

<http://stores.ebay.com/Ancestry-Found>

1626.

HISTORY

OF

PENOBSCOT COUNTY

MAINE,

WITH

ILLUSTRATIONS AND BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CLEVELAND:
WILLIAMS, CHASE & CO

1882.

PREFACE.

It is hoped that this book is redeemed from the sweeping reproach of Walpole: "Read me anything but history, for history must be false;" or the scope of Napoleon's question: "What is history, but a fiction agreed upon?" It will need, however, the abounding charity of De Quincey's eloquent phrase: "Two strong angels stand by the side of history, * * * as heraldic supporters—the angel of research on the left hand, that must read millions of dusty parchments and of pages blotted with lies; the angel of meditation on the right hand, that must cleanse these lying records with fire, even as of old the draperies of asbestos were cleansed, and must quicken them into regenerated life. Willingly I acknowledge that no man will ever avoid innumerable errors of detail; with so vast a compass of ground to traverse, this is impossible." That this book is superior, in the points of accuracy and fullness, to all others of its class, the compilers do not claim; but it is hoped that in these particulars the History is equal to the best of them. It is recommended that every reader, before entering upon the perusal of its pages, use the table of errata, at the end of the work, in the careful correction of its pages with pen or pencil. Many errors of typography, and some of statement, will thus disappear.

It will be observed, also, that important parts of the History supplement each other. Judge Godfrey, for example, has fortunately enlarged the scope of his Annals far beyond the limits of Bangor; and if the separate sketches of Brewer, Orrington, Hampden, and many other towns, seem insufficient, additional matter of abounding interest will be found in the Bangor division of the book. Further histories of Dexter, Bradley, Passadumkeag, etc., received late in the course of printing, are also comprised in the Appendix.

It was inevitable, however, that parts of the book would scarcely prove equal to the expectation of some of its readers. An immense tract was to be traversed, in both time and geographical area; a large General History was to be made up, in justice to the most important county of Eastern Maine. Separate sketches were to be made of the history of one city, fifty-five towns, and seven organized plantations—a number of these settled by civilization more than a century ago; and it soon became certain, in the preparation of this work, that, within the limits necessarily prescribed for it (large as it is, comprising more than a million of words), it would be simply impossible to make the history of all localities equally full and satisfactory. It only remained for the compilers and their aids to do the best that was practicable, with the materials at hand, and leave the generosity and good sense of their readers to accept the result as such.

Acknowledgments to books and persons are so amply and frequently made in the course of the chapters that it is deemed unnecessary to repeat them here. The grateful thanks of the compilers are due to them, and to all others who may have contributed to the literary as well as pecuniary success of this important venture.

For the biographical feature of this book the compilers have, with few exceptions, no responsibility.

JANUARY 3, 1882.

CONTENTS.

HISTORICAL.

CHAPTER.	GENERAL HISTORY.	PAGE.
I.	Description of the county	9
II.	The Penobscot Indians	29
III.	The Discoverers	46
IV.	Geographical Designations	51
V.	Colonization and Settlement	65
VI.	The Missionaries	70
VII.	County Organization—Civil List	73
VIII.	Land Titles—Growth	77
IX.	Military Record of Penobscot County	86
X.	Agricultural and other Societies	164
XI.	The Maine State College	170
XII.	Ecclesiastical History	176
XIII.	The Bangor Theological Seminary	177
XIV.	The Press in Penobscot County	185
XV.	Roads, Railroads and Telegraphs	191
XVI.	The Bench and Bar of Penobscot	195
XVII.	Bibliography of Penobscot County	228

	TOWNSHIPS AND VILLAGES.	PAGE.
Alton		247
Argyle		249
Bradford		251
Bradley		255-855
Brewer		258
Burlington		269
Carmel		272
Carroll		276
Charleston		279
Chester		283
Clifton		290
Corinna		293
Corinth		306
Dexter		318-861
Dixmont		323
Eddington		333
Edinburg		339
Enfield		340
Etna		343
Exeter		869
Garland		352
Glenburn		359
Greenbush		362
Greenfield		366
Hampden		368
Hermon		379
Holden		382
Howland		387
Hudson		390
Kenduskeag		391
Kingman		396
Lagrange		398
Levant		403
Lee		884
Lincoln		408
Lowell		415
Mattawamkeag		894
Mattamiscontis		419
Maxfield		420

CHAPTER.	PAGE.
Medway	422
Milford	901
Mount Chase	424
Newburg	426
Newport	435
Orono	443
Oldtown	454
Orrington	467
Passadumkeag	475-911
Patten	478
Plymouth	482
Plantations	506-513
Prentiss	485
Springfield	488
Stetson	490
Veazie	495
Winn	497

THE ANNALS OF BANGOR—1769-1882.
CHAPTER.	PAGE.
I.—1769 to 1776	517
II.—1770 to 1780	522
III.—1780 to 1785	528
IV.—1785 to 1800	535
V.—1800 to 1805	541
VI.—1805 to 1811	547
VII.—1811-1812-1813	553
VIII.—1814	557
IX.—1815 to 1816	570
X.—1817	577
XI.—1818	579
XII.—1819	586
XIII.—1820	590
XIV.—1821	595
XV.—1822	601
XVI.—1823	606
XVII.—1824	610
XVIII.—1825	615
XIX.—1826	623
XX.—1827	632
XXI.—1828	641
XXII.—1829	646
XXIII.—1830	650
XXIV.—1831	653
XXV.—1832	659
XXVI.—1833	662
XXVII.—1834	667
XXVIII.—1835	672
XXIX.—1836	684
XXX.—1837	697
XXXI.—Subsequent History of Bangor, 1838-1881	711
XXXII.—The Churches of Bangor	718
XXXIII.—The Public Charities of Bangor	733
XXXIV.—Associations and Clubs	738
XXXV.—The Water Works	750
XXXVI.—Civil List of Bangor	753
XXXVII.—Bangor Biographies	760
XXXVIII.—Settlement Notes	787
XXXIX.—Township Biographies	820

CONTENTS.

F27
P38H6

APPENDIX.
Appendix to General History		847	Lee	884
Appendix to Bradley.		855	Mattawankeag	894
Dexter.		861	Milford	901
Exeter		869	Passadumkeag	911
			Addenda	914

BIOGRAPHICAL.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Appleton, Hon. John, LL. D.	201 and 763	Hamilin, Hon. Hannibal	213
Allen, Hon. Frederick H.	205	Hamilin, Hon. Hannibal	760
Allen, Hon. Elsha H.	211	Hamilin, Hon. Elijah L.	214
Abbot, Hon. William	213	Hamilin, General Charles	214
Appleton, Frederick H.	222	Hilliard, William T.	221
Appleton, Moses L.	222	Hobbs, Frederick	223
Appleton, General John F.	225	Hill, Joshua	226
Ayer, Horatio S.	830	Hill, Colonel Francis	917
Brown, Hon. Enoch	207	Hodsdon, Sergeant Israel	314
Barker, Hon. Lewis	217	Hutchings, Colonel Jasper	227
Barker, Lewis A.	217	Hill, Brevet Brigadier General Jonathan A.	492
Barker, David	224	Hill, Captain Henry F.	492
Bartlett, Ichabod D.	224	Hersey, General S. F.	777
Bailey, Charles A.	225	Hunt, Abel	786
Blanchard, John A.	225	Haines, Dr. George A.	828
Blake, William A.	226	Hill, Hon. Francis W.	829
Bond, Francis Eugene	226	Hammond, John R.	837
Burgess, James H.	227	Huston, Nicholas R.	838
Brastow, Captain Billings	261	Haynes, George H.	839
Barker, Hon. Lewis	764	Hodsdon, General Isaac	840
Boutelle, Captain Charles A.	766 and 915	Ingersoll, George W.	220
Brown, William H., M. D.	767	Jewett, Hon. Albert G.	211
Beal, Flavius O.	783	Jordon, Edward	838
Bryant, Charles D.	786	Kent, Hon. Edward, L. L. D.	203
Bragg, Warren A.	813	Kent, Hon. Edward, L. L. D.	761
Butman, Samuel	918	Leonard, Oliver	218
Chesley, Samuel	287	Ladd, Hon. George W.	763
Cutting, Jonas, LL. D.	202	Lord, Henry	766
Chandler, Peleg	212	Laughton, Dr. Sumner	770
Crosby, Hon. Josiah	216 and 825	Laughton, Hon. Frederick M.	771
Chandler, Theophilus P.	220	McGaw, Hon. Thornton	209
Copeland, Thomas J.	223	McGaw, Jacob	218
Crosby, William C.	223	Moody, George B.	220
Chamberlain, Horace B.	227	McCrillis, David	222
Chamberlain, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas D.	261	McCrillis, William H.	222
Chamberlain, Joshua L.	262	Mitchell, Henry L.	225
Combs, Lieutenant L. M.	335	McFadden, T. F.	225
Case, Captain Isaac Winslow	393	Mayo, Captain Ezekiel R.	371
Carleton, Brigadier General James H.	449	Mudge Enoch R.	472
Chapman, Adolphus J.	282	Morison, Hon. John	824
Crosby, Captain Henry	372	Nichols, Lemuel	784
Dutton, Hon. Samuel E.	205	Oakman, Major Ora	311
Donigan, James A.	227	Oakes, Captain Samuel J.	476
Davis, Governor D. F.	823	Plaisted, Hon. Harris M.	between 64-65
Emery, Marcellus	224	Peters, Hon. John A.	204
Eddy, Colonel Jonathan	334	Perham, Hon. David	204
Ellis, Captain Osco A.	410	Plaisted, Hon. Harris M.	211
Egery, Hon. Thomas N.	779	Prentiss, Hon. Henry E.	216
Eddy, Jonathan	842	Paine, Albert W.	222
Fuller, Lieutenant Colonel George	314	Palmer, Surgeon Alden D.	449
Foster, Major Benjamin B.	450	Pullen, Colonel Frank D.	781
Flanders, Reuben	828	Plaisted, Hon. William	829
Folsom, Dr. A. P.	833	Rowe, James S.	219
Folsom, Major M. M.	834	Rogers, Jonathan P.	219
Fernald, M. C.	835	Rogers, Lieutenant Edwin S.	479
Fuller, Henry D.	314	Ruggles, Major Hiram	821
Godfrey, Hon. John	208	Ruggles, Lieutenant G. H.	822
Godfrey, James	208	Sanborn, Hon. Daniel	207
Goodenow, Hon. Henry C.	210	Stetson, Hon. Charles	210
Gilman, Hon. Allen	212	Stetson, Charles P.	210
Gilman, Charles	219	Sewall, George P.	215
Garnsey, Samuel	219	Starrett, George	219
Greenwood, Charles	305	Sanborn, Abraham	228
Gardner, Hon. John	837	Stearns, Lewis C.	228
Hathaway, Hon. Joshua W.	202	Sanger, Dr. E. F.	768
Hill, Hon. Thomas A.	209	Seavy, Dr. Calvin	771
Humphrey, Hon. Samuel F.	210	Sargent, Deacon Daniel	820

CONTENTS.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Sprague, Volney A.	827	Weston, Nathan Jr.	223
Shaw, Hon. Charles	827	Weeks, Matthias	224
Smith, Hon. Asa	830	Whitney, George W.	227
Shaw, E. W.	831	Wilson, Franklin A.	228
Smith, Hon. Joseph L.	832	Wilson, Joseph C.	228
Thissell, Hon. John	825	Washburn, Lieutenant Israel H.	449
Vose, Hon. Thomas W.	217	Woods, Hon. Noah	773
Veazie, General Samuel	774	Webber, John Prescott	780
Veazie, Jones P.	787	Wadleigh, Jesse R.	831
Williamson, Hon. William D.	206	Wadleigh, Moses P.	832
Washburn, Hon. Israel	211	Webster, Eben	835
Wakefield, Hon. Albert G.	215	Wilson, Surgeon J. B.	883
Wilson, Nathaniel	221

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Map of Penobscot County	Frontispiece	Portrait of John Gardner	between 478-479
Portrait of General Samuel Veazie	between 32- 33	Residence of John Gardner	between 478-479
Portrait of Governor H. M. Plaisted	facing 65	Portrait of John R. Hammond	between 480-481
Portrait of D. F. Davis	facing 73	Residence of John R. Hammond	between 480-481
County Buildings	facing 75	Cream Brook Farm	between 490-491
Portrait of Lewis A. Barker	between 82- 83	Residence of Samuel E. Stetson.	facing 492
Residence of A. F. Bradbury	facing 89	Residence of Edward and John Jordan	facing 493
Portrait of General Isaac Hodsdon	facing 95	Residence of Porter G. Wiggin	facing 494
Portrait of Dr. E. F. Sanger	between 112-113	Portrait of Alvin Haynes	between 838-839
Portrait of Major M. M. Folsom	facing 117	Portrait of Charles A. Haynes	between 838-839
Portrait of Lieutenant G. H. Ruggles	between 152-153	Portrait of George H. Haynes	between 838-839
Maine State Agricultural College	facing 170	Portrait of N. R. Huston	between 500-501
Portrait of M. C. Fernald	facing 172	Residence of N. R. Huston	between 500-501
Portrait of C. A. Boutelle	between 186-187	Map of Bangor in 1798	facing 515
Portrait of Noah Woods	facing 193	Portrait of Hon. Lewis Barker	between 524-525
Portrait of Hon. John Appleton	facing 201	Portrait of Thomas N. Egery	between 544-545
Portrait of Hon. John E. Godfrey	facing 208	Portrait of G. W. Ladd	between 570-571
Portrait of Hon. Josiah Crosby	facing 216	Map of Bangor in 1820	between 590-591
Residence of Greenville J. Shaw	facing 244	Map of Bangor in 1820	between 590-591
Portrait of Charles P. Church	facing 251	Portrait of Lemuel Nichols	facing 592
Portrait of Cyrus P. Church	facing 252	Portrait of J. E. Chapman	facing 600
Portrait of Thomas R. Kingsbury	facing 253	Bangor Planing Mill	facing 608
Portrait of D. S. Humphrey	facing 254	Portrait of Hon. Henry Lord	between 624-625
Portrait of Deacon Daniel Sargent	between 258-259	Portrait of F. O. Beal	between 644-645
Residence of J. B. Benjamin	facing 273	View of Bangor House	between 644-645
Portrait of Major Hiram Ruggles	between 274-275	Portrait of Jones P. Veazie	facing 652
Portrait of Thomas J. Peaks	facing 282	Portrait of Abel Hunt	facing 656
View of Eureka Mills	facing 305	Portrait of F. V. Pullen	between 702-703
Portrait of Hon. John Thissell	between 312-313	Portrait of F. M. Laughton	between 712-713
Portrait of Reuben Flanders	facing 318	St. Xavier's Convent	facing 731
View of Amos Abbott & Co's Mills	facing 320	Portrait of Dr. Sumner Laughton	between 734-735
Portrait of Colonel Jonathan Eddy	facing 334	Portrait of J. P. Webber	facing 741
Portrait of T. P. Bacheelder	between 394-395	Store of Thurston, Bragg & Co.	facing 813
Portrait of Hon. William Plaisted	facing 409	Residence of Hon. John Morison	facing 824
Portrait of William R. Ayer	facing 414	Portrait of Volney A. Sprague	facing 827
Portrait of E. W. Shaw	facing 437	Portrait of Thomas M. Plaisted	facing 829
Portrait of Dr. John Benson	facing 442	Portrait of George A. Haines	facing 861
Residence of B. P. Gilman	between 444-445	Dexter Woolen Mills	facing 865
Portrait of Jesse R. Wadleigh	facing 448	Residence of Hon. Josiah Crosby	facing 868
Residence of Eben Webster	facing 449	Portrait of F. W. Hill	facing 879
Portrait of J. L. Smith	between 454-455	Residence and portrait of Asa Smith	facing 897
Portrait of Dr. A. P. Folsom	between 458-459	Portrait of Colonel Francis Hill	between 916-915
Residence of Dr. A. P. Folsom	between 458-459	Portrait of Mrs. Elizabeth Hill	between 916-917
Residence of M. M. Folsom	facing 466

HISTORY OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY, MAINE.

CHAPTER I.

DESCRIPTION OF THE COUNTY.

Geographical—Its Situation, Size, Boundaries, Subdivisions, and Population—The Penobscot River—Scenery of the Bay—The Accounts of Rozier, Dr. Kohl, Wells, and Williamson—Lumbering on the River—The Soil of Penobscot—Arable and Waste Lands—Agricultural Adaptation of Wild Lands—Geology of the County—Bangor and Vicinity—From Holden to Charleston—Argillo-mica Schist—Mica Schist in Carroll—About Lakeville Plantation—The East Branch of the Penobscot—Working the Slate—History of the Brownville Quarries—"Horsebacks"—Marble and Limestones—The Manufacture of Lime—Trap Rock—Granite in Northern Maine—Sundry Geological Notes—Travelers' Descriptions—Steele—Thorneau—Audubon.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

The county of Penobscot, in the State of Maine, is altogether an inland subdivision, no part of its territory abutting upon the seacoast. It occupies, however, almost the whole of the valley of the Penobscot, nearly the whole of the main stream of that river, the entire East branch, except its furthest headwaters, and many miles of the West branch, lying within the borders of this county. The lower part of the county is nearly in the middle of the State, on an east and west line from Passamaquoddy Bay. On a north and south line, however, its boundaries are much nearer to the sea than to the river St. John, the northern limit of the State, and the entire northern half of the county approaches within thirty to fifty miles of the State line on the east, while it is at all points more than twice as far from the western boundaries of the State. It is the principal county of Eastern Maine, and one of the largest and most important in the Commonwealth. It has a total area of two thousand seven hundred and sixty square miles, or one million seven hundred and sixty-six thousand four hundred acres. Its extreme length, from the northernmost boundary, the north line of section eight, of the eighth range, to the southernmost point, the projection of Orrington town into Hancock county, is one hundred and seventeen and one-half miles. Its breadth varies from a little more than eighteen miles, down the county from the north line for about forty-five miles, to fifty and one-half miles in extreme width, on a belt of eight miles' width from Dexter and the north part of Corinna eastward. The breadth from Carroll, Prentiss, and Drew Plantation westward, is the same as that of the lower part of the county, say the latitude of Bangor—forty miles; which is shortened in the southernmost portion, from Dixmont eastward, by about three miles.

The boundaries of the county, although quite irregular, are almost wholly in right lines. It has no "natural boundaries," except at the southwest part of Orrington, where the Penobscot separates its territory from the northeast corner of Waldo county. Its entire periphery or boundary has a length, very nearly, of three hundred and fifty-three miles. It is bounded on the north by Aroostook and Piscataquis counties; on the east by Aroostook, Washington, and Hancock; on the south—that part of the county east of the Penobscot by Hancock county, that west of the river by Waldo county, on the west (Dixmont) by Waldo, (Plymouth to Dexter), Somerset, and (the rest of the county) Piscataquis counties. The famous eminence of the wilderness, Mount Katahdin, is just outside the western boundary, on the latitude of Stacyville town; also Lake Sebocis, to the westward of Woodville and Chester. Between these towns and the lake is the Mattamiscontis mountain, a height of respectable altitude, about six miles from the west line of the county.

The organized towns of Penobscot county are Alton, Argyle, Bangor, Bradford, Bradley, Brewer, Burlington, Carmel, Carroll, Charleston, Chester, Clifton, Corinna, Corinth, Dexter, Dixmont, Eddington, Edinburg, Enfield, Etna, Exeter, Garland, Glenburn, Greenbush, Greenfield, Hampden, Hermon, Holden, Howland, Hudson, Kenduskeag, Kingman, Lagrange, Lee, Levant, Lincoln, Lowell, Mattamiscontis, Mattawamkeag, Maxfield, Medway, Milford, Mount Chase, Newport, Newburgh, Oldtown, Orono, Orrington, Passadumkeag, Paten, Plymouth, Prentiss, Springfield, Stetson, Veazie, and Winn—fifty-six in all. The organized plantations are Drew, Lakeville, Stacyville, Webster, Woodville, No. 1 (North Bingham, Penobscot Purchase), and No. 2, Grand Falls Plantation—eight in number. Unorganized plantations are Pattagumpus, Whitney Ridge, West Indian, township A, range 7; No. 3; Nos. 2 and 3, range 3; No. 2, range 4; No. 2, range 6; No. 2, range 9; No. 3, range 1—eleven.

The population of the county, according to the census of 1880, was seventy thousand four hundred and seventy-eight.

The great physical feature of the county is, of course, the

PENOBSCOT RIVER.

The Indian name of this renowned stream, which has been taken also by an ancient town in Hancock county, and by the great county which nearly fills its valley, is Penobskeag or Penobscook—the former having the well-known termination keag, found in many appellatives in this State, and meaning place—the whole word signifying “the place of rocks.” The French, in their efforts to represent the Indian sounds by their alphabet, called the river Pentaquevett, which became shortened into Pentagoet—a designation by which the remains of the old fort on the margin of the water at Castine are still known. But the men of Plymouth, who established their trading-post at or near the same spot in 1826, are believed to have been the first to name the river as Penobscot. It received other titles in the course of civilized exploration on these shores—as the river of Norumbega, the Rio de Gomez, and others which will appear hereafter.

The scenery of the bay and river of Penobscot is widely celebrated for its picturesque character and beauty. The lines of Whittier, in his musical verse embodying the legend of the Farnatine sachen, Mogg Megone, furnish a fitting introduction to the scene:

Beneath the westward-turning eye
A thousand wooded islands lie,—
Then thousand tints of beauty glow
Down in the restless waves below.

Here sleeps Placentia's group,—
There, gloomily against the sky
The Dark Isles rear their summits high;
And Desert Rock, abrupt and bare,
Lifts its gray turrets in the air,—
Seen from afar, like some stronghold
Built by the ocean-kings of old;
And, faint as smoke-wreath, white and thin,
Swells in the north vast Katahdin;
And, wandering from its marshy feet,
The broad Penobscot comes to meet
And mingle with its own bright lay

The historian of Weymouth's voyage, M. Rozier, eulogizes the stream up which the explorer pushed, whatever it may have been (probably the Penobscot), in the warmest terms. His praises are well worthy the Penobscot waters:

As we passed with a gentle wind up with our ship in this river, any man may conceive with what admiration we all consented in joy. Many of our company, who had been travellers in sundry countries and in the most famous rivers, yet affirmed them not comparable to this they now beheld. Some that were with Sir Walter Raleigh in his voyage to Guiana, in the discovery of the river Orenoque, which echoed fame to the world's ears, gave reasons why it was not to be compared with this, which winteth the dangers, of many shoals and broken ground wherewith that was incumbered. Others before that notable river in the West Indies, called Rio Grande, some before the river of Loire, the river Seine and of Bordeaux, in France, which, though they be great and goodly rivers, yet is it no detraction from them to be accounted inferior to this.

The first chapter of Dr. J. G. Kohl's "History of the Discovery of the East Coast of North America," printed in the first volume of the second series of the Maine Historical Collections, contains the following interesting remarks upon this great inland water, which Dr. Kohl rightly designates as by far the most important river of the State. He says further:

It drains the entire central part of Maine. All its heads and tributaries are included in the territory of the State, and this territory may be considered as having attached itself from all sides to this river system. The State of Maine might be called the Penobscot country, this river being its main artery.

The Penobscot, at its mouth, forms the largest and most beautiful of all the numerous bays or inlets of the coast, and is very deep, and navigable for the largest vessels about sixty miles from the ocean upward to the city of Bangor, where tides and vessels are stopped by rocks and falls.

The widely open mouth attracted the attention of all the exploring navigators sailing along the coast and it was visited by the Spaniards on their first exploring expedition to our regions. We see it depicted on the Spanish maps as the longest river of the whole region, and they gave to it names like the following: "Rio Grande" (the great river), or "Rio Hermoso" (the beautiful river). And the principal of the early Spanish explorers of these regions, Gomez, left his name to this river, which, perhaps, he considered to be one of his most important discoveries. It was sometimes called "Rio de Gomez" (the river of Gomez). It was afterwards often visited by French navigators and fishermen from the Great Bank, and they appear to have built there, before the year 1555, a fort or settlement, which must have been the first European settlement ever made on the coast of Maine. The Indians of Maine, also, thought highly of this river. Their principal chief, according to the well-known Captain John Smith, an early English describer of the coast of Maine, resided on its shore, and even now when everywhere else in Maine the Indians have disappeared, the few remnants of them, the little Penobscot tribe, cling to the borders of this their old, beloved, principal canoe trail.

The very full and interesting Report upon the Water-power of Maine, made in 1868 by Mr. Walter Wells, superintendent of the hydrographical survey of this State, contains an elaborate and most valuable chapter upon the system of the Penobscot, from which we make the following brief extracts:

The Penobscot is the only great fluvial district in Maine which illustrates in its actual configuration the geographical idea of the river-basin—appearing as a mere point at the mouth of the stream, thence, interior-ward, expanding symmetrically upon both sides of the central channel, presently branching into subordinate basins, themselves disposed likewise symmetrically about tributary streams, and themselves yet further breaking up into still smaller basins located upon still smaller tributaries, until the whole takes on the similitude of a mighty tree, that from one trunk ramifies into innumerable branches, and from one grand aorta divaricates into numberless arteries and veins, by which, upon occasion, its entire volume of fluids is conducted to and poured into a common channel of circulation and discharge.

Greatest length, from north to south, 160 miles; greatest breadth, 115 miles; area, 8,200 square miles, considerably the largest river district contained wholly in the State. 800 square miles discharge their surplus water into the main river below its lowest water power, at Bangor.

The so-called west branch is properly only the continuation of the main river; it is the upper Penobscot; a name applicable to the stream from the Mattawamkeag to the "Forks," in Pittston township, where the Penobscot takes origin. The lower Penobscot extends from the Mattawamkeag to Penobscot bay.

The east branch, so called, should be known as the Mattagamon, after and in common with the lake from which it issues and the mountains in its vicinity. The various terms west branch, east branch, northwest branch, etc., should be reserved for use about the headwaters of the river, where indeed they are already applied. When used in both the mid and upper section, they involve its nomenclature in confusion.

The Penobscot, from the confluence of the Mattawamkeag to the sea, is about 120 miles long; from the junction of the Mattagamon to the sea, about 132 miles, from its extreme headwaters, about 260 miles, or, including the local windings, 300 miles. The main water-power section extends from Lake Chesuncook to Bangor, 120 miles, the fall being 900 feet; or viz the Mattagamon, from Lake Mattagamon to Bangor, 115 miles, and a fall of about 850 feet.

The annual discharge of the Penobscot is estimated as 319,800,000,000 cubic feet. Of this, about 31,000,000,000 are received below the lowest mill-privilege, yielding on its passage to the river important power.

The Penobscot naturally, and without the assistance of man, holds a position amongst the most highly favored of the State in respect to uniformity of volume at different seasons of the year. This is due in part to the extent of its tributary area, in virtue of which the contributions of the various branches do not reach its chief manufacturing sites at the same time. It is due also to the more uniform surface aspect of the basin, in respect to which it has the decided advantage over the Saco, Androscoggin, and Kennebec; it is due also, in common with the other large rivers of the State, to its extensive system of lakes and the vast breadth of forests upon its drainage surface.

A record covering the period from 1816 to 1869, shows that the earliest opening to navigation of the Penobscot at Bangor, for the period, was on March 21, and that during the whole time registered it opened in January and February but once—namely, in 1831, on January 9th. The river remains frozen over for 125 days yearly on the average.

The following excellent and detailed account of the Penobscot waters is derived from the introduction to Williamson's History of Maine, than which we find nothing better in print for the purpose of full description. It was written about 1830:

The Penobscot river is the longest of any one in the State; and in its tide-waters it is as large as the Sagadahoc after the junction of the Kennebec and the Androscoggin. Its whole length, as it runs from its heads to Fort Point is supposed to be about two hundred miles. It has no reservoirs, such as the great lake that yields supply to the Kennebec; it is formed by a great number of streams, which issue from ponds, swamps and springs, above and below the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, and spread the whole width of the State, its western sources being more than ten hundred miles, in a straight course, from its eastern heads; and so much do they all, like branches of one family, converge and aim at a general union, as to form a confluence and constitute the main river, ninety-five miles from its mouth, and with about one-half a degree only below the parallel above mentioned.

The western branch of the Penobscot is supposed to be the largest. It rises in the highlands north of the Kennebec, east of the Chaudiere, and south of the St. John; and what is noticeable, the head-streams of the four rivers are quite near each other in several places. Its sources have been explored by the surveyors under the treaty of Ghent; and it is found that the road from the forks of the Kennebec to "Mile Tree" crosses three primary branches of the Penobscot, two of which, one four and the other six miles below the heights, are large mill-streams where they cross the road.

From the northwest branch of the Penobscot, rising between twenty and thirty miles northeasterly of "Mile Tree," the carrying-place into the main St. John is only two miles; and some streams of the two rivers are much nearer each other. This great western branch, after collecting its waters from the north and south, runs eastwardly, not far from the northern margin of Mooshead Lake, and empties into Chesuncook Lake, sixty miles from some of its sources. The outlet river of this lake, which is fifteen miles in length, runs southwardly and eastwardly forty-five miles, till it embraces the great eastern branch, and forms what is called the junction, the waters in each being nearly equal.

The two main streams of this eastern branch rise about fifty or sixty miles, from their heads to its union with the great western branch or the Neketow. Twenty miles above this junction, in the west branch, are the Grand Falls, where the waters descend over a ledge of smooth rocks, 50 feet, through a channel 45 feet wide, into a basin of unknown depth. In late years the eastern branch has been explored above the junction; and of the other considerable is known to its several sources, though neither of them has yet settlements on its banks. South of the junction, two miles, the Penobscot receives from the northeast a brook called Salmon stream.

Sixteen miles below the junction is the mouth of the Mattawamkeag river, which rises on the eastern side of the State, and flows many miles southeasterly towards Schoodic Lakes; then forms a bow and runs southwest twelve miles, and receives the Selascohegan, through which travellers and Indians ascend within three miles of the Schoodic Lakes. The Mattawamkeag is as large as the Piscataquis, and larger than two of the Kenduskeag; rapid, very rocky in several places, and frequent falls and intervening still-waters. Its mouth is about 30 miles below that of the Selascohegan; and the mail, first established in 1825, passes up these two rivers through the Schoodic Lakes to Houlton.

From the mouth of the Mattawamkeag, the Penobscot descends in a cool and inviting current, navigable for the largest rafts, receiving on its west side the Medunkaunk, a small mill-stream, and the Madamiscondas [Mattamiscontis], a large one; and on the east side, the Metanawcook, two-thirds as large as the Passadumkeag, and 16 miles above it.

But the most important and considerable tributary of the Penobscot is the Piscataquis, which comes from the west, and, after running 100 miles from its sources, empties itself 35 miles above the mouth of the Kenduskeag and 35 miles below the junction. Three large streams constitute the Piscataquis, viz: Pleasant river from the northwest, which rises on the east side of Mooshead lake; Sebec river from the west, which has some of its sources in the same neighborhood, and Sebec pond in its course; and Piscataquis proper, which comes more from the southwest; the latter two embrace the first, and three miles further down they receive the third, 12 miles from the mouth of the Piscataquis. Sebec and Pleasant rivers are about equally large, and a few others of their size carefully compare with them in beauty and commodiousness. They afford many excellent mill-sites, and in freshets will float large rafts. The three branches have low banks, interspersed with rich and extensive intervalles. The flowing of the Piscataquis, which is 30 rods wide, is very quick and its waters uncommonly transparent and pure. At its mouth it descends a fall of 12 or 15 feet in the space of 10 rods; and over a part of the fall the water pours in a thick and limpid sheet. In mixing with the Penobscot it adds to it nearly a third part of its waters.

Five miles below the Piscataquis, on the east side, is the Passadumkeag, which rises near Schoodic waters and empties itself into the Penobscot. It is boatable about twenty miles, excepting seven carrying-places of inconsiderable length. On this river are extensive natural meadows, where great quantities of hay are cut every year.

The Penobscot, after flowing south five miles, receives on the east side Olemon stream, which is little else than a large brook, and likewise embraces an island of excellent land, called Olemon Island, containing three hundred acres; also Sugar Island, of like size, a little below, and several smaller ones in a short distance. Sunkhaze stream is rather larger than Olemon stream, and empties into the Penobscot eleven miles below, on the same side. Not less than two hundred tons of hay are taken annually from its meadows. Both these streams together, probably, do not contribute more water to the main river than the Passadumkeag does itself.

One mile below Sunkhaze, and fourteen from the mouth of Kenduskeag, the Penobscot is parted in a very remarkable manner, so that about half the water next the eastern shore descends in direct course southerly, and the other half turns a short corner and runs northwest more than two miles, and then turning again almost as short, runs southerly seven miles before the two branches form a junction. This western branch is called Stillwater, and the first island it embraces after the divorce is Osson island, of twelve hundred acres. It then has intercourse with the east branch by a southwesterly reach, three miles in length, which separates that island from Marsh island, containing five thousand acres; and from this reach a passage bounds the southeast end of Osson island, and separates it from Oldtown island, of three hundred acres, where the Indian village is. Besides these three the Stillwater river also embraces another one, called Orono, of one hundred and fifty acres. At the upper and lower end of Stillwater river are falls suitable for mill-sites; and on the east branch—that is, the main river—there are similar falls, viz., at the foot of Oldtown island and at Great Works; a mile or more below, in each of which the descent may be twenty or thirty feet.

All four of these islands are excellent land; and, except Marsh island, which is the southernmost one, they are claimed by the Tarratine tribe of Indians. They also own the other islands mentioned, which are of a like fertile soil.

From the reunion of the Penobscot with the Stillwater at the foot of Marsh island, the river flows southwestwardly three miles to the head of the tide, at "the Bend," so called, where its usual ebb and flow are two feet. Small vessels may ascend in freshets and spring tides, within a mile of it, but ship navigation is not good and safe much above Kenduskeag point, four miles below the Bend.

The Kenduskeag stream rises near some of the Sebasticook sources, and after running in its southeasterly serpentine course fifty miles, and turning the wheels of various mills and machinery, it discharges its waters into the Penobscot, amid Bangor village, sixty miles from White Head, twenty-three miles from Fort Point, and seventy from the junction. It is generally eight rods wide; its mouth, which is thirty-five rods in breadth, and sixty rods higher up at the bridge is thirty rods, forms a branch of the harbor; but here the ground, except in the channel, is often bare at low water. Opposite to the mouth of the Kenduskeag, the water in the channel of the Penobscot is seventeen feet when the tide is out, and the width of the main river below is eighty rods.

The Penobscot thence descends in a deep and steady current, passing the mouths of Segeunkelunk on the east side, and Sowadabscook on the west shore; both being mill streams much less than Kenduskeag, one three and the other five miles below it, thence one league to Bald Hill cove, on the same side, another to Buck's Ledge, covered at high water, and half a mile more to Oak Point, where the water is sixty rods wide and deep. Between the latter and Dram Point, which are a league asunder, is Marsh Bay, which is more than a mile wide, ornamented by the village of Frankfort on the western shore. Here the water is very salt, and the river is seldom frozen as low as Buck's Ledge. Indeed, during some winters it continues open as high as the mouth of Sowadabscook.

It is about five miles from Dram Point to the head of Orphan island, which contains 5,000 acres or more, and divides the waters of the river into two branches. The western and main one passes through the Narrows opposite the northwest curve of the island, and by Oldham's Ledge, which is half a league below, and a league above Fort Point, at the mouth of the river. The branch which washes the other side of the island is called Easton river, safely navigable for small vessels;—the island itself, taxed in Bucksport, is good land, and is owned by the descendants of an orphan lady who inherited a part of the Waldo Patent.

The general breadth of the Penobscot is from 80 to 100 rods, and it is remarkable that, owing to absorption and evaporation, it should be so uniformly wide from Piscataquis to Orphan island; though its depths are various, being above the tide-waters from 6 to 12 feet, not easily fordable by a man and horse below the junction. The usual tides at and below Bangor are fifteen or eleven feet, and at low water its depth in the channel is from three to six fathoms, and in some places twenty. The banks of the river are generally high, some projections are rocky and rugged, and others afford a picturesque appearance. An enchanting expanse of the river spreads itself before Bucksport village, and another before Frankfort, and a beautiful country on either side, extending to the head of the tide, fills the passenger's eye from the river with captivating views of nature and culture. As we ascend the river we find the banks less elevated, and above the tide-waters we pass many extensive intervals before we reach the Piscataquis. The only fearful ledges below the head of navigation are Buck's and Oldham's, before mentioned, and Fort Point Ledge, half a mile from the Point, and Steele's Ledge, a league, southeast, covered at high water.

At and above Bangor, and below it as far as the water is fresh, the river is generally closed by ice from the middle of December to the fore part of April. However, the ice in 1800 did not descend till the eighteenth of April, and on the first of January, 1805, the river, after being closed three weeks, was clear for two days, and it may be mentioned as a rare instance that, on the twenty-sixth of March, 1811, the river was clear of ice and frozen no more during the spring. Moreover, in February, 1807, the ice, which was very thick and strong, being broken up by an uncommon freshet on the seventeenth of the month, was driven down in great cakes, and one hundred rods below Bangor village formed an immovable impediment to the current. By reason of this check, the waters rose ten to twelve feet higher than was before known, filled the lower apartments of several buildings, and destroyed and injured a great quantity of goods, forcing the inhabitants of one dwelling-house to make their escape from the chamber windows. Three days elapsed before the ice fully gave way and the flood subsided.

At the foot of Orphan island the Penobscot expands, so that the distance across from Fort Point to the eastern shore is two miles or more; and this is the head of the bay. The most noted place on the eastern shore is Major-bignyudnee Point, fifteen miles below Orphan island, a place repeatedly mentioned in history. . . . That point is the southerly projection of the peninsula, which constitutes the greatest part of the town of Castine. On the north it has Back Cove; north of west it has Penobscot bay, two leagues over, with Belfast bay another league on the west, adorned by the village of Belfast. On the southwest it has the upper end of Long island [Islesborough], two miles distant, and at the eastward it has Northern bay. It has always been considered by Europeans, as well as by the Americans and natives, to be a very eligible situation. Castine village is on the southerly side of the peninsula; and westward of it one hundred rods, at some distance from the shore, are the appearance of the old fortifications. Here the Plymouth colony had a trading house as early as A. D. 1626, here D'Aulnay located himself in 1640, and here Baron de Castine afterwards had his residence many years. The United States garrison is still farther to the west and on higher land, intended to protect the town and command the upper section of Penobscot bay.

LUMBERING ON THE RIVER.

A vivid sketch of scenes on the Penobscot, as the lumbermen approach their destination at Bangor, is given in the entertaining volume on Forest Life and Forest Trees, by Mr. John S. Springer, himself a native of the Pine-tree State. In his chapter on River-driving the writer says:

Between the mouth of the Piscataquis and Oldtown, 20 or 25 miles, are numerous beautiful islands, some of them large, and generally covered with a heavy growth of hard wood, among which the elm abounds. When the logs arrive at this point, many of the encampments are fixed upon these islands. As the sun sinks behind the western hills, the lengthened shadows of the beautiful island forests shoot across the mirrored river, casting a deep shade, which soon disappears amid the denser curtain of an advanced evening, with which they blend. The roar of rushing waters is over, and the current glides smoothly on. No sound is heard but the echo of the merry boatman's laugh, and of voices here and there on the river, with now and then the shred of a song and the creaking and plashing of oars. While thus passing down, as the boats turn a sudden bend in the river, a dozen lights gleam from the islands, throwing their lengthened scintillations over the water. Now the question goes round, "Which is our light?" "There's one on the east side!" "Yes, and there's another on Sugar island!" "And there's one on Hendock!" says a third. "Why the d—! I hadn't they gone to Bangor and done with it?" "Wangun No. 1, ahoy!" shouts the helmsman, a little exasperated with fatigue and hunger. Now, while all the other cooks remain silent, No. 1 cook responds in turn. Another calls out the name of their particular log-mark: "Blaze Belt, ahoy! Where in thunder are you?" "Blaze Belt, this way, this way!" comes echoing from Hemlock island, and away the Blaze Belt batteau rows with its merry-making crew. Thus each crew, in turn, is finally conducted to its respective camp-fire.

The prospect of a release from the arduous labors on the drive at this point of progress raises the thermometers of feeling, which imparts a right merry interest to everything. Like sailors "homeward bound," after a three- or nine-month's cruise, and within one day's sail of port, relaxation and pastimes only are thought and talked of.

The mine of song and story is opened, and the rarest specimens of match-songs and stretched stories are coined and made current by the members of the different crews. "The smartest team," "chopper," "barker," "the largest tree," the biggest log, the greatest day's shirk, bear or moose story, the merits of crews, teamsters, brooks, creeks, and swamps, falls and rapids, streams and rivers, all, all come up as themes of converse, song, and story. There is less hurrying in the morning now than in the former part of the driving. Let the water rise or fall, it is all the same thing at this point, for the driver has reached the ample channel of the river, where neither falls nor rapids occur. A day, and the work is consummated—'tis done. Crews are disbanded; they disperse, some to their homes and farms, some to idleness and recreation, some to hire in the mills, to saw the logs thus run others to take rafts of boards to the head of tide-navigation, where hundreds of vessels are in waiting to distribute the precious results of the lumbermen's toil to the thousand parts of the Atlantic and Pacific coast; where the sound of saw, planes, and hammers of a million house-wrights, cabinet-makers, coopers, and joiners make the air vocal with the music of cheerful labor, giving bread to the millions, wealth to thousands, and comfort and convenience to all.

THE SOIL OF PENOBSCOT.

In Mr. Whipple's Geographical View of the District of Maine, published in 1816, occur the following remarks, which need not be greatly changed for our day:

That part of the district of Maine which is nearest to the sea-coast, and extending its whole length and about ten miles back, is generally inclined to clay, and in many places rocky. This is reported as the most ordinary part of Maine; but many parts of it, where well cultivated, produce most abundantly. That part of this section which extends from Penobscot to Piscataquis is by far the most populous, and probably the best cultivated division. The next section, which is east of the Penobscot and north of the sea-coast, comprising the million acres called the Lottery Lands, with the land to the northward, has not so good a reputation as many other divisions. There are some parts of it, however, that are cultivated, which yield hay, beef, pork, butter, and cheese, as abundantly as any part of New England. But the soil of this section has probably been underrated. On a new road, which is located by the Commonwealth from Penobscot river toward the St. John, and extending through this section, the land is reputed to be generally of the first quality. The next section, which is comprised between the Penobscot and Kennebec, and extending northerly to the height of land, has a higher reputation than any other division of Maine. It is about fifty miles in breadth by one hundred miles in length, and contains all the variety of soil which is found in Maine. The richest part of this land is between the upper part of the two rivers.

The soil of the ranges of townships, north of the Waldo Patent, which are comprehended in this section, has generally been estimated as the best in the district of Maine. The State's land, which is nearest to the Penobscot, is rather flat and low, except a ridge which extends nearly parallel with the river, over which a road has been opened at the State's expense. It is expected that, when this tract is cleared, the high land will prove the best for tillage, and the low land for grass. In the townships marked No. 1 on Carleton's map, and which adjoin the State's land, the country is generally higher, and a small part of it is inclined to be rocky, but not too much so, as it produces corn and wheat in abundance. From this section westerly the land is rather low, extending to the townships marked No. 2, where the land rises and continues about the same for many miles westerly, in swales and gradual swells, and is generally free from ledges, and contains probably less waste land than any other part of New England. The low land, in some instances, is found to be wet; but the upland is generally a warm loam, inclined to sand or gravel, and not only very congenial to grass, but equally so to tillage. Near the Piscataquis and its branches are extensive intervals, which are particularly productive. The Waldo Patent, although an excellent tract of land, probably will not average so good as the nine ranges.

ARABLE AND WASTE LAND.

In Moses Greenleaf's Statistical View of the District of Maine, published at Boston the same year, an estimate is given of the quantity and proportions of arable and waste land in the incorporated towns and plantations of the several counties of Maine, in which Penobscot is set down as having four hundred and fifty-five thousand four hundred and ninety-three acres of arable pasture and woodland, to but twenty thousand five hundred and fifty-nine of waste land, six thousand two hundred and ninety-eight covered with water, and four thousand six hundred and ninety used for roads. The proportion of improvable land was nine hundred and twenty-nine acres in the one thousand, of waste land forty-eight, of water covered fourteen, and occupied by roads nine. The author says that in this county instances had occurred of crops of wheat exceeding forty bushels to the acre being harvested on land no better than is usually cultivated, and, "in one or two instances, near sixty bushels of wheat have been produced on an acre." Of potatoes seven hundred bushels, and of turnips thirteen hundred bushels to the acre, had been gathered.

AGRICULTURAL ADAPTATION OF WILD LANDS.

The following statements occur in the reports of State Geologist Hitchcock, made in 1861-2.

The Penobscot, passing in its general direction from a northerly to a southern point, through an extent of two and a half degrees of latitude, and in that course also rising to quite an elevation from the sea, must exhibit, in various sections of its course, a considerable range of climatic difference, and, consequently of agricultural capability. The first question usually asked by a farmer, when wishing to ascertain the agricultural character of any northern location, is—"Can you raise Indian corn there?" This crop seems, by common consent, to be the criterion by which to judge of the climate and its agricultural value.

We find that the line which bounds the northern limit of Indian corn maturing in Maine, is a very irregular one, as, indeed, might be expected, coinciding, as it does, with the isothermal line, and not with the line of latitude. We find that the elevated or mountain district—which, as we have in a former part of our report mentioned, formed a part of a triangular belt, having its base on the western border of the State, south and north of Umbagog, and stretching easterly to its apex in Mars-hill is not a sure corn-maturing region. Corn can be raised with certainty within a few miles south of Umbagog. It is raised with less certainty on the lake shores, and again with more certainty on the northern side, as the slope sinks down toward the shores of the St. Lawrence. The Penobscot extends into this belt, and hence, while in its lower sections corn is a safe and profitable crop, in its upper section we find it a precarious one; while further east, on the same line of latitude, it is again found more certain.

At the Trout Brook Farm we found two parcels of corn growing—one of them (27th August) nipped by frost, while the other, on a more elevated piece of land, was not touched. At Monroe's farm, on the Alleguash, we found, as we have before stated, a small patch which had not been frosted, but were told by Mr. Monroe that he had not been able to mature it. Still further north, Mr. Bolton, who, as we stated, has a fine farm at the confluence of the Alleguash and St. John, informed us that he had some years raised as good corn as ever he had raised in Augusta (his native place), although it was not a sure crop. Some have attributed this trouble to difference of soil, but it is more attributable to mountain and lake influences on the temperature, as well as to the fact that, owing to the immense extent of the forest, the earth, for a great breadth of territory, is kept cool and moist. The sun cannot penetrate among the leaves and branches of the trees to warm the soil to any great extent. Hence it is fair to infer that the climate, in this respect, will be materially changed should the country become cleared. The experience of "old settlers," we believe, will corroborate this, and, therefore, although there will probably always be a tract of country where corn will be uncertain and unprofitable of culture, we may predict that this anti-corn locality will be much reduced in extent by the clearing up of the land, and opening it to the sun and the warm southern breezes.

Wheat.—The soil over which we passed is as a general thing well adapted to wheat-growing, and the climate is also favorable. The first crops on burns is generally heavy and remunerating, but after a year or two the natural enemies of this valuable crop begin to multiply as on the older farms, sometimes making such inroads as to reduce the profits very materially. Hence not so much wheat is raised where there have been clearings as there is of some of the other cereals. In one or two instances on the St. John we saw very fine fields of wheat growing in healthy luxuriance in isolated clearings on top of high hills, where a "chopping" had been made in the forest and burned off for this very purpose of wheat-growing. The reason given for growing wheat in such out-of-the-way places was the fact that the midge and the fly and aphid would not find the spot for several years, and the crop would not suffer from their depredations. Still wheat is not so much cultivated as one would suppose it would be, because the other grains, such as oats and barley, are more productive, are more in demand by the lumbermen, and being, in proportion to the cost of raising, a larger and more remunerative price per bushel.

Oats and Barley are therefore the principal grain crops grown. These grow vigorously on the new lands, have but few enemies to contend with, often produce enormous crops, and sell readily at large prices.

Buckwheat.—This will grow almost spontaneously on these lands. It is a staple crop among the French or Acadian settlers. The rough variety, or "Indian wheat," as it is sometimes called, is the only kind cultivated. It is a sure crop, yields large amounts to the acre, is easily gathered and cleansed, and is much used by them as an article of diet and for fattening their hogs and poultry. It may be a matter of fancy on our part, but we thought we could see some connection between the physical energy of the farmers in that section and the crops they raise. There was an apparent listlessness and lack of physical stamina in those Acadians who cultivated little else than buckwheat for bread, compared with those who paid attention to the culture of wheat and other cereals. Whether the buckwheat diet was the cause and the debility the effect, or vice versa, we will not here attempt to decide. The flour or meal from this grain is much used by the settlers for fattening pork, and some of the fattest hogs we ever saw were fed principally upon buckwheat gruel.

Root Crops.—The various esculent roots, such as potatoes, turnips, rutabagas, parsnips, carrots, beets in all their varieties, onions, &c., are "at home" throughout the whole extent of the region we traversed. Any amount of them can be produced, and would be produced for export, did the facilities of transportation warrant their being carried to market at a reasonable expense. Not only is the crop generally large in quantity, but excellent in quality.

Small Fruits—Most of the small fruits grow luxuriantly in this section of the country, and their cultivation would be eminently successful. Strawberries, currants, gooseberries, blackberries, blueberries, are all indigenous to all these lands. The wild currants, however, are not so palatable as some others, but the fact of their being native to the land is proof that the improved and cultivated varieties will find congenial soil and climate. Cherries and plums will also flourish well, though we could not promise that the "Black-knot" would let them alone. This singular disorder is by no means confined to civilized life. It was frequently met with far away in the forest, thirty or forty miles from any gardens of cultivated fruits, fastening itself upon the wild cherry trees and disfiguring and blighting them as severely as any ever seen in the gardens in the oldest sections of the country.

The "high or bush cranberry" (Vaccinium Opulus), and the common lowland cranberry (Vaccinium Oxycoccus), are found abundantly, the first by the side of streams and swampy lands and the latter on the wet meadows and bogs.

Stock Raising—The wild lands which we examined, are capable of making an excellent stock-growing country when cleared and laid down to grass. It is true that the length of the winters and the consequent longer time required to feed from the crib serve in the minds of some as a drawback, but there is a compensating principle in the superior advantages for grass and hay during the summer season, brought about in part by the covering shelter of snow, which protects the earth and the herbage until the season is too far advanced for any injury to arise from too much freezing and thawing, during the transition from winter to summer. If it were not for the losses often occasioned by wolves and other wild animals, the Upper Madawaska section might grow almost unlimited amounts of wool and mutton. The rich intervals and upland, so well adapted for forage crops, would yield ample supply for winter feeding, and the cool and breezy slopes and tops of their hills would give the best of pasturage for them. It is to be hoped that in time this important branch of husbandry will receive more attention in that part of the State, and their flocks increased as fast as is compatible with safety in the investment from beasts of prey.

The abundance of pasturage and the good condition of the cattle and horses on the few clearings now to be found along the route we travelled, is a practical demonstration that such stock may be advantageously raised in those townships as soon as the forest can be changed into a grass-growing field, and that can be done in two years from falling and burning of trees.

GEOLOGY OF THE COUNTY.

A vast amount of interesting matter is presented by the geology of the great Penobscot valley. It has as yet been but partially explored; but enough has been observed and described to enable an inquirer to form a pretty good idea of the topography and rock-structure of this county. The chief source of information is, of course, the reports made by the State Geologists—first, by Dr. Charles T. Jackson, in 1838; second, by Dr. Charles H. Hitchcock, son of the eminent scientist, Dr. Edward Hitchcock, of Amherst College, and his co-laborers, made in 1861-2. The following descriptions and narratives are exclusively from one or the other of these sources, and generally in the very words of the authors:

The rocky strata on which rests the tertiary formation of Bangor and Brewer are argillaceous talcose, plumbaginous and pyritiferous slates. These various slates pass into each other by imperceptible shades, so that it is extremely difficult to define their boundaries. In some places the slate rocks are charged with numerous quartz and calcareous spar veins, and they frequently contain a sufficient quantity of carbonate of lime to cause them to effervesce with acids. When the rock contains a large proportion of siliceous matter, it passes insensibly into quartz rock of a blue color, and occasionally beds of it are found containing a sufficient quantity of fine scales of mica to convert it into mica slate of an imperfect kind.

On the summit of Thomas's Hill, in Bangor, the slates may be seen cropping out, their upturned edges appearing above the soil. On the Kenduskeag, at a high ledge overhanging the river, may be seen several varieties presented by this rock. It is there observed to be charged with calcareous spar, and is sometimes of a green color, owing to the presence of chlorite.

In the city the slate may be observed passing into quartz rock on the side of Exchange street, where the strata run E., N. E., and W. S. W., and dip to the N. N. W. 80°. On the S. W. side of the river the strata dip to the north. Near Brewer bridge they run E. by N. and dip N. by W. 70°. A little above the bridge on the south side of the Penobscot, in Brewer, there is a cliff of argillaceous slate, which runs to the height of about eighty feet, and there the strata may be observed to run N. N. E. and S. S. W., and dip N. N. W. 65°. About half a mile south of Bangor the slate strata run N. E. and S. W., dip N. W. 60°. There are many other places in the vicinity of Bangor where these rocks may be seen, but it would be tedious to enumerate all the localities. A sufficient number have been noticed to show that the whole substrata of Bangor and Brewer are composed of this class of rocks. In some cases the surface of the plumbaginous slate is glazed with plumbago or graphite, and owing to this circumstance such rocks have sometimes been mistaken for coal. The whole mass of strata which are above described, bear evident marks of having been exposed to the action of heat and pressure, while from the great variety of substances which enter into a sedimentary deposit, there would evidently result the various metamorphic varieties of stratified rock which I have described. It will be observed that all the strata now rest on their edges and are highly inclined to the horizon, and this position could not have resulted from their original deposition, for all strata which are deposited by water are arranged horizontally. Now it is clear that these rocks were deposited from water in horizontal beds, and that since that time they have been thrown up by a violent subterranean cause into their present position. These slates belong to the oldest transition formation and are generally destitute of organic remains.

The tertiary formation in Maine consists of a series of layers of clay and sand, which have been deposited by water upon the various solid rocks beneath. This deposit is evidently a sediment of clayey and siliceous matter, and is arranged in regular strata showing the effect of tranquil subsidence from the waters by which it was deposited.

These beds of clay contain distinct remains of marine shell-fish in the various strata, arranged in such a manner as to evince their having lived and died exactly in the spots where we find them. This shows a slow and gradual deposition of the clay, for the shell-fish lived near the surface of the different strata, and must have had time to live, grow, and multiply in each stratum before the next was deposited.

The lower tertiary at Bangor is composed of blue clay, very tenacious in its structure, tough, and adhesive. It contains so much vegetable matter, derived from decomposed seaweeds, as to give it in many places the odor of marsh mud. The shells characteristic of this deposit are the Nucula, Saxicava, and Mya deliscens.

There are a majority of recent species of shell-fish in this deposit, and hence we consider it as equivalent to the pliocene formation of Lyell. Above this deposit we come to another mass of clayey strata of a yellow color, and remarkable for the curious casts of various forms which it contains. Nearly all these casts have a long cylindrical tube running through them from one extremity to the other.

In Bangor, the greatest elevation which the tertiary clays attain is not more than 100 feet above the level of the sea, or 75 feet above the level of the Penobscot river at that place. The hill upon which the First Congregational church is built is tertiary, and is the highest point which that formation attains in Bangor. The lower portions of this clay-bed contain distinct remains of the marine shells Nucula Portlandica, Maetra, and Venus. The upper beds contain a great abundance of those strange cylindrical and conical casts, terminated sometimes by a large bulb or tuber, which fossils resemble in their general structure the siphonæ described and figured in Rozet's Geology. There are, however, in this deposit a number of different species, and their peculiar shapes have caused them to be mistaken for almost every variety of plant and fruit. There is, however, good reason to believe that they are of animal origin, and were probably once molluscous or soft animals, having but little consistency, so as not to leave any solid matter indicative of their composition.

According to the later report of Mr. Hitchcock, the lower clays of this group [the marine clays] at Bangor are very tenacious and adhesive, with the peculiar marine odor or marsh mud, and contain as characteristic shells the Nucula, Saxicava distorta, and Mya arenaria. The upper portions of the deposit are more sandy. The clayey strata are of a yellowish cast, containing numerous yellow, soft concretions of clay of a cylindrical shape, and perforated by a long tube. Ferruginous and siliceous sands alternate with the clays. The lower portions of the upper beds contain Leda Portlandica, Maetra and Venus. The upper portions are filled with the concretions. Some of these clays in Bangor dip 10 degrees southwest, and others 15 degrees southerly.

The highest of them is about 100 feet above the ocean. Above the clays are found coarse drift deposits.

There are beds of ferruginous and silicious sand, which here and there alternate with the upper clay-beds. In some places it is of good quality for moulding. Examples of this kind of sand may be seen on the side of Exchange street, where the strata of the clay dip to the south 25°.

In Cumberland street the lower tertiary deposit may be seen with the upper beds resting directly upon it. The strata dip to the S. W. 10°. This deposit attains an elevation of fifty or sixty feet above the river's level.

Crossing the Penobscot we enter the town of Brewer, where the same tertiary clays may be seen. A little above the bridge, on the river's bank, occurs a high cliff of sand attaining an elevation of eighty-six feet above the high-water mark upon the Penobscot.

At the various brick-yards in this town we had an excellent opportunity of examining the nature of the clay and the various shells which are contained in it. They are identical with those found in Bangor.

The clay generally selected for making bricks belongs to the upper tertiary, and is of a yellow color and contains but very few marine shells. The blue clay answers very well for the same purpose, when there are not too many shells, but it is tough and hard to work.

The silicious sand found alternating with those clays is used also in brick-making. These materials are so common in Maine that little account is made of their value, but they are nevertheless sources of a very considerable income. Thus, for instance, in the eight brick-yards of Brewer during 1837 no less than 3,000,000 of bricks were made and sold—1,100,000 machine-pressed bricks were made in three of these yards during the same year.

So abundant is the brick clay in Bangor that, in digging the cellars for most of the buildings, a sufficiency of it is dug out to make the bricks required for the edifice, and Dr. Jackson, from whom we had these remarks, understood that this is frequently done.

Brick-makers are fully aware of the fact that, if clays contain any considerable proportion of lime, they will not answer for brick-making, since the lime is rendered caustic during the operation of burning, and when the bricks are moistened by water the lime slakes, and they crack or burst to pieces. On that account they carefully avoid any admixture of shells, since they are composed chiefly of carbonate of lime, and produce the same effect.

These clays form extremely tough soils, and are liable to bake or harden by the action of the solar heat, so that the roots of plants are completely imprisoned by the hardened clay, and therefore the plant does not thrive.

In order to improve a clayey soil when it is found practicable, sand should be mixed with it, so as to break up its cohesive properties; and it often happens that hills of sand are found close at hand. After the texture of the soil is sufficiently broken up, air-slaked lime may then be used for a top-dressing, and it will be retained for a great length of time since the clay is so impermeable to water.

It is certainly, said Dr. Jackson in 1838, worth the labor required to bring into a high state of cultivation those tracts of land which are in the immediate vicinity of the city, and their improved produce will amply repay the moderate expenditures which would be requisite for the purpose.

Above the tertiary formation we have a confused mass of rounded stones and pebbles, which bear evident proofs of their diluvial disposition. The current of diluvial waters, in rushing over this district, excavated deep valleys in the tertiary deposits, and transported the detritus far to the south. Near the court-house in Bangor may be seen beds of coarse pebbles at the base of the hill, and the sediment becomes finer as we ascend, until we meet with perfectly fine clay. This locality shows that coarse pebbles were deposited by swift-running water, while the fine sand and clay prove a gradual subsidence in the force of the current. On examining these pebbles, it will be remarked that they are mostly those composed of varieties of slate, which occur in places north of the spot where they are now found.

FROM HOLDEN TO CHARLESTON.

Dr. George L. Goodale, one of the assistants of State Geologist Hitchcock, about the year 1861 surveyed carefully a geologic section from Mount Desert west of north and northwest across the State to the Canada line, nearly at right angles to the strata recorded. His route crossed the towns of Holden, Brewer, Bangor, Glenburn, Ken-nuskeag, Corinth, and Charleston, in this county, and the results of his observations are here subjoined.

Very near the boundary line between Dedham and Holden, the granite disappears and quartz rock succeeds, dipping 70° S. 70° E., as it were, beneath the granite. Some planes of a jointed structure dipped 70° S, 20° W. in this vicinity. This rock merges into silicious slate. At Graves' coffee-house, in the east part of Holden, considerable mica is present in the quartz rock, with a dip of 88° S. 60° E. Beyond this hotel the rock is very much contorted, and a local variation in the dip 75° N. 60° W. But the real northwesterly dip is apparent near A. B. Farrington's house, two miles west. Here we have an argillo-micaceous rock dipping 50° N. 40° W., and a few miles further the ledges are entirely quartz rock as far as the middle of Holden, dipping 65° N. 40° W. Cleavage planes are also present in abundance, dipping, 80° S. E. We regard all the rocks mentioned thus far, away from the granite, as essentially one formation of quartz rock and forming an anticlinal axis. The rock in the centre of the axis is somewhat micaceous, and more nearly resembles the rocks west of Holden village. If this is the true order of things, then we have found a quartz rock underlying the great mass of schists between Holden and Dover. Hence, if future researches shall reveal occasional bands of quartz rock among these schists, especially if they have an anticlinal form, we shall have a safe criterion to inform us respecting the number of foldings in the whole area. We do not suppose the more micaceous axis can be of precisely the same age with the micaceous rocks to the westward, because it underlies them in association with quartz.

We suspect that this quartz rock is in the continuation of the quartz rock of the Taconic series in Belfast, described in a previous part of the report. That was associated with schists just like this, and we find on a comparison of various disconnected observations made between the two places, that a quartz rock, more or less obscure, can be traced with its associate schists all the way from Belfast to Holden. This is a discovery of some importance, as will be seen hereafter.

ARGILLO-MICA SCHIST.

We next come to the largest and widest-spread of any formation in the State,—to a rock that would receive different names from different geologists. It would be called clay slate, talcose schist, or mica schist, according as the observer happened to inspect different portions of it. Last year we ranked it all as clay slate, specifying many localities where talcose and micaceous varieties abounded. But this year, after a further examination of this rock, we shall call it argillo-micaceous schist, coloring it on the map as mica schist. Inspection of all the varieties discloses the presence of minute scales of mica. They are found even in the roofing slate of Brownville, which is associated with the schists, and by their presence throw light upon the mineral structure of the whole series, showing it to be micaceous rather than talcose. What we described as one formation of clay slate last year, we now divide into two, the clay slate proper and the argillo-micaceous schist.

The manner in which the boundaries of this subdivision were suggested to us is quite interesting and valuable, as indicating the direction to be taken in studying these rocks in future. We possessed a series of observations on the position of the strata, crossing the whole argillaceous belt in several places, and mostly radiating from Bangor. Upon comparing these sections with one another, we found them to agree essentially at the same distances from Bangor, or from the southeast side of the formation. The material from which we drew is mostly contained in our last year's report. We there described a section from Bangor to Patten; another branching off at Mattawamkeag up the East Branch of the Penobscot, another from Bangor to Brownville. This year we explored one from Bangor to Moosehead Lake; and also another from Shirley to Brighton. At Bangor the dip is northwesterly, but at a few miles' distance on every route it changed to southeasterly, thus making a synclinal axis. This synclinal line, then, we found to run (so far as our meagre observations allowed us to judge) from the mouth of Sunklaze stream in Milford westerly through the north parts of Oldtown and Pushaw Lake, thence curving southwesterly it passes west of Kenduskeag village, and probably to Carmel and N. E. Dixmont. Upon the east side of this line the dip is northwesterly, on the line of our principal section, as far as Holden Center; and upon the west side the dip is southeasterly as far as the north part of Charleston, thus making an enormous basin twenty-nine miles wide, whose thickness must be seven miles on the lowest estimate. The anticlinal line west of the first synclinal was first observed near Passadumkeag village, and can be traced westerly through Edinburg, Lagrange, and Bradford, till we find it rising into a range of mountains which continue through Charleston, Garland, and Dexter. This is a very distinct axis, as it is coincident with a mountainous range for so great a distance. It runs toward the mass of granite in Enfield, which most probably was forced up along the antichinal line, as the rock would naturally be weakened there. Very likely the antichinal described last year in Weston is the continuation of this antichinal line.

The next basin is very narrow, and the rock is more argillaceous than in the previous basin. The synclinal line runs along the valley of the Piscataquis river, even as far up as Parkman, and then it must run on the west side of Penobscot river a great distance. We think that its position is indicated near the Five Islands in Winn, by the change in the dip. Of course these lines must extend further in both directions than we have in both indicated, but we point out the lines only so far as we have knowledge of them.

Next we come to another change in the dip, with clay slates prevailing on one side and argillo-mica schists upon the other. Hence we do not regard it as antichinal, but a change in the dip incident to different formations, the slates overlying the schists, perhaps unconformably. This line, which upon our large map we have for the present established as the boundary line between the two formations, is first recognized in the northeast, in No. 1 R. 5, in Aroostook county, on the Aroostook road. It can be traced through Molunkus, the southeast corner of Medway (formerly called Nickatou), thence in a straight line to Medford, when it takes somewhat of a westerly course through Milo, Sebce, Foxcroft, Guilford, and Abbott. Here it resumes the southwesterly direction, and we have traced it through Kingsbury, Brighton, and Bingham, to the Kennebec river. The axes on the various radiating sections correspond with one another no further than to this boundary, but the rock on the northwest side of this line is most entirely clay slate, and is the only belt in Maine from which roofing slate is now obtained. The variations in dip in this clay-slate formation we conceive to be due to various causes more or less local, and not to be treated of here. Scarcely anything has been discovered during the survey which has given us greater pleasure than these axial lines. It is a very important onward step in the progress of our knowledge of Maine rocks, and a faint shadow of what would be developed by a series of comprehensive parallel sections.

Returning to the details upon our principal section, we find the dip to vary somewhat over the first half of the first synclinal basin. We had just said good-bye to the quartz rock of Holden, and on the route of the section to Brewer we find scarcely any ledges, the country being covered to a considerable depth by alluvial deposits, as it is upon the east bank of Penobscot river. At Brewer the rock is very quartzose, dipping from 30° - 60° N. 20° W. Across the river in Bangor the rock is similar, dipping from 45° - 50° N. 30° W. and N. W. The application of the term talcose to these schists would be more appropriate than to any other ledges on the whole section. Yet the rock here is not really talcose, it has no magnesia in it, as the analysis shows, and an inspection of many of the layers exhibits particles of mica singly stowed away. Often the strata in Bangor exhibit interesting curvatures. Professor D. T. Smith, of the Theological Seminary, pointed out one such instance to us about two miles west of the city, which was very instructive, showing also the difference between the planes of stratification and foliation (or cleavage). Such an exhibition is uncommon along the line of the section.

Three miles northwest from Penobscot river, at W. Boynton's house, the schists dip at about the same angle, N. 40° W. At I. Tozier's, a mile further, may be seen an interstratification of clay slate and slaty talcose quartz rock, dipping 65° - 70° northwesterly. In the edge of Glenburn the rock is more compact, with thicker layers. In Glenburn and Kenduskeag there are occasional variations from the normal northwesterly dip, but these are supposed to be local matters. The section, thus far, runs on the stage-road to Kenduskeag village, crossing the Kenduskeag river in Kenduskeag.

Beyond Kenduskeag village drift-deposits obscure the ledges for a great distance. The road passes over a "horseback" from the village to a cemetery in South Cornith, a distance of three miles. At a school-house and cooper's shop nearly four miles from Kenduskeag, in South Cornith, the first ledge with the southeasterly dip of the west side of the great synclinal axis appears, although it probably begins much sooner. Observations on both sides of the road, which we had not time to make, will settle the exact point where the middle of the basin is. The schists at the school-house decompose readily, perhaps containing a carbonate, and dip 80° S. 25° E. Adjacent ledges have a smaller dip. Near East Cornith the rock is more slaty and argillaceous. Opposite J. M. Shaw's house the layers are very much convoluted on a small scale, with an average dip of 45° S. 15° E. About a mile and a half north of East Cornith, appear ledges of bright green schist, argillaceous, and often quite micaceous, precisely identical lithologically with the greater part of the slaty rocks on the East branch of the Penobscot above Mattawamkeag. Like them, also, these strata are very much contorted, and their average dip is about 55° S. E. These peculiar rocks continue for two or three miles.

In the northwest part of Charleston, at B. Bradley's, a compact schist, resembling talcose schist, but really a quartzite, occurs, dipping from 70° 75° S. 30° E. The land here is higher than anything passed over west of the Penobscot, and it continues to rise till the summit of the mountain is reached, about 800 feet above the ocean. Upon the county map it will be noticed that a range of mountains extends through Charleston and the towns adjacent. The range is the one we are now crossing, and it must all be an antichinal ridge, marking the line of the most important of all the axial lines specified above. Passing down the north side of this range (for which we have no name), we find the opposite dip, making the antichinal. We are coming into a narrower basin than the one just left, it being only ten miles wide, and it has almost an east and west course. The first observation taken is of a ledge just north of Ricker Hill, in the southeast part of Dover; an argillo-micaceous schist dipping 72° N. 10° W. In this rock the mica is quite abundant and distinct. The dip is similar to this all the way to the Piscataquis river.

The traveller sees at once the superior fertility of the soil in the Piscataquis valley, when compared with that passed over since leaving Bangor. It seems to be due to the character of the rock, and to be confined to this basin of schist. The rock is often calcareous, and indeed certain layers in Foxcroft are real limestone, and have formerly been burnt in kilns for lime. As in so many other instances, the character of the rock here determines the quality of the soil in great measure. By calling this superior to that in Penobscot county, we do not mean to underrate the latter—only that this is better. That in Penobscot county is far superior to much that is found along the seacoast and covering granite and gneissic regions. And most excellent farms are common on the road all the way from Bangor.

MICA SCHIST IN CARROLL.

In the town of Carroll, the principal rock is mica schist. It is the only rock seen upon the east and west road running through the town. At Mr. H. Gates's, in the west part of the town, is a very fine bed of dark-bluish limestone, whose layers dip 45° N. W. The bed is several rods wide and of unknown length. Mr. Gates manufactures from 100 to 300 barrels of quicklime annually out of this bed. It is capable of producing much more, and furnishes lime equal to the best. It can be produced cheaper here than at Rockland, and can successfully compete with that in the market hereabouts. Hints of other beds of limestone in Carroll reached us in both directions, particularly in the northeast. There is said to be a bed on the land of Mr. Ames. A similar bed also may be found on Mr. Coffin's land near the centre of the town. These limestones correspond better to the beds in azoic schists than with the Eolian limestone on Penobscot bay.

The mica schist of Carroll extends uninterruptedly as far as Musquash lake in Topsheld, in an easterly direction. In the east part of Carroll there is an antichinal axis, the limestone being upon the western side. The southeast dip extends to Musquash lake, and into Talmadge and the Indian township. The northwest dips occur at the saw-mill in Talmadge and about three miles from Princeton in the other township. These observations indicate the presence of a synclinal.

A high range of mountains in the southern part of Carroll is evidently granitic, and connects as a mountain range with the syenite or Musquash lake, and has been traced into New Brunswick, and the provincial geological map carries this granitic belt entirely through the province to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

ABOUT LAKEVILLE PLANTATION.

The general outline of Seragly is given on the Penobscot county map, but it should be partly in No. 6. We ascended a short thoroughfare from the east part of Seragly to Shaw lake, and found no ledges, but an immense number of boulders of granite and trap. This is a very pretty lake, but much smaller than Pleasant. It is not represented at all on the State map. There are many islands in Seragly and Junior lakes, and a few ledges of granite.

Junior lake is connected by a short thoroughfare with Seragly, and it is six miles in length and perhaps four miles wide. It is represented correctly upon no published map. Two small lakes are situated near its north end, Duck lake and Mill Privilege lake, which are either omitted or not named upon the maps. No ledges occur either upon Junior lake or any of its small tributary lakes upon the north and west sides, of which there are five, which are incorrectly located or else omitted upon all the maps. Nearer the south end of Junior lake the boulders become small and much water-worn, consisting of an interesting conglomerate, trap, schist, and granite. Close by Junior stream they appear to be piled up in a ridge, much like a rampart. Magnificent veins may be seen upon any of these lakes.

Upon Junior stream large boulders of granite occupy the bed so much that it is difficult to manage a heavily loaded canoe among them. Two interesting boulders attracted our attention, as they had been worn into the shape of an hour-glass. We suppose the neck of the stone was worn most because the strongest currents chiefly exert their powers at that altitude. As is common to almost every thoroughfare, so here on Junior stream the upper part is very stony, with quick water, and the lower part with very deep water and marshy bank, inasmuch that chiefly sedges grew upon them; while the surface of the water abounds in white and yellow water-lilies and pond-weed. At the mouth of the stream the land is a little higher, a coarse beach separating the thoroughfare from Grand Lake, in which we found boulders of metalliferous trap, pyrites, conglomerate, granite, clay slate, and schists.

The character of the shores of both expansions of Grand or Witteguaguam, Pocumpus, and Sysladobis lakes is uniform and may be described as a whole. The immediate shore is composed of angular blocks of granite, often of mammoth dimensions, with scarcely any soil over them. They are covered with moss, and the trees of the forest shoot down their roots among them with difficulty. The shores rise up gradually to hills and mountains, without a single clearing to give evidence of civilization. But no ledges appear, although their fragments are so common. These boulders often lie in the lakes away from the shores, and may project above the surface. One such in Sysladobis lake must weigh many hundred tons. Where the summits of the boulders just come to the surface they render the navigation difficult. It is extremely rare to see any rock represented among the boulders upon these lakes, except the angular granite fragments. Most of them are of the porphyritic variety.

On Sysladobis lake may be seen the finest views of any of the western Schoodic lakes. That part which lies in No. 5 is correctly represented upon the county map, showing the "Big island" at the south end. That part of the lake which lies in No. 4 has a due north and south course, its northern extremity being only half a mile distant from Bottle lake. The Chain lakes in 4 and 5 are mostly small and swampy, except a single ledge of granite upon the upper or third Chain lake, which is the largest of the three.

THE EAST BRANCH OF THE PENOBSCOT.

The latest, and probably the best, summary of this region was made by another of Professor Hitchcock's assistants—Dr. Ezekiel Holmes, of Winthrop, the chief naturalist of the exploration. He was assisted, as he records, among others by Messrs. A. B. Farrar and William A. Johnston of Bangor, Benjamin Thomas of Maxfield, Manley Hardy of Brewer, and Louis Ketchum of Oldtown. Deane Murch and his canoe were also engaged after the Hunt farm was reached. The narrative of Dr. Holmes, aside from its scientific value, possesses considerable interest. The language of the narrative is preserved with little change.

On the 7th of August, 1861, the party embarked at Oldtown for the contemplated survey in a batteau and three birch canoes, furnished with the necessary quantity of supplies, comprising equipments and apparatus required to facilitate researches and inquiries on the rivers and lakes in the forest to be traversed.

The progress up stream in such a primitive craft, in a favorable pitch of water, must necessarily be slow and toilsome, but at low stages it must be slower yet by reason of the delays in looking out the deepest channels and the time lost in working over bars and shoals where there is scarcely sufficient depth, even for the light draft of canoes. On account of the low stage of the water at the time of embarkation, the steamers which then plied between Oldtown and Mattawamkeag were hauled up, and the facilities of transportation which they would have afforded and the consequent saving of time were denied the explorers. They had therefore to depend upon their own navigation for conveyance through that section of the route, thereby consuming three days of their time, when one would have been sufficient, could they have availed themselves of the agency of steam, as is usual in the early and later parts of the season.

On the third day from departure they arrived at Nickaton (now Medway), on the west branch of the Penobscot, which, to those bound up the east branch of the river, may be considered the end of the road, and the point where you bid adieu to civilization and take your plunge into the wild country. There were then but four settlers on farms above Nickaton village and the Hunt place in No. 3, and but nine in the whole range of country between Nickaton (west branch) village and the mouth of the Alleghash on the upper St. John—a stretch of not less than 150 miles. The cause of this was attributed to the fact that every township in this route was owned by proprietors who had hitherto held it for lumbering purposes. The State, having disposed of its interest in the lands, had not, of course, been called upon to aid in opening it up to settlers. The proprietors, content with the gains given them from the lumber, were not desirous of having them settled, thereby avoiding any calls of taxation for roads or risks from fires which might take place in clearing the lands.

No particular obstruction was met with in the canoe progress until the party came to Whetstone Falls, where it became necessary to unload and carry by, a distance of half a mile. At this place the geologist met with boulders of "enermal" or fossiliferous limestones and other boulders containing fossil remains which had been brought down from sections above.

After getting by Whetstone Falls, a few hours brought them to Hunt's Farm, which is situate about midway of No. 3, Range 7. For more than thirty years this farm had been a welcome station or resting-place for the lumberman and voyageur as he passed up or down the river, and the probability was that it would continue, for years to come, to offer the same conveniences as theretofore, holding the monopoly of affording entertainment to the traveller for want of a rival establishment of the kind in the neighborhood. A road was some time before made from this place into the Aroostock Road at No. 3, Range 6, some twelve miles distant. The soil and agricultural capabilities of this farm gave a good criterion by which to judge of the surrounding lands in regard to their value for agricultural purposes. A large portion of it was interval, or alluvial soil on the margin of the river. The remaining portions in the rear were high swells or ridges. The interval is well adapted to grass, being in its lower parts inundated in the spring of the year, and thus fertilized by the fine particles left on the subsidence of the waters. The higher portions are easily cultivated and very productive, and the swells or uplands afford excellent pasturage for stock. There are immense tracts of similar interval on the Penobscot and its branches near by (the Wassataquick and the Sebost), covered with forest and wild grasses which grow there in the rankest luxuriance, awaiting the hand of future settlers to subdue and convert them to smiling and productive meadows and fields, and thus enable them to contribute to the subsistence of man and to the wealth of the State.

By previous arrangement the party were here met by the Rev. Marcus R. Keep, of Ashland, who had done so much as a pioneer explorer of Katabdin, and made known to the public the characteristics of that grand old mountain, in regard to the sublime and extensive prospect seen from its summit, its peculiar geological structure, and the rugged toil required to ascend to its pinnacle. A portion of the party immediately on arrival placed themselves under the guidance of Mr. Keep, who was also accompanied with Mr. Maxwell, of Golden Ridge, and left for the purpose of ascending the mountain and making a reconnaissance of the country on the way to and from it. As this would take them three or four days, the remainder agreed to wait for them and employ themselves in repairing boats, exploring the vicinity of the farm, and such other business as the furtherance of the expedition might demand.

As before stated, the Penobscot and the Wassataquick, which comes in on the west side, and the Sebost, coming in on the eastern side further up, are bordered with large tracts of interval land, made up of the fine alluvium brought down by the waters of the respective streams. The uplands in the rear are rather stony or rocky, on account of the boulders which have been strewed over them at some former period. Among these boulders are found limestone of the description before mentioned, and conglomerates and old sandstone of large size, indicating that they had not been removed far from their parent bed, wherever it might be.

The Katabdin party returned on Saturday afternoon, well satisfied with the labors, as well as the results and fruits of their expedition, and on Monday morning (18th) all again pursued their voyage up the river. Before night they came to the foot of Grand Falls, and there camped. The Grand Falls, so called, are a series of rapids and cascades extending several miles, with occasional intervals of slack-water between some of the pitches. The whole form the most formidable obstruction in the river between Oldtown and Grand Lake. It was a good day's work to get "luggage" and boats up to the foot of the first or upper pitch, and it was found necessary to encamp, reserving for the next morning the remainder of the "carry" and the getting up to "Camp Johnson" in No. 5 in the 8th range.

The next morning and day proved somewhat rainy, but taking an early start they accomplished the rest of the portage, and once more embarked. They found for a mile or two slack-water, after which a pretty smart current met them and continued until they came to "Stair Falls." An entirely different rock formation is found from the head of Grand Falls. Granite has entirely disappeared and given place to trap-rock and sandstone. Stair Falls are formed by ledges of the latter crossing the river at right angles, and for nearly or quite a mile flooring the river in successive steps or "stairs." In the rock of the lower step, on the east side, were found "trilobites" and other fossil remains very interesting to the geologists of the party. Even Louis—who, by the way, is a shrewd and active member of the Penobscot tribe, and no mean representative of the aboriginal race—became very expert in hunting up specimens of the kind.

On the 23d they arrived at Johnson's Camp, in No. 5 of the 8th. This camp had been constructed two years previously by one of the party (William A. Johnston) and his partner for the accommodation of their men while lumbering on this township, and it was found a very convenient stopping-place for a few days, from which different parties could proceed to examine the several localities in the neighborhood which promised to be interesting. These were the adjacent mountain, called the "Traveller," and some of its spurs; the rock formation at the dam at the outlet of the lake a mile or two above; the Stair Falls below and Bowlin Pond; Jerry Lake and Murch's or Horseshoe Lake on the eastern section of the township. The trap-rock of the mountains, the "Silurian rock of the Stair Falls," and the fossiliferous limestone in and about Murch's Lake afforded localities of interesting research and employment to the geologist. Suites of specimens from each were collected, all of which were enumerated and described in Prof. Hitchcock's final report. They also obtained many interesting specimens in the several departments of natural history, especially in ornithology, entomology and botany.

The raven (Corvus corax), the large red-headed woodpecker (Picus pileatus), and several other rather rare birds, were here procured. While Prof. H. with a party proceeded up Grand Lake (Montagamon), the rest proceeded to the exploration of the eastern portion of the township and the lakes in that section. The first point of examination was Bowlin Pond. Nothing very interesting presented itself in this vicinity except the remains of immense pines which were destroyed by the fires in 1825, the trunks of which were mostly fallen to the ground and lay quietly mouldering away. All of them were large, and some of them of enormous dimensions.

This was once undoubtedly one of the most heavily timbered sections of any part of Maine. In threading their way slowly over the fallen monarchs of the forest, they could not but be struck with evidences of the vast loss that had accrued to the State by the sweeping of fires through its forests and timber-lands. Millions of dollars could not replace the value or make good the destruction thus made. Some, who pretend to know the facts, asserted that the ores which caused the destruction of the timber in this particular locality, were intentionally set by way of revenge for the loss of some hay burnt by some of the employes of the Land Agent, which hay belonged to some of the trespassers on the public lands. If this be true, it was a revenge the effect of which will live long after its perpetrators have passed away, and which more than one generation will look upon with regret. Much of this timber was cut and carried away soon after its being burnt, but thousands and thousands of these once stately pines lay strewed about, having fallen in every direction. The growth that has newly sprung up on the ground thus divested of its former magnificent growth is in strange contrast with the size and grandeur of the dead trunks below them. It consists principally of white birches, poplars, and wild cherries. If the theory of alternating growth be true, thought Dr. Holmes, it would well if another conflagration would clear the present incumbents of the soil, and allow a new race of pines to begin their growth, and to make good, in the course of years, the loss of their ancestors.

The shores of this lake are low and rocky. The rocks are principally trap-rock, broken and strewed in profusion over the surface. Abundant signs of moose, deer, and bear were met with, and occasionally an otter-slide was seen on the margin of the lake, but the animals themselves were careful to keep themselves out of the way. Similar rock formations but not quite so many decaying trunks of heavy pines, were found on the way from Bowlin to Jerry Lake. The western shore of this lake was the terminus of the ramble eastward from the camp. Turning to a northwesterly course, they traversed the section between this and "Murch's" (Horseshoe) Lake. About a mile east of the stream, or outlet of the last-named lake (the waters of which pass into Bowlin), while travelling over a well-timbered hard-wood ridge, the party suddenly came to one of the largest boulders they had ever seen. It stands comparatively alone, isolated, as it were, in the midst of the forest. It is closely surrounded by a thick and heavy growth, while from its top have grown up another forest of stately trees, far overtopping those of the forest around and below them. This boulder is composed of the encrinal or fossiliferous limestone, the site of which was afterwards found further west. It was ascertained on measurement to be 200 feet in circumference. Its walls or sides were nearly perpendicular, though worn and furrowed by the abrasion of water, either before or since its removal from its parent-bed. The height was 18 feet, and the area on the top nearly as large as at its base and quite level, and was covered with a small wood-lot. A soil had, by some means, been formed there, and birches, maples, and cedars had sprung up and grown, some of them, to the size of eight or ten inches in diameter. In one of its clefts a family of hedgehogs (Erethizon dorsatus) had taken up their residence, but were too snugly ensconced in their "lair" to allow intruders to reach them. It was found that, although a "feeble folk," like the cory of old they had "built their house in the rock," and defied enemies to dislodge them. So the explorers "left them alone in their glory," and passed on.

Before starting on this expedition they had received several vague accounts of an island in a lake somewhere in the neighborhood of Bowlin, in which were sundry galleries and a cave of curious form and construction, "not made with hands." At the Hunt farm Deane Murch gave a new edition of the story about as indefinite as those they had before heard, and also stated that he had himself, some thirty years before, when out hunting, seen that same island, and thought he could again find it, and that it was in one of the Bowlin chain of lakes. As he was with the party, it was one of the objects, when they arrived at Camp Johnston, in No. 5, to make an exploration and ascertain the truth in regard to the island cave, and fix its location more definitely and certainly, if location it had. On account of the uncertainty of its whereabouts it was thought advisable to begin the search at the lower Bowlin, and proceed upward, exploring the lakes in course until they had found the island, the rock, and the cave in question, provided anything of the kind were there. Up to this point of the search they had found nothing that had the most distant indication of anything of the kind, and poor Murch began to think that his sight of the rock that he had told of was a dream or a delusive vision thrown over him by Pomoola [the Indian devil, who, unless propitiated by special service, was always bringing hunters into trouble], on account of some delinquency in his service. They judged, however, that, from the frequent and peculiarly emphatic use of the name of that venerable old demon, and the accompanying unmistakably expressive anathemas uttered by him in his disappointment thus far, Pomoola could have no fault to find with him on that score. The discovery of the huge boulder just described confirmed the belief of the existence of the island. It was concluded that this was one of its fragments, and that, judging from its size, the parent bed could not be far off. It was near night when they had finished the examination. They therefore went on about a half a mile to the stream before mentioned, and camped.

Early next morning Louis and Murch were directed to follow up the stream until they came to the lake, while the rest were engaged at the camp, and to return and report. In the course of a couple of hours Murch returned, announcing, with great glee, that he had found his lake and the island they were in pursuit of—that his character for truth and veracity was fully vindicated, for, strange as it may seem, it was the very spot where he had seen it thirty years ago. The party accordingly went back with him to explore the locality. Leaving the stream, and proceeding in a northwesterly direction over a low ridge of hard-wood land, they found an abundance of boulders and also a ledge of the fossiliferous limestone of the same character as the large boulder just described and as those found at the Grand Falls, the Hunt Farm, and as low down the river as Whetstone Falls. After a walk of about three-fourths of a mile from camp, they came to Murch's Lake, usually called, from its shape, Horseshoe Lake. At the westerly end of this lake, and a few rods from the shore, was the long sought for island. The water was sufficiently low to allow wading to the spot. It proved to be a portion of the limestone ledge they had just passed, rising from the water about 20 feet, and say from 200 to 300 feet in cir-conference. Its top was covered with bushes and small trees. The caves talked about proved to be large tubes or tunnels from three to four feet in diameter, worn smoothly, as if by running water, in a horizontal position, completely through or across the island. These tunnels are at the base of the island, and, of course, when the water in the lake is high, are nearly or quite submerged. They are at right angles to each other. The water was sufficiently low to allow the visitors to creep through them. At the place where they cross each other is a room, or cavity, not quite eight feet in diameter and about five feet in height. There are three others commenced, but they pass only a little way before they run into one or the other of the main tunnels. This lime-rock, as before stated, is fossiliferous, and contains several species of organic remains, and the whole of this portion of the lake is floored over, as far as examined, with the same rock, the flooring being quite level, and is covered with a fine silt or deposit of limestone particles, which render the water turbid when disturbed at the bottom. Here, then, is the site or parent bed of the limestone boulders, which had been found scattered along the pathway from Whetstone Falls to the lake. The questions, which an examination of the place gave rise to, are: What has worn these tubes or tunnels through this solid rocky islet? There is no current of waters in the lake, and if it had been done by currents of water, why are they worn at right angles to each other? Was the site of this lake, or this portion of it, once a ridge or mountain of limestone, which has been carried away by some tremendous sweep of waters and ice, and a basin thus excavated down to the present flooring of the lake, leaving only the lonely island before us as a witness of its former location? These queries and others of similar import can be answered only, if answered at all, by facts obtained by more extended and rigorous observation and research than we were able to make at the time of this visit to the place.

Having finished the brief examination, and collected specimens of the rock, the scientists went back to their tent, packed up, and started on the return to Camp Johnston. On their arrival, they met Prof. Hitchcock, who, with Messrs. Goodale and Packard, had gone up the river to Trout Brook Farm, and returned, leaving the others to await their arrival. They had examined the sides and summits of the Traveller and other mountains near by, the rock formations at the outlet of the lakes and its shores, and the next day started again in company with others. Two miles above the camp above the camp they came to the dam at the outlet of the Grand Lake (Montagamon). This dam had been built by a company of the proprietors of townships above, and was as firm and durable a structure as could be built of timber. At this place commences the extensive chain of lakes which are found in this section of the wild lands, and which occupy so large a portion of the summit territory between the waters of the Penobscot, Aroostook, Kennebec, and St. John. They also found here the commencement of a series of dams and other improvements, built at great expense by the proprietors above named, extending from the foot of this (Grand) lake to the foot of Church Lake, at the head of the Alleguash, one of the St. John tributaries, giving them control of the waters of eight or ten lakes and extending more than eighty miles. By these dams and one or two locks, they not only husband the waters in these vast reservoirs, but are enabled to bring great quantities of lumber from the St. John waters, which would otherwise have to float down that river, instead of running down the Penobscot, as it now does. They are enabled to do this by the slack water caused by the flowage of the several dams, by which immense rafts of lumber are floated across the lakes and through their several connecting thoroughfares. When all the logs of the winter's operations have thus been brought down to the lower dam, the gates are all opened and the accumulated waters let loose, which gives a freshet sufficient to float them down to the booms above Oldtown, where they are caught and secured for use until they are called for. The thorough structure of these fixtures, and the liberal expenditure over so large an area of country, reflect much honor on the enterprise and energy of the proprietors, and the doctor had no doubt were found to be profitable investments in a pecuniary point of view. At any rate they are instrumental in giving the Penobscot lumberman successful triumphs over the obstacles of nature, hardly rivaled in any other country. They noticed, however, another inevitable result of such flowage. Thousands of acres of splendid interval land, on the banks of the streams flowing into and the connecting thoroughfares of these lakes, are submerged a great part of the year. As a natural consequence, the beautiful forest growth, with which they were once covered, was killed and falling in every direction. This gives an unpleasant appearance to the otherwise beautiful scenery, and to the eye of an agriculturist seems to be rather a wanton destruction of so much valuable soil. But it belongs to those who flow it, and they have a right to use it in such way and manner as shall give them the most profit.

Between Grand and Second Lake, or, as the Indians call them, Montagamon and Montagomonsis, is a wide extent of this now submerged interval land. On the western upland margin of one of these tracts, on Trout Brook, No. 7, in R. 9, the Messrs. Pingree & Co. have made an excellent farm (Trout Brook Farm). We found this farm under the management of Mr. Berdeen, assisted by three hired men. It is in rather a retired situation, being about thirty miles from any other human abode. The soil is excellent and very productive. It is principally devoted to the production of hay, but grain and roots are also raised in abundance.

This is the farm more lately owned by Mr. E. S. Coe, of Bangor, which will be found mentioned by and by, in the narrative of Mr. Steele. The party had now passed out of Penobscot county, beyond which we need not follow them.

FROM MATTAWAMKEAG TO THE ST. JOHN RIVER.

The description of the geology of this section of country includes the geology of the East Branch of the Penobscot; of Mt. Katahdin; of Webster Creek and Lake; of the Alleguash lakes, and the Alleguash river, or the district travelled over in August and September by our large exploring party, whose history has already been given.

We use only that part falling within this county.

The rock at Mattawamkeag is talcose schist, a member of the clay-slate formation, dipping 64 degrees southeast. In ascending the Penobscot we find alternating layers of clay slates, occasional talcose schists, and grits, all the way to the Pond Pitch of the Grand Falls. At the mouth of Salmon Stream, in the southeast corner of Niatou, these grits and slates dip 70 degrees northwest, making an anticlinal axis with the rocks at Mattawamkeag. A mile above Salmon Stream the dip is 50 degrees northwest, and still further 60 degrees northwest.

Boulders of marble, along with slate, granite, etc., are everywhere seen in the bed of the river. A mile and a half below the village of Niatou there are two small and very pretty alluvial terraces on each side of the river. The island at the junction of the two branches of the Penobscot is the remnant of a high gravel delta terrace, deposited by the West branch. Another part of the same terrace is at the fork itself. Back from the river coarse drift with boulders everywhere shows itself.

Two miles up the East branch, at Ledge Falls, the rocks are slate, grit, and conglomerate, very much distorted, but with an average dip of 60 degrees northwest. It is an interesting locality for examples of small plications of the strata, and also for examples of cleavage planes and laminae crossing the strata. The two planes cross the strata at various angles from 30 to 40 degrees. The strata stand upon their edges at the north end of the Falls. Some of the strata are bent, so that portions of them resemble a row of fossil upright trunks of trees. The layers are both thick and thin-bedded. A conglomerate composed of large pebbles of calcareous slates is imbedded in the grit. A short distance north these pebbles are flat and elongated. A quarter of a mile north of the Falls the strata are perpendicular, running north 70 degrees west.

Two terraces are found on both sides of the river through most of the town, and at Mr. Hiram Fish's house they are remarkably beautiful. Their material is gravel. Higher up there are three and four terraces rising above one another in regular succession. In the south part of No. 1, there is a patch of clay a rod long and rising 10 feet above the water, which is set into coarse and fine gravel just as if it had been elevated from beneath. It was probably deposited in a deep hole in the gravel bed.

The solid rocks grow more slaty in ascending the river. At the locality of the clay in No. 1, the clay slate dips 88 degrees northwest. A few rods above is a gray grit having the same position. At the Rocky Rips, above the mouth of Meadow Brook, the grits dip 75 degrees northwest. Half a mile above is a band of clay slate, with the strike north 28 degrees east, and a southeasterly dip of 80 degrees, or making a sharp synclinal axis with the strata at Rocky Rips. At Grindstone Falls the rocks are alternating strata, as before, of clay slates, fine grits and quartz rock, dipping from 85 degrees east to 90 degrees southeasterly. Numerous boulders of granite fill the bed of the river at the Falls.

On the east side of the river at the Falls are crushed ledges of slates, analogous to interesting examples found in Vermont. The ledge on the east side of the river is high—say 30 feet—and nearly perpendicular, but at its bottom at the water's edge are fragments of slate which have been broken off, scattered along at intervals of 20 rods. This pile of fragments is several feet thick, but is greatly reduced in size from what it has been, because the spring freshets have washed away many pieces from year to year. The force breaking off the strata appears to have come from the southeast. If one could imagine that a great rock 20 rods long happened to fall from the skies upon this particular spot, the results would be similar to what may now be seen.

The theory has been proposed that these ledges were crushed by the toppling over of icebergs when the country was under the ocean, or that a huge wave elevated an iceberg, so that when the wave receded the iceberg fell upon and crushed the ledges. Professor Hitchcock thought the present case could be ascribed to frost and gravity. The water at the base wears away the bottom of the cliff and weakens the rocks there. The water which enters the fissures of the rock weakens the ledges still more by freezing. And as a heavy mass of snow and ice has accumulated in the winter upon the top of the cliff, it may be that its weight, combined with the weakening of the strata beneath, will cause the upper part of the ledge to fall down and present this crushed appearance. A similar example he had seen had removed all the debris before that time. Where these examples of crushed ledges occur upon the southeast slopes of hills, it is conceivable that the strata were broken off by the drift.

This is a fine region for terraces, as compared with the rest of the State. One upon the west side of Godfrey's Falls is 72 feet above the river. From its top there is a fine view of Mt. Katahdin.

At the upper part of the falls the strata dip 60 degrees northwesterly. At Crowfoot Rips in No. 2, R. 7, the slaty rocks dip 80 degrees southeast. The rapids here are produced by the fall of the water over numerous blocks of granite. Beautiful blue clay is found in this township. About Brown's island the sand is cemented into alluvial sandstone by the peroxides of iron and manganese. At the Bear Rips the slates dip 75 degrees southeast. A large number of boulders of the Lower Helderberg limestone were found at Whetstone Falls, containing in great abundance encrinal remains and the coral Favosites Gothlandica. These boulders in the township above are very large, one of them being 14 feet in diameter, and it would seem as if their source could not be far distant. The clay slates and grits at these falls dip 65 degrees southerly. The prevailing dip thus far is northwesterly, but we have passed over two anticlinal and two synclinal axes at least, since leaving Mattawankeag.

From Mr. Hunt's place Professor Hitchcock made a visit to Mt. Katahdin, guided by the Rev. M. R. Keep. He notes that—

The path traveled from the Hunt farm to the top of Katahdin was struck out by Mr. Keep, to whom the State donated a quarter of a township in consideration of his services upon the mountain lands.

On the east bank of the river, just above Mr. Hunt's house, there is a bank of gravel and sand whose strata are inclined at an angle of twenty-five degrees south, and must have been deposited over a steep slope. Some of the strata are consolidated by a ferruginous cement. At this place we found in boulders of loose sandstone a number of fossils of Lower Devonian type, coming probably from the Devonian rocks above. These boulders are different from those seen on the west side of Mount Katahdin. We suspect the range of mountains west of the East Branch, in Nos. 3 and 4, to be composed of trap-rock. They have also somewhat of a sandstone aspect.

A short distance above Hunt's farm, in No. 3, the same clay slates that were described below No. 3 occur, running north 10 degrees east and dipping 80 degrees east. Beyond, the strike is north 20 degrees east and the dip 73 degrees east. There is a large amount of clay along the river at the mouth of the Sehoois. The boulders on the river's banks are now mostly sandstones, conglomerates, honestones, and slates, very rarely any of granite. A few miles higher, the granite disappears altogether.

Professor Hitchcock ascended Lunksoos Mountain on the west side of the river, and found its top to be 1,378 feet above the river, by the aneroid barometer. This mountain forms the boundary line between Townships Nos. 3 and 4, and appears to be composed of the same rocks as the range of peaks in No. 3. Lunksoos mountain is entirely composed of trap, a tough variety without any columnar seams. He had a fine view of the country all about this mountain, and in his note-book speculated "a considerable" about the geological character of the various hills and valleys observed, but did not give his surmises in his report. He was sure, however, that a mountain five or six miles northwest from Lunksoos is composed of granite, as he could see the white rocks composing it both from here and from Katahdin.

In Number Four of the Seventh range, the grit-rocks dip 60 degrees southeasterly. A similar ledge, called Suffer's Rock, has strata dipping 65 degrees southeast. At the mouth of Big Spring Brook in No. 5, R. 8, a horseback commences, which extends rather more than a mile to Bowlin Falls. Its material is unusually coarse, and boulders of granite predominate in it. Here the strata of slate and grit dip 50 degrees northwesterly, forming an anticlinal with the strata previously observed.

The surveyors had now arrived at the Grand Falls, which consist of seven different smaller falls, all of which have different names, and are found in a straight line, in a distance of three miles, but more than this if the course of the river be measured. The following are their names, in ascending order; Bowlin Falls, Hull Machine, Grand Pitch, Pond, Upper Pitch, and Stairs Falls, which consists of two parts. The same clay slates and grits at the Hull Machine dip 12 degrees northwesterly. At the Grand Pitch the grits prevail, alternating with thin bands of clay slate, standing perpendicular and running north 40 degrees east. The fall of water here is quite great and very beautiful. Large boulders of conglomerate are common here, such as are presently described in place. The strata of slates above the Grand Pitch dip 54 degrees southeast. Close by the Pond Pitch the last of the slates appears, running northeast and standing perpendicular. It was thought there are two anticlinal and two synclinal axes between Hunt's Farm and Pond Pitch, or four anticlinal and four synclinal axes observed in this group of strata above Mattawankeag. Hence they had crossed the same strata eight times on this section.

At the Pond Pitch trap rock is found in place, which continues to the Upper Falls. In climbing a hill west of the falls they found a few rods' thickness of slate and quartz rock before reaching the trap constituting the hill, which appears to be the continuation of the trap of Lunksoos Mountain. The junction between the trap and conglomerate above was not noticed, but they suspected the trap to be bedded and related to the conglomerate, just as the trap rocks of Perry underlie the Devonian conglomerates and sandstones of that region. In a figure of the Report is represented the relative positions of the underlying slates, the trap rock, and the coarse conglomerate about to be described.

At the bottom of Upper Falls the party were struck at once by the great change in the character of the rock. They found an exceedingly coarse conglomerate composed of pebbles of various hornstones, jaspers, slates, and occasionally granite, averaging two inches in diameter, and sometimes three feet through. Rarely seams of slate, and in one place several feet thickness of a calcareous rock, occur with the pebbles. It is difficult to ascertain the true position of this rock, but Prof. Hitchcock considers the following as the normal one: Strike north 65 degrees west, dip 45 degrees north. The same layers are traversed by cleavage planes running north 16 degrees east and inclined 83 degrees east. This rock must be about 150 feet thick, and is evidently the base of the following series of rocks to be described. Very large boulders of fossiliferous limestone abound in the vicinity of the Falls, whose course must be quite near.

Above the Upper Falls, the rocks consist of fine-grained, dark-colored sandstones, having a peculiar conchoidal fracture, like clay. On account of the rain he had no time to stop and examine them closely. At Stair Falls, the ledges cross the river so as to make a series of falls, like a pair of stairs. The strata dip 40 degrees northwesterly, and are composed of sandstones of different textures and colors. Some of the layers contain a trilobite, a new species of the genus Dalmanites. At the upper pitch of the Stair Falls, the dip of the strata is a little higher. A little yellow ochre is found in the sand on the banks.

The party staid a few days at Johnston's Camp, in the central part of No. 5, R. 8, partly to recruit and partly to explore the vicinity. At the camp is the finest locality of Devonian fossils yet seen in Maine, but the ledges do not appear—the specimens are entirely in loose fragments, whose source must be very near. Among the specimens are such characteristic forms of the Oriskany sandstone as the Keussleria ovoides. The fossils are entirely marine mollusca. The rock is a loosely cemented sandstone, very much like the Oriskany sandstone of New York, but unlike the Oriskany sandstone of Maine, as already described.

A very high range of mountains appeared west of the camp, one peak of which was ascended. Boulders, frequently of enormous size, of red sandstone, are abundant between the camp and the mountain. They are so large that no can doubt that they came from the base of the mountain. The mountain itself is composed of a beautiful drab-colored silicious slate, weathering grayish white, whose strata at the summit run north 70 degrees west and dip 40 degrees northerly. This Traveller is the isolated conical peak lying to the northeast of a much higher range of mountains, which has received the same name, but must be nearly a thousand feet higher. The peak is 1,622 feet above the river at its base; 625 feet below the summit is the lowest at which the Lacidea geographica is found. The same silicious slates were found a small pond in No. 5, R. 6, just over the line.

Dr. Holmes made an excursion to the east part of No. 5, R. 8, and found at Horseshoe Pond, in the northeast corner of the township, a large mass of limestone containing the Favosites Gothlandica and crinoidal joints, which belongs to the Lower Helderberg group of Upper Silurian rocks. This rock probably crosses the East branch, but escaped notice in consequence of being covered by alluvium. Its strike is northeast and southwest. There is a small island in the pond, composed of this white limestone, in which there is a cave. About a mile west of the pond, the doctor reports an enormous boulder of limestone, upon which trees 10 inches in diameter are growing. It is 18 feet high, and 198 feet in circumference. It is on the top of a hill 300 feet above the pond. Between the limestone and Stair Falls, the rocks are fine, dark-brown sandstones, somewhat similar to those at Stair Falls.

Approaching the dam at the foot of Matagamon or Grand Lake, in No. 6, R. 8, we find red sandstones, which are still more abundant and bright-colored at the dam itself, although black argillaceous seams are found with it. The strata dip 40 degrees northwesterly. Numerous fossil marine mollusca are found at the dam, several of them very large, together with some marine vegetation, while remains of land plants are found further north on the west side of the lake. Half a mile below the dam are fossils resembling those collected at Johnston's Camp.

Passing northerly, is found a steep, high ledge or mountain, known by an inelegant name, which is a little back from the lake, and proves to be silicious slate, being a continuation of this rock from the Traveller. Calcite, chalybite, or spathic iron, and traces of manganese occur in this slate, often in nodular masses. These slates would seem to be the results of the alternation of the sandstones, unless there has been a great dislocation of the strata, for the sandstone layers do not seem to have been disturbed at all by them. The sandstone is found to continue on both shores about half-way up the lake. The most northern strata seen have the strike north 70 degrees east, and dip 15 degrees northwesterly.

The geologist supposed these sandstones to be the equivalents of the Gaspé sandstones of Canada. There is a very fine opportunity for studying this group, both lithologically and paleontologically, in the region of Grand Lake, and also its connection with the Katahdin rocks. The Gaspé sandstones are 7,000 feet thick. The Grand Lake strata are certainly as thick as the Gaspé.

He next came to a class of rocks entirely different from the sandstones, consisting of black slates and slaty limestones, often very much permeated by cleavage planes. He referred this rock in his map to Silurian in part and Devonian in part, with a very indistinct notion of its proper place. The first ledge of it has the strike of north 55 degrees east, and its strata are perpendicular. The rocks in the neighborhood are very much contorted, while the sandstones are not, just as if the slates were largely disturbed and elevated before the deposition of the sandstones. Further north the slates dip from 45 to 50 degrees northwest. Numerous small curves are found among them. On Louis Island the slates dip 42 degrees south, making a synclinal with the strata first observed. The cleavage planes are developed in these ledges at right angles to the strata.

On the south side of Trout Brook Farm in No. 6, R. 9, upon a hill, a hornstone is developed, apparently dipping 45 degrees southerly. The hill appears to be the northern terminus of the Traveller range. It is probably underlaid by the slates just described on Grand Lake, which crop out upon the same hill.

GEOLOGY OF THE SEBOOIS.

The Seboois river joins the East Branch of the Penobscot in No. 3, R. 7. At its mouth the banks are alluvial. The rock first seen is the clay slate series, which on the East branch is found to extend as high as the Pond Pitch. This extends to the upper part of No. 4, dipping 80 degrees east. Peaked Mountain in this township is composed of a conglomerate, probably a part of the series found between the Grand Falls and Grand Lake. Large beds of limestone, containing the Favosites Gothlandica, which are probably the Lower Helderberg series, are also found about the mountain. The mountain has been cut through by a huge mass of trap, which has produced changes on the adjacent strata. The southern peak is composed of amygdaloid and hornstone. This is supposed to be the same with the trap below Pond Pitch. The central peak is composed of coarse conglomerate traversed by veins of calcite. Boulders of red sandstone are found on the surface. The top of the mountain is 660 feet above the river.

Above this mountain, the river finds its way among precipices of sandstone, 200 or 300 feet high. At the mouth of Jerry Brook, on the west bank of the Seboois, in No. 5, R. 7, red sandstone appears, dipping 75 degrees southeast. Sugar Loaf, on the east side of the Seboois, 1900 feet high, is composed of sandstone and clay slate cut through by a dike of trap 500 feet wide. The slates adjacent to the trap have been changed into jasper, hornstone, and compact feldspar. Nodules of calcite and epidote occur in the amygdaloid part of the trap. The jasper bed is 10 feet wide.

At Chegalapscagos Falls, red slate rocks are found, dipping northwesterly 80 degrees. Above the falls numerous dikes of trap rock and masses of jasper abound. Large boulders of the fossiliferous Helderberg limestone are also found in the vicinity. In the south part of No. 6, the red slates dip 60 degrees N. W., then to the S. E., and presently to the N. W. again. At Godfrey's Falls, in about the middle of No. 6, the rocks are slates. Near the first Seboois Lake in No. 7, there is a fine development of the Lower Helderberg limestone. It is 90 feet wide, a bed inclosed in sandstone and brecciated by the intrusion of scoriaceous trap. Encrinetes and the common favosite coral abound in the rock. Some parts of the bed are described as a good marble.

The rocks upon the third Seboois Lake are argillaceous limestones, sandstone, and trap. No rocks are observed upon the La Pompique stream.

Dr. Holmes, in passing from Matagamon Lake, on the East Branch, up Hay Brook, found perpendicular seams running through slate, with an east and west direction. About a mile above the mouth of the Mooseluck stream, in No. 8, R. 8, he found a ledge of coarse conglomerate.

HELDERBERG LIMESTONES AND MARBLES.

Dr. Holmes made a report upon these to Professor Hitchcock, from which we extract some paragraphs:

Among other objects of this expedition, I was requested to trace what I could of the localities and boundaries of the lower Helderberg marbles, or limestone formations that occur in this section of the State, and report to you. I have done in regard to it what the shortness of the time and the lack of some facilities allowed me. The more and further I searched into this branch of our geological formations, the more impressed I became of the ultimate value they will be to this section, and indeed to the whole State, and of the importance of longer time being devoted exclusively to their study and examination. A belt or formation of rock which, as I found, stretches in a continuous direction across not less than five townships, occasionally cropping out and at each locality of its appearance exhibiting surroundings and accompaniments each of different character, could not be thoroughly explored and all its characteristics ascertained in the three or four weeks allotted to this section, and that time interrupted by a search for objects pertaining to other branches of natural history.

On page 364 of your first report, in speaking of the geology of the Wassattiquoik while on your way to Katahdin, you observe that 'on the Wassattiquoik, near its mouth, we found ledges of a blueish quartz rock very evenly stratified. . . . Above them, on the bank, the boulders and large masses of limestone similar to those seen at Whetstone falls are so numerous that we believe the rock to be in place close by, certainly less than half a mile, if indeed we did not find it in place.'

Your conjectures were right. Had you turned and gone up the north branch of the Wassattiquoik a little way into township 4, in the 9th range, you would have found the site from which the boulders you saw started. It is the first locality, or cropping out of this belt of the lower Helderberg formation, east of Mt. Katahdin.*

I was not able to give this locality a personal examination, but obtained reliable description of its location from a person [Mr. David Malcolm, of Patten] who had visited the spot, clambered over the bluff it formed on the bank of the stream, and showed me specimens of the rock identical in their composition and structure with the rock which I visited last year in Murch's lake, in the next township northeast of this (No. 5, R. 8.).

*This is undoubtedly the first belt of rock from which the boulders of fine statuary marble, discovered in 1861, were derived.

Considering its geological position and surroundings this locality is one of peculiar interest, situated as it is almost at the base of Katahdin, with its granite battlements guarding it on the west and south—the trap rocks of the Lunksoos range on the north, and the quartz rock of the Maine Wassattiquoik on the east. I leave it to you and other geologists to decide the seniority of age and priority of occupation of these several formations, and to explain by what arrangement of nature this rock, so full of the remains of organic life, was placed in almost juxtaposition with such azoic neighbors. The one full of tangible proofs of an age teeming with aquatic animal and vegetable life and exhibiting through its structure the outward forms and shapes of former living tenants of an ocean in which they existed, and from which they drew their sustenance; the others the very reverse of this—hard, crystalline in feature—silent as to any definite condition of the past—giving no sign of any association with life at any period—their clearest manifestations being those of an escape from heat of great intensity, and of convulsive earthquakes which have shaken and shivered the neighboring mountains and scattered their rough and angular fragments on every side. Whatever may be the theoretic speculations on this subject, one thing is certain. When the advance of settlement up the Penobscot shall bring mankind in greater numbers into this section, and the accumulations of thrift and industry shall enable them to erect mills and houses and public buildings, they will here find no dearth of most durable material for the same no scarcity of granite and lime and marble to meet all the demands and purposes that may be ever required for architectural strength, endurance and beauty.*

The general direction of the strata is northeasterly. The extent of the formation I am not able to give. It becomes covered by the soil, and is hidden from view. Pursuing the general course of the strike, which leads you in a direction across the township diagonally, it again turns up at the Tunnel rocks in Murch's or Horseshoe lake in the next township, No. 5, R. 8. As a pretty full description of this locality has been given in last year's report, it will not be necessary to say more here in regard to it. It is well, however, to note it, as being the next link in the chain of these Helderberg formations, the existence of which this survey has been instrumental in discovering.

The next show of it, on this line of strike, is that discovered by Dr. Jackson, at the foot of first Seboois lake, an extract from whose description you gave in your first report (page 413). On his authority it is stated to be in township No. 7. I did not arrive at the rock in place when at that lake, but judging from the range of the boulders and other observations, I think, instead of being in No. 7, it is in upper, or northeast part of No. 6 of the 7th range.†

Dr. Jackson also describes a locality of this rock on Peaked mountain, in No. 4 of R. 7. I have not seen this, but if it is identical with the rock in question, it must belong to another belt, as it is east of the range of the belt we are describing.

Continuing our course, we next find a splendid locality of it cropping out near the northeast corner of lot 16 in No. 7, R. 6. I explored this ledge some years ago. It breaks up from a comparatively level plain, forming an abrupt, precipitous ledge on one side, fifteen or twenty feet in height. Its true location had been lost for several years, and some who had sought for it were unable to find it, until last autumn, when from directions given them Messrs. Baston and Chase, of Rock-mabe, succeeded in again discovering it, a description of which he gave in a letter to me published in your report (page 320). I look upon this ledge as a very valuable one. Specimens from it were put into the hands of a marble-worker, who found that it received a good polish—worked free and made good corners, and was compact and even or uniform of structure. Its proximity to the Aroostook road, and the ease with which it can be quarried, render it a feasible and valuable source from which to obtain marble or lime, to meet the wants of a growing community.

The next indication of this formation occurs in a line of the course hitherto pursued from No. 4, on or near the northern line of No. 8, R. 5. Boulders of Helderberg rock are found here, but the true spot of their original site has not yet been ascertained, and future explora-

* At Whetstone Falls a few miles below, on the Penobscot, is a splendid water power with a good site for buildings. Had the State reserved the fee of the soil in itself, and given proper encouragement to settlers, there would long since have been a thriving village here.
E. H.

† It is very difficult, if not impossible, in a dense forest and in the absence of a correct plan based upon an actual survey, to give the true geographical position of any rock. In this particular we realized the truth of the remark of Sir William Logan, Principal of the Canadian Geological Survey, in which he declares "accurate topography is the foundation of accurate geology."

tion will be needed in that place to make it certain. Here ended my hurried and of course imperfect search for this species of rock formations in this part of the State. They are deserving a longer and more careful scrutiny, which shall develop more fully both their geological and economical characteristics. I consider these formations, or beds, to be exceedingly interesting, not only on account of the intrinsic value of such rocks, in and of themselves, as affording a source from which to obtain marble for monumental or ornamental purposes, or excellent lime for cements or agricultural applications, but also for the geological teachings and testimonials they give of the period far back in the ages when this portion of Maine was submerged 'neath the ocean, and crinoid and coral and sea-fern and mollusk flourished on its shores and in its deep soundings, as they now do in the tropical seas of the South—interesting, too, for the story they tell of the singular changes that have taken place in the condition of the materials which compose them, of the hardening into stone of the soft ooze, while full of animal and vegetable life, embracing and still exhibiting their organic remains as clearly and distinctly as when they flourished in it in the vigor of actual life, for the unmistakable evidences they give of the mighty upheaving of this ancient bed of the sea, and its disruption into mountain masses in obedience to the laws and commands of Him

"Who thundered, and the ocean fled."

ABOUT PATTEN.

Dr. Holmes says in his report to Professor Hitchcock:

As it required some little time, after arriving at Patten, to prepare for a tour in the forest, what leisure I had was spent in excursions in that vicinity. The rock formation in this neighborhood, as you have stated in a former report, I found to be slate. In some localities I found it to exhibit good qualities for roofing slate.

On the premises of Hon. Ira Fish, about a mile and a half from the village, and on the north bank of the Mill stream, this slate crops out in the form of a bluff of moderate height, from which we obtained excellent specimens. From a cursory examination, as far as the surrounding forest would allow, I am led to the conclusion that a good quarry might be opened here, with a prospect of its yielding a large supply of this useful material of very fine quality. It cleaves readily, giving a smooth, even surface, and possesses the requisite tenacity to allow of its being dressed and pierced, or punched in the usual manner.

A large portion of the boulders found around the village of Patten are conglomerate. None of this rock is found here in place except in one locality. This was in the bed of the stream, near the lower grist-mill. One of the abutments of the bridge, which crosses the stream there, is built upon it. The extent of it is not manifest, as it soon dips below the bank and is hidden deeply in the earth. But little granite is seen after you pass above Lincoln.

Professor Hitchcock adds the following:

Dr. Holmes has described opportunities for quarrying roofing slate near Patten. Our own scientific researches have led us to define more closely the limits of the roofing-slate belt, upon which the best quarries are located, from Patten to Pleasant Ridge on the Kennebeck river.

FURTHER CONCERNING SLATE.

Among the metamorphic rocks along the coast southeast from Portland, patches of clay slate are occasionally seen, as in Biddeford, Saco, and Scarborough. It was noticed by the State geologist to extend from the west line of Scarborough (on the Saco road) to a point beyond Dunstan corner. The strata run northeast and southwest, and are nearly vertical.

The next deposit of clay slate is of immense extent. Beginning in the southwest part of Waterville, it proceeds thence into Winslow, and probably through Unity and Jackson, to the north part of Frankfort. On the east side of Penobscot river it appears in the north part of Bucksport, running down into the west part of Orland, northeasterly through Orrington, Holden, and Eddington. From this point it is not known whether the southern border-line of the clay slate extends directly to Princeton, or whether it passes to Princeton around the west and north sides of Hancock county. The belt of clay slate in the northern part of Washington county is probably connected with the main deposit, but it must make the northeastern termini of the slate fork-shaped. After taking up the line again at No. 10, R. 3, in Washington county, we can carry it but a short distance on account of the unexplored region in the south part of Aroostook county. The slate, however, disappears before reaching Houlton. Upon the Aroostook road we can find the northwestern side of the clay slate and carry it westerly. The western border is found in the village of Patten, where it lies side by side with talcose schist. It passes over toward the East branch of the Penobscot, then runs up the Sebouis river to Godfrey's Falls, and crosses over to the west side of the east branch of the Penobscot river at the Grand Falls. Thence it returns down the East branch to No. 2, when it runs over to the North Twin Lake. Thence it proceeds in a direct course to the south end of Moosehead Lake. From here it runs to the forks of the Kennebec river. Changing its course it runs down the Kennebec (or perhaps to a point near Mt. Abraham) to Bingham; thence eastwardly to the vicinity of Parkman; thence southwestwardly to Norridgewock, and southeasterly to Waterville, whence Professor Hitchcock commenced to draw the line. Those who follow this line upon the map will perceive that a vast territory is enclosed by it, though of an exceedingly irregular shape. It includes all the settled portions of Piscataquis and most of Penobscot counties.

Much of the clay slate over this area is of a fissile and easily decomposing character, so that it is useless for economical purposes. In the northeastern portions it is often more properly a fine-grained sandstone, associated with layers of clay slate, and rarely of limestone. In Piscataquis county there is much limestone connected with the slate. The most valuable portion of the slate, or the variety called roofing slate, is in Piscataquis county, passing into the counties adjoining. The relations of the clay slate to the more thoroughly metamorphic rocks of the southwest and south sides, are yet unknown, except at two or three localities, which are of too little value to allow of generalization. Occasionally a mass of granite has protruded through the slate.

We give a few details respecting the occurrence and position of the slate at various localities. The strata on the west side of Penobscot river below Bangor are inclined to the northwest, and are underlaid at Frankfort by mica schist. The clay slate in southeast Bucksport and the west part of Orland forms an anticlinal axis, which is overlaid on both sides by hornblende rocks—possibly metamorphosed clay slates.

The following observations of the strike and dip of the clay slates in Penobscot county were taken by Mr. Houghton during the season of 1862: Brewer, strike north 50 degrees east, dip 27 degrees northwest. Orrington, north part 70 degrees east, dip from 50 to 70 degrees northwest. Further south, strike north 80 degrees east, dip 60 degrees northerly. Just north of the village of South Orrington, strike east and west, dip 75 degrees north. Argillo-micaceous slate from West Bangor to Carmel with the following positions:—In Bangor, near J. Eastman's, strike north 55 degrees east, dip 30 degrees northwest; in Hermon, at Craig's house, dip 60 degrees northwest; west of do., strike north 63 degrees east, dip 60 degrees northwest; at Hermon Centre, strike north 60 degrees east, dip 75 degrees north-west; at East Carmel, strike north 73 degrees, dip 60 degrees northwest; further west, strike north 45 degrees east, strata vertical; at Carmel Centre, strike north 70 degrees east, dip 75 degrees southerly; at North Etna, strike north 70 degrees east, dip 70 degrees northerly, and also strata vertical. The common clay slates have the following positions: in the northeast corner of Plymouth, strike north 45 degrees east, dip 75 degrees southeast; in Northwest Plymouth, strike north 55 degrees east, dip from 70 to 83 degrees southeast; in South Plymouth, strike north 70 degrees west, dip 45 degrees southerly; in North Dixmont, strike north 50 degrees east, dip 75 degrees southeast, also north 55 degrees south; at the Newburg line, dip 70 degrees north-west, and strike north 70 degrees east, dip 78 degrees northwest. In Hampden Centre the dip is 35 degrees northwest. Thus it is seen that the northwest dip is the most common for the slates near Bangor; but it is not the only one. The presence of axes will enable us to reduce greatly the supposed thickness of the slates.

This point is illustrated by examining the observations in a line crossing the clay slate from Patten to Bucksport. From Patten to a point three miles north of Molunkus village the dip is northwesterly. Thence to the Five Island Hotel in Winn the dip is southeasterly. From this point to three-fourths of a mile below the village of Passadumkeag the dip is northwesterly again. Thence to the south part of Millford the dip is southeasterly. The strata for the distance to Bucksport probably dip northwesterly. But they dip southeasterly as they disappear in Orland. On this section there are then five axes—three anticlinals and two synclinals.

Some of the slates about Bangor are so thickly glazed with plumbago as to have been mistaken for coal. They are largely talcose, and are occasionally traversed by dikes. The following is the general structure of the formation between Bangor and Barnard: At Bangor the dip is the northwest. This changes soon to southeast, which continues to Charleston. There it changes again and dips northwest. This dip is not continued long, for the rocks soon dip southeasterly, and do not change again till we arrive at a point two and a quarter miles north of the south line of Atkinson. Then the dip is to the northwest, which continues to Barnard. The character of the rock as far as Atkinson is very much like that of the strata in Bangor. The layers are often irregular, and are traversed by veins of quartz. Beyond Atkinson the strata-planes are more regular and better adapted for quarrying. The strata at the quarries are nearly perpendicular, and incline northerly. The character of the rocks at Brownville and in the vicinity of the Kattadin Iron Works is essentially the same.

Rev. M. R. Keep, of Ashland, wrote as follows to the Geologist concerning some of the roofing slates of Northern Maine:

"There seems to be in Aroostook county a distinct variety from the Brownville slate and others in common use. That which has the most rift and seems likely to be worked some day for use and for market, is of a light blue color, and very soft, much like the Rutland freestone pencils, that are much preferred to the black pencils for their softness, and have come into use lately. My attention was first drawn to this fact in noticing some specimens in No. 9, R. 5, near what is called the 'Hews Place,' on the Aroostook Road near Masardis. In that region considerable quantities are found scattered over the surface, and the main ledge is visible in several places, but has not been opened yet. So far as the stone is concerned, some of the best writing slates I ever saw have been made from that owned by Mr. Robert Ready and men in his family. I have one of them in my possession, which as a specimen indicates the best quality of stone for writing as well as roofing slates that I ever saw. The rift is most perfect, free and even, and the texture soft, so as to make good pencils for use on the same or other slate. This same kind of slate and nearly the same quality is found in No. 5, R. 5, also in Patten."

WORKING THE SLATE.

Some notice of the extensive slate quarries near Brownville, Piscataquis county, a locality formerly in this county, seems proper in this history.

The Bangor or Piscataquis Slate Company opened the first slate quarry at Brownville in 1843. Its annual product soon amounted to twelve thousand squares, which readily sold in Bangor for an aggregate sum of thirty to forty thousand dollars. Sixty men were employed, and about twenty-five thousand dollars a year were paid out in wages.

The famous quarries of A. H. Merrill, Esq., mainly at Brownville, were opened for trial in 1846, Mr. Merrill then owning one fourth share. The tentative efforts made soon warranted the expenditure of larger sums and the production of an increased quantity. With the changes of the year Mr. Merrill finally became sole owner, and remains such to this day. The latest statistics from his works we have seen represent a force of eighty men as steadily employed, and a yearly product of thirty thousand squares as being turned out, involving an annual expenditure of seventy-five thousand dollars. Fifteen hundred acres of land are occupied in the various operations of Mr. Merrill. His quarries are two miles from Brownville village. Until the railroad is completed to a more convenient point, he sends his product by teams to Milo Station, on the Bangor & Piscataquis railway.

"HORSEBACKS."

We quote from Professor Hitchcock as follows:

A curious class of alluvial ridges are found in great abundance in Maine, and scarcely occur out of the State, which are known by the provincial name of "horsebacks." They are found mostly in the unsettled districts, and have never been carefully explored by geologists. We are not ready to theorize upon their origin until more details of their structure and distribution are known. In general they may be described as narrow ridges of coarse gravel and sand, from thirty to forty feet high, situated in a level country, with sometimes an undulating summit, and the two ends are of nearly the same elevation above the ocean. With this general statement, we proceed to specify their localities so far as they are known to us.

The horsebacks are not common in the western counties.

In Charleston there is a horseback running north 15 degrees west, corresponding with the course of the drift strike in the neighborhood, which is four miles long. On each side of the ridge are peaty swamps of great extent. A branch strikes off from this ridge in a curvilinear direction.

Mr. Houghton gives the following account of a horseback in the south part of Plymouth: "The horseback that runs through Plymouth pond, over which the road passes, is interrupted just south of the pond by several gravelly knolls, presenting an interesting field for investigation. One has an abrupt hollow in the top of it, extending, I should think, to near the level of the pond, in the bottom of which is a clayey puddle. To the south of these the horseback is continued with greater height and steeper sides, and is said to extend uninterruptedly to near the centre of Troy. It is interrupted in the north part of Plymouth pond, and its place as a road is supplied by a floating bridge. It is hardly discernible to the north again till we arrive on the north side of Plymouth hill, which has cut across it. From this hill it extends to Newport pond. Its general direction is north and south. It runs a few degrees west of north in Plymouth pond. Its total length, so far as examined, is ten miles. In North Dixmont there is a large meadow on the west side, and a mill stream on the east side of the ridge. Upon the east side of the ridge there is an unfailing mineral spring eight feet above the mill stream. It appeared to me that this spring could not have come from the meadow upon the west side of the ridge, because it is higher up. What, then, is its origin?"

The writer was informed of a very long horseback on the west side of Penobscot river, commencing at Orono, and extending through Oldtown, nAlton, Argyle, Edinburg, Howland, Maxfield, and two No. 3 townships to the West branch of the Penobscot. This would make the horseback fifty miles long. Part of its course would lie along Seboois stream.

One of the scientific reporters says:

We rode over a large horseback in Enfield for an eighth of a mile, and the ridge extended further. A smaller one runs from Lincoln into Enfield. Rev. Mr. Keep informs us that there is a horseback extending from the Indian township at Mattawamkeag Point to Bradley, on the other side of the Penobscot; another in Nos. 2 and 4 of Penobscot county west of Sisladohis Lake, and a third in Levant and Corinth.

The stage road passes over an interesting horseback between Kenduskeag and Corinth. The road first strikes in the west part of the village of Kenduskeag, and continues upon it for three miles to a cemetery in South Corinth. It appears to extend somewhat further in both directions. Its general direction is northwesterly; but there are changes and curves in it, whose precise nature may be ascertained by noticing upon the map of Penobscot county the course of the stage road. This ridge is wide and not so high in proportion to its width as is most common. It is of the whaleback type, like the example in Aurora, Hancock county. Its attitude is estimated at from twenty to fifty feet, and its width from six to fifteen rods. It starts from the lee side of a large but low hill, and the northwest end is higher than the southeastern. A cut through it reveals a section of gravel precisely like the ideal sketch of a horseback.

MARBLE AND LIMESTONES.

The marbles to be found in Maine occur chiefly upon the belt of Helderberg limestone running from Matagamon (East Branch Penobscot) river northeasterly. Other localities of good limestones were visited during the geological survey. That at Carroll, says Professor Hitchcock, surpassed anticipation; and similar beds can be found in the vicinity and in adjoining towns. Here lime was manufactured extensively, three to five hundred barrels being then produced annually upon the farm of Mr. Gates. The State Geologist also found on the east branch of the Penobscot boulders of a very fine statuary marble, specimens of which may be seen at the State House. It is, he said, one of the most promising specimens of marble we have seen anywhere in the State. Without doubt these boulders were derived from a strip of Lower Helderberg limestone, running through the whole of the northern part of the State, and very possibly in two or three different belts. It may belong to the same belt with that discovered by Dr. Jackson in No. 7, R. 7.

Beds of azoic limestone occur in Dexter, Hampden, Oldtown, Carroll, and in boulders upon the Penobscot river. Those in Dexter and Carroll are of great value. In Dexter the beds are numerous. One upon Mr. Crowell's land is blue, very extensive, with only 10 per cent of impurities. It runs nearly east and west, and dips 80 degrees southerly. Mr. Fish's limestone is similar to the preceding, but contains veins of calcite; 89.1 per cent. of it is carbonate of lime. Another blue compact limestone, containing 78.1 per cent. of carbonate of lime, is found upon L. Pullen's farm. That on John Puffer's farm contains 84 per cent. of carbonate of lime. A few calciferous slates are interstratified with these beds, but the prevailing rock is clay slate. The explorers found boulders of a beautiful azoic marble on the Penobscot river, between Winn and No. 3. Their source cannot be far distant.

There are seven patches of the Lower Helderberg group, mostly limestone, in the north part of the State. One is at the base of Squaw Mountain at the southwest end of Moosehead Lake, adjacent to mica schist, and not unlikely of the same age. It is a calciferous slate, nearly vertical, containing the Favosites Gothlandica. The character of Squaw Mountain is not known. Another locality of the Lower Helderberg is on an island at the lower end of Ripogenus Lake. The rock consists of beds of gray limestone in slats, and appears both at the lower end of the island and on the opposite shores. The limestone contains the same coral as before. Some of the rock is brecciated. This locality is adjacent to novaculite slate and to granite. The report did not say whether these two localities are isolated parts of one belt, but presumed that careful exploration would connect them together, as well as trace the rock a great distance northeasterly beyond the Penobscot.

The other localities exhibit a limestone as the characteristic rock of the group. Probably some of the slates and sandstones adjacent are of the same age. One locality was discovered by Dr. Holmes, at Horse Shoe pond, in No. 5, R. 8. It contains the characteristic coral in abundance, and there is a great cave in the limestone. Another limestone, probably of this age, is in No. 7, R. 7, near the mouth of the Seboois river. It is 90 feet thick, and has been partially altered by a trap dike. It may produce a marble when the demands of the county shall require its use. This bed probably extends down the East Branch of the Penobscot river, as boulders of the rock were found as far down as Winn, which did not appear to have been transported very far.

MANUFACTURE OF LIME.

A table of localities where lime is made, with the percentage of quicklime in the stone quarried there, was prepared for the geological report. The finest limestone, it was stated, can afford but little more than fifty per cent of lime. From this statement the relative values of the different beds of stone may be easily ascertained. Dexter is the only Penobscot county town named in this table. From the stone at E. Crowell's quarry, 50.6 per cent of quicklime was manufactured; from the Fish quarry, 50.1 per cent; from John Puffer's, 47.2. Hampden is enumerated among many places where a lime of poorer quality, but still suitable for agricultural purposes, may be obtained.

Observations had also been made of a belt of very excellent lime-making limestone at the following points: On Moosehead lake, at Ripogenus Falls on the West branch of the Penobscot, in boulders on the East branch of the Penobscot all the way from Winn to the Grand Falls, on Horseshoe pond in No. 5, R. 8, in No. 4, R. 7, in No. 6, R. 7, in No. 7, R. 7, in No. 7, R. 6, in Ashland, in No. 13, R. 5, in No. 13, R. 7, and on the west side of Square Lake.

TRAP ROCK.

We quote:

On the Aroostook river, trap appears near Ashland and at the falls, where it joins the St. John River. Another mass of trap appears between the Pond Pitch and the Upper Falls on the East branch of the Penobscot. It appears to correspond in its general character and position with the trap in Perry, which underlies the Devonian sandstone, for the rock at the Upper Falls, overlying the bedded trap, is a coarse conglomerate of the same age as that in Perry.

Boulders of a fine amygdaloidal trap are common all along the East branch, the Sebouis, and the Upper Aroostook rivers. East of Mount Katahdin, upon the East branch of the Penobscot, and upon the Sebouis river, there are immense masses of trap, forming mountains and perhaps ranges. Lunksoos mountain, on the Penobscot, and Peaked mountain, on the Sebouis, are examples.

Trap dikes were noticed in the following localities: In Hampden, on the west side of Penobscot river, and in Hancock and Ellsworth.

Most of the granite in Maine is found in its western and southeastern counties, yet is by no means wanting in the more northern portions. The region of Mt. Katahdin shows an immense development of it, from the unexplored region east of Moosehead Lake to the East branch of the Penobscot. The Katahdin mountains, rising suddenly out of a rolling country to a great height, illustrate the topographical mode of the development of this rock very finely.

There appears to be a range of granite and syenite from Island Falls, No. 4, R. 4, on the Mattawamkeag river, to Linneus and New Limerick. Boulders of granite are exceedingly numerous at the north end of Churchill Lake, and the ledges cannot be far distant. The general absence of granitic boulders in Northern Maine shows, as well as the nature of the rocks in place, the great difference in the geological and agricultural character of the two districts. The absence of granite is generally partial evidence in favor of a good soil, which evidence is strengthened by other considerations in the case.

We venture to assert that there is not a mountain in Maine, fragments of which will not be found scattered over the country to the south or southeast. The granite of the Katahdin region is scattered over the southern part of Penobscot county, and the rocks of Mt. Abraham and Mt. Blue may be recognized among the boulders of Kennebec county.

SUNDRY GEOLOGICAL NOTES.

From various parts of the later State Geological Reports, are selected remarks concerning Penobscot county, which have not been used hitherto in this chapter.

Terraces are not very abundant in Maine, although they are sufficiently common to excite attention. They are often chosen for the sites of villages or of tasteful private dwellings. All the large streams of the State are lined by them more or less—as the Piscataquis, the Saco, Presumpscot, Androscoggin, Kennebec, Penobscot, St. John, and St. Francis rivers. They are well developed in Berwick, Brunswick, Waterville, Lewiston, between Bangor and Lincoln on the Penobscot, and on the east branch of the same river between Medway and No. 4.

There is doubtless a large amount of talcose schist in the immense clay slate formation in the central part of the State. Over much of this area the two rocks are interstratified, the latter predominating. The rock between Mattawamkeag Point and Lincoln, on the Penobscot river, is really more like the schist than the slate. There is talcose schist also in Charleston and Dixmont.

The fossils from the loosely consolidated red sandstones of the Washington county group are scattered along the east branch of the Penobscot river. But we do not find them in place until we arrive at the Grand Falls in No. 5, R. 8.

Argyle is named as one of several points where occur extensive deposits of bog-ore, often of sufficient extent for the manufacture of iron.

In Dixmont are found sulphated chalybeate springs, containing carbonate acid in solution.

TRAVELLERS' NOTICES—STEELE.

Some of the most vivid sketches of scenery and civilization along the Penobscot and its branches are comprised in the narratives of the tourists. They are often men of culture, who see things with the eye of the artist or scientist; and their relations are replete with picturesque character and information. One of the best of these is one of the most recent—Mr. Thomas Sedgwick Steele, writer, artist, and active business man, of Hartford, Connecticut, whose little book on Canoe and Camera: A 200-mile Tour through the Maine Forests, is one of the most entertaining sketches of travel in the language. He entered the wilderness by way of Moosehead lake and the west branch of the Penobscot, passing across Chesuncook and Chamberlin lakes to the chain of small lakes and rivers that brought him to the borders of Penobscot county at Lake Matagamon. Between this and the Matagamonsis water, upon a site just west of the Penobscot line, Mr. Steele claims the discovery of a small lake, about two miles in extent, not yet upon any other map than his, and which fitly, from him, takes the name of Steele lake. The tourist makes pleasant notice of the fine farm on the Trout Brook stream, owned by Mr. E. S. Coe, of Bangor, who has extensive lumber interests in this region. His narrative thenceforth lies altogether in Penobscot county. We make enough extracts from it to convey a good idea of the character of the East Branch of Penobscot and the adjacent scenery:

After dinner at the house, our party bade our new-found friends adieu and paddled down the Thoroughfare into Grand or Matagamon lake, which is about one-third longer than Lake Matagamonsis, and went into camp at its foot, on the right bank, near another old dam.

The eastern shore of this lake (the largest body of water on our course since leaving Chamberlin lake) is not especially attractive to the artist, being low and covered with meadow grass. But the western is decidedly picturesque, being bold and rocky, which, climbing from elevation to elevation, finally culminates in the precipitous and rugged peak of Matagamon mountain, towering above one's head to the height of 600 feet, and is almost divested of foliage. We halted but one night on this lake, but were well rewarded by the number and size of the fine trout captured, adding also to our creel a small salmon.

From Grand lake to the junction of the East with the West branch of the Penobscot it is 60 to 75 miles, the river being shut in on all sides by lofty mountains, or heavy belts of grand old forests, through which the swift river tumbles, with only an occasional suggestion of the lumberman's axe.

There are eleven conspicuous falls in this interval, varying from 20 to 60 feet in height, while the charming cascades are too numerous to mention. The abrupt descents bear the names of Stair, Haskell Rock, Grand, Pond Pitch, Hulling Machine, Bowling, Spring Brook Gravel Bed, Whetstone, Grindstone, Crowfoot, and Ledge Falls, their names, in many cases, suggesting their wild and rugged formation.

The water swept so swiftly through this section that, with the exception of the last 20 miles, it was hardly necessary to use our paddles, but, keeping an eye to the rocks in our path, we could silently enjoy the many lovely changes constantly opening in the landscape.

But this also was decidedly the hardest part of the entire excursion. At most of these falls, our whole camp equipage, provisions, and canoes had to be "packed" around the falls from one to two miles, and in many cases there was hard climbing along the steep, rocky sides of the mountains which followed the river's course, while each one of us carried his portion of the load. Along the river's bank to the west, for many miles, are the lovely Traveller mountains, whose rambling appearance and daily companionship are fully represented by their name.

Stair Falls the Quartermaster and myself ran in our canvas canoes, but the guides, tending their birches as if they were glass, dropped them from step to step by means of ropes. After passing Spring Brook Gravel Bed Falls, we paddled through a mile or two of heavy "rips" and entered some two miles of "dead water."

On turning a beautiful bend in the river, what was our surprise to observe the rugged growth of pines gradually disappear, and the landscape immediately softened by the introduction of a dense forest of maple, elm, ash, and noble oak trees, whose gnarled trunks pushed themselves far into the stream, the branches overlocking above our heads and forming a canopy that darkened the water.

Exclamations of surprise rang from our lips as all the canoes, in "Indian file," drifted through the enchanting bower, and we thought to ourselves, if in the quiet dress of summer this is so lovely, what must it be when clothed in autumnal foliage?

THOREAU.

One of the most remarkable tourists who ever made an excursion up or down the Penobscot valley was Henry D. Thoreau, the self-taught naturalist and hermit-philosopher of Concord, and author of several books—Excursions, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers, Walden, and The Maine Woods—which are remarkable for their descriptive power, and the minuteness and clearness of observation they display. Thoreau was here in 1846, on his way to the ascent of Mt. Katahdin. He left Bangor in a buggy September 1st, with one companion, for Mattawamkeag Point. His narrative proceeds:

Within a dozen miles of Bangor we passed through the villages of Stillwater and Oldtown, built at the falls of the Penobscot, which furnish the principal power by which the Maine woods are converted into lumber. The mills are built directly over and across the river. Here is a close jam, a hard rub, at all seasons; and there the once-green tree, long since white, I need not say as the driven snow, but as a driven log, becomes lumber merely. Here your inch, your two- and your three-inch stuff begins to be, and Mr. Sawyer marks off those spaces steel which decide the destiny of so many prostrate forests. Through this riddle, more or less coarse, is the arrowy Maine forest, from Ktaadn and Chestuncork, and the headwaters of the St. John, relentlessly sifted, till it comes out boards, clapboards, laths, and shingles such as the wind can take, still perchance to be slit and slit again, till men get a size that will suit. Think how stood the white-pine tree on the shore of Chestuncook, its branches sougling with the four winds, and every individual needle trembling in the sunlight; think how it stands with it now,—sold, perchance, to the New England Friction-Match Co.! There were in 1837, as I read, 250 saw-mills on the Penobscot and its tributaries above Bangor, the greater part of them in this immediate neighborhood, and they sawed 200,000,000 of feet of boards annually. To this is to be added the lumber of the Kennebeck, Androscoggin, Saco, Passamaquoddy, and other streams. No wonder that we hear so often of vessels which are becalmed off our coast, being surrounded a week at a time by floating lumber from the Maine woods. The mission of men there seems to be, like so many busy demons, to drive the forest all out of the country, from every solitary beaver-swamp and mountain side, as soon as possible.

At Oldtown we walked into a batteau-manufactory. The making of batteaux is quite a business here for the supply of the Penobscot River. We examined some of the stocks. They are light and shapely vessels, calculated for rapid and rocky streams, and to be carried over long portages on men's shoulders; from twenty to thirty feet long, and only four or four and a half feet wide, sharp at both ends like a canoe, though broadest forward on the bottom. . . . There was something refreshing and wildly musical in my ears in the very name of the white man's canoe, reminding me of Charlevoix and Canadian voyagers. The batteau is a sort of mongrel between the canoe and the boat, a fur-trader's boat.

The ferry here took us past the Indian island. As we left the shore I observed a short, shabby, washerwoman-looking Indian—they commonly have the woe-begone look of the girl that cried for spilt milk—just from "up river," land on the Oldtown side near a grocery, and drawing up his canoe, take out a bundle of skins in one hand and an empty keg or half-barrel in the other, and scramble up the bank with them. This picture will do to put before the Indian's history—that is, the history of his extinction. In 1837 there were 362 souls left of this tribe. The island seemed deserted to-day, yet I observed some new houses among the weather-stained ones, as if the tribe had still a design upon life; but generally they have a very shabby, forlorn, and cheerless look, being all backside and woodshed, not homesteads, even Indian homesteads; but, instead of home or abroad-steads, for their life is domi aut militie, at home or at war, or now rather venatus—that is, a hunting, and most of the latter. The church is the only trim-looking building; but that is not Abenaki, that was Rome's doings. Good Canadian it may be, but it is poor Indian. These were once a powerful tribe. Politics are all the rage with them now. I even thought that a row of wigwams, with a dance of powwows and a prisoner tortured at the stake, would be more respectable than this.

We landed in Milford, and coasted along on the east side of the Penobscot, having a more or less constant view of the river and the islands in it; for they retain all the islands as far up as Niatou, at the mouth of the East Branch. They are generally well-timbered, and are said to be better soil than the neighboring shores. The river seemed shallow and rocky, and interrupted by rapids, rippling and gleaming in the sun.

It was the Houlton road on which we were now travelling, over which some troops were marched once toward Mars' Hill, though not to Mars' field, as it proved. It is the main, almost the only road in these parts, as straight and well-made, and kept in as good repair, as almost any you will find anywhere. Everywhere we saw signs of the great freshet,—this house standing awry, and that where it was not founded, but where it was found, at any rate, the next day; and that other with a water-logged look, as if it were still airing and drying its basement, and logs with everybody's marks upon them, and sometimes the marks of their having served as bridges, strewn along the road. We crossed the Sunkhaze, a summery Indian name, the Olemon, Passadumkeag, and other streams, which make a greater show on the map than they now did on the road.

At sundown, leaving the river-road awhile for shortness, we went by way of Enfield, where we stopped for the night. This, like most of the localities bearing names on this road, was a place to name, which, in the midst of the unnamed and incorporated wildness, was to make a distinction without a difference, it seemed to me. Here, however, I noticed quite an orchard of healthy and well-grown apple-trees, in a bearing state, it being the oldest settler's house in this region; but all natural fruit, and comparatively worthless for want of a grafter—and so it is generally lower down the river. It would be a good speculation, as well as a favor conferred on the settlers, for a Massachusetts boy to go down there with a trunk-full of choice-scions, and his grafting apparatus, in the spring.

The next morning we drove along through a high and hilly country, in view of Coldstream Pond, a beautiful lake four or five miles long, and came into the Houlton road again, here called the military road, at Lincoln, 45 miles from Bangor, where there is quite a village for this country—the principal one above Oldtown. Learning that there were several wigwams here, on one of the Indian islands, we left our horse and wagon, and walked through the forest half a mile to the river, to procure a guide to the mountain. It was not till after considerable search that we discovered their habitations—small huts, in a retired place, where the scenery was unusually soft and beautiful, and the shore skirted with pleasant meadows and graceful elms.

There were very few houses along the road, yet they did not altogether fail, as if the law by which men are dispersed over the globe were a very stringent one, and not to be resisted with impunity or for slight reasons. There were even the germs of one or two villages just beginning to expand. The beauty of the road itself was remarkable. The various evergreens, many of which are rare with us—delicate and beautiful specimens of the larch, arbor-vita, ball-spruce and fir-balsam, from a few inches to many feet in height—lined its sides, in some places like a long front yard, springing up from the smooth grass-plats which uninterruptedly border it, and are made fertile by its wash; while it was but a step on either hand to the grim, untrodden wilderness, whose tangled labyrinth of living, fallen, and decaying trees only the deer and moose, the bear and wolf, can easily penetrate. More perfect specimens than any front-yard plot can show, grow there to grace the passage of the Houlton teams.

About noon we reached the Mattawamkeag, 56 miles from Bangor by the way we had come, and put up at a frequented house still on the Houlton road, where the Houlton stage stops. Here was a substantial covered bridge over the Mattawamkeag, built, I think they said, some 17 years before. We had dinner—where, by the way, and even at breakfast, as well as supper, at the public houses on this road, the front rank is composed of various kinds of "sweet-cakes," in a continuous line from one end of the table to the other. I think I may safely say that there was a row of 10 or 12 plates of this kind set before us two here. To account for which, they say that, when the lumberers come out of the woods, they have a craving for cakes and pies and such sweet things, which there are almost unknown, and this is the supply to satisfy that demand. The supply is always equal to the demand, and these hungry men think a good deal of getting their money's worth. No doubt the balance of victuals is restored by the time they reach Bangor—Mattawamkeag takes off the raw edge. Well, over this front rank, I say, you, coming from the "sweet-cake" side, with a cheap, philosophic indifference though it may be, have to assault what there is behind, which I do not by any means mean to insinuate is insufficient in quantity or quality to supply that other demand, of men, not from the woods, but from the towns, for venison and strong country fare. After dinner we strolled down to the Point, formed by the junction of the two rivers, which is said to be the scene of an ancient battle between the Eastern Indians and the Mohawks, and searched there carefully for relics, though the men at the bar-room had never heard of such things; but we found only some flakes of arrow-head stone, some points of arrow-heads, one small leaden bullet, and some colored beads, the last to be referred, perhaps, to early fur-trader days. The Mattawamkeag, though wide, was a mere river's bed, full of rocks and shallows at this time, so that you could cross it almost dry-shod in boots; and I could hardly believe my companion, when he told me that he had been fifty or sixty miles up it in a batteau, through distant and still uncut forests. A batteau could hardly find a harbor now at its mouth. Deer and caribou, or reindeer, are taken here in the winter, in sight of the house.

Early the next morning we had mounted our packs, and prepared for a tramp up the West Branch, my companion having turned his horse out to pasture for a week or ten days, thinking that a bite of fresh grass and a taste of running water would do him as much good as backwoods fare and new country influences would his master. Leaping over a fence, we began to follow an obscure trail up the north bank of the Penobscot. There was now no road further, the river being the only highway, and but half a dozen log-huts, confined to its banks, to be met with for 30 miles. On either hand, and beyond, was a wholly uninhabited wilderness, stretching to Canada. Neither horse nor cow, nor vehicle of any kind, had ever passed over this ground; the cattle and the few bulky articles which the loggers use being got up in the winter on the ice, and down again before it breaks up. The evergreen woods had a decidedly sweet and bracing fragrance; the air was a sort of diet-drink; and we walked on buoyantly in Indian file, stretching our legs. Occasionally there was a small opening on the bank, made for the purpose of log-rolling, where we got a sight of the river—always a rocky and rippling stream. The roar of the rapids, the note of a whistler-duck on the river, of the jay and chickadee around us, and of the pigeon-woodpecker in the openings, were the sounds that we heard. This was what you might call a brand-new country; the only roads were of Nature's making, and the few houses were camps. Here, then, one could no longer accuse institutions and society, but must front the true source of evil.

There are three classes of inhabitants who either frequent or inhabit the country which we had now entered—first, the loggers, who, for a part of the year, the winter and spring, are far the most numerous, but in the summer explorers for timber completely desert it; second, the few settlers I have named, the only permanent inhabitants, who live on the verge of it and help raise supplies for the former; third, the hunters, mostly Indians, who range over it in their season.

At the end of three miles we came to the Mattawamkeag stream and mill, where there was even a rude wooden railroad running down to the Penobscot, the last railroad we were to see. We crossed one tract on the bank of the river, of more than a hundred acres of heavy timber, which had just been felled and burnt over, and was still smoking. Our trail lay through the midst of it, and was well-nigh blotted out. The trees lay at full length, four or five feet deep, and crossing each other in all directions, all black as charcoal, but perfectly sound within, still good for fuel or for timber; soon they would be cut into lengths and burnt again. Here were thousands of cords, enough to keep the poor of Boston and New York amply warm for a winter, which only cumbered the ground and were in the settler's way. And the whole of that solid and interminable forest is doomed to be gradually devoured thus by fire, like shavings, and no man be warmed by it.

I walked through Salmon River with my shoes on, it being low water, but not without wetting my feet. A few miles farther we came to "Marm Howard's," at the end of an extensive clearing, where there were two or three log huts in sight at once, one on the opposite side of the river, and a few graves, even surrounded by a wooden paling, where already the rude forefathers of a hamlet lie, and a thousand years hence, perchance, some poet will write his "Elegy in a Country Courtyard."

The next house was Fisk's, ten miles from the Point, at the East Branch opposite to the island Nickatou, or the Forks, the last of the Indian islands. I am particular to give the names of the settlers and the distances, since every log hut in these woods is a public house, and such information is of no little consequence to those who may have occasion to travel this way. Our course here crossed the Penobscot, and followed the southern bank. One of the party, who entered the house in search of some one to set us over, reported a very neat dwelling, with plenty of books and a new wife, just imported from Boston, wholly new to the woods. We found the East Branch a large and rapid stream at its mouth, and much deeper than it appeared. Having with some difficulty found the trail again, we kept up the south side of the West Branch, or main river, passing by some rapids called Rock Ebeeme, the roar of which we heard through the woods, and, shortly after, in the thickest of the wood, some empty loggers' camps, still new, which were occupied the previous winter.

White's farm, thirteen miles from the Point, is an extensive and elevated clearing, from which we got a fine view of the river, rippling and gleaming far beneath us.

We reached Shad Pond, or Nolisumack, an expansion of the river. Hodge, the assistant State Geologist, who passed thro' this on the 25th of June, 1837, says: "We pushed our boat through an acre or more of buck-beans which had taken root at the bottom and bloomed above the surface in the greatest profusion and beauty."

We took here a poor and leaky batteau, and began to pole up the Millinocket two miles to the Elder Fowler's, in order to avoid the Grand Falls of the Penobscot, intending to exchange our batteau there for a better. The Millinocket is a small, shallow, and sandy stream, full of what I took to be lamprey-eels' or suckers' nests, lined with musquash cabins, but free from rapids, excepting at its outlet from the lake.

Old Fowler's, on the Millinocket, six miles from McCauslin's, and 24 from the Point, is the last house. Gibson's, on the Sowadnehunk, is the only clearing above; but that had proved a failure, and was long since deserted. Fowler is the oldest inhabitant of these woods. He formerly lived a few miles from here, on the South side of the West Branch, where he built his house sixteen years ago, the first house built above the Five islands. Here our new batteau was to be carried over the first portage of two miles, round the Grand Falls of the Penobscot, on a horse-sled made of saplings, to jump the numerous rocks in the way.

This portage probably followed the trail of an ancient Indian carry round these falls. By two o'clock we, who had walked on before, reached the river above the falls, not far from the outlet of Quakish Lake, and waited for the batteau to come up. We were soon in the smooth water of the Quakish Lake, and took our turns at rowing and paddling across it. It is a small, irregular, but handsome lake, shut in on all sides by the forest, and showing no traces of man, but some low boom in a distant cove, reserved for spring use. The spruce and cedar on its shores, hung with gray lichens, looked at a distance like the ghosts of trees. Ducks were sailing here and there on its surface, and a solitary loon, like a mere living wave,—a vital spot on the lake's surface,—laughed and frolicked, and showed its straight leg, for our amusement. Joe Merry Mountain appeared in the northwest, as if it were looking down on this lake especially; and we had our first but partial view of Ktaadn, its summit veiled in clouds, like a dark isthmus in that quarter, connecting the heavens with the earth. After two miles of smooth rowing across this lake, we found ourselves in the river again, which was a continuous rapid for one mile to the dam, requiring all the strength and skill of our boatman to pole it up.

This camp, exactly 29 miles from Mattawamkeag Point, by the way we had come, and about 100 from Bangor by the river, was the last human habitation of any kind in this direction. Beyond, there was no trail; and the river and lakes, by batteaux and canoes, were considered the only practicable route. We were about 30 miles by the river from the summit of Ktaadn, which was in sight, though not more than 20, perhaps, in a straight line.

It being about the full of the moon, and a warm and pleasant evening, we decided to row five miles by moonlight to the head of the North Twin Lake, lest the wind should rise on the morrow. After one mile of river, or what the boatmen call "thoroughfare,"—for the river becomes at length only the connecting link between the lakes,—and some slight rapid which had been mostly made smooth water by the dam, we entered the North Twin Lake just after sundown, and steered across for the river "thoroughfare," four miles distant. This is a noble sheet of water, where one may get the impression which a new country and a "lake of the woods" are fitted to create.

We could distinguish the outlet to the South Twin, which is said to be the larger, where the shore was misty and blue, and it was worth the while to look thus through a narrow opening across the entire expanse of a concealed lake to its own yet more dim and distant shore. The shores rose gently to ranges of low hills covered with forests; and though, in fact, the most valuable white-pine timber, even about this lake, had been culled out, this would never have been suspected by the voyager. The impression which, indeed, with the fact was, as if we were upon a high table-land between the States and Canada, the northern side of which is drained by the St. John and Chaudiere, the southern by the Penobscot and Kennebec. There was no bold, mountainous shore, as we might have expected, but only isolated hills and mountains rising here and there from the plateau. The country is an archipelago of lakes,—the lake country of New England. The levels vary but a few feet, and the boatmen, by short portages, or by none at all, pass easily from one to another. They say that at very high water the Penobscot and the Kennebec flow into each other, or, at any rate, that you may lie with your face in one and your toes in the other. Even the Penobscot and St. John have been connected by a canal, so that the lumber of the Alleghuash, instead of going down the St. John, comes down the Penobscot; and the Indian's tradition that the Penobscot once ran both ways for his convenience, is, in one sense, partially realized to-day.

AUDUBON.

In August, 1831, the yet more celebrated naturalist, John James Audubon, made a journey overland through Eastern Maine, with his wife and two sons, to inquire as to the birds of the wilderness. We are able, from his narrative, to determine pretty nearly how much of his journey lay in Penobscot county, and copy that portion of the diary from his Life, edited by his widow and published in 1873. The party was now on its return from New Brunswick:

Hiring a cart, two horses, and a driver, we proceeded in the direction of Bangor. Houlton is a neat village, consisting of some fifty houses. The fort is well situated, and commands a fine view of Mars' Hill, which is about 13 miles distant. A custom-house has been erected here, the place being on the boundary line of the United States and the British provinces. The road which was cut by the soldiers of this garrison, from Bangor to Houlton, through the forests, is at this moment a fine turnpike of great breadth, almost straight in its whole length, and perhaps the best now in the Union. It was incomplete, however, for some miles, so that our travelling over that portion was slow and disagreeable. The rain, which fell in torrents, reduced the newly raised earth to a complete bed of mud; and at one time our horses became so completely mired that, had we not been extricated by two oxen, we must have spent the night near the spot. Jogging along at a very slow pace, we were overtaken by a gay wagoner, who had excellent horses, two of which a little "siller" induced him to join to ours, and we were taken to a tavern at the "cross-roads," where we spent the night in comfort.

While supper was preparing, I made inquiry respecting birds, quadrupeds, and fishes, and was pleased to hear that all of these animals abounded in the neighborhood. Deer, bear, trouts, and grouse, were quite plentiful, as was the great gray owl. When we resumed our journey next morning Nature displayed all her loveliness, and autumn with her mellow tints, her glowing fruits, and her rich fields of corn, smiled in placid beauty. Many of the fields had not yet been reaped; the fruits of the forests and orchards hung clustering around us; and, as we came in view of the Penobscot river, our hearts thrilled with joy. Its broad, transparent waters here spread out their unruffled surface, there danced along the rapids, while canoes filled with Indians swiftly glided in every direction, raising before them the timorous waterfowl that had already flocked in from the north mountains, which you well know are indispensable in a beautiful landscape, reared their majestic crests in the distance. The Canada jay leaped gayly from branch to twig; the king-fisher, as if vexed at being suddenly surprised, rattled loudly as it swiftly flew off; and the fish-hawk and eagle spread their broad wings over the waters. All around was beautiful, and we gazed on the scene with delight as, seated on a verdant bank, we refreshed our frames from our replenished stores.

A few rare birds were procured here, and, the rest of the road being level and firm, we trotted on at a good pace for several hours, the Penobscot keeping company with us. Now we came to a deep creek, of which the bridge was undergoing repairs, and the people saw our vehicle approach with much surprise. They, however, assisted us with pleasure, by placing a few logs across, along which our horses, one after the other, were carefully led, and the cart afterwards carried. These good fellows were so averse to our recompensing them for their labor that, after some altercation, we were obliged absolutely to force what we deemed a suitable reward upon them.

Next day we continued our journey along the Penobscot, the country changing its aspect at every mile; and when we first discovered Oldtown, that village of saw-mills looked like an island covered with manufactories. The people are noted for their industry and perseverance; any one possessing a mill, and attending to his saws and the floating of the timber into his dams, is sure to obtain a competency in a few years.

Speculations in land covered with pine, lying to the north of this place, are carried on to a great extent; and to discover a good tract of such ground many a miller of Oldtown undertakes long journeys. Reader, with your leave, I will here introduce one of them.

Good luck brought us into acquaintance with Mr. Gillies, whom we happened to meet in the course of our travels, as he was returning from an exploring tour. About the first of August he formed a party of sixteen persons, each carrying a knapsack and an axe. Their provisions consisted of 250 lbs. of pilot bread, 150 lbs. of salted pork, 4 lbs. of tea, two large loaves of sugar, and some salt. They embarked in light canoes, 12 miles north of Bangor, and followed the Penobscot as far as Wassataquoik river, a branch leading to the northwest, until they reached the Sebouis Lakes, the principal of which lie in a line, with short portages between them. Still proceeding northwest, they navigated these lakes, and then turning west carried their canoes to the great lake, thence north, then along a small stream to the upper "Umsaskis Pond," when they reached the Alleghuash river, which leads into the St. John's, in about latitude 47° 3'. Many portions of that country had not been visited before, even by the Indians, who assured Mr. Gillies of this fact. They continued their travels down the St. Johns to the Grand Falls, where they met with a portage of half a mile, and, having reached Meduxmekeag creek, a little above Woodstock, the party walked to Houlton, having travelled 1,200 miles, and described almost an oval over the country by the time they returned to Oldtown on the Penobscot.

While anxiously looking for "lumber lands," they ascended the eminences around, then climbed the tallest trees, and, by means of a great telescope, inspected the pine-woods in the distance. And, such excellent judges are these persons of the value of the timber which they thus observe, when it is situated at a convenient distance from water, that they never afterwards forgot the different spots at all worthy of their attention. They had observed only a few birds and quadrupeds, the latter principally porcupines. The borders of the lakes and rivers afforded them fruits of various sorts and abundance of cranberries, while the uplands yield plenty of wild white onions and a species of black plum.

Some of the party continued their journey in canoes down the St. John's, ascended Eel river and the lake of the same name to Mattawankeag river, due southwest of the St. John's, and, after a few portages, fell into the Penobscot. I had made arrangements to accompany Mr. Gillies on a journey of this kind, when I judged it would be more interesting, as well as useful to me, to visit the distant country of Labrador.

The road which we followed from Oldtown to Bangor was literally covered with Penobscot Indians returning from market. On reaching the latter beautiful town, we found very comfortable lodgings in an excellent hotel, and next day proceeded by the mail to Boston.

CHAPTER II.

THE PENOBSCOT INDIANS.

The Eastern Tribes—The Race-stock—The Abenakis—The Etchemins—The Tarrantines—Early History of the Tarrantines—Wars and Incidents—More of the Wars—The Three-years' War—An Interesting Narrative—Gyles's Captivity Among the Penobscots—A Modern Affair—The Tarratine Chiefs: The Bashaba—Later Tarratine Chiefs and Governors—Orono—John Atteon—The Penobscot "in Politics"—The Indian Lands and Treaties—The Indian Trust Fund—The Old Indian Villages—The Indian Census—The Penobscot Reservation—The Community of Sisters of Mercy.

THE EASTERN TRIBES.

The Indians of Maine have received comparatively little attention from the writers upon the aborigines, whose regards have been principally given to the red men of the Middle States, the South, and the Far West. Gookin, in his enumeration of the New England tribes, does not mention the Eastern Indians at all, but speaks only of five "nations," the Pequots, the Narragansetts, the Pawkunnawkuttts, the Massachusetts, and the Pawtucketts, the last-named of whom "had under them several smaller sagamores, as the Pentacooks, the Agawams, the Naumkeeks, Piscataways, Aecomentas, and others." It may be that the uncommonly peaceful and friendly disposition of the savages upon the Maine, making them less the subjects of history than their brethren of Massachusetts and New York, has contributed to keep them in the background of the aboriginal picture. Nevertheless their ethnological place, their numbers and characteristics, and the wars in which they finally engaged, possess sufficient interest to demand place in this work.

THE RACE-STOCK.

In the great divisions of the North American tribes, the Eastern Indians belonged to the Algonquins. The Lenni-Lenape—or "original people," as their name implies—more commonly known as the Delawares, early extended their hunting-grounds along the Susquehanna, the Potomac, Delaware, and Hudson. When an exodus was made by a portion of this great tribe across the Hudson, it took from them the name Mahicannituck; and this, shortened and corrupted in the English mouth, was transferred to them as the Mahicans or Mohicans, and in New England the Mohegans. Here they scattered themselves, as they increased, over all the present States east of the Hudson, and in time became divided into several leading tribes, with many subdivisions or tribal bands. Their affinity with the Indians further to the southward is conclusively proved by the resemblance of language. So long ago as when Charlevoix wrote, this fact was observed. After mentioning the wide dissemination of the Algonquin speech (over a circuit of one thousand two hundred leagues), he says: "It is pretended that the natives of New England spoke dialects of the same language." This is confirmed by the statement of Heckewelder, a later and better authority upon Indian topics. He affirms that when the Europeans came, the Mohegans held the entire Atlantic coast, from Roanoke to the northernmost parts of Nova Scotia, and that their language and the tongue of the Algonquins were but dialects of the same original speech. La Hontan, a writer of the time of Charlevoix, making his remarks more specific to the Indians of Eastern Maine, says that the dialect of the Etchemins differed but little from that spoken by the Algonquins. The friendship between the Algonquins, so called, and the Eastern Indians, was so warm and cordial as to imply at least the tradition of relationship. Champlain makes record of a great feast prepared by the former in 1603, to which the "Mountaineers" and the Etchemins were invited. Charlevoix also says in effect that many of the Algonquins joined their brethren of Maine, when the latter were induced by the French to emigrate to St. Francois and Becanour, in Canada. Dr. Dwight says in his Travels:

The Indians of Penobscot, as I have been since informed by the Hon. Timothy Edwards, were proved to be Mohekanews by the following incident: Several men of this tribe, during the Revolutionary war, came to Boston to solicit of the Government a stipend, which had been formerly granted to the tribe by the Legislature of Massachusetts Bay. The business was referred by the council of safety to Mr. Edwards, then a member of their body, as being versed in the affairs and acquainted with the character of Indians. Mr. Edwards employed Hendrick Awpaumut, a Stockbridge Indian accidentally in Boston at that time, to confer with the petitioners and learn the nature of their expectations. Hendrick found himself able to converse with them, so far as to understand their wishes satisfactorily; and observed to Mr. Edwards that their language was radically Mohekanew, and differed only as a dialect. This fact I have from Mr. Edwards. I have mentioned it here, because the contrary seems to have been universally adopted.

It may be added here that the plural form of the word Muhhekaneew, according to Dr. Edwards, is Muhhekanek, whence Mohican and Mohegan. Besides the generic application of the term, it is also a specific name for a tribe that dwelt in the present Windham county, Connecticut, and thence north to the State line. It was a powerful organization, putting in the field three thousand warriors, and having at one time the celebrated Uncas for chief.

THE ABENAKIS.

A general name has been given by many writers—the older, as well as later—to all the Indians east of the Piscataqua, to the country of the Mickmacks, in Nova Scotia. They were called the Wapanekie (men of the east), or Wabenakies (east-land men), which became in the French Abenagues, and in the English more commonly Abenakis or Abnakis. McKenney & Hall's great History of the Indian Tribes of North America says that the New England Tribes were formerly known by their red brethren west of the Hudson under the generic appellation of Wabenauki, or Men of the East. Their languages were branches of the Algonquin stock, cognate dialects, bearing a distinct resemblance one to the other. All these tribes had undoubtedly a common Indian origin, and it is equally certain that their separation into distinct communities occurred no very long time before they were visited by the English voyagers and colonists. Hutchinson, in his History of Massachusetts, gives Abenagues and Tarrantines as equivalent terms; in which he is certainly mistaken. The Abenakis are undoubtedly closely allied in blood to the Tarrantines, or Penobscot Indians; but are well known to have been a separate tribe, with a separate habitat. The statement of Charlevoix is in the later statement as well—that the "Abenagues live in a country from Pentagoet [Penobsco] to New England." They inhabited the vast forests that covered the tract west of the Penobscot, even into New Hampshire, and north to Canada, in some part of which the remnant of them now dwell. They were a numerous people, until at least the period of the first Indian war, and were mainly in four tribes—the Sokokis or Sockhigones, the Indians of the Saco; the Anasaguticooks, or Abenakis of the Androsscoggin and the west of the Sagadahoc; the Canibas or Norridge-wocks of the Kennebec—"great numbers of them," says Hubbard, "when the river was first discovered;" and the Wawenocks, between the St. George and Sagadahoc waters. To these many writers now add the Tarratines or Penobscots, the immediate subjects of the Bashaba, or chief sagamore. The permanent villages of the Abenakis were five in number—two in Canada, and one each on the Saco, the Androsscoggin, and the Kennebec. The French missionaries described these centres of population as enclosed with strong, high palisades, surrounding clusters of wigwams built of bark supported by bent poles. The natives' dress was "ornamented with a great variety of rings, necklaces, bracelets, belts, etc., made out of shells and stones, worked with great skill. They practiced also agriculture. Their fields of skamgnar [corn] were very luxuriant. As soon as the snows had disappeared, they prepared the land with great care, and at the commencement of June they planted the corn, by making holes with fingers or with a stick, and, having dropped eight or nine grains of corn, they covered them with earth. "Their harvest was at the end of August." Their chief characteristics were bravery, perseverance and tenacity of purpose, amiability and sociability, indisposed to war, but suspicious, and uncompromising in their hostility and pursuit of the war-path when once aroused, fidelity to their engagements, and hospitality. "Their attachment to their family," says an historian of the Eastern Indians, "was such as we do not read of in other tribes of the Algie people." The French missionaries, traders, and military commanders had great influence over these Indians, and did much to provoke savage aggressions upon the English settlement. They showed, says Bryant & Gay's Popular History of the United States, "the tact and adaptibility which distinguish that nation."

This History says further:

The French studied in every way to appropriate the habits of the Indians, to hunt, travel, eat, sleep and dress in the native fashion. They were apt learners of the different dialects; the lists of words and the dictionaries compiled by their missionaries can be relied upon. And these devoted men drew savage admiration by their constancy, calmness in peril, assiduous efforts to teach and civilize, and their skill in healing, as well as by the impressive solemnity of those novel services of religion, with cross, cup, bell and candle, under the groined arches of the primitive cathedral. But the English possessed over the French one manifest advantage, and that has since been styled "manifest destiny," for the current of history undermines and carries away the adroitest policies of the nicest arts of accommodation."

THE ETCHEMINS.

This has been taken as a general name for the tribes that dwell along the banks and about the headwaters of the Penobscot and St. John's rivers, thence eastwardly, according to Hermon Moll's old map of the English Empire in America, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and southwardly to the Bay of Fundy. The order of the king of France to D'Aulnay, in 1638, to confine his jurisdiction to the coast of the Etchemins seems, however, to imply that the extent of it was included between the St. John's and the Bay of Fundy. But it is certain that it comprised the Penobscot region. Indeed, Charlevoix would make this their chief district, as it may have been. He says: "The Abenagues, or Canabas, have for their nearest neighbors the Etchemins, or Marechites, about Pentagoet and its environs; and more at the east are the Mickmacks, or Souriquois, the proper inhabitants of Acadia." His name Marechites, as a title for the whole nation, is considerably used by other writers. The name Etchemin is still preserved in a river, and also a town of Canada.

Mr. Williamson adds some interesting facts concerning this people:

Among the Etchemins, marriages are negotiated by the fathers, and solemnized, in modern times, by a Catholic priest. Captain Francis says: "If an Indian is charmed with a squaw, he tells his parents and they talk with hers; and, if all are pleased, he sends her a string of wampum, perhaps 1,000 beads, and presents her with a wedding suit. All meet at the wigwam of her parents; the young couple sit together till married; they and the guests then feast and dance all that night and the next; and then the married pair retire." Early wedlock is encouraged; and a couple in a fit of matrimonial union will, for the purpose of finding a priest, traverse the woods to Canada. In later times polygamy is not known among them, and divorces, which are never very frequent, are by mutual consent.

Captain Francis says, before white people came here, sometimes "Indians have four wives." A sanup [husband] has unlimited control over his wife, having been known to take her life with impunity. A case of this kind occurred in 1785, when one in a paroxysm of rage slew his squaw and hid her body under the ice of the Penobscot, without being, according to report, so much as questioned for his conduct.

The religious notions of the natives are rude and full of superstition. They believe in a Great Spirit, whom the Abenagues called Tanto or Tantum, and the Etchemins, Sazoos; also in the immortality of the soul and in a paradise far in the west, where he dwells, and where all good men go when they die. To the wicked they suppose he will say, when they knock at the heavenly gates, "Go wander in endless misery; you never shall live here." For plenty, victory, or any other great good, they celebrated feasts with songs and dances to his praise.

They had strong faith in an evil spirit, whose Satanic Majesty they called Mojahondo, supposing he possessed the attributes in general revealed of that being in the Scriptures. They believed also in tutelary spirits, or good angels, whom they denominated Manitou, and they entertained great veneration for their Powows. These, uniting in one person the two offices of priest and physician, were supposed to possess almost miraculous powers.

Their dead were generally buried in a sitting posture. In Pittston, upon the Kennebeck, are two old burying grounds, where skeletons are found in a posture half erect, the head bending over the feet. Relics of human bodies have been discovered in a tumulus near Ossipee pond, which were originally buried with the face downward. In these two places, and in others upon the Kenduskeag and elsewhere, there have been discovered instruments, paints, and ornaments interred—the requisites to help the departed spirits to the "country of souls." The modern manner of burial is borrowed from the Catholics. The corpse, enclosed in a rough coffin, is followed by an irregular procession to the burying-ground; and when interred, a little wooden crucifix is placed at the head of the grave, which is sprinkled with consecrated water and perfumed with flowers or herbs. If a Tarratine dies abroad, he must, if possible, be borne to Oldtown and buried in the common graveyard.

The female lamentations for the dead are great, and sometimes excessive. The death of a young child, swept away from the arms of its mother, as the two lay sleeping in a summer's day between high and low water mark upon the Penobscot bench, affords a striking instance of savage grief. She burst into loud and excessive lamentations, and mingled her cries with inarticulate jabber, an hour scarcely closing this scene of shrieking and tears.

The three Etechemin tribes have, severally and immemorially, selected their sagamores and sachems, or subordinate officers, in form of a general election.* But the candidate, when chosen, is not inducted into his office without the presence and assistance of a delegation from each of the other tribes. This was the case when Francis Joseph Neptune, at Passamaquoddy, and John Aitteon, at Penobscot, were made chiefs of their respective tribes; and the most intelligent credible Indians agree in saying that such is the practice among the Marechites, and has always been the usage among all three of the tribes.

THE TARRATINES.

The Etechemins, according to the historian Williamson, were in three tribes—the Marechites proper, or Armonchiquois, the Indians of the St. John's; the Openango, or Quoddy Indians, of the Passamaquoddy, and the Tarratines, or aborigines of the Penobscot, with whom we have mainly to deal. Mr. Parkman, however, and with him, probably, all the later writers, assign these Indians to the Abenaki confederation or stock.

There can be no doubt as to the habitat of the Tarratines. All the older, as well as later, writers are one in the view that they dwelt upon the Penobscot river and bay, and the present remnant of Penobscot Indians are undoubtedly descended lineally from the Tarratines. They also claimed dominion over the tracts adjacent to the river, from its sources to the sea. Captain Smith, in his narrative, relates that the Penobscot mountains, or Camden hills, formed a natural fortress, separating the Tarratines from their neighbors, the other Abenaki tribes. The two peoples long lived in amity, although the former cherished an hereditary enmity to the Abergineans, or Northern Indians, especially in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, which led finally, in 1615-16, to the terrible war between the Tarratines and the rest of the Abenakis, in which the latter was almost exterminated, and the Bashaba was slain.

Mr. Williamson says of the Tarratines:

They were a numerous, powerful, and warlike people, more hardy and brave than their western enemies, whom they often plundered and killed, and, according to Hubbard and Price, kept the Sycamores between the Piscataqua and the Mystic in perpetual fear. After the conquests and glory achieved in their battles with the Bashaba and his allies, they were not, like their enemies, wasted by disease and famine. They retained their valor, animated by success and strengthened by an early use and supply of firearms, with which they were furnished by the French.† Less disturbed than the western tribes in the enjoyment of their possessions, and also more discreet, they were always reluctant to plunge into hostilities against the English.

The Tarratines ever manifested the greatest satisfaction in their intercourse with the French. No fortifications upon the peninsula of Major-bignyduce, or buildings in the vicinity, excited either fear or jealousy in them; for no rising plantations of the French threatened them with a loss of their lands or privileges. A barter of their furs for guns, ammunition, and trinkets, was managed with a freedom and adroitness which won and secured their attachment. Indeed, no foreigners could vie with Frenchmen, for their religious creeds and rites, to which the natives were superstitiously devoted, their companionable manners and volatile turn, all made the bonds strong and lasting.

The Tarratines have probably at different periods shifted the situation of their principal village; at the mouth of the Kenduskeag they had a common resting-place, when the white people first settled in the vicinity—a place to which they were, from habit, strongly attached. Here the mouldering relics of human bodies, also flint spears, stone implements of labor, and Indian paint dust have been accidentally interred, after a burial for an unknown period of time.

The Tarratines were neutrals in the war of the Revolution. In return Massachusetts protected them and prohibited all trespasses upon their lands, six miles in width on each side of the Penobscot, from the head of the tide upwards. She has since, at different times, made large purchases of their lands, and they are left 1832 the owners of only four townships, a few acres on the east side of the Penobscot, opposite to the mouth of the Kenduskeag, and the islands between Oldtown and Passadumkeag, 28 in number, containing 2,670 acres.

About 40 acres, in 1820, were under cultivation, and the Indians that season raised 410 bushels of corn and 50 bushels of beans, besides potatoes.

Accounts of the former seat of these Indians, three miles above the mouth of the Kenduskeag, and of their later residence at Oldtown, will appear further along in this chapter.

The following useful description of the Penobscot Indians, as found by the French upon their advent in this region, is from the Novus Arbis of John De Laet, published in 1633. It will be observed that De Laet, who doubtless refers to Penobscot bay, is sadly astray in his definition of distance from the Kennebec, which is nearer fourteen than four leagues:

Four leagues north from Kennebec, following the direction of the coast, there is a bay containing in its bosom a large number of islands, and near its entrance one of them is called by the French navigators the island of Bacebus, from the great abundance of vines found growing there. The barbarians that inhabit here, are in some respects unlike the other aborigines of New France, differing somewhat from them both in language and manners. They shave their heads from the forehead to the crown, but suffer their hair to grow on the back side, confining it in knots, interweaving feathers of various plumage. They paint their faces red or black, are well formed, and arm themselves with spears, clubs, bows and arrows, which, for want of iron they point with the tail of a crustaceous creature called signoe. They cultivate the soil in a different manner from the savages that live east of them, planting maize and beans together, so that the stalks of the former answer the purpose of poles for the vines to run upon. They plant in May and harvest in September. Walnut trees grow here, but inferior ones. Vines are abundant, and it is said by the French that the grapes gathered in July make good wine. The natives also raise pumpkins and tobacco. They have permanent places of abode; their cabins are covered with oak bark, and are defended by palisades.

According to Judge Godfrey's essay on the Baron de St. Castine, the Tarratines were a clan of the great Abenaki community, receiving the name from the English colonists; perhaps in honor of a brave Huron chief, called Taratouan, upon whom the Jesuit missionaries had relied for protection. The Rev. Father Vetromile, however, in his excellent paper on the Abenakis, in the sixth volume of the Maine Historical Collections, presumes the designation to have been derived from "Atironta," another Indian who rendered much service to the pioneers of France in the New World. By some writers, as by Mr. Gallatin, in his work on the Indian tribes, the Tarratines and the Abenakis were substantially identified. Mr. Parkman, in his Jesuits in North America, says: "The Tarratines of New England writers were the Abenakis, or a portion of them." Mr. Palfrey, the historian of New England, quoting the old writer Hutchinson, considers the Tarratines as Abenakis. The Rev. Father John G. Shea, in his voluminous work on The Catholic Church in the United States, refers to the conversion to that faith of "the powerful tribe of the Abenakis, or Tarenteens, as the early English settlers called them." Gorges, however, in a passage concerning the enemies of the Bashaba, says the savages called the tribe Tarrantines. Mr. Williamson, making a rapid summary of the old authors, says they "agree that the general name of the natives upon the Penobscot was Tarrantines." Wood, in New England's Prospect, includes some interesting notices of them. He says:

* Mr. Williamson's foot-note: "They are in modern times called governor, lieutenant-governor, and captains, names borrowed from the English."

† Williamson's foot-note: The Tarratines, for instance, cut out a shallop from Dorchester, with five men in it, whom they killed.

<http://stores.ebay.com/Ancestry-Found>

The country as it is in relation to the Indians, is divided as it were into shires, every severall division being swayed by a severall king, the Indians to the east and northeast bearing the names of Churehers or Tarrentenes. . . . Take these Indians in their own trimme and naturall disposition, and they be reported to be wise, lofty-spirited, constant in friendship to one another, true in their promises, and more industrious than many other, [and so on, until] some of our English, who to uncloathe them of their beaver coates, clad them with the infection of swearing and drinking, which was never in fashion with them before, it being contrary to their nature to guzzell downe stronge drinke, until our bestial example and dishonest incitation hath brought them to it; and from overflowing cups there hath been a proceeding to revenge, murther, and overflowing of blood.

Governor Sullivan, in his History of the District of Maine, furnishes an important contribution to the history and philosophy of religion, concerning a somewhat controverted point, in the following:

The fanciful historians have said much respecting the savage's hope of felicity in fine fields beyond the gates of death, when he should meet his ancestors and be happy in a state of immortality. . . . But from any conversations had with the Indians here, or from anything which can be gathered from those who have been most with them, there is no reason to believe that the Northern savages ever had ideas of that nature.

EARLY HISTORY OF THE TARRANTINES.

When they first became known to Europeans, the Tarrantines dwelt on both sides of the Penobscot, and, with their Abenaki brethren, roamed the region westward to the Saco, if not to the Piscataquis. About one-third of the New England Indians (supposed to number fifty thousand in all) were on the soil of Maine. They came presently to be distinguished as Maine Indians; the rest were called the New England Indians, some difference of dialect further dividing the two. Samoset, the friendly savage who came suddenly upon the Plymouth colony one warm morning in February, 1621, with the assuring words, in their own tongue, "welcome, Englishmen," is believed to have been a Tarrantine, from the island of Monhegan. He was certainly a Maine Indian, and a chief. The Tarrantines became first known in our historical literature, however, as a tribe at war with the Wawenocks, their next neighbors on the west, whom they practically exterminated. In 1631 an expedition of one hundred of them took the war-path against the Massachusetts Indians, who were so afraid of the Eastern savages that they declared they never camped or slept twice together in the same place. In 1669 the dreaded Mohawks who had doubtless waged frequent war with them through the ages, their parties coming down the Penobscot from the great Canadian woods and waters—completely overcame the Tarrantines, plundered, burnt, and devastated their villages. To this day the Penobscots detest and burn with indignation at the very name of Mohawk.

The tribe was not exterminated, however, nor carried into captivity by their conquerors. They remained upon and near the Penobscot in sufficient force to form an important element in the history of early colonization in the Northeast. The Tarrantine and Passamaquoddy Indians were among the earliest converts made by the Roman Catholic missionaries east of the Mississippi. Before the advent of the Jesuits, says an old writer, "they dyed patiently, both men and women, not knowing of a hell to scare them nor a conscience to terrifie them." They were at first very friendly to the whites, except as they manifested natural indignation at the outrages perpetrated upon them by Weymouth and other explorers. The Rev. Mr. Hubbard's Narrative of the Indian Wars in New England, written in 1775, says:

Ever since the first settling of any English plantation in those parts about Kennebeck, for the space of about 50 years, the Indians always carried it fair, and held good correspondence with the English, until the news came of Phillip's rebellion and rising against the inhabitants of Plimouth colony in the end of June, 1675, after which time it was apprehended by such as had the examination of the Indians about Kennebeck that there was a general surmise amongst them that they would be required to assist the said Philip, although they would not own that they were at all engaged in the quarrel.

When the war with the French ended, in 1699, the Maine Indians, with those of New Hampshire, made a treaty with the English colonies, their sachems acknowledged for them allegiance to the English crown.

WARS AND INCIDENTS.

There was no doubt an honest intention, especially at first, on the part of many of the whites in New England, to deal justly with the Indians, and avoid occasions of war with them. The charter of Massachusetts enjoined upon the colonists that they should endeavor to win the natives to the knowledge and obedience of the only true God and Saviour, and of the Christian faith, "by force of moral example and religious efforts and instruction." Laws were passed that strong liquors, and even cider and beer, were not to be sold to them. Orders were given that any trading-house among the Indians, erected without the license of the General Court, should be destroyed. If the corn-fields and crops of the natives were injured by the cattle of the settlers, even by reason of poor fencing, the town to which the owner of the cattle belonged was to be compelled to make good the loss, unless the authorities collected the amount of damage from the owner. The Government undertook the charge of all trade with the Indians in furs, peltry, boats, or other water-craft, and commissioners were appointed by the authorities to determine all matters of controversy among them, even those which a single officer might decide in a case arising between Englishmen. On the other hand, the sale of fire-arms to the savages was strictly forbidden by royal proclamation as early as 1622. They were, however, abundantly supplied by the French, who allied the red man the more strongly to them by the liberal sale or gift of guns and gunpowder.

Friendly relations did not long subsist between the whites and the Indians. Notwithstanding official and legal guards, outrages were occasionally perpetrated by the former upon the latter, even at the outset of their intercourse, when a judicious policy, to say nothing of justice, would have dictated a different course. Five of the Indians of the Penobscot, for example, one of them a sagamore, were seized and carried away by the explorer Weymouth in 1605, and long kept in captivity. The Indians soon began reprisals, and resistance to the encroachments of the colonists. One Master Patterson, of the Sagadahoc colony, the earliest upon the soil of Maine, was killed by the Tarratines, almost at once upon his settlement. This is but one of the many examples that might be adduced.

General Samuel Veazie.

In the summer of 1631 or 1632, the Tarratines prepared for an attack upon Agawam (Ipswich), where the sagamores, having treacherously massacred a number of Tarratine families, were believed to be sheltering themselves under the wing of the English. Forty canoe-loads of Indians went thither; but their plot was betrayed to an English youth, who fired an alarm-gun and beat a drum furiously, whereupon they put to sea again without making an attack. The Tarratines, however, afterwards killed some of the Agawam Indians. About one hundred made a midnight attack upon the lodge of a sagamore near that place, and carried off his wife a prisoner to Penobscot.

According to tradition, the Tarratines took part in the war between the New England Indians and the fierce Mohawks, which raged for six or seven years; and, after the decisive battle in 1669, in which the former were defeated, the Tarratine allies were followed even to the Penobscot by their terrible enemies, who burned their villages, and otherwise did them great harm. Following this came the small-pox and other destructive diseases, which caused the death of many of the Eastern and Canadian Indians, and greatly interrupted the trade in furs. By these successive calamities the Tarratines were reduced to a mere handful. So early as November, 1726, Captain John Gyles, who professed to make an enumeration of the savages in this region, could find but one hundred and thirty, "or there about," of the Penobscot Indians, above the age of sixteen years, and but three hundred and eighty-nine natives of adult age in all Maine. The trustworthiness of his census, however, is very much to be doubted.

In 1675, the year of the opening of King Philip's war, an attempt was made to involve the Etchemin and Abenaki tribes also, which was happily frustrated. The Canibas Indians had a fort at Teconnet Falls, on the Sagadahoc, to which they had retired with their families, and remained quiet there until after the burning of Scarborough. The people then became greatly excited against the Indians, both friendly and hostile, and the settlers on Monhegan island went so far as to offer a bounty of five pounds upon every Indian head brought in. The natives at Teconnet were naturally aroused and fearful; and to quiet their fears, as well as to remove the contents of the trading-house, Captain Davis, who was in charge of an establishment some miles distant, near Arrowsick, sent a messenger with a promise that, if the Indians would remove to his settlement, they should have every needed supply at the fairest prices. The messenger proved treacherous, and told them instead that, "if they did not go down and give up their arms, the Englishmen would come and kill them." This further awakened their fears, and they abandoned the fort, but, instead of going to Davis, they fled to Penobscot and sent a runner to the Eastern tribes with a summons to a council of war at the residence of Castine, who very likely prompted the Indians to this step. Before the council could be brought about, however, Abraham Shute, of Pemaquid, chief magistrate, and a citizen of uncommon sense and usefulness, succeeded in getting a meeting of the alarmed sagamores at that place, where a truce was agreed to, and the Indians promised "to live in peace with the English, and prevent, if possible, the Anasagunticooks from committing any more depredations, either upon the settlers or traders."

MORE OF THE WARS.

It may be noted here that Iberville, with two ships and two companies of soldiers, made his expedition in 1694, to effect the reduction of Fort William Henry, at Pemaquid. He took on board Villebon with fifty Mickmacks at St. John's, and Castine with two hundred Indians in canoes joined him at Penobscot. They appeared before the fort July 14th, and the next day intimidated the commander of the garrison into a surrender. The fort was then plundered, demolished, and abandoned.

The next month Major Church reappeared in the Penobscot waters, and was informed by his pilot, John York, whom he took on board when abreast of the Mathebestuck Hills (Camden Heights), that the Indians had told him of a fort they had built upon a little island at the falls fifty or sixty miles up the stream—supposed to have been the Island Lett, now (probably) Oldtown—and that near by they "planted a great quantity of corn." Church pushed up the river in his boats to "the Bend" (Eddington), and there took to the west shore on foot for two or three miles. He passed several places where the Indians had once dwelt, killed several of the natives, and took another prisoner, who told him that the men of his tribe had gone to Canada. Church then returned, observing on his way more abandoned habitations, with corn-fields and turnip-patches and pumpkins, especially in the Isle of Penobscot, now Orphan Island. Below this he took to his ships again, and sailed for the Bay of Fundy.

October 14, 1698, after the peace of Ryswick had been concluded between England, France, and other nations involved with them in the war, the commissioners of Massachusetts met six of the eastern sagamores at Penobscot, with a great body of Indians, and arranged preliminaries of a treaty which was fully concluded at Mare Point the following January, ratifying the convention of August 11, 1693, with additional articles. The sagamores of Penobscot were not expressed, but yet were included, in the new pacification.

THE THREE-YEARS' (OR LOVEWELL'S) WAR.

This was the fourth Indian war waged in New England, and lasted from 1722 to 1725. It takes one of its names from Captain John Lovewell, or Lovell, of Dunstable, Massachusetts, hero of the famous fight near Pegwacket, at the water since called from him Lovewell's pond. The inhabitants, white and red, of Maine, New Hampshire, and Nova Scotia, were mainly involved in it, the French in Canada not taking part, through fear of breaking the peace then existing between England and France. Their intrigues and secret incitement of the Indians to make war were not wanting, however; and in June, 1722, hostilities began by a war-party of the Canibas and Anasagunticook tribes seizing nine white families settled on Merrymeeting bay.

We give only such incidents of the war as pertain to Penobscot county. All the Maine tribes were involved in the outbreak; and on the twenty-fifth of July the governor and council solemnly passed a resolution that "the Eastern Indians are traitors and robbers," and declared war upon them and their confederates as enemies of the king. The General Court met on the eighth of August, confirmed the declaration of war, and proceeded to make provision for the fight. Among other preparations for the fight, "a large scout of three hundred was appointed to destroy the Indians' strongholds and habitations at Penobscot, and a body of four hundred to range perpetually, by land or water, through the Eastern country, especially upon and between the rivers Kennebec and Penobscot." The ferocious and vindictive character of the warfare proposed may be seen from the offer of a bounty of fifteen pounds for every scalp taken from a male Indian of twelve or more years, and eight pounds for every woman or child captured.

Early in February, 1723, the Penobscot expedition was set on foot, under Colonel Thomas Westbrook, commander of the Eastern forces. On the eleventh he left Kennebec with two hundred and thirty men, in whale-boats and small sailing vessels, and scoured the coast to Mount Desert, proceeding thence up Penobscot bay and river, anchoring, it is thought, in Marsh bay, March 4th.

Disembarking his men, they marched five days through the forest, but apparently near the river, when they arrived at the supposed site of the Indian fort they sought, upon one of the several islands opposite them. The Colonel further reports:

Being obliged here to make four canoes to ferry from island to island, I dispatched fifty men upon discovery, who sent me word on the 9th that they had found the fort and waited my arrival. I left a guard of 100 men with the provisions and tents, and proceeded with the rest to join the scouting party. On ferrying over, the Indian fort appeared in full view, yet we could not come to it by reason of a swift river, and because the ice at the head of the islands would not permit the canoes to come around; therefore, we were obliged to make two more, with which we ferried over. We left a guard of 40 men on the west side of the river, to facilitate our return, and arrived at the fort, by 6 of the clock in the evening. It happened to have been deserted in the autumn preceding, when the enemy carried away every article and thing except a few papers. The fort was 70 yards in length and 50 in breadth, walled with stockades 14 feet in height, and enclosed 23 "well-finished wigwams," or, as another calls them, "houses built regular." On the south side was their chapel, in compass 60 feet by 30, handsomely and well finished, both within and on the outside. A little farther south was the dwelling-house of the priest, which was very commodious. We set fire to them all, and by sunrise next morning they were in ashes. We then returned to our nearest guards, thence to our tents; and on our arrival at our transports, we concluded we must have ascended the river about 32 miles. We reached the fort at St. George on the 20th, with the loss of only four men, Rev. Benjamin Gibson and three others, whose bodies after our arrival here we interred in usual form.

Mr. Williamson inquires, as to the point where Colonel Westbrook halted: "Was not this place the lower Stillwater, in Orono, six miles above Kenduskeag?" and, in a subsequent foot-note, discussing the question of the site of this important fortress and village, he says:

Some suppose it might have been the ancient Negas, a village on Fort Hill, situate a league above the mouth of Kenduskeag stream; for when could that have been destroyed unless at this time? Yet Col. Church makes no mention of the latter when he and his troops, in August, 1696, scoured the river, nor Maj. Livingston, who traveled up the river in November, 1710, on his way to Canada. It must have been built after the latter date, and before or during the present war. It could not have been very ancient, because the plough has turned out, since the American Revolution, many articles of iron, steel, and lead, of modern form and structure; yet, if it were quite modern, there would be some tradition of it. All that we can learn is that it was called by the first settlers in Bangor "the old French and Indian settlement" on Fort Hill. This could not be thought 32 miles from the place of Westbrook's anchorage, short as seamen's miles are over wild lands. Nor are there islands here corresponding with those he mentions. The alternative then is, the site must have been Oldtown, or the ancient Lett mentioned by Livingston. That is situated on a beautiful island, and below it are falls and a small island. Lieut. Gov. Dummer (speech, May, 1723) says: "We have demolished the fort and all the buildings at Penobscot." The village at Fort Hill was probably destroyed by Capt. Heath [in 1725].

In October of this year (1723), the Indians surprised and captured Captain Cogswell and the crew of his vessel, as they landed upon the shore of Mount Desert. After this the theatre of war was chiefly upon the St. George's and further to the southwest. In the fall of 1724, Colonel Westbrook led a new regiment of three hundred men upon a scouting expedition from the Kennebeck to the Penobscot, which got entangled in the wilderness and had to return with its object but partly accomplished. Captain Heath and his company reached the latter river the same autumn; but effected nothing of account.

The next year, however, the scene of action returned to the beautiful valley of the Penobscot. Mr. Williamson will tell the principal story of the year:

After Colonel Westbrook and his party had destroyed the principal Indian village at Penobscot, between two and three years since, the French and natives had, with a diligence unusual for them, established and built another, three leagues below, on the westerly bank of the same river. It was a pleasant, elevated, and well-chosen site, a few rods from the water, and easily fortified by stockades. It was easier of access from the salt water than the former, and was a league above the mouth of the Kenduskeag stream, which an enemy could ford with convenience only in time of drought. Hearing of this village, reputed to consist of six or seven cottages which had cellars and chimneys, a chapel, and between forty and fifty wigwams, Captain Joseph Heath, commanding at Fort Richmond, proceeded with his company in May, from Kennebeck across the country to Penobscot fell upon the deserted village of about fifty Indian houses, and committed them to the flames. The Tarratines, who were a wary people, probably had some intimation of the expedition, for the party saw none of the native inhabitants. It was a bold enterprize; but it being ascertained on their return to the garrison at St. George's river that a conference had been proposed by the Indians, the particulars were never made topics of any considerable remark. The village destroyed, situate on Fort Hill, as the English have always called it, is supposed to have been the ancient Negas. It was never repaired, the Indians afterwards returning and reseating themselves at Oldtown.

This place, as is generally known, was within the present limits of Bangor township. Mr. Williamson says in a foot note:

Being so near the head of the tide and bend of the river, above which is quick water, it was a resting-place and resort of the Indians before the village were built. The appearances of Indian cornfields in the vicinity was apparent, when the place was first settled by some of the oldest present settlers.

The sole remaining incident of the war, relating to the Penobscot county or any of its residents, is thus related by the same author :

Castine the younger was in a small bark, at anchor near Naskeag Point, (viz., the southeast point of Sedgwick), and had with him on board an Indian boy, perhaps his own son, and an English lad, by the name of Samuel Trask, belonging to Salem, whom he had redeemed from the Indians. Though he was thoughtless of evil, the moment the crew of an approaching English sloop were near enough, they fired upon him, and obliged him and the boys to quit the bark and flee into the woods for the safety of their lives. The master of the sloop, now changing his conduct and hoisting a white flag, called unto him loudly to return, offered him a safe conduct in writing, and declared he only desired to have a free trade and intercourse with him. Yet, shortly after he had ventured to go with the lads on board of the sloop, the master first threw him a bag of biscuit, and then took from him the young captive, exclaiming: "Your bark and all it contains are in fact lawful prize, and yourself might be made a prisoner; so you may now think yourself favored to go without molestation or further loss." This insult, which was duly felt, was presently aggravated by one of the crew, who, after going with them ashore, suddenly seized the Indian boy and held him fast. Castine, perceiving the clinch to be violent and unprovoked, shot the sailor dead, and escaped with the boy into the woods. The conduct of these mariners was a great reproach to them, and in every respect the height of impolicy; for the Indians were now entertaining thoughts of peace, and Castine, who still possessed great influence among them, had more than once attested his magnanimity by instances of friendship and a forbearing spirit towards the English.

The following incident succeeding one of the wars is also related by Mr. Williamson :

But the most memorable engagement of any hitherto since the war happened, May 1st, at the St. George river. It being an inviting morning, April 30th, Captain Josiah Winslow, commander of the fort, selected sixteen of the ablest men belonging to the garrison, and in a couple of staunch whale-boats proceeded down the river, and thence to the Green Islands in Penobscot bay, which at this season of the year were frequented by the Indians for fowling. Though Winslow and his companions made no discovery, their movements were watched by the wary enemy; and on their return the next day, as they were ascending the river, they fell into a fatal ambush of the Indians, cowering under each of its banks. They permitted Winslow to pass, and then fired into the other boat, which was commanded by Harvey, a sergeant, and was nearer the shore. Harvey fell. A brisk discharge of musquetry was returned upon the assailants, when Winslow, observing the imminent exposure of his companions, though he was himself out of danger, hastened back to their assistance. In an instant he found himself surrounded by thirty canoes and threefold that number of armed savages, who raised a hideous whoop and fell upon the two boat-crews with desperate fury. The skirmish was severe and bloody; when Winslow and his men, perceiving inevitable death to be the only alternative, resolved to sell their lives at the dearest rate. They made a most determined and gallant defence; and, after nearly all of them were dead or mortally wounded, himself having his thigh fractured and being extremely exhausted, his shattered bark was set to the shore. Here being waylaid, he fought a savage hand to hand with the greatest personal courage, beat off the foe, and then, resting on his knee, shot one ere they could dispatch him. Thus fell the intrepid Winslow and every one of his brave company, except three friendly Indians, who were suffered to escape and communicate particulars to the garrison. The Narratives, who were rather a valiant than a cruel people, composed the Indian party; and their loss, though never known, is supposed to have doubled ours. In this action, inconsiderable as were the numbers engaged, there was a remarkable display on both sides of boldness and good conduct. The death of Captain Winslow was severely felt and lamented. He was a young officer of military talents and great worth, a late graduate of Harvard college, and a descendant of one of the best families in the province.

ANOTHER INTERESTING NARRATIVE, somewhat related to the Penobscot country, but dating back more than two hundred years, to the fall of 1676, is also derived from Williamson's History:

The story of Thomas Cobbet, one of the captives taken the last autumn at Richmond Island, who returned home with Captain Moore, is worthy of particular mention. His father was the minister of Ipswich. After being wounded by a musket-shot, his hands were fast tied, and in the division of the captives it was his most unfortunate lot to be assigned to an Indian of the worst character. Young Cobbet's first duty was to manage the captured ketch of Fryer, in sailing to Sheepscot, and from that place to paddle a canoe, carrying his master and himself, to Penobscot, and thence to their hunting ground at Mount Desert. He suffered the extremes of cold, fatigue, and famine; and because he could not understand the Indian dialect, the savage often drew his knife upon him, threatening him with instant death. In hunting on a day of severe cold, he fell down in the snow, benumbed, famished, and senseless. Here he must have perished, had not the more humane hunters conveyed him to a wigwam and restored him. At another time his savage master was drunk five successive days, in which he was fearfully raving like a wild beast. To such an alarming degree did he beat and abuse his own squaws, that Cobbet, who knew himself to be much more obnoxious than they to his fury, fled into the woods to save his life; where he made a fire, formed a slender covert, and the squaws fed him.

At the end of nine weeks the Indians had a great powwow, and his master sent him to Mons. Castine for ammunition to kill moose and deer. He arrived at a most opportune hour, just before Mugg's departure to Teconnet, who readily called him by name. "Ah," said Mugg, "I saw your father when I went to Boston, and I told him his son should return. He must be released according to treaty." "Yes," replied Madockawando, "but the captain must give me the fine coat he has in the vessel; for his father is a great preach-man, or chief speaker, among Englishmen." This request was granted, and young Cobbet saw his demoniac master no more.

GYLES'S CAPTIVITY AMONG THE PENOBSCOTS.

In the early part of August, 1689, an attack was made by a war-party from Penobscot upon the fort at Pemaquid, which was captured. Judge Thomas Gyles, chief justice of the district, was seized upon his farm, three miles from Jamestown, and tomahawked, while most of his family were carried off into captivity. One of the sons, taken into the Penobscot country, left a narrative of the massacre and his subsequent adventures, from which Mr. Rufus King Sewall has made an abridgment in his Ancient Dominions of Maine. We extract the following:

At Mattawamkeag, up the Penobscot, they encountered a lodge of dancing women. Young Gyles was flung into the midst of the circle. An old squaw led him into the ring, when some seized him by the hair of the head and others by his hands and feet, with great violence and menaces of evil. At this moment his master entered and bought the child off from the horrors of the gauntlet dance, by flinging down a pledge.

Gyles, the second year of his captivity, was sent toward the sea, with other natives, to plant corn near the fort.

On reaching the village of wigwams, he was greeted by three or four Indians, who dragged him to the great wigwam, where, with savage yells and dances, the warriors were leaping about a James Alexander, recently captured at Falmouth. Two families of Sable Indians, whose friends had been lost by the attacks of English fishermen, had reached this point, on a scout westward, to avenge the blood of their slaughtered friends. These savages were thirsting for the blood of an Englishman. They rushed upon Gyles and tossed him into the ring. He was then dragged out by the hair of his head, his body bent forward by the same painful process, when he was cruelly beaten over his head and shoulders. Others, putting a tomahawk into his hands, bid him "sing and dance Indian." The Sable Indians again rushed upon him in great rage, crying, "Shall we who have lost relatives by the English suffer an English voice to be heard among us?" He was beaten with an axe. No one showed a spark of humanity save a Frenchman, whose cheeks were wet with tears of pity at the sorrows of the captive white man.

The trials of this scene lasted a whole day. Another dance was projected. Gyles had been sent out to dress a skin for the manufacture of leather. A friendly Indian sought him at his place of labor, and warned him that his friend Alexander had fallen into the hands of his enemies again, and they were searching for him. His master and mistress bade him fly and hide himself till they both should come and call him, which they would do when the peril was ended. Gyles retired and sought concealment in the fastnesses of a neighboring swamp, and had scarcely attained his refuge when deafening whoops, mingled with threats and flatteries, told him that the savages were on his track. They sought him till evening, and then called—'Chon, Chon!' But Chon would not trust them. Thus he escaped till the company had dispersed; when he went forth from his covert, assured of his safety by the appearance of his master and mistress.

Onerous and servile duties were required of captives. One of these, in the case of Gyles and Alexander, was that of "toting" water from a cool and distant spring to the village lodge.

Wearied with toil, in the language of Gyles, "being almost dead, James and I continued to relieve our toil by frightening the Indians."

At this period the Mohawks were a great source of alarm to the Eastern tribes, the rumor of whose alliance with the English had now generally obtained. The traditions of this race were a commentary of deeds of daring and success, handed down from remote periods in the history of the aborigines of the American coast.

The two prisoners adroitly turned this infirmity of their savage masters to good account, on a dark night.

Alexander having been sent out for water, set his kettle on the brow of the declivity, ran back to the lodges and told his master he feared there were Mohawks lurking near the spring below, which, by the way, was environed with stumps.

The braves of the tribe, with the master, accompanied the captive Alexander on a reconnoissance. Approaching the brow of the hillside, whereon the kettle sat, James, pointing to the stumps, gave it a kick with his foot, by which his toe sent the iron vessel down the declivity toward the spring; and every turn of the revolving bucket reared a Mohawk on every stump, the clatter of whose arms was the signal of preparation for battle; and he who could run fastest was the best fellow! The result was a regular stampede of 30 or 40 warriors into the interior forests, beyond the reach "of strange Indians."

Natural admiration is excited in view of acts of personal courage and physical prowess, and this would seem to be a spontaneous development of the human mind.

At one time Gyles, during his captivity, encountered an ill-natured savage. He had been cutting wood, which was bound up with thongs and borne in bundles to the wigwam. While thus engaged, a stout, ill-natured young fellow pushed him upon the ground backwards, sat upon his breast, pulled out his knife and menaced him with death, saying, "he never had yet killed one of the English."

Gyles replied, "he might go to war, and that would be more manly than to kill a poor captive who was doing their drudgery." But the savage began to cut and stab him on the breast, in defiance of all expostulation. Provoked to desperation, Gyles seized the Indian by the hair of his head, and tumbling him off, followed up the movement with his knees and fists, till copper-skin cried "enough." On feeling the smart of his wounds, and seeing the blood which fell from his bosom, "Gyles at him again," bade him get up and not lie there like a dog; reproached him with his barbarities and cowardly cruelties to other poor captives, and put him on his good behavior hereafter, on the peril of a double dose of fist and boot cuffs.

Gyles was never after molested, and was commended by the tribe for inflicting the merited chastisement.

Metallic vessels for culinary use were not required by the natives among whom Gyles was a captive. A birchen bucket filled with water, heated by the immersion of red-hot stones, would speedily boil the toughest neck-pieces of beef.

The necessity of lucifer matches was forestalled by rapidly revolving the sharpened point of an upright piece of wood in the socket or cavity of a horizontal base, till a blaze was kindled.

The incantations of the powwow, among the unchristianized natives, prevailed. For the dead great mourning was made. In the shadowy and sombre stillness of evening twilight, a squaw breaks the silence, wandering over the highest cliff-tops near her lodge, crying in mournful and long drawn numbers,—“Oh, hawe-hawe!”

But, the season of mourning being ended, the relatives of the dead end their sad memories in a feast, and the bereaved is permitted to marry again. Purchased by a French trader, during the Eastern expedition of Colonel Hawthorne, Gyles, after a servitude of nine years, was restored to his home and surviving friends, and for many years served his Government in the capacity of an Indian interpreter and in the army. The elder brother of Gyles, after three years of captivity, attempted to escape and was retaken. On the heights of Castine, overlooking the waters of Penobscot bay, he was tortured by fire at the stake; his nose and ears were cut off and forced into his mouth, which he was compelled to eat; and then he was burnt as a diversion to enliven the scene of a dance.

A MODERN AFFAIR.

The following incident, of comparatively recent date, is given by Mr. Williamson, in the first volume of his History of Maine:

Among the natives the law of retaliation is considered a dictate of nature, always justifiable. The vile, they think, are deterred from the commission of crimes through the perpetual fear of the avenger, if they transgress. An Indian was never known to ask redress through the medium of our laws and courts, for an injury done him by one of his tribe. Nor was there an instance, till quite lately, where a white man ever sued an Indian in a civil action. But prosecutions have frequently been instituted at law upon complaints, both of the Englishman and the Indian, for crimes committed by either against the other.

The trial and story of Peol Susup, so much in point, may be retold. About sunset, June 28, 1816, this Indian's turbulence and noise, in the tavern of William Knight, at Bangor, became intolerable, and the inn-keeper thrust him out of the door, and endeavored to drive him away. The Indian, instantly turning in a great rage, pursued him to the steps with a drawn knife, and gave him a deep wound, just below his shoulder-blade, of which he presently died.

On his arrest, Susup frankly said, "I have killed Knight, and I ought to die; but I was in liquor and he abused me, or I never had done it."

After an imprisonment till the June term of the Supreme Judicial Court, at Castine, the subsequent year, he was arraigned on an indictment for murder, to which he pleaded "not guilty." A day was consumed in the trial, amidst a concourse which crowded the meeting-house, and, according to the position urged by his counsel, the verdict was "manslaughter."

The Court then said to him, "Susup, have you anything now to say for yourself?"—"John Neptune," said he, "will speak for me." That Indian then stepped forward from the midst of his associates, towards the judges, and deliberately addressed them in an impressive speech of several minutes. He spake in broken English, yet every word was distinctly heard and easily understood. His questions were frequent and forcible; his manner solemn; and a breathless silence pervaded the whole assembly. He began: "You know your people do my Indians great deal of wrong. They abuse them very much; yes, they murder them; then they walk right off—nobody touches them. This makes my heart burn. Well, then, my Indians say, 'we'll go kill your very bad and wicked men.' 'No,' I tell 'em, 'never do that thing; we are brothers.' Some time ago a very bad man about Boston shot an Indian dead. Your people said, 'surely he should die;' but not so. In the great prison-house he eats and lives to this day; certain he never dies for killing Indian. My brothers say, 'let that bloody man go free;—Peol Susup too.' So we wish; hope fills the hearts of us all. Peace is good. These, my Indians, love it well; they smile under its shade. The white man and red man must be always friends; the Great Spirit is our Father; I speak what I feel."

Susup was sentenced to another year's imprisonment, and required to find sureties for keeping the peace two years, in the penal sum of five hundred dollars; when John Neptune and Squire Jo Merry Neptune, of his own tribe, Captain Solmond, from Passamaquoddy, and Captain Jo Tomer, from the river St. John, became his sureties in the recognizance.

THE TARRATINE CHIEFS—THE BASHABA.

Some mention of this chief potentate of the Eastern Indians will fitly come in here. He is named very early in the New England literature by Captain John Smith, and it is not unlikely that the name is one of this romancer's pure inventions, as it is strongly reminiscent of "bashaw," a title with which he must have become sufficiently familiar during his Turkish experience. The counsellors or wise men of the tribes were the sachems; the chief of these, or the chief magistrate, was the sagamore; and the chief of the sagamores, or ruler over all the tribes, was the Bashaba.

"We have no account," says Belknap, author of the History of New Hampshire, "of any other Indian chief in these Northern parts whose authority was so extensive."

"He is a great governor," said Captain Francis, one of the Tarratine chiefs. "He had under him," wrote Gorges, "many great sagamores, some of whom had a thousand or fifteen hundred bowmen;" and in another place: "He seemed to be of some eminence above the rest in all that part of the continent."

Some writers, as Palfrey, affirm difference in rank between the sachems and the sagamores, saying that the former were superior; others, as Gookin, say the titles were equivalent or correspondent. Dudley, while remarking their equivalence, says the chiefs of the Northern Indians were called sagamores; those further south were sachems.

The dominion of the Bashaba was altogether in "Mavoshen," the present Maine. The Saco, says Purchas, in the Pilgrims, "is the westernmost river of the dominions of Bashebez;" and again: "To the easternmost of Sagadahock, this is the Bashaba's dominion." Smith rather doubtfully asserts, however, that, though the tribes as far westward as Naumkeag (Salem) had their own sachems, "they hold the Bashaba to be chief, and the greatest among them." Gorges and other New England writers are probably more nearly correct in representing the Massachusetts Indians as allies rather than subjects of the Bashaba, although sometimes they changed to deadly enemies. Some writers, as Williamson, would restrict his dominion on the eastward to St. George's; but the strong probability, if not reasonable certainty, is that it included the Penobscot country. Indeed, Bryant & Gay, in their Popular History, plainly say that "this great lord of the Penobscot country was called the Bashaba; but, although a good many names of local sagamores of distinction are mentioned in the early annals, nobody ever had an interview with the veritable Bashaba.

It is probable that the term bashaba merely indicated the sagamore who happened at different times to enjoy the ascendancy among the Penobscot tribes."

The Hon. Judge Godfrey, of Bangor, in a brief essay on "Bashaba and the Tarratines," in the seventh volume of the Maine Historical Collections, expresses the view that Bashaba was not a title, but the individual name of a chief, and supports his theory quite strongly. He identifies "the Bashaba" with "Bessabes," mentioned by Champlain simply as a captain or chief of the savages who had led him to the "rapids of Norumbega," above Bangor, the other chief who met him being "Cabahis." The same dignitary, he thinks, is named in the Jesuit Relation of 1611 as Betsabes, the "Sagamo of Kadesquit" (Bangor), and one of the Indian captains, the others being Oguigueou and Asticon. He, says the Relation, when the priests at Mt. Desert "made as though the place did not please us, and that we should go to another part," "himself came for us to allure us by a thousand promises, having heard that we proposed to go there [to Kadesquit] to dwell." According to Lescarbot, Bessabes or Bashaba was killed by the English, and Asticon became his successor.

His capital, or place of residence, is scarcely less in discussion. Gorges says: "His chief abode was not far from Pemaquid." Smith, Purchas, and others, suppose that he lived towards or near the Penobscot Bay; and Williamson, latest of the historians, avers that "his place of immediate residence was probably between that river [the Pemaquid] and Penobscot Bay." Mr. Folsom, in his historical discourse published in the Maine Historical Collections, says: "The place of his residence was probably on the banks of the Penobscot; and, as it was also the seat of his government, the fabulous assertions of a large city in that quarter may have arisen from an exaggerated description of the humble capital of the Bashaba's dominions." An old tradition fixed the aboriginal seat of power in "Norumbega," by which name the Maine country was first known abroad and also early on the old maps, in a town—some say great city—on the east side of the Penobscot river, about opposite the site of Bangor; and the Indians of that region, when first met by the white men, also referred to a site of ancient rule somewhere in the interior. Stachey says in one place: "Early in the morning the salvages departed in their canoes for the river of Pemaquid, promising Capt. Gilbert to accompany him in their canoes to the river of Penobscot, where the bassaba dwells." The indications are that the Bashaba's capital, if anything more than an ordinary Indian village, in the course of generations or centuries had removed from the north to the coast about or a little above the mouth of the Penobscot, and thence gradually westward.

The Bashaba was not unlike more civilized princes, in that he expected the courtesy of a call from other potentates or from strangers who entered his realm. The Bashaba expected, says Gorges, in his Description of New England, "all strangers to have their address to him, and not he to them." When the colony of Gorges and Popham arrived at Sagadahoc, in 1607, it was cordially received by the natives, and some of the sagamores offered to accompany the English to the Bashaba, saying that he was a mighty prince, ruling all the sachems from Penobscot to Piscataqua, and that all visitors to his domains were expected to pay him their respects. Popham, President of the Colony Council, accordingly proceeded some leagues along the coast toward Pemaquid, near which the dignitary dwelt; but was driven back by head winds and bad weather. The Bashaba, informed of this, sent his own son to return the intended visit, and open trade with the company in furs and peltry. The utmost courtesy and kindness were shown the strangers, although Weymouth had but a short time before forcibly seized and carried away several natives from the coast. In September of the same year several Penobscot chiefs, coming in canoes, were entertained by Popham at the Pemaquid fort. They, says the account, "besought Captain Gilbert to accompany them in their canoes to the river of Penobscot, where the Bashaba dwelt."

When Weymouth's expedition was on the coast, in 1605, one party of Indians, pointing eastward, endeavored to prompt him to a visit by signifying that "the Bashebe, their king, had plenty of furs and much tobacco;" and again, when Weymouth's pinnace was on its return to the ship from the journey up the Penobscot, as is supposed, three Indians came in a canoe from the eastern part of the bay, one of whom, says the captain in his journal, "we had before seen, and this coming was very earnestly to importune us to let one of our men go with them to the Bashebe, and then the next morning he could come to our ship with furs and tobacco." Weymouth, however, was naturally suspicious of treachery, as he had seized five of the Maine Indians, and had them at that moment in the hold. He therefore resisted all inducements and invitations of the savages to visit their great Mogul. Captain Smith, who tells the same story, with considerable embellishment, in his History of New England, also says that he was urged by the natives about St. George's to visit and pay his respects to their prince.

The one now living (in 1608) must have been the last of the Bashabas. A terrible war broke out about 1615, between the Tarratines, or Penobscot Indians, and the tribes to the westward, "on account," says Hubbard, "of some treachery committed by the western tributaries of the Bashaba, a great Indian prince, towards the Tarratines." The latter began hostilities, it is believed, in the early spring of 1615, and carried the war into the enemy's country. For two years it raged fiercely, and ended only in the death of the Bashaba, whose sacred person and capital were not exempt from attack, the laying waste of his immediate domains, and the seizure and carrying away of all his women and valuable effects. He had no successor, and the power of the Abenakis was hopelessly broken. Mr. Williamson says of this struggle :

This war, not only in its course, but consequences, was, we are told, uncommonly destructive. The vanquished had been called from their hunting grounds, and prevented likewise from planting and fishing; their habitations were destroyed, and famine and distress soon filled the country with misery. Add to these the calamities of a civil war—for the subordinate sachems, having no federal head or superior to control and unite them, after the death of the Bashaba many of the chief men fell into bloody feuds among themselves.

To these distresses succeeded a pestilence, which spread far and wide, and was exceedingly fatal. It has been called the plague. It raged in the years 1617 and 1618, and its wasting effects extended from the borders of the Tarratines, through the whole country, to the Narragansetts. The people died suddenly, and in great numbers, through the whole intermediate coast. It is said some native tribes became extinct, and their bones were seen years afterwards by the English bleaching above ground, at and around the places of their former habitations. The specific disease is not certainly known. Some have thought it was probably the small-pox; others have believed it must have been the yellow fever, from the circumstance that the surviving Indians represented the bodies of the sick and dead to have assumed an appearance resembling a yellow-colored garment.

LATER TARRATINE CHIEFS.

After the Bashaba, whoever or whatever he may have been, we have but few accounts of the chiefs or sagamores. One of the most famous in Maine at the time of King Philip's war was Madockawando, adopted son of a renowned chief and reputed orator, Assiminasqua, who was in his day sagamore of the Canibas, another of the Abenaki tribes. Madockawando was father-in-law of Baron Castine, if the latter ever really married his daughter, who lived with the Frenchman upon the footing of a wife. He is said to have been a sagacious, serious man who, like Squando, the contemporaneous sagamore of the Sokokies, claimed to have supernatural visions and revelations. His first officer or principal adviser was Mugg or Mogg, who is considered by Williamson "the most cunning Indian of the age." Mugg derived great advantage during the troubles between the English and the Indians, from his former residence in English families and his acquaintance with the English language and habits. Shortly after the war with King Philip broke out, Captain Fryer, of Portsmouth, was attacked with his crew at Richmond island, where they were loading a vessel with valuable property, to keep it from being plundered by the savages. Fryer was wounded, and all were taken prisoners. Mugg, after making an attack upon the garrison at Wells, in which he killed two persons and did considerable mischief, carried Fryer, then dying of his wounds, to Piscataqua, and proposed on behalf of his master to negotiate a peace. Madockawando had originally been opposed to the war, as he was untroubled by the English, and his people were carrying on a profitable trade with the French at Castine's post; it is probable, therefore, that the offer of Mugg, so far, at least, as it represented his superior's views, was sincere. Mugg was sent on to Boston; and there, November 6, 1875, on behalf of Madockawando and another chief named Cheberina, he did negotiate a treaty with the Governor and Council, providing, chiefly, that all acts of hostility should cease, that all English captives, vessels, and goods should be restored, and that the Penobscot sachems should take arms against the Anasagunticooks and any other Eastern Indians that should persist in the war. An English officer was sent in a vessel with Mugg to Penobscot, where Madockawando ratified the treaty and delivered up such captives as were at hand. Only part of the whole number, however, were returned; there was bad faith otherwise on the part of the Indians; and hostilities were renewed by the English in February at Mare Point, Pemaquid, Arrowsick, and other places. After an attack upon Wells, the garrison at Black Point was besieged, May 16th, "with an uncommon boldness and pertinacity," says Williamson. A three-days' siege ensued, with very sharp fighting, during which Mugg was killed. Williamson continues:

The loss of this leader so damped the courage of his companions that they, in despair of victory, departed. Mogg had alternately brightened and shaded his own character, until the most skilful pencil would find it difficult so draw its just portrait. To the English this remarkable native was friend or foe, and among his own people counsellor, peacemaker, fighter, or emissary, just as self-interest or the particular occasion might dictate. His address was inspiring, and his natural good sense and sagacity partially inclined him to be an advocate for peace.

The poet Whittier, in his versified legend of Mogg Megone, gives this description of the equipment of the famous lieutenant of Madockawando:

Megone hath his knife, and hatchet, and gun,
And his gaudy and tasselled blanket on;
His knife hath a handle with gold inlaid,
And magic words on its polished blade—
'Twas the gift of Castine to Mogg Megone,
For a scalp or twain from the Yengees torn;
His gun was the gift of the Tarratine,
And Madockawando's wives had strung
The brass and the beads which tinkle and shine
On the polished breech, and broad, bright line
Of beaded wampum around it hung.

Madockawando himself has afterwards more prominence in history, but not for some years. In 1689 he led a party of several Indians, with an interpreter, from Penobscot to Boston, to represent to the authorities that Castine was greatly enraged with the English for plundering his farm-house, and that there was reason to apprehend another terrible war. The sagamore was very kindly received, laded with presents, and sent home in the colony sloop, with an apologetic letter to the irate Frenchman. The previous year Madockawando had given his voice at the outset against the outbreak which resulted in King William's war, and agreed to negotiate a treaty, in which it is thought the Eastern tribes would have joined; but all were overruled by the influence of Castine, and the war opened at North Yarmouth the next August. In 1690 he again appears, as joint leader with Castine of a force of natives going from the eastward to reinforce the French and Indians being collected at Casco Bay to attack Falmouth, which resulted in the fall of the place, the capture of Fort Loyal, and the partial massacre of the garrison, with many of the women and children. Two years later the third Eastern expedition of Major Benjamin Church brought him into this sagamore's country. He landed a party on the Seven Hundred Acre Island, in Penobscot Bay, and was there informed by some Frenchmen, who were living with their families and Indian wives upon the island, that a great number of the savages were on a neighboring (probably Long) island, and that they hastened away in their canoes as soon as they saw the ships of Church. They could not be pursued past the peninsula without small boats, which Church had not in sufficient number; so he seized five Indians, with a lot of corn and beaver and moose-skins, and set sail for Pemaquid. Madockawando, with other chiefs, had become greatly exasperated by the outrages committed on these expeditions, and in August he visited Count Frontenac at Quebec, presented five English prisoners, for which he received a reward, and made an agreement that Frontenac should send two ships-of-war and two hundred Canadians to Penobscot, while he joined them there with two to three hundred Indians. The united force would then devastate the coast below Penobscot, and destroy the new Fort William Henry at Pemaquid. Information of this plan was sent to Boston by Nelson English, Governor of Nova Scotia after its conquest by Phips, but now in captivity at Quebec; and steps were taken to meet it. In the late autumn the French ships and men, under Iberville, arrived at Penobscot and were joined by Villebon and a large force of Indians. All proceeded together to Fort William Henry; but, finding it strongly built and defended, and an English vessel at anchor under its guns, the expedition returned without an attack, the savages, it is said, fiercely stamping the ground in their disappointment. The next year, August 11, 1693, after a vigorous campaign by the English under Major Converse, all the Eastern tribes came into the new garrison at Pemaquid by their representatives, and negotiated a treaty. Among the thirteen sagamores signing this convention appear the hieroglyphics of Madockawando and another chief of the Tarratines, called Abenquid. War soon broke out afresh, however, under the instigation of the Jesuit missionaries, inspired by Frontenac; and in July, 1694, Madockawando again comes to the front as one of three subordinate leaders, under the Sieur de Villieu, now resident commander at Penobscot, of a force of two hundred and fifty Indians, which attacked and destroyed Dover, New Hampshire, plundered other settlements farther away, returned to Maine and made a desperate attack upon Kittery, where they killed eight persons, but seem to have retired unsuccessful. With these exploits Madockawando's career as a warrior probably ended. He died soon after, as did "other sachems of the East," according to Cotton Mather, "victims to the grievous unknown disease, which consumed them [the Indians] wonderfully."

At various times during the last century, in signatures to treaties negotiated with the English, we meet with the names of chiefs of the Tarratines—in these instruments always called the Penobscot Indians. Thus, Wenemouett appears as the chief sachem of the Penobscots in August, 1726, signing Governor Dummer's treaty at Falmouth, with Espegneet as second chief, whose signature also appears under date June 17, 1727. The treaty of October 16, 1749, was signed on behalf of the same tribe by Eger Emmet, Nagamumba, Nictumbouit, Esvargoosaret, and Nemoon. Three years later a single head man or chief, who rejoiced in the English or French title of Colonel Louis, was the negotiator of a treaty as representative of the Penobscots. This Colonel Lewis, on this occasion of meeting the Massachusetts commissioners at St. George's, said, among other things: "We have had great and long experience of Captain Bradley's friend. The lieutenant is a good truck-master. It would do your hearts good to see how kind he is to us, and how justly he treats us." He asked for a shelter by the mill, to provide for drunken Indians who lay out over night, also for a bridge, and a causeway over Long Meadow, on the road or trail to the mills. Orders were given by the commissioners that the desired house and bridge should be built by Captain Bradley. A blacksmith was asked for also, and the attention of the Government to the matter was promised. A belt of wampum was given to Louis to lodge at Penobscot with a copy of the treaty.

We are not aware that anything further is known of these minor heroes of history. Of Joseph Orono, however, one of the later chiefs, much more is known. From a sketch contributed by the historian Williamson to the Massachusetts Historical Collections, many years ago, we extract the following:

Joseph Orono, the subject of this sketch, was for a long time the well-known chief of the Tarratine Indians, on the river Penobscot. But, though he was only an Indian sagamore, his name, for the merits of his character, is worthy of remembrance and respect. His ancestry, as well as the exact number of his years, is involved in some doubt. For there are no family names among the natives, by which the lineage of any individual can be traced, as a son inherits no name of his father.

There has been a story that he was a native of York, in this State, born about the year 1688; that his paternal name was Donmel, and that he was one of the captive children taken in the winter of 1692, when that place was ravaged by the Indians. But this account is improbable; as the Northern Indians and those of the Merrimac and Androscoggin made the attack, and soon afterwards sent back to the garrison-houses the elderly women and the children between the ages of three and seven years, in recompense to the English for previously sparing the lives of several Indian females and children at Pejepscot. At that time, moreover, the Donnel family was one of the most distinguished in the province, Samuel being the same year one of the council, and his brother a man of considerable note. So that, if a son of either of them had been taken captive, it is probable he was returned or recovered; or, at least, there would have been some traditional account of his being carried away. But no such report, even in York, has come down to this generation; and Capt. Joseph Munsell, of Bangor, now in his 88th year, says the story has no foundation in fact, and has been treated by the intelligent Indians with derision.

Another account, equally amusing, and more evident, is that Orono was the descendant of Bason de Castine, a French nobleman who, soon after the treaty of Breda, in 1667, located himself on the peninsula of the town which now bears his name, and married a daughter of the celebrated Madockawando, a Tarratine chief of the age. It is true that Castine resided many years at that place, and carried on a very lucrative trade with the natives; that he had three or four Tarratine wives, one being that sagamore's daughter; and that of his several children, one was "Castine the younger," a very worthy man, and another, a very beautiful daughter, who married a Frenchman, and was with her children, in 1704, taken captive. One of these, it has been supposed, was Orono; yet this rests too much on mere probability and conjecture to deserve entire belief.

But, whatever may have been the lineage or extraction of Orono, it is certain he was white in part, a half-breed or more—such being apparent in his stature, features, and complexion. He himself told Captain Munsell his father was a Frenchman and his mother was half French and half Indian; but who they were by name he did not state. Orono had not the copper colored countenance, the sparkling eyes, the high cheek-bones, tawny features of a pristine native. On the contrary, his eyes were of a bright blue shade, penetrating and full of intelligence and benignity. His hair, when young, was brown, perhaps approaching to an auburn cast; his face was large, broad, and well-formed, of a sickly whiteness, susceptible of ready blushes, and remarkably sedate. In his person he was tall, straight, and perfectly proportioned; and in his gait there was a gracefulness which of itself evinced his superiority. He did not incline his head forward, nor his feet inward, so much as Indians usually do. But what principally gave him distinction was his mind, his manners, and his disposition. For Orono was a man of good sense and great discernment;—in mood thoughtful, in conversation reserved, in feelings benign. Hence he never allowed himself to speak till he had considered what to say, always expressing his thoughts in short sentences, directly to the point. He had not much learning, being only able to read a little and write his name. But he could converse freely in three languages—the Indian, French, and English; perhaps, also, understood some Latin phrases in the Romish litany. To the Catholic religion he was strongly attached, and also to its forms of worship. Hence the Rev. Daniel Little, of Kennebeck, a Protestant missionary to the tribe after the Revolution, unable to shake his faith, asked three times, before he could get an answer from the sedate chief, thus: "In what language do you pray?" With a gravity much more becoming than that of the missionary, he very reverently, raising his eyes a little, replied, "No matter what,—Great Spirit knows all languages."

Orono's manners were both conciliating and commanding, and his habits worthy of all imitation. For he was not only honest, chaste, temperate, and industrious; his word was sacred, and his friendship unchanging. He was remarkable for his forethought and wisdom, for his mild and equal disposition. Though he was not deficient in courage or any of the martial virtues, he was so fully aware how much wars had wasted his tribe and entailed misery on the survivors, as to become, from principle, a uniform and persevering advocate of peace. He knew, and always labored to convince his people, that they flourished best and enjoyed most under its refreshing shade.

At the commencement of the French and sixth Indian war, in 1754, Tomastus (or Tamor) was at the head of the tribe, when he, Osson, Orono, and other chief men, so warmly espoused the policy of perpetuating peace, as to prevent the commission of any mischief by their people, till after the Casgill affair and the declaration of war against them by the provincial government. The fact was that Captain James Casgill, of Newcastle, commissioned to raise a company of volunteers, enlisted and led them on an excursion into the woods towards Owl's

Head, in the vicinity of Penobscot Bay. Discovering a party of Indian hunters, Casgill and his company instantly fired upon them, shot down twelve on the spot, and took their scalps, the rest fleeing for their lives to the tribe, carried to it the tidings of the bloody and wicked transaction. Casgill was generally and highly censured by the white people, it being believed he must have known the unhappy hunters belonged to the tribe of the friendly Tarratines.

Never were the feelings of the tribe put to severer trial. For the provincial governor, perplexed at the nefarious affair, sent a message to the sagamores, stating that it was impossible to distinguish between their Indians and others, and that they must, within eight days, according to the last treaty, send twenty men to join in the war against the common enemy, or their tribe would be treated as belligerent foes.

"What! take arms in aid of men who had themselves broken the treaty,—base men, whose hands are reeking with the blood of unoffending Indians? Aunt-ah, aunt-ah no! no!," cried the chief speaker in a council met on the occasion. "Send the war-whoop! Strike through the false-hearted white men! Burn to ashes their wives,—their wigwams, too! Take blood for blood! The spirits of our murdered brothers call to us for revenge. The winds howl to us from the wilderness. Sister widows cry,—orphans too. Do not Indians feel? Cut their veins; do they not bleed? The moose bellows over wasted blood. The bear licks the bleeding wounds of its cub. O Metank-senah! Metank-senah! Our Father, our Heavenly Father, pity our mourners. Avenge ill-treated Indians. Our fathers told us, Englishmen came here, a great many, many moons ago. They had no lands, no wigwams,—nothing. Then our good fathers say, 'come, hunt in our woods; come, fish in our rivers; come, warm by our fires.'" So they catch very great many salmon,—other fishes too. They stay among us always. They call Indians good brothers. They smile in our faces. They make wick-hegin [writings], to live here with us,—all one, the same people. They signed them, as they call it,—our fathers, too. Then Englishmen call the lands their own. Our fathers meant no such thing. Certain, they never leave their children to starve. Englishman always smiles when he gets advantage. Then he loves us all greatly. When he wants nothing of Indians, he don't love 'em so much. Frenchmen never get away our lands. They sell us guns,—powder too,—and great many things. They give us down weight, full measure. They open our eyes to religion. They speak to us, in dark days, good words of advice. Englishmen rob us. They kill our brothers, when their hearts were warm with friendship,—when sweet peace was melting on their lips. We give them homes. They put the flaming cup to our mouths. They shed our blood. Did ever Englishmen come to Indian's wigwam faint, and go away hungry? Never. Where shall Indians go? Here we were born. Here our fathers died. Here their bodies rest. Here, too, we live. Arise. Join Frenchmen. Fight Englishmen. They shall die. They shall give place to Indians. This land, this river, is ours. Hunt Englishmen all off the ground. Then shall Indians be free; then the ghosts of our fathers bless their sons."

The voice of Orono, himself then more than sixty years of age, was still for peace. "To kill the living will not bring the dead to life. The crimes of few nevet sprinkle blood on all. Strike the murderers. Let the rest be quiet. Peace is a voice of the Great Spirit. Every one is blessed under its wings. Everything withers in war. Indians are killed. Squaws starve. Nothing is gained, not plunder, not glory. Englishmen are now too many. Let the hatchet lay buried. Smoke the calumet once more. Strive for peace. Exact a recompense by treaty for wrongs done us. None! ay, then fight 'em."

But the young Indians panted for war, revenge and glory; and as the Government soon proclaimed that hostilities actually existed against the Tarratines, all hopes of any immediate pacification were dissipated. At first the Indians made some violent attacks, killed several people and burned a few houses. But they were neglected by the French; time, war, and disease, they found, had greatly thinned their ranks; in the course of three years they became discouraged,—such a period being always long enough to satisfy Indian warriors; and in 1759 the tribe was literally overawed by the establishment of Fort Pownall, on the westerly banks of Penobscot Bay. Therefore, in April of the next year, they entered into a treaty with the provincial government, and made war upon the colonists no more.

He, Osson, died about the beginning of the American Revolution. During the preceding interval of peace, Orono, next to Osson in political power, had, by his ability and prudence, acquired the confidence of his people so entirely that they united and made him chief soon after the other's death. Orono was a high liberty man, and from the first a thoroughgoing Whig. He could not imagine how the mother country could possibly wish to enslave or plunder the colonies, which were, as he thought, her distant children. Such were his views of riches, religions, sovereignty, and even glory, that he could not see how all of them combined could be any motive to so unnatural a warfare. Liberty, next to peace, was the sweetest sound that could salute Orono's ear. It was, to his experience, the gift and feeling of nature. In conference with his people, he declared it to be an inborn disposition of the heart and natural habit of life to strive against force and control, as against death. He felt it. He knew it. The wild creatures that rove through the woods he had seen happy, though hungry, because they were under no ties that bound them. The brave little beaver fights a duel with a hunter-boy for the chance of escape. What being does not sigh and sicken in confinement? Does not even the spring-bird then forget its song,—the ermine its sports? All nature flourishes when free. The Great Spirit gives us freely all things. Our white brothers tell us they came to Indian's country to enjoy liberty and life. Their great Sagamore is coming to bind them in chains, to kill them. We must fight him. We will stand on the same ground with them. For should he bind them in bonds, next he will treat us as bears. Indians' liberties and lands his proud spirit will tear away from them. Help his ill-treated sons; they will return good for good, and the law of love runs through the hearts of their children and ours when we are dead. Look down the stream of time. Look up to the Great Spirit. Be kind, be valiant, be free:—then are Indians the sons of glory.

Aroused and captivated by Orono's sentiments, his people generally became decided Whigs. He had also great influence with the sachem at Passamaquoddy, and even at the river St. John, though in each of the tribes there were Indian Tories, and party spirit ran high; human nature, whether cultivated or wild, exhibiting the same traits of character. At length Orono and three of his colleagues started to go and tender their friendship and services to the government of Massachusetts, attended by Andrew Gilman, who could speak their language as well as his own. On their arrival at Portsmouth, money was liberally contributed to bear their expenses, and a carriage procured to help them on their journey. They met the Provincial Congress at Watertown, June 21, 1775, and entered into a treaty of amity with that body and of engagements to afford assistance, afterwards proving themselves to be among the most faithful allies of the American people. In return for their pledges of good faith and immediate aid, Massachusetts forbade, under severe penalties, all trespasses on their lands, six miles in width on each side of the Penobscot river from the head of the tide upwards. On the nineteenth of July, 1776, the three tribes mentioned all acknowledged the independence of the United States, and engaged to withhold all succor from the British enemy. In fact, there were stationed near the head of the tide, on the Penobscot, a company of thirty (twenty white men and ten Indians), under the command of Andrew Gilman, a lieutenant, and Joseph Munsell, an orderly sergeant, both previously mentioned; and at Machias, where Munsell was afterwards himself a lieutenant, there was a large company of one hundred Indians or more, commanded by Captain John Preble, all of whom had rations, and most of them were under pay.

No man was more faithful to his engagements than Orono. From 1779, when the British took possession of the peninsula Bigyduce (now Castine), and exercised an arbitrary command over all the settlements on each side of the river, that active, vigilant chief communicated with great dispatch to our officers and Government important and repeated intelligence, for which he once, if not more, received a tribute of special thanks, and also a pecuniary reward. He was wise in counsel, and his zeal to the last was inspiring to his tribe.

Orono was holden in equally high estimation after the war; and in 1785 and 1796 he entered into favorable treaties with Massachusetts, by which he and his tribe, for valuable considerations, assigned to her large tracts of land, and also agreed with her upon the limits and extent of the territory retained. This celebrated chief, after a very long life of usefulness and destruction, died at Oldtown, February 5, 1802, reputed to have been one hundred and thirteen years old. But Captain Munsell, who conversed with him in his last sickness, and asked him his age, thinks, according to his best recollection, Orono told him he was about one hundred and ten years of age at that time. He was exceedingly endeared to his tribe, and highly respected by all his English acquaintance. To a remarkable degree, he retained his mental faculties and erect attitude till the last years of his life. As he was always abstemious, and as his hair in his last years was of a milky whiteness, he resembled in appearance a cloistered saint. His wife, who was a full-blooded native, died several years after him, at an age supposed to be greater than his own. Of his posterity it is only known that he had two children, one a son, who was accidentally shot, about 1774, in a hunting party, aged probably twenty-five; the other a daughter, who married old Captain Nicholar. So desirous were his English friends and neighbors to perpetuate his name and character that, when the territory in the immediate vicinity of Oldtown was incorporated into a town, March 12, 1806, it was called "Orono," in compliment to the worthy chief.

His wife, commonly called "Madame Orono," died at the very advanced age of one hundred and fifteen years, in 1809.

At the centennial celebration in Orono, March 3, 1874, the following poem on "The Old Chiefs," bringing "the blue-eyed" prominently into notice, was sung by the assembled company. It is from the pen of Rev. Henry C. Leonard, long pastor of the Universalist church in the village:

We sing the chiefs of auld lang syne:

Madockawando grave—

The Tarratine in Philip's time;

Megone, the friend and knave;

Wenamuet with kingly face;—

All braves who bent the bow

In autumn's hunt or winter's chase;

But most, great Orono.

Madockawando's royal hand,

In nature's temple green,

His squaw-child gave in marriage bond

To lone and proud Castine.

But from the mountains to the sea,

Where gleams Penobscot's flow,

Best praised the white-born chief shall be,

The blue-eyed Orono.

In modern days of Atteon,

Or Neptune's later reign,

No tales are told of brave deeds done

Or sung in noble strain.

Our thoughts are turned to other days,

The days of strife and woe.

Relieved by calm, pacific ways

Of pale-faced Orono.

We sing the chief, the grand old chief,

The chief of auld lang syne,

Whose years of rule on men's leaf

Are years of bloodless line.

We sing the chief, the grand old chief,

The chief of long ago,—

The corn still sound in memory's sheaf,—

The high-browed Orono.

Nearly a century and a half from the disappearance of Madockawando from history, we come to the chieftainship of John Atteon over the Penobscot Indians. He was reported to be a descendant of the Baron de Castine and an Indian mother, but could not speak English with facility, while Francis, one of the captains inducted into office at the same time, and also supposed to be of French blood in part, was a good English speaker, intelligent and communicative. The sagamore or governor had been chosen by general election of the tribe.

Mr. Williamson, the historian, was an eye-witness of the ceremonies of induction or inauguration, and thus describes them:

The parties in the Tarratine tribe were so sanguine and violent after they lost their chief, that they could not for many months agree upon a successor. Perplexed with the long controversy and deeply concerned in effecting a union, the Catholic priest interposed his influence; when they were induced to leave the rival candidates and select John Atteon, a reputed descendant of Baron de Castine, by an Indian wife.

On the 19th of September, 1816, at Oldtown village, Sagamore Atteon, John Neptune, next in grade and command, and two captains were inducted into office, with the customary ceremonies. To assist in these, the chiefs and 15 or 20 other principal men from each of the tribes at St. John's river and at Passamaquoddy had previously arrived, appearing in neat and becoming dresses, all in the Indian fashion.

Early in the forenoon, the men of the Tarratine tribe, convening in the great wigwam, called the camp, seated on the side platform according to seniority, Aitteon, Neptune, and the select captains at the head, next the door; the former two being clad in coats of scarlet broad cloth and decorated with silver brooches, collars, armelaps, jewels, and other ornaments. Upon a spread before them, of blue cloth, an ell square, were exhibited four silver medals, three of which were circular and twice the size of a dollar; the other was larger, in the form of a crescent. All these were emblematically inscribed with curious devices, and suspended by parti colored ribbons, a yard in length with ends tied. Aware of gentlemen's wishes to be spectators of the ceremonials, they directed the Indian acting the part of marshal to invite them into the camp. The admission of the female visitants was also requested; but he replied, as directed by the chiefs, "Never our squaws, nor yours, sit with us in council."

The spectators being seated below the tribe, upon the platform or benches, covered with blankets, the Marechite delegation, preceded by their chief, entered the camp in true Indian file and sat down, according to individual rank, directly before the Tarratines. These now uncovered their heads and laid aside their hats and caps till the ceremonies were closed.

Four belts of wampum, brought into the camp by a stately Marechite, were unfolded and placed in the area upon a piece of broadcloth which enclosed them; when his Sagamore, presently rising, took and held one of them in his hands, and addressed Aitteon from five to ten minutes in a courtly speech of pure vernacular, laying the belt at his feet. Three others in rotation, and next in rank, of the same tribe, addressed, in a similar manner, the Tarratine candidates of comparative grade; all which were tokens of unchanging friendship and sanctions of perpetual union. The Sagamore then, taking the medal nearest Aitteon, addressed him and his tribe in another speech of the same length as the former, in the course of which he came three or four times to momentary pauses, when the Tarratines, collectively, uttered deep guttural sounds like "aye." These were evident expressions of their assent to have Aitteon, Neptune, Francis, and the other their first and second Sagamores, and two senior captains. The speaker, closing his remarks, advanced and placed the suspended medal, as the badge of investiture, about Aitteon's neck, the act by which he was formally inducted into office and constituted Sagamore for life. Neptune and the two captains, in their turns, after being shortly addressed by the other Marechite actors, were invested by them with the ensigns of office in the same way.

During these ceremonies, the Quoddy Indians without stood around a standard twenty feet in height, to and from the top of which they alternately hoisted and lowered a flag, as each Tarratine was inducted into office, at the same time and afterwards firing salutes from a well-loaded swivel, near the same place.

Mr. Romaine, the Catholic priest, attired in a white robe and long scarf, having seated himself among the Tarratines before the ceremonies were commenced, now, rising, read appropriate passages from the Scriptures in Latin, and expounded them in the Indian dialect; and next a psalm, which he and the Marechites chanted with considerable harmony. In the midst of the sacred song, the whole of them moved slowly out of the camp, preceded by the priest, leaving the Tarratines seated, and, forming a circle in union with the Quoddy Indians, stood and sang devoutly several minutes, and closed with a "Te Deum."

The priest then departed to his house, and the Indians, entering the camp, took their seats—the Quoddy Indians in a lower place, abreast the sitting spectators, when they commenced their tangible salutations. In this form of civility, each of the two delegations, rising in turn, literally embraced, cheek and lip, the four new-made officers, and shook heartily by the hand all the others of the tribe.

The gentlemen, at the marshal's request, now withdrew, to be spectators only about the doors and apertures; when the Tarratine females, clad in their best dresses and fancifully ornamented, joined for the first time the Indian assemblage, and the whole formed an elliptical circle for dances. In close Indian file they moved forward in successive order, with a kind of double shuffle, to their former places, animated by the music of a light beat upon a drum, in the midst of the circus, with the accompaniment of a vocal tune. (Formerly their chief instruments were rattles, made of small gourds and pumpkin shells.) The female dancers then retired; the Indians took their seats; and the spectators were re-admitted.

To close the ceremonies, four chief men of the Marechites severally rose in succession and sang short songs, somewhat entertaining, which were duly responded by others from the new-made officers; throughout which the whole assemblage uttered, at almost every breath, a low-toned, emphatic guttural sound, not unlike a hiccough,—the singular way by which they expressed their plaudits and pleasures.

More than three hours were consumed in these ceremonies, which were succeeded by a feast already preparing. Two fat oxen, slaughtered and severed into pieces, were roasting; rice, beans, and garden vegetables were boiling; and bread-loaves and crackers were abundant. If the cooking, neatness, and order were unworthy of modern imitation, the defects were counterbalanced by the hearty invitations and welcomes with which all the visitants, equally with the natives, were urged to become partakers, both of the repast and of the festive scenes. The regularities of the day relaxed to rude dances and wild sports in the evening, which were by no means free from extravagance and excess.

In 1838 Atteon and Neptune were deposed by the tribe, and the resultant troubles were such that the legislature of the State intervened, and passed an act that an election should be held by the tribe every two years. This law has been modified since, as will be seen hereafter. This Atteon died in May, 1858, having had real or nominal jurisdiction over the tribe from 1816 to that time—forty-two years. The later chiefs or "governors" were Tomer Socklexis, John Neptune, father of the Lieutenant-Governor of the same name; JosephOLON, father of the well-known Captain Francis; John Atteon, grandson of the former Sagamore John; and Joseph Atteon, son of the last John. Some others have succeeded him for longer or shorter terms.

THE PENOBSCOT "IN POLITICS."

The Penobscots at Oldtown, having lost their sachem, undertook the election of another in 1816. It was usual to elect promptly a near relative of the deceased Sagamore; but in this case a delay of several months occurred before a successor could be agreed upon; and at length the factional spirit becoming unreasonably high and intemperate their priest, a Roman Catholic, interposed his authority, and virtually compelled them to abandon the previous candidates and elect John Atteon, who was reputed, as we have noticed, to be a descendant of the Baron de St. Castine. The new chief was inducted into office September 19, 1816, when John Neptune was chosen his lieutenant, and two chief captains were confirmed, one of whom was Captain Francis. This is the same Captain Francis, "a man of good understanding," who gave the historian Williamson the information before cited concerning the relationship of all the Indian tribes of Maine.

A brief but interesting sketch of the "political history" of the tribe, such as it is, is thus given by Agent Dillingham, in his report for 1875:

Prior to 1835, or thereabouts, as I am informed, no elections of delegates to the Legislature were held in the tribe. The Governor and Lieutenant-Governor had been chosen for life, and such delegates received their appointment from the Governor of the tribe. John Attian and John Neptune were holding the respective offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor at that time, when, either by resignation, impeachment, or from some cause, those offices were declared vacant, and a meeting for a new election called; at which time Tomer Socklexis and Attian Orson were chosen to fill the vacancies. The result was not acquiesced in by a part of the tribe, who claimed that those offices could not be vacated during the life of the occupants, and still considered Attian and Neptune their legally constituted officers. Another portion of the tribe held that the election was valid, and refused longer to recognize Attian and Neptune as officers. Since that time the portion claiming Attian as Governor has been called the "Old Party," and that portion claiming Socklexis as Governor, the "New Party."

This state of affairs continued until 1850, when an agreement was entered into and signed by the officers and principal members of the two parties, providing "that as John Attian and John Neptune were chosen according to the ancient usages of the tribe into their respective offices for life, that they should remain in said offices during the remainder of their lives, and on the decrease of one or both, the vacancy should be filled by majority vote of the male members of the tribe of twenty-one years of age and upwards, in meeting duly called by the Agent. Said officers to continue for two years, and that an election should be held every year to choose one member of the tribe to represent the tribe before the Legislature and the Governor and Council." This agreement was not, as I learn, very sacredly kept, or even much regarded by either party, but each continued to claim and recognize the same officers as before.

On the decease of Governor John Attian, the old party immediately declared his son, Joseph Attian, his successor, and he was duly inaugurated by them, according to ancient custom, for life. Elections were held annually for choice of delegate. Party spirit ran high, and there existed much ill-feeling, which manifested itself in individual quarrels during the year, and usually at elections terminated in a general fight. The question of term of office of Governor and Lieutenant Governor continued an unsettled issue; discussions and quarrels interfered seriously with their general avocations; for several weeks prior to the annual election they would congregate at Oldtown from various distant localities, consuming much time and money in addition to ordinary travelling expenses.

Finally the Legislature, evidently considering it for the best interest of the tribe, enacted a law in 1866, which provided "that the Penobscot Tribe of Indians be allowed hereafter to elect by ballot their Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and Representative to the Legislature, on the second Tuesday of September, annually, (changed in 1873 to first Wednesday in November), and that the old and new party, so called, shall be allowed to select from their respective parties, candidates for said offices, alternately, commencing with the old party for the year 1867; and the new party shall have no voice in the selection of candidates for said offices, and shall not vote in their election in those years when the old party is entitled to them; and the old party shall have no voice in the selection of candidates for said offices, and no vote in their election, in those years when the new party is entitled to them; and it shall be the duty of the Agent to preside at such elections." Since which time their elections have been held in accordance with that act, without objection being made thereto until lately. Each party has now held five elections of delegate, and at each have also voted for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, abandoning the old idea of life term. Such elections have been perfectly quiet and orderly, and, so far as I have been able to judge, satisfactory to those participating.

Within a few years about fifteen of the dissatisfied members from each of the two before named parties have united, calling themselves "Third Party," or "Outsiders," and have claimed the same rights that have been granted to the old and new parties; that is, among other privileges, the right to hold elections one-third of the time. At the last election held by the old party (November, 1874), they having failed to agree on the nominations made as usual in caucus, two sets of candidates were voted for; the defeated portion then joined the "third party" in petitioning the Legislature the following winter for repeal of the law of 1866, and to change the manner of conducting their elections, and to allow the tribe to vote together and the person having the majority of votes to be declared elected, as was their former custom, as they claim. The old party had then held five elections under the law of 1866; the new party had held but four. These two parties then united in presenting a remonstrance against any such proposed change in the law affecting their elections. The petitioners were, after hearing, granted leave to withdraw, without attempting to indicate what may be a peaceful solution of this vexed question. I merely give the above facts to be taken and used for what they are worth.

At the annual election of the tribe, held on the first Tuesday of October, 1880, Stephen Stanislaus was chosen Governor, Samuel Neptune Lieutenant-Governor, and Joseph Nicolar, Superintendent of Farming, was elected Delegate of the tribe to the State Legislature.

THE INDIAN LANDS.

The first formal cession of their territory by the Taratine or Penobscot Indians seems to have been effected at a conference and treaty of alliance held at the truck-house near Mt. Hope, a little below the Penjejawock stream, in Kenduskeag, now Bangor, in September, 1775. There were present the chiefs of the Penobscot and St. John's tribes, and on the part of the whites Generals Benjamin Lincoln and Rufus Putnam, and Dr. Thomas Rice. A treaty was here made and signed, by which the red men relinquished a tract six miles wide on each side of the river, and retained, as now, the islands in the river above Oldtown, and in addition two islands in the Bay and the lands along the branches on the west side of the Penobscot. This treaty the head-men of the tribe subsequently repudiated, and new treaties had to be made. The story is well told by the Hon. Lorenzo Sabine, a resident of Bangor in his childhood, in an elaborate article on the Penobscots, in Volume XII. of the Christian Examiner:

At the Revolution, the ungranted lands of Maine held by the British crown, as well as large tracts held by Loyalists, or Tories, became vested in Massachusetts; and at the close of the struggle the attention of gentlemen of that State, and of adventurers elsewhere, was directed to them as a sure means to increase or acquire fortunes. The documents of the time show indeed that, for ten or fifteen years after the peace, the mania for "Eastern lands" was quite as intense as that which prevailed within a very recent period. The pine forests and mill-sites of the Penobscots were of great value, and were wanted by the "operators" of the day. Accordingly, in 1784, commissioners were appointed by Massachusetts to negotiate a cession. The result was the purchase, in 1786, for 350 blankets and 200 pounds of powder, and a quantity of shot and flints, of the country on the Penobscot River to the Piscataquis stream on the one bank, and to the Metawamkeag on the other, save the waters between the falls at Oldtown and the mouths of these tributaries. This, as far as we have been able to discover, was the first actual cession, and these paltry presents was the first pretended equivalent. But the country below Bangor, on both banks of the river and bay, had passed from their possession. On the westerly side, the grant known in later times as the "Waldo Patent" embraced the whole, while easterly, the colonial government had seized and appropriated every acre of the mainland and all the islands, two of considerable size only excepted. Thus the Penobscots had lost a large part of their domain before the new masters they had offered to serve set their covetous eyes on the territory above the head of the tide-waters. There remained to the Indians, then, after the bargain in 1786 was concluded, two islands near the sea, the islands just mentioned, and the tract above Piscataquis and Metawamkeag, and northerly from them without defined limits; and these were guaranteed in quiet possession, as the chiefs supposed, forever. The words of the treaty are that all the lands on the Penobscot River above the two streams named in the tract, should lie as hunting-grounds for the Indians, and should not be laid out or settled by the State or engrossed by individuals. But the government of Massachusetts understood the matter differently, and difficulties soon arose between the contracting parties, which, increasing until 1796, were adjusted, as then appeared, by a new treaty. In this second convention the Penobscots ceded the mainland on both sides of the river for a distance of thirty miles, commencing at a designated rock in Eddington; but retained the river islands and the territory above the thirty-mile line so drawn, northerly and indefinitely. The consideration for the cession was 400 pounds of shot, 100 pounds of powder, 100 bushels of corn, 13 bushels of salt, 30 hats, and a barrel of rum, in hand, with an annuity of 300 bushels of corn, 50 pounds of powder, 200 pounds of shot, and 75 yards of blue cloth. This annuity is about equal to $600. This tract was surveyed into nine townships and offered to purchasers in quarter-townships at a price the acre, which, if received, placed in the treasury upwards of $180,000! Such was the dealings of Christians with the helpless Indians in the year 1796.

In 1818, owing to various causes, the Penobscots had become poor; and well do we remember their distress and sympathy of individuals in behalf of their women and children. In the poverty of the tribe, sales of pine timber were made by their chiefs, on the lands which they reserved in the last treaty, much to the displeasure of Massachusetts, on the ground that the fee was in the State, and that the mere right to occupy, to fish, and to hunt was all that could be enjoyed by the Indians, unless, indeed, they might embrace an agricultural life, of which there could have been no hope, for then the keenest Anglo-Saxon eye saw nothing in Maine east of the Kennebec but pine-trees and water-power to saw them into marketable shapes.

In this position of affairs a commission was created to open a third negotiation. Early in 1819, a convention was ratified by which the Commonwealth obtained the whole of the remaining county, excepting four townships of mainland, six miles square, and the islands so often mentioned in the Penobscot River. We have no room to record the various articles which were to be delivered to the chiefs annually as payment for this cession; but we state with pleasure that the quantities of food, cloth, and ammunition were considerably more than in 1796, and that provision was made for the repair of the Indian church and for the employment of a teacher in husbandry, while, beside, the women and maidens were presented with several hundred yards of calico and ribbon. In fine, there is a spirit of liberality in this treaty which was manifested on no other occasion.

But yet Massachusetts has little reason to plume herself on her course toward the Penobscots, while they were under her guardianship. The Indian domain, though worth a million at the periods of cession, and several millions now, cost her at most less than $35,000, as she herself estimated, when, at the separation, an arrangement was suggested by which Maine was to assume the payment of the annuities stipulated in the treaties to which we have referred. Maine, on becoming an independent State, in 1820, assumed the control of Indian affairs within her borders; and, in 1833, appointed commissioners to dispose of the four townships reserved by the Penobscots in the convention of 1819. The purchase-money, amounting to some $55,000, was invested under the direction of the State, and remains entire. The interest of this fund is divided annually in equal shares; and in addition the annuities under the treaties with Massachusetts are continued, and cannot be withheld, if good faith be observed, while the Penobscots shall exist as a nation. These two sources of income, with the islands, constitute now the only public or common property of the tribe. The islands, to rely upon our own count in 1852, are twenty-seven or twenty-eight in number. Some are low, small, and of little value; but others are beautiful in surface and situation, and sufficient in size and in richness of soil for the support of one hundred more families.

Some additional details concerning the arrangement of 1795 are thus supplied by Mr. Williamson:

A serious controversy had lately arisen between the inhabitants upon the Penobscot and the Tarratine Indians. By the treaty of 1785 the Government supposed the tribe had nothing remaining but the islands in the river; whereas, the chiefs insisted that the territory from the head of the tide, six miles in width, on each side of the river upwards, indefinitely, was theirs; and they determined not to relinquish it without being paid a consideration. To settle, therefore, the question of controverted claims, three commissioners, William Shepherd of Westfield, Nathan Dane of Beverly, and Daniel Davis of Portland, met the chiefs at Bangor, August 1, 1796, and concluded a treaty with them, by which the Indians agreed to resign all their rights to lands from Nichols's rock, in Eddington, thirty miles up the river, excepting Oldtown Island, and those in the river above it. For this relinquishment, the Government delivered to the tribe 150 yards of blue woollens, —400 pounds shot, —100 pounds powder, —100 bushels of corn, —13 bushels salt, —36 hats, —and a barrel of rum; and agreed to pay them, so long as they should continue a tribe, a certain stipend every year, at the mouth of the Kenduskeag, consisting of 300 bushels of Indian corn, —50 pounds of powder, —200 pounds of shot, —and 75 yards of blue woollen, fit for garments. The ratification of this treaty consisted in its execution by the seals and signatures of the commissioners and seven chiefs, and its acknowledgement before Jonathan Eddy, esq. It was supposed this tribe, once so numerous and powerful, was now reduced to 350 souls. In 1803, the Government appointed an agent to superintend their interests and take care of their lands.

The territory relinquished by the treaty was subsequently surveyed into nine townships, and found to contain 189,426 acres. Already there were thirty-two settlers, who were presently quieted upon their lots; and in 1798 the residue was offered for sale in quarter-townships at a dollar by the acre. Exclusive of this tract so relinquished, is Marsh island of five thousand acres and of an excellent soil, which the Government, in a good mood, confirmed to John Marsh, the first settler, for a small consideration, he exhibiting a pretended purchase from the Indians.

THE TRUST FUND,

held in the State treasury for the benefit of the Indians consists mainly of fifty thousand dollars paid by the State in 1833, as part of the consideration for the four townships of land purchased of the tribe. It was stipulated that this sum should rest forever in the hands of the State, but that a yearly interest thereon should be paid to the Penobscots. Drafts were made on it, however, from time to time, when over-expenditures were incurred by the agents; but the sums taken were afterwards restored from the interest fund. January 1, 1864, the fund amounted to fifty-two thousand four hundred and thirty-eight dollars and forty-four cents, and additions were made to it year by year from various sources, but chiefly from rents derived from leases of the shores of islands belonging to the reservation. In 1875 the trust fund had mounted to seventy-three thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight dollars and forty-eight cents, and the annual revenues from it constituted a very important part of the means for keeping the members of the tribe from want and discontent. For some years after the act of February 11, 1873, the shore rents were not added to the fund, but have been distributed directly to the Indians—a plan which, said Agent Dillingham, in his report of 1875, "has been very satisfactorily received, and has been of very great advantage to the tribe, in relieving their necessities and enabling them to live through these hard times, when all, even the prudent whites, find it so necessary to carefully husband their resources."

The amount derived from the Indian trust fund, for each of the two years 1879-80, on interest account, was four thousand four hundred and twenty-nine dollars and seventy cents. The tribe also received an annuity of one thousand four hundred dollars (formerly one thousand eight hundred dollars), seven hundred dollars per annum for their agriculture, besides four hundred and fifty dollars bounty on crops, and special appropriations for schools and school-houses, repair of chapel, and salaries of agent, superintendent of farming, priest (one hundred dollars per year), governor (fifty dollars), and lieutenant governor (thirty dollars). The total amounts in the two years, respectively, were eight thousand and twenty-four dollars and seventy cents, and eight thousand three hundred and ninety-four dollars and seventy cents. The shore rents added four thousand three hundred and sixty-one dollars and twenty-five cents to this in 1879, and two thousand one hundred and fifty-four dollars the next year, the decrease being caused by the falling off of the lumber trade, the destruction of important mills, and other reasons.

It is thus seen that the tribe, considering its limited numbers, is remarkably well provided for. The sums paid to its members are expended under the direction of the agent, mainly in supporting the very poor and infirm, supplying medicine and medical attendance, paying funeral expenses, and providing for a distribution in the spring, to all the tribe, of corn, flour, pork, and molasses. Wood is also purchased, as needed by these people. Schools for the Indian children are maintained on Oldtown, Mattanawcook, and Olamon islands, the latter two in charge of the school committees of Greenbush and Lincoln, respectively, and the first now taught by the Sisters of Mercy, with great acceptability and success. A new building was put up for this school, at the north end of the village, in the summer of 1880, at a cost of about five hundred dollars.

THE INDIAN VILLAGES.

It is altogether probable, from the number of arrow-heads, axes, and other Indian antiquities found in places, that the Tarratines had at least temporary camping grounds on all the tributaries of the Penobscot. But three sites in particular furnished them places of rendezvous—Mattawamkeag, Passadumkeag, and the Falls of the Penobscot. At the latter two points it is believed there were French forts, as well as Indian villages. One of these was destroyed by Colonel Westbrook in 1723, the inhabitants retiring up the river to Mattawamkeag. The other was burned by Captain Heath about two years afterwards. There is at this time no mention of a village at Oldtown, but that undoubtedly became soon afterwards the chief seat of the tribe, and has since retained its pre-eminence. Mr. David Norton, author of Sketches of Oldtown, believes that the present name corresponds to an Indian name meaning the same, and given to the same village—that is, the Indian settlement on the lower part of Oldtown island.

Governor Washburne says, in his address at the Orono Centennial:

There was also a village on the tongue of land that extends eastward from this hall [the Town Hall in Orono] to the Penobscot river at Ayres' Falls, as they are now termed, bounded on the north by the Stillwater river and on the south by the basin. The Indians called the place Arumsumhungan. For many years after the settlement of the town by the white men, the vestiges of cornfields and of habitations were plain and unmistakable; and until comparatively a recent period, stone weapons and implements of agriculture were occasionally turned up wherever the plough was driven, some of which I have seen in the possession of the late John Bennoch, jr., esq., and Col. Eben Webster, jr. I think it not improbable that the point of land at the confluence of the Stillwater and Penobscot rivers, may have been the site of the ancient "Lett" of the Indians.

The Governor remarked also the presence of an Indian village at Nicola's Island, near Passadumkeag, and the probable fact that the fort and village destroyed by Colonel Westbrook in 1723 was on this island. The Indians there, with some French families, settled, he says, at Fort Hill, near the head of the tide, and built a village of cottages and wigwams, with a Catholic chapel, which was shortly deserted by its inhabitants, on the approach of Captain Heath with his invading force, who gave the village to the flames. The Penobscots thereafter concentrated at Oldtown.

THE INDIAN CENSUS.

It is supposed that the Tarratines numbered about two thousand four hundred when they first became known to Europeans. They declined rapidly, however, after King William's war. In 1736 the French reckoned two hundred warriors on the Penobscot as available allies to the Government of New France. In 1754 the tribe counted about eight hundred, all told; but the ravages of famine, disease, and other causes of decrease, left them six years afterwards but seventy-three warriors and about four hundred others. In 1764 the governor reported that they could muster sixty fighting men; but his estimate is believed too small. Mr. Sabine thinks there were then, probably, seven hundred persons in the tribe, but that at the close of the century there were only half as many, although the tribe had begun to increase somewhat, from the encouragement given to early marriages by the Jesuit missionaries. The number of the Penobscot Indian families in 1811 was but fifty-seven, and of individuals two hundred and forty-one. In 1820, all of them being then clustered at Oldtown, they numbered two hundred and seventy-seven souls, an increase ascribed by Dr. Jedediah Morse, in his report of 1820, upon Indian affairs, to the Secretary of War, to "an obligation imposed by the chiefs on the young people to marry early." The St. Johns and Passamaquoddy tribes are mentioned by Dr. Morse in connection with the Penobscots, and he says further:

The three tribes above named live in great harmony and friendship with each other. When either tribe elects and installs a chief, the chiefs of the other two tribes are always present to assist in the ceremonies.

In religion these tribes are professedly Christians of the Catholic faith, have each a church, with a bell, and priests to instruct them steadily or occasionally. The priests who minister to the two latter tribes [the Passamaquoddies and the Penobscots] receive a stated stipend from the treasury of the State. The State has lately engaged to provide and support a farmer among the Penobscots to instruct them in agriculture. We know not that any of these tribes have ever admitted schools to be established among them.

The Penobscots, in government and internal regulations, are independent. The legislative and executive authorities are vested in the sachems, though the heads of all the families are invited to be present at their public meetings, which are held in their house of worship and conducted with order and decorum.

None of these tribes have other than incipient improvements in anything which pertains to civilized life. It is not probable, such is the religious influence under which they act, combined with their natural attachment to their native places and to the sepulchers of their fathers, that a proposal to remove and join a large community of Indians, should it be made to them, would be accepted. It is probable they will remove [remain?] in a sort of half-independent, half-civilized, and evangelized state, gradually diminishing, as other tribes, once their powerful neighbors, have done before them, till there shall be none remaining.

The census of the tribe, taken usually every year by the superintending school committee of Oldtown, showed a population of four hundred and forty-three in August, 1855; of five hundred, in round numbers, in 1865; four hundred and forty-eight in 1876; four hundred and forty-five in 1877; four hundred and fifty in January, 1878; four hundred and forty-six in 1879; four hundred and eighteen in 1880; and the same number in 1881. The sum-total is reduced slightly some years by emigration, as well as by death. The annual numbers of births and deaths in the tribe are generally about equal.

THE RESERVATION.

The islands belonging to the Penobscot reservation number in all, says the agent, one hundred and forty-six, with an aggregate of four thousand four hundred and eighty-two acres, three-quarters of which have an arable soil, among the most fertile and eligible for cultivation in the State. In 1835 the value of the whole was calculated to be sixty-four thousand two hundred and forty-seven dollars and sixty-four cents, mainly for the timber and firewood growing upon them, which have now disappeared. The islands have still high value for farming purposes, however, and some for hitching logs along the shores, available in the form of rents, although this form of value is reported as rapidly decreasing. Efforts are being made to induce the Indians to scatter along the islands and improve their fertile soil, instead of concentrating at Oldtown, as has been the tendency of late years. The agent says: "About all those Indians who live on their farms up river are self-reliant, and have comfortable homes." In 1836 a considerable tract on the west side of Orson Island was surveyed and reserved for a public farm, suitable buildings were erected, a foreman was employed, and other preparations made to interest the tribe more thoroughly in the cultivation of lots upon the farm. The arrangement was not very beneficial, however, and in 1862 the whole farm was leased, under an act of the legislature, for a trifling sum. More recently, however, some of the Indians have begun to cultivate small tracts upon the place.

Many of the islands are leased for a small annual rental; others, principally those lowest down the river, are occupied by the Indians themselves; and one, No. 133, of the group known as Brown Islands, near Winn, is reserved as their summer camping ground, and no trees or wood is allowed to be cut from it.

THE PRESENT MISSION.

In the summer of 1878, at the instance of Father O'Brien, then priest to the tribe, and Bishop Healy, of Portland, four members of the community of Sisters of Mercy were sent from the mother-house at Manchester, New Hampshire, and established upon the island. They were at first in a hired house, but in 1880 a neat and commodious convent and dormitory was erected for them near the chapel, at a cost of one thousand two hundred dollars, nearly two-thirds of which were contributed by Indians of the tribe. The Sisters are otherwise supported by funds of their church, except that they receive the regular appropriation for schools on the island, in consideration of their services as teachers. Sister M. F. Borgia, of the Community, with one or more of her associates, has had of late sole charge of the school at Oldtown, and they also minister to the wants of the tribe in attendance upon the sick and other personal visitations, especially inculcating among the young women principles of morality, industry, and economy,—the need of which, indeed, prompted Father O'Brien, in the first instance, to secure the presence of the sisters here—and instructing them in sewing and other simple and domestic arts, of which they were before almost wholly ignorant. Soon after going to the island, they formed a class of women, both married and single, who engaged in exercises of reading, singing, sewing, and other useful employments. An evening school was also established, with good success, for the young men of the tribe who either could not or would not attend the day schools. Their influence upon the island has been every way good. Agent Bailey, in his report for 1880, says of the Sisters:

These refined and accomplished women, having taken up their abode with the tribe on this island, are, with that utter self-abnegation which characterizes the order, assiduously devoting themselves to the moral and intellectual advancement of this remnant of a race which, while living in the midst of our civilization, is not of it.

With the evidence of their devotion to the welfare of this people daily accumulating, as would be expected, a great regard is reciprocally manifested for them, and no prejudice has been able to survive their ministry of love. It may be premature to express any comparative view of their labors, yet the opinion is ventured that upon the home life of the tribe their influence will not be the least potent, as they daily go from house to house, instructing the females in domesticity, economy in expenditures, refinement of manners, and personal purity.

CHAPTER III.

THE DISCOVERERS.

Thorfinn Karlsefne—Sabastian Cabot—John Varrazano—His Account of the Maine Country—John Rut—Andre Thevet—First Description of Penobscot Bay and Islands—Sir Humphrey Gilbert—Gosnold—Natives in Foreign Garments, and with a Biscay Shallop—Martin Pring—The Sieur De Monts and Samuel De Champlain—George Weymouth—Was Weymouth in the Penobscot Waters?—Samuel Argall—The Jesuit Fathers—Captain John Smith—New England First upon his Map—Subsequent Voyages.

THORFINN KARLSEFNE.

To this daring Icelandic voyager may be accorded the honor of conducting the first recorded voyage of civilized men along the coast of Maine. Possibly Biarne the first Norse explorer hitherward, in the winter of 990-91, had caught a far glimpse of the bold headlands and deep bays of this rock-bound shore, as he sailed the open sea from Greenland to Cape Cod, and back from Cape Cod to Nova Scotia and home. Leif, son of Erik the Red, in the ship of Biarne nine years later, may also have descried the coast from his lookouts, as he traversed the watery way from his Marhland (Nova Scotia) to his Vinland (probably Rhode Island). The battle of Thorwald, another son of Erik, in 1004, with the Skraellings (Indians)—the first known conflict of Europeans and aborigines upon the continent—doubtless came much nearer the present confines of Maine, being fought, as Dr. Kohl conjectures, on the shore not far from Boston harbor. Two years later, came the next courageous traversers of the Northern seas, Thorfinn and his companions. Thorfinn had married the widow of Thorstein, a third son of Erik, and also an explorer, and from her learned enough of Vinland to fire his imagination and tempt him to emulate the deeds of his fellow-countrymen. His wife and others fanned the flame, and in the summer of 1007 he fitted out three ships, manning them with one hundred and sixty sailors and intending colonists, and also placing on board a variety of live stock, for the colony to-be. The next spring they sailed to Helluland (Leif's "stony land," or Newfoundland), thence to Markland, and thence, instead of following their predecessors across the open sea through the breadth of the Gulf of Maine, they coasted a long way to the "southwest, having the land always on their starboard"—that is, the picturesque land of Maine. These happy, heroic eight-score were, then, the first of European stock to look wonder-eyed into the beautiful bays of Passamaquoddy, of Penobscot, and of Casco. They left no record of their shoreward visits, if any they made; but we know that they reached Cape Cod, probably Buzzard's Bay, and also Narragansett Bay, on the shores of which Thorfinn attempted settlement. Here a son was born to him and Gudrida—Snorre, first of European parentage born on the American continent. One of Thorfinn's trusty mates, Thorhall the Hunter, attempted another exploration along the coasts to the northeast, but was caught by strong west winds and driven across the ocean to the green shores of Ireland. Thorfinn himself afterwards sailed to the northward, and came to "the country of the Onefoots," by which name he may have designated the coasts of New Hampshire and Maine, and in which country he saw "endless forests." In the spring of 1011, after three years' residence in the south of Vinland, he sailed away to Greenland, whence he never returned. It is not known what became of his colony.

SEBASTIAN CABOT.

After Thorfinn, many Northmen, it is believed, made trading and exploring voyages to Newfoundland and the coasts of Maine; but very few and meagre notices of them have been preserved, and none which relate strictly to the Maine country. It is quite possible, also, that one or both of the Venetian adventurers, Nicolo and Antonio Zeno, visited the old Icaria, Estotiland, and Drogeo (Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and New England?) laid down upon their map of 1400; but of this nothing is certainly known. The mists clear away with the advent of Columbus upon the shores of the New World; and from June 24, 1497, when John Cabot touched the coasts of Labrador in latitude 56 or 58, as Humboldt and others affirm, the time, and place of discoveries and explorations are rarely doubtful. The next year Sebastian Cabot, second of the three sons of John, sails along the coasts of Labrador and the Newfoundland, and from the latter southerly, keeping the shores as much as possible in view on his right. He was the first Englishman to see the headlands of Maine, and there is abundant reason to believe that he landed at some points on his voyage, which was prosecuted to the neighborhood of Cape Hatteras. Says Dr. Kohl:

The voyage of this gifted and enterprising youth along the entire coast of the present United States—nay, along the whole extent of that great continent in which now the English race and language prevail and flourish, has always been considered as the true beginning, the foundation and corner-stone of all the English claims and possessions in the northern half of America. English flags were the first which were planted along the shores, and English men were the first of modern Europeans who with their own eyes surveyed the border of that great assemblage of countries in which they were destined to become so prominent, and were also the first to put their feet upon it. The history of each one of that chain of States, stretching along the western shores of the Atlantic, begins with Sebastian Cabot and his expedition of 1498. And this is especially true of the State of Maine and the other States of New England, whose remarkable coasts were particularly observed by him and clearly delineated on his chart.

It is thought possible that the Portuguese under Cortereal, the Bretons and other French fishermen in the early part of the sixteenth century, besides other adventurers in these northern waters, may have visited points upon the shores of Maine; but if they did so, they have not even left even the tradition of their visits.

JOHN VERRAZANO.

This voyager, commonly called Verrazaini, was a Florentine adventurer, in the service of France. In the spring of 1524, during his celebrated traverse of the Atlantic shores from Cape Fear northward, he sailed, probably, along the entire coast of Maine. His account of this part of the voyage, as translated from the Italian for Ramusio's narrative in Hakluyt's Voyages, and republished in the first volume of the second series of the Maine Historical Collections, is well worth transcription here, as the first detailed description of this region given by any European traveller. We retain the old English of the translation:

Trending afterwards [after leaving Cape Cod] to the north, we found another land high, full of thicke woods, the trees there of fire, cypresse, and such like as are wont to grow in cold countreys. The people differ much from the other, and looke how much the former seemed to be curteous and gentle, so much were these full of rudenesse and ill manners, and so barbarous that by no signes that ever we could make, could we have any kind of traffike with them. They cloth themselves with Beares skines and Luzernes and Seales and other beastes skines. Their food, as farre as we could perceive, repairing often to their dwellings, we supposed to be by hunting and fishing, and of certaine fruits, which are a kind of roots, which the earth yeeldeth of her own accord. They have no graine, neither saw we any kind of signe of tillage, neither is the land, for the barrennesse thereof, apt to beare fruit or seed. If at any time we desired by exchange to have any of their commodities, they used to come to the seashore upon certain craggy rocks, and we standing in our boats, they let down with a rope, crying continually that we should not approach to the land, demanding immediately the exchange, taking nothing but knives, fishhooks, and tooles to cut withall, neither did they make any account of our courtesie. And when we had nothing left to exchange with them, when we departed from them, the people showed all signes of discourtesie and disdain as were possible for any creature to invent. We were in dispight of them two or three leagues within the land, being in number twenty-five armed men of us. And when we went on shore they shot at us with their bowes, making great outcries, and afterwards fled into the woods.

We found not in this land anything notable or of importance, saving very great woods and certaine hills; they may have some mineral matter in them, because we saw many of them have headstones of copper hanging at their eares. We departed from thence, keeping our course northeast along the coast, which we found more pleasant champion [champaign] and without woods, with high mountains within the land. Continuing directly along the coast for the space of fifty leagues, we discovered thirty-two Islands, lying all neere the land, being small and pleasant to the view, high, and having many turnings and windings betwene them, making many fair harboroughs and chanel as they do in the Gulfe of Venice, in Selavonia and Dalmatia. We had no knowledge or acquaintance with the people: we suppose they are of the same manners or nature as the others are. Sailing Northeast for the space of one hundred and fiftie leagues, we discovered the land that in times past was discovered by the Britons, which is in fiftie degrees.

JOHN RUT.

In 1527 Master John Rut, of the Mary of Guilford, a vessel dispatched by King Henry VIII. of England, visited the coasts of "Arambec" or "Noiumbega," as Hakluyt mentions it, often, as the same relator tells, "entering the ports of those regions, landing men, and examining into the condition of the country," and again, she "oftentimes put her men on land to search the state of these unknown regions." This is the first authentic report giving clear information of the landing of Englishmen upon these shores. It is quite probable that Master Rut penetrated and explored the Penobscot, and visited the people thereaway. Many maps of this period set down Penobscot Bay as the great river of Norumbega, and it was undoubtedly then the best-known water of Maine. One writer thinks that Verrazano, who had recommended this expedition, was with it, and that he perished at the hands of the savages on one of his excursions into the interior.

ANDRE THEVET.

This extensive traveller, a Frenchman and Franciscan friar, took the coast of Maine in his voyage along the Atlantic shore of both South and North America, in 1554-56. He has left in his Cosmography the first detailed description of the Penobscot Bay and natives, which is highly interesting, and deserves quoting in full, as below:

Having left La Florida on the left hand, with all its islands, gulfs, and capes, a river presents itself, which is one of the finest rivers in the whole world, which we call Norumbegue, and the aborigines Agoney, and which is marked on some marine charts as the Grand River [meaning Penobscot Bay]. Several other beautiful rivers enter into it; and upon its banks the French formerly erected a little fort about ten or twelve leagues from its mouth, which was surrounded by fresh water, and this place was named the Fort of Norumbegue.

Some pilots would make me believe that this country (Norumbegue) is the proper country of Canada. But I told them that this was far from the truth, since this country lies in 43° N., that of Canada in 50 or 52°. Before you enter the said river appears an island [Fox Island], surrounded by eight very small islets, which are near the country of the green mountains [Camden Hills], and to the cape of the islets. From there you sail all along unto the mouth of the river, which is dangerous from the great number of thick and high rocks; and its entrance is wonderfully large. About three leagues into the river an island presents itself to you that may have four leagues in circumference [Long Island, now Islesboro'], inhabited only by some fishermen and birds of different sorts, which island they called Aiyascou, because it has the form of a man's arm, which they call so. Its greatest length is from north to south. It would be very easy to plant on this island, and build a fortress on it to keep in check the whole surrounding country. Having landed and put our feet on the adjacent country, we perceived a great mass of people coming down upon us from all sides in such numbers that you might have supposed them to have been a flight of starlings. Those who marched first were the men, which they call agiehuus. After them came the women, which they call pergruastas; then the adigestas, being the children, and the last were the girls, called auusgestas. And all this people was clothed in skins of wild animals, which they call rabatz. Now, considering their aspect and manner of proceeding, we mistrusted them and went on board our vessel. But they, perceiving our fear, lifted their hands into the air, making signs that we should not mistrust them; and for making us still more sure, they sent to our vessel some of their principal men, which brought us provisions. In recompense of this, we gave them a few trinkets of a low price, by which they were highly pleased. The next morning I, with some others, was commissioned to meet them, to know whether they would be inclined to assist us with more victuals, of which we were very much in need. But having entered into the house, which they call canoque, of a certain little king of theirs which called himself Peramich, we saw several killed animals hanging on the beams of the said house, which he had prepared (as he assured us) to send to us. This chief gave us a very hearty welcome, and, to show us his affection, he ordered to kindle a fire, which they call azista, on which the meat was to be put and fish to be roasted. Upon this some rogues came in to bring to the king the heads of six men, which they had taken in war and massacred, which terrified us, fearing that they might treat us in the same way. But toward evening we secretly retired to our ship without bidding good-bye to our host. At this he was very much irritated, and came to us the next morning, accompanied by three of his children, showing a mournful countenance, because he thought that we had been dissatisfied with him; and he said in his language, "Let us go, let us go on land, my friend and brother; come to drink and eat what we have; we assure you upon oath by Heaven, earth, moon, and stars, that you shall fare not worse than our own persons."

Seeing the good affection and will of this old man, some twenty of us went again on land, every one of us with his arms; and then we went to his lodgings, where we were treated and presented with what he possessed. And meanwhile great numbers of people arrived, caressing and offering themselves to give us pleasure, saying that they were our friends. Late in the evening, when we were willing to retire and to take leave of the company with actions of gratitude, they would not give us leave. Men, women, children, all entreated us zealously to stay with them, crying out these words, "My friends, do not start from here; you shall sleep this night with us." But they could not harangue so well as to persuade us to sleep with them. And so we retired to our vessel; and, having remained in this place five full days, we weighed anchor, parting from them with a marvelous contentment of both sides, and went out to the open sea.

GILBERT.

In 1583 Sir Humphrey Gilbert, arriving with his ships at St. Johns, Newfoundland, read his commission from Queen Elizabeth of England, and formally took possession of the place and the region within a radius of two hundred leagues therefrom for the crown. He received a sod and a twig in token of subjection, and set up a pillar bearing a shield of lead, with the English arms engraved upon it.

GOSNOLD.

Bartholomew Gosnold was the first English navigator who sailed straight from Great Britain for the American shores. This was in 1602. On the 4th of May he sighted land at or about the forty-third degree of north latitude. Mr. Williamson thinks this first land he saw might have been Mount Desert or Agamenticus; but others, not relying upon Gosnold's reckoning, place it further to the southward, in the neighborhood of Cape Ann, if not the cape itself.* Wherever it was, his vessel was here boarded by a party of Indians, who came in "a shallop of European fabric," such as fishermen use in the Bay of Biscay, carrying sails as well as oars. They had also an iron grapple and a kettle in their little ship. The leader and one or two others were partly dressed in foreign garments, and as the old account in Purchas says, "they spoke divers Christian words, and seemed to understand more than we, for want of language, could comprehend." This incident is highly interesting, as showing that Biscayan fishermen had been driven across the ocean, or that Frenchmen or Spaniards had visited the coast of Maine (or Massachusetts, as the case may be,) before the visit of Gosnold, and had there disappeared, leaving only these traces of their visit.

MARTIN PRING

was one of Gosnold's companions. In the spring of the next year he was provided by some merchants of Bristol with two small vessels, with which he made, beyond all doubt, a voyage along the coast of Maine, entering, among other waters, and probably the first he entered on this shore, the Bay of Penobscot. He found a "high country full of great woods," with which the voyagers were greatly pleased, as also with the fishing and harbor-

* See Bryant & Gay's Popular History of the United States, vol. i, p. 263.

age; and, finding silver-grey fountains on the side of Penobscot Bay, he named the whole cluster the Fox Islands, which has been retained, although the corporate name of the principal ones, since 1789, has been Vinalhaven. Gorges relates that Pring made a perfect discovery of "all these Eastern rivers and harbors, and brought the most exact account of the coast that had ever come to hand."

DE MONTS.

After the appointment by the French king of Pierre du Guast, the Sieur de Monts, as Lieutenant-General of Acadia, a vast country stretching from the fortieth to the forty-sixth degree of north latitude, he sailed from Havre de Grace in March, 1604; in about two months reached Nova Scotia, and wintered at a fort he built upon an island in the St. Croix River. With him was the restless and daring navigator Samuel Champlain, and during the winter the latter made a coasting voyage as far as Cape Cod, concerning which little has been related. About the middle of May, 1605, De Monts abandoned his fort, and himself sailed southward in search of a better location for his colony. He visited Mount Desert, entered the Bay of Penobscot and viewed "Norumbegua," as the adjacent country was then understood to be called; entered the Kennebec also, and upon its banks erected a cross and took possession for the French crown; also penetrated the Casco and the Saco, sailed up Portland Harbor, which he named Marchin, from an Indian chief he met there; went on to Cape Cod, whence he returned to St. Croix, unable to make a settlement through fear of the natives, and finally went to Port Royal with his colony.

The voyage of this French explorer is forever linked with the interesting story and beautiful scenery of Mount Desert. Mrs. Clara Barnes Martin, in her interesting guide book to this island, has the following:

From the voyages of this De Monts and of his associates and successors, Mount Desert derives all the human interest of those early years. Champlain first named it "Mons Deserte," from its wild and savage solitudes, and the name "Frenchman's Bay," now applied only to the water lying immediately northeast of this island, then belonged to the whole expanse eastward to the Bay of Fundy. The name perpetuates the memory of the sore strait to which came one Nicholas D'Aubri, a priest who accompanied De Monts in his first voyage. Being one of a party who left their boat to explore the forest, he dropped his sword by a brook where they stopped to drink. Returning to find it, he soon lost his way; and his companions, after vain efforts to rescue him, were obliged to leave him to his fate. For sixteen days the poor priest wandered along the shore nearly starved, till he was discovered by a party who had returned to the spot in search of reputed gold and silver, and was carried back to his companions, who received him as one from the dead. This story, it may be added, is given upon the authority of one of the early historians of Maine. Remembering what war of words has arisen concerning the planting of settlements but little farther west, these traditions are proffered, subject to such amends as more able research may supply.

SAMUEL CHAMPLAIN.

This famous French voyager appeared off the coasts of Maine, which he called "Norumbegue," in September, 1604, with a small vessel from the St. Croix as an expedition by the Sieur de Monts. He found and named the isle "de Monts-deserts," and the Isle au Haut, at the mouth of Penobscot Bay, which have retained their names ever since; sailed up the Norumbegue or Penobscot Bay to the site of Bangor, where he is believed to have moored his vessel at the foot of Newberry street, just below the rocks in the stream; had an interview with the chiefs Bessabez and Cahabis; descended the river safely, and went on coasting to the southwestward, probably to the St. George's River, whence he returned to the St. Croix. He observed on the voyage the Camden Hills, which he called the mountains of Bedabedec. The next year he, with De Monts, was again in Penobscot Bay, among the Fox Islands, but did not ascend the river. Once more, in 1606, Champlain was in the bay, where he stopped to repair his vessel.

GEORGE WEYMOUTH.

Dr. Belknap, in the second volume of his American Biography, holds that the Penobscot Bay and River were discovered by Captain Weymouth and his associates, in June, 1605. He was sent out by the Earl of Southampton and others, in the English interest, to check the designs of the French, whose claim to the Northeast coast was denied. Ostensibly, Weymouth was sent to discover the northwest passage; but he sighted the American coast instead, near Cape Cod, and ran northwardly to the island of Monhegan (which he named St. George), and there dropped anchor. He remained here nearly a month, and made a beginning of agriculture on these shores. His subsequent movements are much in discussion. The following is an extract from the journal of the voyage:

June 12 [1605].—Our captain manned his shallop with seventeen men and ran up the codde of the river, where we landed, leaving six to keep the shallop. Ten of us, with our shot, and some armed, with a boy to carry powder and match, marched up the country toward the mountains, which we descried at our first falling in with the land, and were continually in our view. To some of them the river brought us so near, as we judged ourselves, when we landed, to be within a league of them; but we found them not, having marched well-nigh four miles and passed three great hills. Wherefore, because the weather was hot and our men in their armour, not able to travel far and return to their pinnace at night, we resolved not to travel further.

We were no sooner come aboard our pinnace, returning down toward our ship, but we espied a canoe coming from the further part of the codde of the river, eastward. In it were three Indians, one of whom we had before seen, and his coming was very earnestly to importune us to let one of our men go with them to the Bashabe, and then the next morning he would come to our ship with furs and tobacco.

June 13.—By 2 o'clock in the morning, taking advantage of the tide, we went in our pinnace up to that part of the river which trendeth west into the main, and we carried a cross to erect at that point [a thing never omitted by any Christian travellers]. Into that river we rowed, by estimation, twenty miles.

Whatever profit or pleasure is described in the former part of the river is wholly doubled in this; for the breadth and depth is such that a ship, drawing seventeen or eighteen feet of water, might have passed as far as we went with our shallop, and much farther, because we left it in so good a depth. From the place of our ship's riding in the harbor, at the entrance into the sound, to the furthest point we were in this river, by an estimation, was not much less than three-score miles.

We were so pleased with this river, and so loth to forsake it, that we would have continued there willingly for two days, having only bread and cheese to eat. But the tide not suffering it, we came down with the ebb. We conceived that the river ran very far into the land, for we passed six or seven miles altogether fresh water (whereof we all drank), forced up by a flowing of the salt water.

June 14. We warped our ship down to the river's mouth, and there came to anchor.

15. Weighed anchor, and with a breeze from the land came to our watering-place in Penobscot Harbor, and filled our cask.

The last named place has been reasonably conjectured to be the present George's Island Harbor; the "codde" or bay of the river, the Belfast Bay, in the Penobscot waters; and the canoe seen to have come from Bagaduce, on the east side of Penobscot Bay. The voyage with the shallop, or pinnace, is argued to have been up the channel of the river. Weymouth is supposed to have anchored his ship off the peninsula now called Old Fort Point, and the mountains seen are identified as the Penobscot Hills. The reasoning to support some of these conclusions will be found in the second volume of Belknap's American Biography.

They are shuply controverted, however, by Mr. John McKeen, in a paper contributed to the fifth volume of the Maine Historical Collections, who is supported by writers in a subsequent volume of this series. He holds that Weymouth, according to these entries in the Journal, entered Townsend Harbor, since called Booth Bay, and thence explored the Sagadahoc River. The editor of the Collections does not agree with his arguments, but holds to the Penobscot theory, which ex-Governor Joshua L. Chamberlain, now President of Bowdoin College, in his Centennial discourse on Maine: Her Place in History, seems also to favor. Dr. Palfrey, in his History of New England, suggests the Kennebec as the river of Weymouth's exploration, and others say the St. George's or Sagadahoc; but it must be said, we think, that the weight of authority is with the Penobscot. The fact which seems to us conclusive, is the depth of water the diarist mentions about three-score miles "from the entrance into the sound," which is true of the Penobscot, but not of any other of the rivers in discussion.

The adventurers were greatly delighted with the noble river and the country it waters. The Journal says: "Many who had been travellers in sundry countries and in the most famous rivers, affirmed them not comparable with this—the most beautiful, rich, large, secure harbouring that the world affordeth." One of the old authors says Weymouth set up several crosses upon the land. He made no settlement, however; but sailed down the coast, carrying away five captive Indians, two of whom afterwards appeared in the streets of London, to wonder-eyed and gaping throngs.

SAMUEL ARGALL.

This English adventurer, who three years afterwards by strategy carried off Pocahontas from her father's capital to hold her a prisoner at Jamestown, visited the coast of Maine in 1610, on a fishing voyage. He was driven out of his course by a storm, and landed on a rocky island off Penobscot Bay, where he found "great store of seals," and so called it Seal Rock, a name still appertaining to it. About three years afterwards he returned—Champlain says with sixty soldiers and fourteen pieces of artillery—and learning from the natives of the mission and settlement just beginning under the French in this region, at St. Sauveur, he suddenly attacked them, killing one of the missionaries, as elsewhere related, and completely breaking up the settlement, on the plea that it was within the patent of the Virginia Company. He then sailed up the coast and completed the reduction of the French settlements in Acadia.

THE JESUIT FATHERS.

It is worthy of note that the pious expedition set on foot by Madame la Marquise de Guercheville, the French lady to whom De Monts had ceded his Acadian title, and which bore the Fathers Biard and Masse, Quantun and Gilbert du Thet, was originally destined for Kadesquit, which occupied the site of Bangor. Biard, who had preceded the latter two into the wilderness, had already selected this as a mission station; and when they reached the harbor of St. Sauveur, on Mount Desert, they eagerly inquired the way to Kadesquit. The natives answered that their place was better, and, under plea of a visit to their sagamore Asticon, who was sick, they led the way to a beautiful site on the shore of Some's Sound, so advantageous that the cross was there planted, a slight entrenchment thrown up, and settlement begun, to the utter abandonment of the Kadesquit scheme. Had they gone up the Penobscot instead, they might have escaped the overwhelming disaster which fell upon them, as just above related.

CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH.

This celebrated explorer and soldier, of whom so many romantic stories are told, including the story of Pocahontas, was on the Maine coast in 1614. He landed at Monbegan the last of April, with two vessels from London, and presently, in small boats, explored the shores each way, from Penobscot to Cape Cod, making a map of the coast as he went, which was prefixed to his History. In the title of this first appears the name New England, which some say Prince Charles gave; others say more probably, he only confirmed the name which Smith suggested. The name is contained in Smith's claim that he "broughte our newe England to the subjection of the kingdom of Greate Britain." In his explorations the shrewd Captain picked up a valuable cargo, which was sold abroad to great advantage. His best trading was not in the Penobscot country, where, he says, "our commodities were not so much esteemed," as "the French traders bartered their articles on better terms."

In 1615 Smith made another start upon a voyage to reach New England, but was driven back by storms; and a third venture was intercepted by French pirates, and he was once more compelled to return. He was not heard of again in the New World he had done so much to discover, develop, and advertise.

SUBSEQUENT VOYAGES

to the coast of Maine have no special concern with this history. The Penobscot waters were now well known to the world, and scarcely ten years more elapsed before the habitations of civilization began to rise upon their picturesque shores.

CHAPTER IV.

GEOGRAPHICAL DESIGNATIONS.

Vinland—Skrællinge Land—Mavoshen—Drogeo—Terra de Baccahalhos—The Land of the Bretons—The Country of Gomez—Norumbega—The Term in Literature—Acadia—North Virginia—New England—Nova Scotia—The Waldo or Muscongus Patent—The County of Canada—The Territory of Sagadahock—The County of Cornwall—The Dutch at Penobscot—New Ireland—The Province of Mayne—The District of Maine—The State of Maine.

NO SMALL part of the early history of this Northeastern country is involved in the definitions given by the explorers or early cartographers to the territory now occupied by the State of Maine, or to larger tracts within which that territory was included. As the process of colonization went on, and the demands for more localized government increased, we shall also find that the valley of the Penobscot, or some part of it, was included in various successive county organizations, until at last Penobscot county, with its present limits and subdivisions, stood full-formed.

VINLAND.

Leif, son of Erik the Red, a Norseman and the first settler of Greenland, set out from the settlement at Erik's Fiord in the year 1000, and sailed with a crew of thirty-five men to the southwest, over a track pursued nine years before by Biarne, whose ship Lief had bought. First they reached the land seen by Biarne, Labrador or Newfoundland, which they called Helluland, or the Stone Land. Sailing thence to the coast of Nova Scotia, they called it Markland, or the Woodland. Reaching finally Cape Cod, and, it is believed, the south shore of Rhode Island, and finding there the marvel of vines and grapes, they gave to this south country the name of Vinland, which needs no interpretation, and which the Norsemen subsequently applied to the whole coast between that region and Markland, or Nova Scotia. Vinland, then, was the first country of European designation in which the Penobscot territory, or any part of it, was included.

The "Promontorium Vinlandiæ," as a designation for our Cape Cod, stands out conspicuously upon the chart of the North Atlantic, published by the Icelander Sigurd Stephanius, in 1570. This point, however, because "it was long to sail by," the daring voyagers themselves had called Furdurstrands, or the Wonder-strands.

In the year 1112 Pope Paschal II. appointed Erik Upsi, a Norse ecclesiastic, as Bishop of Iceland, Greenland, and Vinland; and he is very doubtfully said to have visited personally the last-named or North American division of his diocese, in 1121.

"SKRÆLLINGE LAND,"

or the country of the wretched dwarfs—that is, the savages, who were designated by the rude Northmen with the contemptuous epithet of Skrællings (chips, parings, or mere fragments of humanity)—is the term applied upon the map of Stephanius to the whole country between the Promontorium Vinlandiæ and "Marekland."

Mr. Gay, in his Popular History of the United States, starts a very interesting inquiry as to these dwarfish Skrællings. He says:

The assumption is that that these people of the Vinland vicinity were Esquimaux. If that be true, and the term was used merely for want of any other to apply to copper-colored natives, then we are to conclude that the Indians were later comers in that part of the country. Did the first displace the Mound-building people, and then, in the course of time, move upon and displace the Esquimaux of the Atlantic coast? Was it this race who were not smokers, and who made the shell-heaps where no pipes are found?

MAVOSHEN.

The aboriginal designation by which the territory now embraced in the State of Maine was known, is that of Mavoshn, Mavooshen or Mawooshen (Belknap) Mavooshen (Purchas), or Moasham (Gorges). It was the general name, apparently, given by the red-skinned natives of the land. Mr. Belknap, in the second volume of his American Biography, says it was a title for the whole country of Maine and comprised nine or ten rivers, whereof the westernmost was Shawakotock, known to the French as Chouakoet, and to the English as Saco. The easternmost was Quibequessen, somewhere east of the Penobscot. The northern part of the same district, he remarks further, included the Penobscot bay and river, which were also called Pemaquid, though the latter name was afterwards appropriated to the point or reach of land six leagues to the westward. Not far from here dwelt the great chief, the Bashaba, who presumably ruled the dominions of Mavoshen. Purchas' Pilgrimage describes Mavoshen as "a country lying to the north and east of Virginia, between the degrees of forty-three and forty-five. It is forty leagues broad and fifty in length, lying in breadth east and west and in length north and south. It is bordered on the east side with a country, the people whereof they call Tarrantines; on the east with Ephistoma; on the north with a great wood, called Senaglecouna; and on the south with the main ocean, sea, and many islands. In Mavooshen it seemeth there are nine rivers, the westernmost of which is Shawacotoc. At the head of this river, to the northwest, there is a small province which they call Crokemago, wherein is one town. This is conjectured by the historian Williamson to have been "probably the Indian Pegwacket."

The present tract of Penobscot county was, then, anciently a part of "Mavoshen." We shall in like manner proceed briefly to indicate the several geographical designations and civil jurisdictions including the region of which this History is more immediately to treat.

DROGEO.

The sea-chart of the Venetian brothers, Nicolo and Antonio Zeno, drawn about the year 1400, nearly a century before the discovery by Columbus, published in 1558, and beautifully reduced and printed in fac-simile by Dr. Kohl, in the first volume of the new series of the Maine Historical Collections, exhibits three unknown lands in the Western Hemisphere—Icaria, Estotiland, and Drogeo. The first of these, an island, has been identified with reasonable probability as Newfoundland; the second as Nova Scotia; the third as the Norse Vinland, or New England, and upon the map of Lewelel, published at Brussels in 1852, with his Geography of the Middle Ages, it appears precisely in the locality of the present State of Maine. It is blind work identifying the tracts, from the meager indications presented; but the conclusions reached above seem the most probable of any. Drogeo, then, is another pre-Columbian name for the country with which this History deals.*

Drogeo was afterwards depicted upon the old charts as an island, floating somewhere in mid-ocean.

TERRA DE BACCALHAOS.

Upon several of the Portuguese and other old maps, the New England country is included in the vast tract designated as Terra de Baccalhaos, a Portuguese term for the Land of Codfish, said by some to have been discovered by the father of the Cortereals before the time of Columbus. The English sometimes called it "the Country of Bacallaos," and likewise "the Newfoundland," and "the New Isles." The Baccalhaos name designated the island of Newfoundland for a long time.

THE LAND OF THE BRETONS.

Early in the sixteenth century, the hardy Bretons of St. Malo, the Normans of Dieppe, and other Frenchmen, began to appear in fishing voyages upon the coasts of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. The former gave the title to the island of Cape Breton, which bears, as Dr. Kohl remarks, the oldest French name on the American northeast coast. From them also was derived the designation Terre des Bretons, or Land of the Bretons, which appears upon maps of that time as applicable to a wide extent of territory, including Nova Scotia and a large part of New England. It was also described by Ramusio as La Terre Verroe (the New Land), extending from forty degrees to sixty degrees north, and he says many called it, particularly the southern part, La Terre Francais (the French Land).

THE COUNTRY OF GOMEZ.

On the old Spanish maps of North America, the tract of which Maine is now a subdivision is laid down as "La Tierra de Gomez," from Estevan (Stephen) Gomez, a Portuguese in the service of Spain, who sailed in 1525 from Newfoundland, probably, to Florida. He may have seen or touched the shores of Maine, but there is no certain record of it, except, perhaps, a remark hereafter quoted from the beginning of Hakluyt's Discourse concerning Western Planting. Dr. Kohl says, however:

Gomez probably entered this inlet Penobscot Bay, and explored it more accurately than any other part of the coast; and in his report to the king may probably have lavished his praises on its harbors, its islands and its scenery.

We have already noted a fact which lends additional probability to this statement, that the Penobscot river was called the Rio de Gomez on the maps, and also by another Spanish name, the Rio Grande. His voyage adds one more to the nationalities that have claimed jurisdiction or given a name to this region. After that event the fishermen of Biscay, for more than a hundred years, appeared in the waters about Newfoundland with many vessels, amid the fishing fleets of the Bretons, Normans, and Basques, until they were forced away by rival nations about the middle of the seventeenth century.

NORUMBEGA.

This — or Norumbega (Purchas and Belknap), Norumbegua (Sullivan), or Norimbagua (Champlain), etc., etc., — is more strictly a local designation, probably applied, rather than found, by the Europeans who earliest visited the Penobscot waters. Williamsón says, however, in treating of De Monts' expedition:

In ranging the coast westwardly, they entered the bay of Penobscot, which, with the neighboring country, some European adventurers had previously understood by the natives, was called Norumbegua.

L'Escarbot, in his History of De Monts' Voyages, notes the name, in the same passage with "St. Croix," as that of a river in the country of the Etchemins. Purchas's note is "Pemtegoet [Penobscot] is that place so famous under the name of Norumbega." M. Denys, in his Geographical and Historical Description of North America, 1672, mentions "Norimbagua" as the previous name of the first province in what he calls Canada — that province extending "from Pentagoet [Penobscot] to St. John." Belknap's remark seems to cover the exact ground of the real information on the subject:

Norumbega was a part of the same district comprehending Penobscot bay and river, but its eastern and western limits are not described.

Finally, the following interesting discussion of the subject is embraced in Governor Sullivan's History of the District of Maine:

The people of Norumbega were supposed to be an ancient people who lived on the river Penobscot, then called Pemtegeovett, near to which, as it was imagined, a great city once stood, called by the name of Norumbegua. The bounds of New England was conceived to extend to the river Pemaquid, and the country of Norumbegua to be bounded west on that, and to run as far east as Penobscot, including Sheepscoot river, then called Chavacovett. Some suppose it to be a collection of Indian huts, and others an ancient town. In ogilby it is conjectured to be the ruins of an ancient town, which the natives called Arambeck, and had deserted it. Some thought that the country had been called by this name because a colony of Norwegians had anciently been settled there.

The appellation of this part of the country, and of the several parts which were supposed to be within the same, and of the rivers supposed to be there, are not known in the Indian language, nor have the natives any traditions of such towns or cities as are conjectured in the old writers of the American history. On the whole, it may be safely concluded that there never was an ancient country or city called Norumbegua, but that the rage of the day for new discoveries, and the idle tales of the voyagers, gave an imaginary existence to such a place.

The name Arambec, or Arambeag, sometimes found instead of Norumbega, is believed to come nearer the original word, as eag is a well-known termination in many geographical names in the Northeast, meaning land or place. A corruption of this, and the change into a Latin ending, would easily give Norumbega. This designation was generally used by the French, until supplanted by Acadia. Norumbega first appears upon the old maps in a chart of New France, prepared by the Italian Giacomo di Gastaldi, about the year 1550. Here the "Terra de Nvrvmbega," ornamented with neat drawings of trees and mountains, and many figures of natives variously engaged, with fishermen and sea animals off the shore, corresponds closely to the later Nova Scotia. Its shoreline is about 500 miles long. But a small stretch of the coast of Maine is shown.

*The Rev. B. F. Da Costa, however, in his Critical Examination of Dr. Kohl's work, thinks the learned German mistaken in his location of "Drogeo," and that the appellation never belonged to any country so far to the southward as Maine.

Gastaldi doubtless derived the information upon which this map was made from Pierre Crignon, a French navigator and writer, in 1537 or 1539, upon the French explorers, who was the first, so far as is known, to disclose the aboriginal name "Norumbega," by which he names a vast extent of country, including the tract now occupied by Maine. (But Mr. DeCosta says Norumbega was named by Peter Martyr, in 1511. See his The Northmen in Maine: A Critical Examination, etc.) According, however, to this writer's "Discourse of a great French sea-captain of Dieppe [Jean Parmentier], on the navigations made to the West Indies, called New France, from the 40° to the 47° N.," Norumbega reached even to Florida. It was subsequently narrowed to New England, then to the Maine country, and finally to the Penobscot region. The preface to the first volume of the New Series of the Maine Historical Collections remarks that "the ancient Norumbega, embracing sometimes the whole of New England, has a conspicuous place on nearly all the early maps, and retained its name far into the next century, but over a narrower region.

Old Heylin, in his Cosmographie, printed at London in 1652, attempts something like a boundary of this country in the following:

Norumbega hath on the N. E. Nova Scotia, on the S. W. Virginia. . . . Virginia, in the full latitude thereof, extendeth from the 34th degree, where it joins with Florida, unto the 44th degree, where it quartereth on Norumbega.

Now we will let Monsieur Crignon speak for himself in regard to this wonderful land. He says:

Going beyond the cape of the Bretons, there is a country contiguous to this cape, the coast of which trends to the west a quarter southwest to the country of Florida, and runs along for a good five hundred leagues; which coast was discovered fifteen years ago by Master Giovanni da Verrazano in the name of the King of France and of Madame la Regente; and this country is called by many "La Francese," and even by the Portuguese themselves; and its end is toward Florida under 18° west and 38° north. The inhabitants of this country are a very pleasant, tractable, and peaceful people. The country is abounding with all sorts of fruits. There grow oranges, almonds, wild grapes, and many other fruits of odoriferous trees. The country is named by the inhabitants, "Nurumbega;" and between it and Brazil is a great gulf, in which are the islands of the West Indies, discovered by the Spaniards.

But before this, in 1527, the English ship Mary of Guilford, commanded by Master John Rut, had been in North American waters, and "returned by the coasts of Newfoundland, Cape Breton, and Norumbega," as Hakluyt says in his book of Voyages, Navigations, etc. But Hakluyt's first edition was not published till 1589, and Gastaldi must have relied upon Crignon. This old edition of Hakluyt's reads "coasts of Arambec," which probably means the same as Norumbega.

Upon the map of Girolamo Ruscelli, of date 1561, this country appears as "Tierra de Nurumberg" (an evident confusion of "Norumbega" with a noted German city), and is placed on the coast above "Larcadia," or Acadia, which is something like getting the cart before the horse.

Again, upon the map of Michael Lok, of 1582, made after Verrazano's "olde excellent mappe," the country appears as "Norombega," a long island, including everything from Cape Breton to a large strait running from north to south, and supposed by some to designate the Hudson river. All the maps of Lok's time are said by Dr. Kohl to have the name conspicuous upon this part of them. Upon many subsequent maps it is displaced by "Tiera de Bacalos" and other titles, but reappears on Mercator's maps, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, in the "Novus Atlas" of William and John Blaen, 1642, where it is printed as "Norembega," but previously, in a map published by Hondius in 1607, as "Nurumbega."

In a great map of 1543, prepared by order of Henry II., King of France, the name "Aurobagra" occurs near Penobscot Bay, just where other maps have Norumbega, and runs up to a castle or cluster of houses in the place where subsequent charts locate the city of Norumbega. "Aurobagra" is therefore reasonably conjectured to be a misprint for the latter word.

On the map of the celebrated geographer and cartographer, Gerard Mercator, 1568, representing the east coast of North America, we have the first location of a large city or aboriginal capital of the country of Norumbega, on the east bank of the Penobscot, with the name "Norumbega" attached. The existence of such a city is also affirmed by some of the old writers, as Pilot Jean Alphonse, of Xaintonge, who says that Norumbega was a city fifteen to twenty leagues from the sea, whose inhabitants were small and of a dark complexion. The fable was repeated as late as 1607, in the Historie Universelle des Indes Occidentales, and the name is honorably perpetuated in "Norumbega Hall" and otherwise. Yet it must be said that the evidence supporting such belief is very slight and unsatisfactory. Even the maps exhibiting the locality place it upon the east side of the Penobscot ("on the Brewer flats," some writers say), and not upon the site of Bangor.

The tradition of a large city called Norumbega, situated upon the site of the city, seems, however, to have passed into tacit acceptance in that place. But Judge Godfrey and other well-informed local writers speak of it as "the mythical great city," and the like. Champlain says in his Voyages:

From the entrance of Penobscot Bay to where I was, which is twenty-five leagues up the river, I saw no city nor village nor appearance of there having been one; but, indeed, one or two savage huts where there was nobody.

And again, in the account of his voyage of 1605, through Penobscot Bay and up the river, he says of the rumored Norumbega:

They say also there is a great city well peopled with savages, adroit and skillful, and used to the manufacture of cotton. I am sure that most of those who speak of these things have never seen them, and derive their authority from men who know no more than themselves.

All that Champlain reports of possible civilization in the Penobscot wilderness was what he took to be an ancient and moss-covered cross somewhere in the woods. He was undoubtedly mistaken, however, in his identification of this object—unless, indeed, he in 1605 found Weymouth's cross planted up some river the same spring, which would hardly be as yet old and mossy.

Says Heylin, in his Cosmographie:

Most have formerly agreed upon Norumbegua or Arampec, as the natives call it; said to be a large, populous, and well-built town, and to be situated on a fair and capacious river of the same name also. But later observations tell us there is no such matter; that the river which the first relations did intend is Pemptegouet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Agguncia, so far from being a fair city, that there are only a few sheds or cabins, covered with the barks of trees or the skins of beasts.

Upon the whole, it must be concluded that there was nowhere upon the Penobscot, and at no time during the aboriginal period, anything more than the ordinary, wretched Indian villages, at one of which the Bashaba, or chief, had his lodge and petty court.

The Penobscot is designated upon Mercator's map as Rio Grande, or the "great river;" and it soon came to be designated as the "Great River of Norumbega." Thevet, in 1556, mentioning it also as the Grand River on the charts, and called "Agoney" by the natives, says, "which we call Norumbegue," and eulogizes it as "one of the finest rivers in the whole world." He mentions also a little fort erected by the French ten or twelve leagues from its mouth, and named the "Fort of Norumbegue." The "Great River of Norumbega," with the mythical city on its eastern shore, makes a great figure in many maps and charts of the sixteenth century.

The great gulf between Cape Cod and Nova Scotia, not even yet receiving a specific geographical designation of general acceptance, but sometimes called the Gulf of Maine, or of New England, was named by the French fishermen of the earliest day as the Sea or Gulf of Norumbega, from the country on the side of the mainland.

Norumbega has made some figure in other literature than that of travel or history. One considerable work of the old compiler and writer, Richard Hakluyt—the Discourse concerning Western Planting, written in 1584, but not printed until nearly three centuries afterwards, when, in 1877, it first saw the light by the enterprise of the Maine Historical Society—was apparently written for the express purpose of stimulating emigration to Norumbega. In almost his opening sentence he mentions that "those [natives] whom Stephen Gomez brought from the coaste of Maine in the year 1524 worshipped the sonne, the moone, and the starres, and used other idolatrie."

Milton, also, in the tenth book of the Paradise Lost, uses Norumbega for the purposes of illustration. His words are:—

Now from the North
Of Norumbega and the Samoel shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeons, armed with ice,
And snow and hail, and stormy gust and flaw,
Boreas and Crecias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods and rocks upturn.

The noblest poetical tribute, however, as yet paid to Norumbega, is by the Quaker poet, John G. Whittier, in a contribution to the Atlantic Monthly for June, 1869. We give it place here without abridgment, except to remove the historical foot-note:—

NOREMBEGA.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

The winding way the serpent takes
The mystic water took,
From where, to count its beaded lakes,
The forest sped its brook.

A narrow space 'twixt shore and shore,
For sun or stars to fall,
While evermore, behind, before,
Closed in the forest wall.

The dim wood hiding underneath
Wan flowers without a name;
Life tangled with decay and death,
League after league the same.

Unbroken over swamp and hill
The rounding shadow lay,
Save where the river cut at will
A pathway to the day.

Beside that track of air and light,
Weak as a child unweaned,
At shut of day a Christian knight
Upon his henchman leaned.

The embers of the sunset's fires
Along the clouds on high;
"I see," he said, "the domes and spires
Of Norembega town."

"Alack! the domes, O master mine,
Are golden clouds on high;
Yon spire is but the branchless pine
That cuts the evening sky."

"O hush and hark! What sounds are these
But chants and holy hymns?
"Thou hear'st the breeze that stirs the trees
Through all their leafy limbs."

"Is it a chapel bell that fills
The air with its low tone?"
"Thou hear'st the tinkle of the rills,
The insect's vesper drone."

"The Christ be praised!—He sets for me
A blessed cross in sight!"
"Now, nay, 'tis but yon blasted tree
With two gaunt arms outright!"

"Be it wind so sad or tree so stark,
It mattereth not, my knave;
Methinks to funeral hymns I hark,
The cross is for my grave!

"My life is sped; I shall not see
My home-set sails again;
The sweetest eyes of Normandie
Shall watch for me in vain.

"Yet onward still to ear and eye
The baffling marvel calls;
I fain would look before I die
On Norembega's walls.

"So, haply, it shall be thy part
At Christian feet to lay
The mystery of the desert's heart
My dead hand plucked away.

"Leave me an hour of rest; go thou
And look from yonder heights;
Perchance the valley even now
Is starred with city lights."

The henchman climbed the nearest hill,
He saw nor tower nor town,
But, through the drear woods, lone and still,
The river rolling down.

He heard the stealthy feet of things
Whose shapes he could not see,
A flutter as of evil wings,
The fall of a dead tree.

The pines stood black against the moon,
A sword of fire beyond;
He heard the wolf howl, and the loon
Laugh from his reedy pond.

He turned him back: "O master dear,
We are but men misled;
And thou hast sought a city here
To find a grave instead."

"As God shall will! what matter where
A true man's cross may stand,
So Heaven be o'er it here as there
In pleasant Norman land?

"These woods, perchance, no secret hide
Of lordly tower and hall;
Yon river in its wanderings wide
Has washed no city wall;

"Yet mirrored in the sullen stream
The holy stars are given;
Is Norembega then a dream
Whose waking is in Heaven?

"No builded wonder of these lands
My weary eyes shall see;
A city never made with hands
Alone awaiteth me—

"' Urbs Syon mystica ' ; I see
Its mansions passing fair,
' Conditæ calo ' ; let me be,
Dear Lord, a dweller there!"

Above the dying exile hung
The vision of the bard,
As faltered on his failing tongue
The songs of good Bernard.

The henchman dug at dawn a grave
Beneath the hemlocks brown,
And to the desert's keeping gave
The lord of fief and town.

Years after, when the Sieur Champlain
Sailed up the mystic stream,
And Norembega proved again
A shadow and a dream,

He found the Norman's nameless grave
Within the hemlock's shade,
And, stretching wide its arms to save,
The sign that God had made, —

The cross-boughed tree that marked the spot
And made it holy ground:
He needs the earthly city not
Who hath the heavenly found!

ACADIA.

The next designation for the Maine and much other country east of the Penobscot, and at one time, as we shall see, for a tract west of that river also, was French, originally Acadie, a corruption, some say, of Arcadia, the classic name of the picturesque old tract in the middle of the Peloponnesus (the modern Morea), the Switzerland of Greece, whose people believed themselves to be the oldest tribe on the peninsula. This old-time derivation is not now generally accepted, but the word is held to be of unmixed Indian origin. According to Mr. Porter C. Bliss, said to be very competent authority on Indian words, Aeadie is a pure Micmac word, with the signification of "place." The Eastern Indians still use it in composition; and Passamaquoddy, or "the place of the pollock," is derived from the Etchemin word pestum-acadie. Its own derivation is from ahkt, "land," or "place," and da, an interjection denoting admiration, the whole implying a fertile or abundant country exciting pleasant surprise. The name first appears in a map of "Tierra Nueva," or the New Land, by Ruscelli, in 1561, as "Larcadia," designating an unlimited tract between "Tierra de Nurumberg" (Nurumbega) and "La Florida." It was afterwards written and printed "L'Arcadie," "L'Accadie," "la Cadie," "L'Acadie," "Lacadie," "Accady," and "Accadia," and even more eccentric shapes, but is commonly known, in speech and writing, as Acadia. In this country, on the Nova Scotian side—

In the Acadian land, on the shores of the basin of Minas, where—

Distant, secluded, still, the little village of Grand Pre Lay in the fruitful valley.

the thatch-roofed village, the home of Acadian farmers,
Men whose lives glided on like rivers that water the woodlands, Darkened by shadows of earth, but reflecting an image of heaven,"— here Mr. Longfellow has placed the opening scenes of his poem "Evangeline."

It is not certainly known when or by whom the name was first applied to this region. It appears to have been already in use at the time (November 8, 1603) the first royal grant of the country was made, by Henry IV. of France and Navarre, to Pierre du Guast, otherwise the Sieur de Monts. The words of the charter are, as rendered into English: "We do appoint, ordain, make, constitute, and establish you our Lieutenant General, to represent our person in the country, territory, coasts, and confines of Acadia, from the fortieth to the forty-sixth degree; and within this extent, or any part thereof, as far inland as may be practicable, to establish, extend, and make known our name, power, and authority, and therewith subject, cause to submit and obey, all the people of the said land and circumjacent country," etc., etc. This was the first civil jurisdiction proclaimed by an enlightened government over Eastern Maine. It was a vast tract thus assigned to the supremacy of De Monts, extending from the latitude of Philadelphia to the northern slopes of Mount Katahdin, including the southern part of the present New Brunswick and nearly the whole of Nova Scotia, and extending indefinitely from the Atlantic toward the Pacific.

De Monts sailed for his new possessions in two well-equipped vessels, March 7, 1604, with a companion of some note, M. de Pontrincourt, and a pilot of much greater fame, the renowned Samuel Champlain, the courageous explorer from whom the beautiful water between New York and Vermont takes its name. Reaching the coast off Nova Scotia, they presently explored the Bay of Fundy, selected the site of Port Royal, later Annapolis, visited and named St. John's River, and reared a fortification on the island they called St. Croix—from the brooks about it, which came "crosswise to fall within this large branch of the sea" (the Schoodic, which also came to be known as the St. Croix). Here De Monts wintered; here was the first settlement, though not a permanent one, in Acadia—the settlement at Port Royal not beginning until the next year; and here was in some sense the first seat of government for the vast province of Acadia, including all of the present Penobscot county, except a parallelogram of about thirty miles, in length and breadth, at the northern end.

De Mont's rule was soon broken, as to nearly the whole of his mighty domain, by the establishment of North and South Virginia, under English auspices; but the French dominion in this quarter was restored by the treaty of St. Germain, March 9, 1632, under the third article of which "His Majesty of Great Britain promises by his ambassador to give up and restore to his most Christian Majesty all the places occupied in New France, Acadia, and Canada by the subjects of his Majesty of Great Britain, causing the latter to retire from the said places, and deliver to the commissaries of the most Christian King in good faith the power which he (the ambassador) has from his Majesty of Great Britain, for the restitution of said places." The English settlers were, however, not wholly excluded from the country, and many of them remained. New France, mentioned in the article, was the general designation for all the vast tracts in North America, not only at the East, but upon the great waters of the West, supposed to be vested in the crown of France, by the discoveries of her brave and pious explorers. The name is said to have been given first by John Verazzani, the Florentine voyager in the French service, who sailed the entire coast from Florida to Newfoundland in 1524, and took possession of the Acadian country for France. He was killed (and eaten, some say) by the Indians, somewhere upon its rock-bound shores. In 1627 the title was legally recognized in the grant of the domain to this body corporate of one hundred and seven formed by Cardinal Richelieu, and called the Company of New France. Of this immense region Acadia, Canada, and Louisiana—each of which, especially the last, was in territorial extent and empire—were component parts.

Some years before the treaty of St. Germain, the French king had made a grant of land on the river St. Johns to M. Claude St. Estienne de la Tour, a professed Protestant, to whom was afterwards (February 11, 1631) given a commission from Louis as Governor of Acadia. The next year after the treaty, in 1633, Cardinal Richelieu appointed M. de Razilla, an officer in the army, to take command in Acadia. La Tour, whose authority was now subordinate to that of Razilla, continued to reside upon the St. Johns, while the latter received an extensive grant west of La Tour's, including the bay and river of St. Croix, and the islands "twelve leagues on the sea." Razilla lived chiefly, however, in the fortress of La Heve, east of Liverpool, on the south shore of Nova Scotia, and there had the seat of his government. The English from New Plymouth, on the Massachusetts coast, had already established a trading-house on the eastern shore of Penobscot Bay, and remained undisturbed until early June, 1632, when a French vessel, piloted, strange to say, by a recreant Scotchman, came down upon it from the further parts of Acadia. Mr. Williamson thus continues the story:

Her crew, conducting in the true character of freebooters, pretended they had put into harbour in distress, and would esteem a permission to repair leaks and refresh themselves as a great favor. Emboldened by generous courtesies received, as well as by information of the master's absence with most of his men on a tour westward for goods, they first examined the fort-arms to ascertain if they were charged, then, seizing swords and loaded muskets, ordered the three or four remaining keepers of the truck-house to surrender, upon pain of instant death, and to deliver their goods and immediately put them on board. Having in this shameful manner rifled the fort of its contents, to the amount of £500, they bade the men this taunting and insulting farewell, "Tell your master to remember the Isle of Re."

The last was an allusion to the crushing defeat sustained by the English at an island, on the French coast six years before. The traders at Penobscot, notwithstanding this raid, restored and continued their post and traffic there for three years longer, when they were compelled to leave. They had meanwhile, in 1633, founded another trading-house at Machias, with a valuable stock and a small, but well-armed and trusty guard. This, too, was plundered by La Tour the next year, who killed two of the defenders in overcoming resistance and carried off a large amount of property, with the survivors as prisoners. He afterwards, when taken to task by a New Plymouth colonist for this transaction, boldly declared that his authority was from the King of France, "who claims the coast from Cape Sable to Cape Cod," and that, if the English attempted to trade to the east of Pemaquid, he would sieze them. He then dismissed the Englishman with his countrymen, the prisoners taken at Machias.

Many years afterwards, in 1654, La Tour was unpleasantly surprised by an English expedition with secret orders from Cromwell to reduce the French possessions in this quarter. The station at Penobscot was surrendered without resistance; La Tour, at St. John's, was wholly unprepared for battle, and his settlement was captured without difficulty, as also Port Royal, La Heve, Cape Sable, and every colony in the province. This was in time of peace between France and England, and the former power naturally complained of the invasion; but Cromwell, claiming under the older title, refused restitution. The next year the conquest was formally confirmed to the English; but again, in 1667, it was returned to France under the Treaty of Breda.

In the summer of 1635, M. D'Aulnay, who had command, under Razilla, of the Acadian country west of the St. Croix, made another descent upon the trading house at Biguyduce, or Penobscot, and again plundered it of goods. He did not leave the traders and their employees, as La Tour did, to revive the business upon their departure; but sent them away altogether, with the swelling injunction and threat, "Go now, and tell all the plantations southward to the twentieth degree that a fleet of eight ships will be sent against them within a year, to displace the whole of them; and know that my commission is from the King of France." D'Aulney remained upon the spot with eighteen followers, and fortified against expected attack from the English. This soon came at the hands of Captain Girling, in command of a large vessel called the Hope, which had been engaged for the purpose at Ipswich by the New Plymouth colonists, with the pledge of two hundred pounds, if the enterprise against D'Aulnay succeeded. The enemy were too well entrenched, however, and, when Girling had-fired away all his ammunition, nothing remained but to maintain a silent blockade in front of the fortress. Meanwhile Massachusetts was making common cause with New Plymouth for the expulsion of the French from Biguyduce; and, under the advice of a captain of much military experience, named Sellanova, was preparing a more extensive expedition against D'Aulnay, when a tremendous storm did so much damage in the fields and otherwise that provisions could not be had for it, and it was abandoned. The French were presently relieved of Girling's presence by the arrival of part of a shipwrecked crew of Connecticut mariners, who had been kindly treated by Razilla, and furnished with a shallop for their voyage home. In some way difficult to understand, these unfortunates fell into the hands of D'Aulnay, rather than Girling: and the Frenchman refused to let them go unless the obnoxious ship from Ipswich should depart. The Hope was now probably hopeless of success, and only too glad to get away. She accordingly sailed for home, and D'Aulnay then allowed his later visitors to leave, bearing a courteous letter to the Governor of New Plymouth. He and La Tour both made a solemn declaration afterwards that they would never, unless expressly ordered to do so, claim any territory west of Pemaquid.

As to the extent of Acadia (or Nova Scotia), it is usually held not to have reached further westward than the line of the Penobscot. It is observable, however, that during the English occupancy 1755-67, in the grant to Sir Thomas Temple and the younger La Tour, the Protector's charter describes their tract as "the territory sometimes called L'Accadia, and that part of the country called Nova Scotia, from Merliquash [later Lunenberg] to Penobscot, the river St. George, and the Muscongus, situated on the confines of New England"—which carried the boundary far to the southwestward of Penobscot. But Mr. Williamson avers that "it is certain, however, that the French had at no time any territorial possessions westward of Penobscot River and Bay waters, which were for many years the divisional boundary between them and the English."

The failure, in the treaty of St. Germain's, to prescribe definite limits to Acadia, led to endless controversies, and the grant itself was furthermore always an unpopular measure with the colonists in New England. The recession of the Acadian province to France by the treaty of Breda, or rather in a subsequent article, was also greatly lamented; and it was a grave question concerning the grant to Sir Thomas Temple, whether the Crown could cede any other right over the territory than that of sovereignty. Indeed, upon the pressure of his claims on the English Government, he was nominally allowed the total sum of £16,200 for his purchase money and expenses of fortifications and other improvements, though he never received it. The article of cession in this treaty made no prescription of boundaries, but mentioned by name, as included in the transfer, St. Johns, Port Royal, La Heve, Cape Sable, and Pentagoet or Penobscot, which thus again became Gallic territory. The French occupied all the coast from Cape Breton to Penobscot, where they had a stockaded fort, as also at Port Royal and St. Johns. According to Hutchinson's History of Massachusetts, the French remained in possession of Penobscot until about 1664.

M. de Bourg is reputed to have been the first French Governor of the restored province. M. Densy succeeded to the rulership of Acadia, under the title of Lieutenant-Governor, and remained in the province for thirty years. In 1672, he published in Paris a short history of the country. M. Manival was subsequently Governor.

NORTH VIRGINIA.

We now return to the English domination of the Penobscot country. Following the discoveries of Captain Weymouth, an association of Englishmen was formed, to promote European colonization and the introduction of Christianity among the savages on the shores of North America. To these King James I. gave a patent, April 10, 1606, as two organizations under one general council,—the former called the London Company, from the residence of the corporators, or the First Colony of Virginia; the other the Plymouth Company, or Second Colony. The territory granted the two companies, and claimed by the English crown, by virtue of the discoveries of its subjects, stretched from the thirty-fourth to the forty-fifth parallel, or from the latitude of Columbia, South Carolina, to that of Passamaquoddy Bay and Oldtown, in Penobscot county. The whole was known by the general name of North and South Virginia; but the lower part of this county, below Oldtown, was included in what was commonly known by the separate name of North Virginia. The Second or Plymouth colony had special jurisdiction here, being permitted to begin a plantation anywhere above the thirty-eighth degree, while the London Company might colonize anywhere below the forty-first parallel, it being provided, however, that the second settlement should not be made within one hundred miles of that first planted. Each company was ruled by a Subordinate Council of thirteen, nominated by the crown and resident with the colony; and both were under the paramount jurisdiction of a General Council of Virginia, also of thirteen and named by the king, but resident in England. The colonies were fully empowered by the patent to seize and expel intruders, and had other important rights and privileges granted.

Under this charter the settlement at Jamestown, in South Virginia, was made in April, 1607; and in August of the same year, Popham and Gilbert, of the Plymouth Company, formed the Sagadahock colony, at "the mouth of a fair navigable river" on the coast of Maine, which gave the name to the settlement. George Popham, brother of the Lord Chief Justice of England and senior captain of the voyage, was appointed president of the colony; Raleigh Gilbert, nephew of Sir Walter Raleigh, admiral; Edward Harlow, master of the militia; Ellis Best, marshal; John Scammon, secretary of the colony; James Dairs, commander of the fort; and Gome Carew, searcher, whatever that might be.

The foundation for a great State, apparently, was thus laid in the wilderness of the Northwest. Little account was made of the French claims to the same territory, and the courageous, enterprising Englishmen went on to develop the land and hold it boldly for king and country. In 1613, under the auspices of Madame de Guercheville, a devoted and enterprising Catholic Frenchwoman, who had secured a transfer of De Monts' rights to her, a colony and mission was established at St. Saviour, on Mount Mansel, now Mount Desert Island. Captain Argal, the voyager, on a fishing venture in these waters was wrecked in Penobscot Bay, and there heard of the French occupation so near that locality, and at once advised the Virginian authorities of it.* They promptly equipped a fleet of eleven fishing vessels with fourteen cannon and sixty men, with Argal in command, and sent it to dispossess the French. The latter were taken completely by surprise, but made a faint resistance, during which one of the Jesuit priests, Du Thet, was killed by a musket-ball. The fort was captured, the Catholic cross destroyed and another cross put up bearing the title of the English king, in token of repossession of the place. The fleet then sailed up the coast, destroying the remnant of De Monts' settlement at St. Croix, and reduced the fort and hamlet of Port Royal to ashes, after which the expedition returned home. England and France were at peace; but the former justified resistance to the encroachments of the French upon the ground of the original discovery by Cabot, the formal possession taken by Gilbert, the North and South Virginia patent, and the repeated visits of the English and the settlement of the country. These claims appear to have been tacitly admitted by France, since no resentment was expressed at the expedition, nor reprisals attempted. A small colony of the Frenchmen was permitted to remain at Port Royal, with Biencourt, the former commander, still at their head.

NEW ENGLAND.

After the explorations of Captain Smith along the Maine coast, in 1614, and the preparation of his famous map and history, Prince Charles, to whom the documents were submitted, prefixed to them the designation New England, applying, it is supposed, to the whole region between Manhattan, or New York, and Newfoundland. Six years afterwards, November 3, 1620, a charter was granted by King James to forty knights and gentlemen of England, under the title of "The Council established at Plymouth, in the County of Devon, for planting, ruling and governing New England in America." A more extensive tract was granted them—and that, too, absolutely in fee simple—than either of the preceding companies, English or French, had received. Its territory was defined as between the 40th and 48th degrees of northern latitude in breadth—that is, from the parallel of Philadelphia to that of the Bay of Chaleurs and Trinity

* Palairot, in his description of the English and French Possessions in North America, asserts that the French at this time had "a fort at the mouth of the river Pentagoet or Penobscot, and Argal drove them away." Ogilby, author of a Description of the New World, also says that the Jesuits had become masters at Port Royal, and begun a fort at Pentagoet. Neither statement is believed to be sufficiently supported.

Bay, Newfoundland, well to the north of the present boundary of Maine,—and in length by the same breadth "throughout the mainland from sea to sea"—from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which was a mighty stretch of empire, regarded in either length or breadth. The privileges previously granted in the Virginia charter were continued in this, except that coinage of money was not allowed. No Catholic, also, was to be allowed to settle in the colony. Sir Ferdinando Gorges, a great and venerable name in the history of Maine, who had become President of North Virginia under the former patent, was now most prominent in the new Council; and the next in influence and authority to him was John Mason, the virtual founder of New Hampshire. To Mason was made the first territorial grant by the Plymouth Council, being the lands between the Merrimac and Naumkeag rivers, from their sources to the sea, with all islands within three miles of the coast—a tract to which he gave the name Mariana. The next grant was obtained by Gorges from the Council, in order more effectually to exclude the French from the northeastern part of New England, to Sir William Alexander, Secretary of State for Scotland, under the name of

NOVA SCOTIA.

It was intended to designate the country simply as New Scotland, in honor of Sir William's native land; but the charter was written in Latin, and the name was translated accordingly into a form which it retains to this day. The limits of the grant (which was confirmed September 10, 1621, by patent from the king) were from Passamaquoddy Bay through the river St. Croix, to the farthest source or spring which comes from the west; thence north in a direct course overland to the first spring that runs into the great river of Canada; thence northward unto the river and along the shores of it eastward to Gaspe; and thence by the coast, exclusive of Newfoundland and Cape Breton, around Cape Sable and across the Bay of Fundy to the place of beginning, with the islands and waters within six miles of the shore. This was an unconditional grant in fee simple to Sir William, without any provision for civil government in the patent. The country was erected, says Mr. Williamson, "into a royal palatinate, to be holden as a fief of the Scottish crown, the proprietary being invested with the royal rights and prerogatives of a count-palatine. The two rights of soil and government being in this way originally separated, were for a long period kept distinct, and sometimes in different hands. These territories must have been considered the king's Scottish dominions; and even then it will perplex the wisest civilian to discover the justice or propriety of the tenure."

This remarkable grant has been noted by Governor Joshua L. Chamberlain, in his Centennial Address on The Place of Maine in History, as the only palatinate ever established on the American continent.

It will be observed that no part of the Penobscot county, and but little of any part of Eastern Maine, was included in the grant to Sir William Alexander. Afterwards, however, the name Nova Scotia seems to have been applied to much of the country southwestward of the St. Croix, as we have already found that in 1656 the Lord Protector's charter to Sir Thomas Temple, then Governor of the Province, to La Tour, who had held office there under the French, and William Crown, granted "the territory sometimes called L' Accadia, and that part of the country called Nova Scotia, from Merliquash to Penobscot, the river St. George and the Muscongus, situated on the confines of New England." This unmistakably included the Penobscot country, and we are thus justified in the introduction of Nova Scotia as one of the geographical designations and civil jurisdictions under which this country once existed. Mr. Williamson says, however:

The phraseology and terms of Cromwell's patent to La Tour, Temple, and Crown, have proved to be the grounds or causes of endless confusion and severe conflicts. Both Acadia and Nova Scotia are mentioned, yet the limits and extent of them, as expressed, have long perplexed the ablest statesmen; or, in other words, the language of Cromwell's charter has been urged by opponents to show that Nova Scotia must have embraced another and greater region than what is contained in the charter to Sir William Alexander.

Under this grant Sir Thomas Temple, the chief proprietor, in position and influence, at least, was made governor. Young La Tour exhibited no title to lands southwest of the Passamaquoddy; and Captain Leverett, then commander at Penobscot, received orders from the Protector to surrender his powers and deliver the country to Temple, who thus obtained personal jurisdiction over the whole of Eastern Maine and even to St. George's—perhaps, although concerning this there is a doubt, to the Muscongus. Before leaving England to assume command of his province, Sir Thomas also bought all the La Tour rights and titles in Nova Scotia or Acadia, taking a regular assignment thereof. He arrived on the coast in 1657, and remained Proprietary Governor ten years, conducting at the same time a profitable trade with the natives and colonists. He was, Mr. Williamson avers, "a gentleman of humane and generous disposition, remarkably free from the bigotry and religious prejudices of the times. To cite an instance of his disinterestedness—when the courts of Massachusetts were trying Quakerism as a capital crime in 1660, he went and told them that if they, according to their own declaration, "desired the Quakers' lives absent, rather than their deaths present," he would carry and provide for them at his own expense. "Yet, and should any of them return," said he, "I will again remove them."

After the Restoration, Sir Thomas was continued in office, but as Provincial Governor, and for a time appears to have been regarded as the sole proprietor of the entire province. His new commission was dated July 17, 1662, and expressly gave him jurisdiction from the eastern extremity of the great peninsula to "Muscongus, on the confines of New England," with the exclusive privilege of trading with the natives in his province. But, notwithstanding the favor with which he was treated, he was soon to lose the entire portion of his domain lying within the present limits of Maine, as will be related by and by.

THE WALDO PATENT.

A part of the Penobscot country, in the south of it and west of the bay and river, was included in the Muscongus or Waldo Patent, granted March 2, 1630, by the Plymouth council, to John Beauchamp, of London, and Thomas Leverett, of Boston, England. The territory conveyed lay between the Penobscot and Muscongus waters, from the seaboard to an east and west line so far north as would include a tract thirty miles square, without trespassing upon the Kennebec or other patent. This boundary, as since definitely settled, lies upon the south line of Dixmont, Hampden, and Newburg townships, in Penobscot county. As will be seen in our special histories of the townships, some large tracts in the southern part of this county were also included in the Muscongus Patent, in order to eke out certain deficiencies in the territory granted, in which Waldo county is situated.

Nearly ninety years after the grant, the celebrated Waldos became principally interested in it. From them it took the name of the Waldo Patent, and is thus laid down upon the map prefixed to Sullivan's History of the District of Maine, and other old charts. The grant was originally for the purpose of Indian traffic only, and a trading-post was maintained by the owners upon St. George's river until the outbreak of the first Indian war.

THE COUNTY OF CANADA.

In 1635, nearly three years after Charles the First, by the Treaty of St. Germain, had surrendered to France "all the places occupied by British subjects, in New France, Acadia, and Canada," the Plymouth Council nevertheless, being then about to dissolve, separated their entire patent into twelve royal provinces. The first of these, which included the Penobscot region, covered the county between the St. Croix and Pemaquid rivers, from the head of the latter by the shortest line to the Kennebec, and from the point of junction upwards to its source. This tract, extending north to the forty-eighth degree, received the name of the County of Canada. It was assigned to Sir William Alexander, Earl of Sterling and grantee of Nova Scotia, which he had now lost by the remarkable act of Charles in the convention of St. Germain. It was provided that lots should be drawn in the presence of the king for each of the royal provinces, according to which the assignments were to be made. On the 1st of April the Council notified his Majesty of their action, and prayed him to grant patents to the assignees thus ascertained, with the powers and privileges which had been granted in Maryland to Lord Baltimore. The petition was granted, and new patents were given to Lord Sterling, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, John Mason, and others. The Plymouth Council surrendered its constitution shortly after, and submitted to dissolution. It was succeeded by eleven of the King's privy councillors, as Lords Commissioners of all his American Plantations, with Gorges as Governor-General of New England.

Notwithstanding the new patent and the English claims, the French, under D'Aulnay de Charnisy, who has already come into our account of Acadia, established themselves upon the peninsula on the eastern side of Penobscot Bay, at a place now Castine, then called Major-biguyduce, a corruption of the Indian name. He, says Williamson, "constructed fortifications, not far from a good harbor, which was well sheltered by islands, and from which large ships might ascend the river forty miles. He considered himself the immediate successor of Razilla [late military commander of Acadia, or Nova Scotia], and entitled to the paramount government of the great peninsula, from Cape Sable to Canseau, especially at La Heve, where Razilla died; and Port Royal, where D'Aulnay himself sometimes resided; also at Passamaquoddy, where was the location of Razilla's own patent; boldly claiming, moreover, by express commission from the latter, the right of command westward to Penobscot, and as much farther as the French dominions extended." He was expressly directed by the king, however, to confine his jurisdiction to the country of the Etchemins, which, though somewhat indefinite, it was hoped would keep him from infringing upon the territory of his rival, La Tour.

We have before recorded the story of the fruitless attack of the English vessel Hope, under Captain Girling, upon D'Aulnay at Penobscot. He was much disliked by the English settlers between that point and the Piscataqua; and their sympathies, as well as those of the authorities at Boston, now the seat of government for New England, were generally with La Tour, who was a Protestant, while D'Aulnay was a Catholic. Finally, with the indirect aid of the English, he fitted up a small fleet, with which he proceeded against D'Aulnay, who had shortly before blockaded his fortress at St. Johns, and forced him to flee to Boston. He found D'Aulnay still at the mouth of St. Johns river, attacked his vessels vigorously, and compelled him to quit the harbor, flee down the coast to Penobscot, and there run his ships aground, for the purpose of fortifying his trading-houses more promptly and thoroughly. A few miles to the northeast he had a mill, with some adjacent buildings; and there the Massachusetts men had a brisk action with the enemy, which resulted in some loss on each side. The expedition then returned to Boston, with a vessel captured from D'Aulnay, laden with valuable furs.

Soon afterwards, a party of prominent settlers from the plantations below the Penobscot, on their way to the St. Johns, to collect moneys due from La Tour, were forcibly detained for some days by D'Aulnay; in revenge for which one of them—Wannerton, of New Hampshire—presently led a party against the Frenchman's farm-house at Penobscot, captured and fired it, and killed D'Aulnay's cattle, but lost his own life in the transaction. D'Aulnay was now thoroughly enraged, and issued commissions for the seizure of every colony vessel found east of the Penobscot. He was soon obliged, however, to acknowledge that he had been hasty, and sent a commissioner to Boston to negotiate a treaty. Several articles were adopted, October 8, 1644, and temporary peace established. The next year he violated both the treaty and his sovereign's instructions to maintain peace with the English, sailed for La Tour's stronghold at the St. Johns early in the spring, making prize

New England vessel on the way, and began a bombardment of the fort. This was now defended by the wife of La Tour, a lady of great energy and courage, under whose command so stout a resistance was made that D'Aulnay was soon compelled to draw off, with twenty of his force killed, thirteen wounded and his ship so much disabled as to be in imminent danger of going to the bottom. In 1646 another treaty was made by D'Aulnay with the authorities at Boston; but again, in April of the next year, attacked La Tour's fort at St. John's, and was this time successful. His enemy's wife was made a prisoner; the rest of the garrison massacred, it is said; and a large amount of plunder, probably worth over £10,000, carried to Penobscot. Madame La Tour, borne also to D'Aulnay's capital, died there within three weeks, of grief and the shame of defeat and imprisonment. The latter himself ended a troubled career in 1651, and, strange to say, the following year the fortunes of the rival houses were united by the marriage of La Tour and D'Aulnay's widow.

Mr. Williamson thus sums up the results of the antagonism of La Tour and these belligerent Gauls, and of the residence of D'Aulnay at Penobscot:

Twelve years' predatory warfare between two ambitious rivals, the subjects of the same crown, produced effects highly injurious to the settlements in the Province of Maine, and the plantations farther eastward. Sometimes they committed great wrongs, and even depredations; their menaces frequently excited alarming apprehensions; free trade was interrupted; and it was always difficult for the people so to adjust their conduct by the maxims and rules of prudence as to keep themselves out of the quarrel.

The principles of D'Aulnay's great and boasted honor were uniformly the servants of passion or interest. He furnished the natives with fire-arms and ammunition, and taught them the great power and use of the gun. His priesthood, consisting wholly of friars, made the savages believe that Catholic rites and ceremonies were the essentials of religion, and that the dictates of the missionaries were equivalent to the precepts of divine authority; whereas the orthodox Puritans carefully withheld from the Indians the hunting-gun, so necessary among them to obtain the supports of savage life, while their pious missionaries very honestly instructed them that real religion consisted in regenerating the affections of the heart, in the immaculate purities of life, and in the practices and dispositions towards others which we would wish them to exhibit towards us. But these were refinements which the untutored, unenlightened savages could not understand. The usages of retaliation had acquired a kind of sanctity among them which they believed Nature herself tolerated. Indulgences and superstitious forms, as allowed by the priests, were altogether more accordant with their notions and habits than the self-denying doctrines of restraint and the rigid precepts of reform, as taught by the Protestant missionaries.

Since this region had been in the occupancy of the French, neither the settlements at Penobscot, at Mount Desert, at Machias, at St. Croix, nor the place eastward, had flourished. Most of the French emigrants were ignorant, poor, and unenterprising; the government was of a despotic military character; and the commanders, as we have seen, were perpetually contending. The social regulations were under the direction of the ecclesiastics; rights and wrongs were not treated nor regarded in a proper manner; and no man of good sense and intelligence dwells contentedly where life and property are insecure."

La Tour had now undivided sway over the County of Canada. It was, however, simply a military command, without any civil powers or jurisdiction. It was, says Williamson, "destitute of every property directly promotive of settlement, for arms and civil liberties are regulated by different laws." His dominion was regarded with much distrust and jealousy by the English, and in 1653 the General Court of Massachusetts prohibited the transportation of supplies either to the French or the Dutch, with the latter of whom England was then at war. A small cargo of flour and other necessaries was presently allowed to La Tour, as his good-will and the influence of the Catholic missionaries might yet be serviceable to New England. The end came, however, the next year, in the reduction of Nova Scotia, including the capture of Penobscot, by Cromwell's ships, as previously narrated. The following year, 1655, the whole Acadian Province, with the County of Canada within it, was confirmed in English occupancy and sovereignty. La Tour, who, shortly before, had apostatized from Protestantism and become a Catholic, in consideration of the confirmation of the province to him by the French Crown—a man, says Williamson, “of equivocal character, either Catholic or Protestant, as was most concomitant with interest”—died soon after the capture of his domain, leaving one son and an immense territorial estate, which was made by Stephen D' La Tour, his son, the basis of claims upon the English Government that were recognized by Cromwell in the grant to him, jointly with Sir Thomas Temple and William Crown, Englishmen, of “L'Accadia” and the country from Merliquash, or Lunenburg, to the Muscongus.

THE TERRITORY OF SAGADAHOCK.

During the thirteen years' occupancy of Acadia, or Nova Scotia, by the English, between the conquest under Cromwell and the recession to the French by the treaty of Breda, the province was mostly under the governorship of Sir Thomas Temple, as has been related in our closing paragraphs concerning Nova Scotia. In 1664, soon after the Restoration, Charles, having revived the project of an American empire, with twelve royal principalities or provinces, and the county of Canada being now extinct, made an extensive grant to his brother James, Duke of York and Albany, from whose title New York and its capital derive their names. The patent conveyed all the Dutch territories upon the Hudson, with Long Island, and likewise “all that part of the mainland in New England, next adjoining to New England; thence extending along the seacoast to a place called Pemaquid, and up the river thereof to its farthest head, as it tendeth northward; thence at the nearest to the river Kennebeck; and so upwards, by the shortest course to the river Canada, northward.” This tract not only cut a great tract out of the domain of Sir Thomas Temple, but also encroached upon the Plymouth territories about the headwaters of the Sheepscot and the Damariscotta, and included the whole of the Muscongus (later Waldo) patent, before mentioned, with a large part of the Pemaquid patent and the Brown and Tappan right, which had been granted from time to time by the Plymouth Council, and the islands along the seaboard above Pemaquid, of which some were now inhabited. Nevertheless, the sweeping grant seems to have been maintained in its integrity for about a quarter of a century, or until the duke ascended the throne as James II., when it reverted to the crown. That part of it in the Northeast was designated by different names. It was popularly known as the Duke of York's Property or Province, but by his agents was called New Castle, a name also given to the southwestern part of the duke's patent on the Delaware, where it is still preserved. They further termed it the County of Cornwall. But the fittest name for it is that by which it is best known in history—the Territory of the Sagadahock. Long afterwards, under William and Mary's charter of October 7, 1691—the famous “Provincial Charter”—the Province of Sagadahock was constituted between the river of that name and the St. Croix, as will be more fully related hereafter.

The Duke of York became viceroy of the king over his American possessions. Under him Colonel Richard Nichols, after the subjugation by him of the Dutch at Manhattan, became Deputy Governor of the Province, including the Territory of Sagadahock. A royal commission was appointed April 15, 1664, consisting of Nichols, Sir Robert Carr, who was also a commander in the expedition against the Dutch, George Cartwright, and Samuel Maverick, “to settle the peace and security of the country”—which meant mainly the recognition of the Duke's authority and that of the Commission in Massachusetts and Maine. After a rather troublous time with the General Court at Boston and the exercise of much despotic authority in the towns and plantations between that place and Eastern Maine, they crossed into the Territory of the Sagadahock and opened a court September 5, 1665, at the dwelling of John Mason, on the east bank of the Sheepscot. Here they summoned the inhabitants of the several settlements to present themselves and formally submit themselves to His Majesty's Government, within the duke's patent. Only twenty-nine persons, whose names are given by Sullivan and Williamson, appeared in response to this summons. They comprised, the latter thinks, but a minor part of the whole number of settlers between the Sagadahock and the Penobscot, and, we may add, none north or east of the latter river. A chief constable for the county was appointed, also three magistrates or justices of the peace, and a recorder. No regular government was instituted, however,—no legislation, trial by jury, or other element of an enlightened and thorough-going administration. Assurances were given the people that their possessions and rights should not be disturbed, although no sufficient means were provided for the redress of wrongs, and the policy was revived in all conveyances, whether by the duke's agents or the planters, of encumbering them with quit-rents. A treaty was negotiated with the Indians, which contained judicious provisions for the settlement of difficulties and the prevention of hostilities between them and the whites. In early October the commissioners went back to York, where their high-handed measures, which we need not recapitulate, soon awakened the most vivid and widespread indignation. The colonists in the Northeast were not rid of them altogether until the next year, when a new war between France and England broke out. At the close of this, by the treaty of Breda, Nova Scotia, including the Penobscot country, was restored to the French, and passed under the government of De Bourg, who claimed jurisdiction over the whole of the duke's Eastern patent, even as far as the Kennebec river. This claim was not admitted by Massachusetts, however, and a new survey of the north line of the Plymouth patent, made in 1672, carried it three miles northward of the previous location, and brought it to White Head island, in Penobscot Bay. The next year the Dutch recaptured New York, and the Duke of York was thus left with a very small jurisdiction within his former vast patent. A new county, between the Sagadahock and St. George's rivers, the new north line, and the seacoast, was erected by the General Court of Massachusetts, and called Devonshire, with a full equipment of officers. But the succeeding year, 1674, by another turn of fortune's wheel, the province of New York was restored to the English, and a new patent issued to the duke, embracing all the territories described in the patent of ten years before. Sir Edmund Andros was appointed Governor of New York and Sagadahock. No disturbance was made, however, by either the duke's officers or the French, of the new County of Devonshire, in which the authority of the General Court remained paramount, and the administration of justice went on regularly and tranquilly. A project was started at one time to alienate to the crown the whole territory between the Merrimac and the Penobscot, in order to create of it a royal province for the Duke of Monmouth, natural son of Charles II. The duke himself was fully bent upon this scheme, from which he expected to derive an annual income of £5,000, but it was never consummated.

In August, 1663, Colonel Thomas Dungan succeeded Andros, by appointment of the duke, as Governor of New York and Sagadahock. He appointed two commissioners, John Palmer and John West, to manage the affairs of the county of Cornwall, who behaved very badly, and attempted to exercise jurisdiction as far as to the St. Croix. They seized a cargo of wines landed at the French port at Penobscot, because duties had not been paid at the Pemaquid custom-house, and were guilty of many other high-handed acts. Their authority and that of Dungan in the Sagadahock country, was suspended or nullified by the appointment of Andros in 1789, as Governor of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Maine, Plymouth, Pemaquid, and Narragansett (or Rhode Island).

February 16, 1685, the vicerealty of the Duke of York in America was ended by his ascent of the throne as James II., upon the death of his brother. We hear little more of his Territory of Sagadahock. The French had generally undisputed possession east of the Penobscot, and established one of their forts upon the bay. De Bourg was acting Governor; Jesuit missionaries, traders, and settlers were at and about Penobscot in considerable number, and a profitable trade with the natives was carried on, while "the whole coast between Penobscot and St. Croix remained untouched by the arts of culture and improvement, and almost without inhabitants."

THE COUNTY OF CORNWALL.

The facts relating to the erection of this county are these: Upon the organization of the General Assembly of the Province of New York in 1683, and the subdivision of the Province into counties, "Pemy Quid and all Territories in those Parts, with the Islands adjoining," were ordered to constitute the county of Cornwall, which should be entitled to send one member to the Assembly. Under this provision Gyles Goddard, of New Dartmouth, represented the county for a time. He was also a justice of the county and lieutenant of "a foot company" in the militia—also afterwards surveyor. It is said that there was a re-enactment of the ordinance by the New York Assembly October 1, 1691,* although the fort and country about Pemaquid were surrendered to Massachusetts by the royal order September 19, 1686.

THE DUTCH AT PENOBSCOT.

In 1674 the Dutch, having concluded a treaty with England, but being still at war with France and anxious, as they had been for a long time, to share the fishing and other advantages of the North American coasts with the English and French, sent a vessel to sieze the fort at Penobscot. It was captured without much loss, but was soon voluntarily relinquished. Again, however, in the spring of 1676, a Dutch man-of-war appeared before the fort and compelled its surrender. It was the intention now to maintain firm possession of the Penobscot country; but, as the fort was held to be within the Duke of York's patent, and so in New England, a small fleet was dispatched from Boston, which soon forced the intruders to abandon the position. The singular part of the transaction is that the English themselves did not remain as masters of the situation, but at once after the reduction of the place abandoned it. As a consequence of these events, however, it is said that Andros was induced the next year to build a fort at Pemaquid and take formal possession of the whole Eastern domain granted to his superior, the Duke of York. It is one of the interesting facts of Penobscot history that the country was for a period, though a very short one, virtually under the government of the Netherlands.

THE PROVINCE OF SAGADAHOCK.

William and Mary succeeded to the English throne February 16, 1689, upon the abdication of James II. The next year Nova Scotia was recaptured for England by an expedition under Sir William Phips, a native of the Province of Maine, born at Woolwich, upon the Sheeps-cot. Out of the southwestern part of it was carved, October 7, 1691, by the Provincial Charter of William and Mary, a tract described by no specific name, but which came to be known, probably from the Duke of York's Eastern grant, as the Province of Sagadahock. It was defined as "between the river Sagadahock [or Kennebeck] and Nova Scotia," extending "northward to the river of Canada," and included the second of the Royal Provinces of 1635, that between the Sagadahoc and Pemaquid, and the first, or county of Canada, stretching thence to the St. Croix. The new province with Massachusetts, Plymouth, and the Province of Maine unitedly form the Royal Province of Massachusetts Bay. Acadia, or Nova Scotia, was included in the charter, but exclusive jurisdiction over it was eventually conceded by Massachusetts to the crown. "All islands and inlets lying within ten leagues directly opposite the mainland within the said bounds," were embraced in the charter, but all English subjects were to have a common right of fishery upon the coast or "in any arms of the sea or still-water rivers." Sir William Phips was commissioned the first Royal Governor. The events in the Penobscot country during the terrible Indian war have been related in our chapter upon the Indians. In 1693, as preparations for another war were beginning, the fort at Penobscot was temporarily in the possession of the French, with the Sieur de Villieu resident commander. It was at this place, October 14, 1697, that the commissioners from Massachusetts met the Indians and arranged preliminaries of peace.

* Mr. Williamson (History of Maine, I., 421) avers that the King's commissioners for settling (rather unsettling) the affairs of New England, "erected the whole territory into a county, by the name of Cornwall," upon their coming hither in 1665. We have taken the more circumstantial statement from a later and perhaps better authority.

In 1697, both France and Massachusetts—the former by the Treaty of Ryswick, as included in "Acadia," and the latter by its charter—claimed the Sagadahock Province. The next summer the English fishing-vessels were warned off the coast and out of the Gulf of Maine. No bloodshed resulted, however, until Queen Anne's war with France, declared May 4, 1702. In the Treaty of Utrecht, March 30, 1713, the dispute was quieted by the concession to the English of "all Nova Scotia, or Acadia, with its ancient boundaries." From this time the fee to the ungranted lands in the Province remained in the Crown, while the civil jurisdiction was vested in Massachusetts. In 1729, one Colonel David Dunbar succeeded in getting the entire Province into his hands, by royal proclamation, with instructions to settle, superintend, and govern it, and with scarcely any other condition than that he should preserve within it 300,000 acres of the best pine and oak-timbered land, for the use of the Crown. He made some considerable improvements between the Sheepscoot and Muscongus rivers, but his arbitrary conduct soon caused discontent, which resulted in his downfall in 1732. He retained his office, however, of Lieutenant Governor of New Hampshire, until his return to England in 1737.

In 1737, the white population of Sagadahock, embracing Georgetown, Sheepscoot, Damariscotta, Townshend, Harrington, Walpole, Broad Bay, and St. George's River, was estimated at 1500. There were then within the present limits of Maine about 7,000 people of civilized stock. It will be observed that none of the localities named was within the Penobscot valley; and the subsequent history of the Sagadahock Province has little concern with the purpose of this History. It endured for a number of years longer, and then was absorbed into other geographical subdivisions.

"NEW IRELAND."

We anticipate the course of history, chronologically regarded, a little in the mention of this, in order to close this chapter properly with an account of the erection of the Province, and then of the State, of Maine. In 1780, a proposition was set on foot for the erection of a British Province covering the territory between the Penobscot and the St. Croix, to be called "New Ireland," and to have Bagaduce, now Castine, for its capital. It was expected that the loyalists or Tories from the American colonies, who had already settled along the coast in considerable number, would colonize the province. Thomas Oliver, a graduate of Harvard College and formerly Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, was to be its Governor, and the principal officers of the new state were nominated. The British Ministry and the King gave their approval to the scheme, and an attempt would doubtless have been made to carry it into effect, had not the Attorney-General delivered the opinion that the chartered rights of Massachusetts Bay did not end at the Penobscot, as held by the ministry, but extended to the St. Croix, and would be infringed by the establishment of "New Ireland." With this decision the project received its quietus.

MAINE.

The charter granted by Charles the First to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, dated April 3, 1639, erected the province or county of Mayne. Some of the writers affirm that it took its name from the province of Meyne, in France, said to have been owned by the queen, Henrietta Maria; but it has been demonstrably shown that this was no part of her estate, and it is equally well settled that the ancient name for the mainland, as distinguished from the islands off the shore, was taken for the new province. It did not comprehend the whole of the present State of Maine, nor any part of the Penobscot country. Its boundaries, beginning at the mouth of the Piscataqua, ran up that river and through Newichawannock and Fall River northeastwardly one hundred and twenty miles; from Piscataqua harbor along the coast to the Sagadahoc; up that river and the Kennebec one hundred and twenty miles; and thence overland to the north end of the line first defined. The charter included also the islands and inlets within five leagues of the shore between the Piscataqua and the Sagadahoc, the north half of the Isles of Shoals, and the islands Capawock and Nantican (supposed to be Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket) near Cape Cod. Gorges, with his heirs and assignees, were created absolute Lords Proprietors of the province, reserving only to the crown supreme dominion, faith, and allegiance, and the right to exact a yearly tribute of a quarter of wheat and one-fifth of the avails of pearl fisheries and from gold or silver mines—the revenue from which sources at that time must have been small indeed. Thomas Gorges was appointed deputy-governor; and Messrs. Richard Vines and Richard Bonythan, of Saco; Henry Joscelyn, of Black Point; Francis Chamfernon and Edward Godfrey, of Piscataqua, afterwards Kitley; and William Hook, of Agamenticus, were made councillors of the province.

It is not at all the purpose of this History to follow the existence of the Province of Maine through its troubled years. So much of its beginning has been introduced here, in order to preface appropriately the story of that great subdivision of New England, bearing the same name in part, which came finally to include the Penobscot region.

The Province of Maine (formally purchased by Massachusetts from Sir Ferdinando Gorges in 1677, for £1,250,) with its ancient boundaries, but separated into the three counties of York, Cumberland and Lincoln, endured until about half the period of the Revolution war was spent, when the "District of Maine" was erected by act of Congress. The immediate occasion for the change resided in the appellate jurisdiction over all maritime causes, which the State of Massachusetts had conceded to Congress, or the tribunals that might be created by it, and had authorized an appeal from the State courts in any case where the subject of a foreign power at peace with the United States claimed a captured or libelled vessel or cargo. The right of appeal could be waived, however, and final trial had in the Superior Court of Massachusetts. Congress accordingly, in 1778, divided the State, for judicial purposes, into three districts—the southern, middle and northern, whereof the last constituted the District of Maine. Timothy Langdon, Esq., of Wiscasset, named by Mr. Williamson as "a lawyer of considerable eminence," was appointed judge of the district; and Mr. Nathaniel Thwing, of Woolwich, clerk.

Twelve years afterwards, when the census of 1790 exhibited a population in Maine of 96,530, Maine was "for many purposes," to quote Williamson's phrase, "recognized by Federal authority as a district, and as if it were a separate State." It was, says the historian, "more expressly formed into a district, and jurisdiction assumed over all its affairs belonging to the National Government. Such, among many, were light houses—the single one in Maine, at Portland Head, and the appurtenant lands, being ceded to the United States. All the coasts and ports in Maine were classed into nine commercial districts, in each of which there were appointed a collector and other custom-house officers."

The collector appointed for the Penobscot district was John Lee; for Frenchman's Bay, Melatiah Jordan. A new District Court was created, with David Sewall judge; William Lithgow, jr., of Hallowell, United States attorney; Henry Dearborn, of Pittston, marshal; and Henry Sewall, clerk.

Full jurisdiction over the District of Maine, except in the matters delegated to the General Government, was maintained by the commonwealth of Massachusetts, until the State of Maine was formed, the latest-born of all States of the Union upon the Atlantic seaboard, save Florida. Agitation for the separation of Maine from Massachusetts began almost at once upon the close of the Revolutionary war. Mr. Williamson says:

The want of a distinct government had been often felt during the late war, and was still recollected. As the State debt was large, there must be heavy taxes through a series of years, which most men would like to avoid. An excessive thirst for superfluities was draining the country of money, while thousands were poor and perplexed with debts. These, and such as had everything to gain and nothing to lose, were inclined to try an experiment. There were, however, advocates of the measure among all classes—men of probity, wealth, and intelligence, who believed a separate administration would be of essential benefit to every portion and interest of the community. Some of the greatest opponents were men in office, and all of them could present plausible and correct pleas that the generous favors and provident care which the people of Maine had at all times received from the State Government ought to silence complaint, and that by a separation at the present juncture, the vigor and force indispensable to the protection and security of the district would be essentially weakened, if not altogether paralyzed.

It is an incident of special interest that the first newspaper published in the State—the Falmouth Gazette, started January 1, 1785—was established to concentrate and promote the expression of public opinion in behalf of separation. A preliminary convention was held at Falmouth, October 5th, of the same year, at which an address to the people of the district was voted, and a call issued for a delegate convention, to meet January 4, 1786, to consider further the question of separation.

We need not follow the agitation and discussion through the next third of a century. The fullness of time for the rising Commonwealth of the Northeast arrived in 1819. The Democratic newspapers and politicians now generally advocated separation; the Federalists as generally opposed it. Nevertheless towns in the district petitioned the General Court, in May, for separation. A law was approved June 19th, submitting to the voters of Maine the question: "Is it expedient that the District shall become a separate and independent State upon the terms and conditions provided in 'an Act relating to the separation of the District of Maine from Massachusetts proper, and forming the same into a separate and independent State?'" On the fourth Monday of July the people responded "yes" by a vote of 17,091 to 7,132. October 11th, a convention assembled in Portland, and proceeded with the preparation of a constitution for the new State. It was approved by popular vote in town meetings on the first Monday in December, and application was promptly made to Congress for admission into the Federal Union. Many weeks of delay were caused by the agitation in that body concerning the extension of slavery, arising from the contemporaneous appeal of Missouri for admission, which resulted in the famous Missouri compromise. All obstacles were cleared by the 3d of March, 1820, when the act for the admission of Maine was passed, and on the 15th of that month and year she became a sovereign State.

The intelligence was received in Bangor with great satisfaction and general gratulation. On the day when separation became finally an accomplished fact, a salute of three guns was fired at daylight, another of thirteen at sunrise, and eleven more at noon.

We reserve for another chapter some account of the county organizations affecting the Penobscot country.

Hammond, Pluribus,

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

GOVERNOR PLAISTED.

General Harris M. Plaisted, of Bangor, Governor of the State, was born in Jefferson, New Hampshire, November 2, 1828, son of Deacon William and Nancy (Merrill) Plaisted. His parents possessed little of this world's goods beyond the resources of a rocky farm within the shadow of the White Mountains, but to their children they left a rich inheritance in their exemplary lives of industry unremitting, and of piety most pure and sincere. For nearly forty years they were members and pillars of the Baptist Church in Jefferson. The father died in 1854, and the mother two years later. Noticing his death the local paper (Coos Democrat) said of him:

He was a good man, and true in all his relations of life; a good husband and father; a good citizen and an honest man. Scarcely have we ever known one whose character was so positive, and whose life was so earnest, so universally respected and beloved by all who knew him. We never heard a word spoken, we never heard of a word spoken, to his dispraise—not even one of those little qualifying words, "but" or "if," so often used to cloud commendations that can but be rendered.

General Plaisted was one of a family of nine children, six sons and three daughters—three of whom, besides himself, made their homes in Maine—Hon. William Plaisted, of Lincoln, who has been a member of the State Senate from this county; Dr. Plaisted, late of Farmington, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and surgeon of a Maine regiment during the war; Mrs. Church, deceased wife of Cyrus P. Church, Esq., of Bradford. One son, Charles, is now living in Lancaster, New Hampshire, who has represented his town in the New Hampshire Legislature.

General Plaisted comes of good legal as well as fighting stock. His grandfather, the Hon. Samuel Plaisted, was for several years Judge of the New Hampshire Court of Common Pleas, and a native of Berwick, in this State; was descended from Colonel John Plaisted, of Portsmouth, who was a member of the New Hampshire Assembly from 1693 to 1727; Speaker in 1697, 1717, and 1727; a member of the Royal Council from 1702 to 1716; a Judge of the Supreme Court from 1699 to 1719, and Chief Justice in 1716-19. The father of Colonel John was Captain Roger Plaisted, a distinguished officer in the Indian wars that make so dark a chapter in the early history of New England. Roger came to Berwick about 1650, and was killed in battle with the Indians October 17, 1675. The savages, about one hundred and fifty, made an attack on the settlement, and were stoutly resisted by Captain Plaisted in command of the two upper garrisons. At the first alarm he sent a messenger to Major Waldron, at Dover, New Hampshire, importunately beseeching aid; "for," said he, "we are all in great danger of being slain unless our God doth wonderfully appear for us," and, in the true spirit of the age, added: "They that cannot fight let them pray." No assistance came to him, but in the fight the next day his desperate resistance saved the settlement, though at terrible cost.

"Being greatly over matched," says the historian, "some of his men sought safety in flight, but he, disdaining to fly or yield, though urged again and again to surrender, fought with desperate courage until literally hewed down by the enemy's hatchets. Two of his sons, unwilling to leave the intrepid man, sought their retreat too late and were slain. Such being the fate of this Spartan family, whose intrepidity deserves a monument more durable than marble. The father had represented Kittery four years in the General Court, and was highly respected for his uncommon valor, worth, and piety. He and his sons were buried on his own land near the battle-ground, full in view from the highway leading through Berwick; whose lettered tombstone tells succeeding ages: 'Near this place lies buried the body of Roger Plaisted, who was killed by the Indians October 17, 1675; aged forty-eight years.'"^{*}

Among the descendants of the brave old Indian fighter are Governor Goodwin, of New Hampshire, and Governor Fairfield, of this State, also Judge Peters, of the Supreme Court of Maine.

General Plaisted is the eighth in descent from Roger Plaisted. Until the age of seventeen he remained at home in New Hampshire, working on his father's farm and attending the district school. During the next three years, spring and fall he attended the academy at Lancaster, St. Johnsbury, or at New Hampton, paying his way by "doing chores" for his board, and "ringing the bell" for his tuition; teaching school winters and working on the farm summers.

In 1849 he entered college at Waterville, Maine, (Colby university) where he graduated in 1853. During his college course he taught the village school in Waterville three winters, and was principal of the Waterville Liberal institute three terms. He was also superintendent of schools, elected by the town, for three years.

In 1855 he graduated from the law school of the University of Albany with the highest honors of the institution, winning the first prize, the gold medal, for the best essay on equity jurisprudence. After pursuing his studies one year in the office of Hon. A. W. Paine, of Bangor, he was admitted to the Bar in 1856, and in October, the same year, opened an office in that city, where he has since made his home. He was for three years—1857-60—a member of the staff of Governor Lot M. Morrill. His first vote was cast for Hon. A. P. Morrill, Temperance candidate for Governor in 1853.

In 1861 he entered the army as lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh Maine infantry, and was soon after promoted to colonel. He entered active service in March, 1862, and commanded his regiment through the Peninsular campaign of General McClellan, participating in most of the great battles of that memorable campaign from the Siege of Yorktown to Malvern Hill. He commanded a brigade in the Siege of Charleston under General Gillmore in 1863. In April, 1864, he was transferred, with his brigade, to Virginia, and commanded his brigade in General Grant's great campaign against Richmond in 1864-65, which resulted in the overthrow of the ^{*} Williamson's History of Maine.

Confederacy. During this campaign his command was engaged with the enemy and had men killed and wounded on fifty-nine different days—losing in the aggregate one thousand three hundred and eighty-five out of two thousand six hundred and ninety-eight, and his command never moved to the front without him while he was in the service. He was twice promoted by the President “for gallant and meritorious conduct in the field,” to brigadier-general, and major-general by brevet.

During the war he was at home—once on sick leave, and recruited over three hundred men—once for the purpose of filling up his regiment, which had been more than decimated in battle, and recruited three full companies. Directly and indirectly, he succeeded in keeping his regiment full and in the service to the close of the war. The recruiting fees allowed him, as well as any one who recruited for the army, amounted to over eighteen hundred dollars—all of which he turned over to his soldiers. For this generous and patriotic act he received, in the spring of 1864, through the Portland Press, the felicitations of Mayor McLellan.

On taking leave of his old brigade General Plaisted made to it the following farewell address, full of sensibility and pathos, such as can animate only the citizen soldier “whose bayonet thinks”—from every line of which shines out the spirit of the true soldier and patriot:

To the officers and soldiers of the Third brigade—Eleventh Maine, Tenth Connecticut, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts, One Hundredth New York, Two Hundred and Sixth Pennsylvania.

At last, soldiers, it becomes my duty to say farewell! That word may sometimes be spoken and not carry with it the heart's regret, but not by him who has, for years, shared the pleasant companionship of soldiers.

That companionship with you I have shared in a campaign which will be celebrated even in the world's history, celebrated for the brave deeds and manly virtues of a patriot army contending for government, freedom and empire; yes, soldiers, with you! I will not rehearse your history in that campaign. Suffice it to say, the record shows you engaged your country's foes and had killed and wounded some of your number on fifty-nine different days! that your losses in the aggregate were one thousand three hundred and eighty-five out of two thousand six hundred and ninety-eight. Your name and fame are as familiar as household words in the camps of this army corps and among your fellow-citizens at home. Your iron will and firmness have won for yourselves the proud title of “The Iron Clads.” That cowardly cry, “we are flanked,” has never been heard in your ranks. When other troops have given way on your right or your left you have shown to your enemy that you had no flanks, no rear; that the Third brigade was all front, and that, too, of steel. How well that front has been maintained the long list of your casualties sadly but gloriously attest. Your brave deeds will be remembered in your country's history and be the proud boast of your descendants.

When reviewed by the Lieutenant General and the Secretary of War, not long since, your soldierly bearing won from those high officials the strongest expression of their approbation and delight. What would they have thought had they seen you FIGHT!

Be proud of your record, veterans; you have a right to be.

The respect and confidence of such troops after such service is honor enough. It is sufficient reward for the best efforts, the best endeavors of a lifetime. I am indebted to you, comrades. Your conduct has afforded me the keenest pleasure of my life, and while life shall last memory will constantly recur to the conduct of the “Iron Brigade” with as much pride and gratitude as the heart is capable of.

May the day come quickly when you can return to your homes to resume your peaceful pursuits and to receive the honors which belong to our country's defenders. Then will you in your civil life vindicate the high character of the army by aiding to restore and preserve the public morals, and by proving to your fellow-citizens that in learning to become good soldiers you have become the best of citizens.

In conclusion, I desire to repeat for your encouragement the language of Washington to his brave troops, who had won for us the cause we are now contending to maintain: “Let me remind you,” said he, “you, the private soldiers, of the dignified part you have performed in the great struggle. For happy—triple happy—will he be accounted hereafter, who has contributed, though in the least degree, to the establishment of this gigantic Republic on the broad basis of human freedom and empire.” Immortal honors will belong to you as saviors of the Republic, no less than to our fathers as founders of it. Farewell!

To the Eleventh Maine, my old companions, farewell!

H. M. PLAISTED.

The military career of General Plaisted from the commencement of the war in 1861, when as a private citizen he raised a company of volunteers and took the field in the cause of his country, to the victorious close of the great struggle in 1865, when, as Brevet Major General of volunteers, he returned to his home in Bangor, forms one of the brightest pages in the history of Maine troops, and links that history with the most brilliant achievements of the Union army. It is fitting that, to a record so brightly told, we add the expressed recognition of his merits by his superior officers and comrades in arms.

During the Peninsular campaign in 1862, he served under General Naglee. The latter having been promoted to the command of a division, was desirous that Colonel Plaisted should command his (Naglee's) old brigade, and wrote to the Vice President, Mr. Hamlin, as follows:

At my instigation our mutual friend, Colonel Harris M. Plaisted, is an applicant for promotion that he may command my old brigade. I can assure you it cannot fall into better hands. He has been well tried on the Chickahominy, at Fair Oaks, White Oak Swamp, and other battlefields of the Peninsula, and sustained himself and regiment in such a manner that his State will refer to the history of the war and the conduct of the Eleventh Maine with pride and extreme satisfaction. Let me ask of you as an especial favor, that you will use your influence with the President and secure the “star” for Colonel Plaisted.

In 1863 General Plaisted commanded a brigade under General Gilmore in the siege of Charleston, and was warmly recommended for promotion.

In October, 1864, he was again recommended for promotion by Major Generals Terry, Ames, and Foster, his corps and division commanders. Major General Terry, the hero of Fort Fisher, wrote as follows:

Colonel Plaisted is a brave, patriotic, and loyal man, and has faithfully served the country since early in the war. His regiment is not only one of the best in the Tenth Army Corps, but one of the best which I have ever seen.

He is more than ordinarily attentive and zealous in the performance of his duty, and equally careful for the comfort and welfare of his men. In the battle of the 7th instant (New Market Road) he handled his brigade with marked skill and ability, and it was as much due to his efforts as to the efforts of any one else that our flank was not turned and the battle not lost.

General Foster wrote:

The discipline of his brigade (the Third of the First Division) is of the highest order, and its fighting qualities unsurpassed by any in this army. Colonel Plaisted having commanded it since its organization at Hilton Head, is, in my judgment, entitled to the greater share of the credit for the remarkable efficiency which it has attained. Colonel Plaisted is an officer of unbounded zeal and energy, and his loyalty and patriotism knows no bounds.

General Ames (from Maine) wrote:

The credit for the excellence of his regiment undoubtedly falls to him. I have been connected with this corps for months, and it is my opinion, as well as that of the officers of the higher grades in the corps, that the Eleventh Maine Volunteers is far superior to any Maine regiment in the Army of the James, in fact that it is unsurpassed by any regiment from other States. The conduct of the Eleventh Maine in every battle it has participated in has called forth the highest praise from all, and I must acknowledge it causes me the strongest feelings of State pride in Maine troops.

The following tribute from the officers of one of the regiments of his brigade was forwarded to General Plaisted after his return home:

At a meeting held the 30th day of May, 1865, by the commissioned officers of the Tenth Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, at camp near Richmond, Virginia, Colonel E. S. Greely being president, and Lieutenant J. W. Hawxhurst secretary, Captain F. G. Hickerson, Captain James H. Linsley, and Chaplain H. Clay Trumbull were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressing the feelings of the officers of this regiment towards General Plaisted, their late brigade commander. The following preamble and resolutions having been reported by said committee, were unanimously adopted:

“WHEREAS, General H. M. Plaisted, our brigade commander during long and arduous campaigns, has been forced, in consequence of failing health, to leave the military service he loved and adorned, and has now retired to private and civil life, that he may have formal assurance of what, from his long association with us, he must fully understand are the true and hearty personal sentiments and opinions of the officers of the Tenth Connecticut—

"Resolved, That while our commander, General Plaisted, had our sincere esteem for his genial social qualities and his ever kindly and courteous personal bearing, our respect for his high integrity and marked attainments in scholarship and military science, and our confidence in his brave and experienced soldierly lead, he merited our especial admiration for his moral courage, in choosing, on more occasions than one, to risk his own advancement rather than to risk in foolhardy assaults the lives of the brave men he commanded, while his presence with them when they were most exposed showed that he never held them back from unwillingness to share all dangers to which they were properly called of duty.

"That the unvarying and remarkable successes of his command are the best evidences of General Plaisted's faithfulness and ability as a soldier, and that no higher tribute of praise can be paid to his skill and bravery than that he was a worthy commander of the 'Iron Brigade.' That until the memory of the events in which we bore a part with him and under him have passed from our minds, we shall ever cherish pleasing recollections of General Plaisted as an able commander, a gallant soldier, and an estimable Christian gentleman.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by our president and secretary to General Plaisted, with assurance of our individual respect and regard.

"E. S. GREELY, President,
Colonel Tenth Connecticut Volunteers.

"Lieutenant J. W. HAWKURST, Secretary."

That General Plaisted possesses the highest moral as well as physical courage is evidenced by the following order issued by him prohibiting "whiskey rations" to the officers under his command:

Hereafter requisitions for whiskey—the one gallon per month—by commissioned officers of this brigade will not be approved at these headquarters.

The colonel commanding the brigade believes that a scheme could not be devised better calculated to ruin the young men holding commissions in our army and to impair the discipline of the service than this "one gallon a month" whiskey allowance; for such an habitual use of intoxicating drink cannot fail to engender habits which, if not in the service, must in after years prove ruinous to those who indulge in it.

But this gallon of whiskey—this jug of rum a month—is degrading to the high character of an officer in the United States army, both in his own estimation and in the estimation of his men. It destroys the respect which is due him as an officer and gentleman, and thus saps the very foundation of military discipline.

Whiskey, as a beverage, it must be admitted, is a useless indulgence at the best, and one which the officer must deny to his men. The Colonel commanding is free to say that no officer possesses the true spirit of a soldier who is not willing to practice that self-denial which it is his duty to enforce upon the men of his command. It is believed by him that the officers of his command have a proper appreciation of themselves and of the service, and, therefore, will readily discountenance a practice which tends to the greatest evils, and which can be only a useless indulgence.

In May, 1865, after leaving the service, General Plaisted returned to Bangor to resume the practice of his profession, worn down by fever and ague from the effects of which he has never fully recovered.

In 1867 he was elected Representative from Bangor to the State Legislature, and re-elected in 1868.* He was delegate, from the State at large, to the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1868, which nominated General Grant for the presidency. He was elected Attorney General of the State by the Legislature in 1873 after a severe contest, and re-elected in 1874 and 1875. It fell to his lot as Attorney General to conduct, in behalf of the State, during his three years of office, fourteen capital cases, among which were the celebrated trials of Wagner, Gordon, Lowell, Reed, Benner, Robbins, the "Annie B." murderer, and Carson, twenty-two days on trial.

So carefully and skilfully were these cases prepared and managed no verdict was set aside by the full bench on law. Some of these cases called for advocacy of the highest order. He was always equal to the occasion. The celebrated Wagner case was the first which called forth all his powers. This lifted him in reputation as advocate to a high rank in his profession. In a column of editorial comments the Boston Daily Advertiser, of June 20, 1873, characterized his argument in this case as a "model for such speeches," and as a "piece of masterly rhetoric."

He was a member of the LXIVth Congress from the Fourth District, serving on the Committee of Public Buildings and Expenditures of the Treasury Department. He was also member of special committees on ventilation of the Representative Hall, and Proctor Knott's committee to investigate the "Whiskey Frauds," so-called. For the whole of the long session, up to the middle of August, 1876, General Plaisted was taken from the floor of the House by the labors of these committees. He also served for several weeks a member of the sub-committee appointed from the Committee on the Treasury Expenditures. General Plaisted was not a candidate for a second term, on account of a vote of the convention of 1875, which gave the succession to Aroostook county.

Immediately on his return from Washington General Plaisted resumed work in his office. In 1877 he engaged with F. H. Appleton, Esq., in the preparation of "Plaisted and Appleton's Digest," a digest of the sixty-eight volumes of the Maine Reports—a work of fourteen hundred pages, which was completed the day he was nominated for Governor. He had previously published two other works, "The Lowell Trial," and "The Wagner Trial." He has also prepared for future publication the history of the Plaisted family.

June 1, 1880, General Plaisted received the unanimous nomination for Governor of two conventions—the Greenback convention of one thousand five hundred and fifty delegates, and the Democratic convention of seven hundred and fifty delegates. He was elected in September following, after the most hotly contested election perhaps ever known in the State, receiving 73,770 votes to 73,554 cast for Hon. Daniel F. Davis. January 13, 1881, he was inaugurated Governor of the State for two years. The Legislature elected at the same time is Republican. Among the public acts of Governor Plaisted, which excited general discussion, were his inaugural address, his vetoes of thirty-one bills for the re-charter of State banks of issue, and his veto of the bill to apportion the State for Senators and Representatives.

Governor Plaisted cast his last vote for the Republican ticket in 1878. He had previously taken his stand publicly in favor of Government currency as against bank currency. He is opposed to all banks of issue and in favor of Government issues to constitute, with gold and silver, the entire circulating medium of the country. The following extract from his inaugural address to the Legislature presents the issues upon which he was elected:

HISTORY OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY, MAINE.

Debt, public and private, debt and taxation are slowly but surely undermining our free institutions. Government bonds not only escape taxation themselves, but they furnish a cover for all other kinds of evidences of debt that are taxable. This double iniquity must be borne so long as United States bonds are endured. It would seem that the proposition to refund the seven or eight hundred millions of United States bonds now maturing, could meet with but little favor by the mass of the people in this State; that their interests demanded that these bonds should be paid, not refunded to remain a burden for a generation at least, and perhaps for generations. Then that other proposition before the American Congress, to retire and destroy the 346,000,000 legal tender notes,—burn them, so that out of their ashes may arise a like amount of interest-bearing bonds to further tax the labor and industry of the country! Would it not be more in accordance with the interest of the toiling masses in this country, to require the National banks to retire their currency, some over three hundred millions, and replace it with United States legal tenders, and thereby pay off a like amount of United States bonds, burn them up and thus relieve the people of so much burden of interest, and above all, from the baneful influence of these bonds upon the currency and business of the country?

The Treasurer of the United States in his last report says: "Instead of the volume of the circulation being regulated by the business needs of the country, it is governed by the price of United States bonds!" The power that controls the volume of the people's money is certain to control the people's destinies.

This question of the currency is one about which honest men may honestly differ. It is an important question. Its decision will be of far reaching consequence. If the bank currency win the whole field of circulation, then we shall have a never ending national debt, maintained by the banks as the basis of their existence; yes, fostered by them as "a national blessing"—to the banks, ever increasing in number and power as the country increases in wealth and population, and certain to become, if not so already, a political machine, hostile to free government, mingling in the elections and legislation of the country, corrupting the press and exerting its influence in the only way known to the money power—by corruption.

But it is claimed that this bond policy is demanded in the interest of idle capital; that it is necessary to furnish "an opportunity for the safe investment of idle capital." These safe investments for idle capital are destructive, not only of the industries, but of the morals of the people. As they render the trade of the money lender the most profitable business, they tend to create a race of idlers, misers, and cowards who will never take any chances with labor in the productive industries while this opportunity for safe investment and exemption from taxation is open to them. They take no risks. The Vanderbilts, with tens of millions of United States bonds, spending the interest in Europe, and the tens of thousands of lesser bondholders, who produce nothing and do nothing except clip coupons, what are they to this country and its industries but a class of gilded paupers supported by the labor of the country?

We have in this country five thousand persons who own and possess five millions of property, mostly accumulated within the last fifteen years, and that, too, through unequal laws. Twenty years ago a millionaire in this country was as rare as a prince, and so was a tramp.

According to Poor's Manual on Railroads, the number of miles of railroads in operation in this country increased from 9,000 in 1851 to 86,500 miles in 1879; and the gross earnings from $36,000,000 in 1851 to $529,000,000 in 1879. These facts serve to illustrate the most startling development of the age—the development of corporate power.

The presidents of the great trunk lines in this country control property, three of them, valued at $1,818,000,000; and three others property valued at $943,000,000.

These great trunk lines have been in the habit of combining, and raising and lowering rates, not according to business principles, but according to their selfish interests. It is notorious that the change of these rates in a single week recently added $5,000,000 per week to the burdens of the people, and put many times that amount into the hands of Eastern holders of grain, some of whom were railroad directors.

How, then, can any reflecting mind, any patriot, contemplate without anxious concern, the tendency of the legislation of this country to create such rapid accumulation of property in the hands of the few at the expense of the many?

"The freest government," says Webster, "cannot long endure, where the tendency of the law is to create a rapid accumulation of property in a few hands, and to render the masses of the people poor and dependent."

Universal suffrage and great landed estates cannot long exist together, for either the owners of the estates must restrict the right of suffrage, or that right of suffrage will in the end divide their estates.

Is it not time we paused in our career, and reviewed our principles?

Our institutions were founded upon equality, or rather, grew out of equality—that condition of comparative equality as to property that characterized the early settlers of New England. They brought with them no great capital, and, fortunately for humanity, there was nothing here productive, to tempt investments. If one millionaire had come over in the Mayflower, he would have blasted the prospects of a continent; for ours, then, would have been a government not to protect labor but capital. Capital would have shaped it. Our ancestors came here all upon an equality as to property, or rather as to poverty. But the lands were all open and free to them. They entered into possession and established the town system, the hundred acre lot system, the district school system, and upon this foundation they builded their free and Christian Republic. All were tillers of the soil, farmers—not tenant farmers, but freeholders, having absolute dominion over their acres, recognizing no man as lord or master, no power between them and the God they worshipped. They were lords and sovereigns themselves, and if we are a nation of sovereigns to-day it is only so far as we are a nation of freeholders. When these sovereigns got together to form a government what kind of a government could they form? Only that under which all were equals, all were sovereigns. They could not have formed any other if they had tried. It was this necessary act of parceling out the land into small freeholds, "that fixed the future frame and form of their government."

Our New England ancestors not only began their system of government under a condition of comparative equality as to property, but all their laws were of a nature to favor and perpetuate that equality. This is undoubtedly the true principle of legislation. Any system of legislation, therefore, that tends to destroy this happy equality, wipe out the small free-holds and centralize the ownership of land in the hands of the few, not only destroys the prosperity and independence of the people, but strikes at the very foundation of our republic. There is nothing in this country so sacred as the free-hold. It was the immediate parent of our free-school system and constitutes the essential condition of its existence, for in a country of great landed estates the district school system is as impossible as it is unknown.

At the foundation of our free system, therefore, lies the principle of equality, and it is only upon that principle it can be preserved; for it can rest in the love of all only as it rests in the interests of all. Move it from this basis of equality and our temple of liberty falls, and then who shall raise up its shapely columns again? It is only by a happy concurrence of the most fortunate circumstances our Constitution was framed and adopted. No other people, no other country, no other age was equal to the work. How far above the powers of the American people to-day is such an achievement? We should know, since we are not able to supply its one little defect, in relation to counting the electoral votes. The wisdom and patriotism of Congress is unequal to the task, though urged to it by every consideration of public safety. No, if our experiment of free government shall fail from the earth, it will be the knell of popular liberty the world over and for all time.

Cicero, in one of his orations, is led off into a paenegyric upon the Roman Constitution. How apt are his words, when applied to our immaculate charter, the crowning glory of the Revolution,—that masterpiece of human invention, at once the wonder and hope of the world,—the Constitution under which we live! for, says the great orator, "O wonderful system and discipline of government which we have received from our fathers!—LET US PRESERVE IT."

General Plaisted married, September 21, 1858, Sarah J., daughter of Chase P. and Mary J. (Clough) Mason, of Waterville. They had three sons—Harold Mason, a recent graduate of the State College, and now messenger to the Governor and Council; Frederick William, a pupil in the Bangor high school, and Ralph Parker, also in the public schools of this city. Mrs. Plaisted died October 25, 1875, and on the 27th of September, 1881, the Governor was again married, this time to Mabel True, daughter of Hon. Francis W. and Sarah A. (True) Hill, of Exeter, in this county, and grand-daughter of Colonel Francis Hill.

CHAPTER V.

COLONIZATION AND SETTLEMENT.

The Seventeenth Century—First White Settlements in Maine—A Possible French Fort on the Penobscot in the Sixteenth Century—The Plymouth Pilgrims at Castine—The Earthquake of 1638—Reports and Statistics of Growth—Castine Village—The Old Fort Baron de St. Castine—Other Inhabitants of Pentagoet—Castine the Younger—First English Settlers on the Penobscot.

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

The first permanent settlements upon the present soil of Maine were made upon Arrowsick Island and the mainland about the Sagadahoc river, and at Sheepscot, Damariscotta, Pemaquid, and the St. George's river, as early as 1613. A permanent settlement was begun about this time at the mouth of the Saco. Monhegan, says Williamson, "was permanently peopled about the year 1622." But Bryant & Gay's History holds Biddeford and Saco, planted by Richard Vines and John Oldham in 1630, to be the most decided beginnings of settlements in Maine. Four years previously, the New Plymouth colonists had followed their trading ventures up and at the mouth of the Kennebec with the erection of a "truck-house" at Penobscot, where they began trade with the Tarratine Indians. It was the first English trading-house in the Penobscot waters.

Governor Sullivan, in his History of the District of Maine, says there were at this time eighty-four families, besides fishermen, about Sheepscot, Pemaquid, and St. George's. Reasoning from this datum, Mr. Williamson thinks that in 1636 the whole number of whites between Piscataqua and Penobscot must have exceeded 1,400, and might possibly have reached 100 more.

In 1653, from the data supplied by the submission made by the five towns of Maine to Massachusetts, the same writer estimates: "If there were 250 families in the five towns, and fifty farms on the Isles of Shoals, at seven in a family, the whole number of persons would be 2,100."

Eleven years after this, or in the year 1664, when the Geographical and Historical Description of North America was published by Monsieur Denys, he said: "The French have a fort on the east side of the Penobscot Bay; and on the other hand the English are settled in great numbers, and have a large country cleared and under improvement." The next year, when the Royal Commissioners are said to have erected the Duke of York's Sagadahoc Territory into the County of Cornwall, the settlements along the coast are believed by Williamson to have comprised "probably 300 families;" though Sullivan finds but 145 in 1673. In the later year a census of "Acadia" was taken by the French authorities; but we get from it no statistics as to the territory now occupied by Maine, except of the Baron de Castine's settlement on Penobscot Bay, which had thirty-one white persons, including the soldiers of the garrison.

The next year the outbreak of King Philip's War led to an enrollment of the militia, which appears rather to have been estimated than exactly ascertained, if one may judge by the "round numbers" in which returns were made. From these, however, it may be ascertained, with reasonable certainty, that the white population between the Piscataqua and the Penobscot numbered 5,000 to 6,000. Leaving out, however, "Devonshire" and the settlements west of the Sagadahoc, the "residue of the Duke's patent" was returned as containing but fifty men capable of bearing arms. The statement of Captain Sylvanus Davis, however, then a resident agent on the Sagadahoc and extensively acquainted with the settlers, is that there were this year (1675) 158 families east of that river. But there was not yet, nor until eighty-five years thereafter, a single permanent white settler on the bank of the Penobscot. The next year the total population of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, the Maine and Sagadahoc Provinces, was but 150,000 souls. This is the statement of Mr. Williamson, who cites some older authorities. Mr. Palfrey (History of New England) scouts this estimate as altogether too large, and thinks there were probably in New England at this time, leaving Maine altogether out of the account, 40,000 to 45,000 people of English stock.

Hubbard, in his Narrative of the Troubles with the Indians in New England, published in 1677, gives the following account of the beginnings of settlement in Maine:

The first place that was ever possessed by the English, in the hope of making a plantation in those parts, was a tract of land on the west side of the river of Kennebeck, then called Sagatohocke, since Sagadehocke; other places adjoining were soon after seized, and improved for trading and fishing. The more remote and furthest northward at the time belonging to the English (Penobscot forty years since being surprised by the French and by them held at this day) is called Pemmaquid, distant seven or eight leagues from Kennebeck, and is the utmost boundary of New England, being about forty leagues distant from the mouth of Pascataqua river. That Pemmaquid is a very commodious haven for ships, and hath been found very advantageous to such as use to come upon these coasts to make fishing voyages; southwest, or southeast, from whence, about six or seven leagues, lies an island called Monhiggon, of much use on the same account for fishing, it lying three or four leagues into the sea from Damaril's Cove (a place of like advantage for the stages of fishermen in former times). There have been for a long time seven or eight considerable dwellings about Pemmaquid, which is well accommodated with pasture-land about the haven for feeding cattle, and some fields also for tillage; all the land improvable for such uses being already taken up by such a number of inhabitants as is already mentioned.

A POSSIBLE FRENCH FORT.

The old French navigator and writer, Andre Thevet, who wrote of the Penobscot waters, or the "river of Norumbegue," in 1556, makes the first mention of anything like civilized settlement upon its banks or the shores of the bay. He speaks of a small fort erected by the French some ten or twelve leagues up the river, which was called "the Fort of Norumbegue." He supplies, however, no further facts concerning it; and, as nothing more is known of it and no vestiges of it have ever been discovered, it seems probable that no such fort existed in fact, and that Thevet transmogrified in his relation the older story of an aboriginal capital on the Penobscot, which was itself named "Norumbega."

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

Early in 1626, or perhaps the next year,—at all events, but a very few years after the landing at Plymouth,—the Pilgrims, without charter or other warrant of authority, made a lodgment upon the shore of Penobscot Bay, on the Castine peninsula. Already sundry enterprises had been undertaken by the Plymouth colonists, by which they had become heavily involved. A number of their principal men—twenty-seven, it is said—gave relief by making a contract with the colony that they should have a monopoly of its trade for six years from September, 1627, with the use of its vessels, implements, and goods, for the consideration of payment of its debts and an annual supply of £50 worth of hose and shoes, in exchange for corn at six shillings a bushel, and either six pounds of tobacco or three bushels of corn, as the colony might elect. The company, with the addition of four persons in England, was called by the rather gloomy and forbidding title of the "Undertakers." Judge Godfrey, in his paper on The Pilgrims at Penobscot, says of their operations:

They were carrying on a profitable traffic with the Indians at Penobscot, exchanging with them coats, shirts, rugs, blankets, biscuit, corn, peas, and wampum (of which latter they had the monopoly in the East, and which came to be much coveted by the natives), for beaver, otter, and other furs, when, by the agreement of Allerton and the English partners, a young man by the name of Edward Ashley, in whose integrity the Pilgrims had little confidence, was rather forced upon them. They knew that he had wit and ability; they also knew that he was "a very profane young man, who had lived among ye Indians as a savage, and wente naked amongste them and used their maners." But he had learned their language, which was a useful and valuable accomplishment.

Ashley came into the business in 1629 and took charge of the establishment at Penobscot. Fearing to trust him alone, the Plymouth partners caused to be joined with him Thomas Willet, a young man from Leyden, honest, discreet, and trustworthy, whom they instructed to keep him "in some good measure within bounds."

Ashley was well supplied with goods by the Undertakers from both England and Plymouth, and carried on so brisk a trade with the Indians that it was not long before he had accumulated a large quantity of beaver. The Plymouth Undertakers, however, did not realize directly from it as they expected. He paid no attention to the liabilities of the house to them for supplies, but sent all his beaver direct to England, though he still continued to obtain goods from them as well as from England. Consequently he did not rise in their favor. Nevertheless they were compelled, through their connection with the English partners, who had confidence in him, to buy and man a vessel for his use and render him other assistance. But after he had been there a year or more, he "was taken in a trap," Governor Bradford says, "for trading powder and shote with ye Indians," in violation of the proclamation of King James, which forbade it. For this the authorities seized a half a ton of beaver, which he had on hand belonging to the house, and would have confiscated it, had not the Plymouth Undertakers proved by his bonds to them in 500 pounds, that he was "not to trade any munition with ye Indians, or otherwise to abuse himselfe." It appearing that he alone was responsible for the offense, and had violated his bond in every respect, he was sent to England and imprisoned in the Fleet. They were thus rid of him, to their great relief.

On the 31st of December, 1631, the English Attorney-General was directed to take proceedings against Ashley for furnishing arms and ammunition to the savages. He was seized and confined in the Fleet Prison, in London, from which he was discharged on the 17th of February following, because his offense was found to be committed before the issuance of the King's proclamation; but he was placed under bond "not to offend in the like kind hereafter."

Isaac Allerton, one of the original adventurers in the Mayflower, who had been a partner in and the agent of the company, was also dismissed, partly because he tried to divert trade from the Penobscot, by engaging in business with a Mr. Vines of Saco and sending goods eastward. The Undertakers then managed solely the business at Penobscot, which, says Judge Godfrey, "prospered and made large yearly returns." They continued to thrive here until 1631, when a French party, led by a renegade Scotchman, came with a small ship into the harbor, in the absence of all the Plymouth men except three or four servants, whom they compelled to carry about £500 worth of goods, including three hundred pounds of beaver fur, on board their vessel, and sailed away with their plunder. The traders remained, however, even after the treaty of St. Germain, between England and France, March 19, 1632, had transferred the country, as "Acadia," to the latter power, and until 1635, when the Seigneur D'Aulnay de Charnisey, commonly called D'Aulnay, the French Lieutenant-General commanding west of the St. Croix, dispossessed them in the name of the French crown. He politely took an inventory of the goods with their prices, and promised compensation for them; but would allow nothing for the house and fortification, as "those who build on another man's ground do forfeit the same." He allowed the Pilgrims to take their shallop and food enough for the return voyage, and then packed them off to Plymouth, while he occupied their premises at Penobscot as his own residence. The colonists were greatly enraged, as they had been by the robbery of 1631; and procuring from Massachusetts Bay an armed vessel called the Great Hope, commanded by a rascally captain named Girling, they agreed with him for the recapture of the truck-house, for the reward of seven hundred pounds of beaver. He set sail for Penobscot in company with the redoubtable Miles Standish, who had a small vessel with twenty men and the beaver fur on board. Girling wasted his ammunition in distant and futile fire upon the fort, and Standish, going to Pemaquid for more, sent it to him, but sailed away to Plymouth with his own precious cargo, lest his faithless comrade should "ceiase [sieze] on ye barke, and surprise ye beaver," as old Hubbard puts it. He left Captain Girling to follow at his ease, which he did without renewing the attack. Some further effort was made by the Plymouth people to organize an expedition with similar intent; but to no purpose. The French remained in undisturbed possession at Penobscot for many years. The fort was burned, however, by La Tour's men, and the cattle of the settlement killed, in May, 1644. D'Aulney, just six years afterwards, ended his adventurous and troubled life by freezing to death in an open fishing-boat off the coast, May 24, 1650.

One amusing incident of D'Aulnay's residence at Penobscot is the presentation to him by the Boston authorities, by way of placating his revenge after the attack under Girling, of an elegant sedan chair, which had been sent by the Mexican Viceroy to his sister in the West Indies. It had fallen into the hands of a sea captain, who presented it to the Governor at Boston, from whom it was obtained for the gift to D'Aulnay. As another writer says: "Can one fancy the wife and daughter of D'Aulnay parading in it from the fort to the farm-house, and from the farm-house to the mill?"

For many years after their expulsion from Penobscot, the English had no settlement east of the Kennebec, except that at Pemaquid.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

June 1, 1638, the people of the Penobscot country, then numbering very few not aboriginal, shared in the remarkable disturbance of the elements made memorable as the "Great Earthquake." It occurred about the middle of the afternoon. Mr. Williamson says:

At the time the weather was clear and warm, and the wind westward. It commenced with a noise like continued thunder or the rattling of stage-coaches upon pavements, and with a motion so violent that the people in some places found difficulty in standing on their feet, and some chimneys, and many light moveables in dwelling houses, were thrown down. The sound and motion continued four minutes, and the earth was unquiet at times for twenty days afterwards. It was generally felt throughout the northeast, and the course of it was from west to east.

A tolerably severe earthquake was experienced by the Maine settlers on the twenty-ninth of October, 1727; and a much harder one, lasting some moments, in the early morning of November 18, 1775. From time to time ever since, slight shocks have been experienced. The last one observed at Bangor and vicinity occurred in the late evening of Sunday, July 24, 1881.

SOME REPORTS OF GROWTH.

In July, 1665, when the Royal Commissioners representing the Duke of York's interests were in Maine, they professed to have gathered the following facts for the slighting account which they gave of nearly all the colonies and settlements visited in their tour. Not much reliance is to be placed upon it. They asserted that beyond the Kennebec, in the Duke's Province, there were "three small plantations, the biggest of which had not above thirty houses in it, and those very near ones too, and spread over eight miles at least. Those people, for the most part, were fishermen, and never had any government among them; most of them were such as had fled thither from other places to avoid justice."

Six years later Mr. Cartwright, of this commission, reported to the council for foreign plantations, in the Home Government, that there were one thousand men able to bear arms in the province of Maine, of whom one hundred were in "Kennebec." But Dr. Palfrey characterizes his statement, which includes statistics from other colonies, as wrong in all particulars. It was probably a mere rough estimate, if not knowingly false.

During the spring of 1688, an account was taken by Governor Andros, of the white inhabitants between the Penobscot and the St. Croix, which exhibits at Penobscot only the Baron de Castine, his family, and his servant Ranne; at Edgemoragan Reach, Charles St. Robin, his son and daughter, and M. La Tour and family; at Petit Pleasants, on Mt. Desert, a French family, consisting of M. Lowry, his wife and child, and an English family named Hinds, being man, wife, and four children; on the east side of Mt. Desert, at "Frenchman's Bay," Cadmac and wife; and a few more settlers at Machias, Passamaquoddy, and St. Croix, the total enumeration reaching about forty-five souls. There is reason to believe that this was a fairly accurate census. The names indicate that, with the single exception noted and perhaps one other family, all the white inhabitants on this part of the coast were French.

The next year President Danforth, in view of the fact that the forts east of Falimouth, and most of the settlements, had been abandoned in consequence of the Indian troubles during King William's War, ordered an account to be taken of all the inhabitants still resident within his province of Maine, and of those who had left it. We are not aware that this census has been preserved. If so, we have not been able to see a copy of it, or even to obtain its conclusions.

THE CASTINE VILLAGE.

One of the most interesting historic spots upon the Penobscot waters is that near Castine, which is thus described by the Hon. John E. Godfrey, of Bangor, in his paper upon The Pilgrims at Penobscot, contributed to the seventh volume of the Maine Historical Collections:

About a quarter of a mile southerly of the principal street of the present village of Castine is a plateau, not large, but of sufficient extent for a trading establishment. It has a fine beach, and is protected from the intrusion of the waves by a sweep of the shore, and sheltered from the northern blasts by high lands in the rear. Upon this plateau are the last vestiges of the old fort which probably was originated by the pilgrims, enlarged by D'Aulnay, and occupied by French and English alternately for more than a century,—"Oid Fort Penobscot," as it is called. It is a spot full of interest to the historical pilgrim, and has attractions that bring to it, year after year, crowds of curious visitors.

In his essay upon the Baron Castine, in the same volume of the Collections, Judge Godfrey gives a somewhat detailed account of the fort, as follows:

This fort, it is supposed, stood on the site of the Plymouth trading house of 1626-27, and was the fort of D'Aulnay. Vestiges of it are in existence. During sixty years it had been occupied by the English, French, and Dutch successively. In 1670 Sir Thomas Temple, who had claimed this portion of Acadia under a patent from Cromwell in 1756, surrendered it under the treaty of Breda to the Chevalier de Grandfontaine. This was then the condition of the fort:

On entering it, upon the left hand was a guard house, about fifteen paces long by ten broad, and upon the right a house of similar dimensions, of hewn stone, covered with shingles. Above these was a chapel six paces long by four broad, covered with shingles and built with terras, upon which was a small turret with a bell weighing eighteen pounds. Upon the left hand, on entering the court, was a magazine of two stories, built of stone, about thirty-six paces by ten, covered with shingles, very old and out of repair. Upon the ramparts were twelve guns weighing in all 21,122 pounds. In the fort were six "murthers" without chambers, weighing twelve hundred pounds. Two eight-pounders were on a plateau facing the sea. Thirty or forty paces distant from the fort there was a building twenty paces by eight, used as a cattle-house, and about fifty paces from this a square garden enclosed with rails in which were fifty or sixty trees bearing fruit.

It is thought that St. Castine erected a house within or near the walls of the fort. Tradition locates the orchard on the upper side of the street, westerly of the fort, and it is alleged that some of the trees were removed to Sedgwick and bore apples in 1873.

This peninsula, called by the Indians Matche-Biguatus, which was corrupted by the English into Major-Biguayduce, and now sometimes called Bagaduce, was known in the early day of settlement as Pentagoet or Penobscot, and finally by its present musical name of Castine. In 1670 the fort and settlement were occupied by the French under the Chevalier de Grandfontaine, by the operation of the Treaty of Breda. Four years afterwards it was taken by the Dutch, and again by them in 1676, when they were driven out by the English. Before this came the Baron de St. Castine, who, with his descendants, occupied the site for many years. It was permanently settled by the English in 1760, was held by the British forces in the Revolution from 1779 to the peace, and was also occupied by the British for nearly a year, during the War of 1812. Penobscot had thirteen hundred inhabitants when Governor Sullivan wrote, in 1794, "and that number," he said, "is increasing by the constant accession of new settlers from every part of the country." Penobscot town was divided February 10, 1796, and Castine incorporated. It became the shire-town of Hancock county, and remained such until 1838, when the courts were removed to Ellsworth. It had 1215 inhabitants by the census of 1880.

THE BARON DE ST. CASTINE.

This famous character of early Penobscot history, from whom the flourishing town at his old seat of power derives its name, has come frequently into these narratives, and deserves some special notice before proceeding further. Jean Vincent, the Baron de St. Castine, was a native of the town of Oleron, in France, on the skirts of the Pyrenees, born about 1636. He was of noble birth, received a good education, including military science, and, when only fifteen years of age, joined the famous Carignan Salieres regiment of the standing army of France. He served with his command in Germany against the Turks, and came with it to Quebec in 1665, where, after the war then waging with England was closed by the Treaty of Breda, the regiment was disbanded and he discharged from the French service. He seems about this time to have become disgusted with civilized life, and, as La Hontan says, "threw himself upon the savages." He settled, with several Jesuit missionaries in his train, at Point Bagaduce, where D'Aulnay had been before him, about 1667, there built a more than usually spacious trading-house and residence, and restored the old fort of the English and D'Aulnay. Mr. Williamson says of Castine:

He was a liberal Catholic, though devoted and punctilious in his religious observances. . . . He learned to speak with ease the Indian dialect; and, supplying himself with fire-arms, ammuniton, blankets, steel-traps, baubles, and a thousand other things desired by the natives, he made them presents and opened a valuable trade with them in these articles, for which he received furs and peltry in return, at his own prices. He taught the men the use of the gun, and, being a man of fascinating address and manners, he attained a complete ascendancy over the whole tribe, they looking upon him, in the language of one writer, "as their tutelar god."

To chain their attachments by ties not easily broken, in connection with personal gratification, he took four or five Tarratine wives, one of them the daughter of Madockawando, sagamore of the tribe. He lived with them all by chinges at the same time, and had several daughters and one son, Castine the younger, who was a man of distinction and of excellent character.

Early habits and great success in trade rendered the Baron contented with his allotments; he lived in the country about thirty years; and, as Abbe Regnal says, "conformed himself in all respects to the manners and customs of the natives." To his daughters, whom he "married very handsomely to Frenchmen," he gave liberal portions, having amassed a property worth three hundred thousand crowns.

The Governors of New England and of Canada, apprised of his influence, wealth, and military knowledge, were, for obvious reasons, the courtiers of his friendship and favor.

For seventeen years Castine was comparatively unmolestled in the enjoyment of his independent life in the wilderness on the beautiful shore, of his lucrative trade, his large influence with the savages, and his harem of Indian wives. During this time he maintained a trading-house at Port Royal as well as Penobscot, and accumulated his large fortune. In 1684 he experienced some annoyance from a "notice to quit," served upon him by Colonel Dungan, Governor of New York, unless he would recognize the English authority in that quarter, but more from the efforts of a troublesome countryman named Perrot, an ex-Governor of Montreal, to oust him from his profitable trading-house. Perrot virtually compelled him to withdraw from Port Royal, but he held his own at Penobscot for three years longer, when at last the English power began to re-assert itself vigorously in this quarter. The harsh and arbitrary Commissioners, Palmer and West, appointed to manage the Duke of York's Eastern domain, in 1686 seized a cargo of wines conveyed in a Piscataqua vessel, which had been landed near the Baron's seat, without paying duties in the custom-house at Pemaquid. The next year they dispatched a party of fifty men to possess Pentagoet and the coast to St. Croix, as English territory, and directed Castine and the Indians, as well as two French settlers near this post, to disregard any orders from French sources. The Baron accepted the situation, and was not molested. In the summer of 1688 the haughty Andros, the new Governor of New England, visited his Eastern domain, and, in the enlargement of his jurisdiction resolved to seize the Penobscot settlement. In advance of his coming he sent word to Captain George, of the frigate Rose, at Pemaquid, to get his vessel ready to sail against the arrival of the Governor and his suite there. George considerably sent word of the intended movement to his friend Castine. In a short time Andros, in personal command of the expedition, presented himself in front of the Frenchman's stronghold—"before Castine's door," the old account says. An officer was sent ashore to announce the unwelcome visitors, but found that the Baron and his adherents had taken to the woods. The account proceeds:

The Governor landed, with other gentlemen with him, and went into the house, and found a small altar in the common room, which altar and some pictures and ordinary ornaments they did not meddle with anything belonging thereto, but took away all his arms, powder, and shot, iron kettles, and some trucking-cloth and his chairs, all of which were put aboard the Rose, and laid up in order to a condemnation of trading.

It was the Governor's intention also to restore the fort built by his orders some years before on the Penobscot, for which he had brought materials and workmen; but he found the work so ruinous that "he was resolved to spare that charge till a more proper time offered," and so returned to Pemaquid. He had made a visit to the chief Madockawando, Castine's father-in-law, also giving him a handsome present, and now sent a message by a Tarratine sachem to Castine, that he should have his property back as soon as he could report at that place and make his allegiance to the English crown. But the Baron was now thoroughly enraged, and made no concessions to the English, but instead, it is generally believed, stirred up the Indians to hostilities. He incited the savages to outbreak, it is said, by the promise to each hostile of a pound of powder, two pounds of lead, and a roll of tobacco. Others, as Judge Godfrey, think that Castine remained friendly to the English, and that the Jesuits provoked the strife. At all events, Indian outrages were recommenced. In August and in the fall another Eastern expedition, but of land forces, was set on foot, which had a campaign of great hardship and suffering, fruitful of nothing but the establishment of some garrisoned posts from Wells to Pemaquid.

Again, in 1690, Castine appears on the war-path against the English, in joint command with his father-in-law Madockawando of a body of Tarratines going to join a mixed force of French and Indians, collected under the orders of Count Frontenac, Governor of Canada, for the expedition against Falmouth, and was present at the stipulations for the capitulation of Fort Loyal, at that place, to the faith and observance of which, Mr. Williamson says, he "lifted his hand and swore by the everlasting God"—to little intent or purpose, as the massacre and plunder which speedily followed showed. Judge Godfrey thinks this story of Castine incorrect, and that he took no part in the attack. Six years later, he reinforced Iberville and Villebon with 240 of his Indians in canoes, to whom Iberville distributed presents, on their way to the successful reduction of Fort William Henry. Meanwhile, in the fall of 1792, an unsuccessful attempt was made to kidnap or assassinate Castine at his place.

After the affair at Fort William Henry, little is known of Castine. He disappeared from the Penobscot country soon after the death of Madockawando in 1697 or '98. Mr. H. W. Longfellow, in his musical poem on the Baron, sends him to his old Pyrenees home, to find his father dead, to occupy the ancestral property, and to be married according to the rites of the church, since—

In course of time the curate learns
A secret so dreadful that, by turns,
He is ice and fire, he freezes and burns.
The Baron at confession hath said
That though this woman be his wife,
He hath wed her as the Indians wed,
He hath bought her for a gun and a knife.

Judge Godfrey says, however: "That he was early lawfully married to a daughter of Madockawando is probable from the fact that his son had the priests' certificate of his legitimacy." It is known that he came into his inheritance of £5,000 a year in 1686, and he probably retired to the old baronial home to spend his last years in the enjoyment of it and his large fortune gained among the Indians. He died some time before 1708.

The other inhabitants of Pentagoet, during at least a part of Castine's residence there, were his servant Jean Renaud, with a wife and four children, and another Frenchman named Des Lines, with wife and three children. These, with Castine, his wife and one child, made up the white population of Penobscot in 1693. Four years previously only one white man, and one woman, both married, with a boy of fifteen (doubtless Castine, wife, and son), and one priest were reported there. The priests gave his place, ecclesiastically, the title of the Parish of the Sainte Famille (or Holy Family).

CASTINE THE YOUNGER.

Anselm de St. Castine was the son of Baron Castine and Matilda, daughter of Madockawando. He remained as a trader at Penobscot after the departure of his father, and was also prominent in the political and martial movements of the time. He took a leading part in the defense of Port Royal against the Massachusetts expedition in 1700, and, when it returned for a second attempt in August, he prepared an ambuscade which drove the enemy in disorder toward their boats. In the pursuit which followed Castine was severely wounded. He was married two months afterwards to Charlotte d'Amours, at Port Royal. In 1690, still residing at Penobscot, he there entertained Major Livingston, of another Massachusetts expedition which had effected the reduction of Port Royal, and accompanied him up the river to Quebec, to obtain the approval of the Governor-General of New France to the articles of capitulation. It was on this journey that they came to the island "Lett," as remarked by Livingston, the identity of which has been so much in controversy. They had a terrible journey through the wilderness, and were nearly two months on the way, arriving at Quebec the 16th of December in sad case. Here Castine was commissioned lieutenant, and charged especially with the care of French interests among the Indians of his region. He returned to Pentagoet, and presently undertook the re-capture of Port Royal, but without success. After the death of his father he was deprived of his inheritance under pretense of illegitimacy, and decided to remain in the wilderness. In August, 1721, he took part in a conference of the commanders of two hundred Abenakis, at Arrowsic Island, with Captain Penhallow, commanding the English there, for which he was regarded as an enemy, and was seized at Penobscot, carried to Boston, and imprisoned for five months. He declared "the highest friendship for the English," and that "my disposition is to prevent my people from doing them mischief," and was accordingly released. Some unimportant incidents are related of him during the next ten years, when he altogether disappears from history. Many descendants of the Castines are known to have been among the Indians of the Penobscot, and some of their chiefs, as Orono, are believed to have been of their blood.

Mr. Williamson, closing an account of the third Indian (Queen Anne's, a ten-years') war, after a sketch of the character of Assacombuit, one of the most prominent on the side of the savages, says:

There was never a greater contrast than between him and Castine the younger. This man possessed a very mild and generous disposition. His birthplace and home were at Penobscot, upon the peninsula of Bigyduce, the former residence of his father. Though a half-breed, the son of Baron de Castine, by a Tarratine wife, he appeared to be entirely free from the bigoted malevolence of the French and the barbarous, revengeful spirit of the savages. He was a chief Sagamore of the Tarratine tribe, and also held a commission from the French king. By his sweetness of temper, magnanimity, and other valuable properties, he was holden in high estimation by both people. Nor were the English insensible of his uncommon merit. He had an elegant French uniform, which he sometimes wore, yet on all occasions he preferred to appear dressed in the habit of his tribe. It was in him both policy and pleasure to promote peace with the English, and in several instances where they had treated him with abuse, he gave proof of forbearance worthy of a philosopher's or Christian's imitation. The great confidence they reposed in his honor and fidelity, as the companion of Major Livingston through the wilderness from Port Royal to Quebec, was in every place well-placed and fully confirmed. He was a man of foresight and good sense. Perceiving how these wars wasted away the Indians, he was humane as well as wise, when he bade earnest welcome to the "songs of peace." These immediately drew home fathers and brothers, and wiped away the tears of their families. He thought his tribe happy only when they enjoyed the dews and shades of tranquility. In 1721 he was improperly seized at Biguynuec, his dwelling-place, by the English and carried to Boston, where he was detained several months. The next year, according to Charlevoix, he visited Bearne, in France, to inherit his father's property, honors, fortune, and seigniorial rights, from which country we have no account of his return.

UP THE PENOBSCOT.

Fort Pownall, at what is now called Fort Point, where the waters of the river join those of the bay, was built by the energetic Governor from whom it takes its name, in 1759. Under its protection the valley of the Lower Penobscot soon began to fill with the pioneers of civilization. Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Western Maine principally furnished the immigration. A white settler was on the lower part of Orphan Island in 1763, and Colonel Jonathan Buck at Bucksport the next year. But Lieutenant Joshua Treat, celebrated in the older writings as the "great hunter," who settled for convenience of traffic near Fort Pownall in 1760, is supposed to have been the first permanent settler on the river. Settlement crept slowly up the stream, however, and did not reach the site of Bangor until 1769, when Mr. Jacob Buswell, or Bussell, set down his stakes at the head of tide-water. The rest of the story will be told elsewhere.

CHAPTER VI.

THE MISSIONARIES.

Captain Weymouth with his Cross—Fathers Baird and Masse—The St. Sauveur Mission at Mt. Desert—Its Precise Locality—The Cross—On the Castine Peninsula—The Capuchins—D'Aulnay and the Castines—The Parish de Saint Famille—Father Gabriel Druillettes—The Fathers Vincent and Jaques Bigot—Father Thury—Father Sebastian Ralle—The Missionaries on the Penobscot—Father Romagne—Usefulness of the Missionaries among the Indians—A Touch of Poetry.

THE CROSS

was early brought up the Penobscot waters, but rather for political than religious purposes. If the theory be true that Captain Weymouth, in June of 1605, ascended the Penobscot, he was the first to explore its resources; and it is thus made the more noteworthy that the voyagers bore with them, as the journal relates, a cross—"a thing never omitted by any Christian travellers, which we erected at the ultimate end of our route," fifty or sixty miles from the entrance to the Bay. Indeed, one later writer asserts that Weymouth "set up crosses in several places." Here, then, two and three-quarters centuries ago, was planted the emblem, if not the emissaries, of the Christian religion.

The next year the grant of the North and South Virginia patent was expressly, in part, for the bringing of the infidel savages to a knowledge of the Christian religion and the true worship of God, to a civilized life and a settled government. Hubbard, in his History of New England, says that the declared intent of the adventurers was to propagate God's holy church. A similar purpose is expressed in many other instruments relating to the colonization of America.

BIARD AND MASSE.

About the year 1610, when Biencourt, son of Poutrincourt, then the chief man of the French at Port Royal, returned to France for aid to the suffering and struggling colony, all that he received from the queen regent was two Jesuit fathers, M. Biard and Masse. They had a gift of 2,000 crowns for expenses, and set sail for the New World. Father Biard reached the Kennebec, where he was cordially received by the Canibas, and labored with some success, especially in collecting supplies of provision for the people at Port Royal, where he had his own headquarters. Masse also set out for the wilderness, but was taken severely sick on the way, and presently recovered. The Marchioness de Guercheville, a pious Catholic lady who is elsewhere mentioned in this work, had the missionaries now under her patronage, and prevailed on the queen mother to assist in dispatching a vessel to plant a religious establishment independent of Port Royal. In 1613, under command of the Sieur de la Saussaye, and with two other Jesuit Fathers, Quentin and Gilbert du Thet, the vessel proceeded to Maine, picking up Biard and Masse on the way, at Port Royal. Governor Lincoln, in the first volume of the original series of the Maine Historical Collections, thus continues the story:

They disembarked, with twenty-five others, on the northerly bank of the Penobscot. Father Biard made an excursion from this place to visit the neighboring people, and arriving near a village of the Etchemins, he heard frightful cries, like those of lamentation for the dead. He hastened forward with the prompt anxiety which generally impels the ecclesiastics of certain orders to be present at that scene, where pleasure, interest, or duty are generally satisfied by the offering of penitence, bequests, and homage. He ascertained that the occasion of the clamor was the illness of a child, and found the inhabitants of a village ranged in two rows on each side of it; the father holding it in his arms and uttering loud cries, to which the whole assembly responded with one accord. The missionary took the child, and having administered the sacred mystery of baptism, prayed with a loud voice that God would vouchsafe some token of his power. He forgot not, however, to use the means which might contribute, humanly speaking, to the miracle he petitioned for, and presented the child to the warmth and cherishing virtue of the maternal bosom. It soon became well. Whatever else may be said, it must be admitted that the administration of baptism was judiciously seasonable; for the Indians were persuaded that its divine efficacy drove away the disease which had so much distressed them, and they looked upon the missionary as one who could call down from the master of life the health of his children.

This mission, known as St. Sauveur, is commonly located by writers on Mt. Desert. It did not long endure. The Virginians, under Argal, swooped down upon it, as is heretofore related, killed Du Thet while in the act of firing a gun, also some others, compelled the surrender of the place, and then destroyed everything they could not plunder. Notwithstanding these outrages, Father Biard, it is said, guided the invaders to Port Royal, which they also reduced. We hear no more of the surviving three of the Jesuit quartette in the affairs of Maine.

It is an interesting fact that these missionaries, when they sailed down the coast of Maine in May, 1613, were on their way to Kadesquit, now the site of Bangor, to establish their mission. Father Biard had selected the very spot during a former journey of his from Port Royal to the Penobscot. The reason for their change of purpose and detention at Mt. Desert is this prettily told in Bryant & Gay's History of the United States:

Such a fog enveloped them off Menans (Grand Manan) that they had to lie to for two days. When the weather cleared up they saw the island which Champlain named Monts Deserts, and which the Indians called Pemetig, which means "at the head," from its commanding position. The lifting fog disclosed Great Head, rising sheer from the ocean to buttress the forests of Green and Newport mountains. On their right was the broad sheet of water since called Frenchman's Bay, extending far into the land. Into this they gladly sailed and dropped anchor inside of Porcupine Island, effected a landing not far from the bar which gives its name to a little harbor. There the broad flank of Green Mount, with Newport just alongside to make a deep and still ravine, greeted the eyes which sea-spray and the fog had filled. Eagle Lake lay buried in the forest in front of them, and the wooded slopes stretched along to the right as far as they could see. The islands with bronzed cliffs to seaward and bases honeycombed by the tide, wore sharp crests of fir and pine. The American coast does not supply another combination so striking as this, of mountains with their feet in deep ocean on every side, lifting 2,000 feet of greenery to vie with the green of waves; of inland recesses where brooks run past brown rocks, and birds sing woodland songs as if their nests swung in a country remote from sea-breezes. Delicate ferns fill the moist places of the wood, and the sea-anemone opens in the little caverns where the tide leaves a pool for them. Nature has scattered the needled cones, of shape so perfect, from those of an inch high to the finished tree artfully distributed in the open spaces. The Frenchmen hailed this picturesque conclusion to their voyage, and named the place and harbor St. Sauveur.

Several Indian villages were on the island. A smoke rose as a signal that the men were observed; they signalled with another smoke, and the natives came to see them. Father Biard had met some of them on the Penobscot, and now inquired the way to Kadesquit. They answered that their place was better, and so wholesome that sick natives in the neighboring parts were brought thither to be cured. But when Father Biard could not be persuaded, they belied their own sagacious praises, and begged the good father to come and see their sagamore, Asticon, who was very sick, and like to die without the sacrament. This wily stroke prevailed: they took him round to the eastern shore of a bay which is now called Somes's Sound, from a Gloucester man who settled there in 1760. Great shell-heaps still indicate the site of Asticon's village. He only had an attack of rheumatism; so the father asked the natives to show him the place which they esteemed to be so much better than Kadesquit. They took him around the head of the Sound, to a grassy slope of twenty or thirty acres, with a stream on each side, running down to the tide. The bay was as still as a lake: the black soil fat and fertile, the pretty hill abutting softly on the sea and bathed on its sides by two streams, the little islands which break the force of waves and wind.

These islands are the Great and Little Cranberry, and Lancaster's. The cliffs rise to a great height, and the water at their base is deep enough for any ship to ride a cable's length from the shore. No wonder that Father Biard thought no more of Kadesquit. They planted the cross, threw up a slight entrenchment, and La Saussaye began to plant, for the time was early June.

Fernald's Point, on the western side of Somes's Sound, about two miles from Southwest Harbor, is the spot assigned by local tradition as the seat of this first and transient mission in Maine. The "little hill" mentioned in Father Biard's Relation is, according to Mrs. Clara Barnes Martin, author of a capital guide-book for Mount Desert, a bold promontory (the Flying Mountain) joined to the eastern spur of Dog Mountain by a narrow isthmus, on which are Mr. Fernald's pastures. There is a spring at high-water mark on each side of the Point, and a brook runs from the mountains through the pasture. The mountains in Biard's day were covered with a heavy hard-wood growth, and as the Sound here is completely land-locked, the Point and Cove would offer the most tempting shelter to the storm-tost missionaries.

"About half across the isthmus and a little up the hill, so as to command the water on either side without losing its shelter, are two holes in the ground which are shown as the ruins of the Frenchmen's cellars. They are a few rods apart, running north and south, ten to twelve feet long at present, from two to three feet deep, and of varying width."

AT PENTAGOET.

The Castine Peninsula seems next to have been sought by the zealous and persevering emissaries of the cross. In 1646, according to Father Druillettes, who was at Pentagoet this year, a small hospice or monastery of Capuchins was in existence there, with Father Ignatius, of Paris, as superior. The little community welcomed the new comer, says Mr. Parkman, "with the utmost cordiality." It is thought, says Da Costa, that this visit of Druillettes led to the erection of a new and more permanent hospice. This appears to have been put up or at least commenced in 1648, by the evidence of an inscription upon a copper plate found in 1863, near the ruins of the brick battery commonly called the Lower Fort. It is in Latin, with the words much abbreviated, but may be easily translated as follows:

"1648, JANUARY 8. I, FRIAR LEO, OF PARIS, CAPUCHIN MISSIONARY, LAID THIS FOUNDATION IN HONOR OF OUR LADY OF HOLY HOPE."

No traces of this establishment can be found after the next year, when D'Aulnay, the patron of the Capuchins, was dispossessed by La Tour.

Catholic missionaries much frequented this stronghold of the warlike Frenchman and religious zealot D'Aulnay, about the middle of the seventeenth century. Mr. Williamson says that no other place in this Eastern region was so much inhabited by them; and further:

His priesthood, consisting wholly of friars, made the savages believe that Catholic rites and ceremonies were the essentials of religion, and that the dictates of the missionaries were equivalent to the precepts of Divine authority. . . . Indulgences and superstitious forms, as allowed by the Jesuits, were altogether more accordant with their notions and habits than the self-denying doctrines of restraint and the rigid precepts of reform, as taught by the Protestant missionaries.

During the occupancy at Pentagoet by the Castines, and perhaps subsequently, the Catholic Parish de Saint Famille (Parish of the Holy Family) was maintained there, with at least one priest in charge.

FATHER GABRIEL DRUILLETES

afterwards labored among the natives on the Kenebec. According to Charlevoix, he was the first Catholic missionary to the Canibas Indians, among whom he began to reside in 1646. At the same time, says this author, "the Capuchin priests had a trading-house and religious hospital at Pentagoet." In 1688 was at Penobscot for the purpose, Governor Lincoln says, "of gathering the savages into a new village on the lands of the king of France and to guard them against the efforts of Governor Andros to draw them to the English." M. Denonville, in a letter to the French Minister of Marine, acknowledged the good offices of the brothers Bigot in "the good intelligence" he had preserved with the Abenakis and the success they had reaped in their expeditions against the English. Jaques, the younger Bigot, is supposed to have been at this time a missionary on the Kennebec.* The following is related by Governor Lincoln of the elder brother, he who was at Penobscot:—

FATHER VINCENT BIGOT

Charlevoix alleges that Vincent Bigot once accompanied the Abenakis in an expedition against New England, and knowing that on their return a large party was in pursuit, he endeavored to urge their flight. They replied that they did not fear the English, and refused to hasten their march. At last they were overtaken by a force twenty times as numerous as their own, and, having placed the missionary in safety, they with cool intrepidity engaged in battle, strewed the field with dead bodies, and, maintaining the fight the whole day without the loss of a man, compelled the enemy to retire.

These missionaries were of the family of the Barons Bigot; and, when we consider that circumstance and compare it with the life of more than patriarchal simplicity which Vincent led at the established seat of his mission, we shall know how to appreciate the apostolic zeal with which he was inspired. Although often among the Abenakis of Maine, the place of his residence was at the village of Francois, to which the Governor of Canada had attracted many of the alert and intrepid warriors of our tribes, to guard the important and central settlement of Three Rivers from the incursions of the Iroquois. The father dwelt among them and devoted his life to their conversion and guidance. His domicile was a rude cabin of bark, his bed a bearskin spread upon the earth, his dishes were taken from the birch-tree, and his food was the sagamite and the game which the savages furnished him.

FATHER THURY

was a Jesuit priest of great adroitness, and an unceasing enemy of the English, who had his mission at Penobscot about 1687, when the conquest of Nova Scotia by Sir William Phips had pushed the boundary of New England to its present halting-place, the river St. Croix. The French could not yet attempt the reconquest of the territory, since their inability to defend it had cost them its possession; but they could still use the savages, already exasperated by the encroachment of the English, to annoy and perhaps destroy their adversaries. Father Thury was a fit agent among the powerful tribes about the Penobscot. In 1689 he is said to have called together the Indians at his chapel, and, with an appearance of the deepest sorrow in his face and bearing, to have set before them a vivid and exciting image of British aggression in these words:

My children, when shall the rapacity of the unsparing New Englanders cease to afflict you? And how long will you suffer your lands to be violated by encroaching heretics? By the religion I have taught, by the liberty you love, I exhort you to resist them. It is time for you to open your eyes, which have long been shut; to rise from your mats and look to your arms, and make them once more fight. This land belonged to your fathers, long before these wicked men came over the great water; and are you ready to leave the bones of your ancestors, that the cattle of heretics may eat grass upon your graves? The Englishmen think and say to themselves, "we have many cannon; we have grown strong while the red man has slept; while they are lying in their cabins and do not see, we will knock them on the head; we will destroy their women and children, and then shall we possess their land without fear, for there shall be none left to revenge them. My children, God commands you to shake the sleep from your eyes. The hatchet must be cleaned of its rust to avenge him of his enemies and to secure to you your rights. Night and day a continual prayer shall ascend to him for your success; an unceasing rosary shall be observed until you return covered with the glory of triumph.

Such an appeal, to such an audience, could not be without tremendous effect. General Lincoln says: "The savages were transported with all that fury of which they are so susceptible, and a hundred warriors made a vow at the altar to march to Pemaquid, and never to return until they had driven the English from the fort. They executed the resolution with a sort of pious mania of courage, and twenty pieces of cannon were surrendered to address and valor, as will be found more accurately traced in the history of this tragic event.

Mr. Williamson adds the following testimony as to the aid rendered by religionists of this stamp to Count Frontenac, then governor of Canada:

Fit instruments to effect his purpose were the French missionaries, The four or five who were pre-eminent in his service were M. Thury, Vincent and Jaques Bigot, and Sebastian Ralle, all of whom were ardent and bold enthusiasts, always ready, with tearful eye, to preach from a text in their creed, that "it is no sin to break faith with heretics." Thury and Vincent Bigot had been a long time among the Tarratines, and were well acquainted with their dispositions, language, and habits.

RALLE,

sent from France into the French colonies by the society of Jesuits, passed about four years among the tribes in the vicinity of Canada, and in 1693 chose Norridgewock for his abode, where he dwelt twenty-six years. His entire devotion to the religious interests of the Indians gave him unlimited ascendancy over them.

Father Ralle awakened so great an attachment among the Indians that the mere attempt of the English under Colonel Westbrook to seize him, at his station at Norridgewock in 1722, was the chief exciting cause of the three-years' Indian war. He was barbarously killed, scalped, and mutilated, August 12, 1724, by Captain Moulton's men, in an attack upon Norridgewock. Charlevoix says: "Thus died this kind shepherd, giving his life for his sheep, after a painful mission of thirty-seven years."

ON THE PENOBSCOT.

By this time Fathers Le Masse, de la Chasse, and Lauerjat, had become missionaries to the Indians on the great central river of "Mavooshen." According to Greenleaf's Sketches of the Ecclesiastical History of the State of Maine, published in 1821, the Catholic missionaries very early pushed their enterprises up the Penobscot. He says:

Some time in the reign of Louis XIV. of France [about 1700] a French architect came over from that country and erected a place for public worship in Indian Old Town, an island in the Penobscot above the head of tide-waters, which was then and still is considered the headquarters of the Penobscot tribe. This church was burnt by the Anglo-Americans in the old French war [in 1757], because the Indians adhered to the French, to whom they have ever been friendly; and it is said that the governor or king of this tribe wears to this day, as a badge of honor, a medal with the likeness of Louis XIV.

At the period of the Revolution the Catholic missionary on the Penobscot was Father Juniper Bathmaine. Then, from Boston in 1762, came the Reverend Father Anthony Matignon. His successors have been, in order

* He was pretty certainly there as late as 1699.

Daniel J. Davis

the Right Rev. Bishop (afterwards Cardinal) Cheverus and James Romagne, the Rev. Father Stephen Carilleaux, a native of Paris; Father Dennis Ryan, who had been ordained by Bishop Cheverus in 1818; Fathers Basset, O'Brien (now of St. Mary's, Bangor), and others. The Indians on the Penobscot reservation have never been self-supporting in their religious services, and the State appropriates but one hundred dollars per annum for the sustenance of their priest; so that the work among them still partakes largely of a missionary character. Of late years, as has been noticed, a convent of the Community of Sisters of Mercy has also been located upon Oldtown island.

FATHER ROMAGNE.

For a score of years, during the latter part of the last century and the fore part of this, the Catholic interests among the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot Indians were served by M. Romagne, a French priest. Governor Lincoln says of him:

He became acquainted with their language so as to be able to converse in it, and the affectionate remembrance in which he is held by them is proof of the discreet manner in which he conducted towards them. He is spoken of as having been a faithful missionary and a man of unspotted life. He has been succeeded by various occasional instructors, each of whom has discharged his duty in a manner to command respect even from those who have, perhaps, some of the prejudices against his doctrines, and to be very useful to the savages. During the term of his visit among the Penobscots he lives in their village, in a small tenement prepared and kept for the purpose, and devotes himself to adjusting the balance of sin and repentance, to dealing out salutary admonitions, and to performing the rites of his church and the functions of his office among his pupils.

Father Romagne returned to France in 1819. Narrowing gradually to the Penobscot country, we have not included notices of the later missionaries to the Passamaquoddy Indians, who have been at least equally self-sacrificing and laborious.

Of the general usefulness of the missionary element in the colonization of the country, notwithstanding the attachment of the early emissaries to the cause of France, there can be no reasonable question. They undoubtedly uplifted and purified, to some extent, the savage nature. Mr. Williamson says of the labors of Biard, Masse, Druillettes, the Bigots, Ralle, and the rest among the Abenakis and Etchemins:

They effected great changes in the views and practices of the natives. The Powows lost their influence, and came to an utter end. Superstitious rites and rituals, blended with endeavors to inculcate and deepen the moral sense and to encourage religious worship, becoming established, are still extant among the remnants of the tribes. But neither their morals, manners, or virtues, have undergone any very extensive or real improvements.

With the following poetic touch from the pen of our own Whittier, in his poem of Mogg Megone, we close this rapid sketch:

A rude and unshapely chapel stands,
 Built up in that wild by unskilled hands;
 Yet the traveller knows it a place of prayer,
 For the holy sign of the cross is there;
 And should he chance at that place to be
 Of a Sabbath morn, or some hallowed day
 When prayers are made and masses are said,
 Some for the living and some for the dead,
 Well might that traveller start to see
 The tall, dark forms that take their way

From the birch canoe, on the river-shore,
 And the forest paths to that chapel door;
 And marvel to mark the naked knees
 And the dusky forehead bending there,
 While in coarse, white vesture, over these,
 In blessing or in prayer,
 Stretching abroad his thin, pale hands,
 Like a shrouded host, the Jesuit stands.

CHAPTER VII.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION—CIVIL LIST,

Yorkshire—Lincoln County—Hancock County—Penobscot County—Its First Officers—The County Buildings—The Civil List of Penobscot—Hannibal Hamlin—Representatives in Congress—Governors of the State—Supreme Judicial Court—Presidents of the Senate—Secretaries of the Senate—Speakers of the House of Representatives—Clerks of the House—Secretary of State—State Treasurer—Attorney-Generals—Adjutant-Generals—State Land Agents—The Courts and their Officers—County Clerks—Sheriffs—Registers of Deeds—Treasurers—County Attorneys.

The ancient and obsolete counties,— of Canada, Cornwall, and the rest, if any—which were practically unknown in the affairs of Penobscot county, although nominally covering its present territory, have received sufficient attention in previous chapters.

YORKSHIRE.

The first county organization that takes hold upon the modern history of Maine, those of which the present York and Somerset counties are lineal successors, were the districts or counties of York and Somerset, or New Somerset, the former of which is commonly known in early annals as Yorkshire. Sir Ferdinando Gorges, organizing his province between the Piscataqua and the Kennebec, under his patent of February 3, 1635, had established his government under the name of New Somersetshire. When, four years later, April 3, 1639, he received a charter from Charles I. his territory and its inhabitants were erected into a body politic by the title of the Province or County of Maine, commonly called the Province of Maine. The next year a division of this was made upon the river Kennebec, into two districts or counties, called respectively "West" and "East," but which came in time to be known by the names before given. In 1652, upon the submission of the people of Kittery and Agamenticus to the authority of Massachusetts, one of the conditions of the submission was that the Isles of Shoals and all the territory northward and eastward belonging to Massachusetts—that is, below the parallel of 43° 43' 12"—should form a county called Yorkshire. The borough bearing the aboriginal name of Agamenticus, which had been made by Gorges an extensive city (on paper), named from himself Georgeana, was at the same time made a town by the name of York, the second town created in the State, and was continued as the shire-town.

The Court of Common Pleas, which was organized in the county the next year, was steadily maintained until the separation of the District of Maine from Massachusetts in 1819.

In 1691 the provincial charter granted by William and Mary to the Royal Province of Massachusetts, extended the country and so practically the County of Yorkshire, to the river St. Croix or the confines of Nova Scotia.

In 1716, however, the General Court of Massachusetts formally attached to the county of Yorkshire, which theretofore had embraced strictly only the old Province of Maine, "all the families and settlements eastward of Sagadahock" and of course within these the Penobscot country. Yorkshire county was, in fact, now legally extended to the St. Croix. York was retained as the shire-town for this great county. In 1735 the county had nine towns, and sustained a levy of £46, 7 shillings, and 2 pence, or nearly one-twentieth of the entire assessment upon the counties of Massachusetts Bay.

LINCOLN COUNTY.

The county of York, or Yorkshire, embracing the whole of the present State of Maine, remained in existence for nearly a century and a quarter from the organization under Gorges. Before 1760 a subdivision of the county had been called for by the growth of the population eastward; and directly after the reduction of Quebec by the English the agitation was renewed, and a petition was presented to the General Court at the opening of the January session, which "enumerated the inconveniences arising from the establishment of the courts and the public offices in the corner of the county, where all the jury trials were, except a few of a minor class, which were tried at a single term of the Inferior Court each year, at Falmouth; and prayed that the county might be divided, a new one erected, and that [Falmouth] appointed a shire-town, in which, it was said, a good court-house and a sufficient goal were already finished." A counter memorial was presented by the Plymouth proprietors, asking that the eastern part of the Maine settlements might form a separate county, with the shire-town at Pownalborough. York county was accordingly cut down to very narrow limits, comparatively; and two new counties were erected by an act of June 19, 1760, called, respectively, Cumberland and Lincoln. The latter included the Penobscot valley in its extensive territory, which embraced the whole of the Maine country from Nova Scotia to the east line of Cumberland county, namely "the eastern shores of New Meadow's river to Stevens's carrying-place at its head; thence to and upon Merrymeeting Bay and the river Androscoggin thirty miles; and thence north two degrees on a true course to the utmost northern limits of the Province." It was a vast, and, except for a thin fringe of settlement along the seaboard, a wilderness county. Pownalborough, a large town in point of territory, covering the later site of Wiscasset and two other towns, which had first been incorporated and named in honor of Governor Pownall, was made the seat of justice for the new county.

In 1764, by a rather loose census, ordered by the British Lords of Trade, Lincoln county exhibited a population of 4,347. No places nearer to the present Penobscot county are mentioned in this return, than Broadbay, Georgekeag, and Meduncook (now Thomas-ton, Warren, and Friendship). These together numbered, probably by estimation, but 200 souls.

HANCOCK COUNTY.

Thirty years more passed, while the grand army of civilization was slowly, but surely, on the march. The tide of emigration had swept with the sea tides up the Penobscot and every great river of Maine, and the beginnings of many a prosperous city had been made by the sea. The time had come for another subdivision in Eastern Maine; and the General Court, by act of June 25, 1789, carved two new counties out of the trans-Penobscot part of Lincoln. These were fitly named, in the freshness and fervor of patriotic memories, Washington and Hancock. The act went into effect May 1, 1790. Mr. Williamson thus defines the boundaries of these counties:

The divisional line between Lincoln and Hancock, commencing on the margin of Penobscot bay, at the northeast corner of Camden, proceeded westerly in the upper line of that town to its corner; thence northerly to the north limit of the Waldo patent, and thence north to the Highlands; leaving to Lincoln the seacoast between New Meadows and Penobscot Bays, and all the opposite islands.

The dividing line between Hancock and Washington commenced at the head of Goldsborough river, east branch, and proceeded to the southeast corner of township number sixteen, and thence due north to the Highlands. The eastern boundary of Washington county was drawn by the river St. Croix, and thence north so as to include all the lands within the Commonwealth eastward of Hancock.

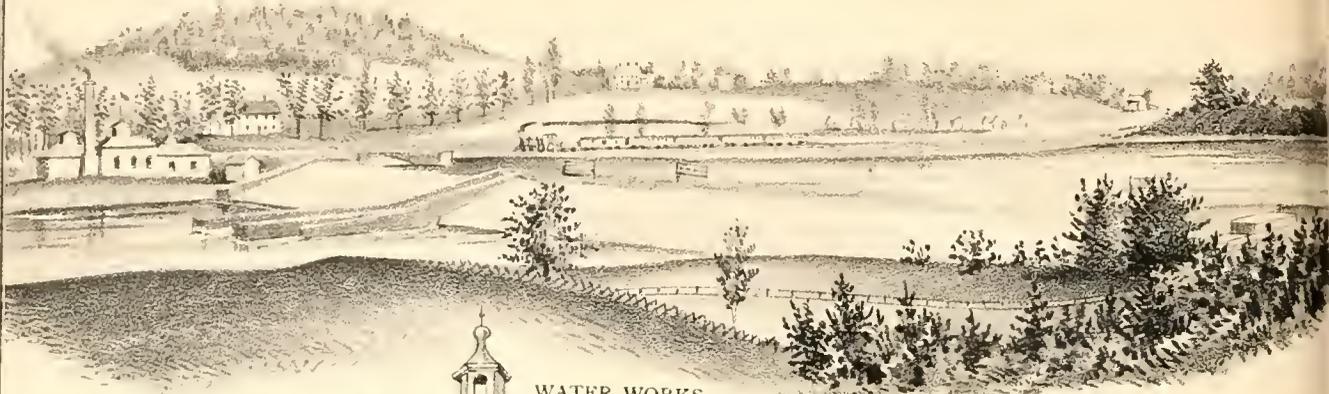

Both counties were bounded on the north by the utmost northern limits of the State, and to each county were annexed all the opposite islands.

The whole of the present Penobscot county, except a part of the western lower part, was in Hancock county.

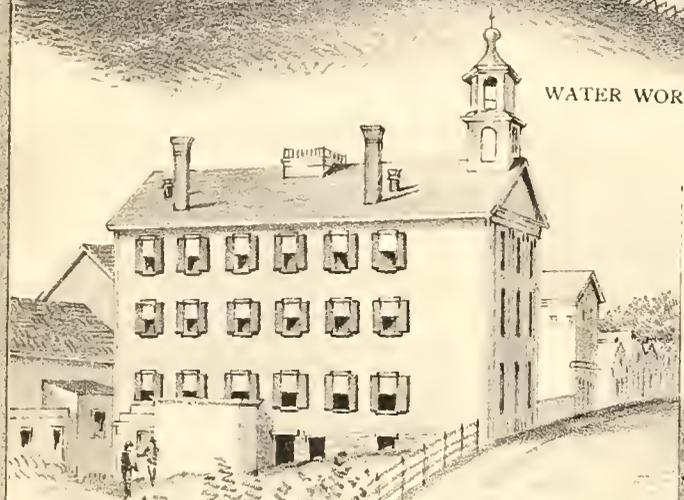

Penobscot, since Castine, was made the shire-town of Hancock county. In 1814, Bangor, to accommodate the northern part of the settlements in the county, was made half-shire-town with Castine, with regular courts and registry of deeds thereat, and remained such until the erection of Penobscot county.

The first county officers in Hancock were: Paul D. Sargent, of Sullivan, William Vinal, of Vinalhaven, and Oliver Parker, of Penobscot, Judges of the Court of Common Pleas; Paul D. Sargent, also Judge of Probate; Jonathan Eddy, of Penobscot, Register of Probate; Simeon Fowler, of Orrington, County Treasurer; Thomas Phillips, Clerk; Richard Hunnewell, of Penobscot, Sheriff; William Webber, of the same, Register of Deeds.

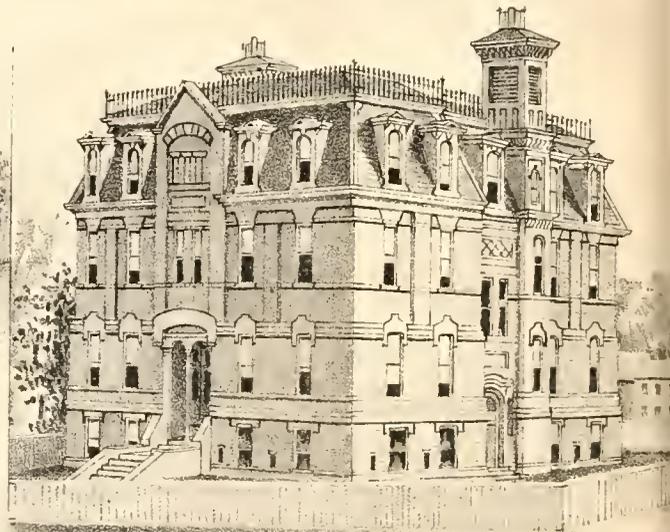

Hancock county in 1798, according to Morse's American Gazetteer of that date, was a large maritime county of the District of Maine, bounded north by Lower Canada, south by the ocean, east by Washington county, and west by Lincoln county. It was 190 miles long from north to south, and nearly 60 broad; thus having an area of 10,500 square miles, or almost one-third of the entire area of Maine, being a tract larger than Vermont, New Hampshire, or Massachusetts. It contained twenty-four townships and plantations, "of which Penobscot and Castine are the chief." In 1790 it had a population of 9,549. A great part of the county, it was hardly necessary to state, was still unsettled, the population not yet reaching one person to the square mile.

WATER WORKS.

CITY HALL.

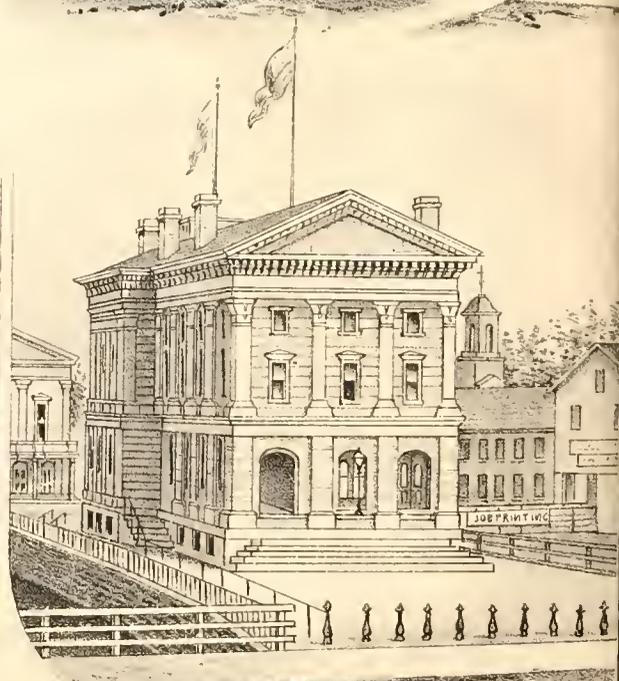

GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

COURT HOUSE

JAIL.

CUSTOM HOUSE.

VIEW OF WATER WORKS AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS, BANGOR, MAINE.

"The towns along the sea-coast, and on the banks of Penobscot and Union rivers, are the most fertile and populous." Castine was the shire-town or county seat. The population of Hancock county, by the first Federal census, taken the year of its erection, was 9,549. Bangor and adjacent places had 567; Brewer, with Orrington and adjacent places, 477; and Eddington, 110. In 1814 the county had 6,852 rateable polls, or about two-fifteenths of all in the State; with a valuation of $168,973.13, and a ratio of $26.08 in the $1,000.

PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

The first county to be cut out of the immense tract of Hancock, and the ninth and last to be formed in the District of Maine before the separation from Massachusetts, was the county of Penobscot. It was incorporated by act of the Massachusetts Legislature February 15, 1816, the law taking effect April 1st next following. It simply embraced all the northern part of Hancock, from north line of Frankfort and Bucksport to the Canada boundary. Bangor, already, as has been noticed, a half-shire town with Castine, was made the county seat; but all matters cognizable by the Supreme Court and arising in the new county, were still to be tried at Castine, and the jail of Hancock county was to be used in common with Penobscot for the term of three years.

The name of this county, according to Judge Godfrey, was reported by the French in sixty different ways, during their occupancy to 1664. The principal was Panawanskake. The English—that is, the new Plymouth colonists—caught the word Penobscot, by which it was known as early as 1626. The Indian name was Penobskag, or Penobscok, suggested by the rocky falls just above Bangor—Penobsg (rock), uteral (a place)—a rocky place. In another dialect, Penopse (stone), anke (place)—the rock river. According to Mr. Springer author of the entertaining book on Forest Life and Forest Trees, Penobscot, or Penobskag, was the name of only that part of the river from the head of tide-water above Oldtown. Below that section, he says, the stream was called Baum-tu-quai-took, the broad river, or "all waters united." Still another division of the river was called Gim sit-i-cook, smooth or dead water. But whatever the origin of the name, or however it may have been applied, the designation of the great and beautiful river, or of some part of it, was fitly transferred to the new county.

The first corps of county officers for Penobscot were Samuel E. Dutton, of Bangor, Judge of Probate; Allen Gilman, one of the earliest lawyers in that place, Register of Probate; Jacob McGaw, another of the pioneer lawyers, County Attorney; Thomas Cobb, also of Bangor, Clerk of the Courts; Jedediah Herrick, of Hampden, Sheriff; John Wilkins, of Orrington, Register of Deeds and County Treasurer. As late as 1834 the salary attaching to the first of these offices was but $150, and the Register of Probate received but $324 as salary.

THE FIRST COURT-HOUSE

occupied by the new county was the frame building now owned by the city of Bangor, occupied as a city hall, and standing on Columbia street, near Hammond, and nearly opposite the present court-house. It had been built, the tradition goes, in 1812-13, although Bangor was not made a half-shire town with Castine until 1814. The old structure has changed somewhat in appearance, having been removed to its present site, remodeled and repaired in 1850. It formerly stood upon the adjacent lot nearer Hammond street, and fronted upon Main street, or toward West Market Square. In it many of the British troops were quartered during their brief occupation of Bangor in 1814. It was occupied as the county court-house, as well as somewhat for religious purposes before church edifices were put up here, until 1831, when the present temple of justice and official business, upon the site now occupied on Hammond street, between Court and Franklin, was erected at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. In 1859 the county bought from the city a part of the street in the rear of the court-house premises, about ten thousand square feet in all, for the sum of two thousand dollars. In 1858-59 the new jail, with Sheriff's residence attached, was put up at an expense of one hundred thousand dollars; and the county work-shop, west of the jail proper, a rather novel and most commendable institution, in 1875, costing twenty thousand dollars.

CHANGES IN THE COUNTY.*

The town of Corinna was not in the original assignment to Penobscot county. By an act of February 10, 1833, it was set off from Somerset, and annexed to this county.

March 23, 1838, Piscataquis county was incorporated, taking to the north line of it, then the State boundary, three ranges from Somerset county and, as may be stated with approximate accuracy, four ranges north of the line of Penobscot towns beginning with Dexter, from this county.

March 16, 1839, upon the erection of Aroostook county, Penobscot sustained the further loss of so much of the third, fourth and fifth ranges as lay north of Mattawamkeag, Kingman, and Drew Plantation. Later, March 21, 1843, a further cession was made to Aroostook of so much of the territory of Penobscot as lay in ranges six, seven and eight, north of the townships numbered eight. It may be noted also that the next year, March 12, 1844, all the former possession of this county north of the same line, but then in Piscataquis, was annexed to Aroostook, with enough more from the old tract of Somerset to make about sixty townships. By the same act the division lines between Penobscot and Washington and between Penobscot and Piscataquis, and Aroostook, were altered.

There has been no further subtraction from the Penobscot area since the Aroostook annexation of 1843. Had the British succeeded in establishing the boundary line they claimed under the treaty of 1783, it would have cut off about the equivalent of three townships from the present northern part of the county, and very much more as the county lay at the time the claim was pressed.

* The several acts of the Legislature relating to the erection of the county and change of its area, will be found in the Appendix.

THE CIVIL LIST.

Penobscot county has contributed her full share to the roll of civil and well as military honor in the Pine-tree State. Her sons have done grand service to the Nation and the Commonwealth, through more than two generations. We give a civil list as nearly complete as possible:

Hannibal Hamlin, Speaker of the Maine House of Representatives 1837 and 1839; Representative in Congress, 1843-47; Senator of the United States, 1857-61, and 1869-81; Governor of the State, 1858; Vice-President of the United States, 1861-65.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

William D. Williamson, of Bangor, 1821-23; Samuel Butnam, Dixmont, 1827-30; Gorham Parks, Bangor, 1833-37; Elisha H. Allen, Bangor, 1841-43 (now Chancellor of the Sandwich Islands and their Minister to the United States); Hannibal Hamlin, Hampden, 1843-47; Charles Stetson, Bangor, 1849-51; Israel Washburn, jr., Orono, 1851-60; John A. Peters, Bangor, 1867-73; Samuel F. Hersey, Bangor, 1873-75; Harris M. Plaisted, 1875-77; George W. Ladd, 1879-83.

GOVERNORS OF THE STATE.

William D. Williamson, Bangor, (acting,) 1821; Edward Kent, Bangor, 1838 and 1840; Hannibal Hamlin, Hampden, 1857; Israel Washburn, jr., Orono, 1861-62; Daniel F. Davis, Corinth, 1880; Harris M. Plaisted, Bangor, 1881. Penobscot county has thus furnished about one-fifth of the Governors of Maine.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

This was established here October 2, 1821. Present at this first session: Prentiss Mellen, of Portland, Chief Justice; William Pitt Preble, and Nathan Weston, jr., Associate Justices; Isaac Hodsdon, of Bangor, Clerk; Josiah Brewer, of Brewer, Crier; George W. Brown, of Bangor, Foreman of Grand Jury; Nathaniel Burrill, Foreman of Traverse Jury, first panel; Daniel Wilkins, Foreman of the second panel. The first actions were those transferred from the Supreme Judicial Court held at Castine, June term, 1821.

John Appleton, Bangor, Associate Justice May 11, 1852, to October 24, 1862, and Chief Justice since the latter date; Joshua W. Hathaway, Bangor, May 11, 1852, to May 10, 1859; Jonas Cutting, Bangor, April 20, 1854; reappointed April 20, 1861, and April 20, 1868, served till 1869; Edward Kent, Bangor, May 11, 1859; reappointed May 11, 1866, served till 1873; John A. Peters, Bangor, May 20, 1873; reappointed May 20, 1880, and now serving.

Reporters of the Court.— John Appleton, Bangor, March 5, 1841, to January 22, 1842 (volumes 19 and 20 of the decisions).

STATE OFFICES.*

Presidents of the Senate.— William D. Williamson, Bangor, 1821; Samuel H. Blake, Bangor, 1842; Samuel

* The roll of State Senators and Representatives from Penobscot county has necessarily to be postponed to the Appendix.

Butman, Dixmont, 1853; Franklin Muzzy, Bangor, 1855; Josiah Crosby, Dexter, 1868; Charles Buffum, Orono, 1871; John B. Foster, Bangor, 1873.

Secretaries of the Senate.— Daniel Sanborn, Bangor, 1841; Ezra C. Brett, Oldtown, 1863.

Speakers of the House.— Hannibal Hamlin, Hampden, 1837 and 1839; Elisha H. Allen, Bangor, 1838; George P. Sewall, Oldtown, 1851; Lewis Barker, Stetson, 1867; Edward B. Nealley, Bangor, 1877; Henry Lord, Bangor, 1878.

Clerks of the House.— Thomas McGaw, Bangor, 1831; E. W. Flagg, Bangor, 1849; George W. Wilcox, Dixmont, 1857; S. J. Chadbourne, East Dixmont, 1868.

Secretary of State. S. J. Chadbourne, East Dixmont, 1876.

State Treasurer.— Silas C. Hatch, Bangor, 1874.

Attorney-Generals.— Jonathan P. Rogers, Bangor, 1832; Samuel H. Blake, Bangor, 1848; G. W. Ingersoll, Bangor, 1850; John A. Peters, Bangor, 1864; Harris M. Plaisted, Bangor, 1873.

Adjutant-Generals.— Isaac Hodsdon, Bangor, 1841; Albert Tracy, Bangor, 1852; John L. Hodsdon, Bangor, 1861-66; Melville M. Folson, Oldtown (acting), 1879.

Land Agents.— John Hodsdon, Bangor, 1834-47; Elijah L. Hamlin, Bangor, 1838 and 1841; Levi Bradley, Levant, 1842; Isaac R. Clark, Bangor, 1855, 1864-67, and 1879; James Walker, Bangor, 1856; Noah Barker, Exeter, 1857; Edwin C. Burleigh, Bangor, 1876-77.

JUDGES OF THE COMMON PLEAS.

The Circuit Court of Common Pleas, for the third Eastern District, was established July 2, 1816. William Crosby, of Belfast, presided as Chief Justice; Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, Justice; Thomas Cobb, Clerk; James Poor, of Brewer, Crier. David Perham, of Brewer, afterwards of Bangor, was presiding Justice from 1823 to 1839.

William Crosby, Chief Justice, presided to 1822; Ezekiel Whitman, of Portland, Chief Justice in 1826, '31, '32, and 34; James Campbell, November, 1816; Samuel E. Smith, 1824-30; John Huggles, of Thomaston, 1831-34, presided as Justices.

This Court was abolished May 12, 1839, and the District Court for the Eastern District was established, May 28, 1839. Anson G. Chandler and Frederic H. Allen, were the Justices; Charles Stetson, Clerk; Charles C. Cushman, County Attorney; J. Wingate Carr, Sheriff.

The following Justices have presided:— Anson G. Chandler, 1839-43; Frederic H. Allen, of Bangor, 1839-49; Daniel Goodenow, 1847; Joshua W. Hathaway, of Bangor, 1849-52. This Court was abolished in 1852, and all law business is transacted in the Supreme Judicial Court.

The Circuit Court of Common Pleas for the third Eastern District, established July 2, 1816, and sitting as a Court of Sessions, held their first session in Bangor on that day. Present: William Crosby, of Belfast, Chief Justice; Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, Justice; Moses Patten, of Bangor, and Moses Greenleaf, of Williamsburg, Session Justices; Thomas Cobb, Clerk.

Chief Justices of this Court.—Enoch Brown, 1819-22; John Godfrey, 1823-24; Amos Patten, 1825-26; Edward Kent, 1827-28; Thomas A. Hill, 1829-30; all of Bangor.

Associate Justices.—Isaac Hodsdon, 1820-21; and Seba French, 1821-31, of Bangor; Ephraim Goodale, of Orrington, 1821-31; and Joseph Kelsey, 1831. The last session of this Court was held April 5, 1831.

THE PROBATE COURT

is held on the last Tuesday in each month.

Judges.—Samuel E. Dutton, 1816-19; David Parham, 1820-21; Martin Kinsley, 1822-23; William D. Williamson, 1824-39; Samuel Cony, 1840-46; E. G. Rawson, 1847-53; Daniel Sanborn, 1854-56; John E. Godfrey, 1857-80; Elliot Walker, 1881.

Registers.—Allen Gilman, 1816-19; Alexander Savage, 1820-35; Mason S. Palmer, 1836-40; Henry V. Poor, 1841; John Williams, 1842-49; Joseph Bartlett, 1857-68; Ambrose C. Flint, 1869-78; John F. Robinson, 1879.

THE COURT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS was established in 1831, and held its first session September 3, 1831. Thomas A. Hill, Chairman. This Court has held its sessions four terms each year, quarterly, with an adjourned session on the first Tuesday of each month, from that time to the present. Its chief business now relates to roads, bridges, and ferries. The clerk is the County Clerk of the Courts.*

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The officers of the county are the Commissioners, Clerk of the Courts, County Attorney, Register of Deeds, Treasurer, Sheriff, and Jailor, Deputy Sheriffs, Coroners, Judge of Probate, and Register of Probate.

County Clerks: Thomas Cobb, 1816-20; (Mr. Cobb was Clerk from 1802, in Hancock and this county). Isaac Hodsdon, 1821-37; Charles Stetson, 1838-41; Isaac S. Whitman, 1841-42; William T. Hilliard, 1842-52; Nathan Weston, jr., 1853-58; Augustus S. French, 1859-64; Ezra C. Brett, 1865-76; James H. Burgess, 1877-79; Ruel Smith, 1880.

Sheriffs: Daniel Wilkins, 1829-36; Joshua Carpenter, 1836-37; Otis Small, 1837-38; J. Wingate Carr, 1838-39 and '41; Hastings Strickland, 1839-40 and 42-43; Jabez True, 1843-50; John S. Chadwick, 1850-53, and '61-64; Francis W. Hill, 1853-54; Charles D. Gilmore, 1854-55, and 1857-60; John H. Wilson, 1855-56, and 1865-74; Simon G. Jerard, 1875-78; Louis F. Stratton, 1879.

Registers of Deeds: John Wilkins, 1814-24; Charles Rice, 1825-31; Stevens Davis, 1832-34; Jefferson Chamberlain, 1842-57; John Goodale, jr., 1858-67; Amos E. Hardy, 1868.

County Treasurers: John Wilkins, 1817-26; Charles Rice, 1826-31; Levi Bradley, 1832-37; Abner Taylor, 1837-38; Isaac C. Haynes, 1838-45; John S. Chadwick, 1845-50; Edward H. Burr, 1850-53; Thomas A. Taylor, 1853-54; Ambrose C. Flint, 1854-69; Horace J. Nickerson, 1870-78; Levi Bradley, 1879-80; Miner D. Chapman, 1881.

County Attorneys: John Godfrey, 1825-33; Albert G. Jewett, 1833-38; William H. McCrillis, 1838-39; Charles C. Cushman, 1839-42; George B. Moody, 1841-42; Gorham Parks, 1843-45; Isaiah Waterhouse, 1846-51; Asa Waterhouse, 1852; John H. Hilliard, 1856-58; Charles Crosby, 1859-61; Charles P. Stetson, 1862-73; Jasper Hutchings, 1874-79; Benjamin H. Mace, 1880.

CHAPTER VIII.

LAND TITLES—GROWTH.

The Muscongus or Waldo Patent—The Twelve Townships Grant—Mt. Desert—Grant to Soldiers, East of Union River—Eddington—The Eastern Lands—Grants "for the Encouragement of Literature"—Original Proprietorship in Penobscot County—The Lottery Lands—Division of Lands between Maine and Massachusetts—Growth of the County—Dates of Settlement of the Towns—Statistics of Population—Comparative View from 1790 to 1880—Statistics of Taxation, Wealth, Business, etc.—The Shipping Interest—The First Steamboat—The Lumber Interest—The Ice Industry.

THE MUSCONGUS PATENT.

The first subdivision of lands in Maine, affecting the Penobscot country, was under the Muscongus or Waldo patent, granted by the Plymouth Council, March 2, 1630, to Beauchamp and Leverett, of Boston, in England, and, nearly a century afterwards, taking the name of the Waldo patent, from the family designation of its then principal proprietors. It included about one million of acres, or thirty miles square, and was not made for immediate purposes of sale, settlement, or civil government, but solely to secure to the grantees a monopoly of the trade in that quarter with the Indians, whose consent to the grant or cession of the lands does not seem to have been considered as in any way necessary. The original survey of the patent, probably, did not enter at any point the present Penobscot county; at all events, the north line of the Patent was subsequently settled as being upon the south line of this county west of the Penobscot—that is, upon the boundary of Hampden, Newburg and Dixmont. In 1785 the Government proposed to the Waldo proprietors that the thirty-mile tract should be surveyed and set apart for them, if they would quiet the titles of all settlers found upon it, who were in possession before April 19, 1775, and execute a release to all other lands they claimed under the patent. The proposal was accepted; but the survey made ran so far to the west as to include several townships held under the Plymouth Patent. A re-survey became necessary, and was ordered February 23, 1798. Thomas Davis was appointed agent of the Government, to assign to the Waldo proprietors a tract above the north line of their territory equal to that they had lost by the re-survey. He selected for them four townships now among the most valuable in this county, reserving only the lots of settlers already upon them. They were Bangor, 18,740 acres; Hampden, 22,188; Hermon, 24,360; and Newburg, 17,497 84-785 acres in all. To this extent, then, the county of Penobscot may be held to have been in some sense within the Waldo Patent. The assignment to the proprietors was made February 5, 1800. About 3,200 acres from these townships afterwards reverted to the Government, and were divided between Maine and Massachusetts in the arrangement of May 21, 1828.

* The above notes, concerning the courts and their officers, are contributed by E. F. Duren, esq., of Bangor. We add that the first session of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, in Bangor, began October 2, 1821, and held for five days. Justices Mellen, Weston, and Preble were then on the Supreme Bench.

THE TWELVE TOWNSHIPS.

In 1762, the settlements about Penobscot, and to the east of it, multiplying somewhat rapidly under the increased feeling of security produced by the erection of Fort Pownall, many petitions were sent to the Provincial authorities for the concession of lands. Twelve townships, each to be six miles square, or its equivalent, were accordingly granted by the General Court, in the expectation that the Crown would confirm the grant. The townships were to be laid out east of the Penobscot River, in a regular contiguous manner. Six of them fell upon the east side of Union River, which took its name as the line of meeting for the halves of the grants, the other six townships lying between it and the St. Croix. The former six were granted to David Marsh and 359 others named in the patents; the latter to several bodies of petitioners. Mr. Williamson gives the following account of the conditions of the grant:

These grantees, as voluntary associates and tenants in common, individually bound themselves, their heirs and assigns, in a penal bond of £50, conditioned to lay out no one of the townships more than six miles in extent, on the bank of the Penobscot or on the seacoast; to present to the General Court for their acceptance plans of the survey by the 31st of the ensuing July; to settle each township with sixty Protestant families within six years, after obtaining the King's approbation, and build as many dwelling-houses, at least eighteen feet square; also to fit for tillage three hundred acres of land, erect a meeting-house, and settle a minister. There were reserved in each township one lot for parsonage purposes, another for the first settled minister, a third for Harvard college, and a fourth for the use of schools.

In these and all other conveyances of the Crown lands lying between Sagadahock and St. Croix, the patents or deeds were signed by the Governor and Speaker, countersigned by the Provincial Secretary and conditioned, according to the restrictive clause in the charter, to be valid whenever they were confirmed by the King—otherwise without effect. The names also of the patentees were inserted, the boundaries described, and the conditions expressed; each patent closing with a proviso that the grantee "yield one-fifth part of all the gold and silver ore and precious stones found therein."

In a narrative of certain well-known military events upon the Castine peninsula in 1779, dated 1781, and entitled Siege of Penobscot by the Rebels, with an Account of the Country of Penobscot, by John Calef, volunteer, we find the following record of these townships, with some notes of progress:

At the end of the last war, viz., in 1763, the General Assembly of Massachusetts Bay granted thirteen townships, each of six miles square, lying on the east side of Penobscot river, to thirteen companies of proprietors, who proceeded to lay out the said townships, and returned plans thereof to the General Assembly, which were approved and accepted. In consequence of this measure, about sixty families settled on each township, and made great improvements of the land.

The settlers employed the then agent for the said Province at the Court of Great Britain, to solicit the royal approbation of those grants, and in the year 1773 as also in the last year (1780) they sent an agent expressly on their own account for the same purpose, and further to pray that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to sever that District from the Province of Massachusetts Bay and erect it into a Government under the authority of the Crown; which solicitation has hitherto, however, been without effect.

In October, 1772, there were in this District forty-two towns and 2,638 families, who have since greatly increased, at least in the proportion of one fourth, which is 559 families, making in the whole 3,297 families. Reckoning, then, five souls to each family (which is a moderate computation), there are now 16,485 souls.

To this new country the Loyalists resort with their families (last summer, in particular, a great number of families were preparing to remove thither) from the New England provinces, and find an asylum from the tyranny of Congress and their tax gatherers, as well as daily employment in fishing, lumbering, and clearing and preparing land for their subsistence; and there they continue in full hope and pleasing expectation that they may soon re-enjoy the liberties and privileges which would be best secured to them by laws, and under a form of government modelled after the British constitution; and that they may be covered in their possessions, agreeably to the petition to the Throne in 1773, which was renewed last year.

Mr. Calef probably included in his enumeration of townships, in order to make up thirteen, the island of Mt. Desert, which was granted by the General Court to Governor Bernard—for his "extraordinary services," they said, but very likely, as Williamson suggests, "in fact and in policy, to secure his influence and efforts towards obtaining the royal assent." They make, indeed, a pertinent hint to him in their resolution or address: "Your immediate and undivided attention to the subject is more especially requested because a sufficient number of subscribers or applicants have come forward, ready to go and settle thirteen townships [including his own] as soon as the royal confirmation can be obtained." We do not learn that the King's assent to the grants was definitely given; but they were never formally revoked. After the Revolution, in 1785, the grants were confirmed by the Legislature of Massachusetts, with some new conditions.

In the representations the agent of the settlers was instructed to make to the British Government, the settlers reported the soil "as remarkably good, well adapted to the culture of every sort of English grain, and hemp, flax, etc.—and especially good for grazing, in which it excels any other part of America,—and for raising cattle. Its woods abound with moose and other kinds of deer, and several kinds of game, good for food.

On the rivers and streams are two hundred saw-mills. . . . It gives promise of being a rich and fruitful country."

None of these townships lay within the boundaries of Penobscot county. They were nearer to the coast. As a part of the history of the valley, however, and of the settlement of the Eastern country, we have thought the twelve townships worthy of this notice.

A PATRIOTIC GRANT.

In 1764 the General Court, in answer to numerous appeals from those who had served in the various wars of the period, caused a list of them to be made, beginning with those who had been in the first Louisburg expedition, and then had for them a second tier of townships east of Union river surveyed, and all the islands on the coast, except Mt. Desert, in order, as they said, "that some further reward for their brave services might be given them in the unappropriated lands of this Province." The King, it is said, encouraged by his proclamation the making of these grants, without any pecuniary terms or conditions.

About the same time, two "ranging parties," in the interest of public-land operations, were employed by the Government to explore the Penobscot and St. Croix waters.

THE EDDY GRANT.

In 1785 Colonel Jonathan Eddy, of Norton, Massachusetts, but a resident near Fort Cumberland, at the head of Chignecto Bay, Nova Scotia, before the Revolution, and his companions in a courageous exploit at the outbreak of the war, they having become refugees after the struggle closed, were recommended by Congress to the consideration of the State of Massachusetts. The Commonwealth accordingly granted to Colonel Eddy and nineteen others of the refugees, by an act of June 14, 1785, tracts of various size on the east side of the Penobscot, in the neighborhood of the head of tide-water. Altogether they made up 9,000 acres and now constitute the major part of the town of Eddington, which is named from Colonel Eddy. The grants were conditioned that each grantee should erect a dwelling on his lot within two years after the concession, and that the place should be immediately settled.

The islands in Penobscot Bay were surveyed about this time, and the settlers thereon allowed their lots for a merely nominal consideration, making them in effect free grants from the State Government, on account of sufferings and privations during the Revolution. A minister was also employed by the State, to preach during half the year in the destitute plantations of Lincoln county, then including the present Penobscot, who was to be paid out of the State tax derived from the inhabitants.

THE EASTERN LANDS.

These were originally regarded as including the large ungranted tracts lying in the present counties of Penobscot, Washington, Somerset and Oxford, belonging to the State. The first Commissioners of Eastern Lands were Jedediah Preble, of Falmouth, Jonathan Greenleaf, of New Gloucester, David Sewall, of York, John Lewis, of North Yarmouth, and William Litbgow, of Georgetown. They were appointed by the General Court of Massachusetts, May 1, 1781, with duties, according to Mr. Williamson, "to inquire into all the encroachments upon the wild, unappropriated lands of the State, to examine the rights and pretenses of claimants, and to prosecute obstinate intruders and trespassers, yet liquidate fair adjustments with all such as were disposed to do right, upon principles of equity, good faith, and duty." There was beginning to be, it seems, considerable timber-stealing from the public lands.

This commission resigned its powers three years afterwards, having done arduous and faithful service; and in March, 1784, Samuel Phillips, jr., of Roxbury, Nathaniel Wells, of Wells, and Nathan Dane, of Beverly, were appointed a new commission, with enlarged powers. "These were instructed by the General Court to inquire into all trespasses, illegal entries, and encroachments upon the public lands; to ascertain how far grantees had complied with their engagements, and what were the limits of the tracts owned or claimed by the Indian tribes; and to report the expediency of employing skilful surveyors to run out six townships on the river St. Croix, four on the west side of Penobscot, above the Waldo Patent, and all the territory on the eastern side of the latter river between the Indian lands and the twelve townships conditionally granted before the war. For these purposes they were directed to send one of their number to visit this District, in person." The Commission was authorized to offer an actual settler a tract of 150 acres anywhere upon the navigable waters of Maine at the rate of one dollar per acre, or to give him outright as much as 100 acres elsewhere, if he would make a clearing of sixteen acres thereon within four years. A State land office was now opened; General Rufus Putnam was appointed Surveyor-General, and the public lands were advertised for sale in quantities to suit purchasers.

By June, 1795, parcels of Eastern lands had been sold to the value of two hundred and sixty-nine thousand dollars, and a contract made for the purchase from the Government of 2,839,453 acres more, with a reservation of 103,680 acres for masts. 431,000 acres had been granted for the encouragement of literature "and for other useful and humane purposes," and yet 8,700,000 acres were left. Nearly one-third of these were sold, or granted for various public purposes, during the next twenty years; and in 1816 it was believed but about 6,000,000 were still in the hands of the Commonwealth. More exactly, there were in Maine 6,596,480 acres of public land still unsold, of which about five millions were in Penobscot county.

GRANTS FOR SCHOOLS.

A number of the grants mentioned as made "for the encouragement of literature" came into Penobscot county. The act of incorporation of Bowdoin College, in June, 1794, gave for its foundation five full townships of unappropriated lands—saving three lots of three hundred and twenty acres apiece in each—upon every one of which fifteen families were to be settled within twelve years. The College committee selected Dixmont, in this county, and the four townships now Sebco, Foxcroft, Guilford, and Abbott, in Piscataquis county. Etna and part of Plymouth were afterwards acquired by Bowdoin college. Marblehead academy secured Exeter, Leicester Academy Stetson Plantation, and Williams College Garland and Lee. Bridgeton Academy got Maxfield, Warren Academy a township in the Waldo Patent, and Waterville College a large part of township three, in the west side of the Penobscot. Hopkins Academy Grant, fifty miles north of Bangor, still retains that name.

The total grants to literary institutions in the present State of Massachusetts amounted to 354,230 acres; in Maine 490,545 acres. Some thousands of acres were also granted for other purposes; as, in the Penobscot region, 5,760 to the proprietors of the Duck trap bridge, to aid in building that work. A part of Kingman, in this county, was included in the grant for building the bridge. Newburg, in Penobscot, it should be added, is on part of the large tract granted to General Knox for his military services. By 1816, 617,257 acres of public lands had been sold in Penobscot county, at an average of thirty-four cents per acre, or a total sum of $210,400.13. The acres remaining unsold in incorporated towns and plantations of the District numbered 487,040; in those not incorporated or settled, 1,281,860 acres were owned by private persons—the Indians, however, held 460,000; and 6,233,400 were still owned by the State. The total acreage of the District of Maine was then 8,003,100.

ORIGINAL PROPRIETORSHIP.

The following list of townships in the Penobscot Valley, with their acreage of public lands alienated in each by the year 1820, and their original proprietors, is derived from Greenleaf's Survey of the State of Maine, published in 1829:

TOWNSHIPS.	ACRES.	ORIGINAL TITLES.
Brewer.....	23,708.....	Moses Knapp et al.
Orrington.....	11,759.....	Brown & Fowler.
Carmel.....	22,623.....	M. Kinsley.
Corinth.....	23,010.....	John Peck.
Charleston.....	24,794.....	John Lowell.
Dismont.....	21,284.....	Bowdoin College.
Dutton [Glenburn].....	22,692.....	H. Jackson.
Dexter.....	25,522.....	Amos Bond et al.
Exeter.....	22,682.....	Marblehead Academy.
Eddington.....	9,834.....	Jonathan Eddy et al.
Etna.....	25,708.....	Bowdoin College.
Garland.....	22,536.....	Williams College.
Jarvis Gore [Clifton].....	15,000.....	Leonard Jarvis et al.
Kirkland [Hudson].....	23,085.....	H. Jackson.
Levant.....	22,325.....	William Wetmore.
Maxfield.....	10,950.....	Bridgeton Academy.
Newport.....	21,104.....	David Green.
Orono.....	21,946.....	Settlers et al.
Sunkhaze Pl. [Milford].....	13,139.....	" "
No. 4 E. of Penobscot.....	3,795.....	J. Brackett et al.
Stetson Plantation.....	23,040.....	Leicester Academy.
No. 1, 6th R.....	23,040.....	J. P. Boyd.
No. 3, 8th R.....	11,220.....	W. C. Whitney et al.
No. 5, 9th R.....	23,040.....	Town of Boston.
No. 2, 2d R., N. of lottery lands.....	11,220.....	J. E. Foxcroft.
No. 3, 2d R. " ".....	3,040.....	Williams College.
No. 6, 9th R., N. of Waldo pat.	11,520.....	Warren Academy.
No. 7, 4th R.....	23,040.....	Thos. Munkhouse.
Gore adj. Eddington.....	1,000.....	T. Harding.
No. 1, W. side Penobscot.....	505.....	Settlers.
Nos. 2 & 3, " ".....	5,000.....	John Bennock.
Rem. of No. 3, " ".....	29,164.....	Waterville College.
No. 4 (Orono).....	9,393.....	Sundry.
No. 1, E. of Penobscot.....	961.....	Settlers et al.
Coldstream Pl.....	5,000.....	Joseph Treat.
No. 6, 4th R., N. of lottery lands.....	5,760.....	Proprietors Duck-trap Bridge

"LOTTERY LANDS."

The mention of these in the above table, as well as the general interest and importance of their place in the early land history of the State, justifies a notice of them here. The close of the war of the Revolution left Massachusetts heavily in debt, and it was resolved, as we have seen, to raise money by the sale of the unsettled lands in Maine. Sales through the land office dragged, however, and in 1786 it was resolved to organize a lottery for the disposal of fifty townships, between the Penobscot and the Passamaquoddy. Tickets to the number of 2,720, each for a tract of land, of size varying from a quarter-section, or half a mile square, to an entire township, in a specified township, were put on sale at the uniform price of sixty pounds apiece, for which payment might be made in the notes or evidences of indebtedness given by the State to its soldiers, or in any other of its public securities. Had all been sold the avails would have been £163,200. The lands were not yet sufficiently in demand, however, from the general ignorance concerning their value and the poverty produced by the war; and only 437 tickets were purchased, bringing £26,220, or $87,400, into the State Treasury. The drawing took place in March, 1786, under the management of the Eastern Lands Commission, and 165,280 acres were found to have been drawn, at an average price of fifty-two cents per acre. The Government subsequently exchanged other lands with those purchasers who had drawn a whole township, or its equivalent. Mr. Williamson thus describes the property drawn:

These townships were Nos. 7, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7=15 in the east division; and numbers from 14 to 43, both inclusive=30 in the middle division; and Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6=5 in the northern division, beginning at the northwest corner of No. 3, at Union River, thence north 30 miles, and including one tier north of the end of that line, except the corner township; thence east to the Schoodic [St. Croix]; then southerly through Denny's River to Orangetown; thence westerly back of Machias, Columbia, etc., to the first corner mentioned.

The townships drawn, and their inhabitants, were to be exempted from taxation for fifteen years. Nevertheless the scheme was not an eminent success. Mr. Williamson says that "if this project drew in a large amount of the public securities, it did not promote the settlement of Maine." The lottery land business was stopped, and straight sales were relied upon by the State thereafter. About 1795 an era of speculation in Eastern lands set in, and in that year the State stopped the sales for a time. Grants were liberally made, however, during the last decade of the century, for educational and other purposes, as we have noticed. Some lands thus appropriated were bought back at once by the State; others were held and sold by the grantees. The land market thus soon became glutted.

From each township sold by the State there were reserved four lots of 320 acres each—one for the State, one for the first minister of the gospel whom the people voted to settle, one for the ministerial fund provided for the support of the said minister, and one for the common school fund. The purchasers of townships were required to secure a certain number of actual settlers upon each by a specified time, under pain of forfeiture. Some buyers obtained an extension of time from the General Court.

By the close of the last century a vast breadth of the wild lands of the State had been surveyed. Between 1785 and 1810 a great number of acres were sold (more than three and one-half millions of acres, or the equivalent of 150 townships, were transferred by sale or gift by 1795); but the settlement of the District was not greatly promoted. The prices obtained, too, were very low, until 1820 averaging but 20 cents per acre. By that year 739,428 acres in Penobscot county had been settled or incorporated, with an average population of twelve persons to the square mile.

THE BINGHAM PURCHASE

demands a brief notice. Present at the drawing of the lottery, probably, in March, 1786, was Mr. William Bingham, of Philadelphia, a man of large wealth and enterprising views. He relieved the State of such of the lottery lands as were not drawn by ticket-holders, and also purchased of the latter many of their prize lots. These constitute the famous "Bingham Purchase," in which some of the lands of Penobscot county lie. Mr. Williamson, writing about 1830, says: "The heirs own another large tract in Maine—2,350,000 acres in all."

THE "BURNT LANDS,"

according to Morse's Universal Geography, edition of 1819, which cites the Rev. Mr. May as authority, extended "from near Penobscot river fifty or sixty miles in a westerly direction, and south of those high clusters of mountains which pass under the names of Abema, the Sisters, and Spencer mountains. The breadth of these lands is very irregular; perhaps ten miles may be considered as the mean breadth. The trees on this extensive tract were first prostrated by some violent tempest, which happened about the year 1795. The general face of these lands is level, and the tempest must have poured over the mountains like water over a dam, for the bodies of the trees fell from the north, in which direction the mountains lie. This extensive tract was set on fire (whether by lightning or by the carelessness of the hunters, or through design, for the convenience of hunting, is uncertain) about the year 1803, at the time the inhabitants first began to settle on those ranges of townships which lie north of the Waldo patent, and spread over the whole tract. A fire was again kindled on this tract in the summer of 1811, but being baffled by shifting winds and finally extinguished by rain, it continued its ravages but a few days and spread over but few miles of territory. But the trunks of trees, the outsides of which are now reduced to coal, and the combustibles annually accumulated from the leaves of decayed vegetables, from such a body of timber as that a fire, in any dry time and fanning wind, would renew and extend its ravages over the whole tract. The face of Nature has been laid bare by conflagrations. The hills, ponds, and streams are no longer embowered, as in the wilderness, but are laid open to the eye of the beholder from chosen eminences. The appearance of the whole country, in the season of vegetation, is not unlike that of a cultivated country, but we can nowhere behold the dwellings of men or the shelters of animals nurtured by his care, but are left to fancy them in rocks, which have the appearance of the abodes of men at a distance. The margins of a few of the rivers, where the land was low and marshy, are lined with its ancient growth, which keeps the eye from tiring with the uniformity of the prospect. Multitudes of animals must have perished, the bones of which have been discovered."

AT THE SEPARATION

of Maine from Massachusetts, the act of 1820 provided that the public lands in the district remaining unsold should be surveyed and divided equally between the States. The first division under this arrangement was made December 28, 1822. The old Indian Purchase on the Penobscot was divided according to the act. The reserved lots in the townships of Corinth, Newport, Dutton (Glenburn), Kirkland (Hudson), Orrington, Corinna, and No. 1, Range 6, were assigned to Massachusetts; those in Charleston, Carmel, Jarvis Gore (Clifton), and No. 3, Range 8, were turned over to Maine. There were subsequently other divisions.

THE INDIAN LANDS.

The transfer of these by treaty has been sufficiently noticed, for the purposes of this History, in our chapter on the Indians of Maine. The following observations, however, inadvertently omitted in that place, may be fitly given here. They are from the authorship of the Hon. John E. Godfrey, in his valuable article on The Ancient Penobscots, contributed to the seventh volume of the Maine Historical Collections. He is treating in this of the arrangements with the Penobscots:

The Indians, however, afterwards claimed title to the territory six miles wide, on both sides of the river, above the thirty miles relinquished in 1796, to an indefinite extent, and assumed to sell the timber from it. To prevent this, the Government of Massachusetts appointed another commission, in 1818, consisting of Edward H. Robbins, Daniel Davis, and Mark L. Hill, who met Governor Etienne, Lieutenant-Governor Neptune, Captain Francis, and other chiefs of the tribe—in all twenty-seven—on the 24th of June, at Bangor.

A Masonic celebration occurred at this time, and it was deemed expedient by the municipal officers to make the occasion memorable by a general celebration. Accordingly, they provided for a holiday and a procession. The Freemasons gave the Commissioners a dinner at Lumbert's then famous hotel, on Hancock street; after which the procession, consisting of the municipal officers, magistrates of the county, military officers, Rev. Thomas Williams, strangers, and citizens, escorted them to the court-house ["ancient city hall"], where a large audience of ladies and gentlemen was assembled. The chiefs, who were rather noble looking sons of the forest and showily dressed, accompanied by General John Blake [Indian agent], Major Treat, and Captain Webster, afterwards entered the house. As they entered, the Commissioners arose to receive them. Solicitor General Davis—who, tradition says, had a kindly regard for the fairer portion of the tribe—addressed them. Lieutenant-Governor Neptune, a chief of commanding figure, of great dignity of manner, and extensive influence among his people, made the reply. The result of the conference was that Massachusetts obtained a release of all the Indians' interest in the territory, excepting four townships, six miles square, two contiguous to the nine townships formerly released, and two near the mouth of the Mat-tawamkeag River—one on each side of the Penobscot and opposite each other—which, with the islands in the river above Oldtown Falls, were to belong to the Indians, for occupation, forever. As compensation for this relinquishment, the Commissioners agreed that the Indians should have also, for occupation, two acres of land in Brewer, opposite Kenduskeag Point; to employ a suitable man to teach them husbandry; to repair their church at Oldtown; to deliver there in October yearly, 500 bushels of corn, 15 barrels of flour, 7 barrels of clear pork, 1 hogshead of molasses, 100 yards of broadcloth (of blue and red), 50 blankets, 100 pounds of gunpowder, 400 pounds of shot, 150 pounds of tobacco, 6 boxes of chocolate, and $50 in silver. At the time they made them a present of 1 six-pound gun, 1 swivel, 1 box of pipes, 50 knives, 6 brass kettles, 200 yards of calico, 2 drums, 4 fifes, and 300 yards of ribbon. An annual stipend of $350 was appropriated by the Government for their religious teacher.

After the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, Maine assumed the obligations of Massachusetts to the Indians, and renewed the treaty at the court-house, in Bangor, on the 17th of August, 1820.

The Commissioner on the part of Maine was Hon. Lathrop Lewis. The first meeting was on the 15th of August, when the Commissioner made the proposition that Maine would take upon itself the obligations of Massachusetts, provided the tribe would release Massachusetts. The chiefs—who were the same who made the last treaty with Massachusetts—took time to consider. On the 17th the conference was renewed. The chiefs were dressed in scarlet coats or robes, ornamented with silver brooches and with beads, after the Indian mode of that day, and made quite a distinguished appearance. Captain Francis made a speech, and, in behalf of the tribe, accepted the proposition of Commissioner Lewis, to which Colonel Lewis replied. After the treaty was signed, Colonel Lewis presented from Governor King to Governor Etienne and Lieutenant-Governor Neptune, a fine piece of scarlet broad-cloth, for each a coat. To each of the other chiefs he gave a silver breast-plate, upon which was engraved the arms of the State of Maine. The presents were received with great apparent pleasure.

We conclude this chapter with some notes on the growth of Penobscot county. The progress of settlement and the increase of population in the Province have already been noted, to the year 1769, when the foundations of civilization were laid at Bangor. Mr. Williamson has an interesting note concerning this period. Under the date of 1768 he writes:

The increase and extension of settlements in the Penobscot country had become so affronting to the Tarratines that some of them began to utter bold threats against their progress. Hence the Governor told the House that a chaplain ought to be under constant pay at Fort Pownall, who might preach to the settlers in the audience of the Indians; "for," added he, "there is no minister of the Gospel within a circle of 100 miles' diameter, now generally peopled, though but thinly; and the settlers of themselves are unable to maintain one." Nay, if the claim to the territory eastward of Penobscot river were to be maintained against the natives, and the improvement of it promoted by an enterprising population, the fortress, he said, must be made a more respectable establishment. Happily agreeing with him in his Eastern politics, the General Court augmented the garrison from twelve to twenty men, and provided for the support of a chaplain, at the expense of £4 by the month.

During the previous year the enterprising Governor had had his eye upon the promotion of settlement in the Penobscot country. The same historian says:

Animated by a perspective of the Penobscot country filled with people, the Governor told the General Court, during their winter session, that "a great many families" stood ready to remove thither and settle, provided there were no obstacles in the way of their obtaining a title to the lands. The subject was popular, and he urged its importance upon their consideration with earnestness, believing that permanent settlements there would become supports essential to the strength and interests of the Province.

In 1795, with a view to the more rapid settlement of the Eastern lands, the "Massachusetts Society for the Aid of Emigrants" was formed.

A "truck-house" had previously, in 1760, been established at the Fort, which did a large business, and yielded the Government considerable profit. The commander of the Fort was "truck-master." This was the same year that Lieutenant Joshua Treat settled near Fort Pownall.

THE POPULATION

of the county in 1790 (that is, the portion of the State now constituting the county) was 1,154; in 1800, 3,009; in 1810, 7,831; 1820, 13,870; 1830, 22,962; 1840, 46,049; 1850, 63,089; 1860, 72,737; 1870, 75,150; 1880, 70,478. In 1870 the population was the largest of any county in the State except Cumberland.

The number of polls in the county in 1880 was 17,407—largest of any in the State except Cumberland; and its estates had an assessed valuation of $22,697,890 in 1870, and $21,408,151 ten years later. The county has now fifty-five towns, one city, and seven incorporated plantations—the largest number of towns of any county in the State.

The following table presents a comparative view of the growth of the several parts of the county during the last hundred years:

TOWNS.	1790	1800	1810	1820	1830	1840	1850	1860	1870	1880
Alton.....							252	531	508	410
Argyle.....						527	338	379	307	287
Bangor.....	567	277	850	1221	2868	8627	14432	16407	18289	16855
Bradford.....					403	1069	1296	1558	1487	1490
Bradley.....						395	796	844	866	829
Brewer.....	1477	786	1341	1049	1078	1730	2628	2835	3214	3170
Burlington.....						350	431	578	553	536
Carmel.....			123	153	237	520	1225	1273	1350	1220
Carroll.....							401	470	632	625
Charleston.....			210	344	859	1269	1283	1430	1191	1111
Chester.....						277	349	318	350	362
Clifton.....			50	139		185	309	307	348	350
Corinth.....					1077	1704	1559	1547	1513	1503
Cornish.....			184	296	712	1308	1000	1790	1462	1333
Dexter.....					885	1464	1942	2303	2875	2503
Dixmont.....			59	337	515	945	1498	1005	1442	1309
Drew Plantation.....									1309	1132
Eddington.....	110	167	205	276	425	505	666	856	776	746
Edinburg.....						52	93	43	55	45
Enfield.....						340	396	526	545	489
Etna.....			78	194	462	745	802	849	844	895
Exeter.....			140	58	1438	2052	1853	1783	1434	1274
Garland.....			236	275	621	1095	1247	1408	1309	1211
§Glenburn.....			89	207		664	905	741	740	655
Greenbush.....						261	457	650	621	667
Greenfield.....								359	317	337
Hampden.....		904	1279	1478		2661	3195	3085	3098	2917
Hermion.....			82	179	277	535	1042	1374	1413	1394
Holden.....								895	758	717
Howland.....					150	329	322	214	171	137
•Hudson.....			54	72	351	351	717	771	739	659
Kingman (formerly Independence Plantation)									185	546
Kenduskeag.....								816	770	650
Lagrange.....						336	482	690	622	727
Lakeville Plantation.....									108	136
Lee.....						724	017	939	990	894
Levant.....	129	146	143	747	1061	1841	1361	1361	1159	1076
Lincoln.....					1121	1356	1031	1530	1031	1059
Lowell.....					205	378	556	561	443	433
Mattamoras.....						97	54	31	51	64
Mattawamkeag.....							193	286	356	456
Maxfield.....				186	185			162	150	139
Medway.....									321	628
†Milford.....			98	146	250	474	687	744	827	734
Mount Chase.....									262	310
Newburg.....	62	216	328	626	963		1309	1365	1115	1057
Newport.....		178	512	897	1138		1210	1403	1559	1457
Oldtown.....					2342		3087	3860	4529	3395
Orono.....					1473	1521	2785	2533	2368	2245
Orrington.....	77	351	415	1234	1580	1852	1050	1768	1529	1529
Passadunkkeag.....					394		295	360	243	302
Pattagumpus Plantation								105	94	716
Patten.....								639	704	828
Plymouth.....						503	843	925	939	941
Prentiss.....								226	387	416
Springfield.....						546	583	854	870	878
Stacyville Plantation.....									138	184
Stetson.....		08	31	14	616		885	913	937	729
Vezie.....								703	810	622
Webster Plantation.....									28	118
West Indian Plantation										13
Whitney Ridge Plantation									17	18
Winn.....								230	170	223
Woodville Plantation.....								853	714	898
Township 3, R. 1.....						22			25
Township 2, R. 6.....									61
Township 2, R. 7.....						29			10
Township 2, R. 9.....									14
No. 1 Plantation.....									66	97
No. 2, Grand Falls Pt'n									100	93
"Settlements".....							1074		1287	170

* Including adjacent settlements.

† Taken with Orrington and adjacent settlements.

‡ Formerly Jarvis's Gore.

§ Formerly Dutton.

¶ Taken with Maxfield.

• Formerly Kirkland.

*) East Indian Plantation.

†† Formerly Sunkhaze Plantation.

By the census of 1800, the "townships in Penobscot," Nos. 1, 2, and 3: those east of the river, Nos. 1, 2, and 3 (Sunkhaze, now Milford), and 4, and the people "on State's land," numbered together 149. In 1810 the townships on Penobscot, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, had 46, and in 1820, 108. In 1820 No. 1 had 60, and No. 1 east of Penobscot 99. In 1810 No. 2 east of Penobscot had 39, No. 3 (Sunkhaze), 98, and No. 4, 136; in 1820 these townships, respectively, had 18, 146, and 125. In 1810 the residents "on State's land" numbered 71, and in 1820 37. In the latter year, No. 1, Sixth Range, had 2; No.

7, Eighth Range, 4; and No. 6, Ninth Range (now in Piscataquis county), 12. In 1840 Township No. 4 had 41; Township 3, Range 8, 29; Lower Indian Township, west of Penobscot river, 37; Indian Township, Woodville, No. 2, 6; Hopkins Academy Grant, 3; unincorporated townships north of Lincoln, 147; west half of Township No. 6, 147; Township No. 7, 30. In 1880 No. 3 had 12; No. 3, Range 3, 17; and No. 2, Range 2, and No. Range 4, together, 9.

By 1790, 120 square miles in the present territory of Penobscot county had been settled, with an average population of nearly ten to the square mile. Ten years later more than three times the space of 1790, or 390 square miles, were inhabited, but with a population slightly thinner, numbering scarcely eight to the mile. In 1810, the numbers, respectively, were 970 and 8; in 1820, 1,143 (739,428 acres), and 12. At the latter date the average of population for the whole State was but 8 $\frac{2}{3}$ to the mile. The gain of population in this county from 1790 to 1800 was 1855, or 161 per cent; from 1800 to 1810 it was 4,822, or 160 per cent; from 1810 to 1820, 6,039, or 77 per cent; from 1820 to 1830, 9,092, or 65.4 per cent; from 1830 to 1840, 23,087, or a little more than 100 per cent; from 1840 to 1870, 17,040, or nearly 30 per cent. The increase since has not been so rapid; and during the decade 1870-80 the population of Penobscot, like that of many other counties, fell off by a small percentage.

Of the population of 1820, 13,870 in all, 2,858 were engaged in the pursuits of agriculture, 251 in manufactures, and 140 in commerce—in proportions, severally, to every thousand engaged; of 880, 77, and 43.

SETTLEMENTS IN PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

Full notes of these will be made in our special histories of the towns of the county and of Bangor. A rapid summary of dates has been prepared for this work by Mr. Elnathan F. Duren, of the latter place, as follows:—

The earliest regular settlement of the county commenced in Bangor, in 1769; then followed settlements at Brewer and Orrington, 1770; Hampden, 1772; Oldtown, 1773; Orono, 1774; Veazie, 1786; Eddington, 1780; Holden, 1786; Hermon, 1791; Newport, 1794; Charleston and Corinth, 1795, Carmel, 1796; Levant and Newburg, 1798; Dixmont, 1799; Hudson, Kenduskeag, Milford, and Stetson, 1800; Dexter and Exeter, 1801; Garland, 1802; Bradford, 1803; Corinna, 1804; Glenburn, 1806; Etna and Plymouth, 1807; Clifton and Greenfield, 1812; Passadumkeag, 1813; Maxfield, 1814; Bradley, 1817; Alton, Argyle, Howland, and Lagrange, 1818; Enfield and Lowell, 1819; Chester, Greenbush, Medway, Pattagumpus, West Indian, and Woodville, 1820; Lincoln, 1823; Burlington and Lee, 1824; Mattamiscontis, 1825; Edinburg, 1827; Patten, 1828; Carroll, No. 2 Grand Falls, and Springfield, 1830; Mattawankeag, 1834; Winn, 1835; Prentiss and Whitney Ridge, 1836; Mount Chase, 1838; Webster Plantation, 1843; Drew Plantation, 1845; Stacyville, 1850; Lakeville Plantation, 1855; Kingman, 1864.

STATISTICS OF TAXATION, ETC.

In the table of valuations for the taxation of 1801 in Hancock county, in which Penobscot was then included, only Bangor, Hampden, and Orrington appear as representatives of what is now Penobscot county. Hancock county, all told, had then but 1,917 polls. The average price of dwelling-houses for taxation in that county at an earlier date (1793) was but 16s, 1d.

In 1816 the first year of Penobscot county, it had 1,593 polls, estates valued at $37,503.86, and a tax of $6.52 on the $1,000, as against $19.56 in the older Hancock county.

The number of buildings and principal manufacturing establishments in the county, as rendered to the Legislature in 1820, was as follow: Dwelling-houses, 1,315; barns, 1,212; shops attached to dwellings, 28; shops and stores detached, 74; tanneries, 5; pot- and pearlsh works, 9; grist-mills, 30, with 36 pairs of stones; saw-mills, 36, with 43 saws; carding machines, 15; fulling-mills, 9; all other mills, 1; bakehouse, 1; all other workshops, 1; warehouses, ropeworks, distilleries, cotton and woolen factories, spinning machines, slitting-mills, ironworks, and furnaces, none. These numbers compared favorably with those of most other counties in the State.

In 1826 the values per acre affixed by the Legislature to the wood and unimproved land in the several towns and townships of Penobscot county were as follow: Bangor, $1.50; Brewer and Orrington, $1; Carmel, Atkinson, Corinth, Dixmont, Newburg, Sebec, and Sangerville, 75 cents; Eddington, Newport, and Orono, 80 cents; Foxcroft, Guilford, and Williamsburg, 60 cents; Etna, Dutton, Kirkland, Maxfield, Brownville and Stetson Plantation, 50 cents; Blakesburg and Milo, 40 cents; Bowerbank and Jarvie's Gore, 30 cents; Kilmarnock and adjoining lands, and No. 1, Range 6, 25 cents; No. 3, Range 2, east of river, No. 3, 8th Range, and No. 5, 9th Range, 20 cents.

The net amount of postages accruing in each post-office of the county the same year was: Atkinson, $16.67; Bangor, $802.49; Birch Stream, 35 cents; Blakesburg, $4.72; Brewer, $60.69; Brownville, $8.85; Carmel, $6.08; Corinth, $11.08; East Corinth, $3.75; Dexter, $31.90; Dixmont, $48.31; Dover, $26.49; Dutton, $2.19; Etna, $5.09; Exeter, $31.08; Foxcroft, $30.20; Garland, $20.03; Guilford, $13.37; Howland, $2.77; Hampden, $110.45; Kirkland, $1.94; Kilmarnock, $3.37; Maxfield, $1.48; Milo, $15.79; Newburg, $14.54; North Charleston, $20.14; Newport, $23.03; Orono, $53.48; Oldtown, $10.80; Orrington, $37.05; Sangerville, $31.32; Sebec, $33.39; Williamsburg, $12.95. The total net amount of postage for the county was but $1,491.34. This, however, was more for each inhabitant, on an average, than was paid by any other county in the State, except Cumberland and Washington, being 10.7 cents against 11.7 and 15.7 in those counties. In amount paid per $1,000 worth of taxable property, it exceeded Cumberland and every other county but Washington, standing to this in the ratio of $1.65 to $1.91.

In 1820, the official returns made to the State Legislature from this county exhibited in much detail its development and resources at that date. The reports were tabulated as follow below. The first four columns of figures are in terms of acres; those relating to grain in bushels, hay in tons, and the last column gives the number of cows that the pasture of the township would keep.

Towns.	Village.....	Artificial Up-land Mowing.	Natural Fresh Meadow.	Pasture.....	Barns.....	Horses.....	Oxen.....	Cows & Steers.	Swine.....	Indian Corn..	Wheat.....	Rye.....	Oats.....	Barley.....	Peas and Beans	Upland Hay..	Fresh Hay....	Cows Pastured.
Bangor.....	235	407	18	434	75	49	83	163	110	685	1464	25	813	53	436	21	144
Brewer.....	244	977	73	572	76	40	115	240	163	856	585	25	23	113	637	71	231
Carnel.....	94	327	23	423	26	16	42	94	71	1694	1099	6	308	22	118
Corinth.....	75	328	245	40	28	52	131	123	608	435	31	38	45	372	131
Charleston.....	131	524	319	43	26	70	167	35	765	1155	33	151	11	83	435	129
Dixmont.....	132	372	759	42	40	86	211	229	15	1320	20	12	14	10	355	121
*Dutton.....	50	166	17	48	17	17	44	68	12	233	224	24	124	13	22
Dexter.....	160	411	232	44	25	71	150	171	375	282	299	170
Eddington.....	106	323	15	270	33	20	54	134	66	365	384	45	63	98	294	14	111
Exeter.....	100	349	300	63	46	124	123	283	372	532	2	2	12	359	203
Etna.....	63	273	265	17	13	29	72	70	896	613	556	941	412	638	214	92
Garland.....	90	458	515	43	20	58	114	153	556	612	12	174	20	12	461	210
Hampden.....	450	1674	1258	173	85	249	424	398	2160	675	15	30	20	20	1456	514
Hermon.....	121	374	236	30	20	37	79	61	25	1452	64	118
Howland and.....
Maxfield.....	86	73	10	16	8	2	14	38	33	595	376	15	100	4	73	10	8
‡Jarvis Gore.....	50
§Kirkland.....	15	121	63	8	7	20	34	11	80	110	92	31
Levant.....	51	164	145	11	12	22	41	30	130	214	57
Newburg.....	92	529	20	543	33	25	68	137	120	20	1104	12	10	10	430	16	245
Newport.....	151	454	341	53	41	65	206	165	15	1510	10	15	10	204	241
Orrington.....	417	987	60	868	123	33	142	260	251	15	7178	20	20	10	15	829	41	285
Orono.....	90	254	91	25	12	62	99	91	220	477	30	45	90	178	36
Sunhaze.....	40	153	100	69	13	8	50	45	22	234	42	13	153	100	50
Stetson.....	22	184	154	12	10	22	59	43	230	108	48	184	124
No. 4, E. of Penob.	18	28	8	8	4	6	2	24	19	185	33	5	7	2	25	8	6
Totals.....	3582	10538	344	9476	1231	737	1931	3687	3382	12957	25591	1333	2719	631	1281	10061	316	4090

*Afterwards Glenburn. †Oats and barley included. ‡Afterwards Clifton. §Now Hudson. ||Now Milford.

The relative wealth of Penobscot county at different periods of its early history, averaged to each individual of its inhabitants, the average to each person in the State being taken at $100, is represented by Mr. Greenleaf (A Survey of the State of Maine, 1829,) as follows: 1790, 79; 1800, 65; 1810, 92; 1820, 93. The aggregate valuation of estates in the county the last-named year, as fixed by the Legislature, was $903,683,90. The valuation of the State was not quite $21,000,000. The account of tonnage of shipping and stock-in-trade, as returned the same year by the several towns, was as follow:

Towns.	Tons.	Stock-in-Trade.
Atkinson.....	$ 150
Bangor.....	560	23,350
Brewer.....	57	1,300
Dixmont.....	350
Dexter.....	400
Eddington.....	45	1,500
Foxcroft.....	500
Hampden.....	631	9,575
Levant.....	500
Newport.....	500
Orrington.....	338	380
Sebec.....	200
Sangerville.....	100
Sunhaze.....	1,000
Total.....	1,631	$40,005

There were also reported from the county this year $489 money in hand, $1,649 in bank stock, $1,185 bridge and turnpike stock, $3,384 money at interest, and 680 owners of plate. The estimated value of goods, wares, and merchandise exchanged—otherwise the stock annually employed in domestic trade—was $280,000. The estimated circulation of commercial capital, or the surplus of products and exchanges, was $388,360.

A notice of Penobscot county in Morse's American Universal Gazetteer for 1819 includes the following: "This county contains 10,250 square miles, as many as in the whole state of Vermont." It had 19 townships in 1816, the year it was erected.

THE SHIPPING INTEREST.

Almost from the beginning of white settlement on the Penobscot, the building and sailing of vessels has been a prominent industry. By the close of 1809 the Penobscot collection district, which included only the ports on the east side of the bay and river, had 6,624 tons of shipping in the foreign trade, and 8,840 tons employed in coasting—in all, 916 tons to every 1,00 of population. The shipping of the Penobscot District in 1814 was reported at 15,684 tons, against 16,294 in the Waldoborough District, to which Bangor and other ports on the west of the Penobscot belonged.

The next year the District of Penobscot had a registered tonnage of 7,175, enrolled 8,306, fishing vessels 1,226—total, 16,707.

In 1816 shipping to the amount of 1,710 tons was owned in Bangor alone.

In 1820 the Penobscot District had the largest ratio of coasting tonnage of any in the State, being 9.3 to every $1,000 of taxable property, and also the largest proportion of such tonnage to the absolute wealth of the people. Much merchandise was already directly imported, amounting to a value of 40 cents on every $1,000 of taxable property, or $2.31 on every $1,000 entire wealth.

In 1825 the Penobscot ports had a total of 20,194 tons of shipping afloat, at an average cost of $40 per ton, and a total value of $807,760. The tonnage doing business in the Penobscot ports, however, amounted to 30,182. The number of shops, stores, and warehouses employed in commerce in the county that year was 37, with an average valuation of $230, and a total of $8,510. The number of people engaged in commercial pursuits was 140, representing an average investment or business of $285 a person.

The latest report at hand of the shipping business on the river, now largely concentrated at Bangor, is that of the Harbor Master of that city, dated February 21, 1881. As exhibiting the varied character of the vessels entering and clearing here, as well as that of the foreign and domestic imports and exports, it is well worth extracting in almost its entirety:

I respectfully submit the following as my report for the year 1880:

The river was open to navigation, and the business of the port began on April 6th. The harbor remained open until November 26th, a period of 235 days. During this period, 2,068 vessels of all descriptions, (not including fishing and other craft under 25 tons), arrived, classified as follows:

Barks.....	6
Barkentines.....	7
Brigs.....	30
Three-masted schooners.....	109
Fore-and-aft schooners.....	1,655
Sloop and schooner yachts (1 steam yacht).....	7
Four-masted schooners (sch. Weybossett).....	3
Steamers (17 different steamers).....	250
2,068 vessels, with a tonnage of 393,795 tons.

DOMESTIC RECEIPTS.

Molasses, hhds.....	3,396
Salt, bush.....	4,160
Flour, bbls.....	12,165
Corn, bush.....	432,601
Pork, bbls.....	3,350
Coal, tons.....	26,044
Lime, bbls.....	15,000
Apples, bbls.....	1,626
Lumber, M.....	133
Oats, bush.....	15,000
Pig iron, tons.....	510
Codfish, cwt.....	6,018
Nails, kegs.....	2,315
Cement, bbls.....	2,500
Moulding sand, tons.....	655
Marble workers' sand, tons.....	100
Pottery clay, tons.....	150
Limerock, tons.....	1,200
Hides (dry), bales.....	250
Guano, tons.....	132

DOMESTIC EXPORTS.

Lumber, feet.....	123,450,537
Ice, tons.....	115,945
Iron, tons.....	2,315
Shooks, feet.....	145,000
Potatoes, bush.....	50,000
Hay, tons.....	3,000
Bricks, M.....	8,000,000
Slate, squares.....	20,000
Fish barrels.....	100,000
Staves, bundles.....	108,552
Lime, bbls.....	500
Drain tile, feet.....	12,000

FOREIGN IMPORTS.

Salt, bush.....	67,540
Plaster rock, tons.....	455
Spruce knees.....	1,165
Grindstones, tons.....	90

FOREIGN EXPORTS.

Shooks, feet.....	445,740
Lumber, feet.....	1,907,720

Potatoes, bush.....	500
Spars.....	266
Ice, tons.....	890
Bricks.....	621,000
Oars, feet.....	4,458
Lime, bbls.....	600

* Foreign vessels arrived, British, 8; Italian, 2; total, 10.

The year 1880 was one of the busiest ever experienced by the port of Bangor, and the prospect for the coming year is bright.

CHAS. V. LANSIL, Harbor Master.

Mr. E. F. Duren contributes the following historic note:—

The first steamboat on the Penobscot, the Maine, Captain Cram, arrived in Bangor May 23, 1824. The next day it made an excursion to Bucksport. It ran to Portland in the summer season. The Bangor, a larger boat, Captain George Barker, arrived in 1834, landing at the wharf at the foot of Exchange street. This steamer was on the route to Portland, and afterwards ran from the port of Constantinople, Turkey. There are now two steamers of the Sandford line, which ply between Bangor and the towns on the river to Boston, most of the year making three trips weekly. A steamer ran until 1880 to Portland, making three trips weekly and connecting with another steamer at the mouth of the river (Rockland) for Mt. Desert, and east as far as Eastport and Calais. Steamer run direct to Mt. Desert from Bangor, and smaller steamers are employed to tow vessels up and down the river, and accompany barges on pleasure excursions. In 1849, small and flat-bottomed steamers commenced running above Bangor, affording beautiful views of island, forest, and river scenery. They have not, however, been plying of late.

THE LUMBER INTEREST.

We have also the following from Mr. Duren:—

Lumbering, and the manufacture of lumber in various forms, large and small, have largely engaged the attention of the people of the county. Lumbermen, mill-men, river-drivers, log-drivers, and raftsmen form an active and important part of the population. Logging-camps are a unique and interesting feature of forest-life. The first Surveyor-general of timber was Thomas F. Hatch, appointed in 1832. From a report furnished by Colonel C. V. Crossman, who has held that office several years, it is stated that the amount of boards surveyed at Bangor in 1832 was 37,556,093 feet; in 1866 it was 237,147,606; in 1872, 246,453,649; in 1878, 122,500,000. From 1832 to 1843 it was 842,886,233; 1844-55, 2,135,716,416; 1856-67, 2,122,208,374; 1868-78, 1,953,736,540. Total for the 47 years, 7,054,547,563. Average, 150,069,756 feet.

The lumber exported coastwise in 1826 was as follows:

Boards, plank, and joists surveyed.....	23,473,180 feet,
“ shipped without survey.....	3,354,000 “
26,827,180 at $8.14— $218,471
4333 tons timber, average price $2.75 per ton.....	11,929
99,671 feet, ranging timber, “ 2.50 “.....	2,491
Shingles, clapboards, and laths.....	96,000
Oars, staves, heading, hoops, etc., etc.....	7,000
Total estimated value.....	$335,891

FORT POWNALL.

This work, or a similar one, on the Penobscot had been recommended by Governor Shirley in a message to the General Court of Massachusetts three years before, in order to assure the possession of the Eastern country to the English. Its absolute necessity to the safety of the English possessions in this quarter was represented by Governor Pownall to the same body early in 1759, and it was resolved that an expedition of four hundred men should be dispatched to build the fortification. The Governor himself accompanied it, and supervised the work. Mr. Williamson gives the following interesting account of the preliminaries and the consummation of the object of the expedition:

The enlistments for the "Penobscot Expedition" were completed without trouble or delay. The men being arranged into four companies, each of 100 men, were put under the command of a colonel; and the whole embarked at Boston on board the ship King George, the Massachusetts sloop, and a few transports; all touching at Falmouth, May 4th, as they proceeded to the place of destination. In ascending the Penobscot Bay, at this pleasant season of the year, the islands and shores exhibited a drapery of nature which could not fail to make a deep impression upon the beholder. Farther into land, the banks indented with coves, and the acclivities clothed with mast-pines, rock-maples, or balsam-firs, the thick forest had power to excite the admiration of no one more than the Governor himself. It was to him a reflection fraught with deep regret, that this fine country had been so long left to the savage hunter, the French renegades, and the wild beasts.

Having examined sundry places, and taken formal possession of the country, the Governor selected a crescent crowning elevation on the western side of the Potomac (in Prospect), 25 rods from the water's edge, and about a league below the foot of Orphan Island, as a site for the fortification. It was laid out square with the points of the compass, the east side facing the water; and at each corner were flankers. The dimensions of the fort were 360 feet, or 90 feet on each inner side of the breastwork, which was ten feet in height. This was circumvallated by a moat or ditch 15 feet in width at top, 5 at bottom, and 8 deep. Each exterior side of the ditch, or the glacis, was 240 feet. In the centre of the ditch were palisades quite around the fort, except at the portcullis, or entrance at the east side, where a drawbridge crossed the excavation or ditch. There was also a piquet in the ditch at the foot of the wall. The houses of the commander and others were situated between the fort and the river. Within the breastwork or walls, was a square block-house, 44 feet on a side, with flankers at each corner, of diamond form, 33 feet on a side. The whole was constructed of square timber dovetailed at the corners, and treenailed. The height of the block-house, in 2 stories, was about 22 feet; the roof was square or hipped, and had a sentry-box upon the top. There were several coborns on the roof; and three or four cannon were mounted in the area between the breastwork and walls of the block-house, which was 20 feet in width. The upper story juttied over the lower about 3 feet, the space being covered with loose plank, easily removable. The lower story was used as barracks, and in the upper one, where 10 or 12 small cannon were mounted, garrison exercise was performed in stormy weather. There were two chimneys, one in the northwest and the other in the southeast corner of the block-house.

As soon as the laborers had commenced work, the Governor, attended by General Samuel Waldo, with a guard of 136 men, ascended the river, near the head of the tidewaters, below the bend; and, May 23d, went ashore on the westerly side of the river. From this place he sent a message to the Tarratine tribe, giving them notice of the enterprise undertaken at Fort Point, and assuring them, if they should fall upon the English and kill any of them, the whole tribe should be hunted and driven from the country. "But," added he, "though we neither fear your resentment nor seek your favor, we pity your distresses; and if you will become the subjects of his Majesty and live near the fort, you shall have our protection, and enjoy your planting grounds, and your hunting berths, without molestation."

General Waldo took great interest in this expedition, expecting that the Muscongus (or Waldo) Patent extended to some place near the spot then visited by them; and that he and his co-proprietors would derive essential advantage from the projected fortification. Withdrawing a few paces, he looked round and exclaimed, "here is my bound," and instantly fell dead of an apoplexy. He was 63 years of age. To commemorate the spot, the Governor buried a leaden plate, bearing an inscription of the melancholy event. General Waldo was a gentleman of great enterprise and worth; and the conspicuous part he acted in the first capture of Louisbourg, will be long recollected with intermingled pleasure and praise. His sons, Samuel and Francis, and the husbands of his two daughters, Isaac Winslow and Thomas Pluker, were the testamentary executors of his large estate, much of which was in the last mentioned patent.

On the 28th of July the fortification, which cost about £5,000, was completed, and called Fort Pownall. It was afterwards garrisoned by 100 men, under the command of Brigadier-General Jedediah Preble. It was the most regular and defensible fort in the Province, and the expenses of building it were reimbursed by Parliament.

In a subsequent address to the General Court, the Governor stated that he had taken possession of a large and fine country belonging to the Province, within the dominions of the British crown—long a den for savages, and a lurking place for renegade Frenchmen; and had established that possession by the erection of a fort, which would command the river Penobscot and the outlet at Edgenaroggan Reach, the rendezvous of the Eastern Indians, in their excursions against our frontiers. He said the erection of it incurred a less charge to the Province, by £1,003, than if the same troops had joined the army. Highly gratified with the enterprise and its speedy accomplishment, the General Court voted him their thanks, and granted him £200, in addition to his usual salary of £1,300 lawful money.

Mr. Williamson mistakes in regard to the purport of the leaden plate buried "at ye Root of a Large White Birch Tree, three large Trunks springing from ye one Root"—the head of the first falls opposite Thompson's Point, Judge Godfrey thinks. The Governor's journal has since been published, and from it we extract the following:

At the Head of the Falls Buried a Leaden Plate with the following Inscription:

MAY 23, 1758. PROVINCE, MASS. BAY. DOMINIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN.—POSSESSION CONFIRMED BY T. POWNALL, GOV.

Erected a flag staff.—Hoisted The King's Colors and Saluted them.
24th. At High Water Returned. Got over the Ledge, and having a fair Wind and the Torrent of the Freshes in our favor, arrived at the Camp by two P. M.

Further extracts from this interesting document, with the notes of its editor, concerning this expedition and its labors, will be read with interest:

[May, 1759] 8th. Embarked in all 333 men. Left the Rest to come with Flags in the Sloops, who brought the materials. Proceeded for George's.

9th. At 3, A. M., arrived at the mouth of George's River [now in the town of St. George]. At 10, set out for the Fort [Fort Georges, situated in the present town of Thomaston, in front of the location now occupied by the mansion of the late General Knox. It was erected in 1719-20, by the proprietors of the Waldo Patent, and made a public garrison soon after. It resisted successfully repeated attacks from Indians and French. The last attack was made in 1758 by a body of 400.] in the Barge, Yawl, and six Whaleboats for the Fort St. George's. At 3, P. M., arrived, . . . Herrick's company came up in a large Sloop, and Left Capt. Cargill with 100 men on board the King George for further orders, intending he should land on the east side George's River at night, etc., . . .

Orders to Brigadier Preble to march to the mouth of Pausagasawackeag, a river that runs into Penobscot about thirty miles from George's. . . . Ordered Lt. Small, a good Surveyor, to chain the whole way, and keep a field book.

13th. . . . Sent off Lt. Saunders in the Sloop Massachusetts to Falmouth to convoy the Sloops with the Workmen and Materials—Taking out of him into the King George all the Intrenching Tools.

Sailed for Penobscot, took with me the two Brick Sloops, and Preble's Lighter, with 40 hogsheds of Lime, which I laded at George's. Came to anchor off the Green Islands in Penobscot Bay.

14th. As cold as ever I had felt it all Winter. Came to Sail, and arrived just before Sunsett off the north of Pausagasawackeag River.

15th. At 4, P. M. Preble arrived, made his Signal, which I answered, and he raised his fourth Smoak. Sent for him aboard. He reported to me by the Survey they had marched thirty miles and sixty-four Rod.

16th. Sail'd, and about half past four P. M., got within about two miles, or a League of Wasaumkeag Point in the present town of Prospect, at the mouth of Penobscot river. It is now known as Fort Point. The name Wasaumkeag occurs only in Gov. Pownall's journal, and tho' the Breeze strong enough to keep all the Sails, Topgallants and all sleeping, yet cou'd not stem the Torrent of the Tide, on the contrary the Ship under no command of the helm whirled about at random, so that Capt. Hallowell let go the keelger made several attempts, but cou'd not make it do to-night, so came to anchor.

The Sloop, Patterson, Master, with the Stores and Cannon, arrived in the River, but cou'd not get up to us. Sent two whaleboats, arm'd, to Guard her.

17th. A Fresh Breeze. Sent off two whaleboats with twenty men to Capt. Bean, with Orders to cross over to the Western Shore, and take Post on the Opposite Point [Sandy Point, north of Wasaumkeag Point]. After several Puzzles, got up into the Harbour within Wasaumkeag Point. We landed and Reconnoitred the whole, and took post at the Point and encamped the men.

Came again on board after Dinner sent Preble to see the Carrying Place. He reported to me that it was not above eighty rod across—Went again ashore. Ordered a Party to look out for water. Sent ashore all the axes for clearing. For having thoroughly Reconnoitred this Point, as I never yet saw so well suited a Site for a Fort, so I imagin'd I should not find one more proper throughout this River. However, made no Determination about fixing the Fort.

18th. Daylight, ashore, Clearing. Ordered them to set about Digging a well. Sent off Lt. Small to survey the whole Neck, Capt. Nichols, with the Pickets to Guard him. Order'd a Breast Work or Barricado to be made round the Camp.

Had a Return of Water, three springs Gave Orders for clearing them and fixing barrels to them.

P. M. Barricado almost finished. Orders to Brigadier Preble to send two Officers and 40 men early next morning, with 20 axes to clear the carrying place about a Rod wide from side to side. One Officer with 20 men to keep Guard the other, with 20 to work, Spell and Spell To compleat the Breast Work, and have a detachment of 150 choise men, officers included, ready to embark at a minute's warning in Whale boats with three Days' Provisions.

Finish the Hospital.

19th. Ashore at the Carrying Place. Found it clear'd so as to see from water to water. Order'd Capt. Bean to build a Logg Redoubt according to Form I gave him, with a Guard room in it for an Officer and 25 men, and when compleated to come off, leaving such Guard there. Sent ashore from the King George some Swivel Cohorns to fix on the Breast Work at the Camp. Went to the Camp. Found that the Wel Diggers had come to good Water.—Drank Punch made of it. Reconnoitred the Springs and the Point, looking a proper Seite for the Fort in case I determined to fix on this Point.

At night Lt. Small return'd from the Survey.

20th. Visited the Post at the Carrying place. Found Lt. Preble had finished the Redoubt and Guard house which Capt. Bean began.

Thence to Camp. Order'd the like avenue to be cut across the point where 'tis narrowest, not above 70 rods, to have the same kind of Redoubt and Guard house built there.

This executed in two hours' time. In the afternoon Order'd a road to be cut about two Rods wide in a Direct Line East and West to avenue on the narrow of the Point. This executed before night.

21th. Upon this Reconnoitring the River, and finding no place equal to this Point of Wassaumkeag either for Defence by its Seite, being nowhere commanding, and on the contrary having a very great command of the River and the Passes near it, Determined this to be the place for the Fort, erected the Flag Staff, and hoisted the King's Colours with all the Ceremonies usual on such Occasions, adding Divine Service to beg God's Blessing, for unless the Lord builds the House, the Laborer worketh but in vain.

25th. Ordered the Cellar and Foundation at the Fort to be compleated. [The location selected by Governor Pownall is twenty-five rods from the water's edge, and about the same distance from Fort Point Light house.] At evening buried Brigd. Waldo at the Point near the Flagg Staff, with the honours of War in our Power.

26th. Saw the First Floor and Pier of timber laid, the cellar being finished.

Set out the Lines for a Parapett, Ditch, and Glacis. Gave Mr. Burbeck, whom I had appointed Engineer and Overseer, particular directions in what manner to compleat the Works in each Part, as the Ground lay and showed him it on the spot.

About noon left Wasumkeag, and went in the sloop Massachusetts to Pentaget, with Capt. Cargill and 20 men.

27th. Next day to Cape Ann. Next day, about Sunset, 28th to Castle William.

The fort was completed July 6, 1759. The General Court, on the 10th of June, voted to call the fortification Fort Pownall, in honor of the Governor. A garrison was constantly maintained at this fort until the Revolutionary War. In 1775, Mowett, with a British man of war, dismantled the fort, by removing all the guns and ammunition, and in July of the same year, Colonel Cargill, of New Castle, burned the block-house and all the wooden works to the ground, fearing that they would be occupied by the enemy to the prejudice of the neighboring inhabitants. The ruins of Fort Pownall are now distinctly visible in front of the Fort Point Hotel, and the remains of the breastworks are quite prominent. All traces of the buildings, except one excavation and a few stones, have disappeared.

The importance of this work to the future of Maine can hardly be overestimated. Judge Godfrey says in his Address at the Bangor Centennial:

In consequence of this act of Governor Pownall, the territory between the Penobscot and the St. Croix rivers was embraced in the territory of the United States under the Treaty of Paris of 1783. Had it not been for this act of occupation, the country east of the Penobscot river would at this time have been, probably, a part of the Province of New Brunswick.

THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

was attended by few stirring incidents in the valley of the Penobscot, whither comparatively few settlers had yet ventured. No doubt some of the brave men of "Kenduskeag Plantation," of "New Worcester," and of Hamden smelt British gunpowder during the patriotic struggles; but we have not been able to obtain their roll of honor. It is known that a company of twenty white men and ten Indians—the latter from the Tarratines, whose services were offered to the Massachusetts Government by Orono and other chiefs—served and that Andrew Gilman was their lieutenant commanding, and Joseph Mansell orderly sergeant. This, says Judge Godfrey, "was the first military organization, and a rude fort, at the angle of the roads just above Mount Hope, was their headquarters. They acted as rangers until the British occupied Bagaduce or Castine, in 1779.

Nor was the right feeling altogether wanting in the valley of the Penobscot, although some of its people afterwards proved recreant to the Revolutionary cause. Mr. Elihu Hewes, writing from "Wheelerborough" (Hampden) to the lamented Dr. Warren, president of the Provincial Congress, June 9, 1775, stoutly said:

The people here, I am confident, will support it [the cause of the colonists] to the last moment of their lives, being willing in general to encounter any difficulty, [rather] than to yield to that Band of Tyranny whose plodding pates have long projected methods to enslave us.

At least two of the patriots in this quarter suffered sharply for his principles. Mr. Joseph Page, a native of Rhode Island, who lived during some part of the Revolution near Mount Hope, refused to take the oath of allegiance to the English crown, and was driven off, his house burnt, and his stock stolen by the red-coated minions of King George. James Nichols, at Eddington Bend, also had his house burned for the same reason. A few others took the oath, and found employment at small wages among the British at Castine, where some of the patriots were also compelled to labor.

RESIDENCE OF A. F. BRADBURY, DEXTER, MAINE.

The principal events affecting the Penobscot country occurred on the peninsula of Castine, whence the British dominated this entire region during the latter half of the war. Mr. Williamson thus narrates the major part of the story, in the second volume of his History, under date of the year 1779:

General McLane and about nine hundred men, embarking at Halifax, and attended by a fleet of seven or eight sail, proceeded to the peninsula of major biguyduce, called "Biguyduce Neck," (now Castine), and landed, June 12, without opposition. They immediately cleared away the trees and underwood, and began to make preparations for erecting a fortification upon the high ground in the central part of the peninsula. Its form was rectangular or square with a bastion at each angle; and its outlines were so drawn as to embrace an area large enough to admit of a block-house in the centre, constructed with apartments for the officers and barracks for the soldiery. It was intended to environ the embankment with a deep moat and secure it by pickets. Three sloops-of-war, under Captain H. Mowett, of detested memory, were assigned to this station; and the rest of the fleet in a few days left the harbor.

Partaking largely of the general alarm, Brigadier-General Cushing of Pownalborough, addressed a letter on the 24th to the General Court, then in session, advising an immediate expedition to dislodge the invaders, before they had time to entrench themselves. The important subject had already been considered by that body, and directions were forthwith given the Board of War to engage or employ such armed vessels, State or National, as could be procured and prepared to sail in six days; to charter, or, if necessary, to impress in the harbors of Boston, Salem, Beverly, and Newburyport, a number of private armed vessels, belonging to individuals, competent, when joined with the others, for the enterprise; to promise the owners a fair compensation for all losses and damages they might sustain; to allow seamen the pay and rations of those in the Continental service; and to procure the necessary outfits and provisions with all possible despatch. Also the Executive Council ordered Cushing and Thompson, brigadiers of the militia in Lincoln and Cumberland, to detach severally six hundred men, and form them into two regiments for a campaign of two months, subsequent to their arrival in the Penobscot, and to avoid, in any event, the failure of having a sufficient force, Brigadier-General Frost was directed to detail three hundred men from the York militia, for the purpose of a reinforcement.

The supplies and munitions of war provided were 9 tons of flour and bread, 10 of rice, and 10 of salt beef; 1,200 gallons of rum and molasses, in equal quantities; 500 stands of arms; 50,000 musket cartridges with balls, 2 18-pounders, with 200 rounds of cartridges; 3 9-pounders, with 300 rounds; 4 field-pieces; 6 barrels of gunpowder, and a sufficiency of axes, spades, tents, and camp utensils.

The fleet consisted of 19 armed vessels and 24 transports. If it were in grade comparatively a flotilla, one more beautiful had never floated in the Eastern waters. It carried in all 344 guns. At the head of the armament was the Warren, a fine new Continental frigate of 32 guns, 18 and 12-pounders. Of the others there were 9 ships, 6 brigs, and 3 sloops.

The command was entrusted to Richard Saltonstall, of New Haven, in Connecticut—a man of good capacity and of some naval experience, but of an obstinate disposition. His officers were chiefly commanders of privateers, severally bound on a cruise as soon as the expedition was at an end. There were, besides sailors, between three and four hundred marines and soldiers on board, when the fleet sailed from Massachusetts; and the transports were to take on board twelve hundred detailed militiamen and volunteers from Thompson's and Cushing's brigades. One hundred men had actually embarked at Boston, who belonged to Lieutenant-Colonel Revere's celebrated battalion of State troops, in that vicinity. The command of the land forces was given to Solomon Lovell, of Weymouth, at that time brigadier-general of the Suffolk militia. He was by profession an agriculturist, and in the militia an officer of high repute. He was a man of courage and proper spirit, a true old Roman character, that would never flinch from danger; but he had not been accustomed to the command of an expedition in actual service. The second in command was Peleg Wadsworth, at that time the adjutant-general of the Massachusetts militia. He had been in actual service, an aid-de-camp to Major-General Ward, and commandant of a militia regiment from Essex to Rhode Island, in the expedition under General Sullivan at the time of his action there with the enemy. The ordnance was entrusted to the superintendence of Lieutenant-Colonel Revere. The expedition was put in motion by Massachusetts, though with the knowledge of Congress; and hence a draft was made upon the State treasury for £50,000 to defray the expenses, exclusive of the provisions which the merchants in Newburyport and Salem supplied for six of the fleet two months.

With so much celerity had this expedition been prepared and put in motion that the whole force made its appearance July 25th, in Penobscot. But a distinguished officer has said that, though the Government had ordered out at least 12,000 of the militia, we had less than 1,000 men—about the number of the enemy. They were undisciplined troops, having been paraded together only once, and this was at Townshend, their place of rendezvous, while the vessels were detained in the harbor by a head-wind. They were, however, brave and spirited men, willing to encounter the enemy; and had circumstances justified an attack, they would without doubt have done their duty manfully.

General McLane, having heard of the American fleet four days before its arrival, used every exertion to render his fortification defensible. Yet he was ill-prepared to receive a visit from an enemy. Two of the intended bastions were not begun; the other two were in no place above five feet high; many parts of the ditch did not exceed three feet in depth; there was no platform laid nor artillery mounted; and therefore, when he had the news of a meditated attack, he employed his troops day and night upon the works. Still he was fully aware of his weak condition; consequently, as soon as our fleet made its appearance, he despatched a messenger with the intelligence to Halifax.

Nothing was attempted on the 2nd day after arrival, owing to the surf occasioned by a brisk wind from the South. But early in the morning of the 3d day, July 28th, it being calm and foggy, our vessels were drawn up in a line beyond the reach of musket-shot from the enemy; and 200 of the militia and 200 of the marines were ordered into the boats from the shipping, ready at the signal to push for the shore. Mowett had taken a judicious position, which enabled him to command the mouth of the harbor and prevent a landing on the southerly side of the peninsula. A trench had been transversely cut nearly across the isthmus at the northward, which severed the neck from the main and secured the passes in that quarter. No landing could be effected, except on the western side, which was a precipice 200 feet high, steep, and extremely difficult of access; also there was a line of the enemy posted upon the cliffs or heights, who opened a brisk fire upon us (as an American officers rates), just as our boats reached the shore. We stepped out, and they were immediately sent back. From the enemy's shipping there was now a stream of fire over our heads, and from the top of the cliffs a shower of musketry in our faces. We soon found the summit at this place inaccessible, and we divided into three parties; one deployed to the right and one to the left, in search of a practicable ascent, the centre keeping up an unceasing fire to distract the attention of the enemy. Both parties succeeded in gaining the heights; yet, closing upon the enemy in the rear rather too soon gave them a chance to escape, and they fled, leaving thirty killed, wounded, and taken. The conflict was short but sharp, for we lost one hundred out of four hundred men on the shore and bank, the marines suffering most as they forced their way up the precipice. The engagement lasted only twenty minutes, an would have been highly applauded, had success finally attended the expedition. There was not, in fact, a more brilliant exploit of itself than this, during the war. We next threw up some slight fortifications within seven hundred yards of the enemy's main works.

A council of war was called of the land and naval officers the same morning. The former were for summoning the garrison to surrender, offering them honorable terms; but the Commodore and most of his officers were opposed to the measure. It was next proposed to storm the fort; but as the marines had suffered so severely in effecting a landing, the Commodore refused to disembark any more of them, and even threatened to recall those on shore. Our force was thought insufficient to drive the enemy from the fort; and the assistance wanted was communicated to Government by special messengers, sent in whale-boats to Boston. On application to General Gates, then commanding at Providence, he detached Colonel Jackson's regiment of Continental troops as a re-enforcement, who were stopped at Fal-mouth.

In the meantime General Lovell reduced the enemy's outworks and batteries, took several field pieces, and by indefatigable labor every night upon zigzag intrenchments, approached within fair gunshot of the garrison; so that a man seldom in daylight showed his head above the enemy's works. It was afterwards fully ascertained that General McLane was prepared to capitulate, if a surrender had been demanded. But Saltonstall was self-willed and unreasonable. He and the General disagreeing as to the plan of operations, added one more to thousands of fatalities incident to dissension. Wadsworth was the best officer on the ground. He urged upon General Lovell the expediency of keeping open a good retreat, as one of the first maxims of war. For this purpose he chose a place on the west bank of the river, near the Narrows, below the head of Orphan Island, and recommended the establishment of some works there, whither "our men might retreat should there be necessity, or make a stand in case of pursuit." But Lovell opposed this, alleging that it would dishearten our troops, or rather evince to them "our own despair of success."

A fortnight's time gave the British every advantage. General McLane, by skilful industry and perseverance, filled the gorge of one bastion with logs, surrounded the other with fascines and earth ten feet thick, laid a platform and mounted several cannon, environed the fort with a kind of chevaux de frise, and enclosed the whole with an abatis. At intervals Commodore Saltonstall manœuvred to enter the harbor, and day by day renewed a cannonade from the shipping. On the land, too, there were frequent and fruitless skirmishes, occasioned principally by reason of Lovell's exertions to cut off all communication between McLane and Mowett. In the midst of their solicitude, a deserter informed McLane that his camp and Mowett's vessels were to be attacked the next day by the whole American force. Had the attempt been essayed two days earlier, it might have met with brilliant success. But the fortunate day had passed; and little else remained to the Americans than disaster.

A spy-vessel brought Lovell news, August 13th, that a British fleet of seven sail was in the outer waters of Penobscot Bay, standing in towards the peninsula. A retreat was immediately ordered by General Lovell, and conducted during the night by General Wadsworth with so much silence and skill that the whole of the American troops were embarked undiscovered. As the British squadron entered the harbor the next morning, it was found to consist of a large man-of-war, a frigate, two ships, two brigs, and a sloop, commanded by Sir George Collier, ten days from Sandy Hook, near Halifax, and carrying 200 guns and 1,500 men.

Saltonstall drew up his fleet in the form of a crescent, with the apparent design of maintaining his position; though, in fact, for the purpose of checking the enemy's advance till the land forces on board the transports could be conveyed to some places of safety or retreat up the river or upon the western shores. Confident of his entire superiority, Sir George advanced without delay and poured in upon his enemy a heavy broadside, which threw the American fleet into confusion and caused a disorderly flight. Most of the transports retreated up the river; several went ashore at the foot of the narrows, from which the men took some provisions; and after landing and setting the vessels on fire, four companies collected and were led off by General Wadsworth to Camden. Others, against a strong tide, were able to ascend the river.

A general chase and indiscriminate destruction ensued. The Hunter and Defiance, endeavoring to get by the head of Long Island [Islesborough] to sea, through the western passage, were intercepted, and the Hunter ran ashore with every sail standing; which, after a smart skirmish between her crew and Lieutenant Mackey with a party of fifty men from the Raisonable, fell into their hands. The Defiance hid herself in a small creek, where her crew, finding the Canilla was in search for her, blew her up about midnight. The Sky Rocket met the same fate from her crew, near Fort Point Ledge. The brig Active was burnt off Brigadier's Island. The residue of the fleet, by means of oars and studding sails all set, also the transports, made good their retreat into Marsh Bay, closely pursued by the British squadron. Here the Hampden, being overtaken, surrendered; and at the same time prizes were made of the Naney and the Rover. The frigate Warren was committed to the flames by her crew at Oak Cove, half a league above Frankfort village. The Gen. Putnam and the Vengeance, having ascended still higher, were burnt opposite Hampden. The others, being the Monmouth, Sally, Black Prince, Hazard, Diligence, Tyrannicide, Providence Sloop, Spring Bird, Hector, and several transports, ascended to places above and just below the mouth of the Kenduskeag, where they were all blown up or set on fire by their own crews, to prevent their falling into the possession of the enemy.

A prodigious wreck of property, a dire eclipse of reputation, and universal chagrin, were the fruits of this expedition, in the promotion of which there had been such an exalted display of public spirit, both by the Government and individuals. Our whole loss of men was probably not less than 150; that of the enemy 85. So great pecuniary damage at this critical period of the war, and of the State finances was a severe misfortune. In short, the whole connected was sufficiently felt; for it filled the country with grief as well as murmurs.

The officers and men, landing at different places on the western shores of the river, among inhabitants few, scattered, and indigent, immediately took up their march westward, through a wild and trackless country, thirty leagues or more, as they travelled it, to the first settlements upon the river Kennebec. Guided by Indians, they proceeded in detached parties, suffering every privation. For, not being aware of the journey and fatigue which they had to encounter, they had taken with them provisions altogether insufficient; and some who were infirm or feeble actually perished in the woods. A moose or other animal was occasionally killed, which, being roasted upon coals, was the most precious if not the only morsel many of them tasted during the latter half of their travels.

A Court of Inquiry into the conduct of this most unfortunate expedition was ordered by the Massachusetts Legislature, which found that "the principal reason of the failure was the want of proper spirit and energy on the part of the Commodore." Saltonstall was accordingly cashiered, and rendered ever after incompetent to hold a commission in the service of the State. The conduct of Generals Lovell and Wadsworth was approved and they were honorably acquitted. The cost of the expedition added very seriously to the burdens of the State.

Among the British officers at Castine during the affair was a young lieutenant who was afterwards the hero of Corunna, Sir John Moore, so celebrated in song and story.

Ten of the vessels, says Judge Godfrey, or about half the whole number that entered the river, reached the site of Bangor, and were blown up by their crews near the mouth of the Kenduskeag. An attempt was made about thirty years afterwards, by one Clifford, to secure property from the wrecks by means of a diving-bell. According to "Remarks relative to the Settlement of Bangor," made many years ago by Jacob McGaw, esq., he obtained "less than thirty of the cannon and a few tons of balls from the bed of the river. When first exposed to the air, the iron of the guns was so soft that it could be about as easily cut with a knife as a common lead pencil, and then it entirely resembled black lead in appearance. On each succeeding day it became so much harder as to be entirely impervious to the knife in four or five days of exposure."

A very neat manuscript copy, made in 1846 by Mr. George W. Snow, of a book published in London in 1781, and of which but one copy was known to be in existence, is in the library of the Mechanics' Association in Bangor. Its principal title is "The Siege of Penobscot by the Rebels," and its author was John Calef, esq., a volunteer in the British forces there engaged. A "postscript" gives a brief but interesting account of the Penobscot country, from which we make some extracts elsewhere. The same work has been published in Dr. Wheeler's History of Castine, as an appendix.

The remains of the British earthworks, upon the heights of the peninsula of Castine, back of the village, are still remarkably well preserved.

THE WAR OF 1812-15.

By this time the valley of the Penobscot was able to turn out from its numerous settlements a considerable contingent of brave soldiery, to do battle for the rising Republic. This war, largely upon and near the sea, the people of Maine, whose habitations were mostly by the seaboard, or within easy reach of it, shared fully in the hazards and dangers of the conflict. Their services were consequently volunteered in numbers to the Government, especially upon occasion of an inroad by the enemy. The affairs on the river in early September, 1814, drew out most of the militia, who participated in the war. The following rolls of participants from this region are preserved in the office of the Adjutant-General at Augusta:

BRIGADE AND STAFF OFFICERS IN SERVICE AT AND NEAR HAMPDEN, 1ST TO 4TH SEPTEMBER, 1814.

John Blake, brigadier-general, First Brigade, Brewer.
Charles Blake, quartermaster, Brewer.
Francis Carr, jr., aide-de-camp, Bangor.
Elijah P. Goodridge, aide-de-camp, Bangor.
Charles Ulmer, aide-de-camp, Hampden.
John Crosby, jr., quartermaster, Hampden.
(The last two were not called into actual service).

COLONEL GRANT'S REGIMENT.

Roll of the field and staff of Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's Regiment of Militia, being the Third regiment, First brigade, and Tenth division in service at and near Hampden, from 1st to 4th September, 1814.

Andrew Grant, lieutenant-colonel, Hampden.
Joshua Chamberlain, major, Brewer.
Rufus Gilmore, adjutant.
Enoch Mudge, chaplain, Orrington.
Edmund Abbott, surgeon's mate, Frankfort.
Cyrus Brewer, quartermaster, Orrington.
Andrew Tyler, jr., paymaster, Frankfort.

Roll of Captain Peter Newcomb's company of militia in Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, raised in Hampden, and in service there and vicinity from the 1st to the 3d of September, 1814:

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Peter Newcomb, Hampden.
Lieutenant Jonathan Knowles, Hampden.
Ensign Stephen Dabbor, Hampden.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Allen Rogers.
Sergeant Joshua Sparrow.
Sergeant Josiah Ware.
Sergeant Jonathan Kendall.
Musician Thomas Williams.

PRIVATES.

Ebenezer Atwood, Jeremiah Baker, Sanborn Blaisdell, Samuel H. Cobb, Dennis Doan, Amos Doan, Edward Doan, James Dunton, Robert Dunning, Benjamin Emerson, Jonas Emery, William Emery, Nathan Emerson, John Gould, Austin Harding, William Higgins, Benjamin Hopkins, James Hopkins, Josiah Hopkins, Misha Higgins, Abiather Knowles, Bryant Linning, John March, Joseph Mayo, James Mayo, jr., Joseph Myrick, Nathaniel Mayo, jr., Simeon Mayo, Thomas Mayo, Israel Mayo, jr., Reuben Myrick, David Piper, Benjamin Porter, Asa Porter, Samuel Palton, John Perkins, Francis Rider, Richard Stubbs, Eben Stubbs, Edward Stubbs, Henry Smith, Freeman Snow, William Snow, Barker Turner, Andrew Tarr, Samuel Webber, Aaron Wiley, jr., John Ward, Bartlett West.

Roll of Captain Warren Ware's company of militia in Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, raised in Orrington and in service at Hampden and vicinity from the 2d to the 4th of September, 1814:

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Warren Ware, Orrington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Simon Fowler.
Sergeant Theophilus Nickerson.
Sergeant John Brook.
Sergeant Warren Nickerson.

PRIVATES.

Jesse Atwood, jr., Benjamin Atwood, Nathaniel Baker, Richard Baker, David Baker, Doan Boddershall, Frederick Boddershall, Amasa Bartlett, Joseph Doane, Nathaniel Dyer, Ephraim Doane, William Doane, Phinchas Downs, Elihu Dole, Seth Eldridge, Hezekiah Eldridge, jr., Thomas Freeman, James Freeman, jr., Nathaniel Gould, jr. Ephraim Hopkins, Jesse Harden, Stillman Kent, William Kent, Richard Kent, William Marston, John Nickerson, Eliphalet Nickerson, Paul Nye, David Pierce, Nathaniel Pierce, Cyrus Rice, Stephen Rider, Joseph Rooks, Samuel Rider, jr., Atkins Rider, Henry Rogers, Smith Rogers, Richard Rider, Ephraim Snow, Joseph Snow, Daniel Snow, Harvey C. Snow, Samuel Severance, Reuben Severance, John Severance, Zenas Smith, William M. Vorrill, Edward Weeks, Ebenezer Wheddon, John Willard, John Wintwooth, Thomas Wiswell.

Roll of Captain Samuel Butman's company of militia in Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, raised in Dixmont and in service at and near Hampden, 31st August to 3d September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Samuel Butman, Dixmont.
Lieutenant Richard P. Clarkson, Dixmont.
Ensign Frederick A. Butnam, Dixmont.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Edmund Wingate.
Sergeant John Chadbourn.
Sergeant Lemuel Drake.
Sergeant Jonathan Ferguson.
Sergeant Benjamin Porter.
Corporal William Ferguson.
Corporal Nathaniel Hanscomb.
Corporal John Odell.
Corporal Simeon Obron.

PRIVATES.

Joseph Basford, Henry Baker, Jonathan Basford, John Barker, Stephen Barker, John Buckman, jr., Moses Chick, George Cook, George Craig, James Cook, Eliphalet Chase, Stephen Carl, Samuel Dodge, Joseph Emery, Timothy Freeman, Edmund Ferrel, Ira Goodhue, John Garland, Reuben Goospeed, Benjamin Godfrey, Samuel Higgins, David Johnson, David Johnson 2d, Jeremiah McKansick, John Mitchell, Charles Mitchell, Milby Mitchell, Christopher Mitchell, George Morse, Nathaniel Mudgett, Edmund Mudgett, Abraham Mudgett, Barnet Morse, James W. Merrill, David Porter, Tyler Porter, David Pierce, Samuel Pierce, Richard Staples, John Smith, Elijah Smith, Rowland Taylor, Ebenezer Fasker, John Thurston, Cornelius Williams, Joseph York, Stephen York.

Roll of Captain James Patton's company of militia in Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, raised in Hampden and in service there and vicinity, from 1st to 3d September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain James Patton, Hampden.
Lieutenant Abel Ruggat, Hampden.
Ensign John Miller, Hampden.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Robert Miller, jr.
Sergeant William Potter, jr.
Sergeant Nathaniel Gelvin.
Sergeant Richard Gelvin.

PRIVATES.

John Blagdon, Samuel Benson, Seth Cole, George Cowin, Jonathan Cowan, Jacob Cowan, John Dunham, George Dunham, Jesse Dunham, Stephen Emerson, Wilder Johnson, Daniel Emerson, Samuel Farnum, Peter Goolin, Asa Hunt, Elisha Hewes, David Hewes, Ebenezer C. Hinkley, Francis Jennis, Timothy Miller, Benjamin Miller, Henry Miller, James Miller, Andrews Pomeroy, John Palton, 2d, William Pomeroy, Daniel Pickard, William V. Reed, John Robinson, Isaac Robinson, Jeremiah Swan, James Taylor, Joseph Pomeroy, jr.

Roll of Captain John Emery's company of militia in Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, raised in Hampden, service there 1st to 3d September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John Emery, jr., Hampden.
Lieutenant William H. Reed, Hampden.
Ensign Daniel Emery.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Samuel Libby.
Sergeant Jacob Jones.
Sergeant Daniel Grant.
Sergeant Bangs Young.
Musician Simeon Stone.
Musician Zenas Dexter.
Musician Benjamin Higgins.

PRIVATES.

Solomon Covell, William Cobb, William Cornish, Jesse S. Dean, James Dudley, Freeman Dean, Isaiah Dean, Amos Dow, William Flagg, Allen Hopkins, Seth Higgins, Reed Harding, Benjamin Hardy, Cyrus Higgins, Lemuel Hamilton, Samuel F. Jones, Hawes Mayo, jr., Walter Murch, Solomon Myrick, Arad H. Pomeroy, John Perkins, John Rodgers, Daniel Smith, John Smith, Micajah Snow, Reuben Young, Zebulon Young, jr.

MAJOR GEORGE'S BATTALION.

Field and staff roll of Major Thomas George's battalion of militia taken from Lieutenant-Colonel John Whiting's regiment, being the Fourth regiment, First brigade, Tenth division, and in service at and near Hampden, 2d to 4th September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Major Thomas George, Brewer.
Adjutant Thomas Carr, jr., Bangor.

Roll of Captain Solomon Blake's company of militia in Major Thomas George's battalion, raised in Brewer and in service at and near Hampden 2d to 4th September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Solomon Blake, Brewer.
Lieutenant Emmons Kingsbury, Brewer.
Ensign Charles Levins, Brewer.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant William Copeland.
Sergeant Joseph Copeland.
Musician Davis Silby.
Musician Benjamin Farrington.
Musician Ezekiel Mero.

PRIVATES.

Billings Blake, Charles Blake, Alanson Burr, Sanborn Blasdell, Abijah Campbell, Benjamin Coombs, Rossel Fish, Elias Field, Alexander A. Fisher, Daniel Farrington, Silas Farrington, Peter Field, Jacob Hart, jr., Russell Hart, Calvin Hollbrook, Elijah Jones, Nathan Kingsbury, Jacob Marr, Loring Pond, Jeremiah Truworthy, Levi Forrener, Augustine White, Benjamin Winchester, Charles Winchester.

Roll of Captain Lot Rider's company of militia in Major Thomas George's battalion, raised in Eddington, and in service at and near Hampden 2d to 4th September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Lot Rider, Eddington.
Lieutenant John Holyoke, Eddington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant William Rider.
Sergeant Joseph Severance.
Musician Asa Howard.

PRIVATES.

Hollis Bond, William Brown, Lemuel Cobb, Ephraim Johnson, Daniel Johnson, David Lovell, Benjamin Snow, Daniel Stearns, Benjamin Severance, Benjamin Tainter, Israel Snow, John Tibbets, Benjamin Weed, Jonathan Wood.

Roll of Captain Daniel Webster's company of militia in Major Thomas George's battalion, raised in Orono, and in service at and near Hampden 2d to 4th September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Daniel Webster, Orono.
Lieutenant Robert McPhibe, Orono.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Lynde Valentine.
Sergeant Robert Boyd.
Sergeant Mark M. Burns.
Sergeant Elijah Webster.
Musician John Hock.
Musician Sasson Weston.

PRIVATES.

Samuel G. Adams, Joseph W. Boynton, Nathaniel Boynton, Robert Boynton, John Clark, Daniel Dresser, Gideon Dutton, Samuel Freeman, Allen Freeman, Henry George, Silas Hartshorn, 2d, Joseph Hartshorn, Richard McGrath, David Hartshorn, 2d, Josiah Hartshorn, David Hartshorn, Ashbel Hartshorn, John Howard, John Harn, Edward S. Jarvis, John Kenney, Daniel Lambert, Joseph Lambert, John Lancaster, Levi Lancaster, Thomas D. Liscom, Stephen Perkins, William Randall, Isaac Spencer, Warren Thompson, John Webster, Andrew Cross.

Roll of Captain Timothy Sibley's company of militia in Major Thomas George's battalion, raised in Eddington and in service at and near Hampden 2d to 4th September, 1814.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Timothy Sibley, Eddington.
Lieutenant Samuel Call, Eddington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Billings Clap.
Sergeant Eleazer Eddy.
Sergeant Jesse Cousins.

PRIVATES.

James Anderson, Joel Burton, Joshua Butler, Benjamin Barnes, David Burton, Bradley Blackman, Abraham Chick, jr., Allen Crane, Moses Collins, Daniel Collins, Charles Comins, Joseph Davis, Randal Douglass, Stephen Grant, jr., Judin Grant, Lemuel Gulliver, Thomas Gulliver, Nehemiah Goodwin, Cyrus Jones, Moses Knapp, Joseph Little, William Lancaster, James Nichols, Ephraim Oliver, Elijah Orcutt, John Orcutt, Benjamin Penney, Elisha Rowe, Ebenezer Raviel, Benjamin Spencer, Moses Spencer, Isaac Spencer, Andrews Spencer, Caleb Stockwell, Benjamin F. Sibley.

Roll of a detached company of militia of Capt. Joshua Chamberlain, taken from the Third regiment, First brigade, Tenth division, stationed at Eastport, 11th to 31st of August, 1812, under command of Lt. Col. Oliver Shead.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Joshua Chamberlain, Brewer.
Lieutenant Peter Newcomb, Brewer.
Ensign Samuel Freeman, Brewer.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Robert Thompson.
Sergeant Daniel Nickerson.
Sergeant Joshua Sparrow.
Sergeant Samuel Hamilton.

Corporal Emery Bradbury.
 Corporal John Rooks.
 Corporal William Kendall.
 Corporal John Sabourns.
 Musician Zeros Dexter.
 Musician Jeremiah Baker.

PRIVATES.

William Bowden, William Bolard, Solomon Bolton, Daniel Buzzel, Abner Chase, David Colson, Daniel G. Chadborn, George Cragie, John Chadborn, James Clark, James Curtis, John Corillord, Richard Cave, Seth Cole, William Cobb, David Dyer, Isaac Dunbar, Jacob Dearborn, Obed Dean, Robert Dean, William Dean, Gordon Fisher, Samuel Frost, Thomas Freeman, Richard Garland, Elihu Hewes, Josiah Higgins, John Harris, Nathaniel Henderson, David Jackson, William Jackson, Abitha Knowles, David Kenneston, Levi Kenney, Edward Kenney, Benjamin Lowell, Ephraim Lowde, Davis Merrill, Benjamin Melvin, Elisha Furbush, George Mansa, Joseph Mayo, Levi Mudget, Matthew McDonald, Nathaniel Mudget, Thomas Milliken, Isaac Milliken, Walter Murch, William Michaels, Benjamin Murry, James Nutter, John Odell, William Pumroy, Seth Pratt, Silas Putnam, David Rice, Samuel Rhines, Benjamin Spooner, David Smith, Eldad Stubbs, Joseph Smith, Lemuel Smith, Henry C. Snow, Ebenezer Stubbs, John B. Turner, William West.

The following new names appear upon the roll of this company for service at Eastport, Sept. 1 to Dec. 31, 1812, "in Maj. Jacob Ulmer's Battalion":

Musician Mark Fernald.
 William Jepson.

Roll of a detached company of militia, of Capt. Thos. H. George, taken from the Fourth regiment, First brigade, Tenth division, stationed at Eastport from 10th to 31st August, 1812, under command Lt. Col. Oliver Shead.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Thomas George, Brewer.
 Lieutenant Lot Rider, Brewer.
 Ensign Joseph Bridgerborn.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant James Webster.
 Sergeant James Jackman.
 Sergeant Daniel Kimball.
 Sergeant Daniel Burt.
 Corporal James Dunning.
 Corporal James Anderson.
 Corporal Abraham Chick.
 Corporal Levi Torrence.
 Musician John Allen.
 Musician Clark Pease.

PRIVATES.

William Butler, Edward Black, Moses Bridges, Josiah Clark, Bickmore Chamberlain, David R. Carter, Samuel Coggins, Isaac Carter, Benjamin Clay, George Clay, Randal Douglass, John Davis, Joseph Dunham, Hezekiah Dodge, William Dodge, William Eddy, Stephen Ellis, James Couliard, James Freethy, Elijah Grant, James Gross, Albert W. Godfrey, John Gray, Aaron Gray, John Gage, Thomas Gillpatrick, Jonathan Hutchins, Amos Herrick, John G. Heath, Jonathan Heath, William Holt, Ebenezer Johnson, John Jackman, Thomas Low, Reuben McCaslin, Adam Coffin, William McPhetors, Eli Oakes, Joseph Page, Joel Preston, Isaac Pishon, James Phillips, Allen Quinon, Isaac Smith, Joseph Severance, John Tibbets, William Tozer, Morey Tumon, Ichabod Tibbetts, John Wilson, William White.

The following new names appear upon the roll of this company for service at Eastport and vicinity Sept. 1 to Dec. 31, 1812, in "Maj. Jacob Ulmer's Battalion":

Privates William Ames, Buckman Chandler, Thomas More, Adam McCaslin, Seth Thompson, William McPherson, 2d.

These two companies of militia, under command of Maj. Philip Ulmer, were detached from the brigade of General Blake, upon the Penobscot, and were relieved by regular troops after a few months' service. July 11, 1814, the fort and garrison at Eastport were surrendered to a superior force of British, which appeared with a fleet from Halifax. A few weeks later, further hostile movements along the coast awakening alarm, Col. Foote, of Camden, ordered into the field the greater part of his regiment of militia, and a detachment was drawn from the militia of Bangor and vicinity, to strengthen the garrison of regular troops at Castine. The British descent upon the Penobscot came all too soon. Mr. Williamson, near the close of his History of Maine, relates the stirring events of this period at length in the following terms:

To supply the troops at Halifax with provisions, for which they were suffering, Captain Barrie, in the Dragon, of seventy-four guns, was dispatched to that station from the Chesapeake, with eight hundred barrels of flour and other articles, attended by their captured vessels, which had on board some freights. On his arrival there, an expedition was speedily planned against Penobscot and Machias. The fleet consisted of three 74's, the Dragon, Spenser, and Bulwark; two frigates, late from the Mediterranean, the Burhaute and Tenedos; two sloops-of-war, the Sylph and Peruvian; an armed schooner called the Pictu; a large tender and ten transports. The number of troops embarked was about three thousand. Lieutenant-General Sir John C. Sherbrooke had the paramount, and Major-General Gosselin the immediate command of the land forces, and Edward Griffith, esq., rear-admiral of the white, commanded the naval squadron.

The fleet left Halifax August 26th, and on Thursday, September 1st, rode in the Harbor of Castine, sounded, and came to anchor. So formidable was their appearance that the troops at the garrison and their commander, supposing all resistance would be worse than futile, did not so much as wait for a summons to surrender, but instantly discharged the cannon, blew up the fort, and fled for safety up the bay. In the course of the day a large body of troops was set on shore, possession was taken of the fortification; the court-house and other buildings were entered and occupied as barracks for the soldiers, and parts of the best dwelling-houses were taken for the accommodation of the officers. A flag was soon dispatched across the bay to Belfast with a message to the people that, if they made no resistance, they should not be injured. Still it was followed by General Gosselin with six hundred men in two armed vessels, who took possession of the town. To parties of the soldiery, longing for fresh provisions, and eager for the enjoyment of a rural range, permission was given to visit the neighboring plantations; and after reveling upon the rarities, the best and most palatable they could find, the whole party in a few days returned to Castine.

A part of the fleet, consisting of the Dragon, the Sylph, and Peruvian, the Harmony, a transport, and a prize-tender, all under Captain Barrie, carrying about five hundred infantry, riflemen or "sharpshooters," and a small train of light artillery, under Colonel Henry John and Major Riddle, proceeded without delay up the waters of the Penobscot, and came to anchor in Marsh Bay, where the shipping lay, about four or five leagues below Bangor Harbor, during the night.

A few weeks previously, the United States corvette Adams, a sloop-of-war, rated at 18 guns and mounting 24, had been with extreme difficulty taken up the river by her commander, Captain Charles Morris, and was then lying at the mouth of the Sowadabscook stream, in Hampden, for repairs. It seems she had met with the singular success of capturing, within the short space of three months, a ship, two brigs, and a schooner, and was afterwards, on the seventeenth of August, cast upon the shores of the Isle of Holt in stress of weather, and was hardly preserved from total wreck. Captain Morris was now engaged in refitting her for another cruise; and as soon as tidings by a herald from Castine were communicated to him and Brigadier-General Blake, of Brewer, and the news spread that the fleet was ascending the river, all had the best reason to suspect the object of the enemy was the destruction of the Adams and the capture of two valuable merchant-vessels, the Decatur and the Victory, at anchor off Hampden village. Morris, without loss of time, hoisted out the cannon upon Crosby's wharf, and formed two batteries, one of fourteen guns upon that place and the other of nine guns upon a commanding eminence, fifty rods below, and not far from the water, from which he was able to rake destructively any approaching ship. To the militia, who by the general's orders were coming in by companies during the day, mixed with volunteers, Morris offered a supply of muskets and ammunition, if they were destitute; and determining to make all possible resistance, he assigned to Lieutenant Wadsworth the command of the hill battery, and that on the wharf to Lieutenant Lewis.

In the afternoon he met General Blake, his officers, and some of the most influential citizens, in a council of war, where he was much chagrined to find indecision and disunion, which, with the discouraging remarks made, directly tended to raise doubts as to the expediency of resistance or our ability to repel the enemy. He and others assured their opposers that no one ought to repose confidence of safety in British magnanimity. "No," said he, "our arms must be our defence. Keep the enemy from outflanking me, and I will prevent his ascending the river by the battery. These are our respective duties, and we must discharge them." But the whole day was spent in query, without any specific, well-digested plan of operations, and without the energy indispensable to military control. No entrenchment, nor yet the slightest breastwork, was prepared; nay, if there were in all the deliberations any real result, it was that a line of battle be formed, resting the right wing on the meeting-house, and the left on the high ground towards the hill battery. By the adjutant's returns at night, the whole number in arms was about five hundred militiamen from the vicinity, principally belonging to Colonel Grant's regiment, a part of Captain Trufon's troop of horse, and Captain Hammond's company of artillery, with two brass 4-pounders. They had also taken from the Adams an 18-pound cannon, mounted, which was planted in the highway, near the meeting house and well manned.

The winds being light and adverse, the Dragon did not weigh anchor during the day; but the residue of the squadron, with great exertion, ascended a couple of leagues into Bald Hill Cove, and landed at sunset on the west bank, two miles below Morris' batteries, about five hundred light troops, including a small train of artillery. The militia continued under arms, and Morris' men stood by their guns all night, for it was reported by our videttes that the enemy was unquestionably preparing to move both by land and water as early as daylight, and before, if favored by the wind and weather. But the night was rainy and dark, and the morning foggy; so that the enemy did not appear upon the land in view of our lines till about eight of the clock. As he advanced with a quick step, our soldiery were commanded to reserve their fire till he was near, and then take aim. They discharged a few rounds, when it was perceived that the line was broken near the centre, and the men had begun to retreat without orders. The example was contagious; and all the exertions of the officers to rally them anew were without effect. Major Chamberlain, Captain Trafon, Adjutant Gilmore, and David J. Bent, a non-commissioned officer of the artillery, who had command of the great gun in the highway,—all discovered activity and valor. Bent was the last to leave the ground; and most of the officers and many of the soldiers were filled with pain and regret to witness a retreat in the midst of confusion, which could not be without dishonor.

The moment the armed vessels, which were preceded by barges full of soldiers, were discovered by Captain Morris, he opened a raking fire of grape and canister shot upon them from the battery, which he continued with spirit and effect, for about twenty or twenty-five minutes, when he perceived that the militia were retreating and the British would, if he remained there, soon outflank him in the position taken. He therefore spiked his guns, set fire to the Adams, and the store-house, and retreated with his brave companions to Bangor, and thence, through a back, woody road, to Kennebec.

Within one hour after the firing was begun, the vessels and the village of Hampden were in full possession of the enemy. Hence succeeded a scene of abuse, pillage, and destruction, which was a disgrace to the British name. Sixty or seventy of the principal inhabitants were seized and put under hatches, and at sunset were removed to the cabin of the Deeatur, where they were restrained during the night, without fresh air, fresh water, or any quiet sleep. Next day, it is true, all except ten or twelve of the principal men were admitted to their parole, while those still kept in custody were put on board a prison-ship, where they were detained till another day, before they were set at liberty. The people were treated with abusive language, their houses and stores were rifled, their cattle killed, some of their vessels were burnt, and a bond was exacted from the town in the penal sum of twelve thousand dollars, conditioned to deliver certain others at Castine in October. Suffice it to say that the losses and damages sustained by the people of Hampden, as subsequently ascertained, amounted to forty-four thousand dollars. In the midst of the rapine a committee waited on Captain Barrie, and told him they expected at his hand the common safeguard of humanity, if nothing more. He replied, "I have none for you. My business is to burn, sink, and destroy. Your town is taken by storm, and by the rules of war we ought to lay your village in ashes, and put its inhabitants to the sword. But I will spare your lives, though I mean to burn your houses." A messenger was then despatched to General Sherbrooke, at Castine, upon the subject, who returned an order not to burn without dire necessity.

The enemy's vessels proceeded without delay up the river, and at the same time about two-thirds of the troops took up their march by land towards Bangor. From this place flags of truce were sent by land and water to the advancing commanders; but the best terms which could be obtained, were "unconditional submission." When the Peruvian, Syph, Harmony, and transports entered the harbor, a few Congreve rockets were thrown from them over the village, two cheers were given, and all the shipping anchored at the mouth of the Kenduskeag. Barrie rode up on horseback, in company with Colonel John and Major Riddle, at the head of the detachment. Arriving about noon, he first demanded of the inhabitants provisions and barracks for troops, and threatened to give them leave to plunder the village, if there was not a compliance with his requirements instantly. The court-house, two school-houses, a dwelling-house, and one other building were opened to receive them; cattle and sheep were butchered, and several barrels of pork were turned out to them from the stores; all the bread in the bake-house was taken; the best of liquors and garden vegetables were furnished, and two of the better dwelling-houses were entered and occupied as the resort of the commissioned officers. Also the enemy took the town's stock of powder, the field-pieces which were at Hampden, a quantity of merchandise, previously seized by a custom-house officer for breach of the revenue laws; upwards of fifty dollars post-office money were exacted and taken, and also the military arms and other like articles owned by the inhabitants; also one hundred and ninety-one men were compelled to report themselves, by their own signatures, prisoners of war. They were then admitted to their parole, and the safety of their families promised them, upon a stipulation not to serve against His Britannic Majesty or his allies during the war, unless regularly exchanged.

No resistance had been made by the inhabitants of this town, except by those in the military companies at Hampden, and therefore it was expected that private rights and property would be respected. But owners were sadly disappointed, for, the soldiery and the marines coming ashore, entered ten or twelve stores on the southerly side of the Kenduskeag, and by Barrie's permission, plundered them of their contents. They also rifled such dwelling-houses as the inhabitants had deserted; books and valuable papers were pillaged from lawyers' offices and other places, and four vessels on the stocks in the village and its precincts were threatened with flames. At this menace there was great perturbation; as the flames of the vessels, enraged by a fresh breeze then blowing, would probably lay the whole village in ashes. To prevent the fatal catastrophe the selectmen of the town, by the advice of their neighbors, promised to give the enemy a bond, professing to bind the corporation in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars, to deliver the four vessels at Castine before the close of the ensuing October. When this bond was delivered the next morning, which was the Sabbath, Captain Barrie and Colonel John gave a written assurance that all private property, both in Bangor and Orono, including every unfinished vessel, should be preserved, such only as were in the river being excepted.

The troops were kept under arms through the night, and it was truly a faithful one to all the families who knew nothing of the arrangement. In the morning preparations were manifestly on foot to take away or destroy all the shipping in the harbor and to leave the place. The movement commenced soon after noon. There were in the harbor at this time seventeen vessels, also three more on the Brewer side of the river not launched. These and ten others were burnt, and the rest taken down the river. Several were partly loaded; some, being moved only a short distance, got ashore, and were seen in flames at twilight and the dusk of the evening.* The losses and damages sustained by the people of Bangor, and the owners of vessels there, were found on a subsequent investigation to exceed forty-five thousand dollars.

The enemy returned to Hampden in the afternoon, carrying with him, besides other booty, eighteen or twenty horses; and the land-forces encamped during the night on the acclivity toward the hill-battery. His stay in Bangor was about thirty hours. The next day, September 5th

* Mr. Williamson's foot-note: "Burnt, the brig Caravan, schooners, Nep-tune's Barge, Thinks-I-to-Myself, Eunice and Polly, the Gladiator, the three Brothers, the sloop Ranger; three unlaunched vessels in Brewer, and one in Bangor, notwithstanding the stipulation. There were also three others in the harbor that were destroyed. Names not recollected—fourteen in all. They carried away the Bangor packet; schooner Oliver Spear; the Hancock, which was retaken; the Lucy, which was lost; the Polly, which was ransomed, and the beautiful boat Cato, which could not be recovered—six.

Isaac Hodsdon

the Decatur and the Kutusoff, at Hampden, were burnt, and the soldiers and sailors committed upon the inhabitants various acts of wanton mischief, such as the destruction of household furniture, books and papers. They also broke off the pivots and breechings of the cannon on the hill, and threw those on the wharf into the river.

On Tuesday, the 6th, the enemy proceeded to Frankfort, where the vessels came to anchor and the commodore demanded of the inhabitants forty oxen, one hundred sheep, and an unknown number of geese. He also required them to surrender their arms and ammunition, a part of which only was delivered, and in general the sturdy republicans of this town were slow to obey any of his commands. Denouncing vengeance against them for their delays, he re-embarked the troops on the 7th, and returned to Castine.

So much public indignation and chagrin were occasioned by the feeble efforts which the militia at Hampden made to resist the enemy's progress, that the Government of the State instituted an examination into the conduct of General Blake by a military court of enquiry. But they acquitted him of censure and suspicion. Immediately the general put Colonel Grant and Major Chamberlain under arrest, who were subsequently tried by a court-martial at the same place; and the command of the former was suspended two years, but the latter was honorably discharged.

The court of enquiry before which General Blake appeared, was composed of Major-General Sewall, of Augusta, and Brigadier-General Irish, of Gorham, and Payson, of Wiscasset. It occupied the court-house at Bangor about a week. In the spring of 1816 the other court was held, sitting several days. It consisted of twelve members, presided over by Major-General Richardson, of New Yarmouth, with Mr. John Wilson, of Belfast, as judge-advocate. The militia were paid an aggregate of twelve hundred dollars for their brief term of service.

THE AROOSTOOK FLURRY.

This war, or rather "rumor of war," broke out in 1839, following a year or two of excited public agitation. Great Britain after the War of 1812, claimed the whole of the St. Johns River, about one-half of which had been occupied by Maine, and demanded all territory above the 46th degree of north latitude. The King of the Netherlands, to whom the dispute was referred, made a very singular and unjust decision, that the boundary should run midway between the lines claimed, respectively, by the United States and the British Government. His decision was not satisfactory to the people of Maine; the disputed tract was overrun by timber-thieves and other plunderers; and in 1838 there were signs of a serious outbreak. Governor Edward Kent of Bangor, then in the executive chair, took steps to strengthen the militia force, and General Wool was sent by the Federal Government to inspect the fortifications on the Maine rivers and coast. During the winter the Legislature met in secret session and authorized Sheriff Strickland, of Penobscot county, to call out two hundred volunteers, march to the northward, and drive off the trespassers. The first company raised, under the command of Captain Storer Rines, left Bangor February 5, 1839, and three days afterwards reached the scene of action in Township No. 10, now Masardis, in Aroostook county, and, after some show of resistance on the part of the lumbermen and squatters, their mission was accomplished. Mr. Abbott says, in his History of Maine:

Captain Rines advanced to the mouth of the Little Madawaska. Here he met with a reverse, was captured with a company of his men, and they were hurried off in a sleigh to Frederickton jail, in New Brunswick. The sheriff and his forces retreated. The trespassers, much elated, armed themselves, about three hundred in number, and bade defiance to the American authorities. The sheriff, learning of the capture, retired to Number Ten and fortified his party while he repaired as rapidly as possible to Augusta, to report the posture of affairs.

The Governor of New Brunswick called out one thousand of his militia; the Legislature of Maine appropriated eight hundred thousand dollars for the protection of its territory, and a draft of 10,343 men from the State forces, most of whom, within a week, were on the disputed ground or marching thither. Congress took action, authorizing the President to support the claims of Maine with fifty thousand troops and the expenditure of ten millions of dollars; General Scott, commander of the army, with his staff, came to Augusta, to maintain "the peace and safety of the entire Northern and Eastern frontiers." Things looked for a time very much like war; but, through the efforts of General Scott, both sides withdrew their forces; prisoners taken by either party were released; the Aroostook region, previously in Penobscot and Washington counties, was erected into a separate county by the Maine Legislature; and matters remained comparatively quiet until 1842, when a convention, since famous as the "Ashburton Treaty," was concluded between Lord Ashburton, British Minister to the United States, and Daniel Webster, then Secretary of State, by which the State lost a portion of the tract in dispute, but of little value, for which it received one hundred and fifty thousand dollars from the General Government, besides two hundred thousand dollars for expenses incurred mainly in the flurry of 1839. By way of exchange for the lost territory, Great Britain ceded to the United States much more valuable tracts on the shores of Lakes Superior and Champlain — so that the victory rested decidedly, after all, with the American side. Mr. Abbott says in concluding his account of the transaction: "Impartial judgment must pronounce the conduct of Maine, in this whole affair, to have been patriotic and wise."

Penobscot county, from its situation with regard to the scene of possible war, had the greatest share in the active movements of the time. All the expeditions to the Aroostook country were fitted out at Bangor, and marched to the tented field therefrom. At one time a line of mounted videttes, furnishing ready communication when needed, stretched from Bangor all the way to Masardis. Governor Washburn, in his Orono Centennial address, has furnished the following amusing reminiscences, concerning the incidents of the war in that place.

Rumors of battles, the approach of Mohawk Indians, and the bloody Bluenoses were rife upon your streets, but yet were unable to stifle the sense of the ridiculous and quench the love of fun that ruled the hour, breaking out now in disrespectful remarks at the expense of the glorious company of videttes and martyrs; now in Otis Banks's offering a dollar for the head of Thomas Hill, a carpenter and Englishman, who was loyal to his native land; and again, in sending a crowd of anxious patriots and wonder-mongers from Whitney's bar-room to my office, to see General Wool, and where they were soberly introduced, by the graceless wag who had sold them, to Artegus Lyon, the colored man. But the war ended, and a brace of your own poetasters celebrated the scare and flight in which it begun, in a parody on Hohenlinden, which, as it may serve to renew the events and haps of that stirring (but somewhat ridiculous) time, I will venture to present to you:

THE SCARE OF THE RESTOOK!¹

On Restook, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay the untrodden snow,
Muffling the current in its flow,
O Restook, rolling rapidly.

But Restook saw another sight,
The Kakerebost on their flight,
And following fast, with main and might,
The Posse; frighten'd dreadfully.

Then Jameson§ to old Ashbell said,
"Come pile your carcass on my sled,
Far better so than be abed
With Cushman,* in sweet reverie."

Then shook the ice, so hard and even;
Then rushed the teams by number 'Leven';[†]
And ere the clock had pointed seven,
They left Masardis' speedily.

But faster yet that band shall fly
From Mohawk; furies drawing nigh,
Bluenose braves, with fire in the eye,
And Restook, rolling rapidly.

'Tis morn, but scarce a weary man
Will stop to drink from jug or can;
With tuckered legs and faces wan,
They push for the Cumberlasi.‡

Now, Posse, all your blankets wave;
You rush'd from glory and the grave;
Your heels did well your bacon save,
Your flint-locks and your toggery!

Few, few shall meet where many part!
Of all that force no trembling heart
Felt British shot or savage dart,
Or found a soldier's sepulchre.

It may naturally be supposed that a large share of the Maine militia who actually saw service in the Aroostook difficulty were from the Penobscot Valley. The residences of many of the officers who served are given with their names; so that part of them can be readily identified as from this county. In the case of enlisted men no such guide is furnished; and it is not probable that a full roster of the Penobscot contingent in this war can now be made. The best that was practicable has been done, however; and by the courteous and intelligent aid of the Adjutant-General's office, at Augusta, it is believed that a tolerably complete roll is herewith presented:

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Major-General Isaac Hodsdon, Bangor.
John L. Hodsdon, Aid to Major-General, Exeter.
Oliver Frost, Aid to Major-General, Bangor.
William H. McCrillis, Aid to Major-General, Bangor.
Division Inspector Joseph C. Stevens, Bangor.
Division Quartermaster Joseph Gilman, Dixmont.
Assistant Division Quartermaster Henry Warren, Bangor.
Assistant Division Quartermaster Ebenezer G. Rawson, Bangor.
Assistant Division Quartermaster Paul Varney, Bangor.
Assistant Division Quartermaster Daniel Wood, Bangor.
Captain Henry E. Prentiss, Bangor.
Superintendent of Videttes Elijah L. Hamlin, Bangor.
Assistant Superintendent of Videttes Samuel Smith, Bangor.

¹ The Aroostook river is usually called "Restook" by the Provincials.

† A company of Oldtown lumbermen, commanded by Captain Stover Kines.

‡ Posse comitatus, from Penobscot county.

§ John G. Jameson, of Oldtown.

¶ Ashbel Hathorn, of Bangor.

* Judge G. G. Cushman, legal adviser, who, while asleep with Thomas Bartlett, at Fitzherbert's, near the New Brunswick line, was taken prisoner by the Bluenoses and sent to Fredericton.

† This is now the town of Dalton.

‡ The present town of Masardis' eleven miles from Dalton.

§ The report was that the fugitives were pursued by five hundred Mohawk Indians and New Brunswickers.

¶ A small river at Lincoln Centre.

Forage Master John Sargent, Bangor.
Joshua Carpenter, Aid to Brigade-Major, Lincoln or Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel George W. Cummings, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Moses H. Young, Bangor.
Quartermaster Daniel T. Jewett, Bangor.
Chaplain Joseph C. Lovejoy, Orono.
Surgeon Paul Ruggles, Carrmel.
Surgeon's Mate Lewis Watson, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major Charles Barnard.
Sergeant-Major George Noyes.
Principal Musician Lemuel Ellis.
Drum-Major John M. Shaw.
Major of Artillery James Smith.
Lieutenant and Adjutant of Artillery Amos Packard, Hampden.
Quartermaster of Artillery Samuel P. Leighton, Bangor.
Captain Eliphalet Miller.
Captain David Dow.
Captain Truxton Dougherty.
Lieutenant Jabez Bradbury.
Lieutenant James B. Cleaveland.
Ensign Jacob Saunders.
Ensign Jeremiah Lord.
Ensign Haskell W. Johnson.
Ensign Jeremiah Burnham, Orono.
Ensign James Dunning, Bangor.
Captain James Clark, Hermon.
Lieutenant William E. Atwood, Levant.
Ensign Nathaniel D. Eaton, Hermon.
Lieutenant Amasa K. Walker, Hampden.
Captain Stephen Leighton, jr., Dexter.
Lieutenant Isaiah Beals, Dexter.
Ensign Alvin B. Clark, Corinth.
Captain William H. Mills, Bangor.
Ensign Henry L. Stewart, Bangor.
Captain Eliphalet I. Maxfield, Argyle.
Lieutenant Horatio Burnett, Springfield.
Ensign Goodridge Cummings, Passadumkeag.
Ensign Simon P. Atkins, Bangor.

Roll of Captain Nathaniel Sawyer's company of riflemen in the detachment of drafted militia of Maine, called into actual service by the State, for the protection of its northeastern frontier, the 20th day of February, 1839.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Nathaniel Sawyer.
Lieutenant Andrew D. Bean.
Ensign Charles Jones.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant John A. York.
Sergeant Hiram York.
Sergeant Joseph York.
Sergeant Sewall Chase.
Corporal Lewis Goodwin.
Corporal Daniel Pattee.
Corporal John Goodwin.
Corporal Simon E. Ricker.
Musician James Gilman.
Musician Wesley Grindle.
Musician George Damon.

PRIVATEs.

Jeremiah Avery, Charles Bickford, Thomas W. Bartlett, Josiah Brown, Richard H. Bedee, Obadiah Banks, Moses Copp, William Clark, William Corthell, Henry Craig, Alvin H. Carley, Salmon P. Drake, John Emery, Jacob W. Eastman, Ivory Frost, Joshua B. Floyd, Jeremiah Flagg, Carrell Garland, Stephen Grant, jr., Isaac Harden, Luther Hawse, William S. Hogan, Jeremiah Higgins, William Jameson, George Hilley, Lewis Kimball, Royal Lancaster, Newell Longfellow, Broadstreet Mason, jr., True Merrill, J. A. C. Mason, David Porter, jr., Alfred Packard, George Richardson, Samuel Picker, Augustus W. Smith, Alexander Smith, Gustavus W. Smith, Nathan Stevens, Norres M. Staples, Samuel Sidlinger, Otis Smith, William Shirley, Asa C. Twitchell, Rufus York, Joseph D. Young, Oliver Luce, Josh D. Hemenway, John Bryant, William Meader, Joseph A. Mitchell, Joseph Bartlett, Daniel G. Sawyer, John Staples (servant to Captain), Ambrose Fogg (servant to Lieutenant), Samuel Stevenson (servant to Ensign).

CAPTAIN MAXFIELD'S (BANGOR) COMPANY.

(Pay began February 20th or March 11, 1839, and ended, in most cases, April 22 and 26, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Eliphalet I. Maxfield.
Lieutenant Horatio Barrett.
Ensign Goodridge Cummings.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Horace Banks.
Sergeant Carlisle Dennis.
Sergeant Joseph Nelson.
Sergeant John Abbott.
Corporal Alvin Merryfield.
Corporal Thomas J. Fowle.
Corporal Charles Davis.
Corporal Walker Darling.
Musician Nathaniel Fellows.

PRIVATES.

Bradley B. Ayers, John W. Buck, Philip Bailey, Enoch W. Bickford, Daniel Bailey, William Brown, James Cooper, Sherburn W. Clark, Solomon Comstock, Albert Coombs, Joel F. Dam, Leader N. Dam, Asahel Davis, David B. Davis, Nahalie Doe, James Dealing, William Devo, John Elkins, jr., John B. Emery, Charles Emerson, Joseph Emerson, William Emerson, Benjamin Eastman, Daniel W. Ederly, Wilmoth Haywood, Stephen R. Haynes, Moses Hodgdon, Moses Ingalls, jr., Joseph Jordan, Benjamin Judkins, William Johnson, David Kneeland, Alfred L. Lovett, Solomon P. Lankester, Horace Lord, William H. McIntosh, Carleton P. Moody, John Morgan, James G. McIntosh, Samuel McPheters, Calvino S. Noyes, Samuel Norton, jr., Storer Perkins, Charles L. Smart, Thomas Smith, John Scott, James Sanborn, William A. Tosh, Israel Tracy, Joshua Watton, Mark G. Weymouth, David Young, Chandler Dammon, Josiah Miles, John Pratt, John Lawton, William F. Buzzell, George W. Merrill, Mathias Lane, Joseph Hodgdon, Josiah Richards, John W. Lane, William G. Rogers, Rufus Moody, Frederic Morrill, John Ayer (servant), Algeron L. Barrett (servant), Lewis Bunker (servant), Eliphalet Leavitt.

CAPTAIN MAXIM'S (BANGOR) COMPANY.

(Rendezvoused February 20, 1839; discharged April 24, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George W. Maxim.
Lieutenant Jonathan Louder.
Ensign William H. Gibbs.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Orderly Sergeant William Averille.
Sergeant David Getchell.
Sergeant Daniel Moulton.
Sergeant Joel Vickery.
Corporal Dudley D. Bean.
Corporal Jeremy Baker.
Corporal Jacob Holbrook.
Corporal William W. Smith.
Corporal Greenlief M. Fogg.
Corporal James G. Patterson.
Corporal George S. Herrick.
Corporal Francis C. Keisor.

PRIVATES.

John Ames, Levi Bagley, Charles Buffum, Enoch M. Blunt, Rufus G. Curtis, Seth F. Cook, John Cowan, jr., Charles E. Chaplin, Reuben Cookson, Asa Davis, 2d, Joseph B. Damon, Benjamin Dillingham, Joseph Francis, John M. Fogg, Thomas Gould, Thomas Gullifer, Ephraim Glidden, Sumner Hamilton, Bradford Higgins, Samuel Houston, Manasseh S. Hovey, Manoah Hurd, James S. Homans, William P. Hatch, David G. Ireland, Thomas Jenkins, Ephraim Johnson, Robert Littlefield, Moses Major, Ephraim B. W. Condray, Isaiah McKinney, Shuter Nickerson, jr., Simeon Orff, James O. Rooke, John Parsons, Benjamin Pratt, George Pratt, Samuel Patterson, Norman Page, Enoch Peasley, Allen Rines, William H. Ramsdell, Jesse Russ, Wilmot Riggs, Christopher Smith, Asa L. Stiles, William Sherburn, jr., Asa Sawyer, David Shorey, Abram Libbey, Levi S. Torrance, Samuel S. Torrance, Daniel Willey, John Weymouth, Stephen White, Shuber N. Williams, John Witham, Francis Young, James B. Cleveand.

CAPTAIN MILLS'S (BANGOR) COMPANY.

(Pay began February 20th, and at various times in March, 1839; discharged, in part, April 11th.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William H. Mills.
Lieutenant James Henry Carleton.
Ensign Henry L. Stewart.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Elijah Low.
Sergeant George A. Longfellow.
Sergeant Jesse Snow.
Sergeant Hiram Fogg.
Corporal Jason L. Bourne.
Corporal Abraham Colomy.
Corporal Amos S. Myrick.
Corporal Isaac Lunt.
Musician Arthur Heald.
Musician Dennis J. Bither.

PRIVATES.

William Adams, Samuel Barrows, Erastus B. Byram, Nehemiah Bartlett, William Cousins, Sandford Comery, Noah Clough, Lorraine I. Drew, Jason Dunton, Benjamin Emerson, Ebenezer Farrington, Lewis R. French, Asa Fowles, James Gorton, John Gorton, Benjamin Guptail, Joseph Gordon, Thomas Hodgkins, Stephen S. Hewes, David B. House, Isaac Hills, 2d, Jason Hills, James A. Lombard, Hiram Le-broke, David Miller, James Miller, jr., Sewall Miller, John Moore, Thomas McCausland, Levi B. Patten, John Paine, James Rogers, Joseph T. Sylvester, Sumner Smith, George A. Stevens, Francis J. Sturdevant, Jeremiah Thompson, Eli Towae, Samuel F. Walker, Charles Wiley, Asa Woodman, James Young, Watson R. Goss, James P. Davis, James M. Davis, Elisha Davis, Samuel W. Costelon, Peter B. Newcomb, John King, David Shepley, Daniel Batcheder, Hiram Stevens, Stephen C. Springer, James Adams, Joseph Grindle, Clark Perry, John A. Plummer, Joseph K. Cross, Almon Richards, Stephen B. Pattee, John W. Babcock, Ziba Burrill, Simeon B. Grindle, Robert H. Weymouth, Samuel Abbott, Daniel C. Shepley.

CAPTAIN FISH'S (VEAZIE) COMPANY.

(Pay began February 20 and March 11, 1839; generally ended April 1 and 24, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Samuel L. Fish.
Lieutenant Francis J. Cummings.
Ensign Gilbert Emerson.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant David C. Jellison.
Sergeant John P. Davis.
Sergeant Moses S. Page.
Sergeant Joseph Budson.
Sergeant James S. Eldrige.
Sergeant Jesse Hutchings.
Corporal Josiah McPheters.
Corporal Charles H. Forbes.
Corporal Joseph Bray.
Corporal George Lincoln.
Corporal John B. Bond.
Corporal Kenney Snow.
Musician Robert P. Chase.
Musician Solomon P. Rowe.

PRIVATES.

Thomas Abbott, Almarin Ames, John Boyd, Timothy Burton, William Batchelder, Isaac Russell, William Ballard, jr., George Burns, David L. Billings, Justus L. Carr, Thomas Cunningham, William J. Chapman, Garey Chapman, Ephraim Dorr, William Dwelley, jr., Samuel Deering, James Dickinson, John Dunham, jr., Joseph Duran, Elisha M. Eveleth, Amasan S. Emerton, Chester Ferrin, Daniel Fowler, James H. Gilmore, William P. Guppy, Shadrach Gray, John Grindel, Abial Harmon, Seth Holt, Abel S. Jordan, Joseph James, Levi K. Kilburn, Rowland Lawrence, William Lassell, David Lancaster, John N. Lawrence, Thomas Mann, Henry Montgomery, John E. Miller, Charles Newcomb, Alvah Osgood, Roderick R. Park, Charles Patten, Samuel Peirce, Joseph Priest, Thomas Raymond, Joseph C. Stinson, Jacob P. Sweat, William C. Snow, Samuel Spencer, Samuel Sheets, John Southard, jr., Horatio N. Stinson, James Stubbs, George Simpson, Samuel S. Trivitt, Timothy C. Tapley, Levi Tower, Benson D. Wood, William B. Moody, Gilbert Knownton, Albion M. Fish (servant), Joseph W. Curtis (servant), Ebin B. Weston (servant).

CAPTAIN LEIGHTON'S (DEXTER) COMPANY.

(Rendezvoused February 20 and March 11, 1839; discharged April 22, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Stephen Leighton, jr.
Lieutenant Isaiah Beals.
Ensign Alvin B. Clark.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Reuben Flanders.
Sergeant Hiram Safford.
Sergeant Asa Spooner.
Sergeant Seth Drew.
Corporal Stephen D. Jennings.
Corporal Charles Jumper.
Corporal Cyrus Jumper.
Corporal Calvin Safford.
Musician John M. Shaw.

PRIVATEs.

Lemuel Arnold, Willard Abbott, David Berry, Levi Bridge, jr., James P. Burleigh, William McE. Brown, David G. Brown, Isaac Bedee, Reuben Brown, William Bosworth, jr., Othniel Barden, Benjamin Brown, jr., James Crowell, Gardner Copeland, John Cole, Ellis, Cushman, Andrew N. Day, Thompson Dyer, David Densmore, Levi Emerson, Stephen Fish, Joseph Gould, David R. W. Grindell, Daniel H. Howard, Albert G. Hunt, Charles M. Hodsdon, Samuel Hillman, William Jumper, Benjamin Ireland, William L. Johnson, Robert John, son, John Kimball, Charles Jennings, James Lane, Sebah F. Leighton, Silas Leavitt, Edward P. Longley, John Leavitt, Charles R. Logan, George P. Logan, George Oakes, Horatio Pratt, Isaac W. Pickering, Daniel Palmer, Jonathan Pitcher, jr., John Ricker, Curtis Sturtevant, Darius Sumpson, John Safford, Henry A. Sprague, Luther H. Shaw, Simeon Safford, jr., Henry K. Sawyer, Henry Snow, Isaac Tucker, Milton Twitchell, Benjamin F. Tosier, John Fowle, Charles D. Trenorgy, Harrison G. O. Thomas, Andrew C. Winslow, Eli Winslow, Charles Wyman, Peleg Washburn, Burnham Wardwell, Ira Wardwell, William B. Walker, George Whittemore, Rufus Williard.

CAPTAIN CLARK'S (HARMON) COMPANY.

(Rendezvoused and pay began February 20, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain James Clark.
Lieutenant William E. Atwood.
Ensign Nathaniel D. Eaton.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joseph Leshe.
Sergeant Solomon York.
Sergeant John N. Emerson.
Sergeant Timothy M. Cook.
Corporal William M. Johnson.
Corporal Ezekiel C. Jackson.
Corporal Laomi S. Herrick.
Corporal Hazen Messenger.
Musician John Swan.
Musician Jacob Swan.
Musician Amnias Dodge.

PRIVATEs.

Samuel Allen, Aaron Barden, Samuel Blagdon, Samuel Baker, Ira Bither, Levi Blake, Edward D. Baker, Carlos Bean, John N. Budge, Silas Bunker, jr., William Corliss, William Cross, John O. Chadman, Joseph Cushman, Valentine Dunning, Benjamin Dyer, George W. Eddy, John E. Foss, David French, Abraham Grover, Arthur L. Grant, Francis Goodwin, Hiram Ghdden, Daniel Hewes, William Harris, Reuben Hale, Thomas C. Herrick, Charles A. Howard, Bowman Herrin, Lorenzo Hunkley, John Jenness, Freeman Luce, Charles Low, Nelson Mitchell, Enoch R. Mayo, William H. Mayo, Philip McIntire, Reuben Myrick, Jason Miller, Ira Mansel, Israel B. Norcross, Nathaniel Perkins, Benjamin Patterson, James Prescott, Joseph Rose, George B. Reed, Harvey Reed, Hiram Swan, Nathaniel Swan, Elijah Sylvester, Gorham Smith, John Shaw, Howard Stevens, Samuel V. Millet, Daniel Sargent, Dudley D. Spratt, Nathan S. Shaw, Daniel L. Stinchfield, Augustine Triggs, Azariah Wadleigh, William Willey, George B. Webber, Vincent Williard, Aaron H. Walker, Charles Whittier, Peter Wheelden.

CAPTAIN HAMBLET'S COMPANY.

(Pay commenced February 20, 1839; ended April 26, 1839.)

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Charles R. Hamblet.
Lieutenant Amasa K. Walker.
Ensign John Nelson.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Elbridge H. Bragdon.
Sergeant Benjamin M. Page.
Sergeant Atullius A. Ladd.
Sergeant Samuel F. Kells.
Sergeant Thomas Webb.
Corporal Elias Harriman.
Corporal Barzillau Huckins.
Corporal Benjamin C. Sanders.
Corporal William W. Burnham.
Corporal Sabin H. Kimball.

PRIVATEs.

Amariah W. Ames, Jotham S. Ames, William Appleton, Samuel Beal, Thomas A. Burgess, William Barney, Ira B. Buck, Thomas Bradley, Daniel Bean, Daniel Bailey, Freeman Crocker, Henry Crocker, Moses Crocker, James Carver, Jonathan Carter, Jonathan Chase, Joseph C. Chase, Thornton Card, Nathaniel Capers, Isaac Dexter, Stephen Dow, Nathaniel B. Fish, Levi O. Farnham, Ebenezer O. Gerry, John Gorden, Isaac Gould, Daniel Howard, Christopher Harvest, Ezra Holmes, Nathaniel Hanscomb, Daniel Brooks, John Knox, Hiram Larrabee, James Lee, Orman F. Lothrop, Walter D. Maddock, William McKenney, Lyman Miner, Isaac Rider, George W. Rogers, Silas Royal, Peter P. Rich, George R. Sampson, Henry Sibley, Seth Severance, Williams C. Stevens, W. Simpson, William Trask, Joseph Tilton, Alexander D. Walton, Levi M. Wilkins, Nelson Whittimore, Simon Whittimore, John Woodard, James West, Stullman Newcomb, Joseph Rose, Nathaniel E. Roberts, Ira Washburn, Albert R. Young, William Shepherd, Samuel Mitchell, Richardson B. Hamblet (servant), Lorenzo Knowles (servant), John B. Stevens (servant), Tuttle D. Leathers.

THE MEXICAN WAR.

It is unnecessary to embrace in this record even a cursory account of the origin, progress, and result of this episode of our National affairs, whose events so little affected the current of history in Eastern Maine, and drew so lightly upon its patriotic citizens for recruits to the army in the field. The following brief extract, from the report of the Adjutant-General of the State for 1847, sufficiently states the action taken by Maine, in answer to the requisitions of the Government, upon the outbreak of the war:—

It having been declared by the Congress of the United States, on the 13th of May, 1846, "that, by an act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war existed between that Government and the United States," the Governor of Maine, under authority from the Secretary of War, called upon the citizens of Maine for a volunteer corps of one regiment of infantry. Immediately after the publication of the proclamation and general order, efficient persons in different parts of the State were commissioned to raise companies of volunteers. In some sections it was found impossible to obtain volunteers, while in others full companies were raised with the greatest promptitude.

The following officers from Penobscot county were elected to the command of companies A and F:—

Company A. John H. Morrill, Bangor, captain; John H. Bryant, Bangor, first lieutenant; John B. Williams, Bangor, second lieutenant.

Company F.—George W. Cummings, Bangor, captain; James W. Thompson, Passadumkeag, first lieutenant; James H. Burgess, Oldtown, second lieutenant.

No further rolls of these companies have been furnished by the Adjutant-General's office — if, indeed, they exist there.

THE GREAT REBELLION.

At last the time came when the patriotism and the patience, the courage and constancy of the Penobscot valley, as of all other portions of the United North were to be fully tested by the war between the Nation and the rebellious States. The struggle is too recent and the literature of its history too copious and readily accessible, to make any summary of its beginnings and events here necessary. We have only to do with the brilliant record which Penobscot county made from the first to the last of the gigantic conflict. Happily, the materials for this have been provided, with extraordinary fullness of detail, and, no doubt, with all practicable accuracy, in the voluminous reports issued annually for some years by General John L. Hodsdon, now of Bangor, who was Adjutant-General of the State during the entire war-period, and who served with great efficiency and the most conscientious fidelity. He and the attaches of his office "buddled better than they knew" in the carefully labored preparation of these reports. We have found nothing else so valuable for the preparation of local military history during the rebellion, in the Adjutant-General's Reports of a number of the loyal States. Whatever of interest or permanent value occurs in the remainder of this chapter, is due solely to General Hodsdon's Reports. This work is indebted to them, not only for the rosters of Union soldiers and sailors, but for the several histories of the regiments and batteries, — which are given, in general, in the very words of the original text, — and, indeed, for all other matter, in almost every point and particular.

Besides General Hodsdon, who served the country so ably in the State Bureau of War, Penobscot county had many eminent names in the field. Major-General Joshua L. Chamberlain, afterwards Governor of the State, and now President of Bowdoin College, was a native and resident of Brewer. Brevet Major-General Cyrus Hamlin was from Bangor. Of Brigadiers the county furnished George F. Shepley and Charles D. Jameson* of Bangor, James H. Carleton of Orono, and Lysander Cutler of Dexter; of Brevet-Brigadiers, Henry M. Plaisted of Bangor, now Governor of Maine, Charles Hamlin and Charles D. Gilmore also of Bangor, Jonathan A. Hill of Stetson, and Llewellyn G. Egtes of Oldtown; of Colonels, Charles W. Roberts, Daniel Chappin,* Daniel White, and George Varney of Bangor, and Simon G. Jerrard of Levant; of Lieutenant-Colonels, Daniel F. Sargent of Bangor, and George Fuller of Corinth; and Majors Joel W. Cloudman of Stetson, Stephen D. Carpenter and William L. Pitcher of Bangor; with many others of similar or less rank, who also distinguished themselves in service. Charles A. Watcher, of Bangor, killed while commander of the United States war-steamer Gazelle, is another of the slain heroes. Among prominent regimental surgeons, several of them reaching the grade of Brigade-Surgeon, were Drs. Daniel McRuer, Eugene F. Sanger, Augustus C. Hamlin, and Samuel B. Morison, of Bangor; Alden P. Palmer, of Orono; and J. B. Wilson of Exeter. Dr. John Mason, of Bangor, also rendered great service in the army hospitals. Luther H. Pierce, of Bangor, became a Brigade Quartermaster. Among the Paymasters appointed on the General Staff of the army were the Hon. Jabez True of Bangor, and Jeremiah Fenno and Elias Merrill, of the same. General Charles Howard, a member of the staff of his brother, Major-General Oliver O. Howard, and now of Chicago, was a student in the Bangor Theological Seminary at the outset of the struggle. Many of these officers will receive due biographical notice in connection with the histories of their several towns.

Colonel Gideon Mayo, of Orono, was commandant of Camp John Pope, at Bangor, in 1862. Elijah Low, of the latter place, was Provost Marshal for the counties of Penobscot, Piscataquis, and Aroostook, during the drafts of 1863. Henry H. Worcester, of Bangor, was the Military Agent of the State at Washington City, and H. A. Holden, of the former city, was one of his assistants. Among the gentlemen appointed early in the war, under the system of allotment of soldiers' pay, as trustees to receive and disburse moneys upon the allotment rolls, were the Hon. Isaiah Stetson, Mayor of Bangor, and E. B. Pierce, Cashier of the Lumberman's Bank of Oldtown. Aaron A. Wing of Bangor, and J. S. Emery of Hampden, were afterwards Allotment Commissioners.

BANGOR IN THE WAR.

The importance of this city, as the chief place in the county, and its convenience of accessibility by rail and river, naturally made it a prominent point during the whole of the Rebellion. The arsenal located here became at once the centre of military operations, and proved extremely useful through all the bloody years. General Hodsdon says, in his Report for 1861:

The use and occupation of the State Arsenal and lot at Bangor, almost throughout the entire season, for rendezvousing and quartering the Second Regiment and numerous squads of recruits and detachments and companies of volunteers, from the northern and eastern portions of the State, for regiments organizing at Augusta and Portland, has obviated the necessity of hiring, at great expense, extensive buildings and grounds at Bangor for that purpose. Much of the ordnance, the gun-carriages, and other munitions of war, stored at the arsenal, have, from time to time, been removed and necessarily left unsheltered to afford lodgings for the troops. For this reason, and through the careless but natural intermeddling of the soldiers with the small arms and appendages deposited there, the State has experienced severe loss and damage to its property, aside from the injury to the arsenal buildings and grounds inseparable from the tumultuous character of the occupation.

Later in the war, a most beneficent institution, called the Soldiers's Rest Hospital was established by the patriotic citizens of Bangor. The Adjutant-General gives the following account of it:

Early in May, 1864, immediately after the battle of the Wilderness, so large a number of sick and disabled soldiers were returned to Bangor that the liberal citizens established a "Rest" for their accommodation, supporting it at first entirely by voluntary contributions. The institution was subsequently assumed by the State, and on the 7th of October, 1864, by the General Government. Dr. S. B. Morison, of Bangor, gratuitously devoted the largest portion of his time from April to October to the care of the sick and wounded within its walls. In October, however, he was appointed by the Medical Director of the Department of the East to take charge of Soldier's Rest Hospital, which continued in operation for one year. During this latter period, more than 3,000 soldiers were admitted, which should be added to the number of about 2,500 who were accommodated previous to the last change.

*Among the honored dead of the war.

The Second Regiment of the Maine Infantry and the First Regiment of Heavy Artillery were rendezvoused and organized here. In the late summer of 1862 the drafted troops for the nine months' service, under the President's call of August 4th, of that year, from the counties of Aroostook, Piscataquis, Penobscot, Hancock, Washington, and Waldo, and three towns in Knox county, were ordered to rendezvous at Camp John Pope, the first named in Bangor. Colonel Mayo, as already noted, was made commandant, with, a little later, Benjamin A. Foster designated as post-adjutant, and Llewellyn J. Morse as quartermaster. Drs. Mason and Weston, of Bangor, had charge of the Medical Department.

Valuable aid was rendered early in the war by the firm of Messrs. Hinckley & Egery, foundrymen, who remodeled and rifled at their establishment eighteen old-fashioned smooth-bore cannon, which made them greatly more efficient. Five of them were sent to Portland Harbor, two to Wiscasset, and two to Rockland, for coast defence.

Among other patriotic local industries, Messrs. Wheelwright, Clark & Co., in 1862, manufactured very rapidly, under the stress of the period, the clothing for eight of the nine months' regiments recruited that year.

In April, 1861, at once upon the call for men to go to the country's aid, $12,000 were subscribed in Bangor for the support of the families of volunteers. The city authorities, however, allowed only a part of this to be collected and disbursed, as the council presently assumed the expense of such patriotic benefactions. The ladies of the city began to organize for provision for the sick and wounded of the army as soon as their services were needed. Military drill, on the recommendation of the Mayor and by formal order of the city council, was introduced as an exercise in the Boys' High School; and one or more of the boys' select schools of the city also adopted it, while the citizens organized in voluntary companies for drill.

Space would fail to tell of all the good words and deeds of Bangor, as well as the rest of Penobscot county, during the terrible contest. One-fifth of the entire male population of the city, between the ages of eighteen and forty, entered the service of the country during the first year of the war. Nine hundred and fifty-eight volunteered in the year reported—1861-62. In the official year, 1864-65, when it had become so difficult to procure men for the service, 524 were enlisted at Bangor. In all, about 2,700 from this one city aided in the field or on the seas to save the Nation from destruction. The bounties for enlistments paid from the city treasury amounted to $21,300; by the citizens, $17,655.

Meanwhile the city was suffering severely in all its financial interests, except those relating to the supply and subsistence of troops. Its coastwise commerce fell off from 3,275 clearances in 1860 to 1,652 the year following, and did not recover until after the war. At least four vessels owned at Bangor were captured by the rebel privateers—the ship Golden Rocket, the brigs Elsinore and Wm. McGilvery, and the schooner Arcade.

Nevertheless the sentiment of the city was steadfastly true to the Union. The Peace Party commanded but 31 out of 1,992 votes at the election of September, 1861.

The names of officers and soldiers from Bangor will be found in the rolls printed on subsequent pages. Biographical notices of many of them will appear in connection with the History of Bangor. We desire to subjoin here, however, the list of its warrior dead, which was made up at the close of the war by the intelligent industry of some of the officers of the city, and is published in the city reports for 1865:

THE HONORED DEAD.

Robert L. Atkins, Co. E, Second Maine regiment. Killed at Hanover, C. H., May 27, 1862.

John Ayer, Captain Co. II, Sixteenth Maine regiment. Died in rebel hospital, Richmond, February 22, 1863.

Eben E. Andrews, Co. I, Fourteenth Maine regiment. Died at Augusta, Maine, April 2, 1865.

Amaziah Billings, Co. D, First regiment Maine heavy artillery. Died in Bangor, Maine, April 17, 1865.

William Bartlett, Co. D, First regiment Maine heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Philadelphia, July 6, 1864.

Charles E. Bicknell, on board United States steamer Cambridge, drowned December 15, 1862.

Scollay D. Baker, Captain Co. I, Ninth Maine regiment. Killed at Fort Gregg, Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, September 8, 1863.

George F. Browne, Lieutenant Co. II, Fourth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862.

Warren Boynton, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed in battle December 15, 1864.

Benjamin C. Benson, Co. G, Second Maine regiment. Drowned in the Potomac river, August 30, 1862.

George H. Benson, Ensign United States bark Horace Beals. Died at Pensacola Bay, October 9, 1863.

Isaac Berry, Co. F, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Harrison C. H., May 27, 1862.

John Billings, Co. F, Second Maine regiment. Died at Fortress Monroe, November 28, 1861.

Stephen D. Carpenter, Major Nineteenth regiment United States infantry. Shot at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, December 31, 1862.

Jeremiah Corcoran, Co. I, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861.

Rufus H. Cole, Nineteenth Massachusetts regiment. Died in hospital at Smoketown, Maryland, October 5, 1862.

Peter Camron, Co. I, Second Maine regiment. Died at Hall's Hill, January 28, 1862.

Edward R. Chamberlain, Co. A, Second Maine regiment. Died at Alexandria, Virginia, July 26, 1861.

William C. Chamberlain, Co. D, First regiment Maine heavy artillery. Died in Washington, D. C., July 12, 1864.

Hiram G. Claridge, Co. I, Twelfth Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, January 1, 1863.

Charles B. Cobb, Sergeant Co. F, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Killed near Petersburg, Virginia, June 17, 1864.

Charles H. Cleaves, Co. D, Fourteenth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fort Hudson, June 10, 1862.

Robert Carlisle, Sergeant Co. A, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Killed at Cold Harbor, Virginia, June 10, 1864.

Benjamin Chase, Corporal Co. A, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Augusta, Maine, July 22, 1864.

William A. Cates, Co. B, First Maine heavy artillery. Died in hospital at City Point, Virginia, June 19, 1864.

Daniel Chaplin, Colonel First Maine heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Philadelphia, August 20, 1864.

John F. Drew, Co. F, First regiment Maine heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Washington, District of Columbia, July 8, 1864.

Thomas Drummond, Lieutenant Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed near Petersburg, June, 1864.

Samuel W. Daggett, Captain Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at New York, July 1, 1864.

Adrian R. Drew, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in Washington, District of Columbia, July 28, 1864.

Henry O. Dunbar, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed in battle at Petersburg, Virginia, June 18, 1864.

Charles H. Daggett, Corporal Co. B, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in Campbell Hospital, Washington, D. C., June 30, 1864.

Willard G. Delano, Co. E, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed in battle June 18, 1864.

Lysander B. Dunbar, Co. B, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at City Point, Virginia.

William J. Deane, Sergeant Co. A, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861.

Charles V. Dudley, Co. E, Sixth Maine regiment. Killed at the second battle of Fredericksburg, May 2, 1863.

Ozra W. Davis, Co. A, Sixth Maine regiment. Killed at Rappahannock, Virginia, November 7, 1863.

John A. Dealing, Co. B, Second Maine regiment, killed at the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861.

Seth E. Drinkwater, Co. A, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Killed in the Wilderness, May 6, 1864.

Samuel M. Emerson, First Maine regiment, heavy artillery. Died at Fort Sumner, Maryland, September 25, 1863.

Solomon G. Emery, Co. A, Sixteenth Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Washington, District of Columbia, December 3, 1863.

Fred W. Flye, Co. I, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Philadelphia, April 13, 1865.

Luther C. Fairfield, Lieutenant Co. H, Seventh regiment Maine volunteers. Died in hospital at Portland, February, 1863.

John A. Farnham, Co. K, Eighth Maine regiment. Died at Beaufort, July 1, 1863.

Edward R. Flowers, Master's Mate, United States navy. Killed on board the United States gun-boat Matatanza, off Wilmington, North Carolina, October, 1862.

Albert W. Forbes, Co. I, Fourteenth Maine regiment. Died at Boston, Massachusetts, April 8, 1865.

Edward A. Goodale, Co. E, Sixth Maine regiment. Died in Bangor, July 13, 1863.

Walter S. Goodale, Lieutenant Co. H, Fourth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862.

Nathan D. Hanson, Co. F, First Maine regiment. Killed near Petersburg, June 18, 1864.

Edward W. Hanson, Co. B, Twenty-second Maine regiment. Died at Opelousas, Louisiana, May 10, 1863.

Nathan A. Hopkins, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed at Spottsylvania May 9, 1864.

William H. H. Hascy, Sergeant Co. E, Twentieth Maine regiment. Died in hospital at David's Island, New York, September 28, 1864.

Joseph E. Hatton, Co. F, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Washington, June 9, 1864.

William P. Holden, Sergeant Co. G, Second Maine regiment. Died at United States General Hospital, at Annapolis, Maryland, May 5, 1863.

John W. Hurd, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died at Fort Alexander, near Washington, District of Columbia, December 16, 1862.

Albert M. Jackson, Co. H, District of Columbia cavalry. Died at Salisbury, North Carolina, January, 1865.

Charles D. Jameson, Brigadier-General. Died at his residence, Upper Stillwater, from disease contracted in the service, November 6, 1862.

William Jordan, Second Maine regiment, and transferred to the Twentieth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Gettysburg, July 3, 1863.

Stephen H. Leighton, Co. H, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861.

Sewell B. Lombard, Co. D, Fourteenth Maine regiment. Killed at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, August 5, 1862.

Otis E. Lufkin, Co. A, First Maine cavalry. Killed in battle March 31, 1865.

John J. Marstan, Co. H, Sixteenth Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Richmond, Virginia, February 24, 1864.

Andrew McFadden, Co. I, Fourteenth Maine regiment. Died at Savannah, April 12, 1865.

Lewis L. Marsh, Co. G, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

George C. Martin, Co. H, Second Maine regiment. Died at Fortress Monroe June 10, 1862.

Gustavus Nason, Corporal Co. D, Thirtieth Maine regiment. Died in rebel prison at Tyler, Texas, July 30, 1864.

Edward F. Orff, Co. F, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861.

Bryden S. Osborn, Co. I, Twelfth Maine regiment. Died at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, February 23, 1863.

Frank Powers, First Maine regiment, heavy artillery. Died in hospital at David's Island, New York, August 8, 1864.

Charles Parkhurst, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Alexandria, Virginia, July 18, 1864.

William T. Pierce, Co. A, Thirty-first regiment Maine volunteers. Killed in the Wilderness fight, May 15, 1864.

George L. Palmer, engineer. Killed on board the United States monitor Patapsco, in Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, January 15, 1863.

Charles W. Pierce, Corporal Co. F, Seventh Maine regiment. Died in United States hospital, New York Harbor, November 9, 1862.

Isaiah B. Scribner, Co. B, Sixth Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Washington, D. C., January 21, 1864.

James Stone, Co. I, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Hanover C. H., May 27, 1865.

Frank W. Sabine, Captain Co. C, Eleventh Maine regiment. Died at Chesapeake hospital, Fortress Monroe, September 15, 1864.

John M. Sherwood, Lieutenant Co. E, Twentieth Maine regiment. Killed in the Wilderness May 8, 1864.

Alfred M. Sprague, Co. K, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died at Washington, D. C., January 28, 1864.

Charles W. Smith, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Fredericksburg, May 22, 1864.

Henry A. Smiley, Co. E, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died at Washington, D. C., May 25, 1864.

Amos N. Smiley, Co. C, Twenty-fourth Maine regiment. Died in Bangor, August 16, 1863.

Shepherd S. Thomas, Sergeant Co. I, Ninth Maine regiment. Killed near Petersburg, Virginia, July 4, 1864.

Charles A. Thatcher, in command United States steamer Gazelle, Killed by guerillas at Morganza, Louisiana, November 25, 1864.

William L. Pitcher, Major Fourth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862.

Henry A. Pollard, Co. G, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Hanover C. H., May 27, 1862.

James Quimby, Co. B, Fourth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862.

James L. Rowe, Sergeant Co. F, Second Maine regiment. Killed at Hanover C. H., May 27, 1862.

Frederic H. Rogers, Company K, Fourth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Gettysburg, July 2, 1863.

Amos H. Richardson, Co. B, Twenty-second Maine regiment. Died in Bangor, August 15, 1863.

James Robinson, Co. I, Second Maine regiment. Died in prison at Richmond.

Harvey H. Reed, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died at City Point hospital, Virginia, June 26, 1864.

Frank S. Robinson, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed near Petersburg, June, 1864.

Benjamin F. Scribner, Co. B, Twentieth Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Rappahannock Station, November 7, 1863.

Sumner Tibbetts, Corporal Company D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at David's Island, New York, July 30, 1864.

Samuel F. Thompson, Captain Co. D, Twelfth Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed in battle near Winchester, September 19, 1864.

George A. Tibbetts, Co. L, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died in hospital at Philadelphia, July 1, 1864.

Ransom Wharton, Second Maine regiment. Killed at second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

Henry O. Wilson, Co. B, Twenty-second Maine regiment. Killed at Port Hudson, June 11, 1863.

Oscar Woer, Second Maine regiment, and transferred to the Twentieth Maine regiment. Killed in the battle of Gettysburg, July 31, 1863.

Patrick Weich, Co. G, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the battle of Fredericksburg December, 13, 1862.

Asa Wilson, Co. F, Second Maine regiment. Killed at the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

Richard H. Webster, Co. I, Second Maine regiment. Died at Hull's Hill, January 19, 1862.

Daniel West, Co. K, Eleventh Maine regiment. Died at Yorktown, Virginia, June 5, 1862.

Albert M. Wheeler, Co. H, Seventh Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Newport News, Virginia, April 27, 1862.

Frederick E. Webster, Co. B, Twenty-second Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Baton Rouge, March 5, 1863.

Henry Warren, Captain Co. G, Seventh Maine regiment. Killed near Spottsylvania, May 18, 1864.

Charles H. Whittier, Co. A, Thirty-first Maine regiment. Died in hospital at Washington, July 11, 1864.

Reginald B. Wiggins, Captain Co. A, Second Maine regiment, transferred to Invalid Corps. Died in Washington, August 1, 1864.

Thomas D. Witherly, Sergeant Co. H, Sixteenth Maine regiment. Died in Bangor, March 26, 1865.

Franklin W. Whittier, Co. D, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed near Petersburg, June 18, 1864.

Daniel O. Pollard, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Died June, 1864.

John S. Libby, First Maine regiment heavy artillery. Killed June 1, 1864.

Patrick Carlton, died in Port Royal, July 9, 1862.

Herman K. Day, Second Maine regiment. Died in hospital, February 6, 1862.

Michael Mehan, died in Bangor, August, 1864.

So early as 1862, a large subscription was made, by the people of Bangor, to a fund for the building of a monument in honor of the deceased soldiers of the war. A sufficient sum was raised in due time, a Soldiers' Monument Association was organized, and on the 17th of June, 1864, the monument was dedicated in Mt. Hope Cemetery, with fitting ceremonies and addresses, in the presence of a large assembly. The Mayor of the city for the time being is President of the Association, by its constitution.

HOME GUARDS.

A considerable number of somewhat informal and not fully organized military companies were formed in the State during the first year of the war, and familiarly known as "Home Guards." The Penobscot valley had its full share of these; and musters of the companies in battalions or regiments, for drill or discipline, and for review by the superior officers of the State militia, were held during 1861 as follow: At South Newburg, August 29th; Monroe, September 25th; Hampden, October 9th; North Newburg, October 15th; and at Bangor the same fall. At the last-named, Colonel William H. Mills was in command; at North and South Newburg, and at Hampden, Colonel Amasa Walker commanded, and Mr. F. G. Flagg, of that place, served as Adjutant. Major James H. Butler, commanding the First Division of State militia, and staff, reviewed the Guards at Bangor and Hampden.

STATE GUARDS.

In 1863, March 25th, the Legislature passed an act for the formation of State Guards, with an organization similar to that of the older militia, in companies, regiments, brigades and divisions. Under this act David Bugbee, of Bangor, became Colonel of the First Regiment, in the First Division; Lebbens Oak, of Garland, Major; Frank H. Garnsey, Adjutant; Charles H. Dennett, Quartermaster; and Dr. Ralph K. Jones, Surgeon. Llewellyn J. Morse, of the same, Captain of Company A; Josiah S. Ricker, also of Bangor, Captain of Company B; John B. Maxfield, of Dexter, Captain of Company F; and George S. Clark, of Garland, Captain of Company H: all in Colonel Bugbee's regiment. Roby Ireland, of Bangor, was Second Lieutenant of Company A, which had ninety-two men, besides a full complement of sergeants and corporals: Theodore C. Johnson was First Lieutenant, and George W. Stevens, Second Lieutenant of Company B—ninety-three men; David H. Addison, of Dexter, Second Lieutenant of Company F—ninety-one men; Elisha Skinner, of Portland, First, and L. Oak, of the same, Second Lieutenant—seventy-six men. When the garrison at Fort McClary, protecting the navy-yard at Kittery, was ordered to the front in 1864, Company A was mustered into the United States service, and served at the fort from July 7th to September 8, 1864. Company B was afterwards ordered to the same point, and served similarly the United States from September 3d, to November 7, 1864. An interesting duty was performed by Company A the year before, which is thus noticed in the succeeding report of Adjutant-General Hodsdon:

Captain L. J. Morse, Company A, of Bangor, in the First Division, promptly obeyed an order of May 8th to attend upon the funeral ceremonies of the late lamented Major-General Hiram G. Berry, at Rockland on the 11th of that month. The full ranks and soldiery bearing of this splendid company, on that as well as other occasions, afforded an indication of the immense military power in this and other free States yet slumbering, which might be called into action should legislators ever awaken to a just realization of the necessity of coming to the aid of the Government with such a reasonable proportion of existing physical force, if under a proper militia organization, as may render it some substantial service in the present struggle for its re-establishment.

The following-named were the officers of the First Division of the State militia, at the close of 1863: James H. Butler, Major-General, Bangor; Charles E. Dole, Aide-de-Camp, Bangor; Joseph L. Smith, Aide-de-Camp, Oldtown; James Dunning, Division Inspector, Bangor; Thomas Hersey, Division Quartermaster, Bangor; Edmund W. Flagg, Division Advocate, Bangor. This is the same list as at the close of 1861, except for a change in the Judge Advocate. At that time Charles D. Jameson, of Orono, was Colonel of the First Regiment, First Division; Charles W. Rogers, of Bangor, Lieutenant Colonel; George Varney, Major; and Dr. A. C. Hamlin, Surgeon—although all these officers were then in the United States service. Marion B. Patton, of Brewer, was Major of the First Battery of Artillery, and Francis A. Conner, of Brewer, Adjutant of the First Division.

Company A, cavalry, of Bangor; Company A, artillery, of Brewer; Companies B and C, light infantry, of Bangor; Company D, light infantry, of Lagrange; Company A, riflemen, Veazie; and Company C, riflemen, of Patten, entered the Federal service the first year of the war.

THE FIRST RECRUITS.

Promptly upon the outbreak of the war, the Legislature was convened in extra session, and made provision for the raising of ten regiments, fully armed and equipped by the State, for two years' service. A bounty of two months' pay was given to each enlisted man who was a resident of the State. General orders were issued to the Major-Generals of the Maine militia, April 22, 1861, for the raising at once of the ten thousand volunteers, for "the active militia service of the State." The First and Second Maine regiments were thus enlisted; but the former, with the assent of the officers and men, was mustered into the United States service for three months, to fill the quota of Maine under the first call of the President, and the latter was subsequently mustered into the Federal army for the period of three years. Four other regiments were raised under the act of Legislature, but when the order of the War Department was received, requiring all enlistments to be for three years, the volunteers already in the State service were invited to sign a contract for an additional year, and those who declined were mustered out. The regiments were filled up promptly, and by the 17th of May it became evident that the patriotic response of the people would supply recruits much faster than the quartermaster and commissary departments of the State could provide for them. An order was therefore promulgated that day, directing that all companies in excess of those already designated and necessary for the six regiments in service should elect to be disbanded, or be placed on such a footing as to drill and pay as would measurably relieve them, and yet make their services available when desired. Under these orders eighteen companies were mustered and paid from the date of their several organizations to the day of payment. Among them were the commands of Captains Cass and Carlisle, at Bangor, Captain Crowell, at Winterport, Captain Sawyer, at Dixmont, Captain Roberts, at Dexter, and Captain Boynton, at Newport. One-third of the eighteen surplus companies, it seems, had been raised in the Penobscot Valley. All these decided to take leave of absence, without pay or rations, until again summoned into service. Twelve of the Captains, with most of their original companies, did afterwards enter the Federal service.

In the Report of the Adjutant-General of the State for 1862, honorable mention is made of a large number of cities and towns which had furnished their quotas, not only fully and promptly, but in such numbers as gave a surplus beyond their quotas. Among them were the following:

Penobscot county.—Bradley, Chester, Dixmont, Etna, Lagrange, Lincoln, Mattawamkeag, Oldtown, Orono, Springfield, and Winn.

From beginning to end of the war, most of the towns of Penobscot county were kept "out of the draft," though a great many substitutes were furnished, as will appear elsewhere in this chapter. In 1863, in Penobscot county, as in many other places in the State, a disloyal spirit of resistance to the draft became manifest, and preparations for war at home were made in some localities. Dexter, with some towns in other counties, was supplied by the State with light field guns, for the use of the State Guards in case of local rebellion, while careful preparation was made for possible trouble at Bangor. The Adjutant-General's Report the next year said: "At Bangor, His Honor, Mayor Dale, deemed it prudent to have such public property stored at the State Arsenal as might be made available to an enemy or a mob, removed to localities in the city more easily and securely guarded. Joseph N. Downe, Esq., an experienced artilleryist, (though not in commission,) was placed in charge of the city defences and the drilling of gunners." The temporary danger, however, we are pleased to record, was passed without bloodshed.

The following is the Adjutant-General's exhibit of enlistments and credits otherwise obtained in Penobscot county:

Towns.	No. furnished prior to call of Oct. 17, 1863, as shown per muster-in rolls.	Credits since and incl. Oct. call of '63, as shown per returns of prov. marshals.	Total number of credits.
Alton.....	36	38	74
Argyle.....	16	24	40
Pangor.....	1043	926	1969
Bradford.....	104	92	196
Bradley.....	72	62	134
Brewer.....	175	160	335
Burlington.....	36	30	66
Carmel.....	74	76	150
Catroll.....	23	26	49
Charleston.....	81	74	155
Chester.....	29	18	47
Clifton.....	18	18	36
Corinna.....	92	111	203
Corinth.....	115	105	220
Dexter.....	135	148	283
Dixmont.....	112	89	201
Eddington.....	57	51	108
Edinburg.....	4	2	6
Enfield.....	49	26	75
Etna.....	51	48	99
Exeter.....	117	107	224
Garland.....	95	93	188
Glenburn.....	46	54	100
Greenbush.....	42	45	87
Greenfield.....	26	26	52
Hampden.....	177	188	365
Hermon.....	97	78	175
Holden.....	47	47	94
Howland.....	12	11	23
Hudson.....	51	48	99
Kenduskeag.....	53	52	105
Lagrange.....	49	46	95
Lee.....	52	37	89
Levant.....	65	78	143
Lincoln.....	136	91	227
Lowell.....	43	27	70
Mattawamkeag.....	20	20	40
Maxfield.....	13	9	22
Milford.....	40	45	85
Mount Chase.....	4	11	15
Newburg.....	82	91	173
Newport.....	67	82	149
Oldtown.....	328	177	505
Orono.....	135	122	257
Orrington.....	133	109	242
Passadumkeag.....	26	19	45
Patten.....	75	36	111
Plymouth.....	69	69	138
Prentiss.....	15	23	38
Springfield.....	61	52	113
Stetson.....	64	61	125
Veazie.....	54	61	115
Winn.....	22	17	39
Drew plantation.....	2	2
Mattamiscontis plantation.....	5	3	8
Medway plantation.....	7	21	28
No. 1, No. of Milford.....	2	2
No. 3, R. 1.....	1	1
No. 3, R. 7.....	1	1	2
No. 4, R. 1.....	1	5	6
No. 5, R. 6, (Monterey).....	8	8
No. 9, R. 6, (Oxbow).....	1	3	4
Pattagumpus plantation.....	4	7	11
Webster plantation.....	2	3	5
Whitney Ridge plantation.....	1	2	3
Woodville plantation.....	11	7	18
Total of County.....	4981	4211	8892

The returns of enrolled militia for 1861, complete for Penobscot county, showed 9,124 men (only 818 less than Cumberland, and greater than any other county in the State).

It is thus seen how large a proportion—97.5 per cent.—of the militiamen of Penobscot enlisted in the service of their country.

THE ROSTER.

We now come to the immense roll of honor that records the magnificent contingent Penobscot county put in the field during the late war. Happily, the care of the company clerks and all others concerned with the preparation of the rolls and their publication, enables us to locate with reasonable certainty in his own town almost every man in the regimental or battery organizations. It is hoped that few blunders occur in this—either of omission or of misplacing a soldier. So far as was practicable we have followed the soldiers in their promotions, if any; but it is hardly probable that all have been observed. We repeat that most of the sketches of history are taken almost verbatim from Adjutant-General Hodsdon's reports:

FIRST REGIMENT INFANTRY

was organized April 28, 1861, and mustered into the United States service at Portland, May 3d, to serve three months. On the 1st day of June it left for Washington, where it encamped on Meridian Hill, and there remained in the performance of necessary guard duty at exposed points till August 1st, when it left for Portland, where it was mustered out of the United States service, August 5th, by Captain Thomas Hight, Second United States dragoons.

The only member of this regiment from the Penobscot valley seems to have been William H. Moore, of Corinna, Private of Co. K.

FIRST REGIMENT INFANTRY, VETERAN VOLUNTEERS.

This regiment, being a consolidation of the veterans and recruits of the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh regiments of infantry, was organized at Charlestown, Virginia, August 21, 1864, in accordance with orders from War Department, and was engaged at the battle of Charlestown during the first day of its organization. The regiment was also engaged at Winchester on September 19th, at Fisher's Hill on the 21st, and at Cedar Creek on October 19th, taking its part in all the marches of the Shenandoah Valley campaign, losing in the several engagements 1 officer, 11 enlisted men killed, 2 officers, 97 enlisted men wounded, and 15 missing. On the 12th of December the regiment arrived at City Point, Virginia, and remained in front of Petersburg doing camp and picket duty, besides being occasionally engaged in skirmishing, until the 25th of March, 1865, when it formed a part of the column of the Sixth Corps, in their successful assault of the enemy's lines near Fort Fisher. On the 2d of April it participated in the engagement at Hatcher's Run, and afterwards took a prominent part in the storming of the battery at Lee's headquarters; then skirmished across the Appomatox until nightfall. It also participated in the pursuit of Lee's retreating army, as also its surrender; and on the 26th of April it arrived at Danville, Virginia, where the regiment was stationed doing provost duty during the following month. Afterwards the regiment returned to Washington, participated in the grand review at that place on the 23d of May, when, on the 28th of June, they were mustered out of the United States service by Brevet-Major George H. Amidon, A. C. M., and immediately proceeded to Maine, and were paid and finally discharged on the 3d of July.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Adjutant William H. Coan, Eexter.
Quartermaster-Sergeant Moses Palmer, jr., Patten.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant George R. Cony, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant Walter B. Jenness, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Edward H. Feeney, Bangor.

PRIVATEES.

Peter Ativine, George W. Bonney, John Bradley, William H. Carver, George Casey, Frank P. Davis, Fabian Dube, Edward Fortier, William R. Grant, Nathaniel E. Johnson, John Loney, Joseph Vanna, Bangor; Robert Honell, George R. Cony, Joseph Francis, Oldtown; John Gerow, Veazie; Walter B. Jenness, Harmon.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Alvin A. Messer, Enfield.

PRIVATEES.

Thomas Malony, Bangor; George A. Cook, Charles L. Feltman, Isolah S. Pealsah, Oldtown; Moses Giles, Glenburn; Henry C. Hold, Eddington; Freeman Haur, Hudson; John Lishon, Thomas F. Crocker, Orono; Alvin A. Messer, Enfield.

COMPANY C.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Charles Lowell, Enfield.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Walter B. Jenness, Hermon.
Sergeant John J. Fogg, Orono.
Sergeant Isaac Pratt, Oldtown.
Corporal Joseph W. Estabrook, Bangor.
Corporal Benjamin F. Goodwin, Stetson.

PRIVATEES.

Alonzo Celley, Alvin B. Hudson, Frank B. Holden, Arthur Ingraham, John S. McClure, William J. White, Bangor; Phineas T. Bean, George H. Doherty, Folsom Dutton, Edward Felix, Parmenter Shepard, Jeremiah Hunscomb, George Kinsell, Octave Lizotte, Charles E. Miles, Joseph W. Riggs, Green C. Spencer, Charles E. Atwood, Kenduskeag; Allen W. Bailey, Milford; Samuel Emery, jr., Veazie; Charles W. Johnston, Stillwater; Mark C. Jenness, Hermon; Edwin Jordan, Bradley; Thomas S. Libby, Lincoln; Edward Reynolds, Winn; Stephen Sewall, Milford; Colby Smith, Bradley; Ira F. Stinchfield, David C. Whitney, Lincoln; Frank W. Titcomb, Garland; Ira B. Tibbetts, Carmel; Asa G. Wiggins, George W. Fogg, Stetson; Henry C. White, Lowell; Augustus Whitman, Orono.

COMPANY D.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant James W. Sutherland, Bangor.

PRIVATEES.

Alonzo Batchelder, Allen V. Greene, William A. Jellison, Henry G. Lane, Andrew Mann, Francis McCarty, John McGeary, Peter Newell, John M. Rice, Charles Roberts, Charles B. Vickery, William S. Carr, Bangor; Judson W. Currier, Garland; Charles Dyer, Oliver J. Fuller, George S. Gould, Jonas P. Lovejoy, Asa B. Lowell, William H. Quinby, John Roncon, Edward J. Startevant, Dexter; Martin V. Eldridge, Newbury; W. Frost, James C. Lander, Joseph Wormwood, Corinna; Lorenzo H. Roberts, Corinth; Benjamin F. Pratt, Oldtown.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William Crosby, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant George W. Fogg, Stetson.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Albert L. Jones, Holden.
Corporal Hosea Q. Morton, Etna.
Corporal Thomas W. Chick, Clifton.

PRIVATES.

Moses Babcock, Michael Gallagher, James H. McKeen, William Parker, Stephen Willetts, William Crosby, Anthony Perry, Bangor; Hannibal H. Coombs, John Glover, John S. Yates, Mattawamkeag; Harry F. Mills, Daniel E. Mills, Levant; William D. Mills, Corinth; Thomas L. Pillsbury, Garland; Joshua Witham, Dexter; Ephraim Perkins, Brewer.

COMPANY F.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain George H. Baker, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Wagoner Isaiah Allen, Lincoln.

PRIVATES.

Henry Cowan, Warren H. Farrer, DeWitt C. Morrill, Bangor; George L. Buswell, Dexter; George Cole, Oldtown; Alvah B. Doble, Etna; David S. Richardson, Greenbush; Stephen A. Goodwin, Lincoln.

COMPANY G.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George N. Fogg, Stetson.
Corporal Michael H. Smith, Lincoln.

PRIVATES.

Peter Ames, James Kenney, Bangor; Joseph R. Brown, Dexter; Henry M. Curtis, Charles Glassion, Alexander H. Hunt, Calvin Leavitt, Sebattis Mohawk, Frank Susup, George W. Wilson, Oldtown; John Megaw, Carroll; Silas R. Rowell, Eddington; John Thompson, Hermon; Hiram Lowell, Patten.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Walter B. Jenners, Oldtown.
Second Lieutenant Warren T. Ring, Oldtown.
Second Lieutenant Walter B. Jenners, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant William H. Pitcher, Bangor.
Sergeant Alvin A. Messer, Enfield.
Sergeant Nyron B. Roberts, Lincoln.
Corporal Francis Laing, Passadumkeag.
Corporal Charles M. Farnham, Edinburg.
Corporal John B. Fleming, Lincoln.
Corporal Willis S. Lancaster, Maxfield.
Corporal Oliver Hull, Oldtown.
Musician Benjamin Cates, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Felix Betters, James Carney, William W. Harris, Charles Jimmo, Mayland F. Jacobs, John Nedds, Samuel Newell, Benjamin Oakes, Madison C. Rowe, Charles C. Smith, Alexander N. Hunt, Warren I. Ring, Oldtown; William E. Chatman, James Shean, George A. Stetson, William Gibson, Bangor; Horace Dexter, Corinth; Daniel Floyd, Llewellyn Pollard, Hampden; John M. Garey, Garland; Luther Haynes, Franklin Haynes, Passadumkeag; M. V. B. Hutchins, Brewer; Marshal Jimmo, Patten; Joseph C. Kelley, Orono; Orlando J. Rowe, Eddington; Franklin Young, Exeter; Walter B. Jenners, Hermon.

COMPANY I.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant Benjamin F. Bicknell, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Warren T. Ring, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Lewis E. Hardy, Hampden.
Sergeant Andrew J. Kimball, Patten.
Corporal Albion P. Hardy, Hampden.
Corporal Josiah Smith, Garland.

Corporal James Norton, Bangor.
Musician Reuel D. Worcester, Hermon.
Musician Sumner H. Condon, Bangor.
Wagoner John Isham, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Benjamin Bicknell, William P. Burgess, Richard Davis, James Johnson, Patrick Early, Bangor; Elisha C. Debeck, Clifton; Abraham Grover, Sidney A. Milton, Oldtown; George W. Hodgkins, Stetson; Hibbard S. Leeman, Dexter; George Lesser, Orono; Greenleaf B. Staples, Glenburn; Charles T. Snow, Hampden; Rufus K. Stevens, Hudson; Joseph Stanislaus, Lincoln.

COMPANY K.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Warren T. Ring, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Wagoner Charles S. Worcester, Glenburn.

PRIVATES.

George Bunker, Charleston; Joseph H. Burton, William C. Mann, Eddington; Sylvanus Davis, William H. Evans, Otis W. Ellis, William H. Gullifer, James Garrity, Joseph Gillespie, Peter Grant, Gilman Knights, John O. Lee, Michael McLaughlin, James McGunniele, Jesse H. Snow, George A. Tweedie, Thomas C. Barker, Bangor; Henry Jones, Hampden; James S. Russell, Glenburn; Hosea Sawyer, Orono; John Swassen, Thomas P. Smith, Warren T. Ring, Oldtown; George W. Fogg, Stetson; Francis Laing, Passadumkeag.

SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Bangor, leaving there May 14, 1861, and was mustered into the United States service at Willett's Point, Long Island, N. Y., May 28, 1861, to serve two years. Arrived at Washington on the 31st, and encamped on Meridian Hill till July 1st, and at Falls Church, Virginia, until the 16th. It took a prominent part in the battle of Bull Run, July 21st, losing in the engagement 47 killed and wounded, and over 100 missing. Arriving in Washington on the 23d, they garrisoned Fort Corcoran until the middle of October, when they were assigned to the First brigade, Porter's division, and left the fort for Hall's Hill, remaining there until the 1st of March, 1862, at which time they advanced with the Army of the Potomac on Manassas; afterwards participated in the siege of Yorktown. On the 27th of May, the regiment was engaged at the battle of Hanover Court House. During this engagement their loss in killed was light, though the number of wounded was large. The regiment took a prominent part in the battle of Gaines Hill, and during the seven days' retreat was repeatedly under fire, and at the battle of Malvern Hill successfully held a dangerous and conspicuous position during the day, losing but few men. They remained several weeks at Harrison's Landing, when on its evacuation they were ordered to join General Pope's army, and on the 30th of August participated in the battle of Manassas. They retreated with the army to Washington and encamped on Arlington Heights, where after remaining three days they marched into Maryland.

At the battle of Antietam, on the 17th of September, the regiment was under fire in the reserve, and after the battle was among the first to enter Sharpsburg after the enemy had left. Shortly after this the regiment in an effort to ford the river at Shepherdstown, was confronted by a largely superior force of the enemy, and, under a galling fire, was obliged to re-ford the river. On the 13th of December the regiment took a prominent part in the battle of Fredericksburg. Their loss in killed and wounded in that engagement was very heavy. During General Hooker's operations at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, the regiment formed a part of the right wing of his army, and at the last named battle, in May, 1863, was mostly behind breastworks. When the regiment's time expired in May, 125 of the number who were sworn in for three years, were transferred to the Twentieth Maine volunteers, and the remainder, 275, including officers and men, returned to Maine, where they were mustered out of the United States service at Bangor, June 4 and 9, 1863, by Captain Thomas C. J. Bailey, Seventeenth United States infantry.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Charles D. Jameson, Bangor.
 Colonel Charles W. Roberts, Bangor.
 Colonel George Varney, Bangor.
 Lieutenant Colonel Charles W. Roberts, Bangor.
 Lieutenant Colonel George Varney, Bangor.
 Lieutenant Colonel Daniel F. Sargent, Bangor.
 Major George Varney, Bangor.
 Major Daniel Chaplin, Bangor.
 Major Daniel F. Sargent, Bangor.
 Adjutant John E. Reynolds, Bangor.
 Quartermaster Charles V. Lord, Bangor.
 Quartermaster Samuel W. Hoskins, Oldtown.
 Surgeon William H. Allen, Orono.
 Surgeon Daniel McRuer, Bangor.
 Surgeon Samuel B. Morrison, Bangor.
 Assistant Surgeon Augustus C. Hamlin, Bangor.
 Assistant Surgeon Alden D. Palmer, Orono.
 Assistant Surgeon John T. Main, Unity.
 Assistant Surgeon William R. Benson, Newport.
 Quartermaster Sergeant Luther A. Pierce, Bangor.
 Quartermaster Sergeant Samuel Nash, Bangor.
 Sergeant Major Edward L. Appleton, Bangor.
 Sergeant Major Charles J. Ellis, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Major James A. Banks, Bangor.
 Hospital Steward Alden L. Palmer, Orono.
 Hospital Steward Daniel W. Edgerly, Bangor.
 Hospital Steward Grenief C. Brook, Bangor.
 Commissary Sergeant Rodney W. Warren, Bangor.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Herman Bartlett, Bangor, Co. A.
 Captain Rinaldo B. Wiggin, Bangor, Co. A.
 Captain Elisha N. Jones, Orrington, Co. C.
 Captain Eliphalet S. Morrill, Brewer, Co. C.
 Captain William R. Carrier, Brewer, Co. C.
 Captain Levi Emerson, Bangor, Co. E.
 Captain Thomas Foster, Hampden, Co. E.
 Captain Daniel Chaplin, Bangor, Co. F.
 Captain Albion P. Wilson, Bangor, Co. F.
 Captain Frederick Meinecke, Bangor, Co. G.
 Captain Augustus B. Farnham, Bangor, Co. G.
 Captain Frank H. Garnsey, Bangor, Co. G.
 Captain Daniel F. Sargent, Bangor, Co. H.
 Captain Edward L. Getchell, Bangor, Co. H.
 Captain John Carroll, Bangor, Co. I.
 Captain Daniel White, Bangor, Co. I.
 Captain Fernando C. Foss, Oldtown, Co. K.
 Captain John C. Quimby, Oldtown, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Rinaldo B. Wiggin, Bangor, Co. A.
 First Lieutenant James Deane, Bangor, Co. A.
 First Lieutenant George J. Brown, Castine, Co. B.
 First Lieutenant John R. Skinner, Brewer, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant William R. Carrier, Brewer, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant John W. Adams, Bangor, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Thomas Foster, Hampden, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Collin L. Downs, Brewer, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Albion P. Wilson, Bangor, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant George W. Brown, Bangor, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant Warren H. Boynton, Bangor, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant Augustus B. Farnham, Bangor, Co. G.
 First Lieutenant Frank H. Garnsey, Bangor, Co. G.

First Lieutenant Horatio Staples, Bangor, Co. G.
 First Lieutenant Edward L. Getchell, Bangor, Co. H.
 First Lieutenant Ralph W. Morse, Bangor, Co. H.
 First Lieutenant Henry Casey, Bangor, Co. I.
 First Lieutenant Samuel B. Field, Bangor, Co. I.
 First Lieutenant Albert G. Fellows, Oldtown, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Albert L. Cowan, Oldtown, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant James Dean, Bangor, Co. A.
 Second Lieutenant Horace Brown, Hampden, Co. A.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel B. Hinkley, Bangor, Co. A.
 Second Lieutenant Francis S. Trickey, Bangor, Co. A.
 Second Lieutenant Eliphalet S. Morrill, Brewer, Co. C.
 Second Lieutenant Francis P. Hall, Brewer, Co. C.
 Second Lieutenant Lyman E. Richardson, Bangor, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Thomas Foster, Hampden, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Collin L. Downs, Brewer, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Edwin L. Sterling, Bangor, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Warren H. Boynton, Bangor, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant Arthur C. Whitcomb, Hampden, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant Sewall H. Downs, Brewer, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant Frank H. Garnsey, Bangor, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Horatio Staples, Bangor, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Joseph B. Forbes, Bangor, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant George Vinal, Orono, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Ralph W. Morse, Bangor, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Daniel Quimby, jr., Bangor, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Miles Sweeney, Bangor, Co. I.
 Second Lieutenant F. J. Moore, Bangor, Co. I.
 Second Lieutenant Albert L. Cowan, Oldtown, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant John C. Quimby, Oldtown, Co. K.

REGIMENTAL BAND.

Americus D. Harlow, Leader; Ezekiel Andrews, James F. Babcock, Americus Chapman, George D. Dowing, Charles A. Frost, John F. Foster, William N. Gilles, Edwin W. Goodale, George Holt, Rufus Merrill, Williard B. Peacks, William L. Leavey, Elisha M. Smith, Amasa White, Bangor; Moses A. Colburn.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Joseph B. Forbes, Bangor.
 First Sergeant William P. Holden, Bangor.
 First Sergeant Edwin L. Sterling, Bangor.
 First Sergeant John M. Sherwood, Bangor.
 First Sergeant Sewal H. Downs, Brewer.
 First Sergeant James M. Simpson, Brewer.
 First Sergeant George A. McClellan, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Charles Able, Bangor.
 Sergeant William J. Dean, Bangor.
 Sergeant Christopher S. Gorham, Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles F. Hall, Bangor.
 Sergeant George E. Holt, Bangor.
 Sergeant W. H. H. Hasey, Bangor.
 Sergeant Marcellus D. Joy, Bangor.
 Sergeant Albert M. Jackson, Bangor.
 Sergeant Richard Kelleher, Bangor.
 Sergeant John Q. A. Lancy, Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles F. Lovejoy, Bangor.
 Sergeant William H. S. Lawrence, Bangor.
 Sergeant Leonard P. Martin, Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles W. B. Miller, Bangor.
 Sergeant Daniel Quimby, jr., Bangor.
 Sergeant Joseph L. Rowe, Bangor.
 Sergeant Keaviel David, Bangor.
 Sergeant Francis Vancon, jr., Bangor.
 Sergeant Nelson F. Libbie, Bangor.
 Sergeant Albert Wiggin, Bangor.
 Sergeant George F. Whitney, Bangor.
 Sergeant Byron C. Gilmore, Bangor.
 Sergeant William R. Carrier, Brewer.
 Sergeant Colin L. Downs, Brewer.
 Sergeant Francis P. Hall, Brewer.
 Sergeant James Nicholson, Brewer.
 Sergeant Augustus Nickerson, Brewer.
 Sergeant James M. Simpson, Brewer.
 Sergeant Albert J. Snow, Brewer.
 Sergeant Willard H. Burton, Eddington.
 Sergeant Joseph Card, Glenburn.
 Sergeant John Sawyer, Hermon.

Sergeant Hiram B. French, Holden.
 Sergeant Henry H. Gilmore, Lagrange.
 Sergeant Abiather J. Knowles, Lagrange.
 Sergeant Justin S. Nevans, Levant.
 Sergeant John Sawyer, Newburg.
 Sergeant James A. Burlingame, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Charles C. Morse, Oldtown.
 Sergeant John E. Quimby, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Albert S. Ross, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Daniel Staples, Oldtown.
 Sergeant John J. Randall, Orono.
 Sergeant George Vinal, Orono.
 Sergeant George A. McLellan, Stillwater.
 Corporal Charles Able, Bangor.
 Corporal Josiah A. Bailey, Bangor.
 Corporal Stephen D. Benson, Bangor.
 Corporal William H. Boyce, Bangor.
 Corporal Joseph W. Chamberlain, Bangor.
 Corporal Renel S. Clark, Bangor.
 Corporal Hartshorn P. Crowell, Bangor.
 Corporal Charles B. Cobb, Bangor.
 Corporal Lewis Green, Bangor.
 Corporal John Hawthorn, Bangor.
 Corporal Elbridge F. Haskill, Bangor.
 Corporal Tristram W. Haskill, Bangor.
 Corporal William H. Johnson, Bangor.
 Corporal William S. Jordan, Bangor.
 Corporal Peter Morgan, Bangor.
 Corporal Dennis Mahoney, Bangor.
 Corporal Leonard P. Martin, Bangor.
 Corporal Henry McLaughlin, Bangor.
 Corporal David Reaviel, Bangor.
 Corporal Edwin L. Sterling, Bangor.
 Corporal Alonzo Stevens, Bangor.
 Corporal Henry Schnell, Bangor.
 Corporal Albert L. Spencer, Bangor.
 Corporal John E. Trafton, Bangor.
 Corporal William Twomey, Bangor.
 Corporal Francis Vancon, jr., Bangor.
 Corporal Peter Welch, Bangor.
 Corporal George F. Whitney, Bangor.
 Corporal J. B. York, Bangor.
 Corporal Edwin Carrier, Brewer.
 Corporal Henry M. Cushman, Brewer.
 Corporal Charles W. Morrill, Brewer.
 Corporal James M. Simpson, Brewer.
 Corporal Moses Small, Brewer.
 Corporal Cyrus Sweet, Brewer.
 Corporal W. H. H. Wilson, Brewer.
 Corporal John S. Small, Carmel.
 Corporal James McKeen, Eddington.
 Corporal Harrison J. Folsom, Newburg.
 Corporal Cyrus Bray, Oldtown.
 Corporal Carpenter Burlingham, Oldtown.
 Corporal Americus V. Moore, Oldtown.
 Corporal Henry McLaughlin, Oldtown.
 Corporal John P. Wentworth, Lagrange.
 Corporal William Berry, Orrington.
 Corporal James H. Adams, Lincoln.
 Corporal Andrew J. Fozier, Plymouth.
 Corporal Daniel R. Kenney, Stetson.
 Corporal Joseph A. Burlingham, Stillwater.
 Corporal Cyrus F. Barrett, Hermon.
 Corporal Thomas H. Worcester, Hermon.
 Corporal Charles J. Ellis, Hermon.
 Corporal Jeremiah B. Atkins, Exeter.
 Musician Michael Quimbey, Bangor.
 Musician Robert Quimby, Bangor.
 Musician Alden D. Page, Brewer.
 Musician Howard Savage, Lagrange.
 Musician Ariel H. Ward, Levant.
 Musician John T. Burnham, Oldtown.
 Musician Eben R. Dinsmore, Oldtown.
 Musician Frank N. Morris, Veazie.
 Wagoner Charles D. Lander, Bangor.
 Wagoner Amos B. Steanes, Bradford.
 Wagoner Crosby N. Crocker, Kenduskeag.

PRIVATES.

George B. Crawford, John H. McMullen, William Patterson, Samuel Whitecomb, Henry S. Wiley, Alton; William Jellerson, Alexander McKee, Argyle; William G. Abbot, John Adley, Ezekiel Andrews, Ananias Ash, Robert L. Atkins, James A. Banks, Patrick Barry, Daniel W. Bagley, David Bartlett, Thomas B. Barker, Edward Baker, Ansel F. Barden, John Berkit, Thomas Belcher, Nathan Benson, Thomas R. Blaine, John Billings, Isaac Berry, Hiram A. Billington, Warren W. Bradford, Ezekiel C. Bickford, David Brock, Greenleaf C. Brock, John D. Boynton, Edwin R. Blodgett, Benjamin C. Burton, Peter Bohn, Benjamin Chase, Alexander H. Chase, Lewis Capin, Edward R. Chamberlain, Archibald A. Campbell, W. H. Chamberlain, Patrick Casey, John Carroll 2d., Peter Cannon, Benjamin F. Call, George W. Carlisle, Peter Carney, George Cole, Alison G. Cleaves, Horton B. Crowell, Charles Crowell, Edward Conway, John Conway, Hugh Conway, Lafayette M. Crosby, John R. Clements, Michael Crowley, Dennis Connell, Jeremiah Corcoran, Simeon Crawford, Michael Connell, Daniel J. Colson, Thomas B. Chalmer, Cornelius Cronan, John L. Dearling, James W. Davis, John Doherty, Samuel Dearborn, John B. Drummond, Herman J. Day, Abraham G. Dow, William Duckworth, James Driscoll, Timothy Donovan, Charles F. Dougherty, John Davis, Charles W. Doble, Henry O. Dunbar, Lysander A. Dunbar, Garret B. Dinsmore, Daniel W. Ederly, George A. Emerson, Charles H. Ellison, Levi Estes, William O. Farris, Abram Fenton, Patrick J. Furrell, James Flinn, John Fitzpatrick, William Field, Luther Furgeson, James A. Foote, Harrison F. Gould, Ormond F. Graves, Reuben K. Glover, Harrison H. Goding, Leander L. Graffam, Joseph W. Greene, George T. Graves, Don Gilmore, Henry Granville, John Geoghen, Hugh Gillogly, Patric Golden, jr., Seth H. Hall, Zebedee T. Hawes, Phillips Harbach, William Hatch, David D. Hanson, Cyrus Hanson, Patrick Hawesburg, John Harmon, Charles H. Hodgkins, Willis P. Harvey, George E. Holt, Otis F. Hooper, Lyman Hersey, Henry A. Holden, Peter Haggerty, Michael Hogan, John Higgins, Charles G. Heenan, Virgil N. Higgins, Sam D. Hunt, John Harmond, William Inhoff, Sabin Jordan, Alvin F. Jameson, John V. Jordan, Frank A. Johnson, Elden A. Keen, Albion K. P. Knowles, Edward J. Kelleher, Michael Kelley, Michael Kelley 2d., Thomas Kelley, James Kinney, James Kelly, Thomas W. Kelley, John Kelley, Alexander E. Lester, Charles L. Lovejoy, Levi J. Lovejoy, Sam W. Leathers, William H. Lovejoy, William E. Laffin, Stephen A. Leighton, John Lynes, Elsbury Macoy, Thomas McDonough, James McMahon, Michael J. McPhee, Samuel Mansill, George A. Miller, George A. McClure, William H. McKinny, Henry W. Martin, George S. Maxwell, John V. McKenny, Lewis Marsh, jr., Henry H. Morse, James McAnulty, Cornelius Mahoney, David T. Moody, Charles Moore, William McLellan, Edward McKenny, Isaac McKenny, Martin McLaughlin, Elrose McLaughlin, Albert Marsh, Frank B. Miller, Edward McTaggart, George C. Martin, Samuel Marrow, John Morse, John McCann, Henry H. Mayville, Robert McKenny, Timothy Mahoney, Michael McLaughlin, John H. Neal, William A. Neal, James Newman, William H. Norwood, John O'Mara, Henry O'Neil, Hiram B. Odlin, Waldo P. Odlin, John O'Brien, Edward F. Orff, jr., Francis Philbrook, Horatio Pitcher, David O. Pollard, George W. Pratt, Henry L. Perkins, Charles H. Pond, John H. Peters, Charles E. Perry, Patrick Peters, Richard Powers, Thomas Plumatoe, Charles R. Quint, Cyrus Rogers, Nathaniel R. Robbins, Enoch L. Robinson, Josiah Ray, Gershom C. Robbins, Charles Rollins, George H. Rich, Moses G. Rice, James Robinson, David H. Royal, John Riley, Philip Riley, Isaac Roberts, Charles F. Roberts, Henry Reaviel, Melville H. Robbins, Richard Soule, Horace F. Shorey, George Schwitzer, Hunnewell Shepherd, James R. Skillins, John F. Spaulding, Charles H. Sinclair, William L. Stevens, Michael Shea, John A. Savage, Hiram Swan, Reuben Snow, Jeremiah Sullivan, Samuel A. Stevens, W. H. Stevens, William A. Severance, William H. Sanger, Miles J. Sweeney, Charles Stuart, Samuel C. Stewart, William Sheehan, Larkey Sharkey, James Stone, Joseph Speed, Napoleon B. Shepleo, Edward K. Spaulding, Francis Trickey, Charles L. Torrey, Charles Thoms, Edgar B. Taylor, Thomas Twomey, Dennis Tracey, Stephen Timmons, Thomas Timmons, William H. Thompson, Samuel W. Veazie, Charles B. Veazie, Sewell L. Veazie, Stillman W. Verplast, Rodney M. Warren, William D. Waterhouse, R. H. Webster, Henry W. Wheeler, Pat Welch, Albion Whitecomb, George Whitney, Nathan B. Wiggin, jr., Ezekiel F. Wentworth, H. N. Washburn, Bethuel Washburn, Galen Worcester, Ransom Wharton, Charles H. Whitney, Charles A. Whitney, Asa Wilson, William H. Wentworth, James F. Wentworth, Oscar Wyer, Robert Wyer, James Wilson, John Wright, Benjamin F. Vork, Bangor; Augustus

C. Baley, Dime Baley, John J. Cunningham, Dan C. Dyer, John W. Dyer, Ezra M. Mathew, Stephen H. Mathew, Elrose McLaughlin, Albert Pierce, John F. Reeves, Andrew Strout, Alvin D. N. Strout Bradford; George M. Clewly, Thomas Cunningham, George Locke, John Locke, John Leonard, Luther M. Pollard, Alfred Sawyer, Bradley; Thomas W. Arthur, Alexander F. Bacon, Henry L. Barker, Abner O. Boden, Charles Brown, William B. Brown, Frank Burr, Edwin Bradley, Melvins Blake, Charles B. Carter, Noah H. Cook, George J. Cushing, Franklin Cushing, Charles E. Currier, Charles A. Currier, Charles J. Doble, Andrew Deering, Ambrose W. Fickett, Charles Fitzgerald, George W. Foster, Charles E. Foster, Joseph W. Folger, Amasa W. Fickett, Lincoln Given, John T. Given, William S. Goodwin, Albert A. Gregg, John L. Grindle, Leonidas Hall, Henry A. Harlow, Washington Harlow, Jeremiah Hobbs, Atherton Howes, John W. Kellan, Henry J. Leach, Orin Mayo, Charles W. Merrill, Charles F. Nickerson, Melville Nickerson, Elijah Nickerson, Asa Nickerson, Joel C. Pierce, Judson A. Rankins, William C. Sargent, Laforest H. Sawtelle, Samuel Snelcar, John H. Simpson, Frank S. Smith, James H. Smith, Samuel H. Winchester, William W. Wadleigh, Charles Washburn, Silas Washburn, Leander Vickery, Brewer; Leroy W. Atkins, John Hurd, Cyrus T. Jones, Delon Newcomb, Henry S. Prescott, John Benjamin, Jeremiah Blaisdell, John Fitzpatrick, Henry Hurd, William Stower, Daniel D. Tarr, Carmel; Atwood P. Jones, Carroll; Henry A. Carpenter, Charleston; Robert F. Atherton, Frederic A. Blood, William F. Chase, John Garnet, Warren H. Orcutt, Horace Wyman, Chester; Eben D. Crosby, Stephen R. Crosby, John Colby, William Debeck, Charles Giles, Clifton; Ezra B. Ricker, Corinna; Edwin C. Copeland, Edward W. Copeland, Dexter; George Benn, Norris D. Condon, Moses Cook, Winslow Cushman, Elbridge Doble, Andrew J. Getchell, William Hussey, Hollis Sidelinker, Dixmont; John W. B. Austin, Joseph C. Davis, James H. Eiskine, Levi E. Lancaster, Llewellyn S. Maddock, George B. Martin, Phinson R. McKean, Drummond Richardson, Snell W. Smith, Eddington; Valentine Spencer, Ednburg; Washington Cole, Isaac W. Deane, Isaac H. Fairbrother, Charles Friend, Charles Glidden, Gustine Jordan, William A. Souel, John A. Turner, Horace Whitcomb, Otis W. Whitcomb, Etna; George Edgerly, Joseph W. Kelley, Charles A. Tarbox, Henry Wheeler, Lander Shaw, Exeter; Adelbert H. Sawtelle, Edward Osgood, Garland; James Card, Samuel O. Curtis, Washington I. Martin, Glenburn; George Jephard, Henry L. Wheeler, Andrew F. White, Nathan S. White, William W. Witham, Greenfield; Edward C. Betts, Sewell M. Cowan, Stephen B. Fowler, William B. Fowler, Albert G. Furbish, George W. Grant, Sylvanus Humphrey, Martin Joss, Henry F. Kennard, David H. Royal, Arthur C. Whitcomb, Trustin Whitcomb, Ferdinand N. Wing, William B. Welch, Hampden; Harrison L. Barrett, Hannibal H. Crocker, John F. Clifford, Stephen W. Dawson, Michael Gallagher, Alvin W. Grant, Charles T. Greene, Haskell P. Kimball, Lyman Moses, Emery Morrill, John F. Reed, George A. Tash, Benjamin Welber, Thomas Wyman, Amos R. Witham, Hermon; John Greenya, Albert C. Hart, Benjamin N. West, Holden, Walter P. Hammett, Samuel T. Haynes, Howland; Adoniram J. Bank, Charles Haley, James McKenny, David F. Page, John Warner, John C. Warner, Sumner L. Warner, Kenduskeag; James Brown, Leonard D. Carver, Arvin H. House, John S. Knowles, Alonzo Wentworth, Lagrange; William Candelmeire, George E. Field, Samuel Mollett, Oscar Thomas, Lee; John W. Curtis, George G. Mills, William J. Mills, Henry McPherson, Edward F. Sealand, Levant; James M. Clay, Decatur Gates, Charles F. Hall, John Sample, Lincoln; John C. Harvey, Maxfield; Peter Murtough, Medway; Hiram Brown, Freeman H. Butterfield, Albert H. Hammon, Joseph Hutchings, William J. Richardson, Henry Smith, Ira W. Spencer, Daniel Whelan, Milford; Alfred Kneeland, Henry W. Sweetsir, Gordon Tibbetts, Newburgh; Henry H. Blackwell, Hollis G. Libbey, Judson A. Ross, Hollis B. Marsh, Newport; Charles C. Brown, Paul Burton, Benedict Burnes, Elijah Carr, Benjamin J. Coombs, Parker Carson, Isaiah Clark, Adolphus S. Crawford, George E. Donham, John B. E. Donham, Nehemiah Dow, Henry W. Drinkwater, Edwin Dillingham, Oscar L. Dillingham, George A. Doe, William H. Eaton, Joseph Egagnon, George H. Farrar, William Farrar, Stephen Frye, Isaac Gould, William H. Gibbons, Thomas Griffith, William H. Hanson, Nicholas Harris, Augustus Hines, George Hines, Frederic Holman, Hiram B. Ingalls, Jesse B. Johnson, George W. Leach, Augustus McLaughlin, William E. Morsy, William F. Mills, Daniel W. Morton, George R. Orcutt, Frederick Parady, Henry W. Pollard, Wilmot J. Robinson, Ripley R. Rogers, Charles H. Roberts, George A. Sawtelle, William B. Salmon, Henry H. Scribner, David L. Sumpson, John L. Spaulding, Edward R. Spaulding, Leonard Trafton, Casper Wagowski, Eben O. Weed,

Charles W. Willie, Joseph Winslow, Oldtown; James H. Bacon, William F. Bacon, Nehemiah P. Doe, Albert L. Douglass, Zebulon Doe, Samuel W. Davis, Fields W. Emerson, Edwin H. Estes, Simeon C. Fancy, William Foss, Edward Frederic, Edwin Frederic, David Legrean, James P. Lunt, James H. Mann, Philip Marr, Edwin P. Mayo, Samuel Mersey, James Newman, Zebulon Robinson, Isaac Sanborn, jr., Joseph W. Sauborn, Andrew J. Thombs, William H. Ward, Oliver M. Wilson, Orono; Ellbanan W. Barnes, Francis A. Bierce, Alvah H. Godfrey, George K. Ingalls, Charles E. Jones, Jabez W. King, Edward D. Kent, Augustus N. Lufkin, Joshua S. Marshall, Vincent W. Pinhorn, Joseph S. Robinson, Henry J. Reynolds, James H. Rogers, Joseph S. Rogers, Lewis H. Snow, Watson H. Smith, Orrington; Samuel Nash, Passadumkeag; Stillman Buxton, Patten; Dudley H. Leavitt, Thomas D. Rice, Jefferson Pickard, James Pickard, Plymouth; William Feeding, Albert K. Lewis, George M. Lowell, Miles L. Scribner, Springfield; Frank A. Dinsmore, Samuel G. Kenney, Reuben M. Seavey, Columbus Shaw, Omer Shaw, Henry C. Van Buskirk, Stetson; Ephraim Brown, Carpenter Burlingham, James H. Fall, Fred A. Michael, Stillwater; William Babeock, Warren Day, Andrew J. Dowe, John T. Durgin, Harvey Emery, jr., Lewis F. Morse, Harry Mitchell, John O'Brien, George H. Phillips, Daniel Starkie, John H. Wentworth, Veazie.

THIRD REGIMENT INFANTRY.

Organized at Augusta, June 4, 1861, for the three years' service. In the two battles of Bull Run and many other engagements. Mustered out at Augusta, June 28, 1864.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Frank S. Hesselstine, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Albert A. Davis, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Charles O. Perry, Charles B. Rundlett, George W. Hines, Charles B. Cooley, James H. Thompson, George H. Wilson, Moses Brown, William Collins, John Dougherty, Rufus Haur, Bangor; Edward S. Steames, Lowell; Albert R. Millet, Charleston; Walter H. Randolph, Marshall A. Grant, Dixmont; Laban P. Frost, Glenburn; Benjamin Eddy, Corinth; Martin L. Hodgdon, Bangor; Asbury F. Haynes, Passadumkeag, Henry Hind, Plymouth; Thomas D. Jordan, Oldtown; John F. Johnson, Charles E. Lord, Thomas Lowe, Bangor; Charles H. Lewis, Bradford; John T. Clark, Corrina; Llewellyn Cleveland, Orrington; John Corrigan, Bradley; Arthur Duffy, John Robinson, William Ritchie, Albert G. Frubush, Edward L. Hunt, Bangor; Richard E. Myrich, Francis Hopdela, Mt. Chase; Horace J. Morton, Milford; Jeremiah B. Atkins, Levant; John A. Curtis, Dexter; Howard C. Hall, Charleston; Frank W. Harding, Bangor; Benjamin F. Welsh, Passadumkeag; Albert Whitcomb, Alton; Franklin W. Emery, Glenburn; Charles Morrison, Elisha McIntosh, Maxfield; Hollis B. Spaulding, Oldtown; Cornelius Chapman, Bradford; Augustus D. Hoyt, Passadumkeag; Edward A. Leavitt, Oldtown; Otis R. Pachard, Rufus G. Curtis, Richard C. Davis, William L. Hodsdon, Daniel B. Plummer, Patrick Russell, Warren Sturtivant, Bangor.

FOURTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Rockland, June 15, 1861, to serve three years, and on the 17th left for Washington, where they arrived on the 20th and encamped on Meridian Hill. On the 16th of July they proceeded to Centreville, and on the 21st engaged in the battle of Bull Run, being among the last to leave the field, and retreating in good order under command of their officers. Their casualties in that engagement were as follows: Officers wounded 1, taken prisoners 4; enlisted men killed 17, wounded 4, missing 38, nearly all of whom were wounded. The regiment, forming a portion of Sedgwick's Brigade of Heintzleman's Division, remained near Washington until the 17th of March, 1862, when they started with the army towards Yorktown, participating in the siege of that place. On the evacuation of Yorktown by the rebels, the regiment marched towards Williamsburg, but did not arrive in time to take part in the engagement at that place. From Williamsburg the regiment marched and camped within twelve miles of Richmond. They were present at the battle of Seven Pines on the 31st of May, but at no time directly engaged, though part of the time exposed to the fire of the enemy. On the next day, however, the enemy having attacked the picket line, the regiment was engaged and retained the position they occupied the night before, their casualties being 2 killed, 7 wounded, and 1 missing. On the 25th of June, the regiment was engaged with the enemy in front of Seven Pines, and held a most difficult position in face of the Rebel force through the night. On the 1st of July they were present at the battle of Malvern Hill, and the next day retreated to Harrison's Landing, remaining there until the 15th of August, when in conjunction with Heintzleman's entire corps, went to the support of General Pope's army, and on the 29th of August took a prominent part in the battle of Bull Run, losing during the day 7 killed, 33 wounded, and 7 missing. The following day the regiment was kept in reserve while the battle went on, and retreated at night towards Centreville, thence towards Fairfax Court-House, participating in the engagement at Chantilly on the 1st of September, in which their casualties were 8 killed, 54 wounded, and 2 missing, out of 240 men who were engaged. The next day they continued their retreat and arrived near Washington on the 3d. There they remained until the 15th, when they crossed into Maryland and guarded the fords of the Upper Potomac. On the 12th of October they assisted in the attempt to intercept Stuart's cavalry at Conrad's Ferry. They arrived at Falmouth on the 22d of November, and participated in the battle of Fredericksburg on the 13th of December. They re-crossed the river on the 15th, returned to their old camp near Falmouth, and there remained engaged in drill and ordinary camp and picket duty until the 28th of April, 1863, when they crossed the Rappahannock River at United States Ford, taking a prominent part in the battle of Chancellorsville on the 2d and 3d of May, their casualties in that engagement being as follow: Killed, 1; wounded, 21; missing, 10. From this time the regiment remained encamped until the 11th of June, then joined in the campaign resulting in the battle of Gettysburg, where on the 2d of July they participated in the engagement at that place, losing during the day 14 killed, 53 wounded, and 72 missing. They also engaged the enemy at Wapping Heights and encamped at White Sulphur Springs on the 1st of August. On the 7th of November they assisted in the attack on the enemy at Kelley's Ford, and the next day charged upon and soon drove a large force of the enemy from a position near Brandy Station, where the regiment encamped on the 10th, remaining there until the 26th, when they marched to the Rapidan, engaged the enemy, losing 6 men wounded and 5 taken prisoners, and returned to Brandy Station, where they remained encamped until the 14th of March, 1864. At that date, on account of the reorganization of the army under General Grant, the regiment was assigned to the Second Army Corps. On the 4th of May the regiment crossed the Rapidan at Ely's Ford, and on the next day were heavily engaged at Torbett's Tavern, where they supported a brigade of the Sixth corps. That night they rejoined their division, and at daybreak on the 6th they advanced on the enemy's position. They were engaged all that day and during the next. This was the battle of the Wilderness, during which their casualties were: Officers killed 2, wounded 11; enlisted men killed 32, wounded 136, and missing 3. On the 23d the regiment, having been engaged in reconnoitring, building fortifications, etc., since the 8th, moved towards the North Anna river, where they took part in a charge upon the enemy, driving them across the bridge. On the 14th of June the regiment crossed the James River, moved two miles to the front and took position in line of battle. The following day the regiment was relieved from duty in the army and ordered to proceed to Rockland, Maine, where they arrived on the morning of the 25th. The men were furloughed until the 19th of July, on which day 241 officers and enlisted men were mustered out and discharged from the United States service by Captain Thomas C. J. Baily, Seventeenth United States infantry, the re-enlisted men and recruits whose term of service had not expired, having been transferred to the Nineteenth Maine regiment volunteers before the departure of the regiment from the field.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Major William M. Pitcher, Bangor.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William L. Pitcher, Co. H, Bangor.

Captain Albert L. Spencer, Co. H, Bangor.

First Lieutenant, Albert L. Spencer, Co. H, Bangor.

First Lieutenant George F. Bourne, Co. H, Bangor.

Second Lieutenant George F. Bourne, Co. H, Bangor.

Second Lieutenant Walter S. Goodale, Co. H, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant John M. Doe, Bangor.

Sergeant Charles S. Doe, Bangor.

Sergeant Walter S. Goodale, Bangor.

Sergeant John A. Phillips, Bangor.

Sergeant Hiram G. York, Dixmont.

Sergeant Francis O. J. S. Hill, Newburg.

Sergeant Almond E. Osgood, Newburgh.

Corporal Charles W. Hopkins, Bangor.

Corporal Rufus G. Bickford, Bangor.

Corporal Michael Dorsey, Bangor.

Corporal Robert Grant, Bangor.

Corporal Albert A. Haynes, Bangor.

Corporal John B. Longy, Bangor.

Corporal Jerry Deming, Bangor.

Corporal Edward E. Kent, Brewer.

Corporal Winthrop Chick, Dixmont.

Corporal John F. Stone, Dixmont.

Corporal Hiram G. York, Dixmont.

Corporal Solomon L. Stewart, Exeter.

Corporal Abner C. Goodell, Hampden.

Corporal Daniel W. Barker, Levant.

Corporal Francis O. J. S. Hill, Newburg.

Corporal Charles B. Parsons, Newburg.

Corporal Isaiah B. Merrick, Newport.

Corporal Moses H. Wilham, Plymouth.

Musician John Knowles, jr., Hampden.

Wagoner N. B. Fuller, Newburg.

PRIVATES.

Ira P. Allen, Richard Allum, George H. Baker, Joseph Boardway, Arthur L. Boynton, Benjamin F. Call, George Coe, John Cameron, Eben Cushing, Jerry Demming, John Donahoe, Lyman P. Fowles, Erastus Furbish, James C. Garnet, Benjamin Gray, Thomas Hardan, Moses H. Hubbard, Alfred Howard, John H. Ham, David Hughey, William Kendrick, George Lessor, Hall J. Libby, Joshua Lovejoy, Alfred P. Merrick, Thomas Mortal, James Mulherin, John Murray, Emery A. McCallister, H. G. O. McDonald, James M. Mullin, Melville Nichols, James Quimby, Frederic H. Rogers, Charles Rose, James Rediker, Simon L. Norton, Edward B. Nickerson, Solomon Parent, Samuel L. Smith, Adolphus Whitney, Bangor; William Babeock, Bradley, John Elden, Elisha Simpson, John Simpson, Bradford; Edgar A. Stanley, Benjamin Burr, Robert F. Greene, Thomas F. Greene, Howard A. Thayer, Horace B. Washburn, Horatio U. Washburn, Brewer; Abijah N. Clay, Enfield; Francis M. Dearborn, Robert G. Flanders, George Wellington, Garland; Edward C. Megguier, John H. Thomas, Glenburn; Jeremiah Avery, Greenfield; Albert F. Folsome, William D. Lowell, Joshua B. Whitney, jr., Greenbush; Edward H. Bean, David Higgins, Augustus Hodgman, Hampden, Edward York, Josiah H. Pomroy, Hermon; Albert C. Scribner, Hudson; Amos Page, Kenduskeag; William P. Chase, Andrew J. Gardiner, Sylvanus Hatch, Sylvanus B. Hatch, William F. Heath, Lincoln; Samuel Lamb, Lowell; Rufus G. Bickford, E. J. Hill, Elisha S. Piper, Enoch F. Piper, Newburg; George S. Daniels, William H. Stickney, Hazen E. McCauseland, Newport, John Boyle, Edward N. Leavitt, Edwin M. Stinson, James Smith, Oldtown; Charles A. Mudgett, Josiah C. Read, David Estis, Samuel S. Cain, Orono; Benjamin F. Shaw, John G. Kendall, Orrington; Orner Moga, Passadumkeag; David Blanchard, George H. Downes, Juan Millano, Albert Murray, Allen D. Wood, Plymouth; George Drake, Springfield; Thomas J. Cunningham, Adoniram J. Moore, Veazie; Amos C. Trott, Solomon S. Trott, Winn; Moses A. Debeck, John R. York, Clifton; Jacob A. Launder, Corinna; Nathan Chamberlain, Judson W. Dexter, George F. Hind, Corinth; Thomas Mithie, Dexter; J. H. Bickford, John H. Jewell, George Jewell, Albert J. Condam, George J. Craig, Albert D. Crocker, Prentiss M. Getchell, Samuel B. Stone, Ephraim D. Tasker, William H. Work, Eben D. Work.

FIFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Portland, June 24, 1861, to serve three years. Its first action was at Bull Run, and its subsequent service, wholly with the Army of the Potomac, was extremely arduous. Only 193 officers and men to be mustered out July 27, 1864.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

First Lieutenant Andrew S. Lyon, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Junius W. Littlefield, Dexter.
Corporal Junius W. Littlefield, Dexter.
Corporal W. H. Huntoon, Orrington.
Corporal William H. Savage, Plymouth.

PRIVATES.

Edward H. Feeney, Samuel W. Davis, David Vail, Albion; William Grant, Wyatt Grant, P. Wilmot, Bangor; Hezekiah Richardson, Brewer; George Cook, Oldtown; Lorenzo W. Starbird, Eddington; George F. True, Exeter; John Harper, Boswell C. Horton, Dexter; John T. Abbott, Newburg; John McLaughlin, Springfield.

SIXTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Portland, Maine, July 15, 1861, to serve three years, and reached Washington, District of Columbia, on the 19th. They were stationed at Chain Bridge on the Potomac until the 3d of September, when they crossed into Virginia and through the fall and winter occupied Fort Griffin. On the 4th of April, 1862, the regiment joined in the movement against Yorktown, where on the 5th, 6th, and 7th, they were engaged in reconnoitring and had several skirmishes with the enemy. At the battle of Lee's Mills on the 16th, they supported the artillery and were exposed to a heavy fire from the enemy's batteries. On the 5th of May they took a prominent part in the battle of Williamsburg. From the 9th of May to the 24th, the regiment was on the march up the Peninsula in the direction of Richmond, encamping on that day near the Chickahominy, which they crossed on the 5th of June, and participated on the 27th in the engagement at Garnet's Farm, in which their casualties were 1 man killed and 23 wounded. The next day they commenced the retrograde movement to the James River, taking a position on the heights beyond White Oak Bridge on the 30th, and engaged the enemy on the following day, losing 2 men wounded. They arrived at Harrison's Landing on the 2d of July, and there encamped until the 16th of August, when they were transported to Alexandria and arrived at Centreville just as the army had commenced falling back from the battle-field of Groveton or Second Bull Run, where General Pope's forces had been defeated. On the 1st of September they commenced the retreat towards Washington, and on the 11th had a skirmish with the enemy at the foot of Sugar Loaf Mountain. At the battle of Antietam on the 17th, the regiment took a prominent part, and also participated in the battle of Fredericksburg on the 12th of December. Three days after they re-crossed the Rappahannock and encamped near Belle Plains, where they remained until February 2, 1863, when the regiment was assigned to the "Light Division" and moved to Potomac Creek, where it encamped and remained until April 28th. On the 1st of May they crossed the Rappahannock River and bore an honorable part in the battle of Chancellorsville on May 2d and 3d, their loss being 128 officers and men in killed and wounded. On the 11th of May, the "Light Division" being broken up, the regiment was assigned to the Third brigade, First division, Sixth corps. On the 9th of June, they had a skirmish with the enemy at Kelley's Ford, after which they participated in the long and fatiguing marches of the Pennsylvania campaign, and were present at the battle of Gettysburg on July 2d and 3d, though not actively engaged with the enemy. On the 19th of October they participated in the charge and capture of the enemy's works at Rappahannock Station, losing in that engagement 16 officers and 123 enlisted men killed and wounded. On the 27th the regiment went to the support of the Third corps then engaged at Locust Grove, after which they returned to their former camp near Wilbur Ford, and there remained until May 4, 1864. Two days afterward they were engaged in the battle of the Wilderness, and on the 8th, in that of Spottsylvania, where they lost a few men. They also participated in the attack on the enemy's works on the right, losing 125 men in killed, wounded and missing. On the 12th, the regiment, numbering only 70 men, was under fire eight hours, supporting General Hancock's forces, and losing 16 officers and men killed and wounded. On the 14th of June the regiment started up the James River, arriving in front of Petersburg on the 20th. There they remained until the 10th of July, when, their term of service having expired, they were ordered to Maine for muster-out and discharge. Arriving at Washington, District of Columbia, on the 12th, they volunteered their services for thirty days in defence of the city, then threatened by the enemy, and marched to Fort Stevens. However, on the 13th they were relieved, and on the 17th left for Portland, where they arrived on the 22d, and were mustered out and discharged from the United States service on the 15th of August by Lieutenant I. H. Walker, Fourteenth United States Infantry. Previous to the departure of the regiment from the field, about 238 re-enlisted men and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, were temporarily organized into a battalion, afterwards assigned to the First Regiment Infantry, Maine Veteran Volunteers.

Eugene P. Sanger

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Abner Knowles, Bangor.
Adjutant William H. Coan, Dexter.
Quartermaster Isaac Strickland, Bangor.
Surgeon Eugene F. Sanger, Bangor.
Assistant Surgeon Samuel B. Straw, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major Percy Knowles, Bangor.
Hospital Steward Charles A. McKister, Bangor.
Drum Major Joseph Gatchell, Bangor.
Band Leader Henry S. Morey, Bangor.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George Fuller, Co. H, Corinth.
Captain Joseph G. Roberts, Co. H, Corinth.
Captain Albert G. Burton, Co. I, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant Sewall C. Gray, Co. A, Exeter.
First Lieutenant Henry R. Soper, Co. I, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant Lycurgus Smith, Co. I, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant James M. Norris, Co. I, Milford.
First Lieutenant Percival Knowles, Co. K, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant George Fuller, Co. H, Corinth.
Second Lieutenant George Roberts, Co. H, Corinth.
Second Lieutenant William H. Coan, Co. II, Dexter.
Second Lieutenant Daniel W. Freeze, Co. I, Orono.
Second Lieutenant George H. Norton, Co. I, Oldtown.
Second Lieutenant James M. Norris, Co. I, Milford.
Second Lieutenant Percival Knowles, Co. K, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant James M. Norris, Milford.
First Sergeant Andrew J. Whittier, Corinth.
First Sergeant William H. Coan, Dexter.
Sergeant John J. Fogg, Bangor.
Sergeant Alexander Stevens, Bangor.
Sergeant Israel Hodsdon, Corinth.
Sergeant Elisha Eddy, Corinth.
Sergeant Charles F. Fitzgerald, Dexter.
Sergeant Robert O. Otis, Dexter.
Sergeant Albert F. Severance, Dexter.
Sergeant Walter D. Jenness, Hermon.
Sergeant Albert L. Jones, Holden.
Sergeant Thomas Templeton, Milford.
Sergeant Isaac Pratt, Oldtown.
Sergeant Lycurgus Smith, Oldtown.
Corporal John J. Fogg, Bangor.
Corporal Alvin B. Judson, Bangor.
Corporal Samuel M. Jack, Bangor.
Corporal John W. Pettingill, Corinna.
Corporal Elisha Eddy, Corinth.
Corporal Nathaniel G. Hatch, Corinth.
Corporal Daniel B. Herrick, Corinth.
Corporal Israel Hodsdon, Corinth.
Corporal Charles A. Whittier, Corinth.
Corporal Hiram H. Burment, Dexter.
Corporal Otis O. Roberts, Dexter.
Corporal James D. Marsh, Dexter.
Corporal Albert F. Severance, Dexter.
Corporal Hiram F. Safford, Dexter.
Corporal Thomas D. Sturdevant, Dexter.
Corporal William Doe, Milford.
Corporal Thomas Templeton, Milford.
Corporal George H. Morton, Oldtown.
Corporal Isaac Pratt, Oldtown.

Corporal Samuel J. Clark, jr., Veazie.
Corporal Albert L. Jones, Holden.
Corporal George F. Beale, Hudson.
Corporal Lindall H. Whittier, Kenduskeag.
Corporal Elias M. Kitch, Lincoln.
Corporal Sylvester F. Lyon, Lincoln.
Corporal Amos P. McKenney, Lincoln.
Corporal Luther G. Rogers, Lincoln.
Corporal David C. Whitney, Lincoln.
Musician Joseph F. Gretchell, Bangor.
Musician Nathaniel R. Witham, Bangor.
Musician Charles F. Tibbetts, Charleston.
Wagoner James Boswell, Bangor.
Wagoner Ivory Webbert, Bangor.
Wagoner Albion K. Mattbew, Lincoln.
Wagoner Joseph Doe, Milford.

PRIVATES.

Hiram B. Bulger, Joseph Bulger, Moses Babeock, George W. Blackmore, Michael Brennan, Alonzo Cilley, Clement M. Clark, Lemuel H. Darling, Azro W. David, Charles V. Dudley, Francis J. Dudley, Joseph W. Estabrook, Martin Feeney, John Glover, Edward A. Goodald, George E. Harriman, George F. Holden, A. Jellison, Percival Knowles, James A. Lane, Thomas McCormick, Patrick McCristle, William H. Moore, Alonzo W. Moore, David E. Mills, Alden F. Randall, Charles O. Randall, George W. Randall, Edward A. Richards, Dennis S. Roundy, James H. Roundy, William A. Sewall, Edward Short, Benjamin F. Scribner, Isaiah B. Scribner, David Severance, Frank Severance, Upton F. Smith, Wellington Sprague, James W. Sutherland, Charles B. Vickery, Turner Wade, William J. White, John J. Williams, George W. Yates, John Yates, Bangor; Albion K. P. Roberts, Bradford; Lewis A. Willett, Bradley; William A. Keene, Chester; Andrew J. Tibbetts, Carmel; Edward Smith, Alonzo D. Miller, Ambrose Page, Charleston; Melvin S. Jellison, Clifton; Aaron Frost, Frank W. Titecomb, James C. Lander, Russell F. Parkman, Samuel Weeks, William Weeks, Corinna; Sumner S. Bean, Lucius H. Bond, Charles W. Bradley, Orrin G. Davis (Band), Chester Dexter, Henry C. Heald, William H. Herrick, Jerome Hyde, C. S. Patterson, George Robinson, Charles F. Tibbetts, George D. Strout, Corinth; Israel P. Bates, John H. Bean, Daniel H. Campbell, William Crawford, Charles Dyer, Edward J. Sturdevant, Charles G. Flanders, Oliver Fuller, George F. Gould, James P. Lovejoy, Sylvanus P. Lowell, Alonzo R. Merrill, Harrison S. Norton, Charles F. Fisher, Edmund R. Phillips, William F. Royal, Lorenzo Russell, John Russell, William A. Sewall, Milton R. Sampson, Dexter; Leonard Peabody, Dixmont; James McKinney, Enfield; Edwin S. Libby, Ira B. Tibbetts, Exeter; Alonzo Batchelder, George W. Hatch, Fifeild Lyford, Alvin K. Osgood, Wesley Osgood, Charles C. Titcomb, Garland; George Emerson, Alden Kennedy, Greenbush; John M. Rice, Lyman F. Rice, Hampden; Isaac R. Waterbury, Howland; Chester J. Lancaster, Charles B. Mitchell, Stillman W. Strout, Hudson; Charles E. Atwood, George W. Mills, Harry F. Mills, James McCarrison, F. A. H. Stackpole, Kenduskeag; Calvin M. Carey, William Emery, Lagrange; Mathew Green, George W. House, Henry Q. Morton, Lee; Thomas L. Hall, Joseph O. Turner, William W. Webster, Lincoln; Charles V. Dudley, Lowell; Hannibal H. Coomby, Mattawamkeag; Thomas W. Chick, Thomas Carrington, Joseph W. Riggs, Green C. Spencer, Milford; Aaron Crawford, Martin V. Eldridge, George W. Knight, Samuel Staples, Newburgh; Cyrus P. Brown, Newport; George J. Barritt, Phineas F. Bean, Joseph C. Blackman, Desire Cornean, Lyman E. Crossman, Daniel Davis, Eliphalet W. Davis, Albert N. Eaton, John W. Eaton, Samuel Fish, Oliver Graffam, Hezekiah B. Harris, Hezekiah F. Harris, Osear E. W. Hinkley, Charles A. Hughes, Alexander M. Hunt, Wayland F. Jacob, Charles W. Johnson, David B. Kieth, Joseph L. Kieth, James C. Knox, Edmund Leard, Benjamin C. Lisherness, Washington R. Mack, Andrew J. Miles, David C. Myrick, Andrew Oakes, Benjamin F. Pratt, Isaac Powell, Zenas D. Putnam, William F. Sibley, Thomas P. Smith, James B. Soper, Leander C. Stinson, Oldtown; John F. Freeman, Eseek Kelley, Timothy Wetherby, Orono; Charles H. Cobb, Orrington; Mark C. Jenness, Passadumkeag; Benjamin F. Goodwin, Asa G. Wiggins, Stetson; Newman A. Davis, Samuel N. Emery, Wallace Sweet, Veazie; Harmon S. George, Edwin Grunza, Charles Nickerson, Holden.

SEVENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, August 21, 1861, to serve three years, and left for Baltimore, Maryland, on the 23d, where they encamped and remained until the 25th of October. On that day they moved to Washington, crossed the Potomac into Virginia on the 8th of November, and were occupied in drill, camp and picket duty, until the 4th of April, 1862, when they joined in the advance toward Richmond. They were under the fire of Fort Lee on Warwick Creek on the 5th, and afterwards participated in the siege of Yorktown, holding a position near Dam No. 3, until the evacuation of the place by the enemy. On the 5th of May they bore an honorable part in the battle of Williamsburg. On the evening of the 9th they moved to the Peninsula towards Richmond, participating in the engagement at Mechanicsville on the 24th, and immediately after the battle of Fair Oaks moved to the left bank of the Chickahominy, to Golding's farm, where they remained during the month of June, almost daily engaged with the enemy. On the 27th the army commenced to change its base of operations, during which the regiment participated in the battles of Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, and Malvern Hill, after which they remained at Harrison's Landing, building fortifications until the 13th of August, when they embarked for Alexandria, and from thence proceeded to Bull Run, but did not participate in the battle which commenced on that day. The next day they joined General Pope's forces at Centreville and retreated with them to Washington. On the 7th of September they joined in the Maryland campaign, participated in the engagement at South Mountain on the 14th, and bore an honorable part in the battle of Antietam on the 17th, losing in killed, wounded and missing, 11 officers and 100 enlisted men, out of 15 officers and 166 enlisted men present. The strength of the regiment had, by this time, become so much reduced that it was too small for effective field duty, and it was sent to Maine in October to recruit. The regiment encamped at Portland, where they remained until January 21, 1863, engaged in filling up their diminished ranks. On this day a battalion of five companies, which had been filled by consolidation, left Portland for the field, and on the 25th they rejoined their old command, Third Brigade, Second Division, Sixth Corps, at White Oak Church, Virginia, where they remained encamped until April 28th, when they moved to the heights opposite Fredericksburg, and on May 2d formed a part of the storming party which carried the enemy's works on Cemetery and St. Mary's Heights. They were also engaged with the enemy on the 4th near Chancellorsville, where a desperate battle had been fought the day before. Their casualties in those engagements were in killed, wounded and missing, 4 officers and 88 enlisted men. They participated in the Pennsylvania campaign, and were present at Gettysburg on the 2d and 3d of July, after which they joined in pursuit of the enemy; had an engagement with Stuart's cavalry at Gainesville, Virginia, on the 19th of October, and participated in the action at Rappahannock Station, November 7th. On the 27th they were in line of battle until 10 P. M., supporting a portion of the Third Corps in the action at Locust Grove, and advanced to Mine Run on the 28th, where, during the three succeeding days, they were in front and constantly engaged with the enemy's outposts. They returned and encamped at Brandy Station on the 3d of December, and there remained until May 4, 1864, when they crossed the Rapidan and engaged in the battle of the Wilderness on the 5th and sixth; also at Spottsylvania on the 10th, 12th and 18th, on which day they suffered severely, having 42 men killed. On the 1st of June they reached Cold Harbor, where, on the 2d, they charged on and carried the enemy's fortifications, which they held until the 13th, and then marched towards Petersburg, where they arrived on the 17th, and participated in the attacks on the Weldon railroad on the 24th and 30th. On the 11th of July the regiment debarked at Washington, and on the 12th was engaged in the defences of the city, and assisted in the defeat of the enemy in its nearest approach to the capital. On the 13th they marched up the Potomac and through Snicker's Gap to the Shenandoah, returning to Washington on the 23d. On the 26th, they again started up the Potomac, crossing at Harper's Ferry on the 29th, and marched to the vicinity of Charlestown, where they remained until August 21st, 1864, when their original term of service having expired, the re-enlisted men and recruits were consolidated with the battalions of the Fifth and Sixth regiments, retaining the designation of the Seventh regiment until October, when it was changed to the First Veteran Volunteers. The officers and men whose terms of service expired August 21, 1864, returned to Maine, where they were mustered out and discharged from the United States service September 5th, at Augusta, by Captain C. Holmes, United States Army.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William Crosby, Bangor, Co. A.
 Captain Charles D. Gilmore, Bangor, Co. C.
 Captain George H. Baker, Bangor, Co. D.
 Captain George H. Baker, Bangor, Co. E.
 Captain Henry Warren, Bangor, Co. G.
 Captain Edward H. Cass, Bangor, Co. H.
 Captain Henry C. Snow, Hampden, Co. H.
 First Lieutenant John A. Bachelder, Oldtown, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant Andrew M. Benson, Oldtown, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant Benjamin F. Bicknell, Bangor, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant George H. Baker, Bangor, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Samuel S. Mann, Bangor, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Henry W. Farrar, Bangor, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant John A. Bachelder, Oldtown, Co. G.
 First Lieutenant Thomas S. Cates, Bangor, Co. H.
 First Lieutenant Henry Warren, Bangor, Co. H.
 First Lieutenant Andrew M. Benson, Oldtown, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant William Crosby, Bangor, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant William Crosby, Bangor, Co. B.
 Second Lieutenant Albert P. Titcomb, Lincoln, Co. C.
 Second Lieutenant Charles Lowell, Oldtown, Co. C.
 Second Lieutenant George H. Baker, Bangor, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel S. Mann, Bangor, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel S. Mann, Bangor, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant William Crosby, Bangor, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Henry C. Snow, Hampden, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Luther C. Fairfield, Bangor, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Warren T. Ring, Oldtown, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Henry W. Farrar, Bangor, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant George R. Coney, Oldtown, Co. K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Henry H. Warren, Bangor.
 First Sergeant Andrew M. Benson, Oldtown.
 Sergeant William H. Pitcher.
 Sergeant William Crosby, Bangor.

Sergeant Luther C. Fairfield, Bangor.
 Sergeant Frank B. Holden, Bangor.
 Sergeant Samuel S. Mann, Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles E. Robinson, Bangor.
 Sergeant Martin V. B. Hutchins, Brewer.
 Sergeant Ira F. Stinchfield, Lincoln.
 Sergeant John F. Tobin, Lincoln.
 Sergeant Charles Lowell, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Eli McLaughlin, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Warren T. Ring, Oldtown.
 Corporal George M. Baker, Bangor.
 Corporal Benjamin Cates, Bangor.
 Corporal Charles H. Pierce, Bangor.
 Corporal Franklin Whittier, Bangor.
 Corporal David Thompson, Bradley.
 Corporal Martin V. B. Hutchins, Brewer.
 Corporal Albion A. Messer, Enfield.
 Corporal George B. McKenney, Enfield.
 Corporal Josiah Smith, Garland.
 Corporal Albion Hardy, Hampden.
 Corporal Lewis B. Hardy, Hampden.
 Corporal William E. Larrabee, Hampden.
 Corporal Jesse Blake, Holden.
 Corporal Sanford Bruce, Lincoln.
 Corporal Wyman B. Roberts, Lincoln.
 Corporal Ira F. Stinchfield, Lincoln.
 Corporal Warren A. McPhetres, Lowell.
 Corporal Moses W. McKay, Oldtown.
 Corporal Francis Laing, Passadumkeag.
 Corporal Joseph Loring, Passadumkeag.
 Corporal Hadley Fairfield, Patten.
 Corporal Samuel L. Kimball, Patten.
 Corporal Harmon S. Allen, Winn.
 Wagoner Benjamin F. Brichnell, Bangor.
 Wagoner Isaiab Allen, Lincoln.
 Wagoner William Kennedy, Oldtown.
 Musician William A. Taylor, Burlington.
 Musician Rueul D. Wooster, Hermon.
 Musician Benjamin W. Mitchell, Oldtown.
 Musician I. T. Stewart, Oldtown.

PRIVATEs.

Peter Ames, Joshua A. Barker, John H. Brown, William P. Burgess, George R. Boyer, Henry Cowan, Henry A. Cole, William E. Chapman, John Conway, Sumner H. Condon, Richard Davis, William H. Evans, Pat Earley, Henry W. Farrar, Pat McGowan, Thomas Maloney, John S. McLure, Michael McLaughlin, James H. Hasey, John Isham, John Kinney, Timothy Linnell, William Chann, John S. Meluer, DeWitt C. Morrill, Edwin E. Small, George A. Stetson, Alfred Townsend, Edward Sargent, Ira Webber, Frank W. Whittier, Martin W. Tower, Bangor; Melville Marshall, Bradford; Edwin Jordan, Reuel N. Morris, Daniel D. Perkins, Colby Smith, Bradley; Samuel E. Coombs, Jesse Blake, Brewer; Albert F. Gates, Duncan McMullen, Sheldon R. Sibley, Burlington; Moses Palmer, John McGraw, Carroll; Elisha C. Debeck, Charles H. Eddy, Clifton; Nathan M. Cooley, Corinna; Hibbard C. Leeman, Ira Linnell, John Roncon, George L. Buswell, Joseph R. Bawn, Frank J. White, Dexter; George E. Bragg, Franklin Condon, Robert H. Morse, Dixmont; Silas R. Rowell, Walter Gilger, Moses Giles, William C. Mann, Henry C. Hold, Orlando I. Rowe, Eddington; Charles N. Farnham, Edinburg; Albert T. Curtiss, Warren Gray, A. J. McKenney, James Towle, Enfield; Alvah B. Doble, Etna; Franklin Young, Exeter; John M. Garry, Lake Grover, John T. Smith, Garland; Alfred Cressey, Moses Giles, Greenleaf B. Staples, Daniel M. Worcester, Charles Worcester, Glenburn; Daniel Floyd, Dennis Hartford, Llewellyn Pollard, Charles Snow, Hampden; Newell Pomeroy, Solomon Holt, jr., Fred G. Thompson, John Thompson, Hermon; Joseph M. Blake, Holden; Joseph W. Ridley, Rufus K. Stebens, Hudson; James A. Thomas, Lee; David M. Knowlton, John P. Trask, Levant; Stephen Balf, Roscoe Doble, John Flemming, Augustine Gates, Andrew J. Hatch, Thomas S. Libbey, John M. Lindsay, Orrin Lombard, Johnston Lyon, Joseph Lyon, Benjamin F. Potter, Luther I. Turner, Adrian E. Turner, Alvin E. True, Osmund Warren, Samuel B. Bridges, Benjamin F. Davis, Peltiah B. Davis, Andrew Dunifer, Michael H. Smith, Lincoln; Henry C. White, Lowell; Frank O'Brian, Mattawamkeag; William H. Coolbath, Mattamiscontis; Willis S. N. Lancaster, Maxfield; John Hanscom, James Shorey, Milford; Levi W. Chadwick, Elbridge G. Kelley, Edwin Smith, Newburg; Eben

Dinsmore, Henry Davis, Levi L. Davis, Newport; Stilson E. Sibley, Leonard Milan, No. 1 Plantation; Felix Betters, James Carney, George Cole, Thomas Dougherty, Charles H. Dougherty, Folsom Dutton, Edward Felix, Thomas Fish, Calvin Gillisson, Oliver Hall, William W. Harris, George Kinsell, Octavius Liscott, Annis Morrill, Joseph Moreau, Joseph Neddo, Shepard Parmer, Alonzo Patten, Edward Pelkey, George W. Rines, Madison C. Rowe, Vander Sawyer, Jacob Weymouth, Henry M. Curtis, George R. Coney, Abraham Grover, Wayland F. Jacobs, Calvin Leavitt, Sebatis Mohawk, J. W. Neddo, Benjamin Oakes, Thomas P. Smith, John I. Seaton, John Tashoe, Oldtown; Ephram K. Bartlett, Jesse Bartlett, Jedediah Hanscomb, George Lessor, Augustus O. Whitmore, Daniel W. Freeze, Eben Densmore, Joseph C. Kelley, John Lishon, Orono; James Doff, James Haynes, Luther Haynes, Royall Nash, Charles Grumm, Aaron Haynes, jr., Passadumkeag; Timothy Fowler, Andrew Kimball, Charles H. Noyes, Uriah F. Palmer, Thomas B. Powers, Russell Royall, Moses Palmer, jr., Robert Vance, Patten; Henry Wiley, Plymouth; Chandler Pike, William W. Plummer (band), William C. Stickney, Springfield; George W. Fogg, G. W. Hodgkins, Stetson; Jacob Holmes, Swanville; Nelson S. Fales, Thomaston; Charles Knowles, Edward Myrick, George E. Tilden, Troy; Henry O. Giles, Veazie; David B. Grassey, Edward Reynolds, Winn; James Pond, jr., Woodville.

EIGHTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, September 7, 1861, to serve three years, and left September 10th for Hempstead, Long Island, New York, and subsequently for Fortress Monroe, Virginia, where they formed a part of General Sherman's expedition to Port Royal, South Carolina, which sailed October 29th. On the 8th of November, they landed at Hilton Head, where for several months they were engaged in throwing up breastworks, building fortifications, etc. On the 1st of May, 1862, they moved to Tybee Island and took a prominent part in the attack and capture of Fort Pulaski, large detachments of the regiment having been detailed to man several batteries engaged in the bombardment of the fort. From Tybee Island they returned to Hilton Head, and from that time until the spring of 1863 were employed for the most part in doing guard duty at that place and at Beaufort, South Carolina. On the 19th of March, 1863, they were ordered to Jacksonville, Florida, which they occupied after a spirited engagement with the enemy. On the 25th they made a reconnoissance on the line of the railroad toward Baldwin, engaged the enemy, and lost 2 men killed and 1 severely wounded. On the 29th they were ordered back to Beaufort, to make preparations to participate in the contemplated attack on Charleston, and embarked on the 3d of April for Stone River, where they lay on board transports during the bombardment of Fort Sumter on the 7th, after which they returned to Beaufort, arriving on the 12th. Subsequently they were again ordered to Charleston and embarked to proceed thither, but went no farther than Hilton Head, where they remained until the 14th of November, then returned to Beaufort and there remained until the 2d of March, 1864. On that day, 16 officers and 330 enlisted men, who had re-enlisted for an additional term of three years, were granted a furlough for thirty-five days, and proceeded to Maine. The remainder of the regiment continued at Beaufort until April 13th, when they were transferred to the Department of Virginia, arriving at Gloucester Point on the 16th, and assigned to the Tenth Army Corps. On the 26th the veterans rejoined the regiment, and on the 4th of May they moved to Bermuda Hundred, where they took part in all the active operations of the Army of the James. On the 16th they participated in the engagement at Drury's Bluff, losing 3 men killed, 64 wounded, and 29 taken prisoners. On the 27th they proceeded to White House Landing, thence on the 31st to Cold Harbor, in the meantime having been permanently assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Eighteenth Army Corps. On the morning of June 3d, they participated in the assault on the enemy's lines at Cold Harbor, losing during the day 10 men killed, 53 wounded, and 16 taken prisoners. On the 12th they moved to White House Landing, and from thence to Petersburg where on the 15th, 16th, and 17th, they were engaged with the enemy. On the 18th, they made a successful attack and carried a portion of the enemy's line, losing 11 men killed and 39 wounded. From this time until the 25th of August they remained in the trenches in front of Petersburg, under continual fire and engaged in very exhausting duties. On that day they moved to the opposite side of the Appomattox, going into the works before Bermuda Hundred. On the night of the 28th of September, they crossed to the north side of the James River with the Eighteenth and Tenth corps, and were engaged in the assault successfully made the next morning on the enemy's works, near Chapin's Farm. On the 27th of October, they participated in the unsuccessful assault on the enemy's lines near the old battle-field of Fair Oaks, where they lost heavily. On the next day they returned to the trenches near Chapin's farm. On the 5th of December, upon the re-organization of the Tenth and Eighteenth Corps, they were assigned to the Fourth Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, and moved near Deep Bottom, taking position in the fort at Spring Hill. On the 10th of December, they lost 5 men killed and 6 wounded, in the reconnoissance made by the enemy on the right of the Union lines in the vicinity of Spring Hill. They remained near Spring Hill until the 27th of March, 1865. On that day the regiment proceeded towards Hatcher's Run, where they arrived the next day and remained doing picket duty until the 2d of April, when they participated in the assault and capture of Forts Gregg and Baldwin, and on the 3d proceeded towards Burksville, which place they reached on the 5th. On the 6th they bore an honorable part in the engagement at Rice's Station, and on the 9th in that at Appomattox Court House. After the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox Court House, they, with the rest of the troops of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, proceeded to Richmond, Virginia, where they remained encamped until August. At that time they were ordered to Manchester, and there remained until November, when they were ordered to Fortress Monroe, Virginia, at which place they remained until the 18th of January, 1866, when the regiment was mustered out of the United States service by Lieutenant M. Harper, Assistant Commissary of Musters, and proceeded to Augusta, where the men were paid and finally discharged.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Lieutenant Colonel Joseph F. Twitchell, Patten.
Major Joseph F. Twitchell, Patten.
Adjutant Spencer W. Young, Patten.
Quartermaster Stetson Sidelinger, Bangor.
Surgeon Paul M. Fisher, Corinna.
Assistant Surgeon William R. Benson, Bangor.
Chaplain Henry C. Henries, Lincoln.
Chaplain J. E. M. Wright, Camden.
Commissary Sergeant Stetson Sidelinger, Bangor.
Hospital Steward Alfred Walton, Alton.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Joseph F. Twitchell, Patten.
Captain America Walton, Patten.
Captain John Conant, Bangor.
Captain Henry Brawn, Oldtown.
Captain Hillman Smith, Bradley.
Captain Hiram N. Parker, Glenburn.
First Lieutenant Luther B. Rodgers, Patten.
First Lieutenant America Walton, Patten.
First Lieutenant Franklin E. Gray, Plymouth.
First Lieutenant George Capers, Exeter.
First Lieutenant Samuel Gould, jr., Dexter.
First Lieutenant Horatio B. Sawyer, Bradley.
First Lieutenant Henry Brawn, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant Hillman Smith, Bradley.
First Lieutenant John McCowan, Lagrange.
First Lieutenant John L. Taylor, Hampden.
First Lieutenant George A. Baldwin, Oldtown.
Second Lieutenant Luther B. Rodgers, Patten.
Second Lieutenant Lorenzo Warren, Patten.
Second Lieutenant America Walton, Patten.
Second Lieutenant Spencer W. Young, Patten.
Second Lieutenant George Capers, Exeter.
Second Lieutenant Samuel Gould, jr., Dexter.
Second Lieutenant Walton H. Hill, Exeter.
Second Lieutenant Hillman Smith, Bradley.
Second Lieutenant John McCowan, Lagrange.
Second Lieutenant John L. Taylor, Hampden.
Second Lieutenant Hiram N. Parker, Glenburn.
Second Lieutenant Horatio B. Sawyer, Bradley.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Howard Collins, Bradley.
Sergeant Thomas W. Berry, Bangor.
Sergeant Nathaniel Wentworth, Bangor.
Sergeant Lucius W. Elliott, Bradford.
Sergeant George A. Baldwin, Bradley.
Sergeant Horatio B. Sawyer, Bradley.
Sergeant Samuel Gould, jr., Dexter.
Sergeant George Capers, Exeter.
Sergeant W. H. Hill, Exeter.
Sergeant Hiram M. Parker, Glenburn.
Sergeant Stephen Danforth, 2d, Lagrange.
Sergeant Orlelus Stevens, Lagrange.
Sergeant Daniel W. Ingersoll, Lincoln.
Sergeant Ephraim P. White, Lowell.
Sergeant Fernando Jellison, Milford.
Sergeant Newell J. Givens, Newport.
Sergeant Charles E. Parker, Newport.
Sergeant John B. Philbrook, Newport.
Sergeant George A. Baldwin, Oldtown.
Sergeant Americus Walton, Patten.
Corporal Moses French, Bangor.
Corporal John Sample, Bangor.
Corporal Ernest Ellsworth, Bangor.
Corporal George Wheeler, Bangor.
Corporal Philip H. Wall, Bangor.
Corporal Edward M. Stover, Bradford.
Corporal George A. Baldwin, Bradley.
Corporal Timothy Crockett, Carmel.
Corporal Lewis F. Leighton, Corinna.
Corporal John C. Weeks, Corinna.
Corporal Charles H. Mann, Enfield.
Corporal George Capers, Exeter.
Corporal Walter H. Hill, Exeter.
Corporal Hiram N. Parker, Glenburn.

Corporal William H. Folsom, Greenbush.
 Corporal John L. Tyler, Hampden.
 Corporal Daniel R. Boobier, Lagrange.
 Corporal Benjamin P. Hinckley, Lagrange.
 Corporal Leonard Keliber, Lagrange.
 Corporal Jonathan Knowles, Lagrange.
 Corporal Almond L. Sanborn, Lagrange.
 Corporal Erastus Noble, Lincoln.
 Corporal John T. Shaw, Lincoln.
 Corporal James Sawyer, Oldtown.
 Corporal John C. Bachelder, Passadumkeag.
 Corporal Amza Grant, Patten.
 Corporal Abraham Walton, Patten.
 Corporal Walker G. Harriman, Patten.
 Musician Almond L. Sanborn, Lagrange.
 Musician Samuel C. Clark, Oldtown.
 Musician William Partridge, Oldtown.
 Wagoner Josiah Decker, jr., Lagrange.

PRIVATEES.

William H. Smith, John E. Merrill, A. G. Walton, William H. Norcross, Alton; Thomas D. Brown, Samuel P. Danforth, Malcom McDonald, Argyle; Thomas Burk, Patrick Carlton, William Caswell, Augustus Conant, James Curley, John A. Farnham, Jackson Hall, Joseph A. McClure, Abijah A. Roberts, J. Sanborn, Rodney C. Stetson, Alanson C. Thomas, John Thornton, Joseph Adams, Eugene S. Chamberlain, William Dugans, John Delien, Charles E. Dunning, George Kieth, William W. Reed, Charles Ellison, Albert N. Marsh, Alfred B. Merrick, John W. Melton, Ebenezer Smith, Nelson Wiltshire, Lewis Wentworth, William R. Fish, Leander H. Evans, Amos P. McKenney, Owen Monaghan, Jere Readson, John T. Webb, Leander Doyle, George N. Foster, Henry R. Nickerson, Bangor; Benjamin F. Brookins, William P. Emerson, George N. Huston, Albert F. Dearborn, Andrew G. Storer Bradford; Frank Mishon, Alvah A. Clewly, Solomon Cormiera, Edward F. Collins, George W. Collins, Thomas Violet, Bradley; John S. Clapham, George McLaughlin, Carmel; Joshua M. Page, Levi B. Speed, Jared Hyde, Thomas Tarin, Henry McCoy, Charleston; Daniel D. Shaw, John T. Shaw, Richard H. Shaw, Chester; William S. Given, Corinna; Stillman Guppy, Henry G. Prescott, Corinth; John H. Briggs, Dennis Thompson, Edwin C. Copeland, Dexter; Granville B. Bean, George L. Crocker, William L. Howes, Dixmont; Alfred Haskell, William Forbes, Enfield; James H. Emerson, Joseph Turner, Etna; Sylvanus C. Andrews, Edwin Blanchard, James Osgood, Allen P. Walker, Charles F. Atkins, Chandler Eastman, Exeter; James Penderton, Nathan Larabee, Glenburn; John H. Avery, Simeon Pratt, Hezekiah Richardson, George W. Riggs, Columbus D. Tasker, Cornelius Flynn, Greenbush; Israel L. Hogan, Peter W. Witham; Alonzo C. Hersey, John H. Small, Greenfield; Stetson Sidelinger, George W. Young, John L. Bean, Edward C. Betts, Hampden; Samuel Sidelinger, Warren Hall, Albert T. Webber, Otis Whitmore, Hermon; Ephriam S. Bailey, Holden; Leonard P. Mann, Horatio B. Sawyer, Hudson; Nathaniel Henderson, jr., Kenduskeag; Jeremiah Bean, Jeremiah Boobier, Charles Booden, William R. Bryant, Alvin L. Cary, Retire Freeze, Samuel Lamphire, Charles H. Littleheld, Samuel H. Murphy, William Sanborn, Luther W. Spering, Edward Spring, Lagrange; John Briannin, Charles H. Burke, Lee; Hiram B. Morrey, Levant; Ami Kimball, Adolphus Perry, Addison G. Osborne, Lincoln; Tobias Lord, Albert L. McIntire, Lowell; Charles Myriek, Mattawamkeag; Stephen Inman, David Willett, John H. Jackson, Milford; Charles O. Gerald, Milton Smith, Joshua S. Otis, Newburg; David L. Boyle, Tobias A. Fernald, Daniel Litchfield, Allen P. McLure, Rodolphus Mills, Benjamin F. Smith, Warren C. Tibbetts, William F. Wheeler, Newport; James Early, No. 2, Range 6; James H. Clark, William Commier, Moses Grant, David Knox, Isaac Moores, George Richardson, Alpheus Spaulding; John A. Spaulding, William Spaulding, Charles Willett, Moses C. French, Boardman Davis, Alfred C. Rigby, Albert S. Russ, Alfred R. Varney, Orrin L. Richardson, Orrin P. Richardson, Andrew Cakes, Oldtown; Sylvanus Bragdon, Benjamin King, Orono; Joshua E. Blackwell, Lewis Clement, jr., John Fitzpatrick, Peter Gemo, Joseph C. Hill, Daniel S. Legrow, Erastus Legrow, Samuel D. Legrow, James E. Parker, Francis Scribner, Martin B. Shaw, Robert Smart, Jethro H. Sweet, John Troop, Joseph E. Clark, Lyman P. Dolloff, Charles B. Heald, William Hackett, Jonathan A. Perry, Henry A. Rieker, Barzilla H. Rieker, William H. Scribner, Daniel W. Sawtelle, Patten; Awando H. Mitchell, Stacyville; Levi M. Scribner, Charles R. Johnson, Springfield; Orren Brand, Veazie.

NINTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, September 22, 1861, to serve three years; left September 24th, and arrived at Fortress Monroe, where they formed a portion of General Sherman's expedition for the capture of Port Royal, South Carolina. November 8th the regiment landed at Hilton Head. February 7th, 1862, went to Warsaw Island, and on the 21st joined the expedition which captured Fernandina, Florida. Remained at Fernandina until January 17th, 1863, when they returned to Hilton Head, South Carolina, where they did outpost duty until June 24th; then moved to St. Helena Island. On the 4th of July they went to Folly Island, and on the 10th landed on Morris Island, charged and carried the enemy's rifle-pits in front of their works. On the 11th they joined in the attack on Fort Wagner, and only fell back when left alone by the other regiments and ordered to retreat. They also formed a part of the assaulting column in the attacks of the 18th of July and on the 6th of September. Their casualties in the several assaults on Fort Wagner were over 300 men in killed, wounded, and missing. On the 30th of October they moved to Black Island, and remained there until February 10, 1864; in the meanwhile 416 of the original members re-enlisted for an additional term of three years. On that day they returned to Morris Island, when the re-enlisted men were granted a furlough of thirty days, and proceeded to Maine; the remainder of the regiment continuing there until the 18th of April, when they proceeded to Gloucester Point, Virginia, arriving on the 22d, and where the re-enlisted men rejoined the regiment on the 28th.

On the 4th of May they sailed up the James River, disembarking at Bermuda Landing on the 5th. On the 7th they engaged the enemy at Walthall Junction. On the 17th they engaged the enemy at Drury's Bluff. On the 20th they again engaged the enemy at Bermuda Hundred, losing 9 killed, 39 wounded, and 4 missing. On the 1st of June they participated in the assault on the enemy's works at Cold Harbor, losing in the engagement 10 killed, 49 wounded, and 12 missing. On the 23d of June they arrived in front of Petersburg, and on the 30th engaged the enemy, losing 10 killed and 39 wounded; also, on July 30th, losing 7 killed, 34 wounded, and 5 missing. On the 16th and 18th of August they engaged the enemy at Deep Bottom, losing in the engagement 8 killed, 38 wounded, and 10 missing. They returned to Petersburg on the 20th, and there remained on duty in the trenches until September 28th. In the meantime, on September 21st, the original members, numbering 158 men, who did not re-enlist, left the regiment for Maine, where they were mustered out and discharged the United States service, their term having expired.

On the 29th of September the regiment, numbering 195 enlisted men and 6 officers present, formed a part of the forces which made the assault on Fort Gilmore, and remained doing duty in the trenches at Chapin's Farm until the 26th of October. On the 27th they engaged the enemy at Derbytowntown Road; casualties 7 killed, 38 wounded, 3 missing. After further service at Fort Fisher, Wilmington, and other points in North Carolina, the regiment was mustered out at Raleigh, July 13, 1865, and returned to Augusta for payment and discharge.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Surgeon Alden D. Palmer, Orono.
Surgeon Delon H. Abbott, Orono.
Assistant Surgeon Delon H. Abbott, Orono.
Sergeant Major Dustin P. Dority, Bangor.
Sergeant Major David O. Hoyt, Passadumkeag.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George W. Brown, Co. C, Newport.
Captain Benjamin J. Hill, Co. D, Stetson.
Captain George W. Cummings, Co. I, Bangor.
Captain Scollay D. Baker, Co. I, Bangor.
Captain Billings Brastow, Co. I, Brewer.
Captain Samuel S. Mann, Co. K, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Elton W. Ware, Co. F, Orrington.
First Lieutenant Benjamin J. Hill, Co. H, Stetson.
First Lieutenant Scollay D. Baker, Co. I, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Billings Brastow, Co. I, Brewer.
First Lieutenant Dustin P. Dority, Co. J, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant Dustin P. Dority, Co. B, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant Billings Brastow, Co. I, Brewer.
Second Lieutenant Elton W. Ware, Co. I, Orrington.
Second Lieutenant Edwin T. Clifford, Co. I, Hermon.
Second Lieutenant George W. Brown, Co. K, Newport.
Second Lieutenant Benjamin J. Hill, Co. K, Stetson.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Thomas S. Shepard, Bangor.
First Sergeant Richard Webster, Bangor.
Sergeant Charles E. Smith, Bangor.
Sergeant Forest R. Higgins, Bangor.
Sergeant Dustin P. Dority, Bangor.
Sergeant Warren E. Jordan, Bradford.
Sergeant Levi J. Morrill, Brewer.
Sergeant George H. Mower, Corinna.
Sergeant Hiram T. Bickford, Dixmont.
Sergeant Edwin T. Clifford, Hermon.
Sergeant George W. Brown, Newport.
Sergeant John Daugherty, Passadumkeag.
Sergeant David O. Hoyt, Passadumkeag.
Sergeant Benjamin J. Hill, Stetson.
Sergeant Thomas Kent, Veazie.
Sergeant John W. Shaw, Veazie.
Corporal James W. Bowman, Bangor.
Corporal John D. Fitzpatrick, Bangor.
Corporal William S. Frazier, Bangor.
Corporal William H. Moody, Bangor.
Corporal Joseph D. Norcross, Bangor.
Corporal Elijah S. Pierce, Bangor.
Corporal Albert R. Lord, Bangor.
Corporal Warren E. Jordan, Bradford.
Corporal Edwin R. Wadleigh, Brewer.
Corporal Francis H. McLaughlin, Carmel.
Corporal Winslow J. Gordon, Dexter.
Corporal Harrison W. Mower, Dexter.
Corporal Ariel R. Prescott, Dexter.
Corporal Jackson W. Clark, Glenburn.
Corporal Clark J. Hammond, Hermon.
Corporal Oscar M. Whiting, Newport.
Corporal William W. Lunt, Orono.
Corporal Patrick Lynch, Orono.
Corporal Frank E. Pond, Orrington.
Corporal William Daugherty, Passadumkeag.
Corporal Gustavus H. Dinsmore, Stetson.
Corporal Benjamin J. Hill, Stetson.
Corporal Oliver H. McKenny, Stetson.
Musician Albert A. Adams, Hampden.
Wagoner Charles D. Staples, Bangor.
Wagoner DeWitt, C. Heald, Newport.
Wagoner John Cunningham, Stetson.

PRIVATEES

Moses H. Judkins, Daniel B. Shaw, Alton; Wesley C. Adams, Edward Bowman, John W. Barker, Eli Busha, Henry M. Bennett, Hiram

F. Bell, James Moran, Joseph Duke, George H. Fuller, William Q. French, Edmund Gerrill, Thomas Hogan, Paul Page, Mark P. Norton, Charles Smith, Silas H. Whitehouse, Ira Martin, Leander B. Mitchell, Stephen J. Thomas, George M. Avery Oscar F. Chase, Willard G. Cleaves, William V. Cummings, Hugh H. Cameron, John B. Fitzpatrick, Lagassy Tuffile, Cyrus McKenney, Daniel Murry, David Pelkie, Joseph Winslow, Peter Walsh, Thomas Belcher, Harvey H. Chamberlain, Michael Collins, Horace B. Davis, Henry W. Drinkwater, Edwin M. Davy, John E. Inman, Thomas W. Kelley, Hiram D. Odlin, Alfred L. Townsend, Owen Lynch, John Downing, George W. Furbush, Benjamin Hurd, John W. Keene, jr., C. Lander, Dennis Mahana, William Montgomery, William B. Salmon, Orrin Scribner, John F. Stevens, Bangor; Elias G. Blake, John T. Blake, Nathaniel Blake, Lemuel H. Mayo, John Rankins, Brewer; A. Crockett, George C. Fogg, David Perry, Llewellyn Smith, Josiah Ward, Carmel; David J. Morrison, Carroll; Edward Willard, Joseph Ellis, George W. Thomas, Benson K. Geaton, George A. Naf-ton, Alonzo F. Kimball, Charleston; George B. Fisher, Charles S. Stone, Henry F. Weymouth, John D. Young, Roscoe V. H. Knowles, George W. Knights, Irving M. Barker, Christopher C. Knowles, George H. Mower, Samuel Libby, Jonathan Libby, Leonard B. Dearborn, Charles Elder, Charles E. Thompson, Orrin Winchester, Stephen Bray, James W. Brown, Stephen S. Burrill, Daniel W. Osgood, Thos. McMan, Otis Brooks, William H. Moore, James Babb, William Bond, Henry F. Caswell, Fred W. Clements, James P. Ireland, Azro Mills, Corinna; Charles Curtis, Alexander McQuinn, Elisha B. Richards, Corinth; William Earner, Roscoe W. Mower, Asa S. Russell, John Smith, David S. Snow, Abisha S. Sturtevant, John Wilson, James S. Curtis, Thomas Linnae, Jacob P. Lane, Benjamin T. Palmer, John M. Dutton, Abial S. Gove, George G. Beard, Joseph Crowell, Thomas Farrar, George W. Holbrook, Seth I. Swanton, Dexter; Charles H. Clark, John M. Crocker, George Gould, Benjamin Peabody, Llewellyn D. Smith, Charles F. Smith, Ephraim E. York, Benjamin W. Clark, George E. Davis, John C. Jones, S. A. York, Dixmont; John H. Burton, George W. Calef, John W. Davis, George W. Richardson, Ed-dington; Reuel W. Philbrook, Phineas L. Saunders, James M. Stevens, John D. Carson, Horatio F. Barden, Boardman C. Friend, Ozro Stevens, Noah W. Edminston, Etna; William H. Canning, David Brown, Bembridge B. Brown, Exeter; William W. Allen, Garland; Henry H. Pomeroy, Charles G. Staples, George R. Staples, Daniel Tibbetts, jr., Isaac Wooster, Glenburn; Timothy H. Rider, George H. Young, David S. Libbey, Josiah P. Littlefield, Greenbush; Thomas P. Hinkley, Hampden; Howard Grant, Albert R. Lord, Hermon; Henry C. Armington, John F. Burton, Alonzo B. Merrill, Holden; Charles H. Davis, Edwin Hayes, Alphonso Haskell, Edward Haskell, James Brickett, Israel Bemis, Edward Lothrop, Horatio G. Kelley, George F. Waugh, Preserved B. Turner, Danville L. Wyman, Howland; Thomas Parks, Leonard A. Cobb, Lee; Ira F. Eveleth, Orrin Nevins, Isaac Verrill, John Turner, Charles T. Turner, Levant; Willard Crocker, Adoniram H. Stinson, Lincoln; Marcellus V. Reed, Amos Hodgdon, Merritt Southard, Bryden Spencer, William O. C. Mulligan, Milford; Lemuel Peabody, George O. Roberts, Newburg; Nahum Barnett, Marshall L. Colcord, John N. Gwin, Newport; Charles H. Kimball, Elijah Winslow, James A. Dougherty, Fred A. Michael, William Cum-mings, William Danforth, John L. Spaulding, John Lewis, Benjamin F. Neddo, George Patrick, Oldtown; Michael Collins, William Wilson, Elisha C. Martin, Thomas H. Bryant, Hannibal H. Perkins, Orono; Emery O. Giles, William S. Pond, Gilbert Ware, Orrington; Wesley Castigan, Albert Nash, Passadumkeag; Simeon Billings, James Davis, Joseph B. Getchell, Charles A. Gilchrist, Titus Tonns, James M. W. Shaw, Benjamin R. Tilton, James W. Hodges, Nathan Hanscomb, James Gray, 2nd, John M. Dutton, George A. Tozier, Lonis Sandeau, Horace H. Gray, Augustus E. Rice, Plymouth; Peter N. Philbrook, Sidney H. Sinclair, Moses L. Ellis, Springfield; Daniel Berry, Allen T. Dinsmore, Newell J. Wiggins, Stetson; Moses Goodwin, John E. Kent, Veazie; Hiram Twist, Woodville.

TENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY

organized at Cape Elizabeth, October 4, 1861, eight companies to serve two years from May 3d of that year, and two companies to serve three years from October 4th. Its service was mainly under Banks in Northern Virginia, and under General Pope and other commanders of the Army of the Potomac. After the two years' men were mustered out, the remainder formed a Major M. M. Folsom.

battalion of three companies for duty as Headquarters Guard, Twelfth Army Corps.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal Nathaniel F. French, Bradford.

Corporal Charles H. Carson, Bangor.

Wagoner Charles B. Canney, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Levi T. Davis, Carmel; William Peabody, Dixmont; Thomas Brick, jr., Joshua R. Strong, Enfield; Nathan Emery, Hampden; Hercules S. Fernald, William Sibley, Lowell; Levi D. Messer, D. B. McKinney, Benjamin Spencer, Lincoln.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, November 12, 1861, to serve three years, and left on the following day for Washington, District of Columbia, where it arrived on the 16th, and remained encamped until March 28, 1862. On that day, with their division (Casey's), they proceeded to Alexandria, thence to Newport News, Virginia, where they remained until April 6th. On the 17th they proceeded to Yorktown, and on the 29th had a sharp engagement with the enemy. On the 5th of May they bore a distinguished part in the engagement which took place at Williamsburg. They afterwards proceeded towards the Chickahominy, which they crossed at Bottom Bridge on the 23d, and took a prominent part in the battle of Seven Pines on the 31st. After the battle of Seven Pines, they occupied the rifle-pits of the rear defences until June 4th, when they moved to the "Burnt Chimneys," and from thence to Bottom Bridge. On the 30th they participated in the battle of White Oak Swamp, after which they proceeded towards Harrison's Landing, where they remained until August 16th, when they left for Yorktown, at which place they remained until the 26th of December. On that day the regiment, with Naglee's brigade, embarked for North Carolina, and landed at Morehead City on the first day of January, 1863. On the 20th of January they again embarked on transports and started for Port Royal, where they landed on the 10th of February. On the 4th of April they started for Charleston, and were present at the unsuccessful attack on that city by the iron-clads, after which they returned to Beaufort, South Carolina, and there remained until June 4th, when they proceeded to Fernandina, Florida. On the 6th of October they were ordered to Morris Island, South Carolina, where they arrived on the 7th, and went immediately to the front. On the 11th they were assigned to the First Brigade as artillerymen, and for a long period were engaged day and night in shelling Sumter and the rebel works on Sullivan and James Islands.

In April, 1864, they were assigned to the Third Brigade, First Division, Tenth Corps, and joined General Butler's command at Gloucester Point, Virginia. On the 5th of May they landed at Bermuda Hundred and participated in the engagement at Port Walthall Junction on the 7th. They afterwards participated in the expedition towards Petersburg, and in the battle fought at Chester Station on the 10th. They also participated in the assault on the enemy's line around Richmond on the 12th, 13th and 14th; also on the 16th, losing in the several engagements 24 men killed and wounded. On the 17th they were again engaged with the enemy, and lost 26 men killed and wounded. On June 2d they assisted in repulsing the enemy's attack on the fortifications at Bermuda Hundred, losing 41 men killed and wounded; and on the 16th participated in the movement resulting in the capture of the Howlett House battery and entire line of rebel works in front of Bermuda Hundred. They also assisted in repulsing the enemy's attack on the 17th and 18th. Subsequently they left the Bermuda Hundred lines and proceeded to Deep Bottom, where they remained until August, having meanwhile frequent skirmishes with the enemy, and participated in the capture of the rebel earthworks on the New Market road, where they lost 32 men killed and wounded. On the 14th of August they crossed to the north bank of the James river at Deep Bottom, and joined the Tenth Corps in its seven days campaign, participating in three battles. They charged once at Deep Bottom, twice at Deep Run, and repulsed three charges of the enemy on the 16th, and one on the 18th; their loss in killed and wounded in these several engagements was 10 commissioned officers and 144 enlisted men. On the 26th they moved to Petersburg, where they remained and took their share in the siege operations at that place until the 28th of September, when they left for Deep Bottom, and on the following day assisted in the capture of the heights known as "Spring Hill." Subsequently they participated in the movement towards Richmond, and on the 7th of October, in the engagement on the New Market road, in which they bore a prominent part. On the 13th they were heavily engaged in a battle on the Darbytown road, where they suffered a loss of 13 killed and wounded. They participated in the movement of October 27th, towards Richmond, and on the 29th in the recapture of the works across the Johnson plantation on the Darbytown road.

On the 2d of November, one hundred of the regiment left the field for Maine, their three years' term of service having expired; and on the next day the remainder of the regiment left for New York, having been one of the number selected to accompany General Butler, to assist in keeping the peace of the city at the Presidential election, after which they returned to the front.

The total number of casualties in the regiment for the year 1864 were 363, viz: 74 killed, 274 wounded, 6 missing, and 79 taken prisoners. During the year they received 549 recruits; also a full company of volunteers, the Eighth of unassigned infantry, organized at Augusta, Maine, December 17, 1864, to serve one year, the members of which were assigned and transferred to Companies I and K. These accessions filling up the ranks of the regiment to the required number, it preserved its organization and remained in service.

During the first three months of 1865 the regiment was stationed near the New Market road, about ten miles from Richmond, and formed a part of the Third Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps. On the 27th of March, with their division, they moved across the James and Appomattox Rivers and to the vicinity of Hatcher's Run, where on the 31st they engaged the enemy, and remained exposed to their fire, skirmishing almost continually, until the 2d of April, losing meanwhile 3 enlisted men killed, 2 officers and several enlisted men wounded, and 1 officer and 15 enlisted men taken prisoners. On the 3d of April they participated in the assault and capture of Forts Gregg and Baldwin, losing during the day 25 enlisted men killed and wounded, and on the 2d moved with the army in pursuit of Lee's forces. On the 9th they engaged the enemy at Clover Hill, losing 6 enlisted men killed, 2 officers and 29 enlisted men wounded. From the 25th of April to the 24th of November, they were encamped near Richmond, Virginia, and on duty in that city, the greater part of the time. On the 26th of November they moved to Fredericksburg, and remained, doing patrol and other duties, until the middle of January, when they went to City Point for discharge. They were mustered out February 2d, and left the next day for Augusta.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Harris M. Plaisted, Bangor.
 Colonel Jonathan A. Hill, Stetson.
 Lieutenant Colonel Harris M. Plaisted, Bangor.
 Lieutenant Colonel Jonathan A. Hill, Stetson.
 Lieutenant Colonel Charles P. Baldwin, Bangor.
 Major Jonathan A. Hill, Stetson.
 Major Charles P. Baldwin, Bangor.
 Quartermaster Sergeant William H. II. Andrews, Newburg.
 Commissary Sergeant Samuel W. Lane, Bangor.
 Commissary Sergeant Joseph G. Ricker, Lee.
 Hospital Steward George C. Thaxter, Lee.
 Drum Major and Quartermaster Sergeant John Williams, Hampden.
 Principal Musician Abner Brooks, Corinna.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Charles P. Baldwin, Bangor, Co. B.
 Captain Albert Mudgett, Newburg, Co. D.
 Captain Samuel B. Straw, Bangor, Co. E.
 Captain Francis W. Wiswell, Holden, Co. E.
 Captain George W. Small, Bangor, Co. E.
 Captain Francis W. Sabine, Bangor, Co. G.
 Captain Jonathan A. Hill, Stetson, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Robert Brady, Enfield, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant John D. Stanwood, Springfield, Co. D.
 First Lieutenant Francis W. Wiswell, Holden, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Francis W. Sabine, Bangor, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Robert H. Scott, Bangor, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Joseph S. Bowler, Lee, Co. E.
 First Lieutenant Albert G. Mudgett, Newburg, Co. G.
 First Lieutenant Peter Bunker, Brewer, Co. G.
 First Lieutenant Benjamin B. Foster, Orono, Co. I.
 First Lieutenant Robert Brady, Enfield, Co. I.
 First Lieutenant Melville M. Folsom, Newburg, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Charles H. Foster, Stetson, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Joseph S. Bowler, Lee, Co. K.
 First Lieutenant Robert H. Scott, Bangor, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant Jerome B. Ireland, Newport, Co. B.
 Second Lieutenant John Williams, Hampden, Co. C.
 Second Lieutenant Gibson S. Budge, Springfield, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Franklin M. Johnson, Springheld, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel W. Lane, Bangor, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Judson L. Young, Springfield, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Francis W. Sabine, Bangor Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant Lawson G. Ireland, Newport, Co. E.
 Second Lieutenant William P. Plaisted, Stetson, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant George W. Small, Bangor, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant George Payne, Plymouth, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Charles A. Fuller, Corinth, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Jerome B. Ireland, Newport, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant George H. Stratton, Winn, Co. I.
 Second Lieutenant Albert G. Mudgett, Newburg, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant William P. Mudgett, Newburg, Co. K.

Second Lieutenant Charles H. Foster, Stetson, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant George W. Small, Bangor, Co. K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Nathaniel R. Robbins, Bangor.
 First Sergeant George G. Blaisdell, Bangor.
 First Sergeant George H. Stratton, Winn.
 Sergeant Charles F. Wheeler, Alton.
 Sergeant John X. Weymouth, Alton.
 Sergeant Henry H. Davis, Bangor.
 Sergeant Joseph Currier, Bangor.
 Sergeant Sumner E. Cushing, Bangor.
 Sergeant Adelbert Chick, Bangor.
 Sergeant Henry McCoy, Bangor.
 Sergeant Alphonso Patten, Bangor.
 Sergeant George W. Small, Bangor.
 Sergeant Roger A. Erskine, Bradford.
 Sergeant Henry B. Stanhope, Bradford.
 Sergeant Peter Bunker, Brewer.
 Sergeant Daniel T. Mayo, Carmel.
 Sergeant George W. Clink, Clifton.
 Sergeant Charles Knowles, Corinna.
 Sergeant Stephen Mudgett, Dixmont.
 Sergeant Robert Brady, Enfield.
 Sergeant Francis Ephraim, Enfield.
 Sergeant Judson W. Barden, Etna.
 Sergeant Henry Knowles, Kenduskeag.
 Sergeant John Finigan, Lincoln.
 Sergeant George W. Rowell, Medway.
 Sergeant Cyrus E. Bussey, Newburg.
 Sergeant William W. Foster, Orono.
 Sergeant Charles Watson, Orono.
 Sergeant John F. Buzzell, Plymouth.
 Sergeant George W. Payne, Plymouth.
 Sergeant Amos R. Pushaw, Plymouth.
 Sergeant Francis M. Johnson, Springfield.
 Sergeant Judson L. Young, Springfield.
 Sergeant William P. Plaisted, Stetson.
 Sergeant Stinchfield A. Leland, Winn.
 Sergeant David B. Snow, Winn.
 Sergeant Charles W. Trott, Winn.
 Sergeant Arthur V. Vandine, Winn.
 Corporal Charles Babcock, Alton.
 Corporal Charles F. Wheeler, Alton.
 Corporal Charles G. L. Aiken, Bangor.
 Corporal Calvin S. Chapin, Bangor.
 Corporal Elias H. Frost, Bangor.
 Corporal Thomas T. Tabor, Bangor.
 Corporal Levi C. Smith, Bangor.
 Corporal August D. Locke, Bangor.
 Corporal James W. Perkins, Bangor.
 Corporal Adelbert Chick, Bangor.
 Corporal James E. Dow, Bangor.
 Corporal Fred H. Gorham, Bangor.
 Corporal George W. Small, Bangor.
 Corporal John E. Smith, Bangor.
 Corporal Daniel West, Bangor.
 Corporal Josiah Furbush, Bradford.
 Corporal Ira Weymouth, Bradford.
 Corporal George W. Collins, Bradley.
 Corporal Peter Bunker, Brewer.
 Corporal Daniel D. Noyes, Brewer.
 Corporal Stephen R. Bearce, Carroll.
 Corporal Patrick Dougherty, Carroll.
 Corporal William H. Girrell, Charleston.
 Corporal Charles Badger, Corinth.
 Corporal Cyrus Perkins, Corinna.
 Corporal Samuel Libby, Corinna.
 Corporal John B. Alden, Dixmont.
 Corporal William H. Chamberlain, Enfield.
 Corporal Francis Ephraim, Enfield.
 Corporal Leonard M. Witham, Enfield.
 Corporal Joseph W. Borden, Etna.
 Corporal Simeon Batchelder, Hampden.
 Corporal John Higgins, Hampden.
 Corporal Andrew R. Patten, Hampden.
 Corporal Nathan Averill, Lee.
 Corporal Joseph S. Ames, Lee.

Corporal Jotham S. Garnett, Medway.
 Corporal Cyrus E. Bussey, Newburg.
 Corporal John I. Hill, Newburg.
 Corporal Andrew J. Mudgett, Newburg.
 Corporal Charles Watson, Orono.
 Corporal James J. Baker, Orrington.
 Corporal Lysander H. Pushaw, Plymouth.
 Corporal George H. Downs, Plymouth.
 Corporal Gasper Hersey, Plymouth.
 Corporal John Dyer, Springfield.
 Corporal Benjamin Gould, Springfield.
 Corporal Hughey G. Rideout, Springfield.
 Corporal Frank E. Young, Springfield.
 Corporal Charles H. Foster, Stetson.
 Corporal Silas H. Kenney, Stetson.
 Corporal David B. Snow, Winn.
 Corporal Charles W. Trout, Winn.
 Musician Abner Brooks, Corinna.
 Musician John E. McKenny, Kenduskeag.
 Wagoner Joseph D. Ricker, Dexter.
 Wagoner Samuel Babb, Hudson.
 Wagoner John Ricker, Lee.

PRIVATE.

Samuel Babb, Levi S. Bradford, James Bowley, Horace Burse, Moses Burse, Thomas Deray, Andrew C. Means, Albion Penny, John D. Walter, George H. Walton, Leonard H. Young, Alton; Joseph Emery 2d, Lewis Green, George Merrill, Charles E. Elwell, Edward Laffin, Charles Sweeney, Josiah Felker, William Buswell, Charles P. Bazin, Edwin Elliott, Josiah H. Gordon, Edward W. Mills, Charles Kimbold, Frank L. Kenney, Charles Trask, Charles W. Lampeon, Charles M. Bunker, James M. Perkins, Sumner M. Bolton, John T. Stevens, Samuel M. York, Alton; Charles A. Glidden, Charles P. Hubbard, Francis M. Johnson, Charles H. Jones, Norris Keefe, James Parker, Henry J. Ruck, Charles M. Prebble, Benjamin R. Smith, George Warrick, John W. Worcester, Bangor; Isaac T. Bailey, Frederic Brookings, Charles Bowker, Charles H. Clark, Lorenzo D. Clark, Jesse H. Chadbourne, James Chadbourne, David E. Cunningham, Philip A. Danforth, Andrew B. Erskine, James Elliott, William M. Erskine, Joel D. Farnham, George D. French, Joseph A. Ferguson, John Greene, Ormandel V. Hebbard, James Hobbs, George M. Keiser, Daniel W. King, Lacassard Lassell, Prentice Preble, Henry W. Rider, Thomas J. Roberts, Asa V. Southard, Jonathan C. Spaulding, Hosea Staples, George H. Strout, A. K. P. Twombly, Watson Ward, Bradford; Edwin F. Collins, Bradley; William H. Bean, William Keddle, Thomas A. Folley, Edward H. Hilton, Peter Bunker, Brewer; Jeremiah Folsom, Burlington; David Simpson, Carmel; Adelbert J. Aldrich, Silas M. Gates, William Shennan, Carroll; Samuel Copp, Zelord E. Carpenter, William C. Davis, Stephen C. Elwell, James Hamden, Charles F. Jack, Charles Johnson, Charles F. Rich, Alfred P. Shute, Christopher C. Speed, Levi Stevens, Albert E. Turner, Leland F. Bridgman, Charleston; Edwin Savage, Ezekiel Savage, Chester; William H. Fogg, George W. Fogg, Clifton; Samuel Dean, Volney Sprague, Charles F. Morrill, John Knowles, Jesse R. Stone, Joseph R. Stone, Corinna; James Bateholder, Charles M. Dexter, Abijah N. Clay, Walter Crowell, Moses W. Fish, Thomas Sullivan, Moses F. Hurd, Charles A. H. Hurd, William H. H. Hurd, George O. Johnson, Augustus Keiser, Joseph H. Knox, John Larry, jr., Linbyna Packard, Henry D. Prescott, Zachary T. Reynolds, Leeman R. Smith, Thomas S. Smith, Charles E. Wyman, Clement C. Libby, Mory Mulliken, William Nickerson, jr., John P. Nickerson, Corinth; Lorenzo D. Bickford, John P. Bickford, George L. Crocker, Oliver T. Ferguson, Lewis L. Gray, Joseph H. Morse, David Peabody, Erwin L. Prentiss, Dixmont; Charles H. Springer, Dexter; Wells Maddocks, Eddington; Willard Whitney, E. Corinth; Albion A. Bands, Robert Brady, jr., Silas Buswell, jr., William A. Buzzell, Elijah B. Curtis, Phineas Curtis, Zana Curtis, Levi A. Coombs, William H. Darling, William B. Davis, Daniel Gray, Thomas Knowlton, Charles W. H. Jewett, Michael McDevino, Simeon F. McKenny, Nathan P. Messer, Nathan P. Witham, James M. Whittier, Enfield; Thomas Barker, Bowman Eldridge, Exeter; George W. Buzzell, Etna; Henry A. Mann, Thomas Nye, Glenburn; Eugene Braydon, Garland; Charles S. B. Hodgdon, William H. Houston, Samuel R. Baker, Greenbush; John Williams, Hampden; Abimeleck H. Annis, Freeman W. Annis, William Clark, Lemuel Overlock, Hermon; Michael Doyle, Holden; Charles H. Bean, Andrew H. Whitney, Robert Douglas, Charles H. Ham, Sanford Mareh, Franklin C. Rowe, Horace B. Sherbourne, Llewellyn R.

Webber, Ira E. Parsons, Henry S. Rolfe, Daniel S. Percival, Hudson; Aaron W. Houston, George H. Smith, Warren S. Ladd, Kenduskeag; Enoch Flanders, Lewis S. Henderson, George W. Jones, Simeon H. Kinney, Warren W. Bishop, Lagrange; Joseph S. Bowler, Bartemas Dunham, Philip Cobb, William Green, Henry F. Randall, Brainard A. Richie, Seth H. Riggs, Seth T. Salter, Charles H. Merrill, Ira C. Hermon, Bartemas Bartlett, William Bartlett, Charles H. Burke, Alonso Carver, William Doble, Charles N. Foss, Joseph Hardin, Mathew P. House, Thomas M. Jordan, John B. Reed, George Robinson, Wentworth Staples, Joseph S. Rowles, Lee; John W. Elliott, Joseph Cooke, Moses F. Hurd, Thomas Beede, Benjamin F. Wing, Levant; Asa A. Athens, William Athens, John C. Whitney, John M. Daley, Eleazer Hutchison, Lincoln; Andrew McKay, Charles N. Fogg, John G. McPhetres, Andoniram Sibley, Sumner Sibley, Lowell; Ellsworth B. Garnett, Medway; Charles F. Bickford, Timothy W. Ford, Monroe; Charles B. Abbott, Osear F. Abbott, George W. Bussey, Franklin F. Condon, Willard Davis J. B. Kelley, George S. Kelley, Allen D. Holmes, Luther E. Maddocks, Charles E. Morton, Franklin A. Quinn, Robert Rieker, John Whitcomb, John Whitcomb, jr., Newburg; Jerome B. Ireland, Laurison G. Ireland, Charles Miles, Joseph E. Nelson, John Wilson, Levi Pooler, Simeon Oakes, Lorenzo D. Stewart, Horace P. Robinson, Charles O. Varney, Newport; Charles B. Sartelle, No. 2. Range 3; John Ballard, Samuel A. Clark, Samuel S. Hinkley, Michael Neddo, Peter Neddo, Adams Weaver, Frank Spaulding, Joseph Shepherd, John G. Quimby, John B. Weeks, Edward Parkes, Joseph Lagassy, George A. Cron, John Spearin, Ezra F. Barnes, Albion P. Brickmore, George Cote, Oldtown; Nathaniel S. Davis, William Waite, Pattagumpus; Timothy W. Bean, Passadumkeag; George Inman, jr., Thomas Kelley, John Longley, Archibald P. Martin, John Mullen, George Sitel, Lorenzo R. McFarland, Orono; Andrew Osborn, Samuel Buzzell, William H. Conant, William C. Drake, Alva G. Glover, Wellington Leavitt, William F. Muray, Stephen Thurston, John W. Thurston, William R. Downs, Charles M. Prescott, Jonathan F. Knights, Plymouth; Hiram A. Cooper, Parker Downs, Stephen Frost, John N. Stanley, Prentiss; James B. Annis, James W. Bryant, Philo Bearse, John E. Bridges, John M. Rutherford; Clark Cilley, Melville Comforth, George L. Cooper, John Day, Charles Dolley, Charles Downs, Prince E. Dunifer, Daniel S. Ellis, George H. Gerry, Ira Gould, Benjamin Guild, Leonard Leighton, Charles A. Lowell, David C. Philbrook, Ezra J. Philbrook, Jeremiah Philbrook, Zenas H. Rider, George M. Shepherd, Harvey C. Shepherd, Hiram A. Woodman, William P. Weymouth, George H. Woodward, Ezra C. Woodman, Springfield; Charles A. Cochran, Henry C. Dresser, Stephen S. Hubbard, Josiah M. Marble, Charles E. Hammons, Josiah Glastalve, Henry B. Cooper, Charles H. Abbott, Cyrus Woods, James V. Tabor, Horace S. Kinney, Augustus D. Locke, Thomas McKenny, William W. Morton, Marquis D. L. Osgood, Brook D. Stewart, Drummer Sylvester, Charles Watson, Warren L. Whittier, Stetson; Wales E. Davis, Samuel Wentworth, Veazie; David Clendenain, Edward Davis, Loring Gaicy, John Knox, Charles Royal, George W. Young, Winn; Andrew J. Gardiner, Woodville; Thomas Nye, Orrington; Stephen A. Hind, John A. Jordan, Stetson.

TWELFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Portland, November 16, 1861, to serve three years, and left for Lowell, Massachusetts, on the 24th, where after being encamped several weeks, it embarked on board the steamship Constitution, January 2, 1862, constituting a portion of General Butler's New England Division, designed for the capture of New Orleans. On the 19th of January they disembarked at Fortress Monroe, and on the 4th of February proceeded on their voyage, arriving at Ship Island on the 12th. They remained at Ship Island until the 4th of May, then proceeded to New Orleans. On the 22d of June they participated in the expedition to Manchac Pass, where they engaged the enemy, and suffered a loss of 14 killed and several wounded and taken prisoners. Subsequently they returned to New Orleans, where they remained until the 21st of October. On that day the regiment moved to Camp Parapet, and on the 19th proceeded towards Baton Rouge, where they arrived on the 20th of December. During this march they were engaged in frequent skirmishes with the enemy, but met with few casualties.

In the spring of 1863, during the early stages of the campaign, towards the reduction of Port Hudson, they performed an important part, assisting in covering the successful naval movement under Farragut, which resulted in his passing the enemy's stronghold with his fleet and communicating with the fleet above. Returning to Baton Rouge, they formed a portion of the expedition under General Grover, up Grand Lake, after which they participated in the Port Hudson campaign, losing 68 killed and wounded. On the 7th of July, immediately following the surrender of Port Hudson, they embarked for Donaldsonville, engaged the enemy at that place, and there remained about a month, when they returned to New Orleans. From thence they proceeded to Ship Island to protect that post from a threatening attack from Mobile, and there remained during the months of August and September; then returned to New Orleans, remaining until January 3, 1864, when they formed a part of an expedition to Madisonville, which they occupied until the 11th of March. On the 12th, two-thirds of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, who, April 16th, were furloughed and came to Maine, the non-re-enlisting men remaining at New Orleans. The furloughed men arrived at Portland on the 27th of April, and re-assembled there on the 27th of May, when they left for New York, where they arrived on the 3d of June and sailed for New Orleans on the 8th. Immediately upon their arrival at New Orleans on the 16th, they were ordered to Carrollton, and from thence on the 23d to Morganzia, where they arrived on the following day.

On the 3d of July they proceeded to Algiers, and on the 13th sailed for Fortress Monroe, where they arrived on the 20th. From thence they proceeded to City Point, where they were ordered to report to General Butler at Bermuda Hundred. Disembarking on the 21st, they proceeded on the same night to General Butler's position between the Appomattox and the James rivers, and there remained until the 28th, when they participated in the movement of the Second Corps and General Sheridan's command across the James River.

On the 31st of July they were ordered to Washington, thence towards the Shenandoah Valley, and joined General Sheridan's forces at Berryville on the 17th of August. On the following morning they moved towards Harper's Ferry as far as Charlestown, and took position, remaining until the 21st, when they retreated to Hall Town. On the 3d of September they proceeded up the valley and participated in the battle of Winchester on the 19th, losing in the engagement 2 commissioned officers killed and 6 wounded, 12 enlisted men killed, 78 wounded, and 15 missing; then they joined in pursuit of the enemy to Harrisonburg, where they arrived on the 25th, and returned to Cedar Creek on the 10th of October. They bore an honorable part in the action at that place on the 19th, in which their casualties were as follows: 1 commissioned officer and 6 enlisted men killed, 2 commissioned officers and 20 enlisted men wounded,

2 commissioned officers and 51 enlisted men missing. On the 20th of October they moved to Strasburg, and shortly afterwards returned to their old position at Cedar Creek, where they remained until the 9th of November; on that day, with their corps, they moved back to the northern bank of the Opequan.

The regiment was mustered out of service at Portland, Maine, December 7, 1864, the recruits and re-enlisted men, however, remaining in the field and being organized into a battalion of four companies. This battalion was afterwards ordered to Savannah, Georgia, where it was subsequently raised to a full regiment by the assignment of the Tenth, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Eighteenth, and Sixteenth Companies of unassigned infantry, organized at Augusta, Maine, in February and March, 1865, to serve one, two, and three years, and which were assigned as Companies E, F, G, H, I, and K, respectively. These companies were mustered out at the expiration of their term of service in February and March, 1866, the two and three years men, together with the battalion of veterans, remaining on duty at Savannah, Georgia, until the 18th of April, 1866, when the whole battalion was mustered out of the United States service at that place, by Lieutenant J. Hartwell Butler, Commissary of Musters, Department of Georgia, under the provisions of War Department General Order No. 94, Series of 1865, and in pursuance of Special Order No. 71, dated Headquarters Military Division of the Tennessee, April 10, 1866. They then took transports to New York, where the men were paid and finally discharged.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Adjutant Lagrange Severance, Bangor.
 Quartermaster Charles H. Buswell, Bangor.
 Surgeon James H. Thompson, Orono.
 Surgeon Eldridge A. Thompson, Charleston
 Assistant Surgeon Eldridge A. Thompson, Charleston.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Abbott Coan, Orono, Co. A.
 Captain Joseph W. Thompson, Bangor, Co. B.
 Captain John F. Appleton, Bangor, Co. H.
 Captain Henry L. Wood, Dexter, Co. H.
 Captain Samuel F. Thompson, Bangor, Co. I.
 First Lieutenant Alfred D. Morse, Orono, Co. A.
 First Lieutenant Joseph W. Thompson, Bangor, Co. B.
 First Lieutenant George Webster, Bangor, Co. C.
 First Lieutenant David B. Chesley, Lincoln, Co. D.
 First Lieutenant Abbott Coan, Orono, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant Alfred R. Straw, Garland, Co. F.
 First Lieutenant David B. Chesley, Lincoln, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant Edward H. B. Wilson, Orono, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant Freeman H. Chase, Lincoln, Co. F.
 Second Lieutenant George Webster, Bangor, Co. H.
 Second Lieutenant Abram B. Coombs, Bangor, Co. I.
 Second Lieutenant Charles H. Bushwell, Bangor, Co. I.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Joseph W. Thompson, Bangor.
 First Sergeant Charles J. Fletcher, Dexter.
 First Sergeant David B. Chesley, Lincoln.
 Sergeant Charles H. Buswell, Bangor.
 Sergeant William A. Garnsey, Bangor.
 Sergeant Lagrange Severance, Bangor.
 Sergeant Edwin S. Thompson, Bangor.
 Sergeant Lewis H. Walton, Bangor.
 Sergeant Daniel Wentworth, Bangor.
 Sergeant Albion P. Sanders, Brewer.
 Sergeant Abbott Coan, Exeter.
 Sergeant Levi W. Edgerly, Exeter.

Sergeant Tristram C. Goding, Hampden.
 Sergeant John Haskell, Hermon.
 Sergeant Charles H. Freeman, Lincoln.
 Sergeant Eugene B. Stinson, Lincoln.
 Sergeant Alfred D. Morse, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Jedediah Greenlaw, Orono.
 Sergeant Franklin Lord, Plymouth.
 Corporal Hiram G. Claridge, Bangor.
 Corporal Jonathan N. Drew, Bangor.
 Corporal Reuben Gowen, Bangor.
 Corporal Ephraim Guptill, Bangor.
 Corporal John Haskell, Bangor.
 Corporal William S. Haskell, Bangor.
 Corporal Fred A. Small, Bangor.
 Corporal Daniel Wentworth, Bangor.
 Corporal Joseph Gray, Bradford.
 Corporal Eugene Kingman, Dexter.
 Corporal Benjamin F. Walker, Exeter.
 Corporal John Haskell, Hermon.
 Corporal William B. McKenney, Kenduskeag.
 Corporal William C. Hanson, Lincoln.
 Corporal Charles H. Stratton, Lincoln.
 Corporal George G. Thayer, Lincoln.
 Corporal Eugene B. Stinson, Lincoln.
 Corporal George W. March, Newburg.
 Corporal Augustus H. Morrill, Oldtown.
 Corporal David S. Porter, Oldtown.
 Corporal John A. Decker, Orono.
 Corporal Marcena C. Gray, Orono.
 Corporal John B. Rowan, Orono.
 Corporal Benjamin F. Snow, Orrington.
 Corporal Myron Webster, Orrington.
 Corporal Michael Condon, Orrington.
 Musician Prentice P. Allen, Corinna.
 Musician John H. Mettor, Dexter.
 Musician Joseph H. Johnson, Orono.
 Wagoner Lewis B. Hopkins.

PRIVATEES.

Jacob Bagley, Jeremy Baker, James Harris Benson, John Billy, John M. Blanchard, Alvin Burbank, Edward C. Charles, Michael Condon, Augustus Curtis, Jonathan W. Drew, Martin Drinkwater, George W. Fraiser, Augustus Gilbert, Walter Grogg, Thomas Hawkins, Asa Kimball, James Kirkpatrick, Noah McKusick, William D. McLaughlin, Ivory Murray, Phineas Nickerson, Bryden S. Osborn, Thomas Petters, Alanson Powers, Benjamin F. Prescott, Samuel T. Pierce, Elmon P. Saunders, Stephen S. Sealand, Harrison Spence, William H. Thompson, Henry G. Thompson, Charles H. Thoms, Almon P. Tibbetts, John W. Torsey, William H. Torsey, Bangor; Joseph L. Forbes, Joseph A. Horton, Bradford; Abram B. Downes, Walter W. Gagg, Frederic A. H. Sanborne, Edwin J. Washburne, Henry C. Waterhouse, Brewer; Gabriel A. Foster, Eliphalet Miller, Edward S. Page, Aruna E. Peasley, Franklin Tibbetts, Burlington; Albert Dougherty, John McGuire, Carmel; James Roach, Jonathan S. Hunt, Charleston; Charles H. Stratton, Ira F. Stratton, George G. Thayer, Chester; John R. Burrill, Alvah R. Graffam, Samuel C. Graffam, Josiah P. Nickerson, Charles Nutter, Elijah G. Tibbetts, Bailey J. P. Washington, Corinna; Simon A. Abbott, Hiram M. Gould, Charles P. Green, Sullivan White, Dexter; Oscar Butler, Jerry R. Champeon, William Champeon, Luther M. Hill, Charles F. Milton, Alonzo Russell, Benjamin F. Russell, Calvin R. Seavey, Cyrus L. Seavey, Harrison Willey, Jerry Young, Exeter; Isaiah Adams, Stephen Berry, jr., Samuel Fox, Robert T. French, Wesley H. Handley, Alfred R. Straw, Leonard H. Titcomb, Garland; James W. Smith, Charles Tibbetts, Glenburn; Charles A. Williams, Greenbush; John Littlefield, John C. McPhetres, Greenfield; Jacob H. Palmer, Jesse N. Rines, Joshua C. Rines, Hampden; George E. West, Holden; Russell S. Tucker, Kenduskeag; Enoch L. Tuck, Lee; Herman C. Anthers, Hiram Dill, Aaron Hanson, Edwin Hanson, Joseph Hatch, Lincoln; George E. Caldwell, Seth Eastman, John Fox, Lowell; Robert J. Camp, Newburg; Emery Allen, Jeremiah Kingston, David S. Porter, Philip A. Vickery, Oldtown; James M. Andrew, Peter Brocclin, Charles A. Buckley, William Buckley, Peter Butler, Joseph Clankay, Alexander Clair, Joseph Cowen, Horatio Duplissa, Michael Estes, Stephen Estes, Phineas W. Fairbrother, Peter Hogan, Martin Kennedy, Zephaniah Neal, James Nelergram, Edwin M. Paris, John C. Perkins, Maxim Rancho, Josiah Spencer, Mark Weeks, Martin J. Vinal, Peter Broochee, George Butler, Thomas M. Dean, Joseph Fortier, Horace Lalroe, Reuben S.

Garland, Spencer Sewell, Orono; William Johnson, Alvin B. Towle, Plymouth; Moses B. Langley, Stetson; Josiah Garnett, Winn; Charles D. Garnett, Woodville.

THIRTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, December 13, 1861, to serve for three years, but left for Boston, Massachusetts, February 18, 1862, where it embarked on board transports on the 20th and 21st for Fortress Monroe, Virginia. From thence on the 23d they sailed for Ship Island, Mississippi, where they arrived on the 2d of March, and there remained until July 5th, on which day detachments from the regiment were sent to garrison the several forts constituting the defences of New Orleans, and were engaged in such duties until September 1, 1863, when the entire regiment was ordered to New Orleans to perform provost duty. On the 24th of October, they embarked at Carrollton, Louisiana, for Texas, and landed at the island of Brazos de Santiago, near the mouth of the Rio Grande, on the morning of November 2d. They participated in the capture of Point Isabel on the 6th, and on the 15th formed a part of the forces which captured Mustang Island. On the 27th of November they participated in the capture of Fort Esperanza, commanding Pass Caballo, the entrance to Matagorda Bay, where they remained encamped until February 18, 1864, when they were ordered back to Louisiana to rejoin the Nineteenth Army Corps at Franklin, and take part in the Red River campaign then about commencing.

On the 15th of March they proceeded toward Natchitoches, where they joined General Banks' forces on the 2d of April, and on the 6th moved toward Shreveport. Reaching Pleasant Hill on the 8th, they participated in the engagement at that place on the same day, and on the next day in the charge resulting in the complete repulse of the enemy. They returned to Alexandria, Louisiana, on the 25th of April, and to Morganza Bend, Louisiana, on the 22d of May, after a fatiguing march, during which lines of battle had to be repeatedly formed to repel attacks.

They remained at Morganza until the 1st of July, when they were ordered north, and arrived at Fortress Monroe on the 12th, thence proceeded to Washington, District of Columbia, where they arrived the next day, and encamped at Tennallytown, subsequently marching to Harpers Ferry, Virginia. On the 3d of August the re-enlisted men of the regiment proceeded to Maine on furlough, and there remained until the 27th of September, when they departed for the front, reaching Harpers Ferry on the 1st of October. Communication with the front being then impossible, they were ordered to Martinsburg, Virginia, (the base of supplies for Sheridan's whole army), where they remained on picket and patrol duty until the expiration of their original term of service, when the original members who had not re-enlisted returned to Maine, arriving at Augusta December 30, 1864, and were mustered out of the United States service at that place on the 6th of January, 1865, by Major J. W. T. Gardiner, United States Army.

Two hundred and eighty-two re-enlisted men and eighty-two recruits whose term of service had not expired, were, before the departure of the regiment from the field, organized into a battalion, which was soon afterwards transferred to and consolidated with the Thirtieth regiment of infantry, Maine volunteers.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Frederick A. Stevens, Co. E, Bangor.
 Captain William H. H. Walker, Co. A, Newburg.
 First Lieutenant William H. H. Walker, Co. A, Newburg.
 First Lieutenant Freeman W. Whiting, Co. C, Newport.
 Second Lieutenant William E. Cushing, Co. I, Winterport.
 Second Lieutenant Ora Pearson, Co. I, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Ora Pearson, Bangor.
 First Sergeant Horace W. Sullivan, Hampden.
 Sergeant Daniel H. Capus, Bangor.
 Sergeant Levi L. Hawes, Bangor.
 Sergeant Arthur C. Williams, Hampden.
 Sergeant Taylor T. Clark, Hermon.
 Sergeant Charles A. Woodbury, Hermon.
 Sergeant Charles D. Billings, Newburg.
 Sergeant Benjamin B. Rose, Newburg.
 Sergeant Henry W. Brown, Newburg.
 Sergeant Hiram White, Oldtown.
 Corporal Daniel H. Capus, Bangor.
 Corporal John Gorst, Bangor.
 Corporal William B. Ray, Bangor.
 Corporal William Haseltine, jr., Carmel.
 Corporal Arthur C. Williams, Hampden.
 Corporal George Brackett, Hermon.
 Corporal Albert Bryant, Hermon.
 Corporal Taylor T. Clark, Hermon.
 Corporal Henry S. Kelly, Hermon.
 Corporal George H. Smith, Hermon.
 Corporal Charles A. Woodbury, Hermon.
 Corporal Abijah G. Allen, Newburg.
 Corporal John Lowell, Plymouth.
 Corporal Andrew Ryder, jr., Plymouth.
 Corporal Joel Gates, Oldtown.
 Corporal Isaac W. McDonald, Oldtown.
 Corporal George L. Prescott, Oldtown.

PRIVATEs.

Joseph Whitcomb, Alton; Addison C. Benning, Phineas Clark, Samuel Foloman, Thomas Clark, Samuel Gorst, Albion Grant, Alfred Joy, A. B. Merrick, John L. O'Mara, William Plummer, Levi Stevens, Edward C. Tuttle, Eugene M. Williams, James H. Winslow, Bangor; Lorenzo D. Libby, Carmel; Daniel L. Bishop, Charleston; Erastus Bickford, Newell W. Smith, James A. Reed, Frederic A. Getchell, Nahum A. Nason, Dixmont; Asa C. Brickett, Warren Doble, Etua; Alfred Buswell, Charles W. Herrick, Daniel M. Miner, Glenburn; Rufus Johnston, Greenfield; Taylor Clark, Alvin W. Page, Zimri Piper, jr., William H. H. Walker, Hampden; Addison Benning, George Clark, Frank J. Hammond, Franklin Hammond, jr., John E. Holt, Edward Kelley, Stillman Kelley, George W. Light, Henry W. Light, Francis F. Overlock, Andrew J. Smith, Hermon; Charles A. Elliot, Kenduskeag; Albert Annis, Levi P. Bowden, Andrew J. Pomeroy, Gideon Pomeroy, Levant; George T. Eldridge, Newburg; Charles Bolleston, William F. W. Canfield, David Carr, George F. Clark, Stephen Coffin, Cornelius Dugan, John Dugan, Nathaniel Haskell, Nelson R. Jefferson, George H. Jones, John Kelley, Albert F. Knight, Charles A. Libby, James Smith, Thomas Spencer, Hugh Toomy, Dimmie B. White, Miles White, Charles Wheeler, Joel B. Wheeler, Oldtown; William Wilson, Patten.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, from December 3d to December 17, 1861, to serve three years. They left for Boston February 5, 1862, and on the 8th sailed for Ship Island, Mississippi, where they arrived March 8th. They sailed for New Orleans May 19th, and there remained until July 5th. On the 7th they embarked for Baton Rouge, where, on the 5th of August, they took a prominent part in the engagement with the enemy under General Breckenridge, losing in the engagement, in killed, wounded, and missing, 126 men. On the 20th, they left Baton Rouge and proceeded to Camp Parapet, thence on the 26th to Carrollton. On the 7th of September they participated in the attack and capture of a camp of guerrillas at or near St. Charles Court House. On the 30th they were assigned to General Dudley's brigade of Sherman's division, and on the 26th of October returned to Carrollton, where they remained until December 13th, when they were ordered to Bonnet Carre, thirty miles further up the river, and where they remained until May 7, 1863, employed in preventing smuggling through the rebel lines, and upon expeditions into the interior for the purpose of reconnoissance and other objects. On the 7th of May they proceeded towards Civiouis Ferry, and on the 10th and 11th were attacked by the enemy at that place, and repulsed them on both days. On the 20th they proceeded to Baton Rouge, thence to Port Hudson, arriving at the latter place on the 22d. They participated in the assaults on the enemy's fortifications at that place on the 27th of May and on the 14th of June. From the 22d of June until the surrender of the place on the 8th of July, they remained in the trenches exposed to a heavy fire from the enemy's batteries. After the surrender of Port Hudson, they were stationed a short distance from that place on the road to Clinton, doing picket duty, until the 22d of August, when they proceeded to Baton Rouge; thence on the 3d of September with the expedition to Sabine Pass, and afterwards to Algiers. After remaining a short time in Algiers, they proceeded to Brashear City, thence to Opelousas, which they reached on the 21st of October. On the 1st of November they proceeded towards New Iberia; reached Vermillion Bayou after a march of two days, remained there until the 16th, and then marched to New Iberia, where they remained encamped until the 7th of January, 1864.

In the meanwhile, all but forty of the available men of the regiment having re-enlisted for an additional term of three years service, on the 10th of February they left New Orleans for Maine, having been granted a furlough for thirty days, and arrived on the 21st at Augusta, where they re-assembled at the expiration of their furlough. They left for Portland on the 9th of April, and sailed on the following day for New Orleans, where they arrived on the 19th, and encamped at the "Parapet" until May 5th; then proceeded to Baton Rouge, and on the 3d of July down the river to Algiers, preparatory to a then unknown sea voyage. On the 13th they sailed for Bermuda Hundred, Virginia; arrived there on the 22d, and were immediately assigned to General Butler's command. On the 31st they proceeded to Washington; and, on the 14th, marched for the Shenandoah Valley by way of the Chain Bridge and Leesburg Turnpike, joining General Sheridan's forces at Berryville, Virginia, on the 18th. They participated in the battle of Winchester on the 19th of September, losing 60 men in killed, wounded, and missing; and were present at the assault and capture of Fisher's Hill, after which they joined in the pursuit of the enemy to Harrisonburg. Subsequently they returned to Cedar Creek, and participated in the engagement at that place on the 19th of October, losing 80 men, killed, wounded, and taken prisoners.

Shortly after the battle of Cedar Creek, they moved to a position near Keamestown, where heavy works were erected, in which they remained until the 23d of December, when the original members who had not re-enlisted and whose term of service had expired were ordered to Maine for the purpose of being mustered out, the re-enlisted men and recruits whose term of service had not expired being organized into a battalion of four companies and remaining in the field. The regiment arrived at Augusta, Maine, December 30, 1864, and was mustered out of the United States service by Major J. W. T. Gardiner, United States Army, on the 13th of January, 1865.

The battalion, composed of the re-enlisted men, forming four companies, lettered A, B, C, and D, remained encamped at Stevenson's Station, Virginia, until the 6th of January, 1865, when with the rest of the Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, they proceeded to Baltimore, Maryland, and on the 11th embarked for Savannah, Georgia, arriving on the 20th, and occupying that city until May 7th.

On the 30th of March the battalion was increased by two new companies, the Thirteenth and Fourteenth of Unassigned Infantry; and on the 10th of April by four more, viz: the Seventeenth, Twentieth, Twenty-second, and Twenty-third of Unassigned Infantry, all of which were organized at Augusta, Maine, in March and April, 1865, to serve one year, and which were assigned as companies E, F, G, H, I, and K, respectively, thereby re-organizing the battalion into a full regiment.

On the 6th of May the regiment moved towards Augusta, Georgia, arriving on the 14th, and remaining there until the 31st, when they were ordered back to Savannah, which place they reached on the 7th of June. On the 9th they proceeded to Darien, Georgia, and there remained, engaged in guard and patrol duty, until the 28th of August, 1865, when the entire regiment was mustered out of the United States service by Captain Henry L. Wood, Assistant Commissary of Musters, District of Savannah, under War Department Circular No. 30, Series of 1865, and in pursuance of instructions from Headquarters, Department of Georgia. On the 1st of September they embarked for Maine, arriving at Augusta on the 17th, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 28th.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Thomas W. Porter, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas W. Porter, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel John K. Laing, Passadumkeag.
Major Thomas W. Porter, Bangor.
Major John K. Laing, Passadumkeag.
Adjutant Adolphus J. Chapman, Newburg.
Quartermaster Warren Crowell, Orono.
Chaplain Alvan J. Bates, Lincoln.
Sergeant-Major William G. Lee, Bangor.
Quartermaster-Sergeant Warren T. Crowell, Orono.

Commissary-Sergeant William Jackman, Patten.
Commissary Sergeant Henry C. Snow, Newburg.
Principal Musician John S. Smith, Bangor.
Principal Musician Emory Hall, Bangor.
Principal Musician Carlisle P. Sawtelle, Newburg.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John J. Quimby, Orono, Co. B.
Captain Warren Crowell, Orono, Co. C.
Captain Nathaniel Sawyer, Dixmont, Co. D.
Captain William D. Chase, Oldtown, Co. D.
Captain George W. Worster, Glenburn, Co. E.
Captain John O. W. Paine, Bangor, Co. E.
Captain Horace Blackman, Bradley, Co. F.
Captain John K. Laing, Passadumkeag, Co. F.
Captain James B. Hill, Patten, Co. I.
Captain Ira B. Gardiner, Patten, Co. I.
Captain Albert L. Spencer, Bangor, Co. I.
First Lieutenant Joseph D. Wood, Bangor, Co. A.
First Lieutenant Malcom W. Long, Bangor, Co. B.
First Lieutenant William D. Chase, Oldtown, Co. D.
First Lieutenant John O. W. Paine, Bangor, Co. D.
First Lieutenant John J. Quimby, Orono, Co. D.
First Lieutenant George W. Worster, Glenburn, Co. E.
First Lieutenant Simon H. Boyd, Levant, Co. E.
First Lieutenant Adolphus J. Chapman, Newburg, Co. E.
First Lieutenant Thomas W. Porter, Lowell, Co. F.
First Lieutenant John K. Laing, Passadumkeag, Co. F.
First Lieutenant Ira B. Gardiner, Patten, Co. I.
First Lieutenant William Jackman, Patten, Co. I.
First Lieutenant Americus D. Harlow, Bangor, Co. I.
First Lieutenant Warren Crowell, Orono, Co. K.
Second Lieutenant Joseph W. Grant, Lowell, Co. A.
Second Lieutenant John O. W. Paine, Bangor, Co. D.
Second Lieutenant Henry W. Robinson, Bangor, Co. D.
Second Lieutenant John J. Quimby, Orono, Co. D.
Second Lieutenant Edson Holmes, Bangor, Co. F.
Second Lieutenant William Jackman, Patten, Co. H.
Second Lieutenant Charles Smith, Oldtown, Co. I.
Second Lieutenant Ira B. Gardiner, Patten, Co. I.
Second Lieutenant Charles E. Blackwell, Patten, Co. I.
Second Lieutenant Wilson Crosby, Bangor, Co. I.
Second Lieutenant Warren Crowell, Orono, Co. K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Joseph D. Wood, Bangor.
First Sergeant Francis H. Blackman, Bradley.
First Sergeant Henry C. Snow, Dixmont.
Sergeant Richard Ashton, Bangor.
Sergeant Charles W. Cleaves, Bangor.
Sergeant Charles L. Doe, Bangor.
Sergeant Allen B. Farrar, Bangor.
Sergeant Henry W. Robinson, Bangor.
Sergeant Joseph W. Wing, Bangor.
Sergeant George A. Pritchard, Bangor.
Sergeant Daniel O. Billings, Bangor.
Sergeant Charles A. Clewley, Bradley.
Sergeant James Garrity, Brewer.
Sergeant David P. Edminister, Dixmont.
Sergeant Benjamin F. Simpson, Dixmont.
Sergeant James B. Craig, Dixmont.
Sergeant George W. Worster, Glenburn.
Sergeant David S. Worster, Glenburn.
Sergeant Charles G. Niles, Glenburn.
Sergeant Albert Blackman, Greenbush.
Sergeant James Rule, Greenbush.
Sergeant Andrew F. White, Greenfield.
Sergeant Simon H. Boyd, Levant.
Sergeant John P. Hillsgrove, Millford.
Sergeant Warren Crowell, Orono.
Sergeant John J. Quimby, Orono.
Sergeant John K. Laing, Passadumkeag.
Sergeant Ira B. Gardiner, Patten.
Sergeant William Jackman, Patten.
Sergeant Daniel Scribner, Patten.
Sergeant Calvin Brickford, Plymouth.
Sergeant William F. Jenkins, Woodville.
Corporal Edward Bradford, Bangor.

Corporal Seth Perkins, Bangor.
 Corporal Daniel McPhee, Bangor.
 Corporal George W. Chamberlain, Bradford.
 Corporal Charles A. Clewley, Bradley.
 Corporal Daniel W. Hardy, Bradley.
 Corporal William H. Sawyer, Bradley.
 Corporal Weston Page, Burlington.
 Corporal George W. Taylor, Burlington.
 Corporal George Bean, Carmel.
 Corporal David M. Dill, Dixmont.
 Corporal David P. Edminister, Dixmont.
 Corporal Stephen E. Harris, Dixmont.
 Corporal James P. Harris, Dixmont.
 Corporal William M. Cobb, Eddington.
 Corporal Franklin W. Betham, Enfield.
 Corporal William E. Merrifield, Enfield.
 Corporal John J. Owens, Enfield.
 Corporal David S. Worster, Glenburn.
 Corporal Oscar E. Blackwell, Greenbush.
 Corporal John Butler, Greenbush.
 Corporal William A. Doyle, Greenbush.
 Corporal Sylvester Quinn, Lagrange.
 Corporal John O. Allen, Lowell.
 Corporal Joseph W. Grant, Lowell.
 Corporal Charles S. Buswell, Maxfield.
 Corporal Albert S. Smith, Newburg.
 Corporal Daniel S. Jackson, Newburg.
 Corporal Sullivan S. Perkins, No. 1 Township.
 Corporal James H. Cooper, Oldtown.
 Corporal Charles R. Horn, Oldtown.
 Corporal John Hayes, Patten.
 Corporal Joseph Preble, Patten.
 Corporal William F. Jenkins, Woodville.
 Musician Emory Hall, Bangor.
 Musician Carlyle B. Sawtelle, Newburg.
 Musician Dudley Miles, Oldtown.
 Wagoner John B. Lowell, Bangor.
 Wagoner Ozias P. Jackson, Oldtown.
 Wagoner M. H. Stetson, Oldtown.

PRIVATES.

Isaac C. Brown, Alton; James M. Aiken, Josiah Hinds, Lewis Morrison, John Murray, Zenis Goodell, Samuel Hall, William S. Laing, Charles M. Donald, Augustus J. Nickerson, Thomas Dana, William Dana, Malcolm W. Long, John Eldridge, jr., Sewall B. Lombard, James McGinnis, Malcolm W. Long, James Murray, Charles H. Stockwell, George A. Doe, Emery Hall, Roscoe L. Greene, Amos M. Spencer, Patrick Dougherty, Dudley Miles, Lemuel K. Arister, Albert L. Chick, Jesse A. Fairbanks, Patrick McCabe, William N. Gillis, William L. Seavey, Horace F. Wood, John S. Smith, William H. Pritchard, James G. Percival, Bangor; William Bowley, Peter Misson, J. Sewell Pomeroy, Horace Sawyer, Stephen Call, Calvin Carter, Hiram E. Lord, Bradley; Isaac Brown, Ephraim Cunningham, Tristram H. Heard, jr., Algernon S. Miller, Harrison Moore, John Page, Thomas Warren, Burlington; William A. Carpenter, Frederick Tilton, Charleston; Warren N. Dill, Chester; Foster H. Staples, Clifton; Llewellyn Copeland, Luther Stubbs, Corinna; William J. Guffy, Corinth; John W. Burnham, Moses Cooks, Alexander Edminister, Lemuel P. Edminister, Daniel Edminister, jr., Joseph N. Edminister, Noah Edminister, Noah W. Edminister, James F. Emery, Foster C. Chase, Eli Cook, Fred A. Cushman, Benjamin H. Monk, Gershom C. Simpson, Charles F. Tasker, Thomas B. Hamilton, Charles W. Work, Otis C. Farnham, Clark L. Lakemont, Newell Larrabee, Joseph Littlefield, David H. Morrison, Joseph Peabody, Daniel R. Sawyer, William M. Simpson, Benjamin F. Stevens, Albert S. York, Dixmont; Brainbridge Davis, Frank Sweet, Henry C. Sweet, Russell S. Towle, Eddington; Edward Betham, Joseph Burns, George W. Barnes, Levi Merrifield, Enfield; Benjamin F. Davis, Jonathan Dyer, Augustus Eldridge, Etra; George W. Harriman, Charles F. Staples, Glenburn; Charles W. Campbell, Arrona W. Douglass, Benjamin P. Folsom, Thomas N. Hill, Hiram M. Lowell, Eleazer Martin, Franklin Playze, John E. Playze, Harriman Pratt, jr., William H. Pratt, Leonard Richardson, Charles W. Spencer, Greenbush; George McIntire, Cyrus Maxwell, Hampden; George F. Sanborn, John T. Bradbury, Hermon; William Wallace, Holden; Reuben H. Brawn, John H. Emerson, Lewis F. Mason, Bethuel Mason, Howland; Isaac Cunningham, Hudson; Reuben L. Gould, Lewis Smith, Kenduskeag; Riley Weeks, Lagrange; Charles H. Bailey, Michael Gullivan, William P. Hatch, Joseph Nute, Abihah R. Wiggin, Lincoln;

Edward Booden, Daniel D. Castigan, Isaac W. Clark, jr., Asa Fogg, James E. Grant, Arthur N. Given, Charles W. Henderson, Abraham T. Kimball, William Kimball, Hiram Knowlton, Abraham Miles, Elbridge Miles, Josiah Miles, John Wharton, Lowell; George W. Brown, Cyrus Emery, Leonard G. Freeman, Jesse B. Lancaster, Rodney Q. Lancaster, Robert R. Moulton, Benjamin Thomas, Maxfield; John Dixon, William W. Johnston, Dennis Newman, Oscar W. Reed, James Sweetman, Milford; Virgil C. Newcomb, Alonzo Newcomb, Pearl B. Day, Newburg; Elbridge Applebee, Fred W. Johanett, John F. Dixon, Henry Howard, Newport; Finley Cameron, Alden B. Smith, James Stacy, Robert E. Stacy, William W. Woodbury, Stacyville; George Forrest, Stetson; John C. Averill, Reuben Bryant, Joseph F. Cobb, James H. Cooper, Henry F. Dicker, William E. Dutton, Charles R. Horn, Francis M. Spencer, Alexander Willey, Stillwater; William R. Averill, Abraham Baker, Ivory Barker, Jeremiah Carson, William C. Gray, Amariah C. Hopkins, George W. Jackson, James Moran, Samuel W. Langley, William Quimby, George F. Hopkins, Nelson Stafford, Charles W. Willey, Oldtown; John Estes, Orono; Edward T. Eldridge, Orrington; George W. Morrill, Henry Lancaster, Passadumkeag; Charles E. Blackwell, Carleton Clapp, Augustine Craig, William H. Craig, James W. Fairfield, Nathan W. Jameson, Wyman B. Morgrage, Daniel Wescott, Patten; Samuel H. Huston, John F. Prescott, Irving P. Richford, Jeremiah Towle, Stephen Towle, David Sawyer, Plymouth; Silas Hathorn, Charles H. Rollins, Veazie; Charles L. Smart, Whitney Ridge.

FIFTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

The regiment was organized at Augusta from the 6th to the 31st of December, 1861, to serve three years. They left for Portland, February 27, 1862, where, after a delay of several days, they embarked on board the ship Great Republic, which conveyed them to Ship Island, Mississippi.

From the 19th of May to the 8th of September, they were encamped at Carrollton, Louisiana, and on the 11th landed at Pensacola, Florida, where they remained until the 21st of June, 1863, when they left for New Orleans, arriving the next day, and immediately proceeded on a reconnoissance to Thibodeaux, during which they captured a large number of the enemy. They returned to New Orleans on the 25th, and on the 23d of October joined General Banks's expedition to Texas, landing on the island of Brazos Santiago on the 2d of November. On the 15th they proceeded towards Mustang Island, where they landed on the 16th, and on the following day formed in line of battle to storm the enemy's works. So completely surprised were the rebels at the appearance of the force before their works, that they immediately surrendered. Crossing Aransas Pass to St. Joseph Island, on the morning of the 22d, and from thence to Matagorda Island, they held the advance in the expedition against Fort Esperanza, in Matagorda Bay, and rendered conspicuous service in the capture of that stronghold. While at Matagorda Peninsula, where they remained from January 17, 1864, to February 28th, three-fourths of the original members of the regiment re-enlisted for an additional term of three years. On the 28th of February, they left for Algiers, Louisiana, arriving on March 3d; from thence on the 6th proceeded to Franklin, Louisiana, where they arrived on the 8th, and were assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps.

On the 15th of March, in common with General Banks's forces, they took up the line of march, and on the 8th of April participated in the battle of Pleasant Hill. Early on the morning of the 10th they commenced falling back to the Mississippi River, participating in the battles of Cane River Crossing (April 23d) and Mansura Plains (May 16th), in both of which battles they were subjected to a heavy artillery fire, meeting, however, with no casualties, and arrived at Morganza on the 20th of May.

During the month of June they were ordered to New Orleans; took transports July 5th for Fortress Monroe, Virginia, where, after arrival, six companies were ordered to Bermuda Hundred, the remaining companies participating in the campaign up the valley, in pursuit of Early's raiders. The command was re-united at Monocacy Junction, Maryland, August 4th.

The regiment having almost unanimously re-enlisted as veterans on the 25th of January, 1864, without receiving its veteran furlough at that time, received a furlough of thirty-five days, August 10th, proceeded to Augusta, Maine, and returned to the field September 27th.

Early in October the regiment left Harpers Ferry, Virginia, and proceeded to Martinsburg, where they remained until the 7th of January, 1865. The original members of the regiment, who had not re-enlisted and whose term of service had expired, were mustered out of the United States service, January 18, 1865, by Captain James F. Fitts, Commissary of Musters, Nineteenth Army Corps, but the large number of re-enlisted men and recruits whose term of service had not expired, together with a number of volunteers, drafted men, and substitutes, forwarded from Camp Berry, Portland, Maine, were sufficient to reorganize the regiment.

On the 19th of April they were ordered to Washington, District of Columbia, and encamped at Tenallytown until the 31st of May, when they embarked for Savannah, Georgia, arriving on the 4th of June. On the 13th of June they again embarked on board transports and proceeded to Georgetown, South Carolina, where the regiment was assigned to the Third separate brigade, Department of South Carolina. They remained in that department engaged in guard and patrol duty until the 5th of July, 1866, when they were mustered out of the United States service, at Charleston, South Carolina, by Major Leslie Smith, Commissary of Musters, Department of the Carolinas, in accordance with telegraphic instructions from the War Department, dated May 18th, 1866, after which they proceeded to New York, where the men were paid and finally discharged.

NON-COMMISSIONED STAFF.

Quartermaster Sergeant Henry A. Whitney, Orono.
Commissary Sergeant Fred W. Elder, Dexter.
Hospital Steward Charles P. Storer, Dexter.
Drum Major John Gould, Bangor.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Joseph A. Clark, Garland, Co. C.
Captain John B. Wilson, Exeter, Co. H.
Captain John B. Nickels, Corinth, Co. H.
Captain Alonzo Coan, Exeter, Co. H.
Captain Michael Boyce, Bangor, Co. I.
Captain William H. Boyce, Bangor, Co. I.
Captain Michael Boyce, Bangor, Co. K.
First Lieutenant John B. Nickels, Corinth, Co. H.
First Lieutenant Thomas H. Wentworth, Corinth, Co. H.
First Lieutenant William H. Carr, Garland, Co. H.

First Lieutenant William H. Boyce, Bangor, Co. I.
First Lieutenant Alonzo Coan, Exeter, Co. K.
Second Lieutenant Harrison G. Prescott, Exeter, Co. H.
Second Lieutenant Thomas H. Wentworth, Corinth, Co. H.
Second Lieutenant Alonzo Coan, Exeter, Co. H.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Otis Gilmore, Bangor.
First Sergeant Alonzo Coan, Exeter.
First Sergeant George Smith, Garland.
First Sergeant Benjamin True, Garland.
Sergeant James F. Doyle, Bangor.
Sergeant Martin Sweeney, Bangor.
Sergeant Robert Wilson, Bangor.
Sergeant Thomas H. Wentworth, Corinth.
Sergeant Rinaldo Butters, Exeter.
Sergeant Horace Mayo, Exeter.
Sergeant John L. Russell, Exeter.
Sergeant Joseph A. Clark, Garland.
Sergeant William Mansfield, Garland.
Sergeant Joseph W. Skillin, Garland.
Sergeant Giles Straw, Garland.
Sergeant Luther V. Gilmore, Holden.
Sergeant Otis Gilmore, Holden.
Sergeant Charles F. Jordan, Oldtown.
Sergeant Henry A. Whitney, Orono.
Corporal Michael Harrington, Bangor.
Corporal Roderick McNeil, Bangor.
Corporal Andrew Cavanah, Bangor.
Corporal William Chaplin, Bangor.
Corporal Joshua L. Tebbitts, Bangor.
Corporal James Garrity, Brewer.
Corporal Henry W. Gay, Charleston.
Corporal Evander O. Curtis, Corinth.
Corporal Jasper J. Fisher, Corinth.
Corporal Chesley Shaw, Corinna.
Corporal John L. Russell, Exeter.
Corporal Joshua Gammon, Exeter.
Corporal Byron Libby, Exeter.
Corporal Franklin B. Trickey, Exeter.
Corporal William H. Carr, Garland.
Corporal Joseph A. Clark, Garland.
Corporal William Mansfield, Garland.
Corporal Joseph W. Skillin, Garland.
Corporal George Smith, Garland.
Corporal Giles Straw, Garland.
Corporal Luther V. Gilmore, Holden.
Corporal Lorenzo D. Page, Kenduskeag.
Corporal Seth Salter, Oldtown.
Corporal Alfred Marshall, Springfield.
Corporal Charles H. Carpenter, Stetson.
Corporal Joseph Davis, Veazie.
Musician George H. Ferguson, Stetson.
Wagoner Darins W. Bump, Bradford.
Wagoner Benjamin T. Hubbard, Garland.

PRIVATES.

Edward Cyr, Melville Crawford, Philip Langlair, Alton; James Brennan, Michael Battles, John Campbell, James Campbell, Richard Cooper, Richard Donald, Joseph Dailey, John Donroe, Patrick Gavin, Martin Higgins, Patrick Jordan, John Kelley, James Logan, Charles Murry, John McKenney, Michael O'Sullivan, Henry H. Howe, Frank Howe, Patrick Powers, Charles V. Gray, James Mishoe, Samuel Miller, James St. Pierre, John C. Williams, Michael Boyce, Mark W. Crocker, George Forrest, Hugh Miller, Joseph W. Williams, William H. Boyce, James H. Duffy, Alexander Belonger, George W. Dean, Aaron Getchell, Lucius W. Gilbert, Alexander Niven, George H. Rand, Henry Young, Benjamin G. Young, John L. Bonney, Robert Clark, John Rutledge, Hugh Rutledge, Thomas Hamilton, James Hunter, Moses E. Brown, Wellington D. Hunton, Cornelius Mahoney, Michael Quigley, William S. Smith, James Sweeney, Thomas Smith, Patrick Somers, Patrick Stone, Michael Shanghussey, Nelson Wiltshin, Bangor; Joseph Cyr, Joseph G. Smith, Benjamin F. Ballard, James M. Colley, William Farring, Bradley; John Young, John H. French, James A. Garland, John Lamphier, Almon Stront, John T. Baker, Benjamin F. Bowlings, Bradford; John Hanlon, Elias Thayer, George Webster, Elisha Bedell, Edwin B. Bates, James Russell, Charles E. Brown, William Bartram, George A. Smart, Calvin G. Roberts, Henry Dickenson, Brewer, James G. Crawford, James G. Buswell, George A. Buck, Henry Tapley, George B. Webber, Carmel; John Kearney, James A. Ballard, Alexander S. Davis, Eugene S. Joselyn, Daniel B. Butler, Gershom L. Butler, Stephen W. Girrell, Leonard Jellison, James Noble, David A. Page, Charleston; Almon Clark, Alexander Henley, George G. Pierce, Alphonso L. Ober, William White, George B. Webber, James Ballard, Martin Boyle, Newell J. Bradley, Allan R. Hunting, John D. Hunting, John H. Megguire, Frank P. Roundy, John C. Sweet, John Walker, Corinth; Ansel Hannan, John H. Maines, Corinna; Charles C. Daniels, Fred W. Elder, Charles P. Storer, Dexter; Ira T. Penney, Eddington; Samuel A. Prescott, Joel A. Friend, George W. Sylvester, Etna; Alexander Fraser, Henry W. Russell, John Souse, Wm. Willard, Joshua L. Lowell, Charles F. Dearborn, George W. Gammon, Charles W. Greely, Jeremiah R. Leathers, John C. Libby, George T. Marsh, Horace I. Neal, Samuel Robshaw, Asa M. Stevens, Leander M. Tibbetts, Melvin Tibbetts, Exeter; James Doyle, Bartlett C. White, Greenfield; Robert T. French, Asa H. Hathaway, Dennis Griffin, Hollis Mansfield, Austin Ramsdell, Isaac Littlefield, Seth R. Doan, Henry J. Brown, Jedediah Cole, Stephen R. Cam, Isaac R. Fall, Peleg Fogg, Samuel Goodwin, Frederic Haskell, Benjamin C. Hatch, Newry Ramsdell, Garland; William H. McGrine, Samuel Hutchinson, Henry Pettengill, Ambrose F. Tyler, Frank Page, Lubin P. Higgins, John Vassure, Calvin Raynes, Glenburn; George B. Candage, Samuel V. Hartford, Hampden; Charles A. Trask, Holden; James Chamberlain, Josiah M. Goodwin, Eben Robbins, Warren N. Harriman, Gustavus V. Wilson, Oliver S. Barker, James Chamberlain, jr., Oscar Coombs, Warren Robbins, Hudson; Albert Brown, Daniel Clement, Abner F. Clement, Simeon R. Roberts, Henry J. Hussey, Charles O. Turner, Kenduskeag; Daniel S. Delano, Lee; Jacob Eldridge, George Englehardt, George E. Turner, David McIntosh, Levant; Alfred Hastings, Jeremy Dupont, James Kearney, Erastus Adams, jr., Jefferson Bowden, George L. Thompson, Lincoln; John Sutter, Milford, John H. Allen, Newburg; William Williams, Newport; Luther F. Quimby, Chester S. Mansell, Stephen Burtzell, James M. Phelps, George H. Troombly, James Burnham, William Stuart, Andrew J. Waltz, William Vancour, Oldtown; Seth A. Colburn, Fred F. Bond, Daniel Peavy, William Butler, George W. Hall, Orono; James A. Sutter, Fred W. Wichman, Thomas Noble, Orrington; Jeremiah Farewell, Patten; Moses Miller, Mattawamkeag; Calvin Cooper, Owen Tobin, Plymouth; Charles E. Lewis, Springfield; John P. Abbott, Richard H. Daniels, James W. Keyes, Sherman Boobar, Henry Langley, Albion K. P. Moore, John McKenney, Stetson; Charles Giddes, Veazie; William F. Jenkins, Horatio Jenkins, Woodville; Willard G. Wilcox, Winn.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, August 14, 1862, to serve three years. Left for Washington on the 19th and there remained encamped until the 7th of September, when, having been assigned to Taylor's Brigade of Hooker's Corps, they proceeded to Frederick, Maryland, and from thence to Rappahannock Station, Virginia. While there they were transferred to Duryea's Brigade of Reynold's Corps, and on the 23d arrived at Brooks' Station on the Acquia Creek & Falmouth railroad. On the 13th of December they took an honorable part in the battle of Fredericksburg, losing in killed, wounded and missing 226 men—nearly fifty per cent. of their number engaged. On the 14th they re-crossed the Rappahannock river, and encamped near Fletcher's Chapel, where they remained until the 28th of April, 1863, when they took part in the Chancellorsville campaign, and were in position on the extreme left of the army, at Fitz Hugh's Crossing, three miles below Fredericksburgh, until the 2d of May, on which day they marched to the extreme right at Chancellorsville, and on the 5th re-crossed the river, encamping near White Oak Church.

On the 12th of June they proceeded towards Pennsylvania, arrived at Gettysburg on the 1st of July, and then were engaged with the enemy every day until the 4th. At the close of the 4th, all that remained for duty of 248, officers and men, who entered the engagement on the 1st, were 2 officers and 15 enlisted men. This remnant of the regiment participated in the pursuit of the enemy, reached Rappahannock Station on the morning of the 26th, and there remained encamped until the 1st of August. They afterwards participated in the movement to the Rapidan, retreating from the latter place, with the army, on the 9th of October.

They also participated in the movements against the enemy at Mine Run, and on the 30th of November formed a part of the charging column intended to storm the enemy's works, but the orders being countermanded, they returned to Kellys Ford on the 3d of December, thence on the 24th proceeded to Mitchells Station, where they remained encamped until April 26, 1864.

On the 4th of May they crossed the Rapidan at Germania Ford, and bivouacked near Wilderness Church. On the 5th, 6th and 7th they engaged the enemy at that place, and on the 8th participated in a charge on the enemy's lines at Spottsylvania Court House. Their loss in killed, wounded and missing was nearly one hundred men. On the 10th they participated in the charge upon the enemy's lines at Laurel Hill, and lost 50 men, killed and wounded.

On the 23d they crossed the North Anna river, at Jericho Ford, and then took part in the engagement which occurred there. On the 24th they occupied and destroyed the railroad, remaining in that vicinity until the 26th, when they re-crossed the river and proceeded to Mangohick; thence, on the 28th, down the Pamunky river to Hanover town, where they formed in line of battle and erected breastworks. On the 30th, they reported to General Lockwood, and took position near Bethesda Church, where they remained, engaged in skirmishing and throwing up entrenchments, until the 5th of June. On the 16th they crossed the James river, and advanced to near Petersburg. On the 17th, they supported the Ninth Army Corps; participated in an assault on the enemy's works, which was partially successful, and gained possession of the Norfolk railroad. On the 18th of August they took an active part in the attack and capture of the Weldon Railroad, losing a number of officers and enlisted men taken prisoners, and thirty wounded. They remained in position at the "Yellow House" until the 25th, when, with their division, they were withdrawn to the rear as a reserve.

On the 15th of September they made a successful reconnoissance in the direction of the South Side Railroad; and on the 16th were assigned to garrison Fort Wadsworth, on the Weldon Railroad, which they occupied till the 5th of December, when they moved to the Jerusalem Plank Road. In the meanwhile the Second Company of Unassigned Infantry, organized at Augusta, Maine, September 23, 1864, to serve one year, joined the regiment, and was assigned as Company A. On the 7th of December they formed a part of the expedition to the Weldon Railroad and participated in its destruction, returning to their position near the Jerusalem Plank Road on the 12th, and there remained, performing the usual routine of camp duty, until the 5th of February, 1865.

On the 6th and 7th of February they participated in an engagement near Hatchers Run, losing 3 men killed, 60 wounded, and 11 missing, and returned to their camp near the Weldon Railroad on the 11th. On the 31st of March they participated in the battle of Gravelly Run, losing 1 man killed, 4 wounded, and 24 missing, and on the 1st of April in the capture of the enemy's works near the South Side Railroad, their casualties in the latter engagement being 1 man killed and 12 wounded. On the 2d of April they joined in the pursuit of Lee's forces to Appomattox Court House, where they remained until the 15th, when they proceeded towards Manchester. They remained at Manchester until May 6th, and on that day left for Washington, District of Columbia, where they remained encamped at Balls Cross Road until June 5th, when in compliance with orders from the War Department, the regiment was mustered out of the United States service by Captain Walter F. Chesley, Assistant Commissary of Musters, and on the 6th of June placed en route for the State Rendezvous, at Augusta, Maine, where the men were paid and finally discharged. The officers and men whose term of service did not expire prior to October 1, 1865, were transferred to the Twentieth Maine Volunteers.

FIELD OFFICERS.

Lieutenant-Colonel Augustus B. Farnham, Bangor.
Major Augustus B. Farnham, Bangor.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

Freeman Brackett, Marcus D. Kingsbury, Richard Soule, Bradford; Hugh Conway, Hampden; James Fahey, David D. Hanson, Milton W. Ricker, George Hart, Bangor; Willard Lancaster, Hudson; James Lattaie, Mattamiscontis; Austin Poor, Patten; James S. Kyle, Chester; James Leavitt, Lincoln.

COMPANY B.

PRIVATES.

George A. Bagley, Henry Mansfield, Greenbush; Byron B. Brown, Joseph H. Survey, Alden Hackett, Patten; Zebulon Whittaker, Clifton; Gilman Lawrence, Newport; Asa C. Lampher, Bradford; William B. Monroe, Greenfield; Frank B. Miller, Orono; Charles L. Peasley, Enfield; Joseph Wilson, Hudson; Peter Bull, Charles and Walter R. Chamberlain, Leonard H. Clapp, Stillman P. Davis, Alson L. Day, Cyrus Emery, Abner E. Hall, James and William D. Kelley, Joseph E. Pelkey, Richard D. Porter, Albert Rainer, Charles G. Reed, Bangor; Nelson A. Powers, Medway.

COMPANY C.

PRIVATES.

Seth Allen, Horace Kellogg, Russell D. Loyal, Patten; Alfred Bishop, William Brown, Frederick Bishop, Edward C. Cook, Milton W. Ricker, Bangor; Elias Humphrey, Hampden; Calvin A. Glidden, Plymouth; John W. and Andrew Dillingham, John D. Graves, Hermon; Martin Harmon, Winn; Charles W. Hanson, Lincoln; William H. Reed, Stetson; John O. Allen, Lowell; Robert M. Smith, John C. Hinkley, jr., Leonard Gross, William Farrar, Oldtown; James H. Brackett, Otis Getchell, Thomas G. Erskine, Alton; Nathaniel Lamb, Thomas O. Freeman, Greenbush.

COMPANY D.

PRIVATES.

Albion K. Daggett, Benjamin F. Grant, Charles Marshall, George R. Mann, Theodore Malone, Alexander F. Mylne, John Mahoney, James McPherson, Bangor; Albert M. Coffin, Carroll; Horatio W. Inman, Charles H. Kneeland, Howard Mallett, Lee; Edward P. Silley, Lowell; Joseph W. Parsons, Hermon.

COMPANY E.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Hiram H. Houston, Newport.
Corporal George W. Williams, Newport.
Musician Charles H. Ring, Newport.

PRIVATES.

Charles Abbott, Horace W. Bolton, Lorraine A. Daniels, Jeremiah Grindell, jr., Joseph F. Knight, Charles C. Lyon, Melbourne C. Spalding, Andrew J. Tibbetts, Clark R. Towle, Mark Towle, Newport; Isaac Arnold, Joseph T. Arnold, Bradford; Daniel O. Bickmore, William O. Burnham, Daniel Davis, William Dickey, Moses Haskins, Oldtown; Luther J. Babeock, Edinburg; Elbridge P. Crocker, Lowell; William H. Crabb, Franklin N. Baston, James Fahey, George Hart, John Hayden, Hugh Kelley, Reuel Phillips, Abner W. Perkins, Frank A. Roberts, Paul Sideau, Henry J. Smith, William W. Smith, Bangor; Daniel Davis 2d, Winn; Lemuel N. Cole, Samuel Patridge, Hampden; Isaac H. Fairbrother, William H. Hanseon, Samuel W. Page, Samuel S. Sumner, Orono; James Howard, jr., Medway; Andrew J. Runnells, Pattenmpus; Henry A. Dorr, Brewer.

COMPANY F.

PRIVATES.

Warren Butters, Exeter; Theodore Russell, Samuel Pierce, Hudson; Thomas J. Gould, Dixmont; Benjamin F. Grant, Bradford; Edwin G. Hammond, Lincoln; Thomas D. Page, Burlington; Lloyd D. Rowe, Charles E. Rogers, Springfield; William H. Speed, Charleston; George W. Tucker, Lee; Alfred N. Crossman, Alton; Stewart N. Inman, Desira S. Veancour, Orono; Charles Keisser, Kenduskeag; John F. Murphy, Andrew J. Smith, Joel Tibbetts, Michael O'Conner, Bangor; Henry Oban, Oldtown; Albert Pickering, Holden; Alonzo S. Withee, Glenburn.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Michael Doyle, George A. Field, Brewer; Isaac Holbrook, Plymouth; Amasa P. Libby, Chester Nelson, Lincoln; Isaiah Lyons, Springfield; Samuel Merritt, Laforest F. Gifford, Bangor; Russell F. Parkman, Zoeth E. Stubbs, Corinna; William S. Rogers, Carmel; David S. Scott, Chester; Wallace L. Holmes, Levant; Rodney Leavitt, Drew Plantation; David B. Longee, Plymouth; William McBrien, Oldtown; Albert Treat, Bradford.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John Ayer, Bangor.
Captain John D. Conley, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Israel H. Washburn, Orono.
Second Lieutenant Israel H. Washburn, Orono.
Second Lieutenant John D. Conley, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant John D. Conley, Bangor.
Corporal Stephen Hines, Bangor.
Corporal Thomas D. Witherly, Bangor.
Corporal Nelson Hewey, Veazie.
Corporal Frederick L. Ladd, Kenduskeag.

PRIVATES.

Ezekiel M. Banks, John H. Everett, Leonard E. Kenniston, Thomas E. Kenniston, William B. Nason, Kenduskeag; Dudley B. Dean, Watson D. Bean, Moses J. Rubert, John L. Sawyer, Passadumkeag; John M. Durgin, Charles Hathorn, Veazie; Timothy A. George, Holden; James H. Thayer, Roscoe T. Griffin, Clarence L. Hodsdon, William G. Fisher, James Maloney, David McElroy, Jasper H. Nash, Michael Carey, Edwin W. Hamilton, Charles E. Hatch, John J. Marston, Martin W. Dugan, George W. Felker, John Farley, Albert Garland, Albert Hoyt, Henry A. Heal, Bangor; William E. Annis, Charles B. Dore, Hermon; Wilbur F. Chase, Chester; Joseph Simpson, Corinth; Lyman Smith, Mt. Desert; Martin L. Whitten, Etna; Joseph A. Gray, Plymouth; James J. Kingsbury, Holden; Dennis A. Jenkins, Woodville; Retire Freese, jr., Lagrange.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

Thomas Foley, Corinth; Peter B. Brann, Andrew J. Bryer, Charles L. Cummings, George Clark, James T. Dilling, Augustus C. Lincoln, Moses Tarbox, jr., Ralph Wynnan, John W. Worcester, Daniel Me-

Neil, Leonard P. Martin, Bangor; Jeremiah Banks, James Dutton, Woodville; William D. Blayden, Hudson; Asa Booker, Exeter; Ira Barnes, Josiah Collins, Lee; Josiah Cornish, Medway; William Frazier, jr., Renel M. Whittier, Hermon; James Sentlen, Burlington; Moses Spencer, Corinna; John B. Wentworth, Orrington; William W. Robbins, Patten; Albert Lyshon, Oldtown; Gorham McPheters, John McPheters, Orono.

COMPANY K.

PRIVATES.

Walter M. Browne, Hezekiah Browne, Lee; John B. Bumbly, Daniel Bell, Joseph Bell, jr., Charles Emerson, Hazen M. Shaw, Orono; Calvin W. Heath, George F. Hill, John F. Cloyes, George C. Burr, George L. Cole, John Curran, Frederick C. Robinson, Eli C. Lyons, Frank Pooler, Gilbert Simons, William Gilbert, Bangor; Edwin A. Bennett, No. 2, R. 3; Silas C. Doble, Roscoe Doble, Isaac Drew, Lincoln; Sannel A. Foster, Hampden; George W. Fisher, Brewer; Levi R. Gray, Oldtown; Augustus Hines, Etna; John T. Nason, Bradley.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Portland, Maine, in August, 1862, to serve three years, and left August 21st for Washington, District of Columbia, where they occupied the line of forts on the east side of the Anacosta and north side of the Potomac rivers, until the 7th of October, when they crossed into Virginia and joined General Berry's Brigade of Birney's Division. They participated in the battle of Fredericksburgh on the 13th of December, losing 2 men killed and 19 wounded. On the 15th they re-crossed the Rappahannock, and remained encamped at Falmouth, Virginia, until the 1st of May, 1863, when they took part in the Chancellorsville campaign, engaged the enemy on the 2d and 3d, and re-crossed the river on the 6th. Their casualties in the campaign were 1 commissioned officer and 3 enlisted men killed, 5 commissioned officers and 59 enlisted men wounded, and 45 taken prisoners.

On the 2nd of July they arrived at Gettysburg, and were engaged with the enemy on that and the following day, losing in the engagement 1 officer and 17 enlisted men killed, 7 officers and 105 enlisted men wounded, and 2 taken prisoners.

On the 27th of November they took a prominent part in the battle of "Orange Grove," in which their loss was 1 officer killed and 2 wounded, 6 enlisted men killed, 42 wounded and 1 missing. On the 1st of December they returned to Brandy Station, and there remained encamped until the 25th of March, 1864, when they were assigned to the Second Brigade, Third Division of the Second Army Corps.

On the 3d day of May they advanced towards the Rapidan, which they crossed on the 4th, and participated in the battle of the Wilderness on the 5th and 6th. Their casualties during the two days were 24 men killed, 147 wounded, and 12 missing. On the 12th they participated in the charge of the Second Corps upon the enemy's lines, losing 3 men killed, 40 wounded and 10 missing. From this time until the 21st, the regiment, although under fire a large portion of the time, did not suffer any loss. On the 23d they joined the Fifth Corps near the North Anna river, and participated in a charge which resulted in driving the enemy across the river and gaining possession of the bridge, losing during the day 4 men killed and 17 wounded.

On the 2d of June they marched to Cold Harbor, and on the 3d and 4th were under fire in the reserve, several men being wounded by shells. On the 5th, 129 men were transferred to this regiment from the Third Maine volunteers. They remained in the works near Barker's Mills until June 12th, when they moved towards Petersburg, crossing the Chickahominy on the 13th and the James on the 14th. On the 16th they made two unsuccessful attempts to capture the enemy's works, in which their loss was 7 killed, 48 wounded and 5 missing; and on the 18th in an assault upon the enemy's lines, they lost 6 men killed and 18 wounded. From this time until July 25th they were engaged in erecting fortifications and doing picket duty. On the 26th they joined in the expedition across the Appomattox and James rivers to Strawberry Plains, returning on the 28th. Subsequently they encamped near Fort Sedgwick, where they remained until February 5, 1865, in the meanwhile taking part in the raid on the Weldon Railroad, under General Warren. On the 5th of February they moved to Hatcher's Run, and participated in all the movements and engagements of the Second Corps in that vicinity until the 29th of March, when they re-crossed Hatcher's Run. Early on the morning of the 30th they advanced upon the enemy in line of battle, and secured a position by throwing up earthworks. At night they moved to the left, and took position near the Boydton road. On the 1st of May they left Burksville for Washington, District of Columbia, arriving in that city on the 15th.

On the 4th of June the regiment was mustered out of the United States service at Baileys Cross Roads by Captain Charles H. Hayes, Assistant Commissary of Musters, under the provisions of War Department General Order No. 94, series of 1865, and in pursuance of General Order No. 140, Headquarters Army of the Potomac, 1865. On the day of muster-out they left for Maine, and arrived at Portland on the 8th, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 10th. The officers and enlisted men whose term of service did not expire prior to October 1, 1865, were transferred to the First regiment Maine heavy artillery.

STAFF OFFICER.

Assistant Surgeon Louis E. Norris, Hampden.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

James Pickett, Charles Beal, David Berry, Orrin M. Crummett, Albin T. Carter, Benjamin A. Clifford, James Flye, Roswell Read, James Hennessy, Bangor; Jeremiah B. Atkins, Levant; Oscar F. Abbott, Charles H. Beal, Newburgh; Nathaniel A. Atkins, Exeter; John Q. Adams, Warren Bates, jr., Veazie; Edwin P. Boobier, Mattamiscontis; George W. Brown, Alton; David L. Boyd, Kenduskeag; Walter H. Randall, Dixmont.

COMPANY B.

PRIVATES.

Llewellyn Cleaveland, Orrington; Ezra T. Carpenter, George W. Chase, Charleston; Orr Cunningham, Greensbush; Albert P. Clark, Charles Clark, Corinth; Andrew I. Chadbourne, Bradford; Lawrence Connor, Veazie; Dennis Cronan, Orono; John T. Clark, Corinna; John N. Curtis, Dexter.

COMPANY C.

PRIVATES.

Edward L. Blake, William F. Frost, Brewer; Peter W. Guthrie, Andrew M. Garland, Charles D. Mowey, Daniel Young, A. G. Furbush, Elwin Barrett, Alonzo J. Morrison, Charles H. Patten, William

A. Sibley, Tristram H. Warren, John Williams, Bangor; John B. Crockett, Cyrus W. Emerson, Stetson; Alpheus Downs, John Donovan, Benjamin Eddy, Kenduskeag; Thomas J. Chase, Carmel; Willard E. Campbell, Clifton; John H. Davis, Orono; Charles Dearborn, Veazie; William T. Fletcher, Greenbush; Mark W. Furbush, James M. Mitchell, Bradford; James P. Flagg, Stephen Richards, Oldtown; Edward Gilkey, Holden.

COMPANY D.

PRIVATES.

Joshua L. Farrar, Ellis A. Gilman, Corinth; Sylvester Bumpus, Lee; Marshall A. Grant, Hermon; Albert Grant, Hudson; Moses Goss, Gorham P. Hubbard, Charleston; Lincoln Given, Brewer; Samuel S. Gilpatrick, Veazie; Martin A. Hardy, Carmel; Greenleaf Haney, Kenduskeag; Thomas B. Hamilton, Bethuel Heath, James H. Thompson, Bangor; Edward L. Hunt, Oldtown.

COMPANY E.

PRIVATES.

Nelson Hart, William L. Hodsdon, John F. Johnston, William Land, Charles E. Lord, Robert McGregor, Thomas M. Blake, Eliphalet Emery, Isaac W. Sanborn, Bangor; Thomas D. Jordan, Ezra Mitchell, Oldtown; Tobias E. Johnson, Veazie; John A. Joselyn, Exeter; George W. Kiaser, Hudson; Charles Kimball, Carmel; John W. Kingsbury, Bradford; William A. Langley, Stetson.

COMPANY F.

PRIVATES.

Edward Allen, Frank Davis, Bangor; Archibald McPhetres, D. Merrifield, George H. Thompson, Orono; Patrick McOvery, Charleston; John McPherson, Carmel; Nathan L. Marden, Veazie; Augustus A. McClure, Samuel J. Lee, Hudson; Richard E. Myrick, Mt. Chase; Charles O. Perry, Brewer; Charles H. Tuck, Lee.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Alden M. Brown, Plymouth; William H. Curtis, Dexter; Randall N. Cochran, Jethro S. Getchell, William Perkins, Thomas Patten, Charles Randlett, John Robinson, William Ritchie, Thomas W. Billings, Warren Sturdivant, Bangor; Benjamin Estes, David Legrow, Orono; Clifton C. Huckins, Charleston; Joseph A. Merrill, William G. Peake, Alton; George Ordway, Exeter; Isaac H. Philbrook, Greenfield; Ichabod F. Partridge, Samuel Raynes, Carmel; A. H. Quimby, John G. Hammons, Etna; Calvin H. Rowe, Bradford; Monzo E. Randall, Dixmont; Moses McPheters, Greenbush; George R. Sibley, Enfield.

COMPANY H.

PRIVATES.

Carrol G. Bickford, John Carrigan, Moses L. Strickland, Bangor; Asbrey F. Haynes, Benjamin F. Welch, Passadumkeag; Moses Ranney, jr., Stetson; Roswell W. Rich, Exeter; Willis A. Rollins, Corinth; Jeremiah Smith, Mattawamkeag; Charles L. Sanford, Bradford; Newell Scribner, Charleston; Charles Stoneman, Alton; David Southard, Thomas Benjamin, Bradford; Joseph H. Shapleigh, Veazie; Hollis B. Spaulding, Oldtown; George H. Thompson, Orono; Dennis Higgins, Hampden; Benjamin Kimball, Royal M. Kneeland, Frank Paul, Lincoln; Edward York, Corinth.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

Stephen Silk, Frederick A. McKenney, Martin Welch, Bangor; Asa F. Smith, William Thomas, Veazie; Amos B. Stearns, Timothy Whitney, Hudson; Daniel W. Sylvester, Albion Stevens, Joseph Souther, Stetson; Samuel E. Stone, Lewis P. Lambert, Brewer; Levi C. Titus, Exeter; Isaac L. Twombly, Milford; John Sawyer, Hampden; Joseph O. Turner, Lincoln; Daniel Washburn, Oldtown; Lyman F. White, Bradford.

COMPANY K.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain James O. Thompson, Etna.

PRIVATES.

Eleazer Hutchinson, Orrison Ripley, Lincoln; Nathaniel F. Lambert, Hudson; James O. Thompson, Etna.

NINETEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Bath, Maine, August 25, 1862, to serve three years, and left on the 27th for Washington, arriving in that city on the 29th. They crossed to the Virginia side of the river and were assigned to garrisoning Forts Baker, Davis, Dupont, and Mahan, where they remained until the latter part of September, when they marched to Frederick, Maryland, which place they left October 3d, for Harper's Ferry, where they were attached to Gorman's Brigade, in Howard's Division.

During a successful reconnoissance in force October 16th, to Charleston, they were for the first time under fire, and acted creditably. On their return they went to Bolivar Heights.

On November 23d they were encamped about five miles from Fredericksburg, and on December 13th participated in the battle at that place. On the 15th they recrossed the river and went into camp near Falmouth, where they remained until the close of April, 1863.

On the 27th of April, with their division, they were ordered to co-operate with General Sedgwick in the attack upon the heights of Fredericksburg, and were assigned the duty of guarding the telegraphic communication between the left wing of the army and General Hooker's headquarters, in which position they remained until May 3d, when they were ordered to Fredericksburg, and on the 5th removed the pontoon bridge at that place, under a severe fire from the enemy.

On the 1st of July they arrived at Gettysburg and on the 2d and 3d were hotly engaged with the enemy. They went into action with 440 officers and men, and their loss during the two days was 12 officers and 220 enlisted men killed and wounded. Subsequently they crossed into Virginia by way of Harper's Ferry, and on the 13th of September co-operated with General Gregg's cavalry across the Rappahannock, compelling the enemy to fall back beyond Culpeper. They remained on duty on the Rapidan until October 8th, when they returned to Culpeper, and on the 12th engaged the enemy at Bristow Station, losing man killed and 13 wounded. November 26th they joined in the movement to "Mine Run," and on the 6th of December went into camp at Stevensburg, where they remained until May 3, 1864. On May 4th they crossed the Rapidan at Ely's Ford, and on the 5th and 6th were engaged with the enemy at Todd's Tavern and at the Wilderness. Their loss in the several engagements was very severe. On May 10th they formed a portion of a column which twice assaulted the enemy's position across the Po River, and on the 12th participated in the famous assault of the Second Corps. On the 24th they were engaged with the enemy at the North Anna river, crossed the Pamunkey river on the morning of the 28th, and on the 1st of June participated in the engagement near Bethesda Church. On the 3d they stormed the enemy's works at Cold Harbor and lay under a galling fire all day. On the 13th of June they proceeded towards Petersburg, went into position in front of that city on the 15th, formed the extreme right of the assaulting column on the 18th, and afterwards participated in the attack upon the enemy's inner line of works. On the 22d of June they participated in the engagement near the Jerusalem Plank Road, during which their casualties were numerous and many being prisoners. On the 26th of July they joined in the movement to Deep Bottom, engaged the enemy at that place, and returned in front of Petersburg on the 30th, where they remained encamped until the 15th of August, when they again proceeded to Deep Bottom, returning on the 21st. On the 23d they proceeded to Ream's Station, and on the following day were engaged in the destruction of the Weldon Railroad. On the 25th they were engaged with the enemy and returned to Petersburg on the 26th. Their loss in this engagement was heavy.

On the 20th of September they moved into the line in the immediate front of Petersburg, where they were exposed to the fire of artillery and sharpshooters day and night until the 26th of October, when they marched across the Weldon Railroad, and on the 27th participated in the engagements at Hatcher's Run and near the Boydton Plank Road.

On the 31st of October they occupied Fort Haskell, in the front line, exposed as before to the continued fire of artillery and sharpshooters, and remained there until the 30th of November. On that day they moved to near Patrick Station, the terminus of the Grant Railroad, and went into winter quarters.

The regiment left camp May 3, 1864, with 22 officers and 468 enlisted men. Of the 277 men transferred, June 18th, from the Fourth Maine Volunteers, there were in the field, 57 men. A new company, the Fifth of Unassigned Infantry, organized at Augusta, Maine, October 5, 1864, to serve one, two, and three years, joined the regiment, October 22d, with 3 officers and 64 enlisted men; making a total of 25 officers and 589 enlisted men. The casualties during the year 1864 were as follows: Killed in action, 61 men; wounded and died of wounds, 1 officer, 39 men; wounded exclusive of those died of wounds, 16 officers, 283 men; taken prisoners by the enemy, 1 officer, 133 men.

On the 1st of January, 1865, the regiment was encamped in front of Fort Emory, near Petersburg, Virginia, and remained there until February 5th, when, with their division, they joined in the movement to Hatcher's Run, and there remained encamped until the 29th of March. On that day they marched out on the Vaughan road and made a successful reconnoissance to Dabney's Mills, which position they occupied without opposition. On the 30th and 31st of March they were engaged with the enemy at Fort Powell, which they entered on the 2d of April, and afterwards joined in the pursuit of Lee's forces, overtaking them near Amelia Court House on the 6th of April and pursuing them all day. On the 7th of April they had a spirited engagement with the enemy at High Bridge on the Lynchburg Railroad, and saved from destruction the railroad and foot bridges across the stream.

On the 2d of May they left Burksville for Washington, District of Columbia, and encamped at Baileys Cross Roads on the 15th.

In obedience to orders, the regiment was there mustered out of the United States service, May 31st, by Captain H. Y. Russell, Assistant Commissary of Musters.

The officers and men whose term of service did not expire prior to October 1st, 1865, were transferred to the First Regiment Maine Heavy Artillery. The regiment left camp for home June 1st; arrived on the 4th, at Augusta, Maine, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 7th.

STAFF OFFICERS.

Assistant Surgeon Fred G. Parker, Stetson.
Hospital Steward Delon H. Abbott, Orono.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

Henry H. Lancaster, Stetson; Richard Allum, Bangor; Jeremiah Avery, Greenfield; George Biker, Glenburn; William Babeock, Newburg.

COMPANY B.

PRIVATES.

Edgar S. Batchelder, Garland; William P. Howe, Charles F. Jewell, Dixmont; David King, Jason S. Russell, Benjamin F. Call, Abijah M. Clay, George Drake, Judson Dexter, David Estes, John Elden, George W. Field, Ezabulon Robinson, Bangor; Charles H. Prescott, Edwin Smith, Albert Staples, Newburg; Sylvanus C. Rose, Bradley; William T. Smith, Hampden.

COMPANY C.

PRIVATES.

William H. Ames, Plymouth; James H. Flanders, Garland; David E. Cunningham, Bradford; Charles A. Rowes, Eddington; Don Carlos St. Clair, Brewer; Alney W. Titus, Dexter; William M. White, David Hewy, Moses H. Hubbard, Samuel B. Lamb, Bangor.

COMPANY D.

PRIVATES.

William F. Moody, James Redikin, Bangor; Emery A. McAllister, Milford.

COMPANY E.

PRIVATES.

Sewall B. Blake, Dexter; Reuben Knowles, jr., Joseph March, Winfield; S. Treat, David Howey, Moses H. Hubbard, Ernest Merton, Bangor; Simon H. Willey, Exeter; Kingsbury Tibbetts, Springfield; Isaac L. Sanborn, Newport.

COMPANY F.

PRIVATES.

Charles F. Clark, William Howard, Bangor; Timothy Murphy, Orono; Frank A. Curtis, Horatio N. Washburn, Bangor; Luther Wheaton, Joshua B. Whitney, Greenbush.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Orrin Bridges, Alonzo Cummings, Cornelius Carmody, James S. Spencer, Richard Allum, Bangor; Jeremiah Towle, Enfield; Elisha P. Smith, Chester; Mellen Eastman, Charleston, Henry Crosby, Hampden; George Biker, Glenburn.

COMPANY H.

PRIVATES.

James Wyman, Hermon; Columbus G. Bradford, Byron G. Waters, Patten; Frank Fields, Charles B. Whitney, Levi M. Reed, Lee; Benjamin F. Leavitt, Levant; John McLaughlin, Springfield; George A. Rines, Charles Rose, George Cox, Bangor; Stephen H. Mellow, Oldtown.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

Joseph Broadway, Orono; Andrew J. Miles, Elijah Ware, John B. Walker, Oldtown; John H. Sanders, Lincoln; William H. Sperrin, Milford; Edwin Savage, Chester; Alfred B. Fowle, Lagrange; Lyman P. Fowles, Edgar A. Stanley, Edward E. Kent, Brewer; Frank Flye, John H. Saunders, Bangor; Theodore M. Wragg, Lowell; Edward York, Hermon.

COMPANY K.

PRIVATES.

James H. Knights, Albert G. Rand, Bangor; Charles M. Dorrity, Cornth; Charles B. Flinn, Levant; Charles Holmes, Willis M. Porter, James Smith, Oldtown; Josiah H. Porter, Elisha Simpson, John Simpson, Bradford; Newell B. Tilton, Etna; Amos M. Page, Kenduskeag; Solomon T. Trott, Amos C. Trott, Winn.

TWENTIETH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Portland, Maine, August 29, 1862, to serve three years. Left September 3d, for Boston, whence they sailed in the steamer Merimac for Alexandria, Virginia, arriving on the 6th, and proceeding the next day to Washington, where they went into camp near the arsenal grounds. In a few days they marched rapidly toward the field of active operations in Maryland, until they reached the battlefield of Antietam, and were drawn up in line of battle, but not ordered forward, being a portion of Butterfield's Brigade, of Porter's Division, which was held in reserve. They afterwards encamped near Antietam Ford.

At the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, they were under fire for the first time, and rendered conspicuous service, being under the hottest fire for thirty-six hours, after which they were withdrawn to the city, where they bivouacked a few hours, then recrossed the river and encamped near Falmouth, where they remained until the battle of Chancellorsville, in May, 1863. During the battle of Chancellorsville they were detached to guard the telegraph line, and although exposed to artillery fire, suffered no loss. On the 20th of May they joined in the movement towards Pennsylvania, engaged the enemy near Middleborough, Virginia, on the 21st of June, and after a sharp fight drove them to Upperville, losing in the engagement 1 man killed and 8 wounded. They arrived on the battlefield of Gettysburg on the 2d of July, and on that day were hotly engaged with the enemy, losing 3 commissioned officers killed and 134 enlisted men killed and wounded. On the 3d they were under heavy fire of artillery, but took no active part, and on the 5th joined in the pursuit of the enemy; participated in a skirmish on the Sharpsburg Pike, on the 10th, and took part in the affair at Wapping Heights on the 23d. Returning from Manassas Gap, they encamped at Warrenton and Beverly Ford until the 16th of September, when they moved beyond Culpeper. On the 10th of October they participated in the movement to the Rapidan, retreating the next day through Culpeper, across the Rappahannock river, and supported the Second Corps in the engagement at Bristow Station, on the 13th.

On the 7th of November they took part in the assault and capture of the enemy's works at Rappahannock Station, losing 1 man killed and 7 wounded, and afterwards moved across the river at Kelleys Ford. On the 28th they joined in the movement to the Rapidan, where they were in position before the enemy's works until December 3d, when they formed the rear guard of their corps on the retreat from that place, and on the next day went into camp near Rappahannock Station, Virginia. They remained in winter quarters at Rappahannock Station until May 1, 1864. On the 4th of May they crossed the Rapidan at Germania Ford, and on the following day were hotly engaged with the enemy on the left of Locust Grove Road, with a loss of 1 officer and 10 men killed, 58 men wounded, and 16 missing. On the 6th of May they remained in line of battle in front of the works, losing 2 men killed and 10 wounded. On the 7th they advanced upon the enemy's line to ascertain his position and force, and were withdrawn after a loss of 2 officers killed and 1 wounded, and 2 enlisted men killed and 10 wounded. On the 8th they proceeded to Spottsylvania Court House, and formed in line of battle at Laurel Hill. They were then ordered to report to General Crawford, commanding Second Division, Fifth Corps; advanced toward the enemy, and lay under a heavy fire until 6 p. m., when they assisted in repelling the enemy's charge, losing 1 officer and 5 men killed, 2 officers and 13 men wounded, and 2 men missing.

From the 13th to the 20th they occupied rifle pits in front of the enemy near Spottsylvania, and lost 4 men killed. On the 23d they crossed the North Anna river, and participated in the action at that place; thence pushed on to the Virginia Central Railroad, a part of which they destroyed.

On the 30th they advanced towards Hanover Court House, skirmishing with the enemy and forcing him back during the entire day. Fighting being renewed on the 3d of June, they again engaged the enemy and assisted in compelling them to fall back to the rear of a swamp to a second line of works, losing 2 enlisted men killed, 1 officer and 23 men wounded, and 1 missing. On the 13th they crossed the Chickahominy, and arrived in front of Petersburg on the 18th, where they remained entrenched and under fire until August 15th, when they were withdrawn, and on the 18th assisted in the capture of the Weldon Railroad. They remained on the Weldon Railroad until September 30th, when they moved with their division and charged the enemy's works at Peeble's Farm, across an open field, under a terrible fire of musketry and canister. They afterwards assisted in checking the enemy's advance, and held their ground. Their loss in these actions was 1 officer and 6 men killed, and 50 men wounded.

On the 2d of October they moved to the front and threw up earthworks, where they remained until October 27th, when they took part in a reconnoissance to Hatcher's Run, losing 1 man killed and 2 wounded. Afterwards returned to their former position and remained building forts, strengthening works, etc., until December 6th. On the 7th they joined the expedition to the Weldon Railroad, which they struck at a point between Stony Creek and Jarrett's Depot, and assisted in the destruction of about twenty miles of this road; then returned and went into camp near the Jerusalem Plank Road, where they remained until February 5, 1865, when they moved to Hatcher's Run and took part in the action at that place on the 6th, with but slight loss. They remained in camp at that place until the 29th of March, when they moved across the run and supported General Chamberlain's Brigade in the action on the Quaker Road. The following day skirmished with the enemy and gained possession of the Boydton Road. On the 31st they were engaged in the action at Gravelly Run, and on the 1st of April at Five Forks. At the latter place they were one of the first to gain the works of the enemy, where they captured one battle flag and a large number of prisoners. They afterwards joined in the pursuit of the enemy and came up with them on the 8th at Appomattox Court House. At the time of the surrender of the rebel army the regiment was skirmishing with the enemy, and at the completion of the terms of surrender, was one of the regiments designated to receive the rebel arms. On the 15th they proceeded towards Washington, where they arrived on the 12th of May.

On the 5th of June the enlisted men whose terms of service expired prior to October 1, 1865, were mustered out and most of the officers discharged. Subsequently the men remaining of the Sixteenth Maine Volunteers and the First Regiment of Sharpshooters, were consolidated with the Twentieth, and the regiment thus re-organized remained in service until July 16, 1865, when it was mustered out of the United States service near Washington, District of Columbia, by Captain Charles F. Sawyer, Assistant Commissary of Musters, Third Division, Provisional Corps, in accordance with orders from the War Department. They arrived at Portland, Maine, on the 20th, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 25th.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Charles D. Gilmore, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Charles D. Gilmore, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas D. Chamberlain, Brewer.
Major Charles D. Gilmore, Bangor.
Surgeon John Benson, Newport.
Assistant Surgeon Charles G. Stevens, Bangor.
Chaplain Luther P. French, Corinth.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

Robert T. Atherton, William A. Estes, Frank L. Grindle, Joseph Grindle, Charles H. Hodgkins, Ezra B. Marden, Augustus McLaughlin, Joseph S. Robinson, Henry A. Scribner, Benjamin W. Tapley, George W. Young, Bangor; Martin S. Bodwell, John E. Luddon, William H. Higgins, William C. Hanson, George H. Perry, Lincoln; Thomas Daugherty, Passadumkeag; Abner L. Hanscomb, William Sprague, Lee; George E. S. Hutchins, Carmel; Franklin Lawry, Charleston; William R. Ladd, Franklin Ramsdell, Garland; Charles R. Oliver, Carroll; Henry Pickard, Hampden; Edward R. Sanborn, Lagrange, Robert Tibbetts, Springfield.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant Royal B. Decker, Lagrange.
Second Lieutenant Royal B. Decker, Lagrange.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal George H. Moulton, Lagrange.

PRIVATES.

Edward K. Carver, Royal B. Decker, Alhanan I. Dyer, Daniel Hanscomb, Seth H. Libbey, Edmund R. Sanborn, William S. Sanborn, Wilson A. Decker, Lagrange; William L. Frees, Maxfield; Harrison Goding, Bangor; August N. Lufkin, Charles E. Bowker, Orrington; John F. Clifford, Hermon; William A. Drake, Chelsea; Sewall Donglass, Veazie; Charles A. Elliott, Kenduskeag; Joseph W. Grenier, Alfred R. Gray, Theophilus E. Smith, Brewer; William Hussey, Dixmont; John C. Hinkley, jr., Oldtown; Alphonso H. Mitchell, Isaiah Strout, Francis A. Strout, Corinth; James Sharrett, Mattawamkeag.

COMPANY C.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Vincent W. Pinhorn, Orrington.

PRIVATES.

Henry A. Carpenter, Charleston; Samuel F. Mallett, Lee; Waldo P. Odlin, David H. Royal, John Healey, Benjamin Labrose, Samuel

J. Nichols, William Shaw, Bangor; John H. Wentworth, Veazie; James W. Collins, Allen Harmon, Winn; Charles H. Folsom, Newburg; Lyman E. Gould, Dixmont; William M. Hooper, Dexter; Charles H. Haskell, Greenfield; Rufus L. Jones, Carmel; William R. Prescott, Corinth.

COMPANY D.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Isaac W. Haskell, Garland.
First Lieutenant Edward B. Fifield, Dexter.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Louis Gould, Dexter.
Sergeant George W. Card, Dexter.
Sergeant Jonathan G. Johnson, Garland.
Corporal Benjamin P. Parker, Dexter.
Corporal Alonzo M. Fogg, Garland.
Corporal John M. Safford, Corinna.
Corporal Luther M. Rideout, Garland.
Corporal John S. Stevens, Exeter.
Corporal Albert J. Swanton, Dexter.
Corporal Michael Shay, Bangor.
Corporal John Lynes, jr., Bangor.
Wagoner Ebenezer S. Allen, Garland.
Wagoner Dennis S. Pullen, Dexter.

PRIVATES.

George E. Atkins, Garland; Daniel A. Bosworth, Arthur A. Berrey, Bezelief W. Burnham, Henry A. Chamberlain, Elisha S. Coan, George W. Jones, Sumner Knox, Warren C. Leighton, Christopher Pennington, Seth Ramsdell, Job Ramsdell, Sumner L. Skillins, Thomas J. Skillins, Henry A. Sweet, John D. Twombly, Garland; Albert G. Stanwood, Winn; Albert S. Twining, Newburg; Calvin P. Allen, Isaac C. Barker, James A. Brown, James M. Blanchard, Leander Shaw, John M. Ramsdell, Exeter; Peter Augustine, Enoch Ayres, George T. Bailey, Daniel L. Clark, John P. Crocker, Morrill G. Curtis, George A. Crocker, Augustus Ellis, Cyrus S. Greeley, Edwin R. Littlefield, James W. Nutt, Eli L. Prescott, Stephen A. Prescott, Amos Roberts, jr., Joseph Southard, Edward Swanton, Dexter; Otis Smith, jr., Samuel A. Smith, George R. Rich, Daniel Foss, Albert H. Norcross, Aaron M. Page, Charleston; James Anderson, Peter D. Brackett, James Hickey, James Kelley, Elsbra McCoy, Michael J. McPhee, James McMahon, Edward K. Spaulding, James Wallace, Bangor; Benjamin W. West, Orrington; Rufus B. Harmon, Leander M. Libby, Willard S. Ricker, Corinna; Franklin Cunningham, Marcus D. Kingsbury, Bradford; Nathaniel G. Gould, Brewer; Horatio W. Inman, Charles H. Kneeland, Lee.

COMPANY E.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant W. H. H. Hasey, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

John Conway, Sewal M. Cowan, William H. Chambertain, Edwin Frederick, William F. Mills, William H. Wentworth, James Fahey, John M. Sherwood, Thomas Twomey, Horace Knight, Paul Sideau, Bangor; Sidney H. Sinclair, Springfield; Charles A. Whitney, Etna; Daniel Donovan, Kenduskeag; Lewis F. Morse, Veazie; Joseph T. Arnold, Isaac Arnold, Bradford; Andrew J. Rummels, Patagumpus; Frank A. Roberts, Hudson; John Martin, James Bradley, Edward Carroll, Corinna; Hugh Kelly, Daniel O. Bickmore, William O. Burnham, Oldtown; Isaac H. Fairbrother, Orono; Elbridge P. Crocker, Lowell; Daniel Davis 2d, Winn.

COMPANY F.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Musician Michael Quimby, Bangor.
Wagoner Crosby N. Crocker, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Cyrus Bray, John F. Clifford, Daniel J. Colson, Elijah Carr, Ansel G. Emery, Charles F. Hall, William A. Neal, Edmund Gordon, Henry Reavell, William A. Soule, William N. Witham, Robert A. Witherell, Oscar Wyer, Henry Haye, Dezerd Vencour, Francis Wright, Bangor; Dennison Ward, Henry Oban, Oldtown; Alfred M. Crossman, Alton; Edwin D. Gould, Brewer; Edwin B. Hammond, Lincoln; Thomas D. Paige, Burlington; Albert Pickering, Holden; Samuel Pierce, Hudson; John J. Smith, Orono; Joel Tibbetts, Glenburn.

COMPANY G.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Thomas D. Chamberlain, Brewer.
First Lieutenant Thomas D. Chamberlain, Brewer.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Musician Nathaniel L. Swett, Orrington.

PRIVATES.

Charles N. Ayer, Frank Burr, Charles W. Carrier, William D. Kelly, Brewer; John M. Sherwood, Fred C. Robinson, Charles E. Dunn, John F. Cloyes, Samuel W. Veazie, Albert L. Spencer, Eli C. Lyons, Bangor; Marcellus Blake, Joseph A. West, Carmel; Nelson Powers, Medway; John B. Bumby, Frank B. Miller, Orono; Edwin A. Bennett, No. 2, R. 3; Byron B. Brown, Patten; Roscoe Doble, Silas C. Doble, Lincoln; Cyrus Emery, Maxfield; Augustus N. Lufkin, Orrington; William B. Monroe, Greenfield; Henry Mansfield, Greenbush; John T. Nason, Bradley; Charles L. Peaslee, Enfield.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Second Lieutenant Edward R. Sanborn, Lagrange.
Second Lieutenant William C. Bailey, Garland.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Andrew J. Tozier, Plymouth.
Sergeant Thomas D. Chamberlain, Brewer.
Musician Edwin J. Baker, Oldtown.
Wagoner John Stockman, Oldtown.

PRIVATES.

William H. Chamberlain, Bela L. Fowles, Gowen W. Fowles, Medway; Charles L. Torrey, John M. Sherwood, Patrick Hamesburg, William Fifield, Jasper H. Nash, James Maloney, Charles E. Hatch, Henry A. Heal, Benjamin F. Grant, William P. Fisher, John Farley, Michael Carey, Frank C. Williams, George Whitney, William Debeck, Edward Frederick, Parmenas E. Folsom, Charles W. Jackins, Frank Johnson, Stephen H. Matthews, George Miller, Isaac F. Orcutt, Moses G. Rice, Isaac N. Lathrop, Bangor; Horace Wyman, Lincoln; Edmund R. Sanborn, Lagrange; Bancroft Lambert, Bradley; Hiram H. Chesley, John E. Chase, Edmund Goff, Sylvester McLellan, Patten; Charles B. Dore, William E. Annis, Hermon; Wilbur F. Chase, Chester; Thomas Oscar, Lee; William H. Cates, Carmel; Lorenzo Grant, Hudson; Ephraim L. Sherman, Camden.

COMPANY I.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

First Lieutenant John M. Sherwood, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Andrew Bryer, Martin P. Leonard, Moses Tarbox, jr., Ralph W. Wyman, John W. Worcester, John Mahoney, Bangor; Moses D. Spencer, Corinna; William D. Blagden, Hudson; Ira Barnes, Josiah Collins, Lee; Josiah Cornish, Medway; Hugh Conway, Hampden; William J. Frazier, Hermon; William H. Foss, Orono, Alexander Mylne, Glenbrun; Alonzo Newcomb, Newburg; John Patterson, Burlington.

COMPANY K.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Charles L. Strickland, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Edmund R. Sanborn, Orono.

PRIVATES.

Amasa W. Fickett, Samuel H. Winchester, William Blake, Michael Doyle, George A. Fields, Brewer; Charles T. Varney, William Mehegan, Andrew Hayman, James Frazier, John Flinn, James S. Fox, James F. Dinsmore, John Casey, Hiram Clark, Andrew Franquer, Charles A. Crabb, Charles Conillard, Hiram Christy, Samuel A. Collins, Lewis D. Allen, Bangor; Adelbert Allen, Rodney Leavitt, Drew Plantation; Thomas O. Freeman, Greenbush; Albert Treat, Bradford; Hiram Brawn, John Brawn, Freeman O. Gullifer, Oldtown; Edmund R. Sanborn, Lagrange; Henry L. Bloodworth, Nelson Chester, Lincoln; Thomas L. Berry, Dexter; William Brown, Orono; James S. Brackett, Alton; Charles A. Gilman, Patten; John D. Graves, Hermon; Calvin A. Glidden, Plymouth; David S. Scott, Chester; Zoeth E. Stubbs, Corinna; Lesor Schwenor, Orrington.

TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENT INFANTRY.

Organized at Augusta, October 14, 1862, to serve nine months. Mustered out August 27, 1863.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

William H. Condon, John C. Craig, Joseph L. Emery, James M. Verrill, Dixmont.

TWENTY-SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Bangor, October 10, 1862, to serve nine months, and left on the 21st for Washington, District of Columbia, arriving in that city on the 24th. On the following day they were ordered to Arlington Heights, Virginia, and assigned temporarily to the Third Brigade, Casey's Division. They remained at Arlington Heights until the 3d of November, when they were ordered to Fortress Monroe, Virginia, where they arrived on the 7th, thence proceeded to Newport News, and there remained until the 2d of December. On the 4th of December they left for New Orleans, arriving in that city on the 15th, and immediately proceeded to Baton Rouge, which they occupied on the 17th. On the 31st they were assigned to the First Brigade of Grover's Division. They remained at Baton Rouge until the 13th of March, 1863, when they took part in a reconnoissance to the rear of Port Hudson, after which they returned to Monticello Bayou. On the 26th of March they joined the expedition up the Atchafalaya Lake, and on the 13th of April safely landed at "Irish Bend," where, after crossing the Bayou Teche, they encamped for the night. Early on the morning of the 14th they moved in the direction of Franklin, met the enemy, and after a spirited engagement, drove them from the field. On the 15th they were ordered to garrison Franklin, where they remained until the 25th, then proceeded to New Iberia. On the 6th of May they moved towards Port Hudson, arriving at that place on the 1st of June, and on the 9th participated in an assault on the enemy's works, but were compelled to fall back and were soon after withdrawn, returning to their former duties. On the 14th of June they again participated in an assault on the enemy's works, which, however, was unsuccessful, and after dark they were withdrawn and returned to the position they occupied before the battle. After the surrender of Port Hudson, on the 8th of July, they were quartered inside the works, and there remained until the 24th, when they started for Maine, passing up the Mississippi by boat to Cairo, then by rail to Bangor, where they arrived on the 6th of August, and were mustered out and discharged the United States service on the 15th of the same month, by Lieutenant F. E. Crossman, Seventeenth United States Infantry.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Simon G. Jerrard, Levant.
Adjutant Frank G. Flagg, Hampden.
Assistant Surgeon Jason Huckins, Levant.
Chaplain John K. Lincoln, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major Roscoe G. Rollins, Bangor.
Quartermaster-Sergeant Edward M. Young, Kenduskeag.
Commissary-Sergeant William Lowney, Bangor.
Fife Major George W. Grant, Bangor.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Henry Crosby, Hampden.
First Lieutenant James W. Williams, Hampden.
First Lieutenant George E. Brown, Hampden.

Second Lieutenant James P. Ireland, Corinna.
 Second Lieutenant Hiram T. Batchelder, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant Gibson C. Patten, Corinna.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George E. Brown, Hampden.
 Sergeant Hiram T. Batchelder, Hampden.
 Sergeant Samuel M. Homsted, Hampden.
 Sergeant Daniel T. Mayo, Carmel.
 Sergeant Gilson C. Patten, Corinna.
 Sergeant Joseph E. Joy, Hampden.
 Sergeant John E. Tribou, Hampden.
 Sergeant Austin Pomroy, Hampden.
 Corporal John M. Sullivan, Hampden.
 Corporal Alfred W. Bussell, Argyle.
 Corporal John S. Ward, Hampden.
 Corporal George W. Knowles, Hampden.
 Corporal James Patten, jr., Hermon.
 Corporal Sumner Smith, jr., Hampden.
 Corporal Daniel Smith, jr., Hampden.
 Corporal Melvin F. Avery, Hampden.
 Corporal Alonzo Y. Foster, Newburg.
 Corporal Abram G. Gerow, Newburg.
 Musician Melville Walker, Hampden.
 Musician William F. Walker, Hampden.
 Wagoner Isaiah C. Deane, Hampden.

PRIVATES.

Justin B. Atkins, Charles E. Blaisdell, George C. Blaisdell, William F. Blaisdell, William O. P. Copeland, Edward Copp, Owen R. Hale, Wilbur F. Hubbard, Lewis F. Leighton, Charles H. Leighton, Isaac Morse, Forest E. Stewart, Leonard Palmer, David F. White, Lewis W. White, Abram Young, Luther Young, Alfred Veazie, Corinna; Bartlett Bradford, William W. Bradford, Jason L. Bussell, Robert Bussell, Prentice M. Mayo, John D. Morton, Ichabod F. Partridge, Daniel B. Smith, Carmel; Gershom W. Clifford, Charles W. Fletcher, Cyrus E. Hewes, Frank H. Jewell, Cleves C. Tracy, Hermon; Alber C. Dyer, Etna; Daniel W. Emerson, Charleston; Alonzo Y. Foster, Augustus Newcomb, Newburg; William W. Freeze, Lorenzo Grant, Isaac Mann, Alexander Mann, Mark T. Marsh, Argyle; James Speed, jr., Bradford; Hiram Stone, Bangor; Henry M. Cole, Zenas Cowan, Jonathan P. Emerson, John Emery, jr., John F. Goss, Samuel Hitchcock, Cyrus Humphrey, jr., Edward Humphrey, John B. Humphrey, Ephraim S. Knowles, John W. Knowles, Daniel Lake, George F. Loring, Thomas B. Lufkin, Alexander Mann, Mark T. Marsh, Malachi McAuliffe, Alonzo E. Miller, George A. Miller, George W. Miller, Martin Murch, Alphonzo Porter, Harrison W. Rogers, Edward K. Sawyer, Jedediah Simpson, Augustus Snow, Charles E. Swett, Alonzo Thayer, Benjamin B. Trueworthy, Charles Ward, Hampden.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John I. Gilman, Bangor.
 Captain James W. Williams, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant John T. Gilman, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant George H. Anson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant George H. Anson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel W. Knowles, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Samuel W. Knowles, Bangor.
 Sergeant George T. Rowe, Holden.
 Sergeant Bradford C. Clark, Holden.
 Sergeant Benjamin H. Darling, Hudson.
 Sergeant George R. Mann, Hudson.
 Sergeant Joseph P. Tyler, Bangor.
 Sergeant William E. S. Rice, Bangor.
 Sergeant Christopher A. Page, Bangor.
 Sergeant Seth E. Drinkwater, Bangor.
 Corporal Joseph P. Tyler, Bangor.
 Corporal Joseph E. Hanscom, Dedham.
 Corporal Abiather W. Carle, Hudson.
 Corporal Rufus E. Whitmore, Hudson.
 Corporal Jacob Tasker, Bradford.
 Corporal James E. White, Holden.
 Corporal Joshua S. Kenney, Holden.
 Corporal Elijah S. Smith, Charleston.
 Corporal George A. Pritchard, Brewer.
 Musician George W. Grant, Holden.

Musician Horace C. Griffin, Holden.
 Wagoner Arthur E. Blakeley, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

William H. Ames, Orin N. Bailey, John S. Holt, Bradford; Nathaniel W. Bailey, Ransom Bailey, Glenburn; George W. Bean, Joseph N. Bean, Van Buren Carle, Charles P. Chamberlain, Lorenzo D. Chamberlain, Oscar T. Chase, Daniel Goodwin, George W. Howe, Albert T. Lyshon, Joel Mann, Franklin N. Miles, Andrew J. Potter, Orin Stearns, Gustavus V. Wilson, Hudson; Charles H. Bryant, Lagrange; Augustus D. Clewley, Andrew Sanborn, Brewer; Herbert V. Dickey, Charles Innan, William Kent, Daniel McPhetres, George W. Morris, Timothy E. Phillips, Veazie; Roscoe M. Griffin, William Houston, jr., Silas Howard, Joshua H. Kinney, Franklin B. Moore, James E. Navy, Albert A. Nichols, Andrew J. Orcutt, Elijah B. Orcutt, William A. Rowe, Edwin E. White, Holden; William A. Severance, Lincoln; Martin McKenney, Stetson; Charles E. Beale, Charles E. Brown, Daniel Cates, Lorenzo D. Chamberlain, Oscar T. Chase, Daniel S. Collins, Edward W. Hanson, Edward S. Johnson, Benjamin Kimball, William Lowney, John Montgomery, Charles H. Reid, Amos H. Richardson, Roscoe G. Rollins, George Sawyer, Edmond C. Scribner, James S. Spratt, William Strange, Frederick E. Webster, Charles W. Wilson, Henry O. Wilson, Henry Work, Moses Work, Marcellus Wotton, Alvah M. Young, Harrison C. Young, Bangor.

COMPANY C.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George A. Bolton, Orrington.
 First Lieutenant Jasper Hutchins, Brewer.
 Second Lieutenant Joseph A. Baker, Orrington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Alvah P. Bennett, Brewer.
 Sergeant Alonzo F. Smith, Orrington.
 Sergeant Jacob Bemis, Lagrange.
 Sergeant Cyrus W. Penney, Eddington.
 Corporal Joseph A. Stearns, Brewer.
 Corporal Hiram R. Stevens, Eddington.
 Corporal Daniel T. Thomas, Bradley.
 Corporal Peter C. Smith, Orrington.
 Corporal John H. Smith, Orrington.
 Corporal Samuel E. Burr, Brewer.
 Corporal Elon R. Comins, Eddington.
 Corporal George Glidden, Brewer.
 Musician Enoch R. Nye, Orrington.
 Musician John N. Ames, Orrington.
 Wagoner Emery B. Lufkin, Orrington.

PRIVATES.

George R. Bakeman, Freeman H. Eastman, George B. Gilbert, Charles Glidden, Amos W. Harriman, Richard H. Holyoke, William A. Libbey, Foster Parker, Lorenzo Parker, Henry A. Pierce, Albert R. Winslow, Brewer; Henry W. Clewley, Horace B. Davis, Melzar B. Howe, John S. Maddox, Edward E. Mills, Levi L. Stevens, John C. Innis, Eddington; George Cowan, Glenburn; William M. Danforth, Lagrange; Frederick W. Badershall, Elijah A. Baker, Isaiab A. Baker, Charles A. Beckford, Charles Bowden, Charles H. Bowden, Jeremiah T. Bowden, John E. Bowden, Calvin Bumpus, Eugene A. Chapin, Amasa L. Conant, Charles L. Crane, James W. Freeman, James Harriman, jr., Daniel P. Little, Amos M. Nickerson, William P. Nickerson, Humphrey Pinhorn, Preston I. Pond, Samuel J. Robinson, Albert P. Smith, Howes R. Smith, John W. Torrens, Irving A. Wardwell, Calvin Wedell, Orrington.

COMPANY D.

PRIVATES.

Melvin G. Joy, Ellsworth; George S. Williams, Lagrange.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Henry L. Wood, Dexter.
 First Lieutenant W. Prince Hersey, Lincoln.
 First Lieutenant Thomas J. Pokes, Charleston.
 Second Lieutenant Thomas J. Pokes, Charleston.
 Second Lieutenant Joseph F. Bowler, Lee.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joseph S. Bowler, Lee.
 Sergeant Charles H. Knight, Dexter.
 Sergeant Charles G. Wing, Dexter.

Sergeant William M. Cornforth, Springfield.
Sergeant John E. Allen, Lincoln.
Corporal John C. Lamb, Carroll.
Corporal Jonathan Drew, Charleston.
Corporal Franklin H. Dyer, Charleston.
Corporal Nelson Rollins, Charleston.
Corporal George M. Toward, Dexter.
Corporal Charles L. Lothrop, Prentiss.
Musician James Crawford, Dexter.
Musician Joseph J. Elder, Corinna.
Wagoner Jefferson P. Richardson, Dexter.

PRIVATES.

Caleb B. Akley, Charles W. Conant, Melvin S. Leslie, Patten;
Martin V. Bodwell, Ivory F. Doane, George H. Hathorn, Lincoln;
Constantine E. Carle, Joseph Darling, Bartlett Davis, Walter R.
Chamberlain, Hudson; Daniel Clifford, Moses Ricker, Henry J.
Thurlow, Philemon Tucker, Lee; Aurelius F. Ward, Zachariah S.
Southard, Bowman Cooper, Bradford; Asa S. Carpenter, Samuel
Hall, James L. Hunt, William H. Jordan, Menander O. Moores, Isaiah Strout, Charleston; Charles H. Stuckney, George F. Jipson, Benjamin J. Hall, Seth W. Ewings, Prentiss; George H. Curtiss, Salmon Lamb, Carroll; William M. Johnson, James H. Leighton, Daniel
P. Leighton, William McLaughlin, Ithamer B. Merrill, Solomon Morrill, Charles N. Mountain, Daniel H. Remick, Augustus Scales, Samuel F. Silver, Joseph H. Smith, Sumner Brawn, Sanborn J. Campbell, Charles W. Farrar, Henry C. Fitzgerald, Jacob B. Fogg, Roscoe
Haines, William M. Hall, Jonas Hutchinson, Isaiah K. Ireland, Francis A. Ireland, Alfred Hart, Silas B. Swanton, Samuel A. Swanton, Jacob H. Whittemore, Charles E. Whittemore, Dexter; Liberty B.
Spaulding, Charles Spaulding, John W. Spaulding, Springfield.

COMPANY G.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Alexander Thompson, Mattawamkeag.

COMPANY II.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Isaac W. Case, Kenduskeag.
First Lieutenant Joseph Richardson, Corinth.
Second Lieutenant Anson S. Jerrard, Plymouth.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joseph L. True, Garland.
Sergeant Isaac R. Worth, Corinth.
Sergeant Asa W. Thompson, Exeter.
Sergeant Nicholas G. Reed, Garland.
Sergeant William M. Chapman, Corinth.
Corporal Henry W. Jordan, Stetson.
Corporal Erastus L. Palmer, Garland.
Corporal Abner G. Clark, Levant.
Corporal Danville L. Wymann, Levant.
Corporal Chester M. Herrick, Corinth.
Corporal John M. Morrison, Corinth.
Corporal Edward J. Smart, Plymouth.
Corporal Henry C. Spooner, Kenduskeag.
Musician George W. Buzzell, Plymouth.
Wagoner George F. Davis, Levant.

PRIVATES.

Ivis M. Allen, Edgar E. Holbrook, Franklin Holbrook, Peter Holbrook, Rufus D. Loud, John C. Loud, Edward J. Smart, Calvin Small, Plymouth; Walter E. York, Robert F. Wiggins, George W. Langley,
William A. Langley, John O. Allen, Stetson; Henry J. Ames, David
J. Blanchard, Albert Brown, Alfred Hoyt, Wilfred A. Mitchell, Arthur
H. Morey, Ellis Smith, Edward B. Towle, Kenduskeag; Ansel O.
Wing, Joseph M. Wing, Pirivirid Turner, Charles H. Staples, William D. Staples, Ambrose C. McKusic, Cyrus H. Houston, Alphonso Haskell, Gorham H. Gould, Allen H. Brown, William L. Bran, Orin
Booker, Joseph W. Booker, Rufus B. Gerald, Levant; Alonzo F. Batchelder, William Brown, John A. Davis, Alden B. Ellis, Randall Farmer, Bennett A. Haskell, Jason F. Haskell, Levi A. Lovejoy, Austin Ramsdell, Charles E. Skillin, David Skillin, James A. Tiplady, Garland;
Henry A. Whittier, Benjamin M. Stevens, Clifford W. Shores, Edgar Sargent, Frank M. Robinson, George W. Houston, George W. Herrick, Ransom C. Gould, Sumner T. Ham, Abra G. Hammons, Levi Gardener, William F. Gile, John B. Chandler, Corinth; Stephen S.
Buzzell, Hermon; John E. Daniels, Lee; Mark Thompson, Exeter.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

Allen B. Nichols, Alonzo Philbrick, Bangor; Seth J. Swanton, Dexter.

COMPANY K.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Turner W. Whitehouse, Newport.
Second Lieutenant Edwin W. Trueworthy, Newport.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Albert F. Learned, Newport.
Corporal Andrew Skinner, Exeter.
Corporal Henry T. Nutter, Exeter.
Corporal Chester Trueworthy, Newport.
Corporal Stephen A. Steward, Newport.
Corporal Fernando Miles, Newport.
Musician Jacob H. Steward, Newport.
Musician Oliver I. Folsom, Etna.

PRIVATES.

Leonard Abbott, Henry W. Folsom, Hanson Hutchings, Stowell S.
Spratt, Benjamin F. Carter, Etna; Oliver S. Atwell, Dixmont; Charles H. Caverly, Amos Caverly, John H. Day, Mark Fernald, Tobias A.
Fernald, Demarquis S. Lawrence, Isaac N. A. McKay, Charles
Robert, John M. Scavey, John O. Stuart, Henry E. Trueworthy, James Wedgewood, John Wedgewood, Newport; Nathan P. Colbath,
Henry W. Estes, William Friend, Mark B. Leonard, Charles A. Orff, George A. Pease, John L. Pease, Lorin D. Robinson, Royal L.
Stevens, Exeter; Daniel W. Libbey, Mattawamkeag.

COMPANY D.

Private Alonzo Gray, Bangor.

TWENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Bangor, October 11, 1862, to serve nine months, and left on the 23d of the same month for Washington, District of Columbia, where they arrived and encamped on the 27th. On the 9th of November they embarked for Fortress Monroe, Virginia, arrived at Hampton Roads on the 11th, and the next day were ordered to Newport News, where they remained encamped until December 1st, on which day they embarked on board steamers for New Orleans, arriving in that city on the 16th, and immediately proceeded to Baton Rouge, where they were assigned to the Third Brigade of Grover's Division. They remained at Baton Rouge until the 12th of March, 1863, when they joined in the reconnoissance to Port Hudson, returning on the 16th, and on the 28th embarked for Donaldsonville, Louisiana. Early on the morning of the 14th of April they were engaged with the enemy at Irish Bend, near Franklin, Louisiana, and met with severe loss. They arrived at Port Hudson on the 30th of May, and were engaged in supporting a battery until June 12th, when they participated in the assault on that day, and then returned to their former position. After the surrender of Port Hudson, they remained on duty inside the fortifications at that place until the 26th of July, on which day they embarked for Maine, and reached Bangor on the 9th of August. On the 17th of the same month the regiment was mustered out of the United States service at that place, by Lieutenant F. E. Crossman, Seventeenth United States Infantry, and the men were paid and finally discharged on the same day.

COMPANY A.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Benjamin F. Simpson, Dixmont.

PRIVATES.

Cromwell Carter, Calvin A. Glidden, Robert M. Gustin, Edwin R. Gustin, Etna; James B. Craig, Alfred Marr, John F. Prescott, Dixmont; Benjamin Williams, Bangor.

COMPANY B.

PRIVATES.

Anson Pettingill, Levant; Sullivan D. Wiggin, Bangor.

COMPANY F.

Musician George S. Kimball, Hampden.

COMPANY H.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Wagoner William H. Thompson, Bangor.

PRIVATE.

Private Melvin S. Libbey, Lagrange.

COMPANY I.

Rufus W. Prentiss, Plymouth.

TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, October 18, 1862, to serve nine months, and left on the 26th with orders for Washington, District of Columbia, stopped at New York, and then was ordered to Fort Schuyler to report for duty to Major-General Banks. They garrisoned Fort Schuyler until the 26th of November, when they marched to East New York, and there went into camp. On the 17th of January, 1863, they embarked for Fortress Monroe, and from thence on the 22d for New Orleans, arriving in that city on the 29th. On the 31st disembarked at Chalmette, seven miles below the city, and encamped on Jackson's old battle ground. On the 15th of February they were ordered to Pensacola, Florida, and disembarked at Warrenton Navy Yard on the 17th. They remained at Pensacola until its evacuation, March 22d, and then returned to Warrenton Navy Yard. On the 24th they embarked for New Orleans, where immediately upon their arrival they were ordered for duty at Donaldsonville, Bayou La Fourche and Plaquemine.

On the 27th of May, six companies were ordered to Port Hudson, and there were assigned to General Nickerson's Brigade of Dwight's Division, the others remaining at New Orleans and at Fort Butler, Donaldsonville, Louisiana. That portion of the regiment at Port Hudson was employed for two weeks, day and night, in building batteries and doing picket duty. They participated in the advance on the 14th of June, but suffered no loss. On the 22d they were ordered to assault a bastion of the rebel works, advanced to within a short distance of the enemy's fortifications, but their supports not coming up, retired in good order with a loss of 3 killed and 9 wounded. On the 28th of June that portion of the regiment garrisoning Fort Butler, Donaldsonville, Louisiana, was assailed by an overwhelming force of the enemy, and repulsed them at every point with heavy loss.

On the 4th of July the six companies at Port Hudson were ordered to march to Springfield Landing and there embark to reinforce Fort Butler, then besieged by the enemy, who had succeeded in blockading the river. They arrived July 5th, and on the evening of that day occurred the fiendish murder of Major Bullen, of this regiment, then commanding at Fort Butler, by Private Francis Scott, First Louisiana Volunteers. Coming as it did immediately after the gallant defense of the fort by Major Bullen and his command, it seemed the more atrocious.

On the 10th of July the entire regiment proceeded to Baton Rouge, and there remained until the 6th of August, when they started for Maine, passing up the Mississippi by boat to Cairo, then by rail to Augusta, arriving on the 18th. On the 31st of August the regiment was mustered out of the United States service at Augusta, by Lieutenant F. E. Crossman, Seventeenth United States Infantry, and the men paid and finally discharged on the same day.

STAFF OFFICER.

Surgeon Irving B. Wardwell, Orrington.

COMPANY I.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Jones S. Kelley, Orono.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joseph D. Sawyer, Oldtown.
Sergeant James M. Coombs, Oldtown.
Sergeant Benjamin M. Kelley, Orono.
Corporal Benjamin M. Kelley, Orono.
Corporal William H. Manchester, Oldtown.
Corporal Jonathan F. Cilley, Oldtown.
Corporal Shepard Emery, Veazie.
Corporal Henry M. Sleeper, Milford.
Wagoner Joseph L. Reed, Orono.

PRIVATES.

William A. Averill, Dean R. Burnham, Oakman A. Ellis, Silas S. Foss, Leander V. Hodgdon, Robert Howell, Albert T. Hunt, Charles H. Johnson, Horace L. Manchester, Sidney A. Milton, Albert G. Quimby, Cyrus S. Stevens, Oldtown; John T. Sprague, Veazie; William B. Grindle, Brewer; William H. Hanscom, William Merrill, Thomas M. Perry, Orono; Henry J. Longley, Milford.

TWENTY-NINTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment, with the exception of companies A and D, was organized at Augusta, from November 13, 1863, to January, 1864, to serve three years. Companies A and D were transferred from the Tenth Maine Battalion, then serving with the Twelfth Army Corps, in Tennessee, and joined the regiment at New Orleans, Louisiana. The regiment left Augusta January 31, 1864, and embarked at Portland February 2d, on board steamship De Molay, for New Orleans, Louisiana, at which place it arrived on the 16th. On the 29th they left Algiers for Brashear City, thence proceeded to Franklin, arriving on the 21st, and were assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps. On the 15th of March they left for Alexandria, on the Red river; arrived there on the 25th, and laid in camp until the 29th, when transferred to the First Brigade. On the 8th and 9th of April they were engaged in the battles of Mansfield and Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, and rendered most effective service. Subsequently they retreated with the army to Grand Ecore, Louisiana, which they reached on the 11th. On the 23d they assisted in driving the enemy at Cane River Crossing, and reached Alexandria, Louisiana, on the 25th. They remained at that place until May 12th, and while there assisted in building the famous dam which saved the fleet. On the 13th of May they proceeded towards the Mississippi river, which they reached on the 20th, and on the 22d went into camp at Morganza Bend, where they remained until July 2d, on which day they left for New Orleans, reaching that city on the 3d. On the 5th they left in steamship Clinton for Fortress Monroe, Virginia, arriving on the 12th, when, being ordered to Washington, reached that city on the following day. After remaining a few days near Washington, they marched to Harper's Ferry, Virginia, and participated in all the marches and movements of the Army of the Shenandoah, including the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek, in all of which they rendered most effective service. On the 18th of October, 1864, Company A, Captain John Q. Adams, transferred from the Tenth Maine Battalion, was mustered out and discharged the United States service, its term of service having expired, and its place was filled by the First Company of Unassigned Infantry, Captain Edward S. Butler, organized at Augusta, Maine, September 16, 1864, to serve one year.

On the 1st of January, 1865, the regiment was encamped near Stevenson's Depot, Virginia, attached to the First Brigade, First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, and from March 31st to April 19th was occupied chiefly in marching to given points for special service. On the 20th they took cars for Washington, District of Columbia, and on the 4th and 5th of May did guard duty at Washington Arsenal over the assassins of President Lincoln. On the 23d they participated in the grand review at Washington with the Army of the Potomac.

On the 31st of May, company A, (Captain Butler,) one year's men and all whose term of service expired prior to October 1st, 1865, were ordered to be mustered out of the United States service.

On the 1st of June the regiment embarked at Alexandria, Virginia, on board steamship Ariel for Savannah, arriving there on the 5th, and on the 14th and 15th proceeded to Georgetown, South Carolina. The regiment was divided into detachments, and occupied the following stations, all in South Carolina, viz: Railroad bridge on the Pedee river, Kingstree, Marion, Florence, Darlington, and Society Hill, with headquarters at Darlington. Their duties were arduous and consisted in part in assisting in the making of contracts and investigating complaints made by freedmen and planters. On the 27th of March, 1866, they were ordered to Hilton Head, South Carolina, which they occupied, with detachments at St. Helena Island and at Seabrook, until June 21st, when the regiment was mustered out of the United States service by Lieutenant H. S. French, Assistant Commissary of Musters, Department of the Carolinas. On the following day they embarked on board steamer for New York, arriving on the 25th at Harts Island, New York Harbor, where, on the 28th of June, the men were paid and finally discharged.

STAFF OFFICERS.

Assistant Surgeon Atwell W. Swett, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major Thomas H. Briggs, Bangor.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

William Peabody, Dixmont.
George H. Fox, Dexter.

COMPANY C.

Private Franklin H. Neally, Hampden.

COMPANY D.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Wagoner Charles B. Canney, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Thomas J. Burke, jr., Joshua R. Shorey, Enfield; Charles Corson, Bangor; Daniel B. McKenney, Benjamin P. Spencer, Lincoln; Frank C. Paine, Lowell.

COMPANY E.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Thomas H. Briggs, Hudson.

PRIVATES.

William S. Alexander, Francis N. Miles, Daniel Mann, Hudson; Albert Annis, Kenduskeag; John C. Harvey, Maxfield; Leverett D. Hopkins, Ellsworth; Charles M. Johnson, Alton; Spaulding Plummer, Albion Smith, Wilbur F. Ward, Fred W. Wing, Levant; Elias W. Whittier, Enfield; Henry G. Prescott, Corinth.

COMPANY G.

Private John H. Knox, Garland.

COMPANY H.

PRIVATES.

Charles G. Bartlett, Newburg; Levi D. Cavedy, Stetson; Charles H. Inman, Orono; Benjamin Wiley, Etna.

THIRTIETH REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, from December 12, 1863, to January 8, 1864, to serve three years, and on the 7th of February left for Portland, Maine, where it embarked on board steamer Merrimac for New Orleans, Louisiana, arriving in that city on the 16th. On the 18th they moved by railroad from Algiers to Brashear City, and thence by steamer up Bayou Teche to Franklin, where they were assigned to the Third Brigade, First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps. From February 19th to March 14th, inclusive, they remained encamped at Franklin, and on the 15th entered upon the Red River campaign. On the 8th of April they took an honorable part in the battle of Sabine Cross Roads, and on the 9th in that of Pleasant Hill. Their loss in both engagements was 11 killed, 66 wounded and 71 missing. They afterwards retreated towards Grand Ecore, which place they reached on the 11th. On the 21st of April they resumed the retreat, and on the 23d took a most prominent part in the engagement at Cane River Crossing, from which position, considered almost impregnable, they drove the enemy. Their casualties in this engagement were as follow: 2 officers and 10 enlisted men killed, 2 officers and 67 enlisted men wounded, and 7 enlisted men missing. On the 25th of April they reached Alexandria, Louisiana, and on the 13th of May continued the retreat towards the Mississippi river, which they reached on the 22d. They remained encamped at Morganza Bend until the 2d of July, when they embarked for New Orleans, thence on the 11th for Virginia. On the 18th they reached Fortress Monroe, and were immediately sent to Deep Bottom, where they were employed on picket duty and in raising temporary earthworks. From Deep Bottom they were transported to Washington, whence they marched to Harpers Ferry, Virginia.

During the latter part of August and early in September, they participated in the numerous movements of the Army of the Shenandoah. In September their brigade was detached from its division, and so continued until October 26th. Although in this interval the regiment was engaged in arduous and responsible duties, it failed to share the glory of General Sheridan's battles and victories in September and October. On the 26th of October they rejoined their division at Cedar Creek, Virginia, thence on the 9th of November moved to a position between Kearns town and Newton, and on the 30th of December went into camp at Stevenson Depot, four miles north of Winchester.

Soon after the 1st of January, 1865, they moved and occupied Winchester, Virginia, where, on the 8th of January, they were joined by three companies formed of the re-enlisted men and recruits of the Thirteenth Maine Volunteers, and which had been assigned to this regiment by special order, issued November 18, 1864. The consolidation was completed in the month of January, under the immediate orders of General Sheridan, the Thirtieth being formed in seven companies, and retaining the field and staff officers without change. The men of the Thirteenth Maine were organized into a battalion of three companies, commanded by officers of their own regiment. The two battalions were then united, and the consolidation effected by the muster out of five commissioned officers of the Thirtieth and a few non-commissioned of both regiments. The companies of the Thirteenth were lettered B, H, and K in the new organization. They remained at Winchester until the 10th of April, when they proceeded towards Washington; reached that city on the 21st, and on the 26th encamped in the vicinity of Fort Meigs, where they remained until the 2d of June. In the meantime they formed a part of the line of sentinels stationed around Washington until after the capture of the assassins of President Lincoln, and subsequently did guard duty at the Washington Arsenal, where the trial of the conspirators was being held.

On the 23d of May they took part in the grand review of the Army of the Potomac, and on the 2d of June were transferred from the Third Brigade, First Division, Nineteenth Corps, to the Second Brigade, same division, with which they left on the 30th for Savannah, Georgia, arriving in that city on the 7th of July. They remained on duty at Savannah until the 20th of August, when the regiment was mustered out of the United States service by Captain George E. Moulton, Assistant Commissary of Musters, District of Savannah, and on which day they left for Maine, arriving on the 24th at Portland, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 29th.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

William Doble, Lagrange; Marston W. Tower, Belmont; Turner Wade, Bradford; Elijah W. Brackett, Patten; James G. Robbins, Brewer.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Freeman U. Whiting, Newport.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles W. Whiting, Stetson.
Sergeant William R. Lock, Etna.

Corporal Samuel Day, Plymouth.
Corporal Gustin Jordan, Etna.
Corporal William H. Toward, Dexter.

PRIVATES.

Albert L. Appleby, John Brooks, Andrew Cole, Sumner B. McCarrland, James W. Nickerson, Newport; Leonard Abbott, Seldon A. Brown, Frank F. Barden, Joseph H. Holbrook, Etna; Erastus Bickford, James A. Reed, Dixmont; Samuel Foloman, Alfred Joy, John L. O'Mara, Bangor; Lorenzo D. Libby, George W. Curtis, Samuel Groves, John Hussey, jr., Columbus Hussey, Dennis Harrington, Francis Jewell, Levi Jackson, Johnson Lunt, George S. Mitchell, Daniel C. Prescott, Samuel Philbrooks, George C. Fogg, Hollis Smith, Carmel; Cyrus L. Coffin, Stetson; Edward Crawford, Burnham; Frederick O. Graffam, Samuel Weeks, Corinna; Rufus Greeley, Dexter; Edmund F. Gallagher, Thomaston; Lewis Jordan, Alpheus Short, Mariaville; Albert Murray, William Murray, Plymouth; Esburn Nutt, Burnham.

COMPANY C.

PRIVATES.

Edward G. Bryant, Fairfield; Frank F. Barden, Selden A. Brown, Etna; Samuel Weeks, Fred A. Chase, Corinna; John Benjamin, George W. Curtis, Leonidas Leathers, Samuel Philbrook, Daniel C. Prescott, Carmel; Edgar Holbrook, Plymouth.

COMPANY D.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Warren H. Boynton, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Daniel Quimby, jr., Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Henry Granville, Bangor.
Sergeant Alexander F. Bakeman, Brewer.
Sergeant Patrick J. Farrell, Bangor.
Sergeant Albert P. Titcomb, Lincoln.
Sergeant Tristram C. Goding, Hampden.
Corporal Nelson B. Lindsey, Bangor.
Corporal Andrew W. Strout, Bradford.
Corporal James T. Young, Belmont.
Corporal John H. Pease, Richmond.
Musician Alvin McAllister, Alton.

PRIVATES.

Edwin Averill, John Cornelly, Thomas Powers, Robert Quimby, James Shannon, Charles W. Lovell, Henry Gillispie, Charles Dougherty, Edward Farrell, William Gillispie, John Hurley, George P. Hill, Charles Harrington, Joshua Jones, James H. Logan, Howard Morrison, Andrew J. Merithew, Michael Meagham, Peter Morgan, John Mooney, William H. McKenney, Thomas Mortel, Gustavus Nason, Thomas Ruiney, George W. Robbins, Henry M. Robbins, Charles H. Smith, Hiram B. Stevens, Timothy Sullivan, Daniel Sullivan, Thomas Williams, Bangor; Thomas H. Welman, Isaac F. Kendall, Benjamin Jordan, Caleb S. Ginn, Orrin Dickey, Belmont; John W. B. Austin, Curtis Sabine, Eddington; Frank Wilkinson, Anthony Williams, Alton; Charles H. Boden, Asa Nicholson, Foster A. Parker, Daniel F. Sargent, Brewer; Nelson Ware, Harvey A. Severance, Preston I. Pond, Gottlieb Esseg, Albert A. George, Orrington; James Coulyer, Hale P. Jackson, Hermon; William H. Ward, Charles Stewart, Orono; John Brooks, Newport, John W. Tozier, Hudson; Andrew Cole, William H. Toward, Dexter; Joel Smart, Charles C. Lancaster, Francis C. Emery, Maxfield; John Collins, Joseph W. Downs, Springfield; Josiah M. Coffin, Troy; Nathaniel Evans 2d, Orrin P. McGray, Brooks; Ous L. Keith, Oldtown; Warren Kendall, Thorndike; Joel P. Quimby, Rockland.

COMPANY E.

PRIVATES.

John Butler, Orono; Henry Cormiea, Oldtown; George W. Inman, Veazie; Alden Lander, Dexter; John Montgomery, Bangor.

COMPANY F.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George Stuart, Rockland.
Sergeant Thomas W. Burke, Portland.
Corporal Charles W. Bond, Portland.
Corporal Robert E. Stacey, Patten.
Corporal Elbridge Chick, Clifton.

PRIVATES.

John Adley, jr., Henry H. Gillespie, Bangor; Nathaniel Chick, Moses Chick, George M. Fogg, Clifton; Thomas Chester, Oliver Hunt, Levi Hunt, Staceyville; Daniel L. Howe, Hudson; James Harrimann, jr., Joshua S. Marshall, Orrington; Charles Haskell, Edwin A. Sprague, Rockland.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Phineas W. Goodwin, Stetson; John C. Gray, William H. Knowlton, Elijah L. Knowlton, Oliver P. Paul, Belmont; Patrick A. Merrick, Lagrange; James M. Yeates, Appleton.

COMPANY H.

PRIVATES.

Henry H. Gillespie, Bangor; Elijah W. Brackett, Patten, Amaziah Curtis, Patrick Doherty, Prentiss; James G. Robbins, Brewer.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

John V. Busher, John V. Busher, jr., Freedom; Charles Clemens, Orrin Overlock, Liberty; Hosea Knowlton, Union; Henry L. Payson, Montville; William F. Abbott, Etna; Cyrus L. Coffin, Stetson; Alonzo Burrill, George C. Fogg, Levi Jackson, Johnson Lunt, Hollis Smith, Carmel; Joseph H. Holbrook, Albert Murray, Plymouth.

COMPANY K.

PRIVATES.

Levi Hunt, Oliver Hunt, Staceyville; George W. Inman, Veazie; John Killiber, Mariaville, William McLellan, Daniel Carr, George H. Jones, Oldtown; Joseph Pitcher, Washington; Abram Place, jr., Palermo; Richard Sterling, Thomaston; Asa C. Brickett, Etna; Jeremiah B. White, Greenfield.

THIRTY-FIRST REGIMENT INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized in Augusta, in March and April, 1864, to serve three years, and left April 18th for Washington, District of Columbia. Upon their arrival at Alexandria, Virginia, they were assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, and immediately marched to Bristow Station, Virginia, where they remained a few days. On the morning of May 4th, broke camp, and on the 6th participated in the battle of the Wilderness, in which they lost heavily in killed and wounded. On the 12th they were engaged with the enemy at Spottsylvania Court House, losing in the engagement 12 killed, 75 wounded, and 108 missing. On the 24th they crossed the North Anna river under a heavy fire from the enemy. During the night of the 26th they re-crossed the North Anna river, and in two days reached the Pamunkey river, where they skirmished with the enemy on the 29th and 30th.

On the 31st of May and 1st of June they were engaged with the enemy at Tolopotomoy Creek, and on the 3d participated in the engagement at Bethesda Church, losing 15 killed and 39 wounded. On the 4th they marched to Cold Harbor, and remained under fire and in frequent skirmishes until the 12th, suffering greatly from the shelling and sharpshooters of the enemy. On the 12th they commenced a long, weary march across the Chickahominy and the James rivers, and on the 16th skirmished with the enemy in front of Petersburg. On the 17th they participated in the assault and capture of the enemy's works, and from that date until the great battle of July 30th they remained constantly under fire, losing largely in officers and men.

In the battle of July 30th, celebrated by the explosion of the rebel fort, they were assigned to an important position, and were the first to enter the rebel works. They lost on that day 10 killed, 31 wounded, and 47 prisoners. From this time until the battle of the Weldon Railroad, August 18th, they remained under fire before Petersburg, doing picket duty. On August 18th they went to the support of the Fifth Corps in taking the Weldon Railroad, remaining in the front lines until September 14th, when relieved and allowed a few days of comparative rest.

On September 30th, in the battle of Poplar Spring Church, they rendered most effective service, and lost on that day 5 killed, 15 wounded and 16 taken prisoners. From the 1st until the 27th of October they were engaged mainly in drilling and on picket duty. At the grand onward movement of the 27th of October, they were ordered to Fort Fisher, which they occupied and garrisoned until the 29th of November, being meanwhile strengthened by the addition of the Fourth and the Sixth companies of Unassigned Infantry, organized at Augusta, Maine, on the 4th and 18th of October, 1864, to serve one year, and which were assigned as companies L and M respectively. On the 29th of November the Ninth Corps was ordered to relieve the Second Corps, and the regiment was assigned to garrison Fort Davis, on the Jerusalem Plank Road, in front of Petersburg.

During the month of December the regiment received an accession of 15 officers, and 470 enlisted men by the consolidation with it of the Thirty-second Maine volunteers.

They remained at Fort Davis until February 11, 1865, when they were ordered to the left and encamped near Parke Station on the Army Line and City Point Railroad, where they remained until April 2d, on which day they were engaged in the assault upon the enemy's works and suffered severely. On the 3d of April they marched through Petersburg up the South Side Railroad in pursuit of the enemy, arriving at Nottoway Court House on the 6th. On the 8th they proceeded with a detachment of prisoners to Ford's Station, where they arrived on the 11th, delivered up their charge, and at once returned to Burksville Junction. On the 20th of April they proceeded to City Point and there embarked for Alexandria, Virginia, arriving in that city on the 27th.

On the 15th of July the regiment was mustered out of the United States service near Alexandria, Virginia, by Lieutenant E. Rose, Assistant Commissary of Musters, and arrived on the 19th at Bangor, Maine, where the men were paid and finally discharged on the 27th.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Daniel White, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Edward L. Gatchell, Bangor.
Major Daniel White, Bangor.
Major George A. Bolton, Bangor.
Adjutant Roscoe G. Rollins, Bangor.
Surgeon Preston Fisher, Orono.
Assistant Surgeon Preston Fisher, Orono.
Assistant Surgeon Sullivan D. Wiggin, Bangor.
Quartermaster-Sergeant George E. Holt, Bangor.
Commissary-Sergeant Henry C. Bagley, Bangor.
Commissary-Sergeant Charles E. Gatchell, Bangor.
Principal Musician Emerson Chatman, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major L. O. Merriam, Garland.
Hospital Steward Sullivan D. Wiggin, Bangor.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Daniel White, Bangor.
 Captain James Dean, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant James Dean, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant George A. Bolton, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Stephen D. Benson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant George A. Bolton, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Stephen D. Benson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant George A. Dickey, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Seth E. Drinkwater, Bangor.
 Sergeant Stephen D. Benson, Bangor.
 Sergeant George A. Dickey, Bangor.
 Sergeant William H. H. Stackpole, Kenduskeag.
 Sergeant Robert Carlisle, Bangor.
 Corporal Leonard Trafton, Alton.
 Corporal Thomas T. Carey, Eddington.
 Corporal George F. Goldthwait, Bangor.
 Corporal Alfred P. Russ, Kenduskeag.
 Musician Emerson Chatman, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Charles G. Andrew, A. N. Benson, H. C. Bagley, George E. Holt, George W. Jones, Frederick Jakins, James H. Belcher, Paul Berry, Enoch R. Cutts, Benjamin Chase, Alfred R. Couillard, James Duffy, jr., William H. Gulliver, John W. Howard, Charles Lansil, Frank McGonagh, Charles H. Prescott, William T. Pierce, Francis Rafferty, John Shanahan, Augustus A. Smith, James Wrenn, George L. Westgate, Charles H. Whittier, Bangor; Horace H. Boyington, Everett Boyington, Orrin Tobey, Lot Dennis, William P. Tidd, Prentiss; Alfred S. Warren, Charles E. Page, Charleston; James F. Beath, Kenduskeag; James M. Verrill, Edgar J. Sewall, Dixmont; Amos W. Blackman, Henry Bissell, Daniel W. Harris, Bradley; George W. Sargent, Frederick R. Cole, Dexter; Charles J. Churchill, Eben D. Crosby, Walter Davis, Wilbur F. Eddy, Jerry Moulton, Llewellyn O. Rowe, Eddington; Jonathan C. Spaulding, James B. Erskine, Bradford; Moses W. Clark, Andrew J. Light, Levi E. Orf, Christopher Overlock, Hermon; Adney Rogers, Dover; Benjamin C. Nye, George J. Livingston, Asa Humphrey, Cyrus Humphrey, jr., Hampden; William H. Chapin, Alanson Eldridge, William B. Grindle, Enoch R. Nye, Orrington; Henry P. Marshall, Orono; Charles E. Fogg, Otis; Allen Gow, Robbinston; Alonzo S. Harriman, Glenburn; Asa J. Morrow, Alton; Leonard R. Merrill, Brewer.

COMPANY B.

Captain George A. Bolton, Bangor.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Edwin S. Rogers, Patten.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Samuel A. Crummitt, Patten.
 Wagoner Isaac York, Patten.

PRIVATES.

Bradish B. Brown, Wallace T. Blackwell, Layfayette Carpenter, Edward Curo, Alonzo R. Clark, Isaac Donhan, David Gonier, John M. Gerry, John B. Husey, George O. Lincoln, Horace D. Miles, Abner H. Pierce, Benjamin Perow, Adoniram B. Smith, Peter Whalen, Patten; Charles H. Farwell, Ezra Eyrick, jr., Alonzo C. Weeks, Mount Chase.

COMPANY F.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William Currier, Brewer.
 Captain Byron C. Gilmore, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Byron C. Gilmore, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Albert S. Snow, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles B. Cobb, Bangor.
 Sergeant Alfred G. Fickett, Brewer.
 Sergeant Lorenzo D. Parker, Brewer.
 Sergeant Leander O. Merriman, Garland.
 Sergeant George R. Boyer, Bangor.
 Corporal Edward F. Cobb, Bangor.
 Corporal Andrew H. Burr, Brewer.

Corporal Thomas H. Coombs, Bradford.

Corporal Zelotes Lancaster, Oldtown.

Corporal George Lunt, Bangor.

Corporal Frank Scribner, Patten.

Corporal Hugh Carleton, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Francis A. Cobb, Frederick E. Cook, Daniel Constantine, Daniel Connel, Samuel Dearborn, jr., Daniel Dwyer, John Duffy, Jeremiah Donovan, Bartlett Flaherty, James M. Gifford, Patrick Gillogly, James E. Hatton, Daniel E. Hennessey, Samuel W. Leathers, John Linskey, John McLaughlin, William McLellan, Benjamin Pendleton, James Sweeney, John O. Sullivan, Nathaniel Teague, Thomas Timmins, Horace C. Whitmore, Alex Whitten, Bangor; Uriah Treadwell, Springfield; Edward W. Armstrong, Nelson Neddo, Hampden; Josiah J. Murphy, Richard K. Champeon, Sumner P. Champeon, Garland; Jefferson Bryant, Enfield; George B. Martin, Eddington; George W. Champeon, John E. Kimball, Exeter; George V. McCobb, Almanzo Fletcher, Bradford; Laforest Cushing, Lagreene F. Cushing, Henry C. Clark, Clement L. Densmore, Thomas Fitzgerald, Edward E. Snow, Jefferson Severance, George Simpson, Brewer; James McMullen, Mattawamkeag; Orrin Larabee, Carroll; Lucien W. Lyon, Aaron Kneeland, Lincoln; Frank Davis, Dover; Daniel Estes, George H. Garnett, William Ladd, Medway; Henry W. Lancaster, Deziab Carrow, Oldtown; Edwin A. Freeze, Lagrange; Henry Hains, Holden.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Lovell A. Towle, Newport; David H. Morrison, Dixmont.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Edward L. Getchell, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant DeWitt C. Morrill, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Roscoe G. Rollins, Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles E. Getchell, Bangor.
 Sergeant Samuel L. Kimball, Patten.
 Sergeant James M. Davis, jr., Bangor.
 Sergeant Charles L. Hackett, Patten.
 Corporal Amos W. Harriman, Brewer.
 Corporal Hosea J. King, Bradford.
 Corporal Miles J. Sweeney, Bangor.
 Corporal Francis P. Hall, Brewer.
 Corporal Charles A. Orff, Exeter.
 Corporal George W. Huntington, Bangor.
 Musician Silsby E. Rowe, Holden.
 Wagoner Charles H. Stocker, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Samuel E. Coombs, Thomas Cuncannon, James M. Davis, John H. Harrison, Samuel J. Harrison, Mark T. Hatch, Nelson C. Boynton, George Emery, William A. Murray, Martin McLaughlin, Anthony McNair, William Rodgers, Henry N. Smith, James Everett, L. Walbridge, Patrick Welch, William Winn, Hosea B. Segro, Bangor; John S. Sanborn, William T. Trott, Lagrange; Noah F. Burgers, John G. Buswell, George A. Clark, Roseoe G. Tebbetts, Glenburn; Newell Weeks, Stetson; Charles Cressy, Reuben Clarke, William C. Doe, Henry W. Palmer, Corinth; Charles H. Spearing, Joseph Mansell, Morrill Mansell, Hermon; Calvin L. Curtis, Daniel Doliff, Alton; William H. Rowell, Bradley; Joseph S. Cowan, George R. Genness, Hampden; Benjamin S. Page, James C. Dyer, Veazie; Lewis Cantin, Samuel Gowen, Bradford; Patrick Newman, Orono; Charles C. Downs, Mellen Gilmore, Brewer; John Murray, Oldtown; Albert G. Gould, Corinna; Alva W. Leighton, Orrington.

COMPANY I.

PRIVATES.

Amasa S. Folsom, Jere S. Rowe, Newport; Peter Murry, Joseph J. Wiseman, Bangor.

COMPANY K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal Benjamin R. Jones, Bangor.
 Corporal Joseph Hart, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

George M. Butterfield, Springfield; William M. Mancy, Patten.

COMPANY L.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Alvan D. Brock, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Jewett McPherson, Bangor.
Sergeant William J. Mills, Bangor.
Corporal Henry W. Martin, Bangor.
Corporal Moses F. Hackett, Brewer.
Corporal Franklin Densmore, Bangor.
Corporal Benjamin G. Bryer, Lagrange.
Corporal Columbus J. Noble, Bangor.
Corporal Thomas E. Wiggan, Bangor.
Musician Rienzo M. Norton, Bangor.
Wagoner William H. Tibbetts, Exeter.

PRIVATES.

George H. Bennett, Thomas W. Bennett, Thomas Barry, William F. Bean, Charles Belcher, Frederick W. Flye, Augustus W. Fogg, John Goldthwaite, George A. Hewes, George Kennie, George W. Littlefield, Barzilla M. Libby, John McKeague, Nash McKay, Franklin N. McKusick, Frank L. Perkins, James A. Sront, Charles G. Sawyer, George S. Sullivan, George Tobin, Joseph C. White, jr., Lester B. Washburn, Alvah M. Young, Bangor; Josiah Willey, Bradford; Benjamin J. Bagley, Ezekiel Pinkham, Dixmont; Andrew J. Taylor, Hermon; Wilson Hatch, Lagrange; Thomas Kane, Oldtown; Joseph N. Libby, George H. Patten, Brewer; Orrin J. McKenney, Adoniram McKenney, Enfield; William F. Moore, Holden; Henry F. Nutter, Exeter; John E. Phillips, Glenburn; Alban B. Sweat, Howland.

COMPANY M.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain J. Sumner Rogers, Orrington.
Captain Alvan D. Brock, Bangor.
First Lieutenant George I. Brown, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant J. Sumner Rogers, Orrington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Elisha W. Kent, Orrington.
Sergeant Edward Beatham, Enfield.

PRIVATES.

Augustus E. Dinsmore, Edwin E. Willard, Exeter; Henry W. Estes, Corinna; Humphrey Grant, Hermon; William Knights, Lee; Charles F. Leavitt, Bangor.

THIRTY-SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY—COMPANY I.

PRIVATES

Franklin Grant, Peter Murry, James J. Wiseman, Bangor.

FIRST BATTALION INFANTRY.

This battalion, composed of the Twenty-first, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth companies of unassigned infantry, recruited at Augusta, Maine, in February and March, 1865, to serve one year, and designed for the Fifteenth Regiment Maine volunteers, was organized as the First Battalion infantry on the 25th of May, there being no vacancy in the Fifteenth Maine. The above-named companies were lettered A, B, C, and D, respectively. The battalion was assigned to the Second Brigade, Dwight's Division, then in the Shenandoah Valley, and afterwards proceeded to Washington, District of Columbia, where they remained until the 1st of June, on which day they embarked for Savannah, Georgia. On the 6th of July the battalion was ordered to South Carolina, and did duty at different places in that State until the 5th of April, 1866, when its term of service having expired, it was mustered out of the United States service, at Charleston, South Carolina, by Major Leslie Smith, Commissary of Musters, and immediately left for Hart's Island, New York harbor, where the men were paid and finally discharged.

COMPANY A.

PRIVATES.

John B. Dean, Robert Foss, David M. Gipson, Edward Johnson, Newport; Nathaniel Hall, Lowell.

COMPANY B.

PRIVATES.

Edwin H. Ham, Exeter; George W. Morrill, Passadumkeag; Frank H. Oliver, Orono.

UNASSIGNED COMPANIES.

Thirty companies of infantry were organized at Augusta, Maine, in 1864 and 1865, to serve one, two and three years, for regiments in the field, and were assigned as follows, viz:

[We give only the paragraphs concerning such companies as contained men from the Penobscot county.]

The Third, (Captain Samuel S. Mann,) organized September 20, 1864, was assigned to the Ninth regiment as Company K, and mustered out of the United States service at Raleigh, North Carolina, July 13, 1865, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Fourth, (Captain Alvan D. Brock,) organized October 4, 1864, was assigned to the Thirty-first Maine volunteers as Company L, and mustered out of the United States service with that regiment near Alexandria, Virginia, July 15, 1865, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Fifth, (Captain Addison W. Lewis,) organized October 5, 1864, was assigned to the Nineteenth Maine volunteers, and the members thereof transferred to the several companies of that regiment, with which they were mustered out of the United States service May 31, 1865, at Bailey's Cross Roads, Virginia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Sixth, (Captain J. Sumner Rogers,) organized October 18, 1864, was assigned to the Thirty-first Maine volunteers as Company M, and mustered out of the United States service with that regiment July 15, 1865, near Alexandria, Virginia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Eighth, (Captain George S. Scammon,) organized December 17, 1864, was assigned to the Eleventh Maine volunteers, and the members thereof transferred to Companies I and K of that regiment, and mustered out of the United States service at the expiration of their term of service.

The Ninth, (Captain Malcolm W. Long,) organized January 21, 1865, was attached to the Engineer Brigade, Army of the James, and mustered out of the United States service September 5, 1865, at Richmond, Virginia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Tenth, (Captain Edward M. Robinson,) organized February 8, 1865, was assigned to the Twelfth Maine volunteers as Company E, and mustered out of the United States service at Savannah, Georgia, February 16, 1866, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Twelfth, (Captain John Montgomery,) organized February 23, 1865, was assigned to the Twelfth Maine volunteers as Company F, and mustered out of the United States service at Savannah, Georgia, March 3, 1866, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Thirteenth, (Captain John O. W. Paine,) organized February 25, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth regiment as Company E, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Fourteenth, (Captain James N. Fowler,) organized March 4, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth Maine volunteers as Company F, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Fifteenth, (Captain Henry L. Wood,) organized March 14, 1865, was assigned to the Twelfth Maine volunteers as Company H, and mustered out of the United States service at Savannah, Georgia, March 16, 1866, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Sixteenth, (Captain Horace N. Bolster,) organized March 21, 1865, was assigned to the Twelfth Maine volunteers as Company K, and mustered out of the United States service at Savannah, Georgia, March 17, 1866, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Seventeenth, (Captain Frederick S. Barnard,) organized March 16, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth Maine volunteers as Company G, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Nineteenth, (Captain Otis Gilmore,) organized March 21, 1865, was assigned for duty at Augusta, Maine, and mustered out of the United States service May 23, 1865, at Augusta, Maine, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Twentieth, (Captain Joseph H. Freeman,) organized March 24, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth Maine volunteers, as Company H, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Twenty-first, (Captain Calvin S. Brown,) organized March 29, 1865, was assigned to the First Battalion infantry as Company A, and mustered out of the United States service, April 5th, 1866, at Charleston, South Carolina, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Twenty-second, (Captain Albert L. Spencer,) organized March 27, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth Maine volunteers as Company I, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Twenty-third, (Captain James W. Libby,) organized March 25, 1865, was assigned to the Fourteenth Maine volunteers as Company K, and mustered out of the United States service August 28, 1865, at Darien, Georgia, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The Twenty-fourth, (Captain Benjamin O. Barrows,) organized March 30, 1865, was assigned to the First Battalion infantry as Company B, and mustered out of the United States service April 5, 1866, at Charleston, South Carolina, by reason of expiration of term of service.

The Twenty-eighth, (Captain David B. Chesley.) The men enlisted for this company were all sworn into the United States service by either Provost Marshals or regularly appointed Mustering Officers. They were never mustered into company organization from the fact that recruiting was stopped before the maximum number of men was presented. They were discharged May 13, 1865, at Augusta, Maine, in accordance with special instructions from the War Department, dated April 30, 1865.

The Thirtieth, (Captain Samuel L. Gilman,) organized April 14, 1865, remained at Augusta, Maine, and was mustered out of the United States service at that place May 19, 1865, in accordance with telegraphic instructions from the War Department, dated April 29, 1865.

THIRD COMPANY (IN NINTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

George H. Brown, Oldtown.

FOURTH AND SIXTH COMPANIES.

(See rolls of Companies L and M, Thirty-first Regiment Infantry.)

FIFTH COMPANY.

Shepherd H. Mellow, Oldtown. (Assigned to Company II, Nineteenth Regiment infantry.)

EIGHTH COMPANY.

Charles E. Elwell, Bangor. (In Company I, Eleventh Regiment Infantry.)

NINTH COMPANY.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Malcolm W. Long, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Perley Elden, Bradford; Willis E. Jackson, Holden; William M. Simpson, Corinna.

TENTH COMPANY (COMPANY E, TWELFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.)

PRIVATES.

Enos S. Burlingame, Oldtown; Samuel W. Clifford, Brewer; Electus Oakes, Electus Oakes, jr., Hampden.

TWELFTH COMPANY (IN COMPANY F, TWELFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY.)

Corporal Fred A. Small, Bangor.

THIRTEENTH COMPANY (COMPANY E, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John O. W. Paine, Bangor.

First Lieutenant Adolphus J. Chapman, Newburg.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George A. Pritchard, Bangor.

Sergeant Andrew F. White, Greenfield.

Sergeant Benjamin F. Simpson, Dixmont.

Sergeant Daniel O. Billings, Bangor.

Corporal James B. Craig, Dixmont.

Corporal Albert S. Smith, Newburg.

Corporal George Bean, Carmel.

PRIVATES.

Albert Cookson, John Patterson, Carmel; Charles A. Oakman, Corinth; William C. Durgan, Wilbert D. Farnham, Dixmont; Albert F. Davis, Howland; Charles H. Dole, Ernest A. Penny, Brewer; Orrin Howes, Newburg; Charles Libby, Bradford; Charles N. Massure, Bangor; Stephen W. Nichols, Orrington; George W. Robinson, Hampden; Roswell Richardson, Greenfield.

FOURTEENTH COMPANY (COMPANY F, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

PRIVATES.

Samuel Bodge, Obadiah M. Banks, Job Kelley, Frederick M. Whittier, Hermon; William Palmer, Albert E. Powers, William G. Lee, Bangor; William D. Bean, Winfield S. Lord, Charleston; Rufus Davis, Newburg; Parker A. Matthews, Bradford B. Southard, Samuel M. Short, Bradford; John W. Morrill, Howland, Joseph A. Seger, Brewer.

FIFTEENTH COMPANY (COMPANY H, TWELFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Henry L. Wood, Dexter.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles F. Fletcher, Dexter.

Sergeant Benjamin Snow, Orrington.

Corporal Myron Webster, Orrington.

Musician John H. Mellor, Dexter.

PRIVATES.

Everett S. Baker, Orrington; Alasco Carey, Edwin S. Fuller, La-grange; Alonzo M. Eaton, Eben W. Murch, David Palmer, Cyrus G. Stanley, Henry S. Thorne, Plymouth; Rufus A. Smith, Newburg; Abner C. Mann, Argyle; Eli Fletcher, Bradford; Horatio Harriman, Lorenzo Harriman, Greenbush.

SIXTEENTH COMPANY (COMPANY K, TWELFTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Josiah P. Cobb, Lowell.

Corporal George H. Moore, Lowell.

PRIVATES.

William C. Brooks, Wilson Hill, Freeman Moore, Hollis A. Moore, Daniel Smart, jr., Lowell; Frederick W. Preble, Bradford; Henry M. Parks, Reuben Prescott, Jeremiah S. Felker, Hermon; Samuel T. Mann, Argyle.

SEVENTEENTH COMPANY (COMPANY G, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Gershom Rogers, Bangor.

Corporal Henry P. Landers, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Charles A. F. Brodbeck, William M. McLaughlin, Nelson McLaughlin, Bangor; Rinaldo A. Tidd, Prentiss; Henry C. Staples, Exeter; Henry W. Sweetser, Horace C. Chapman, Newburg; Charles F. Kimball, Bradley; Asbury A. Moody, Carroll; Marion H. Osgood, Newport.

NINETEENTH COMPANY.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Otis Gilmore, Holden.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant James Winslow, Brewer.

Sergeant Ansel J. Rankin, Brewer.

Corporal Alvah G. Skinner, Brewer.

Corporal Leander Leach, Brewer.

PRIVATES.

James Bickford, Aquilla Chase, Josiah Emery, Dixmont; Eliphalet Washburn, Zenas M. Shaw, Charles Rogers, Frank Merrill, Adelbert M. Gray, Henry Dority, Brewer; Charles H. Card, Glenburn; Joseph McQua, Peter Cromier, Oldtown; Charles G. Trask, Nathan G. Dyer, Bradford; Francis Gustin, Etna; George N. Holland, Hampden; Stephen M. Johnson, Lee; Fred O. Overlock, Danforth Snow, Hermon; Joseph F. Smith, Alton; Edward W. Weymouth, Carroll.

TWENTIETH COMPANY (COMPANY H, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

Private Spencer Colby, Holden.

TWENTY-FIRST COMPANY.

(See Co. A, First battalion infantry).

TWENTY-SECOND COMPANY (COMPANY I, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Albert L. Spencer, Bangor.

First Lieutenant Americus D. Harlow, Bangor.

Second Lieutenant Wilson Crosby, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Albert T. Titecomb, Bangor.

Sergeant Thomas A. Jones, Bangor.

Sergeant Tristram Haskell, Bangor.

Sergeant John M. Rice, Bangor.

Sergeant Charles A. Fuller, Bangor.

Corporal Timothy J. Cleaveland, Bangor.

Corporal La Roy Finson, Bangor.

Corporal Lorenzo W. Starbird, Bangor.

Corporal William H. Severance, Bangor.

Corporal Charles A. Fenno, Bangor.

Corporal Dee Henry Shepard, Bangor.

Corporal Henry A. Tibbetts, Bangor.

Corporal George E. Jewett, Bangor.

Musician Albion Morris, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Alanson Annis, Eben Andrews, Enoch H. Bunker, Timothy Crowley, Charles E. Crockett, Elliot W. Corson, Albert L. Chick, Edmund A. Duren, Otis W. Davis, William Dining, William H. Durgin, Frank Durgin, Lemuel P. Edminster, George W. Estabrooks, George G. Estabrooks, Frank R. Fuller, Albert W. Forbes, Eugene P. Fairbanks, Charles H. Fifield, Jesse A. Fairbanks, Albert S. Field, Edmund Freeman, Levi B. Getchell, William N. Gillies, Paris W. Godfrey, Benjamin Hodge, Edwin L. Heal, James Harrington, Daniel L. Hennessy, Edward H. Haskell, John H. Head, Martin Higgins, George H. Irish, Charles Inman, Isaiah W. James, George S. Kimball, Jotham Lord, George D. Lunt, Dayton W. Lake, Richard Landers, Van R. Littlefield, Andrew J. McFadden, Laforest F. Moody, John A. McCusick, Howard Merrill, Joseph W. Millikin, Alexander McKinnon, Michael Mehan, James G. Percival, Charles H. Page, Weston S. Patten, David F. Pierce, William H. Prichard, Franklin Patten, Horatio P. Perry, Willie R. Pitman, Frederick W. Pierce, Willard B. Peaks, Richard J. Robinson, John S. Rogers, Elijah Rogers, William S. Rackliffe, Charles B. Rundlett, George F. Sleeper, David Simpson, jr., Truman H. Snow, Charles A. Sleeper, William L. Seavey, James W. C. Starbird, George F. Snow, George H. Tenney, John R. Thompson, James H. Tracy, David K. Tuck, Horace F. Woods, John A. Woodworth, Joseph H. Washburn, Daniel W. Warren, Elmer L. Winslow, John B. Young, Michael Coate, William Corbett, Erastus R. Gray, Michael LeClair, Bangor; Allen T. Hodgkins, Jonathan W. Metcalf, Nathan C. Prichard, Oldtown; Charles A. Oakman, Corinth.

TWENTY-THIRD COMPANY (COMPANY K, FOURTEENTH REGIMENT INFANTRY).

PRIVATES.

Eben H. Holt, Hermon; William H. Kilgore, John S. Rogers, Bangor; Charles H. Merrill, Prentiss; Calvin M. Olmstead, Martin G. Woodward, Springheld; Moses M. Page, Oldtown; Leonard F. Smith, Orrington; James M. Sanborn, Hampden; Benjamin H. Fowle, La-grange.

TWENTY-FOURTH COMPANY.

(See Co. B, First battalion infantry).

TWENTY-EIGHTH COMPANY.

PRIVATES.

John H. Gowen, James W. Tolman, Bangor; John Holbrook, Plymouth; Samuel S. Hinckley, Oldtown; Stillman B. Judkins, Garland; John E. Ward, Veazie.

THIRTIETH COMPANY.

PRIVATES.

Henry H. Larrabee, Elias B. Trask, Springfield.

COAST GUARDS BATTALION.

This organization, composed of seven companies of infantry, was organized at Belfast, Augusta, and Eastport, Maine, as follows:

Company A (Captain Charles Baker), was mustered into United States service at Belfast, Maine, March 18, 1864, to serve three years. The company left for Washington, District of Columbia, on the 2d of May, 1864, and immediately upon its arrival at that place was assigned to garrison Fort Washington, Maryland, which it occupied until May, 1865, when it was ordered to Maine. On the 25th day of May, 1865, the company was mustered out of the United States service at Portland, Maine, by Captain C. Holmes, United States Army, in accordance with the orders from the War Department.

Company D, (Captain Charles F. King,) mustered into the United States service at Augusta, Maine, January 6, 1865, to serve one, two, and three years, was stationed at Machiasport, Maine, and was mustered out of the United States service September 6, 1865, at Portland, Maine, by Captain C. Holmes, United States Army, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

Company E, (Captain James L. Hunt,) mustered into the United States service at Augusta, Maine, January 7, 1865, to serve one, two, and three years, was stationed at Rockland, Maine, and was mustered out of the United States service at Augusta, Maine, July 7, 1865, by Captain W. G. Rankin, Thirteenth United States infantry, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

Company F, (Captain Charles F. Conant,) mustered into the United States service at Augusta, Maine, January 6, 1865, to serve one year, was stationed at Belfast, Maine, and was mustered out of the United States service July 7, 1865, at Augusta, Maine, by Captain W. G. Rankin, Thirteenth United States infantry, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

Company G, (Captain Winslow Roberts,) mustered into the United States service March 1, 1865, to serve one year, was stationed at Augusta, Maine, and afterwards at Calais, Maine. It was mustered out of the United States service at Augusta, Maine, July 6, 1865, by Captain W. G. Rankin, Thirteenth United States infantry, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

COMPANY A.

First Lieutenant Charles A. Barker, Bangor.
Private Henry C. Hammond, Milford.

COMPANY D.

PRIVATES.

Thomas J. Goodwin, Nathan C. Grose, Oldtown; Alonzo A. Harman, William Jeffers, Bangor; Eben O. Weed, Argyle.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Henry E. Sellers, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal Harlow M. Hall, Hermon.
Corporal Nicholas G. Reed, Bangor.
Corporal James H. Clark, Garland.
Corporal William H. Colby, Bangor.
Corporal Abiather W. Carl, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

George F. Annis, William H. Pettee, Henry F. Derry, Hiram Emerson, John W. Garland, William F. Johnson, George F. Luce, Eleazar Webber, jr., Hermon; Charles W. Boden, Jonathan W. Coffin, Norris D. Condon, John Davis, David G. Gillespie, George B. Hicks, Cyrus E. Hewes, Frank H. Jewell, Joseph M. Maxfield, William C. Perry, Timothy S. Ripley, Eldridge K. Trask, John Verplast, Bangor; Fred C. Coan, Henry E. Flanders, Adelbert Holt, George T. Haley, Charles E. Merriam, James W. Page, Samuel D. Rankin, Raymond Stillings, Roger Stillings, William H. Skillings, Garland; Eben Tasker, Chelsea.

COMPANY F.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George Roberts, Dexter.
Sergeant Stanley A. Plummer, Dexter.

Sergeant George F. Fitzgerald, Dexter.
Corporal Benjamin F. Eldridge, Dexter.

PRIVATES.

Sumner Brawn, William M. Johnson, Dexter; Peter Bohn, William B. Lowney, Bangor; Rowell F. Copeland, George L. Hart, Holden; Ira F. Sidelinker, Hermon.

COMPANY G.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Edwin A. Reed, Springfield.

PRIVATES.

Jarvis C. Clark, Jacob H. Gould, Ira Gould, Henry B. Lewis, Springfield; Appleton Gould, Charles F. Pratt, George A. Rice, Frederick A. Savage, Bangor; Eleazer Robbins, Hudson.

MILITIA COMPANIES.

Three companies of militia were mustered into the service of the United States in 1864, to serve in forts on the coast of Maine, as follows:

Company A, (Captain Llewellyn J. Morse,) of First Regiment of State Guards Infantry, was mustered into the United States service at Bangor, Maine, July 7, 1864, to serve sixty days, and was stationed at Fort McClary, Kittery, Maine. It was mustered out of the United States service at Bangor, Maine, September 8, 1864, by Captain C. Holmes, United States Infantry.

Company B, (Captain Josiah S. Ricker,) of First Regiment of State Guards Infantry, was mustered into the United States service at Bangor, Maine, to serve sixty days, and was stationed at Fort McClary, Kittery, Maine. It was mustered out of the United States service at Bangor, Maine, November 7, 1864, by Captain C. Mac-michael, Ninth United States Infantry.

Company H, (Captain Sylvanus Cobb, jr.,) of First Regiment Light Infantry, consolidated with a detachment of Company G, same regiment, was mustered into the United States service at Fort McClary, Kittery, Maine, April 27, 1864, to serve sixty days, and stationed at that place. It was mustered out of the United States service July 9, 1864, at Portland, Maine, by Lieutenant J. H. Walker, Fourteenth United States Infantry.

COMPANY A, STATE GUARDS INFANTRY.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Llewellyn J. Morse, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Roby Ireland, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant Marshall Dyer, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Daniel Holman, Bangor.
Sergeant Charles N. Rand, Bangor.
Sergeant William H. H. Pitcher, Bangor.
Sergeant John T. McNamara, Bangor.
Sergeant Samuel T. Case, Bangor.
Corporal Albert P. Baker, Bangor.
Corporal Willis B. Bridges, Bangor.
Corporal Daniel O. Butterfield, Bangor.
Corporal Norris E. Bragg, Bangor.
Corporal Daniel M. Bickmore, Bangor.
Corporal John H. Libby, Bangor.
Corporal Daniel F. Brackett, Bangor.
Corporal Edward S. Perry, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

William H. Adams, William O. Ayer, jr., William L. Burton, Hermon Bartlett, John Bartlett, Nicholas L. Berry, Charles H. Bryant, Winslow H. Curtis, Winslow L. Chase, Daniel S. Collins, John W. Dole, Scott Dunbar, George W. Estabrooks, Eugene P. Fairbanks, Albert W. Forbes, Charles W. Godfrey, Charles M. Griffin, David G. Gillespie, William H. Gilligan, Hannibal Hamlin, James H. Hayes, Edward W. Holt, Robert N. Harris, Harry C. Hallowell, Edward K.

Haskell, Tristram W. Haskell, Llewellyn Haskell, James Hayes, Hiram S. Higgins, Ora Haley, DeWitt C. Johnson, Thomas A. Jones, Fred C. Jones, Charles K. Jewett, John H. James, James F. Kimball, Sanford C. Lambert, John McNaughton, John B. Meguire, Joseph M. Maxfield, George S. Maxwell, Albion Morris, Alexander Margesson, Wellington H. McAllister, Jewett McPherson, J. Frank Newmarch, Sumner C. Paine, Charles F. Pratt, James Pattee, Willard B. Peakes, George W. Renshan, Lewis Robinson, Truman H. Snow, Charles Smith, Charles W. Smith, Charles E. Smith, Charles O. Sawtelle, James S. Pratt, John W. Sleeper, Charles A. Sleeper, George F. Sleeper, George H. Stetson, George Tenny, Charles F. Thoms, Frank S. Trickey, John K. Wallace, Parkman S. Warren, William H. Wheeler, jr., John A. Woodworth, John H. Webster, Clement D. Wier, Calvin G. Weld, Edward T. Woodhull, John B. Young, James S. Young, Bangor; Herbert C. Arey, Granville Baker, Alonzo L. Thaver, Hampden; Andrew J. Taylor, Hermon; Parker Doe, Orono; George T. Rowe, Holden; Joseph A. Sterns, Brewer.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Josiah S. Ricker, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Theodore C. Johnson, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant George W. Stevens, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Russell S. Morrison, Bangor.
Sergeant Ephraim G. Thurston, Bangor.
Sergeant James P. Walker, Bangor.
Sergeant John F. Kimball, Bangor.
Sergeant Wilbur F. Brann, Bangor.
Corporal Roscoe G. Cary, Bangor.
Corporal John T. Gilman, Bangor.
Corporal Joseph W. Freese, Bangor.
Corporal Benjamin E. Walker, Bangor.
Corporal John T. Strickland, Bangor.
Corporal Joseph F. Tewksbury, Bangor.
Corporal Charles B. Dodd, Bangor.
Corporal Augustus M. Daggett, Bangor.
Musician John B. Meguire, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Edward P. Appleton, Frederic H. Appleton, Charles M. Bunker, George F. Barker, Thomas C. Barker, Leonard H. Bunker, George H. Bowen, Henry R. Bradford, Charles W. Burbank, Enoch F. Chandler, James M. Clark, John W. Coffin, James Cole, David E. Costellow, Patrick Crowley, Alfred G. Curtis, George W. Curtis, Frank Dudley, Charles F. Danforth, Charles Drew, Edwin Drew, Frederick L. Drew, Charles H. Fifield, Isaac E. Fifield, James A. Fogg, Frank French, Arthur F. Gilman, George A. Gullifer, Moses E. Ham, Walter S. Hellier, Edwin Houston, Job Kelly, George Lansil, Gilbert L. Leighton, William B. Loriney, George S. McDonald, Thomas Murray, James L. Mountain, Henry C. Parker, Charles T. Perry, George A. Pritchard, John O. W. Paine, Albert H. Parker, Warren L. Raynes, George W. Richardson, Albert H. Roberts, John S. Rogers, Charles Shepard, Thomas Shepard, Frederick A. Small, Emore C. Smart, Thomas H. Smith, George F. Snow, Frederic Staples, J. Frank St. Clair, Eben Stevens, Samuel B. Stevens, Samuel B. Stone, jr., Charles G. Taylor, Frank Thurston, Calvin A. Webb, William T. Webster, Henry W. Wiswell, Charles O. Wood, Ellery C. Young, Bangor; Joseph Arey, George A. Cates, Charles H. Dole, Joseph Grener, Sheldon J. Nealey, Ernest A. Penny, Willard H. Pond, James A. Winslow, Brewer; William B. Peabody, Levant; Andrew J. Orent, Joshua S. Kenney, Holden; Frank H. Jewell, Hermon; George A. Crawford, Hampden.

SECOND UNITED STATES SHARPSHOOTERS.

This company was organized at Augusta, Maine, November 2, 1861, to serve three years. They left the State November 13th, with the Eleventh regiment Maine volunteers, and on their arrival at Washington, District of Columbia, was attached to the Second regiment of United States sharpshooters as Company D. They were stationed at or near Washington until March 19, 1862, when they were assigned to General King's Division, then attached to McDowell's Corps. During the year 1862, they shared in many important skirmishes and actions. In the battles near Manassas, the advance to Sharpsburg, at Antietam, and at Fredericksburg, their services were most effective. On the 15th of December, they re-crossed the Rappahannock river from Fredericksburg, and went into camp near Stoneman's Station, Virginia, where they remained until April 28, 1863, when they advanced towards Fredericksburg. Crossing the Rappahannock on May 1st, they participated in the engagement at Chancellorsville on the next day, and retreated across the river on the 5th. On the 1st of June, they proceeded towards Pennsylvania, and took a prominent part in the battle of Gettysburg on the 2d and 3d of July, after which they re-crossed into Virginia and encamped on the 1st of December near Brandy Station, where, on the 31st, all of the men present re-enlisted for an additional term of three years, and on the 6th of January, 1864, left for Maine, having been granted a furlough of 30 days. They re-assembled at Augusta, and there remained until the 24th of February. On the latter day they left for the front, and rejoined their regiment at Brandy Station, Virginia, on the 1st of March. They remained attached to the Second regiment United States sharpshooters, participating in all the actions and movements in which that regiment was engaged, until the 18th of February, 1865, when, in accordance with War Department Special Order No. 47, of January 30, 1865, the company was transferred to and consolidated with the several companies of the Seventeenth regiment infantry, Maine volunteers.

COMPANY D.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal Bingham S. Edgeley, Greenbush.
Corporal Wilson R. Woodard, Bangor.
Corporal Josiah Gray, Prentiss.

PRIVATES.

James C. Bradbury, Elisha H. Hodgdon, George Roberts, Burlington; James Doyle, James A. Osgood, Springfield; George W. Richardson, Charles S. White, Franklin Riggs, Greenbush; Leonard A. Small, Carmel; Charles W. Smith, Charles H. Trask, Leonard P. Mann, Greenfield.

FIRST REGIMENT SHARPSHOOTERS.

This regiment, composed of six companies, was organized at Augusta, Maine, to serve one and three years. Companies A and B were sent to the field November 12, 1864, and on their arrival at City Point, Virginia, assigned to the defences. Meanwhile authority was given to raise companies C, D, E, and F, which were organized November 29th, December 2d, November 28th, and December 29th, respectively. Leaving Camp Coburn, Augusta, on December 7th and 30th, they proceeded to Galloupe's Island, Boston Harbor, where they remained until January 1, 1865, when they were ordered to City Point. Arriving on the 5th, they immediately joined the two companies already at that place, and remained until the 21st, when it was discovered by the War Department that no authority existed for such a regimental organization, and accordingly the Lieutenant-Colonel commanding was mustered out of service. The command was then ordered to report to the Fifth Army Corps, and on June 21st, the several companies were consolidated with the Twentieth Maine infantry.

COMPANY A.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George M. Lufkin, Bangor.
 Corporal William Sprague, Lee.
 Corporal Thomas Dougherty, Passadumkeag.
 Corporal John Simpson, Lincoln.

PRIVATES.

John W. Bartlett, Franklin Ramsdell, Garland; Martin V. Bodwell-William C. Hanson, William R. Ladd, Joseph Nute, George H. Perry, Lincoln; Aurelius Cushman, William Crockett, Charles R. Oliver, Carroll; Henry Giles, Orono; Abner Hanscom, Benjamin Lancaster, John E. Ludden, Lee; George E. S. Hutchins, Carmel; Jeremiah Phillbrook, Springfield; John Simmons, Bangor.

COMPANY B.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant William Hussey, Dixmont.

PRIVATES.

Sewall Douglass, Veazie; Joseph Grenier, Brewer.

COMPANY C.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Allen Harmon, Winn.

PRIVATES.

Charles H. Folsom, Newburg; Lyman E. Gould, Dixmont; Alfred B. Gould, Corinna; Rufus L. Jones, Carmel; William Shaw, Bangor.

COMPANY E.

PRIVATES.

Edward Carroll, Frank Cavanagh, Thomas Farley, Morris Harrington, John Martin, Corinna; Horace Knight, Brewer; Sidney H. Sinclair, Springfield; Henry A. Tilton, Etna.

COMPANY F.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal Edwin D. Gould, Brewer.
 Corporal John Marshall, Springfield.

PRIVATES.

Samuel F. Carr, Henry Hayes, William McGlade, Henry West, Bangor; John Smith, Orono; Leonard H. Tibbetts, Hermon.

FIRST REGIMENT CAVALRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, November 5, 1861, for three years. Companies A, D, E, and F, under command of Colonel Allen, took their departure March 14, 1862, arriving in Washington on the 19th; on the 20th companies B, I, H, and M, under Major Douty, left Augusta, and arrived in Washington on the 24th, and were joined on the 28th by companies C, G, K, and L, under Major Stowell. Companies A, B, E, H, and M, under Lieutenant-Colonel Douty, joined General Banks' corps at Strasburg, Virginia, May 11th, and were assigned to General Hatch's Cavalry Brigade. The remaining seven companies were assigned to General Abercombie's Brigade, and shortly afterwards to General Ord's Division at Fredericksburg, Virginia.

On the 23d, Lieutenant-Colonel Douty, with his command and two companies of the First Vermont Cavalry, made a charge on the enemy at Middletown, Virginia, losing 176 horses with as many horse equipments; and then assisted in covering General Banks' retreat to Williamsport by way of Winchester. On the 10th of July, the companies under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Douty joined the regiment at Warrenton, Virginia; and on the 9th of August the whole regiment, under command of Colonel Allen, attached to Bayard's Brigade, took part in the battle of Cedar Mountain, Virginia. They retreated with General Pope's forces to Fairfax Court House, Virginia, where they arrived September 3d, and reported to General Reno, having had an engagement with the enemy at Brandy Station on the morning of August 20th. The regiment arrived at Washington, District of Columbia, on the 4th of September, was attached to Burnside's Corps, and participated on the 12th in the engagement at Frederick, Maryland, where the regiment (with the exception of companies G, M, and H,) remained encamped, Colonel Allen receiving the appointment of Military Governor.

Company G, acting as General Reno's body guard, participated in the battle of South Mountain, Maryland, on the 14th; and companies M and H, under General F. J. Porter, in that of Antietam on the 17th.

The total number of horses lost in action and worn out in service during the year amounted to nearly 700.

The regiment was relieved from duty at Frederick, Maryland, on November 2d, and December 11th was assigned to General Bayard's Cavalry Brigade, at Falmouth, Virginia, afterwards commanded by General Gregg, under whose command the regiment remained until February 20, 1863, when it was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, Colonel J. Kilpatrick commanding. From April 13th to June 8th the regiment was engaged in several reconnoissances and engagements, and on the 17th participated in the action at Aldie, Virginia, Colonel Douty being killed while gallantly charging at the head of his men, also Captain Summatt while rallying his men under a murderous fire of grape and canister. On the 19th the regiment was engaged at Middleburg, Virginia, at Upperville, Virginia, on the 21st, and arrived at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, July 2d, where it was engaged in a severe cavalry fight on the right of the Federal lines on the 3d. At Shepherdstown, on the 16th, the regiment went to the support of the pickets of the Tenth New York, who were attacked by the enemy in large force, led by General Stuart, and was engaged in a severe and hotly contested fight, lasting till after dark. From August 24th to December 23d, the regiment was engaged in several battles, skirmishes, and reconnoissances. From the latter date to January 1, 1864, it was encamped near Bealton Station, Virginia, when they proceeded with the Second Division Cavalry Corps to Front Royal, returning on the 4th to Warrenton, and there remained engaged in picket and other duties until February 27th, on which day 300 men reported to General Kilpatrick for duty in the expedition to Richmond, during which the detachment participated in several engagements with the enemy; returned by transports to Alexandria, Virginia, arriving there on the 12th of March, having lost during the raid, in killed, wounded, and missing, 93 men and over 200 horses. On the 7th and 8th of May the regiment had a severe engagement with the enemy at Todd's Tavern, and on the 9th the regiment moved with the Cavalry Corps on General Sheridan's first raid, until within three miles of Richmond, and went into camp near Pole-cat river, when the raid ended. On the 2d of June the regiment was engaged with the enemy on the Cold Harbor Road, when Chaplain Bartlett was instantly killed by a solid shot. On the 11th the regiment participated in the action at Trevilian's Station, on the 24th at St. Mary's Church, losing in killed, wounded, and missing, 10 officers and 58 enlisted men. On the 28th of July had a sharp engagement with the enemy near Malvern Hill. On the 16th of August participated in the engagement on the Charles City Road; at Dinwiddie Court House on the 23d, and at Ream's Station on the 24th, losing during the month of August in killed, wounded, and missing, 49 men and 75 horses. During this month seven companies of the First District of Columbia Cavalry were transferred and assigned to the several companies of this regiment by Special Order No. 17, War Department, series of 1864. In October the regiment was engaged in the actions at Gravelly Creek and Boydton Plank Road, returning to camp near the Jerusalem Plank Road on the 29th, the casualties during the month being 11 killed, 55 wounded, and 13 missing. The original members of the regiment whose term of service expired November 4, 1864, were mustered out of the United States service at Augusta, Maine, November 25, 1864. During the month of December the regiment was engaged in scouting and picketing. During the year 1864 the casualties in this regiment were as follow: Commissioned officers killed in action or died from wounds, 7; wounded, 13; missing in action, 4; enlisted men killed in action or died from wounds, 69; wounded, 202; missing in action, 126.

On the 5th of February, 1865, the regiment started for Hatcher's Run and returned on the 8th, remaining in camp until the 26th, on which day and the two following it served as a support to the Ninth Corps in front of Petersburg. On the 31st, being at Cat-tail Run, it participated in one of the most obstinately contested engagements of the campaign, losing 1 killed and 4 wounded commissioned officers, and 70 wounded and 6 enlisted men missing. It also participated in the closing battles of the war, and was mustered out of the United States service at Petersburg, Virginia, August 1, 1865, arriving at Augusta, Maine, on the 9th, where the men were paid and finally discharged.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Major Warren L. Whitney, Bangor.
Major Jonathan P. Cilley, Thomaston.
Major George M. Brown, Bangor.
Major Sidney W. Thaxter, Bangor.
Major Joel W. Clondman, Stetson.
Quartermaster Andrew Griffin, Bangor.
Chaplain Benjamin F. Teft, Bangor.
Chaplain Samuel Fuller, Brewer.
Quartermaster-Sergeant Orrin S. Haskell, Levant.
Sergeant-Major Elisha A. Clifford, Lincoln.
Saddler Sergeant Henry W. Norwood, Bangor.
Chief Bugler Hudson Sawyer, Levant.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Warren L. Whitney, Bangor.
Captain Sidney W. Thaxter, Bangor.
Captain Llewellyn G. Estes, Oldtown.
Captain Horace S. Cole, Hampden.
First Lieutenant Charles S. Crosby, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Sidney W. Thaxter, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Llewellyn G. Estes, Oldtown.
First Lieutenant Horace S. Cole, Hampden.
First Lieutenant Miles Colbath, Exeter.

First Lieutenant Orrin S. Haskell, Levant.
Second Lieutenant Sidney W. Thaxter, Bangor.
Second Lieutenant Horace S. Cole, Hampden.
Second Lieutenant Miles Colbath, Exeter.
Second Lieutenant Orrin S. Haskell, Levant.
Second Lieutenant Leander M. Comins, Lincoln.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Alonzo J. Sawyer, Bangor.
Commissary Sergeant Benjamin F. Fogg, Stetson.
Sergeant Llewellyn G. Estes, Oldtown.
Sergeant Horace S. Cole, Hampden.
Sergeant Christopher A. Page, Bangor.
Sergeant Preston B. Wing, Levant.
Sergeant Samuel W. Lane, Hampden.
Sergeant Prentice M. Clark, Levant.
Sergeant James M. Hall, Eddington.
Corporal Sidney W. Clark, Levant.
Corporal Milton C. Chapman, Newburg.
Corporal George W. Snow, Newburg.
Corporal James M. Hall, Orono.
Corporal Evander Oakes, Greenbush.
Corporal Warren O. Dougherty, Charleston.
Corporal Benjamin F. Fogg, Stetson.
Corporal Alonzo J. Sawyer, Bangor.
Corporal Horace H. Lowell, Lee.
Corporal Charles McLaughlin, Oldtown.
Corporal James B. Farnham, Newburg.
Bugler Richard E. Whiteley, Levant.
Bugler Joseph W. Bartlett, Bangor.
Farrier Joseph M. Batchelor, Foxcroft.
Farrier Frederick A. Harriman, Bangor.
Farrier Charles A. Sergeant, Brewer.
Wagoner Eli W. Rowe, Brewer.
Wagoner Robert Rolliston, Oldtown.

PRIVATES.

Prentice M. Clark, Augustus Lord, Nathaniel R. Roberts, Gilman H. Beede, William L. Burrill, Enoch H. Lake, Levant; Daniel Budge, Kenduskeag; Isaac H. Brown, Martin P. Colbath, Hiram T. Drew, Albert Edgecomb, Hiram Peavey, Darius W. Peavey, Charles H. Stevens, Asa M. Stevens, William Young, Miles Colbath, Exeter; Augustus Young, Redmond O'Connell, Frank A. Lewis, Horace Labree, James M. Doe, Ansel Drew, Alonzo Drew, John Doe, Orono; John C. Bowen, Charles E. Grant, Samuel Grant, Madison M. Grant, Andrew J. Kimball, Hermon; Edward P. Worcester, Carmel; Leonard Clark, Horace Croxford, James B. Farnham, Nathan E. Trask, Newburg; Charles D. Thompson, Samuel A. Thompson, Henry Sanford, Horace H. Lowell, Elisha B. Cleaveland, Charles A. Cleaveland, William H. Cleaveland, Albert G. B. Fisher, Benjamin R. Frost, Lee; Amos Caverly, John H. Day, Aaron B. Patterson, Anson O. Libby, Newport; John P. Cram, Thomas Davis, Charles D. Furbush, John H. Head, James Jones, jr., Osman Libbie, George F. McDonald, Daniel C. Prescott, Sergeant J. Scott, Lewis W. Soule, John R. Thurston, John F. Tolman, Harris Webber, Otis E. Lufkin, George F. Mansell, Charles D. Furbish, William M. Durgin, Bangor; Charles E. Dearborn, Corinna; Joseph Sylvester, Etna; William H. Severance, Walter F. Severance, Greenbush; Simeon M. Dawson, Garland; Nahum Emery, John Emery, jr., George E. Emery, Ephraim B. Humphrey, Charles F. Stuart, Henry D. Garland, Otis E. Lufkin, Joseph W. Phipps, Hampden; Groves O. Sergeant, Valentine H. Dougherty, Charleston; Chelsia L. Estes, Richard E. Lancaster, James Parks, Nathan L. Ricker, George M. Gray, Benjamin F. Jordan, Thomas D. Jordan, Zelotes Dancaster, Charles H. McLaughlin, James B. Peakes, Almon N. Ricker, Oldtown; Dennis W. Palmer, Plymouth; Charles A. French, Bradford; Oliver B. Gates, Lincoln; Orrin L. Merrill, Alton; Dwight McNeil, Holden; Edwin F. Steven, Corinth; Albert P. Winslow, Winn; Benjamin F. Young, Samuel W. Davis, Thomas W. Davis, Brewer.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Henry D. Fuller, Corinth.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Francis A. Birce, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Abner Dabb, Alton; Thomas H. Gulliver, Benjamin Bagley, Corinth; Warren F. Bickford, Asbury E. Soule, Horace Varney, Newburg; Zo-radus D. Stevens, Charles H. Pickard, Emery Morrill, Andrew J. Kimball, Hermon; Seth C. Brown, Lyman H. Call, Michael G. Quinn, Jethro H. Hurd, Carmel; Benson Gowen, Phenix L. Dawsis, Alfred Crocker, John K. Clement, Bangor; William Y. Clement, Kenduskeag; William Coyle, Dennis Madigan, Alonzo Patten, Oldtown; Josiah B. Young, Milford; James I. Davis, Henry I. Tate, Uriah Curtis, Stetson; Seward P. Woodman, Plymouth; Charles M. Wentworth, Washington I. Rogers, Orrington; Edward A. Sylvester, Etna; Henry L. Mitchell, Dixmont; Calvin Carter, Anson Pettengill, Levant; Charles N. Merrifield, Orono; Oren M. Harrington, Newport.

COMPANY C.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Andrew M. Benson, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Lafayette Damon, Stetson.
Sergeant Hosea Knowles, Stetson.
Corporal Charles H. Sanborn, Dixmont.
Corporal Aaron L. Morrison, Charleston.
Farrier Moses S. Pinkham, Plymouth.
Farrier William M. Hayes, Orono.

PRIVATES.

William R. Locke, Etna; Alvin A. Dority, Freeland Dunning, Charleston; Mariner S. Johnson, Exeter; Albert S. McKenney, Robert O. Patten, Stetson; Samuel E. Parker, Bangor; Charles H. Sanborn, John Craig, Dixmont; Josiah Nason, jr., Gilman Welch, Veazie.

COMPANY D.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain William S. Howe, Stetson.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Amos D. Brown, Hampden.
Sergeant James S. Merrifield, Orono.
Sergeant James M. Adams, Lincoln.
Corporal Benjamin P. Knowles, Hampden.
Corporal Charles H. Miller, Enfield.
Musician Hudson Sawyer, Levant.

PRIVATES.

Thompson M. Brown, Henry L. Knowles, Hampden; Michael Culnan, John Dunan, Warren A. Jordan, Stephen Loring, Nathan B. Wiggin, Charles M. Smith, Charles E. McCoy, Bangor; Francis H. Blackman, Bradley; William B. Baker, Orrington; Charles W. Campbell, Greenbush; Eldridge C. Crane, Kenduskeag; Eleza Edda, Ed. dington; Samuel B. Gerry, Newport; Ambrose M. Lord, Levant; David S. Perry, Jeremiah D. Webber, Winn; Frank A. Pennington, Dexter; Nathaniel Reed, jr., Bradley; Albert Stevens, Lincoln; Horace C. Leavitt, Plymouth; John Swaney, Stetson; Hartwell E. Stowe, Dexter; Hiram S. Willa, Hudson; Abram M. Colburn, Orono; Oliver C. Tapley, Charleston.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant Osco A. Ellis, Lincoln.
First Lieutenant Benjamin A. Osborne, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Osco A. Ellis, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant John A. Heald, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Benjamin A. Osborne, Lincoln.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Bohan Field, Lee.
Sergeant Henry A. Ramsdell, Lincoln.
Sergeant Julius M. Lengarder, Lincoln.
Sergeant Benjamin A. Osborne, Lincoln.
Corporal C. L. Goodwin, Lincoln.
Corporal Hanson Hutchins, jr., Bangor.
Corporal Gorham A. Folsom, Newburg.
Bugler Charles W. Stetson, Mattawamkeag.
Saddler Benjamin A. Osborne, Lincoln.
Wagoner Gustavus L. Mills, Lincoln.

PRIVATES.

Ira Morrill, Patten; Frederick Smart, John H. Dolbin, Oldtown; Elijah E. Hall, James Connies, Robert Beathen, Henry A. Ramsdell, Jeremiah C. Dyer, Noah Hatch, James Cathcart, Frank J. Leather, John A. Heald, Charles H. Scammon, Lincoln; Robert Pentland, Charles P. Hubbard, Burlington; William A. Richardson, Amos Richardson, Greenbush; Michael Mangan, Charles Eddy, Ebenezer Earl, Bangor; Oren L. Bowker, Seneca E. Keene, Chester; James K. Mann, Hudson; Thomas McGinley, Springfield; Raymond Lincoln, Dexter; Frank W. Leavitt, Orono; Marcellus Hoben, Orrington; Llewellyn H. Howes, Benjamin F. Folsom, Juan F. Flinn, Newburg; Henry W. Folsom, Oliver J. Folsom, Etna; Silas S. Foss, Lee; Cyrus F. Barrett, Hermon; Ansel Barden, Hampden.

COMPANY F.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Horace W. Bolton, Newport.
Second Sergeant George F. Hamilton, Newport.
Commissary Sergeant Paul F. R. Clark, Stetson.
Sergeant David Greeley, Kenduskeag.
Sergeant Otis W. Whitcomb, Etna.
Sergeant John F. Dolliver, Kenduskeag.
Sergeant Daniel V. Bolton, Orrington.
Sergeant Alonzo Dunning, Charleston.
Corporal John Knowles, Corinna.
Corporal Samuel W. Bridgham, Newburg.
Corporal Daniel R. McKenny, Stetson.
Corporal Hiram B. Sleeper, Kenduskeag.
Corporal Austin B. White, Levant.
Corporal Daniel F. Davis, Stetson.
Corporal George S. Kelley, Newburg.

PRIVATES.

James M. Boyd, Preston L. Barnett, Daniel W. Lowell, Thomas S. Rice, Plymouth; Ambrose Reed, Nathan Moore, Orono; Stephen A. Berry, Edwin Hill, Garland; Orison W. Cole, Charles Dyer, William K. Kennard, Walter Sylvester, Horace Whitcomb, F. V. Whitcomb, Etna; Joseph P. Luce, Alonzo D. Miller, Bangor; Nathan Clark, John Caverly, Richard M. Daniels, Samuel Towles, John W. Goodwin, Samuel Hurd, jr., David Lawrence, Frederick P. Townsend, George W. Wood, William B. Quimby, John W. Goodwin, Charles H. Goodwin, Stetson; Waldo C. Beals, Patten; John Caverly, John W. Gilman, Richard McKenny, Alexander Jenkins, Almon Lewis, William H. H. Nickerson, John Page, Newport; Austin B. White, Nathaniel Souther, Atwood C. Souther, Howard M. Doyen, Levant; Elisha A. Devereaux, George A. Varney, Newburg; William H. Weymouth, Cordon O. Stone, Prentiss Shaw, Corinna; William H. Daniels, Charles C. Hurd, jr., Edwin B. Melvin, James N. Prescott, Benjamin F. Prescott, Charles A. Russell, Daniel N. Tibbetts, Exeter; Elisha A. Webster, Glenburn; George L. Pease, Bradley; James McCarrison, jr., Kenduskeag; John S. Keisor, Corinth; Ira B. Harvey, Maxfield.

COMPANY G.

PRIVATES.

Lucillus J. Coombs, Lincoln; Hanson Y. Young, Glenburn; Collins Woodbury, Arthur A. Pond, Charles F. Harrison, Bangor; John B. Dwelly, Orrin F. Lewis, Jeremiah E. Patterson, Springfield; Stephen R. Fletcher, William H. Stanhope, Bradford; Jefferson Pichard, Plymouth; David D. Dresser, Stetson.

COMPANY H.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Daniel T. Mayo, Carmel.
Sergeant John W. West, Carmel.
Corporal Abiather R. Kendall, Carmel.
Corporal Albert A. Pierce, Bradford.
Bugler Caleb F. Ordway, Orono.

PRIVATES.

Hiram W. Allen, Lowell; Eugene Springer, Jack Gonyea, Walter Drew, Dexter; Melvin Allen, Sanborn J. Campbell, Corinna; Charles H. Whitney, George H. Rich, Joshua Ray, Henry A. Jackson, Llewellyn F. Bickmore, Bangor; William E. Bailey, Bradford; Charles T. E. Clapp, Enfield; Daniel Webster, Exeter; John A. Merrill, Kilburn Cowan, Frederick Holt, Orono; Charles D. Day, Brewer; Otto L. Hall, Edwin S. Gates, Lincoln; Orrin L. Goodwin, Carrol; Rufus E. Jewett, Etna; David J. Blanchard, Levi B. Lewis, Kenduskeag; Perley Low, Levant.

COMPANY I.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George Vinal, Orono.
Sergeant William A. Vinal, Orono.
Sergeant Charles Hussey, Orono.
Corporal James H. Card, Glenburn.

PRIVATES.

Henry R. Cowan, Elisha E. Cunliff, Abraham M. Colburn, George P. Gipson, Rufus Johnson, Peter Jennings, Charles H. Moore, Albert L. McDonald, Joseph McKenney, George Morrill, James A. Neal, John B. Perry, George B. Stearns, Frank B. Wilson, Orono; James M. Woodman, Stetson; Horace B. Cushman, Dixmont; Walter D. Daniels, Newport; Josiah D. Hinds, Samuel J. Robinson, Orrington; Benjamin W. Jellison, Oldtown; John Kellon, Brewer; John B. Marsh, Albert A. Robinson, Corinth; Thomas D. Rogers, Exeter; Edward F. Spratt, Pharon P. Spratt, Carmel; Nathan M. Shaw, Bradford.

COMPANY K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal James A. Murphy, Lee.
Corporal William J. Butterfield, Milford.
Bugler George Barker, Milford.
Farrier Sumner B. Newbegin, Milford.
Saddler Edward M. Young, Milford.

PRIVATES.

Freeman H. Butterfield, Joseph Doe, Milford; Hezekiah F. Harris, Levi Bagley, Horatio W. Harris, Oldtown; Silas Blodgett, Joseph B. Peakes, Charleston; John E. Daniels, John Hagan, Lincoln; Albert C. Dyer, Etna; Charles E. Dearborn, Corinna; Stephen S. Goodhue, Albert M. Jackson, William L. Hannon, Charles L. Phillips, Bangor; William Spencer, Plymouth; Charles E. Dearborn, Corinna; Allbert C. Dyer, Etna; Michael Hays, Lee.

COMPANY L.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant George Weston, Oldtown.
Second Lieutenant George Weston, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Benjamin F. Carter, Etna.
Sergeant James M. Simpson, Brewer.
Sergeant Nathaniel F. Sargent, Brewer.
Sergeant Justin S. Nevins, Bangor.
Corporal George A. Shay, Argyle.
Corporal Frederiek C. Brookings, Bradford.
Corporal Charles C. Palmer, Exeter.
Farrier Elbridge G. Jordan, Bradford.
Farrier Alpheus R. Kingsbory, Bradford.
Saddler Stephen M. Staples, Bradford.
Saddler Henry W. Norwood, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

James Burnes, Henry G. Reynolds, George A. Wentworth, Orrington; George E. Stewart, Hampden; Richard J. Crane, George A. Rowell, Bradley; Addison W. Crowell, Dexter; Charles W. Lunt, Greenbush; John S. Mills, William G. Peaks, Oldtown; Samuel B. Gerry, Charles H. Caverly, Newport; Frederick W. Chase, Sylvanus R. Chamberlain, Abner L. Douglass, Lionel D. Gray, Elbridge G. Jordan, Stephen M. Staples, Bradford; George W. Roberts, Lincoln; Oren Shepley, Alonzo J. Sawyer, James H. Radcliff, Hiram B. Ingalls, Bangor; William H. Canney, Elbridge J. Cone, Exeter; Orrin H. Brown, Edward Cunningham, James B. Daly, Isaiah Guptell, Patten; William J. Crooker, Alton; John Streleb, Milford; Warren B. Monroe, Greenfield; Adelbert I. Friend, Daniel Frost, Brewer; George Wellington, Garland; Horace K. Tabin, Lincoln; Samuel B. Stone, Dixmont; Sewell W. Smith, Eddington; Cromwell Carter, Albert L. Sylvester, Etna; Charles H. Johnson, Orono; Lorenzo D. Chamberlain, Hudson.

COMPANY M.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George M. Brown, Bangor.
First Lieutenant Charles K. Johnson, Carmel.
Second Lieutenant Edward Jordan, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles K. Johnson, Carmel.
Sergeant William H. Reves, Bradford.
Sergeant Frank H. Wood, Etna.
Corporal Linus E. Shaw, Alton.
Corporal George H. Bartlett, Bangor.
Corporal James C. Whitney, Orono.
Musician George Bartlett, Bangor.
Wagoner Samuel N. Cowan, Glenburn.
Farrier Henry Ames, Lagrange.
Saddler Edward Jordan, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Isaac Chamberlain, Lincoln; George L. Plummer, Miles Reeves, Forest Reeves, Oliver J. Woodward, George Rogers, Gustavus McClure, Thomas S. Reeves, Bradford; Alfred Foster, Orlando Kelly, Eugene H. Otis, Joseph Varney, Francis Prescott, Newburg; George W. Stockman, Charleston; Thomas F. Kellan, Samuel Ingalls, Royal Grant, Zelotes W. Trask, Bangor; Charles H. Gould, John P. Thompson, John M. Warren, Llewellyn Greene, Veazie; Charles A. Heald, Lagrange; James B. Harris, Samuel F. Harris, Bradley; Frank Taylor, Leander P. Southard, Belden Southard, Alton; Chester C. Pearson, Corinth; Waterman T. Lewis, Newport; William Merrill, Charles E. Long, Orono; Marcellus Corliss, Ivory H. Feleh, John F. Harvey, Gustin Jordan, Daniel Leathers, Carmel; John L. Miner, William D. Cowan, Glenburn; Charles Jewett, Edward E. Jewett, Eben G. Cross, Hudson; Boardman Davis, Stillwater; Stephen E. Harris, Dixmont; William B. Grindall, Alfred F. Day, Brewer; Seth E. Woodman, Plymouth; John T. Watson, Stetson; Samuel S. Varney, Etna; William H. Thurlow, Henry J. Thurlow, Lee; Renel W. Porter, Plymouth; George P. Phillips, Chester, Jefferson Spencer, Eddington.

SECOND REGIMENT CAVALRY.

This regiment was organized at Augusta, Maine, from November 30, 1863, to January 2, 1864; and, January 11th, having been assigned to the Department of the Gulf, commenced leaving Augusta for Portland, for the purpose of embarking on transports for New Orleans, Louisiana. Companies A and D, and about half of G being the only portion of the regiment which had arrived at New Orleans, were, on the 16th of April, ordered to proceed to Alexandria, Louisiana, where they arrived on the morning of the 21st, and being assigned to duty with the Third Cavalry Brigade, participated in the engagements at Cherryville Cross Roads, Marksville, Avoyelles Prairie and Yellow Bayou, and rejoined the regiment at Thibodeaux, June 1st.

The main body of the regiment arrived at New Orleans, in detachments, on the 18th, 19th, 22d and 23d of April. On the 9th of August, the regiment embarked at New Orleans for Pensacola, Florida, arriving on the 11th, and encamped near Barrancas, employed in fatigue duty, besides taking part in quite a number of raids, to Marianna, in September, and to Pollard, Alabama, in December. During the year the regiment lost by deaths 1 officer and 278 enlisted men.

On the 23d of February, 1865, Lieutenant-Colonel Spurling, with 300 men, attacked the enemy in considerable force at Milton, Florida, and after a sharp encounter, completely routed them. On the 19th of March the regiment joined General Steele's command, concentrated at Pensacola, preparatory to the movement which resulted in the capture of Mobile and the opening of the State of Alabama to the advance of the Federal troops. During the whole campaign the regiment rendered efficient service, had several encounters with the enemy, destroyed a large amount of railroad and other property, besides opening communication with General Canby, besieging Spanish Fort, and capturing a large number of the enemy.

After the fall of Mobile a detachment of the regiment was assigned to the Sixteenth Army Corps, being the only cavalry with that body of 30,000 men. The detachment did efficient duty during the long march of nearly 200 miles to the city of Montgomery, Alabama. In August the detachment was ordered to return to Florida, and rejoined the regiment at Barrancas. The regiment was then broken up, and small detachments were stationed at various points throughout Western Florida to preserve harmony, and to suppress any insurrectionary movements that might take place. By the 1st of December the entire regiment was concentrated at Barrancas, and mustered out of the United States service on the 6th by Lieutenant E. M. Schryver, Assistant Commissary of Musters. Twenty-five commissioned officers and about 116 enlisted men were mustered out and discharged in Florida, to become residents of the South, making oath of their intention to remain there, and receiving from the Government mileage in lieu of transportation. The remainder of the regiment, numbering 14 officers and 509 enlisted men, embarked on the 8th for Augusta, where they were paid and finally discharged on the 1st.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Lieutenant-Colonel John F. Godfrey, Bangor.
Assistant-Surgeon Louis E. Norris, Hampden.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain James F. Twitchell, Mattawamkeag.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joshua E. Blackwell, Patten.
Farrier Ira Morrill, Patten.

PRIVATEES.

Alex Bigger, Ebenezer Bigger, Archibald Bigger, Jeremiah Farewell, John George, Melvin S. Leslie, Martin V. Shaw, Cyrus Savage, Samuel Orr, Edward P. Sargent, Patten; Mark Fernald, Sylvanus G. Stickney, Henry E. Trueworthy, Newport; Reuben B. Barnes, Winn; George H. Bagley, Liberty; Hannibal Farewell, Charles W. Kimball, Fred A. Noyes, Lewis Sargent, jr., Mt. Chase; John O. Allen, Stetson; Willie P. Harvey, Lowell; Samuel B. Reading, James Mahoney, Bangor; Andrew J. Flemming, John C. Whitney, Lincoln; Charles T. Spaulding, Hugh G. Rideout, Springfield; Henry A. Mann, Clifton.

COMPANY B.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Homer R. Stratton, Hancock.

PRIVATEES.

John E. Drake, Dexter; Charles Jellison, Charles A. Sabine, Palermo; Lucien A. Luce, Burnham; Charles A. Miller, Rockland.

COMPANY C.

PRIVATEES.

Edward O. Andrews, Thomaston; Erastus Marr, Washington; Albert A. Haines, Dexter; Burnett Leavitt, Bradley.

COMPANY D.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Elisha G. Norton, Palermo.

PRIVATEES.

Thomas L. Whitten, Elisha Atkinson, Clifton; Joseph Brewster, jr., Belmont; Albion C. Colby, Rockland; Elannder R. Grant, Andrew D. Grant, Barzilla B. Greeley, John E. Richards, Leonard M. Shorey, Palermo; Lorenzo J. Hall, Samuel M. Haskell, Warren; Silas A. Sherman, Washington; Edwin E. Wentworth, Waldo.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

First Lieutenant A. J. Pickard, Rockland.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Commissary Sergeant Edward W. Farrar, Washington.
Sergeant Edgar A. Hanaky, Rockland.
Sergeant John S. Stevens, Union.
Sergeant James N. Brown, Cushing.
Corporal Adolphus A. Leavitt, Rockland.
Corporal Cyrus Harding, Rockland.

Corporal James P. Robbins, Rockland.
Corporal Joseph W. Newbert, Washington.
Corporal George Hall, Vinalhaven.

PRIVATEES.

Benjamin Bartlett, Jonathan Crockett, John H. Dean, Ambrose Dill, Albert L. Fields, Samuel W. Hewett, Nathan A. Hewett, Frank A. Knight, Francis G. Mellus, Samuel H. Pendleton, David M. Robbins, John E. Sanders, Ashley St. Clair, Pearl Spear, Michael Tracey, William Wasgatt, Charles O. Wentworth, Charles P. Wood, Rockland; Ambrose Bailey, James L. Burns, William J. Callamore, George A. Haagar, Angelo Howard, George W. Humes, Edward A. Rhoades, Washington; Leander Woodcock, Thomaston; Warren Blake, Camden; Joseph W. Clara, James Deans, Wilder S. Irish, Alonzo Maddocks, Roscoe B. Robbins, John W. Gowen, Union; Charles H. Leighton, Matineus; William H. Kelleran, Cushing; Timothy Hall, David R. Ginn, Vinalhaven; Leander Elwell, St. George; Harrison Emery, South Thomaston; Melzer T. Dyer, Belfast; Frank H. Eastman, Bangor; Charles A. Gilman, Dexter; Jeff P. Richardson, Dexter; Isaac Mills, Eddington.

COMPANY F.

PRIVATEES.

Charles Penney, James R. Corson, Alton; Albert D. Crocker, Dixmont.

COMPANY G.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Samuel W. Knowles, Bangor.
First Lieutenant William Banton, Lagrange.
Second Lieutenant Jason C. Chandler, Corinth.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Alphonso Patten, Bangor.
Quartermaster Sergeant Charles E. Wilson, Bradford.
Commissary Sergeant John P. Wentworth, Lagrange.
Sergeant Isaac N. Head, Lagrange.
Sergeant Fred A. Fuller, Bangor.
Sergeant Alden Gilchrist, Bangor.
Sergeant George O. Miles, Oldtown.
Sergeant John P. Jordan, Bangor.
Corporal Luther M. Pollard, Bangor.
Corporal Addison J. Brown, Bangor.
Corporal Isaac Mills, Bangor.
Corporal George A. Herswell, Bangor.
Corporal Thomas A. Hunt, Oldtown.
Corporal Joseph B. Pierce, Milford.
Corporal Robert J. McDuff, Lagrange.
Musician William M. Plummer, Augusta.
Musician Osgood M. Howland, Bangor.
Farrier Lewis W. Moan, Oldtown.
Farrier Joseph P. Luce, Bangor.
Saddler John P. Drummond, Bangor.
Wagoner Frank Taylor, Brewer.

PRIVATEES.

Edwin Ambrose, Oldtown; Burton Bunker, Thomas J. Burke, Bangor; Reuben Bryant, George W. Blake, Lagrange; James Betts, Bangor; Nathan Clark, Oldtown; William Cleaves, Bradford; Rinaldo V. Cary, Emery W. Cunningham, Lorin Decker, Newton H. Danforth, Lagrange; Edwin Dillingham, John Dodge, Oldtown; John W. Dyer, Bradford; Frank H. Eastman, Bangor; John G. Emery, Lagrange; Charles Evens, Edwin Fogg, John F. Fogg, Charles Foster, Bangor; Isaiah Genthner, Brewer; David Giles, Bangor; Lewis Gonyea, Oldtown; Richard E. Haynes, Nathaniel B. Haskell, Bangor; Isaac F. Neal, Lagrange; John Houston, Bradford; William Henries, Augusta; Edwin S. Jenks, Bradford; Edwin S. Johnson, Bangor; Eben S. Keith, Oldtown; Frank G. Leighton, Philip L. Lowell, George B. Locke, Bangor; William B. Lovell, Daniel Libby, William M. McAndrew, Bradford; William R. McLaughlin, Lagrange; John Mills, Bradford; Samuel Mack, Milford; Henry Moore, Bangor; Marcellus Nason, Lagrange; James O. Preble, Bangor; James H. P. Perkins, Edward L. Perkins, Milford; George Pooler, Eugene Page, Bangor; Benjamin F. Robinson (first), Carmel; Benjamin F. Robinson (second), Corinth; George Reed, Bangor; Oscar A. Rogers, Brewer; Rolloff N. Sherburne, Bangor; George S. Smith, Brewer; Edward T. Sprague, William J. Sands, Jonas B. Smart, Bangor; Rufus A. Sanborn, Warren Spearing, Lagrange; Major F. Strout, Enoch B. Strout, Bradford; Franklin Spaulding, Oldtown; Charles S. Trowbridge, Portland; Daniel Towle, Lagrange; Charles G. Tozier, Oldtown; George S. Williams, Lagrange; Richard M. Woodman, Andrew J. Waltz, Oldtown; Eph D. Donnon, Jerry Denning, Abram Fenton, Bangor; Frank Smith, Brewer; Sampson Spencer, Bradley; William D. Bean, Oldtown.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Adolphus B. Mathews, Belfast.
First Lieutenant Daniel S. Simpson, Searsport.
Second Lieutenant Marcus A. Vose, Montville.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Quartermaster Sergeant Thomas S. Keene, Freedom.
Commissary Sergeant John F. Gould, Belfast.
Sergeant William R. Mathews, Lincolnville.
Sergeant Willard L. Messer, Union.
Sergeant Isaac B. Harris, Appleton.
Sergeant George T. Osborne, Belfast.
Sergeant Frank R. Lamson, Freedom.
Corporal William F. Hall, Lincolnville.
Corporal George W. West, Belfast.
Corporal William Gilchrist, Montville.
Corporal Llewellyn Carter, Belfast.
Corporal Ansel H. Warren, Brooks.
Corporal Thayer Logan, Waldo.
Corporal George T. Ranlet, Unity.
Corporal Reuben H. Dickey, Lincolnville.
Musician Urban H. Hovey, Lincolnville.
Farrier Otis Cummings, Northport.
Farrier David L. Cross, Lincolnville.
Saddler George G. Woods, Freedom.
Wagoner Charles S. Vose, Montville.

PRIVATES.

Reuel Austin, Unity; William O. Benner, Northport; Henry Black, Dedham; Nelson A. Burns, Union; Edward Billings, Searsport; Ellison Cunningham, Waldo; Jesse G. Chambers, Belfast; Nathan H. Cousens, Monroe; Dana B. Carter, Freedom; Fruma H. Curtis, Monroe; James S. Crockett, Winterport; Horace S. Colson, Lyman Curtis, Alden Carr, Thomas W. Currier, Frankfort; Alonzo D. Dyer, Montville; Joseph Day, Union; James A. Dunton, Lincolnville; Alonzo P. Elwell, Waldo; Daniel Ellis, Ephraim L. Emerson, Searsport; James H. R. Fickett, Knox; John C. Foss, Amos Gibbs, jr., Charles Gibbs, Brooks; Solomon J. Gray, Ellsworth; Isaac Heal, Searsmont; Edward P. Hanscom, Freedom; George F. Hussey, Hartford E. Hurd, Albert O. Hussey, Lincolnville; Byron A. Hart, Belfast; William A. Hale, Lincolnville; Oliver Jones, Brooks; Edwin Jackson, Waldo; Augustus Knowlton, Swanville; Francis H. Martin, Wellington Moody, Lincolnville; James E. Marden, Waldo; Horatio Martin, Appleton; Judson McAllister, Peleg W. Mathews, Lincolnville; Henry A. J. Proctor, Appleton; Charles E. Porter, Lincolnville; James M. Palmer, Montville; Sherburne Peabody, Searsport; John E. Philbrook, Frankfort; Alonzo Poland, Montville; Sumner Poland, Morrill; Marcellus B. Porter, Montville; Lauriston Putnam, Searsport; James E. Roberts, Waldo; Osear Richards, Lincolnville; Benjamin A. Ray, Knox; Joel S. Richards, Lincolnville; Stephen S. Smith, Belfast; Charles Spinks, Belfast; James O. Snow, Lincolnville; Timothy Tewksbury, Belfast; Charles H. Thompson, Searsport; William F. Vose, Montville; Franklin A. Whitmore, Waldo; George A. Wentworth, Searsmont; John M. Walker, Freedom; Alfred D. Weymouth, Appleton; Moses C. West, Frankfort; Warren B. Woodman, Searsport; Daniel J. West, Belfast; Benjamin R. Walker, Frank Whitcomb, Searsport; John Young, Palermo; Gideon A. Young, Lincolnville; George W. Soper, A. Jonathan Woodman, Oldtown; Fred Winship, Dexter.

COMPANY I.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Isaac W. Haskell, Garland.
Second Lieutenant Nelson F. Libby, Corinna.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Nelson F. Libby, Corinna.
Sergeant Edward F. Moore, Unity.
Sergeant Henry H. Blackwell, Newport.
Corporal Horatio Knowles, Corinna.
Farrier Justus H. Jackman, Garland.
Farrier Charles Haskell, Garland.
Wagoner Bennett A. Haskell, Garland.

PRIVATES.

Alonzo F. Batchelder, Daniel A. Bosworth, James M. Gee, Hosen Harlow, Jason F. Haskell, Frederick P. Thomas, Garland; Fred W.

Johonet, Newport; John Smith, Elphalet M. Johnson, Dexter; George W. Murch, Lemuel Reynolds, Joseph E. Reynolds, Fred H. Seavey, William H. Whitten, Unity; James Smith, Corinna.

COMPANY K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Farrier Charles L. Haines, Plymouth.

PRIVATES.

Oliver W. Bragdon, Eastbrook; John Brawn, Edwin F. Young, Palermo; Wilson Blake, Otis Gray, Thomas Gray, Brooksville; Joseph Hackett, Edward Hackett, Alonzo D. Moores, Castine; Marcellus A. Hardin, Unity.

COMPANY L.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Farrier Hosea J. Joy, Ellsworth.
Farrier Enoch J. Ames, Exeter.

PRIVATES.

Edgar B. Davis, Belfast; Benjamin B. Hills, William H. Lowell, Burlington; John Murphy, John E. Rhines, Charles E. Pinkham, Washington; James W. Nutt, Dexter; Andrew Newbit, Belmont; John Robinson, Charles A. Sukeforth, Appleton; Charles E. Wescott, Brooksville; Fred M. Ames, Bangor.

COMPANY M.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles D. Chapman, Passadumkeag.
Corporal Thomas F. Phinney, Stockton.
Corporal William S. Farrell, Rockland.
Bugler Daniel B. Dean, Passadumkeag.
Farrier William H. Palmer, Freedom.

PRIVATES.

Charles H. Batchelder, Philip E. Haynes, Edgar Hathaway, Passadumkeag; Stephen O. Young, Thomas Barney, Rockland; Adelbert H. Dickey, Stockton; Enos Dow, Palermo; Orrin C. Estes, Lee; Eli Garland, William Taylor, Ellsworth; Lysander Harriman, Dedham; George D. Higgins, Thorndike; Madison T. Jones, Washington; Silas C. Thomas, Camden; James Wright, Lincoln; Hinam E. Baker, Corinth; Lysander Ferren, Frank W. Millett, Levant.

FIRST REGIMENT DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (BAKER'S) CAVALRY.

Eight companies for this regiment were organized at Augusta, Maine, from October, 1863, to March, 1864, to serve three years, and assigned to companies D, F, G, H, I, K, L, and M. This regiment was originally designed for special service in the District of Columbia, and was under the command of Colonel L. C. Baker. After performing important service in and about Washington for several months, half of the regiment was ordered to Portsmouth, Virginia, and dismounted; the other half was assigned to General Butler's command, and participated in General Kautz's cavalry raid in the early part of June, 1864. On the 23d of August the regiment had an engagement with the Hampton Legion; also participated the next day in the action near Ream's Station. All the Maine officers and enlisted men were transferred to the First Maine Cavalry, August 25th, but did not then join the latter regiment, and remained doing picket duty on the extreme left of the army, on a line about four miles in length. On the 15th of September the regiment was attacked by a large force of the enemy, and after a gallant resistance was compelled to retreat, losing heavily in killed, and a large number being taken prisoners. The remaining men then joined the First Maine Cavalry, and from this date the history of the regiment is identical with that of the First Maine Cavalry.

FIELD OFFICER.

Major Joel W. Cloudman, Stetson.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Joel W. Cloudman, Stetson, Co. D.
 Captain William S. Howe, Stetson, Co. D.
 Captain Andrew M. Benson, Oldtown, Co. H.
 Captain Daniel F. Sargent, Brewer, Co. M.
 First Lieutenant William S. Howe, Stetson, Co. D.
 First Lieutenant Eli Parkman, Charleston, Co. D.
 First Lieutenant Daniel F. Sargent, Brewer, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Eli Parkman, Charleston, Co. D.
 Second Lieutenant Leander M. Comins, Lincoln, Co. G.
 Second Lieutenant Corydon B. Lakin, Stetson, Co. K.
 Second Lieutenant Henry D. Fuller, Corinth, Co. M.

PRIVATEs.

James F. Atwood, David J. Blanchard, William Y. Clement, John F. Dolliver, David Greeley, Moses T. Jackson, Levi B. Lewis, James McCarrison, jr., Rowland B. Pomroy, Minot C. Stearns, Hiram B. Sleeper, Josiah B. Young, Milford; Asa M. Young, Hampden; Francis A. Birce, Orrington; William J. Butterfield, Milford; Silas Blodgett, Charleston; Fred H. Butterfield, Henry Barker, George Barker, Milford; Frederick C. Brookings, William E. Bailey, Bradford; Albert J. Blanchard, Exeter; Samuel W. Bridgham, Newburg; Benjamin Bagley, Corinth; Preston L. Bennett, Plymouth; Isaac S. Bicknell, Stetson; David F. Brown, Levant, Horace W. Bolton, Newport; Stephen A. Berry, Garland; James M. Boyd, Plymouth; Daniel V. Bolton, Orrington; George W. Brickett, Etna; Abner Babb, Alton; Warren F. Bickford, Newburg; Cyrus F. Barrett, Hermon; Llewellyn F. Bickmore, Bangor; Jason Burlingame, Oldtown; Osgood Cappers, Levant; John Caverly, Joel W. Cloudman, Stetson; Orrin B. Caverly, Newport; James Curtis, jr., Uriah Curtis, Stetson; Orrison W. Cole, Etna; Charles W. Crockett, Paul F. R. Clark, Nathan, Clark, Stetson; Benjamin F. Carter, Cromwell Carter, Etna; Elisha E. Cunliffe, Orono; Charles H. Crowell, Dexter; Charles T. E. Clapp, Enfield; William Coyle, Oldtown; John C. Craig, Dixmont; Elbridge J. Coan, Exeter; Abram M. Colburn, Kilborn Cowan, Orono; Leander M. Comins, Lincoln; Richard J. Cram, Bradley; James H. Card, Glenburn; Henry R. Cowan, Orono; Frederick W. Chase, Bradford; William H. Canney, Exeter; Charles H. Caverly, Newport; Sylvanus R. Chamberlain, Bradford; Addison W. Crowell, Dexter; Lorenzo D. Chamberlain, Hudson; Horace B. Cushman, Dixmont; David Crosby, Levant; Charles H. Cobb, Orrington; Stephen R. Crosby, Clifton; Arrona W. Douglass, Greenbush; Joseph Doe, Milford; John S. Deering, Etna; Edward B. Deering, Brewer; Lafayette Damon, Stetson; Alvin A. Dority, Freeland Dunning, Charleston; Elisha W. Devereaux, John F. Dolliver, Howard M. Doyen, Henry L. Doyen, Levant; Walter D. Daniels, Newport; Richard M. Daniels, Stetson; Charles Dyer, Etna; Alonzo Dunning, Charleston; Stephen Davis, Stetson; John E. Daniels, William H. Daniels, Exeter; John H. Day, Newport; Warren Dobbs, Etna; Charles D. Day, Brewer; Daniel F. Davis, Stetson; Henry R. Emerson, Levant; Gilman L. Eastman, Corinth; Henry W. Folsom; Etna, Samuel Fowles, Stetson; Oliver J. Folsom, Etna; Benjamin F. Folsom, Newburg; Silas S. Foss, Lee; Charles A. French, Bradford; Juan F. Flint, Gorham A. Folsom, Newburg; Stephen R. Fletcher, Bradford; Daniel Frost, Adelbert I. Friend, Brewer; Henry S. Floyd, Eddington; Henry D. Fuller, Corinth; John M. Gilman, Newport, John W. Goodwin, Charles H. Goodwin, John R. Getchell, Joseph T. Geichell, Stetson; George C. Getchell, Levant; George W. Gipson, Orono; Lionel D. Gary, Bradford; Thomas Gulifer, Corinth; Charles Glidden, Newport; Samuel B. Gerry, Newport; Edwin S. Gates, Lincoln; Orrin L. Goodwin, Carroll; Fred Holt, Orono; James L. Hunt, George H. Higgins, Charleston; Charles Hussey, Orono; Hanson Hutchins, jr., Etna; Hezekiah F. Harris, Oldtown; Michael Hayes, Lee; Orrin M. Harrington, Newport; Charles C. Hurd, jr., Exeter; Samuel F. Harris, Bradley; William S. Howe, Stetson; George F. Hamilton, Newport; James B. Harris, Bradley; Ira B. Harvey, Maxfield; James C. Huntington, Bradford; James W. Herrin, Gustavus A. Hopkins, Plymouth, Samuel Hurd, jr., Stetson; D'Oscar Hopkins, Plymouth; Edwin Hill, Garland; Charles A. Heald, Lagrange; Horatio W. Harris, Oldtown; Henry J. Hurd, Corinth; Alto L. Hall, Lincoln; Josiah D. Hinds, Orrington; Hiram B. Ingalls, Albert M. Jackson, Henry A. Jackson, Bangor; Mariner S. Johnson, Exeter; Rufus E. Jewett, Etna; Benjamin W. Jellison, Oldtown; Charles H. Johnston, Rufus Johnson, Peter Jennings, Orono; Isaac N. Jenkins, Stetson; Alexander Jenkins, Newport; William K. Kennard, Etna; John Knowles, Corinna; John S. Keisor, Corinth; George S. Kelley, Newburg; Marcellus R. Kellogg, Patten; Hosea Knowles, Stetson; Abiathar R. Kendall, Carmel; John Kellen, Brewer; George E. Kimball, Winn; Perley Lowe, Levant; Charles E. Long, Newport; Cyrus Leighton, Stetson; Daniel W. Lowell, Plymouth; Charles E. Linnell, Levant; Charles S. Lary, Corinth; David Lawrence, Stetson; Almon Lewis, Newport; Corydon B. Lakin, Stetson; Samuel Lougee, Exeter; Raymond Lincoln, Dexter; Levi Ludden, Oldtown; Levi B. Lewis, James McCarrison, jr., Kenduskeag; Daniel R. McKenney, Stetson; Charles W. Merrifield, Orono; Edwin B. Melvin, Exeter; Richard McKenney, Newport; James A. Murphy, Lee; Charles H. Miller, Enfield; James S. Merrifield, Orono; Everett Mitchell, Etna; Albert L. McDonald, George Morrill, Joseph McKenney; Charles H. Moore, Orono; Daniel T. Mayo, Carmel; Nathan Moore, John A. Merrill, Orono; Elisha H. Megguier, Corinth; Albert S. McKenney, Stetson; Aaron L. Merrison, Charleston; Cornelius C. McDaniel, Orono; Dennis Madigan, Oldtown; John H. McCombs, Garland; Elijah Morrill, Newburg; John Mooney, Bangor; John S. Mills, Oldtown; John B. Marsh, Corinth; Justin S. Nevins, Bangor; James A. Neal, Orono; Sumner B. Newbegin, Milford; William H. H. Nickerson, Newport; Josiah Nason, jr., Veazie; Caleb F. Orday, Orono; John N. Osgood, Bradford; Arthur A. Pond, Bangor; John Parry, Orono; Aaron B. Patterson, Newport; Robert A. Patten, Stetson; Frank A. Peddington, Dexter; George L. Pease, Bradley; Anson Pettengill, Levant; John Page, Newport; Charles H. Pullen, Exeter; Alonzo Patten, Oldtown; Eli W. Parkman, Charleston; James N. Prescott, Exeter; Edward Porter, Bangor; George E. Powers, Orrington; Charles C. Palmer, Exeter; Charles W. Pickering, Albert A. Pierce, Bradford; David S. Perry, Winn; William B. Quimby, Newport; Michael G. Quinn, Carmel; Samuel J. Robinson, Orrington; James H. Rackliff, Bangor; George W. Rowell, Eddington; Thomas D. Rogers, Exeter; George A. Rowell, Bradley; Stephen P. Rowell, Orono; Thomas D. Rice, Plymouth; Benjamin F. Russell, Charles A. Russell, Exeter; Charles E. Rider, Bradford; Washington I. Rogers, Orrington; Frederick Reed, Bangor; Robert Rolliston, Oldtown; Henry G. Reynolds, Orrington; Albert A. Robinson, Corinth; Rodney W. Robinson, Bradford; Sanford J. Reed, Hermon; Prentiss Shaw, Corinna; Nathaniel Souther, Atwood C. Souther, Levant; Minot C. Stearns, Hiram B. Sleeper, Kenduskeag; Alton D. Spratt, Carmel; Corydon O. Stone, Corinna; C. C. Smiley, Sanford F. Simpson, Levant; Albert Spaulding, Newport; Francis A. Shaw, Exeter; Nathan M. Shaw, Bradford; Samuel B. Stone, Dixmont; Albert L. Sylvester, Etna; George B. Stearns, Orono; John Swaney, Stetson; Hartwell E. Stowe, Gardiner L. Stowe, Dexter; Sewall W. Smith, Eddington; James M. Simpson, Brewer; Edward P. Spratt, Carmel; Levi W. Sylvester, Etna; Asbury E. Soule, Newburg; William H. Stanhope, Bradford; Nathaniel T. Sargeant; Brewer; Oliver C. Talpey, Charleston; John P. Thompson, Veazie; Henry J. Thurlow, William H. Thurlow, Lee; Henry I. Tate, Frederick P. Townsend, Stetson; Daniel M. Tibbetts, Exeter; Horace K. Tobin, Lincoln; Charles L. Tash, Chester; Zelotes W. Trask, Bangor; George A. Varney, Newburg; William A. Vinall, George Vinall, Orono; Horace Varney, Newburg; Albert P. Winslow, Winn; James C. Whiting, Orono; John M. Warien, Veazie; George W. Wyman, Charleston; George A. Wentworth, Hiram Wood, Orrington; John G. Wing, Franklin B. Wilson, Orono; John W. West, John William, Carmel; Horace V. Whitcomb, Etna; Seward P. Woodman, James M. Woodman, Plymouth; Frank H. Wood, Etna; Seth E. Woodman, Plymouth; Elisha A. Webster, Glenburn; John T. Watson, Orono; Austin B. White, Levant; George W. Wood, Stetson; Jeremiah D. Webber, Winn; Hiram S. Willa, Hudson; Nathan B. Wiggin, Bangor; Charles M. Wentworth, Orrington; Oliver J. Woodard, Bradford; George Wellington, Garland; Gilman Welch, Veazie; Oscar T. Chase, Bradford; Samuel B. Gerry, Newport; Marcellus Hoben, Orrington. Edward Sylvester, Otis W. Whitcomb, Etna; Rowland B. Pomroy, Kenduskeag.

FIRST REGIMENT HEAVY ARTILLERY.

This regiment was organized at Bangor, Maine, August 21, 1862, as the Eighteenth Regiment Infantry, to serve three years, and left Bangor August 24th for Washington, where, after occupying a position on the Virginia side, and doing garrison duty for nearly five months, in accordance with orders from the War Department the organization was changed to heavy artillery, and by General Order No. 62, Adjutant General's Office of Maine, series of 1862, was designated as the First Regiment Heavy Artillery of Maine volunteers. The several companies were stationed in the forts and batteries forming the defences of Washington, and there remained until 1864. The Third Battery of Mounted Artillery was temporarily attached to this regiment by War Department Special Order No. 144, of March 28, 1863, and served as Company M until relieved and re-organized as a battery of mounted artillery, by War Department Special Order No. 88, of February 23, 1864.

Lieutenant G. H. Ruggles

The organization of the First Maine Heavy Artillery, with the maximum number of men required (1800), was completed in the month of February, 1864. On the 15th of May the regiment embarked on transports to join the Army of the Potomac, debarking at Belle Plain Landing; and on the 19th, near the Fredericksburg Pike, it took a prominent part in repulsing the heavy attack of the enemy on the supply trains; the loss of the regiment in that action being as follows: Commissioned officers killed, 6; wounded, 6; enlisted men killed, 76; wounded, 388; aggregate loss, 476.

On the 24th the regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade, Third Division, Major-General Birney commanding. On the 16th and 18th of June it participated in the charges on the enemy's works at Petersburg, Virginia, the loss of the regiment during those two days being 7 commissioned officers killed and 25 wounded, 108 enlisted men killed and 464 wounded. The regiment also participated in the unsuccessful movement on the 22d, to establish a line to extend south of Petersburg, losing about twenty men, chiefly prisoners. On the 18th of August, the regiment doing picket duty near Deep Bottom, Colonel Chaplin, commanding the line, was mortally wounded by a rebel sharpshooter, and died on the 20th. The regiment afterwards moved to the vicinity of Fort Sedgwick, where it remained until September 30th, continually under fire; the loss in killed and wounded, however, did not amount to twenty. On the 2d of October the regiment participated in the movement in the direction of the South Side Railroad, and returned to Fort Sedgwick on the 6th, having lost 7 men; and on the 27th, in the action on the Boydton Plank Road, losing in killed, wounded, and missing, 3 commissioned officers and 29 enlisted men.

The regiment returned to the front of Petersburg on the 28th, and was ordered to Cedar Level; and on the 7th of December took part in the destruction of Jarrett's Station, on the Weldon Railroad, returning to Petersburg on the 12th. On the 5th of February, 1865, it participated in the movement to Hatcher's Run, where it remained doing the ordinary picket duty till March 25th, when it was engaged with the enemy for more than one hour, losing 1 commissioned officer and 3 enlisted men killed, 17 wounded, and 6 taken prisoners. It also participated in all the movements resulting in the evacuation of Richmond and Petersburg, and the surrender of the rebel army under Lee—losing in the several engagements 4 commissioned officers wounded, 4 enlisted men killed and 21 wounded.

On the 16th of April the regiment was at Bailey's

Cross Roads, and participated in the grand review at Washington.

On the 6th of June the original members of the regiment were mustered out of the United States service, but the organization, composed of veterans and recruits of this regiment, and accessions from the Seventeenth and Nineteenth Regiments, remained and occupied the line of forts from Fort Washington on the Potomac to Fort McMahon on the Anticosti, until September 11, 1865, when it was mustered out of the United States service at Washington, District of Columbia, by Captain D. W. Van Horn, Assistant Commissary of Musters, in accordance with orders from the War Department. Leaving Washington on the 12th, it arrived in Bangor on the 17th, where, on the 20th, the members of the regiment were paid and finally discharged.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Colonel Daniel Chaplin, Bangor.
Colonel Russell B. Shepherd, Bangor.
Lieutenant-Colonel Russell B. Shepherd, Bangor.
Major Russell B. Shepherd, Bangor.
Major Christopher V. Crossman, Bangor.
Major Charles W. Nute, Lincoln.
Quartermaster Horatio Pitcher, Bangor.
Surgeon Rotheus E. Paine, Hampden.
Assistant Surgeon Henry A. Reynolds, Bangor.
Sergeant-Major Nathan M. Mills, Milford.
Sergeant-Major John A. Lancey, Bangor.
Quartermaster-Sergeant Charles Dwinel, Bangor.
Commissary-Sergeant Charles Dwinel, Bangor.
Commissary-Sergeant George P. Pate, Bangor.
Hospital Steward Benjamin C. Frost, Bangor.
Hospital Steward Joshua W. Tresley, Hermon.
Principal Musician, Fred A. Edwards, Lincoln.
Principal Musician Andrew A. Sawyer, Levant.

COMPANY A.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William C. Clark.
Captain Charles W. Nute, Lincoln.
Captain Samuel E. Burnham, Lincoln.
First Lieutenant Charles W. Nute, Lincoln.
First Lieutenant Samuel F. Burnham, Lincoln.
First Lieutenant Charles Merrill, Lincoln.
First Lieutenant Warren A. Huntress, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Samuel E. Burnham, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Charles Merrill, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Warren A. Huntress, Lincoln.
Second Lieutenant Prince A. Gatchell, Lincoln.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant David F. Averill, Lincoln.
Sergeant Joseph W. Knights, Lincoln.
Sergeant Thomas B. Gifford, Lincoln.
Sergeant John H. Taylor, Winn.
Sergeant Hiram R. Bailey, Springfield.
Sergeant Charles Merrill, Lincoln.
Sergeant Prince A. Gatchell, Lincoln.
Sergeant Warren A. Huntress, Lincoln.
Sergeant Luther Clay, Lincoln.
Sergeant Arthur P. Budge, Springfield.
Corporal Benjamin M. Griffin, Lowell.
Corporal James B. Parsons, Glenburn.
Corporal Thomas H. Stanwood, Woodville.
Corporal Martin Scott, Chester.
Corporal Samuel K. Thornton, Lincoln.
Corporal Daniel S. Scott, Woodville.
Corporal William Harmon, Winn.
Corporal Randall M. Davis, Lincoln.
Corporal Frederic A. Edwards, Lincoln.
Corporal David F. Averill, Lincoln.
Corporal Joseph W. Knights, Lincoln.
Corporal Jonathan Clay, jr., Burlington.

Corporal James Warren, Lincoln.
 Artificer Herod Robinson, Exeter.
 Artificer Jonathan G. Rideout, Lincoln.
 Musician William C. Shaw, Lincoln.
 Musician Charles F. Davis, Lincoln.
 Wagoner Benjamin Richardson, Lincoln.
 Wagoner Lyman H. Dolley, Lincoln.

PRIVATES.

James P. Annis, Hermon; Otis H. Bruce, Robert W. Bruce, Danie M. Edwards, Francis R. Jewell, Benjamin Dow, Horatio Nelson, Israel H. Nute, George E. Osborne, Thomas Sullivan, Francis A. Sullivan, George A. Tucker, George Tourtillott, Augustus M. Turner, James Warren, William C. Warren, Benjamin Richardson, Nathaniel Bothwell, jr., John A. Davis, Lyman H. Davis, Oscar R. Fitch, Thomas B. Gifford, Anstin Heath, Alvin W. Hurd, Aaron Kneeland, Thomas G. Libby, Edward C. Osborne, Jonathan G. Rideout, George C. Rounds, Albert Spearen, Samuel Thornton, George W. Tucker, James H. West, Adelbert Witham, Lincoln; Walter H. Randolph, Dixmont; William Benson, Lorenzo D. Davis, Andrew J. Dill, Charles H. Hill, Mattawamkeag; Jeremiah F. Bartlett, Nathan C. Cole, Elijah M. Clements, John N. Leonard, Daniel W. Snow, John R. Merrill, Chandler H. Beale, Oscar Abbott, Newburg; David Berry, Orrin M. Crammitt, James Flye, George Leeth, Rosewell Reed, George H. Wilcox, Simon Devon, Charles W. Carson, Walter K. Kelly, Charles H. Johnson, Nathaniel Ladd, Dennis O. Leary, Bangor; Alba W. Spencer, Horace S. Reed, Orono; Jeremiah Avery, Greenfield; Jeremiah B. Atkins, Manly S. Brown, Levant; Anasa S. Flagg, John P. Crowley, Atwood Burnham, Andrew J. Pierce, Hudson; George W. Dill, Robert Clifford, Willard Knights, Lee; Amos T. Holt, Hiram R. Bailey, John G. Dolley, Enoch Grover, Isaac L. Olmstead, Albert Spearen, William W. Tibbetts, Springfield; John C. Ritchie, Hampden; Nathaniel L. Fisher, Corinth; Melvin J. Perry, Charles H. Lancaster, Corinna; William Pendleton, Charles H. Tibbetts, Benjamin G. Grover, Horace L. Peasley, Alonzo S. Tripp, Burlington; Henry H. Scott, John B. Scott, George W. Scott, Jeremiah Glidden, Addison C. Keen, Daniel McCurdy, Martin Scott, William W. Scott, Chester; William Mansell, Charleston; William C. Davis, Benjamin M. Griffin, Ivory S. White, Lowell; William Harmon, Samuel C. Leland, Henry Noble, Charles Noble, John H. Taylor, Winn; Henry W. Howard, Bealy Runnels, John E. Waite, Pattagumpus; John O. Hughes, Medway, James B. Parsons, Glenburn; Francis L. Philbrook, Frederick Philbrook, Prentiss; Herod Robinson, Joseph E. Robinson, Exeter; Daniel S. Scott, George F. Stanwood, Thomas H. Stanwood, John R. Towle, Holden.

COMPANY B.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Samuel W. Daggett, Bangor.
 Captain Frederick C. Low, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Frederick C. Low, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Andrew J. Hilton, Glenburn.
 First Lieutenant Miles McKinney, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Benjamin C. Frost, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Charles E. Robinson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Charles W. Lenfest, Milford.
 Second Lieutenant Isaac N. Morgan, Brewer.
 Second Lieutenant Albert G. Abbott, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Miles McKinney, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Edward L. Worcester, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Andrew J. Hilton, Glenburn.
 Sergeant Charles W. Lenfest, Milford.
 Sergeant Isaac N. Morgan, Brewer.
 Sergeant Albert G. Abbott, Bangor.
 Sergeant Herman P. Smith, Orrington.
 Sergeant William A. Webster, Glenburn.
 Sergeant Freeman D. Gove, Alton.
 Sergeant Charles W. Phipps, Orrington.
 Sergeant William K. Nason, Kenduskeag.
 Sergeant Edward L. Worcester, Bangor.
 Sergeant Henry L. Thomas, Bradford.
 Sergeant Sylvester G. Elliot, Holden.
 Corporal William H. Welch, Bradford.
 Corporal Miles McKinney, Bangor.
 Corporal Addison C. Percival, Hudson.
 Corporal Nathaniel S. Hoyt, Bangor.

Corporal Gustavus A. Watson, Bangor.
 Corporal William A. Webster, Bangor.
 Corporal Charles H. Pond, Bangor.
 Corporal Hernian P. Smith, Orrington.
 Corporal George H. Robbins, Bangor.
 Corporal Ezra McGray, Bradford.
 Corporal Marion F. Tyler, Glenburn.
 Corporal Ferdinand C. Burr, Brewer.
 Corporal Joseph B. Tibbetts, Glenburn.
 Corporal Alonzo Gray, Bangor.
 Corporal Willard B. Emery, Bangor.
 Corporal Wilmot T. Vickery, Glenburn.
 Corporal Simeon A. Hapworth, Bangor.
 Corporal Isaiah B. Bolton, Orrington.
 Corporal Charles E. Lovell, Bangor.
 Corporal Isaac P. F. McCobb, Bradford.
 Musician Charles L. Levalley, Bangor.
 Musician Elbridge T. Lansil, Bangor.
 Artificer Alfred M. Cowan, Glenburn.
 Artificer Charles H. Pond, Bangor.
 Wagoner Henry W. Hutchinson, Glenburn.
 Wagoner Charles Jones, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

William Alexander, Edward W. Gorham, Leonard McCoy, Thornton M. Pierce, George H. Robbins, Edward L. Worcester, George W. Grant, Nathaniel S. Hoyt, Charles W. Johnson, Charles W. Jones, Henry J. Kimball, William S. Mayville, Henry H. Mayville, Patrick McCue, John P. Trask, Benjamin F. Whittier, Ambrose Boyle, Judson Dexter, David Estes, John Elden, David King, Jason C. Russell, William Bartlett, Charles H. Daggett, George W. Grant, Nathan A. Hopkins, Lysander Bragg, Artemas Butterfield, Manley Butterfield, Benjamin F. Buzzell, Isaac Duff, George M. Furbish, Samuel Gibson, Reuel Graves, Lorenzo D. Jones, Elbridge T. Lansill, Charles R. Lavalley, Charles E. Lovell, Charles W. Lant, Richard P. McGrath, James McHugh, Charles H. McKenney, George F. Marquis, John H. Nason, Albert B. Rider, Thomas Savage, Joseph B. Tibbetts, Lemuel B. Whitney, Benjamin F. Whittier, Charles H. Whittier, Benjamin F. Adams, Andrew M. Davis, Charles E. Dodge, George Delany, George Emerson, William Allen, Andrew M. Davis, Bangor; Franklin Ware, Jeremiah T. Bowden, Henry A. Severance, Isaiah B. Bolton, Samuel M. Bolton, Timothy W. George, Charles W. Phipps, Albert B. Rider, George B. Robinson, Aretus H. Baker, Orrington; Harvey A. Blanchard, Albert Clements, Albert Smith, John Freese, Eli Veanco, George Inman, Joseph Labelle, Orono; Leander Vickery, Orlando Moore, Warren H. Kent, Solomon Morrison, James A. Giles, Jefferson Gray, George W. Barstow, Lewis M. Thompson, John M. Beebe, John Frazer, Charles E. Shaw, Charles H. Tyler, Brewer, George S. Gates, Andrew E. Gates, Burlington; Benjamin Jackson, Joseph O. Ward, Carmel; Franklin S. Blayze, Greenbush, Joseph S. Hutchins, Nehemiah Brown, David R. Mills, Nathan M. Mills, Henry C. Hutchinson, Milford; Charles L. Langley, James Langley, Joseph R. Langley, James Loughrey, Amaziah Langley, Stetson; Herbert T. Gibbs, James A. Cole, Alfred M. Cowan, Rosalvan P. Cowan, Henry Hutchinson, Herbert Leadbetter, Isaac H. Parsons, Willard W. Pomeroy, Marion F. Tyler, Wilmot T. Vickery, Glenburn; W. Jethro Clark, Alton; Truman D. Gre, Charles N. Leavitt, Truman Gre, Corinth; Elbridge G. Gordon, Isaac P. F. McCobb, Jacob O. Mudgett, Charles Speed, John Speed, David Brady, Stephen Stout, Henry L. Thomas, Albert Treat, Peter Tibdo, Henry Bell, James M. Call, Augustus E. Clark, James B. Erskine, John C. Erskine, Alphonso Fletcher, Austin Q. French, John H. Furbish, Bradford; Calvin R. Billington, Dedham; Charles A. Colomy, Hudson; James A. Courtney, William K. Nason, John S. Smith, Kenduskeag; Leander F. Elliott, Sylvander V. Elliott, Holden; John H. Tibbetts, Charles T. Twombly, Levant; Ira B. Robbins, Appleton; William P. Hewes, Charles F. Jewell, Dixmont; Sappel Orson, Thomas Loran, Thomas Dana, John Kealing, Thomas Louis, Oldtown; Sylvester C. Rose, Dexter; John Tomar, Lincoln; James McKeen, Eddington; Elias K. Porter, Hampden; Henry W. Rider, Peter Tidbo, William H. Welch, Bradford; William W. Tibbetts, Clifton.

COMPANY C.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain George R. Fernald, Levant.
 First Lieutenant Horatio Pitcher, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Hezekiah H. Lane, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant James F. Robinson, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Charles J. House, Lee.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George A. York, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

James F. Aldridge, Eben W. Foster, George G. Henries, Christopher Mench, William H. Porter, Alonzo Thompson, Benjamin Edley, N. G. Furbush, Andrew Garland, John Ham, Hezekiah Lane, Charles D. Mowney, James F. Robinson, William White, Bangor; William J. Wilcox, Patten; Charles W. Allen, Hampden; Nathan Brasier, Oldtown; W. Alney Titus, William L. Carr, George W. Curtis, Dexter; Don Carlos Sinclair; Edward J. Howard, Brewer; Daniel Clifford, Lincoln; Edwin G. Brimmer, Charleston; Francis G. Knowlton, Dixmont; William W. Smith, Edwin T. Smith, Orrington; Josiah Towle, Joshua Walton, Enfield; David E. Cunningham, Bradford; Charles J. House, Lee.

COMPANY D.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Christopher V. Crossman, Bangor.
 Captain Frederick E. Shaw, Bangor.
 Captain Abiather J. Knowles, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Frederic E. Shaw, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Henry E. Sellers, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant George Rollins, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant William A. Beckford, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant James A. Dole, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Henry E. Sellers, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant George Rollins, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant William A. Beckford, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Thomas S. Drummond, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Hezekiah H. Lane, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant James F. Robinson, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Henry E. Sellers, Bangor.
 Sergeant Jonathan C. Lane, Bangor.
 Sergeant John S. Pearson, Bangor.
 Sergeant William A. Bickford, Bangor.
 Sergeant Albert Haskell, Bangor.
 Sergeant William A. Howe, Eddington.
 Sergeant Henry M. Howe, Eddington.
 Sergeant Hezekiah H. Lane, Bangor.
 Corporal Lorenzo D. Hoyt, Stetson.
 Corporal Joseph W. Covell, Bangor.
 Corporal James F. Robinson, Bangor.
 Corporal Corydon Ireland, Bangor.
 Corporal Calvin Kirk, Bangor.
 Corporal Albion K. P. Grant, Eddington.
 Corporal Almon W. Blackman, Eddington.
 Corporal Walter S. Gilman, Bangor.
 Corporal James W. Bowman, Bangor.
 Corporal Albert C. Ellis, Bangor.
 Corporal Frank W. Webster, Bangor.
 Corporal George Rollins, Bangor.
 Corporal Timothy Cole, Bangor.
 Corporal William A. Howe, Eddington.
 Corporal John Jackson, Bangor.
 Corporal Thomas S. Drummond, Bangor.
 Musician Charles H. Finson, Bangor.
 Musician Charles H. Tuesley, Hermon.
 Artificer Amaziah Billings, Bangor.
 Wagoner Isaac S. Dunning, Eddington.

PRIVATES.

William C. Chamberlain, Otis Dunbar, Davis Ames, Stephen M. Bickford, John Bowen, Warren Boynton, Gorham Bulger, Prentiss M. Baker, Alfred W. Cappers, John Cox, Timothy Cole, George H. Crosby, William Dixon, James Dore, Fred F. Davis, Thomas Donahue, Andrew Frith, Ichabod G. Furbish, Isaac W. Gillespie, Joseph Goodwin, David Ames, Walter S. Gilman, Roscoe G. Johnson, Samuel P. Jones, Calvin Kirk, Walter Leighton, Charles W. Lowell, Thomas McCluskey, Charles H. Merrill, Edward K. Moulton, Amaziah Billings, William H. Bragdon, Joseph W. Covel, Adrain R. Drew, John W. Hurd, Christopher L. Hutchinson, Corydon Ireland, Hezekiah H. Lane, William W. Philbrook, jr., David T. Pierce, George W. Porter, John N. Prescott, Joseph B. Prescott, Harvey H. Reed, Frank S. Robinson, James F. Robinson, Thomas Rose, Reuben W. Seavey, Charles N. Smith, Charles W. Smith, Sumner Tibbetts, Rodolphus A. Tufts, William Wallace, Mathew Waters, Robert A. Webster, George W. Withan, Henry S. Hall, John W. Hanscom, Chris L. Hutchinson, George A. Haskell, Charles O. Hutchinson, Joseph Hazleton, Samuel P. Jones, Roscoe G. Johnson, Charles A. Jones, James A. Scullin, Horace A. Smith, Horace S. Smith, Theodore C. Stevens, John M. Tuttle, Alphonzo W. Phillbrook, Eugene S. Phillbrook, Samuel M. Emerson, Charles Parkhurst, Norris N. Pierce, Henry Pomroy, Frank S. Power, James Rediker, James F. Thompson, Henry S. Hall, John Hanscom, Timothy Mahoney, Archibald McDougal; Hosea B. Perkins, Jonas Page, Seward P. Richardson, James I. Smith, Benjamin Wiley, jr., John S. Libbey, Frank B. Whitting, James A. Dole, Richard Firth, George Firth, Bangor; Rodolphus A. Tufts, Joseph P. Dorr, Josiah E. Hurd, Robert R. Damon, Paul Berry, Stetson; George V. Bran, William C. Durgin, James B. Webb, Samuel J. Wentworth, Veazie; Tristram H. Warren, Hudson; Charles H. Tuesley, Stephen L. Watson, Hermon; Simon L. Norton, Lee; Abiather J. Knowles, Lagrange; Edward L. Hunt, Jeremiah Cook, Oldtown; Horatio F. Bean, Gustavus W. Bean, Etna; Hiram G. Bolton, Corinth; David Bishop, Pattagumpus; Valentine Clevly, Charles H. Calef,* Henry S. Campbell, Almon W. Blackman, Charles F. Broad, Isaac Dunning, Albion K. P. Grant, Henry M. Howe, Eddington; Charles Shaw, Charles F. Pease, George H. Leathers, Daniel R. Leathers, Hazen B. Eastman, Exeter; Charles A. Peavey, James W. Dutton, William E. Dutton, George A. Johnson, Emery W. Hatch, John T. Sears, Aaron Nason, Orono; David Smith, Dixmont; Alexander Carr, Lorenzo Parks, John Jellison, Lorenzo Parker, Clifton; John Patter, Jehiel S. Flanders, Hudson; William H. Beatham, Lincoln; George H. Fish, Carmel; John H. Partridge, Hampden; Gideon K. Oliver, Bradley; Austin L. Jones, Holden.

COMPANY E.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Benjamin F. Rollins, Dixmont.
 Captain Prince A. Gatchell, Lincoln.
 First Lieutenant Frederick A. Cummings, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Benjamin F. Rollins, Dixmont.
 First Lieutenant George P. Pote, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Fred A. Cummings, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Benjamin F. Rollins, Dixmont.
 Second Lieutenant G. P. Pote, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles J. House, Lee.
 Sergeant Frederick A. Cummings.
 Corporal Samuel F. Tasker, Bangor.
 Corporal Ludovic O. Gatchell, Lee.
 Corporal Jephtha Young, jr., Dixmont.
 Corporal Daniel W. Pettingill, Corinna.
 Artificer Richard P. Raynes, Bangor.
 Artificer Alpheus Rowell, Dixmont.

PRIVATES.

Elisha A. Adams, Willard G. Delano, John Fitzgerald, Atwood Hillard, William S. Randlett, Richard P. Raynes, William L. Sampson, Henry O. Smiley, Samuel F. Tasker, Abeal Fowles, James R. Orne, David O. Pollard, David V. Fogg, Amos D. Orne, George G. Thompson, Eliphalet Emery, David Hewey, Moses H. Hubbard, Nelson Hart, William L. Hodsdon, John J. Johnston, Charles E. Lord, Isaac M. Sanborn, Bangor; Isaac L. Sanborn, Newport; Benjamin D. Averill, Prentiss; George E. Ba'l, George W. Greenough, George P. Leighton, Exeter; Ezra Mitchell, Thomas D. Jordan, John Saul, Jason Burlingame, Oldtown; James A. Barnes, William Bartlett, Emerson Bartlett, Charles A. Gatchell, Charles J. House, Jesse J. Peacock, Benjamin W. Rollins, Charles Thurlow, Wentworth Staples, Lee; Prince A. Gatchell, Lincoln; Sanford W. Foster, Springfield; Andrew J. Reeves, William R. Reeves, Andrew W. McFarland, Bradford; Horace Decker, Lagrange; Sewall B. Blake, Dexter; Osborne Weeman, Kenduskeag; Jephtha Young jr., Alpheus Rowell, Stephen Myrick, Dixmont; Amos A. Withee, Etna; George Thompson, Elisha H. Broad, George S. Woodbury, Eddington; Seth H. Brown, No. 3 Plantation; Joseph F. Brown, Greenbush; John Bradford, Alton.

COMPANY F.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Lorenzo Hinkley, Hampden.
 Captain Roscoe F. Hersey, Bangor.
 Captain George R. Fernald, Levant.
 First Lieutenant Roscoe F. Hersey, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant George R. Fernald, Levant.

First Lieutenant Horace H. Shaw, Hampden.
 First Lieutenant John N. Batchelder, Hampden.
 First Lieutenant John A. Lancey, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Gardner H. Ruggles, Carmel.
 Second Lieutenant John N. Batchelder, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant James A. Dole, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Stephen G. Waldron, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant George R. Fernald, Levant.
 Second Lieutenant Horace H. Shaw, Hampden.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Luther K. Patten, Hermon.
 Sergeant Nathan Emerson, jr., Hampden.
 Sergeant Asa T. Wing, Levant.
 Sergeant Stephen G. Waldron, Hampden.
 Sergeant James Goodel, jr., Hampden.
 Sergeant John W. Blake, Carmel.
 Sergeant Edward C. Tuttle, Bangor.
 Sergeant George E. Gilman, Levant.
 Sergeant Horace H. Shaw, Hampden.
 Sergeant Gardner H. Ruggles, Carmel.
 Sergeant John N. Batchelder, Hampden.
 Sergeant Horatio N. P. Spooner, Levant.
 Corporal Fred A. Chamberlain, Bangor.
 Corporal Bradley W. Abbott, Etna.
 Corporal Alonzo A. Orr, Argyle.
 Corporal Albin Blackden, Carmel.
 Corporal Edwin K. Stuart, Etna.
 Corporal Arannah Tracey, Carmel.
 Corporal Daniel R. Stevenson, Hampden.
 Corporal Stephen S. Sawyer, Hampden.
 Corporal David S. Farnham, Carmel.
 Corporal Simeon C. Whitcomb, Hampden.
 Corporal John H. Kelley, Bangor.
 Corporal Mark T. Emerson, Bangor.
 Corporal Nathan Emerson, jr., Hampden.
 Corporal William M. Stevenson, Hampden.
 Corporal James A. Dole, Bangor.
 Corporal Charles E. Perkins, Bradley.
 Corporal James C. Gray, Etna.
 Corporal George E. Dodge, Carmel.
 Corporal Asa T. Wing, Levant.
 Musician Amos W. Twombly, Levant.
 Musician Andrew C. Sawyer, Levant.
 Artificer Otis H. Mante, Carmel.
 Wagoner Lafayette Brown, Hermon.

PRIVATES.

Joseph Appleton, Llewellyn A. Appleton, Bartlett Bradford, Corydon C. Blackden, Loomis J. Felker, Owen D. Bradford, Augustus H. Collins, John A. Murch, John D. Small, Allison Blackden, Goff M. Blackden, John W. Blake, Peleg Bradford, jr., Eugene Burrill, Cyrus Heard, John Heard, Andrew S. Knight, Peter Patterson, George L. Robinson, Avandah Smith, Josiah Staples, Seldon Rogers, Aramah Tracy, Martin V. Tripp, Carmel; Abijah T. Young, Edwin K. Stuart, Daniel P. Reynolds, Harrison R. Friend, Joseph Carter, John G. Carter, Eugene Lord, Bradley W. Abbott, Etna; Harrison L. Mitchell, John A. Urey, Henry W. Pomroy, Aaron W. Edgerly, Richard L. Beebe, Frederick L. Clark, Levi Corson, jr., Otis W. Ellis, George E. Gilman, Orrin Houston, David A. Legrow, Thomas L. May, Charles F. Reed, James Turner, jr., Altheus O. Wing, Levant; Stephen G. Waldron, Hezekiah Whitcomb, Simeon C. Whitcomb, Oliver Wray, Wm. J. Temple, John W. Snow, Francis H. Snow, Alphonso Smith, Harvey Sawyer, Stephen S. Sawyer, Andrew Patterson, G. J. Nickerson, Francis E. Joy, Daniel R. Stevenson, L. M. Stevenson, A. E. Hardy, Frederick T. Hall, James Goodell, jr., Orrington Gowin, Levi K. Mayo, Melvin S. Stevenson, Henry F. Stubbs, John W. Shaw, Hampden; John L. Robinson, James O. Knowlton, Corinth; Dennis Sherburn, Newburg; Edward C. Tuttle, Charles J. Small, John H. Kelley, Nathan D. Hanson, Robert Fulton, jr., Frederick A. Chamberlain, John A. Lancey, Roscoe Johnston, Dennis Higgins, William Howard, Charles F. Clark, John F. Drew, Henry O. Keith, John F. Montgomery, Rodney J. Taylor, Bangor; Charles P. Wheeler, Newport; Joshua W. Tuesley, Robert Swan, Samuel Snow, James J. Reeves, Samuel Pomroy, Thomas Miller, Charles H. Maddocks, Ephraim J. Drew, Sylvester Drew, Charles R. Clark, Jacob R. Bowen, George W. Taylor, George A. York, David W. Barrett, Edward R. Maddocks, John Hall, Isaac W. Grant, Orville J. Dorman, James Booker, Sanford

Annis, Hermon; John H. Bell, Henry M. French, Hugh S. Skillin Garland; John W. Smith, William T. Gray, Ransom C. Dodge, Ambrose Nason, Bradley; Rufus H. Gilman, Exeter; Charles B. Smith, Charles O. Perry, Franklin C. Barwise, Brewer; Oliver P. Hodgdon, Kenduskeag; Henry Lord, Dexter; Alonzo A. Orr, Stephen Grant, George F. Bussell, Darius G. Brown, Argyle; Timothy Murphy, Orono; Osgood W. Stevens, Bradford; Alva M. Chick, Dixmont; Isaac A. Billington, Thomas Wentworth, James E. Wentworth, Orrington.

COMPANY G.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Alphonzo A. Tozier, Veazie.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Corporal John G. Hammons, Etna.
 Corporal James C. Bradbury, Burlington.

PRIVATES.

Asa Batchelder, Levant; Henry W. Casey, Hermon; William H. Shaw, David Legrow, Frank B. Dore, Orono; Floriman D. Furbish, Edwin W. Gould, Randall N. Coehran, David McLane, William Ritchie, Charles Randlett, Bangor; Jeremiah Towle, Enfield; Sylvester Taylor, Newport; Alonzo E. Randall, Dixmont; William R. Betts, Elhs Mehan, James Jones, Cornelius Mehan, Nathaniel Spaulding, Hampden; Elisha P. Smith, Chester; Simon McLain, John Robinson, Oldtown; Alson H. Quimby, Jethro S. Getchell, Etna; Josiah M. Gowdey, Timothy C. Atkinson, Charleston; Henry W. Casey, Hermon; John S. Leathers, Carmel; Thornton E. Peavey, Joseph Peavey, Lincoln; Jacob McKenney, Stetson; Henry H. Sleeper, Milford; Charles D. Tirrell, Holden; Alonzo Cummings, Lowell.

COMPANY H.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant John A. Lancey, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Corporal Asbury F. Haynes, Passadumkeag.

PRIVATES.

Alvin C. Casey, Edmund Perry, Loren O. Ward, Carmel; George Tucker, Greenfield; Benjamin Thomas, Charles W. Temple, Maxfield; Charles H. Dunham, Granville Dunham, Etna; Alfred Hirt, Bradford; Alfred J. Douglass, Exeter; John F. Norton, Springfield; Thomas Williams, George W. Tuesley, Hermon; William G. Jackson, Converse Thomas, Samuel A. Thomas, Frank Field, Lee; Charles H. Saulsbury, Orono; John W. Mitchell, Etna; Lewis A. Nason, John H. Jewell, George Jewell, Carroll G. Bickford, George M. Willey, Dixmont; Charles E. Fickett, Brewer; Charles T. Haskell, Levant; John H. Modrey, Bangor; John Carrigan, Milford; Josiah M. Whittier, Austin W. Whittier, Corinth; Dennis Higgins, Hampden.

COMPANY I.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain John W. Atwell, Orono.
 Captain Andrew J. Jaquith, Oldtown.
 Captain Samuel J. Oakes, Oldtown.
 Captain Hudson Sawyer, Levant.
 First Lieutenant Andrew J. Jaquith, Oldtown.
 First Lieutenant Samuel J. Oakes, Oldtown.
 First Lieutenant Richard V. Moore, Oldtown.
 First Lieutenant Benjamin F. Oakes, Oldtown.
 First Lieutenant Albert White, Orono.
 First Lieutenant Thomas G. Spratt, Orono.
 Second Lieutenant Lemuel J. Oakes, Oldtown.
 Second Lieutenant Richard V. Moore, Oldtown.
 Second Lieutenant Samuel W. Crowell, Orono.
 Second Lieutenant Benjamin F. Oakes, Oldtown.
 Second Lieutenant Albert White, Orono.
 Second Lieutenant Thomas G. Spratt, Alton.
 Second Lieutenant Abiather J. Knowles, Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles M. Weymouth, Orono.
 Sergeant Alphonzo A. Tozier, Veazie.
 Sergeant Albert Guppy, Corinth.
 Sergeant Benjamin M. Foss, Orono.
 Sergeant Edwin F. Lord, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Isaac Q. Freeze, Lagrange.
 Sergeant Newton E. Bonney, Veazie.
 Sergeant Richard V. Moore, Veazie.
 Sergeant Albert White, Orono.

Sergeant John E. Bennoch, Orono.
 Sergeant Samuel W. Crowell, Orono.
 Sergeant Ithamer D. Morton, Oldtown.
 Corporal John A. Cousins, Oldtown.
 Corporal Charles W. Southard, Orono.
 Corporal Edward J. Milton, Oldtown.
 Corporal John B. Curtis, Orono.
 Corporal Charles Derocher, Orono.
 Corporal Edmund C. Parsons, Orono.
 Corporal Chesley L. Metcalf, Oldtown.
 Corporal Melville C. Marsh, Orono.
 Corporal Thomas S. Spratt, Alton.
 Corporal Moses A. Colburn, Orono.
 Corporal Charles W. Weymouth, Orono.
 Corporal Adelbert Sproul, Veazie.
 Corporal Charles Dernsha, Orono.
 Corporal Benjamin F. Oakes, Oldtown.
 Corporal Andrew S. Butters, Oldtown.
 Corporal George S. Oakes, Oldtown.
 Musician Moses A. Colburn, Orono.
 Musician William H. Grant, Bangor.
 Musician Albert C. Palmer, Exeter.
 Artificer Andrew S. Butters, Oldtown.
 Artificer George T. Springer, Oldtown.
 Wagoner Charles Mercer, Orono.

PRIVATES.

William F. Babb, George B. McKechnie, Alton; Joseph Boardway, Bradley; Newton E. Bonney, William Doane, William H. Doughty, James G. Dudley, John L. Rollins, Timothy E. Phillips, Veazie; Charles H. Bosworth, Charles A. Burgess, Barnard G. Church, Thomas J. Cole, John A. Cousins, Erastus F. Emery, Rufus Gross, Theodore H. Graffan, William Grover, John F. Hodgkins, James H. Harrison, Calvin L. Hutchins, Charles H. Knox, Edwin F. Lord, Chesley L. Metcalf, Zina Michael, Edward Milton, jr., James M. Moore, Wentworth Nason, Ephraim L. Brown, Edmund M. Erskine, Alverdo W. Ford, Oliver Porter, Samuel P. Soule, George B. Stinson, George B. Smith, Lorenzo Warren, Oldtown; Joel F. Brown, Allen W. Buzzell, Ira Chapman, John B. Cole, John B. Curtis, George W. Dernsha, Oval Dernsha, Henry H. Doane, Richard Dowdell, George W. Doe, Benjamin F. Foss, Thomas Gilbert, Selden Hancock, Nicholas Harris, Amos R. Lansel, Albert W. Marsh, Melville C. Marsh, Anson C. Morrill, Thomas Nedd, James M. Neal, Edmund Parsons, Henry Pooler, Leander Russell, William S. Averill, George Derocher, Augustus Goodwin, James F. Getchell, Leander R. Young, David Lord; Alexander Veancour, James Carey, Andrew J. Miles, Greenlief McPhetres, Orono; Isaac Q. Freeze, Lagrange; Albert Guppy, Stillman Guppy, John W. Ham, Corinth; Andrew D. Hall, William R. Washburn, Brewer; James A. Hathaway, Lowell; Josiah M. Jordan, Troy; Eli Andrews, Job Kelley, Daniel J. Flanders, Newburg; Alvin S. Archer, Francis M. Archer, Medway; Joseph W. Cottle, Alfred Cottle, Alfred Carter, Ithamar Emerson, Fred A. McKenney, Bangor; Moses Davis, Winn; James Davis, Lincoln; Charles H. Hardy, Etna; George E. Tibbetts, Horatio Tibbetts, Alvin Overlook, Hermon; Henry Rowe, Peru; Thomas B. Worcester, Prentiss; Randall J. Wilson, Charleston.

COMPANY K.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Charles B. Fliin, Levant.

PRIVATES.

Benjamin L. Crowell, John F. Ames, Charles M. Dority, Corinth; Solomon T. Trott, Amos E. Trott, Winn; Albert Scribner, Charleston; Elisha Simpson, John Simpson, Bradford; James Smith, Josiah H. Porter, Willis M. Porter, Charles Holmes, Oldtown; George E. Bradley, Clifton; Moses P. Carson, John H. Dearborn, Andrew Springer, Stephen Silk, Martin Welch, Gustavus Malmquist, Francis O'Brien, John Pomroy, James Rogers, Ephraim W. Stewart, John P. Sprague, Lambert Bancroft, John Dougherty, Bangor; David R. Lane, Eleazar Hutchinson, Lincoln; Henry H. Hurd, Plymouth; Franklin W. Emery, Glenburn; Justin F. Bourne, Levant; Nathaniel Treadwell, jr., Lowell.

COMPANY L.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Charles W. Lenfest, Milford.
 Captain Horatio N. P. Spooner, Levant.
 Captain Thomas Foster, Hampden.

Captain Benjamin F. Oakes, Orono.
 First Lieutenant Horatio N. P. Spooner, Levant.
 First Lieutenant Thomas Foster, Hampden.
 First Lieutenant George E. Dodge, Carmel.
 First Lieutenant Edward L. Worcester, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant George A. Oakes, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant George E. Dodge, Carmel.
 Sergeant Joseph D. Sawyer, Oldtown.
 Sergeant Abiather J. Knowles, Bradford.
 Sergeant Joseph A. Burlingame, Oldtown.
 Musician Albra M. Perkins, Veazie.
 Artificer John M. Hamlin, Hampden.

PRIVATES.

John H. Booker, Horace Tibbetts, Hermon; John J. Randall, Orono; Michael Bramegan, Dwinal A. Haynes, Augustus D. Prescott, George A. Fibbetts, Albert J. Osgood, Charles Wiley, James Averill, John Bigelow, Bangor; Charles Downs, Springfield; Henry A. Higgins, David G. Foster, Irad Walker, jr., John Finnegan, Hampden; John H. McMullen, Oldtown; Sylvester King, Lee; Franklin Chapman, Newburg; Omar Shaw, Stetson; Rufus P. Patterson, Alfred P. Patterson, Newport; David Clendenin, Winn; George B. Crawford, Alton.

COMPANY M.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Ezekiel R. Mayo, Hampden.
 Captain Fred A. Cummings, Bangor.
 Captain Charles Merrill, Lincoln.
 First Lieutenant Charles W. Lenfest, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Prince A. Gatchell, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Joseph W. Whitmore, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant Benjamin C. Frost, Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Arthur P. Budge, Springfield.
 Second Lieutenant Andrew C. McCurdy, Lincoln.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Norris N. Pierce, Bangor.
 Sergeant David A. Knowles, Hampden.
 Sergeant Andrew C. McCurdy, Lincoln.
 Corporal Francis B. Dean, Bangor.
 Corporal Isaac A. Billington, Orrington.

PRIVATES.

Horace C. Griffin, Matthew Elslager, Charles H. Johnson, Henry O. Kirth, Ebenezer B. Ordway, Starling Mower, William Spencer, Bradley; Stephen N. Barker, Charleston; Orlando Moore, George B. Barstow, Brewer; William F. Butters, Exeter; William W. Lander, John Brown, Dexter; George J. McDowell, Eli Veancoon, Horace Buckley, Orono; Oliver W. Bates, Greenbush; Andrew Clindinnion, Chester; John E. Hathorn, Bradford; Alfred H. Hoyt, Kenduskeag; Mark P. Kelley, Levant; Anderson P. Norton, Garland; Charles H. Philbrick, Newburg; Rufus H. Rook, Clifton; Josiah M. Whittier, Corinth; Franklin Ware, Orrington.

DETACHMENT FIFTH REGIMENT HEAVY ARTILLERY.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Charles Dwinell, Bangor.

PRIVATES.

Michael Brannegan, Dwinal A. Haynes, Augustus D. Prescott, Bangor; David Clendennin, Winn; John Finnegan, Hampden; John McMullen, Oldtown; Elon G. Moore, Dixmont; John J. Randall, Orono; George I. Smith, Hudson.

FIRST REGIMENT MOUNTED ARTILLERY.

This organization was composed of seven batteries, serving in different commands, which were organized for three years.

The following is an official list of battles in which the several batteries bore an honorable part, so far as published in orders:

First Battery (A)—Georgia Landing, Cotten, Bisland, Port Hudson, Cox's Plantation.

Second Battery (B)—Official list of battles not yet published in orders.

Third Battery (C)—Official list of battles not yet published in orders.

Fourth Battery (D)—Cedar Mountain, Antietam, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Coal Harbor.

Fifth Battery (E)—Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Coal Harbor, Petersburg, Opequan, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek.

Sixth Battery (F)—Cedar Mountain, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Antietam, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Coal Harbor, Petersburg, Deep Bottom.

Seventh Battery (G)—Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Coal Harbor, Petersburg, Reams's Station, Poplar Spring Church.

THE FIRST MOUNTED BATTERY was organized at Portland, December 18, 1861, and on the following day went to Camp Chase, Lowell, Massachusetts, where it remained until February 6, 1862, and left Boston on the 8th for Ship Island, Mississippi, landing there March 10th. On the 15th of May it arrived in New Orleans, and immediately entered upon patrol and garrison duty, which it performed until October 1st, when it was assigned to Brigadier-General Weitzel's reserve brigade at Carrollton. On the 24th of the same month the battery embarked on transports for Donaldsonville, and on the 27th participated in the engagement at Labadieville, after which it went into camp near Thibodeaux, where it remained until January 11, 1863, and on that day proceeded towards Pattersonville on the Teche, where, on the 14th, it was, throughout the whole day, constantly engaged with the enemy. The battery afterwards returned to Thibodeaux, and thence to Brashear City. On the 12th and 13th of April the battery was engaged with the enemy at Bisland, and on the 27th at Port Hudson, where it lost 1 man killed and 13 wounded, also 13 horses killed. Immediately after the fall of Port Hudson, where it was under fire more or less every day, the battery embarked for Donaldsonville, where it took a prominent part in the engagement of the 13th of July, losing 1 man killed and 15 wounded, also 16 horses killed. On the 3d of August the battery arrived at Baton Rouge, and on the 18th of September it was assigned to General Franklin's Army Corps, and encamped near New Iberia. On the 29th day of December, every man present for duty with the battery, re-enlisted for three years, under War Department order authorizing such re-enlistment of men who had served two years, the muster-in taking place January 1, 1864. The battery arrived in New Orleans on the 20th of January, and on the 10th of February the re-enlisted men came North on a furlough of thirty days, arriving at Augusta, Maine, on the 22d, where they rendezvoused on the 22d of March, remaining until April 4th, when the battery moved to Portland, leaving there on the 15th for Annapolis, Maryland, having been assigned to General Burnside's Corps. On its arrival at Annapolis, on the 19th, the battery was ordered to Washington, District of Columbia, where, on the 12th of July, it assisted in repelling the rebel forces under General Early at Fort Stevens, and on the 30th was assigned to the Nineteenth Army Corps. On the 19th of September it took a prominent part in the action at Winchester, Virginia, and at Strasburg on the 22d, and on the 25th bivouacked at Harrisonburg, remaining until October 5th. The casualties in the battery in the several engagements from the 19th to the 26th of September, were 2 killed and 7 wounded. On the 5th of October the battery proceeded on the return march to Cedar Creek, Virginia, where it arrived on the 10th, and on the 19th participated in the severe engagement at that place, resulting in the complete rout of the enemy. The battery lost in that engagement 2 enlisted men killed, 1 officer and 16 enlisted men wounded, and 8 men taken prisoners, also 49 horses killed. On the 9th of November the battery moved from Cedar Creek to Winchester, where it remained until January 14, 1865, when it proceeded to Manchester, Virginia. On the 14th of April it returned to Winchester, and there remained in camp until July 9th, when it embarked for Portland, Maine, arriving on the 13th, where, on the 15th of July, it was mustered out and discharged from the United States service by Captain C. Holmes, United States Army, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

PRIVATES.

Alexander Butler, William Jeffers, John J. McCastlin, Timothy Driscoll, Stephen Russell, Bangor; Peter Dennis, Oldtown; Alexander Burton, Eddington; John Mahoney 1st, John Mahoney 2d, Charleston; Elisha Sanborn, Brewer; Daniel H. Dearborn, Newport.

SECOND MOUNTED BATTERY.

Organized at Augusta, November 30, 1861. Mustered out June 16, 1865.

PRIVATES.

Charles E. Ring, Bangor; Leonard W. Mann, Greenfield.

THE THIRD MOUNTED BATTERY

was organized at Augusta, Maine, December 11, 1861; remained encamped until March 19, 1862, when they left for Portland, where, after remaining in barracks at Island Park until April 1st, they left for Washington, arriving in that city on the 3d. They were detached, on the 14th, to act as pontoonniers under General McDowell, in which capacity they served until November 7th, when they returned to Fort Lincoln, where they engaged in building battery "Maine." On the 28th of March, 1863, the Third Battery was transferred to the First Regiment Heavy Artillery, Maine volunteers, and assigned as Company M. On the 5th of January, 1864, 72 men, three-fourths of the whole number of men then belonging to the battery, re-enlisted for three years, and arrived at Augusta, Maine, January 21st, when the men were granted a furlough of thirty days; they rendezvoused at Augusta, on the 22d of February, preparatory to rejoining the First Heavy Artillery. At this date, however, orders were received from the War Department, detaching the organization from the latter regiment and re-organizing it as the Third Battery of Mounted Artillery, with orders to report at Camp Barry, Washington, District of Columbia, where they arrived on the 28th of February. The battery remained at Camp Barry until the 5th of July, when it proceeded to City Point, Virginia, and on the 9th was assigned to the Third Division of the Ninth Army Corps, then in position in front of Petersburg, before the rebel works in front of Cemetery Hill, which position it occupied until the 19th of August, during the interval being more or less engaged daily with the enemy's batteries. It bore an honorable part in the general engagement of July 30th,—the mine explosion. On the 30th of August the battery was transferred to the Reserve Artillery Corps, Army of the Potomac, and on the 25th of October moved to the defences of City Point, having been in position in the trenches before the rebel works in front of Petersburg from the 9th of July till the 25th of October, with but three days exception. The battery remained on duty at the defences of City Point until May 3, 1865, when it proceeded to Washington, District of Columbia, and on the 2d of June left that place for Maine, arriving at Augusta on the 6th, where, on the 17th, it was mustered out of the United States service by Captain W. G. Rankin, Thirteenth United States Infantry, and on the 22d the men were paid and finally discharged.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain James G. Swett, Bangor.
 Captain Ezekiel R. Mayo, Hampden.
 First Lieutenant Ezekiel R. Mayo, Hampden.
 First Lieutenant Seth Allen Emery, Bangor.
 First Lieutenant Joseph W. Whitmore, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant Melville C. Burgess, Hermon.
 Second Lieutenant Joseph W. Whitmore, Hampden.
 Second Lieutenant Josiah N. Baker, Orrington.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant John Tabor, Bangor.
 Sergeant Thomas R. Smith, Milford.
 Sergeant Abner Shepherd, Dexter.
 Sergeant John Bunker, Brewer.
 Sergeant George W. Goodell, Hampden.
 Corporal Alonzo E. Ricker, Bangor.
 Corporal William H. Cates, Bangor.
 Corporal A. B. Baker, Orrington.
 Corporal Daniel Emerson, Hermon.
 Corporal Joseph G. Nichols, Dexter.
 Corporal Timothy Stubbs, jr., Orrington.
 Corporal Joseph A. Smith, Orrington.
 Corporal George F. McDonald, Brewer.
 Musician George W. Smith, Brewer.
 Musician Henry Parger, jr., Brewer.
 Artificer Daniel P. Colson, Brewer.
 Wagoner Charles H. Sprague, Corinna.

PRIVATEES.

Edward Adams, Henry Bowen, Edward Allen, Henry N. Carey, Samuel C. Davis, William J. Estabrook, Charles H. Forbes, Frank H. Hall, Samuel W. Jones, William Norwood, Josiah M. Mayberry, William G. Ricker, Charles Ricker, Jeremiah N. Richardson, John Snow, Edward J. H. Snow, William Littlefield, Daniel Littlefield, George A. McDonald, John C. Rich, Bangor; George Wayer, Daniel P. Colson, Isaiah Geunthner, Benjamin F. Glidden, Rufus A. Hall, Henry Parker, jr., George W. Grant, Samuel M. Given, John S. Green, Thomas F. Green, Andrew J. Smith, Benjamin Snow, Gratien Salberry, Brewer; William C. Worcester, Reuben A. Robinson, Carmel; Andrew F. Angervine, Edward L. Hunt, Oldtown; Amos Roberts, jr., George A. Smith, Charles P. Toward, Asa Spooner, Daniel P. Parcher, William Douglas, William H. Hursey, Jefferson Gray, John S. Haines, Dexter; Simon Annis, jr., Henry H. Kneeland, David Emerson, Gustavus C. Spearing, William E. Blackwell, William H. Leathers, Mark F. Miller, Hermon; William Haskell, Hudson; James W. Batchelder, Moses Clark, Thomas Clark, Postal M. Black, Henry J. Foster, Francis Given, Robert Given, jr., Lewis B. Morrill, Henry Nason, Henry Nason, jr., Joseph H. Weymouth, Stephen F. Wheeler, James P. Copeland, Corinna; Asa W. Pitman, Josiah C. Smart, George C. Getchell, Joseph E. McGrath, Roscoe J. Dolliff, Levant; Elijah Lane, Fred W. Badershall, Edwin A. Chapin, Samuel B. Baker, Everett S. Baker, Edward Baker, Augustus Clement, Amos H. King, Isaac F. Spaulding, Philander Kent, Thomas W. Robinson, Leander F. Smith, Hiram N. Smith, Joseph A. Smith, Orrington; Lewis Lacer, James R. Hall, William Barnes, Enfield; Charles A. Cole, Dennett A. Folsom, Frederick Gibbons, Alvin Thurston, John Williams, Newport; George H. Fisher, Prentiss; Samuel Patterson, Alton; George F. Doan, Daniel Murray, Sylvanus L. Moore, George H. Wallace, Hampden; Charles W. Olmstead, Orono; George W. Smith, Andrew J. Smith, Glenburn.

FOURTH MOUNTED BATTERY.

Organized December 21, 1861. Fought "mit Sigel," and with Generals Banks, Pope, Milroy and others, and was mustered out at Augusta, June 17, 1865.

PRIVATEES.

Edmund A. Whipple, Levant; Edward Friend, Edward R. Gustin, Robert M. Gustin, Etna; John Winchester, Corinna.

FIFTH MOUNTED BATTERY.

Organized at Augusta December 4, 1861. Served with the Army of the Potomac in some of its most notable actions; lost 4 guns at the battle of Manassas. Mustered out July 6, 1865.

PRIVATEES.

James Leavitt, Lincoln; Austin Marshall, Bangor; Levi Martin Oldtown; Frank E. Pearson, Orono; John L. Sawyer, Passadumkeag; John H. McKeen, Patten.

THE SIXTH BATTERY

was organized at Augusta, Maine, February 7, 1862, and left for Washington March 21st. They served under Generals Sigel, Banks, Heintzelman, in Virginia, and Generals Williams and Slocum in Maryland. At Cedar Mountain, August 9th, its loss was 4 men killed and 9 wounded. They were in all the fighting on the Rappahannock under General Pope, and took prominent part at Centerville and Manassas on the 29th and 30th of August. December 27th one section of the battery made a successful defence of Dumfries, Virginia, and, supported by infantry repulsed a large force of the enemy. They had part in the dreadful engagement at Gettysburg, and afterwards were in the retreat from Culpeper on the 16th of September. Previous to April 22d, more than two-thirds of the men re-enlisted for three years. On that date they moved to Stevensburg, Virginia, and remained until they moved forward with the Army of the Potomac toward Richmond. After this time we hear of the Sixth Battery at Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and several other places, always active and giving excellent service. After January 1, 1865, we hear little concerning this battery, save the fact that it was mustered out and discharged June 17, 1865, at Augusta, Maine.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Lieutenant Edward Wiggin, jr., Bangor.
 Second Lieutenant Edward Wiggin, jr., Bangor.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Sergeant Joseph W. Burke, Lee.
 Sergeant Edward Wiggin, jr., Bangor.
 Corporal Ira Lamb, Carroll.
 Corporal A. Johnson, Dexter.
 Corporal Wilson W. Sawtelle, Dexter.
 Corporal Hiram H. Carr, Carroll.
 Musician Roscoe G. Winslow, Dexter.
 Artificer William H. Frechorn, Dexter.

PRIVATEES.

Simon A. Abbott, Hautville A. Johnson, Albert S. Lander, William R. Baynum, Delbert N. Sawtelle, Daniel Dolloff, jr., Samuel Merrill, George H. Toward, Dexter; Michael Freeman, Oldtown; Wales W. Witham, Bangor; William E. Smith, Andrew H. Porter, Horace S. Gove, Lincoln; Joseph D. Hinkley, David E. Spencer, Argyle; Charles R. Brown, Orestes H. Lane, Carroll; Alphonso P. Crowell, Corinna; William S. Clarke, Hermon; Alonzo Babeock, Renel Coffrens, Chester; Edward E. Brown, Brewer.

THE SEVENTH BATTERY

was organized December 30, 1863, at Augusta, Maine, where it remained encamped until the morning of February 1, 1864. On the 25th of April it joined the Ninth Army Corps, and on the 9th and 12th of May was engaged with the enemy at the Ny River, losing three men severely wounded. On the 2d and 3d of June the battery took part in the action at Cold Harbor, and then proceeded to Petersburg, where it assisted in driving the enemy across the Norfolk railroad on the 18th. On the 23d the battery was placed in position near the Taylor House, immediately in front of, and seven hundred yards from the point where the mine was sprung July 30th, on which day it kept a brisk fire on the enemy's batteries in its front. On the 4th of August the battery was relieved from a position held forty-seven consecutive days, and was stationed at Fort Rice, where on the 19th it was exposed to a severe fire from the enemy's batteries. On the 4th of October they assisted in repelling the enemy's attack on that position. The 1st of April, 1865, they took part in the general assault of the enemy's lines, resulting in the capture of Petersburg. On the 3d the battery followed the retreating rebels and arrived at Farmville on the 10th. While there, the surrender of Lee's army occurred. On the 23d of May the battery participated in the grand review of the army, and on the 5th of June left for Maine, arriving on the 8th at Augusta, where the battery was mustered out of the United States service by Captain C. Macmichael, Ninth United States Infantry, on the 21st, and the men paid and finally discharged on the following day.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Second Lieutenant Daniel Staples, Oldtown.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Sergeant Albert Towle, Kenduskeag.

PRIVATEs.

Charles O. Randall, Bangor; Alonzo B. Merrill, Joseph King, Holden; Daniel F. Oakes, Finson R. McKeen, Eddington; Levi F. Towle, jr., Kenduskeag; Emery C. Dunn, Dixmont; George H. Farnar, James H. Fall, Frank Lancaster, Daniel H. Lovejoy, Oldtown.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE FIRST (GENERAL HANCOCK'S) ARMY CORPS.

Frederick R. Buck, Rodney C. Stetson, Edward Bradfield, Simeon E. Facey, Charles W. Merrill, Bangor; Stillman H. Lothrop, Bradley; Willard H. Burton, George W. Calif, Eddington; Samuel H. Winchester, Holden; John W. Torsey, Milford; Henry H. Scribner, Argyle; John H. Sargent, Springfield; James H. Roundy, Carmel; Matthew P. House, George W. House, Lee; Edwin Frederick, Edward Frederick, George Cook, Charles W. Doble, Oldtown; George S. Daniels, Newport; Elbridge D. Doble, Etna.

ENLISTMENTS IN OTHER COMMANDS.

Alton.—James Means, Twenty-first Massachusetts.
Bangor.—Nahum H. Corson, Twenty-fifth Missouri; Patrick Carnes, Patrick Early, John Kelly, Dennis O'Leary, John McCue, Harrison Wescott, Corcoran's Brigade; Charles M. Duren, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts; Edmund Duren, Thirtieth Massachusetts.
Brewer.—Wesley J. Bissell, Fortieth Massachusetts.
Burlington.—Henry A. Libby, Fourteenth New York.
Carmel.—Isaac A. D. Blake, Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania; John M. Day, jr., Forty-seventh Massachusetts; Francis J. Hutchings, same; Samuel W. Hutchings, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts.
Corinna.—Charles H. Bassett, Sixth Massachusetts; Joseph C. Bassett, Second Massachusetts; George S. Hussey, Eleventh Massachusetts; Frederick E. Sprague, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts; William C. Elder, Massachusetts; Isaac Libbey, Twelfth Wisconsin; Abijah Mason, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth New York; Timothy K. Richer, Forty-sixth Illinois.

Dexter.—Howard M. Copeland, Fourteenth Illinois; Elijah Curtis, James S. Curtis, jr., Ninety-ninth New York; Walter Bennett, Thirtieth Massachusetts; Amos R. Storer, Newman W. Storer, First Massachusetts cavalry.

Dixmont.—Martin Emery, Alonzo A. Nye, Massachusetts regiments.

Etna.—George B. Bartom, Nineteenth Massachusetts; Ellis A. Friend, Tenth Massachusetts; Osroe Stevens, Avery Sylvester, Reuben Sylvester, Thompson H. Withee, Massachusetts regiments.

Exeter.—Charles Berry, Charles Berry, jr., Fourteenth Massachusetts; Garselle and George P. Leighton, Massachusetts regiments; William B. Coan, Forty-eighth New York.

Garland.—Alexander McCoombs, New York regiment.

Greenbush.—Reuben Emerson, Illinois regiment; George A. and William Mannering, California regiment.

Hampden.—A. J. Pickard, Rhode Island cavalry; A. G. Rice, United States engineers; Charles Deane, Fourteenth New York; William H. Osborne, Corcoran's Brigade.

Hermon.—George W. Moore, Seventh Illinois; Edward L. Tracy, Eighteenth Massachusetts.

Lagrange.—George Clark, Massachusetts regiment.

Levant.—Hiram F. Smiley, Sixth Massachusetts.

Newburg.—Benjamin F. Bussey, and John D. and Isaac Holmes, Forty-fifth Massachusetts; Adolphus J. Chapman, Second Iowa.

Newport.—Hollis Garney, Massachusetts regiment; Joseph Wilson, Washington (District of Columbia) regiment.

Oldtown.—George Burnham, New York cavalry; Charles Smith, Massachusetts regiment; Henry Harrington, Pennsylvania regiment.

Orono.—Charles Hussey, Aldaman Mann, Sixteenth Massachusetts.

Orrington.—William H. Hunton, Elton W. Ware, Connecticut regiment.

Plymouth.—Thomas V. Eaton, Indiana regiment; Joshua D. Loud, Minnesota regiment; Nathan Loud, Massachusetts regiment.

IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

Alton.—Henry Babb.

Bangor.—Darius Shaw, John E. Reynold, Addison W. Crowell, Richard Lander, Edward Appleton, Thomas Kelley, Henry B. Mayville, William H. Mills, jr., Lewis Sawyer, Charles Webb, ——— Carlisle, Lewis F. Hoyt, Elijah L. Green, George Moulton, Elsbury May, Henry Osborn, James S. O'Conner, William Rowley, William Rand, James Smith, Edward Short, James Sullivan, John H. Tuttle, Lewis Trepania, Amaziah Truworthy, George Windover, George Webb, Elijah Winslow, Joseph Winslow, Marshall A. Andrews, Stephen H. Andrews, George V. Baxter, William Carroll, Edward Cunningham, James Clark, James Crawford, Daniel S. Collins, Jonathan U. Drew, Allen P. Davis, Andrew Davis, Frederick Frazier, Isaac Fairbrother, Lorenzo Fields, Daniel Gillison, Michael Gallagher, William L. Gray, Frederick Gage, Benjamin Holmes, Frank Howard, Sylvanus Hammond, Milford Hersam, George Jones, Joseph Knight, Charles Keene, John Lassard, Peter Mounson, George F. Marshall.

Bradford.—Mark A. Roberts, Melvin Wade.

Brewer.—Peter Tobie.

Carmel.—Alfred Getchell, Levi Jackson, James Newcomb.

Corinna.—Samuel Gould, jr.

Corinth.—Wilson Mitchell.

Dexter.—Isaac G. White.

Eddington.—Alvin N. Parsons.

Edinburg.—William H. Thomas.

Hampden.—James McElroy, Everett Avery, Joseph Antonio, Albert Mayo, Samuel R. Spencer, Frank Smith, Albert Taylor.

Hermon.—John B. Bickford, Charles H. Pickard.

Holden.—David W. Blake, Philip Phillips.

Hudson.—George Cunningham, George H. Flagg, Richard V. Flagg, Cyrus M. Johnson.

Lee.—John J. Moody.

Levant.—Andrew J. Pomeroy.

Newport.—Albert N. Burrell, Charles Carr.

Oldtown.—Benjamin Grover, John J. Williams, William Graham, Henry Hinkley, George P. Lancaster, Ambrose Lawrence.

Orrington.—Howard O. Powers, George N. Smith.

Passadumkeag.—John McCauslin.

Plymouth.—Granville Loud.

Prentiss.—Walter T. Ellis.

Stetson.—David Dresser.

Springfield.—Gilman B. Bolton.

Veazie.—Robert F. Campbell, George C. Prouty, Joseph Miller.

UNITED STATES NAVY.

Alton.—Charles Crawford, William Curtis, Boardman Means, Merrill Means, Brainard Walton, Joseph Whitecomb.

Bangor.—Schardt Bagger, Solomon G. Emerson, Solomon G. Emery, John M. Fuller, John Lee, Charles H. Littlefield, William Mann, Thomas Murphy, Richard Power, Joseph E. Reading, Frank Saunders, Eben Stevens, Joseph Stevens, William L. Smith, James H. Tracy, Norman Tibbitts, Abram Vanderpool, Nicola Wisson, Lourin Clark, Francis A. Cobb, Edward K. Flowers, Patrick Golden, Alfred Kendrick, C. A. Kirkpatrick, Charles H. Littlefield, Martin McKusie, Willis G. Perry, Charles B. Pierce, Charles E. Taylor, Howard M. Briggs, Frank Carron, John Carron, Joseph Carron, John Fuller, Robinson Titcomb, George H. Benson, George A. Bright, William Harris, John W. Jaques, Michael B. Clancey, George Currier, John Donohoe, Alexander M. Fountain, James Groman, Daniel R. Hamilton, John Holmes, John Hellier, Charles H. Jackson, John G. Liljestram, Henry Luse, William T. Montgomery, Charles Nelson, Daniel H. Patten, jr., Thomas Rice, John Snow, Charles Wilson.

Bradford.—John Clark, Peter McArey.
Bradley.—James Gordon, James Sanborn, Hiram Spencer, Elisha Sanborn, William Tarrio, Solomon Tarrio, William Willett, jr.

Brewer.—James F. Cushing, William S. Goodwin, Ephraim Langill, Levi Lashus, Ezekiel C. Swett, Samuel W. Davis, John S. Deering, Daniel Frost, Charles M. Goodwin, Anthony F. Lovette, George F. Merrill, Calvin W. Mitchell, Hower H. Pomroy, James L. Pomroy, William Sargent.

Carmel.—Charles C. Anderson, Moses C. Thompson, William H. Thompson, Amasa S. Garland, Timothy Harrington, Michael Herbert, Dennis E. Murphy, Eben H. Stover, William H. Thompson.

Charleston.—John Thomas, Manuel A. De Barron, Patrick Durace, Henry Franc, Thomas Joyce, Albert King, Thomas Smith, Joseph Williams.

Clifton.—Andrew Holm, Henry Smith.
Corinth.—Walter Hawes, Alphonso Ober, John W. Swett, Charles A. Robinson, John M. Brown, John Cane, Albert Ide, John Lewis.

Dexter.—August Brown, William Mitchell, Daniel Raymond, William Taylor.

Dixmont.—John H. Butman, Randolph Cook, Oliver W. Kimball, Otis Farnham.

Eddington.—John W. B. Austin, Amos L. Coleson.

Exeter.—Chandler Eastman, George L. Buswell, Robert Armstrong, John Bowman, Fred Dagen, Frederick Miller, Louis Olson, Thomas Wilson.

Garland.—Eben Hoyt, John A. Davis, Frank Drew, Charles A. Doliver, John Driscoll.

Glenburn.—Frank B. Cort, John M. Onail.

Hampden.—Joseph Mayo, Robert Carle, Horace Crockett, Nathaniel T. Hamlin, Samuel Hollbrook, Newell Murch, Willis Pierce, Thomas Rice, William Rodgers, Henry Woodard, Avery Gross, John Humphrey, Sylvanus Humphrey, John Jackson, Levi W. Knowles, Edward H. Lander, Francis Loring, William D. F. Nye, Charles Norwood, Hiram B. Orff, Dudley G. Porter, David K. Rice, Thomas Ryan, Charles E. Swett, Daniel Sullivan, Alonzo Temple, Samuel W. Temple, Alonzo Taylor, Augustus C. Wing, Charles B. Walker, John Whaylin, Arthur B. Arey, David W. Arey, John W. Babcock, Lowell W. Brown, Abner L. Crosby, George W. Chapman, Norman A. Dillingham, Henry Deane, Joseph G. Easton, Frank Fornay.

Hermon.—Clifford Oden, Joshua D. Warren.

Holden.—John M. Hart, Alexander W. Rowell, Hiram M. Wiswell, Orlando Moore, John Rowell.

Hudson.—George Cunningham, George H. Flagg, Richard V. Flagg, Cyrus M. Johnson, T. H. Benton Briggs, John Porter.

Kenduskeag.—Orrin Bridges, Pecallies M. Clark, Albert Towle.

Levant.—George A. Hutchins, Peter Lawson, Albert H. Waugh.

Lincoln.—Reuben Dolley.

Lowell.—Nathaniel J. Lord.

Medway.—John Prince.

Newburg.—Jedediah Green, John F. Brittain, Enoch L. Bartlett, Edward A. Farnham, George L. Goodrich, Moses Parsons, Nathan E. Trask.

Newport.—Davis Lawrence, Reuben D. Ward.

Oldtown.—John H. Hunt, William H. Manchester, Frederick A. Povers, Alexander M. Hunt, Orlando Moore, Alvin J. Minot.

Orono.—Enos B. Peaslee.

Orrington.—Josiah D. G. Hinds, William B. Liscomb, Joseph S. Robinson, George Rogers, James H. Rogers, Henry Severance, Ebenezer C. Wheelden, J. W. Chapin, Daniel Chapin, Christopher

Holmes, Edwin Lovell, Joseph B. Ryder, Celestine St. Petes, John Wilson, Arthur W. Wentworth.

Plymouth.—Thaxter Hopkins, Thomas Cole, James Slatery.

Prentiss.—Aaron Dennis.

Springfield.—Aaron Dennis.

Stetson.—Charles Parker.

Veazie.—Wallis E. Davis, Edward K. Valentine.

Winn.—David B. Cressey.

PRIVATE BENEFACTIONS.

The final table, also from the Adjutant-General's Reports, sets forth the private contributions of money, hospital stores, and other articles for the army and navy, during the war of 1861-65. Many towns failed to keep such records, and others neglected to send in their returns; so that this is considered but an approximate calculation:

Towns.	U. S. Sanitary Commission.	U. S. Christian Commission.	Soldiers in Maine Camps.	General Hospitals in loyal States.	Regimental Hospitals and individuals.	New York, Philadelphia, Boston, etc.	Total.
Bangor	$15000	$12000	$10000	$8000	$10000	$5000	$60000
Bradford	100	200	100	150	400	100	1050
Bradley	200	50	75	100	450	75	950
Brewer	2000	1000	100	150	200	100	3550
Carmel	100	150	75	200	100	75	700
Charleston	200	150	100	175	200	150	975
Corinna	300	100	150	200	300	175	1225
Corinth	200	800	100	150	200	500	1950
Dexter	300	400	200	100	400	600	2000
Eddington	200	75	50	150	300	100	875
Exeter	200	800	200	100	100	300	1700
Garland	200	50	75	100	250	300	975
Hampden	2000	600	400	325	400	200	3925
Hermon	400	200	50	75	500	150	1375
Holden	250	300	75	50	200	75	950
Kenduskeag	250	150	75	100	400	100	1075
Levant	100	150	100	175	100	200	825
Newburg	300	250	100	175	200	150	1175
Newport	400	300	300	150	300	400	1750
Oldtown	400	350	250	200	400	300	1900
Orono	300	200	300	200	150	300	1450
Orrington	400	300	200	300	200	300	1700
Plymouth	200	300	100	150	100	150	1000
Springfield	500	100	200	150	500	100	1550
Veazie	200	200	150	200	375	150	1275

THE LOCAL MILITIA.

Mr. E. F. Duren hands us the following note:

The usual military organizations have been maintained. They have been called into active service, chiefly in 1814, in repelling the British forces that came up the Penobscot River; in 1839, during the excitement attending the question of the Northeast boundary of the State, which was peaceably settled by a treaty between Great Britain and the United States, ratified by the Senate, August 20, 1842; and again during the late civil war (1861-65). In this last campaign, the Second Maine Regiment, six companies of the Sixth Maine, and the entire Eighteenth regiment, afterwards the First Heavy Artillery, were composed chiefly of residents of this county. Monuments in memory of the patriot soldiers deceased, are erected in the cemeteries at Bangor, Brewer, Hampden, Dexter, Newport and other places. The Jameson Guards, of Bangor, were organized in April, 1870. The Crosby Guards of Hampden; the Hersey Guards, of Oldtown; and the Coburn Cadets, at the Agricultural College, Orono; are now the principal uniformed voluntary organizations.

The following notices are given to several of the Penobscot companies in one of the recent reports of the Adjutant General of the State:

G Company, Jameson Guards, Bangor.—The armory of this company was not in the perfect condition I had reason to expect from the good record the company has attained, and from the appearance at my former inspection. The arms and equipments, however, were in good condition, and gave evidence of proper care. Much credit is due the efficient clerk of the company for the neat appearance of the books and records of the company, which were properly kept and complete. This company is out of debt, but is without any funds in the treasury.

I Company, Crosby Guards, Hampden.—This company has a nice armory, and the arrangements made for the protection of the company property, the care taken of the same and the interest manifested by the officers and men, reflect credit upon the company. Company books and records are complete and properly kept. The company has no fund on hand, but is out of debt.

K Company, Hersey Light Infantry, Oldtown.—The armory of this company is nicely arranged, and everything in connection with the company arms and equipments was in good condition. The company books were not fully completed. The company is out of debt, but without any company fund.

STATISTICAL—BOUNTIES.

By the 2d of February, 1864, the bounties in the various towns of Penobscot county aggregated $359,087.50. Bangor led the list, of course, with $69,380; Whitney Ridge is the smallest reported, with $200. The heaviest bounties were paid afterwards, the whole in the county by the close of the war amounting to the splendid total of $889,108.48—and doubtless more, since 19 of the plantations and unincorporated townships are not reported. The following table exhibits in detail the bounties paid by each town, with their several classes:

Towns, etc.	Call of 1861.	To three years' men of 1862.	To nine months' men of 1862.	To volunteers of 1863.	To volunteers of 1864.	To drafted men that entered service.	To substitutes that entered service.	For drafted men's commutations.	Other payments on account of draft.	Losses on account of bounties paid volunteers who were credited to other towns.	Amounts contributed towards bounties to soldiers.	Total.
Alton		$ 250 00		$1,400 00	$ 600 00	$3,000 00		$2,400 00	$ 500 00			$ 8150 00
Argyle		200 00	420 00	1,145 00	5,025 00	expense 509 36		900 00		235 00	1,770 00	10,204 36
Bangor												178,500 00
Bradford		935 00	700 00	4,600 00	1,100 00	6,000 00					600 00	13,335 00
Bradley		473 00	230 00	200 00	4,150 00	850 00	11,550 00	600 00	571 00		5,381 00	24,005 00
Brewer		3,190 00	3,100 00	8,875 00	8,100 00	6,400 00	4,700 00	900 00	22 00			35,287 00
Burlington		180 00		200 00	2,500 00	200 00	2,200 00		232 50		607 00	6,719 00
Carmel		715 00	405 00	4,175 00	5,200 00	3,000 00	2,100 00		500 00			16,095 00
Carroll				1,600 00				300 00	185 52		1,450 00	3,535 52
Charleston		1,650 00	2,100 00	5,000 00	4,600 00							13,350 00
Chester				1,000 00								1,000 00
Clifton		300 00	200 00	1,650 00							64 84	2,214 84
Corinna		927 30	2,210 00	7,600 00	15,678 00	3,600 00	2,000 00	3,900 00	220 00	100 00	950 00	37,185 30
Corinth		2,100 00	2,300 00	5,000 00	650 00	1,500 00	14,849 00	2,200 00				28,599 00
Dexter		1,335 00	350 00	10,200 00	16,650 00	3,118 00	5,200 00		235 00			40,238 00
Dixmont		1,900 00	400 00	4,940 00	8,930 00	700 00	700 00					17,570 00
Eddington		900 00	1,000 00	3,680 00	3,325 00	250 00	2,600 00	1,500 00				13,255 00
Edinburg					600 00							600 00
Enfield		150 00		1,200 00	1,800 00	300 00	600 00		47 00		450 00	3,647 00
Etna		900 00	800 00	2,000 00	2,900 00	250 00	150 00		50 00			7,050 00
Exeter		1,060 00	2,300 00	7,445 00	28,000 00	4,000 00	31,000 00		4,000 00		2,000 00	52,605 00
Garland		795 00	1,400 00	3,400 00	10,125 00	200 00	1,600 00					18,020 00
Glenburn		525 00	40 00	2,675 00	1,000 00	4,500 00	7,650 00	600 00	118 15	225 00	160 00	17,493 15
Greenbush				1,600 00		3,100 00	2,150 00	1,500 00				8,350 00
Greenfield			400 00	200 00		4,848 00			557 00			6,005 00
Hampden		3,500 00	5,200 00	20,000 00	10,122 00	750 00	9,750 00	300 00			2,650 00	55,972 00
Hermion		1,500 00	700 00	4,000 00	7,650 00	145 00						13,995 00
Holden		890 00	1,900 00	2,100 00	1,325 00	3,000 00			122 12		800 00	10,137 12
Howland
Hudson		600 00	1,414 00	400 00		3,500 00	2,550 00					8,464 00
Kenduskeag		900 00	270 00	2,280 00	1,350 00	3,600 00	1,200 00				1,150 00	9,600 00
Lagrange		525 00	150 00	1,800 00	5,200 00	3,800 00					325 00	11,800 00
Lee				2,650 00								2,650 00
Levant		1,400 00	900 00	4,000 00	2,625 00						266 00	9,191 00
Lincoln				4,400 00	2,400 00	6,500 00	200 00		430 00	200 00		13,930 00
Lowell
Mattawamkeag		122 40	271 00	1,000 00	350 00		1,000 00		132 09			2,875 49
Maxfield				400 00		400 00						800 00
Milford		600 00	500 00	1,200 00	365 00	2,400 00	5,400 00					10,465 00
Mount Chase
Newburg		1,400 00	200 00	6,170 00	14,537 00	200 00	200 00				3,500 00	22,707 00
Newport		1,500 00	2,400 00	7,200 00	14,780 00	200 00	500 00	100 00	427 80			27,107 80
Oldtown		4100 00	300 00	7,650 00	12,825 00		10,000 00		659 80			35,534 80
Orono		2,000 00	483 00	8,600 00								11,083 00
Orrington		2,145 00	3,500 00	5,175 00	6,214 00	1,300 00	5,000 00		104 00			27,438 00
Passadumkeag		200 00		323 30	2,549 50		300 00	600 00	100 00			4,122 80
Patten		198 00	360 00	925 00		225 00						1,708 00
Plymouth		1,000 00	1,375 00	4,500 00	4,250 00	6,600 00	3,000 00		300 00			21,025 00
Prentiss			500 00	1,225 00	300 00	500 00			500 00	245 00	100 00	3,125 00
Springfield			80 00	2,050 00	4,640 00		475 00		640 30	10 00	2,077 00	9,972 30
Stetson			700 00	1,150 00	900 00	3,500 00	400 00				500 00	7,150 00
Veazie		1,060 00	160 00	2,950 00		4,200 00	2,380 00				4489 00	15,239 00
Total												$889,108 48

*Reimbursed by State.

AID TO SOLDIERS' FAMILIES.

The table below shows the amounts of aid granted from the public funds to the families of soldiers and sailors each year of the war, and the sums total:

Towns.	1862.			1863.			1864.			1865.			1866.			Total—'62 to '66 incl.
	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.	No. of families aided.	No. of persons in families.	Amount allowed.
Alton	9	32	$ 459 43	21	75	$ 1309 10	30	108	$ 1632 84	24	61	$ 605 73	84	276	$ 4007 10
Argyle	5	13	32 11	6	15	293 88	4	12	211 85	3	8	92 89	18	48	630 73
Bangor	315	911	14214 75	431	1252	27088 68	593	1619	35643 83	522	1212	19544 37	44	98	$665 59	1905	5092	97157 22
Bradford	23	70	594 67	58	162	1674 29	69	179	3866 95	61	145	1786 34	1	2	6 25	212	558	7928 50
Bradley	8	25	306 52	14	45	714 59	28	70	1420 60	20	39	549 81	1	1	2 25	71	186	2893 83
Brewer	45	162	2299 18	64	193	2587 74	92	216	4490 56	94	184	2877 32	15	32	202 06	310	787	12456 86
Burlington	3	11	97 75	6	24	148 19	12	46	412 63	5	10	127 15	26	91	785 72
Carmel	5	21	136 08	27	88	928 49	51	121	3116 96	60	139	1729 83	7	13	110 99	150	382	6022 35
Carroll	8	30	237 40	17	54	1065 24	16	32	488 22	3	9	62 88	44	125	1853 74
Charleston	6	18	197 87	27	74	1372 21	31	79	1180 21	3	7	40 32	67	178	2790 61
Chester	6	22	210 41	10	42	275 40	18	52	967 51	15	31	342 32	49	147	1795 64
Clifton	4	12	129 18	5	23	292 88	11	34	563 11	7	18	218 93	1	1	11 57	28	88	1215 67
Corinna	10	24	215 17	25	69	840 62	59	137	2010 99	62	114	1701 07	1	5	27 32	157	349	4795 17
Corinth	13	54	508 13	19	76	862 39	37	118	2118 25	30	82	1124 08	4	13	21 74	103	343	4934 59
Dexter	35	108	1032 50	80	219	2440 62	64	148	2532 80	50	114	1372 66	229	589	7378 64
Dixmont	19	56	543 32	34	102	1273 55	45	113	2534 45	49	128	1976 55	2	5	10 82	149	404	6338 69
Eddington	4	14	131 47	5	7	126 50	19	40	787 86	22	41	519 18	50	102	1565 01
Enfield	8	23	279 49	17	59	957 00	33	89	1955 18	24	73	672 84	82	244	3864 51
Etna	4	11	67 57	22	65	812 04	32	86	1817 45	40	95	1202 56	1	1	9 64	99	258	3909 26
Exeter	5	13	150 26	23	59	964 90	54	104	2724 61	57	129	1782 67	2	6	28 48	141	311	5050 92
Garland	18	53	632 96	24	77	1070 91	44	93	1983 22	39	88	1392 81	4	8	84 04	129	319	5163 94
Glenburn	2	5	34 28	13	36	414 57	27	68	1060 84	29	59	790 01	6	14	95 21	77	182	2394 91
Greenbush	9	30	292 17	13	56	603 45	20	75	1467 98	22	83	803 51	64	244	3167 11
Greenfield	6	29	244 00	19	40	779 87	17	35	463 50	8	25	585 32	50	129	2072 69
Hampden	24	71	761 21	38	100	2075 33	63	166	3280 13	74	150	2209 43	5	14	100 18	204	507	8426 28
Hermon	14	41	274 72	25	76	1214 25	53	140	3112 28	53	146	2118 28	4	15	62 36	149	418	6781 89
Holden	4	14	103 25	9	31	432 40	10	22	359 26	17	41	498 46	1	1	2 14	41	109	1395 51
Howland	1	2	16 00	7	17	252 00	8	23	269 31	16	42	537 31
Hudson	8	23	173 55	26	72	1167 66	34	82	1962 05	35	97	958 11	1	4	13 50	104	278	4274 87
Kenduskeag	16	64	432 74	26	91	1549 78	31	95	1837 86	34	82	1308 48	6	18	164 09	113	359	5292 95
Lagrange	6	18	139 21	9	35	270 32	24	53	907 59	23	45	770 39	62	151	2087 51
Lee	6	36	244 57	18	62	727 44	43	118	2233 32	44	128	1901 08	8	25	117 25	119	369	5223 66
Levant	13	52	286 31	27	88	1254 18	51	134	2650 82	49	122	1403 53	1	2	12 13	141	398	5606 97
Lincoln	20	66	389 31	32	115	1992 61	53	163	2922 58	46	124	1439 65	3	10	47 70	154	478	6491 85
Lowell	14	52	750 11	24	82	1533 75	29	76	1292 69	15	39	594 38	82	249	4176 93
Mattawamkeag	2	9	34 06	7	20	332 21	11	31	688 58	11	32	367 57	31	92	1422 42
Maxfield	2	8	36 25	3	14	147 69	12	24	479 19	13	26	309 54	1	2	21 60	31	74	994 27
Milford	6	24	421 81	11	39	341 16	20	58	945 68	21	54	528 11	58	175	2236 76
Newburg	17	56	485 09	21	60	1027 19	44	99	2136 15	38	90	1406 48	5	11	46 88	125	316	5101 79
Newport	12	28	268 80	26	61	519 11	41	81	1463 47	37	60	484 35	2	5	33 74	118	235	3269 47
Oldtown	81	218	2824 89	88	254	3830 01	131	225	7105 67	114	294	3736 58	4	7	27 00	418	998	17514 15
Orono	27	114	1500 49	39	147	2651 94	81	226	4866 31	79	167	2824 81	7	11	80 59	233	698	11954 14
Orrington	6	17	205 50	20	52	892 23	33	78	1778 61	37	87	1408 38	3	8	47 88	99	242	4332 60
Passadumkeag	2	10	151 62	5	21	196 90	8	26	391 03	6	14	128 04	21	71	867 59
Patten	1	4	39 23	8	27	258 24	18	57	1359 47	13	41	534 71	40	129	2191 65
Plymouth	11	26	202 29	29	59	504 89	40	92	1435 05	40	90	1132 91	120	267	3275 14
Prentiss	3	14	193 83	10	24	376 03	16	43	951 56	13	38	390 57	42	119	1011 99
Springfield	9	35	242 99	23	70	844 23	40	116	2511 99	34	106	1238 46	3	10	34 50	109	337	4872 17
Stetson	8	18	295 62	12	33	324 95	29	67	1479 96	35	78	1003 11	2	6	40 00	86	202	3143 64
Veazie	12	41	461 81	21	56	1264 85	31	76	1709 58	32	70	807 42	96	343	2243 66
Winn	1	2	49 10	4	17	298 64	10	43	953 60	9	29	362 86	3	9	46 53	27	100	1710 73
Drew pl.	4	13	52 91	4	10	175 02	4	10	207 62	1	3	24 28	13	36	459 83
Medway pl.	11	34	614 10	9	30	641 02	8	30	323 98	28	94	1579 10
Pattagampus pl.	3	14	249 55	8	34	497 61	4	19	118 95	15	67	866 11
Webster pl.	110 46	2	14	46 07	2	14	156 53
Woodville pl.	8	33	538 37	10	32	576 51	7	16	183 18	32	111	1354 76
No. 4. Range 1.	7	30	56 70	7	24	368 78	4	15	158 56	11	36	527 34
Mt. Chase pl.	1	3	34 00	9	24	358 18	5	11	153 11	15	38	445 29
	880	2792	$33558	52	1538	$74101	85	2413	$6362	54	2254	$75292	85	155	$2301	51	17249	$315200

CHAPTER X.

AGRICULTURAL AND OTHER SOCIETIES.

History of Agricultural Organization in Maine—The State Agricultural Society Formed—The Penobscot County Agricultural Society—The Bangor Horticultural Society—Fairs of the County Society—The Local Societies: The West Penobscot, The North Penobscot, The Penobscot and Aroostook Union—State Fair at Bangor—The Local Fairs—The Waldo and Penobscot Society—The County Society Again—Farmers' Clubs—Fairs during the Last Decade—The Penobscot Central Agricultural Society—Benefits of the Local Societies—Officers of Agricultural and Other Societies in the County—The County Grange—Penobscot Medical Associations—The Penobscot Musical Association.

THE FIRST EFFORTS

at association for the promotion of agriculture in the Pine-tree State were made about 1787, by Benjamin Vaughan, LL. D., and his brother Charles, of Hallowell, who in that year enlisted a number of other residents on the Kennebec in the formation of the "Kennebec Agricultural Society," for mutual improvement in the knowledge of agriculture and mutual aid, by the importation of trees, seeds, tools, books, etc. The society was incorporated by the Massachusetts Legislature in 1807, and eleven years afterwards, largely through the exertions of its leading members, the Maine Agricultural Society was formed. Its first fair, and the first agricultural fair of any kind in the State (the Kennebec Society had only held meetings for the reading of papers and discussion), was held at Hallowell in 1820, and another at the same place the next year, when they were discontinued in favor of county fairs.

The Winthrop Agricultural Society was organized in 1818. In 1832 a law was passed by the Maine Legislature offering a subsidy for, or premium upon, the organization of agricultural societies; the Kennebec, Cumberland, Washington and East Somerset county societies were organized the same year, and the old Kennebec association held its first annual show. The Kennebec Farmer (soon afterwards changed to the Maine Farmer) was started the next year by Dr. E. Holmes, of Winthrop.

THE COUNTY SOCIETY.

The next body of the kind to organize was the Penobscot County Society, which was incorporated in 1838. It soon began to hold annual cattle-shows and fairs, which were maintained at various places about the county for many years.

BANGOR HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

About 1849 the Bangor Horticultural Society was organized, and its first annual show was given that year, with a fair degree of success for a first effort. At the second exhibition, September 11, 1850, an address was delivered by B. F. Nourst, Esq., of Orrington, in which the claim was made that the Penobscot valley was fully the rival of the valley of the Hudson, which "has been termed," he says, "par excellence, the 'Plum Garden.'" At the third annual meeting the address was given by William Bartlett, Esq. In 1856 a valuable report on the Effects of Underground Draining, as illustrated upon the farm of Mr. Nourse, six miles from Bangor, was made to the society by Messrs. J. Cloeston, A. Noyes,

W. Goodale, Oren Favor, and E. P. Baldwin, committee, which was published in the next report of the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture.

Dr. J. C. Weston, Secretary of the society, contributed the following sketch of its history and summary of its results to the date of writing, to the transactions of the State Board of Agriculture at Augusta, January 21, 1863:

The Bangor Horticultural Society is the oldest in the State. It was incorporated in 1849, and has therefore been in existence fourteen years. It has conferred a great benefit on all the surrounding country. By its exhibitions and awards of premiums it has excited competition and stimulated the people to cultivate the very best varieties of pears, plums, apples, grapes, etc. It has developed a taste and rivalry in the cultivation of ornamental trees and shrubs, and all the products of the best-furnished gardens. Under its auspices every desirable new fruit, flower, and vegetable of native origin has early been introduced to the knowledge of the community.

It has had meetings for the discussion of such practical subjects as manures, draining, grafting, the best varieties of fruits and vegetables and the best method of cultivating them. It has also had valuable practical lectures.

A few years ago but one glass structure existed in the city for the cultivation of foreign grapes, built by Frederic Hobbs, esq., the first President of the society. The beautiful clusters raised by his skillful cultivation and management appeared on the tables at our exhibitions to feast and delight the eyes of all beholders. The example was contagious. What had been done by one, others thought they might accomplish, and gradually twenty-seven other graperies sprang into existence, yielding thousands of pounds of delicious grapes, and adding thousands of dollars to the value of real estate.

By the influence of this society Bangor, like Damascus, has become a city of gardens, many of which are laid out in tasteful, picturesque forms, and make many a home beautiful and attractive, so that emigration has no charms for the occupants. They are firmly rooted to home soil, and pay cheerfully the taxes to support a government which has given for a few years $150 annually to promote horticulture, while they have invested thousands for the same purpose.

The most of our merchants and mechanics, when about to erect dwellings, purchase double lots, that each may possess his own garden, where he may sit under his own vine and fruit tree, and thus becoming interested in the culture of the soil, our men of wealth often enlarge the spheres of their operations by purchasing farms in the adjoining country, and improving them according to the best system of modern husbandry; and some instances might be mentioned where their farms pay a larger dividend than bank stock, or stock in trade, or manufactures.

The society has had an annual exhibition every year but one since its formation. In 1857, by invitation of the Trustees of the Maine State Agricultural Society, it united with that body in its exhibition at Bangor, and contributed its full share to make it interesting and attractive.

At its exhibitions, the best varieties of peaches, pears, plums, grapes, flowers, and vegetables have been represented. Our plums, particularly, have been unsurpassed in color, size and quality. I have attended exhibitions in Boston, New York, and Montreal, but have never seen elsewhere such a variety of this fruit as in our own city, in years of plenty.

Last September, in spite of the severity of our winters, the specimens of pears and American grapes of open culture, exceeded in quantity those exhibited on any former occasion, evincing an increased interest in the cultivation of those fruits. The Delaware, Hartford Prolific, and Rebecca, were nearly ripe on the 17th day of September; but the Concord, Diana, and Isabella had not colored, except on girdled branches.

Apples appeared in greater abundance than ever before. Two members each exhibited 90 varieties. Raising so many kinds is not so profitable to the orchardist as a select few of the best quality; but we have every year offered premiums for the largest and best variety of this and other fruits, with a view of ascertaining what kinds are best adapted to our climate and soil. The principal producers of fruit were requested to furnish the Secretary lists of apples, pears, plums, and grapes which each has found by experience to be the very best for general cultivation in Bangor and vicinity, taking into consideration hardiness and productiveness of trees and vines and quality of fruits.

FAIRS OF THE COUNTY SOCIETY.

About 1852 the annual cattle show was fixed to be held regularly in Bangor, and the fair of that year was accordingly held in that city, with only tolerable success, on account of the drought, and a cold, dreary rain which set in about the time the display was preparing. The people were addressed on this occasion by the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, J. S. Sayward, P. B. Mills, and Joseph Bartlett, of Bangor, and E. F. Crane, of Kenduskeag.

The next year the amount of premiums offered by the trustees was $344.85.

THE LOCAL SOCIETIES.

No report of transactions or fair was made by the Penobscot Society in 1854, and the next year it seems to have split up into several societies, since mention is made, in the State Agricultural Report of 1855, of the West Penobscot, the North Penobscot, and the Penobscot and Aroostook Union Societies, while of the older Penobscot County Society it is said: "Show and Fair omitted this year," from which it may be inferred that the association had just then very little vitality. The first of the societies before mentioned, the West Penobscot, had been incorporated this year; the North Penobscot in 1852; and the Penobscot and Aroostook Union the next year (1853). Little is heard thereafter for a time of the old county society.

In 1856 the West Penobscot Agricultural Society paid out in premiums $120.50 on live stock, $16.40 on fruit, $40.20 on crops, and $32.10 on manufactures; total, $209.20.

In the year 1857 the North Penobscot Society added 19 new members, making a total membership of 194. The annual exhibition was held at Lincoln village, October 7 and 8, with much success. The farmers held an impromptu debating club on the evening of the 7th, which developed much interest. The West Penobscot Society held its show and fair at East Corinth, September 25. It is mentioned in the next State Agricultural Report as "a flourishing society."

STATE FAIR AT BANGOR.

This year the third exhibition of the State Agricultural Society, which had re-organized and incorporated in the early part of the 1855, and held its first fair of the new series the same year in Gardiner, was held in Bangor, in September. The weather was favorable during the entire week, until the last day, and the display was a decided success, in both the quantity and quality of the exhibits and the number and interest of the attendance. Of horses there were more entered than at the first exhibition of the society, though the display of neat stock as a whole was not large. The Eastern part of the State was well represented in all departments. The receipts amounted to $7,408.10, and the expenses, including about $3,800 in gratuities and premiums, to some $600 more. This deficit, however, was only about one-third that of the next fair, held in Augusta, and much less than at other subsequent exhibitions.

THE LOCAL FAIRS.

The annual exhibition of the Penobscot and Aroostook Union Society was held October 14, 1858, at Patten. The exhibition of stock was unusually large. Address by the Rev. M. R. Keep.

In 1858 the North Penobscot Society had its exhibition at Lincoln, October 5 and 6, with a highly creditable display. The West Penobscot Society held its fair at East Corinth, September 27 and 28. It had now 207 members—9 added the previous year. The Secretary of the State Board said in his annual report for the year: "So far as can be judged from returns made, few, if any, of our county societies, are actuated by a more commendable spirit, or better accomplish their mission, than the West Penobscot." The Penobscot and Aroostook Union had its regular fair at Patten October 13 and 14, with address by Alfred Cushman, Esq. It now numbered 80 members. Mr. Cushman reported to the Secretary of the Board of Agriculture: "During the short time our society has been in operation, its influence is very manifest. Improvement in the mode of cultivating Indian corn, the selections of seeds, the cultivation of fruits, and in neat stock, has been quite extensive."

In 1860 the West Penobscot met for its annual exhibition at Exeter, September 25 and 26. A great rain storm prevented many from attending and exhibiting. The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met at Patten, October 10 and 11, with a very good exhibit, showing "increasing interest in the objects of the society."

In 1861 the West Penobscot had its regular exhibition at East Corinth, September 24 and 25. The show of animals was particularly fine. The society now numbered 220 members. The North Penobscot met at Springfield, October 9 and 10, with unwonted interest in its display. "There were 125 head of horned cattle, a large number of horses and colts, and a goodly number of sheep and swine, and not an ordinary animal among them." The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met as usual at Patten, October 16 and 17, but had a poor show, on account of the distressing prevalence of diphtheria in that region.

In 1862 the sum of $261 was offered in premiums by the North Penobscot—$135 for live stock, $49 for root crops, and $77 for all other objects. $113 were actually awarded. The State treasury furnished $61, and $67 were raised by the society. The premium crops were 26 bushels of wheat to the acre, 49 of barley, and 183 of potatoes. The West Penobscot had premium crops of 82 bushels of corn, 28 of wheat, 64 of barley, 87 of oats, and 378 of potatoes, to the acre. It offered $490 in premiums—$296 for live stock, $102 for grain and root crops, and $92 for all other exhibits—$264 were awarded. Received from the State, $150; raised by the society, $205. The Penobscot and Aroostook Union had $42 from the State, and $37 from its own treasury. It awarded $145 of $208 premiums offered—$113 for live stock, $22 for grain and root crops, and $72 for all other purposes. The society appears to have become extinct soon after, as no more annual fairs are reported by it.

The cattle show and fair of the North Penobscot Agricultural and Horticultural Society was held at Lincoln Centre, October 7 and 8, 1863, with much success the first day but a failure the second, from wet weather. The West Penobscot Agricultural Society held its annual exhibit at Dexter, September 29 and 30,—and “in many respects superior to any former exhibit.” An address was delivered by the President, Mr. Ezekiel F. Crane, of Kenduskeag. Forty-one new members joined during the fair.

The same society held its tenth display at East Corinth, September 27 and 28, 1864. The North Penobscot exhibited at Lee Village, October 12 and 13, with only tolerable success.

In 1865, October 11 and 12, the North Penobscot Society had its cattle show and fair at Springfield Centre. The exhibit of stock, “in quality and value, was fully equal, if not superior, to previous shows.” The success of the second day was much impaired by heavy rain. Very little fruit was shown, the apple crop for the year being almost a total failure. The West Penobscot met at Dexter, September 26 and 27, during favorable weather, and with a very satisfactory exhibition in nearly all departments. Of horses alone thirty-nine entries were made. The show of neat stock was very good, entries of oxen and steers unusually large. Addresses were made at the close by the president of the society, E. F. Crane, esq., by the Hon. John Appleton, of Bangor, and Mr. A. M. Robinson, of Dover. Nineteen new members were added during the fair.

The next year the Penobscot and Aroostook Union Agricultural and Horticultural Society resumed operations, and had a tolerably successful fair at Patten on the 11th of October. Address by the Rev. E. Fobes, of Patten, after which a farmer's dinner, prepared by the ladies of the Sidewalk Society, of Patten, was eaten. Amount of premiums offered, $150; awarded, $95. The West Penobscot had its twelfth annual show at East Corinth, September 25th and 26th, with good success, notwithstanding rain on both days. $644 were offered in premiums, and $261 awarded. New members added, 17. The North Penobscot now numbered 290. Its fifteenth annual fair was held at Lincoln village, October 3 and 4, with a large attendance and more than usual interest. The entries of horses, mares, and colts, were 68; of horned cattle, 103. The presentation of entire herds of cattle proved a new and interesting feature.

The same society had its next cattle show and fair at Lee village, October 9 and 10, 1867. The trotting and other racing, upon a half-mile track prepared by the citizens of Lee at an expense of about $1000, brought together a larger attendance than at any previous fair of the society; 58 entries of horses and colts were made. The neat stock was not numerous, but very good of its kind. Premiums offered, $404.35; awarded, $223.66. Received from the State, $129.52; from other sources, $152.79. Number of members, about 300. The society was entirely free from debt.

The West Penobscot, during this year, purchased a tract of eighteen and one-half acres at Exeter, laid out a half-mile track thereon, put up a commodious two-story building with two large halls, and enclosed the whole with a substantial fence. The thirteenth annual fair was held under these improved auspices, September 24, 25, and 26. 138 horses and colts—55 of them under four years old,—also 21 cows, 4 heifers, 15 bulls, 34 yoke of oxen, and 21 of steers, were exhibited, with entries of manufactured articles numbering 251. Premiums offered for live stock, $442.75; awarded, $188.00. For premium crops, $65.80 were awarded; for fruit, $27.60; for butter and cheese, $78.00. Total premiums offered, $668.35; awarded, $378.65. New members added, 249. An address was delivered the third day by Samuel Johnson, A. M., Secretary of the Trustees of the Maine Agricultural College, which was published at length in the next report of the Board of Agriculture.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met this year at Sherman, for the first time, October 10, with a fair exhibit and attendance, notwithstanding rain at the opening. Premiums offered, $132; awarded, $77.

The Union Society met again at Patten October 14, 1868. The collection of stock exhibited was not so large as in some previous years, but was decidedly superior in quality—an improvement credited to the operations of the society. Premiums offered, $144; awarded, $88.

The North Penobscot show of this year, held September 23 and 24 at Lee village, was almost a total failure by reason of rainy and cold weather. Arrangements had been made for a full and interesting show, but they were quite defeated by the adverse effects of the storm-king. Premiums advertised, $384; awarded, $175.

The West Penobscot was highly favored this year in point of temperature and other conditions,—the weather being fine and cool, and the attendance and interest of the people large. Six hundred and eighteen entries were made; $723.75 offered in premiums, and $397.25 awarded—on horses, $60.50; oxen and steers, $42; cows and heifers, $45; bulls, $24.50; sheep, $21.25; poultry, $2; drawing, $6; butter and cheese, $17.25; fruit, $20.85; honey, etc., $6.75; implements, etc., $11.75; manufactures, $48.10; crops, $91.30. The first day was specially devoted to cattle, sheep and poultry, the second day to horses, and the third to the exhibitions of speed by trotting horses. For the first time in the history of the society, no swine were shown. The fair was held September 29 and 30, and October 1, upon the grounds of the society in Exeter, where all its displays since have been made.

THE WALDO AND PENOBSCOT.

In the winter of 1868–69 a new society was formed by the farmers of the south part of Penobscot, in conjunction with parts of Waldo, and called the Waldo and Penobscot Agricultural Society. We have no particulars of its first fair.

THE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

appears again in the reports in 1869, when it held its annual exhibition—called “the second” in the agricultural report of the year—at Bangor, September 20–22. A large amount, $1,480, was offered in premiums,—of which, however, only $686 were awarded.

The North Penobscot met at Lincoln October 6 and 7, with a successful show. Premiums announced, $350; awarded, $191.

Five hundred and ninety-two entries were made at the West Penobscot fair, held September 28-30. More than usual interest and attendance were manifest "the horse department was never better." Address by President Crane, who then resigned his office, which he had held with much acceptance for ten years.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union held its fair at Patten, October 14. Some fine stock were shown. Amount of premiums offered, $150; awarded, $95.

FARMERS' CLUBS.

Five farmers' clubs were formed during this year in the district covered by the operations of the county society, and were reported as "doing a good work." As many were organized within the field of the West Penobscot Society, four of which were visited and addressed by the Hon. Samuel Wasson, of Hancock county. The next year seven clubs, all "well sustained," were reported by the county society. In 1872 the formation of such guilds was stimulated by the order of the State Board of Agriculture that the several agricultural societies in the State should be required to expend during that year, for the formation and support of the clubs, a sum not less than one-fourth the amount the societies received as bounty from the State. A similar sum was also to be offered in premiums for farm improvements, to be awarded in the autumn of 1874.

THE LAST DECADE.

In 1870 the interest in agriculture was reported as "much increased in this county during the year past." Premiums were offered by the County Society to the amount of $1,600, of which $916 were awarded.

Of the fair of the North Penobscot Society for this year, Secretary Clark says:

The leading features of the exhibition of this society for the year 1870 were the unusual degree of interest manifested by the leading farmers, many coming ten, twenty, and even thirty miles to attend, bringing with them produce, stock, etc., and remaining throughout the two days of the exhibition, and the excellent character of the produce and stock exhibited, clearly indicating an effort and determination to produce something worthy of exhibition. The trustees, at their annual meeting, invited proposals from the various towns for contributions to the society, agreeing to have the fair held in that town which would give the most. Over $100 were raised in this way, and paid out in premiums. The efforts of the trustees, together with the co-operation of the best farmers, made this the most interesting and profitable exhibition ever held by the society.

The exhibition of the West Penobscot, held September 27-9, 1870, had 630 entries: "The several departments were well represented, some of which excelled any former show." The display of fruit was especially beautiful, "well representing the largest crop for many years." The exhibition in the halls was in advance of that of the previous year, and received particular commendation. Premiums advertised, $775; awarded, $420. As during the preceeding three years, the third day was set apart for trotting matches, not for premiums offered by the society, but for prizes obtained from the gate-money, of which the profits ($300 this year) went into the treasury of the society.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union gave its annual exhibition at Patten, October 6. Several farmers' clubs had been organized within the bounds of this society.

The Waldo and Penobscot Society had its second annual cattle show, exhibition, and fair at Monroe, September 28-29, and was successful in all respects. Two hundred and sixteen entries were made. Premiums offered, $419; awarded, $297.75. Only about one half the amount was given for trials of speed as at the former fair.

For the year 1872 we have mainly statistics from the societies to present. None are reported by the County Society, as it had united,—the Bangor Horticultural Society also—with the State Fair of the year, held at Bangor. The entries for this fair were very large and otherwise excellent, but the inclement weather somewhat interfered with success.

The West Penobscot received this year $121.62 from the State, and raised of itself $966.16. It awarded $441.05 in premiums, besides $50 on farm improvements, and expended $5 for the benefit of the farmers' clubs. Two hundred and thirty dollars and twenty-five cents were given for live stock premiums; $68.10 for grain and root crops; $16.40 for other cultivated crops; $29.25, fruits and flowers; $3.25, sugar, honey, and syrup; $17.25, butter and cheese; $19.25, agricultural implements; $29.05, household manufactures and needlework; $8.75, manufacturers of wood, iron and leather; and $4.50 for other articles.

The North Penobscot, held at Lee, October 2 and 3, raised $72.22 from its own resources, and awarded $125.50 in premiums—$82.25 for live stock, and the balance to other departments.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met at Patten, October 3d. It had $100 from the State, and raised $125.50 otherwise. It awarded $86.75 in premiums—$25 for farm improvements, $25 in aid of farmers' clubs, $47.75 for live stock, and $13.50 for grain and root crops.

The Waldo and Penobscot Society received from the State $130, and raised the handsome sum of $429.26 from other sources. Five hundred and fifty-nine dollars and twenty-six cents were granted in premiums—$36 for farm improvements, $33 to farmers' clubs, $123 for live stock, $34 for grain and root crops, and $15.50 for other crops.

In 1873 the Bangor Horticultural Society gave a notably fine exhibition of fruits and flowers at the City Hall, September 16-19, in union with the State Pomological Society, which had been organized in 1847, and chartered in 1854; had held a very successful exhibition at Gardiner the next year, and sometime after ceased to exist. In 1873 it was revived and re-incorporated, and an arrangement made by its Executive Committee, at Bangor, in June, to hold the fall exhibition jointly with the local society, with premiums amounting to $598, of which $516 were finally awarded. The display was pronounced the best of the kind ever given in the State. About 1,500 dishes of fruit were shown, with as many bottles of cut flowers and other exhibits. A large collection of fruit, obtained from the recent American Pomological Society's fair in Boston, made a most attractive feature of the show. Addresses were made by the President of the State Society, Mr. Z. A. Gilbert, of East Miner, and the Hon. John E. Godfrey, of Bangor, with remarks in discussion by several others. The Bangor Society, however, feeling that they had lost ground within the preceding two years, determined thereafter to hold their exhibitions independent of any other organization.

The North Penobscot Society had its fair of 1874 at Lincoln village, October 8 and 9. It had been voted at the last annual meeting to locate the exhibitions at this place for the next twenty years, in consideration of which the people of the village prepared a trotting park for it. The sum of $233.87 was offered in premiums and $82.50 awarded.

The nineteenth annual show of the West Penobscot was held September 30th and October 1 and 2—"very successful in good weather, a good exhibition, and good attendance." $800 were offered in premiums; $343.05 awarded. $47.50 were given for farm improvements, and as much for farmers' clubs. The Society held $5,000 worth of property, and had $1,857.50 liabilities.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met as usual at Patten, October 8, with unfavorable weather and a light attendance. $125 were advertised as premiums; $59.50 were given. $25 each were granted for farm improvements and farmers' clubs.

The Waldo and Penobscot Society had its fifth annual show at the Monroe Trotting Park October 1 and 2, with usual success. Horse-trotting remained a prominent feature of the fair, occupying the second day almost exclusively. Time was taken, however, for an address by the Rev. S. Wentworth, of Monroe. Premiums offered, $507.50; awarded, $464. $36 were given for farm improvements and $33 to farmers' clubs. The Society had property valued at $300 and no liabilities reported.

THE PENOBSCOT CENTRAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

appears in the reports for 1875, as having its annual exhibition, that year at East Corinth September 15 and 16. Premiums offered, $453; paid, $268.75. Many members of the society are remarked as turning their premiums back into the treasury, as was doubtless the case with other societies, showing a large discrepancy between premiums offered and those paid. $22 were given for premium orchards.

The West Penobscot had its fair September 28 and 29, with cold and disagreeable weather both days, and consequently a partial failure of the exhibit. The "agricultural horse-trot," advertised for the second day, was totally ruined by the rain. Premiums offered, $735; paid, $300.80; $24 offered for premium orchards; value of property, $5,000; liabilities, $1,500.

The North Penobscot had $237.25 on its announcement of premiums for this year. We have no report of its fair.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union had a two days' fair this year at Patten, September 22-23. The stock exhibit was larger and better than usual. Premiums offered and paid, $125 and $88.14, respectively; for orchards, $25 offered.

The Waldo and Penobscot met at the former Monroe Trotting Park, now their fair grounds, October 8 and 9—"success was the reward in all their departments." A hall had just been built upon the grounds, and in it "was the best show ever witnessed at our fairs."

The display in this interesting department is decidedly better each year." Premiums offered and awarded, $467 and $510—facts specially notable from the superiority of the latter figure. $33 were expended for the benefit of the farmers' clubs. Value of the society's property, $1,600; liabilities, $300.

The Penobscot Central Society met in East Corinth September 23 and 24, 1876, a postponement from two earlier days in the week having been compelled by storm.

"If it be true," says the official report, "that we have at previous shows had as many cattle upon our grounds, it is certainly true that never have we had cattle of so good quality. . . . The show of horses excelled all previous shows. . . . Never before have our tables been so bountifully loaded with choice fruit. . . . The address of Rev. Mr. Pitts, of East Corinth, was an able and timely production, listened to by a large concourse of people, and duly appreciated."

The West Penobscot held its twenty-second annual show September 26-28. "The attendance was large, and the receipts very satisfactory. The show in the hall was a fair average of former years. . . . The show of neat stock, horses, sheep, swine, and poultry was hardly up to former years, although many fine specimens were on the ground, more especially in young stock." Address by Mr. George S. Hill, president of the society.

The North Penobscot met at Lincoln, September 28-29, "and was a decided success." The number of cattle was not so large as formerly, but was superior in quality. The show of fruit and vegetables was never surpassed by any former show, and could hardly be excelled even in older agricultural districts. Address by the Hon. A. M. Robinson, of Dover.

The Penobscot and Aroostook Union met for its annual fair at Patten, September 28-29. The society exhibited its own full-blood short-horn bull. Rev. Mr. Kinney "delivered an excellent address, which was well received. . . . On the whole, the fair was a good success, productive of kind feeling and social intercourse."

The Waldo and Penobscot met for its eighth annual display upon its grounds at Monroe, October 4 and 7. The intervening days being stormy, the trials of speed, exhibition, matched and other horses, etc., were postponed to the last day of the week. "The show was attended with good success in each department." The number of entries was more than 200.

For 1877 the Penobscot County Agricultural show and fair was held in Orono, September 18-20, the cattle show at the Trotting Park, adjoining the State College farm. The old sheds and buildings erected at Bangor, for the State Fair, had been purchased, taken down, and re-erected at Orono, where they served as good purpose as ever. Rain somewhat dampened the prospects the first day, but the show was a fair success. "An unusual number of fine horses were entered, and on the whole the patrons were well pleased with the exhibition. . . . The exhibition of fruit was a credit to the society and exhibitors. The exhibition of corn was never before equalled in this vicinity. . . . The receipts of the three days were as much as, if not more than could reasonably have been expected." Address on "The Margin of Profit," by Professor M. C. Fernald, of the State College.

The Penobscot Central held its eleventh annual exhibition at East Corinth, September 12 and 13, with a good display. The show of stock and farm products was especially large.

The West Penobscot met September 25-27. Weather warm and pleasant, attendance large, and receipts very satisfactory. "Show of live stock, full average"—"neat stock department was very full"—"sheep, swine, and poultry were well represented"—"horse department well filled, and made a fine show"—"domestic manufactures, fancy articles, needlework, etc., made a very fair display"—"display of dairy products was very good, and the show of fruit was exceedingly good, considering that the crop was almost a total failure"—"the specimens of crops were very large and fine."

The Aroostook and Penobscot Union had its fair September 20-21. "Show of cattle small"—"the ladies' fair was very good, reflecting great credit on the committee of ladies who had it in charge"—"the second day of the fair partook of the nature of a farmers' holiday." Address by the Rev. E. Skinner.

The Waldo and Penobscot Society made its exhibition October 2 and 3. "Entries in the stock department large, and of a superior quality"—"show of fat cattle good"—"in draft oxen there was a larger show than in any previous year"—"the horse department was better filled than at any of our previous fairs"—"display of sheep, swine, and fowls not quite as good as in former years, but of superior quality"—"the show in the halls was much too large for the building; . . . Many more entries made in this department this year than ever before." The report further says: "By judicious management of their officers all outstanding debts have been paid, and there is a fund in the treasury which the company intend to expend upon their grounds the coming season, erecting buildings, etc., which, when completed, will make it one of the very finest show-grounds in this part of the State."

For 1880 we have only financial statistics again from the societies. The Central Penobscot had $90 from the State, $88.66 from its own treasury; and awarded $194.14 in premiums and gratuities—$17.30 special premiums on wheat and corn, and $9.25 for the encouragement of draining, both under direction of the State Board of Agriculture. The North Penobscot reported only $75 receipts, raised altogether by itself; and awarded $60 in premiums for live stock, $20 for Indian corn, $12.25 for other cultivated crops, $19.15 for fruits and flowers, etc. The West Penobscot had the large sum of $234.68 from the State, and more than twice as much ($563.44) from its own resources. It awarded $274.35 in premiums and gratuities, with $21 special for dairy products. The value of its property was reported at $3,000, with $1,200 liabilities. The Penobscot and Aroostook had $78 and $73 respectively from the State and its own funds: gave $81.75 in gratuities and premiums, $5 special for wheat and corn, $23 special for encouragement of dairying, $31.75 for live stock, $15 for fruits and flowers, $17 for bread, butter, and cheese, and usual premiums for other displays. The Waldo and Penobscot had a good subsidy from the State, $130, but reported the surprising sum of $1,099.14 as raised by its own exertions, making a total receipt for the year of $1,229.14. Of this $585.90 were expended in premiums and gratuities, $30 in aid of county farmers' institutes, $326 for live stock premiums, $3.75 for Indian corn, nothing in special premiums, under order of the State Board, for wheat and corn, but $267 for trials of speed, and $159.50 otherwise for horses.

THE GOOD DONE.

Some of the benefits of the local agricultural societies and clubs were well presented by Mr. D. M. Dunham, of Bangor, in a brief paper read at the semi-annual meeting of the State Board of Agriculture, at Presque Isle, September 25-26, 1878. It said:

Twelve years ago, when our Penobscot Agricultural Society was formed, in the twenty-one towns included in the limits, not a single half-acre of wheat was sown. The society offered, by the direction of this Board, $50 in premiums for wheat-culture, which brought out quite a good competition. The reports were 78 bushels upon two acres, 40 bushels upon 1 acre, and several others averaging 33 bushels to the acre; and to-day I think I am safe in saying, outside of the city and villages, those towns have this year raised their own bread.

I believe that it is quite a general feeling in this place that corn cannot be raised here. We used to think so in Penobscot county, but when this Board discussed the corn question at Newport, and our county clubs took it up and offered a premium in gold for its culture, it was wonderful to see how many planted a piece of corn, and how generally successful was the result. I never saw better corn, either on the Kennebec or Connecticut rivers, and it was a little curious that at the huskings there was no lack of red ears.

LEADING AGRICULTURALISTS.

The following-named gentlemen at present (1881) represent in this county the interests of the agricultural societies and kindred organizations:

H. K. Robinson, Bangor, President of the Penobscot County Agricultural Society; B. A. Burr, Bangor, Secretary. North Penobscot Agricultural Society—A. O. Ingersoll, of Lincoln, President; W. B. Pinkham, Lincoln, Secretary. West Penobscot—George S. Hill, of Exeter, President; T. B. Bachelder, Kenduskeag, Secretary. Penobscot Central—Thomas J. Peakes, Charleston, President; Mason S. Palmer, Corinth, Secretary. Penobscot and Aroostook Union—Samuel L. Kimball, of Patten, President. Waldo and Penobscot—J. W. Wallace, of Jackson, President; E. H. Nealley, Monroec, Secretary. Trustee in Penobscot County of the Maine State Agricultural Society—D. M. Dunham, of Bangor. Trustees of the Maine Pomological Society—Henry McLaughlin and S. C. Harlow, of Bangor. Trustee of the Maine Dairymen's Association—H. M. Smith, of East Orrington. Vice-Presidents of the Maine Poultry Association—J. P. Walker, Bangor, and G. D. Stockwell, East Orrington.

THE COUNTY GRANGE.

We are indebted to Mrs. M. L. Crawford, of Carmel, Secretary of the County Grange, for the following statement:—

Penobscot County Grange was organized at Bangor, April 23, 1881, with the following-named charter members:—Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Gregory, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hall, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Carter, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Johnson, William Patten, and Joseph Clement.

The following-named were the officers elect:—E. H. Gregory, Master; C. M. Freeman, Overseer; William Patten, Steward; Allen Carter, Assistant Steward; Joseph Clements, Chaplain; Nathan Johnson, Treasurer; M. L. Croxford, Secretary; J. M. Robinson, Gate-Keeper; Mrs. E. H. Gregory Ceres; Mrs. C. M. Freeman, Pomona; Mrs. Allen Carter, Flora; Mrs. J. M. Robinson, Lady Assistant Steward.

Members from the following Subordinate Granges compose the County Grange at the present time:—Eastern Star, Hampden (Patrons of Husbandry, No. 1); Union, Hermon, No. 26; Queen City, Bangor, No. 30; Golden Harvest, Carmel, No. 33; Mt. Etna, Etna, No. 36; Mystic Tie, Kenduskeag, No. 58; Orient, Corinth, No. 60; Garland, Garland, No. 76; Rural, Veazie, No. 207; Pine Grove, Brewer, No. 233; Stetson, Stetson, No. 234.

OLDER SOCIETIES.

The Penobscot Medical Association was organized February 15, 1854. Hosea Rich was the first President, and William H. Brown, Secretary.

The Bangor Medical Association organized January 16, 1829, with the same President (Dr. Rich), and Dr. John P. Dickinson, Secretary. The last recorded meeting was in 1843, March 8.

The Penobscot Musical Association was organized October 9, 1848, and incorporated November 16, 1860. Its first President was William H. Mills; Secretary, E. F. Duren. It maintains its organization to the present time, meeting annually in the autumn, and holding a session of four days.

CHAPTER XI.

THE MAINE STATE COLLEGE.

The Foundation Provided by the General Government—A Board of Regents—The College Legislated into Being—A Board of Trustees—Settling a Site—Other Preliminaries—The Site Settled, the Building Built, and the College Opened—Some More Legislation—History of the College to 1876—The Workshop Instruction—Present Organization of the College—The Coburn Cadets—The Coburn Prizes—Full List of Alumni—The Associate Alumni—The State Board of Agriculture and the State College—Good Words for the School.

THE FOUNDATION.

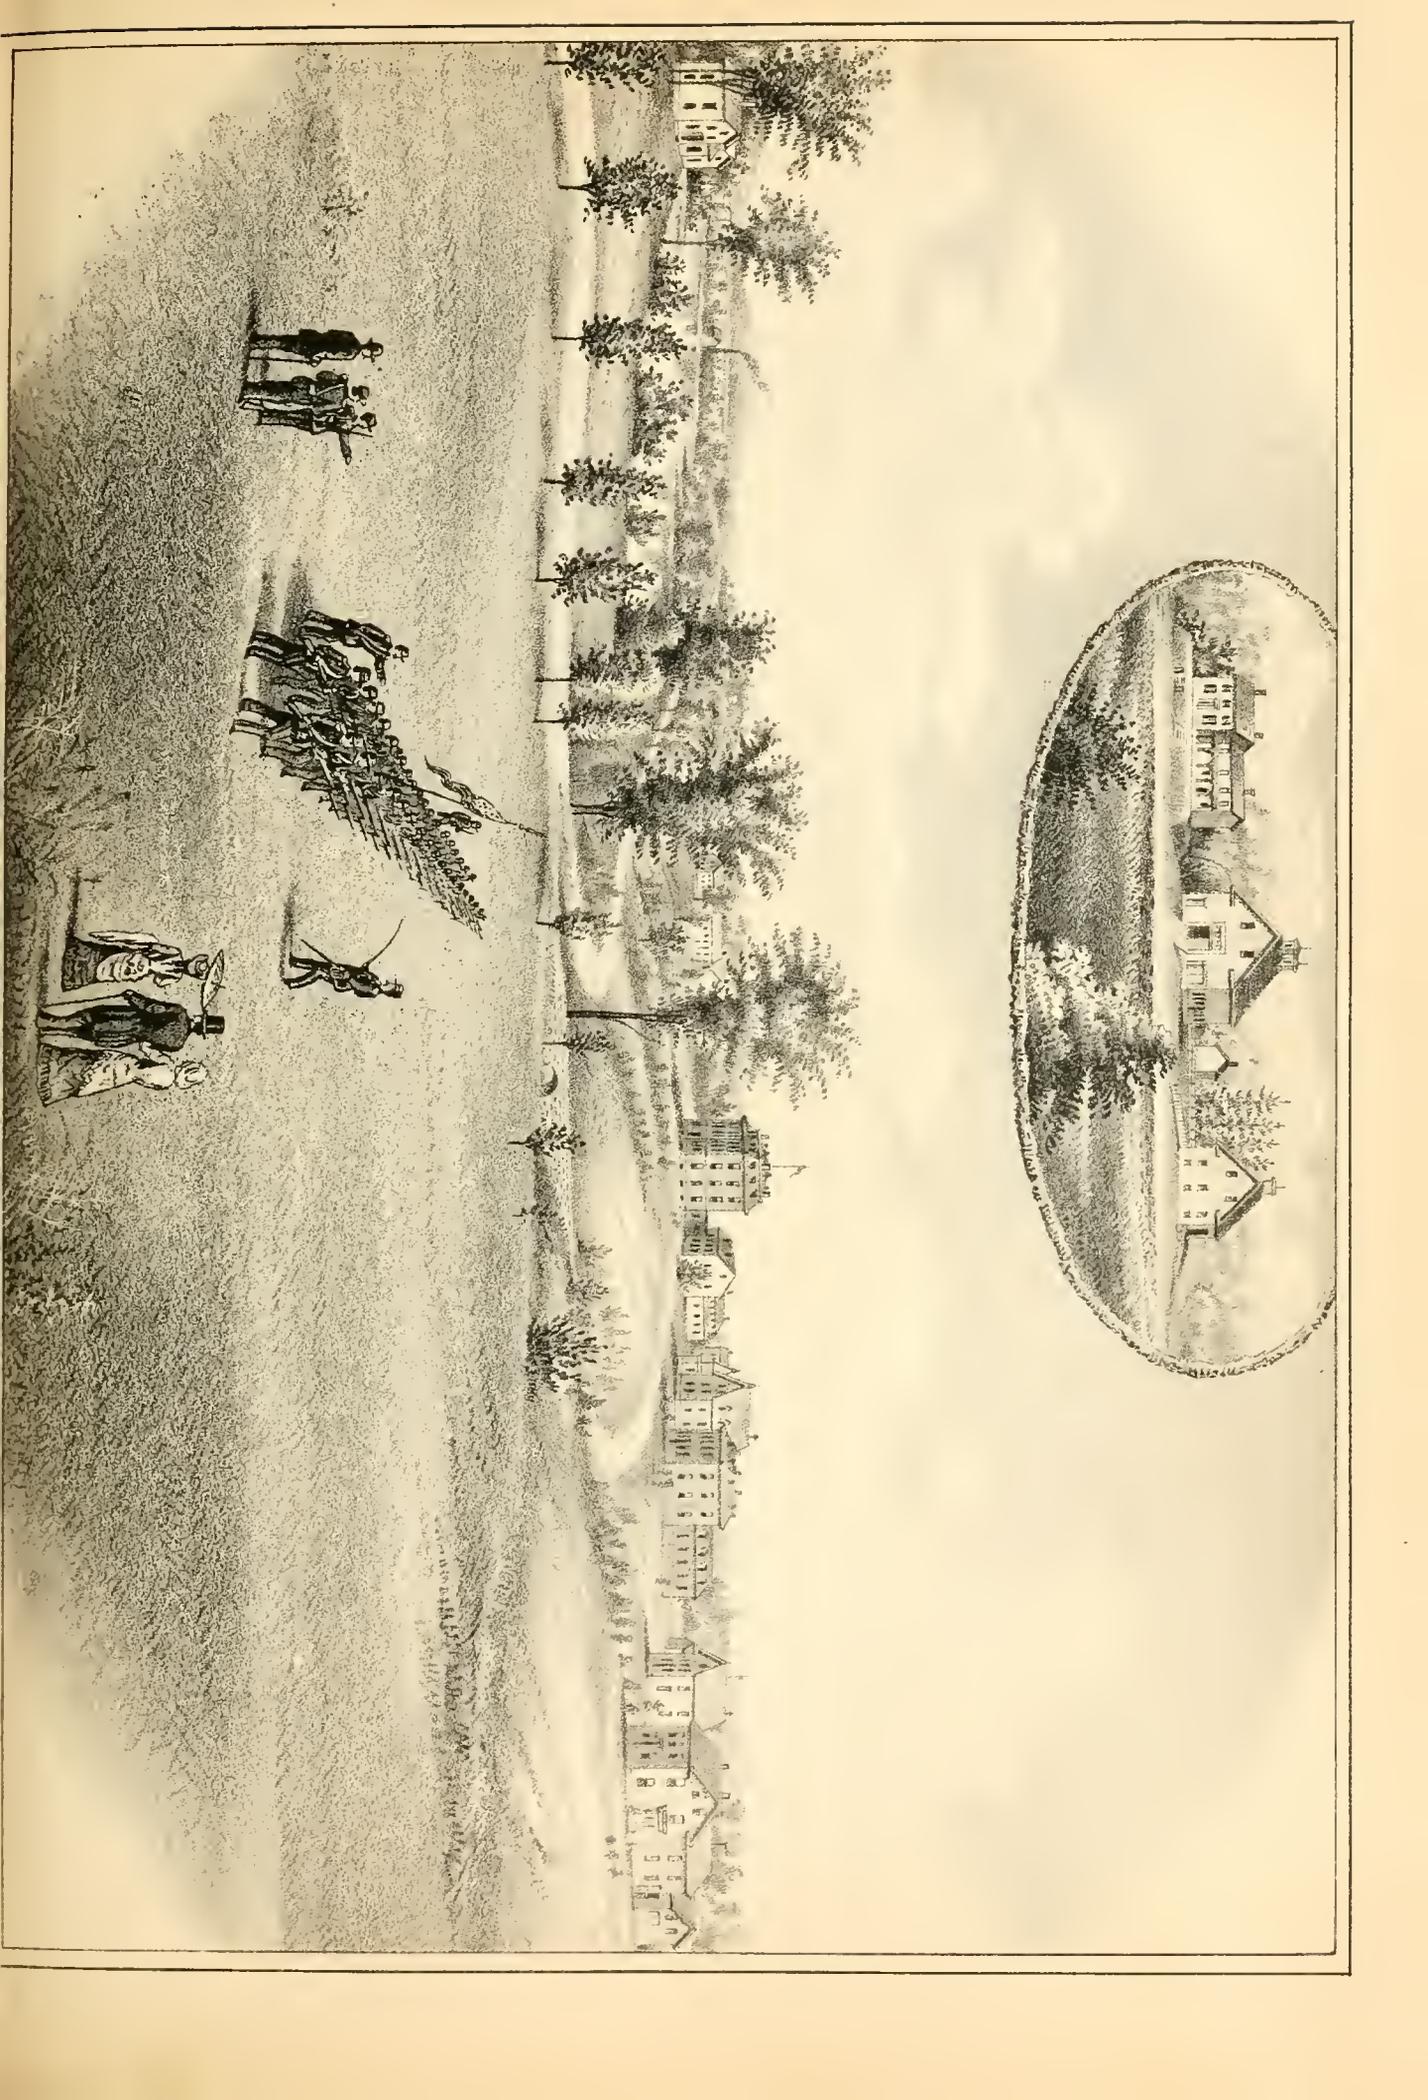

The act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An Act donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," upon which agricultural and technical schools have been founded or enlarged in many States, gave to the State of Maine 210,000 acres of the public lands, conditioned upon acceptance of the grant within two years from the date of the act. The required acceptance was signified by resolution of the Legislature, approved March 25, 1863, and scrip for the amount of the donation was duly issued by the General Land Office and forwarded to the Governor of Maine. During that year the project of the new college came quite generally under discussion by the press and people of the State, as well as by the Board of Agriculture and the Legislature. The Board passed resolutions declaring it advisable and expedient to establish an institution independent of and on a different basis from any existing college; and—partly in consequence of this, perhaps—the Legislature declined a proposal to connect the school with Waterville college.

A BOARD OF REGENTS.

At the same date the resolution of the State Legislature accepting the grant was approved, another was passed providing for the election by that body of a Board of Regents of the coming college, to consist of thirteen persons. The session was concluded, however, without making the nominations, and the resolution consequently failed of effect. At the next session the resolution was renewed in substance, but provided for a commission of three, instead of thirteen, and Messrs. the Hon. W. G. Crosby, Joseph Eaton, and Samuel F. Peasley were appointed commissioners to receive proposals for the location of the college, and benefactions in aid thereof. About the same time the Governor was authorized to dispose of the land scrip, acting "in concert with the Governors of the other States."

THE COLLEGE LEGISLATED INTO BEING.

An act was passed by the Legislature in February, 1865, "to establish the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts," whereby Messrs. Hannibal Hamlin, Charles A. Everett, William Wirt Wigin, Samuel F. Perley, Thomas S. Lang, N. T. Hill, Bradford Cummings, Dennis Moore, William D. Dana, S. L. Goodale, Robert Martin, Alfred S. Perkins, Joseph Farwell, Seward Dill, Joseph Day, and Ebenezer Knowlton were constituted Trustees of the College, and authorized to establish such an institution as was contemplated by the act of Congress making the land-grants for the purpose.

“Practical experiments and demonstrations of scientific principles and rules,” also instruction in military tactics, and such other studies “as the facilities of the College and the periods of instruction will permit,” all “in addition to the instruction which is to be given by classes, text-books, lectures, and apparatus,” are prescribed in the act. No charge for tuition was to be made to any student who is an inhabitant of the State. The following section is well worth extracting in full:

SECTION 14. It shall be the duty of the trustees, directors, and teachers of the college to impress on the minds of the students the principles of morality and justice, and a sacred regard to truth; love to their country, humanity and universal benevolence; sobriety, industry, and frugality, chastity, moderation, and temperance, and all other virtues which are the ornaments of human society; and among other means to promote these ends, and to secure the best personal improvement of the students, the trustees shall provide, as fully as may be practicable, that the internal organization of the college shall be on the plan of one or more well-regulated households and families, so that the students may be brought into relations of domestic intimacy and confidence with their teachers.

SETTLING A SITE.

The act of Congress making the grant requiring the establishing of at least one of the colleges contemplated by it, by each State accepting its terms, within five years, on penalty of forfeiture of the gift, the commissioners soon set about the ascertainment of a site for the Maine College. Advertisements were made in the newspapers, inviting donations and benefactions in aid of the proposed college, and proposals for the location thereof. In reply, three offers of sites, to be gratuitously given, were made—one by Mr. Benjamin F. Nourse, of Orrington, Penobscot county, of his farm of 425 acres at Goodale's Corner, unconditionally offered; one from the Hon. Francis O. J. Smith, of New York City, of his 90-acre farm at Gorham, with no condition except the permanent maintenance of the Agricultural College therein; and one from the President and Trustees of Bowdoin College at Brunswick, of the establishment of a separate institution of the character designated in the grant, in consideration of the transfer to the corporation of Bowdoin of the entire amount of the land scrip. The commissioners visited the several localities included in the offers. They found the first and second objectionable for lack of necessary buildings, and the first also by reason of its distance from any central point of travel. The Brunswick location, including about 300 acres for an experimental farm, was free from these objections, but not found suitable for a stock farm. Upon the whole, however, the commission reported in favor of accepting the Bowdoin offer, but did not think the scrip could be legally transferred to the College authorities. It rather should be sold, in their judgment, and the proceeds invested. The recommendations were fully discussed in public and private, by the Board of Agriculture and the Legislature; and the decision finally was not to accept them.

OTHER PRELIMINARIES.

The trustees appointed by the late act had a meeting at Augusta, April 25 and 26, 1865, and appointed Mr. Hamlin President, Mr. Goodale, Clerk, and Mr. Phineas Barnes, of Portland, Treasurer of the Board. An address was issued by the trustees to the people of the State, calling attention to the enterprise and inviting “such contributions as will enable them to provide the requisite buildings and apparatus for setting the College in operation.” Mr. Nourse had so modified his offer of the gift of his Orrington farm as to require the precedent raising of $50,000 “for the erection of buildings and other uses of the College.” At another meeting of the Board in Augusta, the next September, it was reported that only about one-half the necessary amount had been pledged, when thanks were voted to Mr. Nourse, and the attempt to secure the acceptance of his offer was abandoned. A call was announced for a meeting in Bangor, to consider some informal proposals made concerning an available tract in Orono town. No quorum was got together, however, and the matter rested until the next year. It was necessary to exercise considerable care and circumspection, in order to make sure that the site finally selected should answer the specifications of the resolution of instructions passed by the Legislature in 1863, that “the farm should embrace such a variety of soils and of surface as should constitute it, as near as may be, a fair epitome of the State, and that it should occupy a location easily accessible, and as nearly central to the State as may be, considering both geographical position, population, and social and other advantages.” In addition to the localities before mentioned, a site at Topsham was pressed upon the attention of the Board, mainly by the authorities of a college then existing in that vicinity, who were supported by the influence of the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, who was also Clerk of the Board of Trustees. Early in 1866, after a full attention to the claims of each of the localities, the site at Orono, in Penobscot county, now occupied by the College and its farm, were determined upon.

Contracts for the necessary buildings were made, and work went rapidly forward, so that in 1868 the institution was opened for the reception of pupils; and, says the next Report of the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture: “a class of highly promising young men has been gathered—less numerous, it may be, than in some similar institutions in other States, but considerably more so than the earlier classes which entered what is now the oldest, the most numerously attended, and the best equipped of our literary colleges.”

By chapter 59, of the Private and Special Laws of 1866, the inhabitants of Orono were authorized to raise money, by taxation or loan, to the amount of $11,000, for the purchase of the White and the Goddard or Frost farms, for conveyance to the Trustees of the State College, if a majority of the inhabitants should agree thereto. At the same session, the inhabitants of Oldtown were similarly authorized to vote an appropriation in aid of the purchase of land in Orono for the same purpose.

MORE LEGISLATION.

At the legislative session of 1869 $28,000 were appropriated from the State Treasury for the purposes of the College, and $22,000 in 1870, both under the proviso that a perfect title to the premises in Orono should be vested in the State before any money should be drawn under these grants.

By chapter 147, of the Private and Special Laws of 1872, "females who possess the suitable qualifications for admission to the several classes, may be admitted as students in the college, subject to the requirements of labor and study which may be determined by the Faculty of Instruction and by the Trustees of the College."

THE REMAINING STORY of the college, to the year 1876, with some amplification of what we have already given, is well told by Mr. S. L. Boardman, Secretary of the Board of Agriculture, in the twenty-first annual report of that officer:

In February, 1865, the "Maine State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts" was incorporated, and sixteen trustees were recognized, representing the different counties of the State. On the 25th of April the trustees organized by the choice of Hon. Hannibal Hamlin as President, and they also issued an address calling upon the citizens of the State to come up to the work of the endowment of the Institution. At a subsequent meeting, held in 1865, Mr. E. F. Nourse, of Orrington, renewed his offer of his farm and buildings, provided $50,000 could be secured for the erection of the necessary buildings by subscriptions or donations. This farm was visited by the trustees, and during the year they also visited sites for the proposed location of the college in Topsham, Gorham, Augusta, Fairfield, Newport, and Orono, but no decision was made during the year. At a meeting held in January, 1866, the offer made by the towns of Orono and Oldtown, accompanied by an offer of $10,000 from the citizens of Bangor, was accepted, it being considered by a large majority the most advantageous offer that had been made. In April of the same year, Dr. J. C. Weston, of Bangor, was elected clerk of the Board of Trustees, and in September, Mr. Hamlin having previously resigned, Hon. W. A. P. Dillingham, of Sidney, was elected President of the Board. This Board, at a meeting held January 22, 1867, elected as President of the College, Hon. Phineas Barnes, of Portland, a gentleman who had previously been elected Treasurer, and who had from the first inception of this movement taken a deep interest in its success, having written a series of articles on the establishment and management of the College, which had attracted wide attention. The election of Mr. Barnes was the last act of this Board. It had found, from its large number and the difficulty of calling meetings at which a quorum would be present, that a re-organization would be desirable. Accordingly a new Board was constituted, consisting of seven members, of which Hon. Abner Coburn, of Skowhegan, was elected President, and Hon. Lyndon Oak, of Garland, Clerk.

In 1867 a college-building, now known as White Hall, and used for recitation purposes, was built, and the general farm buildings thoroughly repaired. At the meeting of the trustees held July 2, 1868, M. C. Fernald, A. M., was elected to the position of Professor of Mathematics, and Samuel Johnson, of Jackson, was elected farm superintendent. The necessary arrangements having been made, and with these two instructors, Prof. Fernald acting as president, the institution was opened, in September, with a class of 13 students. The erection of a laboratory building was commenced this year, the same being built upon the plan, somewhat improved, of the laboratory of Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island.

The towns of Orono and Oldtown had given a warranty deed of the farms, in which was inserted the condition that the property should revert to the town of Orono, should the location of the college ever be changed. The trustees desired to change the conditions of this deed so that they might have the alternative of paying the present worth of the land, or abandoning the property if the location of the college was changed. Pending the settlement of this matter between the trustees and the town of Orono, a year went by, during which the legislature refused to make further appropriations to the institution till the change was made in the terms of the deed, conveying the land to the State without qualifications. Of course this action suspended all building operations for the year, but with the giving of a satisfactory deed to the State, the Legislature, in 1870, made an appropriation of $50,000.

In 1869, the statute concerning the board of agriculture was so amended that its secretary was created a trustee ex officio of the Institution; and one of the two sessions of the board to be held annually was fixed at the college, or near enough for the students to attend. Through the courtesy of the presidents and superintendents of the several railroads in the State, free passes have been obtained for the students to attend meetings in the different counties, this being regarded as coming within the requirements of the statute, and the meetings so held have been very interesting and profitable to the students. Besides, by visiting the different parts of the State, the students have been enabled to make decided friends for the institution, and to give a good idea of its course of study and discipline to those who could not well visit it.

The college, since its establishment, has received the following appropriations from the State: In 1867, $20,000; in 1868, $10,000; in 1870, $50,000; in 1871, $6,000; in 1872 $18,000; in 1873, $24,000; in 1874, $12,500; in 1875, $10,500; and in 1876, $8,000—a total of $159,000. If the above amounts seem large, it must be borne in mind that they are small compared with the appropriations which other States have made for institutions of a similar character. Thus, Michigan has given its college $419,000 in 18 years; Iowa, $329,000 in 7 years; Massachusetts, $313,000 in 7 years; Illinois, $235,000 in 5 years; and Pennsylvania, $270,000 in 4 years.

The laboratory building was completed in 1870, and the dormitory and boarding-house built in 1871. The dormitory is 3 stories high, and has 48 rooms. The president's house was built in 1872, a professor's house in 1873, and the large barn in 1874. The students erected a building for their own purposes in 1876. The total number of buildings belonging to the college is as follows; 3 for college purposes, 1 boarding-house, 4 dwellings for the use of instructors, and 4 barns and stables.

The following table represents the number of students in each year since the opening of the college: *

Years.	Seniors.	Juniors.	Sophomores.	Freshmen.	Special.	Total.
1868				13		13
1869			13	10		23
1870		9	9	14		32
1871	6	6	6	24		42
1872	7	7	25	32		71
1873	7	20	41	34	1	103
1874	19	42	30	28	2	121
1875	33	20	22	35	5	115
1876	18	16	37	20	3	94

The appropriations made by the State have been expended for the erection of buildings, the purchase of scientific apparatus, implements, and farm stock, and for supplementing the income from the National grant in defraying the expenses of salaries. While the income from the grant is but $8,400 per annum, the salaries of professors and teachers amount to $12,500 per annum, the balance of which has to be made up from the sums appropriated by the State from time to time. It has been found necessary, in order to keep up the character of the institution, to furnish the instruction demanded by the increased number of pupils and to sustain teachers of positive ability, to pay as good salaries as are paid by other institutions of a similar nature; consequently the annual expenses in this direction have exceeded the income for the purpose provided by the endowment of the National Government, and the assistance of the State has been necessary. The college farm is worth $15,000, while the value of the scientific apparatus is $9,000; of the library, $4,000; of the farm stock, $3,800; and of farm implements, $1,500.

In 1878 the system of workshop instruction in the mechanic arts, according to the Russian plan, which was contemplated in the very foundation of the college, was put into successful operation. The shops were opened wholly through means obtained by private subscription, led, in both amount and influence, by ex-Governor Coburn, of the Board of Trustees. The vise shop was opened for practical operations May 4th, with Mr. Valentine Walburg, of Boston, in charge as instructor. The forge shop followed October 1st, under the direction of Professor W. A. Pike. The work upon the building for this was done almost wholly by the students of the College. The first classes in these shops made remarkable progress, and they now constitute a most successful and approved department of the instruction. Mr. Wilbur F. Decker, B. M. E., a graduate of the College in 1879, is regularly installed as "Instructor in Vise-work and Forge-work."

*The students in the academic year 1880-81 were: Freshmen, 31; sophomores, 20; juniors, 27; seniors, 25; post-graduates, 3; special, 4; total, 110.

M. C. Fernald

The following extracts are made from the last catalogue of the College:

DESIGN OF THE INSTITUTION.

It is the design of the Maine State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts to give the young men of the State who may desire it, at a moderate cost, the advantages of a thorough, liberal and practical education. It proposes to do this by means of the most approved methods of instruction, by giving to every young man who pursues the course of study an opportunity practically to apply the lessons he learns in the class-room, and by furnishing him facilities for defraying a part of his expenses by his own labor.

By the act of Congress granting public lands for the endowment and maintenance of such colleges, it is provided that the leading object of such an institution shall be, "without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts." While the courses of study fully meet this requisition, and are especially adapted to prepare the student for agriculture and mechanical pursuits, it is designed that they shall be also sufficiently comprehensive, and of such a character as to secure to the student the discipline of mind and practical experience necessary for entering upon other callings or professions.

COURSES OF INSTRUCTION.

Five full courses are provided, viz: A course in Agriculture, in Civil Engineering, in Mechanical Engineering, in Chemistry, and in Science and Literature.

The studies of the several courses are essentially common for the first two years, and are valuable not only in themselves, but also as furnishing a necessary basis for the more technical studies and the practical instruction of the Junior and Senior years.

Physical Geography, taught in the first term of the freshman year, serves as a suitable introduction to Geology, which is taken up later in each of the courses. Physiology serves as an introduction to Comparative Anatomy, and Algebra, Geometry, and Trigonometry are needful preliminaries to the higher mathematics and the practical applications required in Surveying, Engineering proper, and Astronomy. Botany, Chemistry, and Physics are highly important branches, common to all the assigned courses, and hence taken by all the students who are candidates for degrees.

Rhetoric, French, and English Literature, form the early part of a line of studies which later includes German, Logic, History of Civilization, United States Constitution, Political Economy, and Mental and Moral Science; branches, several of which relate not more to literary culture than to social and civil relations, and to the proper preparation for the rights and duties of citizenship.

Composition and Declamation are regular exercises in all the courses throughout the four years.

MILITARY INSTRUCTION.

Thorough instruction is given in military science by a competent officer. It extends through the whole college course, the freshman, sophomore, and junior classes receiving instruction in infantry tactics, and the senior class in artillery drill.

Arms are furnished by the State. The uniform is navy-blue yatch cloth, sack coat, and pants, without brass buttons or trimming that attract attention, and is required to be worn during the military exercises.

LABOR.

It is a peculiarity of the college, that it makes provision for labor, thus combining practice with theory, manual labor with scientific culture. The maximum time of required labor is three hours a day for five days in the week. In the lowest class the students are required to work on the farm, and they receive compensation for their labor according to their industry, faithfulness and efficiency, the educational character of the labor being also taken into account. The maximum price paid is ten cents an hour. The labor is designed to be as much as possible educational, so that every student may become familiar with all the forms of labor upon the farm and in the garden.

The students of the three upper classes carry on their principal labor in the laboratory, the drawing-rooms, the work-shops, or in the field, and for it they receive no pecuniary consideration, since this labor is of a purely educational character.

SPECIAL COURSES.

Students may be received for less time than that required for a full course, and they may select from the studies of any class such branches as they are qualified to pursue successfully. Students in Special Courses are not entitled to degrees, but may receive certificates of proficiency.

DEGREES.

The full course in Civil Engineering entitles to the Degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering; the full course in Mechanical Engineering, to the Degree of Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering; the full course in Agriculture, Chemistry, or Science and Literature, to the Degree of Bachelor of Science.

Three years after graduation, on presentation of a satisfactory thesis with the necessary drawings, and proof of professional work or study, the Bachelors of Civil Engineering may receive the Degree of Civil Engineer; the Bachelors of Mechanical Engineering, the Degree of Mechanical Engineer; the Bachelor of Science, the Degree of Master of Science.

FARM AND BUILDINGS.

The college farm contains three hundred and seventy acres of land, of high natural productiveness and of great diversity of soil; and is therefore well adapted to the experimental purposes of the institution.

White Hall, the building first erected, affords excellent accommodations for a limited number of students. The lower rooms of this building are appropriated to general and class purposes.

Brick Hall contains forty-eight rooms, and has connected with it a boarding-house for students. With these buildings, the institution furnishes desirable accommodations for one hundred and twenty-five students.

The Laboratory contains two apparatus rooms, a lecture room, a cabinet, a library and weighing room, a recitation room, and rooms for analytical and other purposes, and is in all respect admirably adapted to the wants of the chemical and mineralogical departments.

APPARATUS.

The college is furnished with new and valuable apparatus for the departments of Physical Geography, Chemistry, Physics, Surveying, Civil Engineering, and Mechanical Engineering, to which additions will be made as the exigencies of the several departments require. Models have been obtained from the United States Patent office, and others have been purchased, that serve for purposes of instruction.

LIBRARY.

The Library contains 4,855 volumes, the largest proportion of which have been obtained through the generosity of ex-Governor Coburn. Valuable additions have also been made to it by other friends of the college, only a small number having been purchased with money appropriated by the State. It is earnestly hoped that so important an auxiliary in the education of the student will not be disregarded by the people of the State, and that liberal contributions will be made to the library, not only of agricultural and scientific works, but also of those profitable to the general reader. The reading-room is supplied with a number of valuable newspapers and periodicals.

CABINET.

Rooms have been fitted up with cases of minerals and specimens of natural history, and several hundred specimens have been presented to the College. The valuable private cabinets of Prof. C. H. Fernald and Ex-President C. F. Allen are placed in these rooms, and are accessible to the students. All specimens presented will be properly credited and placed on exhibition. Rocks illustrating the different geological formation and minerals found within the State are particularly solicited.

EXPENSES.*

* Since this Catalogue was issued, the trustees have been required by law to make charge of tuition. They have fixed the rate at $30 a year, to be divided equally between the two terms. They say: "In deciding upon this Bedding and furniture must be supplied by the students, who also furnish their own lights. Tables, chairs, bedsteads, sinks and husk mattresses can be purchased at the college at moderate rates.

The price of board is two dollars and sixty cents per week; washing averages not more than sixty cents per dozen.

The warming by steam of single rooms (each suitable for two occupants) has averaged for the past four years about ten dollars a room for each term. The expense of heating recitation rooms and rooms for general purposes has been about two dollars a term for each student, and the incidental expenses including pay for the services of janitor, pay for bringing mail, for cleaning and renovating rooms, for general repairs, etc., have been less than three dollars per term for each student.

From the items given, with an allowance of a few dollars a year for necessary text-books, quite an accurate estimate of needful expenses can be made.

The college term-bills are payable, one-half at the commencement and the remainder at or before the close of each term.

MEANS OF DEFRAYING EXPENSES.

The terms are so arranged that the long vacation occurs in the winter, that students may have an opportunity to teach during that time. The summer vacation is in the haying season, when farm labor is most profitable. By availing themselves of the opportunities thus afforded, together with the allowance for labor on the college farm, industrious and economical students can cancel the greater part of their college expenses.

Among the organizations attached to the college is the battalion of Coburn Cadets, in two infantry companies, and one artillery company, commanded by Major A. E. Rogers, with W. R. Howard as Adjutant. F. I. Kimball is Captain of Company A, H. A. Kieth of Company B, and G. W. Sturtevant of the artillery. The battalion is named from ex-Governor Coburn, who has been a steady benefactor of the College. Among other benefits conferred by him, is the formation of the "Coburn prize for best sophomore declamation," which was taken last year by Mr. C. S. Blackford; and for the "Coburn prize for best junior essay," awarded in 1880 to Mr. F. S. Wade.

THE ALUMNI

are not yet so numerous as to make the publication of the entire list in any way burdensome. It will, we are confident, be examined with interest by the readers of this volume, and prove a record of permanent interest. It is also extracted from the last number of the College Catalogue:

CLASS OF 1872.

Benjamin F. Gould, C. E., farmer, San Juan, California; George E. Hammond, C. E., civil engineer, Elliott; Edwin J. Haskell, B. S., silk manufacturer, Saccarappa; Heddle Hilliard, C. E., civil engineer, Grand Southern Railroad, New Brunswick; Eber D. Thomas, B. S., civil engineer, Grand Rapids, Michigan; George O. Weston, B. S., farmer, Norridgewock.

CLASS OF 1873.

Russell W. Eaton, C. E., cotton-mill engineer, Providence, Rhode Island; George H. Hamlin, C. E., professor, State College, Orono; Fred W. Holt, C. E., civil engineer, G. S. R. R., St. George, New Brunswick; John M. Oak, B. S., merchant, Garland; Charles E. Reed, C. E., business manager Free Press, Detroit, Michigan; Frank Lampson Scribner, B. S., tutor, Girard College, Philadelphia; Harvey B. Thayer, B. S., druggist, Monson.

CLASS OF 1874.

William A. Allen, C. E., civil engineer, M. C. R. R., Portland; Walter Balentine, B. S., instructor in agriculture, State College, Orono; amount, they have endeavored to avoid two extremes—the one, a tuition so high as to be in disregard of the fact that a large percentage of the students work their own way, either wholly or in part; the other, a tuition so low as seemingly to indicate an undervaluing of the advantages offered." The trustees, however, make provision for the establishing of free scholarships, by the following action: "Voted, That any individual or society paying to the Treasurer a sum not less than seven hundred and fifty dollars, shall be entitled to one perpetual free scholarship in the College."

William H. Gerrish, B. S., M. D., physician, Merrimac, Massachusetts; John I. Gurney, B. S., farmer, Dorchester, Massachusetts; David R. Hunter, B. S., police officer, Oakland, California; Louise H. Ramsdell, B. S. (Mrs. Milton D. Noyes), Atkinson.

CLASS OF 1875.

Solomon W. Bates, C. E., civil engineer, Waterville; Wilbur A. Bumps, C. E., M. D., physician, Dexter; Samuel H. Clapp, C. E., teacher, Newton, Massachusetts; Lewis F. Coburn, C. E., teacher, Crescent City, California; Charles W. Colesworthy, B. S., California; Charles F. Durham, C. E., teacher, Crescent City, California; Alfred M. Goodale, B. S., superintendent Newton Mills, Newton Upper Falls, Massachusetts; Edson F. Hitchins, C. E., draughtsman, Waterville; Whitman H. Jordan, B. S., professor agricultural chemistry, State College, Pennsylvania; Edward D. Mayo, M. E., draughtsman and instructor in drawing, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Albert E. Mitchell, M. E., mechanical engineer, Altoona, Pennsylvania; Allen G. Mitchell, C. E., civil engineer, Madison; Fred W. Moore, B. S., teacher (deceased), California; Luther W. Rogers, B. S., merchant, Waterville; Minott W. Sewall, M. E., mechanical engineer, Wilmington, Delaware; George M. Shaw, C. E., principal of schools, Orville, California; Wesley Webb, B. S., farmer, South Freeport; Edgar A. Work, C. E., (deceased) United States Military Academy.

CLASS OF 1876.

Edmund Abbott, B. S., M. D., physician, Winterport; Charles P. Allen, B. S., lawyer, Presque Isle; Eldridge H. Beckler, C. E., civil engineer, N. P. R. R., St. Paul, Minnesota; Fred M. Bisbee, C. E., civil engineer, Santa Fe, New Mexico; Edward M. Blanding, B. S., editor Maine Mining Journal, Bangor; Charles M. Brainard, B. S., lumberman, Skowhegan; George H. Buker, B. S., apothecary, Presque Isle; Florence H. Cowan, B. S., Orono; Oliver Crosby, M. E., foreman of machine shop, St. Paul, Minnesota; Vetal Cyr, B. S., Principal of Madawaska Training School, Fort Kent; James E. Dike, C. E., surveyor, Fargo, Dakota Territory; Willis O. Dyke, B. S. (deceased), Gorham; Horace M. Estabrooke, B. S., teacher, Pembroke; Arthur M. Farrington, B. S., veterinary surgeon, 33 West Twenty-seventh street, New York; George O. Foss, C. E., United States engineer, St. Paul, Minnesota; William T. Haines, B. S., lawyer, Waterville; Henry F. Hamilton, B. S., D. D. S., dentist, 124 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston; Newall P. Haskell, B. S., New Gloucester; Edward S. How, M. E., bookkeeper, Portland; Philip W. Hubbard, B. S., apothecary, Farmington; Samuel M. Jones, M. E., engineer, Corliss Engine Works, Providence, Rhode Island; Albert M. Lewis, B. S., clergyman, Sebec; Herbert A. Long, M. E., farmer, Bluehill; Luther R. Lothrop, C. E., civil engineer N. P. R. R., St. Paul, Minnesota; Nelson H. Martin, B. S., teacher, Fort Fairfield; Charles E. Oak, M. E., surveyor, Caribou; George D. Parks, C. E., lawyer, Brunswick; Hayward Pierce, B. S., West Waldo Granite Works, Frankfort; Frank R. Reed, C. E., carpenter, Roxbury; Henry J. Reynolds, B. S., druggist, Machias; Charles W. Rogers, M. E., machinist, Charlestown, Massachusetts; William L. Stevens, M. E., agent of flouring mills, Minneapolis, Minnesota; John H. Williams, B. S., teacher, Milo.

CLASS OF 1877.

Alvah D. Blackington, C. E., city engineer, Rockland; Robert B. Burns, B. C. E., superintendent of schools, Fort Fairfield; Eugene H. Dakin, B. S., apothecary, Bangor; Edward F. Danforth, B. S., lawyer, Skowhegan; Augustus J. Elkins, B. M. E., draughtsman and scaler, Oldtown; Alica T. Emery, B. S., teacher, Orono; Samuel W. Gould, B. S., lawyer, Skowhegan; Joseph C. Lunt, B. C. E., merchant, Fort Fairfield; Fred F. Phillips, B. S., law student, Bangor; Samuel Shaw, B. M. E., architectural draughtsman, Boston, Massachusetts; Frank P. Stone, B. S., farmer, Livermore Falls; Thomas J. Stephens, B. M. E., apothecary, Auburn; George E. Sturgis, B. C. E., apothecary, Oregon; Charles E. Towne, B. C. E., government surveyor, Helena, Montana; James W. Weeks, B. M. E., draughtsman, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Nellie E. Weeks, B. S., (Mrs. Llewellyn Spencer), Orono; Ivan E. Webster, B. S., lumberman, Orono.

CLASS OF 1878.

Emma Brown, B. S., teacher, Orono; Andrew J. Caldwell, B. M. E., draughtsman, Brooklyn, New York; Cecil C. Chamberlain, B. S., clerk in lumber business, Geneseo, Illinois; George Fernald, B. C. E., merchant, Waterloo, Iowa; James Heald, B. S., M. & St. P. R. R., Minneapolis, Minnesota; John Locke, B. S., Maine Central R. R., Portland; Frank J. Oakes, B. C. E., assistant city engineer, Lowell, Massachusetts; John C. Patterson, B. C. E., civil engineer, St. Paul & Manitoba R. R., Norman, Dakota Territory; Winfield E. Tripp, B.

C. E., law student, Albany, New York; Edward C. Walker, B. S., lawyer, Lovel; Otis C. Webster, B. S., druggist, Augusta.

CLASS OF 1879.

Harry P. Bean, B. C. E., civil engineer C., M. & St. Paul R. R., Parker, Dakota Territory; Edward J. Blake, B. C. E., assistant engineer W., St. L. & P. R. R., Peoria, Illinois; Simon P. Crosby, B. S., law student, Dexter; John D. Cutter, B. S., medical student, University of the City of New York; Wilbur F. Decker, B. M. E., instructor in vise work and forge work, State college, Orono; David A. Deerow, B. C. E., draughtsman, Lockport, New York; Willis E. Ferguson, B. S., farmer, Bangor; Charles W. Gibbs, B. C. E., Abington, Illinois; Annie M. Gould, B. S., teacher, Stillwater; Nellie M. Holt, B. S., teacher, Orono; Frank E. Kidder, B. C. E., student of architecture, institute of technology, Boston, Massachusetts; Mark D. Libby, B. C. E., stock breeder, Belmont, Kansas; Charles S. Loring, B. M. E., machinist, Winthrop; George P. Merrill, B. S., U. S. fish commission, Washington, District of Columbia; Arthur L. Morse, farmer, Limerick; Charles A. Morse, B. C. E., draughtsman, C., B. & Q.R. R., Burlington, Iowa; Fred D. Potter, B. M. E., draughtsman, Providence, Rhode Island; Alton J. Shaw, B. M. E., mechanical engineer, Auburn; Percia A. Vinal, B. S., teacher, Orono; George O. Warren, B. S., farmer, Fryeburg; Herbert Webster, B. S., lumberman, Orono.

CLASS OF 1880.

Horace W. Atwood, B. S., student in veterinary science, New York City; James M. Bartlett, B. S., assistant in chemistry, Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut; Albert H. Brown, B. S., Oldtown; Marcia Davis, B. S., teacher, Stillwater; Fied B. Elliott, B. S., farmer, Bowdoin; Sarah P. Farrington, B. S., teacher, State reform school, Cape Elizabeth; Charles W. Fernald, B. S., clerk, Waterloo, Iowa; Fred W. Fickett, B. S., teacher, Etna; George W. Lufkin, B. C. E., teacher, North Yarmouth; Frank A. Mansfield, B. S., teacher, Camden; Annie A. Matthews, B. S., teacher, Stillwater; Henry W. Murray, B. C. E., teacher, Farmington, California; Franklin R. Patten, B. C. E., civil engineer, Newport, Rhode Island; Charles T. Pease, B. S., civil engineer, P., W. & B. R. R., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; James F. Purrington, B. S., farmer, Bowdoin.

A society of "Associate Alumni" has been formed, which has at present the following named officers:

President, Edward M. Blanding, Bangor; Secretary, Professor W. H. Jordan, State College, Pennsylvania; Treasurer, Phillip W. Hubbard, Farmington; Class Secretaries, 1872, E. J. Haskell, Saccarappa; 1873, J. M. Oak, Garland; 1874, W. A. Allen, Portland; 1875, W. H. Jordan, State College, Pennsylvania; 1876, N. P. Haskell, New Gloucester; 1877, S. W. Gould, Skowhegan; 1878, C. E. Walker, Lovell; 1879, F. E. Kidder, Institute of technology, Massachusetts.

THE STATE BOARD AND THE COLLEGE.

March 1, 1869, an act of the Legislature was approved entitled "An Act to secure harmony of action between the Board of Agriculture and the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts," in which it was provided that five members, appointed from the State at large, should be added to the Board, of whom two should be appointed from the Faculty of the College; that the Secretary of the Board of Agriculture should be ex officio a member of the Board of Trustees of the College, and that the former Board should hold one of its two annual sessions "within such convenient distance of the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts as will enable the attendance of the students and Faculty of said College, so that they may have the advantage of the addresses and discussions before the Board." The first of the sessions under this act began at the College in Orono, October 19, 1869. The report of the meeting says:

It was gratifying to find a recent accession to the number of students, enlarged means of imparting instruction, an additional professor at work, and abundant evidence of ability and determination on the part of all connected with the Institution to succeed. . . . The forenoon was chiefly devoted to the usual recitations of the classes and to remarks by those present, all of whom expressed the highest degree of satisfaction at the thoroughness of the instruction, the progress of the students, and the happy results of the union of labor with study.

Professor Hamlin, of Colby University, one of the newly appointed members at large, said that, in all his experience as a teacher in different institutions, he had never heard better recitations or witnessed greater evidence of thorough, careful work on the part of both pupils and instructors. He alluded to the sympathy and co-operation which should exist between pupils and teachers as necessary to the best results, and believed it existed in the present Institution.

Professor Fernald, in reply to an inquiry whether the bodily labor interfered with intellectual progress, replied that so far as he could judge from the working of the system for something more than a year, it did not, but, on the contrary, they were better fitted for study by reason of having engaged in physical labor, and he regarded it as really a benefit. He also stated that those pupils who exhibited the most aptitude at work were also those most ready at their several studies.

Mr. Johnson, the Farm Superintendent, said that the pupils were always ready and willing to work, and to put their hands to whatever they were told to do.

Professor Peckham stated that he came to this Institution with some prejudice against the system of manual labor, but he was every day gaining confidence in its expediency and usefulness.

A year or two afterwards, when the College had had further opportunity to demonstrate its usefulness, or the contrary, while the school was under discussion in the State Board of Agriculture, Governor Perham took occasion to speak as follows:

Having been one of the official visitors of the State College, it may be proper for me to say a word in regard to the appearance of the students and the progress which they have made; and I may be excused for some enthusiasm in the matter. . . . I have had the privilege of visiting that Institution three times—once last winter, last spring, and again in the fall; and I can say here, without making an extended speech, that I think President Allen and Professor Fernald (who has been in the Institution longer than President Allen) need have no fear in putting the students of that College beside students in any other institution in the State or anywhere else, who have been engaged in their studies the same length of time.

I am confident that the three hours' labor every day is of very great value. It seems to relieve them of any inclination to cut up capers, as many college boys are wont to do. President Allen will not find the trouble in his discipline that is found in other colleges. Those boys are employed; they are given something useful to do; they feel that they are learning something useful all the time, something they are going to practice, and he will not be obliged to discipline them for bad conduct.

I have had an opportunity during the past year of witnessing the exercises in a great many institutions of learning, some of them of high standing, and the students have all acquitted themselves well; but I hesitate not to say that the boys in the college at Orono, considering the time they have been there, taking into consideration their physical and mental powers and everything that goes to make up the elements of success in life, are equal, if not superior, to any class I have ever seen. I believe that every man who has heard the recitations of those boys, and witnessed their mental and physical improvement, will be ready to attest to the correctness of this statement.

The next year the autumn session of the Board was held at the villages of Foxcroft and Dover, in Piscataquis county, with a large delegation present from the Agricultural College, and in September, 1871, the regular meeting of the fall was held at Lincoln village, in this county. The aculty of the College attended, and a larger number of students than at either of the previous sessions. The class which had just entered the school was larger than any class before matriculated. It was already becoming a problem how any further increase of students was to be accommodated.

CHAPTER XII.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.*

Roman Catholic Missionaries and Churches—Other Early Religion in the Penobscot Valley—Congregationalism—Methodism—The Baptists—The Free Baptists—Universalism—The Unitarians, Swedenborgians, "Christians," and Free Adventists—The Penobscot Bible Society—The Bangor Young Men's Bible Society.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSIONARIES came with the French in their early visits to the Penobscot, and mingled with the Indians, and they became Catholics. Jesuit missionaries were with them in 1611, and for several years after. In 1614 four missionaries from France disembarked with twenty-five others, designing to found a mission at Kadesquit (Kenduskeag), now Bangor; but they decided to relinquish the Penobscot, and went to Mount Desert. About the year 1700, in the reign of Louis XIV., a French architect erected for the Indians a place of worship, in Indian Oldtown. The church was burned about the year 1757. The governor of the tribe has now in his possession a medal, with the likeness of Louis XIV.

In 1797 the tribe was visited by Right Reverend Bishop Cheverus, of Boston, and two years after the Rev. James R. Romaine, a French friar, had pastoral charge, in connection with the Passamaquoddy tribe, in Washington county. He returned to France in 1819. Rev. Stephen Crilleaux, born and educated in Paris, was his successor, and was with them for several years.

The Irish and American Catholics began to gather in considerable numbers at Bangor, in 1833, and now there are two churches in that city, one each in Orono, Oldtown, and Winn, and that on Indian Oldtown island. There are now five priests, and about 8,000 connected with the churches. The convent of the Sisters of Mercy was founded in Bangor in 1865.

OTHER EARLY RELIGION.

Public worship and religious addresses were sustained by the colonists, and chaplains were stationed generally at the forts. A reason given, in 1768, for having one at a fort on the river (Fort Pownall), was that he was needed to preach to the settlers, in the audience of the Indians, and to ensure peace with them; and also "because there was no minister of the Gospel within a circle of 100 miles diameter, now generally peopled, though but thinly." From 1774 to 1779, John Herbert, the first physician in Bangor, was an exhorter at religious meetings, and in the winter taught schools. The first minister that preached stately was the Rev. Mr. Knowles, from Cape Cod, who, about 1780-83, was with the people scattered along the banks of the river from Frankfort to Bangor.

CONGREGATIONALISM.

The Rev. Seth Noble, a Congregational minister, a native of Westfield, Massachusetts, who had done patriot service in Nova Scotia, and was compelled to flee from thence because of his sympathy with New England in the Revolutionary struggle, and was afterwards at Machias, came to Bangor in 1786, and was engaged by the people as a settled religious teacher and preacher, at £100 per year. He was installed September 10, 1786, under some ancient oaks, near the corner of Clate and Washington streets, Bangor. Rev. Daniel Little, of Wells, who had performed missionary work in Bangor and vicinity at different times, was deputed by the church in Wells, "without the great trouble and expense of convening a council," to induct him into office. He gave him the charge and the right hand of fellowship. Mr. Noble preached the sermon. He remained five years, and died in Ohio in 1807.

The first Congregational church organized was at Bangor, September 9, 1800. The Rev. James Boyd was pastor, and died two years after. The first deacons were William Boyd and Isaac Robinson.

In 1825, when the Penobscot Congregational Conference was organized at Brownville, then in Penobscot county, there were three ministers, eight churches, and 400 members. In 1879 there were fourteen ministers, fifteen churches, and 1,786 members.

The Maine Missionary Society, organized in 1807, employed missionaries, who labored in various parts of the county. Fathers Jotham Sewall and John Sawyer were among the pioneers. The former was at Bangor and Orrington in 1811, and in other parts of the county in 1828, 1834, and 1840-45; the latter in Garland and vicinity in 1811-19, and in that neighborhood chiefly 1824-30. The Theological Seminary in Bangor has provided many missionaries and ministers to the county, who have labored in churches of different denominations.

METHODISM.

In 1793, Rev. Jesse Lee, from Virginia, the Methodist apostle of England, came to Maine, and on September 9th, of that year, spent a month in missionary work along the Penobscot river, and went to Lynn, Massachusetts. In January, 1794, he came again as far as Orono, holding meetings along the route, and returned by way of the Kennebec to Portland. In 1795 Rev. Joshua Hall, of the New London Conference, Connecticut, organized societies in the county. In 1799 Rev. Timothy Merrill was on the Hampden Circuit, and preached in Bangor. In 1878 the number of local preachers was twenty; itinerant ministers, thirteen; members, 1,700; probationers, 500.

THE BAPTISTS.

The first Baptist church in the county was organized at Etna, in 1807, with thirteen members, by Rev. John Chadbourne, of Shapleigh, Maine, who was the first missionary of the denomination in the county, and labored in the new settlements of Etna and Carmel. Paul Ruggles was elected deacon, afterwards ordained as a minister, and labored in the county. The Rev. Jason Livermore, then preaching in Mount Ephraim (now Swanville and Prospect), came as an associate with Mr. Chadbourne, and they extended their labors into Hermon and Hampden. A church in Hampden was organized in 1809, with thirty-six members; Daniel Vose, deacon. The Baptist Missionary Convention have sustained missionaries in some fields, from 1804. The number of members in the churches at their organization was 250. In 1821 there were six local preachers and six travelling preachers. In 1878 there were twenty-four churches, thirteen ministers, and 1,766 members.

* By Elnathan F. Duren, Esq., of Bangor.

THE FREE BAPTISTS.

The first efforts of the Free Baptist denomination were made in Dixmont about 1809. A church was organized at Garland in 1824; Dixmont and Newburg in 1825; Bradford, 1827; Corinna, 1828; Bangor, 1835. There are now (1878) twenty-five churches, twenty ministers, and 1,070 members.

EPISCOPACY.

The first Episcopal church in the county was organized at Bangor in 1834. A church in Winn was formed in 1869; in Dexter and Exeter, 1872; in Oldtown and Milford in 1873.

UNIVERSALISM.

The Universalist denomination have a church at Hampden, organized in 1825, and one in Bangor, dating from 1838. They have societies also in Dexter, Eddington, Hermon, Kenduskeag, Orono, and Oldtown.

OTHER CHURCHES.

The Unitarian church at Bangor was formed March 25, 1818.

The new church, Swedenborgian, was organized in 1840.

The Christian denomination formed their first churches in Exeter and Newport, in 1815. In the county are sixteen churches, thirteen ministers, and 700 members.

The Second Advent denomination had its beginning in this county about 1842-43. Ministers, twelve; members, 300.

The Penobscot Bible Society was organized in 1828. The work of distribution of the Bible was continued in the county by the Bangor Young Men's Bible Society, organized in December, 1843.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.*

The Beginnings—The Maine Charity School—Established at Hampden—Fuller Organization—Removal to Bangor—The Early Professors—The Seminary Buildings—First Anniversary—Embarrassments—Changes of Plan—Dr. Pond and other New Professors—Financial Affairs—An Additional Professor—More Changes—Dr. Talcott Comes—The Seminary Saved—The Seminary Chapel—Another Professor Added—Hopes and Trials—Acknowledgments to Benefactors—The Work of the Seminary—Donors to Furnished Rooms—Professors from the First—The Trustees—Distinguished Graduates.

BEGINNINGS.

The year 1820 was, on several accounts, a remarkable year. This was the two-hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth. It was the year when Maine from being a Territory became a State. It was the year when the great Sandwich Islands Mission was sent forth, which has resulted in transforming a heathen and savage people into a civilized and Christian nation. This was the year when Colby University in this State was instituted, and when the first anniversary of the Bangor Theological Seminary was celebrated.

The founders of this seminary were led to undertake its establishment from a deep conviction of its necessity. This is evident from the following passage in one of their earliest publications: "In an almost continuous range of settlements, extending from the Connecticut to the St. Croix River, there are at least 200,000 souls either entirely or in a great measure destitute of well-instructed religious teachers. This numerous and rapidly increasing population must waste away for successive generations in all the darkness of religious ignorance and the guilt of sin, unless immediate, extraordinary, and vigorous exertions shall be made to enlighten and save them."

This scene of wide-spread moral desolation could not be viewed with indifference by such as understood the value of religious institutions. The affecting necessities of so many of their fellow-creatures became the theme of frequent conversation and prayer to benevolent individuals in the then District of Maine, and led at length to the adoption of measures calculated to afford relief.

THE MAINE CHARITY SCHOOL.

As early as 1810 an association was formed in Portland called "The Society for Promoting Theological Education." It was designed to afford aid to indigent young men in obtaining an education for the gospel ministry, with a view principally to the supply of the newly-settled parts of Maine. This was one of the earliest education societies in the United States. It was incorporated in 1812, soon after which vigorous measures were taken to carry into effect the principal object of the society.

After much thought and a somewhat extended correspondence, not only in this country but in England, it was concluded that this object could not be obtained without the establishment of a literary and theological institution. Accordingly a committee was appointed by the directors of the society, with instructions to establish as speedily as possible the proposed seminary. Through the efforts of this committee a charter was obtained from the Legislature of Massachusetts in February, 1814, designating certain individuals as "Trustees of the Maine Charity School,"—for this was then, and is now, the legal title of the Institution,—and clothing them with the most ample powers. It may be questioned whether an instrument of more liberal import or of greater value was ever given to a public institution.

By the provisions of the charter the number of trustees is limited to fifteen, who are to have perpetual succession, with power to fill vacancies in their board. They may hold property to an amount sufficient to produce a clear annual income of $15,000. They may establish a seminary for literary and religious purposes, on any principle, and to any extent which seems to them necessary in order to carry into effect the design of the founders, and are vested with all the powers and privileges possessed by trustees of the most favored literary and benevolent institutions in New England.

*By the Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., of the Seminary, from his Historical Address at the Semi-centennial Anniversary in 1870, by permission. The lucid paragraphs of the venerable Doctor stop with that headed "Acknowledgments to Benefactors." He has also no responsibility for the sub-headings of the chapter.

On the ground of this charter the trustees are competent, whenever they shall have the means, to establish not only a Theological Seminary, but an English or Classical School, a Teachers' Seminary, or even a College,—anything of the kind which can be conducted with an income of $15,000 a year.

The first meeting of the trustees was held in Montville, Waldo county, at the house of Major Samuel Moor, in May, 1814,—when Rev. Edward Payson was elected President of the Board, Rev. Eliphalet Gillet, Vice-President, Rev. Kiah Bailey, Secretary, and Samuel E. Dutton, esq., of Bangor, Treasurer.

OPENED AT HAMPDEN.

The founders of the proposed seminary might have located it in the western and more thickly settled part of Maine, but they determined, in military phrase, to march to the front, and plant it in the midst of those spiritual wastes which it was intended to build up. Accordingly, a temporary arrangement was effected between them and the trustees of Hampden Academy; and the Seminary was opened at Hampden in October, 1816. During the first year it was under the immediate instruction and government of Mr. Jehudi Ashmun, the late devoted and deeply-lamented Colonial Agent at Liberia.

FULLER ORGANIZATION.

The Seminary was originally founded on the plan of the English dissenting institutions. It was intended chiefly for those who, in consideration of their age or other circumstances, wished to enter the ministry without a collegiate education. The prescribed course of study was literary and classical, as well as theological, and was expected to occupy four years. The studies of the first two years were to be chiefly classical; those of the last two years were professional, including systematic and pastoral theology, ecclesiastical history, homiletics, etc.

In June, 1817, the Seminary was regularly organized according to this plan, and the several departments of instruction were filled. The Rev. Abijah Wines, of Newport, New Hampshire, was appointed Professor of Theology, Mr. Jehudi Ashmun Professor of Classical Literature, and Mr. Cheever Preceptor of the Preparatory School.

It does not appear that the Seminary owned any buildings or lands in Hampden. The students boarded and studied in private families, and recited in some part of the academy building. But in 1819 a lot of land containing about seven acres, favorably situated in Bangor, was given to the Seminary by the late Isaac Davenport, esq., of Milton, Massachusetts. This land—now so green and beautiful, covered with Seminary buildings and gardens, walks, and trees—was then pretty much in a state of nature, and was not, probably, of great value. It has since become of inestimable importance to the Seminary.

REMOVAL TO BANGOR.

In the autumn of 1819—the year in which this plat of ground was secured—the seminary was removed from Hampden to Bangor. There were several bids for the Seminary among the towns, particularly Hampden, Castine, Brewer, and Bucksport, but Bangor bid the highest, and this circumstance, together with the donation of land, induced the trustees to plant it here.

Bangor, though so favorably situated at the head of navigation on the Penobscot River, was then comparatively a small place, containing only about 1,200 inhabitants. There was no meeting-house in the town, and never had been. The people were blessed with an excellent minister.—the Rev. Harvey Loomis,—who preached first in a hall over a store at City Point, and then in what was afterwards called the old court-house.

THE EARLY PROFESSORS.

The same year in which the Seminary was removed to Bangor, Professors Wines and Ashmun resigned their places, and were no longer connected with the institution. After leaving the Seminary, Professor Wines labored some twelve years in connection with the Congregational church and society on Deer Island. In the last years of his life his reason became impaired, and he died in the asylum at Somerville, Massachusetts, in 1833. Professor Wines was chiefly distinguished as a theologian of the Hopkinsian stamp. He was a plain, direct, and pungent, though not eloquent preacher. He had a high sense of the sacredness of the ministerial office and of the importance of decision and fidelity in the execution of it. Though a man of plain and simple habits, he had a large heart. He detested everything mean, sordid, or covetous. He cast his bread upon the waters, hoping—whether it returned to him or not—that it might be a means of salvation to perishing men.

The career of Mr. Ashmun, after leaving the Seminary, is so well known, and his character has been so fully exhibited by his eloquent biographer, Dr. Gurley, that little need be added here. Suffice to say that, after various enterprises and vicissitudes, he embarked for Africa in June, 1822. On his arrival at Liberia, he became principal agent for the colony; in which office he continued to labor—through evil report and good report, but with an unshaken confidence in the goodness of the cause—for about six years. Worn out, at length, with toils and anxieties, and with repeated attacks of disease, Mr. Ashmun returned to this country in the summer of 1828. But he came home to die. He survived only a few weeks, and his remains lie interred at New Haven, Connecticut. A simple but beautiful monument has been erected over them by the managers of the American Colonization Society, bearing the simple name of "Ashmun." This monument will perish; but the name of Ashmun never. It is indelibly engraven on the heart of Africa.

By the resignation of Professors Wines and Ashmun, the Seminary was bereft of both its instructors. But the vacancies were soon supplied. In March, 1820, the Rev. John Smith was inaugurated Professor of Theology, and Rev. Bancroft Fowler as Professor of Classical Literature; and the Seminary went into operation in its new location, Bangor.

THE SEMINARY BUILDINGS.

The institution had received, as I have stated, a desirable plat of ground, but it had no buildings as yet, either for teachers or pupils. The professors lived each in his own hired house, and the students studied and boarded as they had done at Hampden, in private families. For a time they met for recitations and worship in the old court-house, and then a room was hired for them in a brick house on Main street belonging to Mr. Alexander Savage. It stood on the spot now occupied by Dr. J. C. White's elegant new block of stores.

On the 2d of August, 1820, was the first anniversary of the Seminary in Bangor, when six young men received diplomas and went forth into the world as ministers of Christ. Only two of them are now living. The venerable Elijah Jones, more than forty years pastor of the church in Minot and for many years a trustee of the Seminary, was one of them.

The first building erected for the Seminary in Bangor was called a chapel. It was occupied by the preparatory school, and also for recitations and worship by the theological students. It was built in 1823, and stood on the south side of Hammond street, in what is now Vice-President Hamlin's garden. It was a great convenience to the infant Seminary; but after several years it took fire and was consumed.

The next building erected was called the "Commons House," and was finished in 1827. It was intended as a boarding house for students, and also to furnish them with studies and dormitories. It continued to be so occupied for about ten years,—until the large brick edifice was erected,—when the "Commons House" was re-modelled and made into two professors' houses. It has been occupied by two of the professors and their families to the present time.

CHANGES OF PROFESSORS.

In 1825 Professor Fowler resigned his office and returned to the labors of the ministry. He was a ripe scholar, had been a tutor in two colleges, and a pastor at Windsor, Vermont, before coming to the Seminary. After leaving the Seminary he was settled and dismissed three times. He was a good writer of sermons, but his manner in the pulpit was not agreeable, and therefore, as a preacher, he was not popular. He did not pass with the public for what he was worth. He died at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, April 5, 1856, having sustained an excellent Christian character to the last.

Professor Fowler was succeeded by the Rev. George E. Adams. He had been a teacher in the Seminary for a year or more, and was elected to the professorship of sacred literature in 1827. He continued in office about two years. In December, 1829, much to the regret of the trustees and of all the friends of the institution, Professor Adams resigned his place, and entered on the duties of the pastoral office at Brunswick, where—I had almost said—he still remains; where, could the wishes of his friends prevail, he would remain to the end of his days.*

The late Dr. Smith continued in office as professor of theology till his death, which occurred in the spring of 1831. He was a sound and able divine, a clear-headed, warm-hearted, devout, and good man. He was a native of Belchertown, Massachusetts, a graduate of Dartmouth college, and a student in theology of the late Dr. Emons, of Franklin. He was greatly respected wherever known; and the trustees of the Seminary have left upon their records a merited testimonial of his worth. His end was remarkably peaceful. His only anxiety on leaving the world was for his beloved Seminary, and the last intelligible words that he was heard to utter were those of prayer on its behalf. "God bless the Seminary. Thou wilt bless it and keep it; I give it up to Thee. I can do no more for it. Thou canst do all things."

These anxieties of the dying professor were not altogether without reason. He knew the situation in which he was about to leave the Seminary. Without an instructor, he presumed, of course, that the students would soon be scattered; and when they should again be collected and the course of instructions be resumed, no one could tell. He felt, however, that to leave it in the hands of God was infinitely safe. He could trust it there, and he would trust it nowhere else.

EMBARRASMENTS.

The Seminary had now been in operation more than a dozen years, and the principal changes through which it had passed have been briefly sketched. Its greatest embarrassments all the way had been of a pecuniary character. It is painful to read the records of the trustees, and see to what straits they were often reduced. The struggle, at times, was one of life or of death. In December, 1830, the trustees voted "that unless means for the future support of the Seminary shall be obtained before the 1st of September next, it will then be expedient to suspend instruction in the theological department, until such means shall have been secured." Nevertheless, the Seminary was not suspended. The course of instruction was continued till the decease of Dr. Smith; and, up to that time, more than sixty young men had received diplomas, besides a considerable number who had left the institution before their term of study was closed. The greater part of these have finished their course. But some are still with us, are with us here to-day, occupying important stations in the church, an honor to their profession and to the Seminary, and blessings to the world. Seri in celum redeant.

CHANGES OF PLAN.

I have said already that this Seminary was instituted on the plan of the dissenting colleges in England, having a four years' course of study,—the first two chiefly classical, and the last two theological. Up to the year 1827 the Seminary had been conducted on this plan, but in that year it underwent an important change. The classical department was separated from the theological; the terms of admission to the Seminary were raised; and the course of study and the period of it were made similar to those of the older seminaries in the United States. Indigent students, who before had been supported from Seminary funds, were now received as beneficiaries of the American Education Society. Many excellent individuals, who before had stood aloof from it and doubted as to the wisdom of its operations, from this time became its decided friends.

* Dr. Adams is about to remove to Orange, New Jersey.

In this year, also, another change took place. The trustees of the Seminary invited the General Conference of our churches to send a committee year by year to visit the institution, to look into its affairs, to attend its anniversary exercises, and to make report as to its condition and prospects. The invitation was accepted, and from that time to the present a board of visitors has been regularly appointed. This arrangement we have regarded as one of great importance. It connects the Seminary with the churches, and brings it under their direct supervision. Should anything wrong be done at the Seminary, or any error or irregularity be tolerated, the case would be at once reported to the churches, where it might be corrected.

The death of Dr. Smith, in the spring of 1831, left the Seminary without an instructor, and for several months (aside from the classical school) there was no public instruction here. But in the autumn of this same year (1831) the Rev. Alvan Bond, of Sturbridge, Massachusetts, was elected Professor of Sacred Literature; and before winter he was on the ground with his family, and commenced giving instruction in that department.

NEW PROFESSORS.

In the following spring the Rev. Enoch Pond, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, was elected Professor of Theology, and entered upon his duties in June, 1832.

The prospects of these new professors, at the time, were not flattering. The Seminary was without funds, though not without debts, the library consisted of but a few hundred volumes; and the students were chiefly scattered. But the institution had a good charter, it was favorably located, and the necessity for it was deeply felt. And some things took place almost immediately to give encouragement. The late Mrs. Phebe Lord, of Kennebunkport,—a name never to be spoken but with honor,—gave a thousand dollars to increase the library; and, at its annual meeting in June, 1832, our General Conference voted to raise $30,000, in four annual instalments, to increase the Seminary funds. This money was chiefly paid, and with it our large and commodious brick edifice was erected for the convenience of students, and the current expenses of the institution were borne.

A principal anxiety of the new professors at this time was on the question of students. Under the previous administration no college graduates had been connected with the Seminary, and it was feared that they would turn from it in future. But this anxiety was soon relieved. In 1833 several college students entered; and, in the autumn of 1834, out of a class of nineteen, seven were graduates of Bowdoin College. Among the graduates who first entered were Henry Storer, Franklin Yeaton, Cyrus Hamlin, Benjamin Tappan, jr., Ebenezer G. Parsons, Samuel C. Fessenden, Albert Cole, and Charles C. Taylor. I mention the names of these brethren that I may express to them publicly, or to such of them as are still living, the obligation which the Seminary is under to them for the stand which they took on this occasion. They did it certainly under some sacrifice of feeling. They did it from a sense of duty and for the public good, and they actually did more to advance the interests of the Seminary, at that time, than though they had given us thousands of dollars. They set an example which had influence; they turned the incoming tide in our favor; and, from that time to this, the question of students has given us but little trouble.

The only circumstance which, at this period, seemed to cast a cloud over the prospects of the Seminary was the failure of Professor Bond's health; which, much to his own sorrow and that of the trustees, constrained him to resign his office. This event took place in the spring of 1835. He was afterwards settled in the ministry at Norwich, Connecticut, and has proved himself to be a most faithful and devoted pastor. He still lives to labor for Christ, though not in the active duties of the ministry.

The vacancy occasioned by Professor Bond's resignation was soon and happily filled. In June, 1835, Rev. Leonard Woods, jr., of New York, was elected Professor of Sacred Literature, and entered on the duties of his office in the autumn.

FINANCIAL.

This year also was signalized by the largest subscription to the funds of the Seminary that had ever been made. In conformity with a resolution of the General Conference of our churches, passed in June, 1835, an effort was made to raise one hundred thousand dollars, to be paid in four annual instalments, for the purpose of completing the endowment of the Seminary. This proposition was met with unexampled liberality. One gentleman in Bangor subscribed between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars; another, seven thousand; another, four thousand; several, two thousand; and many men in Bangor, Portland, and other places subscribed a thousand dollars each. Within six months after the resolution was passed, the whole sum, and more than all, was subscribed.

The friends of the Seminary supposed at that time, that its endowment was complete, and that its pecuniary embarrassments were at an end. But subsequent events soon showed the instability of human affairs, and how little dependence can be placed upon the brightest earthly prospects. This great subscription was raised in a time of speculation and of high fancied and seeming prosperity. In the pecuniary reverses which followed, and the consequent depreciation of almost all kinds of property, many individuals who had subscribed liberally and in good faith, found themselves unable to meet their engagements, or even to pay their honest debts. The subscription, therefore, was greatly impaired, and the Seminary was thrown back into necessities and straits.

Of the subscription of 1835, not much more than a third was ever realized. And what was paid came not promptly at the time specified, so that it could be calculated on and invested. It was paid irregularly, as individuals were able, and as property could be sold and converted into money. Still, the subscription was a great blessing to the Seminary. It enabled the trustees to erect and furnish buildings, to make additions to the library, and to meet the current expenses of the institution during the years of pecuniary revulsion and distress which followed the expansion of 1835. Without it, it is hard to see how the Seminary could have been kept in operation during those distressing times.

AN ADDITIONAL PROFESSOR.

Until the year 1836 there had been but two professors in the Seminary,—one of theology and one of sacred literature. In July of this year the Rev. George Shepard, of Hallowell, was elected Professor of Sacred Rhetoric. The supposed endowment on which he was appointed failed; but the Professor did not fail. He entered upon his duties the succeeding autumn, and was an inestimable blessing to the Seminary. In the same year (1836) a large and commodious boarding-house was erected, containing not only accommodations for board, but rooms for the convenience of students in case of sickness.

MORE CHANGES.

At this time a change was made in the manner of boarding students,—one which has since been copied by several other institutions. Instead of hiring a steward to take charge of the new house and board the students at a price, the whole was put into the hands of the students to manage it for themselves. They hire a matron to do their work, make their own purchases, regulate their bill of fare, and assess the expense. This plan has worked admirably from year to year. The boarders have none to complain of now but themselves.

Up to this time, almost from the first, there had been a Classical School in connection with the Seminary, where students were prepared for theological studies without a collegiate education. As it had been sustained at considerable expense to the Seminary, and as the necessity for it had comparatively ceased, it was no longer continued.

DR. TALCOTT COMES.

In August, 1839, Professor Woods was induced to resign his office, and accept the presidency of Bowdoin College. On the same day on which his resignation was accepted the Rev. Daniel Smith Talcott, of Newburyport, was chosen his successor. Professor Talcott soon entered upon the discharge of his duties, and was inaugurated at the anniversary of 1840. I hardly need say that he has continued in office—greatly to the comfort of his colleagues and the credit of the institution—to the present time.*

THE SEMINARY SAVED.

I have said that the endowment of the professorship of sacred rhetoric, made in 1835-36, failed. The subscriptions were not paid, and could not be. Owing to this cause, in part, but more to the personal celebrity of Professor Shepard, he was repeatedly assailed with invitations to remove to more imposing and lucrative positions. The most formidable of these assaults was made in the spring of 1847, when he was urged by the offer of a very large salary to become pastor of the Pilgrim Church and Society, in Brooklyn, New York. Professor Shepard had pledged himself to go, unless his professorship could be speedily and solidly endowed; and a large committee had come from Brooklyn to see that the separation was effected. Under these circumstances, it was necessary that the friends of the Seminary should bestir themselves, and so they did; and in the course of one week a sufficient amount was raised, chiefly by the liberality of friends in Bangor, to endow the professorship. I have ever regarded those subscribers, and especially the Hon. George W. Pickering, who, almost without solicitation, pledged and secured $5,000, as entitled to the credit of saving the Seminary. For if Professor Shepard had resigned at that time, the other professors would have done the same, and the Seminary, to all human appearance, had been irrecoverably ruined; but the subscription was raised, and the institution was saved. And only two years afterwards, in 1849, another subscription of $34,000 was raised, for the purpose of endowing the other two professorships. In the same year, too, legacies to the amount of $12,000 were received from the late Waldo family of Worcester. The sum of $8,000—making $20,000 in all—had been previously received from that excellent family. One of our professorships now bears, and some one of them we hope may ever bear, the honored name of Waldo.

THE SEMINARY CHAPEL.

In the summer of 1859 the Seminary Chapel was dedicated. This had long been needed, and has proved an inestimable blessing to the Seminary. It was erected, at an expense of more than $12,000, through the efforts of a society of ladies in Bangor. In reporting to the General Conference this great achievement of the ladies, the visiting committee for 1859 say: "God bless the ladies of Bangor who started this enterprise, and the ladies throughout the State, and elsewhere, who have been helping to move it on! They are entitled to all the credit of this noble undertaking. 'The Corban Society' shall be held in remembrance wherever Bangor Seminary is known. Many daughters have done virtuously, but these have excelled them all."

ANOTHER PROFESSOR ADDED.

In the autumn of 1854 Professor Pond, having discharged the duties of two professorships, viz., those of systematic theology and of ecclesiastical history, for more than twenty years, requested that he might be released from one of them, and as he earnestly desired, while he lived, to see the professorship of theology satisfactorily provided for, he proposed himself to relinquish that, and to confine his instructions in future to the department of history. His proposition was acceded to, and in the spring of 1855 the Rev. Samuel Harris, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, was elected to the chair of theology. This appointment was accepted, and at the following anniversary Professor Harris was inaugurated. At the same time Professor Pond was formally transferred to the department of history, and constituted president of the faculty.

*Professor Talcott resigned his chair in 1880, but continues to reside in Bangor.

The departments of instruction were now satisfactorily filled, and things seemed likely to move on without embarrassment. But one serious mistake had been made, and this resulted ere long in difficulty. Professor Harris had been appointed to the chair of theology, while as yet the professorship was not endowed, though it was expected that it soon would be. But this expectation was not realized, and the Seminary was running continually in debt. This course of things went on until the years of 1862 and 1863, when the amount of indebtedness became alarming, and it was evident that something effectual must be done. And something was done. A subscription was opened which, in connection with legacies and certain large donations, entirely cleared the Seminary of debt and completed the endowment of the several professorships, as the salaries then were. A legacy of $10,000 was received from the estate of the late Dr. Jacob Hayes, of Charlestown, Massachusetts, which was appropriated to the professorship of sacred literature. A legacy of $3,000 was received from the estate of the late Mr. Hiram Fogg, accompanied with a donation of $10,000 from his brother, William Fogg, esq., of New York, both of which sums were appropriated to the professorship of sacred rhetoric. The sum of $16,000 was received from Richard P. Buek, esq., of Brooklyn, New York, which was appropriated to the professorship of theology. In consequence of these bequests and donations, it was decided that these professorships should, in all future time, bear the names of those who had so liberally contributed for their endowment.

In the meantime $15,000 had been received from the late Ichabod Washburn, esq., of Worcester, to increase the fund for the assistance of indigent young men.

HOPES AND TRIALS.

The Seminary was now placed in a more favorable position than ever before. Its debts were paid; its professorships were filled and endowed; the number of students was increased; and its prospects in general were encouraging.

But subsequent events showed that trials were still before us. In the summer of 1866 Professor Harris was appointed President of Bowdoin College, and concluded, after a protracted struggle, to accept the appointment. He continued his instructions here till the spring of 1867, and then left for Brunswick. It was a sore trial to his colleagues and to the trustees to part with him; but his convictions of duty were clear, and naught remained to us but to give him our blessing and let him go.

Scarcely had we passed this trial when another and greater affliction befell us. In the spring of 1868 the honored and beloved Professor Shepard, who had for months exhibited marks of decrepitude, was suddenly removed by death. Although it had been evident to us for some time that his work was done, the shock was a severe one and many tears were shed. I have not time here to dwell upon the character of Dr. Shepard, nor is this necessary. His works remain; and he has left a memorial in the hearts of all who knew him which can never be effaced.

I have only to say further, that the vacancies occasioned by the removal of Dr. Harris and the decease of Dr. Shepard have been satisfactorily filled. In our distress we sought direction from God, and our prayer was heard. We accept the successors of the eminent men who were removed from us as a treasure from the hand of God, which we greatly appreciate, and which we hope may long remain.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS TO BENEFACTORS.

I cannot close this long, and, I fear, tedious detail, without recording our obligations to certain individuals, no longer with us, who loved the Seminary from the first, and who never ceased to pray and labor for it so long as they lived. Among these were Fathers Sewall, Sawyer, and Fisher, whose portraits adorn our chapel, and whose memory is dear to all our hearts. Then there was the Rev. Kiah Bailey, whose wife's charity-box received the first money that ever was given to Bangor Seminary. Then there was the late Rev. David Thurston and Dr. Tappan, who were always with us on occasions like the present, to counsel, to sympathize, and to bless. Among the departed laymen in this city there are some whose names must not be omitted. There was the late Judge Dutton, who was chiefly instrumental in procuring for us the grounds on which our Seminary building stands; also the late Mr. John Barker, who was a laborer for the Seminary more than fifty years ago, who was a liberal donor, and who started the great subscription of 1835. But especially would I mention the late Deacon Eliashib Adams, who was a trustee of the Seminary for almost forty years, who was its treasurer for a considerable part of this time, who never wearied in planning and laboring for its interests, and whose death was probably hastened by too great an effort on its behalf. The names of these and other benefactors must never be forgotten so long as the Seminary in Bangor has a being.

THE WORK OF THE SEMINARY.

The following statements are extracted from the Catalogue of the Seminary for 1881:

The course in exegesis includes the study of the Hebrew and Greek texts, with recitations, lectures on the Principles of Biblical Criticism and Interpretation, on Hebrew Poetry, and other subjects connected with Bible literature, exegesis of select portions of the Old Testament, of the Gospels in harmony, and of one or more of the Epistles. During the Middle and Senior years the exegesis of the Epistles is continued, and some of the more difficult portions of the Old Testament Scriptures.

The course in Systematic Theology consists mainly in lectures and daily examinations. Essays and readings are assigned to enable the student to make his own acquaintance with the great minds of the past and to express his thoughts in his own way. The aim of this course is to lead the student through a thoughtful and independent investigation of Christian truth; to put him into the first lines of a theology which can be preached.

The course in Church History is founded upon text-books (Freeman's General Sketch of History, Neander's History of the Christian Religion and Church, Fisher's History of the Reformation), with recitations and lectures. Special attention is paid to the history of the Constitution of the Church in its successive forms of development, and to the history of the doctrines of Christianity, as shaped by controversies and councils. Subjects of peculiar importance are reviewed and criticised by means of theses which are given to the class as topics for investigation and writing.

The Homiletical course combines practice with instruction, and, beginning in the junior year with study of the principles of reasoning, requires the construction of arguments and plans and the writing of essays. The drill in elocution continues through the middle year, and is designed to give thorough vocal practice, together with instruction in oratory and reading. The course in Homiletics proper, senior year, is given in lectures, and is accompanied by frequent exercises in extemporaneous speaking and in the criticism and delivery of sermons.

In the work in New Testament Greek, constant use is made of grammar and lexicon. The aim is to cultivate the habit of that critical study which is the foundation of a correct exegesis. The text-books required are a Greek Testament with the text adopted by the Bible Revision Committee, Hadley's Greek Grammar, Butman's Grammar of New Testament Greek, and Robinson's Lexicon of the Greek Testament.

This Seminary is open to Christians of every denomination. Candidates for admission must be approved by the Examining Committee of the Faculty. They will be expected to produce testimony of their church-membership and of their education at some college or university. If they have not pursued a collegiate course, they will be examined, and must exhibit literary attainments which, as preparatory to theological studies, are satisfactory to the Faculty.

Those whose age or circumstances forbid the pursuit of the complete course of study, may, at the discretion of the Faculty, be admitted to the studies of the middle year, and continue their course with the full privileges of the Seminary.

Each student is charged two dollars a year for incidental expenses. There is no other charge for tuition, room, library, or any privilege of the Seminary.

The students generally board in the Boarding Association, for which a large and commodious boarding house is provided by the Trustees, furnished and free of rent. They hire a matron, regulate their bill of fare, make their purchases, and assess the amount upon themselves. The expense varies accordingly; but, including washing, it is materially less than the price of board alone at other boarding houses in the city.

The dormitory has been thoroughly repaired and refitted. The rooms are carpeted, and furnished with beds, bedding, chairs, tables, and book-shelves. Nearly half of them have been furnished by the generosity of friends. The following is a list of the donors:—

State street Church, Portland.....	Room No. 1
Winter street Church, Bath.....	" " 2
Mrs. Samuel Pickard, Auburn.....	" " 3
Central Church, Bath.....	" " 4
Hammond Street Church, Bangor.....	" " 5
First Parish, Bangor.....	" " 6
Congregational Church, Bucksport.....	" " 7
Congregational Church, South Freeport.....	" " 9
High street Church, Auburn.....	" " 13
Central Church, Bangor.....	" " 18
Congregational Church, Gardiner.....	" " 22
First Church, Lowell, Massachusetts.....	" " 24
Congregational Church, Belfast.....	" " 26
Congregational Church, Augusta.....	" " 28
Congregational Church, Searsport.....	" " 32

Students who become beneficiaries of the American Education Society will receive such aid as its funds allow.

The Washburn fund and some other funds were given expressly to aid members of the Seminary. The income of these funds will be distributed to those students whose circumstances require it, and will probably amount to about half the expense of board.

During the vacation, students licensed to preach are usually in demand, to be employed as missionaries of the Maine Missionary Society, or as stated supplies; and other students who desire it, generally find remunerative employment as teachers or otherwise. During term time students often have opportunities to give instruction to private pupils in the city, and members of the Senior class have frequent opportunities to receive compensation for preaching.

A recent generous donation from the Central Church, in Bangor, has established a Post-graduate Scholarship of $1,000 in Bowdoin College, the income of which is appropriated to the aid of any student who, after graduating at the Seminary, desires to take a post-graduate year at the college.

The members of the Seminary usually take a license to preach at the close of the Middle year. And as it is believed to be conducive to the best professional training to combine practice with theory, they are encouraged during the Senior year to preach as opportunity offers, provided the prescribed exercises are not neglected.

The Library contains fifteen thousand volumes. There is a permanent library fund of $10,000, the income of which is devoted to the purchase of books. Fresh additions are constantly made, with special reference to the needs of theological students. The library is also supplied with the leading reviews and journals, American and foreign. It is open daily, Sundays excepted. The reading-room is furnished with the best newspapers and with other periodicals, and is open at all times.

The Rhetorical Society meets steadily for debates, addresses, and other exercises. The Society of Inquiry is in possession of a valuable cabinet.

There is a general prayer meeting, held weekly; and there are also weekly class prayer meetings. The students attend worship at the churches in the city, where they are cordially welcomed. They are thus introduced into the Christian society of the city, and take part in the prayer meetings, the Sabbath schools, and missionary and beneficent work of the churches. This not only tends to promote spiritual growth, but breaks up the monotony and seclusion of scholastic life, and imparts social culture and practical experience. The Seminary is surrounded also by a wide missionary field whose destitutions crowd up almost to the limits of the city, and the students, during their course, can scarcely avoid being engaged more or less in missionary work.

PROFESSORS.

The professors of the Seminary, from the beginning, have been as follows:

SACRED LITERATURE.
ELECTED.	RESIGNED OR DIED.
1817	*Jehudi Ashmun, A. M., 1819
1819	*Rev. Bancroft Fowler, A. M., 1825
1827	*Rev. George E. Adams, D. D., 1829
1831	Rev. Alvan Bond, D. D., 1835
1835	*Rev. Leonard Woods, jr., D. D., 1839
1839	Rev. D. S. Talcott, D. D., 1881
SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY.
1817	*Rev. Abijah Wines, A. M., 1819
1819	*Rev. John Smith, D. D., 1831
1832	Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., 1855
1835	Rev. Samuel Harris, D. D., 1867
1867	Rev. John R. Herrick, D. D., 1873
1873	Rev. William M. Barbour, D. D., 1877
1877	Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., pro tem.
SACRED RHETORIC.
1836	*Rev. George Shepard, D. D., 1868
1869	Rev. William M. Barbour, D. D., 1875
1875	Rev. John S. Sewall, D. D.
ECCELESIASTICAL HISTORY.
1855	Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., 1870
1870	Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., Professor Emeritus.
1870	Rev. Levi L. Paane, D. D.

TRUSTEES.

The following named gentlemen have been trustees of the institution:

ELECTED.	RESIGNED OR DIED.
1814	*Rev. John Sawyer, D. D., 1859
	*Rev. Kiah Bailey, 1825
	*Rev. Eliphalet Gillett, D. D., 1818
	*Rev. William Jenks, D. D., 1819
	*Rev. Mighill Blood, 1852
	*Rev. Asa Lyman, 1816
	*Rev. David Thurston, 1860
	*Rev. Harvey Loomis, 1825
	*Hon. Ammi R. Mitchell, 1824
	*Samuel E. Dutton, esq., 1826
	*Rev. Jonathan Fisher, 1845
	*Rev. Daniel Lovejoy, 1833
	*Rev. Edward Payson, D. D., 1819

*Deceased.

1816	*Rev. Thomas Williams,	1846
	*Rev. David M. Mitchell,	1825
1817	*Eliashib Adams, esq.,	1856
1818	*Thomas Adams, esq.,	1825
1819	*Rev. John W. Ellinwood, D. D.,	1832
	*Daniel Pike, esq.,	1832
1825	*Rev. Swan L. Pomroy, D. D.,	1849
	*Jacob McGaw, esq.,	1845
	*Rev. Benjamin Tappan, D. D.,	1863
	*Thomas A. Hill, esq.,	1827
1826	*George W. Brown, esq.,	1850
1827	*Rev. David M. Mitchell,	1838
1829	*Rev. Bennett Tyler, D. D.,	1834
1832	*George Starrett, esq.,	1837
1833	*John Bradley, esq.,	1835
1834	*John Barker, esq.,	1849
1835	*Rev. Joseph Vaill,	1838
	*Rev. John Maltby,	1860
1837	*George W. Pickering, esq.,	1876
1839	*Rev. Elijah Jones,	1869
1842	*William A. Crocker, esq.,	1850
1845	*John McDonald, esq.,	1855
	Adams H. Merrill, esq.,	1867
1850	Rev. Stephen Thurston, D. D.
	*Rev. George E. Adams, D. D.,	1873
	George A. Thatcher, esq.,
	Joseph S. Wheelwright, esq.
1852	*Samuel Pickard, esq.,	1872
	*Henry Darling, esq.,	1874
1856	*William H. Mills, esq.,	1867
	*Rev. George B. Little,	1860
	Rev. Wooster Parker.
1859	*George Downes, esq.,	1871
1860	Rev. J. W. Chickering, D. D.,	1866
1864	*Rev. Richard Woodhull,	1873
1866	Rev. Alfred E. Ives.
	Rev. Lyman S. Rowland,	1867
1867	Richard P. Buck, esq.
	Samuel D. Thurston, esq.
1868	Rev. Benjamin Tappan.
1869	*Simon Page, esq.,	1878
	Rev. Stephen H. Hayes.
1872	Rev. S. P. Fay.
1874	Rev. John O. Fiske, D. D.
	Isaac M. Bragg, esq.
1876	Hon. Nelson Dingley, jr.
1877	John L. Crosby, esq.
1879	William E. Gould, esq.

DISTINGUISHED GRADUATES.

Among the professors and graduates of the Seminary have been some of the most eminent divines in the American pulpit and missionaries from the American church to foreign lands. The professors in service here from time to time have already been named. Among the alumni are the following:

In the class of 1824, Rev. Stephen Thurston, D. D., of Searsport.

1837. Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., Missionary to Turkey, and President of Robert College, Constantinople; Rev. Benjamin Tappan, D. D., of Norridgewock.

1839. Rev. Thomas F. Curtis,* D. D., Professor of Theology, Lewisburg University, South Carolina; Revs. Daniel Dole,* and John D. Paris, missionaries to the Sandwich Islands.

1840. Rev. Uriah Balkam,* D. D., Professor of Theology, Bates College, Lewiston; Rev. Joseph Blake, D. D., Gilmanton, New Hampshire; Rev. Elias Bond, missionary to the Sandwich Islands; Rev. William W. Rand, editor for the American Tract Society, New York.

1841. Rev. Robert Wyman,* missionary to Ceylon.

1842. Rev. John C. Fiske, D. D., of Bath.

1849. Rev. George W. Dunmore,* missionary to Turkey, and Rev. Benjamin G. Snow,* missionary to Micronesia.

1850. Rev. Edwin B. Webb, D. D., of Boston, Massachusetts.

1852. Rev. Edwin A. Breck, city missionary in Fall River, Massachusetts; Rev. Stephen R. Dennen, D. D., New Haven, Connecticut; Rev. Thomas H. Rich, professor in Bates College; Rev. Curby H. Wheeler, missionary to Turkey.

1853. Rev. Horatio G. Butterfield, D. D., late President of Olivet College, Michigan.

1854. Rev. Franklin B. Doe, Superintendent of the American Home Missionary Society; Rev. Jotham Bradbury Sewall, Head-master Thayer Academy, South Braintree, Massachusetts.

1855. General Joshua L. Chamberlain, LL. D., late Governor of Maine, now President of Bowdoin College.

1857. Rev. Milan P. Hitchcock, missionary to Turkey.

1858. Rev. Jonathan E. Adams, Secretary of Maine Missionary Society; Rev. Edward Hawes, D. D., New Haven, Connecticut; Rev. John S. Sewall, D. D., Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary; Rev. Edward P. Tenney, President of Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

1859. Rev. Edwin P. Parker, D. D., Hartford, Connecticut.

1860. Professor Samuel D. Bowker, Topeka, Kansas; Professor John W. Chickering, National Deaf-mute College, Washington, District of Columbia.

1862. Rev. Americus Fuller, missionary to Turkey.

1863. Rev. Joseph P. Green, missionary to the Sandwich Islands; Rev. Cyrus Stone, D. D., Bangor.

1868. Revs. Royal M. Cole and John E. Pierce, missionaries to Turkey.

1869. Professor Henry L. Chapman, Professor in Bowdoin College.

1871. Rev. R. Henry Davis, missionary to Japan; Rev. Joseph E. Walker, missionary to China.

Many who were students at the Seminary, but did not remain to graduate, have also risen to distinction in various walks of professional life. Among them are the Rev. Ephraim W. Clark,* missionary to the Sandwich Islands; Rev. Augustus Walker, missionary to Turkey; Rev. Orson P. Allen, missionary to Turkey; Rev. Henry Blodget, D. D., missionary to China; Rev. Charles W. Park, missionary to India; Rev. John Oliver Means, D. D., F. R. G. S., Recording Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions; the Hon. Owen Lovejoy* formerly Member of Congress from the Princeton district, Illinois; John H. C. Coffin, Professor of Mathematics in the Naval Observatory at Washington; Rev. Henry B. Smith,* D. D., Professor in Union Theological Seminary, New York city; Charles E. Lord, LL. D., Professor in the Talmage Institute, Brooklyn, New York;

* Deceased.

* Deceased.

Theophilus C. Abbott, LL. D., President of the State Agricultural College, at Lansing, Michigan; Professor William J. Maltby, of Bowdoin College; and General Charles H. Howard, of Chicago.

The whole number of graduates, to and including the year 1880, was 502; of students not graduated, 160; total, 662. To the former aggregate should be added the 10 graduates of 1881. Of the students and graduates to 1880, 212 were known to be dead; 450 were supposed to be living. The Seminary has had a noble past; it will have a yet nobler future.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE PRESS IN PENOBSCOT COUNTY.*

The Bangor Weekly Register—Bangor Register—The Penobscot Gazette—The Eastern Republican—The Clarion—The Penobscot Journal—The Bangor Courier—The Daily Whig and Courier—The Penobscot Freeman—The Daily Commercial Advertiser—The People's Press—The Mechanic and Farmer—The Eastern Magazine, afterwards The Maine Monthly Magazine—The Bangorean—The Bangor Journal—The Bangor Democrat—The Bangor Daily Union—The Bangor Gazette—The Platform—The Expositor—The Bangor Post—The Bangor Daily Mercury—The Daily Journal—The Jeffersonian—The Jefferson Daily Evening News—The Daily Evening Times—The Spirit Guardian—The Daily Bee—Burr's Fifty-cent Monthly—The Daily Commercial—The Dexter Gazette—The Old-town Index.

The first issue of a newspaper in Bangor was on November 25, 1815. It was styled the BANGOR WEEKLY REGISTER.

The Register was published by Peter Eeds. It was not partisan in politics. It had no particular editor, consequently it had no soul. Newspaper publishers could not afford to pay for newspaper souls in that day; it was as much as they could do to keep the body alive, let alone "keeping soul and body together." The town of Bangor then contained about 1,000 inhabitants, and it is not to be wondered at if the Register was not any better than other journals of its day. It was a medium, however, through which writers could communicate with the public, and matters of State and National moment were discussed in its columns. A topic which occupied a large space in them, through many numbers, was the separation of Maine from Massachusetts. The weight of the argument, and the vote of Bangor, was in favor of the separation. Mr. Eeds continued his connection with the Register until December 25, 1817, when he disposed of it to James Burton, jr., who changed the name of the paper to

BANGOR REGISTER.

Mr. Burton continued to publish it alone until January 4, 1826, when he associated with himself John S. Carter in its publication. That was the day when lotteries were favored in Maine; and by uniting the sale of lottery tickets with the printing business, these gentlemen kept the Register at work. The paper advocated the National Republican cause, and the election of John Quincy Adams to the Presidency of the United States. It was discontinued August 2, 1831, and was succeeded by the Penobscot Journal.

Among the principal contributors to the Register from time to time during its existence, were Samuel E. Dutton, Jacob McGaw, William D. Williamson, Jedediah Herrick, John Godfrey, Martin Kingsley, Enoch Brown, John Bennoch, Allen Gilman, Edward Kent, Joseph Whipple (who commenced his history of Acadia in the Register), Samuel Call, Rev. Harvey Loomis, Henry Call, Thomas A. Hill, and many other prominent men of Bangor and the neighborhood. Mr. Samuel Call was understood to be the editor of the Register, at times. He was a cynical gentleman of considerable sharpness of intellect, and a caucus speaker of some ability. Mr. Kent, too, had the reputation of being its editor in its later years; but this was denied by the Register, although he wrote many able articles for it.

From some cause there was dissatisfaction with the Register among a portion of the citizens of Bangor, and they raised a fund for the establishment of another journal. This was commenced in the year 1824, under the charge of Ezra S. Brewster as publisher, and was styled

PENOBSCOT GAZETTE.

It was a weekly paper, edited by Daniel Pike, a prominent gentleman among the Orthodox Congregationalists. Mr. Pike was a grand man, a religious man, a sensible man. The Register styled him a "demure" editor. The Gazette was respectably conducted, but was a great annoyance to the Register. In a notice by the Register of several new journals, on August 5, 1824, is the following reference to the Gazette: "But as this paper is our rival, and a competitor, we have too much feeling and too great an interest to pass it over lightly at the end of a paragraph; and as we are just now deficient in time and space, we must defer a further notice of it to a future opportunity." The opportunity, however, did not occur until the 14th of February, 1827, (which was clearly a joyous day for the publisher), when the Register had the satisfaction of announcing the demise of the Gazette "of an atrophy," and gave it this parting salute: "She was a weakly child, of about two years old, of a very good disposition, being much attached to schools, conferences, missionary societies, etc. But though well disposed, she had many errors, and sometimes spoke so thick as to be unintelligible. Candor, however, induces me to say, that her faults were more from carelessness and from want of capacity than from any evil intention." The Gazette was succeeded by the

* By Hon. John E. Godfrey, of Bangor. From the History of the Press of Maine, by the late ——— Griffin, esq., by permission of his legal representatives. Re-printed with additions to date.

EASTERN REPUBLICAN.

This paper was edited by Nathaniel Haynes, a gentleman of culture and literary taste. The Register styled him "Attorney of Law, late of Orono." He possessed a different temper from that of the editor of the Gazette, and stirred up the bile of Mr. James Burton, jr., of the Register, wonderfully, who took delight in calling it the "Genuine." After a few issues Mr. Burton's delight assumed a dismal cast, for he felt constrained to "move on the works" of his adversary in this style: "False charges, malicious innuendoes, misrepresentations, and circumstances with which we have not the slightest connection, have been brought in requisition against us; in no instance where his evil genius could conceive he might injure our feelings or reputation has he neglected the attempt." The Republican was alive at the time of the demise of the Register, which journal in its valedictory gave its editor the following kick: "Perchance, too, we have at times felt more pity than indignation at the puny and spiteful and exceedingly little spirits of the young man, and have made many apologies for him similar to his own for his 'mistake' in advocating duelling—that he is, constitutionally, altogether a mistake, and laboring under the influence of that malady that never permits him to be on the right side, or to feel at all amiable towards his species. In sober truth, we have felt more pity than anger, and more contempt than either."

Mr. Haynes continued in charge of the Republican as long as his health would permit. On his resigning his position, his brother, Isaac C. Haynes, who had been in the office with him, succeeded him, and continued to control the columns of the Republican until December, 1837, when he sold the establishment to General Samuel Veazie and others.

The Republican was a vigorous supporter of Andrew Jackson for the Presidency of the United States, and sustained the Democratic party in all its measures, until its sale to Veazie & Co., when it was conducted in the interest of the "Conservatives," a faction of the Democratic party who were opposed to President Jackson's measures in relation to the United States Bank. It was understood to be under the editorial control of John Hodgdon until its final suspension in November, 1838, when its subscription list was transferred to the Frankfort Intelligencer. Mr. Hodgdon returned to his allegiance to the Democratic party, and afterward removed to Dubuque, Iowa, where he now resides.

THE CLARION.

This was a small quarto literary paper, established May 3, 1828, by Gilman Merrill, and published from the office of the Bangor Register. It was at first edited by Charles Gilman, son of Hon. Allen Gilman, first mayor of Bangor. After a time the Clarion was enlarged from a sheet of four pages to one of eight pages, and was edited by B. B. Thatcher, the poet, conjointly with Mr. Gilman. These editors were liberally educated, and lawyers. The Clarion was very creditably edited by them. They were both young men when they left the paper. Mr. Gilman was afterward law-reporter in Quincy, Illinois, where he died. Mr. Thatcher obtained distinction as an author in Massachusetts, where he died.

The Bangor Register was succeeded by the PENOBSCOT JOURNAL.

This paper was edited by the late lamented Phineas Barnes, esq., who had a short time previous to its establishment graduated from college. It was, as may be supposed, ably conducted. It advocated the cause of the National Republican party from August, 1831, for about two years.

In 1833 the Whig party was organized, and on September 22, 1833, the

BANGOR COURIER

was established as an exponent of its principles, by William E. P. Rogers. As a partisan paper it was the lineal descendant of the Penobscot Journal. It came under the editorial supervision of Samuel Upton—a former unsuccessful merchant in Castine—and his son Horace Upton. It was edited with considerable vigor and ability. On July 1, 1834, Mr. Rogers established in connection with the Courier a daily paper, styled the Bangor Daily Whig. On December 20, 1834, the name was changed to

BANGOR DAILY WHIG AND COURIER.

This name it was borne until now, and bids fair to bear for a long time to come. It continued under the same proprietor and editor until September 21, 1835, at which time the junior editor retired, because of failing eye-sight, and Mr. Rogers disposed of the establishment to Gamalid Marchant and Jacob A. Smith. Samuel Upton continued to edit the paper for a time, but at length retired, leaving the editorial labor in the hands of Mr. Marchant, who managed it creditably until his health failed. His lungs being affected, in the fall of 1837 he made a voyage to the West Indies for relief, but on his return, in May, 1838, he concluded to dispose of his interest in the paper, and on June 8 sold it to John Edwards of Portland. The paper was carried on by Edwards & Smith until August 2, 1841, when Mr. Edwards transferred his interest to John S. Sayward, then late of the Mechanic and Farmer. The paper was in the hands of Smith & Sayward until May, 1854,—nearly thirteen years. Mr. Sayward had especial charge of the editorial department, and Mr. Smith of the printing. The paper was ably and successfully managed by these gentlemen. On the 1st day of May, 1854, they sold the establishment to William H. Wheeler and John H. Lynde. Mr. Wheeler had recently been connected with the editorial department of the Kennebec Journal. In introducing these gentlemen, Mr. Sayward said of Mr. Wheeler, that through him the political, social, intellectual and moral welfare of the people would be promoted, and of Mr. Lynde, that he possessed energy, skill, and business habits. The result has shown that Mr. Sayward was not in error. Mr. Wheeler's management of the editorial department of the paper confirmed his opinion of him; and that Mr. Lynde has conducted the financial affairs of the establishment with skill, energy, and success there can be no question.

E. A. Boulette

Mr. Wheeler continued his connection with the paper until November, 1868, when he disposed of his interest to Mr. Lynde, and removed to Boston, where he died, March 9, 1871. He was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, February 13, 1817, but the largest part of his life was spent in Augusta. He served a long and faithful apprenticeship as a printer in the office of the Kennebec Journal; continued his connection with the office for many years as journeyman, and became one of the proprietors in 1850, when Luther Severance, whom he succeeded as editor, retired from the paper to accept the mission to the Sandwich Islands. In June, 1853, Mr. Wheeler sold his interest in the property to his partner, William H. Simpson, but remained as editor until 1854, when he went into business in Bangor as partner of John H. Lynde, in the publication of the Daily Whig and Courier. Of this paper he was editor and joint proprietor from 1854 until the autumn of 1868, when he sold his interest to Mr. Lynde, and removed to Boston, where until recently he was employed as one of the editors of the New England Farmer. He left a wife and four children—two sons and two daughters.

The Boston Journal speaks of Mr. Wheeler's character as a journalist as follows: He displayed marked ability as a political writer, and gave promise of attaining to the highest rank in his profession—a promise ill health alone prevented the complete fulfilment. However, he held for a long time the strongest pen in the State of his nativity, and has left a record in journalism of which his family and many friends have a right to feel proud. His views with regard to the duties and obligations of journalism were pure and lofty, and were thoroughly carried out in the newspapers over which he exercised control. Thoroughly conscientious, yet unobtrusive, gentle and amiable at all times, upright in his walk and catholic in thought, he had many friends who will hear of his demise with deep regret. He was modest and retiring to a fault, otherwise he might have held high official position. Devoted to his profession, he sought no honors outside of it. Mr. Lynde has since carried on the establishment in his own name. The paper has been under the editorial management of, first, Joseph W. Bartlett, (principal), and J. Sweet Rowe, (local) editors, and now of Captain C. A. Bontelle, (principal) and Edwin A. Perry and Alfred S. Meigs (assistant local) editors.

The Whig and Courier was an earnest supporter of the Whig party during its existence, and has been an unflinching advocate of the principles of the Republican party since the Whig party was dissolved. It now stands among the ablest papers in the State; its business has steadily increased from the commencement, and it may well be called a success. When Messrs. Smith & Sayward left it, Mr. Sayward went into the Kennebec Journal, and has since left that paper with a competency, and is enjoying his otium cum dignitate upon his farm in Boxford, Massachusetts. Mr. Smith is enjoying his in an elegant residence upon Thomas's Hill, in Bangor.

When the Anti-Masonic party deemed itself of sufficient importance to organize politically, its leaders thought it expedient to establish an organ in Bangor; and Anson Herrick removed thither from Hallowell, where he had been associated with Richard D. Rice (afterward Judge Rice of the Supreme Judicial Court), in printing a paper, for the purpose. On the 7th day of August, 1834, he published the first number of the PENOBSCOT FREEMAN.

This paper was under the editorial charge of Asa Walker, a polished and vigorous writer. We believe it survived its party, but was not long-lived. Mr. Herrick's enterprising disposition prompted him to greater things than the publishing of a weekly Anti-Masonic journal, and in August, 1835, he commenced the publication of a small daily paper, styled the DAILY COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER.

This was a lively, non-partisan journal, and Mr. Herrick made it quite taking for several months, until, in consequence of an unfortuate non-financial operation, he suddenly (in May, 1836), came to the conclusion that New York ideas would be more favorable to his success than those of Bangor, and removed to that city, where he established the Sunday Atlas. He was right in his conclusion. He was made an alderman, and a Member of Congress (as his father, Ebenezer Herrick, had been before him), in New York, and when he died a few years since, he left a fortune (we believe), and the Atlas in the full tide of prosperity. But notwithstanding Mr. Herrick left Bangor, the Advertiser went on. It fell into the editorial hands of John W. Frost, a young lawyer, who manipulated its enunciation with much bravery until December, 1836, when it was absorbed by the PEOPLES' PRESS.

This was a daily and weekly Democratic paper of a peculiar stamp, established by Thomas Bartlett, jr., March 12, 1836. The paper was edited with some smartness for something more than two years. We believe it was suspended in November, 1838.

On February 6, 1835, an association of gentlemen having at heart the welfare of the artisans and agriculturists, established a weekly journal, under the style of the MECHANIC AND FARMER.

This association was composed of John Brown & Co. They employed John S. Sayward as its editor. In his introductory, the editor announced it to be his intention "to assist and cheer mankind in the various duties of the workshop, the field and the domestic circle; to urge forward correct feelings and action among the practical working men of the country." The Mechanic and Farmer was an interesting and useful journal, and was in existence four years. Its last number was published February 21, 1839. Its publishers were successively, Cobb & Merrill, Charles Cobb, Benjamin A. Burr, and William E. P. Rogers. In June, 1835, John S. Carter commenced a monthly publication, the EASTERN MAGAZINE.

This was edited by Mrs. M. P. Carter (wife of the publisher), who was a poet, and a writer of much merit. She continued in the editorial chair until failing health compelled her to leave it, in December, 1835, when she was succeeded by Charles Gilman. Mr. Gilman continued in it during the remainder of the year, after which he edited it as the MAINE MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

This periodical was published by John S. Carter. Both these publications were handsomely printed, and obtained considerable reputation for literary merit. The patronage extended to them was not sufficient to keep them in existence.

In January, 1836, Mr. Carter established a pleasant weekly,

THE BANGOREAN.

This was edited by Mr. Gilman, also. It was handsomely printed, and edited with ability. It was not, however, a political paper, and there being no powerful company behind to sustain it, its fortunes were united with those of the Mechanic and Farmer in October, 1836.

In 1837, Rev. Thomas Curtis, a Baptist clergyman of much learning and ability, came to Bangor from England, and conceived the project of putting before the public a literary and religious paper worthy of the support of an intelligent community. It was understood that Professor Leonard Woods (afterwards President Woods of Bowdoin College) was to assist in the editorship. A respectable subscription was raised, and the result was the BANGOR JOURNAL.

The first number was issued June 1, 1837. The paper was continued just one year. It was printed by Samuel S. Smith. It was edited by Mr. Curtis and his son. It was a handsome paper in quarto form, and contained eight pages of reading matter. Although the articles were well written, yet they were not to the popular taste, and the subscriptions were not renewed.

As the Democrats were a live party in Penobscot, and professed to have some political light, they did not choose to have that light hid under a bushel long at a time; therefore, when the Eastern Republican fell into what they conceived to be conservative darkness, many of them "pooled" in $10 apiece, and on the 15th day of February, 1836, started on its long and eventful career, the

BANGOR DEMOCRAT.

William R. Smith, and, we believe, for a time, William T. Johnson, were its publishers. It at length came under the editorial charge of Isaac C. Haynes, formerly of the Republican, who was its editor for many years. Although strongly partisan, yet Mr. Haynes's editorials were usually dignified, quite free of personalities, and perhaps as temperate and little objectionable as partisan editorials could well be. On November 22, 1838, the publication of the Democrat passed into the hands of John Pray and William Thompson. Mr. Thompson at length became the sole publisher, and so continued during Mr. Haynes's connection with it, until August 3, 1857.

Marcellus Emery, a graduate of Bowdoin College, a lawyer, and a gentleman of ability, succeeded Mr.

Haynes as editor of the Democrat. He, for a time, published in connection with the Democrat a daily paper, the

BANGOR DAILY UNION.

This paper took strong ground against the Republican party, President Lincoln, and the war for the suppression of the Rebellion; and it was thought by the enemies of the Rebellion that the editorials were rank with treason, and almost every issue provoked denunciation and threats against the editor. Hon. Isaiah Stetson was then mayor, and so open and violent were these threats at last that his attention was called to the excitement, and he was very anxious to prevent an outbreak. But no vigilance could provide against the cool determination of a community that felt itself outraged by what it conceived to be attacks upon the principles which they had been educated to believe sacred, and stabs at the heart of their country. On the 12th of August, 1861, while Mr. Emery and his assistants were at their dinner, the mob quietly entered his office and shied his presses, paper, types, cases, and apparatus of all sorts, from the fourth story windows into the street, and afterwards piled them up in the market-place and burned them; and, when he appeared to remonstrate against this unexpected disposition of his property, the indignation against him was so great that it was with difficulty he was protected from violence.

But Mr. Emery was not to be suppressed. After the lapse of nearly a year and a half, when the public irritation had to some extent subsided, he made an appeal to his Democratic friends in the State, and was enabled to resuscitate the Democrat in January, 1863. This paper is still in existence, under his charge, and is the Democratic organ of Penobscot county.

After the war was closed, Mr. Emery, counting either upon the imperfect memory or forgiving disposition of the people, sought to recover the value of his destroyed property by a suit, in Waldo county, against certain individuals for trespass. These individuals, however, determined that a jury of Waldo county should render no verdict without a full understanding of Mr. Emery and of the disloyal utterances of his journal, and of the great injury they were doing to the cause of the country at the time of the suppression. And, in a protracted trial, they produced sufficient testimony to the jury (a portion of whom were Democrats), that they returned a verdict that Mr. Emery's paper was a "public nuisance"—but giving some damages against two of the defendants, Tabor and Hopkins, who had made themselves conspicuous in the mob, though, unfortunately for Mr. Emery, they were poor men and not able to respond, and were quite indifferent in regard to the result of the suit. They had both been to the war and done something for their country, and as Mr. Emery had the privilege of living in it without contributing anything voluntarily for its salvation, they were quite willing his involuntary contribution should stand. The other defendants in the suit were declared not guilty; but a new trial was granted, which has not yet been had.

It is but justice to Mr. Emery to say, that on the night of the arrival of the news of Lee's surrender, after being informed of it, and prompted by some enthusiastic war people, he left his bed in haste, and taking his stand upon the balcony of his hotel, proclaimed that he was a friend of the Union, and waved the stars and stripes in a manner indicating, to the spectators in the streets, that he loved the flag.

The Democrat has now the support or countenance of such prominent Democrats as Major-General James H. Butler, chairman of the State Democratic Committee, ex-Surveyor-General Gorham L. Boynton, Abraham Sanborn, William H. McCrillis, James F. Rawson, Amos M. Roberts, Hastings Strickland, Isaac W. Patten, Joseph Chase, James Tobin, and Abner Knowles, esqrs.; General Charles W. Roberts, Drs. George W. Ladd and C. A. Jordan ("Faust"), Hon. George P. Sewall, Benjamin Swett, Joshua W. Carr, William T. Hilliard, John Varney, and Simpson Rollins, esqrs.

In the year 1842, the anti-slavery men of Bangor, having the year before organized a branch of the party known as the Liberty party, felt the necessity of an organ, and on April 30, 1842, sent forth the first number of the

BANGOR GAZETTE.

This was a weekly paper; its publisher, John Burrill; editor, John E. Godfrey. It was continued for a year as a weekly; after this, its publisher thinking the encouragement sufficient to warrant it, issued a daily sheet. The design of the proprietors was to put before the people facts in regard to American slavery, and to impress upon them the idea that, as that was a political institution, it was by political appliances that it must be abolished; that, constituted as they were, it was impossible for either the Whig or Democratic party to take action against it and maintain its integrity; therefore, that the only practicable way of operating against the institution, politically, was by voting squarely against it. The effect of the argument was soon felt, and both the great parties were driven to concede, by resolves and editorial utterances, that political action was necessary, but their organs insisted that the action must be through the two great parties. As the people preferred to remain with their old parties so long as there was the least hope of accomplishing anything through them, accessions to the Liberty party were gradual. In a vote of the city, the largest ever obtained by the Liberty party was between 300 and 400, in an entire vote of the citizens of between 2,000 and 3,000. But the anti-slavery sentiment was strengthened throughout the community to a very much greater extent than the vote of the Liberty party indicated. That vote, however, and the agitation it occasioned, and the information promulgated by its journals, accomplished the end sought for much earlier than its friends expected. The Gazette performed its share of the labor. It was continued several years. In about two years after its establishment, Mr. Burrill disposed of his interest, and was succeeded by George W. Light as publisher. Mr. Light was succeeded by Seward P. Moore. Mr. Godfrey, after a time, relinquished the editorial chair, and was succeeded by Asa Walker. When the Free-Soil party came into existence, in which the Liberty party was merged, Mr. Walker changed the name of the Gazette to under which name it was published, by Francis Shepherd & Son, during the Free-Soil campaign, in which Mr. Van Buren was candidate of that party for the Presidency.

THE PLATFORM,

The prominent supporters of the Gazette during its existence were Adams H. Merrill, Charles A. Stackpole, Jonas P. Veazie, George A. Thatcher, James Allen, Asa Davis, Nathan P. Wiggin, Albert G. Wakefield, Llewellyn J. Morse, Joseph C. White, Albert Titcomb, Elijah Low, Charles Plummer, Joel Hills, Joseph E. Littlefield, John S. Kimball, Timothy Crosby, John S. Johnston, Theodore S. Brown, Henry B. Farnham, Henry Gale, Charles Godfrey, Alexander Drummond, Joseph Brown, and others.

During Mr. Godfrey's connection with the Gazette, he collected the principal anti-slavery articles of that paper, and Mr. Burrill published them in a monthly journal called

THE EXPOSITOR.

This paper was in a quarto form, was furnished at a low price, and had quite an extensive circulation. The articles were temperate, judicious, and free from bitterness, and produced a good effect.

The history of the Free-Soil party is not forgotten. It was the offspring of the Liberty party, as the Republican party was the offspring of the Free-Soil party, before which the once glorious Whig party vanished like chaff before the wind, and the great Democratic party fell, prone to struggle for long years against a destiny which, in the days of Andrew Jackson, no one could have dreamed awaited it, to wit—annihilation.

BANGOR POST.

This was a racy paper, established some time before the year 1850, by Thomas Bartlett, formerly of the Peoples' Press, to amuse the community and support himself. It was a jolly, readable paper, and "took" while it was taken; but, unfortunately, for want of material aid, it was not taken long.

Mr. Bartlett had a brother, a printer by trade, a witty and enterprising person, a victim of the cacoethes scribendi, who started a paper in the year 1844, to amuse, edify, and provoke the community. It was not particular what it said or whom it placed blushing before the public gaze, provided its treasury derived benefit from it. It bore the name of

BANGOR DAILY MERCURY.

It was the mouthpiece of all the wags, all the croakers, all the grumblers, all the envious, and all the jolly and dissatisfied persons who chose to send it their contributions. It was much dreaded by timid persons, but sometimes it stirred up the risibilities of the people wonderfully. It started the Antiquarian burlesque, which kept the community in a state of merry fermentation for weeks. Those who recollect the excursion of the Mercury's antiquarians down the Penobscot river, their marvellous adventures with Aboljacknegus, Porkunsis, and Baskahegan giant—whiskey—will not recall them without being inclined to renew their cachinnation of those merry times.

But it was at last with the Mercury as it is with all similar guerilla journals; after the people had been pretty generally lampooned, they lost their relish for that kind of amusement, and began to withhold their patronage. The consequence of this was that Mr. Bartlett relinquished the editorship, saying, in his valedictory, that he had put nothing into the concern, and he left its capital unimpaired. In 1850 the establishment passed into the hands of several Whig gentlemen, who greatly enlarged it, and placed it under the charge of Samuel P. Dinsmore and Charles P. Roberts, two young lawyers of more than ordinary editorial ability. It was conducted, in connection with a weekly issue, in the interests of the Whig party, until the year 1854, when it stopped. The establishment went into the hands of W. E. Hilton & Co., and was converted into a straight Whig paper, and called

BANGOR DAILY JOURNAL.

Mr. Roberts was sole editor of this paper for a time. At length Daniel Sanborn became associated with him, and continued associate editor until some time before its discontinuance, in August, 1857. These editors used very sharp-nibbed pens, and set the community in an effervescence about three prominent Maine Law advocates, whom they denominated "Dow, Peck, and Weaver," that did not subside until the "Co." was smashed, and Weaver, at least, in regard to his temperance pretensions, put hors du combat. After the discontinuance of the Journal, Adam Treat and others purchased some part of the establishment and connected it with the Democrat in the form of the Bangor Daily Union, heretofore noticed. Charles P. Roberts was associated in the editorship during the first months of its existence; then, as his and Mr. Emery's views did not accord, he gave up his connection with it altogether.

After the Free-Soil campaign, the anti-slavery element became so strong in the Democratic party that it was deemed advisable by certain gentlemen of the party to establish in Bangor a journal that would advocate the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy; accordingly, in March, 1849, Joseph Bartlett and Benjamin A. Burr established a weekly paper bearing the title of

THE JEFFERSONIAN.

Mr. Bartlett had special charge of the editorial department, and Mr. Burr of the printing. In his salutatory, Mr. Bartlett announced that the Jeffersonian would "be the advocate of Democratic principles, and would support the Democratic party as the exponent of these principles." During his whole editorial career Mr. Bartlett undeviatingly pursued the course he had in the outset marked out for himself. He was influenced by neither threats promises, nor bribes, and he was subjected to such of these, at times, as would have influenced men of less firmness. But they only served to make him more earnest, if possible, in the expression of the views he had adopted.

It is needless to say that after the Republican party was organized, the Jeffersonian recognized its principles as those of Jeffersonian Democracy, and ever after was their firm and consistent advocate. It supported General Fremont, Abraham Lincoln, and General Grant for the Presidency, and, during twenty long years, Mr. Bartlett gave all the influence of his ready pen in favor of the right. Oftentimes in advance of his contemporaries he expressed opinions, afterwards adopted, with a positiveness not always agreeable, though, we apprehend, no one ever doubted his sincerity. At length, however, he had to succumb to a mightier than any political foe. Consumption took him in its relentless grasp, and in the year 1870 he laid down his editorial pen never to resume it. In a few months Mr. Burr transferred the subscription list of the Jeffersonian to Mr. Lynde, of the Whig and Courier.

While publishing the Jeffersonian in the second year of the Rebellion, Messrs. Bartlett & Burr commenced the publication of a daily paper, in connection with the weekly Jeffersonian, called

JEFFERSONIAN DAILY EVENING NEWS.

The first number was issued June 28, 1862. Before much progress was made with it, the publishers found themselves disappointed in regard to their office arrangements, and concluded not to proceed with the enterprise after August 2, 1862.

Mr. William Thompson, who had been the publisher of the Democrat, having encouragement that a daily morning journal would be supported in Bangor, on the 19th of June, 1858, established the

BANGOR DAILY EVENING TIMES.

This was a paper, liberal and independent in politics, except during the war, of the prosecution of which to a successful termination it was an ardent advocate. As it was established by its publisher for his own emolument, it was fortunate for him that his inclination prompted him to make it a war paper, for its patronage during that period was very extensive, it being always in possession of the war news, for which everybody was eager, up to the hour of its publication. It was at first under the editorial charge of Charles P. Roberts; afterwards of A. C. Brock, who was succeeded by William E. Stevens. It was a sprightly and agreeable journal, and was well sustained. Mr. Thompson, having become wearied with the labor of newspaper publication—not because of want of support—suspended the publication of the Times on September 10, 1867, and limited his business to job printing, simply, until his death in 1871.

At a period when Spiritualism was producing considerable excitement, George W. Brown established in Bangor a journal with the title of

THE SPIRIT GUARDIAN.

This was not a long-lived paper, and we are not aware that it exercised any influence for good or evil.

S. F. Whitmore published before 1850 a small daily paper, called the DAILY BEE.

It was an adventure of Mr. Whitmore and several journeyman printers,—was intended to be conducted to take the popular breeze, but it was short-lived.

The last journal, but one, established in Bangor up to the present time, of which we have any knowledge, is

BURR'S FIFTY-CENT MONTHLY.

This is an eight-page quarto paper published monthly by Benjamin A. Burr. It is a tastefully printed sheet, and is full of unexceptionable and interesting miscellaneous reading for the family. The first number was issued in April, 1870, and we believe the patronage it receives will justify the publisher in keeping it in existence during his pleasure.

There have been attempts to establish other newspapers in Bangor, but we believe we have given the names of all that have seen the light; certainly all that have shed any light, except the

BANGOR DAILY COMMERCIAL.

This paper was established by Marcellus Emery, esq., editor of the Democrat. Although under Democratic management, yet it keeps pretty clear of partisan politics, it being the design and desire of the conductors to make it a popular business paper, and to make money. The paper is a smart, newsy journal; has a good subscription list, and is popular with many of its patrons. It will not be for want of talent in the editor if he is not successful in obtaining for it an extensive circulation. The business interest of the community appears to be the prime object of his solicitude. The first number of the Commercial was issued on the 1st of January, 1872.

DEXTER—DEXTER GAZETTE.

Its character is independent: the editor and proprietor is R. O. Robbins; its size is 32x22; published every Friday; the circulation is 600. The advertising columns are well patronized.

The printing business was commenced in this place by J. F. Witherell, in 1853. He published several periodicals of different names, one of which once had a weekly list of 1,700 subscribers. It was of a literary character. He sold his interest in August, 1869, to Gulleston & Robbins, who carried on the publication of the Gazette and job business until October, 1871, when Mr. Robbins purchased the interest of the senior partner.

OLDTOWN—OLDTOWN INDEX.

This was the only paper ever published in this place. It was issued occasionally, in 1848-49,—had probably no circulation outside of the town. It was managed principally by one Charles H. De Wolfe, an Englishman by birth, a man of peculiar notions in vegetarianism, free-love, etc. Owing to his peculiar views, he did not find it convenient to tarry here a great while, and he soon left the State. The next heard of him he was under arrest in Oregon, on a criminal charge for his unlawful manner of taking a wife. Being a man of some ability, he defended his own case. During the trial the judge asked: "Mr. De Wolfe, do you propose to show that you have been married to this woman?" "We were, your Honor, married according to the universal laws of God and the dictates of our own conscience." "Do you love this woman well enough to take her for your wife?" "Most certainly I do." "Madam, do you love this man well enough to take him for your husband?" "Yes." "Then, by virtue of authority vested in me, I pronounce you to be husband and wife, duly married according to the laws of Oregon. Go, and sin no more." Next heard of him was his death in California.

CHAPTER XV.

ROADS, RAILROADS AND TELEGRAPHS.

Wagon Roads—Notices of Early Roads in the Penobscot Country, by Whipple and Morse—The Bangor, Oldtown & Milford Railroad—The Penobscot River Railroad—The Maine Central—The Dexter & Newport—The European & North American—The Bangor & Piscataquis—The Bucksport & Bangor—Unaccomplished Projects—The Telegraphs through Bangor.

WAGON ROADS.

The first roads in the Penobscot Valley naturally lay along the comparatively low ground by the river's side, to connect the early settlements, which clung close to the Penobscot. Here ran the Indian trail, which had been traversed by the red man in his migrations, on his hunting expeditions or the war-path, for untold generations; and these, widened and slightly improved, furnished the rude highways for the wagon, or horse, or ox-team of the pioneer.

It would be tedious work to follow in careful and extended details the history of the construction of wagon roads, macadamized ways, turnpikes, and the rest, throughout the great county of Penobscot. It has now, apparently, a very excellent road system, accommodating well the settlements and villages dispersed far and wide throughout its large domain. Many of the leading highways will receive notice in our special histories of the townships. For the present we subjoin one or two notices of the old-time roads, which will certainly be read with interest. The following is from Whipple's Geographical View of the District of Maine, published in 1816.

In the county of Penobscot, which is the most central division, particular attention is paid in locating the roads in such directions as may hereafter preclude the necessity of turnpikes; but even here there are people who have great reluctance to quit any road which they have used, let the location be ever so indirect. However, the inhabitants of this section are generally as enterprising in this department as in any other part of the Union.

The roads parallel and each side of Penobscot Bay and river are in a very good state to the head of the tide. The first important road from the head of the tide and west of the Penobscot commences at Bangor, and extends northeasterly by the river 14 miles to the upper line of Orono. From thence it has recently been extended 14 miles northwesterly, at the expense of the State, and another section of 14 miles is now extending beyond the Piscataquis.

The next road extends on a northerly direction, about 8 miles westerly of the State's road. This passes the westerly side of Pushaw, and terminates in Blakesburgh, 25 miles from Bangor. It is, however, in contemplation to extend it immediately to the township No. 3, in the 7th range, on the Piscataquis. The next road extends from Bangor on the westerly side of the Kenduskeag, and extends northwesterly about twenty miles to the upper part of Corinth, thence north through the centre of Charlestown, No. 2, in the 6th range, to Piscataquis, and to the mills in the town of Sebec, 38 miles from Bangor: and is a confirmed county road for that distance.

The next and most important road of either is contemplated to be opened by the proprietors of the land through which it passes. It will commence at the western side of Kenduskeag, thence north 44 degrees west by the compass, 9 miles to the south branch of Kenduskeag in Levant, which has been so far traced, thence varying about 2 degrees northerly, it passes through the center of Penobscot county to Guilford, on Piscataquis River, thence to the south side of Moosehead Lake, thence about the same course to the principal settlement on the Chaudiere, fifty-two miles from Quebec, which distance is now a perfect wheel-road. The whole distance from Bangor to Quebec will probably be about 190 miles. Half this distance is now passable by the common road from Bangor to the Piscataquis and the Chaudiere road to Quebec, which distance the land is peculiarly adapted to a good road. This road will particularly accommodate the upper settlers on the Kennebec.

The next important road which is also contemplated, but now before the Court of Sessions, commences at Bangor and, extending west a few degrees, runs north through Hermon and Carmel in the Second Range, thence on the same course to Canaan, Bloomfield and Norridgewock, on the Kennebec, and thence on the same course through East Andover to Connecticut River in New Hampshire and Vermont.

The next road is contemplated from Bangor to Augusta south of Dixmont, and on a direct course, which will reduce the distance about nine miles. A petition for a township of land for this purpose is now before the Legislature.

The next is the present travelled road from Bangor through Hampden, Dixmont, Joy, Unity, Fairfax, Harlem, and Vasselborough, to Augusta.

The last road west of Penobscot is from Bangor to Belfast, through Hampden and Frankfort. A petition for a new road from Frankfort to Belfast is now before the Sessions; this will be a most important avenue. A new direct county road is also contemplated from Bangor to Ellsworth, which will be the great road to Machias and Passamaquoddy.

The Quebec road receives the following notice, evidently borrowed in part from Whipple, in Morse's Universal Geography, of the edition of 1819:

Another road is laid out from Bangor, on the Penobscot, to Quebec, a distance of about 200 miles; course North 40 degrees West. It passes through Brownville, thence to the east of Moosehead Lake, thence across the western branch of Penobscot river to St. Joseph's church, on the Chaudiere, which is about 52 miles from the city of Quebec, to which there is a good road all the distance. The whole distance on the road, from Bangor to Quebec, will be about 190 miles. Half this distance is now passable. The upper settlers on the Kennebec will derive great benefit from this road. The country through which this road is to pass was explored, for the first time by any white person, in the spring of 1810, by Dr. Isaac Wilkins and Captain Ezekiel Chase, and found to be in general good for roads and settlements. After passing Brownville 20 or 25 miles, in a Northerly course, over a ridge of mountains, the country thence to the Chaudiere is level, variegated only with gentle swells.

Another important road has been surveyed from the Penobscot to a new settlement in the north-east corner of Maine, on St. John's river.

Another advantageous road is contemplated, to be opened from Bangor west through Hermon, Carmel, Canaan, Bloomfield, Norridgewock, and East Andover, to Connecticut river.

RAILROADS.

The project of building the first iron road constructed in the Penobscot Valley was mooted soon after the railway system was introduced into this country. It was the Bangor, Oldtown & Milford Railroad, which has been discontinued for many years, but whose old station-house, now a dwelling, still stands on the bluff in Bangor, and the long-disused track can still be traced at intervals stretching thence away into the country. The line kept on the high ground, instead of following the lower levels near the river, as does the present railroad to Oldtown; and, when it was desired to use a road to that place as an important link in a chain of iron ways to reach the Northeastward and Northwestward, this track was found to be too far in the interior to accommodate the traffic from the growing towns along the river; and it was consequently abandoned for the route now in use.

The Bangor, Oldtown & Milford Railroad Company was chartered by the State Legislature on the 8th of March, 1832, but was not fully organized until three years afterwards. So enthusiastic was the local public over this new departure in methods of transportation, that the stock of the company sold at 18 per cent. premium before a blow had been struck upon the line. Messrs. Rufus Dwinel, Ira Wadleigh, and Asa W. Babcock, were the chief promoters of the enterprise. Work upon the road-bed was begun in June; but the charter proved to be so fatally defective that it was possible for every landholder on the line to prosecute every railway employe coming upon his premises; and the work had to be temporarily abandoned. By and by the Bangor & Piscataquis Canal and Railroad Company, which had been chartered February 8, 1833, to build a canal or railroad, or both, from Bangor to the State quarries of Piscataquis county, bought up the franchises of the older company, and without special difficulty completed the road from Bangor to Oldtown, by way of Upper Stillwater. It was constructed in 1835-36, and laid with strap rail; and was opened in the latter year. After a time a track was laid down the hill in Bangor, and along the streets to a wharf on Exchange street, upon which large quantities of lumber and other products—but especially lumber,—were transported directly to the vessels on the Penobscot.

THE PENOBSCOT RIVER RAILROAD.

A company to build a railway bearing this title was chartered by the State in 1836. It was to lay a line from Bucksport to Milford, altogether on the east side of the river, but with a branch to Orono. The usual agitation in behalf of a local road was excited. Meetings were held at Orono and Oldtown in the autumn of 1836, in promoting the scheme, and $30,000 to $40,000 were subscribed in the former place alone. The times were growing hard, however; the great financial crisis of 1837 was at hand; and the means, together with the public confidence desirable in such an enterprise, could not be commanded at the time. The project therefore failed.

THE MAINE CENTRAL.

The Penobscot & Kennebec Railroad Company was chartered April 5, 1845, organized fully November 27, 1850. Early in 1853 the construction of the line from Waterville to Bangor was begun at the former place; and by December of that year the track was completed to Kendall's Mills. The cars reached Pittsfield in November, 1854, and entered Bangor in triumph in August, 1855. Meanwhile the Androscoggin & Kennebec

Railroad Company, chartered March 28, 1845, had been building a road from Danville Junction, on the Atlantic & St. Lawrence Railroad (now leased for 999 years to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada), to Waterville, which was opened for traffic December 23, 1849. Upon the completion of the Penobscot & Kennebec, September 1, 1855, Bangor had its first connection by the iron rail with Portland and the rapidly developing railway system of the East and West. November 1, 1856, the Bangor link of the chain was leased for twenty years to the Androscoggin & Kennebec Company, at a yearly rental equivalent to three-sevenths of the net earnings of both the roads. In a very few years, however, October 28, 1862, a consolidation of the two roads was effected, under the name of the Maine Central, which the line has since borne.

An older company, the Kennebec & Portland, had been chartered April 1, 1836, to build a road from Portland to Bath and Augusta, had opened the section from Yarmouth to Bath July 4, 1849, that from Yarmouth to Portland in 1851, and the extension to Augusta, January 1, 1852. The property of this company was foreclosed by its mortgagees May 18, 1862, and the Portland & Kennebec Company, organized two days afterwards, became its owners. A line was built from Augusta to Waterville, and on the 26th of February, 1873, an act of the Legislature was passed, consolidating the Portland & Kennebec, the Somerset & Kennebec, and the Leeds & Farmington Companies, with the Maine Central Railroad Company. November 13, 1871, the extension from Danville Junction to Cumberland Junction, near Portland, was opened. The Maine Central, therefore, now consists of the united lines from Bangor to Portland via Danville Junction, 136.6 miles; the branch from Cumberland Junction to Waterville, 72.93 miles; that from Crowley's Junction to Lewiston, 4.77 miles; that from Bath to Farmington, 74.31 miles; and that from Waterville to Skowhegan, 18.19 miles—170.2 miles of branches, or a total of 306.8 miles owned by the company. In addition they lease the Belfast & Moosehead Lake Railroad, 34.15 miles, and the Dexter & Newport Railroad, 14 miles—48.15 miles, making 354.95 miles owned or leased and operated by the Central Company, with side-tracks, etc., amounting to 49.2 miles more; 27 miles of the line, besides the Dexter & Newport road, lie in Penobscot county, passing from Bangor in a general westerly direction through Hampden, Hermon Centre, Hermon Pond, Carmel, Etna, East Newport, and Newport.

By the last report of the company at hand, the Central owned 58 locomotive engines and 1,119 cars—passenger 58, baggage, mail, and express 25, box freight 645, and platform 474, besides 40 service cars.

DEXTER AND NEWPORT.

The original company formed for building this short line, in the western part of the county, was chartered in 1853, but nothing effective was done under the charter until its extension in 1865. Construction was begun under the new arrangement in 1867, and the next year the road was opened. It cost about $300,000. December 1, 1868, it was leased to the Central Company for thirty years, at a rental of $18,000 a year. It has, as already noted, a track of fourteen miles, running from the junction at Newport, through Corinna, to Dexter, with sidings amounting to about one mile. It owns no rolling stock, being equipped entirely by the Central. By its financial statement December 31, 1879, it had a capital stock of $122,000, and owned $175,000 in six per cent. township bonds. Mr. Charles Shaw, of Dexter, is President of the company, and George Hamilton, Treasurer. The offices of the road are at Dexter.

THE EUROPEAN AND NORTH AMERICAN.

The Bangor & Orono Railroad Company was chartered in 1847, but did nothing of importance. Subsequently, in 1851, a new Penobscot Railroad Company was organized, and began operations the next year. It was to build a road, in the first instance, mainly on the west side of the Penobscot, from Bangor to Milford. The first contractor upon it, the Hon. Horatio C. Seymour, of New York, died, and the second contractor failed; so that the construction was delayed. First-mortgage six per cent. bonds, to the amount of $300,000, due in twenty years, were issued in 1855, bearing date July 1st, and the European & North American Company, which had been chartered August 20, 1850, but had yet built nothing, acquired title to the road-bed, rights of way, and other property of the Penobscot Company, between Bangor and Milford. The European & North American Company went on to complete the line on the route already selected by the Penobscot Company, substantially that now occupied by the road; and in 1868 cars were running from Bangor to Oldtown.

The company now in possession secured a land-grant of 750,000 acres of land from the State. In 1863 it issued $280,000 of its own first-mortgage bonds. The city of Bangor voted a twenty year six per cent. loan of one million, due January 1, 1889. Means were thus obtained to extend the line into Milford, building the railway bridge across the Penobscot, and then to Vanceboro, on the State boundary, which was reached in 1871. Upon the opening of the through line, October 17 of that year, a great celebration was had, at which were present General U. S. Grant, then President of the United States; Lord Lingard, the Governor-General of Canada; the Governor of Maine, and many other distinguished personages. During the same year, the European & North American Railway of New Brunswick was completed to the same point, and the two roads made a continuous line from Bangor to St. John, 205½ miles distant. The companies were consolidated December 1, 1872, but serious defaults in interest-payments occurred three years afterward, and the corporations separated after trying vainly to fix upon a plan of readjustment. The trustee into whose hands the New Brunswick division had fallen sold it under foreclosure, and it was re-organized as the St. John & Maine Railway. The next year—October 2, 1876—the Maine division, or the European & North American, was surrendered to the trustees of the land-grant mortgage ($2,000,000 twenty-year bonds), who have since operated the road. The trustees, in possession since the date given, are the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin and William B. Hayford, both of Bangor, where the principal offices of the road are situated.

In its course of construction, the European & North American absorbed, not only the Penobscot Railroad Company, but also the Oldtown & Lincoln Company, chartered about 1852, and the Bangor & Piscataquis Canal & Railroad Company. These, however, had previously been absorbed in the Bangor, Oldtown & Milford Railroad Company, which was in its turn swallowed up by the European & North American Company, which vacated its track, as recorded in the opening paragraphs of this chapter.

The European & North American also leased the Bucksport & Bangor Railroad, upon its completion in 1874, but did not renew after the expiration of the lease in 1879. The Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad was also leased by it, from 1873, to December 1, 1876. The trustees therefore operate only the main line from Bangor to Vanceboro, 114.2 miles, with sidings of 17.55 miles. Its cost was about $40,000 per mile.

It runs seventy miles in Penobscot county, from Bangor, through Veazie, Orono, Oldtown, Milford, Greenbush, Passadumkeag, Enfield, Lincoln, Winn, Mattawamkeag, Kingman, and Drew Plantation, with seventeen miles in Aroostook county, and the rest in Washington county, to its terminus. The road there connects with the St. John & Maine Railway, to St. John, New Brunswick, and the New Brunswick & Canada Railway, to Houlton on the north, and St. Stephen, New Brunswick, and Calais, Maine, on the east.

THE BANGOR AND PISCATAQUIS.

The company to build this road was chartered March 5, 1861. Operations under it were not begun, however, until eight years afterwards, in the spring of 1869, and then proceeded slowly, so that its present line, from Oldtown to Blanchard, was not completed until May, 1877. April 1, 1869, the city of Bangor issued in aid of the enterprise $600,000 in 6 per cent. bonds; April 1, 1871, $322,000 in 7 per cent. bonds; December 1, 1874, $99,000; and October 1, 1876, $101,000. The city holds $200,000 of the capital stock of the company in exchange for its bonds, for which it has also a mortgage on the property of the road.

When the track reached Abbott, in 1873, the line was leased to the European & N. A. Co. On the 1st of October, 1876, however, this corporation defaulted in its payment of interest to the Bangor & Piscataquis, and the latter resumed possession.

In Penobscot county this road passes through Oldtown, Alton, and Lagrange, fifteen miles. The remainder of the line is in Piscataquis county. Connection is had at Oldtown for Bangor, over the rails of the European & N. A. Co. The present terminus of the track is Blanchard, but steps are being taken to complete it to Moosehead Lake. Its cars already bear the designation of the famous sheet of water. The road has cost about $1,500,000. It has 62.8 miles of track, with 2.9 more of sidings and other tracks. By the last report we have seen it had 4 locomotive engines, 3 passenger cars, 2 baggage, mail and express cars, 39 box, 30 platform, and 12 service cars. During the year ending September 30, 1879, its trains were run a total of 78,876 miles, with an engine service of 82,636. It had carried that year 23,142 passengers—675,854 carried 1 mile. The freight moved amounted to 27,664 tons—moved 1 mile, 904,195. The gross earnings of the year were $71,188.00; operating expenses, including taxes, etc., $46,281.54; net earnings $24,906.48. Interest on funded debt accrued, $72,540.

Moses Giddings, of Bangor, is President of this road. Its general offices are in that city.

THE BUCKSPORT AND BANGOR.

This short line—18.8 miles, with 1.88 miles of side-tracks—was chartered March 1, 1870. Its route was surveyed in the fall of 1872; construction began the next spring; and trains commenced to run regularly to Bucksport December 12, 1874. It was then leased to the E. & N. A. R.R., to the 1st of October, 1879. Before the lease expired, however, the company was sold out at sheriff's sale (March, 1879), and bought by the mortgage trustees. Its gauge was changed from the standard (4 feet. 8½ inches) to the narrow, or 3 foot, gauge, upon which its trains are now run. The road was operated for a time by Mr. L. L. Lincoln, of Bucksport, under a ten-year lease; but the organization of the company was still maintained, and a change in the running arrangements of the road was effected in the summer of 1881. Mr. S. T. Hinks, President, and Parker Spofford, Treasurer, conduct the general offices at Bucksport.

Nine and a half miles of the route of this road are in Penobscot county, passing from Bangor, by bridge across the river, through the towns of Brewer and Orrington. The rest of the line is in Hancock county. Its original cost was $693,755.95.

PROJECTS NOT CONSUMMATED.

At the Legislative session of 1860-61, an act was passed making a liberal grant from the public lands in Penobscot and Aroostook counties, with the reservation of certain townships designed for actual settlers, and some other but slight exceptions, together with the pecuniary claims of the State upon the United States, as a foundation for the construction of a railroad from Mattawamkeag to Houlton, and on to the eastern boundary of the State, to the amount of $5,000 per mile. At that time no railway was running to Mattawamkeag. On the 20th of March, 1860, the Legislature gave authority to the city of Bangor to contribute her credit to the building of a road to that point, to the total amount of $850,000, or $14,000 a mile, in instalments as each section of ten miles' length should be constructed. A vote of the citizens of Bangor, upon the question of granting such aid, was taken March 19, 1862, and was adverse to the proposal. Nevertheless, a similar vote afterwards succeeded; and the road to and beyond Mattawamkeag is a fixed fact, while that from this place to Houlton is yet a thing of the future.

Charters have also been granted to a company for building a railway from Bangor to Winterport, down the west side of the Penobscot, and another for a road from Bangor to Machias; but both schemes still await the developments of the future.

TELEGRAPHS.

The Maine Telegraph Company, the first in the State, was incorporated in 1848, and the line from Bangor to Belfast was completed in the summer of that year. The first telegraphic dispatch from Bangor was sent over this line November 23, 1848. A week later communication was had with East Thomaston (now Rockland); and before the year closed the line to Portland was completed. The lines from Portland to Calais, and from Portland to Boston, were connected with it in 1852-53. In 1855 the American Telegraph Company leased the line, and in 1866 it was purchased by the Western Union Company. Communication by telegraph is now had to all points. The dispatches from Europe, by the Atlantic cable, pass through Bangor.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE BENCH AND BAR OF PENOBSCOT.

BY HON. JOHN E. GODFREY, OF BANGOR.

The Supreme Judicial Court—Attorney-Generals for the County—The Circuit Court of Common Pleas—The Court of Common Pleas of the State of Maine—The District Court—Clerks of the Courts—Probate Court—Names of Judges and Registers of the Court—The Court of Sessions—County Commissioners' Court—Names of Commissioners—Bangor City Courts: Municipal—The Police Court—Municipal Court again—And again the Police Court—County Attorneys—Sheriffs—Roll of Members of the Penobscot Bar—Governor Washburn's Eulogy—Some Good Stories—Hon. John Appleton, LL. D.—Hon. Joshua W. Hathaway—Hon. Jonas Cutting, LL. D.—Hon. Edward Kent, LL. D.—Hon. John A. Peters—Hon. David Perham—Hon. Frederick H. Allen—Hon. Samuel E. Dutton—Hon. William D. Williamson—Hon. Daniel Sanborn—Hon. Enoch Brown—Hon. John Godfrey—James Godfrey—Hon. Thomas A. Hill—Hon. Thornton McGaw—Hon. Charles Stetson—Charles P. Stetson—Hon. Samuel F. Humphrey—Hon. Henry C. Goodenow—Hon. Israel Washburn—Hon. Harris M. Plaisted—Hon. Elisha H. Allen—Hon. Albert G. Jewett—Hon. Allen Gilman—Peleg Chandler—Hon. William Abbot—Hon. Hannibal Hamlin—Hon. Elijah L. Hamlin—General Charles Hamlin—Hon. Albert G. Wakefield—Hon. Henry E. Prentiss—Hon. Josiah Crosby—Hon. Lewis Barker—Hon. Thomas W. Vose—Oliver Leonard—Jacob McGaw—George Starrett—Charles Gilman—James S. Rowe—Jonathan P. Rogers—Samuel Garnsey—Theophilus P. Chandler—George B. Moody—George W. Ingersoll—William T. Hilliard—Nathaniel Wilson—William H. McCrillis—Moses L. Appleton—Frederick H. Appleton—Albert W. Paine—Frederick Hobbs—Nathan Weston, jr.—Thomas J. Copeland—William C. Crosby—David Barker—Ichabod D. Bartlett—Matthias Weeks—Marcellus Emery—Henry L. Mitchell—Charles A. Bailey—John A. Blanchard—T. F. McFadden—General John F. Appleton—William A. Blake—John H. Hilliard—Joshua Hill—Francis Eugene Bond—Colonel Jasper Hutchings—Horace B. Chamberlain—George W. Whitney—James W. Donigan—James H. Burgess—Abraham Sanborn—Franklin A. Wilson—Joseph C. Wilson—Lewis A. Barker—Louis C. Stevens.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

As originally constituted, in 1820, this court consisted of one chief justice and two associates. The term of the office of the judge was during good behavior, but not beyond the age of seventy years. Under the Constitution and law, as it then stood, the judges appointed were: Hon. Prentiss Mellen, LL. D., of Portland, chief justice; Hons. William P. Preble, of Portland, and Nathan Weston, jr., of Augusta, justices.

Judge Preble resigned June 18, 1829, and on June 25, 1829, Hon. Albion K. Parris, of Portland, was appointed.

On the 11th of October, 1834, Chief Justice Mellen's term of office ended by constitutional limitation, and October 22, of the same year, Hon. Nathan Weston was appointed chief justice, and the Hon. Nicholas Emery, of Portland, was appointed associate.

Judge Parris resigned August 20, 1836, and on September 23, 1836, Hon. Ether Shepley, of Saco, was appointed associate.

Under an amendment of the Constitution, pursuant to a resolve of the Legislature of March 14, 1849, the term of all judicial officers was limited to seven years.

Judge Emery's term expired October 21, 1841, and on October 23, 1841, John S. Tenney, of Norridgewock, was appointed associate; C. T. Weston's term having expired on October 21, 1841.

On December 10, 1841, Ezekiel Whitman, of Portland, was appointed chief justice.

July 22, 1847, by an act of the Legislature, the number of associate justices was increased to three, and on September 28, 1847, Samuel Wells, of Portland, was appointed associate justice.

The court, as then constituted, consisted of Hon. Ezekiel Whitman, LL. D., chief justice; Hons. Ether Shepley, John S. Tenney, Samuel Wells, justices.

Judge Whitman resigned October 23, 1848, and on the same day Ether Shepley was appointed chief justice, and Joseph Howard, of Portland, associate. The court then was: Hon. Ether Shepley, LL. D., chief justice; Hons. John S. Tenney, LL. D., Samuel Wells, Joseph Howard, justices.

April 9, 1852, the Legislature passed an act abolishing the district courts, and transferred their jurisdiction to the Supreme Judicial Court, adding to that tribunal three more justices. The three additional justices were appointed May 11, 1852, and were Richard D. Rice, of Augusta; Joshua W. Hathaway, and John Appleton, of Bangor. The court then stood: Hon. Ether Shepley, LL. D., chief justice; Hons. John Sewall Tenney, LL. D., Samuel Wells, Joseph Howard, Richard D. Rice, Joshua W. Hathaway, John Appleton, justices.

March 31, 1854, Judge Howard resigned, and on April 20, 1854, Jonas Cutting, of Bangor, was appointed to the vacancy.

March 16, 1855, an act was passed providing for the appointment of an additional justice, and, on May 6th, Seth May, of Winthrop, was appointed. By this act it was provided that four justices, including the chief justice, should be designated from the members of the court, for the purpose of hearing and determining all questions of law and equity, and for the trial of capital offenses. The members designated were: Hon. Ether Shepley, LL. D., chief justice; Hons. John S. Tenney, LL. D., Richard D. Rice, John Appleton.

Judge Shepley's term expired October 22, 1855, and Judge Tenney was appointed chief justice. The court, as then organized, was: Hon. John S. Tenney, LL. D. chief justice; Hons. Richard D. Rice, Joshua W. Hathaway, John Appleton, Jonas Cutting, Seth May, Daniel Goodenow, associates.

April 9, 1856, this law was repealed as to its main features, and the number of justices was to be reduced to seven in all, when a vacancy should occur. The number of eight justices, however, was retained by an enactment in 1857, which was incorporated into the Revised Statutes.

The justices appointed, since the appointment of Judge May, have been Woodbury Davis,* of Portland; Daniel Goodenow,† of Alfred; Edward Kent, of Bangor, appointed May 11, 1859, and re-appointed May 11, 1866; Jonathan G. Dickerson,‡ of Belfast; Edward Fox,§ of Portland; Charles W. Walton, of Portland; William G. Barrows,|| of Brunswick; Charles Danforth,¶ of Gardiner; Rufus P. Tapley, of Saco; William Wirt Virgin,†† of Portland; John A. Peters, of Bangor, appointed May 20, 1873, re-appointed in May, 1880; Artemas Libbey,‡‡ of Augusta; and Joseph W. Symonds,§§ of Portland.

Judge Shepley held the office of chief justice until October 22, 1855, when Judge Tenney was appointed chief justice. He held the office until October 23, 1862, when Judge Appleton was appointed chief justice; and the court as now constituted is: Hon. John Appleton, LL. D., chief justice; Hon. Charles W. Walton, Hon. William G. Barrows, LL. D., Hon. Charles Danforth, Hon. William Wirt Virgin, Hon. John A. Peters, Hon. Artemas Libbey, Hon. Joseph W. Symonds, justices.

All the justices have, at different times, attended the courts in Bangor; but the nisi prius terms in Penobscot county have been mainly held since Judge Appleton came upon the bench, by either himself, Judge Hathaway, Judge Cutting, Judge Kent, or Judge Peters. Occasionally some other judge has presided.

*Appointed October 10, 1855; removed April, 1856; re-appointed February 25, 1857; resigned 1865.

†Appointed October, 1855.

‡Appointed October 24, 1862; re-appointed 1869.

§Appointed October, 1862; resigned 1863.

||Appointed March, 1863; re-appointed 1870, 1877.

¶Appointed January, 1864; re-appointed January, 1871.

Appointed December 21, 1865.

††Appointed December, 1872.

‡‡Appointed April 24, 1875.

§§Appointed October 16, 1878.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERALS OF THE STATE, from Penobscot county have been:

- 1832—Jonathan P. Rogers, of Bangor.
1844—Wyman B. S. Moore, of Bangor.
1848—Samuel H. Blake, of Bangor.
1860—George W. Ingersoll, of Bangor.
1864—John A. Peters, of Bangor.
1873—Harris M. Plaisted, of Bangor.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

This court was organized by the Massachusetts Legislature in 1811, as the "Circuit Court of Common Pleas." There were three circuits, the third comprising the counties of Hancock and Washington. The judges appointed for this circuit by Governor Gary were: Hon. William Crosby, of Belfast, chief justice; Hon. Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, and Hon. James Campbell, of Harrington, justices. Only the chief justice of this court was a lawyer.

The members of the Bar in Hancock county in 1811 who practiced in this court were:

Abbot, William, Castine.	Angier, Oakes, Belfast.
Brown, Enoch, Hampden.	Chapman, George T., Hampden.
Crosby, William, Belfast.	Deane, John G., Ellsworth.
Dutton, Samuel E., Bangor.	Field, Bohan P., Belfast.
Gilman, Allen, Bangor.	Godfrey, John, Hampden.
Hale, Thomas E.	Herbert, George, Ellsworth.
Jones, Archibald, Frankfort.	Leonard, Oliver, Orrington.
Little, Samuel, Bucksport.	McGaw, Jacob, Bangor.
Nelson, Job, Castine.	Pike, John
Samuel M. Pond, Bucksport.*	Washburn, Philo H., Frankfort.
Whiting, Samuel K., Bangor.	Williamson, William D., Bangor.
	Wilson, John, Belfast.

After the county of Penobscot was incorporated, February 15, 1816, this court held sessions in Bangor. The first session was held in the old court-house, at the corner of Hammond and Columbia Streets, on the first Tuesday of July, 1816; the next on the second Tuesday of November; the third on the second Tuesday of March, 1817; the fourth on the first Tuesday of July, 1817. After this the courts were held on the third Monday of September, first Monday of January, and second Monday of May, annually, until January, 1822, inclusive, when there was a new organization of the court, as the Court of Common Pleas of the State of Maine. At the sessions of the Circuit Court of Common Pleas, Chief Justice Crosby was always present, the other justices not always. After September, 1819, Judge Kinsley was not present at any of the sittings of the court. The Clerk of the Court was Thomas Cobb, Esq.

Governor King appointed to the Bench of the Court of Common Pleas for all the State: Hon. Ezekiel Whitman, of Portland, Chief Justice; Hon. Samuel E. Smith, of Wiscasset, and Hon. David Perham, of Brewer, Justices.

The first session of the court in Bangor was held on the third Tuesday of June, in the year 1822. Judges Smith and Perham were present. The court continued to exist until its session in January, 1839, which was its last. Judge Perham presided at much the larger part of the sessions. It was seldom there was more than one

*Then Buckstown.

Judge upon the Bench at the same session. Occasionally the Chief Justice presided, sometimes with another Justice. When Judge Smith held the office of Governor, in 1831 to 1834, Judge John Ruggles, of Thomaston, was appointed to the vacancy. In 1834 Judge Ruggles went to the United States Senate, and Judge Smith was re-appointed.

THE DISTRICT COURT.

By an act of the Legislature passed February 25, 1839, the Court of Common Pleas was abolished, and the District Court established with similar jurisdiction, though the number of Justices was enlarged, and the State was divided into three judicial districts, the Western, Middle, and Eastern. To the Eastern District, embracing the counties of Penobscot, Waldo, Hancock, Washington, and Piscataquis, were assigned two judges; to each of the other districts, one. All of the Judges, however, were authorized to hold the courts in any of the counties. The Judges appointed were: Hon. Daniel Goodenow, of Alfred, for the Western District; Hon. Asa Redington, jr., of Augusta, for the Middle District; Hon. Frederick H. Allen, of Bangor, and Hon. Anson G. Chandler, of Calais, for the Eastern District.

The first term of the District Court was held by Judge Chandler, on the fourth Tuesday of May, 1839. Judge Allen retired from the Bench in 1843, and Hon. Joshua W. Hathaway, of Bangor, was appointed Judge of that court, and held the last term in January, 1852. After the District Court was abolished Judge Hathaway was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, May 11, 1852.

CLERKS OF COURT.

The Clerks of the Courts in the county since 1816 have been:

Thomas Cobb.....	from 1816 to January 3, 1821, inclusive
Isaac Hodsdon, of Corinth....	to October, 1836, inclusive
Elliot Vaughan (pro tem).....	to January, 1837.
Charles Stetson, of Bangor....	to January 3, 1838, inclusive
James Adams, of Exeter.....	to October 3, 1838, inclusive
Charles Stetson, of Bangor....	to January 3, 1841, inclusive
Isaac S. Whitman, of Bangor..	to January 3, 1842, inclusive
William T. Hilliard, of Oldtown	to October 3, 1853, inclusive
Nathan Weston, jr., of Orono..	to October 3, 1858, inclusive
Augustus S. French, of Dexter..	to October 3, 1864, inclusive
Ezra C. Brett, of Oldtown....	to October 3, 1876, inclusive
James H. Burgess, of Winn....	to October 3, 1879, inclusive
Ruel Smith, of Bangor.....	elected for three years from January, 1880

PROBATE COURT.

The Probate Court for the county of Penobscot was established in 1816. The first term was held June 24th of that year; the last, July 3, 1820. After the separation of Maine from Massachusetts the court was re-organized. The following were the officers of the court:

Judges.—Hon. Samuel E. Dutton, of Bangor, from 1816 to 1820; Hon. David Perham, of Brewer, from 1820 to 1822; Hon. Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, from 1822 to 1825; Hon. William D. Williamson, of Bangor, from 1825 to 1840; Hon. Samuel Coney, of Oldtown, from 1840 to 1847; Hon. Ebenezer Gilman Rawson, of Bangor, from 1847 to, and including, 1854; Hon. Daniel Sanborn, of Bangor, from 1854 to, and including, 1856;

Hon. John E. Godfrey, of Bangor, from 1856 to, and including, 1880; Hon. Elliot Walker, of Newport, from 1880 to this time.

Until 1840 the tenure of the office of judge, under the Constitution, was limited (during good behavior) by the seventieth year of the age of the incumbent. From 1840 to 1856 the tenure of the office was for seven years. After 1856 Judges and Registers of Probate held their offices for four years, and were elected by the people on the second Monday of September prior to January, when the tenure of the office commenced.

Judge Dutton's term was limited by the re-organization of the court; Judge Perham's by his appointment as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas; Judge Kinsley's by the age of seventy years; Judge Williamson's by an amendment of the Constitution limiting the tenure to seven years; Judge Coney's by the limitation of seven years; Judge Rawson's by the same limitation; Judge Sanborn's by the amendment of the Constitution making the office elective; and Judge Godfrey's by the expiration of the term succeeding his sixth election by the people. Prior to 1857 the offices of judge and register were held by executive appointment.

Register Allen Gilman, Esq., of Bangor.....	from 1816 to 1820
Register Alexander Savage, Esq., of Bangor.....	from 1820 to 1836
Register Mason S. Palmer, Esq., of Corinth.....	to 1841
Register Henry V. Poor, Esq., of Bangor.....	to 1842
Register John Williams, Esq., of Bangor.....	to 1850
Register James F. Rawson, Esq., of Bangor.....	to 1854
Register Henry P. Haynes, Esq., of Corinth.....	to 1857
Register Joseph Bartlett, Esq., of Bangor.....	to his death, 1870
Register Ambrose C. Flint, Esq., of Bangor.....	to 1879

Probably no court ever had a more efficient and valuable clerical officer than Mr. Flint. Being a good writer, his records are clearly, correctly, and systematically kept; all his duties are faithfully attended to. In office hours always at his post, always diligent, always pleasant and accommodating, and always ready to give assistance and information, whether it comes within the scope of his duty or not. He is a universal favorite with all having business in the probate office, of whatever complexion in politics or religion. He is an officer in regard to whom the civil service rule should be held strictly inviolate.

Register John F. Robinson, Esq., of Lincoln.....present incumbent.

Mr. Robinson very wisely continues Mr. Flint in the office.

THE COURT OF SESSIONS.

Prior to the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, this court, which had general jurisdiction in regard to highways and other county matters, was held in the county of Penobscot, beginning in July, 1616. It was designated as the Court of Common Pleas, sitting as a Court of Sessions. At this session, held on the first Tuesday of July, and at all subsequent sessions until 1819, the court had associated with it two justices of the peace of the county. The first session was held by Hon. William Crosby, chief justice; Hon. Martin Kinsley, justice; Moses Patten, Esq., Moses Greenleaf, Esq., sessions justices.

After the session held on the last Tuesday of June, 1819, under the Commonwealth, the court was organized simply as the Court of Sessions, and the justices were: Hon. Enoch Brown, chief justice; Moses Patten, Esq., Moses Greenleaf, Esq., justices.

This organization continued until the first term, in September, 1820, when Hon. Enoch Brown, chief justice, and Isaac Hodsdon, Esq., held the court, which continued thus constituted until the May term of 1831, when Hon. Enoch Brown, chief justice, and Ephraim Goodale, Esq., Seba French, Esq., associates, constituted the court. The court thus continued until September, 1822, when Seba French, Esq., and Ephraim Goodale, Esq., held the court. In March, 1823, the court was: Hon. John Godfrey, chief justice; Seba French, Esq., Ephraim Goodale, associates; and thus continued through the December term, 1824. At the April term, 1825, the court was: Hon. Amos Patten, chief justice; Ephraim Goodale, Esq., Seba French, Esq., associates; and so continued through December, 1826. At the April term, 1827, the court was: Hon. Edward Kent, chief justice; Ephraim Goodale, Esq., Seba French, Esq., associates; and so continued through the December term, 1828. At the April term, 1829, the court was: Hon. Thomas A. Hill, chief justice; Seba French, Esq., Ephraim Goodale, Esq., associates; and so continued through the December term, 1830. At the April term, 1831, the court was: Hon. Thomas A. Hill, chief justice, and Ephraim Goodale, Esq., associate.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

An act was passed by the Legislature March 10, 1831, substituting for the Court of Sessions three suitable persons as County Commissioners—one to be designated as Chairman by his Commission—and all to hold their offices for four years, unless sooner removed by the Governor and Council. They were commissioned by the Governor, with the consent of the Council. The act went into effect May 16, 1831. The Commissioners appointed were: Hon. Thomas A. Hill, Chairman; Hons. Ephraim Goodale and Joseph Kelsey, associates; and they held the September term, 1831, and continued until the April term, 1833, when the Court was: Hon. Thomas A. Hill, Chairman; Hons. Joseph Kelsey and George Waugh, associates; and continued until the April term, 1834, when the court was: Hon. Thomas A. Hill, Chairman; Hons. George Waugh and William R. Lowney, associates; and continued until 1835, when the court was: Hon. Thornton McGaw, Chairman; Hons. George Waugh and William R. Lowney, associates; and continued until 1837, when Hon. Ebenezer G. Rawson, Chairman; Hons. William R. Lowney and Joshua Chamberlain, jr., associates, composed the court, and continued until 1838, when Hon. Samuel Butman, Chairman; Hons. Ebenezer Webster and William C. Hammatt, associates, composed the court, and continued until 1839, when Hon. Frederick A. Fuller, Chairman; Hons. Joshua Chamberlain, jr., and Edmund Pilsbury, associates, composed the court, and continued until 1841, when Hon. Samuel Butman, Chairman; Hons. William C. Hammatt and Aaron A. Wing, associates, composed the court, and continued until 1842, when Hon. Daniel Emery, Chairman; Hons. Gilman M. Burleigh and Amzi Libbey, associates, composed the court until 1844, when the Governor ceased to appoint. The Legislature of 1844 amended the law, and provided that the Commissioners should be elected by the people, the Chairman to be designated by the Commissioners. Of the three Commissioners, the one having the highest number of votes was to hold for three years; the one having the next highest number was to hold for two years, the one having the lowest number for one year. After the first election, a commissioner was to be elected each succeeding year. The following Commissioners have been elected under this act:—

- 1844—Hon. Rufus Gilmore (for three years), Chairman.
 Hon. John Dunning (for one year).
 Hon. Jacob W. Stinchfield (for two years).
 Hon. Jacob W. Stinchfield, Chairman for 1845.
 Hon. Rufus Gilmore.
- 1845—Hon. Noah Barker, Chairman in 1847.
- 1844—Hon. Rufus Gilmore, Chairman for 1846.
- 1846—Hon. Thomas C. Burleigh, Chairman for 1848.
- 1847—Hon. Joseph W. Eaton, Chairman for 1849.
- 1848—Hon. Luther Wadleigh, Chairman for 1850.
- 1849—Hon. Joseph Porter, Chairman for 1851.
- 1850—Hon. Hiram Ruggles, Chairman for 1852.
- 1851—Hon. Augustus S. French, Chairman for 1853.
- 1852—Hon. John Dow, Chairman for 1855.
- 1853—Hon. Alvin Haynes, Chairman for 1854.
- 1854—Hon. Daniel M. Haskell, Chairman for 1856.
- 1855—Hon. Lore Alford, Chairman for 1857.
- 1856—Hon. John H. Hinekley, Chairman for 1858.
- 1857—Hon. Gorham Davis, Chairman for 1859.
- 1858—Hon. John H. Patten, Chairman for 1860.
- 1859—Hon. Jacob L. Barker, Chairman for 1861.
- 1860—Hon. Solomon Dunning, Chairman for 1862.
- 1861—Hon. Thomas S. Ranney, Chairman for 1863.
- 1862—Hon. John S. Patten, Chairman for 1864.
- 1863—Hon. Campbell Bachelder, Chairman for 1865.
- 1864—Hon. Lore Alford, Chairman for 1866.
- 1865—Hon. Asahel W. McMahon, Chairman for 1867.
- 1866—Hon. Simon G. Jerrard, Chairman for 1868.
- 1867—Hon. Alfred O. Ingersoll, Chairman for 1869.
- 1868—Hon. Josiah S. Bennoch, Chairman for 1870.
- 1869—Hon. Israel B. Norcross, Chairman for 1871.
- 1870—Hon. Francis A. Reed, Chairman for 1872.
- 1871—Hon. Jesse Hinks, Chairman for 1873.
- 1872—Hon. Simon G. Jerrard, Chairman for 1874.
- 1873—Hon. William H. Chesley, Chairman for 1875.
- 1874—Hon. Benjamin B. Thomas, Chairman for 1876.
- 1875—Hon. Willard B. Ferguson, Chairman for 1877.
- 1876—Hon. Hiram Stevens, Chairman for 1878.
- 1877—Hon. John Kimball, Chairman for 1879.
- 1878—Hon. George B. Leavitt, Chairman for 1880.
- 1879—Hon. Joseph W. Eaton, Chairman for 1881.
- 1880—Hon. Joseph W. Burke.
- 1880—Hon. Henry W. Briggs.

BANGOR CITY COURTS—MUNICIPAL.

This court, which had concurrent jurisdiction with the justices courts of the county, was established soon after the adoption of the city charter, in March, 1834. The officers were appointed by the Governor—Hon. Charles Stetson, judge; Reuben S. Prescott, esq., recorder. Judge Stetson held the office nearly three years, when he was appointed clerk of the court. The Governor appointed to succeed him, in February, 1837, Hon. Samuel Farrar, judge, who held the office until October, 1837, when the Governor appointed Hon. John McDonald judge. He held the office until May, 1839, when a court called was established instead of the Municipal Court, which ceased to exist by the repeal of the provision of the city charter establishing it. In 1838, Recorder Prescott was displaced, and Samuel Morison, Esq., was appointed recorder. In January, 1839, Mr. Prescott was again appointed recorder, and held the office until May, 1839. The judge appointed to the police court was Hon. Gustavus G. Cushman. The recorder of this court seems to have been an estray. His name does not appear. A person competent to judge, who examined the records, says: "It would be safe to assert that a more uneven, disorderly, uncomely, straggling, bushwhacking set of judicial dockets is not to be found in any civilized community during any seven years of its court history. Evidently the recorder's talent did not lie in his clerical habits and tastes. His penmanship, like the manner of some men when under excitement, partook more of the fortiter in re than of the suaviter in modo."*

THE POLICE COURT

On one occasion there were before Judge Cushman, as opposing counsel, those eminent lawyers, Albert G. Jewett and the late Judge Cutting. Mr. Jewett by one of his exasperating ebullitions disturbed the equanimity of Mr. Cutting, who retorted by threatening to kick him down stairs.

"Mr. Cutting! Mr. Cutting!" was the sharp rebuke of the court.

"With your honor's leave," said Mr. Cutting, submissively; and the court was mollified.

Judge Cushman held the office of judge seven years, and was succeeded by Hon. Spencer A. Pratt, judge, an undemonstrative but upright magistrate. His term expired in May, 1853, when he was succeeded by Hon. John L. Hodsdon, judge, "who discharged the duties of the office with ability and dispatch" until June, 1855. Then a new court went into operation, established by an act of March 17, 1855, which provided for an appeal to a jury, which might be summoned at the instance of the party appealing, also for four regular jury terms in the course of a year. This court bore the name of

MUNICIPAL COURT,

and the officers appointed by the Governor were Hon. Alpheus Lyon, judge, Benjamin F. Mudgett, Esq., recorder. This court, "during its short career of nine months, did efficient and satisfactory work." It was presided over with dignity and impartiality, and its juries were remarkable for intelligence and business capacity. This court was not only efficient but was reputed to be self-sustaining, notwithstanding which, on February 28, 1836, by an act of the Legislature it was made to give place to a court called the POLICE COURT.

By an amendment, March 14, 1856, a recorder was given this court. Under an amendment of the Constitution the office of judge had become elective by the citizens, to hold for four years. At the annual election the citizens gave their suffrages in favor of Hon. Spencer A. Pratt, judge. The Governor appointed Colby A. Jordan, Esq., recorder. He held the office until January, 1857, when Hon. Alpheus Lyon was appointed recorder. Judge Lyon held this office by five successive appointments for twenty years, during which period he performed its duties with eminent success. At the age of eighty-six, when his eye had become dim, but otherwise "his natural force but little abated, he declined to be a candidate for re-appointment." During this period the incumbent of the judge's office by election was Hon. Spencer A. Pratt until 1860, when the people elected Hon. Samuel F. Humphrey judge. Judge Humphrey was re-elected in 1864, and held the office until 1868, when the people elected Hon. Whiting S. Clark judge. Judge Clark was re-elected in 1872, and resigned in 1873. He was succeeded in May of that year by Hon. Henry C. Goodenow, judge. During his judgeship the Constitution was again amended, and provided that municipal judges should be appointed by the Governor. At the expiration of four years Judge Goodenow was appointed by the Governor, and held the office until December 22, 1880, when he resigned, and the Governor appointed Hon. Ezra C. Brett judge, and he now holds the position. In January, 1877, the Governor appointed to succeed Judge Lyon Nathan L. Perkins, Esq., recorder, and he is the present incumbent, having been re-appointed.

COUNTY ATTORNEYS.

Jacob McGaw, Bangor, from 1816 to 1821.
 John Godfrey, Bangor, from 1825 to 1832.
 Albert G. Jewett, Bangor, from 1832 to 1838.
 William H. McCrillis, Bangor, during 1838.
 Charles C. Cushman, Bangor, during 1839 and 1840.
 George B. Moody, Bangor, during 1841.
 Charles C. Cushman, Bangor, during 1841 and 1842.
 Gorham Parks, Bangor, in 1843, 1844, and 1845.
 Isaiah Waterhouse, Newport, from 1845 to 1852.
 Asa Waterhouse, Bangor, during 1852.
 John Bunham, Lincoln, from 1852 to 1856.
 John H. Hilliard, Oldtown, from 1856 to 1859.
 Charles C. Crosby, Bangor, from 1859 to 1862.
 Charles P. Stetson, Bangor, from 1862 to 1874.
 Jasper Hutchings, Brewer, from 1874 to 1880.
 Benjamin H. Mace, Bangor, from 1880 to this time.

SHERIFFS.

Jedediah Herrick, Hampden, from 1816 to 1822.
 Royal Clark, Bangor, to 1826.
 John Wilkins, Bangor, to 1829.
 Daniel Wilkins, Charleston, to 1836.
 Joshua Carpenter, Bangor, to 1837.
 Otis Small, Bangor, to 1838.
 J. Wingate Carr, Bangor, to 1839.
 Hastings Strickland, Bangor, to 1843.
 Jabez True, Bangor, to 1851.
 John S. Chadwick, Bangor, to 1854.
 Francis W. Hill, Exeter, to 1855.
 Charles D. Gilmore, Bangor, to 1861.
 John S. Chadwick, Bangor, to 1865.
 John H. Wilson, Bangor, to 1875.
 Simon G. Jerrard, Bangor, to 1879.
 Lewis F. Stratton, Lincoln, to this time.

THE MEMBERS OF THE BAR

of Penobscot County, as nearly as they could be ascertained from 1820 up to October, 1881, have been as follows:

* These were simply the docket records: The extended records were on another hand, and are legible, neat, and systematic.

[d indicates dead; r, removed from the county.]

- d* Abbot, William, Bangor. d Additon, B. C., Bangor.
 Allen, Elisha H., Bangor.
r Andrews, H. H., Bangor.
 Appleton, John, Bangor.
d Appleton, Moses L., Bangor.
 Bailey, Charles A., Bangor.
 Barker, Lewis, Bangor.
d Bartlett, Ichabod D., Bangor.
r Belcher, Samuel, Orono.
 Benjamin, S. E., Patten.
 Benson, John L., Newport.
 Blake, Samuel H., Bangor.
a Bond, Francis E., Bangor.
 Bradbury, Albion P., Eddington.
 Brett, Victor, Bangor.
r Brinley, Francis S., Bangor.
 Brown, Charles P., Bangor. d Brown, Enoch, Bangor.
d Brown, Theodore S., Bangor.
 Burgess, James H., Corinna.
 Carr, Joseph, Bangor.
d Chandler, Peleg, Bangor.
 Chapman, A. J., Bangor.
r Clark, Whitney S., Bangor.
 Clergue, F. H., Bangor.
d Cooley, George W., Bangor. d Cony, Samuel, Bangor. d Crosby, Charles S., Bangor. d Crosby, William C., Bangor.
d Cushman, Charles C., Bangor. d Cutting, Jonas, Bangor.
 Davis, Daniel E., Bangor.
r Dinsmore, Samuel P., Bangor. d Dutton, George P., Bangor. d Emery, Marcellus, Bangor. r Evans, W. A., Bangor.
r Fessenden, William, Bangor.
r Field, Henry C., Lee.
 Floyd, F. A., Brewer.
r Forbes, Kendall P., Bangor. d Garnsey, Samuel, Bangor. d Gilman, Allen, Bangor.
 Gilmore, Otis, Brewer.
 Godfrey, John E., Bangor.
r Gooch, Daniel W., Bangor.
r Goodwin, Thomas J., Orono.
d Haines, Sullivan L., Bangor.
 Hall, George W., Bangor.
 Hamlin, Charles, Bangor.
 Hamlin, Hannibal, Hampden.
d Hathaway, Joshua W., Bangor.
r Hersey, Charles N., Bangor. d Hill, Joshua, Hampden.
 Hilliard, William T., Bangor.
d Hobbs, Frederick, Bangor.
 Hoßsdon, John L., Bangor.
 Humphrey, Samuel F., Bangor.
 Hutchings, Jasper, Brewer.
r Jewett, Albert G., Bangor. d Kelly, Webster, Bangor.
r Kent, George, Bangor.
r Knowlton, J. W., Oldtown. r LeBreton, E. L., Bangor.
 Mace, Benjamin H., Bangor.
 Mason, John R., Bangor.
d McCrillis, David, Bangor. d McDonald, John, Bangor. d McGaw, Jacob, Bangor.
d McLellan, Samuel, Dexter.
d Moody, George B., Bangor.
d Moor, Wyman B. S., Bangor. r Morrison, H. G. O., Bangor.
d Norton, Milford P., Bangor.
 Paine, Albert W., Bangor. d Adams, James, Exeter.
d Agry, David, Oldtown.
d Allen, Frederick H., Bangor. d Angier, George C., Bangor. d Appleton, John F., Bangor.
r Bachelder, George W., Bangor. d Barker, David, Exeter.
 Barker, Lewis A., Bangor.
d Bartlett, Thomas, jr., Bangor.
 Bell, John I., Carmel.
r Bennett, Milo M., Bangor.
 Blake, Edward A., Bangor.
 Blanchard, John A., Oldtown.
 Bonine, —, Bangor.
 Brett, Ezra C., Bangor.
 Briggs, Andrew H., Bangor.
d Brown, Augustus J., Bangor. d Brown, Enoch E., Bangor.
r Brown, George W., Bangor.
r Bryant, Nahum F., Bangor. r Burnham, John, Lincoln.
d Chamberlain, Horace B., Bangor.
r Chandler, Theophilus P., Bangor.
 Clark, W. C., Lincoln.
r Clement, H. F., Bangor.
d Cleveland, Jas. B., Passadumkeag.
d Coombs, John J., Bangor.
r Copeland, Thomas J., Orono.
 Crosby, Josiah, Dexter.
 Cushman, Charles A., Lee.
d Cushman, Gustavus G., Bangor.
 Davis, Charles, Bangor.
 Davis, Ira W., East Corinth.
 Donegan, J. W., Bangor.
r Dutton, Samuel E., Bangor.
 Estes, J. E., Winn.
 Fernald, B. F., Winn.
d Fessenden, William Pitt, Bangor. d Flagg, Edmund W., Bangor. d Forbes, Thomas J., Bangor.
r Fuller, Frederick K., Orono.
r Garnsey, Thomas H., Bangor. d Gilman, Charles, Bangor. d Godfrey, John, Bangor.
r Godfrey, John F., Bangor.
 Goodenow, Henry C., Bangor.
d Haines, Allen, Bangor.
d Hale, S. A., Bangor.
 Hamblen, Frank, Oldtown.
d Hamlin, Elijah L., Bangor. d Hatch, Nathaniel, Bangor.
 Haynes, Henry P., Charleston.
r Hill, John B., Bangor.
d Hilliard, John H., Oldtown.
 Hinckley, Bushrod W., Orono.
r Hodgdon, John, Bangor.
 Holmes, James S., Foxcroft.
d Hunton, Jona G., Dixmont. d Ingersoll, George W., Bangor.
r Jewett, Daniel T., Bangor. d Kent, Edward, Bangor.
d Knowles, Abner, Bangor.
 Laughton, Frederick M., Bangor.
d Leonard, Oliver, Bangor.
r Matthews, S. W., Hampden.
 Mayo, H. W., Hampden.
 McCrillis, William H., Bangor.
r McFadden, D. F., Orono.
d McGaw, Thornton, Bangor.
 Mitchell, Henry L., Bangor.
 Moody, George T., Bangor.
d Mudgett, Benjamin F., Bangor.
r Nutter, Charles C., Bangor. r Paine, T. B., Bangor. d Paine, William, Bangor.
r Parker, Frederick, Bangor. r Parks, Rufus, Bangor.
r Perkins, Joseph H., Bangor.
d Perley, Jeremiah, Orono.
 Plaisted, Harris M., Bangor.
r Piper, Martin V. B., Bangor.
d Poor, John A., Bangor.
 Powers, Don H., Newport.
 Pratt, Spencer A., Bangor.
d Prentiss, Addison, Lee.
r Preston, Warren, Bangor.
d Rawson, Ebenezer G., Bangor. r Rice, John H., Bangor.
 Robinson, John F., Bangor.
d Rogers, Jonathan P., Bangor.
 Sanborn, Abraham, Bangor.
r Seaman, James M., Hampden.
 Sewall, George P., Oldtown. r Shaw, Frederick E., Bangor.
 Simpson, A. L., Bangor.
 Smith, Bert L., Bangor.
 Sprague, Volney A., Dexter.
d Starrett, George, Bangor.
 Stetson, Charles, Bangor.
 Stetson, Edward, Bangor.
 Towle, E. B., Winn.
 Varney, John, Bangor.
 Waldron, L. B., Dexter.
 Walker, Elliot, Newport.
r Warren, A. S., Hampden.
 Warren, J. D., Bangor.
d Waterhouse, Asa, Bangor.
d Weeks, Matthias, Orono.
 Weston, Nathan, Jr., Bangor.
d Whiting, Samuel K., Bangor.
d Wilcox, George W., Dixmont. d Palmer, Andrew T., Bangor. r Parks, Gorham, Bangor.
d Perham, David, Bangor.
 Perkins, Nathan L., Bangor.
 Peters, John A., Bangor.
 Pierce, T. H. B., Dexter.
r Plummer, Stanley, Bangor. r Poor, Henry V., Bangor. r Pratt, George W., Dexter.
 Preble, Hiram J., Bangor.
d Prentiss, Henry E., Bangor.
r Randall, A. J., Passadumkeag.
 Rawson, James F., Bangor.
r Roberts, Charles P., Bangor.
d Robinson, Silvanus W., Bangor.
 Rowe, James S., Bangor.
 Sanborn, Daniel, Bangor.
 Seavey, W. F., Bangor.
 Sewall, George T., Oldtown.
d Shepley, George F., Bangor.
d Smith, Augustus C., Bangor.
 Smith, Ruel, Bangor.
 Sprague, M., Dexter.
 Stearns, Lewis C., Springfield.
 Stetson, Charles P., Bangor.
r Stevens, Thomas H., Bangor.
d Upton, Francis H., Bangor.
 Wakefield, Albert G., Bangor.
d Walker, Asa, Bangor.
d Walker, William L., Newport.
d Warren, Henry, Bangor.
r Washburn, Israel, Jr., Orono.
d Waterhouse, Asa, Bangor.
 Weston, George M., Bangor.
d Whitney, George W., Newport.
d Wiggin, Benjamin, Jr., Bangor.
r York, Waldo P., Bangor.

[GOVERNOR WASHBURN'S EULOGY.]

At the Orono Centennial in 1874, at which Ex-Governor Israel Washburn, formerly a lawyer in that place, pronounced the principal address, he gave the following eulogistic remarks to a member of the attorneys in this list:

What a Bar the county of Penobscot could boast thirty or forty years ago! Some of its members are still in practice in the county; there are upon the bench of our highest court those referred to in the address, and the learned and accomplished Chief Justice Appleton, who, happier than Lord Brougham, knew everything, including law. Of the older lawyers, who were about ready to retire from the courts when I came to this county, and who have since passed away, I remember the manly form and pleasant features of Jacob McGaw, the early friend and correspondent of Daniel Webster, by whom he was visited in his Bangor home seventy years ago, a lawyer of the old school, patient, faithful, persevering, strong. Allen Gilman, the first Mayor of Bangor, a man of smaller frame than McGaw, but of not less intellectual power; keen, clear, incisive, and indomitable — if sharp of tongue on occasion, warm and generous in heart: William D. Williamson, a lawyer, historian, and politician — like the triune bear he has immortalized, three varieties in one character: William Abbot, tall and angular in body, but of well-proportioned and symmetrical mind, and of incorrigible honesty: John Godfrey, sensible, diligent, and of unspotted integrity: Peleg Chandler, in immense top-boots and with cane in hand, the most noticeable form that walked the Bangor streets for many a year; his florid eloquence was especially dangerous to defendants in actions for breach of promise to marry, and against towns for damages by reason of defective highways; while among those who were then in the bloom and strength of their years, but have since followed their seniors to the silent land, were Jonathan P. Rogers:

George B. Moody, who was a careful and well-educated lawyer, and no "prentice-hand" at writing political-convention resolutions, and a true gentleman withal, but did not possess the sense of humor that shone so brightly in his brother in the profession — Thornton McGaw, a gentleman whose memory is a benediction, in whom strong and saving common-sense, culture, and exquisite humor were so admirably mixed that one could only see that while all these qualities were present in force, no one was crowded by the others; and there was another whom I cannot forget, whom it was always good to see and is now pleasant and profitable to remember for his delightful companionship and his genuine manliness—Elijah Livermore Hamlin.

Judge John A. Appleton.

But these brief reminiscences must not be left without some mention of the Judge in whose court these gentlemen of the green bag were wont to fight their battles and crack their jokes—the Hon. David Perham, an industrious man of considerable reading and general information, slow of speech and impervious to humor; not free, perhaps, from the influence of prejudice, but thoroughly honest. The anecdotes and stories connected with the Court of Common Pleas during the quarter of a century or more that Judge Perham was upon the bench, are innumerable.

Further and more extended notice of these worthies will be found below, from the pen of Judge Godfrey.

SOME GOOD STORIES.

We desire to add here a number of capital anecdotes of the old time Bench and Bar, given by Governor Washburn in the course of his centennial address. One not included is related by Judge Godfrey below:

About this time a suit was pending in the Supreme Court of the State, in which the title to the farm of Valentine Page, then occupied by Abram Reed, was involved. It was a suit in equity, John Bennoch, jr., plaintiff, vs. Joseph Whipple, defendant, and, as Mr. Reed, whose testimony in the case was deemed important, was in failing health, his deposition in perpetuum was taken. The counsel employed were Judge Cutting and the late Hon. William Abbot, of Bangor; the justices of the peace and quorum, by whom the deposition was taken, were Hon. Theophilus P. Chandler, then of Bangor and now of Boston, and myself. The place was the house of Reed. Opposite each other at the table were seated the lawyers and the magistrates, one upon a side, as if at whist; Mr. Reed was partly reclining upon a bed, while Mrs. Reed, knitting-work in hand, with eyes and ears open, was sitting demurely in a corner of the room. Many of the questions asked were objected to as leading or otherwise improper, and the answers as illegal and inadmissible, and so earnest discussion on the points was carried on by the lawyers, when, upon one of the justices venturing to make a suggestion, the injunction "No talking across the board!" from a shrill, sharp, positive voice in the neighborhood of the knitting needles, brought the contest to a sudden close, and the parties to it to excellent humor. After this the caption proceeded quietly to the end.

It was in 1834 or 1835 that a trial was progressing at Bangor, in the Court of Common Pleas, before Hon. David Perham, judge, in which it became necessary to account for the disappearance of a flock of sheep, and an effort was made to identify them with a large number of carcasses that were found in a neighboring barn. An Orono man, who was on the stand as a witness, was closely interrogated as to the number of bodies. He said there were "a good many." "But how many?" asked the counsel. "O, a big pile." "How big?" "O, as big as the pen place that fellow sits in up yonder," replied Dudley, pointing to the judge.

It was in the same court, and before the same judge, that Henri Van Meter, who lived for many years in the Dudley neighborhood, was terribly badgered by the counsel while he was being examined as a witness. He had got so badly mixed up that the judge thought he would help the poor African out of his trouble. "R, r, Mr. Van Buren, was, it r-r—" "Don't you say a word," expostulated Van Meter, turning to the Court with an expression mildly but earnestly deprecatory, "I have as much as I can attend to with these gentlemen down here."

I remember the trial of some one whose name I am unable to recall, before a justice of the peace—Colonel Buffum, probably—for stealing corn from the grist-mill in the village, at which a witness, by the name of Smith, was examined by the counsel for the State. A light snow had fallen during the night of the larceny, and the tracks of a man, leading from the mill were seen in it. Smith had carefully examined the tracks to find out if they were made by the prisoner, whose shoes had also been examined, and he said they appeared to him as if they were made by a "man who had about two bushels of corn on his back."

While the Bangor Lower Stillwater Mill Company was in the full tide of life—in the summer of 1836—a son of a Boston merchant and large shareholder in the company, a rather wild boy, was sent down to Orono to be kept out of harm. One day he came into my office, under extreme excitement. "I want to know," said he, "if there is any law in this State? I have been most shamefully abused, and I won't stand it. I was in a shoemaker's shop in Mill street, and they all set upon me, and old Johnson called me a— (using an adjective of most distinct blasphemy) fool, and now I want to know if I can't make him prove his words."

HON. JOHN APPLETON, LL. D.,

Chief Justice Supreme Judicial Court, was the only son of John and Elizabeth (Peabody) Appleton, born in New Ipswich, New Hampshire, July 12, 1804. In his fourth year his mother died, leaving, with himself, a daughter, who married George Gibson and died, leaving one child, Charles A. Gibson, now of Bangor. He attended the schools in New Ipswich, and fitted for college in the academy of that town. He graduated at Bowdoin College, in the class of 1822, studied law in the office of Charles F. Farley, Esq., of Groton, Massachusetts, and in the office of Nathan Dane Appleton, in Alfred, Maine. In 1826 he was admitted to practice in Amherst, New Hampshire. After admission he came to Dixmont, in this county, where he remained a few months; then went to Sebec (at that time also in this county), where he practiced his profession until 1832, when he came to Bangor. Soon after he came to this city he formed a connection in business with Elisha H. Allen. The style of the firm was Allen & Appleton. This connection continued until Mr. Allen was elected to Congress in 1840. The business of this firm was very large—too large to be profitable, strange as it may seem. For a period their entry was one hundred and more actions a term, one or other of the parties in each of which was supposed to be good, but proved, in many cases, to be worthless. The prosperity of the community had been fallacious; the fortunes made fictitious; and when the law put its grasp upon them, they were so many puff-balls. Court fees and sheriffs must be paid, and neither creditor nor debtor was disposed or able to respond. But, notwithstanding the unprofitableness of this part of their practice, the part involving questions of law was much more satisfactory. The investigation they stimulated placed both members in the front rank of the profession. In 1841 Mr. Appleton was made Reporter of Decisions, and the nineteenth and twentieth volumes of the Maine Reports bear testimony to the ability with which he performed his labor.

After Mr. Allen withdrew from the firm, Mr. Appleton was in copartnership successively with John B. Hill and Moses L. Appleton; and his business was always large.

In 1852 the District Court had been abolished, and all the business of that tribunal was transferred to the Supreme Judicial Court, provision having been made for it by the addition of three more justices to that court. The justices appointed by the Governor were Hon. Richard D. Rice, of Augusta, and Hon. Joshua W. Hathaway and Hon. John Appleton, of Bangor.

In 1862 Judge Appleton was made Chief Justice. He was re-appointed in 1869, and again in 1876, when seventy-two years of age. Now, at the age of seventy-seven, his natural vigor appears to be as great as it was at seventy-two; and the indications are that he will be as competent for re-appointment at seventy-nine years of age as he was at seventy-two. He is a ceaseless worker, and it would seem with him as if increase of capacity for labor "had grown by what it fed on." When not hearing cases he is in his study, and there is no abatement in the readiness and steadiness of his pen. He has been longer upon the Bench, disposed of more cases, and written more opinions than any other judge in Maine; and when he has retired, each member of the Bar can say, with verity:

"He was a 'judge,' take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."

His name and work as counsel, reporter, or judge, are continuous in the Maine Reports for about a half a century—from volume nineteen to volume seventy, inclusive. He has never meddled with politics. He has kept himself well acquainted with the literature of the day; but the object of his intellectual adoration has been the law. He has written much in relation to the rules of evidence, which was first published in the Jurist, and afterwards collected in a separate volume. It is understood that many statutory changes in the law of evidence and in other important branches of jurisprudence are owing to him.

Further particulars of Judge Appleton's life and services are given in his biography in a subsequent part of this volume.

HON. JOSHUA W. HATHAWAY,

Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, was born November 10, 1797. In 1816 he entered Dartmouth College, from which he went to Bowdoin. From the latter college he graduated in 1820. He held a high position in his class. After qualifying himself for the practice of law, he opened an office in Blue Hill in 1824. The next spring he removed to Ellsworth, where he acquired a large practice and became a leader in the profession. He represented the county of Hancock one year in the State Senate, and came to Bangor in 1847. On the resignation of Judge Allen the next year he was appointed to a seat upon the Bench of the District Court. After that court was abolished in 1852, he was given a seat upon the Bench of the Supreme Court, and held that position until 1859, when he resumed practice at the Bar. He died at the age of sixty-five.

Judge Hathaway's reputation as a lawyer was always high, and upon the Bench he administered the law with ability and impartiality. Possessed of great amiability and good sense, he ever avoided unpleasant collision. The Bar passed eulogistic resolutions at his death, which were presented by Hon. S. H. Blake, who said of him that "in his profession he acquired high rank and a large practice; that as a judge he presided always with dignity and urbanity;" that his published opinions were "remarkably well written," and "distinguished for their clearness, directness, and conciseness;" that his mind seemed naturally "to delight in plain statement, with enough only of foliage to relieve without concealing the size and strength of the trunk and limbs. His habits were plain, his tastes were plain, but he had fine culture, and his faculties harmoniously blended in the honest man, the able lawyer, and upright judge."

Chief Justice Appleton, in response, paid a high tribute to his worth. He had known him from the days of his college life, at the Bar, in common judicial labor, and in the delights of social intercourse; and in his long and laborious career he did not remember a harsh or unkind word spoken by him, an ungentlemanly expression or a discourteous remark. "He was satisfied with the full discharge of his duty, without scattering abroad imputations of fraud or allegations of dishonesty upon parties and upon opposing counsel. His arguments were forcible, though generally brief—for the jury rather than the public—for the cause rather than for display. . . . The duties of judicial life were not irksome to him. Patient in the trial of a cause, he gave ample time to elicit all the facts and the attention necessary for their just appreciation. . . . Evenly and impartially he held the scales of justice. . . . His kindly nature, his warm affections, his cheerful temper, and his courteous manners, endeared him to his friends. Enemies he had none."

JONAS CUTTING, LL. D.,

Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, was born in Croydon, New Hampshire, November 3, 1800. He graduated at Dartmouth College, where Rufus Choate was his tutor, in the class of 1823; studied law with Henry Hubbard, in Charlestown, New Hampshire, and with Ruel Williams, Augusta, Maine, and established himself in Orono in 1826. He came to Bangor in 1831, and formed a business connection with Judge Kent; the style of the firm being Kent & Cutting. The practice of this firm was large, and its clients of the best character; but the members of the firm were lawyers in the best sense of the term. The accumulation of money was of secondary importance with them, and they did not become rich. Their opinion in the most important cases was always sought and always relied on.

Mr. Cutting possessed a keen intellect, and had an extensive reputation as a technical lawyer. All cases submitted to him he examined carefully, and, with his habits of analysis, he was able to give always an opinion satisfactory to his clients, and, in many instances, to all the parties connected with the case. He was not a show lawyer; he made no flourish in manner or matter. Before a jury he was plain, clear, convincing; before the court discriminating, direct, and forcible. All listened with attention, and, if not always convinced, were impressed by his logical acumen. Such a lawyer could not always remain at the Bar. In 1854 he was elevated to the Bench, and maintained his reputation as a jurist until he retired to private life in 1875. On his retirement the Bar manifested their attachment and respect for him by the presentation of a handsome silver service, accompanied by a note from the Secretary, F. H. Appleton, Esq., in which he says: "It will be gratifying to you to know, as it is agreeable to me to inform you, that this slight token proceeds from the whole Bar, who, without an exception, by this simple gift desire to bear witness to your honorable name, your honest intellect, your ripe learning, your impartial judgment, and to the unstained integrity of your private and official life." At the meeting preliminary to the presentation, complimentary resolutions, prepared by William H. McCrillis, Frank H. Wilson, and Charles P. Stetson, Esqs., were adopted, and appreciative remarks were made by Mr. McCrillis and Abram Sanborn, Esq., and responded to by Chief Justice Appleton.

Judge Cutting died in Bangor in August, 1876. The Bar adopted resolutions, which were presented by Albert W. Paine, Esq., in which the expressions in the former resolutions of high respect for Judge Cutting's great learning and integrity were renewed and repeated; and Judge Kent followed in a strain of eulogy justified by "nearly fifty years of unbroken, uninterrupted, and most unreserved friendship." He said:

Political life had no charms for him, and its honors and enticements never seduced him from its chosen path. He fully realized that the law is a jealous mistress; and he escaped all chiding by constant devotion to his first love.

There is one word that better than any other characterizes the man, the magistrate, and the lawyer—integrity. When I say that Judge Cutting was a man of integrity, I mean that he was a man honest in thought, word, and deed, true to himself and his fellow-men.

The longer I live and the more I see of men, the less I value mere genius, eloquence, or success, and the more I value purity of life, integrity of purpose, and faithfulness in duty.

Judge Kent dwelt at length upon the virtues and excellences of his departed friend. Judge Peters responded, affirming all Judge Kent had said, and adding:

In character, in manners, in all things, a great excellence was his simplicity (using the word in its highest sense). He was modest at the Bar; he was arrogant nowhere. He presided upon the Bench with ease and simplicity. But nowhere did he display greater simplicity or purity of character than in all the walks of private life.

The State will remember Judge Cutting as one of her best jurists. The Bar will remember him as one of the most learned, laborious, able, and upright ministers of the law who ever sat upon our Bench. And all classes of men will remember him as the pleasant neighbor, the honest citizen, the wise counsellor, and the good and conscientious judge.

Chief Justice Appleton also responded, and said:

I entirely and fully agree with him [Judge Kent] in his estimate of our departed brother—a learned, able, impartial, and upright judge. Such with conscientious unanimity was the voice of the Bar, the Bench, and the public; and well may we mourn for one who was almost the last remaining link connecting us with the professional days of our early life.

HON. EDWARD KENT, LL. D.,

Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, youngest son of William Austin Kent, of Concord, New Hampshire, was born in that place on the 8th of January, 1802. His father was a native of Charlestown and his mother of Sterling, Massachusetts, she being a sister of Prentiss Mellen, the first Chief Justice of the State of Maine. The subject of this notice was educated and graduated at Harvard College in 1821; settled in the practice of the law at Bangor, Maine, in 1825; was successively a Representative in the State Legislature, Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions for Penobscot county, Mayor of the city of Bangor, Governor of the State of Maine for two terms, one of the commissioners on the part of Maine to settle the Eastern boundary question,

United States Consul for four years at Rio Janeiro, under President Taylor's appointment, and, after his return to this country, was for fourteen years one of the Judges of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. He received the degree of LL. D. from Waterville College in 1855, and died in Bangor May 19, 1877, greatly beloved as a genial companion and friend, and universally respected and honored as an able and upright judge, and an honest man.

Aside from his Gubernatorial messages and occasional newspaper articles, Judge Kent published little but his legal opinions, which are embodied in successive volumes of the Maine Reports.

Judge Kent was twice married—first to Miss Sarah Johnston, daughter of Nathaniel Johnston, Esq., of Hillsborough, New Hampshire. She died in 1853, leaving, of several children, but one daughter, since deceased. His last marriage was in 1855, to Miss Abby A. Rockwood, daughter of Rev. Otis Rockwood, formerly of Lynn, Massachusetts. She, and an only child and son, bearing the father's name, are still living, to honor his memory and mourn his death.

In estimating aright the character of Judge Kent, certain salient points, not prominent, though not wholly ignored, in his official relations, should not be overlooked. They go far, indeed, in making up the well-rounded life of our departed brother and friend. The most prominent of these traits were the openness of his nature, the amenity and kindness of his disposition from his youth up, and his capacity for and appreciation of wit and humor. It may be truly said, without detracting from the weightier points of his character, that he "was not only witty himself, but the cause of wit in others." It was, perhaps, humor rather than wit that he indulged in himself and appreciated the most in others—humor of a chastened kind, rather than that boisterous wit which would "set the table in a roar." A quaint conceit, or happy turn of expression, a play upon words, or verbal pun (which Dr. Johnson unfairly called the meanest kind of wit), would go further with him, dwell in his memory the longer, and be recalled with more satisfactory enjoyment than the ribald jest or the coarse and vulgar anecdote.

When Mr. Kent entered the Legislature he was twenty-six years old. He made himself conspicuous by resisting, against strong party opposition, the incorporation of the town of Argyle and connecting it to the Bangor Representative District, taking the ground that such an act would be a violation of the Constitution, which prohibited the alteration of the established representation until the next general apportionment. He was sharply criticized by his opponents, but he adhered to his position and had the satisfaction afterward of seeing it sustained by the Supreme Court.

Although the practice of his profession was more or less interrupted for several years by the political positions to which he was elected or appointed, yet his legal knowledge and acumen suffered nothing from the interruption. In 1859 he went upon the Bench of the Supreme Judicial Court, apparently as well fitted for the duties of the judgeship as if his judicial studies had never been disturbed. He was an admirable judge for fourteen years, up to three years beyond the age (seventy) to which the Constitution originally limited the tenure of the office.

After leaving the Bench Judge Kent spent a year with his family in travel in Europe. In 1874 he returned to Bangor and resumed the practice of the law, and was engaged in several important cases between that time and the time of his decease. The last public position he held was that of President of the Convention for the amendment of the Constitution of the State in 1875.

Judge Kent was always a favorite with the Bar and with suitors. With his kindness of manner, fondness for home, and happy way of disposing of annoyances, he kept the Court in a state of equilibrium. At one time an attorney appealed to him to settle a difference between him and the Clerk in regard to a matter of interest. The Judge inquired what the difference was, and was informed that it was six cents. Taking the trifle from his pocket he handed it to the attorney, and told him that that would settle it.

"I don't want your money," the man said; "I want it right."

"That makes it right," the Judge replied; "the business of the Court cannot be interrupted by a matter so easily rectified;" and he proceeded with the matter before him.

The Maine Reports for half a century contain evidence of Mr. Kent's ability as a jurist. He was fond of the intellectual labor that a thorough acquaintance with the law requires; and, up to within a few weeks of his decease, he was examining decisions and making himself acquainted with the recent application of legal principles in novel cases.

He was aware when death was approaching, and died like a philosopher. His sufferings were intense during his last hours, but his pure and consistent life had prepared to meet his end as became a Christian with the hope of a happy immortality.

The Bar took action at the time of his decease, and passed appropriate resolutions, which may be found in volume LXXVI. Maine Reports.

The remarks of members of the Bar were sincerely eulogistic. Albert W. Paine, Esq., who presented the resolutions, said:

As a politician, though firm and decided in his preferences, he knew no party prejudices. . . . In religious matters he was deeply imbued with the doctrines of liberal Christianity, in the best meaning of the term—free from all sectarianism. . . . As a lawyer he was kind and affable with his clients . . . discouraged litigation . . . studied his cases, and left no decisions unexplained, so that truth might be vindicated and justice done. . . . As a Judge Mr. Kent was by general consent regarded as signally fitted for the place.

Mr. McCrillis said:

Of commanding form and person, and of great physical strength, he was the gentlest of men; of rare talents, he was the most unassuming and modest of men. No person, even his most intimate friend, ever heard him claim any merit for himself.

Others followed, and Chief Justice Appleton said:

At an early day he rose to the highest rank at the Bar. . . .

As a jurist his written judgments will ever command the respect of the profession. While respecting authority, he respected more the great principles upon which authority rests.

Calmly, with no disturbing fear, with his intellectual vigor neither dimmed by age nor weakened by disease, trusting in the loving kindness of God, he met the fate predestined from the beginning for us all; and we cannot doubt that to him there was the joyful greeting: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

HON. JOHN A. PETERS,

Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, son of Andrew and Sally (Jordan) Peters, was born in Ellsworth, county of Hancock, on the 9th of October, 1822. He fitted for college at Gorham Academy, and graduated at Yale College, New Haven, in August, 1842. He studied law at the Cambridge Law School, and was admitted to the Bar in Bangor at the October term of the Supreme Judicial Court, in 1844. Mr. Peters was a diligent and discriminating student, and was well grounded in the principles of his profession when he commenced practice. It was not long before his abilities became known and appreciated. He possessed a fund of humor, popular manners, and imperturbable good nature, and made his way in all good time successfully with the jury, the court, and the public. He became a member of the Senate of Maine in 1862, and was continued as such through the year 1863. He became a member of the House of Representatives of his State in 1864, and was Attorney-General during the years 1864, 1865, and 1866.

Having become the most popular man in the Fourth Congressional District of Maine, comprising the counties of Penobscot, Piscataquis, and Aroostook, he was elected from that District to the XLth, XLIst, and XLIIId Congresses, from 1867 to 1873. In the XLth Congress he was upon the Committee of Patents and Public Expenditures, and in the succeeding Congresses upon the Committee on the Judiciary, and as Chairman on the part of the House upon the Joint Committee of the Senate and House on the Congressional Library. A vacancy having occurred on the Bench of the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine in May, 1873, Mr. Peters was selected by the Executive for that position. The appointment was concurred in by the Bar and the people as one eminently fit to be made, and on the expiration of his constitutional term of seven years, in May, 1880, he was re-appointed. By his courtesy, impartiality, clear exposition of the law and the facts to the jury, and lucid and accurate opinions, Judge Peters has won an enviable reputation as a judge.

HON. DAVID PERHAM,

Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, was born in Ashley, Massachusetts, February 10, 1780. He was the son of Peter Perham, a descendant of John Perham, who came from England and settled in Chelmsford, Massachusetts, in 1666. His mother was a daughter of Samuel Buttrick, of Concord, Massachusetts, and her mother was Dolly Flint, descendant of the family of that name who settled in that vicinity. He received his classical education at Groton Academy, Massachusets. He was a student at law in the office of Messrs. Dana & Richardson, of Groton, and was admitted to practice at the Court of Common Pleas in Middlesex county, in March, 1809. He opened an office in Acton, Massachusetts, but got the spirit of emigration to Maine, and in the summer of 1811 made his way to Orrington, where he established himself; but in the following year he found himself in Brewer, without having removed at all. In 1812 the town of Brewer was incorporated (taken from Orrington), and Judge Perham was near the southern boundary of the town, in the village at the mouth of the Segeunkedunk Stream, where he had a pleasant residence upon the bank of the Penobscot.

He continued in the practice of his profession until the year 1822.

In the spring of 1815 he received a commission from the President of the United States, appointing him the principal Assessor of the Collection District of Massachusetts, which consisted of the old county of Hancock. He discharged the duties of his office for two years, until the discontinuance of the direct tax, after the year 1816. After the organization of the State, in 1820, he was appointed Judge of Probate of the county of Penobscot, and held this office until 1822. On the organization of the Court of Common Pleas in 1822, he was appointed one of the Judges, and held the office until the court was abolished in 1839.

Many anecdotes are related of Judge Perham's court. One is recorded by ex-Governor Washburn. It is this: The "legal wag" from Oldtown demurred to a plea of the "general issue." "On what ground?" inquired the Judge. "Duplicity, your Honor;" a response which provoked an ejaculation from the lawyer on the other side and an audible smile from the gentlemen within the bar. "And may it please the Court," continued the counsel, "I beg to say that in this thing I am entirely serious." To which the Judge: "Mr. Sewall, that will not do in this court!"

In 1833 he removed to Bangor, where he occupied a brick house built by Rev. Mr. Huntoon, at the corner of Fifth and Cedar Streets, until his decease. After he left the Bench he held the office of Alderman for two years, and discharged the duties of the office with great faithfulness and ability.

Judge Perham was twice married—first, on the 5th of August, 1814, in Acton, Massachusetts, to Betsey Barnard; second, to Charlotte Gardner, at Roxbury, Massachusetts, October 13, 1830. By his first wife he had a son, who died early, and two daughters, who are living. By his second wife he had no children.

Judge Perham was not a rapid thinker, but he possessed rare good judgment, indomitable industry, great integrity, and singular purity of life. He died in Bangor on May 31, 1845. The editor of the Whig said of him that while he was Alderman he became intimately acquainted with him, and had "never been in the company of any man from whose lips so many lessons of ripe wisdom fell." A committee of the Penobscot Bar, of whom the present Chief Justice Appleton was chairman, prepared resolutions on the occasion of his death, which were "unanimously adopted." The preamble contains the following just tribute to his worth:—

On the Bench he exhibited ever learning, probity of mind, unwearied industry, perfect impartiality between suitors, and a careful purpose and anxious desire to administer the law to the promotion of justice.

In his social relations he commanded the respect of all by his kindness of disposition, the unassuming familiarity of his manners, the cheerfulness of his conversation, the extent of his general information, his readiness and ability in the discharge of his duties as a citizen, and the remarkable honesty and uprightness of his intentions.

HON. FREDERICK H. ALLEN,

Judge of District Court, in 1835-36, was born in New Salem, Massachusetts. He came to Bangor and connected himself in a law firm with Messrs. Jacob McGaw and John A. Poor. The style of the firm was McGaw, Allen & Poor, and continued until April 22, 1837, when it expired by limitation.

Mr. Allen was a man of fine abilities, a thoroughly read lawyer, a good advocate, and a gentleman. When the District Court was established, in 1840, he was appointed one of the judges for the Eastern District. His colleague was Hon. Anson G. Chandler, of Calais. Judge Allen held the office until 1849, when he retired. As a judge he was dignified, deliberate, impartial, and always courteous. On his retiring the Bar complimented him with a dinner, and passed resolutions which show the esteem in which he was held. They were drawn by George B. Moody, Esq., and affirm that "his administration of the law had been characterized by those qualities which give most lustre to the judicial station—by ample learning, quick perception, just discrimination, clear exposition, lucid arrangement of argument, and a comprehensive grasp of facts—intellectual merits, aided and illustrated by an unvarying impartiality, and by a personal deportment at once dignified, patient, and courteous, insuring that deference which is the need of the Bench, while it gracefully and kindly yielded the consideration due to suitors, to the officers of the Court, and the Bar." That, in thus recognizing his official merit, they "were not unmindful of his high personal character as a citizen, and the many talents and virtues which have secured to him, in his intercourse with society, the attachment, esteem, and respect of his associates and of this community.

HON. SAMUEL E. DUTTON,

Judge of Probate, was born in Hallowell, Maine, on the 16th of June, 1744. He was the son of Colonel Samuel Dutton and Ruth (Edwards) Dutton. His father was the son of John Dutton and Johanna (Crosby) Dutton; and John was the son of Samuel Dutton, who came from England in 1712, and settled in Billerica, Massachusetts. Samuel, having had a good preparatory education, studied law in Hallowell, and closed his course of reading in 1800. He came to Bangor early in 1801, and established himself in the profession. His father, Colonel Dutton, came to Bangor a year or two afterward, and purchased the farm a part of which is now the City Farm, where he built a one-story house, which is still standing and is one of the Poor-house buildings. In this house he died in 1807, at the age of sixty-three. The son, in 1802-03, built a two-story house on the lot between Main and Summer streets, fronting on Emerson street, a hundred or more feet therefrom. This house he occupied from 1803, most of the time, until 1831, when he died.

Samuel E. Dutton was one of the most prominent citizens of Bangor in the early part of the century. He was intrusted by proprietors with the agency of their lands in the county for many years. The town of Dutton (now Glenburn), where some of these lands were, was named for him. He was a good civil engineer, and frequently found occasion to use the compass and chain.

In Williamson's History of Belfast, page 608, may be found the following:

1812, April 7. Voted to accept the road from Upper Bridge to meet a road laid out by Samuel E. Dutton, Esq., across the land of Mrs. Swan.

He was the first Judge of Probate in the county, from its organization in 1816 to the separation in 1820. He was the first President of the Bangor Bank. He was instrumental in establishing the first newspaper in Bangor,—the Bangor Weekly Register. A letter from Mr. Peter Edes to him, dated "Augusta, 29th March, 1814," suggests that "a printer is wanted at Bath, but his friends advised him, if he "should leave Augusta, to prefer Bangor."

"I shall rely solely upon your opinion," he writes, "with respect to the eligibility of the place for a printer, confident that you would not advise me to a measure that you thought would be injurious to me." He wishes a subscription for a newspaper started, gives hints in regard to a name, etc. As will be seen in the Annals of Bangor, the paper was established in 1815.

Judge Dutton was largely instrumental also in having the permanent location of the Theological Institution in Bangor. He was a conservative man, and did not countenance great changes. Like his friend Edes, he adhered to the last century fashions with amusing tenacity. In his "small clothes with stockings to the knees," and coat of the olden time, "with square tails reaching almost to the ground," he was a very conspicuous object in the street during the first quarter of the century. The broad ruffles, however, extending from the waistband to the nose, he did not flaunt so long as some of his contemporaries. He was never a great persecutor of poor debtors; but was a good lawyer, and it was said that, when in practice, he had more influence with the jury than any other member of the Bar. When he died, in 1831, he was a little less than fifty-seven years of age.

HON. WILLIAM D. WILLIAMSON,

Judge of Probate, was born in Canterbury, Connecticut, July 31, 1779. His ancestor, Timothy Williamson, was a freeman of the Plymouth Colony in 1647, and went as a soldier from Marshfield in King Philip's war. His father was George Williamson, (third in descent from Timothy, a soldier of the Revolution, and in the battle of White Plains. He was a farmer, and had positions of trust where he resided previous to coming to Bangor, where he died in 1822, at the age of sixty-eight. William was a good son, and rendered his father all the assistance in his power upon the farm until he was disabled by an injury to his arm. He then concluded to obtain a liberal education. He entered Williams College, but taking offense at some action of the President, he removed to Brown University. "He graduated on the 5th of September, 1804, with the highest honors, having an oration in the afternoon and in the forenoon 'a syllogistic dispute' with three others, the best scholars in the class. The subject of the oration was 'The Soul;' that of the dispute was the question: 'Would not married people be as happy if their partners, instead of being chosen by themselves, were selected by civil authority?'"* After graduation he entered the law office of Samuel F. Dickinson, Esq., in Amherst, Massachusetts, where his father then resided. He afterward studied in the office of Hon. Samuel Thatcher, in Warren, Maine, and completed his reading as a student in the office of Jacob McGaw, Esq., in Bangor. He was admitted to the Bar during the session of the Court of Common Pleas at Castine, in November, 1807, and commenced practice soon afterwards in Bangor. Being well grounded in the principles of his profession, of mature years, possessed of an active mind, ardent temperment, and persevering industry, he was calculated to succeed. In 1808 he was appointed by Governor Sullivan County Attorney, for the county of Hancock. He continued in office until the law was repealed under which he was appointed in June, 1809. This law was revived June 18, 1811, and Mr. Williamson was re-appointed County Attorney by Governor Gerry, and continued to hold the office until the county of Penobscot was organized in 1816.

Mr. Williamson was a Democrat, and was fond of politics. He became a candidate for Senator in 1816, and was defeated. He was, however, elected Senator in 1817, and was re-elected the three succeeding years. After Maine became an independent State he was elected a Senator to the Legislature from Penobscot county, and held the office until he resigned in December, 1821, to accept the office of Representative to Congress, to which he had been elected.

Maine was admitted into the Union March 3, 1820. Its first Legislature was in existence from May 21, 1820, to the first Wednesday of January, 1822. Mr. Williamson was elected President of the Senate (to supply the vacancy occasionally by the resignation of General John Chandler, who was the first President, and resigned to accept the position of Senator in Congress), and by virtue of that position became acting Governor of the State, on the appointment of Governor King Commissioner under the Spanish treaty. In addition to the other offices held by Mr. Williamson prior to this was that of Postmaster of Bangor, to which he was appointed November 27, 1809, and in which he was continued until 1821, when he resigned, and Royal Clark was appointed. In 1821 Mr. Williamson was elected Representative to the Seventeenth Congress, and held the office for one term. While in Congress he labored with his usual diligence, and attended faithfully to his duties. In a speech he pressed the importance of military works upon the Penobscot, which led to a survey and finally the construction of Fort Knox.

*Memoirs by Hon. Joseph Williamson.

His first wife having died in June, 1822, on his return from Congress he brought with him his second wife, Susan E., daughter of Judge Phineas White, of Putney, Vermont, who died on March 9, 1824, at the age of twenty-one. In 1825 he married Mrs. Clarissa Wiggin, nee Emerson, who (in 1881) is living, at the age of ninety-two.

In the year 1824 Mr. Williamson was appointed to the office of Judge of Probate for Penobscot county, which he held until the year 1840. In 1834 and 1839 he was appointed Bank Commissioner, and in 1840 he was appointed chairman of a commission to visit the reformatory institutions of the Northern States, with a view to improvements in the State Prison. In 1817 he conceived the idea of writing the History of Maine, and while a member of the Massachusetts Senate commenced gathering materials for it. This work was given to the public in 1832, in two large volumes. It is a valuable work, and often referred to. The labor he bestowed upon it was immense. It is nearly out of print. At some future time a new edition, from under the hand of a competent editor, will be invaluable to a student of Maine history. It is the great work of Judge Williamson's life, and by it his name will be perpetuated.

By his first marriage Mr. Williamson had five children. His only son, William, a promising young man, died September 6, 1832, at the age of eighteen, a member of Bowdoin college. His daughters, all accomplished ladies, survived him. The youngest, Frances A., married Mayo Hazeltine, of Boston, and died in March, 1847. Of the other daughters (now widows), Caroline J. (now Mrs. Chapman) was first the wife of Nathaniel Haynes, a lawyer of Bangor, and is the mother of Professor Henry W. Haynes, recently of the University of Vermont; Harriet H., the second daughter, married Paul R. Hazeltine, a merchant of Belfast; Mary C., the third, married Livingston Livingston, a lawyer of New York, and has a son, Philip Livingston, a student in Columbia College.

Judge Williamson was a member of various historical societies, and was an original member of the Maine Historical Society. He was an untiring collector of facts, and the Maine and Massachusetts Historical Societies have been enriched by his labors. He was ambitious for the prosperity of the place of his residence. He was connected with the banks of the city, and was President of the People's Bank. He was instrumental in establishing the Academy, which bore the name of the Bangor Young Ladies' Academy, and in various ways he was connected with the school and other affairs of the town. He died at the age of sixty-six years, on May 27, 1846. Hon. Samuel W. Blake announced his death to the court, and, as chairman of the committee on resolutions, presented a series, from which the following is an extract:

A discerning Executive has honored him; an enlightened constituency has confided in him. In the Senate of Massachusetts and Maine; in the Congress of the United States; as acting Governor; in all the relations of society; in all the places of honor and trust, in public or private life, which he ever held, he discharged the duties incumbent upon him with integrity and fidelity. His leisure he devoted to general literature and historical pursuits. He has left behind him valuable contributions to the annals of New England, and his History of our own State will ever remain a monument of the indefatigable research and patient investigation of its author.

HON. DANIEL SANBORN,

Judge of Probate. After admission to the Bar, Judge Sanborn first established himself in Kenduskeag. He afterwards removed to Bangor. His business life has been divided between the law and political journalism. About 1853 he was an editor of the Bangor Daily and Weekly Journal. He was appointed Judge of Probate by Governor Crosby, and continued in that office until his successor was elected by the people in 1856-57. Afterwards he confined himself to the profession of the law until 1879-80, when he became the principal editor of the Bangor Commercial. Although Mr. Sanborn has not pretended to a high position as an advocate, yet he has attended faithfully to his duties as a lawyer and as a journalist.

HON. ENOCH BROWN,

Chief Justice of Court of Sessions, was born in Abington, Massachusetts, in 1781; graduated at Brown University; read law with Judge Padelford, in Taunton; came to Hampden very early in this century, about 1805, and established himself in practice at the "Lower Corner." He and Mr. Godfrey were contemporaries in the profession in that town until 1820. Until 1816 they attended the courts at Castine. Their town conceived so high an opinion of their capacity that the selectmen at one time vested them with the powers of jurymen, imagining that, while attending to the business of their clients, they could as well as not try whatever cases might come before them. The Court, however, could not overlook the incompatibility of the two functions of attorney and juror, and directed the counselors to take their places at the Bar.

Mr. Brown was a good lawyer and an excellent citizen. He continued in Hampden until the year 1835, when he removed to Bangor. He speculated somewhat in lands after he came to Bangor, and did something in the profession. He died about the last of the year 1838, very suddenly. The Bar in January, 1839, adopted resolutions of respect, drawn up by George B. Moody, Esq., which bear testimony to his "cultivated mind, blameless life, unimpeached morality, high principles, and active industry."

Mr. Brown was intermarried with Melinda, daughter of Judge Padelford. They had ten children, five sons and five daughters. Among the sons were Enoch Emery Brown, Esq., a lawyer in Somerset county, recently deceased; Augustus I. Brown, Esq., a lawyer, who died a few years since in New York; and Hon. James S. Brown, a lawyer of Milwaukee, former Mayor of that city, and once a member of Congress from Wisconsin and Attorney-General of that State, now deceased.

HON. JOHN GODFREY,

Chief Justice of Court of Sessions. Mr. Godfrey was the son of John Godfrey, of Taunton, Massachusetts, and the sixth of his line in America. The first was Richard, of the "ancient family of Godfrey," which, according to Burke's Commoners, "is supposed to derive from Godfrey le Fauconer, lord of the manor of Hurst, in Kent, as early as the reign of Henry II." Richard came from England and settled in Taunton in 1652, having with him Richard, born in 1651. This Richard, Jr., was the father of John, who was the father of George, who was the father of John, who was the father of the subject of this sketch. These ancestors were all farmers, and died in Taunton at a good old age. They were very conservative and very decided. The first John and George were active magistrates; had military commissions—John that of captain under George II., and George that of Brigadier-General under the Republic (hence was called "the Brigadier,")—and, as well as the second John, were prominently connected with the town business and were Representatives in the Legislature of the State. George was colleague with Robert Treat Paine in 1779.

John, the subject of this sketch, was born in Taunton May 27, 1781. He labored hard upon his father's farm in his early years, but had the advantages of the schools of the town. When about eighteen or nineteen years old, at the raising of his father's house, in wrestling his shoulder was injured. This accident led to its being determined that he should be educated. By close application he was enabled to enter Brown University, at Providence, a year in advance. On graduating he entered the office of Mr. Sprout, one of the best lawyers in the Commonwealth, and the only one in Taunton, besides Judge Padelford, who took students. After finishing his course, he came to Hampden and established himself in the profession in 1805-06, at the "Upper Corner." He did more; he started a small farm, with a determination to "get on." The love of farming had come down to him from his ancestor Richard, and his college training had not overcome his love of it.

He married Sophia, daughter of Colonel Samuel Dutton, who had a few years before removed from Hallowell to Bangor. He remained in Hampden about fifteen years. He was there at the time of the British victories, and was locked up in the cabin of a British war vessel, with others, as a prisoner of war, and detained one night, made memorable to him by his nearly dying of thirst. His house was used as an hospital, his library was taken by the British soldiers and put into a martin-house and with it converted into a bonfire, and his horse was appropriated by American thieves.

The effect of this British raid was to prostrate business, and he took his wife and four children to the place of his nativity, where he remained for a time in the practice of his profession. He returned to Hampden, however, in 1815, and there continued until 1820, when he formed a connection in business with Hon. Samuel E. Dutton, in Bangor, to which place he removed his family in 1821.

The connection was not of long continuance. Mr. Godfrey was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions in 1823, and had for associates Ephraim Goodale, Esq., of Orrington, and Seba French, Esq., of Dexter. In 1825 he was County Attorney, and held the office for seven years. Municipal trusts were committed to him in both Hampden and Bangor, and he was more or less connected with the business of Bangor and of the county for many years. He discharged all his duties intelligently and faithfully. He was a believer in work. When he was not employed in professional labor, his hands found something to do at his home. His garden was his place of recreation. In manner he was unassuming, but decided. He was not fond of innovations. The religion of his fathers was his religion, and he was about as conservative as his ancestor, George, who would not hear a preacher who emitted the faintest odor of heresy more than once. He was a grave man, not given to much speech, but possessed of a dry humor that was appreciated. Once he presided at a meeting where the Bar were preparing to take some action complimentary to Judge Frederick H. Allen, who was about to remove from the State. Judge Hathaway, from a committee, reported that a dinner be tendered him on a certain day as six o'clock.

The Chairman.—"In the morning or evening?"

Judge Hathaway.—"In the evening, of course. Who ever heard of a dinner being given in the morning?"

The Chairman.—"I suppose it might be as well to give it at one end of the day as at the other. It is customary with us to have it about mid-day."

Apart from the conventionality, a dinner would have been as agreeable to him in the morning as in the evening, for he usually accomplished two or three hours' labor before breakfast. He had fixed political views, though not a demonstrative politician. What public trusts were conferred on him came without his prompting, because of the confidence reposed in him.

He died May 28, 1862, at the age of eighty-one. Mr. Jacob McGaw made the announcement of his death to the court, following it with eulogistic remarks and complimentary resolutions of the Bar. Chief Justice Tenney responded, and said, among other things,—

He has always been distinguished for his respect for the courts and courtesy to his professional associates; for his unbending integrity and his fidelity to his clients, who, having once employed him, seldom sought the aid of other counsel; and in some instances he has been a standing agent of municipal corporations for a series of years together, to take charge of their business in Court. The first time I was ever in Court in this place, many years since, Mr. Godfrey was the attorney for the county, and I was struck with the discretion and ability with which he conducted the criminal business. His conduct as a citizen was regulated by an elevated moral standard which all acknowledged and felt. In his domestic relations, of which I had some knowledge he took the deepest interest, and in the discharge of the duties therein, he evidently found his great happiness.

JAMES GODFREY,

second son and ninth child of John Godfrey, was born in Bangor, October 8, 1822; fitted for college in Bangor, entered Waterville, and graduated from Bowdoin College in 1844. After graduating he spent two years in teaching in Alabama; returned to Bangor, and entered his father's office as student at law in 1846. After admission to the Bar in Bangor, he went to Wellsboro, where he commenced practice. Not being satisfied with the situation he went to Houlton, where he soon acquired an encouraging business.

1892

John E. Godfrey.

In September, 1848, he intermarried with Mary Carter, daughter of George Wheelwright and sister of Hon. J. S. Wheelwright. His class secretary, F. S. Washburn, Esq., in his report at the class meeting in Brunswick, August 21, 1852, said:

In due time a daughter was born. All was bright and joyous to that gaze which could not penetrate the dim future, over which sorrow and death cast no warning shadow. Hope was buoyant; joy was full. Yet a few hours soon came, when disease seized with iron grasp the stalwart frame, which bent in a few days, and finally yielded to the power of death. All of earth that remained of our classmate was buried in Mount Hope Cemetery, Bangor.

His daughter soon followed him. He died August 30, 1850, at the age of twenty-eight. The Bar of Aroostook county adopted resolutions at his decease, and put on record "that, though he had been with us but little more than two years, yet he had become favorably known to the community as a gentleman of strict probity, to his brethren of the Bar an obliging and kind friend, a faithful counselor and an affable opponent, whose industry and application gave promise of a highly respectable position in the profession."

HON. THOMAS A. HILL,

Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions, was born in Surry, New Hampshire, in 1783. He established himself in the profession in Waterville for a time, came to Bangor in 1812, afterwards went into partnership with Hon. Samuel E. Dutton. The copartnership continued until about 1820. He afterwards formed a business connection with George Starrett, Esq., which continued until 1834, when he gave up the practice. While in the profession Mr. Hill did a large business; he had also business in connection with the town and county. He was a director and important agent in the management of the Bangor Bank. He was appointed by the Governor Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions in 1829, and continued in that office and as Chairman of the County Commissioners until 1835. He was also President of the Lafayette Bank.

When the Anti-Masonic party was in existence in the State he was its candidate for Governor. Mr. Hill died in December, 1864, at the age of eighty-one years. The Bar passed resolutions of respect, in which they said that as a lawyer "he was always faithful to his client, patient and untiring in his industry in his behalf, prudent, intelligent, and assiduously careful in guarding and promoting his interest; a sound and safe adviser, a sagacious and successful practitioner. As a citizen he was public-spirited, laboring to promote the interests of this growing community with a wise forecast and zealous activity, having in many of the improvements of the city, made in his days and which were due in a great measure to his suggestions or his efficient cooperation, enduring monuments of his good taste and wise provision for the future."

Mr. Hill was twice married. His first wife was Mrs. Elizabeth Long, widow of Robert Long, of Newburyport, and daughter of Hon. Francis Carr, of Bangor. They had two daughters—Elizabeth, who became the wife of John A. Poor, Esq., and died January 14, 1837, at the age of twenty-two, leaving a daughter, Laura E., who has made a reputation as a Sanscrit scholar, and Jane, a lady of culture and literary distinction, who became the wife of Moses L. Appleton, Esq., and is still living. Miss Stevens, of Gardiner, became Mr. Hill's second wife. They had one daughter, Emily, who is the wife of Mr. Hurlbut, of Boston.

HON. THORNTON MCGAW,

Chairman of the County Commissioners, was born in Derry, New Hampshire, and came to Bangor in the year 1824. After studying with his uncle, Jacob McGaw, in this city, he was admitted to the Bar; and in June, 1826, he was admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Judicial Court. Mr. McGaw possessed studious habits and a good legal mind. His abilities soon became known and appreciated. In 1835 he was appointed Chairman of the County Commissioners. He became the agent of proprietors of lands in Dutton and Kirkland (now Glenburn and Hudson), and managed their business with great prudence and ability. He was at one time Clerk of the House of Representatives of Maine. He intermarried, October 19, 1826, with Ann Frances, a beautiful and accomplished daughter of Joseph Carr, Esq., who died February 12, 1847, leaving one child, a daughter, Annie Thornton, who became the wife of Charles W. Adams, Esq., of Boston. After his bereavement Mr. McGaw was much of the time away from Bangor, having gradually relinquished the practice of his profession. In 1855 he formed a matrimonial connection with Mrs. Esther T. Hathorn, and occupied the mansion which he built at the corner of Kenduskeag Avenue and Division street (afterwards purchased and enlarged by Hon. Henry E. Prentiss, and now owned and occupied by his widow), until his death, which occurred October 6, 1859.

Mr. McGaw was a well-read lawyer, possessed a clear, discriminating mind, and was faithful to all his trusts. He was a genial companion, and, possessing a fund of anecdote and a happy manner, was always entertaining. He had a lively recollection of everything amusing that occurred in his practice, and related incidents having a tinge of the humorous or ridiculous with great glee. In one case in court, where he wanted a continuance and urged as a reason that the depositions on which he relied were not at hand, the opposing counsel remarked that he had some depositions, and his brother could have the benefit of those. McGaw desired to see them, and was permitted to do so. On examining them he said:

"Very well, brother W.: I will take this," holding one up, "and we will go to trial."

It was agreed. Mr. McGaw used his opponent's deposition and won the case. On another occasion before Judge P., where a witness who was a friend to the party to whom Mr. McGaw was opposed, testified somewhat incoherently, the Judge, in instructing the jury, said:

"If the witness testified"—so and so—"your verdict will be for the defendant."

"That's just it, your Honor," said the witness, jumping up; "that's just what I said!"

The Judge went on without noticing the interruption. There was no remedy. The Judge's hypothesis was made reality, to McGaw's horror, and he of course lost his case.

The Bar passed resolutions of respect, in which they referred to his "honorable professional character as a counselor of the courts; of his integrity as a man; and of his social and generous qualities as a gentleman, a companion, and a friend."

HON. CHARLES STETSON,

Judge of Municipal Court, was born in New Ipswich, New Hampshire, in November, 1801. His father was Simeon Stetson, who came to Hampden very early in the century. Mr. Stetson, the subject of this sketch, prepared for college at the Hampden Academy and graduated at Yale College in 1823. He read law first with Enoch Brown, in Hampden, and in his closing year with John Godfrey, in Bangor. He was admitted to practice as an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas in Bangor, in June, 1826; as an attorney of the Supreme Judicial Court in June, 1828, and as a counsellor of the same court in June, 1830.

He commenced practice in Hampden soon after his admission to the Court of Common Pleas, and acquired quite a large business. He afterwards removed to Bangor, and continued in the practice for several years.

After Bangor became a city, in 1834, he was appointed Judge of the Municipal Court, and held that office until 1837, when he was appointed Clerk of the Courts. In 1845, 1846, and 1847 he was a member of the Governor's Council from the Penobscot District. In 1849 and 1850 he was Representative from the Fifth (Penobscot) District in the Thirty first Congress.

Judge Stetson performed the duties of the several offices he held ably and faithfully. He retired from the profession several years ago, and, being possessed of an ample competency, "enjoys his ease with dignity."

CHARLES P. STETSON, son of Hon. Charles Stetson, was born in Bangor; prepared for college under David Worcester, Esq., Principal of the Bangor High School, who said of him that he was one of the best scholars, if not the best scholar, in all the branches that he ever had under him. He graduated at Yale College, the alma mater of his father, in 1855; was admitted to the Bar in 1857, and has practiced law in Bangor ever since. He was County Attorney for Penobscot county from 1862 to 1874—twelve years—and was a very able and successful officer.

Mr. Stetson has a high standing at the Bar, and is considered one of the best lawyers in the State. He has for several years been counsel for the European & North American Railway, of which he is a director, and is employed in many of the most important litigated cases.

HON. SAMUEL F. HUMPHREY,

Judge of Police Court, was born in Londonderry, New Hampshire, fitted for college at Pinkerton Academy, in Derry; graduated at Bowdoin College in 1848, subsequently had charge for four years of Foxcroft Academy, Piscataquis county, studied law with Albert W. Paine, of Bangor, and was admitted to the Bar in 1853. He was elected Judge of the Police Court of the city of Bangor in 1860 and held the position eight years; was a member of the House of Representatives of the State from Bangor in 1870 and 1872; was appointed Examiner of the National banks of Maine in 1872, and has held the position ever since. As a teacher, lawyer, legislator, and in whatever other capacity Judge Humphrey has been employed, he has performed his duties intelligently, conscientiously, and satisfactorily. As a judge he was firm, judicious, and impartial, and his retirement from the position was much regretted. He is quiet in his habits, and courteous, well-read in the law, and stands high in his profession and as a citizen.

HON. HENRY C. GOODENOW,

Judge of Police Court. Henry Clay Goodenow, second son and third child of Judge Daniel Goodenow and Sarah Ann (Holmes) Goodenow, was born in Alfred, Maine, June 23, 1834. He prepared for college in Alfred and North Yarmouth academies, and entered Bowdoin in August, 1849. He graduated in 1853, then taught the high school at Davis' Mills, Newfield, Maine. He began the study of law in Alfred January 7, 1854; taught the Alfred academy one term, in the spring, then resumed the study of law; was admitted to the Bar in York county in September, 1856, and commenced practice in Biddeford in November. In 1858 he removed to Lewiston and became a law-partner with Hon. Charles W. Goddard. In 1861 the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Goddard having been appointed Consul-General at Constantinople. In 1864 Mr. Goodenow was a member of the Common Council, and in 1865 and 1866 in the Board of Aldermen. In 1866 he removed to Bangor and engaged in the corn and flour business. In 1869 he resumed the practice of law. In 1870, and for four or five years afterward, he was on the Superintending School Committee. During 1871, 1872, and 1873 he was City Solicitor, until appointed by Governor Perham Police Judge of the city, entering upon the duties of that office April 30. He occupied that position by successive elections or appointment until December, 1870, when he resigned.

Judge Goodenow is well read in the law, and has had a successful practice. As a judge he gave excellent satisfaction, and when a "reform" city government reduced his salary from twelve hundred to six hundred dollars a year, he would have been justified in resigning for the reason that the "honor" of the office did not compensate him for the loss of the professional business it occasioned him. He resigned for other reasons, however, and resumed the practice of law in December, 1880. Judge Goodenow, in 1860, intermarried with Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter and Sarah (Quinby

Brown, of Bangor. They have three sons and three daughters.

HON. ISRAEL WASHBURN,

War Governor of Maine, was born in Livermore, Maine, June 6, 1813. He received a classical education, and after the preparatory reading was admitted to the Bar, in 1834. He established himself in practice in Orono in December, 1834. He had a large business, and was one of the foremost members of the Bar of Penobscot County. In 1842 he was a member of the Legislature from Orono. He was elected Representative to Congress from the Fifth District in 1830, and was a member of the XXXIId, XXXIIIId, XXXIVth, XXXVth, and XXXVIth Congresses. Having been elected Governor, he resigned the office of Representative in order to accept that office.

Mr. Washburn was one of the best of the war Governors. He labored incessantly, and performed his whole duty. He held the office for two years. In 1863 President Lincoln appointed him Collector of Portland. This required his removal to that city, and he has since made it his home.

Governor Washburn discontinued practice at the Bar several years since. He has of late interested himself in historical matters, has published a very interesting history of the town of Orono, and is an active member of the Maine Historical Society. A year or two since he read before that society an interesting and valuable paper on the Northeastern Boundary, which is published in the eighth volume of its Collections.

HON. HARRIS M. PLAISTED,

Governor of Maine, is a member of the Penobscot Bar. At the commencement of the war of the Rebellion he was instrumental in raising troops, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Regiment of Maine Infantry. He has the title of General. After the war he returned to the profession, and in 1873 was Attorney-General of the State. The duties of this office he performed with diligence and faithfulness, and with such ability as to leave it with eclat. He was elected to the XLIVth Congress from the Fifth District of Maine, and served the last year of the session in place of General Samuel F. Hersey, deceased. He now occupies the position of Governor of the State. He is a man of indomitable perseverance, and generally accomplishes what he undertakes.

HON. ELISHA H. ALLEN,

Minister from the Hawaiian islands, was born in New Salem, Massachusetts, January 28, 1804. He came to Bangor about 1830; was admitted as an attorney to the Supreme Judicial Court in June, 1831; was in co-partnership with Judge Appleton several years, and with Mr. Appleton and John B. Hill, the firm name being Allen, Appleton & Hill; was in the City Council of Bangor on its first organization in 1834; was Representative in the Legislature from 1836 to 1841, and in 1846. In 1838 he was Speaker of the House of Representatives; was Representative in Congress from the Fifth Maine District from 1841 to 1843, serving on the Committee of Manufactures. In 1847 he removed to Boston, and was elected to the Massachusetts Legislature in 1849. He was afterwards appointed Consul to Honolulu, and has since been connected with the Government of the Sandwich Islands. In 1856 he was envoy from the Sandwich Islands to the United States. From 1857 until 1879 he was Chief Justice and Chancellor of those islands. He is now Minister Resident at Washington from the Sandwich Islands.

Judge Allen, while in practice, stood high at the Bar. He attended carefully to the interests of his clients; was entirely reliable; affable and courteous, he was always popular.

HON. ALBERT G. JEWETT,

ex-Charge d'Affaires to Peru, was born in Pittston, Kennebec county, November 27, 1802; graduated at Waterville College in 1826; read law with Joseph Williamson, in Belfast, and was admitted to the Bar in March, 1829. He soon after established himself in the profession in Bangor. The impression he made at his advent was not propitious; but he neglected no opportunity to make himself known. He was a frequent speaker in the Bangor Lyceum, and his orations were not esteemed the best specimens of rhetorical art. But he had pluck and persistence. He talked in the lyceum, he talked in the caucus, and whenever and wherever an opportunity offered. If he was aware of a blunder it was no cause of discouragement. Of course such a man must become known, must have admirers, must be employed. Not a great many terms of the court passed before his name was known to the extremes of the county. In about three years after he commenced practice he became County Attorney, and no one could help knowing him then. He had great powers with the jury, and was very successful in his prosecutions. General Hodsdon, the clerk, said that he seldom, if ever, failed of convicting. An anecdote is related of him which should cause him to be remembered, if he could not depend upon many other things for fame, as he can. The grand jury had indicted a fellow for an outrage. Mr. Moody conducted the defense, and introduced law to the effect that unless there was an outcry by the person upon whom the outrage was committed, there was no crime, and the verdict should be for the defendant; and he argued the point at length that, as there was no outcry proved, the jury must infer consent and acquit his client.

Mr. Jewett in reply said:

"My brother Moody argues that, as the woman made no outcry, her consent must be inferred; and he has brought in a whole armful of old, musty English law-books to satisfy the court and jury that such is the law! What of it, gentlemen; what of it? Suppose it is the law?" Then, raising his naturally penetrating voice to the highest pitch, he cried: "What did she know about the law? She never read those law-books;—a poor, ignorant, country girl! What did she know about the law? Good God, gentlemen! If she had known what the law was, she would have screamed so as to have been heard ten miles!"

Of course, the rascal was convicted.

One of Mr. Jewett's greatest efforts was in the Rines case, mentioned in the Annals of Bangor, in this volume. A report of his argument is in the Bangor Daily Whig and Courier of February 13, 1837.

Mr. Jewett's practice became large, and it was thought that he acquired a large property in this city. He built the fine residence now owned by Albert Emerson, Esq., on Summer street.

In 1845 he gave up the practice in Bangor, and accepted from President Polk the position of Charge d' Affaires to Peru. After three years' indulgence in the climate of that Republic, he concluded to have some experience of French life, and went to Paris, where he spent much time, and witnessed the French manner at the Bar and in the Forum, and, judging from his own style after his return, he was evidently impressed by it. After he left France he was for a time in Brunswick, Georgia, and then came to Bangor, but not to remain. In 1858 he engaged in the practice of law in Belfast, and has been retained in many important cases since. He has been more or less interested in politics always, and his voice has often been heard in public gatherings, as well as at the Bar, since he established himself at Belfast. The people of that city had such regard for his abilities that they made him their Mayor in 1863, 1864, and 1867. Mr. Jewett was always a busy man, and what his hands found to do he did with his might, and now, at nearly eighty years of age, he cannot be idle.

HON. ALLEN GILMAN.

Mr. Gilman was born in Exeter, New Hampshire, July 16, 1773. He was the third son of John Ward Gilman and Hannah Emery. Major John Gilman, an officer in the expedition to Louisburg in 1645, and in the French and Indian war, was his paternal grandfather. The Rev. Stephen Emery, of Chatham, Massachusetts, was his maternal grandfather. Allen was a student in Exeter Academy, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1791. He studied law with Judge Oliver Peabody, of Exeter, and established himself in his profession first in Gardiner, Maine, in 1796. While there he married Pamela Augusta, a rarely attractive lady, a daughter of General Henry Dearborn. In 1798, soon after his marriage, he removed to Hallowell. His wife died in October, 1799, leaving a daughter named for her, who became the wife of Major Dearborn, of the United States Army. Both of these have deceased. After the death of his wife he went to that part of Orrington which is now Brewer, where he remained a year, and the next year (1801) established himself in his profession in Bangor. He was possessed of a quick, discriminating intellect, and bore the reputation of being a "good lawyer." He was quiet in his manner and of modest habits. He was of unquestionable integrity, and had the confidence of his fellow-citizens. When Penobscot county was established in 1816, he was appointed Register of Probate, and held the office until Maine became a State. When Bangor was created a city, in 1834, Mr. Gilman was elected its first Mayor, and was re-elected the next year. He possessed great decision of character, and his administration was successful. For the infringement of an ordinance defining the limits within which wooden buildings should not be erected, by Dexter E. Wadleigh, in removing a wooden building from one point to another within the limits, the Mayor caused it to be torn down. Mr. Wadleigh denied that removing the building was erecting it, and carried the question to the Supreme Court, which sustained the Mayor. On one occasion, when he was repairing, or rebuilding, a bridge which had been a source of trouble by its sides separating, a worker in iron passing by suggested iron rods with clamps as a protection against such casualty in future. "Yes," said the Mayor, "and the next that comes along will be a shoemaker, and he will suggest shoe-strings."

Mr. Gilman possessed taste, and early in the century, selecting the acknowledged most beautiful site in the city at the time, erected a fine mansion thereon, afterwards remodeled by M. Schwartz, Esq., and now St. Xavier's Convent. In his contract for the carpenter-work he stipulated that liquor should be no part of the consideration. In that day rum was an implied factor in such transactions. He guarded himself by having the full consideration expressed.

Mr. Gilman married a second wife in 1806. She was the daughter of Colonel John Brewer, of Brewer. He had by her five sons and two daughters.

Mr. Gilman was small in stature. In the latter part of his life he was in feeble health, and died April 7, 1846, in the seventy-third year of his age. The Bar of this county made honorable mention of him as a man "known for the quickness of his perceptions, for his legal acumen and his general acquaintance with legal principles. Highly respectable in all the departments of practice, it is not, perhaps, too much to say that he was not excelled as a skillful, accurate, and accomplished conveyancer. Into his professional intercourse he brought that urbanity, cheerfulness, intelligence, pleasant conversation, and agreeable manners which all acknowledged to be his distinguishing characteristics as a man and gentleman. Remarkable for his strength of will, for his firmness of purpose, and an energy of character little to be expected in a frame of body somewhat fragile, he was always conspicuous as a member of society and a citizen."

PELEG CHANDLER.

Mr. Chandler came from New Gloucester to Bangor about 1827. He was born about 1773, and was a classmate in Brown University with the late Chief Justice Whitman, who entered that College in 1791. Mr. Willis, in his "Law and Lawyers of Maine," says that Mr. Chandler told him this story: He was studying with Rev. Mr. Briggs, of Halifax. When he went to Providence to be examined for admittance he was in rather low spirits. "While musing along," Mr. Chandler says, "on my old Rosinante, I saw a person some fifty rods ahead. As he approached I saw he was a young man with a large bundle tied up in a bandanna handkerchief hung over his back on a cane. He had on no coat or jacket or stock; he wore an old pair of nankeen breeches, and I think had his stockings and shoes in one hand, suspended by his garters. When he got within two or three rods he sat down under the shade of an oak. As I approached he saluted me by saying: 'I guess you are going to college; ain't you? You had better get off and take comfort with me under the shade.' This man is now Chief Justice of Maine (1843), and this was the first time I ever saw or heard of him. We lay on the ground under this tree three or four hours. I told him who I was, and all about my difficulties and my fears that I should not be able to enter college. He gave me words of courage; gave me the key to his room (as he had been there the freshman year), and we agreed to 'chum' together. . . . Whitman was at that time sixteen, and I almost nineteen."

As may be inferred from the manner in which he relates the above anecdote, Mr. Chandler was a man of much humor and capable of entertaining a jury, which he did. He practiced in Bangor quite successfully until 1847, when he died. The Bar passed resolutions of respect on the occasion of his death, testifying to his "social virtues and professional courtesy and fidelity."

Mr. Chandler married a sister of Chief Justice Parsons, and was the father of those two eminent lawyers, Theophilus P. Chandler and Peleg W. Chandler, of Boston.

HON. WILLIAM ABBOT.

This sterling man did not become a resident of Penobscot county until after he had been a member of the Bar for twenty-nine years. He established himself in Bangor in 1829, and made his home there until he died, in 1849. He was the sixth in descent from George Abbot, who emigrated from Yorkshire, England, in 1644, and settled on a farm in Andover, Massachusetts. His father, William Abbot, was born in Andover, and when young settled in Wilton, where he resided until he died in 1793, at the age of forty-six. He was a member of the State Convention in New Hampshire which adopted the Constitution of the United States, and was a highly respected citizen.

Upon his father's farm the subject of this notice acquired a taste for horticulture, which he never lost. He prepared for college in a town school in Wilton, under Jonathan Fisher, who afterward became the minister of Blue Hill, Maine. Harvard College was his alma mater. He graduated in 1797, with a high character for industry and moral worth. He read law with William Gordon, of Amherst, New Hampshire, a lawyer of eminence; was admitted to the Bar in 1800, and commenced the practice of law in Castine, in the county of Hancock, in 1801. In 1802 he married Rebecca, daughter of Dr. Israel Atherton, a physician of eminence in Lancaster, Massachusetts.

Mr. Abbot was one of those men whose personal appearance inspires confidence. The business men of the town soon learned that his appearance did not deceive them, and they intrusted their affairs in his hands. He was a sound lawyer, and gave diligent attention to the calls of his profession. In 1803 he was appointed Register of Probate for Hancock county, and held the office for eighteen years, until Maine became an independent State. In 1816 he was one of the Presidential Electors. He was also in that year chosen a member of the convention at Brunswick, on the question of the separation of the State from Massachusetts, and represented his town in opposing the measure. He was a member of the convention at Portland, in 1819, that framed the Constitution of the State, and was on the committee to report a name for it. He was afterwards a member of the Legislature, in 1821, 1823, 1826, and 1827.

On his removal to Bangor, Mr. Abbot entered immediately into practice. His reputation was known, and important matters were put into his charge. His personal appearance inspired the same respect and confidence that it did in Castine. The town very soon placed him upon the Board of Selectmen. He was chairman of the Board when Bangor became a city, and was chairman of the committee that prepared the city charter; was chairman of the school committee of the city for several years; was instrumental in establishing the grade of schools; and was Mayor of the city from March, 1848, to August, 1849, when he died.

Mr. Abbot had a taste for music, as well as for horticulture. His family must have been musical. His brother, Dr. John Abbot, who practiced in Hampden and Bangor during the greater part of his professional life, was a noted musician. William taught music in his early life in Massachusetts and Connecticut, and when he graduated delivered a poem on the subject.

The Penobscot Bar passed resolutions, reported by Elijah L. Hamlin, Albert W. Paine, and Charles Stetson, Esqrs., which bore cordial "testimony to his many estimable qualities, his patient industry, his fidelity, truthfulness, and honest zeal for his client, and for the constant exhibition of those kindly feelings which have endeared him to us in his social as well as business relations."

HON. HANNIBAL HAMLIN,

United States Minister to Spain. Mr. Hamlin was born in Paris, Maine, August 27, 1809; read law in Portland with Messrs. Fessenden & Deblois, the head of which was Samuel Fessenden, father of the Senator and of the late United States Consul at St. John, while at the same time he paid due regard to the famous suggestion of Pope—

The proper study of mankind is man.

After being admitted to the Bar, he came to Hampden about 1833, where he commenced practice. He had as extensive a business in Hampden as could be had there; and upon the site of the office of his predecessor in the profession, John Godfrey, Esq., he erected a substantial brick dwelling-house (an unusual thing in that town), as if he intended to stay.

He, however, found Hampden a better field for politics than for law. The men who were fond of law there were few: those who were fond of politics were many, and when a better politician came among them, they appreciated him. Mr. Hamlin's study of man proved of great advantage to him. The people soon found that the "better politician" had come. They presently sent him to the Legislature, where he became a leader. In 1843, at the age of thirty-four, he was in Congress, and represented the Fifth District of his State in the Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Congresses successively. In the meantime he kept up his practice of the law. He was never an idle man. He did not neglect his clients, and he did not neglect his friends. He was a good and reliable lawyer.

But his political duties became more onerous. In 1848 he was made a Senator of the United States, and then he relinquished the practice of law, except occasionally to argue a case in the United States Court. As Senator, as Governor of the State, as Vice-President of the United States, he could not give his attention to the calls of his profession at home. Now, as Minister to Spain, he may have his attention directed to some questions of international law; otherwise his connection with the profession, practically, is probably at an end.

Mr. Hamlin's great strength has lain in his knowledge of men. He early learned that every American deemed himself fundamentally the peer of every other man, and acted accordingly. The consequence was that he became and continued to be eminently the people's man. He never assumed to be above his fellows, and when some upstarts affected to sneer at certain of his peculiarities, Governor Kent used to say: "Let them sneer; Mr. Hamlin knows what he is about." To do one a favor was always his delight. It is a common saying that he was "always true to his friends." It might be added that every one was his friend when a personal service was desired. In all matters at Washington, whether in the Departments or elsewhere, when his aid was requested he invariably gave it his personal attention, without delegating it to others, and without considering whether the request came from a friend or a foe. One among many instances showing the disposition of Mr. Hamlin in this respect is the following:

Among his political enemies at Hampden was one who opposed him with remarkable virulence, even carrying his political unfriendliness to the extent of personal hate, and he knew that Mr. Hamlin was aware of it.

After the Rebellion had become a fact, and military lines were established, so that passing from the Confederacy to the Republic could not be accomplished without a pass, this man found himself in a dilemma. A beloved daughter was within the confederate lines, near Fortress Monroe, and he was anxious to get her home. Being in Washington, he learned that she could not be got through the lines without a pass from the Secretary of War. He had no one to assist him in getting one. All sorts of fears arose within him in regard to his daughter's safety, and he became very nervous. He was at his wits' end as to what to do. He knew no one to whom to apply, except Mr. Hamlin; and he was too conscious of the wrong he had done him to dare to ask him. But there was no alternative, and he made the venture. Having heard his request, Mr. Hamlin said, in his familiar way:

"Jim, you know you have done everything to injure me; you forgot the old school copy that we used to write from: 'It is a long road that has no turn.' How can you ask me to help you?"

Captain Jim took some time to reply. At length the hard answer came:

"Yes, 'Squire; I did quite wrong. I'm sorry, but—"

"Well, Jim, I'm going to do you Bible justice. I am going to heap coals of fire upon your head. Go with me."

They went to Mr. Stanton; Vice-President Hamlin procured the pass, and, handing it to the Captain, told him he need have no further anxiety; he could get his daughter now. Captain Jim broke right down. The tears flowed freely. He could say nothing: he was too full. Thrusting the pass into his pocket, he went away, procured his daughter, and carried her home. He ceased to be an enemy of Mr. Hamlin.

HON. ELIJAH L. HAMLIN

was born in Livermore, Maine, March 29, 1800. He established himself in the profession in Columbia, Washington county, where he practiced successfully several years. He had the confidence of the leading business men in that part of the State. On the decease of Colonel John Black, of Ellsworth, it was found that he was nominated executor of his will. He removed to Bangor about 1836. His private business required so much of his attention that he did not make himself conspicuous at the Bar. He had much to do with the politics of the State. He became a member of the Maine Historical Society in 1859, and from that time was much engaged in historical matters until his decease. He was first President of the Bangor Historical Society, and made many valuable collections for its cabinet. To his investigation Mr. Parkman, in his "Pioneers of France in the New World," (page 271,) acknowledges his indebtedness for a knowledge of the locality on Mt. Desert Island where the Jesuits attempted to establish their mission in 1613—Fernald's Point. Mr. Hamlin was Land Agent of the State in 1838 and 1841, and was Mayor of Bangor from March, 1851, to March, 1853. He was also Representative to the Legislature from Bangor in 1846 and 1847. He died in Bangor, July 16, 1872, at the age of seventy-two. He was an older brother of Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, formerly Vice-President of the United States and the present Minister to Spain.

GENERAL CHARLES HAMLIN, son of Hannibal Hamlin, was born in Hampden, September 13, 1837. He prepared for college at Hampden Academy, and graduated from Bowdoin in 1857; was admitted to the Bar of Penobscot county in 1858; commenced practice in Orland, Hancock county, November 10, 1858; continued there until the War of the Rebellion, when he went into the army and was there between three and four years, coming from it with the commission of Brigadier-General. He went into practice in Bangor in 1865. In 1867 he was appointed Register in Bankruptcy, which office he still holds.

General Hamlin has done a large business in the profession. After he became Register his time was nearly all given to that business until recently; the cases in that court having been generally disposed of, he is now giving his attention to the law. As Register General Hamlin performed the duties of the office ably, systematically, and with good judgment. He was the City Solicitor two years. He is a good lawyer, reliable, courteous, and attentive to the wants of his clients.

GEORGE P. SEWALL.

Mr. Sewall was born in Franklin county, Maine; read law with Hon. H. Belcher, in Farmington; after admission to the Bar commenced practice in Dexter; and about 1835 established himself in Oldtown. He was for several years a copartner with Samuel Cony, who was afterward Governor of the State. He has continued in the practice of law in Oldtown until the present time, and done a very large business. He has been a leading citizen of Oldtown and much connected with the town affairs. Finding Oldtown a favorable locality for an academy, he was largely instrumental in having one established there. He has been considerably connected with the politics of the State, and has represented his town and the county in the Legislature. During his later years he has been very much interested in agriculture, and has done much for the advancement of that department of industry. He has paid particular attention to fruits.

Mr. Sewall has been a good lawyer, and true to his clients; and in politics has been very influential. He was opposed to the Rebellion, and by speech and action accomplished much for the cause of the Union. He has for several years been a co-partner with John A. Blanchard, the firm name being Sewall & Blanchard; but his health is now so infirm that he gives little attention to business.

He is a man of much humor, and the anecdotes related of him are innumerable. One or two will give a taste of the quality of his wit.

While in the House in 1851-52 his seat was at one end of the Hall, and the seat of a member who was interested with him in a certain measure, was at the other end. They were as far from each other as they could well be, Sewall being in one of the lowest seats and his coadjutor in one of the highest. The coadjutor had a stentorian voice, and was to make the speech. Beforehand Mr. Sewall said to him that the distance was so great between them that it might be difficult for him to hear all that he said, and he must speak pretty loud.

"How shall I know when I speak loud enough?"

"Oh, I will have a newspaper before me, as if reading, and I will raise it gradually until I can understand you."

That was satisfactory, and the member began with tones distinct enough to be heard all over the house. But Mr. Sewall did not understand. The paper went up; the voice went up. Still Mr. Sewall did not understand, and the paper arose again, and the voice arose, but Mr. Sewall was not yet satisfied, and the paper kept its upward movement, with a glance occasionally from Mr. Sewall, to the effect that more volume was required; and this was continued until the voice could reach no higher pitch. People in the street wondered, and the speaker, reeking with perspiration, discovering that the paper was stationary, sat down exhausted, but satisfied with his effort. The House was satisfied; Mr. Sewall was satisfied; and if the measure was not carried, it was not for want of satisfaction.

On another occasion a voluble member had the floor, from whom came, in the opinion of Mr. Sewall and others, more sound than sense. During the effort the gentleman made frequent requisitions upon the page for water. After exhausting several glasses Mr. Sewall became exhausted by the gentleman's exuberance, and arose:

"Mr. Speaker," he said, "I rise to a point of order."

The Speaker—"The gentleman will state his point of order."

Mr. Sewall—"I wish to know, Mr. Speaker, whether it is agreeable to the rules of this House, that a windmill shall run by water?"

The windmill lost its motive power for that day.

At one time Mr. Sewall wanted some cedar posts; his neighbor, the Colonel, also wanted some; and as Mr. Sewall professed to know where there were some good ones, they went together in the woods for them. Their journey was supposed to be upon domains of different proprietors, the Colonel being one and a Massachusetts landholder another, and so on. Mr. Sewall hinted at the propriety of supplying their wants from the land of the non-resident proprietor, as he had no thought for the welfare of Oldtown. At length they came to a spot, the aspect of which was gratifying.

"There," said Sewall, "what do you think of that?"

"Splendid," was the Colonel's response.

"If you will cut it, I will haul it," said Sewall.

It was agreed. The posts were cut and hauled agreeably to the agreement. One half went to the Colonel's and the other half to Sewall's house. Before the hauling was completed the Colonel was induced by Mr. Sewall to divide a pine tree between them on the same conditions. Portions of the cedar and pine went into the composition of these two gentlemen's front fences. There was no interference and everything was accomplished satisfactorily to both parties. Some time afterward the Colonel, in running the lines of his lot, came to a spot that seemed familiar, and on examining it critically he found it to be the place where he and Sewall had carried on their lumbering operation, and that all of the cedar and pine had been taken from his own land, instead of from that of the Massachusetts proprietor.

It is said that for a long time afterward the Colonel was in the habit of telling the story with unctious.

HON. ALBERT G. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. Wakefield was born in Montpelier, Vermont, and losing his father at an early age, he had a fair experience of log-cabin and log-school-house life. Like a large portion of the young men who amount to anything in this country, he had to work his way. After leaving the log school-house familiar with reading, writing, and Adam's arithmetic as far as "the rule of three," he aspired to a knowledge of grammar, and made his way to Auburn, Massachusetts, where he found a higher grade of school than that he had attended. When he informed the teacher of his desire to become acquainted with grammar—

“Grammar!” said the instructor, with staring eyes, “that will do you no good; you had much better study the Catechism!”

But the pupil was persistent, and the teacher gave him the instruction he requested. By the close of the term he knew all of grammar that he could learn there. He also satisfied his teacher with his proficiency in the Westminster Catechism, which was then a sine qua non in the schools. The next winter he was employed to teach the same school.

But a man with the qualities young Wakefield possessed does not stop with school-teaching. He will be educated. He applied to the Rev. Enoch Pond, then a clergyman in Auburn, but now the venerable Doctor of Divinity, President of the Bangor Seminary, and the celebrated author of many books—for assistance in preparing for college. He did not apply in vain. In due time he entered Brown University, from which institution he graduated in 1830. Making his way to Bucksport in the fall of that year, he took charge of the High School there, and was its Principal for one year. After he had closed his engagement with the Bucksport school, he came to Bangor and entered the office of that thorough lawyer, William Abbot. After studying with him and at the Cambridge Law School, he was admitted to the Bar in Bangor in 1834. Since then he has practiced his profession successfully in Bangor. The entire confidence which he inspired in those who committed their business to his care, brought him a practice of which any lawyer might be proud. He has been largely connected with the city government, having been Mayor two terms, and in both boards at various times; has been City Solicitor and upon the School Committee, and chairman thereof for many years. He has also been a trustee of the State Insane Hospital for several years. A modest man, Mr. Wakefield has never sought an office, and when in office he has performed his duties faithfully and without ostentation. He is a sound lawyer and a most estimable citizen.

HON. HENRY E. PRENTISS, son of Henry Prentiss, of Paris, Oxford county, Maine, was born February 12, 1809. He was in the Military Academy at West Point as a cadet for four years, and afterward as a teacher. From there he went to Louisiana. He came to Bangor in 1834-35, and studied law with Messrs. Kent and Cutting. He was admitted to the Bar in January, 1836, and went to Orono, where he commenced practice the same year, in connection with Israel Washburn, Jr., who afterwards was a Representative in Congress and Governor of the State. The partnership continued until 1839. Mr. Prentiss then moved to Bangor. He had a large practice and was an incessant worker; but the emoluments of the profession were not satisfactory. He became convinced that there was more money in the timber-lands of Maine than in the profession; and after a time he devoted himself to the development of that idea with an assiduity that rewarded him with an abundant fortune. Had Mr. Prentiss continued in the practice of the law, he was so inveterately diligent that he would have been successful. But he was a farmer's boy. He loved the open air and took pleasure in long journeys on foot, especially in the forests, where he saw beauties that the devotee of Coke never dreamed of. He was a good citizen, and was appreciated. He represented Bangor in the Legislature, was connected with the municipal affairs of the city, and was elected Mayor.

He died very suddenly, in June, 1873. The Bar adopted resolutions of respect. The following, presented by Hon. A. G. Wakefield, contains a correct summary of his qualities:

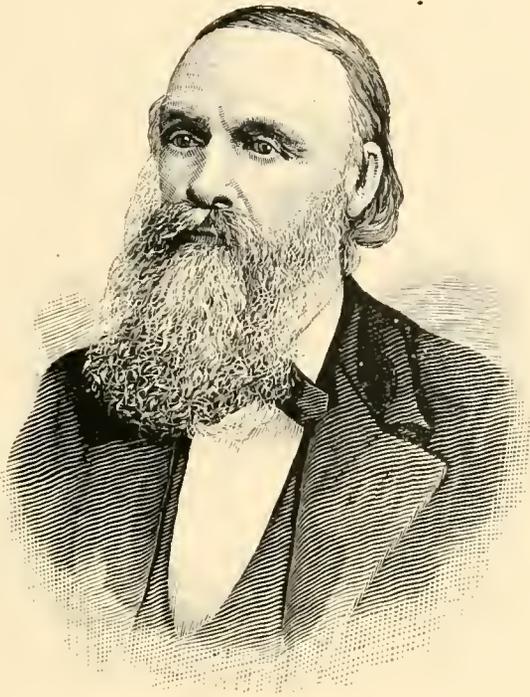

Resolved, That, in the death of our late brother, Henry E. Prentiss, in the vigor of life and in the full tide of usefulness as a citizen and a man, we have experienced a sorrowful bereavement; that, by his cheerful temper, courteous manner, and genial companionship, he had endeared himself not only to his brethren of the profession, but to all in the circle of his acquaintance; that while pursuing his professional duties he took a high and honorable position as a member of the Bar, and established the reputation of a good lawyer; that in early life, when surrounded by adverse circumstances, he cheerfully and manfully practiced severe economy; but when wealth had crowned a life of industry, he used it to minister to a refined and cultivated taste, and in liberally and gracefully dispensing his charities and hospitalities for the happiness of others; that with a full knowledge of the power belonging to money, rightfully used, it was always to him a servant, and never a master; that he practiced in an eminent degree untiring industry and perseverance, unspotted integrity, and loyalty to duty in all the relations of life; that in all things he was strictly honest, and the faculties of his large mind were so evenly balanced that he was well qualified to meet all emergencies of life at all times.

HON. JOSIAH CROSBY, son of Oliver Crosby and Harriet (Chase) Crosby, of Atkinson. He was born in Dover, New Hampshire, November 14, 1816, and went with his family to Atkinson in 1820. He fitted for college at Foxcroft Academy; graduated at Bowdoin in the class of 1835; took the degree of A. M. at the same college in 1838; studied law with Alfred Johnson, of Belfast, and Frederick Hobbs, of Bangor, and Charles P. Chandler, of Dover; was admitted to the Bar in Piscataquis county, September, 1838; was in practice in company with Mr. Chandler six months; then at Levant, now Kenduskeag, a year and a half; then at Exeter, Maine, until January, 1845, when he removed to Dexter, where he has since practiced, having business in Penobscot, Piscataquis, and Somerset counties, and in the United States courts for Maine.

Mr. Crosby has been twice married—first, in 1844, to Henrietta Hill, daughter of Henry Hill, of Exeter, by whom he had two children, who died in infancy. His wife died in December, 1846. His second wife was Mary Bradbury Foss, daughter of Simon Foss, of Dexter, February 27, 1849, by whom he has had nine children, eight of whom are now living.

In politics Mr. Crosby has been always a Whig and a Republican. In 1857, 1863, and 1865, he was Representative to the State Legislature from the class of Dexter and Corinna. In 1867 and 1868 he was Senator from Penobscot county, and was President of the Senate in 1868. In the other years of his legislative life he served on the judiciary committee. Mr. Crosby was an active member of the Legislature, watched all the business, and in important matters took part; giving all his time and thought, when necessary, and making, in many instances, elaborate speeches, which were listened to and read with much interest, and oftentimes influenced legislation. In 1870 he made a speech before a committee of the Legislature, against the consolidation of railroads, which attracted much attention. It was published, and in the minds of some had the credit of defeating the bill. He has made addresses on various public occasions, and published much in relation to public measures. He has been engaged in important cases in the civil, equity, and criminal courts (State and United States), sometimes involving life, sometimes character, and sometimes large amounts of money; and has met with his share of success. In his financial affairs he has been moderately prosperous. He has had much to do with matters in which his town has an interest. He framed the Dexter Railroad project, which has been a success, paying the farmers who invested in it their six per cent. interest, as he predicted to them it would. He is a Director in the First National Bank in Dexter; has been counsel and attorney of that bank, of the Dexter Savings Bank, and of the Dexter & Newport Railroad Company from the beginning; and has been the Moderator of every annual town meeting in Dexter for the last twenty-five years.

Josiah Crosby

Mr. Crosby became a member of the Maine Historical Society in 1868. He says:

I have ever been a Unitarian in religion; of temperate habits, fairly industrious, but not so excessively industrious as to endanger my life, as too many men, especially Yankees, do. . . . And now, at the age of sixty-two, I feel nearly as young as ever. My family is the source of measureless happiness to me, far beyond the dreams of wealth. Upon the whole, I have but little inclination or cause to find fault with the world.

HON. LEWIS BARKER.

Mr. Barker was born in Exeter, in this county, February 18, 1816. His father was Nathaniel Barker, a native of Exeter, New Hampshire, who first established himself in Limerick, Maine, and afterward (1802) in the township in Penobscot county to which he was instrumental in giving the name of the place of his nativity. His mother was Sarah Pease, a native of Parsonsfield, Maine, a woman of rare qualities. Lewis was educated in the common schools and Foxcroft academy; but his employment was that of a farm laborer, alternating with that of teacher, until he became of age. He then read law with Albert G. Jewett, in Bangor, for one year, and completed his studies with Messrs. Kent & Cutting. He was admitted to the Bar in 1841, and commenced practice in Stetson, where he remained until 1871, when he removed to Bangor, and has continued to practice there since. He has for many years been a member of the House and Senate of Maine, and was Speaker of the House in 1867. He has been twice elected a member of the Executive Council of Maine, and is now (1881) an Executive Councillor.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of Colonel Francis

Hill, of Exeter, and has had two children—a daughter, Evvie, who acquired some distinction as a writer, and died at the age of twenty-four, and a son, Lewis A. Barker, a lawyer, the junior member of the law firm of Barker, Vose & Barker, of which firm the subject of this sketch is the senior member. When Mr. Barker established himself in Bangor, he commenced practice alone; afterward he received his son as a partner, and the firm name was Barker & Son.

Mr. Barker has fine qualities as an advocate and public speaker, is successful with juries, and is esteemed so with the electors in political campaigns. He has been a Republican ever since the organization of that party, and has done much profitable work for his party on the stump in various years in several of the New England, Middle and Western States. He is an indefatigable worker, and now is as active and apparently as vigorous as he has been at any time in his life. He is the brother of Noah Barker, of Exeter, a distinguished citizen of the county and State, and of the late David Barker, the poet lawyer.

LEWIS A. BARKER.

He is the son of Hon. Lewis Barker, and was born in Stetson, Maine, in August, 1854. He graduated at the Albany Law School in 1875, and was admitted to the Penobscot Bar the same year, when he commenced practice in Bangor with his father, under the firm name of Barker & son. In 1876 he became the junior member of the present firm of Barker, Vose & Barker. In 1875 he married Miss Maggie, only daughter of Moses L. Appleton, Esq., deceased, formerly one of the leading members of the Penobscot Bar. Mr. Barker possesses qualities which will enable him to do credit to his family and the profession.

HON. THOMAS W. VOSE.

Thomas Wyman Vose was born in Portland, Maine, July 3, 1830. At the age of three years he came with his father's family to Orrington, near Brewer village. In his fifteenth year he commenced to learn the trade of ship joiner, and continued in that business until the winter of 1851, attending the common school in the winters, excepting one winter, when he attended Hampden Academy, where he commenced preparation for college. After this he diligently pursued the work of preparation, teaching, and working at his trade during vacations. He entered the scientific department of Hanover College (New Hampshire) a year in advance, and graduated from that institution in July, 1858. After graduation he entered the law office of Albert L. Kelley, in Winterport, and was admitted to the Bar of Waldo county at the May term, 1860. Since then Mr. Vose has been a great worker in his profession. He opened an office in Winterport, and very soon had the confidence of the people. They elected him Representative to the Legislature from the class of Winterport and Frankfort in 1870, and his county sent him to the Senate in 1871. In January, 1872, he removed to Bangor, and his abilities were recognized in Bangor, as they were in Winterport. He was elected City Solicitor in 1875, and has served in that office until the present time (1881), except for the year 1878. He has served one year upon the School Board and two years upon the Water Board, of which he is now a member. In 1876 he became a co-partner with Messrs. Lewis and Lewis A. Barker, and they adopted the style of Barker, Vose & Barker.

In 1859 he married Ellen A., daughter of Elisha Chick, Esq., of Winterport.

Mr. Vose is a careful and discriminating student, a reliable lawyer, a man of integrity, a good citizen, and will doubtless continue to be successful in his profession.

OLIVER LEONARD

was the son of Jonathan Leonard, who descended from James Leonard, who claimed descent from Lord Dacre, of the noble family of Leonard, who flourished at Pontypool, in England, in the twelfth century. James settled in Taunton, Massachusetts, in 1652, where he established the first manufactory of iron in America. Oliver was born in Norton, Massachusetts, in February, 1764. He entered Brown University, at Providence, in 1783, and graduated in 1787. While in college Shay's Rebellion occurred, and the student donned the soldier's uniform and performed the duties of adjutant under General Lincoln until his services were no longer necessary. From his fine personal appearance and good horsemanship, his adjutancy acquired for him the style of "Colonel," by which he was addressed in after life. When the Rebellion was subdued, Mr. Leonard returned to college and graduated in good standing. After a year occupied in trade, he entered the office of Stephen Dexter, Esq., in Newport, Rhode Island. From there he went into Judge Padelford's office, in Taunton, and after a short time there was admitted to the Bar in 1791. He established himself in Taunton in his profession. About that time he married Mrs. Sarah Fletcher, the widow of an English surgeon in the American Revolution, who had in her own right an annuity of one hundred guineas. He remained in Taunton until 1796, when, being impressed with the idea that the new country of the Penobscot would be more favorable to his prospects than that in which he was, he came to that part of Orrington which is now Brewer, and had such legal business as there was in the region for several years. But he did not confine his business to his profession. He was in haste to be rich, speculated in lumber, and gave too much of his attention to other matters. He was popular, and the people of Orrington sent him as a Representative to the General Court in Boston in 1798 and the five following years.

In 1817 Mr. Leonard removed to Bangor. He had not prospered in his too many vocations, and he thought to apply himself more closely to his profession; but it was wearisome, and his clients were few. His income diminished; his wife's income became the subject of a suit in chancery, and the payment of the annuities was suspended for nearly twenty years. He at last attempted to hold a Justice Court for the trial of cases; but that proved an abortive enterprise, and the prospects of prosperity which he thought existed when he came to Penobscot, dwindled until he was reduced to absolute poverty. "His splendid figure bent, his cheerful and handsome face became gradually gloomy, and his conversation lost most of its charms under his adversity."* He died in January, 1828, and his widow, whose annuity was sustained by a decree in her favor, had the benefit of it for one or two years more, until she died.

JACOB MCGAW

was born at Merrimac, in the State of New Hampshire, September 6, 1778. He was the son of Jacob McGaw, who was born in the North of Ireland, in 1737, and emigrated to America in 1760, at the age of twenty-three. His mother was Margaret Orr, a lady who descended from emigrants from the North of Ireland. The families of Jacob McGaw, Sr., and Margaret Orr being from the same locality in Europe and entertaining the same religious tenets—the Presbyterian—it was fitting that two members of the same church should come together in the relation of husband and wife. The fruit of the union was four sons and three daughters. Two of the sons were educated at Dartmouth College, and became lawyers, and two became merchants. Jacob graduated at the age of nineteen, in 1797. The same year he entered the office of Hon. Thomas W. Thompson, of what is now Franklin, and after devoting himself to the study of the law until 1801, he was admitted as an attorney to practice in the Court of Common Pleas in January of that year. In the same month he established himself in Fryeburg, Maine, where he practiced until 1805, and shared the business with the Hon. Judah Dana, who was the only other practicing lawyer in that part of the country. While there he is said to have been the successful competitor against the Hon. Daniel Webster (who was then the preceptor of Fryeburg Academy) for the hand of Phebe Poor, a daughter of Ebenezer Poor, of Andover, Maine, and aunt of John A. Poor, Esq., recently deceased. As his business in Fryeburg was not satisfactory, in 1805 he removed to Bangor, making the sixth lawyer at that time in the three adjoining towns of Bangor, Hampden, and Orrington—Samuel E. Dutton and Allen Gilman in Bangor, Enoch Brown and John Godfrey in Hampden, and Oliver Leonard in that part of Orrington which is now Brewer—and the only lawyers in what afterwards became Penobscot county.

Mr. McGaw possessed talent, and having popular manners business within two years became very satisfactory; and always, until 1836, he had a successful practice. Having suffered from too much confinement and too little exercise, he at that time relinquished his professional engagements and retired to private life. Mr. Willis, in his History of the Lawyers of Maine, says: "He had great influence with the jury by his easy, pleasant manner, and his happy tact of introducing anecdotes and applying familiar incidents and facts to illustrate his argument. He retired from the Bar with the honors of the profession upon him, and with the respect and affection of his professional brethren, his clients, and the community." He was "a man of fine personal appearance, of ardent and impulsive temperament, and agreeable conversational powers."

* Willis's Lawyers of Maine.

After he had retired he prepared some historical notes of Bangor, embracing facts which he had collected and within his personal recollection, with a view at one time of publishing them. From some cause he did not, but deposited them with the Maine Historical Society. When the county of Penobscot was organized, he was appointed County Attorney. This office he held until Maine became a State, giving great satisfaction in the performance of its duties.

His death occurred on May 12, 1867, at the age of eighty-eight years, eight months, and six days. The Bar, on the 15th of the month, adopted the following resolution:—

Resolved, That, distinguished in his profession, which, as a lawyer and advocate, he had illustrated, through a long and successful career, by eminent learning, ability, and integrity, beloved and esteemed for the kind and ample discharge of his duty to his family and his country, and crowned with the devout faith and good works of the Christian, he "came to his grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season."

His death was duly announced, and an eloquent tribute to his worth was paid by A. Sanborn, Esq. Mr. Sanborn was followed by Judge Kent, who said:—

He has taught us how to grow old genially and gracefully, and how to retain the friendship and regard of new generations by kindly sympathy and active interest in passing events; by forming new attachments, as the old were severed; by a generous intercourse with his fellow-man, to the close of a long and serene old age.

Mr. McGaw was the father of two daughters, one of whom survived him—the wife of Hon. John B. Foster, of Bangor.

GEORGE STARRETT, was born in Warren, Maine, May 15, 1798. He came to Bangor about 1825, and became a partner with Thomas A. Hill, under the firm name of Hill & Starrett. A methodical man, he early became the Secretary of the Bar. With the community he established a reputation for integrity, diligence, carefulness, and faithfulness. Implicit confidence was placed in him by all.

He died February 2, 1837, and the Bar appointed a large committee of the most prominent members to report resolutions of respect. George B. Moody, Esq., Chairman, reported six resolutions eulogistic of him. Among them was the following, which gives an idea of the man:

Resolved, That the example of our deceased brother, in rising from obscurity to universal respect, attaining, in a few years, comparative affluence by the steady and unwearied cultivation of the talents committed to him, by almost unexampled diligence in business, and, more than all, by unswerving professional integrity, is calculated to impress on his brethren the useful lesson that a well-grounded self-respect, public esteem, and professional success, are the almost certain reward of the honest and diligent.

Mr. Starrett intermarried first with Eliza Ann Hammond, of Bangor, who died January 3, 1828, aged twenty-one, leaving one son, George H. H.; second, with Martha Burgess, of Wareham, Massachusetts, who died December 13, 1833, aged thirty-five, leaving a son, Thomas B., and a daughter, Eliza H.; third, with Mrs. Caroline Langdon (Stone) Morrell, August 21, 1834, who died May 31, 1865, aged sixty-six, childless.

CHARLES GILMAN,

son of Allen Gilman, was born in Bangor in 1807. He was a graduate of Brown University, studied law with his father in Bangor, and was admitted to the Bar in June, 1830. His tendency was rather to literature than to law while in Bangor, and he edited several publications in Bangor, as The Clarion, a weekly literary paper, published in 1828; Eastern Magazine, in 1835–36, a monthly; the Bangoreen, a weekly, in 1836, all creditable publications. After a few years Mr. Gilman removed to Illinois, where he edited the Law Reports of that State for several years with ability, and established before his decease a high reputation as a lawyer.

JAMES S. ROWE

was born in Exeter, New Hampshire, October 20, 1807. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1826, and came to Bangor about 1836. Mr. Rowe, notwithstanding he was for years an invalid, commanded a large and excellent practice, and became a leading member of the Bar. With a fine intellect, courteous manners, and a thorough acquaintance with the principles of the law, he commanded the respect of the Bench and the Bar. Devoted to the profession, he continued to labor in it until, within a year or two past, he has been compelled by failing health to relinquish it altogether.

JONATHAN P. ROGERS

was born in Kennebec county, and came to Bangor in 1825. He was admitted to the Penobscot Bar in January, 1826. In about 1828 he went into partnership with Hon. Edward Kent, with whom he continued until 1831. He was appointed Attorney-General of the State in 1832, and held the office until 1844.

Mr. Rogers was a man of fine personal appearance, of great self-reliance, great endurance, great mental activity and acuteness, and of great logical power. He had the reputation, with many, of being the foremost lawyer in Maine. Ex-Governor Washburn says that "his mental endowments were never surpassed by those of any son of Maine; the master of principles and the consummate advocate, he was a born lawyer; with but slight aid from early education, no man that I ever heard speak possessed a style so close, so strong, and so pure; his addresses, whether to court or jury, might be set in type without the change of a single word."* No one would care to criticise this eulogy, perhaps, when it contains a reference to Mr. Rogers' slight early education.

Mr. Rogers married Miss Page, an accomplished lady of Hallowell, removed to Boston, and died there at the age of forty-six years, leaving one son.

SAMUEL GARNSEY,

son of Benjamin Garnsey, was born in Effingham, New Hampshire, in 1804; received his early education in Effingham and Gilmanton Academy; read law with Josiah Dunbar in Effingham, and Judge Bailey in Wiscasset; came to Bangor in 1828, where he practiced law until 1840, and went to St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick, and was in other business until 1850–51. When he returned he did not resume the practice of the law. He was in mercantile business with Joseph C. White, Esq., from 1851 until 1854, the firm name being J. C. White & Co. After that he was in business by himself.

* Orono Centennial, p. 90, n.

He intermarried with Miss Eliza Ann Nichols, of Wiscasset, in 1828.

He died in Bangor in 1873. He was a well-read and reliable lawyer, and a good citizen. The Bar passed resolutions honoring his memory as that of "one who during his connection with the Bar sustained the character of an honest lawyer, a courteous and honorable practitioner, and one whose professional virtues we may well strive to imitate." Judge Cutting responded to the resolutions, alluding to the deceased in eulogistic terms and giving a brief sketch of his career in life as a professional and business man.

THEOPHILUS P. CHANDLER.

Theophilus Parsons Chandler, son of Peleg Chandler, was born in New Gloucester, Maine, October 13, 1807. He received his education at the public and private schools of his native town, never having been a student at an academy or college. He commenced the study of law in his father's office before his eighteenth year; finished his studies with Frederick Allen, of Gardiner, Maine, and was admitted to practice in Kennebec county, August 13, 1829. He opened an office in Bangor, October 8, 1829; removed to Gardiner November 19, 1829; returned to Bangor on November 4, 1831, where he continued in full practice until the summer of 1836, when he removed his office to Boston, where it continued more than forty years.

Mr. Chandler married Eliza J. Schlatter, of Philadelphia, September 20, 1837, and removed his residence from Boston to Brooklyn, Massachusetts, in May, 1848, where he now resides. He is the father of seven children, four sons and three daughters, all of whom are now living except his oldest son, Charles Lyon Chandler, who was killed in Virginia May 24, 1864, while in command of a regiment in the civil war.

He never held a political office. He was for four years, ending in 1853, President of the Northern Railroad of New York. In January, 1861, he was appointed one of the Peace Commissioners from Massachusetts to the National Convention held in Washington prior to the breaking-out of the civil war. In June, 1863, he was appointed United States Assistant Treasurer for Boston, and held the office until the expiration of his second commission, in 1868. The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred upon him in Bowdoin College in 1837.

GEORGE B. MOODY

was born in the county of York in 1802. He entered Harvard College, and was graduated in 1819, being there a classmate of Judge Kent. After having qualified himself for the profession, he established himself in Oldtown, in this county. He afterwards removed to Bangor, where he won a high standing at the Bar. In 1841 he held the position of County Attorney, to which office he was appointed by Governor Kent. He died in Bangor July 6, 1856, at the age of fifty-four, after a long illness.

His death was announced to the Supreme Judicial Court (then holding the law term, Chief Justice Tenney, with Justices Hathaway, Appleton, May, and Cutting on the bench) by Mr. Kent, who paid a felicitous tribute to his memory, and said:

To myself, personally, his death comes with more than usual impressiveness. The companion of my early years, my college classmate and room-mate, the friendship then formed has been continued without a cloud or a shadow for nearly forty years. Our years of manhood have been spent at the same Bar, and in constant and close companionship in professional and social life, and with unabated regard and unwavering confidence. And now, as I recall all his truthfulness and sincerity, his guileless and confiding nature, his simplicity, his high sense of honor, his refined and polished manners, his domestic virtues, which always rendered his house attractive to its inmates and friends, I feel that I have lost a brother with whom I have walked pleasantly so many years.

The volumes of our reports, which but imperfectly present the arguments of counsel, will nevertheless show that he was a lawyer clear and able in his arguments, and presenting his views forcibly, and exhausting whatever subject he undertook to investigate.

Afterwards Mr. Kent presented complimentary resolutions of the Bar, and Chief Justice Tenney responded. He said that the deceased "possessed talents and legal attainments of a high order, and seized upon and presented points with clearness and force, and often surprised opposing counsel in argument by a success to them entirely unexpected."

GEORGE W. INGERSOLL

was born in New Gloucester, county of Cumberland, Maine, in 1803; graduated at Bowdoin College in 1830; studied law with the late Judge Daniel Goodnow in Alfred, Maine; was admitted to the Bar and went into practice in Oldtown, Penobscot county, in 1832. Like most farmer's boys of that day striving for an education, he taught district school to pay the expenses of a collegiate course. When he had accumulated money enough to pay the expenses of a first term, he went to the military school at Norwich, Vermont. An elder brother had promised to aid him, but at the end of the term, being disappointed in this and fearing that his well-disposed brother would not be able to carry out his intentions, and unwilling to incur a dollar of debt, he took all his worldly goods tied up in a handkerchief, and walked from the school to his home in Maine, feasting on bread and milk on his way when hungry, instead of spending his little substance at taverns. Upon this journey he contracted a lameness from which he began to suffer towards its close, and obtained relief from a bottle of opodeldoc, a famous remedy in that day, the purchase of which nearly bankrupted his purse. Applied on the roadside occasionally, however, it enabled him to finish his journey. But the lameness did not entirely leave him; at times afterwards during his life it reminded him of his efforts for an education.

From Oldtown Mr. Ingersoll removed to Bangor, which ever afterwards was his place of residence, continuing in the practice of his profession.

He was Inspector of Customs in Bangor when Hon. William C. Hammatt held the office of Collector, under President Taylor. He represented the city of Bangor in the Legislature of 1854 and 1855, and was Attorney-

General of the State in 1860. He was a sound lawyer, entirely reliable both as counsel and as a man.

Mr. Ingersoll intermarried with Henrietta, daughter of Oliver Crosby, Esq., of Atkinson. They had three children living when he died—Edward C., who went into the profession, and is now in Washington, District of Columbia; Alice, a beautiful and accomplished lady, the wife of Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain, ex-Governor of South Carolina; and Fanny Hilliard Ingersoll, who has the reputation of being the best short-hand writer now in Washington.

The Penobscot Bar passed resolutions on the occasion of Mr. Ingersoll's death, which occurred early in the year 1860, in which they bore "willing testimony to his inflexible honor, his eminent abilities, and unswerving fidelity in all his personal relations."

WILLIAM T. HILLIARD

was born in Gorham, in the county of Cumberland. He graduated at Bowdoin College in the year 1826. Having qualified himself for the profession of law in the offices of Judge Pierce, of Gorham, and Judge Ruggles, of Thomaston, he was admitted to the Bar. In 1832 Mr. Hilliard commenced practice in Oldtown, in this county. He continued in practice in Oldtown for seven years, and attained a high degree of popularity. In 1847 he became a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Courts, and was elected over the Whig candidate and the regular nominee of his own, the Democratic party, his own town complimenting him with a nearly unanimous vote. After his election Mr. Hilliard removed to Bangor, and has since resided there. He held the office of Clerk of the Supreme Court for about ten years, having been three times re-elected. On retiring from that office he formed a connection in business with Moses L. Appleton, with whom he did a large business; and afterward with E. W. Flagg, who succeeded Mr. Appleton in the firm. Mr. Hilliard has since been in business for himself, alternating his professional with literary labors, of which he is fond.

NATHANIEL WILSON

was born at Haverhill, Grafton county, New Hampshire, September 18, 1808; fitted for college at the academy in his native town; entered Dartmouth College in 1825; graduated in 1829; and went thence in September to Lancaster, where he taught the academy two years, having been its first preceptor. Here he gained a high reputation as a successful and popular teacher. In 1831 he took charge of the High School in Augusta. His success in this position was highly complimented, and he gained much credit for executive ability. Among his pupils who subsequently acquired distinction were General Seth Williams, Hon. John Potter and three brothers, Hon. B. A. G. Fuller, and Hon. George W. Ladd, now Congressman.

From Augusta Mr. Wilson went, in 1832, to Gardiner, and read law with the Hon. George Evans. In January, 1834, he was admitted to the Bar in Kennebec county, and came thence to Orono, arriving there January 12, 1834.

July 17, 1834, he married Adeline, youngest daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Haven Boardman, of Lancaster, New Hampshire, a most beautiful and accomplished woman. She died, December 12, 1836, of consumption, leaving no children. April 17, 1839, Mr. W. intermarried with Abbie Ann, the oldest daughter of the late Jeremiah and Susan Colburn. By this marriage he has had ten children, seven sons and three daughters. Five sons and two daughters, and seven grandchildren, are living. Their oldest son was a volunteer, and made a Lieutenant in Company F, Twelfth Maine Regiment, under Colonel George F. Shepley. By exposure and hardships at Ship Island and New Orleans he contracted disease, which in 1873 caused his death. Two sons are graduates of Bowdoin College, one now in the practice of the law at Orono, the other a clergyman. A third, aged twenty, is a graduate of the State College, in the class of 1881, and has chosen the profession of physician (he being the seventh son). Two other sons are successful business men, and both have families. Of his two daughters, one is the wife of a professor in the State College of Pennsylvania, and the other has recently completed two years of successful teaching as the Preceptress of Cumberland Institute. Mr. Wilson feels a most commendable and justifiable pride in his children.

Mr. Wilson has been prominently identified with all the leading interests calculated to add to the prosperity of the town. Its public school, the cause of temperance, moral and religious influences—each and all have found in him a friend and faithful advocate. At much inconvenience he has served as a member of the Superintending School Committee more than thirty years. He was largely instrumental in securing the location at Orono of the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, has ever been its firm and devoted advocate and friend, and for several years served as one of the Trustees and on the Executive Committee. He has held at different times most of the various town offices. In September, 1879, he was chosen Representative to the Legislature, and acquitted himself with honor to himself and the district he represented. He was placed on the Judiciary Committee, a position of high responsibility and importance. In the matter of restoring the salaries of the Justices of our Supreme Judicial Court, few, if any members, exerted more effective influence; and in a speech of much power and force he nobly sustained the high character of all its members. That the State College in 1880 was donated anything, and also saved from serious depression and injury in its prescribed course of studies, to him must be given the highest meed of praise, he advocating the claims of this institution as one worthy the most liberal patronage, which it was the duty and pledged obligation of the State to sustain. He served one year as the Grand Worthy Patriarch of the Order of Sons of Temperance, and was for several years a delegate to the National Conventions of the Order. As a professional man he has always done a large and successful business, and won his full share of all contested cases. To his clients, whether rich or poor, he was always true and faithful. He commenced practice in 1831, and at this date (August, 1881), is still actively engaged in his chosen profession.

In politics Mr. Wilson was originally a Whig, and still believes in the principles of that grand old party, as maintained by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster. When that party died he fell gradually into the ranks of the National Democratic party, and was a strong advocate of the election of Tilden and of Hancock to the Presidency. In the matter of creeds he is a Congregationalist, with large charity for all denominations and a firm and abiding faith in an overruling Providence.

WILLIAM H. M'CRILLIS, son of Dr. John McCrillis, was born in Georgetown, Maine, November 4, 1813. He studied law with Messrs. Allen & Appleton, in Bangor, was admitted to the Bar in Kennebec county, and commenced practice in Bangor in 1834. A ready speaker, with a keen intellect and a determination to succeed, Mr. McCrillis early made himself known at the Bar; his practice became large and profitable, and for many years he has been a leading lawyer in the county and State. In 1838 he was appointed County Attorney by Governor Kent, and held the office while the Whigs were in power. The efficient military leader in the Aroostook war, General Hodsdon, had such confidence in his abilities that, notwithstanding his different political views, he made him his adjutant for a time, during which he rendered efficient service.

In 1838 Mr. McCrillis was elected by the Republicans of Bangor to the House of Representatives of Maine, and he was re-elected in 1859 and 1860. Of late years he has not been in public political life. He still practices in the courts. He is a reliable counselor, an efficient lawyer, and an eloquent advocate; and his cases are among the most important.

DAVID M'CRILLIS

was born in 1828 in Sandwich, New Hampshire. He read law with William H. McCrillis, in Bangor, and soon after was admitted to the Bar. He died in 1852. The resolutions adopted by the Bar set forth that he was "possessed of excellent natural gifts, an intellect clear and penetrating, a memory minute and capacious, of demeanor mild and firm, giving no assurances that he did not fulfil; endowed with an instinctive appreciation of truth and a ready capacity to separate the true from the false; incapable of cherishing resentment or forgetting kindnesses, he stood to us as one already endeared by what we knew him to be, and recognized from his habits of industry, temperance, and correct taste, as in the certain path to realize all his large and generous promise." One who knew him well said, "He had one of the clearest heads I ever knew."

MOSES L. APPLETON

was born in Waterville, Maine, in 1811. He graduated from Waterville College (now Colby University) in 1830; commenced the study of the law with Hon. Samuel Wells, in Waterville; then attended the Law School in Cambridge; and went to Sebec in 1832, where he completed his law course with Hon. John Appleton. He was admitted to the Bar in 1833, and removed to Bangor in 1834, where he went into practice with George Starrett, Esq. After Mr. Starrett's decease, in 1837, he became a copartner with William T. Hilliard, Esq., with whom he had a large practice. He was also connected in business with Judge Appleton a few years; afterwards he retired from business and died in 1859.

Mr. Appleton represented the city of Bangor in the Legislature in the years 1848 and 1849, and was a member of the city government.

The Bar passed resolutions recalling "his honorable professional career as a lawyer, his honesty and uprightness as a man, and his social, genial, and kindly disposition as a friend and companion," and lauding his persistent and effective support of every public enterprise for the promotion of the welfare of the city, as a private citizen, as a member of the municipal government, and in the Legislature of the State.

Mr. Appleton intermarried with Jane S., the youngest daughter of Hon. Thomas H. Hill. They had three children—two sons, now deceased, and one daughter, the wife of Lewis A. Barker, Esq.

FREDERICK H. APPLETON, son of Chief Justice John Appleton, was born in Bangor in 1844; prepared for college in the Bangor High School; graduated from Bowdoin College in 1864; read law with F. A. Wilson; was admitted to the Bar in Bangor in 1867; after admission went into practice in Boston, Massachusetts, where he continued until 1872, when he returned to Bangor, where he entered into partnership with the Hon. S. F. Humphrey, with whom he is now associated.

Mr. Appleton stands high in the profession for integrity and ability. He has a clear intellect and a good knowledge of the law; is a courteous gentleman, and is successful in his practice.

ALBERT W. PAINE.

Albert Ware Paine was born in Winslow, Maine, August 16, 1812. His father was Frederick Paine; his mother Abiel (Ware) Paine, who came from Foxboro, Massachusetts, early in the century. Those interested to know the genealogy of the family will find it in a work just put forth by Mr. Paine, entitled the "Paine Genealogy," in which its history is traced from Japhetic times to the present. By this it appears that the name of the family "gradually changed from Paganus (signifying 'countryman,' 'unbeliever,' 'pagan'), to Pagan, Pagen, Payen, Payne, and Paine," and that Payson and Pyson are different forms of the same appellation, and that all of the families of Paine belong to the Norman race.

The subject of this sketch "graduated at Waterville College in the class of 1832; studied law with Hon. Thomas Rice and Governor Samuel Wells, and was admitted to practice as attorney-at-law in 1835, at Bangor, Maine, where he has since resided." He was admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court at Washington in 1835. He has been a busy lawyer almost ever since he opened an office. He made himself early acquainted with land titles, and established a reputation as a good real-estate lawyer and conveyancer. He has had many important suits in law and in equity, and often acted as fiduciary agent, and gave great satisfaction. The amount, quality, and importance of the business he has done, and at the age of sixty-nine is still doing indicates the high estimation in which he is held as a lawyer.

In 1868 and 1869 he was Bank and Insurance Commissioner, and afterward Insurance Commissioner of the State for three years. He held the office of Tax Commissioner in 1874.

Mr. Paine has been instrumental in procuring several useful enactments by the Legislature upon various subjects. The genealogical work he has just published evinces great labor and research, and entitles him to the lasting gratitude of the family embraced in it.

In 1840 Mr. Paine intermarried with Mary Jones Hale, a descendant of Rev. John Hale, of Beverly, Massachusetts, who wrote an account of the wonders of the invisible world that afflicted New England in 1692, which Cotton Mather pronounces "unexceptionable," and transcribes into his "Magnalia," assuring the reader that "he hath now to do with a writer who would not for the world be guilty of overdoing the truth in a matter of this importance,* and a writer who was not incapable of altering his judgment, when satisfied that he was in error."† They have four children, daughters, all living.

FREDERICK HOBBS.

Mr. Hobbs was born in Weston, Massachusetts; prepared for college at Atkinson (New Hampshire) Academy; graduated at Harvard college in 1817; read law with Isaac Fiske, of Weston, and with Daniel Webster; established himself in the profession at Eastport, in November, 1820, where he did a large business. In 1836 he was nominated in the Hancock and Washington county District for Congress. He declined to accept the nomination, on the ground that he was to leave the District. He came to Bangor in 1837, and remained here in practice until a year or two before he died, in 1854.

Mr. Hobbs was fond of his profession and gave unremitting attention to his business, which was large and of an important character. He was a well-read and reliable lawyer, a systematic business man, and a gentleman. A shock of paralysis, some time before he died, rendered him unable to attend to business, and he reluctantly left his office never to return to it. He died October 10, 1854, leaving a widow, an accomplished and amiable lady, the daughter of Philip Coombs, Esq., an early citizen of Bangor, and an adopted daughter, the wife of Hon. Elisha H. Allen, then Chief Justice of the Sandwich Islands, who died in 1881. The Bar passed resolutions of respect, recognizing his "untiring industry, strict integrity, his extensive reading and legal acquirements, his social qualities, his genial hospitality, his pure morals, his liberality, and strict observance of all the duties of a good citizen, a good lawyer, and a good man."

NATHAN WESTON, JR.,

was a native of Augusta, son of Chief Justice Weston, and a graduate of Bowdoin College. He came to Orono in 1837, entered into partnership with Nathaniel Wilson, and thus continued for about one year. Mr. Weston was subsequently appointed Paymaster in the Army during the Mexican war. He received a severe injury to his shoulder by being thrown from his horse while on duty, in consequence of which he became a Government pensioner.

His first wife was Catharine, wife of Colonel E. Webster; his second wife a Miss Rogers, of Newton, Massachusetts. He represented Orono in the Legislature in the years 1849 and 1850. He was always a Democrat in politics. In 1850 he was chosen Clerk of the Courts for Penobscot county, and was re-elected, serving six years. He went to Bangor in 1850, and in 1858 removed to Massachusetts.

THOMAS J. COPELAND

came from Dexter to Orono, and entered into partnership with Mr. F. A. Fuller, continuing some one and a half to two years, when he returned to the former place.

WILLIAM C. CROSBY.

William Chase Crosby, second son of Oliver Crosby, of Atkinson, Maine, was born in Dover, New Hampshire, December 2, 1806. With his father, who was a member of the profession in New Hampshire, he came to Atkinson in 1821. His early education was academical, obtained in Dover, and afterward at Gardiner Lyceum. He came to reside in Bangor in 1828, and went into trade on Broad street. November 3, 1838, he became copartner with Wiggins Hill; the firm name was W. C. Crosby & Co. But before the copartnership was dissolved, October 14, 1833, the Hill interest was vested in S. J. Foster and Benjamin Brown. In 1831-32, with Albert G. Jewett, he built the brick block on Third street, recently taken down.

November 26, 1832, he intermarried with Mary, daughter of Hon. John and Hannah Wilson, of Belfast. In the fall of 1835 he removed to Atkinson, where he resided about ten years, assisting his father in his large agricultural and other business, and in carrying on a farm of his own. Although always interested and successful in agriculture and horticulture, yet the true bent of his mind was legal, and from having been consulted and employed in town and other business, he became so interested in the law that he qualified himself for the profession, and was admitted to the Bar of Piscataquis county in 1845. He shortly after came again to Bangor, and formed a connection with Daniel T. Jewett, and they were in the practice of the profession together until the autumn of 1850, when Mr. Jewett left to engage in the steamboat business in Darien.* Their office was in Elm Block, on Hammond street, and Mr. Crosby continued to occupy it until he died, in 1880. His wife,

*Mather's Magnalia, Book VI., Ch. 8, 14. ex.

†Hutch, Mass. II, 61.

*Mr. Jewett afterward went into the practice in St. Louis, and became a United States Senator.

Mary, died October 28, 1865, leaving him with four children, who are now living. September 23, 1867, he was again married, to Mrs. Susan W. Dunmore, daughter of Daniel Wheeler, of Brewer, widow of Rev. George W. Dunmore. By this marriage he had no child. He was a member of the Common Council of Bangor in 1852 and 1853, and of the Board of Aldermen in 1870, 1871, 1872, and 1874; and acquired the reputation of being one of the best members of the city government that Bangor ever had.

Mr. Crosby was a good lawyer. He perfectly understood his cases, and no one got an advantage of him by technicalities. He had an extensive practice under the bankrupt law, and looked carefully after the interests of his clients. He was industrious, able, and honest. He died in Bangor July 21, 1880. The Bar passed complimentary resolutions, which were presented by Abraham Sanborn, Esq., accompanied by eloquent and appropriate remarks; to which Chief Justice Appleton replied, saying, among other things:

Notwithstanding he commenced the study of law somewhat late in life, he made himself a master of its principles. An acute and accurate lawyer, he was ever faithful to the interests of his clients. He was careful and cautious in giving advice, prudent in the institution of suits, and persevering in their prosecution. Neither time nor labor nor ability was wanting. Honorable and upright in all the relations of life, public and private, his integrity was above suspicion and reproach. Kind and affectionate to his friends and family, they knew well his home virtues, and will deeply feel his loss.

DAVID BARKER,

son of Nathaniel and Sarah (Pease) Barker, and brother of Hons. Noah and Lewis Barker, was born in Exeter, in this county, September 9, 1816. He was educated at the common schools, and closed his preliminary examination at Foxcroft Academy, where he became an assistant. He studied law with Hon. Samuel Cony, and in 1848 was admitted to the Penobscot Bar. He established himself at Exeter, his native town, where he practiced successfully until failing health compelled him to be much from his office. He died at the residence of his brother Lewis, in Bangor, September 14, 1874, at the age of fifty-eight years. Mr. Josiah Crosby, in presenting the resolutions of respect, said:

His ability and attainments in the legal profession, notwithstanding constant feebleness of health, were highly respectable; and there is no doubt that, had his health been firm and his physical powers equal to his mental, he might have attained to a distinguished position at the Bar. Those of his brethren who, some fifteen or twenty years since, were accustomed to meet him in the conflicts of the arena, will well remember that victory over such an antagonist was not easily won. Feebleness of health, however, seated upon the nervous system, had a tendency to create a dislike for the combative part of legal practice, which he finally relinquished, and gladly sought a purer and higher enjoyment in the fascinating realms of poetry.

In one department of poetry he had obtained a distinguished reputation—a lot which seldom happens to travellers in the rugged and difficult paths of the legal profession. Poetry he loved. The Muses answered kindly to his call, and it was a source of just satisfaction to him that he had written some things that would live after him.

Mr. Barker was not a politician, but his class sent him to the Legislature. The position was not agreeable to him, and he never again was in any political office. He was kind and courteous in his manner, a genial companion, a good neighbor and citizen. As Judge Peters well said, among other complimentary things, in his response, "it was always pleasant to meet him."

The Bar put on record "its cheerful testimony to his ability as a lawyer, his amiability, urbanity, and unquestioned integrity."

Mr. Barker married Miss Chase, daughter of Timothy Chase, Esq., of Belfast, and left a son and daughter.

ICHABOD D. BARTLETT was born in Dover, New Hampshire, November 25, 1823. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1843, and prepared himself for the profession of the law in the office of Daniel M. Christie, in his native place. He established himself in Bangor in 1847, and obtained a large and successful practice, that he retained until his decease, which occurred at Mount Desert, July 27, 1861. He was a "learned, laborious, and able lawyer," and had the thorough confidence of his clients. He was considerably connected with the municipal affairs of the city, and in judgment was esteemed sound and reliable. The Bar passed resolutions eloquently recognizing his abilities, which were presented by Abraham Sanborn, Esq., and were responded to by Chief Justice Appleton, in which he said:

Few were better acquainted with the technical learning of the earlier days, or more fully versed in the liberal principles with which enlarged philosophy and advancing civilization have illustrated the jurisprudence of more modern times. In the practice of the courts, as in all his dealings, his integrity was never doubted nor questioned. His mind was discriminating and vigorous, and his perception quick. All who knew him respected his opinions and confided in his judgments. His sterling honesty commanded the confidence of the public. His kindly nature and his warm affections endeared him to his family and friends.

MATTHIAS WEEKS,

a native of New Hampshire, practiced law in Clinton, Kennebec county, where he represented his class in the State Legislature for two or three years. He removed to Orono about 1853, remained in practice there four or five years, and returned to Clinton, where he died.

MARCELLUS EMERY, son of Dr. James Emery and Sally Rowe Emery, was born in Frankfort, Maine, July 24, 1830; entered Bowdoin College in 1844; graduated in 1853, and became the Principal of the City High School in Gardiner, Maine. In August, 1855, he resigned and went to Woodville, Mississippi, where he taught in a private family. In May, 1856, he went to Evansville, Indiana, and entered the law office of Wheeler & Robinson. In July he returned to Maine, and made electioneering speeches in behalf of Buchanan and Breckenridge. In October he entered the law office of Abraham Sanborn, in Bangor, and was admitted to the Bar in November. He became a law partner with Mr. Sanborn, February 2, 1857; August 1st became the editor of the Bangor Daily Union, and also of the Democrat, a weekly paper. In 1859-60 he served one year as Alderman for Ward One, but declined a re-election. In 1860 he was Chairman of the Breckenridge State Democratic Committee. August 12th of the same year his printing office was destroyed by a mob. In 1862 he again entered the practice of law in Bangor. In 1863, January 1st, he revived the Democrat. In 1864 he was delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago; and in 1868 a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in New York; and on July 7th, in behalf of the majority of the Maine delegation, he presented the name of George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, as candidate for President. August 17, 1870, he was nominated for Congress from the Fourth District. January 1, 1870, he established the Bangor Daily Commercial, and July 18th of the same year he was nominated again by the Democrats for Congress.

It will be thus seen that Mr. Emery was rather a politician than a lawyer. He was a man of decided opinions, a man of courage and ability. Had he continued in the practice of his profession from the time he entered it, he probably would have obtained high position as a lawyer. He never married, and died in 1878.

HENRY L. MITCHELL

was born in Unity, Waldo county, in 1844. He had in early life the advantages of a thorough academic education, which was afterward improved by private tuition. He studied law in Bangor, was admitted to the Bar in Penobscot county in 1866, and to the Bar of the United States Circuit Court in 1871. He has always, since he went into practice, resided in Bangor and devoted himself to his profession, making equity and bankrupt law specialties. He is a Justice of the Peace and Notary Public.

Mr. Mitchell is enthusiastic in his profession, and labors with a persistency and ability worthy the success which he achieves.

CHARLES A. BAILEY

was born March 10, 1838, in what is now the town of Columbia Falls, in Washington county, Maine. He studied at the Maine State Seminary, Lewiston (now Bates College), and completed a course about two years in advance of the requirements for entering college, but was unable to complete a college course, owing to ill-health. He subsequently entered the office of the Hon. Jotham Lippincott, at Columbia Falls, and commenced the study of law, and afterwards continued his reading in the office of Peter Thacher & Bro., of Rockland, Maine. Before being admitted to the Bar, he entered the army, and served in the Thirtieth Regiment Maine Infantry until the close of the war. In 1865 he entered the Albany Law School, at Albany, New York. When he had completed the prescribed course, he was admitted to practice in the New York courts; but before commencing practice he returned to Maine and was admitted to the Penobscot Bar. In June, 1866, he went into practice in Oldtown, and there continued until January, 1881. At that time a copartnership was formed between him and ex-Governor Daniel F. Davis, in Bangor, where they have since been in practice.

Mr. Bailey has been appointed to the office of Agent of the Penobscot Indians, a position of greater responsibility than emolument; but the duties are faithfully attended to, and will be while they are in his hands. Mr. Bailey is a lawyer devoted to his profession and destined to a high position, for he has a legal mind and believes in work. He received the degree of Bachelor of Laws (LL.

D.), from the University of Albany, in 1866; and that of Master of Arts (A. M.), from Bates College, in 1869.

JOHN A. BLANCHARD was born in Damariscotta, November 25, 1831. He was graduated at Waterville College in 1850, and was admitted to the Penobscot county Bar at the January term of the Supreme Judicial Court in 1855. He established himself in Oldtown, and became a copartner with George P. Sewall in 1865. The name adopted by the firm was Sewall & Blanchard. Mr. Blanchard received the appointment of United States Assessor in 1862, and continued in the office until 1869. A faithful and reliable lawyer.

T. F. M'FADDEN,

a native of Winslow and graduate of Colby University, opened an office in Orono in 1868. In 1869 he married Phebe W., youngest daughter of the late J. Colburn. He left Orono in 1870, and is now a resident of Vermont.

GENERAL JOHN F. APPLETON, the oldest son of Chief Justice Appleton, was born in Bangor, August 29, 1838. He fitted for college in the Bangor High School, and graduated at Bowdoin College in the class of 1860. He was qualifying himself for the practice of law in the office of James T. Rowe, Esq., in Bangor, when the War of the Rebellion broke out. Believing it his duty to take part in it, he raised a company for the Twelfth Maine Regiment, and went with it, under General Butler, to the Department of the Gulf. He was in the Lafourche expedition up the Teche, and through the Red River country with General Banks, until he joined General Augur and Port Hudson was invested. He manifested signal bravery during the investment of Port Hudson, exposing himself, when necessary, in places of the greatest physical danger, and winning universal admiration from friend and foe.

A brother officer wrote this of General Appleton's bravery at Port Hudson:

On the 27th of May, while our soldiers were struggling through the thorns and underbrush, cut down by Rebel bullets at every step, a small detachment of men reached the ditch in front of the Rebel works, and there a few brave men, the remnant of a brigade, exhausted, stopped. But Captain Appleton alone, among ten thousand men who fought that day, mounted the Rebel parapet and stood there facing the whole Rebel army, a mark for a thousand rifles; stood there powerless, except to die. The following evening, while talking the affair over, he told me that at the time of his greatest danger, this passage occurred to him with great force, and he found strength in dwelling upon it: "Not a sparrow falls to the ground without the knowledge of our Heavenly Father; and ye are of more value than many sparrows." A Confederate officer told me, after the surrender, that as he saw that young man standing there so calm and brave, he could not bear to see him die, and he told his men not to fire upon him.

But his moral courage was greater when he took command of a colored regiment, against the remonstrances of his associates, and notwithstanding the social ostracism to which he knew it would subject him. He well performed his duties until the close of his service, and returned to his friends with an enviable reputation. After his return he established himself in the practice of the profession and in 1869 was appointed and confirmed by the United States Senate as District Judge for the Eastern District of Texas. It was a severe trial to him to decline the appointment, which he was obliged to do, because of declining health. He died of consumption at the residence of his father in Bangor, August 12, 1874.

A committee of the Penobscot Bar, consisting of Charles P. Stetson, Charles Hamlin, Henry C. Goodenow, John F. Godfrey, and Franklin A. Wilson, reported resolutions to the effect that the members of the Bar had heard with deep sorrow of the death of their brother, General John F. Appleton; that his generous disposition, his high sense of honor, his integrity, his high-toned character, and his fine intellect commanded their esteem and respect, and gave promise of a brilliant and useful career as a citizen and a lawyer; that they felt great pride in his military record in the late civil war; and the courage and ability there displayed by him did honor to his State and great service to his country.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and were presented to the Court by Charles P. Stetson, Esq., with appropriate remarks; and eulogistic addresses were made by Messrs. Charles Hamlin, John F. Godfrey, Edmund W. Flagg, and Franklin A. Wilson. Judge Kent, who presided, responded in fitting terms, ordered the resolutions spread on the records of the court, and, in respect of the memory of the deceased brother, that the court be adjourned.

WILLIAM A. BLAKE,

son of William A. Blake, was born in Bangor; fitted for college in the Bangor High School; graduated from Bowdoin College; read law with his uncle, Hon. Samuel H. Blake; was admitted to the Bar in 1875, and died in January, 1876. He was a fine scholar, and a young man of great promise. Mr. Paine, on presenting the resolutions of the Bar to the Court, spoke of him in highly eulogistic terms. The resolutions recognized "the removal of one eminently qualified for the business and duties of life, by his many manly virtues, his correct, industrious habits, his genial qualities, his high mental culture, and especially by his character and attainments as a lawyer;" and that the Bar had "lost a member of whom they could feel justly proud, as giving promise of future eminence and usefulness in his profession." Chief Justice Appleton said: "Studious, scholarly, his collegiate course was finished with the highest honors. He did not excel merely as a scholar in this allotted course of instruction, but he held rank as a writer of great promise. His published productions show him instinct with the spirit of poetry and that

'He knew
Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme.'

"He had just completed the study of his profession. The same talent, the same industry and zeal in the future as in the past would have assured his professional success. When those who should succeed us go before us, it seems an invasion of the laws and the order of nature.

'The hand of the reaper
Takes the ears that are hoary;
But the voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory.'

JOHN H. HILLIARD,

born in Gorham, Maine, in 1808; graduated from Bow-doin College in 1827; read law with Hon. Josiah Pierce, of Gorham; first established himself in the profession at Stillwater, Maine, afterwards, in 1834, went to Oldtown, where he resided until he died. He was a prominent citizen of Oldtown. At different times he held the offices of Town Clerk, Selectman, member of the Superintending School Committee, and represented his town in the Legislature. He was also County Attorney.

Mr. Hilliard was a good lawyer, and performed the duties of the offices to which he was elected ably and creditably. For seven years before his decease he was confined to his house by ill-health. He died November 26, 1880. In a resolution of the Bar, passed after his decease, it is affirmed that he was "a worthy member, a scholarly and cultivated gentleman, justly esteemed as honorable in his practices, faithful to his clients, true to his conviction of duty; of modest, kind, and social disposition, and of honest and upright life; that his intercourse with us as a member of the Bar for more than forty years won for him the friendship and respect of all."

Judge Humphrey presented this resolution to the court, accompanied by eulogistic remarks. Chief Justice Appleton responded. In the course of his remarks he said:

The duties of the important office of County Attorney he discharged with scrupulous fidelity to the people, and with no undue zeal against the accused, anxious only that impartial justice should be done.

Death found him prepared and resigned. An honest man, a learned and able lawyer, one beloved and respected by the community where he so long resided; one pure and upright in all the relations of life.

JOSHUA HILL.

Mr. Hill practiced for many years in Hampden, and commanded a large business. He died in 1860. The Bar took notice of his death, and adopted the following with other resolutions:

Resolved, That in the death of our brother, Joshua Hill, the Penobscot Bar has lost a worthy member, a gentleman justly esteemed as honorable in the profession, faithful to his clients, modest and unassuming, of even temper and social disposition, honest and upright in his life; his long intercourse of more than twenty years with the members of this Bar justly won for him many warm friends and the good-will of all.

FRANCIS EUGENE BOND, son of Thomas Bond, of Hallowell, Maine, and Lucretia F. (Page) Bond, was born in Hallowell, February 7, 1808; graduated at Bowdoin College in 1828; practiced law in Darien, Georgia, for a time after his admission to the Bar; afterward came to Bangor, where he practiced several years. He died September 5, 1846. He possessed the estimable characteristics of his father, who was a distinguished member of the Kennebec Bar, and died in 1827. The Penobscot Bar took action on the death of the son. The resolutions were drawn by gentlemen who knew him well, and do not exaggerate his qualities. They say that he "had secured the esteem of all his associates at the Bar by his high sense of honor, manifested alike in his professional practice and his intercourse with society; by the amiability and frankness which shone in his countenance and characterized his manners and his actions; by the perfect guilelessness of his heart and the remarkable uprightness and integrity of his life; and had entitled himself no less to their respect by the soundness of his judgment, his acquirements as a counselor, his capacity as a practitioner, and the able and satisfactory manner in which his good sense, his industrious habits, and his great conscientiousness enabled him to fulfil the duties of an arduous profession."

COLONEL JASPER HUTCHINGS,

son of Josiah W. and Phebe Hutchings, was born in the town of Penobscot, Hancock county, Maine, in 1835; lived there until thirteen years of age, then removed with his father's family to Brewer, in Penobscot county, where he now resides, and has resided most of the time since; was educated in the town and private schools in Brewer, and at Williams College, Massachusetts; taught school some in his school and college days; read law with A. Sanborn, Esq., of Bangor, and was admitted to practice in the courts of this State in 1861; practiced about one year in Aroostook county, then in the fall of 1862 was mustered into the military service of the United States as First Lieutenant Company C, Twenty-second Regiment Maine Volunteers, a nine months' regiment. He served with this regiment through the siege of Port Hudson, and until its term of service was about expiring, when he organized and for several months commanded, with the rank of Major, the Eighty-third United States Colored Infantry. He was afterwards commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventy-fourth United States Colored Infantry, and as such was mustered out of service in Louisiana in January, 1866.

In the summer of 1866 he married Kate S. Burr, of Brewer, daughter of the late Joseph B. Burr, and the same year began and has since continued the practice of the law in Bangor. He has twice served as a Representative in the Legislature from the class of Brewer and Orrington, and six years, from 1874 to 1880, as County Attorney for Penobscot county. Colonel Hutchings was a very able and acceptable County Attorney. He prepared his cases well, and was successful with them. He failed to be re-elected because his party fell into the minority. He is a gentlemen of integrity, an impressive speaker, possesses clear perceptive faculties and good judgment. He is highly esteemed as a lawyer and as a man.

HORACE B. CHAMBERLAIN, son of Joshua Chamberlain, and brother of ex-Governor Chamberlain, was born in Brewer, Maine, in 1834; graduated at Bowdoin College in 1857; qualified himself for the profession; was admitted to the Bar in Bangor, and died in 1861 at the age of twenty-seven. The Bar testified to his "honest and generous" qualities; that he was "honorable in his practice, jealous for the rights of his clients, and a safe counselor—one whose mental capacity and scholarly attainments gave warrant of a life of honor and usefulness."

Chief Justice Appleton said: "Our departed friend entered upon his professional career with the vantage ground which firmness of principle, integrity of purpose, and a cultivated intellect always give. The allurements of life were before him. Its prizes were within his grasp.

The morning promise was fair; but ere he had measured his strength—almost, indeed, as soon as he had entered the arena—the seeds of disease were found working in his veins and undermining the vigor and strength needed for the contests of a manly ambition. But death is the condition of life. They are ever in fearful and terrible contact.

"Nascentes morimur finisque ab origine pendet."

GEORGE W. WHITNEY

was born in Pittsfield, Maine, in 1826; attended the academy at Waterville, where he prepared himself for the study of the law; read law with Hon. D. D. Stewart, at St. Albans, Somerset county, and was admitted to the Bar in 1854. Mr. Whitney shortly afterward established himself at Newport, in this county, where he acquired a respectable business. He was a good and reliable lawyer, and a gentleman. The Bar adopted resolutions of respect, and caused it to be recorded of him that he was "justly esteemed as a citizen, honorable and capable in his practice, faithful to his clients, honest and upright in his life, and social in his disposition," and that he had "won many warm friends and the high esteem of all."

JAMES A. DONIGAN.

Mr. Donigan has been in practice since 1872. He was born March 15, 1848; is the son of Thomas Donigan, of Oldtown, and second of a family of seven children—four sons and three daughters. Having a desire for knowledge, he attended all the graded schools in Oldtown. Like many Americans born in poverty and ambitious of advancement, he worked and studied and worked. At sixteen he went to Lewiston, where he continued his practice of studying and working for three years. In 1867 he attended Hampden Academy, and in 1868 and 1869 the Bucksport Seminary. He has had much practice as a teacher, having taught about twenty terms of school. He studied law with Charles A. Bailey, Esq., in Oldtown, and was admitted to the Penobscot Bar at the April term, 1872, since which time he has practiced his profession in Bangor. Mr. Donigan has had much to contend against, but he has pluck and perseverance which will doubtless enable him to accomplish a great deal. He was married August 17, 1874, and has one child.

JAMES H. BURGESS.

Mr. Burgess was born in Oldtown, February 4, 1845. Soon after attaining his majority he moved to Lincoln, in this county, where he was engaged in trade until the summer of 1868. In the autumn of that year he was employed as Clerk of the Superintendent of Construction of the Custom House building, in Bangor, and continued as such until April, 1870, when he was appointed to a clerkship in the Pension Office at Washington. This office he retained until August, 1870, for the purpose of qualifying himself as a lawyer. He entered the office of William P. Young, in Milo, and applied himself with such diligence that he was deemed qualified for and was admitted to the Bar at the September term of the Supreme Judicial Court, 1871, in Dover, Piscataquis county. In October, 1871, he commenced practice at Winn, in this county, and continued in business there until January, 1877, when he removed to Bangor and entered upon the duties of Clerk of the Courts, to which he had been elected the September previous. He continued in this office until January, 1880, when his term expired. He had been renominated by the Republican party, but was defeated by the candidate of the Fusion party. In February, 1880, he renewed the practice of his profession in Corinna.

In 1872 Mr. Burgess was elected Town Clerk of Winn, and was re-elected the four following years. In 1874 he was elected Selectman, and was re-elected in 1875 and 1876. He also held the office of Superintending School Committee of Winn for three years.

In June, 1880, he was enumerator of the census for Corinna.

Mr. Burgess is a faithful and reliable attorney, and has performed the duties of the trusts committed to him intelligently and satisfactorily.

ABRAHAM SANBORN

was born in London, New Hampshire; fitted for college at the Bangor Academy; graduated at Waterville College with the highest honors; read law with Jacob McGaw, in Bangor; after admission to the Bar established himself in that part of Levant which is now Kenduskeag; in about 1840 removed to Bangor, where he has since remained.

Mr. Sanborn is one of the leading members of the Bar; a good lawyer; a fine advocate. He has had an extensive practice, especially in Penobscot and Piscataquis counties. At one time in his life he was somewhat connected with politics; has been several times a member of the Legislature, but generally has devoted himself to the business of his profession.

FRANKLIN A. WILSON, son of ex-Sheriff John H. Wilson, was born in Bangor; prepared for college under David Worcester, Esq., Principal of the Bangor Boys' High School; graduated from Bowdoin College in 1854; read law with Albert W. Paine and John A. Peters; commenced practice in Bangor; was copartner with Mr. Peters for several years; is now in partnership with Charles F. Woodard, Esq.; has always done a large business; is a very able and popular lawyer and advocate; has been connected with the business of the city in various ways; has been connected with the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad, and the European & North American Railway, of which he is a Director; and is a leading lawyer at the Bar.

JOSEPH C. WILSON,

born in Orono, is a son of Nathaniel Wilson. He fitted for college at Exeter Academy, New Hampshire, and graduated at Bowdoin College in 1867. He read law with his father, and was admitted to the Bar in April, 1871. May 23, 1876, he intermarried with Mary H., daughter of N. U. Colton, Esq., of Bangor. In 1879 he was appointed Trial Justice, and in 1878 Commissioner under the act for the enforcement of judgments.

LEWIS C. STEARNS

was born in Newry, Oxford county, Maine, in 1853; was educated at Gould's Academy, Bethel, and Colby University; he was of the class of 1876, but did not complete the course. Mr. Stearns was admitted to the Penobscot Bar, February 29, 1876, and soon after established himself in the profession in Springfield, Maine, where he has acquired the confidence of the people, as he deserves. He is now Public Administrator of the county of Penobscot.

CHAPTER XVII.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

BY E. F. DUREN, OF BANGOR.

Introduction—Rev. Aaron C. Adams—Rev. George E. Adams, D. D.—Rev. John C. Adams—Hon. Elisha H. Allen—Rev. Joseph H. Allen—Rev. Charles F. Allen, D. D.—Hon. John Appleton—Mrs. Jane S. Appleton—Rev. John M. Ashmun—Anna Boynton Averill—Mrs. Laura J. Ballard—Dr. J. Frederick Babcock—Benjamin F. Baker—Rev. Smith Baker—Rev. William M. Barbour, D. D.—David Barker—Miss Evvie Barker—Mrs. Martha Hill Barker—Hon. Noah Barker—Mrs. C. C. Barrett—Rev. Alvan J. Bates—Rev. Amory Battles—Mrs. P. A. Battles—Hon. Samuel H. Blake—Rev. Alvan Bond, D. D.—Dr. S. P. Bradbury—Rev. Edwin Buck—Rev. Nathaniel Butler—Rev. Samuel L. Caldwell, D. D.—Rev. Elbridge G. Carpenter—Mrs. Matilda P. Carter—John Chamberlain—General Joshua L. Chamberlain, LL. D.—Peleg W. Chandler—Rev. Jeremiah Chaplin—Mrs. Jane D. Chaplin—Rev. Leander S. Coan—Rev. Nathaniel E. Cornwall—Mrs. Eliza L. Crosby—Rev. Ephraim C. Cummings—Rev. Thomas Curtis, D. D.—Hon. Jonas Cutting—Frederick S. Davenport—Sarah Maria Deane—Rev. Nathan Dole—Rev. Charles F. Dole—Nathan Haskell Dole—Rev. Ebenezer Douglass—Anna F. Drinkwater—Elnathan F. Duren—Rev. Thomas L. Ellis—Mrs. Deborah Brown Emery—Rev. Charles C. Everett—Rev. Solomon P. Fay—M. C. Fernald, Ph. D.—Charles H. Fernald, A. M.—Edward M. Field, M. D.—Rev. George W. Field, D. D.—Rev. John O. Fiske, D. D.—Rev. Frederick Freeman—Melville W. Fuller—Charles Gilman—Rev. Edward W. Gilman, D. D.—Hon. John E. Godfrey—Ephraim Goodale—Samuel L. Goodale—Mrs. Hannah E. Goodwin—Dr. Augustus C. Hamlin—Rev. Cyrus L. Hamlin, D. D., LL. D.—Hon. Elijah L. Hamlin—Hon. Hannibal Hamlin—N. Sparhawk Harlow—Thomas S. Harlow—Rev. Samuel Harris, D. D., LL. D.—Elizabeth P. Hatch—Hon. Joshua W. Hathaway—Rev. Francis T. Hazlewood—Rev. Frederick H. Hedge, D. D.—Rev. John R. Herrick, D. D.—John B. Hill—General John L. Hodsdon—Blanche Willis Howard—"Q. P. Index"—Mrs. Henrietta C. Ingersoll—Rev. Edwii Johnson—George Kent—Hon. Edward Kent—Rev. Arthur M. Knapp—Joseph Lamson—Herbert S. Lancy—Rev. Edwin Leonard—George Leonard, Jr.—Rev. Henry C. Leonard—Rev. Wales Lewis—Rev. George S. Little—Mrs. Sophia B. Littlefield—Rev. Harvey Loomis—Rev. Joseph C. Lovejoy—Sarah Jane Luce—Mrs. Frances Laughton Mace—Rev. John Maltby—Rev. Daniel H. Mansfield—Mrs. Sarah Hayford Marden—Rev. Javan K. Mason, D. D.—Rev. William Mason—Marion Mitchell—Rev. Samuel H. Merrill—Rev. Joseph R. Munsell—Edward B. Nealley—Christopher C. Norcross—David Norton—Rev. M. C. O'Brien—Albert W. Paine—Rev. Levi L. Paine, D. D.—Selma W. Paine—Rev. Robert Page—Rev. Wooster Parker—Rev. Cyril Pearl—Jeremiah Perley—Adeliza Perry—Hon. John A. Peters—Mrs. Rebecca E. Pierce—Mrs. Benjamin

Plummer—Rev. Swann L. Pomroy, D. D.—Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D.—Henry V. Poor—John A. Poor—Laura E. Poor—Colonel Thomas W. Porter—Spencer A. Pratt—Mrs. Rebecca P. Reed—Thomas H. Rieh—Charles P. Roberts—Rev. Charles J. H. Ropes—Mrs. Hannah A. Ropes—Mrs. Henrietta Gould Rowe—Rev. Lyman S. Rowland—Rev. William T. Savage, D. D.—Mrs. E. W. Sawtelle—John S. Sayward—Mrs. Sarah Emery Seaman—Rev. John S. Sewall, D. D.—Rev. Frederick E. Shaw—Mrs. Sarah E. Shaw—Rev. George Shepard, D. D.—Rev. A. K. P. Small, D. D.—Rev. John Smith, D. D.—Rev. John Cotton Smith, D. D.—Rev. Joseph Smith—Rev. Newman Smyth, D. D.—Rev. Benjamin G. Snow—George W. Snow—Miss Etta H. Stanwood—Rev. Lewis F. Stearns, D. D.—Rev. Samuel J. Stewart—Rev. Daniel S. Talcott, D. D.—Rev. Benjamin Tappan, D. D.—Rev. Dr. Benjamin F. Tefft—Rev. B. B. Thatcher—Rev. Richard B. Thurston—Rev. Mark Trafton, D. D.—Elliot Valentine—Mrs. Lucy F. Wakefield—Hon. Israel Washburn, Jr.—Mrs. Mary Moulton Webster—Rev. Crosby H. Wheeler—Albert C. Wiggin—Edward Wiggin—Smith Williams—Rev. Thomas Williams—Mrs. Laura Hatch Wilkins—Hon. William D. Williamson—Rev. Adam Wilson, D. D.—Amanda M. Wilson—Rev. Abijah Wines—Mrs. Sarah F. Woodhull—Rev. Dr. Leonard Woods—Mrs. Susan A. Wheeler—Joseph B. Whipple.

INTRODUCTION.

Reference is made in the following summary of the literature of this county, to all those who have written or compiled books or pamphlets, or have contributed to magazines or newspapers, and in general, the titles of their productions are given.

The absence of some names will be noted. They are among those who made request that they should not be reported. Some have kept no list of their writings, and cannot recall the titles. One, a poet of no mean powers, writes: "Whatever I have written has been traced on the sand left by the outgoing tide; the incoming tide has, of course, effaced it all." In some cases the full list could not be obtained from the author or any other source. All that could be gathered by diligent inquiry and correspondence, is here presented.

The names of editors are generally found in connection with the History of the Newspaper Press in this county, in another chapter of the General History.

AUTHORS AND THEIR WORKS.

ADAMS, REV. AARON C., Bangor (Pastor Congregational Church, Auburn, Maine, Wethersfield & Thompson, Connecticut). Our Country; Portland, 1842. . . . The Method of the Adversary; Norwich, Connecticut, 1852. . . . Our Hope; Lewiston, 1860. . . . Appeal for Bangor Seminary; Bangor, 1865. . . . In Memoriam of Rev. David Thurston, D. D., Winthrop, 24 pp.; Portland, 1865; new edition, 1867. . . . Historic Sketch of the First Church of Christ, in Wethersfield, Connecticut; Hartford, 1876.

ADAMS, D. D., REV. GEORGE E., Bangor (Professor Bangor Theological Seminary, 1827-9; Pastor Congregational Church, Brunswick, 1829-70). Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, in Machias: Jehovah's Method and Purpose of Salvation, 14 pp.; Portland, 1841. . . . Eulogy on Joseph McKeen, Treasurer of Bowdoin College, 12 pp.; Brunswick, 1865. . . . Sermon in Memory of Mrs. Ellingwood, widow of Rev. John W. Ellingwood, Bath. A near friend of Dr. Adams (Rev. Ray Palmer, D. D., of New York,) says "he had not published much, though he might well have done so, for he had ample ability and scholarship. But he was over-modest, and seemed always to shrink from attempting any such thing. I remember a jeu d'esprit, Our Fore-mothers, published probably in the Mirror, at Portland; a piece rich in his peculiar humor."

ADAMS, REV. JOHN C., Bangor (Congregational Church, Falmouth, from 1859). Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, Portland: The Supply and Material of Ministers, 19 pp.; Portland, 1865. . . . Letter to Bangor's Centennial, 1869.

ALLEN, HON. ELISHA H., Bangor. Addresses and Orations; also published speeches delivered in the Maine House of Representatives, 1838, etc., and in the United States House of Representatives as member of Congress, 1841-43; and subsequently decisions as Chancellor of the Sandwich Islands.

ALLEN, REV. JOSEPH H. (Pastor Unitarian Church, Bangor, 1850-57). Previous to 1850, something over fifty larger or smaller articles,—also, 1. A Farewell Sermon: The Account Rendered; Roxbury, 1847. . . . 2. The Public Man: Death of Hon. John Fairfield, of Maine, Washington, District of Columbia, 1847. . . . 3. The Statesman and the Man: John Quincy Adams, 23 pp.; Washington, 1848. . . . 4. Memoir of Hiram Withington; Boston, 1849. . . . 5. Ten Discourses on Orthodoxy; Boston, 1849. . . . Then, 1. The Great Controversy of States and People; Bangor, 1851. . . . 2. A Manual of Devotion for Families and Sunday-schools; Boston, 1852. . . . 3. A Reign of Terror, 16 pp.; Bangor, 1856. . . . 4. Proof of my Ministry, 15 pp.; Bangor, 1857; and about fifty review articles and newspaper communications, including three or four Sermons and Lectures. . . . Since 1857, some hundreds of articles in reviews and newspapers,—chiefly the Christian Examiner, of which he was associate or chief editor for twelve years; and the following: 1. Hebrew Men and Times, 12mo., 435 pp.; Boston, 1861; new edition with introduction, 1879. . . . 2. General Vocabulary of Latin Grammar, 1869. . . . 3. Latin Primer, 1870. . . . 4. New Latin Method, 1875. . . . 5. Fragments of Christian History, 1880. . . . 6. Three Phases of Modern Theology, 1880. . . . Senior editor of the Allen Series of Latin Text Books: 1. Manual of Grammar, 1868; 2. Lessons, 1869; 3. Reader, 1869; 4. Composition (revised edition), 1880. Also, of the Allen and Greenough Latin Series: 1. Grammar, 1872; revised edition, 1877; 2. Cicero; 3. Cæsar; 4. Virgil; 5. Ovid; 6. Sallust (Catiline); 7. Cicero de Senectute (Selections, 2-7. Course I. and Course II. are combined from these); 8. Latin Method; 9. Latin Composition. Senior editor of Goodwin's Greek Reader, first edition, 1870.

ALLEN, D. D., REV. CHARLES F. (Pastor First Methodist church, Bangor, 1870-72; President of the Maine State College, Orono, 1871-79). A Sermon before the United Societies of Skowhegan, on the National Fast, September 26, 1861. . . . Baccalaureate Sermons at the Commencements of the Maine State College, 1872-78. . . . Agricultural Addresses before the Board of Agriculture of Maine, published in the Reports of the Board, Augusta. . . . Address on the Aims and Methods of the Maine State College; Paris, 1872. . . . On Science in Agriculture; Houlton, 1873. . . . Agricultural Education; Calais, 1875. . . . Education of Farmers and Mechanics; Alfred, 1877. . . . How to Retain the Fertility of Virgin Soils; Presque Isle, 1878. . . . Address before the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, 1879. . . . Industrial Education, 8vo., 24 pp. . . . History of Somerset County, twenty-five numbers, published in the Fairfield Journal, 1879-80.

APPLETON, HON. JOHN (Bangor). Reports of Decisions in the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, vols. 19 and 20; Hallowell, 1842-43. . . . The Rules of Evidence Stated and Discussed, 284 pp., 8vo.; Philadelphia, 1860. . . . Opinions as Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, 1852-62, and Chief Justice from 1862 to the present time, in volumes 35 to 70 of the Maine Reports, 1854-80.

APPLETON, MRS. JANE S. (Bangor). Occasional articles for periodicals; among these, "The Present Aim of Female Education," in a magazine edited by Mrs. S. J. Hale; Boston, 1835. . . . "My Aunt Catherine," and other articles in a magazine; Portland, 1835-40. . . . Woman, is it by Thee. The Macedonian; Ladies on the Poetry of Life; Lenore, Sequel to Vision of Bangor; Child's Spring Song; The Veiled Dancer, 52 pp., in "Voices of the Kenduskeag," 286 pp., of which Mrs. Appleton was one of the editors; Bangor, 1848. . . . Occasional poems; among them, "On Hungary," 1852, at the time of Kossuth's visit to this country. . . . "Ho! for Kansas," in 1856, during the Kansas troubles, and the Eastern emigration thither. . . . "Welcome to the Second Maine," 1865, on its return from the war.

ASHMUN, REV. JEHUDI (Professor in Theological Seminary, 1817-19). History of Liberia Colony, 42 pp.; Washington, 1846. . . . Letters and Journal while he was connected with that colony; Importance of Missionary Efforts in Africa; Devotion and Prayer; Divine Providence; Social Affections; Religious Principles; Notes on Africa; Colonial Notices; Sketches of Character;—143 pp., appended to his Memoir, by Rev. R. R. Gurley, and Funeral Sermon by Rev. Leonard Bacon, 556 pp., 8vo.; Washington, 1835.

AVERILL, ANNA BOYNTON (Alton). Little poems were published in the Portland Transcript, about 1871. Short poems, juvenile sketches, and stories have since been written. The poem Birch Stream Whittier gathered into his Songs of Three Centuries, Longfellow into his Poems of Places (New England), and the Appletons, New York, into a volume which they published under the title of Landscape in American Poetry. Scribner & Co. published the poem Cherry Cheek in a volume of selections from St. Nicholas, named Baby Days. In 1872 the Atlantic Monthly published two poems in the June and July numbers, called respectively Why, and Youth and Age. Poems and sketches have appeared in the Independent, the Golden Rule, St. Nicholas, Wide Awake, Youth's Companion, and Young Folks. What has been written was in the intervals of work of quite another kind, as rest and recreation.

BALLARD, MRS. LAURA JANE CURTIS (Bangor). Two volumes—Nowadays, 309 pp.; New York and Bangor, 1834. . . . Christine, or Woman's Trials and Triumphs, 350 pp.; New York, 1856. . . . Editor of the Revolution, or the Woman's Journal, prior to 1861, when it was discontinued. . . . In 1868-69 letters from Europe were published in the New York Journal of Commerce.

BABCOCK, DR. J. FREDERICK (Bangor). Floret, or the Poor Girl: A Drama, 62 pp.; Bangor, 1874.

BAKER, BENJAMIN F. (Bangor; removed to Boston). Choral Harmony, a Church Music Book. . . . A work on the Voice, a School Tune Book, and other musical works.

BAKER, REV. SMITH (Pastor Congregational Church, Orono, 1864-71, now of Lowell, Massachusetts). Address at Semi centennial of the First Church, Lowell, Massachusetts, 72 pp.; 1876. . . . Christ in the House, 17 pp.; Lowell, 1878. . . . On the Lord's Supper, 17 pp.; Lowell, 1880. . . . Articles to religious papers.

BARBOUR, D. D., REV. WILLIAM M., (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1873-77). Methods of Providence: A sermon before the Massachusetts Education Society, 12 pp.; Boston, May, 1868. . . . Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, New Castle: Christ a Preacher, 10 pp.; Bangor, 1874. . . . The Unfailing Virtue: A sermon before the American Missionary Association, Middletown, Connecticut, 8 vo., 12 pp.; New York, 1875. . . . Articles in magazines and journals.

BARKER, DAVID (Exeter). In Native Poets of Maine; Bangor, 1851, introductory poem Try Again, Solace for Dark Hours, Make Your Mark. . . . Poems, 12mo., 232 pp.; Bangor, 1876. . . . Harper's Cyclopædia of British and American Poetry, edited by Epes Sargent, has a biographical notice with several columns of his poems. . . . History of Exeter, in manuscript.

BARKER, MISS EVVIE, a daughter of Hon. Lewis Barker, Bangor, was a writer of verse and prose, well known in American literary circles, and a quite extensive contributor to the first-class magazines and papers. Two of her poetical productions were very general favorites: Do the Angels Kiss Good-night? and Angel Whispers. She died in 1871, at too early an age for the world to know and appreciate her extraordinary abilities as a writer.

BARKER, MRS. MARTHA HILL (Bangor). Sketches in Voices of the Kenduskeag, Bangor, 1848. The Countess of Croye, The Bright Bird Sings, Song, The Flight, The Human Heart; 16 pp. . . . Other fugitive pieces for the Boston and New York press.

BARKER, NOAH, (Exeter Mills). Reports as Land Agent of Maine, 1857-59, and Commissioner to investigate the claims of settlers on lands in Aroostook county. . . . Report of the Commissioner on the Variation of the Magnetic Needle, 83 pp.; Augusta, 1868. . . . Letter to Bangor's Centennial, 1869. . . . A History of Exeter, commenced by David Barker, in manuscript and inserted in this volume, post.

BARRETT, MRS. C. C. (Bangor). Associate editor of Voices of the Kenduskeag, 286 pp.; Bangor, 1848; author of the following articles in the volume: Asa Glover, Esq., 18 pp.; First Impressions, 13 pp.; The Resolve, 28 pp.; in magazines: Speculation, Louisburg.

and other articles in Mrs. Stephens's Monthly, Portland, and in Maine Monthly, Bangor, also contributions to newspapers.

BATES, Rev. ALVAN (Congregational minister to Lincoln, 1847-65). The First and Great Commandment; 1860. . . . In Memoriam of Solon Wilder, Music Teacher, Bangor, 30 pp., royal 8vo.; Boston, 1874. . . . A Complete Manhood: In Memory of Dea. Washington White, Saundersville, Mass., 1877.

BATTLES, Rev. AMORY, pastor of the Universalist Church, Bangor, 1851-72). Sermons in Gospel Banner, New Covenant, Christian Freeman, Bangor Whig, and Dexter Gazette, viz.: The Pulpit. . . . False Reverence for Human Authority. . . . The Object of Punishment. . . . "Whom do Men Say that I, the Son of Man, Am?" . . . Also, in other forms, The City that Hath Foundations. . . . Immortality. . . . The Moral Connection between This Life and the Next. . . . A Convention Sermon: The Open Gates. . . . Sermon to the Young on Habits, and another on Companions. . . . Three Sermons on Home. . . . "Silver and Gold Have I none, but such as I Have, Give I Thee," or, We Give What We Have. . . . Your Heart Shall Live Forever: A funeral sermon in memory of Mrs. Jane A. Hersey. . . . Two sermons: It is Strange, and If. . . . A lecture: John Brown and his Executioners; in Bangor Jeffersonian, December, 1859. . . . Who will be Honored by Emancipation? Universalist Quarterly, 1862. . . . A Year of War, Its Gains and Losses; May, 1862. . . . Christ, the Way, the Truth, and the Life; a sermon at the dedication of the Universalist Church; Bangor, 1862. . . . Some Account of the Workings of Slavery in the United States; Universalist Quarterly, 1865. . . . Theology and the War; July, 1865. . . . Address on Memorial Day; in Whig and Courier, Bangor, 1873. . . . A Sunday-school Report.

BATTLES, Mrs. P. A. (Bangor). Poems in various magazines and papers. . . . Song of the Spring; George Peabody, Dedication, 1869; Hoping and Waiting, 1870; May Day, 1872; Adaline, 1873; Mother's Thought on Christmas Eve, 1877; To the New Year, Heliotrope, November Days, To J. G. Whittier, John Wilson Barron; Two Sonnets, 1878.

BLAKE, Hon. SAMUEL H. (Bangor). Orations and addresses, and contributions to magazines.

BOND, D. D., Rev. ALVAN (Norwich, Connecticut; professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1831-35). The Memory of the Fathers, 20 pp.; Norwich, Connecticut, 1843. . . . In Memory of Mrs. Mehitable Bond, 18 pp.; Norwich, 1844. . . . In Memory of Russell Hubbard, 44 pp.; Boston, 1857. . . . Historical Discourse at Centennial of Second Church, Norwich, Connecticut, 64 pp.; 1860. . . . In Memory of Hon. John A. Rockwell, 38 pp.; Norwich, 1861. . . . Editor of Biblical works and contributor to magazines.

BRADBURY, M. D., S. P. (Oldtown). Editor of the Oldtown Monthly, 1875.

BUCK, Rev. EDWIN (Bangor, now of Fall River, Massachusetts). Historical Discourse at the Semi-centennial of the Congregational Church, Slaterville, Rhode Island. . . . Funeral Sermon of Ruth Slater. . . . Portraits of Father Jotham Sewall, of Maine, and others, 48 pp.; Woonsocket, Rhode Island, 1867.

BUTLER, Rev. NATHANIEL (Hallowell). Funeral Sermon, General Berry, 20 pp., Portland, 1863; and contributor to magazines and papers.

CALDWELL, D. D., Rev. SAMUEL L. (Pastor First Baptist Church, Bangor, 1846-58). Address to the California Pilgrims; Bangor, Maine, 1849. . . . A Sermon before the Second Rhode Island Regiment of Volunteers, in the First Baptist Meeting House, Providence, June, 1861. . . . Editor of vols. 3 and 4 of publications of the Narragansett Club, containing Roger Williams's "The Bloody Tenant," and "The Bloody Tenant yet more Bloody;" Providence, Rhode Island. . . . An Oration before the Municipal Authorities and Citizens of Providence, July 4, 1861. . . . The Missionary Resources of the Kingdom of Christ: A sermon at the fiftieth anniversary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, held in Philadelphia, May, 1864. . . . A Sermon delivered ninety years after the dedication of the First Baptist Meeting House in Providence, Rhode Island, May 28, 1865. . . . An Historical Discourse before the Warren Association, at the end of its first century, 19 pp.; September, 1867. . . . A Memoir and Remains of Robinson P. Dunn, Professor in Brown University; Boston, 1867. . . . A Sermon, Memorial of Mrs. Frances Rogers Arnold; Providence. . . . The Parting Benediction: A farewell sermon in First Baptist Meeting House, Providence, Rhode Island, September, 1873. . . . Two Baptismal Sermons in the First Baptist Meeting House, Providence: "On Baptism: The Answer of a Good Conscience," and "What Baptism Means". . . . Two Baccalaureate Sermons before the graduating classes at Vassar College (of which he is now President), Poughkeepsie, New York, 1879, 1881. . . . Several articles in reviews.

CARPENTER, Rev. ELBRIDGE G. (Pastor Congregational Church, Dexter, 1843-51). Tribute to a Sainted Wife; Bath, 1854. . . . Sermon before Maine Missionary Society, Augusta: Motives to Home Missionary Work, 17 pp.; Augusta, 1856.

CARTER, Mrs. MATILDA PARKER (Hampden and Bangor). Mrs. Carter published a little before 1832. She edited, from its first number in 1835, the Eastern Magazine, the first periodical of the kind issued in Maine, which was published by her husband, Mr. John S. Carter. For six months the greater part of the contributions to this monthly were written by herself—stories, essays, poems, general editorial work. She also wrote for the Kennebec Journal, at Augusta, and the Bangor Register, printed by her husband. Shortly before her death in 1837, she received a letter from the then new Godey's Lady Book, asking her to become a regular contributor on her own terms.

CHAMBERLAIN, JOHN (first Town Clerk of Exeter and Chairman of the first three Boards of Selectmen, 1811-12-13). On Baptism: Reply to a Lecture by Rev. Enoch Mudge, a Methodist clergyman, in favor of "Infant Sprinkling," etc.; a pamphlet printed at Castine under the nom de plume, "A Baptist in the Wilderness," "John" (Chamberlain) "the Baptist."

CHAMBERLAIN, LL. D., General JOSHUA L. (Brewer, President Bowdoin College from 1871). The Red Cross: A presentation speech on behalf of the First Division, Fifth Corps, U. S. A., at Arlington, Virginia; Washington, 1865. . . . Loyalty to Principle: An oration before the military orders of the Loyal Legion; Philadelphia, 1866. . . . The Service of the Citizen at Home; Address at the fair for widows and orphans of soldiers; Portland, 1866. . . . Dead on the Field of Honor: Address at the dedication of the soldiers' monument at Gorham, Maine; Portland, 1866. . . . The Orphans' Home, the Best Monument to the Father: Address at the foundation of the Military and Naval Orphan Asylum; Bath, 1866. . . . Inaugural Address of the author as Governor of Maine; Augusta, 1867. . . . Governor's Address to the Legislature of Maine; Augusta, 1868. . . . Address before the Maine State Agricultural Society, at Portland; Augusta, 1868. . . . Governor's Address to the Legislature, 1869. . . . The Army of the Potomac: Address before the Society of the Army of the Potomac; New York City, 1869. . . . To Live for Others is Immortality: Address at the dedication of the Soldiers' Monument, Plymouth, Massachusetts; Boston, 1869. . . . Governor's Address to the Legislature of Maine, 31 pp., 1870. . . . Memorial Address; Bangor, May, 1870. . . . Response on receiving in America, from the hands of England, the body of George Peabody; Portland, 1870. . . . Why We Honor the Dead: A memorial address at Charlestown, Massachusetts, 1871. . . . The Town in the History of Liberty: An address at the Centennial celebration of the town of Winthrop, Maine; Augusta, 1871. . . . The Broader College: Inaugural address on induction into office as President of Bowdoin College; Portland, 1872. . . . The Colleges in the Struggle for American Liberty; A speech at the Lexington Centennial; Lexington, 1875. . . . Maine, Her Place in History: An address at the United States Centennial Exhibition, Philadelphia, November 4, 1876; delivered also before the Legislature of Maine; 132 pp.; Augusta, 1876. . . . The Rights and Duties of Property: An address before the Portland Benevolent Society, December 16; Portland Advertiser for December 17, 1877. . . . Society and Societies: An oration before the General Convention of the Alpha Delta Phi Society at Middletown, Connecticut, May, 1878; in the Constitution, Middletown, 1878. . . . Differences Harmonized—The Strength of the Union: A memorial address at Lewiston, May, 1879. . . . The Lessons of Monuments: An oration at the unveiling of the soldiers' statue, Boothbay, September, 1879; Waldoboro, 1879. . . . Modern Education Represented at the Universal Exposition at Paris, 1878; Report of Commissioners, volume ii, publication of the State Department, United States of America, 1880. . . . Obedience; An address before the Worcester Free Institute of Technology, July, 1880; Worcester, Massachusetts, 1880. . . . The Sovereignty of Country; An oration at the Meade Memorial Services in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, May, 1880; published by Meade Post, Grand Army of the Republic, 1880. . . . The Citizen as Soldier; A memorial address at Somerville, Massachusetts, May, 1881; in Somerville Journal, June 4, 1881.

CHANDLER, PELEG W. (Bangor, Boston from 1837). For ten years connected with the Daily Advertiser, Boston. . . . Established the Law Reporter in 1839; its editor fourteen years; 10 vols. octavo, 500 pp. each, Boston, Vol. I. in 1839, Vol. X. in 1848. . . . Bankrupt Law of the United States, with Notes, 1 vol. 12mo., 102 pp., Boston, 1844. . . . The Morals of Freedom: an Oration, July 4, 8vo.; Boston, 1844. . . . American Criminal Trials; 2 vols., 436, 440 pp.; Boston and London, 1846. . . . Charter and Ordinances of the City of Boston, collated and revised, together with the Acts of the Legislature relating to the City of Boston; 582 pp., 8vo.; 1850. . . . The Authenticity of the Gospels; 1 vol. 12mo., 109 pp.; Chicago and Boston, 1866. . . . Letter to Bangor's Centennial; 1869. . . . Letter on the use of Hymns in the Public Services of the New Jerusalem Church; 12mo., 66 pp.; Boston, 1872. . . . Memoir of Governor John A. Andrew, with Personal Reminiscences; 1 vol., 12mo., 298 pp.; Boston, 1880.

CHAPLIN, Rev. JEREMIAH (Pastor First Baptist church, Bangor, 1841-46). Discourse occasioned by the calamity on board the United States ship Princeton; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1844. . . . Evening of Life; 281 pp., 12mo.; Boston, 1859. . . . Memoir of Rev. Duncan Dunbar; Boston, 1865. . . . Life of Henry Dunster, First President of Harvard College; 315 pp., 12mo.; Boston, 1872. . . . Memorial Hour; 16mo., 283 pp.; Boston, 1874. . . . Life of Charles Sumner; 12mo., 504 pp.; Boston, 1874. . . . Memoir of Benjamin Franklin, 12mo., 398 pp.; Boston, 1876. . . . Chips from the White House; 12mo., 488 pp.; 1881.

CHAPLIN, Mrs. JANE D. (Bangor). Author of several volumes, and contributor to the Watchman and Reflector, Baptist Missionary Magazine, Helping Hand, etc.

COAN, Rev. LEANDER S. (Garland, Chaplain in United States army.) Centennial Discourse at Boothbay (where the author was minister); Boston, 1866. . . . Patriotic Poems: The Old Corporal's Ballads; New Hampshire, 1879.

CORNWALL, Rev. NATHANIEL E. (Rector St. John's Episcopal church, Bangor, 1855-56.) Contributor to literary magazines and papers. . . . Essays on Music. . . . Address before Penobscot Musical Association; Bangor, 1855.

CROSBY, Mrs. ELIZA L. (Bangor). In Memoriam of Deacon Eliashib Adams, Bangor, with a portrait—editor of this "Autobiography," and author of the Memoir of Henry M. Adams; 132 pp.; Bangor, 1865. . . . Poem and Hymn at the Centennial Celebration of Bangor, September 30, 1869; 12 pp.; Notice of Rev. Harvey Loomis, minister First Congregational church, Bangor, 1811-25, 6 pp., published with the proceedings; Bangor, 1870. . . . Other fugitive pieces.

CUMMINGS, Rev. EPHRAIM C. (Pastor First Congregational church, Brewer, 1858-60). In Memory of Hon. Erastus Fairbanks; 16 pp.; Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1864. . . . Discourses of First Principles; 12mo., 263 pp.; Portland, 1873. . . . The Great Question: Twelve Lessons on Faith; 147 pp.; 1878.

CURTIS, D. D., Rev. THOMAS (pastor First Baptist Church, Bangor, 1834-37). Thanksgiving Discourse; 22 pp.; Bangor, 1835. . . . Editor Bangor Journal, 1837. . . . Address at the funeral of Hon. Jacob Axton, Charleston, South Carolina, 1843.

CUTTING, HON. JONAS (Bangor. Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, 1854-75). Decisions during that time published in the Maine Reports.

DAVENPORT, FREDERICK S. (Bangor). Organ Gems, and other musical productions.

DEANE, SARAH MARIA (Bangor). Sunshine and Shade, or the Dunham Family; Bangor, 1844—second edition, Boston, 1846.

DOLE, Rev. NATHAN (pastor of First Congregational church, Brewer, 1842-50). Editor of the publications of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; Boston, 1850-55. . . . Contributor to magazines and papers.

DOLE, Rev. CHARLES F. (Brewer). Sermons, and contributor to magazines and papers.

DOLE, NATHAN HASKELL (Brewer). Young Folks' History of Russia, one hundred illustrations; 1881. . . . Editor and translator of Rambaud's Popular History of Russia. . . . Fugitive articles in prose and poetry.

DOUGLASS, Rev. EBENEZER (pastor Oldtown Congregational church, 1855-60). In Memory of Rev. Nathaniel H. Broughton; Boston and North Yarmouth, 1866.

DRINKWATER, ANNA F. Memoir of Mrs. Deborah H. Porter, wife of Rev. Charles G. Porter, of Second Baptist church, Bangor; 269 pp.; Portland, 1848.

DUREN, ELNATHAN F. (Bookseller, Bangor, 1834-81). Compiler and editor of the Minutes of the General Conference of the Congregational Churches in Maine, 1853-1881; average about 100 pages annually; Portland and Bangor. . . . Congregational Churches and Ministers in Maine, 1672-1867, 67 pp., 8vo.; Portland, 1867. . . . Supplement to the same, 1868-1876, with index of fifty years, 67 pp.—(semi-centennial anniversary); Portland, 1876. . . . Bibliography of Maine (in part); Brunswick, 1872. . . . Minutes (annual) of the Penobscot Musical Association, 1847 to 1881. . . . Manual of Hammond Street Congregational Church, Bangor, 1833-1871, 52 pp. 12mo.; Bangor, 1871. . . . Supplement to same, 1873, 1877, and 1878, 24 pp.; Bangor. . . . History of Penobscot County; quarto, in History of New England, 8 pp.; Crocker & Co., Boston, 1878 and 1880. . . . Contributions to the History of Penobscot County; Williams, Chase & Co., Cleveland, 1881. . . . Bibliography of Penobscot County, in the same, 1881. . . . Correspondent of several newspapers.

ELLIS, Rev. THOMAS L. (Bangor). The Observance of the Sabbath; 14 pp.; Worcester, Massachusetts, 1872.

EMERY, MRS. DEBORAH BROWN (Brewer). Fugitive pieces, prose and poetry.

EVERETT, Rev. CHARLES C. (Pastor Unitarian church, Bangor, 1859-69). Eulogy on the Death of Abraham Lincoln, 30 pp.; Bangor, 1865. . . . Sermon preached on the Sabbath after President Lincoln's death, with remarks on the day of the funeral, 25 pp.; Bangor, 1865. . . . Landing of the Pilgrims, 10 pp.; Bangor, 1865. . . .

The Science of Thought: A System of Logic, 423 pp.; Boston, 1869. . . . A Christmas Sermon; Cambridge, Massachusetts: Essays, in reviews and in volumes.

FAY, Rev. SOLOMON P. (Bangor, Pastor of Hammond Street Church 1866-79). National Corruption the Cause of National Calamity; Sermon on Fast Day, delivered in Newburyport, Massachusetts, and Hampton, New Hampshire; 21 pp.; Boston, 1854. . . . Memorial Discourse on the Life and Character of Calvin H. Brown, Esq., Raymond, New Hampshire; 16 pp.; Boston, 1865. . . . Duty of Christians to Unite with some Church; 12 pp.; Boston, 1866.

FERNALD, Ph. D., MERRITT C. (President of State College, Orono). Published in 1868, in a report on the Variations of the Magnetic Needle, by Hon. Noah Barker, 12 pp., including a table of Azimuths of the North Star, for the latitude of Maine, from A. D. 1868 to 1900. . . . In College Report, 24 pp., including 14 pages Meteorological Tables; 1869. In subsequent reports, 1870-80, from 13 to 28 pp. each year, and 16 pp. in each year of Meteorological Tables. In 1879 and 1880 there are 34 and 36 pp. additional. In report of the Maine Board of Agriculture,—The Distribution of Rains; 16 pp.; 1870. . . . Plant Growth; 16 pp.; 1871. . . . Protection from Lightning; 20 pp.; 1872. . . . Agriculture Compared with other Industries; 20 pp.; 1873. . . . Education and Labor; 12 pp.; 1875. . . . Taxation; 22 pp.; 1876-77. . . . Margin of Profit; 17 pp.; 1877-78. . . . Catalogues of Maine State College; 50 pp., 1868-70; 100 pp., 1878-81. . . . Catalogues and Reports of Levant and Foxcroft Academy; 1857-68. . . . Short papers—articles for agricultural and other journals. . . . Paper on a Barometrical Determination of the Altitude of Mount Katahdin; 1874. . . . Baccalaureate Address; 1880. . . . Records of Geodetic and Astronomical Work, etc.; 50 pp.

FERNALD, A. M., CHARLES H. (Professor in Maine State College, Orono). Various papers and lectures on Natural History; among them—"Destructive Insects," in the Transactions of the State Pomological Society, 1875; and another article on the same topic in the Report of the Maine Board of Agriculture, 1877. . . . Extended articles in the Canadian Entomologist, American Naturalist, Entomologist's Monthly Magazine, of London, Microscopic Journal. . . . Reports to the Trustees of the State College; published yearly. . . . A lecture delivered in Portland, Maine. . . . Method of Preparing and Mounting Wings of Microlepidoptera, in Proceedings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; August, 1880. . . . Review of Lord Walsingham's illustration of typical specimens of North American Tortricidæ in Psyche, the organ of the Cambridge Entomological Club; October, 1880. . . . Natural History of the Army Worm; 1881. . . . A Synonymical Catalogue of the Tortricidæ of North America in the Transactions of the American Entomological Society of Philadelphia; 1881. . . . In preparation, A Manual of Entomology, for use in schools and colleges. . . . Papers have appeared in Maine Farmer, Home Farm, Aroostook Times, Zion's Herald, etc.

FIELD, M. D., EDWARD M. (Bangor). Criticism upon

Critics, in Voices of the Kenduskeag; 1848.... My Sister, in Native Poets of Maine; Bangor, 1851.... Poems at college class meetings, etc.

FIELD, D. D., Rev. GEORGE W. (Bangor; Pastor First Congregational Church, Brewer, 1853-56; Central Church, Bangor, from 1864). Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society at Lewiston—"Christianity has Especial Regard to the Humbler Classes;" 22 pp.; Portland, 1867. Addresses and communications published in papers of the day.

FISKE, D. D., Rev. JOHN O. (Bangor; Pastor Winter Street Church, Bath, from 1843). The Omnipresence of God; 14 pp.; Bath, 1847.... Obedience to Law; Bath, 1850.... Man an Uncertain Object of Reliance: On the death of Zachary Taylor; 16 pp.; Bath, 1850.... Discourse on the death of General William King; 32 pp.; Bath, 1852.... On the Fifth Commandment; 17 pp.; 1859.... National Troubles: On the day of the National Fast; 19 pp.; Bath, 1861.... Salvation—Conversion of Children: A sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, Portland; 15 pp.; Portland, 1862.... Commission of the Church: A sermon before the General Conference of Congregational Churches in Maine, at Foxcroft; Portland, 1880.... Early Religious History of Bath; in the Times, 1881.... Various articles in magazines and newspapers.

FREEMAN, Rev. FREDERICK (Rector St. John's Episcopal Church, Bangor, 1839-40). Religious Liberty; 32 pp.; Plymouth, Massachusetts, 1832.... History of Cape Cod; Boston, 1860-62.... Plea for Psalmody; 1836.... Plea for Africa; 1838.... Civilization and Barbarism: Illustrated by especial reference to Metacomet and the extinction of his race; 1878.

FULLER, MELVILLE W. (Bangor). "Remorse," and "Bachannalian Song," in Native Poets of Maine, Bangor, 1851.

GILMAN, CHARLES (Bangor). Fugitive Pieces.... Editor of Bangor Clarion and of a magazine.

GILMAN, D. D., Rev. EDWARD W. (Pastor First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1859-63). Farewell Sermon; 22 pp., 8vo; Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, 1858.... Sermon after Installation at Bangor; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1859.... Address before Penobscot Musical Association; Bangor, 1862.... The Fellowship of the Churches; 8 pp.; 1870.... Articles published in the New Englander and Congregational Quarterly, some of them issued in separate form.... Articles on Congregationalism and Bible Societies in Cyclopædias (Johnson's, Appleton's, etc.), and for newspapers and magazines.

GODFREY, Hon. JOHN E. (Judge of Probate, Penobscot county, 1857-80; President of the Historical Society from 1873). The Speculator, Stephen Skidd, 6 pp., and Penobscot Characters, 10 pp., in Voices of the Kenduskeag; Bangor, 1848.... Addresses before the Penobscot Musical Association, of which he was President; Bangor, 1858-59.... Addresses at the Centennial Celebration of the Settlement of Bangor, September 30, 1869; 17 pp.; also "The Rhyme of the Ancient City Hall," and "To the Penobscot, Now"; 18 pp.; published in the volume issued by the Committee of Arrangements; 182 pp.; Bangor, 1870.... Address before the State Pomological Society, 1873.... The Ancient Penobscot; 24 pp.; Pilgrims of the Penobscot; 17 pp.; Baron de St. Castin; 35 pp.; Castin, the Younger; 21 pp.; Bashaba and the Tarratines, 15 pp., in vol. vii., Maine Historical Collections; Bath, 1876.... Notice of David Barker, prefixed to his Poems; Bangor, 1876.... Norumbega, and Notice of Judge Edward Kent, in vol. viii., Maine Historical Collections, 1881.

GOODALE, EPHRAIM (Orrington). The New Pleasing Spelling Book.

GOODALE, SAMUEL L. (Orrington). Reports and Papers on the Agriculture of Maine, 16 vols.

GOODWIN, Mrs. HANNAH E. BRADBURY (Bangor). Madge; 407 pp.; New York, 1864.... Sherbrooke; 500 pp.; New York, 1868.... Dr. Howell's Family; 360 pp.; Boston, 1869.... Christine's Fortune; 300 pp.; Boston, 1881. Contributor to magazines, etc.

HAMLIN, M. D., AUGUSTUS C. (Bangor). Salmonidæ of Maine; 12 pp., 8vo; Bangor, 1856.... Martyria; or the Andersonville Prison; 256 pp., 12mo; Boston, 1866.... The Tourmaline: Its Relation as a Gem, etc.; 107 pp.; Boston, 1873.... Alimentation Considered in Its Relations to the Progress and Prosperity of the Nation.... Transfusion.... Transmission of Disease.... Tetanus.... The Emerald.... Origin and Properties of the Diamond.... Leisure Hours with the Gems; 2 vols. (in preparation).

HAMLIN, D. D., LL. D., Rev. CYRUS (Professor pro tem. Bangor Theological Seminary, 1877-81). Among the Turks; 378 pp., 12mo., New York, 1878.... Missionary and Educational Works While Missionary in Turkey, 1838-1860, and President of Robert College, Constantinople, 1860-77.... Various articles in Missionary Herald, Christian Mirror, Vermont Chronicle, New York Observer, New York Evangelist, Independent, Christian Union, etc.

HAMLIN, Hon. ELIJAH L. (Mayor of Bangor, 1853-54; President Bangor Historical Society, 1864-73). Addresses and Historical Sketches.

HAMLIN, Hon. HANNIBAL (Hampden and Bangor). Agricultural and Literary Addresses, Orations on the Fourth of July, Lyceum Lectures by the Hon. Senator and ex-Vice-President of the United States, have been published, and Reports and Speeches in the Maine Legislature and in the United States House of Representatives and Senate. Notably among the latter were those in the opening of the debate of two days on the admission of California, 1850; the Report and Speeches on the Bill to relieve ship-owners for property destroyed by fire at sea, for which he received many thanks and a reception and dinner by the merchants of Boston.... A Speech on the Oregon Question; 8 pp.; January 12, 1846.... On the Compromise Bill to Establish Territorial Government in Oregon, New Mexico, and California; 8 pp.; July 22, 1848.... On resigning his position as Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the tests of the Cincinnati Convention; 8 pp.; June 12, 1856.... On the admission of Kansas into the Union as a State, the Lecompton Constitution: A reply to Govern- nor Hammond and in defense of the North and Northern laborers; 16 pp.; March 9-10, 1858. . . . On the Bill to restrict the Immigration of the Chinese to the United States, February 14-15, 1879. . . . In defense of the Rights of American Fishermen; 16 pp.; August 3-5, 1859.

HARLOW, N. SPARHAWK (Bangor). Editor of the proceedings at the celebration of the Centennial of the Settlement of Bangor, September 30, 1869; 8vo, 182 pp.; Bangor, 1870.

HARLOW, THOMAS S. (Bangor). A correspondent and writer on topics of the day for the Boston Journal, 1833, and so on; Louisville Journal, 1848; for journals in Boston, edited by B. B. Thatcher, and in Portland, edited by Seba Smith ("Jack Downing"), and for other papers. Also for the Penobscot Magazine about 1834-38. . . . Editor of Piscataquis Herald, Dover, Maine, for three months. . . . Letter in the Bangor Centennial History, 1869.

HARRIS, D. D., LL. D., Rev. SAMUEL (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1855-67). Training Children for the Conversion of the World: A Prize Essay, American Tract Society, New York; 24 pp.; 1844. . . . The Mexican War: A sermon preached at the annual Thanksgiving in Conway, Massachusetts, November 26, 1846; 24 pp.; Greenfield, Massachusetts, 1847. . . . Christ's Presence with his Ministers: A Sermon at the Ordination of Oliver M. Sears, Dalton, Massachusetts; 22 pp.; Pittsfield, Massachusetts, 1847. . . . Christ the Theme of the Sanctuary, at dedication of a church edifice in Hatfield, Massachusetts; 23 pp.; Northampton, Massachusetts, 1850. . . . The Maxim for the Times: A Sermon preached in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, July 4, 1852; 22 pp. . . . Pernicious Fiction: or the Tendencies and Results of Indiscriminate Novel Reading; A Prize Essay; 32 pp.; American Female Guardian Society, New York, 1853. . . . The Demands of Sinners Unreasonable, Matthew xxvii.42; Characteristics of True Love to God, Mark xii.30; in National Preacher, 10 pages each, New York, 1853. . . . The Scriptural Principle of Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Liquors; 12 pp.; Bangor, 1859. . . . Politics in the Pulpit, Portland Mirror, 1860. . . . Our Contry's Claim: An Oration in Norombega Hall, Bangor, July 4, 16 pp.; Bangor, 1861. . . . The Son of Man: A Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society at Biddeford; 15 pp.; Portland, 1863. . . . Address at the Centennial Anniversary at the Settlement of Machias; in Report, etc., 180 pp.; Machias, 1863. . . . Inaugural Address at the Author's Induction to the Presidency of Bowdoin College, August 6, 1867; 45 pp.; Brunswick, 1867. . . . The Christian Doctrine of Human Progress, Contrasted with the Naturalistic; Boston Lectures, p. 1-65; Boston, 1870. . . . Address at the Author's Induction as Dwight Professor of Systematic Theology, in Yale College, October 10, 1871; 23 pp.; New Haven, Connecticut, 1871. . . . The Kingdom of Christ on Earth, twelve lectures delivered before the students in Andover Theological Seminary; 255 pp., 8vo; Andover, Massachusetts, 1874. . . . Zaccheus, or the Scriptural Plan of Benevolence: A Prize Essay; 87 pp.; American Tract Society, New York. . . . Christ's Prayer for the Death of His Redeemed; A Gift for Mourners; American Tract Society, Boston. . . . Articles published in the New Englander, a quarterly, in New Haven, Connecticut, viz: The Cause and Cure of Sectarianism; 13 pp.; January, 1847. . . . The Dependence of Popular Progress on Christianity; 29 pp.; July, 1847. . . . Upham's Life of Madam Guyon; 12 pp.; April, 1848. . . . Necessity of Completeness in the Christian Life; 30 pp.; August, 1849. . . . Review of Humphrey's Memoirs of Professor N. W. Fiske; 14 pp.; August, 1850. . . . The Conditions of Missionary Success; 19 pp.; November, 1850. . . . Gobat's Abyssinia Reviewed; 13 pp.; November, 1850. . . . Endless Punishment a Result of Character; 12 pp.; May, 1851. . . . The Harmony of Natural Science and Theology: Address at the Anniversary of the Berkshire Medical School; 20 pp.; February, 1852. . . . Louis Kossuth; 20 pp.; February, 1852. . . . The Complete Academic Education of Females; 31 pp.; August, 1853. . . . Politics of the Pulpit; 24 pp.; May, 1854. . . . Infidelity: Its Erroneous Principles of Reasoning; 24 pp.; August, 1854. . . . Development and Evolution; 23 pp.; November, 1859. . . . The Christian Doctrine of Labor; 32 pp.; April, 1868. . . . Smyth's Religious Feeling; 8 pp.; 1878. . . . The Millennium Conference; 36 pp.; 1878. . . . Articles in the Bibliotheca Sacra, Andover, Massachusetts, viz: Demands of Infidelity Satisfied by Christianity; 41 pp. vol. 13 pp. 272-314; April, 1856. . . . The Christian Law of Self-sacrifice; 34 pp.; January, 1861. . . . Marks of the Supernatural in God's Promise to Abraham; 20 pp.; January, 1865. . . . Some publications in other magazines and newspapers.

HATCH, ELIZABETH P. (Bangor). Childhood and the Old Elm, in Voices of the Kenduskeag; Bangor, 1848. . . . Articles in magazines and newspapers; a skilful and full reporter of lectures, etc.

HATHAWAY, Hon. JOSHUA W. (Bangor). Address at Ellsworth, on the 4th of July, about 1832. . . . Opinions as Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, 1852-59; published in the reports of decisions.

HAZLEWOOD, Rev. FRANCIS T. (Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Bangor, from 1869). Sermon in memory of Chapin Humphrey, 40 pp.; Bangor, 1875. . . . Addresses in local papers and contributions to magazines, etc.

HEDGE, D. D., Rev. FREDERICK H. (Pastor Unitarian Church, Bangor, 1835-50). Practical Goodness the True Religion, 15 pp.; Bangor, 1840. . . . Discourse on the Death of William H. Harrison, Ninth President of the United States, 24 pp.; Bangor, 1841. . . . Character of Dr. Channing; Bangor, 1842. . . . German Prose Writers, 567 pp., 1848; new edition, with introductory biographical sketches, 1870. . . . Conscience and the State, 15 pp.; Providence, Rhode Island, 1851. . . . Christian Liturgy, 78 pp.; 1853. . . . The National Weakness, 19 pp., Boston, 1861. . . . Death of Edward Everett; Boston, 1865. . . . Primeval World of Hebrew Tradition, 283 pp., Boston, 1870. . . . Reason in Religion, 458 pp., 1865; new edition, 1875. . . . German Propositions, 20 pp., 1874-75. . . . Ways of the Spirit, 367 pp.; 1877. . . . Numerous pamphlets and communications for magazines and the newspaper press. . . . In "Voices from the Kenduskeag;" Bangor, 1848; The Morning Star; Sorg of the Angels; The Dream; Veneration for the Past; Stanzas; 40 pp.

HERRICK, D. D., Rev. JOHN R. (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1867-73). Graded Schools: A series of articles in village paper, Malone, New York; 1859. . . . Lecture on Education; 1857. . . . Sermons in Malone: (a) Signs of the Times, 1861; (b) Why this Waste? at soldier's funeral, 1864; (c) Funeral Sermon, 1865. . . . The Will, Normal and Abnormal, in Theological Review; New York, 1861. . . . Radical Defect in Education, in Theological and Presbyterian Review; New York, 1863. . . . Inaugural Address at Bangor, in Bibliotheca Sacra; Andover, Massachusetts, 1868. . . . Education for the Ministry; Portland, 1868. . . . The Philosophy of Nescience; 1869. . . . Positivism, in Boston Lectures, p. 66-102; Boston, 1870. . . . Christian Culture, in Journal of Education; 1871. . . . Lecky on Morals; 1872. . . . Woman's Influence, in Hampshire Gazette; 1874. . . . Review of "Sex in Education," Journal of Education; Boston, 1875. . . . Grace, Inspiration, Justification, Locke and his Philosophy—four articles in Johnson's Encyclopedia; 1875. . . . Religion and the Bible in Education, in several articles; 1880. . . . Discourse at Commencement of Pacific University, Portland, Oregon (of which Dr. R. is now President), on Education in general, and Education on the Pacific Coast in particular; Portland, Oregon, 1881.

HILL, JOHN B. (Bangor). History of Mason, New Hampshire; 324 pp., 8vo.; Boston and Bangor, 1858. . . . Memoir and Sermons of Rev. Ebenezer Hill, Mason, New Hampshire; 115 pp., 8vo.; Boston and Bangor, 1858. . . . Articles in Historical Magazine; February, 1871.

HODSDON, General JOHN L. (Bangor). Reports as Adjutant-General of Maine, 1861-66; six volumes; containing names of Maine volunteers and action of the State during the Civil War, with some history and incidents; Augusta.

HOWARD, BLANCHE WILLIS (Bangor). One Summer; 16mo., 254 pp.; Boston, 1875. . . . One Year Abroad; 16mo., 247 pp.; Boston, 1877. . . . Aunt Serena, 332 pp.; Boston, 1881. . . . Correspondent from abroad of the Boston Transcript, etc.

HOWARD, Rev. RICHARD L. (Pastor Free Baptist Church, Bangor). A work on Baptism. . . . History of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Regiment, from 1862 to 1865, of which he was chaplain during the late Civil War; 519 pp., 8vo.; Springfield, Illinois, 1880.

"INDEX, P. Q.," nom de plume (Bangor). Indexes to The Nation, Atlantic Monthly, International, Lippincott's Magazine, Eclectic, Living Age, Scribner's Monthly; Bangor, 1880-81. . . . The Monograph—fortnightly—a serial collection of indexed Essays "of scholarly accuracy and literary merit" (so writes a critic). Twenty-five articles already issued, others in preparation; Bangor, 1880-81. . . . A Manual of Misused Words (in press), 72 pp.; Bangor, 1881.

INGERSOLL, Mrs. HENRIETTA C. (Bangor, 1840-62.)

Love and Romance; Manners; The Whistling Wind; A Dirge; The Archer and the Maid; An Apology, 43 pp., in Voices from the Kenduskeag; Bangor, 1848. . . . A prize essay on the Intellectual Wants of Farmers, published in pamphlet form, 1857. . . . Edited, in 1863, a paper issued weekly for soldiers in Armory Square Hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, called the Armory Square Hospital Gazette. . . . Has been a frequent writer for the press for many years.

JOHNSON, Rev. EDWIN (Pastor Hammond Street Church, Bangor, 1861-65). Class Poem at Yale College, 1846, 20 pp.; New Haven. . . . Review of "Elsie Venner"; Boston Review, 12 pp.; 1861. . . . The Want and the Supply: A sermon before the American Education Society, 17 pp.; Boston, 1863. . . . Reviewed "Hannah Thurston," Northern Monthly, 10 pp.; Portland, 1864. . . . Discourse on the Death of Abraham Lincoln; Bangor, 1865. . . . Maryland Congregationalists Two Hundred Years Ago; Congregational Quarterly, 20 pp.; Boston, 1865. . . . Address at the laying of the corner stone of the First Congregational Church, Washington, District of Columbia; Congregational Quarterly, 16 pp.; Boston, 1866. . . . Discourse in memory of George Sterling, 12 pp.; Bridgeport, Connecticut, 1871. . . . The Mouth of Gold: a series of dramatic sketches illustrating the life of Chrysostom, 109 pp.; New York, 1873. . . . Fugitive pieces, prose and poetry, have been published.

KENT, GEORGE (Bangor). Address before the New Hampshire Alpha of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, on the Claims and Characteristics of the Age in which they live; 1831. . . . Biographical sketch of Hon. Joseph Bell, a prominent lawyer of Boston, and formerly of New Hampshire; Boston, 1851. . . . Poem for Bangor's Centennial, 1869. . . . Editor of three or four papers; contributor to the Law Reporter, Boston, and numerous articles in prose and verse to other papers.

KENT, Hon. EDWARD (Bangor). Addresses as Mayor of Bangor, 1836-38. . . . Messages as Governor of Maine, 1838-40. . . . Reports as Commissioner on the Northeastern Boundary question, 1842, etc. . . . Correspondent for the press while Consul at Rio Janeiro, 1850. . . . Opinions as Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, 1859-73, in reports of decisions. . . . Two sketches in Voices from the Kenduskeag, Bangor, 1848, entitled, A Vision of Bangor in the Twentieth Century, 14 pp.; The Field of the Incurables (1826), 8 pp.

KNAPP, Rev. ARTHUR M. (Pastor of the Unitarian Church, Bangor, September, 1871, to March, 1879). Sermons and addresses, and contributions to magazines and papers.

LAMSON, JOSEPH (Sebec). Round Cape Horn, and California Scenes, 156 pp., 12mo; Bangor, 1878.

LANCEY, S. HERBERT (Bangor). Editor of Native Poets of Maine, 312 pp.; Bangor, 1851.

LEONARD, Rev. EDWIN (Bangor). Discourse on Slavery, 28 pp.; Milton, Massachusetts, 1854. . . . Funeral Discourse on the Death of Sergeant Lawrence R. Rankin, Rochester, Massachusetts, July 3, 1864; New Bedford Standard. . . . Centennial Sermon, Morris, Connecticut, July 9, 1876; Waterbury American.

LEONARD, JR., GEORGE (Brewer). Practical Treatise on Arithmetic, 342 pp.; Boston, 1843. . . . Primary Arithmetic, 54 pp.; Boston, 1843. . . . Several important articles in the North American Review—one of these, a Review of Abercrombie on the Intellectual Powers and the Investigation of Truth, attracted much attention and received high praise.

LEONARD, REV. HENRY C. (Pastor Universalist Church, Orono, 1847-55). A Sheaf from a Pastor's Field, 400 pp.; Boston, 1856. . . . Pigeon Cove, 200 pp.; Boston, 1873. . . . Lake Charms, in the National Era; Washington, 1852. . . . Orono's Centennial, a Poem, Birthday Celebration, 3 pp.; 1874.

LEWIS, REV. WALES (Pastor First Congregational Church, Brewer, 1831-38). Discourse in reference to difficulties in the church at South Weymouth, Massachusetts, where he was then pastor, 28 pp.; Boston, 1841.

LITTLE, REV. GEORGE B. (Pastor First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1849-57). Music as a Science, an Art, a Language: An address before the Penobscot Musical Association, of which he was President, 14 pp.; Bangor, 1855. . . . Sermon at the Semi-Centennial Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society, Bath, 16 pp.; Augusta, 1857. . . . Reminiscences of, and Sermons, with Portrait, 171 pp.; Boston, 1861.

LITTLEFIELD, MRS. SOPHIE B. (Bangor). Hymns and Poems for Special Occasions, Dedicatory, in Memoriam, etc.

LOOMIS, REV. HARNEY (Pastor First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1811-25). Sermon at the Sixteenth Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society at Portland, 24 pp.; Hallowell, 1823. . . . (Rev. Eliphalet Gillett's Sermon at the Ordination of Mr. Loomis, 20 pp.; published at Buckstown, now Bucksport, 1811).

LOVEJOY, REV. JOSEPH C. (Pastor of the Congregational[?] Church, Oldtown, 1835-39). Alliances of Jehoshaphat, 7 pp.; Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, 1844. . . . Discourse at the Funeral of Rev. J. Wilder, 16 pp.; Boston, 1844. . . . The Law and the Offense (temperance), 16 pp.; Boston, 1852. . . . Discourse at the Funeral of Mrs. E. W. Denton, 16 pp.; Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1853. . . . (Review of "The Law and the Offense," 31 pp.; Boston, 1852).

LUCE, SARAH JANE (Hampden). Contributor to the Boston Commonwealth, from 1868; previously had written articles for several local journals; occasionally articles in Portland Transcript and an Illinois journal.

MACE, MRS. FRANCES LAUGHTON (Bangor). From the age of fifteen has written for the press, and her productions have many of them been included in selections of poems and published in volumes. The earliest, "Only Waiting," has appeared in books of hymns and musical selection. . . . "Castles in the Fire," and "Paradise," appeared in Native Poets of Maine; Bangor, 1851. . . . Hymn for Bangor's Centennial, published with the proceedings; 1869. . . . Later, "The Phantom Ship," in Longfellow's Poems of New England. . . . In Harper's Magazine, May, 1877, "Israfel," with illustrations; other articles in subsequent numbers. . . . Harper's Cyclopædia of British and American Poetry, edited by the late Epes

Sargent, and recently published, has a biographical notice of Mrs. Mace, and several columns of her poems. She has contributed for many years to the New York Journal of Commerce, later to the Portland Transcript, and occasionally to other papers; also to the Atlantic and Lippincott's Magazines, Good Company, and other monthlies.

MALTBY, REV. JOHN (Pastor Hammond Street Congregational Church, Bangor, 1834-60). Sermon at Portland, at the ordination of Rev. Cyrus Hamlin as Missionary to Turkey, 40 pp.; Bangor, 1838. . . . Characteristics of the Times, Annual Fast, 30 pp.; Bangor, 1838. . . . The Offense, a Temperance Discourse, 28 pp.; Bangor, 1839. . . . Impulses of Piety, 16 pp.; Bangor, 1841. . . . The Error and the Correction, 20 pp.; Bangor, 1845. . . . God our Helper, at the Funeral of J. B. Folsom, Bucksport, 16 pp.; New York, 1854. . . . Government, 12 pp.; Bangor, 1856. . . . Heaven First: A discourse at the Fifty-second Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society, at Portland, 16 pp.; Augusta, 1859. . . . A Pattern Church, 16 pp.; Bangor, 1859. . . . Discourse at the Quarter-centennial Anniversary of his Pastorate; Bangor, 1859. . . . (Addresses of Drs. Pond and Shepard at his funeral; Bangor, 1860).

MANSFIELD, REV. DANIEL H. (Pastor First Methodist Church, Bangor, 1850-52). American Vocalist (church music), 350 pp.; 1847.

MARDEN, MRS. SARAH HAYFORD (Bangor). Fugitive pieces, essays, short stories, and poems—among them The Sleeping Babe, in Native Poets of Maine; Bangor, 1851. . . . Spring, May 9, 1879; Helen Thurlow's May Basket, April 27, 1881, in Christian Union—other articles in the same journal; earlier in New York Journal of Commerce, and later in Life and Light.

MASON, D. D., REV. JAVAN K. (Pastor Congregational Church, Hampden, 1849-64). Youth and Age; 30 pp.; Bangor, 1859. . . . Sermon at Sixty-third Anniversary of Maine Missionary Society at Yarmouth; The Vitality of a Religion of Principle; 14 pp.; Portland, 1870. . . . The International Congress, in Relation to Crime and Prisons; 12 pp.; Augusta, 1872. . . . Monuments: A Temperance Discourse; 16 pp.; Rockland, 1872. . . . The Great Commission and Promise: A discourse on the quarter-centennial of his ordination; 14 pp.; Thomaston, 1874. . . . Prison and Prison Discipline: An address in a convention of legislators and officers of the law; 22 pp.; Augusta, 1876.

MASON, REV. WILLIAM (Bangor). Sermon on the Death of a Young Lady [Nancy Mann]; Castine, 1799.

MITCHELL, MARION (Bangor). Fugitive pieces, chiefly for children, in weekly papers and magazines, such as Youth's Companion, Harper's Young People, etc. . . . Two sketches of travel in Harper's Magazine, 1878.

MERRILL, REV. SAMUEL H. (Pastor Congregational Church, Oldtown, 1846-54). Campaigns of the First Maine Cavalry; 436 pp.; Portland, 1866.

MUNSELL, REV. JOSEPH R. (Pastor Congregational Church, Bullington, 1831-39; and East Brewer, now Holden, 1839-52). Discourse on Searching the Scriptures; 7 pp.; Bangor, 1849.

NEALLEY, EDWARD B. (Bangor). A Year in Montana; in Atlantic Monthly, 1866. . . . Hymn for Bangor's Centennial, 1869. . . . A Gold Hunt on the Yellowstone, in Lippincott's Magazine. . . . Address at Bangor, July 4, 1876. . . . Address at the Centennial of the Incorporation of Thomaston, Maine, 1877. . . . Genealogical Tree of the Nealley. True Family, of Nottingham, New Hampshire (a large chart); Bangor, 1878. . . . Address at the Centennial of the Incorporation of Bath, Maine, 1881.

NORCROSS, CHRISTOPHER C. (Corinth). Sacred Songs.

NORTON, DAVID (Oldtown). Sketches of Oldtown, from its settlement to 1877; 152 pp.; Bangor, 1881.

O'BRIEN, Rev. M. C. (Pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church, Bangor, 1881). Grammatical Notes on the Abenakis, or Alnabee Indians' Language—in manuscript. . . . Contributor to the Celtic Monthly, and to various papers.

PAINE, ALBERT W. (Bangor). Correspondence, 10 pp., in Voices from the Kenduskeag; Bangor, 1848. . . . Report as Bank and Insurance Commissioner; 80 pp. in 1868; 84 pp. in 1869. . . . Insurance Commissioner; 194 pp. in 1870; 190 pp. in 1871; 190 pp. in 1872. . . . Tax Commissioner; 32 pp. in 1874. Each of the above published in Augusta. . . . Paine Genealogy, Ipswich Branch; 184 pp.; Bangor, 1881. . . . Correspondent of Boston Advertiser, etc.

PAINE, D. D., Rev. LEVI L. (Professor in Theological Seminary, Bangor, from 1871). . . . Christian Evangelism: A Sermon at Seventieth Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society in Calais; 12 pp.; Bangor, 1877. . . . The Congregational Order of Worship: Address before the General Conference of Maine, at Portland; 16 pp.; Bangor, 1881. . . . Fast-day sermon, on National Grounds for Fasting and Prayer, preached at Farmington, Connecticut, where he was then pastor; 16 pp.; 1862. . . . Discourse in Memory of Rev. Noah Porter, D. D.; 15 pp.; Farmington, Connecticut, 1867. . . . Inaugural Address as Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Bangor Seminary; 19 pp.; 1871. . . . Many contributions to periodicals, among them Church Polity, Infant Church Membership, Primitive Form of Baptism, The Lord's Supper, Pastorless Churches, etc.

PAINE, SELMA W. (Bangor). Among her publications are a half-score or more poems, under the signature of "S.," in the Olive-Leaf; Waltham, 1873. . . . Hero Worship, in the Bric-a-brac, Scribner's Monthly, May, 1876. . . . The Philosopher and the Poet, in Scribner, November, 1876. . . . The Legend of Saint Sophia, in Atlantic Monthly, April, 1878. . . . Letters from Europe to Boston Advertiser.

PAGE, Rev. ROBERT (Pastor Congregational Church, Levant—now Kenduskeag—1835-44). Character and Pleasedness of the Humble; 16 pp., National Preacher; New York, 1838. (Sermon at ordination of Mr. Page, at Durham, New Hampshire, by Rev. Nathaniel Bouton; 29 pp.; Concord, New Hampshire, 1829.)

PARKER, Rev. WOOSTER (Pastor Congregational Church, Orono, 1836-38; Brewer, 1838-41). Sermon at the funeral of Mrs. J. P. Adams; 15 pp.; Bangor, 1834. . . . Thanksgiving Discourse at Orono; 22 pp.; Bangor, 1837. . . . Discourse at the Funeral of Mrs. S. B. Carpenter, Dexter; 45 pp.; Bath, 1854. . . . Public Opinion, Belfast Age; 1860. . . . Sermon at the Fifty-third Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society, at Bangor: "Every Man to His Own Work"; 14 pp.; Augusta, 1860. . . . Contributions to newspapers.

PEARL, Rev. CYRIL (Pastor Congregational Church, East Orrington, 1834-37). Youth's Book on the Mind; 120 pp.; 12mo; Portland. . . . Spectral Visitants. . . . Correspondent and contributor to educational and religious magazines and newspapers.

PERLEV, JEREMIAH (Bangor and Orono). Oration at Hallowell, July 4; 24 pp.; Augusta, 1807. . . . Proceedings of the Convention at Portland, 1819, for forming a Constitution of the State of Maine; 300 pp.; Portland, 1820. . . . Maine Justice; 224 pp.; Hallowell, 1829. . . . Maine Town Officer. . . . Maine Civil Officer.

PERRY, ADELIZA (Bangor). Cinderella's Frock; Bangor, 1850. . . . Windfalls; 130 pp.; Philadelphia, 1880. . . . Schoolmaster's Trials; 200 pp.; Boston, 1881.

PETERS, Hon. JOHN A. (Bangor). Official Reports as Attorney General of Maine; 1864-66. . . . Speeches and Reports as Representative from the Fourth District of Maine, in the XLth, XLIst, and XLIIId Congresses; 1867-73; published in the Congressional Globe, some of them in pamphlet form. Among these were prominently speeches upon the Tariff and Reconstruction questions; the claim of William McGarrahan to a mine in California, and a report upon the same claim; a defense of General O. O. Howard and the Freedmen's Bureau; a eulogy, published with other eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of the Congress of the United States upon the occasion of the death of Hon. William Pitt Fessenden, a United States Senator from Maine, delivered in the House of Representatives 1869. . . . Opinions as a Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine from 1873; published in eleven volumes of the Maine Reports of Decisions. . . . A Memorial Address upon the life and character of the late Judge Jonas Cutting; published in a collection in book form in Dartmouth Memorials, 1881.

PIERCE, Mrs. REBECCA E. (Orrington). Poetical fugitive pieces in various journals for the last ten years, chiefly in the Bangor Whig; about two hundred in number. Among the most popular have been, The Old Homestead; The Old Kitchen Clock; On a Foreign Shore; My Mother's Bible; In My Dream; the latter in Bangor Whig, September 25, 1880. A volume may be published ere long. Mrs. Pierce began to write at the age of fourteen, under the signature of "Rebecca."

PLUMMER, Mrs. BENJAMIN (Bangor). Contributions to magazines and papers. The Secret Offering appeared in Voices from the Kenduskeag, Bangor, 1848.

POMROY, D. D., Rev. SWANN L. (Pastor First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1825-48). Sermon at the Funeral of Rev. John Smith, D. D., Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary; 15 pp.; Augusta, 1831. . . . Sermon at the Twenty-sixth Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society at Portland: Arguments in Favor of Missions; 23 pp.; Portland, 1833. . . . Saints' Perseverance; 12 pp.; in National Preacher, New York, 1833.... Thanksgiving Discourse; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1837.... Knowledge, Liberty, and Religion; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1837.... Ministerial Support: A Sermon before the Maine Congregational Charitable Society; 23 pp.; Bangor, 1838.... A frequent contributor to magazines and religious and other journals.

POND, D. D., Rev. ENOCH (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary from 1832; President of the Faculty most of the time and now Professor emeritus) The Divinity of Christ, 1815, second edition, 1828, 24 pp., 12mo; Boston.... Reply to Dr. Judson on Baptism, three editions, 1816.... Religious Conference Meetings, two editions, 32 pp., 8vo.; Worcester, Massachusetts, 1817.... Letter to S. Nott on Baptism, 12 pp.; Boston, 1819.... Monthly Concert Lectures, 1822.... Memoir of Susanna Anthony, 1827.... Memoir of President Davies, 1831.... Exhibition of Unitarianism, 1831.... Review of Rev. B. Whitman's Letter to Professor Stewart, on Religious Liberty; Boston, 1831.... Life of John Cotton Reviewed, 18mo; Boston, 1834.... Pedo-Baptists, in Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge, 1835.... Probation, 137 pp., 18mo; Bangor, 1837.... The Church, 130 pp.; Bangor, 1837; second edition, 126 pp., 1860.... Memoir of Joseph Stone, Esq., 1838.... Memoir of Count Zinzendorff; Boston, 1839.... Memoir of John Wickliffe; Boston, 1841.... Christian Perfection; Bangor, 1841.... Morning of the Reformation; Boston, 1842.... Millerism Destroyed; Boston, 1842.... Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Enoch Pond, Jr., at Georgetown, Massachusetts; Andover, 1843.... Conversion: Its Nature and Importance; Boston.... Funeral Sermon at the Death of Deacon Timothy George; Orrington, 1843.... No Fellowship with Romanism; Boston, 1843.... The Act of Faith; American Tract Society, New York, 1843.... The First Principles of the Oracles of God, 1843.... The Mather Family; 180 pp.; Boston, 1844.... The Young Pastor's Guide, 377 pp., 12mo.; Bangor, 1844; second edition, "Lectures on Pastoral Theology," 395 pp.; Andover, 1866.... The World's Salvation; Boston, 1845.... Plato and His Works, 156 pp., 32mo; Portland, 1846.... Pope and Pagan, on Middleton's Letter from Rome; Portland, 1846.... Swedenborgianism Reviewed and Examined, 300 pp., 18mo; Boston, 1846; second edition, 250 pp., 12mo, 1861; third edition, 1874.... Memoir of Increase Mather and Sir William Phipps; Boston, 1848.... Manual of Congregationalism; Portland, 1848; second edition, 101 pp.; Bangor, 1859.... Review of Bushnell's "God in Christ;" Boston, 1849.... Memoir of Joseph Stone Ward; 1850.... The Ancient Church, 252 pp., 18mo; 1851.... Sabbath Recreations; American Tract Society, New York, 1852.... Memoir of John Knox; Boston, 1856.... Posture in Prayer, 1857.... The Wreck and the Rescue, 1858.... The Bible and Slavery; Tract Society, Boston, 1859.... In Memoriam of Rev. John Maltby, Pastor Hammond Street Church; Bangor, 1860.... Lectures on Christian Theology, 784 pp., 8vo.; 1868; fourth edition, Boston, 1875.... Historical Address at the Semi-centennial Anniversary of the Theological Seminary; Boston, 1870.... History of God's Church, from Its Origin to the Present Time, 1066 pp., 8vo., with portrait of the author; Philadelphia, 1870; second edition, 1871.... The Seals Opened, or the Apocalypse Examined, 240 pp., 12mo; Portland, 1871.... Sketches of the Theological History of New England, 102 pp., 12mo; Boston, 1880.... Conversations on the Bible, 630 pp., 8vo, with portrait and steel engraving; Springfield, Massachusetts, 1881.... The first article that Dr. Pond wrote for publication was on Church Discipline, in the Panoplist, while a divinity student, 1814.... He wrote forty-five magazine articles, published before 1828.... During four years' connection, from 1828, with the "Spirit of the Pilgrims," as editor, published in Boston at the time of the separation of the Orthodox and Unitarian Congregational churches, Dr. Pond published about sixty articles in the six volumes of that magazine.... Twenty sermons have been prepared and published in the National Preacher, New York.... Seven articles in the Literary and Theological Review.... Seventeen in the Biblical Repository.... Fifteen in the Bibliotheca Sacra.... Sixteen in the Christian Review.... Five in the New Englander.... Four in American Theological Review.... Five in Princeton Review.... Six in Congregational Quarterly.... Six in Presbyterian Review.... Thirteen in Christian Observatory.... Nine in Literary and Theological Journal.... Seven tracts, one of which, "The Act of Faith," has had an exceptionally wide circulation.... At least one hundred articles have been published in various religious papers—chiefly in the Congregationalist, Independent, Christian Union, and Christian Mirror.

POOR, HENRY VARNUM (Bangor, now of New York.) Railroad Reports and Statistics, and Magazine.... Money and its Laws, embracing a History of Monetary Theories and a History of the Currencies of the United States; 350 pp., 1877.... Manual of the Railroads of the United States to 1881; 7 vols., 8vo.

POOR, JOHN A. (Bangor). Reports and Pamphlets in behalf of the European and North American Railway, Portland, 1855, etc.... Discourse in Memory of Hon. Ruel Williams, 66 pp.; Augusta, 1864.... Speech at Bangor Centennial, 1869.

POOR, LAURA E. (Bangor). Sanskrit, and its Kindred Literatures: Studies in Comparative Mythology, Boston, 1880, and since republished in England.... Fugitive pieces at different dates.

PORTER, THOMAS W. (Burlington and Bangor). Memoir of James Eddy, 72 pp.; Augusta, 1877.... Genealogy of the Porter Family, 34 pp.; Bangor, 1878.

PRATT, SPENCER A. (Bangor). Occasional contributions to literary journals.... Editor College Journal.

REED, MRS. REBECCA PERLEY PAGE (Brewer). Above and Below, 252 pp.; Boston, 1872.... From Shore to Shore; The Story of the Life of Miss Agnes Claflin, daughter of ex-Governor Claflin, of Massachusetts, for private circulation, 382 pp.; Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1873.... Everybody's Providence, 267 pp.; Boston, 1873.... A contributor to magazines and papers of the day.

RICH, THOMAS H. (Bangor, now Professor Bates College, Lewiston). A Study of Nahum: A metrical paraphrase of the prophecy of Nahum, with an introduction and notes, 24 pp.; Boston, 1879. . . . Several works nearly ready for the press.

ROBERTS, CHARLES P. (Bangor). The Sleep of Virtue, in Native Poets of Maine, 1851. . . . Editor of papers, and contributor to several. . . . Compiler Business Almanac and Historical Sketches of Bangor, 84 pp.; Bangor, 1875.

ROPES, REV. CHARLES J. H. (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, Bangor, from 1881). The Morality of the Greeks, as shown in their Literature, Art, and Life: The (Yale) John A. Porter University prize essay, 74 pp.; New York, 1872. . . . Irenæus of Lyons, in Bibliotheca Sacra, 50 pp.; April, 1877, Andover. . . . The New Manuscript of Clement of Rome, in Presbyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review, 19 pp.; April, 1877, New York. . . . Review of Fisher's Beginnings of Christianity, New Englander, 19 pp.; May, 1878, New Haven. . . . Translation and Notes of the latter half of Uhlhorn's Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism, 240 pp.; New York, 1880. . . . Address before the General Conference of Maine, on the New Revised Version, 16 pp.; Bangor, 1881.

ROPES, MRS. HANNAH A. CHANDLER (Bangor). Six Months in Kansas, 281 pp.; Boston, 1856. . . . Cranston House, a Novel, Boston, 1859.

ROWE, MRS. HENRIETTA GOULD (Bangor). Short stories and poems in the Aldine, Wide Awake, Northern Monthly, Godey's Lady's Book, Wood's Household Magazine, Potter's American Monthly, Arthur's Magazine, Ladies' Friend, Portland Transcript, and other magazines and newspapers. . . . Hymn for Bangor's Centennial; 1869. . . . Serials: Persie Wynne, 1876, and The King's Cousin, 1877, in Golden Hours. . . . Representative Women in Other Lands, in Godey; 1879. . . . Moosehead Lake, in National Repository; October, 1879.

ROWLAND, REV. LYMAN S. (Pastor First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1864-67). Discourse on the Death of President Lincoln; Bangor, 1865.

SAVAGE, D. D., REV. WILLIAM T. (Bangor, now at Quincy, Illinois). Christian Tolerance, in National Preacher; New York—preached while pastor at Houlton, Maine, 1844-49. . . . The Cedar of Lebanon Fallen: Funeral of Parker Noyes, Esq., while Dr. S. was pastor in Franklin, New Hampshire; 18 pp.; 1852. . . . Review of a sermon by Rev. Augustus Woodbury, entitled, Who are the Evangelical? and of a rejoinder to A Looker-on in Vienna; 40 pp.; Concord, New Hampshire; 1853. . . . The Strong Staff Broken: In memory of Randall O. Peabody, Esq., Franklin, New Hampshire., 24 pp.; 1855. . . . Who is Right? Examination of the issues taken by Rev. A. Woodbury, with the Concord Young Men's Christian Association; 16 pp.; Concord, New Hampshire. . . . A Review of Ten Years' Pastorate at Franklin, New Hampshire; April 3, 1859. . . . Patriotism and Piety: On the death of Franklin C. Woodworth, of the New Hampshire Sharpshooters; 1862. . . . Letter to Bangor's Centennial; 1869. . . . Farewell Discourse at the close of a pastorate of twenty-five years in Franklin, New Hampshire, September 4, 1874. . . . The Church of Christ at Godfrey, Illinois, and The Monticello Female Seminary, a sermon preached in Godfrey; 16 pp.; Alton, Illinois, 1877. . . . Numerous reviews and essays in magazines and papers.

SAWTELLE, MRS. E. W. TAPPAN (Hampden, now of Pomfret, Connecticut). Charity Chapters; 160 pp.; Boston. . . . Pauline Warden's New Life; 271 pp.; Boston. . . . Pen and Pencil Pictures; 270 pp.; Boston.

SAYWARD, REV. JOHN S. (Bangor). Addresses and communications to agricultural papers. . . . Editor Bangor Whig and Courier.

SEAMAN, MRS. SARAH EMERY (Bangor). Hearts Unveiled, or Pure Places for Pure Minds; 200 pp.; New York, 1850. . . . A French Grammar for Pupils in a Young Ladies' High School; 150 pp.; New York, 1851. . . . A contributor to The Emancipator, etc.

SEWALL, D. D., REV. JOHN S. (Professor in Theological Seminary, Bangor, from 1875). A Week's Adventure in Patchungson, and Morphino Somnia; in Knickerbocker; New York, 1856. . . . Life in the Steerage, Nos. 1-7; Children's Friend, 1857-8. . . . The Prince and the Pilgrims; Boston, 1860. . . . The Pulpit, in the New Englander; 1861. . . . How to Come to Christ; Boston, 1862. . . . Christians on Furlough; Boston, 1862. . . . How to Accommodate a Worshiper; New Englander, 1862. . . . Christ the Children's Guide; Boston, 1863. . . . Uses of History to the Preacher; New Englander, 1863. . . . Christ at the Door; Boston, 1865. . . . From Belief to Faith; Boston, 1866. . . . The Art of Expression; Maine Journal of Education, 1869. . . . Stage Manners; Journal of Education, 1870. . . . A Study in Chinese History; New Englander, 1873. . . . Name-words in the Vernacular; New Englander, 1873. . . . Review of Tylor's Primitive Culture; New Englander, 1874. . . . Review of Robert Brundy; New Englander, 1874. . . . One hundred and more contributions to the religious press, to the Boston Journal, etc.

SHAW, REV. FREDERICK E. (Bangor). Contributor to papers, and editor of Christian Mirror, Portland and Oxford county paper in Paris, each for a time.

SHAW, MRS. SARAH ELLEN BENSON (Bangor). Newspaper and magazine articles. Her oldest daughter, Mary E., contributed to Arthur's Home Magazine and to the newspapers, and also wrote the operetta Vivia, which was published. Another daughter, Harris E., has furnished prose and poetical articles for the newspapers. The youngest, Annie Deane, has contributed several stories and poems for the Portland Transcript, The Congregationalist, and The Youth's Companion.

SHEPARD, D. D., REV. GEORGE (Professor in Theological Seminary, Bangor, 1836-68). The Divinity of Christ; 47 pp.; Hallowell, 1832. . . . Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, at Bangor: Duty of Helping the Weak; 13 pp.; Hallowell, 1835. . . . Address to the California Pilgrims; 7 pp.; Bangor, 1849. . . . Sermon before the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions: The Moral Discipline of Giving; 24 pp.; Boston; two editions, 8vo and 12mo; 1858. . . . Early History of Bangor; in Maine Evangelist, Lewiston, February, 1859

...In Memory of Rev. John Maltby, Bangor; 20 pp.; 1860... Sermon at the Fifty-seventh Anniversary of Maine Missionary Society, at Searsport; 19 pp.; Portland, 1864... In Memory of Rev. Benjamin Tappan, D. D., Secretary Maine Missionary Society; 23 pp.; Portland, 1864... Sermons, with portrait; 368 pp., 12mo.; Boston, 1868.

SMALL, D. D., Rev. ALBION K. P. (Pastor First Baptist Church, Bangor, 1858-68). Address before the Penobscot Musical Association, of which he was President; Bangor, 1861... Historical Discourse at the Semi-centennial Anniversary of the First Baptist Church, Bangor; 32 pp.; 1868... Memorial Sermon at the Centennial Anniversary of First Baptist Church, Fall River, Massachusetts; 20 pp.; Fall River, 1881.

SMITH, D. D., Rev. JOHN (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1819-31). Sermon at the Installation of Rev. Amasa Smith, North Yarmouth; 34 pp.; Portland, 1806... Fast Day Sermon; 20 pp.; Haverhill, New Hampshire, 1813... Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Samuel H. Peckham, Gray; 24 pp.; Portland, 1825... Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Isaac E. Wilkins, Garland; 24 pp.; Portland, 1825... Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Henry White, Brooks and Jackson church; 24 pp.; Portland, 1825... Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Nathaniel Wales, Belfast; 20 pp.; Belfast, 1828... Sermon at the Twenty-third Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society, at Winthrop: Labor of Christians for the Cause of Christ not in vain; 20 pp.; Portland, 1830.

SMITH, D. D., Rev. JOHN COTTON (Rector St. John's Episcopal Church, 1849-51). Sermon before the Ancient and Honorable Artillery, Boston; 33 pp.; Boston, 1858... Sermon at the Funeral in Ipswich of Mrs. Caroline S. Fitz; Boston, 1862... Miscellanies, Old and New, containing Gladstone's Homer and the Homeric Age... Suspense and Restoration of Faith... Oxford Essays... Baden-Powell on Miracles... The United States a Nation... Evolution and a Personal Creator... Christ and Modern Thought, 1881... Articles in magazines and papers.

SMITH, Rev. JOSEPH (Bangor). Sermon at the Sixty-fifth Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society, at Skowhegan; 12 pp.; Portland, 1872.

SMITH, D. D., NEWMAN (Pastor of First Congregational Church, Bangor, 1870-75). The Religious Principle in American Politics; 18 pp.; Quincy, Illinois, 1876... Religious Feeling: A Study for Faith; 350 pp.; New York, 1877... Old Faith in New Lights; 391 pp., 12mo.; New York, 1879... The Orthodox Theology of To-day: Six Sermons; New York, 1881.

SNOW, Rev. BENJAMIN G. (Brewer, missionary at the Micronesian Islands, 1851 to 1877). No written form of the language of the islands having been made, Mr. Snow prepared an alphabet and primary books, adding others from time to time, until a literature was established. In June, 1860, he had issued from his hand press no less than 70,000 pages of elementary books for the education of the people. A sermon preached in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, was published in Portland, 1865... Articles appeared in the Missionary Herald, in the religious journals and other newspapers.

SNOW, GEORGE W. (Bangor). Poems, in blank verse, for New Year's, temperance, Masonic, and other special occasions. The first was written in 1823 during the Greek Revolution: Address to Greece... The first published was a Poem before a Literary Debating Club, in pamphlet form, 1835... A Poem on Temperance in the Georgia Mirror, a literary paper in Augusta, Georgia, 1838... The Progress of Temperance, revised, appeared in 1874 in fifty-five stanzas, heroic verse, with an addenda in other style... Tempest Driven appeared in Native Poets of Maine, 1851... Contributions were made to Lady's Companion, Philadelphia, Christian Union, and Bangor Whig... In preparation, The Martyrdom of De Molay, Grand Master Knights Templars.

STANWOOD, Miss ETTA H. (Bangor). Various articles, especially sketches for youth... Assistant Editor Christian Mirror, Portland, Maine.

STEARNS, D. D., Rev. LEWIS F. (Professor in Bangor Seminary from 1881). Inaugural Address at Bangor, 1881... Address on the New Revised Version of the New Testament; 12 pp.; Bangor, 1881.

STEWART, Rev. SAMUEL J. (Pastor Unitarian Church, Bangor, from February, 1880). To Non-conforming Churchmen, in Christian Union. New York, October 16, 1878... Letter of resignation at Fitchburg, Massachusetts; 27 pp.; December, 1879... The Moral and Religious Outlook; 21 pp.; Fitchburg, December, 1879... The Indefiniteness of Orthodoxy; 29 pp.; Bangor, 1881... Morality; 23 pp.; Bangor, May, 1881... The Bible, What it is, and How it Grew; Bangor, June, 1881.

TALCOTT, D. D., Rev. DANIEL S. (Professor in the Bangor Theological Seminary, 1839-81). Sermon at the Forty-ninth Anniversary of the Maine Missionary Society in Calais: The Prayer of Christ that His Disciples Might all be One; 36 pp.; Portland, 1856... Memorial of Professor George Shepard, prefixed to the volume of his sermons; Boston, 1869... Jesus Christ Himself the All-sufficient Evidence of Christianity; Boston Lectures, p. 403-464; Boston, 1871... Several articles in the American Edition of Smith's Bible Dictionary; Boston, 1870.

TAPPAN, D. D., Rev. BENJAMIN (Pastor Congregational Church, Hampden, 1838-48). Essay on the Agency of Miraculous Powers in the Establishment and Propagation of Christianity, in Literary and Theological Review; 28 pp.; 1837... Review of Dr. Enoch Hord's Lectures on Pastoral Theology, Biblical Repository; 16 pp.; January, 1845... Discourse occasioned by the death of Deacon Chester Adams, preached in Winthrop Church, Charlestown, Massachusetts; 24 pp.; Boston, 1855... A Sketch of Dr. Arnold's Theological Opinions, Bibliotheca Sacra; 25 pp.; January, 1858... Discourse in Commemoration of Deacon E. P. Mackintyre; Charlestown, 20 pp., 1864... Biographical Sketch of Rev. Benjamin Tappan, D. D., Augusta, Congregational Quarterly; 33 pp.; Boston, April, 1865.

TRIFT, D. D., LL. D., Rev. BENJAMIN F. (Bangor and Brewer). The North: A poem; 16 pp.; 1835. . . . Support of the Gospel: A tract; 4 pp.; 1836. . . . True Greatness: On the Centennary of Methodism; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1839. . . . The Perfect Church; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1840. . . . Oration on the Death of President Harrison; 18 pp.; Bangor, 1841. . . . Literature of the Bible; 22 pp.; 1842. . . . A Dialogue for Sabbath-schools: A Poem; 1842. . . . The Far West: A College Oration; 49 pp.; 1844. . . . Our Young Men: An Oration; 24 pp.; 1845. . . . Ladies' Repository (Editor), six volumes; 1846-52; The editorial articles afterwards appearing in book form. . . . Prison Life; one volume; Cincinnati, 1847. . . . Analysis of Butler's Analogy, with Life; Cincinnati, 1848. . . . Harris's Mammon, Notes and Life, 1849. . . . Shoulder Knot: A Story; 305 pp.; New York, 1850. . . . Hungary and Kossuth, or a History of the Hungarian Revolution; 378 pp.; Philadelphia, 1852. . . . Webster and His Masterpieces; two volumes; Auburn, New York, 1852. . . . Oration on the Death of Daniel Webster; 32 pp.; 1852. . . . Inaugural Address as President of the College in Geneseo, New York, now Syracuse University; 1852. . . . Editor National New Yorker; one volume; 508 pp.; 1854; Editor's articles subsequently in book form. . . . Methodism Successful; one volume, 588 pp.; New York, 1860. . . . The Present Crisis; 22 pp.; Bangor, 1861. . . . Boreal Lights; twenty-four numbers, 450 pp.; 1862-64. . . . Oration at Consecration of Soldiers' Monument, Brewer; 24 pp.; Bangor, 1866. . . . Northern Border, Editor; five volumes; Bangor, 1873-77. . . . Worthley Brook Sketches; twenty numbers; volumes 1877-81. . . . Our Political Parties; 84 pp.; 1880.

THATCHER, BENJAMIN BUSSEY (Bangor). Biography of the Indians; two volumes, pp. 324, 319; New York, 1832. . . . Indian Traits; 234 pp.; New York, 1840. . . . Twilight Musings; Bird of the Bastile; Weep Not for the Dead; I Will Remember Thee; To a Sister; 13 pp. in Native Poets of Maine; 1851. . . . Editor in Boston, and contributor to various journals and magazines.

THURSTON, Rev. RICHARD B. (Bangor). A prize essay on the Slavery Question. . . . Two sermons in National Preacher, New York. . . . Several in pamphlet form. . . . Papers prepared for the Congregational State Conferences of Massachusetts and Connecticut. . . . On the National Council, in Congregational Quarterly, 1871. . . . A considerable number of miscellaneous articles for various weekly papers in the course of thirty years.

TRAFTON, D. D., Rev. MARK (Bangor). Rambles in Europe; 377 pp., 12mo.; Boston, 1852. . . . The Safe Investment, or Systematic Beneficence, 38 pp.; Boston, 1856. . . . Baptism: Its Subjects and Mode; second edition, 91 pp.; Boston, 1870. . . . Scenes in My Life, during a ministry of nearly half a century; 349 pp., 12mo.; Boston, 1878. . . . A Sketch of the History of Maine, in Crocker's History of New England; 9 pp., quarto, double columns; Boston, 1879.

VALENTINE, ELLIOT (Teacher in Bangor, 1840-55). Mental Arithmetic, 100 pp., 18mo; Bangor, 1840.

WAKEFIELD, Mrs. LUCY F. (Bangor). Fugitive pieces—among them: Fremont, the Pathfinder, in Bangor Whig, September, 1861, just after the proclamation issued by him emancipating the slaves in Missouri. . . . Historical verses entitled "1769-1869," for Bangor's Centennial; also, for the same, "Penjewock," named from the stream emptying into the Penobscot two miles above Kenduskeag bridge, the locality where was the site of the first framed house built in Bangor, and in the neighborhood of the author's home; the Devil's Rock, of early tradition; and a few rods above this, the beautifully wooded eminence, now known as Mt. Hope Cemetery; published in Centennial volume, 1869. . . . The Haunted House, a legend of the old first framed house; Bangor Whig, February 24, 1870. . . . The Deer Hunt, in Whig, March, 1873, containing an appeal to sportsmen to spare those beautiful and harmless animals, which at that time were in danger of being exterminated from the State.

WASHBURN, Hon. ISRAEL, Jr. (Orono). The Power and Duty of Congress in Respect to Suffrage, 21 pp.; Boston, Massachusetts, 1869. . . . From the Northwest to the Sea, 11 pp.; Minneapolis, Minnesota, 1873. . . . Notes of Livermore, Maine, 169 pp.; Portland, 1874. . . . Centennial of Orono, Maine, 168 pp.; Portland, 1874. . . . Dedication of the Soldiers' Monument at Cherryfield, Maine, July 4, 43 pp.; Portland, 1874. . . . Memoir of Hon. Ether Shepley, LL. D., included in volume 8 Maine Historical Collections; Portland, 1881. . . . The Northeastern Boundary, vol. 8 Maine Historical Collections, 106 pp.; Portland, 1881. . . . Among his prominent speeches, published while Representative in Congress from the Fourth District in Maine, were: Plan for shortening the transit between New York and London; 1852. . . . The Compromise as a National Party Test; 1852. . . . The Sandwich Islands; 1854. . . . On the Bill to Organize Territorial Government in Nebraska and Kansas; 1854. . . . On the President's Message Vetoing the French Spoliations Bill; 1855. . . . The Kansas Contested Election; 1856. . . . The Politics of the Country; 1856. . . . The President's Message on the Slavery Question; 1856. . . . Kansas and the Lecompton Constitution; 1857. . . . The Republican Party; 1858. . . . The Issues: The Dred-Scott Decision; 1860;—all the above published in Washington. . . . Addresses to the Legislature of Maine while Governor of the State, January 3, February 22, April 22, 1861; January 2, 1862; published in Augusta. . . . Political speeches, August, 1855, published in Portland and elsewhere; October, 1855, in Boston Atlas and elsewhere. . . . Addresses in Oldtown, July 4, 1858; in Portland, July 4, 1862, and July 4, 1865; on Peace, at Portland, in Advocate of Peace, 1874; in Orono, before the State College, on the Laws of Success, 1875. . . . Articles in the Universalist Quarterly Review: Charles Lamb; Walter Savage Landor; Modern Civilization; The Logic and the End of the Rebellion; Dr. Gamaliel Bailey; Compulsory Education, etc.

WEBSTER, Mrs. MARY MOULTON (Bangor). A contributor of occasional and fugitive articles that were always welcome and attained great celebrity, though the writer was unknown to the public. In Voices of the Kenduskeag, 1848, appeared A Simple Sketch of Simple Things, 21 pp.

WHEELER, Rev. CROSBY H. (Hampden and Bangor); missionary in Turkey from 1857). Ten Years on the Euphrates, or Primitive Missionary Policy Illustrated, with maps and engravings, 330 pp.; Boston, 1866. . . . Letters from Eden, with engravings, 432 pp.; Boston, 1868. . . . Little Children in Eden, 157 pp.; Portland, 1876. . . . Contributor to Missionary Herald, and to magazines and newspapers in America, Europe, and Asia.

WHEELER, MRS. SUSAN A. (Bangor; missionary in Turkey from 1857). Grace Illustrated, or a Boquet from our Missionary Garden, 352 pp.; Boston, 1876. . . . Daughters of Armenia, 157 pp.; New York, 1877. . . . Contributor to Life and Light, Boston, and Christian Mirror, Portland, etc.

WHIPPLE, JOSEPH. A Geographical View of the District of Maine, with particular reference to its internal resources, including the History of Acadia, Penobscot River and Bay, with Statistical Tables; 102 pp., 8vo; Peter Edes, Bangor, 1816. One of the very first books printed in the Penobscot Valley. •

WIGGIN, ALBERT C. (Bangor). History of Castine. . . History of Waldo County, in Crocker's History of New England, 9 pp., quarto, double columns, 1880. . . . Fugitive Pieces. . . City Editor of Bangor Commercial.

WIGGIN, EDWARD (Bangor). Poems, Essays, Lectures, Addresses, etc.; among them: Epistle to Doria, in David Barker's volume of Poems; Jim Black; Mince Pie as my Mother-Made it, etc., chiefly in newspapers.

WILLIAMS, SMITH (Exeter; one of the early school-teachers). Published The Universal Spelling Book, embracing the rudiments of letters, and developing the principles of pronunciation in a manner never before attempted, etc., 216 pp.; Philadelphia, 1831.

WILLIAMS, Rev. THOMAS (Pastor of First Congregational Church, Brewer, 1813-22). Sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, at its Twenty-fifth Anniversary in Wiscasset: Theme, Wisdom in Winning Souls, 17 pp.; Portland, 1832.

WILKINS, MRS. LAURA HATCH (Bangor). Kate Parker, 464 pp.; Boston, 1874. . . . Madge Markland, 320 pp., 12mo., 1881. . . . Fugitive Pieces in magazines and papers.

WILLIAMSON, Hon. WILLIAM D. (Postmaster, Bangor, 1810-20; Judge of Probate, Penobscot County, 1824-1839; etc.). Speeches in Congress when Representative, 1821-22; these attracted considerable attention. . . . A History of the State of Maine, from its first discovery A. D. 1602 to the separation A. D. 1820,—vol. I, 696 pp., 8vo; vol. II, 729 pp., 8vo; Hallowell, 1832. . . . A New Impression of the same, 1839.

WILSON, D. D., Rev. ADAM (Pastor First Baptist Church, Bangor, 1838-41, and a resident previously). Several Addresses and Sermons Published. . . Editor Zion's Advocate, Portland.

WILSON, AMANDA M. (Bangor). A newspaper article now and then, and a few poems.

WINES, Rev. ABIJAH (Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, 1817-19). Human Depravity, 40 pp.; Middleton, Vermont, 1803. . . . Vain Amusements, 40 pp.; Windsor, Vermont. . . . Sermon at the Ordination of Rev.

Benjamin Sawyer, Cape Elizabeth; The Perfection of the Divine Government, 24 pp.; Portland, 1809. . . . The mere Amiable Man no Christian, 26 pp.; Portland, 1828.

WOODHULL, MRS. SARAH F. (Bangor). Fugitive pieces, and others for special occasions, written amidst the cares and responsibilities of everyday duties, oftentimes as a relief from them, and expressive of the thoughts and feelings that plead for expression in words. Among them: A Plea for Colleges for Females, which appeared in Mrs. Hale's Literary Magazine. . . Articles on Woman's Spheres: Not "Rights," but Privileges. . . Several tales and poems for the Bangor Clarion, Charles Gilman editor 1829, etc; among them a prize tale entitled, "Foundling of the Forest," also a sketch in poetry, "The Whippoorwill," and "The Female Missionary" . . . Articles appeared in Mrs. Hale's Magazine, Mrs. Stephens's Magazine, and The Eastern Magazine; also in religious papers, mostly for the Mirror, at Portland. Some of the titles of poems were—The Indian's Lament, 1834; My Country (on slavery), 1834; Ode on the Challenge of Cilley, afterwards sung at his burial in Thomaston; On to Victory (temperance); Ode for Dedication of Thomaston Academy; They Tell Me I must Die; The Young Mother; The Patient Sufferer; Thoughts Suggested by the Burial of a Schoolmate, 1844; Carriers' Addresses 1836, 1852; On the Death of a Daughter of General Knox, and the Condition of the Knox Mansion in Thomaston, 1853; The Morning Star, 1856; New England's Snows, 1855-56; The Mother's Idol, 1859; Three Indian Summer Songs; Questionings and Angel Ministries; Nobody Called Me Darling; Two Golden Wedding Hymns, one in 1880; Installation Hymns; On the Death of Lincoln, 1865; My Home, in June, 1861; The Marble Bust, 1868; The Dew Drop Mission; Two Hymns for Bangor's Centennial, 1869; Half-Century of Bangor's Seminary, 1870; Under the Snow, 1873.

WOODS, D. D., LL. D., Rev. LEONARD (Professor in Bangor Seminary, 1835-39. President Bowdoin College, 1839-66). Review of Goethe's Wilhelm Meister, New Monthly; Boston, 1828. . . . Lectures on Christian Theology, by George C. Knapp, translated from the German; 2 vols., 8vo.; 1831. . . . Theology and Natural Science: Review of Bretschneider's Letter to a Statesman, translated from the German; Literary and Theological Review, New York; Vol. 1. . . . Review of Olshausen's Commentary on the New Testament; Vol. 1. . . . A Suffering and Atoning Messiah Taught in the Old Testament, translated from Hengstenberg's Christologie; Vol. 1. . . . Christianity and Philosophy, two articles; Vol. 1. . . . Review of Goethe's Works; Vol. 2. . . . Political and Ecclesiastical Reform; Vol. 2. . . . Radicalism, two articles; Vols. 2 and 3. . . . Unity of the Church in Doctrine, translated from D'Aubigne, two articles; Vol. 3. . . . Christian Union, two articles; Vol. 3. . . . Society of United Brethren; Vol. 3. . . . Contrast Between the Lutheran and Calvinistic Theories of Election, translated from Schleiermacher, with introductory notice; Vol. 4. . . . Thoughts on the New Haven Theology; Vol. 5. . . . Remarks on President Day on the Will; Vol. 5. . . .

Faith, three articles; Vols. 5 and 6. . . . Neglect of the Classics in the Literary Institutions of Our Country; Vol. 6. . . . Letters to a Southerner, three articles; Vol. 6. All the above from "Theology and Natural Science" in Literary and Theological Review. . . . Eulogy on Daniel Webster, by request of the city government and citizens of Portland; 1852. . . . Address on the Life and Character of Professor Parker Cleaveland, with a portrait of Mr. Cleaveland; 1860. . . . Address on Opening the New Hall for the Maine Medical School; 1862.

HISTORY OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

ALTON.

The common statement is that Alton is eighteen miles north of Bangor. But the points in these towns most widely separated are but little more than that distance apart. It is about eighteen miles from the confines of Bangor city proper to the north line of Alton town. We shall, in this book, make a special effort to correct the current loose assertions regarding distances in Penobscot county. Taking Bangor as the point of departure in all directions, we shall reckon the distance of any town from it by the length of a straight line uniting their nearest points, without reference to wagon roads or railroads, or the interruption of lakes and rivers. Thus Alton is but eight miles from Bangor—that is to say, the south line of Alton is separated about eight miles from the north line of Bangor, between which and it lie Oldtown and the narrow part of Orono alone.

Alton is bounded on the north by Lagrange, the northernmost town in the county of this tier of townships; on the east by Birch Stream, beyond which lies Argyle; on the south by Oldtown; and on the west by Hudson and Bradford. Its boundaries are right lines upon three sides, but the fourth side is made irregular and tortuous by the course of the Birch Stream. This water, running in a general course of south-southeast, narrows the width of the town from six and two-thirds miles on the south line to six and one-tenth when about three-fifths of the way up its length, and to about three and one-third miles on the north boundary. The length of the town, on the western limit, is a little less than nine miles; but as the north line runs due east and west, and the southern boundary a little south of east (or north of west), the town lengthens out somewhat as it stretches eastward, until, on a line drawn due south from the point where Birch Stream enters Lagrange, the extreme length of the town is about a furlong greater.

This boundary water heads, in its west branch, near the north and west lines of the county, in Lagrange town, and its eastern fork about three miles to the southeast. The branches unite two miles above Alton, and flow thence in tolerably straight current to the junction with the Stillwater, at a mouth opposite the northernmost point of Orson Island, in Oldtown. A mile below the north line of Alton it receives the petty tributary known as Ten-mile Brook, which has its source in Pickerel Pond, a sheet of water about three-fourths of a mile long by one-fourth broad, almost in the exact geographical centre of the town. A mile east of the lower part of this is Holland Pond, in which the McKechnie Brook takes its rise, flowing thence in a south and southeasterly course nearly four miles to another stream, watering the southeast of the town, by which it reaches Birch Stream.

Half a mile southwest of Pickerel Pond is another diminutive lake, called Pug Pond, in which the Pug Brook makes a start, running thence south into Oldtown. A larger brook than any of these is the Dead Stream, whose headwaters are in the northeast corner of Bradford and in Lagrange, west of the post-office of that name. In a nearly due south course it intersects the entire western part of Alton, near the west boundary, dipping over into Bradford for a very short distance, near the southeast corner of that tract. When about two-thirds of the way down the town, it is broadened into a mill pond, and furnishes motive power to a saw- and shingle-mill and a tannery. Near the south line of the town it enters Pushaw Stream, a bend of which, about a mile in length, also lies within its territory. West of the Dead Stream the Pushaw receives another but very small tributary, which waters the southwest corner of the town. Two and a half miles north of the Pickerel Pond is a very small lake, with a short outlet into Ten-mile Brook. Mansell Pond, half a mile southwest of Holland Pond, has an outlet of about a mile length into the McKechnie Brook.

The entire town is intersected almost diagonally by the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad, almost ten miles of whose track lie within it. The Alton Station is between Holland Pond and the wagon road, which follows the railway with general parallelism. Here the post-office is kept by Mrs. A. T. McKechnie. The only through road from north to south of the town pursues a somewhat zigzag course, but keeping pretty near the railroad all the way. Its route is upon the remarkable ridge or "horseback," which, beginning at the great bend of the Penobscot in Veazie, pursues a northerly direction through that town, Orono, Oldtown, Alton, and Lagrange. Most of the settlements in the town are upon this road; and they are quite numerous on that section of it south of Holland Pond. One public school-house is situated upon it, about a mile and a half above its entrance into the town; School No. 2 is a little more than two miles north of it, at Mansell Pond; and School No. 4 six miles further, near the north line. The Good Templars' Hall was also built on this road, a little below the school-house at Mansell Lake; and the Town Farm is half a mile below that. A few hundred yards above the Farm, at a building in which a store was formerly kept, a branch road takes a bee-line almost due westward to Dead Stream, near the tannery and saw-mill of Mr. George Milliken, running thence to the town line. Another road starts from the Milliken neighborhood and runs southwest a mile and a half to a junction with the Hudson and Orono road, which cuts across the southwest corner of Alton, crossing the Pushaw Stream in this town. Upon the former road is School-house No. 6, about half a mile below the mills. There is considerable settlement in this part of Alton, and also in the short section of the town traversed by the road to Orono. Something more than a mile north of Holland Pond another road diverges from the highway along the rail-road, and runs off northwest through Bradford and Charleston. Still another wagon-road comes into the town from the river-road in Argyle, leaving that road at School No. 2, a point nearly opposite the Greenbush post-office, and, after about a mile's progress in Alton, enters the main road in this town just above Mansell Pond.

The surface of Alton is generally level, and much of it is in meadow; but the soil of this tract is not very rich. Its people, however, are mostly given to farming, but few manufactures having yet got in, though a tannery was formerly located on the Dead Stream, and a saw-and shingle-mill is still kept running by Mr. George Milliken. There is one general store in the town, kept at present by Hiram C. Judkins, Esq., one of the Justices of the Peace and of the Quorum.

Alton also derives some industrial and commercial importance from the fact that its waters furnish the terminus and rafting-place of the Upper Penobscot Boom.

This region was originally known as Birch Stream Settlement. Stephen Tourtelott and his family were the pioneers upon the present tract of Alton. He came in 1818, and built the first log cabin or other civilized habitation in this part of the county. Three years afterwards, in 1821, came Mr. Anniel Rand, whose son Hiram has been for more than half a century a resident of the region. George H. McKechnie, Esq., is another of the early settlers. He is still residing here, and is the only Trial Justice of the Peace in the town.

Alton was originally a part of the Argyle Plantation, which extended to the Penobscot, and was subsequently a part of Argyle town. Five years after the erection of the latter—that is to say, on the 9th of March, 1844—the present town was set off from Argyle under the name of Alton. Its population at that time was not far from 200. By the census of 1850 it had 252 people; by that of 1860, it had 531; of 1870, 508; and in 1880, 419. Its polls in 1860 numbered 127; in 1870, just the same; in 1880, 116. The valuation of its estates in the first-named year was $58,184; in the second, $116,362; and in the third, $78,959.

The latest report of public officers-elect at this writing [October, 1881,] is as follows: George Milliken, George A. Severance, J. D. Sargent, Selectmen; Frank D. Bowley, Town Clerk; Melville Crawford, Treasurer; Amasa Hatch, Jr.; Collector; O. E. Gerry, A. Hatch, Jr., H. C. Judkins; Constables; D. M. Dunham, School Supervisor; Hiram Judkins, F. D. Bowley, Quorum; G. H. McKechnie, Trial; Justices.

Among the few institutions yet organized in this town is the Alton Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, which meets on Saturday evenings.

Mr. George H. McKechnie, of Alton, is a son of Joseph and Electa P. McKechnie, of Athens, Maine. The elder McKechnie was a native of Waterville, in this State. His father, John McKechnie, was a native of Scotland, and a physician. His wife was of Irish descent. Her family name was North, and she was a sister to Judge North, formerly of Augusta. Joseph and Electa McKechnie had nine children, viz.: Orinda M., Hiram A. B., Charles E., Harry, Mary A., George H., Horace S., Susan E., and Joseph J. Mr. McKechnie died April 6, 1846, and Mrs. McKechnie, June 14, 1861. He was a farmer and lumberman. George H. McKechnie was born May 3, 1810, in Athens, Maine. He moved to Alton in 1833. Before this he worked two years in a store in Athens. He married Miss Eleanor E. Leighton, daughter of Samuel Leighton, of Holden, in this county. They have had seven children, five of whom are now living, viz.: Elbridge W., of Sangerville, Maine; George B., of Alton; Sarah E., wife of Horace L. McKechnie, of Alton; Edward L., of Alton, and Anna B. They lost one in early life, and Delia F., who married Willard F. Snow, is also deceased. Mr. McKechnie has held various town offices, having served as Selectman, Treasurer, and Collector in his town. He has served over twenty years as Trial Justice. In 1866 he was sent to the Legislature as Representative from his district. He is at present a farmer, and always has been more or less, though engaged some in lumbering and insurance business.

ARGYLE.

Argyle is the companion town to Alton, and formerly included it in the same municipality. It lies upon the same side of the Penobscot and in very nearly the same dimension of length, with only the comparatively narrow water of the Birch Stream separating them. It is bounded upon the west by Alton, on the northwest by Lagrange, and the north by Edinburg, on the east by the Penobscot River, beyond which lie Greenbush and a short breadth of Milford, and on the south by that part of Oldtown lying north and northeast of Orson Island. Its nearest distance to Bangor—that is, from the southwest corner of Argyle to the northeast corner of Bangor—is eight and one-fourth miles. The greatest breadth of the town is at the north line, between the Penobscot and Birch waters, where it is about eight miles; the narrowest at the south boundary and upon a line drawn from a little bay in the Penobscot below the mouth of the Hemlock Stream and opposite the foot of Cow Island. On both of these lines the width is but two and one-third miles. It is thus one of the smaller towns in the county, but by no means the least important. Opposite its eastern front, in the river, more than forty of the islands of the Indian reservation are thickly scattered, several of them nearly or quite a mile in length. The principal islands in this stretch of the river, coming down the stream, are Olemon, Sugar, Birch, Hemlock, Cow, Jackson, White Squaw, Freese's, and the Ten Islands. Some of the islets are made highly useful in the booming and rafting operations on the river, and the tribe has derived small sums in shore rents therefrom. Formerly a small steamer plied in good stages of water on this part of the river, and for some distance further up.

Besides the Penobscot River on the east and the Birch Stream on the other side of the town, the waters of Argyle are exceedingly insignificant. The Hemlock Stream rises near the pond in the northern part of Lagrange, and flows in a southeasterly direction across Edinburg into Argyle, through which it flows about eight miles into the Penobscot opposite the middle of Hemlock Island. Into a little inlet of the river, nearly opposite Olemon Island, in the northeastern part of the town, flows Hart Brook, which rises in the southeast corner of Piscataquis county, a little north of Lagrange, and also flows across Edinburg and for about a mile in this town. Half a mile above it, and parallel with it, a very small tributary flows to the Penobscot. Two miles south of the Hemlock Stream, another rivulet of about two miles' length debouches into the river.

No railroad yet touches Argyle; but the trains of the European and North American, near the opposite bank of the river, afford its inhabitants sufficient accommodations for the present. Communication across the Penobscot is so far by small boats.

Argyle has but one great highway, the river road or county road to Oldtown, hugging pretty closely the bank of the stream through its course of eleven miles in this town. This is also known as the old stage road from Oldtown to Edinburg. Upon this road is settled very nearly the entire population of Argyle. Upon it are the only school-houses in the town—No. 4, a little below the mouth of Hoyt Brook; another with an adjacent cemetery and a shingle mill in the vicinity on the west of the road, a little above the mouth of Hemlock Stream; another (No. 2) at the junction of the east and west road about to be described; and still another (No. 7) a little more than a mile north of the south line of the town. Upon this road, half a mile above No. 2 school-house, is also the post-office, kept by Mr. Alexander McKay. Nearly two-thirds of a mile up the road from School No. 7 is another cemetery, and a little more than this distance above the cemetery is the Argyle Boom, to which a short road runs from the county road. A saw and shingle mill, turning out boards, shingles, and spool stock, is run by Isaac Foster upon the Hart Brook, half a mile above its mouth. The shingle mill formerly mentioned as on Hemlock Stream is conducted by Gilman Comstock.

The only road across the town—and this does not run to the river by one-third of a mile—is that leaving the county road at school-house No. 2, and running nearly due west across the Birch Stream to the main road in Argyle.

The surface of Argyle bears a common resemblance to that of its neighbor Alton in levelness and general indifference of soil. It is swampy in some places. Much of the land, however, is fertile, and produces good crops of hay and grain.

A Methodist society has been organized in the town, but its pulpit has not been regularly supplied of late. The temperance interest, however, is kept alive by two lodges of the Independent Order of Good Templars, bearing, respectively, the suggestive and fitting names of "Wide Awake" (No. 248) and Phoenix (No. 268). Both of these meet on Saturday evenings. There was also, we believe, formerly a Freewill Baptist Church in the town.

In addition to the mills before mentioned, the trade and commerce of the town are stimulated by two general stores kept by Miss Lucy A. Bussell and Mr. William W. Spencer. The Argyle Boom is one of the largest and most important on the Penobscot.

Argyle was a part of the ancient Birch Stream Settlement and of the subsequent Argyle Plantation. Their history, as before given, is in good part that of Argyle. Among the earliest settlers upon this part of the old town, coming about 1810, was John Buzzell, a grandson of the Penobscot pioneer of 1769, who built the first house in Bangor. Another old settler was William Foster, of Bradley, a pioneer of 1815. The Plantation, then including Alton also, was incorporated as a town March 19, 1839, and the town of Argyle was reduced to its present dimensions by the carving from its territory of the town of Alton, March 9, 1844. This will account for the reduction of its population from 527 in 1840 to 338 in 1850. As the population of Alton in the latter year was 252, it appears that the population of the original town, had it remained intact, would have been 590 in the same year, a good percentage of increase on the census of 1840. In 1860 the people of the reduced Argyle numbered 379; in 1870, 307; and in 1880, 285. Polls in 1860, 87; in 1870, 85; 1880, 92. Estates in these years, respectively, $38,718, $51,502, and $50,389.

The following-named are the public officers of the town in October, 1881: Isaac F. Buzzell, Jr., G. W. Freese, and W. F. Oakes, Selectmen; Samuel L. Freese, Town Clerk; Alexander McKay, Treasurer; H. W. Marsh, Gilman Comstock, and William W. Spencer, Constables; William W. Spencer, Collector; Stephen J. Buzzell, School Supervisor; Isaac Foster, Justice.

Mr. Alexander McKay joins to his duties as Treasurer of the town a service under Federal appointment as Postmaster.

Isaac F. Buzzell, Esq., of Argyle, is a son of John and Sarah Buzzell (nee Sarah Freeze). John Buzzell was one of the early settlers. His father, Stephen Buzzell, was a son of Jacob Buzzell, who built the first house in Bangor. John and Sarah Buzzell had thirteen children, eight sons and five daughters, viz: Stephen, of Argyle; Lucy, deceased; John, deceased; Isaac F.; George, deceased; Lydia, wife of James B.; Fernald, of Argyle; Nancy, wife of Abner Spencer; William, deceased; Sarah, deceased; Alfred, now of Argyle; and Isaiah, deceased. Two died while young. Mr. Buzzell was a farmer and lumberman. He died in 1840; Mrs. Buzzell died in 1854. Isaac F. Buzzell was born October 3, 1808, in Milford, ere the town was incorporated or the State became such. He first engaged in lumbering on becoming of age. He has always lived in Argyle since he was two years of age. He has followed lumbering and farming all his life. He married Adeline Orr, daughter of Clement and Nancy Orr, of Oldtown. They have had eleven children, viz: James, now of Milford; Hannah, wife of Samuel Lowe, of Milford; Lucy; George, in Milford; Nancy, deceased; Isaac, of Argyle; John, also of Argyle; Adeline, now Mrs. Leroy Sanborn, of Argyle; Arthur, of Argyle; and Evealyn, wife of Isaac Sanborn, of Stillwater. One died in infancy, and one in early life. Mr. Buzzell has held all the prominent town offices at different times. He has been postmaster, justice, etc. He represented his class in the Legislature the year that Hugh J. Anderson was Governor. He has a very good farm of one hundred acres on the bank of the Penobscot, with a good equipment of farm buildings. He has, as his record shows, been for a long time one of the most prominent men in the town.

One of the first settlers in Alton was Mr. William Foster, who came here from Bradley in 1815. He was a native of Gray, Maine, and married Lucy Spencer. They had ten children, viz: Philip, Isaac, Mary, Martha, Joseph, Jane, Nancy, Lucy, William C., and Heman N. Mr. Foster followed farming and lumbering as a business. He died about 1860. Isaac Foster, the second son, was born March 21, 1807, in Bradley, then "No. 4 Plantation." He came to Argyle when eight years of age, where he has since lived. He married for his first wife Rachel Jane Cheever, of Argyle. By her he had two children—John W. and Sarah Jane. Mrs. Foster died in 1838, and Mr. Foster married for his second wife Miss Sarah J. Howard. From this union there are four children, viz.: William S., of Argyle; Stephen J. K., deceased; Harvey H., of Waterville; Martha, now Mrs. John B. Buzzell, of Argyle. Mr. Foster has been one of the prominent men of Argyle for many years; he has served as Selectman for the long period of forty years. In 1864 he represented his district in the Legislature, and again in 1868 and in 1869. Mr. Foster has followed lumbering principally for business, though having a farm in Argyle. His place is near the center of the town, on the river road.

Mr. H. N. Foster, of Argyle, is a son of William Foster, who was born in Gray, Maine, in 1781, and settled in Argyle in 1815. He was for years one of the leading men of the town, holding many of the prominent town offices, and for a time was Justice of the Peace. He married Lucy Spencer, who died in 1826. Mr. Foster died in 1867. H. N. Foster married Eliza Moore, March 13, 1849. They have had ten children, viz: Henrietta; Lucy J., deceased; Sarah E.; Nancy E., deceased; Ruel H.; Adoniram, deceased; Andrew W.; Adelbert A.; Arthur M., deceased; and Norah M., deceased. Mr. Foster is a farmer and lumberman, and lives on the west bank of the Penobscot River, in Argyle.

Mr. Gilbert W. Frees, of Argyle, was born, August 18, 1819, in the town of Argyle ere it was incorporated and ere Maine was a State. His father, Isaac Frees, came here from Bangor. He was a native of Portland, Maine. His father's name was also Isaac. He married for his first wife Rebecca Hathorn, and for his second wife Mehitabel J. Warren. By his first wife he had four children who grew up, viz: Jeremiah M., William L., Reuben, and Samuel. By his second wife he had three children—Rebecca H., Isaac, now of Argyle, and Gilbert W. Mr. Frees followed lumbering principally. He was one of the early lumbermen on the river. He died in 1858. Mrs. Frees died in 1859. Gilbert W. Frees lives on the old place settled by his father about 1800. He married Miss Martha A. Lowe, daughter of Thomas Lowe, of Argyle. They have four children, viz: Nettie W., wife of William W. Brown, of Argyle; Gilbert C., of Argyle; Samuel L., of Argyle; Hattie F. W., at home. Mr. Frees has followed lumbering in days past, though at present he is engaged in farming. He lives on the river road in Argyle, owns one hundred and thirty acres of land, and is well situated. Mr. Frees is at present one of the Selectmen of his town. He has held several other offices.

Charles P. Church

William L. Frees was born in Argyle, April 8, 1807. (For his father's history see that of Gilbert W. Frees.) Mr. Frees has always lived in Argyle. He married Louisa Marsh, daughter of John Marsh, Jr., of Argyle. They have two children, viz: Lottie H. and Jeremiah. Mr. Frees has always followed lumbering for a business, until within a few years. He owns a part of the old homestead—seventy-five acres. He was one of the first town officers in Argyle, and has held various local offices. He is now seventy-four years of age.

BRADFORD.

Bradford is one of the dozen even townships in the westerly projection of the county. The municipal organization of the town has left its regularity unimpaired; and it lies in beautiful shape, a regular township of six miles on each side, or thirty-six square miles in all, and one of the finest and best settled tracts in the county. It lies on the north line of Penobscot, adjoining Piscataquis, the fourth town in order from the northwest corner of the former county. Its northerly neighbor is Orneville, in Piscataquis county; it is bounded on the east by Lagrange and Alton towns; on the south by Hudson, and on the west by Charleston. It has no natural boundary, and is enclosed altogether by artificial and straight lines, but not running exactly with the cardinal points of the compass. There is a slight deflection of the north and south lines to the eastward of the meridian, and the east and west lines are accordingly also a little out of due position. Its distance from the north line of Bangor, on right lines running due south, is the width of two surveyed townships—across Hudson and Glenburn—or about twelve miles.

Bradford has no large waters, as the Penobscot or any lakes, upon or within its borders; but is nevertheless exceedingly well watered. The headwaters of the West Branch of the Dead Stream are but little beyond the northwest corner of the town, in Piscataquis, and it intersects the entire town in a long, irregular diagonal of twelve miles or more, almost precisely from corner to corner. Its principal tributary in this town is the Beaver Brook, which heads in three branches near the centre of the north line of the town, and flows southward to a junction with the Dead Stream a mile and a quarter north of East Bradford post-office. Upon the middle one of these branches, about a mile below its source, is a mill-site. Further down, the Dead Stream is expanded into ponds at several places, as at East Bradford and on each side of School No. 6, which furnish eligible sites that have been improved for shingle and other mills. In the northeast angle of the town is Bear Brook, which rises in Orneville, receives a small tributary from the westward near the east line of Bradford, and flows thence a short distance into Lagrange, where its waters reach the East Branch of Dead Stream, and by that the Penobscot. South of the Bear Brook some miles, two other tributaries of Dead Stream have their sources in Bradford, and flow out into Alton. In the southern part of the town, west of the West Branch, are the headwaters of two little streams that also flow into the Dead Stream. West of them is Fletcher Brook, which heads northwest of East Bradford, and a petty runlet which is also a tributary of Forbes Brook. This is a stream of some importance for mill-sites, whose extreme headwaters are in the northwest corner of the town, near North Bradford post-office, and which also has a source something more than two miles due south of the other. From the latter point the two streams flow with general parallelism until their junction a little southwest of School No. 3. Just below this junction several mill-ponds have been formed, and shingle, grist, and saw-mills put in. Still west of the Forbes Brook, rising near the centre of the west line of the town, and watering the country thence southward, is the Mohawk Stream. This and Forbes Brook presently unite their waters in Hudson, and flow thence into Pushaw Stream. All these several streams furnish Bradford abundantly with water, and add importantly to its natural resources, especially in the development of mill-sites.

This town is also uncommonly well provided with wagon roads, although it has no railway as yet; and it is a peculiarity of the roads of Bradford, compared with many other towns of the county, that many of them run upon straight lines and nearly with the cardinal points of the compass—like the Western roads, upon or near the section lines. East and west, about midway of the town, a highway, starting from the road near Birch Stream, in Lagrange, strikes straight across Bradford, Charleston, and Garland, beyond which it bends to the southwest and runs to Dexter village. This goes through East Bradford. Through Bradford village passes another east and west road, which enters from Alton and goes out into Charleston by a zigzag course, joining a north and south road about half-way across the town. About a mile from the north line of Dexter, another east and west road of some three miles' length joins the termini of two roads coming in from Orneville, one from the northeast, the other from the northwest. A mile or more south of this is another and shorter route having the same general direction. In north and south roads the town is even better supplied. Two of them traverse the whole length of the town, and others large portions of it. The westernmost, about mid-way between Mohawk Stream and the west line of the town, comes in from Hudson, passes the cemetery a little more than a half a mile from the town and School No. 1 a mile further, and a mile beyond the latter ends at the road through Bradford village. Through this place also comes a road from Bradford, which passes another cemetery nearly due east of the former, School No. 2 shortly after, then Bradford village, School No. 3 at the junction of the central east and west road, another cemetery a mile beyond, School No. 4 at the junction of the next main road, a mile south of North Bradford, which it also reaches, and then divides into two forks, by which it reaches Orneville. The other through road in the same direction enters from Hudson about the middle of the south line, passes Schools No. 11 and 9, the latter near East Bradford post-office, and after some deflection to the east also passes into Orneville. Half-way between these two highways another road runs nearly across the town, striking the Birch Stream at a saw-mill half a mile west of School No. 15, and something more than a mile further joining the road to North Bradford. A number of short lines, most of them neighborhood roads, also aid to give the town admirable highway service.

As may be inferred from some of the foregoing statements, Bradford may be considered exceedingly well settled. Much of it, indeed, may be called densely settled, and with a very excellent class of population. Farms and garden spots are almost continuous over a large part of the town. In four places the settlements are so thick as to form villages, at Bradford in the southwestern quarter of the town; at North Bradford, near the northwest corner; East Bradford, whose location has already been sufficiently indicated; and Bradford Centre. Each of these has a post-office.

The surface of Bradford is generally smooth, with gentle undulations. The land is tolerably free from stone, and is quite fertile, producing well of the various crops peculiar to this climate and region. There is little waste about it, no lakes, ponds, or swamps occupying any part of its surface. The country here was originally covered with a dense forest, consisting of the hard and resinous woods still commonly known in the Maine woods.

The first inroads of civilization upon the forests here were made by the single pioneer in the summer of 1804 — James White, probably from Thomaston, who pushed up hither into the wilderness with his family and began his clearing preparatory to settlement. Some time during the year also came two settlers named Jennison and Rogers, from Union, in Knox county, who made their location in what is now the south part of the town. The next spring (1805), arrived Robert Marshall, also of Thomaston, who is generally credited as being a joint pioneer with White the year before. He was still living in 1859. The settlers of 1806 were two men or families named Wilson and Hildreth, from Thomaston. After that there was a moderate and tolerably steady growth of the settlement year by year.

It was seventeen years, however, before a sufficient colony had collected in this quarter to justify organization, when, in 1820, a plantation was erected under the name Blakesburgh; it had at this time eleven voters. For about eleven years this answered the needs of the rather sparse population, and then the town of Bradford was incorporated. The date of this act was March 12, 1831. It has since become one of the most populous towns of the county. In 1830, the year before incorporation as a town, Blakesburgh Plantation had a population of four hundred and three. Ten years thereafter Bradford town had 1,000 people; in 1850, 1,296; in 1860, 1,558; in 1870, 1,487, and in 1880, 1,460. The number of polls in 1860 was 314; in 1870, 359; in 1880, 374. Estates in these years, respectively, $186,107, $233,734, and $252,413.

Religious and reformatory interests have had a good growth in this town. Calvinistic Baptist, Free Baptist, and Methodist churches have been organized. Two ministers of the second denomination reside in the town, and three of the last.

The Town House was formerly used for a time for services by the Universalists.

The Independent Order of Good Templars is organized in Felicity Lodge No. 181, which meets on Saturday evenings; and the Patrons of Husbandry have the Independent Grange No. 77.

One lawyer and one physician represent the professions other than clerical.

There are eight general stores, and one millinery establishment, in various parts of the town. Sixteen citizens of Bradford are engaged in manufacturing or in shops as proprietors, chiefly smiths, tanners, and lumbermen.

Mr. John Coy keeps the only hotel as yet in the town.

The officers of Bradford for 1881 were: Rev. Alvah Strout, Luther Gary, Alfred Streete, Selectmen; Henry T. Williams, Town Clerk; M. D. Strout, Constable and Collector; George Elden, Treasurer; E. M. Wilson, School Supervisor; John W. Herrick, Thomas R. Kingsbury, Isaac Libby, M. D. Kingsbury, D. S. Humphrey, L. S. Bickmore, Quorum; Thomas H. Wentworth, Charles H. Robbins, Trial; H. S. Wilson, Thomas H. Wentworth, Dedimus—Justices.

T. R. Kingsbury is Postmaster at Bradford Post-office, Charles P. Church at East Bradford, M. D.

Thomas, R. Kingsbury

Kingsbury at North Bradford, and Henry D. Barton at Bradford Centre.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Emmons Kingsbury was born in Foxburg, Massachusetts, November 11, 1779. He came to Penobscot county in 1800, and settled in Brewer, where he remained until 1820, when he removed to Bradford. He was a farmer, in which business he remained all his life. While in Brewer, and during the War of 1812, he commanded a company of infantry under General Blake, and took part in the battle at Hampden. He was one of the incorporators of Brewer, and filled many of the town and village offices. He married Hannah Rider, a native of Brewer, in 1802, by whom he had twelve children. He died April 24, 1862. His wife died September 18, 1860. His children's names were: Malinda, Susan, Rachel, Emmons, jr., Otis, William, Hannah A., Thomas R. John R., Richard H., Walter F., and Chester.

Thomas R. Kingsbury was born in Brewer in 1817, and came to Bradford with his father when three years old, where he received a common school education and also attended school at the Charleston Academy. During the early part of his life he followed farming. In 1843 he entered into partnership in the mercantile business with Gorham Davis, in Bradford, where he remained seven years, when he purchased Davis's interest and conducted the business at the old stand for a short time, when he erected the store that he now occupies. He has held the office of Selectman of Bradford fifteen years, of Town Treasurer twelve years, School Committee several years, and Town Agent five years, also Collector of Taxes two years. He also represented his class in the Legislature one year, and in 1869 and 1870 was elected to the State Senate. In politics he was originally a Democrat, until 1861, when he became a Republican. He has been twice married. His first wife was Mary S. Dean, a native of Hampden. She died August 6, 1844. He then married Amanda L. Clark, a native of Atkinson. He is the father of seven children, viz: Marcus D., who married Sarah M. French, and lives at North Bradford; Roscoe A., married Linda S. Clark, and lives at East Corinth; Emma A., died at Bradford; Wilber T., lives at home; Ellwood E., died at Bradford; Freddie C., died at Bradford; Bittie M., lives at home. He was appointed postmaster during the administration of Franklin Pierce (1853), and has held the office to the present time, with the exception of two years. He has been commissioned Justice of the Peace five terms in succession.

Cyrus P. Church was born in the town of Readfield, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1820. In 1823 he with his parents removed to Gardiner in the same county, where he received all the common school education that was available in those times. In 1844 he married Hannah C. Plaisted, a native of New Hampshire, and settled in Gardiner, where he carried on the business of farming. In 1846 he removed to Mercer, Somerset county, Maine, where he carried on the tanning business, and remained there until 1852. While in Mercer, he held the office of Selectman for two years. In 1852 he removed to East Bradford, and settled on the farm now owned by Charles P. Church. He has held the office of Selectman of Bradford for two years, and in 1865 was elected Representative from Penobscot county to the State Legislature, which office he held one term. In politics he was a Republican until 1878, when he united with the Greenback party, to which he now belongs. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His first wife, Hannah C. Plaisted, died in 1857. She was the mother of five children: Charles A., dead; Charles P., who married Hattie M. Folsom, and lives in East Bradford; and Katie E., who also resides in East Bradford. In 1858 he married Mary A. Hill, of Exeter, by whom he has three children: Georgie E., dead; Harry L., and Harlan P., who reside at home. In 1880 he moved to Houlton, where he entered into partnership with G. W. Houlton and built a new tannery, but remained there only one year, when he returned to East Bradford.

In 1847 Benjamin O. Foster built the first tannery in the town. It burned down in the fall of 1851. In the spring of 1852 Cyrus P. Church and Francis A. Plaisted purchased the site, and immediately built a new tannery on the old site. They remained in partnership about three years, when Mr. Cyrus Church purchased Plaisted's interest, and ran the business in his own name until the fall of 1868, when it again burned. He immediately rebuilt, and continued the business alone until April 1, 1871, when he took his son, Charles P. Church, into partnership. They remained in partnership three years, when he sold out his whole interest to Charles P. Church, who continues the business at the present time. The number of vats in the new tannery, originally forty-seven, has been extended to one hundred and twenty-one, and the annual business amounts to about four hundred tons of leather.

Charles P. Church was born in the town of Mercer, Somerset county, in 1849. In 1852 he came to Penobscot county with his brother, and settled in East Bradford, where he now resides. The Bradford tannery, which was built in 1868 by Cyrus P. Church, was sold to Charles P. Church in 1874. The latter now carries on the business. He manufactures four hundred tons of leather yearly, and makes a specialty of buffalo leather. The hides are imported from the East Indies, and after being tanned, are shipped to Boston, Massachusetts. He is also engaged in the mercantile business, and there can be found at his store anything in the regular line of dry goods, groceries, etc. In 1880 he was appointed Postmaster under President Hayes' administration, which office he now holds. In 1880 he married Hattie M. Folsom.

Alvah Strout was born in the town of Limington, York county, Maine, in 1810, where he received a common school education. He learned the cabinet and chair-making trade in Buxton, and followed his trade but two years, when he commenced mercantile business in the town of Limington, where he remained three years, when he sold out, and in 1833 removed to Penobscot county. He first settled on the farm now owned by Dennis E.

Willson, in Bradford, and engaged in the manufacture of oars, in which business he was engaged ten years. He then turned his attention to teaching and preaching the Gospel, in the Free-will Baptist Church, as an itinerant minister, and has filled the pulpit in several different parishes. In 1879 he gave up the ministry and turned his attention to farming, in which business he is now engaged. In 1863 he was elected to the office of Selectman in Bradford town, which he held one year. In 1880 he was again elected to the same office, and holds it at the present time. He married Keziah Wilson in Bradford, June 2, 1835, and is the father of ten children: Mary E., married Isaac T. Bailey, who died in the army; she then married Thomas J. Roberts; she died December 11, 1874, in Bradford. Emily J., who married William Randell; he died in Bradford, August 6, 1865; she then married Richard Soule, and lives in Bradford. Alvah D. M. lives in Bradford. Andrew W., killed at the battle of Mansfield, Louisiana, 1864, while a member of the Thirtieth Maine Infantry. Enoch B. married Hattie Treadwell, of Garland, and resides in that town. Waham W., married Lizzie A. Moulton, of Lowell, Massachusetts. Sarah M., married Orlando Townsend, and lives in Denver, Colorado. George H., lives in Bradford. Daniel E. and Fannie L., live at home. In politics he was first a Jacksonian Democrat, until the Anti-Slavery party was organized, and cast the third Anti-Slavery vote in Bradford town. He became a Republican at the organization of that party, and at the present time is a Greenbacker.

John Libbey was born in Berwick, York county, Maine, in 1786. He married Abigail Libbey, in York; in 1836 he removed with his family to Bradford, and settled on the farm now owned by Enos and David Young, where he followed the business of farming and milling. He purchased the mill from the Wason brothers, in which business he was engaged until 1858. He held the office of Town Treasurer for a number of years and the office of Selectman one year. In politics he was an old-time Whig. He was the father of four children. Sophronia died at the age of nine. Isaac, who married Mary Worster, of Lebanon, Maine; he lives in Bradford. Peltia, who died at the age of four. John, jr., who married Mary E. Tasker in 1857. John, jr., moved to California, and afterwards moved to Deadwood, where he died in 1878.

Isaac Way was born in Berwick in 1813, where he received a common school education. In 1836 he removed to Bradford and settled on the farm with his father, and engaged in farming and milling. In 1837 he married Mary Worster, of Lebanon. He has held the office of Selectman of Bradford for a number of years. In politics he is a Republican. Is the father of three children: Daniel, who married Augusta Randell, and was a member of the Second Maine Cavalry, was killed at Blakely, Alabama, in 1865. Elizabeth, who married O. W. Severance; he died in 1864; she is now married to A. W. Severance, and resides in Bradford. Hebron, who married Alsada T. Rose, died in Bradford in 1868.

Daniel S. Humphrey was born in Bradford in 1844, where he received a common-school education. At the age of sixteen he attended school at the East Corinth Academy, and studied six terms. At the age of eighteen he commenced teaching school, and followed teaching five years. In 1866 he purchased a store-room and farm R. F. Kingsbury, and bought a stock of goods and engaged in the mercantile business, in which business he is now. He also deals extensively in live stock—sheep, cattle, etc. At his store can be found every article usually found in any well-regulated country store. He held the office of Selectman of Bradford five years, and was chairman of the Board two years. He was commissioned Justice of the Peace: first, under Governor Perham, and then under Governor Garcelon, which office he now holds. In politics he is Republican. He is a member of the Baptist Church. In 1870 he married Nellie S. Bean, a native of Corinth, and is the father of two children—Mabel A. and Maud F.

Caleb Humphrey was born in North Yarmouth in 1810, where he received a common-school education. He is a farmer, in which business he is now engaged. He married Anna Fogg, of Wales, in 1842; came to Penobscot county in 1841, and settled on the farm on which he now lives the same year. He has held the office of Selectman of Bradford one year; is a member of the Baptist Church, and has held the office of Deacon in the church for the past four years. In politics he is Republican. He is the father of three children—William F., who lives in Bradford; Daniel S., married Nellie Bean, of Corinth, lives at North Bradford, and is engaged in the mercantile business; and Frederick, who died at the age of five years.

John W. Bailey was born in the town of Palermo, Waldo county, in 1793, where he married Delphos Dean. He followed farming and trading. He came to Bradford in 1841, and first settled on the farm now owned by William Bailey. His wife died in Palermo. He married, for his second wife, Martha Wade, at Bedford. He was a member of the Universalist Church. In politics he was a Democrat. He was the father of five children—William, who married Mary Southard, and lives in Bradford; Harris, who married Jane Kinkade, and lives in Bangor; John, who married Mahala Southard and lives in Bradford; Betsy, who married Isaac Arnold, and lives in Bradford; Delphos, who married Daniel Southard, and lives in Bradford. He died in Bradford in 1878. William was born in Albion in 1817; came to Penobscot county with his father in 1841, and settled on the farm on which he now lives. In 1839 he married Mary Southard, of Oldtown; has held the office of Selectman of Bradford two years; is a farmer, in which business he is now engaged; in politics he is a Republican. He is the father of four children—Augustus C., married Sarah Smith, and lives in Bradford; Albert H., married Fannie Mills, and lives in Bradford; Zelma A., married John B. Southard, and lives in Bradford; Adeline, who married John Torsey, died in Bangor; Bradford, married Dolly Willey, and lives in Hudson; Edward, married Ruby Donaldson, and lives at Foxcroft; Cenus, married Luellin McClure, and lives in Hudson.

John Southard was born in Skowhegan, 1777. He was a natural mechanic, and could manufacture any article he turned his hand to. He married Fannie Gulliver, of Waterville, by whom he had fourteen children. He came to Bradford in 1859, and settled on the farm now owned by John Bailey, where he carried on farming. He enlisted in Captain Parlin's company, under Brigadier-General Sewall, in the War of 1812. In 1834 his wife died; he then married Louisa Sampson, a native of Norridgewock, in 1835, by whom he had ten children. He was a member of the Calvinist Baptist church; in politics was a Democrat. He died at Bradford June 25, 1880, at the age of one hundred and three years. His children's names are: William, died at St. Albans; John, died in California; Rachel, died at Fairfield; Joseph, lives in St. Albans; Betsy, lives in Brooklyn, New York; Fannie, died in Bangor; Mary, lives in Bradford, and is married to William Bailey; Daniel, married Delphos Bailey, lives in Bradford; Timothy, married Mary Ann Gulliver, lives in Bangor; Mahaley, married John Bailey, lives in Bradford; Lydania, died in St. Albans, at the age of nine years; Zachariah, married May Berry, lives in St. George, New Brunswick; Sophrona, died at St.

Albans; Mariah, married Lewis Frost, he died, she then married William Merrill, lives in Blair; Melissa, married Lucian Tucker, she died in Southboro, Massachusetts; Cyrus, married Marcha Arnold, and lives in Bradford; Levi, died when six years of age; Henry, died when six years of age.

William Sanford was born in the town of Palermo, Waldo county, Maine, in 1818, where he received a common school education; came to Bradford in 1859, and settled on the farm now owned by Eben Daniels. In 1841 he married Mary Ann Rowe, a native of Waldo, by whom he had three children; she died in Bradford, August 5, 1848; he then married Jane Erskine. Has held the office of Selectman of Bradford for two years; is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church; in politics is a Republican. Is the father of fourteen children—Isabel H., died in Bradford; Rufus R., died in Bradford; George W., lives at Houlton; Anna M., died in Bradford; William H., who married Hattie L. Perry, lives in Bradford; Clara J., married Edwin A. Aldridge, and lives in Bradford; Alford G., John W., Charles C., Ulysses S., Rufus R., Nellie M., Daniel B., Minnie B—all at home.

BRADLEY.

Bradley is one of the large towns in the south of the county, east of the Penobscot. The river bounds it on the west, lying between it and the towns of Orono and Oldtown. On the east lies Hancock county; on the south Eddington and Clifton, and the large water known as Nichols's Pond; and on the north Milford town. Only its north and east boundaries are each in one straight line. The southern limit is so broken as to make a great triangle of the southernmost part of the town; and the western is curved somewhat by the winding course of the noble Penobscot. The distance of Bradley from Bangor, by the nearest points of the two towns, from the southwest corner of the former due west across the river, Orono, and Veazie, is but three and a half miles. The greatest breadth of the town, from that corner due eastward to the county line, is very nearly ten miles; its width at the north boundary is six and two-thirds. The extreme length of the town, from the north line to the angle at the south, in Nichols's Pond, is seven and a half miles.

The peculiarity of settlement in Bradley is that it clings almost exclusively to one road, that along the Penobscot River. The character of the soil is such, and the direction of industries has been so determined by other natural causes, that the interior of this town, and the country eastward for a range of seven townships in Hancock and Washington counties, is almost unbroken by the plow, or even by excavation for a cellar. A shingle and stave-mill has been located on Nichols's Stream, in the southwest part of the town, about a mile and a half from the river; and a few settlements, including the Town Farm on Great Works Stream, about the same distance from the Penobscot, have pushed out a little way on that Stream and its sole southern tributary; but apart from these there is scarcely a farm-house or habitation of civilized man in this town half a mile back from the river. Along the river road, however, settlement is so dense that the population of the town, as may be seen below, mounts to quite a respectable figure. Indeed, it is almost a continuous village from one corner of the town to the other, upon this side. The village proper, however, is near the northwest corner, upon the Penobscot, and takes the name Great Works from its manufacturing industries, although the post-office is known as Bradley. Its companion village, West Great Works, is on the opposite side of the river, in Oldtown, and has a post-office name to correspond with its own designation.

The river road, a section of the same highway which follows the west bank of the Penobscot from its southern end to Mattawankeag, runs for about five miles in Bradley. All the schools of the town, three in number, are situated upon it, as also the village of Great Works, the cemetery a little below that place, and another a little above the mouth of Nichols Stream. The sparse settlements on that and the Great Works Streams have of course short neighborhood or "plug roads;" but the wagon-tracks further in the interior are few and insignificant, as there is little demand for them by the settlement of this and the townships to the westward. The town has no railroad, but has easy access across the river to the European & North American line.

The waters of Bradley are not numerous, but are of good size, and somewhat important. It has the Penobscot, which needs no further description here. Nichols's Pond, which lies in the extreme south part of the town, parts of it being also in Clifton and Eddington, is a fine sheet of water, lying in a general direction from northwest to southeast, about three miles in greatest length by two miles in breadth. Its outlet is made through Nichols Stream, a brook of respectable dimensions and a little more than four miles' length, which furnishes a water-power at the point before mentioned, and debouches into the Penobscot a mile above Orono. The Great Works Stream has several heads on the east side of Bradley and the middle eastern part of Clifton, and runs northwesterly about eleven miles, making pretty nearly a diagonal through the town, to its mouth at the Great Works. A mile from this place it receives a tributary of small volume and about four miles' length, which runs in from the south. Much rolling ground diversifies the scenery, but none of the hills are of imposing height. As may be inferred from preceding remarks, there is little agriculture in the town, as the infertile nature of the soil back from the river forbids it. The tract was once covered densely with timber, chiefly pine; and a great deal of lumbering is still carried on along the river. Upon this industry the inhabitants mainly rely for support. So long ago as 1859 there were at the village alone fourteen single-board saw-mills, three mills with gangs of saws, four clapboard machines, four lath machines, and three shingle mills. There were more then than there are now.

The earliest settlers in Bradley got up the river and in their rude habitations upon its banks in 1817. They were mostly from different parts of the "District of Maine" and from old Massachusetts. There was a tolerably satisfactory growth, and in 1835, February 3d, the town was incorporated under its present name. It had then about 300 inhabitants. In 1840, when its first census as a municipality was taken, it had 395 people; in 1850 more than double that number, or 796—a truly surprising growth; in 1860 there were 844; in 1870, 866; and in 1880, 829.

The number of polls in Bradford in 1860 was 182; in 1870, 210; in 1880, 234.

The valuation of estates in this town in the first year was $116,300; in the second, $158,166; and in the last, $118,998.

A Free Baptist church has been established in the town, whose pulpit is just now vacant. There is also a society of Spiritualists, with a "Children's Progressive Lyceum" holding its sessions on Sundays. The Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Independent Order of Good Templars have also had branches here recently. The lodge of the latter had the name "Excelsior." There are three grocers in the town, and the business men have had the enterprise to secure telephone connection with the city of Bangor.

The officers of the town for 1881 were: A. E. Perkins, O. S. Cram, R. Hinckley, Selectmen; James A. Rich, Town Clerk; James A. Rich, Treasurer; H. C. Bean, Jerry Bell, Constables; H. F. Brawn, J. E. White, J. W. Knapp, jr., School Committee; Joel C. Pease, James A. Rich, Justices.

The Postmaster at Bradley (Great Works Village) is Mr. G. F. Barton.

NOTES OF SETTLEMENT.

The records in possession of the Knapp family date back to 1747, at the birth of Samuel Knapp, of Mansfield, Bristol county, Massachusetts. He married Rachel Grover. They had ten children, three boys and seven girls, viz: Sylvia, Rachel, Sebra, Betsy, Gideon, Rachel, Hepzibah, Roxana, Moses, and Samuel.

Moses Knapp, of this family, married Abigail Eddy. They had ten children, viz: Samuel, Hiram, John N., Sabra S., Sewell C., Cyrus, James I., Sylva S., Abby A., Levi G. Of this family John N., the subject of the sketch, was born March 21, 1815, in this town. His grandfather, Samuel, settled in Brewer December 16, 1785, and moved to this town in the fall of 1799.

He settled near the centre of the town, being among the first settlers. John N. married Eliza Whitney, daughter of Robinson Whitney, of Newburg. They have had eight children, three of whom are now living—John N., Jr., Moses E., and Irvin S., all of whom now live in Bradley. The names of the deceased are, Agnes A., Salome, Ella A., May, and Fred T. None of the living are now married. Mr. Knapp owns twelve hundred acres of farming and timber land. He now lives about one and a half miles south of the village, on land first cleared by his grandfather in the year 1799.

Alonzo E. Perkins, son of Eben Perkins, of the town of Penobscot, Hancock county, lived some time in Bucksport. He married Paulina Perkins, daughter of Abraham Perkins, of Penobscot. They were among the first settlers of that town. They had twelve children, six boys and six girls, ten of whom are now living, viz: Alonzo E., the subject of this sketch; Amos W., now of the town of Penobscot; Charles E., now living in Bradley; Louisa J., now Mrs. Livermore, of this town; Mary A., now Mrs. Sanborn, of Bradley; Eleanor E., now Mrs. Tarrío, still living in Bradley; Preston E., of this town; Rosa, now Mrs. Stetson, of Bradley; Franklin M., of Bradley; Lilla D., of the town of Penobscot, Hancock county. The deceased were named Samuel and Emily. Samuel died in 1864, and Emily in 1865. Mr. Perkins died in 1865. Mrs. Perkins married for her second husband John Hanson, with whom she is now living. Alonzo E. Perkins was born in 1835. After receiving a common school education he followed the sea during the summer seasons. He married Miss Frances M. Tripp, by whom he had two children, who died in infancy. Mrs. Perkins died in 1868. Mr. Perkins is now and has been Chairman of the Board of Selectmen for three years. He is the overseer in the large milling interest of L. & F. H. Strickland, of Bangor, formerly the firm of Babb and Strickland. Mr. Perkins has held this position for twenty years. These facts speak louder than words as to his ability and integrity as a business man.

Ransom Hinkley is son of William Hinkley, of this town, who came here in an early day. He married Elmira Mason, daughter of Andrew Mason, of Searsport. They had nine children, five boys and four girls: James W., now deceased; Cynthia, now Mrs. Knowlton, of this town; Mary A., now Mrs. Brown, of Bradley; Ransom; Charles, now of Massachusetts; Jane A., now deceased; Elwin, now in Washington Territory; Abbie, now Mrs. Swett, of Bradley; Frederick, of Bradley. Mr. Hinkley died in 1873, and Mrs. Hinkley in 1871.

Ransom Hinkley, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Jackson, on the 12th of April, 1841. He came to this town when a child with his parents. After obtaining a common school education he went to work in the mill here, where he has ever since been employed, now being engaged in running logs. In 1864 he married Miss Maria L. Witham, daughter of Philip Witham, of Bangor. To this couple have been born three children—George A., now fifteen; Earnest L., now ten; Willie H., now four years old. Mr. Hinkley has served as Selectman, School Agent, and School Committee of this town in years past.

Eugene Leufest is son of Steven E. Leufest, of Swanville, Waldo county, where he has lived most of his life. He married Paulina Nickerson, of Swanville. They had five children, one boy and four girls, viz: Lydia A., now Mrs. Hamilton, Milford; Mary E., deceased, wife of Captain Joshua Dunnels, of Belfast; Jane P., now Mrs. Patterson, of Astoria, Oregon; Eugene, and Martha E., now deceased. Steven Leufest died during the year 1857 or 1858. He was drowned by the capsizing of a flat-boat on the Missouri River, while on his way East to get his family to move to Kansas. Mrs. Leufest died in 1856.

Eugene Leufest, the only son of this family, was born February 22d, 1835. He married Mary U. Blackman, daughter of Adam Blackman, of Bradley, and settled in this town in 1859, where he has ever since lived. He now lives opposite the town of Orono, where he owns a good farm of one hundred acres. To this couple have been born two children, viz: Elmer, and one that died in infancy. Elmer is now sixteen, and is at home. Mr. Leufest has served his town as one of the Selectmen several years.

Charles R. Richardson is a son of Charles G. Richardson, of Burlington, in this county. His mother's maiden name was Angeline Eddy, of Eddington. Charles G. Richardson had seven children: Albert, now deceased; Charles R.; Charlotte, now deceased; Frances, also dead; Edward, deceased; Frank, now in St. Paul, Minnesota; Ada, now Mrs. Eben Files, of Caribou, Maine. Mr. Richardson is still living in Burlington. Mrs. R. died in April 2, 1869. Charles R. Richardson was born December 31, 1841, in Burlington. He came to Bradley in 1861 and engaged in the mill business, in which business he still is engaged. In 1870 he married Mrs. Mary Metcalf, of Bradley. Mrs. M. had been married before this union and had one child, William A. Metcalf. Mr. and Mrs. R. had one child, Frank L., now seven years old. Mrs. R. died November 1, 1879. Mr. R. has served as Selectman of the town.

Samuel Bullin is a son of Philip Bullin, of Hallowell. His father's name was Samuel Bullin, who came from Billerica, Massachusetts. Phillip Bullin had five sons and two daughters, viz: Hannah, now Mrs. Hunt, of Pittston; Paulina, now Mrs. Bliss, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Henry M., now in California; Laura, deceased wife of Oliver Goodwin, and Samuel, the subject of this sketch, was born in 1813. He married Olive Banks, of Saco, daughter of Cummings Banks. He settled in Bradley in 1835 as a blacksmith, though he has a farm. He did the blacksmith work of the mills here when they were built. Mr. Bullin has now living four children—Anna, now Mrs. Tyler, of this town; Lizzie, Henry H., Abbie J., all of whom now live here. Mr. B. has served his term as Postmaster, Selectman, and Town Treasurer, in days past. He is much interested in all that pertains in the welfare of the town, having lived here so long.

BREWER.

DESCRIPTION.

This important old town is in one of the most prominent positions in the county, lying as it does immediately adjoining Bangor, with only the river between them. Beyond the Penobscot lie Veazie, on the north of Brewer, Bangor on the northwest, and a small part of the northeast corner of Hampden at the west. East of the river the town is bounded by Eddington on the northwest, Holden on the southeast, and Orrington at the southwest. The tract is thus seen to lie in a general direction of northeast and southwest. It is in extreme length, from the northernmost angle above North Brewer to the south line east of the jog, a little more than five and a half miles; the greatest breadth, from a point on the river opposite the cemetery below Brewer, is three and one-fifth miles. From that point northeastward the width of the town is gradually reduced by the eastward trend of the river, and finally by angles in the northeast boundary of the town, until it is reduced to nothing a little above North Brewer.

Near the southwest corner, at Brewer Village, the Segeunkedunk Stream, which furnishes the outlet through Orrington for Brewer's and Field's Ponds, flows into the Penobscot at a little bay, the south shore of which is in the extreme corner of the town. The stream runs for nearly a mile in Brewer, and furnishes a water-power to grist- and other mills just beyond the town line. About midway between Brewer Village and Brewer post-office, a very small tributary enters the Penobscot. Another and larger one enters at the south part of the latter place. Half-way between that and North Brewer comes in Felt's Brook, which intersects a large part of the town, having a total course of about seven miles within it. It heads in the southeast part of the town, and at about two miles, distance receives a small tributary from Holden, flowing thence in a quite tortuous course to the Penobscot. The northeast part of the town is watered by the Eaton Brook, which flows across its whole breadth, entering from Holden, and receiving a modest affluent from Eddington. The Penobscot furnishes to Brewer not only its great facilities for navigation, but also the chief industries of the town, in ship-building and the allied labors.

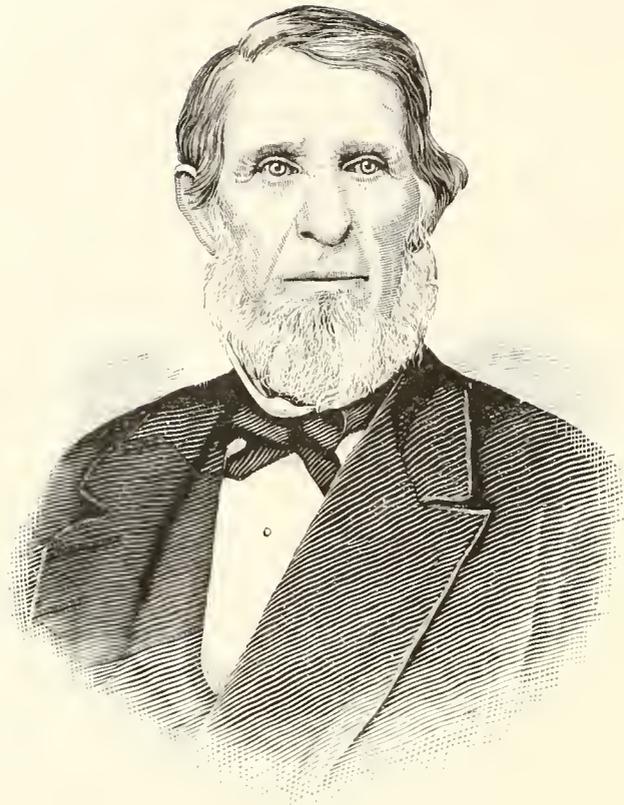

This region is also remarkably well supplied with roads. Only one leading highway, however, intersects it continuously along its entire length—the River road, which runs about seven miles in this town, from corner to corner, clinging close to the Penobscot all the way. Brewer Village, the larger cluster about Brewer post-office, and the hamlet of North Brewer, are all upon this road, as also a large part of all other settlements in the town. About a mile below the bridges over the Penobscot is the cemetery, and a little further above them one of the public school-houses stands on the same road. Several short roads—prominent among which is Green Point Road, about half-way across the southwest part of the town—connect the highways that traverse its breadth. These are four in number, lying generally not more than a mile apart. One runs from Brewer Village into Holden, with a branch just out of the village running into Orrington. Another strikes from Brewer post-office, with three branches connecting with the wagon bridge over the Penobscot, and points a little above and below it, straight across to Holden, whence it passes into Dedham, Hancock county. Another road across the town diverges from the middle of the three branches just mentioned, and crosses the town further to the northeast. Near its passage of Felt's Brook, a cross-road connects it with the other road from Brewer post-office, and a quarter of a mile beyond the brook another connects it with the route from North Brewer southward across the town, and runs half a mile beyond it. Near the intersection of the latter two roads another school-house is located. On the roads and waters a number of mills, brick-yards, and other factories, mostly of modest size, are situated.

The Bangor & Bucksport railroad, now a narrow-gauge, enters the town from the railway bridge at Brewer post-office, and runs near the river, but on the land side of the river road, for something less than three miles, passing Brewer Village on the way, and below that running into Orrington.

EARLY HISTORY.

Brewer was one of the first tracts settled in the Penobscot Valley. The very next year after the pioneer Bussell built his cabin on the hillside at Kadesquit, or Kenduskeag (now Bangor), the earliest settler planted the stakes of civilization on the opposite side of the river at what is now Brewer Village, attracted thither, probably, not only by the beauty of the location, but by the admirable water-power afforded there by the Segeunkedunk Stream. This was in the summer of 1770, and the pioneer was Colonel John Brewer, formerly of Worcester, Massachusetts, from whom the town takes its name. Some account of the peculiar conditions of his settlement will be found in the history of Orrington. He was the first postmaster of the first post-office established within its limits. He was a stout-hearted veteran of the wars and the wilderness, and rendered important service to the cause of independence during the Revolution, especially in July, 1779, during the movement of Saltonstall and Lovell against the British works on the summit of the Castine Peninsula. A foot-note to page 472, in the second volume of Williamson's History of Maine, says:—

Daniel Sargent

Captain John Brewer, a settler at Segeunkedunk (in Brewer), went on board the fleet. He had been in the fort on the 25th July, and examined it; and now gave the General and Commodore every information they could desire.

Three weeks afterwards, from his home at "Segeunkedunk," he viewed the destruction of a large part of the American fleet, which had fled up the river to "places above and just below the mouth of the Kenduskeag," where the vessels were burned or blown up by their own crews, to keep them from falling into the hands of the pursuing enemy; and he left express testimony as to the time when several of these were destroyed, viz, on the 15th of August. A number of our people who had been wounded in the affairs at Major-biguyduce Peninsula, or Castine, were taken to Colonel Brewer's house, and there received treatment from Dr. Downing, a surgeon of the ruined fleet. After the burning by the British of Captain Jonathan Buck's mill, dwelling, and much other property, with several houses of his neighbors at Eastern River (Bucksport), Captain Mowett, commander of the British fleet, and a surly, brutal fellow, came up to the Segeunkedunk, and actually threatened to stab Colonel Brewer with his sword, because he had been instrumental in the escape of one Captain Ross, commander of an armed American vessel. A cartel had been allowed the patriots by the British General McLane, who was a man of very different character from Mowett, under which they were permitted to take home the wounded that were scattered in different settlements along the river; and Colonel Brewer's offense was simply that, by virtue of this arrangement, he had aided Captain Ross to get away through the wilderness homeward. Colonel Brewer and family were so alarmed by the acts of the savage Mowett and his companions that they, with the family of a Mr. Crosby and others residing on the west side of the river, hastily packed up their effects and went on a vessel down the river and bay to Camden, where they were protected until they could safely return. Their cattle had to be driven down thither through the dense woods.

OTHER INHABITANTS, ETC.

By the time the Revolution was fairly under way, it is estimated that there were one hundred and sixty inhabitants in the Brewer region. They became much scattered during the war, but less than ten years after it closed, by the census of 1790, Orrington, "and adjacent places," including Brewer, contained 477 inhabitants.

Among the early settlers were Isaac Robinson, Elisha Skinner, Lot Rider, Deodat Brastow, Benjamin Snow, and the Holyoke, Farrington, and Burr families.

Many interesting notes concerning the beginnings at Brewer will be found included in the early chapters of Judge Godfrey's Annals of Bangor, in this volume.

In 1800 the municipality in which Brewer was included had 786 inhabitants; in 1810, 1,341. When the next census was taken Brewer had become a separate town and had 734 people. Its subsequent statistics of population are as follow: 1830, 1,078; 1840, 1,736; 1850, 2,628; 1860, 2,835; 1870, 3,214; 1880, 3,170.

The number of polls in Brewer at the time of its erection, 1812, was 162. In 1820 it had 147 polls. Forty years thereafter, in 1860, the number had mounted to 554; in 1870 there were 634, and in 1880, 796.

The statistics of estates for these same years are: 1812, $3,981, with a tax of but 61 cents on the $1,000; 1820, $49,699; 1860, $562,499; 1870, 669,867; 1880, $735,169.

In the year 1800, when the Congregational church was established at Brewer Village, there were but nine houses within a circuit of three miles from the place. In 1816, there were eighty-six dwellings in Brewer, besides other buildings.

ANTIQUITIES.

One of the supposed sites of Norumbega, the fabulous city in the Penobscot wilderness, is on the "Brimmer Flats," in this town, opposite the mouth of the Kenduskeag. The name is usually appropriated as the pre-historic title of the Bangor site; but it is certain that the old maps represent Norumbega on the east side of the river, and if there was any such place, and its situation is represented with approximate correctness upon these charts, it must have stood upon or near the present territory of Brewer.

It was upon this side of the river, also (although Mr. Williamson says "on the westerly side"), near Treat's Falls, that Governor Pownal landed, with General Samuel Waldo and an armed party of one hundred and thirty-six men, on his expedition up the Penobscot in May, 1759, while his fort was building at Fort Point. "From this place," says Mr. Williamson, "he sent a message to the Tarratine tribe, giving them notice of the enterprise undertaken at Fort Point, and assuring them if they should fall upon the English and kill any of them, the whole tribe should be hunted and driven from the country. 'But,' added he, 'though we neither fear your resentment nor seek your favor, we pity your distresses; and if you will become the subjects of his Majesty and live near the fort, you shall have our protection and enjoy your planting grounds and your hunting berths without molestation.'"

A certain tragic interest attaches to this visit and to the spot "just above the falls," says Governor Pownal in his journal. General Waldo, the Governor's companion during the excursion, was one of the grantees of the Muscongus (commonly called the Waldo) Patent, on the west side of the Lower Penobscot, and was naturally much interested in the construction of Fort Pownal, which promised protection and warranted rapid settlement in all the Penobscot country. He had conceived the impression that the Patent, when surveyed, would be found to include the ground upon which the party were then standing; and separating himself from them a little distance, he took a comprehensive survey of the surroundings, and exclaimed, "Here is my bound." No sooner had he thus congratulated himself upon the extent and value of the domain of the Waldo proprietors than he fell and almost instantly expired of a stroke of apoplexy. This was on the 23d of May, 1759. The General was sixty-three years of age, and had been one of the most prominent characters of his time in military and other enterprises, bearing an especially conspicuous and honorable part in the taking of Louisburg.

The leaden plate which Governor Pownal buried somewhere in this vicinity was not marked, as Mr. Williamson asserts, with "an inscription of the melancholy event," but rather with a declaration of the supremacy of the English power in this region. Its full text, with copious extracts from the Governor's journal, may be found in our Military Chapter in the General History.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

Brewer, as we have seen in a notice of the census of 1790, was at first merely included in the mention of "adjacent places" to Orrington. The first corporate name in the present Penobscot county, west of the river, was New Worcester, under which designation were included the later Brewer, Orrington, and Holden. The name was taken from the ancestral home of Colonel Brewer. It was also known as Plantation No. 9, from the township number in the surveys. When Orrington was erected as the fifty-third town in the district, March 21, 1788, it included the territory of the subsequent Brewer. The township had been regularly surveyed four years before, by Barnabas Dodge; and the next year (1785) a grant was made by the State of Massachusetts to Colonel Brewer and Simeon Fowler, of Orrington, of all its front or water lots,—that is, those that lay on the Penobscot,—while the rest of the Orrington and Brewer territory was granted to Moses Knapp and others associated with him. The former amounted to ten thousand eight hundred and sixty-four acres, for which Brewer and Fowler paid £3,000, in the consolidated notes of the period.

By 1812 the population of the large town of old Orrington had become so numerous and so widely dispersed throughout its territory that a new town was demanded; and on the 22d of February, a date forever associated with the birth of the Father of his Country, shortly before the outbreak of the last war with Great Britain, the town of Brewer was carved from its northern part, with about its present boundaries. It was the one hundred and ninety-first town erected in the District of Maine. The new town contained 23,582 acres, or the lion's share of the 37,304 acres constituting the old Orrington.

THE FIRST POST-OFFICE

was established at Brewer Village in 1800, with Colonel Brewer as the first postmaster. He handled the light mails of his day here for thirty years. Until 1812, when the office was opened at Orrington, it was the only post-office west of the river, in the present Penobscot county. The mail was carried to it in the early days on horseback once a week. Mr. Daniel Shedd is the postmaster at this writing.

An office was later established at Brewer, at the end of the wagon bridge. Mr. W. P. Burns is now the official in charge. These are so far the only post-offices in the town.

ITEMS OF RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

The good people of Brewer relied in their earlier day for their pulpit instructions and religious ministrations mainly upon Bangor, where the Rev. Seth Noble—he who had the place named for his favorite hymn-tune—had been settled as a Congregational preacher in 1788. His congregation, indeed, had been made up of Congregationalists and sympathizers with their faith, in the towns of Bangor and Orrington (Brewer inclusive), and had a name to correspond. He remained eight years, and was dismissed. In 1800 came the Rev. James Boyd, who remained one year, and was in his turn dismissed. In this year, the opening one of the century, the First Congregational church of Brewer, and the first Congregational church, so called, in the county, was organized. The exact date is September 7, 1800. The Rev. C. A. Beckwith is now its pastor.

The Second Congregational church, or the society at Brewer Village, was organized January 18, 1843. The Rev. Clarence E. Sargent was its last pastor, leaving it so lately as September, 1881, after some years of successful ministry.

A Methodist church has also been organized in the town, of which Rev. A. S. Townsend was preacher in charge in 1881.

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS.

The people of Brewer are not greatly given, it would seem, to associated effort. The only society, beside the religious bodies named, that has any public notoriety in the town, is the Pine Grove Grange, No. 233, of the Patrons of Industry. It was organized November 15, 1877, and meets on Monday evenings.

SCHOOL-HOUSES

in the town number eleven, with fifteen schools therein, and one free high school at the ferry village.

INDUSTRIES OF BREWER.

At the beginning of the century but one vessel was owned in Brewer. It subsequently became, however, a great place for shipbuilding, more vessels having been launched here most years than at Bangor or any other place on the river. In 1861, for example, the steamer Gazelle and the brigs Moses Day and Timothy Field, the latter of 397 and 167 tons, respectively, were launched here. The next year the brigs Caroline Eddy and Frontier, the barks Monitor, Limerick Lass, City of Bangor, Ironsides, and Templar, and the schooner Maria Lunt, with an aggregate tonnage of 3,303, came from the Brewer shipyards. Then, in successive years, were launched the ships Dumbarton (941 tons), Nevada, and P. Carver, the brig Clara P. Gibbs, the bark Evening Star, the schooners July Fourth and General Banks, 1863 (Bangor launched but one vessel this year); the ship David Brown, the brigs Katahdin, T. A. Darrell, and Atlas, the bark Charlotte A. Litchfield, and the schooners Moses Patten and Mary Patten, in 1864; in 1865, the ships Jennie Hight (1,117 tons) Hattie E. Tapley (946) and Florence Treat (790), the brig Eugenia, the schooners Mattie Holmes, Fanny Elder, and Izetta; in 1866 the ship Phineas Pendleton (1,333 tons), the barks Helena, Albert Emerson, Argentine, and Hosea Rich, the brigs Caroline Gulliver, Charlotte, and Rachel Coney, and the schooners Mary Collins, Paul Seavey, and Dauntless; and in 1867 the brigs George E. Dake, Mau- rice, and Manson, and the schooners Darius Eddy, Charles E. Hellier, Nellie Treat, Fred Smith, and Iona. Bangor launched but one vessel this year—the schooner Anna Leland, of 139 tons.

Brick-making is also a leading industry in the town, for which the clay in its soil affords excellent opportunities. About a dozen persons or firms are engaged in this manufacture, some of them, as the Brewer Steam Brick Company, quite extensively. Brick machines are also made by two firms.

There are about half the number of brick-makers engaged in saw-milling; but the greatness of their annual product makes this industry much more important than the other. Some of the works, as those of Messrs. D. Sargent's Sons, at Brewer Village, upon the old mill-site of Colonel Brewer, are very extensive. There are two planing- and molding-mills, and two grist-mills.

Among the lesser but still important industries in Brewer are the manufactures of sails, boats, leather, wooden boxes, carriages, boots and shoes, brush woods and broom handles, churns and spinning-wheels, woolen mittens, cooperage, harness, etc., etc., and the usual trades and professions are represented in large number.

Joseph Oakes & Son, ship-builders, have a marine railway on Main street, in the upper village.

Agriculture is not neglected, and is extensively pursued in the town, adding considerably to its resources and wealth.

THE BREWER SAVINGS-BANK

was organized on the first of May, 1869. In 1877 it reported for the year $49,013.75 deposits and profits; in 1880, $42,592.98, with 313 depositors and a reserve fund of $263.34. Mr. William P. Burr is President, and E. P. Farrington Treasurer of the bank.

The town has as yet no National bank.

BRIDGES AND FERRY.

Mr. E. F. Duren furnishes the following historical note concerning the bridge across the Penobscot, connecting Brewer and Bangor:

The Bangor Bridge Company built the first bridge over the Penobscot River in 1832. It was 440 yards in length; its cost $50,000. It was carried away by the flood in 1846, and rebuilt in 1847. A Railroad bridge for the Bangor & Bucksport Road crosses the Penobscot River east of the covered Penobscot bridge. It was built in 1873.

A ferry for foot passengers has also long plied to Brewer from the foot of Union street, in Bangor.

THE FLOOD OF '46.

The Bangor Courier, in a vivid account of the great flood of 1846, caused by the jam of ice in the Penobscot and the Kenduskeag, includes the following incident:

There were some families in great peril. A family living at the Point, between Brewer Village and the river, were alarmed by the approach of the flood, and started, several women in the number, for higher land in the vicinity, but before reaching it the water was up to their armpits. They reached what was then an island, and were compelled to remain during the night.

Twenty women and children, as the water flowed over the plain at Brewer, fled to a school-house, but could not return, and were obliged to go back upon the hills and remain until the water subsided.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

A humorous article on "Penobscot Characters," in the entertaining little volume entitled Voices from the Kenduskeag, contains the following anecdotes of one of the old-time notabilities of this town:

A character of considerable humor was Captain Jacob Hart, of East Brewer. He was an officer in the War of the Revolution, and while in the army acquired habits of military precision and military vivacity that adhered to him through life. He had also the habit of interlarding his observations with the expressions "pretty likely—hum," "of course—yes." At one time he had indulged too freely, and, coming out of the Hatch tavern, he attempted to descend the long flight of steps that used to lead to the road; but, making a misstep, he rolled to the bottom. Picking himself up as speedily as possible, he turned to the right-about-face, and said with military promptness: "As you are, Jake Hart, pretty likely." Then, looking towards the witnesses of his mishap, the Captain made the following proposition: "If any man in the town of Bangor can tumble down stairs equal to old Jake Hart, he has an undoubted right to try it—hum—pretty likely—of course—yes."

He once sold a citizen some hay. The gentleman inquired if it was fine hay. The Captain replied: "Hum, pretty likely—fine hay, of course, yes." Without examining it, the gentleman paid him and directed him to put it into his barn. On using it he found it was very coarse hay, and when the Captain again made his appearance, he took him to task for cheating him. The Captain raised his eyes in amazement, and inquired wherein he had cheated him.

"In the hay; you told me it was fine hay, when it was coarse."

"Hum—pretty likely—I told you 'twas fine hay, of course, yes—of c-o-a-r-s-e."

Of course the gentleman said no more.

The following military biographies are extracted from General Hodsdon's reports as Adjutant-General of the State during the war period:

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL THOMAS D. CHAMBERLAIN enlisted as a private in the Twentieth Maine Volunteers at the organization of the regiment. He was subsequently promoted to be Sergeant, and upon recommendation of his company and regimental commanders was still farther promoted in January of 1862, to the first Lieutenancy of Company G. He was soon afterwards detailed as Acting Adjutant of the regiment. For general efficiency and gallantry at the battle of Gettysburg, he was promoted to the captaincy of Company G. In this capacity he served through all the campaign of 1864, was wounded at Bethesda Church, Virginia, and breveted Major for gallant and distinguished services at the battle of Peebles' Farm, Virginia. In December, 1864, he was appointed Provost Marshal of First Division, Fifth Corps, and performed the duties of this office until May, 1865, when he was appointed by order of the War Department Commissary of Musters of the same command, and mustered out of service the larger part of the troops of that division.

In June, 1865, he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Twentieth Regiment, and subsequently recommended for brevet colonelcy for gallant and distinguished services at the battle of Five Forks, Virginia. He was mustered out of service with his regiment at the disbanding of the provisional corps, having risen from the ranks, served three years constantly at the front, in twenty-five battles and skirmishes, every engagement in which his regiment participated, and having been twice breveted for gallant services.

CAPTAIN BILLINGS BRASTOW, of Brewer, enlisted into the United States service as Second Lieutenant, Company I, Ninth Infantry, and was subsequently promoted

First Lieutenant, and then Captain of the same command. When his regiment was in General Gilmore's department, his name was often rendered conspicuous for valor, and especially for the gallantry of his command in the charges and capture of battle-flags at Fort Wagner. While a Lieutenant, he was for a large part of the time Acting Adjutant and Captain; and whilst Captain, Acting Colonel. He participated in every battle in which his regiment was engaged, excepting one—making, in all, nearly thirty actions. Captain Brastow was in command of the regiment at the taking of St. Mary's; and at Morris Island, with one hundred and twenty-five men, he attacked the Twenty-first South Carolina Regiment, numbering about six hundred, driving them from their rifle-pits and taking some thirty prisoners and two stands of colors. At the battle of Deep Bottom his regiment was outflanked upon the right and left, but by a bold and rapid movement he pierced the enemy's lines, and in the midst of a most deadly fire carried his command to our lines with the loss of thirty-nine men and all his officers then on duty who were either killed, wounded, or otherwise disabled. He also led the attack upon the enemy at the time that General Weitzel was in danger of losing his right, dislodging the enemy, and driving him more than a mile over almost impassable barriers.

Captain Brastow never asked his men to go where he was not in readiness to lead them in person. After the fatal attack upon Battery Gilmore, the command of the regiment again devolved upon Captain Brastow, when, leading his men against the enemy at the battle of Laurel Hill Church, September 29, 1864, he was instantly killed. The deceased was a noble young man; none braver ever drew a sword.

The following notices are included in the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College, also published in the Adjutant-General's reports. The figures prefixed name the classes to which the soldiers belonged:

1852.—Joshua L. Chamberlain; born, Brewer, September, 1828; early education in Colonel Whiting's military school, Ellsworth; graduated Bangor Theological Seminary, 1855; Tutor Bowdoin College the same year; Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory, 1856; Professor of Modern Languages, 1860. Leave of absence being granted, August, 1862, for the purpose of visiting Europe, he tendered his services to the Government; August 8th appointed Lieutenant-Colonel Twentieth Maine; participated in battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg, and Chancellorsville; promoted Colonel, May, 1863; commanded our left flank on Little Round Top, Gettysburg; specially commended for handling his troops, and promoted to command the famous Light Brigade, Fifth Corps; in all the campaigns of the army of the Potomac from that time till the close of the war; severely wounded in front of Petersburg; promoted Brigadier-General on the field by General Grant "for gallant conduct in leading his brigade in a charge," June, 1864; President court-martial while recovering from wounds; opened Grant's last campaign by assault on the enemy's right flank at "Quaker Road," March, 1865, for brilliant success in which was breveted

Major General, and assigned to command a division; in battles of White Oak Road and Five Forks had two horses shot under him, and was twice wounded in the breast and arm; had the advance in the last action, April 9, 1865, and was designated to receive the formal surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox Court House; returned to his Professorship, September, 1865; Governor of Maine.

1857.—Louis O. Barstow; born, Brewer, November, 1834; pursued a theological course at Bangor; was settled in the ministry at St. Johnsbury, Vermont; served as Chaplain of the Fourteenth Vermont.

1859.—John C. Chamberlain; born, Brewer, August, 1838; pursued a theological course at Bangor; commissioned Chaplain Eleventh Maine, but served on United States Christian Commission, and rendered important service at the battle of Gettysburg.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. Sumner Rogers, late Principal of the Military Academy at Orchard Lake, Michigan, and many other soldiers of more or less distinction, were also from Brewer. They will be found mentioned in our Military Chapter.

A full biographical sketch of Mr. Daniel Sargent, head of the influential Sargent family of this town, is given on another page. As there noted, he has had four children, viz: Susan P., Harlan P., Daniel A., and Albert P., all of whom now live in Brewer. Daniel A. married for his first wife Fannie F. Bragg, by whom he had four children, viz: Donald A., Robert P. (deceased), Fannie F., and Allston (twins). Mrs. Sargent died in 1874, and Mr. Sargent married for his second wife Helen F. Nickerson, of Brewer, by whom he has one child—George G. In 1873 Mr. Sargent added the ice trade to his other business, so he now is engaged in the lumber and ice business, while the old gentleman looks after the affairs of the grocery.

S. H. Smith, of the firm of Smith, Woodbury & Co., is the son of Daniel and Elizabeth Smith, from the western part of this State. They had three children, two boys and one girl, of whom Mr. Smith is the only one living. Daniel Smith had also four children by a previous wife. J. H. Smith was born March 19, 1834, in Piscataquis county, Maine. He came to Brewer when seventeen years old, where he has ever since lived. He worked at the joiner's trade until 1862, then went into the army. After the war he went into the mill in Brewer. He married Miss Emeline Hatch, of Nobleboro, in 1856. By her he had two children, viz: Lizzie May, and Carrie E., who died in 1881. Mrs. Smith died in 1860, and Mr. Smith married for his second wife Lydia H. Genthner, of Parkman. They have one child—Lena A. The planing-mill was first started here by Washington Hall, in 1851, by whom it was run until 1872, when he sold out entirely. Mr. Smith bought an interest in this mill in 1865, and has bought further interests from time to time since, adding other kinds of manufacturing. Mr. James bought an interest in 1873, and they added the manufacture of brush-woods, broom and duster handles. Mr. James subsequently bought out that part of the business and still runs it himself. In 1878 they added the manufacture of boxes, which they now turn out in large quantities. They run three board-planers, one clapboard-planer, and one knee-planer. They also keep lumber for sale, both long and short.

Among the leading manufactures of Brewer is that of brush-woods of all kinds, as carried on by J. H. James. Mr. James is the son of John and Lucy James, of Athens, Somerset county. He is the fourth son of the family of five sons and one daughter—Betsey, William A., Lorenzo D., J. H., and Isaiah H.

J. H. James was born June 9th, 1837. After finishing a common school education he engaged in the business he now follows in the city of Bangor. Mr. James married for his first wife Ellen N. Nicholson, of Bangor. By this union there was one child—Ralph H. Mrs. James died January 26th, 1875, and Mr. James married for his second wife Mary E. Hodgdon, of Bangor, by whom he has two children—Lucy E. and John H. Mr. James began the manufacture of brush woods in 1874. He has largely increased his facilities until now he employs eighteen men making millions of these blocks for all kinds of brushes, such as boot brushes, paint brushes, kalsomine brushes, etc., etc., which find sales all over the United States. He sends them to Europe also.

One of the oldest lumbermen on the Penobscot is Mr. W. H. Maling. His father, William, was a native of Nova Scotia. William and Ellen Maling had six children, five sons and one daughter—John Maling, now of Liverpool, Nova Scotia; Susan, now Mrs. Lothrop, of Clementsville, Nova Scotia; W. H.; James, killed in the civil war; Andrew, of Annapolis, Nova Scotia, and George, of St. Margaret's Bay, Nova Scotia. W. H. Maling was born May 7th, 1825. At the age of sixteen he went into the lumber business for himself. In 1847 he came to Lincoln, in this county. He has since lived in Medway, Winn, and Brewer, where he now resides. He settled in Brewer in 1862. He married Augusta White, daughter of John and Mary White. They have seven children—George, Melvin, Jerome, John, Lillie A., Charles H., and Gussie. They have lost four children. Mr. Maling is a member of the Milford Land and Lumber Company. It was through his efforts the company was formed, and through him the purchase was made. He has probably explored and located as much timber-land as any other man on the Penobscot. The Milford Land and Lumber Company will this year cut up ten million feet of long lumber, ten million of short lumber, and seven million shingles, besides large quantities of lath, clapboards, pickets, etc., etc.

Among the earliest settlers in the town of Brewer (then Orrington) was John Holyoke, who with his wife, a sister of Major Robert Treat, who settled in Bangor at the same time, and two children, moved from Boston, Massachusetts, about the year 1776. He took up two lots of land, each containing one hundred acres, one above, the other below where the Penobscot bridge now stands, each lot being forty rods on the river by four hundred back. It is pretty well known that Mr. Holyoke was one of the number concerned in the destruction of the tea in Boston harbor a few years before, although no such disclosure ever came from him, the whole party being pledged to secrecy; yet the fact rests on such corroborative testimony as to leave no doubt of its truth. Mr. Holyoke at first built a log house on the hill on the upper lot, which certainly must have been very difficult of approach from the river, their only highway at the time. The reasons for this are not very apparent to us of this day, when we further consider that upon the abundance of fish which the waters of the river supplied they had to depend for part of their living and for fertilizing their land. A new frame house was soon built on the flat on the lower lot, about twenty rods from the river, which has recently given place to another building. This place was one of large resort for the public generally, and here Mr. Holyoke raised a family of seven sons and three daughters. His oldest son, John, settled on the more northerly of the two lots taken by his father, and raised a family of eight sons and four daughters. Five of his family, viz., John, Charles, Caleb, Joseph, and Mary have remained, and are living in Brewer. They are all Republicans, and have shared fully in the political and financial responsibilities of the day. John, the oldest son of those living, was in 1863 elected to the Maine Legislature by the towns of Brewer and Orrington, and also in 1865; and was President of the Brewer Savings-bank for the term of fourteen years. Caleb was elected a member of our Legislature in 1869, and was a Director in the Traders' Bank of Bangor for twenty-six years. Dr. Thomas Holyoke, the eighth son, was elected a Representative to the Iowa Legislature, and served two years in succession, and also was President of a National bank in the city of Grinnell.

An eventful life is that of Captain F. G. Arey, of Brewer. He is the son of Joseph and Thankful Arey, of Bucksport, Maine. He was born July 26, 1822. His father was lost at sea before his birth, and his mother was left with three children and very small means, F. G., the subject of this sketch, being the youngest. He went to sea early in life and followed it in all capacities till he was thirty-five years of age, up to master and owner. In 1855 he came to Brewer and bought the brick store where he traded about eighteen or twenty years. He now deals in real estate, wild lands, and lumber lands, also buys and sells wood and bark, and, in fact, almost anything that will sell. He owns several sailing vessels, a wharf, etc. He first married Julia V. Hoben, by whom he had one child, who died in infancy. Mrs. Arey died in 1844, and Mr. Arey again married Nancy B. Farrington in 1846; was again left a widower in 1860, and married for his third wife, with whom he is now living, Carolina A. Doane. By his second wife he has four daughters. By his present wife he has four children also, three girls and one boy. Though left to make his own way in the world he has, by his indomitable pluck and perseverance, united to good business ability, become one of the wealthy men of the town.

Jacob L. Barker is the son of Cyrus and Rachel Barker, of Lewiston. Cyrus Barker had ten children, viz: Sally, David, Mary, Cyrus, jr., Lydia, J. L., Nelson P., of Monmouth, Cassan Dana, now Mrs. Howe, of Wisconsin, all of whom are deceased except the three last named. J. L. Barker was born September 15, 1805. He settled in Brewer in 1833, and has followed the business of house carpenter ever since. In 1833 he married Mary Holyoke, daughter of John and Miriam Holyoke, who were among the early settlers of Brewer. From this union there have been five children, viz: Elza H., now Mrs. Shackley, of Brewer; Annie M., now Mrs. Holbrook, of Brewer; Henry L., of San Francisco, California; John N., of Brewer, and one who died in infancy. Mr. Barker has held the office of County Commissioner, Selectman, and minor officer several terms, and is spoken of as one of the substantial citizens of the town.

Among the oldest inhabitants of Brewer who were born here, is Mr. Brazer Brastow. He is the son of Thomas Brastow, of Wrentham, Massachusetts, who came here among the earliest settlers of this town. Brazer Brastow is the youngest son of Thomas Brastow, who had five children, three sons and two daughters. He married Maria Sampson, of Kingston, Massachusetts. They have had eight children, five sons and three daughters, viz: Thomas E., of Rockport, Maine; James B., of Worcester, Massachusetts; Marie E., now Mrs. Hodges, of Orrington; Lucy P., now Mrs. Sleeper, of Sherman, Maine; Fred H., of Brewer; William H., now deceased; George C., of Brewer; Julia T., now at home. Mr. Brastow first settled in Brewer, where he has lived most of the time, until within six years, since which he has lived in Orrington. He owns a fine farm of about 130 acres. He has been engaged in lumber and milling business most of his life.

Mr. G. C. Brastow is the fifth son of Brazer Brastow, a sketch of whose life may be found in the paragraph above. He was born January 31, 1850. He settled on the place where he now lives in 1877. He has always followed the business of milling (flour). In 1877 he married Miss Gertrude B. Pierce, daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah Pierce, of this town. They have one child, Frankie C. Mr. Brastow's mill is situated in Orrington, and has a capacity of thirty thousand bushels a year. He does principally a custom work, though some merchant milling is done in this mill.

William P. Burr, the present postmaster of Brewer is a grandson of Joseph Burr, who came to Brewer from Massachusetts. Joseph and Charles Burr were the first settlers in Brewer, at least Mr. William P. Burr so thinks. Joseph Burr married Sally P. Gould. They had eleven children—Joseph B., Jonathan, Sally R., William P., Ann Eliza G., Mary Eleanor, Hiram, Martha, Martha B., Harriet N., and Benjamin A. Jonathan Burr, the second son of this family, married Sophia Wiswell, of Holden, Maine. They had six children, viz: George W., of San Francisco, California; Mary S., deceased; Charles Jackson, of Brewer; William P.; Francis O. J., deceased; and Martha Ann, now Mrs. L. D. Parker, of Brewer. Mr. Burr was a prominent man, and for many years held prominent political positions. He was a member of the Legislature several terms. He died August 6, 1845; Mrs. Burr died May 22, 1871. William P. was born September 10, 1833. His father being a business man in Brewer, William received such an education as the public school afforded until about seventeen, when he entered a printing office and learned the printer's trade. There he spent some five years, when he went to Machias, and remained two years as journeyman printer. From Machias he went to Ellsworth, and, after working two years, he purchased a half interest in the Ellsworth American, a Republican newspaper, N. K. Sawyer owning the other half. Here Mr. B. lived until 1865, when he sold out to Mr. Sawyer, and moved to Brewer, where he has since lived. On coming to Brewer, he engaged in grocery business, and continued in that about five years. About 1869 he was elected Town Treasurer and Town Clerk, which offices he held for nine years. In 1879 he was appointed postmaster, which office he still holds. He married Alice A. Longfellow, of Machias, who died June 9, 1876. Mr. Burr married, for his second wife, Emma A. Washburn, of Brewer. He has no children, but lost two in infancy, one by each wife. During the winter of 1878-79 he was a member of the Greenback Legislature, being the only Republican except one from this district.

Orlando Moore is son of Seth W. Moore, of Holden. He was born April 2, 1840, and lived in Holden until twenty-one years of age, since which he has always lived in Brewer. He has been the toll gatherer since 1866. He spent three years in the army and navy after leaving home. He married Carrie M. Skinner, daughter of John K. Skinner, of Brewer. Mrs. Moore died in May, 1875. Mr. Moore married for his second wife Miss T. A. Merrill, daughter of Joseph Merrill, of Bangor. By his first wife he had one daughter, Alice, now deceased. By his second wife he has two sons, viz: Orlando M., and Frankie H. Mr. Moore is now serving as Constable, Town Treasurer, and Collector, also surveyor of wood and bark. He has held the office of Constable nine years, also surveyor of wood and bark same length of time.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. George W. Patten, was born November 2, 1843. He is the only son of Willis and Hannah Patten, of Brewer. After receiving a common and high school education he entered into surveying lumber. He continued in that business until 1876, when he removed to Quincy, Massachusetts, and worked in a lumber yard until 1877, when he came back to Bangor and opened the grocery and provision store which he now occupies, at 41 and 43 Washington street, near the toll house. He seems at this time to be doing a lively business. He holds the office of Selectman of Brewer, which he has held for five years.

Francis F. Sparks was born in the town of Orland, Maine, August 20, 1820. He was captain of a vessel, and died at sea, February 13, 1853. His wife was Sarah E. Dorr, who was born in the town of Penobscot, April 16, 1822, and died in Brewer in 1872, aged fifty years. They raised a family of four children: Emma F., married to Daniel S. Knight; Sarah F., wife of J. B. Mayberry, and has one child, a son; Francis E., married Laura J. Rose, and has two sons. Henry T. Sparks, the subject of this sketch, and the fourth child of Francis F. and Sarah L. Sparks, was born in Orland, Maine, October 26, 1851. He is by trade a tin plate worker and stove dealer, which business he follows in Brewer, under the firm name of Kellen & Sparks. The 30th day of May, 1874, he was married to Ella J. Hall, of Brewer, by whom he has two children—Lottie E. and Sadie A.—both of whom reside at home. The father of Mrs. Sparks, who is yet living, is Francis Hall. Her mother, now deceased, was Olive Hutchins.

Luther S. Pierce was born in the town of Moscow, Maine, August 25, 1820, where he lived forty-seven years, when he removed to Brewer, in the same State, where he still follows the occupation of farming. For a wife he chose Nancy T. Greenwood, who was also born at Moscow, August 2, 1824. They were married June 15, 1848. Their children were: Cyrus A.; Amos, born May 26, 1850, died in infancy; Lavinia E., born November 21, 1851, married S. D. Copeland, and has one daughter, named Dora; Dora E., born February 24, 1853, married I. E. Dole, and has two children, Edith, and an infant not yet named; Lucinda B., born February 8, 1855, died in August, 1857; Clara J., born January 27, 1857; Rosa L., born October 8, 1858; Melvin L., born January 20, 1861, resides at home; Cora M., born April 19, 1863; Randall S., born April 23, 1866; Lyman G., born in Brewer, December 26, 1869. The five last mentioned reside at home. The subject of this sketch, Cyrus A. Pierce, was born in Moscow, Maine, April 16, 1849, where he now lives and follows the business of house-carpenter. He was married August 20, 1877, to Maria L. Burleigh, by whom he has two children—Clarence B., born June 25, 1879, and Nina, born March 25, 1881. The father of Mrs. Pierce was Joshua P. Burleigh, who is yet living, and her mother, Betsey Silsby Burleigh, now deceased.

George Leach, father of William J. Leach, was born in the town of Penobscot, Maine, in the year 1806. He lived in the town of his nativity forty-one years, when he removed to Brewer, in the same State, where he died in 1874. His occupation through life was that of a farmer and ship-carpenter. In 1823 he married Betsey P. Dorr, who was born in the town of Penobscot, Maine, in 1804. She died in Brewer in 1875, aged seventy-one years. They raised a family of nine children: Bryant E. married Sarah J. Mann, and died in 1864, leaving no children. Abby D. married Charles N. Sawyer, and has seven children. Mary C. married Daniel P. Colson, and died in 1862, leaving one child. Samuel F. married Ellen M. Leach, and died in 1879, leaving one child. Silas D. married Sarah J. Sargent, and has four children. Joan M. married Albert F. Gerry, and has five children. Harriet B. married Charles A. Greene, and has two children. Acelia S. married Charles C. Dorons, and has one child. Caroline H. married Elbridge C. Patten, and has two children. Henry J. Leach, the subject of this sketch, and the sixth child, was born in the town of Penobscot, Maine, the 23d day of July, 1834. His business has been boat building. On the 21st day of January, 1866, he married Ada J. Ray, and had two children, Vallie

F. and Ernest E. Vallie F. was accidentally killed by a runaway horse May 30, 1879. Ernest E. died from disease the 7th day of January, 1879. The father of Mrs. Leach was William N. Ray, who is yet living. Her mother was Emily P. Chick Ray, who died in 1874.

William E. Southard was a native of Bloomfield, Kennebec county, Maine, where he was born in 1809. When a young man he moved to the town of St. Albans, Somerset county, where he passed the remainder of his life, and died in 1878, aged sixty-nine years and six months. He was by occupation a farmer and carpenter. His wife was Julia A. Avery, born in the town of Harmony, Somerset county, Maine, about the year 1816, to whom he was married in 1843. Mrs. Southard is living, aged sixty-five years, in the town of St. Albans. Their children were Charles A.; Daniel H. married Frances Leach and has five children. Warren A. married Roxie Rogers and has two children. Calvin B. married Lizzie Marble and has two children. Leander P. married Hattie Packard, and has no children. Charles A., the eldest child, was born in the town of St. Albans (now Hartland), the 2d day of February, 1844. He was married November 8, 1864, to Miss Abby V. Goodwin. Her father is Hiram Harris, and her mother was Sarah Vinning, both of whom are now living.

Ithamer Kenney was born in the town of Eddington, Maine, September 19, 1813, and died at the town of Holden, Maine, March 30, 1875, aged sixty-one years and six months. He was a farmer and merchant. His wife was Mary W. Orcutt, who was born in Eddington, January 29, 1826. They were married in Brewer in the year 1842, and had a family of eleven children: Charlotte E., born December 18, 1842; married George B. Churchill, of Holden, December 22, 1861, by whom she had one child, Willie E. (deceased); she died, January 18, 1864. Angeline M., born, June 19, 1844; died, March 2, 1857. Mary J., born, June 10, 1845; married Ephraim A. Gorden, of Winterport, May 6, 1868, and has six children—Annie F., Lottie M., Flora A., Charles V., Marion F., and Oscar T. Fidelia M., born, June 17, 1847; married Charles C. Tuck, of Bangor, May 20, 1874. Charles I. was born, August 4, 1848, and died the 9th of the same month. William E. was born, March 4, 1851; married Katie A. Orcutt, June 20, 1875, and has one child, Alzona M., born, February 1, 1877. George F. was born, May 30, 1853, and died, September 12, 1854. Fred I. was born, December 23, 1855; married, December 8, 1875, to Agnes F. Ernery, and has two children—Calvin A., born, January 27, 1877, and Sarah M., born, January 2, 1879. Addie E. was born, July 18, 1857, and died, December 5, 1857. Albert A. Kenney, the fifth child of Ithamer Kenney, was born in Holden, September 14, 1849. His business is that of house carpenter, at present in Brewer, under the firm name of Kenney & Pierce.

George W. Washburn was not a native of Maine, his birthplace being Boston, Massachusetts, where he was born, March 5, 1806. From there he went to Bridgeport, in the same State, where he remained until a young man, when he moved to Hebron, Maine, then to Kendukseag, and finally settled in Brewer in 1836, where he died in 1875, aged sixty-nine years and nine months. His wife was Sally Ladd, who was born in the town of Levant, Maine, July 4, 1812. Their marriage took place December 15, 1833. They had seven children: Cyrus A., born in Levant in 1835. He afterwards went with his parents to Brewer, where he now resides, aged forty-six years. His business is sash, blind, and door manufacturing. The other children were: Elsie Ann, married to Josephus L. Freeman, and has two children: Horace B., married Etta Edmonds, and has four children: Adeline M., married Allen Crocker, and has one child; Estelle, died when quite young; Emma A., married W. P. Burr; George A., resides at home, unmarried. The parents of Mrs. Washburn were among the first settlers in Bangor town.

Joseph Oakes was born in the town of Hancock, Hancock county, Maine, in the year 1815, where he lived about twenty years, when he came to Brewer. Since that time he has lived in Searsport and Bangor a few years, but returning from each place to Brewer, where he died July 22, 1881, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. By occupation he was a master ship-builder. His wife was Margaret H. Hodgdon, who was born in the town of Nobleboro, June 12, 1815. They were married December 5, 1838, and had a family of four children: George H.; Joseph D., married Abby S. Atwood, and has one child, a son, four years of age. Sophia resides at home, unmarried. Clara A. died young. George H. Oakes, the eldest son, was born in Brewer in 1839. He follows the sea for a business, and is a ship captain. He was married to Mary A. Jordan, and has four children—William W., Maggie, Harry D., and Charles D. His wife's father was Wallace Jordan, who is now deceased. Her mother was Mrs. Delia (Wiley) Jordan, who is yet living.

Enoch Brown was born in the town of Abington, Massachusetts, in the year 1781, and died in Bangor in 1838, aged fifty-seven years. He was by profession a lawyer. His wife was Malinda Padelford, born in Taunton, Massachusetts, and died in Hampden, Maine, at the age of fifty-two years. Their children were: Enoch L., died in the year 1881, aged seventy-six years. Malinda P. died when about twenty-eight years of age. Augustus J. died about 1877, aged fifty-two years, was by profession a lawyer. Rebecca D. died when nineteen years of age. Mary K. married Cyrus Emery, and had four children, all of whom, with the mother, are deceased. Sarah Ann died when ten or eleven years of age. Henry P. died aged about nineteen. Elizabeth D. married Cyrus Emery, and has three sons, all living, as follows: Isaiah S., Augustus J., and Cyrus. Samuel W. Brown married Miss Kettle, and has one son living and three deceased. James S. died about three years since; was a prominent lawyer.

John Emery was born in Hampden, Maine, where he lived and died. He raised a family consisting of: John, who was drowned at sea; Benjamin (deceased); William (deceased); Daniel (deceased); Cyrus (deceased); Sarah married Mr. Seaman, and is deceased; another sister married Mr. Pomeroy, and is also dead. Cyrus is the only member of the family now living.

The father of Hugh O'Brien was born in Ireland in the year 1822. When about twenty-three years of age he emigrated to America and settled in Bangor, Maine, where he lived nine years, after which he removed to Brewer, where he died in 1870, aged forty-eight years. Before leaving Ireland, in 1845, he was married to Mary Dougherty. Hugh O'Brien was born in Ireland, and when an infant was brought by his parents to this country, where Mr. O'Brien, sr., has since been engaged in the manufacture of brick. Their other children were: Martin, who resides at home, unmarried; Thomas, living in Leadville, unmarried; Patrick, also living in Leadville, unmarried; Katie, resides in Boston, unmarried; Agnes and Nellie, both at home. Hugh O'Brien was married to Katie Hines, daughter of George Hines, of Bangor. He is engaged in brick manufacture.

Alpheus Robinson was born in the town of Limington, Maine, and when quite young moved to Brewer. He was a farmer and seafaring man, and died at Charleston, South Carolina. His wife was Lydia Tibbetts, who was born in the town of Brewer, where she died about 1871, aged about eighty years. William, the eldest child, was born in Brewer and is now sixty-seven years of age. His life occupation has been farming. He was married to Caroline Hammond, and has no children. The other members of Alpheus Robinson's family were: Mary, married to Harrison Bates, and has three children; Sarah, died single, about twenty-five years ago; Alpheus, married Hattie Durham, and has three children. William Robinson is a Democrat in his political faith. He occupies a fine residence about one-half mile from the ferry village.

Z. C. Palmer, born in Nobleboro, March 22, 1843, was the fifth child of E. R. Palmer. His father was born in Nobleboro, Lincoln county, Maine, in 1805, and in 1859 moved to Aroostook county. After remaining there one year, he moved to Brewer, where he lived until his death in 1868. His business all his life was that of a house and ship carpenter. He married Sarah Dunbar, who was born in 1809 in Nobleboro. She still survives her husband at the age of seventy-eight years, and lives in Brewer. Mr. Z. C. Palmer, in 1871, married Charlotte A. Ware, daughter of James M. Ware, deceased, and has three children: Nellie G., Gertrude A., and Artell E., all residing at their father's home, one and a half miles from ferry village. Mr. Palmer's brothers and sisters are as follows: H. H. (deceased), married Mary Jane Maddocks, and had two children, neither of whom is living; Emeline A., married J. Lishman Clark, and has seven children living and one dead; B. A., married J. W. Chatman, and has two children; Orlando A., married Sarah Dermutt; Sarah Jane is the wife of David Tarr; B. W., married Etta M. Jordan, and has had two children, one of whom is still living; S. K., married Eva Tibbetts, and has two children.

Daniel Robinson was born in Saco, Maine, April 4, 1772, and came to the Penobscot in about the year 1794. In 1805 he was married to Mary Kenney, daughter of Henry and Mary Kenney. Henna Kenney was born in Berwick, January 14, 1745, and married Mary Book, of Marshfield. To them were born two children, John T., and Mary. The children of Daniel Robinson were: Almira C., Henry K., Susan, Elizabeth, Mary, Mary (second), Daniel Jr., Joseph, Isaac, Charles I., and an infant, which died unnamed. Of the above Henry K. is the only one now living. He was the second child, and was born in Orrington (now Brewer) October 14, 1807, and married Adaline E. Trafton, who bore one son, John H., and died. For a second wife he married Sarah G. Libbey, and has two daughters, Addie E. and Mary Abby, and one son, James W. The latter died from poison, taken by mistake. His second wife died and he married Ellen F. McClintock, of Canada, and has had three children: Sarah E., Susan W. (deceased), and Henry W. Henry K. Robinson was postmaster in the year 1845; was president of an agricultural society four years, also captain of a cavalry company two or three years. He is a member of the Hammond street church at Bangor; in politics is a Democrat.

Peter Littlefield was born in Prospect, Waldo county, Maine, in 1799, where he lived until his death in 1874, engaged in farming. He married Charlotte Holbrook, who was born in 1799, in Stratford, New Hampshire. She died in 1866. Their children were: Loisa S., who is the wife of William C. Perkins, has five children, one deceased; Goodwin, who died at the age of twenty-three, unmarried; A. D., who married Elizabeth W. Stuart, and has two children living: Mary E., residing in Massachusetts; James H., who married Clara Gunn, lives at the old homestead; Martha J., who died at the age of thirty-seven years. John Littlefield, the second child of Peter Littlefield, was born August 20, 1825, and devoted his life to ship-carpentering. He is now a dealer in ship timber. In 1850 he married Lizzie Hitchborn, by whom he had one child, Freeman H., who was lost at sea at the age of twenty years. For his second wife he married Julia A. Potter, daughter of Joseph Potter, deceased, who was born in Jackson in 1839, and has had two children: John Elmer, and Freeman. Mr. Littlefield has not taken the time from his business to hold office of any kind. He is an out-and-out Republican, and has a good residence in the village of Brewer.

Cornelius Dougherty was born in Ireland in 1795. He came with his wife to America in 1848, and lived in this county until his death in 1858, engaged in farming. His wife's name was Bridget McCormack. She was born in 1790, and died in 1855. Their children are: Patrick, born in Ireland, settled in this county, and married Mary Galaher, by whom he had five children; both himself and his wife are dead. Margaret married a Mr. Galaher, and died leaving two children. Frank married Ann Judge, and has six children. Hugh came to this country with the rest of the family, but his whereabouts and history are now not known. Agnes, wife of Thomas McGuire, died leaving no children. John Dougherty was married in this county to Alice McAvoy, August 5, 1855, and has three children: Hugh J., Rose Anna, and William T., all living at home. Mr.

Dougherty lives on an improved farm of one hundred and fifty acres, furnished with good buildings. He is a Democrat, but has held no political offices. He is a member of the Catholic church, under Father McSweeney.

The father of Frank S. Gratien, Pierre Salaberry, was born in France, in 1795, where he died in 1855. His business was blacksmithing. His wife, Jeanette Elicade, was born in France, and died in 1866. Frank S. Gratien was born in France in 1827, and when about twenty-two years of age emigrated to America and settled at St. Peters, Newfoundland, where he remained a short time. He then lived in different places until 1855, when he settled in the place where he now resides. He is by occupation a blacksmith, stonemason, and brick manufacturer. He was married in 1869 to Mary E. Trask, of Nobleboro, and has two children: Nettie A., and Effie L., both of whom reside at home. By a previous marriage his wife had four children. Mr. Gratien served in the army three years and seven months.

Meldon Nealy was born in the town of Ellsworth, March 26, 1849. His early life was passed in Ellsworth, Eddington, Brewer, and Bangor, and he finally settled permanently at Brewer, where he is engaged in farming and as a lumberman. He was married May 13, 1868, to Rachel D. Dresser, and has two children: Charles A., and Carrie G. The father of Mrs. Nealy was Samuel P. Dresser; her mother Eley C. Ward, before marriage. Mr. Dresser died some twenty years since.

Isaac Green was born in Madison, Somerset county, Maine, and now lives in Fairfield, Maine, at the age of seventy-eight years. He has devoted his life to farming and blacksmithing. He married Carissa Lovell, who died about twelve years ago, aged about fifty-five years. Their family consisted of the following children: William and David, deceased; Isaac, married Lucy Whitman, of Skowhegan, who died leaving him with four children—William, Lucy, Augusta, and Isaiah; Hannah married Oliver Noble, and at her death left six children; Alvin married Augusta Knox and has four children; David, now dead, married a Miss Wyman and had one child; Henry married Miss Knox, and has four children; Almira married Mr. Lawrence, and has one child. Charles A. Green was born in Madison, Maine, September 24, 1826. After living ten years in Madison, four years in Skowhegan and ten years in Bangor, he removed to Brewer, where he now resides. His life has been spent in lumbering, brick-making and farming. He married, November 10, 1849, Rebecca M. Gorham, who died leaving one son now living in Oregon. For his second wife he married Harriet B. Leach, April 17, 1857, and has by this union two children—Rebecca T., aged twenty-one years, and Walter, aged fourteen years. Mr. Green has been a constable in Brewer for fourteen years, Street Commissioner five years, and for five years was captain of a cavalry company in Bangor. He has a fine residence at Brewer.

Francis Burton Hunter was born in Haddington, Scotland, in 1784. When about seven years of age, he went to Hull, England, where he served an apprenticeship as sail-maker. He then went to sea as sail-maker in the whale fishery, where he remained about six years. On his return he opened a hotel at Hull, and afterwards had one in London, and still later at Wapping. He died at the Sail-makers' Almshouse, Bow Road, Middlesex, London, England, aged eighty-four years.

Walter Francis Hunter was born in Hull, England, in a public house called the George and Dragon, South End. On the 4th of July, 1818, he went to London, and when ten years of age went to sea, where he served seven years in the coal trade, and then sailed around the world. He settled in Brewer in 1853. In 1842 he was married to Caroline E. Boggis, who died the 19th of May, 1866, leaving one child. Mr. Hunter was again married in 1866 to Sarah Lowe, of Guilford, Maine, but has no children by this union. His son, by the first wife, is Walter John Boggis Hunter, who has three children: Caroline, John B., and Ella A. Three died in infancy. Mr. Hunter, Sr., is by trade a ship rigger, and has a rigging loft and dwelling-house on Main street, opposite the cemetery, in Brewer. This property he has accumulated in fifteen years by leaving off rum and tobacco. His first wife was born in Brumly-near-Bow, Middlesex county, England. Mr. Hunter has been a shipmaster of some of the largest vessels that sailed in those days from England.

John Conner was born in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he lived until about twenty-four years of age, when he removed to Penobscot, Maine, where he died in 1824, aged forty-six years. He was by trade a master carpenter. His wife was Deborah Westcott, born in Castine, Maine, where she lived until her marriage. They lived some twenty years at Penobscot, and then removed to Surry, where she died at the age of seventy-two years. Francis A. was the seventh child, and was born March 25, 1818, in Penobscot. When twelve years of age he went to sea, which he followed until twenty-three years of age. He then located in Surry, and from thence went to Ellsworth, and finally settled in Brewer, where he now resides. He has been a practicing physician for the past fifteen years. He was married to Miss A. T. Young, in 1845, and by this union has eight children: Frances D., Joseph A. (deceased), Annetta (deceased), John (deceased), N. H., one that died in infancy, Estelle (deceased), and Louis W. (deceased). Dr. Conner also has a store containing a good assortment of drugs. The names of his brothers and sisters are: John (deceased); Rhoda, married Mark Patten, and died, leaving seven children; Lydia, married Amos Arnold, and died leaving five children; Charles, married Mary Blaisdel, and died leaving two children; Sylvanus, married Abigail Patridge, and left three children; Louis W. married Mary Higgins, of Hampden, and has one daughter; Harriet N. married Andrew Haskell, and has three children; Nancy J. married Samuel Peck, and died leaving three children; Jeremiah married Annie French, and left five children.

Oliver Farrington was born in the town of Orrington, and came to Brewer, now Holden, where he lived about twenty-five years, when he moved to the present town of Brewer, where he passed the remainder of his days, and died September 19, 1863, aged sixty-six years. He followed farming through life. His wife was Hannah Ryder, who was born in Orrington, near Brewer, March 31, 1804. They were married November 11, 1822, and now reside at the homestead. Henry Martyn Farrington, the oldest child, was born at Brewer, January 12, 1824. His business is farming and brickmaking. He was married April 18, 1861, to Deborah Baker, who died December 6, 1865, leaving two children, Jennie L. and Henry B. Mrs. Farrington was again married September 29, 1869, to Susan D. Colburn. He is a church member, and in politics a Republican. The other children of Oliver Farrington were: Joseph Ryder, who married Ellen E. Holyoke, by whom he had six children; he is now Superintendent of the State Reform School. Sarah E. married Rev. George A. Perkins, and has three children. Lucy lives in Salem, New Hampshire. Clarissa lives at home, unmarried. Charles O. married Sarah B. Chamberlain, of Brewer, and has had five children, two now living. Edward P. married Georgiana Hall. George S. married Laura Jackson; has had two children, one of whom is now living. Caroline A. married Myron W. Jones, of Denver, Colorado, and has no children.

The father of Rev. Clarence A. Beckwith was born in Charlemont, Franklin county, Massachusetts, in 1823. After living there twenty-nine years he moved to Victor, Clinton county, Michigan, where he now resides, a farmer and manufacturer. He married Sarah Upton, who was born in his native town in 1821. They have three children, viz: Flora A., who married J. Emmet Jameison, has two children, and lives at Muskegon, Michigan; Osmond L., who married Miss Allie Green, and lives at Victor, Michigan; Clarence A., the second child, was born July 21, 1849, and at the age of twelve moved to the West with his parents. He spent two years at the seminary in New Haven, and one year at the seminary in Bangor, then became pastor of the Congregational Church at Brewer, where he has since remained. He married V. Eugenie Lober, daughter of Frederick and Julia (Sider) Lober, September 25, 1878. Mr. Beckwith is a graduate of Olivet College, Olivet, Michigan, and has held his present pastorate four years.

Charles V. Lancil was born in Bordeaux, France, and emigrating to America, settled in Truro, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, where he married Ruth Paine, by whom he had eight children. After living at various places he died at Bangor at the age of fifty-two years, and his wife died at the same place at same age. Their children were as follows: Thomas, died some ten years ago; Mary, died twenty-five years ago; Betsey, resides at the old home in Bangor; Asa T., lives at Dorchester, Massachusetts, and is a cooper; Captain James P., is a shipmaster at Bangor; Ephraim P., is a cistern manufacturer at Bangor; George W. died thirty years ago. Captain Charles V. Lancil, the fourth child, was born in Chatham, Massachusetts, September 16, 1808, and settled in Bangor, where he now resides, at the age of seventy-three years. His business is that of a sea captain. He married Louisa Hartford about 1836, and has had five children: Amanda, died at the age of two years; Albert; lived to be three years, and Franklin, six months of age; Nellie, is the wife of Warren Pierce; Mary, married

James L. Grant, and has three children—Alice, Annie, and Charles. Captain Lancil has a good residence on Main street, Brewer.

BURLINGTON.

Burlington is a large but as yet sparsely settled town, lying twenty-five miles from Bangor at their nearest points of approach. It is west and northwest of the northwest corner of Hancock county, and only twelve miles distant in its southern part from Washington county. It is a regular parallelogram, all its boundaries being straight lines. It has only the regulation township width, six miles, and is a township and a half, or nine miles, in length. It thus comprises an area of one and a half surveyed townships, fifty-four square miles, or 34,560 acres, many of which, however, are covered with water. The town is in the oldest survey of the middle section of the county, and its lines are not run precisely with the cardinal points of the compass.

It is bounded on the north by the still larger town of Lincoln, on the east by township three and a strip of Hancock county, on the south by No. 2, Grand Falls Plantation, and on the west by Lowell, which is in its eastern part of the same length as Burlington.

Upon the south line of the town lies the Saponic Pond; upon the west line Eskutassis Pond; and upon the northern part of the east line, near the northeast corner of the town, the Madagascal Pond, most of which is within the limits of Burlington. Saponic Pond has an area of about a square mile; Eskutassis something more; and Madagascal something less. About a mile and a quarter north of east from the second of these is Little Eskutassis Pond, about a "quarter-section" in size, with a small stream connecting it with its bigger sister, and another "run" of two miles' length coming in from the northwest corner of the town. Through the southern part of Saponic comes the Passadumkeag Stream, here a quite respectable body of water, which flows for a little more than a mile through the southwest angle of Burlington and thence through Lowell and Passadumkeag, by an exceedingly winding course, to the Penobscot. The north part of Saponic Pond receives a small tributary from the central southern part of the town. From the Madagascal Pond to the Passadumkeag flows the Madagascal Stream in a general north and south direction, making a course of nearly ten miles between the two. At the exact geographical centre of the town it receives a small branch from the northwest.

The southwestern quarter of Burlington is remarkably well settled for a town so far in the interior. Burlington village and post-office are in this region, near the cross-roads half a mile from the west town line, and a little more than two miles from the south line. They are at the terminus of the stage line from Burlington to Olemon, on the European & North American Railway, which supplies the town with its only public facilities of travel at present. The bulk of the population of the town lies within a distance of two miles each way, north and south, from these cross-roads. Upon the roads, within a mile and a half of this point, are the two cemeteries of the town and three school-houses, and at the village itself is a union church. The north and south road here is the principal one, and the only one that goes entirely through the town in any direction. It begins at the Passadumkeag Stream, half a mile from the southwest corner of Burlington, runs nearly due north to the village, and thence northeasterly to a point a mile and a half from the northeast corner, where it leaves the town for Lincoln. It thus describes nearly a diagonal of the town. Half a mile southeast of the Little Eskutassis Pond a road branches off to the northwestward, and joins the principal north and south road through the eastern part of Lowell. Near the junction of the roads in Burlington is another school, and two others no great way north of the junction of a road joining the road into Lowell by a northerly and northwesterly route with Lincoln post-office, on the European & North American. From the Passadumkeag Stream in the Allen tract, two miles southeast of Saponic Pond, a highway of some importance comes up from the southeast, by the head of the pond, to Burlington village, for a mile south of that village running nearly parallel to and within a short distance of the other road to the Passadumkeag. At the south end of the mile, upon three roads, is one of the cemeteries, and here a short road runs off into Lowell, joining the highway through Lowell village about half a mile west of the Eskutassis Stream. The same road in Lowell, running thence to Olemon Station, is reached more directly from Burlington post-office by a west road to East Lowell; and this is the stage route. The other roads of the town are mostly short "plug" roads from the great north and south highway, accommodating neighborhoods and isolated settlements.

Burlington has no railway station, and but one post-office as yet, which accommodates the people of Grand Falls Plantation as well as its own.

The first civilized settlers got upon the Burlington tract in 1824. Tristram Hurd is said to have been the pioneer, and from him the region received its first name, "Hurd's Ridge." It is asserted in a notice below, however, that Edmund Page came to Burlington in 1821, and settled on Bingham land. Three or four years after him came his brother Caleb, and their cousin Mrs. Page. The venerable Deacon Philip Page, still living in a hale old age near Burlington, came with his father Caleb from Lowell in 1825, being a boy of sixteen. Another settler of the next year was Thomas Page, son of Philip and Hannah Chadbourne Page, then a man of about thirty years, but a veteran of eighty-seven when he died at last, June 25, 1878, in Burlington, its oldest citizen. Moses Peaslee came very near him, however, in both dates of arrival and of death. He was an emigrant of 1825, and departed this life January 2, 1878. Among the settlers of 1827 was Theodore Taylor, who became a colonel of the State militia in 1837, and survived until March 28, 1879.

Within less than eight years after the first settler invaded the forest hereaway, the population of this tract had become sufficient to warrant their demand for incorporation as a town. Under the name of Burlington, it was consequently incorporated, March 8, 1832.

At the next Federal census, that of 1840, the new town had 350 inhabitants. Ten years thereafter, the number had increased by 131, or to 481. In 1860 there was manifest a further increase of 97, the whole of the people in Burlington being then 578. The population in 1870 was 553, and in 1880, 536.

The town had 118 polls in 1860; in 1870, 120; and in 1880, 128.

The estates of the town were valued in these years, respectively, at $64,734, $91,507, and $89,041.

The people of Burlington are chiefly engaged in lumbering and farming. There is still a great deal of valuable timber standing in this tract, and much of it goes down the Passadumkeag and other streams to the Penobscot, to be worked up into lumber. Manufactures within the town are as yet limited to the work of three blacksmiths and one engaged in woodwork and repairs. Four or five persons are engaged in keeping general stores in the town; a hotel is kept by Jeremiah Page, and there is one resident physician. There is no resident clergyman, the Union (mainly Congregational) church being ministered to by occasional supplies.

The people of Burlington have more than ordinary intelligence, and manifest considerable talent for organization. The ladies of the town have a "Burlington Benevolent Association," of which Mrs. Nancy Carey is President. A temperance "Reform Club" has also been formed, over which Mr. George Witham presides. The "Eskutassis Grange" of Patrons of Husbandry was lately in existence here; but does not seem now to be actively working.

The town officers for the last year reported were: Thomas W. Porter, Andrew W. Page, Thomas Shorey, Selectmen; Simeon C. Page, Town Clerk; Jason L. Pierce, Treasurer; Thomas Shorey, Joseph W. Bradbury, C. Willis White, Constables; Joseph W. Bradbury, Collector; Jason L. Pierce, Andrew W. Page, George M. Page, School Committee; Colonel J. W. Porter, removed to Bangor, Jeremiah Page, Quorum; Thomas W. Porter, Trial, Justices.

Thomas W. Porter is also Postmaster of Burlington.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Alpheus Hayden, father of John W. Hayden, was the oldest son of Richard Hayden, who was the third son of Richard Hayden, the common ancestor of the family in this State. The stock all sprang from Richard and Mary Hayden, who were born in Braintree, Massachusetts, and about 1735 moved into the town of Gray, before the Revolution; from there into the town of Madison in 1800, where they died in 1818 and 1828. They had the following sons and daughters: Elisha, Jonathan, Richard, David, Clement, Jedediah, Enoch, and Daniel. There were two daughters in the family—Thankful (married to John Tenny) and Sally (married to David H. Davis). Elisha, the eldest son, married a Noble, and had the following sons and daughters: Samuel, Nathan, and Elisha. Samuel died in New Brunswick, and Nathan and Elisha died in Ohio with their father. The girls were Mary, Lucy, and Anna. Mary went to the Provinces and died there. Lucy married a Delano, and died in New York. Anna married Thomas Elliot and died in Levant. Jonathan, the second son, married Lydia Young. Their children were Jonathan, James, David, Edith, and Lydia. Jonathan married Nancy Thompson, and moved to Wisconsin. James married a Sawyer, and died in Illinois. David married Larony Hayden, and died in Wisconsin. His wife married again to Isaac Cone. The two daughters, Edith and Lydia, married brothers, Daniel and Rufus Elliot, and are all dead. Lydia married a second time, with Henry Moor, buried him and died in California. Richard, the third son, married Diana White, and the following were the names of their children: Alpheus, Henry, Elias, White, Richard, Hiram, Olive, Lucy, Larony, and Eleanor. Alpheus married Hannah, daughter of Butler Lombard, and had the following sons and daughters: Lowell, John W., Lewis, Rachel, Jemima, and Nancy N. He moved into a plantation called Long Ridge, the twenty-ninth of March, 1821. It was then a wilderness, he being the first settler, some fifty miles from Bangor, in a north-easterly direction. In 1837 the plantation was incorporated into a town by the name of Huntressville, and afterwards changed to Lowell, in honor of Lowell Hayden, he being the first male child ever born in the place (July 16, 1821). He died July 26, 1845. Alpheus

Hayden took an active part in incorporating the town, and was one of its leading men for a long time. In 1852 he moved into Lincoln, and there died, aged ninety years and seven months. John W. married Eunice P. Brown April 8, 1852, and had the following sons and daughters: Silas E., Josiah W., Henry H., Frank, Ella L., Saville M., Anna F., and Ida M. He moved into Burlington in 1848, was Chairman of the Board of Selectmen in 1857-58-59, Treasurer and Collector in 1858 and 1859. His business is farming now and has long been. Lewis lives in Lincoln; he married Elizabeth Strickland. Rachel married Joshua Doan, and lives in Wisconsin. Jemima married David Moor, and is dead. Nancy N. married Jonathan Darling, and lives in Lowell.

Deacon Philip Page, of Burlington, is a son of Caleb and Nancy (Crockett) Page, who came from New Hampshire and settled on that part of the Bingham Purchase now Lowell. He was born in Concord, New Hampshire, and Mrs. Page in Gorham, Maine. He, with a few others, built the first mill on the Passadumkeag River at Lowell. Mr. Page died January 17, 1852, and his wife soon after on April 14, 1854. Their surviving children are Mrs. Susan Chase, of Peabody, Massachusetts; Samuel C. Page, of Burlington; Mrs. Caroline Hall, of Portland, Maine; Mrs. Mary Morrell, of Winterport, Maine, and Henry H. Page, of New London, Wisconsin. Deacon Philip Page, the subject of this sketch, was born June 25, 1809, in Conway, New Hampshire. In 1825, when sixteen years of age, he came to Burlington. In 1841 he married Miss Hannah Moody, of Brunswick, Maine. By her he had five children, viz: Albert C., of Burlington; Hannah C., deceased; Caleb A., of Massachusetts; Nancy, deceased, and Andrew W. now at home. Deacon Page has long been connected with the Congregational church here, and is now an honored officer in it. He has a fine place near the village, one of the prettiest in town.

Among the earliest settlers in the town of Burlington were three Pages, two brothers, Caleb and Edmund, and a cousin of theirs, Thomas Page. For the history of one of these families, see preceding sketch of Philip Page. Jeremiah Page is a son of Thomas Page. He was born June 20, 1812, in Conway, New Hampshire. He came to Burlington with his father in 1825. After becoming of age he engaged in farming and lumbering, in which he continued until within a few years. About ten years since he engaged in trade at the Corners. He lived on a farm until 1864, when he moved to Burlington Corner, where he has one of the finest places in town. Since he came here he has entertained the traveling public, there being no other hotel in town. Mr. Page has long been one of the prominent men of the town, and held the office of chairman of the town board for many years. He has long been and is now a justice of the peace.

Mr. Page married Margaret J. Clark, daughter of James and Sarah Clark. They have had twelve children, of whom nine are living, viz: Alonzo R., of Drew Plantation; Thomas D., on the old homestead; Edward S., Anoka, Minnesota; Charles H., of Anoka; Simeon C., of Burlington; Fred. N., Utopia, Canada; George M., of Burlington; Lizzie E., and Marcia H., at home. They lost three in infancy.

Mr. Norman Page, living in the town of Burlington, is a son of Thomas Page, who came here in 1825. His history may be seen in part in the sketch of Jeremiah Page. Norman Page was born February 19, 1819, in Conway, New Hampshire. He came to Burlington with his father when six years old. On becoming of age he bought of his father a part of the old homestead, where he has since resided. He has erected most of the good set of farm buildings now on the place, and has now one of the best farms in town. He married Miss Hannah Springer, daughter of John and Eliza Springer (nee Eliza Ford). They have five children, viz: Angie F., Leslie T., Agnes E., Earle S., and Grace A.

The representative of the Page family who first settled in this county was Mr. Edmund Page, who came to Burlington in 1821, and settled on land at that time owned by a Mr. Bingham. He was born March 4, 1767, in Fryeburg, Maine. He married Miss Nancy Ingalls, who was born in 1767, and died in 1845. The only surviving member of their family is Mr. Jonathan Page, now of Burlington. Mr. Page was deputy sheriff for forty years. He died February 24, 1849. Mr. Jonathan Page was born February 19, 1798. He married Miss Ruth Eastman; they had eleven children, viz: Stilson E., deceased; Comfort E., deceased; Harriet J., Nancy I., Lydia B., deceased; Martha, Thomas P., Mary E., Randall H. Hannah, and Merena O. Mrs. Page has been a very successful doctress for thirty years, and is widely known as such. She lives near the village and attends to her farm.

Dr. S. W. Bragg, of Burlington, was born May 30, 1853. He is a son of J. M. Bragg, of Bradley. His grandfather, David Bragg, was a native of China, Maine, and one of the first settlers. Josiah M. Bragg married Eliza DeBec, of Clifton, Maine. They had four children, viz: S. W. Bragg; Francis V., now in Bradley; R. Ami, and Ceneth M., deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Bragg are still living in Bradley. S. W. Bragg, the oldest son of this family, graduated at the Eastern Maine Conference Seminary in 1876. He then entered the office of J. N. Norcross, M. D., of Oldtown, and studied there three years, when he entered the medical department of the State University of Vermont, from which he graduated in 1879. The following September he came to Burlington and located where he is now practicing.

Mr. David Moore, of Burlington, who came to this town in 1838, is a son of Henry Moore, of Windham, Maine. Henry Moore married Anna Varney, of Windham. They lived in Windham and Otisfield. Mrs. Moore died in Windham, and Mr. Moore was killed, or so injured that he died from the effects of being thrown from a carriage by a runaway horse. They had eight children, namely: David; Jonathan, deceased; Alvin, now in Alton, Maine; Comfort, deceased; Parmelia, wife of George Libbey, of Gorham, Maine; Asenath, widow of the late Eben Haley, of Massachusetts; Levi, of Burlington; Edwin, in Michigan.

David Moore was born July 19, 1812, in Windham. He lived in Windham and Otisfield until of age, and a few years afterwards came here to Penobscot county. He lived in Lowell six years, then came to Burlington, where he now lives about one mile and a half from the village. He owns one hundred and sixty acres of land. He married Jemima Hayden, of Lowell. They have seven children, viz: Benjamin, of Burlington; Harrison, of Michigan; Sivilla, of Lincoln; Blake, now of Minnesota; Arletta, wife of Edward Page, of Michigan; Anna F., and Bertha C. Mr. Moore has held various offices of trust in town, such as constable, surveyor of highways, etc.

Mr. Benjamin F. Bowers, of Lincoln, was born in Lowell, Maine, September 16, 1825. He is a son of John and Phebe Bowers. They had eight children—Benjamin; Eliza, wife of David Lowe, of Lincoln; Orrin, now in Easton, Maine; Edwin, Burlington; Rebecca, deceased; Wethy, wife of Joseph Crowell, of Dexter; John W., deceased; Catharine, now Mrs. Turner, of Burlington. Mr. Bowers died May 5, 1867. Mrs. Bowers is still living in Burlington. Mr. Benjamin Bowers settled on the farm where he now lives in 1846, when twenty-one years of age. He felled the trees and cleared up the farm where he now lives. There were two or three other clearings in this part of the town. Mr. Bowers married for his first wife Marion Lowe, of Lincoln. To this couple were born two children—Frank and Freeland. Mrs. Bowers died March 28, 1867. Mr. Bowers married for his second wife Arvilla Buck, of Lincoln, with whom he is now living. She has three children—Helen, Marion, and Hattie. Mr. Bowers has one hundred and thirty acres in his farm. He has served several years as Assessor, and is well known.

Edwin Bowers is a son of John Bowers, a sketch of whose life may be found in that of Benjamin Bowers. The younger Bowers was born May 5, 1837, in Lowell, Maine. He came to Burlington with his father when six years of age. He now lives on the old homestead which his father cleared. He married Belle Brawn, daughter of Warren Brawn, of Aroostook county. They have one daughter—Flora. Mr. Bowers has one hundred acres of land—the old home farm—about nine miles from Burlington.

Mr. James Edes, of Burlington, is a son of Isaac and Lydia Edes, of Guilford, Maine. Isaac and Lydia had nine children, of whom five are living—Thomas, of Parkman, Maine; Lydia, wife of A. Tucker, of Bangor; Susan, deceased; Jane, deceased; Emma, wife of Charles C. Kenney, of Bangor; James; Isaac, deceased; John M., deceased; May A., now Mrs. Harlow, of Parkman. Isaac Edes died in 1874. Mrs. Edes was born September 19, 1832, in Guilford, Maine. He learned the trade of blacksmith and has always followed that business. He came to Burlington in 1872. He had previously lived in Lowell. Mr. Edes has a farm of seventy-five acres out of the village about one mile. He married Permeha M. Barker, daughter of Noah and Tabitha Barker, of Burlington. They have five children—Carrie H., wife of Charles E. Taylor, of this town; Frederiek M., at home; William B.; Agnes M.; Edwin C. Mr. Edes has served several years as Town Treasurer, Town Clerk, and Selectman of his town, both in Burlington and Lowell. In 1873 and 1874 he represented his class in the Législature.

Mrs. Mary McCorison, widow of the late George McCorison (nee Mary S. Page) was married May 7, 1861. He was a son of William McCorison, who settled in Burlington in 1841. The father was born in Belden, Maine, in 1796, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He was a wheelwright by trade. He married Sarah Lowell, who was born in 1801 and died in 1864. The only surviving members of their family are Maria A. Strickland, Elizabeth M. Page, and Sarah J. Page. He died in Burlington in 1858. Mr. George McCorison died April 2, 1875. He had three children, Nellie M., Edwin S., and Willie E. Mr. McCorison was a farmer and house-carpenter.

CARMEL.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES.

Carmel, one of the old towns of the county, originally known as Plantation No. 3, Second Range, is the second town west of Bangor, in the same range, and included within the same parallels on the north and south boundaries. It is one of the regular territorial formations in the county, the limits and dimensions of the town being precisely those of the township, and comprising thirty-six square miles, or 23,040 acres, almost every acre of which is improved or improvable. No part of it is covered with water, except that touched by running streams and the half square mile or more in the northwest corner, which forms the bed of the Etna and Carmel and the Parker Ponds. The town is separated from Waldo county by only the breadth of Newburg, a little over six miles; and from Bangor the width of Hermon, or six miles. It is bounded on the east by the latter town, on the south by the former, on the west by Etna, and the north, for equal distances, by Levant and Stetson.

The waters of Carmel are the Sowadabscook Stream, which has its source in Parker Pond, and flows in a southeasterly course to the centre of the town and beyond to a point about equidistant (one and three-eighths miles) from the east and south lines of the town, whence it bends and makes its way out in a northeasterly course into Hermon, and so on to Hermon Pond and the Penobscot. Half a mile southeast of the Carmel depot, near the geographical centre of the town, the Sowadabscook receives the Kingsley Stream from Newburg, and is thereafter a quite broad and respectable brook. The Kingsley receives three affluents in this town—one hard upon the south boundary, which comes in from Etna, where it heads; another a mile north of this, also of Etna birth and with a tiny tributary also heading in that town, and running a mile or so in Carmel to a mouth near the middle of the west line; the third is on the east side of the Kingsley, with its headwaters near Ruggles Place, and its mouth half a mile south of the second. In the north part of Newburg head two branches of another tributary of the Sowadabscook, entering a mile and a quarter below the Kingsley Stream, the westernmost of them taking in a very short "run" before the union of the two. A few hundred yards above its mouth, about the same distance from the mouth of the Kingsley, and again a little more than half a mile above the depot, the Sowadabscook has three tributary brooks, the middle of which is longest, coming in from the corner of Stetson, and itself receiving a rivulet on the west side and near the town line. In the northeast part of the town are several small waters, which unite to form a brook running into the Kenduskeag Stream, near its debouchure into the Sowadabscook. In the opposite, or northwest corner, lies the Etna and Carmel Pond. This, as its name implies, is partly in the town of Etna, and a small portion reaches into Stetson. It is a mile in extremest length, which is at the lower part, and a little more than half a mile broad. Parker Pond, south of the Etna and Carmel, is practically a part of the same sheet, but is somewhat separated from the other by two islands of some size, which divide the uniting waters into three channels. The area of Parker is less than half that of its twin sister.

This survey or "waterscape" exhibits Carmel as a remarkably well-watered town.

It is not less excellently provided with roads. Three highways cross it throughout, from east to west; another describes pretty nearly a diagonal from the neighborhood of the southeast corner to a point a little below Parker Pond; and six north and south roads,—none of them, however, crossing the town continuously,—with some shorter routes, abundantly supply it with this kind of travelling facilities. In addition, between seven and eight miles of the Maine Central Railroad lie in Carmel. It enters about three-fourths of a mile below the exit of the Sowadabscook Stream into Hermon, crosses that water at a mile's distance, runs thence north of west to the depot near Carmel post-office, and on northwesterly by the hamlet known as Damascus (which has no post-office), to its departure into Etna, close by the bank of Parker Pond. A little more than a mile south of its track, and somewhat further to the southeast of the depot, is the locality called Ruggles Place, which also has no post-office of its own. The North Carmel post-office is about three miles north of the Central track, and nearly in the northeast corner of the town.

Carmel is well supplied with school-houses, which generally stand at or near the junction of roads. There is a cemetery at North Carmel, another at Carmel Station, and another toward the southeast corner of the town, on the Newport and Hampden road, running southeasterly through Ruggles Place from Carmel post-office. A number of shingle, saw, carding, and other mills are scattered over the town. The Town House is in Carmel village, and the Town Farm is on the Bangor and Plymouth road, a mile west of that place.

The surface of this town is generally level, and along the streams are some fine tracts of alluvial land, a small part of which is swampy. The town was originally covered with a dense growth of pine timber, some of which remained until quite of late years.

THE ORIGINAL OWNER.

The township which forms Carmel was bought of the State of Massachusetts on the 2d of March, 1795, by the Hon. Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, under whose auspices the early settlements were made by Paul Ruggles and others. He seems to have been a man not only of large property, but of reasonably large and liberal views, and a good name to associate with the beginnings of a populous and prosperous community.

THE FIRST SETTLER

in Carmel was the Rev. Paul Ruggles, oldest son of Edward Ruggles, of Hardwick, Worcester county, Massachusetts, where he lived until his twenty-sixth year. He there married Mercy Dexter in 1796, and early in the spring of the second year thereafter they pushed their way alone into the Maine wilderness. An ox-sled was sent ahead of them, bearing their little stock of furniture and household goods. They followed in a sleigh (the snow was still on the ground, although spring had come) some days after, and after a cold, rough journey through the deep woods and over the primitive roads, reached the Penobscot country at Hampden. They made their way thence into the present tract of Hermon, where a settler named Garland had built one of the first cabins, if not the first one, in that town; and with his family the young pioneers spent some weeks, until the weather became more settled and such as to allow them to go on to their own destination further in the wilderness interior. The rest of the story is well told in the number of the Gospel Banner and Family Visitant for March 17, 1866, by a correspondent who visited Mrs. Ruggles and her descendants that year. He says:

Mr. Garland's dwelling was about the only human habitation in Her

mon. Here Mr. Ruggles and party remained till about the first of May, when, as no road had been constructed to Township No. 2 [3], now Carmel, the place of their destination, they built a boat of a log, called a "dug-out," in which they placed their effects, and, launching it into the Sowadabscook, paddled up stream into the central portion of the township, and landed near the mouth of a beautiful, clear stream, swarming with trout, which empties into the Sowadabscook, and which they called Ruggles Brook. Here they built them at first a log house directly in the midst of the wilderness. Subsequently they erected a plank dwelling.

Moose, deer, beaver, etc., were abundant. Mrs. Ruggles says she can remember many circumstances that took place distinctly, because they were of such a nature as to impress themselves on her mind indelibly. For instance, she awoke one morning just before sunrise in the summer, and saw a very large owl sitting upon the head-board of her bed looking down with the utmost gravity and composure into her face. The door of the cabin had been left partly open, and the owl, without stopping to knock, had thus unceremoniously entered the domicile of these Massachusetts gentlefolks, and without so much as waiting to be introduced, perched himself thus in close proximity to the faces of his new-made acquaintances.

Mrs. Ruggles also recollected distinctly the method invented by her husband of taking the trout in the stream near their dwelling. He and his brother built a mill the first season of their removal to their new home, and there were times after the mill was shut down, the water being shoal below the mill, that it seemed to be literally alive with those beautiful, glittering fish—the speckled trout, from three to four inches to a foot in length. Her husband would place boards in the stream and a basket, so as to drive the trout through an opening into the basket, taking a bushel or more at a time. Selecting of the finest, sufficient for their purpose on any occasion, they would permit the others to escape.

This venerable lady, the first to set foot on the soil of the present Carmel, was still living when this was written. She survived, indeed, in remarkable health and preservation of her faculties, until June 8, 1870, when she passed away at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Her husband, the brave young pioneer, not only in material civilization, but in the higher matters of religion, died more than half a century before—on the 21st of May, 1820. Some further sketch of these primitive Carmelites is comprised in the biographical notice of their distinguished son, Major Hiram Ruggles, appended to this History, as also below. The tract they settled, between one and two miles southeast of Carmel village, is still known upon the maps of the county, and otherwise quite widely, as the Ruggles Place, although it passed out of the possession of the family quite a number of years ago.

MR. RUGGLES AS A PREACHER.

The following notice of Elder Ruggles is included in A Memorial Paper, read at the Semi-centennial meeting of the Maine Baptist Missionary Convention, held at East Winthrop, June 16-18, 1874, by the Rev. C. G. Porter, of Bangor:

While Merrill was thus serving the church with voice and pen near the coast line of the State, there was another, of a John-the-Baptist stamp, lifting up his cry in the then wilderness region of the Penobscot. Elder Paul Ruggles was one of our early pioneer preachers. He was the father of Doctor Paul, deceased, and of Hon. Hiram, for many years and now a leading citizen of Penobscot county, and at present Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth District. Mr. Ruggles was one of the constituent members of the church in Etna, organized in 1807, and its deacon until 1811, when he was ordained to the work of the ministry at his own house in Carmel, Revs. Daniel Merrill, Otis Briggs, and John Chadbourne assisting in the services. He at once entered upon his great work with the ardor of an apostle, which was unabated till closed by his death, which occurred May 21, 1870.

I have his journal here with me to-day, in which is found a record of all the places in which he preached and the texts used, from the time of his ordination till a few weeks before his death. I find upon examination that in a little more than nine years he preached more than twelve hundred sermons, principally in the Penobscot region, varied with visits as far east as the State line and west to what is now Somerset county, and that he was chiefly instrumental in gathering five churches, viz: at Newport, Stetson, Exeter, Hermon (now Second Hampden), and Charleston. In January, 1815, he made a preaching tour as far east as Eastport (then Moose Island), preaching in all the towns on the way and officiating a number of times on the island, at the house of Deacon Aaron Hayden. Returning, on his arrival at Lubec, February 15th, he received the joyful news of the proclamation of peace with Great Britain, and immediately calling the people together at the house of Captain Morton, he preached from Luke ii. 14: "Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, good will to men."

Mr. Ruggles was very popular as a preacher, as much so as our most popular ministers of the present day. The old men and women who remember him speak of him as having been very smart, and very able, and very vigorous. He was a great favorite, particularly in Bangor and Hampden, and was sometimes pressed into service at very short notice. He preached the first sermon preached by a Baptist in what is now the city of Bangor, on the evening of the second of November, 1817, and this was his text, Matthew xxii. 10: "And when he was come into Jerusalem all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?" Mr. Case followed him in December, and baptized two persons. Mr. Ruggles had preached some years before, within the town limits, at the house of a Mr. Hasey, about four miles out on the Pushaw road; but this was the first Baptist sermon in what is now the city proper.

It is told of him that, being in Hampden one day with his ox team, he was besought to remain and preach to the people in the evening, and consented, taking for his text the story of that stranger who slew so many of the Philistines with an ox goad. He was regarded, in that very straight day, as a very close preacher, and, as they used to say, "bewed by the line, let the chips fall where they might." A young man—old, however, when he told me the story—heard him preach a sermon in Frankfort, in 1815, on "Christian Character," in which he made it so exalted that the young man said "it tore him all to pieces and left him without any foundation to stand on." He said he feared to do it, but felt so alarmed that he did not dare to let Mr. Ruggles go without asking him "if it was not possible for one to be a Christian without being just so exalted a character as he had set forth in his discourse." "O, bless you, my dear young man," was the Elder's reply, "we ministers have to preach what people ought to be, not what they are. Christ is the standard, and there must be a striving to be like him; but the best of the saints will come infinitely short."

His journal shows that Mr. Ruggles, like many of our earlier ministers, was fond of preaching from prophecy and figurative and quaint passages, such as are found in the prophetic books and in the Songs of Solomon, such as these: "And the river was divided into four heads." "And the cherubims spread forth their wings." "And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon." "A lump of figs." "A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse." "And as a lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." In running over the record, I was a little puzzled with what at first I thought was a text. It reads thus: "1818, September 27th. Preached at the upper school-house, in Carmel, from Luke iii. 8. And the devil came from No. 4." As I said, I thought at first it was a text, and I knew the devil came from a great many places, but I didn't remember about No. 4. But I found, upon examination, that it was simply a record of the fact that a wicked man came from No. 4 (now Etna), and disturbed the meeting.

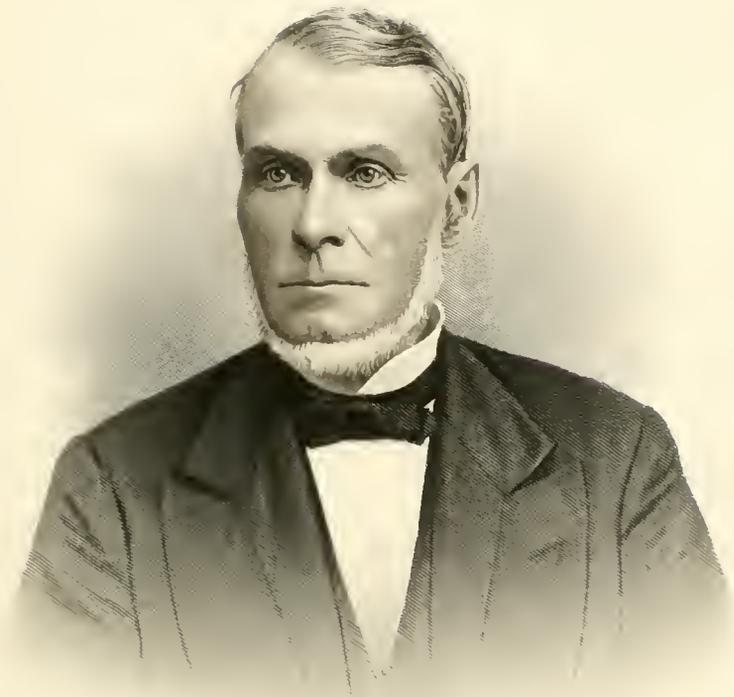

Mr. Ruggles died at the early age of thirty-eight, much lamented. His last sermon was preached at Newport, but a little time before his death, from one of those texts he loved so well to handle—Songs iii. 6: "Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, and all powders of the merchant?" I thought how fitting it was that the spirit of that gifted man should exhale in the aroma of such a text as that.

ORGANIZATION.

Carmel was erected as the one hundred and eighty-seventh town in the District of Maine, on the 21st of June, 1811, the same day that Corinth, in this county, and Sebec, in Washington county, were formed.

RECORD OF GROWTH.

Within fourteen years after the foundations—that is, in 1810—the population of this township numbered 123.

The next year, June 21, 1811, the town was incorporated by the name it now bears. By 1820 the people of Carmel numbered 153; in 1830, 237; in 1840, 520 (the population had more than doubled during the preceding decade); in 1850, 1,225 (an increase of 136 per cent.); in 1860, 1,273; in 1870, 1,348; in 1880, 1,220.

The number of polls in the town in 1812, the year after it was organized, was 25; in 1820, 38; in 1860, 300; in 1870, 336; in 1880, 294.

The total valuation of estates in 1812 was only $948.50, with a tax of 13 cents in the $1,000. In eight years more it had mounted to $20,545. Forty years later, in 1860, the valuation was $188,235; in 1870, $260,118; and in 1880, $291,073.

THE CHURCHES

of Carmel are the Calvinistic Baptist, the Free Baptist or Union, and the Methodist societies. The first of these was organized at a very early day, the first Baptist church in the county, by Elder Ruggles and his co-believers in the faith. It had thirty-six members in 1821. Elder B. D. Small is the present minister; Rev. James Blagden has the Free Baptist church in charge; and the Rev. F. A. Bragdon was the Methodist pastor in 1880.

A Congregational church was organized in Carmel, May 5, 1853, but we are not possessed of the records of its rise and fall.

MANUFACTURERS AND TRADES.

Not much lumbering is now done in Carmel. There are two blacksmiths and two butchers, one carriage maker and one maker of carriage woodwork, one furniture manufacturer, one boot and shoe-maker, one harness-maker, and one carder, weaver, and cloth-dresser. There are half a dozen general stores, three resident physicians, and one hotel, kept by Edward Murphy.

MINING COMPANY.

The Harrington Silver Mining Company was formed some time ago in Bangor, for operations in this town. E. C. Nichois is President; Eugene M. Hersey, Secretary; and William H. Darling, Superintendent of the Company. Its operations have not been very vigorously prosecuted.

CHEESE FACTORY.

The Carmel, Hermon, Hampden, & North Newburg cheese factory was incorporated February 8, 1875. The first meeting of the company was held in North Newburg, where the factory has been located. It is accounted a somewhat valuable industry in these parts.

ASSOCIATIONS.

The societies of Carmel best known to the public are the Golden Harvest Grange, No. 33, Patrons of Husbandry, meeting on Wednesdays; St. Paul's Division of Sons of Temperance, meeting Saturday evenings; Sawadabcook Lodge of Good Templars, Thursday evenings; and the Benevolent Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, Wednesday evenings in the weeks of full moon.

THE POST-OFFICES

are Carmel and North Carmel. Mr. C. K. Johnson is postmaster at the former, Samuel Raines of the latter.

THE PUBLIC OFFICERS

of the town in 1880 were: Alonzo Tilton, W. O. Sylvester, C. H. Goodwin, Selectmen; J. F. Benjamin, Town Clerk; F. A. Simpson, Treasurer; R. A. Robinson, Collector; Paul Ruggles, Constable; Frank Robinson, John R. Chase, A. I. Pickard, School Committee; Hiram Ruggles, F. M. Simpson, F. A. Simpson, Trial Justices.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

The Rev. Benjamin D. Small, now the oldest living inhabitant of Carmel, is the son of Alexander Small, of Provincetown, Massachusetts, who came to this town about 1800 or 1802. His wife's name was Ruth Dyer. They had eight children, two boys and six girls, all of whom, except our subject, are now deceased. When he came here there were no roads this side of Hampden, and he had to bring his goods on an ox-sled and by hand, there being not even roads for a wagon, and only one horse in the settlement. This belonged to the pioneer Ruggles, who lived in what at that time was called the Ruggles Settlement, three miles south of the present village of Carmel. When a man asked for this horse to use on the morrow, Mr. Ruggles could not positively promise, but would say: "The first man who comes here to-morrow will get the horse." Mr. Small settled in the western part of Carmel, on the road now leading from Hampden to Newport, though it was some time ere the road was laid out. Mr. Small spent the remainder of his life here in farming pursuits. He died in April, 1846. Mrs. Small lived to be ninety-two years old, dying in or about 1860. The hardships and privations these early settlers endured would be thought unbearable by the present generation. The only remaining member of this family, Rev. B. D. Small, was born July 17, 1808, and married Eliza Sawyer, of Hampden. He first settled in Etna, preaching in that town and in this. There were at his earliest recollection but twenty voters in this town. He first settled here on the old farm, where his father lived. He has lived in Veazie, St. George, Carmel, Newport, Harrington and Waterville, preaching in most of these towns to churches of his faith—the Baptist. Mrs. Small is still living. They have had three children—Augustus D., Fidelia C., now Mrs. Whittemore, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and Edwin S., a Baptist clergyman, of Livermore Falls. Augustus D. has for several years been Superintendent of Schools in Salem, Massachusetts. Mr. Small, though now seventy-two years old, still preaches occasionally. He is a well preserved and intelligent old gentleman, and one whom it is a pleasure to meet. He can remember when there were but two schools in this town, and when it was not thought important to teach English grammar. When he began to preach he had first to study grammar by himself, it not being taught much in the schools.

L. A. Small is a son of Alexander Small, whose father's name was also Alexander. For sketch of the latter's life see above. The younger Alexander came here with his father from Provincetown, Massachusetts, when a child of about four years. He married Betsey Blaisdell, daughter of Daniel Blaisdell, of Stetson. They had seven children, four boys and three girls, who arrived at maturity, besides one who died in early manhood. The names of the living are Susan, now Mrs. Burnett, of Newport; Lucinda, now Mrs. Blagden, of Carmel; Jonathan Smith, of Portland; Betsey B., now Mrs. Spratt, of Carmel; L. A., the subject of the sketch; Sidney L., of Saginaw, Michigan, a physician; and Daniel E., of Carmel. Mr. Small has been dead some years. Mrs. Small died in 1873. L. A. Small was born in 1840, May 16. After receiving a common school education he entered the army in 1862, and remained about a year, when he was discharged on account of sickness and disability. In 1862 he married Linda B. Clapham, daughter of Charles G. Clapham, of Woodstock, New Brunswick. They have no children. Mr. Small now lives on the old homestead, about one and a half miles from the village of Carmel. He has a good farm, though small, and is improving his buildings by the erection of an "L" to his house for a kitchen, wood-house, and carriage-house. When completed he will have a very convenient set of buildings.

Among the early settlers of Carmel was Eben C. Hinkley, who came from Barnstable, Massachusetts, about 1806 or 1807. He married Dele Hoxie, of Sandwich, Massachusetts, and soon after came here. He settled in the eastern part of the town, near Hampden, on what is known as Hinkley Hill. They had ten children, five boys and five girls. Here he lived ever after, and died March 7, 1859.

CARROLL.

ITS SITUATION, ETC.

This history now makes a long leap from Carmel to Carroll. The latter is a comparatively new town, formerly known on the maps simply as Township No. 6, Second Range, north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase. It lies on the furthest east line of the county, adjoining Washington county, on the old stage road from Lincoln through Lee and Springfield to Princeton, in Washington county; and is forty-five and a half miles distant from Bangor, "as the crow flies." It is bounded north by Prentiss; east by Kossuth, in Washington county; south by Lakeville Plantation; and west by Springfield. It would be a nearly regular township of six miles square, but for an "L" three and one-half miles long from east to west, and nearly two miles wide, in the southeast part of the town, encroaching upon territory which would seem rightfully to belong to Lakeville Plantation.

The town contains about 27,520 acres. Considering its distance in the interior and neighborhood to the recent wilderness tracts in Washington county it is well settled; and as the census returns below will manifest, it has held its own remarkably during the hardness of the last decade, which cost some towns in the county large percentages of their population. The southeastern quarter, however, and some of the northern tracts, are as yet but sparsely inhabited. Much of the settlement is upon the main central highway of the town, the only one which traverses it throughout in any direction—the old stage road before mentioned, from Lincoln to Princeton, in Washington county. A road of about equal length, but more crooked, comes in near the southwest corner of the town, from the direction of Duck Lake, in Lakeville, runs northeasterly to the stage road, and thence northerly to and ending near Trout Brook, a mile from the north boundary. Nearly half a mile after it enters Carroll, a road into Springfield leaves it, and runs westerly across that town to the stage road in Lee. Nearly two miles east of the crossing of the north and south road and the stage road, another highway starts for the northward, and runs into Prentiss, and across that in a nearly due northeast direction into Webster Plantation, and thence to Kingman Station, so giving access again to the European & North American Railway. The other roads of the town are unimportant, except to the small neighborhoods they reach.

On the stage route through Carroll is the post-office, about half-way across the town, where the mails of the Carrolls are handled by a postmistress, Mrs. Mary E. Curtis; also the Trotting Park, a little east of the post-office; likewise three school-houses, one at the road junction a mile and a quarter east of the office; another at a road junction less than half a mile west of it, and School No. 2 a mile west of that. As many cemeteries lie near this road—the easternmost just south of the school-house first named; another half a mile southwest of the post-office; and the westernmost about midway between School No. 2 and the school near the post-office. On the road to Duck Lake, about two-thirds of a mile below the second cemetery, is still another small graveyard. School No. 1 lies about a mile beyond it, on the same road; and there is one more little cemetery a half mile southwest of it, near the town line, on the road into Springfield. School No. 4 is a mile and a half north of the post-office, and yet another two miles nearly due west of this, on a road across the northwest corner of the town. A hotel is also kept on the stage road, east of the post-office; and mills are found in various parts of the town.

The waters of Carroll are Boyce Brook in the south-east, running into a pond just north of Junior Lake, to which its flow ultimately goes by a short connecting stream; Getchell Brook, which rises near the post-office, and runs to Duck Lake, receiving a small tributary from Carroll on the way; Lowell Brook, which just touches the southwest corner; the two branches that form the Mattagondus Stream, which, after a very short course in this town, runs out into Springfield at a point about in the middle of the west line of Carroll, and after traversing some four miles of Springfield, re-enters this town again for a little way at the northeast corner; the Trout Brook, which presently becomes the Spruce Brook, and joins the Mattagondus Stream a mile north of the town; and, in the northeastern and eastern parts of Carroll, the head branches, with their tributaries, of a stream that flows into Kossuth town, Washington county, and into one of the numerous lakes of that region. A small lake or pond—unnamed as yet, so far as we are aware—should also be mentioned on the west line of the town, something more than a mile above the southwest corner, and connected with Duck Lake by the Lowell Brook.

Carroll is thus a finely watered town, and one exceedingly eligible for settlement. The surface and soil of the town are quite as favorable as those of the average town elsewhere in the county, and in time it can hardly fail to contain a numerous and prosperous population. The soil is of a deep red loam, well mixed with fine dark slate. There is considerable limestone also in the town, and one of the finest quarries of the kind in the State is on the farm of Homer Gates. In the southern part of Carroll minerals so abound that not a little difficulty is experienced in running lines by the compass. The surface of the town lies in large and very gradual swells.

THE BEGINNINGS.

In 1830 Mr. Luke Hastings came in, and felled the first trees and built his cabin on the bank of the Mattagondus Stream. His lot, No. 111, has been occupied at different times since by other settlers, and is now in a good state of preservation. After Mr. Hastings' occupation, it was sold to Deacon William Stevens, of New Gloucester, Maine, and subsequently to Hon. Hiram Stevens, its present owner and occupant.

The next year Messrs. Charles, Ezekiel, and Horace Brown, Samuel Coombs, William Oliver, and others commenced farming here; and during the next three years Captain Daniel Lathrop, Captains Daniel and Thomas Lindsey, Lincoln Curtiss, Samuel Bowers, and H. W. Larrabee made their settlements in the township.

The first female child born here was Cordelia Blanchard in the cabin of Luke Hastings. The first male child, Levi Lincoln Curtiss, was born February 26, 1834, in the house of William Oliver. The second, William E. Oliver, born a month later, was a child of the Oliver household.

ORGANIZATION.

The natal day of Carroll itself is March 30, 1845, when it was erected into a town. Previously, the west half of the township had been in Penobscot county, and the east half in Washington county; but both were now united in the former county under one municipal organization.

PROGRESS.

The population of Carroll, when it became a town, was not much more than 300. Five years afterwards, in 1850, it had 401 people; in 1860, 470; in 1870, 632; and in 1880, 625. It held its population remarkably well during the depopulating decade 1870-80.

Carroll had 102 polls in 1860, 143 in 1870, and 156 in 1880. There has thus been a steady increase in the number of polls, notwithstanding a slight falling-off in the census return the last few years. This shows that the number of grown men in the town was more than kept good.

The estates of Carroll were valued in 1860 at $54,513; in 1870, at $103,498; and in 1880, at $112,464.

THE CHURCHES.

A Congregational Society, for Carroll, Springfield, and Lee, was organized March 14, 1846, the year after the town was incorporated. The pulpit of the church in this town is just now vacant. There is also a Baptist Society here, which is likewise temporarily without a pastor.

THE OTHER SOCIETIES

of Carroll are the Baskahegan Grange No. 126, Patrons of Husbandry; and the Star in the East Lodge, No. 213, of the Independent Order of Good Templars, a comparatively new organization.

INDUSTRIES.

Carroll has one manufactory of long lumber, one of long and short lumber, one shingle and grist-mill, one carriage-worker, one limestone quarry, and one blacksmith. Messrs. Ring & Blanchard keep a grange and general store.

OFFICERS OF 1881.

D. W. Lindsey, W. H. Brown, J. Gardner, Selectmen; D. W. Lindsey, Town Clerk; Albion Gates, Treasurer; Jacob Gardner, Constable and Collector; H. B. Carr, School Supervisor; J. A. Larrabee, A. H. Lindsey (quorum), Hiram Stevens (trial), J. A. Larrabee (dedimus), Justices; J. A. Larrabee, Pension Notary.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

Mr. John A. Larrabee, of Carroll, one of the early settlers of the town, is a son of Moses and Eunice Larrabee, of Danville, now Auburn, Maine. His grandfather's name was Solomon Larrabee, who was from Scarborough, Maine. Moses and Eunice Larrabee had seven children, three sons and four daughters, viz: Permelia, widow of the late Phineas S. Woodman, of Springfield, Maine; Hiram, deceased; Eunice, wife of Joseph C. Larrabee, Medford, Massachusetts; Moses, deceased; John A.; Emily; Minerva, wife of Samuel Cloke, of Carroll. Moses Larrabee was for many years Justice of the Peace here, where he died June 13, 1845. Mrs. Larrabee died December 25, 1864. John A. Larrabee, youngest son of this family, was born February 9, 1814, in Danville (Auburn). He came here with his father in 1834, when twenty years of age, and settled on the place where he now lives, clearing up the farm almost wholly, as there was no house on the place and only a few trees were telled. There were no roads within twenty miles of him at that time. They had to go that far to Lincoln for supplies and milling. The hardships endured by these early settlers can hardly be realized by their descendants of the present generation. Mr. Larrabee married Eveline Lindsey, by whom he had one daughter, now deceased. Mr. Larrabee died February 17, 1838, and her husband married Hannah M. Martin, daughter of Jacob Martin, of Atkinson, Maine. They have had seven children, of whom five are living: Charles C., now at Jackson Brook, Maine; George A., with his father; Bina E., wife of George D. Brown, of Carroll; Hiram A., now in Massachusetts; and Abbie M. Mr. Larrabee has held various town offices, has been Selectman and Assessor for twenty-seven years, and Town Clerk for twenty-nine years. He has a fine place, and is well known in this part of the county.

Zadoc Bishop, who came to Carroll when a boy, with his father, is a son of Joseph Bishop. The latter was a native of Leeds, Maine, and married Jane Turner, of Leeds. They had eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity, viz: Abial D., Joseph, Elizabeth, Amos H., and Walter, deceased; Zadoc; Nathan, of Monmouth, Maine; and George, now of Leeds. Zadoc Bishop was born May 14, 1815. His father lived here but three summers, going back winters. Zadoc and his two brothers bought out their father and commenced farming for themselves. Zadoc Bishop married Emily M. Lothrop, daughter of Daniel and Lucy Lothrop, of Leeds. They formerly came from Massachusetts. This couple have had seven children, viz: Ellen, deceased; Frank P., now in Wadena, Minnesota; Emma, wife of William Brown, of Carroll; Ellouisa, now Mrs. E. Lothrop, of Carroll; Albert, now with his father; Roscoe, Ella, and Jennie. When Mr. Bishop came here he took his pack upon his back and followed a spotted line. He has cleared up the farm where he now lives and built all the buildings on it. He now owns one hundred and sixty acres of good land and has a large two-story house. Mr. Bishop has held important town offices, such as Selectman, etc. He raised the first English or cultivated hay in the town. He has been engaged in lumbering in connection with his farming, for many years, and was in the famous Madawaska or Aroostook war.

Ezekiel Brown is a son of Ezekiel M. Brown, of Topsham, Maine. They had seven children who grew up, and lost one in infancy. Their names were Hannah, wife of David Graves, of Bowdoinham; Ezekiel; Charles, now of Carroll; Mary, widow of John Fisher, of Topsham; Elizabeth, widow of Alfred Gowell, of Bowdoin, Maine; Horace, of Carroll; and Daniel M., now in Texas. By his second wife he had one son, William P., now in Oregon. Ezekiel M. Bishop died May 26, 1858, and Mrs. Brown July 17, 1834. Ezekiel Brown, the oldest son of this family, was born December 5, 1806. He spent his early days on a farm, but on arriving of age he settled on the farm where he now resides. There were at that time no roads through the town. He built a log-house and cleared up the farm, and now has one of the best farms in the town. He married Eveline H. True, daughter of Josiah and Mary True, of Lisbon, Maine. They have had eleven children, eight of whom are now living. Their names are: Ezekiel M., in Minnesota; Hannah T., deceased; Homer J., now of Springfield, Maine; Dellie A., deceased; Frank T., now in Anoka, Minnesota; John K., of Kansas; Annie T., deceased; Mary E., wife of Allen C. Reed, of New York city; Leander B., of Carroll, with his father; Will P., in Nevada; and George D., of Minnesota. Mr. Brown has held various town offices and represented his class in the Legislature in 1858.

Charles Brown, son of Ezekiel and Emma Brown, of Topsham, Maine (for a sketch of whose life see the above), was born August 7, 1808. He came to Carroll in April, 1831, settled where he now lives, and married Lucy Lothrop for his first wife. They had five children, viz: Mary H., deceased, wife of Joshua T. Baldwin, of Prentiss; Martha J., wife of Lewis F. Yeaton, of Wadena, Minnesota; Charles R., now of Springfield, Maine; John F., at home with his father; and Lucy A., wife of Charles M. Maltby, of Bluffton, Minnesota. Mrs. Brown died September 28, 1849. Mr. Brown married for his second wife Lydia Turner, daughter of George and Betsey Turner, of Leeds. He has served his town fourteen years as Treasurer; has one of the finest places in Carroll which he has cleared up from the woods himself.

One of the old settlers of Carroll is Mr. Calvin Lane, who came here from Leeds, Maine, in 1836. He is a son of Gideon and Jemima Lane (nee Jemima Norris). Gideon Lane was a son of Daniel Lane, who came to Leeds from New Gloucester. He was a native of Massachusetts. Gideon and Jemima Lane had thirteen children, of whom twelve lived to maturity, viz: Polly, Alpheus, Lydia, Jemima, Dorcas, Fanny, Giddins, Samuel, Susan, Ruth, Esther, Calvin, and Nancy. Gideon Lane died January 29, 1836, and Mrs. Lane died in April, 1865, being over ninety-five years old. Calvin Lane, the youngest son of this family, was born September 6, 1814, in Leeds. His boyhood was spent upon a farm. On arriving at manhood he commenced farming for himself in the then wilderness of Carroll. He came here in 1836. There were then but few families in the town. The road was laid out, but nothing yet done on it. He made the first clearing on the farm adjoining his present home, where Mr. Blanchard now lives. He lived here twelve or fifteen years, when he built a store and engaged in trade. He followed mercantile life for about six years, then bought the farm where he now lives. He married Dulsena Lothrop, daughter of Daniel and Lucy Lothrop (nee Lucy Gilbert). They have had seven children, five of whom are now living, viz: Francis A., wife of George Baldwin, of Prentiss; Esther J., wife of George Taylor, of Topsfield; Orestes H., now in Nevada; Clara A., wife of Alonzo Noble, of Carroll; Daniel G., of Topsfield. Mr. Lane has served as Selectman several years. He has a fine farm of one hundred and thirty acres, besides out-land.

B. W. Blanchard, a farmer and merchant of Carroll, was born November 20, 1823, in the town of Bowdoin, Kennebec county, Maine. His father, John F. Blanchard, married Betsy Hopkins, of Bowdoin. They had six children, viz: Benjamin W.; Caroline, now Mrs. David White; John A., deceased; Edward H.; Helen D., wife of Daniel Hall, Oconto, Wisconsin; and Deborah, deceased, wife of T. Woodcock, of Ripley. John F. Blanchard died in 1849, and Mrs. Blanchard is also dead. B. W. Blanchard, the oldest son, spent his early life on a farm, but his father moved to Bowdoinham, Maine, when he was young. He came to Carroll with his father in 1838, when he was fifteen. On becoming of age he engaged in lumbering till he was twenty-seven, when he married Miss Rhoda Abbott, daughter of Jeremiah and Betsy Abbott, of this town, and bought a farm, where he has since resided, though engaged in lumbering. He also has a lumbering supply store with a Mr. Ring. To this couple have been born eight children, five of whom are living: Adel F., Rose, Georgia, Nellie, and William A. Mr. Blanchard has a good farm of eighty acres. He has not been engaged in public life, except as postmaster for eight years.

CHARLESTON.

The narrative now swings back to the older and more densely populated towns of the county. Charleston, formerly called New Charleston, is one of the oldest of these, having been settled in 1795 and incorporated in 1811, the same year that Carmel was erected into a town. Although more distant from Bangor, (twelve and a half miles away) than the former town, and as yet without a railroad, it is almost the peer of Carmel in population, and surpassed it by the censuses of 1850 and 1860—in the latter case by 175 persons. It is one of the best and most satisfactory towns in Penobscot.

Charleston is a regular township of thirty-six square miles and 23,040 acres, like most others in its range, forming the north quartette of towns in the western region of the county. Its companion on the east is Bradford, on the west Garland. Atkinson, in Piscataquis county, neighbors it on the north, and Corinth on the south. It is connected with these towns, and its several parts with each other, by an excellent system of wagon-roads. The main east and west highway is that on a straight line through nearly the exact centre of the town—the road mentioned in our descriptions of Alton and Bradford as traversing this entire northern range of towns to and beyond Dexter village. Another road a mile north of this is generally parallel with it very nearly across the town; and about a mile north of this still another runs about half-way across, stopping at its intersection with the north and south road through Charleston post-office. A similar highway enters from Bradford, and stops at the same road, a little more than a mile south of the central route. A shorter road, but with the same general direction, is still south of this, and connects the north and south road in the east of the town with a road to the northwest into that through Charleston post-office. The two roads across the town north and south are about two miles apart, the former running nearly through the centre of the town; and they preserve a rather remarkable parallelism. One more road very nearly traverses the entire town. It leaves the central north and south road close upon the south line of the town, and runs off northwesterly to a point very near the northwest corner, whence it cuts across the angle of Piscataquis into Garland. West Charleston is upon the crossing of this and the central east and west road. At the intersection of the two central roads, in almost the exact geographical centre of the town, there is no village, and scarcely a house, but the school-house No. 10 is quite near. Charleston village is about a mile north of this point. At this place is the Union church and cemetery, and an academy building. Schools, mills, stores, shops, and other buildings of public importance, are scattered quite thickly over the town, to accommodate a population which has left few vacant tracts of any large size upon its surface.

Charleston is also an exceedingly well-watered town, though it is an interesting fact that the furthest northern part, for about a mile's width, is almost destitute of streams, except the headwaters of two or three brooks that flow southward into Corinth. A very small stream makes a rough semi-circle across the northwest corner of the town. In the second tier of sections, or square miles, from the north line a considerable number of creeks have their sources. They join other streams, which in turn unite with larger ones and receive more tributaries, until the south half of the town is full of brooks. One stream with its affluents in the southwest and west of the town is not unlike a tree in the number and form of its branches. No less than thirty-five main streams and branches appear upon the map of Charleston, most of them in the southern half. All but two of these send their waters into Corinth, where the principal streams they form are the Crooked Brook and the Bear Brook, which becomes the Pushaw Stream after passing the outlet of Little Pushaw Pond, in Hudson. There is a small lake near the east line of Charleston, half a mile west of School No. 6, with a saw-mill at its outlet; also some broadening of two other streams, but not amounting to more than a mill-pond in either case. Several mills have been built at the ponds near School No. 4. The valleys and ravines which are made by so numerous streams aid greatly to diversify the surface of this town. The soil of Charleston is quite fertile, and it is accounted a fine farming town.

The township which forms Charleston is No. 2, in the Fifth Range. The first white settler upon it came in 1795, and was either Charles Vaughan or, as Mr. Williamson says (History of Maine, vol. ii., page 618), one or more who settled under his auspices. The territory was still in the possession of the State, and so remained for seven years, or until July 14, 1802, when it was granted to John Lowell. Less than nine years thereafter it was ready for incorporation as a town, and became "New Charleston" on the 16th of February, 1811, the same day that Exeter and Garland were ushered into being at the hands of the General Court. It retained this name so lately as 1820, but by and by had it shortened by the dropping of the unnecessary and cumbersome "New," since which time it has been known simply as "Charleston." It was the one hundredth and eighty-first town incorporated within the present limits of Maine.

At this time Charleston had nearly 250 inhabitants. It had 210 people within its borders in 1810; 344 in 1820; 859 in 1830 (an increase of 150 per cent, the greatest in its history for a single decade); 1,269 in 1840; 1,283 in 1850; 1,430 in 1860; 1,191 in 1870; and 1,111 in 1880.

Charleston had 61 polls in 1812, with a valuation of estates to the amount of $1,363 38, and taxation of 22 cents on the $1,000. In 1820 the polls counted 87, and the estates were $29,483. In 1860 the figures were, respectively, 308 and $213,465; in 1870, 330 and $290,279; and in 1880, 293 and $277,883.

The first church in the town was Calvinistic Baptist. It was formed in 1810 (though Mr. Williamson says 1811), partly under the auspices of the Rev. Paul Ruggles, of Carmel. Rev. Henry Hale, however, was its first settled minister. It had sixty-seven members in 1821. Elder John S. Higgins is now the pastor in charge. A Free Baptist or Union Church has also been founded in Charleston, to which Rev. B. F. Gerry is preacher. There is likewise a Universalist society in town, the pulpit of which is vacant at present.

The Charleston Academy was founded many years ago, and acquired a wide and excellent reputation. Many prominent citizens of the county and State were educated in part within its walls.

The post-offices are at Charleston and West Charleston. Thomas J. Peaks, Esq., is in charge of the former, and Mr. B. H. Ham of the latter.

The town has one resident lawyer, one doctor, three mercantile establishments, as many lumber manufacturers, one wheelwright, and three smiths.

The Charleston Cheese Factory Association was incorporated February 12, 1874.

The Free Masons have a lodge at Charleston called Olive Branch. The Good Templars are organized in Oak Hill Lodge, No. 211, and meet on Wednesday evenings. The Patrons of Husbandry have the Charleston Grange, No. 105.

OFFICERS FOR 1881.

C. T. Dunning, Melvin F. Martin, Nathan C. Trim, Selectmen; Amasa Holden, Town Clerk; H. C. Holden, Treasurer; Frank Ross, Samuel L. Paine, Constables; Henry P. Haynes, School Supervisor; Thomas J. Peaks (Quorum), A. W. King, George W. Dunning, H. P. Haynes (Trial), Justices.

NOTES OF SETTLEMENT.

William Tibbetts, sr., was born in England April 21, 1731. He married Laurania Young, and came to Boston at an early day, where he remained but a short time. From Boston he moved to Goldsboro, Maine, and remained several years. He was one among the first settlers and pioneers of Bangor, as there were not more than a dozen buildings in the place at the time he arrived, and there was not a church in Penobscot county. He raised a large family of children, as follows: Abner, who married a Miss Davis, and died in Exeter; George, who married a Miss Dow, in Penobscot county, and moved to Indiana with his family, where he died; William, married Sarah Thoms and died in Kenduskeag; Benjamin, married Hannah Rose and moved to Indiana, where he died; a daughter, who married David Mann, and is dead; Mary, married Jonathan Snow and moved to Kentucky, where she died; and Laurania, married Elisha Mahue and moved to Indiana, where she died. The elder Tibbetts died in Penobscot county, respected by all. His wife survived him several years, and moved to Indiana, where she died at the residence of her son, Benjamin. William, the third son, was born in the town of Goldsboro, about the year 1765. He came to this county and settled at Bangor, where he remained until he became of age, and then removed to Kenduskeag, where he took up a farm in the wilderness. There was not a white man north of him to the Canada line. He cleared up a farm, on which he remained all his life. He married Sarah Thoms, of Bangor, and was the father of eleven children, five boys and six girls, viz: Elisha, who married Jane Mathews and died in Kenduskeag; Thomas, died at the age of eight years; Hiram, married Eliza B. Stockman and lives in Charleston; William, married Sarah Cole and died in Corinth; George, married Rachel Black and lives in Corinth; Purcilla, married George Simpson and died in Corinth; Nancy, married James S. Norcross, and died in Glenburn; Mary, twice married, first to a Mr. Beath, second, to James Tibbetts—she lives in California; Susan, married William Webber and lives in Bangor; and Betsey, who died at the age of eight years. The father died in Kenduskeag in 1837; his wife survived him several years and died in Glenburn at the residence of her daughter, Jane, who had married Daniel Wooster.

Hiram Tibbetts was born in Kenduskeag December 8, 1803. He received a common school education and followed school-teaching for a number of years, but has devoted the greater part of his life to farming. He came to Charleston April 10, 1825, and in 1840 settled near the centre of the town, on the farm on which he now lives. He has held the office of Town Clerk for about twelve years, and in 1837 represented his class in the Legislature; is a member of the Baptist Church; in politics was originally a Jacksonian Democrat, but joined the Republican party in 1854, to which he still belongs. He married Eliza B. Stockman, a native of Penobscot county, May 17, 1832. She died July 15, 1874, in Charleston. He is the father of ten children, five boys and five girls: David, lives in Marysville, California; William was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, May 3, 1863, while a member of the Sixth Maine Infantry; Charles, married Sarah Jennings, a native of Connecticut, and lives in Charleston; Henry L., lives in Lowell, Massachusetts; Clarence E., married Abby Foss and lives in New York; Isabella C., married Emmons Kingsbury, of Bradford; Sarah, married John Johnson, of East Sullivan, Maine; Mary, married Frederick A. Thayer and lives in Charleston; and Eliza F., married Joseph Ellis and lives in Charleston.

Solomon Dunning was born in Levant in 1800. He came to Charleston with his father at an early day, settled on the farm now owned by William E. Dunning, and married Susan Kingsbury, of Bradford. He followed the mercantile business in company with Amasa Holden, in Charleston Centre for about forty years; held the office of Selectman of the town for a number of years, and that of County Commissioner of Penobscot county for one term. He represented his class in the State Legislature two terms; was a member of the Baptist church; in politics was Republican. He died in 1871, in Charleston. His wife survives him. He was the father of nine children—Hannah J., married Daniel Morton, lives at Winterport; Henry W., married Lizzie Stephens, was accidentally killed in California; Emily, died in Charleston; William E., married Susan Wyllie, lives in Charleston; Rachel, married S. C. Holden, lives in Wauseon, Ohio; Harrison, married Mellissa Joslyn, lives in Stockton, California; Horatio, married Evie Beacon, lives in Pleasant Grove, Iowa; Eudora, married R. R. Wyllie, Chelsea, Massachusetts; and Freeland, married Jane Rowars, Pleasant Grove, Iowa. William E. was born in Charleston in 1834. He received a common-school education, and also attended the Charleston Academy. He is a farmer, in which business he is now engaged. In 1853 he went around by the Isthmus to California, where he engaged in mining, and remained there eleven years, when he returned to his native place and settled on the farm where he now lives. In 1864 he married Susan E. Wyllie, a native of Warren, Maine. He has represented his class in the Legislature one term. In politics he is Republican. He is the father of one child, Richard T., who lives at home.

Mark Scribner was born in Kennebec county, Maine, in 1804. He married Dolly Cilly, a native of Brooks, and came to Penobscot county in 1829, settling on the farm now owned by Charles H. Scribner; he was a farmer, in which business he was engaged all his life. In politics he was a Democrat. He died at his residence in 1866; his wife died at the same place in 1877. He was the father of six children—Caroline, who lives in Utah Territory, engaged in teaching school, is the only Gentile in the territory that teaches a Mormon school, and has been engaged in the business for the past four years; Mary J., married Joseph Bridgham, and lives in Corinth; Daniel W., married Sarah Stephens, and lives in Utah Territory; Newell, lives in the same country; Alvena, married John M. Cary, and lives in Bad Axe, Huron county, Michigan; and Charles H., married Cora Dunning, lives at the old homestead.

Charles H. Scribner was born in the town of Charleston in 1849; here he received a common-school education, and also attended the Charleston Academy several terms. He followed farming until eighteen years of age, when he went to Corinth and learned the harness-making trade under Charles Edmunds. He remained here three years, then went to Calais, where he engaged in carriage trimming and remained three years. He then returned home and engaged in harness-making and farming. In 1877 he went to Michigan, where he remained but a short time, when he returned to his native place and engaged again in harness-making and farming, in which business he is now. He manufactures everything in the line of harness that is known to the trade. In 1878 he married Cora Dunning, a native of Charleston. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, but in 1879 became a member of the Greenback party. He is the father of one child, John M. Scribner.

Lyman Lord was born in the town of Lyman in 1805. He married Lydia Daniels in the town of Kennebunk York county, Maine, in 1827. He came to Penobscot county in 1831; first settled in Bradford on the farm now owned by Jason Mosier, and followed farming and lumbering the greater part of his life. He died in Charleston in 1862; his wife survives him. In politics he was for many years an old-line Whig, but in after years was a member of the Democratic party. He was the father of eight children: Lyman, who married Josephine Burnham, and died in Charleston; Elbridge G., married Eva A. Place, and lives in Charleston; Ivory D., lives in San Buenaventura, California; Charles, died in infancy; Mary E., married Moses Goss and lives in Corinth; Lydia A., married Henry C. Young, and lives in Greenville, near Moosehead Lake; Winfield S., married and lives in Pennsylvania, and Eastman T., who lives in Charleston. Elbridge G. Lord was born in Bradford in 1833; came to Charleston with his father in 1843; received a common school education and also attended school at the Lincoln Academy; practiced the trade of millman for several years in Penobscot and Aroostook counties; in 1858 went to California via the Isthmus, and engaged in lumbering and mining. In 1873 he returned to his native place and settled on the farm on which he now lives. He has held the office of Selectman of Charleston for one term. He takes great delight in fishing and hunting; is considered one of the best marksmen in his section of the country, and is also one of the most successful disciples of Izaak Walton who visit Moosehead Lake. In politics he is a Republican. In 1873 he married Eva A. Place, a native of Charleston, and is the father of two children, Alice J. and Elbridge B. In 1877 he was elected by his class to the State Legislature, where he served one term.

Jacob Foss was born in New Hampshire in 1792. He married Abigail Foos, a native of the same State in 1831. He came to Penobscot county in 1831. He settled in Charleston in 1833, on the farm now owned by Job B. Foos. He was the father of twelve children, eight boys and four girls. Seven of the sons and one daughter are living: Job B., on the old homestead; Richard L., married Ann Dennis, and lives in Charleston; Mary Jane, married William S. Place and lives in Charleston; John E., married Anna Huckins and lives in Charleston; Zebedee H., married Irene Nash and lives at Stillwater, Minnesota; Albert, married and also lives in Minnesota; Samuel W., married Statira Reed and lives in Charleston; James, lives in Charleston; Alexander, married Anna Thompson, and died in Charleston; Elizabeth, married Alonzo Dunning and died in Charleston; Marion, married Elbridge Thompson and died in Charleston, and Ellen, married A. W. King and lives in Charleston. He died in Charleston in 1879. His wife survives him.

Franklin King was born in the town of Whitefield, in the year 1806. He married Mary Hurd, of Harmony, in 1830; came to Penobscot county in 1836, and first settled in Bradford, on the farm now owned by Hosea Hurd. He was a farmer, in which business he was engaged all his life; was a member and deacon of the Free-will Baptist church for many years; in politics was Republican. He died in the town of Surry, of heart disease, in the year 1876. His wife died in Bradford, in 1873. He was the father of six children—Hiram F., died in California; Ansel W., married Ellen S. Foss, lives in Charleston; Hosea J., married Nancy Crommett, lives in Charleston; Frank M., married Emma Smith, lives in Bradford; John L., lives in Charleston; and Eva M., married Dr. Frank Bickford, lives in the Indian Territory. Ansel W. King was born in the town of Wellington, in 1834; came to Penobscot county with his father, and settled in the town of Bradford, in 1836; received a common school education, and also attended the academies in Foxcroft, Corinth, and Hampden for several terms, where he received a more liberal education. He followed school teaching for a few years, but gave it up and turned his attention to farming, in which business he is now engaged. In 1856 he went to California and engaged in mining until 1860, when he returned to his native place. He held the office of Selectman of Charleston for four years, and was Chairman of the Board during his whole term. He has also been Supervisor of Schools for two years, and was commissioned Trial Justice of Penobscot county by Governor Chamberlain, and subsequently Governor Conner, which office he now holds. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but became a member of the Greenback party at its organization. He married Ellen S. Foss, of Charleston, in 1862, and is the father of four children—Wilber M. died in Bradford, Alice also died, Walter M. lives at home, and Fred W.

William Peaks was born in Dedham, Hancock county, Maine, in 1843; came to Penobscot county, March 12, 1839, and settled in Charleston, on the farm now owned by Samuel Miller; was a millman by trade, and followed the business in connection with farming; in politics was a Jacksonian Democrat. He married Mrs. Betsy Fairfield, a native of Freedom, Waldo county. He died in Charleston in 1846; his wife died at the same place, in 1870. He was the father of seven children, five boys and two girls—J. F., married Mary J. Dennett, and died in Green, Iowa, 1878; J. B., married Jane Eaton of Kendall's Mills, Maine, and died at Charleston in 1867; William G., married Alice Porter, of Hudson, and lives in Lowell, Massachusetts; Thomas J., who married Rebecca Ring, of Deerfield, New Hampshire, lives in Charleston; Joseph B., who married Eliza Chadburn, and lives in Dover; Lucinda H., who married John B. Leach, and lives in the town of Penobscot; Elmira, who married Hiram Folsom, and lives in Providence, Rhode Island.

Thomas J. Peaks was born in the town of Dedham in 1834; came to Charleston with his father at the age of five years, and settled on the same farm. He received his education in the common schools and the academy at Charleston. In 1851 he went to Lowell, Massachusetts, where he pursued the trade of millman, in which business he was engaged nine years. While in Lowell he married Rebecca Ring, in 1855. In 1860 he returned to Charleston and engaged in the mercantile business, in which he is now. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Twenty-second Maine Infantry, and was elected by his company to the rank of Second Lieutenant. In the following year he was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant. While in the service he took part in the battle of Irish Bend and the siege of Port Hudson. In 1863 he was mustered out of service with his regiment, and returned to Charleston and resumed business as a merchant. He has held the offices of Selectman and Town Clerk of Charleston for one term each, and in 1873 was elected Representative of his class, and served one term. In 1876 and 1877 he was elected State Senator. In 1870 he was appointed postmaster, under Johnson's administration, which office he still holds. In politics he is a Republican. He is the father of one child, Henry W., who lives at home.

Thos. J. Peake

Levi Marshall was born in Monmouth, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1821. In 1854 he came to Penobscot county, and settled on the farm where he now lives. In 1850 he married Drusilla Stephens, a native of Corinth. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics is a Republican. He is the father of four children: Nellie A., lives at home; Emma L., who married John S. Shedd, and lives in Charleston; Willis S., lives at home; and Annie P., also at home.

Jefferson Stephens was born in Winthrop in 1805. He married Statira Snow, a native of Orrington, in 1823, came to Penobscot county in 1828, and settled on the farm now owned by Levi Marshall, in Charleston. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics was a Republican. His first wife died in Charleston in 1857. He married for his second wife Lydia T. Thissell, who died in Charleston in 1876. He died in 1872. He was the father of nine children: George S., married Pemelia M. King, and lives at South Framingham, Massachusetts; Drusilla, married Levi Marshall, and lives in Charleston; Betsey M.; Obed C.; Jacquith, who died at Corinth; Daniel S., who died at the age of ten years, in Orrington; and Judah B., who died in Charleston at the age of sixteen; Levi, died of disease contracted in the late war; James, who was a soldier in the regular army and died in service; Alexander, married Penial Bither, and died in Charleston; and Hannah B., who lives in the old homestead.

CHESTER.

TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

Chester is one of the up-river towns, which has a tolerably extensive area, but is not fully developed as yet, although it has a population quite respectable in point of numbers. It lies on the northwest side of the Penobscot, which here runs almost exactly from northeast to southwest, having Winn and Lincoln on the opposite side, Woodville Plantation on the north, with a strip of Township No. 2, and a larger portion of the same township as its next neighbor on the west. The country westward and northwestward for many miles is still very much in wilderness.

Chester is thirty-five miles from Bangor, and twelve and one-half from the west line of the county. If the river ran past it in a straight course—it does pretty nearly so—the town would be a perfect triangle, with sides eleven and one-third miles long on the river, nine miles on the north boundary, and seven and one-half on the west. The town includes thus about 34 square miles, or 21,760 acres. A number of islands lie in the river opposite its shore, belonging to the reservation of the Penobscot Indians. The two largest, Hersey and Nathan Islands, are between the Chester and Lincoln banks; the Snow, Gordon, Brown, and Fire Islands, with six or eight smaller ones, are between Chester and Winn. The Penobscot receives from this town one petty tributary a little above the Fire Islands another opposite Brown Island, another near the head of Hersey Island, and the Medunkeunk Stream, a brook of some importance, nearly two miles from the southwest corner of the town. The Medunkeunk heads in Township A, west of Woodville, passes through Township 2, forming one good-sized lake on the way, enters Chester close to its northwest corner, receives the Trout Brook from Township 2 a mile and a quarter below, and two and a half miles from the mouth of the river is joined on the east side by Ebhors Stream, the two making a considerable pond at the place of meeting. The East and West Branches of the Ebhors rise in Woodville, and flow southward to the point of union in a pond on the north and south road through the town, where a saw- and shingle-mill has been located. These are all the waters of Chester.

The four hundred people, more or less, of the population of the town, reside almost altogether on the river road and up the Medunkeunk. A small settlement is formed on the north line of the town, near School No. 6, on the north and south road above mentioned. More than twelve miles of the river road lie in this town, and it ends, or did end until recently, at the northeast corner of Chester. A mile and a quarter from the west town line, it forks, the two branches, however, remaining quite near together. School-house No. 7 is at their junction; School No. 2 on the same road, opposite Nathan's Island; School

No. 3 three and a half miles further up; and School No. 4 about three miles further, and two miles from the northeast corner of the town. Upon this road is also the post-office, above School No. 2, and opposite the residence of Mr. Walter Haynes, Postmaster, is a small cemetery. Near the Medunkeunk Stream a short road connects the river-road with the river. On each side of the stream roads run to the junction of Ebhors and Medunkeunk, and thence a neighborhood road some two miles in length runs up on the west side of the latter. The only north and south road completely traversing the town is that before mentioned, which runs about midway of the town, passing the pond near the East and West Branches of the Ebhors, thence through Woodville, and for some miles up the Penobscot and the West Branch. A neighborhood road from this accommodates the settlement above School No. 6. The inhabitants of Chester have also ready access to the European & North American Railway at Lincoln, Lincoln Centre, South Winn, and Winn Stations.

SETTLEMENT.*

The sloping hillside of the right bank of the Penobscot River, with its warm southern exposure, early attracted attention from above the ancient Nicasaw to Piscataquis. As the left bank is rather in most instances a low, soft-wood shore, therefore the pioneers in the Valley of the Penobscot would locate on the western side in preference, and prior to the other side. But as the seats of business were afterwards located on the left bank, while the settlements on the right became mainly farming settlements, and tributary to the business of the other shore, they have hardly kept pace with them in population. Indeed, as in Mattamiscontis, opposite Lincoln, a once thriving village, it is almost entirely depopulated for more enterprising localities.

The first settlement of Chester was almost contemporary with that on the other shore, Winn; and so rapid was its early progress that it had hardly any plantation existence, but was incorporated as early as 1834, while many towns, incorporated not for a quarter of a century later, in the vicinity, have a population far exceeding Chester.

Frink Stratton, the pioneer of Chester, came here from Albion, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1823, and made a clearing on the shore of the Penobscot, near where a small brook flows into the river at the foot of the highland lying opposite Winn village, and only about a quarter of a mile below that place. He was the first to start life in Chester, unless, indeed, the father of Columbus Dunn, who married a daughter of Joseph Snow, of Winn, had made a clearing a year before, where Jeremiah Hildreth located after, on what is now termed the Blood place, or the Henry Haynes or Chesley place; but as this seems to be very uncertain, Mr. Stratton's brow must still be wreathed with the laurels of an early pioneer experience, a Christian, patriotic, and Quaker life, and which he still enjoys, at a ripe old age, on the very clearing he started, although the wife who endured most of the pioneer life with him has some time since gone to her eternal home.

This clearing was also almost opposite that of Elijah Brackett, the first settler of upper Winn. Following this came settlers for farming and lumbering, and the settlement increased rapidly.

In 1824 Moses Babcock made a clearing farther down the Penobscot, some two miles or so, on what is now occupied by the brothers Clukey, formerly the Luther Scott place.

Then, within a year or two afterwards, came two other Babcocks, James and Jesse, the latter the father of James Babcock, of Lincoln county. Christopher Jackins also located soon after on what has since been known as the Jo Davis place, the first farm below the Brown schoolhouse, all within a mile and a half of Winn village. Jackins, Moses Babcock, and David Clindinen married daughters of John Gordon, who built the mill at Gordon Falls, years before, that Lo, the poor Indian, deemed so antagonistic to his peace to remain, and so burned down near 1812. Some of the Babcocks went West and have died since, and, plentiful as they were once, there is not a Babcock in Chester, nor do I think a descendant.

In 1824 John I., Charles, and Moses Brown, of Montville, came to Chester, making the present Abe Brown farm and lumbering on what is now termed the Amos M. Roberts lots, clearing a piece of land close by the Penobscot River, and lumbering on the land lying back of it and in Woodville lying back of Chester. These families gave the name to the islands which lie from one half to two miles below Winn village, and they have ever since borne the name of the Brown Islands, being mostly of rich, luxurious soil and growth, two or three of which have, since 1878-79, been leased from the Indians and cleared up mostly by George S. Ranney, of Winn, who lives close by.

Within five years after the advent of Stratton many others came here to live. But here the writer cannot but note the rapidity of forest growth as evidenced by the Roberts lots, which, stripped largely in 1825 and, thereabouts, were, in half a century afterwards, heavy with a growth of lumber, and considered very valuable. Since then they have been sold and largely stripped of timber, while fire, with devastating fury, has spent its force thereon.

Previous to 1829, when the Military Road was built, communication with the outer world was difficult, and and lumbermen and traders would bring up with labored costly effort in the late fall a scow-load of supplies, leaving the greater part of the goods to be transported by horses or oxen on the ice of the Penobscot in the winters. When Stratton came to Chester there were but seven houses between Piscataquis Falls and Houlton. In 1824 James Tabor, while working out logs, was drowned.

In 1828 Samuel Brown came from Albion also, and located just below Stratton's, buying the field where are Brown's pleasant farm buildings and the residence of his son Abraham Brown, long a pilot on the Penobscot River, when boating was the business of this section and the steamboat was one of the links of civilization and business at Bangor and the military frontier of Houlton.

* By B. F. Fernald, Esq., of Winn.

THE SURVEY.

The town was lotted with long, narrow lots on the river, where the settlers built on the main running along the river, while a very large section of the back part of the town was laid out in mile squares.

From some cause Chester was a long, rather narrow township, lying opposite both Winn and Lincoln, and but little more than the main river road was built or occupied till the Woodville road led to the water-power on the Ehbors, and more recent roads developing the fertile mile squares on the Medunkeunk Stream, at the very lower and eastern limit of the town.

LATER SETTLEMENTS.

The settling of the lower end of the town was commenced a little later, but proceeded quite as fast as upper Chester, becoming, on account of the better soil, the most prosperous part of the town.

In 1825 Ben Walton commenced a farm on the Willis Hamilton place.

James Lindsays came from Dover, New Hampshire, and made a clearing, and built a place where now A. J. Heald has a first-rate farm and farm buildings, almost opposite Lincoln Centre, about 1825.

Jerry Bartlett came in 1826 and made a clearing on the present Goodwin Ireland place, near the shore of the Penobscot and near the mouth of the Medway Road.

Living with Ben Walton, an old man, was John Weston, from Hebron, Maine. None of those above have any descendants in Chester now, but several sons of Weston are residing in the vicinity of Molunkus, Aroostook county. James Lindsay, above referred to, first built a hotel, and with John and George Lindsay also traded very near where Lovitt's house now stands, nearly opposite to Lincoln Centre.

The Lindsay first went to what is known as the Webber mill on the Cambelasse Stream in the upper part of Lincoln, building a dam and starting a mill there, but sold out to Mr. Bemis, and went over to Chester. The mill property has since worked up a large amount of lumber in a very good timbered region, enriching the owners.

In 1827 Edward Beathan came from Pittston, and first located at the very extreme lower end of the town, but afterwards settled just above the Ireland place at the well known Beathan ferry. His son Nat and descendants are still in Chester.

In 1825-26 Rice, of Bangor, and Prescott, of Boston, built a saw-mill and grist-mill on the Medunkeunk Stream, about a mile and one-half from Lincoln Centre, near where Hatch now lives, and John Pratt built a shingle-mill near by soon after. John Boobar made a clearing at Medunkeunk Stream in 1829. Walter Haynes went from Dover, Maine, in 1825, and for four years worked on Medunkeunk Stream and vicinity until 1829, when he started a clearing near where James Wyman has since made a farm, but in 1834 he removed to the place where he now lives, building a large set of buildings in time. His first location was down toward the river, and the old cellar hole may yet be seen. Mr.

Haynes eventually did much for the development of this locality, as in 1840 he built a mill and dam on the Eber Horse, or Eb Horse, or Ehbors Stream, a brook rising in Woodville, flowing into Chester, and tributary to the Medunkeunk Stream. This, in 1843, was burned down, and again in that year rebuilt. It had then been sold to William R. Hersey, who, with his cousin, General S. F. Hersey, afterwards member of Congress for the Fourth Maine Congressional District, were in trade at Lincoln Centre. S. F. Hersey had removed to Bangor, and William R. made a farm a short distance above Lincoln Centre.

Afterwards there had been a mill-dam built down by the road, and in 1853 Haynes bought out Hersey, the mill was torn down, and Hersey rebuilt.

Saw-mills on that stream have been burnt down some four or five times.

THE PROFESSIONS IN CHESTER.

In 1831 Dr. Thomas Lindsay, a brother of John, George, and James, came to Chester township with his son Thomas, also a physician, and engaged in the practice of medicine. Here they remained some three or four years or more. The young man died soon after, and the old doctor removed to Lincoln below the village. Here he died some time since. None of his descendants live in Chester, though a few are still living in Lincoln. These have been the only doctors living in Chester. There has been no lawyer, although George H. Wyman has resided there with his father, James Wyman; and of the ministry Rev. S. Besse has resided in Chester for the last decade, though the church where he holds service (the Baptist), is at Lincoln Centre.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

Under the preaching of Elder Lewis, and later of Elder Jones, a church was early formed in Chester—as early as 1831 or 1832. Contemporary with religion was education, and in 1831 a school-house was built on one of the Roberts lots near Mr. Kyles's, which is the upper district in town. Afterwards one was built where the Mattamiscontis and Wyman roads separate near the Medunkeunk Stream, near Sylvanus Hatch's; then a house near the Chesleys. New houses have since been built on the two lots, the latter known as the Blood school-house, and the fourth house was built just below Walter Haynes's, which is yet standing.

Two other districts cover the school territory of the town—that is the Tash neighborhood, on the Medunkeunk brook, among the mile-square lots and the east or Nash mill on Temple Ireland neighborhood, where, in 1832, near the very edge of the town and Woodville, Temple Ireland, removing from Starks, took up a large tract of land. He died but a few years since, but his widow, a bright, girlish looking, but quite old lady, still survives him, living in the old house built years ago with plain, homelike aspect, and most of her sons and daughters living about her.

A TRAGEDY.

Here an incident is related by a daughter as one of her fixers of time, when in their first experiences. One

Otis, who boarded with her father, came home one night much the worse for liquor, and was ordered by him to sit over on the other side of the fire in the big logging camp and pioneer's home, and not to bother the cook, when seizing a knife, he made a plunge at Ireland to cut his throat; but by a quick movement Ireland escaped with but a slight scratch in his arm, while Otis was captured and soon after imprisoned.

A Mr. Miller, of Portland, whose brother, William H., lived in Howland, and owned considerable property about Piscataquis Falls, then owned most of the township of Chester, excepting the few locations where parties had bought farms and several lots of land. Joshua Carpenter owned several lots.

MORE OF THE SURVEY AND SETTLEMENT.

In 1827-28 the Township No. 1, Range eight, afterwards Chester, was lotted and surveyed by George H. Moore, and he seemed to divine that the back part of the town needed not to be cut into small lots for farming purposes as the front, by leaving them in large lots, while the front was made into long strips with a river frontage of about sixty or seventy rods. In that year also came S. Warren Coombs, a brother of Mrs. Frank Stratton, from Albion, a carpenter and land surveyor, who taught several schools in town. He at once built a large number of houses in town—one the Abe Brown residence. He held office for several years in various capacities after the town was incorporated, and afterwards, in 1837, removed to Mattawamkeag, having married a daughter of Mr. Jenkins and granddaughter of John Gordon, the mill builder, where he now lives, largely employed in land and lumber surveying.

In 1827 David Bunker came from Canaan, not the promised land, but from Somerset county, Maine, and located in Chester where I think Mr. Copeland had made a clearing on what has since been known as the Twombly and Talbot place, nearly opposite where he now resides in Winn. Here he resided till 1832, when he engaged in dam and mill building in Mattawamkeag and business in other localities, and afterwards returned to Chester, where he held many offices. He afterwards removed to Winn, where he now resides on a pleasant farm on Bunker Hill, with pleasant surroundings, a remarkably healthy looking man for one so well advanced in years. His wife, a daughter of James Scott, a pioneer of Chester, Aunt Phebe, as she was called, died in 1881.

Bunker first built the house where William Scott now lives, having married a sister of his, and as he was building at the time the Military Road was in process of construction through Winn, Richard Libby, who had a contract of a mile or so on the road, went across the Penobscot to help raise the house with his crew of road builders. Libby afterwards kept a hotel in Mattawamkeag.

In 1827, and perhaps previous, Samuel Chester came to Chester from Chester, New Hampshire, and gave the name to the town, where he resided many years, afterwards building a large two-story house about midway the length of the town, kept a hotel, started large orchards, became an active business man, holding many offices in the town and being Representative.

Freeman Crocker was an early pioneer in Chester, where the Wymans long since built up old and good farms and old-fashioned, homelike houses. The Crockers have several descendants now in Lincoln. Lee and Freeman seem to be favorite names with them. The Wymans—William, James, and Robert—came from Orono and started orchards and good farms on rather a high point of land nearly opposite Lincoln Village, Indian Island, or Mattawamcook, lying between, on which are several Indian families, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Penobscots usually has his seat of empire here. Penuel Shumway and son-in-law, Ira Pitman, moving planets, settled on the lower Roberts lot, where the Brown school-house now stands, or rather near the shore, and his name is immortalized in Shumway Cove, near by in the Penobscot River. They afterwards made settlements in Winn, near by, and also in Mattawamkeag, afterwards removing to Minnesota, where but a few years since death set at rest his migratory tendencies for the last time, unless religious theory otherwise instructs. James Scott was an early settler in Chester, and his sons, William, Moses, and Luther, still reside in Chester, and also several of their descendants. Most early went to Woodville. William still resides at the old place. Moses and Luther are on the Babcock and other of the oldest farms in Chester. Luther removed to Kingman. Most of them have large families, and nearly all have the Scott characteristics.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

On February 26, 1834, an act of incorporation of Chester was passed by the Legislature at the time of the Governorship of Robert P. Dunlap, and on March 29, 1834, the inhabitants of Township 1, Range 8 met at the house of Jeremiah Hildreth, nearly midway of the town, on the warrant of Gideon J. Newton, Justice of the Peace of Chester, directed to David Haynes, the father of Alvin, of Winn, afterwards prominent in county offices and mail agent, and first mail carrier from Houlton to Bangor. The officers chosen were: Samuel Chesley, Moderator; John M. Lindsay, Clerk; Samuel Chesley, John M. Lindsay, and Alva Chesley, Selectmen, Assessors, and Overseers of the Poor; Dowd Haynes, Constable and Collector; Samuel Chesley, Treasurer. April 21 a voters' meeting was called at the Bartlett House and the Selectmen were made School Committee; four school districts were formed. One hundred and twenty-five dollars was raised for town expenses, including support of the poor, and the then generous sum of two hundred and fifty dollars for support of schools, five hundred dollars for roads, and voted to accept the road as laid out by the Selectmen, three rods wide. It was also voted to have this road opened in three years from June, 1834. This road was some nine and a quarter miles in length, and extended nearly the whole length of the town. This twenty-second article was voted not to authorize the licensing of persons to sell wine, rum, and other spirituous liquors, to be drunk in their stores or shops.

The school districts were: No. 1, to include 3-12, inclusive of back lots 24 and 25, also 1, 2, 9, 10, 16, 17, 21, and 22; No. 2 was 14-25 inclusive, and back lots 3, 11, 18, 19, and 23; No. 3 was 26-37 inclusive, and back lots 5, 6, 13, 14, and 20; No. 4, 38-50, and back lots 7, 8, and 15. At the fall election, at the Bartlett house, the votes were: For Governor, Peleg Sprague 10, Robert Dunlap 21; Representative to Congress, Edward Kent 10, Gorham Parks 21; and the same throughout for Pierce and Rice, Bartlett and Fish, Taylor and Bradley, Carter and Carpenter, while the amendment to the Constitution stood: yeas, 18; nays, 1. On the 29th day of September, 1834, the inhabitants met at the house of Edward Beathan to attend to the jury-box, and to accept alterations in the main road, and to see what the town would do to assist the Irelands to a road. At that meeting S. Warren Coombs was chosen Collector, at seven cents on the dollar, and Edmund Watson, Alvah Chesley, and Frink Stratton were accepted as jurymen, and that the Irelands expend their own road money on their own road to get to the main road.

The following March the inhabitants met at the house of Samuel Chesley. Though only one year a town, they had become suspicious, and chose an Investigating Committee to investigate the affairs of the town, and Edmund Watson, Samuel Chesley, and Jason Weston were chosen. That year there was a sad fall in school money raised, being only seventy-five dollars. But five hundred dollars was raised for roads, and five hundred dollars for town expenses and poor, and Rachel Oaks, one of the poor, was struck off to the lowest bidder, Samuel White, at one dollar and a half per week. But a better consideration was had for the schools, and instead of seventy-five dollars two hundred dollars were raised.

In June, 1835, several marriages were intended, as appears by the records.

In the fall of 1825 it appears only one side voted, as Dunlap for Governor had but ten votes, and so with all the candidates of that party, with not a vote on the other side.

The marriage of William Wynson and Mary B. Adams, of Linden, December 8, 1833, seems to be the first marriage recorded in Chester, by Samuel Chesley, Justice of the Peace, while David Haines married Stephen Haines, of Chester, to Rhoda Wheeler, of Molunkus, July 5, 1835; and James Pond, of Swansville, and Nancy Beathan, of Chester, August 16, 1835, as the records state.

In 1836 the votes at election seem to have been much reduced, being Dunlap thirteen, Kent five. The place of meeting then varied from the house of Samuel Chesley to that of Andrew Spencer, but during all their animosities they were true to the schools, raising two hundred and fifty dollars each year.

May 2, 1837, they held a town meeting to dispose of the public money or surplus revenue from the State, the money being in the hands of Jeremy Nelson, and having given every man, woman, and child a share, they felt so happy they voted to dissolve the meeting without day.

In the election of 1837, Kent, for Governor, had twenty votes, and Gorham Parks seventeen, with others at same rate, and increase of six votes over the previous year. At the election in 1838 Edward Kent had twenty-six votes, and John Fairfield eighteen votes. In that year Samuel Chesley was candidate for the Legislature, and had twenty-four votes. In 1840 they tired of the responsibilities of a town, and chose W. R. Miller as agent to go to Augusta to get the act of incorporation repealed, and Samuel Chesley agent to instruct Miller, but did not succeed. In 1844, ten years after incorporation, the vote was twenty-six and twenty-two, and the same in 1848.

The memory of man or woman I find runneth not to tell of the first birth, death, or marriage in Chester, and the records of Chester, although in black and white, do not distinguish those to the manner born and those from foreign soil.

But one post-office has been established in Chester, supplied by the mail-route from Lincoln Centre to Medway, Walter Haynes being postmaster most of the time.

REMARKS.

Not much more can be said of Chester. It is a quiet farming town, all pursuing the even tenor of their way, devoting themselves to farming and a little lumbering. Several good farms attract attention. John W. Coombs, near Winn, and Abram B. Brown have good, well-kept farms. George Henry Haynes, on the old Chesley place; the sons of Andrew Fleming, Wells Carper, near the centre of the town; A. J. Heald, Rev. S. Besse, the Wymans, and several others near the southean extremity of the town, all have good farms. Several good-sized orchards are to be found in town, notably that of G. H. Haynes.

In 1850 William R. Hersey traded his mill on the Ebhors Stream, and the Scotts have traded it since.

Communication is had with the eastern side of the river by ferry at Lincoln Centre, kept by Lovetts and William Scott; by ferry of Ziba Burrill, near the Winn and Lincoln line, and by Moses Scott's ferry, coming out at Este's mill, in Winn, about two and a half miles below Winn village.

A bridge has been talked of across the Penobscot at Winn village, but it is hardly likely to succeed for several years at any rate.

A new road was laid out in 1881 nearly opposite Winn village, accommodating new settlers in Woodville and those on the county road. On its completion, a ferry will probably be established, running over to Winn village.

Politically, Chester has always been strongly Republican, although the Greenback party captured many in its greatest force.

The first church—Free-will Baptist—was organized at John O. Kyle's in 1831, with about fifty members.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

SAMUEL CHESLEY, ESQ., one of the early settlers of the county, was born in Paris, Maine, October 31, 1788. He received a common town school and academic education, and resided in Paris until he moved with his family to that part of Penobscot county then Township No. 3, now the town of Chester. He came to look for land in 1825, and selected lots Nos. 29 and 30 for a farm, upon which he moved his family in January, 1826. The river was the public road, and this entire region was comparatively a wilderness. He was married March 26, 1814, to Miss Martha Perry, of Paris, who was born November 27, 1791, and died June 23, 1859. Her father, Asa Perry, one of the early settlers of Paris, was formerly of Bridgewater, Massachusetts; her mother was from Taunton, Massachusetts. They first settled on a farm in Paris, where they had five children, viz: Samuel H., of Fort Fairfield, Maine; Addison P., of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Martha J. (Mrs. N. Crockett), deceased; B. Franklin, deceased, and C. Columbus, of Mattawamkeag. After their removal to this county they had five more children: Mary A. (Mrs. Alvin Haynes, 2d), of Lincoln; N. Lincoln, of Milford; Albion P., of Lincoln; Cynthia (Mrs. R. Wyman), of Winn, and Louisa (Mrs. E. Babcock), of Lincoln. Franklin, a member of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Maine Volunteers, died at Franklin City, Louisiana, May 3, 1862. Samuel was the son of Nicholas Chesley, one of the first settlers of Paris, but formerly of New Hampshire. He had five brothers and three sisters, viz: Benjamin, deceased; Nicholas, deceased; Jonathan, deceased; David, deceased; William, deceased; Sarah (Mrs. D. Farrar), deceased, Betsey (Mrs. J. Dinsmore), deceased; Charlotte (Mrs. A. White), of Dixfield, Maine, only survivor. Jonathan, a graduate of Bowdoin College, was for many years a school teacher, but afterwards studied law. He died in Saco, Maine, about the time he was to begin its practice. Samuel, the pioneer, died October 19, 1869, in Chester. To his efforts was the town largely indebted for its incorporation, and he held one or more of its municipal officers during the most of his residence there. He also served as a Representative in the State Legislature. He was a prominent Justice of the Peace, and possessed a judicial mind, with an uncommon share of legal attainments; though but a plain farmer and lumberman, his counsel was often sought in legal questions, and he was more than a match for common cases. Possessing a comprehensive intelligence, connected with a sound and cautious judgment, he was placed higher in the estimation of an intelligent public than is the common lot of man. He shared the privations, struggles, and toils of a pioneer life, and maintained his integrity of character to the last, sharing in part the fruition of his labors.

Mr. Walter Haynes, who first came to Chester in 1825, and settled here in 1829, is a son of Walter and Eleanor Haynes (nee Craig), of Readfield. Walter and Eleanor Haynes had ten children, of whom Walter is the oldest. He was born March 14, 1804, and lived for a few years in Foxcroft, where he followed the milling business. He came to Chester and settled when he was twenty-six years old. He cleared the place where he lives from the standing trees, and now has a good farm on the bank of the Penobscot River. He married Lydia Carlton, daughter of Daniel Carlton, of Foxcroft. This couple have had nine children—Charles, of Minnesota; Walter, also in Minnesota; Daniel, of Winn; Lydia A., widow of Sullivan Keen; Langdon, of Montana; Hiram, deceased; Lovina, deceased; Henry, of Chester; Elvira, wife of Cyrus Smith, of Chester; Converse, of Lincoln Centre; Cynthia, wife of Frank Jenkins, of Danforth, Maine; Martin, of Chester. Mr. Haynes has held many of the prominent town offices, and has been postmaster for over twenty-years. He is well known as one of the oldest settlers and leading men in Chester.

Mr. George H. Haynes, a son of Walter Haynes, whose biography appears in this work, was born June 2, 1842, in the town of Chester. He has always lived on a farm. In 1861 he married Ada Heald, daughter of Andrew J. and Mary Heald. He first settled in Lincoln, where he lived two years. He moved to Chester from Lincoln in 1865 and settled on what is known as the Bunker farm, where he lived two years, when he bought one-half of Mr. Heald's farm and lived there about one and a half years. In 1870 he bought the farm where he now lives, in what is known as the Chesley neighborhood. Here he owns one hundred and sixty acres of good land, and is a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Haynes have six children—Elmer E., Charles C., Jostie M., Agnes, Henry H., and the baby not named. Mr. Haynes has held his position as Selectman for twelve years almost consecutively. He has also been Town Treasurer of Chester. These positions show that he is held in high esteem as a business man by his townsmen.

One of the first settlers in Chester before the town was incorporated was Mrs. Paul Stratton, who came here from Albion, Kennebec county, in 1831. At that time there were very few settlers here. He was then married to Sarah A. Frazier, and had four children. He settled on the place where Mr. William Stratton now lives, and spent the remainder of his life here following the business of farming. Mr. and Mrs. Stratton had ten children, viz: Mary, wife of George Robertson; Eliza, now Mrs. Josiah Snow; William A.; Lewis F., now in Bangor; Jane, now Mrs. James Snow; Eunice S., wife of James P. Crowell, of Orono; George H., now of Minnesota; Ellen D., now Mrs. Otis T. Hooper, of Boston; Martha C., wife of William Jewell, of Gorham, New Hampshire, and Guilford D., of Mattawamkeag. It is quite a remarkable fact that all of this large family are still living. Mrs. Stratton died in April, 1879. Mr. Stratton is still living, being eighty-four years old. William Stratton was born in St. John, New Brunswick, September 5, 1827. He came here with his father and on becoming of age settled in Winn. He lived in Winn nine years, then moved back to Chester, where he has since lived, engaged in farming and lumbering. He married Miss Julia H. Snow, daughter of Israel H. and Sarah H. Snow, of Bangor. They have had eight children, viz: Fred W., Ida M., deceased; Paul, Henry H., Everett B., Sarah A., Charles A., and the baby which died in infancy.

Abram B. Brown is a son of Samuel G. and Mary W.

Brown (nee Mary Coombs) of Albion, Kennebec county. Mr. Brown was a native of New Hampshire, and Mrs. Brown was a native of Islesboro. They had thirteen children, seven of whom grew to maturity, viz: Lydia C., now Mrs. Jonathan Gilman, of Bangor; Lois B., wife of Jeremiah D. Webber, of Winn; Abbie M., now Mrs. Nicholas H. Huston, of Winn; Abram S. Warren, deceased; Lindley H., deceased; Clarissa J., deceased. Mr. Brown followed the business of farming, but held prominent town offices during his life. He died in January, 1872; Mrs. Brown died in 1870. Abram Brown was born November 5, 1827, in Albion. He came to Chester with his parents when a child, and has ever since lived here. He married Miss Ellen Rich, daughter of Robert and Martha Rich, of Mattawamkeag. They have five children, viz: Lida, Gilman B., Willie W., Edith, and Harriet C. Mr. Brown owns a good farm on the river in Chester. He formerly was a pilot on the river. He has served as Selectman and Overseer for over eighteen years, which speaks well for his ability as a business man. Mrs. Brown died February 9, 1879.

Mr. John W. Coombs, of Chester, is a son of Jonathan and Ann Coombs, nee Ann Monroe, of Albion, Kennebec county. They came from Albion and settled in Winn in 1843. They had seven children, five of whom grew to maturity, viz: Angeline, now Mrs. William Bryant, of Passadumkeag; John W., Joseph, deceased; Franklin, of Winn; Harrison, also of Winn; and two died in infancy. Mr. Coombs always followed farming for a business. He died July 1, 1876. Mrs. Coombs is still living on the old homestead. John W. Coombs was born October 21, 1832; on becoming of age he married Harriet B. Stratton, of Chester, and settled where he now lives, just opposite Winn, in Chester. He cleared up the farm, and now has a hundred acres of good land. Mr. and Mrs. Coombs have no children, but are bringing up two adopted children. Mr. Coombs has generally followed farming, though he was formerly a pilot on the river here. Mr. Coombs has not been engaged in public life to any extent.

Mr. S. Besse, of Chester, is a son of John and Betsey

Besse, nee Betsey Tripp, who were from Massachusetts. They had fourteen children, of whom Mr. S. Besse was the sixth. He was born in Paris, Maine, June 25, 1815. He spent his early life on a farm, and on coming of age he attended school for several years, not having had an opportunity to get an education earlier in life. After attending school at Hebron Academy he settled in Lincoln, where he lived twenty-five years. He was all this time, or nearly so, the pastor of the Baptist church. On account of failing health he retired to the farm where he now lives, in Chester, in 1870. While in Lincoln he was a member of the School Board for ten or fifteen consecutive years. Mr. Besse now owns a good farm in Chester, about three-fourths of a mile from Lincoln Centre. He is and has for years been one of the pronounced temperance men of this region. Since his removal to Chester he has been one of the Selectmen, or Town Treasurer, or School Committeeman, almost every year. In 1877 or 1878 he represented the District composed of Lincoln, Patten, and other towns in the Legislature. He is a man that is well known and highly esteemed, as his public record shows.

STATISTICS, ETC.

Chester had 277 inhabitants in 1840, 340 in 1850, 318 in 1860, 350 in 1870, and 362 in 1880. Its period of retrogression, it will be observed, was between 1850 and 1860, since when it has not only held its own, but made some advance in point of population.

The voters in Chester numbered 73 in 1860, 75 in 1870, and 97 in 1880. The increase by thirty per cent during the last decade is quite noticeable.

Valuation of estates: 1860, $27,902; 1870, $47,103; 1880, $42,760.

The following named were the town officers in 1880: G. Henry Haynes, A. B. Brown, Sylvester Besse, Selectmen; William A. Scott, Town Clerk; A. L. Chandler, Treasurer; J. D. Kyle, School Supervisor; A. L. Chandler, James W. Wyman, Constables; George H. Haynes, George H. Hathorn (quorum), Justices.

CLIFTON.

Clifton was formerly known as Jarvis's Gore, and is described in the act of the General Court of Massachusetts, creating the county of Penobscot, as "The Gore east of Brewer." Notwithstanding these designations, the town, as it now lies, has but partial resemblance to a gore. About two-thirds of its length and breadth, in the central and southern parts, has rather the shape of a parallelogram, while the northern part narrows from the westward during but little more than half its width, and is bounded on the north by a nearly east and west line. This boundary, however, is but two and one-fourth miles long. Beyond it lies Bradley. The angling or gore line on the northwest, four and one-half miles long, also separates Clifton from Bradley, and, for a short distance on the extreme southwest end of it, from Eddington. The west line is three and three-fourths miles long, and also lies between Eddington and Clifton. The south limit is five and one-fourth miles long, and beyond it lies the town of Otis, in Hancock county. The east line of Clifton is unbroken, and is the longest boundary of all, being seven miles in length. Upon parts of each of the confines, save the north, lie small lakes or ponds—Hopkins upon the eastern, Spectacle and Burnt upon the southern, Fitts and Nichols upon the western and northwestern. The town is ten and one-third miles distant from Bangor, upon a line nearly due east and west between the two towns.

As already intimated, there is a great deal of water in and about Clifton. The largest sheet that enters it is Nichols Pond, in the northwest. This lies mostly in Bradley, but partly in Eddington, and reaches Clifton only by two small bays, covering about one hundred and sixty acres. Into the northernmost of these, close to the town line, flows a short creek, formed half a mile eastward by the union of the Mill Stream, flowing from the Parks Pond, near the centre of the town, a sheet two-thirds of a mile long by three-eighths broad, and covering one hundred and forty acres, and the Trout Brook, which rises just south of Eagle Mountain, and receives the small tributaries from the southward on its way. The other bay in Clifton also receives a small affluent, which heads at the foot of Bald Mountain. Another brook, flowing from Davis Pond to the south bay of Nichols Pond, just in the edge of Eddington, courses through a short arc in Clifton. Immediately at its entrance into the town it is joined by the outlet of Snow Shoe Pond, a small lake of thirty acres, also near the town line, a little southwest of Bald Mountain. This outlet runs for about half a mile in Clifton, then for a mile or less in Eddington, and finally for another half-mile near the town line to the junction with the outlet of Davis Pond. Near the southwest corner of the town is Fitts Pond, one and one-eighth miles long by three-eighths broad in its widest part, with a rivulet at the head, coming in from the west of Snow Shoe Pond. A hundred rods east of the middle of Fitts is Little Burnt Pond, half a mile north of Burnt Pond (sixty acres), which lies mostly in Hancock county, and with which its little sister is connected by a narrow outlet. Nearly two miles east of these is Spectacle Pond, a long, narrow lake of one hundred acres, also reaching into Otis, but with about a mile of its length in Clifton. It also has a short headwater, with a very little lake upon it. Hopkins Pond, in the southeast of the town, lies mostly in Hancock county, but has about half a square mile (three hundred and forty acres) of surface in Penobscot, with a small tributary lying wholly in Clifton, and rising near the corner of the town. The enumeration of lakes is completed with the mention of Owl's Pond, a small one near Eagle Mountain, with a petty headwater from the southeast and a short outlet into Parks Pond; and of Cranberry Pond, which contains forty acres. Some smaller ponds, however, give life and beauty to the scenery, and furnish some power for mills. The north part or "gore" of the town contains no ponds except small portions of Parks and Nichols; but is amply watered by the Bradbury Brook Branch, which itself divides into two branches, one on each side of Little Peaked Mountain, and joins a small branch near the north line, whence it flows into Bradley, as the Great Works Stream, intersecting that town throughout.

The incidental mention already of so many "mountains" leads easily to the remark that much of the surface of Clifton is broken, and parts of it quite abruptly hilly, making, with the ponds, its scenery decidedly varied and picturesque. The town derives its name, indeed, from the cliffy character of several of the larger hills. On the west side, about two-thirds of a mile from the boundary and half-way down the town from the ending of the gore, is Bald Mountain, whose very name partially describes and identifies it. Three miles north of east from it, near Owl's Pond, is Eagle Mountain. A little more than a mile north of this is another eminence of respectable height, and half a mile northeast of it is the well-known Little Peaked Mountain, a prominent object in the landscape, whose height has been ascertained by President Fernald, of the State College, by trigonometrical measurement to be 1,125 feet. About the same distance south of east from it, and on the east town line, is a rather long elevation known as the Peaked Mountain. Many subordinate heights, which need not be recapitulated here, appear at other points in the town. The famous Black Cap Mountain lies just outside the town, in the border of Eddington, abreast of Fitts Pond.

Notwithstanding the occupation of some space by these mountains and lakes, there is still abundant area left for cultivation and other industry; and the beginnings of numerous and prosperous settlement have been well made in Clifton. Most of it, so far, rests along the road which comes from the river road on the Penobscot, at Eddington's Bend, runs through Eddington to Davis Pond, and there makes an angle to the northeastward into Clifton, through which it runs in the same general direction to its exit into Hancock county, between the Bradbury Brook Branch and Peaked Mountain. This is the stage road from Eddington to Amherst, in the latter county.

Residences are quite thickly scattered along the six or seven miles of the river road in Clifton. Upon it are public school-houses, one mile from the west town line, at the road junction near Parks Pond (No. 2), and at another union of roads somewhat northwest of Little Peaked Mountain (No. 1). The highway coming in here is a neighborhood route of near two miles' length, with a short side road to Peak Mountain. The road which comes in west of Parks Pond, at School No. 2, is a through cross-road, connecting the first with the road of second importance in the town. It leaves the principal wagon-route at the Penney Store, near the crossing of Trout Brook, where the only post-office as yet in the town is kept, and runs in a general southeasterly direction to a point three-fourths of a mile from the southeast corner of the town, where it passes into Hancock county. Upon this is School No. 5, a mile east of Spectacle Pond; the locality known as Owl's Head, whence a trail runs to Spectacle Pond; a cemetery directly above the junction of the cross-road aforesaid; School No. 4 a third of a mile above that; the hall of the Independent Order of Good Templars half a mile beyond that, and at no great distance the store and post-office already mentioned at the junction with the main road. North of this latter highway there is yet no road of importance in the town. The nearest railroad is the Bangor and Bucksport Narrow-gauge, along the river in Eddington.

At places upon the surface of Clifton, there are huge granite boulders and large pudding-stones and conglomerate rocks, some of them containing a thousand cubic feet or more. Occasionally a shell-rock is also found. The area of the town is about 20,150 acres.

The first clearings in this town were made in 1812, by Messrs. Benjamin and Israel Barnes. Benjamin Penney and his family came in 1816. Their descendants still reside in considerable number in the town, and several of them, as will be seen below, are among its public officers. Among the early settlers were also Ebenezer Davis and Mr. Parks.

This tract took the early name of Jarvis's Gore, from an original owner; but, when it came to be incorporated, August 7, 1848, it took the name of Maine, soon subsequently becoming Clifton, as a more musical and appropriate designation.

Jarvis's Gore, which must then have included more than the present Clifton, which was not yet settled, had 50 inhabitants in 1810. The population had nearly tripled in 1820, when it was 139. We have no reports for the next two decades; but in 1850, two years after it had become Maine or Clifton, the population was 306. In 1860 it was 307, in 1870 348, and in 1880 350. It has thus increased, while other towns have fallen off.

The number of polls reported from Jarvis's Gore in 1820 was 20. In 1860 the number had risen to 66; in 1870 to 88, and in 1880 to 98.

The valuation of estates in these years, respectively, was $5,790, $36,529, $58,752, and $44,259.

The people of Clifton are engaged to some extent in lumbering and the manufacture of long and short lumber; but the chief industry is still agriculture. The farms produce hay, grain, potatoes, and other crops, in considerable quantities.

One general store is kept, and one establishment for millinery and fancy goods.

Churches have been built in the town for Calvinistic Baptist, Free Baptist, and Christian societies; but the Free Baptist is the only one now supplied with a pastor. The Rev. Benjamin Penney, of the old pioneer family, ministers to this. He is also, we believe, postmaster at the only post-office as yet in the town.

There are five school-houses, and as many district schools, in Clifton.

The Clifton Lodge, No. 48, Independent Order of Good Templars, was organized December 20, 1877. It meets on Saturday evenings.

OFFICERS FOR 1880.

John B. Rooks, D. W. Leonard, W. H. Parks, Selectmen; Daniel Scott, Jr., Town Clerk; E. J. Penney, Treasurer; M. F. Chick, School Supervisor; E. D. Penney, Constable; R. G. Chick, Moose Warden; E. Chick (Quorum); John B. Rooks, (Trial) Justices.

It is noticeable that this town, although little more than ten miles from Bangor, still has a Moose Warden.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

The father of Benjamin Penney was born in the town of Wells, county of York, Maine, in 1788. When a youth he went to Shapleigh, where he lived until his married, when he moved to Amherst, and from there to Eddington. In 1816 he moved to Jarvis's Gore, now Clifton, where he died in 1877, at the age of ninety-two years. He was by occupation a farmer and lumberman. His wife was Meribah Chick, born in Shapleigh in 1781. After marriage they removed to Jarvis's Gore, now Clifton, where she died in 1858, aged seventy-seven. Benjamin was the seventh child in the family, and was the first child born in Clifton, in 1818. Other children were Susan, who married Ebenezer Davis, by whom she had two children, and after his death she married Mr. Woodbury, of Eddington; Joseph married Louisa Moore, and has seven children; Abigail married Thomas Graves, and is the mother of nine children; J. Calvin married Dorcas Davis, and died leaving eight children; Jarvis S. married Louisa Ames, and has five children; Esther married William Graves, and has three children; P. G. Penny married Susan Fox, and has seven children; Luther married Lydia Parks, and has two children; Abram C. married Francis A. Campbell, and has seven children. Benjamin Penny while a youth followed farming, and since marriage he has been engaged in lumbering, milling, mercantile business, and farming. He was married to Olive H. Smith in 1839, and by this union had three children—Maribah, married Thomas Debeck, and died leaving one child, who lives with Mr. Penny; Benjamin W., died unmarried, and Eeva S., who remains single. The father of Mrs. Penny was James Smith, and her Jerusha Moore. Mr. Penny has during his life held all the town offices, and was Postmaster nine years. He was formerly a Republican, but for the past two years has been a Greenbacker. For twenty-eight years he has been a clergyman in the Freewill Baptist Church.

Joseph Penny was born in the town of Shapleigh, York county, Maine. When about two years of age he accompanied his parents to Eddington, and after a few years' residence to Clifton, where he yet resides, aged seventy-two years. He was born in 1809, and during most of his life has been a farmer and lumberman. His wife was Louisa Moore, who was born in Vassalboro, Maine. She was married in Mariaville, to Mr. Penny, October 6, 1830, and died at Clifton, January 6, 1871, aged sixty-six years. Edward J. Penny was the second child. He married Helen L. Bradbury, and by her had two children, who reside at home. Mr. Penny has held most of the township offices. In politics he is a Republican. The other children of Joseph Penny were Mary S., Edwin Archer, Eben D., Arthur R., Susan D., Arvilla L., Viola W.

The father and mother of Luther Penny were natives of Shapleigh, Maine. Their children were Susan, Joseph, Abigail, Jarvis, Esther, Berya, Peregrine G., Calvin, Luther, Abram. Luther Penny was born in Clifton, where he now resides, in 1823. While a youth he worked at farming, and since he was married has been a lumberman. His wife is Lydia Parks, to whom he was married in 1847. They have two children now living—Augusta A., married to Orlando Tibbets, and has one child; Ruth, married to Edwin Jordan. The father of Mrs. Penny was Thomas Parks; her mother was Keziah Rowe. Mr. Penny has held several town offices, and is now School Agent. In politics he is a Republican. He owns a farm and also the mills of the place.

Abraham C. Penny was born in Jarvis Gore, now Clifton, in 1826, in which place he has always lived, his business being farming and lumbering. He married, in 1831, Frances A. Campbell, who was born in the town of Charleston, she being but sixteen at the time of her marriage. By this union have been born seven children, two of whom are deceased. They are—John, who died young; Sylvia M., married Oakman Rooks; George, died young; Frances A., married Nathan Mayo; Leander and Leannie (twins), who reside at home unmarried; and Inez, also at home. In his political belief Mr. Penny is a Republican.

Oliver Eddy was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1785. When a child his parents moved to Eddy Valley, and a few years later to Eddington. He entered the service of the country and was killed at the battle of Fort Erie in 1814, aged twenty-nine years. His wife, Haunah Mann, was born in Massachusetts, and died at Eddington in 1844, aged sixty-three years. She had three children: Oliver C., Charles, and Lovina. Oliver C. was the eldest child. During his early manhood he was a seafaring man, but after marriage he engaged in farming. His wife was Eliza Penny, to whom he was married in 1839. Their children were: Elias (deceased); Charles H., killed in the battle of the Wilderness, in 1864. Fannie O. married Henry Rooks and has five children. Wyman O., living at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Loren O., unmarried. Mr. Eddy has held several township offices. In politics he is a Greenbacker. His son Wyman O. was also a soldier in the late war, in which he enlisted when but thirteen years and nine months of age.

Rufus Rooks was born in Bucksport, Hancock county, Maine, June 16, 1802. Soon after his birth his parents removed to Orrington, where he remained until he was twenty-one years of age, after which he came to Jarvis Gore, now Clifton, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died December 2, 1873, aged seventy-one years and six months. He followed the vocation of a farmer. His wife was Orilla Boobar, who was born in Milo, Maine, May 9, 1810. When about ten years of age her parents removed to Chester, where she was married March 11, 1830. With her husband she lived at Clifton until her death, December 20, 1871. John B. Rooks, their oldest child, was born in Clifton, February 3, 1831. He was married to Eliza M. Campbell, October, 1854, and by this union had three children: Ella F. (deceased); Florence A., married Fred W. Bowden and has one child, Sarah C.; Clarence H., unmarried. Mrs. Rooks's father was John Campbell, and her mother Sarah Doble. Mr. Rooks has held township office, and is now First Selectman and Assessor. Formerly a Republican, he is now a Greenbacker. The other children of Rufus Rooks are George F., Joseph A., Lydia R. (deceased), Cynthia O., Drusilla B., Rufus H., Amos O., Charles M., and Oakman L.

Ebenezer Davis was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester county, Mass., April 29, 1787. When twelve years of age he removed with his parents to Eddington, where he remained about thirty-one years. He then removed to Clifton, where he died July 1, 1850, aged sixty-one years. He was a merchant, lumberman, and farmer. Susan Penny, who became his wife, was born in the year 1807, in Shapleigh, York county, Maine, and when quite young removed with her parents to Clifton, where she was married in October, 1824. Daniel W. Davis, their oldest child, was born in Eddington in 1825. The next child, Eben, died when five years of age, August 19, 1835. Daniel W. Davis has always followed farming as an occupation. He was married September 9, 1849, to Almira D. Rich, by whom he has nine children: Helen M. married George F. Winchester, of Holden, and has one child. George E. is unmarried; Marcia (deceased), Leavenis L., Lucia A., Gracie A., Susie A., Carrie L., Irwin W. Mrs. Davis's father was Reuben Rich; her mother, Almira Davis. Daniel W. Davis was elected to the Legislature in 1856, and served one term. In politics he is a Democrat.

Elisha Chick was born in Shapleigh, Maine, in 1806. His early life was passed in Aurora, where he remained until twenty-one years of age, when he came to Clifton, where he has since resided. His wife was Mary Ann Parks, who was born in Holden, but grew to womanhood in Clifton, whence her parents removed when she was a child, and where she was married. She died in 1852, aged forty-two years. Their children were William, Mary Jane, Moses F., Lucy Ann, Auriville, Lovicia, Susan, Thomas, who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness in 1864; Lucinda, and Mary Etta. Moses F., the third child, was born in Clifton in 1846. He has been a farmer and lumberman. He was married January 1, 1868, to Nancy G. Campbell, daughter of John and Sarah Doble Campbell. Mr. Chick was a member of the State Legislature in 1867, and is now Supervisor of Schools. Is a member of the Free-will Baptist Church, and in politics is a Republican.

The father of Daniel Walker Leonard was born in Old Sharon, Norfolk county, Massachusetts, in 1781, where he lived until about eighteen years of age, when he moved to the town of Knox, where he died in 1835. His wife was Experience Walker, who was born in Marshfield, Massachusetts, in 1786. When eighteen years of age, she removed to Knox, Maine, where she was married, and lived until 1858, when she moved to Bangor, where she died in 1872, aged eighty-six years. Their family consisted of three children: Anna, William L., and Daniel. The latter was born in Knox in 1823. His business has been that of farmer, mechanic, and teacher. He was married in 1846 to Alvena J. Haskell, and had one child, now deceased. Mrs. Leonard died, and he married Lizzie R. Huntington in 1855, by whom he has one child, Fred G. Mrs. Leonard was a daughter of Stephen Huntington and Betsey W. Horn.

Simon Crosby was born in the town of Hampden, Maine, where he lived until ten years of age, when the family moved to Fox Islands, Hancock county, Maine, where he lived about sixteen years. He afterwards lived a short time at Eddington, when he came to Clifton, where he died in 1871, aged seventy-three years. His wife was Esther Lewis, who was born at Fox Island in 1803. Samuel L. Crosby, the first child, was born at Fox Island October 13, 1821. He married Rebecca Bragg July 15, 1853. She died, leaving one daughter, Mary E., who married Charles E. Clough, and has two children. Mr. Crosby is a Republican in politics; in his religious belief he is a Freewill Baptist. During his life he has held township office. The other children of Simon Crosby were Mary Ann, William (deceased), Margaret, Benjamin, Nancy, Kiskey, Sarah J., Lucinda, Eben, Susan, Abby, and Stephen R.

CORINNA.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

Corinna is another of the even, square thirty-six mile townships in the westernmost part of the county. It is the first of the second tier or range of such towns, reckoning from the north and west lines of the county. Its western neighbor is St. Albans, in Somerset county. It is bounded on the north by Dexter, on the east by Exeter, and the south by Newport. Weymouth Pond lies upon its western border, and another small lake stretches into the southwest corner. The town is sixteen miles distant from Bangor, in an air line. It illustrates the carelessness with which distances are calculated or estimated, when one finds, in what is probably the most important authority for the statistics of the State, the statement that Corinna is thirty miles distant from Bangor.

This town, we have seen, is bounded altogether by invisible and artificial lines. Those other works of man, more apparent and scarcely less important, known as wagon roads, cut up the town with surprising multiplicity and minuteness. From Corinna village alone, at the foot of the large pond between it and West Corinna, radiate no less than seven highways, five of which are leading roads running out of the town, from which two or three of them make their exit in two branches. Another through east and west road passes West Corinna. It has School No. 3 and a cemetery upon it, about two-thirds of a mile from the east town line, besides the public and semi-public buildings at West Corinna. Five north and south roads intersect the entire town with more or less directness, all of them making some breaks or jags at the cross roads, but all of them finding their way across the town, from Dexter to Newport. Connecting these and the transverse lines, and also accommodating the smaller neighborhoods, are a considerable number of minor wagon-ways, making it one of the very best provided towns, in this respect, in the entire county. The Dexter & Newport branch of the Maine Central Railroad also crosses the town from north to south in a course of six and one-half miles within its limits, passing Corinna and West Corinna villages on its way across the territory of the town.

As may readily be supposed of a town so excellently equipped with facilities of movement, it is well and somewhat densely populated. Contrary to the statement which must be made of the average town in this county, it has scarcely a square mile of territory in one tract which has not an inhabitant. The thickest settlements are upon the road northwest from Corinna Station, through Morse's Corners, a hamlet less than two miles distant, where are the Union Church and School No. 10. Nearly one and one-half miles further, about half a mile from the east line of the town, is School No. 2. Upon the extension of this road through Corinna village, at the cross-roads a mile away, is School No. 16, in a well-settled region. The east and west road through West Corinna is also well settled; the Town Farm is about two-thirds of a mile west of the village. There are, indeed, no long stretches of highway in the whole town, without at least one civilized habitation. Post-offices are located now only at Corinna village and Corinna Centre, the latter being at a cross-roads nearly equidistant from Corinna, West Corinna, and Morse's Corners, and not far, as its title hints, from the centre of the town. Here also are the Town House, School No. 5, and a cemetery. A Union Academy, Union Church, and public school are situated at Corinna village; and numerous school-houses, stores, mechanic shops, and mills, in other parts of the town.

None of the waters of Corinna are specially large or important. Ponds of some size cover several spots in the town: as, Mower's and Weymouth's Ponds in the northwest, the latter of which goes a little way into Somerset county; the sheet of water before mentioned, one and one half miles long, between the Corinna villages; another of nearly two miles' length, but narrow, on the other side of the railroad, from near Morse's Corners southwestward; a small one near the southeast corner of the town; and mere bits of ponds at West Corinna and near School No. 2. Each of the ponds in general has streams flowing into and from it. In the southwest of the town three brooks flow into the Mulliken Stream, which goes out into Newport almost broad enough to be itself considered a lake. The Dexter Stream comes in from Dexter, receives a number of tributaries before entering the expansion between Corinna and West Corinna, and flows thence into Newport, receiving the waters of the neighboring long lake on the way. Into this flows the Alder Stream, from the north and northwest of the town. Some of the heads of Crooked Brook are also in the eastern part of Corinna.

EARLY CONDITION AND PURCHASE.*

Situated on neither of the great thoroughfares between the Penobscot and Kennebec Rivers, Corinna was not early selected by the pioneer settlers of the State. In 1804, however, on the 30th of June, the land was sold by the State of Massachusetts. A young man of now unknown name, having contracted for the purchase of the township, but being unable to pay for it, sold his interest to Dr. John Warren, a brother of the Revolutionary hero, General Joseph Warren, for two cents per acre. In the heart of a Maine forest, situated on no large body of water, the territory was not then especially inviting, even to the Indian. Its history does not abound in stories of the tomahawk and scalping-knife. The beaver, unmolested, built his dam; the bear and the wolf ranged with safety along the quietly-running stream. Fish were abundant, but not all were of good quality. The plash of the trout and the pickerel, the snarl of the wolf, the snap of the fox, the growl of the bear, and the song of the bird, were all the sounds of living beings that broke the stillness.

FURTHER DESCRIPTION.

At the time of its purchase by Dr. Warren, this was described as "the Township numbered four, in the Fourth Range of townships north of the Waldo Patent," Somerset county, District of Maine, Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Now, it is the second town from the north in the most western tier of towns in Penobscot county, State of Maine. The town is crossed from north to south by the Dexter Stream, the eastern branch of the Sebasticook. The eastern part is drained by a tributary of the Kenduskeag, which in turn flows into the Penobscot. Consequently, the town forms a part of the watershed between the Kennebec and Penobscot Rivers.

The surface is undulating, forming a part of the plain that extends northward from the Dixmont hills to the region of Mount Katahdin. Traces of the glacial period are seen in small boulders of granite dropped here and there, and the "horseback" extending along the east side of the stream south of Corinna village. This ridge is about eighty rods in length, is elevated fifteen to twenty feet, and extends from north-northeast to south-southwest. It consists for the most part of gravel, covered with a soil of sandy loam. South of the village, at the lower extremity of the horseback, the stream receives a tributary from the east called Alder Stream Brook.

The higher land consists of yellow, sandy loam, and the valleys of black vegetable deposit and clay loam. A ledge containing quartz, mixed with a variable amount of gold, silver, lead, and copper, underlies the greater part of the town, and crops out in the northern and eastern parts.

The soil is good, and in general the farmer gets good return for the labor and capital spent upon his fields. The tract was once well wooded—the hills with the oak, birch, beech, and maple; the valleys with ash, cedar,

* The remainder of this chapter, except a few statistical and other notes, has been prepared for this work by Professor Wyman B. Piper, Principal of the Corinna Academy, and a thoroughly competent writer, as we think the readers of his sketch will cordially agree.

spruce, juniper, and hemlock; while, scattered throughout the town, the familiar Maine emblem towered above its neighbor of less stately habit.

THE PIONEERS.

Soon after the purchase of the township, Dr. Warren gave to Samuel Lancey, Esq., 170 acres of land near the centre, for bushing out a road east and west across the township, and building a house and barn upon the land. 'Squire Lancey cut the bushes from the proposed road, and upon the land now owned and occupied by Jacob Philbrick and Winkworth Allen, erected hewed frames for his house and barn. Around these buildings he cleared ten acres of land. He partly covered the barn frame, but did not finish the house frame. The barn was afterwards used for the first religious meetings of the early settlers of the town.

Previously two men, Isaac and Moses Hodgdon, who were surveying Exeter, having completed that town, came into Corinna to run it out. They entered the southeast corner and built their camp. Their provisions having failed, Isaac went to East Corinth for supplies. Moses and another man busied themselves in felling trees while he was away.

The next year two men by the name of Goodhue came to the same place and completed felling eighteen acres. From this they obtained a crop of corn the first year, after which they abandoned their claim, leaving the corn to rot in the bins into which they had gathered it. Their nearest neighbors were at East Corinth, sixteen miles away; their only road a line on spotted trees.

Among the first who came with their families was a Mr. Chase. He built himself a log cabin, and to this brought his wife. Here, it is said, the first child born in the township looked upon his forest home. Chase, becoming dissatisfied, left his wife and children and went to Massachusetts. His wife afterwards married a man by the name of Hartwell.

Along the road bushed out by Lancey settled Thomas Barton, James Smith, Joseph Pease, and Ebenezer Nutter. Barton was accounted a good citizen, but held no important offices. He had formerly served in the Revolutionary war. After the act pensioning the soldiers of the Revolution he drew his pension, and is reported in the census of 1840 as one of the four Revolutionary soldiers living in the town. James Smith lived on the farm now owned and occupied as the Town Farm. He held the office of Constable after the town was organized, and is reported as a good officer. He reared a family of four children. Joseph Pease lived in the eastern part of the town, and afterwards sold his farm to Henry Dearborn, a tanner and shoemaker from North Durham, New Hampshire. Pease was one of the first Board of Selectmen. Ebenezer Nutter was a single man, and lived in the western part of the town.

From this time the history of the town has been the history of its citizens. The township furnished no soldiers for the War of 1812, and not yet being incorporated it was not subject to a draft. Therefore it became the refuge of those of the adjoining towns who were frightened at the roar of the British Lion.

Dr. Warren, hoping to induce settlers to come to the township, hired Captain Joseph Ireland and his nephew, Joseph Ireland, to erect a mill on the stream. They came from Bloomfield and built their mill. One end of it was used for sawing lumber, and the other for grinding grain. One run of stones was all the Irelands put in, and the pioneer farmers brought their grists to be ground and carried it home unbolted on their horses' backs. The records of births and deaths show that these farmers were of good stock, raising large families and living to a ripe old age.

The second road bushed out was from the site of this mill to the one opened by 'Squire Lancey. Supplies were brought from Bangor on horseback, the pay for which was hauled out to the river on "hoopling" sleds.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

In December, 1816, an act of incorporation was introduced into the General Court of Massachusetts, making Warren Township, No. 4, the town or Corinna. It was named for a daughter of Dr. Warren. Below is given the text of the act of incorporation, together with the warrant issued for the first town meeting:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixteen. An Act incorporating the town of Corinna, in the county of Somerset.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the township numbered Four in the fourth range of townships north of the Waldo Patent, in the county of Somerset, as contained within the following described boundaries, be and is hereby incorporated as a town by the name of Corinna, viz: East by the town of Exeter, north by the town of Newport, and west by the town of St. Albans; and the inhabitants of the said town of Corinna are thereby vested with all the powers and privileges, and shall also be subjected to all the duties and requisitions of other towns according to the Constitution and the laws of this Commonwealth.

SECTION 2. Be it further enacted that any Justice of the Peace for the county of Somerset, upon application therefor, is hereby empowered to issue a warrant directed to a freehold inhabitant of the said town of Corinna, requesting him to notify and warn the qualified voters therein to meet at such time and place in the same town as shall be appointed in the said warrant, for the choice of such officers as towns are by law empowered and required to choose or appoint at their annual town meetings in March or April.

In the House of Representatives, December the 10th, 1816, this bill, having had three several readings, passed to be enacted.

(Signed) TIMOTHY BIGELOW, Speaker.

In Senate, December 11th, 1816, this Bill having had two several readings, passed to be enacted.

(Signed) JOHN PHILLIPS, President.

December 11, 1816, approved, JOHN BROOKS.

Secretary's Office, } A true copy,
December 28, 1816. } Attest: A. BRADFORD,
Secretary of Commonwealth.

SOMERSET, SS:

To John Eliot, one of the principal inhabitants of the town of Corinna, in the county of Somerset; Greeting:

By an act of incorporation on the tenth [eleventh] day of December, eighteen hundred and sixteen, the inhabitants of the said town of Corinna are vested with all the powers and privileges, and shall be subjected to all the duties and requisitions of other towns; and

WHEREAS, by law it is made the duty of some justice of the peace to call a meeting of said inhabitants, application being made to me the subscriber, one of the Justices of the Peace within and for the county of Somerset, for to call a meeting in said town of Corinna.

These are, therefore, in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to request you to notify the freeholders and other inhabitants qualified by law to vote in town affairs, to assemble at the dwelling-house of Benjamin Hiltons on Saturday, the first day of March, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and seventeen. at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for to act on the following articles, viz:

First, to choose a Moderator to govern said meeting.

Second, to choose a Town Clerk, Selectmen, Assessors, Constable, and all other town officers which towns have a right to choose by the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Given under my hand and seal this seventeenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen.

SAMUEL LANCEY.

At that town meeting William Elder, Joseph Pease, and Constant Southard were elected Selectmen, and William Elder, Town Clerk. The following is recorded:

Voted that the collectorship be put up at vendue, which was accordingly done, and struck off to Benjamin Hilton, on condition that he give five per cent. and secure bond.

At that meeting no money was voted to be raised; but at a meeting held April 7, 1817, it was voted to raise two hundred dollars for the support of schools, and one hundred dollars for the necessary town expenses.

March 31, 1817, fifty votes were cast for Governor of Massachusetts, General Henry Dearborn receiving forty-two, and General John Brooks, already the incumbent, but eight. For Lieutenant-Governor, General William King had forty-two votes, and the Hon. William Phillips seven. William Moor received forty-six votes for Senator, there being no opposition.

For three years the annual town meetings were called in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

When the question of separation of Maine was put to the vote of the people, the town of Corinna cast thirty-five votes in favor of the proposition. William Elder was elected a delegate to meet with the delegates from other towns, at the court-house in Portland, to frame a Constitution for the State of Maine. The action of the committee being presented to the towns for approval, Corinna unanimously voted to accept the Constitution December 6, 1819.

April 3d, the following year, the Hon. William King, the first Governor of Maine, received all the votes cast, being forty-eight in number. William Elder was elected Representative to the Legislature. Becoming dissatisfied with some of the county officers for the ensuing year, Abraham Bean, Thomas Brown, and Ebenezer Nutter were appointed a committee to petition the Governor and Council to remove Benjamin Adams, Sheriff, and Warren Preston, Esq., Judge of Probate for Somerset county. Whether or not their prayer was granted, does not appear from the record.

THE STORY OF MILLS AND ROADS.

In the meantime the mill built by the Irelands was rotting down. The Irelands left the mill privilege and purchased a home in the northern part of Newport. A few years afterwards, in 1825, William Moor, Esq., bought the Ireland mill site, spliced the posts of the old mill, and put in one run of stones for grinding grain. The mill was run one year without a bolt; but the following year a hand bolt was used.

'Squire Moor built himself a house near his mill, on the east side of the stream, where now is the Corinna House. The material for building he purchased in Newport. He afterward built a public house west of the stream, about twenty rods from his mill. This old house remains at the present time as one of the ancient landmarks, and is familiarly known as the "Bee-hive." From that time to this day the settlement at this place has been known as Moor's Mills.

Until the incorporation of the town no roads were regularly laid out. Each citizen bore his respective share of the burdens in opening highways. None were better than the logging roads in the swamps of to-day. After Corinna became a town it was necessary to build highways, and money was liberally raised for this purpose. The oldest settlers say that the first tree cut upon the town roads was a birch, and grew in the eastern part of the town under the hill on which lives David Palmer. In 1823, money being hard to get, the town voted to pay their local taxes in grain—wheat at six shillings a bushel, corn at four shillings, and rye at four shillings, to be paid into the town treasury by the 10th of the following February. Imagine a tax collector starting from home with four horses and a lumber wagon to haul home the town tax! For several years the taxes were paid in this way. At the rate of three and one-third per cent., the amount paid to the tax collector during these years, he must have worked hard all day collecting taxes, in order to obtain grain enough to feed his horses and himself over night.

In 1823 it was "voted that warrants to notify town meetings shall be posted up in the school-house in the west part of the town, at the school-house near Seth Knowles's, and at Esq. Bean's;" also voted that the same be posted up by the person that will do it cheapest. The posting of warrants was accordingly struck off to Joseph Pease, who gave two cents for the privilege, and paid the money in open town meeting. As the town meetings were held at private houses frequently in the warmer months, it was necessary to adjourn out of doors.

In 1820 Joshua Cushman received twenty votes to represent the Sixth Eastern District of Maine in the Congress of the United States.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

Three liquor licenses were granted in the year of 1825, three in 1826, and five in 1827.

The Rev. David Stewart, then a lay member of the Baptist church, delivered a temperance lecture in the autumn of 1827, probably one of the first delivered in the State. The Rev. B. P. Winchester was present at this lecture, and ever after David Stewart and Benjamin Winchester were the champions of the temperance cause.

The following year only two licenses were granted by the town officials for selling intoxicating liquors. From the efforts of those engaged at that time sprang the germ of temperance organizations of the present.

RECORD OF PROGRESS.

At the time of the settlement at Moor's Mills another was formed two miles to the eastward, at Morse's Corner. William Hole was one of the early settlers. He was several times chosen for some of the minor town offices. A pleasant little village was formed in one of the pleasantest parts of the town. This, in fact, was considered the chief place until the building of the railroad.

In 1837, Robert Moor, the son of William, built the first store at Moor's Mill. The goods to stock it were bought in Boston, Robert having made the journey thither by stage.

In 1842 the Town House was built, and in 1871 the town built a hearse-house on the southeast corner of its lot and purchased a hearse.

To this day the town has been foremost in all good enterprises. It was fifth in the county in respect to the amount of money raised for the expenses of the war. Many brave soldier-citizens here left their homes to fall and fertilize the Southern plains.

Unfortunate in 1879 in the collection of its debts, Corinna lost considerable money through the default of its Collector.

In 1840 the town reached its maximum number of inhabitants, containing then one thousand seven hundred and four. By the census of 1880 there were one thousand five hundred and three, making a loss of only ten during the last decade.

The following is a succinct but partial view of the statistics of population, voters, and wealth in this town: Population in 1830, 1,077; 1840, 1,704; 1850, 1,550; 1860, 1,597; 1870, 1,513; 1880, 1,503. Polls in 1860, 374; 1870, 443; 1880, 380. Estates these years, $233,711, $391,711, and $421,649.

The rest of the history of this town is the history of its citizens and its enterprises, which are best described each under its proper title.

In the meantime Corinna has been made a part of Penobscot county, by act of the Maine Legislature dated February 10, 1833, which will be found in the Appendix.

SCHOOLS.

Since schools lie at the foundation of all good government and are among the first considerations of the intelligent settler, we will treat this subject first of the more detailed matters. Before school districts were organized the mothers and fathers taught their children what they themselves knew. After a few families had settled in town, their children were accustomed to collect at Seth Knowles's and the Rev. B. P. Winchester's homes to learn proficiently in "the three R's." Elder Winchester was especially interested in the education of the young, and was much beloved by his pupils. As the number of inhabitants increased, school-houses became necessary. Accordingly, the first one was built about fifty rods east of Mr. Knowles's. It was a sample of the most primitive kind then built. In one end was a fire-place, while on either side of the aisle ranged the long board seats, the terror of the smaller pupils and the field of artistic execution for the boy having inventive brains and a jack-knife.

It was the custom for the scholars to cut their own wood, and the master's time was divided between the use of the ferule and trying to persuade green rock-maple to burn. The large open fire-place occupied nearly the entire end of the house, and on its broad hearth, up the spacious chimney, roared the fire. Entire logs, two and three feet in diameter, were rolled in and burned without splitting.

In the western part of the town was built another school-house, for the accommodation of the students in that section. It was erected on the same general principles as that in the eastern part.

The books used by the pupils of that day consisted of a Webster's spelling book and a Pike's or Daboll's arithmetic. The schools were in session only a few weeks during the year, and the boys and girls were obliged to travel long distances over poor roads filled with snow to obtain the little education that could be then had from the common school. Yet there were many who, improving the opportunities that they did have, obtained a very fair education.

The next school-house was built at Moor's Mill, and is now occupied by Samuel Fowles as a blacksmith-shop. This school-house was in early days the scene of the rough side of school life. That teacher who did not answer the ideas of the school as a good fellow, was carried from the school-house by the larger scholars and left upon a snow bank to cool his anger. One teacher, by the name of Christopher Page, seemed to inspire the big boys with something of fear, if not of reverence, and taught many successful terms in Corinna and vicinity.

As the town developed from year to year, and other districts became necessary, other school-houses were built, until at present there are within the town seventeen districts and parts of districts, with fourteen school-houses.

At a special meeting held in April, 1817, two hundred dollars were raised to be expended in schools, but no School Board was elected. The following year a committee of seventeen was chosen, to supervise the schools and superintend the expenditure of the money. No regular Superintending School Committee was elected till 1822; but a Board of School Agents, varying from six to eighteen, was chosen who filled the double office of Committee and Agent. The amount of money appropriated was two hundred dollars per annum, until in 1822 it was changed to three hundred, and kept at that amount for several years. In 1821 the local and school taxes being paid in grain, the teachers were required to take their pay in the popular currency of the town.

No money was even raised for a free high school, and until 1875 no district record was kept by the Superintending School Committee.

Among the prominent teachers of the common schools in the past were Robert Knowles, a native of the town and one of its prominent citizens; Levi Lucas, of Saint Albans, a master in every sense of the word, who ruled as with a rod of iron; and Christopher Page, familiarly known as "Chris," who probably taught more "hard scholars" in Penobscot county than any other teacher.

In the summer of 1881 a graded course of study was introduced into the primary and grammar schools at Corinna village (Moor's Mills). No pupils have yet been graduated from the school.

At the annual town meeting of 1881 the town voted to purchase text-books for the use of scholars; but at a special meeting called soon afterwards it was voted to rescind that vote.

CORINNA UNION ACADEMY.

In 1850 Dr. Jacob Elliott, a prominent citizen, proposed to build an academy for the higher education of the young men and women of the vicinity. Through his strenuous exertions and the liberality of the citizens, an amount of money then thought sufficient to erect the building was raised. In addition to this, in order that the school might be endowed, notes were given by individuals, of which only the interest, it was understood, should be paid at the end of each year, to be applied to the running expenses of the school. The site selected for the school was in the western part of the village, upon an elevation overlooking the town. The building committee, desiring to construct a permanent building, expended the money raised for that purpose before they had completed it. To finish the academy it was necessary to call in the fund-notes. This was done, and the structure was ready for occupancy in 1851.

Elliott Walker and wife were the first teachers of the academy, and at once established the school in public favor. After having charge of the school for several years, he removed to Newport, in this county, to enter upon the practice of law.

The Hon. Llewellyn Powers succeeded Mr. Walker as Principal of the Academy. Mr. Powers was a very successful teacher, and was liked both by citizens and scholars. Mr. Powers carried into his school work that same energy which characterized him as a lawyer, and his school was always well attended.

Professor Sawyer was principal for a longer time than any other teacher. Under his management the school was well attended. He was especially well versed in mathematics and grammar.

Professor D. H. Sherman was very successful, and he obtained a large attendance at the academy. While teaching he purchased a telescope for the use of the school, and in the small hours of the night, when the planets were in conjunction, the Professor's horn could be heard calling out his astronomy class to witness the movements of the heavenly bodies. This aroused the anger of the citizens, and many were the imprecations pronounced against him.

Isaac R. Worth, of East Corinth, succeeded Professor Sherman, and was beloved by his students. He was obliged to close his second term in the eighth week on account of failing health, and soon after died, mourned by a large circle of friends.

Among other teachers have been the Rev. Charles E. Young, a Baptist clergyman; H. E. Trefetheran, E. D. Pratt, a Mr. Smith, and Wyman B. Piper, the present principal. Mr. Smith retired one night in his usual health, and was found dead in his bed the following morning.

The Academy was formally incorporated on the 4th of June, 1857. Through the efforts of John Benson, M. D., of Newport, who represented Newport and Corinna in the State Legislature, the academy received a grant of a quarter of a township of land, lying in the northern part of the State. Three other academies received severally a grant of the other three-quarters. Agents were chosen by the trustees of each school to sell the township Volney Sprague, Esq., was selected to look after the interests of Corinna Academy, and sold the quarter-township for $1,600. The proceeds were at first invested in United States bonds, which were afterwards exchanged at a premium for State of Maine bonds below par. By this means the fund was increased to $2,142. No part of the principal is allowed to be expended in repairs or for the use of the school.

During the summer of 1879 three courses of study—college preparatory, classical, and scientific—were prepared by Mr. Piper, the present principal, and adopted by the trustees. Each course covers four years of three terms, each ten weeks long.

In June, 1881, the thirtieth anniversary of the school, two students were graduated, one each from the classical and the college preparatory courses. During that summer Dr. Jacob Elliott, who in the meantime had removed to California, offered the trustees a gift of $1,000, provided the citizens would raise $1,900 before the 10th of August. Failing in this, the school did not receive the offered donation.

CHURCHES.

The first religious meetings in Corinna were held under the auspices of the Free Baptists, by Rev. John Palmer in the barn erected by Samuel Lancey. They were afterwards held in the school-house erected in town, until the year 1851. Then Mr. Benjamin C. Moor liberally gave a building lot for a church, a few rods from the shore of the pond on the east side; and the citizens raised the money to erect a building thereon. The conditions of the gift of the land were that when it ceased to be occupied as a church lot, then it should revert to the former owner. The house was dedicated as a "Union" church, and is owned and occupied by Methodists, Baptists, Christians, and Adventists. Each pew-holder has a vote in the annual meeting of the owners in deciding which denomination shall have the use of the church for the Sabbath that his pew claims. There being fifty-two pews in the church, each one of them has the right to use the house one Sabbath in each year. Since the railroad was built through the town, the church is conveniently near the depot for week-day meetings.

Soon after the completion of the church at Corinna village, the citizens of Morse's Corner, two miles east of the village, desiring to construct a more substantial house than the one already built, contracted to have one put up and to be finished in hard wood. After its completion they purchased a bell, which, with that in the Academy building, are the only bells in public structures in the town.

The Free Baptist church was first organized in School District No. 1, in the southeastern part of the town. This church removed to Morse's Corner after that house was built. This Free Baptist society by and by went out of existence, but was re-organized under the efforts of the Rev. Jason Mariner, and now has a membership of over forty. The Free Baptists have never had an organization at the village church.

In September, 1822, the Rev. Isaac Case organized the First Baptist Church, of ten members, in the town, the text at that time being from Hebrews xiii.5: "Let brotherly love continue." During the infancy of the church there was no ordained pastor, but Cushman Bassett, a prominent man in the town, occupied the pulpit as lay preacher. After him, Moses Martin, from China, preached for the denomination. The Rev. B. P. Winchester, who was a prominent citizen, occupied the Baptist pulpit for more than thirty-five years, after the removal of Rev. Mr. Martin. Since the death of Elder Winchester, the Rev. Messrs. David Stewart and William E. Noyes have been the pastors. In 1872 the church celebrated its semi-centennial, at which its history was briefly related by Rev. Charles E. Young, formerly a member. At present there are twenty active members, who support preaching one-fourth of the time at Corinna village and the school-house at the Centre. Among the most prominent members of the church during its history have been Rev. B. P. Winchester, Rev. David Stewart, Cushman Bassett, and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Young. As one of the oldest members remarks, "our church has been a constant light, never going out nor dazzling by its brilliancy."

The Rev. J. S. Johnson, of New Hampshire, and Rev. Zebulon Manter, of Newport, organized the Christian church, April 20, 1867, with a membership of twenty-one. This was increased to thirty-three the following day. This church occupies the house at Corinna village one-fourth of the time. It has had in all seventy-seven communicants, of whom five have been dropped, ten have been discharged by death, four by letter, and fifty-eight remain on the church books. Rev. Joshua T. House was pastor of the church from the year 1867 to 1874.

During the year 1875 Rev. Samuel Bickford occupied the pulpit. From 1876 until the present time Rev. J. T. House has been the regular pastor. In connection with this church a ladies' sewing society has been formed, to raise money for church purposes. The report of the treasurer gives one hundred and forty dollars as the amount of funds in her hands at this writing. They have already purchased blinds for the church at the village, and have furnished the pulpit.

The Second Advent church consists of two branches, and has no regular pastor engaged. Elder Campher resides in Corinna, and preaches occasionally.

The Methodist Episcopal circuit of which Corinna formed a part included the section extending from Exeter on the east to Harmony on the west, and included those towns. David and Richard Knowles were the only members from "Warren township, No. 4," and attended church in Exeter. They belonged to a preachers' aid society known as the "Sheep Concern." Each one that joined this society was obliged to set apart a sheep, the proceeds of which were to be paid to the support of the preacher. From that time the Methodist church has had communicants from Corinna. After the church was built at Corinna village, the Methodists occupied the house one-fourth of the time, and are in the circuit with Exeter, at which place is the parsonage. One of the first missionaries to Africa went from the Exeter circuit, and died in Africa—a Rev. Mr. Cox.

PARIAN LODGE, NO. 160, F. AND A. M.

Several Masonic brethren, who resided in Corinna, long desired to have a lodge of their own, and in 1870 petitioned the Grand Lodge of Maine that they would establish one for them. For some time Meridian Splendor Lodge in Newport opposed its institution, and after their objections were answered Dexter Lodge claimed jurisdiction. The Grand Lodge compelled the Corinna Masons to work two years under a dispensation. It being shown that the jurisdiction was in Meridian Splendor Lodge, Fisher Lodge No. 160, Free and Accepted Masons, was instituted with the usual rites and ceremonies. Winkworth S. Allen, who had formerly been Master of Dexter Lodge, was the first Master of Fisher Lodge. After him as Masters were Robert Knowles, Charles A. Dorman, Clement C. Libby, and A. J. Knowles, the present Master. The Lodge derived its name from Paul M. Fisher, M. D., a prominent man and earnest Mason. In 1876 the name was changed from Fisher to Parian; and in 1881 it numbered seventy-three members in good standing.

TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS.

Rev. David Stewart, in the autumn of 1827, delivered the first temperance lecture in the town, probably the first in the county, and organized a temperance organization of thirty-six members, of which a Mr. Payne was president. Another society was organized in the northeast part of the town in School District No. 3, consisting of forty members. Their meetings were open for all to enter, and were free for the discussion of the temperance question. The Sons of Temperance formed a society at Morse's Corner, which organization was moved to Moor's Mills.

In July, 1874, the Good Templars organized a society, which increased in 1879 to two hundred and eleven members. This society first met in Butler's, then Fowles's, and lastly in Temperance Hall.

In the winter of 1879 Deputy Commander John Young, M. D., came from Massachusetts and instituted a Commandery of the United Order of the Golden Cross. This society continued its organization during the winter, but in the spring, on account of the dissatisfaction of its members, it adjourned sine die.

BUSINESS PLACES.

By far the best business buildings in Corinna village are Eagle Block and the grist-mill attached. Eben Roberts bought the old grist-mill of Robert Moor, and afterwards sold to E. P. Burrill and William A. Ireland. After the purchase of the mill property by Messrs. Burrill and Ireland they erected a substantial brick mill and constructed a granite dam, on the condition that the town would exempt them from taxation for ten years. Soon after the completion of the mill the town concluded to repudiate its promise, and consequently taxed the mill. In 1877 Burrill & Ireland concluded to make an extension of their mill, and erected Eagle Block. This building is of brick with three stories and a basement, and contains a shoe store, a variety store, a lawyer's office, a doctor's office, a jewelry manufactory, a temperance hall, a market, a grain elevator, and three grain bins capable of holding ten thousand bushels. The grist-mill attached contains five sets of stones, and is used for grinding all kinds of grain.

The next buildings that would attract the attention of the traveler are the Woolen Mill and Iron Foundry. The former is a wooden structure, three stories and a basement in height. It was built by Messrs. J. & C. A. Dorman. The Dormans came to Corinna, purchased the site for the mill about one-third of a mile south of the village, and commenced the erection of the mill. In 1875, at a special town meeting, the town voted to lend this firm $5,000 at six per cent. interest, and to take as security a first mortgage on the mill and privilege. The following year the Dormans attempted to obtain another loan of two thousand dollars, but the town voted to pass the article. Upon this failure twenty citizens loaned one hundred dollars each, and took a second mortgage of the privilege on the west end of the dam, and a first mortgage on the custom wool-carding machinery. The Dormans failed to fulfil the contract of their mortgage, the town foreclosed its claim, and by a decision of the court came into possession of the mill. The twenty persons holding the other mortgage, obtained the wool-cards. The town, after the foreclosure of its mortgage, rented the factory to Charles Greenwood for three years. At the expiration of this time Mr. Greenwood purchased the mill, paying for it five thousand five hundred dollars. The factory is a "two-set" mill, for the manufacture of repellant, and employs about thirty hands.

In the fall of 1879 the carriage shop, owned and occupied by Lewis Hutchins, was burned, and in its place was erected another more commodious building. This was intended as a carriage shop; but Mr. Hutchins, forming a partnership with J. P. Nelson & Son and George W. Nutter, another building was erected for a foundry and the first one used for a finishing room. The Messrs. Nelson and Mr. Hutchins sold their interest in the business to G. W. Nutter, who conducts it at present, making all kinds of castings.

The next prominent building in town is the hardware store owned by J. P. Nelson & Son and occupied by J. H. Steward, a hardware merchant and American Express agent. There are two post-offices in the town, one at Corinna Village, the other at Corinna Center. Mr. E. P. Burrill is Postmaster at the former, Mr. W. S. Allen at the latter.

Three-quarters of a mile south of Moor's Mill, on Alder Stream, is a saw-mill for the manufacture of long lumber, a shingle-mill, and a steam-pump factory. Around these industries nestles a quiet little village. West of this village, and near the horseback, is a brick-yard belonging to Mr. S. S. Burrill. In the northern part of the town, on the Dexter Stream, is a mill owned by John Moody and built by him for the manufacture of lumber and shingles. South of his mill and on the same stream, is Richard Lincoln's shingle mill. At the latter place several dwellings have been erected and a railway switch graded for the accommodation of shipping lumber. At Morse's Corner E. W. Holt has furnished a machine shop and manufactures Holt's "tire upsetter," for shortening tires without cutting.

Besides the above named places of business there are several grocery and variety stores, two apothecaries, and a hotel.

THE DEXTER AND NEWPORT RAILROAD.

When the question of the Newport & Dexter Railroad was agitated the inhabitants of Corinna at once took a prominent part in the encouragement of its construction. The town promptly voted to lend its credit in aid of the construction and completion of the Dexter & Newport Railroad, to the extent of fifty thousand dollars on the terms and conditions mentioned in an act of the Legislature approved January 25, 1867. Several citizens agreed to raise the money for its survey. After its completion Robert Knowles was appointed Station Agent, and filled that office acceptably until the construction of the Western Union telegraph line from Newport to Dexter. Then Thomas F. Hegarty, the present agent, was appointed. Two trains daily each way pass over the road and connect at Newport with the Eastern and Western trains of the Maine Central Railroad.

The principal products shipped over this road are hay, potatoes, grains, eggs, apples, and meat. Several cattle-buyers make Corinna their headquarters, and ship meat to the Brighton and Boston markets. Frequently ten tons of carcasses alone are sent at one time. Ship-timber is also loaded at this point from the surrounding towns, to be sent to Belfast and neighboring ports.

THE CORINNA HERALD.

March 27, 1876, Mr. Fred J. Whiting issued the first number of the Weekly Herald, a four-column folio devoted to local interests. The following year Mr. Whiting moved his office from the small building on Dexter street to Eagle Block, formed a partnership with A. Phinney, and enlarged his paper to a six-column folio, changing the name to Corinna Herald. In August, 1881, the paper was removed to Pittsfield, Somerset county, and the old name of Weekly Herald restored.

THE CORINNA SOCIAL LIBRARY was incorporated September 3, 1849, and had a moderately successful career.

The Corinna Circulating Library is now in existence, and is kept at the village. Mr. E. Folsom is Librarian.

THE CIVIL LIST OF CORINNA.

The following is a list of the town officers since the incorporation of Corinna:

1817—William Elder, Joseph Pease, Constant Southard, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Ebenezer Nutter, treasurer; Benjamin Hilton, constable; no school board.

1818—William Elder, Abraham Bean, Ebenezer Nutter, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Benjamin P. Winchester, treasurer; John Couliard, constable; school board of seventeen.

1819—William Elder, Ebenezer Nutter, Benjamin P.

Winchester, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; Seth Knowles, constable; a school board of six.

1820—Ebenezer Nutter, Benjamin P. Winchester, Abraham Bean, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; Seth Knowles, constable; a school board of eighteen.

1821—Ebenezer Nutter, Abraham Bean, Jonathan Knowles, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; Seth Knowles, constable; a school board of six.

1822—Abraham Bean, William Elder, Benjamin P. Winchester, selectmen; William Elder, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; Ebenezer Nutter, constable; Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, Joseph Turner, regular school committee.

1823—Benjamin P. Winchester, Abraham Bean, Ebenezer Nutter, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; James Smith, Jr., constable; Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, Joseph Turner, superintending school committee.

1824—Benjamin P. Winchester, Abraham Bean, Ebenezer Nutter, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Joseph Pease, treasurer; Seth Knowles, constable; Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, Joseph Turner, superintending school committee.

1825—Benjamin P. Winchester, John Hubbard, Joseph Turner, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Joseph Turner, treasurer; James Smith, Jr., constable; Abram Seaver, John Hubbard, Esq., superintending school committee.

1826—Thomas Brown, Ebenezer Nutter, Cushman Bassett, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; David Jones, constable; Abram Seaver, Paul M. Fisher, Thomas Brown, superintending school committee.

1827—Thomas Brown, Joseph Turner, David Steward, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; John Hubbard, treasurer; David Jones, constable; Thomas Brown, Joseph Turner, Abram Seaver, superintending school committee.

1828—Benjamin P. Winchester, Thomas Brown, Abraham Bean, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; David Jones, constable; Thomas Brown, Paul M. Fisher, Thomas Davis, superintending school committee.

1829—Abraham Bean, John Hubbard, Benjamin P. Winchester, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; Colonel Jason Labree, Paul M. Fisher, constables; Paul M. Fisher, Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1830—Thomas Brown, Paul M. Fisher, Abram Seaver, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; John Hubbard, treasurer; Simon Young, constable; Paul M. Fisher, Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1831—Paul M. Fisher, James Labree, John Briggs, selectmen; Paul M. Fisher, town clerk; John Hubbard, treasurer; Peter Hynds, constable; John Hubbard, Luther Harmon, Joseph Prescott, superintending school committee.

1832—Paul M. Fisher, Joseph Prescott, Cushman Bassett, selectmen; Paul M. Fisher, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; Ebenezer Boyden, constable; Joseph Prescott, Paul M. Fisher, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1833—Paul M. Fisher, Joseph Prescott, Cushman Bassett, selectmen; Paul M. Fisher, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; Simon Young, constable; Joseph Prescott, Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1834—Henry T. Knowles, Simon Young, Thomas Brown, selectmen; Paul M. Fisher, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; Simon Young, constable; Paul M. Fisher, Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1835—Henry T. Knowles, Thomas Brown, John Johnson, 2d, selectmen; John Johnson, 2d, town clerk; Philip Morse, treasurer; Simon Young, constable; John Hubbard, Harrison G. O. Weston, Ebenezer Boyden, superintending school committee.

1836—Thomas Brown, Henry T. Knowles, John Johnson, 2d, selectmen; Ebenezer Horne, town clerk; John Lord, treasurer; Jacob J. Demerit, Peter Hinds, Ebenezer Horne, constables; Ebenezer Boyden, Joseph Prescott, John Hubbard, superintending school committee.

1837—Thomas Brown, Henry T. Knowles, John Johnson, 2d, selectmen; Robert Moor, town clerk; John Lord, treasurer; Isaac Allen, constable; Lemuel Smith, Joseph Prescott, Robert Moor, superintending school committee.

1838—Thomas Brown, John Hubbard, Silas Knowles, selectmen; Robert Moor, town clerk; John Johnson, 2d, treasurer; Jacob S. Elliott, Ephraim Currier, Isaac Allen, constables; Paul M. Fisher, Ezra C. Kilgore, Robert Moor, superintending school committee.

1839—Henry T. Knowles, John Lord, David Jones, selectmen; Robert Moor, town clerk; John Johnson, 2d, treasurer; Ebenezer Horne, constable; Lemuel Smith, Joseph Prescott, Paul M. Fisher, superintending school committee.

1840—Thomas Brown, Jacob S. Elliott, Luther Harmon, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; John Johnson, 2d, treasurer; Ephraim Currier, Enoch Bunker, constables; Robert Moor, David Steward, Paul M. Fisher, superintending school committee.

1841—Jacob S. Elliott, David Steward, S. T. Rackliff, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Campbell Bachelder, constable; David Steward, Robert Moor, Harrison G. O. Weston, superintending school committee.

1842—Paul M. Fisher, James Hawes, Harrison G. O. Weston, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Robert Knowles, Campbell Bachelder, Isaac Allen, Gorham Southard, constables; David Steward, Albert Moor, Harrison G. O. Weston, superintending school committee.

1843—Paul M. Fisher, James Hawes, Harrison G. O. Weston, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; John Hubbard, treasurer; Robert Knowles, Campbell Bachelder, Isaac Allen, Gorham Southard, constables; Thomas Moulton, Rev. David Foss, Robert Moor, superintending school committee.

1844—Paul M. Fisher, Campbell Bachelder, Enoch Bunker, Jr, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; David Steward, treasurer; Winkworth S. Allen, constable; Robert Knowles, Joseph Prescott, Robert Moor, superintending school committee.

1845—Horace Wentworth, Abner Seaver, Jacob S. Elliott, selectmen; Benjamin P. Winchester, town clerk; Robert Moor, treasurer; Winkworth S. Allen, Samuel Miles, constables; David Steward, Robert Knowles, Paul M. Fisher, superintending school committee.

1846—Horace Wentworth, Abner Seaver, David Jones, selectmen; Robert Knowles, town clerk; Robert Moor, treasurer; Samuel Miles, constable; Robert Moor, Robert Knowles, Paul M. Fisher, superintending school committee.

1847—Horace Wentworth, David Jones, John Hutchinson, selectmen; Horace Wentworth, town clerk; Robert Moor, treasurer; Samuel Miles, constable; Stephen C. Elliott, Harrison G. O. Weston, Paul M. Fisher, superintending school committee.

1848—David Jones, Abner Seaver, Hiram Hurd, Jr., selectmen; Horace Wentworth, town clerk; Robert Moor, treasurer; Samuel Miles, constable; John S. Pratt, Paul M. Fisher, Harrison G. O. Weston, superintending school committee.

1849—David Jones, Horace Wentworth, Hiram Hurd, Jr., selectmen; Horace Wentworth, town clerk; Thomas Brown, treasurer; Samuel Miles, constable; Paul M. Fisher, Eben D. Roberts, James Elliott, superintending school committee.

1850—Horace Wentworth, Enoch Bunker, Robert Knowles, selectmen; Horace Wentworth, town clerk; Thomas Brown, treasurer; David Jones, Azro Mills, constables; Nathan D. Brooks, Paul M. Fisher, Nathan Joy Robinson, superintending school committee.

1851—Horace Wentworth, Enoch Bunker, David Jones, selectmen; Horace Wentworth, town clerk; Thomas Brown, treasurer; James P. Copeland, Paul M. Fisher, Oliver Brooks, Benjamin Burrill, James Hawes, Alfred Daniels, constables; Nathan J. Robinson, Paul M. Fisher, Joseph Prescott, superintending school committee.

1852—Horace Wentworth, Enoch Bunker, Jacob S. Elliott, selectmen; Nathan J. Robinson, town clerk; Thomas Brown, treasurer; Oliver Brooks, Benjamin Burrill, constables; Weston P. Nutter, Joseph Prescott, Elliott Walker, superintending school committee.

1853—David Jones, Simeon Adams, Stephen Phinney, selectmen; Nathan J. Robinson, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Edward H. Osborne, Joel Young, constables; Joseph Prescott, Elliott Walker, Volney Sprague, superintending school committee.

1854—David Jones, Simeon Adams, Stephen Phinney, selectmen; Paul M. Fisher, town clerk; James Hawes, treasurer; James Hawes, Joel Young, Charles Church, constables; Horatio Southard, Volney Sprague, Elam P. Burrill, superintending school committee.

1855—James Hawes, Simeon Adams, David Steward, selectmen; Nathan J. Robinson, town clerk; James Hawes, treasurer; Joel Young, constable; Volney Sprague, Elam P. Burrill, David Steward, superintending school committee.

1856—David Jones, Stephen Phinney, Eben D. Roberts, selectmen; Silas S. Morse, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; Elam P. Burrill, David Steward, Robert Knowles, superintending school committee.

1857—Campbell Bachelder, Enoch Bunker, Robert Knowles, selectmen; Francis A. Fisher, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; Elam P. Burrill, school supervisor.

1858—Joseph Cook, Robert Knowles, Elam P. Burrill, selectmen; Jacob Bemis, town clerk; Seth Morse, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; Robert Knowles, school supervisor.

1859—Joseph Cook, Robert Knowles, Elam P. Burrill, selectmen; James Hutchins, town clerk; Isaiah Lincoln, treasurer; Sanford Stevens, constable; G. W. Martin, Joel Pease, Robert Knowles, superintending school committee.

1860—Winkworth S. Allen, Samuel Copp, Eben D. Roberts, selectmen; Francis A. Fisher, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; Joel Pease, Robert Knowles, Samuel W. Mathews, superintending school committee.

1861—Winkworth S. Allen, Samuel Copp, J. R. Mower, selectmen; Francis A. Fisher, town clerk; Paul M. Fisher, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; Samuel W. Mathews, Francis A. Fisher, Joel Pease, superintending school committee.

1862—J. C. Chandler, Samuel Copp, Winkworth S. Allen, selectmen; Mark F. Hamilton, town clerk; Elam P. Burrill, treasurer; Eben D. Roberts, constable; George H. Day, school supervisor.

1863—Winkworth S. Allen, Elam P. Burrill, Robert Knowles, selectmen; Mark F. Hamilton, town clerk; Campbell Bachelder, treasurer; Mark F. Hamilton, constable; George H. Day, Robert Knowles, Elam P. Burrill, superintending school committee.

1864—Robert Knowles, Charles H. Morse, Emery Southard, selectmen; Gipson C. Patten, town clerk; Silas S. Morse, treasurer; Silas S. Morse, constable; Robert Knowles, Elam P. Burrill, Gipson C. Patten, superintending school committee.

1865—Robert Knowles, Charles H. Morse, Emery Southard, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk, Silas S. Morse, treasurer; Silas S. Morse, constable; J. H. Sawyer, D. Calvin Lyford, M. Palmer, superintending school committee.

1866—Robert Knowles, Charles H. Morse, Charles Labree, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; Daniel W. Osgood, treasurer; Oliver Brooks, constable; D. Calvin Lyford, M. Palmer, John D. Young, superintending school committee.

1867—Robert Knowles, Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; E. P. Burrill, treasurer; Oliver Brooks, constable; J. H. Sawyer, E. W. Truworthy, superintending school committee.

1868—Winkworth S. Allen, Elam P. Burrill, Columbus C. Knowles, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; Elam P. Burrill, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, Emery Southard, constables; E. W. Truworthy, David Steward superintending school committee.

1869—Winkworth S. Allen, William W. Nutter, Emery Southard, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; William W. Nutter, treasurer; David Steward, Gustavus B. Frost, constables; David Steward, E. W. Truworthy, superintending school committee.

1870—Robert Knowles, Charles H. Morse, Emery Southard, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; William W. Nutter, treasurer; Oliver Brooks, constable; A. H. Richardson, M. D., supervisor of schools.

1871—Winkworth S. Allen, Jonathan S. Burrill, Columbus C. Knowles, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, constable; A. H. Richardson, M. D., George W. Nutter, Mrs. Sarah A. Atkins, superintending school committee. (May 4, 1871, Mrs. Lillias A. Leavitt was appointed to fill vacancy of Mrs. Sarah A. Atkins, October 23d William W. Nutter was appointed in place of George W. Nutter, resigned).

1872—Robert Knowles, Winkworth S. Allen, Isaiah H. Crowell, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; Oliver Brooks, treasurer; A. H. Richardson, I. W. Tibbitts, Charles E. Young, superintending school committee.

1873—Winkworth S. Allen, Isaiah H. Crowell, Asa F. Crowell, selectmen; Seth Morse, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Warren J. Hall, constable; J. Parker Curtis, A. H. Richardson, William W. Nutter, superintending school committee.

1874—Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, Isaiah H. Crowell, selectmen; Fred E. Sprague, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Alden R. Ireland, Emery Southard, Isaiah H. Crowell, David Palmer, Henry Atkins, constables; A. H. Richardson, William W. Nutter, J. Parker Curtis, superintending school committee.

1875—Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, Isaiah H. Crowell, selectmen; Fred E. Sprague, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Thomas R. Gardner, Asa L. Grant, A. Judson Richardson, Samuel Fowles, Henry Atkins, Isaiah H. Crowell, constables; J. Parker Curtis, supervisor of schools.

1876—Charles H. Morse, A. Judson Richardson, Isaiah H. Crowell, selectmen; Jonathan S. Burrill, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Clement C. Libby, constable; J. Parker Curtis, supervisor of schools.

1877—Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, A. Judson Richardson, selectmen; Jonathan S. Burrill, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Clement C. Libby, constable; George W. Nutter, William I. Wood, J. Parker Curtis, superintending school committee.

1878—Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, Edward G. Higgins, selectmen; Frank E. Knowles, town clerk; Alden R. Ireland, treasurer; Clement C. Libby, constable; William I. Wood, J. Parker Curtis, Charles S. Philbrick, superintending school committee.

1879—Charles H. Morse, Winkworth S. Allen, Edward G. Higgins, selectmen; Frank E. Knowles, town clerk; A. Judson Richardson, treasurer; Clement C. Libby, constable; J. Parker Curtis, Charles S. Philbrick, Wyman B. Piper, superintending school committee.

1880—Robert Knowles, Edward G. Higgins, A. Judson Richardson, selectmen; Frank E. Knowles, town clerk; Samuel Copp, treasurer; Samuel Copp, constable; Charles S. Philbrick, Wyman B. Piper, Fred J. Whiting, superintending school committee.

1881—Edward G. Higgins, Jonathan S. Burrill, N. Reed Packard, selectmen; Frank E. Knowles, town clerk; Samuel Copp, treasurer; Samuel Copp, constable; Wyman B. Piper, Fred J. Whiting, Albert R. Day, superintending school committee.

No State Senators have been elected from Corinna, and only one important county officer—Campbell Bachelder, County Commissioner.

The following named have been the Representatives in the lower branch of the Legislature: William Elder, Abram Bean, Luther Harmon, John Briggs, Henry T. Knowles, John Lord, Luke Mills, Frank G. Robinson, Campbell Bachelder, John Hutchinson, Nathan J. Robinson, Horace Wentworth, Enoch Bunker, Jr., Elam P. Burrill, W. W. Nutter, Mark F. Hamilton, Stephen Lincoln, George W. Nutter.

Thomas R. Gardner, Isaiah H. Crowell, and Asa L. Grant, Deputy Sheriffs.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

July 27, 1753, in Roxbury, Massachusetts, was born John Warren, brother of the hero of Bunker Hill. He manifested a great degree of intelligence while still quite young, for when only twenty years of age he began the practice of medicine in Salem, Massachusetts, having graduated at Harvard College two years previously. He, like his brother, was an earnest patriot, and threw his whole energy into the American cause. He participated in the battle of Lexington, with the regiment from Salem. He became very useful, however, not in wounding the well, but in healing the hurt and sick. For two years he followed the American army, and had charge of the hospitals in and around Boston. He was the founder and first professor of the medical department in connection with Harvard University. When thirty years old he delivered a series of Fourth of July orations in Boston. He introduced many innovations in the practice of surgery, and wrote several articles for publication. He purchased the townships of Corinna and Palmyra, now in this State, and appointed one Shepherd as his agent. Dr. Warren never visited his purchase, but left its administration to Shepherd, who lived in Bloomfield (later Skowhegan), Maine. He died April 4, 1815; and Henry, his son, came to Maine and built a house on Warren Hill, in Palmyra. He gave the names Corinna and Palmyra to the towns out of respect for his two sisters. Henry was never married. He practiced law in Penobscot and Somerset counties. It was thought that he loved the young wife of a Mr. Vance. Although he was well educated as a lawyer, the son of a wealthy father, and was given the two townships, yet he died in straitened circumstances, at the house of the widow Vance, in New York.

The town has furnished no men specially prominent in the history of the State except D. D. Stewart, Esq., of St. Albans, one of Maine's ablest lawyers. Prominent in the history of the town are the Rev. Benjamin P. Winchester, John Hubbard, Esq., the Rev. David Stewart, Winkworth S. Allen, Robert Knowles, Charles Morse, and others, who were true to their trust as American citizens.

Rev. Benjamin P. Winchester was born in Jay, county of Oxford (now Franklin county), Maine, January 18, 1793, and died November 27, 1865. Before he was three years old his father died, and he was adopted by Captain Benjamin Palmer, of Fayette. He received a common school education, and came to Corinna in 1816. After clearing a piece of land that he had purchased of Henry Warren, he built himself a frame house, and in the fall returned to Fayette to marry Miss Eliza Knowles. He brought his young wife to the home that he had made, and there they dwelt together, rearing a family of eight children. Elder Winchester joined the Free-will Baptist Church organized by Rev. John Palmer, and remained in that connection until the other Baptist Church was organized by Rev. Isaac Case, in September, 1822. From 1828 until his death, with the exception of two years, he was pastor of that church. His pastorate extended over a space of thirty-seven years, and was a bright spot in the history of the Corinna Baptist Church. Before schools had been regularly established by the township, he taught several winters for the benefit of the boys and girls in his vicinity. He was an earnest patriot, and labored hard for the Union cause, sending two sons to the South, one of whom, Oren, died in Raleigh, North Carolina. An earnest temperance man, he was one of the pioneer workers of the State. After the incorporation of the township he held many important town offices, serving eight years as Selectman, fourteen years as Town Clerk, and one year as Treasurer.

John Hubbard, Esq., was another of the men who came from Fayette to Corinna at the same time with B. P. Winchester. Like Elder Winchester, he took a prominent part in town affairs. He was also Justice of the Peace for Somerset county. He raised an honorable and respected family.

The Rev. David Stewart came to Corinna in 1822. He was the first temperance lecturer in this region, and not only preached but practiced temperance. He was one of the first who gave a series of anti-slavery lectures here, and spoke on the stump with the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin. He raised a family of good citizens, two of whom have become somewhat prominent—Dinsmore D. Stewart, of St. Albans, Maine, and Levi Stewart, of Illinois. He has held several important town offices. He is opposed to the use of tobacco in all its forms, and is now a hale old gentleman of eighty-four summers.

Winkworth S. Allen has held many offices in the gift of the town, has been a prominent Mason, a man of temperance in theory and practice, and has been foremost in every good word and work.

Robert Knowles was the son of Henry T. Knowles, a Revolutionary pensioner. It is reported that Henry Knowles was shot through the body by a British bullet, and that a silk handkerchief was drawn through the bullet-wound to cleanse it from foreign substances. Robert, his son, was one of the first Masonic Masters in the town, and has held the office of Superintending School Committeeman, Selectman, etc. He also served as the first station agent after the construction of the railroad.

Charles H. Morse, although comparatively a young man when he died, had made for himself a place in the hearts of his fellow townsmen. Being deprived of his father when quite young, he was obliged to work his way in the world and make for himself a place. He was elected Selectman for several years, although a member of the weaker political party, which shows that he was considered a trusty man, even by political opponents.

Professor W. B. Piper, the popular Principal of Corinna Academy, was born in Monroe, Maine, December 14, 1855. He is a grandson of Daniel Piper, who came to this county from New Hampshire in 1799, and settled in Newburg. Daniel Piper was born March 4, 1776, and was one of the early settlers of Newburg. He was in the battle of Hampden, being an Ensign under Captain Bickford. His wife was Annie F. Parsons, born April 8, 1783, and died in October, 1865. She was a native of Parsonsfield, Maine. Their family consisted of eleven children, nine sons and two daughters, viz: Thomas Piper, deceased; Benjamin, who now lives in Dixmont; Elisha, living in Newburg; Hannah (Mrs. Bachelder), of Dixmont; Abigail, deceased; Enoch and Daniel, twins, the former of whom died in Newburg, Daniel now living in Parsonsfield; Simeon A., now living in Elizabeth City, New Jersey; Alpheus S., now of Corinna; John U. P., of Newburg; and David, who died at Fortress Monroe, Virginia. Mr. Piper was for many years one of the live men of his town, holding all of the prominent town offices at different times. He was a Free Baptist in religious belief; afterwards Christian. He died August 10, 1842. Alpheus F. Piper (father of W. B. Piper) was born in Newburg, Maine, October 28, 1820. He married Catharine S. Perkins in 1843, by whom he had one child; both mother and child died when the child was quite young. Mr. Piper married for his second wife Susan H. Smith, and moved to Monroe, Maine, in 1834. Here he followed the business of millwright and farmer. Mr. Piper died February 28, 1881. By this marriage there were five children: David, now living in Chelsea, Massachusetts; Wyman B.; Lizzie M. (Mrs. Patterson), of Swanville, Maine; Kingsbury B. and Lurilla M., both living in Swanville. Mr. Piper is now living in Corinna with his son W. B. Wyman B. Piper, the second son, after attending the common school until thirteen years of age, went to Dixmont and Newburg and attended the high school in each of those towns. When fifteen years of age he began to teach.

EUREKA MILLS,

C. H. GREENWOOD, PROP'R,

CORINNA, M

In his first school there were thirty-three scholars, among them his wife, Annie C. Russell. Mr. Piper, feeling the need of a more thorough preparation for teaching, as well as a desire to obtain a better education, entered the Maine Central Institute, at Pittsfield, and was graduated in 1876, and afterwards entered Bates College, in Lewiston. In the spring of 1878 he moved to Corinna, having been elected Principal of Corinna Academy. Here he has since resided. At the time Professor Piper became Principal of this Academy the total attendance was nineteen, which has increased under his management to one hundred and thirty the present year (1881). He has had a large experience as teacher in the common schools, and has held the office of Superintending School Committeeman of Corinna for three years. Professor Piper is an active worker in the temperance cause and a prominent officer in the Good Templars Lodge. In 1880 he was Captain of the Corinna Light Infantry. He married Annie C. Russell, of Etna, February 25, 1877. She was born August 20, 1855. They have one daughter, Maud L., born June 7, 1878. The excellent history of Corinna in this work was prepared by Professor Piper.

