County, N. C., where he lived till 1810, when he came to Indiana and settled in New Garden Township, Wayne County. In early life he was very active and energetic, and possessed a wonderful power of endurance, but as his age advanced his weight increased, and for many years before his death it exceeded 300 pounds. He was very successful but by his confidence in his fellow men was reduced to medium circumstances, although he is now again in the enjoyment of affluence, and is living retired from active business pursuits. Politically he has been a Whig and Republican, and was one of the first in his township to take a decided part in the anti-slavery movement. He removed to Kentucky about 1793, but shortly after settled in Montgomery County, Ohio. Early in the present century he settled on Greens Fork, Clay Township, Wayne Co., Ind., where he experienced all the privations of pioneer life till his death, in 1817. He was a member of the Society of Friends. His wife, Rachel, died at Washington, Ind. Their children—Thomas, Jonas, John, Nathan, Deborah, Rachel, Mary and Ann—all settled in Wayne County. He resided there many years and followed the carpenter's trade and kept an inn. The latter part of his life was spent in Wabash, Ind., until a few years previous to his death, when he returned to Washington, and died in 1853. His wife survived him till 1875. Their children all lived to maturity and contributed to raise their home from its primitive state. They all married, and excepting two are still living. Their posterity are scattered over several States of the Union, and are engaged in agriculture, mechanics, arts, commerce, ministry, law and literature. The family in all its branches has been remarkable for one thing—though reared amidst many temptations and opportunities to form habits of dissipation, there has not been a drunkard in the family, and nearly all of the posterity belong to some religious society, among which we mention Dunkards, Albrights, Methodists and Lutherans.

They had a family of nine children—James, Catharine, William, Mary, Ruth, Robert, Hannah, Deborah and Simon. Robert and James came to Indiana in 1810; the latter was killed by lightning. They first settled in Newport, Wayne County, purchasing a small farm on Middle Fork of Whitewater River, eight miles north of the city. Wiggins. He was instrumental in having the National road piked through the county, after it had been turned over to the State. He was President and Superintendent of the road and did much to increase the value of property. Robert Morrisson was a man of public spirit and contributed largely to all enterprises tending to the elevation of mankind and society. One of the noblest achievements of his life was the establishing of the Morrisson Library. He was Legislative Director of the First State Bank of Indiana. His father bought 160 acres in Wayne Township for $400, nearly all unimproved. He was by trade a blacksmith and followed that occupation after coming to Indiana, exchanging work in the shop for having his land cleared. He joined the Society of Friends after reaching manhood, and faithfully adhered to its doctrines through life, serving the society as a minister. He died in April, 1824, and his wife died in 1843. They had a family of nine children—Andrew, Joseph, Hannah, Mary, Ruth, John, Jane, Nancy and Elihu. E. J. Mote was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 21, 1836. His great-grandfather was a native of England, and came to this country a short time prior to the Revolutionary war, and at its close, when the tide of emigration set in for the Southern States, he went with it accompanied by a brother, and settled in the State of Georgia, where numerous descendants still can be found. From here his grandfather, David Mote, emigrated to Miami County, Ohio, in 1802, where he lived until his death in 1862. Here Mr. Mote's father, Luke S. Mote (a distinguished horticulturist and florist), was born in 1812, and still resides. Mr. Mote, the subject of our sketch, was reared in his native county, on a farm, working also a good deal at the nursery business and gardening, and teaching school during the winter seasons. He had inborn an insatiate thirst for knowledge, and the fine arts especially, and finally, in 1864, he severed his connection with his native place and came to Richmond, where he worked a considerable time at the machinist's business. But his health beginning to fail and this occupation not filling his expectations in his search for knowledge, he finally left the shop and entered the photographer's studio, under the instructions of Maxwell & Estell, and eventually started in business for himself. A part of the time he was in partnership with J. H. Swaine, but latterly with his brother, Wm. Aldine Mote, a fine workman and artist in crayons, oil and india ink. Thus for nearly twenty years he has been one of the leading spirits in the fine-art science of photography. He now has turned his attention mostly to out-door view work, in which he excels, as brother photographers readily admit. In addition to his regular occupation, Mr. Mote is a hard student, occupying all spare time by day, and nightly burning the midnight oil in his studies in astronomy, chemistry, meteorology and geology. The last-named science especially is a favorite, and he has collected and studied the various fossils at Richmond, and, by exchanges, those of other parts of the United States, until he now has a cabinet or museum, including archæology, of no small value. This, together with his unflagging perseverance and a wonderfully retentive memory as to scientific nomenclature, gives him an advantage possessed by few, argues favorably for him yet to make his mark in the scientific world, should life and health be his for a few years longer. Mr. Mote was united in marriage with Hannah A., daughter of Isaac L. and Sarah Dickinson, on Dec. 2, 1869, at Richmond. They have an interesting family of six children, five sons and one daughter, growing up around them.

Timothy Nicholson was born in Perquimans County, N. C., Nov. 2, 1828, a son of Josiah and Anna (White) Nicholson. He was reared on a farm, but received his education in the best schools. Prior to his eighteenth year his instruction was mainly received in the Belvidere Academy. He then attended the Friends' school at Providence, R. I., nearly two years, and subsequently was Principal of Belvidere Academy six years. At this time he took charge of the preparatory department of Haverford College, near Philadelphia, Pa., and four years later was given the general superintendency of the college. At the end of two years he resigned and moved to Richmond, Ind., in 1861, to join his brother John in the book and stationery business. He has at all times manifested an interest in all public enterprises. For nineteen years he has been a Trustee of Earlham College. From 1868 till 1875 and from 1877 to 1880 he was a Trustee of the Indiana State Normal School, at Terre Haute. From 1872 till 1877 he was a Trustee of the Home for the Friendless, at Richmond. Mr. Nicholson has taken an active interest in the temperance cause from early life. For fourteen years he has been Clerk of the Yearly Meeting of Ministers and Elders of the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, and was Clerk of the Whitewater Monthly Meeting, comprising four congregations, twelve years. He was married Aug. 11, 1853, to Sarah N., daughter of John and Mary White. They had a family of three sons and one daughter. His wife died Sept. 26, 1865, and April 30, 1868, he married Mary S., a sister of his first wife. They have two daughters. Mr. Nicholson is a practical philanthropist, manifesting his regard for humanity chiefly through the channels of the church and of education and temperance, and with an interest that amounts to enthusiasm.

William T. Noble, Clerk of the Wayne Circuit Court.—In the political, official and social circles of the State of Indiana none have figured more conspicuously than the ancestors of our subject. In early life Mr. Noble received but a limited education, but later he applied himself to study, and acquired a good understanding of all practical subjects. Soon after settling in Centreville he was appointed Collector of State and County Revenue, serving till Aug. 20, 1840, when he assumed the duties of Sheriff of Wayne County. He served as Sheriff two terms, retiring Aug. 19, 1844. The same month he was elected Clerk of the Wayne Circuit Court, and served till 1852. His great-grandfather came from England with William Penn and was present when the latter made his famous treaty with the Indians. The parents of the subject of this sketch removed to Indiana Territory in 1810, and settled a mile northwest of Richmond. Here they lived, among the Indians, but were not molested by them on account of their principles, though all other families in the neighborhood were obliged to remove during the trouble between the Shawnees and Pottawatomies. Cornelius inherited the home farm and still lives upon it. He was married June 12, 1822, to Mary Kindley, of Warren County, Ohio, a grand-daughter of John Rudolph Waymire, who came from the kingdom of Hanover (where he had been one of the king's body-guard) to Pennsylvania prior to the American Revolution. Mary Ratliff was a true type of pioneer womanhood, and nobly assisted her husband in all his undertakings. Few men in Eastern Indiana have done more to develop and improve the country than Cornelius Ratliff. He has ever been liberal in assisting every worthy undertaking. He began the nursery business in 1822 and continued it for more than thirty years, furnishing trees to various parts of Indiana and neighboring States. He has always followed farming and has been very successful. In politics he was formerly a Whig and is now a Republican. He was strongly opposed to slavery, and was among the early Abolitionists. He has been a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and is one of the most devoted and consistent adherents of that faith, always active in religious work. Subsequently he taught school several terms, then in 1850 took up the study of dentistry, and in connection took a full course of medical lectures at the Western Reserve College. After practicing dentistry one year he engaged for the same time, near Richmond, in manufacturing paper; then resumed farming, in which he is still engaged. In 1865 he was elected Justice of the Peace, and since he has gradually been elected to higher offices of honor and trust until 1875, when he was chosen by the people of Wayne County as a Representative to the State Legislature, and while serving in that body he served on the Committees on Education and the Sinking Fund. Not only did he display an interest in education while in the State Assembly, but his interest increased with his age, and he has since filled some very important positions in the educational history of the State, none of which are more worthy of note than the one he now occupies, President of the Board of Trustees of the Purdue University. As an agriculturist and horticulturist he has always displayed a special interest, and is deserving of considerable credit, as is seen in the chapter devoted to horticulture. He has been an able contributor to publications devoted to agriculture, and from 1860 to 1866 edited the agricultural department of the Richmond Telegram. Politically he is an earnest Republican; religiously, a Friend, in which society he has a birthright and is an earnest worker. He is imbued with all that goes to make up a strong temperance man. In the fall of 1823 he removed to Richmond, Ind., and became clerk in the store of James McGuire, and later filled the same position in the store of Robert Morrisson. Having had several years' experience and acquired some means, in 1828 he associated himself in business with Joseph P. Strattan and for ten years was a pioneer merchant in Richmond. One year after associating with Strattan he was appointed Postmaster of Richmond, which position he filled in connection with his store, until his appointment in 1838, by President Van Buren, as Register of the Land-office at Fort Wayne, Ind., which position he filled with credit and honor, but about 1843 he settled on a farm in Allen County, Ind., and in 1855 returned to Richmond, where he engaged in the grocery business with his son, William S., and N. S. Leeds, until the firm changed to Reid & Vanne-man, where he was employed, and while thus engaged moved to his farm one and a half miles west of town, and up to the time of his death was living on his farm, but in the employ of Reid & Beeler. His death occurred March 3, 1873. He died as he had lived—happy, having been for many years a member of and Ruling Elder in the United Presbyterian church at Richmond. He was twice married ; first, to Letitia, daughter of William Scott, who was born in the North of Ireland and came to America when sixteen years old, and died in Allen County, Ind., in 1854. This union had born to them seven children—William Scott, of whom further notice is given; Mary Ann, who died in infancy; Mary Ann, wife of Franklin P. Randall, an attorney of Fort Wayne; James P.; Margaret, unmarried and died February, 1883; Hannah M., who died in 1833, and Robert Morrisson, who emigrated to California in 1852. Our subject, Daniel, married for his second wife, in October, 1854, Mrs. Ann Dougan, then living in Niles, Mich., and a daughter of Isaac Gray, an early pioneer merchant of Richmond. This union had born to them two children—Daniel Gray, now of the Second National Bank of Richmond, and Emma Virginia, wife of Oliver Bogue, both graduates of Earlham College and now residents of Wabash, Ind., where he is practicing law. William Scott, the elder of the above family, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., Dec. 10, 1818, and was brought by his parents to Preble County, Ohio, when three years old. William S., subsequent to his marriage, devoted twelve years on a farm in Allen County, thence returned to Richmond and was for three years in the dry-goods business; then in the grocery and grain trade for many years; subsequently he became one of the prime movers in the establishment of the pork-packing business in Richmond, as is elsewhere seen, in which he is still engaged. He, as was his father before him, is a member of and Ruling Elder in the United Presbyterian church of Richmond, and of him most of the history of that church was obtained. Soon after entering the land, in 1806, he erected a rude cabin on the present corner of Thirteenth and South A streets, and cleared away a few forest trees, and cleared a small patch where the house of Marcus Motes now stands, fenced it with brush and planted it with turnips. In 1812 Thomas Roberts built a hewed-log house on the lot which is now used by his son, Jonathan Roberts, as a stable. He died Sept. 25, 1840, and his wife Oct. 28, 1840. His father died in Greene County, Ohio, in 1851, and his mother in 1857. His mother was educated at West-town Boarding School, near Philadelphia, Pa., and was subsequently one of the best teachers in Ohio. His father enlisted in the war of 1812, as nurse and assistant surgeon. At the close of the war he returned to Cincinnati, intending to make it his future home. At that time there were but seven or eight families who were members of the Friend's Society in the place and they had no meeting house, holding their meetings at members' houses. Being a birthright member, Mr. Shaw wished to be married according to the order of the society, and wrote a subscription paper, circulated it among Friends and raised $500, and with it bought of Nicholas Longworth nearly two acres of ground with a one-story log-house on it, on the corner of John and Fifth streets, which was repaired and used as a meeting-house for fifty years, when their present two-story brick meeting-house was built. Mr. and Mrs. John Shaw were the first couple married in this house in 1814. Edward Shaw was reared on a farm and in early life learned the tanner's trade in Reading, Ohio. He has the copyright of Shaw's Railroad Liniment, a botanic preparation which is a speedy cure for rheumatism, neuralgia, burns, bruises, headache, etc., and taken internally is a valuable remedy for neuralgia of the stomach, cholera morbus, etc. This liniment is gaining a wide reputation. Mr. Shaw was married Aug. 27, 1840, to Peninnah, daughter of Robert Hill. She was born Feb. 23, 1817. They have had a family of eight children—Elizabeth, deceased; Robert H.; Rebecca, deceased; Mary E., wife of Louis K. Harris; John, of St. Louis, Mo.; Henry C., William T., and Susan B.

Jacob Sheffer is a son of Daniel Sheffer, and grandson of Daniel Sheffer, Sr. The latter was of German descent, but a native of Pennsylvania. In later life he removed to Wythe County, Va., and in 1812 came to Wayne County, Ind., and bought a quarter-section in Boston Township, and also entered a small farm just over the line in Ohio. He married Anna Hudlow, of Virginia. She died in 1832 and he in 1834. They had a family of ten children—Andrew, Jacob, Daniel, Michael, John, Sarah, Catherine, Elizabeth, Anna and Margaret. Sarah is the only one living, and resides in Whitley County, Ind. Daniel was born in Wythe County, Va., and in 1811 married Catharine Keesling, a native of Virginia, of German descent. They came to Wayne County that same year, and he soon after took part in the Indian war. He entered a small farm in Ohio, but lived on a part of his father's farm in Boston Township, a part of which he subsequently inherited. He buried his wife a short time previous to the late war, and he died soon after. They had a family of eight children—Martin, deceased; Jacob; Ann, wife of Clark Gray, of Wabash County, Ind.; George, deceased; Mary, now Mrs. Eli Wilson, of Wabash County, Ind.; Sarah, wife of James Feasel, of Boston Township; Aima, wife of Leroy McWhinney, of Adair County, Iowa; John, residing on the old homestead in Boston Township. Our subject was born in Wayne County, Ind., April 22, 1814. He was reared a farmer, and assisted his father in clearing his farm. In 1877 he moved to Richmond, and now has a handsome residence at 110 North Seventh street. He bought his first land in 1843, and added to it till he owned nearly 1,000 acres. He now has but 412 acres, having given the rest to his children. Politically he is a Republican. He has never been an aspirant for office, but has served his township as Trustee. He was married when twenty-three years of age to Mary Stanley. They have had a family of seven children—John M., Catharine (wife of Joseph Bosworth), James M., Daniel W., Clayton, Cynthia (wife of John W. Miller), and Mary, wife of Charles Wolfer, all save one living in Boston Township. Mrs. Sheffer was born in Union County, Ind., in 1817, a daughter of Zachariah and Mary (Bedwell) Stanley, natives of North Carolina. They removed to Union County, Ind., where Mrs. Stanley died in 1851, and Mr. Stanley in 1852. They had a family of thirteen children. Six daughters and three sons are living, two in Wayne County---Mrs. Sheffer, and Sarah, widow of John Bennett.

George Shurman is a native of Hanover, Germany, where he grew to manhood. He learned the cabinet-maker's trade, and in 1859 came to America, locating in Cincinnati, Ohio, and in June, 1862, he came to Richmond, where he worked at his trade together with carpentering till 1867. He then bought an interest in the Coffin Works which were incorporated in 1870, the firm name being J. M. Hutton & Co., since which Mr. Shurman has been a director and stockholder, serving as foreman of the works. He is a member of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, and has served one term as Trustee.

Robert C. Shute was born in Gloucester County, N. J., Oct. 5, 1816, a son of Samuel, Sr., and Sybil (Cook) Shute. He began the practice of his profession (surveying and civil engineering) in 1837, and the same year assisted in surveying the Michigan Southern & Northern Indiana Railroad from Toledo, Ohio, to Ottawa, Ill. In 1850 he surveyed the Indiana Central, now the Pan-Handle, from Richmond to Indianapolis. In 1840 he surveyed the Dayton & Western Turnpike, and worked on that road till it was finished to Charlottesville, Ind. In 1844 he surveyed the Richmond, Boston & Fair Haven Turnpike---the first turnpike running into Richmond. He surveyed the most of the turnpikes leading to Richmond, and laid out nearly all the city part of the sub-divisions east of Ninth street. He was appointed County Surveyor in 1856, and held the office by re-election till 1868, when he resigned and removed to Missouri. He returned to Richmond in 1869, and now resides in comfortable circumstances on Linden Hill, adjoining city of Richmond. In 1873 was again elected County Surveyor, and held the office eight years. He has been Civil Engineer of the city of Richmond twenty years, from 1849. Mr. Shute was married in 1839 to Mary C. Clark, of Philadelphia, Pa., who died in 1877, leaving ten children. In 1878 he married Ovanda J., widow of Rev. C. W. Miller, and daughter of Isaac Lamb. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Samuel Shute was born in Gloucester County, N. J., July 13, 1808, the fifth of thirteen children of Samuel Shute, Sr. The latter was born in Gloucester County, N. J., in 1773. He married Rebecca Zanes, who died leaving one child, Nancy, who married Edward Ferst, an early merchant of Richmond. He subsequently married Alice Zanes, a sister of his former wife. She died in New Jersey, leaving six children—James P., Harriet, Charles, Aaron, Samuel and Hiram. Mr. Shute afterward married Sybil, daughter of Robert and Lydia Cook, of Gloucester County, N. J. They had six children—Robert C., Lydia (wife of J. L. Morrisson), Amos, Elizabeth, Edward F. and Elias H. Mrs. Shute died in Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 17, 1847, and Mr. Shute in Covington, Ky., Feb. 9, 1857. They came West in 1818 and bought a farm five miles southeast of Richmond, residing there till 1831, when they removed to Richmond, and in 1833 bought 150 acres of land of Joshua Alberson at $15 an acre. One-half the land is now in the city limits of Richmond, and the rest is at Linden Hill, and is valued at $2,000 or $3,000 per acre. He sold the land in 1845 for $60 an acre, and removed to Cincinnati. When a young man he was prominent in the Judicial Courts of New Jersey. Our subject was ten years of age when his father came to Indiana. He was reared on a farm, and his early advantages for an education were limited. His calling through life was that of agriculture, in which calling his neighbors say he made great proficiency, having kept, according to their testimony, one of the model farms of Wayne County. He retired to private life on Linden Hill in 1876 to spend his days in comparative ease. He was married in 1837 to Deborah S., daughter of Levi Keerans, who settled in Richmond in 1835. She was born Sept. 6, 1817. They have a family of eight children, seven sons and one daughter. They are members of the society of Hicksite Friends.

John P. Smith was born Oct. 5, 1817, in Bourbon County, Ky., a son of Peter and grandson of Nicholas Smith, who was born in Germany, and when a young man he emigrated to America and settled in Frederickstown, Md. He moved to Bourbon County, Ky., where he followed farming till his death, and where his wife also died. Their children were—Joseph, Peter, Jacob and Elizabeth. Nicholas Smith served in the Indian war of 1795. Peter Smith, father of John P., was born in Maryland, and moved to Kentucky with his parents in 1800. He soon after married Margaret, daughter of Peter Smelser, who was born in Germany. They were the parents of ten children—Nicholas, who followed farming in Abington Township, Wayne County, till his death; Mary, wife of David Railsback, of Wayne Township, Wayne County; Barbara, deceased, wife of C. C. Beeler, who is in partnership with our subject in pork-packing; John P.; George, farming part of the homestead in Abington Township; Martha J., deceased; James, farming in Union County, Ind.; Irvin, deceased; Joseph W., an extensive lumber-dealer in Tennessee; Margaret, deceased, wife of Nelson Crow. In 1818 Peter Smith removed with his family to Wayne County, Ind., and entered a half section of land in Abington Township, which he cleared and improved, and resided there till his death. Although he voted for Andrew Jackson, his subsequent affiliations were with the Republican party. John P. Smith, whose name heads this sketch, has resided in Wayne County since he was two years old, and since 1855 has lived on his present farm. He was reared to farm life and has always followed agricultural pursuits, and since 1861 he has also carried on pork-packing in Richmond. He married Mary Sedgwick, who was born in Union County, Ind., and died near Richmond in 18—. She was a daughter of Richard Sedgwick. They had seven children—Martha J., Anna, Richard, Peter, Belle, Maggie, and Clara (deceased).

James W. Smith is a native of Richmond, Ind., born in 1839. He is the eldest and the only one now living of five children of Sidney and Martha (Wharry) Smith. His grandfather, John F. Smith, was a native of Virginia, of German descent. His mother was a daughter of James Wharry, of Columbus, Ohio, and a sister of the late Judge Wharry, of Darke County, Ohio. His father came to Indiana in 1834 and died in 1865. His mother is still living. James W. received a common-school education, always residing in Richmond. In 1857 he went into the old bank of Morrisson, Blanchard & Co. (now Richmond National Bank) and remained there twenty-two years, and the last seventeen years was the general bookkeeper. The first eight years of the latter's existence he was one of its directors. In 1882 he was elected by the voters of both political parties by a majority of 1,200 to the office of Trustee of Wayne Township, a position he still holds.

Stace & Crocker, granite and marble dealers, No. 16 North Ninth street, Richmond, Ind. This business was established in 1867 by Peter Ritter, at 15 North Fifth street, and in 1870 the firm became Ritter & Vickrey. Mr. Vickrey died in 1877, and Mr. Ritter continued the business alone till 1879, when N. E. Warder became associated with him. In January, 1882, Geering Stace succeeded Mr. Ritter, forming the firm of Warder & Stace, and in May following they removed to 1121 Main street. They employ only practical workmen, Mr. Stace being a very fine carver. He is a native of Franklin, Warren Co., Ohio. He was reared in his native town, and learned his trade in Dayton, under Houghtelin & Stainland. He worked as a journeyman some time, and in March, 1870, came to Richmond, where he has since worked at his trade. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and Masonic fraternities, and has taken all the degrees of the Odd Fellows' lodge and encampment, and of the Patriarchal circle. O. P. Crocker, the junior member of the firm, purchased the interest of N. E. Warder in January, 1884. He is a native of Wayne County, and has always lived in his native county.

F. H. Stafford, miller, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., in 1844, a son of Samnel and Maria (Jacobs) Stafford, natives of Pennsylvania, his father of Berks County, and his mother of Lancaster County. Our subject is the fifth of eleven children. He worked on the farm with his father till nineteen years of age, and then began to learn the trade of a miller. In the spring of 1866 he came to Wayne County, where he has since resided, with the exception of a year spent in Dublin. In 1874 he became a partner in the mill, and in 1879 became sole proprietor. His mill burned in the spring of 1883, and the following summer he erected a fine new brick mill with two run of burrs, at a cost of $6,000, and commenced operations in September, 1883. Mr. Stafford was married in April, 1871, to Emma W. Hill. They have three children. Mr. Stafford takes an active interest in all public affairs, both county and city.

Charles West Starr was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 28, 1793. His parents were members of the Religious Society of Friends, and were also natives of the city of his birth. When of age and out of his apprenticeship (carpenter), he engaged in the coasting trade between Charleston, S. C., and Philadelphia, and finally went into the lumber business in Charleston. Here, surrounded by slavery, he first learned to abhor it, and closing out his stock he invested part of his means in rice, put it on board a ship bound to Lisbon, Portugal, going along himself as a passenger; returned home the same year and projected his first trip to the then "far West." Leaving home on the 21st of September, 1818, he visited the States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri, traveling on horseback and alone the entire journey of five months. New Year's day found him at Richmond, Ind., and a guest of John Smith, the proprietor of the south half of the village. He thoroughly explored Wayne County, and marked it as his intended place of residence by entering a tract of land near Economy. Crossing the Susquehanna on Saturday, Feb. 1, 1819, on his way home, he hitched his horse in front of a Quaker meeting then in session, and took his seat with the worshipers. At the close of the meeting he saw Elizabeth Wilson for the first time, who afterward became his wife. In the spring of 1825 he settled in Richmond, Ind., living on old Front street, nearly opposite the court-house. The village then contained about 700 inhabitants, mostly Friends. There was not a rod of turnpike nor a bridge in the county or the State, much less a railroad. The center of town was the cross-roads, now Main and Fourth streets. In 1826 he bought of Jeremiah Cox the farm on which the north half of the town was laid out, paying $25 an acre for it. It contained 222 acres, and had on it a brick dwelling in which his widow now lives, corner of North Tenth and D streets. Log barns, cribs, pig-pens and worm fences surrounded the house. The farm gate was hung to an oak-tree that stood where the Pan Handle freight depot stands. The north end of the village was the junction of North Sixth and Front streets. Friend Cox's reason for wishing to sell out was that "the boys stole his apples so." He soon after laid out North Seventh street, and removed the farm gate to its junction with Fort Wayne avenue, or Front street. The lots (quarter of an acre each) were sold for $100 each, a great price in those days. The proceeds of the sale of lots he steadily invested in building houses and extending streets. In fact, his entire income was appropriated to the improvement of the town, believing, as he did, "that Richmond was destined to become a prosperous city." In the fall of 1829 he was stricken with paralysis of the right side. After a year's confinement he was able to hobble about, and with undiminished energy he resumed the building of houses and store-rooms, many of which still remain to show the old Philadelphian style of architecture in which he was educated. He took a warm interest in the construction of the Richmond & Brookville Canal, which enterprise was commenced in 1837; was the Treasurer of the company. The hard times of 1840 put an end to the work, as well as the financial career of nearly every business man in the town. The following seven years was a period of great stagnation of growth and consequent depreciation of real estate. The subject of this sketch came very near being ruined in the general crash, but his personal integrity and a little timely help from a wealthy brother in his native city enabled him to go through without a sacrifice of property. The times changed for the better, sales of property resumed, and he paid every debt, principal and interest, without abatement. The character of this good man deserves a chapter in the history of his adopted home. Although surrounded constantly with the cares of a very active life, he was a great reader of books—books that required thought. Standard poetry and moral philosophy were his favorites. Life with him was too short to waste over romance. This taste made him an enjoyable conversationalist, notwithstanding his defective hearing. Full of humor, yet never vulgar or obscene, a fine punster, rich in maxims, frank, generous and outspoken, he was a citizen beloved and respected by all that knew him. He cared more for purity of purpose than for the opinions of men. He enjoyed being right because he admired the right. With him to be honest to his neighbor was to be honest to himself. This was his religion; he professed no other. Quick tempered to a fault, yet the storm passed over as quickly, and he was then ready to forgive. His devoted companion was a woman of strong character, a safe counselor in business affairs, a good wife, mother and neighbor. Seven of their ten children lived to be men and women. Richmond fulfilled his repeated prediction of prosperity, and the old farm-house, once a long walk in the country, had well nigh become surrounded by beautiful homes during his life-time. Factories hummed the live-long day; two railroads crossed his meadows and planted their depot within gunshot of his residence. In the spring of 1855 his health gave way. He died on the 1st of May in the sixty-third year of his age. The sublimity of his character was never more beautiful than when he closed his eyes in his last sleep. In his success he said he had "nothing to regret," and in his last moments he said he "saw a fine ship waiting for him." It was the end of a righteous man.

George W. Stigleman, photographer and patentee of the new retouched solar picture, 537 Main street. After having learned the art of photography Mr. Stigleman commenced business in this city about fourteen years ago. Many years of practical experience made him a first-class photographer and brought a large and lucrative business. In 1873 he began working on an apparatus designed for the preparation of photographic negatives, and on March 5, 1878, had it patented, having filed his application on Feb. 16, 1877. This process is unquestionably the most valuable thing discovered for many years. An unlimited number of photographs may be printed from a negative prepared by this process, not one of which will need the slightest retouching in India ink. Mr.

Stigleman has by his genius added no little to the art of photography and is deserving of credit for the success of his invention. Quite a number of unprincipled photographers have infringed on this patent, but have failed to make public their so-called invention for fear of exposure. Stigleman's photograph parlors, at 537 Main street, are fitted up handsomely and equal to any in this section of the State. Quite a number of excellent samples of work done by this new process are on exhibition here, some of which are almost life size; the collection is probably the finest on exhibition in the West. Mr. Stigleman is a native of Wayne County, learned his profession in this city, and has been a resident of Richmond many years. His house stands at the head of the art, with a trade in all parts of this State and Western Ohio. He married Caroline, daughter of Evan Bailey, now of Washington, Clay Township, and granddaughter of Nathan Brazier.

Stephen S. Strattan, carriage manufacturer, Richmond, Ind., was born in Richmond, April 14, 1831, the second son of Zimri and Elizabeth (Baker) Strattan. Zimri Strattan was a native of New Jersey, and when a young man came West to Ohio, and in 1825 to Wayne County, Ind., where he was married in 1827 to Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh Baker, formerly of Guilford County, N. C., who came to Wayne County in 1826. His wife died at the age of twenty years, leaving two sons, Stephen S. being an infant. He married the second time, and to him were born five children. He died at the age of sixty-six years. He was by trade a shoemaker. Stephen S. Strattan, when sixteen years of age began to learn the wagon-maker's trade, and served an apprenticeship of three years. He then worked as a journeyman till 1859, when he engaged in business for himself. He is now one of the leading manufacturers of Richmond, thoroughly understanding his business in all its details. He was married Nov. 5, 1856, to Matilda, daughter of John Elderkin, and a native of Connecticut, who came with her parents to Wayne County in 1839. To them have been born three children, but two are living.

Aldison H. Study, County Surveyor, was born Sept. 25, 1850, in Green Township, Wayne Co., Ind., a son of John Study. He was reared to farm life, and received his early education at the common schools. On reaching maturity he took a course in mathematics and natural sciences at Earlham College, devoting three years to his studies in connection with surveying, which he yet follows. He was elected to his present office in the fall of 1880 and re-elected in the fall of 1882. He was married to Alice, daughter of Nathan Doan, of Richmond. They have had three children. Our subject's grandfather, Henry Study, was born Feb. 16, 1780, of German descent, in Pennsylvania, near the Maryland line, where he learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1802 he moved to New Windsor, Md., and was married Feb. 12, 1803, to Charlotte Cook. From this union ten children were born, of whom four survive—William, born Aug. 27, 1808, a farmer of Green Township; Henry, born Oct. 16, 1810, residing in Green Township; Samuel, born Feb. 16, 1821, followed cabinet-making many years in Hagerstown, but now resides in Toledo, Ohio, and Matilda, born April 15, 1823, widow of James Stanley. Those deceased are—Daniel, born Feb. 14, 1804; Joseph, born Oct. 30, 1806; Martin, born Sept. 3, 1812, followed cabinet making till his death, which occurred about 1874; Isaac, born Sept. 13, 1814, and died July 18, 1847, and his widow, Catherine (Greene) Study, is now Mrs. Laselle, of Williamsburg; Eliza, born April 1, 1818, and John, father of our subject. He was born Nov. 15, 1825, and followed farming through life on the farm where he was born. He was married to Nancy E., daughter of Elihu E. Smith, by whom he had three children—Aldison H.; A. Emma, wife of George E. Clark, of Economy, and Arva C. Mr. Study died Oct. 27, 1880. In 1819 he removed with his family to Wayne County and was one of the first blacksmiths of Green Township. He followed farming and blacksmithing through life, and died Aug. 6, 1862, his wife dying one year later. He was a leading Methodist, and with other pioneers was instrumental in establishing Methodism in Wayne County.

Job Worth Swain was born in Guilford County, N. C., Oct. 22, 1795, a son of Thomas Swain, who was president of the first Board of Trustees elected for Richmond. He came to Indiana in 1816. Sept. 3, 1823, he was married to Nancy

Thorp, with whom he lived till his death. He had a birth-right in the Society of Friends and was discussed by the sect for marrying outside the church and for not being willing to say he was sorry. Previous to 1830 he was for some time engaged in the watch and clock business, and there are still in use in Richmond brass clocks which he made and which are good time-pieces. Later he carried on a machine shop in the building which has since been the residence of Major Finley. He subsequently built and occupied as a machine-shop the one-story brick dwelling house on South Pearl street, next James Elder's. He operated the first machinist's slide lathe ever brought to Richmond. He was at that time associated with James Gaar in the manufacture of castings and other machines. About 1835 Mr. Swain, Jonas Gaar, Achilles Williams and others engaged in a general foundry and machine business on Linden Hill, part of which is now in the city limits. Through the dishonesty and mismanagement of the principal agent, Mr. Swain, with others, was reduced to bankruptcy. Being a man of indomitable will and perseverance he was soon carrying on a machine shop for himself in the old cotton factory building that stood on the hill just west of the Gaar, Scott & Co's works. He afterward manufactured shoe pegs and lasts. About 1840 he formed a partnership with Cornelius Vanzant and carried on business on Middle Fork, to which place he moved his family March 6, 1841. The business was quite profitable for the times, but money was very scarce and a man that had $10 in cash was a curiosity. As an example we cite the following: Patrick Justice, of Muncie, owed Mr. Swain a small bill for shoe-pegs. He came to Richmond and told D. P. Wiggins & Co. that he wanted to pay the bill. Wiggins sent the word to Peter McFarlin (Mr. Swain's brother-in-law) who sent his boy post haste to tell Uncle Job. Mr. Swain dropped his apron, put on his coat and started on foot to town. Before reaching there several parties informed him that a man wanted to pay him some money. Mr. Vanzant withdrew from the firm and Mr. Swain continued the business till his death, July 29, 1846. The demand for his manufactures was at that time greater than his ability to supply, and he was in a fair way to retrieve his fortune. He was a man of fine mechanical ability, more than ordinary reasoning powers, coupled with unswerving integrity, and a patience under affliction that likened him to the Job of old. He held to no religious creed but had little respect for any who did not hold to the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

H. W. Talhelm, of the firm Wm. H. Middleton & Co., was born in Hagerstown, Md., May 1, 1838, a son of Joseph, Jr., and grandson of Joseph Talhelm, Sr. His grandfather was a native of Germany, and came to America when a young man, locating in Pennsylvania, where Joseph, Jr., was born. The latter was by trade an architect and builder, and lived in different States, lastly in Indiana, where he died in 1859. H. W. was the eldest of the family. He learned the trade of his father, working at it several years. He has been a resident of Richmond since 1857. Aug. 7, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Indiana Cavalry, and served till June 15, 1865, participating in the battles of Atlanta, siege of Knoxville, and many others. He returned home at the expiration of his term of service uninjured. In 1879 he became associated with Wm. H. Middleton. He was married Oct. 16, 1866, to Sarah Brunton, who died June 25, 1875. Mr. Talhelm is a member of the I. O. O. F. fraternity, and is Treasurer of Whitewater Lodge, No. 41. He has taken all the degrees of the lodge and encampment.

James Eli Taylor, M. D., was born in Sewellsville, Ohio, April 5, 1843, a son of Barnett and Letitia (McPherson) Taylor, natives of Belmont County, Ohio, his father of Welsh and his mother of Scotch descent. His mother's grandfather was a native of Scotland and a representative minister of the Methodist church in Eastern Ohio, in the early part of the present century. Her father, James McPherson, contracted disease while a soldier in the war of 1812 that caused his death. Dr. Taylor's father was the eldest son of Eli Taylor, and was born in 1818, in Belmont County, Ohio, where he still resides. He has been a Justice of the Peace twenty-one years, and has never had a decision overruled by a higher court. He is a leading member of the Methodist church and has been a Steward and Class-leader many years. Our subject received a High-School education and had entered college when the war broke out. Oct. 15, 1861, he left college and enlisted in the Fifth Ohio Cavalry as a private, but for meritorious service was promoted to Orderly Sergeant, First Lieutenant, Captain, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, and Assistant Adjutant-General on the staff of General Thomas T. Heath. He served over four years. The first important service performed by his regiment was tearing up the track of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad. He was subsequently in the engagement of Shiloh, Corinth, Hernando, Grant's campaign in Mississippi, Cherokee Station, Resaca, Dallas, Allatoona Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Bear Creek, Macon, Buck Head Creek, Savannah, Altamaha River, Blackwell, Aiken, Monroe Cross-Roads, Averysboro, Bentonville, Raleigh, and in many skirmishes. He was mustered out at Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 30, 1865. The following December he entered the Iron City Commercial College in Pittsburg, remaining there till May, 1866. He then commenced the study of medicine and soon after engaged in the drug business in Bay City, Mich., still continuing his studies. In 1869 he attended a course of lectures at the Miami Medical College, and in 1871 graduated from the College of Medicine and Surgery, Cincinnati. He then removed to Richmond where he has built up a good practice. He is a diligent student of his profession and is a very skillful physician. He is very sympathetic and benevolent, and none are so poor that they may not receive medical treatment from him. Dr. Taylor is a Master, Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason. From 1873 till 1875 he was Captain-General of the Richmond Commandery, and in 1876 was elected Eminent Commander. In politics he is a Republican, and in 1869 took an active part in the Republican Convention of the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan. While a member of the Council of Portsmouth, now incorporated with Bay City, he was instrumental in saving the township $70,000. He was married Nov. 8, 1871, to Sarah H. Snell, of Fort Plain, N. Y.

Isaac Cooper Teague, M. D., Richmond, Ind., was born in Dayton, Ohio, in 1826, a son of Samuel and Prudence (Cooper) Teague. His great-grandfather was killed in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Samuel Teague, Sr., was a native of South Carolina, and one of the first settlers of Miami County, Ohio, going there when Samuel, Jr., was a child. His mother was a native of Georgia, a daughter of Isaac Cooper, also an early settler of Ohio. His parents subsequently removed to Wabash, Ind., where his father died in 1875, and where his mother still lives. Isaac Cooper is the eldest of their seven children, six sons and one daughter. He was reared on a farm, but was given an academical education. After reaching his majority he began reading medicine with Dr. H. H. Gillen, of Wabash, Ind., and afterward took a course at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., graduating in 1857. He then began the practice of his profession with Drs. H. H. He is versed in the Allopathic, Eclectic and Homeopathic schools and is now independent of any school, practicing as his judgment dictates. He is a man who thinks and acts for himself, believing in advancement in all creeds and doctrines. He was married Jan. 13, 1853, to Joanna Miles, of Miami County, Ohio. Our subject, Edward G., was born in Wilmington, Del., May 4, 1824. He lived in Richmond from 1826 till 1834, and then returned to Delaware, and remained in Wilmington and Philadelphia, Pa., eight years. He then returned to Richmond, and soon after was employed as clerk for Mark E. Reeves, of Hagerstown, and in 1849 purchased Mr. Reeves's interest. Two years later he abandoned business and returned to Richmond, and in 1852, became associated with his brother A. F. in business in Stockton, Cal. In 1854 he was elected City Treasurer. The ball remained in his loins forty years, when it was removed by his wife with a knitting-needle. Early in the present century he removed to Kentucky, and a few years later to Wayne County, Ind., and settled in the eastern part of the county, near the Ohio State line. All his children married and located in that vicinity. Joseph Wasson and Peter Fleming were the first white men to explore the eastern part of Wayne County, and entered several hundred acres in the land-office at Cincinnati. He died in the county at the age of eighty-five years. John Macamy Wasson, a grandson of Joseph, is a native of Wayne County. In a late history of the county he contributed to its pioneer chapter, and subsequently published "Annals of Richmond and Vicinity." In 1862 he removed to Richmond, and continued the latter branch of business till 1872, when he bought an interest in the Hoosier Drill Works, then located at Milton, Ind. For four years he turned his attention closely to the business, and in 1876 got a controlling interest by buying out Isaac Kinsey, paying him $80,750 for $9,000 worth of the original stock. About the same time Omar Hollingsworth purchased an interest in the business. In the spring of 1878 the company bought the ground on which the present works are located, and erected the buildings the following summer. In 1881 Mr. Westcott purchased the interest of Mark Reeves, paying him $90,000 for $16,000 worth of the original stock. Previous to this, J. A. Carr and F. A. Wilke had purchased interests in the business, and since 1881 the entire business has been owned by Mr. Westcott and his three sons-in-law. In 1880 he purchased the property lying between Main and South A and Fourteenth and Sixteenth streets, at a cost of $27,000. It was already laid out with walks and drives, being designed originally as the site of an institution of learning. Mr. Westcott immediately began having it improved, and the second year erected a substantial and modern brick residence, and since then three additional residences have been added, one for each of the sons-in-law. ### ABINGTON TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZED FROM WASHINGTON AND WAYNE TOWNSHIPS.—SETTLED LIKE BOSTON, IN 1806.—FORMED IN FEBRUARY, 1837.—BOUNDARY AND AREA.—ITS ASSESSED VALUATION.—POPULATION SINCE 1850.—THE HISTORY OF ITS FIRST SETTLEMENT.—VILLAGE OF ABINGTON.—ITS GROWTH.—BUSINESS OF 1874 AND 1884.—CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

This was originally a part of both Washington and Wayne townships, and was among the first settled portions of the county, while prospectors were in the county as early as 1805. It has been clearly ascertained that no permanent settlement of the county occurred until the winter of 1805-'6, and the spring following. It has been stated that Abington Township was settled in 1805, but this is a mistake, with the exception of the fact that lands were selected in 1805, which became permanently settled in 1806.

The township was not organized until February, 1837, and its voting precinct was established at the village of Abington. The western part of the township and the central is good level or slightly rolling agricultural lands. On the east the East Branch of the Whitewater passes through it, first south, then southeasterly and again south, crossing the township line into Union County, one and three-fourths miles from its eastern border. This section is hilly, but the bottoms lands are rich, and the country around is settled by well-to-do farmers, many of them the direct descendants of the pioneer settlers of the township. The Elk Horn Branch enters the township in the northeast corner and flows into the Whitewater within a half a mile of its entry into the township. There is one other small tributary on the east and several on the west which empty into the Whitewater. On the western side, in the southern part, Butler Creek, which rises in the township, passes out, and a small tributary to Noland's Fork rises near the northern central portion and with two branches flows west, uniting as they pass into Washington Township. It has thus all the water necessary for domestic and stock purposes, and the township is well adapted for stock-raising.

METES AND BOUNDS, ETC.

The township lies in the southern tier and is the central one, being seven miles to the western and six to the eastern line of the county. It has twenty-two sections of land, or an area of 14,080 acres, of which 13,417.34 acres are found upon the assessment roll, leaving 662.66 for water-way or unaccounted for.

It is bounded on the north by Centre Township and a corner of Boston; on the east by Boston; on the south by Union County and one mile of Fayette, and on the west by Washington Township.

The valuation of the real estate of the township, Jan. 1, 1883, was $383,680; of personal property, $157,235; total valuation, $540,915.

The population in 1850 was 1,042; 1860, 924; 1870, 833; 1880, 837, giving a steady decline since the first mentioned date to 1870, and the gain since is far short of the natural increase. There has been very little gain in the county of Wayne the past decade outside of its corporated towns.

EARLY SETTLERS.

John Endsley, formerly from South Carolina, and in 1806 from Ohio, settled in what is now the east part of Abington, on John's Creek. With him, from Ohio, came his brother, Abraham Endsley, who settled on the Whitewater, a mile from the mouth of Elkhorn, and two miles from town. John Endsley traveled the distance between South Carolina and Wayne County seven times, five times on horseback. The farm on which he settled and died was afterward owned and occupied by his younger son, John, until his death in 1870.

James, the elder son, resides on the farm adjoining on the west, being that on which Andrew Endsley had settled, who was the father of Andrew, Jr., John, Sr., Abraham, Hugh, Thomas, Samuel, and Peter Endsley.

In 1806 John Cox, from Kentucky, purchased the land of which the site of the present town of Abington is a part. He died in March, 1811. His death is said to have been the first in the township. The land was inherited by his son John, whose sons were Joseph and John. Joseph and his father laid out the town.

Charles Hunt, from North Carolina, settled in the southeast part of the present township, in the year 1807. His sons George, John, William, Smith, Charles, and Stephen G. preceded him the same year. Jonathan, James, and Timothy came two or three years later. George was the first surveyor in the county, and the first clerk of the County Courts. Timothy settled about a mile east of town, where he and his wife both died. The farm is owned by his sons Charles, Levi, and Andrew. Smith settled in the northeast part of the township, and died in 1855; Stephen G., near James Endsley's; John Hunt, northeast of town; lands owned by his sons, Levi and Charles Hunt, and Wilson Hunt.

Henry Fender, from North Carolina, after a sojourn of a year or two eight miles south of Richmond, with six children, settled in 1810 or '11, on the farm, half a mile northwest of town, on the Centreville turnpike. His sons were—Jonathan, who removed from the county; Gabriel, who settled a half mile west of town and is dead; Jacob, who settled and still lives a mile and a half from town, on the Centreville turnpike; Littleton, who died near Kankakee, Ill., and whose sons, John Milton and James H., reside in the township; Henry L., on his father's homestead; and John H.

Gabriel Fender, brother of Henry, Sr., bought of David Railsback the farm three-fourths of a mile northeast of town, since owned by Nicholas Smith.

Thomas Moffitt settled three-fourths of a mile south of town. By a change in county bounds his farm has been taken into Union County. On it was one of the forts built during the war of 1812, as a means of protection against the Indians. Another was built on the farm of Wm. Lewis, about a mile from the former. David Railsback settled near town in 1807, and died Oct. 17, 1856. Nathan, son of David Railsback, Sr. (not the first settler), settled on the land now owned by his heirs, about two miles north of town.

Thomas Bradbury first settled four miles southeast of the town, now Union County, afterward two miles north of town. Jas. Lamb, from Scotland, settled, about 1818, near the mouth of Elkhorn. He died in 1841, aged eighty-five. John Lamb son of James, settled near his father. Wm. Jarrett settled about two and a half miles northwest of Abington. George and Levi Jarrett settled near their brother William; and another brother, Eli, where M. Rank now lives.

David Carson settled in the northeast part of the township. His son David now occupies the homestead. He was son-in-law of Richard Rue, one of the first three settlers in Wayne County. John Plankenhorn bought of Wm. James the land now owned by his son, John Plankenhorn. Henry Long settled on section 17; Edmund Jones, Virginia, on section 18, and John Hendricks early owned the land where now Isam Stevens and John Madden reside.

John Wright settled near the north line of the township. John Ellis, on land now owned by Wright's heirs. Spahr entered early several sections in the northwest part of the township. Michael Helms, from Virginia, bought lands in the southwest part of the township, now principally owned by his son, Isaiah Helms; and Daniel Clevenger, on land now owned by George Rodenberger, in the south part of the township.

The first blacksmith was John Hunt, who was also a gunsmith. His widow was a daughter of Lazarus Whitehead.

The first carding machine—a rude instrument—was put up by Richard Sedgwick and Smith Hunt, at the mouth of Elkhorn. John Brower next (1824, or about that year) built a carding and fulling mill near the north part of Abington. Hugh Endsley, grandson of the first mentioned settler, put up the first grist-mill (corn cracker) on East Fork, a little below the mouth of Elkhorn, in 1808. Henry Whiting, a few years after, built there a hewed log one, with two runs of stones, one for corn and one for wheat. It was afterward bought by Julius C. Wood, who built a good frame flouring mill, now owned by his son, Valentine Wood. The second grist-mill was built about the year 1826, nearly a mile from the village, by Joseph Cox. He sold it to Ralf Shawmbourie, who put up a better one, having a run of burr stones, and sold it to Merriman Brumfield. The latter another on or near the same site, with a saw-mill attached.

As in other places along the Whitewater, rattlesnakes abounded here at an early day. About a mile above where the town now is, a number of women who were, on a Sunday, sauntering, for pastime, along the stream, are said to have killed, with clubs and poles, upward of thirty rattlesnakes.

Bethlehem, one of the early villages of the county, exists no longer. It was located on the southwest corner of section 24. In 1825 it had a population of about twenty, a store and a blacksmith shop. It is now part of a farm.

VILLAGE OF ABINGTON.

Abington is a very pretty village on the west bank of the East Fork of the Whitewater River. It is within less than one mile of the south line of the county, some ten miles southwest of Richmond, and is one of the oldest settled towns in the county. The village of Abington was laid out on the land of John and Joseph Cox, and platted Dec. 5, 1817. It was surveyed by J. Lewiston, under their supervision, and the record was made of the same soon after. The village was incorporated in August, 1819. Ten years later, January, 1827, Abington had forty-two inhabitants, a fulling mill and carding machine, a general store, two taverns, as they were then called, and a blacksmith shop.

The first merchant in Abington was Moses Cox, son of John Cox, Jr., about the year 1818. Some of his earlier successors, though, perhaps, not in the order mentioned, were Samuel Hall, Hafer & Glanten, Middlecough & Beeks, Bonebrake & Manning. Later, the following were as early, at least, as at the dates mentioned: Whiting & Matchett, Thomas Ellis, and Michael Dolon & Co., in 1839; William A. Beeks, William Lipscomb, John Leach in 1840; Williams & Dunbar, in 1841; James Rubey, Simpson Dye, in 1842; White & Hunt, in 1843; David M. Dunbar, Whiting & Dye, E. F. Donlan, 1845.

A saw-mill was built by Thomas Manning, at Abington, who, some years after (about 1839) sold it to D. & J. Weaver, who attached a carding machine and fulling-mill, and in 1845 built a large woolen factory. This proving unprofitable, the building was sold and turned into a wagon and carriage shop. The same firm built a large flouring mill a short distance below the old site, also a saw-mill in 1849, which are now owned by Jno. B. Craft & Co.

The first wagon-maker was John Gilbert; the next, William Harp. The present ones are the four Green brothers, Thomas, Thaddens, Daniel and Charles.

The village grew fairly until the advent of turnpikes and railroads, and in 1850 had a population of 206. From that date the village has gradually declined in population and has not gained in general business, but it is solid so far as its business interests are concerned.

In 1870 the population had fallen to 161, and the business interests were one dry-goods store, Haman Dobbs, proprietor; one grocery store, Joshua Dye, proprietor; three blacksmiths, Thomas Stevens, Caswell Hollar, and Moses Mitchel. Harness-makers, Samuel and Frank Lell. Carpenters, Andrew Hunt, Ferdinand and Harrison Weber. Shoemaker, Daniel Jennings.

There were two saw and grist mills, one Masonic lodge, one I. O. O. F., and one encampment. The latter have a fine hall, handsomely furnished. There are three churches, viz.: United Brethren, Methodist Episcopal and Christian. There have been few changes in the village the past decade, except a slight falling off in population, being in 1880 put down in the census report at 148, and is probably fully that number at this writing.

The first resident physician that practiced in the township was W. J. Matchett, in 1828. He was succeeded by James Ruby, who practiced some ten or twelve years, within which period, he took into partnership a former student of his, John M. Swallow, who is said to have had a very extensive practice, and died in 1849 at the early age of thirty-three. After him came Dr. John Cleveland, a successful practitioner, later residing at Centreville. He was followed by Moses G. Mitchell, of Ohio, now a Universalist preacher, John Q. A. Robbins, and James E. Swallow, son of John M. Swallow, above mentioned.

Postmasters have been: Ralph Shawmbourie, Daniel Weaver, Powell Slade and Bennett D. Bonebrake.

CHURCHES.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first religious society, says "Young's History," was the Methodist Episcopal, organized at an early period of the settlement of the township. Among its early members were Thomas Moffitt and his wife; John Cox, his wife and son James; Peter Stevens, a preacher and also the first school-teacher, near Moffitt's; Henry Long, also a preacher, and his wife; Eli and Clark Penwell, and David Railsback and their wives; Henry Fender, his son Jacob, and John Fender, Sr. The first preaching was in dwellings. Their first meeting-house was a log building on the hill, near the site of their present brick house.

The United Brethren formed a society about the year 1818. Among their early members were Isaac Shelby, an exhorter, Thomas Manning, William Dye, Daniel Clevenger, with their wives, and George Bonebrake, a preacher. The first regular preacher is believed to have been John Ross. The society built a frame house about the year 1828; the present brick house in 1854-'55. This was a well-built house, and its interior was well and neatly finished. [It has, since the above was written, been nearly or quite destroyed by fire.]

BIOGRAPHICAL.

H. L. Fender was born on the farm where he now resides, in 1827, a son of Henry Fender, a native of North Carolina, who settled in Wayne County in 1811. He was reared a farmer, receiving a limited education in the district schools. He now owns eighty-five acres of well-improved land, adjoining the village of Abington. He at one time owned 265 acres of land, and is one of the most substantial business men of the township. Politically he is a Republican. He has served his township as Trustee four terms. He was married in 1848 to C. J., daughter of William Jarrett, an old settler of the county. They have had four children, but two living—Milburn L. and John F. Martha A. died Oct. 26, 1865, aged eight years, and Mary E., Feb. 9, 1871, aged eighteen years. Mr. and Mrs. Fender are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and take an active interest in all matters pertaining to Christianity.

Jacob Fender was born in North Carolina in 1806, the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Lang) Fender, natives of North Carolina, his father born in 1787, and his mother in 1789. In October, 1811, his parents came to Wayne County, Ind., and settled in the southern part of the county, in what is now Union County. In 1814 they removed to what is now Abington Township, and entered 100 acres of land and built a log cabin. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church and zealous workers in the church. Their house was used for worship before a church was built. They had a family of eleven children—Jonathan, Gabriel, Susannah, Jacob, Littleton, Sarah, John H., Lydia, Sophia, Mary Ann, and Henry L. Our subject was the fourth child. He was married in 1829 to Betsey Ann, daughter of Elijah Holland, a native of Wayne County, Ind., born in 1811. After his marriage he bought 120 acres of land in Abington Township, where he still resides. He is of a generous and obliging disposition and has assisted many in financial embarrassment, who have taken advantage of his generosity, thus defrauding him of large sums of money. Mr. and Mrs. Fender have had one son—Laban L., who died in his twenty-third year, leaving one child—Celia. She married H. P. Jarrett, and still resides with her grandparents. They have an adopted daughter—Ada Moore.

John H. Fender was born in Abington Township, Wayne Co., Ind., Jan. 9, 1814, a son of Henry Fender, a pioneer of Wayne County. He was reared a farmer, and now owns eighty acres of fine land, where he has lived since 1835. He joined the Methodist Episcopal church Aug. 12, 1830, and in 1842 was licensed an exhorter. In 1873 he was licensed a local preacher. His ministerial work has been mostly confined to officiating at funerals and assisting in revival work. *In 1835 he married Nancy, daughter of Morgan McMahan, of Union County. They have reared four children, three from infancy—Lovana J. Stinson (deceased); Susie L. Sweet, now Mrs. Andrew Kramer; James H. Fender, a nephew, married Miss Theresa McMahan; and Miss Meda G. Kramer. Politically Mr. Fender is a Republican.

James Rariden Meek was born in Wayne County, Ind., in 1823, a son of Joseph and Gulielma (Smith) Meek. His early life was spent on a farm. He obtained a good education, and taught twenty-five years, mostly in Wayne County. He was married in 1848 to Catherine E., daughter of Alexander Adair, and settled in Abington Township, where he has since resided. He owns a good farm of 180 acres, all well improved. Politically he has always been a Republican. He has been Township Assessor two years, and Constable several years. Mr. and Mrs. Meek are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They have had eight children—John W., Joseph, Marcus L., Alexander, James R., Jr., David C. E., Charles A., and an infant (deceased). Mr. Meek's grandfather, John Meek, was a native of Henry County, Ky., and settled in Wayne County, Ind., in 1807, entering a quarter-section of land west of Richmond. He afterward removed to Abington Township, and subsequently to Owen County, Ind., where he died. He married Margaret Irwin. They had nine children—William, Joseph, Sarah, Mary, John, Jephtha, Jesse, born in Kentucky, and Elizabeth and Lorenzo, born in Wayne County. His wife died, and subsequently he married Selena Stinson. They had five children—Bazelle, James, Lorenda, Cynthia and Barlow. His son, Joseph Meek, married Gulielma, daughter of John Smith, in 1816, and settled in Wayne Township. He afterward removed to Randolph County, Ind., and eighteen months later settled on the farm now owned by our subject.

To him and his wife were born eleven children, seven of whom are living—John A., James R., Nathan, Mrs. Margaret Ruley, Allen W., Jesse, Mrs. Sarah E. Zigler. Samuel S., William, Mary J., and Alfred are deceased. Mr. Meek died Aug. 22, 1883, aged eighty-nine years. Mrs. Meek is living with her son, in the eighty-fourth year of her age. She is probably the oldest member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Wayne County.

J. M. Snyder was born in Union County, Ind., in 1821, a son of Michael and Nancy (Summers) Snyder. His grandparents, Michael and Eve (Ely) Snyder, came to Indiana in 1807 and settled in Brownsville Township, Union County. They had a family of nine children—Michael, Betsey, Moses, David, Isaac, Simon, Applebury, Ethel and Polly. Michael, Jr., was fourteen years of age when his parents came to Indiana. He married Nancy, daughter of Simon Summers. To them were born four children—Eliza, Simon, John M. and Sarah E. His wife died in 1825, and he subsequently married Rachel (Summers) Dawson, a sister of his first wife. They had eight children—Rhoda, Eva, Mary, Daniel, Michael, George, Andrew and Willie. Mr. Snyder died in 1877, aged eighty-three years. Our subject, J. M. Snyder, was reared on a farm and has always followed that occupation. In 1853 he came to Wayne County and rented land in Abington Township four years. He then moved to Fayette County, but two years later settled on the farm where he now resides, buying at that time eighty acres. He now owns 120 acres of well-improved land. He married Mary Ann, daughter of William H. Thomas. They have three children—Mary M., Oliver T. and Mattie. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are members of the Christian church.

Spencer Stephens, deceased, was a native of Virginia, but when a young man went to North Carolina. He was married there, and in 1814 came with his family to Indiana and located in what is now Abington Township, Wayne County. They had a family of nine children, five of whom are living—William, of Union County, Ind.; Sampson; Humphrey, of Decatur County, Ind.; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Wright, of Hancock County, Ind., and Robert. Susan, Anna, Spencer, and Isom, are deceased. Mr Stephens died in 1839, aged seventy years. His wife died in 1852, aged eighty-one years. Their son, Sampson, was born in North Carolina, March 22, 1806. He was married March 22, 1846, to Catherine, daughter of Jacob Plessinger, of Ohio, and settled on the old homestead. He has a fine farm of 270 acres, a part of which his father entered from the Government. Robert Stephens was born in what is now Union County, Ind., May 16, 1816. He was married Jan. 1, 1843, to Sarah, daughter of Jacob Plessinger, and has since resided in Abington Township, where he owns a fine farm of 115 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stephens have had seven children; four are living—Jacob E., William A., Harriet C., and Sarah E. Sophia A., Spencer S., and an infant are deceased.

BOUNDARY AND ORGANIZATION.

This township is one of the oldest settled townships in the county, and was until February, 1835, a part of Wayne Township. At that date it was organized into a separate township, and named "Boston." It is four miles north and south and six miles east and west, except that it has added to it on the northwest corner half of section 24, making it on one mile of its northern border six and one-half miles east and west. It is bounded on the north by Wayne Township, east by the Ohio State Line, south by Union County, and west by Abington and a portion of Centre townships. It lies in the extreme southeast corner of the county, and its above area of twenty-four and one-half square miles gives it 15,680, of which there is placed on the assessment roll 15,575.66 acres, with an assessed valuation in 1882 of $530,270. Its personal property amounted to $187,305, making a total value of $717,575. The polls of the township the same year numbered 147. Its population in 1850 was 959; in 1860, 887; in 1870, 894, and in 1880, 936. The principal stream in this township is the Elkhorn, which enters it about one and one-half miles west of the Ohio line, and, running in a southwesterly course, leaves the township one and three-fourths miles south of the northwest corner, about half a mile above the mouth of the stream. Some of the earlier settlements in the county were made within its limits. With the exception of Holman, Rue, and a few others in that neighborhood, and John Cox, the Endsleys, and perhaps a few others in what is now called Abington, there were probably no earlier settlers in Wayne County. Thomas Bulla, Jacob Fouts and Jesse Davenport settled on the Elkhorn, four or five miles southeast of Richmond; Davenport and one or two of the Fouts, lower down, within the present township of Boston—all the same year in which the Hoovers settled north of Richmond. The Hunts, the next year, settled on and near the Elkhorn, several miles below where Davenport settled. Mr. Davenport was a prominent citizen, became Associate Judge. He was killed at the barn-raising of Benjamin Koonts. A man by the name of Williams was killed at the same time.

In the northwest part of the township Peter Weaver settled in 1807, on a part of the section (19) in the northwest corner of the township—the land now owned by Christopher C. Beeler, of Richmond. John Collins, in 1807, settled where Milton H. Beeson lives; James Lamb, a native of Scotland, on land now owned by Catharine, widow of John Lamb; James Lamb died in September, 1841, aged eighty-five years; Abraham Gaar, from Kentucky, in April, 1807, where his son Larkin now resides; Aaron Martin, in 1807 or 1808, on a quarter, a part of which is now owned by Jephtha Turner; Jackson Rambo, an early settler, who died in 1816, aged fifty-five years, and in 1846, his widow, in her eighty-seventh year; Wright Lancaster, from North Carolina, in 1808, also Christopher Roddy and Joshua Meek; Isaac Beeson, from the same State, in 1807; Robert Grimes, in 1808, and Abraham Esteb, Jacob Keesling, Pa., Armstrong Grimes and Wm. Parson all came in 1809. Adam Zeck, from Virginia, settled in the northeast corner of the township in 1810, and lived and died on the same farm. He was a blacksmith by trade. David Schaffer came the same year and settled in the extreme northeast corner of the township. Simon Draper settled just south of Schaffer, the same year, both from Virginia. This section of the township and the Elkhorn Valley were the first settled. Jas. Sulser came early, and his son, Hiram, now occupies the old homestead. Lazarus Whitehead, a British preacher, came on Dec. 25, 1805, the year the county was first settled. He officiated at the first funeral in the county, and also solemnized the first marriage. The cemetery was on his land. He settled in Elkhorn Valley. Wm. Burke came the latter part of the same year. Isaac Beeson came in 1807, and settled up the stream from Whitehead. Wayne County was no exception to the general rule, the settlers who first came choosing their location near water, and the Elkhorn was settled from its head to its mouth. Then, again, these valleys were the richest lands, and the timber perhaps thicker, but no heavier, than farther away.

In the north part of the township Fielding Gaar settled on a part of section 21, lately occupied by R. Rue, now owned by Justus Kroskopf. Wm. Williams settled in 1814 where Isaac Bulla resides. He was a maker of spinning-wheels, and removed to Richmond; was also a minister in the Society of Friends. Asa Jeffers settled on land now owned by Alonzo Osborn and Daniel W. Schaffer. Adjoining this section on the south, James, William and Robert Grimes owned the land now owned by John T. Williams. Daniel Hart, from North Carolina, settled, in 1814, on the land now owned by Francis Hendricks. Henry Tinkle, John Hollett and Thomas Taylor all settled in the northeast part of the township.

In the southern and southeastern section of the township came Joshua Benton and Jeremiah Girton, both settling on sections 36; and James Holman, John Jordon, 1810, Absalom Rambo and Joseph Cravens all settled on section 35. Thos. Hyatt, a Revolutionary soldier, settled also in this section. Isaac Conly settled about one mile from where New Boston now stands.

Wm. Holman settled on the southeast quarter of section 34, adjoining town. John Miller, one of the first settlers on the southwest quarter, where his son, Wm. Miller, lives.

Thomas Ward, early on section 33. Thomas Young, where Peter Shidler now lives. John Brattan, from North Carolina. Section 3, southwest of town, Samuel Beck, from North Carolina, on the southeast quarter. James Fisher, northeast quarter. Owen Seany, Sr., from North Carolina, about 1809, southwest quarter, where he resided until his death in 1831. Section next west (4), Peter Mellender, one mile west from town. John Rife, on the land now owned by his son, Jacob Rife, a German Baptist (Dunkard) preacher. Isaac Esteb, on the northwest corner of the section. Benj. Jarvis, very early on the southwest quarter, at or near where Zachariah Osborn lives. He died in 1862, aged eighty-two years.

Joel Moore settled on section 32, and not far off Samuel Jobe, a Baptist preacher, located his home. This was in the southwest portion of the township.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The southeast part of the township is nearly level, the edge of a large table-land extending into Ohio. This was of a swampy nature, originally, but since it has been drained, is probably the best land in the township. On each side of the Elkhorn for two miles it is hilly, where very fine building stone is found, but there are no minerals. The mill at Elkhorn Falls was erected in 1817 by Jesse Davenport. Afterward a saw-mill was added, all run by water-power. This mill was rebuilt in the year 1859 by Addington & Brown and known as the "Relief Mills." Another mill was erected in 1825 on Short Creek, called the Short Creek Mills, which were kept in operation up to 1873. Both of these mills had a linseed oil attachment. It is stated that Chas. Hunt built a sort of tub-mill as far back as 1807, near the west line of the township, but, while the Hunts settled in the township the latter part of that year, it is doubtful about a mill being built prior to the winter or fall of 1808-'9.

A half mile north of New Boston Jas. L. Hains built a steam saw-mill, and in 1866 Jno. J. Conly erected a sorghum mill, with a capacity of 100 gallons of syrup per day. Among the first physicians of the township were: Drs. Stevens, Butler, Wheeler, Hiram Bull, David S. Evans and Wm. H. Evans.

The first preacher was Lazarus Whitehead, Baptist.

The first church was a Baptist, organized in 1807 by Rev. Lazarus Whitehead. Members: Rev. Whitehead and wife, Aaron Martin and wife, and Chas. Hunt and wife. The first death, buried in the Whitehead cemetery, was the daughter of John Beard, in the summer of 1808, and the second Jane Endsley, daughter of John Endsley, three years—all the fall of the same year.

The first marriage in the township and county was that of Miss May Whitehead and John Hunt. The license was secured at Lawrenceburg, the then county seat.

The first church was a Baptist. The next two were the Methodist Episcopal and the Friends.

The first preaching was across the creek from Jas. Endsley's, and the first baptism was in the creek near by, two being immersed—Mary Hunt and Jas. Martin. These were also the first two to join the church after its original members.

The first birth in the county was Jephtha Turner, son of John Turner, the first Sheriff of Wayne County. There were formerly three trustees, but this was changed early in the sixties. Since then they have been as follows (Term, two years): Jos. M. Bulla, two terms; Alfred Moore, two terms; Clayton Brown, one term; John J. Conway, one term; George H. Stephenson, three terms; Hiram Sulser, two terms; Jacob S. Moore, one term; Edward Timberlake, two terms. Judge Bailey Butter was Associate Judge for three years. Present officers: Trustee, Edward Timberlake; Assessor, Stephen Farrow; Constable, E. R. Stover, and Justices of Peace, B. B. Dillman and David Paulus.

The following names of justices of the peace appear in a number of old dockets. The years in which their respective records commence are also given. Isaac Esteb, 1819; James P. Burgess, 1829; Abraham Cuppy, 1834; Joseph A. Simpson, Stephen McWhinney, 1835; Isaac Mellender, 1839; Wm. Druley, 1841; Alfred Moore, 1851; John H. Stearns, 1854; James Esteb, 1856; Jacob F. Rinehart, 1869; Jacob F. Rinehart, James P. Burgess, 1872.

SCHOOLS.

There are seven school-houses in the township, numbered from one to seven. During a wind storm in the summer of 1883 Nos. 4 and 5 were blown down. The schools are brick, of good size and well furnished. The school history in first volume will give a full report of the schools of the township.

CHURCHES.

There are six churches located within the township, viz.: Universalist, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Christian, Friends and Myer's Chapel (Methodist Episcopal).

Friends.—Is located about two miles north of New Boston, the society being formed about the year 1809. The first resident minister was the Rev. Wm. Williams, from Tennessee. The society numbers some 150 members and their church, a frame building, was erected in 1875. Their first church was built of logs which was used up to 1854, when a brick was erected, which lasted until the frame one was occupied.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized about 1810, but the oldest inhabitant cannot recollect the exact date or its original members. They worshiped in an old log cabin for several years. In 1836 they erected their second church which was used about one-third of a century. In 1869 a handsome and substantial brick edifice was erected at a cost of $3,000, the building committee being John Druley, Ira Starr and H. H. Moore. The church has stood the test of time, and is still moving in the path of progress. In the summer a Sunday-school is kept during the season. The Rev. Geo. W. Bower has held the pastorate since 1874. The church was unfortunate in the loss of its records by fire a few years since. This was a serious loss, as memory failed to bring to mind much that was of value in the history of the church.

Myer's Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1823, with Hugh Cull and wife, Mrs. McFadden, Isaac Beeson, James Sulser and wife, Jas. P. Burgess and wife, and John Lamb and wife. The early preachers were the Revs. Whitten, Miller and Jamison. Service was held at the house of Jas. P. Burgess for a number of years, in the open air in good weather, and in an old shop. In 1834 there was a great revival under the inspiration and direction of the Rev. — Dorsey, a young and eloquent preacher. The church reached a membership of sixty, and in 1848 erected the brick chapel, which is yet their place of worship, but has undergone much improvement. The present membership is twenty-five and the pastor the Rev. C. W. Tinsley. That noted and eccentric preacher so celebrated in early days, Lorenzo Dow, preached several times in this township. He generally preached in the open air, a log or a stump answering for a pulpit. In fact there were no buildings at that early day that would hold the mass of people who came from miles around to listen to homely, yet forcible, eloquence of the early backwoods orator and preacher.

Baptist Church.—As before remarked, this church was organized in 1807 in the western, or rather northwestern, part of the township, under the earnest work and zeal of Lazarus Whitehead. A log church was erected on the south end of the graveyard, which was on the farm of the minister, Mr. Whitehead. This was destroyed after a service of two years, and another was built on the same site, also of logs, which served them until 1842, when the present church was erected. It is enclosed by a stone fence which was put up in 1832. The membership now is between sixty and seventy, and the church has always been fairly progressive and prosperous. It has always maintained a pastor and had regular preaching.

The Universalist Church met with strong opposition from the Puritan element in its early struggle for existence. The Methodist church refused them the use of their churches, and by a spirit of opposition aroused they were also debarred the use of the school-house, which, by the law of the State, made them free to all denominations of Christians. They did, however, meet in the school-house at one time, and were promptly arrested or reported to the Grand Jury as disturbers of the peace, by those of "I am better than thou" sort of Christians. Such was some of the experience this church met with in their early days, though much more could be written of their trials and the obloquy in which they suffered. However, all religions thrive under persecution, and the softening hands of time, and a truer and better faith came to their relief. They were not quite so bad as they had been painted.

The names of the ministers who gave the church its first impulse were the Revs. H. F. Miller, D. R. Biddlecome and W. S. Bacon, and the members of the church who stood by it and encouraged the good work were J. M. Bulla, Smith Dudley, Zachariah Osborn; and among the noble women were Anna E. Danby, Tracy Osborn, Nancy Bulla, Melissa Grimes, and Sarah Johnston. These were not all who espoused the cause of the church, but it was all that came to the memory of our informant. But others, both men and women, did their part to advance the interests and the building up of their church. With such leaders the church did not long want for a prompt organization and a church edifice of their own.

At a meeting at Masonic Hall, in February, 1868, the first move looking to an organization and the building of a church was made, and $1,005 was subscribed then and there. With this sum as a starting point, a committee was appointed to superintend the building of a church edifice, and was composed of the following named gentlemen: J. M. Bulla, Z. Osborn and Samuel Moore. A Board of Trustees was also elected, comprising Smith Druley, Wm. G. Searing and J. M. Bulla.

Under the control of the above committee and trustees a fine brick edifice was erected, at a cost of $4,100. The first sermon was preached by the Rev. H. F. Miller, on Friday preceding the second Sunday in May, and on May 9 this church was dedicated to the service of the Most High, the sermon being eloquently delivered by the Rev. W. S. Bacon, assisted by the Rev. D. R. Biddlecome in the service. Thus, after many trials, a haven of rest was found. Universalism had a home of its own.

At the close of the service on Sunday, July 11, 1870, the church organization was effected under the call of Rev. H. F. Miller. Those who remained and became members were: Bros. Smith Dudley, Zachariah Osborn, Dr. W. H. Evans, Rev. Frank Evans, Rev. T. C. Druley, Samuel Oler, Jacob Flush and J. M. Bulla; Sisters Nancy Bulla, Anna E. Druley, Tracy Osborn, Susan B. Stanley, Nancy A. Evans, Melissa Grimes, Mary C. Evans, Tabitha Oler and Sue B. Evans. A constitution and by-laws were adopted, and the First Universalist Church of Boston became a permanent organization.

The officers were: Smith Druley, Moderator; Dr. W. H. Evans, Clerk; Susan B. Stanley, Treasurer, and Samuel Oler and W. H. Evans, Deacons. The Trustees were Zachariah Osborn and J. M. Bulla.

BOSTON.

This village is located on four sections, Nos. 2, 3, 34 and 35, and is about one mile from the Union County line on the south, and the Ohio State line on the east. It is a small village, not yet incorporated, and not destined to be a place of note. It has a fine turnpike road to Richmond, some seven miles distant, and the principal business is transacted there. "Young's History" gives the following:

The first merchant is supposed to have been a McMaster. According to the recollection of early settlers, the following succeeded McMaster, very nearly in the order named: James Iliff, Baxter & Dunham, Jacob W. Fisher and Wm. Fouts, Bull & Haines, Wm. and John Russey, — Irvin. From 1839 to 1845 the following are on record as having paid for store licenses: In 1839, Doughty & Widup, Joseph F. Chapman, Isaac Craig, until 1835 (perhaps later). In 1844 Strattan & Burbank, John Strattan. In 1844 and 1845, Harvey & McCullough, Aaron Druley. There have also been named, Samuel and LeRoy McWhinney, Hiram Bulla & Joseph Druley, Smith Druley & John Deal, John Druley, John Steele, Jacob F. Rinehart, Robert Swishey & Frank Templeton, David Jenks, Jacob F. Rinehart. The postoffice was established in April, 1837, and Wm. Russell, Jr., was the first Postmaster.

As far back as 1813 Isaac Conolly laid off a small portion of his land into town lots. Not many were sold. The Druleys and Stanleys settled near there, and the old Methodist Episcopal church, erected of logs, was there even before Mr. Conolly laid off his embryo town. Some twenty years later James Iliff, Stephen McWhinney, Wm. Druley and Samuel Shinn became the proprietors of the land, and platted the town in 1832, the plat and survey being recorded Aug. 30, 1832. It also gave these two lodges:

Downey Lodge, No. 233, of Free and Accepted Masons was organized under a charter granted May 25, 1858. Charter Members: Nicholas Druley, W. M.; John H. Stearns, S. W.; Joseph M. Bulla, J. W.; Joseph Clengenpul, S. D.; Joseph T. Druley, J. W.; Louis Pigg, Tyler; J. M. Jones, Secretary.

Rinehart Lodge, 310, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized June 11, 1863. The charter was granted May 20, 1868, on application of Jacob F. Rinehart, Henry Hawkins, Enos Geary, Philip Schneider, and Charles Corns. First officers: Jacob F. Rinehart, N. G.; Oliver H. Toney, V. G.; Samuel J. Johnson, Secretary; Henry C. Fouts, Per. Secretary; Levi G. Druley, Treasurer.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Benjamin Brown, deceased, was born in Burlington County, N. J., in May, 1798, a son of Clayton and Elizabeth (Satterthwaite) Brown, of Welsh descent. When twenty-one years of age he, with his brother Samuel, left New Jersey, and settled in Preble County, Ohio, on land given them by their father. He cleared the land and resided there till 1835, when he sold it, and bought 160 acres in Boston Township, Wayne Co., Ind., a part of which is the farm where his son-in-law, Edward Timberlake, resides. It was only partially cleared, but he improved it, and lived here till his death. He was a conscientious, industrious man, and a good manager. He was public-spirited, and interested in anything that tended toward the upbuilding of the community. He was twice married, the first time in Ohio, in 1827, to Mary Ann Craig. They had four children, two of whom are living—Clayton P., and Martha B. Timberlake. Isaac C. and Jacob died in childhood. Mrs. Brown died in July, 1838, aged twenty-eight years. In the fall of 1840 Mr. Brown married Naomi Taylor. They had one child—Hannah E., wife of Clarkson Davis. Mr. Brown died Oct. 14, 1879, and his wife Oct. 14, 1881, both aged eighty-one years. Both were life-long members of the Society of Orthodox Friends.

J. M. Bulla, President of the Wayne County Historical Society, was born Dec. 11, 1811, in Wayne County, Ind., and is the second son of Thomas and Susannah (Mora) Bulla. He had few school privileges, like all children of the early pioneers, but like a tree in barren soil, his mind instinctively found and appropriated the nourishment desired. He had a fondness for history, and after the day's labor his evenings were spent in reading. He studied the common English branches, and qualified himself to teach school, an occupation in which he was very successful. Impelled by a desire, cherished from boyhood, he, in 1832 and 1833, applied himself to the study of medicine, but not wishing to practice the profession, he turned his attention to agriculture, and became a successful farmer and stock-raiser. In 1876 Mr. Bulla was elected President of the Richmond Horticultural Society, and served three years. The same year he was elected Vice-President of the State Horticultural Society. He has acquainted himself with fruit-growing, both practically and scientifically. In August, 1842, he was elected Commissioner of Wayne County, and was re-elected in 1845, thus serving six years. While serving as County Commissioner he purchased the farm where the asylum stands, and lifted the first shovel of dirt from the place where the first building was located. He introduced a radical change in the manner of conducting the management of that institution, and the treatment of the inmates. His humane disposition peculiarly fitted him for the oversight of the unfortunate class that had to be provided for by public charity. In 1850 Mr. Bulla was chosen to represent Wayne County in the Legislature, and served two terms of one year each. He served both terms on the Committee of Elections, and other important committees, and was the author of several bills that passed both Houses. He was an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, and urged the right of enfranchising women. He has always taken a decided interest in the various temperance reforms, from the earliest to the present prohibition movement. In 1844 he was the first man in Boston Township to join the Washingtonian Society. The same year he became a member of the Sons of Temperance, and filled all the offices in that order. He united with the Masonic fraternity in 1853, and has taken the chapter degrees. He has filled the principal chairs of the lodge. He has for many years been a prominent member of the Universalist church—was one of the first in his vicinity to advocate the final triumph of good over evil. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and became a Republican on the organization of that party. When the war of the Rebellion, with its efforts to destroy the best Government in the world, broke out, he gave freely of his means to crush out treason, and was for some time engaged in the service of the Government. In years gone by Mr. Bulla was actively engaged in politics, and even now takes a deep interest in the political affairs of the country. He is well informed on the topics of the day, public-spirited, upright, honest and industrious. Those who know him best respect and admire him the most. In the Legislature he exerted a marked influence, and his efforts before the Horticultural Society have proved him possessed of literary ability. Some of his letters are worthy of special notice—among them an essay on "Agriculture and its Influence," delivered in February, 1876, and published in the agricultural papers in this State and Ohio; a paper on "What Destroyed the Pre-historic American?" a very able production upon which he spent much thought and research; his last annual address before the society, which was of scientific character, and was published with the proceedings of the State Horticultural Society. April 17, 1834, Mr. Bulla was married to Nancy Wilson, of Franklin County, by whom he has eleven children, all married and settled near him except one, who lives in Indianapolis. Several of them have been successful teachers. He has gained a competency by wise management and steady application to one pursuit. Without the aid of school or college he has acquired a large fund of knowledge, qualifying him to discharge the duties of various offices with ability. Possessing a mind that would have enabled him to succeed in any of the professions, he has given his thought and care to that part of the world's work that creates the material wealth of the country, and belongs to that eminently useful and much-to-be-respected class, the farmer.

Burgess* was born in Augusta County, Va., Sept. 27, 1801, a son of John and Jane (Irvin) Burgess, natives of Virginia, who removed to Springfield, Ohio, in 1815, where they died, the former in 1816 and the latter in 1830. ### CENTRE TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION.—INDIAN TROUBLES.—PIONEER LIFE.—EARLY INDUSTRIES.—CENTREVILLE.—THE OLD COUNTY SEAT.—ITS EMINENT CITIZENS.—A FEW ANECDOTES.—EARLY EVENTS IN THE TOWN.—THE FIRST FIRE COMPANY.—BUSINESS INTERESTS.—LODGES.—CHURCHES OF THE TOWN AND TOWNSHIP.—
BIOGRAPHICAL.

Centre Township was formed by the county commissioners Aug. 17, 1817. Its boundaries were subsequently enlarged but have since been curtailed several times by the formation of other townships, but it still remains among the largest in the county. The township contains excellent farming land, and the buildings and improvements are generally first class. It is well supplied with railroad facilities, both the Chicago and the Indianapolis divisions of the Pan-Handle passing through it. Turnpikes are numerous and the streams afford good water-power for mills. The surface is somewhat rolling; the soil, rich and productive.

Probably the first settler of the township was Daniel Nolan, after whom Nolan's Fork was named. He and three of his sons-in-law located on the west bank of this stream, on the present McCoy farm, and began improving a quarter-section. At the time of the land sale they were unable to pay for the land, and Thomas McCoy took it off their hands, paying Nolan for his improvement. This was in 1812. McCoy, originally from Kentucky, was one of the first settlers of the county, locating south of Richmond in 1805. He was led to change his location by the following circumstance: One day his horses, which were allowed to run at large according to the then universal custom, strayed from the East Fork and came westward into what was then the Indian lands. McCoy followed them and found them near Nolan's Fork, where no improvement had then been made. As it was late before he overtook the horses, he decided to encamp for the night and return home the following day. He found a beautiful spring, filled nearly full with the horns of deer, which it is supposed the Indians had placed there, and encamped near it. Before leaving in the morning he was so much pleased with the surroundings that he decided to purchase the land, return and live upon it as soon as it came into the market. The cabin built by Nolan stood a few steps from the house now occupied by Michael McCoy. During the Indian troubles, Thomas McCoy and his neighbors converted it into a block-house and surrounded it with a rude ditch and wooden palings. They had a small cannon which they fired to warn the settlers in times of danger, and summon them to the protection of the "fort." No serious difficulties arose in this neighborhood. The lands along the creek were first taken up and improved. The Indians used to return to the stream to hunt as late as 1820. Two, whose names were John Green and Ben Davis, are still remembered by some of the old residents.

Henry Bryan, the first county surveyor, was a man of very superior intelligence. He was a native of Delaware and settled on the east side of Nolan's Fork, opposite the McCoy farm. He was born in 1768 and died in 1835. He was one of the very first settlers of Centre Township, removing in 1811 to the farm on which he died. During the Indian troubles, Bryan quitted his farm for one or two seasons, returning after hostilities had ceased.

William Crawford, a jovial and social man, who exhibited a great fondness for visiting his neighbors during the later years of his life, was another early settler on Nolan's Fork. He had a distillery which is supposed to have been the first in the county. A man named See lived south of the McCoy farm, and William Conner adjoining; James Hayes' was the next farm south, extending to the township line. David J. Woods lived west of the creek in the southern part of the township. Caleb Jackson came early. His son, Joseph W., also early improved a farm in the western part of the township. Greenburg Cornelius settled in 1811 on land which is now a part of the county farm. William and John Harvey, James Townsend, Exum Elliott and Robert Galbraith were all early settlers in the western and northern part of the township. Edward Benbow and Joseph Overman, the latter from North Carolina, settled about 1813. John Stiggleman settled early, where his son Henry lives. Michael Harvey, John Elwood, Joseph Overman, Jacob Griffin (who came from North Carolina about 1813), John Maxwell (from Tennessee, about 1814) John King (from Kentucky, 1812) Jehu Wickersham (1816), John Garrett, William Hosier (from North Carolina, 1811, on the David Commons farm) and Robert Harvey all deserve to be named among early settlers.

William Sumner, from Virginia, settled early near Centreville, and was the first owner of the land on which most of the town stands. John King afterward owned a portion of the land. Israel Elliott also settled near town. Evan Shoemaker located on the next farm east. A man named Bell entered several tracts of land in the same neighborhood, but never settled here. James Junkins and Robert Black came quite early.

Among the pioneers of the western part of the township were John Hill, from North Carolina, about 1814; Ezekiel Commons, about 1813; Daniel Stone, on the place where James Neil afterward had a tavern and a blacksmith shop; Francis Coffin; John Woodward, on the farm afterward owned by Conover; Samuel Parker, James Martin and Charles Canaday.

Among the early settlers in the eastern part of the township were: Joseph Overman, Wm. and Thomas Culbertson, Vinnedge Russell, Richard Pedrick, James E. Bryant, Isaac Miller, Joseph Kem and others. In the southern part of the township, early, were: John Jones, from Virginia, who several times represented this county in the Legislature; Beale Butler, once Associate Judge and County Commissioner; Peter and Zachary Dicks, from North Carolina, who settled about 1812; William Bundy; John Smith, son of John Smith, the founder of Richmond; Daniel Crow, from North Carolina; Nathaniel Bell; David Galbraith, on land since owned by Joshua Eliason; Isaac Williams, on land afterward owned by Thomas McConnaha and later by his sons.

Isaac Julian was one of the pioneers of Centre Township and lived on the farm now owned by Oliver H. Brumfield. He was a man of good intelligence and scholarship and was for several years a school teacher. He also represented the county in the Legislature. Mr. Julian was the father of Jacob B., George W. and Isaac H. Julian. He died quite early.

Robert Commons, a native of Ireland, came from Virginia and settled a mile and a half northwest of Centreville, where he died in 1837, at the age of eighty-nine. Benjamin Maudlin came from North Carolina to Wayne Township in 1807, and in 1813 removed to Centre Township, settling on Nolan's Fork, two and a half miles north of Centreville. He removed to Michigan about 1835, where he died. His son John, born in North Carolina in 1806, is now resident of Centreville. Joseph Holman, who lived on the farm now owned by Mr. Jackson, was one of the most prominent of the early settlers. During the Indian troubles he erected a block-house on his farm. James Thompson, from New Jersey, settled on the place afterward owned by Wm. Frame, his son-in-law.

Before the days of railroads the amount of travel over the National road was great. Drovers from the West with herds of cattle; emigrants from the East to the Western States and Territories, and mercantile travelers passed over the road. Joshua Eliason, whose house was a favorite stopping place, says that he has sometimes had over 130 people and three or four droves of cattle stay at his place in a single night.

Mr. Morgan McCoy states that he is supposed to have been the second white male child born in the township, Jacob B. Julian being the first. The first death in the township was that of a man named Brinton, who was an early squatter on the George McConnaha farm. Brinton cut his knee while hewing timber with a broad-ax, and bled to death from the wound. He was buried on the farm. Margaret Bryan, who died Aug. 5, 1815, was the first whose remains were placed in the Bryan cemetery. One of the first marriages in the township was that of Henry Bryan to Jane Crawford.

The first grist-mill in the township was erected by James Crawford, about 1816, on the site of the large mill now owned by Smith & Parrot, about a mile southwest of Centreville. It was a very primitive affair, consisting of a "corn cracker" and wheat burrs, with a rude shed over them. For the reception of the wheat, large cuts from a hollow sycamore log were used. Jacob Wolf, after Crawford. He sold to Jacob Crull, Jr., who built the mill now standing. Nathan Hollingsworth was the next owner and made several improvements. Then came Jackson, McCoy & Gray,——Rylan, Smith & Clark, and the present owners, Smith & Parrot. David J. Woods built a grist-mill and saw-mill in the southwestern part of the township as early as 1820. Nothing of it now remains. Asa Provo erected a saw-mill on Nolan's Fork, north of Centreville, about 1817. This was probably the first in the township. Other early saw-mills were built by John Copeland, Robert Harvey, Exum White, Nathan Overman, and Nathan Hollingsworth. Robert Harvey erected a grist-mill near his saw-mill. David Commons afterward became the owner and made a fine mill of it.

Robert Galbraith had a tannery three miles north of Centreville quite early. A carding-mill was established by Nathan Overman, a mile west of Centreville. John Maxwell, a blacksmith, had a shop about two miles north of the town, early. Richard Cheeseman was an early settler in the northern part of the township. He erected a small grist-mill, or corn-cracker, as early as 1818, on Nolan's Fork. His nephew, Uriah Cheeseman, originally from New Jersey, settled on the west side of the present Centreville and Williamsburg turnpike, in 1821.

CENTREVILLE.

The town of Centreville, which for over half a century was the seat of justice in the county of Wayne, has in many respects a remarkable history. Rarely does it fall to the lot of any small place to be the home of so many eminent men, conspicuous in the affairs both of State and Nation, as have lived in Centreville in former years. The town lost her eminence as a political center and the home of politicians and statesmen when she lost the county seat in 1873, but she still has many good and worthy citizens who are awake to the best interests of the county, and are ready to aid in advancing the general welfare. The town has recovered from the depressing effects of the county seat removal, and now appears thrifty, energetic and prosperous.

Centreville is situated near the geographical center of Wayne County, on the National road and the main line of the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad. The town is rather attractive in its general appearance, containing many good buildings, and presenting many evidences of neatness and thrift. In 1880 its population was 870. It is probably over 1,000 at the present writing. The location is healthful and pleasant, and there is a rich agricultural country surrounding the town. Centreville was platted Oct. 20, 1814, by Henry Bryan, surveyor, and the survey was certified by the trustees Jan. 2, 1815. The ground was donated for the purpose of securing the county seat by Israel Elliott and Ethan A. Stone. Isaac Julian, Joseph Holman and William Harvey were appointed Trustees, and under their direction the town was laid out. Subsequently additions to the town plat were made as follows: By Joseph Evans, in March, 1818; by Lot Pugh, Micajah T. Williams and Arthur Henry, in June, 1818; by William Sumner, in January, 1819; by William M. Doughty and William Elliott, in December, 1830, and by Isaac Abrahams, in December, 1833. Certain lots were reserved for a public cemetery, for school purposes, etc

The act making Centreville the county seat, although passed in 1816, did not become operative until a few years later. But lawyers, physicians and business men almost immediately established themselves in the new town, which before 1820 had become a village of considerable proportions for that day. In 1826 the town had two stores, three taverns, one grocery, one wagon-maker, one wheelwright, two plasterers, one tinsmith, one saddler, two blacksmiths, two cabinet makers, two shoemakers, one millwright, five carpenters, two bricklayers, one tailor, two tanners, three physicians, three lawyers, one school, one Masonic lodge, a postoffice, and the Western Times printing office. The writer to whom we are indebted for the foregoing summary estimated the population in 1826 at 200. Old residents claim that it was not less than 400, and the latter figures would better correspond with the industrial statement above given.

Most of the great men of Centreville have been lawyers, and the history of their lives is narrated in another chapter. Here Oliver P. Morton worked at the hatter's trade; here General Lew Wallace and General Noble attended school, and here General A. E. Burnside worked at tailoring. To these famous names might be added many others, but it is unnecessary, as all are duly mentioned elsewhere in this work.

The first store in Centreville was opened about 1815 by Caleb Lewis and Lawrence H. Brannon, who had a small stock of goods, and conducted the business in partnership. They came from the Kanawha Salt Works in Virginia. Joshua Eliason, then a boy, bought of them the first article ever sold by any merchant in the town—one pound of coffee; price, 50 cents. Samuel P. Booker opened a general store, with a fair stock of goods for that time, as early as 1819. He was a good business man, of fine appearance. He died in July, 1823, and is said to have been the wealthiest man then in the county. He was a native of Virginia.

One of the first buildings erected in the town was a hewed log house, put up by a man named Galbraith on the corner where the American House now stands. Samuel P. Booker, and after him Isaac Burbank, kept store in it several years.

Lewis Forkner, from North Carolina, settled in Centreville in 1817 and died in 1824. His son James was for many years a prominent business man of the town.

Levi Jones was one of the early settlers and prominent business men; followed building, brick-making, etc. He built the first brick house in town prior to 1823. He died in 1824. Judge Williams, now living east of town, engaged in the mercantile business and erected a brick house in Centreville in 1823. James Blair was a merchant, cotemporary with Williams. Lot Bloomfield, lawyer, had a store soon after. Other early merchants were Isaac Burbank, who remained in business many years, Richard Cheeseman and

Thomas Commons. Among the mercantile firms in business here at various dates between 1835 and 1845 were Myers Seaton, Snyder & Adams, A. W. Ray & Co., Jacob Fisher, Holman & Ray, Hannah & Newman, J. and H. Purviance & Co., Isaac Burbank, Elmer & Forkner, Wm. B. Hornish, Richard H. Swain and William Arnold. In 1842 the town had nine general merchants and a larger population than at present.

Samuel Hannah, afterward Clerk of Courts and State Treasurer, was for many years among the foremost business men of the town; he removed to Centreville in 1823. Dr. John Prichett, now the oldest male resident of Centreville, first came to the place in 1826.

The first tavern was probably kept by Rachel Neal. Wm. Elliott kept a public house in 1823 and for some years thereafter. Wm. Vaughan, Levi M. Jones and Samuel Hannah were among the early tavern-keepers.

Among the early settlers were Dr. David F. Sacket, who moved from Salisbury; Dr. Ira Pier; James Rariden, Cyrus Finch, Martin M. Ray and John S. Newman, lawyers; Septimus Smith, lawyer and editor; Major John Gay, Deputy County Clerk; Daniel Strattan and Thomas G. Noble, a little later.

The first tannery in Centreville was started by John Lewis about 1818. Daniel Strattan and Thomas Gentry each had tanneries prior to 1826 and carried on business many years later.

The manufacture of hats, once an important industry in every village, was carried on in Centreville for many years. Probably the first who followed that trade here was Jacob N. Booker. He was followed by George Troxell and William Widup. Wm. S. T. Morton carried on the business quite largely several years, and his brother, afterward Governor, worked at the same trade.

Caleb Hiatt, William L. Reynolds and H. E. Hurlbut were early cabinet-makers. Isaac Forkner was the first blacksmith. Lewis Burk and Frederic Dillon came soon after Forkner. Edward Benbow, Wm. Hill and Daniel Lantz were among the first wagon-makers. Martin Hornish and John Chapman were the first shoemakers. Jesse Willetts and Jacob Hornish were among the first carpenters.

The first tailor was Charles F. Reed. Other early tailors were: John E. Dunham, Matthew W. Jack and William B. Hornish. Dunham followed tailoring many years, and about 1840 had in his shop an assistant named A. E. Burnside, since a famous General. Burnside went from here to West Point, after working a year or so at tailoring. While he was in the shop, Dunham was Postmaster of the town. A man named Richards, remarkably tall and slender, then resided here, and was generally known by the nickname "Ramrod." One day he called at the postoffice to enquire for letters, and young Burnside waited upon him. "Any letters?" Burnside looked all through the "R's," all the time supposing Ramrod was the real name of his questioner, and then said, "No, Mr. Ramrod; nothing for you." Richards flew into a passion at once and used bad words, threatening the young tailor; but the latter saw that he had made a blunder, and apologized.

The first record of the proceedings of the town officers bears the date June 12, 1834. On that day M. M. Ray, John C. Kibbey, Jesse Williams, Daniel Strattan, Thomas Gentry and Nelson Boon qualified as Trustees before Samuel Hannah, Clerk of Courts of Wayne County. Daniel Strattan was elected President of the board.

The officers of the town for the year 1883-'4 are: Dr. Wm. F. King, First Ward; Hayman Dobbs, Second Ward; Albert R. Jones, Third Ward; George W. Gates, Fourth Ward; Geo. L. Cates, Fifth Ward, Councilmen. Hayman Dobbs, President of the board. J. H. Gentry is Clerk; John K. Jones, Treasurer; George Sanders, Marshal; David A. Green, President and Chief of the fire department; J. A. Bowen, Vice-President, fire department; James Nichols, First Engineer; C. B. Means, Second Engineer. Justices of the Peace: David Gentry and Allen Abernethy. The Township Trustee is C. J. Harvey.

Probably no small town in the State has a more efficient or better equipped fire department than Centreville. Among the by-laws and ordinances for the government of the corporation adopted June 19, 1834, is one specifying that it shall be the duty of each male householder to provide himself with a substantial bucket made of tin or wood, and at all times keep it in readiness for use when required. The marshal was authorized to direct and control the fire department, which was to be made up of "all white male persons over the age of twenty-one years." This ordinance was repealed in 1836.

In 1835 the trustees voted to build an engine-house, one story high, 12 x 16 feet in size, and on the 5th of October authorized Frederick V. Snider to purchase a fire-engine, voting an appropriation of $300 toward paying for it. Mr. Snider purchased in Cincinnati, for $445, an engine that afterward became noted in the town, and which was called "The Old Flame." April 21, 1836, a fire company was organized, to act under the president and trustees of the corporation. F. V. Snider was appointed "Foreman and Commander-in-Chief of the Centreville Fire Company;" William Widup, Assistant; Lewis Jones, First Engineer, and Franklin Booker, Second Engineer. The fire company thus organized consisted of John E. Dunham, William Beverlin, John Chapman, Robert Dinwiddie, David Dinwiddie, T. L. Doughty, J. P. Doughty, William Doughty, Jr., Samuel Delong, George Holman, William Dell, Thomas Brown, James Egler, Jesse Delong, Daniel Strattan, Henderson Fleming, John S. Newman, Solomon Meredith, John Myers, William Evans, John Larue, Abner Haines, John H. Hutchinson, William S. T. Morton, Thomas Gentry, John Winders, Norris Jones, Eli Jones, Washington Jones, John Strattan, J. R. Godfrey, Daniel Johnson, John Jamieson, Jennings Fisher, and Aaron Harvey. Of the foregoing, only David Dinwiddie, now of Philadelphia; George Holman, of Indianapolis, and Eli and Washington Jones are known to be living.

A hook and ladder company organized at the same time with the above consisted of Michael Hornish, Crawford Conner, C. F. Miller, J. M. Fisher, James Forkner, Stephen Gaston, David Moore, Abel Evans, Isaac Snooke, J. L. Catter, G. W. Conner, E. A. Miller, George M. Evans, and Charles Wertman, all of whom are probably now dead.

In consequence of a very destructive fire on the night and morning of the 15th and 16th of October, 1875, at which time nearly $40,000 worth of property was destroyed, the citizens decided that they needed more and better protection against damage by fire, and in December of the same year a fine steam fire-engine was purchased at a cost of $5,000. The present fire company was then organized, with M. Beitzelle, Chief, and Fred Lyman, First Engineer; J. H. Gentry, Secretary. Except one fire, Jan. 16, 1876, which destroyed property worth about $6,000, there has been no large fire in the town since that time.

Some years before the war a pork-packing establishment was started in Centreville by Morris Jones and others. After a short time John Latchaw became the owner of the building and fitted it up for a steam flouring mill. The building was afterward destroyed by fire. Mr. Latchaw then erected the one now standing. William Clark and John P. Smith were the next owners, and from them the property passed into the hands of George Legate, the present proprietor.

In 1868 Lyman & Haines erected a steam saw-mill in the eastern part of the town. J. A. Commons is the present owner, and does a good business.

After the seminary building became the public school building, in 1870, the former school-house was sold, and converted into a grist-mill by Charles Bertsch. It was afterward changed into a shoe factory, by a Mr. Somerby, of Indianapolis, who failed after operating a short time. The building is now unused.

In 1875 Vogel & Lincoln began the manufacture of organs in Centreville. In 1876 they moved to the old court-house, where Elisha Lincoln continued the business on quite a large scale, employing from twenty-five to thirty men. He failed after a short time and the industry ceased. The business was carried on under the name of the Hoosier Organ Company.

A machine shop and saw-mill was started about 1854 by Wharton Lyman, Norris Jones and others. After several changes the property was bought, in 1883, by T. H. Edmunds, who is doing a good business making cane-seated chairs and rockers. He saws his own lumber, and has a fine establishment, run and heated by steam.

Centreville has a large and commodious public hall, two stories high, of brick. It was erected by Norris Jones in 1858. The lower part is the engine-house and firemen's rooms and the the second floor contains the town hall.

The leading business interests of Centreville in the year 1884 are as follows: Lafayette Williams, Samuel C. Doughty, dry goods merchants; drug stores, Drs. Prichett & Reed, Dr. Darnell; agricultural implements and groceries, J. A. Dunbar & Co.; hardware and groceries, H. C. Leeson; groceries, G. Johnson, Geo. Wolf; boots and shoes, H. S. Scott; saddlery, Keys & Means; hotels—American, E. F. Horner; Park, D. A. Green; Jones House, Mrs. S. Jones; livery stables, Rudolph Shoff, D. A. Commons, Simon McConaha; grist-mill, Geo. Legate; saw-mill, J. A. Commons; chair factory, T. H. Edmunds; bank, First National.

Centreville has six physicians: Drs. John Prichett, Wm. F. King, Hosea Tillson, Silas Kersey, — Gordon (homeopathic), and Wm. Reed; and one lawyer, Thomas Means.

The town is growing quite rapidly in population, and a very commendable spirit of business enterprise seems to have taken a firm hold.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

The First National Bank of Centreville was organized and began business in 1863. Among the stockholders were: Oliver T. Jones, Jacob B. Julian, Joseph W. Jackson, David Commons, Joshua Eliason, Jesse Cates, George W. Julian, James Forkner, Philip Jenkins, Joseph C. Ratliff, Alexander Cheesman, William Culbertson, Jeremiah W. Swafford and others. Oliver T. Jones was chosen President, and Benj. L. Martin, Cashier. Martin declining the office, J. P. Southard was elected in his place. A few months later Jacob B. Julian succeeded Jones as President, and Mr. Jones became Cashier. Mr. Julian remained the President until 1873, when he was succeeded by James Forkner, who served until his death in 1880. The present President, Jesse Cates, was chosen in 1881. J. K. Jones is Cashier, and Geo. L. Cates, Assistant Cashier. The present Directors are: Jesse Cates, Philip Jenkins, Joseph C. Ratliff, Alexander Cheesman and J. K. Jones. The bank started with a capital of $100,000 which has since been reduced to $50,000. It has a surplus fund of $20,000.

CHURCHES.

West Grove (Friends') Meeting.—This church was organized in 1815, and its first Monthly Meeting was held in the woods in that year. A log structure, without a chimney, but with a fire-place in the center, in which a charcoal fire was kept up, was soon erected and used as a meeting-house. This was situated about three miles northwest of Centreville. About 1831 the log meeting-house was torn down and the present edifice took its place. Among the early preachers were: Jesse Bond, Hannah Baldwin and Daniel Williams. Early members: Robert Commons, William Hastings, Benjamin Maudlin, Jacob Griffin, James Townsend, William Harvey, Exum Elliott, Obed Barnard, Edward Benbow, Abraham and Joseph Cook, Jehu Wickersham, John Brumfield, John Maxwell, John Harvey, John Copeland, Robert Harvey, George Russell, Charles Canaday and Nathan Overman. The society is still in existence; its membership is now about 125. A school was maintained by the Friends near the church for many years.

Centreville M. E. Church was organized in 1823. The class then formed consisted of seven members: Israel and Mary Abrahams, Peter Ringo and wife, Mrs. Martha Talbot, Sarah Booker and Mrs. Hart, known as "Mother Hart." Sarah Reed joined a short time after the class was formed.

Israel Abrahams was the Class-Leader. There had been preaching by Methodists in the town from 1820. The meetings were generally held in the court-house. Some of the early preachers were: Revs. Bigelow, Strange, White, Haven, Wiley and Gath, some of whom were afterward noted as ministers and bishops. Members who connected themselves with the church early in its existence were: Elisha and Samuel King, Edward K. Hart, John Scott and wife, Mrs. Theresa Finch, Alfred Carter and wife, Ephraim J. Merritt and wife, and others. Mrs. Ham, of Centreville, is the oldest member of the congregation now living, and in the absence of any early records has furnished the writer most of the data for this sketch. About two years after the first class was formed Israel Abrahams, who was then a merchant in the town, erected a building for a store and residence (part of which is still standing), and fitted the upper portion of it for the use of the society. Here worship was held for nearly two years. A frame church was then erected in the eastern part of the town, and in it the first Sabbath-school in Wayne County was organized in 1827. The first conference ever held in Centreville was also held in this house later, Bishop Morris presiding. The present brick church was erected in 1842 and dedicated in October of that year. Just after the dedication the last conference ever held in the town convened in it. Very interesting Sabbath-schools were held for several years succeeding by the M. E. and Cumberland Presbyterian churches together. When the new church was built the congregation had nine classes, the smallest of which numbered twenty-one members. In March, 1884, the church had 125 members and about 140 Sabbath-school pupils; value of church property, $4,000. Wm. Boston is the present pastor; G. W. Gates and A. D. Bowers, Stewards; G. W. Gates, Dr. Wm. Reed, A. J. Rambo, Chas. Bertsch and Dr. Hosea Tillson, Trustees; A. D. Bowers and Hayman Dobbs, Class-Leaders.

Baptist Church.—A Baptist church was formed in the township as early as 1820, but ceased to exist many years ago. A meeting-house was built near Olive Hill. Among the first members were: Isaac Cotton and Samuel Taylor, who were preachers; John Stigleman, Richard Cheesman and Isaac Voorhees. There was also an early Baptist church in Centreville, which erected the house which was afterwards used by the Christians.

Centreville Christian Church was organized about 1839, principally through the efforts of Elder Samuel K. Hoshour. Elder James McVay held a series of revival meetings which prepared the way for an organization. Many of the members came from the Baptist and Freewill Baptist denominations, both of which had organized many years previous. Among the original members were: Jesse Thomas and wife, Mrs. Judith King, Mrs. Lucinda Eliason, John Winder and wife, Mrs. Roundtree, Mrs. Sally Dewey, Mrs. Patsy Thomas, Daniel Crow and wife, Mr. Tallhelm and wife, Elder Daniel Winder and wife. Joshua Eliason is the oldest member now living. Meetings were first held in the seminary and in the court-house. Then the church came into possession of a house previously erected by the Baptists at the north end of town, which was used until the present brick house was built in 1878. The new church cost about $5,000. The church now has nearly 100 members. Among the pastors have been Elders S. K. Hoshour, James McCullough, A. I. Hobbs, Van Buskirk, R. T. Brown, R. L. Howe, Wm. J. Howe and J. B. Ludwig, the present pastor.

Cumberland Presbyterian.—The Cumberland Presbyterian church, of Centreville, was organized by Rev. Le Roy Woods, in December, 1842. The original members were: John B. Stitt, James Woods, Eliza A. Bolander, Sarah Garthwaite, James H. Hudson, Susan Hudson, A. F. Dunham, Francis Smith, Henry Brown, Francis Smith, E. C. Seaton and Mary Stitt. The house of worship was erected in 1849. Among the pastors were: Revs. L. Woods, E. McCord, F. G. Black, Chas. Bond and H. D. Onyett. The organization, once flourishing, has become extinct and its church property was recently sold to the Friends.

Presbyterian.—A Presbyterian church was formed in Centreville, April 14, 1866. Rev. James A. McKee and Rev. L. W. Chapman were present at the organization. Among the members were: John McFarland, Wharton Lyman, John M. Coyner and Samuel Wilson, with their wives; Michael Wilson, Elizabeth Young, Elizabeth Huston, Caroline Dickey, Jane Rowan, Kate Johnson, Louisa A. Cunningham and Jane Doughty. The first Elders were: McFarland and Coyner. Pastors: Rev. F. L. Senour, S. S. Potter, Eben Muse and supplies. The congregation is small and has had no regular services for some time. The church edifice, a good brick building, was erected in 1868.

Centreville Meeting.—The Friends organized a meeting in Centreville, in March, 1884. There had been meetings held for a year preceding, but no organization. There are about fifty members belonging to this meeting, which is under the charge of the Whitewater Monthly Meeting. For their services they have purchased for $320 the church in Centerville, built by the Cumberland Presbyterians.

No man in Wayne County was more sensibly missed than David Commons. He was one of the charter members and a Director of the Centreville National Bank. He was one of the devoted defenders of human rights and served the principles of Republicanism and the party faithfully through life. He was married Feb. 26, 1824, to Rachel, daughter of John and Rachel Mote, of Miami County, Ohio. As a Representative he was firm in his adherence to the principles he considered right and to the interests of those who had reposed confidence in him, and to him is accorded a high place among prominent men and politicians of Wayne County. Noble, generous, honest, he won the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. In the fall of 1863 he was elected one of the Board of Commissioners of Wayne County, and served nine years. He was for several years Treasurer of Centre Township. March 17, 1838, he was married to Mary, daughter of John and Judith (Roundtree) King, who came to Wayne County from Kentucky in 1828. Their children were twelve in number—Joseph, died at the age of nineteen years; Jane, deceased, wife of J. M. Eliason; Elmira, wife of J. S. Russell; John K., Cashier of Centreville National Bank; Lucinda, wife of Joshua Eliason, Jr.; Martha, wife of S. G. Smith; Levi M., of Richmond; Anna, wife of Lewis Shute, of Preble County, Ohio; William H.; Emily, deceased, wife of W. C. Shute, Preble County, Ohio; Charles W. She is residing with her son, Lincoln, on the old homestead.

Washington Jones, farmer, Etna Township, Whitley Co., Ind., postoffice Hecla, was born a mile north of Centreville, Wayne Co., Ind., Dec. 8, 1816, three days before the State was admitted into the Union. His father, Levi Morris Jones, was born in Culpeper County, Va., Oct. 10, 1785, and emigrated from Culpeper County to Kanawha County with his father, John Jones, in 1797. His mother, Mary (Thomas) Jones, was born in Buckingham County, Va., Feb. 7, 1784, and in October, 1797, moved with her father to Kanawha County, where, March, 1806, she was married to Levi M. Jones. John Jones and Joseph Thomas were both of Welsh descent; both were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, the latter directly under command of General Washington, and neither would receive a pension from the Government, saying they fought from principle, not for money. John Jones had a family of ten children, eight sons and two daughters, and Joseph Thomas twelve, five sons and seven daughters. Levi Jones and his family moved to Wayne County, Ind., in April, 1815, and bought a quarter-section one mile north of Centreville, which he afterward sold, and bought town lots in Centreville, where he erected buildings and kept public house several years. He died in Centreville, Oct. 5, 1823. His wife died Sept. 20, 1848. Their son, Eli R. Jones, born March 17, 1818, was the first male child born in the town of Centreville. Levi Jones at his death left a family of ten children, the eldest fifteen years of age and the youngest six months. After the estate was settled they found themselves $500 in debt. This Mrs. Jones paid off, in addition to rearing her family. Washington Jones worked for his three elder brothers until he was nineteen years of age, receiving no wages aside from his rough clothing and board. He then bought a quarter-section of land in Madison County, Ind., from them, for $280, paying for it in monthly payments of $9 each, losing but two work days until it was paid for. He then bought eighty acres in Tipton County, Ind., for $200, which he paid for in the same way. He then thought he had enough land, and spent his earnings in improving a lot in Centreville. He spent $1,400 on the lot and improvements, and sold it for $900. With $600 he bought a quarter-section in Whitley County, which to-day is worth $8,000. Mr. Jones' early education was obtained in the subscription schools, but, his mother being poor, he attended very little before the days of public schools. He was obliged to stay at home and work, but he managed to keep up with his schoolmates. When in his twenty-first year he attended school three months, day and night, his brother, O. T. Jones, being the teacher, and learned more than in all his previous attendance. In his twenty-second year he began teaching, and taught the next six winters. Governor Morton's wife was a pupil in one of his schools. Jan. 20, 1845, Mr. Jones was married to Catherine Hunt, daughter of Colonel Smith Hunt, of Wayne County. They had two children—Mary Jane and Hannah Eliza, both deceased. His wife died Nov. 6, 1852, and Oct. 2, 1853, he was married to Mrs. Frances M. Hart, a sister of his first wife. They had three sons—Levi Monroe, Washington Thomas and Oliver Perry, all living. Mrs. Jones died in September, 1873, and Oct. 8, 1874, Mr. Jones married Mrs. Semantha C. Trumbull. He first settled and commenced housekeeping in Centreville, Feb. 1, 1845, and followed farming and brick-making till Aug. 29, 1848, when he left Wayne County, and Sept. 5 landed in Whitley County. When he was ready to leave Wayne County he said to his brothers (six of whom were present): "Boys, this looks rather tough, that a man should be driven from his native land by poverty, but I'm going, and if any of you should ever come to see me you will find me trying to fix myself comfortable in life, and if I never get so fixed, I shall die trying." His old friend, Eleazer Malone, was present and said he would soon sing, "Carry me back to Old Virginia." But he told him he should stay long enough to build himself a good home, and asked him if he would come and build it (Mr. Malone was a brick-mason). He said that he would, and thirteen years from that day Mr. Jones wrote him he was ready to build, telling him the day he wished him to be there, and true to his promise he was there and did the work. When Mr. Jones started in life he set a mark to work up to, and has been working to that end. He is now comfortably settled. He has served four years as Justice of the Peace, two terms as Township Trustee, one as Assessor, and was once elected County Commissioner, but did not serve. In politics he was first a Whig, and when the Republican party was organized enlisted under its banner, and continues one of its firm adherents. In religious faith he is a Baptist, having been a member of that denomination since the winter of 1849. He is opposed to all secret societies, is strictly temperate, using neither liquor nor tobacco, and is in favor of prohibition and equal rights for all. He was the first person to introduce full blooded Durham cattle into the county; put on the first slate roof in the county; put up the first artificial fountain and the first woven wire fence and automatic gates in the county. He has been a liberal, public-spirited man, and all enterprises of benefit to the county have felt the power of his influence and approval.

During vacation he was always found in some employment or other endeavoring to make the expenses of his parents in his education as light as possible. During the winter of 1860 and '61 he tried his hand in learning the young ideas how to shoot. Was successful to a remarkable extent, it being his first effort. When Fort Sumter was fired upon then everything personal was forgotten. All aspirations for the future were dropped and nothing could be done; but, being a minor, was prevented from enlisting immediately. He responded to the second call of Lincoln and enlisted Aug. 20, 1861, as private, in Company C, Eighth Indiana Infantry, serving three years, not having received a furlough during the time, and, with the exception of two short spells of sickness, was always ready for duty. He was discharged as Second Sergeant—having been in all the battles that the regiment was engaged in, viz.: Pea Ridge, Mo., Raymond, Champion Hills, Jackson, Miss., siege of Vicksburg and many others. When the call for more troops by Lincoln was made he enlisted in the Fifth Indiana Cavalry and served to the close of the war, a faithful soldier and a beloved officer. He received four promotions, entering as a Lieutenant and rising to the position of Major. He was a bold and fearless officer, leaving a good record. Shortly after his graduation he made his first voyage in the United States man-of-war Mississippi, to China and Japan, remaining nearly three years. He next cruised in the Mediterranean, on the Richmond. He had charge of the receiving ship Clara Dolson at Cairo until the organization of the gun-boat fleet, when he was placed in command of the Tyler; from thence was transferred to the command of the monitor Mahopac, retaining the position till the close of the war. ### CLAY TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZED IN 1831.—FIRST ELECTION AT HOUSE OF THOS. HATFIELD.—ENLARGED IN 1834.—REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.—POPULATION.—GAIN OF THIRTEEN IN FORTY YEARS.—THE PIONEERS WHO MADE IT A HABITATION AND GAVE IT A NAME.—WASHINGTON.—ITS FOUNDER.—PLATTED IN 1818.—BUSINESS OF 1818 AND 1834.—VILLAGE WEALTH.—LODGES, POPULATION, RAILROADS AND POSTMASTERS.—BIOGRAPHICAL.

Clay Township was organized by the county commissioners at the May session of 1831, and the first election was ordered held at the house of Thos. Hatfield, in the village of Washington. It was not very large, and the commissioners at the March term, 1834, made the following:

“Ordered by the board at March term, 1834, That the bounds of Clay Township be extended west so as to include the whole of sections 21, 28 and 33, town 17, range 13.”

This gave it its present irregular boundary, which, on the north, is Perry and Green townships; on the east, Green and Centre; on the south, Centre and Harrison, and on the west, Harrison and Jefferson. Its greatest length is five miles, and width, four and one-half, and the whole area of the township contains 12,632.95 acres of land, this amount being the taxable number of acres.

Its assessed valuation real estate, Jan. 1, 1883, was $403,685; its taxable personal property, $194,629; total, $598,314. The taxable wealth of Washington Village, $48,520. Total valuation of township, $646,834.

In population the township, except within last decade, has slowly gained, but not fast enough to any serious boast though better than some of its sisters, who have suffered a slow decline. In 1850 Clay Township had 1,050; in 1860, 1,069; in 1870, 1,094, and in 1880, 1,063, a gain of thirteen in forty years.

Jas. Martindale, a native of North Carolina, settled on Green's Fork, in the township, in 1812, and settled on a farm about a half a mile from Washington, where his grandson, Jas. W. Martindale, resides. Jonas Hatfield, Sr., came from Kentucky in 1812, and purchased the land on which the town of Washington now stands. His descendants still live in the township. Abel Jenny came the same year, and joined lands with Hatfield, Sr. Jesse Albertson, from North Carolina, settled on a farm one-half mile east of Washington. His brother Joshua came a few years later and settled south of his brother on the Ratcliff's lands. Wm. Fox came in 1813 and left in 1844, removing to Jefferson Township, where he died in 1860. Joshua Benny settled on section 27, and James Spray finally settled on section 35. Jas. Odell settled in the eastern part of the township, on what is known as Wm. Coffin's place. Miles Murphy came in 1814, and in 1825 sold his farm to John Baldwin, from North Carolina. Mr. Baldwin's four sons—Jonathan, Isaac, David and Caleb—came with him. Jas. South and west of where Washington now stands quite a settlement was made, commencing with the arrival of Jesse Bond in 1813, who settled section 35. Benj. Hall, Jno. Foland, Stephen Horney, Moses Coffin, Absalom Williams, from North Carolina, whose sons occupy the homestead, came in 1814, and died in 1868, aged ninety-three years, and Isaac Mendenhall, all settled in the south, southwest and west section of the township, being among its earliest settlers. Henry Hoover settled on Green's Fork, and Peter Hoover adjoining him; Jno. Fincher not far off, and Valentine Folland in the southwest corner of the township. Ephraim Gentry purchased of David Hoover, on the west side. David Peacock came early, and his son David occupies the home farm. Wm. Wedims, Mason Fitcher, Enos Veal, Sr., Peter Woolfert, Jos. Davis, Jas. Owens, Sr., all came in 1817, and settled in the western portion of the township, as did Jno. Brockus, who came in 1815, as did Miles Dimet. Job Smith came in 1824, and Ezekiel Bradbury in 1825. They also settled in the western part. Jonathan Shaw settled on section 21, on the west line of the township, and Robt. Walkins and Wm. Elliott north of him, on section 16. John and Josiah Bradbury on the same section, on Morgan's Creek; John subsequently settled on section 27. Wm. Ball came in 1818, as did Jas. Daniel Williams, born in North Carolina in 1792, from Pennsylvania in 1833, settled in the northeast part of the township, and later resided one and a half miles east of Washington. Thomas Cook settled, at an early day, where his son, Samuel Cook, lives, two miles north from Washington, and where he died in 1824, aged fifty-six. He was the first saddler in Washington. Samuel Ball, born in Virginia, from Tennessee in 1820, and died in 1849, near where his son John Ball resides. John Wilson, from South Carolina, about 1820, settled two miles northwest from Washington, where he died in 1852, aged thirty-six. Abraham Elliott is supposed to have been the first Justice of the Peace within what is now Clay Township; the next, perhaps, was John Martindale.

A block-house without a fort was built in war-time on or near Joshua Benny's farm, a mile north of Washington. On John Martindale's land, four miles west of this town, a fort and block-house were built by Martindale and his sons, Elijah and William, Charles Morgan, Reynolds Fielder, Jacob Galion and Jonathan Shaw.

Henry Garret built the first grist-mill, a mile and a half above town, about the year 1815. Jonas Hatfield soon after commenced building a saw-mill that year at Washington, but not living to finish it, it was completed the next year by his son Thomas, who four or five years after also built a grist-mill at the same place. Henry Hoover (not of Richmond), about the year 1840, built a saw-mill two miles below Washington, and afterward sold it to Samuel Boyd, who, about the year 1855, also built a grist-mill at the same place.

About the year 1825, perhaps later, Thomas Hatfield built a carding machine and a fulling-mill near his other mills, and after running them about a year, he procured of Jesse Bond a site a fourth of a mile below, to which he removed them, and soon after sold them to the Bonds, who removed them further down to near where Nathan Bond resides.

Wm. Underhill and Joshua Benny were the first blacksmiths in the township.

WASHINGTON VILLAGE.

The town of Washington was laid out by Thomas Hatfield, and the description of the original plat, certified by him as proprietor, and Abraham Elliott, surveyor, Sept. 28, 1818, was acknowledged for record Nov. 19, 1818. It is situated near the center of the township, on section 26, and is the only town within its border. It is a station on the P., C. & St. Louis Railroad, some ten miles northwest from Richmond.

Lisbon Basey and John Russell, in partnership, were the first merchants, in the year 1818; next, Allen Osborn and Wm. Bunnell; and next, John Martindale, son of James, who, in 1830, sold out to Mark E. Reeves, who, with an additional stock, established a store which he continued until 1840, when he removed to Hagerstown, continuing an interest in the store at Washington in partnership with James W. Scott for about five years. Jonathan and Stephen Coffin commenced trade in 1843, and the business was continued by Stephen. The merchants in 1872 were: Dry-goods—Dr. Lorenzo D. Personett and John M. McCown; grocers, Allen Daugherty, Wm. S. Hatfield. Jan. 1, 1884, Wm. S. Hatfield and Allen K. Daugherty is still continuing the grocery business, and Messrs. Osborne and Bunnell are the proprietors of the dry-goods store. There is also at this date a drug store, owned by S. D. Sample. This includes the entire mercantile interest at the last date mentioned.

The first physician was a Dr. Howard, who was soon followed by Dr. Johnson. Dr. William Bunnell, who came about the year 1823, is said by some to have been the first "regular," licensed physician. He died in 1853, of cholera. He was succeeded by his son, Rhodes W. Bunnell. Lorenzo D. Personett came in 1844. The latter was in practice up to 1875. Dr. Rhodes W. Bunnell is still in practice at this date, January, 1884, and also Dr. E. A. Buntin, Dr. S. H. Moore and Dr. N. P. Carter.

There are three blacksmith shops, the owners being Roller Bros., J. H. Winkle and M. L. Trainer. There are six carpenters and builders, viz.: Evans Bailey, J. S. Jones, Arthur Frazier, E. M. Douthit, D. B. Dean and W. H. Gunckel.

FRIENDS.

A Friends' meeting-house was built as early as 1814 or 1815, by Jesse Bond, below the town, near the grave-yard. A frame house was afterward built at or near the same place. After the schism of 1828 those calling themselves "Orthodox" built a house about a mile northeast of town, on land given for that purpose by John Baldwin. The only society in the vicinity holds its meetings in this house. Its present pastor is the Rev. J. E. West.

M. E. CHURCH.

The Methodist Episcopal church was organized about the year 1818. There was preaching at the houses of some of the settlers as early as 1814 and 1815. In the latter year the Rev. Wm. Hunt was placed on the Whitewater Circuit, and preached in the township at different times, at the house of Jas. Porter, Wm. Fox and others, who were, a few years later, instrumental in organizing a society. Among the early members were: James Porter, James Odell, William Fox, and their wives, and Polly Morgan, whose husband had been killed by Indians at Morgan's Creek. The ministers who were appointed to the Whitewater Circuit held their meeting first, after the residences of the members, at the school-house, until the erection of the church. The present efficient pastor is the Rev. W. A. Peck.

UNITED BRETHREN.

While this church is not so old as the others in the township, the churches at Jacksonburg and at Hagerstown were attended by members from Clay Township. Just when the church society was formed is not now on record, but it was in the thirties'.

They built a church near Green's Fork, which they occupied for many years. In 1870 they erected their present brick church in town, and the society is in a flourishing condition. Their present able pastor is the Rev. R. W. Small.

CHAPTER XI.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION.—SETTLEMENT.—EARLY EVENTS.—FIRST MILLS.
—CHURCHES.—TOWN OF WHITEWATER.—ITS ORIGIN AND HISTORY.—FIRST MERCHANTS, ETC.—BETHEL.—A PROSPEROUS VILLAGE.—BIOGRAPHICAL.

This township is in the northeastern corner of Wayne County, the State of Ohio adjoining it on the east, and Randolph County on the north. It is seven miles in length, north and south, by four east and west, and contains much excellent farming land. The principal stream is the Middle Fork of the Whitewater, in the eastern part of the township. Franklin was formed from a portion of New Garden in May, 1834. The first election was held at the town of Hillsboro, now Whitewater.

Isaac Commons is supposed to have been the first settler. He came from North Carolina and settled near the southern line of the township about 1809. Robert Morrisson soon after settled on the next farm north, which he sold Henry Palen. Joseph Ashton bought the farm from Palen. John Nicholson, Barnabas Boswell and Isaac Hiatt settled early in the same neighborhood. Excepting Nicholson and Ashton, all of the above were North Carolina Friends.

Among the early settlers of the southeastern part of the township, who came a little later than those above mentioned, were John White, on section 2; James Wickersham; Benjamin Elliott, from North Carolina, on land later owned by his son; John Zimmerman, from Pennsylvania, on the State line; Charles Teas, from Delaware, on the Townsend farm; Dr. John Thomas, on the south line of the township, and Edward Barton, on land afterward occupied by his descendants.

The early settlers of the southwestern part of the township were: Micajah Jones, from North Carolina, on section 33; John Simmons, Thomas Fisher, from the same State, and Daniel Fisher, on the same section; Joseph Brown, from Pennsylvania; John Venard; Edward B. Hunt, from North Carolina; Elijah Munda; Mesheck Llewellyn, on a farm afterward owned by Wm. Starbuck; Paul Swain, from North Carolina; Benjamin Harris and William Starbuck, from North Carolina; Jonathan Grave, from Delaware; and John P. Thomas, on the south line, where his sons now own.

During the war of 1812 the settlers generally left their improvements to escape danger from the Indians. After the war the progress of settlement was more rapid. Job Elliott, from North Carolina, settled a mile south of Whitewater in 1815; Stephen Elliott was an early settler on land adjoining the town; Wm. Hunt, from North Carolina, on land adjoining the town on the east, on land afterward owned by John Unthank; Henry Newton, an Englishman, on the State line; Jonathan Commons, on the State line; Thomas Mason, from North Carolina, in 1816, near Whitewater; Samuel Williams, from North Carolina, near town in 1818. Gabriel Harrell, from North Carolina, settled a half mile southwest of town; Nathan Jones, from North Carolina, entered the land later owned by Peter Blose and C. C. Hunt; Thomas Mason, Jr., three-fourths of a mile north of Whitewater; Richard Bunch, on the Stephen Bunnell farm; Elihu Hunt, from North Carolina, a mile northwest of Whitewater; Henry Garrett and Benj. Parker, from North Carolina.

In the western part of the township: Wm. Fulghum, from North Carolina; Lemuel Chance, from the same State, on section 16; Charles Thomas, on the Jonathan Marine farm, and Edward Fisher, near the west line, both from North Carolina; Andrew Starbuck, on section 22, from North Carolina; Isaac Pyle, on section 27; Joshua Brown, from Pennsylvania; George Blose, from Ohio, and Wm. Hunt were all early settlers.

In the northwest part of the township Jesse Overman, Wm. Nixon, Samuel Henderson and Thomas Simons were early settlers.

The Harlan settlement, now Bethel, was begun in 1817 by James Harlan and his sons, from Kentucky. Nathan Elliott removed to this settlement in 1817. John Thompson and John, Joseph, Nathan, David and Wm. H. Anderson settled in the same neighborhood about 1817.

Wm. Addleman, from Pennsylvania, settled one and one-half miles northwest of Whitewater in 1819. He cut a huge tree on his farm soon after arriving and built a camp against the trunk, and there lived with his wife and six children several months until he erected a cabin. The tree measured seven feet and seven inches across the stump, and was over seventy seven feet from the butt to the lower limbs. John M. Addleman settled in 1826 a mile and a half north of Whitewater. He served as a Justice of the Peace. Joseph P. Addleman, Nathan White, James White, Robert Starbuck, and Cornelius Vanuys, a blacksmith, were early settlers.

The road known as the "Quaker trace," from Richmond to Fort Wayne, was opened by Paul Swain, Wm. Simmons, Thomas Roberts, Daniel Fisher, Nathan and Henry Hunt, of this township; Abraham Ashley, Enos Grave, of Wayne Township, and many others. Grave surveyed the road.

Wm. Starbuck, about 1817, built the first saw-mill, near the southwest corner of the township. Another early saw-mill was built by Henry Newton and John Unthank, about 1825. James White built another at an early date.

Valentine Harlan, in 1829, built a grist-mill above James White's saw-mill. Wm. Addleman, Jr., and Stephen Elliott built another a short distance north of Whitewater, in 1837.

Dr. John Thomas was the first physician. He lived in the southern part of the township, and had a large practice. He carried his medicines in a bladder, instead of a saddle-bag. The earliest religious society in the township was that of the Friends, who built a log meeting-house two miles south of Whitewater, near the site of the present brick house on the turnpike. Isaac Commons, Job Elliott, Wm. Hunt, Joseph Ashton, John Nicholson, Jeremiah Cox, Jr., and Luther Tillson were early members.

The Christian church at Bethel was formed in August, 1821, under the ministration of John M. Foster. Meetings were first held in the dwelling of Valentine Harlan, afterward in a school-house; next in a large log meeting-house half a mile east of Bethel, where the graveyard is, until the present house in Bethel was built. Since the pastorate of Mr. Foster this church has enjoyed the ministerial services of Valentine Harlan, 2d., Eli Harlan, Hosea C. Tillson, Joseph G. Harlan, Hardin Harrison, Henry Polly and others.

The Episcopal Methodists organized a church near Jesse Hunt's, in the southwest part of the township, about the year 1830. Edward Starbuck, Hugh Stevenson, Joseph Henderson, and Joseph Whitacre were early members. The organization was given up about 1865.

The Methodist Episcopal church was formed at Whitewater about 1831 to 1832. Among its early members were: William Boswell, Thomas K. Peeples, Wm. Brown and their families, and Margaret Addleman. It was in the Centreville and Williamsburg circuits. The congregation at first met in a log house, near where the present house was built in 1854.

He enlisted in the United States service as private Aug. 11, 1862, in Company B, Eighty-third Indiana Infantry. He was appointed First Sergeant Sept. 4, 1862; promoted to First Lieutenant Nov. 5, 1863, and to Captain Sept. 12, 1864. He was almost three years in active service; was in twenty-two engagements. Those most noted were the charges made at Vicksburg, May 19 and 22, with Sherman's corps in his march from the Mississippi to the sea, and thence to Washington. Captain Cofield passed through three years of danger and hard fighting, receiving but one wound that left a scar, which he received at Dallas, Ga. After the close of the war he returned to the home of his childhood, being welcomed back by a kind mother. Our subject married, Sept. 3, 1865, Mary A. Barker, daughter of Zachariah and Mary Barker. They have had three sons—Frank L., Kearney D. and Bert.

H. C. Tillson.—The father of our subject, Luther Tillson, was born eight miles from Plymouth, Mass., in 1766, a son of Isaiah Tillson. From his twentieth to his twenty-sixth year he was a sailor on the ocean. He then went to Vermont, near Woodstock, and worked for his uncle, Daniel Perry, on the farm. The next year he married Mehitable Palmer, the daughter of an ingenious mechanic of Irish descent. He struggled with poverty till 1802, when he moved with his uncle to Ohio, landing at Cincinnati Dec. 25. The next year Mr. Perry bought the section of land of Congress, where is now the town of Summerville, Butler County, and sold Mr. Tillson 160 acres at Government price, giving him his own time to pay for it, without interest. He was so poor that he was obliged to work by the day to get bread for his family, and clear his own land at night. He sometimes walked thirty miles to buy bread-stuff, worked a day for a bushel of corn, and carried it home on his shoulder. In 1816 he sold his land, paid his uncle, and came to Whitewater, and bought three half (fractional) sections of land, in all 686 acres, on the State line, adjoining Wayne County, and the next year moved his family to the new home. All the necessities of the family, such as milling, blacksmithing, schooling, and trading of all kinds, was mostly obtained in Wayne County. Mr. Tillson's constitution was much broken by the hardships endured in the new country. In 1817 his cares were increased, his faithful companion losing her mind. Although she lived nine years her mind was never fully restored, and she several times tried to take her life. In 1820 Mr. Tillson joined the Society of Friends at Woodbury meeting-house, Franklin Township, and became a prominent member. His wife died in March, 1826, and in July, 1827, he was laid by her side in the Friends' cemetery, at Woodbury. He had married again, Elizabeth Mitchell, and to his widow he willed all his personal property. Mr. Tillson had a family of ten children; one died in Vermont; the others were—Leonard, Gershom P., Isaiah, John, Oliver, Hosea C., Ira, Laura and Lucy. He taught his children to be strictly honest and punctual to all their promises, and in their sales to give good measure and weight, telling them that nothing was lost by giving good measure. He gave each of his sons eighty acres of wild land. H. C. being at the time a lame boy was given the old homestead. All the sons married and settled on their land save Ira, who died when sixteen years of age. They were all natural mechanics, and their genius was of benefit to their neighbors. Two of them became local preachers—Oliver, of the Methodist Episcopal, and H. C., of the Christian. The two latter are the only ones who became residents of Wayne County. H. C. Tillson traded the homestead to his brother John for the latter's wild land and $400, the deed to be made when H. C. became of age. In 1831 he was married to a daughter of the Anderson family. Their children are all dead except the eldest son, who lives in Ohio. His wife died, and in 1855 he married a daughter of Elihu Harlan. They have four daughters—Hannah Etta Anderson, Ella, Olive and Minnie. H. C. Tillson is now in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and has lived in Wayne County twenty-six years. He is the only one left of his father's family. He has been one of the foremost in advancing the interest of his adopted State and county, and is still doing all he can to build up and better the condition of society, physically, morally and spiritually.

LOCATION AND ORGANIZATION.

Dalton Township is in the extreme northwestern corner of the county, and is next to the smallest township in the county, Webster being the smallest. It is four miles square, having sixteen sections, or 10,240 acres of land, of which 9,945.42 acres are found on the assessment-roll. The real estate of the township was valued at $303,550 in 1882; personal property, $150,860; total, $454,410.

Its population since 1850 has been as follows: 1850, 855; 1860, 789; 1870, 766; 1880, 746—not a very alarming decline, yet surely and steadily, which is not a hopeful sign. It was formed from Perry Township in June, 1847, and its voting precinct was Franklin. The township lies nearly all west of the Twelve-mile Purchase, except a small strip on the east side. There were quite a number of settlers staked out their claims previous to the land coming into market, which was not till the fall of 1822, while its settlement was retarded on that account, as most settlers preferred to secure their lands by actual purchase before making improvements. Among the early arrivals was Aquilla West, who was in fact the first settler in the year 1818, on land now owned by Lindsey Dennis, near the town or village of Dalton. After the land sale he removed, being unable to purchase. James Lindley settled on West River, where Jesse Fouts now lives. He removed to Howard County in about 1850. Others were Seth Mills, Thomas Antrim, a Mr. Blount, who left before the land sale—Thomas Burroughs, who settled next to Randolph County line; Sampson Smith, Pleasant Harris, Benj. F. Beeson, who settled at Franklin; Thomas Marshall, Stephen Lear, Joseph Johnson, Peter Smith, and perhaps a few others who, as squatters, had taken possession of nearly all the best land of the Nettle Creek Valley within the township before the land-sale by the Government. Quite a number also settled in the valley of West River: Isaac Ruth, Henry Mills, Henry Thornburgh, Sr., and four sons, Sophia Williams, a widow, and her three sons—Henry, Matthew and Joseph, Joseph Brewer, Wm. Wright, across the line, Charles Howell, Isaac Macy, Jacob Bales, George Petro, a blacksmith (probably the first in the township), James Strode, Wm. Thornburgh, Sr. These took possession of nearly all the best land in the West River Valley, most of them buying the land they had improved, at the land sale in the fall of 1822.

Other early squatters off from the valleys were: Jesse Osborn and a man by the name of Charles Stout, who built the first grist-mill in the township, on West River—the present Brown Mill—in 1824-'5.

Those who came soon after the land sale were Joseph Davis, Dan'l Ulrich, Chas. Burroughs, Zachariah Beeson, Anthony Reynolds, Isaac Reynolds, Jno. Deering, Thomas Nicholson, and Thos. Antrim. Most of these named came from North Carolina, Tennessee and Pennsylvania.

Many of these named have descendants now living in the township. The majority were Quakers.

Others who came soon after the land sale were Tense Massey, Dempsey Thornburgh, Joseph Routh, Andrew Starbuck, Wm. Chamness, Esq., Sam'l Turner, John Lee, Enoch Gardner, Isaac Cavalt, John Evans (a Baptist preacher), Abraham Tout, Jonathan Evans, Jno. Smith, Aaron Lesh, Wright Spradlin, Geo. M. Lee, Benjamin Beeson, Wm. Beeson, Jas. Brewer. Nathan Baldwin and Wm. Mandlin came in 1831; Samuel, Isaac, Isaac W. and Thomas E. Beeson about the same time; also Thomas Dennis and family, Isaac Macy, from Tennessee, Wm. Wright and Jesse Weaver.

Isaac Macy and Wm. Davis were the first Justices of the Peace of the township after its organization.

The township is well watered, on the east being the West Branch of Whitewater, entering the township about one mile south of the northeast corner, and flowing south through the township, and Nettle Creek on the west, entering from the north, a mile east of the west line, and running due south. These streams have numerous small branches. Agriculturally speaking the land is of a good quality, and a half century and upward still finds it of sufficient productive quality as to well repay the husbandman. It is an agricultural township, and the farmers are all in good circumstances, and good citizens.

DALTON FOUNDED.

The town of Dalton was laid out by Tense Massey and Joseph Davis, proprietors, and Joseph Davis, surveyor. The plat bears date Jan. 25, 1828. An addition was afterward made by Joseph Davis, and, in 1836, another by Nathan Baldwin.

The first store in the township was at Dalton, kept by Aaron Mills, and one started soon after at Franklin by Benj. F. Beeson. The first tannery in the township started by Benj. F. Beeson. The first grist-mill, in 1824, by Chas. Stont. Seth Mills erected the next flouring mill at Dalton in 1826, and a saw-mill was put up about the same time by Pleasant Harris and Tense Massey. In 1828 Benj. F. Beeson erected a grist-mill on Mill Branch, and the Beeson Bros. an oil-mill a year later. In 1832 Jesse Baldwin built another oil-mill. The Dalton Steam-Mill Company, was organized with a capital stock of $10,000, and in 1837 erected on Nettle Creek a steam flouring mill, and also a saw-mill. These mills were destroyed by fire in 1848, and the saw-mill only rebuilt by Isaac Reynolds, who ran it until 1879. The Beeson Bros. erected a grist-mill on the site of their old oil-mill in 1840, and James Maulsby a grist-mill in 1850, on Mill Branch. The first oil and grist mills spoken of are gone. In 1853 Henry Thornburgh built a saw-mill, and a card-machine was also started. They disappeared a decade ago.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The village of Dalton has at this time two general stores and one grocery. It has two blacksmith-shops, one gunsmith, one wagon-shop, one steam saw-mill, built on the site of the old Dalton Steam-Mill Company's mill. The mill of Reynolds was torn down at the above date and a new one erected by Riley Chamness.

Besides the store kept by Aaron Mills other merchants followed. Between 1838 and 1845 there were John W. Williamson, John T. Elliott and Henry D. Root; and at different times Joseph Ruth, J. and D. Canaday, David and William Chamness, Robert Lumpkin and Thomas McCracken, and since 1870 Wm. S. Chamness and Riley Chamness, both general stores.

John W. Smith (botanic) was the first physician at Dalton, in 1836. Later were Wm. Dickey (1840), Drs. Simmons, J. R. Brown, Guinther, Windle, Showalter and John Stonebraker.

Dalton had a population in 1870 of seventy-three, and of sixty-four in 1880. There has been no growth of the town in the past quarter of a century, and the population is now supposed to be only about sixty-five.

POSTMASTERS.

The postoffice was first known or named Palmyra, and Silas H. Beeson was appointed Postmaster May 25, 1835. He was succeeded July 26, 1837, by Isaac W. Beeson; then John W. Smith, Feb. 13, 1838; Charles Burroughs, April 23, 1840; Wm. Davis, May 30, 1842; Samuel Mitchell, April 15, 1846; Isaac Reynolds, April 6, 1847; Wm. O. Arment, July 31, 1848; Henry D. Root, Oct. 30, 1850; Clarkson Reynolds, Jan. 20, 1853; John B. Routh, Jan. 30, 1854; Clarkson Reynolds, March 7, 1855; Wm. S. Chamness, Aug. 22, 1855.

FRANKLIN.

The town of Franklin was laid out by Benj. F. Beeson and Silas H. Beeson. The plat, signed by them as proprietors, and Thomas Stanford as surveyor, was recorded Jan. 7, 1832.

The town was platted in 1830. The first merchant, as above stated, was Benj. F. Beeson, and in 1839 Chas. Beeson was a leading merchant. The village has remained, like Dalton, at a stand-still. Following the Beesons were Silas Lewis, Aaron Lesh, Oliver and Joseph Williams. Silas B. Maulsby, Benj. B. Beeson, Wm. Thornburgh, and Wm. and Enos Canaday are said to have traded at Franklin. And still later, in the seventies, John Macy, who ran a dry-goods store, and Millikin Hockett, a grocery house. Dr. Silas Beeson, the first resident physician in the township, settled at Franklin about 1830, and died there. Later were Drs. Henry Carver, Erhart and Patterson. It has now (January, 1884) one grocery, a blacksmith and wagon shop, one undertaking establishment, post-office, and about sixty-five inhabitants.

From "Young's History" the following is taken:

"The White Branch Woolen Mills are on the White Branch stream, two miles south of Franklin. A building was erected by Daniel Ulrich for a grist-mill, but he put into it machinery for a woolen factory. In the year 1854 it was bought by Wm. and Josiah Test. The establishment has since been much enlarged by the erection of buildings and the increase of machinery. Later its proprietors were Wm. and Rufus Test, and Josiah V. Jones (Test Brothers & Jones). It has two sets of machines and two roll-cards, and nine looms. The goods manufactured are jeans, satinets, cassimeres, flannels, blankets and yarn. Custom work, as carding, spinning, and cloth-dressing, is also done at this establishment.

"The first school-house in the township is said to have stood where Dalton now is, and Luke Wiles to have been the first teacher."

The first postoffice in the township was established in Franklin in the year 1832, and was called Palmyra. It was not long afterward removed to Dalton, but not until after a bitter fight had been waged. The name was changed to Dalton, and so remains. Another office was at last secured by Franklin, it being established in 1876, and called Nettle Creek postoffice. The office still remains.

CHURCHES.

The West River Church, Quakers or Friends, was established in 1825, and in 1826 they erected a place of worship. Henry Thornburgh, Sr., was a leading spirit in the church. This building was of logs.

The Nettle Creek church, of the same denomination, was organized in a school-house a few years later, or in 1828. Its leading spirits were Thomas Antram, Jos. Davis, Zachariah Beeson and others. This church was near Franklin. The anti-slavery agitation caused a division at one time. Among the preachers were Revs. Miles Mendenhall, Mahlon Chamness and Mahlon Dennis. There are very few of the denomination now in the township. The same can be said of the Dunkards.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The society had an existence for a few years in Dalton, its first organization being in 1835. The society held its meetings in a log house, having no church building. Afterward there was erected a frame church over the line in Randolph County, and the Dalton society united with them. Jas. Austin was the first preacher while in Dalton Township.

UNITED BRETHREN.

The United Brethren have had a society and a meeting-house, about two miles east of Dalton, about twenty years. Ab. Tont gave the land for the graveyard, Lewis Weaver the ground for the church. Early members of this church were: Jeannetta Barr, afterward wife of Wm. Marshall, and her sister Mary, wife of Abraham Smith; Henry Bailes, John Bailes, Lewis Bailes, Wm. Linley (now a Dunkard preacher). They have had as preachers, Dr. Richardson, Daniel Stober, John Brown, Alexander Carroll, Jas. M. Cook and others.

A Methodist class was formed in Dalton for a short time, but it soon ceased to exist, and there is no M. E. church in the township.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Nathan Baldwin, retired farmer, section 27, Dalton Township, is the second son of Jesse and Hannah (Mendenhall)

Baldwin. He was born in Guilford County, N. C., May 16, 1811, of English descent, and was educated at the log cabin subscription schools. He was reared a farmer, which occupation he has followed through life. He was married Feb. 21, 1830, to Melinda Hinshaw, of Randolph County, N. C., and the following fall came to Green's Fork, Wayne Co., Ind., and in the spring of 1832 he purchased his present farm, then a dense wilderness, but now in a high state of cultivation. He had seven children by his first wife, of whom three are living—William, Mary and Newton. Henry, Jesse, Seth and Hannah are deceased. His wife died Feb. 2, 1854, and he was again married July 27, 1856, to Rachel Reynolds, of Wayne County. Two children were given to this union—Melinda E. and Eliza J.

George W. Bales, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Henry County, Ind., June 4, 1843, the youngest child of Aaron and Susannah (Russell) Bales, natives of Tennessee, who removed to Union County, Ind., in an early day, and from there to Henry County. When he was three years of age his father died, and when quite young the care of the farm devolved on him and an older brother. In 1869 he bought eighty acres of land on section 23, Dalton Township, but subsequently moved to his present home, which is land entered by his father-in-law, in 1837. He owns 160 acres of good land, all well improved. Mr. Bales was married May 4, 1864, to Lucy Jane, daughter of Wright and Fanny (Weaver) Spalding. They have had six children—Viretta, Josephine, Oliver, Edmund (deceased), John H. and Lewis (twins). Mr. and Mrs. Bales are members of the United Brethren church.

Benjamin Beeson was born in Randolph County, N. C., about 1765, a son of Isaac Beeson, whose ancestors trace back to two brothers who came from England to Pennsylvania, with Penn's colony, but whose descendants all removed to North Carolina at an early day. His mother was of Irish descent. He was married about 1786, to Margaret Hockett, and about 1826 came to Wayne County, Ind., and settled one mile south of Franklin. Their children were—Hannah, who married Seth Hinshaw and lived at Greensboro, Henry Co., Ind.; Isaac W., whose sketch follows this; Will- iam, who married Rachel Newman and had one son, Jehu, who was a Union refugee two years in the South, but escaped and came to Indiana in 1864, and settled in Plainfield; Margaret, married Jesse Baldwin, came to Indiana about 1824, and lived one mile southwest of Franklin. Her children were—Franklin Urbane, Elwood, Isaac and Nerens. Benjamin F., who came to Franklin in 1818, was a very large man, a good business man and greatly respected, he married Rachel Bales and had one daughter, Luzena, who married George Shaffer and moved to Iowa. Silas H., who came to Franklin about 1823, was a prominent business man and the first physician in Dalton Township, having a large practice. He married first Rhoda Hubbard, second, Charity Ventres (by whom he had two children—Melvina and Louisa), and third, Nancy Lumpkins. Rachel came to Franklin with her father, but never married. Ithamar came to Franklin about 1824; was Justice of the Peace many years. He married Polly Bales, by whom he had six children—Oliver, Lewis, William H., Margaret, Sarah and Cynthia E. Asenath never married. Charles came with his father to Wayne County and married Cynthia Baldwin. He lived one mile north of Franklin until about 1855, when he removed to Iowa, and from there to New Buffalo, Mich. He has three children—William, Jehu and Luvina. Ruth married James Maulsby, now of Danville, Ind., and had one son—Silas B. Benjamin Beeson's brothers and sisters were as follows—Isaac, who came to Wayne County about 1828, and settled one mile east of Dalton. He had twelve children—Hezekiah, Zachariah, Benjamin, Jesse, Elwood, Newton, Margaret, Zeruah, Mildred, Louisa, Mareb and Mariah. Samuel, who settled one-half mile east of Dalton in 1827, and had five children—Isaiah, Wade, Samuel, Elma and Isabel. Billy, who settled one-fourth mile south of Franklin in 1827, and had children as follows—Jonathan, Seth, Eunice, Elizabeth, Yancy, Charity, Melinda and two others. Hannah married Sammy Lamb. Isabel married William Chamness, and settled one mile northwest of Dalton. She had seven children—William, Joshua, Joseph, Isaac, Mary, Jesse, and Hannah. Elizabeth married Jesse Wilson and had three children—Isaac; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Dennis, and lived one-half mile south of Dalton; Rachel, who married David Pidgeon, and lived two and one-half miles northwest of Dalton. Benjamin Beeson, like his ancestors, was a strict Friend and the head of Providence Meeting in North Carolina several years. He was much respected, and died at an advanced age. He was buried by the side of his wife in West River Graveyard, two and a half miles east of Dalton, though their exact resting place is not known.

Benjamin B. Beeson, only son of Isaac W. and Mary (Branson) Beeson, was born March 17, 1843, on the old homestead on which he now resides, one-half mile west of Dalton, Wayne Co., Ind. He is of medium stature (five feet, ten inches), and weight (150 pounds), fair complexion and gray eyes. He is a member of the Society of Friends. He was married Oct. 14, 1865, to Olinda Lamb, daughter of Thomas and Elvira (Finch) Lamb. They have four children—Isaac Francis, born Aug. 13, 1866; Mary Lenora, born Jan. 23, 1868; Edward Orton and Frederick Loton (twins), born July 3, 1877. For many generations the eldest son of the eldest son has been named Benjamin and Isaac, alternately. Benjamin B. Beeson, like his father, has devoted the most of his time to his home and farm, although now engaged in the goods business at Dalton. Realizing the need of better roads in the neighborhood, he has devoted much time and attention, as well as means, to their construction. He assisted, financially and otherwise, in the construction of the Dalton Turnpike, of which he has been Treasurer since its construction, in 1876. He has also been Secretary and Treasurer of the Hagerstown and Bluntsville Turnpike the past six years and through his influence it has been made one of the best roads in the county. The two miles and over of free gravel roads adjoining his premises are sufficient evidence of his enterprise in this respect. Seeing the great need of co-operation and improvement among farmers, he became a charter member of Nettle Creek Grange, No. 735, of which he is still a member. He has represented the grange in the County Council, and the county in the State Grange. No. 735 is one of the few granges that has stood the storms of many winters. It has scarcely missed a meeting since its organization; has a good building of its own, a good membership and attendance, and is doing much for the education and improvement of its members. For the purpose of encouraging the agricultural interests of this section of the county, a few kindred spirits organized the Wayne, Henry and Randolph County Agricultural Association in September, 1880, of which Mr. Beeson is President. Despite many disadvantages, this society has been very successful and gained an enviable reputation among societies of its kind. The Indiana Farmer sent a representative to the fourth annual exhibition, held at Dalton, Ind., Sept. 4-7, 1883, from whose report we quote as follows: "Can a fair be made a success without racing and its attendant evils? This question has often been asked, but has been left to the managers of Dalton fair to answer that it can. The present is the fourth exhibition made by the society, and though racing, side-shows, games of chance, and everything of that class, so prominent at other fairs, are banished from the grounds, yet their fairs have increased from year to year, both in attendance and display. Much of the success is due to the energy of B. B. Beeson, the President, and Joel Replogle, Secretary." Politically, the sympathies of Mr. Beeson are with the producer and against monopolies, rings and party corruption. He heartily supported the administration of Lincoln, and the election of Grant for his first term, but became dissatisfied with his administration, and for several years was a member of the National Central Committee of Wayne County, though he often voted independent of party. Financially he has been successful, is the largest tax-payer in the township, owning at the present time over 800 acres of land within its limits, being industrious and a large employer of labor. Great improvements have been made in all property he has controlled.

Isaac W. Beeson was born in Randolph County, N. C., Dec. 19, 1789, the eldest son of Benjamin and Margaret (Hockett) Beeson. He was of medium height (five feet, eight inches), and weight (145 pounds), fair complexion, dark hair and light-brown eyes. He was not very robust, but, being very temperate in his habits, enjoyed fair health till past middle age. He acquired a good education for the time and taught school at different times. He learned the trade of a wheelwright when young, which he followed as occasion required as long as he lived, though he lived to see this once flourishing business obsolete, except for slight repairs. For many years he made it a point to lay up $100 a year from his trade, and in those times it required great industry to do so. The greater part of four years was spent in settling his brother William's estate, which was scattered over North and South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia, he being a great trader. This he did traveling alone on horseback, usually starting with a pair of saddle-bags and one large wheel and two small ones, which were sold at the first opportunity. During this time he had many adventures, mishaps and escapes, the details of which are lost. William was his favorite brother, and he always spoke in the highest terms of his brother William's ability and integrity. Early in life he became devotedly attached to Mary, daughter of Joseph and ——— (Pickett) Branson, which was reciprocated, but, owing to interference of relatives, the intimacy was kept up only at rare intervals during his stay in "The Old North State." In the spring of 1822 he started for the then Great West. His outfit for the journey was one horse, a rustic cart, a skillet, a small pot for boiling vegetables, a tin pan or two, an outfit of pewter dishes for one, an ax, and a small supply of provisions, all of which, except the provisions, served for many other like journeys. He usually traveled alone and slept in the cart, seldom keeping company with other travelers. He landed in Wayne County, Ind., about eight weeks from the time of starting, in good spirits, but, like his outfit, worn and looking rather seedy. He examined the country pretty thoroughly, attended the land sales at Brookville, and made a number of entries, among others 240 acres of the land in Dalton Township, where he lived and died, and where his son, Benjamin B. Beeson, now resides. In those days hilly land with springs and running water was most sought after, the "flats" being regarded as worthless. Toward the fall of the same year he wended his way back to the sunny South and worked at his trade till 1828, when he again, in the same manner, visited his possessions in the wilderness of Indiana. Many interesting incidents occurred while making these journeys. On one occasion, while traveling through Virginia, he ventured to put up with a settler, but the conversation and actions of the family not suiting him, he went out to sleep in his cart, and finally went to a large wood and passed the night. On returning in the morning he found that his cart and the neighborhood had been thoroughly searched for him. He learned afterward that the place was a rendezvous for the rogues of that mountain country. Old "Foxy," his horse, sometimes failed to see the propriety of climbing so many mountains. On one occasion he backed off the road until the cart became his master, and cart, horse and all went bumping and dragging down the mountain side several hundred feet, and came near tumbling into the Kanawha River. But, strange to say, old "Foxy" was ready for business, having only a few bruises and being minus a large quantity of hair. He gave no more trouble, however, during that trip. At this time, 1828, there was quite a rush to Indiana from the older States, and many a race was made to Brookville and Indianapolis for "Congress land." Mr. Beeson entered several tracts in different parts of the State, and again returned South before winter. In the spring of 1833 he took his last view of the red gullies and sedge fields of his native State, and settled near Franklin, Wayne Co., Ind., where his father and several brothers had preceded him. The firm of Beeson Brothers, composed of S. H., B. F. and Ithamar Beeson, were doing a large mercantile business, handling everything from a drove of hogs to a coon skin, and furnishing goods to a large section of country. They also ran a tan-yard, grist-mill, etc. The town became widely known as "Beeson Town." Times were flush and speculation ran wild; every body seemed to be getting rich. But the end came; the bottom fell out of prices, as it were; pork sold for $1.25 per hundred, net; confidence was gone; and the Beeson Brothers found their business and fortunes hopelessly wrecked, Isaac W. losing heavily as security. During all this time the old attachment between himself and Mary Branson existed, and in the fall of 1837 she left home and friends in North Carolina to join her fortunes with his. She arrived in Wayne County safely, and Feb. 27, 1838, they were married. An only son, Benjamin B., was born to them, March 17, 1843. Mr. Beeson took an active interest in the political and religious questions of his day. A member of the Society of Friends, he took sides with the anti-slavery ring. His views in church matters were of the most liberal kind, taking the ground that all Christians should become one brotherhood and one church, uniting on the vital principles of Christianity, but having perfect freedom of belief in regard to forms, ceremonies, etc. In politics he held that the people should govern in all things, direct; that all officers should be deemed servants, and receive wages only for services rendered; that all money should be made or issued by the Government and loaned to the people at a low rate of interest, said interest to be used for improvements and expenses, in lieu of taxes. These views were advanced by him long before the Rebellion, and MSS. left show that he was an original thinker and a writer of much ability. In financial matters his judgment was good, having acquired quite a competence. Of a quiet disposition he never sought public favor in the way of office; would usually suffer heavily rather than go to law, believing in arbitration, both between individuals and nations. He lost his companion Oct. 10, 1851, and never again married. She was a woman of kind and benevolent disposition—one of the few who had no enemies. Although his health was poor at this time he survived her twenty years, and died of an attack of pleurisy, Nov. 26, 1871, aged eighty-two years, and was buried in the Friends' graveyard at Nettle Creek, near his faithful partner in life's joys and sorrows.

Thomas Beeson, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Randolph County, N. C., a son of Isaac K. and Rebecca (Lamb) Beeson, natives of the same county, of English origin. Nathan Dennis, born in North Carolina, March 13, 1815; died at his home in Dalton Township, Wayne Co., Ind., Jan. 26, 1872. He removed with his parents about 1833 to Wayne County, and was one of the pioneers who felled the forests and reduced the wilderness to one of the finest farming districts in the State. He belonged to the Society of Friends and for the last thirty years of his life was one of the leading members of Springfield Monthly Meeting. He was for several years clerk of that body and for more than twenty years clerk of the meeting for ministry and oversight. He had the confidence of the entire community as few men ever get it; and his counsel was in demand on all important subjects, both in and out of church circles. He espoused the cause of the slave and was a conductor on the now historic underground railroad, and yet he did not join in with the separatists on the ground that they inconsistently neglected other matters of the law of like if not of equal importance. Gifted with the ability to see all sides of a question, enthusiastic for every phase of the right as he understood it, consistent as the brook in his meadow which sought its home, the sea, by the most accessible and so the most practicable route, progressive but not imperious, he was a man to educate, mold, and uplift community, not to disturb it or lead it in lines. He never lost an opportunity to build up the educational interests of his neighborhood and family; he got up at two o'clock one winter morning and walked a mile and a half with one of his boys, and they sawed five large ash logs that his boy might not miss his morning lesson in algebra at the district school. It is with pleasure that we record that during twenty years of daily intercourse with him we never saw him lose his temper. His religion, complete from whatever standpoint, was without ostentation or affectation; rich in faith and grace yet not less rich in good works, whether he is to be tried by the first commandment of the decalogue or by the test that enrolled Abou Ben Adhem at the head of the list, his claim for a place will still be most generously granted by those who know him best.

Osborn Dennis, son of Nathan and Mary (Lamar) Dennis, was born Sept. 4, 1842. He resided with his parents on a farm until he arrived at manhood. His education was common-school, academic, and one and a half years in the Illinois State University. He belongs to the Society of Friends, having filled many stations in said society to the full approbation of his friends. He was appointed to the office of an Elder in 1879, which position he still holds, the duties of which he has discharged faithfully. Feb. 6, 1868, he was married to Louisa Canada. The fruits of the union were three children—Mary E., was born Dec. 12, 1868, in Randolph County, Ind.; George P., was born Dec. 3, 1871, in Wayne County; Osborn Earl was born March 24, 1880, in Wayne County. The subject of this sketch has followed the professions of farming and school teaching, having only missed teaching two years during the past twenty-two years. Has always been a man of good moral character, honest integrity and uprightness of life, and has yielded quite an influence in the community in which he has resided.

He first located near Dublin, but the wolves being so troublesome he went to Perry Township, near Economy, where he wintered, purchasing during that time ninety acres on Green's Fork, one mile south of Washington, where he resided until Oct. 1, 1831. He then purchased the farm in Dalton Township of Pleasant Harris, which has long been known as the Dennis homestead, first buying 154 acres, to which he soon added eighty acres more. He was married March 24, 1813, to Elizabeth, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Wilson. They were the parents of ten children, eight of whom were reared to maturity, and seven now living—Wilson, Lucinda, Branson, Cynthia, Lyndsey, Miriam C., William (who died in infancy), Elizabeth, Thomas, and Malinda, who died at the age of seven years. Miriam C. died April 2, 1880. She was first married to Josiah Test, and afterward to Jacob Pickering, with whom she lived a few days over ten years. Her disease was that of cancer of the stomach, producing great suffering, which she bore with Christian fortitude. Mr. Dennis was an active member of the Society of Friends, and a staunch anti-slavery man, who could not bear the idea of rearing his children in the midst of slavery. He also performed the duty of enlisting the personal property and polls for taxation in the spring of 1839 in the western part of Wayne County, embracing that part included in townships 16, 17 and 18, congressional, in range 12, east. He also was appointed Treasurer of the county the same year, being actively engaged in the duties thereof when taken with the illness which terminated fatally Sept. 4, 1839, on the Dennis homestead. His wife occupied the homestead until May 21, 1863, when she bade farewell to all transitory things here below.

C., and when eight years of age came with his parents to Wayne County, Ind. He was reared on a frontier farm and educated at the log cabin subscription school. He being the eldest son, the work of clearing the land devolved on him in a measure, and he assisted in clearing and improving three heavily timbered farms, and helped to support his widowed mother and family till 1847. He was married Oct. 21, 1847, to Rachel, daughter of Dempsey and Jane (Mills) Thornburgh. Three of their six children are living—Lydia, married Sylvester Billheimer, and resides in Franklin, this county; Elizabeth, married William D. Jordan and lives on West River; and Thomas, married Zenorah E. Davidson, and resides on the east line of Henry County. Rachel Dennis died Jan. 17, 1857, aged twenty-nine years, six months and twenty-nine days. June 23, 1858, Mr. Dennis was married to Lydia, daughter of Isaac and Tamar (Hawkins) Reynolds. They have had three children—Sarah, Clarkson and Isaac L. During several of the winters from 1835 to 1850 Mr. Dennis taught school. He settled on his present farm in 1848, where he has since followed farming with success, and also by appointment has filled several of those trusts incident to executors, administrators, commissioner and trustee, from the year 1839 up to the present. At no time since 1839 has he been free from the duties requisite to such trusts. He and his wife are active members of the Society of Friends.

William H. Harris is the eldest son of Obadiah and Elizabeth (Bales) Harris, and a grandson of Obadiah Harris, who came from North Carolina to Wayne County in 1810, where he was for many years a pioneer minister in the Society of Friends. He lived on the home farm till he grew to manhood, and was married in 1828 to Elizabeth Bales, a native of Highland County, Ohio, and a daughter of Curtis and Elizabeth (Evans) Bales, who came to Wayne County when Mrs. Harris was a child. Of the eight children born to this union five still survive. Mrs. Harris died in 1853. After his marriage, Mr. Harris was engaged for many years in farming and blacksmithing in Randolph County, and in 1863 moved to Iowa, where he followed farming till his death, which occurred Jan. 1, 1881.

His mother died June 7, 1852, at the age of thirty-three. His father, who was a teacher in the public schools, during several of the winter terms, within the last twelve or thirteen years of his life, took special pains to educate his children and to train them during his short stay with them to live a religious life. He deceased May 10, 1860, at the age of forty-one years. Nathan Lamar was born in Henry County, Ind., Sept. 1, 1843. His early life was spent on the farm of his father. His schooling was derived chiefly from the district schools and the assistance of his father. Farming has been his special profession, although he has been engaged in teaching in the fall and winter terms of school for the past seventeen years. At the age of twenty he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Indiana Cavalry, to serve as a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, for three years or during the war, and was actively engaged in the principal engagements of the Atlanta campaign, and was with General Stoneman at the time he made his raid around Atlanta to Macon, Ga.; was taken prisoner at the time of Stoneman's defeat and surrender near Macon, Ga., July 31, 1864, Stoneman and his principal officers being taken at the same time. He was confined as a prisoner of war nine months, most of the time at Andersonville, being one of the last squad of prisoners that ever passed out through the prison gates of Andersonville, and one of but few of his comrades who lived through the horrors and cruelties of Andersonville Prison. He was released with about 2,000 others, at Baldwin Station, Fla., by the prison commander Wirz, without being exchanged, the war being about over, April 30, 1865. It was sixteen miles to the nearest Union post at Jacksonville, Fla., and a great number died on the road between Baldwin Station and Jacksonville. He got to the Union lines at Jacksonville May 1, 1865. The horrors of the rebel prison are familiar to all. He was honorably discharged June 16, 1865, at Camp Chase, Ohio. William Locke was a man of untiring energy, and although he started in life with nothing he accumulated property till he was the owner of 1,900 acres of fine land, thus being able to give each of his children a good home. He opened the first store and established the first tannery in Perry Township, and was one of the organizers of the first bank in Richmond, being one of the Directors. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and was an earnest worker in the cause of Christianity, as well as any enterprise of benefit to his township. He died Nov. 3, 1868, his wife having preceded him ten years. They were the parents of ten children, six born in Wayne County. John A. was reared on a pioneer farm and was educated in the primitive log school-house. When he was eighteen years of age, Aug. 24, 1837, he married Charity, daughter of Jesse Brooks, who came to Indiana from North Carolina in 1836. They had a family of seven children—Cecilia D., Jesse W., William M., Mary Ann, John A., Jr., Orlando B. and Charity Emma, the latter deceased. Mr. Locke has a fine farm of 200 acres, on section 35, and is one of the representative men of Dalton Township. He has served in various offices of trust in the township, and was Magistrate ten years. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church. His son William and his son-in-law Caleb Lamb were soldiers in the late civil war. William participated in eleven hard-fought battles, and at the second battle of Bull Run was severely wounded and taken prisoner. They are building a church of the United Brethren in Christ 30 x 40 feet, on Mr. Locke's farm, our subject being the largest donor.

William Mendenhall, son of Daniel and Deborah Mendenhall, was born in Guilford County, N. C., Sept. 7, 1798. He was married in 1819 to Rebecca, daughter of Joseph and Hannah Coffin. They were both reared on a farm and were principally educated in a school taught by Jeremiah Hubbard, a noted school-teacher and preacher in the Friends' society, of which they were both members. After their marriage they remained in their native State and county till 1825, when, with three children, they removed to Indiana and located in Wayne County. They made the journey of 600 miles with a little one-horse wagon, Mrs. Mendenhall driving and carrying an infant in her arms, and Mr. Mendenhall and a man named Joseph Nichols walking all the way. They had $40 when they left North Carolina, but after a journey of six weeks it was about exhausted. They reached Wayne County in September, and after stopping a short time with his brother Elijah, who lived near Washington, Mr. Mendenhall bought a farm two or three miles from Washington in the "Beech Flats," in the woods. They endured all the hardships of pioneer life, clearing up and improving their farm. At that time the settlers assisted each other in their work, and one spring Mr. Mendenhall attended fifteen log-rollings in succession. They had trouble in keeping their stock, as the grain that was raised was needed in the family, and the stock could not run in the woods on account of the danger of their getting poisoned. The land was poor and the crops uncertain, and in 1833 they moved to Perry Township, two miles west of Economy. This was a much better farm, and was partly cleared. They were very energetic, and although Mr. Mendenhall was never very strong, they were enabled to give their children a common-school education. Their clothes were homespun and their shoes home-made, each child having one pair a year, going barefoot in the summer. Mr. Mendenhall was a modest, unassuming man, but his honesty and integrity were known by all who knew him. He early taught his children lessons of prudence and economy which have been useful to them in their later years. Mr. and Mrs. Mendenhall were active members of the Society of Friends, often riding twenty miles before eleven o'clock, horseback, in severe cold weather, to attend Quarterly Meeting. He was politically a Whig, and a friend and sympathizer of the colored man. After the formation of the Republican party he was one of its strong adherents. He died Oct. 2, 1880, aged eighty-two years and twenty-five days, having since his sixtieth year enjoyed better health, and been able to attend to his farm duties. Mrs. Mendenhall is still living, in her eighty-third year. They had a family of eleven children, three sons and eight daughters. One daughter died in infancy, the rest grew to maturity.

After getting their children provided for they went to Economy, where he opened the first store in the place. Our subject was married

Dec. 22, 1822, to Jane, daughter of John and Mary (Davis) Mills, who came from Tennessee in an early day, first settling in Ohio, and in 1819 came to Wayne County. After his marriage Mr. Thornburgh settled on the farm where he now resides. It was at that time heavily timbered, but he has lived to see it one of the finest farms in the township. Mr. Thornburg has served as Township Trustee eleven years, and Assessor four years. He has had a family of ten children—Leonora F., Lewis M., Lawrence D., Curtis A., Charlie R., Frank R., Emma F., Maurice E., Nellie, Maud and Earle. The latter died Sept. 17, 1883, aged three months. Mr. Thornburg is a member of the Society of Friends, and Mrs. Thornburg, of the United Brethren church. Mr. Thornburg's father, Lewis Thornburg, was the second son of Henry and Nancy (Maulby) Thornburg, and was born Feb. 2, 1802. His wife was Lydia, daughter of Barachiah Macy. Of their twelve children, five are still living—Colman, Orlando, Isaac, Lewis and John Henry. In 1862 Mr. Lewis Thornburg removed to Dallas County, Iowa, where he still resides. His wife died in 1870. Henry Thornburg, grandfather of the subject of our sketch, was born in North Carolina, June 26, 1773, and when a boy removed with his father to Wayne County, Tenn. He was married in 1794 to Nancy Maulby, also a native of North Carolina, born Nov. 21, 1771. To them were born eight children, all of whom lived to be over fifty years of age, and four of whom are still living—Lewis, Ellinor, Rachel and John. Lydia, Sophia, Larkin, Henry and an adopted son, William, are deceased. In 1819 he removed to Wayne County, Ind., and entered a tract of land, residing here till his death, engaged in farming and tanning. He built a tannery on his farm, the marks of the old vats being still visible. He died at the age of eighty-nine years and his wife, aged ninety-seven. They were members of the Society of Friends.

Daniel Ulrich, retired farmer, section 4, Dalton Township, was born in Bedford County, Pa., Sept. 23, 1794, a son of John and Christina (Brombaugh) Ulrich, who were natives of Pennsylvania, of German descent. His youth was spent in assisting his father on the farm and working in his father's saw, and carding mill. He was married in 1816 to Catherine Holsinger, of Pennsylvania, by whom he had five children, three now living—Samuel, Christina and Catherine. John and Susannah are deceased. His wife died in 1828, and in 1829 he married Mrs. Catherine (Clapper) Hoover. Six children were born to them—David, Martin, Elizabeth, Annie (deceased), Rosanna and Daniel D. Mr. Ulrich and his father came to Wayne County, Ind., with their families in 1822, and settled on the land where our subject now lives. They purchased 800 acres of Government land. His father died about thirty years after coming to this county. Mr. Ulrich is now eighty-nine years of age and has retired from active life, but still retains his mental and physical vigor to a remarkable extent. He has been an active member of the German Baptist church for many years. His wife died in June, 1863.

WHERE IT IS LOCATED.

This is in the north tier of townships, and is the central one, it being eight miles on each side from the east and west county lines. It is bounded on the north by Randolph County, on the east by New Garden and Webster townships, on the south by Webster, Centre and Clay townships, and on the west by Clay and Perry townships. It is five miles square, with an addition on the south side of three and one-half sections, extending in the center two miles south of the square, the last mile being a half section. Just why this county of Wayne has been cut into townships out of all reasonable shape is hard to determine. The cultivation of symmetry has not been chronic. The area thus covered is twenty-eight and one-half square miles, or 18,240 acres of land. Of this amount 18,182.68 acres are found on the assessment roll, which shows a closer assessment, or more arable land, than many other townships in the county. The township was organized November, 1821, and the first election was held at the house of Seth May. It is a good township of land and the farmers have placed themselves in an independent position financially.

The principal stream in the township is Green's Fork, named after John Green, a somewhat noted Indian who adopted an English name and was well-known by the early settlers. It enters the township in the northeast corner and flows southwesterly through the township. It has quite a number of small tributaries on its west side, all rising within the township, and one branch on its east bank. On the west side of the township Morgan's Creek enters from the north and traverses nearly the entire west side of the township. Williamsburg is the only village, and is in the south-central part of the township, mostly on the southeast quarter of section 6.

The township had a population in 1850 of 1,532; in 1860, 1,319; in 1870, 1,293; in 1880, 1,189, showing a steady decline each decade for the past thirty years.

The assessed valuation of the township, Jan. 1, 1883, was: On real estate, $612,235; personal property, $346,960; total, $959,195, there being but four townships in the county that has a greater aggregate of wealth, and these, with the exception of Jackson Township, are considered considerably larger. Taking area and population together, Green is the richest township in the county.

ITS EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler who is credited with locating in this township was John Lewis, from North Carolina, who settled on section 7, in the year 1810. His son Joseph now lives upon and owns the homestead. Richard Lewis, then past the age of twenty-one years, came with his father, and these two were without neighbors until the spring of the following year. Henry Way then came and settled on section 5; Seth Way, on section 6; Paul Way, on section 29, now owned by his son Joseph—all from North Carolina; Joshua Cranor, on section 8, his son Milo succeeding him and living on the original farm; Reuben Joy, on section 32, northeast of Williamsburg. These all came during the last mentioned year.

In the southeast part of the township Joseph Comer, where now Joseph Comer, his son, resides; Joseph Palmer, where Daniel Palmer resides; Henry Gower, and James Irwin; first settler on their lands; Thomas Teagle, where now a son resides. Joseph Evans, from New Jersey, entered several quarter-sections on sections 18 and 19; John Catey, from New Jersey, also several quarter sections. Joseph Personett, from Maryland, settled on land now owned by Benj. B. Beverlin. Wm. Beverlin, from Virginia, settled as early, probably, as 1812, on section 8, now owned by his son Thomas, and John Catey, where the latter now resides; Jesse Bacon, from New Jersey, on section 8 and northwest quarter of section 9; Henry Catey, from New Jersey, where Samuel Catey resides, one and a half miles southeast from town; Thomas Bond, south line of township, land now owned by his heirs.

In 1814 John Green came from North Carolina and settled on section 30, and was accompanied by Joseph Ladd and his son, William Ladd, the latter locating on section 36. Joseph Ladd settled on the northeast quarter of section 31, and Amos W. Ladd, on section 35. Benjamin Hutchins came from the same State, and settled one and a half miles north of Williamsburg, or where it now stands, also in 1814, and Thomas Hutchins, a half mile south of him, on section 31. Benj. Hutchins afterward removed to the farm, near the United Brethren meeting-house. John Hutchins settled a mile northwest from town.

In the northeast part, Daniel Charles, about 1816, settled on section 28; land now owned by Henry Charles and Hannah Blair. In 1816, from North Carolina, came Abel Lomax. His land is now owned by James Frazer's heirs, section 32; Elijah Wright, where Alexander Wright lives; Jeremiah Stegall, on section 30, on land owned by Alexander Stegall; Wm. Cook with his sons, Cornelius and James, about four miles northwest from town, on section 25; land now owned by his heirs and descendants.

Henry Study, a native of Maryland, in 1818, a mile west of town where his son John resides, on the northeast quarter of section 7. Mr. Study is said to have had the first iron mold-board plow in Wayne County.

Charles Spencer, a native of Connecticut from Pennsylvania, in 1819, settled where he now resides, one and one-half miles south of town. He is said to have made, in 1820, the first pegged shoes ever made in Wayne County, and in 1821 the first iron mold-board plow.

Henry Catey, a native of Germany, from New Jersey in 1821, settled one and one-half miles southeast from town, where he resided until his death in 1850, aged about eighty years. John, his son, now lives one and one-half miles south of town.

Anthony Chamness, a native of North Carolina, settled on section 7; his son Joshua now has the homestead. Joshua Murphy settled where Harvey Harris lives, also from North Carolina, as was Jacob Cook, who located on section 33. Eleazer Smith was another North Carolinian, and settled on section 20, his farm now being owned by his son, William D. Smith. Valentine Pegg came from the same State and made his home on sections 19 and 20, and John Pegg, on section 21, now owned by his son John. A good many North Carolinians made their homes in this township. Others of the early settlers were Drury Davis, on section 12; Jesse Young, section 18; Samuel Ball, on section 13; Charles Spencer, on the same section, also John Cain; Benj. Satterwaite on section 18; Henry Oler, section 11, now owned by his son Henry; Luke Dillon, on section 2; as was also Joshua Ballenger and Benj. Ballenger. The sons of Henry Study, Sr., viz.: Henry, Joseph, David and Isaac, all located on lands embraced in sections 26 and 35; a Mr. Elliott, on section 35, and Nathan Riley, an Ohioan, on section 36. Jesse Baldwin came from North Carolina, and located on section 26; John Beard, on section 23, and came from Maryland. In later years section 23 was owned by E. and J. T. Cates, Geo. W. Scantland and Peter Hardwick. John Saintmeyer purchased his homestead on section 35, and his sons now occupy the farm; Washington Cranor, on the Cranor farm. George Johnson located in the east part of township at present owned by Thos. Edwards, and Levi Jessup, on sections 9 and 16, some two miles south-east of Williamsburg. William Trotter and Hugh L. Macy, settled on section 28, and Jeremiah Thorp, from Tennessee, on section 20. There are a few others of the early settlers that could be mentioned but space is limited.

SUNDRIES.

The first wagon-maker was Wm. Richter.

The first school in the township was kept by Joseph Lewis, in a log house on his father's farm.

The first blacksmiths in the township were William Underhill, below town, and Joseph Way, one and one-half miles northeast from the town. Also, Hanan Roberts and Moses Davidson were early blacksmiths.

Richard Lewis, the first Justice of the Peace. Other early Justices were Barnabas McManus, Joseph Ladd, John Green, Joseph Lewis, Samuel Johnson.

It has no railroad, but a proposed line if ever built would pass through the west side of the township.

Abel Lomax served two or more years as Representative, and a term of two years as Senator in the Legislature; and Joseph Lewis as a Representative, at the session of 1845-'6.

A fort and block-house were built during the war of 1812, on the farm of John Lewis, by John, Joseph and Richard Lewis, Joshua and Thomas Cranor, Seth Way and others. About three miles northeast from this another, on land now owned by Thompson Smith, was built by William Whitehead and others, and called the "Whitehead block-house."

The Friends formed a society a few years later, and built a log house about three and one-half miles northeast from town. After an existence of about fifteen years the society was discontinued.

Wm. Johnson built the first grist-mill about the year 1818, where the present mill in Williamsburg stands. A year or two later Stacey B. Catey built a saw-mill one and one-half miles below town, where also a grist-mill was built. About the same time Reuben Joy built a saw-mill one and one-half miles above town; and a few years after Hugh Johnson built a grist-mill; both are now owned by Jesse Reynolds.

The Baptists probably formed the first church in the township, which was organized Nov. 21, 1818, about three miles north of town. Among the first members and those who joined soon after were: Isaiah Case, Benj. Jones, Eleazer Smith, and their wives; James Martin, Hannah Case, Polly McQuary, Jeremiah Swafford, Sarah and Rebecca Potter, David Frazer, Margaret Shoemaker, Nathaniel Case and John Stigleman and their wives. Rev. William Oldham, from Salem church, Rev. — Martin, from Elkhorn, and others, officiated at the organization. In June, 1819, Benj. Jones and Nathaniel Case were ordained Deacons. In December, 1819, Rev. Isaac Cotton became their minister, and continued his pastoral labors about twenty years. He was succeeded by Nathaniel Case about six years, and Andrew Baker some ten or twelve years. Henry Rupe, Mr. Lyons, and others have supplied the church at different times. Meetings were first held in a log house.

The church is located near the section line between sections 28 and 29 and on the northwest quarter of section 28. A frame building was erected in 1830, which continued in use until about 1860, when a substantial brick edifice was built and neatly finished.

WILLIAMSBURG.

The town of Williamsburg is the capital of Green Township and is the only town within its limits. It is situated on the south half of the east half of the southeast quarter of section 6, and was platted March 16, 1830, by Wm. Johnson, the survey being made on that date by John Frazier. The plat and survey was made of record March 23, 1830.

It lies in the midst of a splendid agricultural country, and notwithstanding that the township has decreased nearly thirty per cent. in population the last third of a century, the village has continued to grow, slowly to be sure, but is the only town in the county that has gained in the face of a declining township to the number it has.

Its population in 1850 was 219; in 1860, 234; in 1870, 248; in 1880, 273.

It has an assessed valuation, real and personal, of over $100-000, and there is no healthier town in the county of Wayne.

The first merchant in Williamsburg was (name lost), who commenced trade about the year 1831, prior to which time the inhabitants were supplied at Richmond. Of those who have since traded for longer or shorter periods were: John Pennington, Joshua and Thomas Cranor, Stephen and Samuel Johnson, Stephen Coffin, eight or ten years in the firms of B. & S. Coffin and Andrew Purviance & Co., Pleasant Unthank and Griffin Davis, afterward Davis alone.

Dr. Curtis Otwell was the first resident physician, the inhabitants having been previously served chiefly by Drs. Warner and Kerl, of Richmond, Waldo, of Jacksonburg, and Way, of Newport. After Otwell, George Blair.

BUSINESS OF 1870.

The business interest of the town has never been very large. In the year 1870 there were three general stores kept and owned respectively by Jas. L. & Asher Pearce, Griffin Davis and William Campbell; grist and saw mill, by Jesse Reynolds; carriage and wagon shops, by Wm. Richter and Reynold Bros.; blacksmiths, Elias and John Roberts and the Richter Bros.; physicians, Dr. L. P. Taylor and Dr. Jno. T. Chenoweth, and the usual number of mechanics and artisans. The growth of the town has not been such as to increase the volume of business to any perceivable extent.

Harris and Lydia, his wife; Samuel Johnson and Catharine, his wife; Herbert C. Pierce and Margaret, his wife; Susanna Cranor, James and Phebe Stevenson. Kendrick, Robert Morris, Thomas Evans and the Rev. Mr. Smith, the present pastor.

Way, returned to South Carolina for his family and friends, and on the 1st day of December, 1816, six families in one company bade a final farewell to their Carolina homes, and started on a long overland journey to the paradise beyond the Ohio, to find their future homes and fortunes in Randolph County. This company consisted of John and Paul Way, (uncles of our subject), John Moorman, Geo. T. Wilson, Armsbee Diggs and Benjamin Beverly and their families. The route of this company lay across the Blue Ridge Mountains, over the Holsten and along the French Broad Rivers, over the Cumberland Mountains, and on through Tennessee, Kentucky and across the Ohio River at Cincinnati. After the company had traveled some days and reached the eastern part of Tennessee, Mr. Macy's sister, two years older than himself, was taken sick with a fever, and was not able to travel any further. It was decided that his mother and children should stop. His uncle had made the acquaintance of a tavern-keeper, Major McBride, a gentleman in every sense of the word, who took them in and cared for them until the next spring, when his grandfather and grandmother and aunt came by and brought them on to Green Township, Wayne Co., Ind. They arrived on the 3d day of July, 1817. At this date a great portion of Indiana was an unbroken wilderness. The red man of the forest, the bear, the deer and the wolf were frequently seen. The condition of the country, the wants of the pioneer, were such, that it behooved every man, woman and child to do his best to subdue the wild forest, so that the soil could be forced to yield the necessities of life. At the date of his arrival in Wayne County our subject was eleven years old. The country a wilderness, the land to clear, rails to split, fences to build, cabins to raise, clapboards to make to cover the cabin, puncheons to split and hew for a floor, and no saw-mills. Steam-mills were hardly thought of, and at that date there were no mills of any kind in Green Township. When his grandparents, William and Abigail Way, his mother and child, his Uncle William Way, Aunt Abigail Way, two cousins, Moorman and Susannah Way, reached the neighborhood where Williamsburg now stands, they found his stepfather, Benjamin Beverly, his brother William, and Seth Way, at work on a cabin for a home. His stepfather had taken a lease of the land belonging to Seth Way, lying about a mile west of where Williamsburg now stands. He was to clear and fence ten acres and have it seven years. For three or four years this cabin was his home, and he helped to clear and fence the land. About this time his oldest sister, Phebe, married Henry W. Way, a son of Henry and Charlotte (Anthony) Way. After this he lived with his sister and her husband and his mother. Ruben Joy, the man who built the first saw-mill in the neighborhood, paid his hands 25 cents per day for digging his mill-race, and Mr. Macy worked four days in said mill-race for $1. In the fall of 1826 his brother-in-law, Henry W. Way, sold his farm near Williamsburg, and moved to Fayette County, some three miles south of Connersville. He lived with him there one year and then returned to the neighborhood of Williamsburg, where he made the acquaintance of Rachel Trotter, a daughter of Joseph and Ruth (Anthony) Trotter, and a granddaughter of Josiah and Jane Trotter. She came with her mother, sister and brother to Wayne County, Ind., in the fall of 1826, and on Dec. 24, 1829, they were married. The spring following they moved to Winchester, Randolph County, and lived there two years. There he made and laid bricks. They then moved back to Wayne County, four miles northeast of Williamsburg, to the farm of Wilson Horn. They lived on the Horn farm one year, when he and his wife's brother bought a lease of Seth Brock on the Widow Jay farm, and moved to it in the fall of 1834. Mr. Macy bought the farm on which he now lives and has followed farming for a livelihood ever since. Mr. and Mrs. Macy have had nine children—Ruth, born Dec. 29, 1830, wife of Benjamin Tharp, of Randolph County, Ind.; Mary, born Dec. 18, 1832, married Wyatt Green, and died March 7, 1861; William, born Sept. 24, 1834, and died Aug. 11, 1864; Abigail, born Sept. 28, 1836, died Feb. 11, 1842; Louisa, born May 13, 1838, wife of Nathan T. Butts, of Randolph County; Thomas C., born Aug. 31, 1840, died Jan. 5, 1852; Margret

J., born Feb. 21, 1842, wife of Wyatt Green; Sarah A., born March 20, 1844; Henry S., born Dec. 28, 1851. In politics, in his youth, Mr. Macy was an admirer of John Quincy Adams. Later in anti-slavery times he voted the liberty and Free-Soil ticket; voted with the Republican party until after the war, when he thought their legislation was calculated to make the poor poorer and the rich richer. Since then he has been with the Greenback labor party. Mrs. Macy has been a member of the United Brethren church forty years.

Samuel Pitts was born in Guilford County, N. C., Oct. 14, 1820, and when twelve years of age moved with his parents, Samuel and Martha (Merideth) Pitts, to Wayne County, Ind. After reaching manhood he purchased land in Iowa which he soon sold and purchased the farm where he has since resided. He served four years as Trustee of Green Township, and has been guardian of estates since twenty-two years of age. He was married in 1842 to Martha A., daughter of Joseph and Ruth Tegal, her father a native of Virginia and her mother from North Carolina. Mr. and Mrs. Pitts were the parents of one child—Anna, now Mrs. A. J. Gibbs, of Fountain City, Wayne County. Mrs. Pitts died in 1843, and in 1844 Mr. Pitts married Anna, daughter of Isaac and Rachel (Night) Thomas. They have had four children, two now living—Martha A., wife of Henry Love, of Wayne County, and Asa, married and residing with his parents. One son and one daughter are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Pitts and children are members of the Society of Orthodox Friends. Mr. Pitts has served as Elder of his church a number of years and was ordained a minister in 1866. Mrs. Pitts is an Elder of her church. In politics Mr. Pitts was reared a Whig, but since the organization of the Republicans he has affiliated with that party. His parents were born, reared and married in North Carolina, and in 1832 moved to Wayne County, Ind. His father was engaged in agricultural pursuits through life and died on his farm, aged seventy-seven years. His wife died the following year aged seventy-seven years. They were consistent members of the Orthodox Friends. Mrs. Pitts's parents, were also born, reared, and married in North Carolina, and settled in Wayne County, Ind., in 1812.

They reared nine children of whom only two survive—John Thomas, of Iowa, and Fannie. Mr. Thomas died near Fountain City in 1855, aged eighty-seven years, and his wife died in 1842, aged seventy-two years.

Jerome Tyler and Napoleon Harrison Richter, twin sons of William and Lucinda (Lewis) Richter, were born Aug. 4, 1840, in Williamsburg, Wayne Co., Ind. Their father was of German parentage and settled in Williamsburg with his parents before the war of 1812. He was one of the founders of the village of Williamsburg, where he worked at his trade, wagon-making, for many years, being one of the first mechanics of the county. His death occurred in 1879, aged seventy-two years. His wife was a daughter of Richard Lewis, one of the first settlers of Green Township. She was the first white female born in Green's Fork. She is still living. Of the twelve children born to them, but four are living—Henrietta, wife of Orrie Medaries, of Richmond, Ind.; Josephine, wife of Anthony Schubert, of Indianapolis, Ind.; and our subjects. They obtained a good education in the schools of their native village, and learned the wagon-maker's trade from their father. In October, 1861, they enlisted in Company D, Fifty-seventh Indiana Infantry, as Chief Musicians, and were with the Army of the Cumberland until they reached McMinnville, Tenn., where Jerome's health failed and he was sent to Nashville, Tenn., thence to Louisville, Ky., where he was discharged in 1863. Napoleon continued with the army through Georgia and to the sea. After serving three years and a half he was detailed on special secret service in Indiana by Governor Morton of that State, and was finally discharged in 1865. He returned home and with his brother engaged in wagon-making. Their capital was very limited but they were very successful in their business operations. In three years they changed from wagon-making, to the manufacture of carriages and buggies, in which they still continue. They now own one entire block in the village, which contains their warerooms, paint shops, office and Jerome's residence, and also a square containing their wood shop, smith shop and Napoleon's residence. They are members of Williamsburg Lodge, No. 493, A. F. & A. M., of which Napoleon is Senior and Jerome is Junior Deacon. They are also members of Mart. Ballenger Post, G. A. R., of which Napoleon is Post Commander and Jerome is Post Adjutant. In politics they affiliate with the Republican party. Napoleon was married in 1868, to Sallie, daughter of John and Sarah Edwards, of Randolph County, Ind. They were the parents of two children—Ulara and Nettie. His wife died in 1874, and in 1880 he married Attie, daughter of James R. Keener, of Randolph County. Jerome was married in 1872, to Mattie, daughter of R. H. and Martha Worley, of Cincinnati, Ohio. They have three daughters—Zella, Lola and Ula.

Samuel Saintmyer, of the firm of Roberts & Saintmyer, butchers and grocers, Williamsburg, Wayne Co., Ind., was born Sept. 25, 1838, in Green Township, Wayne Co., Ind., youngest son of John and Nellie (Swords) Saintmyer. His father was born in Virginia, of German descent, and afterward lived in Warren County, Ohio, where he was married. There was a family of seven children, four still living—Barbie E., wife of Cornelius Cook, of Jay County, Ind.; James and David, of Randolph County, and Samuel. Elizabeth died of cholera in Richmond in 1849, George died in February, 1875, and Mary A. died in 1844. His father came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1836. In February, 1840, his wife died, and the following year he was married to Mrs. Rachel (Warren) Hart. They had one daughter—Eliza A., wife of Thomas Tharp, of Randolph. John Saintmyer followed farming through life, and died in his seventy-fourth year in 1870. His widow survived until 1879. Samuel was educated in the schools of his township, and on reaching the age of manhood he engaged in farming on the homestead, and when the estate was settled he purchased the homestead where he carried on farming until 1878. His and his wife's health becoming impaired he was obliged to change his occupation. He sold his farm and removed to Williamsburg, where he purchased property and engaged in his present business. He has received a liberal patronage and does a thriving business. He was married in 1856 to Charlotte, daughter of Joseph and Hannah Study, of Wayne County. They have two sons—Adison, born in March, 1858, married, and is a carpenter and joiner at Williamsburg, and Charles R., born in October, 1859, is engaged in saw-milling in Washington Territory. Mrs. Saintmyer died May 24, 1879, and in November, 1880, Mr. Saintmyer married Wilda, daughter of John and Elizabeth Cranor, of Wayne County. Mr. Saintmyer is politically a Democrat. He is a member of Chinkarorer Lodge, No. 120, I. O. O. F., of Williamsburg, and has been Trustee of his lodge for several years.

Thompson Smith, eldest son of James and Mary (Massey) Smith, was born Dec. 26, 1822, in Randolph County, Ind. He was educated at the Winchester Seminary, in his native county, and was an assistant teacher there a portion of two years, at the same time reading law with a view of entering that profession, but after completing his studies he taught school for five years. He was married in February, 1847, to Elizabeth A., daughter of James and Amy (Jeffrey) Britain, who was reared in New Jersey, but came to Wayne County in 1820. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had four children, of whom only one survives—Mary A., wife of O. G. Davis, of Williamsburg. James H., William and Sarah J. are deceased. Mr. Smith, after his marriage, purchased a farm in Randolph County, which he sold in 1849, and the following two years taught school at Economy, Wayne County. In the spring of 1850 he purchased the farm where he has since successfully followed agricultural pursuits. He owns a fine farm of 260 acres, a fine residence and one of the most commodious barns in the township. He has served his township as Clerk a number of years, and was Justice of the Peace twelve years. He affiliates with the Greenback party in politics. His wife died June 7, 1860, and he was again married, April 14, 1871, to Mrs. Frances Crane, of Boone County, Ind. They have no children. Mr. Smith's grandparents, Eleazer and Ruth (Davis) Smith, were natives of North Carolina, and his father was born in that State, Davidson County, Jan. 6, 1798. They removed to Wayne County in 1818, where our subject's father was married. His children living are—Thompson, Rachel, Martha and Mary. Ruth, William M., Oliver and Henry are deceased. Their mother died Nov. 12, 1839, and the father was married to Mary Willburn, of Kentucky, by whom he had two children—Eleazer and Oliver H. (deceased). In 1855 he moved to Warwick County, Ind., where his wife died in 1870, and May 24, 1871, Mr. Smith died at the residence of his daughter Mary, in Jasper County, Ill. He was buried in Concord Cemetery, Wayne County, by the remains of his first wife.

Benjamin Thorn, Jr., was born in Burlington County, N. J., March 23, 1817, and in 1827 removed with his parents, Benjamin and Ruth (Dudley) Thorn, to Warren County, Ohio, and in 1830 removed to Wayne County. He obtained his education at the subscription schools and after he attained his majority he worked several years for wages. With his earnings he purchased eighty acres of wild land in Huntington County, Ind., and soon after bought eighty acres more. He soon sold his land and purchased sixty acres where he has since been engaged in farming, owning at the present time over 400 acres in Wayne County, in a high state of cultivation. He was married to Salina, daughter of Samuel and Mary Ball, of Wayne County. They have had four children, only one now living—Hannah A., born in 1851, now wife of John Chapman, of Green Township; Martin L. was born in June, 1842, and was killed by a runaway team at the age of twenty-four years, in August, 1866; Samuel A., born in 1843, was a member of the Thirty-sixth Indiana Infantry in the late war, and died of measles at Camp Wyckliffe, Ky.; Mary J. was born in 1849 and died of spotted fever in 1863. Mr. Thorn has been a cripple since 1863 from the effects of spotted fever. He belongs to the Society of Hicksite Friends and in politics is a Republican. His parents were of English and Welsh descent. Four of their children are living—Ezra, of Huntington County, Ind.; Mary, wife of Ira Moore, of Richmond, Ind.; Ruth, widow of Isaac Dudley, of Richmond, and our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Thorn are deceased, the former having died at the age of fifty-seven years.

Oliver Wilson, eldest son of John and Hannah (Bond) Wilson, was born Feb. 3, 1839, in Clay Township, Wayne County, Ind. He was reared a farmer and educated at the country schools until he was thirteen years of age, when his father died, after which he helped maintain the family until he was twenty-two years of age. He then farmed a few years on rented lands in Clay Township. He purchased the heirs', his brothers and sisters, interest in lands in Hamilton County Ind., and soon after sold to the younger heirs, and purchased a farm in Clay Township, which he sold after a few years, and in 1869 purchased the farm of 130 acres, where he has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. March 14, 1861, he was married to Keziah C., daughter of Perry and Sallie Hurst, of Wayne County. Two children were born to this union, both now deceased. Mrs. Wilson died in 1864, and Mr. Wilson was again married, Sept. 25, 1873, to Lydia D. (Dukes) Holt. They have three children—Lula, Omer, and a twin to Omer died unnamed. Mr. Wilson, politically, is a Republican. His grandfather, Samuel Wilson, came from Guilford County, N. C., and was one of the first settlers of Wayne County. ### HARRISON TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION AND AREA.

This township is bounded on the north by Jefferson and Clay Townships, on the east by Clay and Centre, south by Centre and Jackson, and West by Jackson and Jefferson. It is of irregular form, like half the townships in this county, dividing on section and quarter section lines, being five miles east and west in its widest part, and four and one-half miles north and south in its extremest length. It has on the assessment roll 10,650.27 acres of land. The land is of a fair quality and the township has a solid foundation, financially speaking. Its farmers are in good circumstances, intelligent and prudent. The eastern part of the township is watered by Green's Fork and its branches, and on the west by Martindale's Creek. It is an agricultural and stock township, having but one postoffice and small village called Jacksonburg. The assessed value of its real estate in 1882 was $398,115; assessed value of personal property, $136,295; total value, $534,410. The population of the township steadily decreased for thirty years, and in the last decade only gained eight. The population in 1850 was 766; in 1860, 644; in 1870, 580; in 1880, 588. The town or village of Jacksonburg had a population of 109 in 1870, and in 1880, 112. This gave the township a gain of five and the village a gain of three in ten years, which may be considered rather slow work.

It was not until 1843 that the township was organized, and it is the third smallest in size, the two smaller being Webster and Dalton in the order named. It was first settled in the year 1811. The following from "Young's History," relates to the early settlement of the township:

"Samuel Boyd, from Tennessee, settled, in the spring of 1811, about two and a half miles northwest of the present town of Jacksonburg. He was probably the first settler in the township. His land was that at present owned by Jacob Metzker's heirs. In October following, John Beard, from North Carolina, after a year's sojourn in Tennessee, and a residence of five years south of Hunt's Settlement, within the bounds of the present county of Union, settled near the southwest corner of this township. He cut his road a great part of the way through the wilderness, without assistance, having his family and goods with him, and driving his team, and his cow and calf. His farm, on which he resided the remainder of his life, is now owned by his son, Isaac N. Beard, who lives about a mile northeast from the old homestead.

"During the winter and spring of 1812, Jesse Beard, Thos. Ray, William Irving, John McKee, Robert Leavell, Joseph Worl and others also settled in the township. On the breaking out of the Indian war in the spring of 1812, a number left, and some of them have never returned. Those who remained built a fort, with a block-house in one corner, in which they gathered at night, and in the day returned to their homes. Most of the women and children were taken to the east part of the county, or to the border of Ohio, and stayed until the war was over. The fort was on the ground of Henry Brown, now owned by Benjamin Clark, a mile west of Jacksonburg, and was built by Samuel Boyd and his sons, Samuel K., James, William and Robert Boyd, Henry Brown, William Irving and Thomas Ray.

"The following are the names of early settlers in this township. Those named as early settlers, however, were not in all cases the first settlers, some of them, perhaps, were the second or third owners:

"Robert Leavell, in 1811 or 1812, settled near the present site of Jacksonburg; William Brown, where Lewis Bond resides; Isaac Sellers, where John Kensinger lives; Peter Roller, on land owned in part by John Boyd; Peter Runyan, on land owned by Washington Worl's heirs; James Wilcox, on land owned by Jacob Allen; Samuel and William Boyd, on land owned by Joseph Lewis, of Green Township; James Ralston and John Shank, on land owned by Martin Worl; Joseph Charles, on land owned by Silas Spitler. Sampson Nation, a native of South Carolina, settled near Jacksonburg, 1815, where Samuel Carr resides. He moved to Dudley, Henry County, in 1825. Ephraim Clark, a native of Pennsylvania, came from Kentucky in 1814, and settled on land first owned by Henry Brown, on which his son, Benjamin Clark, resides.

“James Dougherty settled a mile south Jacksonburg, and worked at farming and tailoring. Zadok Dougherty made spinning-wheels in town, and afterward settled half a mile west. George N. Holman, from England, settled near James Dougherty; had a small farm, and was a shoemaker. John McKee, from Kentucky, settled one and one-half miles southwest of town, where he died; land now owned by heirs of Ebenezer Eliason. John Scott, from Kentucky, in 1811, one and one-half miles north from town, where he died. His sons, Harrison and John, reside in the township—John on the homestead, Harrison on a farm adjoining.

“Thomas J. Warman settled first south of town, afterward permanently two miles southwest from town, where he resided until his death. He was a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, elected under the Constitution of 1816, and was associated with James Odell and Thomas Beard. In 1815 Josiah Bundy settled on Warman's first place, sold it afterward to Abner M. Bradbury, and removed to Henry County, the farm now owned by Philip Binkley. Michael Swope, from Pennsylvania, settled about a mile east from town, on land lately owned by Andrew Eliason.

“Joseph Shanks, on the land now owned by his son-in-law, Enos Beard; Richard L. Leeson, from Virginia, in 1816, on the land now owned by his heirs, on Green’s Fork. He served in the war of 1812. School section (16), now owned by R. L. Leeson’s heirs, H. Hoover, Peter Kepler and Henderson Hosier. P. Kepler owns lands in sections 10 and 15. Lewis Hosier settled early south of school section, on the quarter owned by A. M. Hosier, J. Boyd, and A. Bond; Thomas Reynolds, from New Jersey, in the southeast corner of the township; Isaac Kinley, father of Major Isaac Kinley, of Richmond, on the land now owned by M. Jarbow.

“John Holliday settled about two miles northeast from town, the land now owned by his heirs; Samuel Holliday, where Rankin Baldrige resides, adjoining Jefferson and Clay townships. Nathaniel Leonard settled on the land since owned by J. Alonzo Scott, near the north line of the township. David Beeson, from North Carolina to Wayne County in 1825, settled in 1830 on the place now owned by his son Jabez, in the southeast corner of the township. He died in 1855, aged sixty-one. Solomon Kitterman, from Virginia. Jesse Hosier was born on Green’s Fork, in this township, and died in 1866, aged fifty-one.

“On and near Green’s Fork, Jacob Hoover settled where Beeson lives, and near the land owned by H. Hoover. James and John Boyd settled on the land owned by Henry Hoover.

“The first grist-mill is said to have been built as early as 1812, by one Doane. The frame consisted of two sycamore trees felled across the stream. The bed stone was laid on these logs; and a shaft from a tub wheel passed up between the logs and turned the upper stone. Four forks set into the ground supported the roof of split clapboards, which covered the millstones and hopper. Like many of the earlier mills, it ground only corn. Aaron Miller, about 1818, built on Martindale’s Creek a saw-mill, said to have been the first in the township. Several years after James Wilcox and Francis Brown built a saw-mill a mile and a half north of Jacksonburg; and another was built by Jehu Jones, about the year 1825, a mile and a half northwest from town, in the place of a grist-mill burned some years before. Another saw mill was built two miles southwest from Jacksonburg, by Jonathan Morris. On Green's Fork, a mile east from town, a grist-mill was built about the year 1838, by Wm. McLucas. The first school in the township was taught by Jonathan Kidwell in the winter of 1814-'15, in a log school-house on section 13. A whole log, says Isaac N. Beard, was cut out for a window, and the aperture closed by his father, John Beard, who pasted over it numbers of the Cincinnati Gazette."

"Another was taught the next winter on Martindale's Creek, on section 32. This latter was patronized by the first settlers of Perry Township, which was formed the following year. The first blacksmith shop was owned by Joseph Rippey, and was on the same section and not far from the old log school-house.

Richard L. Leeson, a native of Pennsylvania, came from Eaton, Ohio, settled a mile east of town, and established a tannery, and sold to his brother, Abner M., who continued it for many years.

JACKSONBURG.

The village of Jacksonburg was platted by Robert Leavell, on the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 8, in the year 1814. In the following spring a survey was made by Henry Bryan, which is of record and was dated March 23, 1815. It is, with the exception of Centreville, the oldest town, or village, in the county. When Jackson Township was formed, Feb. 10, 1817, the voting precinct was at Jacksonburg until 1836. In 1843, when Harrison was formed, it again became the voting precinct of the township, which it still retains. The first election, however, in Harrison Township after it was organized was held at the house of John Williams. In early days it was a central point for military parades, and of all the amusement of the day. Horse-racing, shooting at a mark, jumping, wrestling and sometimes fighting were characteristic of the place. It attained its greatest population in the decade between 1830 and 1840, but the advent of Cambridge City put a stop to its growth. It had a population at one time of probably 250 if not 300, but in 1850 had dropped to less than 200, and in 1870, as mentioned above, 109; and in 1880 could boast of only 112 inhabitants.

Abraham Elliott settled in the town soon after it was laid out, and kept the first tavern in a log house. A tannery was built by Josiah Bradbury; a hat shop was established by John Zatt, a pottery by Zachariah Gapen, a blacksmith shop, a shop for making spinning-wheels, by Zadok Dougherty. Jonathan Kidwell, also, who soon settled in town, was a wheelwright, and for a time a preacher in the Christian church, and later a Universalist preacher as well as a teacher.

The first physician in Jacksonburg was Loring A. Waldo, in 1817, who about fifteen years afterward moved to Delaware County. The next was L. P. Pumphrey, who after a few years removed to Henry County. Among his successors were Dr. Leggett, Dr. Taylor; in 1849 Dr. Samuel S. Boyd, later of Dublin, and John R. Mauk.

Ezekiel Leavell is supposed to have been the first merchant in Jacksonburg, probably soon after the town was laid out. Rifner & Hurst were there in 1841, and in 1843-'45, Strattan & Wright.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The first church in Jacksonburg and also in the township, was the Christian or Disciples, and was organized by Revs. James McVey and Daniel Wridner. Among the first members were David Purviance, John Scott, Joseph Shank, William Boyd, R. L. Leeson, Mary Graham, Samuel and Isabella Boyd, Sarah, William, John and Abraham Crum, William Reynolds, Jesse Frazier, Henry Logan, Jonathan Kidwell, John Beard, Robert Leavell, Elijah Martindale and others.

The church building was a frame one and lasted for many years, and would have stood longer, but was destroyed by fire about 1840, by an incendiary. It was replaced in 1841 by a brick house, which was remodeled in 1870; and a dedicatory sermon was preached by Elder David Franklin.

It is now the only church in the township, and but one other ever has been formed. It is one of the oldest in the county, and is still strong. The Rev. Joseph Franklin is the present pastor.

The Friends also formed a society about the year 1815 or 1816, at West Union, one and a half miles south of Jacksonburg. Patrick Beard, Benjamin Morgan, William Saint, John Lacy, Lewis Hosier, Josiah Bundy, Jehoshaphat Morris and Jonathan Morris were early members. Meetings were held in a log house.

I. O. O. F. LODGE, NO. 552.

This lodge was organized Aug. 22, in the year 1877. The charter members were: James P. Dougherty, M. L. Bowmaster, J. S. Wolfgang, B. T. Reynolds, W. J. Howe and E. H. Thurston. The first officers were: B. T. Reynolds, Noble Grand; J. P. Dougherty, Vice Grand; J. S. Wolfgang, Secretary; E. H. Thurston, Treasurer; M. L. Bowmaster, Warden; John S. Dougherty, Inside Guard; Samuel Morris, R. S. N. G.; William H. Dougherty, L. S. N. G. The present number of members are twenty-nine. Present officers are: H. J. Bolinger, N. G.; C. C. Coffman, V. G.; L. A. Kirk, Secretary; M. L. Bowmaster, P. Secretary; John J. Miller, Treasurer; G. W. Hendershot, Warden; H. Fifer, Cond.; D. Gormen, S. G.; C. H. Spots, R. S. N. G.; F. Lindernen, L. S. N. G.; L. Ammeren, R. S. N. G.; John H. Leeson, D. D. G. M.

BUSINESS INTEREST.

The business interest of Jacksonburg is not extensive. It has two general stores, C. Leeson being proprietor of one and G. W. Fagan the other. Two blacksmith shops are kept by Mr. J. Dillman and Mr. L. A. Kirk. Two wagon shops are owned by Rhu Clark and J. J.— One shoe shop, C. A. Merrick, proprietor, and one carpenter shop, Mr. John Maudlin. He has pursued farming through life, and in 1875 purchased and removed to his present farm. He was married Nov. 19, 1859, to Lucinda, daughter of Henry and Nancy Wood. They have had four daughters—Malissa A. and Mar-tissa J., twins, born Feb. 14, 1861; they died at the age of six months; Ida M., born Aug. 12, 1862, and Ona M., born Feb. 19, 1871. Mr. Reynolds is a charter member of Jackson Lodge, No. 552, I. O. O. F., of Jacksonburg, and has passed all the chairs of his lodge. He has a Bible which has been in the Reynolds family 155 years. Five generations are recorded in the book, the first being David Reynolds, born December, 1729. His parents were born, reared, and married, Aug. 2, 1818, in Monmouth County, N. J., his father of Scotch and his mother of Irish descent. Their children were nine in number—William, Margaret, Abram, Mathew, Benjamin, Rebecca, James, Bartin T. and Charlotte. Jane, William, Matthew and James died in New Jersey, and Margaret and Benjamin died in Wayne County. Mr. Reynolds followed the carpenter's trade till he came to Wayne County, after which he engaged in farming till his death, Aug. 22, 1881, at the age of eighty-three years. His widow still survives at the age of eighty-six years.

Elias P. Scott was born on the farm where he now resides, Feb. 19, 1841, a son of James C. and Sarah (Willetts) Scott. His father was born in 1797, in Bourbon County, Ky., and in the fall of 1813 came with his parents, John and Jane Scott, to Wayne County, Ind., and settled on section 5, Harrison Township. Our subject's Grandfather Willetts came from Virginia to Green's Fork, Wayne County. Sarah Willetts was born in 1806, and was married in Wayne County to Mr. Scott in 1826. Ten children were born to them—John M., Amanda E., Melissa A., Lewis, Levi W., Mary R., Elias P., Sarah J., Alice P. and Vashti. Melissa A., Lewis and Levi, are deceased. Mr. Scott died on the farm where he first settled, in 1854. His widow resided on the farm a number of years, when she removed to Dublin, Wayne County, where she died in 1880. Our subject was reared on a farm and obtained a good common-school education. When twenty-one years of age he farmed on the homestead for an interest in the crops. Sept. 30, 1862, he was married to Mary L. Goodwin, born Nov. 21, 1844, in New Castle, Ind., a daughter of Richard and Catherine (Kinsey) Goodwin. They are the parents of six children—Attie, James, Richard, Katie, William and Freddie. Mr. Scott owns the home farm, 200 acres of fine agricultural land, and is one of the progressive farmers of his township. He was elected Township Trustee in 1882, and is still holding that position. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Disciple church. He has been Superintendent of the Sunday-school five years and is Treasurer of the church. Mrs. Scott's father was reared in New Castle, Ind., and her mother in Wayne County. They were the parents of three children. Mr. Goodwin died Dec. 23, 1848, and some years later his wife married J. G. Welch, of New Castle, and to this union were given six children, all living—Lidy, William, Nicholas, Jennie, Catherine, and John. Their mother died in March, 1873.

James Alonzo Scott, eldest son of John and Martha J. (Willetts) Scott, was born Sept. 8, 1839, in the house where his father was born and reared. He earned his first money when ten years of age by cleaning timothy seed on shares, and invested the profits in pigs, and soon after became the owner of some calves and a colt. He remained with his parents until his twentieth year, when he was married to Cordelia A. Hipes, daughter of Nicholas and Mary (Schroyer) Hipes, natives of Botetourt County, Va., and Green County, Pa., respectively, of German ancestry. They came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1825, and were the parents of three children—Cordelia A., Marshall and John. The father died in 1858, and the mother in 1881. Mr. Scott and wife have had five children—John, died at the age of two years; Jennie, wife of Charles E. Ford, of Hagerstown; Frank, Horace and Claude, at home. Mr. Scott is, politically, a Republican. He followed farming until Aug. 23, 1862, when he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Indiana Cavalry, as a teamster, and was discharged for disability at Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 14 of the same year. Returning home he opened a meat market at Cambridge City, but in 1864 he purchased his present farm containing 140 acres of highly cultivated land, where he has since followed agricultural pursuits, and for fifteen years he has made a specialty of sheep. For a number of years he was engaged in shipping stock to Eastern cities.

John Scott was born June 12, 1816, on the farm where he now resides, and is the eighth of a family of ten children, of John and Mary (Congleton) Scott, natives of Virginia, of English ancestry. They settled in Bourbon County, Ky., in an early day, where seven of their children were born, but Mr. Scott not wishing to rear his children in a slave State, left with his two eldest sons for Indiana, in the spring of 1813. He entered one section of land (now section 5) in Harrison Township, Wayne County, where he and his sons built a log cabin, raised a crop of corn, and the following fall brought his family to their new home. Of their ten children six are deceased—James, William, Robert, Lorenzo, Harrison and Lucinda. Those living are—Jane, wife of Aaron Wilds, of Kansas; Marion, wife of Hugh Sweeny, of Missouri; John, our subject, and Paulina. John Scott, Sr., died in 1820, aged fifty-five years. His widow afterward married Fergus Graham. She died in 1844. John Scott, whose name heads this sketch, was reared on a farm, experiencing all the phases of pioneer life, receiving only a limited education. He has, however, been a close observer and has acquired more practical business than many men of his day. He owns 260 acres of highly cultivated land, which is part of the land entered by his father, the entire section being still in the hands of the Scott family. He is one of the practical farmers and stock-raisers of his township. He was married Sept. 18, 1839, to Martha J. Willetts, born near Harrison, Ohio, Feb. 21, 1820, a daughter of James and Amy (Allison) Willetts, of Wayne County. Of their seven children, five are living—James A., married Cordelia Hipes; Mary E., wife of Abner D. Bond, of Wayne County; Emma C., widow of Larkin T. Bond; Iona, wife of Lewis Bond, of Miami County, Ind., and Laura, wife of Sylvester Harris, of Jefferson Township. Mr. Scott has been a Republican since the organization of that party. Mrs. Scott's parents were of English ancestry and came to Wayne County in an early day. Their children—Clarissa (deceased), Thomas, Allison (deceased), Mills, Emmerine, Martha J. and Lindley M. Mr. Willetts died in March, 1851, and his wife died in April of the same year.

THE DATE OF FORMATION.

Jackson Township was one of the original townships of the six which were organized after the Territory of Indiana became a State. This was Feb. 10, 1817, and the first election in the township was at Jacksonburg, the following April. The boundary was not made of record, but it included all of Harrison and parts of Jefferson and Centre—the county of Wayne at the time having a much larger area than at present. As the county lost territory by the organization of Union, Lafayette, etc., the townships were also curtailed. For some incomprehensible reason Jackson Township was left in a peculiar shape, stretching east an arm but one and a half miles wide and three miles long, while another mile of the arm is two miles wide. The township is, therefore, east and west, at its widest part, eight miles long, and north and south, six miles. On the west again, one mile by two is south of the eight-mile strip. There are six townships in the county larger at present than Jackson, which contains 16,673.77 acres of land. The township lies on the west side of the county; is bounded on the north by Henry County, Jefferson and Henry townships; on the east by Harrison, Centre and Washington townships; south by Washington Township and Fayette County, and on the west by Henry County. It is the fourth township in wealth in the county, and has the second most important city of Wayne County—Cambridge City, besides the adjoining towns of Dublin and Germantown—within its limits. Its poll numbers 216, being the fourth in the county, which, however, does not include the town's election vote.

The valuation of the township for 1882 was, on real estate, $701,685; on personal property, $382,686; total, $1,084,371. The value of real and personal property of the several towns amounts to $1,232,842; grand total, $2,317,213, being the second in aggregate wealth in the county.

TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

The township is undulating, and along the banks of Whitewater somewhat hilly, but not broken. This river passes through it from north to south near the center, and on the east side Martindale Creek and Green's Fork run parallel. On the west side several branches enter the Whitewater, and the drainage is all that could be wished for. For stock and domestic purposes it has an abundance of water, and is one of the best stock and agricultural townships in the county. Southeast of the city of Cambridge are the fair-grounds and race-track, the finest in all Eastern Indiana. Besides its full share of turnpike roads, Jackson Township has no superior as a shipping point in the county. The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad passes through the entire eight miles of its east and west extent; the Ft. Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville, passing through its southwest part, has some four miles of railroad within its limits, and the Whitewater Valley Railroad, running north and south, passes through the entire township. In addition, some two miles of railroad runs from Cambridge City southwest, in the direction of Louisville, Ky. The canal is also a small feeder to its transportation facilities, as now and then heavy freights are consigned to this water-way for southern points. Thus, Jackson Township has but one superior (Wayne) in the facilities which her farmers have for abundant and competing transportation advantages.

WHEN AND BY WHOM SETTLED.

The earliest settlement in the township appears to have been made, says "Young's History," in the eastern part. In 1809, or soon after, John Shortridge, from Kentucky, settled near and south of East Germantown. He was the father of John Shortridge, who was shot by an Indian, as elsewhere related. Wm. G. Reynolds, from Ohio, with his brother-in-law, Isaiah Drury, came in 1811. Reynolds served in the Indian war under Colonel Taylor, afterward General and President of the United States. Reynolds and Drury moved in 1855 to Illinois and died there. George Shortridge, a son of John, Sr., settled where Joseph Vinton lives, near the depot. He afterward laid out the town, mostly on his own land, and called it Georgetown. The name not being generally acceptable to the inhabitants, it was changed to Germantown.

East of Germantown, John Lacy, of North Carolina, settled where Henry Shisler lives, and owned also where John W. Steffy resides. James Vance early owned the land on the south side of the road, where Pennville is. Jas. Personett, from Ohio, settled in 1819 on land later owned by — Houck, of Centreville, and Henry Whistler. Jacob Waltz, of Pennsylvania, in 1823, on land previously owned by Jesse Frazier, who was a Christian preacher. Joseph Boyd, from Kentucky, about 1814, in the east part of the township, near the National road. Richard Wharton, from Kentucky, in 1814, settled where Joseph Rothemal and Henry H. Bruce reside. Wm. G. Reynolds, on land now owned by Cyrenus Wysong and Wm. Long. Aaron Mannon, from Kentucky, on the turnpike; land now owned by John Jacobs. Peter Lacy, about 1812, where Andrew Eliason lives. Patrick Beard, from North Carolina, about 1811, settled near the east line of the township. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1816, and was since elected twice to the Senate.

In the southeast part of Jackson Township were the following named early settlers---though not all of them the first---on the lands on which they respectively settled: Aaron

Morris, in 1822, settled one and one-half miles southeast of Dublin; John Morris, his son, on land adjoining, west, now owned by his sons Eli and Thomas B. Morris; in 1829 Samuel Morris, also a son of Aaron, northwest of his father's; Gideon Myers, where Michael Myers lives; Levi Hopper, on land owned later by Joseph Gray, Jr.; Wm. Kersey, on land owned, afterward by J.W. Wilson, and later by Michael Myers; Francis Hestor, where Wm. Adair lives; John Cook, and afterward Richard Gordon, where Robert Parker lives; Joseph Newton, on the present farm of Joseph M. Cox; Daniel Mills, and later John Hiatt, on the farm for many years owned by Joseph Cox, who died at the age of ninety-three; Benj. Reynolds, southwest corner of the township, land now owned by Josiah T. White, later by Thomas Gronendyke. Wm. Butler, from Virginia, settled southwest of Dublin, on land now owned by Joseph Thoms, who resides west of the county line; James Griffin, where Robert S. Pretlow lives, near town; Benj. Griffin, where Samuel Sivey lives, land adjoining town; Joseph Newby, from North Carolina, where Jacob Vore resides, west side of the town. Josiah Bell, from North Carolina, came with his father, John Bell, who settled a mile south from Cambridge. Josiah afterward settled near Dublin. Thomas and Alexander McGreer were the first owners of the land where Dublin stands, Thomas of the north part, and Alexander of the south part, including the farm later owned by Daniel Stanton. Hugh McGreer, a brother of Thomas and Alexander, bought north of and adjoining the town. Paul Custer settled early near the east end of Dublin, and kept a tavern about the year 1823, in a hewed log house, sign of the "Black Horse."

In the west part of the township, north of the old State road, most of the early settlers were the following: John Hough, where John Bond lives; Hugh Allen, where Charles Hood now owns; John Elliott, from North Carolina, on the lands now owned by Henry Binkley, and others; Isaac Miller, on land now owned by Moses Myers; Jehu Burkett, where now Charles T. Gough lives; Jacob Elliott from North Carolina, where Exum Elliott and Harrison Cook live; Benj. Beecham, from North Carolina, on land now owned by Thomas Hammond; Nathan Jessup, on land now owned by Harrison Cook.

At a later period, Pennsylvania Germans began to settle in this part of the township, and the immigration continued many years. John Huntsinger, Frederick Waltz, Henry Leonard and others, natives of Pennsylvania, came from Ohio about the year 1820. Huntsinger settled a mile northwest of Germantown, and the others near the town. Joseph Schock, from Pennsylvania, about 1823, settled near the southwest corner of the town, and still resides on the farm, a bachelor, at the age of seventy-three years. He bought of the Shortridges. George Shaffer settled south of the town, and died about twelve years ago. Charles Morris, from North Carolina, settled in or about 1824, where — Boughner now lives. About the years 1837 and 1838 came Jacob, Michael and Wm. Gipe, and Jacob Sowers, Jacob Heist, and still later, Mahlon Boughner. Peter Jamison, in 1838, settled two miles east of Cambridge City; was a school teacher, moved to town, and taught the first school in town. He died in Dayton, Ohio, in 1850.

Jacob Vanbuskirk, from Kentucky, settled about two miles east of Germantown, and was a blacksmith, the first in the east part of the township. Henry H. Bruce, a blacksmith, settled near town in 1824.

John Boyd, son of Samuel Boyd, Sr., settled, in 1812, on Green's Fork, two miles east of the present town of Jacksonburg. He married, in 1819, Susan Scott, daughter of Alexander Scott, and is the father of thirteen children.

In 1857 John Boyd sold his farm and removed to Dublin. Four of his sons and two sons-in-law enlisted in the Union army during the late war; and three of the number, two sons and one son-in-law, laid down their lives in defense of their country.

Aaron Morris settled, in the spring of 1815, one and one-half miles southwest from Jacksonburg, on Martindale's Creek, and in December, 1816, moved to a cabin where now Milton is, and cleared twenty acres of Jonathan Justice's land, which was first owned by Jacob Williams. In the fall of 1822 he bought a quarter-section on the line of the Twelve Mile Purchase, one mile southwest from Cambridge, which became his home.

Along the valley of the river, and east of it, north of Cambridge, were the following: Benj. Bowman, where David Keller lives; Gabriel Newby, lands owned by George Rareheid and one or two others; John Newby, from North Carolina; Caleb Morris, on the land now owned in part by Caleb J. Morris, and a part lately owned by Henry E. Peelle; Abraham Miller, where A. D. Bond's heirs live; Jonathan Morris; Samuel Hepley, where Abraham Copeland owns; Manasseh Myers, west side of the river, on land taken up by Amos Humbert; Martin Myers, east side, settled early. Moses Myers settled where Adam Bertsh owns; Jacob Heiny; Hiel Erwin, a part of section 2, on which Hiel and L. Erwin live.

Along the National and old State roads were the following: Hugh Allen settled early on township west line, on land lately owned by L. L. Lawrence, later by Charles Hood; John Hough, where John Bond lives; Samuel Cripe, on the quarter owned by John and Lindley Miles and Wm. Shaffer; John and Wm. Addison, on land owned chiefly by Charles T. Hough and Jacob White; John Burkett, of Ohio, south of the State road, where Rudolph Burkett lives; David Cochran, where John Huddleston resides.

David Caylor was the first settler where Rudolph Ellenberger lives, on the township north line; John Dill, on land now owned by J. S. Dill's heirs; John M. Lawson, part of section 16; David Burkett, from North Carolina; Thomas Bennett; Amos Humbert, from North Carolina; Henry Ritter, on land owned by Jacob Ritter. David Johnsonbaugh was an early settler where Isaiah Howard owns; Jacob Moore, where Nathan Stonecipher afterward owned.

The population of the township in 1880 was 5,294.

Vandalia, a town which now exists in memory only, was laid out by William Hawkins. The plat was recorded June 1, 1824. In 1828 William Conwell opened a store in the place. About two years later Hudson Cannon also engaged in the mercantile business. Benj. Conklin, after clerking for some years for Conwell, bought the store and carried on business until 1838. After the National road was built, travel was gradually attracted to its route, and Vandalia fell into decay.

Among the schools kept was one near Dublin, on the State road.

John Stumps had a blacksmith shop in the township in 1815.

The Evangelical denomination, called the Albright church, and a Methodist Episcopal church were organized in the township in 1832, the latter two miles north of Dublin.

The Bethel Meeting was started, it is believed, in 1823. In 1821 the Whitewater Meeting was one of the five Quarterly Meetings which composed the Indiana Yearly Meeting, and the Whitewater Monthly Meeting was composed of Whitewater, West Grove, Silver Creek, Middle Fork, Elkhorn and Chester, and was organized in 1815. Bethel came after the establishment of the Indiana Yearly Meeting, in October, 1821. Another meeting, called the Hicksite, was also organized.

CAMBRIDGE CITY

is a very pretty town, situated in rather a level country, with as fine agricultural surroundings as any town in Eastern Indiana. It has many handsome private residences, and some fine brick blocks, and a variety of business interests. In 1850 Cambridge City had 1,217 inhabitants; in 1860, 1,622, in 1870, 2,162, and in 1880, 2,370. Cambridge City is on the Whitewater Canal; Chicago St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad the Rushville Branch of the Jeffersonville road; the Cincinnati & Whitewater Valley, and the Fort Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad all pass her door.

So far as the aggregate wealth of the city is concerned it is on solid foundation, and second only to Richmond. The value of real estate in Cambridge City in 1882 was $424,600, and the assessed valuation of personal property was $295,926, being a total assessed valuation of $720,526. This wealth of the towns of Jackson Township gives her the position of second in importance in the county. It is not the oldest town in the county, but it is now nearly a half a century since Cambridge City came into existence.

This town was laid out in 1836; Ira Lackey, Sanford Lackey, George Graham, Thomas Tyner, Williams Petty, Wm. Hawkins, proprietors. The plat was recorded Oct. 26, 1836. Several additions have since been made by Wm. Conwell, Wm. Hawkins, Thomas Newby, Jonathan Hawkins, and in 1867 by Charles H. Moore and Benjamin Fulghum.

After the incorporation of the town, business tended rapidly to the west side of the river. Sanford Lackey opened the first store in the new town, on the east corner of the block east of the canal, south side of the street, in the present brick building erected by him for a store. He afterward built the house on the opposite corner, now occupied as a hotel.

Benj. Conklin, the last merchant who left East Cambridge, removed to the building then owned by Wm. Hawkins, now occupied by Felix Conklin as a hardware store. About the year 1845 Post & Enyeart built the "Mammoth Store," and for two years carried on an extensive wholesale grocery trade. The Whitewater Valley Canal, which was completed in 1846, contributed vastly to the trade of Cambridge City. This soon became the central point of trade of an extensive territory. It was the grand depot for the produce of the country, brought here for shipment, and for the delivery of merchandise. The merchants of Indianapolis received for a time their goods at this place. Large quantities of wheat were floured here. The present brick flouring mill, then newly built by Benj. Conklin, had in it, at one time, 90,000 bushels of wheat, or 5,400,000 pounds.

That this extraordinary prosperity, the result, in great part, of a peculiar juncture of circumstances, should be enduring was hardly to be expected. The completion of the canal to Hagerstown and the construction of railroads have virtually established a mart of trade in every town, and measurably narrowed the sphere of the trade of Cambridge; yet this being the converging point of so many railroads and being surrounded by a fertile country and a wealthy population, it can hardly fail, with an enterprising population, to maintain a large and prosperous trade.

Among the earlier merchants, besides those already mentioned, were: Harvey & Newby, Andrew and Frederick Johnsonbaugh, Williams Petty, John Hosea, Casper Markle, Edgerton & Taylor, Simon Clackner, Bloomfield & Petty.

In 1845 the first hardware store in Cambridge City was established by Nathan H. Raymond and his son Charles H. In 1855 Edward, brother of Charles, became a partner—firm C. H. & E. Raymond; afterward, E. Raymond & Co. until 1867; then, C. U. Raymond & Co.; present proprietors, Charles U. and John U., sons of Charles H. Raymond. A second hardware store was established by Henry M. Conklin in 1853 or 1854, from whom the establishment passed, in 1859, to Felix Conklin.

The first drug store was established in West Cambridge, by Thomas D. Whelan, in the year 1840.

Among the early physicians in Cambridge City were Samuel T. Sharp, who came in 1837 or 1838, and died there in February, 1846; and Dr. Nathan Johnson, who came in February, 1839, now dead. Dr. Joel Pennington, who had settled in Milton, in 1825, came to Cambridge a few years after Dr. Johnson, and remained about two years, and returned to Milton, now living there at the age of ninety years; Dr. Thomas D. Whelan in 1840, and who died in 1867. Dr. James V. Wayman came in October, 1842; John H. Wayman, in 1846, and went to California in 1851; Dr. John Sim came, it is supposed, in 1847; he resides there now, and is County Treasurer. He was a Major in the Thirty-sixth Indiana Regiment in the late war, and was wounded at Chickamauga. The physicians are: James V. Wayman, Lemuel R. Johnson (who began practice here in 1855), John Wall, William Kissell, W. E. Carnahan (homeopathist); in 1883, Drs. James V. Wayman, J. W. Rutledge and Joseph N. Study.

Early lawyers were: David Macy, in 1839 or 1840; Nimrod H. Johnson, 1842, for several years; George W. Whitman, since State Controller of California; and David W. Reed; in 1875; William S. Ballenger, George A. Johnson, Lafayette Develin; in 1883, D. W. Mason, Samuel H. Hoshour, Thos. K. Jessup, W. F. Medsker and J. D. Payne. Mr. David Macy, the first mentioned, is still living. His home is in Indianapolis.

There was a Cambridge City Manufacturing Company started in 1867 to manufacture the Adam Queen Washer, but has gone out of existence, and to which may be added the flax-mill owned by Joseph Morrey, and the marble-works which were started in 1857 by James W. Carpenter; they are now no more. The plant and flower garden which was started in 1855 is another of the lost industries of Cambridge City. It was owned by Joseph W. Vestal, a vegetable farmer. He commenced the cultivation of flowers in 1860, and was quite successful for several years, extending his business until he had a glass-covered green-house of 10,000 square feet, and over 3,000 varieties of flowers.

The public school-house, which stands in the east part of West Cambridge, is a fine building, equaled in size and style of its architecture by few in the county. The town is consolidated into a single district, and the course of instruction embraces all the branches of study, from primary to academical. The history of the schools of the city will be found in the school history of the county, Vol. 1.

The Public Hall is a splendid one, surpassed probably by few in the State, outside of Indianapolis. It is to the citizens of Cambridge a thing of great convenience and utility, and highly creditable to its builder, Mr. Joseph Morrey. It will seat 600 people; is lighted with gas, has dressing-rooms, drop-curtains, and scenery, all complete. The hall is forty feet wide and ninety feet long, ceiling twenty-six feet above the floor, and the stage twenty-five feet deep, and the whole is beautifully frescoed. The hall is in the large brick block, completed by Mr. Morrey in 1868, for store-rooms and offices. The cost of the building was about $20,000, and is now owned by the Thames Loan and Trust Company.

The Cambridge City Car Company, for the building of railroad cars, was organized in 1868, and chartered under a general law of the State Legislature, with a capital of $100,000. Its officers were: Wm. Mercer, President, and Wm. Dunham, Secretary and Treasurer; George L. Thomas, car-builder. They manufacture freight cars only. The number built yearly is about 500, of the average value of about $700.

In the fall of 1871 the company was compelled to make an assignment, being unable to collect its outstanding indebtedness. They made a large number of cars for a railroad, and, failing to take a lein, lost their debt. J. H. Hoshour became assignee, and the liabilities amounted to about $60,000. Passing through bankruptcy, the works were sold to a St. Louis firm in the fall of 1872, who started up the works in the spring of 1873, under the name of the Indiana Car Company. This company still continues to conduct the work, although they leased the same in 1879 for one year to the Missouri Car and Foundry Company. The company works some 350 hands, and has a capacity of 1,800 cars per year. The officers of the company are: President, Wm. McMillan; Vice-President, Wm. H. Gardner; Secretary, O. L. Bingham; Superintendent, John McCree. The president also acts as treasurer. It is the main stay of Cambridge City, being by far its largest industry.

Cambridge City Machine Works.—The works started in 1877, by the Guild Bros., manufacturing corn drills and other implements. In 1880 Beartsch Bros. purchased the plant, and continued in the same line of business, although not very extensively. They have lately entered into the manufacture of a new millstone dresser, patented by a Mr. Festor. The firm are working from five to eight hands, and are doing a safe if not a large business.

BANKS.

Cambridge City Bank was established in the spring of 1835, under the Free Banking Law, with a capital of $100,000. John Hunt was its first President, but was succeeded, after about three months, by Williams Petty; and he, a few months after, by John Marsh, who held the office until its close. John W. Burson was Cashier from its commencement until 1856. It then passed into the hands of Isaac Myers, J. D. Skean and others. Isaac Myers, President; Thomas Newby, Cashier. In 1862 John Callaway became President. It continued in business under the above name until the passage of Congress of the National Bank Act, when on July 13, 1863, it was organized under the National Banking Law, as the First National Bank of Cambridge City, with a capital of $50,000, which was afterward increased to $100,000.

First National Bank.—It was located in the People's Bank building, and commenced business at the above date, with Jas. E. Reeves, President; Edward Yarrington, Cashier, and Clem Ferguson, Teller. They did not receive their notes or bills until a short time after. In 1873 its present owners, Jos. W. Jackson, Linville Ferguson, Milton Thornburg, Jesse W. Murray and others purchased the stock of the bank and increased its capital from $100,000 to $200,000. It took about one year to show a sinking of $97,000 in the capital of the bank, by the investigation of experts, which made it best to reduce its capital stock to $100,000. Its present officers are: L. Ferguson, President, and Jno. W. Jackson, Cashier.

Western Wayne Bank.—The institution was opened Aug. 21, 1882, as a private banking house, no incorporation having been had. Its owners are Abiram Boyd, J. K. Smith, L. T. Boyd and J. A. Boyd. Mr. Abiram Boyd is President and J. K. Smith, Cashier. Its responsibility is placed at $200,000 and its line of deposits now exceeds $50,000.

CHURCHES.

A Baptist church known as the Anti-Mission Church was organized about 1835, the exact date not ascertained. There were but few members, and no stated preacher, but service was held at the homes of the members and in school-houses as circumstances dictated. This continued until 1859, when the Mission Baptist organized a society. They, like their predecessor, held their meetings for quite a while in the school-house. The second meeting, which culminated into a permanent church society, as above, met in Cambridge. Feb. 2, 1859, a new Baptist organization was completed. Ministers present on the occasion: M. G. Clark, of Indianapolis; M. Hazen, of Posey, and J. B. Simmons. Among the members at the time of the organization were: Samuel Hervey, Harvey Clark, Wilson Jackson, Avery Gates, John Marson, John Christian, Edward Webb, and their wives, Mary Hervey, Sarah Scott, Sarah Heritage, Minerva Williams. Avery Gates and John Marson were chosen Deacons; Edward Webb, clerk; Wilson Jackson, Treasurer.

The Rev. Robert Hunt was the first pastor and held one year, being succeeded by Caleb Blood, December, 1860. The church then had an occasional supply, among whom was the Rev. Samuel Henry. The Rev. A. S. Ames was the first regular pastor and came in May, 1866, and remained in charge two years. Dr. J. Richards, from Philadelphia, came next; then the Rev. J. B. Sharp, and following him the Rev. Henry B. Rupe. Previous to the stated supply the Revs. Dean and Baker were the principal preachers, holding service quite often. Noah Harper, of Franklin, Ind., remained pastor until the fall of 1882, when he retired, and since then they have had no regular minister. The Deacons are: Chas. Linberger and John Marson. The Sabbath-school, under the superintendency of John Marson, numbers sixty scholars. The church building is of brick, erected in 1866, and fully repaired in the summer of 1883.

The Congregation of the Christian Church in Cambridge City was organized Nov. 12, 1839, (?) by Prof. Samuel K. Hoshour. Joel Collins and Mr. Hoshour were chosen Elders; John Crum and Ebenezer Finney, Deacons. The number of members was about thirty, among whom were the following: Corbin Jackson, Samuel K. Hoshour, Moses Powell, Benj. Berry, Evan Young, Levi Leaky, David Crull, and Joel Collins, with their wives; John Crum and Ebenezer W. Finney. Joel Pennington and his wife were early members. June 9, 1858, Ebenezer W. Finney, Thomas Newby, and David Crull were chosen Trustees of the society. Their first preacher was Elder Samuel K. Hoshour, who served the church for many years. Preachers since: D. R. Van Buskirk, John B. Marshall, Frank W. Parker, Wm. Griggsby and Geo. W. Thompson. Meetings were held several years in the seminary building, which was afterward destroyed by fire. The society has since built a house of worship.

There has been no regular pastor since 1871, the Rev. G. W. Thompson being the last. The pulpit has been supplied by appointment of foreign pastors part of the time. The church is not in strong working order. There are some thirty-five members, but at this time no Sunday-school or prayer-meetings are held. With a good church building it seems that much good could be done, if the proper Christian spirit was exercised, and work take the place of sloth.

The Presbyterian Church of Cambridge was formed at Milton, Aug. 14, 1837, by Rev. Messrs. Graham and John A. Meeks, appointed by Oxford Presbytery. Its first members were: Samuel, Margaret and Alex. Braud, Julia Ann Walker, John Lincoln, George W., Catharine and Susannah Snyder, Henry Shull, David T. and Isabella Hileman, and Alenor Allen. Henry Shull, David T. Hileman, Samuel Brand and George W. Snyder were chosen Elders. Meetings were held for two years at Milton, after which the place of meeting was changed to Cambridge, where, for many years, only occasional preaching was had, and meetings were held in the churches of other societies and in school-houses. In 1853 the name of the Presbytery was changed to Whitewater; and the same year the name of the church was changed to Presbyterian church of Cambridge City. The present house of worship was built in 1858, on the corner of Railroad and Green streets, on a lot given to the society by Charles H. and Nathan Raymond. Since the first election of Elders, Nathan H. Raymond was chosen to that office, June 21, 1846; Henry B. Diuiddie, January, 1847; Edward Raymond, 1852.

There were several ministers who supplied the church up to 1852, when the Rev. J. J. Scott was elected, and was the first regular pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. Isaac W. Montfort in 1854, one-fourth of the time for three years; by the Rev. A. McFarland, one-half of the time, and then came Rev. H. M. Shockley, pastor from 1859 to 1861, followed by the Rev. Mr. Patton. Since the close of Rev. Patton's ministration the following ministers have officiated. Revs. J. Aughey, ——— Long, Isaac W. Montfort, ——— Coyer and J. W. Baily, the latter coming in May, 1882. The society now numbers 100 members, and has a well-attended and regular Sunday-school, with Wm. Hastings as Superintendent. Trustees of the church: L. Swiggett and Geo. W. Shultz; Elders, Samuel Harper and Mr. Palen; Deacons, Wm. Downey and Wm. Hastings.

St. Elizabeth Catholic Church.—Rev. Vincent Bacquelin was the first priest that visited Cambridge City or its vicinity, about the year 1842. At that time the canal establishing communication between Cincinnati and intervening points up to Hagerstown was being constructed, and Catholic laborers put up their shanties alongside of it. Father Bacquelin visited this point occasionally for two years, when he was replaced by the Rev. Michael O'Rourke, who resided at New Alsace, Dearborn County. Father Bacquelin came from St. Vincent's, Shelby County. Many are the anecdotes related about the charity and disinterestedness of good Father O'Rourke. He returned to Ireland about 1846, his health being shattered in consequence of constant exposure and fatigue.

The Rev. John Ryan, residing at Richmond, next visited Cambridge. Manufactories were built up and the Pan Handle Railroad constructed, inducing Catholics to settle here. Father Ryan bought a lot with a small frame house on it, the spot where the old church still stands. He converted the little house into a church. He departed from Richmond, about 1849, and was succeeded by the Rev. William Doyle. He visited Cambridge until 1853, residing at Richmond. After him the Rev. Henry Peters, resident at Connersville, attended this point. He built an addition to the little frame church, and bought the adjacent lot, with a small house, which stands to-day, and served as the priest's house for many years. He also opened a school, which flourished for a time but was discontinued after a lapse of two years. The missionary work assigned to Father Peters became too much for him, and Cambridge was then visited by the Rev. J. M. Villars, of Richmond, until about 1863.

Cambridge City now received its first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Joseph O'Reilly. He built the church on the foundation laid by Father Villars. The school established by him failed for want of a good teacher and sufficient accommodation. Father O'Reilly was removed in 1870. The Rev. D. J. McMullen, residing at Rushville, then visited Cambridge for a few months, when the Rev. Vincent de Vilas became the second resident pastor, remaining until April, 1871, when he suddenly departed from Cambridge and the diocese, with a burning desire to be martyred for the faith. In the fall of 1871 the Rev. H. Alerding was appointed for Cambridge, and found there a demoralized congregation, deeply in debt. The debts were paid, but upon his departure in the fall of 1874 a debt of about $1,000 existed, due on new ground bought in a more desirable location for a new church. His successor was the Rev. John B. Kelly, under whose administration the congregation flourished financially and religiously. He built on the new lot a neat church and parsonage, leaving after him a debt of only $3,000. Father Kelly was removed to a new field of labor at New Albany in the fall of 1881.

Rev. Andrew Oster, the present (the fifth resident) pastor, took charge in October, 1881. He has furnished the church with furnaces, new stations, new organ, new pews, and paid $500 of the debt. He was born in Mommenheim, Alsace, Germany, on Feb. 23, 1852; finished his classical and philosophical courses in Strasburg, and his theology at St. Meinrad, Spencer County, Ind. He was ordained by Bishop de St. Palais, at Indianapolis, as follows: Tonsure and Minor Orders, May 8; Sub-Deacon, May 22; Deacon, May 24; Priest, May 25, 1875. In July, 1875, he was sent as assistant to Holy Trinity Church, Evansville; in July, 1877, he became the assistant at the cathedral at Vincennes; in August, 1881, he was appointed pastor of St. Mark's, Perry County, and in October of the same year pastor of St. Elizabeth Church, Cambridge City.

Hagerstown has a few Catholic families, and they are visited once a month by the pastor of Cambridge City. Mass is celebrated in a private house.

The cemetery is located one mile north of the city, and contains two acres of ground. The value of the church property, including cemetery, is $11,000.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first Methodist Episcopal Society was organized by the Rev. Elijah Whitney in the year 1833, in what was then known as Vandalia, and meetings were then held in a little school-house until Cambridge City was laid out. When the seminary was erected, in 1839, the society held their meetings there regularly, but nearly all denominations had meetings in the building. Among the first members of the church were the Huttons, Drayers, Conklins, and others, a full list not being attainable. The church was built in the year 1845, of brick, and was located on Church street. It has been recently remodeled and put in good repair. The membership of the society had reached to 175 in the year 1855. Soon after there was a division in the church, and the seceding members employed a pastor of their own and held service in Port's Hall. This continued for about one year, when they concluded to return to the old church, but even then it did not, nor afterward, regain its former strength. It has gradually weakened, and has since been a station most of the time since the church was built, being for a short period connected with Centreville, and with Dublin at different times. The church has now about 100 members. Rev. J. H. Hull was pastor when the church was erected. It is now improving under the pastorate of the Rev. W. D. Parr, who is also superintending the Sunday-school.

ITEMS.

The Cambridge Academy was started in 1839, Samuel K. Hoshour, Principal. It was conducted seven years and destroyed by fire. It was not rebuilt. The ground upon which Cambridge City stands was originally owned by Thomas and Alexander Greer, and also by the owners of the Bennett Cox farm. The building of the canal gave Cambridge City its first big start. The freshet in the Whitewater River in 1849, destroying a large part of the canal, was its first heavy setback. The freshet of 1852-'3 was another set-back, the canal again being washed. The town declined after that as a business center. A little public spirit and personal energy and enterprise would materially advance it.

East Cambridge once bade fair to become a prosperous village, but it flourished only for a short time. The first merchant was Ira Lockey, as early as 1835. Other early merchants were Elliott, Hannah & Meredith, J. & I. Pennington, and Benjamin Conklin, who removed here from Vandalia in 1838.

DUBLIN.

The town of Dublin was laid out by Harmon Davis. The original plat, made out and signed by him as proprietor, was recorded Jan. 29, 1830. Additions have since been made as follows: First by Robert Murphy and Eli Brown, trustees for Dempsey Boswell & Sons; in 1846, by Albertson Chappell, Abraham Symonds, Jacob Custer, Benj. Griffin, John Whippo, J. P. Creager, Caleb W. Witt, Wm. McKimney; in 1837, by C. W. Witt; in 1838, by Samuel Schoolfield; in 1868, by Samuel Pierce and Mark H. Perkins. When the town was first laid out, there was not a building on the ground. The first house was a log house built by Isaac King, on what is known as Cook's Corner.

Of the early merchants, the first three came the same year (1831). The first was Samuel Nixon, who had bought the goods of Dempsey Boswell, who, as has been stated, had a store near town on the State road. The next was Thomas Owens, from Richmond, who had been in trade there, and who bought the little store building of Boswell, and moved it into town, on the lot now occupied by a Mr. Rockafellar for a bed spring manufactory. He was compelled, from ill health, to quit in a few months; returned to Richmond and died soon after. In December, Jacob Vore commenced his long mercantile career in Dublin. Nixon soon sold out to Boswell & Sons, who traded but a short time. Among the latter merchants were James Vanuxem & Son, Benjamin and Josiah Reynolds, E. H. Vanuxem, J. & B. Kirk, John Lebrick. Present merchants—Dry-goods: Dillon & Hill, Geo. McTaggart, Cyrus Swain, Jno. Rowe, — Swain, Solomon Crull, Solomon Custer and Thos. J. Layman. Drug-gists: Maxwell & White and Holland & Brown.

The first physician in the town was John Beatty, in 1831 or 1832, afterward (1834) Caleb W. Witt, and about the same time Lazarus E. Jones, and later, James Elder, Dr. Farnsworth, John M. Bell, John W. Smith and others. Present physicians: Samuel S. Boyd, Livingston B. Taylor, A. Southworth, Dr. Day, Dr. Hoshour, Chas. McTaggart and Wyman.

Wm. B. Reed opened a blacksmith shop in 1838, and continued except an absence of six years at Cambridge City and Centreville.

The first tavern was kept by Sam. Schoolfield, from Virginia. The present hotel by Mrs. Melinda King.

The first tannery in Dublin was established by Reese Ridgeway in 1832, who sold to Benj. Griffin in 1833, and he to Axum S. Elliott. Another tannery was established by Benj. Kirk, about the year 1844, and afterward owned by Hammond, Brown & Co. It has gone down.

A carding machine was in operation for a short time, Sam. Nixon and C. W. Witt alternate proprietors. It was of short duration.

A steam flouring mill was built in 1866, by Jacob Vore, Jesse Hiatt, and Paul Barnard. Jan. 1, 1867, Hiatt sold out to Wm. B. Mitchell; April 1, 1867, Vore sold to his son, Wm. H.; July 14, Barnard to Wm. H. Vore and Mitchell. In February, 1870, they sold to a Mr. Cox, of Indianapolis, who failed to make payment, and the mill again (November, 1870) came into the hands of Jacob and Wm. H. Vore.

The principal manufacturing establishment in Dublin was the Wayne Agricultural Works, which may be said to have organized in 1837, in a foundry established by John Whippo and Caleb W. and James Witt, near the site of the tannery of Hammond, Brown & Co. In 1839 Caswell and Pleasant Witt bought out Whippo; and in 1840 the four Witt brothers built the foundry and machine shop on the National road (Cumberland street). In 1845 they sold to James W. and Lovell L. Lawrence, who, a few years after, sold to Caleb W. Witt, Norton Davis, and Wm. Hollingsworth. After two or three years the concern passed to Samuel Binkley, L. L. Lawrence and N. Davis. Binkley sold his interest to Wilson Jones. After that the firm of Davis, Lawrence & Co. remained. They manufactured reapers and mowers, wheat-drills, scales, hay-rakes, etc. On the 1st of January, 1871, the concern was changed to a stock company. Its officers were Norton Davis, President; L. L. Lawrence, Vice-President; Wilson Jones, Actuary; A. L. Davis, Secretary; E. Lawrence, Treasurer. The number of hands employed was from sixty to seventy-five. Amount of sales, about $150,000 annually. In 1876 it was removed to Richmond, where nearly all the manufacturing business of Eastern Indiana seems to be tending.

The mechanics of Dublin were: John Crull, the first blacksmith, in 1831; Robert Way, Chas. Morgan, Albertson Chappell and Axum Elliott, all carpenters; Anselm, a wagon-maker of 1834, and also a shoemaker and tailor, whose names have been forgotten. At a later day came also a tin-smith. The first cabinet-makers were Peck & Matthew, in 1829, succeeded by Eli Pittman, and Thos. Allen in 1832, and also the same year Jesse Pike, who first worked for Allen as a journeyman and then started business for himself.

The first Justice of the Peace was Nathaniel Malin; second, Levi Eastridge; third, Jacob Chappell, a shoemaker.

SCHOOLS.

Among the first schools in Dublin was one taught by Miss Mary Schoolfield, who afterward became the wife of Dr. Jno. M. Bell.

A female seminary was started in 1835, by Caleb W. Witt, John Whippo and Jonathan P. Creager. A Miss Dickinson was employed as Principal, for several years. The schools of Dublin will be found more fully treated in the county history.

The Dublin Academy was established in the year 1837. It was a female school, but in 1868 it was discontinued and the building used for the public school, the old building being torn down and a new one erected, which was opened Jan. 1, 1868, as a public school, with an enrollment of 450 pupils.

CHURCHES.

It has forty-five members now, and ninety-five members have joined at different times. The church, like the town, is not improving much. There is a Sunday-school, under the superintendency of Wiley Brown, that is fairly prosperous. The present Elders of the church are Dr. S. S. Boyd and Sanford Wilson. Meetings were first held in other churches and the town hall. In 1869 they built their neat frame house on Dublin street. Their first Elders were: Enoch Nation, Lewis C. Wilson, Daniel R. Miller, a missionary for this State, who came by invitation and organized the society with six members, viz.: Jacob Custer, H. N. Brown, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Jacob Custer, Miss Sarah Snyder and Mrs. Sarah Waltz. The Rev. M. G. Mitchell came with Mr. Miller and was retained as regular preacher. A Sabbath-school was organized at the same time, and was well attended. The church has at present fifty-five members, and belongs to the Whitewater Association. There were several ministers, but the first one remembered was the Rev. J. B. Grandy, who was succeeded by Rev. T. S. Guthrie, who afterward was located at Muncie, Ind., then W. W. Curry and J. P. McLean, of Hamilton. The latter was an author of considerable note, having published works on Archæology and Geology. The Rev. R. N. Johns, the present State Missionary of the Universalist church, resides in Dublin.

The United Brethren formed a church in 1837. Among the members of the class were Caleb W. Caswell, James and Wm. Witt, John Whittington, and the wives of some or all of them. Their meetings were held for several years in a room fitted up in the Dublin Foundry. They built a brick church in 1846, which was destroyed by fire in 1856; and in 1857 their present house was built. The church has now a membership of 101, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. W. A. Oler. The Trustees are F. M. Demunbrun, Jos. Gray and Harrison Cook; Sabbath-school Superintendent, Dr. Geo. W. Cook. It belongs to the Dublin circuit, which includes three other appointments, two of which are in Henry County. This class sent out the first missionary of this denomination to Africa, viz.: Barton Witt, who died while a surgeon in the Union army.

The M. E. Church, colored, is the only denomination of colored churches. It is in a healthy condition, and retains fully the progress of the religious denominations of the town of Dublin.

EAST GERMANTOWN.

This town lies nearly one and one-half miles east of Cambridge, and, like Dublin on the west, and Milton on the south, may be called suburbs of Cambridge. There is little to be added to the history of the town beyond that given in "Young's History," which is inserted here, with such changes as was found necessary.

The town was laid out by George Shortridge, proprietor; John Beard, surveyor. It was named Georgetown, and the plat was recorded Aug. 1, 1827. The name was afterward changed to Germantown, and recorded under that name Sept. 14, 1832. The name of its postoffice is East Germantown, to distinguish it from an earlier one named Germantown in this State, and the town also seems to have taken the name of East Germantown.

Its Postmasters have been: Jacob Sowers, March 31, 1846; Theodore Riley, Sept. 29, 1851; Lucius A. West, Oct. 20, 1851; Peter Manning, April 15, 1852; Jacob Sowers, April 26, 1853; Henry B. Jamison, April 18, 1861; Philip S. Binkley, Feb. 14, 1865; Frederick Burkert, Nov. 7, 1865; Wesley Gipe.

Several additions have been made to the town: By Frederick Johnsonbaugh, Oct. 11, 1837, recorded in 1839; by Jacob Rieman, Oct. 11, 1837, recorded Jan. 23, 1841; by Jacob and John Baker, January, 1846; by Charles Morris, March 7, 1853.

The town lies on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad, and its main street, so-called, is the old National road. This latter divides the town nearly equally, there being about the same amount of territory built up north of the street as south. The railroad passes through the southern edge of the town.

Dr. Trout, from Ohio, about 1834, was the first physician. He remained but a few years. The second was Dr. E. Licket; the third, Dr. Hittel, from Ohio, and in 1870 and later, Joseph Weeks and Daniel Carpenter.

George Negly kept the first tavern about 1836, then in the west part of the town. The next was kept by Jacob Waltz, who built a house in 1837, and opened it in 1838. It was afterward kept by John Berry and others, and later by Jacob Gipe, who disposed of it in 1866, to Charles Morris, who sold it to William Goldman.

William Anderson was the first merchant in Germantown, about 1834; the second was John Binkley. In 1840 William Lawrence and Lackey & Johnsonbaugh had stores here; in 1841 and 1842, F. & M. Johnsonbaugh; in 1843-'4, John S. Wolf; in 1844, Jacob Gipe opened a store. Mr. Gipe has since been in trade at different times with T. J. Riley, H. T. Jamison and William Goldman, retiring finally in 1857. Business was continued by Mr. Jamison. M. Sowers, who commenced in 1856 with T. J. Riley, has since, as partner in the firms of Schoff & Sowers, Sowers & Brother, and Sowers & Riesor, been in the business, with the exception of one short interval, until May, 1871, when the store was purchased by Riesor & Rhule.

The first blacksmith in the town was Jacob Stevens, from Pennsylvania, about 1834. John Condo, from Pennsylvania, early bought of John Crum, on the state road near Germantown, forty acres of land with a blacksmith shop. After two years it was destroyed by fire and Condo built a shop in town. A year or two after it passed into the hands of Adam Condo; and the business was carried on by Adam and Peter Condo, near where the latter now carries on the blacksmithing and wagon-making business, at the east end of the town.

The manufacture of cast-steel plows was commenced many years ago, by Adam Condo, an early resident of Germantown. The business was afterward carried on by A. Condo & Son (Daniel Condo). New buildings of brick were erected in 1870, and since last winter the business has been conducted by A. Condo and Jacob Spence, his son-in-law (A. Condo & Co.). The establishment has twelve forges, employs about twenty-five men, and is capable of making about 2,500 plows a year. The works were leased Jan. 1, 1884, by the Kimm Bros., of Cambridge City, to manufacture a superior gang plow, the works being admirably adapted for that purpose, having ample power and all the machinery and conveniences for doing good work.

The village has two general stores, two grocery stores, two blacksmith shops, and other small stores and shops for such a town. The buildings are mostly frame. The hotel is called the "Walnut Level House." The postoffice for nearly a half century, or from 1835, has been in existence. Wesley Gipe is now Postmaster. It is a fourth-class office, sells some $380 worth of stamps per annum, but has not yet reached the dignity of a money-order office. The population of the town in 1860 was 465; in 1870, 536, and in 1880, 451, being a trifle less now than twenty years ago. Its assessed valuation in 1882 was: On real estate, $52,580; personal property, $36,350; total, $88,930. In 1882 it had but sixty-four polls, which would seem to show a further decline in population.

CHURCHES.

The Lutheran Church and Congregation, at East Germantown, composed mainly of Germans from Pennsylvania, was formed about the year 1824. Among their early members were the Waltzes, Condos, Keplers, and others. Meetings were for several years held in the log school-house. Their minister, Rev. Gruber, lived in Ohio, but came over at stated times to preach and perform other pastoral services. Two acres of ground a short distance north of town were purchased at $12 an acre, comprising the sites of the present house of worship, parsonage and cemetery. The meeting-house was built in 1833. There being among these Pennsylvania immigrants members of the German Reformed church, they joined with the Lutherans in building the house, and called a pastor of their own, S. Zumpey. The ministers preached alternately to the united congregation. This union continued but a few years, since which time the congregation has been solely under Lutheran pastorate. After Mr. Gruber they were served for a time by Missionaries Henkel, Heinaka and others; and since by regular pastors, beginning with Schnltz, who was succeeded by Eisency. They preached only in the German language. Next Julius Stirewalt and Isaac Hursh, who preached in German and English alternately. M. J. Stirewalt, preached exclusively in English. Rev. Miles J. Stirewalt, took charge as pastor in 1869, continuing until the spring of 1872. His successor was Rev. John H. Hunton, and remained nine months. Rev. John M. Long, of Franklin, Penn., served two years. Rev. Jacob Wesner served seven years. His successor was Rev. Miles J. Stirewalt, who is now the present pastor. The church has now of communing members seventy persons. The presiding officers; Elders, Henry Schwinn and Adam Bartsch. Deacons, Allen Wagner, Charles Bartsch and Phillip Frantzman; Trustees, Renben Bartsch, Samuel Stamm and Joseph Rothermel; Sunday-school Superintendent, present pastor assisted by John Bartsch.

Improvements: Addition to the parsonage, also new fence around the church grounds; two acres of land have been added to the cemetery grounds by the church and its friends. The addition to the cemetery grounds was purchased from Alonzo Boyd at a cost of $250 per acre.

The Evangelical, distinguished more particularly by the name of Albright, was organized about the year 1835, and built a meeting-house about 1842. Among its early members were: Adam Condo, Charles Knecht and wife, Barbara, wife of Jacob Gipe, John Dill and wife, Samuel Cochran, Jacob Rieman, William Clingenlinden and wife, Henry Erkhart and wife. Early ministers: Absalom B. Shafer, — Augenstein. The Rev. James Wales took charge in 1870, and during his pastorate, 1871, the church building was rebuilt and enlarged. Being almost wholly rebuilt it was again dedicated. Following the Rev. James Wales as pastor were Revs. Edward Evans, 1872-'3; S. S. Albert, 1874-'5; James Wales, one and one-half years; J. Stedke, one year; Amos Raber, two years; D. Oaks, one year; P. A. Orth, since April, 1873. Two classes worship in the same church together. The members number ninety-two, and the pupils of the Sabbath-school, 125. Edward Haas has charge as Superintendent. The Board of Trustees is composed of Adam Condo, George Neff and Peter Zeigler.

Mrs. Heacock died Sept. 16, 1875, leaving two children—John D., who married Margaret Legg, of Rush County, Ind., and is living on a farm in Henry County, Ind., and Ann, who is keeping house for her father. After coming to Henry County our subject during the summers worked on his farm, which consisted of eighty acres of timbered land, and in the winter seasons worked at the cabinet-maker's and undertaker's trades, until 1867, when he moved to Wayne County, locating in Dublin, where he has since followed the trade of cabinet-maker. He owns, in connection with his son, a fine farm in Henry County, besides a good residence and shop in Dublin. Wilson and his brother William spent the winter in making shoes, while his brothers Alexander and Richard worked at the cooper's trade in Milton for many years. Wilson continued to work at the shoe trade with success for four years, when he bought a small farm, for which he paid $3,000, where he farmed seven years. He then, in partnership with his brother Alexander, engaged at the coopering trade, which they carried on extensively several years. Mr. Jones then disposed of his interest and, in company with Jerry Snofford and Jacob Kimmel, purchased a saw and flouring mill, which they ran on a large scale. At the same time Mr. Jones was associated with Joseph Shissler in the dry-goods business. After leaving Milton Mr. Jones purchased a third interest in the Dublin foundry, being connected with it eleven years, when it was changed to the Wayne Agricultural Works of Richmond.

Mr. Jones was married in 1835 to Margaret Shissler, a native of Lancaster County, Pa., born March 24, 1813. They have had five daughters—Henrietta, married Samuel Greer, and died in 1867; Mary A., wife of John Hagerman, of Dublin; Rebecca J., wife of S. P. During his connection with the church he was a most active worker, and nearly 200 persons were added to the church. During his stay in Kansas he took an active part in the prohibition amendment. In the summer of 1880 he returned to Wayne County and purchased the Wilson farm, containing 261 acres of choice land, with good farm buildings, since which time he has followed farming. In 1882 Mr. Keiser engaged in the manufacture of brick, and is carrying on an extensive business in connection with his farming pursuits. He was married in 1854 to Matilda, daughter of Hiram Ervin. Benjamin G. Kelley was born March 23, 1810, in Warren, Grafton Co., N. H., where he lived and received a common-school education. When about twenty-two years of age he borrowed money enough to go to South Reading, Mass., where he engaged with Burrage Yale to drive a peddler's wagon from house to house, which he did for some time, and was then head clerk in his tinware manufactory for several years. While in Mr. Yale's employ he was married to Miss Mary C. Glines. The first winter after their marriage he cut hoop-poles, and carried them upon his shoulders, some of them half a mile, and then drew them five miles and exchanged them for the first set of queen's-ware they had. He also cut wood and drew it eight miles, receiving $1.50 per cord, with which he bought his wife a new cloak and boots. The following spring he went to farming in Vermont, which he continued for several years. He then, in company with his brother, engaged in the manufacture of tinware in Cambridgeport, Mass., sometimes employing twenty men to sell their goods on the road. He was thus engaged about fifteen years, when the business was abandoned, after which he ran a stove store in Buffalo, N. Y., three years, and from there moved to Covington, Ky., where he became general agent for the Buffalo Scale Company. In consequence of the war he moved to Dublin, Ind., in 1861, but remained in the employ of the company eight or ten years, and proved himself to be an excellent salesman, traveling over different States. During the time he was employed by the Buffalo Scale Company, he connected himself with Gates & Pray, who carried on the livery and feed business, and moved to Indianapolis in 1865, but in 1868 he moved back to Dublin. In 1871 the Wayne Agricultural Company was organized, and Mr. Kelly took stock and was made one of the Directors. In 1875 the company moved to Richmond, Ind. He still holds his stock and directorship. He retained his interest with Gates & Pray until 1876. Mr. Kelley's first wife had three daughters—Sarah F., Mary G. and Hannah C. His second wife was Eliza W. Thayer (deceased). He was married a third time, to Mrs. Mary E. B. Striblen, daughter of Adam Haugh, Esq., of Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley are members of the Christian church.

John Kepler, whose long and successful career as a business man has made his name well known in Wayne County, was born in Frederick County, Md., Jan. 24, 1808, and is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Shafer) Kepler. His father, a native of Maryland, removed with his family to Green County, Pa., in 1815, and thence, in the spring of 1820, to Wayne County, Ind. Here he rented a grist-mill, on Green's Fork, for one year, during which time he bought a farm about three miles south of Washington, where he resided until his death in 1847. His wife died in 1835. They had seven children—John, Peter, Andrew T., Margaret, who married Adam Rader and died in 1881; Catharine, wife of Philander Boyd, of Greenfield, Ind., and two who died in infancy. John Kepler, the subject of this notice, was reared on a farm and received his education in the common schools. He came to Indiana with his parents, and remained with them until 1828. On Dec. 25 of that year he married Anna, daughter of Valentine Foland, and engaged in business for himself by renting a farm for two years. Afterward he borrowed $500 from his father and purchased a small farm for $1,000. Working diligently, energetically and economically, at the end of fifteen years he had not only paid the debt on his farm but had been able to purchase two adjoining farms, thus becoming the possessor of 480 acres of land. He then moved to the farm on which his father had settled, and for several years was extensively engaged in farming and dealing in stock, at the same time running a mill for about four years and carrying on the business of pork-packing for one year. Though in the main successful, he met with some reverses; his grist-mill little more than paid expenses during the first two years, and the pork business was unprofitable. He finally became one of the principal stockholders and a Director of the First National Bank of Cambridge City, which at that time had a capital of $300,000. Soon after some complications arose in the affairs of the bank and its officers resigned. Good management was necessary in order to adjust matters properly, and, at the earnest request of the stockholders, Mr. Kepler accepted the presidency of the institution. He served over two years in this position, beginning in 1874, and in the meantime brought about order and put the bank on a good basis. He then resigned, wishing to give his whole time to his large private business interests. For four or five years next succeeding he carried on the mercantile business. He has since devoted his time principally to the loan and collection business, having his office in Cambridge City. The panic of 1873 resulted in considerable losses to Mr. Kepler, who, to oblige his friends and neighbors, often became surety for them. From 1873 to 1876 he had upward of $23,000 to pay, simply through the financial unsoundness of those for whom he was bondsman. In spite of all reverses, many of which would have discouraged a less energetic man, Mr. Kepler, through wise management and marked business ability, has succeeded in gaining a competency ample for all the wants of his declining years. He is possessed of a sound, observing mind, good judgment, energy and force of character, and to these qualities his success in life is due. He has never aspired to public office nor been ambitious of distinction in any way, and remains to-day, as he always has been, a quiet, social, unostentatious citizen. With his family he has dealt liberally, having given an average of 300 acres of land, or land and money, to the value of $20,000, to each of five children. Mr. Kepler's first wife died in 1838. She was the mother of two children—one who died when fifteen months old, and Mary E., wife of William Black, of Washington,

Peter Rippler

Mary M. Harper

Ind. In 1841 he married Angeline Danner, a native of Frederick County, Md. She died in 1883. Of this union, seven children were born, four of whom survive—Caroline Z., widow of Henry A. Shroyer; Orestes Alcander; Manzella, wife of Miles Conaway, and Alonzo P. Those deceased are—Margaret E., who was married to George Crull and died in January, 1864; Vierling K., and one who died in infancy. April 3, 1884, Mr. Kepler married Ella Clark, a native of Warren County, Ohio, born March 21, 1851, and a daughter of R. and Harriet (McClellan) Clark, who moved to Wayne County in 1860 and located in Jacksonburg, where they still reside.

John H. Kepler was born Aug. 23, 1841, near Jacksonburg, Wayne Co., Ind., a son of Peter and Mary Kepler, natives of Maryland and Virginia respectively. Their children are—Robert E. Lee, William W., Mary A., Harry T. and Della Texas. After his marriage Mr. Kepler settled on the old homestead, his father having purchased another farm to which he removed. He has followed farming and stock-raising through life and now owns 180 acres of choice land, lying on the west fork of the White-water and Simon's Creek. He also owns a farm of 250 acres in Texas, most of which is under cultivation. He moved to his present home, which is known as the Bowmen farm, in 1878. He is a member of Blue Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., Cambridge City. Mrs. Kepler died July 26, 1883.

Peter Kepler was born Dec. 16, 1809, in Fredrick County, Md., and when six years of age moved with his parents to Green County, Pa. In 1820 he came to Wayne County, Ind., floating down the Ohio River to Cincinnati in a flat-boat, with his father, Peter Kepler, and family, including Mathias Kepler, his grandfather. His father rented the Treadway and Shortridge mill for a year, and during the year bought a farm of 160 acres which he cleared and cultivated, residing there until his death in 1847. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Shafer, was a native of Maryland, and died in Wayne County in 1835. They had seven children, four still living. Peter Kepler was married August 25, 1831, to Mary M., daughter of George and Elizabeth Rader, who came from Virginia to Indiana in 1830, in wagons. They reared a family of three children—Charlotte A., wife of Wesley Ellis, now deceased; John H. and George T. Mr. Kepler soon after marriage moved to a farm near Jacksonburg, where they resided five years when he sold his farm and purchased one near Green's Fork, residing on it several years hauling flour and pork from the farm to Cincinnati in wagons. He also bought the William Minnick farm where he lived until 1870 when he purchased property in East Germantown, where he still farms on a small scale. He has accumulated considerable property which he has divided among his children, reserving enough for himself and wife to live on. He has been a member of the Odd Fellow's fraternity for many years. He attends the Lutheran church but belongs to no denomination.

Mary Magdaline (Rader) Kepler, whose portrait and that of her husband appears between pages 574 and 575, and one of the two now living children of George and Elizabeth (Ater) Rader, was born in Rockingham County, Va., Nov. 1, 1816, where she obtained her education in German, and moved by wagons to Wayne County, Ind., in 1830, with her parents, three brothers and four sisters, and in 1831, was married to Peter Kepler, and with him set to work, with a will and a determination to live a good life, help make a living, and lay up, if possible, a competence for old age, all of which and more has fully been accomplished. She assisted at the clearing and home-building, which was common for women in those days, besides spinning, weaving and making the clothing for the family. It was years of toil, but they were years of success, good-health and happiness. In later years she was butted down by a pet ram, breaking her leg in the fall, which causes her some pain to this day, interfering somewhat in her declining years with her quiet enjoyment of life, so well earned and so richly deserved.

Ah!—life is not a mockery!
How sweet to comprehend,
That in existence there is design,
That in death all does not end.

Richard H. Kimes was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, June 25, 1838, a son of William C. Kimes came to Indiana with his family in 1841 and settled on a farm near Centreville, on Green's Fork, where he resided many years, and at the same time operated a saw-mill. He disposed of his mill property, and in 1854 purchased the Jacob Myers farm on Simon's Creek, where he followed farming till his death in 1880. He had been almost an invalid for several years previous, caused by a stroke of paralysis. His widow still survives and is making her home with our subject. Richard H. attended the common schools in early life, and completed his education at the high school at Dublin. He then taught school several terms, since which he devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. He attends to his farm of 150 acres near Hagerstown and the farm of 200 acres where he at present resides. Mrs. Kimes is a member of the Evangelical church at Pleasant Hill. He died in 1863, and his wife's death occurred in 1869. They were the parents of thirteen children, eight still living. Joseph Kimmel followed farming till after attaining his majority. He was then engaged in a brewery ten years, after which he engaged in shipping malt to distant cities and dealing largely in grain. He also carries on farming, having 300 acres of valuable land lying on the Walnut Level. He was married in 1852 to Amanda Warmon, of Wayne County, and a daughter of Enoch Warmon. Of their three children two are living—Medoa and Mary V. Mr. Kimmel and brothers are the original patentees of Kimmel's Gang Plow.

Henry Clay Meredith was born in Wayne County, Ind., in 1843, and died in Cambridge City, July 5, 1882. To short-horn breeders, not only of Indiana but of the whole country, the name of Meredith is familiar. Father and son have been associated with the improvement of live-stock and the development of the agricultural interests of Indiana from the earliest days. For more than a quarter of a century the Merediths were exhibitors at the State and other prominent fairs of the country, and in all important matters of internal improvement they lent a helping hand, but especially were their efforts devoted to the encouragement and fostering of all that pertained to the farming interest. The father of our subject,

General Solomon Meredith, came to Wayne County, Ind., from North Carolina, in 1829. Here, a penniless boy, he began the battle of life by cutting cord-wood, earning the princely sum, as he then thought, of $6 per month. Here he grew to manhood, winning and holding the confidence of his fellow citizens, and receiving at their hands successively the offices of Sheriff, County Clerk, Representative and United States Marshal. And here, in later years, he organized and led away to the grim fields of war the first contingents of old Wayne and adjoining counties, which, under his stalwart leadership, were destined, upon the classic fields of Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, South Mountain, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, to win imperishable renown, and render forever famous the achievements of the "Old Iron Brigade." Our subject in his boyhood received the advantages of a common-school education, and in 1863, having prepared himself for a collegiate course, entered the freshman class of the State University at Bloomington, but shortly afterward volunteered as an aid on his father's staff, who was then serving in the Department of the West. He remained in the army a short time and then returned to college and graduated in 1867. In the meantime General Meredith had been appointed Surveyor-General of Montana Territory, and the two years following his graduation Henry passed with his father, performing the arduous duties of a Government Surveyor in the wild regions of the Northwest. In 1869 he returned to Cambridge City and entered upon a journalistic life, establishing the Cambridge City Tribune, which he ably conducted till 1872, when he disposed of his property and engaged with his father in breeding short-horn cattle, Southdown sheep, and several improved varieties of hogs. Under their management the Oakland herd achieved a wide reputation, and their public sales realized high prices, many of their animals going to distant States to form the nuclei of other herds, while several were sent to England at high figures. The firm was dissolved in 1875 by the death of General Meredith, Captain Meredith subsequently continuing the business alone. In their breeding the Merediths were not wedded to any particular strains of blood, but added to their herd from time to time such animals from the herds of other breeders as, in their judgment, were worthy to be perpetuated, and upon these they crossed bulls of good individual merit and well established pedigree. In 1880 Captain Meredith was elected to represent his county in the General Assembly and served with distinction, taking special interest in all measures relating to agricultural questions. He was a member of the State Board of Agriculture several years, and was President of the society at the time of his death. He was married in 1870 to Virginia, daughter of Hon. Austin B. Claypool, of Connersville, a most estimable lady, who is his sole representative, no children having been born to them. In his social relations Captain Meredith was peculiarly happy. His friends were legion. His kindly sympathies took in the whole world, and no one who crossed the threshold of the old home that was proverbial for its hospitality, and received the grasp of his hand in greeting, but felt the genuineness of his welcome. He was faithful in his duties as a man and a citizen, loyal in his friendships, generous in his sympathies, whole-souled, broad-hearted, and clear-headed. In his death the agricultural and live-stock interests, of Indiana especially, sustained an irreparable loss; for these interests constituted his chosen field of labor, and he had entered upon his work with a rare enthusiasm, aided by an intelligence that promised the best results for the cause he espoused.

It is probable that her native State was Pennsylvania, and moved to Montgomery County, Ky., in an early day. She was born July 4, 1774, and died Dec. 7, 1824, in Chillicothe, Ohio, when the subject of this sketch was nearly five years old. John G. She received the advantages of a liberal education, and thorough education in music by some of the best teachers, and devotes most of her time in giving instruction on the piano. May 29, 1878, she was married to Garrison P. Austin, who was a resident and engaged in business in Cambridge City, and there died April 3, 1881. They had one daughter—Catharine Rose Austin, who was born March 8, 1880. Mrs. Austin, with her daughter and step-daughter, Amy R. Austin, makes her home with Mr. Smith, at the old home residence on Church street, which he built in 1844. From the spring of 1854 to March, 1861, Mr. Smith served as general clerk and bookkeeper in the store of Morrison & Newby, who did an extensive business in groceries, leather, grain, etc., and in shipping of produce, etc., on the W. Albert Southworth, physician and surgeon, was born in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1838, being the youngest of six children. His parents, Apollas and Deborah Southworth, were born, the former in Stoughton, Mass., in 1792, the latter in Canton, Mass., 1796, being descendants of the old Puritanic stock which has made the Western Reserve nationally famous for its Republican principles. They left their native home and suffered all the privations incident to a rigorous winter and spring in traveling hundreds of miles with an ox team, at times through an almost unbroken forest, to the now populous city of Cleveland, on the shore of Lake Erie, and on the lovely banks of the beautiful Cuyahoga, in Cuyahoga Co., Ohio. Both are now deceased, the former at the advanced age of eighty-six, and the latter at the age of seventy-five years. Our subject received the rudiments of his education at the district school; from there he went to Baldwin University, Berea, Ohio. His health failing him, he resorted to the invigorating air of the broad prairies of the West, where he engaged in farming for several years. Returning, he again entered school and qualified himself for teaching, which he pursued for several years, then turned his attention to the study of medicine. He has been a life reader of hydropathy and hygiene, and a student one session in the Hydropathic Medical College in New York City. Being imbued with the principles of progressive medicine, he allied himself to a noted practitioner of homeopathy, Dr. Disbro, of Berea, Ohio, where he prosecuted his studies in the intervals of the college sessions and graduated with honor at the Cleveland Homeopathic Medical College in the spring of 1869. William P. Stahr.—Few men, with the limited advantages for attaining success in life that have fallen to the lot of the subject of this notice, have made better use of their opportunities, or displayed greater energy, persistence, and courage than Mr. Stahr. He was born in Germany, Dec. 2, 1839. His father was a schoolmaster, who, after pursuing his avocation faithfully for fifty years, was pensioned and honorably discharged by the Government; he died in 1863. William P. passed his boyhood at home, caring for a few acres of land owned by his father, until March 10, 1858, when he left his native country for America, contrary to the wishes of his father, though favored in his ambition by his mother. Arriving in New York April 26, 1858, a few days later he left the city for La Crosse, Wis., where he was engaged as a farm laborer for one year. Becoming weary of the hardships of life in the "wild west" in May, 1859, he left for Indiana, arriving in Cambridge City on the 13th. Thence he proceeded to Jacksonburg, where his cousin lived, walking and carrying about seventy-five pounds of baggage upon his back. He soon after entered the employ of John Kepler, a leading farmer, with whom he remained until 1862. His wages were $10 per month during the first year, $12 the next, and $14 the third. He next worked a year for Wm. Black. While working for Kepler and Black he gained a thorough knowledge of farm work, acquired the English language almost unconsciously and found time to attend school about three months. He was next engaged in November, 1863, as a driver for H. Ingerman, brewer, of Cambridge City, at $28 per month. Proving his aptitude for business by his diligence and quickness, he was soon promoted by his employer to a better position and his salary was advanced until he received $60 per month. He remained in the brewery until 1866, then purchased a small grocery for $750. A few months later he was robbed of two watches and a considerable sum of money. He next formed a partnership with J. Wise, baker and grocer, which did not long continue. In 1867 and 1868 he was again employed by the owners of the brewery, the property having changed hands. In March, 1868, he bought a lot of ground with a story and a half house and a one story back building upon it and engaged in the business of baker and confectioner. In 1869, April 30, he was robbed of $225. In 1871, having prospered in business, he removed the old building on his lot and erected a two-story brick structure. To this building he added a third story in 1875, then beginning the hotel business. He has since been making additions and improvements almost constantly, building an addition to the east end of the house in 1880, and to the west end in 1883. Stahr's Central Hotel is now one of the largest and best business buildings in the town, and its enterprising proprietor has the satisfaction of having earned and reared it himself, little by little. #### METES AND BOUNDS, ORGANIZATION.

Jefferson Township lies on the west line of the county, and north of the central part. It is bounded on the north by Dalton and a part of Perry townships; on the east, by Perry, Clay and Harrison; south, by Harrison and Jackson, and west by Henry County. It is six miles east and west, and five miles north and south less two sections on the south tier in the southeast corner of the township. This gives it twenty-eight square miles of land, or in acres, 17,920. Of this number of acres 17,162.78 is found on the assessment roll without counting Hagerstown, and is assessed as follows: Real estate, 1882, $658,995; personal property, $264,623, a total of $923,578. Hagerstown, realty, $133,990; Hagerstown, personal, $85,720; total valuation of township, $1,143,288. The township poll number, 198; Hagerstown poll number, 164; total vote, 362.

The township was organized in March, 1834, and the voting precinct was located at Hagerstown. It is a good agricultural township, well watered, and in the valleys of the streams coursing through its territory can be found a superior quality of arable land, in fact unsurpassed anywhere. The West Branch of the Whitewater nearly divides it in two equal parts, running as it does nearly through the center of the township from north to south. On the east is Martindale's Creek, flowing in a southerly course, and on the west Nettle Creek, coming into the township near the northwest corner and flowing in a southwesterly course, empties into the West Branch. Below this are two other small streams flowing into the West Branch. Thus it may be said to be well watered, and a fine stock-raising section.

ITS SETTLEMENT.

The years in which most of the early settlers made their settlements, is not remembered, says "Young's History," by any of the oldest inhabitants. As the sale of the lands west of the Twelve Mile Purchase did not commence until 1822, it is presumed that most of the early settlements were made in the eastern part of the township, many of them soon after the peace of 1814-'15. Some, however, settled on the west side of the line of the Purchase several years before the lands were offered for sale. Samuel Baldrige, from Kentucky, unmarried, settled, in January, 1814, three miles east of Hagerstown, and was one of the earliest settlers in Jefferson Township. Jonathan Platts, from New Jersey, settled early one and one-half miles southeast of town. He was an early Justice of the Peace, and at several sessions President of the Board of Justices, which, from 1824 to 1828, was substituted for the three county commissioners; and from 1829, for several years, a county commissioner. Philip Baltimore settled early one mile east of the town. Isaac Pierce, from Tennessee, settled one and one-half miles northeast from Hagerstown.

David and Aaron Miller, brothers, settled three and one-half miles southeast of Hagerstown, on Martindale's Creek, and removed afterward from the county. Both were German Baptist preachers. George Castator was an early settler, a cabinet-maker. Benjamin Parsons, from New Jersey, settled about 1813, two miles east of town, and died in 1864. Five of his children—Sarah, wife of Frederick Jenks; Amos, who married Jane Matchett; Martha, wife of Samuel Newcomb; and Harriet, wife of John Thornburg—reside in the township. John Miller, and afterward his brothers Jacob and Samuel, settled two miles southeast of town. Jacob had served in the war of 1812, and was under General Hull at the surrender at Detroit. Among others who settled southeast of the town, were Daniel Petty, who, about the year 1832, settled on land bought of Aaron Miller.

Joseph Bowen, a native of Delaware, from Lebanon, Ohio, in 1822, settled one and a half miles east of town; was a Methodist preacher; died in 1863; land now owned by Rebecca E. Bowen, a granddaughter. Wm. Brown settled early east of town.

Among the other early settlers in and around Hagerstown were: Samuel Reprogle, Isaac Stonebraker, David Burkett, Jacob Crull, John Crull, Henry Crull, Isaac Pierce, Jos. Manifold, Hugh Allen, Abraham Reprogle, David Hardman, a German Baptist preacher, Geo. Stonebraker, Wm. Brumback, Samuel Pollard, Hugh Murphy and Isaac McLanahan.

Benj. Parson, spoken of above, was the only man who had a grindstone in the whole settlement, and he was visited daily, not only by his neighbors but by the Indians, to sharpen their knives and hatchets or tomahawks.

There was also Samuel Taylor, a Baptist preacher, Jesse Thornburg, Jno. Caster and Philip Baltimore, all who came prior to 1820, being in the older settled portions of the township.

In the northeast part of the township, David, Andrew and Michael Fouts settled.

In the southwest part of the township the following named persons were early settlers: Adam Stonbraker, one mile south of town; Wm. Murray, who built a carding-machine and a saw-mill, and afterward a woolen factory. A saw-mill is still there, the property owned by his heirs. Wm. Felton, a native of Pennsylvania, from Ohio, about the year 1821, near town; built a saw-mill and a corn-cracker. He died there at a great age. His wife also died there. Moses Miller settled near the Jackson line. Abel Johnson and Jacob Dilling, John Lail, Wm. Campbell, from Kentucky; Isaac Zook, Wm. Jennings, on the west side; Samuel Eiler, Jonas Hoover, one mile west of Hagerstown; Samuel Zook, Thos. Cooper and Wm. Brown. Following up the west side to the northwest section of the township quite a settlement was formed between 1820 and 1830—sturdy farmers who cultivated their farms and became worthy citizens of the county. Among these were: John Small, from North Carolina; Jonas Harris, Enos Boyd, Abraham Teeter, Jacob Heaston, all came in 1823, or prior to that time.

Zachariah Albaugh, a native of Maryland, from Ohio, in 1826, settled in the northwest part of the township, where he died March 6, 1871, aged seventy-six. He had been a German Baptist minister since 1836.

John Street settled two and a half miles northwest of town; Wm. McLucas, one and a half miles north from town; Martin Keever, on land now owned by his heirs. John Lewis settled two miles north; Absalom Cornelius, from Virginia; Joseph Stover entered the lands now owned by Samuel G. Newcomb and David Brown; Daniel Wagner, near and northwest of town. John Ritter, from Ohio, settled three miles east of Hagerstown. Peter Hardman, from Ohio, settled in the township; and David Wagner, from Ohio, settled one mile north of Hagerstown.

Samuel Gibson came with his father from Tennessee, in the year 1814 or 1815, and settled in the east part of Jefferson, and several years after removed to Madison County.

John McCullough, from Pennsylvania in 1820, settled in the east part of the township, where he died in 1840, aged forty-six years.

Eli Petty, son of Daniel, born in Winchester, came to Jefferson in 1831.

Martin Shultz, from Pennsylvania, settled in 1831, near Hagerstown.

William Baker was an early Justice of the Peace, the first in the township, and Thomas Burns the next.

Members of the Legislature who have been elected from this township were: Jonathan Platts, Joseph Hawkins, Wesley Williamson, Wm. C. Bowen.

Daniel Burkett, from Pennsylvania, built the first grist-mill one mile below town, on Nettle Creek. Another was built by William Brumback about a mile above town, and has passed through several hands. About the year 1847 George Gillespie bought the woolen factory previously owned by Edmund Taylor, and converted it into a flouring mill. Its capacity is about 150 barrels per day. An oil-mill and a clover-huller, and later a saw-mill, were built by Abraham Teeter, just above town, on West River. In 1864 the property was purchased by R. & F. G. Newcomb, who rebuilt the mill in 1867. A saw-mill was built at an early day, by Fred-eric and Peter Waltz, near the line of the township. Mark E. Reeves afterward built on this power a grist-mill. Samuel Burkett built in 1870, in town, a steam saw-mill. A saw-mill was built two miles above town, on or near the site of Teeter's grist-mill, by John Small.

The first temperance society in the township, and one of the earliest in the county, was formed about the year 1831, in a log school-house on the farm of Jonathan Shaw, now owned by Eli Petty. Among its members were Samuel Taylor, a Baptist minister; Joseph Bowen, a Methodist minister; Jonathan Platts, Jonathan Shaw, Isaac Pierce, Thomas Pierce, Andrew Pierce, Sarah Cheesman, Joel, Jeremiah, and William Bowen, Sarah and David Platts.

The first Sabbath-school in the township was taught in the same school-house. It was formed and conducted by Joseph Bowen, Jonathan Platts, Jonathan Shaw, Elizabeth Pierce and others.

The population of the township was: In 1850, 1,723; in 1860, 1,752; in 1870, 1,785; and in 1880, 2,007. Most of this growth has been in the farming interest.

CHURCHES.

Baptist Church, Salem.—This church is located three and a half miles east of Hagerstown, was founded in 1817 by the earliest settlers, and continues to exert a wide-spread influence for good in the township. In 1855 the society had grown to the number of forty members, and it was at one time the largest denomination in the township, at that time under the pastoral care of Elder Wm. Thompson. Among the old members of the society were James and John Martindale, Henry Garrett and Benj. Guffey. Rev. Geo. Harlan succeeded Elder Thompson, and he was successively followed by Revs. Jas. McDowell and Jas. Martindale, the latter since 1867. The pastor between 1820 and 1830 was the Rev. Samuel Taylor. Their first place of worship was a log cabin followed by two frame churches, the latter still in use. They have no Sunday-school. Membership, thirty-one.

Olive Branch M. E. Church.—This church was organized in 1825 at the house of Samuel Pollard, and was continued there most of the time until a frame church building was erected in 1836, about two and one-half miles northeast of Hagerstown. Unfortunately this church was burned by an incendiary fire in 1837. The following year the present brick edifice was erected. The first Methodist preacher in the township was Russell Bigelow, who is remembered as early as 1822. Then there were the Revs. John Strange, Jas. Havens, George Gatch, John C. Smith, Joseph Tarkington, Allen Wiley, and Robert Burns, who also preached in early days. The Rev. R. Bigelow preached in the house of Joseph Bowen. The original members were: Jonathan Shaw and a part of his family, Jos. Bowen and family, John Conway and family, Jas. Hartup and family, Joseph Manifold, and Isaac Pierce and family. At one time there were eighty-five members, with Wm. C. Bowen as Class-leader. Its present membership is thirty. Joel Bowen was the first Class-leader. In 1842 the church split owing to conflicting opinions on the slavery question. About one-half left and formed a Wesleyan society headed by Jonathan Shaw and others. Nathan D. Shackelford is the present pastor and the church though not numerous is united and strong.

HAGERSTOWN.

Jacob Ulrich, in the year 1830, laid off a few lots, and called it Elizabethtown. It did not flourish. Greenbury Savoy passed over the ground a short time before, and some years later, 1839, returned to make it his home. The only evidence of a town was a small store on the roadside near where the Teeter Mill now stands, and on the old road from Richmond to New Castle.

On March 8, 1832, Jacob Ulrich and Jonas Harris, whose land joined, laid out the town and had it platted, the survey being recorded Nov. 15, 1832.

On Oct. 15, 1838, Messrs. J. Ulrich, Henry Herman and George Gillespie & Co. platted an addition to the town. In 1839 it boasted of three stores, James Reeves, now of Richmond, being the proprietor of one of them; two blacksmith shops, the first one started being owned by David Stonebraker, and the other by Peter Cable; one shoemaker shop, one saddle and harness shop, one tin shop, an hotel or tavern, and about fifteen families.

The original plat lies in the center of the present town, and was composed of four blocks and two one-half blocks. Besides the addition of Oct. 15, 1838, the following additions have been added to the original plats.

Dec. 25, 1838, Wolf, Meyers & Walter's addition.

Oct. 18, 1844, Ulrich & Gillespie's first addition.

May 2, 1845, Gillespie & Davis' addition.

Nov. 10, 1848, Ulrich & Gillespie's second addition.

March 14, 1846, Lewis L. Lesh's addition.

March 14, 1846, Hyatt, Sinks & Lesh's addition.

It remained thus until Sept. 2, 1875, when Canaday and others also platted additions to the town, all of which composes the present area of Hagerstown.

The first wagon-maker was David Weaver, and he made a good, substantial article. Jos. Arment was the first cabinet-maker; also James Walker in the same line, a few years later.

The first physicians were: Thomas J. Buchanan and G. G. Winchell, partners, the latter residing in Hagerstown; Buchanan, a few miles distant in Henry County. In 1835 Dr. B. removed to town in the place of Dr. Winchell, who had left, and in 1840 returned, and practiced there for several years. Dr. Augustus Weaver came about 1837; John Clymer, 1840; Calvin West, 1842 or 1843, and died here; Dr. Spencer, 1847; Dr. Widiken, 1850.

The first lawyer is said to have been John Davidson; the second, John Curtis; later, David Reed.

The first store was kept by Levi Antrim, about 1820, in a hewed-log house, yet standing, near Newcomb's grist-mill. An early store is said to have been kept by David Hardman, and another below town, by Hastings. Wm. Baker bought out Antrim in 1831. James Gray came about 1833; Joseph Hawkins soon after. Mark E. and James E. Reeves, in 1836, bought out Hawkins, and James took charge of the store; sold his interest to Mark in 1840, when Mark came. Among the large number who followed were A. B. Knode, Wm. Lewis, Gillespie & Co., Wm. Arnold, Christopher Taylor.

There were several other kinds of business started here in later years, but after a few years, becoming unprofitable, have disappeared.

Hagerstown is located at the northern terminus of the Whitewater Canal, on the Whitewater Valley Railroad and the Richmond & Chicago Division of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway, sixteen miles from Richmond.

In the year 1874 the town had one Christian, one Methodist, one Presbyterian and a German Baptist church, and the Hagerstown Academy. There were also four dry-goods stores, three drug stores, one hardware, one stove, one tinware, and six grocery stores, one planing-mill, one machine shop and a barrel factory. There were also one Odd Fellows' Lodge, one Encampment, and one Masonic Lodge.

The mercantile interests were represented as follows: Dry goods—Beck & Stonebraker, Stonebraker & Brumback, Nehemiah Cheesman, D. P. Slifer. Druggists—Walker & Dilling. Allen & Co., Walter Rogers. Hardware—H. Shiveley & Co. Stoves and tinware—E. Brown. Grocers—Wm. Dolley, Wilson Thornburg, H. D. Root, H. Lontz, John Lontz, Hannibal Matthews.

BUSINESS INTERESTS OF 1884.

They have two hotels, the Newcomb House and the Hinman House, one graded school, one bank, four churches, one Masonic lodge, one Odd Fellows lodge, one G. A. R. post, two livery stables, five dry-goods stores, seven groceries, three hardware stores, three drug stores, four boot and shoe stores, with the usual complement of other industries; one carriage manufactory, employing six hands; one newspaper, the Exponent; one grist-mill, both by steam and water-power. This mill was first erected by Edmund Taylor as a woolen-mill in the year 1847, and was, in 1850, converted into a flouring mill by Geo. Gillespie. It is now owned by Zachariah Teeter, having the past year been thoroughly remodeled and is now considered one of the best mills in Eastern Indiana. The first house erected in Hagerstown was put up by Jesse and Henry Harris, sons of Jonas. David Platt came next. The farmers and others who settled around there were from the vicinity of Hagerstown, Md., and they gave this name to the village when platting. The postoffice is an old one, having been established in 1828 and was called Nettle Creek post-office, and was kept in the little log store mentioned in another place as the incipient village. The office now is of some importance. The amount of stamps, postal cards, etc., sold from July 1, 1882, to July 1, 1883, amounted to $1,512.34. The office has been a money-order office since 1869, and Mr. A. C. Walker, the present Postmaster, has held a continuous term for fifteen years, having taken the office in 1869.

The population of Hagerstown was: In 1850, 606; 1860, 638; 1870, 830; 1880, 898.

CHURCHES.

M. E. Church.—This church was established in 1840, and the members in the following year erected a small frame church which is now owned and used by the Disciples. The founders of the church were Rev. John Sullivan, then preaching on the Centreville circuit, and the members, Willis P. Davis and wife, Greenbury Savoy and wife, Mary Wynn, Dr. Manlove, L. Reed and wife, who lived in town, and Isaac Peirce and wife, and Thos. Livingston and wife, who lived near by in the country. Within about one year after, Elijah Van Sandt, Silas Ruggles, Bezaleel Taylor, James Linn, Joseph Manifold, Thomas Test and their wives joined. In 1877 they erected their handsome brick church about two squares south of the old one, which was on Perry street, and at this time have eighty-five members, and a Sabbath-school, kept up the year round, and the church and school are in a flourishing condition. Of their preachers whose names are remembered were: John Kiger, John Sullivan, M. Miller, Caldwell Robbins, — Davidson and — Roberts. The present pastor is the Rev. N. D. Shackelford.

Presbyterian Church.—This church was formed Nov. 20, 1852, by the Rev. R. M. Overstreet, and Revs. Robt. Irwin and R. B. Abbott, pastors of Union and Hopewell churches, a committee appointed by the Presbytery of Muncie to assist in its organization. The first members were: Parker Jewett and wife, Wm. M. Dolley and wife, David Robertson and wife, F. K. Jenks and wife, Washington Robertson and wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes, Mrs. Samuel Elliott, Mrs. James Buchanan, Mrs. Geo. Overstreet, for two years. He was followed by the Rev. Mr. Laird, and he by the Rev. Mr. Montfort. The first church building was of brick, erected in 1854, the building committee being Rev. R. M. Overstreet, Samuel Elliott, Parker Jewett and F. K. Jenks. The lot was donated by Geo. Gillespie, but was traded for a half lot on which the church was erected, being considered more convenient. In December, 1855, Michael Roney and F. K. Jenks were elected Deacons. The following ministers have been connected with the church as pastors, viz.: R. B. Abbott, William Armstrong, William H. Holliday, H. K. Kennigh, H. M. Shockley, George Long, John H. Angley, S. S. Potter and J. M. Lawbach. The present pastor is the Rev. S. F. Beach, and the membership is thirty-one. They have a successful Sabbath-school in connection with the church.

The Christian Church was organized in April, 1867, and its first record shows twenty-four members as taking part in its formation. The ministers officiating were: William T. Warbington and James T. Lynn. Of the members who joined at the time were: William Stonebraker, James McNeill, James W. Strode, Charles Earl and their wives, the wife of Daniel W. Mason, the wife and daughter of Jacob Bowman, James Stonebraker, Jane Beck. They worshiped in Melodeon Hall until 1869, when they built their present substantial brick church, on the corner of Washington and South Market streets, at a cost of some $12,000.

Trustees: William Stonebraker, Archibald B. Knode, Morrison Baldridge, Solomon Miller, George Hindman.

The membership at this time is ninety-six, and the Rev. William T. Warbington continued as pastor until September, 1883. Samuel Boyd, a Revolutionary soldier, was their first preacher, and next, Elijah Martindale.

The Disciples Church was organized in December, 1877, by Brother B. M. Blount. Fifteen members joined, three only of whom were male persons, these being: Dr. C. M. Blount, Watkins Williams and Elisha Brown. They at first purchased the old M. E. church property before spoken of. The church may be said to be yet in its infancy. A Sunday-school is kept up with an average attendance of sixty scholars. Preaching is regularly held once a month by the Rev. W. F. Ackerson, of Muncie. They have service each Sunday morning, and the Sunday-school in the afternoon. They have had regular preaching since its organization, excepting the years 1881 and 1882.

The Dunkers.—Under the head of religious societies, "Young's History" gives the following account of this church:

"The German Baptist church (known also as Dunkers and Tunkers) was organized about the year 1824, its members residing in the townships of Jefferson and Jackson, and in adjacent townships in Henry County. Among its early members were: David and Aaron Miller, Benjamin Bowman, John Ritter, Jonas Hoover, Samuel Eiler, David Hardman, Benjamin Hardman, John Ulrich, Jacob Caylor, Henry Crull, and Samuel Cripe. Meetings were first held at private houses, in groves, barns, etc., until their meeting-house was built, one and one-half miles southwest of Hagerstown, about the year 1843. Their first preachers were: David and Aaron Miller, and Benjamin Bowman, the first ordained Elder, succeeded by John Bowman, David Hardman, Zachariah Albaugh, Daniel Bowman, Jacob Bowman, John Holler, David Bowman, Lewis Kinsey, William Lindley, Daniel Smith. All but Holler, Kinsey, David Bowman, and Smith became Elders. Early Deacons were: Jacob Caylor, Benjamin Hardman, John Hardman, John Ulrich. This church has, for the accomodation of its members, three other meeting-houses: One, six miles northwest of Hagerstown, in Henry County; one, five miles southwest, also in Henry County; and another, four miles northwest, in Jefferson Township. The members attending worship in these different houses constitute but one church. Preachers are elected by the members of the church, male and female. Elders are chosen from the preachers, who, after sufficient trial, have given evidence of faithfulness and ability. The office of elder is the highest in the church. Deacons are chosen in the same manner as elders."

Eli Petty was born in Winchester, Randolph Co., Ind., Nov. 23, 1827, and came with his parents to Wayne County in 1831. He was married Oct. 23, 1850, to Elizabeth Thornburgh. To them were born eight children, seven now living—Florence, the eldest, when six years of age, fell from a chair into an open fire-place and was so badly burned that she only lived fourteen hours; Delphina is the wife of Minus Fox a farmer of Jefferson Township; Rebecca N. married Charles Rudy, of Indianapolis; Frances married H. C. Knode, of Hagerstown; Lawrence Z. is a grocer of Hagerstown in company with his father and John Starr, the firm being Starr & Co. Margaret, Minnie B. and Victoria, reside with their parents. Mr. Petty owns a fine farm of 560 acres in Jefferson Township. He lived on a farm twenty-eight years and then moved to Hagerstown. He is a man of sterling integrity, a Republican in politics and an earnest supporter of the party. He is a member of no church, but is a liberal supporter of any means by which mankind may be bettered and the standard of morality elevated. Mrs. Petty is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Oliver B. Stout is one of the substantial farmers of Wayne County, owning 295 acres of as good land as can be found in the county, acquired by energy and industry, stimulated by the assistance of a most estimable wife. His father was a native of New Jersey and his mother of Virginia. He was married March 8, 1846, to Jennie Gulick, daughter of Henry and Mary A. Gulick, of Hamilton County, Ohio.

They have a family of seven children—Elbert M., Milton J., Charles E., Catharine, Maud, William and Minnie. Catharine is the wife of Allen W. Jameson, a carriage-maker of Hagerstown. Milton married Elizabeth Howard, of Preble County, Ohio, and lives on and farms a portion of his father's land.

John H. Thornburgh was born Nov. 5, 1824, within a few rods of where he now resides in Jefferson Township. He is the second son of Jesse and Margaret (Warren) Thornburgh. His grandfather, Walter Thornburgh, came from East Tennessee to Wayne County in an early day and entered a thousand acres of land. His grandfather, James Warren, was an early settler of Economy, Perry Township, Wayne County. His parents were married about 1820 and had a family of ten children. John H. was reared on the farm which he now owns. He was married June 1, 1845, to Harriet Parsons, daughter of Benjamin and Martha (Garrison) Parsons, who came to this county from New Jersey about 1814. They have a family of seven children—William W. married Rachel Conway, and lives in Clay Township; Nelson B. married Elizabeth Dolly, who lived but a short time after their marriage, and he subsequently married Mollie Wilson, and resides in Jefferson Township; Martha is the wife of J. A. Locke, of Dalton Township; Alice resides at home; Hattie is the wife of Bennett Weaver, of Hagerstown; Noble A. married Clara Lamb and resides in Clay Township; May is the wife of Monroe Sherry, of Jefferson Township. In 1878 Mr. Thornburgh was nominated by the Republican party to represent Wayne County in the Legislature, his competitor for nomination being Bronson A. Harris, of Clay Township, one of Wayne County's most substantial men. He was elected to the position over Isaac A. Peirce, of Jefferson, Greenback, and a Mr. Beeson, of Washington Township, Democrat. He served with great credit to himself and the satisfaction of his constituents. Mr. Thornburgh has 273 acres of fine land in Jefferson Township and 106 acres in Clay Township. He is a public-spirited man and has the esteem and respect of all who know him. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church.

Alexander C. Walker was born Oct. 30, 1840, in Ripley County, Ind., a son of James H. Walker, M. D. He early learned the cooper's trade and worked at it until seventeen years of age. He then worked at farming until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. He enlisted at the first call for three months' men but his company was not called out. July 6, 1861, he enlisted for three years in Company B, Nineteenth Indiana Infantry. He participated in many severe battles, among them Rappahanocks Station, White Sulphur Springs, Gainesville, Second Bull Run, Fredricksburg, Gettysburg, and the defense of Washington, D. C., July, 1864. At Gainesville, Aug. 28, 1862, he was wounded in the face and left on the field for dead. In December, 1863, he was transferred to the First Regiment Veteran Reserves and was placed on duty at the War and Treasury Department. After his return home he read medicine three years. He has been Postmaster of Hagerstown since April, 1869. He has been agent for the American Express Company, and has served as Corporation Clerk, Treasurer and Assessor several terms each. He was married March 1, 1866, to Miss Mollie Bowers. They have three children—Terry Sheridan, Florence Iona and Earl Washington.

ORGANIZATION.

This township is one of the six original townships of the county. It was organized in 1817, the next year after the State was admitted into the Union. As first organized it included all the territory of the county east of Perry Township and north of Wayne. Since first organized Franklin Township has been created out of it, and other parts of it have been detached and united to other townships.

The early settlers of the township were mostly from North Carolina, and a large proportion of them were Friends, many of them from the neighborhood of a Friends' meeting-house, named New Garden, in Guilford County, N. C., or attached to that Yearly Meeting. This township without doubt was named from that meeting-house.

There has been much speculation and there is yet quite a difference of opinion as to who were the first settlers. From the best and most reliable evidence John Turner and Jonathan Marine were among, if not the very first settlers of the township, both having settled there in 1809 or 1810.

Following these within the next year or two came Jonathan Hough, George Shugart, James Dwiggins, Joseph Dwiggins, Benjamin Thomas, John Thomas, Stephen Thomas, John James, and Isaac Thomas. These were all from North Carolina, and were Friends with perhaps one exception, and all settled south of where Fountain City now is.

From 1811 to 1816 in the then south and southwest part of the township the following named persons became settlers: Edward Baldwin, Thomas Baldwin, Joseph Bond, William Jessup, Isaac Jessup, Mark Peeler, Andrew Hampton, John Scote, Daniel Crampton, John Baldwin, Isaac Williams, Thomas Bond and Joseph Bond. Most of these were from North Carolina and were Friends. Part of them settled within the present limits of Webster.

About the same time, from 1811 to 1816, the southeast part of the township was settled by Abraham Hampton, Jacob Hampton, Frank Swin, Hampton Brown, James Massey, and others whose names we cannot give. South of Newport, now Fountain City, about the same time the following persons located: Obadiah Harris, Cader Woodard, Francis Thomas, Benjamin Thomas, Sr., and Josiah Woodard.

In the north and northeast part of the township, from 1812 to 1820, John Longfellow, Samuel Clearly, Thomas Harper, John Peeler, John Fisher, Jonathan Willcutts, William Peeler, Malachi Moon, John Barnes, Charles Marine, Jesse Marine and Hiram Bailey settled and commenced felling the timber and clearing off the woods for the purpose of farming. John Mills and Aaron Mills also settled there at about the same time.

In the northwest, from 1812 to 1820, the following persons became settlers of the township: James Moorman, Stephen Williams, William Lacey, John Lacey, Edward Price, Thomas Price, Jedediah Price, Samuel Horner, Joel Jeffery, Job Jeffery, John Potter, Thomas Potter, Sylvester Clevenger and Abraham Platt.

At this late day it is impossible to give the names of all the first settlers or when they settled.

A man by the name of Kent, his first name forgotten by the writer, was among the first if not the first man who built a residence in Newport, and that was but a plain log house.

Dr. Henry H. Way, Levi Coffin, Joseph Curtis, Joseph Morrow, Samuel Nixon, Joel Parker, Jonathan Unthank, Elam

Unthank, Pleasant Unthank, Harvey Davis, Caleb Cowgill and others not recollected were the early settlers of Newport, now Fountain City. All these have long since left the place except Harvey Davis, and all except him, and perhaps Elam Unthank, are dead.

Without speaking disparagingly of the merits of any one, the writer desires to select a single name, one Willis Davis. He came to Newport Township from Pasquotank Co., N. C., about 1820. He was then a man, could neither read nor write, but by close attention to books he was very soon able to teach school, which he engaged in and followed for more than a quarter of a century. No man or woman in the township, and the writer thinks no one in the county, ever taught or educated as many children, men and women as, Willis Davis. He was the noblest of noble men in the truest and best sense of the word. Time with him is no more; he has bid it a final farewell.

The early settlers of Newport, and truly of the township, were mainly a positive, determined class; believing in a right, they would maintain and defend it. The controlling element of the town and township has always been intensely temperance, and hence saloons for the sale of liquors could never find an abiding place in the township. The same element at a very early day believed that slavery was a great wrong, hence with unfaltering zeal and earnestness they denounced it and refused to give, by word or act, the accursed institution, directly or indirectly, any aid or comfort.

This township has a great deal of very excellent land, and its farmers are mainly industrious and enterprising. The only stream of water in the township is Nolan's Fork, and this stream runs from a northeast to a southwest direction, and passes Fountain City on the east. Fountain wells are common in Fountain City, and doubtless in the change of name this controlled and directed the new name of the town.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R. runs past the town, which is a prosperous village. The inhabitants claim for this township that it is remarkably healthy, and the writer believes that this claim is well founded. In point of earnestness and zeal in the cause of education and the promotion of good morals, few places in Wayne County or elsewhere can surpass it. Fifty years ago in the northern part of this township there surely was a peculiarity. In a radius of two miles lived John Longfellow, John Mills, John Burns, John Lacy, John Fisher, John Peelle, John D. Robertson and John Meredith. Indeed, a stranger in passing along there and hearing the given names of the neighbors would have concluded that the name "John," was a kind of prefix to all the land-owners.

ADDITIONAL EARLY HISTORY.

The foregoing sketch was contributed by Hon. William A. Peelle, of Richmond, whose early life was passed in the township, and who is familiar with the early history. Other early residents have furnished additional particulars upon which are based the items which follow:

George Shugart, whose son George, an old resident, now lives in Fountain City, settled in this county in 1810. He remained the first winter near Richmond, then took up and began improving land, a part of which is now included in the town of Fountain City. Indians were very numerous, and were frequent visitors at Shugart's cabin. During the war of 1812 he remained on his improvement, busying himself in building a mill dam, to which he added a tub-mill, the first mill of any kind in the settlement. The Indians never disturbed him, for he was a Friend, or, as they expressed it, "one of William Penn's children." Shugart took every precaution to avoid trouble. He neither used a gun nor would allow his sons to do so. Soon after the war an incident occurred which threatened misfortune to the settlers. Two men, Joshua Gray and Addington, shot an Indian several miles south of Shugart's, between his place and Richmond. One of the Indians who had witnessed the deed came to Shugart's and announced "White man kill Injun." Shugart went with a team and a sled to the place where the wounded man was, and carried him to the Indian camp, situated near the county line, six or eight miles northwest of Fountain City. George Shugart, Jr., then a boy, accompanied his father. He says the scene on arrival at the camp was heartrending. The Indians, men, women and children, gave touching evidences of their sorrow, and the lamentation was great. A few days later a council was held at Shugart's mill, and an understanding arrived at between the settlers and the Indians. The latter were given $40 and a saddle and it was stipulated that the men guilty of the shooting should keep out of the Indians' way. The wounded man recovered; had he died, the matter probably would have been much more serious.

During the war there was a fort on the old Dwiggins place at which soldiers were stationed for the purpose of guarding the frontier.

Within five years after, the settlement began. The township was well settled. Daniel Morris and his mother, Sarah, came in 1811; John Thomas, the same year; Benjamin Thomas, 1811, and another Benjamin Thomas, about the same time; Ezekiel and Jesse Hazeley, a little later. Michael and Micajah Wiesner, John and Jesse Huff were among the early settlers.

Soon after the town of Newport was platted, an attempt was made to start a rival village on the present Stephen Townsend farm. Edmund Kent laid off a town on this farm, then owned by Israel Hough, and called it West Liberty. John Hough worked at clock-making there, and Kent started a tannery. The town soon went down.

Israel Hough had a saw-mill southwest of Fountain City as early as 1816. Later, Job Reynolds built a grist-mill, run by water and steam, on the same site. Zeria and Hiram Hough and Charles Thomas owned it later. It has entirely disappeared.

About 1820 Barnabas Hunt operated a carding-mill and grist-mill south of Fountain City.

The first township election was held at the house of Benjamin Harris, in 1817.

Michael Farmer, living on the creek, in the southern part of this township, was mysteriously murdered about 1822. The murderer was never discovered.

A pottery was established by James Linley, in the southeastern part of this township, on the present farm of Moses Bailey, at an early date.

Obadiah Harris, one of the first settlers, located on the present Pegg farm, where he remained during the war of 1812. After the war was over, he asked an Indian who came to the house, why he was not killed. "Injun seen you heap times; could kill you easy; you a Penn man; Injun no hurt you."

The first marriage in the township, says "Young's History," was that of Joseph Ratcliff and Sarah Shugart, daughter of George Shugart, Jan. 4, 1816.

The township officers for 1884-'5 are as follows: Trustee, Samuel Williams; Justices, Elijah Coate, A. H. Harris; Assessor, Wm. R. Williams.

FOUNTAIN CITY.

This thriving town of about 600 inhabitants was laid out in 1818, by Redden Chance and Solomon Thomas. It was at first known as New Garden, became Newport in 1834, and Fountain City in 1878. A new name was found to be necessary to avoid confusion in mail matter, the postoffice having a different name from the town until the last change was made. During the past ten years the town has improved more and faster than in any other period of its history. The population was 343 in 1870, and 471 in 1880. Fountain City is surrounded by a fine agricultural country, and is enterprising and prosperous. It was settled by the Friends, who are still in the majority among its inhabitants. The town derives its name from the fountain wells which it contains. The first of these wells was dug by a man named Gabriel Poe, over fifty years ago. When he had dug into the earth several feet, he struck water, which at once welled up and soon overflowed the surface. Fountain wells have since been put down in all parts of the town. The water does not rise to the surface in all cases, but it is sure to rise to a certain distance and furnish a never-failing supply, of which the temperature is nearly uniform throughout the year.

The town grew slowly in its earlier years. In 1824, says Harvey Davis, who arrived that year, there were but six families—those of Daniel Puckett, tanner; Dr. Henry H. Way, physician; Redden Chance, school-teacher; Mary Chance; Samuel Keller, hatter; and Solomon Thomas, cabinet-maker.

Harvey Davis, now the oldest resident of the town, learned his trade under Solomon Thomas. Dr. Henry H. Way was the first physician. He was also early engaged in the mercantile business.

The first store was started by Solomon Thomas, on a very small scale, about 1818. The goods were brought from North Carolina by Charles Marine. The next store was opened by a man named Kelso. William Marine kept a grocery soon after. In 1824 the village had no store, but Dr. Way started one soon after. Levi Coffin, the noted apostle of Freedom, began the mercantile business in 1826. Eleazer Hiatt, Caleb Cogle, Samuel Pritchard, Robert Grain, Joel Parker and others carried on the mercantile business later.

Edward Mason started a brewery early. Eleazer Hiatt and Daniel Puckett had a pottery quite early. Robert Bailey also established one later, and continued the business many years. Levi Coffin began the manufacture of linseed oil in 1836. He also carried on pork-packing several years.

Daniel Jones was the first wagon-maker. William Hough and Joel Parker also engaged in the same business early. William Macy and Nathan Bond were early blacksmiths. Samuel Keller, John Hunt and Thomas Clayton were early hatters. An early tavern was kept by Joel Hendricks.

Nathan Smith had a carding-mill in the town, which was among the first industries. It was run by horse-power.

Daniel Puckett had a small grist-mill in Newport, in 1824. It was used principally for grinding corn. When wheat was ground it had to be sifted by hand before it was ready for use.

A steam grist-mill and woolen factory was started east of town about 1836, by Eli Osborne, Isaac and Jesse Reynolds. They found it unprofitable. The property changed hands and was run as a grist-mill. Afterward Job Reynolds, Hiram and Israel Hough owned it. They also established a foundry and made stoves and castings. The mill was finally burned when owned by Dr. J. R. Mendenhall. Later, William Hough built a water-power saw-mill in the eastern part of the town and ran it profitably for several years. A steam saw-mill was built near the railroad in 1870, by Elias and Nathan Baldwin. The steam flouring mill in the town was built in 1878, by H. A. Fox, present owner. The saw-mill and planing-mill of Gardner Bros. & Co. was built in 1882. A tile factory was started in 1884, by A. H. Harris.

Other business interests of the town are carried on by the following firms: Hill & Curtis, dry-goods, have also a grain elevator and do an extensive business; Clements Bros. & Co., general store; grocers, W. H. Williams, Mahlon Arnett, C. F. Edgerton; druggists, J. W. & L. C. Johnson; hardware, Scarce & Thomas; furniture, O. M. Marine; clothing and furnishing goods, Solomon Woodard; milliners, Kate Hodson, Mary A. Johnson; harness-shop, L. H. Townsend; wagon-makers, Huff & Osborne; blacksmiths, Parker & Clark, Boyd & Stigel; livery-stable, Isaac R. Thomas; physicians, J. S. Harris, L. C. Johnson, O. N. Huff; Postmaster, Wm. D. Scarce.

Newport was incorporated as a town by order of the County Commissioners in May, 1834. In 1878 the name was changed to Fountain City. The town officers for 1883-'84 are as follows: Council, C. F. Edgerton, W. H. Study, L. H. Townsend, J. T. Mills (President of the board), W. D. Scarce; Clerk, Wm. R. Williams; Marshal, Charles Baldwin.

To the original plat of the town additions have been made as follows: By Harvey Davis, in 1830; William Hough, in 1832, and Robert Green, in 1844.

An Odd Fellows lodge, known as New Garden Lodge, No. 337, was organized in 1869; and New Garden Lodge, No. 439, F. & A. M., in 1871. Both have ceased to exist.

ANTI-SLAVERY WORK.

Probably no town in Indiana was a greater center of abolitionist ideas and principles than Newport. The town was noted as the central station of the Underground Railway, and people living at a distance imagined that it was a city of considerable importance. The principles of the Friends here found expression both in words and deeds, and thousands of fugitives escaping from bondage were assisted in gaining their freedom through the agency of the citizens of this little town. The anti-slavery work was not wholly carried on in secret. The subject was discussed in the church, in the press and in public meetings. Two anti-slavery papers were established in Newport and flourished for several years, wielding an extensive influence. It would not be possible, in a sketch necessarily brief as this must be, to make personal mention of all the friends of freedom whose work in behalf of the oppressed race entitle them to grateful remembrance, but the names of a few of the most prominent workers cannot be omitted. Levi Coffin, Benjamin Stanton, Dr. Henry H. Way, Benjamin Thomas, Samuel Charles, the Huffs, the Houghs, George Shugart, Sr., and their co-adjutors were earnest and untiring workers.

Levi Coffin, the reputed President of the Underground Railway, settled at Newport in 1826. He was a native of North Carolina, and was reared on a farm. While yet a boy he became convinced of the sinfulness of slavery, and the impression deepened with each succeeding year. He taught school in early life; came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1822, and pursued the same profession. He subsequently returned to his native State where, in 1824, he married Catharine White. After teaching a while longer he returned to Wayne County, in 1826, and settled at Newport, where he engaged in the mercantile business. The next year he engaged in pork-packing, which he followed in connection with merchandising as long as he remained in the town. In 1836 he built an oil-mill, and engaged in the manufacture of linseed oil. Notwithstanding his many business interests, he was never too busy to attend to the affairs of the underground railway, of which institution, he was one of the prime movers. Newport was on the route usually taken by slaves escaping to Canada. Fugitives began to arrive at Coffin's house in the winter of 1826-'7, and as his wife had the same sympathies as he, they were cared for and assisted. It soon became known that fleeing slaves could find shelter and aid in Newport, and the number of arrivals increased. Other Friends engaged in the work, which soon assumed important proportions. Coffin suffered in his business, losing some pro-slavery customers, and for a time his prospects were discouraging, but he was not depressed. As the settlement grew, his business revived, very fortunately, as the "railroad" work was constantly a heavy expense to him. Depots were established, north and south of Newport, and three principal lines of railway converged at the town—one from Cincinnati, Ohio, one from Madison, and one from Jeffersonville, Ind. Seldom a week passed that fugitives did not arrive at the house of Coffin, or of others who were known to be friendly. A gentle tap at the door in the night aroused the sleeping household; a two-horse covered wagon, loaded with passengers, was found at the door, the passengers were ushered into the house without a word. The windows were covered, and a good fire and refreshments were provided. This work was kept up by Coffin for twenty years, and, later, by those who followed his example. Coffin kept a team and wagon constantly. The destitute were often relieved by him, provided with clothing, and kept secreted several days in times of danger. Dr. Henry H. Way, a faithful co-worker, often ministered professionally to the sick and suffering among the fugitives. Coffin remained in Newport until 1847, when he removed to Cincinnati and there continued his work in behalf of the slaves until the need for it had passed. In 1864, as agent for the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, he went to England, where he succeeded in arousing great interest, enlisting the sympathies and securing valuable contributions from many eminent men. In 1876 he published a volume of over 700 pages, devoted to reminiscences of his life and work. The book is full of interest, and much of its contents relate to anti-slavery work in Newport and Wayne County. Levi Coffin died in Avondale, near Cincinnati, Sept. 16, 1877, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. His reputation on both sides of the Atlantic will cause his memory long to be revered.

CHURCHES.

Friends' Meetings.—The first religious society in the township was the New Garden Meeting, organized in 1813. The first meeting was held late in the fall of that year. A log meeting-house was erected on the site of the present house in 1814. It had a puncheon floor, and was warmed by a charcoal fire, built upon a hearth in the center of the room. Among the earliest members were George Shngart, Sr., Jonathan and Israel Hough, Jonathan Marine, Obadiah Harris, John Benbow, Uriah Moorman, Charles Baldwin, Thomas Knight, James Massey, Micajah Jones, Isaac Thomas, John, Elijah, Stephen, Francis and Benjamin Thomas, Josiah and John Lamb, Solomon Thomas, Malachi Moon, John and Daniel Baldwin, Benjamin Harris, Jacob Cook and others. The first Monthly Meeting was held the 18th of the third month, 1815; the first Quarterly Meeting the 25th of the first month, 1823. A frame meeting-house was built about 1820, and the present brick meeting-house in 1858. A school was established early, and maintained by the Friends until within recent years. New Garden Meeting is the present organization of Dover, Arba, Concord, Cherry Grove, Newport and other meetings. Among the ministers have been: Obadiah Harris, Sr., Obadiah Harris, Jr., Elizabeth Bond, John Hunt, Daniel Puckett, Thomas Frazier, Francis Thomas, Jeremiah Hubbard, Wm. Hobbs, Zeri Hough and wife, Luke Woodard, Sarah B. Woodard, Eliza Hodson and others. The present ministers are: Sarah B. Woodard, Alpheus Drueblood, Julia A. Miles and Catharine Williams; Trustees, Luke Thomas, Alpheus Drueblood; Elders, Luke Thomas, Mildred Thomas, Ann Reese, Clarkson Thomas, Sarah J. Thomas; Clerks, A. M. Jenkins and Phebe A. Thomas; Overseers, James Townsend and David Pegg. New Garden Quarterly Meeting has about 1,200 members; New Garden Meeting about 200.

At the session of the New Garden Quarterly Meeting, 26th of first month, 1828, in response to a request, Benjamin Cox, Francis, Jonathan Johnson, Amos Peacock and William Nixon, with an equal number of female Friends, were appointed to judge of the advisability of forming a new preparative meeting. On the 26th of the third month, 1828, the request was granted, and Concord Meeting was formed. A log meeting-house was erected on the western line of New Garden Township, and there meetings have been kept up until the present time. The membership is now about sixty. It is proposed to build a new meeting-house during the present year.

At a Quarterly Meeting held at New Garden on the 28th of the eighth month, 1830, Amos Peacock, Obadiah Harris, Wm. Cox, Wm. Hackett, H. Hodson, were appointed a committee to act with an equal number of female Friends and judge of the propriety of establishing a preparative meeting at Newport. The meeting was established at the next session and is still maintained. A meeting-house, 30 x 50 feet, was erected. In the first month of 1843 the Friends of Newport and vicinity, owing to some difference of opinion arising from anti-slavery sentiments, set up a Yearly Meeting at Newport, and built an addition to the meeting-house, making it 100 feet long. The Yearly Meeting was continued only a few years. The Newport Meeting now has nearly 200 members.

Methodist Episcopal.—A Methodist class was organized by Rev. Wm. Holman in 1815. James Dwiggins was Class-leader. Other early members were: Joseph W. Dwiggins, John Pelle and wife, Ephraim Bowen and wife, Nancy Bowen, Malachi Moon and wife, Samuel and Joseph Henderson and James Loven and their wives, the Fishers, James Williams, Eli Moorman, David James and others. Charles and John Marine were early local preachers. Early ministers were: Durbin, Lawrence, Whitten and Sparks. A meeting-house of hewed logs was built on the land of James Dwiggins. This was sold to the colored church about 1830, and the present house in Fountain City was then erected. The membership is now small.

African M. E. Church.—The colored people of this township have maintained a M. E. organization since about 1830, and formerly the organization was quite flourishing. After worshiping some years in the house above mentioned they built a church in town, where they still continue to worship.

Baptists.—About 1820 a Baptist church was organized in the northern part of the township. A meeting-house was built and a church maintained until some time between 1830 and 1840. Among the early members were: John and David James, Eleazer Smith, the Cases, the wives of John and Thomas Potter, and others.

Wesleyan Methodists.—The Wesleyan Methodist church at Fountain City was organized in 1843, and was composed of anti-slavery members. Josiah and Emily Bell, Francis and Miriam Root (Bell and Root were both local preachers), Joseph and Hannah Curtis, Andrew Meredith, Harvey Davis and wife, Griffin Davis and wife, Samuel Horner and wife, Wm. R. Williams, J. W. Johnson, Eli Morgan and wife, Jedediah Price and wife, Elam Unthank, Michael Keever and wife were early members. Early preachers: Mifflin Harker, Daniel Worth, Alex. Haywood, Emsley Brookshire, Aaron Worth, Alfred Hiatt and George Rogers. The house of worship was erected in 1844, at a cost of about $1,200. The present membership is forty-five. Pastor, Rev. P. W. Bilderback; Class-leader, Wm. R. Williams; Trustees, Christopher Williams, Martin Davis.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mahlon Arnett, youngest son of Willis and Elizabeth (Mendenhall) Arnett, was born Aug. 30, 1833, in New Garden Township, Wayne Co., Ind. He resided with his father till he was nineteen years of age, after which he engaged in farming in his native township until 1858. He then purchased a saw-mill, in what is now Webster Township, which he operated for three years, when he removed to Ohio and followed farming for a time, after which he dealt in beef and poultry. In the spring of 1861 he returned to the old homestead, where he resided till 1868. He then carried on the grocery business in Richmond for two years, after which he again engaged in farming on the homestead till 1880. He again embarked in the grocery trade at Richmond, which he followed one year. He then opened a store in Fountain City, where he has since carried on the business. Feb. 19, 1854, he was married to Elizabeth Talbot, of Preble County, Ohio, by whom he had six children—Ella, Della, Minnie, Charles, Willis (deceased) and Luther. Mrs. Arnett died Dec. 6, 1883.

Willis Arnett, deceased, is a native of North Carolina, and was married in his native State to Elizabeth Mendenhall, a daughter of Jonathan Mendenhall, who was one of the first settlers of Wayne County. In the fall of 1829 our subject came to Wayne County, Ind., and followed agricultural pursuits in New Garden Township, till his death. Mrs. Arnett died in 1868. To this union were born seven children, only three still living. About a year and a half after his wife's death Mr. Arnett was married to Nancy (Scott) Hockett, widow of Nathan Hockett. Mr. Arnett's death occurred in September, 1868. He was a member of the society of Friends.

John Barnes, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Wayne Township, Wayne Co., Ind., Feb. 13, 1849, the youngest son of Shapleigh F. and Elleanor (McConnaha) Barnes. He was reared on a farm about three and a half miles southwest of Richmond, receiving his education in the common schools. In 1869 his father moved to New Garden Township, where he died in 1877. His father, Jehu Boren, was a native of North Carolina, born June 16, 1804, and married Nancy Meredith, a native of the same State, born Nov. 2, 1803. She was a sister of the late General Solomon Meredith. In 1825 or 1826 they came in a one-horse wagon to Wayne County, having when reaching their destination 62½ cents, with an indebtedness of $3.50. The first seven years they lived on rented land on West River, but by economy and good management saved enough to buy 100 acres on section 8, New Garden Township, at that time mostly unimproved. He cleared and cultivated his farm, and subsequently dealt quite extensively in stock. Mrs. Boren died in 1865 and Mr. Boren in 1873. Four of their five children lived till maturity, but T. E. Boren, the youngest, is the only one now living. He was born in New Garden Township, Jan. 4, 1833. Samuel Charles came to Wayne County, Ind., in the spring of 1812, when it was nothing but a wilderness, and settled on a tract of land one mile east of Richmond, which he cleared and cultivated. He followed farming through life, and died at the advanced age of ninety years. His wife died at the age of eighty-eight years. They and their ten children were members of the Society of Friends, Samuel Charles being an Elder. Our subject, Daniel Charles, came with his parents to Wayne County at the age of twelve years, and remained at home till he grew to manhood. He was educated in log cabin school houses with greased paper for windows, where the whip was used as an educator to compel all to spell and read audibly while learning their lessons. He was married March 9, 1820, to Miriam, daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Abeson) Moore, natives of North Carolina. The former lived to the advanced age of ninety-three, and the latter to the age of sixty-five. Daniel Charles and wife were the parents of ten children, only six now living. After his marriage Mr. Charles settled on a tract of uncultivated land where he made a farm and remained there till 1882, when he removed to Fountain. His wife died in 1866, and in 1867 he was married to Catharine Huff Shugart, who is still living, aged seventy-two. The first lots in Richmond were laid off in 1816, and settled mostly by Friends. The colored people erected little cottages in what is now the south part of Richmond, which at that time was called South Africa. The fugitive slaves found the settlement, but the slaveholders also found it out, and if they could not find their slaves they would knock down some free negroes and run them off toward Kentucky. This caused the Friends so much trouble in running after them and bringing back those who were free that they formed the first anti-slavery society in this country, and persuaded the colored people to go to Canada. Some of them having married slaves, quite a number consented to go, and his brother, John Charles, and Frederick Hoover went with them through a wilderness country. This happened between 1820 and 1830. These two young men kept a record of the journey, but it is supposed to be lost. Some anti-slavery men belonging to other churches and some who did not belong to any church were actively engaged in rescuing free men when taken, and in this none were more active than Rev. David Pervines, of the Christian, or New Light, Church.

After the surrender of Johnson at Greensborough marched back to Washington City. After the war he followed agricultural pursuits in Randolph County till his removal to Wayne County where he engaged in farming about seven years. He then returned to Randolph County, residing there one year, and in the spring of 1875 he settled on his present farm, which contains 176 acres of well-cultivated land. He has on his farm a fine residence and commodious stables and out buildings. He was married Nov. 16, 1865, to Martha J., daughter of Josiah and Rachel Haisly. one year in the dry-goods store of J. C. Rodgers, when he became a junior partner in the dry-goods store of Bowen & Horn. At the end of a year he purchased a half interest in the same store, and carried on the business at that place till July, 1883, when he purchased his present stock in Fountain City. He was married June 26, 1832, to Rebecca, daughter of Benjamin and Susannah (Jay) Coppock. Her parents removed from South Carolina to Miami County, Ohio, in an early day on account of their abhorrence for the system of slavery, as did also the parents of Mr. Coate. Mr. and Mrs. Coate's parents were members of the Society of Friends, and they were married in union meeting according to the custom of the society. To them have been born nine children, but five of whom are living—Esther, wife of D. Welleman, and Mary, wife of Horatio Pearson, of Miami County, Ohio; Susan, wife of Dr. J. T. Miles, of Bryant, Jay Co., Ind.; Lindley M., of Fountain City, and John M., of Richmond. In 1842 or 1843 a separation took place in the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, caused by differences of opinion on the slavery question. Those withdrawing were called Anti-slavery Friends, and to this body Mr. and Mrs. Coate adhered, but subsequently joined the Wesleyan Methodist church, and soon after Mr. Coate was ordained an Elder. From that time he was in the itinerancy twenty-five years. Two years of the time he spent with his family in McNairy County, W. Tenn., as a missionary of the Indiana Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and one year with his

At the latter battle he was wounded in the right arm and disabled for a time. He was detailed to the recruiting service and returned to Indiana, and raised Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Infantry. He was appointed Captain of the company, and with it went with Sherman through the battles of Atlanta, Dalton, Resaca, Altoona, Lookout Mountain, and Peach Tree Creek. It was heavily timbered and there was not a white settler in the county north or northwest of them. The first winter they suffered from the extreme cold, but in a few years they were rewarded for their privations by good crops and a comfortable home. To them were born ten children, two of whom are living. They were members of the Society of Friends and were always among the foremost in the upbuilding of every good cause. Their home was a refuge for the slave and they were especially active workers in the cause of temperance. Mrs. Hough died in 1859, aged seventy-five years, and Mr. Hough in September, 1867, aged eighty-three and a half years. His mother, a member of the Burnside family, was born in Maryland, but moved with her parents to North Carolina when a little girl. She was a sociable, talented woman, and served as Clerk of her Quarterly Meeting most of the time from 1819 till her death, in 1846, aged sixty-seven years. His father, John Huff, was uncommonly quiet, a peaceable, hard-working man, who was never known to have any trouble with any one, though he lived to be over eighty years of age. He died in 1852. There was a family of eight children, six of whom lived till maturity—James, married

Susannah H. Butler; Cristee, married Ann Blessing; Matilda, married David Maxwell; Amelia, married Jonathan Elliott; Daniel, married Emily Jane Nixon; Tamar, married Moses Spruy. His education was a limited one, never attending school more than two months in the winter, and then in the early subscription school, taught in vacated cabins. He was married in 1844 to Emily Jane, daughter of Samuel and Rhoda (Hubbard) Nixon, of Fountain City, and sister of Dr. O. W. and William Nixon, of the Inter Ocean, Chicago, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Huff have always been members of the Society of Friends, their children also adhering to the same faith. Politically, he first voted for Harrison in 1840. In 1844 voted for Birney, and from the Liberty went to the Free-Soil party; thence, in 1856, to the Republican party; still holds one foot on its wasting glory and the other on the Prohibition car, on a bee-line for prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors in the State, and expects soon to lift the other foot to the car and never change again. He was one of the freight agents of the Underground Railroad and was permitted to shelter some of the sable race while on their journey from whips and chains to a land of freedom; was one of the councilmen in midnight houses when owners were in hot pursuit. He was never a member of any secret order nor military company, looking on all wars as a relic of barbarism and in no sense belonging to a Christian nation or the peaceable kingdom of Christ.

He was reared on the frontier farm and was obliged to forego the privileges of more than a practical education, his schooling being limited to the subscription school in the primitive log school-house. When he was but eight years of age, June 6, 1827, his father died, leaving a widow with a large family on a frontier farm but partially improved. As the older children advanced in years they left home, and the care of the mother devolved on him, a duty he gladly performed till her death. On reaching his majority he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the old homestead and has always made it his home, following diligently the avocation of a farmer. He is clearly a self-made man. Starting in life with a very little capital he has, by his own good management, industry and indomitable perseverance, accumulated a large property. His landed estate consists of 263 acres of the best land in the township, all well improved and under a high state of cultivation. Born on the old homestead, he has now made it his home for a period of sixty-five years and has witnessed its growth from an uncleared forest to its present rank among the best farms in the county. His family are surrounded with all the comforts of life; his children have had the benefit of a good education, and he, in his declining years, can look back and contemplate with pleasure a well-spent life. He has always been a public-spirited man, giving liberally of his time and means for the advancement of all public interests. Benevolent causes have always had his ready support, and the churches and schools of the township are due in a great measure to his liberality. Honest and honorable in the superlative degree, he has gained, as he deserves, the respect and confidence of the entire county. A native of the county, it is only natural that he should, as he does, desire its up-building, and his greatest work, outside his own household, has been toward the furtherance of the county's welfare. Mr. Marine was married Nov. 8, 1860, to Hannah E. Graves, daughter of William Graves, and a native of Grant County, Ind. Her parents were natives of Tennessee. July 15, 1880, he was married to Mary E., daughter of Gideon F. and Mary J. (Coggshall) McCrakin. They have one son—Delmer M. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are members of the Society of Friends.

William D. Scarce, hardware merchant, is a native of Fountain City, Ind., the eldest son of Charles M. and Emeline S. (Hunt) Scarce. His father was a carriage and wagon maker by trade, but on the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion enlisted as a private. He was subsequently promoted to Lieutenant of a colored regiment. His health failing he was discharged and returned home. After partially recovering he went with his family to Leavenworth, Kan., where he died. The widow with her three children then returned to Indiana, and for about a year lived in Richmond. They then moved to Fountain City, where she received the appointment as Postmistress. The family being in limited circumstances William was obliged to assist in the maintenance of the family. He worked in various ways till 1881 when he was employed as clerk for B. C. Marine. In 1882, with Levi Willcutts, he bought a stock of goods, and has since been successfully engaged in business for himself. In 1883 Mr. Willcutts sold his interest to Jesse Thomas, the firm name now being Scarce & Thomas. In 1882 Mr. Scarce was appointed Postmaster. He was married May 25, 1882, to Emma C., daughter of Jesse Thomas. She died July 3, 1883, leaving one child—Emma C.

William H. Study was born in Green Township, Wayne Co., Ind., July 20, 1841, a son of Isaac and Catherine (Green) Study. He remained at home till the breaking out of the Rebellion, and was one of the first to enlist; was assigned to Company C, Eighth Indiana Infantry. He participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Magnolia Hill, Black Run Bridge, Vicksburg, Winchester, Strausburg and Cedar Creek, Va. In September, 1865, he was discharged and returned home. He was married Dec. 14, 1855, to Louisa, daughter of Milton and Keziah (Johnson) Cranor. They have had five children—B. C., Clarence M., Lurena and Kizzie (deceased), and Harry P. In 1866 Mr. Study was appointed Deputy Sheriff, and was elected Sheriff in 1870, and re-elected in 1872, serving during the time of the troubles incident to the removal of the county seat. He subsequently removed to Indianapolis, returning to Wayne County in 1876, where he has been engaged in the mercantile business and in shipping grain. He is also extensively engaged in raising stock in Kansas. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Benjamin Thomas, deceased, was born in Richmond County, N. C., Jan. 9, 1793, and was the youngest son of John and Molly (Clark) Thomas, the former a native of Maryland, of Welsh descent, and the latter born in Virginia. He was married Oct. 22, 1806, to Annie, daughter of Zachariah and Mary (Matthews) Moorman, she was born Feb. 26, 1788. To them were born twelve children, of whom six are living—George, Eli, Mary, Clarkey, Achsah and Annie. Those deceased are—Ruth, Nathan, Benjamin, Bettie, Gula and Hannah. In the spring of 1811 Mr. Thomas came to Wayne County, Ind., and settled in what is now New Garden Township, with his wife and two children, there being at that time only two families in the township. The Indians becoming troublesome, he moved his family to where Richmond now stands, and after remaining here about one year he and his brother Francis returned to their native home and brought their father's family to Wayne Township, where the father soon after died. Our subject was one of the leaders in organizing the Society of Friends in New Garden Township. He was also an active worker in the cause of temperance, and was one of the original members of the old Washingtonian Society. He died Aug. 22, 1851, his wife surviving him till Sept. 13, 1861.

Peter Thomas, farmer and stock-raiser, was born Feb. 27, 1837, in Franklin Township, Wayne Co., Ind., the third son of Charles and Nancy (Morman) Thomas, and a grandson of the late Stephen Thomas, a pioneer of this county. Our subject received a good common-school education, and resided at home till twenty-six years of age. When nine years of age he removed with his father's family to New Garden Township, Wayne County. He was married Jan. 6, 1863, to Princella E., daughter of Benjamin and Jemima Cox, who came from Randolph, N. C., about 1848. To them have been born six children—Ellsworth, Cynthia I., Olinda B., Lindsey, Cora E. and Benjamin. Mr. Thomas has a farm of 104 acres of highly cultivated land, where he has resided since his marriage. He and family are active members of the Society of Friends, and politically he is a Republican.

Luke Thomas.—The Thomas family are of Welsh descent. The first of the family that came to this country settled in Maryland, and from there John Thomas, in 1870, then a young man, moved to Guilford County, N. C., and was soon after followed by his parents and the rest of their children. They settled on Pe Dee River, in South Carolina, near the boundary line of North Carolina. Their children were—Robert, a prominent minister of the Baptist church; Stephen; Sarah, who married Daniel Landman; Molly, married a Mr. Primrose; William; John; Lewis; Susannah, married a Mr. Matthews; Tristram, an officer in the Revolutionary war; Philip; Benjamin; James, and Rebecca, who married a Poston. But little is known of the family save that they were intelligent and industrious. John Thomas, the progenitor of the family in Wayne County, married Molly Clark, a daughter of Francis Clark, of Guilford County, N. C. He was by trade a cooper, but soon after his marriage bought a farm, and became successful in that business. He erected a mill, which he carried on in connection with farming. He became a member of the Society of Friends and reared his children in the same faith. At the time of the Revolution he was pressed into the service, but being opposed to war and bloodshed he refused to act except as compelled. Finding that he would be of no use to them, and believing that he would be of no harm, he was liberated. In 1791 or 1792, he moved to South Carolina and settled near his father, where he lived to see his children settled in life. His children that lived to maturity were nine in number—Isaac, John, Mary, Elijah, Stephen, Francis, Christiana, Benjamin and Sarah. Isaac married Rachel Knight. Their children were—Solomon, Betty,

Molly, Achsa, Rachel, John and Anna. John married Lydia Sneed. Their children were—Polly, Jesse, Anna, Hannah, Lydia, Henby, Huldah, Noah and William (twins). Elijah married Susannah Sneed. They had a family of eleven children—Daniel, Mary, Simeon, Samuel, Elijah, Milton, Henley, Sneed, Isaac, Susannah and John. Stephen married Hannah Mendenhall. Their children were—Mary, Sarah, Celia, Charles, Nancy, Lydia, Ann, Daniel and Cain. Benjamin married Anna Moorman. Their children were—Gulielma, Betty, Nathan, George, Hannah, Mary, Achsa, Clarke, Anna, Benjamin and Eli. Benjamin Thomas was a liberal contributor toward the building of the Union Literary School, near Spartansburg, Ind., and continued to be one of its supporters during life. Mary married Moses Mendenhall. They had a family of six children—Francis, Alice, Mary, Rebecca, Dinah and Moses. Both parents died when the youngest was an infant, thus leaving their children helpless and rather destitute. Christiana married Thomas Knight. Their children were—John, Benjamin, Solomon, Betsey, James, Rachel, Sarah, Manoah, Samuel, Ruth and Beulah. Sarah married Charles Baldwin and had ten children—Susannah, Thomas, Mary, Lindsey, John, Ahira, Abigail, Jane, Quincy and Sarah. Francis Thomas, the fifth son, was born in Guilford County, N. C., in 1781, and was ten years of age when his parents moved to South Carolina. He learned the carpenter's trade, and followed that and millwrighting several years. He spent four years in his native county, and there met Lydia Woodard, daughter of Luke and Sarah Woodard, of Wayne County, N. C., to whom he was married in 1807. He then settled on a small farm about ten miles north of Goldsboro, and carried on farming in connection with working at his trade, about four years. In 1811, a minister of the Society of Friends, Abel Thomas, visited the meetings of the society in North Carolina, and Francis Thomas became impressed that it was his duty to accompany him to some of the meetings. While awaiting preparation for starting, the minister advised him to move to the other side of the Ohio River. The idea meeting the approbation of Mr. Thomas, he consulted with his wife, who told him to do as he thought best. Accordingly he told her to tell the neighbors that they wished to sell their farm and if possible find a purchaser before his return. His principal reason for leaving the South was the wish to take his children from the influence of slavery and intemperance. After an absence of two weeks he returned home, and the same day came a man with a basket of silver money, sufficient to buy the farm. He immediately sold his personal effects and prepared to move. He went by the way of his father's house, that he might take leave of his relatives, and while there his youngest brother determined to go with him, and together with their wives and two children each, his wife's brother, Thomas Woodard, and a young man from Guilford County, they started on their journey. After six weeks of travel they reached Richmond, Ind., and leaving his family at the house of a friend he made his way from one settler's house to another till he reached John Turner's. From there, guided by his pocket compass, he went on till he reached Nolan's Creek, one mile north of the present site of Fountain City. Here he selected his land, and built a log cabin and set about opening a farm. His brother settled about a mile farther up the creek. The next year father, brothers and two brothers-in-law, with their families, sold their homes in the South and moved to the new country. His father died six weeks after reaching Indiana. Mr. Thomas was an industrious, hard-working man, a life-long member of the Society of Friends and for many years an Elder, also a member of the Indiana Yearly Meeting. He and his wife lived to be eighty-six years of age. Their children were ten in number—Mary, Luke, Sarah, Absillit, William, John, Francis, Lydia, Isaac and Clarkson. Mary married Ahira Ballard, who died leaving a daughter, who died soon after arriving at womanhood. She afterward married Eli Hadley, and was again left a widow. She died aged about seventy years. Sarah married Joseph Hubbard, and died leaving two children—Jehiel and William. Absillit married Rowland Green. They had three children, all of whom are deceased. William died in his seventeenth year. John married Smithy Newsom. They had five children—Luke, Sarah, Lydia, Clarkson and John N. His wife died and he afterward married Hannah Davis. Francis W. married Rebecca Carlitt. They had five children—Jeremiah M., Mary

Matilda, Charlton, Michael William and Charles Francis. Lydia F. married Joseph B. Mills, and had six children—Amanda J., Francis, Clarkson, Farlay L., Absillit and Alva Jay. Isaac married Maholah Hadley. Their children were—Meashal Barkley, Mary Etta, Eli, Woodrow and Francis. He still resides on part of the old homestead. Clarkson married Sarah Jane Pitts, and also lives on part of the old homestead. Luke Thomas was born in Wayne County, S. C., March 9, 1810. When eighteen years of age he began to work at the carpenter's trade, and the next two years hired a man to take his place on the farm. In the spring of 1830 he was married to Mildred Fulghum, daughter of Anthony and Mary Fulghum. In November, 1830, he built a house near the residence of his father, which he still occupies. For eighteen years he worked at his trade, and being successful was enabled to open up a good farm, and for thirty-six years has given his attention to his farm. He has been an earnest worker in the Society of Friends. He and his sisters Mary and Absillit, and brothers John and Clarkson have been Elders in the church, and his brother Francis is a minister of much ability and influence. He has always been a liberal contributor to the church. He has attended different Yearly Meetings in the East and South and in Canada. He has served as committee-man in the publication of books and tracts; was one of the building committee on the New Garden Yearly Meeting-house and Earlham College. He had the care of the latter institution a number of years. He contributed liberally toward the building and maintenance of the Union Literary Institute, for colored people; the Indiana Manulabor Institute, for poor whites, and was also appointed by the Indiana Yearly Meeting a member of the committee to relieve the colored people during the Rebellion. That organization finally culminated in the Missionary Board, and built what is now known as South Land College, four miles from Helena, Ark., and an institution at Marysville, Tenn., the latter under the care of the New England Yearly Meeting. In politics Mr. Thomas has never taken an active part, merely exercising his right to suffrage. His children are seven in number—Mazanah married Franklin Haisley, of New Garden Township, and has had five children. Joseph married Anna Jane Hill, and lives in Randolph County, Ind., five miles from Winchester. His wife died a few years after marriage and he then married Mary Ross. They have two children. William Penn married Cynthia Jane Hadley, and settled in New Garden Township. They have one child. Sarah married Thomas E. Connady, of Miami County, Ind. They have three children. Mary Ann married Amasa M. Jenkins. They first settled in Miami County, but afterward moved to New Garden Township, Wayne County. They have had six children. Lydia F. married James A. Hadley, of Richmond, Ind. Michael Lindley resides with his parents. All the children have retained their right of membership in the Society of Friends.

Alpheus Trueblood was born in Washington County, Ind., June 14, 1849, the third son of Joshua and Esther (Parker) Trueblood, natives of North Carolina, of English origin. He was reared on a farm and attended the common schools, completing his education at the Friends' high school of New Garden Township. Sept. 2, 1869, he was married to Almeda Baldwin, of Grant County. They have two children—Effie and Marietta. Two years after his marriage Mr. Trueblood moved to the place where he now resides. His farm contains seventy acres of well-cultivated land, and is located one mile southwest of Fountain City. Mr. Trueblood has been an active minister in the Society of Friends since 1882. His wife belongs to the same society.

Charles Henry Whippo, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Monroe County, N. Y., May 22, 1830, the eldest son of John and Sarah M. (Lawrence) Whippo, and when five years of age came with his parents to Wayne County, Ind. They made the journey in a wagon and located near Dublin. He was reared on a farm. His early education was obtained in the common school, but he subsequently took up the study of the higher branches, including languages. After reaching his majority he assisted in laying out the Indiana Central Railroad, following surveying one year. He then was engaged in the agricultural implement business as salesman, and subsequently was employed on the railroad three years. Jan. 3, 1856, he was married to Matilda, daughter of Robert S. and Rachel Preston, and in March, 1856, moved to Clay County, where he remained eight years, engaged in farming and selling agricultural implements for the Wayne Agricultural Implement Company, of Dublin. In August, 1864, he returned to Wayne County, and bought his present farm in New Garden Township, consisting of 146 acres of well-improved land. Mr. and Mrs. Whippo have had seven children—Louie L., Carrie E., Edmund L., Maria M., James H., Anna P., and Mattie P. The latter died at the age of thirteen years. Mr. Whippo and his family are members of the Society of Friends.

Christopher Williams was born in Highland County, Ohio, Oct. 13, 1814, a son of Isaac and Sarah (Hussey) Williams, natives of North Carolina, the father of Stokes County and the mother of Randolph County. They were married in Highland County, Ohio, and in 1820, came to Indiana and settled in Wayne County. They reared a family of eight children, three of whom are living. The mother died in 1834, and in 1837 Mr. Williams married Annie Cloud. She died and he then married again. In 1858 he moved to Hamilton County, Ind., where he died. Our subject resided with his parents till Dec. 10, 1833, when he married Nancy, daughter of Samuel and Martha (Meredith) Pitts, and settled on a tract of wild land in Hamilton County entered by his father. He resided there seventeen years and then bought a farm a mile west of Fountain City, where he lived thirty years. In 1880 he moved to Fountain City, where he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have had eleven children, ten of whom are living—Martha, Richard, Isaac, Franklin, Annie E., Elzena, Austin (deceased), Sarah, Samuel, Mary E. and Emma J. They are members of the Methodist church.

Jacob Williams, farmer and stock-raiser, was born March 3, 1827, in Montgomery County, Pa., a son of Daniel and Margaret (Weaver) Williams. Dec. 21, 1848, he was married to Mary, daughter of Michael Fulghum, one of the pioneers of Wayne County. They had one child—Joseph H., who died in infancy. After his marriage he settled on the farm, where he has since been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. His wife died

May 22, 1850, and May 20, 1852, he married Catherine Pearson, a native of Miami County, Ohio, and a daughter of Robert Pearson. He was married May 20, 1876, to Ella, daughter of Moses and Peninnah Hough. They have four children, Ida, Grace, Mabel and Ernest. After his marriage Mr. Williams bought a small farm, and has since been engaged in farming. In 1882 he was elected Township Trustee, and was re-elected in April, 1884, for a period of two years. He is a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church, and his wife belongs to the Society of Friends.

William Williams was a native of Chatham County, N. C., where he was married to Rachel Kemp, a native of the same county, in 1786. Here he improved a farm, clearing it of timber, and making a home for his children. He was a prominent minister in the Society of Friends, and was active in the work of building up the society in Wayne County. He built the first house on the present site of Richmond, and his family were the first residents of that city. He died in 1824. His wife survived him many years.

He then moved to Jo Daviess County, Ill., and remained ten years, when he returned to Fountain City. He has been Assessor of New Garden Township for twenty years. He and his wife are members of the Wesleyan Methodist church.

Cader Woodard, deceased, was one of the "pioneers" of Wayne County, Ind., and none are more worthy of mention in the history of the county than he. He was born in Wayne County, N. C., Nov. 1, 1787, a son of Luke and Sarah (Par-ker) Woodard, of English descent. He was married in 1810<sup>2</sup> to Rachel Outland, a native of Northampton County, N. Soon after his conversion he felt called to the ministry of the gospel, and was officially recognized as a minister by the church authorities in 1862. From that time his attention was mostly given to his ministerial work. Besides laboring in the churches near his home, he made several journeys to all the States where Friends' churches were located, including the New England, Southern, Middle and Eastern States. In many of these journeys his wife accompanied him. Many conversions were the result of their gospel labors. He resided with his family in Rochester, N. Y., in 1875, and for nearly two years, 1882–1884, in Toronto, Canada. In 1875 Mr. Woodard wrote and published a devotional work of nearly 400 pages, "The Morning Star." This found ready sale and soon passed through its second edition. ## CHAPTER XVIII.

PERRY TOWNSHIP.

ONE OF THE ORIGINAL SIX.—THE NORTHWESTERN TOWNSHIP.—BOUNDARY.—AREA.—ASSESSED VALUATION.—POPULATION.—EARLY SETTLERS.—JUSTICES.—ECONOMY.—WHEN LAID OUT.—BY WHOM.—FIRST SALE OF LOTS.—ITS INCORPORATION.—ITS FIRST BUSINESS MEN.—DOCTORS AND POSTMASTERS.—MILLING INTERESTS.—COUNTERFEITERS.—WEATHER REPORTS.—CHURCHES.—SOCIETIES.—STORM.—BIOGRAPHICAL.

ONE OF THE ORIGINAL SIX.

When Wayne County was organized in 1810 it was divided only into two townships, Wayne and Washington. When Indiana became a State the law provided for county organization, and the county commissioners acting upon it divided Wayne County into six municipal divisions or townships, of which Perry was one. It occupied the northwest territory of the county, and also overlapped the present county line, for Wayne County at that time included a good deal of land now in Union, Fayette, Henry and Randolph counties, and the townships were correspondingly large. As the county became curtailed of her fair proportion, so did the original township suffer, and when at last Wayne County was left to her present dimensions, then came the internal arrangement to multiply her municipal divisions and Perry again suffered, and suffered badly. Dalton and Green, Clay and Jefferson, succeeded in bringing her territory down to eighteen square miles, and the number of acres of land 11,520. This is not one-fourth of her original size, but she will economize what she has, and will not complain if the work of curtailment has finally spent its force.

BOUNDS, ETC.

The townships may be said to lie wholly within the Twelve Mile Purchase. It is bounded on the north by Randolph County, east by Green Township, south by Clay and Jefferson, and west by Dalton and Jefferson townships. It is a square with the exception of two sections in the southeastern portion of the township, lying south of the square of sixteen sections and on the east side.

Of the 11,520 acres of land the eighteen sections call for, 11,073.69 acres are on the assessment roll. Its assessed valuation for 1882 was $303,600; for real estate and personal property, $130,525; total, $434,125.

The valuation is less than Dalton Township, which is smaller. Just why this should be so is not explained. The population of the township for the past four decades is as follows: In 1850, 868; 1860, 837; 1870, 876; 1880, 890.

This shows a stand-still, or nearly so, the past thirty years, a gain of only twenty-two being recorded, thus having but its natural increase during all these years.

It is a good township of land for agricultural purposes, and its farmers are in easy circumstances. The township is well watered, Martindale's Creek, with numerous branches, flowing south through the township from north to south, and on the east side a branch of Morgan Creek, itself a branch of Martindale's, waters that section.

WHEN SETTLED.

The township was first settled in 1813 and 1814, but at the end of the latter year there were but five families within the limits of what is now Perry Township. These families were: Jas. Warren, Wm. Blount, Thomas Lamb, John Bailey and Richard Williams, the latter arriving Christmas day, 1814, and settled just west of Economy. He was from Tennessee, as was also Warren. Lamb came from South Carolina and Blount from Kentucky, though originally from Pennsylvania. Most of them had stopped for several months a few miles below Richmond. Blount and Williams settled on section 29, Warren on section 5, Lamb and Bailey on section 29 also, but soon after removed to section 3, and all farmers. The next year, 1815, quite a number found homes within the limits of the township. This year came Henry Mills, Moses Mills, Elihu Swain, Asa Brewer, Samuel Swain, Robert Canady, Azariah Williams, Hezekiah Williams, Isaac Mills, Henry Mills and Wm. Locke, nearly on the land and the land joining what is now Economy. Miles Marshall settled in the township in 1815. John Canady came in 1816, brother of Robert, as did also Jesse Willis and his two sons, Isaac and David. These last purchased a part of the land entered by Wm. Blount. The sons of William Blount settled Blountsville, in Henry County. Thos. R. Stanford and Chas. Burroughs purchased land of Blount in partnership. Besides these mentioned there came Samuel Moore, Jesse Jones, David and John Malsby, John and Wm. Jordan, Boyd Williams, John Hart, Thos. Marshall, Thomas Swain, a blacksmith and physician, Wm. Fife, Jonathan Thornburg, Miles Marshall and Jesse Greenstreet during the years 1815 and 1816. Swain's shop was about one mile northeast of Economy and on section 21. Thos. Gallion, from Kentucky, settled in the northwest corner of section 3. Jonathan Macy is spoken of as among the first merchants in Economy and one of the first Justices in the township, and Jesse Baldwin, from North Carolina. Thos. Stanford settled on section 29. These latter all came prior to 1818.

Thomas Lamb, Jno. Bailey, Jesse Willis, Isaac Willis, Robert Canady, Thomas Swain, David Malsby, Elihu Swain, Wm. Locke, Moses Mills, Jesse Jones, Wm. Fife and Jonathan Thornburg all remained in the settlement until their deaths. Most of these early settlers were Quakers. The descendants of many of them live in the township. The children and grandchildren of Jno. and Wm. Jordan, of Robert Canady, Thomas Marshall, Elihu Swain, Richard Williams and perhaps a few others, occupy the lands entered by their ancestors. Of other early settlers who came only a short time later than those named were: Jno. Underhill, Jno. Banks, Dan'l Jones, Chas. Osborn, Jno. Pierce, Wm. Elliott, Tennessee; Jas. Luce and Job Ratliff, on sections 9 and 10, Wm. Starbuck, North Carolina; Chas. Williams, Tennessee; Hezekiah Manning, Connecticut; Abram Lenington, Pennsylvania; Jno. Hart, Kentucky; Solomon Hodson, Jas. Northrop, Ohio; Jason Howell, Abel Pew, Moses Gilmore and John Gwinn, the latter coming, however, in 1815. Then Walter Thornburg, from Pennsylvania; Richard and Daniel Wills, North Carolina; David Osborn, from the same State; Thomas Carr, Ohio; Amy Hall, Tennessee; Thomas Cox and Uriah Barnett. Reuben Macy came from North Carolina; Isaac Osborn, some years later; Jno. Davis, Tennessee; Henry Mullinex, Jos. Jackson, Allan Judd, Josiah Johnson, Geo. D. McPherson and Benjamin and John Elmore, Tennessee. These were the early settlers of Perry Township, and in many cases they have left the impress of their character upon the pages of time. Quite a large number of them in their religious belief were Friends—Dan'l Jones, Chas. Osborn, John Pierce, and others.

The Quakers built a church in the northeast corner of section 29, in 1816. They had held meetings at private houses, mostly at that of Robert Canady. The first Methodist services were held at the house of Thomas R. Stanfords, and afterward at the house of John Jordan. This was before 1820.

Most of the second class of settlers came from South Carolina, making almost all the early settlers from the South, originally from the Carolinas, some having come first to Tennessee, then here.

The first grist-mill was put up about one mile southwest of Economy, by Thomas Carr, Dan'l Mills and Richard Mills, in about 1826 or 1827. A saw-mill had been built on the creek just by Economy in 1819, by Robert Canady. It remained until within a few years. The grist-mill was torn away many years ago.

By repairs and rebuilding a saw-mill has been kept there until the present time; present owner, John A. Shepard. An oil-mill was built at the same place as early as 1830; proprietors, Richard Williams, Wm. Barnard and Matthew Williams, and was run for six or seven years.

The first blacksmith in the township was Thos. Swain, who settled on the northeast corner of section 28. He was a Member of the Legislature when it met at Corydon in 1820. John Macy was also a blacksmith.

Some of the early Justices of the Peace elected in the township were: Jonathan Macy, Miles Marshall, Isaiah Osborn; in Economy, Absalom Wright, Wm. Williams. John M. Williams was a Justice in 1837 and served a great many years.

The business interests of the township are now concentrating at Economy, the only village within its border, a description of which will be found in the following pages.

ECONOMY.

This town was laid out by Chas. Osborn in July of the year 1825, and is almost in the exact center of Perry Township, as now formed. It is located on a handsome eminence which gives it a most pleasing view of the surrounding country, and with an excellent drainage the village is dry and very healthy. These advantages of pure air and good water, and a social people, make one of the most pleasant of country villages. The inhabitants were of the denomination of Friends, or the larger portion of them. It is some fifteen miles northwest of Richmond, not on the line of any railroad, and will therefore not likely become more than it is—a small country village with pleasant surroundings.

SALE OF LOTS, ETC.

The first sale of lots took place in July, 1825, and brought from $5 to $20, according to size and location. In 1826 there were some fifty inhabitants, one store, postoffice, and the trades and mechanics fairly represented. In 1850 it boasted of a population of 158, and in 1860, 259. In 1870 it had fallen off to 229; in 1880, 233, and at this time has about 250 inhabitants.

SOMETHING ABOUT INCORPORATION.

The citizens of the town met at Wm. Bernard's Sept. 1, 1828, for the purpose of ascertaining the will of the people on the subject of incorporation. Isaiah Osborn was chosen President of the meeting, and Richard Williams, Secretary.

The vote was unanimous for incorporation. One week after the above meeting was held, to wit., on Sept. 8, 1825, an election was held (the town having been incorporated) at the house of Wm. Bernard, for the Board of Trustees. The following were elected: Wm. Bernard, Rich. Williams, Jonathan Macy and Josiah Osborn. The land on which Economy stands was entered and purchased by Henry and Moses Mills, in 1815. They were Tennesseans. Henry Mills sold to Elihu Swain and Wm. Locke, and they in turn to Chas. Osborn, who came in possession in 1819. At the time of the first sale of lots, in 1825, the house of Henry Mills was the only one on the town site. As soon as the sale was completed Josiah Osborn put up the first house, and of course others soon followed on the lots they had purchased. Jonathan Macy was the first merchant, removing his store from the country, having first started it about one mile southwest of the village. The next store was that kept by Matthew Williams. Macy's store was located on lot 19, in a part of the house which is still standing, and owned by the D. B. Robbins heirs. Macy sold out in 1833 and removed to New Castle, Henry County, and at this time, or a little earlier, Williams moved from New Castle his goods which he had in a store there, and first located in the bottoms just north of Economy, but soon after moved up into town. A cluster of houses had been built in the bottoms, and a store started there by Moses Mills and Walter Thornburgh. In 1828 they built a larger frame building and kept a much larger stock and greater variety of goods. The little town in the bottoms was for a while quite a rival to Economy, but proving sickly it was finally abandoned. John Thornburgh also came up into the village, which left the "bottoms" tenantless so far as business was concerned, and the seven or eight houses were abandoned as above stated. Thornburg did business in Economy for nearly fifteen years.

Charles Osborn was limited in means, and as a method to improve his finances laid his land out in lots to sell. As he was constrained to sell his land he considered this the most economical way of proceeding, and named the new town "Economy," in preference to Charlestown, as suggested by his friends. A postoffice was secured in the year 1826; first Postmaster was Dr. Thomas F. Butler, who, will be found, was the first regular physician to locate. The other Postmasters were: Matthew Williams,—; Barrett Barnett, Dec. 28, 1832; John Thornburgh, May 9, 1838; Andrew Spillard, Feb. 14, 1842; Barnabas Coffin, Aug. 16, 1842; Samuel Hervey, Jan. 21, 1846; Absalom Wright, March 1, 1852; Jonathan B. Clark, Dec. 8, 1865; George W. Robbins, June 4, 1867.

A carding-machine, propelled by an inclined-plane horse-power, was built by Reuben Macy, about 1829, and was in operation about four or five years.

A steam planing-mill was built in town, in 1867, by Elam Osborn and Henry Beard, and a saw-mill was attached in 1870.

William Locke and Jonathan Macy are named as the earliest merchants in the township. Locke kept his store where he settled, one and one-quarter miles northeast of where Economy now is. Much of his trade was in deer-skins, raccoon skins, rags, ginseng, pork, etc. He afterward moved it one-half mile southeast of his house and kept it two or three years, stopping it about 1820.

Jonathan Macy started his store one mile southwest of Economy, in about 1821, and kept it about five years.

A tannery was established in Economy by William Locke about the year 1825. Among the names of those who have since carried on business at this establishment are: Joshua Canaday, George P. Rupe, Price & Surface, James Stanley, Coffin & Hinshaw, and others. Its last proprietor was Wm. Ballanger. It has been discontinued.

The first resident physician in the town or township, as above, was Thomas T. Butler, who settled in Economy about the year 1826. The settlers had been previously served, in great part, by Drs. Warner, of Richmond, and Waldo, of Jacksonburg. Among those who have succeeded Dr. Butler were Henry Carver, in 1834, Josiah T. Bohrer, Macy B. Maulsby, George W. Robbins, Caleb K. Patterson (eclectic), Thomas Adams, Royal R. Jennings. Drs. G. W. Robbins, Jonathan B. Clark and John M. Clark are the present practicing physicians.

Josiah Osborn started a cabinet shop on lot 21 in 1825. George Rupe started a hatter's shop in 1826, on lot 20.

A brick yard was started in 1826 by Hezekiah Hutchins, on the corner of Maine and Market streets. Afterward Dan'l Jones started a brick yard on lot 43, Market street. A steam grist-mill and saw-mill were built at Economy about the year 1830, by Nathan Proctor, and run about five years. John and Larkin Maulsby built, in 1849, a steam saw-mill, and afterward added a corn-cracker. They were run but a few years.

Hinshaw and Coffin, who kept a general stock, commenced business in 1839, and Hinshaw afterward kept several years. W. H. Hinshaw and Barnabas Coffin composed the firm. Maulsby & Robbins commenced as early as 1845. Wm. Clark, from North Carolina, in 1860, bought an interest in the store of Barnabas Coffin and Thomas Elwood Clark, son of Wm. Clark. Daniel B. Robbins, who was in the business more than a quarter of a century, and T. Elwood Clark and Barzilla H. Clark, brothers, in partnership.

A drug store was kept in town by George W. Robbins and Elisha K. Olney, and another by Mahlon Ballenger, in 1878 and later.

The town now has two dry goods stores, one hardware and grocery, one hardware, grocery and drug store, one grocery and fruit stand, one hotel, one tile factory, one saw, planing and furniture mill (which is the most important establishment in the village), three blacksmith shops, two shoe shops, one pump shop, two wagon shops, one large brick school building of six rooms, three churches,—Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist and Friends,—three physicians.

COUNTERFEITERS.

Nathan Proctor came from Virginia to Perry Township in about 1820. Dressed cheaply, was a very peculiar character, of wild, roving disposition. Went back to Virginia, after a short time and returned again in 1825, showing indications of wealth in his dress, etc., and in 1828, after securing confidence and financial support of many citizens, built a saw and grist mill at the village of Economy; ran the mill a few years.

He was the leader of a strong party of counterfeiters. For more than ten years they carried on the system, either making false bills, many of $100 denomination, or receiving them through Proctor from accessories in Virginia. After long effort, however, during which night captures, daring vigilance exploits and riots were indulged in, they were finally broken up. Some of the parties made long trips through the South and elsewhere to dispose of the counterfeit money. Economy gained a wide but unwholesome reputation through their unhallowed proceedings and the citizens were glad to escape from their contaminating presence.

WEATHER OBSERVATIONS.

On the 1st of August, 1833, John Osborn, a resident of Economy, began taking observations of the temperature by thermometer, three times a day, viz., at sunrise, at noon and at sunset. It was an independent enterprise for his own gratification. It was kept up with perfect regularity until his death, in 1874, when he requested that it be carried on by his son, Josiah Osborn, at least until the end of fifty years from Aug. 1, 1833. It was carried out, not a single observation having been missed in the fifty years, which terminated July 31, 1883. Since that time the observations continue to be made.

Some of the results of these observations are: Jan. 1, 1864, av.,  $-17.5^{\circ}$  Fahr.; the day before, av.,  $-38^{\circ}$ ; Jan. 19, 1852, av.,  $-14^{\circ}$ ; Jan. 9, 1875, av.,  $-16^{\circ}$ ; Dec. 28, 29, 30, 1880, av.,  $-8^{\circ}$ ; June 5, 1859, av.,  $49.3^{\circ}$ —first obs.,  $30^{\circ}$ ; Aug. 29, 1833, av.,  $59.3^{\circ}$ —first obs.,  $38^{\circ}$ .

Below freezing six times in June, two in July, and three times in August, 1839. Below freezing four times in June, 1840. On May 21, 1883, snow fell about four inches.

CHURCHES.

M. E. Church (Economy).—Before the first church was erected in Economy a society was formed, and preaching was had two and a half miles northwest of the village, in the year 1817. Asa Beck and James Beggs were two of the early preachers, and Jas. Havens, circuit preacher of Whitewater Circuit. Meetings were held in private houses, generally in that of Jno. Jordan, Sr., where the society was formed. A society was formed southeast of Economy several years later. The house was called "Eden" Meeting-house, and stood near the southeast corner of Perry Township. The early members were: John Jordan, Wm. Jordan, James Hudson, Jesse Comer and their wives, Rachel Ellis, and a few others. Soon after were added Joseph Stanley, James Stanford, and their wives, of the first-named church, and of the latter were: John Cain, Simon Adamson, Jacob Bowman, George D. McPherson, Wm. Starbuck, Barrett Barnett, Jesse Greenstreet, Daniel Worth. The leaders of this society were John Cain, George McPherson and Wm. Starbuck. These two societies became united afterward, and centered at Economy, about equally distant from each. The house was built in 1829, on lot 43, and was the first church in the village. Jno. Jordan was a prime mover in this union. The house was enlarged after several years, and finally a new one was erected in 1858, the present one.

Among the early preachers after James Havens were: Wm. Holman, — Summerville, Daniel Fraley, Wm. Hunt and Elijah Whitten. This society, too, was disrupted by the "abolition" question. The radical anti-slavery members seceded about the year 1842, and organized as a Wesleyan Methodist society. Among its members were: George D. McPherson, Elihu Smith, Ira H. Hutchins, Wm. Williams, John Maulsby, John M. Williams. This organization lasted only about three years. The society has been generally strong, and is in good condition now. It has been a point on the Hagerstown Circuit since about 1845. Prior to that date it had been on the Winchester and Centreville circuits. The present Class-leader is Jesse Greenstreet; Sunday-school Superintendent, Thomas Frazier.

Wesleyan Methodist.—In 1842 the old Methodist Episcopal church split on the subject of slavery and the Wesleyan church was formed. It was only short lived but was revived again in two or three years, and has since been a fixed organization. Alexander Haywood was the earliest pastor. Members who composed the church at the time of its organization were: Elihu Smith and Elizabeth, his wife, Ira H. Hutchins and Susannah, his wife, and perhaps others. On the same day Elizabeth Mills, Martha E. Thornburg, and Emma Sutton were “received into full connection.” Elihu Smith was chosen Class-leader; and a few months after, Ira H. Hutchins, Steward. Preachers in charge since the organization: A. Haywood, Emsley Brookshire,—Harris, Wm. Gladding, Aaron Worth, Enoch Marsh, L. C. Beckford, John M. Johnson, Elijah Coate, John W. Johnson, John Fall, Elijah Coate.

The Wesleyan Chapel in Economy was built in 1857, a frame building still standing and used. It is used also for political and miscellaneous meetings. This chapel has been one of the strongest religious societies in the vicinity, having over 100 members in 1860 and 1861, during the ministry of Lewis Beckford. Society now has about twenty-five members; pastor, J. W. Bilderback, Ira Hutchins is Class-leader. The society is not very active at this time.

For a short time about 1840, a Baptist church was formed but it was of short duration, and the United Brethren, also, between 1860 and 1870; that, too, has ceased to exist.

Society of Friends.—This society erected a cabin about twenty feet square in the bottoms, near Economy, known as Puckett, in the year 1816, and was the earliest religious society in the township of Perry. Their first meeting-house was built of round logs, about a quarter of a mile northwest of the present town of Economy, in 1816. It was warmed by charcoal and white-oak bark, burned on a hearth in the center. Some of the first members were: Elihu Swain, James Warren, Richard Williams and their wives, Robert Canaday and his wife Amy, an exhorter, Charity Mills, David Maulsby, Wm. Locke, Thomas Marshall, Henry and Moses Mills, and Charles Osborn. Amy Canaday was the only preacher. After a few years, a double log house, 48 x 24 feet in size, was built near by. Charles Osborn, who came in 1819, was the first preacher of any note. This has always, to the present time, been called the "Springfield Church." About the year 1842 the anti-slavery question caused a division of the society. The Abolitionists retained the old house until it was abandoned about the year 1850. The other portion of the society erected the present frame church in the town, in 1843, and those who left the church, known as Abolitionists, have reunited with it since. The membership is about 100, and the Rev. Charles Osborn, grandson of the first, is the present preacher. He is a farmer and lives two miles north of Economy. As a church they are strong temperance workers, Charles Osborn being the leading man of the temperance league since its organization, and has been very earnest in all temperance work.

The Bethel Church of the United Brethren was organized in 1843 by the Rev. Mr. Jones, a circuit preacher. It is located south of Economy, on Martindale's Creek. Meetings were first held in a school-house, but a few years later put up their present church building, which is in rather a bad condition. The members who first entered or formed the society were: James Powell, Robert Millman, Aaron Locke, James Wright, Rev. John T. Vartaman, Wm. Vartaman. Their minister was the Rev. Daniel Stover. The society grew quite rapidly, having during the years 1850 and 1851 not less than 125 members. This was during the ministry of the Rev. Thos. Evans and Rev. Jno. T. Vartaman. Rev. James Cook was also pastor in charge. The church does not now number so many members, yet it is strong, in a healthy condition and carries with it a large influence for good. The membership is now seventy-five. The present pastor is the Rev. Curtis B. Small; Francis Cain, Class-leader; Elder of the district, Rev. F. M. Moore. The Sabbath-school is conducted the year round and has for its efficient Superintendent Mr. Chas. C. Weyl. Preaching is held every two weeks, and class-meetings on every alternate Sabbath day.

New Hope United Brethren Church is situate northeast of Economy about three miles, and within a few feet of the county line. It was organized in 1858, but the society was very small and worshiped in a small log cabin about twenty feet square, formerly used by another sect called Gibsonites. In about 1870 a new and very fine frame church was built, the society having recently become strong under the pastoral care of Rev. Jno. T. Vartaman. The present pastor is Rev. B. R. B. Halcomb; Class-leader, Wm. Bell. The church has now a membership of about 100 members and keeps up a well-attended Sunday-school the entire year. The society is in the full tide of prosperity, and in the fullness of its strength is exercising an influence for good that is far reaching and effective. A few of its first members only are remembered, while in its infancy. These were James Hutchins, George Scantland, Wm. Chalmers and their wives.

THE GREAT STORM OF 1824.

The great cyclone of July 18, 1824, is thus described by Mr. Jno. A. Locke, in his articles on Early Days, contributed to the Hagerstown Exponent. It would be well for early history if these sketches could be put in book form. They are worthy of it. He says in substance:

“The rain fell in a perfect flood and the bottoms were soon covered and the waters became a raging torrent. Timber was blown down and the roads blocked for miles. A meeting was held at the house of Mr. Macy’s by Rev. Chas. Osborn, it being Sunday, and while Mr. Osborn was preaching the storm came up. The meeting was broken up, for nothing could be heard during the fury of the storm and the roar of the raging waters. The water rose so rapidly that some who attended the meeting living on the other side of the West Branch could not get home until the next day, and one man was said to have been three days working his way through the fallen debris. The roofs of several log cabins were blown off, but, strange to say, no one was reported killed. The country, however, was thinly settled, and the log cabins, strong and durable and protected by the heavy forests, were not easily destroyed. The roof might go, but the cabin stood firm. It was the heaviest storm ever known in that section of the country, and Perry Township was one of its greatest sufferers.”

his death married John W. Good ; Elihu S., born July 14, 1838, died Sept. 4, 1839 ; Cynthia Emeline, born July 6, 1840, married John R. Allen, who died and she then married James Allen ; died in Kansas, March 22, 1875. Mrs. Thornburgh married Elihu Davis March 10, 1843. They resided in Economy and vicinity till his death, April 10, 1875. Rachel Davis was a birthright member of the Society of Friends. When the separation took place in that society in 1842-'3 on the subject of slavery, she cast her lot with the division known as Anti-Slavery Friends. When the barriers to anti-slavery work which caused the division were removed so that most returned to the ancient fold, she chose to identify herself with the Wesleyan Methodist church, of which she is an honored and consistent member. She has heard the proclamation of emancipation from the highest officer in the nation, and her own sons have aided in making that proclamation a reality to the slave. And, further, she has lived to see a generation arrive at manhood and womanhood that never can know the odium once attached to Abolitionist. The temperance cause has received no small part of her attention during life, and her zeal and interest seem to increase with years. Rachel Davis is now in the eighty-second year of her age, and her mind is clear and vigorous. She does her own housework, and lives an active, cheerful, and contented life. Her society is sought and enjoyed by a large circle of friends of all classes and ages.

He subsequently purchased 107 acres of land on sections 24 and 25, and made additions to it from time to time till now, after dividing his land with his children, he has 220 acres reserved for his own use. In an early day he had to take his wheat to Lawrenceburg, where he sold sixty-three pounds for 50 cents. He received $1.25 a hundred for his hogs. Olvey*, druggist, Economy, Ind., was born in Randolph County, Ind., near the Wayne County line, July 21, 1839, a son of Edward and Mary (Low) Olvey, natives of North Carolina, who came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1836, and subsequently moved to Randolph County, where our subject was born and reared. He resided at home till the breaking out of the civil war, enlisting Nov. 8, 1861, in Company E, Fifty-seventh Indiana Infantry. He participated in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Shiloh, Corinth, Atlanta and Franklin. At the latter place he was taken prisoner, was taken to Columbus, Tenn., and a short time after, while, as they supposed, en route to Marietta, Miss., he, with three comrades, escaped, near Corinth, and after passing four days and nights of untold hardships, reached the Union lines. In the fall of 1862 he was detailed on the recruiting service, and spent the fall and part of the winter in Indiana, and in November, 1863, was detailed in the same service. He was discharged Jan. 28, 1865. In 1869 he moved to Economy, and opened a drug store, and has built up a thriving business. In 1872 he was appointed Postmaster. Dec. 28, 1868, he was married to Bell, daughter of John and Martha (Johnson) Atkinson, of Wayne County.

Charles Osborn.—Matthew Osborn was a native of England. His son, Daniel Osborn, was born in Sussex County, Del., March 14, 1745, and married Margaret Stout, a native of York County, Pa. Charles Osborn was born in Guilford County, N. C., Aug. 21, 1775. In 1794 he moved with his parents to Knox County, Tenn., where he was married Jan. 11, 1798, to Sarah Newman, a native of Virginia. In the fall of 1811 he moved to Lost Creek, Jefferson County, where his wife died Aug. 10, 1812, leaving seven children—James, born Nov. 10, 1798; Josiah, born March 2, 1800; John; Isaiah; Lydia, afterward Mrs. Eli Newlin, born Oct. 6, 1805; Elijah, born Nov. 15, 1807; Elihu, born Feb. 9, 1810. Sept. 26, 1813, Mr. Osborn married Hannah, daughter of Elihu and Sarah Swain, and to them were born nine children—Narcissa, born June 20, 1814; Cynthia, born Sept. 30, 1815, married A. Liggerfoose; Gideon S., born Aug. 12, 1817; Charles N., born Sept. 20, 1819; Parker B., born Oct. 14, 1821; Jordan, born Aug. 6, 1823; Benjamin, born Nov. 21, 1825; Sarah S., born Feb. 21, 1828, married J. B. Bonine; Anna, born Aug. 20, 1830, married Jesse East. Charles Osborn was a minister in the Society of Friends. He was the organizer of the manumission societies of Tennessee and North Carolina in the year 1814. Although reared in a slave State his sympathies were early enlisted in the behalf of the slave, and he became his life-long friend. In the fall of 1816 he moved to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, where he published the Philanthropist, a religious anti-slavery paper. In January, 1819, he moved to Wayne County, Ind., settling where the town of Economy (which he afterward laid out) now stands. In 1842 he moved to Cass County, Mich., and in 1848 to Porter County, Ind., where he died Dec. 29, 1850. Charles Osborn was a minister of some note in the Society of Friends. He visited nearly all the meetings of his church on this continent, and many of them more than once, traveling several thousand miles to accomplish it, much of the time on horseback. In 1832 and 1833 he visited meetings in Great Britain and the continent of Europe. His devotion to the slave, and especially his opposition to colonization, cost him his position in the society, and he was one of the leaders in organizing the society of Antislavery Friends, of which he was a member at the time of his death. His widow lived with her daughter, Mrs. Bonine, till Feb. 12, 1878, when she died, aged eighty-eight years. Isaiah Osborn, a son of Charles and Sarah (Newman) Osborn, was born in Knox County, Tenn., Nov. 25, 1803. In 1816 he moved with his father to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, where he learned the printer's trade in the office of the Philanthropist, and in 1819 came with his father to Wayne County, Ind. In the fall of 1822 he went to Greenville, Tenn., and worked in a printing office two years for $100 a year and his board, most of the time in the office of the Genius of Universal Emancipation. In the fall of 1824 he returned to Centreville, Ind., and worked on the Western Emporium till the spring of 1827, when he went to Indianapolis and remained a year. He then returned to Wayne County and entered the land on which he afterward lived, the patent bearing date April, 1828. Early in 1829 he was elected Justice of the Peace, an office he held four years. In the meantime he cleared his land, planted an orchard, and built a house preparatory to moving to his farm. He also taught school and worked at his trade in the winter. In the winter of 1832 he worked for Septimus Smith, publisher of the Western Times, riding from Economy to Centreville and back each week, attending to the duties of Justice one day in the week and setting the required amount of type, receiving $3 a week for his services. For a number of years he was Assessor and Collector of Taxes of the northern townships. He moved to his farm in 1833, and there died, June 16, 1846. His educational advantages were limited, but by his own efforts he succeeded in obtaining sufficient education to enable him to fill responsible positions in church and State. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends. June 24, 1829, he was married to Lydia, daughter of Job and Rhoda Worth. She was born in Guilford County, N. C., Nov. 1, 1805, and in 1823, moved with her mother to Randolph County, Ind. To Mr. and Mrs. Osborn were born eight children—Caroline, born Feb. 4, 1831, is the wife of William Edgerton, and lives near Dunreith, Henry Co., Ind.; Charles W.; Rhoda, born Dec. 7, 1834, died Sept. 9, 1859; Edmund B., born Nov. 4, 1836; Lawrinda, born Oct. 1, 1838, married Thomas Ward, of Winchester, Ind.; Narcissa, born Oct. 30, 1840, married Henry W. Charles; died Sept. 24, 1878; Martha W., born Feb. 15, 1843, died March 31, 1848; Eunice, born May 4, 1845, died April 7, 1848. Mrs. Osborn is a woman of rare ability. Left a widow with eight children, the eldest but fifteen years of age, with but little means and several debts incurred by her husband's sickness, she went to work with energy, and succeeded in paying the debts and rearing her family, giving the six that grew to maturity a better education than the majority of children at that day received. After remaining a widow twelve years and rearing her children, she married David Maxwell, and moved to Union County, Ind., and from thence to Dunreith, Henry County, where she lived till Mr. Maxwell's death in 1880. Since then she has lived with her son Charles, near Economy. She has been a lifelong member of the Society of Friends, and has held many important positions in the society. Her life has been one of faith and good works, and she still takes great interest in the moral and religious work of the day.

Charles Worth Osborn, son of Isaiah and Lydia Osborn, was born in Economy, Feb. 8, 1833, and for twenty-seven years was a resident of Perry Township. Residing since then within two miles of Economy, though in the edge of Randolph County, his life-work has been almost as closely identified with Wayne County as though he lived within its borders. Up to the winter of 1845-'6 he was sent to various private schools in the neighborhood. His father died when he was thirteen years old, and from that time on for six or seven years he only attended school a few weeks during the winter, staying at home to work a day or two almost every week. After securing the harvest of 1853 he left home with $2.25 in his pocket (the proceeds of the sale of some apples in Hagerstown) to attend the remaining two months of the summer session of the Union Literary Institute—a manual labor school near Spartansburg, Randolph Co., Ind. Here students could pay half their board in work; here he could work more than enough to pay half his board, and sell his time for money to others who preferred to pay all money. In this way he was enabled to pay his way with but little aid from home. He and his sister Rhoda attended the two following sessions of five months each at this institution. At the commencement of the first the board dismissed the Superintendent, and not being able to supply his place till spring, they employed Charles to attend to the duties of the office for the term, which consisted in providing for the table for thirty boarders, superintend their work on the farm, collect and keep an account of their board, etc. This, in addition to five studies and hearing one class recite each day, so occupied his time that for more than two months he allowed himself but four and a half hours' sleep each night. The following session the Superintendent was absent much of the time, and he gave the immediate care of the farm work to Charles, thereby enabling him not only to pay his own way but to assist his sister also. The teacher in this institute was Prof. E. Tucker, a graduate of Oberlin College, and an excellent instructor, and the year spent under this preceptor was the most important of Charles's education. In December, 1854, he began his first public school in Green Township, having obtained a license for two years; farmed the next summer, and the following fall and winter taught the first of five sessions in Economy; taught in Greensboro, Henry County, in the spring of 1856, and then went to Antioch College two terms. He taught during the winter and farmed in the summer for the most part till 1867, when he left the school-room for the farm, but not without some regrets. His father and sister having died of consumption, and the generally crowded and poorly ventilated school-rooms of those times subjecting him to frequent colds, he deemed it best to follow an occupation that would bring him more in the open air. Charles W. Osborn is a minister in the Society of Friends; was Clerk of his Monthly Meeting for seventeen years, and fills other important positions in the church. He has ever been an active worker in the temperance cause, appointing meetings and talking temperance in the surrounding neighborhood, while attending school at the institute. He has been identified with the different temperance movements since that time, and for the past four years has been President of the Economy Temperance League, an organization that has met weekly during this time. He has also been prominently connected with the Sunday-school work of his church and also of Wayne County. In the spring of 1858 he was married to Asenath W. Wood, daughter of Jacob and Phebe Wood, of Greensboro, Ind. They have had six children, three of whom are living. He is now comfortably situated with his family, on a little farm two miles north of Economy.

Edmund B. Osborn was born in the house where he now lives, Nov. 4, 1836, the youngest son of Isaiah and Lydia (Worth) Osborn. He was reared a farmer and was educated in the schools of Perry Township. When he was nine years old his father died, and his mother subsequently married again. He was married Dec. 12, 1867, to Mary E. Rinehart, daughter of Charles and Mary Rinehart. They have had four children—Charles A., Lydia E., Mary V. and Lloyd Garrison. Mr. Osborn has been a successful farmer, and has surrounded his family with all the comforts of life. He is an ardent worker in the temperance cause, never having used tobacco in any form, drank a glass of liquor nor tasted a drop of whisky; has not tasted coffee for more than thirty years, neither has there been a cup of it made in his house since he was married except for visitors or work hands. Milk he uses, and advocates the use of the same. He was raised a Friend or Quaker, but is a Freethinker or Materialist.

John Osborn, son of Charles and Sarah (Newman) Osborn, was born in Knox County, Tenn., Nov. 28, 1801. His early life was passed with his parents, and, like all children of early pioneers, his educational advantages were limited. His innate desire for knowledge, especially for the sciences, overcame all difficulties, and while other boys were spending their leisure hours in sport he was spending his in study. Acquiring a thorough knowledge of mathematics and natural science and a fair acquaintance of literature and art, with but little aid from schools, he did not appreciate the value of institutions of learning. He studied medicine with Dr. Thomas Carroll, first in Richmond and going with him to St. Clairsville, Ohio. He completed his studies but never practiced, giving as a reason that it did not deserve the name of a science as medicine was so uncertain in its effects. He turned his attention wholly to the culture of fruit and to the nursery business. To him, more than any other man, does Wayne County owe the reputation she has had for nearly fifty years, of the quality of her fruit. Before starting his nursery in Economy, in 1833, he walked to Long Island and back again, to obtain the best varieties of fruit grown in the East, carrying the cuttings in his hand; and in grafting did not lose a single variety. After testing them, if he became convinced that any variety was not suited to this section he rejected it. He was also particular to whom he sold trees, saying he wished to sell only to those who would take care of and be benefited by them. His close observation enabled him to tell one variety of tree from another as readily as a backwoodsman distinguishes the different forest trees. Not only Indiana, but Michigan, Illinois and Iowa are largely indebted to him for fine fruit trees. He took pleasure in studying the laws that govern the growth of vegetables and plants, cultivating them year after year to obtain a particular variety. For forty years prior to his death he kept a meteorological record, making three observations a day, and requested his family to keep it ten years longer. His son Josiah is carrying out his wishes. Valuable geological specimens collected by him are still in the possession of his family. Mr. Osborn was married May 9, 1833, to Rachel, daughter of Josiah and Polly Johnson, of Dover, Wayne Co., Ind. Seven children were born to them—Amanda M., born Jan. 30, 1834, died Jan. 4, 1835; Emily, born Jan. 23, 1837; married Elisha Wright; died Oct. 24, 1855; Elim, born Dec. 16, 1838, is a resident of Economy; Ellen, born Dec. 8, 1843, married Robert Haxton; Josiah, born Jan. 19, 1846, also a resident of Economy; Sarah Zerelda, born July 15, 1853, married Benjamin Limning, July 18, 1881, and died Feb. 14, 1883; Martha, born Nov. 30, 1855. Mr. Osborn died May 2, 1874. His widow still resides in Economy.

Lewis Peirce was born on the farm where he now resides Nov. 13, 1833, a son of John and Annie (Jones) Peirce, his father a native of Lancaster County, Pa., and his mother of Guilford County, N. C. His parents were married in Ohio, and in 1820 moved to Wayne County, Ind., and bought eighty acres of unimproved land. He afterward entered a tract of land in Perry Township, which he improved, living there till his death in May, 1874. His wife died in 1864. They had a family of thirteen children, but four of whom are living. Our subject remained at home till manhood. In 1856 he purchased the old homestead, where he still lives. He was married Oct. 23, 1857, to Hannah, daughter of Jonathan and Priscilla Cain. They have had four children but two of whom are living—Roy and Byron. Webster and Annie are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Peirce are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

David Petty was born in Perry Township, Wayne Co., Ind., June 29, 1826, a son of Josiah and Sally (Sheets) Petty. His education was limited, being obliged when quite young to work as a hand on the farm. His mother died when he was sixteen years of age, and he then served an apprenticeship at the tailor's trade. That being too confining he afterward learned the shoemaker's trade, and as was then the custom, went from house to house, and, made shoes for the family. After reaching his majority he worked by the day one season and then rented a farm three years. He then bought eighty acres of land which he improved and subsequently sold it for double what he paid, and bought the place where he now lives, which he added to from time to time till he had 200 acres. He was married May 8, 1850, to Rhoda, daughter of Daniel and Sarah Shaw. They had six children, five of whom are living. Mrs. Petty died in July, 1864. In October, 1865, Mr. Petty married Ann, daughter of Peter and Catherine Wright. Seven children were born to them, all living. His wife died April 10, 1876, and March 6, 1878, he married Marion, daughter of William Gentry. Mr. and Mrs. Petty are members of the Baptist church.

Josiah Petty, deceased, was born in Surry County, N. C., May 10, 1790, a son of Zachariah and Nancy Petty, natives of England, who came to America prior to the Revolutionary war. Our subject's early life was spent in assisting his father on the farm and in the distillery, and his educational advantages were limited. In 1811 he came to Wayne County, Ind., and carried on a distillery, but, subsequently, on account of the troubles incident to the war of 1812, he went to Ohio, remaining there nine months, when he again came to Wayne County. He built a distillery in Perry Township and ran it till 1834 or 1835, and then went to Randolph County and remained three or four years. He returned to Wayne County and located in Cambridge City, and in 1840 moved to Miami County and settled near Peru. In 1851 he returned to Wayne County. He was married in 1817 to Sally Sheets, a native of Ohio, of Scotch descent. They had a family of nine children, eight sons and one daughter, seven of whom are living. Mr. Petty was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church many years, but in later life he united with the United Brethren church. He died April 15, 1878. His wife died in 1840.

Daniel B. Robbins, deceased, was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, a man of indomitable energy and great force of character, a leader of men, yet quiet and unobtrusive, wielding his great influence by a quiet demeanor and a firmness that showed the strength of his character, and a latent force that gave success to all his undertakings, either in business, political or social life. Mr. Robbins was born in Adams County, Ohio, April 18, 1825, and was the third son of Philip and Phœbe (Caldwell) Robbins. His father removed to Wayne County in 1832, and settled in Perry Township, near the village of Economy, where he grew to man's estate. His education was limited, receiving, however, the full instruction given in the public or district school. On reaching his majority he left the paternal homestead, and started out to seek a fortune by his own unaided exertions. He found a clerkship first in a store in Huntsville, Randolph County, where he remained nearly or quite a year, and then returned to Economy and entered the store of Barnabas Coffin in 1847, who was at that time one of the leading merchants of the county. By his engaging manners, prompt business character, and prudent habits, he became a partner in the business after a few years of clerkship, and continued as such until 1856, when he sold his interest to his partner, and in a short time started business for himself in the same town. His steady habits and genial character made him many strong friends, and he received from them a liberal patronage, as also from the rich farming community, of which Economy is the center. Thus pleasantly surrounded, he continued the mercantile business for thirty-six years, being considered, as a merchant and a man, one of the leading spirits, and always ready to contribute of his wealth to the deserving and the needy, yet never in this for public favor or praise. Oct. 25, 1855, Mr. Robbins was married to Marticia, daughter of Barnabas and Marion (Worth) Coffin, who came from Randolph County, N. C., in 1840 and became prominent among the cultivated and hospitable people of Wayne County. There were born to them four children, three daughters and a son. The latter, Seward B., one of the most promising and intelligent youths of this section of the State, died ere he had scarcely reached his majority, mourned as only a loving son and brother could be by those who knew his worth and general unselfish traits of character. The three daughters are named respectively, Corinne E., Annie J. and Alma C. With a most pleasant home and all the surroundings that culture, refinement and wealth could give, death took him in his relentless grasp, and Daniel B. Robbins closed his earthly career Dec. 26, 1882, mourned by his family and a large circle of friends.

George W. Robbins, M. D., was born in Adams County, Ohio, March 15, 1820, son of Philip and Phœbe C. (Caldwell) Robbins, natives of Westmoreland County, Pa., who removed to Ohio in 1815, and in December, 1829, came to Wayne County, Ind. Our subject received but a limited education in his youth, but being ambitious studied at home and obtained some acquirements. In 1841 began the study of medicine in Ohio, finished up his course in Economy, Ind., and commenced practice in 1844, where he has had a lucrative and successful practice ever since. Graduated in the Ohio Medical College in the winter '62 and '63. He was married to Julia W. Forsyth, of Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 17, 1848, to whom have been born five children, viz.: Sarah J. (deceased), John F., Byram C., Florence May and Hattie V. The subject of this discourse has been studying the parasitic theory of disease for many years, and on this basis got up a remedy in 1879, known as "Robbins's Antiseptic Compound," and after using it without a failure for eighteen months his friends solicited him to place it on the market, so that their distant friends might obtain its benefits, and its use has been fraught with more success, and it has received greater encomiums than any remedy in the same length of time.

George W. Scantland, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Culpeper County, Va., June 18, 1831, a son of George W. and Catherine (Burdett) Scantland, and when a child came with his parents to Wayne County, Ind. They lived in Dublin one year, then moved to a farm three miles south of Milton, residing there three years. The family then moved to Delaware County, where the father died, leaving his wife with seven children, our subject being the fourth child. When he was ten years old his mother died, and he lived with his sister till he was fifteen years of age, when he came to Wayne County. When he was nineteen years of age he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving an apprenticeship of two years with Calvin Marshall, after which he engaged in business for himself in Perry Township, until about 1873. He was married Dec. 18, 1853, to Annie Hollingsworth, a native of Ohio, but reared in Perry Township, Wayne County, Ind. They have had twelve children—Rachel E. (deceased), Aura Melinda, Elvira Josephine, Elmer Ellsworth, Sarah Alice, Edgar Allen, Hannah Lovinda, Emma Caroline, Oliver Howard, Frankie C. and Freddie L. (twins), the latter deceased, and Harry Ernest. After his marriage Mr. Scantland moved to his farm on section 22, Perry Township, and engaged in agricultural pursuits, and is now the owner of 309 acres of well-cultivated land, which he has won by his own exertions. He and his wife are active members of the United Brethren church.

Thomas Swain was born June 7, 1830, in Wayne County, Ind., a son of Elihu and Mary (Worth) Swain, and grandson of Elihu Swain, Sr. His grandfather came to Wayne County from Tennessee in 1815, and settled on the farm where our subject now resides. He had a family of six sons and three daughters. Elihu, Jr., was born in Tennessee in 1800. He was married in 1827 to Mary, daughter of Job and Rhoda Worth. They had a family of eight children, six of whom are living. He died in 1847. His wife died Aug. 31, 1874, aged sixty-four years. They were members of the Society of Friends. Our subject was educated in the common school. After the death of his father he lived with his grandfather till manhood. He was married July 7, 1853, to Belinda, daughter of Lemuel and Keziah Underhill, and granddaughter of John Underhill. Of their nine children seven are living—Alanson W., Elihu B., Jennie E., Nora B., Ottie, Cynthia and Bernie. Seward L. and Viola are deceased. Politically Mr. Swain affiliates with the Greenback party.

Elvin Thornburgh was born Sept. 3, 1821, in what is now Dalton Township, Wayne County, a son of Jacob and grandson of Walter Thornburgh, one of the early settlers of Wayne County. Our subject was reared on a frontier farm, receiving only a limited education at the log-cabin subscription schools. His mother died when he was nine years old, and he was bound out to Jesse Greenhurst, with whom he lived till he was twenty-one years of age, after which he was variously employed, such as driving hogs to Cincinnati, chopping cord wood, etc. He was married Feb. 9, 1842, to Damaris M. Locke, born July 3, 1826, and daughter of William and Damaris (Mills) Locke. After his marriage Mr. Thornburgh purchased a farm in Delaware County, Ind., which he sold soon after and bought 160 acres on Martindale's Creek, Wayne County, since which he has accumulated a good property, and in 1881 he moved to Economy, having retired from active life. He and his wife are active members of the United Brethren church, of which he has been Class-leader, and Mrs. Thornburgh has been a minister, for many years. They had five children, three of whom are living—John M., Jacob Albert and William Lewis. Mary Ann and Martha Ann (twins) died in infancy.

John M. Thornburgh, farmer and stock-raiser, was born Jan. 24, 1846, in Perry Township, Wayne Co., Ind., eldest son of Elvin and Damaris (Locke) Thornburgh. He received a common-school education, residing on the home farm till Sept. 21, 1864, when he was married to Sarah F., daughter of George and Eliza (Francisca) Foland. She was born in Preble County, Ohio, and came to Wayne County, Ind., with her parents when a child. Mr. and Mrs. Thornburgh have two children—Emma L. and Bertha L. After his marriage he lived two years in Dalton Township, Wayne County, and from there moved to Perry Township, where he resided eight years. He then resided in Henry County, Ind., seven years, and in 1881 returned to the old homestead in Perry Township, where he has 160 acres of well-cultivated land. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church.

William L. Thornburgh, youngest son of Elvin and Damaris (Locke) Thornburgh, was born April 24, 1855, in Perry Township, Wayne County, Ind. He was educated at the common school and reared on the home farm till he grew to manhood. He engaged in farming for himself when eighteen years of age, which he successfully followed till 1877. He has since been trading in stock, real estate and loaning money, in which he is meeting with much success. He was married Jan. 3, 1875, to Jennie E. Cook, born Dec. 14, 1857, and daughter of Joseph and Mary (Swain) Cook, of Perry Township. They are the parents of two children—Harry E. and Damaris May (twins), born Aug. 7, 1878.

John Underhill, one of the prominent pioneers of Wayne County, was born in North Carolina, Aug. 15, 1775. His father, John Underhill, came to America from England about 1770, at the age of sixteen, and was a blacksmith by trade. John Underhill, Jr., in early life developed those traits of character and those superior natural endowments which enabled him to rise above the difficulties which surrounded him in his boyhood and young manhood days, and to become one of the most noted men of his neighborhood, especially in the field of education. He very early developed a passion for learning, and soon mastered all the branches, then taught in the very imperfect district school of that day, and reached a position where the average teacher could not aid him further. He attended a boarding-school for a few weeks, after which he undertook the task of educating himself. He became well versed in history and in the polite literature of his day and time. But it was in the field of mathematics that he excelled, and made himself felt. He explored almost every domain of this important branch of science, commencing on the lowest round in the ladder, resting not until he made himself very familiar with, and proficient in, the same. At an early age he turned his attention to teaching and surveying in his native State. At the age of twenty-five he went to Tennessee, where he continued to teach. His teaching was mainly in a private school, and such was his skill as a teacher that he soon built up a large school. Even men who occupied positions in the higher schools of learning came to him for assistance in some of the higher branches of mathematics. He was married to Jane Jones, who was born in North Carolina, and who moved to Tennessee at the age of seven. Mr. Underhill was strongly opposed to slavery, and not wishing to rear his family in a slave State, he came to Wayne County, locating at Economy, where he entered immediately upon the practice of his profession as a teacher, and had soon built up a flourishing private school, which came to be the most famous in its day and time. About 1815 he and a few others were the authors of the constitution of the first Manumission Society ever organized in the United States. He reared a family of twelve children to maturity, and died Sept. 1, 1834, and his wife's death occurred Sept. 14, 1869. Their youngest child, Jesse B. Underhill, was born Oct. 9, 1829, on the farm where he now resides and where he was reared. His education was obtained in the schools of his township. He resided with his widowed mother till he grew to manhood and assisted and cared for her till her death. He has followed farming through life, and is making a specialty of blooded stock. He was married Sept. 6, 1869, to Sue Bowers, a native of Pennsylvania, who came with her parents to Wayne County in 1863. They are the parents of five children—John M., Edward F., Alfred C., Annie J. and Emmie Armina.

John Lewis Weyl was born in Perry Township, Wayne Co., Ind., April 7, 1847, a son of John J. and Jemima (Peirce) Weyl, his father a native of Germany, born Aug. 18, 1800, and his mother a native of Ohio. His father came to America in 1818, and was married Jan. 23, 1829. He was by trade a tanner, but also carried on a farm. He died Dec. 14, 1876, aged nearly seventy-seven years. His wife died July 11, 1881. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. To them were born eleven children, six of whom are living. Our subject remained with his parents till manhood. June 5, 1866, he married Polly A., daughter of Caleb and Luzetta (Dean) Mendenhall. To them have been born four children—Glena, Caleb Olsen, Fred Deloss, and Augustus. Mr. Weyl has a good farm of eighty acres, and also deals in live stock. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church.

Daniel B. Williams was born Aug. 19, 1849, in Green Township, Wayne Co., Ind., eldest son of Jesse and Mary Ann (Mendenhall) Williams, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Wayne County, Ind. Daniel was educated at the schools of Economy, and was reared in Wayne County, with the exception of two years spent in Randolph County. At the age of twenty he began learning the carpenter's trade with George Scantland, of Perry Township, with whom he worked two years. He was married Sept. 9, 1873, to Marilla, daughter of Thomas Cranor, of Green Township. Two children have been born to them—Charlie E., born Oct. 5, 1875, and Louie Pearl, born April 22, 1878. After his marriage Mr. Williams removed to the farm where he now resides, engaged in farming and stock-raising, having 114 acres of land in a high state of cultivation. He belongs to the Society of Friends, and his wife is a member of the United Brethren church.

John M. Williams was born in Blount County, Tenn., Oct. 24, 1812, a son of Richard and Rachel (Mills) Williams, and grandson of William Williams, a prominent minister of the Society of Friends in Wayne County. His father was born in North Carolina, Dec. 31, 1786, of Welsh descent. His mother was of English descent, born April 25, 1786. They were married in 1805, and in 1813 came to Wayne County, Ind. In 1836 they removed to Michigan, but a year later returned to Indiana and located in Porter County, where Mr. Williams died July 7, 1849, and Mrs. Williams Dec. 31, 1849. They had a family of ten children, seven of whom are living. Our subject attended the early subscription schools, but being ambitious, improved his education by studying during his leisure hours at home. In 1841 he went to Muncie, Ind., and began the study of law with Walter March, and was admitted to the bar in 1842. He practiced law and engaged in the mercantile business till 1849, when he went to California, but a year later returned to Indiana. He has held many offices of trust in the township, and has served as magistrate thirty-five years. March 17, 1852, Mr. Williams married Sophia, daughter of John and Rachel Cate. They have had four children—Clarkson, Mary, George W. and William, the two eldest deceased.

Joseph Williams was born in Jefferson County, Tenn., Jan. 9, 1805, the youngest of three sons of Joseph and Sophia (Thornburgh) Williams, natives of North Carolina, his father dying a short time prior to our subject's birth. In 1819 his mother and her three sons came to Wayne County, Ind., and in 1820 she entered 240 acres of land, which she divided with her sons. She subsequently married Obadiah Bennett, and moved to Centreville, where she resided till after Mr. Bennett's death. She then returned to Economy, and lived with her son Joseph till her death, June 3, 1862, aged eighty-one years. Our subject was married April 14, 1825, to Martha Robert, a native of Pennsylvania. They had one son—Thomas B., who was born May 22, 1827, and died Dec. 26, 1882. May 25, 1848, he was married to Abby Bouroughs, and to them were born five children, four of whom are living.—Josephine, Jennie, Joseph and Nannie. His wife died Aug. 5, 1870, and Dec. 24, 1872, he married Ellen Goodrich, of Randolph County. To them was born one son—Charles G.

Washington Township, situated in the southwestern corner of Wayne County, is one of the six townships into which the county was divided in 1817. Washington was formed Feb. 10, of that year, and included an extensive territory. Its dimensions were reduced by the formation of Fayette County in 1819, and have been rendered still smaller by the formation of other townships from parts of its territory. It is, however, still a large township, seven miles east and west, and six north and south. The surface is variable, being broken by the Whitewater and its tributaries, which furnish good drainage and abundant water-power. The soil is generally of excellent quality, and farms and improvements are fully equal to those in any part of the county. The first election was held at the town of Waterloo, which was then within the township limits. In 1819 the election was held at the house of Levi Willetts. In 1829 the voting place was changed to the town of Milton.

Thomas Symonds, from North Carolina, was probably the first settler in the township. He arrived in December, 1811, and began an improvement about a mile north of Milton. His family consisted of himself and wife. Indians were numerous and no other white settlers were near. During the troubles of 1812 he left his plantation and went to the settlement in the vicinity of Richmond, where he remained until danger was over. Mr. Symonds erected the first mill in the township (a corn-cracker) in 1814. He died in 1865. His mill was successively owned by Mordecai Mendenhall, Jacob Shock, Joseph Stubbs and others. Thomas Beard settled two and a half miles southeast of Milton about 1811. The Beard farm is the site of an old block-house built by the settlers as a defense against the Indians, about 1812.

Benjamin Beeson, who died in 1852, settled three and a half miles south of Milton in 1814. James Walker, from Tennessee, and John Wallace came the same year. Adam Banks (who was a Baptist minister and a Tennessean) located on the county line in 1815. James Jackson, from North Carolina, settled adjoining the Beeson farm in the same year. A man named Logan was an early settler on land afterward M. G. Beeson's. Eli Wright, an early Justice and Member of the Legislature, settled near Benj. Beeson's. Micajah Ferguson, from North Carolina, settled on section 15 in 1816. His brother Joel, who was a Baptist preacher, settled earlier on section 11. Nimrod Ferguson came in 1816, and at once began the erection of a brick house—a rare kind of dwelling at that date. Thomas Beeson, from North Carolina, came in 1818. Harrison Shortridge, Joseph Caldwell, Jehial Lampson, Solomon Burkett, John Foulke and Joseph Williams were early settlers in the southwestern part of the township; Matthew Symonds and David Shay, in the western part. In the northwestern part of the township the following were early settlers: John Callaway, 1814; John Bell, Boaz Thorp (whose daughter, aged three years, was stolen by the Indians), Moses Cooper, 1817; Peter Martz, Thomas Pierson, Isaac and Daniel Whitely, Job Raynes, Samuel Drury and Gideon Myers.

Jehu Wilson, 1818, settled one mile south of Milton. Jonathan Justice was a pioneer who died near Milton. James Cathcart settled early in the same neighborhood. James and John Shaw settled on or near the present farm of Isaac Kinsey, soon after the war of 1812. John Knipe and Reuben Bronson came early to the same neighborhood. Among the early settlers on the east side of the river were:

Edward Emerson, from Vermont, 1812; Joseph Hollingsworth, John Conover, Abram Shock, Jacob Kimmel, Wm. Swafford, Joseph Swafford, Jacob Oldacre, Wm. G. Reynolds, Geo. Beeler, Enoch Warman, Isaiah Drury, Aaron White and Jacob Boyer.

In the valley of Green's Fork, Thomas Marlatt (who reared three sons that have become ministers), William, Levi, Jesse and Samuel Willetts settled early. Levi was an early Justice and Jesse a County Commissioner. Wm. McGrew settled in 1820.

The earliest brick houses in the township were erected by Thomas Symonds, Thomas Hardin and Nimrod Ferguson.

John and Philip Fox were early settlers in the southern part of the township. Philip and John Doddridge, Isaac Jenkins and several others came from Pennsylvania with their families in 1814, and settled in the eastern part of the township, where their descendants still live. John Hurst, who was the father of a large family of sons and daughters, settled early in the same neighborhood.

David Smith, Henry Hartman and Abraham Hathaway were quite early in the northeastern part of the township. Joshua Lamott is now the oldest resident in that part of the township. David and Rudolph Waymire, Moses Nethercutt, Philip Burris and Wm. Beeson were early settlers along Nolan's Fork.

Joseph Lower was an early settler west of the Whitewater. Benj. Harvey, Thomas Hardin and Isaac Kinley also settled on that side of the river early. On the east side of the river, below the mouth of Green's Fork, were James Hannah, James McLean, Robert Diever and Jacob Grewell.

Among the early mills of the township were Symonds', already mentioned; Samuel Shortridge's, on Green's Fork; John and Christopher Miller's saw-mill and grist-mill, on the same stream, built about 1820; Jesse Brewer's, 1830, grist-mill on Green's Fork; Samuel Cummack's saw-mill, and several others of later date. Jonathan Hunt set up a carding-mill a mile north of Milton about 1828. There was also an early carding and cloth-dressing mill in the northeastern part of the township, owned by Wm. Petty. Samuel Cum-mack built a carding-mill near his saw-mill, and afterward converted it into a woolen factory. It was subsequently removed to Milton by N. H. Cummack, and became known as the Milton Woolen Mills. It is now a flourishing establishment owned by the Milton Woolen Mill Company.

MILTON.

Milton, one of the most thriving and prosperous country towns in Wayne County, is substantially built and pleasantly situated. It is in the northwestern part of Washington Township, on the old Whitewater Canal, the Whitewater Railroad, and the Fort Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad. The town was laid out by John Bell and the plat recorded July 5, 1824. Additions were soon after made by Thomas Symonds, Benajah Hiatt, Jonathan Justice and Elijah Coffin; additions by Thomas Symonds and others in 1825 and 1827; by Jonathan Justice in 1829 and 1833; by Jacob Sinks in 1838; and by James Brown in 1847.

The first house built in the town stood on the north side of the alley opposite Dr. Pennington's lot. In 1825, says Dr. Joel Pennington, to whom we are indebted for many interesting items of early history, the town contained eight families, viz.: Those of Thomas Reagan, Samuel Pierce, James Lee, John Dill, Lewis Perry, Allen Hiatt, Joseph Neff and Mrs. Catharine Evans. Mrs. Polly Michael, recently deceased, lived on the Sinks farm, not far from where the woolen-mill now stands. Reagan and Pierce each kept store and exchanged dry-goods and groceries for farm products. Butter was then 6 to 8 cents per pound; eggs, 2 to 4 cents per dozen; corn, 10 cents; oats and potatoes, 10 to 12 cents; wheat, 31 to 37 cents per bushel, and other articles in proportion. At that time Milton contained but two two-story houses, one at present occupied by the store of J. Brown & Son; the other on the opposite corner where the brick store stands; this was early occupied as a tavern. It is still standing, having been moved from its original location. Dr. Pennington passed the first winter in Milton in a double log cabin, 12 x 14 feet in size. Allen Hiatt, Esq., occupied the other end of the cabin.

John Bell, Jacob Sinks, Jonathan Justice and Elijah Coffin, early proprietors of Milton, were all Quakers from North Carolina. The town as originally laid out was bounded on the north by Canal street, east by West River street, south by Connersville street, and west by Brook street. Wm. McKinney was the auctioneer for the first sale of town lots; Samuel Morris, still living, acted as clerk of the sale.

At the time the town was platted the county road leading from Centreville westward to the State capital passed through Milton. The location of the National road north of the town was made a few years later, 1827.

Milton grew quite prosperously during its early years. In 1826 it had a population of nearly 200, with four stores, two blacksmith shops, a physician, one tavern, one hatter, a shoemaker, a potter, a saddler, a tannery, and a postoffice.

The first store in the town was opened by Thomas Reagan prior to 1825. His store stood one block north of the principal corner. Samuel Pierce commenced soon after on the west side of Main street. John Wright & Son were probably the next merchants, where John Brown & Son now have their store. Joshua Willetts and James Antrim soon after engaged in the mercantile business in partnership. Elijah Coffin commenced keeping store in 1829, and continued the business many years.

Pierce built the corner building, now Grigsby's drug store. He sold out to Fenner & Harker, and went to Richmond. Later merchants were: Henry Develin, Shank & Hawkins, and Crum & Moorman.

Other mercantile firms of former years were: John Talbot, Moore & Hiatt, Moore, Hannah & Meredith, Sinks & Talbot, E. P. & H. Justice, Mary & Sarah Roberts, Morris & Frampton, Jesse Hiatt, Hopkins & Hiatt, Benj. Elmer, S. L. Foulke, Hiatt & Moore, C. H. & W. H. Moore (1854 to 1860—erected brick corner, 1856) and many others.

The date of the establishment of the postoffice at Milton cannot be definitely ascertained. Elijah Coffin was the first Postmaster, serving until 1833. His successors have been: Henry Develin, 1833; John Talbot, 1844; Henry Develin, 1844; Edward Roberts, 1849; Wm. McLaughlin, 1853; Luther C. Chamberlain, 1854; Edward Roberts, 1861; Wm. H. Shaw, 1866; Roland O. Jones, 1867; Richard Wallace, 1868; Lewis Ellis, 1869; Moses M. Callaway, 1873; Geo. W. Callaway, 1881.

An early incident in the history of Milton is worthy of record here. The famous and eccentric Lorenzo Dow preached here once in 1828. The services were held in a private house and a large congregation was present. At the conclusion of the exercises Dow jumped out of the window, mounted his horse and rode away without a word to any one.

Among the leading business men and prominent citizens of Milton in 1836 were: Charles Moore, Joel Hiatt, Allen Hiatt, Daniel Sinks, George Hopkins, John Wright, Enoch Justice, Henry Justice, and others. David Crum, John Moorman, Daniel Sinks and Samuel Pierce were the merchants.

The completion of the Whitewater Canal gave some impetus to the business of Milton. The main building now occupied by the Dorsey Machine Works was erected by the Canal Company and used by them as a warehouse for several years.

The first cabinet-maker was a man named Peck, in 1825. Wm. and Jonathan Matthews soon after engaged in the same business. In 1826 came Peter Du Hadway, a native of Maryland; he was the first tailor. Enoch Maudlin and Charles Wright were early wagon-makers. The first carriage manufactory was started in 1840 by Charles Leibhardt. The first physician was Dr. Pennington, in 1825. Among the first blacksmiths were Wm. Harris and Samuel Walker.

Tanneries were among the early industries; one of the most extensive was on the ground now occupied by the mill of Crawford Brothers. It was owned by William Conwell of Connersville, and operated by Henry and William Hall. Richard Moore started a tannery in 1842, and continued the business until 1845.

Pork-packing was once carried on quite extensively in Milton. The business was commenced in 1836 by George Hopkins, Charles H. Moore and Joel and Allen Hiatt. Their packing-house stood on the southwest corner of Connersville street and Central avenue. They took their pork to market with wagons until the canal was built, and were also in the mercantile business. Several others continued the packing business later quite largely.

A saw-mill was built at Milton by Jacob Sinks prior to 1825. About 1840 he erected a grist-mill on the site of the present river mill; it was subsequently owned by Daniel Sinks, Swafford, Kimmel & Co., John Ross, Levin Warren, Jonathan Petty and Wm. H. Moore successively. In the fall of 1871 it was burned, involving a loss to its owner of $12,000. In 1872 W. H. Moore, Henry Myers and N. R. Nixon erected a paper-mill on the same site for the manufacture of wrapping paper. They sold out in the summer of 1875, and the establishment was soon after burned, involving a loss of $40,000. A grist-mill was built in 1880 by F. G. Myers, and is now owned by Isaac Kinsey.

The canal-mill in Milton was built in 1846 by Jonathan Macy, Henry Izor and Daniel Sinks. Milton Hiatt soon after purchased Sink's interest. In 1852 Lewis B. Morrison, Thomas Newby and Henry Izor became the owners. Morris, Myers & Co. and others afterward owned it. Brosier & Carr became its proprietors next, and the mill was destroyed by fire. In 1880 Geo. Leggate erected the flouring mill now owned by Nordyke, Marmon & Co.

In 1859 Joseph Ingels, the inventor of the Hoosier Drill, commenced the manufacture of drills at Milton, using horse-power, and making twenty-five drills the first year. In 1867 Isaac Kinsey, Alexander Jones and Aaron Morris formed a stock company, Joseph Ingels acting as their agent. They did a large business manufacturing drills, cultivators, etc., and employing fifty to seventy-five hands. In 1877 they sold out to the present Hoosier Drill Company, who established a manufactory at Richmond.

In the fall of 1879 the Dorsey Machine Company was formed, and then purchased of Oliver Ferguson the property, formerly the Hoosier Drill Company's works in Milton. Mr. Ferguson, a stockholder, and successor to the company, had used the works for the manufacture of gates and fences. The Dorsey Machine Company was incorporated with a stock of $60,000, with the following officers: Aaron Morris, President; Oliver Ferguson, Vice-President; D. P. Leibhardt, Sec-

The Lower and Williams families, Alexander Walters, John Elliott and others were early members here. About fifteen years later a frame church was erected on the land of Joseph Lower and named Lower's Chapel. It is generally known by the same name, though it is properly Haven's Chapel, named in honor of Bishop Haven. An organization is still maintained at the Lower church. The Doddridge Chapel of logs was replaced by a brick building about 1830. In 1876 a fine brick church was erected at a cost of about $4,000. A large

Mrs. Moore rode forty miles on horseback to the nearest meeting to join the society. She was subsequently a minister of the society and was noted for her piety and zeal. Mr. Moore was an Elder many years. He was Postmaster at New Garden, N. C., over twenty years. He was a strong anti-slavery man and an old-line Whig, taking a great interest in the liberation of the colored race. He died in 1845, aged seventy-five years, and his wife in 1854, aged seventy-four years.

Jonathan Newman, a son of John and Rachel Newman, was born in the south part of Guilford County, N. C., Dec. 3, 1794. He was reared a member of the Society of Friends, belonging to Centre Meeting. About the year 1820 he was united in marriage with Eleanor, daughter of William and Ester Dicks, who also belonged to the Quakers, and whose home was headquarters for visiting friends at Centre. They married out of meeting, and that being against the rules of the society, they sent in a letter to the meeting desiring to be retained as members. That was dated March, instead of third month, as the rule required, which the meeting returned for correction; that they failed to do, and were disowned. He afterward joined a militia company in Fentriss Township, was elected a Captain, and served in that capacity for thirteen years. In the summer of 1836 he sold his plantation (the name by which farms went in that country at that day) and in the fall, with his family, moved to and settled in Milton, Wayne Co., Ind., arriving there about the middle of November of the same year. There he opened a shop and carried on wagon-making, that being his occupation, in which business he continued while living. He served a number of years as Justice of the Peace in Washington Township, and was also Town Trustee and School Director. It was under his directorship that the first school-house was built in Washington Township, and located in Milton, by taxation, in the year 1846, the same brick building being now used by the F.

W. & M. Railroad Company, as a freight depot, it having been donated to the company by the town of Milton, at the completion of the present public school building. He reared a family of six children, all of whom still live in and around Milton—Edmund B., Granville S., Elizabeth, Milo, Sallie and Henry C. He died April 4, 1855, and his widow died Aug. 16, 1870, the latter aged seventy-one years.

Edmund Burke Newman, eldest child of Jonathan and Eleanor Newman, was born in Fentriss Township, near Centre meeting, ten miles south of Greensboro, Guilford Co., N. C., Sept. 1, 1826. He entered school in his sixth year, and the teacher of that school, S. Swim—then called master—is still living in Guilford County. Edmund came with his parents to Milton, Wayne Co., Ind., where they settled about the middle of November, 1836. At this place he received such an education as the common schools of that day afforded, having spent the last two years of his school days in the seminary at Cambridge City, Ind., where he studied Latin, German and some of the higher branches of mathematics, under the preceptorship of Prof. Samuel K. Hoshour. In the summer of 1846 he began teaching school in Dudley Township, Henry County, Ind., at which place he remained two years, and continued at the business, with one or two short intervals for ten years. His teaching was confined to the counties of Henry, Wayne and Fayette, having taught one year in New Castle, Henry County, and three years at Milton, in Wayne. Sept. 1, 1847, he was united in marriage with Mary A., only daughter of William D. and Esther Harden, pioneer settlers of Wayne County, though living at the time of their daughter's marriage in Henry County, three miles west of Dublin, in the same neighborhood where Newman was teaching. In politics he was originally a Whig, and cast his first vote for President in 1848, for Zachariah Taylor. Upon the dissolution of that party he joined the Republican party, and has ever since remained an earnest supporter of the principles, measures and men of that party on the stump, through the press and at the ballot-box. During the last years of his school-teaching he devoted what time he had out of the school-room to reading law, and in September, 1857, he was admitted to the bar in Centreville, under the Circuit Judgeship of John T. Elliott, afterward one of the Supreme Judges of the State, and notwithstanding his remote location from the county seat, and the large number of learned and eminent attorneys belonging to the Wayne County bar, he soon succeeded in gathering up a living practice. In 1860 he was elected without opposition one of the representatives from Wayne County to the Indiana Legislature, in which body he was appointed a member of the Committee on Federal Relations, of the Committee on the Organization of Courts, and also a member of the Select Committee of Thirteen, to whom was referred a series of important resolutions, introduced at the beginning of the session on the disturbed State of the Union. He served in the special session of the Legislature of 1861, called by Governor Morton, after the attack on Fort Sumter, to make preparations to aid the National Government in suppressing the Southern rebellion and preserving the Union. He was re-elected to the same position in 1862, and served through the memorable and stormy session of 1863, and aided by the only available peaceable means that could be adopted to defeat the bill being pushed for its passage, taking the military power out of the hands of the Governor and placing it with a Military Board, a majority of whom were opposed to the further prosecution of the war. After the close of the war Mr. Newman was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, which position he held for six years, having for his district the counties of Henry, Wayne, Fayette and Union. Since the year 1873 he has been connected with the office of Township Assessor in Washington Township, and is still employed in that business. He has had born to him five children—the eldest, Lawrence W., died when near three years old; the other four, Florence A., Rutledge H., Homer E. and Virgil G., are all over twenty-one years of age, and live in Wayne County, Homer being the only one married.

Benjamin Peirce, farmer, postoffice Centreville, Ind., was born in Chesterfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., May 26, 1812, a son of Benjamin and Deborah (James) Peirce, and a grandson of Benjamin Peirce, of Situate, Mass. His father was born in Chesterfield in 1777, and his mother in Goshen, Mass., in 1777. His early life was spent with his parents. After arriving at maturity he went to Canada and remained three years, a part of the time in the lumber trade on the Madawaska, and later on the St. Lawrence Canal. He then went to Virginia and for three years was a contractor on the James River and Kanawha canals. In the fall of 1838 he came to Indiana and completed the contracts on the Whitewater Canal. After the cessation of business on the canals in this State he bought a farm in Fayette County, on which he resided till 1846, when he bought the farm in Wayne County where he now resides. He was married in Wayne County in 1843, to Lusina, daughter of David Jenkins, an early settler of the county. Of their ten children but four are living; three are residents of Wayne County, and one of Wamego, Kan. Mr. Peirce has a good farm of 240 acres, all well improved, and is one of the most substantial citizens of the county. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

J. W. St. Clair, M. D., was born in Butler County, Ohio, in 1841, a son of Wm. R. and Sarah (De Coup) St. Clair, his father a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of Ohio. He received his early education in the common schools, and in 1860 began reading medicine under the direction of Dr. C. N. Branch, of Hamilton County, Ind., remaining with him six years. In the meantime he attended lectures at the Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, graduating in 1866. He located in Strawtown, Hamilton Co., Ind., and in 1872 removed to Germantown, Wayne County, thence, in 1879, to Milton, where he now has an extensive practice. He is also associated with W. L. Parkins in the drug business, and has a well-stocked store. He was married in 1866 to Mary C. Mosbaugh. They have had four children—Laura H., Nora O., Eva M. and George R. Dr. St. Clair is a member of Milton Lodge, No. 111, I. O. O. F.

I. F. Sweney, M. D., Milton, Ind., was born at Winchester, Preble Co., Ohio, Feb. 2, 1835, a son of William and Susan (Sayler) Sweney, his father a native of Adams County, Pa., and his mother of Preble County, Ohio. He was reared on a farm, but received sufficient education to enable him to teach, and while thus engaged commenced the study of medicine under the direction of his uncle, Dr. C. Sayler. He then attended a course of lectures at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati. After practicing two or three months he enlisted as a private in Company C, Eighty-fourth Indiana Infantry. He participated in the battles of Chickamauga, the Atlanta campaign, Nashville, Franklin, and in the fall of 1864 was appointed Hospital Steward of the regiment. He was afterward commissioned Assistant Surgeon, but owing to the close of the war was never mustered in. He was discharged in 1865, and soon after entered the Ohio Medical College, from which he graduated in 1866, and has since given his exclusive attention to a large and increasing practice. He was married Oct. 10, 1865, to Minerva Eikenberg, of Preble County, Ohio. They have had three children—William E., Harvey S. and Loretta B, the two latter deceased. Dr. Sweney is a member of Milton Lodge, No. 111, I. O. O. F., and Wm. A. Boyd Post, No. 129, G. A. R., Dublin, Ind.

John Wallace was born in Virginia and reared in Kentucky. In 1811 he came to Wayne County, Ind., and selected land in Washington Township, which was settled by his father's family in 1813. He entered three quarter-sections of land, a part of which is now owned by Oliver Wallace. He was married in 1815 to Mary, daughter of Adam Banks, who came from Kentucky to Wayne County, Ind., about 1813. To them were born twelve children, nine of whom survive—Oliver, Cyrus, John, William, Preston, Sarah (Wallace) Wright, Richard, Emily (Wallace) Williams and Allen. James, Stephen and an infant daughter are deceased. Mr. Wallace was a soldier in the war of 1812. He was successful in business and accumulated a large property. He died Sept. 23, 1842, aged sixty-two years. His wife survived till Feb. 27, 1867, and died at the age of sixty-eight years. Our subject's father, John Wallace, Sr., was a native of Virginia, and was well advanced in years when he came to this county, where he died about 1820. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and adhered to the doctrines of the Presbyterian church.

John Wallace, son of John Wallace, was born on the old homestead in Wayne County, Ind., Sept. 3, 1822. He was reared to farm life and educated at the subscription schools. (was born in 1856 and died in 1860), Frank W. and Josephine. Since his marriage Mr. Wallace has resided on part of the land entered by his father. He has an excellent farm containing 153 acres of highly cultivated land. He also owns some fine horses, cattle and hogs. He was engaged in the mercantile business in Milton four years, but not meeting with success he abandoned it and returned to farming. Mr. Wallace has a powder horn that was carried by his grandfather in the Revolutionary war.

Robert Watt was born in Fayette County, Pa., Dec. 15, 1821, and in April, 1822, his parents moved to Union County, Ind., where he was reared and educated. His boyhood was spent on the farm and in teaming. August, 1848, he came to Wayne County, Ind., and settled in Washington Township on his present farm. At that time it was in the woods, but he cleared and cultivated it, and now has 220 acres of the finest land in the township. He also for several years traded extensively in horses, taking them in droves over the mountains to Baltimore. He was married in 1847 to Silvira Hurst, a native of Wayne County, Ind., born Oct. 29, 1824, and a daughter of John and Elizabeth Hurst, natives of Maryland. To Mr. and Mrs. Watt have been born four children, three sons and a daughter, the sons all married and living in Wayne County. Politically Mr. Watt is a Democrat. His parents, William and Rhoda (Seaton) Watt, were natives of Pennsylvania, his father born Dec. 6, 1796, and his mother Feb. 12, 1793. His father was by trade a hatter, and followed that business in his native State several years after his marriage. In April, 1822, he moved to Brownsville, Union Co., Ind., and worked at his trade till 1833, when he moved to a farm a mile and a quarter northwest of town, where he lived till his death, Feb. 17, 1879. His wife died in October, 1868. They were both active members of the Methodist Episcopal church. All of their ten children are living. Mr. Watt was politi-

He was County Commissioner three terms, and was a delegate to Indianapolis when the State Constitution was revised. He was Major of the State Muster in an early day. He was an honest politician, and one respected by all who knew him, serving his county and State with fidelity and the same good business ability that characterized his management of personal affairs.

Elisha Willetts, farmer, Washington Township, was born in Pennsylvania, Feb. 27, 1794, a son of Jesse Willetts, also of Pennsylvania. She was a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal church several years prior to her death. After his marriage Mr. Willetts first settled on a farm a half a mile east of his present residence, which, however, he still owns. At that time it was situated in the woods, but he, by industry and perseverance, improved and cultivated it till it became one of the finest farms in Washington Township. For several years he was obliged to go to Brookville, a distance of forty miles, to get his milling done. He owns 441 acres of excellent land, all well improved, in Washington Township, which he has accumulated by his own exertions. He has always been a hard-working man, and being possessed of good excellent ability has managed his business successfully, and now stands with the head men in the township in wealth and influence. He of late years has withdrawn from general practice, attending only such cases as demand his personal attention. He is a member of the Christian church, and one of its most zealous workers. Dr. Witmer was married in 1846 to Elizabeth, daughter of William and Charlotte McGrew. They have had six children—Wooster M. C., Cassius M., Nora A., Alphareta, Mortimor and Idora A., the two latter deceased.

CHAPTER XX.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

THE OLDEST SETTLEMENT IN THE COUNTY.—ITS ORGANIZATION.
—ITS ORIGINAL EXTENT.—PHYSICAL FEATURES.—GROWTH IN WEALTH AND POPULATION.—INTERESTING STATISTICS.—BIO-GRAPHICAL.

The early settlement of Wayne Township need not be given here for the first settlement of Wayne County was within the limits of this town, and with that history and that of Richmond is given all of importance concerning the early settlement, by whom settled and from whence they came. What Wayne Township now consists of and her aggregate wealth at this time are the principal features to be recorded.

Wayne Township was one of the two townships of which Wayne County was composed in its organization in the year 1810. It was then in territory equal, if not larger than the present county. On the adoption of the State Constitution in 1816, a law was passed or a clause inserted in reference to the organizations of counties. Feb. 10, 1817, the county commissioners took action and divided what was then Wayne County into six municipal divisions, or townships. As Wayne County covered all of Union, a part of Fayette, Henry, and Randolph counties, the township of Wayne still covered an extensive territory, if not as large as it was previous to the organization of the State Government. Its first election was held at the house of Jno. Lamb. At this time Wayne Township is still the largest in the county and has within its limits a little less than one-half of the assessed wealth of the county, and probably fully one-half of its full value.

ITS AREA, BOUNDS, ETC.

Wayne Township has about fifty-one and three-fourths square miles, being seven miles wide on its south line, and about five and one-half miles on its north line, and is eight miles in length, north and south.

The last portion of the territory taken from her limits was for the formation of Abington and Boston townships. This gave her an area in acres of 33,200, of which there are assessed $31,216.32.

Real estate valuation, Jan. 1, 1883 (outside of Richmond), was $1,839,955; personal property, $1,108,665; total $2,948,620.

The city of Richmond has a total of real and personal assessed of $8,164,807. Linden Hill has a total of $229,435. This gives a total for Wayne Township of $11,342,862. It has also within its limits nearly one-half of the population of the county; Richmond, 12,742; township outside of Richmond, 4,586; total 17,328.

This immense wealth and progress has been achieved by the indomitable will, energy and business tact of the people of Richmond, and the prudence and knowledge of the farming population.

The township is bounded on the north by Webster, New Garden and Franklin townships; on the east by the Ohio State line; on the south by Boston, and on the west by Centre and Webster townships.

It is watered, mainly, by the Whitewater River and its three branches, or forks. East Fork enters it centrally on its east line; Middle Fork near the northeast corner, and the two joining about half a mile above the city. The West Fork, from Randolph County, enters the township directly north from Richmond, and unites with the Whitewater just above the railroad bridge. The Elkhorn, from Ohio, crosses the southeast corner of the township. Short Creek, a small stream, running a southwesterly direction, enters the Whitewater near the south line of the township. Lick Creek, running south nearly the whole length of the township, near its west line, empties into the Whitewater near the corner of Abington Township.

Linden Hill is the only place given which has more than a postoffice and store within the township. Its population in 1880 was 215, and it had an assessed valuation of real and personal property of $229,435.

The population of Wayne Township outside of Richmond was: In 1850, 3,516; in 1860, 2,834; in 1870, 3,734; in 1880, 4,586. The gain in the township for the decade, 852; gain of Richmond, 3,297. This shows the increase of population in the township and city of 4,149, which leaves only 417 as the gain outside of Wayne Township in ten years.

About 1812 a saw-mill was erected on the site now occupied by the Cascade Mills, owned by Isaac V. Gause. The land was purchased of the Government in 1805 by Jacob Fonts, Jr., who improved the mill-site, erected the saw-mill and operated it for twenty or thirty years. Benjamin B. Moore was the next owner; he was succeeded by William Elliott, who erected a grist-mill on the old site.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Daniel B. Barton, son of William and Lurana Barton, was born Sept. 22, 1837, in Wayne County, Ind. He was reared on his father's farm, and educated in the common schools. He was married June 6, 1861, to Catharine E. Cox, born Nov. 30, 1844, and daughter of Jeremiah and Keturah (Hunt) Cox. They have had five children—Leona E., born July 24, 1862; William B., June 11, 1865; Evalena K., July 20, 1868; Elmira C., Dec. 31, 1870; Florence J. L., born July 29, 1876, and died Jan. 15, 1877. Mr. Barton has followed farming through life, and his farm is the finest agricultural land on Middle Whitewater. He makes a specialty of raising fine stock and sheep. He and wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church. His great-grandfather, John Barton, was born in England, where he was married to a native of Scotland, and came to the United States in an early day. Our subject's grandfather, Edward Barton, was born Dec. 29, 1763, and was married in Maryland to Ann Harris. He was among the early settlers of Wayne County, and entered land in Franklin Township and followed farming till his death. He belonged to the Friends' society, and died in 1838. William Barton, subject's father, was born in Maryland, Oct. 1, 1807, and was quite young when his parents moved to Wayne County. He was married March 28, 1833, to Lurana Boswell, born in Wayne County in 1808. Of their seven children four survive—Barnabas, Jane, Daniel B., Mary A. Those deceased are—Eliza A., Sarah and Ellen. Mr. Barton followed agricultural pursuits through life. He died May 5, 1877, and his wife died May 11, 1847. They were members of the Society of Friends.

John C. Boyd, lime manufacturer and farmer, was born in Wayne County, Ind., Sept. 29, 1822. He was reared on the home farm, and obtained a good common-school education. At the age of twenty years he began working at the trade of tanner and currier, and, in partnership with Isaac Cook, carried on a tannery northwest of Middleboro, Wayne County, seven years, the firm name being Cook & Boyd. They sold out in 1856 and purchased at Middleboro one of the best stone quarries in Eastern Indiana. They constructed the first patent kiln for burning lime in Indiana, and in 1860 Mr. Boyd and Amos Cook engaged in the manufacture of lime at New Paris, Ohio. At the end of five years Mr. Boyd bought the entire business, and two years later sold a half interest to Henry R. Downing, of Richmond, with whom he was associated four years, when they sold to Smith Bros. During this time the firm of Cook & Boyd carried on the manufacture of lime, making annually 30,000 bushels, and the same quantity at New Paris, a total of 60,000 bushels of the best quality known, supplying Richmond, and shipping to various other points. He is also engaged in farming, owning a fine farm of over 160 acres, known as the "Spring Hill Farm." April 1, 1863, Mr. Boyd was married to Celia, daughter of Robert and Elvira Cox. They have four children—Linaes C., born Jan. 18, 1864, educated at Earlham College, and Terre Haute, Ind., now teaching at Bethel, Ind.; Robert E., born June 8, 1866, and Elva E., born July 10, 1867, are attending Earlham College, and A. Orville, born March 2, 1872, at school near his home. Mrs. Boyd is a member of the Society of Orthodox Friends. Adam Boyd, father of our subject, was born in North Carolina, of Scotch descent. He was married in Wayne County, to Elizabeth, daughter of Amos Hawkins, who came to this county in 1806. Seven children were born to them—Alexander, Charity (deceased), John C., Henry, Jonathan D., Oliver and Martha A. Adam was a carpenter by trade. He died at the age of forty-eight years; his wife, at the age of fifty years.

Isaiah Branson was born Feb. 25, 1799, in Stafford County, Va., a son of Jacob and Rebecca (Holoway) Branson, the former of English and German, and the latter of English origin. When five years of age he moved with his parents to Belmont County, Ohio, and although so young when he left Virginia his convictions regarding the cruelty of slavery were formed, and in future years caused him to become a prominent actor in freeing the oppressed. He distinctly remembers two small slave children, who showed him their backs which were lacerated with the cowhide and the wounds filled with salt. He grew to manhood on his father's farm in Belmont County, obtaining his education at the subscription schools, but by perseverance he has become a very well educated man. He was married Aug. 25, 1828, to Sarah G., daughter of James and Susannah (Gould) Lawton, who were of English origin, and settled in Washington County, Ohio, in 1798. To them were born eight children—Elizabeth R., who graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College, died in 1878; she also practiced medicine at Boston, Mass., and at Lebanon, Ohio; James L., of Philadelphia, Pa.; Rebecca G., wife of Dr. E. B. Potter, of Paducah, Ky.; Susannah, wife of John H. Hill, of Trinity County, Texas; Jesse, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Martha resides at home with her parents; Phœbe, deceased wife of John H. Hill, of Texas; Jacob, of Chester. At the time of his marriage Mr. Branson was engaged in the mercantile business, in Uniontown, Belmont Co., Ohio, and while there assisted a fugitive family to liberty, which caused him a law-suit of four years. He was successfully engaged in business in Uniontown from 1828 till 1831, and also at Flushing, Belmont County, from 1831 till 1837, when he retired from business on account of failing health. He purchased a farm and followed farming till 1852, when he sold out and moved to Wayne County, Ind., and resided on the Dr. Greer farm till 1859. He then traded his property for a residence and business room in Richmond, remaining there till 1861, when he bought the desirable property near Chester, where he still lives, having retired from active busi-

Our subject's mother was born in 1808 and is still living. They are the parents of three sons and two daughters. Seth was married in his native county, obtained a liberal education, and spent one winter at Earlham College, near Richmond, Ind. He was married in the spring of 1855, to Martha A., daughter of Harmon and Mary (Henley) Hill, of Richmond. They have three daughters—Emma E., wife of Clark E. Lewis, of Saline County, Ill.; Annie M., teacher, and Naomi H., attending school at Richmond. Mr. Brown moved to Richmond in the fall of 1856, and engaged in the dry-goods business with Strattan & Coffin till the fall of 1857, when he returned to Ohio and followed farming till 1868. He then engaged in farming in Wayne County, Ind., till 1872, when he settled in Richmond, in order to give his children a good education, and followed the carpenter's trade till 1877. He then removed to their farm east of Richmond, where he still resides. This farm was first entered by Benjamin Hill, Sr., in 1806, and Harmon Hill, his son, settled on it in 1831. his father build a saw-mill, and ran it four years. He then carried on the farm till 1851, when he went to Richmond, and worked in a plow-shop about five years. March 26, 1857, his mother died, and he then moved back to the old homestead. In 1862 his father died, and he having been appointed executor, settled up the estate. Mr. Bulla was married Feb. 3, 1848, to Caroline Clawson. Their children are—Andrew J., born Nov. 17, 1848; Charles Henry, born Jan. 12, 1851; Elizabeth, born Aug. 27, 1855; William Abner, born April 9, 1858. Mr. Bulla's grandfather, Thomas Bulla, came to America from Ireland, when a young man, and settled in Chester County, Pa., where he married Esther Widows, by whom he had twelve children. In 1784 he moved to Randolph County, N. C. He owned six or seven slaves, but set them free in his will. William, his oldest son, was born April 14, 1777, and in 1798 married Elizabeth Hoover, daughter of Andrew Hoover, of German descent. In 1801 William Hoover moved to Warren County, Ohio; crossed the Ohio River at Cincinnati, at that time only a village. In 1803 he moved to Montgomery County, ten miles north of Dayton, on Stillwater River. There the family were all sick with the ague, and in the fall of 1806, with two others, he followed a section line through a dense wilderness of forty miles to Dearborn, now Wayne County, Ind., where he bought land and moved his family to it. He drove about seventy head of hogs to his new home. The grain for bread for the family had to be taken to Dayton, and for a short time to Eaton, to be ground. In 1810 Mr. Bulla erected a small mill on the Middle Fork of Whitewater River, which was a great accommodation to the settlers. The same year he built the house his son Daniel lives in. It is 18 x 24 feet in size, every log wild cherry save one sill, which is black walnut, and two stories high. William Bulla's children were eleven in number—Anna, born Dec. 26, 1799, married Evan Chalfant, and in the fall of 1832 moved to St. Joseph County, Ind., where she died March 27, 1849; Elizabeth, born Feb. 27, 1801, married Samuel Burgess, and settled one mile southwest of Richmond, where she died, March 26, 1857; Thomas P., born March 25, 1804, married Hannah Draper, William Bulla died in his eighty-sixth year, and his wife in her seventy-seventh. They lived to see Wayne County—which was a wilderness at the time of their settlement—the seat of culture and refinement. In May, 1823, Mr. Bulla went to Richmond and while there learned that two Kentuckians had caught a slave, George Shelton, belonging to Samuel Todd. He, with some others, rescued the slave, and Mr. Bulla was sued before the Supreme Court at Indianapolis, Judge Parke presiding, and was obliged to pay $1,000 for the slave and $500 costs. The Bulla family have always been Anti-slavery Republicans and temperance men.

The next five years he followed farming on the homestead in Franklin Township. He was married in 1859, to Angelina G., daughter of George and Ruth (Marine) Shugart, and granddaughter of George Shugart, one of the pioneer settlers of New Garden Township. To this union were sent five children—Emma M., educated at Earlham College, now teaching school; Jennie V., wife of William E. Crampton; Nevva L., attending Earlham College; Benjamin and Gurney S. Mr. Cox was engaged two years in the mill of Robert Cox, and was in the mercantile business from 1864 till 1867, with Robert Cox and J. C. Boyd, under the firm name of Cox & Boyd, and during this time he was also Postmaster. He then purchased the interests of his partners, and conducted the business alone for one year, when he sold out and returned to his farm. He soon after sold his farm and purchased the Nicholson homestead, where he successfully followed farming till 1882, after which he sold the farm and bought his present property, and has since been engaged in the mercantile business, and is also the Postmaster at Cox's Mills. He also owns a farm, which is cultivated by his son. He and wife belong to the Society of Orthodox Friends. His father operated a saw and grist mill, carding-mill and oil-mill in Montgomery County, Ind. He was also an extensive farmer, and at his death was worth $15,000. He died in 1847, aged forty-four years. Our subject's mother died when he was five months old. She was a daughter of John and Esther Nicholson, who settled in Wayne County about 1815. During this time he purchased a farm six miles west of Winchester, Randolph Co., Ind., where he erected a grist-mill and remained several years. He constructed a mill in Illinois costing $12,000, which is now operated by his son Joseph. Selling his property in Randolph County, he bought and removed to the homestead, and was engaged for several years in the dairy business south of Richmond, with his son-in-law, W. H. Cook. It was known as the Quaker City Dairy. He was one of the stockholders and incorporators of the Second National Bank, and is still one of the Directors.

His youngest son, Jeremiah (our subject's grandfather), when seventeen years of age constructed a small grist-mill on his father's farm in North Carolina, which furnished meal for the family and neighbors. He next constructed a saw-mill on Pine Creek, but the power not being equal to his desires, he purchased lands with more water-power, and built a saw and grist mill and blacksmith shop. A few years later his mills, shop and crop were washed away by the floods in August, but he rebuilt and was successfully engaged in milling and farming till 1806, when he sold his property, and not wishing to bring up his large family in a slave State, he moved to Richmond, Wayne Co., Ind. They were the parents of seven children, of whom three survive—Robert, Catherine and William. All the family belonged to the Society of Friends. Jeremiah Cox, Sr., on coming to Richmond in 1806 entered a quarter-section of land (southwest part of what is now Richmond), and the family camped the first night near the site of the present court-house. A Kentuckian, who had preceded Mr. Cox, entered a half section of land on which he built a log cabin. Mr. Cox purchased this land and moved his family to the log cabin, which is now north of Main street, Richmond, and erected the first grist-mill in this vicinity. English, and figured conspicuously in the War of the Roses, and on account of the part taken in that war their estates were confiscated. Three brothers emigrated to America with William Penn, and from one of them our subject descended. His grandfather, Caleb Mendenhall, was born, reared and married in North Carolina, and where our subject's father, Griffith Mendenhall, was born Oct. 4, 1793, and when eight years of age came with his parents to Miami County, Ohio. In 1818, in partnership with Daniel Anthony, Griffith Mendenhall built and operated the first wool-carding mill in Richmond. He was married to Elizabeth Airey, by whom he had seven children—Bentley, Rees, William (deceased), Caleb, John (who died from disease contracted while in the war), Lindley (deceased) and Martha. Griffith Mendenhall died at the advanced age of eighty-five years.

Hugh Moffitt, eldest son of Charles and Elizabeth Moffitt, was born in Randolph County, N. C., March 21, 1806. His father, Charles Moffitt, was born in North Carolina, and in 1798 removed with his father, Hugh Hoffitt, Sr., to Ohio, where the latter died in 1799. Charles Moffitt returned to Randolph County, N. C., where he was married in 1804 to Elizabeth, daughter of Jeremiah and Margery Cox. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom six still survive—Hugh; Tacey, widow of William Cloud; John, of Indianapolis; Ruth, widow of Dr. J. J. Perry; Abijah; Anna, wife of Eli Stubbs, of Richmond, Ind. Jeremiah, Eunice, Hannah, Mary, Nathan and Elizabeth are deceased. In 1811 Charles Moffitt removed with his family to Richmond, Ind., and settled on a quarter-section of land, a portion of which is owned by our subject. In 1816 he erected a grist-mill on the present site of the Stafford, or Quaker City, Mills, which he operated till his death, together with farming. He also owned a saw-mill where Aikens' Woolen Mill now stands. He died in his seventy-second year. His widow survived till Nov. 30, 1860, and died in her seventy-seventh year. They belonged to the Society of Friends, both being Elders of the society. Hugh Moffitt was five years of age when his parents moved to Richmond. His youth was spent in helping his father clear the farm and in taking charge of the saw-mill, and his education was obtained at the subscription schools. In 1828 he was married to Sarah, daughter of William and Martha Childre, who came from Ohio to Wayne County, Ind., in 1827, and in 1830 they, with Mr. Moffitt and wife, removed to Boon County, Ind., where Mr. Moffitt followed farming till 1840. He then carried on the trade of cabinet-making in Thorntown, Boon County, till 1845, when he and his brother Nathan purchased the mill and a part of the homestead, where he still resides, and where Nathan Moffitt died in 1846. He has since sold the mill, but still owns the farm, and also owns some fine land in the county. Mr. Moffitt and wife have no children, but have reared the following from childhood—Mary Barker, wife of William Baxter, of Richmond; John Moffitt's children—Ann, Elizabeth and Charles; Martha Tyler, wife of Orin S. Mote, of Richmond; Ann McFerrear, wife of Albert S. Hunt; and Alice Mand Thomas, now living with them. Mr. and Mrs. Moffitt are members of the society of Friends, and he has served as Elder many years. Mrs. Moffitt's parents also belonged to the same society till their death. They had three children—Sarah, Phoebe and Uriah (deceased).

James Moore was born in Columbia County, Ga., June 15, 1798, the sixth and only living child of Alexander L., and Phoebe (Edwards) Moore, his father a native of South Carolina, of English descent, and his mother of Georgia, of Welsh descent. His paternal ancestors came to the United States prior to the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Mordecai Moore, was born in Pennsylvania. He was by trade a mill-stone cutter, and went south to work at his trade. He and his son Alexander L. were soldiers in the war of the Revolution. In 1808 our subject's parents removed to Butler County, Ohio, and when he was seventeen years of age, he induced his father to enter land, in what is now Wayne County, Ind., and in 1817 he entered a half section on Middle Fork of Whitewater River. James built cabins for the family, and in February, 1818, they removed to Indiana. His father was a well-informed man, and a fluent conversationalist. Having seen the evils of the slavery system in his native State, he was bitterly opposed to it, and for many years was a Whig, and later a Republican. He and his wife were consistent members of the Society of Friends. They lived to see their youngest child settled in life, and died at an advanced age. Our subject has experienced all the vicissitudes of pioneer life, and has seen Richmond grow from a place only in name, to the present flourishing county seat of Wayne County. His early educational advantages were limited, but having a desire for knowledge, he became a diligent reader, and became one of the best informed men in the county. Politically he has been a Whig and Republican. He is an advanced thinker, and an able advocate of his theories. He has been principally engaged in farming through life, but being a natural mechanic, can apply himself to any branch he has need of. After the death of his parents he became the owner of the homestead, 136 acres, which he has sold to his son, and now owns a desirable residence a mile and a half north of Main street, Richmond. He was married in 1828 to Esther, daughter of Jehu and Lydia (Stanfield) Hiatt. Her parents settled in Wayne County in an early day. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have two children—Lydia S. and Clarkson T. Mr. Moore has been Trustee of Wayne Township several years. He is a member of no society, but in religious faith is a Friend.

Robert Moore was born Feb. 13, 1808, in Lancaster County, Pa., a son of Andrew and Ann (Walker) Moore, the former a native of Pennsylvania, of Irish descent, and the latter of English ancestry. Andrew Moore died in 1818, and his wife in 1848. They and their family were members of the Society of Friends. Robert Moore was educated in the subscription schools of Pennsylvania, and at the age of fourteen years began learning the painter's trade. March 13, 1833, he was married to Ann Rainbo, born July 3, 1809, in Chester County, Pa., and daughter of Nathan and Elizabeth (Ash) Rainbo, the former of Welsh and the latter German descent. Maxwell, of Richmond, Ind., who has one daughter, Miriam A. Mr. Moore settled in Richmond, in May, 1837, where he followed painting for many years. In 1848 he settled on his farm, where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits more than twenty years, and has now retired from active business life. Mr. Moore and family belong to the Society of Friends. His son, Nathan Andrew Moore, was born May 3, 1838, in Richmond, Ind. He grew to manhood on his father's farm, and attended the common schools. He died in Richmond, at the age of seventy-seven. Mrs. Holloway resided with the subject of this sketch until her death, in her eighty-fifth year. They were members of the Society of Friends. When thirteen years of age he began working for farmers for $4 per month, continuing this till he was seventeen years old. Having saved all his earnings, he went to Wilmington, Del., and served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. He only attended school nine months, but by devoting all his leisure hours to study he has acquired a limited education. Webster, the youngest of Wayne County townships, is also the smallest township in the county. It is about four and a quarter miles in length and three and a half in width, and has an area of about fifteen square miles. Four townships were reduced in size to form Webster—Centre gave six square miles; Green, three; New Garden, three and three-eighths; and Wayne, two and a half. The township was formed by the county commissioners, Dec. 5, 1870, and Webster Village was designated as the voting place. Chiswell Coggeshall was appointed Township Trustee, and Samuel Roberts, Assessor. The township is drained by Nolan's Fork and its tributaries. Farms and improvements are good, and the citizens thrifty and enterprising. Portions of the surface are quite elevated; all the land is arable and fertile.

Joseph and Rachel Bond, whose descendants still remain in the township, moved from North Carolina to a farm situated near the present village of Webster in 1811.

Willis Whitson, one of the very first settlers, located on the farm now owned by his son John Whitson. Rhoda Mendenhall, wife of Nathan Mendenhall, lives on fifty-five acres of land, a part of the farm originally settled by her father, Samuel Bond. Isaac Jessup, from Virginia, settled in this township in 1816. His son Jehu now lives in Webster. Joseph Personett settled in the northwestern corner of the township, on the present Price farm. Daniel Bond, son of Edward, and Aaron Livingston settled in the western part of the township.

John Bishop settled south of Webster; Nathan Hawkins and Michael Harvey, in the same neighborhood.

Thomas Culbertson was one of the very first settlers. David Culbertson settled on the creek. Robert Culbertson and his son Daniel came from Kentucky to this neighborhood in 1815. Henry Hoover settled early where Wm. King now lives. Andrew and David Hampton settled east of Webster. Later, Jehiel Hampton and David Smitson settled near by.

The farm on which Alexander Cheeseman now lives was early owned by Richard Cheeseman, who had the adjoining farm. It was improved by a man named Nordyke; then by Charles Thompson. The first road ran through the eastern part of the farm, from Salisbury to Williamsburg, and on this road the first cabin on the place was erected. Later the road from Centreville to Williamsburg—now the turnpike—was laid out on the present township line. Mr. Alex. Cheeseman, one of the oldest residents of this part of the township, says most of the farms were taken up, though but slightly improved, in 1821. Large trees were girdled and left standing, and the smaller trees being cut away left space for the small crops then planted. Log-rolling, raisings, wrestling-matches and weddings afforded the chief amusements of that day. At weddings usually all the young people for miles around were gathered. They rode on horseback in couples. Dancing and whisky gave liveliness to the gathering. Such occasions—of course excepting among the Quakers—were productive of much fun and merriment. Most of the settlers were poor, but they were very helpful one toward another.

Lewis McLain, Samuel Hague, John Cannaday, William Thornburgh, and the Evanses were early settlers in the western part of the township. Joseph Evans, from New Jersey, bought several sections of land. He never lived there, but his children—Joseph, William, Samuel and Mrs. Satterthwaite—came out and settled.

Huldah Overman, now in her ninety-second year, is living on land entered by Joseph Overman. Hannah Roberts, widow of Walter Roberts, also in her ninety-second year, is living on land entered by her husband. These are about all of the original early settlers now remaining in the township.

In the northern part of the township Daniel and John Baldwin and Isaac Williams were early settlers. John, Thomas and Joseph Teagle settled early northwest of Webster Village. Benjamin Bishop, who had served in the patriot army in the Revolution, was another early settler. His father, a Tory, lived and died here. Charles Baldwin, son of John, was another early settler.

Stephen Comer, from North Carolina, first settled in Wayne County about two and a half miles northeast of Richmond. From this place he soon after removed to a farm near the village of Webster. During the Indian troubles he was driven to the vicinity of Richmond, but after peace was established he returned to his farm. He died in 1850.

William Thornburgh, who died in Indianapolis, came to Wayne County in 1810, and to Centre Township (now Webster) in 1816. His sons lived on the farm later.

The first grist-mill in the township was run by horse-power. It was provided with a big wheel and built by John Baldwin on the present Compton place. He also had a saw-mill there. These mills were afterward purchased by John Baldwin, an early settler.

The first store was kept by Thomas and John Baldwin north of Webster.

The Friends established a school as early as 1821—perhaps before. John Bishop, John Comer and Charles Johnson were among the first teachers.

The township officers for 1883-'4 are: Eli Kenworthy, Trustee; Jonathan Jarrett, Assessor; H. D. Mendenhall, Justice of the Peace; Milton Bishop, Constable.

WEBSTER.

The village of Webster, generally called Dover, after the "Dover Meeting" of the Friends, was laid out about 1850, by Edward Bond and Samuel Clark. He sold to Woodward & Wiggins, who continued business a short time. Then came Addison H. Harris for about eight years. He sold out to Wm. Brooks, who sold out to Simon H. Bond about seventeen years ago.

The postoffice at Webster was formed in 1851. The names of Postmasters, and the dates of their commissions are as follows: Allen Teagle, Jan. 6, 1851; Joel Jeffrey, Jan. 13, 1852; Isaac G. ## CHURCHES.

Dover Meeting.—This meeting was named after the town of Dover, N. C., from which many of the early settlers came to this part of Wayne County. Dover Meeting was organized by the Friends in 1821. Among the leading early members were: Willis Whitson and wife; Walter Roberts and Hannah his wife, the latter still living, Isaac and Ann Jessup, Joseph Bond and wife, Stephen and Mary Comer, Samuel and Charity Bond, and Edward and Anna Bond. Elizabeth Bond was the first minister belonging to this meeting. Her father, Thomas Bales, who died in Ohio, and was buried near Chillicothe, was the first Quaker preacher that ever crossed the Ohio River. He came from North Carolina.

The church lot and cemetery was purchased of Edward Bond for $5. It contains three acres. A meeting-house, 16 x 18 feet, of hewed logs, was erected in 1821, and was afterward used as a school-house. A second meeting-house was built of hewed logs, about twenty-five feet square. It had no chimney, but a hole in the roof instead. A charcoal fire, kept upon a stone hearth in the centre of the house, served to warm the building. The third house was a frame about 25 x 40 feet. It was succeeded by a frame house 25 x 50 feet. In 1855 the present meeting-house of brick, 26 x 52 feet, was erected. Each of the earlier meeting-houses, when given up for meeting purposes, were used as school-rooms. The Friends maintained one of the earliest schools in this part of the county at Dover. The meeting now has about 245 members. The Ministers are: Jehu Jessup and Jehiel Bond; Trustees, Levi Bond, Henry J. and Samuel Roberts; Clerks, Wm. Black and Eunice E. Bond; Overseers, Isaac Stiggleman and Wm. Black; Elders, Lewis Bond, Eli Kenworthy, Isaac Williams, Thos. Clark and Mahlon Bond.

Canaday Chapel M. E. Church.—Prior to 1839 circuit preaching was held at the house of Robert Culbertson for some years. In 1839 a camp-meeting, which resulted in a revival and the formation of a church, was held on the farm then owned by John Canaday. Shortly afterward a frame church was erected on a lot of land donated by Mr. Canaday. It was used until 1878, when the present house was built on the same lot. Camp-meetings were held for a few years. Among the first preachers was Miltietus Miller. Early members: Robert and Rebecca Culbertson, David S. Culbertson, a local preacher, son of Robert, Daniel Culbertson, Davidson Culbertson, John Canaday and wife, A. J. Russell and wife and Henry Hoover. The present membership is small. The church is on the Williamsburg circuit.

M. E. Church.—The M. E. church at Webster was organized in 1865, and a house of worship erected the same year at a cost of about $1,000. There had been occasional preaching for several years previous. Among the early members were: Burgess Lake and wife, John Comer and wife, Emsley Overman and wife, and others. The present membership is small. The church belongs with the Williamsburg circuit.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Cornelius Bond, a son of Thomas Bond, Jr., was born in Wayne County, Ind., Dec. 2, 1834, and has always resided in what is now Webster Township, engaged in farming. He has one of the most attractive homes in the country. He started in life with forty acres of poor land, but with energy and perseverance equal to any emergency. In his early manhood he received an injury that made him a cripple for life. While splitting wood the ax passed through the timber and buried itself in his knee. He was unable to move for weeks and it was several months before he was able to work. He has often felt almost compelled to give up, but with a determination that was able to surmount many difficulties he kept on. He was married Oct. 13, 1853, to Anna E., daughter of Hartman and Catharine Eigenbrodt. She was born in Pennsylvania, Nov. 6, 1832, and when three years of age came with her parents to Wayne County, locating in Rich mond, and in 1838 removing to Webster Township. Mr. and Mrs. Bond have seven children—Ada V. M., Josie A., Elma L., William A., Charley T. H., Cadie R. and Etta J. M. They are members of the Society of Friends.

Joseph Bond, son of Samuel and Elizabeth Bond (who came from England), was born in North Carolina, Aug. 9, 1779. He came to the Territory of Ohio in 1801, raised a crop and then went back to North Carolina. In the latter part of 1802 he married Rachel Harrold, daughter of John and Phebe Harrold. They remained in North Carolina until 1811, when, with five children, they moved to the Territory of Indiana and settled in what is now Wayne County, about seven miles northwest of Richmond. Here six more children were added to their family, making eleven in all, eight boys and three girls, all of whom lived to be men and women. In 1838 he moved to Randolph County, Ind., where he lived about three years, his wife surviving him about two years. The children of Joseph Bond are the following—Darius, born Dec. 26, 1803, died Sept. 3, 1837; Eunice, born Oct. 3, 1805, died Jan. 24, 1870; John H., born Dec. 6, 1807, still living in Randolph County; Mordecai, born Sept. 24, 1809, died Aug. 8, 1849; Joseph S., born July 29, 1811, living in Randolph County; Amos, born April 9, 1814, living in Grant County, Ind.; Levi, born Nov. 4, 1815, living in Wayne County, Ind.; Elihu, born April 28, 1817, died June 7, 1870; Rachel, born March 13, 1819, died March 20, 1840; Zimri, born Dec. 25, 1820, died April 14, 1877; Lavina, born Jan. 5, 1826, living in Iowa. Levi Bond, the only son now living in Wayne County, Dec. 1, 1840, married Lydia Williams, daughter of John and Mary Williams, of Wayne County. They now live in Webster Township, having lived there ever since their marriage, except fourteen years that were spent in Randolph County, Ind. Their only son, Jehiel Bond, living with them, was born Jan. 30, 1842. April 26, 1866, he married Anna Jane Marshall, daughter of Evan and Gulia Elma Marshall.

Mahlan Bond was born in Henry County, Ind., Nov. 30, 1850, a son of Amer and Mary Bond. When he was eight years of age he came to Wayne County to live with his uncle, Thomas Bond, and remained with him or his widow till Feb. 13, 1873, when he married Eunice E. Hunt. She was born Aug. 23, 1852, in Wayne County, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Bond have three children—Leona, Leslie and Lilian. Previous to his marriage Mr. Bond bought a farm of eighty acres, on section 21, Webster Township, where he still lives. He and his wife are members of the Society of Friends.

William Bond was born Oct. 13, 1834, in Webster Township, Wayne Co., Ind., a son of Jesse and Anna (Cook) Bond, both natives of Wayne County, his father born Oct. 7, 1808, and his mother Feb. 4, 1811. William Bond has always been a farmer, and now has 160 acres of well-improved land. He was married in 1855 to Sarah A., daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Jessup, of Rush County, Ind. She was born May 1, 1837. They have had nine children—Emily Ann (deceased), Thomas J., Franklin W., John M., Charles E., William P. and Robert B. (twins), Rebecca A. and Jesse I. Mr. and Mrs. Bond are members of the Society of Friends.

Thomas Clark was born in Randolph County, N. C., Aug. 27, 1831, a son of John and Nancy Clark, of Rush County, Ind. His parents came to Indiana in 1832 and located in Carthage, where he was reared, and received a common-school education. He then attended Earlham College two terms, and then entered the Freshman class of Haverford College, near Philadelphia, Pa., remaining there nearly four years, paying his tuition by teaching in the primary department. He afterward taught two years. In 1861 he married Emily J. Griffin, a native of Henry County, Ind., born July 28, 1833, and a daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Burgess) Griffin, now of Spiceland, Henry County. After his marriage, Mr. Clark commenced farming near Nobleville, Hamilton Co., Ind., and in 1875 exchanged his property there for a farm on section 34, Webster Township, Wayne County. Mr. Clark has always taken an interest in the temperance cause and in education. He and his wife are members of the Society of Friends. They have a family of four children—Mary B., John G., Daniel B. and Anna R.

Warner M. Hockett.—Very little is known of the Hockett family prior to their leaving England. Philip Hoggatt (as the name was then spelled) came to the United States with, or about the time of, William Penn's colony, and settled in Chester County, Pa., where he died. His son William went to Guilford County, N. C., when a young man, and bought from the Indians the right to a mile square of land twelve miles south of Greensboro. He built a cabin in the woods, having no neighbors nearer than eighteen miles, going on foot through the forest to New Garden to do his courting. He married Hannah, daughter of John and Lydia Bales. They had three sons—William, Joseph and Stephen. The two latter emigrated to Miami County, Ohio. William inherited the old homestead, and married Hannah, daughter of Jeremiah and Susannah Reynolds, of Randolph County, N. C. They had three daughters and two sons—Lydia, William, Susannah, Rachel and John, who was burned by falling in the fire when small, and died. Lydia married Joshua Chamness. Rachel married Benjamin Benbow; both removed to Randolph County, Ind. Susannah never married. William married Hannah Davis, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Davis. They had twelve children—an infant, not named, Banajah H., Himelius M., Jesse D., William B., Milton, Warner M., David D., Caroline D., Seth B., Sarah E., Susanna M. Warner M., our subject, came to Indiana in 1860, and in 1861 married Matilda C., daughter of Elisha and Ruth Dennis. They had three children—Addison Fulton, Martha Ellen and Mary Elma. His wife died of rheumatism of the heart, and he subsequently married Sarah G., daughter of Nathan and Mary Charles, of Richmond. They have one son—William N. Mr. Hockett first settled in Ogden, Henry County, where he worked in a cabinet-shop and at the carpenter's trade. He remained there three years, when, on account of his health, he removed to a farm near Economy, Wayne County. In 1873 he bought his present farm of 104 acres, a mile west of Webster, of John Connor, paying $6,000 for it, but having greatly improved it now values it at $7,000. Mr. Hockett's brothers all own farms in North Carolina, near or adjoining the old homestead. Milton is entirely deaf, and has never married. Three brothers were conscripted into the rebel army, but on account of their conscientious scruples against wars and fighting refused to bear arms. William was taken to Virginia, and was within a quarter of a mile of the battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. He was tied behind a forage car, with a rope around his neck, and was obliged to run or be dragged by the neck, and in various other ways punished. Himelius and Jesse were taken to Kingston and subjected to the most inhuman torture, Jesse being hung up by his thumbs to a pin in the wall for three hours. After this barbarous treatment they all reached home alive.

He accumulated a large library which he opened for the benefit of those unable to purchase books. He was a devoted member of the Society of Friends, and although very reserved in his manner, won the respect and admiration of all who knew him by his generosity and faithful allegiance to the cause.
