Daniel Campbell was born in the town of Bowdoinham, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1797; there he lived until about twenty years of age, when he moved to Wellington, Somerset county, then to Kingsbury, Piscataquis county, where he died May 5, 1845. His wife was Ruth Huff, who was born in Bowdoinham in 1804. Her death occurred March 19, 1881. Their ninth child, Isaiah, was born in Kingsbury, January 17, 1839, and married Philinda Decker January 20, 1857. They have five children—Clarence, Arthur W., Ruth A., Ivory A., and Roland V., all of whom reside at home. Mrs. Campbell was the daughter of Amos and Dollie (Goodwin) Decker. Both Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the Free-will Baptist church. The other children of Daniel Campbell were: Aaron, Asa, William, Alpheus, Levi, Rufus, Daniel, John M., Charles and Mary Ann.

E. G. Nichols is the son of James Nichols, of Durham, who died in 1863. James Nichols had twelve children, all of whom are now deceased except four. Their names were: Nathan, James, Samuel, Martha, Alfred, Susan, Hannah, E. G. (the subject of this sketch), Benjamin, Alice, Almerin, and one that died in infancy. E. G. Nichols was born November 9, 1818, in the town of Durham. He married Eula Hodgkins, who was born May 12, 1826; she was the daughter of Joseph Hodgkins, of Minot. They settled first in the town of Abbott, but afterwards moved to Dexter, where they lived two years, and then moved on the place where they now live in Corinna. They have six children now living, and have lost two. The names of the living are James N., born December 13, 1844; Harriet A., born December 20, 1847; Clara, June 31, 1848; Melville S., March 22, 1850; Franklin P., November 5, 1853; Elbridge G., March 12, 1855; Willard A., March 5, 1857; Lizzie L., October 13, 1860. Mr. Nichols has a fine farm of 121 acres. He never aspired to public life but preferred the quiet of home and family.

A. L. Grant was born in St. Albans in 1847, where he obtained a common school education. When twenty years of age, he came to Corinna and engaged in the lumber and stock business, in which he is now engaged. In 1873 he purchased the Corinna House, of F. W. Hill, and in addition to his other business, now keeps hotel. He has held the office of Deputy Sheriff of Penobscot county three years, and Constable two years. In 1869, he married Mary F. Knowles, a native of Corinna, and has one child, Blanche M., who lives at home.

CHARLES GREENWOOD.

Charles Greenwood, proprietor of the Corinna Woolen Mill, is an Englishman by birth. In 1850 he landed at Castle Garden, New York, without money or friends. Although he did not possess either of these, he did possess something which but few of the young men of this country at the present age fully appreciate the value of, viz: a good trade. He had a good understanding of the art of manufacturing woolen cloth. For some fifteen years Mr. Greenwood worked in woolen mills in different parts of the country. Being a very careful man and steady in his habits, he usually held positions of trust and responsibility. In 1870 he resolved to commence business for himself, having by economy and diligence at that time saved a few hundred dollars, besides supporting a family of eleven children. His large family now proved of great service to him, by working in the mill as soon as they became old enough. For one or two years he manufactured two thousand yards per month of very nice repellants, which found a ready market. This was all made by his own family. Although a loser in the great fire in Boston in 1873, he continued to prosper from the start, and now owns the Corinna Woolen Mill, unencumbered, besides other property. This he has been able to do by strict attention to the details of the business, and by always making as good an article as can be found in the market. Mr. Greenwood's family are all yet with him in the mill except two daughters, who are married and live in Kennebec county. They fill places of trust and responsibility in the mill, and relieve Mr. Greenwood of much of the care of his business. One son-in-law has charge of one department. The mill was built in 1876, and now Mr. Greenwood manufactures yearly one hundred thousand yards of first quality repellants. These goods find a ready sale in Boston and New York. The mill has a capacity of sixty thousand pounds of stock per year, and employs twenty-five hands, with a pay-roll of $1,000 per month. This, being the only mill in town, is a great advantage to the village of Corinna by furnishing employment for so many hands and a ready market for wood, wool, etc. Mr. Greenwood is still in the prime of life, and anticipates making large improvements the coming year, such as building a new stone dam, enlarging his mill, etc. For some years Mr. Greenwood has been interested in developing the mineral resources of Penobscot county, and has done as much, perhaps, as any one to develop the latent wealth of the county, sparing neither time nor money. After spending much time and prospecting extensively for two years or more, he believes that there is mineral wealth enough in Penobscot county to make the people all rich. Mr. Greenwood and his family are held in high esteem by the people of Corinna and surrounding towns as an honest business man, liberal toward all objects and enterprises that tend to the development, growth, and prosperity of the town and county.

CORINTH.

TOPOGRAPHY AND GEOGRAPHY.

Corinth is another of the beautifully regular townships to the west of the Penobscot, and in the older part of the county. The town, as a municipality, corresponds precisely to the surveyed township. This town, then, contains thirty-six square miles, or 23,040 acres. It is six and one-quarter miles from Bangor, measured between nearest corners, and was in the old days known as Ohio Plantation. It is two tiers of townships, or twelve miles, distant from the west line of the county; only one town, Charleston, separates it from Atkinson, in Piscataquis county; but parts of six towns—Kenduskeag, Levant, Hermon, Carmel, Hampden, Newburg—lie between it and Waldo county, although the distance is but eighteen miles. It is bounded on the north by Charleston, on the east by Hudson, on the south by Kenduskeag and Levant, and on the west by Exeter. Its boundary lines are uninterrupted by lake or large river. The headwater of Little Pushaw Lake—which is in Hudson, a little way across the line,—rises in the northeast corner of Corinth. The Bear Brook, coming in from Charleston, crosses the same part of the town, but a mile further in the interior, and in Hudson becomes the Pushaw Stream. It receives in Corinth four or five small tributaries on the west side. Straight across the town, in the northwestern part, is the Crooked Brook, which has its several heads in Charleston, Exeter, and the north of Corinth, and runs to the southeast across the town into Kenduskeag. It receives several branches in this town, most of them also from the west side. The principal one has its source near the southwest corner, and flows northward and northeastward toward the centre of the town, near which it joins the Crooked Brook. Not a single lake or pond of size occurs in the town. The Little Pushaw Pond comes rather close to the northeast part, beyond the Bear Brook. Corinth is well provided with post-offices, roads and other public conveniences. It has no railroad, the Maine Central running some miles to the south of it, and the Newport & Dexter to the west. Corinth village and post-office is about a mile from the south line of the town and two miles from the west line, upon a leading highway that comes in from Levant and runs northwestward into Exeter, and westward through that town and Corinna. At this place are School No. 2 and a cemetery, and nearly a mile east of north from it, on the road to East Corinth. This place (more properly, from its central northern position, North Corinth) is a long, straggling village, mainly upon the road through the town from Charleston south to the Town House, and the junction of this with the road to Corinth post-office, whence it runs southeasterly through South Corinth and into Kenduskeag, and thence to Glenburn and Bangor. Schools No. 4, 5, 6, 15, and 17 are upon this road, the last a mile from the southeast corner of the town, No. 15 at East Corinth, No. 5 a little above, No. 4 a third of a mile below the Town House, and No. 6 near South Corinth post-office. At East Corinth is also an academy building, a Baptist church, two parsonages and other like buildings. South Corinth is at a somewhat important cross-roads, two miles from the south line of the town; and one and a half from the east line. A cemetery is about two-thirds of a mile southwest of it, and another about the same distance west of East Corinth. Besides the leading roads mentioned, another makes almost a diagonal across the town, entering from Charleston near the northwest corner, and shortly striking the Crooked Brook, which it follows more or less closely to the exit of the road into Kenduskeag. Upon or near it are Schools No. 8, 10, 13, 14, 16, and 18, with a cemetery upon a parallel road a short distance the other side of the brook and a mile from the south boundary of the town. Corinth is pretty thoroughly cut up with a network of roads, which it would take much space to describe in detail. It naturally follows that the town is well settled and somewhat populous, having 1,333 inhabitants by the census of 1880. These are largely, as before suggested, residents upon the roads through East Corinth, within one and a half miles each way from the place, although the highways through Corinth post-office and South Corinth are by no means sparsely settled. South of the latter place, near the town line, is a dense but limited neighborhood, and another on the town line about School No. 1, south of Corinth village. Most of the people are engaged in agriculture, although a goodly number of saw, shingle, stove, grist, and cider mills are scattered through the town. They are mainly, however, clustered at East Corinth.

EARLY HISTORY.*

Township No. 2, in the fourth range of townships north of the Waldo Patent, in the county of Hancock, containing 23,040 acres, was granted by the State to John Peck December 9, 1794, and afterwards purchased by Benjamin Joy and others. It was incorporated and established as a town by the name of Corinth, June 21, 1811.

ADDITIONAL FACTS OF GEOGRAPHY.

The surface of the town is level and watered by the Kenduskeag Stream, which is fed by the Pierre Paul* and Crooked Brooks, which stream runs in a southeasterly direction, and nearly through the centre of the town, from which, for many years, the early settlers obtained salmon at a distance of seventeen miles from the waters of the Penobscot River. There is also a brook of goodly size in the easterly part of the town, known as Bear Brook, which discharges its waters into Pushaw Pond.

A growth of trees densely covered the soil, in which the maple, birch, beech, ash, basswood, hemlock, spruce, and cedar seemingly strove for predominance; yet the birds-eye maple must have seen—if it could see at all—that the attempt would be futile to vie with the majestic pines scattered over the entire township. The solemn grandeur of the township's native growth of hardy trees, tall and thickly planted, demanded the admiration of the explorer, as he traversed grounds free from recently fallen trees, where the foot of civilized man had never trod, where no effort at improvement had marred the forest's primeval beauty, save that of the industrious beaver, by damming running waters, thereby adding broad acres to their original homesteads.

SETTLEMENTS AND SURVEYS.

Such was Township No. 2, in the year 1792, when Mr. Abner Tibbetts and Mr. Daniel Bridge, from Bangor, while on a hunting excursion through these forests, were so pleased that they decided to abandon the idea of removing to the State of Ohio, and immediately made arrangements for settling here, on lands of their own discovery, naming them New Ohio.

In the spring of 1792 the first trees were felled by Mr. Abner Tibbetts, upon lot No. 10, on the south line of the township. Immediately others, and among them

Messrs. William Tibbetts, Mark Trafton, Joshua C. Thompson, John Goodhue, William Hammond, Royal Clark, and Dr. William Peabody, joined Mr. Tibbetts in his enterprise, and farming at once commenced in good earnest.

The township was located, and separated from other and adjoining townships, by Messrs. Ephraim Ballard and Samuel Weston, in 1792. It was afterwards re-surveyed and lotted by Messrs. Warner, Bellows, and Hodsdon, and a plan of the township made by Mr. Alexander McIntyre.

In 1793 Mr. Daniel Skinner, formerly from Mansfield, Massachusetts, but more recently from Brewer, in this county, with a family of three sons and three daughters, all at ages of maturity, made an opening about two miles in a northeasterly direction from the Ohio settlement; and as each member of the Skinner family married in early life and settled in his or her father's neighborhood, and as all were imbued with the determination of fulfilling the early command, "increase and multiply," a numerous, healthy, industrious progeny soon filled the territorial neighborhood with living souls, through whose veins ran quietly the Skinner love of domestic, quiet life. So numerous were they that the place in which they lived was properly called "the Skinner neighborhood." Mr. Jacob Wheeler, from Petersham, Massachusetts, and Mr. Richard Palmer, from Parsonsville, Maine, each married for their first wives daughters of Mr. Daniel Skinner. For the spice of life which variety is said to give, Messrs. Isaac and Nathan Hodsdon, with their families, from Berwick, Maine, domiciled within the quiet precincts of this Puritan family.

In 1794 Josiah Simpson, Robert Simpson, Robert Campbell, Simon Tiescott, Jonathan Snow, Rufus Inman, and others, passing through the Skinner settlement, proceeded in a northerly direction some two miles, and near the westerly line of this township entered upon lands inviting both to the lumbermen and the agriculturist. They here planted a neighborhood, which until the year 1818 was known as the Simpson Settlement. After that time, in consequence of change of ownership of the farms formerly owned by the two Simpsons, the place was called the Eddy Settlement.

On the easterly side of Kenduskeag Stream lay an elevation of ground peculiarly adapted for the planting of a farming neighborhood, on which Deacon John Hunting, Eben Hunting, Joshua Herrick, Reuben Ball, Isaac Ball, Benjamin Dyer, Aaron Gould, Josiah Gregory, David A. Gove, Andrew Strong, and others, commenced operations in 1808; and soon a correct taste, judicious management, and untiring industry, foretold the future growth and beauty of the coming neighborhood. The far-reaching vision of Deacon Hunting and his associates saw that the joint and undivided effort of this little colony would convert the woodlands on the eastern slope of the Kenduskeag into fields of growing grain, and by architectural skill move the hitherto apparently sluggish waters of stream and brook to run swiftly to man's assistance and willingly turn the wheels of industry. If this was first seen by the eye prophetic,

* The remainder of this sketch, except the biographical section, has been prepared by the Hon. Mason W. Palmer, a native of the town, and still resident there.

* Pierre Paul, pronounced by settlers "Peerpole," took its name from an Indian who lived upon its banks.

all saw its fulfillment as the massive pine was being converted into boards.

As the good Deacon was untiring in every needed effort to aid the growth of this neighborhood, it was called the "Hunting Settlement" for many years, but is now East Corinth.

Thus, from 1792 to 1811, the four neighborhoods above-specified were receiving additions to their respective localities, and both early settler and recent comer had a watchful eye to their adopted homes.

EARLY TRADES, SCHOOLS, ETC.

The nineteen years of occupation as a simple township or plantation were years of quiet. Litigation was unknown; men were generally confiding, and at all times accommodating; the scarcity of implements of husbandry prompted invention, and necessity almost instantly brought forth the hastily made article wanted for immediate use.

Mr. Abner Tibbetts made the wood-work, and Mr. John Goodhue the iron-work, of the pioneer plough in Corinth.

Mr. Joshua C. Thompson framed and finished barns and dwelling-houses, while Mason Skinner, from straight-grained trees standing within sight of his shop, manufactured tubs, boxes, kegs, chairs, and almost every article wanted for use.

Mr. Rufus Inman, a master of all trades in wood, iron, and steel, manufactured spinning-wheels of every necessary description, made surgical instruments, and with wondrous skill used them; extracted teeth for six and one-fourth cents singly and ten cents for two at one sitting, and would let blood when deemed necessary with a lancet of his own making, as keen of edge as his own wit. Mr. Inman believed that Heaven designed that innate goodness and a cheerful spirit should ever live in man (Inman).

In those early days the Sabbath was generally observed, and dwelling-houses were open for religious worship, while large congregations would meet in newly finished stables, where praise was rendered to the Babe of the manger.

To the credit of the first settlers be it recorded that especial care was taken to instruct properly the young. In this parents never tired. The fireside and closet were dedicated institutions of learning, where were taught goodness, truth, justice, and love. By this parents and children alike became self-instructors. What they studied was practical, efficient, and good. By reading carefully they readily attained the common uses of words, and though no work of a Webster was before them, they soon learned that their own thoughts were "unabridged."

The first school in the township was taught by Miss Eunice Fisher, of Canton, Massachusetts. For want of juvenile school-books the thoughtful teacher resorted to object teaching; and the nest of the bird in the lower branches of the tree near the school-room taught the infant mind the beauties of bird life, the connubial tenderness between St. Valentine's mated birds, their care of the little ones, and that the unfledged bird gained strength of wing by failures and renewed efforts, and soon was enabled to reach the highest branch of the tree.

The first winter school was taught by Mr. Isaac Hodsdon, where scholars were taught to enter the school-room with deferential bow; unbidden, rise when parents or strangers entered or left, and at all times, in the street or elsewhere, with uncovered heads give civil salutations to all they met. This school was called the school of good manners.

A WORTHY TRIBUTE.

Our first parents in this township were fearless and just, never hiding themselves among the trees of ancient planting, and were early enabled to partake of the fruit of their own industry. We would gladly name them all, but by so doing we should become a tombstone in commemorating the dates of the birth and death of early settlers. Biographical notices we would gladly give if space would allow; but what can there be interesting to the public in the lives of men whose chief merit consisted simply in the due fulfillment of the duties of private life? The names of the first settlers are interesting, but it is because they were first settlers. Of them we have no affecting tale to relate, no perils by fire, flood, or field; no crimes to relate by the wrong-doing of others or themselves; but of them it can be said that they were a moral, religious, prudent people, lovers of kindred and country, who lived lives of industry, and admirable foresight, made the best of their situation, lived in quiet comfort, begat children, and died.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

The act of the General Court establishing the town of Corinth, provided that any Justice of the Peace in the County of Hancock might be authorized to issue a warrant directed to a freeholder in the town of Corinth, requiring him to notify and warn the inhabitants thereof to meet at such convenient time and place as should be appointed in said warrant, for the choice of such officers as towns are by law empowered and required to choose at their annual town meetings. Moses Hodsdon, of Kenduskeag, a Justice of the Peace for the county of Hancock, under his hand and seal on the 3d day of March, 1812, issued his warrant to William Tibbetts, of Corinth, requiring him to notify and warn the freeholders of the town to meet and assemble themselves together on Tuesday, the 17th day of March, instant, at 10 of the clock in the forenoon, at the dwelling-house of Elijah Skinner, in said town, for the purpose of choosing town officers for the ensuing year. This warrant was read in the presence and hearing of every freeholder and other inhabitant of Corinth, as directed therein, by William Tibbetts. They met at the time and place, and for the purposes aforesaid, and chose the following named persons as officers for the year 1812. Mark Trafton, Moderator; Isaac Hodsdon, Town Clerk; William Hammond, Elijah Skinner, John Hunting, Selectmen; Mark Trafton, Treasurer; William Peabody, Elijah Skinner, David A. Gove, Assessors; Joshua C. Thompson, Reuben Bass, Constables; Andrew Goodhue, Elijah Skinner, Jonathan Snow, Joseph Bragdon, Surveyors of Highways; Josiah Simpson, Jonathan Snow, Simon Prescott, Tything-men; Benjamin Dyer, Robert Campbell, Richard Palmer, Abner Tibbetts, Fence Viewers; Rufus Simpson, Mason Skinner, Joseph Prescott, Joshua Herrick, Hog-Reeves. Seven hundred dollars were raised for highways, and it was voted to allow $1.25 for a day's work on the same, eight hours constituting the day. The meeting also raised $200 for schools, if so desired, to be paid in corn at $1 a bushel, rye at $1.17, and wheat at $1.33. One hundred and fifty dollars were raised to defray town charges. The following highways were established: A highway from New Charleston, through the Hunting Settlement to the south line of Corinth: a highway from John Goodhue's running in a northerly direction through the Skinner settlement and Simpson (now Eddy) settlement to the Exeter line; and a highway from Lewis Bean's (the Ohio settlement) running northerly to the Exeter line.

STILL HIGHER DUTIES.

Notwithstanding the necessary labor in building these highways, yet the formation of school districts, erecting school-houses, and selecting suitable grounds for cemeteries were duties not overlooked; and schools were commenced as soon as school-houses could be erected.

Among the early settlers were those endowed with large capacities and rare abilities, who, sensibly feeling the want of schools in their own early life, resolved to do all in their power to enable the young by early instruction to become more fully educated than themselves, and thus imbued with the truth that the present time is the planting hour, busied themselves as best they could in depositing the acorn, that those coming after them might find the oak.

At this time the venerable Father Sawyer, "the Pilgrim of a hundred years," whose efforts had much to do in establishing the Theological Seminary in Bangor, while on his missionary labors through the Penobscot region, visited the newly made settlements, and with that mind which sheds light on whatever it sees, and with fitting words in voice sweet to the ear of childhood, he spake truths which overwhelmed them with floods of happy thought; the influence of that good man's words live even to this day, as they lived more than half a century ago with the early settlers, who then were putting forth that stretch of endeavor which taxed muscle of mind, heart, and hand.

THE EDDYS, OF EDDINGTON.

In 1818 several families from Eddington moved into the Eddy Settlement, which formed an important acquisition to the town. Among the new comers was Mr. William Eddy, who was born in Sackville, New Brunswick, July 1, 1775, and died in Corinth, January 22, 1852. His death was occasioned by a fall from a scaffold in his barn, and was greatly lamented.

Mr. Jonathan M. Eddy, oldest son of William Eddy, was born in Eddington, October 22, 1797, and died in Corinth, August 5, 1875. Pope pronounced a fitting eulogy on Mr. Eddy, when he declared,

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

For his first wife he married Miss Eliza Morrill, who died February 5, 1861. His second wife was Mrs. Elizabeth G. Twombly, with whom he happily passed the remaining days of a useful and happy life.

THE FIRST MILITARY COMPANY of local infantry was commanded by Captain William Bean, and embraced the soldiery of Corinth and Levant. In 1823 the soldiers of Levant were withdrawn, and became a separate company, under command of Lieutenant Daniel Little. A military spirit was soon after much encouraged by the officers residing in Corinth, viz.: General Isaac Hodsdon, General Charles Piper, Colonel Josiah Morrill, Adjutant George Simpson, Major M. S. Palmer, and Major Ora Oakman.

RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

In 1823 the Rev. Stephen Dexter became the first settled minister in the town. Mr. Dexter was born in Cape Cod in 1776, and died in Corinth in August, 1836. His ministry was very satisfactory to his people. He was a man of industry, and equally at home on the farm, in the shop, or in the pulpit. His family was large, and sons and daughters learned to follow a father's judicious example and timely instructions.

The first church edifice (Baptist) was built in 1832, near the residence of the pastor. In 1856 the building was removed to a very desirable location in East Corinth village, and being remodeled and well finished, with fitting steeple and finely-toned bell, it was admired for its architectural fitness and sweetly ringing belfry music. This church has generally been fortunate in having in its pulpit pastors of marked abilities, while the singing gallery has given notes divinely sweet to the cultured ear.

The Methodists have two churches, one in Corinth, the other in East Corinth, both of medium size, well finished, and so clean in all their parts that the fact is admitted that Methodists believe in internal purity in the sanctuary, as well as in practical life. One pastor supplies both pulpits.

In 1856 the Free-will Baptists erected a commodious house in East Corinth, excellent in all its appointments, where they worship with religious decorum and commendable zeal.

Connected with all the churches are Sabbath-schools, which are doing wonders in the great work of Christian intelligence and practical piety. Looking recently into these schools, where the teaching of the young engrosses the philanthropic energies of the devoted Christian, we read in the faces of teacher and scholar that there is bliss in life's working days, and none need wait for death ere heaven's joys begin.

Connected also with the churches are social societies, sometimes called sewing societies, which are principally managed by the intelligent ladies interested in the church. Their meetings are generally weekly, in which all can participate; and while woman's industry works for church or pastorate, each contributes to its social enjoyments under the admonition from Apostolic lips: "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that you may know how you ought to answer every man." While these societies refrain from all scandal and evil speaking, they make speech the vehicle of the mind, sometimes running light, sometimes loaded, endeavoring at all times to make language the garment of the soul, knowing that the grace of utterance comes not merely by observation, but from a root deeply within. The preacher, whose thoughts come to us in trained carpentry of words, is sometimes dull on the ear; but words become fragrant with a charm, when their spirit is sensibly spoken in those societies which give social fitness of expression. Gems, scattered broadcast from the pulpit, after being rehandled and reset to words of social, graceful utterance, coming from the fountains of pure thought, become not only gracious, but divine. In the fifteenth century jests, opinions, and bon mots uttered in conversation by men of genius, were published and transmitted to posterity. Giles Menage met with assemblies of literary men and wrote their sayings, which were published in 1693; and all lovers of genuine wit and deep thought admire the published literary conversations of Horace Walpole and the Table Talk of Selden. While men of colloquial eloquence thus gave to the world thoughts worthy remembrance, may not mothers and sisters, in their table talk at their social gatherings, teach the world that there is a power and sweetness in words spoken from the full heart and pure life of cultured womanhood?

CORINTHIAN HIGHWAYS.

From the northerly line of the town, and running in a southerly direction to Kenduskeag, are five main roads, viz: From Exeter, nearly on the line between Corinth (Ohio Settlement) and Levant, to Kenduskeag; from Exeter through the Eddy and Skinner settlements to Kenduskeag; from Charleston through East Corinth to Kenduskeag (between these two last roads runs the Kenduskeag Stream); from Charleston through East Ridge Settlement to Kenduskeag; from Charleston through the Farrar settlement, intersecting with roads leading to Kenduskeag. These roads are well made and kept in good repair and are the leading avenues to Bangor. Other roads are intersecting or town roads. That probably most traveled is the road established in 1819, leading from Smith's Corner (East Corinth) in a westerly direction, crossing the stream to Corinth (Skinner Settlement). From this cross-road, commencing near the bridge over the Kenduskeag Stream, and still nearer the entrance of the Pierre Paul Brook with the stream, and running nearly parallel with the same, is a road leading through a farming neighborhood prolific in its hay crop, and terminating at a road near the residence of Andrew G. Fitz. On the easterly side of the Kenduskeag Stream, and running in a southerly direction as runs the stream, and nearly parallel with the road on the westerly side, is a road leading to Robeyville, near Kenduskeag's northerly line, at which place there is an excellent water-power, owned and once occupied by Mr. Clark Hersey. The stream is here spanned by a covered bridge, which gives Robeyville a business-like aspect. The lands on each side of the stream, through which these roads run, are good.

A very pleasant road, leading from East Corinth and passing the Corinthian cemetery, crosses the waters of the Crooked Brook and the Kenduskeag, and branches in various directions.

THE MILLS OF CORINTH.

By changing the starting-point on the Hatch Road before named, proceeding in a northerly direction from Robeyville, and crossing the road leading from East Corinth to Corinth, you soon find yourself in the vicinity of the saw-mill and shingle-mill on the waters of the Crooked Brook, owned by Mr. John Thissell. At this place were the mills erected by Deacon Hunting.

At a short distance from these mills, but situated upon the waters of the Kenduskeag, is the saw-mill, shingle-mill, and grist-mill owned and occupied by the Messrs. McGregor. All of the above mills have done, and are still in condition for doing, good service. In their vicinity farmers are tilling a soil of easy culture, and very productive.

EAST RIDGE.

In 1816 Samuel Houston commenced farming on lands lying east of East Corinth, in the east division, and asked the town to cause a road to be laid out "from his chopping" to East Corinth. After the granting of the petition, other persons commenced clearing lands; and soon a neighborhood was in existence, called the "Savage Settlement," but soon known as the "East Ridge." The land was productive, families increased, and the road petitioned for was soon extended further east. East Ridge presently embraced a large tract of excellent land, extending from the ridge in an easterly direction to the Hudson town line; and those having the gift of prophecy predicted that in coming time East Ridge, in beauty and comeliness, would equal her elder sister.

The first settlers of East Ridge have been gathered to their fathers; others, loving more a warmer clime, have left; yet to-day the Ridge resounds with the farmer's cheery voice from his fields, and the mechanic's hammer in his shop.

The road from the Charleston line, leading through the Ridge, is mostly on elevated ground, and farms on each side show due culture of the soil, while the merry sound of voices tells of happy firesides. The children in the streets greet you with deferential bow, and with smiling faces hasten to the school-room. Such children are moving the world, and will eventually renovate its social conditions.

Crossing the main road that leads to Kenduskeag, you proceed in an easterly direction to Bear Brook, the waters of which, after putting in quick motion the saw-mill, shingle-mill, and planing-mill of Mr. James R. Trim, join the waters of Pushaw Pond. Travelling still farther eastward, you intersect Farrar Road, once known as the Hatch Road, leading from Charleston to Kenduskeag, and are within one hundred and fifty rods of the Hudson line.

"THE MIRROR" OF CORINTH.

In 1830, without previous announcement, a small, four-page monthly newspaper, called the Mirror, and purporting to be published in Corinth, was widely distributed through the town. From the tone of its published articles, it was readily ascertained that its objects were to make odious the abuse of the faculties of speech; and while profane language and falsehood were treated as evils demanding the censure of all persons, scandal received the scathing denunciation of a pen sharp as the serpent's tooth and as keenly felt as the sting of the wasp. The sheet was small; but the presuming juvenile editor averred his ability to show that it was the contents of a paper which made it great, while with artistic skill he made each issue "a moving picture of the passing day." If there were any persons who feared that the flood gates of scandal might be raised and a quiet people inundated with tales of falsehood "strange and vile," these fears were soon allayed, for a change came. Words ceased to be shallow and babbling, like surface waters; scandal stopped—and so did the Mirror.

THE POST-OFFICES.

There are in this town four post-offices, each supplied with a daily mail. Richard Palmer was the first Postmaster in Corinth; Elbridge H. Bragdon is the present Postmaster in the same office. David A. Gove was the first in East Corinth; Roscoe A. Kingsbury is the present incumbent.

In 1818 the mails for Corinth were carried on horseback. The carrier was a man small in stature, and exceedingly anxious to be at each office on his route precisely at the hour designated for his arrival. Attached to his saddle he carried a trumpet of powerful sound, and when within half a mile of a post-office this miniature Gabriel did not by sound of his trumpet declare exactly "that time should be no longer," but rather that he was on time!

THE DOCTORS.

Dr. William Peabody was the first educated physician in town. The Doctor was born in Boxford, Massachusetts, January 10, 1768; received his education in Byfield, in his native State; studied medicine with Dr. Skinner, of Brewer; was a surgeon in the War of 1812; was at the battle in Hampden; came to Corinth in 1812; was a successful physician, and a worthy and highly respected citizen. He died December 14, 1857. There was one particular instance in the Doctor's medical practice which history, for the consideration of physicians, deems worthy of record. After prescribing for a patient who was evidently very sick, the Doctor found that the medicine administered had no effect upon the disease, and for a long time he studiously labored to reach the case of the sick man; but the disease was refractory, yielding in no wise to the Doctor's medicinal curatives. In fact the Doctor saw he did not understand the nature of the complaint, yet the patient being a man of strong constitution, recovered. For his services the Doctor refused compensation, alleging that no physician should receive pay for treating a disease which was both beyond his reading and present research.

Dr. Jared Fuller came to Corinth in the year 1832, at which time he commenced practice as a physician. He was usually successful in his profession, was moderate in his charges, kind to the poor, and circumspect in all his social and business relations. In the State Legislature he served one term; and twice was a member of the Governor's Council. In 1868 he was chairman of a committee to investigate charges preferred against the Insane Asylum. He was also at the time of his death Postmaster at East Corinth. While one of the municipal officers of the town, the only charge brought against his official duties was his kindness to the town's poor.

Dr. Jason Huckins graduated at the Castleton, Vermont, Medical College, in November, 1859; commenced practice in Corinth in June, 1860; entered military service as assistant surgeon of the Twenty-second Regiment Maine Volunteers, in August, 1862, and served one year in the Department of the Gulf, principally in Louisiana. Since the Doctor's return from military service as a surgeon, he has been in constant practice as a physician in Corinth and vicinity. His residence is in East Corinth.

Dr. C. S. Philbrick, homœopathic physician and surgeon, has an office and residence at J. Wesley Hunting's, in East Corinth.

Dr. W. F. Johnson, surgeon dentist, is located in East Corinth.

The town hearse and hearse-house are maintained in East Corinth.

MAJOR ORA OAKMAN was born in Bangor Nov. 12, 1809, and died April 12, 1872. In early boyhood, with his father's family, he removed to Corinth, labored on his father's farm during the spring, summer, and autumnal months, and attended the town school during winter. Young Oakman easily accomplished any study he undertook. He resolved to study himself as he would study a problem in algebra, and thus make himself proficient in all matters within the province of self-taught human attainment. The bird of song in the hedge taught him the love of music; hence he studied music. But it was in the branches of education taught in our common schools that he applied the energies of studious thought. To teach others what he himself had learned, became mere pastime. In the school-room he was perfectly at home; his manner was imposing and dignified, and as a disciplinarian no teacher excelled him. Order in the school-room was the first thing in order. No scholar cared to be otherwise than orderly in his presence. Although a practical farmer he taught forty town schools and sixty singing-schools. His character and name were synonymous. He was an Oakman, showing at all times the grain of the wood; and that he was "live Oak" was evident from the active life he lived. Four Oaken sons survive the parent Oak; and they, like the father, are musicians, and when a public gathering is announced, you learn from the bill that the music will be by the "Oakman Brothers."

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

The citizens of Corinth, ever loving the remembrance of the heroic dead who fought in the War of the Rebellion, have most respectfully given to history the names of their townsmen killed in battle, or who died from wounds received or disease contracted in the army. In life they were their loved ones; by death they are embalmed, and live in their thoughts:

George B. F. Hosmer,	Chester Pearson,
Stillman Guppy,	David B. Herrick,
Austin W. Whittier,	Josiah M. Whittier,
William H. Herrick,	Levi Stevens,
Eli W. Parkman,*	Alfred W. Warren,
Andrew J. Whittier,	Nathan Chamberlain,
Sumner S. Bean,	Asa H. Sawyer,
Rufus H. Gilman,	Charles A. Whittier,
Henry C. Heald,	Edgar Sargent,
Evander C. Curtis,	Allen Hunting,
Henry Lyford,	Frank Roundy,
Newell J. Bradley,	John Hunting,
Fred J. Robbins,	Isaac R. Worth,
James Stevens,	Chester M. Herrick,
Henry J. Hurd,	Henry D. Fuller,
Moses W. Fiske,	Alonzo Batchelder,
George F. Hurd,	Cyrus Perkins,
Aaron Houston,	Walter A. Crowell,
C. Augustus Kisor,	Benjamin Crowell,
Z. Taylor Reynolds,	Thomas M. Hinckley,
Israel Hodsdon,	William Eddy,
John Ham,	Stephen Barker,

THE INSTITUTIONS OF CORINTH.

East Corinth Academy was built in 1843. The Legislature of 1848, at its summer session, donated for the use of said Academy one-half of a township of land. Dr. Jason Hucks, C. Meguire, and T. McDonald were appointed Trustees. For six years now last past, Mr. David Fletcher has been Principal, and his present assistant is Miss M. E. Mathews. The academy is well patronized.

The Cheese and Canning Factory Association was incorporated February 13, 1874, with Mr. John Thissell as President, Charles Meguire, Secretary, and T. McDonald, Treasurer.

Mr. Charles Meguire's circulating library contains about three hundred volumes.

There are in the town six cider-mills, making in all about twelve hundred barrels of cider per year. The motive power of the mill now being built by Webber R. Clark, is steam, with an engine of sufficient power to carry saws, apparatus for grinding grain, planing lumber, and making cider.

The new town house just completed, is an imposing edifice, costing as a whole about five thousand two hundred dollars. On the ground floor is the town hall, especially adapted to the town's wants. It cost two thousand two hundred dollars. On the second floor is a large hall built by the Corinthian Lodge, No. 59, I. O. O. F., admirably constructed, well finished, and costing the lodge three thousand dollars. This society numbers about one hundred members, who hold regular meetings in the hall every Wednesday evening. It was instituted October 2, 1878, with forty-five members.

There are two societies of Good Templars in town, that in Corinth, the Ivy Lodge, containing about fifty members, and meeting every Saturday evening at their own hall. Anchor Lodge No. 321, in East Corinth, comprising more than one hundred members, meets at the Grange Hall, every Monday evening. While it is believed that these societies are doing much good for the cause of temperance, it is also evident they produce much social enjoyment.

The Orient Grange No. 50, in Corinth, was organized in 1875. At its commencement its numbers were few, and for several years its growth was tardy; yet those loving its principles were untiring in their efforts to sustain an institution which promised the growth and culture of the human mind. For this they worked, as works the philanthropist and the Christian, believing that faith and works in a good cause would eventually receive their reward; and so it proved. To-day the Grange numbers more than one hundred; and those that entered doubting are now happy in knowing that sympathetic and fraternal intercourse with the laws of mind and the great truths of nature, will give to the inquiring human soul wondrous growth. Its members have learned and others are learning, that the Grange is not a place for the lazy of brain or the sluggard in thought; that it is a mental-working institution; and while it has hours of pleasant recreation, it has working hours, hours of study, of deep thought, where pure expression, oral or written, are only practical lessons that initiate them into the great millennial language of a coming period, when falsehood and rough words will be unknown, and unkindness will lose its name among men. The Grange meets every Saturday evening, at Grange Hall.

The Penobscot Central Agricultural Society hold their annual exhibitions and fairs on the grounds of Mr. John Morrison, near Knowles's tavern, in East Corinth, using the large hall connected with the public house for an agricultural hall during show days. These shows exhibit in miniature the energy of a farming community and the handiwork of wives and daughters.

LUMBERING IN CORINTH.

From the commencement of farming to about the year 1845, the pine and the cedar were seemingly doomed to extermination. The ordinary pine gave boards, clapboards, and shingles for the outside completion of every building, while that of a better quality furnished material for inside finish; and while the builder of his own house, for his evening devotions, read the words of the King to Nathan, the prophet, who exultingly exclaims, "See, now I dwell in a house of cedar," the reading man of humble pretensions responds, "See, too, I dwell in a house of pine!" But the great demand for shingles moved farmers to lay waste the cedars on their low-lands, converting them into merchandise. For many years farmers spent their winters in shingle making. This made wanton havoc with the cedars of the forest, and tree-tops thickly scattered gave the appearance of waste. But within a few years the felled timber, still generally sound, is finding its appropriate place in fencing the farms of the husbandman, thus keeping cattle within the well-fenced boundaries of ownership. Within the last two years alone at least twelve miles of cedar fence have been built in Corinth, most of it by one man.

* Parkman lived in Charleston, but is buried with Corinth's dead.

John Russell

Until recently the cedar has not been appreciated. Cedar wood, as noticed in Leviticus, was prescribed among the materials used for the cleansing of leprosy. The four-score thousand hewers employed by Solomon for cutting timber robbed Lebanon of its glory, and while we have no Solomons revelling in life's luxuries, thus to rob us, we have a second growing of cedar, which is better, at least so far as fencing is concerned.

ANOTHER PIONEER.

Andrew Strong, one of Corinth's most prominent men and one of her early settlers, was a citizen of unusual business capacities. He was a surveyor of land; and, being appointed agent of Benjamin Joy, the principal proprietor of the town, nearly all the sales of land were made by him. While he faithfully performed the duties of agent, in no single instance has it ever appeared that he lost sight of the interests of his townsmen. Mr. Strong, for many years, was one of the municipal officers of the town. He laid out her roads, and was generally foremost in all matters pertaining to her interests. In 1819 he was chosen one of the delegates to meet in the convention for forming a new Constitution for the State. In 1835 Mr. Strong became blind, and placed in the hands of his pupil, Mr. Andrew G. Fitz, the unfinished public business of his life, delivering him his compass and surveying apparatus, with all his carefully kept memoranda and field notes, which were full and complete from 1808 to 1835. Thus the compass and chain long used by Mr. Strong are now in the hands of Mr. Fitz, and are still used with that care and ability which distinguished the veteran surveyor.

SELF-MURDERS.

There have been in Corinth eleven suicides. The first was on May 15, 1815, being the drowning by her own act of Miss Louisa Knight, aged twenty, in the Crooked Brook. Miss Knight was the personification of happy girlhood life. Upon the brain horizon suddenly appeared a cloud, hiding from her the presence of her Maker, and she destroyed that life.

BUSINESS NOTES.

James Knowles is the popular landlord of the Parker House, East Corinth.

Daniel F. and Ira W. Davis are attorneys and counselors at law.

There are in town eight stores, six blacksmiths, four wheelwrights, four stone-masons, and six house-carpenters.

Drugs and medicines are kept at C. Megquires'.

J. Wesley Hunting's four-horse mail stage-coach leaves Knowles's Hotel for Bangor every day at 6 A. M.; returning, arrives at 6 P. M.

STATISTICS.

In 1812 Corinth had 38 polls, a valuation of estates to the amount of $1,032.60, and a State tax of 16 cents on the $1,000.

In 1820 the town had 63 voters and a valuation of $24,771.

The polls and estates, respectively, in 1860, were 390 and $313,870; in 1870, 377 and $432,970; and in 1880, 381 and $439,036; in 1881, 341 and $383,942.

Ohio Plantation had a population of 189 in 1810. Corinth had 296 in 1820, 712 in 1830, 1,308 in 1840, 1,600 in 1850, 1,790 in 1860, 1,462 in 1870, and 1,333 in 1880.

As an indication of the agricultural resources of the town, it may be mentioned that in 1878 the Corinthian harvest was reported at 27,369 bushels of potatoes, 18,165 of oats, 5,392 of corn, 2,780 of barley, 1,821 of beans, and 1,767 of wheat.

The public financial resources of the town in 1881 were $9,924.01.

There were then supported by the town 11 persons—8 upon the Town Farm, 3 at the Insane Hospital.

Corinth is divided into 13 school districts; number of pupils, 431; funds for support of schools, $1,860.22.

Should the stranger ask why there were in town at least three accomplished and intelligent unmarried females to one unmarried male, the answer is that during the War of the Rebellion the girl of patriotism consented that her affianced husband should fight the battles of our country—not that she loved him less, but her country more.

EARLY SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The first efforts to establish Sabbath-schools were made in 1832 by Deacon Stephen Dexter and Miss Elma Herrick, to which Mrs. Tozier, at present the widow of John Tozier, and now eighty-five years of age, contributed a supply of books.

THE CIVIL ROSTER OF CORINTH.

Persons once or now residents of Corinth, who have held or at the present time are holding the more important elective offices, or offices under appointment, are named below: Royal Clark, Sheriff of the county; Mason S. Palmer, J. Manning Herrick, George F. Hill, Edwin R. Bean, Deputy Sheriffs; Levi Bradley, Noah Barker, State Land Agents; Dr. Jared Fuller, Counsellor two terms; John Thissell, John B. Nichols, John Morrison (two terms), Daniel F. Davis, Noah Barker, State Senators; Jared Fuller, John Morrison (two terms), Jonathan M. Eddy, Heman S. Jackson, Sylvester Eddy, Thomas G. Watson, John C. Blanchard, John B. Nichols, Joseph B. Wheeler, David Fletcher, Edwin R. Bean, George F. Hill, Luther Wadleigh, and John L. Robinson, Members of the Legislature; Mark Trafton, Andrew Strong, Isaac Hodsdon, Reuben Ball, Henry K. Dexter, Elijah Skinner, John Tozier, Mason S. Palmer, Noah Barker, Joseph B. Wheeler, Matthew French, Henry K. Dexter, Thomas G. Watson, John L. Robinson, John Thissell, Bradbury Robinson, Charles Meguire, D. F. Davis, Ira W. Davis, Humphrey Nichols, Farmer Bragg, Justices of the Peace; Joshua Hawes, Benjamin Ball, Edwin R. Bean, David Fletcher, Trial Justices. Isaac Hodsdon was Clerk of the Courts, Major-General of the Militia, and Adjutant-General of the State. Mason S. Palmer was Register of Probate for many years. Royal Clark, Mark Trafton, and George H. Fuller were Postmasters at Bangor. Daniel F. Davis was Governor of the State in 1880.

The officers of the town in 1881 were: Charles A. Robinson, George H. Smith, Edwin A. Cole, Selectmen; Charles Meguire, Town Clerk; C. B. Bragdon (East), J. M. Herrick, A. F. Bragg, F. B. Trickey, Constables; Frank B. Trickey, Treasurer, Constable, and Collector; Charles B. Bragdon, School Supervisor; Noah Barker, M. S. Palmer, Charles Meguire, J. B. Wheeler, Daniel F. Davis, Timothy McDonald, I. W. Davis (Quorum), Edwin R. Bean, David Fletcher (Trial), Justices.

MILITARY BIOGRAPHIES.

[From the report of General John L. Hodsdon, formerly Adjutant-General of the State.]

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL GEORGE FULLER.—This officer enlisted as a private on the 24th of April, 1861, in a company raised in Corinth, of which he was elected Second Lieutenant, and which became Company H, Sixth Regiment. He was subsequently elected Captain, and was mustered in with his regiment, July 15, 1861. The command soon after proceeded to Washington and joined the Army of the Potomac, in which the regiment served until mustered out, August 15, 1864.

The record of Lieutenant-Colonel Fuller is identified with that of the regiment with which he was always on duty. He therefore participated in the battles of Warwick Creek, Lee's Mills, Williamsburg, Garnett's Farm, Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp, Crampton Pass, Antietam, first Fredericksburg, Mary's Heights or second Fredericksburg, Banks's Ford, Kelley's Ford, Gettysburg, Rappahannock Station, Locust Grove, the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania Court-house; in the four last of which he was in command of the regiment after the fall of Lieutenant-Colonel Harris.

On the 22d of May, 1863, Captain Fuller was commissioned Major of the regiment, and on April 24, 1864, was further promoted Lieutenant Colonel.

Lieutenant-Colonel Fuller did not pass through the war without experiencing some of its most painful vicissitudes. In the battle of Garnett's Farm he was struck in the breast by a spent ball; at Rappahannock Station his horse was killed under him, his sword shot off, and his clothes pierced; and at Spottsylvania Court-House, when of the two hundred men of the regiment who went into a charge on the 10th of May, 1864, one hundred and sixty were killed and wounded, Colonel Fuller was also shot and carried off the field.

On the 1st of July he rejoined his regiment at Washington, then on its way to Maine to be mustered out; but was retained by General Russell, commanding the division. Subsequent to the consolidation of a remnant of the regiment with the First Veterans, Colonel Fuller tendered his resignation, and was honorably mustered out, July 28, 1864, having been in the service thirty-nine months, and earned for himself a soldierly reputation of which he may well be proud.

LIEUTENANT HENRY D. FULLER, of Corinth, entered the service in March, 1864, as Second Lieutenant in Baker's District of Columbia Cavalry. He served with his regiment in the Army of the James under General Butler, a portion of the time acting as Brigade Ordnance Officer, until October, 1864, when he was captured by the enemy at the battle of Cox's Mills, and remained in prison until December of that year. In the meantime his regiment had been consolidated with the First Maine Cavalry, and after his release he joined that regiment for duty as Second Lieutenant of Company B, and served in that capacity with great credit till the close of the war. In the last campaign of the Army of the Potomac, he was severely wounded at the battle of Dinwiddie Court House. After the surrender of Lee, he was detailed on provost duty at Petersburg, Virginia, for four months, and was mustered out of service with his regiment in August, 1865.

The following are among the most important battles in which Lieutenant Fuller was engaged: Petersburg, June 1864; Wilson's Raid—comprising the battles of Reams' Station, Stanton Railroad Bridge and Stony Creek—Deep Bottom, Weldon Railroad, Cox's Mills, Wyatt's Farm, Hatcher's Run and Dinwiddie Court House.

SERGEANT ISRAEL HODSDON, of Company H, Sixth Maine Volunteers, of Corinth, aged twenty-five years, mortally wounded in the battle of Rappahannock Station, on the 7th day of November, 1863, died during his removal from the battle-field to Washington. His remains were embalmed by order of his Captain, and sent home, accompanied by the following letter from his regimental commander:

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,
CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VIRGINIA, JANUARY 11, 1864. }

General:—I had intended writing you, ere this time, on the subject of your nephew's services, and lamented but glorious death: for if one must die, and die we all must, sooner or later, what death is so honorable, so noble, as that of the "battle-field," in the service of one's country? During a period of thirty months, up to the time he fell, while gallantly cheering on the men at Rappahannock Station, I had known Israel under all the varied phases of a soldier's life: in camp, on the toilsome march, in the roar of battle, and he was always the same: prompt and attentive to duty, respectful to his officers, and kind to the men, by whom he was highly esteemed. The battle in which he fell was the fifteenth in which he had been engaged, in all of which he exhibited both courage and capacity, and rose by merit alone from the rank of Junior Corporal to that of First Sergeant. I esteemed him highly both as a man and a soldier, and from our long association in that life which tests men as none other does, from our standing shoulder to shoulder through so many hard-fought battles, I almost feel as if I had a right to sympathize with his friends in this deep calamity. And, General, pardon me if I add that all things are ordered by an All-Wise Providence, and that God had undoubtedly caused this deep affliction to visit you for some wise purpose. And if he was to die, you, who have stood at the head of the military profession in our State, can but be pleased that he died in the service you love so well; a service which Maine at least has in times past been largely controlled by you, and owes its efficiency in a great measure to your efforts.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE FULLER, Major Commanding.

GENERAL ISAAC HODSDON, Corinth, Maine.

The following notice is from the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College, published in the same reports:

Class of 1860.—Granville P. Hawes; born, East Corinth, July, 1838; began the study of law; entered the service as First Lieutenant of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth New York Regiment; was detailed as Commissary, etc., on the staff of General W. H. Emory, Eighth Corps, and served under the same when transferred to the command of Third Division, Nineteenth Corps, Department of the Gulf; was mentioned with honor by Major-General Banks for efficiency in his position in the first Teche expedition; was attached to the staff of Major-General Grover after the siege of Port Hudson; then reported to Major-General Herron, Army of the Frontier, in Texas; resigned in the spring of 1865.

We have also the following, from another source:

During the war of the Rebellion, Henry W. Palmer enlisted in Company H, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteers, and in the battle of the Wilderness lost his right arm. On the same day after amputation on the field he traveled sixteen miles on foot to the nearest hospital. He is now at the home of his boyhood, caring for his parents, and with his younger brother, Clifford E. Palmer, manages the farm made by their venerable father, the Hon. Mason S. Palmer, more than half a century ago.

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

Hon. Mason S. Palmer, of Corinth, was born in Corinth, October 27, 1803. His first remembered outlook upon the world was among the forests and the then recently felled trees and small patches of cleared land incident to farm-making. To this work he devoted his days of boyhood, excepting always such times as he was enabled to attend such schools as were early introduced in the township. In early life he became a teacher, and on arriving at his majority was chosen superintendent of schools. He afterwards wrote in the various county offices; at a suitable age was appointed Assistant Postmaster at Bangor, and left that position when appointed Register of Probate for Penobscot county, which office he held for many years. Although a lover of any position of trust when proffered, he never sought position nor was of the begging throng which disgrace American communities until the crazed brain deliberately takes the life of one having the gift to bestow and the wisdom of withholding. For several years Mr. Palmer had charge of the Katchden Iron Works, in Piscataquis county, from which he went to the Briggs Iron Company, in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, as its agent. Here he was engaged for nine years, during which he served one term as a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts. He was also appointed Clerk of the Court of Insolvency for the county of Berkshire, and one of the Supervisors of Schools. After suffering seriously by fire, he removed back to his own native town, and at this writing resides on the farm in the neighborhood of the place of his birth. Mr. Palmer married Miss Nancy Johnson Coy, daughter of the late Captain Henry Coy, of Minot, Maine, an officer in the War of 1812.

Hon. Noah Barker is son of Nathaniel Barker, who came from Limerick, York county, Maine, to Exeter in the year 1803. He married Sarah Pease, daughter of Joseph Pease, of Exeter, formerly of Parsonsfield. They had ten children, viz: Noah, Melinda, Julia, Sarah, Nathaniel, David, Louis, Daniel, Mark, and John. Mr. Barker died in March, 1823, and Mrs. Barker died January 6, 1880. All of this family are now living except Melinda, Sarah, David, and John. Noah Barker, the subject of this sketch, was born in Blaisdell Plantation, now Exeter, November 14, 1807, and is now, therefore, in his seventy-fourth year. After receiving a common school education he received an academical training at Hampden and Foxcroft Academies. He studied surveying in the academy and commenced surveying in 1830. He surveyed all the northern part of Maine into townships and has been engaged in this work more or less all his life, not only in Maine but New Hampshire and Canada. He married Temperance B. Eddy December 29, 1839. They have had four children, viz: George, Charles V., William E., and Nellie A., all of whom are now living. After serving his term in the capacity of School Commissioner, and for several terms as Selectman, he was elected to the Legislature in the fall of 1837, in 1839, and in 1855, and to the Senate in 1878 and 1879. He also has been County Commissioner for several years; also State Land Agent in 1867 and 1859. He settled on his present place in Corinth in the spring of 1856, where he has since lived.

H. L. Pearson is a son of John Pearson, who came from Sutton, New Hampshire, about 1806 or 1807, after living in Warren, Maine, a few years. He married Betsey Stevens, of Sutton, New Hampshire, and settled in the south part of Corinth in what was known as the Ohio Settlement. He had eight sons and one daughter—two died in infancy. The names of those who arrived at maturity were: Thomas J., Phineas S., Henry L., Benjamin B., John W., Nelson P., and Statira H. He always after lived here in Corinth, except a few years spent in New Brunswick. Henry L. Pearson, the subject of this sketch, was born in Warren, Maine, January 3, 1805, and is, therefore, now seventy-six years old. He married Ruthy Dutton, daughter of James Dutton, who died while she was an infant and she was brought up by the Hon. S. E. Dutton, of Bangor. Mr. Pearson settled on the farm where he now lives, about three miles south of the village of Corinth. He cleared up this farm, cutting the first tree that was cut on the present farm, there being but few settlements in the neighborhood. He is said to be the only man now living on the first clearing made by him in town. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson have had ten children, five sons and two daughters that arrived at maturity, viz: Henry L.; Oscar; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Wood, of Massachusetts; Francis Chester, now deceased; Emma C., now deceased; Charles, who now resides on the old homestead with his father; Mary Ellen, now Mrs. J. W. Pressey, of Biddeford; and James D., of Bangor. Mr. Pearson never sought for public life, not caring for office. They are now spending their old age on the beautiful farm they made from the wilderness, cared for by their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pearson, who have six children, two sons and four daughters.

Clifford W. Shores is the son of Thomas J. Shores, whose father's name was James Shores, who came to Maine from Massachusetts in an early day. Thomas J. Shores married Clymenia Williams, daughter of Clifford Williams, of Waterville, Maine. They had two children—Clifford W. and Thomas. Thomas died in infancy. Clifford W., after becoming of age, engaged in the livery business in Waterville. He remained in this business about four years, moved to Corinth in the year 1858, and settled on the place he now occupies, where he has since resided, except for a period of five years spent in Illinois. He married Adesta Roundy, daughter of John Roundy, of Corinth. They have two children, viz: Frank W. and Kate H., aged ten and three. Mr. Shores owns sixty acres of land in this town, making a fine farm, which he continues to work.

Deacon Stephen Dexter, one of the oldest living settlers of this town, is a son of Rev. Stephen Dexter, of Albion, Kennebec county, Maine, who married Sarah Ward, of Harland. They had a large family of thirteen children, of whom Stephen, the subject of this sketch, is the third son and fourth child. He moved to this town when Stephen was seventeen, and settled in what was called the Hunting Settlement, where he ever afterward lived, and died, being the first settled Baptist minister, in Corinth. Deacon Stephen Dexter was born June 11, 1804. He married Ploomy Pearson, daughter of Thomas Pearson, of Corinth. She died August 19, 1826. One child died in infancy. He married Ploomy Sargeant, daughter of Ezekiel Sargeant, of New London, New Hampshire, by whom he had three children, viz: Roxanna A., now Mrs. Arvidson, of Placerville, California; Sarah W., now Mrs. H. A. Merrill, of Bangor; Ploomy A., who died June 25, 1850. Mr. Dexter first settled in East Corinth, clearing the land of standing trees. He lived there until 1855, when he moved to the Corner, and soon after moved to his present farm, about one-half a mile west of the village. He has been a member of the Baptist church here longer than any other person, serving as deacon for over forty years.

William Spratt, son of William Spratt, who came into this town in 1824, from China, Kennebec county, Maine, and settled near the centre of the town of Corinth, married Sarah Edgerly, of Brentwood, New Hampshire. They had seven children, viz: John, Jane, William, Sarah, Mary H., Dudley D., and George W. He died on the farm on which he first settled, in 1836. Mrs. Spratt died in Patten, in 1838. William Spratt, the subject of this sketch, who formerly wrote his name William Spratt, Jr., married Permelia Miller, daughter of Benjamin Miller, of Barnard, Piscataquis county, Maine. They first settled in Sebec; moved to Corinth in 1851, and settled on the farm on which he now lives, about the center of the town. They have had four children, but one of whom is now living, viz: Frank, who lives with his father, on the old homestead. Mr. Spratt has a good farm of about one hundred acres with good buildings.

Humphrey Nichols, son of Thomas Nichols, who came to this State from New Hampshire, his native place being Weare, New Hampshire, removed to Charleston, Penobscot county, about 1808. He married Elizabeth Hadlock, by whom he had fourteen children, ten of whom arrived at maturity, viz: Betsey, Hannah, Levi, Humphrey, Mary and Sarah, twins,—Sarah, now Mrs. Eastman, being the only one now living except the subject of this sketch; Surrenea, Abigail P., Lydia A., and Thomas. Mr. Nichols lived in Charleston about twelve years and then moved to Bangor, where he lived about four years, then moved to Corinth, where he ever afterwards lived, dying at the age of ninety-six, in the year 1867. Mr. Humphrey Nichols was born January 13, 1807. He married Marcia G. Tyler, by whom he had ten children, eight of whom lived to maturity, viz: Walter, Ephraim T., Lucien B., Eugene C., B. Fairfield, Theresa A., Wilfred E., and Lamartine. Mr. Nichols lost his wife in 1859, and married for his second wife Hannah Lovren, daughter of John Lovren, of Deering, New Hampshire. Mr. Nichols first settled where he now lives, in the southeast part of the town, where he has always lived. He is now postmaster in South Corinth, which office he has filled most of the time for thirty years. He owns three hundred and ten acres of land in town, and though now seventy-four years of age he takes much interest in the current news of the day and is a well-preserved man for his age.

George H. Smith is a son of Nathaniel Smith, who came here in 1827 from New London, New Hampshire, and settled on the farm on which he now resides with his son—George H. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He married Betsey Herrick, daughter of Jonathan Herrick, of New London, New Hampshire. They had seven children, five boys and two girls—Amelia M., now Mrs. Chandler; Harlos S., of Plowboy, Kansas; Ira H., of Winnebago City, Minnesota; Charles F., now living in Minneapolis, and Nancy M., now deceased.

C. A. Robinson is a son of John L. Robinson, who came from Greenland, New Hampshire, and settled in the south part of Corinth, where he kept a hotel for many years. He married Sarah F. Palmer, daughter of Richard Palmer, of this town. They had six children, four boys and two girls—Edwin F., Charles A., John F., Frank M., Cordelia S., Ella J. John F., and Cordelia S. are now deceased. Charles A., the subject of this sketch, was born in 1837. After receiving a common school education he entered the navy, serving there about two years. After the close of the war he settled in Corinth, and is and has been engaged in stone-cutting, including both rough work and monumental. He married Louisa Ide in 1865. They have no children.

Thomas G. Watson is a son of Nathaniel Watson, of Farmington, New Hampshire. Nathaniel Watson married Abigail Garland, of Middleton, New Hampshire. They had nine children, two sons and seven daughters—Sophia, Betsey, Abigail, Hannah, Sarah, Lois, Lovina, Samuel, and Thomas G. Of these, only Samuel, Thomas, and Lois, are now living. Thomas G. Watson came from New Hampshire in 1823, and served an apprenticeship at the carpenter and millwright business with Moses Paul, of Acton. In 1829 he married Miss Sophia Came, daughter of Peltiah Came, of Buxton, Maine. Here he worked at his trade until 1831, when he moved to Corinth, where he has ever since lived. He has had six children, and buried two—one son killed in the battle of Pittsburg Landing, the other dying young. Mr. Watson has held town offices, and in 1856 was chosen by his townsmen to represent them in the Legislature. Mr. Watson has a fine farm in West Corinth, and is still a hale and healthy man, never having been sick in his life.

Andrew G. Fitz is a son of Moses Fitz, who was born in Ipswich, Massachusetts. He was a cabinet-maker by trade. He married Rebecca Giddings. They moved to Pejepscoot, now Auburn, Maine, where they raised a family of twelve children—five boys and seven girls, viz: Sally, Hannah S., George G., Rebecca, Eliza, Bethiah A., Moses, Arria, Richard T., Mary, Andrew G., Simeon P. Of these all are now living, except Hannah S., George G., Rebecca and Mary. Andrew G., was born in Pejepscoot, now Auburn, December 10, 1812. He married Susan Stevens, of this town. They have had thirteen children, of whom there are now living eight, viz: Lauraett, now Mrs. Drown; Eliza, now Mrs. Goodwin; Bethiah H., now Mrs. Cool; Amos G., Frank P., Andrew J., Sherman G., and Loring. Mr. Fitz settled, when of age, in the town of Corinth, where he has ever since lived. He served in the Aroostook war. He has been a practical surveyor, generally working more or less at this business every year until quite recently. He now lives on his farm of about sixty acres in South Corinth.

Clark Hersey is a son of William Hersey, who came from Wolfboro, New Hampshire, in 1836. He married Betsey Hall, daughter of Joseph Hall, of New Hampshire. They had eight children—seven boys and one girl, viz: Josiah, Clark, Nathan, Orcutt, Eliza, Elijah, Merrill, and William. Clark Hersey, the second son of this family, was born in 1806, January 14. He came to Corinth in 1832, and settled in the south part of the town. In 1834 he married Olive Trefren, daughter of George Trefren, of Salem, Massachusetts. They have had nine children—six boys and three girls, viz: Livy, George, Freeman, Eliza, Clara; the others died quite early. Mr. Hersey moved to his present farm, one mile south of East Corinth, in 1869, where he has since lived. He owns over three hundred acres of fine land, and though now and for years has been quite an invalid not being able to work much, yet retains his faculties well, and is a pleasant man to converse with. He formerly held important town offices, and has always been one of the prominent men of Corinth.

Ira W. Davis, of East Corinth, is a son of Moses F. and Mary Davis, whose parents came here from New Hampshire when small children. They settled first in Exeter, where they lived about twenty years, and then moved to Freedom, where the subject of this sketch was born in 1847. They had seven children—five boys and two girls, only three of whom are now living, viz: Ex-

Governor Davis, and Mary, now Mrs. Bragg, of this town. Mr. Davis married Miss M. Effie Reed, of Benton, Maine, in 1872. They have three children, viz: Ivy May, now eight years old; Rethel, three years old; and Clyde, the baby. Mr. Davis was educated at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary with the class of 1870; studied law with Lewis Barker, of Stetson, now of Bangor, and finished with W. P. Thompson, of Vassalboro. He taught school, and also engaged as Supervisor of Schools. He was Principal of Schools at Black Hawk, Gilpin county, Colorado, four years, and served as County Superintendent of Schools of that county one year. He moved back here in April, 1879, and settled in Corinth, where he now resides, practising law.

George H. Jason, from Minneapolis, Minnesota, was born September 16, 1838, married Emma C. Blanchard, daughter of John C. Blanchard, of Corinth, and settled on the old homestead, about one mile south of East Corinth, where he has always resided. They have six children, viz: Celia A., Frank, Edward E., Ralph W., Gertie May, Horace C. He has a very fine farm of two hundred and twenty-five acres. He now holds the office of Selectman of the town.

Dr. Jason Huckins is a son of Nathaniel Huckins, of Charleston, Maine. The doctor is the fourth son of a family of seven, five boys and two girls. He was educated at Castleton College, Vermont, and the College of Physics and Surgery, of New York, graduating in 1859; settled in Corinth in 1860, and married in 1864, Miss Sarah F. Dennett, daughter of Daniel Dennett, of Milo. They have no children. He is of the regular school of surgeons. He went into the army in 1862 as Assistant Surgeon, Twenty-second Maine Regiment, and served in that capacity one year. He also served as Assistant Surgeon-General on Governor Dingley's staff during the years 1874 and 1875. He has a large practice, and is held in high esteem by his townsmen and acquaintances.

N. S. White is a son of Isaac White, of Dexter, Maine. Isaac married Mary Sampson, of Ripley, Maine. They had nine children, five boys and four girls, all of whom, except three, are still living, viz: Isaac G., Sullivan, Noah S., Drusilla (now Mrs. Meader, of Dexter), Augusta, Mary (now Mrs. Ellis, of St. Albans). N. S., the subject of this sketch, was born in 1840, and married Miss Helen Palmer, daughter of John Palmer, of North Bangor. He settled on the farm where he now lives in 1869. They have one child, Cora B., now nine years old. Mr. White has a valuable farm about the centre of the town of Corinth, with a good set of farm buildings. He has been engaged in agriculture.

DEXTER.

DESCRIPTION.

Dexter enjoys the honor of being the extreme outpost of the county in the northwest—that is, the northwest corner of the southern district of the county. It is one of the most important towns in Penobscot, having by the census of 1880, a population of 2,563. It is bounded on the north by Sangerville, in Piscataquis county; on the west by Ripley, Somerset county; on the south by Corinna; and on the east by Garland. It is distant from Bangor not thirty miles, as the Maine Register puts it, but nineteen and a quarter miles, in a direction due northwest from corner to corner of the towns. It is, like all of its neighbors in Piscataquis and Penobscot counties, pretty nearly an even township, containing about 20,370 acres, of which 1,200 are covered by water. Its boundaries are all straight lines, broken only by an end of Pleasant Pond, near the southeast corner, and slightly by Dexter Pond west of Dexter village.

The latter water lies in two ponds, one stretching from a point three-fourths of a mile above the centre of the town to the north part of Dexter village, one and a half miles. Half a mile northwest of this terminus a short channel about forty rods wide connects the upper lake with Dexter Pond proper, a fine body of water, two and one-third miles in length by nearly three-fourths of a mile in breadth at the widest part. This extends to the town line, two miles above the southwest corner, and a very short way into Ripley with a small bay. The entire length of the two sheets of water, taken together, is three and a half miles.

Pleasant Pond comes in at the other side of the town nearly a mile from the southeast corner. It is a long, narrow sheet, in dimensions about one mile by forty rods. It begins at West Garland, in Garland town, and but forty to fifty rods of the west end of it lie in Dexter. The Kenduskeag Stream, whose lower part and mouth are familiar and valuable features of the site of Bangor, flows through Pleasant Pond. It takes its rise in Dexter, at a point midway between the center and the west line of the town, near School No. 3, and flows southerly and southeasterly to the pond at its head in Dexter, receiving on the way the waters of two small affluents, which effect a junction a few rods north of it.

Between Pleasant and Dexter Ponds, and in the south central part of the town, is another small lake, lying in the form of an arc, about a mile long and sixty rods in greatest breadth. It receives two small streams near its head, and another near the middle of its north shore. Its outlet, about one and a half miles in length, is one of the first tributaries of the Sebasticook Stream, itself receiving from the south and eastward two small tribu-tries. The Sebasticook is the outlet of the northeast sheet of Dexter Pond, and flowing through Dexter village is spread into several ponds for mills and factories. The power afforded by this stream was doubtless the determining cause of the location of the village here. It receives from the east a petty branch and the outlet aforesaid, and flows by a south course into Corinna. West of it, in the southwest angle of the town, three other brooks have their heads, and flow in Dexter a distance of one to one and a half miles. In the opposite or southeast angle of the town, one of the tributaries of the Alder Stream has its head and part of its course.

Watering the north part of Dexter, and coursing along and near the county line, is the main stream. The headwaters of this are in Garland. It enters Dexter almost exactly at the northeast corner, and flows through a length of more than six miles on the border of the town, leaving it for Sangerville three-fourths of a mile west of the northwest corner. It welcomes six small tributaries on the way. Near its exit passes another brook, which flows nearly two miles in this town to the northwestward, and passes into Ripley. The half dozen small streams about the head of Dexter Pond, and the four received on the north shore of its main body, complete the enumeration of waters in the town. About twelve hundred acres of the town are covered by its lakes, Dexter Pond alone taking five hundred.

The wagon-roads mostly radiate from Dexter village—one to the northeast, running across a corner of Garland into Piscataquis county, and intersected by two north and south roads; one to the northwest, across the channel connecting the two parts of Dexter Pond, and separating into two branches half a mile beyond it, both going north to Sangerville, and one crossing the Dexter road and following the north shore of the pond into Ripley; two others running west and southwest into Ripley on the other side of the pond, connected by a cross-road about two-thirds of a mile from the town line, and two roads into Corinna, striking off from the southernmost of them, one of which has a short branch directly into the village; another to the southeastward and eastward, passing into Garland, and intersected by one north and south road near the village, and by three cross-roads, two of which go into Corinna, and one southeastward across the corner of Garland into Exeter and toward Bangor; and still another eastward road, which branches on the edge of the village, the two highways it forms running with a general distance of about three-quarters of a mile apart into Garland. All the roads within the town, except some short neighborhood tracks, are thus comprehensively described. The road on the south town line, however, beginning at the southeast corner, and running the whole width of the town into Somerset should be mentioned.

At or near the most important road-junctions school-houses are situated; and mills, factories, and shops are numerous in the town, particularly at Dexter village. At this place are also the Town Hall; Regular Baptist, Free-will Baptist, Episcopal, Methodist and Union churches; a high school and two other school-houses; a common or public square in the north part, a cemetery in the south, and two other cemeteries east of the village. There is also a small cemetery two miles north of the village. Nearly all parts of the town are well populated. South Dexter is hardly a village, but rather a pretty dense settlement along the road on the line between Dexter and Corinna, for about a mile from the southeast corner of the town.

A HANDSOME COMPLIMENT.

The following remarks, complimentary to this town, are made in Coolidge & Mansfield's History and Description of New England:

Dexter is a fine specimen of a New England town, abounding in hills, vales, and ponds, and is regarded as among the best farming towns in the county, though it is more generally known for its excellent water-power and the general thrift and enterprise of its inhabitants. The village lies at the outlet of a beautiful pond of about one thousand acres, fed entirely by springs, furnishing a safe and unfailing water-power, never affected by freshets or drought. The fall in this pond is one hundred and fifty feet in three-quarters of a mile, there being nine improved privileges within the distance, turning sixteen large wheels, which propel a great variety of machinery.

This was in 1859.

SURVEY AND SETTLEMENT.

Dexter is situated on the summit or height of land forming the divide between the Penobscot and the Kennebec Rivers. It is said to have been surveyed as early as 1772, but was not settled for nearly thirty years. Finally, in the spring of 1801, several settlements were begun in this tract. It is probably not now known who was the first to break the soil or forest within the present limits of the town; but Ebenezer Small, who had immigrated from Gilmanton, New Hampshire, is usually credited with bringing in the first family. An immigrant named Elkins was also doubtless among the earliest, as the settlement was first called Elkinstown. A considerable immigration from various parts of New Hampshire set in. Among the new comers were Joseph Treker, Seba French, William Mitchell, Simeon and John Stafford, and the Shepley, Smith and Maxwell families. Several families also came in from the west of the District of Maine. One of the oldest settlers, Mr. Jeremiah Abbot, has continued to reside in the town to an extreme old age.

The first physician in the region was Dr. Burleigh, from Sandwich, New Hampshire, who occupied the first house that was painted within the present limits of Dexter.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

It has already been mentioned that this township was surveyed in 1772. It was Township No. 4, of the Fifth Range. In 1803 its boundaries were established and the tract partitioned into lots, after a plan prepared by Simeon Stafford, and divided among the settlers. It seems, however, to have remained nominally the property of the State, since it was not formally granted by the General Court until March 13, 1804, when Amos Pond and eight associates became grantees of the township.

"Elkinstown" subsisted as a popular and plantation name until 1816, when, on the 17th of June of that year (anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill), the plantation became a town by act of incorporation, under the name of Dexter. It was so called as a tribute of respect to the Hon. Samuel Dexter, of Boston, who was extensively interested in it. It was the two hundred and seventeenth town erected in the district.

GROWTH.

The population of Elkinstown in 1810 was 136. Dexter had 461 in 1820 (a rate of increase—240 per cent.—scarcely paralleled by any other part of the country during any similar period), 885 in 1830, 1,464 in 1840, 1,948 in 1850, 2,363 in 1860, 2,875 in 1870, and 2,563 in 1880.

The number of polls in Dexter in 1820 was 95; in 1860, 403; in 1870, 611; in 1880, 679.

The valuation of estates for these several years was $27,390, $465,023, $1,006,966, and $963,029. But $331.20 were reported in 1812.

In 1818 the first post-office in the town was established. It was supplied by a mail carried once a week on horse-back from Bangor to Skowhegan.

A MEMORABLE TORNADO.

The hurricane of 1848 was probably the most destructive that ever occurred in these parts. It tore up many of the largest trees by the roots, and crushed some of the most strongly built structures in the town. The aggregate destruction wrought by it was immense.

THE CHURCHES.

The Universalists seem to have had the pioneer religious society in this town. At all events, theirs was the first meeting-house erected in Dexter. It was put up in 1829. The denomination has two resident clergy in the town—Rev. J. E. Clark, pastor in charge, and Rev. J. F. Witherell, without charge.

The Congregational church of Dexter was organized July 22, 1834. It has no resident clergyman at present, but is dependent upon supplies, as are also the Catholic, and the Advent people, both of which denominations have societies in the town.

The Calvinistic or Regular Baptist is likewise vacant just now. Elder Jason Mariner fills the Free Baptist pulpit; the Rev. Thomas Marsden is rector of the Protestant Episcopal church; and the Rev. G. R. Palmer was last year in charge of the Methodist Episcopal society.

BANKS AND NEWSPAPER.

The Dexter Savings bank was organized December 16, 1867. November 1, 1880, it reported deposits and profits to the amount of $147,631.80, with 1,156 depositors and a special reserve fund of $53,873.81. Mr. A. F. Bradbury is President of the bank, and George Hamilton, Treasurer.

Dexter has the only National bank in the county, outside of Bangor. It has a capital of $100,000. Charles Shaw is President and C. W. Curtis, Cashier.

The Dexter Gazette is published every Friday at the village, by Mr. M. F. Herring. Some history of it is comprised in the chapter on the Press of Penobscot County, in the first division of this work.

ASSOCIATIONS.

The principal of these in this town are the Penobscot Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons; the St. John's Royal Arch Chapter; the Plymouth Lodge, No. 165, of Odd Fellows; the H. T. Safford Post, No. 8, of the Grand Army of the Republic, organized October 16, 1874; Dexter Grange, No. 155, of the Patrons of Husbandry; Dexter Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars; the Dexter Reform Club, and the Dexter Cornet Band.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

One of the most notable institutions of Dexter is the Town Library, which contains about one thousand five hundred volumes. Mr. A. Spingall is the librarian.

The only post-office in the town is that established long ago at Dexter village. Mr. H. L. Wood is the postmaster.

The Dexter Park Association, which has a driving or racing ground near the village, was incorporated February 4, 1874.

About the same time (February 20, 1874) was incorporated the Dexter Cheese Factory.

Other manufactories are the Dexter Woolen Mills and that of the World's Fair Churn. Five establishments are manufacturing lumber, two have grist-mills, five boots and shoes, two carriages, one doors, sash, and blinds, furniture, coffins and caskets, two clothing, three tin-ware, three cooperage, one leather, one marble, one stoves and plows, one medicines, one shovel handles, and one soap.

There are in the town about fifty merchants in the different lines of merchandizing, five resident lawyers (one of these, the Hon. Josiah Crosby, was President of the State Senate in 1868), four notaries, five physicians, three dentists, one auctioneer, two insurance agents, two livery-stable keepers, three barbers, four watch-repairers, two tailors, two photographers, one printer, three painters, one millwright and machinist, five dressmakers, four "boss"-carpenters and builders, five blacksmiths, one baker, and other tradesmen and artisans.

Two hotels—the Merchants' Exchange and the Dexter House—are kept in the town, besides three dining-rooms.

Two stage-lines are run from Dexter village—one to Dover and Foxcroft, by W. G. Merrill, proprietor of the Merchants' Exchange, and the other to Moosehead Lake, by H. A. Ayer.

TOWN OFFICERS FOR 1880.

Nathan F. Roberts, Eben M. Tibbetts, L. M. Hazeltine, Selectmen; Levi Bridgham, Town Clerk; Hiram Bassett, Treasurer; Allen Merrill, Constable and Collector; Willard B. Goff, D. W. McCrillis, Constables; J. Eugene Clarke, School Supervisor.

Justices—Josiah Crosby, Charles W. Curtis, Morrill Sprague, N. Wyman, George Hamilton, T. H. P. Pierce, L. B. Waldron, Quorum; P. McCrillis, Joseph Sanborn, V. A. Sprague, Josiah Crosby, J. M. Jordan, Trial; V. A. Sprague, N. Wyman, Dedimus.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following honorable notice was given one of the most celebrated of the sons of Dexter in the late war, in one of the Adjutant-General's Reports for the war-period:

Brigadier-General Lysander Cutler, of the Army of the Potomac, in early life came to Maine from Massachusetts, and settled in Dexter. At the time of the difficulties growing out of the northeastern boundary question, he was Lieutenant-Colonel of a regiment sent to the frontier. In 1857 he went to Wisconsin, where at the breaking out of the war he was appointed to the command of the Sixth Wisconsin Regiment of Infantry, composed largely of Eastern men. The regiment was attached to the Army of the Potomac, and afterward to the command of General McDowell on the Rappahannock. It was in the second battle of Bull Run, where its commander received a dangerous wound in the thigh. Upon his recovery he was appointed to the command of a brigade in the Army of the Potomac. At the battle of Gettysburg General Cutler led the first column that engaged in the strife, under the command of Major-General Reynolds, who was killed, and he was actively engaged in the whole of that terrible and decisive struggle, losing three horses which were shot from under him, but escaping himself unharmed.

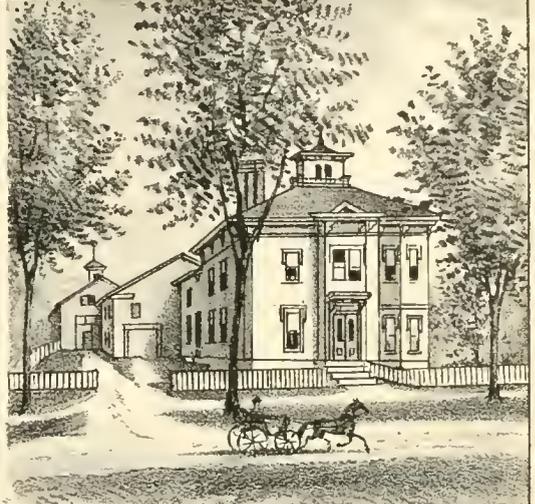

Stanley Adelbert Plummer, a native of Dexter, born in February, 1846, is mentioned in the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College as having been a graduate of its class of 1867, and serving one year in the "unassigned infantry" during the late war.

Mr. Job Abbott, of Dexter, the Superintendent and half owner of the woolen-mill at Dexter, is a son of Jeremiah Abbott, of Andover, Massachusetts. Jeremiah Abbott came to Dexter in 1820, and engaged in farming. He bought the water privilege here, and was prominent in the early history of the town. He married Lucy Safford, of this town, daughter of John Safford. Their family consisted of two daughters, beside the subject of this sketch—Hannah, and Olive A., not married. Mr. Abbott died July 21, 1879; Mrs. Abbott died September 26, 1866. Job Abbott, the subject of this sketch, was born December 15, 1827, in Dexter. His father had built and was running the mills here when Job was old enough to go to work. He received a common and high school education, and has, since becoming of age, always been connected with the mill here, until he is now one of the proprietors and acting superintendent. He married Amanda L. Field, of Carmel. They have two children—Arthur P., and Helen G.

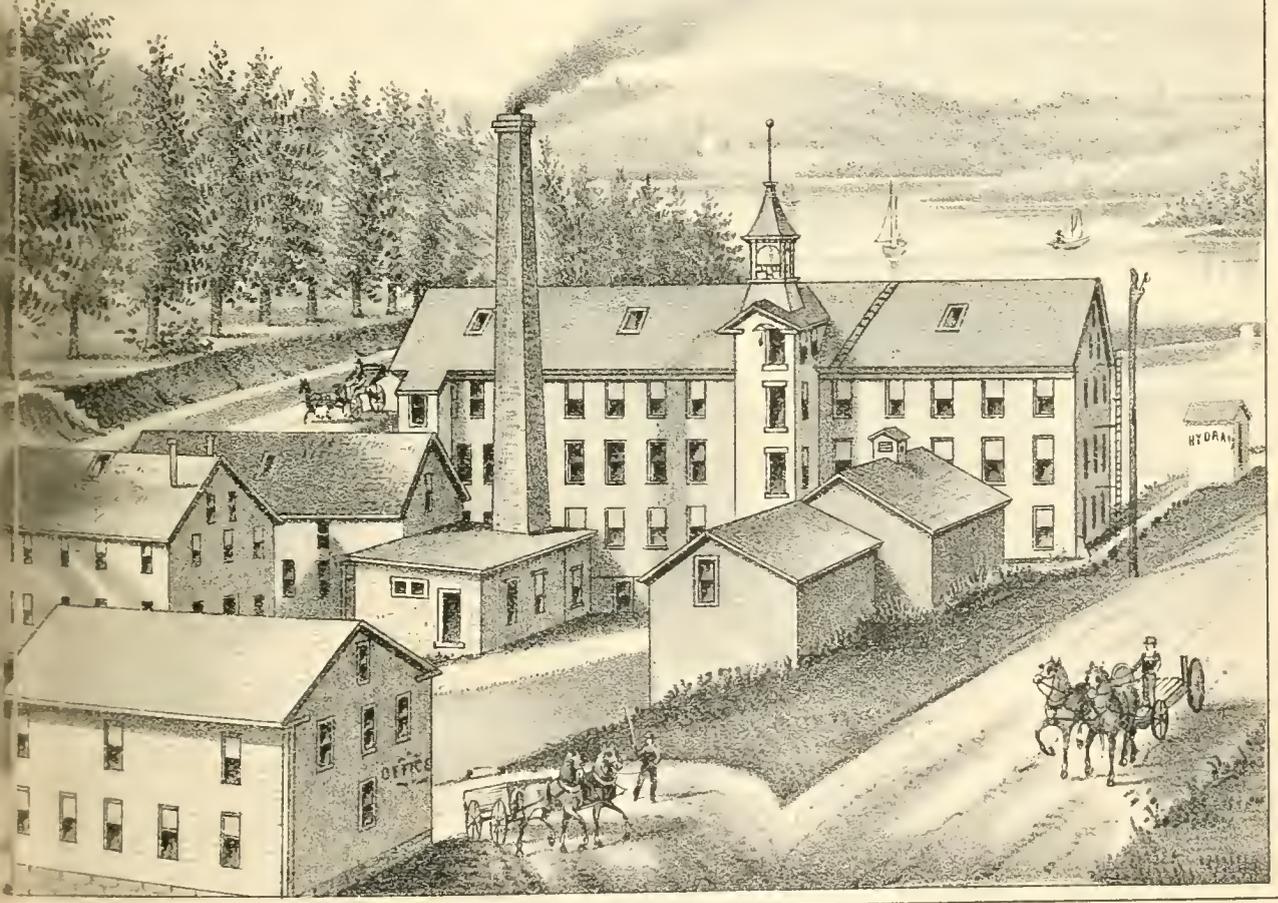

Joseph M. Hazeltine, of Dexter, is a son of William and Hannah (Sturtevant) Hazeltine, who came from New Hampshire and settled in Dexter, in 1820. He was born in New Portland, New Hampshire, in 1792. Mrs. Hazeltine was born in 1798. Mr. Hazeltine was a farmer, and a soldier in the War of 1812. The only surviving member of his family, besides James M., is Mrs. Lovinia Mitchell, now residing in Troy, Minnesota. Mr. Hazeltine died in 1875, and Mrs. Hazeltine in 1871. Joseph M. Hazeltine married Roxanna Merrill, December 31, 1846. Their family consists of two daughters, living now at home. They have buried one daughter.

RESIDENCE OF JOB ABBOTT.

RESIDENCE OF GEORGE A. ABBOTT.

ABBOTT & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

ABBOTT'S WOOLLEN MILLS, DEXTER, MAINE.

Mr. Hazeltine has been a farmer, but now resides in the village of Dexter.

Mr. George Hamilton, Treasurer of the Dexter Savings Bank, was born in Dexter, December 11, 1824. His father, Robert Hamilton, was a native of Ireland, and came to Dexter about 1820. He married Mary Semple before leaving the old country, but left soon after for America. Their family consisted of ten children, seven sons and three daughters—James S., deceased; Hugh, deceased; John, now of Dexter; George; Mary S., deceased; Margaret, wife of David M. Coats, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; William P., now in Minnesota; Samuel, living in Dexter; Isabella, married Elijah Simonds, of Oxford, Massachusetts; and Joseph, now living in Minnesota. George Hamilton, on arriving at age, engaged in trade here in Dexter. He has always resided here and engaged in trade until the formation of the Dexter & Newport Railroad. He devoted some years to that, and is at present treasurer of the company. While in trade here he was for eight years postmaster. Mr. Hamilton has long been prominent in town affairs, serving as School Commissioner, Selectman, etc., for many years. In March, 1878, he was elected Treasurer of the Dexter Savings Bank, in which position we now find him. He is also one of the Directors, and Vice-President of the First National Bank of Dexter. He was elected to the Legislature in 1876, and served during the winter of 1876-77. Mr. Hamilton married Sarah F. Coolidge, daughter of Cornelius Coolidge, one of the early settlers of this town. Mr. Hamilton died July 15, 1881, leaving one daughter, Sarah A.

William Eaton was born in Weare, New Hampshire, September 6, 1802, and emigrated from that State to Dexter in 1824. He continued to reside here until his death, April 25, 1881. He was married the year after his arrival here, January 29, 1825, to Julia Ann Haines, whose natal day was November 6, 1808. They had children, who survive, as follow: William L. Eaton, now of San Francisco, California; Julia A., now Mrs. Waters, of the same place; Walter D. Eaton, of Chelsea, Massachusetts, and Florence S., now Mrs. Herrick, of Dexter. Mr. Eaton was a clothier, and ultimately became a merchant. He was no politician or office-seeker; was honorable and square in all his dealings, and always paid his debts.

Nathaniel Dustin, of Dexter, is a descendant of the heroic Hannah Dustin, so famed in the Indian history of Massachusetts. He is a son of Nathaniel and Jerusha (Murch) Dustin. Nathaniel Dustin was a son of John Dustin, and was born in Haverhill, Massachusetts, but his father moved to Vermont while Nathaniel was but a lad. He lived also in New Hampshire. He was a farmer and lived to be sixty-nine years old dying in Chelmsford, Mass. Mrs. Dustin lived to be eighty-four. Their family consisted of three sons and one daughter: Benjamin F., deceased in the army; Nathaniel, Diantha, deceased; Daniel H., died in Minnesota, though temporarily there as an attorney for the Government, ere Minnesota became a State. Nathaniel Dustin was born November 24, 1814, in Bradford, Vermont. He lived in New Hampshire until he was nineteen years old, when he went to Lowell and worked in the Middlesex factory for two years. He came from Lowell to Dexter in 1836, and has since lived here. For a time he was employed in the factories here as a finisher, sorter, etc. After leaving the mill he went into trade and also engaged in farming. He is at present proprietor of the foundry and machine shop, also has a hardware store. Mr. Dustin married Sarah Jumper, daughter of James and Sally Jumper, of Dexter, early settlers of the town. They have three sons living and have lost four. The living are William H., Frank E., and George; all with their father in business in Dexter. Mr. Dustin has long been one of the prominent men of the town. He has often served on the board of Selectmen, was for many years Postmaster and in 1871 was a member of the Legislature. He is a Director in the Dexter & Newport Railroad, also a Director in the First National Bank, and one of the trustees in the Savings Bank.

Arthur B. Safford, Esq., of Dexter, is a son of Simeon and Sarah (Washburn) Safford. Simeon Safford was born in Dexter. His father's name was also Simeon, a native of New Hampshire. Simeon and Sarah Safford had eight children, viz: Axcia, deceased; Gancelo, now in Dexter; Wealthy, deceased; Arthur B. Ronoisco, of Dexter; John, now living in Michigan, and Annie, deceased. Mr. Safford was in the lumber business in Abbott, and owned a mill there. He is still living in Corinna as is also Mrs. Safford. Arthur B. Safford was born February 26, 1837, in Abbott, Maine. He learned the machinist's trade and worked at that business until about 1863, when he went to Cuba and engaged in the manufacture of sugar. Since that time he has spent the winter there each year, though he comes to Dexter during the hot season. He has a fine home in Dexter. Mr. Safford married Hannah Fifield, daughter of Captain John M. Fifield, of Dexter. They have no family. Two of his brothers, John and Gancelo, were killed in the army.

Milton L. Abbott, of Dexter, one of the partners in the Abbott Woolen-mill, is a son of Pascal and Hannah (Foster) Abbott. Pascal Abbott was a native of Andover, Massachusetts. He was formerly a manufacturer of woollens in Andover, and came from there to Dexter in 1847, and became interested with his brothers, Jeremiah, Amos, and Joshua Abbott, in the mill here. Pascal Abbott had two wives. By his first wife, Mary Abbott, he had one daughter, deceased. By his second wife he had three sons, viz: Isaac F., deceased; Milton L., and Pascal J., of Dexter. Mr. Abbott died about 1861. Mrs. Abbott is still living in Tilton, New Hampshire, at the advanced age of eighty-six. Milton L. Abbott was born October 21, 1838, in Andover, Massachusetts. He came to Dexter at the age of ten with his father. Here he has since lived, and for business has always been connected with the mills in some capacity. He married Miss Julia Sewall, daughter of Rev. Daniel Sewall, and granddaughter of Rev. Jotham Sewall, one of the founders of Bangor Theological Seminary. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott have two children, Edward S. and Winnie W. In 1879 and 1880 Mr. Abbott was elected member of the Legislature to represent this town and Corinna.

Mr. Loring D. Hayes, of Dexter, is a son of John and Martha (Fifield) Hayes. John Hayes was a native of New Hampshire and a farmer. He married Martha Fifield. Their family consisted of eight children, six sons and two daughters: John W., deceased; Charles, deceased; Mary J., Loring D., Seneca P., Elmira, and Franklin, deceased. Mr. Hayes moved from New Hampshire to Garland in 1800, and was one of the first settlers in the town. Loring D. Hayes, the subject of this sketch, spent his boyhood on the farm. He first engaged in business himself in Garland, where he kept a store for eight years. His first move from Garland was to this town in 1851. Here he was engaged in the dry goods and grocery business for fifteen years. In 1867 he bought the Exchange Hotel and kept it for nine years, at the end of which time he again engaged in trade and has since continued in the dry goods and grocery business. Mr. Hayes married Miss Lizzie S. Higgins. They have one son, Franklin. In 1850 Mr. Hayes represented Garland and Exeter in the Legislature.

Dr. G. B. Clough, of Dexter, was born in Readfield, Maine. His parents, Jacob and Hannah (Bartlett) Clough, were natives of Readfield. His grandfather, Jabez Clough, came from New Hampshire. Jacob Clough was a shoemaker by trade, and had ten children, of whom Gilman B. was the second son. He (Gilman) was early taught the shoemaker's art, but did not find the business congenial to his taste. At the age of sixteen he entered Dr. Hill's office, in Augusta, and began the study of medicine, attending the High School at the same time. This was at the time the first term of the High School was opened in that city and he was a member of the first class. He remained in Dr. Hill's office over nine years and then went to New York and attended lectures at the Medical University, now Bellevue Hospital. From there he went to Augusta and soon we find him attending lectures at Brunswick, in the Medical Department of Bowdoin College, from which he was graduated in 1856. The next year, 1857, he came to Dexter and located. Here he has ever since lived. In the practice of his profession he is successful, and is widely known in this section of the State. He married Miss Ellen Norton, of Mount Vernon, Maine. They have one son, Horace by name, and have lost a daughter.

Nathan F. Roberts, of Dexter, is a son of Amos Roberts, of Buckfield, in Oxford county. Amos Roberts was a farmer and shoemaker and married Christina Byerson, of the same place. Their family consisted of thirteen children. Of this large family ten grew to womanhood and manhood. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts are still living in Dexter, where he has lived for several years. He formerly lived in Sumner, Oxford county. He is now eighty years old. Nathan Roberts, the oldest son of the family, was born October 2, 1825, in Sumner, Oxford county. He spent his early life on the farm, and on becoming of age he worked about at the shoe business most of the time until 1858, when he went into the boot and shoe business in Dexter. He manufactured and retailed boots and shoes. Here he has since lived. He does not now manufacture, but confines himself to the retail business. He also handles sewing machines. Mr. Roberts is at present one of the Selectmen of the town, and has previously served in that office. He married Miss Augusta Parshley, daughter of Gilbert D. Parshley, of Dexter. Their family consists of four children, viz: Frank E., now in the boot and shoe business in Brunswick, Maine; Nathan E., now in San Francisco; Charles D., with his father in the store; Mary A., wife of J. Willis Haynes, of this town.

Menzies F. Herring, editor and publisher of the Dexter Gazette, is a son of John R. and Julia A. (Parshley) Herring. He was born October 14, 1857. His father is a carpenter, now living in Dexter. Menzies is an only son and child. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Gazette, and has lived here all his life except one winter spent in Augusta in the Journal office and one summer in Newport in the office of the Newport News. He came back to Dexter in 1878 and went in as partner, and in 1879 bought out the establishment, since which time he has been editor and publisher. This is the only paper published in the northwest part of the county. All its rivals in this section of the county have existed but for a season and then have quietly withdrawn from the field, while the Gazette has not only lived but prospered and is now a recognized power in this section of the county, politically Republican. Mr. Herring married Nellie E. Baker, daughter of Benson and Mary E. Baker, of Oldtown.

Henry L. Wood, Postmaster of Dexter, was born in Yorkshire, England, February 23, 1832. His father, James Wood, woolen manufacturer, married Betty Wood. They had seven children that lived to maturity, viz: Thomas, William, Henry L., James W., Hervey, Sally, and Louise. Mr. Wood had often been in this country but never lived here. He died in 1878. Mrs. Wood died previously, about 1863. Henry L., the third son of this family, after receiving a common school education, engaged in the woolen business in Massachusetts and afterwards in this town, having moved here in 1858. Since then he has lived here except the time he spent in the army. September 10, 1862, he enlisted in Company E, Twenty-second Maine Volunteers. He was elected captain and served in that capacity until August the next year. This regiment was in the Department of the Gulf, and was in the siege of Port Hudson and other engagements in that Department. In 1864 he again enlisted, and after serving as private six months was again elected captain of Company H, Twelfth Maine Volunteers. He served in this capacity until March, 1866, after the close of the war being engaged in reconstruction duty in the Department of Georgia. Returning to Dexter in 1866 he went into business with Mr. N. Dustin as partner under the title of N. Dustin & Company. This firm continued two years or more, Mr. Wood being Assistant Postmaster for Mr. Dustin. In July, 1869, he was commissioned as Postmaster and has held the office ever since. Mr. Wood married Mary Buckley, of Saddle-worth Parish, England. This family consists of one son and three daughters, viz: Lizzie I., Mary L., Imogene M., and H. Stanley.

Charles W. Morse, the well-known marble cutter of Dexter, is a son of Zebulon and Elizabeth (Weeks) Morse. Zebulon Morse was a native of Wareham, Massachusetts. He came to Maine when a child. He was a shoemaker by trade, though he owned a farm. He lived for a while in Augusta. His family consisted of five children, three sons and two daughters, viz: Martha M., wife of Samuel Kendall, of Mt. Vernon, Maine; Charles W.; Franklin N., now in California; Henry T., of Augusta; and Elizabeth, now Mrs. G. F. Mason, of Auburn, Maine. Mr. Morse died March 31, 1872. Mrs. Morse died September 10, 1878. Charles W. Morse was born June 18, 1824, in Farmington, Maine. He learned the marble cutter's trade when a young man, in Mohawk, New York, but went into business for himself at Augusta, Maine, where he lived three years. After this he worked for others for several years. In 1867 he went into business at Bradford, where he lived five years, and then came to Dexter in 1872, since which time he has lived here. The firm is Morse & Bridges. They employ five men and turn out a large amount of work. Mr. Morse married Ann M. Boston, daughter of Franklin Boston. They have two children, one son and a daughter: Charles E. and Ella L., wife of F. E. Dustin.

Colonel Walter G. Morrill, of Dexter, the proprietor of the Merchants' Exchange Hotel, is a son of Aaron H. Morrill, of Sebec, Piscataquis county, Maine. His grandfather's name was Peter Morrill. Aaron Morrill married Eliza A. Willard, daughter of John C. Willard, a native of New York State. Their family consisted of seven children, of whom Walter is the third child and second son. He was born, November 13, 1840, in Williamsburg, Piscataquis county, Maine. His father being a farmer, Walter spent his boyhood on the farm. In 1861 he enlisted in the Sixth Maine Regiment. He was with this regiment until August, 1862, when he was promoted to the Second Lieutenantcy, and in April, 1863, to Captaincy, and July, 1864, to Major, and February, 1865, to Lieutenant-Colonel, and had command of the regiment from that time until the close of the war, and came home in command of the regiment. At the close of the war he bought a farm in Hampden, where he lived till June, 1867, when he went to Brownville and engaged in trade for a year. In 1868 he opened in Brownville the Highland Slate Quarry. He sold the quarry in 1869, but continued in charge of it until June, 1870. In 1871 he engaged again in trade in Brownville, and continued for eight months. At the same time he built a set of buildings in Brownville. In 1872 he was engaged as agent for the Highland Slate Quarry Company, selling their goods in Bangor; and continued either as agent or contractor for the company until 1874. In 1876 he came to Dexter and rented the large hotel here known as the Merchants' Hotel. Here he has since lived. Mr. Morrill married Miss Rachel S. Carl, of Hampden. She died in 1866, and Mr. Morrill married for his second wife Amanda M. Berry, of Brownville. He has one son by his first wife and one by his second, named Fred C. and James B. Colonel Morrill keeps one of the best hotels in the county, and the largest outside of Bangor.

DIXMONT.

DESCRIPTION.

Dixmont enjoys an honor similar to Dexter, occupying a location at an extreme corner of the county—the southwest. It is not, however, directly south of Dexter, the break in the west line of the county bringing Troy, a town in Waldo, about three miles under the south line of Plymouth, and upon territory which would seem to belong to Penobscot. Dixmont is thus bounded on the west by the said Troy; on the north by Plymouth and Etna; on the east by Newburg; and on the south by Jackson and Monroe, in Waldo county. Its form is rectangular, but made slightly trapezoidal by the gentle divergence of the south line of the county from exact parallelism with the range lines to the northward. The east line of the town is but five and a half miles long; the west one-half mile longer, or the regular township length. The north and south boundaries are of nearly equal length—about five and a half miles. The town is just twelve miles from Bangor, by measurement on the extension of its north line to the south line of the latter place. The Penobscot River approaches a little nearer, however, at one or two points in Hampden. It is on the old stage-route from Bangor to Unity and Augusta, which runs through it.

The leading wagon-roads of Dixmont naturally come in from the direction of Bangor. The northernmost, crossing into Newburg at the corner of Hampden, completely traverses that town and Dixmont, in the latter town at a general distance of about two-thirds of a mile from the north line. It passes the hamlet formerly known as Northeast Dixmont Post-office, one and a half miles from the east town line. This place is a little more than a mile from the east line of the town. Not quite two miles due west, the road passes the foot of Skinner Pond; and midway between that and the west town line, nearly one and a half miles distant from each, is the North Dixmont village and post-office. The road thence runs west of south into Troy. Schools No. 8 and 10, the latter near North Dixmont, and another near the foot of Skinner Pond, are on this road. From this neighborhood two roads, one on each side of the outlet, run northward—one into Plymouth and one into Etna, with a short link connecting them across the outlet. From School No. 8, at Northeast Dixmont, a short route northwestward intersects a north and south road at the Etna line, which latter road ends at the main highway half a mile southeast of the old post-office.

Through North Dixmont passes another high-road, with a general north and south direction, cutting the town throughout, from Plymouth to Jackson. Three miles due south of North Dixmont is another important cross-road, where is situated Dixmont village, also having a post-office. Half a mile below North Dixmont is a school-house, from which a road runs a mile east and half a mile north, when it joins the highway first mentioned. A Union church and cemetery, with a school on the same large lot, are situated a little off this road at Dixmont, another school a mile and a half below, and still another a mile west of this, hard upon the east town line. On this line a road, with two short branches, runs for some distance and then strikes into the interior to Dixmont post-office. A brief neighborhood road also runs back from each of the two school-houses last indicated.

The east and west road through Dixmont comes in from the Bangor way, but by a diagonal course across the central part of Newburg, and a nearly due west path across Dixmont with Ripley. Nearly three miles in the interior, at the crossing of a north and south road running very nearly across the town, is the Dixmont Centre post-office, with a rather thick settlement stretching each way from its former road. Not quite half a mile west of the post-office, where another south road comes in from Jackson, is a school-house, and a little way beyond it the Town House; half a mile beyond that and near Dixmont village, a cemetery. East of Dixmont Centre the road passes on the north shore of a small lake for about two-thirds of a mile, and a school-house half a mile beyond its eastern end.

The road from the Etna town line to Northeast Dixmont is continued with a slight break at that place, southward a little more than a mile to another dense settlement, where another east and west road is crossed, and where a school and union church (and formerly a post-office) are situated, and a little to the southwest, upon a mile and a half road connecting this through Dixmont Centre, is a cemetery. Nearly a mile and a half further the road from Northeast Dixmont crosses the Dixmont Centre route near the head of the little lake, and thence runs southeastward and southward, with two short breaks, to East Dixmont village and post-office, which is almost in the extreme southeast corner of the town. Here are a Masonic hall, a cemetery, a church, and a school; nearly one and one-half miles west is School No. 4. Other schools and churches, with mills and shops, probably sufficient for its present needs, are scattered through the town.

The only water of size in Dixmont is Skinner's Pond in the central north part of the town, lying from north to south, one and one-half miles long by nearly one-half mile at its greatest breadth, with an island almost exactly in the middle. Ten of the streams of the town, none of them large, but including the headwaters and the outlet of the pond at Dixmont Centre, discharge their waters into this sheet. Its own outlet runs west of north into Plymouth, with a course of two-thirds of a mile in Dixmont. In the southeastern part of the town head three brooks that run into Waldo county; in the southwestern part one that traverses nearly the whole western side of the town and flows into Plymouth near the outlet of Skinner Pond; near the mill-pond it forms at North Dixmont another creek running to Plymouth has its source; one little stream running into Etna rises in the northeast angle; and nearly two miles down the east line and a little in the interior heads one of the Newburg waters, and another close to the Winn line, more than a mile below. Martin's Stream runs through the northwest part of the town. Butman's Pond, in this town, named from the old settler, covers about forty acres. Its outlet to the pond in Plymouth is called Butman's Stream.

The mountainous character of at least some part (the south) of Dixmont is hinted by the latter half of its name. Harris Mountain, in this town, is eleven hundred and sixty feet above the level of the sea. An observatory was erected in 1854 upon its summit, under the direction of Professor A. D. Bache, Superintendent of the Coast Survey. Peak's Mountain, in the eastern part of the town, is on the summit or divide between the Penobscot and Kennebec Rivers.

The eastern half of Dixmont is more densely settled than almost any other part of Penobscot county, away from Bangor. Few tracts of size remain unoccupied. The settlements are naturally most numerous about Dixmont Centre, East Dixmont, Northeast Dixmont, and Simpson's Corner. The western half, which contains Dixmont and North Dixmont villages, may also be considered as tolerably well settled. By the last census the whole town had 1,132 people.

THE BEGINNINGS.

In the original surveys, this township was No. 3, of the first range north of the Waldo Patent. Its survey was made by the well known Moses Hodsdon. It was among the grants made by the State of Massachusetts in aid of Bowdoin College, and from this circumstance took its original plantation name of "Collegetown." The trustees of the college presently made sale of the whole of it to two purchasers—Dr. Elijah Dix, of Boston, who bought nearly the whole tract, twenty thousand and forty acres, for $21,431; and John J. Blaisdell, of Parsonsfield, Maine, who purchased the remaining three thousand acres, at one dollar per acre. He was unable to make his payments at maturity, and his purchase reverted presently to the college. Dr. Dix held on to his tract, and sold it out to settlers. He never himself resided in the town, but frequently made visits here; and during one of these, in May, 1809, he died in Dixmont, and was buried in the cemetery near Dixmont Corner.

THE PIONEERS, AND OTHERS.

The settlement of Township No. 3 began in 1799. Among the earliest comers who became permanent settlers were Friend Drake, Elihu Allen, John Bassford, Benjamin Brown, and some eight or ten others.

Samuel Butman was among the older settlers, and became a very prominent farmer and merchant. He was a Representative in the Twentieth and Twenty-first Congresses, being elected originally as a Federalist, and then as a National Republican.

In later years George W. Wilcox, Esq., of this town, was Clerk of the House of Representatives in the State Legislature, from 1857 to 1859 inclusive. Sumner J. Chadbourne, of East Dixmont, during the entire decade 1868-77, and was Secretary of State during 1876-77-78, and in 1880.

ERECTION OF THE TOWN.

Dixmont was the one hundred and sixty-ninth town created in the District of Maine. It was the sole town incorporated by the General Court on the 28th of February, 1807. Its name was derived from that of its principal owner, Dr. Dix, of Boston, with which was coupled "mont," from the principal eminence in the south part of the township.

SOME RECORD OF GROWTH.

"Collegetown" had already 59 inhabitants in 1800, the very next year after the first clearings were made upon its soil. By the next census (1810) the population of Dixmont had jumped to 337—an increase of 470 per cent., unexampled, we believe, by any other part of Penobscot county. This progress was the more remarkable since a malignant fever prevailed during a part of the decade, of which many died. In 1820 the town had 515 people; in 1830, 945; in 1840, 1,498; in 1850, 1,605; in 1860, 1,442; in 1870, 1,309; and in 1880, 1,132.

Dixmont reported 80 polls in 1812, and 95 in 1820. It had 332 in 1860, 330 in 1870, and 324 in 1880.

The estates' valuation of 1812 was $2,551.20; of 1820, $27,390; of 1860, $227,741; 1870, $266,028; 1880, $308,176.

SOME HISTORIC NOTES.

The first post-office in the present Dixmont was established before the town was formed, and dates from 1806.

It was the earliest in this part of the county. The offices are now Dixmont—E. M. Dolliff, postmaster; Dixmont Centre—John N. Hoyt, postmaster; North Dixmont—Christopher Morse; East Dixmont—Amos Whitney; and Simpson's Corner, with Mary Powlesland as postmistress. The office at Northeast Dixmont was discontinued some years ago. The Simpson's Corner office is a rather new one, at the cross-roads next south of Northeast Dixmont.

The next year after the first post-office came the first church. It was a Congregational society, formed November 16, 1807, by the Rev. Messrs. Jotham and Samuel Sewall, and Daniel Lovejoy. The Plymouth branch was set off from this church December 14, 1834; and the two were reunited on the 10th of September, 1861.

The Free-will (now called simply Free) Baptist Church was organized here in 1810. It has now two societies in the town—one at East Dixmont, of which Elder E. Allen is pastor; and one at Simpson's Corner, whose pulpit is vacant. There has been another society of this denomination in the town, as also several Christian or "Disciple" bodies, and one "Church of God" organization.

The Calvinistic Baptists also organized in Dixmont in 1810. They had thirty-four members here in 1821. The church of this faith at North Dixmont has Elder A. Palmer as its minister.

We have not the date of organization of the Methodist Episcopal church in Dixmont. Its pastor in charge last year (1880) was the Rev. John Tingling.

This town had a specially honorable part during the last war with England, a large number of its able-bodied citizens volunteering in the army. None of them were killed, but some were severely wounded, and Charles Peabody, who was living in Dixmont for many years afterwards, lost a leg from a cannon shot, which struck his ankle.

The Dixmont Mountain Dairy Association was incorporated February 24, 1875. It is now called the Mountain Cheese Company, and has Mr. L. P. Toothaker for President. Another corporation of the kind is the Cold Spring Cheese Company, Benjamin Bussey, President.

OTHER BUSINESS NOTES.

The remaining manufacturers of the town are two lumber- and grist-millers, two harness makers, and one wheelwright at Dixmont village, and one tinman at East Dixmont. The former place has also two general stores, two smiths, and one carriage painter; the latter, two smiths, one jeweler, and one taxidermist.

Dixmont Center has a Grange store and one other general store, one smith, and one carriage and house painter.

North Dixmont has one general store and two smiths.

Two hotels are kept in the town.

There is one resident physician.

THE SOCIETIES

of Dixmont, other than religious, are the North Star Grange, No. 47, Patrons of Husbandry, and the Archon Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. The Neal Dow Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars, had an existence until recently.

TOWN OFFICERS IN 1880.

John N. Hoyt, C. W. Prescott, Albert Mitchell, Selectmen; Peregrine White, Town Clerk; Benjamin Bussey, Treasurer; Benjamin Bussey, William B. Reed (Center), Joseph S. Hamilton (North), Lewis F. Simpson (Simpson's Corner), Constables; John J. Sewall, G. C. Wheeler, L. P. Toothaker, School Committee; W. B. Furguson, Joseph Hoyt, William Harris, Jr., John Whitcomb, Jr., F. Piper, Benjamin Bussey, L. P. Toothaker, Joseph S. Hamilton (Quorum), Lorenzo W. Starbird, William Harris, Jr. (Trial), Justices.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Mr. Elishu Alden, of Dixmont, was born May 2, 1802. He is the first male child born in this town who lived, his brother Millbury, who died in infancy, being the first male child born in the town. His father, Elishu Alden, was a native of Middleboro, Massachusetts. He married Lydia Mitchell, of Readfield, where Mr. Alden first settled on coming to Maine. While in Readfield he engaged in trade and school teaching. He came here about the year 1795, but this date is not certain, as both the family and town records have been destroyed. Here he cleared up the farm where his son and grandson now live. His neighbors on either side were ten miles away. He used to entertain travelers at his home. He was a man who took a prominent part in all the early affairs of the town. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Alden had eight children, all of whom are deceased except the subject of this sketch. Their names were: Lucy, Millbury, Elishu, Lydia, Almira, Rebecca, and two that died in infancy. Mr. Alden died in 1830. Elishu, Jr., as he formerly wrote his name, has always lived in Dixmont, and been engaged principally in farming. He married Eliza Butman, daughter of Benjamin Butman, who came here, in 1806, from Massachusetts. To this couple there were born six children, viz: Augustus E., now in Washington Territory; Almira E., Annette M., John B., now on the old place; Frances, deceased; and one that died in infancy. The old homestead formerly contained two hundred acres, but has been sold from till now Mr. Alden has fifty acres where he lives. He is a man well known throughout this section.

Mr. David Porter, of Dixmont, was born here. He is a son of David and Nancy Porter. David Porter was a son of David Porter, a native of Boxford, Massachusetts. He lived in Bridgeton, Maine, for a time, and here his son David, father of the subject of this sketch, was brought up. He died here in Dixmont. David and Nancy Porter (nee Nancy Stevens) had ten children, viz: David; Alfred, deceased; Ruth, deceased; Sally, wife of Captain Isaac Hatch, of Isleboro, Maine; Susan T.; Cordelia, deceased; Amanda B., deceased; Christopher S., died in early life; Olive N., married Sewall H. Hasty, now living in Bangor; and Nancy, who died young. Mr. Porter moved to Dixmont in 1804, and settled on the place where his son David now lives. At that time there was not a tree felled on the place, and only a bush path to travel on horseback through this part of the town.

Here he made his farm, married, and brought up his family. He always followed farming for business. Two of his brothers also settled in this neighborhood. He lost his wife, and married Phoebe N. Stiles, by whom he had one son, Charles S., whose family live in this neighborhood. Mrs. Porter died in 1867. Mrs. Porter (his first wife) died in 1838. David Porter, Jr., the subject of this sketch, married Elizabeth W. Hatch, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Hatch, of Isleboro, Maine. They have had three children: Philena E., married to Benjamin D. Prilay, of Bangor; S. Evelyn, died young; Clifford C., now with his father, is a teacher. Mr. Porter has about one hundred acres of land, part of the old homestead, his brother owning the remainder. He has always been a farmer.

Mr. Charles S. Porter, of Dixmont, is a son of David and Phoebe (Stiles) Porter, whose history appears in this work, and for the early history of the family, the reader is referred to the sketch of David Porter. Charles S. was born April 11, 1848, here in Dixmont, on the old place. He married Mary Anna Boyd, daughter of Leonard and Mary Boyd, of Monroe, Waldo county, Maine. Mrs. Porter died July 26, 1876, leaving two children, Wallace S. and Louis R. Mr. Porter lives on a portion of the old homestead, and is a farmer.

Alpheus P. Rich, of Dixmont, is a son of Benjamin and Experience (Boden) Rich. Benjamin Rich was a native of Gorham, Maine. His father, Joel Rich, came to Jackson, in Waldo county, near here, in 1798, and was one of the pioneers of the town. Benjamin Rich was born in Gorham, Maine, in 1790. He lived in Jackson until about twenty-five or thirty years of age, when he went to Monroe, an adjoining town, and lived there until 1837, when he came to Dixmont and lived on the place where Alpheus P. now lives. Here he spent the remainder of his days. He was a man who early experienced religion and took great interest in all religious matters, and was among the foremost in all exercises for its promotion. He never allowed even obstacles to prevent regular attendance upon divine service. He died in 1849. Mrs. Rich died the year previous. He married Mrs. Stowers, whose maiden name was Boden. They had seven children, viz: Samuel Stowers, now in Glenburn; Alpheus P., subject of this sketch; John B., now in Monticello, Minnesota; Nancy A., widow of George Woodbury, of Boston, now living in Pittsfield; Amos, who died in the army, a member of the One Hundred and Thirteenth Ohio Regiment, and was an excellent scholar and a teacher in Ohio; Lizzie C., wife of Andrew Crosswell, of Farmington Falls, Maine; and Mary Ann, wife of Charles Bridges of Boston. Alpheus P. Rich was born December 12, 1823, in Monroe, Waldo county. He has always lived on the old place in Dixmont, on which his father settled when Alpheus was about thirteen years old. He married Mariam Ferguson, daughter of Nahum and Betsey Ferguson, of Unity. This couple have four children: Cora E., Isabella, Sadie G., and Perley B. Mr. Rich was formerly a teacher during the winter, but has been engaged in farming all his life. He has about ninety acres in the home farm and some thirty-five in another lot. He lives one and a half miles south of the Corner (Dixmont).

Among the first settlers in Dixmont was Mr. Thomas York, who came here from Middletown, New Hampshire. It was when very few settlers were here, but the exact date is not now known by his son David P. He married Phoebe Ellis, who came here with him. He settled on what is known as the South road in Dixmont. He always after lived in this town. Thomas and Phoebe York had ten children, viz.: Judith (deceased); Betsey married Charles Bickford, of Dixmont, and now lives here; Lucy (deceased), wife of James Garland; Hiram, now in Frankfort, Waldo county; David P., subject of this sketch; Lydia (deceased), wife of James H. Dill; John (deceased); Rufus (deceased); Rhoda, wife of Calvin Stevens, of Dixmont; Ephraim went into the army and was not heard from—reported killed and then disputed. Mr. York always followed farming. He died about 1863. Mrs. York died about 1856. David P. York was born May 3, 1811. He has always lived in this town, and has been engaged in farming principally. About thirteen years since he engaged in trade at Dixmont Centre, where he now lives. He keeps a stock of dry goods and groceries. Mr. York married Sarah Vinal, daughter of Captain Lot and Nancy Vinal. They have two children: Marcia, wife of Albert Mudgett, of Dixmont; and Waldo M. now in California. Mr. York is now assistant postmaster in this town, keeping the office in his store rather than lose it.

William Y. Tasker, of Dixmont, one of the oldest living settlers, and who came here in 1812 during the war with England, is a son of Ebenezer Tasker, a native of New Hampshire. Ebenezer Tasker married Mary Pinkham and settled first in Ossipee, New Hampshire. They had eight children, six of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. Their names are Joseph, deceased; William I.; Judith, now Mrs. Zachariah Fletcher, of Hermon; Clarissa, deceased; Betsey, now Mrs. Jabez Fletcher, of Dixmont; Margaret, deceased. Mr. Tasker settled on the farm now owned by Weston Jewett. He cleared up the farm and lived on it about ten years, when he traded farms and moved to the district known as the Mountain District, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was a Free-will Baptist preacher, and was widely known in this region. He died about 1838. Mrs. Tasker lived to be eighty-five years old. William Y. Tasker, the second son, was born March 26, 1800, in Ossipee, New Hampshire. He came here with his father when twelve years of age, and can distinctly remember the battle in Hampden, his father being in the fight. He settled with his father on the old place, but afterward swapped farms with his brother and got the place where he has since lived. He married for his first wife Lydia Dodge, daughter of Benjamin Dodge, of Monroe, Maine. By her he had eleven children, seven of whom are now living—Benjamin, now in Jackson, Maine; William, in Wisconsin; Abigail, deceased; Sally Ann, wife of Daniel Putnam, of Jackson, Maine; Deborah, wife of Ebenezer Fletcher, of Herman, Maine; Lydia, now Mrs. James Patee, of Belfast, Maine; Sultana, now Mrs. Alonzo Tasker, of Dixmont; Ephraim, of Jackson, Maine; Mary, deceased. Mr. Tasker has always been a farmer and never engaged in public life to any extent. He is now eighty-two years old, and during the last fall he husked twenty-three bushels of corn in seven hours, which shows that he is a remarkably smart old man.

John Prescott, of Dixmont, is a son of Samuel and Nancy (Buckmore) Prescott, of Northport, Waldo county, Maine. His grandfather, Samuel Prescott, was a native of New Hampshire. It was in Epping, New Hampshire, that Samuel, Jr., was born. He moved to Dixmont in 1816, the cold year. The subject of this sketch was then a lad, and remembers dropping potatoes barefooted in the snow in June. Samuel Prescott had twelve children—Thomas, deceased; Henry, deceased; Samuel, deceased; Joseph, deceased; John; Joshua, now in Newburg; Mary, deceased; Eliza, deceased; Nancy, deceased; Jane, deceased; Harriet L., wife of Jesse Mitchell; Nancy, now Mrs. Thompson, of Searsmont, Maine. Mr. Prescott always owned a farm, but worked at mill business a good deal. He was a millwright by trade, as was his father before him. He died in Dixmont over twenty years since. Mrs. Prescott has been dead about ten years. John Prescott was born December 25, 1808, in Northport, Waldo county. Since becoming of age he has lived here. Mr. Prescott married Sally Gray, daughter of Reuben Gray, of Dixmont. They have had ten children—Angeline, now Mrs. James Foster, of California; Susan, now Mrs. James Carter, of Etna; Eliza A., married George Carter, of Etna; Harriet L., deceased; Reuben, in California; John F., died in the army; Daniel, now a doctor in Plymouth; Emery, now in Fairfield, Maine; Caroline, Mrs. Edward Blanchard, of Boston; Henry M., living in Dixmont. Mr. Prescott has always been a farmer. He lives in the northeast part of the town. He owns sixty-five acres of land in town.

Ebenezer Thorndike, father of Ashley C. Thorndike, came from Gorham, Maine, in 1816. He is a son of Ebenezer Thorndike, a native of Cape Elizabeth, Maine. Ebenezer Thorndike, Jr., married Betsey Clay. Her parents were from New Hampshire. They first settled on the place where Orrin Palmer now lives in 1820, where they lived ten years and cleared up most of the place, they then moved to the place where they now live, and cleared up the farm from the standing trees, making one of the best farms in town. Here they raised a family of ten children, viz: Persus C., wife of Charles Morse, of New York; Ebenezer, died young; Albert, deceased; Eliza (deceased) wife of Elias Sleeper, of South Thomaston, Maine; John C. merchant in Bangor; Sarah and Catharine, twins,—Sarah married John Newhall, of Bangor, and Catharine lives in South Thomaston, the wife of John A. Emery; Harvey M., deceased; Ashley C., of Dixmont; Edward R., of Lynn, Massachusetts. Mr. Thorndike is now living with his son, Mrs. Thorndike having died in January, 1870. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and is now a pensioner. Ashley C. Thorndike was born June 5, 1839, and has always lived here on the old homestead. He married Mary F. Crocker, daughter of R. D. Crocker, of Dixmont. They have five children, viz: Romaldo P., Minnie Etta, Myrtie Ethel, John H., and baby not named. Mr. Thorndike has served in the capacity of Selectman of his town. The old homestead contains about ninety acres, but Mr. Thorndike owns 285 acres. He has a very good set of farm buildings and is a prosperous farmer.

Mr. John Morse, of Dixmont, is a son of Josiah Morse, who was born in Bradford, Massachusetts, about 1763. He married Mehitabel Carlton, and moved to Gorham, Maine, and from there to Hampden. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving three years. From Hampden he removed to Troy, and from Troy to Dixmont. He was a clothier by trade, and died in Dixmont about 1823. Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Morse had ten children, viz: Harvey, Barnet, Charlotte, George, Eliza, Thomas, Abigail, John; one died in early life and one in infancy. Only John and Abigail (Mrs. Work) are living. John Morse was born January 18, 1805, in Troy. He moved to Dixmont with his father at the age of twelve. On becoming of age he settled on the place where he now lives in North Dixmont, where he has since lived. He married Miss Belinda Durgin, December 7, 1831, whose folks came here from New Hampshire. They have had four children, viz: Frances E., wife of John Ross, of Dixmont; Christopher M., of Dixmont; Joseph, also in Dixmont; and John H., now in Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. Morse live on a good farm of ninety-five acres, where they have passed so many years. Mr. Morse has not engaged in public life, but always preferred to attend to his farm.

Mr. Ezra G. Crocker, of Dixmont, was born January 8, 1816. He is a son of Nathaniel Crocker, whose history may be found in the sketch of Job Crocker, elsewhere in this work. His father owned the farm where Ezra now lives and here he was brought up, though born in Barry, Massachusetts. He married Clarissa Hillman, daughter of Thomas Hillman, of Troy, Waldo county, Maine. They have but one child, Emma L., wife of L. B. Harding, of Troy. Mr. Crocker has always followed the business of farming. He lives on the old homestead or a part of it, but owns other land to the amount of 150 acres in the west part of the town.

Charles M. Adams, of Dixmont, is a son of Joshua Adams, who was born in Wales, Maine, October 5, 1767. Joshua Adams married Sarah Plummer, and by her had eleven children: Benjamin (deceased), Aaron (deceased), Charles M., Joshua, David (deceased), Mariam, wife of the late James Smith, of Monmouth, Maine; Sarah, now Mrs. Cyrus K. Foss, of Washington, District of Columbia; Jacob (deceased), David (deceased), and one who died in infancy. Mr. Adams was always a farmer and spent the greater portion of his life in Wales, in this State, where he died August 25, 1849. Charles M. Adams was born December 9, 1796, in Limington, though his father moved to Wales when he was an infant. On coming of age he settled in this town, where he has since lived. He engaged first here in the leather and shoe business, but afterwards kept a hotel for many years. For the last ten years he has been engaged in farming. He married Hannah McDonald, daughter of John McDonald, of Brunswick, Maine. To this couple were born ten children, viz: Eliza A., who died in infancy; Charles Henry, deceased; John Q., now in Plymouth; James M., deceased; Elmira B., wife of Dr. Porter, of Newport, Maine; Sarah, now with Mrs. Porter, unmarried; George E., now of Dixmont; Albert L., now in Portland; Hannah L., now Mrs. W. Whittemore, of Fairfield. Mr. Adams was for many years Town Agent here. He is now eighty-five years of age, and retains his faculties very well, and converses intelligently about affairs of sixty years ago.

S. B. Bickford, of Dixmont, is a son of Thomas and Nancy Bickford (nee Nancy Pease). His grandfather was a native of Parsonsfield, Maine. Five brothers came from Parsonsfield and settled in this part of Penobscot county. Thomas settled in Newburg. He was in the battle of Hampden, in 1812. He had eleven children, viz: Melinda, George, Van Rensselaer, Alva, Asa, all deceased; and Thomas, now in Bangor; Samuel B.; Nancy, widow of late Elder Elias Doble, of Etna; Sarah, widow of Cyrus Davis, of Danvers, Massachusetts; Julia, wife of Benjamin B. Thomas, of Hampden; and John, of Hermon. Mr. Bickford was a farmer and always lived in Newburg. He died suddenly in his field of heart disease, in 1830. His wife survived him ten years. Samuel B. Bickford was born May 3, 1811, in Newburg. He lived in Jackson, Waldo county, about six years, and in 1843 moved to his present place in East Dixmont, where he has since resided. He married Mary B. Thomas, who was born in Lincolnville, Maine, a daughter of James and Sally Thomas. They have had five children, three of whom are living: Sally E., now Mrs. W. D. Snow, of East Dixmont, living at home; Nancy M., now Mrs. L. W. Starbird, of Fargo, Dakota; and M. Florence, at home. The deceased were: Cornelius T., and Mary E. Mrs. Bickford died October 22, 1880. Mr. Bickford has a fine farm and a good set of farm buildings, and is a successful farmer.

Elnathan White, of Dixmont, was born March 18, 1850. His father, Elnathan White, Sr., was a native of Jackson, Waldo county, Maine. He married Sarah Tasker, of Dixmont, a daughter of William Y. Tasker. They had two children, William T., who makes his home with his brother, and Elnathan, the subject of this sketch. Mr. White died the day Elnathan was born. Mrs. White afterwards married Daniel Putnam, now of Jackson, Waldo county, Maine. Elnathan, after receiving a common school education, commenced life for himself and learned the stone-cutter's trade in South Thomaston. Here he lived six years and during that time married Miss Maggie Craig, daughter of Deacon James S. Craig and Margaret L. Craig (nee Margaret Tasker), of Dixmont. From Thomaston Mr. White moved to Dixmont and bought the farm where he now lives, in South Dixmont. He has two children, Eva Gertrude and Harry E. Mr. White has a good farm of two hundred and ten acres and a good set of farm buildings. He has never engaged in public life.

G. D. Wheeler is a son of Daniel Wheeler, who was in the Revolutionary War, and came to Dixmont in 1835. His father married Mary Pollard, of Kennebec county, and died at ninety-six years of age. G. D. Wheeler is now farming on the old place, and has made farming a success. He married Lydia Crosford, of Dixmont, daughter of Nathaniel and Lydia Crosford, and has seven children, viz: Luella, born October 1, 1839, died in 1841; Martha, born September 22, 1841, died September 25, 1865; Henry Clay, born September 18, 1843, enlisted in Company F, Maine Heavy Artillery, taken sick, and died May 27, 1867; Abbie Sophia, born September 30, 1846, now at home; Eva L., born December 13, 1850, died December 12, 1869; Ida M., born January 28, 1853, died December 8, 1878; George C., born December 8, 1856, now living at home. Ida M. married Asa H. Twitchell, of Dixmont, and has one child, Howard Dustin, born August 20, 1878.

Ira Gardner, the subject of this sketch, is a son of Anson Gardner, one of the earliest settlers of the county, who located in Plymouth when the township was but a wilderness. He was a mason by trade, and did much in developing the county, clearing up the farm now occupied by Joseph Eaton, living on the place some time; then emigrating to this township, and settling on the place where he lived until his death. He was engaged in building the first mill in Plymouth. He was a member of the Methodist church. He married Anna Stephens, of Dixmont, daughter of Samuel Stephens. By this union he had ten children, viz: Ira, Sarah J., Huldah, Benjamin J., Elmira J., Jonathan A., William S., Martha A., Ellen, Augustus S., six of whom are now living. Ira Gardner was born in Plymouth, February 6, 1816, where he received a common school education. In early life he was engaged with his father on the farm until twenty-one years old. After the age of twenty-one, he started out in life for himself without assistance, and by industry and close application to business has secured to himself a pleasant home. He was in the mercantile business four years at Dixmont. He has been Representative to the Legislature, and Selectman a number of years, and Deputy Sheriff. Mr. Gardner is a staunch Republican, standing firm with his party. He has been a faithful representative of his party, and is highly respected by his townsmen and all who have dealings with him. He has always been an honest, temperate, upright, hard-working man, and in his declining years is surrounded with an independence which he deserves and enjoys. He is a member of the Sons of Temperance. He married Mary J. Leighton, daughter of David and Lydia Leighton, of Mount Vernon, and had by this union one child: Charles O., born November 12, 1845, died December 20, 1872.

Cyrus Dolloff, the subject of this sketch, was born at Mt. Vernon, Kennebec county, May 5, 1824. He is a son of John and Elizabeth Dolloff, of that place. He settled in Dixmont in 1875, on the place now occupied by him. He received a common school education. He has been engaged in farming and quarrying. In politics he is a Republican. Starting out in life without any assistance, Mr. Dolloff has been a hard-working, honest, upright man, and has made his business successful. He is now surrounded with an independence which he and his family enjoy. He married Joanna Smith, of Monroe, and has had five children—Charles Tenney, born November 26, 1849, died October 7, 1873; Mary E., born July 26, 1851, married Dr. Charles J. Milliken, of Cherryfield, Washington county, Maine; Lydia C., born April 29, 1853, married Jacob Bussey, and is now living in East Boston; Ezra N., born August 15, 1855, at Dixmont; Caroline A., born December 21, 1857, living at home, is a graduate of the Normal School at Castine, has been a successful teacher in graded and common schools. Mr. Dolloff's first wife died August 27, 1859, and he married Sarah J. Wildes, daughter of Thomas and Marguerite Wildes, of York county. By this union three children were born—Anna M., born October 28, 1863, is a graduate of the High School of Boston, and is now living at home; William W., born April 8, 1865, and Burton B., born June 1, 1867, are living at home.

Ezra M. Dolloff, the son of Cyrus Dolloff, of Dixmont, was born at Monroe, August 15, 1855. He received a common school education, and was occupied with his father until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to Concord, New Hampshire, to learn the stone-cutting trade. After learning the trade he followed it for a business for four years, after which he settled in Dixmont, where he has been engaged in mercantile business since that time. Starting out in life without any assistance, by hard work and close attention to business he has built up a good trade, and is well liked by all who have dealings with him. He keeps a line of dry goods, hardware, notions, boots and shoes, drugs, groceries, etc. He has been postmaster about three years. In politics Mr. Dolloff is a Republican. He was married August 18, 1877, to Carrie B. Durham, daughter of Toford and Caroline Durham, of Monroe. By this union one child was born, Evelyn H., born August 21, 1878.

William Harris, Jr., came to this county in 1833 with his father, William Harris, and settled in Dixmont. They emigrated from Clinton, Kennebec county. He was born April 8, 1801. By trade he is a tailor. He was in the Aroostook war. In politics he is a Democrat; in spiritual belief Universalist; was Postmaster in North Dixmont about fifteen years; married Lucinda Ryan, by whom he has had thirteen children: William, Harris, Mary, Ellen A., Rachael, Stephen E., George M., James K. P., Elizabeth, Dorcas Ann, Virginia, Charles T., and Ada, nine of whom are living. William Harris, the subject of this sketch, was born in Clinton, Kennebec county, Maine, October 25, 1833. In early years he went to Boston to learn the machinist trade of Henry Sibley; worked four years with Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine Company; enlisted the 13th of August, 1862, in Company D, Third Massachusetts Cavalry, under Captain Fred Polk. He enlisted as private; was raised to rank of First Lieutenant; served three years; was in twenty-nine general engagements; never was wounded; had two horses shot from under him; was absent from regiment but two days on account of sickness. Since the war he has been engaged in carrying mail for four years to Newport, farming and shipping hay, handling one thousand tons per year, and is successful in his avocation. Starting out in life without assistance, but by industry and close application to business he has accumulated a competence. In politics he is a Democrat. He has been Selectman four years, Town Agent four years, and now holds said office. He takes an active part in political affairs, as Justice of the Peace and County Commissioner. He married Marguerite Simpson, daughter of William and Mary Simpson, of Brunswick, Maine. By this union two children were born: William S., born June 4, 1879; Mary E., born December 7, 1880.

Benjamin J. Gardner, the subject of this sketch, was born June 19, 1822, in Dixmont. He is a son of Ansel Gardner. He received a common school education, and was engaged on a farm with his father, taking care of his father and mother until their death; is now living on the old homestead. Mr. Gardner has always been a hard working, honest, upright citizen of the township of Dixmont, and well respected by his townsmen; has made farming a success. In politics he is a Republican, standing firm with the party. Mr. Gardner is a self-made man. He married Mary J. Tole, daughter of Josiah and Mary Tole, of Searsport. The family was one of the early settlers of Searsport. By this union were born four children: Bradford P., born June 19, 1851, married Lillian G. Hughs, now living in Etna; Ida A., born February 8, 1853, married George A. Varney, of Newburg, now living at Minneapolis; William J., born May 22, 1858, now living in Minneapolis; Sydney I., born April 10, 1860, married Carrie Ferguson, daughter of Charles Ferguson, of Etna, now living in Etna. Mr. Gardner was a member of the Dixmont Light Infantry.

Albert D. Crocker, son of Robert D., was born the 4th of June, 1842, in Dixmont, and has been engaged with his father on the farm until the present time. He was one of the first of the brave boys who, when the battle-cry sounded through our land, left home, parents, friends, to lay down his life, if need be, in defense of his country and home. He enlisted in Company F, Fourth Maine Volunteers, under Captain A. D. Bean; served four years; the last year was a private in cavalry, Company F, under Captain G. A. Stanley; was in the Battles of Gettysburg, Bull Run, battle of the Wilderness, Fair Oak, etc. In the last year of his service he was engaged in Florida and Alabama. He is Republican in politics. He was married to Abbie B. Wright, daughter of J. H. and Dorothy Wright, of Jackson. By this union one child was born, Betha L., December 12, 1873.

George Gould came to this township with his father, Samuel Gould, in 1822, and settled on the place now owned by John Gray, clearing up the farm from its rough state. He has held nearly all of the town offices in the town of Elliott, York county (now known as Gould's Point). He was a Congressman, and a hard-working, sturdy man of great strength. He married Leonicy Emory, daughter of Noah and Susanna Gould, of Elliott. To them thirteen children were born, viz: Theodosia, Robert, Lydia, Joseph, Elisha, Hannah, John S., Susan, Elbridge G., Gillman, Susan E., and George Lyman.

Three of them survive—Elisha, now living at the Corner; Lyman, now in Texas, President of Henderson College, and one of the finest teachers of the country; and George L. Gould, born in Elliott October 25, 1815, came to this township when a boy. He received a common and academic education, and for a number of years taught school winters and worked on the farm summers, making a success of both occupations. He is now surrounded with an independence of which he is worthy. He served the township as Superintending School Committee, and held other minor offices. He married Catharine R. Sweetser, of Newburg, Penobscot county, and has two children—Lyman E., born July 21, 1844, now living in Pennsylvania; and Hellenia E., born December 6, 1846, married Joshua Twitchell, Jr., now living in Jackson, Waldo county.

Lyman E. Gould, son of George Gould, was a private in the late war. He was taken sick with army fever in Augur Hospital, Virginia, but by good care and nursing was brought through it. He married Caroline Tyler February 9, 1869, daughter of Allison Tyler, of Searsport. He was Representative of the town in 1850.

James F. Emory, the subject of this sketch, was born in Maxfield, Penobscot county, December 25, 1824. He is a son of Robert and Susan Emory, who emigrated from Limerick, Maine, and settled in Maxfield in 1821, when the county was a wilderness, taking up a farm and clearing it from its rude state, suffering the privations to which the early settlers were subject. His occupation was farming and milling. He was a member of the Free-will Baptist Church, and was deacon of the church several years. He was a man who lived upright before God, and dealt justly with his fellow-men, and died at the age of fifty-six. He married Susan Furlong, of Limerick, by whom he had eight children, viz: Julia Ann, Nancy, James, Isaiah, Joseph, Harriet E., Hannah Y., Susan Ann. Four of them are living. James F. received a common school education, and has made his occupation of farming a success. Mr. Emory was of the men who left home, friends, and family to lay down life, if need be, in defense of his country, and was a private in Company D, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, under Captain Sawyer. He served seven months, and was discharged for disability. Mr. Emory has always been a hard-working, honest, upright man, dealing justly with all men. He married Lucy F. Porter, daughter of Tyler Porter, of Dixmont. By this union four children were born—Emma F., born September 19th, 1849, and is the wife of Allen E. Foster, of Newburg; Jabez K. H., born February 4, 1857, died August 10, 1867; Melvin P., born June 1, 1854, died August 26, 1855; Harris P., born January 26, 1859, married Bertie E. Nason, of Dixmont, December 5, 1879, now living on the farm with his father.

Robert D. Crocker came to this town with his father, Nathaniel Crocker, of Cape Cod, in 1820, and settled on the place now occupied by Ezra G. Crocker, where they cleared the farm and built a home. In early life his occupation was that of saddler and harness-maker, but after his settlement here he followed farming. He was a prominent man and held the offices of Sheriff, Selectman, Assessor, and Overseer of the Poor continually for thirty years. He died at Albany, New York, aged ninety-six years. His wife was Lydia Noddard, of Massachusetts, by whom he had ten children: Harrison G. O.; Robert D.; Job; Ezra G.; Lydia; Sophia; Nathaniel; Samuel G.; Abigail; Mary A.; all but two of whom are living. Daniel died at the age of eighty-two, and Lydia died aged ninety-three. Robert D. Crocker was born in Barry, Worcester county, August 7, 1812. He received a common school education as provided at that early day. When seventeen years of age he commenced work in the stage-stable, where he worked nine years, afterward driving the stage sixteen years, carrying the mail to Bangor before any boats came up the river. He was afterwards engaged as agent by V. D. Pinkham, of Augusta, on the stage line. Nearly two years after settling in Dixmont he kept the Elmer House. Since that time he has followed farming. He has been a hard-working man; starting out in life without a dollar, by his own unaided labor he has accumulated a competence. In public affairs he has been prominent, having served the town seventeen years as Selectman, Overseer of the Poor, and as Representative in the State Legislature in 1861. He married Orind L. Livingston, of Mount Vernon, Kennebec county, daughter of Daniel and Lydia Leighton, who were among the early pioneers. To Mr. and Mrs. Crocker were born five children: Henry D., Lewis N., Albert D., Mary Frances, and E. Carrie.

Stephen Bickford, the son of George W. Bickford, of Newburg, was born December 10, 1833. In early life he was engaged in farming, until he became of age, when he worked in the mills on the Penobscot River two years, after which he settled in Dixmont, where he now lives. Mr. Bickford had but little assistance on starting in life, but by hard labor is now in comfortable circumstances. He was married October 9, 1855, to Aurora B. Freeman, daughter of Thomas and Mehitabel Freeman. By this union were born three children: Edwin F., Asa J., and Freddie. Edwin is the only one of the sons now living.

John Buckman was a son of John Buckman, Sr., who emigrated from New Hampshire in 1805, and settled on the place now occupied by J. E. and F. Buckman. They came here when the country was a wilderness, purchasing their farm of three hundred acres of Dr. Dix. They suffered the privations of early settlers in clearing and improving a farm, often going miles on foot through the forest to procure the necessaries of life. Mr. Buckman was present at the battle of Hampden. He died on the place now occupied by the family. John Buckman, Jr., was a successful farmer, and an honest man. He married Sarah Holbrook, by whom he had six children: Rebecca, Frederick, Fidelia, Eliza A., Franklin, and John E. Frederick Buckman was born May 15, 1827. He obtained an education and occupied himself with farming and teaching common schools and writing schools. He married Nancy Woodman, of Plymouth, Maine, December 25, 1858. She is the daughter of Joseph and Nancy Woodman. To Mr. and Mrs. Buckman were born four children: Idella (deceased), Mary E., Carrie E., and Walter F., the three last mentioned living at home.

John E. Buckman, a son of John Buchman, sr., was born in Dixmont, January 28, 1837, where he has always resided. He married for his first wife Thirza Tosier, of Plymouth, who died in April, 1872. He was again married, September 10, 1874, and has two children: Dora May, born September 3, 1876, and Nora J., born March 30, 1877. He, with his brother Frederick, cared for their parents during life, and now occupy the old homestead.

Josiah Howe emigrated from Brookfield, Massachusetts, in 1802, and became one of the first settlers of the township. He acted well his part in the early development of the country, and was a very public-spirited man. He is a cousin of Elias Howe, the inventor of the Howe sewing machine. Mr. Howe was a Justice of the Peace for many years, and also held the office of Selectman, etc.; was a deacon in the Free-will Baptist Church. He married Sally Ayer, by whom he had ten children: Dexter, Otis C., Samuel, Sally, Betsy P., Anna R., William, Matilda C., Julia A., and Lucy C. Of this large family but one—Julia—is now living. She married Calvin B. Morse, of Woodland, Aroostook county. Otis C. Howe, son of Josiah Howe, was born in Brookfield, Massachusetts, February 22, 1799, and came to Dixmont in 1802. He was a hard-working man, and became an independent farmer. He was a deacon of the Free-will Baptist Church, and respected by all who knew him; always liberal in church and missionary enterprises, and ever ready to help the poor. Phœbe Coffin, daughter of John F. Coffin, became his wife, April 26, 1831. They raised a family of six children. Crosby O. Howe is a son of Otis C. Howe, and was born in Dixmont, December 10, 1838, where he received an education. He early engaged in peddling tinware for Edward Ellison, of Bangor, and in seven years accumulated $4,000. He then went to Vineland, New Jersey, where he engaged in the real estate business, in which he was successful. After this he became agent for the estate of Frank Siddle, and while thus engaged bought the right of the State of Ohio for the sale of the Anderson spring bed, which brought him in about $100,000. He manufactured his wares at Hudson, Ohio, and was thus engaged four years, when he returned to his native place and purchased the old homestead. Here he cared for the comfort of his parents in their declining years, and besides farming has been engaged in buying and selling stock for the Brighton market. He has been successful in this business, shipping some two thousand head of stock weekly. Mr. Howe married Eliza A. Folsom, daughter of Josiah S. and Miriam Folsom, of Sangerville, Piscataquis county, March 2, 1869. To them have been born four children: John F., Wynn O., Annie M., and Delia A.

Greenleaf Smith emigrated to Dixmont in 1840, and settled on the place now occupied by him. In his early life he engaged in lumbering on the Penobscot River, but for many years has been engaged in farming, at which he has been successful. He married Caroline H.

Tyler, daughter of Rowland and Sally Tyler, who were among the pioneers of the county. Mr. Tyler was at the battle of Hampden, where he was taken prisoner. He was a prominent man in his town and served as Selectman for many years. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born four children—Charles F., born May 4, 1839, was one of the first to lay down his life in defense of his country in the war of the Rebellion; he enlisted in the Ninth Maine Volunteers, Company H, and died at Hilton Head, South Carolina, March 3, 1862; Llewellyn D., born February 8, 1841, was a private in the same company, and served three years, and now lives in Bangor; Walter G., born February 17, 1843, was a private in the Eleventh Maine Volunteers, company K, and was wounded at the battle of Bermuda Hundred, and in the last battles of the war, and is now living in Monroe, Maine; Laura L., born February 5, 1848, died May 30, 1866; Irwin, died in infancy.

Benjamin Piper is the son of Daniel and Anna Piper. He remained at home until he reached his majority, after which he was a successful teacher for some years. He has for many years been engaged in farming, in which he has accumulated considerable property. He married Julia Bickford, daughter of Ebenezer and Susan Bickford, of Newburg, September 17, 1829. To them have been born seven children—Parsons, Susan B., Daniel, Julia A., and Warren C. The latter left home and friends to fight his country's battles. He was a private in company K, Second Maine Heavy Artillery, and died in hospital, at Washington, of disease. The remaining children were Evelyn and Benjamin, Jr., the latter of whom died in Dixmont in 1877.

Albert Mitchell is the son of John and Betsey Mitchell, of Troy, Waldo county, who were among the early settlers of that county. Albert Mitchell came to Dixmont in 1876. He lived at home until his father died. He afterwards worked with Jonas M. Treffin, at carpentering for some fifteen years, in Massachusetts, when he returned to Maine. Since his return he has represented his district in the Legislature, and has been Selectman, Assessor, and Overseer of the Poor. He married Mary E. Ferguson, by whom he had four children—F. A., Hattie E., Maud O., and Samuel H.

Charles W. Prescott was born May 11, 1829, in Troy, Waldo county. He is the son of Charles Prescott, of that county. In 1855 he settled on the place now owned and occupied by him. For the past seven years he has been engaged in buying hay for the Boston market, handling about twelve hundred tons per year; and has also bought and shipped stock for the Brighton market. He married Anna Barker, of Troy, and has had four children—Stephen B., Mary E., Herbert J., and Charles S. Mr. Prescott has accumulated a good property, and is a highly esteemed man in the community, where he now holds the office of Selectman, and is Chairman of the Board. His father was an early settler in Troy.

Peregrine White was born in Jackson, Waldo county, Maine, and is a son of Abiather and Abby White, who emigrated from Massachusetts. He left home when about eighteen years of age, and engaged with his brother in blacksmithing at Dixmont, where he remained some five years. He invented a machine for making the backing for picture frames, which proved a valuable invention. Neglecting to patent his machine, others have improved it, and now it is extensively used. Mr. White has been town Treasurer and Constable, and has represented his district in the State Legislature. He married Hannah G. Picker, daughter of I. G. Picker, of Jackson, and has had a family of ten children—Frank A., William H., Lizzie B., Chandler V., Eben D., Laura A., Charles G., Harry E., Daisy May, and Philip A.

Benjamin Bussey is a son of Otis I. Bussey, who emigrated to Newburg, and became one of the pioneers of the township. Mr. Bussey engaged in teaching at an early period of his life, and became very successful in that profession. He received a good education and was a fine penman. He was Town Clerk for many years. Eliza Wheeler, of Hampden, became his wife, and bore him three children—Daniel I., Benjamin, and Lydia. Benjamin, the second son, received a common school education, and in his early life engaged in farming. In 1852 he went to California and engaged in mining for two years, at which he was successful. He returned to Newburg in 1857, and settled in Dixmont, where he engaged in the mercantile business two years, since which time he has worked at farming. He has held various township offices. In 1858, August 29, he was married to Elizabeth A. Brown, daughter of J. M. and Julietta Brown, of Newburg, and has had three children—Agnes E., born May 18, 1859, and was killed by an accident in 1876; Louis J., born March 16, 1863, and George B., born December 17, 1866, both of whom live at home.

EDDINGTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

This is one of the oldest towns in Penobscot county, being the only one, except Bangor and Brewer, that appears upon the census returns of 1790, when all belonged to Hancock county, and the only town whose census was taken by itself, the others being returned "with adjacent places." It has much shrunk from its ancient limits, but is still respectable in size among its sisterhood of the county. It has a peculiar boundary—on the northwest the Penobscot, beyond which lie Veazie and Orono, with the famous old "Bend" at the southwest corner of Eddington; on the northeast and for a little way on the east Bradley, with the intervening line making an angle in Nichols Pond, and, after passing to the southwestward a little way, running off sharply to the south, where it forms the east boundary, with Clifton beyond; on the south a straight line separating Eddington from Dedham, in Hancock county; on the northwest of this part of the town Holden, as also on the southwest of the main tract of Eddington; and on the southwest of the western part of the town Brewer, with a right-lined but slightly broken boundary line between. No description, unless a very elaborate one, can convey a correct idea of the shape of the town; the reader must be referred to the map accompanying this volume. The length of the boundary on the Penobscot is three and a half miles; of the side toward Bradley, six miles; that on Clifton, a little over five and a half miles; that west on Holden, a trifle more than three and one-fifth miles; that on Holden southwest, and for a little way on the east, about five miles; and southwest on Brewer, a little more than one and one-third miles. The extreme length of the town, from the middle of the curve in the river above Eddington Bend to a point below Nichols Pond, is six and one-half miles; its greatest width, from north to south, from a cape in Nichols Pond across the angle in Davis Pond, is five and one-half miles. The middle or main body of the town has a breadth of two and four-fifths miles at the northwest end, the breadth converging slightly to the southeast extremity, where it is but two and one-fourth miles; the entire distance from the north corner of the town, opposite Orono, to the southeast corner, in a straight line, striking the east corner of Holden, is a little more than nine miles. The distance from the west corner of Eddington at the Bend to the nearest point of Bangor is less than one and a half miles.

As already indicated, Nichols Pond lies partly in the east angle of the town; less than a square mile of its surface, however, is in Eddington, the major part lying in Bradley. This fine sheet of water takes its name from James Nichols, one of the early settlers in the town. On the confines of Holden, at the west of the south projection of Eddington, stretches Holbrook Pond, about two and one-fourth miles in length, the larger part of which is also outside of the town. The boundary line describes a great curve in this lake. A half-mile outlet connects it with Davis Pond, a roundish sheet of nearly a mile in greatest diameters, a small part of it lying in Holden, and itself in turn connected with Nichols Pond by an outlet across the town. The petty stream uniting Snow Shoe Pond in Clifton with the Nichols water, passes for a short distance along the eastern edge of Eddington; and further down in the club-foot of the Eddington boot are the Kidder Brook and one other tributary of Holbrook Pond, and one affluent to the head of Davis Pond, from the neighborhood of Black Cap Mountain. The main stream of the northwestern half of Eddington is Blackman Brook, which rises half a mile from Davis Pond, and flows with a very devious course, altogether in this town, almost to the north corner, where it debouches into the Penobscot. It is utilized for shingle mills at two or three points, and for a saw-mill close to its mouth. A small tributary of the Eaton Brook in Brewer also rises in this part of the town, dips down for a short arc of flow into Holden, thence back into Eddington, and after about two miles' further course departs into Brewer.

The most remarkable and famous feature of this town, next to the Penobscot River at the northwest, is the Black Cap Mountain, almost at the extreme southeast. This hill, or range of hills, is about one and one-half miles long, by an average breadth of a little more than half a mile. It towers up to a quite respectable height, and is conspicuous across the country for long distances in each direction, being a prominent object in the landscape, as viewed from Bangor, and is also in view from the sea. Other hills and broken ground contribute to vary the scenery of this town. The soil of Eddington is generally good, and farming is the prominent and a profitable industry in the town.

The principal village is Eddington Bend, where the Eddington post-office is situated. Here, besides a fair population, well-housed, is a Methodist church, a cemetery, and a school, with the usual stores and shops of a country village. It is at the junction of the old river-road, or military road to Houlton, with the only wagon-road southwesterly and south through the whole length of the town. This is the old "Air Line" stage-route to Aurora and Calais. Its main line runs six miles to East Eddington village and post-office, around the southeast bay of Davis Pond. There it divides—one fork running north of east into Clifton, and thence to Hancock county. Just outside the village this sends off a road due south, which runs to the north end of Black Cap Mountain, and is much used by visitors to that eminence. In the village the other fork makes off southwesterly, past School No. 7 and the adjacent cemetery, and School No. 6, to an angle in the town-line one-third of a mile from the southwest corner, from which it passes by the head of Holbrook Pond into Holden. At School No. 7 it pushes out a south road some way into the country, parallel with the west flank of Black Cap. At Eddington a short cross-road runs from Davis Pond a mile or so, to country neighborhoods near Nichols. The main road toward the Bend has also some short "plug" roads, and a branch near the former village, by the north of Davis Pond into Holden. Schools No. 3 and 4, with a cemetery half a mile above the latter, are on the main road. School No. 7 is in the river-road, a mile from the north corner of the town. Most of the settlement is on this road, and that easterly from the Bend, although the south division of the town is well populated. At East Eddington are a Universalist church, a school-house, hotel, etc.

COLONEL JONATHAN EDDY.

The history of Eddington properly begins with this hero of the Revolution and of the pioneer annals of Penobscot county. Jonathan Eddy was a native of Norton, an old but still small village of Bristol county, Massachusetts, born about 1726. Some time after 1758, being then in his manly prime, he removed to the Far Northeast, in the present Nova Scotia, at that time in the Province of Quebec, which became permanently British territory by the Treaty of Paris, negotiated February 10, 1763. Here he settled at Fort Lawrence on the Cumberland Basin, an inlet from Chignecto Bay, at the head of which, two miles from Fort Lawrence, was Fort Cumberland. He was probably one of the many emigrants from New England who had accepted the seductive offers of Governor Charles Lawrence, of Nova Scotia, after the fall of Louisburg, to settlers upon the fertile lands from which the Acadians, or French Neutrals, had been driven. In pursuance of his proclamations, six vessels carrying emigrants left Boston alone, and several others carried emigrants from Plymouth, Rhode Island, and New London, to the promised land in the ancient Acadia. It is very likely that Colonel Eddy was in one of the former parties. The place of his new settlement had been the scene, in May, 1755, of the successful movements of a fleet of forty-one English vessels and a land force of British regulars, against the French garrisons in the vicinity. Shortly after this, in September of the same year, General Winslow, commanding the military, pronounced the terrible edict which removed the unhappy Acadians of Grand-Pre from their homes, and sent them wandering about the New World. This is the event made memorable in song, as well as story, by Mr. Longfellow's beautiful poem of "Evangeline."

Colonel Eddy lived for ten years at Chignecto Bay, where he acquired considerable influence and prominence, and became Sheriff of the county in which he dwelt. He was still residing in the Province in 1776, when General Washington, shortly after the Declaration of Independence, started two agents of the colonies toward that region, to enlist the sympathies and perhaps the aid of those who were connected with the struggling patriots by ties of consanguinity. They were timorous of British interference, however, and did not reach their destination. But Colonel Eddy heard of their mission, and made it the occasion of a journey to Boston, where he represented to the General Court, from his knowledge of Fort Cumberland, that its garrison had been reduced to a number barely sufficient to care for the artillery and munitions of war therein, and that the sudden dash of a small force upon it would undoubtedly capture the fort. No aid was voted him, or direct encouragement given him; but, full of his scheme, and believing firmly in its practicability and usefulness to the cause of independence, he returned home and devised a plan for the reduction of the post. Mr. Williamson thus tells the rest of the story:

To ascertain its true condition he sent Captain Zebulon Rowe, who visited and thoroughly examined it without exciting suspicion. Eddy next had the address by persuasives, threats, and the promises of rewards, to raise about 150 men; and with a competent number of them he proceeded to Chepody Hill, in the night time, and took a Captain, a sergeant, and fourteen men prisoners, without loss. The third night afterwards, he and a party of twenty-five men attacked a vessel of one hundred tons as she lay aground, and made prize of her. She had on board six hundred barrels of pork and beef, a ton of candles, fifty firkins of butter, seven hundred new blankets, and two hogsheds of rum, all intended for the garrison;—a part of which, however, was retaken.

The whole fort embraced about an acre of ground. Its entrenchment was fifty feet in width—the slope twenty-five feet, and the embankment within eight feet in height—and the breadth on the top four feet. On the outside were pickets and logs stretched along the declivity, which might be rolled down with the utmost ease and with great violence upon any assailants.* Collecting his whole force, inclusive of nine Indians belonging to St. John's River, he approached the fort, in a cloudy night, September 27, by three parties; one attempted to ascend the banks by scaling ladders, while the others in different quarters made a furious assault. But Colonel Gorham, commander of the garrison, having been apprized of the design, and been reinforced, made a brave defense, killed several of the invaders, and completely repulsed the rest.

Seldom is a defeat attended with more painful circumstances. Those who had houses in the vicinity soon saw them in flames, and their families in the depths of distress. No other alternative remained to the unfortunate assailants than for them either to surrender at discretion or flee the Province. If caught, their fate might be that of rebels or even traitors; and, therefore, they left their families, and took their route along the north shore, across the river St. John at Fredericton, proceeding down the Schoodic, and thence to Machias. Here they successively arrived, half-naked and famished, having been in the woods twenty-five days. Their families, who remained behind through a winter of severe suffering, were brought away in the spring, under a flag of truce.

This unfortunate affair is directly connected, as will be seen below, with the settlement of Eddington. Mr. Eddy entered the Continental army and became a Colonel during the war, "active, bold, and patriotic," says Mr. Williamson. Three years after its close the grant was made to him and his associates by the General Court, which forever associated his name with this notable town in the Penobscot Valley. He lived long enough to see the promise of its future, and finally passed away within its borders in August, 1804, aged seventy-eight years. When Hancock county was formed, in

* There were in the fort a magazine and barracks; and a vessel of fifty guns could safely ride into the adjoining harbor.

Colonel Jonathan Eddy

1790, Jonathan Eddy, of Penobscot, was made its first Register of Probate.

THE FOUNDATIONS.

The settlement of Eddington had begun five years before the grant to Eddy and his companions. As early as 1780, eleven years after the first settler appeared at Bangor, several families became located on this side of the river. Among them were Alexander and Stephen Grant, Daniel Mann, Stephen Buzzell, Jacob Oliver, and P. Mahoney. Mr. Jordan Grant, who survived in this town to the great age of more than ninety years, was a descendant of one of these families.

These people, however, had no rights as yet in the soil, except such equitable rights as might be derived from pre-occupancy. They had become well settled, however, when the Congress of the United States, in answer to the petition of Colonel Eddy and a number of other soldiers who had lost everything during the Revolutionary struggle, recommended their case to the benefactions of Massachusetts, since, under the Articles of Confederation and the impoverished state of the nation, Congress itself could do nothing adequate to their sufferings and merits. Accordingly, on the 16th of June, 1785, the voice of the General Court was heard in the grant to the gallant Colonel and nineteen of his comrades of the Revolution, all, like him, refugees from Nova Scotia, of lots of land of various sizes in the territory of the subsequent Eddington, the whole amounting to 9,000 acres, and to be located in one body. The grant seems to have contemplated the prompt settlement of the tract, since it was conditioned in each case upon the erection of a dwelling-house upon the lot within two years from the date of the grant, and its occupation at once. Most of the grantees soon came upon the tract, which was regularly surveyed and allotted in 1787.

The inhabitants were patient and waited for more than thirty years from the entry of the first white settlers, until the comparatively slow growth of population warranted the incorporation of a town. At length, on the 22d of February, 1811, anniversary of the birthday of Washington, the requisite act or resolve was procured, and Eddington became a full-fledged town. Colonel Eddy was no longer among the living, but, in honor to his memory, the municipality received the fitting name of Eddy's town, or, more smoothly rendered, Eddington. It had now something more than two hundred inhabitants.

STATISTICS OF EDDINGTON.

In 1790 the tract now Eddington had 110 inhabitants; in 1800, 167; in 1810, 205; in 1820, 276; in 1830, 405; 1840, 595; 1850, 696; 1860, 856; 1870, 776; 1880, 746.

The first report we have of polls in Eddington is for 1812, when it had sixty-five. In 1820 there were sixty; in 1860, 194; in 1870, 220, and in 1880, 214.

The valuation of estates for the same years, severally, was $1,547.18 (tax 24 cents on the $100), $19,130, $123,704, $165,235, and $128,767.

PRESENT FACTS.

The post-offices of this town are Eddington, with S.

O. Day in charge, and East Eddington, A. F. Merrill, postmaster.

At the latter place are two general stores, two establishments for the sale of millinery and fancy goods, one manufacturer of long and short lumber, clothes-pins, and spools, one grist-mill, one carriage-maker, two smiths, two carpenters, and one meat-market. A neat and spacious public hall has recently been erected at this place.

At Eddington Bend is one general store, and there are also in the town one shingle-mill, one joiner, and one land surveyor.

The Sovereigns of Industry had lately a branch in this town; but the only society of note now surviving, and not religious, seems to be the Pine Tree Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars.

Eddington has an annual fair, held in the large public hall. It makes a very creditable exhibit, which is liberally patronized by the people of the town and surrounding country, and by the citizens of Bangor.

TOWN OFFICERS FOR 1880.

Festus F. Merrill, L. D. Knowlton, E. L. Rich, selectmen; A. R. Merrill, town clerk; A. F. Merrill, treasurer; G. B. McMahon, J. T. Hammond, constables; J. H. Comins, S. O. Day, Boyden Bearce, school committee; Ashbel W. McMahon, A. P. Bradbury, E. G. Morse, Albion F. Merrill. (quorum), John J. Temple, (trial), justices.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

[We are again indebted to the Reports of the Adjutant-General of the State for a biographical sketch of one of the heroes of Penobscot during the late war.]

LIEUTENANT L. M. COMINS was born at East Eddington, December 4, 1834, and was a graduate of Wisconsin University in 1860. He afterwards studied law. He enlisted in the First District of Columbia Cavalry, January 15, 1864, and before leaving the State was commissioned second lieutenant. He served with his regiment through its marches, raids, battles, and skirmishes to the time of the capture of a large portion of its number at Sycamore Church, when Lieutenant Comins was taken prisoner and lodged in Libby Prison, whence he was paroled in twenty-three days, but much emaciated and prostrated by starvation and sickness. After a furlough he returned to the parole camp, was exchanged and transferred to Company A, First Maine Cavalry, in which he served until March 31, 1864, when, under Sheridan, in taking the South Side Railroad, he fell with a ball in his right thigh. He was carried from the field by his men and conveyed to City Point, where he died April 14, 1865. Lieutenant Comins was ever at his post at the call of duty. He was in command of his company when taken prisoner, and also when he received the fatal wound. His death was much lamented as that of one of the bravest of the brave men of the war.

William Merrill settled in New Gloucester, Maine, and lived there some forty years; afterwards moved to Foxcroft, Maine, and lived there until he died, at the age of eighty-six years. He married Margaret Forbes, who was born in Canada in 1768; she died at the age of sixty-two years. William Merrill, jr., the sixth child of this family, was born in New Gloucester June 19, 1811. He had five brothers and four sisters. Their names were John (dead), William (dead), William, jr., Alvin, Joel, Abigail (dead), Dorothy (dead), Margaret (dead), and Mary Ann. His early educational advantages were poor, and he had to go to school about two miles some eight or ten weeks a year. While a youth he worked on the farm at home. He was married to Mary D. Rich, daughter of Arthur Rich, on the 29th day of May, 1836, and has eleven children—Celia M. (dead), Albion F., Arthur R., Carrie C., William E. (dead), Festus F., Mary E., Emily L. (dead), William E., Barney R. (dead), and Emily L. Albion F., Festus, Arthur R., William E., Carrie C., and Emily L. are living in Eddington, Mary E. in Brewer, Maine. Mr. Merrill's business is that of farmer and lumberman. He has held some of the town offices in this town. He owns a fine farm of eight or ten hundred acres, some two hundred and twenty-five of which are improved.

John W. Towle's father was born in New Hampshire in 1776, and lived there thirty-six years, when he moved to Exeter, Maine, and resided there until his death in 1866. His mother was born in 1784, and died in 1866. They had sixteen children—Sally S., Ruth, Joshua, Jane S., Margaret, Benjamin W., John W., Lyman, Cyrus, Orel, Mary, Ebenezer, Eleanor, George F., Susan, and James H. John W. was born in New Hampshire in 1807, and in 1828 moved to Jarvis Gore, now East Eddington. He was married in 1832 to Miss Sarah Ward, daughter of Peter Ward, by whom he had three children—Cyrus Franklin, who married Jane Broad, and has three children; Russell S., who died in the army while on his passage to Ship Island, under General Butler; and Darius E., who married Ida Woodbury. Mr. Towle's first wife died in 1863, and he married for his second spouse Mrs. Lydia L. Ford, his present wife. His business is farming, which he carries on on a farm of about forty acres. He has held some of the town offices.

The father of Arthur D. Rich was born at Jarvis Gore, now East Eddington, in 1804, and has always lived in this place. His wife was Almira Davis, born in Eddington in 1808, and died in 1874. Arthur D. Rich was born in 1835, being the third child in the family. The other children were Almira D., and Jonathan S. Arthur Rich was married to Fannie L. Levenseller, daughter of George V. and Nancy Rowe Levenseller, in 1860. They have one child living, Laura B. Mr. Rich is engaged in farming and lumbering. He has held some of the town offices; in politics is a Democrat. His grandfather, Arthur Rich, was born in Sudbury, Massachusetts, in 1777, and moved to Jarvis Gore in 1803; being one of the first settlers. Reuben Rich (now living) was the first white male child born in Jarvis Gore. His wife was the first white female child born at the village of East Eddington. Caleb Davis, his grandfather on his mother's side, died at East Eddington in 1870, aged ninety-two years; his wife died in 1862, aged eighty years.

The father of George Davis, of Stockwell, was born at East Eddington, Maine, in the year 1817. His mother was born in Exeter, Maine, in the year 1823. Both are now living. The only son now living is George Davis, who was born at Bangor in the year 1850. He was the only child. His early educational advantages were good, attending the schools of Bangor city. He lived at home with his father while in youth. He was married to Sophia E. Budge in the year 1871. His wife's father's name was James Budge; her mother's Nancy G. Clifford, both of whom are living. They have three children: Amos D., May E., and Addie B., all living at East Eddington. Mr. Davis' business since his marriage was farming and milling. In politics he is a Greenbacker.

The father of Jesse H. Moulton was born in Gilman-ton, New Hampshire, in 1776, where he lived some twenty-three years, when he moved to Levant, Maine and afterwards to Sebec, where he lived some forty years. He then lived in New Jersey four or five years, and moved to Jefferson county, New York, where he died, aged eighty years. His business was milling, lumbering, and farming. His wife was Sarah Hill, who was born in New Hampshire, and was married to Mr. Moulton in Charlestown, Maine, in 1808. She died at Sebec at the age of about fifty-five years. Their children were Benjamin, Jeremiah, Ephraim, all deceased; Maria C., Mary P., and Jesse H. The latter married Mary A. Oliver, in Houlton, Maine, in 1845. She was the daughter of Nelson and Betsey Morrill Oliver. Mr. and Mrs. Moulton have five children living: Jerry, Jesse, Maria, Albert, and Mary, who is now teaching in Lawrence, Massachusetts. Mr. Moulton has held most of the town offices; is a Republican in politics. His business has been merchant, farmer and lumberman.

Asa Comins was born in Charlton, Massachusetts, July 4, 1793, and after a life of seventy-five years devoted to milling and farming, he died at Hadley, Massachusetts. He married a lady by the name of Smith, who died at the age of twenty-six years. They had two children. Sophronia married Henry Sweet, but died, leaving six children. Cooledge, the only son, was born in Leverett, Massachusetts, in 1818, and educated in such schools as those early days afforded. He married, April 9, 1846, Julia E. Robbins, daughter of John Robbins, by whom he had one child, which lived only a few hours. His first wife dying, he married, in 1850, Sarah J. Hall, daughter of Lemuel Hall, and had one child, now dead. He was married a third time to Mrs. Margaret B. Davis, May 6, 1854. January 1, 1862, he married his present wife, Mrs. Margaret B. Clewly, daughter of John Ward. Mr. Comins has given his time and attention to farming since marriage, but has found time to hold some of the offices of this town. He helped build the Hall at this place, and now lives on a farm of about one hundred acres. The children of the present wife of Mr. Comins, by a former husband, are Abbie M. and Addie S., the former living in California, and the latter with her mother.

Lewis Bearce was born at Middleborough, Massachusetts, in 1777. When eighteen years of age he moved to Hebron, Maine, where he died of consumption, aged forty-nine years. He was a lumberman and farmer. His wife was Judith Buckman, who was born at Hebron in 1780, where she married Mr. Bearce. In 1828 she moved to Foxcroft, Maine, where she died at the age of seventy-six. Josiah B. Bearce, fourth child of Lewis and Judith Bearce, was born at Hebron in 1816, and when about twenty-six years old moved to East Eddington. The other children were Rebekah, Bathsheba, and Levi. Josiah Bearce had limited educational facilities, attending school about six weeks during the year. He was married December 25, 1846, to Susan K. Hammond, daughter of Jacob and Eunice Knights Hammond. To them were born five children: Flora J., married E. E. Byard, and has three children; Louise M., married Charles L. Libby, and lives at home; Boyden, married Jennie L. Phillips, March 5, 1881; Lillie F., married Alonzo G. Davis, in August, 1880, and lives in Michigan; Charles H. lives at home. The first wife of Josiah Bearce died, and in 1870 he married Angie W. Hunting, by whom he has one child, Mabel Estelle, nine years of age. Mr. Bearce has held town offices, and in 1876 was elected to the State Legislature, on the Democratic ticket, and served one term.

The father of Erastus N. Comins was born in Charlestown, Massachusetts, and died in East Eddington, in 1848, at the age of seventy-eight years. His mother Margaret Mansfield, was born in Oxford, Massachusetts, and died at the age of seventy-five years. They had the following children: Catharine, Margaret, William J., and Coolidge, jr., dead; and Benjamin V., Elijah, and Erastus, living. Erastus was the sixth child, and was born October 20, 1811. He learned the carpenter's trade in youth, but after working at it thirty years he became a farmer, and still continues business on a farm of some 120 acres. He married a daughter of Jonah Taylor, January 17, 1834, and had three children: Charlotte M. (dead); Charles W., who married Hattie Hill, has two children, and now resides in Brooklyn, New York; Amelia F., who married A. W. Campbell, and has one bright little child three months old—she now resides with her parents. Charlotte M. was the wife of George H. Parsons, and left three children, all now living. Mr. Comins is a Republican and attends the Universalist church.

Bradley Blackman was born at Walpole, Massachusetts, in 1777. He came to Eddington when a lad, and lived here until his death, in 1848. His wife was Hepzibah Knapp, born in Massachusetts, and died at Bradley in 1837. John Wesley Blackman was the sixth child. They were Francis, Temperance, William, Adam, Horace, and John Wesley. The latter married Sylvia K. Campbell in 1837, and has had seven children, six of whom are living: Bradley, Almon W., Charles A., Ithiel C., Ella S., and Oscar (deceased). Mr. Blackman had a poor opportunity to obtain an education, being engaged at farming and as a lumberman. He was a Selectman and Assessor for eight years; in politics is a Republican.

The father of Albion P. Bradbury was born in the town of Minot, Oxford county, Maine, in 1783, and went from there to Foxcroft, Maine. He moved to Bangor in the year 1835 or 1836, where he lived until his death, in the year 1847, at the age of sixty-two years. His business was that of merchant. His wife was Alethea Hersey, who was born in the town of Sumner, Oxford county, Maine, in 1786, was married in Sumner in 1810, and with him moved to Bangor, where she died, in the year 1868, aged eighty-two years. Albion P., the oldest child in the family, was born in Foxcroft in the year 1817. His business is a lawyer. The remaining child was Matilda A., born in the town of Foxcroft, Maine, about the year 1821. Married to J. W. Pottle, of New York City, and has three children named Mary, Emma, and Annie, who reside in that city. Is an out-and-out Democrat.

John Temple was born April 30, 1784, at Marlboro, Massachusetts, where he lived about twenty five years. After several years' wandering he finally settled in the east part of this town, and resided there until his death, October 22, 1868, occupied as a farmer and land surveyor. He married, August 16, 1819, Catharine Bedell, who was born May 2, 1795, and died January 6, 1846. Their children were: Orrin, Dorothy S., Josiah S., Abigail B., Ephraim H., Miriam B., and John J. John J. was the third child, and was born in Eddington, September 5, 1827. August 31, 1851, he married Broocksey C. Adams, daughter of Thaddeus Adams, and has had five children—Hanson J., Etta M., and Elroy E., living at home; and Elbert J. and Anson, died in infancy.

The father of Joel Foard was born in Berwick, Maine, in 1784, and moved with his father's family to Lyman, York county, when a small boy, where he died in 1859, aged seventy-five years. His wife was Lydia Haley, born in Kittery, Maine, in 1791. They were married in the town of Lyman, where she died in 1851. Joel Foard, the fifth child, was born February 11, 1814, and when thirteen years of age came to East Eddington, where he has since lived, engaged in lumbering and farming. The other children were Olive, Hiram, Paul, Leonard, Lydia, and Batsev. Joel Foard was married September 15, 1843, to Miss Betsey C. Sweet, by whom he had one son, C. H. W., who was married December 25, 1844, to Nettie M. Bridgham, and has two children—Leonard H., and Bernice M., who reside at home. Mr. Foard keeps a house of entertainment at East Eddington, where he has lived about thirty years. Mrs. Foard is a daughter of John C. and Martha Campbell Sweet.

Zelotes G. Hapworth was born in Amherst in 1844, and married Edna E. Thompson in 1874. They have four children living: William R., Charles E., Lucetta, and Leonard M. His business is lumbering and farming. His father was born in Mansfield, Massachusetts, and in 1831 married Lucetta Grover, daughter of Zelotes and Margaret Fletcher Grover, by whom he had seven children: Horatio, Henrietta, Edwin G., Ann J., William B., Zelotes G., Charles L., Fannie E. He has been through life a lumberman, and with his wife, aged respectively seventy-two and seventy-three years, are still living. The grandfather of Zelotes G. Hapworth was born in Ellsworth in 1788. After marriage he removed to Mansfield, Massachusetts, then back to Mariaville, where he died, aged eighty-six years. His wife was born in Mansfield, Massachusetts, and lived to be seventy-seven years of age.

Peter Ward, the father of John Ward, was born in Charlton, Worcester county, Massachusetts, in 1781, where he lived some twenty-seven years, when he moved to East Eddington, where he died in 1855. His wife, Sarah Tucker, was also born in Charlton. They were married in 1784, and she died in 1868, aged eighty years and eleven months. John Ward was born in 1807, being the eldest of the family, which consisted of Sarah, Lewis, Tamison, Harvey, Ann, William B., Elmira D., and Emery W. John Ward married May Bond, April 16, 1835, and has had five children, four of whom are now living: Margaret B., married Sanford Clewly, and has two children. Her first husband died and she married a second time, but has no children. The next child was Adaline S., who died aged twenty-six years. Asbury C. married Flora M. Sweet, and has one son. Almira D. married Nathaniel T. McKusick, and has lost one child. Nellie M., unmarried. Mrs. John Ward's father's name was Hollis Bond; her mother's maiden name was Margaret Orcutt.

Mary A. Lambert was born in Foxcroft, Maine, in 1819. When eighteen years of age she came to East Eddington, and in 1843, June 20, was married to Solon Sinclair, and with him moved to Brewer, where they remained some sixteen years, when they returned to East Eddington, where her husband died in 1861. After remaining a widow nearly two years she married Amos Lambert, who died in 1878. She had few advantages for obtaining an education, attending school but about four months in a year when a child. She has never had children, but has brought up several. She was the youngest daughter of William and Margaret Merrill.

Jacob Hammond was born in New Gloucester, Maine, in 1795, and spent all his life at farming in this State. He married Eunice Knight, who was born in 1795, and died in East Eddington in 1866. Their children were as follow: Elbridge K., who, at the age of seventeen, was accidentally burned in a camp on Great Works Stream and lived only twenty-two hours afterward; Sylvanus S., Susan K., and Live K., dead; and Jacob T. Jacob, the fourth child in the family, was born in Guilford in 1825, and in youth was engaged in milling and log driving. In 1856 he married Miss Maria L. Frye, daughter of Frederick Frye, and has had six children: Effie M., Mattie C., Sarah A., Eunice G., Bessie S., and Elbridge M. One daughter is married and lives in Gardner, Massachusetts. Mr. Hammond is engaged in farming and cattle dealing, owning a farm of three hundred acres. For several years he has been collector and constable in East Eddington.

The father of George B. Glover was born at Pembroke, Massachusetts, in 1809, but since he was nine years old he has lived in Maine. He now resides in Buckfield, Oxford county, at the good old age of seventy-two years, in fair health. He married Annie D. Bryant in 1840, and she is still living at the age of sixty-four years. They had five children: Hulda R., George B., Annie T., living, and Mary A. and John N., dead. George B., the second child, was born in Waterford, Oxford county, Maine, in 1843. In 1865 he married Marilla Kingsbury, daughter of Elie Kingsbury, and has had three children, two living: Lillian M., and Geneva R., residing at home. Mr. Glover was over ten months a soldier in the service of his country. He has held several town offices. He lives on a farm of 175 acres in Eddington.

Asa Johnson was born in Exeter, New Hampshire, about 1768. When about twenty-one years of age he removed to Gilmanton, New Hampshire, where he remained some twenty-five years. From there he went to Bethlehem, New York, and lived eight or ten years, and spent his last days at Whitefield, where he died aged eighty-seven years and six months. He was a tailor and farmer. His wife was Hannah Bean, born in Gilmanton, where, about the year 1781, she married. Their children were: Catharine, Simeon B., James H., Joanna S., Sarah S., David B., Hannah H., and W. H. T. William Henry T. Johnson was the eighth child. On the 5th of December, 1842, he married Ruby T. Rieh, by whom he has had six children: David B., Helen L., Clarence H., Diantha R., Hattie E., Edna W. Helen L. married A. F. Merrill, and has two children. David B. married Abby A. Comins, and has two children. Clarence H. married Nellie E. Spiney, and has one child. The other children are deceased. Mr. Johnson has worked at painting, teaching, farming, lumbering, and hotel-keeping. He has held both town and county offices, and was two terms in the State Legislature, being first elected in 1861. He has also been postmaster some twenty years.

Nathaniel McMahon was born at Dunnell's Island, in the town of Georgetown, at the mouth of the Kennebec River, Kennebec county, June 17, 1768. He grew to maturity in the town of Eddington, where he passed his life, and died December 29, 1831. His wife was Nancy Wilde, who was born in Taunton, Massachusetts, January 23, 1773. She came to Eddington in 1795, where she was married in March, 1800. She died December 8, 1826. Asahel W. McMahon was born March 22, 1810, and has always lived in Eddington. He has held the office of County Commissioner for three years. The names of the remaining children of Nathaniel McMahon were: Nathaniel, Samuel W., Thomas D., and Abigail S. Asahel W. McMahon was married September 27, 1832, to Lydia P. Rowell, who died March 4, 1839, aged thirty-one years. He married for a second wife Elizabeth Pease, April 26, 1840, and has two children—Caroline E., who married Charles E. Baker, and has three children; and Emma S., wife of Ithiel C. Blackman, who has one child. Mrs. McMahon died May 8, 1873, aged sixty seven years.

Elisha S. McFarland was born in Hancock county, Maine, and spent his whole life in this State, dying in East Eddington at the age of seventy-seven years. In 1877 he married Hannah E. Springer, who died at the age of forty-three years. They had six children—Thomas, William A., Francis O., and Emily S., deceased; and Elizabeth E. and Winfield S., living. William was killed at the battle of Fairfax Court-house in 1864. Winfield S. McFarland, the fifth child, was born in Hancock in 1835. After moving from place to place several times, he finally, in 1871, settled in East Eddington, where he now resides. In 1861 he married Laura E., daughter of Josiah Grindell, in the town of Penobscot. They have no children. His business is milling and farming. Several town and county offices have been held by him. He is a member of the Baptist church, and besides a farm of seventy-nine acres supplied with substantial buildings and other equipments, he has a nice residence in the village.

Kennedy McMahon emigrated from Scotland to Ireland in the year 1715, and two years after married Anna Hollerin. Their son Charles, born in 1820, in the year 1735 emigrated to the State of Maine, near the mouth of the Kennebec River. About 1740 he married Elizabeth Dannel, of Georgetown. Their son Michael, born 1741, married, in the year 1763, an English lady by the name of Thankful Horton, and with his wife and family moved from the Kennebec to Eddington in 1770, and located upon the farm which A. W. McMahon now resides upon. In the spring of 1777 he was drowned in what is now called Gardner's Falls, near Eddington Bend. Nathaniel, his only son, was at that time only nine years old, but he with his mother and five sisters buffeted the storms of life through the hard times of the Revolutionary struggle, and came out bright in the end. Nathaniel had four sons, three of whom are now living, A. W. McMahon being the youngest.

Wilder Broad was born at Albion, Kennebec county, Maine, where he grew to manhood. He lived some ten years in New Brunswick, then went to Mobile, Alabama, where he died in 1819, at about thirty-two years of age. He was by trade a blacksmith. His wife was Hannah Stevens, who was born in Albion, Maine, and after her husband went to Alabama she moved to Epping, New Hampshire, aged about seventy years. After the death of Mr. Broad she married Henry Sanborn, who is also deceased. Daniel S. Broad, her son by her first husband, was born in Albion, Maine, in 1809, and during early life lived in several different places. He married Mary Jane Woodcock, who died leaving four children—Eliza Ann, Louria K., killed during the late war; Jane Maria. After the death of Mrs. Broad he married Mary J. Burrell, daughter of Rufus Moulton, and had five children—Elisha H.; Louisa; Franklin, killed in the late war; Alverado, and Alphonso, the former deceased. Alphonso married the daughter of Mr. Warren, of Bangor, and lives in Berkeley, California. By her first husband his second wife had three children—Lizzie, wife of Samuel G. Patten; Albert J., who married Angeline Jameson; Ellen H. (deceased), married Henry A. Patterson. In politics Mr. Broad is a Republican.

EDINBURG.

Our story now reaches up the valley of the Penobscot, into one of the more sparsely settled tracts, and stops at Edinburg, on the west bank of the Penobscot, lying between that stream, Lagrange on the west, Howland on the north, and Argyle on the south. On three sides this snug little town is bounded by straight lines—five miles long on the north, four and three-quarters on the south, and five and one half on the west side. The north and south lines are not perfectly parallel, but approach a little to the eastward, being some forty rods nearer each other on the east side of the town than on the west. Within its jurisdiction are a number of the Indian islands opposite the Penobscot front, among the principal of which are Long Island, Jo Mitchell, and Nicolar Islands. These, with one other islet, are the northernmost, and there are ten others below them, before passing the south town line. None of them are inhabited.

Edinburg is sixteen miles from the north line of Bangor. It is only settled as yet on the river road running close to the west bank of the Penobscot, which is the only highway of general importance in the town. Neatly six miles of this road are in Edinburg, and settlement is so far almost restricted to the northern half of it, though there are some scattered habitations toward the southeast corner. School-house No. 1 is in the north part, opposite Long Island. The people have no church, post-office, or railroad, but are accommodated in all these particulars at Passadumkeag Station, in the adjoining town, on the European and North American Railway.

Across the southwest angle of Edinburg flows the Hemlock Stream, a water of some twelve miles' length, which rises in the central north part of Lagrange, and flows with a general southeast course into Argyle, where it empties into the Penobscot. A similar statement is true of the Hoyt Brook, which is of about the same length, rises north of Lagrange, in Medford town, Piscat-aquis county, and bisects Edinburg by almost a diagonal from northwest to southeast, and also reaches the Penobscot in Argyle. The Pollard Brook, however, rising in Howland, has a course of three to four miles in Edinburg, where it receives one short tributary from toward the northeast corner, and flows into the river a little below Nicolai's Island. One-third of a mile south of its mouth another stream, of a mile and a quarter's length, comes in from the west. A very small tributary also rises near the southeast corner of Edinburg, and flows across the adjacent angle of the town of Argyle to the Penobscot.

As we shall see when the history of Passadumkeag is reached, there is reason to believe that the French were in this region, at the head of Nicolai's Island, in the river, in the early part of the last century. The authentic history of Edinburg, however, begins with 1827, when the first white settlers made their location upon it. Within the short space of seven years the tract had population enough to warrant the erection of a town upon it, and Edinburg was incorporated January 31, 1835, the same year with Passadumkeag, but just thirty days later.

This town had 52 inhabitants in 1840, 93 in 1850, when it seems to have reached the maximum of its growth, 48 in 1860, 55 in 1870, and 45 in 1880.

The number of its polls in 1860 was 17, in 1870 13, and in 1880 11.

The estates of the town in these several years were valued at $13,713, $19,436, and $17,740.

Edinburg is chiefly an agricultural town, so far as developed; but there is still some lumbering done, and at least one saw-mill is kept going in the town.

The town officers at last report were: Charles W. Eldridge, Charles M. Farnham, Joshua A. Eldridge, Selectmen; Charles M. Farnham, Town Clerk; Jeremiah Bachelder, Treasurer; Charles W. Eldridge, Constable; Charles M. Farnham, School Supervisor.

There was formerly a Free-will Baptist society in this town.

ENFIELD.

Enfield corners on Edinburg, in the Penobscot River. It is on the east side of the stream, which separates it from Howland and a strip of Mattamiscontis. On the northeast is Lincoln, on the east Lowell, and on the south Lowell and Passadumkeag. Almost the entire eastern part of the town is filled with the Cold Stream Pond, which is wholly in this town, except the extremity of one little bay, something more of another, and about half a square mile of the southernmost bay, which are in Lowell. About one-third of the area of the town is occupied by this water. Within a few years it has been abundantly stocked with salmon by the State Fish Commissioner. Most of the Little Cold Stream Pond, however, which lies along the northeastern and eastern border, is outside of the town, in Lincoln and Lowell. It is nearly one and one-half miles in width from east to west, and a trifle more in length from north to south. At its south extremity is Bog Island, opposite the mouth of Bog Brook, which is wholly in Lowell. Cold Stream Pond, from the northern end near the northeastern boundary of the town, to the southern extremity of the large bay before mentioned, is four and two-thirds miles long. Its extreme breadth, from the little bay west of the spot known as Weasel Island, is about three miles. It is quite a noble and important sheet of water. On the Lowell side it receives the petty Jack Brook, about two-fifths of the way down the west shore, and the Barnard Brook three-fourths of a mile further down. Its outlet, the Cold Stream, leaves the Pond at Enfield, a mile north of the town line, and flows west and west of south about one and one-half miles, when it passes into Passadumkeag, and there to the Passadumkeag River. Across the town westward, Beaver Brook heads half a mile from the river, and flows two miles in Enfield, when it also passes into Passadumkeag. One-third of a mile due east of the head of Beaver is the source of Bear Brook, which joins the former a little distance above the town line. In the north and west of the town three small tributaries, any one of them scarcely more than a mile in length, flow into the Penobscot.

Enfield being on the old military road, and also on the European & North American Railway,—which passes through the town on a general parallel with the river, but nearly two miles from it, and has a station and a long switch a mile west of Enfield village,—the town has grown more than many other northern towns, and has a respectably numerous population along its leading highways. About eight miles of the river-road are in this town. There is a hotel stand upon it, at a road junction a little more than a mile from the south town line, with School No. 7 just below it; and School No. 2 is only a little below the north corner of the same road. Contrary to the general rule, however, in the river towns, the bulk of settlement is not on this road. It is very thinly settled, except at the southwest corner of the town; while the middle north and south road, one to two miles from it, and joining it just before the latter crosses the Lincoln line, is quite densely populated. Upon it, two miles below the north corner of the town, is School No. 5; as far south of that is School No. 6, the road passing a cemetery about three-fifths of the way down. It ends at the east and west road starting at the hotel stand aforesaid, and running nearly due east a little more than a mile from the town line to Enfield village, sending off a little east of Bear Brook a road to the town line, where the track of the European & North American Railway crosses it. This, the only east and west road across the town, is four miles long. At Enfield village another road comes in from the direction of Lincoln, along the west shore of Cold Stream Pond, passing School No. 3 and throwing off two or three short neighborhood tracks on the way. It passes through Enfield, and about one and a quarter miles further to the southwest, when it runs into Passadumkeag, and on to the post-office of that name. A little out of the village a road from Lowell, running northwesterly about a mile in this town, terminates. A short road from near the Cold Stream outlet, in the village, runs to the highway, completing a small equilateral triangle.

Enfield is the only village and post-office in the town. It has a Baptist church and cemetery, School No. 4, a hotel, a store, and several mills and shops.

The total area of the town is fifteen thousand acres. It is sixteen miles from Bangor. In the river along its front are about ten of the Penobscot reservation islets, among them Gordon, Moon, and Pierce Islands. The last-named is opposite the middle of a long, narrow island, whose lower end is nearly two miles from the southwest corner of the town, and which is formed by a boat canal, of about a mile's length, on the Enfield side of the river.

The soil of the western half of Enfield is for the most part level, and consists of a clayey loam, which needs manuring in order to its best productivity. The eastern part is more broken, but the soil is stronger, and produces crops in usual quantity and variety for this region. In the northeast of the town are some fine granite ledges, which are available for building material. There is excellent water-power in the town, which has been utilized to some extent for grist- and saw-mills and shingle-machines. Freshets on the one hand, and drought on the other, do not often interfere with the efficiency of the powers.

The first settlers in this town were from down the river and to the westward, from Bangor and from Buck-field, in Oxford county. The earliest one, John Wood, is generally supposed to have got in by 1819, though he may not have been on the ground before 1820. He made a clearing near the present south line of the town. Soon after, in 1821, Mr. Joseph Treat, of the old Bangor family, who had an extensive grant in this quarter, had a saw- and grist mill constructed at the mouth of the Cold Stream, which aided to stimulate settlement. It was subsequently destroyed, and then was rebuilt by his brother, John Treat, in partnership with John, Jr., and Edward W. Treat, sons of the latter.

The Treat Grant consisted of five thousand acres of woodland, lying in the south part of the present town. North of it was Township No. 1, east of the Penobscot river, comprising about ten thousand acres. January 31, 1835, the same day that Edinburg was erected, these two tracts were united by the State Legislature to form the new town of Enfield.

In 1840 this town had 346 people; in 1850, 396; in 1860, 526; in 1870, 545; and in 1880, 489.

Its polls numbered in 1860, 101; in 1870, 120; and in 1880, 133.

Its estates in the same years were $47,886, $90,204, and $64,224.

Enfield has one Regular Baptist society, owning a meeting-house, and ministered to by Elder Alvan Messer. A "Church of God" was also formerly organized here.

The district school-houses of the town number seven.

The Morning Star Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars, was until lately in existence, but is not now actively working. The Crystal Fountain Grange, No. 227, Patrons of Husbandry, appears to be now the only semi-public society in the town.

One general store is kept in town, and there is one smith. Among the lumber industries of the town, besides those before mentioned, a peculiar manufacture is that of rafting wedges, of which a million or more were formerly made yearly.

The town officers of Enfield for 1880 were as follow: Henry W. Fiske, James W. McKenney, George H. Johnson, Selectmen; Rev. Alvan Messer, Clerk; J. E. M. Gilman, Constable; John Treat, Treasurer, who is also Postmaster and a Justice of the Peace; Mrs. Clara M. Cleaves, School Supervisor; M. L. Dyer, John Treat, (quorum) Justices.

NOTES OF SETTLEMENT.

Alvan Messer, of Enfield, is a son of Stephen Messer, second. Stephen Messer, first, was born in Scotland, and emigrated to this country about the year 1765. He settled in Andover, Massachusetts, where Stephen the second was born in 1773. About the year 1780 he [Stephen the first] removed to Shelburne, New Hampshire. In the Revolutionary war he was driven off with others by the Indians. He, however, returned and had command of a guard of men sent in by the Government to protect the settlers from the Indians. He had twelve children, four sons and eight daughters. Stephen the second, who first settled in Lowell, Maine, married Mary Darling, born 1774. They had seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom only Alvan and Hannah [Mrs. Gray] are living. He died in 1833 in Lowell. Mrs. Messer died in 1849. Alvan Messer was born in Blue Hill in 1808. He married Jane Guphill, who was born February 3, 1811. They were married October 29, 1829. Their children are Stephen D., deceased; Sarah P., now Mrs. Staples; Harriet N., deceased. Mr. Messer is a Baptist minister by profession, and by trade a house-carpenter and builder. He has made two missionary tours to the Far West.

Mrs. Clara M. Cleaves, of Enfield, is a daughter of Nathaniel and Clarissa Jones [nee Clarissa Wickwire]. Nathaniel Jones was a son of Isaac Jones, of Bowdoin. He was born in Bowdoin, June 14, 1797, and came into Penobscot county when a young man, and settled first at Oldtown. He afterward kept hotels at Lincoln, Haynesville, Houlton, Passadumkeag, and in Enfield, at the mouth of the Piscataquis. He had four children, viz.: Esther S., Margaret, wife of Samuel Crocker; Isaac M., of Patten, Maine; and Clara M., now Mrs. Cleaves. Mr. Jones held prominent offices in towns where he lived. He was First Selectman at the time of his death. He was a successful business man, and accumulated a good property. He was well and favorably known throughout the county. He died in August, 1876; Mrs. Jones died in December, 1875. Clara M., now Mrs. Appleton Cleaves, is with her sister in Enfield. Mr. Cleaves is engaged in lumbering in the Province of Newfoundland. Mrs. Cleaves is Supervisor of Schools of Enfield at the present time.

Mr. William Edgecomb, of Enfield, is a son of Levi Edgecomb, of Parsonsfield, Maine. He was a son of Thomas Edgecomb, of the same town, but who was born in Hollis, Maine. Levi Edgecomb married Harriet Sutton, of Limington, Maine. They had nine children, viz.: John S., now of Parsonsfield; Louisa, deceased; Cyrus, now of Bradley, Maine; William; Ezekiel, in California; James; Joseph, in Porter, Maine, and Harriet J. They lost one in infancy. Levi Edgecomb died July 22, 1864. Mrs. Edgecomb died March 13, 1872. William Edgecomb was born August 3, 1823. He first settled in Brewer, where he lived about ten years, engaged in farming. He moved to Enfield in 1854 and bought the farm where he now resides. He married Susan S. Clapp, daughter of Billings and Emily Clapp, of Boston. They have eight children, viz.: Levi B., of Enfield; Hattie E., wife of Joseph Walker, of Iowa; William H., of Enfield; Annie A.; Minnie C., now Mrs. Winfield Scott, of Enfield; Mary A.; George W., and Susie L. They lost one in infancy.

Among the earliest settlers in Enfield was Mr. Smith Gilman. He came here about 1822 from Freedom, Kennebec county. He was born in 1792, August 16, in Gilmanton, New Hampshire. His father's name was William Gilman, and his mother Annie Gilman (nee Thomas). They had ten children, of whom Smith is the seventh. When he came here there were but four acres of trees felled. He has cleared up the land where he now lives. He married Jane Whitten. They had seven children: Abigail, deceased; Jane, deceased; Annie; Caroline; Susan; Smith, deceased, and David. He is now living with his son Smith's family. Mrs. Gilman died February 19, 1868. When he came here they had no road in summer and brought supplies by boat or on sleds in winter. They had to go on horseback through the woods. His son, Smith Gilman, died January 24, 1872. Mr. Gilman in his early manhood and middle life often held prominent offices in the town. He was also a Representative in the State Legislature in 1855. He is now eighty-nine years old, and still retains his faculties to a remarkable degree, stating clearly the facts and incidents of seventy years ago.

Mr. John Treat, of Enfield, is a son of John and Rosanna L. Treat, nee Rosanna Duggins. John Treat, Sr., was a son of Robert Treat, who lived in Bangor but came originally from Haverhill, Massachusetts. John Treat, Sr., came to Enfield from Bangor in 1823. John and Rosanna Treat had nine children, of whom John is the eldest now living. Their names were Mary E., John, Harriet, Edward H., Joseph, Sarah, Rosanna, Margaret A., and Caroline P. Of the girls only Caroline is now living. Mr. Treat died in 1867. Mrs. Treat died in 1842. John Treat, Jr., was born July 10, 1817, in Bangor. He came here when a lad and has been engaged in milling and merchandising all his life. He owns the mill in the town which manufactures about two million rafting wedges each season. Mr. Treat has a fine residence in the village. He has long been Town Treasurer, and in 1861 he was sent to the State Legislature, being a member at the time the war broke out. He married Elizabeth W. Buzwell, of Atkinson, Maine. They have five children, viz.: Ella M., wife of Robert Brady, Jr., of Brooklyn, New York; Silas B., now of Brooklyn, New York; Mary E., and Charles B., at home.

Adoniram J. Darling, of Enfield, is a son of Walker Darling, who came here from Blue Hill in 1825. His father was Jonathan Darling, who was a son of Jonathan Darling, who came from England. Walker Darling married for his first wife Susan Shorey, from Canaan, Maine. By her he had five children, three sons and two daughters, viz.: Jonathan, now of Lowell; Adoniram; Emeline, deceased; Emily, deceased; George Washington, deceased. Mr. Darling died in 1878, and Mrs. Darling died in 1845. Mr. Darling used to hold prominent town offices during his life. He was a major in the Madawaska war. Adoniram J. Darling was born August 9, 1832, in Enfield. Here he has always lived. His present farm is a part of the old homestead where his father settled. He married Mary Louisa Hathorn, daughter of Robert and Lydia Hathorn (nee Lydia Darling). They have three children, viz.: Henry W., Charlie E., and Hattie L. Mr. Darling has held the office of Selectman, Town Agent, etc. His place is in the south part of Enfield, on the Shore of Cold Stream Lake, called by the Indians Ammadamast. This is a beautiful lake of clear, cold water, stocked with salmon and trout.

James Skillings, of Enfield, is a son of Nathaniel and Sarah Skillings (nee Sarah Doane). Nathaniel Skillings was a native of Westbrook, Maine. Here he lived and died. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. Nathaniel and Sarah Skillings had ten children, viz: Affie, Harriet, William, Eunice, Jane, Edward, James, Sophia, William Henry, Charles Henry. Nathaniel Skillings died in 1836. James Skillings, the third son of this family, was born December 25, 1821. He went into the army before he was eighteen, and remained until 1873. He was in the war with Mexico and with Taylor at Buena Vista, Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and other engagements. During his army life he was stationed at various places. In 1873 he came to Enfield and settled on a farm with his son. His son died in 1879, and Mr. Skillings is now carrying on the business. He married Rubie Haskell, daughter of James Haskell, of Houlton, Maine. They have had five children, all of whom are deceased except one, Kate H. He has a good farm of one hundred acres on the Ridge road, north of Enfield Station about one mile.

ETNA.

The narrative now moves a long way to the southwest, and gets again west of Bangor, from which Etna is distant but twelve miles, the breadth of the intervening towns, Carmel and Hermon. Carmel is the bounding town of Etna on the east; on the south Dixmont, beyond which is Waldo county; on the west Plymouth, with Somerset county beyond; and on the north Stetson and a narrow strip of Newport. Like all the towns in its neighborhood, Etna is six miles long; but has been squeezed in between Plymouth and Carmel to greater narrowness, being only four miles wide through five miles of its length, and only three and three-eighths broad during the remaining mile.

Within this space, however, a prosperous and somewhat numerous population has been settled, numbering, by the last census, eight hundred and ninety-five, or about thirty to the square mile. Against the experience, too, of most of the towns of Penobscot, the population has never been more than this; and these figures represent an increase of six per cent. on the census of 1870. Etna village is a thriving place about a cross-roads a little more than a mile from the north line of the town, and in the vicinity of Parker Pond. It has a Baptist church, a school, and other public and semi-public buildings, and a station of the Maine Central Railroad, which passes a little north of the village, and has about three and one-third miles of its track in this town. Until of late years, this place had the only post-office in Etna; but the increasing demands of the people have led to the establishment of the Etna Centre office at the cross-roads about two miles south of Etna village, and also South Etna, in the I. A. King neighborhood. Along the middle of the east and west road, half a mile from the south line of the town, coming in from Carmel, running nearly three miles west, and then dipping off southwest into Dixmont, is a tolerably crowded settlement; and School No. 4 stands a little below the angle it makes in the southwest of the town. Only one of the three north and south roads that strike this highway crosses it—the easternmost of them, which is the only one traversing the entire length of the town. It comes in from Stetson, near the Etna and Carmel Pond, runs through Etna village and by Etna Centre post-office, and so on southward with a general distance from the east town line of one-half to three-quarters of a mile. It passes a school-house half a mile above the east and west road, and a mile further runs out into Dixmont. The westernmost of the north and south roads begins near School No. 4, and after two or three zigzags strikes off due north, passing School No. 5 at the intersection of the east and west road through Etna Centre, and almost two miles further ends at a highway running from the northernmost east and west road southwesterly to Plymouth. West of this latter road another and shorter line connects it and the road next previously mentioned. This comes in from Carmel post-office, running northwest to the Etna line, and thence north of west through Etna post office and by a cemetery over half-way across the town to its exit into Plymouth, very nearly at the northwest corner of the town. School No. 8 is at the intersection of roads a mile from the corner. Just west of Etna village a neighborhood road from Etna Station crosses the main route, and goes zigzagging off into the country. The only other road of importance is one of two and one third miles in length, running north and south one and a half miles from the west line of the town, and connecting the road through Etna Centre with the east and west road at the south of the town. Apart from the centers of population before referred to, the settlers are quite evenly distributed along the highways.

The most conspicuous of the Etna waters is the Etna and Carmel Pond, with Parker Pond in close association. They have been described in our account of Carmel. They lie in the northeast angle of the town, and about one-third of their surface of, say, one square mile lies in Etna. Parker Pond receives at its west end, from the southwestward, a small tributary about two miles long, rising in the north central part of the town. Half a mile southwest of its source heads another brook, which runs off in the same direction to Plymouth Pond, receiving in Etna one tributary from the northward, rising in Plymouth, and one on the south, flowing wholly in Etna. South of the last a petty rill runs into the stream connecting Skinner and Plymouth Ponds. The headquarters of a pretty long tributary of Kingsley Stream, flowing westward, are near the center of Etna, and the beginning of another affluent of the Kingsley is about the middle of the south line of the town. The creeks that head about the north center of Etna end with one rising about two miles southwest of Etna post-office, and flowing northerly some two and a half miles toward the north town line.

The surface of this town is rather broken, but its soil is generally good, and proves well adapted to the raising of grass and grain crops.

ORIGINAL PROPRIETORSHIP.*

This township was granted by the Legislature of Massachusetts, in 1794, to Bowdoin College, with five other townships at the same time, and was sold by the trustees of the college soon after for ten cents per acre. The town then contained 23,040 acres; it now contains 14,880 acres, "more or less." It was lotted out in 1806 by Herrick & Brother into eighty acre lots, under the direction of John Crosby, of Hampden. He had become owner of the township, and afterwards sold it to William Gray, of Boston, Massachusetts, reserving what he had sold to settlers and one-sixth part which he had previously sold to Ruel Williams. One thousand two hundred acres were also reserved for schools, for the support of the gospel, and for the first settled minister. But the first settled minister never got the land, and no part of it ever went to support the gospel, but in the end went to support schools. This land sold for about $1.50 per acre, and in the course of events it all went into the town treasury and was used to pay running expenses. While it was in the hands of trustees it took quite a portion of the interest to pay the expense of looking after it and the other matters.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT

of Etna was made May 27, 1807, by Phineas Friend and Benjamin Friend. Both families moved into one log house, which they erected in the midst of an unbroken wilderness, with just trees enough felled to make room to build the house upon. The floor of the house was made of split cedar and hung with wooden hinges and a wooden latch, with a leather string on the outside to lift the latch; a rock chimney was topped off with split sticks laid in clay, which was at that time called a "cat chimney;" the mansion was shingled with spruce bark peeled four feet long, laid upon ribs placed two feet apart, and another rib laid on the bark exactly over the under rib, both ribs running over the ends of the house so as to make room to tie a withe around them so as to hold the bark on the house. There was not a nail used in building the cabin, nor any glass windows. It was built sixteen by thirty feet square, with fourteen occupants; eleven males and three females. The nearest neighbor was two miles off, in an adjoining town. The only domestic animals that were brought with them were one pig for each family and one dog.

Immediately after the first house was erected, they commenced and built the second in the same manner as the first, without nails or glass, with holes cut into the logs to let light in; and in the course of the season there were four squares of glass put into the houses, two lights in each house, set in a hole cut into the logs, furnishing each family with a very comfortable amount of light. The chamber floor was made of straight spruce poles, peeled, upon which the boys used to sleep of nights. One morning they found a large owl perching upon their head-board, and after calling upon him to be gone, he made some obstinate resistance against being disturbed in his part of the twenty four hours' sleep and rest. But he found, after a somewhat lengthy combat, he was only second best; and the final result was capital punishment for the crime of house-breaking in the night time.

Immediately after the two families were comfortably settled in their new homes, they began to subdue the forest. Each family felled about fifteen acres of trees, and in the fall of that season the most of the land was cleared. In the spring of 1808 it was all sown to wheat, and the result was that in the fall they harvested about three hundred bushels of the grain. The new settlers coming in that year made a quick market for all the surplus of crops.

A GREAT AND MIGHTY HUNTER.

In June, 1807, those two pioneers were made to rejoice by an accession to their number, and having a new neighbor come into the town. It was Mr. Samuel Parker, who was by occupation a hunter, and made sad havoc among the wild animals, such as the otter, fox, sable, raccoon, and last, but not least, the bear, which wrought great destruction with the sheep and corn. Mr. Parker seemed to make some impression upon the small animals, but the bear appeared to be determined to stand his ground, and was not so ready to yield. At times, indeed, he contended earnestly for his rights, and would have his portion of corn and mutton; and when he could not get either, he would take lambs, rather than be crowded off with half his rights. Often he was accused of taking more than his part, which was the case one night, when he took a whole sheep and five lambs from Phineas Friend. For this he was tried and condemned to be shot; but he escaped after sentence was in part executed, leaving bloody signs of parole. It was never known whether he confiscated any more sheep and lambs or not; but one thing was certain, he did not take any the next day.

* Nearly all the remainder of this chapter has been prepared by the Hon. John C. Friend, a leading citizen of the town, and a descendant of one of the pioneer brothers of his name.

Mr. Parker began to hunt here in the fall of 1807. The sables and minks were the first animals he sought for; and as the sable had undisputed range of the forest, it had the most of his attention the first few years. His mode of trapping them was to make a circuit of some ten or twelve miles around by a spotted line, dragging a piece of a muskrat for the sable to follow from one trap to another. The trap was constructed of a few chips cut from a tree and baited with the same meat he dragged on the ground. In this manner he caught large numbers of these animals, which he sold for about twenty cents each. At one time he had his traps robbed, and some of them nearly destroyed, which annoyed him very much; and it was a great wonder to him who or what it was that committed the depredations. He would have been very willing to lay it to the Indians, if there had been any about. At last he met the thief one day with three of his sables in his mouth going for another. At first he hardly knew what to call him, as he had so much whisker, and he wondered whether it was an animal, a bird, or an Indian devil, as the last-named gentleman had the reputation of inhabiting the forest. But without much forethought Mr. Parker leveled his fowling-piece at him, discharged its contents at the intruder, and at once laid him out in the shape of a wolverine, which ever afterwards had to bear the dishonor of robbing the traps, although it was charging the dead with what he could not reply to.

The tradition goes that Parker in one fall caught about 300 sables, 25 minks, 7 otters, 150 muskrats, 9 foxes, and 2 beavers; and report fails to tell how many ducks and partridges he shot, but the number was very large. One night he caught two foxes in one trap, of which he was always fond of telling to the end of his life. After thinning out the game so as to make it unprofitable, in after years he would take a back-load of traps and a little salt, and go up the Penobscot River to hunt for the same game in the wilds of the north as he had been taking in "Crosbytown," as this plantation was then called. Finally, in the summer of 1819, after living here twelve years, he took his family and removed to the Passadumkeag River, where he continued the same occupation for many years.

MORE PIONEERS.

In the spring of 1808 there were three more families that moved into this region—Mr. Bela Sylvester, Mr. James Harden, and Mr. John Jackson. There were also six other young men without wives, who came in to subdue the forest—the three Dennetts (Reuben, Dennis, and John), two Sylvesters (Asa and Calvin), and David Hooper.

This year Benjamin Friend erected the first frame barn, and Phineas Friend made him a log barn about twenty-five by thirty-five feet square and fourteen feet high, and covered it with bark. Into this barn he stowed a large amount of grain, which had been gathered on hay-poles, or, more properly speaking, grain-poles; and in the fall of 1808 they imported each a cow, which they wintered on wheat straw that was said not to be half threshed, which is too true to be disputed at this late day.

During the winter of 1808-9 the inhabitants made a fence around a cow-pasture one mile square, to keep their stock from straying too far. One foggy day one of the neighbors went after his cow, and he himself strayed so far as to be obliged to lie out one night at least, and in the morning he was compelled to follow the brook home, which (the brook) he said ran the wrong way of the compass, if indeed it did not run up hill. It led him home, however, at last to see his anxious family, who had spent a sleepless night, as he had. The cow, which had Nature's compass, came home soon after the owner started for her, who seemed to have been the only happy one through the weary night, and the hallooing and crying did not seem to affect her in the least—the only anxiety she seemed to express was to have her cud properly chewed and swallowed.

THE PIONEER CHILD.

On the 24th day of October, 1808, the first child was born; and in honor to the then proprietor of the town, he was called John Crosby. He is still alive, and has been one of the correspondents of the Maine Farmer's Almanac since 1841. He was never a lawyer or deputy sheriff, but is a Maine Law man, to which a great many rum-sellers could testify, if called upon. In politics he was a Democrat until 1848, since then has been a Republican; and this is the only change he ever made in politics.

A BRIDE ARRIVES.

In the fall of this year Mr. James Harden married him a wife in Sedgwick, then in Massachusetts, now in Maine, and conveyed her on horseback about fifty-five miles to Crosbytown. When she arrived in town there was much rejoicing among quite a number of the first settlers, who had had an acquaintance with the young lady some seventeen years before. They gave her a good reception, if they did not bestow upon her such a serenading as is practiced to some extent in places since. An addition to the numbers of the pioneers seemed to elate them much, and they could not well restrain their joy, whether the addition came by birth or otherwise.

SUGAR-MAKING.

In the spring of 1809 the neighbors began to manufacture sugar from the maple-trees, of which there was a great supply. There was a plentiful flow of sap that year, and a large amount of sugar was made. In the manufacture both old and young took much enjoyment, and they kept the pot boiling day and night. It is not supposed that they used so much sweetening at that time as is used at the present, for they made this supply last nearly the year around; at any rate, it was all they got, whether more or less.

FRESH IMMIGRATION.

The spring of 1809 brought in quite a number of new settlers, as they were then called, at which all seemed to be pleased.

This year Reuben Dennett built the first frame house ever erected in the town, the same as is now occupied by Mr. Henry Wakefield, near the post-office. Mr. Dennett put a newly-married wife into his house during the summer, with which all the neighbors seemed to be well pleased.

During this year the first school was taught in town by Miss Bethiah Friend. She had the first courting on the plantation, which resulted in her marriage to Mr. George Dunham, of "No. 3," as it was then called—now Carmel. The school was taught in a log camp made by Reuben Dennett, eight by ten feet square.

Among the new-comers this year were John and Jesse Benjamin, both young men; Mrs. Emerson, a young widowed lady with three children; and Solomon Harden with a young wife. The same year there were three children born, which, of course, made as many of the families happy.

One of the blessings that attended this new settlement was that the pioneers never had any taxes to pay until 1814, or about that time, when they were called upon to pay a direct tax for the support of the war of 1812. How much was paid by all no one knows, and all that is known is that Phineas Friend's tax was $1.35, which he paid. Quite a portion of the tax was never paid; the collector, Mr. Daniel Wilkins, never made more than one call, and those that were minus the needful were never asked to pay afterwards.

In the spring of 1810 Phineas built a barn forty-six by sixty-two feet square, and, what may seem a little mysterious, he hewed two sills, sixty-two feet long, both from one yellow ash tree. They were seven by eight inches square. He took a large tree, sided it down to eight inches thick, and split it in two and edged the halves up. They are good and sound now, in the barn owned by Mr. Daniel W. Sylvester, and bid fair to last as much longer.

This year Dennis Dennett, James Harden, and Bela Sylvester each built himself a barn. That made by Mr. Dennett was burnt in June, 1881; the other two have long ceased to exist, being taken down to build larger ones.

EARLY CROPS.

This year [1810] Phineas Friend raised four hundred and fifty bushels of wheat on twenty acres of newly cleared land, which was the largest crop of wheat raised by any one man the same year in town, although not the largest yield per acre. James Harden raised ninety bushels the same year from two acres, about which there was considerable bragging.

Until this year there was no corn raised, when many of the neighbors planted quite an amount on burnt land, and in the fall the bears, coons, and porcupines began to show themselves very numerous, and to set up their claim to at least a portion of the corn. In fact they got their portion, right or wrong, for which one of the bears forfeited his life by having a piece of logging chain shot through his vitals from a gun set by Reuben Dennett. This was the first one ever killed in the town.

Many of the coons had to come down, as "Davy Crockett" called; although they seemed to be inclined to take care of themselves, and knew that Mr. Parker was not around. The hedgehogs did not seem to care much unless they were trapped, and then they seemed to yield very quietly. It was considered by them quite safe for dogs to keep on the right side of the hedge, and if they came in close contact the dogs seldom showed any disposition to renew the risk of another display of their courage.

A BEAR STORY.

There is a story of Mr. Parker's finding a nest of young bears this year in a hollow stub. Whether true or not, it has never been denied; but the story is too good to be doubted here, as it never has been. In one of his hunting rambles he came to a stub very much scratched; and to know the cause of it he ascended the stub and took a view into the hollow. Not being exactly satisfied as to what it contained, he thought he would fathom the hole, and not liking to go down head first, he put his feet in, and attempting to hold himself up on the sides of the stub, in swinging his feet around to ascertain what he could find, the shell of the stub gave way and let Mr. Parker down upon a nest of young cubs. Not liking this new-comer, they set up a loud howling, which soon brought the old dame bear to their rescue. She was heard scratching up, and when about to descend she had to turn and come down tail first. The hunter as quick as thought took out his long, sharp knife and opened it. At this time the old bruin was down to his head, when he seized her by the tail with his left hand and used his knife with his right, and that quite effectually by ramming it into the lower part of her body. She, not exactly liking such a reception in her own home, began to make her exit to the top of the stub, when Mr. Parker, with a life struggle, threw his formidable enemy to the ground, and the fall and the loss of blood made her too weak to ascend the stub again. She walked off, evidently not much liking her intruder, as she seemed to consider him. She soon disappeared from sight, and when everything appeared to be safe Mr. Parker came down, seized his axe, cut a hole into the stub, and took out four young bears, who never before saw much daylight. This was another exploit the hunter had to tell to the end of his long life, with much pride, which usually brought a laugh.

The spring of 1811 brought in several new settlers—three Abbots, Samuel, Peter, and Moses, with their families. The crops this year, like the three previous years, were very bountiful. Now the hay crop began to be counted as one of the more valuable productions, and stock began to increase and make a considerable item in the value of their new farms. Quite an amount of butter was made and sent on horseback to market at Hampden, some fifteen miles distant.

This year quite a number of sons and daughters were born, which helped also to increase the population.

This year Mr. Benjamin Friend began to manufacture potash, which he made for a few years, and then sold his kettles to Mr. Bela Sylvester. The latter continued to do the same for several years, and made what was called pearlash, which took the place of the soda of the present day.

During the winters of 1810 and 1811, the scholars enjoyed winter schools. The first one was taught by Mr. Abel Merrill, from Blue Hill. Each one who sent scholars had to pay in proportion to the number sent, and the teacher was paid in produce, for anything like greenbacks was then out of the question, and specie likewise.

In May, 1811, the Rev. Paul Ruggles preached the first sermon ever delivered in the Plantation, in the log house of Benjamin Friend. His text was from John ix. 4; "I must work the works of Him that sent me; the night cometh, when no man can work." In the afternoon he preached on the prodigal son. In June following he baptized Benjamin Friend and wife, and they united with the Baptist church in Carmel, of which Mr. Ruggles was pastor. In the course of a few years it was called the Carmel and Etna church, and finally it became centered in Etna, but not until after the death of that venerable servant of God, which took place May 21, 1820. He was ordained January 11, 1811, and preached his last sermon December 15, 1819, when his health failed, and he could preach no longer. During his ministry of nine years he preached more than twelve hundred sermons. In his travels he visited the Kennebec River three times on horseback, although there were no roads at that time. He went as far east as Cherryfield twice, and Eastport once, on missionary tours at his own expense. We learn from his diary that he preached in Penobscot county in the following named places: Carmel, Hampden, Bangor, Mansborough, Crosbytown, Stetson, East Pond, Ohio, Jackson Brook, Mt. Ephraim, Lebanon, Lee, Jordan's Stream, Warrenstown, Hunting's Settlement, No's 2 and 5, Exeter, and at Brother Norcross's. He was the first and only pastor of the Baptist church in Carmel during his very useful life, and during his ministry the Baptist churches of Exeter, Newport, and Stetson were organized.

A FEAR OF SCARCITY.

Crops of every kind were very bountiful from 1808 to 1814, but they were cut off in 1815 and 1816, and the latter year was called the "cold season." There was a snow-fall of about five inches June 5, 1816, and this year corn and beans were a total failure, and there was a very light crop of wheat and rye, so that corn was worth $2.50 to $3.00 per bushel, very scarce at that price, and none nearer than Hampden at any price, which had to be brought on horseback fifteen miles. The only produce that the settlers had to sell was butter, which was worth at Hampden from ten to twelve cents per pound, and not much sale for it at that price. Almost all the settlers on the Penobscot made their own butter, and had to buy their bread. They had but little to buy butter with at any price, and it has been related that in the spring of 1817 some cooked leaves for greens, which was the most destitute condition of the people. Wheat raised in 1816 was consumed, and in the summer many lived on raspberries and milk, and when raspberries could not be obtained, milk was used alone with a good relish. As there were many cows in the plantation, they made it answer a good purpose, and would make a bushel of corn last a good while. They thought Indian bread, raspberries, and milk were not very poor rations to cut hay upon. The few who had a little wheat left after they had their fields of grain sown, seemed to be quite willing to divide their little with those who had none, and really seemed to enjoy the pleasure of dividing, and to feel that it was more blessed to give than to receive. In due time new crops came with an abundant harvest in former years, and they soon forgot their poverty and rejoiced over their abundance.

The mode of raising potatoes was very different at that time from what it was in later years, when they began to use the plow and hoe. It was done by taking a pickaxe, made usually of an old narrow axe peaked out by a blacksmith, sticking it into the ground a few times where the hill of potatoes was to be made, and tucking the potatoes into the ground some two or three inches deep. This method produced potatoes easily. It was always done on burnt land, as it was then called, and it was regarded as a very easy way to raise as many potatoes as would be wanted for the table use of a family. They never got any hoeing after they were planted until they were dug in the fall; and this kind of a crop had no particular enemy among wild animals, as their corn and wheat had.

A SINGING SCHOOL.

In the winter of 1816 Mr. John Benjamin had a singing-school in his log house, in which the young folks took special pleasure. They met for singing two evenings in each week for twelve weeks, and for compensation they used to pay him fifty cents each for male scholars, and the young ladies furnished the candles for their part. Mr. Benjamin had a splendid voice and was an excellent singer. If he had lived in these days, he would have passed for "Professor" Benjamin. The way they used to make the old log house ring when they sang "Montague," "Montgomery," and the Anthem for Esther, could with propriety have made him a professor. It was good music they had to sing, in place of what is now sung in the concerts, which is of such a low grade it is never thought worth publishing the second time, and to sell it the first time the publishers have to crowd in some of those old tunes into the last part of the book to get off their new music, which is never thought worth printing the second time. And when the next publication comes out they take special pride in saying that the tunes are all new, except a few standard ones that are like the former book, the same old tunes that were sung one hundred years ago.

A PIONEER ROAD.

From the early settlement of the town in 1807 to 1816, all the communication the inhabitants had with "Great East Pond Plantation," now Newport, was by way of "No. 4, Range 3," now Stetson. On or about this time (1816), the Court appointed a committee to lay out a county road from Carmel to Newport, through Etna; but the location did not suit the men of "Crosby-town," and they took the matter into their own hands and laid it out in a different place more to their liking. They made the road where they wanted it, where it suited them a great deal better, and where it now is. No one disputed their right to do as they pleased. At one time a man from out of town ran his sleigh against a log left near the traveled part of the road, and somewhat damaged his carriage, for which he sued the town and lost his case by not being in the road when the damage was done. When the decision was rendered against him he said the next time he traveled the road he would drive in the road, "faith." Captain Friend, who knew where the Court laid out the road, said that if he did he would have to drive through his house, which brought the bystanders down upon the plaintiff, and the man said he thought the town was rightly named, and that it had just had an eruption which shook the heavens.

DEATH AND MARRIAGE IN THE SETTLEMENT.

In October, 1813, Mr. Calvin Sylvester died of consumption, which was the second death in town. The first was a young child of Mr. John Jackson. Mr. Sylvester left a widow and four small children in a rather destitute condition; but her good neighbors in part made up her loss by bestowing upon her some of the good things of this life, which made her quite comfortable until she was married for the second time, to Mr. John Dunton, of Hampden. This was the first marriage ever solemnized in Etna. It was performed by Josiah Kidder, Esq., who rode horseback seventeen miles for the privilege of uniting the happy couple. Mr. Dunton had four children, and Mrs. Sylvester had four, which made them a large family.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS—INCORPORATION—POPULATION, ETC.

The first settlers took special pride to maintain public schools, which they did summer and winter; so their children received a very fair education for those times, when school-houses were unknown and the town had but one school-district. The schools were supported by free contributions of such as felt able to pay a little of the needful, and all the taxes they had to pay was a small State and county tax until the town was incorporated as Etna, February 14, 1820, by the General Court of Massachusetts. It was the last town incorporated by that Legislature in the District of Maine before the separation, and was the two hundred and thirty-sixth town incorporated in the District. It had then a population of 194, polls to the number of 42, and estates officially valued at $15,094. In 1830 its population was 362. Ten years thereafter this had a little more than doubled, and the census of 1840 showed up 745. In 1850 there were 802 people in Etna; in 1860, 849; in 1870, 844; and in 1880, 895. The polls in 1860 were 196; in 1870, 185; in 1880, 216. Estates in these years, $102,913, $154,339, and $162,209. It will be observed that the property of the town, as well as its population and polls, has steadily increased, in the face of hard times.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

On the 14th day of February, 1821, a very sorrowful accident took place, which filled the community with mourning. Towards the close of that day, as Dr. Benjamin Friend was returning home from a neighboring town, and as he was turning into his yard, his young horse became frightened and began to run. He turned a short corner, throwing Dr. Friend out of the sleigh and killing him instantly. A number of his family were standing near the scene of the tragedy and saw the whole. Upon going up to their father they found him dead. He left a widow and nine children to mourn the sad event. It was one of the most heart-rending accidents imaginable. An affectionate wife was made a widow; nine children were fatherless; and the whole town was left to mourn the loss of one of its first settlers, and one whom they looked up to for guidance in many of its affairs.

The next day many of the neighbors called to mourn with the afflicted family, and among them was Mrs. Mercy Ruggles, from an adjoining town, who but a few months before had been made a widow by the loss of her husband, the Rev. Paul Ruggles. When she came into the house she took Mrs. Friend by the hand, and both sat down and wept most profusely nearly an hour before one word was spoken. The first word was by Mrs. Ruggles, who said, "trust in God;" and then silence prevailed for some time, when Mrs. Ruggles arose and said, "let us try to pray;" and the whole family kneeling, Mrs. Ruggles offered one of the most fervent prayers ever sent to the throne of grace. When they arose from their knees, Mrs. Friend, as calmly as she could under the circumstances, said, for the first time she had spoken, that she did "trust in God." Then another silence prevailed, during which the two widows walked up to the corpse and took a solemn view of the departed husband. There the first words spoken were by the new-made widow, when she could calm her aching heart enough to speak. She said, "The Lord has taken him to himself, but it seems to me as though I needed him the most." Mrs. Ruggles replied, "God knew what was best for him."

The next day but one he was deposited in his final resting-place, and a very appropriate discourse was preached by the Rev. Robert Coburn, from the text: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." And so it was with Mrs. Friend. She lived until March 21, 1846, and never wanted any of this world's goods to make her comfortable and happy. She died in peace.

VARIOUS HISTORICAL NOTES.

The vote upon the separation of the State from Massachusetts was eleven nays to no yeas. Mr. Samuel Abbott was in favor of the separation, but did not vote.

This town derived its name from Mt. Etna. It was selected by Benjamin Friend, and was taken from Webster's old spelling-book. This was a very prominent school-book at that time, the higher classes having the American Preceptor and the Columbian Orator. These books contained some very interesting pieces and dialogues, which almost or quite every scholar could repeat without missing a word. The greatest favorite was one entitled "Old Scrapewell," which was truly a well-written article, and showed a good knowledge of human nature.

The first school-house was built in 1821. It was plastered in 1822, which was the first plastering done in the town, and called all the boys together from far and near to see mortar spread. To amuse the boys, the mason said the best way to build a chimney would be to begin at the top and lay the bricks down, if they could make the first brick stick. One of the bright-eyed youngsters told him he could hold that, if that was all it required, but said he guessed he would need some one to hold the mortar to the second brick.

On the 4th day of September, 1819, Thorndike Friend, son of Benjamin Friend, was instantly killed under a tree, which spread a deep gloom over the whole community. It was the first sudden death that had taken place in the town. He was a highly esteemed young man. His age was eighteen years, nine months, and three days. He was of good habits, and all loved him.

In September, 1820, Mr. Phineas Friend began to build a grist-mill, which he got in running order, on a small stream on his farm. It was called an overshot mill; the wheel was sixty-six feet in circumference, and it took but a small quantity of water to carry it. The mill was built about three hundred feet from the dam, and stood about two rods from the stream, so that it was not in danger of suffering anything by a freshet. This was the first water-power ever used in town, and it would have been well, perhaps, for the interest of the builders of it had it been the last, for there is not a good water-power here, as the tract is on the height of land between the Penobscot and Kennebec rivers. It is drained both ways, and there is no one stream two miles long. There have been, however, two saw-mills built, both now burned, and three shingle-mills, one of which is burned and two are torn down. To-day (1881) there is no water-power used in Etna for any purpose.

The first school was taught in 1808, and schools have been maintained every year since. Now there are eight school districts, and have been for more than thirty years. All of the districts, with one exception, have good school-houses, which are kept in good condition.

The road through the town from Carmel to Newport was made in 1821 so as to be passable, but in a poor condition. That year the town raised a large highway tax, and after the inhabitants had worked their tax out they voted to work it out again, which they did, and in this way opened the road so as to make it better passable. One and a half miles of the west end of the road was then through an unbroken wilderness. This year (1821) was the first year in which the new residents were taxed; and this year they had to pay more than two-thirds of the tax, otherwise the road would not have been made at the time. The owners of the wild land were virtually exempted from tax under the laws of Massachusetts; but the newly made State of Maine thought it wise to tax them, and this year they had to pay a good portion of the money to maintain the schools. Those who bought land of the proprietors had the privilege of working out their tax and turning it on the notes which they gave for the land, as the most of them had to do for the want of money to pay down when they purchased the land, and it was considered a great privilege to work out the value of their notes and have the benefit of the roads. It was like buying their dinner and not having to pay for it. The tax was worked out at the rate of about twelve and a half cents per hour, men and oxen; and they would make out about twelve hours per day for each; and then there was a discount of about twenty-five per cent between road tax and money. Still, they called it pretty good pay, for they all used to work their oxen in, and they were allowed full time whether they worked or not. Besides, all of them had a pair of oxen.

THE OLD-TIME MAIL-CARRIER.

This year the mail route was established between Bangor and Milburn (now Skowhegan), by the way of Hampden. A post office was established at Carmel, and it was the only one between Hampden and Newport, a distance of twenty-four miles. The mail was carried on horseback once a week each way; it usually took about one and a half days to go through. The mail-carrier had the privilege of carrying the newspapers and delivering them to the subscribers on the route, for which the subscribers had to pay him one cent for each paper delivered. The Bangor Weekly Register was the only paper known in these parts at this time, and when the carrier got near a house where the paper was taken, he would begin to blow a trumpet attached to his saddle, when some one would appear and take the paper. Those who lived a little distance from the road would make a large mortise in a rail of the fence, with a cover, and he would put the paper into the box, shut the cover, and pass on to the next man on the road. This was considered as "having things brought to the door." In the winter, when the roads were good, he would go through in a sleigh; but this was not often, as there was seldom enough travel to make the road fit to go over any other way than on horseback.

In looking back, we think this a slow way of going through the world; but it was to them a great advance upon what they had been used to having. In those days it was no uncommon thing for a man to take an ox team in the morning with his wife, and perhaps one or more of his children, go five or six miles on a visit, spend the day with some of their neighbors, and return home at midnight, earlier or later, as the case may have been. These were happy days; animosities were nearly unknown in the community; all seemed to enjoy each other's society; all had unbounded confidence among themselves; and were any in want, all were ready to render assistance and lend a helping hand to the sick and afflicted.

THE BAPTIST PASTOR.

In 1822 the Rev. Daniel McMaster moved into the town, and entered upon his duties as pastor of the Baptist church. He remained here until 1831, when he moved out of the town, but still continued his ministerial office until it was filled by Rev. Jacob Hatch in 1834. During his ministry of twelve years, including the great revival of 1833, there were added to the church more than one hundred by baptism, more than one-half of the number in 1833.

THE POST-OFFICES.

A post office was established here in 1823, and Rev. Daniel McMaster appointed postmaster. He held the office until 1825, when he resigned, and Daniel T. Crabtree, Esq., was appointed in his place. He held until 1839, when he was removed for political purposes, and Stephen Hardy appointed in his place. His term lasted until 1841, when he, too, was removed, and Anson C. Moseley took his place until 1853. Then he resigned, and Ellis Friend was appointed. In 1859 he was removed, and Asa M. Sylvester was appointed. In 1865 he resigned, and Samuel Hasty was appointed, who in 1868 resigned, and after a hot contest as to who should be his successor, Augustus Moseley was appointed. He resigned in 1873, when Judson E. Friend was appointed, who now holds the office (1881). All of those men have made honest and faithful postmasters, and have filled the office to the satisfaction of all concerned. It is now a money-order office, and pays a revenue of more than $500 per annum, including the postmaster's salary.

In 1845 another post-office was established at Etna Centre, and Timothy B. Carter was appointed postmaster. In 1863 he was removed for political reasons, and John Tarr appointed in his place, who now holds the office (1881).

In 1871 another post-office, at South Etna, was established. Miss Martha Pitcher was appointed postmistress, who, in 1873, resigned, and Thomas A. King was appointed, and is now (1881) postmaster.

ANOTHER CALAMITY.

August 11, 1822, Mr. Prince C. Ward was drowned in the Parker Pond by the upsetting of a boat, leaving a wife and three small children. He was the first one ever buried in Etna. This spread a deep gloom over the whole town, and all seemed to enter into mournful sympathy with the afflicted young widow, so suddenly deprived of the loving husband of her youth.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

In 1824 Robert Stuart, Esq., was elected Representative to the Legislature. He was the first one Etna had the honor of sending. In 1835 Gilbert Ellis was elected to the same office. In 1838 John Fogg was chosen. In 1843 Ellis Friend was elected. In 1845 John C. Friend was elected. In 1848 John Fogg was chosen. In 1853 Elias Doble was elected. In 1857 Moses Abbott was elected. In 1863 Otis L. Carter was chosen. In 1867 Isaac Pierce was chosen. In 1870 Daniel Buswell was elected. In 1873 Joel A. Sanborn was chosen. In 1877 Henry C. Friend, and in 1880 Horace H. Wheeler were chosen.

In 1880 Henry C. Friend was chosen State Senator. From the time the town was incorporated in 1820, to 1828, politics were very little known. In 1824 John Q. Adams had thirteen votes. In 1828 John Q. Adams had twelve and Andrew Jackson four votes. About this time politics began to take deep root, and the Democratic party always carried a majority until 1848, when the Free-soil party cast fifty-three votes, which left the Democra--- party without a majority, from which state they have never recovered. In 1854 the Free-soil party took the name of "Republican," and have held a majority in Etna every year since, except 1879, when the Greenback party carried the election, but lost the honor the next year.

In 1844 the Democrats of Etna took exception to the course of the Democrats of Newport and Stetson, which caused the election of Ellis Friend (who was a Whig) that year, by one majority. This was before plurality election. The next year Etna was ready for another fight, and commenced in good earnest. After having three unsuccessful elections, when the Whig candidate began to lead, the Democrats in Newport and Stetson gave up their candidate, and helped elect John C. Friend.

TOWN AFFAIRS.

Originally the town was six miles square. In 1826 a little more than one-third of it was taken off on the west side of the town to help make Plymouth. In 1824 the town voted to build the floating bridge, which was in that part set off to constitute Plymouth, and in making the bridge the town got in debt about $1,200 in 1825. There was no provision made by the Legislature for the payment of this debt, and Etna had to pay every dollar of it, which was then considered large. For Etna at that time to raise the money was out of the question, and what was to be done none seemed to know. Those who were the most forward in having the new town made, lived in the Plymouth part. When the question as to the town debt was in the Legislature, they reported that there were no town debts to be paid, when they knew that there were $1,200 outstanding for finishing the bridge, for which orders were given but a few days before the town was divided.

The proprietor of the town, Hon. William Gray, of Boston, Massachusetts, said if the town would vote to allow him to pay his highway tax by taking up those orders he would do it. The town voted to raise $2,500 road tax; and as he had to pay about one-half of all the taxes, he took the orders up and had the money credited on his road tax. The inhabitants for that year therefore had to pay a double highway tax, and paid the heavy debt without feeling it much; but there was considerable grinding about it against some of the leading spirits of Plymouth.

The authority for making this statement, obtained from the Representative of this District, was that he was told there was no town order out or debts against the town of Etna.

In 1825 there was a very dry season, and much damage was done by fires running in the woods and fields, burning the building of Mr. Humphrey Whitten, with nearly all of his furniture. Quite a large amount of fence was burnt. The drought came on so late it did not damage crops, as it would if it had come on earlier in the year.

About this time the Court of Common Pleas sent a committee to locate a road from Carmel to Plymouth, through what is now called Etna Centre, where the road is still travelled, with some few alterations.

THE LOCAL MILITIA.

In May, 1826, the Governor, who is commander-in-chief of the military of the State, called upon those who were liable to do military duty to meet and choose company officers, which they did, and chose George Nickerson, Captain; Ellis Friend, Lieutenant; and Anson C. Moseley, Ensign. The company they commanded was pronounced by Major-General Hodgdon, in 1831, to be the best military company in the regiment.

AGRICULTURAL PROSPERITY.

From 1817 to 1836 the crops were very bountiful of every kind, with an exception of two or three years. The wheat was injured by rust and weevils one year. All seemed to have a good supply of every kind and enjoyed life, and the young folks were given in marriage—or, if not, they were strongly inclined to get married—and many improved the opportunity and made marriage a life institution. A divorce in all of those years was never thought of, much less practiced, as it has been of late years, when it has been broken up with apparently less ceremony than a courtship was at that time.

THE FIRST TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

In 1828 Deacon Daniel T. Crabtree raised his voice against the alarming spread of intemperance, and at a religious meeting of that year presented a pledge, or, as he called it, a "constitution" for the organization of a temperance society, which he himself had signed. He obtained at that meeting five more names, and after circulating the pledge a society called the Etna Temperance Society was organized August 1, 1828. It was the first temperance organization of any description ever attempted in Penobscot county, and to day Etna can boast of its good influence. Quite a number of the twelve of whom it was composed were young men less than twenty years of age, who are living in Etna. They have kept their pledge more than fifty-three years, and have seen two generations grow up under the influence of this old temperance society and testify to its healthy and beneficial precepts. This society more than fifty years ago gave Etna the name of "a cold water town." This society continued its organization many years, spreading its good influence to other towns and saving the young from the awful evil of drinking intoxicating liquor. When the society first started none of the ladies joined it, for the reason that none of them were ever known to be intoxicated, but soon they found that nothing good could be accomplished without them, and when they took hold things began to move more rapidly, and by their aid and that of a temperance lecturer, we had thirty-five names added to the society in one week. Then we began to look up and the cause advanced more rapidly. Rum-drinking at huskings and raisings was in most instances dispensed with.

The first barn ever raised without rum, in Etna, was one built by Deacon Crabtree. Friends of liquor said it should not be raised without it, and when the sills were leveled and the broadsides put together, without the knowledge of Deacon Crabtree and his friends a jug of rum was brought forward. The rum party drank, and then part of the barn was put up. But the temperance men refused to help, and the rum-drinkers could not raise the broadside. At first there was considerable coaxing, but they found that would not do; then some threatening and a little fighting took place, until after sunset, when it was announced that supper was ready. The friends of rum went in and ate their suppers; when they came out it was about dark, and soon they went home, carrying some of the timber with them. After the other party ate their suppers they, with lanterns, went on and raised the barn and got it up at about twelve o'clock at night. So the barn was raised without rum. An old gentleman, learning what was up, started about dark to go and help the temperance party raise the barn; and when about half a mile from the raising in the dark, a little before he met the rum party, he heard them throw down some of the timber which they had carried off with them. When the timber was missing, he told them what he heard, and soon some of the boys were after it and found it where he said it was.

All this was done on the Saturday before the Presidential election of November, 1832, and the next Monday both parties went to the election. Some of both parties voted for Andrew Jackson, and some of both voted for Henry Clay for President of the United States.

THE METHODISTS

at West Etna formed a class, with Captain Isaac Pierce as class leader, in 1831, and it has been constantly maintained since with good success. Quite a number of very prominent men have belonged to the denomination who have passed away, and there are none that belong to the class now who united with it when it first started. They have always held their meetings in a school-house. They have had several interesting revivals of religion, and their ministers have usually been very acceptable, proving themselves good servants for their Master, and enjoying the confidence of the community. They have never felt financially able to build themselves a house of worship, or at least they have never done so if they were able. They have always had some members who had quite a competence in this world's goods, and have been liberal in supporting the ministry; and, very likely, if they had felt the pressing need of a house, they would have erected one without much inconvenience as to funds with which to accomplish the object. Their congregation has usually been comfortably accommodated in a pleasant and good-sized school-house. They have had harmony among themselves and the unbounded good wishes of the community, which, perhaps, make up the want of a house of their own, a little larger and more convenient.

THE BAPTISTS.

In 1833 the Baptists held a protracted meeting under the direction of Rev. H. Hawes for twelve days in succession, and, as a result of it, more than fifty were baptized and united with the church, and more than twenty with the Methodists. In 1834 the Baptists began to build their present church edifice, which was completed the next year, and dedicated September 2, 1835. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Zenas Hall, from the text Ecclesiastes v. 1: "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God." The next day the pews were sold, but not for enough to pay the cost of the house, which left a debt on the building committee. It took many years to pay this and caused some complaint on their part against the church; but it was finally settled to their satisfaction, or at least they acquiesced in the settlement.

In 1836 Isaac Boynton, one of the members of the church, was ordained. He died in October, 1844. In 1837 Benjamin D. Small, another member, was ordained, who supplied the church a number of years after his ordination, and occasionally since. He now lives in Carmel, has been a faithful preacher, and has labored "on the square." Since 1840 the Rev. Daniel Stewart supplied the desk most of the time until 1870. Since then they have had students from Colby University, who have proved themselves workmen that need not be ashamed. One of them is laboring in the Far West, one is at Ellsworth, one at Augusta, and one at Monson. The three last are in Maine.

THE PATRIOTIC RECORD.

In 1861 the Rebellion broke out, and Etna was called upon for men. The town sent more than one hundred brave boys to the front, to save this nation, about thirty of whom lost their lives.

INDUSTRIAL AND OTHER PURSUITS.

This town having superior opportunities for farming, the industries of its people are almost exclusively agricultural. Three persons, however, keep general stores, and the Sovereigns of Industry have a store of their own at South Etna. One lady keeps a store for the sale of fancy goods. There are two smiths in the town, two carriage-makers, one cooper and one manufacturer of hoops, one carpenter, one butcher, and one insurance agent.

Industrial interests are amply guarded in this town by three societies—the Mt. Etna Grange, No. 36, Patrons of Industry; the Farmers and Mechanics' Club, meeting on the first and third Saturdays of the month; and the Sovereigns of Industry, at South Etna, meeting weekly. There is also the Morning Star Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars.

The district schools of the town number eight.

The officers of the town in 1880 were: H. H. Wheeler, S. P. Dennett, O. Kelley, Selectmen. L. C. Whitten, Town Clerk. Samuel P. Dennett, Treasurer. S. P. Dennett, Constable and Collector. Miss Jane E. Sanborn, School Supervisor. J. E. Friend, Joel A. Sanborn (Quorum), L. C. Whitten, J. C. Friend, Orlando Kelley (Trial), J. C. Friend (Dedimus), Justices.

GARLAND.

NOTES OF GEOGRAPHY, ETC.

Garland is bounded on the south by Exeter; Dover, in Piscataquis county, lies on the north; Charleston on the east; and Dexter on the west. It would be very nearly an even township of six miles on each side and thirty-six square miles, but for the irregularity observable in the line between it and Exeter which lengthens that line, the south boundary of Garland, about thirty rods, and shortens the west line to five and five-eighths miles.

The town is fifteen miles northwest of Bangor, across Glenburn, Kenduskeag, and Corinth. Its waters are not large, but are of respectable size. Pleasant Pond stretches east and west a mile above the southwest corner, itself about a mile in length, but rather narrow. It is one of a chain of ponds on the Kenduskeag Stream, with a very little one between it and the Mill Pond a half-mile distant, which reaches eastward nearly one and a half miles in a narrow sheet to Garland village, southwest of which is also a small pond. As the stream runs off hence to the southeast, there is a slight expansion of it half-way to Holt's Mills, but hardly enough to be called a lake or pond. From Holt's the stream makes a pretty straight dash for the corner of the town, where it goes into Exeter. It receives but two tributaries from the south in Garland, and they very small; but on the north eight affluents, all rising in the central belt of the town, and flowing altogether in Garland, enter it. The last of these on the eastward has a length of three miles, with a general north and south course. About a mile east of it flows another tributary, with two little branches in Garland, but which itself flows into Charleston.

Northwest of the central belt in which the Kenduskeag affluents rise are the headwaters of the main stream, which flows across the north of Dexter. The northernmost of the brooks makes a small lake about half a mile from the Piscataquis line. East of it are the beginning rivulets of several creeks that belong mainly to Piscataquis county. One tiny stream flows from Charleston for half a mile across the northeast angle of the town. Below the Kenduskeag, a mile to a mile and a half south of Garland post-office, are the heads of a little stream that shortly flows into Exeter.

The central and southern belts of Garland town are well settled; the northern more sparsely. The three post-offices of the town are altogether in the southern third of the town. Garland post-office is about half-way across the town from east to west, on the stage road from Dexter to Exeter, and an east and west road that, with a little jog in the village, runs across the town. At Garland are Congregational and Free-will Baptist churches, the Town House, School No. 3, and several mills, factories, and shops. Power is furnished by the Kenduskeag Stream, the village being at the eastern extremity of the long mill-pond. The village cemetery is a mile east, at the crossing of the north and south road. Nearly two miles westward, at the east end of Pleasant Pond, are the West Garland post-office and School No. 2. Holt's Mills post-office, with School No. 12, are in the southeast angle of the town, about a mile from the extreme corner, on the road southwest from Garland village into Corinth, and on to Bangor. School No. 7 is a mile west of Holt's Mills, with the Town Farm a little south of it. From them a road runs north five miles, intersecting near the county line a northwest and southeast road running from Charleston about five miles across the town to Dover. School No. 5, and the Methodist Episcopal church are on the former road, the latter at the crossing of an east and west road through the center of Garland, running clean across it to Dexter. Upon the eastern part of it are School No. 2 and a cemetery near it, School No. 8 exactly in the middle of the town, and another cemetery a little south of it on the westward. Passing this graveyard is a road through from Piscataquis to the mill pond a little west of Garland village, which forks a mile and a quarter below the county line, and runs southeastward into a north road leading to Garland post-office. Upon the cross-road is School No. 10, at the terminus of another highway going north and into Dover. The other north and south road passes straight through Garland post-office and southward and southeastward by School No. 7 out into Exeter. Through West Garland another southeastward road courses down from the central road to Dexter, starting near the town line, and also goes into Exeter. At the south end of the village it sends a road straight across to School No. 3, at the south end of Garland post-office. The shorter neighborhood roads have been laid out in Garland with usual number and convenience.

The north part of this township is traversed by a range of high and rugged hills. Near the east line of the town they are intersected by a deep ravine, known as "the Notch," which forms the most remarkable natural feature in the town. It is so conveniently situated as to seem, to piously inclined persons, to be specially designed by Providence as affording means of egress from that portion of Penobscot into Piscataquis county. A county and stage road has passed through the Notch for many years; and it was long expected that some railway line would find this most feasible route northward. That hope has probably become pretty nearly extinct by this time, as the Bangor & Piscataquis railway passes far to the eastward, and the extension of the Newport and Dexter iron road to Moosehead Lake will be laid to the westward.

LAND HISTORY.

The boundaries of the township which forms Garland were run as early as 1792, by Messrs. Ephraim Ballard and Samuel Weston. Six years thereafter—June 2, 1798—the General Court of Massachusetts passed a resolution to grant to the trustees of Williams College, in that State, two townships of land in the District of Maine, to be selected from any tracts in the district not otherwise appropriated. This township, which had been designated as No. 3, in the fifth range, north of the Waldo Patent, was accordingly selected as part of the grant. The same year the trustees made a conveyance of the entire township to a company, consisting of Levi Lincoln (from whom it took its first and plantation name of "Lincolntown"), Seth Hastings, Samuel Sanger, Sr., Calvin Sanger, and Elias Grant. The lines of lots or subdivisions within the township were run in 1800 by the famous old surveyor, Moses Hodsdon, assisted by Daniel Wilkins, David A. Gove, and a Mr. Shores. The first two lots surveyed were selected for settlement by Mr. Gove and a Mr. Wheeler.

COLONIZATION.

Notwithstanding this selection, Messrs. Gove and Wheeler did not at once settle upon their tracts. The primeval forests of Garland, indeed, were not broken, except to the slight extent made necessary by the movements of the surveyors, for two years afterwards. Then the ground was prospected, lots selected, and openings made by sixteen or eighteen persons from the western part of Maine and from New Hampshire, most of whom became permanent settlers. The first family, however, was brought in June 22, 1802, by Joseph Garland, from his old home at Salisbury, New Hampshire. He may be considered as, in some sense, the father of the town, since he brought it the first family and gave it his name. His family consisted of his wife and three children.

Isaac Wheeler and Josiah Bartlett were also among the earliest settlers.

By the year 1805 there were twelve families in the plantation, and about fifty voters were residents here when the town was incorporated six years later.

ORGANIZATION.

The original or plantation name of this town, as already stated, was Lincolntown, so called from the Hon. Levi Lincoln, one of the principal men among the co-proprietors.

On the 16th of February, 1811—the same day that Exeter and Charleston, in this county, were erected—Garland was incorporated as the one hundred and eighty-second town in the District, the name being changed in honor of the pioneer settler.

It is a fact of some interest that Eddington, Corinth, and Carmel—then of Hancock, but now of this county—were created the same year; and that, of the nine towns incorporated in the District during 1811, two-thirds now belong to Penobscot county. It seems to have been a good year for municipal organization in the south of this county.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

Lincolntown had a population of 236 in 1810. Garland had 275 in 1820, 621 in 1830, 1,065 in 1840, 1,247 in 1850, 1,498 in 1860, 1,306 in 1870, and 1,211 in 1880.

The number of votes in the town was 60 in 1812, 54 in 1820, 327 in 1860, 316 in 1870, and 343 in 1880.

The valuations for these years were $1,373.32 (with a tax of 22 cents per $100), $24,121, $212,531, $312,263, and $331,600.

SUNDRY HISTORIC NOTES.

The Rev. John Sawyer, who was an active and useful agent in the employ of the Maine Missionary Society from 1810 to 1850, in promoting education, morality, and religion throughout the State, made his home chiefly in this town. He died, however, in Bangor, on the 14th of October, 1858, at the remarkable age of one hundred and three years. His activity in good words and works had continued until he was past his ninetieth year.

A Congregational society, known by the name of the Garland church, but including members from Foxcroft, Sangerville, and Dexter, was gathered the 1st of March, 1810, by the Rev. Messrs. John Sawyer, Mighill Blood, and Hezekiah May. It has enjoyed the long pastorate of the Rev. Peter B. Thayer from 1847 to this time—nearly thirty-five years.

The Free Baptists of Garland have the services of Elder C. C. Foster in their pulpit. The Methodist charge was temporarily vacant at last accounts.

The town is well supplied with schools. The Garland High School was organized in 1848. The first school in the township was taught in 1806, at the house of the pioneer Joseph Garland, by William Mitchell.

The first saw-mill in the town was set going in the fall of 1802, the first year of settlement. There are now two saw and shingle mills, one saw, grist, and shingle mill, one saw and grist mill, one shingle machine, one machinery and carding mill, one planing mill, and one planing and sawing mill in town.

Frame buildings, as might reasonably be argued from the date of establishment of the saw-mill, began to appear in Garland as early as 1803, when several were erected. It is now one of the best built towns in the county.

Garland has nine merchants of different classes, one boot and shoe factory, one harness-maker, one carriage-maker, one cabinet-maker, one maker of egg-cases, and three smiths. There are two resident physicians, both allopathic. There is also one hotel, the Tremont House.

The societies of Garland, not religious, are the Garland Grange No. 26, Patrons of Husbandry, one of the earliest formed in the State; and the Garland Temperance Society.

OFFICERS IN 1881.

L. O. Oakes, Garland; West Garland, J. C. Lawrence; Holt's Mills, Rosilla Holt, Postmasters; A. M. Haskell, A. H. Hathaway, Henry Merrill, Selectmen; G. S. Clark, Town Clerk; F. J. Gerry, Treasurer; F. J. Gerry, Constable and Collector; Charles Whitting, E. S. Coan, Miss Matilda Haskell, School Committee; Samuel Skillin, Moses Page, Thomas K. Holt (Quorum); A. M. Haskell, Charles E. Merriam (Trial), Justices.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following two notices are from the Bowdoin College Roll of Honor, in the Adjutant-General's reports during the late war:

Class of 1861—William A. Hobbie, born in Garland, October, 1837; served in the Army of the Tennessee under General Sherman, in the Sixteenth Iowa.

Leander O. Merriam, born in Garland, May, 1843; left in his junior year; and returned to finish his course in the next class; Sergeant Major Thirty-First Maine; was wounded.

Peter Thayer was born in the town of Wrentham, Worcester county, Massachusetts, where he lived until he married and then moved to Alstead, New Hampshire. He lived there about twenty-five years and then moved to the town of Acworth, where he remained until about seventy years of age, when he went to Keysville, New York, where he died. His wife was Abigail Blake, born in Wrentham, Worcester county, Massachusetts. The Rev. Peter Blake Thayer is the seventh child in the family, and was born in the town of Alstead, New Hampshire, February 29, 1816. While a youth he worked at farming, and when he became older pursued a course of studies for the purpose of becoming a clergyman, and in the year 1848 he was ordained and has since that time been the pastor of the Conly Street church, of this place. He was a graduate from the seminary at Bangor in the year 1847. The names of the other children of Peter Thayer were: Lucy, deceased; Nancy, deceased; Fisher, Warren, Abigail, dead; Hulda, Belinda. Rev. Peter B. Thayer was married to Miss Mary F. Kent in the year 1847, and has one son, Harry B., married to Miss Eva Sawyer, and has one child, a daughter. Mr. Thayer's wife was a daughter of Amaria Kent and Lucy Phelps Kent.

Moses B. Foster was born in the town of Gray, Cumberland county, Maine, October 17, 1812, where he has passed his life thus far. He was married in 1836 to Miss E. A. Benson, who was also born in Gray and still shares his life. Their eldest son, Rev. Caleb C. Foster, was born April 12, 1837, and during his early youth worked at masonry. As he attained towards his majority he evinced a desire to study with the object of becoming a minister in the Free-will Baptist church, which high calling he now follows. He finished his studies at the theological school at New Hampton, New Hampshire. Other children of Moses B. Foster were S. J., deceased; Samuel H.; Emma A.; Hannah E.; Dr. A. M.; Eliza E. Samuel H. was a member of Company K, commanded by Captain Furbish, and served throughout the war, returning unharmed. Rev. Caleb C. Foster was married July 14, 1869, to Miss Annah Flanders, daughter of Ezekiel and Rosilla K. Glidden Flanders, by whom he has three children living, and three deceased: Charles E.; Frank W., deceased; Emma L., deceased; Frederick W., deceased; Laura A., and George A.

Samuel Coan was born in 1813, in Castine, Maine, and when six years of age accompanied his parents to Exeter, where he resided thirty-three years. He then removed to Garland, where he now lives. His wife was Hannah M. Skinner, who was born in Brewer. They were married in 1836, and she died in Garland in 1857, aged forty-two years. Mr. Coan married for a second wife Ann Sophia Skinner, who is now living, aged sixty-seven years. Elisha S. Coan was the third child in the family, and was born in Exeter in 1843. The remaining children of Samuel Coan were: Leander S., Adelaide, Fred C., Alfred S., Mary A., and Clara S. Elisha S. Coan worked at farming when a youth, and at the age of nineteen enlisted and served three years in the late war, returning unharmed. He then studied medicine and became a practicing physician. He was married in 1871 to Mary A. Swett, daughter of Noah and Nancy Wheeler Swett, by whom he has four children—Newton G., Marion, Anna E., and an infant. Dr. Coan was Supervisor of Schools at Bradford one year, and is now a member of the School Committee of Garland the second year.

The father of Daniel E. Knight was born in Parsonsfield in 1816, and when five years of age came with his parents to Garland, where he yet lives. His wife was Lydia A. Johnson, also born in Parsonsfield in the year 1824, to whom he was married in 1843. Daniel E. Knight, the only son, was born in Garland in 1864, and was married December 13, 1874, to Angie E. Page, of Charlestown, Maine, daughter of Calvin D. and Sarah E. Page. To Mr. and Mrs. Knight has been born one son, Harold E., now five years of age. Mr. Knight was brought up on a farm, but is now engaged in mercantile pursuits.

The father of George S. Clark was born in the town of Old Clinton, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1810. When about thirty-five years of age he removed to Corinna, and eight years later to Garland, where he died in 1866. He was by trade a boot and shoe-maker. His wife was Abigail Weeks, born in Old Clinton, and married to Mr. Clark in 1830; she died in 1835. George S. Clark was the oldest child in the family, and was born in 1832. The remaining children were: Mary Ann, James H., Sarah, Joseph, and Ellen. George S. was married September 20, 1860, to Susan H. Haskell, daughter of Bildad A. and Rebecca (Mayhew) Haskell. Mr. Clark is by trade a boot and shoe-maker. He is now Town Clerk, which office he has held for eighteen years. In 1877 he was a member of the State Legislature.

The father of Llewellyn O. Oaks was born in Sangerville in 1809, where he lived until a young man, when he moved to Cambridge, and some ten years later to Parkman, where he remained but five years; he then removed to Garland, where he now resides. He was married in Wellington to Lucy Ann E. Follett, in 1829. Llewellyn was the third child, and was born in Cambridge in 1834. His business has been farming and merchandizing. Other children were: Melvina E. and Amelia A. Llewellyn O. Oaks was married to Mary J. Adams, December 21, 1875, and has had three children—Maud B., Guy M. (deceased), and an infant, Claude. Mrs. Oaks is a daughter of Isaac and Lydia (Bryant) Adams.

Arthur B. Haskell was born in Garland, December 26, 1846, being the fourth child in the family. His brothers and sisters were Ellen M., Charles W., Woodbury T., Annie E., Samuel W., Sarah H., John, John (second), and Wilson. Arthur B. Haskell was married to Rachel D. Gregory, daughter of Edward H. and Elizabeth (Mayhew) Gregory, on the 5th day of June, 1876. They have one child. Mr. Haskell is engaged in the manufacture of furniture, coffins, caskets, etc. His father was born in Garland in 1822, and still resides here. He is a carriage manufacturer. His wife was Mary B. Sargent, who was born in Searsport about the year 1822.

Lebbeus Oak was born in Boscawen, New Hampshire, December 13, 1821, and when five years of age was brought to Exeter, and after three years to Garland, where he yet resides, engaged in harness manufacturing. He was married to Sarah E. Merriam in 1844, and has four children: Henry L., unmarried; Ora, married to Miss Bertha Millett, and has no children; Addie S., unmarried; Orinan, married to Belle Haskell, and has one child. Mrs. Oak's parents were Josiah and Sarah (Hill) Merriam, both deceased.

Abel Gould was born in Unity, Maine, in 1816. When sixteen years of age he removed to Corinth, and a few years later to Charlestown, where he was married, and where he died in 1869, March 16. His wife was Catharine Smith, born in Belmont, Maine, in 1822, and who survives her husband. Their children were Lorenzo, Gershom L., Albert S., Esther J., Daniel W., Abel W., Francis H., Freland W., Katie E., and Georgie A. Albert S. Gould, the third child, was born in Charlestown, May 5, 1846, and was married March 1, 1871, to Sarah A. Gould, of Dixmont, daughter of Joshua and Sarah (Davis) Gould.

Elizur Burnham was born at Scarboro, Maine, February 22, 1809. When about twenty years of age he moved to Garland, where he now resides. He married Matilda P. Buxton, of Albion, in 1832, and she died in thirteen months. In 1837 he married Mary Ann Ridout, who died in 1863, aged forty-seven years. Their children were Matilda P., deceased; Mary W., married Lyman E. Richardson, who enlisted under Colonel Charles Jameson, in the Second Maine Regiment in the Rebellion; served as Second Lieutenant of Company E three months, was wounded at the first battle of Ball Run, and died from the effect of his wounds the 4th of August, 1861; his remains were brought home a year later and buried by the volunteer company of the town. The third child of Elizur Burnham was Charles F.; then followed Mary W., who married Mr. Richardson, since deceased. His brothers were Stephen B., Chauncey S., and Christopher C. Mrs. Richardson is a member of the Freewill Baptist church, with which she has been connected for twenty-eight years. The father of Mr. Richardson, Daniel Richardson, was born at Rumford, Maine, May 13, 1797, and is still living. His wife was Lydia A. Tyler, who died at Augusta, Maine.

David Fogg was born in Deerfield, New Hampshire, in the year 1804, and moved from there when he was seventeen years of age and settled in the town of Garland, where he now resides, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife was Emeline H. Norcross, born in the town of Charlestown, Penobscot county, Maine, where she lived until nineteen years of age, and was married in the year 1832. After marriage they settled in Garland, where she lived until she died at the age of sixty-two years. Jason Thayer Fogg was born in Garland the 24th of August, 1847. While a youth he worked at farming, since his marriage at harness manufacturing, and for the last two or three years in manufacturing egg carriers. Their children were Martha Ann, Lydia N., Granville W., Jennette A., and Albert D. Jason T. Fogg was married the 24th day of April, 1871, to Rosa B. Young, and by this union has one child, a daughter, Geitruide E. His wife's father's name was Alvin P. Young; her mother's maiden name Lydia N. Hanson.

John Jackman was born in Massachusetts in 1784, and in the year 1806 he moved to Garland, where he passed the rest of his life and died in 1868, at the age of eighty-four years. His wife was Sally Legrow, who was born in Bangor, and was there married. She died in the year 1839. Justus H. Jackman was the third child, and was born in Garland in the year 1826. He was raised on a farm, and when a young man learned the blacksmith trade, at which he has since worked. Other children in the family were Patience, John, James, Sally, Joseph, Nancy, and Jacob. Justus H. was married in 1847 to Jane G. Field, daughter of William and Jane (Goodwin) Field, by whom he has had seven children, three of whom are now living.

Miss Susan Oak Curtis and Miss Sarah A. Curtis are contributors of some note to various papers and magazines. Their father is a native of Bristol, Maine, and was born in 1804. When about twenty-two years of age he moved to Garland, where he has since resided. He married Louisa S. Angove in February, 1831. She was born in Bangor in 1831, and was married at Brownville. Their children were George, Jr., Charles, Julia H., Susan, Sarah A., and William A. Mr. Curtis was a member of the State Legislature in 1850; has never aspired to local office and has never been elected to such offices.

The father of Albert S. Bachelder was born in the town of Exeter, Maine, in the year 1789, and lived there some fifteen or twenty years, when he moved to Garland and lived there until his death, in the year 1868, at the age of seventy-nine years. His wife was Rebecca Hatch, who was born in the town of Cambridge, Maine, in the year 1812. She died in Garland in the year 1850 aged about thirty-eight years. By this union they had four children, all of whom are living. Albert S. was born in the town of Garland in the year 1843. He was the second child in the family. The names of his brothers and sisters were: Edgar S. Bachelder; Albert, Lonzo F.; Thomas G. Albert S. Bachelder was married the 30th of September, 1863, to Miss Mary Rand, and by this union has two children—Nellie L. and Annie S. His business through life has been that of a millman and farmer. At present he is Superintendent of the Town Farm, and has been for two years. His wife's father's name was John Rand; her mother's Laura Jumper.

The father of Horace Lester Gordon was born in the town of Garland in the year 1808, June 6, where he is still living at the age of seventy-three years. His wife was Abigail Card, born in the town of Bowdoinham, Maine, on the 9th of September, 1818, and is still living at the age of sixty-four years. They were married in the year 1835, and by this union have had three children, two of whom are now living. Horace, the oldest child, was born in Garland, June 28, 1837. His business is that of machinist, which he is now carrying on at this town in all its various branches. The remaining children are: Pearl B.; Etta. Horace Lester Gordon was married to Caroline Greeley, July 3, 1860, and by this union has had four children—May L., Walter L., Ralph P., Clifton P., who reside at home. His wife's father's name was Noah Greeley; mother, Eliza Robinson.

William Sloan Haskell was born in Garland September 24, 1814, and has always lived here. He is the fifth child in his father's family, and was married to Ruth F. Lawerano in the year 1837. She died in the year 1844. By this union they had four children: Ruth Ellen (dead), married to Sanford R. Oaks; William H., died in the army; he enlisted in the year 1861 in the Fourth Wisconsin Regiment, and served about three years; he was wounded at the taking of Port Hudson, and died aged about twenty-three years. Augusta H., married to George W. Handy, and has two children—Una H., and Georgie Ellem; Bennett A., enlisted in the Second Maine Cavalry in the year 1863, died of disease at Pensacola, Florida, February, 1865. Mr. Haskell was married a second time—to Abby Folansburg Fales—October 25, 1855, and by this union they had four children, three of whom are now living: Mary A., died in infancy; Joseph A., May A., and Jennie A., all living at home. His wife's father's name was John Fales, her mother's name Sally Carlton. Mr. Haskell has held some of the town offices; was Selectman for two years—1854 and 1855.

The father of Jacob W. Haskell was born in New Gloucester, Maine, March 29, 1779. When about twenty-three years of age he came to Garland, where he died March 4, 1870, aged ninety-one years. He was by trade a cooper, but paid his attention to farming principally. He served a short time in the War of 1812. His wife was Sally Merry, born in Rutland, Massachusetts, in 1782, June 23d. She came to Garland when twenty-four years of age, and was there married. She died July 11, 1857. Jacob W. Haskell was the sixth child, and was born in Garland October 25, 1817. The other members of the family were: Daniel M., John R. Nathan A., Harry L., Sarah E. Jacob W. Haskell was married March 10, 1842, to Mary T. Bates, and had ten children: Martha E., died in infancy; Sarah E., married John H. Doe, and has one child; Joseph S., died in infancy; Samuel B., married Georgie Delano, and has three children; Thomas B., unmarried; Luanca A., unmarried; J. Fremont, unmarried; George W., unmarried; Mary Lizzie, unmarried; M. Mabel, unmarried. Mrs. Haskell died, and for a second wife Mr. Haskell married Mrs. Anna Elkins, November 13, 1877. He has held several township offices, but has not been a place-seeker.

Moses Gordon was born in Hopkinton, New Hampshire, February 15, 1780, and remained there until about twenty-five years of age, when he removed to Garland, where he died September 22, 1877. His wife was Sarah Silver, also born in Hopkinton, March 8, 1779. She died May 17, 1857. Albert G. Gordon was born in Garland, December 12, 1820. The other children were: Savilla C., Amos G., Horace H., Samuel S., James P., and Moses G. Albert G. Gordon was married May 1, 1856, to Caroline A. Blanchard, daughter of Eben and Ann (Silver) Blanchard. They have no family.

Constant Southard, a native of New Hampshire, settled in Corinna, where he died in 1863. His wife was Sally S. Hicks, by whom he had eleven children. William Southard was born in Corinna in 1809. His wife was Maria F. Ambrose, by whom he has seven children. Merritt Southard was born in Corinna in 1843; graduated from the Brunswick Medical College in the class of 1870, since which time he has been in practice. His wife was Mary Gregory, of Corinth. He has a large practice and is well known and respected by a large circle of friends.

Lyndon Oak is a son of Benjamin H. Oak, who came to Exeter in 1826. He was born in Winchester, New Hampshire, in 1775, and died in Garland about 1843. His wife was Hannah Smith. Other members of the family were S. H. Oak, H. L. Oak, Llewellyn Oak, Lyndon Oak, E. S. Oak. Lyndon Oak was born in Boscawen, New Hampshire, and came to Penobscot county with his father when ten years of age. He has since that time lived in Garland. In 1846 he engaged at merchandizing, which business he has continued until the present time. He has by enterprise and industry accumulated a fine property.

John Whiting was born in the town of Hartland, Maine, March 5, 1820, where he lived about fifteen years, when he moved to Garland, Maine, where he lived until his death October 15, 1880, at the age of sixty years and seven months. His business through life was a farmer. His wife was Tryphosa E. Stewart, born in the town of Alton, New Hampshire, September 30, 1821, where she lived about four years, and with her parents moved to the town of Garland, where she now resides at the age of sixty years. Charles H., the fourth child in the family, was born in Garland, March 15, 1850. His business is farming and teaching. The names of his brothers and sisters are Mary J., Fannie E., Andrew Bryce, and Lizzie H. Charles H. Whiting was married March 14, 1877, to Miss Emma J. Brown, and by this union have been born two children—Blanche M. and an infant child. Mrs. Whiting's father's name was James Brown; her mother, Mary R. Seavey, who lives with her daughter, Mrs. Whiting. Mr. Whiting has held no State or county offices, but is now and has been for four years one of the School Committee of the town.

Henry Morrill settled in Garland township in 1857. He married Margaret Chandler, and they have three children. His life has been devoted to farming, and he is one of the leading men of Garland. He is now one of the Selectmen of the town, and is respected by all who know him.

B. A. Haskell was one of the first settlers in Garland, and a prominent man of the town. His business was that of a blacksmith, and he held the position of captain of militia previous to his death in 1869. His wife's maiden name was Rebecca Mayhew. Of their children four are still living—Susan H. (Clark), Garland; Frances K. (Mitchell), Minneapolis, Minnesota; Jacob M., Boston, and Andrew M. Andrew, the subject of this sketch, was born in Garland in 1819. At the age of fourteen he learned the trade of mason, and followed it for nine years. In 1842 he commenced the business of carriage-making and repairing, which he is still engaged in. For twenty-one years he held the office of Selectman in this town. He married Mary B. Sargent, of Belfast, and they have seven children. He was engaged in the Aroostook war; and in the years 1870-71 was a member of the State Legislature, proving himself a valuable addition to that body.

Leonard Hathaway was born in Massachusetts in 1802, and settled in Maine in 1809. He was ordained as a Free-will Baptist minister in 1826, and preached for eight years in different parts of the State. He was one of those too rare men whose whole object is to do good to his fellow-men. He married Dorcas Harvey, daughter of Jonathan Harvey, and died in 1877. Of his children four are living—Laura A. (Mason), Hannah H. (Davis), Leonard C., and Addie H. For his second wife he married Mary A. Stoner, by whom he had three sons, one of whom is the Hon. Henry H. Hathaway. This whole family are worthy representatives of America's noblemen.

Zebulon Knight was born in the town of Parsonfield, Maine, in the year 1803, on the 21st day of June. He came to Garland in the year 1825, and lived here until he died August 8, 1865, at the age of sixty-two years, one month, and eighteen days. His business through life was farming. His wife was May Staples, born in Kennebunk, Maine, in 1801. They were married in the year 1825, and she died April 25, 1870, aged sixty-eight years, three months, and twenty-one days. Zebulon Knight was the second child in the family, and was born in Garland, April 19, 1828. His business through life was that of farmer, shoemaker, and hotel proprietor.⁴ His brothers and sisters are Joseph T., Hanniel P., Sarah

J., and Mary Ann. Zebulon Knight was married August 17, 1851, to Harriet J. Barker, and by this union they had three children: Franklin P., Charles S., and Freddie, died in infancy. They have one adopted daughter, Sarah, aged fourteen years.

Jonathan Farrar Crowell was born in the town of Exeter, Maine, November 17, 1830, where he lived until he was nineteen years of age. He then worked on the Penobscot river one year, and then went to Pennsylvania and worked about four years, after which he moved to Garland, where he now resides at the age of fifty-one years. His business has been lumbering, milling, and farming. Mr. Crowell owns the mills at Garland Centre. He has good substantial farm buildings. He was first married to Hannah Farrar Rand, daughter of John Rand and Laura (Jumper) Rand. She died and he was married to his second wife Hannah F. Skillin October 6, 1867, and by this union has one child, Hannah A. Crowell, age twelve years. Mrs. Crowell's father's name was Samuel Skillin, her mother's Elizabeth Plummer.

John Davis was born in the town of Lee, New Hampshire. His wife was Hannah Hanson, born at Lee, New Hampshire. Josiah Davis, their son, was married the 26th day of November, 1848, to Harriet M. Walker, and by this union has four children: Isabell F. Davis, married to Arthur J. Ricker, Dover, Maine, now living in Cochituate, Massachusetts, and has one child, Albert W.; James H. Davis, married to Ida M. Chandler Foxboro, Massachusetts, now resides at Cochituate, Massachusetts, one child named Grace A.; Hattie M., not married but resides at home; Charles L., not married, and resides at home. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are members of the Free-will Baptist church, as is the daughter who remains at home. The eldest daughter is a member of the church where she resides.

Russell Murdock was born in Townshend, Vermont, in 1801, and in 1829 came to Garland, where he still resides. He married Eleanor Bartlett, who was born in Garland, July 3, 1811, and died November 1, 1844. Their children were as follow: Maria, wife of Freeman Bacon; Lydia, wife of Richard Henry; Abby and Sarah B., not living; Eleanor and Henry. The subject of this sketch, Henry Murdock, was married January 3, 1866, to Emily J. Fosnett of Northfield, Massachusetts, by whom he has six children, all living, viz: Percy R., aged twelve years; Willis B., ten; Harry E., eight; Grace E., six; Blanche A., four; Arthur H., one year and a half. Mr. Murdock has been a member of the Congregational church for seventeen years, and his wife has been a member for ten years. He has a good farm of 140 acres, with substantial buildings and one of the best orchards in the county.

Joseph True's father was born at Deerfield, New Hampshire, May 10, 1762, and moved to Garland in 1820, where he followed farming until his death March 2, 1839. He married Sarah Batchelder, who was born at Deerfield, New Hampshire, March 12, 1776, and died April 10, 1842. Their children were Betsey and Abraham, deceased; Sally, Mary, Nancy, and Joseph, still living. Joseph, the fourth child, was born in Deerfield, June 18, 1801. July 1, 1830, he married Eliza L. Adams, and has had eight children, three of whom are living, viz: Benza, married Sarah F. Jones, and has five children; Joseph L., married Ellen M. Abbott, and has one child; Mary D., resides at home. The names of those not now living are: Sarah P., who died June 12, 1851; Charlotte N., who died October 10, 1852; Mary E., who died September 13, 1841; Lucy, who died November 7, 1851; Eliza A., who died August 29, 1872. Mr. True married a second wife July 25, 1855; she is not now living, having died September 16, 1880. Mr. True was a member of the State Legislature in 1828-29. He was Selectman in 1829, and held the position of Town Treasurer one year. He is a member of the Congregational church, and lives on a fine farm of about seventy acres near the village.

Benjamin Otis was born in New Hampshire November 24, 1784, and died in Garland January 15, 1863. His wife was Rosa Hussey, born in New Hampshire October 4, 1791, and died in Garland June 3, 1868. Joel W. Otis was the ninth child, and was born in Fairfield, Maine, November 10, 1824. In 1840 he removed to Garland, where he yet resides. He was married November 24, 1847, to Francina A. Pooler, and had three children: Frank P., unmarried, resides at Norway, a lawyer; Frances I., married William K. Holt; Joel W., resides at home, single. The remaining children of Benjamin Otis are: Sally N., Cynthia A., Lydia R., Abigail P., Mary D., Benya P. (deceased), Reuben H., George W., Benya P., second (deceased), and Rosa C.

The father of Moses N. Parker was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1783, where he remained until about thirty years of age, when he moved to Garland, where he lived until 1850. His wife was Nancy Bigelow, also born in Worcester in 1790; she died October 10, 1875, aged eighty-five years. Their son, Moses N. Parker, was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, October 16, 1826, and lived there until about five years old, when his father and mother came to Garland, where he has since lived. He was married August 26, 1862, to Miss Sarah Oliver, of Garland, and has no family. His brothers and sisters were: Elizabeth; Amasa, fell at the battle of Vera Cruz in the Mexican war; Sarah, deceased when young; Sarah, second; George, Hannah, Mary Ann, and Austin. The parents of Mrs. Parker were William and Sarah (Bicknell) Oliver, both deceased.

GLENBURN.

Glenburn is one of the townships which immediately adjoin Bangor. It is bounded on the north by Hudson, on the east by Pushaw Lake, beyond which lies Oldtown, and by Orono; on the south by Bangor and Hermon; and on the west by Levant and Kenduskeag. It thus touches two towns on every side except the north, yet it is not a large town. It is of the regular township length, and its southernmost border lacks only about fifty rods of the same; but this width is suddenly narrowed by the invasion of Kenduskeag town two miles above the south town line, and the width above this corner is but four and a fourth miles. The town is thus composed of a central and northern section, nearly in the form of a square, four and a quarter miles wide by four miles long; and a parallelogram forming the south part, two miles wide by a little less than six miles long, giving Glenburn an area of less than twenty-nine square miles, or more than seven less than that of a full township. The south line of the town is shortened by the pushing nearly half a mile of the Orono boundary westward of the Oldtown line.

A large part of the eastern boundary is covered by the waters of Pushaw Lake. Beyond the narrower portion of the lake, in the northeast corner of the town, is perhaps half a square mile of land, which, however, has no settlers upon it. South of that part of the lake in Glenburn runs a little more than a mile and a half of the boundary between Orono and Glenburn. About four and two-thirds miles of the length of Pushaw lie in this town, but no great width of it; and the total of the Glenburn waters of the lake is hardly two square miles. This sheet will receive more particular description where we deal with Oldtown, in which most of it lies. It has a singular paucity of tributaries in this town, the only ones noted on the map being the Gibbs Brook, of about two miles' length, which flows in from the east nearly half-way across the town, and another in the southeast part of the town, reaching the lake at almost its lowest point in Glenburn.

The Kenduskeag Stream has about four and a half miles' length of course in the town. From Kenduskeag town the river dips down into the narrow part of Glenburn, but only a little way, making an arc of less than a mile before returning to Kenduskeag, whence it flows in a northeast course across the angle of that town into Glenburn, preserving this course but a short distance before it bends to the southeast and then to the south, making its way, after a course of less than four miles, into Bangor, about a mile from the northwest corner of that city. About one-fourth of a mile after its first appearance in Glenburn, just as it makes a sharp bend to the eastward, it receives from the southwest the Little Kenduskeag Stream, a very crooked body of water flowing across the southeast part of Levant, and for less than a mile in the lower northwest angle of Glenburn. A little below the mouth of this a small tributary, rising near the south line of the town, also reaches the Kenduskeag. Meadow Brook heads in the southern edge of Hudson, enters this town at the upper northwest corner, and flows a little less than a mile to its junction with a similar stream also coming from the Hudson border, the two forming the Lancaster Brook. A little below the junction an affluent of about the same length comes in from the eastward. The Tozier Brook heads upon the Kenduskeag line, a mile and two-thirds south of the north west corner of Glenburn, and flows southwestward two miles to a union with the Lancaster Brook, in a channel of one mile's length, by which their waters flow southward to the Kenduskeag Stream. One and a half miles from the south the stream receives another but petty tributary, nearly opposite its mouth another on the west, and a mile south of that a very small rivulet. These are the waters of Glenburn.

Considerable tracts in this town, away from the high roads and larger waters, are still unsettled. The principal highways are two that come in from the direction of Bangor, less than half a mile apart from the town line, and running in a general north direction to a junction one mile below the north line, to which the westernmost of them continues and goes into Hudson. On this road is Glenburn Centre, or Glenburn post-office, where the Town Hall and School No. 4 are situated. It is at the crossing of the main east and west road of the town, which starts from the road near Pushaw Lake, a third of a mile below School No. 2, and runs due west to nearly a mile beyond Glenburn Centre, where it angles to the southward and shortly strikes the Kenduskeag Stream, whose north bank it follows into Kenduskeag. North of this there is no east and west road of length in the town, nor any south of it traversing more than a small part of the breadth of the town. Nearly two miles south of Glenburn Centre, and a little above School No. 5, a short route connects the two north and south highways, and runs a little beyond the easternmost to one of two short roads that, with the Orono town line, make pretty nearly a triangle. At the eastern road-crossing is School No. 1. School No. 3 is near the junction of the north and south roads, in the north of the town. A cemetery is on the road a mile east of Glenburn. West and south of the Kenduskeag three diagonal lines of road come in quite close together from the Bangor way, and run across the town, the northeasternmost of them going out exactly at the southeast corner of Kenduskeag, and the other two uniting at West Glenburn, crossing the Kenduskeag, and following up its left bank to the Kenduskeag post-office. At School No. 1, midway between West Glenburn and the town line, the westernmost of these roads pushes off a highway due west and then northwest into Levant, from which a short road, with School No. 7 and a cemetery upon it, connects with another diagonal line crossing almost at the extreme southwest corner of Glenburn. West Glenburn is but a petty hamlet, without a post-office.

Notwithstanding the extent of the waters of Glenburn, there is no water-power, and so comparatively little manufacturing in the town. The soil is generally favorable, and the surface for the most part level; so the population of the town is largely given to agriculture. There is, however, a cheese factory in Glenburn, organized about 1873; one moccasin-maker, one smith and carriage-maker, one smith, one mason, and a number of carpenters, charcoal-burners, and makers of flour-barrel hoops. One hotel, the Pushaw House, is kept; and the Patrons of Husbandry have a general Grange store.

Glenburn was settled about 1806, but not incorporated as a town until January 29, 1822, when it took the name Dutton, from Judge Samuel E. Dutton, of Bangor, who had a large interest in it, and of whom an entertaining sketch will be found in Judge Godfrey's chapter on the Bench and Bar, in the first division of this book. It existed under this name for a little more than fifteen years, when, March 18, 1837, it took its present name by the requisite resolve of the Legislature.

The population of the Dutton tract in 1810 was 89, and 207 in 1820. Glenburn had 664 people in 1840, 905 in 1850, 741 in 1860, 720 in 1870, and 655 in 1880.

The number of polls in Glenburn in 1860 was 171, with estates $115,453; 1870, polls 166, estates $143,313; 1880, polls 175, estates $138,632.

The officers of the town in 1880 were: Horace Pendexter, J. B. Gibbs, J. S. Staples, Selectmen; John F. Tolman, Town Clerk; John F. Tolman, Treasurer; Wingate E. Gibbs, Joseph Parks, Constables; John B. Gibbs, School Supervisor; L. Marston, John M. Cort, William Goodwin (Quorum), Justices.

William Goodwin is Postmaster of Glenburn.

The associations of Glenburn are altogether agricultural—the Pushaw Grange, No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, and the Glenburn Farmers' Club. There is not now an organized religious society in the town. The Nelson Dingley Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, named from ex-Governor Dingley, now editor of the Lewiston Journal and member of Congress, and a prominent temperance advocate, subsisted until recently.

SETTLERS' NOTES.

Mr. Lemuel Worster is a son of George Worster, who came to Glenburn from Berwick, Maine, in 1805. His father was George Worster, born January 25, 1775. He married Mercy Tibbitts, born May 1, 1774. When he came to Penobscot county he first settled in Kenduskeag, formerly Levant. From there he moved to Glenburn, then called Dutton, and from there moved to the place where Mr. Lemuel Worster now lives. He was a farmer and lumberman. George and Mary Worster had eleven children, seven sons and four daughters—Joshua, Martha, Mary, Daniel, Lemuel, George, Isaac, Thomas H., Charity, Solomon, and Mercy. Mr. Worster died August 16, 1828, and Mrs. Worster died October 19, 1861. Lemuel Worster was born August 14, 1805, in Kenduskeag, then Levant. He has always lived in this vicinity since he became of age. Mr. Worster married, for his first wife, Abiah B. Mason, by whom he had ten children, viz: Mary E., George W., Jonas M., Lemuel N., Henry T., Abiah A., David S., Clara A., Harriet N., Franklin P. Mrs. Worster died November 4, 1864. Mr. Worster married, for his second wife, Mrs. Lucy H. Stilkey (nee Lucy Page), daughter of Philemon Page, of Freeport, Maine, who lived also in Bangor. Mr. Worster has followed the business of farming and lumbering. He was for seven years a captain of the militia. He has served as Selectman of his town. His place is in the western part of Glenburn, and contains sixty-eight acres.

Mr. Stephen T. Vickery, of Glenburn, is a son of Jonathan Vickery, of Gorham, Maine. He came to Glenburn in 1827, and settled in the neighborhood where Mr. Stephen Vickery now lives. He had fourteen children, viz: Benjamin, now in Bangor; Martha, deceased; David, deceased; Stephen; Lewis, deceased; Joel, now of Glenburn; Hannah, deceased; Lydia, deceased; Jonathan, of Exeter, Maine; Lydia; Joseph, deceased; Hiram, deceased; Eliza A., deceased; Albion, deceased, and Leander. Mr. Vickery always followed farming. He died in 1846, and Mrs. Vickery in 1855. Stephen T. Vickery was born in Unity, Maine, June 25, 1806. He came to Glenburn with his father when he was about twenty-one years old. Here he has since lived, following farming and lumbering for a business. He married Betsey Gibbs, daughter of Elisha Gibbs, of Glenburn. They have had nine children, viz: Ellen; Charles, deceased; Edward, of Glenburn; Wilmot, deceased in army; Susan, deceased wife of Hollis Newcomb, of Bangor; Mintie; Eben, of Glenburn; Charles, deceased, and Olive. Mr. Vickery formerly held office in town. He is now one of the successful farmers of Glenburn.

Mrs. Lillian Tibbitts, widow of the late William Tibbitts, of Glenburn, is a daughter of Jonathan and Sarah Hunt (nee Sarah Vickery). Her mother died when she was but two years of age, and her father in 1879. She was brought up by her grandfather Vickery. Her father, Jonathan Hunt, was a farmer, and lived in Bradford. Lillian married William Tibbitts, of Carmel, Maine. He was a surveyor of lumber, and worked in Bangor, where he lived. He died in July, 1877. Mrs. Tibbitts has one daughter, Lillie May, now six years of age. She makes her home with her grandmother in Glenburn.

Captain Horace N. Wentworth was born in Orrington, November 29, 1840. He is a son of George W. and Jane M. Wentworth. For several years Captain Wentworth followed the sea, and was a successful navigator. He married Lovinia D. Atwood, daughter of Captain Warren Atwood, November 23, 1864, and resided in Orington until 1873, where his wife died, leaving one child—Mary J. He came to Glenburn in 1873, where he married Susan G. Ridley, widow of Silas C. Ridley, and eldest daughter of Austin and Louisa Edson, July 9, 1873. They have one son, George Edson Wentworth, born July 26, 1875. Captain Wentworth lives on the farm where Mrs. Edson was born. His family consists of himself, his wife, and two children, and Austin and Louisa Edson, father and mother of Mrs. Wentworth.

Austin Edson was born in Randolph, Vermont, March 13, 1805; was a son of Simeon Edson of that town, whose ancestors came from England and settled on the banks of the Connecticut River. He was the seventh child of a family of fourteen; came to Glenburn in 1830; was married to Louise Mann, February 5, 1834; was a millwright by trade; worked in most of the mills on the Penobscot River for twenty-five years. He settled on the farm in Glenburn where he and his wife are now living.

Louise Edson was a daughter of William and Sarah Mann, and was born July 9, 1812. She was a granddaughter of Amos Mann, one of the first settlers of Maine and a Revolutionary soldier, who drew a pension until his death. He was born in Kennebec county in 1750, and married Mary Blagdon. He settled on the banks of the Kenduskeag River, afterwards moved to Hermon and was the first settler there. He died November 1, 1841, aged seventy-nine. His wife, Mary, died November 2, 1852, aged ninety-one. They had ten children, three of whom served in the War of 1812. Two are still living—Joel Mann, aged seventy-eight, and Sylvia Mann, aged eighty-one.

Susan G., wife of Horace Wentworth, was born in Glenburn April 8, 1837; was married to Silas C. Ridley, of Wayne, August 20, 1854, in Glenburn. Mr. Ridley was born in Wayne April 3, 1831; died November 1, 1870, aged thirty-nine. Mr. Ridley represented one of the oldest families in the State—was a descendent of Jonathan Ridley, of Wayne. Mr. Ridley left two children: Gertrude L., born in Glenburn November 10, 1858, is a teacher in the public schools of that town; has also taught in District No. 1, in Hudson, where her mother and grandmother taught before her, in the same building. Louise F. was born in Glenburn October 8, 1865; died January 23, 1873, aged seven years and four months.

William Mann, father of Mrs. Edson and grandfather of Mrs. Wentworth, the oldest son of Amos Mann, was married to Sarah Sherburn, and afterwards to Sarah Bell. By his first wife he had eleven children, and two by his second wife. He died December 4, 1850, aged sixty-nine years. His first wife died July 7, 1833, aged forty-three; his second, December 7, 1861, aged sixty-three years. Mrs. Edson was William Mann's third child, and has five children, four of them now living: Susan G., married Horace Wentworth; Louise M., born in Bangor March 2, 1840, married Jeremiah L. Flagg, now lives in Lowell, Massachusetts; Lucy, born in Bangor December 30, 1843, married Hooper B. Stuart, now lives in Culbertson, Nebraska; Austin Edson, Jr., born December 12, 1846, died September 16, 1848; Evelina, born July 31, 1849, married James S. Thompson, now lives in Bellingham, Massachusetts.

George W. Worster was born in Glenburn, Maine, August 27, 1834. His wife, Margaret A. Nason, to whom he was married December 6, 1865, was born November 17, 1843. They have a family of four children—Frank E., George H., Edward W., and Nellie A. Mr. Worster worked at lumbering in Wisconsin in 1857, and took steps toward organizing a company for service in the Kansas border troubles. In 1859 he returned to Maine, and in 1861 enlisted as private in company E. Fourteenth Regiment, Maine Infantry, and was promoted to sergeant in camp at Augusta. He accompanied General Butler's secret expedition to Ship Island; was commissioned First Lieutenant June 20, 1862. He served with his company in the Louisiana campaign, and acquitted himself with credit. He re-enlisted as a veteran, and after enjoying a furlough returned with the regiment to Louisiana, and from there embarked for Washington in July, 1864. In February, 1864, he was commissioned captain, and on September 19th of the same year was severely wounded in the thigh while leading his company in a charge near Winchester, Virginia, and was left a prisoner within the rebel lines. His sword and belt were taken from him, but were recaptured later in the day. After the close of the war he removed to Bangor and engaged in the manufacture of suspenders. He moved to Glenburn in 1877, where he has served as clerk and agent of the school district; also as Assessor, Selectman, and Overseer of the Poor. He is at present engaged in farming.

Horace Pendexter, of Glenburn, is a son of James and Sally Pendexter, of Cornish, York county. Mrs. Pendexter was a Hammonds. James Pendexter was a farmer. He came to Glenburn in 1843, and settled on the place where Horace now lives. He had five children—Horace; Mary, deceased, wife of Daniel B. Head, of Bangor; Olive J., wife of Thomas Gibbs, of Glenburn; and Augusta. Mr. Pendexter died January 3, 1875, and his wife November 8, 1880. Horace Pendexter, the oldest of the family, was born May 15, 1825. He came to Glenburn when eighteen years of age and has always since lived here. He married Lydia S. Thomas, daughter of Bradbury Thomas, of Glenburn, formerly of Centre Harbor, New Hampshire. They have one daughter—Mary. Mr. Pendexter has held the offices of Selectman and Overseer of the Poor for fourteen years.

Abner T. French, of Glenburn, is a son of George S. and Ann S. French (nee Ann Taylor). His grandfather was Zadoc French, who came to Bangor from Billerica, Massachusetts. George S. and Ann French had eight children—George Z., now in Wilmington, North Carolina; Maria T., deceased, wife of Captain C. B. Sanford, formerly of Bangor; Charles H., deceased; Anna H., deceased; Frederick F., deceased; Abner T.; William H., Wilmington, North Carolina; Josiah, also of Wilmington, North Carolina. Mr. French formerly lived in Bangor. He moved to Glenburn in December, 1843, where he lived the remainder of his life. He died in February, 1849. Mrs. French is still living in North Carolina with her sons. She spends some time also in Glenburn and Bangor. Abner T. French was born April 29, 1844. He received a common school education, and spent one year afterward in Hampden Academy. He has always lived on the old place, except a short time in Virginia with his brother. He married Miss Caroline E. Farnham, daughter of Frederick and Sarah Farnham, of Glenburn. They have two children living, having lost three. Their names are Mattie M. and Charles F. The deceased were named George Z., Malcom, and Morris.

Joseph Merryman, of Glenburn, is a son of Thomas and Martha A. Merryman (nee Martha Melcher). Thomas and Martha A. Merryman were natives of Brunswick, Maine. They had six children, four sons and two daughters, viz: Oliver P., now of Kingman, Maine; Nancy, wife of Hiram Church, of Levant, Maine; Thomas, of Bangor; Joseph; Alfred, now of Moline, Illinois; and Mary A. Mr. Merryman in his younger days was a ship-carpenter and joiner, but spent his later days on a farm. He died in St. Albans, Maine, in 1874. Mrs. Merryman died in 1841. Joseph Merryman was born April 16, 1834, in St. Albans, Maine. He first settled in Glenburn in 1865, where he has since lived. He has spent several winters in the West. He farms during the summer, but winters he is engaged in the pop-corn business, both here and in Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he has spent several winters. He married Miss Abbie C. Frees, daughter of Allen B. and Electa Frees, of Orono. The Frees family were among the first settlers in Bangor and Orono. Mr. and Mrs.

Merriman have two children, viz: Annie M., and Emma.

Mr. Harrison G. O. McDonald, of Glenburn, is a son of Joseph and Mary McDonald (nee Mary Wilson). His grandfather, John McDonald, was a native of Scotland. Joseph and Mary McDonald had eleven children, of whom eight are now living. Their names are: Ann, deceased; Sophronia; Harrison; Rev. William, now of Massachusetts; Jonathan F., of Glenburn; John, in Montville, Maine; James, deceased; Susan, wife of Major Payne, of East Newport, Maine; Mary, now Mrs. Nathaniel Annes, of Placerville, California. The others died in infancy. Mr. McDonald lived in Unity, Waldo county, most of his days, though he died in Belmont, Waldo county. He was a farmer, and died April 18, 1835, his wife dying about 1840. Harrison G. O. McDonald was born February 4, 1814, in Unity. He received a common school education, and on becoming of age settled in Belfast and learned his trade of house-carpenter and joiner. He lived in Belfast about twenty years, with the exception of about six years spent in Boston, working at his trade. In 1860 he moved to Bangor, where he lived for about ten years. He moved to Glenburn in 1870, where he owns a farm and also works at his trade. He married Miss Harriet Flowers, of Belfast, by whom he had two children, viz: Ann, deceased, and George F., now in California. Mrs. McDonald died in March, 1866, and he married for his second wife Alvina A. Lambert, by whom he has three sons, viz: Charles, Henry R., and Franklin (deceased). Mr. McDonald was a member of the Fourth Maine Volunteers for eight months, when he was discharged for disability.

GREENBUSH.

Greenbush is a large town, territorially, up the valley of the Penobscot, on the east side of the river, eleven miles from Bangor, by the nearest corners. The Maine Register a little more than doubles these figures, giving twenty-three miles as the distance.

Greenbush is bounded on the north by Passadumkeag; on the east by Township No. 1 and a small part of Greenfield; on the south by Milford; and on the west by the Penobscot, beyond which, opposite its front, lie Argyle and a very narrow strip of Edinburg.

In the river between Greenbush and the last two towns, are some thirty-five of the Indian islands, a larger number than lie off the front of any other town in the county.

Most of them are very small and unnamed; but a few have geographical designations, as Goose and Sock's Islands, abreast the south part of Olamon Island, in the north part of the town; Sugar, Birch, Comstock, Hemlock, and Cow Islands, about the middle of the river's course along the Penobscot front; and Jackson and White Squaw Islands to the southward. Olamon Island, in the northwest part of the town, passes a little way into Passadumkeag, and is large enough to be almost considered a part of the mainland, from which it is separated by but a narrow channel. There are several residences upon it, the Indians inhabiting it to some extent; and the school authorities of Greenbush have generally looked to the education of the children of the Indians.

The Penobscot flows through a slightly winding course for a distance of about eight miles along the west front of Greenbush. The north line of the town is less than four miles long; the south is five and five-sixths, and the east line seven miles long. The boundaries are straight on these three sides, but do not make exact right angles with each other, the town lying somewhat off the cardinal points of the compass.

Along the river, at a distance never more than three-fourths of a mile from it, runs the European & North American Railway, with nearly the same length of track within the limits of the town that the river has channel along its front. The railway makes two stations in the town, one at Greenbush post-office, and one at Olamon.

Between the railway and the river, most of the distance, runs the river road from the southward. The only exception is for some way each side of Olamon Station, where the railroad gets between the wagon road and the river. At the depot the Olamon Stream comes in—a good-sized water, which enters Greenbush at the north-west corner of Greenfield, and flows about six miles northwesterly across the town to this point, two-thirds of a mile below the north line of the town. About a mile from its entrance it receives the Parker Brook, a little stream, from the east, and Otter Brook from the west, and takes no other tributary in the rest of its course through the town. About half-way to Olamon Station it is crossed by a north and south road which begins at a road from Greenfield, entering at the exact southeast corner of the town, running northwesterly to a cemetery some two miles distant, and thence a little less distance southwesterly out of the town into Milford. Between it and the river are two small tributaries of the Penobscot; near the mouth of the north one, on the river road, is School No. 1. A mile and a half north of this, near the foot of Jackson Island, is the mouth of a two and one-half mile stream called the Boom Bridge Brook. Three other creeks flow at tolerably regular intervals into the river between this and the Olamon. The last of these is a stream of some five miles' length, running altogether in Greenbush, with a general parallelism to the Olamon Stream. In the extreme north part of the town, a small arc of a brook that dips down into Greenbush from Passadumkeag completes the catalogue of waters for the town. It has no lake or pond.

Returning to the north and south road in the east of the town, it has about seven miles' length in Greenbush. School No. 4 is at the intersection of an east and west road from Township No. 1 to Olamon Station. A mile north it sends off another but shorter westerly road to Olamon. From the cemetery named in the south of the town a mile and a quarter road runs to a longer highway from the southward, which has School No. 5 below the junction, and passes northwestward to the river road and the river, at the foot of Olamon Island.

Most of the settlement in Greenbush is on the river road. Upon it are Olamon Station, at the northward, which has a hotel, stores, shops, and School No. 3. About midway from the south town line to this is Greenbush Station, which has School No. 2, hotels, stores, etc. Two and a half miles below it a "boom house" has been built, below the Boom Bridge Brook. The middle north and south road through the town is also moderately well settled, especially on its forks at the lower end. The northeastern part of the town has a tolerable settlement. Much of the town, however, is still in wild lands, and the biggest room in Greenbush is so far the "room for improvement."

The first white settlers got into the Greenbush region about 1820, and by 1834 the tract had enough population to justify the formation of a town. February 28, 1834, it was incorporated. Its population in 1840 was 261, in 1850 457, in 1860 656, in 1870 621, and in 1880 681. The valuation in 1860 was—polls, 141; estates, $62,813; 1870—polls, 151; estates, $129,718; 1880—polls, 169; estates, $91,996.

There is no church in Greenbush. The Good Templars have a society—the Tarrantine Lodge, at Olamon.

At the same place is kept the European and North American Railroad House. There are also in the town one saw-mill, two establishments manufacturing moccasins and snow-shoes, one axes, and two coopers. Four persons or firms keep general stores.

The officers of the town in 1880 were: G. L. Comstock, J. T. Mullen, A. M. Edgerly, Selectmen; Gilbert L. Comstock, Clerk and Treasurer; J. C. Scott, Constable and Collector; G. G. Weld, School Supervisor; J. C. Scott (Quorum), C. S. Weld (Trial), Justices.

Nathan Ellingwood is postmaster at the Greenbush office; Henry L. Wheeler at Olamon.

NOTES OF SETTLEMENT.

Among the oldest settlers of Greenbush is Mr. Elijah Spencer, whose father, Asa Spencer, came to Bradley from Kennebec county in a very early day, when a youth. His father, Nathaniel Spencer, was a Revolutionary soldier, and when he came to this county from Kennebec he brought one of his children on his back, walking all the way. He lived to be one hundred and three years old. Asa Spencer married Miss Lucy Rankins for his first wife. They had seven children, four sons and three daughters. Of these Elijah is the oldest, and the rest are all dead except one, Jefferson, who lives in Bradley. He married for his second wife Mary Warren, by whom he had six children. He died in Ohio about 1879. Elijah Spencer was born October 9, 1803, in Bradley. He came to Greenbush as a workman in 1821. He married Elizabeth Stanley, daughter of Benjamin Stanley, of Greenbush, in 1823, by whom he had five children, viz.: Charles, now of New Hampshire; Lovina, now Mrs. Ballard, of this town; Eleanor, deceased wife of Thomas Hill; Orilla, also deceased; Margaret J., also deceased. Mr. Spencer's wife died in 1850, and he married for his second wife Mary Freeman, of Greenbush. By this union there are four girls and one son, viz.: Aurora, now Mrs. Bean, of Greenbush; Abbie, now Mrs. Mudy, of Milford; Mary, now Mrs. Eldredge, of Greenbush; Nancy E., now Mrs. Robinson, of Bangor. Mr. Spencer has had in all seventeen children by both wives. He now lives on the farm he cleared in South Greenbush before a road was made in town. He has one hundred acres of land, and is still rugged and works in the field.

Among the leading men of Greenfield is Mr. Ransom Kennedy. He is the son of Samuel and Harriet Kennedy, of Newcastle, Maine. Samuel Kennedy had fifteen children, eight boys and seven girls, thirteen of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Caroline, Samuel, James, Austin, Elbridge, Harriet, Hiram, Theodore, Jackson, Martha, Alden, Adeline. Theodore Kennedy is the sixth son of this family. Samuel Kennedy settled in Somersville, Waldo county, Maine, where he lived and died. Theodore Kennedy married Sarah Young, daughter of Henry and Susan Young, of Greenbush. They have had eight children, seven daughters and one son, viz.: Lauetta, now Mrs. A. Littlefield, of Greenbush; Elbridge; Myra, now Mrs. Arthur Brown, of this town; Ella May, now Mrs. Thomas Herriman, of Greenbush; Susan, wife of Charles Burr, of Milford, now deceased; Lillian; Florence, and Hattie. Mr. Kennedy settled in Greenbush, in 1851, on the farm where he now lives with his son Elbridge. Elbridge Kennedy married Mary F. Young, daughter of Isaac and Nancy Young. They have three children now living, viz.: Blanche N., Lena R., and Geneva E. Mr. Kennedy has a farm of one hundred and eighty-nine acres, and is now engaged in farming, which is his principal business.

Among the leading men of Greenbush are Messrs. Charles and Moses Weld. They are sons of Daniel Weld, of Cornish, New Hampshire, born May 27, 1781. He married Lydia Fuller, daughter of Thomas Fuller, of Hardwick, Vermont, born June 6, 1784. They had six children, viz.: John F., now of Nauvoo, Illinois; Daniel, now deceased; Moses; Eben; who died in Oregon; Martin, now of Groton, Vermont, and C. S. Mr. Weld died September 13, 1851. Mrs. Weld died November 6, 1846. Moses Weld was born January 18, 1813, and first came here from Groton, Vermont, about 1841, and worked in a shop and foundry in Bangor for a few months. He came to Greenbush in 1842, and located at Olamon. He engaged in axe-manufacture, at which business he has ever since continued, adding farming to this, which he follows during the summer season. He married Mrs. Olive Lovell. They have had four children, three of whom are still living, viz.: Daniel C., died in youth; Moses E., now in Pennsylvania; Gawin G., now of Oldtown, studying medicine, and Edith L. Mr. Weld has a farm of about four hundred and fifty acres, with a fine set of farm buildings. His residence and grounds are well arranged. He has taken much pains to set out trees, and has a very fine grove of maples all along the road.

C. S. Weld was born May 5, 1819. He came to Olamon in 1850, and engaged in mercantile business and teaching. He taught several years, and in five States. He has of late years not been in business, having retired in 1875. He boards with his brother, with whom he has made his home for thirty years and over, never having married. He has held many of the principal offices of the town, and some of them many terms. He has served as postmaster at Olamon for six or eight years.

J. C. Scott is the son of David and Betsey Scott, of Albion, Kennebec county, Maine. J. C. Scott was born September 30, 1822. He lived about two years in Passadumkeag, and then moved to Greenbush in 1843, where he has ever since lived. He married Keziah A. Gilman, daughter of Nicholas and Ruth Gilman, of Passadumkeag. Mr. David Scott died in 1851; Mrs. Scott was the daughter of Jonathan Coombs, of Islesboro, Maine, and is still living. They have had seven children—two sons and five daughters, viz.: Sergeant Jasper, died in the army; Maria A., now Mrs. J. A. Atwood, of Greenbush; Ruth G., now Mrs. W. W. Harris, of Greenbush; Elizabeth C., now Mrs. H. F. Harris, also of Greenbush; Ambrose S., now of Greenbush (married Clara E. Carney); Martha A., married W. H. Smart, who died in 1877; Louisa D., wife of A. L. Harris, of this town. Mr. Scott first settled on the farm where he now lives in 1843, felling the first trees on the farm. He has two hundred acres, with about fifty acres cleared. He has served as one of the Selectmen of this town for twenty-four years, and held every office in the gift of his town, except one which he would never accept.

G. W. Merrill is the son of Joseph Merrill, of Skowhegan, who came from New Hampshire to Skowhegan about 1804. He married Mary Neil. They had six children, three boys and three girls, viz.: Albert N., now deceased; Joseph, now living in North Anson; Mary, now deceased; George W.; Mary F., deceased wife of Edward Selden, of Norridgewock, Maine; Sarah E., wife of Augustus C. L. Hill, of Bryan, Texas. Mr. Joseph Merrill died in 1821. Mrs. Merrill died in 1825. G. W. Merrill was born October 20, 1814. He first settled in Greenbush. His father dying when he was seven years old, left him to be cared for by his mother, who died when he was twelve. He lived with an uncle till nineteen. He commenced in Greenbush as tavern keeper and merchant in 1845. He had served in the Aroostook expedition ere this. He married Parmelia Delett, of Littleton, daughter of Lewis Delett. They had six children that have grown to maturity, having lost two in childhood. The names of the living are Mary F., Albrie, Lewis W., Helen H., George H., and Augustus, also Sarah, died in infancy or early childhood. Mrs. Merrill died in 1870. Mr. Merrill married for his second wife Mrs. Caroline M. Conant, who is still living. Mr. Merrill has always lived here, being now engaged in mercantile business, hotel keeper, and farming. He has frequently held office in town as Selectman, Treasurer, Overseer of Poor, &c.

William H. Scott is the son of David Scott, who came to Greenbush from Albion, Kennebec county, Maine. His father's name was also David. He married Betsey Coombs, of Berwick, Maine, who afterwards lived in Islesboro. They had nine children, six boys and three girls: James, now of Greenbush; Martha, now Mrs. Moses Ingalls, of Passadumkeag; Jonathan, deceased; William H.; David, now of Orrington; Ann, now deceased; Ann, now Mrs. Bates, of Passadumkeag; Olney

F., now living at Islesboro; Albert, deceased. Mr. Scott came here in 1845 and settled toward the eastern part of the town, where he always lived and where he died in 1850. Mrs. Scott is still living with her son, William H. William H. Scott was born in 1825 and came to this town when twenty years old. He first lived on the East Ridge. He married Caroline A. Folson, of Greenbush, daughter of Joseph G. Folson and Hannah Folson. They had two children, viz: Winfield and Clarence, both now living at home. Mrs. Scott died April 13, 1872. Mr. Scott married for his second wife Mrs. Vickery, of Troy, Waldo county, daughter of Noah and Eunice Weeks. They have no children. Mr. Scott has held the office of Selectman for four terms, and Superintending School Committeeman five years. He represented his district in the Legislature of 1863.

John B. Manning is the son of James Manning, of Machias. James Manning married Jane Bowness. They had ten children, viz: Betsey, now deceased; Mary Ann, now Mrs. White, of Idaho; Sarah, now deceased; Cyrus, deceased; George, now of Lewiston, Idaho; William, now of Newport, Maine; Lydia, now Mrs. Albert Cushman, of Montville, Maine; Hamilton, deceased; and John B. James Manning died September 20, 1866. Mrs. Manning is still living in Greenbush.

John B. Manning was born May 4, 1847, in Oldtown, Maine. He married Alzina Munson, daughter of Isaiah and Barbara Munson, of Princeton, Maine. They have no children, but an adopted son. Mr. Manning first settled on the old homestead in Greenbush, where he now lives, following the business of lumbering and farming.

John H. Avery is the son of Jeremiah and Jane Avery, of Monroe, Waldo county, who moved to Greenfield about 1830, and spent the rest of his days there, dying about 1852. Mrs. Avery died about 1863. They had six children, three boys and three girls: Rachel, deceased wife of George Ricker, of South Berwick; Olive, now deceased; Jeremiah, now living in Milford, Maine; John H.; George W., now deceased, died in the war; Mary Jane, now Mrs. Dolliff, of Veazie. John H. Avery was born in December, 1812, at Monroe. He married Susan Pinkham, daughter of Nathan and Charlotte Pinkham, of Alna, this State. They first settled in Greenfield, living there about three years, then moved to No. 1, North Division, Bingham Purchase, where he lived twelve years, then moved to Greenbush, where he has since lived. They have had eleven children, eight of whom grew to man and womanhood, viz: Charlotte, now Mrs. Ricker, of Greenbush; Sallie (deceased), wife of L. J. Babcock, of Enfield; Susan, now deceased; Fidelia, now Mrs. J. W. Hathaway, of Passadumkeag; F. A., now of Passadumkeag; John A., now of Michigan; Malvina A., now Mrs. J. H. Grant, of Burlington, Maine. Mr. Avery and his wife are now living on the old place in Greenbush, and though now about seventy years old, they do their own work.

Joseph Mullen is a son of John Mullen, who came here from Ireland and settled first permanently in this town, about the central part on the river road. He married Bridget Butler. They had six children, viz: Ellen, now deceased; Maggie, also deceased; James B., now living in Greenbush; John, now of Minnesota, Joseph, and Charles. Mr. Mullen died about twenty-five years ago. Mrs. Mullen is still living in this town on the old place. Joseph Mullen, the third son, was born January 6, 1856. He married Georgie Ellingwood, daughter of Nathan Ellingwood, of Greenbush. They now live on the old Ellingwood place. They have no children. Mr. Mullen has held several prominent town offices in this town, having been on the Town Board for four years, also as Superintending School Committee, and Assessor, Overseer of Poor, etc.

Among the prominent men of Greenbush is Mr. H. S. Wheeler, son of Samuel Wheeler, of Greenfield. Samuel Wheeler was born in that town. He married Mary A. Dolliff, of Belfast. They had four children, viz: Henry L.; Almatia A., now Mrs. A. H. Pierce, of Boston, Massachusetts; Emma M., now Mrs. G. W. Howard, of Milford; Wald, now deceased. H. L. Wheeler is the oldest son of this family. He was born November 24, 1842. After receiving a common school education he entered the army during the civil war, serving four years. He settled in Olamon, Greenbush township, in 1868, where he has since lived. He married, in 1869, Miss Georgia A. Campbell, of Milford. They have no children. Mr. Wheeler is now postmaster, station agent, and express agent at Olamon, and is a live business man.

GREENFIELD.

Greenfield, although but fourteen miles from Bangor (northeast of that city), is in a part of the county which still considerably awaits development. On three sides of it are unorganized and as yet comparatively unimproved townships—on the north, Township No. 1, in Penobscot county; on the east, Township 29, Hancock county; on the south, Township 32, in the same. On the west lie Milford and Greenbush. We are thus again enabled to treat two neighboring towns in succession.

Greenfield lies at one of the many corners which the county makes in the frequent angling of its boundary line. It is upon the lowermost of the steps of the sort of "giants' staircase" which the eastern boundary of the county makes in this quarter. This corner is due east of the middle part of Oldtown.

Greenfield is pretty nearly an even township, according to the present system of Government surveys. Each of its boundary lines, however—which are all perfectly straight,—is a little more than six miles long, those on the east and west being a trifle longer than the two on the north and south. The town contains nearly forty square miles, or about twenty-five thousand six hundred acres.

Greenfield has no lakes or ponds, but is otherwise well watered. The Olamon Stream rises near the east line of the town, about a mile above the southeast corner, and flows across Greenfield, seven miles northwesterly to the north boundary, beyond which it passes to make a short arc in the next township, whence it returns into Greenfield, making there a great curve and a small one in about three miles of flow, and finally going into Greenbush almost exactly at the west corner.

Near its source the Olamon receives the Morison Brook, a respectable tributary which heads in the south part of the townships north and northeast, flows in two branches to a junction a mile south of the town line, and thence south and southwestward nearly four miles to the Olamon. Below its mouth a short distance, the stream has a petty tributary from the south. On the northeast two other affluents, flowing wholly to this town, and one of them between three and four miles long, rising near the north town line, and the other near the lower part of this tributary, are received by the Olamon. The Bear Brook rises in the south central part of the town, and flows northwestward nearly four miles to the large curve of the Olemon in the northwest angle of the town. In the opposite or southwest angle is a section of the Halfway Brook, flowing from Hancock county into Milford, two and three-quarter miles of its course being in Greenfield. It receives two small affluents in this town from the east, one of them near the south town line, and the other, a two-mile stream, near the west line, just above School No. 4.

Greenfield has no railroad, but is accommodated by Milford, Costigan, and Greenbush Stations, on the European & North American Railway. Its wagon-roads are few as yet, the population being still somewhat sparse. The principal one comes in from Lowell post-office, across Township No. 1, passing Greenfield in a curving southwesterly course of nearly five miles, and going across the south part of Greenbush to Costigan Station, with a connection in Greenbush northerly to the river-road below Olemon. In Greenfield this road passes a small cemetery two-thirds of a mile below the town line, school and store buildings about as much further, and the post-office a mile beyond, midway between the Olemon and Bear Brook crossings. About a mile below the town line the road sends off neighborhood trails to the right and left. A little below the post-office it receives from the south a highway beginning less than a mile from the southeast corner of the town, running westward three miles, past School No. 5, and then northwest and north for more than four miles, where it ends at the Costigan & Lowell road. A mile and a half above its sharp bend a road begins and runs westely across Half-way Brook into Milford and on to Milford village. School No. 4 is at the crossing of the brook, and a shingle-mill half a mile to the northwest.

Most of the population of Greenfield is on the Lowell road, northeast of the post-office, though the northern half and the eastern end of its tributary road are respectably settled.

Notwithstanding its comparative isolation, the tract now occupied by Greenfield began to be settled in 1812, the first year of the last war with Great Britain. Among the early comers were Jeremiah Lord, Samuel Wheeler, and William Costigan, from Salem; Peter Witham, from Thorndike; and Miles Stern, from Easton. The population is now largely White. As may be seen by the list of town officers below, they are nearly all Whites. The names of business men and officials of Greenfield, as given in the Maine Register for 1881, are every one White except two—a truly remarkable fact.

This tract was originally Township No. 38, of the Bingham Purchase. Mr. E. F. Duren, of Bangor, informs the writer that it formerly belonged to Hancock county, and was not set off from that county to Penobscot until March 15, 1858. Titles to land herein were originally derived from the great proprietor in Maine, William Bingham, of Philadelphia, or his heirs, then Mr. John Black, who was agent for the sale of these tracts.

January 29, 1834, this town was incorporated by the Legislature of Maine. We do not get its census reports until 1860, when it had 359 inhabitants. In 1870 it had 317, and 337 in 1880. The number of its polls in these years, respectively, was 78, 77, and 92. Amount of estates—1860, $41,061; 1870, $52,500; 1880, $44,940.

Agriculture so far has received comparatively little attention in this town, the people still being mostly given to lumbering, for which the streams flowing to the Penobscot afford fine opportunities. Not much is manufactured in the town, there being at this writing only one shingle-machine in operation here. Two general stores are kept, and one hotel.

The Olamon Dam Company was incorporated, for operations in Greenfield, February 18, 1875.

The Postmaster and other officers in the town in 1880 were:

Mathew C. White, Postmaster; William H. White, Louis H. White, Frank W. White, Selectmen; Frank W. White, Town Clerk; Edwin B. Madden, Treasurer; James White, Jonathan White, Constables; William P. White, School Supervisor; Hiram White, Justice.

The oldest man now living in Greenfield, who was born here, is Mr. B. C. Wheeler. His father, Jesse Wheeler, came here with his father, Samuel Wheeler, not far from 1800. He was a Revolutionary soldier. Jesse Wheeler, when he became of age, settled in the northern part of the town, near where Mr. B. C. Wheeler now lives. He cleared, with his father, the first land in this town. He married Harriet Cummings, of Passadumkeag. Her family came from New Hampshire. They had eleven children—Samuel, B. C., Lucius B., George, Erastus, Ann, Joel, Charles, Frances, Daniel, and Mary. Of these five are now living—B. C., now of this town; Lucius B., now of Port Huron, Michigan; Joel, of Greenfield; Charles, now living in Clearfield, Pennsylvania; Frances, now Mrs. Marsh, of Pennsylvania, and Daniel, also of Pennsylvania. Mr. Wheeler died in 1858, and Mrs. Wheeler in 1853. B. C. Wheeler, the second son of this family, was born September 27, 1818. He has always lived on the old farm. He married Sarah J. White, daughter of Samuel White, of Greenfield. They have had nine children—Charles A., deceased; Harriet, deceased; Edwin R., now of Bay City, Michigan; Lucius H., deceased; Edgar R., also of Bay City, Michigan; Mary, deceased wife of Daniel W. White; Benjamin R., now at home; Samuel L., also at home; Hattie, now at Bay City, Michigan. Mr. Wheeler has held the office of Selectman many years; has either been Selectman or held one of the town offices almost every year since becoming of age.

Mrs. Alice L. White, of Greenfield, is the widow of Asa White. Her maiden name was Alice L. Watson, daughter of Christopher and Hannah Watson, of St. John, New Brunswick. They had twelve children, eight of whom are now living, viz: Clarissa M., deceased; Asa C., Rufus H., George R., Eliza J. deceased; Charles C., deceased; Hannah T., now Mrs. Joseph H. Emerson; Bartlett C., Louisa M., wife of J. B. Price, of Greenfield; Martha C.; Nathan S., deceased, and Benjamin T., all of whom live in Greenfield, except those mentioned above as living elsewhere. Asa White was born in 1790 in Peterboro, New Hampshire, and came to Greenfield in 1828, and settled where Mrs. White now lives. When he came here, there were but few families in town. He died in 1870. Mrs. White is now eighty-three years old, and still lives on the old homestead. Mrs. Louisa Price is the wife of Judson Price. She is the fourth daughter of this family. They have no children, and live on the old place with Mrs. White.

R. H. White, of Greenfield, is the son of Asa and Alice White, whose sketch appears as above. Mr. White was born September 27, 1840, and married Mary E. White, daughter of Asa and Nancy White, of Greenfield. They have one daughter living, Mrs. Emma Richardson, of Greenbush. They have lost one daughter, who died in infancy. Mr. White lives in the northern part of Greenfield. He owns a farm of seventeen acres, and follows the business of lumbering principally.

William Pierce is the son of Nathan Pierce, who came here from the town of Montville, Waldo county, in 1829. He married Betsey Blake, of Burksville. They had twelve children, all of whom are now deceased, except four: John M., of Greenfield; Sarah, now Mrs. Anise, of Greenfield; William, the subject of this sketch, and Betsey A., now Mrs. Johnston, of Bangor. The names of the deceased were Mary, wife of George Avery, of Greenfield; Nathan, who died in Augusta; George, Augustus J., Samuel, Ephraim, who died in Oldtown, and two that died in infancy. William Pierce is the fifth son of this family. He was born April 29, 1823. He married Hannah H. Mayo, daughter of Allen Mayo, of Milo, Piscataquis county. They have had ten children, all of whom are now living, which is a remarkable fact. Their names are Francis H., of Milo; Charles; William, of Milo; Isaiah, of Greenfield; Augustus J., of Greenfield; Abbie J., now Mrs. Blaisdell, of Lynn, Massachusetts; Harriet E., now Mrs. A. F. White, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Clara B., of this town; Henrietta, now at home; Nellie, also at home, and Flossie. Addie, a niece, now two years old, is being brought up by Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, and is considered as one of the family, her mother having died when she was an infant. Mr. Pierce began on his present place thirty-five years ago, when he felled the first trees on his farm of one hundred and eighty acres. He has served his town as Constable and Selectman, though he has no taste for public life, and prefers to let those have the offices who like them.

William Henry Littlefield is a son of John Littlefield, of Waldo county. The father of John was Samuel. John Littlefield married Mary White, daughter of Charles and Clarissa White, of Belmont. They had three children: Charles, now of Augusta, Maine; Benjamin, of Vassalboro, and William. Mr. and Mrs. Littlefield are still living in No. 1 Plantation. Mrs. Littlefield was born in Greenfield February 14, 1833. He married Helen A. Avery, daughter of Jeremiah and Betsey Avery, of Greenfield. Jeremiah and Betsey Avery had twelve children—six boys and six girls: Winslow, now of Greenfield; Benjamin, now deceased; Olive, also deceased; Jeremiah, of Greenfield; Esther, now Mrs. Joseph

Reeves, of Bradford: Helen A.; Selinda A. deceased; Caroline M., now Mrs. Thomas Benner, of Rockland; Rufus, now deceased; Olive, now Mrs. William Monroe, of Argyle; Horace, of Milford, and Willie, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Littlefield have had nine children, seven of whom are now living, viz: Henry and Waldo, deceased;

Willie L., Clara M., Cretia, Blanche, Hattie, Chesley, Olive A. Mr. Littlefield lives in the eastern part of Greenfield. He is engaged in lumbering and farming. Mr. Littlefield has served as Selectman and Collector of his town several years.

HAMPDEN.

DESCRIPTION.

This is, perhaps, the most famous of the old towns of the county—famous by reason of its antiquity, its favorable situation upon the Penobscot, and the stirring events which occurred within it during the last war with Great Britain. It lies in the extreme south range of the county, west of and adjacent to the river, beyond which lie Orlington and a small part of Brewer. On the north are Bangor and Hermon; on the south, Winterport, in Waldo county; and on the west, Newburg. No one of the boundary lines is unbroken. The north, south, and west boundaries are right lines, but each is slightly broken by some defect in the surveys or other circumstance. The town at its northernmost part is eight and three-fourth miles wide; but the north line, beginning in the Penobscot River, runs a little more than half a mile northwest, thence westward six and one-half miles to the inlet from Stetson into Hermon Pond. Here the town projects a kind of cape into Hermon Pond, and between its inlet and outlet, of one mile depth and one and one-half in greatest breadth. Returning pretty nearly to the parallel forming the rest of the north line, the boundary runs about half a mile further to the northwest corner of the town. It is thus extended to a total length of nearly eleven miles. The west line of the town is slightly broken, making a very obtuse angle, and not sensibly lengthening the boundary, one and one-fourth miles north of the southwest corner. The south limit has also a break, and a very singular one, beginning one and one-fourth miles from the river, where the line breaks sharply to the southward, forming a right angle, but running south only one-fourth of a mile, thence east one and one-third miles, and back only one-eighth of a mile, or to a point a little south of the original line, whence it makes straight to the southwest corner. The south line is thus lengthened, but only by about three-eighths of a mile. For a tract confined mostly within right lines, it is the most singularly bounded town in the county.

The Penobscot, in a broad and noble stream, without islands on this part, flows for a little more than six miles along the east front of Hampden, having landings at Hampden Corners and a number of other points. The interior of the town is also remarkably well watered. The superb sheet known as Hermon Pond, as we have noted, lies around a cape of the town at the northwestward. Its western inlet flows less than one mile from Patten Pond, which stretches southwestward only half a mile's length, ending at the west line of the town, about as far from the northwest corner. Stetson Pond also lies wholly in this town, about as far south of Hermon Pond as Patten, and near the north line. It is a roundish sheet, only half a mile in greatest diameters. The outlet of all these waters forms the lower section of the Sowadabscook Stream, a large and important brook, affording much water-power on its way to the Penobscot. (The Indian word rendered Sowadabscook was more exactly "Soadapscoo.") From the northeast part of Stetson Pond it flows nearly in the same direction to the town line, which it just crosses, and then returns into Hampden and passes with a winding, generally southeast course to the river at Hampden post-office. Its total length is five and one-half miles. Its mouth is spacious enough to afford, to some extent, harborage for vessels.

Into Stetson Pond flows the west branch of the Sowadabscook, which rises in the southwest corner of Hampden, and runs with an exceedingly devious but generally north course of more than seven miles in all, to Stetson Pond. When about two miles from its mouth it takes in from the southwest a tributary of some size, which has two headwaters in Newburg and the southwest part of Hampden. In this angle also rises one of the brooks that flow out into Newburg. The West Branch also receives a small tributary at School No. 13, from the eastward, another from the south half a mile below, and a very small one from the northwest a mile from its mouth, a little east of which the pond has a petty affluent. The Sowadabscook welcomes from the south two small tributaries, and from the north as many, the principal of which heads in Hermon. The Penobscot has here on its west bank some half-dozen small affluents, the principal of which come in at Hampden Corners and nearly two miles below.

This town is the best supplied with post-offices of any in the county. On the river-road, beginning with East Hampden post-office at the northeast corner, are Hampden post-office, two and one-half miles below, and Hampden Corners, only about a mile further. In the interior are West Hampden post-office, near Stetson Pond, also the Neally's Corners and Hampden Centre offices. The settlement along the river-road, which runs over six miles in this town, may be regarded as practically one continuous village, so dense and populous is it, particularly below Hampden Corners. Many of the residences on this road occupy exceedingly beautiful and commanding sites, overlooking the river valley.

From the river, or the river-road near it, roads branch off as follow: From Hampden post-office, highways to the northwestward and north of west, the former running into Hampden, and the latter through West Hampden to and beyond the northwest corner of the town; from Hampden Corners, and west and southwest road into Newburg, which is crossed, with a little jog, by a north and south road at a dense settlement about School No. 9; and from a point a little more than a mile below the Corners, near School No. 5, a westerly road which ends two miles out, above School No. 14. These, with a number of connecting and cross-roads, sufficiently supply the needs of the town. There is no north and south road completely intersecting it, except the highway along the river.

Hampden has yet no railway, although the line of the Maine Central comes very near it below Bangor, and the route of the Penobscot Bay and River Railroad, following the west bank, has been surveyed through it.

The surface of this town is somewhat rolling, but not so much broken as to interfere with agricultural operations. It is accounted a good farming, as well as manufacturing town. On the Sowadabscook, two miles from its mouth, occurs a total fall of one hundred and twenty feet, at which are a number of valuable mill privileges. Two paper-mills and a grist-mill have been located here. There is a steam-mill at East Hampden. The town has also one carding mill, one manufacturer of pumps and blocks, two cooperage firms, five wheelwrights, one carriage-maker, two boat-builders, and one door, sash, and blind establishment.

BENJAMIN WHEELER

enjoys the honor of being the first settler in Hampden. This tract, lying so far down the river, naturally received some of the first settlements made up the Penobscot Valley; and one authority places the coming of Mr. Wheeler as early as 1767. Another, and perhaps more correct statement, given by the historian Williamson, fixes the year of his coming as 1772. He was an immigrant from Durham, New Hampshire, and settled near the mouth of the Sowadabscook, where now is the principal village in the town. He was a carpenter, and soon had a sufficient house and outbuildings put up for himself, which he followed by the erection of mills upon "the Basin," in this vicinity. From him the settlement took its primitive name of Wheelersborough; and when the town of Frankfort, now in Waldo county, was created in 1789, it was made to extend "from Belfast to Wheeler's Mills."

THE PROGRESS OF SETTLEMENT

was for years very slow. A number of early settlers came from Cape Cod, with a view to permanent settlement. They experienced some annoyance and fear from the threats and menaces of the Indians; but were not driven away until after they were disturbed by the movements of the British up the river, following the defeat of Saltonstall and Lovell at the Castine peninsula, and abandoned their homes and fled with our soldiers and sailors through the wilderness to the Kennebec, and thence to Woolwich and Falmouth. Most of them returned in 1783, after the peace between the United Colonies and the mother country. Those who made their settlement here good by the 1st of January, 1784, were afterwards confirmed in their titles by Massachusetts, upon payment of the nominal sum of six dollars. If they came afterwards, and settled at any time before January 1, 1794, they received their allotments of one hundred acres for fifty dollars. This was under an arrangement proclaimed when the township was finally surveyed and allotted in 1796, by Ephraim Ballard, under authority from the State, in tracts of one hundred acres to each actual inhabitant. After all allotments had been made, the remainder of the territory of Hampden was assigned, on the 5th of February, 1800, to the proprietors of the Waldo Patent, to make out the deficiency in their grant of thirty miles square, which had been caused by a resurvey in 1798 restoring several townships belonging to the Plymouth Patent. The townships now covered by Bangor, Newburg, and Hermon, excepting the settlers' lots, were also included in the same assignment. Previous to the survey and allotment, the residents here were very much in the situation of "squatters," as many of the early settlers on Western lands are called.

The following notice of some of the more prominent of the early settlers is taken from Coolidge & Mansfield's History and Description of New England, published in 1859:

General John Crosby was one of the early settlers. He came from Woolwich about 1775, and commenced as a farmer, on the estate now occupied by Ivory Frost. He afterwards entered largely into commercial business, and carried on an extensive trade both with Europe and the East Indies. He died May 25, 1843, at the advanced age of eighty-six.

Another prominent man among the early settlers was General Gabriel Johonot, a Frenchman by birth, and a brave and distinguished officer in the American army during the Revolution. He was a friend and correspondent of General Washington; and, during a long and active life, exerted a great influence in the affairs of the town.

Hon. Martin Kinsley, General Jedediah Herick, Enoch Brown, and John Godfrey were early and prominent citizens of the town.

Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, now a Senator in Congress from this State, settled here as a lawyer about 1832.

It may be added concerning Mr. Kinsley that he was the first Representative from Hampden to the General Court of Massachusetts, where he sat as a member in 1802. He was afterwards a member of the Senate, and then of the Council of Massachusetts; was a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1816-18, a member of Congress in 1819-20, and Judge of Probate of the county in 1822-23.

The first piano in the Penobscot Valley was brought by General Crosby, about the year 1800. It is still in existence, in the possession of Mrs. Elias Dudley, of Hampden.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

Two years before the survey and allotment above mentioned, the town of Hampden had been incorporated. For some years before that the people had been under local government. The plantation name of the town, as already suggested, was Wheelersborough. All that part of it below the mouth of the Sowadabscook, or "Wheeler's Mills," had been included in the town of Frankfort, when that was created June 25, 1789, and made to include the present Frankfort, with Prospect and the greater part of Hampden. It reached as far south as Belfast, and up the river to Wheeler's. By 1790 this large tract contained 891 inhabitants, and four years later the necessity for a division became imperative. On the same day, February 24, 1794, Prospect was set off from the south part of Frankfort, and the north part, above the upper line of the Waldo Patent, was united with nearly as much territory still further to the northward, and created a new town under the name of Hampden. It was the eighty-seventh town incorporated in what is now the State of Maine, and the third in the present limits of Penobscot county, Orrington and Bangor alone having preceded it.

JOHN HAMPDEN.

This town bears the most distinguished name of any in the county. At the first glance, it would be said that Lincoln is an exception; but that was not named from the martyred President. Some ardent admirer of the character and deeds of the great English patriot of the era of the Rebellion which dethroned Charles I. had the good taste to secure the family name of John Hampden for the designation of the new town in the valley of the Penobscot. The "Great Commoner" was born in London in 1594, oldest son of William Hampden and Elizabeth Cromwell, whose nephew Oliver Cromwell was. He was educated at Oxford, became a law student at the Inner Temple, and early attained professional and literary renown. In 1625, when less than thirty years old, he was sent to Parliament from Wendenover, and again in 1626, when that body denied to the King the right to levy tonnage and poundage dues without their consent. Charles presently resorted to the expedient of forced loans, which Hampden, with many others, refused to pay, and was imprisoned, but shortly restored to liberty. In 1636 he declined to pay the few shillings of "ship money" demanded of him, as the demand, he held, was an exercise of despotism. Persecuted and prosecuted for the refusal, he prepared to emigrate to America, with his cousin Cromwell, who afterwards became Protector. They were prevented by the Government, however; and in 1640 Hampden became a member of the famous Long Parliament, in which he became leader of the opposition to the Crown and the most popular man in the kingdom. When the civil war broke out soon after, he took a commission as colonel in the Parliamentary army and raised a regiment in his own county of Bucks, which had for its motto the excellent words, "Vestigia nulla retrorsum"—No footsteps backward. He passed safely through the battle of Edgehill and several minor actions, as well as tremendous labors upon the Committee of Public Safety and otherwise; but in June, 1643, in a skirmish with a party of Prince Rupert's men, he received a shot in the shoulder, from the effects of which he died in a few days.

Hampden was one of the very purest and strongest men of his time. His youth was free from vice, and his later life developed no vulnerable point in his character. Clarendon, author of a History of the Rebellion, was politically opposed to Hampden, and yet pays him the following tribute in his great work:

He was indeed a very wise man, and possessed with the most absolute spirit of popularity, and the most absolute faculties to govern the people, of any man I ever knew. His reputation of honesty was universal. The eyes of all men were fixed upon him as their patriæ pater, and the pilot that must steer the vessel through the tempests that threatened it.

HAMPDEN'S HOME.

The father of John Hampden was known as "William Hampden of Hampden." This indicates that Hampden was already a geographical name among English-speaking people. There are, in fact, a "Great Hampden" and "Little Hampden" in England—both in Bucks county, in the south of the island, near London, and a part of the ancient Mercia of the Roman period. It was in the former that the ancestral seat of the Hampdens stood. The county gave to them the exalted title of earl, which John Hampden never assumed, although at an early age he inherited the ample estate of his ancestors, including their stately mansion. It is still in existence, and the following beautiful sketch of it and the surroundings, taken from Green's recent History of the English People, will also be read here with interest in its association with the fine Penobscot town which may quite worthily be compared with them. Says Mr. Green in his third volume:

With the dissolution of this Parliament Hampden again withdrew to his home, the home that, however disguised by tasteless changes without, still stands unaltered within on a rise of the Chilterns, its Elizabethan hall girt round with galleries and stately staircases winding up beneath shadowy portraits in ruffs and farthingales. Around are the quiet undulations of the chalk country, billowy heavings and sinkings as of some primeval sea suddenly hushed into motionlessness, soft slopes of gray grass or brown-red corn falling gently to dry bottoms, woodland flung here and there in masses over the hills. A country of fine and lucid air, of far shadowy distances, of hollows tenderly veiled by mist, graceful everywhere with a flowing, unaccentuated grace, as though Hampden's own temper had grown out of it. As we look on it, we recall the "flowing courtesy to all men," the "seeming humility and submission of judgment," the "rare affability and temper in debate," that woke admiration and regard even in the fiercest of his opponents.

STATISTICS OF GROWTH.

The population of this town was not separately enumerated in 1790, as it had not yet been incorporated. It was probably included with that of Frankfort, or possibly was counted among the "adjacent places" with Bangor as having altogether 567 people. In 1800 it had a population of 904, and now handsomely led Bangor in this particular, the latter having but 786. The supremacy of population, as well as business, was maintained for many years. In 1810 Hampden had 1,279 people, or 429 more than Bangor. In 1820, again, it led its now populous sister by 257, having then 1,478 within its borders; and it was not overtaken and passed by Bangor until long after that. In 1840 it had a population of 2,663; in 1850, 3,195; in 1860, 3,085; in 1870, 3,068; in 1880, 2,911. It has thus pretty nearly kept tune to the old motto of its patriotic namesake, "No footsteps backward."

Hampden had 288 polls in 1812, with a valuation of $7,573.59, and a tax of $1.15 on the $100. In 1820 it had 341 voters, and estates officially valued at $107,593. Forty years later its polls numbered 651; in 1870, 674; in 1880, 731. The voters, it thus appears, have been constantly increasing in number.

The estates for these years, respectively, were $587,718, $739,339, and $676,017.

The valuation of this town in 1801, when Hampden was in Hancock county, and Hancock county was in Massachusetts, is given as follows in a curious old official record in the possession of the Bangor Historical Society:

Polls, 200; 111 dwellings, at 24 shillings; 5 shops, at 18; 1 tannery, 36; 1 potash factory, 36; 8 warehouses, 30; 2 grist-mills, 60; 1 saw-mill, $15; 1 other mill, 36 shillings; 72 barns, 15; vessels, 319 tons; in trade, $5,800; cash, $1,200; tillage, 294 acres, at 90 cents; upland mowing land, 906 acres, $1.20; pasture, 327 acres, 3 shillings; woodland, 17,601 acres, 9 shillings; unimprovable, 146 acres; flowed by water, 1,182 acres; horses, 62; oxen, 115; cows, 274; swine, 182.

HAMPDEN'S WAR RECORD.

The first taste which the good people of the infant settlement in this town had of real war was about the middle of August, 1779, after the disgraceful abandonment by the American fleet of its position before Fort George, at Biguysduce, on the Castine peninsula, and its escape up the river. When it was found that the vessels could not be saved from pursuit and destruction by the enemy, the patriots themselves began to destroy them. A number of them, as we have seen in the history of Brewer, were burned at Bangor; and the Vengeance, a vessel of twenty-four guns, and the General Putnam, mounting twenty-two guns, were similarly destroyed by their crews in the river opposite Hampden. It is an interesting fact that one of the ships of the fleet was itself named Hampden, carrying twenty guns. It was overtaken by the enemy in Marsh Bay, and surrendered to them.

In 1814, during the last war with Great Britain, this town was the scene of a sudden gathering of the local militia and volunteers, to repel the British fleet, which was reported ascending the Penobscot River, to capture the United States corvette Adams, which was lying at the wharf, with two valuable merchant vessels at anchor in the river. Brigadier-General Blake, of Brewer, was in command of the forces. Captain Morris, who had formed two batteries upon Crosby's wharf, on perceiving the approach of the fleet, preceded by barges full of soldiers, opened fire upon them for about half an hour; when, seeing that the militia on the hill were rapidly retreating, as appeared afterward without orders, and that they could not be rallied to his support, and knowing that in a very short time he would be outflanked by the enemy, he spiked his guns, set fire to the Adams and the store-houses, and retreated with his brave companions to Bangor, and thence through the woods to the Kennebec. The vessels and the village were soon within the power of the enemy; the people were maltreated, their houses and stores pillaged and burned, and their cattle killed.

A fuller account of this affair, with the subsequent movements of the British here and at Bangor, is comprised in the Military Record, in the first division of this book, where also will be found a list of the militia engaged from this county.

The corvette Adams, it seems, had proved a serious scourge to the enemy. She was rated as an eighteen-gun vessel, but really carried twenty-four guns. Leaving Savannah the preceding May, for a cruise, she had within three months captured two brigs, a ship, and a schooner. Her good fortune seemed to desert her, however, on entering Penobscot Bay the latter part of July. It was thick weather, and the corvette struck upon a rock, where she remained for some time, finally getting afloat and making her way up the river to Hampden with a great deal of difficulty, and arriving there August 1st, with several feet of water in the hold and a number of the crew disabled by scurvy. Here she was repairing and refitting when the British came up on the 14th of that month.

The names of the men of Hampden who served in the late civil war are also contained in our Military Chapter, in the rosters of their several companies and regiments. They make a long and honorable roll. We may properly add here some notices of the more prominent soldiers from Hampden, as found in the War Reports of General Hodsdon, Adjutant-General of the State:

CAPTAIN EZEKIEL R. MAYO was mustered into the U. S. service as First Lieutenant in the Third Maine Battery, at its original organization, December 11, 1861, and remained with it in the State until April 1, 1862, when the Maine batteries were ordered to Washington. On their arrival, instead of being mounted, as had been anticipated, the Third Battery was assigned to special duty as pontoon engineers, and attached to the Department of the Rappahannock, under General McDowell. On reaching Fredericksburg, April 29th, the battery was immediately employed in bridging the Rappahannock for the passage of General McDowell's troops for his expected movement on Richmond.

About the 20th of May, Lieutenant Mayo was placed in command of a detachment of fifty mounted men of his battery, armed with four twelve-pound howitzers, and assigned to General George D. Bayard's cavalry brigade, which he joined May 27th, while on the march from Falmouth to Front Royal. At the latter place, the brigade was ordered to the assistance of General Fremont, and on June 2d crossed the north branch of the Shenandoah, joined General Fremont at Strasburg, and participated in the pursuit of Stonewall Jackson up the valley. Returning from the valley, he rejoined General McDowell's corps at Manassas Junction, but upon the consolidation of the forces in Northern Virginia he was directed to turn in the howitzers and report with his detachment to Captain Swett, who was still on pontoon service with a large portion of the Third Battery.

On the 10th of September the pontoon bridge was transferred to the engineer brigade, and the Third Battery assigned to duty in the defenses of Washington, Lieutenant Mayo serving there in different capacities until January 18, 1864.

March 28, 1863, the Third Battery was attached to the First Maine Heavy Artillery, and became Company M of that regiment, but did not join for duty until the 10th of June following. Meanwhile, Captain Swett being discharged, Lieutenant Mayo assumed command of the company. On the 15th of June he was promoted to be Captain, and was mustered in as such in the Heavy Artillery, with which regiment he served until January 18, 1864, when he was ordered to report at Augusta, Maine, with his company for furlough and reorganization, three-fourths of the men having re-enlisted as veterans. While there, in February, he received orders from Washington detaching his company from the Heavy Artillery and directing him to report at Camp Barry, District of Columbia, to be equipped as a mounted battery, according to the original design. Captain Mayo reported March 29th, and remained in camp of instruction until July 5th, when he embarked with his battery for City Point, Virginia, with orders to report to the Army of the Potomac for duty, where it was assigned to the Ninth Army Corps under General Burnside. On joining that corps before Petersburg, July 9th, the battery was at once ordered into position before the enemy's lines, near the Norfolk Railroad, and occupied various positions on those lines until October 25, 1864, being almost daily engaged with the enemy—the principal action being that of July 30th, known as the Petersburg Mine.

On October 25th, Captain Mayo was further ordered to the defenses of City Point, and placed in command of the reserve artillery brigade, Army of the Potomac, comprising five light batteries, the reserve ammunition and supply train, and one company of New York heavy artillery. He held that command until April 5, 1865, when the reserve artillery was increased to a command of several brigades, under General William Hayes, Captain Mayo being in the First Brigade, until about the 1st of June, when the several volunteer batteries in the Army of the Potomac were ordered to their respective States to be mustered out of service. Captain Mayo, returning with his own to Maine, was discharged at Augusta, June 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN HENRY CROSBY.—At the time of his entering the army, Mr. Crosby was part owner and superintendent of a paper mill in Hampden, the place of his birth. From the commencement he took a strong interest in everything pertaining to the war, and his first impulse was to enlist among the foremost men who entered the service. But being at that time prevented by private duties of paramount importance, he gave his immediate attention to aid in raising the quotas of his town. When, however, in 1862, the call for troops for nine months was made, he obtained the necessary recruiting papers, and in a few days enlisted the town's quota of about sixty men, who with others from neighboring towns were organized a company, of which he was unanimously elected captain. This company being the first organized to report at the muster-in of the Twenty-second regiment at Bangor, became company A.

From the time he was mustered in at Bangor until his death before Port Hudson, he remained with his company; his brief career in the army is therefore comprised in the history of the Twenty-second Regiment. Though not favored by the fortunes of war with many opportunities for the display of courage and bravery in battle, there were not wanting daily opportunities for the exhibition of virtues perhaps more rare. Accepting the command of his company as a position imposing responsibilities rather than as conferring privileges, he considered it to be his duty to relieve his men as far as possible of the hardships and privations incident to camp life.

Captain Crosby was struck by a musket ball in the side early on the morning of June 11, 1863, while leading his company in a reconnoissance before Port Hudson. He lived until the next morning, and dying, left as a legacy to his mourning comrades his last words: "It is a glorious cause to die for." Dr. Lincoln, chaplain of the regiment, in writing of the deceased to the Bangor Whig, paid a well-merited tribute of respect to his memory, when he said: "In the death of Captain Crosby we lost one of our best officers and one of the noblest of men. He was frank, large-hearted, and true. He was like a father in his company and universally beloved. He had won the confidence of his superiors as a military man, and only the day before he was wounded General Banks had offered him the command of a colored regiment. But he had borne his part and his work was done. Brave and faithful to the last, he fell at the head of his company leading forward his men."

His remains were entombed in New Orleans to be brought home for their final resting place in his native town.

The following named appear on the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College, as published in the same Reports:

Class of 1857.—Charles Hamlin was born in Hampden in September, 1837; was Major of the Eighteenth Maine, which was re-organized into the First Heavy Artillery, rank bearing date July, 1862; was appointed Assistant Adjutant-General United States Volunteers on the staff of Major-General Berry, Third Army Corps; was Assistant Inspector of Artillery; was Lieutenant Colonel by brevet, and brevetted Brigadier-General; was commended by Major-General Humphreys for services at Gettysburg.

Class of 1860.—Ezekiel R. Mayo, previously noticed.

Class of 1862.—George E. Brown was born in Hampden in November, 1841; was mustered in Sergeant of the Twenty-second Maine in October, 1862; was promoted First Lieutenant; served on the Mississippi in General Grover's Division; at Port Hudson he, with Captain Case (class of 1848), volunteered with five men from the regiment to form a storming party.

Class of 1863.—Arthur B. Arey was born in Hampden in May, 1840; did not prosecute his college course; United States Navy.

Class of 1867.—Melvin F. Arey was born in Hampden in January, 1844; was admitted, and after a year's service returned and fell back a year in his course; mustered into United States service in October, 1862, Twenty-second Maine; private and then corporal.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

The first church building in Hampden is said to have been erected in 1796, and for thirty years it was the only one in the town. It survived as one of the relics of early times, and for many years has been used as a Town Hall.

The Congregational Church here dates from May 6, 1817. In 1821 it numbered about thirty members. It is now ministered unto by the Rev. C. D. Crane.

The Calvinistic Baptist Church was founded in Hampden long before this—as early as 1809. The Rev. O. S. Briggs, a graduate of Brown University, was its pastor for eight years. He was the first Baptist preacher to be settled in Bangor, where he remained two years. The Hampden church had thirty-six members in 1821. Elder Ephraim Drew is now the pastor of the Baptist church at West Hampden.

There are also two Methodist Episcopal churches in the town—one at Hampden Corner, in charge (1881) of Rev. A. S. Townsend; the other at West Hampden, under Rev. L. A. Gould.

The Academy in Hampden was incorporated on the 7th of March, 1803. It was the first of the higher schools in the Valley, and has had a long, honorable, and highly useful career.

BUSINESS.

Besides the manufacturing enterprises mentioned in the preceding part of this sketch, it may be mentioned that shipbuilding was for many years one of the industries of the Penobscot shore in this town. In April, 1861, the schooner Dahlia, 126 tons, was built here; also, in November, 1866, the schooner Ward J. Parks, 240 tons, new measurement. From time to time other vessels have been launched from the Hampden shipyard.

There are also in the town about thirty general stores and merchants in various lines of operation; two resident physicians and one lawyer, one civil engineer, one steamboat agent, one hotel (the Penobscot House), and one livery stable in connection, one insurance agent, four blacksmiths and one shipsmith, one rigger, four calkers, two dock repairers, one saw-filer, three butchers, four carpenters and builders, one dressmaker, two hair-workers, two painters, one paper-hanger, one stone-cutter, and three masons.

MINING COMPANIES.

At least two of these have been organized for operations in Hampden—the Norombega Silver Mining Company, and the Consolidated Hampden Silver Company. Both were organized in Bangor, and are officered there. Mr. J. S. Ricker is President of the former, E. H. Dakin Secretary, and William H. Darling Superintendent. Of the latter ex-Mayor F. M. Laughton is President, C. F. Bragg Secretary, and Charles Dunton Superintendent.

SOCIETIES.

The Free Masons have a lodge in Hampden, the "Mystic," meeting on the third Saturday of each month. The Hampden Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and the Eastern Star Grange, No. 1, of the Patrons of Husbandry—one of the earliest formed in the State—are the remaining societies of the town. The Hampden Band might be added, which has Mr. George E. Reed for leader.

PUBLIC OFFICERS IN 1880.

The postmasters of the town are as follow: A. C. Wing; East, T. Cary; West, I. C. York; Neally's Corner, Thomas J. Knowles; Corner, Benjamin F. Smith; Center, Alonzo Taylor.

B. B. Thomas, R. W. Murch, A. H. Loud, Selectmen; B. B. Thomas, Town Clerk; Lewis Robinson, Treasurer; Lewis Robinson, Collector; S. Phipps, I. N. Mayo, H. C. Mayo, Oliver Littlefield, Constables; H. W. Mayo, L. A. Gould, George E. Keyes, School Committee; J. G. Patten, H. L. Hopkins, A. K. Walker, E. H. Barrett, John Leary, Jr., Rutus Jones, Henry W. Mayo, Benjamin B. Thomas, Wilbur Sawyer, Joseph W. Higgins, Samuel Phipps, John Dudley, James H. Stewart, Trial Justices.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Daniel Crosby, of Hampden, is a son of John Crosby, who was born in Hampden. His grandfather was also named John, and was one of the early settlers of Hampden. He came from Woolwich, Maine, about 1795. He was President of a bank in Bucksport, and engaged in importing goods from Europe and the East Indies. He was a man of prominence during his life. His son, John Crosby, Jr., married Ann K. Stetson. The Stetson family was one of the early families here. Their history appears in this work. John Crosby, Jr., was a manufacturer of lumber and was engaged for many years here in trade. He built vessels and was an importer of West India goods.* He did not engage in public life, but acquired a competency in legitimate business. He died in 1863 at the age of seventy-seven. He had nine children, viz: Charles S., deceased, was County Attorney of this county; John, now in Minnesota, in the business of flour manufacture; Elizabeth K.; Henry, deceased (Captain of Company A, Twenty-second Maine Volunteers, killed at Port Hudson); Daniel; Ann K., wife of L. A. Emery, of Ellsworth, Maine; Sarah D., unmarried; Simeon S., deceased; and Maria B., widow of the late Abram Hammatt. Daniel Crosby, the fourth son of this family, is a graduate of Bowdoin College class of 1855. After completing his college course he studied law and was admitted to the Penobscot Bar, but soon after removed to Missouri. He remained in Missouri three years, engaged in teaching and publishing a paper. During the war, in 1862, he returned to Hampden, Maine, and bought an interest in the paper-mill here in addition to that held by his father. The firm names of the two mills are Crosby, Holt & Co., and J. and B. Crosby & Co. Here he has since lived. These mills have a capacity of five thousand pounds per day of book and news paper. Mr. Crosby is not married.

*Also senior partner of the paper manufacturing firms of Crosby, Holt & Co. and J. & B. Crosby.

Colonel Amasa K. Walker, of Hampden, is a son of Aaron Walker and Betsey Knowles Walker. His grandfather's name was Eleazer Walker, who was a native of England and came over in the Mayflower. Aaron and Betsey Walker had eleven children, of whom Amasa K. is the oldest son that lived to grow up, and the next to the youngest child. Aaron Walker came to Hampden in 1786. He drove the first ox team from Hampden to the west part of the town, in 1800. He settled on the place where Amasa now lives. He would not accept town office. He was in the War of 1812 and in the battle of Hampden. Mr. Amasa Walker has as a souvenir of this engagement a belt, scabbard, bayonet, and gun. The belt has a bullet hole through it, and is covered with blood, as taken from the body of a British soldier at the battle of Hampden. Mr. Walker died September 27, 1847. Mrs. Walker survived him, dying February 28, 1860. Amasa Walker was born December 12, 1817, on the farm in West Hampden, now Neally's Corner. He has been engaged principally in farming. He married Miss Mary Ann Cobb, of Hampden. Mrs. Walker died January 1, 1879. They had six children, viz: Charles L., deceased; William F., deceased; Andrew M., also deceased; Mary E.; Sarah, wife of Charles W. Page, of Newburg; and Eva D. Mr. Walker was elected as Lieutenant in the Hampden Light Infantry; was promoted to Captain and went into the Aroostook war, where he was promoted to Colonel. In 1854 and 1855 he represented his town in the Legislature and again in 1864 and 1865. He is and has always been, a Republican. He has held prominent town offices in his town. He has a good farm of one hundred and twenty acres, being the old homestead, where his father settled in 1800.

In 1786 Freeman Knowles settled in Hampden, this county. He came from England, and settled first in Eastham, Massachusetts, but came to Hampden as above. His son, Jonathan Knowles, was born in Eastham in 1778, and in 1794 married Mehitabel Snow, of Orrington, Maine. They had eleven children, four sons and seven daughters, all deceased but four. He was a farmer and at that time one of the prominent men in town, holding the office of Selectman eight years and representing the town in the Legislature thirteen years. In the War of 1812 he held the office of First Lieutenant in the battle of Hampden and afterwards was promoted to Captain. He died at Hampden in 1858. His wife died the next year. Thomas I. Knowles, son of Jonathan Knowles, was born August 13, 1815, in Hampden. He married Miriam W. Harding, June 20, 1843. They have ten children, five sons and five daughters. Mr. Knowles is a farmer and holds the office of Postmaster at Neally's Corner. He was a First Lieutenant in the Twenty-second Maine Volunteers during the Rebellion, and is one of the prominent men of his town.

The first representative of the Doane family who settled in this county was Amos Doane, who came to Hampden in 1784. He married Mary Myrick. They had eight children, viz: Isaac, said to be the first white child born on the Penobscot River; Daniel, Edward, Amos, William, Elisha, and Lydia. He buried his first wife, and married for his second wife Abigail Libbey. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. During his early life he followed the sea, but during his later days he was a farmer. He died in 1842. His oldest son, Isaac, married Lettice Higgins for his first wife; his second wife was Caroline Snow. He had ten children, viz: Isaac H., Samuel, Edward, Susan, Sarah, Sophronia, Dorcas, Albert, Mary, and Amos. He was in the War of 1812. Mr. Doane died August 1, 1872. Edward Doane, the subject of this sketch, was born in 1814. He married Mahala Hanson. They have had seven children, viz: George P., Adrianna (deceased), George F., Albert, Henry, Augusta (deceased), and Warren. Mr. Doane is a farmer. One son is in Colorado, one in Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, and two in Hampden.

Calvin Snow, one of the old men of Hampden, is a son of Harding Snow, who came from Wellfleet, Massachusetts, to Hampden, when it was a wilderness. He was a soldier in the Revolution. His wife was Betsey Cobb before her marriage. The only surviving member of their family is Calvin Snow. During his early life Harding Snow followed the sea, but in later years he followed the occupation of a farmer. Mrs. Snow was noted for her Christian character, and was a woman greatly loved by all. She died September 9, 1856. Mr. Snow died in October, 1846, at the advanced age of ninety-three. Calvin Snow, who is now eighty years old, married Sophronia Holbrook in 1825. Their family consisted of eleven children, viz: Jane A. (Mrs. Spofford), Mary C. (Mrs. Nason), Margaret W. (Mrs. Carlisle), Sophronia C., Rosalie H. (deceased), Henry C., Joseph H. (deceased), Joseph H. (second), Susan A. (Mrs. Blaisdell), Maria T. (Mrs. Fair), Helen A. (Mrs. Harriman). Mr. and Mrs. Snow are both still living in Hampden, revered and loved by their children and all their numerous friends.

Peter Newcomb, who was born June 15, 1803, is a son of Peter and Dorcas Newcomb (nee Dorcas Snow), from Cape Cod. His grandfather, Captain Reuben Newcomb, came to Hampden from Cape Cod at a very early day. He was one of the first settlers at Hampden Corner. Peter Newcomb was in the War of 1812, and was Captain of the Hampden company. This company took an active part in the battle of Hampden. He was a ship-builder and a farmer. He died in Hampden many years ago—about 1816. Mrs. Newcomb died in Massachusetts about 1866. They had nine children, four of whom only are living, viz: Mercy, now Mrs. Cowan, of Herman; Peter; Maria, now Mrs. Samuel Freeman, of Orleans, in Cape Cod, Massachusetts; Thomas, also in Massachusetts. The names of the deceased were: Reuben, Elnathan, Harriet (Smith), Elmira (Durrell), and Phcebe. Mr. Newcomb, now of Hampden, has always been a farmer. He has cleared up a large portion of the farm where he now lives, and cleared one farm before. He married Melinda Robinson, daughter of Isaac and Rachel Robinson, of Hampden. They have had eight children, viz: Almira, wife of A. Corthell, of Rockport, Maine; Orda, deceased; Charles E. of Brewer, Maine; Wilson, in Baltimore; Willis, now in Bangor; Freeman, of Hampden; Arabine, wife of Otis Farnham, of Hampden, and Lama, married to James Bowes, of Bangor.

B. W. Harding, of Hampden, is a son of Harvey and Susanna Harding (nee Susanna Wilson). His grandfather, Job Harding, came to Hampden from Medway, Massachusetts, in 1800. He was an apothecary in Massachusetts, and after coming here practiced medicine and was known as Dr. Harding. During his later life he was engaged in farming. Harvey and Susanna Harding had ten children, viz: Benjamin W.; Hiram, deceased; Miriam W., wife of Thomas J. Knowles, of Hampden; Susan M., married Rufus Bartlett, of Hampden; Harvey, jr., now deceased; Edwin A., now in Washington in the Pension Office—his family are in Hampden; Ambrose H., now in Mississippi; Philander H., deceased; Frances A., wife of Albert Hall, of Hermon, Maine. One died in infancy. Mr. Harding was a farmer. He came here when nine years of age, and always lived here on the place where Benjamin now lives. He died in 1864. Mrs. Harding died in 1869. Benjamin W. Harding was born October 16, 1816, in Hampden. He received the common school education then afforded in the public schools. On becoming of age he remained with his father on the old place, and on his death bought out the heirs. Here he has since lived. He married Mary E. Pickard, of Hampden, for his first wife, who died in 1878, in February, leaving two children—Roscoe W., of Hampden, and Lurietta V., wife of Hiram E. Bartlett, of Hampden. Mr. Harding married, for his second wife, Mrs. Emeline E. Prescott, of Troy. She had two children by her former husband, Permelia M. Hillman and Freeman. Mr. Harding has often been elected as Selectman of his town, and in 1875 was sent to Augusta to represent his district, comprising Hampden and Veazie, in the Legislature. He lives in the western part of the town, known as Neally's Corner.

Jabez Gould, of Hampden, was born April 7, 1806. He is a son of John Gould, who came here from Gorham, Maine, about 1804. He settled in the Knowles neighborhood. Here he spent the remainder of his life. He married Mrs. Betsey Snow, by whom he had six children, one of whom only is now living beside Jabez—Allen, who lives in Hampden. The names of the deceased were John, Hannah, and Lucy, and one died in infancy. Mr. Gould died in 1875 at the age of ninety-four. Mrs. Gould died many years ago. Jabez Gould has followed farming principally for a business. He married Miss Paulina Walker, daughter of Aaron Walker, of Hampden. They have had twelve children, of whom five are living—Laura, deceased; Lucy, deceased; Amasa, now in California; Robert, now in Washington Territory; Elizabeth, deceased; Charlotte, deceased; John, drowned at sea; L. Asbury, of Hampden, a Methodist minister; David, deceased; Clara, and Dora. One, the eldest, died in infancy. Mr. Gould lives in West Hampden, and is a successful farmer.

Warren L. Cobb, of Hampden, is a son of Levi and Olive Cobb (nee Olive Newcomb). His grandfather, Ezekiel Cobb, came from Gorham, Maine, to Hampden about 1804. He settled in what is now called Neally's Corner, in the same neighborhood where Mr. W. L. Cobb now lives. Levi and Olive Cobb had six children—Olive S., wife of Loren Lanpher; Ezekiel, of Bangor; Levi, deceased; Warren D.; Mary E., widow of Benjamin Knowles, and one died in infancy. Mr. Cobb, during his early life, followed the sea for some years. During his later life he was engaged in farming. He died in 1846. Mrs. Cobb died in 1877. Warren L. Cobb was born May 24, 1837, in Hampden. He has always lived here on the old homestead. He married Ellen Godfrey, daughter of David and Hannah Godfrey, of Orrington, Maine. Mrs. Cobb died December 18, 1875, leaving one son—Wilbur R. They lost one child in infancy—Carrie May.

The first representative of the Ware family who settled in this country was John Ware, who settled on the Kennebec. One of his sons, Captain Josiah Ware, was born on the Kennebec in 1787, and came to Hampden in 1807. He married Ruth Atwood and reared a family of seven children, two sons and five daughters. He followed the sea. At the time of the Hampden battle, in 1814, he commanded a military company. He died in 1837. Josiah Ware, his son, married Elmira C. Holt. They have three children, Albert S., Clara E., and Howard W. Mr. Ware is a farmer and mechanic.

Theophilus Stanley, of Hampden, is a son of James and Margaret Stanley (nee Cowan). Mr. Stanley was a native of Hopkinton, New Hampshire. He came to Hampden about 1808 or 1809. He settled on the farm now owned by Mrs. John Stanley in West Hampden. He had seven children, viz: Theophilus; Thomas, deceased; Emily, now Mrs. Justus Emerson, of Carmel; Julia, deceased; Margaret; Ruth, deceased. He followed farming for a business, and died here in Hampden. Mrs. Stanley survived him but a few years. Theophilus Stanley was born June 28, 1799, in Gardiner, Maine. He first engaged in lumber work on the Penobscot, remaining some six years, when he settled on the farm where he now lives, in West Hampden. Here he has always lived. He married Rachel Patterson, of Hampden. They had two daughters, Hannah and Ruth. Hannah married Lewis Smith, of Hampden; Ruth is deceased. In former years Mr. Stanley held prominent town offices, and was by his townsmen sent to the Legislature in 1842 and 1843. He is now past eighty-two years old and still able to carry on his small farm. He is a man highly respected by his neighbors. He is now living with his daughter, Mrs. Smith. Mrs. Stanley died in 1837. Having come here when ten years of age, he can relate much of interest about the early settlement of the town, as he retains his faculties to a marked degree.

William Cary, the subject of this sketch, was born in Hampden, August 28, 1822. In early life he received a common school education, and was engaged with his father till twenty-one years of age. After that time he engaged in the mercantile business in Hampden, in which business he continued till his death, which occurred October 1, 1881. He was a Free and Accepted Mason, was a member of Mystic Lodge, Hampden. In early life he was a Methodist and later a Universalist. He had been Selectman a number of years; was Representative in the State Legislature. He first was Postmaster of East Hampden, and continued in office till the war, when, being a Democrat, the office went to the other party. He has held other township offices. He married Sarah E. Sprague May 28, 1855. By this union seven children were born, viz: Infant, Willie F., Rossele, Hattie M., Gracie, Lulu, Robert.

Fred Sawyer, of Hampden, is a son of Amos and Betsey Sawyer. His mother's name was Betsey Sylvester. Stephen Sawyer, his grandfather, came from Amesbury, Massachusetts, and settled on the place in West Hampden where Fred now lives. He, unlike most of the early settlers, chose low land, and the wisdom of his choice is now plainly manifest. He had four children—John, now in Hampden; Mary Elizabeth, now Mrs. Allen Carter, of Hermon Centre; Melvina, wife of Charles Patterson, and Fred. Mr. Sawyer was a farmer and millman. He died in 1877. Mrs. Sawyer is still living with her daughter, Mrs. Patterson. Fred Sawyer was born February 3, 1848. He married Julia York, daughter of Isaiah York. They have one son, Arthur. The old homestead, where Fred now lives, contains 130 acres and is located in the west part of Hampden.

Thaddeus Nason, the subject of this sketch, was born in Limington, York county, April 15, 1803. He is a son of Enoch and Lucy Nason, of Limington, and by occupation is a farmer. He settled in an early day, cleared up the farm, and was one of the pioneers of the township. He died in Cornish, York county, in his eighty-second year. His children were: Abigail, Thaddeus, Enoch, Hannah, Mary, Durell, all of whom are dead but Thaddeus. In his early days he lived with his father till twenty-one, after which he settled in Standish, York county, and engaged in farming. From there he moved to Cornish and remained there three years. From there he went to Dixmont, where he lived forty-two years, after which he settled on the place now occupied by the family. He married Narcissa Stone, daughter of Solomon and Hannah Stone, of Limington, March 13, 1822. She died September 3, 1880. By the above union nine children were born, seven of whom are living: Daniel S., William, Eliza J., Solomon S., Hannah S., Mary, Darius, Sarah N., and Albert. William married Elizabeth A. Parker, of Monroe, March 10, 1862. His children were: Samuel, deceased; Hannah M., born July 29, 1866, living at home; Darius, married Lizzie Mudgett, of Dixmont, February 23, 1859, and has three children; Walter H., born January 26, 1860, has been studying medicine; has been one year at Brunswick; one and one-half years in Orono College, and now lives at home; Charles, born January 29, 1864, is engaged in farming and butchering, buying lands, etc.; Nathaniel M., born September 7, 1875, now at home.

Rufus Bartlett, of Hampden, is a son of John Bartlett, who came to Newburg from Shapleigh, Maine. John Bartlett married Hannah Perry. They had twelve children, viz: Joseph, now of Newburg, Maine; Lydia, widow of the late Richard Ellingwood, of Winterport, Maine; Eveline, now Mrs. Newcomb, of Newburg; Rufus; John, deceased; Hannah, deceased, married Eben Hall, of Winterport; Franklin, deceased; Fidelia, wife of David Morrill, of Bangor, and Nancy P., deceased. The others died in early life. Mr. Bartlett always followed farming as a business. He died in Newburg in 1839. Mrs. Bartlett died in 1865. Rufus Bartlett, the third son of this family, was born October 15, 1823, in Newburg. He received a common school education and settled in Newburg as a farmer. After living there until 1856 he moved to the place where he now lives in Hampden, near Neally's Corner. He married Miss Dorcas Whitney, daughter of Isaac Whitney, of Newburg. This couple have had seven children, all of whom are deceased except Hiram E. Their names were Isaac F., Bertha L., Hiram E., Augusta and Gustavus (twins), Julia, and Henry. Emery and Hiram E. live in Hampden. Mr. Bartlett has always been engaged in farming.

H. W. Hammond, of Hampden, was born December 19, 1837, in Bangor. His father, Charles Henry Hammond, was a son of Charles Hammond, who came to Bangor among the first settlers. Hammond street in Bangor was named for him. He married Betsey Brown. They had five children, viz: Eliza Ann; Eliza Ann (the first of name died ere second was born); Charles Henry, born March 5, 1859; Mary Brown, born February 4, 1812; Harriet H., born April 22, 1814. Charles Hammond died at Bangor, April 12, 1815, aged thirty-six years. Mrs. Hammond died in December, 1871. Charles Henry Hammond, the only son of the family, married Helen Maria Perley, of Bangor, September 19, 1833. Her family were from Kennebec county. They had two sons, Charles and Henry. He was a groceryman in Bangor for some years, and went to California during the gold excitement in that region, and has not been heard from for years. Supposed to be dead. Mrs. Hammond died in Bangor, January 14, 1844, aged thirty years. Henry W. Hammond has been engaged in farming in Hampden for about twenty years. He now lives near Hampden Corner, and is the only living male representative of this branch of the Hammond family. He married for his first wife Amanda Penney, of Hampden. She died December 6, 1870, leaving two children named Addie E. and Charles C. Mr. Hammond married for his second wife Emma Z. Brown, daughter of Charles and Emeline Brown, of Hampden. They have no children.

Eben Wheelden, of Hampden, is a son of Levi and Sarah I. Wheelden. Levi Wheelden was born in Orington. His father, Ebenezer Wheelden, was a native of Provincetown, Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Levi Wheelden had twelve children, viz.: Ellen, Eben, Abbie, Alexander, Levi O. D., Dennis, Elizabeth, Lidora, Mary, and John. Two died in infancy. He has followed farming and milling for a business. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wheelden are now living in Ellsworth, Maine. Eben Wheelden, the oldest son of the family, was born February 10, 1835. He received a common school education, and since beginning business for himself has always been in the lumber business. He married Maria Hoxie, daughter of John Hoxie, of Bucksport, Maine. They have two children, Gertie and Etta. Mr. Wheelden is a member of the firm of C. G. Sterns & Co., manufacturers of lumber. He first engaged in this business in Hampden, about 1867. They have two mills, and employ about eighty men, cutting out about twelve million feet of lumber per year.

Benjamin L. Simpson, of Hampden, was born March 11, 1834. He is a son of William R. Simpson, of Newburg, who came from Dorchester, Massachusetts. William Simpson married Susan Tolman. They had seven children, viz.: Susan, wife of Alden Tribow, of Newburg; Mary, wife of George W. Whitney, of Bangor; William, now in Newburg; Ann T., wife of John Clements, of Exeter, New Hampshire; Benjamin L.; Henry, of Newport, Maine; Charles, also in Newburg. Mr. Simpson moved to Belfast, and started the first paper ever published there, the Belfast Journal. He moved to Newburg from Belfast about 1829, and died in 1870. Mrs. Simpson died in 1869. Benjamin L. Simpson, the second son of this family, was born March 11, 1834. He learned the engineer's trade by practical work about an engine, and is now engineer in Hodgkins's steam saw-mill in Hampden. He married Mary Ellingwood, daughter of Captain Nathan Ellingwood, of Winterport, Maine. They have one son, Harry by name. Mr. Simpson has a farm, which he carries on in connection with his trade, though not able to do much on the farm himself.

One of the first settlers in Hampden was Elisha Delano. He had five children. One of his sons, Paul Delano, now living in Hampden, married Maria West, and has always lived in Winterport. He formerly followed the business of shoemaking and also worked at carpenter work. He has had two wives. By his first wife he had five children, and by his second wife, Maria West, he had ten children, viz.: John, deceased; George A.; Lucy E., wife of James Dean, of Hampden; Martin V., of Winterport; Nathan, of Hampden; Sarah, deceased; Warren, now living in Hampden; Helen and Henry, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Delano are both living. He is eighty-eight and has been an invalid for twenty-seven years, since having a shock of palsy. He has had three shocks of palsy, and is entirely helpless. George A. Delano was born January 7, 1830, in Winterport. On arriving at manhood he went to sea and finally became master of a vessel. He followed the sea fourteen years. During this time he married Susan Gray, who separated from him in 1867. After obtaining a divorce he married, in 1870, Hattie B. Cole. By his first wife he had three children—Maria, wife of William Whitney, of Hampden; Flora, and Charles. Mr. Delano has no children by his present wife, but they have adopted three children. After giving up his seafaring life he settled in Hampden, where he has been engaged in staging, livery, and hotel business. He is also agent for the Penobscot River boats. His hotel is known as the Penobscot House.

David J. Jewell, of Hampden, was born August 5, 1836, in Troy, Maine. His father, David Jewell, was a native of Newfield, New Hampshire. He married Wealthy Haynes, of Swansville, Maine, and they had seven children, viz.: Sarah, Susan, Nancy, and Elizabeth, deceased; George, now in Troy, Maine; W. Ellen, now Mrs. Hiram Lawrence, of Gardiner, Maine. Mr. Jewell was always a farmer. He died in Dixmont in 1857, and Mrs. Jewell died October 15, 1852. Mr. Jewell was for several years collector and constable in the town of Dixmont. Mr. David Jewell, after receiving a common school education, worked in the saw-mills on the river and in the woods winters. He settled in Dixmont on a farm in 1858, after marrying Octavia McLain, daughter of William and Emma McLain, of Appleton, Knox county, Maine. Here he lived until 1871, when he moved to Hampden, and has since lived here, working in the mill until 1878, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Town Farm, which position he is now filling. Mr. and Mrs. Jewell have two children—Hattie E. and Fannie M. Mr. Jewell was for two years in the army, being a member of Company K, First Heavy Artillery, and served with that regiment during the years 1864-65.

Hiram Dunton is a son of James Dunton, who emigrated from Hope, Waldo county, and settled in Hampden when the township was a wilderness. He was one of the earliest settlers of the township, and cleared up the Stanley farm, on which he settled and lived about thirty years. He was by trade a carpenter. He died at the age of ninety-two, in Hampden; was in the War of 1812 at the battle of Hampden, under Captain Newcomb. He was a member of the Methodist church. He married Polly Patterson, daughter of Andrew and Sarah Patterson, by whom he had nine children, viz.: Betsey, John, Saphona, Sarah, Jason, James, Lucy, Hiram, and Abigail, four of whom are living. Hiram Dunton was born in Hampden, March 10, 1819. In early life he started out without assistance, and is what may be called a self-made man. His occupation has been farming and lumbering. On his farm is located the Consolidated Hampden Mining Company. A shaft is lowered to the depth of two hundred feet. Capital stock, $1,000,000; been in operation two years. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, and later a Greenbacker. He married Louisa Pierce, daughter of Eben and Lydia Pierce, of Hampden, November 7, 1842, in Hampden. The ceremony was performed by Hannibal Hamlin. By this union four children were born, viz.: Charles H., born March 30, 1847; married Aurilla Foster, of Hampden, daughter of Samuel and Susan Foster, of Hampden, in June, 1873; four children were born: Nora M., Orrin

W., Flora S., and an infant. He now lives in Hampden, and is at present engaged in mining at Castine. Eben P. was born March 4, 1850; married Elmira M. Patterson, daughter of Benjamin and Sabra Patterson, of Hampden, May 4, 1872, and is living at home, engaged with his father in farming. Walter H. was born April 2, 1852; married Dell C. Brown, daughter of Daniel and Sarah Brown, of Mount Desert, July 4, 1879; is lumbering and farming at Mount Desert. They have two children—Sarah E. and Leslie A. Lottie P. was born in 1854, March 17; married George Emerson, son of Levi and Sarah Emerson; now living in North Bangor; one child, Frank W., born November 21, 1872, is now living with grandfather Hiram.

Joseph Cary was born in what is now called East Hampden, Penobscot county, in 1791. In his boyhood days he followed the sea for a living until he was eighteen years old. His father, Richard Cary, being a gunsmith, he concluded to abandon going to the sea and stop at home and learn the gunsmith trade of his father. He, being a natural mechanic, soon got so he could do any kind of job. In those days he used to do a great deal of work for the Penobscot tribe of Indians in repairing guns and making traps for hunting. He was in the battle of Hampden in the War of 1812. He was married in the year 1817, and brought up quite a large family of children—three girls and five boys, all of whom lived to grow up to manhood and womanhood. He has lived upon the same farm where he was born up to the present time. Thomas Cary, son of the above, was born in Hampden, September 1, 1826. In early life he received a common school education, and lived with his father until twenty-one years of age, after which he engaged in mercantile business, in which he has since continued. He has made his business a success, has held office as postmaster of East Hampden seventeen years, and is at present one of the trustees of the Penobscot Savings Bank. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, Mystic Lodge, Hampden. He married Cordelia Glass, of Bangor. By this union three children have been born, viz: Frank, engaged with his father in business as partner, married Etta Wheelden, of Bangor; Melville, engaged with his father; Edith E., resides with her parents.

John Phillips, of Hampden, is a son of John and Elizabeth Phillips (nee Elizabeth Baker). John Phillips was a native of Marblehead, Massachusetts. He came to Maine about 1800 and settled in Hampden. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. During his early life he followed the sea. He was a finely educated man for those days. During his later life he was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips had eleven children. Mrs. Phillips had ten children by a former husband. They also brought up three other children. Their children were: William, now in Aroostook county, Maine; Rebecca, now Mrs. John Lawry, of Winterport, Maine; Dolly, now Mrs. Kendall, of Hampden; Lucinda and Zebiah (twins). Lucinda is now Mrs. Robert Snow, of Orland. Zebiah is deceased. Clara, wife of Francis Gibbs, of Bangor; John; Alexander, now of Limestone, Aroostook county, Maine; Jennie, married Joshua Sherman, of Bangor; Ann, deceased wife of Francis Gibbs; and Mary, deceased wife of Miles Hartford. Mr. Phillips died in Hampden at the age of seventy-eight, in November, 1857. Mrs. Phillips died November 2, 1878.

John Phillips was born December 15, 1826. During his early life he followed the sea. In 1855 he settled in Bangor and did a grocery and shipping business. He lived there about twenty years. During the last of the time he was in the ship-building business altogether. He came to Hampden in 1870, and has been engaged principally in farming, though doing some shipping business. He married Miss Frances E. Bussey, of Newburg, Maine. They have three children, viz: Hattie S., Arthur R., and Edgar E. Mrs. Phillips's grandfather was reported as killed in the War of 1812. His funeral sermon was preached and his monument erected. He afterward returned to his family.

Jerry G. Patten, of Hampden, is a son of James and Elizabeth Patten (nee Elizabeth Guptil). James Patten came to Hampden from Merrimac, New Hampshire, when six years of age, and settled on the place where Mr. Jerry Patten now lives. He had five children, viz: Polly, deceased wife of Robert Blaisdell, of Hampden; Oliver, deceased; James, now of Hermon; Elizabeth G.; and Jerry G. Mr. Patten was a man who took prominent part in town affairs and held township offices for many years. In 1831 and 1832 he represented his town in the Legislature. He was for many years a captain in the militia, and commanded the company in the battle of Hampden in the War of 1812. He died December 11, 1859. Mrs. Patten died May 2, 1851. Jerry G. Patten, the fifth child and youngest of the family, was born December 5, 1817, in Hampden, on the farm where he now lives. He married Betsey C. Cowan, daughter of George and Lucy Cowan, of Hampden. This couple have had six children, viz: Thomas, now of Hampden; Franklin, now of Merrillon, Wisconsin; Agnes, deceased; Fannie, wife of Samuel Babb, of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin; Jere, deceased; Hamlin, deceased. Mr. Patten has been a member of the Board of Selectmen for several years. In 1868 and 1869 he was chosen to represent his district in the Legislature. In 1871 he was appointed by Secretary McCulloch as Weigher and Gauger in the Custom House in Bangor, which position he held ten years. He lives in the northwest part of Hermon.

HERMON.

Hermon is another of the neighbors of Bangor, which it immediately and evenly adjoins on the west. Its southern companion is Hampden, its western Carmel, and its northern neighbors, in nearly equal shares, Glenburn and Levant. It is about an even township in size, but has been made very slightly trapezoidal by the shortening of its north line about a quarter of a mile below the regulation township length of six miles. The south town line, but for the projection above it of the cape from Hampden already described, would be even six miles long. The east and west lines of the town are also each very nearly six miles long. The symmetry of the town is considerably broken in the southwest part by the intrusion of Hampden. The south line of Hermon runs from the southeast corner of the town four miles to the outlet of Hermon Pond, then describes a great curve in the pond and goes out by the outlet of Patten Pond to a point a trifle south of the original parallel, and thence strikes westward about one-third of a mile to the corner of the town. On all other sides of Hermon the boundaries are perfectly straight.

Through the southern part of the town, running a little north of east, entering from Bangor two-thirds of a mile above the southeast corner, and passing out into Carmel nearly two miles north of the opposite corner, runs the track of the Maine Central Railroad. It makes a station for Hermon post-office (the first out of Bangor) one and a half miles southeast of the road junctions at the village, and another three and a half miles west, at the crossing of the Sowadabscook Stream, near Hermon Pond, which gives its name to the station. Here are School No. 1 and a cemetery. A road runs from the station, near the west bank of the Sowadabscook, about a mile to and then into Carmel. Its extension to the southwestward runs out to the west town line, along that a little way and then southeastward into Hampden. Another road from the station crosses the Sowadabscook here, and goes northeast to and through Hermon village to a road from Bangor to Glenburn, across the northeast angle of the town, where, at a point a little below North Hermon post-office, it ends. Another partial diagonal of the town, passing to the northwest from two branches starting respectively from Hampden and Bangor, and uniting something more than a mile from the south and east lines of Hermon, also passes through Hermon post-office, and goes out into Carmel a mile or more below the northwest corner of this town. One and a half miles above the village it receives a southwesterly road coming from Bangor. Shortly before its exit a north and south road from Levant crosses it, makes a jog of one-third of a mile near School No. 2, half-way across the town, and goes on south to Hermon Pond. Another north and south road from Levant to the pond runs in the interior of Hermon, at varying distances of one to one and a half miles from the former road. They intersect an east and west road from Hermon village, which passes into Carmel. These are the great roads of the town. Of course, in a region so finely settled as Hermon, the necessary shorter roads are not wanting.

Hermon Pond is an attractive body of water, nearly two miles in extreme length from the end of the bay at the northeast, and about a mile in greatest breadth toward the outlet into Stetson Pond. Its average length, however, is only about one and one-eighth miles, and its average width perhaps half a mile. At its northwest bay the Sowadabscook Stream enters, after a flow of over a mile and a half in the west part of the town. A small affluent also comes in about the middle of the north bank of the Pond. This beautiful sheet adds a great charm to the scenery of the town, and it is a favorite resort for picnics, and for boating and fishing.

George's Pond is a little sheet half a mile long by about half the breadth, less than a mile east of Hermon Pond, and with its south end pretty close upon the town line. Its outlet is into the Sowadabscook, below Stetson Pond, and into it debouches the Wheeler Stream. This has two heads in the north central and central western parts of the town, and flows to a point of junction a mile east of Hermon village, with a tributary of near three miles' length, rising near North Hermon. Thence the stream runs about two and one-half miles further to George's Pond, half a mile before entering it receiving a very short tributary from a pond west of it. A petty stream crosses the extreme southeast of the town, and another heads about three miles north of it, and also flows into Bangor. Near the north half of the west line of the town the Little Kenduskeag Stream, heading in the north of Levant, and running with a general southward course, passes to the Sowadabscook at the town line, a mile and a half above Hermon Pond Station.

Hermon is an old and well populated town. About exactly at the centre of its territory, just half-way across from east to west, and but a trifle below the middle point from north to south, is Hermon village and post-office. Here are the Town House and Masonic Hall, the public pound, Baptist and Universalist churches, and a public school-house. Three miles northeast of it is North Hermon post-office, with an Advent church and a cemetery. The cemetery for Hermon village is at School No. 13, nearly a mile from the cross-roads at Hermon. Although these are so near the centre of the town, there is a separate "Hermon Centre" post-office at the Hermon depot.

Hermon Pond Station, whose position has already been indicated, has also a post-office. All parts of the town are tolerably well settled, but population is perhaps densest in the northeast quarter.

The surface of Hermon is quite picturesquely broken, but is not unduly-rolling or hilly.

The settlement of Hermon began nearly a quarter of a century before it became a full-fledged town. About 1790 the pioneers are believed to have got this far into the interior from Bangor and the Penobscot. They were Julius Hewes, Collins Hewes, Jotham Mason, William Patten, and a few others, who came that year, or no long time after. They were all originally from New Hampshire. In the spring of 1798, when the energetic pioneer Baptist, Paul Ruggles, was pushing his way into the wilderness of Carmel with his young wife, and became the guest of this Hermon settler, we find a Mr. Garland upon the soil, but are not notified of the year of his coming. Mr. and Mrs. Ruggles were his guests for several weeks, until the weather permitted them to paddle up the Sowadabcook and make their own settlement. The growth of the plantation was slow for many years, but there were about twenty families in the township when it was erected into a town in 1814.

This was one of the four townships selected within the present territory of Penobscot county, with Bangor, Hampden, and Newburg, and assigned February 5, 1800, to make up a deficiency in the tract surveyed for the Waldo Patent. Of course here, as in the other townships, the lots actually occupied by settlers were not distributed, and their titles, derived only from occupancy, were quieted for nominal sums. The remainders in the four townships, amounting to about eighty-three thousand acres, were assigned to the Waldo heirs. General Henry Knox, of Revolutionary fame, had married one of these, and although the share of the Patent in which she had an interest had been confiscated and sold, the General's high favor and influence with the Government, together with liberal purchases on his own account, enabled him to get a very large landed estate in this quarter. About half the Waldo property in this county, says Mr. Williamson, in the History of Maine, was assigned to the old hero, "the friend of Washington." It is generally known that Knox county was named from him in 1860, as he for twelve years, after his resignation as Secretary of War, resided at Thomaston, where he died in October, 1806. The railway station at that place is in the brick building that was once General Knox's stable.

February 13, 1814, in the midst of the stern alarms of war in Eastern Maine, Hermon was incorporated as the 207th town erected in the District. Sangerville, now in Piscataquis county, was incorporated on the same day, and Newport, now in Penobscot, on the next.

As before noted, the town had then about twenty families, with a goodly proportion of men without family. The population had numbered 82 fourteen years before, in 1800, and 179 four years before, by the census of 1810. In 1812 the polls in the plantation counted up 33, with estates valued at $9,229.02. In 1820 Hermon town had a population of 277, 55 polls, and $22,056 in officially valued estates. The people had increased to 535 in 1830, 1,042 in 1840, 1,374 in 1850, 1,433 in 1860, 1,489 in 1870, and 1,394 in 1880. Until within the last decade, as thus appears, Hermon has not only held its own in population, but has quite satisfactorily increased.

In 1860 the votes of this town numbered 315; in 1870, 342; in 1880, 369.

The valuations of estates for these years, respectively were $197,120, $294,189, and $399,999.

Hermon has two religious societies,—the Free Baptist and the Universalist,—the pulpits of both of which are, or were recently, vacant.

The leading associations of Hermon at this writing are only the Lynde Lodge, No. 74, of Free and Accepted Masons, and the Union Grange, No. 26, of Patrons of Husbandry. There lately existed in the town the "New Era" branch, No. 34, of Sovereigns of Industry, and the Star Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars.

The manufacturers of the town were formerly somewhat numerous, but of late have included but one firm, engaged in coopeage at Hermon village. Under the business stimulus pervading the country, however, the manufacturing interests of this region are beginning again to look up.

The firm mentioned also keep a general store, and there is one other in the town.

One of the partners, Mr. J. G. Eaton, is Postmaster at the village, Mr. George W. Patten at Hermon Pond, S. Gerow at North Hermon, and Thurston Hunt at Hermon Centre.

The officers of the town for 1881 were:

Rufus Robinson, Jr., W. F. Harding, and Gideon Andrews, Jr., Selectmen; George D. Higgins, Town Clerk; John D. Miller, Treasurer; C. E. Phillips, Constable and Collector; W. A. Swan, C. H. Cates, W. F. Harding, School Committee; J. Kimball, Russell B. Miller, Charles N. Patten, John Kimball, Justices.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Alva Patten is a son of William and Hannah Patten, who settled in Hermon in an early day. He built a house by driving down stakes and covering them with peeled bark, and lived in it some time, subsisting on fish and potatoes. The first season he felled thirty acres of timber, burnt the ground, and raised five hundred bushels of corn. He also built a house of hewn logs, in which he lived about sixty years, or until his death, using one end of it for his stock. He was in the War of 1812 and died at the age of seventy-nine. He preached the gospel for thirty years. He was a delegate to the convention which separated the State, and was Selectman until his death. He served as Representative a number of terms, and held all the township offices. He did all the justice business for a great many years and in that time officiated at the marriage of a large number of the townsmen. He married Hannah Godell, of Prospect, by whom he had the following children: Chesley, William, Gibson, John, Alva, Gibson, Jr., Polly, Olive, and Jane.

Alva was born July 4, 1807, in Hermon; kept the hotel in Hermon about twenty years, but after the railroad went through the State business became dull, and he sold his interest and bought the farm on which he has since resided. Alva Patten's first wife was Lyana Celson, of Frankfort, by whom he had six children: Simeon, Caroline, Melissa, Amanda, Gibson, and Josephine. None of these are living except Melissa, who was matron in the Little Girls' Home at Portland until a year ago, and now resides in Boston. For his second wife Alva Patten married Sarah Perry, daughter of Edmond and Lydia Perry, of Carmel, Maine, February 20, 1858, and they have had one child, Helen J., who was born September 4, 1861, and now lives at home. Chester W. Patten, son of William Patten, was born in Hermon, March 31, 1847. After receiving a common school education he began devoting his energies to farming, in which pursuit he has made a great success. He now has a fine farm in a good state of cultivation, and supplied with good buildings. He married Sybil Kimble, daughter of James Kimble, of Hermon, April 22, 1865, and has had three children, viz: Elmer C., born February 10, 1865; William E., born January 20, 1874; and Elter May, born August 24, 1878.

Asa G. Wyman is the son of Daniel and Hannah Wyman, of Hermon, who emigrated from Hartland. The father, Daniel Wyman, cleared up quite a portion of the land, helped cut the road through, and died at the age of eighty-eight. He married Hannah Greely, by whom he had seven children: Cornelia, Asa G., Thomas, Moses, Daniel, James, and John, two of whom are living. Asa G. was born March 8, 1829, in Hartland, but has spent the greater part of his life in Hermon, except five years in the lumber business in Michigan. He is one of the successful farmers in Hermon, having become such by hard work and attention to business. He started out in life without assistance, and is what may be termed a self-made man. He married Sarah Carr, daughter of Ester Carr, of Hampden, and has had two children, Melin, deceased, and Anna, born April 19, 1872.

Abel Pettingill emigrated to Hampden forty-seven years ago and settled on the place now owned by Mr. Jones, clearing the farm from its rude state and putting up the present buildings. He died at the age of sixty-five. He married Dorris Davis and raised thirteen children, viz: Thankful, Mary, Daniel, Lucy, Abel, Abram, Lydia, John, Amos, Aaron, William, Simeon, and Charles, six of whom are living. Abram Pettingill was born April 6, 1814, and received a common school education; went to sea for a few years, after which he settled on the place now occupied by him, clearing it up by hard work and bringing it to a good state of cultivation, putting up fine buildings. He settled on the place without a helpmeet, but after a few years married Mary, daughter of Samuel and Ester Emerson, of Hampden. They have brought up a number of children, viz: Orren Thayre, Lydia J. Porter, Alfred N. Pettingill, Thomas Whitney, Cora Whitney, and Charles Whitney, who under their watchful care have grown up likely, steady, and respected men and women. The first-named child, Orrin, learned the painter's trade, but as it did not agree with him, he went to Hampden and bought a farm. After his death his wife sold the farm and went to Bucksport to live with her father, taking her little girl, aged four years. While living with her father, a man by the name of Smith called upon her to borrow some money, and when she refused the desired loan, he murdered the whole family, father, daughter, and child. He afterward burned the buildings, but was arrested and sentenced for life to the Thomaston State Prison.

Reuben Prescott, the subject of this sketch, is the son of John Prescott, of Hermon, and was born November 25, 1820, in Lincolnville, Maine. He has devoted his life successfully to farming, and is a member of the Sovereigns of Industry No. 26, West Bangor, also a Good Templar. He married Elmira J. Cowen, of Hampden, November 14, 1850, in which union four children were born, viz: Frederick; James, now in Minnesota; Joseph P., who married Mary A. Smith, and lives in Hermon; Fanny M., and George A., both at home.

Benjamin Swett was born December 29, 1769, and emigrated from Massachusetts and settled in Hampden in 1793. He died in Hampden in 1854, after following farming all his life. He married Mehitable Atwood, and was the father of the following children: Mrs. Doane, of Hampden; Mrs. Row, of Bangor; Mrs. Mayo, of Chicago, Illinois; Benjamin Sweet, Portland, Maine; James Swett, Bangor; Mrs. Hopkins, Bangor; Mrs. Snow, Hampden; Mrs. Rusbank, Bangor; Charles M. Swett, Hermon; William A. Swett, Bangor, and D. W. Swett, Gloucester, Massachusetts. Charles M. Swett married Ruth H. Atwood, January 11, 1848, who bore the following children; Cynthia, Mary, Discas, Horace, Frank, Helen, Discat, Lewis. Mr. Swett makes farming his occupation.

John Littlefield settled in North Dixmont in an early day, and cleared more land than any other man in the town. He has for many years been deacon of the Free-will Baptist church. He married Martha Colson, of Winterport, and had eleven children: Gilman, Samuel, Oliver H., Sarah A., Susan, William H., Jason, Almedia, John, Jr., Elizabeth, Rebecca, seven of whom are now living. Gilman was born in Dixmont, June 17, 1828, and received a common school education. At the age of twenty-one he bought a farm, paying twenty-five dollars down, and by hard work digging the remainder of the price out of the soil. After living in Etna seven years he settled on the place he now occupies. It was in a rude state when he bought it, but he has brought it up to a high state of cultivation, having upon it over three miles of fencing. Mr. Littlefield is a member of West Bangor Lodge, No. 26, Sovereigns of Industry, and has held minor town offices. March 27, 1850, he married Mary Eldrich, of Etna, and has four children: Laura E., born March 16, 1856, married Eugene Robinson, April 12, 1874, and lives in Macwahoc, Aroostook county; Alva G., born May 15, 1861, lives at home; Cora M., born August 2, 1867; and Nellie F., born June 17, 1869.

Benjamin L. Barnes was born in Massachusetts, and went to Camden when a small boy, where he lived until about twenty-five years of age. He came to the township of Hermon about thirty-five years ago and settled on the place occupied by him and his son. The farm was in its rude state and by hard work Mr. Barnes has brought it to a high state of cultivation. He started from home without aid from any one. He married Lydia Fletcher, of Lincolnville, by whom ten children were born, viz: Nancy, Benjamin, Hannah, Mary, Edwin, Hattie, Frank, Lydia, and two infants that died; six are living. Frank was born in Camden April 22, 1842. He received a common-school education, and has always lived with his father, taking care of his parents in their old age. He has made farming his occupation. He was a member of the Sovereigns of Industry, West Bangor, No. 26. He married Sarah M. Eldridge, daughter of John and Mary Eldridge, of Etna, October 24, 1826. They have one child, George E., born March 22, 1867.

R. B. Miller is a son of Silas Miller, of Hermon, whose father, John Miller, came here from Hampden. John Miller had nine children, of whom Silas was the second son. Silas Miller married Clara Myrick, daughter of Nathaniel Myrick, of Hampden. By this union there have been three children—Russell B., Justena, and Cora B. Mr. Miller has always been engaged in farming and lumbering business. He was often asked by his townsmen to allow his name to be used for election to places of public trust, but with the exception of the office of Selectman, he declined to allow his name to be used on a ticket. He is now living on his farm in this town. R. B. Miller was born in 1849. After receiving a common-school education he attended the academy at Corinth three terms. He married Miss Almita E. Hinkley, daughter of John H. Hinkley, of Hermon, and settled on the place where he now lives, in the village of Hermon. To this couple have been born a son, Gardner H., now three years old. Mr. Miller has served as Collector, deputy Sheriff, member of the School Board, and deputy Census Marshal. He is a young man of good education, having taught school several terms.

Uriah Roundy, of Hermon, is the son of Lacy Roundy, who was a native of Clinton, Kennebec county. He married Jane Libbey. They had two children, viz: Uriah and Joshua. Joshua is now deceased. Uriah Roundy, the subject of this sketch, was born in 1810. He first settled in the town of Frankfort, now Winterport, Maine, where he married Mary A. Downs, daughter of Thomas Downs. After living in Monroe and Jackson, in Waldo county, where Mrs. Roundy died in 1858, and where he married for his second wife Mary A. Jones, he moved to this town. By his first wife Mr. Roundy had four children, viz: Dorcas, Silas A., now of Lewiston, Oliver W., and Helen, all of whom are now deceased except Silas A. By his second wife there are two children, Edward F. and Nellie E., who are living at home. Mr. Roundy moved here in 1863, where he has since lived. He has 140 acres of land and is engaged in farming and stock-raising. He has a good orchard and raises considerable fruit. He is a remarkably well preserved man for one of his age, and still takes a lively interest in politics and the general news of the day.

HOLDEN.

BY WAY OF DESCRIPTION.

Holden is largely upon one of the old settled tracts of the county, but is one of the later municipal formations, having been set off from Brewer and incorporated April 13, 1852. It is distant from Bangor only by the width of Brewer and the Penobscot, or about three miles, and is situated upon the old stage route from Bangor to Ellsworth, Mt. Desert, Cherryfield, and the East of Maine. The general direction of its length and its east and west boundary lines is from the northeast to southwest. It is eight and one-half miles in greatest length from the north line to the southernmost point of the town, near the southeast end of Brewer Pond. Most of the town, however, all except that running down into the "gore," is but the length of the west boundary, five and two thirds miles. Its width enlarges slightly, from the divergence of the east line of the town eastward, from four and one-half miles on the south line to about four and five-sixths from the angle in the east line near Holbrook Pond, almost three and one-half miles above the southeast corner. Thence it dwindles by the deflection of the east line westward, to four and one-third miles at the north line of the town. The width of the gore in the south part of the town, at its beginning, two-thirds of a mile from the west corner, and a little over two and one-third miles from the south corner, is about one and one-third miles, whence it narrows by straight boundaries, a little zigzagged near Field's Pond, to a point nearly three miles below. Large part of this gore is covered by Brewer Pond, and the rest seems to be unsettled as yet. The area of the town, in round numbers, is thirty square miles, or about twenty thousand acres.

Holden is bounded on the northeast by Eddington; on the southeast by the "I." of Eddington and by Dedham, in Hancock county; on the southwest by Dedham and Bucksport, the latter of which also bounds the gore on the southeast; and on the northwest by Orrington (bounding the gore only), Brewer, and a small angle of Eddington. It is but one mile from the Penobscot River at the nearest point, from the north corner of the town straight across to Eddington Bend.

There is no important sheet of water wholly within the bounds of Holden; but several lakes lie upon the borders. On the northwest line of the gore, and stretching in a narrow breadth of it across the opposite line, is Brewer Pond, the largest water which touches Holden. It lies, however, chiefly in Orrington, in whose history it will be described. Upon the north half of the southeast border are Holbrook and Davis Ponds, with their non-connecting stream. These waters have been sufficiently described in our account of Eddington. The greatest length, and by far the greatest part of the surface of Holbrook, are in Holden. The east corner of the town lies in the south central part of Davis Pond. Neither of these, strange to say, receives any tributary of account in this town. The Dead River rises near George's Corners, a little below Holbrook Pond, flows appropriately out into Dedham, and through two good-sized lakes in Hancock to Union River. Another small stream, flowing southward half a mile or so in this county, also heads near the Corners. Two miles west rises another Hancock county stream, which has a course of about one and a half miles in Holden, and flows out near the south corner. Indeed, the town seems to be full of "heads," from the peculiarity of its situation as a sort of summit in the south central part of it, between Holbrook and Brewer Ponds. Not a single stream completely intersects the town in any direction, or any large part of it. In the north part of it, however, a brook of moderate length rises half a mile above the north bay of Holbrook Pond, and flows with a northwest and west course into the Eaton Brook, close upon the Brewer line. The headwaters of this brook, three in number, are two or three miles to the southward, and scattered over about two miles' space. The brook, as we have already noticed, crosses the upper part of Brewer town, and enters the Penobscot at North Brewer. Another Brewer stream, Felt's Brook, heads less than a mile southeast of the Brewer line; and still another comes down from Eddington, makes an arc of about half a mile length in the north angle of Holden, whence it flows again into Eddington, and makes a final end in Brewer.

Holden is a moderately populous town, having 717 people by the census of 1880. The only post-office bears the name of the town, and is kept by P. L. Pond at his store near the cemetery on the Bangor road, one and a half miles northwest of George's Corners. This hamlet is situated at an important cross-roads half a mile southwest of the south end of Holbrook Pond, and about the same distance from the southeast town line. It has a public school-house, saw-mill, tannery, blacksmith's shop, etc. From it radiate roads to all the cardinal points except west. One runs east and northeast near Holbrook Pond to and through East Eddington post-office. Above that place and Davis Pond a branch route runs off to the southwest, which, about two miles after passing the Holden line, joins the road from Eddington Bend, which comes in near the north corner of the town, and runs southerly to the junction near the school-house, whence it continues nearly due south to George's Corners, through which it runs a mile further into Dedham. The Bangor road comes in from Brewer in a straight course of three and a half miles, when it ends in a country neighborhood south of the post-office. A little more than a mile west of that, however, at the Congregational church, parsonage, and school-house, nearly two miles southeast of the town line, the main or stage-road turns off to the eastward, but presently to the southeast, and continues to and through George's Corners into Hancock county. Still another highway runs from George's to the southwest, across the south of the gore of Dedham to Bucksport. George's Corners are thus the centre of the road system of Holden. No other important road of length exists in the town than those described. For about two miles nearly parallel with the last, however, is a road from the gore of Dedham, running northerly and northeasterly to the Eddington Bend route. From the cemetery on the Bangor road, one and a quarter miles from the Brewer line, a road runs to the southeast across Prospect Hill—a locality famous for its fine views of the Penobscot Valley—and by the school-house there, out by a west course into Orrington. And from the school-house on the Eddington Bend road, a mile from the north corner of Holden, a highway runs nearly two miles to the southwest, and then bends northwesterly into Brewer.

The surface of Holden, as has already been intimated in our descriptions, is somewhat uneven, but not sufficiently so to destroy its adaptability to agricultural purposes. On the contrary, there are a number of fine, productive farms in the town; and its chief industries, by far, are agriculture, stock-raising, and dairying.

WHITE SETTLEMENT.

The pioneers got into the interior here even earlier than they did into most parts of the present Penobscot county on the other side of the river. The date of the first arrival is well settled to have been May 31, 1786. Like the colony of twenty-six that two and a half years later laid the foundations of the Queen City of the West in the Ohio Valley, this party consisted of men only, with three exceptions, and at least one young child. It thus almost lacked some of the most interesting elements which usually aid to make up the earliest colonization; as in the case of the Plymouth Colony, thus poetically set forth by Mrs. Hemans:

And there was woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow, serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth;—

but was perhaps by this better fitted for the stern struggle that had to be waged for a few years in the howling wilderness.

The men of this company numbered eight, and were Captain (afterwards General) John Blake, John Farrington, Silas Winchester, Calvin Holbrook, David Mann, Elijah Jones, Isaac Clewley, and Samuel Gilmore.

A valuable historical letter, written a few years ago by George C. Wiswell, Esq., grandson of one of the later settlers, gives the following interesting notes concerning the Blake and Farrington party:

They followed a spotted line, which was their only guide (a son of one of the settlers, who was five years old, riding a cow), about six or seven miles from the Penobscot River, in an unbroken wilderness; and here they built their log-houses and covered them with bark. The first year they felled some trees and cleared some land, but were not able to raise any crops. Fortunately some natural meadows which the beavers had made, were found near by and furnished pasturage for the cows in summer, and in winter they were kept near the meadow haystack, the owners going by turns to get their milk. In 1788 quite a quantity of rye and Indian corn was raised, which the farmers carried on their backs to the river and boated it to South Orrington to be ground, bringing it back in the same way. A sled-road, however, was soon opened to the river; but then it took two days to make the journey and back, one man going as teamster and another with a handspike to pry up the sled, which often caught on roots and stumps.

The first wheel carriages that they used were carts, some of the wheels of which were made by sawing off a short piece of a large log, while others were made with hubs, spokes, and felloes, but had no iron about them.

This courageous band of pioneers was from Wrentham, Massachusetts. Most, if not all of them, like their leader, Captain Blake, had been soldiers in the War of the Revolution, then but recently closed, were inured to peril and privation, and were well fitted to lay the foundations of civilization in the wilderness east of the Penobscot.

General Blake spent the rest of his life in this region, and became its most noted citizen. He was born in Boston, August 29, 1753; entered the Revolutionary army April 19, 1775, at twenty-two years of age, became a lieutenant in the Continental line, and served as such until December of 1780. His military experience and abilities were still made serviceable after his settlement in Maine. He was advanced through all grades in the military service, until he became Major-General of Division. At sixty-one years he was Brigadier-General commanding the militia at the unlucky affair with the British forces at Hampden, in September, 1814. His management on this occasion was made the subject of investigation by a military Court of Inquiry, under direction of the State authorities; but he was altogether exonerated by it "of censure and suspicion," as the historian Williamson says. Then, at the instance of General Blake, two of his subordinate commanders, a Colonel and a Major, were arrested and tried by a regular court-martial. The former was suspended from rank and command for two years; the latter was honorably acquitted. General Blake lived a long and useful life thereafter, dying at last January 25, 1822, in his eighty-ninth year.

Of the first settlers, only Messrs. Gilmore, Clewley, and Jones brought their wives with them. During the next two years, however, the remainder sent or went for their wives and families, and brought them also to the pioneer homes. Subsequent early arrivals in this part of the country included Colonel Solomon Blake, Elisha Robinson, and Billings Brastow. Of these Colonel Blake survived until May 4, 1858, when he passed away at the great age of ninety-three.

It is a remarkable fact that so many of the Holden pioneers lived to advanced age, a number of them to over near eighty years. We have already noted the deaths of General and Colonel Blake. Deacon Farrington died at the age of eighty-seven, September 30, 1843. Joseph Copeland, who came subsequently, lived to be seventy-nine years and five months old, dying here January 3, 1864. Isaac Bates died September 11, 1849, aged seventy-one years and three months. William Copeland who departed this life February 10, 1849, was seventy years old. Others, whose names and dates of death we have not, lived to still greater age.

About eight or ten years after S. Blake, Robinson, and Brastow, came in William Copeland aforesaid, from Mansfield, Massachusetts, and George Wiswell, from Norton, in the same State. They were the first to settle in the southwest part of the present town. Wiswell died June 27, 1836, at the age of sixty-four—comparatively young for a Holden pioneer.

Other settlers, about the same time or no great while after, were Messrs. Ebenezer Fisher, Jacob Hart, James Hastings, Thomas George, Asaph Gates, Deo Dat ("He Gives to God") Brastow, Isaac Bates, Joseph and Lemuel Copeland, Samuel Cobb, John Robinson, Nathan Clark, Abia Pearl, Nathan Kingsbury, Elisha Rider, Zenas and William Rogers, Newell Shepard, and Allen Hodges.

ORGANIZATION.

This town occupies a part of Township No. 9, as known in the surveys. It was originally, for purposes of civil government, a part of Orrington, which was erected from New Worcester Plantation March 21, 1788, and was then a large town, embracing thirty-seven thousand three hundred and four acres. When the northeast part of old Orrington was set off, February 22, 1812, to constitute Brewer, this part of the former town went with it, and was locally known as East Brewer. More than forty years passed before another division was imperatively demanded, and then, April 13, 1852, the final separation was made which bereft Brewer of by far its larger and perhaps fairer portion, and the new town of Holden was born. It is, with the exception of seven towns—Mattawankeag, Medway, Mount Chase, Prentiss, Stetson, Veazie, and Winn—the youngest town in the county. Kenduskeag was created the same year, but in February.

STATISTICS OF GROWTH.

Although so early settled, the population of the tract now constituting Holden cannot be given, in consequence of its inclusion in other towns. As we have seen, a considerable percentage of the people of Orrington, and afterwards of Brewer, must have been settled in this quarter. The first census taken after the final separation—that of 1860—showed a population in Holden numbering 805. Brewer, at the next preceding census, exhibited a roll of 2,628 people, of whom nearly one-third must have lived in the subsequent Holden territory. In 1840, when all of old Brewer had but 1,736, the proportion belonging to "East Brewer" must have been much larger. In 1870 Holden had 761, and in 1880 717.

The number of polls in 1860 was 180; in 1870, 185; in 1880, 200. The grown men or voters, it will be seen, have steadily increased, although the population has fallen off somewhat.

In 1860 the valuation of estates in this town was 168,938; in 1870, $193,561; in 1880, $174,681.

RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

At early dates in the annals of this region, the Rev. "Father" John Sawyer and Rev. Jotham Sewall, the well-known pioneer preachers, and afterwards venerated patriarchs, held Protestant services in it here and there. The latter was an especial favorite, and the whole settlement, almost without exception, would turn out to his preaching. The Rev. Enoch Mudge, of Orrington, and Rev. Thomas Williams, who was pastor at Brewer post-office in 1813, preached a part of the time in the East Brewer pioneer school-house. This was built in 1803, and used for religious as well as educational purposes until 1829, when the first church edifice in this quarter was erected. The previous year there was an extensive revival hereabout, which led to the formation of a church November 11, 1828. It was known as "the Second Congregational Church of Brewer" until 1839. The ministers settled over this church, in order of service, were the Rev. Messrs. W. W. Niles, Charles R. Fiske, A. Whitman, J. R. Munsell (who remained twelve years), Southworth, J. S. Cogswell, and E. C. Crane. The latter is the present incumbent of the pulpit. The pioneer John Farrington was the first Deacon of this church, appointed during the month next after its organization; and he served it in this capacity honorably and acceptably fifteen years, or until his death.

This is still the only religious society in Holden.

EDUCATIONAL.

The children of the pioneers were at first, and for many years, gathered in an informal way for private instruction at the dwellings. The first regular school was held in a rough, unfinished room at Deacon Farrington's house in 1799, and was taught by John Wilkins. Four years afterwards, as before noted, the first school-house was built.

There are now in Holden eight school districts, and many school-houses.

SOCIETIES.

The first temperance organization in this region was formed soon after the Congregational church, and at a time when organized temperance sentiment was a very rare thing anywhere in the land. Its date was December 1828, and its place of birth the Wiswell School District. Other associations of the kind were subsequently formed; and it is a record eminently creditable in the story of the town that it has never been without a temperance society. The present organization, Holden Division, Sons of Temperance, was instituted November 6, 1866.

The Union Star Grange, No. 168, Patrons of Husbandry, also in this town, was organized May 5, 1875.

BUSINESS.

Dr. Joseph Fogg was a practicing physician here for nearly half a century—forty-five years. There is still but one resident doctor in the town. Two persons keep general stores, and one firm are grocers. The Holden Steam Mill Company manufactured lumber here for a number of years, and one person is still running a saw-mill. There is a tannery at George's Corners. One firm are turning out carriages and smith-work; and there are two smiths besides.

TOWN OFFICERS FOR 1881.

Benjamin F. Farrington, Charles Wiswell, F. K. Hart, selectmen; A. B. Farrington, town clerk; Henry T. Hart, treasurer and collector; F. K. Hart, constable; George C. Wiswell, school supervisor; F. K. Hart, A. B. Farrington (quorum), justices.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following notice is included in the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College, of the students and graduates during the late war:

Class of 1842.—Charles M. Blake, born in Holden, December, 1819; Principal of a school for young ladies in Philadelphia several years; entered service as Chaplain; was Captain United States Colored Troops; Hospital Chaplain, United States Artillery.

Benjamin Farrington was born in Holden in the year 1792, and lived in this place until his death in 1844. He was through life a mechanic and farmer. His wife was Betsey Brastow; she was born in Holden in the year 1793, where she died at the age of seventy-nine years. Benjamin F. Farrington was born in Holden in the year 1823, and has always made this town his home. He was the fourth child in the family: Eliza Ann, dead; Alden B., Nancy B., Susan E., Billings B., Thomas F., Charlotte C. Mr. Farrington's early educational advantages were very good for the time. While a youth his business was millman and farmer. He was first married to Laura A. Fisher, of Bangor, November 20, 1851, and has one son now living. His second marriage was to Nancy J. Fisher, of Holden, May 22, 1862. His business since his marriage has been farming. He is now first Selectman; was on the Board of Selectmen several years before; also President of the Steam Mill company.

The subject of this sketch, Philander L. Pond's father, was born at Wrentham, Massachusetts, in 1776, and lived there until he was about twenty-one years of age, when he moved to Holden, Maine, and lived here until he died at the age of seventy-eight years. His business through life was that of shoemaker and farmer; his name, Abia Pond. His wife was Cynthia Clewley, born in Holden in the year 1787, where she lived until her death in the year 1857. Philander L. Pond was born at Holden in 1817, May 23; he was the fifth child in the family: Harvey, William C., Increase S., Benjamin B., Mary E., Nancy C., Silas N., Isaac C., Julia R., Angeline M. The early educational advantages of Mr. Pond were the common schools. While a youth he worked at farming. He was married in 1842 to Emily W. Billington, and has six children: Albert A., married to Celia A. Criffin, and has one son. Gideon F., unmarried: his home is transient. Henry L., unmarried: home in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Marcia J., unmarried; Sarah, unmarried; Myra A. F., unmarried. Mr. Pond is a farmer and carpenter; he has been postmaster of the town for thirteen years and still continues in the same office.

Eli Kingsbury was born in the town of Holden in the year 1813, on the 21st day of June. He was the fifth child in the family, and has had two brothers and two sisters—Charles, dead; Willard; Nancy, dead; Julia. Mr. Kingsbury's early educational advantages were very poor. His business while a youth was shoemaking. He was married to Miss Rebecca B. Morse in the year 1843. They have three children living—Susan L., married Abner P. Levenseller, and has five children, all living; Marilla, married to George B. Glover, and has two children living; Nathan G., married to Lura Oreutt, has three children, all living. Mr. Kingsbury's children all reside at home. His business since his marriage has been farming. He has held some of the town offices.

Russell Hart was born in Walpole, Massachusetts, where he lived five years, and then with his father moved to the town of Holden, where he lived until his death, September 26, 1877, at the age of eighty-three years. His business through life was lumbering and farming. His wife was Weltha Britton, born in Raynham, Massachusetts, in the year 1798, where she lived until her marriage, and then came to Holden. She died April 6, 1881, aged eighty-three years, five months, and twenty-four days. William Jacob Hart was the youngest child in the family. He was born in Holden in 1840. The other children were Russell, N. B., Weltha, Maria, Emeline L., Edwin J., Ann S., Andrew J., Henry B., Adalid S., and William J. William J. Hart was married to May H. Gowen the 24th day of March, 1865; her father's name was Reuben Gowen; her mother's maiden name Olive Hanson. By this union they had four children—Mary H., Susan, Fannie H., and Lizzie O. Mr. and Mrs. Hart have two children living—Susie M., not married, and Herbert R., both of whom reside at home.

Admiral J. Rogers was born in Holden in 1820, and died in the same town in 1862. His business through life was a farmer and drover. His wife was Lucy Ann Jones, born in Holden in 1825, and married in 1844. She survives her husband, at the age of fifty-six. Fred M. was born in the year 1845. He was the oldest child in the family. The others were Lucy L. and Harry W. Mr. Rogers's early educational advantages were the common school, which he attended until he was eighteen years of age. While a youth he was a farmer. He was married to Sarah J. Stuart the 8th of February, 1871. His wife's father's name was Simon Stuart; her mother's name was Dorcas T. Malona; the names of her brothers and sisters were Colin M., Theresa A., John A., Samuel F., Fred A., William S., Simon H., Frank N. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have by this union had two children—Venie T. and Arthur V.—who reside at home. His business since his marriage has been that of merchant, drover, and farmer. He has been Third Selectman two years, Collector and Treasurer two years.

John Fisher Robinson was born in Holden, Maine on the 26th of March, 1821, and lived in Holden until his death, which occurred on the 20th of January, 1876. He was a farmer and lumberman. His wife was Mary L. Blake, born in Holden in the year 1824, and lived here until her death in the year 1877, aged about fifty-three years. They were married September 12, 1847. John Preston was the oldest child in the family. He has one brother, Charles Blake Robinson, married to Miss Fannie H. Griffin. Mr. Robinson's early educational advantages were pretty good at the common school of the town. His business while a youth was farming. He was married to Mrs. Fannie H. Breed in the year 1874. His wife's father's name was Reuben Gorven, his mother Olive Hanson, who has children as follows: Susan, Lizzie, Mary, William, and Olive. Mr. Robinson is engaged as a stock drover and farmer. He has been Collector and Treasurer of the town for one year.

Daniel M. Spofford, son of Dr. Amos Spofford, of Georgetown, Massachusetts, was born in Georgetown about the year 1775, where he lived until 1839, when he moved to Dedham, Maine. There he died January 1, 1842, aged about sixty-five years. His business through life was farming and stone-masonry. His wife was Hannah Spofford, daughter of Jacob Spofford. They were married January 19, 1814. Walter K. Spofford was the youngest child in the family, which comprised Harriet, Caroline M., Charles S., Emma C., Hattie, dead; Myron, dead; Winslow P., died in the army. Walter K. was born January 2, 1819. His business while a youth was farming. He was married to Mary M. Hart on the 19th of May, 1842. Her parents were Jacob Hart, Jr., and Nancy Farrington, daughter of Deacon John Farrington. They have had by this union two children, both living. Charles B., married to Josie A. Wilson, has no children. Marcia E., not married, and resides in Holden.

The father of Thomas McLaughlin was born in Londonderry, Ireland in 1766, and came to Sheffield, New Brunswick, where he lived ten or twelve years, and then moved to the town of Tay Creek, where he died February 1, 1880, aged 84 years. His wife was Esther Campbell, born in County Antrim, Ireland, and died in New Brunswick February 7, 1880, aged 93 years. Their children were John, Joseph A., Robert S., Archibald, and Thomas. The latter was born in Sheffield, New Brunswick, in 1821. When twenty years of age he came to Massachusetts and a year and a half later settled in Brewer. There he remained seven or eight years, when he went to Dedham and seventeen years later came to Holden, where he now lives. He was married to Nancy J. Truworthy, and has four children: Ella P., Emma P., Esther D., and Charles A. Ella married Jonas Frye; Emma married Charles Thompson, and Esther D. married Charles Hinley.

HOWLAND.

Howland town occupies a unique position, above all other towns in the county—not only as being at the mouth of the most important tributary of the Penobscot, but as lying between the Penobscot and a corner of the county. No other town thus bridges over the space between the noble river and any territory that is foreign to Penobscot. Its favorable situation, especially with reference to the rivers, must some time make it a populous and prosperous town. It is situated twenty-two miles north of Bangor, the western part of Howland being nearly due north of the eastern part of Bangor.

Howland is bounded on the north and northwest by Maxfield; on the northeast by Mattamiscotis; on the east by the Penobscot, beyond which lies Enfield; on the south by Edinburg and a very narrow strip of Lagrange; and on the west by Lagrange. At the northwest corner it is touched by the town of Medford, in Piscataquis county. Its boundaries, except on the river side, are in five straight lines. That on the northeast is not quite one and two-thirds miles long; on the northwest five and one-fourth; on the north, between Howland and Maxfield, a little less than one mile; on the west two and two-thirds miles; on the south, a continuous line from Lagrange to the river, nearly five and one-sixth miles. The greatest length of the town, from the north corner to the south line, is six and five-sixths miles; the greatest width, from the corner on Piscataquis county, straight to the Penobscot, is six and one-eighth miles. The width from the northeast corner, on the Penobscot, straight across, is about four miles.

A number of the islands, already noted as off the west front of Enfield, are in the river opposite Howland, as Gordon, Pine, and several others. Moon Island is just above the northeast corner.

The chief water of Howland is of course the Penobscot, which needs no further description. The banks of the river, in this part of its course, are low and very beautiful. It is joined in this town by the well-known river Piscataquis, which gives the name to the county through which it mainly flows. This stream has several headwaters in the west of that county, and flows with a general easterly direction to the border of Penobscot, where it makes its way eastward through Maxfield, and in a winding southeasterly course about five miles through Howland to the larger stream at Howland village. About a dozen islands—three of them of some size, and one at least half a mile long—are in the upper part of its course through Howland. It receives in this town the Little Seboois Stream, outlet of the Little Seboois Lake, flowing a very little way in Howland from the northwest part of the pond, then in Maxfield about two miles, taking there the waters of the Seboois Stream, and flowing one mile in Howland to the Piscataquis just at the head of the islands. The Little Seboois Lake, out of which this tributary flows, is a beautiful sheet of water half a mile south of the north corner of the town, wholly within the limits of Howland, a mile and a half long by an average of half a mile broad. A third of a mile east of it passes another and larger Seboois Stream, which rises in Township No. 3, flows across the northeast angle of Maxfield and the southwest corner of Mattamiscotis, from which it receives a small tributary a little below the Howland line, and thence flows southward three miles to the Piscataquis below the islands. Almost immediately at the foot of the islands, from the southward, comes in the Meadow Brook, which half a mile from its mouth is formed by the union of the North and South Branches, the former of which rises on the Maxfield line, and flows south of east two miles to the junction. The latter heads very near the other, but flows south two miles, then, receiving a tiny affluent, makes a semi-circular bend, near the end of which it has another tributary, this from the north, and runs thence to the union with the North Branch—a total course of about five miles. Crossing the northeast angle of the town is the Gordon Brook, which rises in Townships No. 2 and 3, and runs across Mattamiscotis and this corner a mile and a half in Howland to the mouth on the Penobscot opposite Gordon's Island. Close to its mouth a small brook from the westward reaches it. Two-thirds of a mile below, on the Howland side, begins the curved channel for logs and lumber known as "Merrill Run Round," which is about two miles long, a third of a mile distant from the river at the middle of the arc, and re-enters the river at Pine Island. When a little more than half-way round, the Mile Brook, so named from its length, connects the Run Round with the Piscataquis. On the south side of this river near its mouth, opposite Howland village, a natural channel called "Ellerson Run Round" courses a mile and a half to the Penobscot near the southeast corner of the town. Across the opposite or southwest corner runs a short section of Hoyt Brook, which makes thence into Edinburg.

The needs of the people of Howland have yet called for few roads. The western river highway traverses its east side the whole length of the town, with a break, however, at the mouth of the Piscataquis, but crossing the Ellerson and Merrill Run Rounds. Just south of that river it sends a branch up the southwest bank into Maxfield and Piscataquis counties, and another westward, which at the town line joins the Bunker Hill road, which comes down from Maxfield and runs about half a mile across the angle of Howland. From Howland village another highway runs near the northeast bank of the Piscataquis into Maxfield and beyond. Nearly four miles from the village, at the school-house, it sends a branch route up the Sebouis, on the east side of the lake, across the corners of Mattamiscontis and Maxfield, into Township No. 2.

Howland village is at the junction of the Piscataquis with the Penobscot River, nearly one and a half miles above the southeast corner of the town, and a mile below Pine Island. Here are the town post-office, School No. 2, two stores, a saw-mill, a hotel, a shop or two, and a cemetery a little north of the village. Settlements are scattered somewhat thinly for a short distance north and south of it, but the denser population is on the Piscataquis road in the west of the town, between the Sebouis and the Little Sebouis Streams.

The surface of Howland is varied—somewhat high and broken in places, but with rich intervalles along the noble rivers which traverse its territory. The agricultural capabilities of the town are therefore quite superior to those of some other towns in the county.

EARLY HISTORY.

Some time before the year 1820, Major William Hammett, of Massachusetts, and one William Emerson, purchased this tract of the State in which the former had his home. By 1820 a number of settlers were already upon its soil. The following list of Howland pioneers, for the first ten years of its civilized history, has been made up:

Came in 1818—John Bryer, John Hook, Jeremiah Douglass, Jacob Doe.

1819—Jeremiah Fifield, Jonathan Chase, Charles Davis, William Douglass.

1820—Joseph Emery, Levi Lancaster, Dennis Carpenter.

1821—Joshua Carpenter, Thomas Tourtillott, Bart Moulton.

1822—John Babcock.

1823—John Smart, Duty Inman, Daniel Inman, Stephen Tourtillott.

1824—John Shaw, William Hammett, William C. Hammett, Rufus Atkinson, Moses Emerson, John Haley, William R. Miller, Tristram Scammon, and James Merrill.

1828—William S. Lee.

Major Hammett, one of the original proprietors and of the colonists of 1824, was a strong man and valued citizen, reputed to be of Puritan blood and closely allied by descent to the Pilgrim Fathers.

The Hon. William C. Hammett was son of the Major. He became conspicuous as a politician and an office-holder, serving as Representative in the State Legislature, as Collector of Customs at Bangor during General Taylor's administration, and in various other prominent public positions, holding one or another of them until near his death in 1876.

Hon. William R. Miller, also of the immigration of 1824, became a large property-holder in this region, investing largely in timber lands and mill property. He was for a time a member of the State Legislature.

Col. William S. Lee, the only colonist of 1828 whose name has been preserved, obtained his military rank in the State militia. He was also a Representative in the State Legislature, and was otherwise a prominent citizen.

It will be seen thus that Howland for its population has had a large share of intelligent and successful residents.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

Howland was erected as a town February 10, 1826. Plymouth was the only other town in this county incorporated the same year.

The last census taken before the incorporation of Howland—that of 1820—reckoned it with Maxfield, and found the population of both to be 150. In 1830 the former town had 329, and the latter 186, a proportion of about 16 to 9. It thus appears that when Maxfield was erected in 1824, or Howland in 1826, that the latter must have had the larger population, as it has had most of the time since. In 1840 it had 322 people; in 1850, 214; in 1860, 174; in 1870, 176; and in 1880, 137.

The number of polls in 1860 was 46, in 1870 41, and 42 in 1880. Estates the same years, $34,629, $40,665, and $30,343.

The first minister to preach regularly in Howland was Elder Elias McGregor, a Baptist, who was settled about 1839.

Lumbering was formerly a large and brisk business in this town, and there is still an immense amount of booming and driving annually upon the rivers within its borders. A general store is kept at the post-office.

The officers of Howland for 1881 were: A. H. Weymouth, W. C. Hill, N. Emery, Selectmen; H. N. Weymouth, Town Clerk; F. Davis, Treasurer; W. C. Hill, O. C. Sweat, Constables; W. C. Hill, School Supervisor; E. R. Bailey, A. H. Weymouth (Quorum), Justices.

Mr. Weymouth is the Postmaster of the town.

Mr. Japhet Emery, of Howland, is a son of Joseph and Lydia Emery (nee Lydia Bryer). Joseph Emery was a son of Jotham Emery, who came to Maxfield from Shapleigh, Maine, about 1822 or 1823. Joseph and Lydia Emery had seven children, viz.: Betsey E., Deborah, Lucretia, Ada, Bethiah, Japhet, and Lydia. Mr. Emery always followed the business of farming. He died in Maxfield in 1865. Mrs. Emery is still living with her son in Maxfield. Japhet Emery was born April 26, 1838, in Howland. Here he has always lived, and followed farming for a business. He married Roxannah Sawyer, daughter of Andrew and Harriet Sawyer (nee Harriet Lombard). The Sawyer family in this county spring from two brothers, who came from England. One settled in the West, and the other, named David, settled in Maine and raised up five sons, viz.: David, Joel, John, Abner, and William, and two daughters—Sally and Eleanor. The son Joel had ten children, named Eleanor, Joel, Hepsibeth, Andrew S., Nancy, Polly, Betsey, Daniel, Hannah, and Tristram. Andrew S. was father of fourteen children—Alphia, Joel, Edmund, Luther, Andrew, Freeman, Thomas, Elizabeth, Arthur, Marshall, Daniel, Ruth, Gorham, and Ira. Andrew Sawyer had seven children—Roxannah, wife of J. Emery; Franklin L., Ether C. G., A. Freeman, Hattie A., Andrew Y., and Wanietta. Mr. and Mrs. Emery have two children—Ralph Wald and Harriet L. Mr. Emery owns a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres, located on the bank of the Piscataquis River. He has served as Town Treasurer of his town.

Mr. Emory R. Bailey, of Howland, is a son of James and Elizabeth Bailey, who came from New Brunswick to Phillips, Maine, in an early day. They had nine children, viz.: James A., Eliza A., Henry E., Rebecca, Abner S., Catharine, Mary A, John C., and Emory R. Mr. Bailey moved from Phillips to Howland many years ago. He died in 1861. He was a farmer. Emory R. Bailey was born July 8, 1831, in Phillips, Maine. He came to Howland when a lad with his father. On becoming of age he settled on the old place, and lived a few years. He was also engaged in trade two years. Mr. Bailey has followed farming more than any other business. He married for his first wife Anna S. Harden, by whom he had two children—Edgar, deceased, and Anna, also deceased. Mrs. Bailey and both children died in 1857, with diphtheria. Mr. Bailey married for his second wife Miss Frances Emerson. They had three children, viz., Harry J., Fred A., and Grace H. Mr. Bailey has held prominent town offices, having been on the Board of Selectmen several terms, and Town Clerk for seventeen years in succession, and Justice for fifteen years.

Moses Emerson, grandfather of John Emerson, came over to this country from England with two brothers. The three came with their father, whose name is not now known by John. Moses settled first in Haverhill, Massachusetts, and afterward in Durham, Maine. Two of his sons, John and William, came to Bangor. Moses Emerson was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He was a Commissary, and died soon after the declaration of independence, in Philadelphia. He married Lydia Burnham, who died in Durham, New Hampshire, in 1823, aged seventy-seven. John Emerson died October 4, 1822, aged forty-four years. William died in March, 1860, aged eighty-two years, both unmarried. The surviving members of the family are Moses Emerson, Howland, Maine, Mrs. Samuel, of Orono, Albert, of Bangor, Louisa, now in Holyoke, Massachusetts, Lydia B., John, residing in Howland, Susan, wife of Mr. Griffin, Boston, Massachusetts, Mrs. Caroline E. Young, of Bangor, and George W., of Nevada. John Emerson is unmarried. He was born in Durham, New Hampshire, in 1815. He lost his sense of hearing at the age of four years, by scarlet fever, and is therefore not able to talk, though he is a very intelligent man. When fourteen years of age he attended the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Hartford, Connecticut, where he was graduated in 1838. The same year he came to Howland and settled as a farmer. The writer found him gathering in his fine crop of corn and apples, and thought as he left him what a grand thing schools for the deaf and dumb are. This man's life would have been a blank but for such a school.

Mr. William C. Hill, of Howland, is a son of William and Abigail Hill (nee Abigail Dennett). William Hill was a native of Waterboro, Maine, a son of John Hill, a Revolutionary soldier. He had four children, viz.: William C.; Mary, widow of the late William Lowell, of St. Paul, Minnesota; Melinda, now Mrs. Levi Newcomb, of Oldtown, Maine; John, now of California. Mr. Hill is now living, being eighty-seven years of age. He has always been a farmer. He now makes his home with William C., in Howland. Mrs. Hill died in 1872. William C. Hill was born July 22, 1825. He received a common school education and first settled in Lowell, Massachusetts, where he married Susan L. Abbott, of Bangor, daughter of Joseph and Sally Abbott. Mr. Hill made a voyage to California in 1849, and spent about a year, engaged in mining, hunting, and exploring. Returning from California he made a voyage around the world, and returned to New York City and engaged in box manufacturing. Went to Lowell in 1852 and worked four years as foreman of their river work for O. Allen & Co. In 1856 he moved to Bangor and engaged in farming for six years, when he sold out and moved to Howland. In 1864 he made a tour through the Western States and returned to Howland, where he has since lived. He owns a fine farm on the Piscataquis, of 103 acres. He made veterinary surgery a study, and has been very successful in its practice. He is very fond of hunting, and has killed fifty-two bears since he lived in Howland. Mr. Hill has held most of the prominent town offices, and is now on the Board of Selectmen, Supervisor of Schools, and Constable. In 1879 he was elected to the House of Representatives, and again in 1880, on the Greenback ticket. Mr. and Mrs. Hill have no children, but have one adopted daughter, Annie.

HUDSON.

Hudson is an even township of thirty-six square miles, conveniently situated six miles north of Bangor, by the east line of Glenburn, seven and one-half miles from the Penobscot River, and but three and a half miles at the northeast corner from the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad. Its neighbor on the north is Bradford, which alone separates it from Orneville, Piscataquis county; on the east are Alton and a short breadth of Oldtown; on the south a little more of Oldtown, the whole upper width of Glenburn, and about half of Kenduskeag; and on the west Corinth. It is beautifully regular in its formation, each of its sides being an even six miles in length.

The Little Pushaw Pond is the only water of size that lies wholly within the town. It lies in the northwest angle of Hudson, with its northwestern extremity three-fourths of a mile below the north line and but one-fourth of a mile from the west boundary. It stretches east of south one and a half miles long, and two-thirds of a mile in greatest breadth. The easternmost outline of this pond has a singular resemblance to a grotesque face, with a proboscis of a nose and an exaggerated mouth. A tributary one mile long comes in from Corinth at the northwestern extremity; and for some three miles across the northeast angle of Corinth and a mile in Hudson the Bear Brook comes in at the opposite extremity or foot of the lake, receiving a little before reaching the lake the West Brook from its heads two miles south, and at the pond receiving an outlet as the Pushaw Stream in its upper section. This runs southeasterly across the town four and a half miles to the head of Pushaw Lake. About midway of its course at Hudson village, it receives from Bradford and the central north of Hudson the waters of the Mohawk Brook, which is joined by the Forbes Brook a mile below the town line. Further down the stream receives three small affluents from the north; and above Hudson village half a mile the Beaver Brook comes in, flowing north from Glenburn entirely across the central south half of the town. One and a half miles west of this is a two-mile tributary to the Baker Brook, which itself flows for half a mile across the southwest corner of this town. In the middle eastern part of Hudson heads a small affluent of the main Pushaw Stream. At the southeast of the upper section of Pushaw Lake, in this town, a tributary comes in from Oldtown.

The part of this famous sheet of water which lies in Hudson is two miles long, one and one-eighth miles in greatest breadth, and one-fourth of a mile at its narrowest on the neck connecting it, near the southeast corner of the town, with the main sheet of the lake. It is a superb stretch of water, adding not a little to the attractions of the towns in which it lies.

Although Hudson is so near to Bangor, to the Penobscot, and to the railroad, it is as yet rather sparsely inhabited, especially in the northeast quarter. The principal road is the old stage-route from Bangor across Glenburn and through Hudson in a generally north course to and into Bradford. One and a half miles west of north from Hudson village, a branch highway strikes off northwest to a point near the northwest corner of the town, where it turns to the southwest, and joins a through north and south road in the east of Corinth. A mile from its point of departure it sends off a north road into Bradford, and, about a mile and a half further, another into the same town. Between these roads, one-third of a mile from the former, is School No. 4. Half a mile south of Hudson village a road begins, which runs due west past School No. 2, and southwest beyond the town line, to the South Corinth post-office. One and a half miles further south, at School No. 3, another westward road starts off, which two and a fourth miles to the west, at School No. 5, crosses a north and south road from the highway last before mentioned about due south into Glenburn. A mile further it has the terminus of another north and south road simply connecting the two east and west roads, and beginning on the other at School No. 2 over half a mile from the town line. Near the southern end of this the main road angles southwestward, across the corner of Corinth into Kenduskeag. One-fourth of a mile before reaching the town line, a southeast road, making an angle to the east at School No. 6, connects with the north and south road crossing at School No. 6. At Hudson village an important east and west road comes in from Orono, across Oldtown and an angle of Alton, receiving another near a church hard upon the town line, coming down through Alton from the northeast. About half-way across it passes School No. 7.

Hudson village is on the Pushaw Stream, no great distance from the mouth of Beaver Brook on the west, and its eastern edge at the mouth of Mohawk Brook. The place is very happily situated, at the exact geographical centre of the town. It has the only post-office in Hudson, a saw-mill, a shingle-mill, and a saw- and shingle-mill, two stores, cooper and other shops. Some shops are also found in other parts of the town, as at School No. 3, and midway between that and Hudson village.

The soil in Hudson is rather stony and hard, but furnishes much good grass and hay for stock. Formerly the valuable timber on the lands prompted most of the inhabitants to engage in lumbering; but of late years the tendency has been rather to the pursuits of agriculture.

Notwithstanding the existence of several mills at the village, but one person in the town has of late been reported as occupied in manufacturing lumber.

The township which constitutes Hudson was purchased at an early day, of the State of Massachusetts, by William Sullivan, of Boston. In 1800 white settlement began to arrive and locate. Messrs. Luke Wilder, Wareham Briggs, David Pierce, Tristram Warner, and others, were among the first settlers. It was long before the growth of the settlement warranted even the erection of a plantation; but after about a quarter of a century, in 1824, the tract was incorporated under the name of Jackson Plantation. It did not long remain in the transition stage, however; but the very next year, February 25, 1825, it became a full-fledged town, though not under its present name. It was called "Kirkland," and subsisted under this title for nearly thirty years, or until 1854, when by legislative resolve it took its present name of "Hudson."

In 1810 the township had 54 persons within its bounds; in 1820 it had 72. Kirkland town had 249 in 1830, 351 in 1840, and 717 in 1850. In 1860 Hudson comprised 771 people, 739 in 1870, and 659 in 1880.

The polls of Hudson counted 159 in 1860, 152 in 1870, and 185 in 1880.

The valuation of the estates of the town for these years, respectively, was $70,360, $101,497, and $93,806.

One hotel is kept in the town—the Hudson House. By the reports to the Maine Register for 1881, Hudson had one lumber manufacturer, one carriage- and one cabinet-maker, one shoemaker, two smiths, one butcher, two general stores, and one coal-dealer.

The officers of the town for 1881 were: Henry W. Briggs, David Potter, George I. Smith, Selectmen; Henry W. Briggs, Town Clerk; Joseph Goodwin, Treasurer; Elihu B. Colomy, Joseph Robbins, Samuel A. Goodwin, Constables; Andrew J. Pierce, Collector; George W. Howe, School Supervisor; George W. Howe, Henry M.

Beale, B. F. Brookings, H. W. Briggs (Quorum), George W. Howe (Tial), Justices.

Mr. H. M. Beale is Postmaster. A sketch of his life and family is subjoined.

Hon. Charles Beale was born in Kennebec county, 1806. He married Laura Chandler, of Minot, and came to Penobscot county about the year 1857, and settled in Bangor, where he remained about three years. In 1840 he came to Hudson and settled on the farm now owned by Isaiah Davis. He has followed the business of lumbering and trading, and is still engaged in the lumber business. Has held the office of Selectman, Clerk, and Treasurer of the town of Hudson for many years. He also represented his class in the Maine Legislature three terms, and has been twice elected State Senator of his district. In politics he is a Republican. He is the father of seven children: Llewellyn C., died in Hudson; Henry M., married Laura E. Briggs and lives in Hudson; Howard C., died in Hudson; Everett P., lives in Corinth; Mary J., lives in Hudson, and Emma, died in Hudson. Henry M., was born in Hudson in 1838, where he received a common school education. He also attended the academies at Bucksport and Hampden. In 1858 he went to Washington via the Isthmus, where he engaged in mining and trading and where he remained ten years, when he returned to his native place and purchased an interest in a store in company with H. W. Briggs, where he remained two years. He was afterwards in company with L. K. Webber two years, and in 1875 built the store in which he is now doing business, and purchased a new stock of dry goods, notions, &c. In 1871 he was appointed postmaster under Grant's administration, and has held the office up to the present time; has also held the office of Selectman two terms and the office of Town Clerk seven years. In 1880 he married Laura E. Briggs, a native of Bangor. In politics is a Republican.

KENDUSKEAG.

Kenduskeag enjoys the singular honor of being the smallest town in the county, with the exception of Veazie and perhaps of Brewer and Mattamiscontis. It was formed in 1852, by cutting into the towns of Glenburn and Levant, which were each about an even township, and making from the eastern part of the latter and the western part of the former a new town. A slightly larger section, however, was cut from Glenburn, the south line of Kenduskeag on that side dropping just one hundred rods below the south line of the Levant section. Each section is in the shape of a parallelogram, and they are very nearly equal in width. The north line of the town is four and a half miles long; the east line four miles; the west line, as already noted, one hundred rods shorter; and the south line, measuring in the sides of the angles at the break on the Levant and Glenburn line, nearly five miles, although this part of the town is no wider than the north part.

Kenduskeag is bounded on the north by Hudson; on the east by Glenburn; on the south by Glenburn and Levant; and on the west by Levant. It is but two miles from Bangor, from corner to corner. It contains but about twenty-one square miles, or 13,440 acres, "more or less."

The principal water of this town is the important Kenduskeag Stream, which gives the town its name. It intersects it completely in a course of nearly five miles, somewhat winding, but generally east of south. It enters about a mile from the northwest corner, and very near Higginsville, flows through that place and Kenduskeag village, nearly in the centre of the town, and out into Glenburn nearly one and a half miles from the southeast corner, returning into Kenduskeag after a short curve in Glenburn, and after a mile's further course making a final exit from the town one hundred rods above the southeast corner. Three quarters of a mile before its former departure from Kenduskeag it receives the waters of the Baker Brook, flowing from Hudson for about a mile a little below the north line of Kenduskeag, and thence almost due south, with a general distance of a mile from the east line of the town. About as far below the north line it is expanded into a good-sized mill-pond by the shingle-mill at the lower end of the pond. Fifty or sixty rods below the mouth of Baker Brook, on the other or west side, the Kenduskeag takes in the Nolan Brook, which heads in the western central part of the town, and flows southeast and south of east a little more than three miles to its mouth. Nearly across the northwest angle of Kenduskeag, for a northeast course of about one and a half miles, the Evelith Brook, heading in the central north part of Levant, makes its way to the stream, emptying its waters about one-third of a mile below the north line. These are all the streams of Kenduskeag worth mention.

The following pleasing poetical sketch, relating to a point upon the principal stream of this town, although not within its limits, may fitly find place here. It was contributed some time ago by Mr. W. H. Rice, to the Boston Journal:

THE LOVER'S LEAP. A LEGEND.

From the waters of the Kenduskeag, flowing through Bangor, there rises to a great height a massive cliff, the brow of which overhangs the stream, and which has long been known as "Lover's Leap."

Down in the bosom of Maine,
Where Kenduskeag still flows thro' the hills,
In the days when the Indian held reign
We're given this legend that thrills
The listener's heart.
Long ago,
When the settler first paddled this stream,
Long ere the vast woods were laid low,
And the red man awoke from his dream,—
The smoke circled up to the sky
From a wigwam where lived Raven Hair;
There were none of the band but would die
For the sake of this maiden most fair,
For the love of the chief's only child.
Though twenty brief summers had flown,
On no brave of the band had she smiled,
But to all her young heart was as stone.

The father oft grieved as he thought
Of his daughter so cold and so proud,
And entreated to better her lot,—
Yield her heart and her hand to White Cloud;
But coldly she bowed the fair head
And answered his wishes with "nay;"
For she'd promised another to wed,
And she begged the stern chief to say "yea."

"My daughter, what stranger has won
The pride of thy father's brave band?"
She answered—"The settler—the son Of the paleface—the brave Iron Hand."
The fierce warriors stole forth that same night
To the town where the villagers lay;
But swifter than they in her flight
Raven Hair thro' the wood sped away.

At his post her young lover she found,
In a breath all their danger she told;
About her his strong arms he wound,
And kissed the fair cheeks pale and cold.
"Iron Hand, for thy life thou must flee,
There is war 'tween the red and the white;—
So risk not thy welfare for me—
Forsake Raven Hair this sad night."

"Forsake thee, my own!"—and his breath
Fell hot on the dusky fair cheek;
"Not in life, but united in death,"
His husky voice choked nor could speak
"In death we escape the dire hate
Of thy father, and scorn of the white;—
Yonder stream cannot tell of our fate,— Shall we go to the hunting-grounds bright?"

In answer her hand pressed his own,
Together they turned toward the stream,
Till they stood on the cliff high and lone,
Like a moonlit vision or dream.
A moment two figures as one
Were darkly portrayed on the sky;
Then a plunge through the air—it was done:
'Twas the depth of their love e'en to die.

The surface of Kenduskeag is quite even, and is easily cultivated. It is accounted a good agricultural town.

This town is moderately well settled, except in the eastern or Glenburn section, which has thus far been almost totally neglected by the residents. Kenduskeag, on the stream of that name, and near the geographical centre of the town, has the only post-office in the town, although a village exists in the northwest part, mainly on the northeast bank of the Kenduskeag, and bears the name of Higginsville. From the post-office radiate all the principal roads of the town. The old Charleston and Bangor stage-road, and one other highway, come in across Glenburn from the direction of Bangor, one of them close to the Kenduskeag Stream, and unite at the southeast end of the village. From the northernmost of these a road branches off about one-half of a mile from the east line, and runs north into Hudson. Just north of the bridge over the Kenduskeag, near the southeast corner of the town, the road from Glenburn post-office crosses it, and goes on a mile to an end at the other Bangor road, in the bend of the stream. On the other side of the river a road runs south and southwest from the village, passing a cemetery at the edge of town and School No. 7 a mile and a quarter further, and ending in Levant a mile or more beyond that. West of this another road, running more nearly southwest, passes from Kenduskeag out nearly at the southwest corner, and goes to South Levant. It passes School No. 9 about a mile from the corner. Another road from the post-office runs westward and southwestward to West Levant, sending off a branch to the cross-roads southwest of Higginsville and Corinth a mile out, and another near the town line, which crosses the former below Higginsville, and runs north into Hudson. Another from this place makes off northeast across the Kenduskeag, and into Hudson at a distance of about a mile and a half from its beginning. Finally, a highway runs up and tolerably near the east bank of the Kenduskeag to the north line of the town, with a branch starting off a little north of the village, and running east and northeast near the mill-pond to and into Hudson. At School No. 6 a branch runs through Higginsville and northwest into Hudson.

Higginsville has a store, a saw- and shingle-mill, and two or three factories and shops. At Kenduskeag village are the Town Hall, the public school-house, a Congregational and Baptist church occupied in common, a Universalist church, a hotel, and a considerable number of mills, factories, and shops.

The first settlers in the Kenduskeag territory were Major (afterwards General) Moses Hodsdon, in 1801; Recallis Clark, in 1803; Daniel Ladd, Samuel E. Dutton (afterwards the first Judge of Probate at Bangor, from whom Glenburn town received its first name), Dr. Isaac Case, Thomas Griffin, and Mark Little.

The town was incorporated February 20, 1832. As is well known, the name it bears is that which was originally given to the Plantation on the Penobscot, about the head of tidewater, subsequently erected into the town of Bangor. This is the first and only instance in the county, we believe, where a town has taken a plantation-name from any part of the county, not previously its own.

Previous to 1852 the censuses of the present tract of Kenduskeag were taken with those of Levant and Glenburn. In 1860 its population was 816; in 1870 it was 770; in 1880, 650. The polls in these years were 184, 195, and 193; estates, $119,744, $171,230, and $181,700.

The Congregational church in this town was organized December 23, 1834. Its pastors have been the Rev. Messrs. Robert Page, Charles B. Smith, Solomon Bixley, and Amos Redlon. The other clergymen of the town are reported as the Revs. Loyal Spaulding, Thomas B. Robinson, William Day, W. G. Goucher, John Higgins, Baptist (church organized in 1828); F. A. Hodsdon, Jerome Harris, Elbridge Wellington, Moses Goodrich, Robert Blacker, Universalist, the last of whom is still pastor; and J. J. Banks, Free Baptist.

The physicians of the town have been Drs. Isaac Case, Hiram C. Baxter, Ambrose Woodcock, Hall Davis, C. F. Gardiner, all now deceased except Drs. Baxter and Gardiner.

Lawyers—Solyman Heath, Abraham and Daniel Sanborn, S. S. Warren, Thomas B. Paine, Gridley T. Estes, Josiah Crosby, Charles Davis, and C. P. Roberts. There is now no attorney in the town; but there are two notaries. Hon. Levi Bradley, formerly resident here, was State Land Agent in 1842-6, and was also Sheriff of the county during his residence at Bangor.

Kenduskeag has much good water-power, and it was formerly largely utilized for manufacturing shoes, castings, and other important articles of commerce. Of late there have been in the town one manufacturer of lumber, one of shingles and cooperage, three others of cooperage, one of stoves and agricultural implements, one of boots and shoes, one of harness, trunks, etc., one grist-mill, one tinman, one tailor, one undertaker, one auctioneer, one milliner, two dressmakers, four smiths, three general stores, two groceries, one jewelry, one drug store, one hardware and crockery store, one boot and shoe store, one stove and tin store, and one millinery shop. One hotel, the Kenduskeag, is kept in the town. The Kenduskeag Cheese Factory has been in successful operation for nearly ten years.

The more prominent societies in the town are the Kenduskeag Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, and the David White Post, No. 19, Grand Army of the Republic, which was organized March 31, 1868. There were lately also in existence the Kenduskeag Lodge, No. 137, Independent of Order Good Templars, and the Mystic Tie Grange, No. 58, Patrons of Hushandry.

The Federal and town officers in Kenduskeag in 1881 were: F. A. H. Stackpole, postmaster; B. F. Higgins, Albert Hodsdon, F. A. H. Stackpole, Selectmen; F. A. H. Stackpole, Town Clerk; Greenleaf Harvey, Treasurer; W. K. Nason, Constable and Collector; W. K. Nason, T. P. Batchelder, E. F. Nason, Constables; M. L. Fisher, School Supervisor; T. P. Batchelder, E. B. Stackpole, F. A. H. Stackpole, Quorum; W. C. Spratt, Trial—Justices.

A WAR BIOGRAPHY.

The following highly complimentary notice of a native of this town is comprised in the military biographies contained in the reports of the Adjutant-General of the State for the war period:

CAPTAIN ISAAC WINSLOW CASE was born in Kenduskeag, where the larger portion of his life was spent, and was a graduate of Bowdoin College in the class of 1848. Of the character he sustained in college, a classmate, now a professor in a theological seminary, writes: "He was generous, warm-hearted, social, a true friend, and thoroughly trustworthy. He excelled as a writer, expressing fresh and pertinent thoughts with ease and grace. He had by nature the temper and spirit which incite to brave deeds. He had, also, the self-control and power of leading others—the decision, energy, and boldness, as well as the quick sympathies which qualify for command. He could not stand idly by when there was a call to do and dare. In his college days he yearned for action, and sometimes was almost impatient for the conflict. He lived not to be, but to do; and his life culminated in fulfilling the inmost desires of his youth." Mr. Case enlisted as a private, September 10, 1862, and before leaving camp at Bangor was elected Captain of Company H, Twenty-second Regiment, upon which he was presented by his fellow-townsmen with a fine sword and sash. The regiment left Bangor October 21st, and in a few weeks joined the army of General Banks at New Orleans. The Southern climate, so trying to most of our soldiers, had but little apparent effect upon the health of Captain Case. Just before the surrender of Port Hudson, he joined the storming party of a thousand volunteers to make a contemplated desperate attack upon that stronghold; but before the time appointed for the charge he was attacked by the congestive fever, of which he died on the 6th of July, 1863. His remains were taken to New Orleans the following morning, there embalmed, and forwarded to his friends at Kenduskeag, where they were buried with military honors. His character during all the trials and hardships of army life is reported as having been that of a true and self-denying Christian soldier. He left behind him a record the purity and beauty of which can never be tarnished.

The following further notice of Captain Case is included in the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College:

Class of 1848—Isaac W. Case, born in Kenduskeag, November, 1822; was a teacher of youth two or three years, and then settled upon a farm in Kenduskeag, where he resided when he entered the service, October, 1862, Captain of Company H, Twenty-Second Maine; served under General Banks at Port Hudson. He had volunteered as one of a storming party, but was seized with congestive fever, and, after a few hours' sickness, died. He bore the reputation of a brave soldier and a Christian man. Faithful as a soldier, he was true to his profession as a soldier of the cross, exerting an important influence for good over his command.

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Oliver K. Nason, of Kenduskeag, is a son of Edward and Susan Nason (nee Susan Small). His grandfather, John Nason, was a native of Berwick, Maine. Edward and Susan Nason had seven children, viz: Oliver K.; Aaron; Richard; Albion; Mary, wife of Josiah Mayo, of Portland, Maine; Sarah, deceased; Eliza, widow of George Murch, of Saccarappa, Maine; Susan M., deceased. Mr. Nason followed lumbering for a business. He spent most of his life in Limington, Maine, and died in Kenduskeag in 1856. Mrs. Nason died January 23, 1868. Oliver K. Nason was born December 14, 1809, in Limington, York county, Maine. He first settled in South Standish, Maine, where he lived about three years, and carried on the cooper business. From there he moved to Levant (now Kenduskeag) in March, 1833, where he lived about two years, and then moved to Bradford, in this county, and lived three years, being there engaged in lumbering. In Bradford he married Miss Sarah J. Holland, daughter of Daniel Holland, of Dover, Maine. About 1840 he moved back to Kenduskeag, where he has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Nason have had six children, viz: Susan, deceased; William H., deceased; William K., now in Kenduskeag; Margaret A., wife of Captain George W. Wooster; Richard M., now in Leadville, Colorado; and Edward O., of Kenduskeag. Mr. Nason was for many years an officer in the militia, rising to the position of Colonel. He represented his class in the Legislature in 1854.

Captain Elijah B. Stackpole, of Kenduskeag, is a son of James and Abigail Stackpole (nee Abigail Brock). His grandfather was Stephen Stackpole, of Somersworth, New Hampshire. James and Abigail Stackpole had seven children, viz: Elijah B., Lydia, Martha, Mary E., William E., Sarah, and John, all of whom are living except Lydia and Martha. Mr. Stackpole was a tailor by trade, as was his father. He lived in South Berwick the latter part of his life, and died some eight years since. Captain Elijah B. Stackpole was born July 10, 1804, in Somersworth, New Hampshire. He first settled in South Berwick as a tradesman, having served an apprenticeship in Portsmouth, New Hampshire. He lived in South Berwick three years, when he moved to Pittsfield, New Hampshire, and from there to Buxton, Maine. He lived in Buxton four years, when he moved to Bangor, and from Bangor he came to Levant, now Kenduskeag, in 1834, where he has since lived, following the business of store-keeper, hotel-keeper, etc. Since 1847 he has lived on a farm, working at other kinds of business, as surveying, etc. He married Nancy E. Wentworth, of South Berwick, Maine. They have had five children, viz: Henry A., of Kenduskeag; Charles C., deceased; William H. H., of Kenduskeag; Frederick A. H., postmaster of Kenduskeag, and Edwin M., deceased. Mr. Stackpole has held the office of Deputy Sheriff two terms, Justice of the Peace and Quorum for twenty-one years, and Trial Justice for many years. He is now seventy-seven years of age, and is at present Trial Justice. He is a man widely known in this section, having been for many years a captain of the militia. He has held many other town offices; was for five years a member of the State Board of Agriculture.

Royal S. Hodsdon, of Kenduskeag, was born July 26, 1834. His father, Jonathan B. Hodsdon, now living in Kenduskeag, was a native of Levant when it comprised Kenduskeag. He married Sarah Frees. They have five children, viz: Royal S.; Elmina F., wife of Francis Harvey, of Kenduskeag; Augusta A., now Mrs. G. Harvey, of this town; Nellie and Edwin C., twins. Nellie married William K. Nason, of Kenduskeag. Edwin lives in Boston. Mr. Hodsdon is a cooper by trade, and is still living in Kenduskeag. Royal S. Hodsdon, the oldest son of this family, was born in this town and has always lived here. He married Julia A. Elliott, daughter of Samuel and Abigail Elliott, of Kenduskeag. They have one son, Charlie E. Mr. Hodsdon learned the cooper trade, and worked at that until about 1853, when he engaged in trade here in Kenduskeag, which he followed about eight years, or until about 1862. He engaged in the jewelry business, in connection with his other business, in 1862, and now follows it exclusively. He is also a filer of saws. He lives on the Bangor road leading through the village of Kenduskeag.

Abner F. Clements, of Kenduskeag, was born April 1, 1847. He is a son of the late John C. Clements, who was born in Frankfort, Maine, and married Lucy Littlefield, daughter of Daniel and Rebecca Littlefield, of Winterport, Maine. They had seven sons, viz: Edmund, now of Levant; Charles L., now of Winterport, Maine; George M., now in Corinth, Maine; John, Jr., deceased; Daniel W., deceased, died in the army; Albert, deceased; and Abner. Mr. Clements was a farmer, and invented the Clements horse hoe, which he manufactured during the last years of his life. He died in 1869. Mrs. Clements now lives with her son Abner in Kenduskeag, on the old homestead. Abner F. Clements married for his first wife Melissa Towle, of Hartland, who died June 13, 1874. She had two children, viz: Effie J., deceased, and Melissa. Mr. Clements married for his second wife Miss Dora Averill, of Winterport. To this couple have also been born two children, viz: Abbie M. and Effie D. Mr. Clements has a good farm about one mile south of Kenduskeag village, where he has always lived.

M. P. Batchelder

W. C. Spratt, of Kenduskeag, is a son of Nathaniel and Betsey Spratt, nee Betsey Ward. Nathaniel Spratt and Betsey Ward were both born in China, Kennebec county, Maine. They had eight children, viz: Emeline W., Marian C., William C., Thomas G., Francis D., Melville B., Betsey E., and Augustus N.; all of whom are living except Betsey E. Mr. Spratt was a mason and manufacturer of brick. He lived during his later life in Alton, Penobscot county, where he died in 1865. Mrs. Spratt died in 1867. William C. was born December 24, 1826, in China, Maine. He settled in Alton, where he lived about twenty-six years. He married Christiana L. Crawford, daughter of Joseph and Olive Crawford, of Burnham, Maine. They have seven children, viz: Emma L., wife of R. A. Shaw, of Washburn, Aroostook county, Maine; Charles W., now in college in Philadelphia; Sewall C., of Houlton, Maine; Arthur W., Alber L., Lillie A., and Willie L. Mr. Spratt has been a lumberman and manufacturer of lumber most of his life. He now lives on a farm in Kenduskeag, near the village. He has held all the prominent town offices in the gift of his townsmen. He has held the office of Trial Justice, and in 1860 was a member of the Legislature representing Alton, Bradford, Charleston, and Lagrange. He is a Republican in politics.

Franklin D. Jenkins was born in Vassalboro, Maine, December 31, 1831. His father, Moses Jenkins, was a native of Kittery, and married Sarah Frye. They had six children, viz: William H., deceased; Mary A., wife of Christian F. Anderson, of Pioche, Nevada; Sarah M., deceased; Moses C., now of Vassalboro, Maine; Franklin D. and Eben F., deceased. Mr. Jenkins was a prominent business man. He carried on farming, tannery business, and the manufacture of boots and shoes. He died in 1854. Mrs. Jenkins died in 1846. Franklin D. Jenkins commenced life as a clerk in a store in Plymouth, at the age of seventeen. From Plymouth he went to Bangor as bookkeeper for Thomas A. White. He remained there two and a half years, when he went to Pittsfield, Maine, and engaged in trade. This was in 1858. He continued there for thirteen years, and also at the same time or during this time engaged in a successful pine land speculation in Michigan, though he did not live there. He came to Kenduskeag in 1871, and engaged in farming. He has a fine place near the village of Kenduskeag, and is successful as a fruit raiser. He married Helen N. Jerrard, daughter of John and Jane Jerrard, of Plymouth, Maine. They have seven children, viz: Alice, now Mrs. A. H. Cornforth, of Pittsfield, Maine; Annie H., Louise A., Vernon F., Fred A., Bertha L., and Ralph D. Mr. Jenkins has held prominent town offices both in Pittsfield and in Kenduskeag, having been Town Treasurer here several years.

Hon. T. P. Batchelder was born in Sanford, York county, Maine, in 1815, where he received a common-school education. In 1838 he came to Penobscot county and settled in Kenduskeag, and engaged as clerk in the store of Allen & Goodwin, and in 1836 purchased this stock of goods and engaged in business on his own account, in which he has continued up to the present time. He also held the office of Postmaster of Kenduskeag for nearly thirty years, the longest term probably of any man in the county, and has held the office of Town Clerk, Treasurer, and Selectman of his town for over thirty years. In 1858 he represented his class in the State Legislature, as a Democrat, and was elected by a class that usually went one hundred Republican. In 1840 he married Mariah York, a native of Belfast, and is the father of two children, Abbe M., wife of William P. Minor, of Brunswick, Georgia; Selah H., living at home.

KINGMAN.

Kingman may be said to lie almost upon the border of the great Aroostook wilderness. When the trains on the European & North American Railroad leave the Penobscot for the eastward at Mattawamkeag, they run for eight and one-fifth miles without passing a station; and when they leave Kingman station, they run for nearly thirteen miles before coming to a regular stopping place.—Bancroft, Aroostook county;—and thenceforth to the State line stations are few and small. Nevertheless Kingman is getting a remarkably good development for its years, and in the matter of population has a record for the decade 1870-80 that can not be approached, much less paralleled, by any other part of Penobscot county. In that time, as the returns of the ninth and tenth censuses show, its people increased more than three-fold—from 184 to 546, or by 361, an average of 36 per year. We doubt whether another town in Maine has a record in similar proportion for those years.

But Kingman is not a large town; it does not comprise a surveyed township. It is rather long and narrow—six miles, or township length, from north to south, and nearly four miles wide throughout. It thus contains a little over twenty-three square miles, or about fifteen thousand acres. Its southwest corner is fifty-one miles, in a bee-line, from the limits of Bangor. It is bounded on the north by Macwahoc Plantation, Aroostook county; on the east by Drew Plantation; on the south by Webster Plantation; and on the west by Mattawamkeag. Prentiss corners on it at the southeast, and Winn is at no great distance to the southwest.

Kingman is completely intersected from east to west by the Mattawamkeag River. This enters from Drew Plantation about two miles from the southeast corner of Kingman, makes a bend to the northward a little, nearly touching the railroad at Crossuntic Station, passing along the south front of Kingman village, and out of the town less than one and one-half miles from the southwest corner. Two miles below Kingman, on this stream, at a locality known as Sowtaradi, is the extensive Shataruck Boom, which can hold four to six millions of feet in logs at one time.

About three-fourths of a mile before reaching Kingman village the Mattawamkeag receives a tributary, the Crossuntic Stream, coming almost straight from Macwahoc Plantation, and one-third of a mile above this another small tributary, coming in from Prentiss at the southeast corner of Kingman, and flowing most of its course near the east line, joins the Mattawamkeag. Half a mile before leaving the town the river is swelled by the vastly more important affluent, the Molunkus Stream, which enters from Macwahoc at the northwest corner of Kingman, makes a slight bend across into Mattawamkeag, thence back into the town, and on south with a straight, broad current to the river.

The chief thoroughfare of Kingman is, of course, the European & North American Railway, which passes through the town near the north bank of the river, nearly east and west, making a station at Kingman village, and "Crossuntic Station," two and four-fifths miles east of that—a mere occasional stopping-place to accommodate loggers and others in the woods. From the west end of the village a road goes off up the Molunkus and into Macwahoc near the northwest corner of that town. Nearly all the country settlement in Kingman is on this road, and mainly on the east side of it. From the middle of the village a road crosses the Mattawamkeag and runs off southeastward across a corner of Webster Plantation into Prentiss. Another road from Prentiss across Drew Plantation strikes the river nearly opposite Crossuntic Station. Short roads also extend east and west from the village.

Kingman village is one and one-half miles from the west side of the town, and two from the east side; a little more than three miles from the north line, and over two miles from the south boundary. It is a long and narrow site, stretched along the north bank of the Mattawamkeag. A principal element in its growth the last ten years has been the establishment here of the extensive sole-leather tannery of Messrs. F. Shaw & Bros., with a long row of cottages for their workmen. The tannery and the railroad have mainly developed Kingman. Here, or in the neighborhood, are also several saw- and shingle-mills; and the usual stores and shops, with the post-office and school-house, are included in the place. The hotel here is the Kingman House.

This town is known in the surveys as Township No. 6, in the fourth range north of the Bingham Purchase. The Waterston and Pray Purchase, in this region, included nine hundred acres in the north and east part of the present Kingman. The rest of the town formed a part of the appropriation made many years ago by Massachusetts, in pursuance of the liberal system of grants then prevailing, to aid the town of Camden, then in Lincoln but now in Knox county, to build a bridge over the Ducktrap Stream. Settlement got into this remote region very slowly, however. It is said, indeed, that the settlement of this territory dates only from 1864. The tract was still a dense and comparatively unbroken forest in 1859, when, on Independence Day of that year, it received its first municipal organization as the McCrillis Plantation. For nearly seven years it existed under this designation, and then, March 28, 1866, perhaps from the date of the former incorporation, it became Independence Plantation. There were still but few settlers, and another seven years were yet to pass before their number would warrant the erection of a town. Finally, in 1873, the improved prospects of the Plantation, especially at the village, justified emergence from the chrysalis state; and on the 25th of January, of that year, the decisive step was taken which made it a town under the present name. This title was given in honor of Mr. R. S. Kingman, junior member of the firm of Shaw & Kingman, predecessors at the village of the firm of F. Shaw & Brothers, in the tannery and mercantile business.

We have no census returns of this tract back of 1870. In that year "Independence Plantation" had 185 people. At the last census (1880), Kingman town had a population of 546—an increase, as before noted, of 361. The polls in 1870 numbered 16; in 1880, 165. Estates in these years, $30,677, $75,455—in the former case a valuation quite large, in proportion to the population or number of voters.

The principal manufactory in Kingman is, of course, the great tannery at the village. There are also in the town one steam-mill and shingle-factory, one shingle- and lumber-mill, one shingle-machine, one harness-maker, one carriage-maker, two smiths, one large dry goods and grocery store, and three general stores. There is one resident lawyer.

The following-named are the town officers for this year (1881): Curtis Beatham, James S. Richardson, Almon Leavitt, Selectmen; Almon Leavitt, Town Clerk; H. A. Smith, Treasurer; Curtis Beatham, S. L. Rodgers, C. L. Goodwin, Constables; A. Leavitt, O. W. Beatham, Erastus Doble, School Committee; J. E. Estes, W. S. Smith, Justices (trial). Mr. W. F. Staples is the Kingman Postmaster.

The town is fairly supplied with schools. Until recently the Union League Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, was in existence here; but there are just now no public or semi-public societies in the town.

BRIEF BIOGRAPHIES OF SETTLERS.

F. W. Campbell, of Kingman, was born March 13, 1828. He is a son of Robert and Mary Campbell, of the Province of New Brunswick. Robert Campbell was a son of Tamberland Campbell, a native of Scotland. He was a soldier in Wolfe's army at Quebec. Robert and Mary Campbell had twelve children—Michael, now in the Province of New Brunswick; Sally, deceased; Hattie Ann, deceased; Mary, wife of Thomas E. Simonson, of New Brunswick; Julia, wife of William Simonson; Charlotte, now Mrs. H. House, of Frankfort, Maine; George, now in New Brunswick, a Baptist clergyman; Wellington, deceased; Frederick W.; Sophia, now Mrs. L. H. Wright, of New Brunswick; Henry A., deceased; Amanda, deceased. Mr. Campbell lived and died in New Brunswick, his death occurring in 1878. Mrs. Campbell died in 1869. F. W. Campbell was reared on the farm in New Brunswick till of age. He first engaged in milling, principally working in saw-mills, following the business for about six years, when he went to farming in New Brunswick. He lived there until 1861, when he moved to Frankfort, where he lived about eight years engaged in farming. In 1870 he moved to his present place in Kingman. He lives about one mile north of Kingman. He married for his first wife Miss Louisa Branning, of New Brunswick. By her he had four children—Martha; Robert, deceased; John F., and Jarvis. Mrs. Campbell died in 1855, and Mr. Campbell married for his second wife Miss Clara Staples, of Sedgwick, Maine. They have had one child that died in infancy. Mr. Campbell was Deputy Sheriff in New Brunswick; also Town Counselor for some time.

William Horton, of Kingman, is a son of John and Sarah Horton (nee Sarah Day). They were from Halifax. John and Sarah Horton had eight children—Benjamin, deceased; John, deceased; Elizabeth, deceased; William; Sarah, wife of William Trecarton, of Carlton, New Brunswick; Fannie, widow of John Pangburn, of Carlton, New Brunswick; Henry, now in Massachusetts; Barbara A., deceased. Mr. Horton died in 1848, and Mrs. Horton is still living in New Brunswick. William Horton was born January 9, 1838, at Halifax, Nova Scotia. His father was a seafaring man, and the boys were reared on a farm until William was ten years old, when his father died and the farm was sold. William, at the age of ten, went to sea, and followed it with his uncle until he was fifteen. He then left the sea and came to New Brunswick and worked in the saw-mills and logging woods for two years, when he fitted out boats and fished two years. He came to the States in 1859, having married Miss Eleanor McFadden the year before. He then settled where he now lives, it being then a wilderness with but two settlers in town, built a log-house, and cleared up his present farm. He now has a very good set of farm buildings and a good farm. To this couple have been born three sons—David Henry, John Leslie, and William Guy. He has 188 acres in his farm. He was burned out in 1862 and lost all his buildings.

Captain James H. Boyd, of Kingman, was born in Bristol, Maine, May 11, 1826. His parents, James and Sarah Boyd (nee Sarah Chamberlain), had six children, viz: John, deceased; James H.; Archibald, now in Bangor; Rodney, also in Bangor; Elizabeth, deceased; Caroline, deceased, wife of Henry Treat, of Bangor. James Boyd died at Frankfort October 15, 1858. Mrs. Boyd died October 16, 1871. James H. Boyd, the second son of this family, lived with his parents on the farm until he was fourteen years of age, when he went to sea. He followed the sea and engaged in steamboating until 1849, when he went to California. He became mate and finally captain of a vessel. He made foreign voyages mostly. He remained on the Pacific coast until 1870, engaged in steamboating on the Columbia River as mate and captain, also in mining and tanning. During this time he was six years in Idaho. In 1870 he returned to Bangor and built a steam mill at Mattawamkeag, where he remained three years, when he came to Kingman and built the steam mill on the river near Kingman. Here he has since lived, engaged in the manufacture of short lumber. He married for his first wife Miss Mary T. Miller, daughter of General Miller, of Bangor. She died in 1863. Mr. Boyd married for his second wife Miss Lizzie Savary. They have no children.

James L. Scott, son of John Scott, of New Brunswick, who was born in the United States, married Joan Hanson, of New Brunswick, by whom he had eleven children: Mark, Phebe, Mary, Moses, Fannie, Luther M., Ruth, William, John, Calvin, James, and one that died in infancy. James L. Scott died in 1851, and his wife in 1854, both in Chester, Maine, having settled in the county in 1824. Luther Scott, the third son, was born March 8, 1818, in New Brunswick, and went to Bangor, Maine, with his parents, when six years of age. They moved thence to Oldtown, and in 1831 settled in Chester. When a young man Luther Scott went to Woodville and engaged in farming and lumbering, returning to Chester after a few years, where he lived twenty-six years. In 1878 he moved to Kingman, where he now lives. He married Caroline Smith, of Chester, and had a family of ten children, three of whom are deceased: John, died in the army; David S., William W. Henry H., Alvin B., Millard F., Alonzo B., Thomas J., Franklin P., Lillian M., and Clara A.

LAGRANGE.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES.

Lagrange is the largest organized town in the county, save Lincoln and Burlington, and is very nearly as large as the latter, having the same length, but differing by a slightly less width. It is bounded on the north by Medford, Piscataquis county; on the west by the whole length of Orneville, Piscataquis county, and about half the length of Bradford, Penobscot county; on the south by Alton and a corner of Argyle; and on the east by the whole western breadth of Howland and the entire length of Argyle. It is not quite a regular parallelogram, the sides not being precisely of equal length and the angles consequently not exactly right angles. A slight jog also occurs on the east line, over two and one-half miles from the northeast corner, just at the southwest corner of Howland, by which the line is carried about one-fifth of a mile to the eastward, widening the rest of the town by so much. The south boundary is five and one-eighth miles long, and this width narrows but by an almost imperceptible amount for five and one-half miles north, until the jog is reached, where the town is a trifle less than five miles wide, and narrows still further to four and five-sixths on the north line. The west line of Lagrange is its longest boundary, being eight and one-third miles long. The length shortens a very little going eastward, and is but eight miles on a line drawn straight from the northeast corner. The town, however, contains over forty square miles, or between twenty-five and thirty thousand acres. It is fifteen miles due north of Bangor, and five miles from the Penobscot River on the south line of Edinburg. The Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad runs for nearly six miles in this town, entering from Alton not quite two miles from the southwest corner of Lagrange, running west of north to South Lagrange Station and post-office, about three-fourths of a mile from the south line of the town, at the intersection of the only two important roads in this part of the town; thence four miles further to Lagrange village, and about a mile beyond passing out of the town into Orneville. This road is of great service and convenience to the people of this region. Nearly parallel with it almost to the county line is the wagon-road which comes in from Alton upon the gentle elevation or "horseback," continuing through these towns. The highway runs through Lagrange village, and by a general north course thence to the north line of the town, where it passes into Medford. It is the only highway that completely traverses the town in any direction. At South Lagrange a branch starts off at right angles toward the southwest corner of this town, where it crosses into Bradley. The narrow strip of territory which it crosses, between the town line and a stream running from north to south a little distance from it, is known in local parlance as "the Gore." It is wholly uninhabited. This brook is the Dead Stream, which heads near the county line about a mile and a quarter northwest of Lagrange village, and flows about five miles to the south line, where it runs into Alton, receiving a small tributary two miles above its exit. At the village a road runs off eastward with a straight track for about two miles, when it ends near the East Branch of the Birch Stream. This heads in the north central part of the town, and runs south and southwestward four and one-half miles to a junction with the West Branch within two-thirds of a mile of School No. 3. The West Branch rises in the northwest part of the town, and flows about eight miles southward. Below the junction the Birch Stream broadens considerably, and runs about two miles to the south line, where it passes out of the town and forms the boundary between Alton and Argyle. At the cemetery just east of Lagrange village, a well-settled road runs off to the northeast, forking into two branches at the edge of Howland, half a mile below the northeast corner of Lagrange. A mile north of the village a road runs a short way west into Orneville, and a mile further another highway runs east half a mile, and thence east of north to its departure from the town on the Medford line. A mile and a half from its beginning it crosses a small brook which has three little headwaters a mile or more east of the road, and a petty tributary west of it, and also crosses, when perhaps a third of a mile from the county line, another small tributary flowing from a pond at the southwestward a mile and a half to a junction with the main stream somewhat nearer the line. Near the northeast corner of the Hoyt Brook comes in from Medford, and flows near the east line to its exit across the corner of Howland into Edinburg. Running alongside of it, southwesterly, at one to two miles' distance, is the Hemlock Stream, which heads about one-third of a mile south of the pond aforesaid, and after near six miles' run passes into Edinburg. The banks of this stream, and indeed the whole central and southern parts of the eastern half of Lagrange, are as yet unsettled. The land is in fertile meadow, very valuable for hay and the like. The road along the "horseback" is thickly settled almost to the north line of the town. The settlement is naturally densest about the cross-roads at Lagrange post-office. This place is near the east line of the town, almost exactly half-way down its length. The Town House is here, also Free Baptist and Union churches, a public school-house, and the usual stores and shops, with important mills. There is also a grocery store at the South Lagrange Station and post-office, kept by the post-master and station-keeper, Mr. J. P. Stearns.

The soil of Lagrange is rather superior, in comparison with the rest of the county, and the surface generally level enough, and well-timbered. Lumbering has consequently been long a prominent industry in the town; though large amounts of wheat and other kinds of grain are grown by the agriculturists. The broad, low ridge extending through the town from north to south, and known as the "horseback," is wholly occupied by excellent farms.

INTRODUCTION TO HISTORY.*

To write the history of a town that shall be strictly true as to date and incident, after a lapse of three-score years, is next to impossible. One man will fix the date of a certain event in the year 1821, for instance; another will fix the date of the same event in the year 1820; and the third, with equal positiveness, will fix the date in the year 1822. Now, it is certain that but one of them is correct, and barely possible neither of them; hence the reader of the following brief history of the early settlement of the town of Lagrange is most respectfully asked to exercise that charity that "thinketh no evil," and charge such errors, if any exist, to the head, and not to the heart.

*The remainder of this sketch, except the biographies, has been most kindly contributed by Pliny B. Soule, Esq., one of the Lagrange pioneers, and for more than a generation a Justice of the Peace and otherwise a prominent citizen at Lagrange village. Posterity, as well as the present generation, owes a debt of gratitude to this gentleman, for his painstaking care in the preparation of this part of our History.

MORE DESCRIPTION.

Within the corporate limits of the town of Lagrange, as per act of incorporation dated February 11, 1832, is embraced what was then known as the plantations of Oxford and Hammond, bounded on the north by Kilmarnock (now called Medford), on the east by Howland and Township One (now called Edinburg), on the west by Bradford and Milton (now called Orneville), and on the south by Township No. 3 (now Alton). It contains about thirty-four thousand acres. Its general surface is remarkably level; nothing like a mountain, or even a hill sufficiently elevated above the surrounding country to attract the eye of the traveler, is to be seen. Its surface waters are conveyed slowly towards the great Atlantic reservoir by Dead, Birch, and Hemlock Streams, and by Cold Brook.

PRIMITIVE TIMES.

At the time of the advent of the white man, all these streams literally swarmed with spotted trout, which were caught in large numbers and highly prized as a nutritious and healthy food by the pioneers.

Before the sound of the woodman's axe ever resounded through its forests, the entire town was covered with a heavy growth of pine, spruce, hemlock, fir, and hard wood. It was most emphatically a timber township. Here in these dark forests the stately moose, the shy deer, and the yet more timid caribou roamed at pleasure, raised their young, and selected their camping grounds for the winter, with their inalienable rights uninvaded, save only by "Lo, the poor Indian." Here on these streams the industrious beaver felled his timber and built his dam, traces of which are plainly visible at the present day. Here, too, in these dark forests roamed the black bear at pleasure, often paying his compliments to the early settlers in midnight raids into their oat- and corn-fields.

THE FIRST IMPROVEMENTS.

Years before any permanent settlement was made, Josiah Bennock, Esq., of Orono, cleared several acres of land on lot number thirty-eight, on the east side of the Bennock road, now so called, which was the first land cleared, and seeded it to grass, that he might cut hay to be used in his lumber operations on Dead Stream.

About the year 1820, a road was laid out by the State from some point in Orono through Township No. 3 (now Alton), and the Plantations of Oxford and Hammond (now Lagrange). This was located on the "horseback," so called, which forms the divide between the waters of Dead and Birch Streams. That part of the road south of the north line of Lots No. 51 was built by Mr. Bennock; and from that time to the present it has been called the Bennock road, while that part north of said Lots 51 has been called the State road.

THE PIONEERS.

In 1821 Captain John Freese entered upon Lot No. 14 in Hammond, being the corner lot in the plantation on the west side of the State road. He felled a few acres of trees, cleared the land in the spring of 1822, put in his crop, built his log cabin, and moved his family into it in the fall of 1822. In June of that year David Hinkley and Orrin Fuller, both of Livermore, came here. Mr. Hinkley settled upon Lot No. 50, upon the east side of the Bennock road, and Mr. Fuller upon Lot No. 1, in the Williamson square, so called, on the east side of the State road. As there are no plantation records for reference, it is very difficult ascertaining who were the next settlers; but it is remembered that Hatsell Delano, Hugh P. Keallier, Welcome and Zadok Bishop, and Simeon Bryer were among the earliest settlers. Mr. Bryer located in 1824, upon Lot No. 1, in the first range of lots adjoining Kilmarnock, now Medford. Nathaniel Foy, David Hoyt, and John Gray were among the very early settlers.

FIRST THINGS.

Rev. Mr. Reed, of the Methodist Episcopal church, preached the first sermon, in the log cabin of Zadok Bishop.

The first child born in the settlement was a girl, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hatsell Delano.

The first male child born within the limits of the town was named David Hoyt, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. David Hoyt.

The first school was taught by Miss Mary Lindsey, of Livermore, in a little room in Zadok Bishop's cabin.

A very pleasant rivalry existed for some time between Mr. Hinkley and Mr. Fuller as to who should build the first framed buildings. The former, who is still living at the ripe age of eighty-four years, often uses the prefix "I says," when relating anything he said on a former occasion. So in this instance he relates it in this way: "I says, 'Orrin, you needn't fret nor chafe nor hurry, for I shall raise the first house, and I shall raise the first barn, and I shall get married first, and I shall have the first baby,'"—all of which assertions time proved to be true.

The first saw-mill was built about the year 1827, upon the site and on the same mud-sills upon which the saw-mill now stands on Dead Stream.

THE GREAT DROUGHT AND FIRE.

In 1825 occurred the great fire that swept over Eastern Maine, destroying crops, houses, barns, mills, and many thousand acres of valuable timber lands. So severe and protracted was the drought that the tops of the trees in the valleys of Birch, Hemlock, and Dead Streams, where the growth was mostly hemlock, spruce, fir, cedar, and juniper, with here and there a pine, had become so dry that the fire was driven through them by a strong wind with almost railroad speed. There was no fire on the earth beneath till it fell from the tops of the trees above. Every reasonable measure that self-preservation or ingenuity could suggest to save life or property was resorted to. Holes were dug in the earth, and wearing apparel and bedding buried below the reach of fire. Barrels, tubs, and pails were filled with water, though in some instances it had to be carried quite a distance, and placed near the log cabins. Swabs were made and fastened to the end of long poles, with which to wet the roofs should the cabins take fire. After the fire had spent its fury and the smoke cleared away, look in whatever direction you would, it was one wide scene of blackness and ruin, save a little green spot here and there, an oasis amid the blackness and surrounding desolation. It required firmness and decision to remove this black mass of timber and make the earth bud and blossom like the rose; but the hardy pioneers were equal to this and every other emergency.

A SAD TRAGEDY.

About seventy years ago (the exact time cannot be ascertained) any one standing where the Dirigo House now stands at Lagrange Corner, casting his eye southward along the spotted line which was the only guide the traveler had at that distant day, might have seen a wayfarer with a heavy pack upon his back, slowly beating his way against a cold, driving, northeast snow-storm. The cold was intense, and the wind blew a gale. The State road had not been located. Perhaps three or four families had settled on the intervalles in Howland and Maxfield. A line had been spotted from what is now known as the State road, on the south line of the Hammond tract easterly to the Piscataquis River. A line had also been spotted from what is now Lagrange Corner in a northeasterly direction to intersect the line above referred to. The anxious traveler reaches the corner, pauses a moment evidently to decide upon what course to take, turns to the right, and with all his strength and energy urges his way onward.

It was evident that his objective point was some one of the settlers' homes east on the river. It was late in the afternoon, the storm and cold increasing; and such a fearful night as it must be would soon close in around him, in the darkness of which it would be impossible to follow the spotted line. No wonder that under such circumstances he should put forth all the strength and energy he possessed. He had not traveled more than four or five miles before darkness closed around him, and it was impossible to follow the trail. He pauses a few moments, evidently to rest, hangs his pack to the limb of a tree, and starts again, unencumbered, on his journey. He travels but a short distance before he deviates from the line, goes in a zigzag direction a short distance, falling over logs that lie in his course, until, entirely exhausted, he sits down in the snow and leans against a tree, evidently to rest and recuperate his exhausted energy and strength. Again he starts, but in the few minutes' respite he had taken the intense cold had been doing its fearful work. A numbness pervaded the entire system; his joints grew clumsy and almost stiff, causing him to fall at almost every step, till he can proceed no further. With his body inclined against a tree, there in midnight's darkest hour, there in the merciless storm, there with wind and storm chanting his dying requiem in the trees above his head, with no kind friend to speak words of comfort in this trying hour and direct his thoughts to that fair land of which the poet sang:

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land,
Where my possessions lie."

There with no eye save that Eye that never slumbers to witness his fruitless efforts to reach the settlements on the river, no tongue to tell the story of physical and mental suffering he endured in view of the terrible death that awaited him, his spirit took its flight.

As soon as it became known that he had not reached the settlement on the river, search was made, and the body found as above stated. He no doubt was the first white person that died within the present corporate limits of Lagrange.

ORGANIZATION AND FIRST OFFICERS.

On the 1st day of March, 1832, James L. Bishop, a Justice of the Peace in and for the county of Penobscot, issued his warrant to Thomas H. Bates, requiring him, in the name of the State of Maine, to notify the inhabitants of Lagrange, qualified by the constitution to vote in town affairs, to assemble at the dwelling-house of Colonel Thomas Chase, on Monday, the 19th day of March, 1832, at 11 o'clock A. M., to choose all necessary town officers and to decide on some method of notifying town meetings hereafter. At this meeting the following-named gentlemen were chosen to the most important offices in the new-born town: Orin Fuller, Moderator; Thomas H. Bates, Town Clerk; Orin Fuller, James L. Bishop, John S. Rolph, Selectmen and Assessors; Thomas H. Bates, Treasurer; Thomas Chase, Town Agent; Thomas H. Bates, Collector of Taxes.

PROGRESS.

Thus was the new town organized. Its rich and fertile lands began to attract the attention of agriculturists in other States, and in 1834 Stephen Danforth, John Kenney, Alonzo Hatch, and Allen Nason, from New Hampshire, became residents. Mr. Danforth settled upon Lot No. 49, west of the Bennock road, and kept a house of entertainment for many years. In 1838 Pliny B. Soule and Albert G. Hinds, from Livermore, purchased the "Gore" lot and the old saw-mill standing thereon, built a stone dam, repaired the old mill, and commenced the manufacture of long lumber in 1839. But the hard work, and the warfare with the flies and mosquitoes, proved too much for Mr. Hinds, and he returned to Livermore in 1840. In 1841 Mr. Soule put a shingle-machine into his mill, and began the manufacture of shingles. In January, 1844, the mill was destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt in the summer of 1844, and in the early autumn began the manufacture of long lumber and shingles. In January, 1849, this mill was destroyed by fire. In the spring of 1849 Messrs. Coburn and Mr. Bicknell, from Stetson, purchased the privilege of Mr. Soule, and built the present mill. Two small mills were built on Birch Stream for the manufacture of shingles, but both have been destroyed by fire.

RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

On the 23d of August, 1841, the first church in this town was organized as a branch of the Free-will Baptist church of Bradford. Some years previous to this the Methodists had for a time what is called in their polity a "class," but no church organization was entered into. March 28, 1843, the relation that had existed between the church in Bradford and the branch in Lagrange was dissolved, and a new church was organized as "the First Free-will Baptist church in Lagrange." This church is still maintained, but its pulpit is just now vacant. In 1879 the first meeting-house in the town was built by the society. In 1880 a second house of worship was erected and finished outside, but is not yet finished inside.

A Methodist church was organized in Lagrange about two years since, and there is also an "Advent" society in town.

LAGRANGE IN THE REBELLION.

In suppressing the great Rebellion and maintaining the Nation's life, and the honorable and exalted position it had gained among the nations of the earth, the town bore a very honorable part. By the report of the Commissioners on the Equalization of the Municipal War Debts, the town was credited with fifty-three men, though at different times during the Rebellion several more from Lagrange entered the service, either as volunteers, drafted men, or substitutes. The amount of bounty paid to soldiers under the different calls of the President for men amounted in the aggregate to $11,425. There were raised by subscription and by the town in recruiting expenses $380, thus imposing a tax upon the inhabitants of $11,805.

Henry A. Heal, of this town, was so unfortunate as to be taken prisoner, and was confined for several months in one of the Southern hells—called a "prison." The bones of several of her brave sons whiten on Southern plains or lie buried in Southern graves, while the mourners still go about the streets.

THE RAILROAD.

In June, 1868, work commenced here on the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad. The ground was broken in front of where the Lagrange Station now stands, the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin enjoying the high honor of casting the first shovelfull of earth. The headquarters of the contractors, while building the road from Oldtown to Dover, were at the Dirigo House at Lagrange Corner.

At a town meeting, called for the purpose of considering the propriety of aiding in the building of this road, it was voted to take stock in it to the amount of $5,000, the money to be paid (and it was paid) when the track was laid to the south line of the town.

INDUSTRIES.

The different trades are well represented here by one sleigh- and carriage-maker, three blacksmiths, and three house-builders. You can buy your dry goods and groceries at five different stores, and your millinery and fancy goods at another. Messrs. Hathorn, Foss & Co., at their steam-mill on Birch Stream, do a large business in the manufacture of long lumber, lemon and orange boxes for the Sicily and Florida markets, vegetable crates for the West Indies, and cranberry boxes for Massachusetts. Thomas S. Heal & Son cut shingles and spool stock at their mill on Dead Stream.

THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE has been well sustained, first by the Washingtonians, then by the Sons of Temperance, and at present by the Good Templars, who have a flourishing lodge composed largely of young gentlemen and ladies, the pride of the present and the hope of the future. Composite Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and the Katahdin Grange No. 120, Patrons of Husbandry, are also associations in this town.

STATISTICS.

Lagrange had a population of 336 by the census of 1840, 482 in 1850, 690 in 1860, 622 in 1870, and 721 in 1880.

Its polls in 1860 numbered 140; in 1870, 171; in 1880, 188. Estates for these several years, $95,835, $154,425, and $202,673.

A GLIMPSE AHEAD.

A prosperous and happy future awaits the town if great caution is exercised in the selection of officers to manage its financial affairs, ever remembering that sin is a reproach to any people and that righteousness exalteth a town as well as a nation.

PUBLIC SERVANTS.

The following-named gentlemen have been elected Representatives to the State Legislature from the district of which Lagrange comprises a part: Stephen Danforth, the first elected, Whig, 1837; William Head, Democrat, 1845; William Banton, Abolitionist, 1854; re-elected 1858; Hazen W. Danforth, Republican, 1864; Pliny B. Soule, Republican, 1868; Jotham Moulton, Republican, 1874; George W. Jones, Greenbacker, 1878.

The following are the town officers for 1881: Jacob Bemis, J. R. Herrick, H. H. Bilington, Selectmen; F. E. Freese, Town Clerk; E. Danforth, Treasurer; H. H. Bilington, Collector; H. B. Dyer, W. A. Snell, Constables; Pliny B. Soule, William Banton (Quorum), Justices.

Eugene Danforth is Postmaster at Lagrange, J. P. Stearns at South Lagrange.

SKETCHES OF SETTLERS.

Origen Fuller, of Lagrange, is a son of Orin Fuller, who came to Lagrange in 1823, when it was called Oxford Township. He was born in Livermore, Maine, in 1803, and married Mary Hobbs, who was born in December, 1806, and is still living. Mr. Fuller was one of the first two who made a permanent settlement in town. He was always a prominent man here, and generally held some local office. He was the first Postmaster in the town, being appointed in 1826, and held the office until 1830. He died November 17, 1869. The other surviving members of his family are Samuel, of Bangor, Maine; John H., of San Francisco, California, and Michael, of Lagrange. Origen Fuller married Priscilla R. Henderson, November 1, 1854. They have two children, May and Alice. Mr. Fuller is a house carpenter and farmer.

John R. Herrick, of Lagrange, is a son of Ebenezer and Experience Herrick. Ebenezer Herrick was a son of Joseph Herrick. Ebenezer Herrick came to Lagrange from Greene, Maine, in 1825, and settled on the place now owned by John R. He had four children, viz: Albion, deceased; Lyman, now in Milo, Maine; Maria Antoinette, wife of William B. Danforth, of Lagrange, and John R., the youngest. John R. was born July 23, 1832, in Lagrange. He settled on the old homestead, where he has since lived. He married Mary A. Rollins, daughter of William O. Rollins, of Orneville, Maine. They have three children, viz: Omar, Celia J., and Gertrude M. Mr. Herrick has held the office of Selectman several times.

R. J. McDuff, of Lagrange, is a son of Robert McDuff, of Chester, New Hampshire, who came to Lagrange in 1830. He married Ruth B. Emery, of Medford, Piscataquis county, Maine. They had five children, viz: Mary J., Hannah A., Laura M., Robert J., and Hiram; all are deceased except Laura M. and Robert J. The latter was born February 16, 1833, and has always lived in Lagrange, where he has followed the business of farming. He was in the army two years, being a member of the Second Cavalry, Maine. He has traveled quite extensively. He married Miss Melissa B. Emery, and has three children living, having lost two in infancy. Their names are Harry L., Laura M., and Cora E. Mr. McDuff lives one mile east of Lagrange village, where he has a good farm and a fine set of farm buildings.

John Kenney, of Lagrange, who settled here in 1834, was born in Farmington, New Hampshire, May 20, 1805. He married Elizabeth B. Willey, who was born in New Durham, New Hampshire, November 3, 1809. They were married May 7, 1835. Mr. Kenney is the only member of his father's family now living. In 1854 his buildings were burned and a promising son, Harry, perished in the flames. Mr. Kenney has seven children living: Augusta A., Mary A., Hattie L., not married; the married are Mrs. N. E. Bemis, Mrs. A. S. Smith, C. F. Kenney, and Mrs. M. T. Hinkley. Mrs. Kenney died October 15, 1875.

Pliny B. Soule, of Lagrange, is a son of Nathan and Nancy Soule (nee Nancy Howland). Nathan Soule was a son of Joshua Soule; he was born July 2, 1784, and married Nancy Howland, daughter of Elijah Howland, June 29th, 1806. Their family consisted of eleven children, viz: Ira W., deceased; Pliny B.; Fanny C., deceased; Sophronia, deceased; Francis A., Methodist minister at Sing Sing, New York; Nancy H., deceased; Nathan A., Methodist minister at Natick, Massachusetts; James H., Methodist minister at Rockford, Illinois; Mary J., wife of John R. Kenney, Lowell, Massachusetts; Elijah H. and Joshua (twins), deceased. Nathan Soule was a brother of Bishop Soule, of the Methodist Episcopal church. Pliny B. Soule, the subject of this sketch, was born July 25, 1810, in Avon, Maine. He married Anna Carroll, a lineal descendant of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. She was born April 30, 1812. They were married February 13, 1839. Their family is as follows: Augustus C., living in Lagrange; Maria E. (Mrs. Joseph P. Rogers), of Bangor; Lewis W. deceased. Mr. Soule settled in Lagrange in 1838, after working out for some years. He cleared up the farm where he now lives, near the village. Mr. Soule has long been a prominent man in his town. He has held the following offices: Selectman, Clerk, Treasurer, Town Agent, Collector, Superintending School Committeeman, Justice of the Peace and Quorum five times, or thirty years. Some of the above named offices he has held several times.

Martin Snell, of Lagrange, is a son of Eleazer Snell, of New Hampshire, though he was a native of Massachusetts. Eleazer Snell married Polly Danforth. They had nine children, seven of whom are now living, viz: Mary, wife of Samuel Robinson, of Conway, New Hampshire; Eliza, now Mrs. Joseph Blethen, of Wisconsin; Emeline, of Springfield, Illinois; Clarinda, wife of John Nickerson, of Tamworth, New Hampshire; Martin Willard, of New Hampshire; Alden, now of Boston, Massachusetts. Mr. Snell always followed farming for a business. He died in 1866. Martin Snell moved to Maine when he was nineteen years old. He married Miss Clarissa White, daughter of Sewell White, of Lagrange. They have three children: Mary, Roselen, and Willard. Mr. Snell has followed farming principally for a business, though he has worked some at the house carpenter's trade. He has held several of the town offices, and some of them for many years.

Simon H. Kenney, of Lagrange, is a son of Elisa Kenney, who was born in Wiscasset, Maine, June 3, 1777. At the age of nine he went to Livermore, Maine, and moved into Lagrange in 1841. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He married Mary P. Hersey January 10, 1795. She died October 15, 1857. Mr. Kenney died April 29, 1872. The surviving members of his family are Samuel H.; Ira, now living in Iowa; Lysander, of Michigan; Costellow, now in Salem, New Hampshire; and Hermon N., of Manteno, Illinois. Simeon H. Kenney married Ruth Ann Libby, December 6, 1854. Their children are Ella A. (deceased), May F., Myra E., and Ira B. Mr. Kenney is a farmer and has a good farm in Lagrange. He is and has been for a long time a Deacon in the Free Baptist church. During the Rebellion he enlisted, joining the Eleventh Maine Volunteers, and remained to the close of the war.

Jacob Bemis, of Lagrange, was born July 17, 1832, in Livermore, Maine. He is a son of Alexander and Lydia (Hillman) Bemis. Alexander Bemis was born October 6, 1804; Lydia Hillman was born in Martha's Vineyard December 3, 1804. Jacob Bemis and Nancy E. Bemis were married September 12, 1862. They have two children—Alice H., born November 17, 1867, and Elizabeth B., born November 23, 1877. Mr. Bemis has been one of the Selectmen of Lagrange for several years, and Chairman for three years. He was a member of the Twenty-second Maine Regiment, from September 1, 1862, till August, 1863, when he was mustered out at Bangor. He was in the siege of Port Hudson. Mr. Bemis is now engaged in farming.

Cyrus C. Durgin was born in Exeter July 19, 1839. He is a son of Martin L. Durgin, who married Emily Cogswell. They had nine children who grew to maturity, of whom Cyrus is the oldest living. Mr. Durgin is a blacksmith by trade, and now lives in Milo. Mrs. Durgin died in 1880. Cyrus C. Durgin married Eveline H. Bates, daughter of Thomas H. Bates, of Lagrange. They have two children, viz: Willard C. and Sarah E. Mr. Durgin follows farming for a business. He has served on the Board of Selectmen. He was a member of Company B, Twentieth Maine Volunteers, and served three years. He was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness. He now lives on the old Bates place.

LEVANT.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

The present town of Levant was one of the regular thirty-six mile townships for many years, or until the formation of Kenduskeag in 1852, which, as already noticed, took about half its area from the soil of Levant. For the last thirty years, then, it has been among the smaller towns in the county, territorially regarded, but still among the more populous and important. It is only two and one-half miles from Bangor, as measured along the north line of Hermon.

Levant is bounded on the north by Corinth, on the east by Kenduskeag and Glenburn; on the south by Hermon and Carmel; and on the west by Stetson. It is a peculiarity of its situation that but one town, Exeter at the northwest, corners upon its corner; but Kenduskeag has its southwest corner within the tract of Levant, as it were. That portion of this town which is left by the intrusion of Kenduskeag, as a projection toward Glenburn, is about two and one-third miles long from north to south, and two and one-eighth miles wide. The south and west lines of the town are each six miles in length, and the north line about four miles long.

Levant has no lake or pond, except the expansions of the Little Kenduskeag Stream, the most important water of this town. It has its source in three brooks of one and one-half to two miles' length apiece, in the northwest part of the town. After their junction it becomes a quite respectable stream, receives soon afterwards, a mile west of West Levant post-office, a good-sized tributary running west from Stetson; and between this point and Carmel, which it reaches after a course of nearly five miles in Levant, it has four tributaries closely resembling each other, each heading in two branches, with two of them on the west side, and the other two on the east side of the Little Kenduskeag. The stream, after flowing through parts of Carmel and Hermon, reappears in Levant south of Kenduskeag town, and flows in a winding course nearly all directions, but making northeastward, till it joins the main Kenduskeag Stream, or Kenduskeag River, in Glenburn, less than a mile east of Levant.

In the central north part of the town rises the Evelith Brook, which flows westerly across the angle of Kenduskeag to the Kenduskeag River. About half a mile from the east line of Levant it receives the Stanley Brook, which rises in Levant, almost at the southwest corner of Kenduskeag, and flows northerly about three miles to the Evelith, itself receiving a small affluent from the west shortly before the junction. In the south central part rises an affluent of the Little Kenduskeag, which flows about two miles, taking on the way a small tributary from the northeast, and entering the Little Kenduskeag near the south line of the town. At its northernmost bend, in the "L" of Levant, the stream receives two more tiny brooks, one of them rising in Kenduskeag.

Levant, as already suggested, is well settled in nearly all parts, and is remarkably well provided with highways. The "Avenue road," from Bangor to Exeter, describes almost a precise diagonal through the town, entering near the southeast corner, passing Levant and West Levant post-offices, and leaving the town east of the northwest corner, and about as near it as to the opposite corner where it came in. Its total length in this town is a little more than eight miles. It is the only road of its direction in the town. At School No. 7, near the southwest corner of Kenduskeag, it crosses a northeast and southwest road from Kenduskeag post-office southwest and south by School No. 1 to Hermon. At Levant post-office it is crossed by another road having just at the village the same general direction as that just mentioned, but which runs around from the former at School No. 7, by a route north of the Little Kenduskeag, which it crosses at the village, and passes southwest and west by School No. 12 (where a branch runs south into Hermon), crossing beyond that the road from which it started, and ending at a north and south road near the south town line and the other course of the Little Kenduskeag. The latter road comes from the Carmel way, and joins the Avenue road three and a half miles north. Near the junction, at School No. 13, it starts off a branch westward across the Little Kenduskeag, just beyond which it joins a north and south road along the west bank of that stream four miles, from the east and west road through West Levant to the south town line. At the store one-half mile above School No. 8 a branch runs north of west into Stetson, and just below the school another runs east through a pretty dense settlement at first, to the Kenduskeag post-office road below School No. 1. Just above School No. 1 an east road runs to the Avenue road just north of the Little Kenduskeag.

From Levant village also run highways south into Hermon and east into Glenburn. North of the place a road starts for Kenduskeag post-office at School No. 4 and the cemetery, and a third of a mile out another leaves for Kenduskeag. Just east of the West Levant post-office a north road pushes straight out for Corinth, crossed a mile and a half up by an east and west road from the Higginsville way. West of the post-office, within about half a mile of the town line, another road runs northward, to join a highway from Stetson at School No. 6. The east and west road through West Levant crosses the town entirely, and almost in a straight line.

Nearly every part of Levant is quite well settled, the whole population in 1880 amounting to 1,076. Levant post-office (or Wing's Mills) is at the cross-roads in the southeast angle of the town, about a mile from the corner. It contains the Union Bethel meeting-house, School-house No. 11, and the usual public conveniences of a country village, with a mill or two. South Levant post-office (Weston's Mill) is four miles due west of Levant post-office, and on the other or western section of the Little Kenduskeag Stream. Here Mr. Ruel W. Wilson, the postmaster, has a saw-mill; the Town Farm is just at the east end of the village; School No. 8 on the west side of the Stream; and there is a store or two. West Levant post-office (Roger's Stand) is in the north central part of the town, and about half-way across its narrower breadth. Here are School No. 5, a hotel, store, blacksmith shop, etc.

The surface of Levant is somewhat uneven, but the soil is fertile, and produces abundantly.

PIONEER SETTLEMENT.

The original settlers of the tract occupied by Levant are understood to have been the brothers George and William Tibbetts, and two other persons named Boobar and Knowland; but the date or dates of their coming are not certainly ascertained. They were on the ground, however, sometime before 1800. Mr. Williamson, the historian, says that the first settler in Levant was Joseph Clark, one of the refugees who fled with Colonel Jonathan Eddy from Nova Scotia after the unlucky affair at Fort Cumberland in September, 1776, and that Clark began to fell trees in Levant as early as 1789.

In 1801 came the celebrated pioneer Major Moses Hodsdon, from South Berwick, Massachusetts. He located upon the tract now occupied, in part, by Kenduskeag village, but which was for a long term of years a part of Levant. The next year this energetic and able man put up a saw- and grist-mill, three dwelling-houses, a store, and a blacksmith shop; and thus early made the beginning of what has become a prosperous settlement. Mr. Williamson says his was the twelfth building put up for residence in the town. These were the first frame buildings erected in this region, and, indeed, were the only ones of the kind then standing on this line between the vicinity of Bangor and the Kennebec River. Major (afterwards General) Hodsdon invested largely in landed properties, and engaged in civil engineering and surveying over a very wide tract of this then new country. He became quite famous in the Aroostook War and otherwise, as is elsewhere related. He was the first Postmaster in Levant.

General Hodsdon's brother and other settlers, some of whom are named in our sketch of Kenduskeag town, followed him soon to the promised land near the Penobscot. Their coming gave an impetus to the infant settlement, and its early growth was somewhat rapid.

ORGANIZATION.

By 1813 the number of settlers gave warrant to the erection of this tract as a town. It had originally been a part of the large Kenduskeag Plantation; and when Bangor was carved out of that, February 25, 1791, the name seems to have been passed westward, at least as soon as the population upon the present soil of Levant justified organization as a plantation. In 1792 the township constituting the subsequent town was sold by Massachusetts to William Wetmore. It existed as Kenduskeag Plantation until June 14, 1813, when it became one of only four towns incorporated that year in the District of Maine. It was in the midst of the last war with Great Britain, and it was not a great year for the erection of new municipalities. Levant was the one hundred and ninety-eighth town created in the District.

PROGRESS.

The first bridge over the Kenduskeag River, above Bangor, was built at Kenduskeag village, long within the territory of Levant, in 1802.

Kenduskeag Plantation "and adjacent places" had a population of 129 in 1800. In 1810, without "adjacent places," the plantation had 146. Ten years thereafter Levant town had 143; 747 in 1830 (a truly remarkable growth if correctly reported), 1,061 in 1840, 1,841 in 1850, 1,301 in 1860 (after carving Kenduskeag from its territory in part), 1,159 in 1870, and 1,076 in 1880.

The number of polls in the plantation in 1812 was 32, with estates valued for purposes of taxation at $825. In 1820 the polls in Levant were 29, estates $16,687; in 1860, 273 and $184,851; 1870, 269 and $277,449; 1880, 279 and $282,149.

BUSINESS.

The Mt. Pleasant and Silver Mining Company, for operations in this town, was organized some years ago, with Mr. William P. Hubbard, of Bangor, as President, and Charles P. Wiggin, Treasurer.

There are three lumbering establishments in the town, two carriage-makers, three smiths, one firm of painters, and five general stores—two each at Levant post-office and West Levant, and one at South Levant. There are also two resident clergymen and one physician.

THE ASSOCIATIONS

in this town are the Crystal Lodge of Independent Order of Good Templars at South Levant, and the Levant Grange, No. 84, Patrons of Husbandry.

THE TOWN OFFICERS

for 1881 were: John White, M. C. Mills, Gilbert Cain, Selectmen; G. W. Read, Town Clerk; Orrin T. Dore, Treasurer; Charles R. Turner, Collector and Constable; John White, Charles R. Turner, Constables; Silas White, L. S. McLaughlin, O. T. Dore, School Committee; Daniel Hall, G. W. Read, Hiram Church, Albert H. Waugh, O. T. Dore, Alphonso Haskell (Quorum), T. H. Wiggin (Trial), Justices. Mr. Alphonso Haskell is Postmaster at Levant, Reed W. Wilson at South Levant, and Charles C. Simpson at West Levant.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Sewall Stanley was born in Winthrop, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1799, where he remained until twenty-four years of age. He came to Penobscot county in 1823, and purchased the farm on which he now lives from parties in New Hampshire, and by paying cash in hand it cost him but two dollars per acre. His farm, when he purchased it, was a wilderness; but in pioneer style he went to work, cleared up the land, and by industry and economy has succeeded in securing for himself and family one of the finest farms in the town of Levant, if not in the county. He was Secretary of the first religious society of the town of Levant. This society first met at the house of Deacon Nathan Fisk, and they employed the Rev. Royal W. Spaulding, who was ordained in a barn then owned by P. C. Clark. Mr. Stanley was also Secretary of the first temperance society ever organized in this part of the county. This society was formed at Kenduskeag village, and they were hooted at by the outside public and dubbed "the long-bee'd boys," and various other epithets. He was also first Secretary of the first county agricultural society formed in the county of Penobscot. He held the office of Justice for fourteen years, and frequently during his term of office was called upon by parties to go miles from any habitation to make out and acknowledge deeds. He has repeatedly held the office of Selectman of the town of Levant and Chairman of the Board for many years, and has always taken a deep interest in religious matters. He was for many years Superintendent of the Union Sabbath-school, and contributes liberally to the support of the gospel. He has always been an earnest temperance worker and was on one occasion defeated for Captain of a company of militia on a temperance issue. The tickets on the occasion were headed "Rum" and "No Rum," and the "No Rum" ticket was defeated. In agricultural matters he was always deeply interested, as his surroundings will amply prove. He followed school teaching for many years; was also Superintendent of Schools in his town for over twenty-five years, and always took an active part in educational matters. He is a self-educated and self-made man, and although now eighty-two years of age, can handle a gun and kill game equal to any young man. He has never taken any medicine from a physician. During the days of anti-slavery he was foremost in the organization of the Anti-slavery party in his State. He has always taken an active part in political matters; was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a member of that party. He is a member of the Congregational church, and has filled all the offices in the church from time to time. He married Lucy Philbrook, a native of Winthrop, who died in Levant in 1866. He is the father of six children: Charles H., lives in Levant; Annie E., died in Levant; Mary J., married J. B. Nickels, and lives in Levant. Three died in infancy.

Colonel Harrison Waugh was born in Reedfield in 1811, where he received a common school education. He came to Penobscot county with his father in 1824. In 1841 he married Margaret Rittol, a native of Dresden, and first settled on the farm on which he now lives. He is one of the first settlers in South Levant, and is the only one of the first pioneers living in the town. When eighteen years of age he was chosen Lieutenant of a company of militia in Levant, and was promoted to Captain, and from the rank of Captain to Lieutenant-Colonel of the Third Regiment, First Brigade, Third Division. He has held the office of Selectman of Levant four years, and Chairman of the Board one year. He always took an active part in educational matters and was Chairman of the Board of Trustees for many years in Levant High School. He is a farmer, in which business he is now engaged, and is one of the most thoroughgoing farmers in his township. When he started out in life he had but little means, but by industry and economy has saved for himself and family a nice home. In politics he was originally a Jacksonian Democrat, but at the organization of the Republican party he became a Republican. He is the father of five children: Albert H., who married Emma R. Wiggin and lives at home; Rachel J., died at home; Cyrus A., died at home; Nancy, died at home; Annie E., married J. F. Beath, and lives in Kenduskeag. Albert H. was born in Levant in 1843, where he received a common school education; he also attended the Levant High School several terms and studied at the East Maine Conference Academy and Gould's Academy for several terms. He has followed school-teaching for the past eighteen years, and has taught forty terms of school within that time. He has been a member of the School Committee ten years, and has been a member of the Town Republican Committee for several years. In 1870 he married Emma R. Wiggin, a native of Brighton, Maine, and is the father of three children, Elbert H., Annie B., and Madge E. In 1864 he enlisted under Colonel James H. Jones, of the United States Marine Corps, and was stationed at the Kittery Navy Yard, where he remained thirteen months.

Eli Weston was born in 1781 in Somerset county, Maine. He came to Penobscot county in 1832, and settled on the farm now owned by Charles Reed in Levant. He married Louise Stewart in Somerset county. She died in Levant in 1834. He died in Levant in 1861. He was the father of ten children, four girls and six boys: Samuel S., Daniel F., Isabel, Louisa, Eli, Jr., Edwin, Josiah K., Ferdinand, Sarah E., Lydia C. Hon. Joseph K. Weston was born in Bloomfield, Somerset county, Maine, in 1816, where he received a common school education. In 1832 he came to Penobscot county with his father, where he engaged in lumbering and farming. In 1844 he married Lucy J. Wilson in Bingham. In 1880 he sold out his mill to R. W. Wilson and turned his attention exclusively to farming, in which business he is now engaged. He was engaged in the mercantile business in South Levant for over twenty-five years, where he held the office of Postmaster during that time. He then resigned in favor of R. W. Wilson, the present Postmaster. He has also held the office of Selectman for over six years, and was Chairman of the Board two years. He was elected to represent his class in the State Legislature in 1872, and has always taken an active part in the cause of temperance. He has had five children: Howard W., Mattie B., Flavill, and two died in infancy.

Hon. John White was born in Skowhegan in 1831. He came to Penobscot when thirteen years of age and settled at Exeter, where he received a common school education; he also attended the Corinth Academy for a short time. In 1854 he married Lovicy Tibbetts, a native of Exeter. He lived in Exeter until 1869, while there he held the office of Selectman three years and Collector of Taxes eleven years. He came to Levant in 1869, and settled on the farm on which he now lives. He has held the office of Selectman of Levant for eight years and is Selectman of the town at the present time, and has been Chairman of the Board for the past seven years. In 1877, and again in 1880, he was elected to represent his class in the State Legislature—in 1877 on the Republican ticket, and in 1880 on the Greenback ticket. He is the father of five children: Arey, Silas, May, Frank, and Sadie.

Colonel Simon G. Jerrard was born in Plymouth, Maine, in 1828, where he received a common school education. He attended the Waterville Classical Institute two years and at the age of twenty engaged in the lumber business, at which he continued until the breaking out of the Rebellion, when he organized the Twenty-second Maine Regiment at Camp Pope, in Bangor, in 1862, and joined the Nineteenth Army Corps, under General Banks, in Louisiana. He took part in the battles of Irish Bend and Port Hudson, and remained in the service until 1863, when he was mustered out with his regiment and returned to Levant, his present home, and engaged in farming. He has held the office of Selectman of Levant for fourteen years, and was chairman of the board the greater part of the time; he has also held the office of County Commissioner three terms, twice by election and once by appointment, and was twice elected High Sheriff of the county, and at present is one of the directors of the Maine State Fair. He takes a deep interest in agricultural matters and is one of the most extensive farmers in the county, where he has one of the best improved farms. He married Samantha J. Crosby, of Plymouth, in 1854.

Greenleaf P. Harvey was born in Glenburn in 1808. When six years of age he removed to Corinth with his parents, where he received a common school education. He was a millman by trade, in which business he has always engaged. He built several mills during his life in Penobscot and Aroostook counties. In 1846 he moved to Kenduskeag, where he built the mill now owned by Mr. Lincoln, of Bangor. In 1870 he came to Levant and settled on the farm now owned by his son, H. D. Harvey. He married Abigail Dexter, a native of Appleton, Maine, and died in Levant in 1872. His wife survives him. He was the father of fourteen children: Loann, who married Henry Stackpole, lives in Kenduskeag; Henry D., married twice; his first wife was Susan Smith, who died; he then married Harriet J. Smith, and lives in Levant. Mary Ann, married Seymour Steele, lives in California; Frank, married Ellminia Hodsdon, and lives in Kenduskeag; Lydia A., married Herman Kendal, and lives in Levant; Greenleaf, married Augusta Hodsdon, and lives in Kenduskeag; Elonia E., married Stephen I. Thayer, and lives in California; Harriet A., married H. J. Herrick, and lives in Levant; Eliza E., married Lawrence McCully, and lives in the Sandwich Islands, where he fills the office of Supreme Judge; Flora J., married Lawson H. Smith, and lives in Levant; Ora M., married Evelyin Hodsdon, and lives in Kenduskeag; Orilla A., married John Mason, died in California; Orissa M., died in Kenduskeag, Lelia G., married Edgar Hurd, and lives in Dakota Territory. Henry D. was born in Corinth in 1832. When thirteen years of age he went to Kenduskeag with his father, where he received a common school education. He learned the trade of millman from his father, and has attended closely to the business and has worked in a mill every year for the past forty years. In 1867, in company with his brother Greenleaf and H. J. Herrick, they purchased the mill which they now run in Levant on the Little Kenduskeag, from Simon R. White, where they manufacture long and short lumber, staves, shingles, and laths, and in connection with their mill they also manufacture cheese-boxes and stave machines. He has held the office of Selectman of Levant one year. In 1854 he married Susan Smith, a native of Maine, who died in Kenduskeag; he then married Harriet J. Smith. He is the father of four children: Frank L., who died young; Nellie A., married William W. Corson, and lives in Levant; Susie E., died in Levant; Lawrence M., lives at home.

George Waugh was born in Reedfield. He came to Penobscot county in 1825, and settled on the farm now owned by his sons Cyrus and Joseph. He was twice elected County Commissioner, and held the offices of Selectman and Town Treasurer. He married Nancy Turner, by whom he had six children—Elizabeth, Harrison, George, Charles, Joseph, and Cyrus. Mr. Waugh died in 1847, and his wife in 1871. Cyrus Waugh was born in Reedfield in 1822, and came here with his father, where he received a good common school education. He has followed the vocation of a farmer all his life. He has served as Selectman and Town Treasurer, and in 1868 was elected by his class to the State Legislature, where he served one year. In 1853 he married Cynthia Twombly, a native of New Hampshire, and has had six children—Annie C., deceased; Ellwin F.; Almyr C.; Emma I., deceased; Victor E., and Winnie S., all living at home.

James Budge was born in Bangor in 1777, and when scarcely more than a boy he entered upon the toilsome life of a sailor, which he followed for many years as captain of a vessel engaged in the carrying trade from Boston to foreign ports. During the war of 1812, when the British captured Bangor, he was accused of piloting their fleet up the river, but afterwards proved his innocence to the satisfaction of all. He married Nancy Nickels, a native of Boston, in 1803. His death occurred in Bangor in 1825, and that of his wife in Corinth in 1833. To them were born seven children—Sirah, Margaret, Aenus, John (drowned), Elizabeth, John (second), and Nancy.

Hon. John B. Nickels was born in Bangor in 1820. In his native place he learned the trade of house carpenter, and in 1840 moved to Corinth, where he pursued his calling until the breaking out of the war. While in Corinth he served as Town Clerk for many years. In 1859 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1861 helped organize Company H of the Fifteenth Maine Infantry, receiving a commission as First Lieutenant. He took part in the battles of Mansfield, Louisiana, Pleasant Hill, Cane River, and Mansura Plains, and was taken prisoner at Alexandria, Louisiana, by the rebels under Dick Taylor, and sent to Shreveport, where he was imprisoned six months before being exchanged. He was under General Butler at the capture of New Orleans. In 1863 he was promoted to a captaincy, and was mustered out of the service at Stevenson, Alabama, in March, 1865. At the close of the war he returned to Corinth, and two years later removed to Kenduskeag. In the latter place he remained eight years, since which he has been a resident of Levant. While in Kenduskeag he was elected to the State Senate, in 1871-72. In 1844 he married Mary J. Stanley, to whom has been born three children—Ellen, married John Dolliver, and lives in Kenduskeag; Harry L. is engaged in mining in California, and Esper A. lives at home.

Anson C. Jerrard was born in Plymouth in 1834. In 1859 he went to California and engaged in mining in company with Charles Crosby. After three years he returned to Maine and sold his interest in the mine. He then went to Appleton, Wisconsin, and engaged in the manufacture of carriage materials, and after two years he returned to Pittsfield, Maine, and engaged in mercantile business. In 1871 he purchased the farm on which he now lives, and engaged in the cultivation of fruit. In 1863 he entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Company H, Twenty-second Maine Infantry, and after service was mustered out in 1864. He married Arabella Farnum in 1820, and has two children—Charles H. and John.

John C. Clement was born in Winterport in 1807, where he remained until twenty-one years of age, when he went to Lincoln. In 1843 he removed to Penobscot county and settled in Kenduskeag, on the farm now owned by Abner F. Clement, where he manufactured the Clement horse hoe. He married Lucy Littlefield in 1829, and died in 1869; his wife survives him. They had a family of seven children: Edmund, married Anna P. Towle, and lives in Levant; Charles L., married Mary Davis, and after her death he married Emma Garland; George M., married Ellen Bartlett and lives in Corinth; John, married Susan Off, and died in 1868; Daniel, died in the war of the Rebellion; Albert, married Ella Shepherd, and died in 1873; Abner F., married Melissa Towle, and after her death was again married, to Dora Averill. Edmund was born in Levant in 1833, and has been dealing largely in Poland China hogs and Hereford cattle. His first wife, Anna P. Towle, died in 1869, leaving five children. He afterward married Anna T. Fogg, by whom he has had four children: Lizzie E., who died in infancy; Dudley E.; Anna C.; and Ruel F.

Captain Elijah Clement was born in Waldo county in 1818. After he became of age he worked at the cooper trade in Bangor for ten years; he then purchased a vessel and followed the sea for some nine years, since which he has been engaged in farming. He has served as Selectman of Levant three years; was Chairman of the Board in Glenburn one year, and was a member of the City Council in Bangor one year. In 1841 he married Angeline Dean, who bore him three children and died in 1847. In 1849 he married Eliza K. Dean, who is the mother of seven children: Josephine, who died in Bangor; Georgiana D., also died in Bangor; Elijah E., married Emma Cunningham, and was lost with his vessel and crew at sea in 1876; Abbie A., married Edwin O. Wilkinson, and lives in Revere, Massachusetts; Olin I., lives in Montana; Halowell F., is engaged in the practice of the law in Montana; Webster B., lives in Biddeford, engaged at dentistry; Nellie E., lives at home; Freddie G., lives in Pittsburg; Willie, died at home.

Nathaniel Dore was born in Shapleigh, Maine. When a young man he married Mary P. Smith, in Harmony, Somerset county, and raised a large family. He came to Penobscot county about 1850, and settled in Garland, where he died. His family consisted of twelve children: True W., Mason, Dudley, Searls, Sarah, Nancy, Mary P., Hannah, Elkins, Isaiah, Calvin, and Eliza. Searls Dore was born in Harmony in 1811. In 1844 he settled in Stetson, on the farm now owned by Aaron Fitz. While there he was one of the Selectmen one term. In 1869 he sold his farm and purchased the place he now occupies in Levant. In 1838 he married Lucinda Hurd and has seven children: Helen F., married James Emerson and lives in Hermon; Sarah M., married James Wiggins; Alvah C., is in Oregon; Orrin T., married Norah Libby; Royal H., died; Royal H. (second), died; and Ellen, died in infancy.

Rev. Ira H. Brown was born in Palermo, Maine, in 1818, where he received a common school education. He was ordained a minister in Somerville, December 20, 1848, and first had charge of the Baptist church at Thomaston. He made several changes during the next fifteen years, and 1865 found him settled on the farm he now occupies in Levant. He preached in a neighboring school-house four years, when a church was organized and a house of worship built. In July, 1869, he married Belsorah Turner, a native of Palermo.

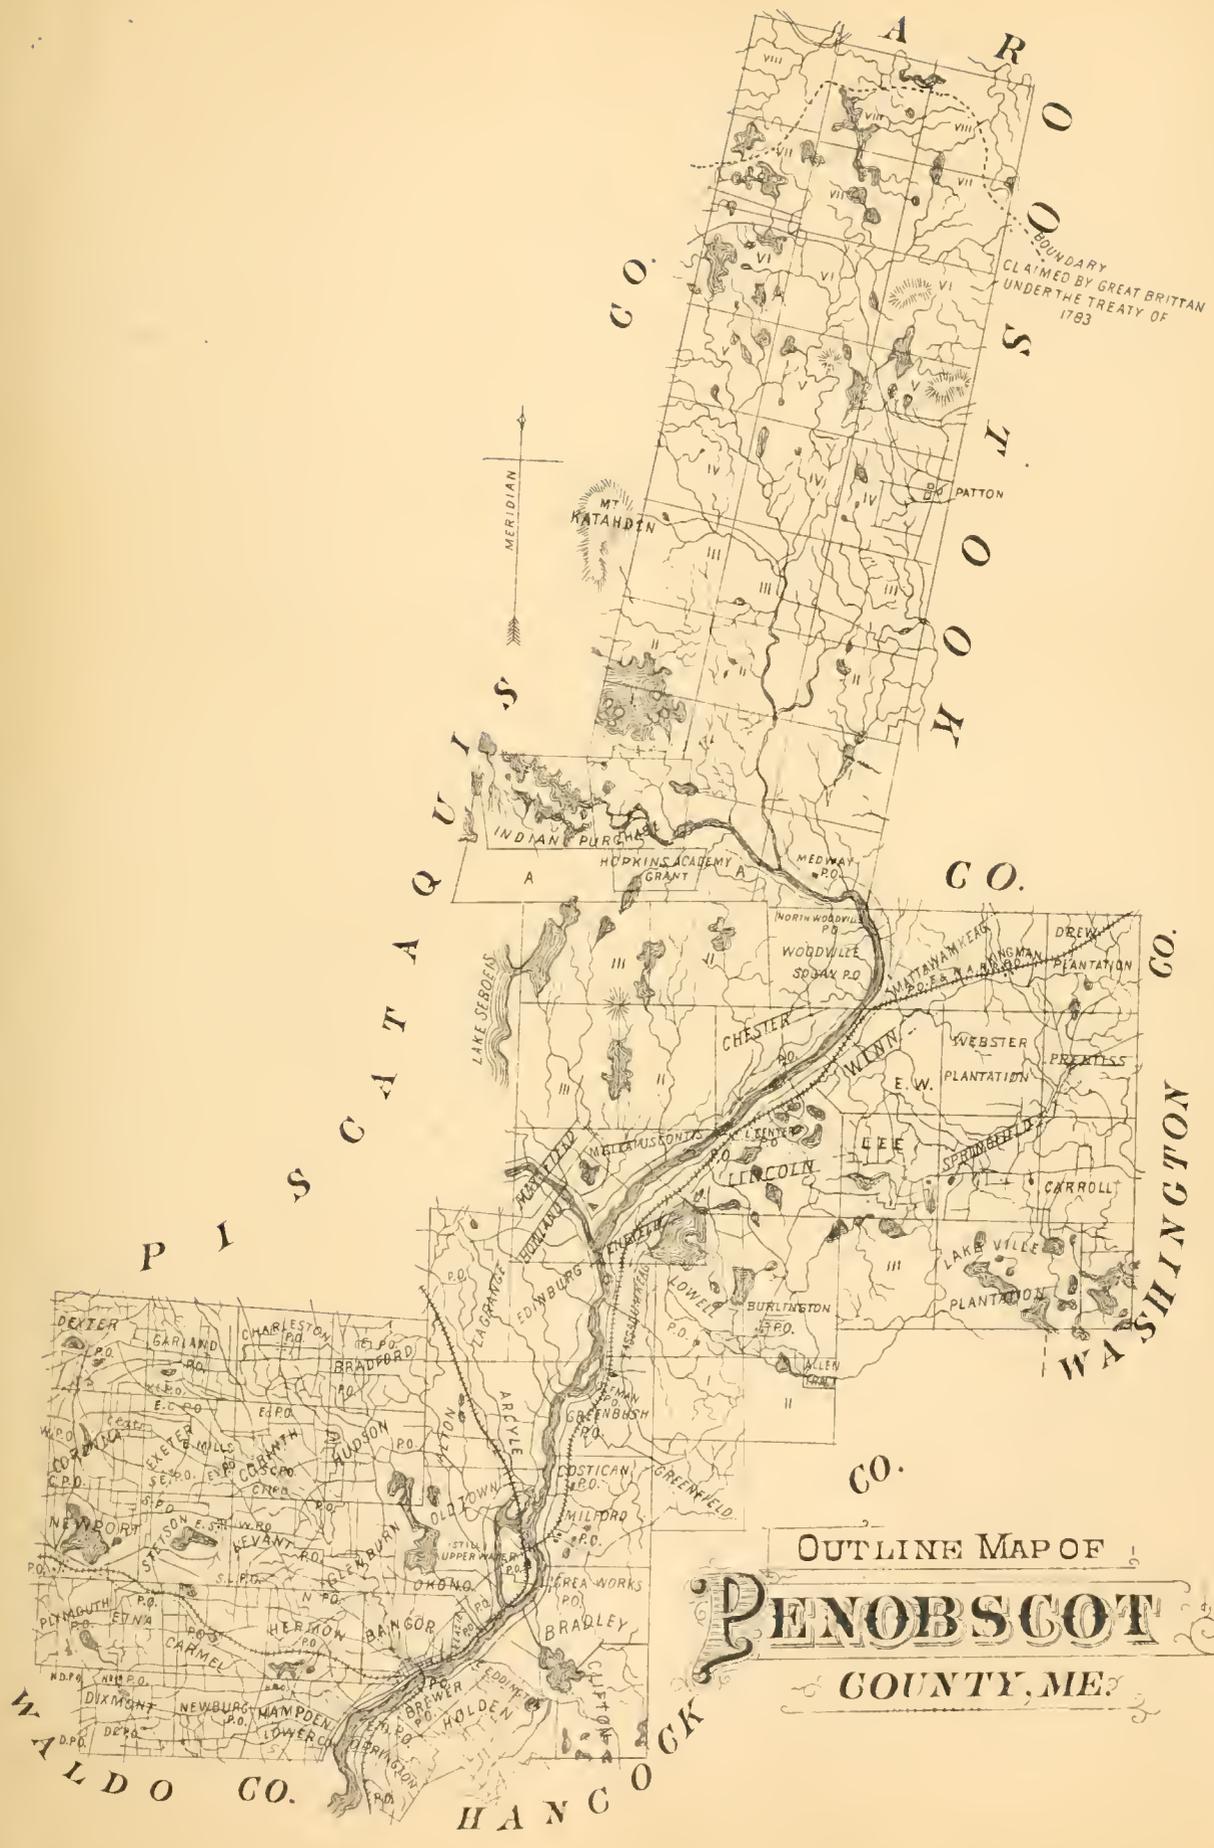

Orrin T. Dore was born in Stetson in 1855. When 14 years of age he came to Levant with his father and attended the common schools, also the High School at Hampden. In 1874 he went to Oregon and engaged in mining and stock-raising, and in 1878 returned to Levant, where he engaged in the mercantile business. He has had the office of Treasurer of Levant for two years, and is also a member of the school board and a Justice of the Peace. In 1878 he married Norah Libby, by whom he has one child. Thes.

LINCOLN.

Lincoln is by far the largest town in Penobscot county, comprising about fifty-seven thousand acres. Its front on the Penobscot is ten miles; its northeast line four miles long; its east boundary five and three-fourths; south, seven and one-half; and southwest, a little less than five miles. Its greatest length, from the west corner on the river, is eleven miles; greatest breadth, from the north corner, likewise on the river, to the south line, eight and one-half miles. It is bounded on the northwest by the Penobscot, beyond which are Mattamiscontis and Chester; on the northeast by Winn; on the east by Lee; on the south by Lowell and Burlington; and on the southwest by Enfield. The large, unorganized Township No. 2 corners on the Penobscot, a mile and a half northwest of Lincoln village; and Township No. 3 comes up to the southeast corner, where Lee and Burlington also meet. The town, from its southwest corner in the Little Cold Stream Pond, is thirty miles from the nearest point of Bangor. By its size, its natural advantages, and the construction of the European & North American Railway the whole length of its river-front, Lincoln may be regarded as very favorably situated, and it has already a considerable population.

In that part of the Penobscot which flows past Lin-

OUTLINE MAP OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY, ME.

1884

408

William Plaisted

coln, are ten or twelve islands of the Indian reservation. Among the larger of these are Hersey and Nathan Islands at the northeastward; Mattanawcook, opposite the outlet of Mattanawcook Pond; and Mahockanock, at the southwestward, shortly before the river leaves the town.

The waters of Lincoln are numerous and important. We have mentioned Little Cold Stream Pond, in which the town has its southwest corner. It is a good-sized sheet, about a mile each in length and breadth, with the tiny Birch Island in the north part; but is little more than a headwater to the greatly larger Cold Stream Pond, which has been described in our account of Enfield. East of Little Cold Stream are three other ponds in this chain of lakes. The nearest of these takes the designation Cold Stream, but is much smaller than its big namesake in Enfield. It is, however, nearly a mile and a half in extreme length, but nowhere more than a third of a mile in breadth. The next lake east—a third Cold Stream Pond, singular to say—is shorter, only about a mile long, but wider (two-thirds of a mile), and has about the same superficial area. A little northeast of this is the first of the chain—the Little Round Pond, which is rather an ellipse than a circle, half a mile in its diameter north and south, and one-third of a mile on its shorter diameter. It is wholly in Lincoln, while the nearest Cold Stream Pond dips down into Burlington. These four lakes are connected by short and generally narrow outlets. North of Little Cold Stream is a small lake, connected with it by a similar short outlet. One-third of a mile west of Little Round is the first of another series of lakes, whose waters do not find their way to the Passadumkeag, as do the others, but directly to the Penobscot. The Upper Pond, receiving a small headwater from Burlington, begins nearly half a mile from the north line of that town, and stretches one and a half miles to the northwest, with an average breadth of little more than half a mile. An outlet of half a mile's length connects it with Folsom Pond, a smaller sheet, being less than a mile long and about a third of a mile broad. Into its mile-long outlet, a little less than half-way out, come the waters of Crooked Pond, a lake of about the same area as Folsom, but somewhat differently shaped, and lying in the same direction as that and the Upper Pond. It is situated less than half a mile from the outlet. Mattanawcook Pond, which receives the flow of all the others, leans more to the westward than its fellows. It is one and one-fourth miles long, and a little more than half a mile in greatest breadth, though its average width is hardly more than one-third of a mile. At one of the ends of the line of greatest breadth, a little bay on the north shore, comes in the Dead Stream, which heads in two branches in the central eastern part of the town, and flows west about three miles to the Pond. Nearly south from it, on the other shore, is the mouth of Rocky Brook, which also has two heads, both rising within half a mile of the Cold Stream chain. The Mattanawcook Pond debouches through Lincoln village in a broad outlet of a mile long to the Penobscot.

Three miles northeast of the Upper Pond still another beautiful series of lakes begins. Caribou Pond is the first, lying northeast and southwest, in size about one mile, by one half-mile. At a bay on the north is the outlet of Egg Pond, a water of perhaps a mile's length, in outline bearing some resemblance to a very badly battered egg. Long Pond connects closely with Caribou. It lies from southeast to northwest, and has a length of a trifle over two miles and an average width of perhaps one-third of a mile. Just beyond its foot is a tiny lake, and then, by a short outlet, Camedlasse Pond is reached. This lies mostly east and west, and is shaped somewhat like a ham, with the narrow part very much bent. The length of this water is a little more than a mile, and its extreme width, which is on the east shore, two-thirds of a mile. Nearly a mile's length of the Combolass Stream connects with the middle member of a chain of three small ponds, of which the easternmost is Centre Pond, lying from east to west, three-fourths of a mile long and rather narrow. An outlet of a third of a mile takes its waters to the middle sheet, which has about the same area, but lies rather in triangular shape. For half a mile below, the Combolass Stream carries the flow of all the ponds into a still smaller lake, and thence by a short outlet across the river road and railroad to the Penobscot. Above this mouth the river seems to have no tributaries from Lincoln; but below the Mattanawcook it has four, all of them small. In the southeast angle and the central eastern part of the town are the four head-streams of Mattakeunk Pond, in Lee, which unite in Lincoln a short distance from the town line, and flow a mile or more in one stream to the pond.

The principal clusters of the eighteen hundred people, more or less, which Lincoln contains, are about Lincoln village; Lincoln Centre, one and one half miles north of the village; East Lincoln, which also has a post-office, about the middle of the east town line, on the stage-route to Topsfield: the settlement on the road next south of this; and the settlement along the river-road in the west corner of the town, where are School No. 6 and a cemetery. The whole river-road, about ten miles of which lie in this town, is quite well settled. From Lincoln village another road runs southwestward into Enfield, upon which are School No. 4 and many residences. A mile out, a road diverges to the southeast, crossing near School No. 5 a neighborhood road, which has a branch crossing between Cold Stream and Little Cold Stream Ponds into Lowell,—and runs between the two small Cold Stream Ponds out into Burlington. The Topsfield and Lincoln stage route forks nearly two miles east of the village, the branches going respectively to Lincoln and Lincoln Centre. Two miles after entering the town it has a branch running south and southeast past School No. 11 into Lee, where it finally rejoins the stage-road at Lee post-office. Between Lincoln Centre and the north corner of the town the river highway sends off four neighborhood roads to the southeast, one of which, passing between Long and Camedlasse Ponds, is three miles in length, and is joined by another of the roads, crossing at the foot of Camedlasse, near the foot of Long Pond.

Lincoln village is a flourishing place, with an extensive tannery and other manufactures. It has a railway station, with side-tracks to the tannery and the saw-mill; a Congregational church, with the school-house on the same lot, and the Mattanawcook Academy building in the vicinity; a Methodist Episcopal church, a cemetery, and a trotting park west of the town, and a considerable business quarter within it. Lincoln Centre has also a railway station, with a Baptist church, School No. 2, and a fair complement of mills, stores, and shops. The railroad also makes a station four and one-third miles below Lincoln village, opposite the settlement near School No. 6, and calls it South Lincoln, which has yet no post-office. About a mile and a half north of east from Lincoln Centre, and south of Camedlasse Pond, is the Town Farm. East Lincoln post-office, as before noted, is on the stage-road to Lee and beyond, and accommodates the dense settlement east of School No. 8, and that on the road next south. The town abounds in mills and other manufacturing enterprises, and must have a prosperous future.

The surface of Lincoln is broken, and the soil back from the rivers is apt to be rocky and hard to cultivate. Near the Penobscot the soil is freer from stone and less stubborn to the cultivator. A heavy growth of pine timber formerly covered this tract, most of which has been cleared.

Part of this extensive town was purchased from the State at an early day by Governor Lincoln, of Portland, and others; the rest was mostly sold in lots to actual settlers. The first of these came in about the year 1825. Among them and early subsequent comers were Messrs. Israel Heald, John Carpenter, Alfred Gates, Benjamin Hammond, Stephen Chase, Humphrey Merrill, Ira Fiske, and several others. Most of the settlers upon the Lincoln Purchase came from Oxford county, in this State; those on other tracts were largely from New Hampshire. The early date after settlement at which the town was incorporated, as well as tradition, indicates that the settlements rapidly increased. The new-comers were intelligent and enterprising; improvements were promptly undertaken, and the waters of the Mattanawcook were soon turning the wheels of industry, at the point where the lower village now stands. It is, as before intimated, a fine lumbering tract, with abundant streams for driving, and very ready access to the Penobscot. By and by came the construction of the fine military road to Houlton, along the east bank of the river, which gave further impetus to growth.

Within a very few years after the forest was first broken by permanent settlers upon the territory, its people were ready for the incorporation of a full-fledged town. Accordingly, on the 30th of January, 1829, the proper resolve was passed by legislative authority, and the new municipality was given the name of Lincoln, in compliment to the Governor, one of the original proprietors. Its growth was probably unparalleled by that of any town in the county, for its earliest years.

Lincoln, indeed, was already a flourishing town at the period of its formation, having then well toward one thousand inhabitants. It had 1,121 people in 1840,

1,356 in 1850, 1,631 in 1860, 1,530 in 1870, and 1,659 in 1880. The increase during the disastrous decade, 1870-80, when so many towns in this county and State fell off sadly, is specially noticeable.

The valuations in 1860 in this town were: Polls, 344; estates, $290,455. In 1870: Polls, 389; estates, $343,177. In 1880: Polls, 449; estates, $365,295.

The Congregational church in Lincoln was organized August 3, 1831. It worshipped in unconsecrated buildings until 1840, when a meeting-house was erected for it at the village. The Methodists have also a society and church edifice. There is likewise a Calvinistic Baptist organization in the town.

The other societies in Lincoln include the Penobscot Valley Lodge Independent Order of Good Templars, at Lincoln Station; the Starbird Lodge Independent Order of Good Templars, at Lincoln Centre; the Mattanawcook Grange No. 199, Patrons of Husbandry; and the Horeb Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons.

The business interests of this town are very large. There are two hotels—the Lincoln House, at the village; and the Penobscot House, at Lincoln Centre. The Mattanawcook Mill Company turns out large quantities of lumber and the spool-stock of the famous Clark Thread Company. Other industries include one grist-mill and one saw-mill, with a grocery store, three dry-goods and grocery stores, two milliners and dressmakers, two harness-makers, and one smith at Lincoln Centre; one spool-maker and one tailor at South Lincoln; and one maker of furniture, coffins, and caskets, one of coffins and caskets, one firm of tanners, one of granite and marble workers, one wheelwright, three painters, four smiths, two masons, two barbers, five dry-goods and grocery stores, three dealers in millinery and fancy goods, one dealer in jewelry, organs, and picture frames, one in confectionery and fruits, one in hardware and stoves, one in groceries, one in notions, one drug-store, and one meat-market elsewhere, mostly at Lincoln village.

There are also four resident physicians, two lawyers, and one pension notary.

The officers of the town for 1881 were: Meader P. Pinkham, Charles A. Brown, Cyrus Coffin, Selectmen; Gideon Stetson, Town Clerk; E. T. Fuller, Treasurer; Odell T. Fellows, School Supervisor; John Estes, G. S. Kneeland, A. P. Whittier, Fred A. Edwards; Center, John P. Hanning, Constables; W. C. Clark, A. W. Weatherbee, James Babcock, Charles Fuller, Alfred O. Ingersoll, Harrison Piper, F. D. Scamman, John P. Hanning (Quorum), John Frost, Eben B. Pike, John Estes (Trial); W. R. Ayer (Dedimus), Justices.

The Postmaster at the Lincoln office is Harrison Piper; at Lincoln Centre, Horatio Gates; at East Lincoln, Mrs. A. Ludden.

The following notices of the most noted soldiers from this town in the late war are extracted from the Adjutant-General's reports:

CAPTAIN OSCO A. ELLIS, of Lincoln, was mustered into the service October 19, 1861, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant, Company E, First Regiment Cavalry. He was afterwards promoted to First Lieutenant, and then to Captain. He was killed in action at St. Mary's church, June 24, 1864, whilst heading his men, who were fighting on foot. He was buried one mile west of Charles City Court House, near Wilcox's Landing, James River, Virginia. The deceased was a lawyer by profession, and a young man of fine talents and irreproachable character.

BOWDOIN COLLEGE ROLL OF HONOR.—Prince A. Gatehel, born in Lincoln, August, 1841; did not complete his college course; was mustered into service August, 1862, First Maine Heavy Artillery; Sergeant on recruiting service in Maine; Second Lieutenant; First Lieutenant and Captain.

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

One of the oldest settlers of Lincoln is Mr. Aaron W. Huntress. He is a son of William and Betsey Huntress, of Berwick, Maine. William and Betsey Huntress had nine children—Caleb; Rhoda, who is ninety years old and lives in Waterboro, Maine; Robert, Rebecca, Aaron W., Hosea, James, Betsey, and Tyreann. Hosea, James, Rhoda, and Betsey are living, besides Aaron, the subject of this sketch. Aaron Huntress was born June 11, 1798, and is therefore now eighty-three years old. He was born in Waterboro, York county, Maine. After becoming of age he first settled in Harrison as a brick-maker. Here he lived about ten years, following that business most of the time summers and teaching school winters. He moved from Harrison to Parkman about 1824, and engaged in farming and mason business till about 1827, when he moved to Lincoln, then called Mattanawcook, where he has always since lived. When he came here there was not an acre of cleared land where the village now stands. There was a mill and two small houses. He engaged in brick manufacture and mason work, which he has since followed principally. In 1822 he married Jemima Sampson, daughter of James and Jemima Sampson. They have had ten children—Jemima, now Mrs. S. H. L. Whittier, of Fredericton, New Brunswick; William, deceased; Alice, now living with her parents at Lincoln; Milton H., now in Colorado; Warren, now in Minneapolis, Minnesota; James S., now in California; Adaline, wife of Timothy Heald, of this town; Charles, deceased; Laura, wife of J. W. Bradbury, of Burlington, Maine, and Hannah, now at home. Mr. Huntress has long been one of the most prominent men in this town. He has been so highly esteemed for his integrity and business ability that he has been given every elective town office in the gift of his townsmen, and was sent as a Representative to the Legislature in 1869. He continued to hold positions of trust and important offices in town until within a very few years. He is now passing his old age among those whom he has seen grow up about him, honored and esteemed by all. He has a pleasant home in Lincoln, and still retains his faculties to a remarkable degree.

Solon Gates, who now lives in Lincoln Centre, in this county, is a son of Alfred and Marcia Gates. His father, Alfred Gates, married Marcia House, daughter of Moses House. Alfred Gates's father was Stephen Gates, of Rutland, Massachusetts. Alfred and Marcia Gates came to Lincoln Centre in January, 1824. He was the first man to fell trees at Lincoln Centre, and made the first clearing at the brook called by the Indians Cumalalasse. Here he built a log house and reared his family. Their nearest market was Oldtown. He brought with him a hand-mill, in which he ground corn and sometimes wheat for bread. To this couple were borne eight children, four of whom are living. His log house was burned, and two of his daughters perished in the flames, aged about seven and eleven years. Those now living are Solon, Galen, and Homer, (the last two named live at Carroll, Maine,) and Harriet, now Mrs. Butterfield, of Springfield. Solon Gates was born April 27, 1804. He spent his boyhood on the farm, and has lived here most of the time since. Alfred Gates died here in 1846, and Mrs. Gates in 1859. Solon Gates married Betsey A. Chase for his first wife. She died in 1871, and Mr. Gates married for his second wife Miss Frances A. Chesley, daughter of David and Mary Chesley, of this town, but formerly of Paris, Oxford county. Mr. Gates has six children by his first wife—Horatio, of this town; Ruth, wife of B. Webber; Augusta, now Mrs. A. Lindsey, of Carroll; Alfred, now in Chelsea, Massachusetts; S. Decatur, of this town; Edwin S., also in Lincoln.

One of the earliest settlers of Lincoln was Jeremy Nelson, who came here in 1824, from Waterford, Maine. When he came, there were but few families in town. He settled where his son Chester now lives. He married Deborah Wheeler, of Greene, Maine. They had twelve children, of whom eleven grew to manhood and womanhood: Eunice, wife of Jonathan Shepley, of Dexter; Horatio, now in Lee; Rosina, in Lawrence, Massachusetts; Aaron, deceased; Luther, deceased; Orinda, wife of Augustus Turner, of Lawrence, Massachusetts; Chester, of Lincoln; Melitabel; Sarah, wife of Amasa P. Libbey; Deborah, deceased, and Jere, deceased. Mr. Nelson was prominent in town office during his life. He died August 9, 1881. At the time of his death Mr. Nelson was preparing a history of Lincoln. Chester Nelson was born April 21, 1843. He married Ellen Perry, daughter of Temple Perry, of Sherman, Maine, and resides on the old homestead, where his father spent the greater part of his life.

The first preacher in the town of Lincoln was Stephen Chase, who came here from Woodstock, Oxford county, in 1825. He was born in Newberry, Massachusetts, January 19, 1772. He married Ruth Tyler, born March 12, 1778. He organized the first Calvinist Baptist church in this town, and preached to this society as long as he was able to preach. Stephen and Ruth Chase had eleven children—seven sons and four daughters. Of this family Cyrus H. is the third son and sixth child. Stephen Chase died July 14, 1843. Before coming here he was prominent in town offices, but on coming here he refused to hold any office. Mr. Chase represented his district the year after Maine became a State, in the first Legislature of the State as such. Of his large family only five are now living, viz: Ruth, widow of Sir on Fickett, of West Paris, Maine; Peter M., now in Minnesota; Cyrus Hamlin; Noah C., of this town; Abner B., now of Norway, Maine. Cyrus Hamlin Chase was born November 30, 1810, in Woodstock, Maine. He spent his boyhood on the farm, and on becoming of age bought a part of his father's purchase, and settled where he now lives. He married Harriet Bailey, daughter of David Bailey, of Bangor. They have three children living, having lost one in infancy. Their names are Freeman H., now practicing medicine in Orland, Maine; Stephen M., now of Winn, Maine; Lorenzo C., of Lincoln Centre. Mr. Chase has always followed the business of farming. He assisted his father in making the first clearing in Lincoln Centre in September, 1825.

Joseph Hammond, who came to Lincoln in 1828, is a son of Joseph Hammond, of Paris, Oxford county, Maine. His mother's name was Lydia Parsons before her marriage. Joseph and Lydia Hammond had sixteen children, of whom Joseph was the oldest son and fifth child. He was born September 29, 1802, in the town of Paris. He first settled for a few years in Milton Academy Grant, but came here in 1828. When he came here, there were no roads. There was a saw-mill and a kind of grist-mill at Lincoln, called Fish's Mills. He soon settled where he now lives, which has been his home fifty-three years. He married Lydia F. Cushman, daughter of Bartholomew and Lydia Cushman, of Paris. To this couple were born seven children—four sons and three daughters, viz: George, Ira, Andrew, B. C. Cushman, Marion Wallace, Sarah, and Lydia E. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond live on the old homestead, cared for in their old age by their son Ira. During his younger days Mr. Hammond took active part in town affairs. He collected the first tax that was levied in the town.

William B. Pinkham, of Lincoln, is a son of James and Polly Pinkham. Mrs. Pinkham's maiden name was Bly. James Pinkham came here from Starks or Industry, in Somerset county, Maine. His father, Samuel Pinkham, came from New Hampshire. James and Polly Pinkham had eleven children, all of whom lived to maturity. Their names were: Eliza, deceased wife of R. Jones, formerly of Lincoln, who was murdered by the Indians in the Indian massacre in Minnesota; Emily and Emeline (twins), both deceased; Samuel, deceased; James, of Lincoln; William B.; Sarah, wife of Mr. Benjamin Rounds, of this town; Rufus D., now in California; Lois, deceased; Winborn, of this town; and Meader B. Mr. and Mrs. Pinkham died here many years since. William B. Pinkham was born March 23, 1862, in Industry. He married Augusta E. Brock, who died about 1863, and Mr. Pinkham married for his second wife Mrs. Mary E. Ordway. By his first wife Mr. Pinkham has five children—Eli H., of this town; Asa M., now of Providence, Rhode Island; Ira E., now in the store in Lincoln; Howard F., on the farm; Willard C., of Providence, Rhode Island. By his second wife Mr. Pinkham has five children—Augusta E., Leslie F., Ella, Bertha, and Alma.

Meader B. Pinkham is a son of James and Polly Pinkham. He was born February 9, 1837, in Lincoln. After finishing his common school education he engaged in mercantile business. He began business here when twenty-one years of age, and has continued here ever since, evidently believing in the old adage that a rolling stone gathers no moss. Mr. Pinkham married Lucy A. Brock, daughter of Otis Brock, of Portland, Maine. They have had two children—Cora A., and Etta E. Mrs. Pinkham died February 26, 1873. Mr. Pinkham has served as Selectman of this town for thirteen years. He was postmaster here nine years.

Benjamin Hammond, father of Edwin B. Hammond, settled in Lincoln in 1825. He was born September 10, 1778, in Paris, Maine, and married Ruth Hersey, who was born January 17, 1795, and died November 9, 1880. The surviving children are Augustus F., of Aroostook; Maria C., now Mrs. Stinchfield, of Michigan; Aleatha P., now Mrs. Hersey, of Lincoln; and Edwin B. Mr. Hammond was an industrious farmer. He raised six hundred bushels of shelled corn from twelve acres of burnt land, in 1826. He died in Lincoln in 1870. Edwin B. Hammond married Julia Lindsey, March 5, 1863. They have two children—Mae and Cora, born June 4, 1866, and May 17, 1873. Mr. Hammond served in the army two years. He is now a farmer.

Levi Whitham, of Lincoln, is a son of Mehitabel Whitham. He was raised by a Mr. Benjamin Rackliff, of Thorndike. When he became of age he came to Lincoln and worked on the Military Road that was then being built through this town. He came here on horseback, as there was no road. After that he worked in Houlton three years. He settled in Lincoln in 1834, when twenty-one years of age, and worked in the saw-mill here on the Cumulassie. He has since lived here and worked at farming and sawing lumber in the mill here. He married for his first wife Sarah Haley. She died, and Mr. Whitham married for his second wife Ruth A. Delano. Mr. Whitham had one son by his first wife, who died in the army, Adelbert by name. By his present wife Mr. Whitham has one daughter, Anna R., wife of Hezekiah Silver, of Lincoln.

Hon. Timothy Fuller, of Lincoln, was born August 10, 1806. He is a son of David and Sarah Fuller, of Dover, Massachusetts. David Fuller was a son of David Fuller, Sr. David and Sarah Fuller had ten children, all of whom grew to maturity, viz: Moses, Spencer, Clarissa, Maria, Daniel, David, Sally, Elizabeth (of California), Timothy, and Julia, all of whom, except Elizabeth and Timothy, are deceased. Mr. Fuller died in 1824, and Mrs. Fuller some twenty years later. Timothy Fuller spent his minority on the farm, where he lived until of age, when he bought a farm in Dedham, where he lived about three years. He came from there to Lincoln in 1836 and settled in the village, then a small town, and engaged in the mercantile and lumber business, in which he continued until 1871, when he retired to a farm. Mr. Fuller married Deborah E. Baker, daughter of John and Betsey Baker, of Dedham, Massachusetts. They have five children living, having lost one. The names of the living are: Horace B., of Newtonville, Massachusetts; Charles, doctor in this town; George, now in Lincoln with his father; Francis H., of New York; Edward T., with his father in Lincoln. Mr. Fuller has served as Postmaster in this town eight years, and as Town Treasurer for many years. He was elected to the Senate of this State in 1869, and represented his district in 1870 and 1871.

Nathaniel Fellows, of Lincoln, is a son of Moses and Libbie Fellows. His mother's maiden name was Bassett. His father was a native of Kingston, New Hampshire, and his mother was from Massachusetts. They came from Kingston, New Hampshire, to Kennebec county, Maine, in 1794, and from there here about 1836, and settled where Nathaniel now resides in Lincoln. They had seven children, three sons and four daughters, six of whom grew to mature years, viz: James B., Nathaniel; Lewis, deceased; Nancy, also deceased; Sophia B., widow of Abel B. Wetherbee, of Chelsea, Massachusetts; Caroline T., widow of the late Stephen P. Hewes. Nathaniel, the second son of this family, was born September 30, 1807. He spent his early life on the farm in New Hampshire. On becoming of age he came to this town and settled in 1832, four years before his parents came. He married Sarah P. Hatch, daughter of Sylvanus Hatch, of Chester, Maine. They have had four children, one dying in infancy, viz: Dana W., of Portland, a dentist; Percy L., now engineer on the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad; Odel T., with his father on the farm, and Ida M., died in infancy. Mr. Fellows now resides with his father on the farm which he cleared up.

Timothy Heald, of Lincoln, is a son of Benjamin and Axa Heald, of Sumner, Oxford county, Maine. Benjamin Heald's father, whose name was also Benjamin, was one of the proprietors of the town of Sumner, and one of the first settlers. Axa Heald (nee Axa Hall), was a daughter of Captain Hall, of Croydon, New Hampshire. They had thirteen children, of whom eleven lived to grow to man and womanhood. Of this large family Timothy is the second son and third child. He spent his minority on the farm, and on becoming of age went to Illinois in 1838, and engaged in teaching. He remained there three years, when he returned to Maine, attended school at Buckfield, and taught in Auburn. The next year he came to Lincoln and engaged with Goddard & Jenkins, of Bangor, in the lumber business. He remained with them three years or more, when he spent one year exploring timber lands for the State. In 1852 he went to California and engaged in mining. He went from there to Puget Sound, remaining nearly three years in the employ of the Puget Mill Company, where he lost his hand. While here he was a member of the Territorial Legislature, from Jefferson county. During the summer of 1856 he returned to Maine and engaged in Lincoln in farming, lumbering, and mercantile and mill business, in which he has ever since continued. He married Addie E. Huntress, daughter of Aaron Huntress, of Lincoln. They have three children: Gemma L., Benjie H., and Clara G.

Frederick E. Nute is a son of Israel and Hannah Nute. Israel Nute was a native of Milton, New Hampshire, and Mrs. Nute (nee Fish) was born in Wakefield, New Hampshire. They had six children, four sons and two daughters, viz: John F., now of Franklinville, New Jersey; Frederick E.; Deborah, deceased wife of Asa Bither, formerly of Lincoln; George H., now in Pennsylvania; Hannah A., wife of Milton Huntress, now of Michigan; Charles W., died in the army. I. Nute died in 1835 at Milton, New Hampshire, and Mrs. Nute died in Saginaw in 1876. Frederick E. Nute was born June 24, 1821, in Milton, New Hampshire, and spent his boyhood on the farm. On becoming of age he engaged in the business of house carpenter, having learned the trade during his minority. At the age of seventeen, and before he learned his trade, he came to Lincoln. He followed this business until the fall of 1850, when he went to California, where he remained until 1855, engaged in mining and ranching. In 1855 he came back to Lincoln, where he has since lived. He followed his trade three years, when he went into the mercantile business with his brother John, in which he continued until 1878, though not with his brother, when he went to farming, in which he is now engaged. He married for his first wife Eunice Heald, by whom he has four children: Israel H., now of Springfield; Jane L., now Mrs. Chapman, of Chicago, Illinois; Frederick E., deceased; John A., also deceased. Mrs. Nute died in 1851, on her way to California, and was buried on the island of St. Catharine's. Mr. Nute married for his second wife Laura A. Ingersoll, by whom he had four children, three of whom are living, viz: Charles A., now in Michigan; Carrie May; Ida M., deceased; Frederick W., at home. Mr. Nute lost his second wife in 1865, and married for his third wife Mrs. Betsey H. Richardson, with whom he is now living. They have two children, viz: Afa A. and Carrie. Mr. Nute has been Deputy Sheriff of this county nine years; he held the office of United States Deputy Collector also for three years; he was Inspector of Customs of the Bangor District about five years, and has also held several of the town offices.

Stockbridge Lindsey is a son of George and Ruth Lindsey, formerly of Vermont. In 1830 he came to Chester from Vermont, and lived there some ten or twelve years before moving to Lincoln. He lived about one mile above the village of Lincoln until 1867, when he moved to the place where Stockbridge Lindsey now lives. George Lindsey had six children, viz: George W., now in Anoka, Minnesota; Stockbridge; Carrie E., wife of Ira Hammond, of Lincoln; Julia M., now Mrs. E. B. Hammond, of Lincoln; Angelia, wife of P. McClure, of St. Francis, Minnesota; and Thomas, now in Minnesota. Stockbridge Lindsey was born September 11, 1834. He married Sarah Heald, of Chester, daughter of Jackson Heald. They have no children. George Lindsey died in 1872. Mrs. Lindsey is still living with her son Stockbridge.

Dr. Charles Fuller, of Lincoln, is a son of Timothy and Deborah E. Fuller, of Dedham, Massachusetts. Timothy and Deborah Fuller had six sons, five of whom are still living — Horace B., of Newtonville, Massachusetts;

George, of Lincoln; Charles; Frank H., of New York; Edward T., of Lincoln. They lost one in infancy. Dr. Charles Fuller is the third son living of this family. He was born in Lincoln June 19, 1843, and attended school at Greenwood, Massachusetts, from the time he was eleven until about fifteen. He came from there to Lincoln and attended the academy about two years, when he went to Antioch College, Ohio, where he remained one year, when he returned to Maine and entered Bowdoin College at Brunswick, in 1861, and graduated in 1865. He then went to Meadville, Pennsylvania, and served as tutor in the Meadville Theological Seminary one year. In 1867 he entered the Medical Department of Bowdoin College, from which he was graduated in 1869. In the spring of 1870 he went to Hampden, Maine, where he opened an office and practiced until June, 1873, when he removed to Lincoln, where he has since lived in the practice of his profession. He married Charlotte W. Rice, daughter of John M. Rice, of Hampden. They have four children now living—Herbert L., Louis N., Timothy, and Catharine R. They lost two in early life. He was appointed United States Examining Surgeon in 1875, which position he still holds.

Joseph Keef, of Lincoln, is a son of Thomas and Jane Keef, of St. John, New Brunswick. Joseph Keef had six children, five sons and one daughter—James, deceased; John, now of St. John; William, also living in St. John; Michael, now of Howard City, Michigan; Margaret A., wife of John Sanders, of St. John; and Joseph. Mr. Keef died in 1877, and Mrs. Keef in 1876. Joseph Keef was born June 4, 1821. He spent his early life on the farm in St. John, where he lived until he was twenty-two, when he went to Hanson, Kennebec county, Maine, where he remained two years. In 1844 he came to Lincoln and worked until about 1845, when he bought the farm where he now lives. He has always followed the business of farming. He married Susan Hutchinson, daughter of David Hutchinson, of Lincoln. They have had fourteen children, of whom nine are now living. The names of the living are George, David H., Joseph, in Washington Territory; Charles F., of Lincoln; Leslie, at home; Eddie, at home; Bertrand, Alma, and Ralph.

Moses B. Hersey is a son of Samuel and Eunice Hersey (nee Bradbury). Samuel and Eunice Hersey had six children, five sons and one daughter—William R., deceased, one of the first settlers in Lincoln; Hiram, now in Nebraska; Samuel, deceased; Moses B.; Jason, in Abington, Massachusetts; Julia A., deceased wife of Frank Reed, of Springfield, Massachusetts. Samuel Hersey was a native of Sumner, Oxford county. He died in 1869. His first wife dying he married for his second wife Polly Bradbury, by whom he had two children. Moses B. Hersey, the fourth son of this family, was born September 26, 1816, and spent his minority on the farm. Taught school during the winter several terms. He first settled in life on the farm where he now lives, about one and a half miles north of the village of Lincoln Centre. He married Alathia P. Hammond, daughter of Benjamin and Ruth Hammond, of this town. They have four children, having lost three in early life. The names of the living are Mary Etta, wife of O. Keith, of Springfield, Maine; Alvan B., at Franconia Notch, White Mountains; Benjamin H., with his father at home; and Sadie A., now at home.

One of the old settlers of Lincoln half-township, as it is called, is David G. Hutchinson. He is a son of Samuel and Mary Hutchinson, who came to Fayette, Kennebec county, Maine, from New Hampshire, before they were married. Here they lived several years; he also lived at Grand Falls and on Swift River. He came to Glenburn in this county in 1815, where he lived about twenty years, and where he died. Mrs. Hutchinson survived him many years, and died at her son David's in Lincoln. Samuel and Mary Hutchinson had but one child, David, the subject of this sketch, who was born February 22, 1804. He has always been a farmer and lived with his father until he died. He came to Lincoln about 1851. He first cleared land about four miles from Lee, but sold there and bought where he now lives, about six miles from Lee. He married Susan Babbidge, of Bangor. By her he had fourteen children, all of whom are dead except three. The living are: Eleazer, now of Lee; Solomon, in the South somewhere; Alden J., living with his father on the farm. Mrs. Hutchinson died in 1856, and Mr. Hutchinson married for his second wife Betsey Chapman. They have one son living, David, having lost two daughters.

Caleb Estes, grandfather of John Estes, was a native of England. He was a farmer, and died in 1830. His son, also named Caleb (father of John Estes), was born in 1780. He married Charlotte Day, daughter of Josiah Day, a native of England. Of their children there are living: Wealthy, now Mrs. Robinson, of Massachusetts; Jeremiah D., of Vassalboro, Maine; George, now in China, Maine; Valentine, now in Dedham, Maine; Charlotte, now Mrs. Lothrop, of China, Maine; Sarah, now Mrs. Taylor, of Massachusetts; and John. Mr. Estes was a member of the Society of Friends. He was a farmer and mill owner, and not engaged in public life. He lived in Durham until 1809, when he moved to China, where he died in 1869. Mrs. Estes died in 1810. John Estes, of Lincoln, was born in Harlem, now China, Maine, August 18, 1810. On becoming of age he engaged in farming and afterwards in mercantile business. He was also for a number of years engaged in lumbering and mill business. He served as Constable, Collector, Selectman, and deputy Sheriff, while living in Harlem or China. In 1849 he moved to Smyrna, Aroostook county, where he engaged in trade, lumbering, and farming. There he served as Justice and deputy Sheriff. In 1852 he moved to Lincoln, where he has since lived, engaged in lumber business. He has been Collector, Constable, deputy Sheriff, and Trial Justice. In 1872 he was elected to the Legislature as member of the House. Mr. Estes married for his first wife Miss Elizabeth L. Kennedy; she died in 1847, and he married Miss Nancy M. Ayer, who died August 31, 1872. Mr. Estes is now living with his third wife, Esther P., daughter of William C. Hammatt, of Howland, Maine. He has seven children now living, viz: Caroline R., now Mrs. Berry; George M., Anna, now Mrs. Woodbury; Susan, now Mrs. Stratton; Charles A., Edwin P., Willie F., and Mary A., deceased.

W. R. Ayer

Harrison Piper, a native of Newfield, Maine, married Sarah Hill, of the same place. They had six children, one son and five daughters—Susan (deceased), wife of Oscar F. Dowe; Elizabeth H., now Mrs. Joseph A. Applebee, of Worcester, Massachusetts; Mary A., deceased; Lucy, deceased; Jennie, wife of C. A. Sargent, of Boston; and Harrison, the youngest and only son of this family, subject of this sketch. Harrison Piper was born March 17, 1839, in Great Falls, New Hampshire. He came to Lincoln in October, 1859, and engaged in the watch-making and jewelry business, in which he has ever since continued. He married Miss Abbie Huntress, daughter of James Huntress, of Lincoln. They have two children—Mabel H. and Ida M. Mr. Piper has served his town in the various offices in the gift of his townsmen, such as Town Clerk, Town Treasurer, Selectman, etc. He is at present Postmaster, and in 1878 was the Representative of his class in the State Legislature.

Mr. A. W. Weatherbee, of Lincoln, is a son of Washington and Elizabeth Wetherbee (nee Elizabeth Griley). Washington Weatherbee had three wives. By his first wife he had ten children, by his second one, and by his third wife two. A. W. Weatherbee is the fourth son of this family, born April 30, 1841. His father lived in Bangor when the son was three years old, and when he was six his mother died and he went to Boston and lived with his aunt Maria Allen, wife of Steven M. Allen. Here he attended the public school till he was fourteen, when he went to Calais, Maine, and attended the Calais Academy for three years. From Calais he went to New Haven, Connecticut, and remained until he was twenty, when he went to Springfield and engaged in the tin and hardware business, which he continued for about four years, when he bought a store in Lincoln and entered into a partnership with Mr. Cyrus E. Messer under the firm name of Messer & Weatherbee, which was continued four years, when he went to Minnesota, leaving the business in charge of Mr. Messer. In Minnesota he engaged in the lumber business, following it one year, being there during the great freshet and losing several thousand dollars. Mr. Weatherbee continued the store until 1873, reading law during the time, and finally sold out and went to the Law School at Albany, New York, graduating in 1875. He married Lucinda E. Butterfield, daughter of James Butterfield, of Springfield, Maine. They have nine children, viz: James B., Washington E., Edward A., Artemas, Almira E., Millie E., Mary E., William W., and the baby, now called Blucher. Mr. Weatherbee has not been engaged in public life other than on the Superintending School Committee. His store and office is on Main street. During all the hard times he has never failed to pay one hundred cents on the dollar.

James Babcock, proprietor of the Babcock House in Lincoln Centre, was born April 2, 1819. He is a son of Jesse and Mary E. Babcock, of Orono, Maine. Jesse's father's name was William Babcock, a native of York, Maine. Jesse and Mary Babcock had six children, all sons, viz: John, Moses, James, David, William, Newell, all of whom are deceased except James. James was reared on a farm and on becoming of age he engaged in lumbering, which he has always followed more or less. In 1862 he opened a public house at Mattawamkeag, which he kept two years. In 1867 he came to Lincoln Centre and opened the Babcock House, which he has ever since kept. He married Hannah P. Miller, daughter of Timothy Miller, of Lincoln. They have four children living, viz: Alpheia, now Mrs. George W. Smith, of Mattawamkeag; Evelyn, wife of John H. Reed, of Lincoln; Josephine, and A. F. G., now in Michigan. Mr. Babcock served in office as Justice, Constable, Selectman, etc. He has the only hotel in Lincoln Centre.

LOWELL.

NOTES OF SITUATION, ETC.

Lowell is another pretty large town, made so by the addition to the regular township area of a considerable parallelogram, left to it between Burlington and Enfield. It is only one and one-half miles from the European & North American Railroad at the nearest point, on the north line of the south or square part of the town; it is but two and one-half miles from the river, and only twenty and one-half miles from Bangor. The carelessness with which statements concerning these towns are sometimes reported, is illustrated by the fact that one of the very best authorities accessible gives the last distance as forty-eight miles, more than twice the actual space of separation, and the first distance as eight miles, more than five times too much.

Lowell is bounded on the north, the oblong part by Lincoln and the rest by Enfield; on the east by Burlington, whose length corresponds to its own eastern part; on the south by Township No. 1; and on the west, the lower tract by Passadumkeag, and the oblong by Enfield. The east line of the town is perfectly straight, and about eight miles long, passing through Eskutassis Pond and Turtle Island within it. The south boundary is also a right line, and six miles long, but, running a little to the northward, does not make an exact right angle at the southeast corner. The west line, in the middle of the lower part, is deflected slightly to the eastward, making a very obtuse angle, and narrowing the width of the town about one-fourth of a mile on the north line toward Enfield, which passes through the south bay of Cold Stream Pond. The (nearly) parallelogram in the north of the town also narrows a very little to the north line. It is over two and one-half miles long, which is the length of the west boundary, on Enfield; and about one and three-fourths miles in breadth.

No considerable lakes are wholly on the soil of Lowell; but it does not want for water, either in sheets or streams. Nearly half of the lower section or bay of the Little Cold Stream Pond, three-fourths of a mile from north to south, lies in the farther northwest angle of the town. Beginning near the lower part of the parallelogram, a little more than half of Eskutassis Pond—which, as before noted, is on the Burlington line—lies in Lowell, not quite two miles long in this town. Hayden Cove, at its northwest part, receives a little tributary from two branches; and Varney Cove is a short distance below, on the west side of the Pond. Just south of the entrance to this is a small, rounded island, abreast of which, with nearly three times the length, is Turtle Island, through which goes the east line of the town. The Eskutassis Stream, flowing four miles to the Passadumkeag Stream over a mile from the southeast corner, is the outlet of this lake. Less than half a mile from its parent water it passes the foot of Pickerel Pond, a very small sheet. More than a mile further it is expanded into a lakelet of about a mile in length and perhaps an average breadth of forty rods. Two very small lakes or millponds are made in the mile and a quarter's further course to the Passadumkeag. This stream waters two regions of Lowell—the southwest angle, which has as yet no inhabitants; and, before making a winding course of some miles in Township No. 2, it comes in from Burlington very near the southeast corner of Lowell, makes a great, irregular arc of four to five miles in that angle of the town, and passes out southward. About midway between the east town line and the Eskutassis it receives the Fogg Brook from Township No. 1. A mile below the Eskutassis a short tributary called Kimball Brook comes in from the north; then, after welcoming another affluent on the same side, which rises in two heads in the north central part of the town, it takes in the Dead Brook, which also has two headwaters, rising just below the east and west road across the center of the lower part of the town.

In the more northerly part of Lowell, the Bog Brook rises in a tiny pond two-thirds of a mile northwest of Hayden Cove, and flows one mile northeast to the Little Cold Stream Pond at the town line, just below Bog Island, which lies partly in Lowell. Within a mile and a quarter south from this pond, the large Cold Stream Pond projects two small bays from its east side a little way into the town. The northerly one receives the name of McKinney Cove, and has a short brook flowing into it bearing a correspondent name. The other is Long Cove, which has a Long Cove Brook coming into it at its head, rising in Cranberry Pond, about two miles to the southward. West of this brook and close to it lies in Lowell the greater part of a square mile of water, being the south bay of Cold Stream Pond, or the Webb Cove, which in like manner with the others has a small "Webb Cove Brook" flowing into it. The Cold Stream waters in Lowell are finally closed with the Little Cold Stream, which has one head toward the northeast corner of the town, near the cemetery at School No. 5, and another rising within a third of a mile of the east branch of Dead Brook, the two uniting about half a mile before reaching the west town line, and passing about as much further to the Cold Stream, the outlet of Cold Stream Pond to the Passadumkeag.

The southwest quarter of Lowell, as before intimated, is almost or quite destitute of inhabitants; and the northern part, or parallelogram, has but few. The rest of the town is moderately well settled. Its road-centre is the East Lowell post-office, established in recent years near the foot of the long, narrow pond on Eskutassis Stream, two miles above the south town line. Hence runs the stage-road into Burlington, turning sharply northeastward a little way across the line at Burlington post-office. Hence also runs a road southwesterly to Lowell post-office, and then southerly into Township No. 1, a branch also going to the same southwest along the other side of the Passadumkeag. A little out from East Lowell a southeast route starts off and goes into Burlington. From East Lowell a road makes north all the rest of the way through the town, passing between Pickerel and Eskutassis Ponds, and between Eskutassis and Webb Pond to the north line, and thence out between the Little Cold Stream Pond and the nearest Cold Stream Pond to the east of it. A little more than a mile before leaving the town it sends off a road easterly to the stage-road in Burlington.

From East Lowell also goes off an important highway northwest, which branches about a mile out for a road which runs west about two miles, and then north one and a half miles to School No. 5 and the adjacent cemetery, where it rejoins the main road, which a mile further passes into Enfield, one mile southeast of the post-office.

THE VILLAGES AND THEIR BUSINESS.

Lowell village is still small, but has a valuable manufactory of sole leather, owned by Messrs. A. Webb & Co., a mill for long lumber and spool stock, owned by the Lowell Mills Company, a grocery store kept by the same, and also two general stores. School No. 4 is on the south road just below the village, and the cemetery is just above, at the angle of the road.

East Lowell is only a mile distant from Lowell post-office. It also has a post-office, the mill of O. H. Wakefield, turning out shingles and spools, and his grocery store, the saw-mill of John W. Fox, with another store and two or three shops and a public school-house. School No. 1 is a mile and a half northwest of this place, and School No. 6 a little over a mile southwest of that.

SOIL, ETC.

The land in Lowell is somewhat stony, but still possesses considerable fertility—enough to justify agriculture as a leading industry in the town. There are extensive tracts of meadow land by the streams and other waters, some of which have high value. The pastures on the hills are highly esteemed for grazing purposes. Generally, the surface of this tract is not greatly broken; but there are some elevations of tolerable height in the north part of the town. The scenery of the town, taken by and large, is justly accounted quite varied and pleasant, and, in places decidedly picturesque. The giant bulk of Mt. Katahdin is plainly visible to the northwestward, from nearly all parts of Lowell, fifty to sixty miles away.

It is altogether probable that valuable minerals and ores will yet be developed in this town. Traces of gold are believed to have been found at Harvey Hill, within its borders. A valuable deposit of slate has been found at Wakefield's Corner.

A great amount of valuable timber has been cut out, and much lumber manufactured within this town; and for many years the chief business of the inhabitants has been lumbering. The supply is even yet not entirely exhausted.

THE SETTLEMENT OF LOWELL

dates from March, 1819, when Alpheus Hayden and Levi Deane, immigrants from Canaan, Somerset county, Maine, came in and made their locations. It had already been purchased from the State.

Among other early settlers upon this tract were Samuel Shorey, Gordon Duren, Nathaniel Coffin, F. D. Huntress, Eliphalet Pettengill, John Austin, Seth Webb, and a Mr. Good. The names of Shorey, Webb, Pettengill, and others of these pioneers, are still quite prominent in the town; and from Mr. Huntress the infant settlement received its primitive name of "Huntressville."

ORGANIZATION AND ANNEXATIONS.

The Huntressville name entitled this tract and whatever municipal organization there was upon it until February 9, 1837, when the town of Lowell was erected from it. The local tradition is that the first male child born upon its territory received the given name of "Lowell," and that in compliment to him the personal cognomen was transferred to the new town as a geographical designation.

In 1841, according to one doubtful authority, the "Page's Mills Settlement" (now a village and post-office) was annexed to Lowell from Hancock county.

March 16, 1842 (the Maine Register says 1841), the State Legislature added to the Lowell territory the "Cold Stream Settlement," or the "Strip," six miles long by two wide, north of Township No. 1, from the northwest corner of Bingham's Penobscot Purchase. It was described as "all that part of the town of Passadumkeag situated east of a line drawn due north from the northwest corner of Bingham's Penobscot Purchase." The area of the town was thus increased to its present dimensions of six by eight miles, about forty-eight square miles, or 30,720 acres. The settlers upon the "Strip," it is said, derived their titles from the Bingham heirs.

SOME FIRST THINGS.

The first settled preacher in this region was the Rev. Pindar Field. When the religious interest and denominational growth hereaway warranted it, the people to the west of Burlington united with the worshippers in the town to build a Congregational church, which was erected near the town line. A Baptist society has since been organized in the town, but is at present without pastoral supply.

The first school-teacher was Miss Mary C. Dean, later Mrs. Stephen Kimball. She taught in the Page's Mills Settlement, and was, like the reverend gentleman before named, very highly esteemed by the residents. It is related that so much was thought of her that the name of the settlement, which appears to have been a plantation title, was changed to "Deanfield" in her honor.

It will be remembered that the first son of a pioneer born here was named "Lowell," and gave his name to the town.

STATISTICS OF PROGRESS.

Lowell town had a population of 205 in 1840, 378 in 1850, 556 in 1860, 448 in 1870, and 433 in 1880.

The number of polls in Lowell was 127 in 1860, 109 in 1870, and 116 in 1880.

The valuation of estates in these respective years was $64,383, $72,126, and $65,406.

ASSOCIATIONS.

The only society manifesting life in Lowell at last accounts was the Eskutassis Grange of Patrons of Husbandry, which meets only once a month, on the Saturday of or next before full moon.

The Rising Virtue Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars had a recent existence within the town.

TOWN OFFICERS FOR 1881.

O. H. Wakefield, William Pettengill, L. D. Shorey, selectmen; J. W. Fox, town clerk; J. W. Fox, treasurer C. G. Jewell; East, Simon M. Cable, constables; Mrs. O. H. Wakefield, Mrs. Abbie Dam, S. M. Cable, school committee; Alexander Webb, E. G. Wakefield, trial justices.

Mr. A. J. Webb is Postmaster at Lowell; Mr. E. G. Wakefield at East Lowell.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

One of the first settlers in Lowell was Jedediah Varney, who was a native of Windham, Maine. He married Eleanor Tourtillott. They moved to Lowell in 1825, and cleared up and settled on the farm now known as the Levi Varney farm, about three miles north of East Lowell post-office. He had two wives. By his first wife he had three children—William, Mary Jane, and David.

By his second wife he had seven, viz: John, deceased; Jedediah, of Lowell; Isaac, now in Minnesota; Levi, deceased; Joseph, now in Minnesota; Stephen, in California; Samuel, died in the army; Lydia, wife of Mr. Hontash, in Minnesota. Jedediah Varney died in 1875, and his wife died in 1854.

Jedediah Varney, jr., was born March 4, 1825, and has always lived here in Lowell on the old place. He married Mary J. Cummings, daughter of James and Mary J. Cummings, of Lowell. They have four children—George I., Nathan H., Arthur E., and Fred L. Mr. Varney has a good farm of three hundred acres, with a large orchard, from which he raises considerable fruit. He has held several town offices, such as Collector, Constable, Selectman, etc. He was Chairman of the Town Board five years.

One of the first settlers in South Lowell, at what was called Page's Mills, is Mr. Greenleaf M. Fogg, who came here in 1833. He is a son of Jonathan and Phoebe (Waterhouse) Fogg, who had seven children, viz: Francis A., Greenleaf M., James D., John M., Nathan, Jonathan L., only two of whom are now living—John M. and the subject of this sketch. Greenleaf M. Fogg was born June 15, 1813, in Monmouth, Maine. He came to Lowell when twenty years old, and cleared up the farm where he now resides. There was no road during summer, and supplies were brought in by boat up the river. He married Malinda Lord, daughter of Timothy Lord, of this county, and they have had seven sons, viz: George Milton, who died in the army; Edwin, now in No. 1, near here; Augustus, now of Lowell; Nathan, deceased; Willis M., of Lowell; Eugene, at home; and they lost one in infancy. Mr. Fogg has a good farm of one hundred and twenty-six acres. He has for several years acted as Selectman of his town.

One of the early settlers of Lowell was Mr. Thomas Ewing, a son of William Ewing, of Bowdoin, Maine. He married Margaret Bishop, and they had six children, viz: Thomas, David, Mary, William, Susan, and Sally. Thomas, the oldest son, was born in 1811; came to Lowell when he was twenty-two, or in 1833, and settled about two miles from the Corners, where he has lived most of the time since. He married Bethanni Webb, of Westbrook, Maine, and they have had six children, viz: Seth, in Wisconsin; Margaret, wife of John Fisk; Fendora, wife of William Hodsdon; Maria, deceased; Thomas, and Emily. Mr. Ewing has one hundred acres of land.

Solomon Applebee, of Lowell, Maine, was born in Berwick, Maine, in 1822. He settled in Lowell in 1853. He was married in 1856, and has two children—Winfield S. and Charles M. Mr. Applebee is a farmer and owns a good farm in Lowell.

Mr. O. H. Wakefield, of Lowell, is a son of E. G. Wakefield, who came here from Steuben, Washington county, Maine, in 1855. The father married Clarissa Allen, of Gouldsboro, Hancock county, and they have eight children—six sons and two daughters, viz: Ann M., O. H., Warren A., Ambrose, Addison P., Mary E., Charles Henry, and Joseph F. Mr. Wakefield and wife family are all living. O. H. Wakefield married Helen

E. Douglas, of Lincoln, and they have two children: Ralph J. and Harrison P. Mr. Wakefield owns the mill at Lowell, where he manufactures shingles, lath, spool bars, and corn-meal. He is now Chairman of the Board of Selectmen and Assessor, and Master of Horeb Lodge F. & A. M.; also Master of the Eskutassis Lodge, Patrons of Husbandry. He is now Postmaster at East Lowell, in which position his father served for many years.

A. J. Webb, of Lowell, is a son of Alexander Webb, who came to this town in 1856. Alexander Webb was born in Durham, New York, and first settled in Sullivan county, New York, at Fallsburg, as manager of a sole leather tannery. He came to Maine in 1844, settled at Levant, now Kenduskeag, and took charge of a tannery. In the autumn he went to Dexter in the same business. Here he stopped six months, and then went to St. Albans, Maine, remaining one year. He went from St. Albans to Amherst, Maine, and took charge of a tannery there. He lived in Amherst until 1856, when he came to Lowell, and superintended the building of the large tannery here. In 1857 the tannery fell into the hands of Boston parties, Alley, Choate & Cummings, and when Mr. Alley retired, Mr. Webb had charge of the whole business here. In 1859 he bought an interest in the tannery, and the firm became A. Webb & Co. This firm continued five years, when Mr. Choate retired, and other parties took his place. The business continued in a prosperous manner until within two or three years, when Mr. Phillip died, and his estate is now being settled. The tannery is not running at present. Mr. Webb married in 1836 Abbie A. Gray, of Olive, Ulster county, New York, and they have six children, viz: Josephine, Margaret D., Albert J. and Alfred (twins), Charles L., and Emma E. Albert J. Webb is now in mercantile business. He was Postmaster here for fifteen years, but is not at present. He has a small farm in connection with his other business. He married Maria L. Baxter, of Kenduskeag, and they have one child, Gertrude Baxter. Alexander Webb has held many offices of trust in towns where he has lived. He has been Selectman in this town term after term, being Chairman for several successive years. In 1872 and 1873 he was a member of the House of Representatives, and in 1875 and 1876 he was elected and served as Senator in the State Legislature. He is now Trial Justice, and has been for a long time. Albert J. has also held prominent offices in town, having served on the Board of Selectmen, as Justice of the Peace, and in other positions of honor and trust.

Joseph S. Buck, of Lowell, son of Thomas Jefferson Buck, who came to this town among the early settlers, was born November 8, 1830. His father was a native of Freedom, and his grandfather John was one of the first settlers of Buckfield, Maine. Thomas J. Buck had thirteen children by one wife, whose maiden name was Drusilla Shorey. Joseph S. was the oldest son. He first settled in this town in 1863, after spending some ten years in South Weymouth, Massachusetts, and two years in Wisconsin. He married Susanna Sibley, daughter of William Sibley, of Burlington, and they have four children, viz: Ada, Ira S., Anna B., and Louisa. Mr. Buck has been on the Board of Assessors, Selectmen, and Overseers of Poor three terms. He resides on the lower road, in what is called the Dam Settlement, where he has one hundred acres of good land.

MATTAMISCONTIS.

TOPOGRAPHICAL.

Mattamiscontis is a town (though it seems still to be reckoned on the census list, and, to some extent, elsewhere as a plantation) further up toward the wilderness, on the borders of great uncultivated and almost uninhabited tracts. It is of comparatively small area in territory, although much longer than the average town; and still more so in history. It lies straight up the valley of the Penobscot, thirty miles from Bangor, and but three and one-half miles, or the width of Maxfield from the west corner of this town, from the Piscataquis line. It is bounded on the north by Township No. 2 and about a mile's breadth of the east part of Township No. 3; on the southeast by the Penobscot, beyond which are Lincoln and a pretty broad strip of Enfield; on the southwest by Howland; and the northwest by Maxfield. Its north line is straight, nearly east and west, and six and one-half miles long; its southwest and northwest bounds are also each a right line, and three and one-fourth and two and one-half miles long respectively. A little more than five miles of the river are on the southwest line of Mattamiscontis. On this front is the Mahockanock Island, a little more than a mile in length, and a third of a mile a greatest breadth. A little below its foot comes in from the northward the Mattamiscontis Stream, which heads in two branches near the north line in Township No. 2. Two miles further down Chesley Brook, running about the same distance from north to south in the town, empties into the Penobscot. A mile west of this the Gordon Brook, rising in three heads in the lower edge of the townships and flowing entirely across Mattamiscontis, receiving two small affluents from the west on the way, passes into Howland, where it empties into the river at Gordon Island. About the same distance still further west, in the extreme west angle of the town, are two small heads of the Seboois Stream, and a tributary from Township No. 3, which crosses the corners of Maxfield and Mattamiscontis, and in Howland empties into the Piscataquis.

The rather small settlement in this town is as yet mainly grouped on the river road, near the mouth of the Mattamiscontis Stream, and a little below the foot of Mahockanock Island. They have here a good school-house, but as yet no post-office or church. Lincoln affords their postal facilities. Some settlements are scattered along the road for a mile or more northeast of this point. The highway along the river, which runs about five miles in this town, is so far the only one of general importance.

Very little seems to be known of the settlement and early history of Mattamiscontis. The advent of the pioneer is fixed in the year 1829, and the date of incorporation of the town was March 8, 1839. Twenty years afterward, however, it had a valuation of only about $6,000, and a little more than half the population it had in 1850, when its people numbered 54. In 1860 there were 31 inhabitants, 51 in 1870, and 64 in 1880. It has not only held its own during nearly the last generation, but increased in population quite handsomely.

The voters of Mattamiscontis in 1880 numbered 15, and the valuation of estates was $12,876.

Two Mattamiscontians—Messrs. A. G. Sawyer and William S. Roberts—are engaged in lumbering, which, with agriculture, constitutes the sole industry of the town.

The principal families here are almost exclusively Sawyers and Robertses. The town officers, with one solitary exception (Mr. William C. Owen, who is a Selectman), are made up from them. Mr. Bryce M. Roberts is Collector, Constable, and a Selectman. William S. Roberts is Treasurer, and William P. Roberts Town Clerk and School Supervisor. William G. Sawyer is President of the Selectmen, and W. H. Sawyer is a Constable.

MAXFIELD.

This town is a partial gore, with a blunted point, its broad part the north line, five miles long; its long side the east boundary, about seven miles; its shorter side on the west, or county line, six miles; and its blunted point, or truncation, on the south line, only one mile long. It is bounded on the north by Whitney Ridge, in Township No. 3, on the southeast by Howland and Mattamiscontis, on the south by Howland, and on the west by Medford, Piscataquis county. No town corners with it in this county except Lagrange. It is one of the smaller towns of the county; is distant from Bangor, and nearly north of it, twenty-four miles; and from the Penobscot, at its nearest point, a little more than three miles. About two miles from its south line, the Piscataquis River has a course of nearly three miles from west to east through the town, making nearly a semi-circle in the eastern part of its course, and finally flowing southwesterly into Howland. It receives in this town from the south a small affluent, which rises in the southeast angle of Medford, and flows northerly a little way inside the Maxfield line and in general parallelism with it, to the Piscataquis less than one-fourth of a mile from the line. A more important tributary is received at the crown of the arc, one and two-thirds miles distant, on the north side, where the Hardy Stream comes in from the northwest, rising in two heads in the angles of Medford and Township No. 3 respectively, uniting in Maxfield, and flowing two and a half miles further to the main stream. A petty brook also rises in Maxfield, half a mile north of the mouth of the Hardy, flows southeast, and joins the Piscataquis just beyond the Howland line. The Little Seboois Stream, outlet of Little Seboois Lake, flows in the central east of this town for two miles, and the Seboois Stream, coming down from Township No. 3 in a south and southeast course for three miles, when it joins the Little Seboois, less than half a mile before the exit of the latter from the town. The North Branch of Meadow Brook rises in the southeast edge of Maxfield, about two-thirds of a mile above the corner of the town.

Maxfield has a fair population for a small interior and distant town, and has sensibly increased it even within the last eleven years. It is mainly on the south river road, running from Howland up the Piscataquis, about three miles of it in this town, and on the Bunker Hill or stage-road into Lagrange. This leaves the river road soon after it enters Maxfield, and runs with some zigzags southwesterly across the angle of Howland into Lagrange, crossing the Maxfield south line about midway, and having about two and a half miles in this town. Near the junction of these roads is the Maxfield post-office, kept by Mr. Franklin Tourtillott; and also a cemetery and

School No. 2 a little above, on the river road. School No. 1 is on the Bunker Hill road, a mile above the town line. School No. 3 is across the river, about two-thirds of a mile from the post-office, on the road from Howland village up the Piscataquis, which is the only highway of importance on this side the river in Maxfield. A "plug" road runs off near School No. 3, two miles, to the settlements, on which is School No. 4, beyond the crossing of the Seboois Stream.

The town is thus naturally considered as quite excellently located. The rich, alluvial soil bordering the river on both sides early made this region famous; and it still bears large amounts of corn and other grain and root crops. It is particularly well adapted to grain. The soil is quite varied in its constituents and capabilities; and the surface of the town is rather undulating. There is good water-power on the Piscataquis River and the Seboois Stream, which has been to some extent utilized for saw-mills.

This town was formerly known as the Bridgton Academy Grant, from the fact that it was appropriated by the State of Massachusetts, under its well-known ancient system of liberal land-grants, to aid in the support of the academy at Bridgton, in Cumberland county, this State, which institution was incorporated in March, 1808. It was wholly within the present limits of Maxfield, and amounted to eleven thousand acres. About the year 1817 the tract was bought in a body by Mr. Joseph McIntosh, formerly of Hingham, Massachusetts.

The first settler, whose name has not been preserved, is reputed to have got in here some three years before, in 1814. Following him no long time after, came Mr. McIntosh, who settled on the south side of the Piscataquis, and cleared a large farm there. His place came to be known popularly as "Mac's Field;" and it is said that this name, easily corrupted into Maxfield, finally gave the designation to the town. He also built the first saw-mill upon the tract, and engaged quite extensively for that time in the lumbering business.

Joseph was followed into the wilderness by his brothers Samuel and Thomas, and by another McIntosh named Stephen, who was accompanied by his grown son, Stephen McIntosh, Jr. The second of these, Mr. Thomas McIntosh, did not stay a great while or permanently locate in the settlement.

About the year 1820 came in from Massachusetts two well-known pioneers, named Pierce Thomas and Martin Cushing. They settled on the north side of the Piscataquis, and not far from it. The Rev. Jesse Burnham, a clergyman of the Free-will Baptist faith, arrived soon after, and in the fullness of time organized a church, which subsists to this day, although its pulpit has of late been vacant.

The next settlers whose names have been recorded were Stephen and Thomas Tourtillott. This is the only one of the old family names that remains in special prominence in the town. Mr. Franklin Tourtillott fills at once the offices of Postmaster, Town Clerk, and Justice of the Peace in the town.

They came about 1821. In this year also immigrated Levi Lancaster, up the river from Orono; and directly after him were two brothers, Stephen and Thomas Bunker, from the Kennebec country.

Henry Clapp, who came from Boston about the same time, was the first to open a blacksmith shop in the settlement.

The number and character of these early settlers, with the reputation of the tract as rich and fertile, soon attracted other settlers, and for several years the growth of the colony was quite rapid and hopeful. The great forest fire of 1829, however—of which a graphic account will be found in Mr. Soule's history of Lagrange, in this volume—devastated this tract almost completely, sweeping off buildings, fences, standing crops, nearly everything. This calamity produced inevitable discouragement. Many left the settlement, never to return; and it was long before the town recovered from the disaster.

Nevertheless, the plantation was not dead nor absolutely deserted; and on the 6th of February, 1834, it was incorporated as a town by its present name. It had now, probably, about 186 inhabitants, since that was the census-return for the tract in 1830, and the number was maintained with remarkable persistency for the censuses of 1840 and 1850, which showed, respectively, 185 and 186 again. In 1860 there were 162, 156 in 1870, and 139 in 1880. Number of polls in the several last three years, 47, 32, and 39; estates, $17,568, $20,673, and 17,541.

The town officers for 1881 were: W. L. Harvey, Reuben H. Brann, John L. Dewitt, Selectmen; Franklin Tourtillott, Town Clerk; John Smart, Treasurer; C. H. Bailey, Constable and Collector; Charles H. Bailey, John L. Dewitt, Constables; William L. Harvey, School Supervisor; F. Tourtillott, Justice.

A goodly number of young men from Maxfield enlisted in the late war, who responded personally to the call of the Nation; and the cemetery records show that a large percentage of them sealed their devotion to their country with their lives.

John DeWitt, of Maxfield, was born July 24, 1814. He is a son of Abraham P. DeWitt, of New Brunswick. Abraham P. DeWitt married Miss Nancy S. Smith, of New Brunswick. They had ten children, viz: Lydia, wife of David Holbrook, of Maxfield; John; David T., of Presque Isle; Henry, deceased; Phœbe, deceased; Nancy, deceased; Charles D., now of Presque Isle, Maine; Mary E., wife of Moses G. Smart, of Howland; Phœbe S., wife of John Tolpa, of Bangor; Christiana S., wife of John Burnham, of Wisconsin. Mr. DeWitt moved to Maxfield in 1822 and settled on the hill where Mr. Goodrich now lives. He engaged in farming during the summer season, and during the winter he worked a lumbering. He died February 14, 1866. Mrs. DeWitt died September 2, 1863. Mr. John DeWitt on becoming of age settled where he now lives in Maxfield. He married for his first wife Miss Mahala L. Page, of Howland. She died August 5, 1866. She had seven children: Charles H., now of Presque Isle, Maine; Mary J., wife of Marshall Fuller, of Lagrange; Samuel L., deceased; Victoria A., deceased; Bradbury G., of Medford, Maine; Ella, wife of Israel H. Bemis, of Carmel, and Emma. Mr. DeWitt has held all the town offices in his town at different times.

Abner S. Bailey, of Maxfield, is a son of James Bailey, who was born in Blissville, New Brunswick, in 1788. He settled in Maxfield in 1839. He married Elizabeth Seeley, born in 1793, and died in 1880. Mr. Bailey was a farmer and lumberman, and a very moral man, taking great interest in religious meetings, being a class leader for many years. He was drowned in Maxfield, May 20, 1861. The surviving members of his family are James A., living in Detroit, Michigan, Henry E., of Farmington, Maine; Abner S., of Howland; Catharine (Mrs. De Witt) of Presque Isle, Maine; Mary A. (Mrs. Carey), of Presque Isle; John C., of Mill Brook, Michigan; and Emery R., of Howland. Abner S. Bailey married Elizabeth Emery, July 12, 1846. Their children are Isabella, deceased; Edwin A., deceased; Elvira, deceased; Augustine A.; Charles H.; Emma F., deceased (married a Mr. Delano). Mr. Bailey is a farmer and dealer in carriages. He has held many of the town offices as Selectman, Treasurer, Collector, etc. His grandparents were born in London, England.

Abram T. Lancaster, of Maxfield, is a son of Levi and Olive Lancaster (nee Olive Tourtelott). They had fourteen children, of whom Abram is the third. Seven of them are still living. Abram was born in Bangor, May 4th, 1814. He first settled in Maxfield, and has since lived here. He married Mrs. Clarissa Brier, by whom he had seven children—Louisa, wife of Josiah Babcock, of Howland; Charles, deceased; Alvin, deceased; George, in Minnesota; Mary, deceased; Seth, also in Minnesota; Ada, wife of Charles Cowen.

John Smart, of Maxfield, was born March 29, 1819, in the town of Howland. His father's name was John, and his mother's Mary Lyford. John and Mary Smart had ten children who grew up—Charles, John, Lucinda, David, James, William, Joseph, Greenleaf, Olive, and Nancy. John, the second son of this family, married for his first wife Miss Rebecca Baily, by whom he had four children—Joel, now of Dover, New Hampshire; Eugene, of the same place; Mary, wife of Elbridge Morrill, of Atkinson, Maine; and John, deceased. Mrs. Smart died in February, 1853; and Mr. Smart married for his second wife Harriet Johnston, of Medford, by whom he had ten children, eight of whom are living—Olive, wife of Forrest E. Freeze; Ernest, Anson, Hattie, Elijah, Harry, Herbert, and Winfred. Mr. Smart has lived in Maxfield for over thirty years. He first settled on Whitney Ridge, where he lived about eight years before moving to the place where he now lives. He has held the office of Selectman and Treasurer at different times, and is one of the representative men of his town.

John F. Whitney, of Maxfield, is a son of John and Betsey Whitney. John Whitney came from Buxton, and Mrs. Whitney's folks came from Canterbury, New Hampshire. They had ten children, all except one of whom grew to manhood. Their names were Calvin H., Mary J., now Mrs. Colonel Gilmore, of Washington, District of Columbia; John F., deceased; Susan E., wife of Benjamin Croxford, of Dixmont, Maine; John Fairbanks; Nancy A., now Mrs. Whiting, of Carmel, Maine; George W., of Bangor; Charles H., deceased (killed in a threshing machine); Warren L., now of Newburg, Maine; Hannah A., late of the Treasury Department in Washington. During most of his life Mr. Whitney lived in Newburg, Maine. He held many prominent town offices, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of the State at the time that document was framed. He was for many years a deacon in the Free Baptist Church. He died in 1877; Mrs. Whitney died some four years before. John F. Whitney was born in Newburg, Maine, in 1823, March 26. After receiving a common school and academic education, he went to Monticello, Aroostook county, as pastor of the Christian Church. He remained there one year, when he went to Lubec, and remained two years. He afterwards preached in Salisbury, New Hampshire; Mason, New Hampshire; Marrows, New Hampshire; Haverhill, Massachusetts, and Lynn, Massachusetts. He moved to Maxfield in 1862, and engaged in farming and preaching until the present season. He married for his first wife Lydia J. Libbey, of Albion, by whom he had three children—Clarence W., Frank B., and Jennie R. (twins). Mrs. Whitney died in July, 1858, and Mr. Whitney married Miss Victoria F. Piper, of New Hampshire, by whom he has seven children—Mary F., Anna V., Dora E., Grace S., Malcom J., George C., Charles D., and one that died in infancy named Victor. Mr. Whitney has held the offices of Town Clerk, Collector, School Committee, etc., etc.

William L. Harvey, of Maxfield, is a son of Samuel and Clementine (Berry) Harvey. Samuel Harvey came from Nottingham, New Hampshire. He was born January 26, 1803, and settled in Maxfield in 1825. He settled on uncleared land, and made himself a comfortable home. His family consisted of six sons and two daughters. One son died in early life, the rest lived to mature years. Four of his sons and one son-in-law fought in the war of the Rebellion. One son was killed and two others severely wounded. One incident worthy of note, showing something of the hardships he endured in his pioneer life, is worthy of space here. He, with others, paid for his land to Joseph McIntosh, agent for the Bridgton Academy Land Grant, but the deed not being recorded immediately, and Mr. McIntosh dying, he, with the others, had to pay for the land again. He commenced without anything and worked at day's work for subsistence while clearing his land, yet he succeeded in making a good farm and a comfortable living at farming, though most of his neighbors did more or less at lumbering. He died in Lagrange in 1875—dropped dead while speaking in a religious meeting. His children living are: William L.; Ira B. Harvey, of East Corinth; J. C., of Petaluma, California, and Clementine B. (Mrs. Freeze), of Deering, Maine. William L. married Adeliza Hayes in 1854. They have had three children: Arthur L., Clara E., and Cyrus A. The first and last are deceased. Mr. Harvey is a well-informed man and takes great interest in educational matters. He contributes to educational magazines and is a practical teacher himself. He has held all the leading town offices, including that of Supervisor of Schools.

MEDWAY.

Medway, formerly Nicatou or Nickatow, notwithstanding some disadvantage of remoteness from the centre of population in the county, and its surroundings being still considerably in wilderness, nevertheless enjoys some uniqueness and distinction of position. It is the only organized town in the county that lies on both sides of the Penobscot River. It is the locality in which those two waters so important to loggers and lumbermen, the East and West Branches of the Penobscot, unite their waters and their precious freights from the far north and northwest forests. It had a growth during the decade 1870-80 unapproached; in actual numbers or in ratio, by any other town in the county except Kingman, rising in the ten years from three hundred and twenty-one to six hundred and twenty-eight, or very nearly doubling its numbers. It is the most populous of the towns and plantations north of the range of towns of which Lincoln is one, with the sole exception of Winn.

Medway lies at the base, as it were—is the southernmost—of the stately columns of nine regular townships on the east side of the long north projection of the county, eight of them numbered in the sixth range. Mount Chase and Patten, the only organized towns, and Stacyville, the only organized plantation, in this part of the county, lie in this range. Medway itself is not quite an even township, however. It is the regulation six miles' length on the north and the west sides, but on the south side encounters the older system of surveys, which has inclined its south line to the northward, and made a jog in it, at the northeast corner of Township No. 2, breaking the line southward for a fraction of a mile, and then making another angle which sends the line north of east again to a junction in a somewhat obtuse angle with the east line of the town, which by the northward deflection of the south line is shortened about one-half of a mile, or to a length of five and a half miles. By this zigzag on the south, however, the area of the town is not materially reduced from the usual township size of thirty-six square miles, or twenty-three thousand and forty acres.

Medway is bounded on the north by Township No. 1, in the Sixth Range; on the east by Molunkus, in Aroostook county; on the south by Woodville and the northeast angle of Township No. 2, Range Eight; and on the west by Township A, Range Seven, in which lies the Hopkins Academy Grant, and beyond and above which lies the Indian Purchase of two townships. The town is forty-seven and one-half miles from Bangor, and about the same distance, or forty-eight miles, from the north line of the county. It is very fitly named Med (that is, Mid) way.

The Penobscot waters are by far the most important, and indeed are almost the only waters in this town. The East Branch comes in from Township A, a little below the northwest corner of Medway, and flows three and one-half miles south to the junction with the West Branch, which enters from the same tract, and has a course to the southeastward of less than one and one-half miles before joining the other branch to form the main stream of the Penobscot. This has a flow in Medway, in an almost straight course to the southeast, of four and one-third miles. It leaves the town in a gentle curve, almost at the exact southeast corner, and then forms the boundary between Woodville Plantation and Mattawamkeag. It would be interesting to describe further here these invaluable waters, and give some sketch of the lumbering scenes upon them; but this has been so fully done in the first chapter of this work and elsewhere, that anything we could write here would be little more than repetition. Just at the junction of the Branches there is a small island. One mile to one and one-half above it the East Branch receives two small affluents, one on each side. Half a mile above, on the West Branch, a petty tributary empties, having three headwaters in the southwest angle of the town. A mile below the junction a small brook enters the Penobscot from the central part of the town, and a little one from the southwest on the other bank, one-third of a mile above the former. Somewhat less than a mile from its exit from the town, the river receives the outflow of the Salmon Stream, a pretty large tributary coming down from Township No. 1, and flowing nearly six miles in a southeast course, receiving a trifling rill from each side on the way. Very near its mouth another stream, heading in two branches in the edge of Molunkus and the northeast part of Medway, flows south into the river. Nearly opposite the mouth of the Salmon, the Pottagembus or Pattagumpus Stream, rising in two branches in the northwest of Woodville and giving its name formerly to a settled strip in the north part of that tract, flowing with a northeast course one and one-fourth miles, enters the Penobscot.

The population of Medway, with few exceptions, hugs closely the main trunk of the Penobscot, and along or near its shores are to be found the only important wagon-roads in the town. The stage-road enters from Mattawamkeag across an angle of Molunkus, crosses the Salmon Stream near its mouth, and runs on to Medway post-office, whence a trail runs up the east side of the East Branch. About a mile below Medway village the road passes two cemeteries, one on each side of the track, and nearly opposite each other. Just west of the Salmon a short road diverges to the river-bank. On the opposite side of the river, at about half a mile's distance, an important road nears the Penobscot from the southward, and bends for its course up the south shore of the river. This highway leaves the great road from Bangor up the west side of the Penobscot, at Chester post office, and runs with a general north direction through the heart of Woodville and about half a mile in Medway, before it turns at almost a right angle and goes about five miles up the river in Medway and out a little further to the Rockabema Rips, in Township A, on the West Branch. From the school-house half a mile south of Medway village a two-mile road runs off west of south to the town line, on which are several settlements. There is another school-house two-thirds of a mile further up the road, and one a mile and a half further, near the west line of the town. About the school-house on the Pattagumpus near the great bend in the road, and between the road and the Penobscot, is a cluster of dwellings, now called South Medway, where a post-office has been established of late years. This was the older Pattagumpus Plantation. Here also is a shingle- and saw-mill. At Medway village there is a ferry across the Penobscot, with a post-office, a Congregational church, the extensive tannery of Henry Poor & Son, with a hotel, two general stores, several shops, and the "Reunion" Lodge of Good Templars. There is an old mill-site at the lower end of the island where the branches join their waters.

From its favorable situation, settlement naturally got quite early into this tract—as soon as 1820, it is said, although the pursuits of the river and of lumbering must have caused much transient occupation by the whites here before that time. By 1852 the number of inhabitants here was enough to demand the simple local government for which the plantation system provides. The township was organized as a plantation, and long bore the name of Nicatou (often spelled "Nicatow" upon the maps)—a personal name of some note, we believe, among the Penobscot Indians.

Nicatou (Medway) existed as a plantation for nearly a quarter-century, or until 1875, when, on the 8th of February of that year, it was incorporated as a town under its present name. At the same time Pattagumpus Plantation, south of the township, and formerly known as Letter Z, in Township Two, lost its identity, and was absorbed in the new town.

Medway Plantation had a population of 321 in 1870, and 628 in 1880. Polls these years, severally, 76 and 156; estates, $30,637 and $79,638.

Pattagumpus Plantation had 105 people in 1860 and 94 in 1870. In 1880 its census was taken with Medway. In 1870 its polls numbered 20, and its estates were valued at $5,171.

The public officers in the town in 1881 were as follow: James F. Kimball, William Waite (South), Postmasters; J. F. Twitchell, Timothy W. Reed, Alvarus Hathaway, Selectmen; J. F. Twitchell, Town Clerk; B. N. Fiske, Treasurer; John O. Hale, Collector; John Hall, Jr., Nelson A. Powers, Constables; Thomas Fowler, James F. Kimball, Mrs. John O. Hale, School Committee; J. F. Twitchell, John Hall, Jr., Justus Hathaway (Quorum), J. F. Twitchell (Trial), Justices.

Benjamin N. Fiske, of Medway, is a son of Walter and Abigail Fiske, of Pepperell, Massachusetts. Walter Fiske was a native of Wilton, New Hampshire, and married Abigail Dixon, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. They lived many years in Pepperell, but moved to Medway in 1846. He has since lived in Waterville, New Brunswick, from which place he moved to Mattawamkeag, where he is still residing. Mrs. Fiske died August 4, 1846. This couple had six children, viz: Mary A., deceased; Benjamin; Sarah N.; Achsa, deceased; Hannah M.; and Walter H., deceased. Benjamin N., the oldest son, was born March 1, 1815, in Pepperell, Massachusetts. He began business as a hotel keeper in Medway in 1844, where he has since lived except two years spent in Aroostook county. He married Eliza P. Warren, and they have had three children, viz: Emily D., wife of Charles F. Moore, of Medway; Theodore V., deceased; and Henry D., now of Medway. Mr. Fiske is not now engaged in the hotel business, but is giving his attention to farming. He was the first Clerk in this town, when it was Nicatou Plantation. He was postmaster here for several years and has also held the offices of Town Treasurer and Selectman at different times.

Charles E. Powers, of Medway, is a son of Charles Powers, of Kennebec county, Maine. Charles Powers had five children, four sons and one daughter, viz: Charles E., Andrew, Nelson, William, and Laura A. (deceased). Mr. Powers died September 25, 1874. Mrs. Powers, whose maiden name was Frances Proctor, died in 1870. Charles E. Powers, the eldest of this family, was born August 6, 1826, and married Hannah Dean, daughter of Gideon and Mary E. Dean, of Robinson, Maine. He first settled in Marion, Maine, but moved to Medway in 1847, where they have since lived, engaged in farming and lumbering. He has had seven children, viz: Wellington, now of Medway; Maria, wife of George Reed, of Medway; Angeline, wife of William Taylor, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Ella D. and Mark, deceased; John A., and Charles William.

MOUNT CHASE.

Again we move far, far up the valley of the Penobscot, up the East Branch, up the Seboois River, and up its eastern tributary waters, to the northernmost organized town or plantation in the county, eighty miles—the Maine Register says one hundred—from Bangor. It is the ancient Township 5, in Range 6, erstwhile Mount Chase Plantation, and finally Mount Chase town. It is on the stage line from the European & North American Railroad at Mattawamkeag, to Fort Kent in the extreme north of the State, on the St. John.

Mount Chase occupies an even surveyed township (but for a little break or bend near the southeast corner, caused probably by a fault in the surveys). It is bounded on the north by Township 6, of the same range; on the east by Hersey town, in Aroostook county; on the south by Patten, Penobscot county; and on the west by Township 5, in the Seventh Range. Crystal Plantation, in Aroostook, corners with it on the southeast; and Moro Plantation, in the same, corners on the northeast.

Mount Chase, from which the town derives its name, is a commanding eminence in the central part nearly a mile and a half in length, and of considerable height. The story of its name will be given below. A road leads to it on an east and west line from Aroostook, which sends off a branch a little way due north, about half a mile from the east line of the town, and another a third of a mile further, which goes to the southward about a mile, then by a right angle to the east again, joining a little beyond the Aroostook line the stage road through Patten to Port Kent. This road enters the town nearly one-half a mile west of the southeast corner, and runs a little east of north two and one-half miles to its exit on the north line of the town. Half a mile from its entrance it sends off, on the west side, a mile long road to a settlement in the interior, and half a mile or more further another and shorter one on the other side. Shortly before entering the town, the only east and west road through Mount Chase branches from it and passes nearly due westward to its junction with a second important road from the Patten way, which, crossing the Mount Chase line about two and one-fourth miles from the southwest corner, runs northwestward nearly five miles, passing out into Township 5, just north of the Lower Shin Pond. Most of the settlements are on these main roads; and nowhere are they yet dense enough to form a village. The people are still mainly dependent upon Patten for mail facilities. School No. 2 is on the east and west road, about midway across the town; and there is another school-house about two-thirds of a mile below the junction of this with the stage road. There are in all six school districts in the town, four of which have school-houses. There is a Methodist Episcopal Society in the town, but we believe with no meeting-house built as yet.

The lakes of Mount Chase are the Shin Pond, lying a little way beyond the north line, but the main body south of it, the whole about one and one-fourth miles long, with perhaps an average breadth of one-third the length; a little sheet three-fourths of a mile south, with an outlet to the other; and the Lower Shin Pond, of nearly twice the area of its northern sister. It is on the west line of the town, and a large portion of it outside; is about a mile southwest of the upper Pond, and connecting with it by a broad, winding outlet. The upper Pond receives a small tributary on the east, which itself has several petty heads in this town. One of these ponds gives its name to the only hotel kept in the town—the Shin Pond House.

Through the southern part of the town from east to west flows the Crystal Brook, receiving from the north three small tributaries at intervals of about a mile from its head in the southwest angle, and flowing into Hersey about a mile north of the southeast corner. Further in the aforesaid angle are the three or four heads of a brook which flows across the adjacent angle of Patten into Township No. 4, Seventh Range. Three-fourths of a mile east of it the headwater of Fish Stream, which belongs mainly to Patten, passes the town line.

This township was first settled in 1838, and it was in due time organized as Mount Chase Plantation. March 21, 1864, it was erected as a full town, under the name of Mount Chase. This goes back for its original to the imposing height in the north part of the town, and that took its name from a man named Chase, who was here in 1825. He was probably an agent of the State, as his mission was to prevent trespasses by timber thieves upon the public lands, drive them off, and destroy some wild hay which they had cut. The great fire of that year in the north woods came upon him while thus engaged, and he had to flee with the utmost dispatch to save his life. Fortunately the mountain, till then unnamed, at least by the whites, was within his reach before the flames overtook him, and he found safety upon its slopes or heights. It has since been known as Mount Chase, and is one of the most notable physical features in the north of the county, specially remarkable, perhaps, among its mountains and waters, as bearing an English name.

Thirteen years passed, as already noted, before the first permanent settler got into this township, in the person of Thomas Myrick. He was presently followed by his relative Ezra Myrick, and by Francis Weeks, John Crommett, John Fisk, and David Bumpus.

Mount Chase Plantation had 250 people within its borders by the census of 1860; in 1870 it had 262, and 310 in 1880. Its voters in 1870 numbered 72; in 1880 71. Estates in these years, $22,025, and $28,101.

The principal occupation of the citizens of Mount Chase is now farming, but there is still one firm engaged in manufacturing lumber. There is a great deal of excellent water-power in the town, at one place falls of ninety feet sheer height.

The town officers of Mount Chase in 1881 were: Charles Noyes, William Lord, Oscar Davis, Selectmen; Fred Noyes, Town Clerk; John Steen, Treasurer; William Lord, Constable and Collector; Fred Noyes, Thomas Purvis, Frank H. Osgood, School Committee.

NEWBURG.

GEOGRAPHICAL, ETC.

Again far to the southwest and westward, this time nearly a full hundred miles, until we are brought up by the south line of the county; and we are at the ancient town of Newburg, on the old stage route from Bangor to Vassalboro, through China, in Kennebec county. It would rightfully be also an even surveyed township, but its symmetry is badly broken by the divergence of its south line from parallelism with its north boundary, and by the convergence of its east line, as it goes southward, toward the west limit. It thus happens that no two of its confines are of equal length, and that its area is less than twenty-three thousand acres. The measurements of its several bounding lines, if the Penobscot County Atlas is to be accepted as authority, are about as follow: North, six miles; east, five and a half miles; south, five miles; west, five and a half miles. The east line is in two sections, one running straight from the northeast corner of the town west of south, to a point about one and a third miles from the southwest corner, whence it drops to the corner in a line more nearly south. The west boundary is about a quarter of a mile longer than a perpendicular dropped from the north line to the southeast corner, which is about five and a quarter miles long, and describes the narrowest width of the town. Its greatest length is indicated by the north line, six miles.

Newburg is bounded on the north by Carmel, on the east by Hampden, the south by Winterport and Monroe, Waldo county, and the west by Dixmont. It is distant from the nearest point of Bangor only by the width of Hermon, six miles.

This town, having been settled for nearly ninety years, has become quite densely populated, its numbers considerably rising a thousand. By far the great majority of these are on the three east and west roads which completely intersect the town, and the other road in the same general direction which crosses something more than half the tract. The northernmost of these, the old stage-road aforesaid, comes in from Bangor at the northeast corner of the town, passes North Newburg post-office at less than a mile's distance, School No. 8 at the edge of the village, and School No. 7, with a cemetery, about two miles further; School No. 4 near the junction of a north road a mile from the town line which runs into Carmel, and at this junction divides into two branches, which run out half a mile apart into Dixmont. Nearly one and three-quarter miles below the northeast corner of the town enters from Hampden the road from Hampden village through West Hampden, which makes far to the south of west across Newburg and on to Dixmont post-office and out into Somerset county. This is the old stage-road. The Town House is half-way across, and almost at the exact geographical centre of the town; Newburg post-office, with a cemetery and School No. 5, is a mile west of it; and Newburg Centre post-office, with School No. 5, nearly a mile and a half east, and School No. 11 over a mile beyond the post-office.

Between these two roads another east and west highway traverses about three-fifths of the town, beginning in two branches at a road from the west of Newport Centre going north to the other road near School No. 7, the branches uniting less than a mile distant and forming a highway which goes about three miles to and then into Dixmont. About half way over it passes School No. 9, and then sends a north road a little over a mile's length to the main east and west road.

The third principal highway across the town also comes in from Hampden in two branches, which unite over half a mile in the interior of Newburg, at the Newburg village post-office. It runs thence a little south of west about a mile and a half further to South Newburg post-office. Half a mile out, at School No. 1 and the neighboring cemetery, it shoots off a road north to Newport Centre. Another north road goes from South Newport to the Town House. The main road leaves the town for Dixmont Centre about a mile above the southwest corner, a little after passing the Free-will Baptist church. A number of short cross-roads connect these main lines; but they call for no description. Across the northeast angle of the town passes the north and south road from Hampden to Carmel. Little more than a mile and a half north of this corner, in Carmel, lies the Maine Central Railroad.

The headwaters of a number of streams are in this town; but no stream cuts completely across it except a tributary of the Sowadabscook, and this only in two branches part of the way, and only across a little more than the northwest quarter of the town. The heads of the Kinsley Stream are still further in the northwest angle. In the opposite or northeast angle are several heads of the stream running into Patten Pond, on the border of the town. Further south, in the central east and south of the town, and the southeast angle, are numerous sources of a tributary of the west branch of the Sowadabscook. A very small lake, near the south line of the town, is one of them—the only sheet of water in Newburg. In the southwest angle are the headwaters of petty brooks that run into Waldo county.

The northern and western parts of Newburg are pretty full of rocks and hills; but in the southeast of the town, along the banks of the Sowadabscook, are extensive tracts of fertile intervale land. The soil here is well adapted to the growth of Indian corn and other grains, of potatoes, and of hay; and various kinds of fruit are produced with success. In the older days the hemlock and other woods of the Newburg forests prompted a large business in hauling bark and cordwood to Bangor and other points on the Penobscot; but the land is now mostly cleared and devoted to agriculture.

THE ORIGINAL OWNER

of this township, after the State of Massachusetts, was the redoubtable Revolutionary General and afterwards our first Secretary of War, Henry Knox, of whom more elaborate mention is made elsewhere in this volume. Newburg is upon one of the four townships selected February 5, 1800, to make good the deficiency in the Muscongus or Waldo patent, a large share of which (that is, the additions from the present Penobscot county) was assigned to General Knox. The purchaser from him of "Plantation No. 3" (Newburg), was Benjamin Bussey, who sold comparatively little of it, by reason of the high prices put upon it, and so held most of it until his death.

THE SETTLERS' LOTS,

in tolerable number, had to be reserved in the grant to the Waldo heirs. Already a goodly number of hardy pioneers were upon the soil of the Newburg to-be. Between 1794 and 1798, or not long after, had come Captain and Rev. Edward Snow, a retired sea-captain, and, what is more remarkable, a Methodist minister as well, who is accredited with being the first settler; Cullum Muffit, said to have been the second on the ground; and then Messrs. George and Ichabod Bickford, Thomas Morrill, Spooner Alden, Freeman Luce, Levi Mudgett, James Morrison, Abel Hardy, Ezekiel Smith, Daniel Piper, and others. Settlement was measurably kept back for a time by the exorbitant prices asked for the land by Mr. Bussey; but after his death the heirs and their agents were more reasonable in their demands, and the Plantation (or township) filled up more rapidly.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

The inchoate state of Newburg town, as before noted, was as "Plantation No. 3." March 13, 1819, it emerged from the transition period, and became a full-fledged town. It was the two hundred and thirty-second created by the General Court of Massachusetts in the District of Maine; one of the five (and the only one in Penobscot county) incorporated in 1819, and the fifth erected before the separation of the States.

Nine days thereafter, upon the call of Rufus Gilmore, under the act or resolve of incorporation, and upon a warrant issued by Thomas A. Hill, a Justice of the Peace in Bangor, the first town meeting was held at the school-house, near John Whitney's residence. There were at this time forty voters in the town, of whom about seven-eighths (thirty-four) were present, betokening the intelligent and eager interest taken in laying the foundation of permanent municipal government here. Mr. Spooner Alden was Moderator of the meeting, and Mr. Gilmore, Clerk. Both of these, with Mr. Benjamin Folsom, were elected Selectmen, Assessors, and Overseers of the new town.

A long list of honorable gentlemen, during the sixty-three years, nearly, since their election, have succeeded in the town offices the citizens chosen at this meeting for public service. Their last successors (in 1881) were: J. P. Rigby, Joseph M. Davis, Franklin Prescott, Selectmen; Chandler H. Whitcomb, Town Clerk; Jabez Knowlton, Treasurer; S. E. Mudgett, Constable and Collector; C. A. Arnold, J. W. Chapman, William Jackson, School Committee; Jabez Knowlton, C. H. Whitcomb, S. C. Emerson, J. F. Hussey, George R. Thurlough, John M. Bickford (Quorum), Charles A. Arnold (Trial), George R. Thurlough (Dedimus), Justices.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

Plantation No. 3 had 62 inhabitants at the beginning of this century. In 1810 it had 216, a truly remarkable increase (350 per cent.) for that period of Penobscot history and for a single decade. In 1820 Newburg town had 328 people, 63 voters, and estates valued at $24,718. Its population in 1830 was 626, 963 in 1840, 1,399 in 1850, 1,365 in 1860, 1,115 in 1870, and 1,057 in 1880.

The number of polls in Newburg in 1860 was 294; in 1870, 286; and in 1880, 304.

The Newburg estates were officially rated in 1860 at $170,483; in 1870, at $237,964; and in 1880, at $275,102. The property valuation of the town has kept increasing, notwithstanding some lessening of population.

NOTED NEWBURGERS.

Rufus Gilmore, the caller of the first town meeting, and otherwise a prominent citizen in the early day, was an adjutant of militia on the Hampden battle-ground in 1814, and was afterwards promoted to be Colonel. He was a land surveyor for many years, and filled various State, county, and town offices. He afterwards removed to Monroe, now in Waldo county, where he died, aged eighty-five years. General Charles D. Gilmore, former High Sheriff of this county, was a son of the honored old pioneer. He was a colonel in the Union army during the civil war, and was finally promoted to a Generalship. He is now a well-known resident of Washington, District of Columbia.

Charles P. Brown, Esq., of Bangor; M. F. Mudgett, a lawyer in New York City; A. G. Mudgett, a captain in Colonel H. M. Plaisted's Regiment (Eleventh Maine), during the late war; also Major M. M. Folsom and his brother, Dr. A. P. Folsom, of Oldtown, are natives of this town.

The following notes occur in the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College, published in the Reports of the Adjutant-General of the State:

Class of 1865.—William H. H. Andrews, born in Newburg, March, 1842; did not complete the course; Quartermaster Sergeant, with date September, 1862; promoted Quartermaster.

Class of 1867.—William P. Mudgett, born in Newburg, January, 1842; Second Lieutenant Eleventh Maine; resigned.

THE BUSINESS INTERESTS of Newburg, as last reported, consist of the cheese factory at South Newburg, organized eight or ten years ago; the North Newburg Cheese Factory, two lumber manufacturers, one carder, two carriage-makers, one cooper, one wheelwright, two stone cutters, one harness-maker, three masons, five smiths, one sign and carriage painter, three butchers, one conveyancer and land surveyor, one physician, seven merchants, and one dealer in pictures, picture frames, and fancy goods. The Grange Store is kept at South Newburg—Mr. Marcellus Tinney, agent. Agriculture is the chief industry of the town.

THE POST-OFFICES

of the town are Newburg, G. H. Thurlough, Postmaster; North Newburg, C. H. Whitney, Postmaster; North Centre, Solomon Foster, Postmaster; South Newburg, John F. Hussey, Postmaster; Newburg Village, J. J. Dearborn. The town is thus abundantly supplied with postal facilities.

THE CHURCHES

of Newburg are the Calvinistic Baptist, at Newburg Centre, whose pulpit is vacant at present; the Free Baptist, at the same place, whose church building was burned in 1876—Rev. Winthrop Andrews, Pastor; the Christian Baptist at Newburg post-office, Rev. Charles Rigby; and the Methodist Episcopal church at North Newburg, Rev. Rufus Day, Pastor.

THE OTHER ASSOCIATIONS of a quasi-public character are at present only the Rising Star Grange, No. 11, Patrons of Husbandry, at Newburg, and the Golden Rule Grange, No. 183, at North Newburg.

THE SCHOOLS

of the town, on a public foundation, number ten. A free high school has been maintained during two terms per year.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

One of the early settlers of Newburg was Mr. David Gilmore, who came here from Massachusetts. He was born in Franklin, Massachusetts, in May, 1763. When he came to Newburg, it was known as No. 2, Range 1. He was for many years Land Agent for B. Bussey, and was once waylaid and nearly killed by trespassers. He married Mary Robins, who was born in November, 1766. They had six children, all of whom are now deceased. Mr. Gilmore died in February, 1848, and Mrs. Gilmore in January, 1834. Rufus Gilmore, eldest son of David Gilmore and father of Mrs. J. M. Brown, was born October 26, 1787, and came to Maine with his father. He married Julietta Fairbanks, born April 10, 1788. They were married December 8, 1808. Mr. Gilmore was a surveyor, and assisted in laying out the Hallowell Military Road and the townships in Aroostook county. He surveyed the Calais road. For over twenty years he was Postmaster in Newburg. At the time of the battle of Hampden he was an officer, and during his later life received a pension for a few years. He held prominent town offices, and was County Commissioner twice. So much was he held in esteem by his townsmen that he was chosen by them to represent them in the Legislature. In 1853 he moved to Monroe, Waldo county, where he and his wife both died. They had eleven children—six daughters and one son. His son Charles David now lives in Washington, District of Columbia. He served in the army during the Rebellion, and was promoted to the rank of General.

Moses Adams was born in Hamilton, Massachusetts, June 21, 1797. He moved to Newburg, Penobscot county, Maine, in 1831, and settled on the farm he now occupies. Mr. Adams is the oldest man living in the town of Newburg. He served under Captain Parson in the War of 1812 for six weeks. He was married February 10, 1831, to Nancy Philbrick, Mt. Vernon, by whom five children were born—Delia J., born July 2, 1832, now the wife of George R. Thurlow, lives at home; Louisa A., born July 2, 1836, married William W. Jackson, Jr., now living in Lowell, Massachusetts; Maria A., born September 15, 1838, married Charles H. Bond, lives in Charles River Village, Massachusetts; Sidney C., born October 14, 1841, died at the age of thirteen months.

Jabez Knowlton, the subject of this sketch, was born in Ashford, Connecticut, January 16, 1809, and settled in the town of Newburg, Penobscot county, Maine, in 1835, on the place now occupied by him. He engaged in the mercantile business, which has since been his occupation. Mr. Knowlton was elected First Selectman in 1842, and held the office until 1877; was elected Representative of the county in 1847. Mr. Knowlton married Susan M. Bickford, June, 1839, by whom he had one child—Amos W., born April 27, 1845. Amos W. Knowlton was married November 10, 1869, to Anna Churchill, of Lawrence, Massachusetts. Amos W. held the office of Town Clerk in Newport three years. In 1872 he went to Newport and engaged in mercantile business eight years, but for the past year he has been engaged in business with his father. Mr. J. Knowlton was elected Town Treasurer in 1842. In connection with his other business Mr. Knowlton has been interested in the carding, cloth-dressing, shingle, and lumber industries, giving employment to many men. Amos W. is a Justice of the Peace, and is Master of Archon Lodge, No. 139, Free and Accepted Masons, East Dixmont.

George R. Thurlow was born in South Berwick, York county, Maine, April 19, 1821, moved to Monroe at the age of seven years, and lived in that town till 1852, from which place he moved to Newburg, Penobscot county, Maine, and settled on the place now occupied by himself and Moses Adams. He was the fifth son of James Thurlow, formerly of South Berwick, Maine, who was one of the earliest pioneers of Monroe. He was Superintendent of Schools in Monroe and Newburg for five years; served as Aid to both Brigadier and Major-General of Militia; has held the office of Town Clerk of the town of Newburg sixteen years; also Justice of the Peace sixteen years, and is now Qualifying Justice in said town. In 1870 he was elected Representative to the Legislature; served as a member of the Senate in 1875 and 1876; has also been engaged in farming, lumbering, milling, conveyancing, and land surveyor. He married Delia J. Adams October 10, 1850, by whom three children were born—Sidney A., born in Monroe

October 23, 1851, is now clerk in foreign department of the New York City post-office, having charge of said department, not married; Flora A., and Carrie L., both of whom have been engaged in teaching for several years.

Joshua B. Prescott was born in Dixmont, Penobscot county, Maine, January 9, 1811. In 1832 he came to Newburg, and settled on the farm now occupied by him. In 1837 he married Rebecca Varney, of Dixmont, by whom seven children were born—Charles H., born November 25, 1841, died from a wound received in the late war; Franklin, born May 5, 1843, married Addie Newcomb, of Carmel, and now lives in Newburg; Augustus, born October 10, 1844, married Mary MacPherson, of Newburg, living now in Newburg; Louisa, born October 9, 1846, married Thomas King, of Newburg, now living in Etna; Ellen, born October 14, 1851, married William Rackliff, of Dixmont, lives at home; Emma, born November 19, 1853, died June 12, 1866; Clarence, born September 29, 1857, died June 12, 1866. Joshua B. has been one of the Selectmen of Newburg for ten years, also Overseer of the Poor. Charles H. enlisted in the Nineteenth Maine Regiment, Company B; was wounded in one of the engagements, and died from the effects of wounds received; also Franklin Prescott enlisted in the First Maine Cavalry, Company M, under Captain Brown, and was wounded near Petersburg. He was in many engagements during his service of three years. Since the war he settled in Newburg on the farm now occupied by him, and holds office of Selectman.

H. A. Arnold was born in New Brunswick, the 15th of February, 1820. He is the first son of Joseph Arnold, who emigrated to this county in 1832, and settled in Dixmont. Mr. Arnold, not having a chance to attend school in early life, by his own energy and self-will acquired a fair education, and taught common school twenty-five terms. He has been in the mercantile business for many years. He came to the town of Newburg in 1854. He has been a School Committeeman for three years, also Selectman three years, and is Postmaster at present. Mr. Arnold married May 1, 1843, Hannah Fasker, of Dixmont, by whom five children were born—Marcela, born February 5, 1844, married I. B. Bickford, of Newburg, now living in Somerville, Massachusetts; Hannah A., born September 5, 1851, married Algernon Brown, of Carmel, now living in Newburg; Charles A., born September 17, 1853, married Florence Toothaker, of Dixmont, now living in Newburg; Lillie F., born May 13, 1856, married George Curtiss, of Newburg, now living in Boston, Massachusetts; Melville A., born October 24, 1864, now living at home. Charles Anson Arnold, oldest son of H. A. Arnold, received his education in common and high schools, and also at the Maine Central Institute, and has since been elected Trial Justice. He has also been Superintendent of Schools of Newburg township three years, and is now a member of the School Committee in said town.

John Eaton was born in Sedgwick, Maine, March 16, 1808. In 1830 he moved to Winterport and bought a farm, on which he lived ten years. He then moved to Newburg, where he has since resided. He married Mary K. Doten; and had six children: Caroline H., married Joseph M. Davis and died in 1858; Lucinda R., married John W. Davis, and lives at home; Mary H., married Charles B. Abbott, who died in the late war; Francis A., married Joseph M. Davis and lives at home; Maria P., married George F. A. Avery and lives in Exeter; Harriet R., married Burgess W. Newcomb and lives in Newburg. Joseph M. Davis was born in Sedgwick, Hancock county, Maine, March 22, 1832. After he was nineteen years of age he worked seven years in the ship-yards, when he moved to Newburg. He has held the office of Selectman for six years. November 26, 1854, he was married to Caroline H. Eaton, and had two children, Fred O. and Caroline H., both of whom, together with his wife, died. In 1858 he married Francis A. Eaton and has had five children: Frank W., John A., Carrie E., all deceased; Cora G. and Joseph F., at home.

John W. Davis was also born in Sedgwick, Maine, April 25, 1833. In early life he followed the sea for three years, after which he settled in Newburg and engaged in farming and ship building. He married Lucinda R. Eaton and has two children: Flora E. and Addie R.

Eleazer K. Davis was born at Jackson, Waldo county, Maine, February 20, 1812. In 1866 he moved to the farm he now owns and occupies. His early life was filled with the toils and difficulties invariably found in a new country. His education was confined to a few short weeks in each winter for a few years, when he learned the trade of clothier and wool carding, and after that the carpenter trade. He was married February 13, 1839, to Jerusha House, of Dixmont, and had six children: Louisiana M., married James F. Ruggles; Martha J., married Daniel Pillsbury; Francis C., died in infancy; William D., lives at home. While living in Jackson Mr. Davis was elected Collector and Constable.

Charles Rigby was born at Newcastle, Maine, December 19, 1803. He is a son of James Rigby, who emigrated from England in an early day, and when ten years of age went to Palermo. He married and commenced house-keeping in Albion, and in 1841 removed to Newburg, where he is now living, engaged in carriage making and farming. In November, 1837, he was ordained as a Christian minister, and has since preached on Sundays. November 1, 1821, he married Mahala Perkins, and had two children: Martha A., deceased, and Josiah P., born April 11, 1834, remains at home. Mr. Rigby was elected Representative in the State Legislature in 1862, and served one term.

Josiah P. Rigby was born in Albion, Kennebec county, Maine, and moved to Newburg when a small boy, where he received a common school education, and commenced to work in a carriage shop with his father, making that his business till 1872. In 1872 he went to Newport and engaged in a general clothing manufactory and mercantile business, in the firm known as Knowlton & Rigby, for two years. Since that time he has been engaged in farming. He has been Selectman for twelve years, and was elected Representative in 1878. Mr.

Rigby is leader of the South Newburg band, a very fine organization started by Mr. Rigby two years ago, which is liberally patronized by the public in general. He married Ruth A. Fairbanks, of Dixmont, the 27th of May, 1856, by whom one child, Frank J., was born May 24, 1862. Frank J., the only child of Josiah Rigby, is a young man of more than ordinary musical ability, playing E clarinet in Newburg band. He is now receiving a musical education at Kent Hill Seminary.

Marcellus Tinney was born August 3, 1842, in Newburg. He is the eighth son of David and Saloma Tinney, natives of Penobscot county. After leaving school he went to sea in a merchantman, under Captain John Short, and was gone two years, visiting Ireland, England, Alexandria, Egypt, Constantinople, Turkey, Odessa, and Russia; was anchored in the Black Sea, on the coast of Russia, two months; came back to Ireland and took passage to this country in the steamer City of Dublin, and afterward settled on a farm in Newburg for eight years, after which he followed the occupation of blacksmithing for the European & North American Railroad Company. Was married, October 29, 1872, to Frances Fisk, by whom one child was born, Francis. Both mother and child are now deceased. He came back to Newburg and followed farming till four months ago, when he took charge of the Rising Star. In November 19, 1873, he was married again to Eliza Doble, of Lagrange, daughter of William Doble, by whom two children were born, viz: Frank W., born August 23, 1874, now living at home. Ida M., born June 13, 1879, living at home.

R. B. Thomas was born July 14, 1823, in the town of Newburg. He is the fourth son of James Thomas, one of the earliest settlers of Newburg, whose occupation was farming. He was a recruit in the War of 1812; was Town Agent, also one of the first selectmen, overseers of the poor, and assessors. R. B. Thomas received a common school education in his early days, and afterwards followed farming and ship-carpentering. He has been Selectman, Assessor, and Overseer of the Poor for one term. He was married January 12, 1855, to Sarah Leavitt, of Newburg, daughter of G. B. and Sally B. Leavitt, one of the oldest ladies now living in Newburg, her family being also one of the early settlers of the town. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have one child, Sabine F., born April 1, 1857; married Ada J. Malley, of Newburg, now deceased; is now living at home occupied on the farm with his father.

George Sweetser was born in Newburg July 19, 1836. He is a son of Jonathan Sweetser, born in the same town, and married Lydia Haley in 1830. The father of Jonathan Sweetser was one of the earliest settlers in the town. Jonathan and Lydia Sweetser had two children: Charles, married Myra Marces and lives in Minnesota; George, married Ellen Elliott, of Idaho, May 9, 1863, and died in Newburg, August 7, 1880. George Sweetser obtained a common school education, and when a young man engaged in trading with the Indians in the Red River country, and afterwards spent six years in the mines. On their return they were attacked by Indians, and burned their wagons. After his return to Newburg he was elected to the Legislature and served one term. He, with others, took the first quartz-mill across the plains to Idaho.

George Hill was born in South Berwick, March 5, 1800. His father, James Hill, was also born in the same town. His wife was Alice Ferguson, and their family consisted of George, Eliza, Mary Jane, Nathaniel, Sarah Ann, and Eunice. George Hill settled in the town in the year 1827. On the 27th of May of the same year he married Harriet F. Jennison, daughter of Ebenezer Jennison, of Dixmont, by whom he had ten children: George, Jr., and Sarah (twins; the former deceased. Sarah married Samuel Smith, and lives in Easton. George J., deceased; Henry W., deceased; John J., married Frances E. Knowles, of Newburg, and has three children; John J. was a soldier three years, and since his return has been Selectman several terms. Eben J. married Bertha L. Lipseble; he also served in the late war, and was wounded. Edward K. and F. O. J. S. (twins) were also in the war, and are both physicians. The former married Georgie F. Speake, and is practicing in Washington, District of Columbia; he served as assistant surgeon of the Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry. F. O. J. S. married Lizzie Hill, of Newburg, and is now engaged in practice in that town. Harriet F. Hill lives at home with her parents. Helena M., married Mark H. Siprelle, of Monticello.

John Dearborn, son of Jacob and Nancy Dearborn, was born May 12, 1850. Since becoming twenty-three years of age he has been engaged in cheese-making, superintending the South Newburg Cheese Factory for six years past. He has also been engaged in mercantile business the past two years. He married Seville Kimball, daughter of James and Elizabeth Kimball, of Carmel, and has one child, Hall C.

John Whitney, at the age of twelve, came to Newburg with his father, Amos Whitney, and settled on the place now owned by Allen Newcomb, living there sixty years. Amos Whitney died soon after settling in the town. John Whitney lived on the farm with his father in early life. He received a common school education, and taught school several winters. He was in the battle of Hampden under General Blake and Captain Bickford. He was Selectman for many years, as well as Town Agent, Superintending School Committee, Treasurer, and was one of the prominent men of the town. He died at the age of eighty-seven. He married Betsey Fairbanks, by whom he had a large family of children: Calvin H., Mary Jane, John, Susan Elizabeth, John F., Nancy A., George W., Charles Henry, Warren L., Anna A., all living but one. C. H. Whitney was born November 22, 1814, in Newburg. After receiving an academical and classical education he taught school several years very successfully in town and high schools. He afterward engaged in mercantile business for fifteen years, since which time he has devoted his attention to farming. He was Representative to the State Legislature one term, and has held nearly all the town offices; he is now serving as Postmaster. He married Rebecca C. Steward, of St.

Albans, by whom he has six children: Charles A., born January 17, 1851, married Martha Merrill, of Brownville, and now lives in that place; Olive Elizabeth, born February 7, 1853, is the wife of Arthur Merrill, of Brownville; John R., born January 20, 1855, now living in Massachusetts; L. Jennie, born March 31, 1859; Rebecca C., born January 3, 1865; Calvin Lincoln, born February 14, 1867. The last three are living at home. He has always been deeply interested in the cause of education, in every way doing all he can to benefit the schools of the town. He has been Postmaster for about thirty years, and is enjoying well deserved comfort, surrounded by a fine family.

Charles Croxford came to the county with his father in an early day. His father, Ezekiel Croxford, served for a time in the War of 1812. He had a family of eleven children. Charles settled in this township in 1829, and married Nancy B. Moss, October 14, 1849, who bore three children: Arthur R., married Julia M. Sylvester, and is engaged in mercantile business in Newburg; Selma J., deceased; Emily, deceased. Mrs. Croxford was a daughter of James and Frances Moss, who came from England to this country.

Arthur R. Croxford was born December 30, 1850, in Newburg. He is now engaged in mercantile business, buying wool, etc., also dealing in stock. He married Julia Sylvester, who was born September 5, 1850. They have one child, E. Josie, born January 20, 1877.

William Sawyer was born in Gorham, Cumberland county, November 13, 1797. He came with his father, Thomas Sawyer, to Hampden when a mere child. Thomas Sawyer was a seafaring man, and is supposed to have been lost at sea. William Sawyer came to Newburg in 1835, and settled where he now lives with his son. He married Eliza Hewes, of Hermon, in 1819, and had six children: Thomas, deceased; twins, died unnamed; Elizabeth; Sylvester H., born in 1829, lives in Rockland; William, Jr., born in December, 1828, and lives in Hampden. Mr. Sawyer lost his first wife in 1829, and in 1831 he married Jane Miller, by whom nine children were born: Eliza J. married Ray Cooper, lives in Hampden. Elizabeth A. married Job Collett and lives in Bangor. Ruth M. married Lyman Miller and lives in Newburg. Henrietta lives in Lawrence, Massachusetts. John and Lusetta (twins), the latter living with her sister at Lawrence. Charles T., deceased. John Sawyer was a sergeant in Company K, Second Maine, two years, and then enlisted in Hancock's Veteran Corps. Was three times wounded. Since his return he has held several town offices. He married Elizabeth Fernald, daughter of Frederick and Betsey Fernald, of Shapleigh, November 19, 1874.

Mark Folsom is a son of Mark Folsom, who settled in Dixmont at an early day, and married Polly Staples, by whom he had eighteen children. Mark Folsom, jr., was born December 15, 1808. When he reached his majority he came to Newburg and settled on the place now owned by him. He served as Major in the early militia service of the State; was elected Representative in the Legislature in 1873, and has also held the offices of Collector and Constable seven years. He married Sarah Morrill in 1831, and had a family of eight children—Hannah C., Sarah H., William Franklin, Mark M., Albion P., Charlotte A., Gorham A., Louisa F. Mrs. Folsom died in October, 1872, and he married Abigail Tibbetts, of Newburg. Gorham A. Folsom was shot at Weldon Railroad, and taken to Libby Prison, where he died. Mark M. Folsom enlisted as private, was promoted to captain, and served three years. Since the war he has been made Major in the State militia.

M. C. Chapman is a son of William Chapman, of Newburg, who settled on the farm now occupied by Josiah Rigby. He married Eliza Morrill, of Newburg, by whom thirteen children were born—Augustus, Thomas, Alfred, Elizabeth, Charles, Henry, Hannah, Augustus P., Adolphus J., Martha, Milton, Horace, and Abbie, nine of whom are living. He was a captain of militia. M. C. Chapman was born June 16, 1841, in Newburg. At the age of twenty he enlisted in the First Maine Cavalry, Company A, and served three years; was corporal and afterwards raised to sergeant; was taken prisoner at Banks's retreat. On his return he married Rosina Newcomb, of Newburg, only child of David and Betsy Newcomb. Two children were born by this marriage—Clarence C. and Henry M.

John Bartlett was born in Kittery, York county, Maine, and immigrated here at about twenty years of age. He died on the place now owned by Enoch Bartlett at about the age of forty. He married Hannah Perry, of Phippsburg, by whom nine children were born, viz: Joseph, Lydia, Eveline, Rufus, John, Hannah, John, Fidelia, Franklin, and Nancy, five of whom are living.

Joseph Bartlett is the oldest son of John Bartlett. In January, 1843, he married Hannah Ricker, of Monroe, daughter of Reuben and Nancy Ricker. To Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett five children were born—Rufus, married Melissa Sweetser, of Newburg, now living at Hermon Centre; Martha A., married Lincoln Morrill, now living in Newburg; Charles I., married Clara E. Mailey, of Newburg, now living in Newburg; William, married Etta Goodrich, of Newburg, now living at home with his father; Friendly, born in Newburg August 9, 1861, died April 19, 1864.

Allen Newcomb is a son of Hezekiah Newcomb, who emigrated from Cape Cod and settled in Newburg. He was in the war of 1812 and at the battle of Hampden. He married Rachel Brown, of Cape Cod, daughter of David Brown, by whom eight children were born: Benjamin, Doane, Sally, Washburn, David, Stillman, Allen, Hezekiah. Allen Newcomb was born in Newburg August 6, 1816. He married, at the age of twenty-six, Olive Mitchel, of Newburg, by whom two children were born—Augustus A., born in 1846, married Elizabeth Neally, of Newburg, and now living in Newburg; and Addie V., born in 1848, married William Dally, of Bangor, now deceased. Mrs. Newcomb died in 1860. Mr. Newcomb married for his second wife, in 1866, Lizzie A. Cook, of Plymouth, daughter of David W. Cook. Mrs. Lizzie Newcomb commenced teaching when but fourteen years of age, teaching thirty-three schools and following it closely for fifteen years. She commanded the highest wages then paid for teaching. The result of this marriage has been two children—little girls, both of whom died in infancy.

Horace Bickford is a son of Captain Ichabod Bickford, who emigrated from Parsonfield in an early day. He was one of the earliest settlers of the town of Newburg, and settled on the place now owned by T. C. Mudgett; afterwards settling on the place now occupied by his son Horace, where he died, at the age of seventy-five. He was a Captain of the militia of Newburg and was engaged in the War of 1812, and was at the battle of Hampden. Mr. Bickford did much towards making the town of Newburg what it is, being a hard-working man. He married Betsy Pearl, of Limerick, by whom nine children were born: Sally P., George L., James T., Nancy B., John S., Caroline A., Horace P., Rufus, and Marcus L. Horace Bickford was born January 15, 1823, in the town of Newburg. He has been Representative to the Legislature; also one of the Selectmen, Town Agent, and Auditor for a number of years. He married January 18, 1848, Lydia A. Bussey, daughter of Otis I. and Eliza Bussey, of Newburg. By this marriage one child was born—Leroy M., born November 9, 1848, now living in Boston, engaged in mercantile business with his uncle. He is a graduate of the English High School, of Boston.

James Morrison is the only son of James Morrison, Sr., who was born in Parsonfield, York county, Maine, and emigrated to the town of Newburg in 1806, settling on and clearing up the place now owned by his son. In the second year he built on his farm a house and then moved his family to this town. He and James Bickford cleared off fifty acres of land and planted it to corn, with two men hired by them harvesting the crop. Mr. Morrison was one of the first settlers on the middle road. He married Nancy Hilton, of Parsonfield, daughter of Dudley Hilton, by whom two children were born—Nancy and James. James Morrison, Sr., was a son of James Morrison, of Parsonfield, who served three years in the Revolutionary war, as a private. He was at Saratoga, and helped capture Burgoyne. James Morrison is now living on the place settled by his father. He married Caroline Elizabeth Brown, of Newburg, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth Brown. By this marriage six children were born: Nancy E., Daniel A., Henrietta, Emma, and Arthur. All of his children died of diphtheria in one year.

Eben Fall was born April 5, 1823, in Pittsfield. He is a son of Eben Fall, of Pittsfield, who emigrated to Penobscot county, and settled at Orono in 1831, where he died in 1876. He married Elizabeth Jacobs, of Wells, by whom nine children were born—Betsey, Hannah, Phoebe, Lucy, James, Mary, Eben, Martha, and John, eight of whom are living. Eben Fall, Jr., son of Eben, Sr., settled in Newburg in 1857, on the place now occupied by him. He married Julia Ellen Curtis, of Newburg, daughter of Ebenezer Curtis, by whom three children were born—Anna A., living at Lawrence; Cora E., deceased; Oscar H., now living with his father.

C. A. Staples was born June 28, 1852, at Winterport, Waldo county, Maine. He is a son of James and Lucy Staples, of Winterport, a seafaring man, who married in 1817, and had five children—Abbie, Josiah, Charles A., Lizzie E., and Martha A. C. A. Staples received an academic course at Hampden Academy, and has been occupied in teaching, milling, and farming, having taught twenty-three schools. Mr. Staples was a successful teacher. Has been Superintending School Committee four years. Mr. Staples has been engaged in the mercantile business in the town of Newburg two years. He was married August 20, 1868, to Abbie E. Goodell, daughter of William and Sarah Goodell, of Hampden, by whom one child was born, Josiah J., born March 4, 1871.

Levi Mudgett emigrated from Gilmanton, New Hampshire, in 1799, and settled on the farm now occupied by Simon E. Mudgett, his son. Mr. Mudgett was one of the first settlers in the town of Newburg, clearing up most of the farm and building the house now on the place. He was in the War of 1812, at Castine; served in Captain Chamberlain's company six months. He married Martha Riker, of Monroe, by whom seven children were born, all of whom are living—Levi, born July 12, 1820, living with his brother Simon; Benjamin F., born July 11, 1822, now living in New York, has been in the custom house eight or ten years. He and Jackson took the contract for running the Government stores under President Grant four years; is a lawyer by profession, now in practice in the city of New York. Simon E., born July 29, 1824; Albert G., born December 9, 1826; married Cordelia Perkins, of Hermon, now in Waterville, Kansas; has been Judge of Police Court six years; enlisted as private in the late war, and raised to Captain in the Eleventh Regiment, Company G, Maine Volunteers. He served four years; was taken prisoner three times; was in nearly all of the prisons; running away at one time was captured by blood hounds, would have escaped had it not been for a snow-fall, by which they were tracked and captured, traveling at night and fed by the negroes. Mary E., born April 6, 1829, married Zeba Ayer, of Freeport, Maine, now living at that place; Martha A., born November 25, 1832, married G. P. Leviatt, now living in Newburg; William P., born January 23, 1842, now living in Waterville, Kansas; was in the late war; was Lieutenant in the Eleventh Regiment; was taken sick, was discharged; was a graduate of Brunswick College, also a graduate of Brooklyn Law College. Simon E., third son of Levi Mudgett, was born in Newburg. He was in the mercantile business fifteen years, also deputy Sheriff in Hampden, Maine; he was also in the mercantile business seven years at Dubuque. Mr. Mudgett was very successful in business in the early part of his life, starting in business without any assistance, and accumulating $10,000 before the age of thirty, but was not so successful in the West, losing heavily. He afterwards came back to the old homestead, and commenced at the bottom of the ladder again. By industry he has again accumulated an independence. He married Julia A. Whitney, daughter of Isaac Whitney, of Newburg, who died seven years after marriage. To them one child was born, Sarah J., born July 5, 1852, married Joseph J. Humphrey, of Bangor, now living with his father. Mr. Mudgett was married February 17, 1859, to Adaline Cole, daughter of Nathan and Abbie Cole, of Winterport, by whom six children were born, viz: Lizzie E., deceased; Edward E., now living in Minnesota; Charles F., born October 9, 1863, Walter G., born September 29, 1868, Flora G., born December 22, 1873, Addie M., born March 13, 1876, live at home.

Jacob Dearborn settled in Newburg in 1786, on the place now occupied by his son, Isaac Dearborn, where he died at the age of eighty-four years. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and took part in the battle of Hampden, under General Blake. He married Hannah Whitney, daughter of Daniel Whitney, by whom he had thirteen children: Lucinda, deceased; Joanna, married Lemuel Rich, of Exeter; Warren L., married Eva Bradford and lives in Newburg; Anna, now lives at home; Isaac, born February 6, 1812, married Noma Brown, of Leeds, and resides on the old homestead in Newburg; Nancy, married William Leonard and lives in Newburg; Lydia, deceased; Marguerite, married Chauncey Spaulding, of Frankfort; Cynthia, married James Luce, of Newburg; Jacob, married Nancy Newcomb, and is dead; John, married Sarah J. Chase and lives in Newburg; Mary A., married Cyrus Chase, of Winterport; Elias, is in the West.

Daniel Smith emigrated to this county in an early day with his father, Jeremiah Smith, and settled on the farm now owned by Widow Brown. He was one of the very first settlers of the town, having to go miles on horseback to mill through the woods, no roads being laid out. He was in the War of 1812, at the battle of Hampden. His wife was a hard-working woman, spinning and weaving the clothes for her family. At the time of the battle of Hampden she had got her cloth finished; had taken it to Hampden for finishing, when it was destroyed by the English. Daniel Smith was Representative to Portland, one of the first Representatives of the county. While gone from home his wife and children carded, wove, and spun thirty yards of cloth. He was also Town Clerk for many years, has been Representative to Augusta several terms, and was First Selectman, filling all of the important town offices. He married Temperance Lewis, of Cape Cod, by whom ten children were born: Mary A., Ruth, Joseph and Daniel (twins), Sally, Jeremiah, Elbridge, Sally (second), Asa, Mary Ann (second). Joseph Smith was born September 15, 1814, in Newburg. He helped build the Veazie mills and dams, working in mills twenty-four years. He went to Minnesota to build a mill for Cushing, and went to Canada East repairing his mills. He has held minor town offices. November 2, 1837, he married Mary Benson, daughter of Joseph and Mary Benson. She was born December 3, 1816. To them six children were born: Edwin, born February 27, 1840, married Lizzetta A. Young, of Winterport, and has one child; Charles F., was engaged in the mills until the war broke out, when he enlisted, August 17, 1861, in Company C, Seventh Maine Regiment, under Captain Gilmore, and was raised to sergeant. He served two years, was sick and discharged; was drafted afterward and served two years under Captain Parsons, Company B, Nineteenth Maine Regiment; was in all of the engagements with his company; was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, losing a finger, disabling his hand badly. He was in twenty-nine battles, one of which was the seven days' battle of the Wilderness, at Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, etc. Since the war he has learned the machinist's trade. He has been for the past year on the farm with his father. Milton, born March 5, 1842; died May 1, 1862; was in the late war, a member of Company K, Eighth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, under Captain I. Conant, and died of typhoid fever on Tybee Island, South Carolina; was at the capture of Port Royal. Rosina, born October 16, 1844, died September 30, 1846; Joseph A., born March 21, 1848, married Emma D. Averill, of Fort Fairfield, and is now living at Dixmont; Flora E., born June 15, 1856, married T. D. Clemens, of Winterport, now living at that place; Frank A., born August 5, 1859, died July 16, 1864.

Solomon Foster is the second son of David and Emily Foster. He has been in the mercantile business since he became of age. He is postmaster. He married Florilla H. Bickford, daughter of Isaac Bickford, of Newburg; has one adopted child, Russell Morris Foster, born November 20, 1878. Mr. Foster had the misfortune to lose one of his limbs.

David A. Foster emigrated from Montville, Maine, to the town of Newburg in an early day. He settled on the place now occupied by his son, clearing it up from its natural state. He was one of the old pioneers who suffered the privations that the early settlers were subject to. He was in the War of 1812 at the battle of Hampden. He married Emily Newcomb, daughter of Solomon Newcomb, of Newburg, by whom seven children were born—Charles, Sarah, Solomon, Hannah, Helen, Allen, and Emma, six of whom are living. Mr. Foster gave his children as good an education as could be had in those days.

Benjamin Porter was born in Oxford county, Denmark, November 14, 1792, whence he emigrated to this county and settled in Hampden on the place now occupied by George Neally. He was in the War of 1812; was Lieutenant and Captain; was at the battle of Hampden. He married Nancy Wiley, of Hampden, by whom three children were born—Mary, Julia A., and Abigail. The mother died in 1819, and Mr. Porter married for his second wife Polly Gillman March 20, 1820, by whom thirteen children were born—Benjamin, Jr., Ruth, Asa, Susan T., Andrew J., Sarah F., Lucinda M., Louisa G., Alphonzo, Matilda M., Melissa L., Horace B. Dudley G. was born in Hampden August 30, 1848, on the old homestead. He received a common school education, and at the age of seventeen enlisted in the navy under Admiral Porter; served ten and a half months; was at the bombardment of Fort Fisher. After coming home and staying two years he took a trip to California, and was engaged in mining nearly eight years.

After coming home he settled on the place now owned by him. He married Dora Plummer, of Monroe, daughter of Sullivan and Sybil Plummer, descendants of General Putnam, of Revolutionary fame. By this marriage one child was born—Alina Ella, born September 5, 1879, now living at home.

John Piper, a son of Daniel Piper, was born in Newburg, and always lived in the town. He received a common school education and lived with his father until twenty-one years of age. His occupation was carriage-making. He married Elizabeth Packard, daughter of Lebbeus and Ann Packard, of Dixmont, by whom one child was born—Elisha Frank, born May 13, 1848, and married Edith Snow, of Newburg. His wife is now deceased, leaving four children—Mary Emma, born September 18, 1872; Walter, born October 17, 1874; John H., born October 20, 1876; Earl Chester, born December 30, 1880. They are all living with their grandfather.

Elisha Piper is a son of Daniel and Annie Piper, of Parsonfield, York county, Maine, who settled in Newburg in 1799 on the place now occupied by Widow Bartlett, clearing and improving the place, which was a wilderness when he bought it. He was in the War of 1812 at the battle of Hampden, under Captain Bickford. He married Annie Parsons, of Parsonfield, by whom thirteen children were born—Thomas P., Daniel, Benjamin, Elisah, Hannah, Abigail, Enoch, Daniel, Simeon C., infant, Alpheus F., John N., and David M. Elisha Piper was born in Newburg September 1, 1806, and received a common school education in the schools of Newburg. He worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age, after which he followed farming and working in the mill at carding and cloth-dressing. In 1849 he settled on the place now occupied by him. In 1831 he married Rhoda H. Bickford, daughter of Ebenezer and Susan Bickford, of Newburg, one of the pioneer families, by whom five children were born—Elisah S., born December 21, 1835, married Eliza Smith, of Newburg, now living at Medford, Massachusetts; Enoch F., born June 28, 1838, married Ardilla Clark, adopted daughter of Abner Whitcomb, now living at Dixmont; Eunice F., born December 21, 1838, died December 2, 1839; Rhoda A. and Susan E. (twins), born January 10, 1849. Rhoda married William H. Hallis, of Troy, and now residing in Newburg. Susan married Samuel W. Bridgham, and resides in Newburg. Elisah S. and Enoch F. were in the late Rebellion. Enoch F. served three years, coming out without a scratch. Elisah S. enlisted for the full term, but was wounded and discharged after about one year's service, and is now on the police force at Medford, Massachusetts. Elisah was under McClellan, and was in all the engagements the company was engaged in.

John B. Leviatt is a son of Gideon B. Leviatt, born May 10, 1793, in Parsonfield, Maine, and settling in Newburg in an early day, where he died October 5, 1857. He was in the War of 1812. He married, October 11, 1821, Betsey B. Piper, by whom two children were born: Gideon P. Leviatt, and Elizabeth B. After the death of his first wife he married, September 24, 1797, Sally Piper, sister of deceased, by whom twelve children were born, viz: Nancy, Sally A., Jessie J., Elisha F., Hannah, David P., William B., Judith, John B., Elisha F., Elma F. John B. Leviatt received a common school education. In early life he was occupied in lumbering on the Penobscot River nearly thirteen years, after which he settled on the farm now occupied by him. He married Marietta Chase, daughter of Hamilton Chase, September 25, 1857, by whom eleven children were born, viz: Carroll W., born April 7, 1860, now living in Minnesota; William A., born September 16, 1862, now away from home; Inez A., born October 11, 1863, now living at home; Jennie C., born September 6, 1865, married George A. Sewell, of Dixmont, now living at home; her husband is in Colorado mining. Mettie A., born March 29, 1868, now living at home; John E., born April 8, 1869, died October 7, 1869; Fred B., born June 30, 1870, living at home; John E., born June 6, 1873, living at home; Susie E., born August 2, 1875, at home; Floyd, born May 17, 1877, died September 24, 1877; Gideon B., born February 10, 1879, living at home.

Gideon P. Leviatt was born in Newport December 31, 1823. He is a son of Gideon B. and Betsey B. Leviatt. In early life he worked with his father until twenty-one years of age, on the farm, and afterwards learned the house-carpenter trade, working at the business about twenty years. Since that time he has been farming. He married Sally B. Thomas, daughter of James and Eliza Thomas, Newburg, by whom three children were born, viz: Rufus B., born October 25, 1851, is now in business in Boston; Addie E., born August 21, 1852, married Dr. M. C. Donald, and is living in Kansas City; Clarence H., born June 21, 1858, married Mabel Mansell, and is now living in Newburg. Mr. Leviatt's first wife died in April, 1870, and he was again married to Martha A. Mudgett, daughter of Levi B. Mudgett, of Newburg, November 24, 1870, by whom four children have been born, viz: Benjamin M., born August 30, 1871, died June 23, 1873; Sarah A., born December 14, 1872, at home; George P., born January 10, 1874, at home; Annie M., born May 19, 1875, at home.

NEWPORT.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES.

Pushing straight westward now through the county, we stop at its confines, and are in another of the venerable towns, though not near so ancient as some others—Newport, which furnishes our next theme. It is fourteen and a half miles from Bangor, by the projection of its south boundary line to the northwest corner of that town; is twelve miles from the north line of the county, across Dexter and Corinna, and a little more from the south line, across Dixmont and Dexter. It is bounded on the north by Corinna, on the east by Stetson, on the south by Plymouth and a moderate breadth of Etna, and on the west by Palmyra, Somerset county. Detroit, in the same county, at the southwest, does not quite corner upon Newport, by reason of a slight jog in the county line on the north line of Plymouth. It is pretty nearly an even township of thirty-six square miles, but with some trifling divergence of its opposite pairs of lines from absolute parallelism. Its boundaries are unbroken by lakes or any large waters; but great part of its surface—probably one-fifth, or seven to eight square miles (about 4,500 acres)—is covered by the splendid sheet called Newport Pond. This lies nearly from north and south, and mainly in the north, south, and west central portions of the town, the nearest part of the main body being one and one-fourth miles distant from the west line. The lake is four and one-eighth miles in greatest length by three in greatest breadth, from Durham Bridge, at the mouth of Stetson Stream, to the entrance of the large bay on the west, at whose outlet is Newport village. The pond has a shore line of about fifteen miles.

The water system of Newport centres upon this pond. From the northeast, and from its head in Stetson Pond, comes in the Stetson Stream, about two-thirds of the way down the east side. This stream is joined by a fair-sized affluent from the north heading in the edge of Corinna, and emptying close upon the Stetson line. A mile from its mouth it too receives a small tributary from the southwest. Less than a mile and a half above the mouth of the Stetson, at another small bay, another affluent of about three miles' length, from the northwest and north, disembogues its waters. About the same distance further up, and less than a mile from the extreme head of the lake, a much larger water enters, being the joint outlet of the two large ponds in the south central part of Corinna. At a very small bay forming the extremity of the pond, a petty stream, heading in two branches in Corinna, is received. A large inlet just north of the fine bay above Newport village takes in two small tributaries from the northwest, the northernmost of which has its source in the Little Pillsbury Pond, near the county line. Through Newport village flows the most important water of all, that which accounts for the existence of the village at this particular point—the Sebesticook Stream, which enters from Somerset county, through the northwest angle of Plymouth, and makes a short course to the village. It is joined a little way out by the good-sized stream which is the outlet of Plymouth Pond. The junction of the two makes a powerful water, furnishing an admirable power as it drops down through the village to the pond. At the southern extremity of the lake, which is almost a pond, a small brook, rising in the edge of Plymouth, comes in from the south.

Newport, next to Dexter, is the most important village in the county west of Bangor. It has not only the natural advantages of the situation, but also those afforded her by the junction of the Maine Central and the Dexter & Newport Railroads. The former traverses the entire south part of the town, making stations here and at East Newport, two-thirds of a mile from the lowest point of the lake. The Dexter & Newport Branch, running north near the west shore of the pond, has about five miles of track in the town, and makes one or two small stations, but passes no post-office on its way out. At Newport Junction these roads have freight, passenger, engine, and store-houses, and all other necessary conveniences. The village has also the Town House, Union and Methodist Episcopal churches, a Masonic Hall, a large public school-house, a circulating library of some five hundred volumes, a considerable number of mills and factories, and a quite extensive business quarter for a country village.

At East Newport are several small railway buildings, two general stores, two dress-making establishments, two blacksmiths, and one wool-puller. School No. 7 is three-quarters of a mile west, near the crossing of the rail and wagon-roads.

North Newport has a church, post-office, cemetery, and a little cluster of dwellings. It is situated somewhat over a mile from the north line of the town, and about as far from the east line, on the east and west road from Bangor, through East Stetson and Stetson, and across Newport into Palmyra. Less than half a mile from the county line it passes a hamlet called Wedgewood Corners, which has no post-office as yet. Here a road crosses from the Newport village, running north up the town into the corner of Corinna. A mile above the village it sends off a road east toward the Pond, which angles near it to the north, and with a slight jog on the Bangor road west of School No. 9, also goes into Corinna. Another north and south road, entirely traversing the town, lies on the other side of the Pond. It comes in from the northwest angle of Etna, runs west of north to Durham Bridge, at the mouth of Stetson Stream, and thence west of north and north to Corinna. One-third of a mile beyond the bridge it sends off a branch northeast and north, also into Corinna, but through North Newport, running nearly parallel with it, and about a mile distant.

A mile north of the railroad, near School No. 10, it crosses a highway from the northeast and from Stetson Post-office, which goes on to East Newport, and thence a little further, out into Plymouth. At East Newport it crosses a road coming from the corner of Etna, and making north of west of Newport village. From the village, and from a point southeast a mile out, two routes run southerly into Plymouth. The Town Farm is situated near the junction of the latter with the East Newport road.

The land surface of this town is of a generally level character, and with good capabilities for agriculture, to which its people are for the most part devoted. Originally, the farms were considerably covered with broken stone, mostly granite; but when well cleared, a soil consisting chiefly of clayey loam is developed, which makes the strongest hay-land in the State, and as remunerative to the farmer as any in the county.

There was formerly in this town an immense amount of valuable saw timber; but it has now been mostly cut off. There is still, however, abundance of wood for fuel, without going beyond the limits of the town.

EARLIEST HISTORY.

It is said that, at a time long gone, whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, the Eastern Indians had one of their trails southwestward through this region, and that hereabouts they made a portage from the waters flowing into the Penobscot to the Sebasticook Stream, by which they reached the Kennebec. From this fact, as one theory or tradition goes, the town ultimately received its present designation.

The original sale of this township to the State was to David Green, of Boston, from whom, or whose heirs, the land titles of the pioneers were mostly derived.

The official surveys in the Newport tract date from 1792.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

About the year 1800, it is thought, the first pioneer got in—a hunter and trapper named Houston. He made a small clearing on Birch Point, where he built a log shelter or camp.

Four years afterwards a party of no less than sixteen men, all "prospectors," came across the country from Skowhegan, seeking a better spot for their homes. Four of them, named John Ireland ("Deacon Ireland"), Sylvanus Whiting, Thomas Steward, and Elim Pratt, settled on the north side of the lake, and remained permanent settlers to the day of their death. It is not known, we believe, where the others made their final home.

Two other pioneers, Iphidiah Ring and Benjamin Shaw, came from Deerfield, New Hampshire, about the year 1806, and also made permanent settlements, both of them near the present Newport village. Mr. Shaw settled on the west side of the tract, where he built the first frame dwelling erected in the town. This was removed from its original position in 1831 by his nephew, Benjamin Shaw, and is now a double tenement near the lake. Mr. Ring took a place on the hill northwest of the village.

Soon after Messrs. Ring and Shaw, came Mr. William Martin, and located on the east side of the river, where he built a frame house and put up a saw- and grist-mill.

The first settler definitely known to have located on the east side of Newport got in after the town was incorporated. He was Isaac Lawrence, believed to have come in 1815. Mr. Lawrence's farm was at the foot of Billings's Hill, and he prospered in its cultivation until he became one of the most thrifty proprietors in the town.

Others of the early settlers were Nathaniel Burritt, John Whiting, Daniel Bicknell, John Ireland, and Elam Pratt, most of whom were from Bloomfield, Somerset county, in this State (a town which has now lost this name). They derived the titles to their lots of land, in general, from Benjamin Shepard, a resident of Bangor.

ORGANIZATION.

The plantation name of this township was "Great East Pond," from the large sheet of water within its bounds, which seems to have borne that name.

On the 14th of June, 1814, in the midst of the strife then raging between Great Britain and the United States, the plantation was erected into a town by the name of Newport—receiving this name, according to the late Benjamin Shaw, one of the before-mentioned pioneers, from the Indian portage anciently used between the tributaries of the Penobscot and the eastern branch of the Sebasticook. It was the 9th and last of the towns created in the District of Maine during this year; and the 208th created at any time in the District. Hermon and Sangerville—both also then of "Hancock county, Massachusetts" were the towns created on the 13th of June, next before the birthday of Newport.

FIRST THINGS.

The first town meeting—rather plantation meeting—within the present bounds of Newport, was held in 1812, in the log cabin of Mr. Robert Stewart, to devise methods of protection and defense against the Indians, an attack from whom, coming from the East, was believed to be threatened.

The first town meeting after the incorporation was held on the 5th of September, 1814, almost three months after the act or resolve of incorporation was passed.

At this meeting the first Selectmen of the town were chosen—Messrs. Jetbro Sanborn, William Martin, and Samuel Hayden.

The first male child born in the town was Cyrus Wilson, who was ushered into the world about 1805. His later years have been spent in Orono, in a hale and hearty old age.

The second male child was Almond B. Ring, son of the pioneer Iphidiah Ring aforesaid. He was born about 1808, and remained in the township all his life, also surviving to extreme old age. He was, in his more active day, noted as aiding to build all the highways and bridges in the town.

E. W. Shaw

The first school was opened in the cellar kitchen of the house occupied by Benjamin Shaw, in 1813. Mr. Daniel Veasey was the teacher. The town has always had a good reputation in the matter of popular education. In 1874 a new and commodious school-house was built in Newport village, at a cost of $6,000. Three rooms of it have been occupied of late years by the several grades of the school.

The first store in Newport was opened and kept by Chandler Hopkins, near the present upper bridge, at the village.

The first doctor in the town bore the singularly appropriate appellation of Leach. Other pioneer physicians were Drs. Abijah Wright and Benjamin Wilson, the latter of whom died in Newburg in 1849, of cholera, it being a year of that dreadful scourge. In later times Dr. John Benson became a veteran in the practice, having steadily pursued his rounds for the relief of suffering humanity for well nigh half a century. Dr. Byron Porter also grew gray in the medical service in Newport.

The first person to drive a wheeled vehicle from the Kennebec to the Penobscot River was Mr. Caleb Shaw, who performed this then notable feat in 1820. He settled in Newport, and died here in 1849.

The first preachers in the town were Elder John York, the Rev. Mr. Osborne, and Rev. John Whitney. The churches now existing here are the Methodist Episcopal (Rev. V. P. Wardwell, pastor in 1881), and the Christian or Union church, of which the Rev. Mr. Howard has charge.

The Newport post-office was established about 1817. Mr. S. P. Judkins is postmaster here, Mr. J. H. Weymouth at East Newport, and Sylvanus Whiting at North Newport.

LATER NOTES.

The Shaw House, at Newport village, was built in 1859-60, by Benjamin Shaw, nephew of the well-known pioneer of that name.

Meridian Hall, at the same place, is a fine, commodious building, its audience-room seating six hundred persons.

The names of the old settler Benjamin Shaw, of Mark Fisher, Henry Butler, John Wilson, Jr., Jesse and Parker O. Prescott, William L. Walker, William Martin, Jr., and others, are cherished in the town as having done much to advance its interests. To several of these public-spirited citizens it is mainly indebted for the elms and maples lining the streets of the village, and pleasantly shading the hot summer days.

Déacon Edmund Rowe, who was one of the oldest settlers, became a member of the Board of Selectmen in 1832, and was Chairman of the Board for several years. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1862.

Newport did its full duty by the State and Nation during the late civil war. The names of many of the citizens will be found recorded with honor in the Military Chapter of this book; and the following, from the Reports of the Adjutant-General of the State, notices at more length the veteran physician and surgeon of whom we have already spoken:

Dr. John Benson, of Newport, was first commissioned as Surgeon in the Eighth Regiment, but declined. He was subsequently, January 23, 1863, commissioned as Surgeon in the Twentieth Regiment, and occupied that position until August 27, 1863, when, owing to ill-health, he was obliged to resign. That he fulfilled his several and arduous duties promptly and efficiently is unequivocally declared in the testimonials of the Surgeons-in-Chief under whom he served. Lieutenant-Colonel Gilmore, in a letter addressed to the Adjutant-General, also spoke of him in the highest terms in the following language, endorsed by Colonel Chamberlain: "I wish to express to you, in behalf of the regiment and for myself, our respect for the character and appreciation of the services of our late Surgeon, Dr. John Benson, of Newport. His kindness and discrimination, and the unusual assiduity with which he applied himself to the duties of his office, rendered him exceedingly useful and popular with the regiment, while his marked ability gave him at once high reputation with other surgeons of the army. It is a matter of unusual regret that failing health rendered it necessary for him to leave the service."

STATISTICS OF GROWTH.

In 1809 Great East Pond Plantation had within its borders the handsome number of 94 families. The next year, by the official census, it had a population of 178, with the unusually large proportion of 44 polls. In 1812, however, the total valuation of estates in the town was reported as only $544, with a tax for certain purposes of but six cents on the $100. There was a surprising growth in both population and wealth during the decade 1810-20. In the latter year Newport town had 512 people, 114 polls, and an assessed valuation of $27,650.

In 1830 the town numbered 897 people; in 1840, 1,138; in 1850, 1,210; in 1860, 1,403; in 1870, 1,559; and in 1880, 1,451. It will be noticed that it has almost always and quite steadily increased in population until within the decade 1870-80, when in common with very nearly all parts of the county, it experienced a slight falling-off.

The polls in 1860 numbered 335, 394 in 1870, and 397 in 1880.

The estates of the town in the same years, respectively, were valued at $250,534, $540,297 (more than twice as much as ten years before, a fact hardly paralleled elsewhere in the county), and $378,168.

DISASTROUS FIRES.

The extensive tannery of Messrs. Fisher & Southwick, at that time the largest in the State, went up in conflagration in March, 1847. This was a severe blow to the business of the town, particularly as it was not rebuilt.

In September, 1862, Samuel Pratt's tavern and stables, a quite valuable property, were totally destroyed by fire.

In 1866 several buildings at the village were burned, including the stores of Watson Cook, A. Hobart, and C. C. Oakes, the Masonic Hall, and two dwellings. There was no insurance upon any of these, except the petty sum of $200 on Masonic Hall.

The valuable lumber mills of Messrs. Shaw, Tracey & Co., were burned to the ground in 1868.

In July, 1877, the fine residence of W. A. Frye was burned, and in September of the same year the shoe factory of Messrs. D. Dudley & Co. was similarly destroyed.

INDUSTRIAL AND BUSINESS NOTES.

There are some excellent farms in this town, among which are noted those of Henry Marsh, R. H. Libbey, Samuel J. Allen, Levi R. Burrell, and N. B. Miles.

The Newport Cheese Manufacturing Association was incorporated on the 4th of February, 1874. During the year 1878 fifteen tons of cheese were manufactured by it.

The Newport Park Association was incorporated March 4, 1874. Other public or semi-public associations in the town, besides the religious societies, are the Meridian Splendor Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, and the Stevens Royal Arch Chapter; the Orient Lodge Independent Order of Good Templars, at Newport village, and the Dorcas Lodge of the same at North Newport; and at the same place the North Newport Grange, No. 196, Patrons of Husbandry, and a society of the "C. W. T."

The Newport Savings Bank has been one of the most important institutions in the town. In 1877 it reported deposits and profits to the amount of $111,018.44.

The manufacturing interests of this town are quite large. The carriage-makers, of whom there are two, have a particularly good reputation; some of their work, built forty years ago, still running in soundness and strength. There are also one lumberman (who has also a grist-mill), one maker of burial cases, two harness-makers, one firm of marble-workers, one boot-and shoe-maker, five smiths, one machinist and smith, one wool-puller, one painter, onestone-cutter, two dress-makers, and twenty-four persons or firms in various lines of merchandizing. There are five resident physicians, three lawyers, one notary, one dentist, one auctioneer, one barber, and one livery stable.

THE TOWN OFFICERS FOR 1881

were the following-named gentlemen: O. H. Judkins, Putnam Wilson, W. A. Lewis, Selectmen; F. M. Shaw, Town Clerk; E. R. Dow, Treasurer and Collector; Orel Dexter, Constable; John B. Marsh, School Supervisor; P. Whiting, Don A. H. Powers, J. W. Hobart, O. K. Rowe, Joel Richardson, Justices.

SETTLEMENT NOTES.

Jesse Rowe was born in New Hampshire in 1793, where he was one of the first settlers of Newport, and came to this county as early as 1818. He first settled on the farm now owned by John Nutter. He married Hannah Lane, a native of New Hampshire, and died in Newport in 1878. His wife survives him. He was the father of nine children: Julia A., Clymena, Rosetta, Paris K., Hollis J., Oliver B., Granville L., Hannah A., and Elizabeth. Paris K. was born in Newport in 1821, where he received a common school education. He was brought up on a farm, and was engaged in farming until 1873, when he sold out his farm, and purchased J. H. Weymouth's stock of goods at East Newport, and engaged in the mercantile business, in which business he is now engaged. He has held the office of Justice of the Peace for the past two years, and is also Assistaat Postmaster of East Newport. In 1854 he married Helen Burton, a native of Carmel. He is the father of two children: Mary E., who married J. H. Weymouth and lives in Newport, and Leon R., lives at home.

James Babb was born on Cape Elizabeth in 1797, where he remained for several years. He married Ann Morton, a native of the same place, and came to Penobscot county in 1835, and settled in Corinna. He died in Corinna in 1839; his wife died in Corinna in 1837. He was the father of eight children: William H., George, James, Jr., Benjamin H., Leza, Sarah E., Lydia E.; Bryant was drowned at Pine Stream Falls. James, Jr., was born in Penobscot county in 1824, where he received a common school education. He was brought up on a farm, and is now engaged in farming. In 1852 he married Clara A. Seavey, a native of Dedham, and is the father of three children: Florence H., who married John R. Clark, and lives in Newport; George S., lives at home, and Lorenzo D., lives at home.

Moses Chick was born in Berwick, York county, Maine, in 1777, where he learned the carpenter and joiner's trade. He came to Penobscot county in 1806 and settled in Dixmont, being among the first settlers of the place, where he followed his trade in connection with farming. He held the office of Selectman and School Agent of Dixmont at different times. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He was twice married, his first wife being Jane Ferguson, a native of Kittery. She died in Dixmont in 1836, at the age of fifty-five years. She was the mother of ten children. His second wife was Lydia Wallis, who died in Dixmont about the year 1863. He died in Dixmont in 1851, after raising a family of ten children—Nancy, Thatcher, Calvin, Mary J., William, Albert, Edwin, Sanford, Sally H., Moses W., Alvin B. Thatcher Chick was born in Sanford, York county, Maine, in 1803. When three years of age he came to Penobscot county with his father and settled in Dixmont, where he received a common school education. He learned the joiner's trade from his father, and followed it in connection with farming for many years. In 1879 he came to Newport and settled on the farm on which he now lives. In 1832 he married Mary E. Furgerson, a native of Dixmont, who died in Dixmont in 1854. She was the mother of ten children. He then married Cynthia H. Furgerson, a native of Dixmont, and is the father of ten children. Albert was twice married. His first wife was Julia Baker; his second, Hester A. Reed. He died in Bangor. Lydia J. lives at home. Winthrop H. married Nora Fuller and lives in Boston. Angelia V. married Henry M. Brown and lives in Newburg. Charles W. died in Dixmont. Alvin M. enlisted in the First Maine Heavy Artillery, and was killed at the battle of the Wilderness, May 19, 1864. George W. died in Dixmont. Calvin lives in Kansas. Mary E. died in infancy. Cynthia F. married E. A. Lord, and lives in Boston, Massachusetts.

Jonathan Furgerson was one of the first settlers of Dixmont. He was born in Kittery in 1781, and came to Penobscot county in 1807, where he followed farming all his life. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He married Mariam Furgerson, a native of Kittery, and died in Dixmont in 1865. His wife died in Dixmont in 1870. They had a family of twelve children: Edmund, who was twice married; his first wife was Mary Bean, his second Mary Lord; he died in Dixmont. Melinda died in 1826. Mary E. married Thatcher Chick and died in Dixmont. Lydia N. married Joseph Bassford and died in Bangor. Alvin T. married Mary A. Bissy and died in Dixmont. Abigail A. married William Bean and lives in Hudson. Daniel G. married Nancy T. McIntyre and lives in Dixmont. Hannah J. married Philo Wright and lives in Pittsfield. Cynthia H. married Thatcher Chick and resides in Newport. Doratha H. died in infancy.

William Turner was born in Reedfield, Kennebec county, in 1798, where he married Ann Bullion. In 1825 he moved to Somerset county and settled in St. Albans, where he remained until 1869, when he moved to Penobscot county and settled on the farm now owned by W. W. Turner, in Newport. He died in Newport in 1877. His wife died in Newport in 1875. He was the father of fourteen children, viz: Israel P., Sarah A., Napoleon B., Augusta, Louisa, John O., Elizabeth, Susan M., Hannah M., Harriet, Mary L., W. W., Gilbert L., one died in infancy. William W. Turner was born in St. Albans, Somerset county, Maine, in 1838, where he received a common school education. He also attended the Pittsfield Academy a short time. He learned the trade of millman on Penobscot River and the shovel-handle trade at St. Albans. In 1863 he went to Montana, where he engaged in mining and remained there nearly four years, and where he met with excellent success. In 1867 he returned to St. Albans, where he remained about two years, when he purchased the farm on which he lives in Newport, and in 1869 he became a resident of Penobscot county. In 1869 he married Clara A. Webb, of Palmyra, and is the father of three children, Hubert E., Lottie B., Carrie M., all of whom live at home.

Walter Weymouth was born in Lisbon, Maine, in 1771, where he married Polly Labarre. He came to Penobscot county in 1817 and settled in Corinna, on the farm now owned by Buchanan Fisher. He was one of the pioneers of Corinna, there being but three or four families there at the time of his arrival. He died at Reedfield in 1837 while on his way to Minot, where he was buried. His wife died in Corinna in 1847. He was the father of eleven children: Walter, Mary, James, Franklin, Mercy, William, Betsy, Jonathan, Daniel, Thomas, Olive. William was born in Lisbon in 1815. He came to Penobscot county with his father when but two years of age and settled in Corinna, where he received a common school education. He married Cynthia J. Gillman, a native of New Hampshire, in 1844. He is the father of nine children: Susan B., who married George Weed and lives in Lowell, Massachusetts; Mary M., married William P. Moore and died in Corinna; Joseph H., married Mary Roe and lives in East Newport; Uriah was a member of the Second Massachusetts Cavalry during the late war, was taken prisoner while on a raid to Vienna and was sent to Andersonville prison where he died of starvation in 1864; one died in infancy; Charles, died when seven years of age; Alta, died when four years old; Jessa, lives at home.

David A. Gove was born in New Hampshire, and came to Penobscot county as early as 1801. He was one of the pioneers of the county. He first settled for a short time in Stetson, and felled a piece of timber on the farm now owned by Porter Wiggin, which was the first clearing done in that part of the town. He went from Stetson to Corinth, where he married Olive Knight, and remained thirty years. From Corinth he went to Illinois, where he died. He was the first postmaster at Corinth, which office he held for twenty-five years. He was a delegate from his district to Portland, to help organize the then Territory of Maine into a State. After he went to Illinois he was appointed postmaster of Trivoli, which office he held until his death. He was the father of seven children—Daniel, Albert, Orville, James, David, John, and Betsy. Daniel Gore was born in Bangor in 1804. When two years of age he was adopted by Daniel Matthews, one of the first settlers of Stetson, who gave him a common school education and with whom he remained until fifteen years of age, when he started out in life for himself. When eighteen years of age he purchased the farm on which he now lives in Newport. During the days of militia he held the office of captain of a company for many years. He married Roama Blaisdell, of Sedgwick, in Newport, in 1825. She died in Newport in 1866. He is the father of five children: Narcissa L., died young; Sarah M., who married Horace Sunby and lives on the homestead; Lucy Ann R., who married Erastus Staples and lives in Exeter; Mary J., married Parker W. Cole and lives in Vassalboro; Daniel, married Mattie E. Gore and lives in Marysville, Aroostook county.

Alexander Quimby was born in New Hampshire. He came to Penobscot county in 1820, and settled on the farm now owned by Frank Hubbard, in Newport. He married Lovinia Pratt, a native of Bloomfield, in 1822. He died in Glenburn in 1839; his wife survives him, and lives in Corinna. He was the father of four children—Horace M., Esther A., James F., and William B. Horace M. Quimby was born in North Newport in 1823, where he received a common school education. In 1847 he married Sarah M. Gore, a native of Newport. He is the founder of the Newport Grange, and was its first Master. The grocery store now at North Newport was first established at his house, where it was kept three years. He is the present Treasurer of the Grange. He was also Overseer of the Town Farm at Newport for three years, the duties of which office he discharged to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. He traveled extensively through the Western States in 1857, and preempted a tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota. He is the father of two children: Alistor H., who is at Colorado Springs engaged in the manufacture of brick; Ella A., married Stillman J. Ridlon and lives at home.

Colonel James Pattin was born in 1751, in Brunswick, Maine. He married Hannah Floyd, a native of Surry. He came to Penobscot county in 1804, and settled in Stetson; he was the fourth settler in the town. He purchased his farm of Major Stetson. While in Surry he was Colonel of a regiment of militia. He died in Stetson in 1826. He was the father of ten children—Susan, who married Wilbury H. Sweet; Mary, Sarah, Hannah, Martha, Jane, James, Matthew, David, Mary, Rhoda.

James Pattin was born in Surry in 1793. He came to Penobscot county with his father, and settled on the same farm. He came to Newport about 1825, and settled on the farm now owned by James Pattin. He married Chloe Chadwick, a native of China, Maine, and he died in Newport in 1833. He was the father of seven children—John F., James, Nancy, Albert, Priscilla A., Eliza A., Elmira. James Patten, Jr., was born in Stetson in 1818. He came to Newport with his father when quite young. He married Priscilla Burrill, a native of Corinna; she had one child, and died in Newport in 1870. He then married Phœbe A. Clark, a native of Corinna, and is the father of one child, Lucy J., who married Calvin Gray and lives in Newport. John F. was married three times—his first wife was Mary A. Pattin, who lived but a short time; his second wife was Lucy Burrill, and his third wife was Dorcas W. Gillmer. He died in Newport.

Lawson G. Ireland was born in Newport in 1829. In 1846 he left home and went to the Bosquire Academy, in New Hampshire, where he studied a short time, when he returned to Newport. In 1848 he traveled through Pennsylvania and Ohio, when he again returned to Newport, where he engaged in the mercantile business. In 1851 he sold out his business and again started West. He again returned to Newport where he remained but three days, when he joined a party that was organized to go to California. In 1852, on account of the ill-health of his brother, he returned to his native place, where he remained two years. In 1854 he went to Bangor, where he followed the carpenter's trade, in which he was engaged about five years, when he removed to Amerest, and there remained until 1861, when he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Maine Regiment of Volunteers, and was mustered in as Orderly Sergeant of the company. In the winter of 1862, for meritorious conduct, he was promoted to Second Lieutenant, and during the Peninsular campaign he had command of the company. In July, 1862, on account of ill-health, he resigned his commission and returned home, where he remained two years. In 1864 he went to Clayton county, Iowa, where he engaged in the furniture business and also studied law, and in 1869 was admitted to the Bar and commenced the practice of law. In 1868 he held the office of Justice of the Peace of Monora. He continued the practice of law in Iowa until the winter of 1881, when he went to Florida and purchased property in the town of Welaka, where he makes his home during the winter. He has held the office of Mayor of Sibley, Clerk of District and Circuit Court of Osceola county, President of the County Agricultural Society, Director of the State Horticultural Society, and Secretary of School Boards for many years. He takes a deep interest in agricultural, horticultural, and educational matters. In 1854 he married Annie L. Kenniston, a native of Bradford, and is the father of three children, viz: Clarence C., who died in Newport in 1857; Annie C., lives with her parents; and Fanny M., lives with her parents.

Daniel Ireland was born in Bloomfield in 1790. At the age of sixteen he came to Penobscot county with his father and settled on the farm now owned by Frank Ireland in Newport. He married Hannah Carl, of Plymouth. He built the first dam and mill at Corinna in company with Joseph Ireland, his uncle. He remained in the mill business but two years, when he sold out to the Moore Brothers and returned to farming. He was the first man in his neighborhood to take hold of the temperance society in Newport. He died in Newport in 1877. His wife died in Newport in 1869. He was the father of fifteen children, two of whom died in infancy—Fannie S., Osbert A., Daniel E., John B., Hannah, Sarah P., Ellvina, Addison O., Lawson, Lawson G., Sarah E., Francis M., Ovando W. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Republican. Francis M. was born in North Newport in 1834, where he received a common school education. He also attended school at St. Albans a short time. He learned the carpenter trade of B. O. Cutter, of Bangor, and followed his trade about six years in Bangor, but gave it up in 1858 and returned to Newport and settled on a farm. He has held the office of Selectman of Newport four years, and has been one of the School Committee nine years, and Road Commissioner one year. In 1854 he married Amanda J. Whiting, and is the father of one child—Charles F., who married Olive J. Varney and lives in Pittsfield, Maine, engaged in the mercantile business. The Newport Grange, located at North Newport, was organized in 1874. Its first Master was H. M. Quimby; Philander Whiting, Secretary; Stephen Steward, Treasurer. Its present officers are F. S. Shepardson, Master; F. M. Ireland, Secretary; H. M. Quimby, Treasurer. In March, 1876, they opened a supply store at the residence of H. L. Quimby, but owing to an increase of business in 1880 they built the present store-room at North Newport and placed the business in charge of F. M. Ireland, under whose management they are doing a prosperous business. They keep on hand a general line of goods at all times, such as is found in all well-regulated country stores. Although the business is just in its infancy their sales amount to between three and four thousand dollars per annum.

Ira Shepardson was born in the town of Guilford, Vermont, in 1788. When eighteen years of age he came to Penobscot county, and first settled in the town of Exeter. He was twice married, his first wife being Eunice Wasson, a native of Penobscot, who died in Exeter. He then married Hannah B. Manson, a native of Massachusetts. While in Exeter he held the office of Selectman several years; also as superintendent of schools for two years. In 1826 he came to Newport and settled on the farm now owned by Ira Shepardson, Jr. He was appointed the first postmaster of North Newport, which office he held for over twelve years. His wife died in 1864, at the age of sixty-nine years. He died April 7, 1870. He was the father of seven children, three of whom died in infancy—John W., Sophronia, Ira, Jr., Hannah B. John W. was born in Exeter in 1814, where he remained until twelve years of age, when he came to Newport with his father. When twenty-one years of age he entered into partnership with Ranney & Bickrel in the mercantile business at Stetson. Four years later he disposed of his interest and turned his attention to farming, in which business he is now engaged. He is the father of four children—Mary E., married Thomas Hinton, and lives in Newport. Laura E. was twice married; her first husband's name was Mark M. Fernald; he died in Newport; she then married Joseph Williams, and lives in Newport. John E., lives at home. Leroy, lives at home. He married Mary E. Bickard for his first wife; she died in Newport in 1849. He then married Harriet Weston; she died in 1859. In 1860 he married his present wife, Mary Ring.

The Shepardson family are of Welsh descent, and were among the first emigrants to America, coming here in 1665. They settled in Attleboro, Massachusetts. Their descendants took an active part in the Revolution, the War of 1812, and the late war, and an active part in the organization of our Government.

Rev. Robert Coburn, was born in Dracut, Massachusetts, in 1773, and moved with his father when a small boy to Bloomfield. He married Mary Parker, a native of Bloomfield. He came to Penobscot county in 1824, and first settled on the farm now owned by John Dodge, in Newport. He was a minister of the Calvinist Baptist denomination, and was the pioneer minister of Newport. He organized and helped build the church at North Newport, and was pastor of the church for over forty years; also to organize many other churches in the surrounding country. He was an earnest Christian, and devoted his whole life to the cause of Christianity. His wife died in Newport at the age of seventy-two years, and he died at the same place at the advanced age of eighty-two, respected and mourned by all who knew him. He took a deep interest in political matters and was one of the first members of the Free-soil party, and clung to those principles until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Republican. He was the father of thirteen children—Sarah, Eleazer, Betsy, Mary A., Sarah, Loantha, Aaron, Naham, Samuel S., Daniel M., Lucy M., Fisher, and Aaron. Aaron Coburn was born in Bloomfield, Somerset county, in 1820. At the age of three years he came to Penobscot county with his father. He has followed lumbering and farming all his life. In 1851 he went to California via the Isthmus of Panama, where he engaged in the mining and lumbering business. After remaining there two years he returned to his old home, where he has since resided. In 1878 he represented his class in the State Legislature. In politics is an earnest Republican, and takes an active interest in the prosperity of the party. He is a thorough-going farmer and is the possessor of one of the neatest farms in the town of Newport. He first married Sarah E. Brown, a native of Etna, who was the mother of three children; she died in 1864. He then married Sabra A. Priley, a native of Waldo county. He is the father of six children—Mary H., married E. L. Richardson, lives in Newport; Lydia A., married Wilson D. Crowell, of Corinna; John M., Riley, Sarah E., and Frank R., live at home.

William P. Main, born in Rochester, New Hampshire, came to Penobscot county at an early day, and settled on the farm now owned by Addison Small, in Newport. He was a farmer all his life. He was twice married, first time to Lydia Bradford, a native of St. Albans. She had four children, three daughters and one son, and died in Newport. He then married Betsy Snow, a native of Charleston. She had nine children, six daughters and three sons, and died in Newport. Mr. Main was a member of the Christian Church. He died in Newport in 1864. His children were: Betsy, who died in Aroostook county; Lydia B., who married Moses Rose, and lives in Aroostook county; Jacob, who married Harriet Wilson, and died in Chicago, Illinois; Mary A., who married Joseph Beckford, and died in Aroostook county; David S., who died in Detroit, Maine; Bradford, who died in Newport; Meribah L., who lives in Newport; Roof S., who married Isaac Goodwin, lives in Winn; Hannah S., who married Hiram Rose, and lives in Illinois; Amanda M., who married Samuel Stimpson, and lives in Knox, Maine; Candelia C., who died in Newport; Eleanor, who died in Illinois; and William, who died in Newport.

Putnam Wilson was born in Lyonsboro, New Hampshire, in 1791. He married Fannie Hutchinson, a native of Wilton, New Hampshire, and came to Penobscot county in 1826. He was captain of a company of militia in the War of 1812. He died in Newport in 1875, his wife died in 1864. He was the father of ten children—Abiah, Harriet, Putnam, Jr., Phillip, George, Lydia, Fannie, Joseph, Charles, Hollis B.

Putnam Wilson, Jr., was born in Wilton, New Hampshire, in 1817. At the age of ten he came to Penobscot county with his father, and settled on the same farm. Has held the office of Selectman of Newport eight years in succession, and holds the office at the present time. In 1843 he married Marriabah L. Main, a native of Newport, and is the father of seven children—John, who married Marchie Lancaster, lives in Stetson; Phillip, married Anna March, and lives in Newport; Flora A., married Robert Jenkins, and lives in Newport; Forrest A., lives at home; Emma, died when one year old; Emma (second), lives at home; Fannie H., lives at home.

Dr. Byron Porter was born in Dixmont in 1839. He studied medicine with Dr. Porter, of Dixmont, and Dr. McRuer, of Bangor, and was graduated at Bowdoin Medical College in 1850. He commenced the practice of medicine in Dixmont, where he remained two years, and in 1854 came to Newport, where he has been in practice ever since. He has held the office of Supervisor of Schools for fifteen years, and in 1855 and 1856 represented his class in the State Legislature. He married Almira B. Adams, of Dixmont, and is the father of three children: Charles B., married Georgia R. Pulsifer, of Hancock county, and lives in Corinna, where he is practicing medicine; Woodbury H. Porter, is a telegraph operator on the Maine Central Railroad; William, lives at home.

Samuel Benson was born in Middleborough, Massachusetts. He married Rebecca Hunt, a native of Martha's Vineyard, and came to Penobscot county, first settling in Carmel in 1798. He was a soldier and non-commissioned officer in the Revolutionary war, and took part in many of the engagements. He followed the hotel business during the latter part of his life, and built the first hotel in Carmel. He was the father of twelve children. He died in Carmel in 1848. His children's names were Asa, Abisha, William, Rebecca, Susannah, Samuel, Permelia, Joseph, Sallie, Peleg, Elizabeth. Hon. John Benson was born in Carmel, March 2, 1809. He attended school at the China Academy for several years, and from there studied medicine with Dr. James H. Brainard in China, and received the degree of M. D. from Bowdoin Medical College in 1831. He commenced the practice of medicine at Newport in 1831. He has held nearly every office in the town of Newport at different times, and in 1859 represented his class in the State Legislature, in 1860 and 1861 served his district in the State Senate, and for three years was a member of the County Central Committee of Penobscot. In 1862 he was commissioned surgeon of the Eighth Maine Regiment, but declined. In 1863 he was commissioned as surgeon of the Twentieth Maine Regiment, but owing to sickness he was obliged to resign. In 1872 he was appointed by Governor Chamberlain to represent the State of Maine at the National Prison Congress, held in Cincinnati. He has been twice married. His first wife's name was Achsa Martin, a native of Newport. She was the mother of two children, and died in Newport in 1850. He then married Thersa A. Green, a native of Pepperell, Massachusetts, who became the mother of three children, and died in 1878, in Newport. William R., died at Newport in 1865; Mary, lives at Newport; John, Jr., lives at Newport; Isabella, married F. E. Parkes, and lives at Pittsfield; Homer F., lives at Waterville, where he is practicing medicine.

Hon. Elliott Walker was born in Brookline, Vermont, in 1822, and prepared for college at Townsend, Vermont. At the age of twenty-two years he entered Colby University, at Waterville, where he was graduated in 1848. He then went to Brandon, Vermont, where he took charge of the Brandon Seminary as Superintendent, and remained two years. While there he commenced the study of law, which he completed with Boutelle & Noyes, of Waterville, and was admitted to the Bar in November, 1851. The same year he came to Corinna, Penobscot county, and took charge of the academy, where he remained two years. In 1853 he came to Newport, opened an office and commenced the practice of law, in which business he is now engaged. He has held the office of Superintendent of Schools, Town Agent, and School Committee-man several years. In 1866 and 1872 he represented his class in the State Legislature of Maine. In 1880 he was elected Probate Judge of Penobscot county, which office he now holds. He married Sophronia B. Coffin, of Waterville, in 1852, and is the father of four children: Harriet C., married Howard C. Atwood, and lives in Newport; Jane W., married James T. Troutman, and died in California; William E., at home; Edwin C., died in Newport when six years old.

Peter Rowell was born in Brentwood, New Hampshire. He married Mary Marden, in Wolfsboro, in 1828, and came to Penobscot county and settled on the farm now occupied by his wife. He was a machinist and house-carpenter by trade. He died in Newport in 1863. He was the father of two children, Eliza J., who married David O. Trafton and lives on the old homestead, and Mary E., lives at home.

David O. Trafton was born in West Gardiner in 1836. He is a machinist by trade and was in the employ of Oakes Ames for many years. In 1859 he came to Penobscot county and settled on the farm he now occupies in Newport. In 1880 he was elected a member of the State Legislature by his class on the Greenback ticket. In 1859 he married Eliza J. Rowell, and is the father of two children, Maurice E., lives at home, and Mary E., died in Newport.

Enoch Libby was born in South Berwick, Maine, in 1800. He married Sarah Lord, a native of South Berwick. He came to Penobscot at an early day and settled in Newport on the farm on which he now lives. He is the father of three children: Samuel, who married Hester Libby, of Orono; Richard H., who married Lydia Moore and lives in Newport; Charles F., married Albina B. Weeks and lives in Newport. Charles F. Libby was born in Newport in 1835. He attended the Newport Academy several terms. He was a lumberman on the Penobscot River for sixteen years, when he gave up the business, and in 1871 purchased the farm on which he now lives and turned his attention to farming. In 1861 he married Albinia B. Weeks, a native of Thomaston.

Samuel Weed was born in Tamworth, New Hampshire, in 1796. He was twice married. His first wife was a native of New Hampshire. He came to Penobscot county when quite a young man and first settled at Carmel, when he engaged in the business of tanning and erected the first tannery ever built in Carmel. He came to Newport several years ago and built a carding- and dressing-mill, and carried on the business here in connection with his tannery. After running the carding-mill for several years he sold out and returned to Carmel. He held the office of Selectman several terms at Carmel. His first wife died in Newport. He married for his second wife Amanda M. Sanderson, a native of Stetson, Maine, who survives him and lives in Newport. He died in Carmel in 1861. Their children were: Samuel, Harriet, and George F. George F. Weed was born in Carmel in 1842. In 1865 he commenced the study of medicine with N. L. Folsom, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and took his first course of lectures at Bellevue Hospital, New York, in 1868, and his second course at the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1869. In 1869 he commenced the practice of medicine at Portsmouth, New Hampshire. From there he removed to Dixmont, Penobscot county, and then to Newport, where he opened an office. In 1869 he married Lucretia P. Harrat, a native of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and is the father of one child—Mary H.

Atkinson Hobart was born in Canterbury, New Hampshire, in 1816. In 1839 he came to Penobscot and first settled in Corinth, where he followed his trade, that of carpenter. While in Corinth he married May Kelsey, in 1841, and removed to Newport, where he followed his trade about four years, when he returned to Corinth and engaged in the mercantile business. He then returned to Newport, purchased a new stock of goods, and engaged in the mercantile business, in which he still continues. He is interested in the banking business, and has been Treasurer of the Newport Savings-bank; has held the office of Assessor two years, Town Clerk six years, also the office of Justice of the Peace, and trial justice, for fourteen years. He at present holds the office of Justice of the Peace and Notary Public. He is the father of seven children: Rosetta C., married Otis Springer and lives in San Francisco, California; Mariah, died in Newport; Charles C., died in Newport; Mary E., lives in Newport; Fred, died in Newport; Katie, died in Newport; and John W., married Emily E. Chase, lives in Newport, and is Receiver of the Savings Bank.

John Benson, Sr

ORONO.

DESCRIPTION.

This town is of quite irregular boundary, having, besides the angles produced by survey, the indented shore of Pushaw Lake on the northwest, and the line of the Penobscot upon its whole eastern or southeastern limit. It is bounded on the north by Oldtown and the Pushaw Lake; on the east by the Penobscot River, beyond which lie the towns of Bradley and Eddington, on the south by Bangor and Veazie; and on the west by Glenburn. Its greatest length, from the northeast corner, due east of the State College, to the west line of the town, is seven and one-half miles. The average length, however, is but about four. The extreme breadth of the town, from the angle in the north line, next east of Pushaw Lake, to the point formed at the southward by Veazie town and the river, is four and three eighths miles. The westward part of the town has a width of less than two miles. Average of the whole, not far from two and one-half miles. Two miles' width of the waters of Pushaw Lake come into the northwest corner of the town; but they nowhere come in for the distance of more than three-fourths of a mile; and the entire surface of the lake within Orono can hardly be more than a square mile. A small tributary, heading immediately at the southwest corner of the town, reaches the lake from the south. The Penobscot receives in this town one petty tributary, which rises near the crossing of the Upper Stillwater road and the east and west road through the town, and flows nearly three miles in a southwest direction to the river. Above and below some smaller streams come in; and a mile above its mouth, at the village of Orono, is the debouchure of the Stillwater river, so called—a stream of importance, which is really but a side channel of the Penobscot, from which it departs at one place a little above Oldtown Island, and again at a point abreast of that island, thus forming Orson Island, and thence by its southward course and junction with the main stream, forming the much larger Marsh Island, so named from an early settler and owner, upon which are situated Oldtown village, Pushaw, the State College, and a part of Orono village.

The European & North American Railroad has about five miles of its track in this town, on the lower ground following closely the course of the river. Upon a route of general parallelism with the railway, and at an average distance of less than a quarter of a mile from it, is the main river road on the west side of the Penobscot. Another river road, but a short line, hugging closely the bank, runs from the mouth of the Stillwater to a juncture with the main road in Oldtown, a little beyond the northeast corner of Orono. From the village of Orono, east of the Stillwater, a branch road connects the village with Upper Stillwater post-office, Pushaw, and the northward. On the other side of the Stillwater, another road runs up that stream to a point a little way beyond Upper Stillwater, where it forks, one branch continuing up the river, and the other running sharply off northwest through the interior of Oldtown, soon reaching the neighborhood of Pushaw Stream. From Orono village, also, another road runs northwesterly to the Upper Stillwater and Bangor road, from which it is the only highway in an east and west direction through the remainder of the town. From a school-house on this road, half a mile from the west line of the town, a road runs south to the city of Bangor. Returning to the river road, another cross-line leaves that highway about a mile below the village, and strikes directly across the country to an intersection with the Bangor and Upper Stillwater road, beyond which it does not go. Half a mile below that, another wagon-road, running nearly half-way across to the Bangor route, accommodates a small country neighborhood.

The old work known as the Stillwater Canal, following the course of the river of that name, and intended to facilitate the passage of rafts into the Penobscot, is another important feature of the town.

Notwithstanding the age of the country, it being among the first settled near Bangor, the settlements still, for the most part, cling closely to the Penobscot and the Stillwater. North and northwest of the triangle, two of whose sides are formed by the Penobscot and the boundary line of Bangor and Veazie, there is as yet but little settlement—or, indeed, much west of the Upper Stillwater road. Orono is a flourishing village, however; and the dwellings and farms below it on the Penobscot, and up the Stillwater on the west side, are quite numerous, as also on the next south road running into the interior.

The Maine State College and farm, on the east bank of the Stillwater, about a mile from the village, have their history and description sufficiently detailed in our General History.

On the highway from Orono to Oldtown, on the east side of the Stillwater, and about equidistant from that stream and the Penobscot, is the Race-course.

Just below Orono village is a good sized island in the Penobscot, which is quite useful in the extensive lumber operations of that locality.

The soil and surface of the town, in general, do not differ materially from those of other parts of the lower half of the county, west of the Penobscot.

A BIT OF LAND HISTORY.

"A Plan of the Lots Surveyed by Elihu Warner, A. D. 1794," very neatly drawn and colored, is appended to a little manuscript book of "Remarks on Township Number One, in the Third Range, situated on the west side of Penobscot River, surveyed into lots in the summer of the year 1795, for the Hon. Oliver Phelps, Leonard Jarvis, Esq., and Mr. Apollon Hitchcock, by Seth Pease," which is in the possession of the Bangor Historical Society. The book itself has little interest, except, perhaps, as evidence in the litigation of a land case, being merely "copied from the Field Book, but in a different order, that the outlines of each lot may be found more readily;" but the subjoined map gives the names of residents or owners upon a number of the lots, with the amount of their several properties in the lands. We subjoin a list, beginning at the northwest corner, upon the Stillwater River, and now within the limits of Oldtown:

William Tibbets, Jun, 134 8-160 acres.

William Dunning, 115 133-160 acres.

Benjamin Tibbets, 102 acres.

George Tibbets, 105 26-100 acres. This tract was immediately opposite that of Benjamin Tibbets, on the east side of the stream. Just east of this piece, was another lot belonging to George Tibbets, containing 50 acres.

Elisha Mayhew, 50 acres. Immediately south of the piece last mentioned, Mr. Mayhew had a second tract, measuring 62½ acres, next southwest of Benjamin Boobar's lot, named below.

Major Robert Treat, 148 139-160 acres. Next south of George Tibbets's large piece.

Benjamin Boobar, 76 98-160 acres. Opposite the southwest part of Major Treat's tract.

John Capers, 141 41-160 acres. South of Mr. Boobar's.

Nathaniel Mayhew, 100 acres. In a big bend of the stream, opposite John Capers's, and south of Elisha Mayhew's. This is the southernmost tract on the map.

A number of tracts—two east of Dunning, containing 103 and 48 26-100 acres, respectively; one west of Major Treat, 117 acres; one south of the last, 100 acres; and a fifth south of that, also containing 100 acres—are noted as "vacant," or have no names of owners annexed. The lots are not numbered, but north of the whole is "Lot No. 54," east of which is "Part of Lot No. 53," south of that "Part of Lot No. 47," south of the whole plat "Lot No. 24," and east of that "Part of Lot No. 23."

NAME OF THE TOWN.

Mr. E. F. Duren, of Bangor, makes for this work the following note:

It derives its name from an Indian chief, Joseph Orono, an able and friendly chief of the Tarratines, often at the head of deputations to meet Committees of the Provincial Congress in reference to the interests of the tribe. His mark, or signature, was the fac simile of a seal. His countenance was fair and beautiful, and in old age his hair was milky white. He died February 5, 1801, aged one hundred and thirteen. Mrs. Mace gives the following tribute to his memory:

Noblest among the braves was Orono,
A kingly native, just, and wise, and true,
To his dark brethren faithful, yet at heart
The white man's friend, With clear prophetic view,
Our larger work and destiny he knew.
Worthy of honor—well do we bestow
On this, his dwelling-place, the name of Orono.

A full notice of this renowned Tarratine or Penobscot chief is given in our chapter on the Indians of Maine.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN.

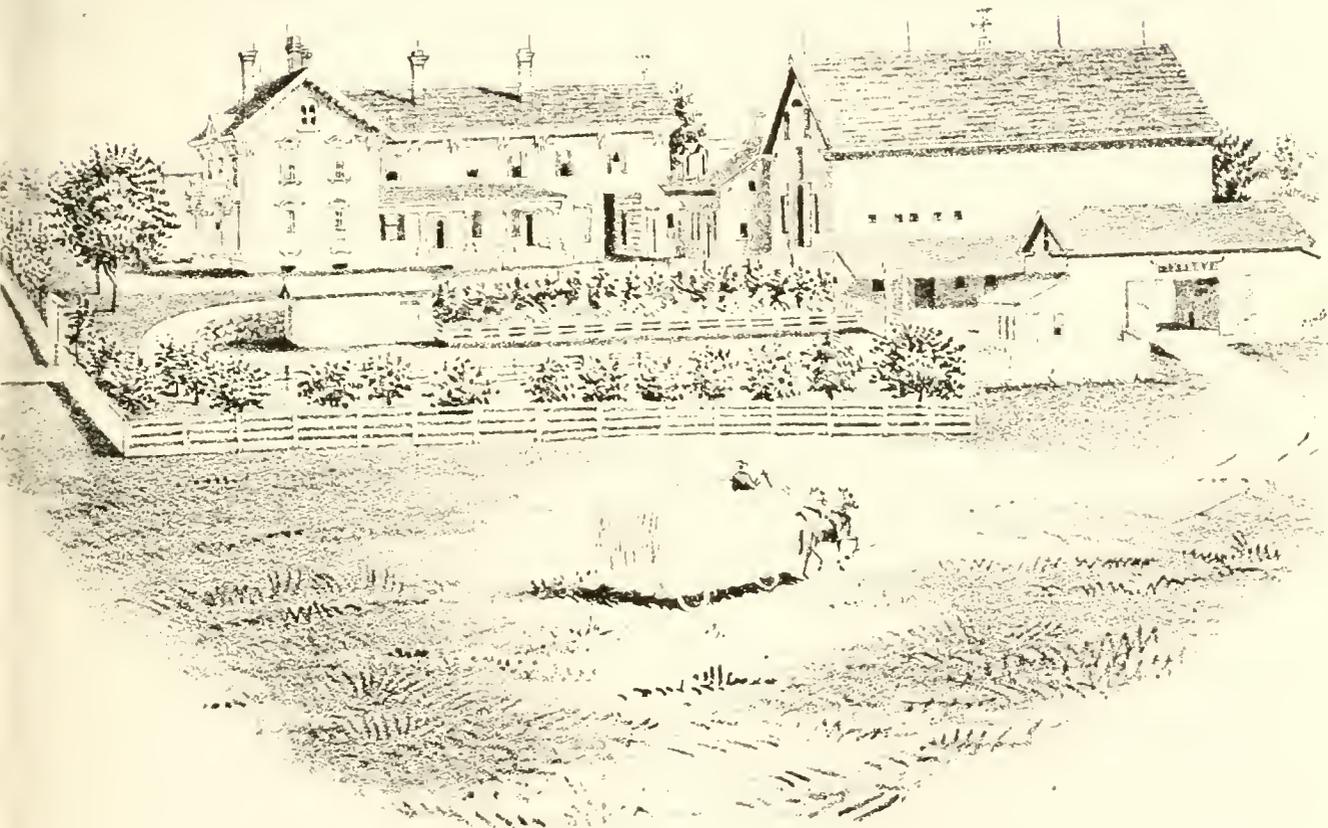

Almost the sole authority for this, in print at least, is the invaluable Centennial Address of ex-Governor Israel Washburn, delivered at the celebration of 1874 in Orono, of which this distinguished citizen was formerly a resident. The material for most of the following paragraphs is derived from the remarkably full and lucid pages of the Governor's production.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the year 1774 Jeremiah Colburn and Joshua Eayres were the first white men to settle in Orono. This settlement was made on wild and unimproved lands, five miles above any settlement. Two dwelling-houses were built and a saw-mill half completed, and two roads cleared—one to a meadow six miles away, and the other to the nearest inhabitants. A large tract of land was soon afterwards cleared and improved, and the saw-mill finished by the assistance of others. In July of 1774 the buildings were begun, and in the following October the families of the two pioneers were moved into their new homes, where they remained till the succeeding May. On that date, deeming it unsafe to remain on account of the depredations of the Indians, their families and effects were removed to the nearest settlement.

View of River from Residence.

RESIDENCE OF B. P. GILMAN, ORONO, PENOBSCOT COUNTY, MAINE.

Mr. George Ring, who was brought to this town in the year 1800, at the age of five years, gave it as his opinion that the first house was built in 1773 by Joshua Eayres; but his knowledge, coming from some informant, is more likely to be in error than statements made by Messrs. Colburn and Eayres themselves in a petition which they sent to the General Court of Massachusetts in 1776.

Jeremiah Colburn built his house, according to the more recent statement of his grandson, William Colburn, Jr., on what is now Mill street, in Orono village, near where Wyatt H. Folsom, Esq., lived. The same informant locates Mr. Eayres's house on what is now Middle street, a short distance from the Universalist parsonage, and nearly in rear of the Orono House.

The first mill in the town, built by the same two men above mentioned, was on the south side of the Stillwater, near a small island, and not far from the match factory. Captain David Reed, at some subsequent date, built a saw-mill on the same spot.

Esther Eayres, daughter of Mr. Joshua Eayres, was the first white child born in Orono. Her birth was on April 30, 1777.

In 1800 Mr. Eayres moved to Passadumkeag, leaving his name to the island which has since become the seat of the most extensive lumber manufacture in the State, and also to the falls, which had been previously known as Penobscot Great Falls, and still earlier as Arumsumhungan Falls.

Mr. Colburn continued in this town till the time of his death. It is believed that he was born in Dracut, Massachusetts, in 1726. His wife's maiden name was Fanny Hodgkins.

During 1775 Mr. Colburn, while at Camden in charge of ammunition and stores, was surprised by a party of British soldiers, taken prisoner, and carried to Bagaduce (Castine). An exchange having been afterwards effected, he returned to Camden to find that his buildings had been entirely destroyed. His household effects, however, had been removed, and were uninjured.

Mr. Colburn owned or occupied nearly all the territory upon which the main part of the village is now located, reaching up the Stillwater as far as the farm now belonging to Mrs. Eliza W. Wyman. He died in 1808, and was buried in the old cemetery near South Water street.

John Marsh, then called the "Interpreter," was born in 1749, in Mendon, Massachusetts, and came to Orono in 1774 with Mr. Jeremiah Colburn, whose daughter Sarah was afterward his wife. His title to the Indian grant of Marsh Island was afterward confirmed by the Commonwealth, and he held his possessions undisturbed. Oldtown, Great Works, Pushaw, and portions of Lower and Upper Stillwater—altogether not less than five thousand acres—are in that grant. Their aggregate population at the present time must be about five thousand.

Captain Abram Tourtellotte, who was born in 1744, came to Orono from Rhode Island in 1781, and made his first settlement on the farm on the Bangor road which is now the property of Mr. Samuel Page. He lived on this farm thirty-eight years, and died there in the year 1819.

Samuel White, born in Mendon, Massachusetts, in 1760, moved to Orono in 1784. He married Fanny Colburn, daughter of the pioneer Jeremiah Colburn, and first settled near Upper Stillwater, but soon after removed to the island farm occupied so long a time since by his son Daniel.

Captain Daniel Jameson, a shipmaster, was a native of Freeport, Maine. About the year 1785 he came to Orono and married another member of the Colburn family, Miss Betsey Colburn. He was the father of Mrs. William Colburn, Jr., and Daniel Jameson, well known in Orono for many years.

Joseph Page, from Rhode Island, came to Orono soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. His settlement was made on the Bangor road farm now occupied by James Page.

Antoine Lachance was born in Quebec in 1750 or 1751. In November, 1782, he was married to Miss Sarah Buzze, and they probably moved soon after this to Orono. In a deposition given in 1837 Lachance says he had resided where he then did—on the southwest corner of the upper College lot—forty-odd years. He remained there till his death August 6, 1839. He was a "squatter" upon the northerly farm now occupied by the State College, but after living there twenty years he conveyed the lot to James Harrison. Living on the same place another twenty years, he testified that his deed was worthless, and that the land rightfully was the property of Seth Wright, a resident of Northampton, Massachusetts, held by a deed from John Marsh.

Sometime before 1790, Robert, John, Joshua, and Joseph Treat removed to Orono from Frankfort, in Waldo county. Their business was lumbering and fishing. John moved to Enfield, where he died a few years ago. Robert was a business man in Bangor for many years. Joshua was "the great hunter" who erected his cabin near Fort Pownall in 1760, and is generally reputed to have been the first permanent white settler on the river. There are now no descendants of the brothers in town.

As early as 1785 there came into what is now Oldtown a man by the name of William Lunt. He had a large family of children, some of whom afterwards remained in this part of the town. Several grandchildren are living there at the present day.

In 1790 Mr. Abram Freese and his three sons—John, Retire W., and Isaac—came to Orono from Bangor. The father made his first settlement on the lot on the Stillwater road afterwards owned by his son, Retire W., half a century or more. As far as soil and location goes, this farm is considered one of the best farms in this part of the State. On this place the father erected the first frame building in Orono. He died here about the year 1800.

One of the earliest settlers was Captain David Read, who came from Topsham in 1793. In 1800 he put up the second frame house in town. This stood a few rods north of the hall, and was owned and occupied subsequently by John Bennoch, Esq.

The first tavern in town was kept here by Perez Graves, and here occurred the first meeting for the election of town officers, April 7, 1806. In 1786 he built the first mill where the stone mill now stands.

Mr. John Read, son of Captain David Read, was chosen for one of the Selectmen at the first meeting after the incorporation of the town. George, another son, died here many years ago; his son, Mr. Hugh Read, is the present proprietor of the Orono Hotel.

Mr. Joseph Inman was the first occupant of the farm which was at a later date the property of John Read. Some of his descendants are in Orono at the present time.

About 1795 Andrew Webster settled in this town, from Salisbury, Massachusetts. He removed to Castine when a young man, thence in the year 1771 to Bangor, where he lived near the crossing of Main and Water streets. In Orono his house was where the residence of his granddaughter, Mrs. Joseph Treat, now stands. The old home was removed in 1835. Of his large family but three settled in Orono.

Captain Francis Wyman, who was a native of Phippsburg, Maine, came to Orono either in 1792 or the following year. His settlement was on the Upper Stillwater road, on the farm occupied now by Elijah Wyman, his son.

Archibald McPhetres moved from Arrowsic, in the present county of Sagadahoc, to Bangor in 1771, and twenty-four years later settled in Orono, on the Bangor road. Four of his five sons remained as residents here. The name, which indicates Scotch descent, is sometimes written "McPheadris."

Early in the history of Orono, some time before 1800, William Duggans came as a settler. He owned a house somewhat off from the Bangor road and below the farm of Mr. John Read. He first lived on the place owned since by David McPhetres, this side of the "Mac Brook."

At a very early day in the history of this town the name of Spencer was heard; but the persons to whom it belonged are not easily identified. Among them, however, were two of the same name—Nathaniel. The one who lived here being smaller than the one living on the east side of the main river, was known everywhere simply by the appellation, "Little Thaniel."

There came from Taunton, Massachusetts, in 1798, one Ard Godfrey, who settled on the farm on the Stillwater road nearest to the Oldtown line. He was a mill-wright, and so his labor was in great demand. During many years he was Town Treasurer. He was elected Constable and Collector at the first town meeting, which was held in the year 1806. The year following the April meeting was held in his house. The first mill at St. Anthony's Falls, Minnesota, was built by his son, of the same name.

George Ring, Sr., came to Orono in 1800, and when Joshua Eayres removed to Passadumkeag, occupied the house which he had built. He was born in 1759, in Georgetown, this State.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

Previous to 1806, during certainly twenty years, the people lived under the organization known as "Stillwater Plantation." This place seems first to have been known as "Deadwater;" but one Owen Madden, a discharged soldier of Burgoyne's army, who had spent some time at Stillwater, New York, changed the name from "Dead" to "Still," as having a preferable sound. Mr. Madden seems to have been a school master in Bangor and Orono.

March 12, 1806, the Plantation became a town by an act of the Massachusetts Legislature entitled "An Act to incorporate the Plantation heretofore called Stillwater, in the county of Hancock, into a Town by the name of Orono." The act was approved by Governor Strong, of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

After the incorporation of the town, the first meeting for the election of officers was called by Richard Winslow, a Justice of the Peace residing at Oldtown, by a warrant dated March 27, 1806, and directed to Andrew Webster, who was Constable. This meeting was held at the house of Captain David Read, in Stillwater village, April 7, 1806. It is not recorded that any formal vote was taken to accept the act of incorporation, but that defect, if it were such, was cured by the equivalent transactions of the meeting.*

At this first meeting $75 were voted for contingent expenses and $1,000 for roads, to be paid in labor. Nothing was granted for schools, but the next year $200 were voted and $50 in 1808. Forty-six votes were cast for Governor in 1816.

There was a lively scare all through this part of the country in the spring of 1811, when the British were occupying Hampden and Bangor. A town meeting was held in Orono, and the following resolve passed:

That we choose a committee to make inquiry and to find out the intentions of the British towards the inhabitants of this town, and if it appears to them that they intend to invade this town, to report the same to the inhabitants, and also to have authority to call the inhabitants together at the shortest notice possible, to determine what method shall be taken for the preservation of the persons and property of said town.

Captain Eben Webster, William Coburn, Jr., and Samuel White, were appointed such committee; but they do not seem ever to have made a report.

November 3, of the original year, at the third meeting held in the town, it was voted to petition the Court of Common Pleas to send a committee to lay out a road from Bangor to Mr. John Marsh's house. This meeting was held at the dwelling-house of Mr. Andrew Webster.

* The boundaries of the new town were defined in the act as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of Bangor, on the Penobscot River, thence by the northeast line of Bangor until it meets the southeast corner of Township No. 1, on the second range, then north on the east line of Township No. 1, in Pushaw Pond, to the northeast corner of said No. 1, thence north to the northwest corner of the second quarter of Township No. 4; thence by a line drawn on the middle of the eastern channel of Penobscot River, so as to include the whole of the island called Marsh's Island, to the boundary first mentioned.

The fourth meeting was held April 6, 1807, at the house of Mr. Aid Godfrey. On the question whether the District of Maine should be separated from Massachusetts, taken April 1, 1816, there were sixteen votes for and four votes against separation. Another poll taken in August of the same year, brought out a vote of only eight to five. Upon the final vote in April, 1819, only four electors of Orono favored separation, and nineteen were opposed to it. Mr. Jackson Davis was unanimously elected Delegate to the Constitutional Convention.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

Between the year of the town's incorporation and the year 1820, its growth was extremely slow. In 1820 the population was only 415—an increase of sixty-four during ten years.

Between 1820 and 1830 there was a more marked advance in population than there had been at any previous time. The census of the latter date showed a population of 1,473.

Mr. Perez Graves kept the first tavern in town, in the house afterwards owned by Mr. Bennoch. This was opened in 1812.

In 1824 Mr. John Read built the tavern on Main street, subsequently known as the Stillwater Exchange. He was the first landlord.

The Stillwater Canal Company was chartered July 6, 1828. It was intended for the passage of rafts from Upper Stillwater and above, to the Penobscot River below Eayres Falls. In 1835 it was opened for the entire distance. A part of it had been in use previously.

Jonas Cutting, attorney at law, opened an office in the village in 1826. He could claim that he had been under the teaching of Rufus Choate, the latter having been a tutor in Dartmouth College when he was a student there.

In 1829 a Quarterly Meeting of the Methodists was held at the house of Mrs. Daniel Jameson. Religion had been neglected during the earlier periods, but now began to receive more attention. The Methodist society here took the form of a strong, earnest band of workers.

The Congregational people occasionally had preaching in dwelling-houses and school buildings.

Between 1830 and 1840 the great land speculation occurred. Orono grew, at this time, in a most marvelous manner. The population, which was less than 1,500 in 1830, arose, according to the census of the Selectmen in 1836, to about 6,000, of whom nearly 1,900 were in this village. Lots in Orono were named at city prices, and the man who had not given a bond of village property, or did not already own some, became of no account whatever.

In 1836 the village could boast of twenty-five retail shops.

The Stillwater Canal Bank was incorporated March 21, 1835. Business began in the summer or early in the fall of the same year. The first President was Albert G. Brown, and the first Cashier, E. P. Butler.

THE FIRST RAILROAD, ETC.

A charter was obtained for the Bangor & Oldtown

Railroad March 8, 1832. The organization of the company, however, was not completed until 1835.

A village corporation, for school and police purposes, and protection against fire, being authorized by a legislative act of February 16, 1837, was organized and continued until the final division of the town.

In 1835 or 1836 a joint stock company, called the Stillwater Iron Foundry, was formed, and a foundry built below the old Sleeper tavern and not far from the Ham-matt mills. The first manager was Mr. Haley.

After the general collapse of 1836-37, the population decreased, goods were attached and sold at auction, and a widespread prostration of all kinds of business ensued.

During this interval of stagnation Mr. Asa W. Babcock and Captain Samuel Moore engaged in a movement for a free bridge, and worked at the scheme with such energy that the bridge was planned and completed ready for travel in a few months. The bridge ran from near the old foundry site on this side of the river, to a point on the island near the terminus of the more recent railroad bridge.

Some time before the year 1834, a brick school-house was built on the island, and a large wooden one was also erected near Mr. Josiah S. Bennoch's, the one now on Main street, near the Universalist church.

The Congregational church, built by Messrs. Hugh Read and Israel Brown in 1833, was dedicated in the spring of the following year. The first settled pastor was Rev. Josiah Fisher. He continued till 1835.

The lawyers of Orono before the year 1834 were Messrs. Cutting and Perley, John H. Hilliard, Frederick A. Fuller, and Thomas J. Goodwin.

The first murder committed within the limits of Orono was that of Reuben McPhetres by Isaac Spencer, at the house of James McPhetres, on the Bangor road, next below the "Mac Brook."

Between the years 1832 and 1841 no other town was classed with this for Representative to the Legislature. The Representative in 1832 was Noah Nason.

The mills situated on the island end of the Babcock dam were erected in 1832, destroyed by fire the following year, and rebuilt soon after.

THE AROOSTOOK WAR.

Governor Washburn has the following humorous remarks upon the part borne by this town in the famous but almost bloodless conflict over the Northeastern boundary:

From your proximity to the city of Bangor, where the expeditions were fitted out, and from which they moved, as well as from the fact that all the men and munitions passed through your village, and that it was on the line of the company of videttes (extending from Bangor to Masardis),—whose members, if they did not "watch" our Eastern "world with noble horsemanship," afforded an exhibition at which it gazed, and wondered, and smiled,—the excitement in town during the continuance of the "war" was, as will naturally be supposed, high-strung and unflagging.

Rumors of battles, of the approach of Mohawk Indians and the bloody Bluenoses, were rife upon your streets, but yet were unable to stifle the sense of the ridiculous and quench the love of fun that ruled the hour, breaking out now in disrespectful remarks at the expense of the glorious company of videttes—and martyrs; now in Otis Bank offering a dollar for the head of Thomas Hill, a carpenter and English man, who was loyal to his native land; and again, in sending a crowd of anxious patriots and wonder-mongers from Whitney's bar-room to my office, to see General Wool, and where they were solemnly introduced, by the graceless wag who had sold them, to Artegus Lyon, the colored man.

In 1840, March 16, there was passed an act of division and incorporation of Orono and Oldtown, which had previously formed one town. The June following the census showed Orono to have a population of 1,521, Oldtown 2,345;—both towns, 3,866. In the division more than two-thirds of the territory was set off for Oldtown, leaving Orono one of the smallest towns in area in the State.

Immediately following the election of the President in 1840, a gradual revival of business began to be evident. In this neighborhood it showed itself in 1843 and 1844, in greater demands for our great staple, lumber, and in the increase in value of timber lands. By 1847 the impulse had grown into an active movement.

February of 1843 saw effected an organization for building a Universalist Church, and on August 24th of the year following, the first Universalist society in Orono was founded.

During the decade between 1840 and 1850 the lawyers in Orono were Frederick A. Fuller, Nathaniel Wilson, Israel Washburn, Jr., and Nathan Weston, Jr. The physicians during the same period were Drs. Ricker and William H. Allen. Dr. Niran Bites was in town* for a few months.

Although the census returns of 1860 showed a decrease in population since the previous census, the increase of business and the occupation of more houses than at any previous date showed a wrong count at some time. The population in 1850 was given as 2,785.

The Orono Bank was incorporated February 14, 1852, and organized for business the autumn following. Nathan H. Allen was the first President.

A spacious and convenient High School-house was completed in 1851, Nathan H. Allen, Gideon Mayo, and Eben Webster, Jr., constituting the committee for building.

In 1863 the Universalist society repaired and improved its church building. The Congregational church did the same by its own house of worship four years after that time. In 1867 a fine Catholic church was erected, costing six or seven thousand dollars.

The Orono Savings bank was incorporated February 21, 1868, and soon after went into operation.

In 1870 the census showed a population of 2,888—334 in addition to the 2,554 of 1860.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.*

The first officers of the town were Allen Bliss, Town Clerk; Andrew Weber, Moderator and Treasurer; Richard Winslow, Moses Averill, and John Read, Selectmen.

The first physician was Daniel J. Perley; afterwards came Dr. Stevens, from China, Maine.

Jonas Cutting, a native of Croydon, New Hampshire, who opened an office as lawyer in 1826, removed to Bangor in 1832; was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court in 1854, and died August 19, 1876, soon after his term of office expired. Jeremiah Perley, author of the Maine Justice, was a lawyer here for several years. The Hon. Israel Washburn, Jr., came to Orono in 1834. He ably represented Maine as one of her Representatives in Congress from 1855 to 1860; was elected Governor of Maine in 1860, and was in office two years; was appointed Collector of the District of Portland and Falmouth October 24, 1863, and continued in office until 1877. Since 1864 he has been a resident of Portland. In 1874 Mr. Washburn delivered the address at the centennial anniversary of the settlement of Orono, which was published with the other proceedings of the day. Charles Buffum was President of the Senate in 1871.

The water privileges are abundant, and have been improved largely for the manufacture of lumber in all its forms. Flour- and grist-mills are in operation, and establishments for machinery, cooperage, oars, boats, etc. From 1832 to 1835, during the great land speculation, the population increased from one thousand five hundred to six thousand. Many fortunes were made and lost. This period led to great activity in trade and manufactures.

The Bangor & Piscataquis Canal & Railroad Company was chartered February 8, 1833. Under this charter the railroad from Bangor to Upper Stillwater was built in 1835-36. The charter for the Penobscot Railroad from Millford to Bucksport, with a branch to Orono, was obtained in 1836.

The Stillwater Canal Bank was incorporated March 21, 1835, and closed in 1842. The Orono Bank, incorporated February 14, 1852, afterwards became the First National Bank of Orono, with a capital of $50,000. The Orono Savings-bank was incorporated February 21, 1868. Its deposits and profits for the financial year 1878-79 amounted to $33,323.13, and for 1879-80 to $29,371.53.

The new and capacious Town House was erected in 1874, and dedicated upon the occasion of the Centennial anniversary. A Town House had been voted by the people as long before as 1824, but no money was provided for building it. The Poor House was voted in 1837.

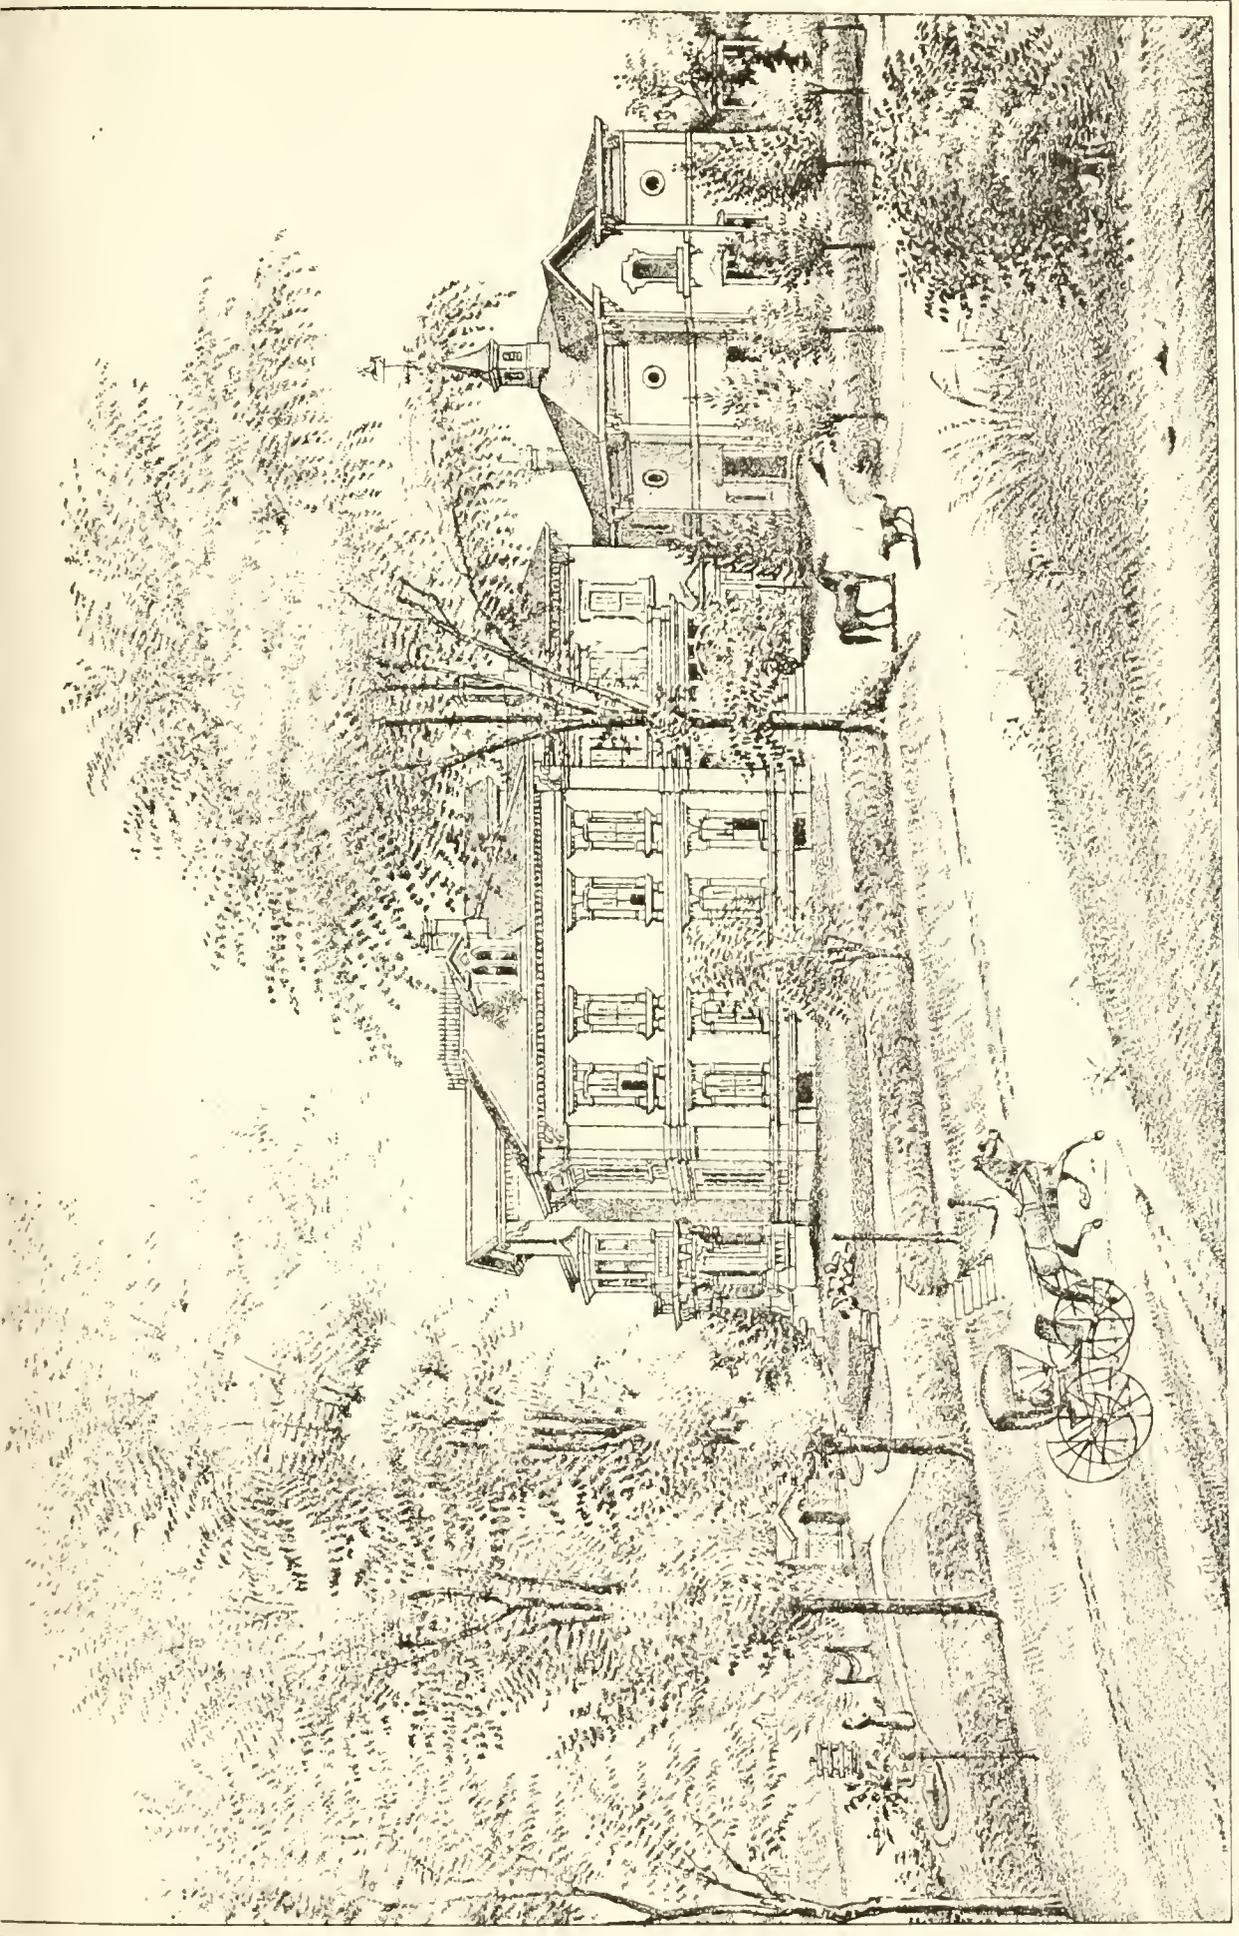

There are Congregationalist, Universalist, Methodist, and Roman Catholic churches in the village; two physicians, two lawyers, two notaries, nine justices, thirty-one merchants, and forty-five manufacturers. The associations are the Meridian Splendor Masonic Lodge, and the Orono Lodge, No. 9, of the Independent Order of Good Templars. There is also a Horticultural Society, which holds annual fairs.

The State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, located in Orono, was established by act of Congress July 2, 1862, accepted by the Legislature March 25, 1864, and chartered February 25, 1865. It has a pleasant and healthy location between the Penobscot and Stillwater rivers, on grounds originally cleared and settled by a French Canadian. The Stillwater River flows in front of the buildings, forming the water boundary of the College farm, and adding much to the beauty of the surrounding scenery. The buildings comprise the Brick Hall, White Hall, laboratory, boarding-house, President's, professors', and farm houses. The faculty consists of a President, seven professors, farm superintendent and steward. The results of study and farming, with meteorological observations, are taken daily, reported annually to the State, and published. A much fuller sketch of this institution is given in the General History in the previous division of this work.

*Mainly by E. F. Duren, Esq., of Bangor.

Jesse R. Lindbergh

RESIDENCE OF EBEN WEBSTER, ORONO, PENOBSCOT COUNTY, MAINE.

SOME STATISTICS.

In 1810 Orono had a population of 351, as already noted. In 1812 it had 70 polls, estates valued at $1,378.70, and a tax of 22 cents on the $100.

In 1820 Orono had 475 population, 100 polls, and $24,690 in valuation of estates. The remaining statistics of population, grouped rapidly together, are 1,473 in 1830; 1,521 (after the separation of Oldtown) in 1840; 2,785 in 1850; 2,533 in 1860; 2,888 in 1870; and 2,448 in 1880. Its polls in 1860 numbered 442, its estates were valued at $343,069; in 1870 these figures were respectively 566 and $523,888, and in 1880, 558 and $512,524.

The town officers in 1881 were: A. F. Lewis, Albert White, E. N. Mayo, Selectmen; E. P. Butler, Town Clerk; E. P. Butler, Treasurer; Alanson Kenney, Constable and Collector; George W. Brown, William Thompson, Solomon Gee, Constables; N. Wilson, Samuel Libbey, Charles Buffum, School Committee; E. P. Butler, N. Wilson, J. C. Wilson, Samuel Libbey (quorum), Elijah Wyman, Stinson Peaslee, J. C. Wilson (trial), Samuel Libbey, N. Wilson (dedimus) Justices.

There is a very large manufacturing and business interest in Orono, which we have not space to detail.

THE REBELLION RECORD.

The return of State militia to the Adjutant-General in 1862 included a company from Orono, of which John W. Atwell was Captain, Charles W. Ross First, Elverton W. Butler Second, Charles H. Holt Third, and John E. Bennoch Fourth Lieutenant, and Frank Hamblen Orderly Sergeant. The first enrollment of the Orono militia numbered 148, the second 221; 166 had entered the Federal service.

The following biographical sketches of distinguished soldiers from Orono are taken from the Reports of Adjutant-General Hodsdon:

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JAMES H. CARLETON.—In February, 1839, during what was called the "Aroostook war," arising out of boundary disputes between the United States and Great Britain, this officer became captain of a company of Maine riflemen, and on the settlement of the dispute was appointed Second Lieutenant of the United States Dragoons. In March, 1845, he became First Lieutenant; served on General Wool's staff in Mexico; was promoted to be captain in February, 1847, and brevetted Major for gallantry at Buena Vista; and after the war served on the Western frontier and in California and Utah. When the late civil war commenced, he was ordered by General Sumner to Southern California. In September, 1861, he was promoted to be Major in the Sixth Cavalry. The following spring he raised a body of volunteers, known as the "column from California," and marched with them across the Yuma and Gila deserts, through Arizona to Mesilla on the Rio Grande. He was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers April 28th, 1862, and ordered to relieve General Canby in command of the Department of New Mexico. General Carleton is the author of a "History of the Battle of Buena Vista, and of the Operations of the Army of Occupation for one Month."

SURGEON ALDEN D. PALMER, of Orono, entered the service originally as Hospital Steward in the Second Regiment of Infantry, in May, 1861, but his health not permitting him to remain, he received his discharge. Returning to Maine, he passed the winter and spring of 1862 in attendance at the medical school at Bowdoin College, from which he received a physician's diploma. On the 6th of May, 1862, he was appointed Assistant Surgeon of the Second Regiment, which position he held until January 16, 1864, when he was promoted to Surgeon of the Ninth Regiment, then stationed at Morris Island, South Carolina. During the summer campaign of that year he served as Acting Chief Operating Surgeon of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps. In August he was ordered to inspect the hospitals in Maine, after which he returned to his regiment in November, remaining until February, 1865, when he was ordered to Wilmington with the Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and placed in charge of a hospital. Here he was taken sick with a fever, and after a short illness died, March 20, 1865, at the age of twenty-eight years and five months. Dr. Palmer was unremitting in his efforts to alleviate the vast amount of suffering that came under his attention. All the responsible duties that fell to his lot he discharged with skill and ability, making himself much beloved by all who enjoyed his acquaintance. He died most truly and fervently lamented.

LIEUTENANT ISRAEL H. WASHBURN, of Orono, is one of the young men of Maine who, from a conviction of duty, when enlistments did not keep pace with the requirements of the service, came forward and encouraged patriotic action by enlisting in the Sixteenth Regiment. He was appointed second lieutenant, and was afterwards promoted to first lieutenant. The first battle of his regiment was at Fredericksburg in December, 1862; and his gallant behavior on that occasion coming to the notice of Major General Berry, that lamented officer gave him a position on his staff. Resigning the service in June, 1863, he was subsequently appointed lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps. Afterwards he was ordered to report on the United States steamer Rhode Island, the flag-ship of the West India squadron.

The following is from the brief notes in the Roll of Honor published by Bowdoin College. Captain Foster was a graduate with the class of 1855:

Benjamin B. Foster was born in Orono in November, 1831; studied law and entered on the practice in Lincoln; mustered in November, 1861, first lieutenant Eleventh Maine; detached as Assistant Adjutant-General on General Peck's staff, with rank of Major; captain North Carolina loyal regiment.

The following further notice of Major Foster is from the Adjutant-General's Reports :

BENJAMIN B. FOSTER. - September 24, 1862. Enlisted as private in Eleventh Maine Volunteers. November 14, 1862. Commissioned by Governor Washburn as First Lieutenant Company I, Eleventh Maine Volunteers. December, 1862. Detailed as Acting Assistant Adjutant General First Brigade, Casey's Division, General W. W. H. Davis commanding. April, 1863. Detailed as Aide-de-Camp to Major-General S. Casey, commanding Second Division, Fourth Corps. July, 1863. Detailed to duty as Acting Aide-de-Camp to Major-General G. B. McClellan, commanding Army of Potomac. November 17, 1863. Appointed by President Lincoln Major and Assistant Adjutant-General, and assigned to staff of Major-General John J. Peck, commanding United States forces at Suffolk, Virginia, and served thereon at Suffolk and at Newbern, North Carolina, until May, 1865. May, 1865. Assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General Seventh Army Corps, Major-General F. Steele commanding, headquarters at Little Rock, Arkansas. November 14, 1865. Resignation accepted by President Lincoln.

Another notice of an Orono soldier is included in Bowdoin's Roll of Honor, class of 1862 :

Delon H. Abbott, born at Orono December, 1838: did not prosecute his academic course; entered the service as Hospital Steward August, 1862; was promoted Assistant Surgeon and Surgeon Ninth Maine.

C. H. Fernald, A. M., Professor of Natural History in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, is the son of Eben and Sophronia Fernald, of Tremont, Mt. Desert, Maine. He was born March 16, 1838, and received his academic education at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary at Kent Hill, and at the Museum of Comparative Zoology, Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is not a college graduate, but received the degree of A. M. from Bowdoin College. He spent much of the time summers when a boy as a sailor, but attended and taught school winters until the breaking out of the civil war, when he entered the navy as a seaman, where he was promoted Master's Mate, and afterwards to Acting Ensign. At the close of the war he was elected Principal of Litchfield Academy, Maine. He taught at Litchfield one year, when he was called to take charge of Houlton Academy, Maine, where he taught six years or until the fall of 1871, when he was elected to the Chair of Natural History in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, which position he has ever since filled. In 1862 he married Maria E. Smith, adopted daughter of Dr. Torsey, of Kent's Hill, Maine. They have one child, Henry L. Professor Fernald is at work upon a family of insects called the Tortricidae, from all parts of the world, having already secured by far the largest collection in the world. He has in preparation for the press a Monograph of the Tortricidae of North America, A Revision of the Tortricidae of the World, and a Manual of Entomology for Agricultural Schools and Colleges. Many scientific articles have already appeared from his pen in the Canadian Entomologist, American Naturalist, Psyche, Proceedings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Transactions of the American Entomological Society, and the Entomologist's Monthly Magazine of London, besides various popularized scientific articles in our State papers.

Professor A. E. Rogers, of the Chair of Modern Languages, and Instructor in the Military Department of the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, is the son of W. W. and Mary S. Rogers, of Hampden, Maine. He was born April 21, 1855, at Ellsworth, Maine. W. W. Rogers had five sons and two daughters, of whom Allen E. was the youngest. After completing his common school education he fitted for college at Hampden Academy, Maine. He entered Bowdoin in September, 1872, from which he was graduated in 1876. After graduating he first taught at the Hampden Academy, where he was principal for three years, or until 1879, when he was elected to the Professorship of Modern Languages and Instruction in Military Tactics in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, which position he is still filling. In 1880 Professor Rogers married Mary F. Butler, daughter of James H. and Fannie M. Butler, of Hampden, Maine.

The Chair of Mechanical Engineering in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts is filled by Professor C. H. Benjamin. Professor Benjamin is a son of Samuel E. and Ellen M. Benjamin, of Patten, Maine. Samuel Benjamin had two children who grew to maturity, viz: Charles H. and John M. Charles H. Benjamin was born August 29, 1856, in Patten. He received his academic education at Patten Academy; then went to West Waterville and learned his trade, being there three years, and entered the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, August 8, 1877, taking a special course in mechanical engineering for one year. After this he taught school one year, and worked again in the shop where he learned his trade, in Waterville. In 1879 he went to Massachusetts and engaged in mechanical engineering, in the employ of the McKay Sewing Machine Association, where he remained one year, when he was appointed to the position he now holds in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. In 1879 he married Miss Cora L. Benson, daughter of Russell C. Benson, of West Waterville, Maine.

The Chair of Civil Engineering in the State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts is at present filled by Professor G. H. Hamlin. Professor Hamlin was born in Sydney, Maine, November 18, 1850. He is the son of Wellington B. and Philena Hamlin. Wellington Hamlin had seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom G. H. is the third. He received his academic education at Waterville Classical Institute, where he spent three years and entered the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts in 1871, taking the full course in civil engineering and graduating in 1873 (having entered as a sophomore). He was appointed Inspector in Engineering the same year he graduated, and in 1875 was Professor of Drawing and Field Engineering, which position he held until 1878, when he was made Professor of Mathematics and Drawing. He continued in this position until 1880, when he was elected to the Professorship of Civil Engineering in this college, which position he is still filling. In 1877 he married Miss Annie M. Mayo, daughter of Gideon Mayo, of Orono.

Professor Walter Balentine, of Orono, was born in Waterville, Maine, September 21, 1851. His father, William Balentine, was a native of Waterville, and married Olive Lowe, also of Waterville. They had four children, three sons and one daughter, viz: Edward, now of Campbell, Minnesota; George, now in Waterville, Maine; Walter, and Florence, now deceased. William Balentine is a farmer and still living in Waterville. After completing his common school education Walter Balentine entered Waterville Classical Institute in 1868, where he remained three years, spending his summers at home on the farm. In 1871 he entered the Maine State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, where he was graduated in 1874, having entered one year in advance. He taught for a part of the year after graduating and then went to Connecticut, entering the Wesleyan University, Middletown, taking the post-graduate course, and at the same time was Assistant Chemist in the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station. He remained here two years, or until 1877. During this time he went to Kansas for three months, and took the position of Professor of Chemistry in the University of Kansas during the illness of Professor Patrick. During the latter part of 1877 and the year 1878 he was Principal of the High School at Fairfield Centre. In August, 1878, he went to Germany to study Chemistry and Physics at the University of Greifswald, where he remained one year. He then entered the University of Halle, remaining there about one year, during the latter part of which he was Assistant Chemist in the Agricultural Experiment Station of the Province of Saxony. Returning to the United States in 1880, he was appointed Assistant Chemist in the United States Agricultural Department at Washington, where he remained till November, 1880, when he was elected to the Chair of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, a position he is well qualified to fill. He has brought to this college not only skill and ability, but, being yet a young man, has that energy and zeal in his profession so necessary to success in any department of human industry.

Professor A. B. Aubert is the son of Conrad Aubert, of New York City, and was born April 27, 1853. He is the youngest of a family of five children. He received his academic education at the Imperial Lyceum of Strasburg. After completing a course there he entered Cornell University in 1869, and took the full course in chemistry, from which he was graduated in 1873. In February, 1874, he was elected to the Professorship of Chemistry in the Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts, which position he has since filled.

Hon. B. P. Gilman, one of the most prominent men of Orono, was born in Gilmanton, New Hampshire, March 10, 1799. His father, Josiah Gilman, had five children, three daughters and two sons, viz: John H., of this town; Asenath, Judith, Mary, the three latter deceased; and Benjamin, who is the oldest. Benjamin Gilman lived in Gilmanton until he was twenty-six years old, when he moved to Sebec, Piscataquis county, Maine, in January, 1825, and engaged in trade, but soon afterward added the business of lumbering and farming. There he lived sixteen years. While residing in Sebec he married Alice Morrison, daughter of Robert and Sarah Morrison. In 1841 Mr. Gilman moved to Orono, where he has since lived. He has been engaged principally in lumbering, though he has a fine farm. In 1837 he was elected Sheriff of Piscataquis county, being the first elected in that county, and helped organize the first court ever held in the county. In 1840 he was chosen Elector and cast his vote for General Harrison. Again, in 1864, he was chosen Elector and cast his Electoral vote for Abraham Lincoln. He took a very active part during the Rebellion in sustaining the Government and breaking down the Rebellion, spending time and money, at one time having advanced over $20,000 to buy horses before receiving any of it back. He is now eighty-two years old, and is a hale man for one of his age, being able to do much business yet.

A. F. Lewis, of Orono, was born April 20, 1841. His father, Ammon Lewis, was a native of Kennebec county, Maine. Ammon Lewis married Priscilla Wornwood, of Houlton. They had seven children, of whom A. F. is the third. Ammon Lewis has always worked about the mills, running machinery, etc. Mr. A. F. Lewis enlisted in 1861 in the First Maine Cavalry, remaining until the time of his enlistment expired in 1864. He was in all the engagements of this regiment during the three years. After coming back to Orono he went to work in the mill running a lath machine, where he remained until 1872, when he opened a meat-market and grocery store on Mill street, Orono, in company with Mr. Holms. For some years past Mr. Lewis has been one of the Selectmen of the town, also Assessor and Overseer. In 1865 he married Augusta Lord, daughter of William Lord, of Orono.

A. B. Sutton, who lives in Orono, but who now controls the mills which he built in Upper Stillwater in 1869, is a son of George and Nancy Sutton, of Hiram, Maine. George Sutton was a native of Limington, Maine, and had six children, two sons and four daughters, viz: Jane, now Mrs. Theodore Pingree, of Denmark, Maine; David, deceased; Arthur B., of Orono; Eunice H., wife of Mr. Quinn, of Baldwin, Maine; Sarah, now in New Hampshire, a widow; Catharine, deceased. A. B. Sutton was born September 1, 1825, in Hiram, Maine. His mother died when he was twelve, and his father sold the farm and the family became separated. A. B. lived with his uncle, John Sutton, of Parsonfield, until he was twenty, when he came to Oldtown and worked in a lath mill for his cousin. He taught school during the winter of 1845-46 in Lagrange. In the spring he entered the employ of Boston parties to close out a stock of goods in this town. He afterwards attended Parsonfield Seminary and taught school several terms. He took a trip West in 1847, coming back in the fall, and entered into partnership with the late Colonel C. D. Jameson. This firm continued one year, when Mr. Sutton sold out and engaged in trade alone, continuing until 1861, supplying teams and general trade. In 1861 he sold out, taking a farm in payment. He built the mills here in 1865 and in 1869, and has continued in the lumber business. He married for his first wife Almira Coombs, of Bradford, by whom he had six children, four of whom are living, viz: Charles, now in the mill with his father; Maria C., now Mrs. Montgomery, of New Jersey; Fannie A., at home; George A., in State College at Orono. Mrs. Sutton died in 1866, and Mr. Sutton married for his second wife Elbra A. Smith, daughter of Colonel James Smith, of Bangor. They have one child—Lottie A.

Edward Mansfield, of Orono, is the fourth son of Israel Mansfield, of New Ipswich, New Hampshire. Israel Mansfield married Susanna Wilson, of the same town. This couple had eight children, seven of whom lived to maturity, viz: Israel N., of Orono; Frederick, of Greenville, New Hampshire; Addison, of Greenville, New Hampshire; S. Wilson, of New Ipswich, New Hampshire; Susan, deceased; Mary, deceased. Edward, the fourth son of this family, was born June 20, 1811. He first learned the cloth-dressers' trade in Rindge, New Hampshire, at which he worked about seven years. In 1831 and 1832 he learned the blacksmith trade in Bangor, at which business he has since continued; he came to Orono in 1833, where he has since lived. He married Mary Cole, daughter of Deacon Ebenezer Cole, of Athens, Maine. They have had two children, one son and one daughter. The son only is now living, Edward W., who resides in Orono. The deceased was named Angeline M. Mr. Mansfield does the mill work, and makes and repairs driving tools. He is now seventy years of age, and has not lost a day for a year, which is quite a remarkable fact for a man of his age. Mrs. Mansfield died in July, 1879.

C. B. Ring is the son of George Ring, of Orono. George Ring married Mary Lancaster, of Eddington, Maine. To this couple were born eight children, three sons and five daughters, viz.: Andrew G., Edmund T., Rebecca, deceased wife of W. H. Folsom, of Orono; Elmira, deceased; Elizabeth B., deceased; Mary J., now Mrs. B. Parker, of Portland, Maine; Harriet M., deceased wife of George W. Terry; and Charles B., of Orono. Charles B. Ring was born November 12, 1837. After receiving a common and High School education in Orono, he went into the confectionery business in Orono. In 1857 he went to California, where he spent six years at mining, returning in 1864. On his return from California he opened a store in Orono, and has since continued in trade; his present place of business is on Water Street. He married Abbie L. Hill, of Dexter, daughter of Valentine Hill. They have now two children living, having lost three. The names of the living are Virginia May and Charles Harrold.

Horace E. Hall, of Orono, was born February 6, 1833; he is the son of Oliver and Sarah Hall, of Bradley, Maine. Oliver Hall had eight children, of whom Horace is the oldest son and third child. Mr. Hall has always been engaged in milling business, having had charge of mills for twenty years. He now has charge of the Hammett Mill, of Orono. Mr. Hall married for his first wife Martha A. Willey, by whom he had one daughter, now deceased. Mrs. Hall died many years since, and Mr. Hall married for his second wife Clara A. Clark, daughter of P. Clark, of Boston. They have had three children—James P., Minnie A., and George—all of whom are deceased. Mr. Hall has always been closely confined to his business, having charge of many men, and though not an eventful life it has been a very busy one.

A. G. B. Mosher is the son of William and Freelove Mosher, of China, Kennebec county, Maine. William Mosher had twelve children, six sons and six daughters, of whom A. G. B. is the sixth son and tenth child; he was born June 13, 1832, and married for his first wife Susanna W. Perkins, of Orono, by whom he has had three children, only one of whom is now living—Charles H. Mrs. Mosher died March 25, 1862, and Mr. Mosher married for his second wife Mary A. Holt, daughter of Obediah and Permelia Holt, of Orono. They have four children—Blanche M., Fanny B., Ada W., and Willie A. Mr. Mosher first engaged in teaming and express business from Orono to Bangor, in which he has continued, though he spent three years in California. He does the business of the Eastern Express Company here, though not their agent.

B. E. Donigan, of Orono, is a son of Thomas and Mary Donigan, of Ireland, who had nine children, seven of whom grew to maturity, viz: Mary E., now of Boston, Massachusetts; J. W., attorney-at-law at Bangor; B. E.; Sarah A., now Mrs. S. A. Lawrence, of South Boston; Thomas H., of Bangor; Addie A., now Mrs. F. A. Watkins, of Providence, Rhode Island, and Albert F., of Orono. Mr. B. E. Donigan was born March 29, 1850. After completing the common school and high school course at Oldtown, he went into the mills there, where he worked until 1878, when he entered the clothing store of John Farrel, of Oldtown, to learn the trade. After remaining here six months he again went to work in the mill. During the year 1869 he went into the clothing house of Hugh Gibbons, where he completed his trade, and went to Boston in 1873, where he remained for three months, after which he came to Bangor and read law with Chapman & Donigan for seven months. Receiving a good offer from Mr. Gibbons to come back and manage his business in Oldtown, he concluded to do so, and remained there until August, 1875. He came to Orono in 1875 and opened a clothing store, making manufacturing a specialty. Mr. Donigan married Miss Eliza E. Conroy, of Brewer, daughter of Peter and Jane Conroy. They have one child, Marion G., now three years old. Mr. Donigan's store is located on the corner of Main and Mill streets. He has for years been the correspondent of the Bangor Daily Commercial, both from Orono and Oldtown.

Hon. Charles Buffum came to Orono in 1832 when a lad, with his father, Samuel Buffum, who for many years was prominently identified with the business interests of Orono, and who died here in 1859; had six children who grew to maturity, one dying in infancy, viz: David N., deceased; Albert C., deceased; Maria F., Charles, Gustavus G., and Julia A. Charles Buffum was born December 25, 1820, in Palermo, Maine. On becoming of age he went into trade here in 1844, and in connection with this he became a manufacturer of lumber, which business he continued until recently. In 1868 he was elected to the House of Representatives of this State, and in 1869 to the Senate, being elected to the Presidency of that body in 1871. In 1875 he was elected a member of the Executive Council, which position he held three years, the last year being chairman of that body. He was appointed as one of the Commission composed of three men to examine and report to the Legislature as to the legal rights of voters in the Madawaska region. That commission consisted of Judge Simonds, of Portland, Mr. Kimball, of Oxford county, and Mr. Buffum. In the fall of 1878 he was appointed as Superintendent of the Reform School at Cape Elizabeth, which position he held until a change in the administration in 1879. Mr. Buffum married Miss Lydia S. Ordway, daughter of William G. and Sophia Ordway, of Orono. They have four children living, having lost one in infancy, viz: C. Frank, now of Bartlett, New Hampshire; Fred G., now of Portland, Oregon; L. Maria, and Annie G., now at home.

In 1795 William Lunt came to Oldtown, what is now Upper Stillwater, from Bowdoinham, Maine, and settled. He had six sons—William, Joshua, Abraham, James, Judah, and Nathaniel. The youngest of these, Nathaniel, the father of George W., of Orono, married Sarah Gregg, who is now living on the old farm at Stillwater. They had ten children, eight sons and two daughters, viz: Daniel, George W., James, deceased; John, also deceased; David and Jonathan, twins; David died at the Black Hills, and Jonathan is now living in Wisconsin; Alfred, now in Wisconsin; Richard, also in Wisconsin. The girls died in infancy.

George W. Lunt was born December 27, 1818. In 1844 he married Rebecca B. Crombie, daughter of Moses and Sophia Crombie, of Phipsburg, Maine. Mr. Lunt engaged in the lumber business when a young man, and has always followed that business, with the exception of three years he spent in California, from 1852 to 1855. Mr. Lunt has two children, one son and one daughter, viz: Annie S. and George C. He has held the office of Selectman in his town. His present business is a scaler of logs.

John E. Dennoch, of Orono, is the son of Josiah S. Dennoch, who came here from Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1806. Josiah Dennoch married Lucy Webster, daughter of Colonel Ebenezer Webster, of Orono, formerly Oldtown. They had three children, all boys, viz: John E., Daniel W., and Charles, of whom only John E. is now living. He was born June 17, 1836, and married Mary J. Wentworth, daughter of Deacon Samuel Wentworth, of Veazie. They have had six children, of whom five are now living, viz: Daniel, Lucy, Charlie and Annie (twins), and Amie. Frank, the oldest, is deceased. Mr. Dennoch enlisted in the First Maine Heavy Artillery in 1863, serving six months until disabled at Fort Gaines, Maryland. He is quite extensively engaged in fruit growing, having a fine selection and many acres of trees. He is one of the Trustees of the County Agricultural Society.

Albert White, of Orono, is a son of Samuel and Mary White, of this town. Samuel White was the son of Samuel White, Sr., who was one of the earliest settlers here. Samuel and Mary White had six children, five sons and one daughter, viz: Albert, Rufus C., Daniel (deceased), Charles C., Fannie L., and Edwin H. Albert White was born in 1837, May 12. He received his education in the public school of Orono; has always been in the lumber business in some way, and is now superintendent and manager of Webster's Mill in this town. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, First Maine Heavy Artillery, remaining until the close of the war. He was promoted from the ranks to the office of first lieutenant, serving in all the lower grades except corporal. Mr. White has served his town in all the offices in the gift of his townsmen, from the lower town offices to that of Representative in the Legislature, serving in the latter position in 1876 and 1877. He is at present one of the Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor. He has also held the office of postmaster in this town.

Dr. E. N. Mayo, who was born in Orono, is the son of John W. and Mary C. Mayo, of this town. Dr. Mayo was born May 15, 1837. After completing the course at the public school in Orono he prepared for college at Mattanawcook Academy, Lincoln; he entered the Maine Medical School at Brunswick in 1857, and took his first course of lectures; from here he went to Washington, District of Columbia, and entered the National Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1860, this being the medical department of Columbia College. After graduating he first settled in Houlton, Aroostook county, where he practiced from 1860 to 1867, when he moved to Orono, where he has since resided in the practice of his profession. He married Lucy W., daughter of Dr. W. H. and Ann B. Allen, of Orono. The Doctor has no children. He has held a position on the School Board of this town many years, and is now one of the Selectmen of the town.

Among the earliest settlers of Orono was Jeremiah Colburn, who came here from Pittston, Kennebec county, Maine, in 1774. He had a son, William Colburn, who was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. His sister Fanny was the first white woman on the Penobscot, in this region. William Colburn had four sons, viz: William, Jr., Jeremiah, Edmund, and Abraham. William Colburn, Jr., married Frances Jameson. They had nine children, only three of whom are now living; James, Abraham, and John, all of whom live in Orono, on the old homestead. John and Abraham are not married.

OLDTOWN.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

Oldtown is one of the larger towns in the county, exceeded considerably in size only by Lincoln, and not much smaller than Bradley. The length of its north boundary is but a trifle less than eight miles; it has a boundary of seven miles in the river Penobscot; its south line is but a little shorter than its northern, or seven and two-thirds miles; and its west limit is about five and one-fourth miles in length. The south line is very much broken, although it is maintained in right lines. It pushes eastward in a straight line from the corner in Pushaw Lake but three and one-half miles, when it dips down at a right angle a few rods, and then slopes off southeasterly one and one-third miles to the neighborhood of Upper Stillwater post-office, where it makes a sharp angle to the northeast, runs less than half a mile, then easterly again three-fourths of a mile, south about as far, and east again a little further to the Penobscot. There are thus six breaks in the line, which is somewhat lengthened by its irregularity, and the town considerably broadened. While its west line, as before stated, is only about five and one-half miles long, the extreme breadth of Oldtown, as measured from the south line of Argyle to the southernmost boundary near the Penobscot, is six and one-half miles. The north line of the town, nearly eight miles long, measures its extreme length, although it may be fully eight miles long on a line from Glenburn across the head of Mud Pond to the innermost part of the bend below Sunkhaze.

Oldtown is bounded on the north by Alton and Argyle; on the east by the Penobscot and Milford beyond, with a strip of Bradley east of its southern projection; on the south by Orono; and on the west by Glenburn and Hudson. It is only distant by the width of the narrow part of Orono, a little over two miles, from Bangor. By its position, its numerous valuable waters, and its ancient settlement, it has peculiar advantages of growth and prosperity, which have been improved to a large extent, so that it has become the most populous town in the county, away from Bangor, being approached closely in this particular only by Brewer, and exceeded in the valuation of estates by only Brewer, Hampden, and Dexter.

The waters of Oldtown are indeed a chief source of its prosperity. The finest power on the Penobscot is at the "Ounegan" or carry—the falls below Oldtown Island,—enough to make of Oldtown village another Lowell, if the requisite capital and enterprise were directed thither. Besides the Penobscot on the east front, with its great facilities for log-driving and booming, several miles of the Stillwater River lie in this town. This is not so much an independent river as a side channel of the Penobscot, flowing from the Boom Branch, another side channel leaving the present stream above Oldtown Island, about one and one-half miles from the village, flowing northwest two miles, thence abruptly turning south, and flowing southwest and southeast till, passing around and forming Orson Island, it rejoins the river just above Oldtown village. Near the original entrance of this channel, a sheer boom has been stretched diagonally across the Penobscot, which turns all logs from the river-channel into that in which the Main Boom has been constructed. From the head of Marsh Island the waters of the Stillwater Branch proper flow southward from the Boom Branch, leaving the town by the sharp corner near Upper Stillwater postoffice, and going one and two-thirds miles further to the Penobscot at Orono village. Near Pea Cove, and at the northernmost point of the Stillwater, the Birch Stream comes in from between Alton and Argyle, having a flow of but three-fourths of a mile in this town. About one and one-half miles further down, another watery connection with the Penobscot strikes off, which flows a mile and a quarter to the river nearly opposite the middle of Oldtown Island. The tract of land thus enclosed is called Orson Island, this channel cutting it off from the much larger area shut in by it, the Stillwater, and the Penobscot, and which has received the name, from one of its early settlers and owners, of Marsh Island. Orson Island, unlike the other, belongs to the Indian reservation; and although not inhabited by the tribe, it serves them usefully in the shore-rents obtained for its use in the operations of the lumbermen. These operations are very extensive and important in this quarter. The entire enormous product of the north woods, so far as it reaches the Penobscot, passes the front of Oldtown. The side channel from the river to the Birch Stream constitutes the main boom of the Penobscot Boom Association, where hundreds of acres of logs may be seen at times, undergoing the process of sorting at the hands of the stout and fearless boomers, or already snugly lodged in their proper places.

This Boom and the Stillwater are full of islets, containing probably not less than a score and a half, few of which have any importance. Just at the junction of the stream with the lower connection with the Penobscot, below Orson Island, is a rather long and narrow islet, named from the famous old chief, "the blue-eyed Orono." On the other side, in the river, beyond a little island at the mouth of this connection, is the most famous of all the Penobscot islets, the Indian Oldtown Island. This, the only one of the scores constituting the Indian reservation that is inhabited by the tribe, to any large extent, is only one and one-eighth miles in full length and a little more than half a mile in extreme breadth. The village of the Penobscots is thickly crowded together, with its neat Catholic chapel, the little convent of the Sisters of Mercy, and school-house and cemetery, at the lower end of the island, which looks closely upon Milford village on the east and Oldtown village to the southwest. It is a pleasant island, is favorably situated for habitation, and is believed to have been inhabited by the aborigines for ages before the white man came. Above it is a little island at the entrance to the Boom, and another some two and one-half miles north, opposite the corner of Argyle and a little below Costigan Station. Just below it, about the falls, are a number of petty islands, and one larger one, which is practically a part of Oldtown village, being much built up, traversed by streets and roads, and at the upper end by the track of the European and North American Railroad.

The only remaining stream of importance is the Pushaw, which flows from Mud Pond—a sheet of water in the central west of the town, about a mile long by little more than half a mile wide—north by a very winding course between two and three miles a little way into Alton, where it receives some tributaries and makes a bend, returning to Oldtown about a mile east of its place of exit, and thence flowing in a southeasterly direction, with a great bend to the northwest toward its mouth, in the Stillwater, a little below Orono Island.

The southwestern part of the town, as already indicated, is occupied by a portion of the superb Pushaw Pond, which pushes over from Milford and Glenburn into Orono almost its entire width at the lower end. A length of this lake of three miles, on the line of the town, and a breadth on the south line of one and one-third miles, lie in Oldtown.

Notwithstanding the large population of this town, its western half is still almost uninhabited. A very few adventurers have pushed in toward Pushaw Lake, on a "plug" road which leaves the northwestern road from Orono village through Upper Stillwater and the town, one and one-third miles above the town line, and runs west and northwest a little farther into the interior. The main road soon leaves the Stillwater above the Upper post-office, and by and by nears the Pushaw Stream, on the south side of which it runs to the close neighborhood of the north line of the town, where it divides into two branches, each going into Alton. The road has an entire course of seven miles in this town before branching. For nearly five miles in its middle course it scarcely passes a habitation; but there is a settlement of some size near the north line, where a good power on the Pushaw has prompted the erection of several mills and factories. This neighborhood has a public school-house.

At Upper Stillwater this and the Stillwater are crossed by a northeast road coming from Bangor, through Orono, and going two miles further to Oldtown village. A well-settled road also runs from here up the Stillwater, which it leaves abreast of Orson Island, and makes off north into Argyle, thus traversing the entire town. On the opposite side of the Stillwater from Orono by the State College, a highway runs up the river to Pushaw, a settlement just below the mouth of the stream of that name. Here it joins a road from Oldtown village northwest through Pushaw and by two crossings of the Pushaw Stream to the long road on the south side of that water. At Oldtown village the west river road, so far as it follows the Penobscot closely, is obliged to end; but it is renewed by the road up the west bank of the Stillwater, from which an east road branches off three-quarters of a mile from the north line of the town, runs nearly two miles across the mouth of the Birch Stream, at the head of the Main Boom, until it nears the Penobscot again, when it pushes its way north into Argyle, and so on up the county.

The European & North American Railroad has something more than two miles of main track in this town. It has a station at West Great Works, which is situated opposite Great Works village, in Bradley, and has a post-office of its own; and a more important depot one mile further at Oldtown village, whence it crosses to Milford by a bridge over the Penobscot. Over this road to Oldtown Station, are transported also the cars of the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad, which forms a junction with it at Oldtown, and runs west of north about five and one-half miles in this town, crossing Orson Island en route, and running into Alton. A mile before its exit it makes a station at the crossing of the wagon-road for Pea Cove, which station has a name to correspond. This is the only station of this road in the town, except at the village.

The surface of Oldtown is generally level, though the town is not without some moderate hills and some ravines entitled to be called valleys. The soil is neither much better nor much worse, for the purposes of agriculture, than the average soil of Penobscot county; yet there are occasional tracts of rare fertility, and in general it can be cultivated with fair success and produces all crops known to this region. Some valuable orchards, bearing various fruits in large quantity, exist within the town.

"The population of Oldtown," says Mr. Norton, "is composed largely of native-born Americans, with quite a sprinkling of Canadian, French, and Irish emigration, and for order and morality will compare favorably with any community of equal size in the State."

INDIAN OLDTOWN.

The most ancient history of this region connects itself directly with this locality. This, the lowermost island of the Indian Reservation, contains about three hundred and fifty acres, and is occupied by the remnant of the Tarratine or Penobscot tribe of Indians. Once claiming, as its original inhabitants, all the territory in the region on both sides of the river, by several treaties made with the English and Colonial governments they relinquished a large portion, and in 1785 they yielded still more, reserving only Oldtown Island, or, as it is supposed to have been called in 1710, "the Island of Lett," and all the other islands, thirty-eight in number, in the river just above it. All the lands on the waters of the Penobscot river, above the Piscataquis and Mattawamkeag, were reserved for hunting grounds for them, not to be laid out or settled by the State or by individuals. A controversy as to the possession of lands by the Indians having arisen in 1796, a new treaty was formed releasing, for a consideration in annual payments, one hundred and eighty-nine thousand four hundred and twenty-six acres. In 1820 they held two thousand six hundred and seventy acres, forty of which were under cultivation. The trustee fund is now about seventy-five thousand dollars, from which they receive about four thousand five hundred dollars annually. The first Indian Agent was Francis L. B. Goodwin, of Frankfort. The present number of Indians is four hundred and eighteen. They have a church (Roman Catholic) and schools taught by teachers from the Sisters of Mercy. The Indians cultivate the soil to some extent and many are hunters and guides. In the summer parties of them encamp at the seaside resorts for the sale of their baskets, moccasins, and other wares.

We take the opportunity here offered to give further information concerning the history of the tribe, collected since the chapter on the Tarratines was prepared.

The Indians say the aboriginal name of this locality was Pannawanske (Pannawanskek, or Panamske, as it is variously spelt), meaning "it forks upon the white rocks," or "it opens (or widens) upon the rocks." Captain Francis, one of their later chiefs, said that the Penobscots removed from their seats further up the river, and established themselves here, with the thought that the swift waters would aid in their defense against the Mohawks. Judge Godfrey, however, thinks the settlement originated in a French mission, having a chapel and fort, with some habitations for the whites, about which the Indians subsequently clustered. He thinks it must have been an occasional camping-ground for the Indians for at least five hundred years, as one of them gave the tradition, and that it was probably old "Panawanskek" for about a century.

On the 13th of September, 1617, a large number of canoes, with one hundred and twenty warriors, left here upon an expedition to a place near the mouth of the Kennebec.

The Rev. Daniel Little, commissioned on behalf of Massachusetts to deliver to the Indians the blankets and ammunition promised in consideration of their surrender of territory by the treaty made at "Sunbury or Condukeag," in August, 1786, arrived here in the performance of his duty June 21, 1788, and thus describes what he saw:

Passed a western branch of the river to an island seven miles long Marsh Island, walked upon said island through a trackless wood about six miles, when Indian Oldtown, about two hundred acres, opened to view, with a thicket of houses on the lower point of said island, just above the great Falls. Immediately upon our arrival in open view of the town, a number of their canoes were manned with sprightly young men, in which they came over (about forty rods) to transport us into town. As we landed, their shore was lined with women and children. We walked up to their parade, about fifteen rods from the shore (a walk very smooth, about three rods in width, lined on each side with a range of houses, built with poles about six inches in diameter, and the same as under, placed perpendicularly and covered very neatly with bark in shingle form), was introduced into their capital house by a waiter, who stood at the door. Only one sachem in the house of conference, who made us very welcome, directing us to take possession of one-half the room, twenty by forty, which was carpeted with fur. Very soon came in all the sachems and placed themselves on the opposite side, which being divided by two poles from one end of the house to the other; then about forty of their men of years placed themselves in rank next the sachems; and lastly an old man of about one hundred years, a former sachem, was introduced in memory of past years. They then fired a cannon abroad.

The conference about four hours. Not a drop of rum by us or them while in the town. The conference began between 8 and 9 o'clock. About fifty, mostly their heads of families, who occupied one side of the house. Not a word spoke or a smile expressed by any of them, except their moderator or orator, and a few directing words by the council to assist their speaker. In the midst of the conference, about 12 o'clock, the bell rung, and they made a composed mental prayer for about ten minutes. When they appealed to Heaven as given them a secure right to the soil, all the sachems rose up from the ground on which they sat and stood in a posture for a minute, expressive of an appeal to the Great God, of the truth of their declarations. Four men were distinguished as their acting chiefs, viz: Orono, Orsong, Esp., Neptune-bovitt, Orsong Neptune. No women or children heard through the conference. They declined giving us liberty to see the tribe paraded and numbered; but those who were most acquainted with the tribe judged, as they appeared on the shore at our landing, to be present about two hundred.

In Wintabotham's Historial, Geographical, Commercial, and Philosophical View of the American United States, published at London in 1795, occurs the following notice of this place, a somewhat mistaken one, but which is the only one given to any locality in the present Penobscot county, except in the census returns of 1790:

The remains of the Penobscot tribe are the only Indians who take up their residence in this District [of Maine]. They consist of about one hundred families, and live together in regular society at Indian Old Town, which is situated on an island of about two hundred acres, in Penobscot River, just above the Great Falls. They are Roman Catholics, and having a priest who resides among them and administers the ordinances. They have a decent house for public worship, with a bell, and another building, where they meet to transact the public business of their tribe. In their assemblies all things are managed with the greatest order and decorum. The sachems form the legislative and executive authority of the tribe, though the heads of all the families are invited to be present at their public periodical meetings. The tribe is increasing, in consequence of an obligation laid by the sachems on the young people to marry early.

In a former war this tribe left their lands, but at the commencement of the last war the Provincial Congress granted them all the lands from the head of the tide in Penobscot River, included in lines drawn six miles on each side—i. e., a tract twelve miles wide, intersected in the middle by the river. They, however, consider that they have a right to hunt and fish as far as the mouth of the Bay of Penobscot extends. This was their original right, in opposition to any other tribe, and they now occupy it undisturbed, and we hope will continue to do so till the period shall arrive when, mingled with the rest of the inhabitants, they shall form but one general mass.

A benevolent society in Bangor, in the year 1823, engaged Mr. Josiah Brewer, then a teacher, and subsequently the Rev. Dr. Brewer, an eminent missionary of the American Board to Syria, to undertake a school for the Indian children on the island. He made a hopeful beginning, but the enterprise could hardly be called a distinguished success. Judge Godfrey says, in a note to his article on The Ancient Penobscot:

He collected quite a number, and the parents did not object to his teaching them. But as they had never been accustomed to restraint, he found it difficult to hold their attention long enough to teach them anything. They were like rabbits in their movements. They would sit and appear to be interested for a short space of time, then jump up and run away without regard to teacher or lesson—some did learn to read and write, however. After a few months Mr. Brewer abandoned his enterprise. One of his pupils, Joseph Polis, is living and a householder upon Oldtown Island. Visitors generally make his acquaintance.

When Dr. Ballard was State Superintendent of Schools, he visited Oldtown Island and found there a substantial frame school-house, and in it a school of from fifteen to twenty Indian boys and girls of all ages from five to sixteen, under the charge of a young lady teacher from one of the neighboring towns. The scholars were as orderly and studious as those of many of our common schools, and were a vast improvement over those of Mr. Brewer near fifty years before—their grandparents and parents, perhaps.

Mr. Williamson's account of this place, written about 1831, is as follows:

In later years, Indian Oldtown* has been their village and altogether the place of their greatest resort. Its situation is upon the southerly end of an island in Penobscot River, twelve miles above the mouth of the Kenduskeag, being partly cleared, and containing about 350 acres of very rich and mellow land. At the close of the American Revolution, the village contained between forty and fifty wigwams, about equally divided by a street five rods in width, which passed east and west across the island, quite compact on each side, and constructed after the old Gothic fashion with the gable ends towards the street. These slender cabins, which have been gradually decreasing in number, are usually built and occupied by a family, including all the descendants of a father living, unless some of them choose to construct others for themselves.

Through a short avenue southerly from the main street is their church or chapel, forty feet by thirty in dimensions, and one story in height, with a porch, a cupola, and a bell. It is covered with clapboards, and glazed. Fronting the door within are the desk and altar, two large candlesticks, and some other articles of service, after the Catholic forms; upon the walls behind are images of our Blessed Saviour and some of the primitive saints; and on the right and left of the desk are seats for the elders. Otherwise the worshippers, male and female, who uniformly convene on the Sabbath, and frequently for prayers on other days when a priest is with them, both sit and kneel upon the floor, which is always covered with evergreens. But the present edifice, which has been built since the Revolution, is said to be far from comparing with their former one, either in size or appearance.

Northerly of the chapel, twenty rods, is their burying-place, in which stands a cross, fifteen or eighteen feet in height. In its standard post, six feet from the ground, is carved an aperture, five inches by three in compass and four deep, securely covered with glass, enclosing an emblematical form of the Virgin Mary with the infant Immanuel in her arms. At the head of each grave is placed a crucifix of wood, which is about three or four feet high, and very slender—a memorial borrowed from the Catholics."

The succession of chiefs of the Penobscots, for about a century is said to be as follows: Tomasus, or Tomer, during the French and Indian war. Then, soon after the close of the war, Osson, for five or six years, and perhaps longer. He was commissioned a Justice of the Peace by the Colony of Massachusetts, being the only native ever appointed by the Government to that office. Then came the famous Orono, who long ruled the tribe and died at Oldtown at a great age February 5, 1802. His remains rest in the churchyard upon the island, unmarked, but near the cross standing in the enclosure. Aitteon, supposed about 1806-07, who stabbed himself in a moment of frenzy in Boston in 1811. Joseph Lolan (or Loring), who died about 1815. John Aitteon, son of the former Aitteon, installed Governor September 19, 1816, with John Neptune Lieutenant-Governor or sub-sachem, and Francis First Captain. In 1838 they were deposed by a new election, in which the Openangos and Marechites took part, and elected Tomar Soe Alexis Governor, and Aitteon, son of Squire John Osson, Lieutenant-Governor. March 16, 1839, the Legislature passed an act authorizing the biennial election of a Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, to serve two years, or till the choice of a successor.

Many additional facts concerning these, as well as the older and later chiefs, may be found in our chapter on the aborigines, in the General History. An entertaining anecdote of Governor Neptune and his comrades is related by a writer in Voices of the Kenduskeag, published at Bangor in 1846, in these words:

It has been the custom of the tribe from time immemorial to be represented at the Legislature by a delegation consisting of one or more of their chief men. When Maine was connected with Massachusetts, they were regularly represented at the "General Court" in Boston; and if they could learn that Blake was to be in Boston at the same time, the delegation made it a point to put themselves under his direction.

At one time the delegation consisted of six chiefs. Among them was Neptune, then a young man, and when in full dress a magnificent fellow. When they arrived in Boston they attracted much attention, so much that the proprietor of the Museum conceived the idea of making an honest penny out of the curiosity they had awakened. He applied to Blake, and through him made an arrangement to have them visit the Museum on an evening appointed. The public were duly advertised of the fact, and the rooms of the museum were thronged long before the hour of the arrival of the chiefs. On their passage into the hall, Blake, who was conducting them, overheard a young lady express a desire to examine the dress of Neptune, which consisted of a splendid scarlet frock, confined about the waist by a girdle of wampum, Indian leggings or stockings, and moccasins, the borders of all which were beautifully wrought with beads. The General told her she should be gratified, at the same time warning her that after she had examined the dress she should withdraw herself immediately, as the chief was an exceedingly wild fellow, and he could not be held accountable for what he might do. Then signing Neptune, and giving him the wink, he told the lady she could examine the garment. She looked with great caution, and when Blake saw she was about concluding her examination, he released the chief, who instantly seized the lady by the wrist, and cried, as if in triumph:

"Now you my squaw?"

The lady shrieked, and Neptune released her and passed on.

On another occasion, during their visit at this time, a high civil functionary invited the chiefs to dine with several of his friends at his house. These friends were gentlemen and their wives, who were curious to witness the practices of the aborigines at their repasts. And it is probable their curiosity was fully satisfied. These children of the forest eschewed knives and forks and all assistance, but thrust their fingers into whatever dish their fancy dictated, and helped themselves without regard to time, ceremony, or the distance of the food coveted. To repeated inquiries of their host if they would take cider, they gave a negative grunt. At last one of them, probably disgusted with the sound of cider, looked up and cried fiercely:

"Davis, why you no hav' um lum [rum]?"

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.*

Oldtown was originally, and for many years, a part of Orono, which was erected as a town March 12, 1806. A division of the large and cumbrous municipality was mooted as early as 1830, when it contained 1,473 inhabitants. In that year a town meeting was called to consider the subject of separation, and a committee of three was appointed to report a boundary for the new town. With a singular want of judgment, the committee had been named altogether from the residents on the Stillwater; and the lines they selected and reported were

* Mr. Williamson's foot-note: "In September, 1816, according to an account taken, there were about twenty-five wigwams; again, in May, 1823, it was found there were only fifteen or sixteen standing, the chapel dilapidated, the porch and bell down, since rebuilt. Perhaps Oldtown is the ancient 'Lett.'—Penhallow's Indian Wars, A. D. 1710. 'The Island of Lett.'"

* The facts embraced in the remainder of this chapter are derived almost exclusively, with the kind permission of the author, from the valuable Sketches of Oldtown, published in 1881 by the veteran resident and Justice of the Peace at Oldtown village, David Norton, Esq.

the following: "Beginning at the southeast corner of Lot No. 6; thence west to the middle of Stillwater River; thence up the river to the north line of the Barker tract; thence west to the town line." Nothing further came of this agitation.

About 1839 a fresh movement was made for subdivision; and in that year a large and more judiciously dispersed committee was authorized to report another proposed boundary for the new town. It was composed of Messrs. Benjamin Shaw, Levi Hamblen, John B. Smith, Nathaniel Treat, Israel Washburn, Jr., Ira Wadleigh, and Joshua Lunt, Jr. They selected the lines adopted in the act of incorporation the next year, March 16, 1840, as follow:

"Beginning at the Penobscot River, on the south line of Lot No. 1, according to Park Holland's survey; thence west to the centre of Marsh Island; thence north by the centre line, to the north line of Lot No. 5; thence west to Stillwater River; thence across said river to the north line of Ard Godfrey's lot (settlers' lot No. 23); thence west, by the north line of said Godfrey's lot, and continued to the south line of the Barker tract; thence west by the south line of said tract, to Pushaw Lake; thence across the lake to Lot Letter A; thence by the shore of the lake to the west line of Orono,—all north of said line to compose the territory of Oldtown."

These boundaries remain substantially the same, though in the winter of 1842-43 the Legislature changed them somewhat on one side by annexing "the Moor Tract" of about two thousand acres, from Argyle, though the Oldtown people had expressly voted not to admit the proposed annexation. Interested parties doubtless lobbied the scheme through the Legislature.

The new town, rather absurdly, it would seem, at first blush, received the name of Oldtown. It was highly fitting, however, that thus the designation of the ancient seat of empire in the Penobscot Valley, the probable capital of the Tarratine and later Penobscot domination, should be honorably recognized and perpetuated.

The act of incorporation, like other statutes of Maine, required thirty days after passage to be of full force and effect; but the inhabitants were impatient to exercise their independent sovereignty, and met on the 26th of March, 1840, only ten days after the date of the act, to organize the town. It required subsequent action of the Legislature, which was obtained the next winter, to legalize the proceedings.

At this primal meeting of the new towns-people, Niran Bates was Moderator, and John H. Hilliard Clerk. Messrs. Samuel Cony, Joshua Wood, and Samuel Pratt were chosen Selectmen; Asa Smith, Treasurer, and John B. Smith Collector, with a compensation of one and one-fourth per cent. upon his collections. A liberal spirit was manifested in appropriations. It had been necessary, in making the separation, to assume a share of the public indebtedness of Orono, of which $6,600 were turned over to Oldtown. This meeting voted $4,000 toward the extinction of this; for schools, $400; for the poor, $750; for contingent expenses, $1,200; and for roads, to be paid in labor, $500. The town was now fully and hopefully embarked upon the current of history.

ANNALS OF OLDTOWN.

For sixty-five years these must deal simply with the tract or region now covered by the town, rather than with its civil organization as at present, which, as we have just seen, was not accomplished until 1840. We also leave principally out of sight the Penobscot Indians and their village on Oldtown Island. They form, it is true, an important element in the history of this part of the valley; but they have, for the most part, received sufficient attention elsewhere.

1774. Mr. Norton names John Marsh as the pioneer of white permanent settlement in this quarter, although his home was not on the present soil of Oldtown. Mr. Norton says:

Some time in the latter part of the eighteenth century, John Marsh appeared here,—or, as some authorities say, in 1774,—and made a settlement at the foot of Marsh Island, and lived for some years in intimate and friendly relations with the Indians, learning their language and frequently acting as an interpreter for them. His department was such as to win their unbounded confidence, and for favors bestowed and services rendered to them they proposed to make him a liberal compensation, and affixed their marks to an instrument which was represented to them as being a petition to the General Court of Massachusetts to grant to Marsh a lot of land upon this island; but when the document reached its destination it was ascertained to be a petition, in the form of a deed, for the grant of the whole of the island. In compliance with the terms of the petition the State made the grant, and from that time forth the island has obtained and still bears the name of Marsh Island.

When the Indians discovered the imposition that had been practiced upon them, they made an effort to be revenged upon Marsh, and made an attempt upon his life. He was obliged to keep out of their way for some time, in order to avoid the consequences of their just indignation. But treachery in time, sooner or later, is sure to meet its just reward. All of this great inheritance, so fraudulently obtained, the most of it slipped out of his hands during his lifetime, and but a small lot, if anything, remains in the possession of his descendants.

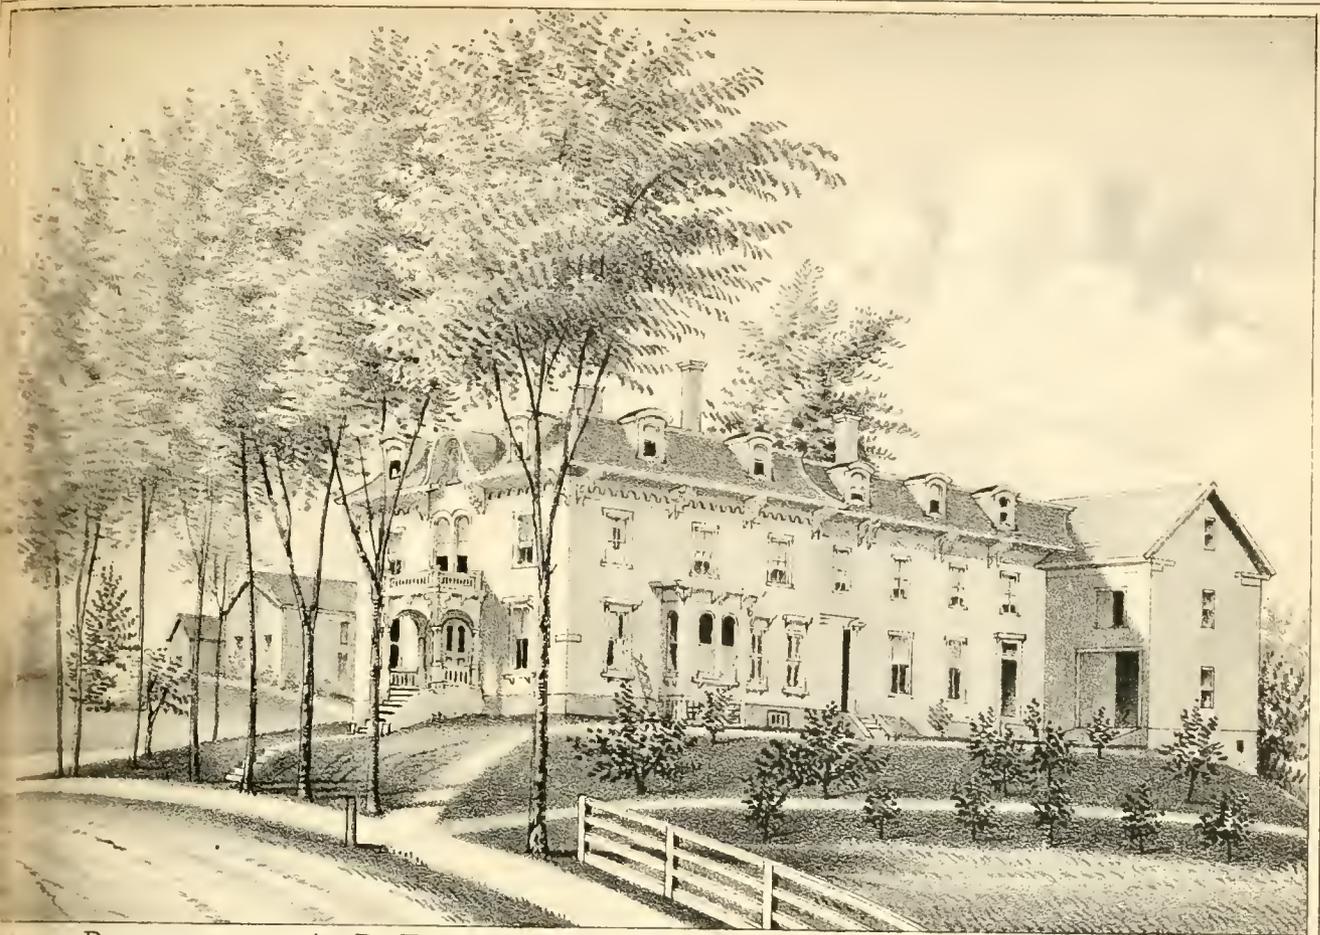

Among other pioneers coming during the latter part of the last century or the fore part of this, but whose dates of arrival cannot now be definitely fixed, were Richard Winslow and Moses Brown. The former was the first settler upon the site of Oldtown village, and was one of the first Selectmen of Orono, chosen in 1806, the same year he moved away. Brown also resided at the village, where he built the house still standing and still owned by his heirs on Brunswick street, just north of the Folsom residence. He was in the affair at Hampden during the War of 1812, was the last man to leave the field, and it is said that he fired a parting shot at the British as they were crossing the bridge in Hampden, on their way to Bangor.

1775. A reservation was made this year by the State of Massachusetts, for the Penobscot Indians, of a strip six miles wide, on both sides of the river, from its mouth up and through this region as far north as the tribe claimed.

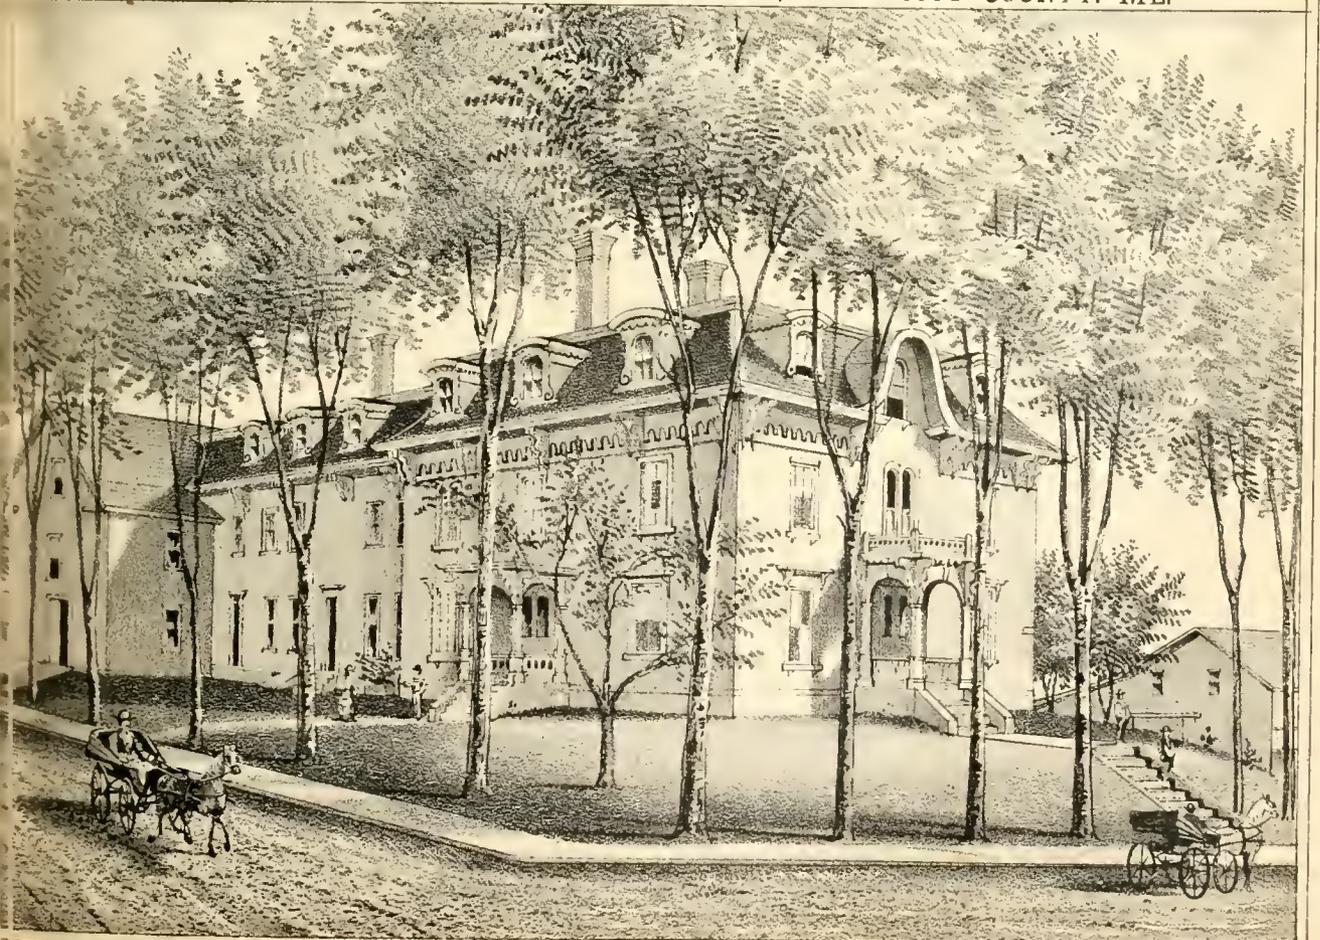

1781. This act, and the other politic measures of the patriots, secured the friendliness of the Penobscots during the Revolution. In this year Orono, "the blue-eyed chief," sent at his own cost an expedition to Machias, to warn the inhabitants of the threatening neighborhood of a British fleet. The expense of this friendly act was

A. P. Tolson, M.D.

RESIDENCE OF A. P. FOLSOM, M. D. OLDTOWN, PENOBSCOT COUNTY, ME.

RESIDENCE OF MAJOR M. M. FOLSOM, OLDTOWN, PENOBSCOT COUNTY, ME.

afterwards repaid him from the treasury of Massachusetts.

1796. Another treaty with the Indians relinquished all their title to lands on the river, from Nichols's Rock, Eddington, the head of tidewater, for thirty miles up, except the islands.

1798. The pioneer Winslow built a double saw-mill, to run by water, upon the privilege near the Oldtown carry, which was afterwards sold to N. L. & S. Williams.

Some time before 1800 single saw-mills were built at Upper Stillwater by General Joseph Treat and Joshua Fall. The former was a large land-owner in that region. His mill stood on the west of the Stillwater, just where a mill now is. His own was a slight construction, and lasted only about ten years. Mr. Fall built on the west side of Marsh Island, on the front of original Lot No. 12, of which Mark Trafton and John Bright were afterwards owners. Mills were repeatedly built and burned upon this site until 1878, when another fire occurred, from the effects of which the local industry has not recovered.

1800. Although the region had been settled for a quarter of a century, it is not known as a matter of record that any white child was born here until this year, when an official entry declares that Hannah Lunt was born February 23, 1800. The next were Adah Tucker, born February 21, 1801, and Rebecca Tucker, born March 13, 1801. The first male child "of record" is Seth Orcut, born May 25, 1802. The next five recorded whites, 1805 to 1809, inclusive, are all Averills. Population must have increased slowly, in the natural way, in those days, or else records were carelessly kept.

Some time early in this century, a double saw-mill was built at the lower Oldtown village by William Dall, which by and by became the property of Colonel Eben Webster and his brother. Mills were maintained most of the time upon this site until 1877, when the final touch of conflagration was put to them. A door, sash, and blind factory was added by Rufus Dwinel in 1861, but this went up in the great fire on the day of President Lincoln's obsequies, April 19, 1865.

1806. Jackson Davis came. He bought all the land and mill property of Richard Winslow, who moved away. Davis was the first Justice of the Peace commissioned here, and was one of the agents of the Penobscot Indians in 1821. He was a Quaker, with all the kindness, gentleness, and benevolence of his sect.

Colonel Eben Webster came about the same time, or soon after. He bought the Dall mill at the lower village, as before stated, and built a dwelling on the site of Sawyer's cooper-shop. He was an officer in the militia, and commanded a part of the American force in the Hampden skirmish. The "Webster Dam," rebuilt by him in 1817, took its name from him.

1816. Ira and Jesse Wadleigh, brothers, came. They remained in business partnership here till about 1855. Ira early opened a hotel on the southeast corner of the Roberts acre, where the cellar is yet to be seen. In 1823 he built a larger inn, which was burned in 1874. He was the first postmaster at the village, and kept the office till he leased his tavern in 1834, and removed to Massachusetts. He became rich here in lumbering and other business, and himself supplied more than five thousand dollars to the means with which the Episcopal church was built.

1817. Moses Averill came to Upper Stillwater with his father, and built a saw-mill at the head of the island, where the mud-sills still remain, though the mill has not been going since 1825. He was Town Clerk of Orono ten years, a Selectman sixteen years, and one of the first justices of the peace in Oldtown.

1818. The Indians conveyed to Massachusetts the rest of the lands, except four townships and the islands, for about one thousand five hundred dollars annuity in goods. The obligations of the treaty were assumed by Maine, after the separation.

1820. Dr. D. H. Fairbanks came about this time. At first he was a common laborer, but by industrious self-training became a successful root and herb doctor. He was a noted local politician, the first Jackson Democrat developed in the town.

1825. Messrs. N. L. & L. Williams built the third double mill upon the Winslow water-privilege near the carry. It obtained, for some reason now unknown, the name of "the Tide Mill."

By this time, and previous to this year, John Roberts & William Ingalls put up a double saw-mill at the lower village, on the island side. It ceased its usefulness by 1832, and was burned in 1841.

Marsh Island was this year designated by the proper authority as the limits of a militia company, and the first one here was organized. The election of officers was held June 20, 1824, and resulted in the choice of Richard H. Bartlett Captain, Andrew Griffin Lieutenant, and Thomas G. Clark Ensign. In 1837 the company limits were extended to the west line of the town. Four or five years after that, the company was disbanded.

John B. Morgan, a blacksmith and waterman, came. He made a fortune during the land speculations 1832-38, and founded the Bank of Oldtown, of which he was President. The Bank building yet standing in the village was built expressly for it. He alone paid five hundred dollars for the first Congregational church bell, which went to wreck in the great fire of 1865.

Also came Dr. Daniel J. Perley, who, says Mr. Norton, was held to be a learned man and an able practitioner. He too made money here, at one time being esteemed worth fifty thousand dollars.

1825. A number of lumbermen obtained a charter and constructed the Argyle Boom. Two years afterwards Rufus Dwinel bought the franchise, procured a new charter in 1832, and built the present boom at Pea Cove, in a most advantageous situation. This property, then owned solely by General Veazie, was sold in 1847 to David Pingree and others for ninety thousand dollars. Five years before it had been inspected by the Legislature, and found to have cost, in material and construction, $65,373.77. This had increased to $100,504.27 by 1854. In that year an association of lumbermen leased the boom for fifteen years, and the lease was renewed in 1869 for a like period. The smallest amount of logs rafted through it for twenty-five years was in its second year, 1834—10,242,000 feet; the largest amount in 1855—181,809,000.

Came this year: Nathaniel Haynes, lawyer, who staid about two years, when he removed to Bangor, where he became son-in-law of the historian Williamson; and Dr. James C. Bradbury, a skillful physician and surgeon, and during the Rebellion one of the State Board of Examiners for army surgeons. During or before this year, also, must have come Amos M. Roberts, of the firm of Bartlett & Roberts, and long President of the Eastern Bank in Bangor; also James Purinton, a stone-mason, who was here as early as 1825, and some of whose work yet remains in the village. Edward Smith—"No. 6 Smith," from his purchase of Township No. 6, Range 10, at five cents an acre—was here for same years before 1830, and must have come in not far from this year.

1826. General Veazie moved in from Topsham, bought all the landed and milling interests here of Jackson Davis, and Daniel Davis's interests upon the falls at Marsh Island, thus acquiring nearly all the privileges upon them.

The shore road from Oldtown to Orono was built. "Before that time there was but a bridle path, and travel and transportation was a difficult operation, except in winter."

1828. The Bennoch road, north into Argyle, was built this year.

William H. Smith came. He was at first a batteau-maker, but went into lumbering, and soon amassed a fortune. He became principal stockholder and President of the Lumberman's Bank. After long residence in Bangor, he moved to Brooklyn, New York, where he now lives.

As early as this year William Jameson was here. He had a tannery, and was also a lumberman at Upper Stillwater, which is said to owe much of its progress and prosperity to him. He lived in the present Joshua Buck dwelling, which he built. He was father of the late Brigadier-General Charles D. Jameson, who was born in Oldtown.

Asa, probably also Colonel William, Smith came. The latter was an officer of militia, and in 1830 built the present Codman House, near the Milford Bridge, which he kept for twenty years. Asa was a carpenter, and was the master-builder of the first Congregational meeting-house erected on "Mt. Carmel." He was for many years a constable here. Major Joseph L. Smith, of Oldtown, candidate for Governor in 1868, and several other reputable and wealthy men, here and elsewhere, are among his sons.

1829. Jeremiah Perley came. He was a lawyer, and the author of Perley's Justice, a work of authority as a guide for Justices of the Peace in Maine until the statutes were revised in 1842. He is also remembered as a thorough-going, flat-footed temperance man, even at that early period in the history of the reform.

1830. The toll-bridge between Oldtown and Milford was constructed this year.

A town-meeting was called to consider the subdivision of Orono. Fuller notice of it is given above.

About this time came Dr. James Temple, a scholarly Scotchman of fine promise, but who survived here but a few years; also Henry Richardson, who in 1833, with A. W. Kennedy, put up the well-known Richardson & Kennedy Block, in the village. Beginning humbly, he became a prominent man—was Selectman, Indian Agent, State Senator, and finally one of the Executive Council. Levi Young, a lumberman, now of Ottawa, Canada, and believed to be worth half a million, also came about this year. Levi Hoskins, a dry goods merchant here for a time, was also on the ground, but had come a while before. He stuck the riding switch which he brought from New Brunswick one day into the corner of his lot in the village, where it became the present magnificent tree of more than four feet diameter, and the progenitor of all willows of that kind in town. A capital anecdote of him is related of him in Mr. Norton's book, as also in Judge Godfrey's chapter on the Bench and Bar, in this volume.

1832. The Veazie Block, of three stores, in the village, was built by General Samuel Veazie.

The church edifice on Mt. Carmel was begun this year, and finished in 1833. It was built by funds contributed by members of various denominations, but upon completion passed under control of the Congregationalists. The structure was burned in the fire of '65, but rebuilt promptly the next year.

The Oldtown Railway Company procured a charter this year, to make a railroad to Bangor. They graded part of the route along the river to Orono, and did some bridging, but in 1835 sold everything to the Bangor & Piscataquis Canal & Railroad Company, for $50,000, which was never paid.

Liquor licenses had heretofore been voted by the town (Orono); but this year, mainly through the efforts of Mr. Perley, it was voted that none should be granted—a foreshadowing of the Prohibitory Law that was to come fourteen years later.

George W. Ingersoll, an able lawyer and an ardent Whig, came and remained some years. He was Collector of the Port of Bangor under President Tyler, and became Attorney-General of the State in 1860, the year of his death.

1833. Another good lawyer—though "not a brilliant advocate," says Mr. Norton—came this year, in the person of Samuel Cony, afterwards legislator, Judge of Probate, State Treasurer, and one of the "War Governors" of the State.

William T. Hilliard, lawyer and Clerk of the Courts for twelve years from 1847, was also an immigrant of this year.

A charter was obtained this year for the Bangor & Piscataquis Canal & Railroad Company to build a canal and railroad from the former place to the Piscataquis River and the slate quarries in Piscataquis county. Construction began in 1834, on a route back from the river, and it was finished the next year, being the second railway built in the country. "The first track was laid with wooden rails, with an iron rail three-fourths of an inch thick on the top. The first two engines were of English build, weighing six or eight tons each."

Amos M. Roberts and Thomas Bartlett, both of this settlement, were appointed by the State authorities as Commissioners to buy from the Indians their four townships on the mainland. They were purchased accordingly for $50,000, which is a permanent fund for the benefit of the tribe, at six per cent interest, which is paid annually in April.

The Orono Company was organized this year, for milling and manufacturing, and bought all the privileges and power at Upper Stillwater, with a slight exception. Among its enterprises it built a block of mills running five saws on the site of the old General Treat mill at Upper Stillwater, which has some note as the first block on the river that was put under one roof. It was burnt in 1863, but was rebuilt. The same year Dwinel, Sawyer & Co. put up a double mill at Great Works, and the next year five more mills, all covering twelve saws. They were burned in 1856.

The Richardson & Kennedy Block in the village, comprising four stores, was erected this year.

1834. Wadleigh & Purinton bought the Indian interest in Shad and Pine Islands, and built a block of mills, with six saws, just outside of the Veazie mills, of three of which they took possession, alleging that the General had trespassed upon their privilege at Pine Island. A fifteen years' lawsuit, and a very costly one, was the result. A single retainer to Daniel Webster was $1,000, which was paid by a cargo of lumber to his Marshfield place.

The Congregational Society was organized this year, September 24.

The Oldtown Light Infantry was organized. Its first Captain was George W. Cummings, afterwards Colonel. Captain Ephraim B. Pierce was his successor, under whom the company was disbanded.

In January came John H. Hilliard, lawyer, long a partner here with his brother, William T. Hilliard, and still a resident, though much disabled by rheumatism. He has filled a number of the town offices, and been County Attorney and a member of the Legislature.

In December, on the last day of the year, came David Norton, the faithful and intelligent local historian to whom we and the readers of this book are so greatly indebted. He became a clerk, was afterwards a groceryman, then eleven years clerk for General Veazie at the Boom, and otherwise engaged there for fifteen years more. He was two years Town Clerk, four years Selectman, Collector of Taxes thirteen years, and Justice of the Peace and Quorum or Trial Justice for the long period of thirty-five years. His Sketches of Oldtown grew out of a response at a Fourth of July entertainment in 1879 to the toast, "Reminiscences of Oldtown."

1835. The Upper Stillwater toll-bridge was built. Mr. Norton says:

It was an X-work bridge, strengthened by circular braces, which were too long to allow the bridge to settle into its proper position; the consequence was it toppled over sideways and fell down. It was rebuilt in 1836, and was maintained as a toll-bridge until 1870, when it was purchased by the town for the sum of $2,000, and made a free bridge.

The three shore mills at the falls were burned in December.

Messrs. J. N. and A. Cooper built their block of mills at Pushaw village this year. It contained one gang and three single saws, with ample machinery for making short lumber. This was the origin of the village. The mills have never been burned, but the whole of the main dam was swept out in 1877, and has not yet been replaced.

The Baptist church was organized this year.

Dr. Niran Bates came about this time, and remained in fair practice here a dozen years or more.

1836. The Penobscot River Railroad Company was chartered, to build an iron way from Bucksport to Milford, with branches reaching across the river to Bangor, Stillwater, Great Works, and Oldtown. Nothing tangible ever came of the scheme.

Samuel Godfrey built his steam-mill on the front of Lot 21, below Grass Island, upon a site ever since known as "Steam Mill Point." It was burned in the autumn of 1837, and not rebuilt.

1837. The Rines Block, comprising six tenements, was erected, and stood until the great fire of 1865, when it was burned.

The Methodist Episcopal class was formed, which prepared the way for a church in 1843.

The great financial crisis of this year compelled the Bank of Oldtown to suspend.

Rufus Dwinel came from Lisbon. He did not long reside here, but maintained extensive business interests in this quarter for many years.

1838. George O. Brastow came. He was a trader for a while in the Richardson & Kennedy Block. He afterwards removed to Somerville, Massachusetts, where he became Mayor and a member of the Legislature.

1839. Messrs. Edward and Samuel Smith put up their mill at Shad Rips, on the east side of Treat & Webster's Island. It had a peculiar method of obtaining power "by a water-wheel extended across a sluice outside of the mill, so constructed that it could be raised or lowered to accommodate any pitch of water, and was turned by the current as it flowed under the wheel." The novelty was not a financial success, however. In 1842 the mill was burned.

A committee was appointed to report a boundary for a new town, which subsequently became the limit of Oldtown.

1840. Oldtown was incorporated March 16. First town meeting, March 26. The population of the new town this year was 2,345. Ten years before Orono, containing both the present Oldtown and Orono, had but 1,473. There had been some growth meanwhile.

The Star in the East Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons was formed. Mr. Norton says: "It has maintained a prosperous existence through the past years, and now numbers 158 members."

The Washingtonian (temperance) Society was also formed about this time, under the leadership of John B. Smith and others. It was a very popular association, increased its numbers rapidly, and did much good.

1842. A Board of Selectmen was chosen by the temperance advocates, on the reform issue. Says Mr. Norton: "Since that time, whenever the question of temperance has been the issue, the town has uniformly voted on that side."

1843. Cyrus Moore built a mill on Pushaw Stream, in the north part of the town, where he had a large property in land. It is still in existence.

The Universalist parish was organized.

1845. The old and unoccupied tannery building erected by Abner Dearborn more than twenty years before was torn down by the people, ostensibly through fear of fire.

The first services of the Protestant Episcopal church in Oldtown were held this year.

The Tarratine Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was organized. "It has always been one of the most prompt lodges in the jurisdiction, and now numbers eighty members in good standing."

Dr. Charles Fortier, a Canadian Frenchman, came about this time, and remained in successful practice here till he died.

1846. This was the year of the great flood. M. Norton says of its ravages in this region:

The river continued to fill up over the Great Works and Oldtown Falls, on and over the Quoik and Sunkhaze rips. The last important object of destruction was the Oldtown and Milford toll-bridge, which was taken from its foundation in the same manner as the Bangor bridge, and took up its march down the river.

1847. A vote of two thousand six hundred dollars was made by the town to the Pushaw bridge, which was built this year.

The Wadleigh block of mills was burned in April, and rebuilt by General Veazie in 1872.

The Bangor & Orono Railroad Company was incorporated, to construct a road from Bangor to Stillwater village. Orono voted aid to the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars. In 1850 the project was extended to include Oldtown, Milford, and Bradley, and the title altered to the Penobscot Railroad Company. Its franchise was bought by the European & North American Railway in 1863.

1848. Navigation was opened by stern-wheel steamer from Oldtown to Winn. The first vessel was built here the preceding winter, and called the Governor Neptune, from the Penobscot Indian John Neptune, then head of the tribe. A larger steamer, the Governor Dana, was put on the route by General Veazie in 1849. Three other boats — the Mattanawcook, Sam Houston, and William N. Ray — were built by the original proprietors, Wyman B. S. and William Moore, who sold out in 1858 to William H. Smith and others. The latter built for this line the John A. Peters and the Lizzie Smith. In 1867 the company was bought off by the European & North American Railroad, to remove opposition. A boat is occasionally run, however, to carry bark and other material to the up-river tanneries.

The Oldtown Rifle Company was raised under the act of Legislature passed this year. N. H. Sawtelle was the first Captain; Winslow Staples the next and last. The men were furnished with excellent rifles by the State, which disappeared with the company.

1849. The Union Academy of Oldtown was incorporated, and buildings for it were erected. The Academy was maintained but about three years, however; Mr. Thomas Tash, Principal. The property was conveyed to the school district in 1873, under the act for free high schools, when the building was remodeled and a public school maintained therein.

The Episcopal parish of St. James Church was organized November 7. A lot was bought, and the building of a church edifice begun.

The Kirkland (Hudson since 1854) road was built, at an expense of $1,000.

A public hearse house was built, costing $200.

A committee was appointed to consider the subject of a town house.

David C. Merrick, a shoemaker, came. He was a soldier in the late war, and then went South to live.

1850. A Town House was voted, to be built by the lowest bidder. It was not put up, however, until 1870, when a neat structure was erected on the corner of Middle and Brunswick streets, at a cost of about $12,000, raised from the sale of bonds received from the State on account of war bounties.

The European & North American Railway was chartered.

Population of the town, 3,087.

1852. The Roman Catholics, who had heretofore worshipped, whites and Indians alike, in the chapel on Oldtown Island, built a church near the cemetery at Great Works, for the people on the shore. It was removed in 1870 to lower Oldtown, where it now is, with a handsome addition made in 1877.

The Oldtown & Lincoln Railroad Company was incorporated to build a road to Mattawamkeag. Its franchise was afterwards transferred to the European & North American Railway Company.

1853. General Veazie made an improvement at the falls, beginning at the Wadleigh block of mills and running a continuous block to the shore, the whole covering sixteen saws. This was burned in June, 1878, and no part of it has yet been rebuilt, though a company has been formed for the restoration of profitable industry at this important point.

The Episcopal church was consecrated, February 2, 1853, by the Rt. Rev. George Burgess, Bishop of the diocese. It cost about $8,000.

The road to Argyle was made, costing $700.

1854. The Baptist church was built, largely through the energies of Elder Charles Blanchard, who was pastor of the society for ten years. The old church had been made many years before, out of the Lovejoy School-house. Both were burned in the fire of 1865.

1855. The J. C. Bradbury Block, of five stores, was built.

1856. The bridge thrown by the Penobscot Railroad Company across the river at Oldtown was destroyed by the ice this spring.

1858. The Aroostook Railroad Company was chartered, to extend the road already built to Oldtown from that point or Milford to some point in Aroostook county. Its franchise was ultimately absorbed by the European & North American Railway.

The T. M. Chapman Block, with five stories, was put up.

The Union church was built at Upper Stillwater by the Baptists and Universalists.

The new prohibitory liquor law was submitted to the people this year. The vote in Oldtown was: For it, 96; against it, 8.

1859. A vote on the question of aid to the Aroostook Railroad project resulted: Yeas, 516; nays, 21.

The Congregational church was organized at Upper Stillwater October 6.

1860. Population, 3,860. Polls, 623. Estates, $556,903.

1861. The Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad Company was incorporated.

The town began to do its duty grandly to the Union in the hour of its trial. The following resolutions were passed at a town meeting held May 2:

That it is the duty of the inhabitants of this town, in their corporate capacity, to do whatever is in their power to aid the Chief Magistrate of the United States in the full enforcement of the laws, and the Chief Magistrate of this State in complying with such requisitions as may from time to time be made upon him, for forces to repel invasion or suppress insurrection in any State in the Union.

That the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in our treasury, to provide for the support of the families of citizens of this town enlisting in the service of the United States under the act of April 25, 1861, and to aid in support of soldiers thus enlisting, who have no families in this town, before they are called into said service.

1862. It was voted to pay $30 bounty to each volunteer, when mustered in, and a loan of $2,000 for bounties was authorized. The bounty was raised to $100 July 28, and the loan to $4,000. The next twenty recruits after August 30 were to receive $20 apiece, and $2,000 for soldiers' families were voted.

1863. For the same purpose $3,500 were voted. A debt of $4,700 had now been contracted for bounties, but it was nevertheless, November 23, voted to borrow enough more to give $200 to each of fifty volunteers needed to fill the quota of Oldtown.

The mill of the Orono Company, at Upper Stillwater, was burnt.

1864. Loans were voted this year, of $10,000, to pay $400 bounties, $1,300 for aid in securing enlistments, and $3,000 for other bounties.

A loan of $3,000, to aid in securing the location of the State College in Orono, was voted.

1865. January 5, a bounty was voted of $300 to volunteers and drafted men, and of $25 to agents who would secure soldiers to fill the town's quota.

It was necessary to vote $18,000 for contingent expenses this year, $1,200 for aid of soldiers' families, and $800 for recruiting expenses.

The greatest fire in the history of Oldtown occurred this year, April 19, beginning in the Rines Block, just as the people were returning from a meeting to celebrate the obsequies of the murdered President, Mr. Lincoln. A high wind was prevailing, and the destruction was not stayed until two churches, as many school-houses, one block of mills with six saws, a door and blind factory, the railway station, and twenty-two dwellings, had been licked up by the flames, with a loss to the village of more than $100,000. It was long before the place measurably recovered from this stroke.

Mr. Thomas M. Chapman erected a steam mill, which he still runs, "supplied with machinery for doing all kinds of ironwork, except some of the heavier pieces. There is connected with the mill a shingle machine, stove-dressing machine, and all the appliances of a machine-shop."

1868. The first train into Oldtown on the European & North American Railway arrived in August. The road was completed to Mattawamkeag the next year.

1869. The Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad was finished to Dover.

The Folsom Block, embracing seven stores, was built. The Temple of Honor was instituted here this year.

1870. The last train on the old railroad from Bangor to Oldtown was run in June.

The Catholic church was removed from near Great Works to the lower village.

The Town Hall was voted, as before stated, and the boundary between this town and Argyle and Alton was run.

A large steam saw-mill, costing over sixty thousand dollars, and running one gang and three single saws, with other machinery, was built at Upper Stillwater by Hamblen, Lancaster, and others. It proved an unprofitable venture, and was run but a few weeks.

The Ounegan Block, of five stores, was erected.

Population, 4,072. Polls, 713. Estates, $684,308.

1871. This was a costly year for the bridges, and those over Pushaw and Birch Streams, and the Lancaster, Irving, and Meadow Brook bridges, had to be repaired or rebuilt, at a total cost to the town of eight thousand four hundred and sixty-one dollars.

A new military company was formed under the act of 1869, now called the Hersey Light Infantry. Melville M. Folsom, since Major, was its first captain.

1873. The railway bridge was blown down, and the same night a locomotive and tender, with four men, went into the river at the break. The engineer was killed, but the others escaped with trifling injuries.

1874. The year of the temperance crusade. Among other reformatory measures in Oldtown, a Reform Club was organized, and the Temple of Honor, which had fallen into neglect, was revived. The Ladies' Union Temperance Crusade was formed about the same time. None of these is now in existence.

The purchase of three "Little Giant" fire-engines was voted by the town.

1875. The Godfrey Block of Mills, built by the Orono Company in 1834, was burned. It had been hopelessly dilapidated since 1866.

1876. The extensive repair and construction shops built by the European & North American Railway, near the station at the village, were burned. The new shops were erected at Mattawamkeag.

1878. The great block of mills at the falls, together with the Canal block, was totally destroyed by fire.

The town voted not to license any one to sell spirituous liquor.

1880. Population, 3,395. Polls, 499. Estates, $528,109.

1881. The Oldtown Water-power Company was formed, mainly of Bangor capitalists, for the purchase and improvement of the Veazie property at the falls. A stone dam was to be constructed, also a canal, with large mills.

The Sketches of Oldtown, by David Norton, Esq., were published at Bangor in a neat octavo volume.

CIVIL LIST.

Selectmen—1840-41, Samuel Cony, Samuel Pratt, Joshua Wood; 1842-43, Samuel D. Hasty, Joseph H. Reed, Luther Stone; 1844, J. H. Hilliard, Samuel McLellan, N. Godfrey; 1845, Samuel Cony, John Rigby, Nathan Oakes; 1846, Rigby, Oakes, Rufus D. Folsom; 1847, Rigby, Lore Alford, John McDonald; 1848, Newell Blake, R. D. Folsom, Robert Averill; 1849-50, David Norton, R. Averill, R. M. Woodman; 1851, Asa Smith, Jr., Averill, Norton; 1852, Norton, Smith, Averill; 1853, Albert G. Burton, R. Averill, Alden B. Weed; 1854, Burton, W. A. Ellis, W. N. Soper; 1855, Charles Blanchard, Samuel Pratt, Luther H. Averill; 1856, Pratt, Blanchard, Albert Plummer; 1857-58-59, Pratt, Wiloby Smith, Samuel W. Hoskins; 1860, Nahum Godfrey, Moses Buck, Joseph L. Smith; 1861, Godfrey, Daniel Lunt, Alden B. Weed; 1862, Godfrey, Lunt, N. M. Hartwell; 1863-64, Hartwell, R. Averill, D. G. Sawyer; 1865, J. H. Hilliard, Robert Ellis, Sawyer; 1866, Sawyer, Lunt, Hartwell; 1867, Sawyer, Hartwell, C. H. Miller; 1868, Joseph L. Smith, Orimel Rogers, D. N. Estabrook; 1869, Sawyer, Rogers, Miller; 1870, Henry Brawn, Rogers, Charles A. Bailey; 1871-72, Brawn, James Andrews, J. A. Blanchard; 1873-74, Albert O. Brown, Eli Rigby, Blanchard; 1875-76, Brown, Otis Reed, Blanchard; 1877, George T. Sewall, James W. Dutton, Blanchard; 1878, Sewall, Dutton, George W. Garland; 1879-80-81, Sewall, Frank Hamblen, D. G. Sawyer.

Treasurers—1840, Asa Smith; 1841, Benjaminushman; 1842-44, John Rigby; 1845-46, Silas Stowe; 1847-48, W. R. Young; 1849-51, Hiram Smith; 1852, Samuel W. Hoskins; 1853, Ephraim B. Pierce; 1854, J. A. Purinton; 1855-58, Pierce; 1859-75, George F. Dillingham; 1876, C. E. Rogers; 1877-78, Dillingham; 1879-81, James W. Waldron.

Collectors—1840, John B. Smith; 1841-43, Lore Alford; 1844, Samuel Pratt; 1845, Henry Morgan; 1846-48, James V. Bakeman; 1849-50, Nahum Godfrey; 1851, David Norton; 1852-53, Bakeman; 1854-56, Godfrey; 1857, Alford; 1858-61, Norton; 1862, Hiram Smith; 1864, Godfrey; 1865, Alford; 1866-67, H. Lancaster; 1868-69, Norton; 1870, Benjamin F. Poor; 1871, Norton; 1872, James H. Gould; 1873-77, Norton; 1878, Pratt; 1879-81, E. R. Alford.

Clerks—1840, John H. Hilliard; 1841-46, Charles Blanchard; 1847-48, David Norton; 1849-52, Rufus D. Folsom; 1852, Samuel W. Hoskins; 1853-56, James A. Purinton; 1857-61, John A. Blanchard; 1862, Samuel J. Oakes; 1863, Edwin R. Alford; 1864-65, Blanchard; 1866, Richard V. Moore; 1867, Albert H. Norris; 1868-72, Edward A. Pond; 1873-74, Charles H. Gray; 1875, George T. Sewall; 1877-79, Pond; 1880-81, James W. Waldron.

The Postmasters at present are: Charles W. Bosworth, Oldtown village; Albert Plummer, Upper Stillwater; Charles G. McPhetres, West Great Works; John D. Bowley, Pea Cove.

THE INDUSTRIES OF OLDTOWN

are numerous and valuable. It had, at last return of statistics, six allopathic physicians, one homœopathic, one electric, and one clairvoyant; three civil engineers, two dentists, four lawyers, one notary, twelve justices, thirty-three merchants at the village, five at Upper Stillwater, one firm at West Great Works, and one merchant at Pea Cove. At Oldtown were thirty-seven manufacturers and artisans, and at Upper Stillwater nine. Three persons were engaged in insurance; four kept livery stables, and three were barbers. One hotel, the Codman House, is kept by Ephraim Cousins.

THE MINING COMPANIES

here are the Oldtown Mining Company, with D. N. Estabrook, President; J. W. Waldron, Secretary; C. A. Bailey, Treasurer; and the Exeter Mining Company, with the same President, and Mr. J. A. Blanchard for Secretary and Treasurer.

The societies of Oldtown, besides the religious, comprise the Star in the East Lodge F. & A. M.; the Tarratine Lodge I. O. O. F., with an Encampment at the village; the Good Samaritan Lodge I. O. G. T., at Oldtown, and the Revival Lodge at Upper Stillwater; the Rechab Social Temple, and the Alpha of O. A. C.

OLDTOWN BIOGRAPHIES.

One of the leading lumbermen in Oldtown is Moses P. Wadleigh, who was born in this town and has always lived here. His father, Jesse R. Wadleigh, married Susan M. Grant. He came here from New Hampshire before he was married. They had six children, three sons and three daughters—Andrew, now in San Francisco, California; Caroline, now Mrs. Jacob Bacon, of San Francisco also; Rufus D., of this town; Sarah F., deceased; Rufus, died in infancy. Jesse Wadleigh died in 1874, and Mrs. Wadleigh in 1876. He was widely known as a lumberman. Moses P. Wadleigh was brought up in the same business, at which he still continues. Jesse Wadleigh, his father, was for many years in the hotel business here with his brother Ira. They built the first extensive mills in town. These were burned, and they again built them up. They lost by this fire one hundred thousand dollars. They took an active part in building the Episcopial church here. Moses Wadleigh married, for his first wife, Climena Moore, of this town. She died June 10, 1846, and Mr. Wadleigh married, for his second wife, Miss Emma T. Nesbett, daughter of John and Elizabeth Nesbett, of Boston, Massachusetts. Mr. Wadleigh has three children by his second wife now living—Moses W., Leith V., and Alfred R. Mr. Wadleigh not only cuts but manufactures lumber. He is widely known all over the lumber region of the Penobscot.

The former firm of Godfrey Brothers, of Oldtown, was composed of Fred N. and George L. Godfrey, sons of Nahum Godfrey, who came from Massachusetts to Oldtown. Nahum Godfrey married Julia Welch, of Bath, Maine. They had seven children, five sons and two daughters, viz: Arthur B., George L., Mattie A., Laura E., Fred M., Edward, and Willie. Laura, Edward, and Willie are deceased. Nahum Godfrey died October 7, 1879, and Mrs. Godfrey died in May, 1879. Fred M., who now carries on the grocery and provision business at the old stand, was born December 23, 1859. He married Angie Brown, daughter of George W. Brown, of Oldtown. George L. Godfrey married Jessie Foss, daughter of Aaron Foss, of Oldtown. They have one son, Harley by name. George L. is a surveyor of lumber at the present time.

Thomas H. Wiggin was born in Wellington, Somerset county, Maine, in 1823. He learned the trade of edge-tool-maker, and came to Penobscot county in 1844, where he settled on a farm. He now lives in the village of Levant, where, in company with his father, he engaged in the mercantile and lumbering business. The partnership continued until the death of his father, when he took charge of the business and continued in trade until 1878, when he sold out to Alonzo Haskell and turned his attention to farming. He married Axie R. Campbell, a native of Brighton, and is the father of four children—Emma R., Hiram D., Frank W. C., and Nellie J. Rev. Frank W. C. Wiggin was born in Levant in 1856, where he received a common school education. He attended the Maine Central Institute, at Pittsfield, and was graduated in 1876. From Pittsfield he went to Bates College, at Lewiston, where he studied two years, and in 1878 took charge of the Charleston Academy as Principal, which position he filled for two years, and also served as pastor of the church at that point. In 1879 he was ordained a minister at Charleston, and went from Charleston to Milo, where he took charge of the Baptist church; also the church at Guilford Centre, where he remained about fifteen months, when he resigned and moved to Oldtown, and there took charge of the Baptist church as its pastor, which position he now occupies. In 1879 he married Georgia A. Wiggin, a native of Stetson, and is the father of one child, Giacie P.

The firm of D. G. Sawyer & Co. was formed in 1861. It consists of the brothers D. G. and Allen J. Sawyer, sons of Daniel and Mary Sawyer, of Monroe, Waldo county. They came formerly from Limington to Waldo county. They had six children that grew to maturity—John, Nathaniel, Mary, Daniel G., Ephraim, and Allen J., all of whom are still living except John, who died about five years ago. Daniel G. Sawyer was born in 1826, and Allen J. in 1816. Daniel G. married Hannah W. Farnham, daughter of Charles Farnham, of Newburg, Maine. They have no children. Allen J. married for his first wife Miss Emily Baston in 1837, who died about 1873. Mr. Sawyer married for his second wife Mrs. Susan Hopkins, of Millford. Mr. Allen Sawyer has served many years as one of the Selectmen of his town, in which office he is still serving. Their present place of business is on the corner of Brown street and the County Road.

Wellman Bosworth, of Oldtown, was born in Hartford, Oxford county, October 8, 1810. His father's name was Jonathan Bosworth. Jonathan and Mary Bosworth (nee Wellman) had six children—Cyrus, now of Litchfield, Maine; Lydia, deceased; Jonathan, now of Houston county, Minnesota; Mary, deceased; Noah, deceased; and Wellman. Jonathan Bosworth died in 1811, and Mrs. Bosworth married Stephen Carr for her second husband, who died, and Mrs. Carr married for her third husband John Berry, by whom she had three children. Wellman Bosworth married Mary Steele, daughter of Andrew and Mary Steele, of Castine, Maine. He settled in Oldtown as a house carpenter, which business he has always followed. He has four children now living, having lost six, most of whom died in infancy. The names of the living are Amanda A.; Charles W., of Oldtown; Sarah C., now Mrs. Hinkley, of Oldtown; and Aroline M. Mr. Bosworth is now seventy-one years old and is still able to conduct his present business of undertaker.

Cornelius Murphy, of Oldtown, is a son of William Murphy, of New Brunswick. William Murphy married Catharine Henry. They had eleven children, eight of whom grew to maturity—Cornelius; William, now of Saginaw, Michigan; Henry, of California; James, in Portland, Maine; Alice, now Mrs. S. P. Lovelace, of Portland, Maine; Ellen, now in Portland; Annie, wife of M. D. McGinnis, of Bangor; Lizzie, of Portland. Cornelius Murphy was born March 21, 1840, and married Mrs. Mary A. Murphy, of Bangor, (nee Mary Mellen). They have had three children, two of whom are living—William H. and Alice C. Mr. Murphy has always been engaged in the lumber business.

A. T. Wing, of Oldtown, is the son of Silas B. and Sarah Wing, of Mount Vernon, Maine. They had six children, one son and five daughters, viz: Parmtha A., deceased; Francis M., also deceased; Amanda M., now Mrs. Moses M. Moise, of Auburn, Maine; Lucy J., deceased; Helen C., now Mrs. Donald McKay, of Stewiack, Nova Scotia; and Asa T., the youngest of the family. Asa T., or A. Thellow, as he usually writes it, was born May 16, 1838. He is by trade a carpenter and builder. He married Mary E. Sylvester, daughter of Jonathan Sylvester, of Levant, and has four children: Adelbert T., Roscoe H., Alonzo, and Effie, all of whom are still living at home. Mr. Wing enlisted in 1862 in the First Maine Heavy Artillery, in which he served about three years; was wounded at Petersburg, receiving a grape-shot wound which confined him to the hospital over six months, and from the effects of which he receives a pension.

Mrs. Kate Conway (nee Landers), of Oldtown, is a daughter of James and Mary Landers, who came to Bangor before the city was incorporated. They came from the city of Cork, Ireland. They had seven children, four sons and three daughters, viz: Margaret, deceased wife of James McCarron, of Bangor; James, now in Bangor; Kate; Michael C., also of Bangor, on the old homestead; Henry, also in Bangor; John, of Bangor; and Fannie M., wife of John Curran, of Jefferson, New Hampshire. Mr. Landers died in 1873 at the age of seventy-one, and Mrs. Landers is still living. Mr. Landers was run over by a runaway team while striving to stop them and save the ladies in the carriage. Mrs. Landers is one of the oldest survivors of the first Catholic society ever formed in Bangor. Mrs. Conway, now living in Oldtown, was born September 29, 1843. She married Patrick H. Conway, of Oldtown, formerly of Fredericton, who was the son of Edward and Fannie Conway. They have one son now living, Harry by name, who was born March 3, 1876. Mr. Conway had one son by a former wife, Edward by name. Mrs. Conway came to Oldtown in 1870, and opened a millinery and fancy goods store, in which business she has ever since continued.

Nathaniel Reed, of Oldtown, is the son of Alfred and Martha Reed, of Bradley, Maine. They had eight children, seven sons and one daughter, viz: Henry; Josiah, of Holyoke, Massachusetts; Willard R., of Bradley; Sewall, of Holyoke; George, in Bradley; Nathaniel; and Lydia, now Mrs. S. Mansill, of Bradley. Nathaniel, the youngest of this family, was born January 14, 1839. Mr. Reed has always been engaged in the lumber business on the river here. He married Charlotte S. Howard, of Brewer. They have had one child, now deceased, Maud by name. Mr. Reed enlisted in 1861, and spent three years in the army in the First Maine Cavalry, Company D, being in all the battles and engagements of that regiment, except while at Belle Isle and Libby prison, where he was a prisoner for over a month. He received injuries from the falling of his horse, and was sent to the Howard Hospital, Washington, under Dr. Andersoll. He was with Colonel Dahlgren when he was killed.

Isaac Haynes, of Oldtown, is the son of Isaac P. and Mary Haynes, of Passadumkeag, in this county. Isaac P. Haynes had twelve children, of whom only four are now living—Isaac; Hannah L., now Mrs. Charles E. Chapman, of Orrington; Ellen H., now Mrs. Jesse Gould, of South Weare, New Hampshire; Mary E., married A. P. Chapman, of Oldtown. Isaac Haynes was born July 10, 1838. On becoming of age he went to steamboating on the St. John River, where he spent four years, when he came to the Penobscot and followed the same business until 1866, when he bought out the watch and jewelry stand of Israel Miller, in which business he has ever since been engaged. He married Mary E. Babcock, daughter of John and Rachel D. Babcock, of Howland. They have one son, John E., now with his father in the store.

H. M. Burnham, the druggist in Oldtown, is a son of Richard and Thankful Burnham, formerly of this town, though now Mr. Burnham is in Oregon. Richard Burnham came here from Franklin, Maine. Richard and Thankful Burnham had six children, four of whom lived to maturity—Josephine, now Mrs. F. Crosby, of Boston, Massachusetts; Darius, now in Washington Territory; Fannie, now Mrs. E. F. Tukey, of Boston, Massachusetts; and Horace M. The latter was born in Orono, October 16, 1849. After completing his common school education he attended the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, graduating in 1874, after which he returned to Oldtown, and bought the drug store where he is now on Brown street. In 1877 he married Miss Rowena Williams, daughter of Hezekiah Williams, of Skowhegan, Maine. They have three daughters—Agnes, Edna, and a baby not named.

E. W. Conant, of Oldtown, is a son of Isaac Conant, of Winterport, Maine. He was born June 24, 1837, and went into lumber and stock business in Milford in 1858, and lived there eleven years. While here he married Carrie E. Bailey, of Milford, daughter of William Bailey. She died December 24, 1874. She left one child, Eddie A., now fourteen years old. Mr. Conant moved here in 1869, and engaged in the grocery business, in which he continued till April, 1880, when he began the manufacture of shingles in Oldtown, in which business he has since continued. He, with Mr. White and others, built their present mill in 1879. This mill has a capacity of about twelve million shingles a year.

Ephraim Cousins, who keeps the Codman House in Oldtown, is the only son of Ephraim and Abigail Cousins, of Trenton, Hancock county, Maine, where he was born May 27, 1830. He was formerly engaged in trade in Ellsworth, Maine, until 1869, when he came to Oldtown and engaged in the hotel and livery business, where he has since remained. He married Henrietta Pettingill, daughter of Eliphalet and Harriet Pettingill, of Sullivan. They have three children, viz: Agnes; George, now keeping the hotel in Milford, Maine; and Frank, who is at home. The Codman House is now kept by him. It is on Front street, and the only hotel in town. It is a well-kept house.

George W. Weston, of Oldtown, is a son of George and Rebecca Weston. George Weston has long lived in Oldtown and Milford. He has four children living, having lost two in early life. The names of the living are John Oscar, of Oldtown; Charles A., of Minnesota; George W., and Mary A., at home. George W. was born December 1, 1859. He is engaged in the mill at Upper Stillwater at the present time, running a shingle machine. He has always worked in the mills here and at Oldtown.

Mr. Orimil Rogers, who has long been one of the prominent men of Upper Stillwater, was born in the town of Knox, Waldo county, Maine, June 13, 1810. His father, Robert Rogers, was a native of New Hampshire, and his mother, Mary Lyman, a native of Connecticut. They had three children, two sons and one daughter, viz: Lyman, Orimil, and Catharine. Lyman lives in Upper Stillwater, and Catharine, now Mrs. John Knight, lives in Williamsburg, Ohio. Orimil Rogers first engaged in trade in this town in 1832, and has always until very recently been in trade here. Of late years he has also been engaged in farming. Mr. Rogers has not been engaged much in public life. He married, for his first wife, Miss Elizabeth Michael, of this town, by whom he has one child, Rachel E., deceased, wife of Professor J. A. Howe, of Bates College. Mrs. Rogers died January 21, 1837, and Mr. Rogers married Miss Eliza E. Woodman, daughter of Deacon Benjamin and Mary Woodman, of Burlington, Maine. They have three children living, viz: Charles E., of Oldtown; Isa, and Luther W., of Waterville, Maine. They lost three children in early life.

Charles E. Rogers was born November 29, 1838, in Upper Stillwater, Maine. He is the oldest son of Orimil and Eliza Rogers. After finishing his common school course he attended the Oldtown Academy, as then styled. His father being a merchant, he was brought up as it were in the store. He has always been engaged in merchandizing in this town. He married Miss Caroline Smith, daughter of J. L. Smith, of Oldtown. They have three children, viz.: Lizzie A., Mabel, Albert O., called Ormie. Mr. Rogers has filled the office of Town Treasurer in this town.

Albert Plummer, postmaster at Upper Stillwater, was born January 8, 1814. He is a son of Nathaniel and Agnes Plummer, of Topsham, Maine. They had eight children, five sons and three daughters, viz.: John, in New York; Albert; Pennel, now living in Lisbon, Maine; Andrew, now on the old homestead in Topsham; Isaac, in Brunswick, Maine; Sarah, deceased; Mary, deceased; Lovina, now in Topsham. Mr. Albert Plummer married for his first wife Jane Hall, of Bowdoin. She died many years ago, and Mr. Plummer married for his second wife Almira Clark, of Holden, Maine. By his first wife Mr. Plummer has one daughter, Mrs. Cynthia Johnson, of Brewer, Maine. By his second wife he has one daughter, Ellen, now at home. He was employed as a station-agent on the Veazie Railroad until the road was sold and abandoned. In 1869 he was appointed postmaster at Upper Stillwater, which office he now holds. He runs an express from here to the railroad at Orono. He has held the town office of Selectman.

Perhaps nowhere in our country can be found a more intelligent and prosperous Indian settlement than that of Indian Island, in Oldtown. One of the leading men of that prosperous settlement is Joseph Nicola. He is a descendant of the Norridgewock tribe, his grandfather being one of the few who escaped the massacre of that tribe, so noted in history. His father's name was Tomer Nicola. Joseph was born February 15, 1827. He attended school at Rockland, Warren, and Brewer, as well as in Oldtown. He married Elizabeth Joseph, daughter of Sebattis Joseph, of Olamon, Maine, in 1866. They have two children—Clara E., and Lucy. This people have a separate government from the town in many respects (for an account of which see another part of this work), in which Mr. Nicola is a prominent man and officer. He has been on the Governor's Council (Governor Stanislaus, of Indian Island) for over twenty years. He is now Private Secretary to the Governor. He has represented his tribe in the Legislature six terms, being now their Representative, and is engaged in farming. Mr. Nicola is an earnest supporter of their church (Roman Catholic), and one of its most prominent members, being one of the Building Committee when their convent was built. He is at present serving as Town Treasurer of the tribe.

ORRINGTON.

DESCRIPTION.

Orrington is another of the fine old towns of the county. It was, indeed, the pioneer town of Penobscot in date of organization. It is the only one, except Bangor and Eddington, mentioned in the census of 1790, the first one taken by the Federal Government. It lies in an important position, only three-quarters of a mile from Bangor, by the neighborhood of their corners, with the longest side upon the river, the Bucksport & Bangor Narrow Gauge Railroad traversing that entire side, and another of its sides, with part of another, abutting upon Hancock county. It is one of the populous, wealthy, and otherwise prominent towns of the Penobscot Valley.

Orrington is bounded on the northeast by Brewer and a bit of Holden; on the southeast by the "gore" of Holden and by Bucksport; on the southwest by Bucksport; and on the west by a narrow breadth of Winterport, Waldo county, beyond the Penobscot; and on the northwest by the same stream, beyond which is the ancient town of Hampden. No one of its borders is a single straight line, although all except that in the river are composed of right lines. The northeast boundary is broken less than a mile from the river by the right-angled jog of perhaps fifty rods to the southwestward. It runs on two and a half miles further, when another sudden dip occurs, this one on the line of Holden. It is about twice as long as the other, when it angles again to the southeast, and again to the southwest nearly a mile, when, mainly in Brewer's Pond, the line now forms part of the northeast boundary, and makes an obtuse angle in the Pond, running on over a mile and a half south to the Bucksport line, near the south end of the Pond, where it makes another obtuse angle to the southwest, in a short distance still another more to the southward, and so on two miles more to the southernmost corner of the town and of the county. This is one corner of a small quadrilateral, containing scarcely more than a square mile, being a projection southward or sort of "annex" to Orrington. The southwest line of this, making a little less than a right angle with the southeast boundary at the extreme corner, is only about one and one-third miles. It then breaks sharply to the northeast, and by a line converging slightly toward the opposite boundary on the southeast, runs only five-sixths of a mile northeast before breaking again to the northwest, then a few rods to the southwest, then north of west again to the curving line of the town on the west, in the waters of the Penobscot. Orrington is a very singularly shaped and bounded town. The total of its northeast line is only four and one-third miles; of its southeast line five and two-thirds; its southwest boundary, including the lines about the "annex," five and one-third; and its line to the Penobscot, a little more than six and a half miles.

Brewer Pond, as already indicated, lies on the southeast and east boundary of Orrington, perhaps half its surface being in this town. Its northern extremity lies wholly in this town; the lower extreme just without it, in Bucksport. The lake is two and a quarter miles long, by one mile broad in its widest parts. One quarter of a mile north of it, connected by an outlet, is Field's Pond, a sheet of irregular shape and perhaps half a square mile of total area, which reaches very nearly to the easternmost corner of the town. From its southern part, not far from the outlet of Brewer, its own outlet runs out in a broad stream to the westward, which narrows at East Orrington, and runs northward as the Segeunkedunk Stream to the Beaver line, expanded into two valuable mill-ponds as it goes, near the west corner of Brewer flowing into the Penobscot and furnishing an exceedingly useful power at Brewer Village, where it moves a large amount of machinery.

Midway between Brewer Pond and the river is Sweet's Pond, lying from southeast to northwest, a mile long, but with an average width of but one quarter the length. Two small affluents enter at or near its head, and its outlet at the northwest flows in a great curve of three and three-quarter miles' length to the river at South Orrington, receiving in that place a small tributary from the east. These are about all the waters of Orrington, except the grand river on its west, which needs no further description here.

This town is remarkably covered with a network of roads. The Bucksport & Bangor Railroad makes an unusual number of stations within it, as Arctic, North Orrington, Pierce's Crossing, Orrington, and South Orrington. The old river road, entering from Bucksport, traverses the northwest and west side a distance of nearly seven miles. The settlement of the town is mainly upon this highway, which is almost a continuous village. It passes through North Orrington, Orrington, and South Orrington post-offices, and by a number of school-houses and other public or semi-public institutions. It sends off into the interior southeasterly no less than six highways, at distances averaging about a mile, most of which nearly or quite cross the town. Still another, from Brewer Village, up the east bank of the Segeunkedunk, soon enters this town and passes to East Orrington. This place is about a mile from the northeast line, at the end of the broader part of the Segeunkedunk. It has a post-office, a Congregational church and two school-houses, and is an important road center, six highways converging there from as many different directions. Goodale Corners is a settlement near a mile from the south end of Brewer Pond, and has also a post-office. It has also convenient connection by wagon-roads with nearly every part of the town and adjacent towns. South Orrington, very near the west corner of the town, has also two schools, a church building, a cemetery, and a good business quarter. Orrington post-office is near the middle of the river front and the river road, and is similarly equipped for the public convenience, having also the Town House.

THE PIONEERS.

The first settlement upon the soil of old Orrington was made by Colonel John Brewer, in June, 1770, at the mouth of the Segeunkedunk Stream, where now is Brewer Village, within the limits of the town of Brewer. The history of that settlement, therefore, is properly a part of the history of that town, in which Colonel Brewer and his beginnings in the Penobscot Valley will be found noticed at some length.

The honor of being the original pioneer upon the tract of the later and present Orrington is claimed for Jesse Atwood, grandfather of Captain Horace Atwood, now of Hampden. The elder Atwood was born in the town of Wellfleet, Massachusetts, on the 17th of May, 1749. He was just twenty-nine years old, in the time of his young manhood, when, on the 17th of May, 1778, he set his stakes down in the Penobscot wilderness, where now is Orrington town. Here he spent the entire remainder of his life, which was prolonged fifty years more, or to the very venerable age of eighty-four; here he died in the fullness of years, April 9, 1833; and here, in the Orrington burying-ground, his honored remains repose.

Within the next two or three years a number of settlers followed Colonel Brewer and Mr. Atwood to the beautiful banks of this part of the Penobscot. Most of them were seafaring men from Massachusetts, retiring from the pursuits of the deep or driven from them by the troubles of the time. The former residence of Colonel Brewer at Worcester, in that colony, led to the giving of this tract, when it took a plantation name, the title of "New Worcester." After the unfortunate operations of General Winslow and Commodore Saltonstall against the British fort at Castine, the inhabitants of this region were considerably annoyed and frightened by the enemy, so much so that they deemed it prudent to retire to the older settlements southwestward, from which they did not return until after the peace.

Some time before 1786, but at just what date the present writer is unable to say, Mr. Simeon Fowler settled upon the river, within what is now Orrington. He was one of the original proprietors of the tract, after its release by the State, became otherwise a prominent citizen, and was the first Treasurer of Hancock county, after the act for the erection of that then immense county took effect.

PROPRIETORSHIP.

When Colonel Brewer and his associates projected a settlement in the Penobscot Valley, the jurisdiction of Great Britain was undisputed in all this region. They expected to secure a "concession" or grant of such land as they wanted from the British Crown; but, pending its procurement, they obtained the license of the General Court of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay to settle upon the desired tract. They came accordingly to the east bank of the Penobscot, and settled in the summer of 1770 and after. The condition of permission to locate here was that they should obtain a confirmation of title to the land, from the British Government, within three years; and they accordingly sent a petition for that purpose, by one Doctor Calef, of Ipswich, Massachusetts, which was respectfully heard, and the grant was promised. Full confirmation was for some reason delayed, however, until the outbreak of the Revolution, when every pending matter of the kind was naturally suspended until the close of hostilities. On the other hand, the settlers were not ousted, although the three years had several times been repeated and elapsed before they secured a valid title to their lots. They had, soon after the original settlement, caused the boundary lines of a township to be run; and, some time after the return of the settlers succeeding the war and the peace, the township was resurveyed in detail and lotted by Barnabas Dodge. Then the lots abutting upon the river were selected for investment by Colonel Brewer and Mr. Fowler. They effected a purchase from the State of Massachusetts March 25, 1786, of 10,864 acres in one body here, including these lots. The purchase money amounted to £3,000, which was paid in the "consolidated notes" or money of that period. These were much below the par value of their face in silver. Otherwise they would have paid more than a dollar per acre for their grant, which would have been a very extraordinary price for that time and this region.

The remainder of the tract constituting the old Orrington, or the original township surveyed, was conveyed by the State to Moses Knapp and his associates.

MUNICIPAL ORGANIZATION.

Orrington has a special distinction, above all other towns of Penobscot county, not only in being the first to be incorporated, but the only one of them all that was ever a town of the old and very large Lincoln county. It is the sole, solitary one that has belonged in succession to Lincoln, Hancock, and Penobscot counties, though a number of them belonged to Hancock before they became Penobscot territory.

The primitive settlement here seems to have been known variously, from its place and number in the surveys, as "Plantation No. 9," and from the original residence of Colonel Brewer in Massachusetts, as "New Worcester," which was doubtless its official plantation name. The number of inhabitants upon the tract, rapidly increasing when the war of the Rebellion had closed, early justified full organization as a town; and on the 21st day of March, 1788, its incorporation as such was granted by the General Court of Massachusetts. This was more than two years before the act for the erection of Hancock county took effect, and while all this region was in the enormous and ancient county of Lincoln. It was the fifty-third town created in the District of Maine, the first in what is now Penobscot county, and the first, except Machias and Penobscot (February 22, 1787) erected east of the river. For some time the inhabitants eastward of the river had complained of the inconvenience, annoyance, and delays they had experienced from the remoteness of Pownalborough (now Wiscasset), the old county seat of Lincoln, from their homes; and the formation of a new county or counties in that direction was only delayed until there should be a sufficient number of corporate towns in this region to provide jurymen according to the legal requirements. March 24, 1788, the General Court made a call upon the larger islands and the newly settled townships and plantations in the District of Maine to assign their reasons at the next session of the Legislature, if they had any, why they did not apply for incorporation as towns. This produced a general awakening and spirit of inquiry and enterprise among the people; and in pursuance of the demand and of the previous agitation of the subject, no less than twenty settlements in the District, within the space of a year and a quarter, applied for and received charters of incorporation. Among them were Orrington, Sedgwick, Blue Hill, Trenton, Deer Isle, Mt. Desert, Sullivan, and Gouldsborough, whose erection prepared the way handsomely for the subdivision of Lincoln and the creation of Hancock and Washington counties. Machias was, however, at that time the only incorporated town in the latter county.

During the same period, Vinalhaven, now in Knox county, and Islesborough, now in Waldo, but both made up of islands in the Penobscot Bay, were also granted charters; likewise Frankfort, in the present Waldo county, but then extending into the territory of the later town of Hampden, in this county, was one of the twenty new towns.

The enterprising and intelligent pioneers of Orrington, it will be observed, did not wait for the call of the General Court before submitting their petition; but had their town created three days before the summons upon the islands and plantations was issued.

It was a large town, extending originally from "Buck's Ledge," on the river—so called from Colonel Jonathan Buck, the founder of Buckstown or Bucksport,—fifteen miles up the east bank of the stream to the great bend at the southwest corner of Eddington, and far enough into the interior to include a tract of 37,304 acres, or about fifty-eight and one-fourth square miles. A more accurate idea may be formed of its size by reference to the map at the beginning of this volume, and bearing in mind the facts that three towns are now included within its original tract—Orrington, very small now by comparison with its ancient limits; Brewer, set off from Orrington, February 22, 1812, and taking away 23,582 acres at one fell swoop; and Holden, set off from Brewer April 13, 1852.

THE ORRINGTON NAME.

At least two theories have been mooted concerning the application of this somewhat singular name to this tract. As a geographical designation, it is certainly very rare. No other "Orrington" than this Penobscot name is noticed in Lippincott's great Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World, and there is no other post-office in the United States bearing the name—which is a quite unique fact.

A note to the volume recording the Centennial Celebration of Bangor gives the following information:

The name of Orrington, it is said, originated in this way: At a meeting of the people of the settlement, Parson Noble was present, and was delegated to procure an act of incorporation of the town. Upon inquiring by what name, Captain James Ginn, the clerk of the meeting, suggested that it be Orangetown, the name of his native town [in Maryland]. The suggestion was approved, and the Captain, who, though a good penman, was deficient in orthography, in his record of the vote spelled it "Orrington." The parson, partly from waggishness and partly because of the originality of the name, allowed the orthography to remain. It is so inserted in the charter, and no disposition has since been manifested to amend it.

This Parson Noble is the same one who secured the insertion of "Bangor," instead of "Sudbury," in the petition of the people of "Kenduskeag Plantation" for the erection of a town. His name and personality are thus quite closely associated with the geographical nomenclature of this region.

The settler Ginn, mentioned in the foregoing anecdote, is the same who, during his residence here in the early day, bought and brought in a slave woman and her child from Massachusetts—the only human chattels, very likely, that were ever upon the soil of Penobscot county, except possibly such as have casually stepped ashore from vessels in port.

Mr. Williamson, in a foot-note (Vol. II., page 539) to his History of Maine, promulgates the following theory:

When the agent to the General Court was requested to give a name to be inserted in the bill for its incorporation, he accidentally opened a book and saw the name, which, being novel and sonorous, he caused to be selected.

This statement is apparently verified by a letter to Mr. Williamson from the Hon. D. Perham, who was certainly high authority. The other theory, however, is the one which now receives popular credence; and the exceeding rarity of the Orrington name, if not its absolute absence from law and literature before the incorporation of the town, render it altogether the more probable.

RECORD OF PROGRESS.

The first census taken by the Federal Government made account of Orrington—the only town or plantation now belonging to Penobscot county which is named in it, except Bangor and Eddington, the latter of which, however, was not yet an incorporated town. Orrington itself was named with "adjacent places," and with them contained 477 inhabitants. The number increased nearly seventy per cent. during the next decade, and in 1800 Orrington alone counted 786 people.

The following was the official valuation of the town in 1801: Polls, 100; 41 dwellings, at 12 to 30 shillings; 5 shops, at 10 to 18 shillings; 2 warehouses, 12 shillings; 31 barns, 12 to 15 shillings; 4 grist- and saw-mills, 80 to 60 shillings; tillage, 241 acres, at 6 shillings to 90 cents; upland (mowing land), 339 acres, 7 shillings to $1.40; meadow, 40 acres, 5 shillings; pasture, 299 acres, 2 to 3 shillings; woodland, 10,454 acres, 6 to 9 shillings; unimprovable, 2,747 acres; town and proprietary, 24,520 acres, 6 shillings; horses, 7; oxen, 94; cows, 147; swine, 86.

Within the decade 1800-10 Orrington nearly doubled its numbers, and for a number of years before and after that date enjoyed the distinction of being the most populous town in the county. It had 1,341 inhabitants by the third census, when Bangor had but 850, and even Hampden had but 1,279. But before the next census was taken Orrington had lost nearly three-fourths of her territory and much of her population by the secession of Brewer. The united population of these two towns in 1820 was 1,783, which shows that Orrington would then still have been much the most populous town in the county, had the division not taken place.

In 1812 Orrington had 162 polls, with $3,368.51 valuation of estates, and a general tax of 55 cents on the $1,000.

In 1820 Orrington had 1,049 people and 214 polls. It had now but 172 less population than Bangor, and 429 less than Hampden, which was the largest town in the county. Its voters were but 53 less than the former, and 127 less than the latter. Its estates, however, were much behind either of the others, being but $58,216, against $107,593 for Hampden and $132,998 for Bangor. Eddington, the other old town, was still further in the rear in this and all other respects.

The remaining census returns of this town have been as follow: 1830, 1,234; 1840, 1,580; 1850, 1,852; 1860, 1,950; 1870, 1,768; 1880, 1,529.

The return of polls in 1860 was 440, 442 in 1870, and 449 in 1880. The number of its grown men, then, has not fallen off, nor have its estates, which were for these years, respectively, $355,442, $400,839, and $405,898.

A CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

In September, 1800, following a few months' preaching through this region by the Rev. James Boyd, a Congregational society was formed of members residing in Bangor, Hampden, and Orrington, and Mr. Boyd was regularly ordained as a minister and received as pastor. He was soon, however, ascertained to be a wolf in sheep's clothing, and his ministry hereabouts came to an end at the expiration of about a year, with the calling of a church council in November, 1801, and his dismissal without recommendation. The society, which had before been known indifferently as the Bangor church or the Orrington church, was thereafter considered as entitled to the latter designation only. The society was considerably distracted and broken for a number of years, being most of the time without stated preaching; and in November, 1811, after a short term of service in Bangor by the Rev. Harvey Loomis, enough members were dismissed from the Orrington society to form the church at Bangor.

In 1812, a missionary named Thomas Williams, sent out under Congregational auspices, made his appearance in the upper part of the old Orrington town, which had now become Brewer. His services proved acceptable, and his settlement as pastor was shortly proposed. In January, 1813, he was ordained and settled as pastor of the old Orrington church, now mustering but seventeen members. He remained in the service of this society a number of years. In 1821 he and the Congregational pastor at Bangor were the only settled preachers of the faith in the county. True, there were four other Congregational churches, but they were without pastors.

The Orrington church survived until 1847. In 1834 another division of the society was made, and on the 12th of June in that year the East Orrington church was formed. This is still in existence, and was last ministered unto by the Rev. Clarence S. Sargent, of Brewer Village, who has retired from labor in this field.

THE METHODISTS.

In the year 1795 the Rev. Joshua Hall was sent to the Penobscot country by the New London (Connecticut) Conference as a pioneer missionary preacher. He had an immense field of service, extending from the mouth of the river as far up and on both sides as he could find settlements in which to preach. This was called the Penobscot Circuit, and subsisted as such for about ten years, when, in 1806, it was divided into the Orrington and Hampden Circuits. A Methodist Society had already been organized in the town, which gave the name to the former.

In 1809 the Union River Circuit took the name of Penobscot Circuit, and seven years later it was united with the Orrington Circuit. This relation endured but three years, when the circuits were again disunited. In 1820 a third circuit of the Penobscot name was formed, with the Rev. Benjamin Jones as Presiding Elder. About this time the Orrington Circuit included the societies at Orrington, Brewer, Brooks, and Eddington, which together had three hundred members.

About the year 1798 Elder Enoch Mudge, who had begun his ministerial labors in this State, at Readfield, some years before, began preaching in Orrington, and served the Christian people and the people here and hereabout for nearly twenty years. He was sent by the town as its Representative in the General Court of Massachusetts in 1811, 1814, and 1816. He returned to Lynn, where he had been converted, before the separation from that State, and preached there for several years longer. The historian Williamson, in his paper on the Religious Denominations of Maine at the Close of the Revolution, published in the seventh volume of the Maine Historical Collections, says of Elder Mudge:

His natural abilities were such that, although having had but a common education, he became an excellent and acceptable preacher. His style was good, his voice pleasant, his manner prepossessing, and his discourses instructive. In stature he was short and stout. He had a fair countenance and thick lips. I have listened to his sermons with pleasure and profit.

Further notice of Elder Mudge will be given below, in a biographical sketch of his son.

Other pioneer Methodist preachers hereaway, whose names have been preserved, were Jeremiah and William Marsh, and John Kenney, the latter of whom was a local preacher.

The Methodist Society at Orrington is still maintained, and was ministered to in 1881 by the Rev. Benjamin S. Arey. Another society has been founded at South Orrington, whose pastor in charge during the same year was Rev. J. A. Morelen.

THE FIRST MEETING-HOUSES.

The aforesaid letter of Mr. Perham, of which an abstract is given by Mr. Williamson, in his History of Maine, says that these were two in number, and were erected "seven miles apart, equidistant from each end of the town."

A PIONEER NURSERY.

One of the first nurseries established in the State, and probably the very first in Eastern Maine, was planted by Mr. Ephraim Goodale, at what is now Goodale's Corner. The following is a copy of his ancient hand-bill, which was distributed far and wide. It will be noticed that he names his residence as Buckstown (Bucksport), which was probably his post-office.

PENOBSCOT FRUIT TREES.

EPHRAIM GOODALE, of BUCKSTOWN, offers for sale for Cash or approved Credit, as low as can be purchased in New-England, and of as good a quality, the following

PEAR TREES.

Uvidales, St. Germaine, St. Michael, St. James, Large Sweet York, Small Sweet York, Premetive, Monsieur John, Windsor,	Blue, Sugar, English Sweet, Davenport, Perry, German, Baking, Bond, Dergaloo, Jargonelle, Catton, Burgamot, Gardenelle.
--	---

N. B. Pear Trees are not subject to Lice.

APPLE TREES.

Bell's Early, Maiden's Blush, Quince, Cuincing, Black Pippin, Golden Pippin, Nonesuch, Snout,	Yellow Geniton, Warren Russet, Stone Sweet, Pumpkin Sweet, &c. Also... A few Butternut, Plumb & Quince Trees.
--	--

E. Goodale has spared no pains in selecting the best fruit, and by keeping them labelled has ascertained what sorts are most congenial to this country. Every person knows the utility of transplanting from a kindred soil.

The nursery and orchard at this Corner have been maintained for many years, and their products have usually presented the largest and best variety at the Pomological and Agricultural Fairs of the county.

THE FIRST POST-OFFICE in old Orrington was that founded at Brewer Village in 1800, of which Colonel Brewer was Postmaster.

The present Orrington post-office was established in 1813, and has Albert H. Smith in charge.

Other offices of the kind in the town are at South Orrington, Lincoln Wheelden, Postmaster; North Orrington, Charles Hoyt; East Orrington, Charles A. Severance; and Goodale's Corner, C. D. Chapman.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The first Representative of this town in the General Court of Massachusetts was the Hon. Oliver Leonard, who was delegated thereto in 1798. The Rev. Enoch Mudge, as before noted, was Representative from Orrington in 1811, 1814, and 1816.

The following-named gentlemen were serving as town officers in 1881: J. D. Baker, C. A. Severance, Warren Nickerson, Selectmen; Joseph D. Baker, Town Clerk; A. G. Dole, Treasurer; Asa L. Kent, Collector; T. H. Crowell, J. D. Hines, Constables; Augustus N. Lufkin, J. Wyman Phillips, Hattie W. Pollard, School Committee; J. D. Baker, J. Wyman Phillips, C. H. Freeman, Augustus N. Lufkin (Quorum), Justices.

INDUSTRIES AND PROFESSIONS.

Orrington has one resident physician, but no lawyer, and no hotel is at present kept in the town.

The leading industry in this fine and fairly fertile tract at present is agriculture, in which pursuit a number of good farms have been developed. Much attention is also given to dairying, and milk from the dairies of Orrington is delivered daily in Bangor.

This town has shared in the general advantages of the Lower Penobscot for ship-building, and has to some extent improved its advantages. In April, 1862, the sloop Blackbird, a small vessel, was launched here; and in September, 1866, the schooner Naonta, of 193 tons, was completed at the Orrington shipyard. Other river vessels, whose annals are not yet written, had their birth-place on the Orrington shore.

The manufacturers in this town include one maker of drain tile and clay pipes, one of earthenware and pipes, one of boots and shoes, one tannery, and one churn-maker. There are four tolerably extensive saw-mills, and two grist-mills.

The merchants comprise seven engaged in general country storekeeping, and one milliner.

ORRINGTON IN 1872.

The following is a notice of this town in Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World, edition of 1873. As before noticed, this is the only town of the name which the globe furnished for notice in this work. Orrington Corner, however, by which name the post-office was designated, is the head of a very brief and unimportant paragraph:

Orrington, a post-township in Penobscot county, Maine, on the Penobscot River, fifty-five miles [?] below Bangor, and sixty-six miles east by north of Augusta. It contains one Congregational and three Methodist churches, a high school, and eight stores. The streams afford motive power for six saw-mills, which cut annually about two million feet of lumber; several shingle-mills, lath-mills, and turning-mills, and a paper-mill. There is also a steam saw-mill, turning out about seven hundred thousand feet of lumber annually. About twenty vessels are owned here and employed in the West India and coastwise trade. A ferry connects Orrington with Hampden on the opposite side of the Penobscot. Population, 1,950.

THE ASSOCIATIONS

of Orrington, not religious, are the Eureka Lodge, No. 33, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which organized March 6, 1878; the Enterprise Grange, No. 173, Patrons of Husbandry, and the Riverside and Empire Lodges of the Independent Order of Good Templars.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

One of the most successful and noted of the natives or residents of this town was Mr. Enoch R. Mudge, a merchant prince of Boston, who died suddenly at Elmwood, in Swampscott, Massachusetts, October 1, 1881. The Bangor Whig and Courier published the following interesting notices of his father and himself:

The deceased was born in Orrington, Maine, March 22, 1812, the youngest son of Rev. Enoch Mudge, the first settled Methodist minister on the Penobscot River, of whom Hon. J. W. Porter says:

"He came to Orrington in 1793, and remained there nearly twenty years. He was one of the most remarkable men in that part of the State, and left his impress upon the inhabitants of that town as few men could have done. He was an eloquent preacher, logical, profound, and interesting. As a citizen he was the peer of the many distinguished men who lived in Orrington at that time, which is no small eulogy for a town that named among its citizens Colonel John Brewer, Francis, Joseph, and James Carr, Oliver and George Leonard, and many others. Mr. Mudge represented Orrington in the General Court in 1811-14-16. He married, about 1800, Jerusha (Holbrook) Hinckley, widow of Solomon Hinckley, of Orrington, for whom, in accordance with a custom somewhat in vogue at that time, they named their first son, born June 22, 1803, Solomon Hinckley—not Salmon, as the Boston papers have it."

The Boston Herald says: "Enoch Redington Mudge was the youngest of the four children of Rev. Enoch Mudge, whose struggles and whose ceaseless efforts for the advancement of the early Methodist church in New England, and the propagation of its principles, justly won for him the title of the pioneer of that faith. Rev. Enoch Mudge had the signal honor of being the first native Methodist preacher in New England, and his descendants, in their turn, have justly and proudly pointed to his character as nobly befitting that peculiar distinction. The youngest son of this remarkable preacher, Enoch Redington Mudge, was born in the little town of Orrington, Maine, March 22, 1812. It was in this town that much of the father's ministerial labors had been performed, and it was in this town that young Enoch received the rudiments of an education as brief as it was remarkable."

At the time of his death Mr. Mudge was the senior partner of the firm of E. R. Mudge, Sawyer & Co., having offices in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, as selling agents of the Washington mills, Lawrence, Massachusetts; Burlington Woolen Company, Chicopee Manufacturing Company, Saratoga Victory Manufacturing Company, Atlantic Cotton Mills, Ocean Mills Company, Ellerton New Mills and Hosiery Mills. For all of these mills, and they represent an aggregate capital of between four and five millions of dollars, Mr. Mudge's firm has since 1858 made all the purchase of supplies, sold all the products, and has had the direction of the manufactures of all goods. It is known that in 1865, before Mr. Mudge's business had assumed its present vast proportions, the sales for twelve months amounted to over $3,000,000. The amount of the sales for the present year may be imagined from this figure, when it is known that many more mills have been added and the functions of the firm considerably enlarged.

Mr. Mudge had nearly completed a splendid church in Lynn, Massachusetts, at a cost of about $250,000, as a memorial of two of his children—a son killed in the war and a daughter who died in 1879. The estate left by Mr. Mudge is estimated at over three millions of dollars, and he was honored as one of the foremost of the energetic, enterprising, and public spirited merchant princes of the New England metropolis.

The following brief notice appears in the Roll of Honor (soldiers serving in the late Rebellion) of Bowdoin College:

Class of 1861.—Augustus N. Lufkin; born in East Orrington, June, 1837; August, 1862, enlisted in Second Maine; when its two years of service expired, was transferred to the Twentieth Maine, serving as Corporal; after examination was commissioned Captain in a regiment of colored troops; served in the Army of the Potomac, of the James, and in the Texas expedition; was mustered out December, 1865.

George Brooks, of Orrington, is the son of James Brooks, of the same town. James Brooks had twelve children who grew to maturity, of whom George is the oldest. He was born June 21, 1815, and settled at the old home in Orrington, where he now lives, but not in the old house. Mr. Brooks has had four wives, the first being Corilla Nickerson, of this town. His second wife was Mrs. Lydia Hopkins, of Hampden. On the death of his second wife he married Carrie J. Nickerson, of Orrington. Mr. Brooks is now living with his fourth wife, whose name was Miss Priscilla Nash, of Addison, Maine, by whom he has three children now living, having lost two. Mr. Brooks is engaged in farming and the manufacture of pottery, land tiles, earthenware, and tobacco pipes being the principal articles. He sells most of the land tiles in Boston, after supplying all the local demand in this part of the State. The pipe manufacture is a new industry in Maine, if not in New England. The clay for the pipes comes from England, from the same bed where the Glasgow manufacturers get their clay. In his early life Mr. Brooks was a teacher for many years and has long been identified with the educational interests of the town, serving many years as a member of the Board of Superintending School Committee. He received his education, after the common school course, at Hampden Academy and Maine Western Seminary, at Readfield, Maine. He has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for over thirty years consecutively, with the exception of one year.

William B. Hoxie, of South Orrington, is the son of Elihu and Mary Hoxie, of this town. They had ten children, viz: Elihu, deceased; Allen, of this town; Charles, of Orrington; Samuel and Joseph, deceased; Lucy, now Mrs. Winslow Freeman, of Bucksport; Phebe, now Mrs. Wood, of this town; Ann and Lydia, deceased; and William B. Hoxie, who was born June 16, 1831, being the youngest of this family. Mr. Hoxie has always lived on the old homestead, being engaged in farming. He married for his first wife Adeline Hartford, daughter of James Hartford, of Hampden. By her he had three children—William, Fred, and Ella, now Mrs. Smith, of Brewer. Mrs. Hoxie died in 1868, and Mr. Hoxie married for his second wife Mrs. Marietta Folsom (nee Hartford). They had no children. Mr. Hoxie lives on the farm which was first settled by his father, containing about one hundred acres, finely situated on the east bank of the Penobscot.

Captain J. A. Rider is a son of Captain Samuel Rider, and was born in 1822. He married Nancy J. Snow, daughter of Captain William and Lydia Snow. They have five children living—John H., in Boston; Lillis, now Mrs. Charles P. Rowell; Mary E., Nancy Evelyn, and Preston H. Mr. Rider has followed the sea since he was ten years old, has been master of a vessel thirty-four years, and is now master of the bark Joseph Baker, recently on a trip to South America. His son Preston H. lives at home and carries on the farm in Orrington.

S. Bolton, of Orrington, is the son of James and Mary Bolton. James Bolton was the son of Solomon Bolton, a Revolutionary soldier, who came here from Massachusetts. James Bolton had eight children who grew to maturity, five sons and three daughters: Alfred, Daniel V., Eliza V., James, Mary A., Sarah V., Solomon, and George A. Solomon Bolton was born in 1830, his father having moved here the previous year. Mr. Bolton lived a few years in Bucksport and Orono after becoming of age, but settled in Orrington about 1858. He has been a teacher for many years, having taught fifty terms of school. He has also been a follower of the sea, having been master of a vessel. Owing to disability he engaged in trade in Orrington in 1875, which business he is still following. In 1853 he married Miss Maria A. Reed, of Bucksport. They have had five children, three of whom are living, viz: Charles H., deceased; Carrie L., also deceased; Mary L., Blanche K., and Littleton R. Mr. Bolton has long been identified with the educational interests of his town, serving as a member of the School Board and Superintending School Committee. He has held the office of Chairman of the Town Board of Selectmen.

Sumner Chapin, of Orrington, was born in Southfield, Rhode Island, in 1822. He moved to Milford, Massachusetts, in 1827, and came to Orrington in 1843; was engaged in the manufacture of boats, and in later years has given some attention to agriculture. He married Mary C. Baker, a native of Orrington, in 1848. Their family consists of three children, Samuel S. (deceased), Frank L. (now in Colorado), and Alice M. Mr. Chapin was elected a member of the Legislature in 1862.

J. W. Phillips is the son of Nathan D. and Mary H. Phillips, of Orrington. His mother was a descendant of the Tainter family, whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower. Nathan D. Phillips had seven children: Clarissa A., J. Wyman, Sarah H., Nathan H., Mary S., Charles T., and Harriet E. J. Wyman Phillips was born December 22, 1827. After preparing for college at the Foxcroft Academy and the East Maine Conference Seminary at Bucksport, he entered Bowdoin College, from which he was graduated in 1858. He followed teaching and was professor of the classical department of the East Maine Conference Seminary four years; then was principal of Hampden Academy for two years. On account of failing health he went South immediately on the close of the war, where he remained about ten years, when he returned to the homestead farm, where he has since remained, teaching and farming. In 1869 he married Miss Althie A. Cross, daughter of M. T. and Rebecca Cross, of Bethel, Maine. They have three children living, having lost two, viz: Wyman and Nathan, deceased; Charles, William, and John. He was drafted under the first draft in Maine, but was rejected by reason of a diseased chest. Mr. Phillips has been a member of the School Board most of the time for twenty-five years, of which Board he is now chairman; has served as one of the Town Board of Selectmen for ten years. In 1872 he was elected to the House of Representatives and returned again to that body in 1876. He was elected to the Senate in 1877 and again in 1878, serving continually on the Committee on Educational and Legal Affairs, the last year being Chairman of the Committee on Education.

John King was born July 25, 1811; he is the son of Samuel and Mary King, of Orrington. On becoming of age he settled in Orrington, where he has always lived. He married for his first wife Mary Devereaux, who was the daughter of Joseph Devereaux, of Penobscot. They had fourteen children, of whom seven boys and five girls are now living. The names of the living are: John D., now of Brewer; George E., of Orrington; Rubie, now Mrs. Samuel Page, of Coitth; Amos K., of Brewer; Abbie J., now Mrs. Charles Devereaux, of Bucksport; Jabez W., of Ohio; Martha O., now Mrs. Amos Wight, of Augusta; Willard D., of Springfield, Illinois; Mary S., now Mrs. George Rider, of Orrington; Anna D., now Mrs. Alpheus Hanson, of Bangor; Edward E., of this town; Sumner, of Orrington. Of this large family only two of the fourteen have not lived to grow to manhood and womanhood, and all are well settled in life. Mrs. King died January 20, 1876. Mr. King married for his second wife Mrs. Betsey H. Birce, nee Miss Hoxie.

Charles A. Severance is a son of Benjamin Severance, of Orrington, who was born in this town. He was in the War of 1812 at the battle of Hampden. The children were: Otis, Sally, William, George, Keziah, Albert, Charles, Cyrus, Mary, Rossetta, Erastus, Harvey, and Edwin. Mr. Severance died in Orrington; was one of the early settlers of the town. Charles Severance was born April 27, 1831, in Orrington. His occupation was brick mason until five years ago, when he engaged in mercantile business, and is also Postmaster; has been Selectman four years. He married Lydia B. Bowden, daughter of Jeremiah and Hannah Bowden, of Orrington, who were early settlers of the town. By this union two children were born—Charles M., with his father in the store; Rosa J., resides with her parents.

Elbridge Ware, deceased husband of Adaline Ware, was born in Orrington, Penobscot county, and was a son of Captain Warren Ware, who was one of the earliest settlers of the place; was captain of militia; was engaged in the lumber mills and tannery business for many years, and was one of the prominent men in the town. He married Lucy Bowden, of Brewer, and raised eight children—Priscilla, Abigail, Warren, Elbridge, Eliza, Almatia, Charlissa, Julia. He died in Orrington in 1870. He married Adaline Copeland, of Holden, by whom five children were born—Annette, Jonas, Elber, Charles, and Isabel.

Moses Rogers came to Orrington in 1780, a native of Eastham, Massachusetts. His wife was Thankful Freeman. Moses Rogers had three sons and three daughters, viz: J. H. Rogers, now first lieutenant in the United States Revenue Marine Service, stationed in Boston Harbor; J. Skinner Rogers, President Michigan Military Academy, Orchard Lake, Michigan; Sidney Rogers, Orrington; Belle S. (Wynn), Milford, Massachusetts; Flora F. and Susie M., of Orrington. J. H. Rogers served as private in Second Maine Infantry from April 18, 1861, till October 18, 1862, and was then appointed Master's Mate in the navy, and served until the close of the war. He was promoted to Master for gallantry displayed at Mobile Bay. J. Sumner Rogers served as private in the Second Maine Infantry from April 18, 1861, till July 18, 1863, and was appointed second lieutenant in the Thirty-first Maine in October, 1864; was promoted to Captain and appointed Major by brevet for meritorious services. He was mustered out in July, 1865; appointed second lieutenant in the United States army October 1, 1867, and resigned after serving ten years. In 1877 he organized the Michigan Military Academy, and is now President of that institution.

Thomas B. George was born in Wrentham, Massachusetts, January 29, 1819. Emigrated to Maine in 1830 with his father, Timothy George, who settled in Orrington. Timothy George married Betsey Capron, of Massachusetts, and had a family of nine children: Warren, Fanny, Charlotte, Julia, Seth, Thomas, Maria, William, and Ellen; five of whom are living. He died July 13, 1854. Thomas B. George married Polly Rogers, of Orrington, and had four children: Thomas H., Maria T., Charles W., and Mary C. Thomas H. is dead. His first wife died October 6, 1862, and he was again married to Susan E. Farrington, of Holden, who died July 25, 1877.

James Freeman, born in Orrington June 12, 1794, is a son of James Freeman, Sr., who came to Orrington with his father, Samuel, while a young man. He died in Orrington at seventy-nine years of age; married Mary Freeman, of Orrington, by whom seven children were born: Joseph, James, Mercy, Olive, Mary A., Reuben, and Smith. James, the only representative of the above family, is still living at the age of eighty-seven. He was in the War of 1812, at the battle of Hampden; has been Justice of the Peace forty years, and has held other town offices about twenty years; has held all the prominent township offices, and was captain of militia. He married for his first wife Azubah Hopkins, daughter of Barzilla Hopkins, of Orrington, and had the following children: Charles W., James W., Elisha, and Clorinda. His first wife died in 1851, and he was again married to Miss A. Norton, of Bangor, who died in 1862. James W. died of sickness in New Orleans in the late war.

Joseph King was born in Orrington April 4, 1808; he is a son of Samuel King, who emigrated from England and settled in Orrington in that year. He was one of the early settlers of the town, and did much in clearing the lands. In early life he engaged in sail-making; was also a seafaring man; was lost at sea. He married Mary Rodney, of New York City, and had five children, viz: Eliza (deceased), Jane, Joseph, Charlotte, John. Joseph King in early life lived with Ephraim Goodale, of Orrington, until he was twenty-one, and since that time has been engaged in lumbering and farming. He built a mill in Hermon; has been a member of the Methodist church fifty years; married Susan Hurlty, daughter of Frederick Hurlty, of Machias, Maine. By this union eleven children were born : Frederick, Elizabeth, Laura L., Gershom and Melville (dead), Ada, Joseph, Jennie, Laura L., Arthur W., and Joseph M.

Augustus Chapin was born in Orrington August 11, 1822; he is a son of Josiah Chapin, who was one of the earliest settlers of the township, emigrating from Milford, Massachusetts, in 1814. Josiah Chapin was a shoemaker and farmer. He was in the War of 1812 as captain; was at the battle of Hampden. He was a Methodist and a class-leader in that church; was Selectman, and held other minor town offices; died at seventy-two years of age. He married Mary Willard, of Mendon, Massachusetts, and had seven children, six of whom grew up to adults, viz: William, Mary, Melissa, Josiah, John W. (deceased), Lorenzo, and Augustus. Augustus Chapin has always been engaged in farming and lumbering. December 19, 1849, he married Ann T. Hincks, daughter of Captain Elisha and Betsey Hincks, by whom he has five children, viz: Nellie E., Albert L. (deceased), Arthur, Charlie E., and Annie L.

PASSADUMKEAG.

Pushing now again to the newer towns up the Penobscot, we pause at the tract bearing the singular name of Passadumkeag, a name derived originally from the fine stream of that designation, which enters the river within its limits. The word itself, in the Tarratine or Penobscot tongue, signifies "quick water," though the same word in another Indian dialect is said to signify "inhabitant of the valley." The town is not now a large one, though of respectable size; and it was larger by one-third from its incorporation New Year's Day, 1835, until 1842, when about that share of its territory and inhabitants was set off to its eastern neighbor, Lowell. At present it has scarcely more than twenty square miles. Its north line is three and one-fourth miles long; its east line, which is broken into two sections about midway of its length by a slight divergence more nearly to the southward, is five and three-fourths miles long; the south line three and a half; and the course of the Penobscot along the west front is about six miles. The south line is not quite parallel with the north; but converges a very little from east to west, so that the western length of the town is a trifle less than the extreme length. The greatest breadth of the town is measured by the north line; but it is closely approached by the width from the innermost part of the bend below the station straight to the east line. The shortest breadth is two and a half miles, from the head of the little bay on the Penobscot, into which the Beaver Brook enters, in the northwest part of the town, to near the middle of the north section of the east line.

Passadumkeag is bounded on the north by Enfield, the east by Lowell, south by Greenbush, and west by the Penobscot, which lies between it and Edinburg. Many islands are in the river on this front; as the Long, Marsh, Nichola and Hog Islands, all within a mile below the mouth of Beaver Brook; and the Pinaes, Craig, Frances Lazy, Joe Merry, and Murphy Islands, between the mouth of the Passadumkeag and the southwest corner of the town.

The stream just named is the principal and, with unimportant exceptions, the only water of the town. The Cold Stream, however, is a respectable brook, the outlet of the remarkable chain of Cold Stream Ponds, and flowing itself directly from the large Cold Stream Pond, which occupies the whole eastern part of Enfield. The outlet comes down almost in the exact northeast corner of Passadumkeag, and flows near the east line of the town about three miles to the Passadumkeag Stream. A little more than half-way down from its point of entrance it receives the waters of the Little Cold Stream from Enfield.

The Passadumkeag has its sources in lakes and springs far in the interior, in and near the south border of Lee; flows south and southwest through Township No. 3, Lakeville Plantation, a corner of Hancock county, the Allen Tract, and Township No. 2, through Saponic Lake into Burlington, the southeast angle of Lowell into Township No. 1, and up into Lowell again. It crosses the southwest angle of that town about half a mile from the corner, and enters Passadumkeag nearly one and a half miles above its south line. A small fraction of a mile further it receives the Sam Ayres Brook from the northeast corner of Greenbush, and flows northwest till it takes in the Cold Stream, when it makes more nearly westward about two and a half miles, and joins the Penobscot at the station, something less than half-way down the west side of the town. The whole course of the Passadumkeag in this town is less than four miles.

Across the northwest angle of the town, in a south course, flows the Beaver Brook from Enfield, receiving the Bear Brook half a mile beyond the town line, and running one and one-fourth miles to a cove or little bay at Long Island, where it empties into the Penobscot.

The European & North American Railroad has a little more than six miles of track in this town, but only one station, which is about half-way up, and at the mouth of the stream whose name it shares with the town. Passadumkeag Station is beginning to flourish; has an extensive steam saw-, shingle-, and stave-mill, with cooper and blacksmith's shops, hotel, three general stores, public school-house, etc. The Boom House is a little way out, on the road up the Stream. The river road crosses the Passadumkeag by a bridge at the village. School No. 1 is a little less than two miles below, and School No. 3 less than one and a half miles above the village.

School No. 4 is in the southwest part of the town, on another north and south road which enters half a mile from the northwest corner, from Enfield village, and divides into two branches soon after crossing the line, one of which goes southwest to the Station and the other southerly across the Passadumkeag a fourth of a mile below the mouth of the Cold Stream, and on through a tolerably dense settlement below School No. 4 out of the town. A road from the Station east two miles along the north bank of the Stream, joining the main road a little north of the bridge, completes the short list of important highways in the town. There is no east and west road as yet entirely across the town, unless it has been quite recently cut through.

The surface of this town is quite varied, and it possesses a fertile and productive soil. Excellent mill-privileges exist, furnishing fine facilities for lumbering, which has been the principal industry of the town. The village has a particularly good location.

One of the most interesting relics of antiquity to be found in the county remains upon the head of Nicolar's Island, in the shape of slight earthworks, which were identified by Judge Godfrey some years ago, with every appearance of probability, as marking the site of the French fort erected in the Penobscot Valley about 1700, and which was destroyed by Westbrook's expedition in 1723.

The original settlers of Passadumkeag were Messrs. Enoch and Joshua Ayers, in 1813. Then came, within the next few years, Tristram F. Jordan, James Sanders, Isaac P. and Aaron Haynes, Joshua Hathaway, James Comings and Benjamin his son, Peter Sibley and sons, Elijah P. Evans, Elijah Tourtillott, and Mrs. Ann Dennis, the last with a large family of boys. But the Comingses, the Ayreses, Tourtillott, and Evans, are said to complete the entire roll of settlers in 1819. These all subsequently left, but their places were taken by others.

In 1840 Passadumkeag had a population of 394; in 1850, 295; in 1860, 360, and in 1870, 243. Its polls in 1870 numbered 73; its estates, $30,738.

Passadumkeag has generally been classed with ten other towns and plantations, for representation in the State Legislature. The Representatives from its own borders have been Tristram F. Jordan, Isaac P. and Aaron Haynes, James B. Howland, and James M. Comstock.

The town has a Congregational church, whose pulpit is just now vacant. There are four school-houses. A steam-mill, turning out boards, shingles, and staves, is operated by B. Plummer & Son; there is one manufacturer of cooperage and one blacksmith and carriage-maker, and three general stores. The Exchange Hotel is kept by H. W. Chapman.

The principal officers of the town in 1881 were the following: Oliver Leonard, Treasurer; Charles L. Hathaway, Collector; J. W. Hathaway, D. B. Bean, A. F. Haynes, Constables; A. F. Haynes, O. O. Stewart, O. W. Bates, School Committee; A. Haynes and C. L. Hathaway (quorum), and E. G. Haynes (trial), Justices.

The following biographical notice of a native of Passadumkeag, who figured honorably in the late war, is from the State Military Reports:

CAPTAIN SAMUEL J. OAKES was born at Passadumkeag, in September, 1833. In August, 1861, whilst in trade in Oldtown, where he resided, actuated by a sense of duty to his country, he closed up his business and enlisted as a private in the Eighteenth Regiment Infantry, and was soon afterwards promoted to Second Lieutenant. When the organization of the regiment was changed to the First Heavy Artillery, he was further promoted to be First Lieutenant, and participated in all the sanguinary battles in which his regiment was engaged, including those of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, and Hatcher's Run. While in front of Petersburg he was promoted Captain and continued in command of his company until March 25th, 1865, when he was killed by a shot from the enemy. Captain Oakes was a good citizen, a true patriot, a devoted Christian, and a brave soldier, and died deeply lamented not only by his family but by all his comrades and a large circle of friends.

Charles L. Hathaway, of Passadumkeag, is a son of Joshua Hathaway, who was born in the town of Sutton, county of Worcester, Massachusetts, in the year 1782. He moved to what is now Brewer, then a part of Hancock county, in 1803. In 1823 he moved to Passadumkeag, and was the first settler where the village now is. He married Sarah P. Brown, who was born in 1789 and died in 1877. Their children now living are Justus and John H., both living in Medway, Maine; Mrs. J. T. Carr, of Carroll; Mrs. J. M. Lombard, of Oldtown, and Joshua W. and Charles L., of Passadumkeag. In the War of 1812, when the British were advancing up the Penobscot, Mr. Hathaway rode all night through what is now Eddington and Bradley, to warn out all able-bodied men to repel the advance of the British, and afterwards went to Eastport as wagoner or baggage-master. He was an earnest friend of education, and obtained by hard study, by the light from pitch-pine knots, a superior education for those times. He followed trading for a long time, as well as lumbering and farming. For many years he was a Justice of the Peace. He died in Passadumkeag in 1857. Charles L. Hathaway married Harriet E. Warren, daughter of Phineas K. Warren, of Eddington, May 30, 1863. They have two children, Mary J. and Marcia H. Mr. Hathaway has long held prominent positions in town affairs, having held all, or about all, of the town offices at different times, also Justice of the Peace. He follows the business of farming, lumbering, and trading.

Elbridge G. Haynes, of Passadumkeag, is a son of David W. and Hannah Haynes (nee Hannah Piper). David W. Haynes was a native of Sudbury, Massachusetts, who came to Dresden from Massachusetts. From Dresden he moved to Bangor, where he was engaged in mill business for many years, and moved to Passadumkeag when the country was very new. He moved afterwards to Edinburg; he died in Passadumkeag in 1846. David and Hannah Haynes had eight children, viz: David, Isaac P., Alvin, Aaron, Lucy, Louisa, Elmira, and Elbridge. Of these only three are living, viz: Aaron, Louisa, and Elbridge. Elbridge G., the youngest of this family, was born in Bangor October 3, 1810. He first settled in Edinburg, where he lived until 1852, being engaged in farming and lumbering. In 1852 he moved across the river to Passadumkeag, where he has since resided. He married Ruth R. Haynes, of Dresden. They have eight children—Horace, Ira F., Aaron J., Luther, Elbridge G., Joseph R., William M., and Evelyn L. S. He is now engaged in farming with his son, Joseph R. Mr. Haynes has held prominent town office for several years.

One of the oldest settlers in Edinburg, across the river from Passadumkeag, was David W. Haynes, for sketch of whose life see that of E. G. Haynes above. Aaron Haynes was born March 9, 1805. He first settled in Edinburg, where he lived a few years, and then moved to Passadumkeag, where he has since lived. He has been a farmer and tavern keeper. For many years he was Deputy Sheriff of this county. He married Mary Haynes, a cousin. They had nine children, and lost them all. Mr. Haynes now lives with his adopted son, Julius B. Potter, station agent at Passadumkeag.

Horace Plummer is a son of Bidfield and Weltha Plummer, of West Winterport, Maine. He was born November 11, 1846. His father, Bidfield Plummer, had been engaged in farming, lumbering, and carpentering, etc. His parents here had eight children, of whom five are now living, viz: Amos W., now in Bangor, David S., now in Boston, Louise L., and Albert C. Mr. and Mrs. Plummer are now living in West Winterport. Horace Plummer, on becoming of age, engaged in merchandising in connection with the milling business in Winterport, where he did business six years. In 1873 he came to Passadumkeag, and with his father bought an interest in the mill here. In 1874 these mills were burned, and Mr. Plummer and Horace bought out the interest of the other parties and rebuilt the mills. They manufacture lumber of all kinds, employing about thirty-five men. They run the mill about nine months in a year, seven of them night and day. They manufacture about one million feet of long lumber, two million of shingles, three million staves, fifty thousand pair dressed heading, and one hundred thousand lath. Horace Plummer married Julia R. Fisher, daughter of Henry and Rebecca Fisher, of West Winterport. They have one daughter, Georgie B.

Moses Ingalls, of Passadumkeag, is a son of Moses Ingalls, who came to Olamon, in the town of Greenbush, from what is now Amherst, Maine. He was a native of Bethel, Maine. His father, Samuel Ingalls, was of Scotch descent, and lived and died in Bethel. Moses Ingalls, Sr., married Abigail Stiles, of Waterford. They had nine children, viz: Betsy, Susan, Polly, deceased; Nathan, of Woodville, Maine; Aaron, of Bangor; Moses; Abbie, now Mrs. Daniel Orcutt, of Fort Fairfield, Maine; Nancy, now Mrs. Austin, of Milford; and Enoch L., of Minnesota. Mr. Ingalls died in 1864. Moses Ingalls, Jr., was born November 27, 1816, in Amherst, Maine. He first settled in Passadumkeag, where he now lives. He married Eleanor Angove for his first wife, by whom he had five children, viz: Frank, of Bangor; Cyrus, deceased; Nancy, deceased; Emma, wife of George Johnston, of Hancock, Minnesota; and Clara, deceased. Mrs. Ingalls died in 1866. Mr. Ingalls married for his second wife Miss Martha Scott, of Greenbush. Mr. Ingalls has held most of the town offices in his town from time to time.

E. P. Tibbitts, of Passadumkeag, is a son of Elisha M. Tibbitts, of Kenduskeag, Maine. Elisha M. Tibbitts married Mary Jane Matthews, daughter of John Matthews, of Anson. They had eight children, viz: Susan, wife of Oliver A. Lunt, of San Francisco, California; Priscilla, wife of Fred Wicker, of Melrose, California; George, now in Pioneer City, Montana; Elisha, deceased; and Edward P. They lost three in early life. Mr. Tibbitts died in 1848. Mrs. Tibbitts survives him. Edward P. was born December 25, 1845, in Kenduskeag, and lived there until 1868, when he moved to Passadumkeag, where he now lives, two miles from Passadumkeag village. He married Eleanor Frances Jelleison, of Greenbush. They have four children—George O., Calvin C., Edith May, and Alice Mertie. Mr. Tibbitts is now one of the Selectmen.

D. B. Bean, of Enfield, was born May 4, 1842. His father, Watson D. Bean, was a native of China, Maine. His grandfather's name was Daniel. Watson D. Bean married Louisa H. Irish, of Vassalboro. They had six children, viz: D. B.; Timothy W., deceased; Daniel B., deceased; David A., deceased; Mary A., wife of Joseph F. St. Clair, of Bangor; Watson D., Jr., deceased. D. B. Bean, on arriving of age, enlisted in the army and was three years in the civil war. On returning from the war he worked on the river and in the woods two years, then learned the blacksmith's trade, at which he has since worked. He settled in Passadumkeag in 1860, where he has since lived. He married Lydia Batchelder, of Passadumkeag. They have four children, viz: E. F. Stanton, Morris D., Ethel May, and Nina Louisa. Mr. Bean has been Constable for ten years in this town.

PATTEN.

Continuing up the valley of the Penobscot and up the East Branch, and out upon one of its little tributaries just below the inflow of the Seboois, and we are at Patten, seventy-four miles from Bangor, and the northernmost town in the county, save only Mt. Chase. This town has that town on the north, Crystal Plantation, Aroostook county, on the east, Stacyville Plantation, Penobscot county, on the south, and Township No. 3, in the seventh Range, on the west. Hersey town, in Aroostook county, corners with Patten on the northeast, and Sherman, in the same county, corners with it on the southeast. It was itself formerly Township No. 4, in the Sixth Range, and comes pretty near being an even thirty-six-mile township. Its west line is the regulation six miles in length, but by some defect of surveys the east side of the town is a trifle less wide, and the boundary that way has only a length of a little more than five and three-quarter miles, although broken five miles from the northeast corner, and running off southwesterly to a rather sharp angle a little less than half a mile east of its own meridian. This widens the extreme south edge of the town to a trifle more than six miles, its width at the north line being but five and two-third miles, and the same all the way down to the break in the east boundary. The strip lost to Patten by the pushing of this line westward does not, however, cost it any large area—the town has still between thirty-four and thirty-five square miles of surface.

Patten has no large ponds or lakes, although there is one of the former, of respectable size, measuring about half a mile in greatest diameter each way, in the north central part of the west side of the town. From the northwest a small affluent, rising in the northeast of Township 4, runs into one of the small bays of the pond. Similarly, from the southwest, a tributary of somewhat more than a mile's length, rising on the west line of the town, flows into the pond. Into a little bay on the northeast also runs a small stream from the north. From the southwest cove runs one of the headwaters of the Molunkus Stream. It has a curvilinear course of about four and one-quarter miles across the rest of the town in a general east direction to Patten village, just outside of which it joins the Fish Stream. This rises in the southwestern part of Mt. Chase, crosses the Patten line about a mile from the northwest corner, and runs thence southeast and east across the town six and one-half miles to the east line, when it passes into Aroostook. It also passes through Patten village half a mile or more from the line, and there furnishes valuable power to mills and factories. Within about a mile of the town it receives two small tributaries from the northward, their mouths being only about one-quarter of a mile apart. Through the north part of Patten village another affluent flows from the northward, making a pond on the way near the Congregational church, where it divides for a short distance into two streams, the reunited brook flowing on to a junction with the Fish Stream on the east side of the village. North and south of Patten post-office, within two miles each way, are the head-streams of other waters that belong to Aroostook county. In the south part of the town, also, below the southern tributary from the pond to the Fish Stream, are eight or ten brooks and headwaters of the Salmon Stream and other brooks that run to the southward. It is a very well-watered town.

Patten village is a fine little place. It consists mainly of one pretty long street, with two or three cross and branch streets built up a little distance each way. It has a post-office, Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist churches, a public school-house and an academy building, some half-dozen stores, and several mills and factories. It is as yet the only village or post-office in the town.

Through Patten village passes, on a line nearly parallel with the east boundary of the town, and generally little more than half a mile from it, one of the roads to Houlton. Most of the settlement of the town is on this highway. Many are settled, however, on a westerly road which branches off from it about a mile and a half from the south line and runs some four miles into the interior, but stops before reaching the west line of the town. Half a mile before its end a northerly road connects it with the Waters road, so called from its running through the Waters settlement. It leaves the main north and south road at the north part of Patten village, and runs straight out to the neighborhood of the pond, where it stops. There is no road running entirely across the town, and but the one highway entirely traversing it the other way. Nearly one and a half miles west of Patten village a road strikes off from the most northerly country road, and runs northwest across Mount Chase, and across the wilderness to the Allaguash country. From the village also run roads east and southeast into Crystal Plantation, also one a mile north of Patten from School No. 3, above which a little way another country road runs off for a mile west.

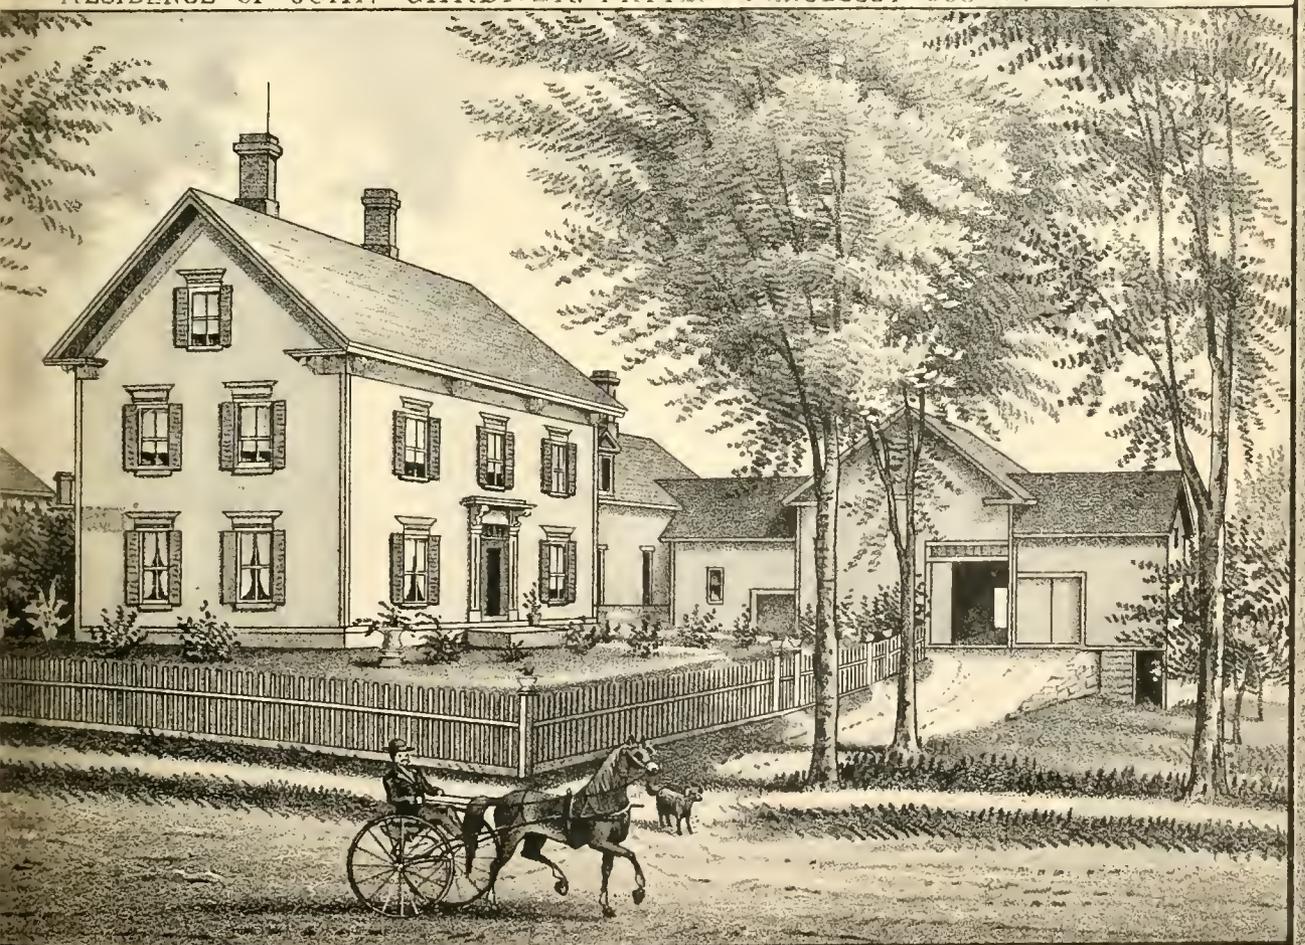

Our inquiries of the present residents of Patten, for information concerning its history, have failed to elicit any response, and the facts obtained elsewhere are rather meagre. The tract was originally known, as it still stands in the surveys, as Township No. 4, in the Sixth Range. Civilized settlement got in here about the year 1828; but it remained Township No. 4 until 1841, when the population justified incorporation as a town. April 16th of that year it was accordingly erected into such a municipality, by the name it now bears. In 1850 it had 470 inhabitants, 639 in 1860, 704 in 1870, and 716 in 1880. Its population, as may thus be seen, has not decreased in any decade of its existence, and it is a fairly populous and prosperous tract for a far northern town. Its polls in 1860 numbered 142, 153 in 1870, and 193 in 1880. The valuation of estates in these several years was $126,711, $191,342, and $198,358.

John Gardner

RESIDENCE OF JOHN GARDNER, PATTEN. PENOBSCOT COUNTY MAINE.

RESIDENCE OF JOHN BENJAMIN, M. D., CARMEL, PENOBSCOT CO., MAINE.

The same year the town was incorporated, and a little before its incorporation,—that is, on the 1st of March, 1841,—the Congregational church of Patten was organized. It has been maintained for more than forty years, and is now under the pastoral care of Rev. Charles N. Sinnett. There are also Methodist and Baptist churches in the town, the former under the pastorate of Rev. F. H. Osgood, the latter of Rev. E. A. VanKleeck.

The Patten Academy was incorporated in 1846, and its building still stands in the village, as before noted. It has not been constantly kept up: but the town has a sufficiency of good primary public schools.

The business of the town is mainly agricultural, and there are fine farms and farming lands in this beautiful valley. Many of the fairs of the North Penobscot and Aroostook Agricultural Society have been held here, of which further notice may be found in our chapter on the societies and fairs. The farmers, as well as manufacturers, in this region are intelligent and enterprising, and some of these annual industrial reunions have been quite notable.

The manufactures in Patten of late have comprised one saw-mill, one carding- and grist-mill, one manufactory of furniture, one of sash, doors, and blinds, one of harness, one of boots and shoes, and one of tinware. There are two blacksmith shops and one wheelwright, one milliner, and five general stores; also three resident physicians, one lawyer, and one notary. There is one hotel—the Patten House.

The only society of importance exclusively in the town, except the churches, is Katahdin Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons.

The town officers for 1881 were: I. D. Fish, Samuel Waters, L. B. Rogers, Selectmen; Laroy Miles, Town Clerk; I. D. Fish, Treasurer; Charles R. Brown, Constable; Charles D. Fish, George F. Burleigh, W. P. Leslie, School Committee; S. E. Benjamin, James B. Leslie (Quorum), Daniel Scribner, Horace Miles, Charles W. Wescott (Trial), Ira B. Gardiner (Dedimus), Justices. Mr. C. Bradford is Postmaster.

A WAR BIOGRAPHY.

[From the Reports of the Adjutant General of the State for the war period.]

LIEUTENANT EDWIN S. ROGERS.—Edwin Searle Rogers was born in Patten January 31, 1843, and was a student at Bowdoin College in the class of 1865. While in his junior year, regarding it to be his duty to enter the United States service, he left college in February and returned to Patten, where he enlisted about thirty men, and was thereupon commissioned second lieutenant of Company E, Thirty-first Regiment, Maine Volunteers, and was mustered into the United States service in March, 1864, at Augusta. In the absence of the superior officers he took and held command of the company until within a few days of his capture and death. Lieutenant Rogers was in the battle of the Wilderness and shared in the dangers of the eight days' fighting and fatiguing marches previous to the battle of Spottsylvania, in which he also participated. He was again with his regiment in the subsequent actions and marches until the battle of Cold Harbor, where, on the 7th of June, 1864, while in command of a picket line, he was struck by a rifle-ball, which passed through his lungs. He was then taken prisoner and left by the rebels in a tent on their way to Richmond, where, it is conjectured, he died on the same day. The deceased was a young man of much promise, genial in society and camp and brave on the field, thus winning the affection of his comrades and the approbation of his superior officers.

Lieutenant Rogers is also suitably noticed in the Bowdoin College Roll of Honor.

OTHER BIOGRAPHIES.

Colonel Ira B. Gardner, of Patten, a son of Hon. John Gardner, was born January 10, 1843. He was educated at the Patten Academy, and worked in his father's store and mill when not in school. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he enlisted, November 28, 1861, when eighteen years old. In April, 1862, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant, and First Lieutenant in June of the same year. He was advanced to Captain of Company I, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, in December of the same year. He commanded the company at the battle of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, August 5, 1862, in which engagement he lost nineteen killed and wounded out of fifty-four of his company. For his gallant conduct during this battle he was publicly complimented and brevetted Major. At the close of that engagement he was detailed on the staff of General H. E. Paine, Brigadier Commanding, serving in that capacity for several months. He was with the regiment in all its important engagements, and commanded it for two weeks during the memorable siege of Port Hudson. In the battle of Winchester, Virginia, he lost his right arm, and was brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel for meritorious conduct. He remained with the regiment till the close of its term of service, and was mustered out with it. Since leaving the United States service he has been engaged in the mercantile and lumber business in Patten; also in the manufacture of potato starch. He married Helen M. Darling, daughter of Horatio N. and Harriet D. Darling, of Patten. They have four children—Albert P., Raymond D., Ida M., and Herbert N. Colonel Gardner has served as Deputy Sheriff eight years, also as Justice of the Peace. He is well known as a brave soldier and an honorable citizen.

Moses Twitchell, of New Portland, Maine, had four sons—James, William, Rufus, and Moses. James Twitchell married Polly Haskell, of New Gloucester. They lived the greater part of their lives in New Portland, and had eight children, of whom only three are living, Harriet, wife of William Greenleaf, of New Vineyard, Maine; Rubie, wife of Simeon Hanson, of New Portland, and J. H., the subject of this sketch. The names of the deceased were Mary, Adeline, Henry, Lucinda, and Sally. Mr. Twitchell died in 1840; his wife died the previous year. John H. Twitchell was born June 11, 1820, and spent his boyhood on a farm. On becoming of age he settled where he now lives in Patten. He married Miss Matilda N. Clark, daughter of Isaac and Mary Clark, of New Brunswick. They had six children—Ruby, wife of Orlando Patterson, of Stacyville, Maine; Mary, wife of Louis Ingersoll, of Patten; Luella, now in Lewiston; Henry, deceased; Frederick, now of Patten; and Elmer, at home. Mr. Twitchell has a good farm north of Patten village about one and a half miles.

B. T. Elwell, of Patten, came from Belfast, Maine, in 1862. He is a son of George Washington Elwell, of Islesboro. G. Elwell married Abigail Pendleton, and had six children—Abigail, George Washington (deceased), William T. (deceased), Harriet (deceased), Maria A., and Benjamin T. He was a sea captain, and lost his life at sea about 1812. Mrs. Elwell died in October, 1860. Benjamin T. Elwell was born July 18, 1812. He spent some of his early life on the water, and in 1812 he bought a vessel and commanded it himself. He followed the sea a year or so; then he sold out and bought a farm in Montville, Maine. In 1842 he married Mrs. Betsey Morse, whose maiden name was Poor. She died in 1848, and Mr. E. married for his second wife Miss Martha Wilson, with whom he is now living about three miles from Patten Village. He lived five years in Mt. Chase, where he was a Selectman four years.

John R. Hammond, who was born May 18, 1822, in the town of Paris, Oxford county, Maine, is a son of Joseph and Lydia Hammond (nee Lydia Parsons), who had sixteen children, of whom about a dozen grew to man and womanhood. Joseph Hammond died about eighteen years ago, and Mrs. Hammond soon followed. John R. Hammond first settled in Crystal, Aroostook county, where he lived about ten years, and there married Jeanette A. Cushman. In 1855 he moved to Patten and settled where he now lives. He has a fine farm and a very good set of farm buildings, and owns several hundred acres of land. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond have had seven children: Susan M., deceased; Dora A., wife of L. M. Grant, of Patten; Adna O., deceased; Florence M., wife of George T. Merrill, of Patten; Eda, now at home.

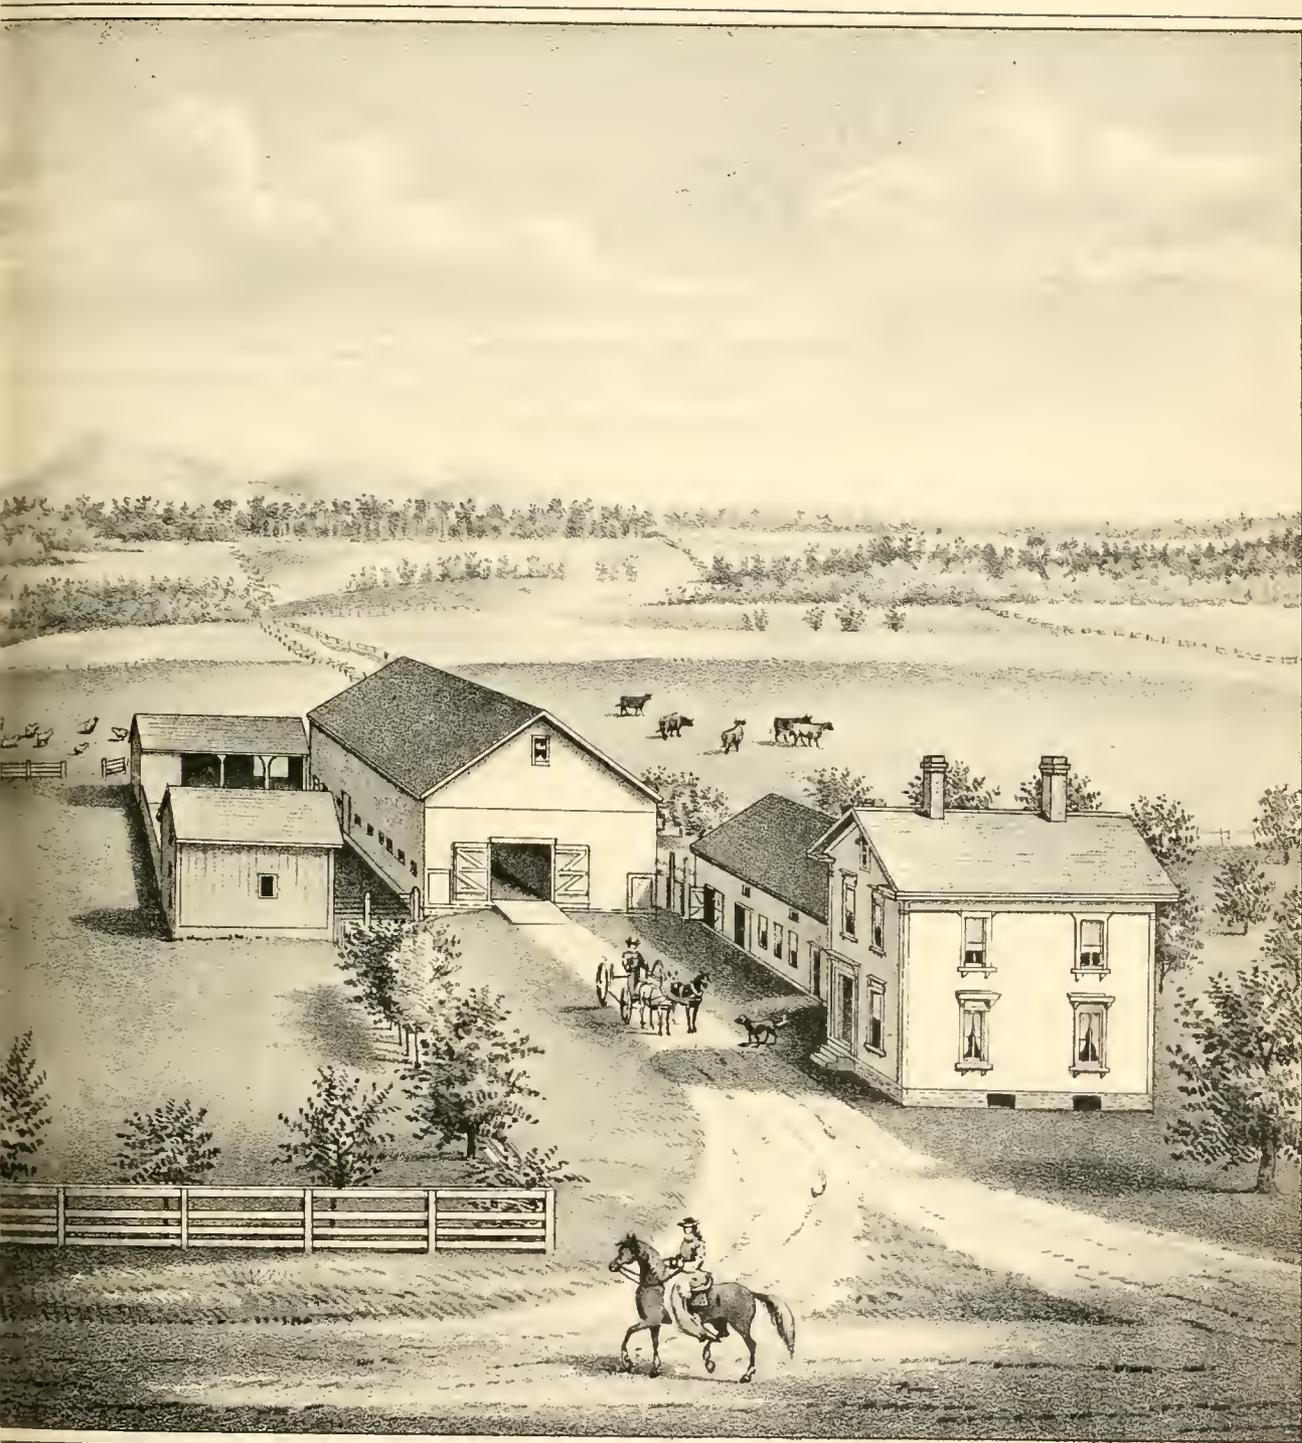

One of the early settlers and prominent men of Patten is Mr. E. G. Stetson, who came here in March, 1841, a month before the town was incorporated. He is a son of Abel Stetson, of Sumner, Oxford county, Maine. His grandfather, Hezekiah Stetson, was a native of Massachusetts, who came into the Province of Maine soon after the Revolutionary War. Elbridge Gerry Stetson was born June 15, 1811. He lived two years in Paris, Maine, ere coming to Patten after his marriage. In 1841 he built a store here, and a house the same year. He engaged in trade with Mr. Gardner six years, when he closed the partnership and continued in trade alone some six or seven years, when he sold out his goods, since which he has been engaged in farming. He married Electa Walker, of Paris. They have had two children, viz: William H., deceased, and Mary A., wife of Calvin Bradford, of Patton. Mr. Stetson has often held prominent town office. Mrs. Stetson died in 1873.

Mr. Joseph Frye, but recently deceased, was born in Vermont. His father's name was Timothy H. Frye, who had five children, viz: Timothy H., Jr., Jacob, Abiah H., Rachel, deceased, and Jerome, of Patten. Jacob Frye came to Patten from Wilton, Maine, in 1840, as a peddler, and was afterwards engaged in the hotel business. He built a saw-mill here and manufactured lumber at one time. He established the cheese factory in Patten. After leaving the hotel he built a machine shop with Mr. Darling, and was for some time engaged in that. The hotel coming back on his hands, he sold out his interest in the shop and again went into the hotel. He died very suddenly August 13, 1881. He married for his first wife Paulina Pettigrew, by whom he had six children, all of whom are dead. Mrs. Frye died in 1873, and Mr. Frye married again, a Mrs. Burleigh, who is still living in Patten.

William B. Mitchell, of Patten, is a grandson of John Mitchell, who came to New Hampshire when a young man. He had five sons: Daniel, Samuel, Andrew, John, and Joseph. Joseph Mitchell, the youngest son, married Mercy Buzzell. They lived in Cambridge, Maine, and had nine children: Daniel, now of Cambridge; Nathaniel, of Harmony; John, deceased; Jonathan, of Cambridge; Joseph, of Union Village, New Hampshire; Jacob, of Union Village, New Hampshire; William B.; Benjamin W., of Cambridge, and Alva W., of Cambridge. Joseph Mitchell died August 17, 1880. Mrs. Mitchell is living, now eighty-six years old. William B. Mitchell was born in Norway, Maine, January 21, 1830, and settled in Patten when eighteen years of age. He married Miss Joan F. Carpenter, daughter of John and Joan Carpenter, of Patten. They have five children: Jefferson C., of this town; Joseph; Rice C.; Mary A., and Fred.

George F. Weeks, of Patten, is a son of Francis and Hannah C. Weeks, who came from China, Weeks Mills, into Penobscot county in 1840. He first settled in Mount Chase, where he lived thirty-eight years, when he moved into Patten, where he lived the remainder of his life. He married Hannah Eaton, of New Hampshire. They had eleven children, eight boys and two girls, of whom only four are now living, viz: Mrs. Webster, of Orono, Cordelia by name; Solomon S., now in California; M. Paulina, now Mrs. Clark, of Santa Rosa, California, and George F., of this town. Mr. Weeks died in August, 1881. Mrs. Weeks died in 1870. George F. Weeks was born December 6, 1846, in Mount Chase. He went into the army in 1861, and remained through the war; was in Company B, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteers. At the close of the war he went home to Mount Chase and lived two years, when he moved to Patten, where he has since lived. He married Miss Lucetta P. Knowles, of Rockabema. They have four children: Alice L., Gracie A., Arletta, and Emma A.

RESIDENCE OF JOHN R. HAMMOND, PATTEN, PENOBSCOT COUNTY, ME.

John R. Hammond.

One of the early settlers, who came to Patten as early as 1839, is Mr. S. Waters, who came from Palermo, Waldo county. He is a son of William and Mary Waters (nee Mary Rice). They had twelve children, of whom Samuel is the third. He was born February 17, 1815, in the town of Newcastle, Maine. On becoming of age he came to Patten and settled on the land where he now lives, about two miles west from the village. He married Helen Hayden, daughter of Hiram and Elizabeth Hayden, of Bangor. They have one daughter, Emily, now at home. William Waters died in 1864, and Mrs. Waters some years after.

Mr. James E. Parker, of Patten, was born in Rome, Kennebec county, Maine, April 1, 1838. His father, Amasa Parker, married Rosanna Ellis, a daughter of Rev. Ivory Ellis. They had seven children, viz: Benjamin F., now deceased; James E.; Ellen, wife of E. McKechnie, of Sangerville, Maine; John, deceased; Leroy, deceased; Ivory, deceased; Abbie, deceased; all the last named died of the diphtheria in 1862. Amasa Parker died August 16, 1867. Mrs. Parker is now living with James E., in Patten. James E. Parker was raised on the farm. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Eighth Maine Volunteers, Company B. He remained with his regiment two years, until discharged for disability. After his return he engaged in farming in Patten, on the old homestead where his father settled in 1840. His father was one of the pioneer settlers and cleared up the farm from the standing trees. James E. Parker married Abigail Sargent, daughter of Lewis Sargent, of Mount Chase. They have had two children, one of whom, Hattie by name, recently died of diphtheria. The other is named Edroy.

Ira D. Fish, who came to Prentiss from Ashland, Aroostook county, Maine, is a son of Hon. Ira and Abra Fish, of Milton, New Hampshire. They came from New Hampshire to Lincoln in 1826 or 1827, and were among the first settlers in Lincoln. Mr. Fish built the first saw-mill in Lincoln, in company with a Mr. Wendell and Mr. Varney. He lived there until he came to Patten, in 1847. On coming to Patten he built the first mills here, before moving his family here, and manufactured lumber for a number of years. After selling his mills here he engaged in farming. He was also engaged in lumbering in connection with his mill and farm business. He was at one time a Representative in the Legislature and also a State Senator. He died in Patten, May 24, 1872. Mrs. Fish died in February, 1879. To this couple were born three children: Ira D.; Charles, now in Brunswick, Maine; Louisa, deceased. Ira D. Fish was born September 18, 1822. On becoming of age he worked at farming in Lincoln. In 1846 he went to Ashland and engaged in lumbering, where he lived about twenty years, when he moved to Patten. Since coming to Patten he has not been engaged in active business. He married Lucinda Miller, daughter of John Miller, of Enfield. They have two children: Charles D., of Patten, and Ella, now at home. Mr. Fish served as County Commissioner in Aroostook county. In 1860 he was sent to the Legislature from Patten.

James W. Cunningham, who came to Patten from Mt. Chase in 1870, is a son of Thomas Cunningham, a native of New Brunswick, who married Frances Monroe. They had six children, viz: Hugh, of Mt. Chase, Maine; James W.; Sarah A., wife of William West, of Springfield, Maine; Martha, deceased; Thomas, now of Mt. Chase; George, also in Mt. Chase. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have been dead many years. James W. Cunningham was born in New Brunswick April 1, 1848, and first settled in Mt. Chase, where he lived about six years, then moved to Patten. He married Sarah A. Baston, of Moro Plantation. They have four children, viz: Charlie, Jesse, Gertrude, and Pearl.

Roscoe G. Mitchell, of Patten, is a son of James S. and Mary A. Mitchell, nee Mary Royal. James S. and Mary Mitchell had three sons—Horace W., deceased; Roscoe G., and Leroy F., now of California. Mr. Mitchell came to Patten from Monroe, in Waldo county, in 1841. He was a farmer and mechanic, and worked at his trade a portion of the time. He died in 1875, October 12. Roscoe G. Mitchell was born May 17, 1844. He settled on the old homestead near the village of Patten, where he has always resided. He married for his first wife Jennie Woodard, of Patten; she died in March, 1872, leaving one daughter, Eva May. Mr. Mitchell married for his second wife Miss Susan R. Campbell, of Fort Kent, Maine. They have four children: James S., Vinnie, Blanche, Roscoe N., and Della.

PLYMOUTH.

Plymouth is in the same range of townships with Bangor, on the old system of surveys, and is a little more than sixteen miles distant from that place, across Etna, Carmel, and Hermon. It is the westernmost town of its range in Penobscot county; and, by a short break in the line just below, is also at one of the several southwest corners of the county. It is separated from Jackson, Waldo county, only by Dixmont, which, with Troy, also in Waldo county, is its neighbor on the south. On the west is Detroit, Somerset county; on the north Newport and a very narrow strip of Palmyra, Somerset county, caused by another fault in the west line of Penobscot; and on the east by Etna.

Plymouth is not a full township. Its length (or breadth) is six miles on the west line only, narrowing thence by nearly one-fourth of a mile on the east line. The north line, by the intrusion of Etna, is narrowed to a little more than four and three-fourths miles, and this width is reduced to four and one-half miles before the town widens again. The south line is pushed eastward, and a break in the east line by a projection of the south strip of Plymouth easterly by about a mile's length from north to south, and about two-thirds of a mile in breadth. This makes the south line something over five miles long.

The principal waters of this town are the twin lakes jointly known as Plymouth Pond. They occupy the southeast quarter of the town, and are, respectively, the one on the east two and one-eighth miles long by three-fourths of a mile broad in its widest part, and the westerly one two miles by about one mile. The east lake lies from southeast to northwest. At its head it receives the outlet of Skinner Pond, in the north part of Dixmont, which comes in a short stream through that town and the southeast angle of Plymouth. From Etna flow to the pond on the northeast side the waters of several Etna streams, which unite shortly before reaching the town line, and flow about a mile further to the pond. The west part of the pond lies from southwest to northeast. It receives from the south one tiny affluent near its head. The outlet of the pond goes west of north into Newport, and there joins the Sebasticook Stream. On each side this outlet receives in Plymouth one tributary, each of two to three miles' length, and flowing wholly in this town.

At the foot of Plymouth Pond and beginning of the outlet is Plymouth village, with a post-office, a Union meeting-house, a public school-house, a saw-mill, grist-mill, tannery, and the usual business quarter of a country place. A road comes in here from between the two lakes which form Plymouth Pond, which it reaches by a northwest route from Dixmont and the southeast corner of the town. A road from the south intersects it just before it enters between the two waters. This is crossed by an east and west road from the other at School No. 3, which runs west and southwest some two miles into Dixmont.

From Plymouth post-office also diverges a highway running southwest to the near neighborhood of the southwest corner of the town, where it runs into Troy. This is the most densely settled road in the town. Roads also run east and west from Plymouth to Etna and Detroit, respectively; and another north into Newport. The latter is intersected, a little above the village, by a southwest road that comes in from the northwest angle of Etna.

West of Plymouth Pond and the post-office a highway runs north and south through the whole town, from Troy to Newport, much of it being very well settled up. Schools No. 3 and 4, and the Town Farm, are on this road, the latter near the crossing of the northwest road from the village to Detroit. A number of short routes connect conveniently the principal roads here enumerated.

Plymouth is not touched by the Maine Central Railroad, although that iron way approaches its north line very closely half a mile east of the East Newport station. This and Newport village afford the Plymouth people the only near railway facilities they enjoy as yet.

The soil of Plymouth is fairly fertile and productive; and the surface, formerly covered with a dense forest, is still quite well timbered.

The materials for the early history of this town are rather scant, but some facts concerning it are known. Its earliest annals belong in part to Etna, in this county, and in part to Chandlerville (later and now Detroit), in Somerset county; since, when the town was erected in 1826, part of it was taken from one of these towns and part from the other. The Etna division was settled about the year 1807. The settlement of the Chandlerville section, it being still further in the interior, must have been later, and very likely several years later, since Chandlerville itself was not incorporated until 1828.

In one or the other of these tracts, however, it is well ascertained that by about the year 1812, or at the outbreak of the last war with Great Britain, the following-named pioneers had made their settlements:

Joseph and Amos Chandler (from whom the name "Chandlerville" was doubtless derived—a name which, by the way, or some other appropriate designation, should have been retained, since Detroit, meaning a "strait," has no fitness whatever in its application to an inland town.

Simeon and Edmund Hartford.

William and Ichabod Allen.

Daniel Holbrook.

William Phips.

John P. Palmer.

Jacob Brooks.

Population flowed in slowly, however, to this comparatively far inland region, and the number of inhabitants in the western strip of Etna and the eastern part of the Chandlerville territory was not enough, for nearly twenty years after the first settlement, to demand the formation of a town for nearer governmental facilities than they enjoyed. Finally, however, in the winter of 1825--26, the petition of the people went in for the erection of the municipality; and the town of Plymouth was duly incorporated by the Legislature of Maine on the 21st of February, 1826. Three miles of its breadth from east to west were taken from Etna, in Penobscot county, and two miles from that part of Somerset county which two years afterwards (February 19, 1828) became Chandlerville, and in 1844 became Detroit.

The tracts thus conjoined to constitute Plymouth must already have had, for the size of them, a very respectable population. Only four years afterwards, by the census of 1830, the new town contained 503 people. In ten years more it had increased by 340, or nearly seventy per cent., and had a population of 843. For twenty years more its numbers continued to increase. In 1850 it had 925 residents, and 989 in 1860. There was then here, as in nearly every town of the county and of a large part of Maine, a slight reduction. In 1870 the inhabitants of Plymouth numbered 941, and 828 in 1880.

The polls of Plymouth in 1860 were reported at 220; in 1870 at 279; and in 1880 at 204.

The estates of Plymouth in these years, severally, were $143,875, $188,350, $183,193. These, at least, have pretty nearly been kept good, in the face of hard times and the decrease of population.

The first regular church organization to include the people of this region was the Congregational society, formed November 16, 1807, by the communicants and sympathizers of this faith among them, in union with the Congregationalists of the older town of Dixmont. It was, in fact, mainly a Dixmont church. The Rev. Messrs. Samuel and Jotham Sewall, well-known pioneers of their denomination in Southern and Eastern Maine, together with the Rev. Daniel Lovejoy, were present at the organization of this society, and aided it to take the first few and feeble steps of its infancy. It grew and flourished fairly with the years, and finally the Plymouth members were numerous and strong enough to draw off and form a church by themselves, which was done December 14, 1834. The two societies, however, in time reaped the frequent consequences of division, and after seventeen years of separation they were reunited on the old foundation September 10, 1861.

But Plymouth still does not lack for religious organizations. It has, indeed, a very good number of them, and of resident clergymen, for its population. Of the latter it has the Rev. Messrs. S. Wentworth, Methodist, and Nelson Stackpole, Christian (or Disciple), each of these churches having societies in the town, as also the Free Baptists. The Rev. V. D. Sweetland ministers to this; and the Plymouth Methodists have another preacher in the person of the Rev. John Tingley, of Dixmont.

The only society of note in the town, not religious, is the Plymouth Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, which meets on the Tuesdays on or next before the full moons.

There is but one post-office in Plymouth, of which Mr. Benjamin Loud is in charge.

The town has two hotels—the Plymouth House, kept by Mr. E. H. Bridgham; and the Eagle Hotel, whose landlord is G. W. Day.

The manufacturers and artisans of Plymouth include one lumberman, one tannery firm, one carriage-maker and one carriage-ironer, one cabinet-maker, one carder and weaver, one coffin-maker and painter, one carpenter, one cooper, one dressmaker, one barber, four butchers, and two smiths.

The merchants and tradesmen are in three general stores, two millinery and fancy-goods shops, two jewelry stores, one boot and shoe store, and one drug store. There is also one dealer in cattle and wool, with one resident physician.

The town officers for 1881 were: J. W. Eaton, M. J. Dow, A. R. Clark, Selectmen; W. S. McNelly, Town Clerk; S. B. Thayer, Treasurer; John Robinson, Constable and Collector; Daniel Prescott, School Supervisor; Benjamin Loud, John W. Phinney (Quorum), S. B. Thayer (Trial), Justices.

George B. Leviatt, the subject of this sketch, is a son of William Leviatt, who emigrated from Waterboro, New Hampshire, to the town of Newburg in an early day and was one of the pioneers of the town. Seven years after that he removed to Newport, Maine, where he was also one of the first settlers of the town, taking up a farm, clearing and building, and lived here about two years. He died in Newport at the age of sixty-five. He married Judith Bickford, daughter of George Bickford, of Parsonville, Maine, and by this union nine children were born: Gideon, William, James, Dudley, George B., Boyd C., Anna, Sarah, and Asenith, of whom four are living. Their mother died at the age of ninety-three years and six months, in Plymouth. George B. Leviatt was born in Newburg August 30, 1811. He left home at the age of ten years and took care of himself from that time up. At the age of seventeen he worked at lumbering for several years, and since that time has been engaged in farming and lumbering. He settled in Plymouth in 1839, on the place now occupied by him. He has been one of the Selectmen for a number of years, also a Representative to the Legislature one term, and County Commissioner. He married Nancy Bickford, daughter of Ichabod and Betsey Bickford, of Newburg. By this union nine children were born: William, born May 14, 1841, married Sarah Stackpole; Charles H., born February 15, 1843, died in Washington Circuit Hospital, enlisted in First Maine Cavalry, Company C; Charlie H.; George H., born March 8, 1845, died March 10 1845; two infants unnamed; Georgia, born December 19, 1849, died February 23, 1857; John T., born October 10, 1855, died November 19, 1855; Georgia Etta, born January 31, 1857, died July 6, 1878.

Parker Eaton was born in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, where he learned the joiner's trade, and married Mary Manson. During the War of 1812 he landed in a schooner at the mouth of the Penobscot River, and followed logging roads to Newport. He settled in Plymouth in 1821, and occupied himself in joining and farming; he was the designer and builder of the floating bridge. He was one of the most prominent politicians of the county, and held the office of justice of the peace for eighteen years. He kept the first and only hotel in Plymouth for many years. He had eight children, viz: Moses Manson, Mary W., Joseph W., Shepherd F., Hosea Ballou, Thomas V., (deceased) Thomas A. R. (deceased). Joseph W. was born in Newport April 4, 1814; married Samantha R. Ireland, of St. Albans, and had four children—Statira, Samantha V., Hannibal Hamlin, and Joseph. November 8, 1865, his wife died, and he married Sarah S. Hodge July 13, 1867. He was Deputy Sheriff for twelve years; has held prominent town and county offices, and served three terms in the Legislature; for twenty-four years he has been Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, and for six years has been County Commissioner. Hosea Ballou Eaton, M. D., was born in Plymouth March 24, 1822, and married Martha W. Glover, of Camden, January 16, 1848. They had children as follow: John Parker, born November 21, 1849; died February 20, 1852. Martha V., born January 8, 1853; married A. F. Piper, M. D., and lives in Thomaston. H. B. Jr., M. D., born September 17, 1855, is practicing medicine in Camden with his father. Thomas G., A. M., born February 17, 1858, a graduate of Amherst College, is now a member of the Boston University of Law.

Albert R. Clark is a son of Amasa Clark, of Waldo county, who was one of the early settlers of the county. He was in the War of 1812. He died at the age of seventy-three; married Martha Coons, of Waldo county, by whom twelve children were born—Albert R., Amasa B., Abner K., Henry H., F. C., Martha J., Elizabeth, John J., Rachael A., and Charles E., of whom three are deceased. The mother died at the age of sixty-one.

A. R. Clark, when twenty-one years of age, followed the sea for five seasons. He afterwards worked in ship-yards seven years in Virginia & Rockland ship, and went to California in 1852, remaining there two years, prospecting and mining, after which he settled on the place now occupied by him in Plymouth. He has held the office of Selectman, also Collector and Constable of the town of Plymouth. He married Rachael Kidder, daughter of David Kidder, of Knox county, June 25, 1844. By this union six children were born: Rockwell, born August 6, 1850 (deceased), Rodelpha, born August 6, 1854 (deceased), Rockwell, second, born August, 1856 (deceased), Osbra P., born October, 1862, at home, is now engaged in Lewiston, Maine, in factory and Albert, born September, 1864; Abner, now living at home.

John Robinson is a son of William Robinson, who emigrated from Dublin, Ireland, at the age of ten and settled in Carmel, on the place occupied by Frank Garland. William Robinson was in the War of 1812, receiving a pension. He married Lorana Kimball, of Herson, Maine. By this union eight children were born, viz: Reuben, Rufus, William, Thomas A., James, Jefferson, Sarah, and Lewis K.; seven of whom are living. Mrs. Robinson died aged forty years, and he married Mercy Page, daughter of Ezekiel D. Page, of Newburg. By this union seven children were born, viz: Lorana, Betsey, Maria, Richard, John, Henry H., and Helen A.; five of whom are living. She died, and he was again married to Deborah Grear, of Newburg, and is now deceased.

John Robinson was born in Carmel May 26, 1838. He is now Constable and Collector; in 1880 and 1881 school agent, and has held minor town offices. He married Mary E. Gray, daughter of Charles and Ruth Gray, of Dixmont, March 28, 1873, in Etna. By this union one child was born, viz: Edith M., born June 10, 1864, now living at home.

John Dow, born in Wheelock, Vermont, October 2, 1808, is a son of David and Elizabeth Dow. His father was in the War of 1812; he died at the age of eighty-two; his wife died at the age of eighty-one. When twenty-one years of age he worked at stone-masonry about ten years, after which he settled on the farm now owned and occupied by him. Mr. Dow has been one of the Selectmen for about ten years, and also Constable and Collector; was Representative in the Legislature in 1850, also served as County Commissioner one term, and as Census Enumerator in 1860. He married Hannah Jordan, daughter of Rishworth and Charlotte Jordan, of Danville, Maine, December 5, 1839. By this union seven children were born, namely: Emily, born January 13, 1843, married Andrew D. Sherburne, of St. Albans, now living in Maine township, Lynn county, Iowa; Edgar R., born January 10, 1846, married Augusta M. Dudley, of Newport, and is now living in Newport; Moses J., born in Plymouth April 6, 1849, married Annie Paine, of Plymouth, and is now living in Plymouth; John S., born in Plymouth May 15, 1851, and now living in Madison, Kansas; Nancy Jane, born at Plymouth June 8, 1853, married John Longley, of Plymouth, and now living in Plymouth; Sumner Dow, born in Plymouth May 13, now living at Eureka, Kansas; Sarah Chastine, born in Plymouth November 17, 1859, living at home, is a successful school-teacher, having taught three terms. Six of the above children have been engaged in teaching.

Nelson Stackpole is a son of Joseph Stackpole, of Albion, Kennebec county, who emigrated to the town of Plymouth in 1837 and settled on the place now occupied by Samuel Conner. He lived on this place about ten years, after which he settled on the place occupied by his son Judson, where he died. He served in the War of 1812 and received a pension. He married Elizabeth Wiggins, daughter of John Wiggins, of China, Maine. By this union nine children were born, viz: Elbridge G.;

Horace; Hill; Sophia; Alluria; Ovid, was a soldier in the late war, was taken prisoner and died on Belle Isle; Nelson, Mehitabel, and Joseph H. Nelson was born in Albion, Kennebec county, February 13, 1828. Mr. Stackpole was converted and united with the Christian church at the age of thirty, and has since been a member of that church. In 1867 he was ordained as minister and is a member of the Maine Eastern Conference. He has baptized 137 candidates since his ordination. He organized the second Christian church of Plymouth in 1868; preached to them eight years, and afterward preached at North Newport five years; is now pastor of East Newport church and Troy, also East Dixmont; has filled the pulpit every Sabbath since his ordination, sickness preventing. He follows farming in summer, in winter going out and preaching to the people; and through his efforts many have been converted. He married Betsey Robinson, daughter of William and Mercy Robinson, of Carmel. By this union six children were born, viz: Emulus N., born January 28, 1854, died February 24, 1855; Ida L., born June 10, 1855, married Wallace Call, of Troy, now living in Attleboro, Massachusetts; Eddie M., born May 16, 1858, died March 9, 1863; Frank G., born June 25, 1861, died March 12, 1863; Rose N., born August 16, 1864, living at home; Johnnie F., born December 2, 1872, now living at home.

PRENTISS.

This town lies in the easternmost tier of towns and plantations in Penobscot, upon the border of Washington county. On the north it is separated from Reed's and Barker's Plantations, Aroostook county, by only Drew Plantation; and from the same county on the south by only its next neighbor, Carroll, and Lakeville Plantation. On the east it is bounded by Township No. 8, in the Third Range, and on the west by Webster Plantation. Kingman corners with it on the northwest; Springfield on the southwest; Kossuth, Washington county, on the southeast; and Danforth, also in Washington, comes nearly up on the northeast. It was formerly Township No. 7, in the Third Range north of Bingham's Penobscot Purchase. It is fifty miles northeast of Bangor in a bee-line.

Although Prentiss occupies the area of a surveyed township, it is not a full township of thirty-six square miles. No one of its sides, according to the lines of the Atlas of Penobscot county, which purports to be based upon "actual and recent surveys and records," is fully six miles long. The north and south boundaries are each five and a half miles in length; the east line five and a quarter; the west line, by a slight convergence of the north limit, is a trifle shorter, its length being but five and one-sixth miles. All of its boundaries are right lines.

Prentiss is remarkably well watered, only a strip of perhaps a mile's width on the east side of the town being comparatively destitute of streams. No ponds or lakes of size exist within its limits; but the southernmost point of Mud Lake, in Drew Plantation, comes down just to the north line, nearly one and a half miles from the northwest corner. Into it, a little way up the east side and a trifle north of the Prentiss line, comes the Mud Brook from the south. This heads, by its east branch, itself in two branches, near the south line of Drew, in its southeast angle. These unite in Prentiss, half a mile below the line, and as much further away the branch is joined by a small affluent from the east, and flows west a mile and a quarter more to a junction with the West Branch. This rises at the southeastward, about three-fourths of a mile from the middle of the east line of the town, and has a course of about three miles. After the union of the branches, the main stream of the Mud Brook flows one and a half miles further, making a mill-pond at the road crossing half a mile from the junction, and a little beyond the road receives two tributaries, one a pretty long one, from the southeast, and then makes a sharp bend to the north, receiving at the bend a petty tributary in three branches from the west, and running thence nearly one and a half miles to the Mud Lake.

The waters of the south and southwest of the town belong to the Mattagodus Stream. This rises in two heads in the interior of Carroll, flows southwest and west into Springfield, and near Springfield village makes a big bend and runs north and northeast across the extreme northwest corner of Carroll and into Prentiss by its southwest corner, whence it makes east of north and northwest, nowhere more than three-fourths of a mile from the town line, to about the middle of the west line, where it passes into Webster Plantation, and thence north through Webster to the east part of Kingman, where it flows into the Mattawamkeag. About three and a half miles of its course are in Prentiss. Three-fourths of a mile from its entrance it receives a small stream from Webster; and about a mile from the southwest corner of the town takes from the southeast the waters of Spruce Brook, which in Carroll seems to be called Trout Brook. It rises in that town, very near the main head of the Mattagondus itself, and flows about three miles northwest to that stream. A mile further north the united waters of the Prescott and Cleaves Brooks are welcomed. The former of these rises on the south line of Prentiss, very near the head of a Carroll stream, which becomes one of the tributaries of Baskahegan Lake, in Washington county, and the Prescott flows northwest two miles to a junction with the Cleaves Brook one-fourth of a mile before it reaches the Mattagondus. The Cleaves rises toward the southeast of the town, and flows in a tolerably straight course a little north of west three and a half miles to the Mattagondus, which leaves the town a mile and a half below.

In the central east of the town are two small headwaters and about half a mile of the united stream of a brook that flows into Washington county, and probably belongs to the Baskahegan system.

Prentiss is quite well settled, considering its situation far in the interior and on the border, as it were; and contrary to the story of most of its fellows of the county, it has steadily increased in population within the last twenty years. Most of the settlements are in the west half of the town, although there is a good-sized cluster of dwellings a little east of the central south part of the town about School No. 4. The settlements are so far so scattered that the town has not yet been granted a post-office, but is still dependent upon its neighbors for mail facilities. By the main highway through Prentiss, from Springfield village through the southwest corner of this town, and traversing it northeasterly for three miles, then north a little more than three miles to and through Drew Plantation into Aroostook, connection is made with the European & North American Railroad at Lincoln Station, twenty to twenty-five miles away; and another and nearer access is had to the same road by a highway which leaves the main route in Prentiss about the middle of its course through the town, and runs northeast across the corner of Washington county to Danforth Station, in the edge of Aroostook, about thirteen miles from the east line of Prentiss. The two roads, with one branching from the former in the northeast corner of Springfield, running up the Mattagondus on the west bank, and following it out into Webster Plantation, sending off a north branch to Mud Lake shortly before crossing the line, constitute the principal roads of Prentiss. There is another, however, which leaves a by-road on the Mattagondus half a mile from the west line of the town, and runs southeast, east, and south about four and one-half miles, to its departure into Carroll, nearly two miles from the southeast corner of Prentiss. School No. 4, and the settlement about it, are on this line. School No. 2 is in the north central part of the town, at the beginning of a road which strikes across to the Mud Lake route. School No. 6 is about half a mile north of the point of junction. School No. 1 is on the same road, to Springfield, in the south west angle of the town. One and one-half miles west of north from it is School No. 6 school-house, on the road up the Mattagondus.

The first trees felled on this tract by permanent settlers were cut in 1836 by Messrs. Ira and Eben Averill, on the farms where they have resided for nearly half a century. The family is a prominent one in the town. The Centre House, the only hotel in Prentiss, is kept by Eben Averill, and Mr. Ira Averill is Constable and Collector—or was in 1881.

In 1837 the following-named gentlemen were residents of the tract: Joshua T. Baldwin, John Judkins, Andrew Philbrook, Benjamin Osgood, and John Austin. A number of the descendants of these pioneers are still residents of the town.

Such are the statements that have come to the writer. It will be observed below, however, that the family of Mr. Judkins claim for him the honor of the first settlement, and his year as 1838.

In 1840 the following additional immigrants are noted as having been here: Messrs. Abraham Cleaves, Samuel Dennis, John Prescott, and Harvey Shepherd.

It was twenty-two years after the first settlers got in before the population of the township warranted full municipal organization. The town was incorporated on the 27th of February, 1858. The late Hon. Henry E. Prentiss, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Bangor, and formerly its Mayor, was a principal owner of the tract, and in his honor the new town received its present name. He was a liberal and public-spirited citizen; and among his benefactions to the town, in recognition of the honor conferred upon him, was a present of a public library of three hundred volumes, which has been a prominent means of disseminating and maintaining general intelligence in this region.

With two exceptions—Mattawankeag and Mt. Chase—Prentiss is the latest town organized in the county.

March 1, 1869, a small annexation of territory was made to this town from Drew Plantation.

The population of Prentiss in 1860 numbered 226. In 1870 it was 387, and in 1880 416, which certainly exhibits a healthy growth, considering the times.

The polls in 1860 were 56, 75 in 1870, and 103 in 1880.

The estates in these years, respectively, were valued at $27,165, $54,385, and $67,789. In all the elements of material growth Prentiss has kept steadily on the upward move.

Farming is nowadays the principal occupation in this town, and it is becoming a fine agricultural district. Eight thousand bushels of grain, 2,000 bushels of potatoes, and 1,000 of apples, were raised here in 1878. There was formerly much lumbering on the tract, but the valuable timber has now been largely cut. In 1861 George E. Baldwin built a saw-mill here, and still maintains it. There are no other important industries or trades in the town just now. One of the town officers, writing to a friend three or four years ago, recorded, evidently with some glee, the fact that "there never was a lawyer, doctor, nor a minister a resident of the town."

The following-named were the officers of the town in 1881: T. M. Butterfield, Elias Boyington, C. W. Judkins, Selectmen; E. D. Averill, Town Clerk; Edwin Belden, Treasurer; Ira Averill, Constable and Collector; B. F. Osgood, Jr., School Supervisor; Daniel Butters, Benjamin D. Averill, Elias Boyington (Quorum), Justices.

The first settler in Prentiss was John Judkins, who came here from Fayette, Maine, in 1838. He married Anna Baldwin, and had a family of nine children—Horace P., Emily, Ernestine, Norman B., John B., Maria, and Amelia (twins), Nahum A., and Charles W. When Mr. Judkins came here there was not a tree cut in town towards a farm. He cleared the land and erected the building where C. W. Judkins now lives. He often held prominent town office, and was a Representative in the Legislature at one time. He died in 1878; Mrs. Judkins died in 1866. C. W. Judkins was born September 4, 1834. He came here with his father, and lived in an old camp until his father could erect a house. On becoming of age he went to Minnesota, and remained two years, when he returned to the old farm. In 1863 he was drafted in the Nineteenth Maine Regiment, and was in the army nearly two years. Since then he has lived on the farm, and been engaged in lumbering to some extent. He married Lizzie Gibbs, daughter of James and Julia Gibbs, of Carroll. They have three children—Anna, Oscar, and Leroy. Mr. Judkins holds the office of Assessor and Selectman at the present time, having served in that capacity several years.

Benjamin F. Osgood, of Prentiss, whose father was one of the first settlers in the town, came here in 1839. He is a son of Benjamin and Isabel Osgood, of Oxford county, Maine. Benjamin and Isabel Osgood had seven children, viz: Sarah; Maria, wife of Eben Averill, of Prentiss; Charlotte, wife of Phineas Merrill, of Danforth; Ruth, deceased wife of William P. Tidd, of this town; Samuel, deceased; James A., of Danforth. Benjamin Osgood died in 1865; Mrs. Osgood died in 1852. B. F. Osgood was born February 13, 1826, in Saco, Maine. He came here with his father when thirteen years of age, and helped to clear the farm where he now lives. Mr. Osgood married for his first wife Mary M. Doten, daughter of Isaac Doten, of Springfield. By her he had nine children, of whom seven are living: Josephine E., deceased; Frank E., now of Prentiss; Belle; Fred L., now in Nevada; Benjamin F., at home; Forest E., at home; Prentiss; Jesse; Myra, deceased. Mrs. Osgood died in 1871. Mr. Osgood married for his second wife Mrs. Melissa Homes, of Calais. They have three children—Bert, Jay Dix, and Charles R. Mr. Osgood has held the office of Town Clerk and First Selectman for several years in succession.

Among the early settlers who came to Prentiss in 1840 were two brothers, Eben and Ira Averill, who came here from Bangor. Their father, Asa Averill, of Pittston, married Mary Catlin, of Newcastle. They had seven children, viz: Martha, Mary, Eben, Ira, Hiram, Asa, and Sarah, all of whom are living except Mary. Asa Averill died many years since; Mrs. Averill died in 1822. Eben Averill was born April 15, 1812. On becoming of age he went to Dixmont and worked two years on a farm, at the end of which he went to Bangor and worked by the month at farming, teaming, etc., until 1840, when he came to Prentiss, then No. 7, Range 3, and began to make a farm. He and his brother came through to this place from Lincoln on foot, following a spotted line and bringing supplies on their backs. They felled about fifteen acres that year, and built a log house. They brushed out a road during the fall to Lincoln, so that during the winter they could draw in some provisions with a horse for use the next season. In 1839 Eben married Maria Osgood, daughter of Benjamin Osgood, of Bangor. In 1841, the next year after he made his first chopping, he brought his wife to his new home. They came in March on a sled. Here they have since lived. They have had seven children, viz: Ann M., wife of C. A. Rowe, of Prentiss; Abbie Isabel, wife of A. R. Page, of Drew Plantation; Alberta M., now Mrs. George B. Gates, of Carson City, Nevada; Pert Edna, wife of Edward Skilling, of Danforth; Mabel, wife of George Larrabee, of Carroll; Pitt Eben, now with his father at home; Asa M., now at home. Mr. Averill has held the office of Justice of the Peace, Selectman, etc.

Leonard Lothrop, of Prentiss, is a son of Alson Lothrop, of Leeds, Kennebec county, Maine. He married Miss Hulda Richmond, of Turner. They had nine children—Alson, Drusilla, Leonard, Daniel, Nathan, Eaton, Rossa, Henry, and Stillman. Leonard, the second son of this family, was born April 22, 1817, in Leeds. He first settled in Jay, where he lived several years, when he moved to Carroll, where he lived about two years. He moved into Prentiss in 1851, where he has since lived. When he came here there were but twelve acres cleared on his present farm. There was no road and he had to haul goods on a sled in summer either by hand or oxen. He married Fannie Warner, daughter of Benjamin Warner. They have had eight children—Charles, died in the army; Mary F., deceased; Nathan, deceased; Harrison, deceased; Eaton, now in Lynn, Massachusetts; Samuel, of Prentiss; Nancy, wife of William Fogaty, of Prentiss, and Henry, now at home. Mr. Lothrop has 180 acres of land, and is engaged in farming.

George Baldwin, of Prentiss, was born December 20, 1832. His father, Joshua Baldwin, was a native of Fayette, Kennebec county. He married Sarah Morrill, of Hallowell. They had five children, viz: John M., deceased; Albert, now in Danforth, Maine; Joshua D., deceased; George; William H., now in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Joshua Baldwin came to Prentiss in 1839 and settled on the place where Mr. Frank Osgood now resides. He cleared up the farm and built the buildings on it. He died July 3, 1879. George Baldwin came here when about seven years old with his father. After becoming of age he built a saw-mill in 1861, and rebuilt it in 1879. He has a small farm in connection with his mill. He married Frances Lane, daughter of Calvin Lane, of Carroll. They have six children, viz: Calvin, Frank, Flora, Joshua, Myra, and Belle. Mr. Baldwin has held the office of Town Clerk, School Committee, etc. His place is near the central part of the town.

SPRINGFIELD.

This town, as before noted, is a close neighbor of Prentiss, with which it corners at the northeast. It is bounded on the north by Webster Plantation, east by Carroll, south by Lakeville Plantation, and west by Lee. It has Winn at the northwest corner, across which is its nearest distance to the railroad and the river, seven miles, and Township No. 3, in the first range north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase, at the southwest. Lakeville Plantation stretches so far to the east that it does not corner with Springfield at the southeast. Springfield is separated by only that tract from Hancock county; by Carroll only from Washington; and by Webster and Kingman, with a strip of Mattawamkeag, from Aroostook county. It is forty miles northeast of Bangor, as the crow flies.

Springfield was formerly Township No. 5, in Range 2, north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase. It is pretty nearly an entire township, even by the lines of the County Atlas. According to that, the north boundary of the town is almost six miles; but, by some convergence of east and west lines, the south limit is reduced to about a quarter of a mile less. The west line is five and two-thirds miles long; but by another deflection of the north and south pair of boundaries, the east line measures nearly one-third of a mile less. The confines of the town are unbroken; but the east line passes through the western part of a small lake lying mostly in Carroll, and ending about a mile from the southeast corner of Springfield. A little more than half a mile's length, and a very narrow breadth of this sheet, lie in Springfield. Half a mile northwest of it is the Beaver Pond, an ellipse of about one hundred rods' length by seventy-five rods' breadth, from which flows a small, short outlet to the Mattagondus Stream. This enters Springfield from Carroll about two and a half miles down the east line, flows a mile or so westward, and then makes north and east of north, in a total course of three and a half miles in this town, to an exit a short distance below the northeast corner, across the corner of Carroll, into Prentiss. About a mile from its exit it expands into a small pond, which sends a brief outlet to a similar sheet on the east branch of the Mattakeunk Stream. This water has its head in the southeast angle of Webster Plantation, and shortly flows into Springfield, through which it courses in a great curve for about six and a half miles, being about one and a quarter miles from the north line of the town at the lowest depth of the curve, and leaving the town exactly at the northwest corner. About one and a half miles from its entrance it is expanded into a rather long mill-pond, which furnishes power to shingle and carding-mills at its foot. Less than two miles further a sizable tributary comes in from the south, which rises nearly a mile southwest of Beaver Pond, and flows in a very winding course of about five miles to its junction with the East Branch. Near Springfield village rises a two-mile affluent of this brook, which flows northwesterly to it. Less than a mile west of this brook is the source of a small stream, which runs northwest and southwest two and a half miles to a good-sized pond, from which departs to the northwest an affluent of the West Branch of the Mattakeunk in Lee, and another to the southwest, which reaches Ware Lake in the same town. Half a mile before leaving Springfield, this is joined by a small two-mile tributary from the southeast. Along about two-thirds of a mile of the east end of the south line of the town, flows a section of the Lowell Brook, coming out of Lakeville Plantation and returning to it to flow into Duck Lake, a mile and a half distant. About the middle of this section it receives in Springfield a tributary from the north of perhaps one and a half miles' length.

The main road in Springfield, being the stage-route from Lincoln Station, on the European & North American Railroad, to Calais, runs through the central part of the town, nearly east and west. Large part of the population of the town is on this road. Besides the village at Springfield post-office, which has a Congregational church, cemetery, hotel, and other public conveniences, there is a dense cluster of dwellings a mile west of it, where two roads from the south join the stage-route, and where a valuable water-power is created by the tributary of the East Branch of the Mattakeunk. Here are a Union church, a cemetery, and several mills and shops. School No. 10 and a store are within a mile and a half to the west. Here (at School No. 10) a road runs off to the south, connecting at School No. 7 and the neighboring cemetery with another east and west road, rather thinly settled as yet, which intersects the entire south part of the town. Half a mile west of this junction a neighborhood road runs off to the southwest corner of the town. One and a half miles west of the School No. 7 junction is School No. 6, where another cross-road runs north and northeast to the dense settlement west of Springfield post-office. Just after entering the town from Carroll, the southern road westward, at a pretty thick cluster of settlement, sends off a two-and-a-half-mile road north to the stage-road a little east of the post-office. Upon this are School No. 2 and a cemetery. From the post-office a highway runs through another dense settlement a mile or more north, and then northeast to the corner of the town, just before reaching which it forks and enters Prentiss in two branches, both of which, as before noted, make their way entirely across that town.

On the stage-road, nearly two miles west of the post-office, a road runs northwest into Lee, crossing the town line half a mile below the northwest corner. From the point of exit a road runs straight down the west line of the town to the stage-road, two and a half miles distant. About half-way down, near the cemetery, a road runs a mile west, and as far north, to the former highway.

The first settlers got into this township in 1830. Their names have never been disclosed to the present writer, but it is known that James Butterfield was the first trader. Population must have flowed in somewhat rapidly, for the town was organized within less than four years—on the 12th of February, 1834. It is said then to have had about three hundred inhabitants, and by 1840 the number had increased to 546.

The northern half of this town was included in the grant made the State Legislature for the sustenance of Foxcroft Academy. It was presently sold by the trustees of that institution to land and lumber operators in Bangor at the cheap though then sufficient rate of thirty-one cents per acre. It was a valuable tract, heavily timbered with pine and spruce.

The southern half of the township was conveyed by the State directly to actual settlers and others. It is accounted to comprise some of the best land in the State, and has largely contributed to give Springfield character and reputation as a farming town. When, in 1837, the State offered a premium for the largest and best production of wheat within its borders, the prize was taken by Springfield, in which as yet no field had been cleared as much as seven years. Mr. Samuel C. Clark was the successful contestant, he having raised that year on his place 1,340 bushels of wheat and 435 of other grain, making a total product of 1,775 bushels. Some of the farmers in this town have grown wealthy by the pursuits of agriculture.

For some years in its early day the growth of this town was comparatively slow. Settlers were discouraged from coming in and locating by the heavy tax imposed upon estates by the incurring of a debt of $6,000 for the construction of two county roads through the town—but one of which, it has been thought in later years, would have been sufficient for the needs of the people. About one-fourth of all tax levied for a period of years went to provide for interest and payment of this debt; and settlement was thereby somewhat retarded. The courageous and honest citizens of Springfield, however, by no means repudiated the debt, incubus as it was on the town; but provided fully for its payment, and it was extinguished in about thirty years from the time of its contraction.

From 1840 to 1850 the population of Springfield rose but thirty-seven, or from 546 to 583. But during the next ten years there was an increase of 271, the people numbering 854 in 1860. There were 879 in 1870, and 878 in 1880. The town has come remarkably near to holding its own in the matter of population, and has as nearly held its own in the number of voters. In 1860 there were 186 polls, 199 in 1870, and 193 in 1880. The estates in these several years were officially valued at $84,228, $122,230, and $105,242.

March 14, 1846, a Congregational society was formed by residents of this town and of Carroll and Lee. About the year 1859 a fine church edifice, costing $2,500, was put up in Springfield and dedicated by this society. There have been two Free Baptist societies in the town, but only one seems still to survive, which has the Rev. Horace Graves for pastor. Rev. J. C. Towle is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. The pulpit of the Congregational society is temporarily vacant.

The town is well supplied with schools, and a high school has been maintained for a number of years.

The only society not of a religious character just now maintained in the town is the Forest Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. The Beacon Light Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars existed until a year or two ago.

There is still much manufacturing in Springfield, including one grist-mill, one grist- and shingle-mill, three mills making long and three making short lumber, one woolen manufacturer, two boot and shoe-makers, and one maker of edge tools.

Other business establishments comprise four general stores, two millinery and fancy goods stores, two blacksmith shops, one carpenter, and one carpenter and builder, and one painter.

The professional men of Springfield are two resident physicians and one lawyer.

A hotel is kept by Hiram Burr.

The public officers in 1881 were the following-named: Melvin M. Lewis, Postmaster; H. B. Lewis, Asia Jones, William H. Murdock, Selectmen; G. A. Lewis, Town Clerk; P. C. Jones, Treasurer; A. H. Hanseom, Constable and Collector; Miss J. A. Reed, C. J. Lewis, Everett Murdock, School Committee; Hiram Burr, L. C. Stearns (Quorum), L. W. Drake (Trial), Justices.

One of the early settlers in Springfield was Mr. Robinson Conforth, who came here from West Waterville, Maine, in 1843, and made a chopping. The next year he brought his family and built a house. He married for his first wife Luzetta Young. They had five children—Birks, Elvira, Helen, Asa, and Norilla, all of whom are living except Norilla. Mrs. Conforth died in 1864. Mr. Conforth married for his second wife Melinda Hussey, daughter of Ebenezer Hussey, of West Waterville, Maine. They had eight children—Rosetta, wife of George Mayo, of Nevada; Gardner; William, deceased; Melvin, now in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Sarah, wife of Franklin Manter, of Milo; Charles, now in Montana; and Eben, deceased. Mr. Conforth died March 27, 1877. Mrs. Conforth is now living with her son Gardner. Gardner Conforth was born July 16, 1839, in West Waterville. He came to Springfield with his father when a small boy, and has ever since lived on the old place. He has helped to clear up and make the farm where he lives. He married Henrietta Coombs, daughter of Elbridge Coombs, of Orono, Maine. They have four children—Linna B., Dona D., Charlie A., Lena B. They lost one in infancy.

One of the oldest and first settlers in the town of Springfield is Hiram Burr, who came to Brewer from Massachusetts, and was among the first settlers in Brewer. He was a ship carpenter. He had ten children that grew up. Of these five are now living—Mary, now Mrs. Forbs, of Delaware; Hiram; Martha, now Mrs. Winslow; Harriet, now Mrs. Godfrey, of Minnesota; Benjamin A., of Bangor. Hiram Burr is the fourth son of the family. He was born October 9, 1810, in Brewer. He has always followed farming, though since living here he has kept public house in connection with his farm. He came to Springfield when eighteen years of age in 1828. He married Betsey L. Johnson, daughter of Stephen Johnson, who came here from Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Burr have had four children—Henrietta, wife of Emery Johnson, of this town; Benjamin H., of this town; Almira, wife of Henry H. Scribner, of California; and Hiram J., of Springfield. Mr. Burr came to this town when there were but five acres cleared and no road within thirty-two miles from here. They had to go to Lincoln to get supplies and bring them in on their backs. The first fall their provisions failed, and they lived about three months on beans and musty meal with a little salt. They brought in provision enough to last till their crops came off, but they were stolen. The privations which these early settlers underwent were very severe indeed. Mr. Burr has been prominent in leading positions in the town here many years. He and his wife are now spending their old age in the village he has seen grow from the first house to the present.

William Olmsted, of Springfield, is a son of David Olmsted, of New York. David Olmsted married Rhoda Manley for his first wife, and William is a son of this couple. He was born June 24, 1811, in Plattsburg, New York, and is the only child in the family who lived to grow up. His father was a blacksmith by trade and a soldier in the War of 1812. On becoming of age he engaged in the business of house carpenter and joiner; he has always had a farm, though, on which his family have lived. He came to Springfield in January, 1835, and soon after bought the place where he now lives. January 22, 1835, he married Lydia G. Duren, daughter of William and Lydia Duren. They have had twelve children, eleven of whom were—David, deceased; William Henry, now of Lowell, Maine; Isaac L., in Bangor; Joseph A., of Bangor; Calvin M., died in the army in 1865; Cynthia M., at home, and Elmer E., at home. There died in early life Elsie L., H. Hamlin, Sylvester B., Eliza A. Mr. Olmsted has been engaged in trade for many years, but is now closing out the goods in his store. He has lived in Springfield since 1835.

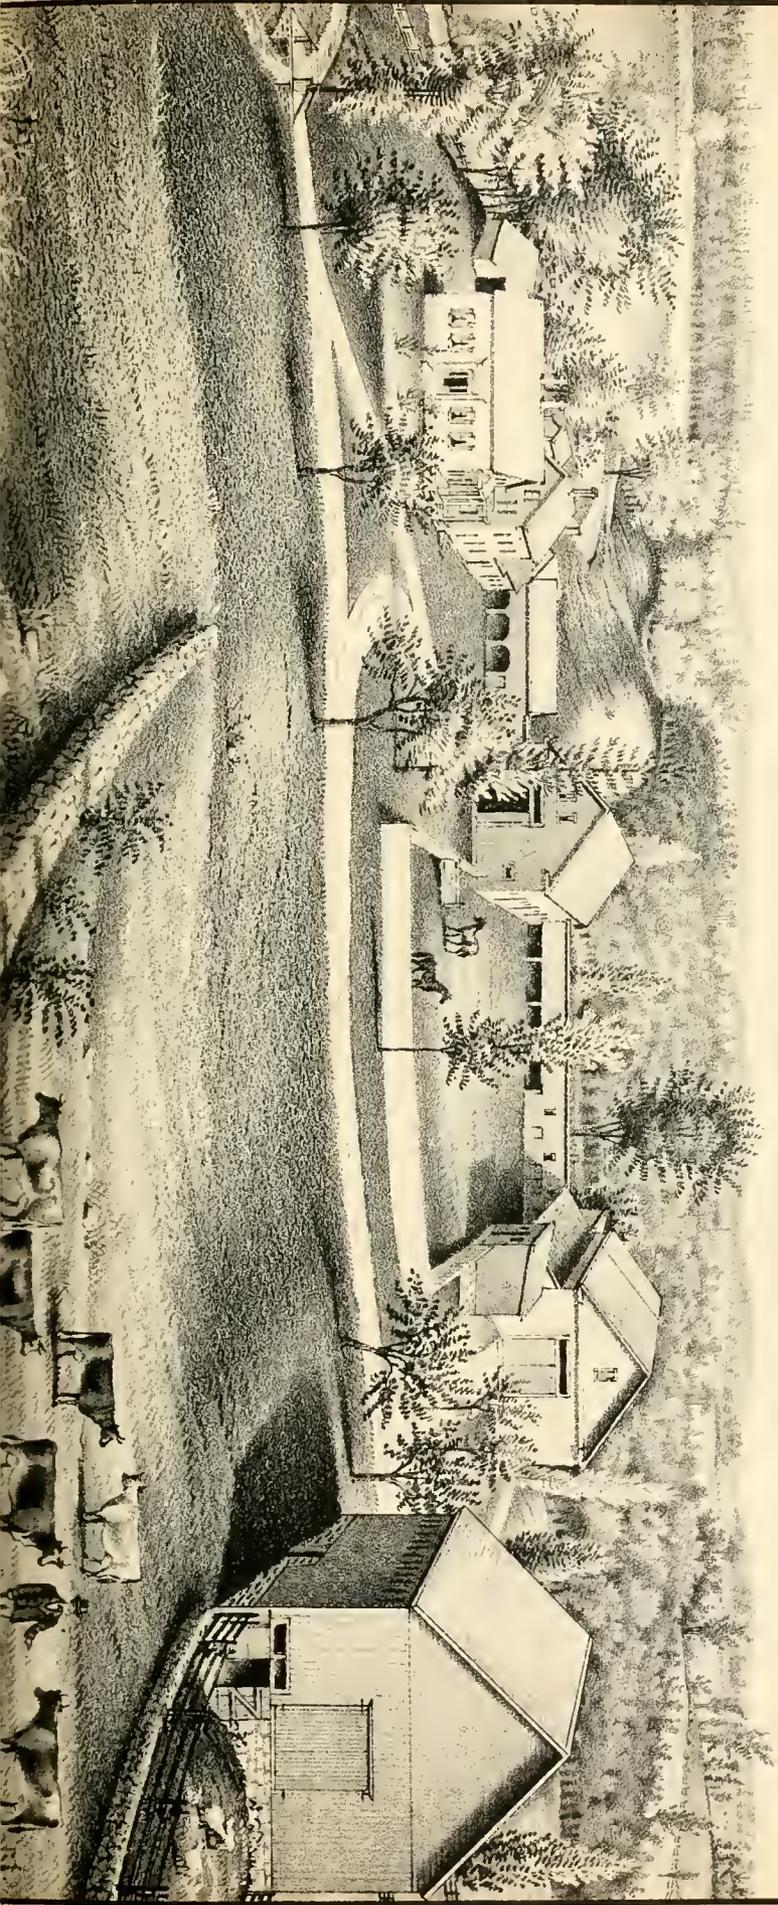

STETSON.

Stetson belongs to the range of towns next north of the Bangor range. It is ten and a half miles distant from Bangor. It is separated from the west county line, or Palmyra, in Somerset county, only by Newport, which bounds it on the west; from Dover, Piscataquis county, on the north, only by Exeter, its next neighbor on the north, and Garland; and from Monroe, Waldo county, on the south, only by Etna and Carmel, which bound Stetson by about equal breadths on the south, and beyond them by the halves of Dixmont and Newburg. Levant is the adjacent town on the east. Corinth corners with it on the northeast, and Corinna on the northwest.

Stetson, by its position and intended shape, should be a regular township, six miles square; but comes a very little short of it. The south and east lines are each six miles long; but, by the slight convergence of the latter toward the east line the north boundary of the town is shortened about one fourth of a mile, and the east line is about as much shorter than the west. The town, however, is not much shortened by these differences, and still contains nearly the even thirty-six square miles, and is generally credited, as in the Maine Register, with the full 23,040 acres of an even township.

Across the north central part of the town, east and west, from a point two and one-fourth miles distant from the west line to another nearly a mile from the east line, lies the fine body of water called Stetson Pond. It is almost three miles in length, not quite a mile in greatest breadth toward the west end, and perhaps half a mile in average width. At the east end (head of the Pond), by the cemetery and blacksmith's shop, it receives a small tributary from the east, heading in Levant; and about a mile from the other end, on the north shore, it discharges its waters through the Stetson Stream, which has a course westward of three miles in this town and about two in Newport, where it empties into a small bay on the east shore of the great Newport Pond. Half a mile before leaving Stetson it takes in a tributary from the north, which rises in Exeter. At Stetson post-office, a mile from the pond, it receives a very small stream from the north, and midway between this and the other a somewhat larger one from the south. One-fourth of a mile from its source at the pond, it has a two- or three-mile tributary flowing down from Exeter. The pond has two similar affluents on its north side, also heading in Exeter, the westernmost of them receiving a short branch three-fourths of a mile from the pond, which flows wholly in this town. Across the northeast angle, in a course of about two miles in the town, from Exeter to Levant, flows a tributary of the Little Kenduskeag Stream.

View of Setson Pond--From Premises.

6

5

In the south central part of Stetson rise two heads of a tributary of the Etna and Carmel Pond, flowing in from the north. A small section of this pond, about half a mile long by perhaps sixty rods in average breadth, occupies the central south edge of Stetson. It receives in this town a very small affluent at its northwest point. Near its northeast shore rises a tiny stream, which, with another coming down half a mile from the north, enters at the same place a petty pond half a mile east of the north shore of Etna and Carmel Pond, and from it a small brook flows into Carmel. Two miles to the northeast are three headwaters of a tributary of the Sowadabcook Stream, in Carmel, which (the tributary) flows about two miles in Springfield.

This town has two main roads across it east and west, and one from north to south—the latter what is known as Brown's stage route from Exeter to Etna. This enters from Exeter, a little more than one and a half miles east of the northwest corner of Stetson, and makes a bee-line just as far to Stetson post-office. There it diverges a little to the eastward, but keeps a general south course to the other side of the town, where it leaves just west of Etna and Carmel Pond, into the northeast angle of Etna. Three-fourths of a mile before crossing the line it passes School No. 7, and a little above that the cemetery, where a road ends which comes in from Carmel a mile from the southeast corner of Stetson, and runs northwest and west to this point. A mile above this it crosses the lowermost east and west, or Newport and Plymouth road. This traverses Stetson at a general distance of two and a half miles from the south line, passing School No. 5 one and a half miles from the east line, where a short cross road starts off toward the pond, and thence northeast to the main road beyond East Stetson; also School No. 3, near the east line of the town, where the road southwest from Stetson post-office joins the main road, which here itself angles to the southwest, and runs on to and through East Newport.

East Stetson is the settlement about a mile northeast of the Pond, clustered near the two or three road-junctions in that quarter. A road here comes in from Levant, which runs west and northwest about a mile and a quarter, when it strikes almost a straight line westerly, passing the Town Farm a mile and a half from the east town-line, School No. 1 a little further, and two and a half miles further Stetson village and post-office, whence a mile and a half further take the road out of town and toward North Newport. Near School No. 1 it sends a short cross-road northward, which at its north end intersects near the beginning another east and west road, which strikes nearly an air line across the rest of the town into Newport. Half a mile west of this junction, at School No. 4, and at another point about a mile west of that, it starts off two north roads into Exeter, which presently cross at School-house No. 13, in that town. At the East Stetson end of the east and west road next south, a branch highway comes in from the northwest angle of Levant, and joins the main road about a mile from the town line.

The Maine Central Railroad passes for three-quarters of a mile through the southwest angle of Stetson, from Etna to Newport, but makes no station in this town.

Stetson village is about a mile northwest of the Pond, and very nearly equidistant from the east and north town-lines, being about one and two-thirds miles from each, at the crossing of the two important roads upon which the town is situated. It has a post-office, a meeting-house, School-house No. 2, a cheese and other factories and mills, and a fair business quarter. The Stetson Stream passes through it, with a large semi-circular side channel in the heart of the town, and a small tributary joining here from the north.

The soil of Stetson is productive, and the surface of its territory generally level. It is accounted an excellent farming town.

The materials at hand for a history of Stetson are very limited. The first settlers are known to have set the stakes of civilization here at the beginning of the century—in 1800, it is said. About a generation passed, however, before its population justified full erection as a town. It was not until January 28, 1831, that it finally received incorporation from the Legislature. The name it bears was derived from an original proprietor, Mr. Amasa Stetson, of Dorchester, Massachusetts. It had been Stetson Plantation for many years; and, contrary to the frequent custom in this county, the plantation name was continued for the town.

In 1810 Stetson Plantation had 108 population, and 131 in 1820. In 1830, the year of incorporation, Stetson town had but 114, but made a bound within the next ten years almost unexampled in this county, rising to 616 in 1840. In 1850 there were 885, 913 in 1860, 937 in 1870, and 729 in 1880.

The voters of Stetson numbered 195 in 1860, 214 in 1870, and 218 in 1880—increasing every decade in respect of these, although falling off somewhat during 1870-80 in the respects of population and property.

The Stetson estates in 1860, as officially valued for taxation, amounted to $166,127. They were $262,735 in 1870, and $219,399 in 1880.

The churches of Stetson are the Calvinistic Baptist, which has Elder William E. Noyes as a resident minister, but has no pastor at present; Methodist Episcopal, in charge during 1881 of the Rev. D. B. Holt, of Exeter; and the Christian or Disciple, whose pulpit is also vacant just now.

The other important societies of the town are the Stetson Grange, No. 235, Patrons of Husbandry, which was organized March 1, 1878; and the Reform Lodge, No. 231, Independent Order of Good Templars, formed August 18, 1876.

The Stetson High School and Library Association, an organization of some reputation and usefulness, was incorporated March 1, 1870.

The Stetson Cheese Company organized in 1874, with C. H. Foster, President. John Rogers was its first Secretary, and Joseph Wiggin first Treasurer. They built and equipped a factory at an expense of $2,500, and appointed Asa S. Spooner as manager. It has carried on business every year since it was built, and manufactures, on an average, over thirty thousand pounds of cheese per annum. The cheese made at the establishment is of the best quality, and always commands the highest market price. The plan on which the factory is run is as follows: Every person receives one pound of cheese for every ten pounds of milk furnished, which is considered the safest and most profitable plan for all parties interested. Its present Board of Directors are C. H. Foster, R. D. Pulsifer, and John C. Gibson; V. D. Debolt, President; H. Daymon, Secretary; John C. Gibson, Jr., Treasurer. The factory is run at an expense of about $500 per annum.

The business of Stetson is at present mainly confined to the Cheese Company, one lumber- and grist-mill, one other saw-mill, two carriage-makers, one boot- and shoemaker, one harness-maker, two builders, two smiths, three general stores, and one millinery establishment. There are one hotel and one resident physician. The town officers of Stetson in 1881 were: George L. Hersey, I. W. Tibbetts, G. B. Woodcock, Selectmen; G. M. Bond, Town Clerk; G. L. Hersey, Treasurer; T. P. Townsend, Constable; W. A. Lennan, School Supervisor; Charles H. Goodwin, Newton G. Merrill, Samuel F. Buswell, (Quorum) John Rogers, C. R. Ireland, (Trial) Justices. The postmasters are C. R. Ireland, at Stetson; Joseph Pitman, at the South Stetson office.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

This town has produced a full share of the more useful and renowned citizens of the county and State. Among them the Hon. Lewis Baker, now of Bangor, and a prominent member of the Executive Council, practiced law in Stetson for about thirty years; and Dr. Calvin Seavey, a leading medical practitioner in the same city, was in full practice in this town for many years. Full biographical sketches of both these gentlemen will be found in the Bangor division of this book.

The following notices of Stetson soldiers during the late war are extracted from the Reports of the Adjutant-General of the State:

BREVET BRIGADIER-GENERAL JONATHAN A. HILL, of Stetson, enlisted as a private in September, 1861, and was commissioned as captain of Company K of the Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteers in November, 1861; served as captain during the Peninsular campaign of 1862, and was engaged in the battles of Lee's Mills, Williamsburg, Chickahominy, Seven Pines, Fair Oaks, Bottom's Bridge, and the Seven Days' Battle before Richmond. In 1863 he participated in the siege of Charleston, South Carolina. In 1864 he distinguished himself at the battles of Richmond, Petersburg Railroad, Chester Station, Drury's Bluff, Wier Bottom Church, Bermuda Hundreds, Strawberry Plains, Deep Bottom, and Deep Run; was promoted Major in June, 1864, and in the same month was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel.

During the campaign of 1865 Colonel Hill won distinction by his bravery, coolness, and judgment at the battles of Hatcher's Run, Forts Gregg and Baldwin, and Appomattox Court-house, and was commissioned Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, April 9, 1865.

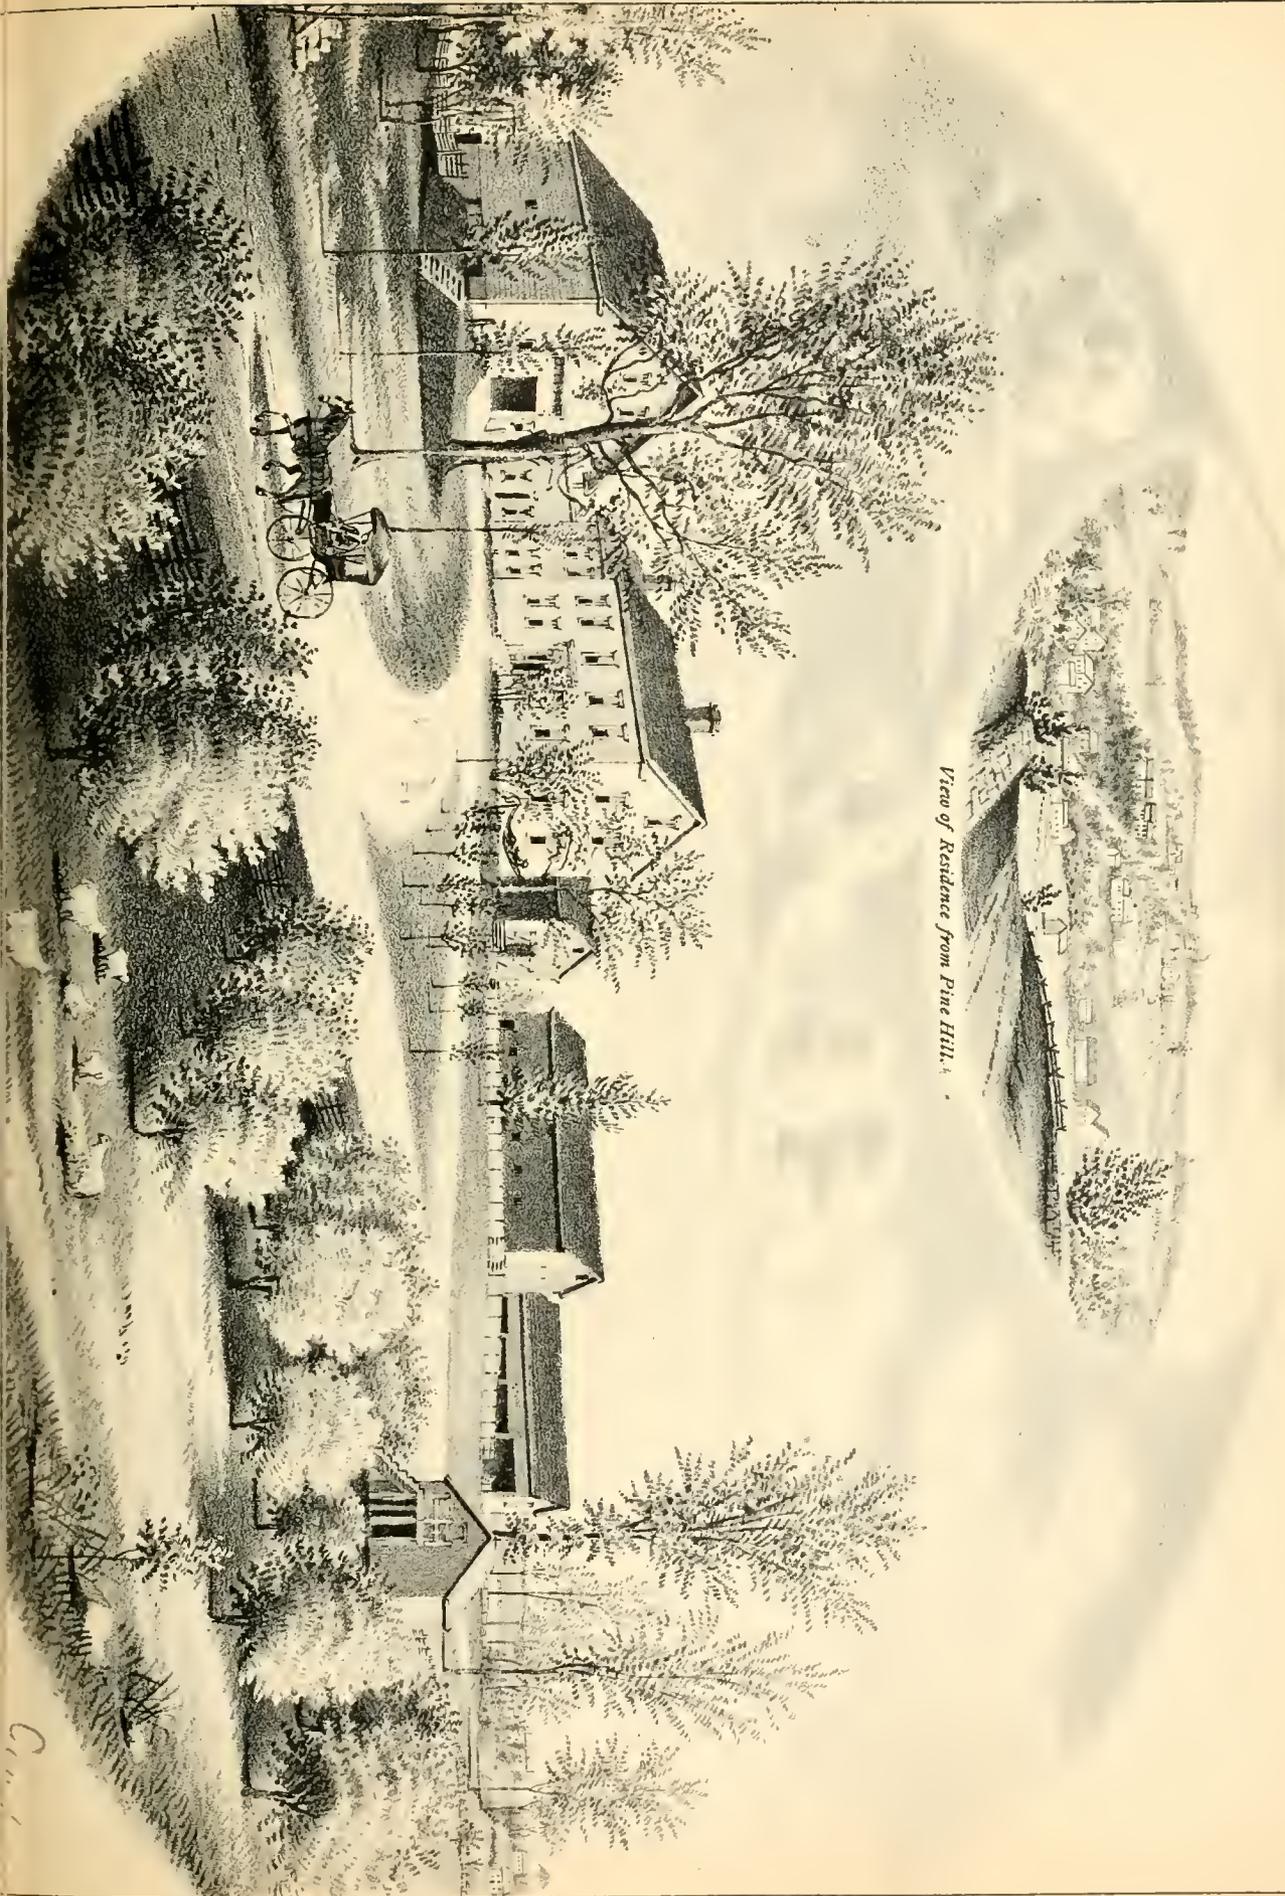

Colonel Hill was in command of the regiment most of the time from June 2, 1864, until the 16th of August, 1864, when he was wounded and lost his right arm in the hotly contested battle of Deep Run. In November, 1865, Colonel Hill returned to his regiment, and was in command until the surrender of Lee's army, and was again wounded at the battle of Appomattox Court-house, where his regiment suffered severely, losing forty per cent. of their number in killed and wounded. After the surrender, General Hill was on special and detached duty in Virginia as President of a military commission at Richmond, and in command of the Northwestern District of Virginia at Lynchburg; also at Fredericksburg, of the Northeastern District, and in command of post at City Point, until February 2, 1866, when he was mustered out of the United States service. Since leaving the service, General Hill has been appointed Postmaster at Auburn, a position which he continues to fill to the most perfect satisfaction of his fellow-citizens.

CAPTAIN HENRY F. HILL was born in Stetson, Maine, May 24, 1843, and entered the service of his country as first sergeant Company I, Seventh Maine Volunteers. From the first he won the entire confidence of his superior officers, and was always at his post in time of danger. At Antietam, when his regiment was ordered to take an orchard and house where were Stonewall Jackson's headquarters, he especially distinguished himself, and in the desperate conflict that ensued in the orchard, he saved the life of his regimental commander. The latter soon after mentioning his services and the act to Governor Washburn, he immediately commissioned him a captain; and when the Seventh Maine returned to the field, he went out in command of Company A.

Conspicuous in every battle from that of Salem Heights, he escaped unscathed until General Grant's great campaign. At Spottsylvania, within twenty yards of the bloody "angle," he fell, shot in the forehead, cheering his company in the charge. As his men were carrying his body to the rear, they were ordered to leave it by an officer of rank, slightly wounded in the foot. Discipline prevailed; they went to a needless succor of the living, and his mangled remains were that night consumed by a fire that raged through those tangled thickets and seemed to feed on blood.

The following paragraph is from the Adjutant-General's Report for 1863:

The unparalleled success which attended the labors of Major Joel W. Cloudman; of Stetson, in raising a company of 125 men in less than two weeks in September last, for "Baker's District of Columbia Cavalry," induced the War Department to continue him for a time in that View of Residence from Pine Hill.

C. 1

RESIDENCE OF JOHN A. JORDAN, STETSON, MAINE.

RESIDENCE OF EDWARD JORDAN, STETSON, MAINE.

service. His efforts in this behalf will result in the enlistment, at trifling expense, of sufficient first-class men for a regiment in less time and at less cost than the same number were ever recruited in this State by any one person. It is also worthy of note that all the men of Major Cloudman's enlistment for this cavalry send home through his influence a greater amount of money, comparatively, to their families and friends than those of any other organization from this State.

The following is a line from the Roll of Honor of Bowdoin College:

Class of 1868.—S. Fogg, Jr, was born in Stetson in August, 1844; was second lieutenant United States Colored Troops.

Samuel Stetson was born in Randolph, Massachusetts, January 12, 1793. When nine years of age his father died and he was bound out, according to the custom in those days, to a person by the name of John Mann, of Randolph, with whom he was obliged to remain until he was twenty-one years of age. Mann proved to be both cruel and stingy, and owing to the fact that he was obliged to furnish two feet of wood for the use of the school, he kept Mr. Stetson at home, and consequently his early education was neglected. But after he attained his majority he succeeded in educating himself, and at his death he was perhaps as well informed a man as there was in the town. In 1819 he came to Penobscot county and settled on the farm now owned by his son, Samuel R. He purchased his farm from Major Amasa Stetson, the then proprietor of the town. On the 6th of November, 1821, he married Hannah, daughter of Dr. Thomas Stow Ranney, then of Newport, but formerly of Brentwood, New Hampshire. He died in Stetson, October 31, 1843. His wife died in Stetson October 30, 1876. He was the father of four children: Irene, who married Ralph C. Evlett, and died in Bangor in 1851; Rebecca, who married Henry V. French, of Brockton, Massachusetts, where she now resides; Mary A., who was twice married, first to Dr. John F. H. Turner, who died in Stetson—she afterwards married Franklin O. Howard, and now lives at Brockton, Massachusetts; Samuel R. was born in Stetson April 5, 1834, where he has lived all his life. When nineteen years of age his father died and left him the sole manager of the old homestead, consisting of about four hundred acres, and about twenty thousand dollars in personal property. In the summer of 1881 he purchased the Stetson water-power and saw- and flouring-mills at the village of Stetson.

David Abbot was born in York county in 1789, where he lived nearly all his life and followed the trade of blacksmith. He was twice married. His first wife's name was Irene Bowden. She had six children, and died in York in 1823. He married for his second wife Mehitabel Shaw. He came to Penobscot county in 1849, and settled in Levant, where he died in 1851. His second wife was the mother of one child. She lived in York. He was the father of seven children, namely: Thomas, John, David, Abraham, James; Charlotte; George. Thomas Abbot was born in York, April 24, 1813, where he was educated, and when twenty-one years of age he came to Penobscot county and settled on the farm now owned by Lorenzo Ecles in Stetson. In 1837 he married Elizabeth Pease, a native of Exeter, who died in Stetson in 1876. He is the father of nine children: John F., who married Almyria Ross and lives in Topfield, Massachusetts; Irene E., lives at home; Annette, who married Charles Robinson and lives at home, Mr. Robinson being dead; Charles H., lives in Wenham, Massachusetts; Amanda O., who married William S. Randlett and lives in Newport; Susan E., married George W. Keyes and lives in Stetson; Thomas W. lives at home; Frank P., lives at home; Preston W., lives in Topsfield, Massachusetts. John H. Abbot was a member of Company G., Eleventh Maine Infantry, and served in the Army of the James, under General Butler, and was present at the capture of Richmond. He is engaged in farming in Massachusetts.

George W. Jordon was born in Cherryfield in 1813. He came to Penobscot county in 1823, and settled in Bangor, where he received a common school education. In 1836 he married Elizabeth Pennington, of Sangerville. He came to Stetson in 1838 and settled on the farm now owned by G. W. Shaw. He held the office of Selectman two years. His wife died in Stetson in 1878. He died at the same place in 1879. He was the father of five children: Frances, John A., Henry, George O., Edward. John A. Jordan was born in Stetson in 1840. In 1864 he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Maine Infantry, under Captain Adams. The regiment was under command of Colonel Hill. He served in the Army of the James under General Butler, and was present at the fall of Richmond. He was mustered out of service in May, 1865, when he returned to his native place, and in 1866 he married Sarah J. Clark, a native of Stetson, and settled on the farm on which he now lives. In 1880 he went to California, where he purchased a large tract of land and is engaged there extensively in farming in connection with his business in Stetson. He is the father of two children, Horace G. and Fisher R.

Greenville J. Shaw was born in the State of Massachusetts in 1843. When eight years of age he came to Penobscot county and settled at Dexter, where he received a common school education. He also attended the Maine State Seminary, at Lewiston, three terms, and is a graduate of Eastman's Business College, of Poughkeepsie, New York. At the age of twenty he took charge of the tannery at Vernon, where he had charge of eighteen men, and in 1866 he purchased one-half interest in the business. In 1867 he purchased the Hartland tannery in company with his father, and in the winter of 1868 and 1869, in company with his father, he purchased the tanneries at Detroit and Plymouth, which made four tanneries and eighty men under his immediate charge at one time. In 1878, during the scarcity of bark, he was obliged to close three of his tanneries, and at present operates the one at Hartland, where he has fifteen men engaged. In 1864 he married Jennie M. Loose, a native of Dexter, and is the father of five children: Frank I., Rosa T., Alice J., Henry G., and Freddie E. (died in Vernon).

Cream Brook Farm was first owned by Major Stetson, the original proprietor of the town of Stetson. It contains 640 acres of good land, well watered, and is peculiarly adapted to grazing. In 1826 the Major made a present of the whole tract of land to Amasa Stetson, who improved it and remained in possession of the farm until about 1860, when he sold out to M. L. Rice, of Bangor, who was the first to convert it into a dairy farm. Rice kept from fifty to seventy-five cows. He was the first to develop the farm into a butter producing farm; the butter manufactured by him gained the best reputation, perhaps, of any butter produced in the State. In 1870 Rice sold the farm to Charles Collins, of Aroostook county, who remained in possession of it until he sold out to the present owner, Greenville J. Shaw, who gave the farm its present appropriate name.

Rev. William E. Noyes was born in Abington, Plymouth county, Massachusetts, in 1828, where he received a liberal education. He entered the ministry in 1859, and was ordained a minister in the Baptist church, at South Auburn, Maine, in August, 1861. He has had charge of the Baptist churches of Sabattus, Leeds, Milo, Guilford, Bradford, North Newport, Corinna, Hartland, Stetson, and Kenduskeag. In 1874 he purchased the residence in which he now lives in Stetson, where he intends to remain the balance of his life. He was twice married, his first wife being Lottie A. Brown, a native of Abington, Massachusetts. She died January 28, 1859, and in 1860, October 23d, he married Alice J. Wood, a native of Stetson. He is the father of five children: Lottie A., who married C. R. Ireland, and lives in Stetson; Lizzie S., lives at home; Lucia H.; Charlie W.; Willie B.

Thomas Clark was born in Gorham in 1807, and came to Penobscot with his father in 1815. They settled in Stetson. In 1832 he married Ruth Wentworth, a native of Kennebec county. He is the father of five children, three boys and two girls—Orelia H. W., who married Brooklin P. Hubbard, and lives in Stetson. Samuel C., married twice. His first wife was Ann Perkins, who died in Stetson. He afterwards married Ome Menifer in California, where he now lives and is engaged as an engineer on the Union Pacific railroad. Lemuel S. lives in Nevada, and is also an engineer. He married Emma Coats, a native of New York. Sarah J., married John A. Jordan, and resides in Stetson. Fisher R., married May Cosson, and lives in Stockton, California, where he is Principal of the Commercial College located at that place. When Thomas R. Clark first came to Stetson there were but few families in the town.

Porter G. Wiggins was born in Wolfboro, New Hampshire, in 1814, and went from Wolfboro, when thirteen years of age, with his father to St. Albans. In 1841 he married Mary Dore, in the town of Harmony. In 1851 he came to Penobscot county, and settled on the farm on which he now lives in Stetson. He has repeatedly held the office of Selectman of his town, and has also held the office of Town Agent for many years, also the office of Road Commissioner. He is the father of six children—Emma C., who married William H. Hurd, lives in Stetson; Eldora A., married Samuel Demeritt, and resides in Winn; Newell J., lives in Wisconsin, and is engaged in the lumber business; Ferdinand E., lives at home, and is engaged in farming; Georgia A., married Rev. F. W. C. Wiggin, and lives in Oldtown; Purditta A., lives at home.

Jeremiah Locke was born in Wakefield, N. H., in 1803. He married Elizabeth B. D. Seaver in Roxbury, Massachusetts, and came to Penobscot county in 1834, settling on the farm now owned by C. H. Foster, in Stetson. His wife died in Stetson, at the age of sixty-nine years, and he died in Stetson in 1876, at the age of seventy-two. He was the father of two children—Adeline M., who married C. H. Foster, and lives in Stetson; George H., who died in Stetson, at the age of three years.

C. H. Foster was born in the county of Devonshire, England, in 1837, and came to America in 1849, in company with the Rev. C. L. Browning, of Dixmont, and remained in his family five years. At the age of seventeen he started out to support himself. In 1861 he enlisted in company K., Eleventh Maine Regiment, served three years, and re-enlisted for the balance of the war; he enlisted as a private, but for meritorious conduct was promoted from the ranks to Corporal and Sergeant, and in 1863 was promoted to First Lieutenant. While in the service he was in all the engagements of the Army of the Potomac under McClellan, and also went with Hunter on his famous raid; also took part in the siege of Charleston, and was second in command of the old "Swamp Angel," and while there joined General Butler's army, where he remained until he was wounded. On May 18, 1864, he was severely wounded while charging the rebel works in front of Petersburg, and was mustered out of service in November, 1864. In 1861 he married Caroline Daymon, who died in Stetson in 1867; then married Adeline M. Locke, and is the father of two children—George H. and Sarah L.

Hon. James Rogers was born in Wolfboro, New Hampshire, in 1798, where he married Clarissa H. Wiggin. He came to Penobscot county in 1833, and settled on the farm now owned by the Rogers heirs in Stetson. He held the post of Selectman of Stetson several years, and also represented his class in the State Legislature two terms. He died in Stetson in 1879; his wife survives him. He was the father of fourteen children, four of whom are living: John, married Francis A. Hawes, and lives in Stetson; Mary A., married W. B. Ireland, and lives in Stetson; Charles, lives in California; Carrie M., married O. H. Shepley, and lives in St. Paul, Minnesota; James W., Amanda, Sarah, Amanda, second; Samuel, died in Stetson.

The Hon. John Rogers was born in Wolfboro, New Hampshire, in 1826; at the age of seven he came to Penobscot county with his father, and settled in Stetson, where he had a common school education; he also attended the academies at Foxcroft and East Corinth for a number of years, and followed school teaching for some time. In 1853 he married Francis H. Haws, a native of Corinna. He has held the office of Selectman, Clerk, Treasurer, and Trial Justice of the town of Stetson for many years, and also represented his class in the State Legislature in 1858, and in 1878 and 1879 was elected State Senator from Penobscot county. He is the father of three children: Lyman E., died in Stetson; Jessie H., lives at home; Seymore E., lives at home.

William H. Ireland was born in Bloomfield in 1798, and in 1807 came to Newport, where he received a common school education, and also attended the academy at Bloomfield three years. When twenty-one years of age he purchased a farm in Corinth, and followed farming and school-teaching; in the latter he was engaged nineteen years. He also preached the gospel for forty-three years in the Christian church, and helped organize many churches in Penobscot county. His death occurred in Exeter in 1866. He married Mary Bean, of Corinth, in 1821; she died in Stetson in 1870. He was the father of four children—Sabinia, May J., William B., and Martha R.

William B. Ireland was born in Corinth in 1826. When eleven years of age he moved to Newport, where he received a common school education; he also attended the Corinth Academy a short time. At the age of twenty-two he engaged in the mercantile business as clerk for E. G. Allen, and afterwards for Plaisted & Co. in Stetson. At the age of thirty-one he purchased a new stock of goods and commenced business on his own account, in the room now occupied by his son, Charles R., in which business he was engaged twenty years. In 1877 he sold out his stock of goods to Charles R., and turned his attention to farming, in which business he is now engaged. He has held the office of Selectman of Stetson five years, and in 1877 represented his class in the State Legislature. In 1852 he married Mary A. Rogers, a native of Wolfboro, New Hampshire. He is the father of two children—Charles R., who married Lottie Noyes, a native of York, Maine, and lives in Stetson; Edward B., lives at home; also has one adopted daughter, Addie M.

Charles R. Ireland was born in Stetson in 1854, where he received a common school education; he also attended the Maine Central Institute and Maine State Normal School at Castine, graduated at Eastman's Business College, in Poughkeepsie, New York, and in 1874 entered into a partnership with his father in the mercantile business in Stetson, which continued about two years, when he purchased his father's interest in the business. He was appointed Postmaster February 7, 1877, which office he now holds. He was also appointed Trial Justice by Governor Connor, which office he now holds. In 1880 he married Lottie A. Noyes, a native of Maine.

VEAZIE.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES.

Veazie enjoys the peculiar distinction of being by far the smallest town in the county. It was formerly but the Seventh Ward of the city of Bangor, and was known popularly as North Bangor. Its longest line of boundary, that on the west, is but two and a half miles long. The northwest line, upon which the road from Bangor to Upper Stillwater and Oldtown, and known here as Stillwater Avenue, runs, is but half a mile long. The northeast limit—like the other two mentioned, a straight line—is one and three-fourth miles long. The east line, in the river Penobscot, is one and five-eighths miles; and the south line, also described by the river, about one and one-fourth miles. The greatest length of the town, from the north corner, upon the Orono line, to the end of Thompson's Point, in the big bend of the river, is three miles; its greatest width, from the east corner, also on the Penobscot, straight to the west line, is just one-half the length, or one and one-half miles. The total area enclosed by the confines of Veazie is but four square miles, or 2,560 acres. No part of it, except what may lie in the Penobscot, is covered with lakes or ponds, or even by any stream more than two-thirds of a mile long. A petty tributary of the river just above the village, and another below Thompson's Point, are the sum-total of the internal waters of Veazie. At the village a dam has been thrown across the Penobscot, and is made to do excellent service in supplying mills with power. This noble stream has an entire flow, past the east and south sides of the town, of about three miles.

Veazie is bounded on the west and northwest by Bangor; on the northeast by Orono; on the east by the Penobscot, and Eddington beyond; and on the south also by the river, and beyond it Brewer. Just beyond the south part of the west line of the town, stretches the mile-length of the beautiful Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Veazie has very nearly the whole of the Shore Road within its limits—about two miles' length, entering at the southwest corner, and following the river pretty closely to the village, where it ends. It starts just outside the town line, at the southeast corner of Mt. Hope Cemetery, from the Orono Road, which enters the town from Bangor very near the Shore Road, and runs straight to the village, through the southwest part of that, and on to Orono and the river road below Oldtown. Somewhat more than two miles of this road are in Veazie. Near the extreme lower part of the village, below the dam one-fourth of a mile, the Chase Road branches off from the Shore road, crosses the Orono Road one-third of a mile distant, and runs northwest straight to the west line of the town, whence it goes half a mile to a junction in Bangor with the Stillwater Avenue. The length of the Chase highway in Veazie is not quite one and three-fourths miles. Stillwater Avenue, which has a length in, or rather upon, this town of just the northwest boundary line—that is, half a mile—is an important thoroughfare which makes pretty nearly a bee-line from the west side of the Park, in Bangor, across the country through Upper Stillwater post-office to Oldtown, where it crosses into Milford, and joins the great highway on the east side of the Penobscot. The European & North American Railway has a length of two and one-eighth miles in this town, and makes but one station here—that at the village.

A REMARKABLE "HORSEBACK,"

or low, broad ridge, composed mainly of gravel, the result of glacial action far back in the geologic ages, begins in the bend of the river in this town, on the higher ground near Thompson's Point, and runs north and west of it for many miles. It is the same which we have noticed in the account of Lagrange, as intersecting that town and used for the bed of a county road, as well as for some fine farms. Its composition may easily be seen on the west side of the railway track, just before entering the village from the direction of Bangor, where it has been cut down to obtain gravel for ballasting the track; and some outlying mounds of it, or moraines, may also be seen on the other side of the railway, as one enters or leaves the village on the other side.

THE SOIL OF VEAZIE

is a sandy loam, which is in high reputation as being excellently adapted to the cultivation of corn. Nearly a century and a quarter ago, when Governor Pownall, with General Waldo and their attendants, were visiting the country above the falls on the other side of the river, the Governor observed and noted in his journal the "clear land on the left for near four miles"—looking at the time, no doubt, across the territory of Veazie and beyond.

THE INDIAN OCCUPANCY.

This tract, over which Governor Pownall cast his sagacious eye in 1759, while his earthwork was constructing at Old Fort Point, down the river, was long known as "the Plains." It is believed to have been occupied and rudely cultivated by the Indians for their corn-lands from time immemorial. Here, very likely, was situated their ancient "Negas." Negas is an Indian town known near the close of the seventeenth century to have existed somewhere in the dominions of Madockawando, then saganmore of the Tarratines. It was mentioned to the chief at Quebec in 1692, by John Nelson, Governor of Nova Scotia, who was held a prisoner there, as somewhere "up the Penobscot," in connection with the establishment of a trading house; and it has been conjectured that it may have been the old village plainly indicated by remains on the west bank of the Penobscot, about three miles above the mouth of the Kenduskeag, at a place by the English called Fort Hill. Mr. Williamson says, but not correctly at all points:

Here are the cavities of several cellars, and the remains of two or three broken stone chimneys. The site is a flat of elevated ground, with a gradual slope to the water, formed by nature, an eligible place for a fortification. When it was destroyed or abandoned, no account, either historical or traditional, gives an entire satisfaction. According to some reports, it was burned by the Mohawks; but, with much more reason, it is supposed to have been laid in ruins by a party of North-east soldiery, about a century past. It was certainly inhabited since Europeans have visited the river; for in the tillage of the land the plough has turned out such things as the utensils of cookery, bullet-moulds, pincers, and other articles of hardware, which must have been the workmanship of modern artisans. The plains in the vicinity, according to the statements of the oldest settlers, originally exhibited all the appearances of having been, at some unknown time, the corn-fields of the natives.

THE EARLY HISTORY of Veazie is altogether the history of part of Bangor, and will be found sufficiently detailed in Judge Godfrey's Annals. It was formerly, as already noted, the upper portion of the Seventh Ward of that city, being that part beyond Mount Hope. About 1852 the people residing there desired a municipal government more conveniently near, and more distinctly their own; and on the 26th of March, 1853, the town of Veazie was incorporated by the State Legislature. It took its name from the well-known old settler, General Samuel Veazie, whose descendants are prominent residents of Bangor. He was the builder of the first railroad from Bangor to Oldtown—that which ran in the interior, back from the river, was laid with strap-rail, and had a station in Bangor, which still stands on the hill overlooking the Kenduskeag Valley, said by some to have been the first railway station-house built in New England. General Veazie built a fine residence at the village, and long continued to manifest a deep interest in the business and other affairs of the town.

POPULATION, ETC.

In 1860 the people in Veazie town numbered 893. They were 810 in 1870, and 622 in 1880.

The number of polls in these years, severally, was 146, 193, and 175.

Estates in the same years, $139,992, $168,432, and $121,439.

RELIGIOUS NOTES, ETC.

The Congregational church at this place was organized while it was "North Bangor," on the 18th of June, 1838. Its pastorate has of late been vacant.

The Methodists, Free Baptists, and Calvinistic Baptists also have societies here, but their pulpits are all vacant at present except that of the first-named, which was occupied in 1881 by the Rev. J. A. L. Rich, of Orono.

The other societies of the town are the Pine Tree, No. 1,326, Knights of Honor, and the Rural Grange, No. 207, Patrons of Husbandry. There was till lately also a Reform (temperance) club.

At the village, besides a Union church, is the Town House.

THE BUSINESS of the town is mainly comprised in two saw-mills, one millwright, three coopers, two carpenters, one smith, and one boot- and shoe-maker, three general stores, one hotel, the Everett House, kept by Asa B. Waters, and one physician.

PUBLIC OFFICERS IN 1881.

N. Warren, Postmaster; A. J. Spencer, J. B. Skinner, A. J. McPheters, Selectmen; F. L. Pratt, Town Clerk; J. B. Skinner, Treasurer; J. Kent, John McCarthy, Constables; R. C. Smith, School Supervisor; Nahum Warren, Trial Justice.

Nahum Warren was born in North Yarmouth, Cumberland county, Maine, January 9, 1806. His father, Samuel Warren, was a native of Somersworth, New Hampshire. He had eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom Nahum is the oldest son. Nahum Warren married for his first wife Sarah Warren, of Ellsworth, Maine. She died, and Mr. Warren married for a second wife Clara Pullen, daughter of Dexter Pullen, of Waterville, Maine, who has now been dead many years. Mr. Warren has six children living, viz: Granville, deceased; Selden, of California; Eugene, also of California; John, of Mt. Tom, Massachusetts; Clara, now Mrs. Sproul, of Veazie, and Eva M. Mr. Warren first settled in West Waterville, where he lived three years engaged in tanning and shoemaking. He lived a short time in Ellsworth, but moved to North Bangor, now Vezie, in 1835, where he has ever since lived, being engaged in the lumber business and farming, principally the former. Mr. Warren has long been one of the leading men in Veazie, serving the town as Selectman nine years in succession. He has been selected to represent his class for two terms in the Legislature, in 1863 and again in 1870. Has served as Postmaster seven years. He is now seventy-five years old.

William L. Clark is the son of John T. Clark, who moved to Veazie when William L. was nine years old, from Calais, Maine. He was born in Brunswick, and lived in Jay and Calais before coming here. John T. Clark was born April 26, 1826, and married Mary Tortolotte, of Eddington. They had twelve children, seven boys and five girls, of whom William is the second son and third child. William L. Clark married Olive Robinson, daughter of West Robinson, of Livermore, Maine. They have five children living, having lost two in infancy, viz: Charles H., now of Brompton Falls, Canada; Cyrus R., of Charlestown, Massachusetts; Clara, widow of Isaac B. Hutchins; Fanny, now Mr. Edward K. Valentine, of Wisconsin; Abbie, now Mrs. E. S. Austin, of Hersey, Wisconsin. Mr. Clark first settled in Livermore, Maine, where he lived about three years engaged in farming. He then moved to Lexington, Maine, where he lived about three years, also engaged in farming. He then moved to Veazie, where he has since lived, engaged most of the time in mill work. He bought the farm where he now lives in 1869, and since that time has been engaged in farming. He is now seventy-five years old.

WINN:

DESCRIPTION.

The town of Winn is forty and one-half miles north-east of Bangor, on the east side of the Penobscot. It is bounded on the north by Mattawamkeag, east by Webster Plantation, south by Lee, southwest by Lincoln, and northwest by the river, beyond which lies Chester. Springfield corners with it on the southeast, and Woodville Plantation on the northwest, in the Penobscot. The greatest length of the town is a little over eight miles, from the west corner, on the Penobscot, to the east line; the greatest width, five and three-eighths miles, on that line, which is very nearly maintained half-way across the town, to the breadth from the northwest corner, at the junction of the Mattawamkeag line with the river, to the south line. From this it narrows steadily to a point at the west corner, at the junction of the river and the Lincoln line. The north or Mattawamkeag boundary has a length of four miles; the east line five and three-eighths; the south or Lee boundary five and three-fourths; the southwest a little less than four; and the river flows past Winn on the northwest about five miles. The Five Islands, which formerly gave the name to the town, are below Winn village, about one-third of the way down the river-front. Below them are Brown, Snow, Gordon, and other islands; and above the village, adjoining the north-west corner of the town, is another small islet. The area of Winn is 22,040 acres.

The track of the European & North American Railroad and the river road follow closely the bank of the river in this town, crossing and recrossing each other five times within its limits. Each has a length of more than five miles in the town. The railway makes stations at South Winn, near the west corner of the town,—which has School No. 1, but no post-office or store,—and at the village. On the river road are School No. 1, abreast of the Five Islands, and a mile further Winn station and post-office, which has Catholic and Episcopal churches, a public school-house, the Katahdin House, a large tannery, and the usual number of stores and shops. From it a road runs south and southwest four and one-half miles to East Winn post-office, and one and one-half miles further out of Winn into the angle of Lee, and across that to Springfield and eastward. Stages on this road connect Springfield with the railroad three times a week.

East Winn has a post-office, a public school-house, saw- and shingle-mills, and a shop or two. Roads run from it southwest into Lee, joining a north and south highway one-half mile from the west line of that town; also south into the same town, to Lee post-office and beyond. These and the others before mentioned, with a neighborhood road coming southeast from the river in Lincoln, running for about a mile near the southwest town line in Winn, comprise pretty nearly all the highways as yet used in this town.

Through East Winn passes the west branch of the Mattakeunk Stream, which enters from Lee nearly two miles from the southeast corner of Winn, furnishes East Winn with a valuable power, and runs north and northeast about four miles further to a junction with the East Branch. Just below East Winn it has a small affluent from the south, and half a mile further, from the west, another, which heads in three little branches in the south centre of the town. The East Branch comes in from Springfield, just where that town corners with Winn, Lee, and Webster Plantation, and has a northwesterly course of some four and one-half miles in this town before it reaches the point of union with the west branch, one and one-half miles below the north line of the town. About the same distance before reaching the junction it receives from the east a small tributary coming from the border of Webster Plantation.

The Mattakeunk Stream, formed by the union of these branches, is a quite respectable water for breadth, but is only a few miles long, flowing due north and in almost a straight course to its mouth on the Mattawamkeag. This river dips below the Mattawamkeag line into Winn in two small arcs, that near the north corner only one-third of a mile long, and the westward one a mile and a quarter, its furthest inner edge, opposite the mouth of the Mattakeunk, being only one-fourth of a mile from the north town line.

Across the entire southwest part of Winn flows a tributary of some seven miles' length, which rises in Lee, and entering Winn a mile from the southwest corner, and flowing northwest about five miles in this town, it reaches its mouth on the Penobscot about midway between the village and the west corner of the town. A kind of limited delta, of very singular shape, begins almost half a mile from the mouth, and is crossed by the rail- and wagon-roads. Not far from half-way across the town this brook receives from the southwest a tiny affluent, and a more important one from the same direction, which heads in two branches near the southwest line of the town, and flows altogether in Winn. Above the mouth of the brook, at intervals of about a mile, are three small tributaries of the Penobscot, and another a mile below.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND HISTORY.*

Winn received its first settler as far back as when Maine left her now sister State, Massachusetts. Joseph Snow came from Arlington down the river in the early spring of 1820, made a clearing, and erected a log hut on the same lot where now his son Joseph lives. He raised some potatoes, corn, etc., in the fall returned home, and in late winter or early spring of 1821 brought his family of four girls and six boys to Snowville, as it was for a long time called, on the ice of the Penobscot. Then not a house had been erected between Piscataquis Falls and Honlton. Indeed, their nearest neighbor was Penuel Shumway, who lived a mile below Piscataquis River, in Howland. The snow came on in the fall of 1820 heavy and deep, so that on the family's arrival in 1821 the present Joseph was told by his father to dig in a plat of ground, now lying opposite the residence of Joseph Snow, between the highway and the European & North American Railroad, for some potatoes. He dug under four feet of snow and found the potatoes unfrozen and sound. His daughter Eliza died September 6, 1825, aged twenty years—the first death in town. She was buried in what was called the old Snow burying ground, on the Snow Lot No. 5, now cut off from the highway by the European & North American Railroad. In 1830 Rebecca Snow was married to Columbus Dunn—the first marriage within the precincts of Winn. Mr. Snow died in 1862, leaving many descendants in this section.

In 1822 Ephraim Kyle came from Bradley and made a clearing and built a log house on what was afterwards Lot No. 8, where now David Bunker resides. One of his daughters, Elsie, married Alfred Gordon, and is the mother of a large family, most of whom reside in Winn. Mr. Kyle died December 8, 1841, aged seventy-six years. Jackson D. Kyle, a grandson, resides across the Penobscot in Chester.

In the upper part of the town Elijah Brockett made a clearing and erected a log hut on the lot where W. J. Reed now lives, but a short distance below the tannery of H. Poor & Son, quite near the shore. Traces of the stone chimney of his hut are still visible, the house having been burned down by an adopted son as his step-father was moving to Lincoln. A daughter of Mr. Brockett married a Mr. Perry, of Lincoln, and is still living. Mr. Kyle's death was caused by a landing of logs rolling onto him as he was getting them into the river.

In 1823 Samuel Briggs came to Winn and took up lots where now stand the Cottage House, Morley's Winn Hotel, and also the Michael McCue place. He was a bachelor and so remained for a long time. He built a small building, not over ten feet square, and traded with the Indians, selling them powder, shot, and rum, and buying their furs and skins. That was the only trading station between Oldtown and Houlton, but I do not hear that Briggs became very rich. When steamboat navigation commenced on the Penobscot this landing was down at the shore, close by the Briggs store, but this was not till about 1848. Mr. Briggs afterwards married a Mrs. Miller, whose maiden name was Peabody, and who always claimed relationship with George Peabody, the London banker. Mr. Briggs died since 1870, a town pauper of Mattawamkeag, where he had resided for a long time. Soon after this Pennel Shumway, before spoken of, and his son-in-law, Ira Pitman, came and located on the Webber and Harmon lots, about half-way between the present towns of Lincoln and Mattawamkeag. Shumway and Pitman afterwards removed to Minnesota, where Shumway died, three years since, at quite an advanced age.

* The remainder of this chapter, except the statistical matter and the biographies, is from the pen of B. F. Fernald, Esq., a well-known attorney and Trial Justice at Winn village.

In 1830-31 the town was lotted off by Zebulon Bradley. In 1829 the Military Road had been extended through Winn, running towards Houlton. Before the Military Road was built their mail facilities were meagre and postal arrangements primitive. The mail was carried by boat on the Mattawamkeag, and thence by horseback to Houlton. Their post-offices were salt-boxes fastened to some object by the shore, and the mail-carrier was postmaster as well, at the several salt-box offices of the scattered settlements in the wilderness. In the old Snow burying-ground is the grave, though unmarked by any stone, of a Mr. Moor, the first mail-carrier between Bangor and Houlton, who was drowned at Slogunda Falls, on the Mattawamkeag. Moor's body and the mail-bag were found the next day caught in a boom of the Penobscot, near where D. C. Haynes now lives, in Winn. A Mr. Dagget, who was with him, was also drowned, and was buried near Gordon Falls, on the Mattawamkeag, and till lately, if not now, a trace of the grave exists. It took four weeks to make a trip from Bangor to Houlton, which is now made in less than two days.

The mention of Gordon Falls reminds me of a brief location on the confines of Winn and Mattawamkeag, about which but little can be learned, as the memory of man hardly runneth to that period. Indeed, the most information I can obtain is from the wife of S. W. Coombs, of Mattawamkeag, which is that her grand-father, John Gordon, about the commencement of the present century, built a mill on the Mattawamkeag, on what is now termed the Lower Pitch of Gordon Falls, he giving the name to the falls.

The locus in quo appears to have been at the most eastern limit of lot B, in Winn, on the right bank of the Penobscot River, on land now owned by Benjamin F. Fernald, Esq., of Winn, Mr. Gordon having gone to the Province of New Brunswick about 1812. The Indians, not liking the destruction of their noble forests, burned down the mill. His son, Alexander Gordon, was for some time largely engaged in sawing lumber at Stillwater. Alexander's sister married a Mr. Jackins.

After the lotting of the town and making the Military Road, many who came from distant parts of the State to work upon the road, located in this, the then Plantation No. 4, and in adjoining townships.

In 1844 Thomas S. Ranney came from Stetson and became a quite active business man in the Plantation, serving as Clerk, Assessor, Treasurer, etc., keeping hotel in the Cottage House, near the Lincoln line, built by Captain Cyrus Fay but a short time before. Mr. Ranney died March 19, 1868, in Winn. His widow resides in Winn, a short distance below Winn village.

Up to 1851 most of the settlements in Winn were on the Military Road, and by farmers where the best farming land in town was situated; all the farmers being, as is usual in new settlements, lumbermen a large part of the year. In 1846, July 30, an act of the Legislature was passed to promote the improvement of the navigation of the Penobscot River, authorizing William and Daniel Moor, Jr., of Waterville, to make improvements on the Penobscot above Oldtown. They not deeming it practicable, their brother, General Wyman B. S. Moor, received an assignment of the charter, built the steamer Governor Neptune, and ran her from Oldtown to Piscataquis Falls, commencing May 27, 1847. After making improvements at Piscataquis Falls, removing rocks from the channel, etc., November 27, 1847, the Governor Neptune was run over Piscataquis Falls to a place called Nicketow, now Medway, fourteen miles above Five Island Rips. Afterwards, except at very high water, the boat was run only to Five Island Rips, or rather the landing place of Five Islands, now Winn village, but a few miles below the Rips. But for quite a while before 1851, when a hotel was built at Winn village by Paul Stratton, this landing place was opposite the Cottage House, hardly a dozen rods from the line between Winn and Lincoln, where the Cottage House was kept by Thomas S. Ranney, and across the road from the hotel and nearer the shore resided Captain Cyrus Fay, the agents for the boats. Elisha Thurlow now resides there, having three or four years ago rebuilt, the Fay House having been burnt down. The pilot of the boat, and the first pilot on the Penobscot River, was David Bryant, a good pilot, but a hard-drinking man, and to his habitual drunkenness is said to be due the selection of a poor landing place for the boats, and eventually the location of the village and tannery and houses of H. Poor & Son upon a ledge hill adjacent to the steamboat company's store-house, when but a half mile or less below, near Coombs's Eddy, every circumstance would have been far more favorable for both landing and village. The interference of Veazie and others in the navigation of the Penobscot River led, in 1849 and 1850, to a lawsuit between Moor and Veazie, in which Moor was successful, and continued the navigation of the Penobscot till about 1857, when Moor, becoming involved with Dunning, of Bangor, in the building of part of the Maine Central Railroad, his interest was purchased by Joseph L. Smith, of Oldtown, who continued its navigation till bought off by the European & North American Railroad Company. Moor employed the steamers Governor Neptune, Sam Houston, and the Mattanawcook; while Smith built and employed at the time the steamers Aroostook and John A. Peters, and the steam scows Lizzie Smith and Nicatow for use in low water.

This much digression has been given to a partial history of the navigation of the Penobscot as the settlement and growth of the present Winn village from 1847 to 1863, when Shaw, Tilson & Co. established the present tannery of Henry Poor & Son, was due to the steamboat navigation on the Penobscot River.

In 1850, the navigation of the Penobscot having become assured on the successful issue of the Moor and Veazie lawsuit, Thomas S. Ranney removed from the Cottage House to the steamboat landing at Five Islands, built the small house on the ledge just east of the Katabdin House, and went into trade, having built in the fall of 1850, holding then, if not previously, the first post-mastership in Winn. In 1851 Paul Stratton, a brother of Frink, who had settled in Chester a quarter of a century before, built a hotel in Winn village to accommodate the travel by steamboat and stage. And on those very years that started the building of Winn village, operations were commenced five miles southward, at what has since become East Winn, on the falls of the Mattakeunk Stream, or rather the west branch of said stream, where Dexter, Phineas, and Samuel H. Merrill made a clearing, felling six acres of trees, having bought two lots of land containing where now is the upper dam and pond, and also the lower dam and mill stands, and also built a saw-mill and log house that fall. The log house stood very near where the Lee road intersects the Winn and Springfield road. All this time the Merrills were residing in Lee, five miles distant, but in April, 1851, Isaac J. Mallett, a brother-in-law of the Merrills, moved with his family into a logging camp and mill house. Mallett ran the mill for several years, and C. J. Boobar, another relative of the Merrills, shortly after came. Afterwards Levi B. Merrill and Mallett put in a shingle and clap-board-mill, and in 1861 a grist-mill was added. About 1853 Samuel H. Merrill moved to Winn and ran the mill, and in 1875 S. H. Merrill rebuilt the saw-mill, making almost a model saw-mill, and now runs it.

In 1877 a post-office was established at East Winn, and Samuel Merrill was appointed postmaster.

In 1859 action was taken in the town to build the Winn and Springfield road, and in the course of a year or two that road was built -- the only communication before having been a road reaching the river near Joseph Snow's.

Between 1851 and 1854 the inhabitants of Snowville, or River Township No. 4, were organized as Five Islands Plantation, Thomas H. Ranney being Clerk during its entire plantation existence; and on April 8, 1857, the town of Winn was incorporated in accordance with a legislative act passed the previous March. The warrant was directed by Joseph H. Perkins, of Lee, a Justice of the Peace, to Phineas Merrill, of Winn, and at that meeting Phineas I. Merrill was chosen Moderator; Thomas S.

Ranney, Town Clerk; Cyrus J. Fay, Phineas I. Merrill, and Thomas S. Ranney, Selectmen; Paul Stratton, Treasurer; Phineas I. Merrill, Supervisor of Schools; Jeremiah D. Webber, Collector of Taxes; Thomas S. Ranney, Town Agent. No. 1, 2, and 3 school districts were formed, No. 3 then including the present No. 4. The black man had an office as well as the white man, John Barnett being chosen Fence Viewer. Still, they seemed to think the Selectmen would bear watching, as Jonathan Coombs, Samuel Davis, and Thomas J. Boobar were chosen auditors of Selectmen's accounts.

The first town meeting spoken of above was called at the steamboat office, the warrant having been posted at the inn of Lewis F. Stratton, now Sheriff of Penobscot county, son of Paul Stratton.

At a subsequent meeting held April 20, at the school-house in District No. 1, near John W. Babcock's, Alfred Gordon being Constable, Lewis F. Stratton was chosen Moderator; $75 were raised for town charges and support of poor; education was encouraged by raising $100 for the support of schools, and $300 for highways.

In 1855 the list of voters in the Plantation numbered 32, and August 20, 1857, the first year of its existence as a town, they numbered but 36 voters. At their fall election of 1857, their vote for Governor was: Lot M. Morrill, 30, Manasseh H. Smith, 6, which proportion was maintained for all the other candidates, when Thomas S. Ranney had 28 votes, and James C. Emerson 7, for Representative to the Legislature.

At the following spring's town meeting the modest bills of the officers contrasted strangely with the bills of the municipal officers of Winn of a later date, they being:

C. J. Fay, Selectman.....	$11 29
Phineas I. Merrill, Selectman.....	5 00
T. S. Ranney, Selectman and Supervisor.....	6 00
Thomas S. Ranney, Clerk.....	3 00
Paul Stratton, Treasurer.....	3 00
Alfred Gordon, Constable.....	4 00
Total.....	$32 29

In 1858 $75 only was raised for town charges and the poor, while $150 was raised for schools, an increase which portended much good.

In 1858 the inhabitants of Winn voted on the liquor law, eight for the prohibitory law and five for license.

In 1859 George H. Haynes was chosen Town Clerk, which position he held every year until 1867.

For quite a long time Thomas Ranney, one of the most active business men in town, was their First Selectman, and he was esteemed a veritable town father. He died in the spring of 1868.

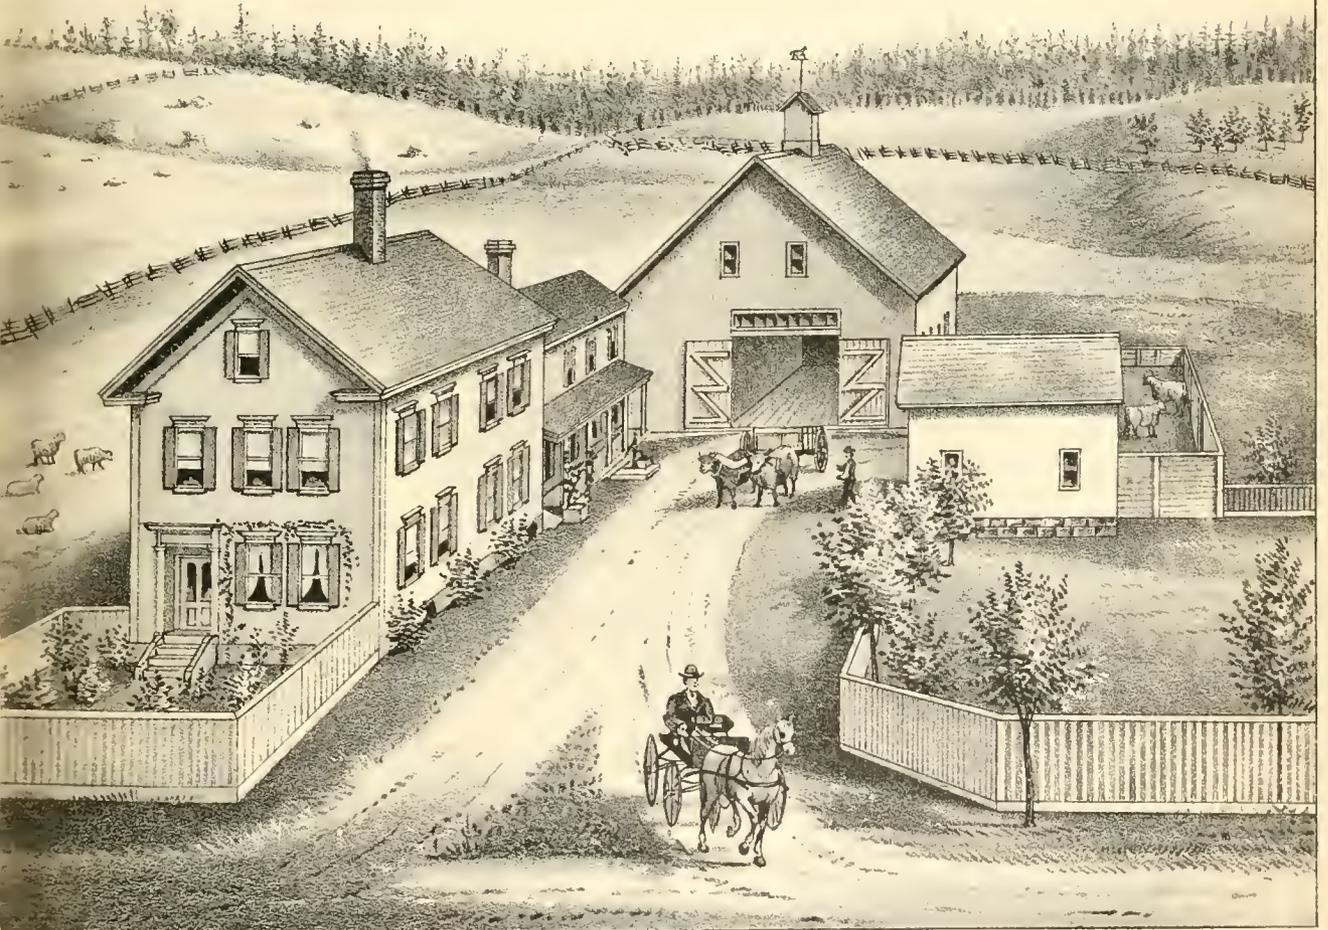

In 1863 the business and population of Winn received a large impetus by the tannery, store, and dwelling-houses of Shaw, Tilson & Co., composed of the since extensive tanning firm of Shaw Brothers, well known in Eastern Maine and Canada, Charles W. Tilson, at present manager of a tannery of Shaw Brothers in Canada, and the company being the present firm of H. Poor & Son, of Boston. They commenced operations in the fall of 1863; built a tannery seven hundred feet long, store-houses, and tenement-houses, to the value of $60,000; and bought a large part of the town of Winn and Woodville.

W. R. Houston.

VIEW FROM RES. LOOKING TOWARD WINN.

RESIDENCE OF NICHOLAS R. HUSTON, WINN, PENOBSCOT CO., ME.

Previous to this, in 1857, George R. Davis and Samuel Davis, Jr., built the house which is now occupied by Mrs. L. J. Blakemore, milliner, went into trade, and afterwards failed. In 1859 William Willy and George H. Haynes were trading in the Davis store, as Willy & Haynes, and afterwards sold to Joseph L. Smith of Oldtown, and Smith and Haynes traded as J. L. Smith & Company from 1861 to 1863, when Shaw, Tilson & Company, tanners, bought out Smith, having built the present company store, where now trades Thaddeus R. Joy, formerly of Sebec, Maine. Shaw, Tilson & Company continued in trade, with George H. Haynes manager, till 1867, when they sold to Ingersoll & Coborn, who were succeeded by J. C. Grant & Company, then by Hall, Chase & Lovejoy, and they by T. R. Joy & Company, the company being Wilbur F. Lovejoy, who retired in 1880, leaving T. R. Joy, now in trade. In 1865 Abner B. Chase became agent for the boat company, and in company with James Butterfield, of Springfield, and Horatio Gates, of Lincoln (deceased in 1881), built the store where William H. Chesley now trades, trading as A. B. Chase & Company. A. B. Chase held also for some time the position of express agent and Postmaster, Trial Justice and Town Treasurer, and his wife, Frank E. Chase, a sister of James Butterfield, kept a millinery shop. They have since moved to Norway, where Mrs. Chase keeps a millinery store.

In 1867 the interest of Shaw & Tilson in the tannery was bought out, and the new firm was Poor & Kingman, composed of Henry Poor and other members of his family, of Boston, Massachusetts, and Romanzo S. Kingman, who had married into the Shaw family. Mr. Kingman was a tall, spare, energetic man, whose peculiar physiognomy is well remembered in Penobscot county. In 1869 the Poors bought out Kingman, who removed to what was then called Independence Plantation, a township on the Mattawamkeag River, just east of Mattawamkeag, where on Jimskitticook Falls, in the almost wilderness, he with the Shaw brothers built up a tannery and town, as if by magic, a city springing up in the night. He afterwards sold out to the Shaw brothers and went to Sparta, Wisconsin, where he has ever since been engaged in banking with his brother.

The Poors then did business in Winn under the name of H. Poor & Son, the son then being Eben S. Poor, since deceased, as has also Henry Poor, the principal members now being John O. Poor and Charles C. Poor, sons of Henry Poor, with other members of the Poor family, which may be said to be rather rich than poor.

Henry Poor & Son employed as their agent from 1869 to 1871-72 Grove H. Moor, of Northville, New York, till he was suspended on account of his intemperate habits (though since he has become a reformed man and an able dentist), when Frank Gilman, who was then in trade at Winn, a son of John H. Gilman, of Orono, was employed as agent, who has ever since remained in that capacity. The foreign population brought in by the tannery gave to Winn a considerable rough element, and in those days, before a firm public opinion gave a strong overcoming force to the liquor law, gambling and drinking saloons were very flourishing and popular, and rum held extensive sway.

Silas Buswell, Jr., and his saloon, and the many other opportunities, may be well remembered. After a short, enterprising career that individual, whose opportunities were golden but whose actual life was leaden, left Winn a drunken sot, and went to Medford, Wisconsin, where he now is.

George H. Coynes in 1867 commenced trade in the store now occupied by Ambrose Dennis, which he occupied for a while afterwards, trading in the store he now occupies near the European & North American Railway depot, where he has traded, with the exception of his absence between 1870 and 1875. The other traders in town have been Henry H. Blackwell, in drugs and watch repairing; Aaron W. Smith, same; Frank Gilman, Lewis F. Stratton, and Fred Edwards, different members of the family of Caleb Estes.

In 1864 Charles J. Carll came from Unity, built a house and went into the harness business, and has ever since remained, adding to it that of hardware in 1879; and has also held the treasuryship of Winn some years.

Ambrose Dennis came from Passadumkeag in 1873-74, and engaged in the hardware business, and has also filled several town offices. In 1867 George H. and Guilford D. Stratton started to build the present Katahdin House, a building of very large dimensions, in anticipation that the European & North American Railway, then in contemplation, would not cross the Mattawamkeag River, but turn eastward, thus making Winn the depot for the upper country, but contrary to expectations Mattawamkeag became that depot. The Strattons failed. H. Poor & Son bought the huge ark and completed it, and Michael L. Ross, of the Vanceboro eating house, and afterwards Simon B. Gates, who bought it in 1881, have ever since been its dispensers of refreshments.

Lewis F. Stratton, Thomas S. Ranney, George H. Haynes, John B. Megquier, Abner B. Chase, Wilbur F. Lovejoy, and Thaddeus R. Joy have been the respective Postmasters of Winn from 1851, with the lapse of two or three years, when Uncle Sam could find no servant in Winn, and the people went to Mattawamkeag for their mail.

For a short time during stage times a post-office was kept at South Winn to accommodate that section and North Lincoln; but since the advent of the European & North American Railroad this has been discontinued.

In 1869 Caleb Estes bought what were then termed the Dwinel lands, in Winn, formerly owned by Rufus Dwinel, of Oldtown, and built a steam shingle-mill above Winn village; but this proved a failure in a short time, as did the purchase, when the lands fell into the hands of T. S. Moor and Abram Moor, of Bangor, who own there some two or three thousand acres.

The people of Winn early attended to their educational requirements, and though in many instances in the sparsely settled localities the schools were taught in the houses of the inhabitants, yet temples of education were soon reared, and school-teachers were teaching the young Five Islanders the ways of science and the world. In Snowville a school-house was built in 1847, and I think earlier a structure had also been dedicated to that purpose. In 1852, the first school then being in the boat office, a school-house was built in Winn village, near where the house of the widow Caleb Estes now stands, opposite the Katahdin House, which, if I understand rightly, was afterwards occupied as a dwelling-house, and still is, though removed onto the Lot 27, at the lower end of the village, by Samuel Davis, who died in the summer of 1881. At that time School District No. 3 seemed to embrace widely different sections, namely: the village, now District No. 3, and East Winn, now District No. 4, five miles distant. Presuming the population to average five times the number of voters, Winn, during its early municipal life, seems to have raised at least $1 per inhabitant for the support of schools. In 1870 a new school-house was built in District No. 1, on the Military Road, the Snow District; but the tannery firm, about 1865, built in the village on the hill a large two-story house, the lower story for a school, the upper story for a Town Hall, and rented the same to the town for its several purposes. About 1874 this was purchased by the town and school district, and somewhat remodeled to accommodate, with the use of the hall, the three grades into which the school is divided. About 1860 a school-house was built in District No. 4, a house having been built in No. 2 a few years previous. On account of the new settlements throughout the town, four sub districts have since been formed, in which, in two instances, houses have been supplied by small structures, the others still using residences of citizens.

The first one of the learned professions to seek for a livelihood in Winn was Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, who had served in the war of the Rebellion in the First Maine Heavy Artillery, and who came to Winn in 1865. Here, with good abilities, with a good physique and pleasant ways, he got quite a good practice, when, toward the last of his stay in Winn, he lapsed into intemperate habits, from which he was happily rescued by the Red-ribbon movement, and his career since then is well known to all. He is now living in a town named in honor of him

Reynolds, in Dakota Territory, practicing farming, and is postmaster of his town.

The next one of the professionals coming to Winn was Benjamin F. Fernald, who came from Exeter in 1868 to seek a field for labor in the practice of law. Here he still resides, holding the positions of Trial Justice, Notary Public, and Pension Notary, and having held the position of School Committee and Collector of Taxes.

J. F. King next, for a brief season in the fall of 1869, came to us from Paris (not the transatlantic one), newly fledged and replete with legal lore. But he did little else than run up a board-bill for his father to pay, and getting into bad company and consequently bad habits. He was soon recalled by his father, being hardly six months in town.

In 1871 Dr. John R. Hathaway, from Temple, Franklin county, was introduced into this section by his brother, J. H. Hathaway, then engaged as an insurance agent in Bangor, and settled in Winn, where he remained till 1874, when he removed to Lincoln, in practice with his father-in-law, Moses Wilson, M. D., when he removed to Howard City, Michigan, where he now is, I understand, doing well.

In 1871 also came James H. Burgess, lawyer, who had become known in the Penobscot Valley by having been in the drug business in Lincoln several years before and failed; besides, his father had lived for some time in Old-town, and at that time his mother and family lived in Orono. A short time previous to coming to Winn, Burgess had been a clerk in the Pension Department at Washington, and later in the extension of the Post-office and Custom-house at Bangor. After filling several town offices in Winn, in 1876 he was a candidate for Clerk of Courts of Penobscot county, in which he was successful, and at the close of his term in 1880 he went into the practice of law at Corinna, where he still remains.

In 1873 Dr. F. W. Merrill came from Brownville, Maine, to engage in the practice of medicine at Winn, where he still remains.

In 1878 E. B. Towle came from Jackson to engage in the practice of law, employing himself in teaching for a year or more of his stay in Winn. He held the position of Selectman, Supervisor, and Collector of Taxes, and in the spring of 1881 he removed to Kansas, where he had an uncle residing, and at last accounts was practicing law at Clay Center, Clay county, Kansas.

In 1877 Jeremiah E. Estes returned to Winn, having been engaged in lawing and milling in Kingman and in Macwahoc, Aroostook county. He still remains in Winn pursuing the same business.

The sons of Vulcan who, with brawny arm, struck while the iron was hot, have been P. King and Samuel Davis, Jr., whose father removed from Mattawamkeag in 1852, and who had a shop just out of the village. The shop has since become the house of Charles King, a worthy French citizen of Winn. There, about 1864, William Willy completed the present shop of E. P. Lee, occupied it for a couple of years, and sold it to Stephen B. Lovejoy, who removed to Winn from Lincoln. Mr. Willy eventually removed to Mattawamkeag, where he now resides. Mr. Lovejoy occupied the shop until about 1871, was then with E. P. Lee two years, and in 1875 he died a very respected citizen. His widow still resides in town, and an adopted son, Wilbur F. Lovejoy, now book-keeper for H. Poor & Son, has held many stations of honor in town, though still quite a young man. The present blacksmiths are E. P. Lee and John D. Stanwood.

The large foreign element in the population of Winn, brought here by employment in the tannery, gives many adherents to the Catholic faith, and about 1870 a church was commenced on the hill nearly opposite the school-house, which in the course of two years was completed. John Hardman was then overseer for H. Poor & Son in the tannery, and helped greatly to push forward the enterprise. His successor, James Rice, also has done much for the church, and several elegant and comparatively costly windows attest to the liberality of Irish and French citizens in a large circle about Winn. The dimensions of the church are thirty-five feet by sixty, with twenty feet post, built at a cost of $6,000. It has eight large windows, which cost $25 each, besides several smaller ones of less cost, and one larger one, the gift of John Hardman, of about $40. Since its construction, those in charge of this church have been Rev. Daniel McPhail, Rev. John J. Cassidy, Rev. James Carus, all residing at Benedicta, Aroostook county, while Rev. D. Francis Cinq-Mars, now in charge, resides at Winn, holding service every Sunday. There are in Winn about forty French families and about fifteen other Catholic families, and from seventy to one hundred Irish population, the Irish being less in families. This church also gathers in many from quite a large circuit about Winn.

Rev. Thomas J. Marsden came in 1863, from Clarks-town, New York, to occupy the vacant place and establish an Episcopal church in Winn. In numbers this church has not had material success, but in 1871 a neat little church edifice was erected in a grove on a ledge bluff at the lower end of the village, at a cost of about one thousand five hundred dollars, a larger part—in fact, nearly all—having been contributed by a lady in Philadelphia. Rev. R. W. B. Webster, Rev. James Davis, and Rev. Frederick Pember have since been in charge of this church. At present there is none in charge, and the membership has hardly ever exceeded twelve or fifteen. All those in charge have been from England. Mrs. Davis received a large inheritance, and Mr. Davis was last heard of in the practice of medicine near Portland, a very learned man. Rev. Mr. Pember is farming in Kennebec, having received a large inheritance from England.

Winn can never be very successful as a farming town. Still, there are a few quite good farms in town. The descendants of Joseph Snow, the pioneer, have continued farming, and have quite a good farm. Among the best farms in town are those of Nicholas R. Houston on the Military Road just above Winn village, who has a fine set of buildings connected with these.

R. S. Kingman, while resident here, had a good farm. George S. Ranney, a son of Thomas S. Ranney, has with one of the Brown Islands leased from Mr. Andrews a very good farm.

Some of the land in the back part of the town is free from rocks, but more liable to frost, and among those Mr. Joseph Deering has a nice farm.

The farms of David Bunker and of Daniel C. Haynes should not be omitted.

A large number of new settlers have come in within a year or two, giving their sole attention to farming on quite good soil, and their influence will be felt in the town.

But the town as a whole is much better adapted for grass than tillage. But little attention has been paid till very lately to fruit-raising, therefore these must be obtained outside.

The European & North American Railroad reached Winn from Bangor in the fall of 1869, bringing us nearer the East and West, giving a station in the village and also a telegraph station, the agent and operator being at first Edgar F. Davis, of Auburn, a relative of James M. Lunt, whose fortunes he has followed, and since his departure Stephen M. Chase, of Lincoln, both able and gentlemanly men. Winn is the station for Lee, but ten miles distant, and for Springfield, sixteen miles distant, with which latter place a mail route connects tri-weekly. Winn is also the point of departure for the sportsmen going down on to the Sysladobsis, Duck, and other lakes, of whom there are two clubs, the Duck Lake and Dobsis Clubs, composed of Massachusetts and New Hampshire gentlemen, who have land and buildings, boats and fishing facilities, and one of them a large fishing establishment near the confines of Penobscot and Washington counties, under the care of S. L. F. Ball.

Winn has several water-powers, though but slightly improved—one into Penobscot river at the village, or rather just above, at Five Island Rips (Five Islands being from five islands in the Penobscot River, near the town line of Winn and Mattawamkeag); Gordon Falls, in the Mattawamkeag and within a mile or two of the European & North American Railroad; and several falls on the Mattakeunk Stream.

Only those on the lots about five miles from Winn village are improved by shingle-, saw-, and clapboard-mills, though other improvements have been much agitated; but the forest is largely burnt after the peelings of the hemlock and the almost annual strippings of hemlock, spruce, pine, and cedar lumber; though the water power at Gordon Falls on the Mattawamkeag, having a large tract of forest back of it, and having but about three miles of quite good road to connect it with Mattawamkeag station, or less than half that with the nearest point on the European & North American Railway, may be improved. This lies very near to the Mattawamkeag line, and is owned by B. F. Fernald, Esq., of Winn.

In 1843, and some time after, John Fiske of Boston, Massachusetts, and Bridge of Milford, owned all of Winn, except, perhaps, lands owned by Rufus Dwinel, of Oldtown. The site of the village was obtained by Wyman B. S. Moore, but his title failed. It was afterwards called Bridgetown. John M. Winn, a young man, poor but enterprising, and employed in an insurance office in Salem, Massachusetts, got into the good graces of David Pingree, of that town, and afterwards was employed by Pingree as book-keeper.

Neither Fisk nor Bridge had sons who aspired for business or who called for the property, the primeval forest, but only for the money obtained from it for spending, and Winn bought the township of Fisk and Bridge, backed by Pingree. Winn then resided in Bangor, having an interest with Pingree in the land.

Near the time of the incorporation of the town of Winn, named for that proprietor, John M. Winn became involved by loaning money, by endorsements, and other ways in which sharpers overcame him, and he went, about that time, reduced from the possession of many thousands to poverty, back to Salem to live with a pair of maiden sisters, where he died on charity.

When the tannery firm bought, in 1863, they bought the Pingree and Winn lands. All lands that had not been taken up by settlers were sold, ten thousand one hundred acres, October 3, 1881, to Joseph W. Burke, of Lee. The Dwinel lands are in possession of the Moors, of Bangor, some two or three thousand acres. The balance the old farmers and the new settlers occupy, becoming benefactors by putting two blades of grass where none grew before. Winn had its greatest growth in the seventh decade of this century now, and since its increase must be from the tillers of the soil, is slow and sure.

As an illustration of liberality in voting, in 1862 William H. Maling was sick in his bed, three miles from the voting place, and a motion was made and a committee of two were appointed to take the box to him to vote, which was done, the meeting waiting their return.

Reuben Harmon was drawn as a jurymen. Reuben didn't want to go, so he came to Winn village, and got Michael L. Boss to take his place. The accommodating Constable and Clerk were acquiescent, not having completed their duties, and Michael L. Ross's name was put in the place of Reuben Harmon's, and Mike Ross performed the services.

When the Gordon Mill was erected on the Mattawamkeag, assistants came a long distance to help raise it. Rum being plenty and strong, three days were passed in carousal. On the fourth day they fell to work and raised the mill.

Somewhere in the seventh decade a Bible class was formed in Winn village, composed of the flower of the youth—Grove H. Moor, agent of H. Poor & Son; George H. Stratton, Frank Gilman, Henry H. Blackwell, H. G. Naurt, and several other active business men. The object was to hold evening meetings at the place of business of one of their members, and the one who drank the hardest was the leader of the class. This continued for half a dozen years, and had a great influence. Dr. Reynolds, Grove Moor, Frank Gilman, and others have reformed. Dr. Reynolds had a barbecue, several roasted pigs and plenty of rum, lasting nearly a week, and the Doctor's office at the last abounded in snakes and almost every other specimen of a menagerie.

STATISTICAL.

Winn had a population of 253 by the census of 1860, had 714 in 1870, and 898 in 1880. The number of polls in 1860 was 41, 248 in 1870, and 202 in 1880. The valuations of estates for these several years were $25,057, $95,798, and $103,304.

THE PROFESSIONS

in Winn include one Episcopal and one Roman Catholic clergyman (the Methodist pulpit at present is vacant), one physician, and three lawyers.

THE INDUSTRIES

of the town comprise one tannery, two manufacturers of long lumber, one of short lumber, and one of both; one harness-maker, one boot- and shoe-maker, one carriage-maker, one tinman, four carpenters, two smiths, and one merchant tailor.

There are also three general stores, two for millinery and fancy goods, one of confectionery, and one market.

One hotel, the Katahdin House, is kept at the village.

THE ASSOCIATIONS

are the Silver Star Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars, and the Juvenile Temple.

TOWN OFFICERS IN 1881.

W. F. Lovejoy, S. H. Merrill (East Winn), Postmasters; Frank Gilman, W. H. Chesley, N. R. Huston, Selectmen; W. F. Lovejoy, Town Clerk; W. F. Lovejoy, Treasurer; Hiram Davis, Collector; Hiram Davis, Charles J. Carle, A. K. Lewis, Constables; H. N. Fifield, School Supervisor; B. F. Fernald, Frank Gilman, E. Estes, E. B. Towle, William H. Chesley, Samuel H. Merrill (Quorum); B. F. Fernald, Ambrose Dennis, F. C. Estes (Trial); D. Merrill (Dedimus), Justices.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

One of the prominent merchants in Winn is Captain William H. Chesley, who was born in Paris, Oxford county. His father, David Chesley, was a native of Paris; he married Mary Knight, who was a granddaughter of Joseph Weare or Wier (it is spelled both ways), the famous Indian killer, of old Falmouth. David and Mary Chesley had seven children, viz: Julia A., widow of the late Alvin Haynes; William H.; Joseph M., deceased; Sarah C., now wife of Charles Green, of Mattawamkeag; Mary A., now Mrs. Charles A. Haynes, of Bangor; Olive E., deceased; David B., died from exposure in the army. David Chesley came to this county in 1833, and lived in Chester and Lincoln. He died in 1870. Mrs. Chesley is still living, being eighty-four years old. Captain William H. Chesley was born February 4, 1826. On reaching manhood he worked in the lumber yards in the winter and on the farm in summer. He engaged in the lumber business for himself when eighteen. He continued in this a few years, then spent some years as scaler, explorer, etc., for lumber companies. He then became a raft pilot on the river for some time during the spring months. In 1856 he became a captain on the river between this place (Winn) and Oldtown. He continued as captain on the river as long as the boats continued to run, or till 1869. During part of this time he kept a store also in connection with his river business. After this he did some surveying and some writing, there being no lawyer in the village. In 1876 he came to Winn and opened a dry-goods store. In 1865 and 1866 he represented his town in the Legislature. He has held various town offices, and served for three years as County Commissioner. He married Emma J. Morrill, daughter of Henry T. and Jane Morrill, of Lincoln. They have no children other than an adopted daughter.

Hiram Davis, deputy Sheriff of Aroostook and Penobscot counties, was born in St. George, New Brunswick, April 11, 1840. His parents, Thomas and Elizabeth Davis, had eight children, seven of whom lived to manhood and womanhood, viz: Mary, Josiah, Hiram, Wellington, Eliza, Phœbe, and Melissa. Hiram Davis, the second son of this family, was raised on the farm in St. George. His father was a lumberman and ship builder, but owned a farm where the family lived. On becoming of age Hiram engaged in lumbering on the Penobscot, coming here when fourteen years of age. He has been engaged in the lumber business until within four years, and in 1877 was appointed deputy Sheriff, which office he now holds, and which takes all his time. He married for his first wife Ann E. Henry, daughter of Andrew Henry, of Prince William, York county, New Brunswick; she died April 14, 1859. Mr. Davis married for his second wife Miss Lydia A. Scott, daughter of Moses Scott, of Chester, Maine. They have had four children, of whom Martin and Henry only are living.

Mrs. S. B. Lovejoy, of Winn, is a daughter of Jonathan and Betsey Peasley. She was born February 28, 1815, in Jefferson, Lincoln county, where her parents spent most of their life, though Mrs. Peasley was born in Whitefield, Maine. They were originally from New Hampshire. Mr. and Mrs. Peasley had four children, viz: Mary, Miles, Betsey, and Washington. Betsey, the subject of this sketch, married Stephen B. Lovejoy, of Fayette, Maine. He lived in Sebec until coming to this county, working at the blacksmith's trade. He came to Lincoln in 1834, and was married in 1836. They lived in Lincoln about thirty years, where he worked at his trade of blacksmith. He moved here to Winn in 1866, where he died February 15, 1876. Mrs. Lovejoy had no children of her own. They have brought up three adopted children, with one of whom, Mrs. Fifield, Mrs. Lovejoy is now living. Mr. Wilber F., now in the employ of Poor & Son, is an adopted son. The other adopted daughter is deceased. Mrs. Lovejoy has a pleasant home in Winn village, where she is spending her aged life cared for by her adopted daughter.

Frank Gilman, of Winn, is a son of John H. and Sally U. Gilman (nee Lovejoy). John H. Gilman had two children—Frank and Ada. John H. Gilman is a son of Josiah Gilman, of Gilmanton, New Hampshire. Frank Gilman was born at Sebec, September 8, 1839. On reaching manhood he went into the army as a clerk in the Commissary Department, where he remained till the close of the war. In the spring he went with his father, who was Superintendent of the Agricultural College Farm at Orono, and remained there two years. In the fall of 1868 he came to Winn and engaged in trade in which he continued two years. In 1870 he entered the employ of Henry Poor & Son, as general superintendent of their tannery business at Winn and Medway. This firm employ over one hundred men at these two places during the entire year, and at some seasons they employ over six hundred men. Mr. Gilman has general charge of this immense business here. He married Maria Averill, daughter of William Averill, of Orono. They have two children, viz: Kate W. and John A.

Ambrose Dennis, the hardware dealer of Winn, is a son of Amos Dennis, of Palermo. His mother's maiden name was Thankful Coombs, of Albion, Maine. Amos moved to Passadumkeag about 1847, where he died in 1880. Mrs. Dennis died in 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Dennis had seven children, viz: Albert, deceased; Mary, wife of Ira Haskell, of Munson, Maine; George and John W., twins—George is deceased; Amos, now of Passadumkeag; Ambrose; and Edwin T., of Passadumkeag. Ambrose Dennis was born in 1843, in Passadumkeag. He engaged in trade on becoming of age in his native town with Mr. Costigan. This firm continued five years, when they dissolved and Mr. Dennis went to Michigan and spent two years, and then came to Winn in 1870, and opened his present business of hard- and tin-ware. He has since lived in this place. He married Clara J. Trask, of Hudson. They have two children—Albert and Stella M. Mr. Dennis has served as Selectman, Supervisor of Schools, Collector of Taxes, etc., in Passadumkeag. He has also held similar positions in Winn. He is at present Trial Justice in Winn.

David Bunker, of Winn, who came into the county in 1825, is a son of David Bunker, Sr. His father was a native of New Hampshire, but lived principally in Canaan, in Somerset county, where he died. He married Mary Stanton, whose parents were from New Hampshire. They had nine children, all of whom lived to maturity—Moses, now living in Ripley, eighty-two years old; Sally, deceased; Polly, wife of J. Bigelow, of Corinna Centre; David; Amanda, widow of Timothy Ricker, of Corinna; James, deceased; Ezra, deceased; John, who went to California, but it is not known whether he is living or not; Horace, in Colorado. David Bunker, Sr., died in December, 1843; Mrs. Bunker died in 1849. David Bunker, Jr., as he used to write his name, was born August 12, 1805. He first settled in this county in 1823. He spent his early manhood in milling and lumbering. He settled in Chester in 1827, where he lived about thirty years. He came to Winn, where he now lives, in 1861, and built the dam and part of the mill which he completed the next year, and soon after moved his family over. He has since then followed the business of lumbering and farming, though principally farming. He married Phœbe Scott, of St. George's, New Brunswick. They had one daughter, Sarah E., who married Daniel C. Haynes, of Winn. Mr. Bunker died July 14, 1881. He has held many of the offices of his town, both in Chester and Winn.

Daniel C. Haynes, of Winn, was born in Chester, in this county, November 9, 1831. His father, Walter Haynes, married Lydia Carlton, formerly of Rumford, Maine. They had twelve children, of whom Daniel is the third son. He spent his boyhood on the farm. On becoming of age he first settled in Chester, where he married Sarah E. Bunker. They lived in Chester until 1861, when they moved to Winn, where he now lives. Since coming here he has built all the buildings on his farm. He owns one hundred and ten acres of land, nicely located on the east bank of the river. Mr. and Mrs. Haynes have nine children—Laura E., wife of Joseph Harmon, of Winn; David B., of Mattawamkeag; Delia H., now Mrs. James Harmon, of Winn; Walter, of Winn; Carrie V.; Delia B.; Henry R.; Herbert D.; and Sadie M. Mr. Haynes has held the office of Selectman

One of the oldest settlers of Winn was Reuben Harmon, who came from Gorham, New Hampshire. He used to drive the stage from Bangor to Houlton, or, in other words, carry the mail, for he began before the road was built, and often had to carry the mail on his back part of the way. He married Betsey A. Snow, of Winn. They settled on the place where Joseph now resides about 1832. They had eleven children, all of whom grew to maturity—Daniel, deceased; Rebecca, wife of George W. Young, of Winn; Allen S.; Martin, deceased; William, now in Lisbon, Maine; James K. P., now in Winn; Joseph D.; Horace G., now in Lisbon, Maine; Benjamin F., also in Lisbon; Reuben, now in Lisbon; Henry M., also in Lisbon. Mr. Harmon died some fifteen years ago, about 1866. Mrs. Harmon is still living in Lisbon. Joseph D. Harmon was born August 27, 1846, in Winn. In 1871 he married Laura Haynes. They have three children—Adra, Ora, and Elwell.

THE PLANTATIONS.

DREW PLANTATION. *

This far-off but not altogether insignificant municipality is in the southernmost northeast corner of the county, fifty-three miles northeast of Bangor. It is bounded on the north by the Reed and Barker Plantations, in Aroostook county, on the east by a strip of Township No. 8, Range 4, north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase, beyond which lies the town of Danforth, in Washington county; on the south by Prentiss; and on the west by Kingman. It is about ten miles from the Penobscot River at the nearest point, the mouth of the Mattawamkeag River; but has ready access to all the world by the line of the European & North American Railroad, which intersects the town with a track of more than five miles, and gives it one station, with the singular name of "Wytovitlock," nine and three-tenths miles from Kingman, and four and a half miles from Bancroft.

The chief water of Drew Plantation is the Mattawamkeag River, which has a very devious course of about eight miles in the Plantation, and drains nearly every part of it. This fine stream enters from Barker's Plantation, a mile west of the northeast corner of Drew and of the county, flows south half a mile and makes a big bend to the west and northwest, nearly reaching the north line again, and being here very closely neighbored by the railway. Here it again turns south, and runs four miles west of south to its southernmost bend or reach in the Plantation. One-half of a mile before making the bend it receives a small tributary from the east, and a little further sends off a cross channel west to its own stream opposite, thus forming an island one-fourth of a mile in greatest length or breadth. After receiving this the Mattawamkeag flows north of west two and a half miles further, when it crosses the Kingman line just about midway of its length. About half-way between its southern bend and this exit the river takes in from the south, by an outlet one and one-fourth miles long, the water of Mud Lake, which is fed mainly by the Mud Brook, from Prentiss, which has its mouth a little way inside the south line of the Plantation, on the southeast shore of the lake. This water, which is vastly smaller than some of the "ponds" in the county, is only two-thirds of a mile long by one-half a mile in greatest breadth, and does not cover more than one-third of a square mile of surface. It lies one and one-fourth miles from the southwest corner of the Plantation, and its southernmost end just touches the south boundary.

One mile above the tributary near the south bend of the Mattawamkeag, the Meadow Brook comes in from the east, rising in the edge of Township No. 8, and receiving two small affluents from the southeast in Drew, within about a mile of the county line. A little above, on the other side of the river, the Libbey Meadow Brook enters from the west, flowing wholly the distance of near two miles in Drew. Three-fourths of a mile above its mouth the Pitlock Stream, entering in two heads from Reed's Plantation, and uniting them one-half mile below the town line, and flowing thence one and a half miles further, enters the Mattawamkeag.

In the southeast angle of the town rise two of the headwaters of the East Branch of the Mud Brook, which flow out south into Kingman.

The only highway entirely traversing Drew Plantation, toward any points of the compass, is the north and south road which runs from Springfield village northeast and north through Prentiss, into Drew, which it enters a mile east of Mud Lake, and nearly two and a half miles from the southwest corner of the Plantation. It thence pursues a somewhat zigzag but generally northerly course for about six miles through the tract, running up the east side of the Mattawamkeag and crossing it one-third of a mile above the mouth of the Pitlock Stream, a half a mile further the railroad, going out of the Plantation half a mile beyond, very nearly at the middle of its north line.

Upon or near this road is almost the entire settlement as yet in the Plantation. On the other or west side of Mud Lake another road from Springfield, branching from the former in the northeast corner of that town and running through Prentiss, reaches the lake after about half a mile's run in this Plantation, and there stops. On the other road, half a mile east of the lake, a public school-house has been constructed.

This tract was originally known as Plantation No. 7, in Range 4, north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase. It was settled about 1825, and organized as a plantation September 8, 1856. It is the oldest of the organized plantations except Webster, which is seven days older, and Woodville, which is four years older. It had a population of 85 in 1870, and 137 in 1880. Polls in 1880, 20; estates, $33,335. There is no post-office, and no artisan but one blacksmith. The officers of the Plantation in 1881 were: Warren Butters, C. G. Potter, George Sprague, Assessors; Warren Butters, Clerk; Page Mix, Treasurer; J. N. Belden, Collector; J. N. Belden, Constable; Mrs. C. G. Potter, Mrs. Annie Butterfield, George Sprague, School Committee.

Stephen Belden was born in Palermo, Maine, September 29, 1802. His father, Stephen Belden, Sr., married Mary Harvey, and reared a family of six children, who grew to maturity, viz: Olive, Stephen, Drusilla, Betsey, James, and John. Stephen Belden, the oldest son of this family, first settled in Palermo, where he lived until 1874, when he came to this county and bought the farm where he now lives in Drew Plantation. He married Lois Dennis, of Palermo. They have had ten children, viz: Lucinda, wife of Joseph Yeaton, of New Hampshire; Wilbert, died in the army; Arvilla, now Mrs. Deland, of Portland, Maine; Edwin, now of Prentiss; Philander, now in California; John F., of Prentiss; Ruth, wife of Frederick Young, of Palermo, Maine; Marcia, wife of Alonzo Young, of Drew Plantation; Eliza, wife of William Bowler, of Palermo; Joseph, with his father on the farm in Drew Plantation. Joseph has been Collector for five years in this Plantation. Joseph Belden married Sarah F. Norton, of Palermo. They have two children, viz: Etta G., and Lois.

One of the early settlers in Drew Plantation was Mr. James Potter, who came here from Perry, Maine, in 1850. James Potter married Mary Golden, of Perry. They settled in Perry and there lived until coming here. He was a native of Whitefield, Maine. They had a family of seventeen children, of whom only seven grew to manhood and womanhood, viz: Lucy A., Joseph C., Peter G., George E., James L., Clark G., and Annie M., all of whom are living except Peter G., and James L. Mr. Potter died March 15, 1875. Mrs. Potter was drowned September 2, 1876. Clark G. Potter was born March 19, 1842. When eight years of age he came here with his father and helped to clear up the farm where he now lives. He married Miss Annie M. Averill, daughter of Ira Averill, of Prentiss. They have had five children, of whom three are living, viz: Ernie M., Bennie A., and Brett. Mr. Potter has a good farm of one hundred and fifty acres. He has been engaged in lumbering as well as farming. Mr. Potter has always held some town office since he became of age. He is now First Assessor of this Plantation.

Angus Mackay is a son of William Mackay, of Scotland. William and Catharine Mackay had five children, viz: Alexander, deceased; Barbara, wife of George Fox, of Southampton, New Brunswick; John, deceased; John, now of Newfoundland; and Angus. Angus Mackay was born January 12, 1828. He came to the United States when sixteen years of age, and worked at lumbering. He bought the farm on which he now lives in 1851. Since then he has worked at lumbering winters and farming summers. He married for his first wife Emeline Ames, from Farmington, Maine, and had by her five children, viz: Sarah, William A., Catharine, John, and Emeline A., all of whom are dead except Emeline. Mrs. Mackay died in 1861, and Mr. Mackay married for his second wife Miss Mary Skillinger, of Danforth, Maine, by whom he has seven children, viz: William, Charles, Nettie, Esther, Hattie, John, and Hugh, all of whom are living except Hattie. Mr. Mackay has a farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres on the Mattawamkeag River.

Page Mix, of Drew Plantation, is a son of Enos Mix, of Vermont. Enos Mix married Sarah Page. They had fourteen children, of whom twelve grew to maturity, viz: Polly, Samuel, Lucretia, Sally, Eliza, Matilda, Ruth, Elmira, Mary, John, Page, Eli, and Enos. Of this large family only five are now living, viz: Elmira, Mary, Page, Eli, and Enos. Page Mix was born May 11, 1814. He first lived in Orono after he became of age; he lived there about fifteen years, when he went to California, where he remained three years and a half. In 1855 he returned to Maine and bought the farm where he now lives on the Mattawamkeag River, in Drew Plantation. He married Eunice Merrv, of New Portland, Maine. They have had five children, viz: Flora, now Mrs. James Young, of Drew Plantation; Elmer P.; John A.; Carrie A., deceased; and Eli O. Mr. Mix has been Treasurer of his town. He owns three hundred and sixty-five acres of land, lying on the Mattawamkeag River in Drew Plantation, and is now engaged principally in farming, though he used to lumber in connection with farming. Mr. Mix lost his wife in 1880, and is now living with his second wife.

LAKEVILLE PLANTATION.

This is a large tract, occupying pretty nearly the whole space of two surveyed townships—Nos. 4 and 5, in the first Range, north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase. It lies in the form of a parallelogram over six miles wide, by about ten and a half miles long, separated by a narrow tract, part of which belongs to Carroll town, from Washington county. It is bounded on the north by Carroll and Springfield; on the south by Township No. 4, in Hancock county, and Township No. 5, in Washington; and on the west by Township No. 3, in Penobscot. The town of Lee corners with it on the northwest.

The surface of Lakeville Plantation is considerably covered with sheets of water, which are here quite uniformly called "lakes," whether large or small. The middle western part is occupied largely by the Sisladobsissis Lake, a rather narrow water, about five miles in length, and lying from northwest to southeast. By a short inlet from the north it receives the waters of a much smaller sheet. Its own outflow is by another short stream into Sisladobsis Lake, a sheet of nearly the size of the Sisladobsissis, which stretches from northwest to southeast out into Washington county. At a bay on the north of it, in the Plantation, it receives from the northwest a tributary fed by two small lakes a little west of the head of the Sisladobsissis. In the northeastern angle of the Plantation is a roundish sheet called Duck Lake, covering about half a square mile. It receives from Springfield the Lowell Brook, and from Carroll Getchell Brook, each of which flows a mile, more or less, in Lakeville. On the north and west of this is most of the settlement which the Plantation so far has. Duck Lake flows by a southeast channel of about four miles' length to the northwest part of Cug Lake, a sheet of about the same size as Duck, but of more irregular shape, lying in the south centre of the east part of the town. Opposite the entrance of the Duck Lake outlet,—that is, at the southwest part of the lake,—the outlet of Cug Lake passes about three miles into Washington county. Part of the Horseshoe Lake lies a mile or two east of it, in the southeast corner of the town. This is connected with Junior Lake, a large body of water, which fills most of the strip between Lakeville and Washington county on that side. A little of the western part of this lake, and the extremity of its northwest bay, with a small lake and outlet which feed it, are in the eastern part of Lakeville with a small lake and outlet which contribute to feed the Junior Lake. Three or four miles of the Taylor Brook, entering from Township No. 4, and flowing northwest and west to the Passadumkeag River, are in the southwest angle of the Plantation. A pretty large curve of the Passadumkeag River, with a smaller one north of it, is in the southwestern part of Lakeville, near the west line.

The Plantation has few roads as yet, and these are almost wholly in the northeastern part. The stage-road from Lincoln to Topsfield passes two to three miles north of it, through Springfield and Carroll, upon which the Lakeville people have still to rely for postal facilities. From a point on the stage-route half a mile east of Springfield village, near the Beaver Pond, a road starts off southwardly and enters Lakeville near the southeast corner of Springfield, running two to three miles into the interior of the Plantation. Just after entering Lakeville it sends off a short cross-road, to connect with a highway northwest from Duck Lake into Carroll; and a little below this cross-road a neighborhood track of about two miles' length starts off to the west and southwest. Half way between Duck Lake and the cross-road is School-house No. 1, from which a "plug" road of two miles' length runs east into the southerly projection of Carroll, passing School No. 7 near the town line, and just before that sending off a curving road southeasterly almost to the extreme south line of Carroll, but crossing only about half a mile of Lakeville soil.

Civilized settlement did not get in here until about 1855. The Plantation was organized February 29, 1868, under its present name, probably derived from the large lake within its borders. It had a population of 108 in 1870, and 136 in 1880. Polls—1870, 30; 1880, 34. Estates—1870, $43,990; 1880, $48,608.

Formerly, a great deal of lumbering was done within this tract, and it is still a profitable industry here. Two saw-mills and one shingle-machine are in operation.

The following-named were the Plantation officers for 1881: S. T. Mallett, Charles Hale, J. A. Ham, Assessors; Charles Hale, Clerk; S. T. Mallett, Treasurer; Isaac Whitney, Constable and Collector; A. E. Gowell, School Supervisor; A. E. Gowell, Quorum Justice.

One of the prettiest places in Lakeville Plantation is that owned by Alfred E. Gowell. Mr. Gowell came to this place from Topsham, Maine, in 1862. He is a son of Alfred and Elizabeth Gowell (nee Elizabeth Brown, of Topsham). Alfred Gowell was a native of Bowdoin. Alfred and Elizabeth Gowell had six children, viz: Alfred E.; Peregrine W., now in Kansas; Emma B., wife of Rowland Rogers, of Bowdoin; Gilbert M., on the old place in Bowdoin; William M., deceased, and Horace F., now in Caribou, Maine. Alfred E., the oldest of this family, was born June 3, 1834. On becoming of age he worked at the ship-carpenter's trade for seven years in various places. He came here in 1861 and bought the place where he now lives in Lakeville Plantation. It is on the north side of Duck Lake, a very beautiful sheet of water. It is here that the Duck Lake Club have their Club-house. This club is composed of six gentlemen from Massachusetts and Connecticut. Mr. Gowell owns here three hundred acres, and is beautifying his grounds by setting out trees, grading lawns, etc. He married Miss Rhoda L. Blake, daughter of Lemuel and Nancy Blake. They have four children, viz: Nancy E., Rose A., Herbert E., and Ethel G. Mr. Gowell has held various offices in the gift of his townsmen, such as Clerk, Justice of the Peace, member Board of Assessors, etc.

NO. 1 PLANTATION.

Township No. 1, in the North Bingham Penobscot Purchase, is an even surveyed township, lying in good shape fifteen and one-half miles northeast from Bangor, between Greenbush on the west and No. 2 Grand Falls Plantation on the east, which alone separates it in that direction from Hancock county. On the north is Lowell, on the south Greenfield. Township No. 39, in one of the northwest corners of Hancock county, which abound in this region, corners with No. 1 Plantation on the southeast. Passadumkeag corners with it on the northwest. The tract is only three and one-half miles the Penobscot, from the nearest point of the river along the north line of Greenbush to the northwest corner of

No. 1. The one hundred inhabitants, more or less, yet in the Plantation, are accommodated with railway facilities chiefly at Olamon Station, on the European & North American Railway, near that line, and with postal facilities there and at Lowell on the north and Greenfield on the south.

The Olamon Stream, heading in Morison Brook and other waters in Greenfield and southward, runs up into the Plantation with a short curve toward the southwest angle, and returning into Greenfield, passes thence into Greenbush, very near the southwest corner of No. 1, and passes on to its junction with the Penobscot at Olamon Station. Near the east line of the Plantation and in its south central part, are the headwaters and tributaries of Lord's Brook, which runs northwest to a union with the Passadumkeag River, about the middle of the arc which that stream makes in the north part of the Plantation. The river enters from the direction of Lowell post-office, about two and one-half miles from the northeast corner of No. 1, makes a great curve of which the southernmost part is about a mile distant from the north line of the Plantation, and after a flow of more than three miles therein, goes out for Lowell and Passadumkeag at a point about a mile from the northwest corner. Three-quarters of a mile east of its entrance a small tributary of the river between Lowell village and Suponic Pond takes its rise. In the southeast angle of the Plantation are a mile or two each of two small streams which flow into Greenfield, and there unite to form the Morison Brook.

The principal road in No. 1 is the highway that completely traverses the Plantation from south to north. Starting from the river road on the east of the Penobscot it flows through Greenbush and out at the southeast corner of that town into Greenfield, where it curves northward into No. 1, crossing the south line almost midway and running with a somewhat curvilinear and zigzag course east of north till it leaves the town for Lowell post-office. A road east from a little below Olamon also runs a little way into No. 1.

No. 1 Plantation is of very recent creation. A warrant for its organization was issued by the County Commissioners January 7, 1878, and its formation may be considered as dating from that year. The tract had a population of but sixty-six in 1870 and ninety-seven in 1880. The polls and estates in these years were not reported.

Judging from the list of officers of the Plantation, the people consist largely of Littlefields. One of the Assessors is Lorenzo Littlefield; Mr. John Littlefield is Collector, and J. W. Littlefield is a Constable. The other officers are Charles Cunningham and D. C. Douglass, Assessors; Albert McLain, Clerk; Simeon Philbrick, Constable, and Messrs. McLain, Philbrick, and Cunningham, School Committee.

NO. 2, GRAND FALLS PLANTATION.

This is another of the newer municipalities on the outskirts of the county and of the wilderness. It is, however, but twenty-two miles in a straight line from Bangor, and but nine from the river and railroad at Olamon Station. It was formerly No. 2, of the North Bingham Penobscot Purchase, and is, like No. 1 Plantation, a regular township of thirty-six square miles.

THE ALLEN TRACT,

where most of the population of the Plantation reside, consisting largely of Pettingill families, is an area in the form of a parallelogram, in the northeast part of the town, adjoining Burlington, and named from a former owner. It contains about six square miles.

THE PASSADUMKEAG STREAM,

crossing from east to west, nearly divides the tract into halves, and flows out of it northwest to and through the Suponic Pond, having a total run of about three and one-half miles in the Plantation. Near its point of entrance on the line of Washington county are the Grand Falls, which give a part of the name to the Plantation. Just outside the northwest corner of the Allen Tract, the Madagascal Stream comes down from the north into the Plantation, flows in it, and mainly in the Tract, through a great curve of over two miles, and enters the Passadumkeag a mile above its mouth.

About half the area of Suponic Pond, which has been described in our notes on Burlington, lies in this Plantation, and about half-way across its northern edge. It is a beautiful sheet of water, very picturesque in its surrounding scenery, and almost sublime in some of the loftier neighboring heights. Less than a mile south of the pond begins the rise of the most imposing natural feature of this part of the county, or any part of the county east of the Penobscot and north of Black Cap Mountain, the

PASSADUMKEAG MOUNTAIN.

This is an eminence of many hundred feet in height, nearly two miles in length at the base, and more than two miles in basilar breadth. It is a conspicuous object in the landscape for many miles in each direction, and adds not a little to the physical attractions of the Plantation.

WAGON-ROADS.

The roads in No. 2, Grand Falls, are almost confined so far to the northeast part and the Allen Tract. The principal one runs down the northeast shore of Suponic Pond into the Plantation half a mile northeast of the mouth of the Passadumkeag, and strikes about in a beeline for that stream near the middle of the Tract. It is continued in a neighborhood road across the stream, and a mile or so further east till near the county line, where it ends. Trails also run north and east to the Grand Falls and the southeast corner of Burlington.

BOUNDARIES.

No. 2, Grand Falls, is bounded on the north by Burlington; on the east by Township No. 3, in Hancock county; on the south by Township No. 39, in the same; and on the west by No. 1 Plantation. Lowell comes with No. 2 at the northeast corner of the latter.

ORGANIZATION AND STATISTICS.

This township was settled about 1830, and the Plantation was organized Nov. 16, 1878. It had a population of even 100 in 1870, and 93 in 1880. Polls in 1880, 23; estates, $23,822.

PLANTATION OFFICERS.

The offices of No. 2 seem in 1881 to have been, and they probably are generally, concentrated in few hands. Mr. Harvey Stickney was, that year, Clerk, Treasurer, an Assessor, and a member of the School Committee. Joseph Folsom was another of the Assessors, and also Constable and Collector. P. B. Moore was the remaining Assessor, and a School Committeeman. Charles B. Littlefield was the only one to have but one office; he was a member of the School Committee.

There is no post-office in the Plantation, the people relying mainly upon Burlington for their mails.

STACYVILLE PLANTATION.

Stacyville is the northernmost organized plantation in the county. It is a regular township (No 3) in the Sixth Range, the same range to which belong the town of Patten, its next neighbor on the north, and the town of Mt. Chase above that. It is bounded on the east by Sherman, Aroostook county; on the south by Township No. 2, Sixth Range; and on the west by No. 3, Seventh Range. It is sixty-six miles east of north from Bangor.

Stacyville is an exceedingly well watered tract. The Swift Brook, heading in two small lakes in the southwestern part of Patten, intersects the whole of Stacyville from north to south, and has no less than ten tributary brooks in this Plantation. Six of them, all small, flow in on the east side of the Swift, in the north half of the town. On the west is received, a little below the lowermost of these and near the middle of the town, an affluent from the northwest, which heads in two branches in the southwest angle of Patten. They join in Stacyville, and the united stream flows for about two and one-half miles to the Swift. A little more than a mile below a similar tributary is received, with two long branches rising, respectively, in Townships No. 3 and 4, flowing southwest and uniting somewhat more than a mile from the brook. Through the southwest angle of the Plantation flows very much another such tributary, its two branches heading in No. 3, each running a mile, more or less, in Stacyville, there uniting and flowing a little way out into No. 2, Sixth Range, where the stream unites with the Swift to form the Mud Brook, an affluent of the East Branch of the Penobscot.

Two miles east of the Swift flows the Little Molunkus Brook, rising in the north part of No. 2, Sixth Range, and flowing north and northeast through a small pond, in the south centre of eastern Stacyville, to a junction with the Molunkus Brook a little way over in Sherman. The Molunkus rises in three heads in the south part of Patten, and flows about four miles southeast and east in Stacyville to about the middle of the east line of the Plantation, where it leaves the county. About mid-way between the Little Molunkus and the Swift about two miles of a headwater of the Salmon Pond and the Salmon Stream flow south and into No. 2.

The main highway of Stacyville, upon which are settled most of its people, is the road which leaves the old military trail at Molunkus, enters Stacyville just below the Molunkus Brook, crosses there the Little Molunkus, and shortly after the Molunkus itself, and runs west of north up the east side of that brook into Patten and then to Patten post-office. In the southwest angle of Sherman this highway sends off the Mt. Katahdin road, which crosses the southern part of Stacyville in a somewhat broken course, and runs west and northwest about fifteen miles to a point between the northeast and southeast flanks of the main bulk of the mighty mountain.

Stacyville was settled in 1850, and incorporated ten years afterwards, on the 30th of June, 1860, taking its name from one of the plantations in the county, and proprietors. It is the oldest of the plantations in the county, except Webster and Drew. In 1870 it had 138 inhabitants, and 184 in 1880. It must soon be ready for incorporation as a full-fledged town. The votes in 1880 numbered 45; its valuation of estates was $20,362.

The Plantation officers for 1881 were; Robert N. McClure, James Kelley, and Joshua Bragg, Assessors; Robert N. McClure, Clerk; Alonzo J. Richmond, Treasurer; Alonzo J. Richmond, Constable and Collector; Fred Hunt, School Supervisor.

WEBSTER PLANTATION.

This was formerly Township No. 6, in the Third Range north of the Bingham Penobscot Purchase. It is separated by but the width of one town — Prentiss, upon the east — from Washington county; by only another — Kingman, on the north — from Macwahoc Plantation, in Aroostook county; by Winn only from the Penobscot — four miles distant, by the north line of Winn, its shortest breadth, and by Springfield, its next neighbor on the south, and the Lakeville Plantation beyond, from Hancock county. It is thus completely bounded on all sides, save that, on the west of Kingman and north of Webster, about two miles' breadth of Mattawamkeag bounds the Plantation. It is cornered on the northeast by Drew Plantation, on the southeast by Carroll, and on the southwest by Lee. It is forty-four miles northeast of Bangor, from corner to corner, and less than three miles from the European & North American Railroad at Kingman Station. It is pretty nearly an even township of thirty-six square miles.

The waters of Webster are mainly the Mattagondus Brook, which rises a little north of Carroll post-office, flows west into Springfield, and just beyond the southeast corner of Webster into Prentiss, and through that into the Plantation. It enters about two miles below the northeast corner of the Plantation, flows a little more than this in the interior westwardly, northerly, and easterly again, till it leaves Webster a little below the corner just designated, flows across the northwest angle of Prentiss and the southwest corner of Drew Plantation, very near these corners, into Kingman, where it finds a last resting-place in the Mattawamkeag. One of the smaller affluents of the Mattagondus, which enters the stream in Prentiss, shortly below the mouth of the Spruce Brook on the other side, heads in the southeast part of Webster, and runs east and southeast about two miles to the Prentiss line. Still further in the southeast angle of the town is a brief reach of one headwater of the Mattakeunk Stream, which flows south and southwest to a union with another branch in Springfield. The East Branch of this stream flows past the southwest corner of the Plantation, just where it corners with Springfield, Lee, and Winn.

In the west centre of the town rises Gordon's Brook, which flows in an irregular course east of north, and then northwest, four or five miles in all, to an exit a little below the northwest corner of the Plantation, whence it passes across a corner of Winn and joins the Mattawamkeag near the north line of that town.

Webster Plantation has had a comparatively rapid growth. It had only 9 polls in 1870, and 28 inhabitants, which had multiplied more than four hundred per cent., or to 118, by 1880. It has no post-office as yet, but depends mainly upon the Kingman and Springfield offices. Part of the people are upon a branch of the road between these two places, which passes through the southeast corner of Webster, then nearly the entire length of Prentiss, and then for about a mile across the northeast angle of Webster, and into Kingman to the post-office and the railroad. A few of the Plantation settlers are upon this highway; but more upon the aforesaid branch, which leaves the main road about a mile below the south line of Webster, and runs northwest to the line about a mile and a half from the southeast corner, and a little further dividing into two branches or "plug" roads, one of which goes about a mile to the northward and ends, and the other northwest and west, nearly parallel with the south line and about half a mile from it, for about two and a half miles, when it also ends. The road in Prentiss, up the north bank of the Mattagondus, also runs for a little way into the interior of Webster, as likewise a short branch from it half a mile below.

Webster was settled about 1843, the first immigrants being James Austin and S. W. Leighton. It was organized as a Plantation thirteen years afterwards, September, 1856, and named from the principal proprietor of the township. It is the oldest of the present organized plantations of the county, except Woodville, though it ranks Drew Plantation in seniority by but one week.

Farming and lumbering are the chief occupations of the Webster people. It had, as before noted, a population of 28 in 1870, and 118 in 1880. In 1878 its people were reported as numbering 117. Polls in 1870, 9; in 1880, 20. Estates in the same years, respectively, $24,727 and $36,129.

The Plantation officers in 1881 were:

A. A. Patch, Joseph Cole, William H. Stinson, Assessors; A. S. Leighton (Kingman post-office), Clerk; A. A. Patch, Treasurer; H. P. Crockett, Constable and Collector; H. P. Crockett (Kingman post-office), Samuel Tucker, H. L. Tucker, School Committee.

A. S. Leighton, of Webster Plantation, was born in this town. He was a son of Stillman W. Leighton, who came to Springfield from Cherryfield in 1839. Stillman Leighton married Theresa Walter, of Burke, Vermont. They came from Prentiss to this town in 1845. They have had ten children, eight of whom are living—Mary, now Mrs. Mary Cooper, of Prentiss; Alfred S., of this town; Luther W., of Minnesota; Samantha, now Mrs. Crockett, of Webster Plantation; Henry P., in Massachusetts; Rose, in Massachusetts; Lillian I., at home, and Leon A. Mr. and Mrs. Leighton are both living. Mr. Leighton has for many years been one of the prominent men of the Plantation, holding most or all of its leading offices. A. S. Leighton, the oldest son of this family, was born December 9, 1847. His principal business has been farming, though he has been engaged in lumbering and bark business. He lives with his father on the old homestead. They have a fine farm of three hundred and twenty-five acres, with one of the best sets of farm buildings in town. This farm Mr. Leighton has cleared entirely from the standing timber.

A. A. Patch, of Webster Plantation, is a son of Daniel Patch, of Morrill, Maine. Daniel and Lucinda Patch had five children, of whom four are living—Alma, wife of William Kelsey, of Bristol; Alva A.; Adner, of Worcester, Massachusetts; and Alice. Alva A., the oldest son of this family, was born January 25, 1856, in Knox, Maine. In 1872 he went to Worcester, Massachusetts, and engaged in teaming for seven years, or until 1879, when he came here to Webster Plantation and bought the farm where he now lives. He married Lena Slater, daughter of J. G. Slater, of Webster Plantation. Daniel Patch died in 1874, and Mrs. Patch in 1863. Mr. Patch now holds the office of First Assessor and Treasurer. He has a good farm of 425 acres.

WOODVILLE PLANTATION.

This tract, which is as yet a plantation, although it will probably be a flourishing town by and by, is straight up the valley of the Penobscot, on the same side as Bangor and distant from the city forty miles. It has itself a pretty large territory, and is surrounded by large tracts. It is bounded on the north by Medway, on the northeast and for a little way on the southeast by the Penobscot, beyond which is Mattawamkeag; on the south by Chester; and on the west by the large Township No. 2, in the Eighth Range. It was itself formerly Indian Township No. 2. Molunkus town, in Aroostook county, corners with it on the northeast.

The Penobscot River has a flow of nearly seven miles, in a gentle curve, along the east front of Woodville. About midway of this course are the Boom Islands, on the Mattawamkeag side; and just below the southeast corner is the small island mentioned in our accounts of Winn and Chester. The greatest width of the town is from the Boom Islands straight west to the town line—a little less than seven miles. By the curve of the river both the north and south lines are shorter, the north line considerably so. The west line is about six miles long.

At tolerably regular intervals of two miles below the northeast corner of the Plantation, small tributaries, each rising in two branches, flow in from the west. Each has a saw-mill near its mouth. The Pattagumpus Stream (variously mentioned upon the maps as the "Pattagembus" and the "Pattakumkis") rises near the middle of the west line of the Plantation, and receiving several petty affluents at intervals, flows northwest about four miles into Medway and the Penobscot. In the northwest angle of Woodville heads a larger tributary, which flows in a large curve one and a half miles in the Plantation and then crosses into Medway, where it shortly joins the Pattagumpus. Just west of this, near the west line, are two small headwaters of the Madakeunk Stream, which unite a little before leaving the Plantation for Township No. 2, where the main source of this stream exists in the shape of a pretty large pond. Another small tributary of the Madakeunk rises near the southwest corner of Woodville, and flows into the northwest angle of Chester.

A little east of the heads of the Pattagumpus, in the northwest centre of the Plantation, is the source of the Ehbors Stream, which, it will be remembered, joins the Madakeunk in Chester about twenty miles before it reaches the Penobscot. This stream has a flow of four miles in Woodville, receiving a small affluent from each side about half a mile northeast of South Woodville post-office. At the south Plantation line it has another from north of west, and another from the same direction nearly a mile above.

Woodville Plantation increased over fifty in population during the decade 1870-80; and although its people are not so numerous as those of some plantations that have no post-office, they read and write so much, it seems, that they require and have two post-offices—North Woodville and South Woodville, respectively. The former is about two miles from the north line of the Plantation, and nearly three from the river. It was kept at last accounts by Mr. Calvin Stanwood. The Woodville office is about a mile from the south line of the Plantation, and one and a half miles from the west boundary. It is kept by a postmistress, Mrs. Caroline Read. Both of these are on the county road from Lincoln Centre to Medway, which completely intersects the Plantation from south to north, and is the only high road in it. It enters from Chester, a mile east of the southwest corner of the Plantation, and runs northeast and north about seven miles to a point on the north line about a mile west of the northeast corner, where it passes into Medway and up the southwest bank of the Penobscot. School No. 1 is on this road, a little below Woodville post-office; and School No. 3 a mile or more above North Woodville. From this a country road runs off easterly to some settlements; likewise one from above Woodville post-office northwest a little over a mile. All the settlements in the town are upon these, except a very few on the river, about the mills.

ORGANIZATION.*

This township has generally been known as "Indian Township No. 2," or West Indian," lying opposite "Indian Township No. 1," now Mattawamkeag. It was organized into the Plantation of Woodville in 1854, some one of the family of Benjamin Stanwood giving it its name.

THE SETTLEMENT

of most of the towns on the Upper Penobscot, or in the vicinity of Mattawamkeag, was by men who came to work upon the Military Road from Lincoln to Houlton, between 1830 and 1835. Charles Scott and James Dudley came from Machias, Maine, to the upper part of Woodville, in the vicinity of what has been long known as the Phineas Libby Place. This was in 1832. A year afterwards Moses and Mark Scott made clearings and settlements in the vicinity. Previously, though but a year or two, the Scotts had made settlements in Chester, which lay between the lower end of this township and the Penobscot River. In most instances log huts were built in the little clearings of the pioneers, till, as prosperity dawned upon their efforts, they hewed out timbers from the plenteous pine found in their midst, and obtained boards to cover their mansions from Lincoln, the nearest mill, for a long time.

In 1837 Clark Hanson made a falling of ten acres of trees on the place now occupied by James Pond, near the Chester line, near which Temple Ireland, in Chester, had made a settlement in 1832, the only and first clearing in that part of the town. Mr. Hanson was a brother of Eli Hanson, formerly of Bangor, who keeps a hotel there. The mother of Mr. Hanson, Mrs. Esther Hanson, of Winn, turned her one hundredth year September 12, 1881.

In 1833 Peleg Otis and William Mayberry came from Brewer and made clearings where now the George Glidden and James Pond farms are. Mr. Otis was to have a State lot given him, if he would make a farm there.

Meanwhile, or within ten years, settlements increased in the upper part of the township, and especially down by the Penobscot River.

James Dudley, 2d, and Roland and Charles Dudley made some slight clearings, all of which have since been abandoned. These were in the vicinity of Madakeunk Rips, in the Penobscot River.

James Dudley, 2d, built a mill on Eagle Stream, close by the banks of the Penobscot River. This stream empties into the Penobscot a short distance above the mouth of the Madakeunk Stream.

This was about 1840. In 1842 Benjamin Stanwood came from Eden, Maine, and settled near the Libby place. His son Calvin now resides there.

John White and Simon Hanson, about 1840, made farms where now John E. Faloon and Donald Smith have the best farms in town, on a high point of land back of the Eagle Stream, above spoken of.

INDUSTRIES.

The northwestern side of the township is drained by the Pattagumpas Stream, which empties into the Penobscot just north of Woodville, in Medway, that part of it forming "Tract three." This gives an opportunity for lumbering in that part of Woodville and Township No. 2, lying west of Woodville. Through the central and southwestern part of the township runs the Ebhors Stream emptying into the Madunkeunk stream.

*Nearly the whole remainder of this sketch is by B. F. Fernald, Esq., of Winn.

On the streams of this town there is considerable meadow hay cut, particularly near the town of Winn.

THE PIONEER SCHOOLS.

Margaret Crocker was the pioneer to instill into the minds of Woodvillians the rudiments of education. There are now three school districts in the Plantation.

MODERN TIMES.

With the exception of some half a dozen farms, the settlements in Woodville are made on the county road running to Medway, all the rest being an almost unbroken wilderness. During the summer of 1881 a road was laid out by County Commissioners, running from nearly, opposite Winn village in Chester, to the county road, which will greatly develop this section.

About the year 1875 an act of incorporation was passed to make Woodville a town by that name, but it was not accepted by the people.

A LARGE OWNER.

A few years ago Messrs. H. Poor & Son, of Boston, owners of the tannery at Winn, bought a large part of the wild land in Woodville, but gradually sold it off; and a large tract of some five thousand acres was sold in October, 1881, at Bangor.

STATISTICS.

Woodville Plantation had 230 people in 1860, 170 in 1870, and 223 in 1880.

The voters of Woodville numbered 32 in 1870, and 50 in 1880.

The estates in these years were valued at $30,196 and $31,937.

THE PUBLIC OFFICERS

in the Plantation in 1881 were as follow: Woodville, Mrs. Caroline Read; North Woodville, Calvin Stanwood, Postmasters; Charles Rush, Joel F. Kimball, Benjamin F. Read, Assessors; Joel F. Kimball, Clerk; Joel F. Kimball, Treasurer; Charles Rush, Constable and Collector; Thomas Scammon, Calvin Stanwood, Joel F. Kimball, School Committee.

A BIOGRAPHY.

George Glidden, who came to Woodville in 1836, is a son of Arnold and Hannah Glidden, who came from Pittston, Kennebec county. They had eight children—Mercy, Nancy, Polly, Betsey E., Hannah, and Charles, all of whom are deceased; and those living are Susan, now Mrs. Robert Betham, of Enfield, and George, the subject of this sketch. Mr. Glidden came here after George made the settlement where he now lives, and spent the remainder of his days here. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died about 1850; and Mrs. Glidden about 1860. George Glidden was born May 8, 1806, in the town of Pittston, Maine. He married for his first wife Miss Mary Betham, by whom he had four children—Harriet, deceased wife of James Sibley; Augustus, deceased in the army; James, now in Aroostook county; and Jeremiah, of Woodville. Mrs. Glidden died in 1835. Mr. Glidden married for his second wife Mrs. Ruth Dutton, who died in 1878. Mr. Glidden cleared up the farm where he now lives. He has cleared one hundred acres, and owns seventy of it now. He has been engaged in lumbering quite extensively, in connection with his family.

WEST INDIAN.

This settlement, so called to distinguish it from the other, known as East Indian, both being situated upon townships belonging formerly to the Penobscot Indian reservation, is another of the sparsely settled plantations erected in 1875, but whose organization has not been maintained. The name totally disappears from the census returns of 1880, but in 1870 the tract had thirteen inhabitants. It was first settled about 1820. It is situated west of Medway.

WHITNEY RIDGE.

This settlement, whose name will be found upon the census returns, is in a strip of Township No. 3, in the Eighth Range of the Waldo Patent, just north of Maxfield. It was settled in 1836, and organized as a Plantation in the same year when Pattagumpus and West Indian were similarly organized; but in this tract, as in the others named, the organization is not maintained.

Whitney Ridge had a population of 18 in 1870.

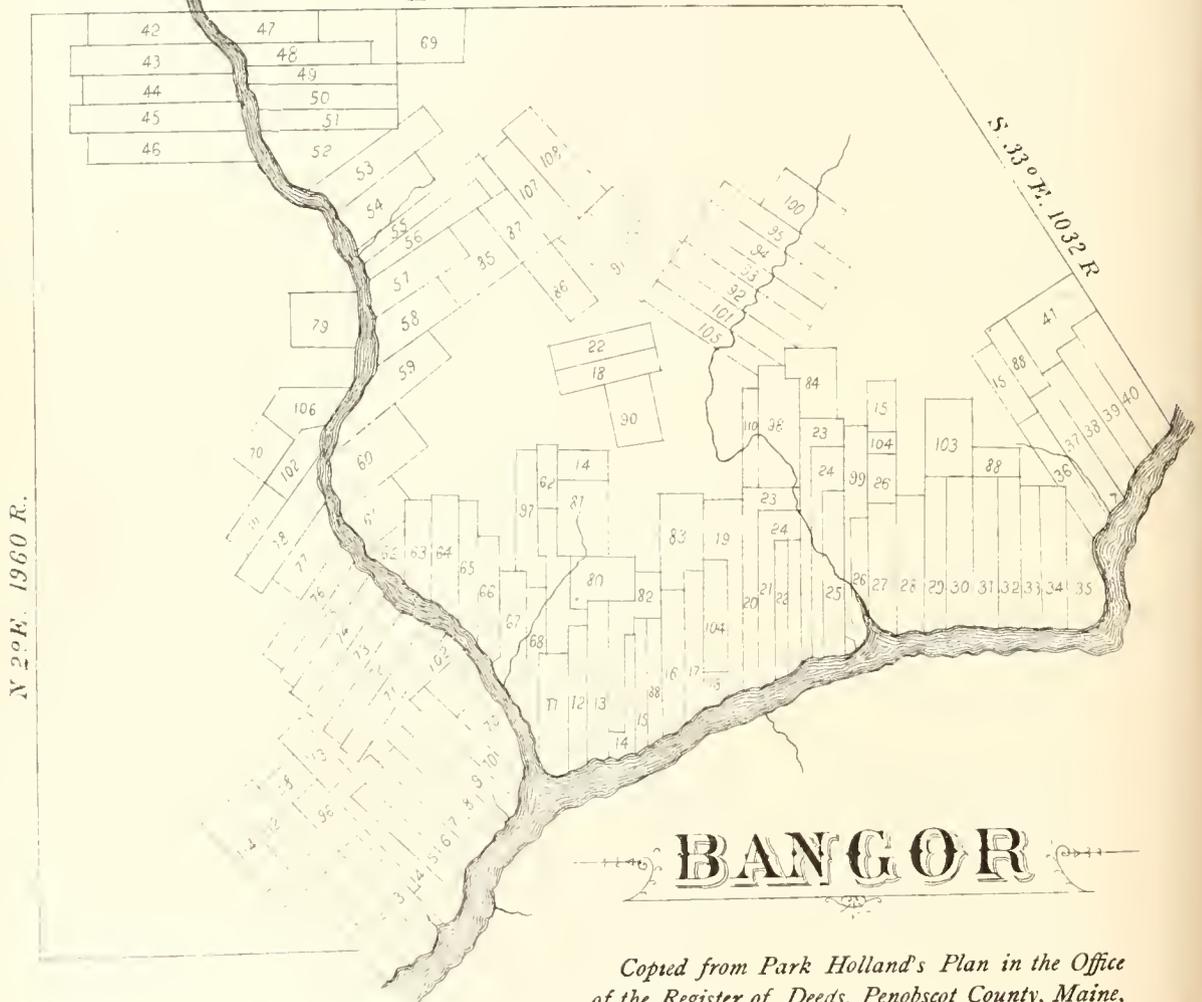

"SETTLEMENTS."

Under this head the inhabitants of the unorganized townships in the county have been enumerated as a group in the census returns of the last three decades. They had in all 1,074 people in 1850, 1,287 in 1870, and 170 in 1880. The small number reported the last year is doubtless due to a more detailed enumeration in the several divisions of the county then had been customary.

- | | | | | | | |
|-------------------------------|------------------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------|--------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. T. Crosby. | 15. S. Noble,
(first minister.) | 32. R. Treat. | 49. Wm. Davis. | 67. John Smart. | 83. Heirs of T. Howard. | 100. Jos. Treat. |
| 2. Heirs of S. Cros-
by. | 16. Thos. Howard. | 33. R. Treat. | 50. Wm. Hasey. | 68. N. Harlow. | 84. John Haynes. | 101. Heirs of M.
Laughlin. |
| 3. Theo. Trafton. | 17. R. Treat. | 34. R. Treat. | 51. Wm. Hasey. | 69. Wm. Hasey. | 85. R. Lapish et al. | 102. Hatch, Patt et al. |
| 4. Peter Burgess. | 18. R. Hitchburn. | 35. D. Emerson. | 52. R. Lapish et al. | 70. W. Hammond. | 86. R. Lapish et al. | 103. B. Emerson |
| 5. B. Emerson. | 19. D. Webster. | 36. R. Treat. | 53. R. Lapish et al. | 71. Heirs of James Dunning. | 87. R. Lapish et al. | 104. R. Treat. |
| 6. Thos. & Charles
Low. | 20. R. Treat. | 37. Joseph Mansell. | 54. S. Sherburne. | 72. D. Campbell. | 88. Benj. Bussey, | 105. J. Lowder. |
| 7. Wm. Hammond. | 21. R. Treat. | 38. T. Crosby. | 55. Wm. Lancaster. | 73. D. Campbell. | 89. R. Lapish. | 106. W. Hamme |
| 8. Jacob Dennett. | 22. J. Drummond. | 39. R. Treat. | 56. A. Clark. | 74. W. Hammond. | 90. Wm. Boyd. | 107. A. Hathorn |
| 9. John Dennett. | 23. Abraham Allen. | 40. R. Treat. | 57. G. Fullman. | 75. W. Hammond. | 91. D. Webster. | 108. D. Hathorn |
| 10. Heirs of J. Dun-
ning. | 24. Ewins & Haines. | 41. R. Webster. | 58. R. Lapish et al. | 76. W. Hammond. | 92. Jona. Morse. | 109. S. Hathorn |
| 11. R. Lapish et al. | 25. R. Treat. | 42. John Crosby. | 59. S. Potter. | 77. W. Hammond. | 93. P. Campbell. | 110. Jos. Treat. |
| 12. John Haynes. | 26. R. Treat. | 43. Godfrey & Webster. | 60. R. Lapish et al. | 78. A. Patten. | 94. P. Campbell. | 111. Patten et al |
| 13. Wm. Boyd. | 27. R. Treat. | 44. S. Greenleaf et al. | 61. Joseph Potter. | 79. R. Lapish et al. | 95. J. Drummond. | 112. Benj. Low. |
| 14. Heirs of J. Kel-
sea. | 28. R. Treat. | 45. S. Greenleaf et al. | 62. R. Lapish et al. | 80. R. Lapish et al. | 96. David Neal. | 113. J. Hutching |
| | 29. Jona. Lowder. | 46. J. Gardner. | 63. W. Hammond. | 81. Heirs of J. Kelsea | 97. John Harlow. | 114. T. & C. Lo |
| | 30. A. McPhetres. | 47. A. Griffin. | 64. R. Lapish et al. | 82. Heirs of James Boyd. | 98. J. Drummond. | |
| | 31. R. Treat. | 48. Wm. Davis. | 65. R. Lapish et al. | | 99. W. Forbes. | |
| | | | 66. W. Potter et al. | | | |

E. 1800 R.

Scale 400 rods to 1 inch.

Copied from Park Holland's Plan in the Office of the Register of Deeds, Penobscot County, Maine, being his return of the Survey of Settlers' lots who settled in said town previous to February 23, 1798. Survey and Plan made 1801.

W. COOMBS, C. E.

HISTORY OF PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

THE ANNALS OF BANGOR.

1769—1882.

[FROM CHAPTERS I. TO XXX., INCLUSIVE, BY HON. JOHN E. GODFREY, OF BANGOR.]

BANGOR.

CHAPTER I.

Evidences of Early French Occupancy of Penobscot—Progress of English Settlements up the Penobscot River—Settlement of Bangor in 1769—Jacob Russell the First Settler—Settlers of 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, and 1774—First Religious Meetings—First Missionaries—Rev. Daniel Little—First Doctor—The Penobscot Indians—Their Course in the Revolutionary War—First Frame House in Bangor—Truck House—The Truck Master—Jedediah Preble.

1769 to 1776. Although the French were up and down the Penobscot River during a century and a half before the conquest of Canada (in 1759), and erected dwellings at various points on its banks, yet no dwellings were found standing when the English came into the region. Tracts of land had been cleared, and cellars of houses remained, but no other evidences of the occupancy of the country by civilized man were in existence.

Until after the erection of Fort Pownall, in 1759, there were no traces of English settlements above Wassumkeag (Fort Point). The southern part of Orphan Island (now Verona) was settled in 1763, and Colonel Jonathan Buck was the first settler in Bucksport, in 1794.

The progress of settlement up the river was slow. It did not reach Bangor until 1769. There was some uncertainty in regard to the disposition of the Indians; but Jacob Buswell* or Bussell, a poor man, sometimes fisher, boat-builder, and cooper, ventured to erect and occupy a log cabin upon the high land east of the Kenduskeag and overlooking the river, just below the rocks† of Champlain. It was a beautiful spot near the intersection of what are now York and Boyd streets, and not far from the rear of St. John's (Roman Catholic) church. Near it was a fine spring, which has disappeared beneath the improvements of later years. The view down the river—then unobstructed—was three or four miles in extent, and very beautiful. The selection of the site showed taste in Mr. Bussell or some members of his family. But he was a squatter. He had a wife and nine children. He might have been a private soldier with habits

*The following petition is in the Massachusetts Archives, Vol. 78, page 550:

Province of the Massachusetts Bay. } To His Excellency, Thomas Pownall, Esq., Captain-General & Governor in Chief and over said Province, to ye Hon'ble His Majesty's Council & House of Representatives in Gen'l Court, assembled June ye rothe, 1759.

Humbly Shews—John Buswell, of Salisbury, that his son Jacob Buswell was a soldier in ye Canada Expedition in 1758, under Capt. William Osgood, and he was taken sick on ye Rode Coming home and lay sick six weeks after he got Home and your petitioner was put to great charge for Nursing and Doctor's bill and other necessarys agreeable to account herewith annexed. Wherefore your petitioner Humbly prays your Excellency and Honors that he may be allowed as is usual in like cases: and your Humble Petitioner in Duty bound will ever pray.

JOHN BUSWELL.

The Committee reported £2 0 0 in full.

†Large ledges in the Penobscot River off the foot of Newbury street, now covered by Roberts's wharf.

not unexceptionable, and in poor health. If so, there was good reason for his seeking a region where he could obtain land and feed for nothing, where he would not be likely to be found by the tax collector and deputy sheriff, and where game and fish were abundant at his hand. For such advantages such a man could afford to risk the questionable disposition of savage neighbors.

But Mr. Jacob Bussell was not long a solitary squatter in that region. His son Stephen, who had just married Lucy Grant, came with Caleb Goodwin and his wife and eight children, from Castine in the spring of 1770, and put up their log huts a little southerly of that of the first settler.

It was soon learned abroad that there were attractions at this point, and the Bussells and Goodwins were not long permitted to enjoy them alone. The illusion of savage unfriendliness being dispelled, men who had their fortunes to make were disposed to avail themselves of the resources of this virgin country.

In 1771-72 Thomas Howard, Jacob Dennet, Simou Crosby, Thomas, John and Hugh Smart—brothers—Andrew Webster, Joseph Rose, David Rowell, Solomon and Silas Harthorn, and Joseph Mansel, established themselves within the precincts of what is now Bangor, though at some distance from the first comers.

Mr. Howard first built and occupied a cabin near the river, but afterward built a house on the northerly side of State street, about a mile from the Kenduskeag Stream, where Miss Hannah F. Howard, one of his descendants, now lives. Dennet took the lot where the Central Railroad station is; Rose, a lot near Treat's Falls; Rowell, a lot further up the river; (some of his descendants are now in Eddington and Bradley); the Smarts took lots, severally, near the First Parish meeting-house and Morse's Hill. Andrew Webster built his cabin on the easterly side of Main street, at its intersection with Water street. Nearly all these came from Woolwich and Brunswick and neighborhood, in this State. The Harthorns were from Worcester, Massachusetts, and built the first framed house not far from Mt. Hope. It stood between the road and the river a short distance below the Penjejawock Stream. Some of the family descendants are now in that neighborhood. Solomon died at Sunkhaze (now in Milford). They both had large families.

Joseph Mansel came from Bagaduce (Castine) to Bangor in 1771. He built a saw-mill for the Harthorns on the easterly side of the Penjejawock* Stream a little beyond where the railroad bridge now is, and assisted in building a dam and bridge on that stream above, where, subsequently, was the county road. About fifteen years afterwards he built a grist-mill near the same place, which was the first grist-mill in the Plantation. Before this the people were obliged to carry their corn by water to be ground, to a grist-mill a little way above Fort Point, until Benjamin Wheeler built his grist-mill in Hampden, on the Sowadabscock Stream, in 1776, when they carried it there, and afterwards to Brewer's mill on the Segeundeunk, until this mill was built.

*Pronounced Penja-jaw-wock.

Robert Treat, who was born in Boston in 1752, left there in 1769, when he was seventeen years of age, and came to Fort Pownall, where he was an armorer. He came to Bangor in 1774, when twenty-two years old, and built his cabin near the foot of Newbury street. He shortly afterward removed further up the river, and opened a shop for traffic a little southerly of the Penjejawock Stream.

Dr. John Herbert came from the West in 1774. He had had trouble with his wife. He took lodgings at Mr. David Howard's, and was here until 1779, when his son came and took him home, where he soon afterward died. He was bowed down with melancholy, but was highly esteemed. He was a Calvinist, and took the lead in religious meetings, which were generally held every Sunday. He was learned and a good physician, though not regularly educated to that profession. He taught school in a house southerly of Penjejawock Stream, and was probably the first male teacher in the place. He was a fine teacher and elegant penman. Many debts were due him when he left, which were never called for or paid.

The first school in the settlement was taught by Abigail Ford. It was commenced in 1773, in a log house just under the Hickbon hill, near Treat's Falls, and a few rods from the river.

In 1772 Mr. Cotton came and settled near the westerly end of the bridge now over the Penobscot, but did not survive the year. His was the first death.

The first trading-house was opened about this time near the mouth of the Kenduskeag by Thomas Goldthwait, son of the commander of Fort Pownall. He was a Tory, and disappeared when the Revolutionary war commenced.

The first two births of white children occurred this year. Mary Howard, daughter of Thomas Howard, was born June 30, 1772. She married Andrew Mayhew and was the mother of our late fellow-citizen, Captain John A. Mayhew.

Hannah Harthorn, daughter of Silas Harthorn, was born September 10. She had three husbands—first, Andrew McLaughlin; second, Samuel Babbige, and third, Captain Joseph Mansell. Mansell was at the first wedding in Bangor, of a daughter of Jacob Bussell.

James Dunning came from Brunswick in 1772 or '73, and took the lot on the westerly side of the Kenduskeag, at its confluence with the Penobscot. He first built on the low land a few rods south of the Kenduskeag bridge. He afterward built a one-story frame house on High street, easterly of the angle, and where Mr. Burpee's house (built by Oliver Frost) now stands. Some of his descendants are among the principal citizens of Bangor and Charleston, in this county.

Simon Crosby, who established himself near the Hampden line, was from Woolwich, and the maiden name of his wife was Sarah Sewall, who was from Bath, and was of the distinguished Sewall family. His dwelling was about a mile southerly of the Kenduskeag Stream, and upon his lot are now several fine residences of his descendants of the third, fourth, and fifth generations. He was the father of General John Crosby, a former enterprising merchant of Hampden, and grandfather of our late fellow-citizens James and Timothy Crosby, and of Jotham S. Crosby, who is still living; of the late Major John Crosby, of Hampden, and of Deacon Benjamin Crosby, recently deceased. The family has ever been highly prosperous and respected.

Mrs. Crosby was a religious woman and much beloved. There were other women of similar religious sentiments within four or five miles of her in every direction, and they agreed to hold private meetings for prayer by themselves, whenever circumstances would permit. The arrangement was observed with much fidelity, and was the origin of all strictly female prayer-meetings that have been held in the towns in which those ladies resided. These meetings were held by them together, probably until 1787, after which it was more convenient for the ladies in the several towns to have separate meetings.*

Before 1774 there had been several religious meetings in the settlement. They were held in the cabins of the settlers, and in barns when the weather was favorable. A Calvinist preacher by the name of Ripley is the first of whom mention is made.

On September 18, 1784, Rev. Daniel Little, of Kennebunk, was at Captain Smart's, at Condeskeag. It being Sunday he preached and baptized six children. He noticed that "the people on the river were very dissimilar in their education and outward circumstances. Some of good life, sense, and known virtue; some quite the reverse." One Canadian Indian attended his meeting.

The next morning Mr. Little, with Captain Smart, went to Captain Preble's—who was then truckmaster for the Indian trade, at the head of the tide, or falls—for the purpose of seeing the Indians. None were there, however; but in the afternoon, with Captain Jonathan Lowder for a pilot, he walked up on the western side of the river about two miles, when he saw an encampment of Indians on the eastern side. Calling for a pass, Pierre Sock, a young Indian, came and took them across in a birch canoe. He found about twenty Indians, young and old, and nearly half of them were so drunk as to be incapable of seeing, hearing, speaking, or moving—"dead drunk." Of the rest, about seven were Canadians, and the others "the dregs or remains of the old Penobscot tribe." They were smoking, laughing, or frowning, strutting, or jumping. He found that they were not in a condition to receive instruction from him and soon left them.

But he took much interest in Pierre Sock, who was a Canadian Indian, about nineteen years of age. He visited Mr. Little at the truck-house in the evening after his return, dressed partly in French habit. He conversed in French, and, as Mr. Little had an interpreter with him belonging to the truckmaster, he passed a very agreeable evening. He had come from Trois Rivieres about six weeks before, with his parents. His grandmother was probably English. His mother had English features, but it was questionable whether she were altogether English. "She was delivered of a child the other night abroad in the rain, and well the next day in the truck-house—which is Indian by art, if not by nature." Pierre said he would go away with Mr. Little, if his parents were willing. He said that he had been half the time with the French and half the time with the Indians; that he was baptized when six years old; that he went to the priest for the pardon of his sins; that he should have them all pardoned after he had been once, twice, six times, and honestly told him all that he knew of his bad words, actions, and thoughts; but when sick, or a great way from the priest, he believed he was in no danger, and was not afraid of his sin, for he prayed to God every night and morning. Neither Mr. Little nor Pierre could influence his parents to permit their son to leave them. When they walked together in the bushes his parents would halloo, lest he should be stolen, and Pierre would say, "Can't go against parents." "Will you come and live with me when you are free?" "Never free with us Indians—never free until we are married."

* Jacob McGaw's Journal.

After paying tribute to the innocence and integrity of Pierre, who possessed more than all the rest, Mr. Little exclaims: "O, Penobscot! into what a sink of filth, folly, and beastly nastiness and intemperance have thy original warlike inhabitants fallen! Oh! my soul pities all those who are never likely to be brought by any means to know the pleasures of men and wise men. May these remains be treated justly and temperately by all the English that now dwell on their borders. Took my leave of Pierre Sock and his parents and some of the dreadful, ugly, yet to be pitied Penobscot tribe."*

The Indians were uncomfortable neighbors. They were poor and degraded, as Mr. Little says, but the settlers pitied them, as he did, and endured them. In 1771 one named Nunguenat, of a churlish and violent disposition, on returning from hunting, fell upon his wife, a weak and complaining woman, who was groaning, and exclaimed "always yawl," and with great fury killed her. He concealed her body under the ice near "the Point." It was afterwards found and buried. It was not understood that his people proceeded against him for murder. But before the British were at Castine, there was another Indian about the country whose hand had been burnt off for murdering his squaw.

Before the Revolutionary war the Indians threatened to drive the settlers out, but after hostilities were commenced they professed great friendship for the Americans. For years after the first settlement, in the day-time and in the night-time, they burst in the doors of the cabins and went in to warm themselves. If the people of the house were before the fire, they would make them remove that they might make themselves comfortable, and sometimes would stretch themselves upon the floor with their feet towards the fire. If any food was in sight they appropriated it, but stole nothing else.

One morning an Indian visited the house of Mrs. Howard and employed her to prepare a breakfast for him. She did so, and placed it upon a barrel in the corner of the room. The moment it was ready another Indian rushed in, and, seeing the first, there was a struggle, and both fell upon the floor. The assailant turned the other upon his face, and, kneeling upon his shoulders, seized his lock of hair with both hands and twisted his neck and head with such violence that he came near dislocating it. In the midst of this contest a third Indian came in, and, seeing the breakfast, commenced devouring it, when Mrs. Howard told him to whom it belonged. "Ay," said he, "very good fight," and having coolly disposed of it, went his way, leaving its owner in a very melancholy frame of mind.

To keep themselves from starvation and from suffering by cold were the chief objects of these people. They were always hungry. When first visited by Champlain they clothed themselves in the skins of wild beasts. They then gradually adopted the coarse blankets of civilization, and the material and fashion of their apparel have been gradually modified, until within a few years it is similar to that of their American neighbors. They were esteemed chaste, and no Indian was known to offer violence to a female. They were very expert in hunting and fishing. The young men were very fond of playing at ball. The men had their hair cut short, with the exception of a lock around the crown of the head. They slept upon bear-skins and covered themselves with blankets. Before Europeans visited the country, the notice of the engagement of a female to be married was given by her wearing one blue stocking and one red one. At one time, on Saturdays, they had a kind of religious meeting, with prayers and singing.

Some of the Indians lived to a great age. Tomer died before the Revolutionary war, at the age of one hundred and ten. Osson, who held a commission of Justice of the Peace, lived to be a hundred years old, and Orono was about one hundred and ten when he died. Orono was a principal chief—in the Indian language K'tche sungur-mur. The next in rank was called Sungur-mur, from which sagamore: from which sa-chem-o; from which sachem. The Indians did not use the word sachem. It was transmitted by the whites.*

The men and women were fond of showy dresses and ornaments. Colonel John Allan states that when he was initiated into the St. John tribe, Ambroise, the chief, was dressed in a blue Persian silk coat, embroidered crimson silk waistcoat four inches deep, and scarlet knit breeches; also gold-laced hat with white cockade. Another had blue silk trimmed with vellum, crimson breeches, and gold-laced hat. The other chiefs were richly dressed after their fashion—their blankets were curiously laced with ribbons. That day the men had a feast, and, as was the custom, a feast was provided for the squaws, after which there were dancing and festivities in the evening by the young men and women, who were dressed elegantly after their fashion, and adorned with bracelets, large brooches, and hair-boxes of silver curiously engraved with the figures of divers kinds of animals, flowers, etc.*

*Mr. Little's Journal of 1774.

*Williamson's Annals of Bangor.

On the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, the Provincial Congress made earnest efforts to secure the Eastern Indians in the American interest. On May 15, 1775, they wrote a letter to them from Watertown, Massachusetts, setting forth that the Ministry of Great Britain had laid deep plots to take away the liberties of the people of this country, Americans and Indians, and to make them pay them all their money when they never earned it; to make them their servants; to let them have nothing to eat or drink or wear except what they pleased; to prevent their having guns and powder to kill deer, wolves and other game; to break up the trade in skins and furs; and that Captain Goldthwait had given up Fort Pownall to their enemies, at which both Americans and Indians were angry, and expressing the hope that neither they nor the Indians in Canada would join their enemies, and that they should be able soon to supply them with guns and powder of their own making, and promising also to supply them with clothing and warlike stores as fast as they could. They sent Captain John Lane to raise a company among them to join in the war, and promised to give each one who enlisted a blanket and a ribbon, as they had the Indians of Stockbridge, and to pay them while they were from home in the service.

The Penobscot Indians were pleased with the propositions, and made generous offers of friendship and assistance in the war, and made Captain Lane their agent to look after their interests. Whereupon the Provincial Congress, on June 21, 1775, sent them a letter, in which they thanked them for their offers, and strictly forbade "any person or persons whatsoever from trespassing or making waste upon any of the lands and territories or possessions beginning at the head of the tide on Penobscot River, extending six miles on each side of said river now claimed by the Indians of the Penobscot tribe." They promised, "as soon as they could take breath from their present fight, to furnish them with a proper commissary to supply them with provisions, ammunition, and goods at a reasonable rate, and to take effectual measures to prevent dishonest persons from carrying on a fraudulent traffic with them." They also accepted Captain Lane as their agent, whom they authorized to report to them any molestation of or depredation on the tribe, that they might have seasonable and effectual redress.

Colonel Thomas Goldthwait had permitted Mowatt to dismantle Fort Pownall in April. It was considered a treasonable act by the people, and as the truck trade—which was important to the Indians, as they could obtain their goods of the Government agents without paying the prices they were obliged to pay to outsiders, and pay for them in skins and furs—was stopped by it, the Indians were incensed against him. It was contemplated by people in the neighborhood to arrest him.† Mr. Elihu Hewes, who was then at Hampden, thought that, "on a fair and impartial examination, it would appear that Colonel Goldthwait had been a steady, uniform friend to our Constitution." General Jedediah Preble wrote to Hon. Joseph Warren, President of the Continental Congress, from Falmouth, June 15, that he had no doubt that Goldthwait would make interest to have provision made for subsistence of the garrison at Penobscot, but was "such a man fit to command such a fortification as Fort Pownall, who would suffer two schooners to rob it of guns and ammunition?"

The General, in the same letter, said it would be the height of imprudence to neglect the supplying the truck trade, and urged Mr. Warren to use his influence that his son, Jedediah, Jr., be continued truckmaster, as he had been at great expense to provide himself with a habitation and other necessaries for carrying on the Indian trade.

In June, 1775, Captain Lane went to Boston with Orono, Jo Peare, Poris, and another chief, and Andrew Gilman as interpreter, to meet the Provincial Congress. They called on General Preble, at Falmouth, and were provided with carriages to convey them, and with money, given to Captain Lane, to pay their expenses. General Preble said: "Orono, the chief man, seems to be sensible, and hearty in our cause. He reserves what he chiefly has to say till he comes to the Congress." It was believed at Penobscot that he was of white parentage and stolen by the Indians when a child. The residents esteemed him as honest, kind-hearted, and intelligent. Gilman is represented as inferior in mind and stature, but was possessed of some vivacity and cunning. He dressed in the Indian costume, hunted and traded with the Indians, and spoke their language as well as a native. He was never married, but had a son by a native. He originated in York county.*

The visit of Orono to Boston produced good results. The Provincial Congress, on June 24, recommended to "our good brethren, the Indians of the Penobscot tribe, to immediately apply to General Preble and Colonel Freeman for a supply of provisions and all the necessary goods," and, on July 9, it empowered those gentlemen to supply them, at the truck-house at Penobscot, with goods not exceeding £300 in value, and to receive furs and skins in exchange. On July 10 the Committee on Supplies were directed to deliver to Captain Lane twenty-five pounds of powder for the Indians.

The arrangement made by the Provincial Congress with the Penobscots had a favorable effect upon the Maracheet, or St. John Indians. Their chiefs, Ambroise and Pierre Toma, appeared at the truck-house of Mr. Preble, and availed themselves of the services of Jonathan Lowder, a recent gunner at Fort Pownall, in communicating with the council. Captain Thomas Fletcher and Lieutenant Andrew Gilman were present as interpreters. On the 12th of September, 1775, they directed to the Congress a letter, in which they said that they had learned that the Americans were engaged in a war with Great Britain, and that the Penobscot tribe had engaged to join them—that they heartily joined with that tribe in every arrangement they had made or should make with the Massachusetts Colony, and were resolved to stand together and oppose the people of "Old England" in their endeavors to deprive them of their lands and liberties—that the Americans and Indians were brothers of one father, "and one God made us all, and we will stand by you as long as the Almighty will give us strength"—that they had nowhere to look for assistance but to the Council, and desired that they would help them to a priest, that he might pray with them to God Almighty—that they had no place to go to but Penobscot for support, and that they desired the Council would provide ammunition, provisions and goods for them there, and they would in return give them their furs and skins, and assistance.*

* Kidder's Eastern Maine, 98-9.

† Enoch Freeman's Letter, Massachusetts Archives, May, 1775.

* Williamson's History of Maine, II., 426; Bangor Centennial, 38.

An arrangement was made with the St. John and Passamaquoddy Indians, who, under Colonel John Allan, performed good service.†

On October 16, 1775, the Provincial Congress sent a resolve with a letter to the St. John and Micmac Indians, informing them that their truckmaster would supply them with provisions, etc., in exchange for furs, and expressing a hope that they should have their assistance in the war against "the wicked people of Old England."

Jedidiah Preble, Jr., who had been the truckmaster at Fort Pownall, was appointed to the same position at Penobscot Falls in 1774. Stephen Smith was appointed truckmaster at Machias, and supplied the St. John and Passamaquoddy Indians.

Mr. Preble was not popular with the Indians. In a letter to Captain Lane, evidently written by Jonathan Lowder, dated November 22, 1775, they complained of him as truckmaster, and said that he delayed furnishing the supplies to those who came for them; so they got drunk, and didn't carry them to the Indians when they had received them; that he laid in bed until 10 o'clock, and if they spoke to him to trade with them, he would go away and be gone for a whole day together; that they wanted Jonathan Lowder for truckmaster; that they had chosen him, and the General Court confirmed their choice. On May 3, 1776, the letter was replied to. It was admitted to be a mistake that Preble was appointed instead of Lowder; and promise was given that Lieutenant Gilman would be with the Indians at Penobscot during the summer, and when the General Court was in session it would find such a truckmaster as would supply them with what they wanted.‡

The frame house built by the Harthorns in 1773-4, was doubtless the "habitation" referred to by his (Preble's) father. It was built for him, and he occupied it as a truck-house. It was a large one-story house, and stood on the river side of the road, nearly opposite the present residence of Mr. Charles Forbes, by whose father it was occupied for many years after 1800.

There is a tradition that Preble had a daughter who, with her maid, made a clandestine arrangement with two young Tarratines to elope with them. He discovered it, however, in season to prevent the project being consummated, and confined his romantic child until he had an opportunity to send her westward to his friends.

Mr. Preble was born in York in 1734. He was the General's oldest son. He married Avis Phillips, of Boston in 1761-2. He possessed a very retentive memory—repeated the whole of Whitfield's sermon concerning Abraham offering up Isaac, on hearing it once. He possessed talents and genius, "but sometimes indulged in language unbecoming a rational creature," until the loss of property made him more patient. He dreamed that Whitfield, pointing to the text—"He that being often reproved," etc.,—directed him to preach. He did not, however, but being a genius, made some attempts at poetry. One poem of five stanzas he dedicated to his son Jedidiah. The first stanza will give an idea of his ability as a votary of the muses.

"Jeddy, my first-born, study to please.
Then with thy days thy wisdom will increase.
Ne'er to thy fond father be thou unkind,
But cultivate a docile, gentle mind.
Thy conduct, let it ever virtuous be,
Warring against each sin most hopefully."

Could he have been a Tory? Such was the belief at Penobscot, but this is doubted by his kindred of this day. In 1782 or 1783 he was in a vessel, bound from Castine for Passamaquoddy, which was wrecked on Seal Island about nine leagues from the coast. It was very dark when the vessel struck, and while he was engaged forward, the crew and passengers hurried ashore, leaving him alone. Upon discovering this, he attempted to land. There was a raging surf, and the vessel was thrown so violently against the rocks that, when he was going aft, the planks separated, and he stepped unwittingly between them, when they instantly closed and crushed and shattered his leg. When the vessel struck again, the seam re-opened, and he extricated himself and succeeded in getting ashore. Little could be done for his relief. He lived upon water and a fowl called gannet, which his companions caught and cooked for him, though very badly for want of fuel. After nine days of suffering, he died. It is said that a writing was found upon him, giving an account of his sufferings and expressing regret for the course he had taken. He was enterprising. His age at the time of his death was forty-eight or forty-nine.*

*Bangor Centennial, 34. Captain George Henry Preble's Genealogical Sketch of the Prebles. In a note Captain Preble says, "I doubt his having been a Tory as stated."

*Kidder's Eastern Maine, 54-5.

†Massachusetts Archives, v. 144, p. 322.

‡Massachusetts Archives, v. 144, p. 353.

CHAPTER II.

John Brewer—His Mill at Segeundunk—New Worcester—Tract Lotted by Joseph Chadwick—The Revolution Prevents Obtaining a Grant—Elihu Hewes's Opinion of the Patriotism of the People—Anecdote of High Liberty Men—First Organization of a Military Band in 1776—Andrew Gilman, Lieutenant and Commander—Headquarters near Mount Hope—Heads of Families North of Bald Hill Cove in 1776—Benjamin Wheeler—Wheelerborough—The years 1777 and 1778—Penobscot, St. John, and Passamaquoddy Indians and Captain John Allan—They help drive Sir John Collier from Machias—British try to Gain Them—Allan's Influence Prevents—Orono and John Neptune—The Belts—The British at Castine—General McLean and Brewer—Saltonstall's Fleet—Brewer's Interview with General Lovell and Saltonstall—Saltonstall's Defeat—Mowatt at Brewer's—His Conduct—McLean's Kindness to Prisoners—Brewer Leaves the River during British Occupation—British Destroy Buildings of Settlers who will not submit—Lunier and Other British Agents—Indians Continue Loyal during the War.

1770 to 1780. In September, 1770, John Brewer came from Worcester to the Penobscot, in pursuit of a place to establish himself. Arriving at the stream on the eastern side of the river, called by the Indians Segeundunk, he examined it up to the ponds or source, as he did two or three other streams on the same side of the river; and afterwards the Condeskeag, for an eligible site for a mill-dam. He selected the Segeundunk, and, after laying the foundation of his dam at its mouth, returned to Worcester. In April of the next year he returned with workmen and erected his mill, and, having got it in operation, leased it. He put up a house frame and boarded it. There were with him twenty-one others, and they formed themselves into a company and ran out a tract of territory extending from Buck's Ledge eight or nine miles below, twelve miles to the head of the tide, and back from the river six miles. This was called New Worcester.

In December Mr. Brewer again returned to Worcester and in April, 1772, brought with him his family, and settled in the place where he had built his house and mill.

The tract taken up by the company was lotted on the river by Joseph Chadwick, but unfortunately his field notes and plans were lost. The company petitioned the Massachusetts Government for a grant of the land, with the intention of applying to the King to confirm it, but in the excitement attending the rupture with Great Britain the petition was not attended to. Whereupon the company applied directly to the Crown for the grant, through Dr. Calef, of Ipswich. The application was received favorably, and the business was within a day of being completed, when the news of the commencement of the hostilities in Massachusetts reached England, and nothing more was done there in regard to the grant.

The news of the affairs at Lexington and Bunker Hill, the burning of Falmouth, with the dismantling of Fort Pownall, caused great excitement among the settlers of Penobscot. The larger portion of them were poor, but most of them had the disposition, if not the means, to aid in freeing the country from British domination. Mr. Elihu Hewes, in his letter of June 9, 1775, to Joseph Warren, President of the Provincial Congress, said that he lived about twenty-three miles above Fort Pownall; that the settlement was new, the first man that pitched in his neighborhood not having been there more than five years, although Captain Jonathan Buck had been ten years at his place, which was not much more than eight miles above that Fort; that inhabitants were settled for more than twenty miles above him (Buck); that the people were firmly attached to the Constitution of the country, and he was confident would support it to the last moment of their lives. "being willing in general to encounter any difficulty rather than yield to that Band of Tyranny whose plodding pates had long been projecting methods to enslave" them.

In the autumn before this letter was written, some "high Liberty men" at Condeskeag manifested their loyalty to the country by trimming the largest of the many oaks that stood on the bank of the river between one and two hundred rods above the Point, of its lower branches, and threatening to hang one David Rogers, a sea-captain, upon it, if he would not take an oath to be true to the country. When he refused, they procured a rope to carry their threat into execution, but before proceeding further they indulged all around in much free rum. Rogers then took the oath.

A military band was organized in 1776, consisting of twenty white men and ten Indians. To gratify the Indians, Andrew Gilman was given a lieutenant's commission, and was also given the command; Joseph Mansell was made orderly sergeant; William Potter, sergeant, and Ebenezer McKenney and Samuel Low, corporals. This probably was the first military organization in the neighborhood of Condeskeag. A rough barrack in the angle at the intersection of the two diverging roads near Mount Hope Cemetery, through Veazie, was the headquarters. It was a partisan corps, and ranged all over the country until the British took possession of Machebiguataus (Bagaduce) in 1779.

The following are the names of the heads of the families on both banks of the Penobscot between Deadwater (Stillwater) and Bald Hill Cove in 1776, and the tax of each as adjusted June 1:

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Stephen Rowell.....	1	1	7	Stephen Bussell.....	15	5
Patrick Mahany.....	12	4		James Nichols.....	6	2
Robert Mann.....	1	4	8	Jonas Neal.....	9	3
Charles Blagden.....	15	5		George Gardner.....	3	1
John Mansell, Jr.....	15	5		Michael McMahon.....	18	6
James Budge.....	3	1		Samuel Kidder.....	3	1
Emerson Orcutt.....	18	6		Joseph Mansell.....	9	3
John Mansell.....	16	6		Solomon Harthorn.....	1	4	8
Kenneth McKenzie.....	15	5		Samuel Wilson.....	3	1
Caleb Goodwin.....	1	1	7	John Thoms.....	1	4	8
Timothy Blake.....	15	5		— Elvin.....	3	1
Simeon Johnson.....	9	3		Samuel Kenny.....	1	7	9
Henry Kenny.....	9	3		John Emery.....	1	1	7
Benjamin Higgins.....	9	3		Phineas Jones.....	3	1
Josiah Brewer.....	9	3		John Brewer.....	1	1	7
James Ginn.....	1	4	8	John Carraway.....	6	2
Phineas Rice.....	3	1		Jonathan Pearce.....	3	1
James McCordy.....	3	1		James Shirley.....	3	1
Jonathan Pendleton.....	9	3		Abraham Preble.....	3	1
Peter Sangster.....	6	2		Joseph Arey.....	6	2
Eliphalet Nickerson.....	1	1	7	Ephraim Downs.....	18	6
Joshua Ayres.....	1	7	9	Jeremiah Colburn.....	1	1	7
Jedidiah Preble, Esq.....	1	7	9	Archibald McPhetres.....	1	7	9
Samuel Loro.....	6	2		Joseph Page.....	1	1	7

Silas Harthorn.....	1	10	10	Samuel Runnels.....	9	3
Widow Rose.....	1	6	6	Nathaniel Mayhew....	1	10
Thomas Howard.....	1	1	7	Jacob Bussell.....	1	4
Widow Elizabeth Smart	1	4	8	John Holyoke.....	15	5
John Smart.....	1	7	9	Ebenezer Haynes.....	15	5
Robert Campbell.....	1	13	11	James Dunning.....	1	1
Andrew Webster.....	1	4	8	Jacob Dennett.....	18	6
Simon Crosby.....	2	0	1	Abner Crosby.....	6	2
Simeon Gorton.....	9	3	3	Elihu Hewes.....	1	10
Samuel Kilman.....	9	3	3	Gustavus Swan.....	18	6
Andrew Patterson....	1	10	10	John Sully.....	1	7
Benjamin Wheeler....	1	7	9	Andrew Grant.....	1	7
Reuben Goodwin....	1	1	7	Joshua Walker.....	12	4
Simeon Smith.....	3	1	1	James Philbrook.....	18	6
Robert McCordy.....	12	4	4	Robert Treat.....	9	3

The tax enables us to see the relative position as to means of each settler upon this territory, whose first inhabitant had been upon it less than seven years.

Benjamin Wheeler, whose name is found on the above list, settled near the Sowadabcook Stream, and doubtless is the person referred to by Elihu Hewes as the "first man that pitched his tent in this neighborhood." This would fix his settlement in 1770.* He built a grist-mill on the Sowadabcook in 1770, and the territory was called for several years Wheelerborough.

During the years 1777 and 1778 nothing worthy of note occurred upon the Penobscot. The settlers were too far from the seat of war, and too feeble in point of numbers and importance, to attract the attention of the enemy, and they were left to struggle for a livelihood unmolested. The movements of the Indians doubtless excited some interest, for there was constant intercourse between the Penobscots and St. John and Passamaquoddy Indians, with whom Captain John Allan had acquired an influence that enabled him to make them of service to the American cause, and to keep them from the control of the English.† The Penobscots were in constant trouble about their supplies. In 1777 they were in a state of great excitement—they were irregularly furnished with goods by every one who chose to trade with them, and were inevitably cheated. The Government arrangements were very imperfect, and in November a party, accompanied by Lowder and Gilman, went to Machias in a small privateer, having about thirty soldiers on board, and had an interview with Colonel Allan in regard to their troubles; that gentleman being their resort for redress when dissatisfied. They showed him the letters from the General Court, and satisfied him that the promise therein had not been complied with, and that if that state of things continued they would go to Canada for their supplies. There was a British agent at the head of the river continually tempting them, whereupon Colonel Allan wrote to the Government that "diabolical proceedings had been carried on" on the Penobscot River, that there had been great embezzlements of public money as well as imposition upon the Indians; that the Indians daily sold property which they got from the truck house, and consequently were daily calling there for more; that the British used "art and insinuations" to bring them under their influence; that the prices of furs were high upon the continent of Europe, and that by economy and care, and the putting a stop to the traffic with them by petty traders—which was no better than pilfering—and keeping the truck house properly furnished and managed, the profits which the Government would derive from the furs would answer the cost, and the Indians would be of great service to the public cause, and that he had promised them that the agreement of the Government should be performed; and he urged the Government to give to the subject their prompt attention.*

Prior to this, on the 12th of August, six deputies from the Penobscots arrived at Machias, and on the next morning Colonel Allan had a conference with them and chiefs of the St. John and Passamaquoddy tribes, and interchanged strings of wampum "in token of lasting friendship between all parties." The conference ended in a feast, at which were present Colonel Jonathan Eddy, Major Stillman, Captain Smith, and many other officers of the army. "In the midst of the festal joy," says Colonel Allan's journal, "received the unwelcome news of the arrival of three ships, one brig, and one schooner." This proved to be the British expedition under Sir George Collier to take Machias. Colonel Allan, who, with his party, had arrived at Machias only five days before, with the Penobscots, joined the forces and made so good a defense that the ships were obliged to retreat with loss and the accomplishment of nothing. In this affair the Indians were of great service to the Americans. They "set up the Indian yell, which was followed by many at the different places, and no doubt caused the enemy to suppose there were some hundreds." Colonel Allan put into the hands of the Penobscots six guns, and they acquitted themselves so well that he made them presents, and after a renewal of pledges of friendship and love they departed well satisfied.

The communication between the different tribes was by the river and lakes and by the sea-shore. Between the heads of streams and lakes there were short portages, over which they conveyed their canoes. There is one of these carrying-places between Eel and North Lakes, on the boundary northerly of the Cheputnecook Lakes, which has been the Indian path from time immemorial, and where it passes over the flat granite rocks it is worn into them by the tread of moccasins to the depth of two or three inches. The path or trail is always the same narrow foot-way, from which there is no deviation.

In 1778, when Colonel Allan was watching the British of Nova Scotia, he was obliged to use all his skill to keep the Indians true to the Americans. They were very fickle, but their attachment to him was so great that he almost always influenced them to do as he advised. On July 30, 1778, he had a grand conference with some from all the tribes, and "demanded of them to throw aside their indolence and lethargic spirit, and to rouse to be ready when called upon," and they all declared they would be ready on the shortest notice. He ordered Lieutenant Gilman with six or eight Indians to fall in about Medoctec (on the St. John, a little southeast of

*See ante.

†Kidder's Eastern Maine, note, 139, 147.

*Kidder's Eastern Maine, 151, 230, 235, 241, 244.

*Kidder's Eastern Maine, 126, 129, 205, 208.

Hodgdon), and sixteen of the Penobscots went, and by some manoeuvring prevented the British agent, Franklin, and a Tory priest, Bailey, (who went from Kennebec) tampering with the St. John Indians. They executed the business well and caused them to leave the river. The English continued their machinations at Penobscot, and Allan was written to by Lowder in regard to the matter. Some of the St. John Indians had been seduced and were tampering with the Penobscots, and Allan expressed himself discouraged about the intricate situation of the latter, but that the tribe had sent Orono and French Mitchell, both very suitable persons, to the General Court to have a permanent footing arranged for the Indian trade, which was so profitable as to be the occasion of perpetual quarrels and jars until it was done.

On April 30, 1779, John Neptune and Orono appeared at Mr. Preble's truck-house, having come by express with John Marsh from John Preble (a son of the General who was in the American service) with a message with wampum from Deputy Superintendent Smith, at Machias, notifying the whole tribe that Colonel Allan invited them to assemble at Machias on the 25th May to "receive the priest and bring their peltry with them." Neptune then exhibited three small strings of wampum, saying that they were sent to the tribe from Canada by two young men about three weeks before. He held up the first string and explained: "First string—We sent you this to open your eyes; second string—that you may see a great way; third string—that your ears may be opened to hear, and fix your hearts, that you may have a right understanding of what I am going to tell you."

Then, exhibiting a large belt of wampum, fifteen hundred white, he said that it was also sent to the tribe with a message, the substance of which was that they should have no connection with the Americans, that their powder and balls were treacherous, and the death of one of the tribe would make them sorry and angry; that the Americans did not know what they were about, fighting the "great King of England," who was determined to "whip them severely;" that they sent the great belt (which they wished to have immediately returned), that they might show it to the St. Johns and Micmacs, and inform them that the Indians were "coming across the woods as soon as the leaves are as big as our nails" to destroy the white people—three hundred on the Penobscot, three hundred on the Norridgewock River, and three hundred upon Cohos; that for the support of those Indians who were coming there were three hundred barrels of flour at Soccocon, and that they had provisions in Canada enough to last thirty years, if the war should last so long; that the belt was not sent for nothing, and they might depend that they sent them the truth; that there were then at and near Canada nine thousand Indians ready to execute the orders of the British general, and finally that they were so rejoiced to get their wampum carried to the Penobscot that "they danced and drank three days and nights, and liquor was given them as free as water."

Colonel Allan held the conference. Ninety canoes were present from the different tribes. Franklin and the priest, Bailey, had influenced some, but most submitted to Allan.

By the Transactions of the American Antiquarian Society (Vol., II., pp. 31-32) it appears that the French adopted the names given by the Souriquois to the neighboring Indian tribes. The Etechemins or "Canoemen" embraced the tribes on the St. John River, called Ouygondy by Champlain, and of Passamaquoddy Bay; and the name extended thence westwardly along the seashore as far at least as Mt. Desert Island, De Monts Island, Boon Island. St. Croix River was always called River of the Etechemins by Champlain.

The Indians west of the Kennebec River begin at Chacouet, and thence westwardly as far as Cape Cod were called Almouchequois by the Souriquois. Chacouet (probably Saco) is noticed by Champlain as the first place along the seashore where there was any cultivation. The Indians at the mouth of the Kennebec planted, and informed him that those who cultivate maize lived far inland or up the river. These inland cultivating Indians were the well-known Abenakis, consisting of several tribes, the principal of which were the Penobscots, the Norridgewocs, and the Amoriscogyans. And it is not improbable that the Indians at the mouth of both rivers, though confounded by Champlain with the Etechemins, belonged to the same nation.

The vocabulary of the Abenakis is from Father Rasle, recently published in Boston, under care of Mr. Pickering. The Penobscot tribe, consisting of about three hundred souls, still exists on that river. The vocabulary of their language from two manuscripts, one taken by General Treat and obtained from Governor Lincoln, the other in Mr. L'ponceau's collection, taken by Mr. Gardner of Maine. The dialects of those three Eastern nations, the Micmacs, the Etechemins, and the Abenakis, have great affinity with each other, but though evidently belonging to the same stock, differ widely from the Algonquin language.

The dividing line between the Algonquin and New England Indians is somewhere between Kennebec and Piscataqua.

They were all early converted by the Jesuits and were firmly attached to the French until the conquest of Canada, were in perpetual hostility with the British colonists. In 1754 all the Abenakis except the Penobscots withdrew to Canada, and that tribe was considered by the others as deserters from the common cause. They, the Passamaquoddys, and St. Johns, united in the War of Independence.

Rev. M. C. O'Brien, pastor of St. Mary's (Roman Catholic) church, Bangor, who has given considerable attention to the language of the Indians, says: "Abenakis, as pronounced in French, or Abenaki in English, expresses only the country or territory. The Indian word for its inhabitants is Wanbanakuoi —ak in the singular. Wanbanakiui, — the i being always pronounced like ee in English.

Mr. O'Brien says in relation to Penobscot: "In Indian (as in Rasle's Dictionary) Panawanbskek signifies a wide-spreading place — a broad expanse; a wide valley. It is not the name of the river in that form, which is called Panawanbske-witegwock, or teguk. Pentagoet is a corruption of Pentegwek, a river, from pemi, a particle signifying flying continuity, and tegu, a wave, whence teguk, called "the Cook."

It was deemed important by the British to have a military station at Muchebiguataus (Bagaduce, now Castine) to protect their shipping in the eastern waters, and to overawe the people upon and eastward of the Penobscot, who were known to be generally friendly to the cause of the patriots. Accordingly, on the 12th of June, 1779, General Francis McLean was sent thither with 650 soldiers in His Majesty's ships Blonde, Nautilus, and

North, and transports, and landed on the 16th. He immediately commenced the erection of a fort upon the right of the peninsula, overlooking the harbor on the east and the Buck Cove on the west.

This invasion of Penobscot was at a season of the year when the inhabitants were almost destitute of provisions, and, being very poorly supplied with arms and ammunition, there was great terror among them, especially among the women and children. Several of the principal officers met the people and consulted whether it was best to make defense or to submit on such terms as they might be able to obtain. The result was that Colonel Brewer and Colonel Smith, of Marsh Bay (formerly of Salem), should call upon General McLean and ascertain his disposition in regard to them. They returned with the very gratifying information that, if they would be peaceable and attend only to their own affairs, they should not be disturbed.

Colonel Brewer and others kept a bark canoe plying between his place and Camden, and every few days were able to communicate to the inhabitants in their neighborhood intelligence of what was transpiring in the outer world, and at length received information that Commodore Richard Saltonstall and General Solomon Lovell were coming from Massachusetts with a fleet and army to drive out the British. About a month after Brewer and Smith first visited McLean they were sent again to him by the people on some business which they accomplished to their satisfaction, and, being observant while upon the peninsula, they took note of the works of the British and of their situation generally. From a rapid movement of the troops the Colonel felt that something important was about to take place, and judged that it would be for his interest to hasten away, and, informing his companion, they proceeded rapidly to their boat. They had hardly put off from the shore when the "grand rounds" were beaten for no person to leave. Having reached the head of the peninsula, they stood out with a light breeze up the river, and, casting their eyes down the bay, espied a large fleet, which they felt quite certain was the Massachusetts expedition, and were so overjoyed with the sight and with the anticipation of the early expulsion of the British, that they could hardly sleep during the night. They stopped all night, after having sailed up the river about six miles, and the next morning made some effort to discover the fleet, which was enveloped in fog; but not succeeding, they proceeded to Old Fort Point and walked about half a mile, when the fog lifted and they "had a full view of all the fleet, which had just got under way, and, with a small breeze, was standing up in line of battle discharging their cannon at the British shipping as they passed by." It was an imposing sight and must have impressed the enemy, from the number of transports, that the force was very formidable.

While admiring this beautiful spectacle, they were startled by the noise of oars, and looking in another direction saw below them, close under the cliff, several whale-boats full of armed men, upon which they ran to their boat, which was on the northerly side of the point, and were just hoisting the sail when the whale-boats came round the Point upon them, and they were ordered to stand. To Colonel Brewer's astonishment, the order came from his brother Josiah, who had been dispatched with a company of soldiers as an advance guard to be stationed at the Narrows at Buckstown (Bucksport), to stop communication. Jumping on board the boat of Brewer and Smith, Josiah led the flotilla to its destination, and, having accomplished his object, returned with his friends in their boat to the fleet; which, owing to the dense fog, they were not able to reach until the next morning. They were very politely received by General Lovell on board his ship, and he, on being informed that Colonel Brewer and Captain Smith had left the fort only about thirty-seven hours before, sent for Commodore Saltonstall to come on board, which he did. Being assured by Josiah Brewer that he might rely upon the communications that his brother and Captain Smith might make, the Commodore and General went with them into the cabin, and received from Colonel Brewer a detailed statement of the state of the fort and the British forces; that the fort, on the northerly side, overlooking the Cove, was about four feet high; that the easterly and westerly ends were similar to a stone wall, falling off gradually from the back side of the fort to the front, where the ground was not broken and but one log was laid; that on the back side of the fort the ditch was about three feet in depth, and "the ends were tapering according to the height of the walls;" that not a platform had been laid or a gun carried into the fort; that a part of the troops were stationed at the upper end on the heath; that there was no appearance of any artillery there; that on a point there was a six-gun battery, and that was all they would have to encounter on the land; that a small battery had been begun on Cape Rozier Point; that Captain Mowatt's ship, mounting twenty guns, and one other, mounting ten guns, he thought were all that lay opposite the fort. General Lovell appeared to be very much pleased with the information; but when Colonel Brewer told Commodore Saltonstall that that was all the force he would have to meet, and that, "as soon as the wind breezed up, he might go right in with his shipping, silence the two small ships and the six-gun battery, land his troops under the cover of his guns, and in half an hour make everything his own," that dignitary "threw up his long chin, and says: 'You seem to be damned knowing about the matter. I am not going to risk my shipping in that damned hole.'" Brewer then thought that "his head would make a pretty button for a halter," and wished it, too. After this Brewer and Smith returned home, but Brewer was ordered by his brother, who was then his Colonel, to bring half of his company back, which he did. After remaining a while, and doing nothing except break up a fishing party of the British, he again returned home, where he remained.

On the 14th of August Captain Brewer was greatly surprised by the appearance at his house in the morning of Dr. Downing, Surgeon-in-chief of the American forces, with all the sick and wounded prisoners—twenty to thirty—and the information that the siege had been raised by the appearance of a British fleet under Sir George Collier, and that our fleet and army were flying before him up the river. After dressing the wounds of those in his charge and giving them refreshments at Captain Brewer's house, by advice of that gentleman he took them to Major Treat's, at the head of the tide and left them in charge of Dr. Herbert, with his medical chest.

In the morning such of the ships as had not been destroyed below, came up to Condeskge, and on the next morning were blown up and burnt in the Penobscot River off the mouth of the stream by their crews. These were the ships Monmouth, 24 guns; Sally, 22 guns; Hector, 20 guns; Black Prince, 18 guns; brigs Hazard, 16 guns; Diligent, 14 guns; Tyrannicide, 14 guns, burnt; sloop Providence, 14 guns, blown up; sloop Spring Bird, 12 guns; total, 154 guns; and three transports. The army made their way through the woods westward.

Captain Brewer was again called upon by the inhabitants to go again to General McLean, accompanied by Captain Ginn, and learn his determination in regard to them. At the Narrows they saw the ship Blonde, Captain Berkley, and, being hailed, went on board and informed the Captain of their business. He gave them a pass, and they were not again interrupted on the voyage. When they called upon General McLean he received them very politely, and said:

"Mr. Brewer, you have come to see me again. What is the news up the river, and where are the rebels? Have they dispersed?"

"They have."

"I believe the commanders were a pack of cowards, or they would have taken me, for I was in no situation to defend myself. I meant to give them only one or two guns that I might not be called a coward, and then strike my colors, as I did not wish to throw away my men's lives for nothing. Now, what is your request?"

"The inhabitants are in distress to know your determination. If it is favorable they will stay at home; if not, they will quit their houses and take to the woods as some have done already."

"Go home and tell them that if they will stay by their houses and live peaceably and mind their own business, they shall not be harmed, but the houses of all who quit them shall be burnt."

Captain Brewer then inquired what would be the disposition of the sick and wounded men who had been left.

"What is your wish?"

"That they may be conveyed to their friends as soon as convenient."

"Go up the river and get a vessel, if you can; if not, I will provide you one."

"I have one in view that I can get."

"Then fit her in good order and take all the sick and wounded on board, and come down with them and return me a list of their names, and I will give you a pass as a cartel, to deliver them where it is most convenient for the men."

"But, General, there will be some stores wanting that I cannot get up the river."

"Get what you can, and make out a memorandum of what you want more, and I will supply you here."

Captain Brewer returned, and on his way chartered a schooner and shipped a master and crew, who went with her up the river, where she was fitted up with platforms and bunks.

In a few days Captain Mowatt came up the river in the ship Albany, and anchored abreast of Brewer's Cove just at night, and sent word to Brewer to call upon him in the morning, which he did. At this visit he informed Mowatt of the orders he had received from the General, and Mowatt desired him to accomplish the business as soon as possible. The intercourse between those two persons, until the schooner was away, was of the most friendly character. Mowatt frequently, as Brewer was passing, called him on board his vessel, made inquiries about the sick and wounded, and took him into his cabin to take a glass of wine or brandy; and when the schooner was about to sail, he gave him a pass to proceed to General McLean.

When he reached Marsh Bay, Captain Brewer was informed that Captain George Ross, who had commanded an American ship of twenty guns, had been wounded, and, with his cabin boy, was on shore there. He sent the boat with Dr. Herbert for them, and they came on board. Brewer added this captain's name to his list, "George Ross," he says, "as it was," and when he arrived at Bagaduce returned his list to General McLean, with which he was much pleased, and gave Captain Brewer an order on the Commissary to fill the memorandum made by the captain for the supplies needed, and "a pass for the schooner as a cartel," to proceed with the men to Boston and the places most convenient for them to get to their homes. Captain Brewer then returned to his home to meet with a reception that he had not contemplated.

After he had left Marsh Bay, on his way down the river, one Ichabod Colson hastened to inform Mowatt that Brewer had taken off Captain Ross, and on the morning of Brewer's return, Mowatt sent for him to come on board his ship. Brewer, being fatigued, excused himself until afternoon, and as he was leaving his house to comply with the request, he saw Mowatt land upon the point opposite, and went over to him. Captain Brewer thus describes the interview, which continued about half an hour.

"The first compliment I received was:

"'You damned rebel, I understand that you stopped at Marsh Bay, and took on board Captain Ross, one of the finest captains there was in the Navy. I meant to have kept him and had two of my captains for him, he was such a fine fellow. Did you return him as captain?"

"'No, I returned his name George Ross.'

"Then it was D again, and: 'Did you not know that I had not given you any order to take any one on board?'"

"'Yes.'

"'And how dared you do it?'—with sword flourishing over my head—both of us stepping back and forth pretty lively.

"'Because I got my orders another way.'

"Which way?"

"From General McLean, your master."

"You must suppose that I was somewhat agitated by my answer to him. On that, he starts back a little, draws his sword out of his scabbard, and says:

"You damned rebel, I have a good mind to run you through.' I deliberately opened my breast, and told him: 'If you dare do it, here is your mark, for it is in your power to do it.'

"On that he turned on his heel, stepped back a little, then wheeled again, advanced with his flourishing sword, with a double D, if it could be expressed, that before sunrise he would lay my buildings in ashes. I told him it was in his power to do it, 'but what do you think I shall be doing all the time?' On that he wheeled again and marched to his boat, and I to mine, and came home."

The repose of Mr. and Mrs. Brewer the succeeding night was not so pleasant as usual, but nothing further occurred until about four the next afternoon, when Captain Brewer alarmed his wife by telling her that Captain Mowatt had landed and was approaching the house. He walked very moderately, and when he had nearly reached the door Captain Brewer met him. He politely saluted Captain Brewer, and inquired for the health of his family, and was invited by him into the house. Mrs. Brewer was partially relieved of her panic when introduced to him. He entered into conversation and expressed great commiseration for the distressed condition of the inhabitants, remained two or three hours, inquired into the condition of Captain Brewer's family, and proposed to assist him in getting goods from Halifax to the value of £5,000 at prime cost, if he should need assistance. During his stay he was at all times friendly to Mr. Brewer, excepting on the occasion of his display of temper before mentioned; called all hands on deck at one time, and forbade their taking anything from his field or garden under penalty of punishment, and was strictly obeyed. He obtained supplies for his table from Captain Brewer, and paid him generously for them.

Mowatt's barges went to the head of the tide, and his men burnt the houses of some who would not take the oath of allegiance, among them James Nichols's, at Ed-dington Bend, and old Joseph Page's, at Penjewock. Page's was burnt in his sight, he being on the summit of Mt. Hope at the time watching the proceedings of the British. It is evident that Mowatt was a passionate man, though there were ennobling traits in his character. His conduct towards Brewer shows that he did not retain resentment. There is an anecdote of his humanity. One Samuel Kenny, an arrant Tory, who resided on the eastern side of the river, nearly opposite the mouth of the Kenduskeag, had taken a great quantity of pork and beef from the settlers, and deposited it in a house in the neighborhood of Captain Brewer's. Of this he informed Mowatt, who went to see it. He reprov'd Kenny for taking it, and ordered him to take salt from his tender and salt it all immediately, and give a barrel to each person he robbed.

Mowatt was from forty to forty-five years of age; had a fresh countenance and good physique. He wore his hair powdered, dressed in a blue coat with facings lighter of the same color. Was of medium size.

In 1775 he had disgraced himself among Americans by burning Portland. In 1783 he was in command of Her Majesty's sloop of war Sophie, with Governor Parr on board, when he visited, gave the name to, and received the hospitalities of the new refugee town of Shelburne, Nova Scotia.

Many of the settlers left the Penobscot after the disaster to the Penobscot expedition, and of those who remained many took the oath of allegiance to the Crown; and some went to Bagaduce to work on the fort in order to get the means to eke out a subsistence. Rations were issued to them, and the carpenters received a dollar a day, and laborers at first a pistareen (twenty cents), afterwards about seventy-five cents. Mr. Crosby and Captain Brewer were among those who left the country for their former home. The occasion of the latter leaving is related in his journal.

Before Captain Mowatt went down the river he made an arrangement with Captain Brewer to take down a house on the Point, which was owned by his brother, for $200, and Mowatt was to send a vessel to take it to the fort at Bagaduce. A few days afterwards some person removed the windows and secreted them. This was reported to General McLean, and Captain Brewer gives this report of the conversation that followed:

"Well, man, you must get them again."

"I cannot, for I know not where to look for them or whom to suspect."

"Then, man, you must stay here until they are produced."

"That is impossible for me to do without having liberty to search for them."

"Well, man, I guess you know where they are as well as anybody, and I will give you a week or fortnight to go home and get them; and if you don't bring them within that time I will put you in confinement."

Captain Brewer went home, but instead of searching for the windows he packed his own and many other goods (excepting his beds and clothing), which he put on board a large scow that Major George Ulmer had come up from Camden for plunder in. Then embarking his family, consisting of nine persons, the scow left in the night. They reached Camden the next day. He remained, and taking his yoke of oxen, three cows, and one horse, joined them with the stock of John Crosby and others—making in all about thirty head—and they drove them through the woods to Camden, where they arrived the third or fourth day. From there he went with his family to St. George, where they took passage by water to Boston and did not return until after the peace.

The crews of the vessels which were destroyed at Con-deskge swarmed over the Point, but finding no means of subsistence among the inhabitants they made no tarry, but made their way through the wilderness to the Kennebec, suffering greatly on their journey, and some starving to death.

Communications by water between the inhabitants of Penobscot and other parts of the country being obstructed by the British occupancy of Bagaduce and the river below Bucksport, arrangements were made by which the Indians of Penobscot could be supplied at Kennebec to prevent their falling under the influence of the British, of which there was danger after the destruction of Saltonstall's fleet. Many of them plundered the houses of settlers all the way up the river, doubtless supposing that their owners who had left would have no more rights there. Fort Halifax, near Ticonic Falls, on the Kennebec, which had been built about twenty years before, was made a depot for supplies, and the Penobscots made it a resort for obtaining them until the end of the war.*

This was a critical time for their loyalty. One Lunier who kept a trading house at the carrying place between the Penobscot and St. Lawrence waters—Penobscot and Portage Lakes†—was constant in his efforts to detach them from the American interest. He had great influence with them. In September, 1779, twenty-six Indians and French, under his direction, arrived at the Indian village on the Penobscot, and finding that all the Indians excepting two had gone to Kennebec, obtained some dispatches sent by Colonel Allan, and learned from them that the Indians were on their march from St. John to join that officer. He was a vigilant, active man, and had under him at this time a number of troops, and caused Allan much anxiety. On reading the dispatches, he sent the St. John Indians a belt of wampum, inviting them to Canada with flattering promises if they came, and threats if they did not. Their confidence in Allan, however, was so great that he could not influence them.‡

Mr. Franklin, of the Governor's Council of Nova Scotia and Superintendent of the Indians, and Major Studholme, commander of a fort on the St. John, left no means unimproved to control them. The Penobscots were at a grand council of the Indians at Passamaquoddy in June, 1780, to consult in regard to propositions of the enemy.

The Penobscots remained true to the Americans until the close of the war. In acknowledgment of their services, the Government presented some of them with clothing and gave them some privileges that they had not before.§

*Kidder's Eastern Maine, 278—note.

†Ibid., 269.

‡Kidder's Eastern Maine, 268.

§Williamson's History of Maine, II., 478.

CHAPTER III.

Poverty of the People before the Revolution—Budge's Saw-mill—Treat's Store—Dennet's Boats—Howard's Barrels—Destitution during British Occupation—Revival of Business afterward—Budge's Enterprise—Brewer's Trouble About the New Worcester Tract—How it was Settled—Knapp and Associates—Missionaries—Rev. Mr. Little and Rev. Mr. Ruthven (Catholic)—Massachusetts Commissioners and Penobscot Indians—Terms of Treaty Agreed to—Mr. Little's School—Rev. Seth Noble—End of Mr. Little's School Labors—A Tragedy—A Quarrel, and an Indian Killed—Treaty not Ratified Promptly, and Rejected by the Indians—Rev. Mr. Little as an Ambassador—Reception and Conference at Oldtown—Orson Neptune's Speech—Mr. Little's Reply—His Departure—The Chief Orono.

Prior to the occupation of Penobscot by the British, the people on the river lived as they could, from hand to mouth. The soil was not cultivated to any great extent. Fish were abundant. In 1772 James Budge erected a saw-mill on the Mantawassuck Stream, at the bend on the eastern side of the river, and the next year manufactured boards sufficient to supply the demand. Major Treat shortly afterward built a store near the Penjeawock Stream, from which he supplied the people with necessaries in exchange for their fish and furs. Jacob Dennet built boats adapted to the fishing business, and Mr. Howard disposed of barrels and kegs at Bagaduce, which brought some return.

After the river was closed against communication, the few inhabitants who remained suffered the extreme of destitution. Fish was the chief food. It was sometimes boiled with sorrel to give it relish. At Falmouth, in June, 1799, corn was $35 per bushel; wheat meal, $75; molasses, $10 per gallon, and tea, $19 per pound.* The price must have been greater upon the Penobscot.

Their anxiety, their loneliness—hemmed in by a wild and pathless wilderness on three sides, and by the enemy on the fourth—their hopelessness, must have rendered their feeling of desolation terrible. That they should have thought the end of the world at hand when the 19th of May, 1780, came upon them almost wholly as night, and they were obliged to use lighted candles at noon time, hardly excites our surprise.

Bangor's second decade commenced in darkness, but light began gradually to dawn. The war could not always continue. On October 19, 1781, Cornwallis surrendered. There were those in the British Parliament who would have the war prosecuted further, but March 4, 1782, it was resolved to terminate it, and the treaty of Paris, under which the independence of the United States was admitted and the boundaries of the Republic were determined, was signed September 3, 1783.

The navigation of the Penobscot being again free, the craft of Dennet, in the manufacture of boats and yawls, and of Howard, in that of barrels, was again in requisition. Fish became again an article of export, and traffic showed some signs of returning animation.

In 1783 John Brewer returned with his family to New Worcester and completed his grist-mill, thereby relieving the settlers above him of the great labor of either sending their grain to Wheeler's mill, at Wheelerborough, or pounding it in large wooden mortars, which were used in cases of emergency. Soon afterward James Budge removed from the Mantawassuck to Condeskge, and purchased of Thomas Smart, his wife's brother, the City Point Lot, which he occupied for several years. He was a man of much business ability, and extended his lumbering operations. The pines within a few miles of his residence were, many of them, converted by him into masts and floated in rafts to Bagaduce, where he found a market for them.

* Smith's Journal, III, 112.

Mr. Brewer, directly after his return, was too much engaged about his house and family to give his attention to obtaining a title to the territory that was so nearly in his possession at the breaking out of the war, and was chagrined when Barnabas Dodge made his appearance with directions from the Government of Massachusetts to run the lines and make a plan of it, thus anticipating the settlers, who desired to have a survey and make a petition that it be granted to them. After Dodge had made his return, a company consisting of Moses Knapp and twenty-nine others obtained a deed of the tract from the State. This was a great disappointment to the settlers; but imagining that something might yet be done to protect them in their rights as pre-occupants, they appointed John Brewer and Simeon Fowler, an intelligent gentleman who had settled on the river south of Mr. Brewer in 1773, their agents to look after their interests.

Accordingly these gentlemen proceeded to investigate the matter and found that, so late as March 22, 1786, no deed of the tract had been recorded, whereupon they made a representation of the case and applied for a grant, which led to a compromise. The deed to Knapp and associates was dated June 29, 1785, and contained 37,307 acres. But it was so arranged that 10,864 acres, bordering on the river, including a gore of 2,500 acres, should be relinquished by them from the grant. The Government gave a deed to Brewer and Fowler that each of the settlers might have a lot of one hundred acres from the tract relinquished, with the reservation of "suitable and convenient landings and roads to the same from the lands purchased by Moses Knapp and associates, and the privilege of taking fish, which were to be held in common between the said Brewer, Fowler, and other settlers and the said Knapp and his associates," the landings, roads and privilege having been reserved in the deed to Knapp and others.

There have probably been no settlements in New England, however remote, to which the religious missionary did not early penetrate. There is a record of one Oliver Noble, from Marblehead, preaching a few Sundays at Condeskge, prior to 1786, in which year Rev. Daniel Little returned. This clergyman was settled in the second parish in Wells, which is that part of the town set off in 1750 as Kennebunk.* He was ordained March 27, 1751. He came east as a missionary before 1774, returned in that year, and came again to the Penobscot in 1786. He was a man of considerable enterprise, and was esteemed for his judgment and prudence. In his visit to Penobscot in 1774, he found the family of Captain Brewer kind and hospitable, and he found a young preacher at the place, whom they had hired for three months. His name was Knowles; he was "sensible and well disposed," and preached there and at Marsh Bay alternately. When Mr. Little came to Penobscot he found the people alarmed by a report that a large body of southern Indians had held a council and sent a belt of wampum and a hatchet to the Indians at "Passadunkee," and a message that if they did not join them they would destroy all the women and children, and that they had assurance of assistance from the Governor of Canada. The report was brought by Aussong Neptune and Peol Sock to Mr. Treat, at Condeskge, with a request for ammunition for defence.

On his way up the river from Bagaduce, he was informed that a French priest (a Mr. Ruthven) had gone up to Condeskge in a small sloop which he had bought in New York. He followed him, and, through Mr. Treat, obtained an interview with him, and inquired into the cause of the report. He said that in the spring (this was in August) a French colonel, with some southern Indians, met the Abenakis at Saint Francois, and drinking too much, the Abenakis killed two of the other Indians, whereupon some ill-minded person had spread the report above mentioned.

This priest was born in Quebec; had been educated in France; came with Count D'Estaing's fleet to America, from the West Indies, and after arriving at Boston was, by order of court, sent as missionary to Penobscot. In the two first years after the defeat at Bagaduce, he was at Fort Halifax, on the Kennebec. He then took up his residence on White Island, in Penobscot Bay. He was a man of good natural understanding, and conversed in English so as to be understood. He was white, tall, and of good proportions; "his address was truly French, except an Indian shrug and toss with his shoulder when he pronounced an emphatical 'No.'" He wore a blue coat with a velvet collar, and was well equipped with pocket instruments. He thought the Indians would not learn English in a school, and ridiculed the idea of the validity of a marriage between two Indians that had recently taken place agreeably to State law, and said he would nullify it and make them pay double fees.

The priest's sloop was managed by a boy, as he could not command her. He sold a third of it to the boy, and two-thirds were sold to Mr. Howard for a horse.

Mr. Little was astonished that the priest should come up the river in such haste, and not call at his island on the way. It was a mystery. He found that he was waiting for the Indians to come down, as he intended to go there and tarry with them until they had harvested their corn.

At this time the Government had sent General Benjamin Lincoln, General Putnam, and Dr. Thomas Rice, to purchase the title of the Indians to the lands on the Penobscot River. On August 20 they took Mr. Little from Mr. Brewer's and carried him to Condeskeag, where they proposed to confer with the Indians. They had previously sent Mr. John Marsh to Oldtown and Passadumkeag to invite them, and on Sunday, the 27th, they arrived. There were twenty-one canoes, containing sixty-five Indians. The Commissioners notified them that they would meet them the next day at 10 o'clock.

*Sullivan's History of Maine, 235.

At that hour the Commissioners found them seated upon the ground of "an elegant green near the river," four chieftains—Orono, Orson, Neptune, and Neptonbovitt—being close together in front, and the others "promiscuously in the rear." There were several spectators present.

Through the interpreters, Robert Treat and John Marsh, the conference began. General Lincoln stated the kind intentions of the Government, and that it had appointed him and his two associates to settle the claims to the lands of the Penobscot satisfactorily to both parties. The Indians said that their "hearts were linked with the Americans," and expressed themselves gratified that the Commissioners had come, and said that they were ready to hear their demands. The Commissioners then wished to know what they claimed. They replied that they claimed "down to a small stream below Oldtown, one mile above Colburn's." The Commissioners reminded them that they had relinquished their right to that part of the country to Governor Pownall, and what they now held was by virtue of the action of the Provincial Congress in 1775. That it was the territory bordering on the Penobscot River, beginning at the head of the tide, running northerly covering a breadth of six miles on each side; that upon that action they must rest their claims. They then proposed an exchange by which they were to relinquish their claims to this tract for a larger tract farther up the river and two islands in the Bay better adapted to hunting, and urging as a reason for the exchange that when the lands back of this tract were settled they would be of no value for hunting.

The Indians did not think it right that they should remove further up the river.

The Commissioners replied: "We are willing you should hold all the islands in the river you now improve, from Sunkhole to Passadunkee, which is three miles above Oldtown, together with Oldtown Islands and the lands on all the branches of the river above Passquataguess on the west side, and the Montawunskeag on the east side of the river, together with White Island and Black Island in the Bay, if you will quit your right to the six miles wide from the river below."

The Indians said that they wanted a cross line at Passadunkee for their bound; that if they moved they expected to be paid for it, and that they all wanted blankets, powder, shot, and flints.

The Commissioners agreed to give them three hundred and fifty blankets, two hundred pounds of powder and shot, and flints in proportion—that number of blankets, they said, would afford each of the tribe one. This was satisfactory, and all the Indians agreed to the proposition. Rev. Messrs. Little and Noble, Colonel Jonathan Eddy, and Mr. Jeremiah Colburn were called as witnesses.

After receiving an admonition from the Commissioners not to "spread groundless reports of hostile intentions, but to carefully inform the inhabitants of anything necessary for their safety," they shook hands with the Commissioners, and "parted with general joy."

The Commissioners sent on shore both breakfast and dinner for the Indians. During the whole conference the Indians did not move from the spot where they first seated themselves, or rise, except when they addressed the Commissioners, until at the close, when the four public speakers—the chieftains—rose together.

Mr. Little accompanied the Commissioners to Captain Brewer's. On the next Wednesday (30th) Mr. Little left Mr. Brewer's for the purpose of establishing schools among the Indians at a village near Mr. Colburn's, above the head of the tide. On his way he had a conversation at Mr. Treat's with four Canadian Indians, who were waiting to have their guns mended. After spending the night at Mr. Bradley's, he took his horse and rode to Mr. Colburn's, where he was disturbed on finding that a Mr. Burley, a young trader, had been selling rum to the Indians and getting them drunk, on their way from the treaty.

He found seven families in Mr. Colburn's neighborhood who were very poor and ignorant, and invited their children to attend school on the next day.

On the 1st of September he established his school at a place called "Rumfeekhungus" (Arumpsunkungan). The number of children in attendance at this time he does not state, but he was so highly gratified with it that he called in some Indians who were passing to see how it was conducted, and the manner of reading and writing, and they seemed to be pleased. One Tennis was there, who understood some English, from whom he learned to pronounce the Indian numerals: Pausuck, one; neese, two; naush, three; yough, four; nollan or perence, five; nougnatunk or nequittance, six; tombousen, seven; sansuck, eight; holanway, nine; matselah, ten; hoquertomow, eleven; neesaunocow, twelve; sauncow, thirteen; youwauncow, fourteen; nolluncow, fifteen; causauncow, sixteen; tomborouscow, seventeen; sansakamsoncow, eighteen; naulaw chusaconcow, nineteen; neerenscow, twenty; the first ten of which he says he took from an Indian, and the last from an Englishman.

On the next day Mr. Little had eleven scholars, all of whom but five knew a little more than their letters. A person—probably Mr. Ruthven, the French priest—dined with him, and admitted the usefulness of schools. He wished the Court would give him a right to land near Oldtown, on which he could reside and administer to the Indians, while the Protestant minister taught the school; said that he would attend the school himself and learn the English language. He attended Mr. Little's school that day. Notwithstanding all this seeming friendliness, Mr. Little appears to have had misgivings in regard to the real sentiments of the Indians and priest about his school. He endeavored, through Mr. Marsh, to ascertain what they might be. The priest passed another forenoon with him, and promised to bring Orono to see him. Mr. Little felt the necessity of understanding the language, and, by the help of Mr. Marsh, translated the Lord's Prayer and made some acquaintance with the Indian vocabulary. On the 5th of September he held a session of his school in the forenoon. Having waited in vain for the priest and Orono until the afternoon of the 6th, he rode down to Mr. Treat's in order to attend Mr. Noble's installment.

Mr. Noble was a clergyman who at the breaking out of the Revolution was in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. He was a native of Westfield, Massachusetts, and was originally a Methodist, but became a Congregationalist. He was a patriot, and performed the duties of a chaplain under Colonel John Allen. He wrote a letter to General Washington while in the East, setting forth the importance of holding the St. John River, and offering to take any position. Men, however, were not to be had, and the proposition could not be entertained. Mr. Noble was at Machias at the time of the repulse of Sir George Collier, and preached a sermon on the event.* After the Revolution the Government gave him a tract of three hundred acres of land in what is now Eddington, and in 1786 he came to Condeskeag with his wife and three children to reside.

There was no organized church on either side of the Penobscot River, but there were several religious people who were members of churches in the places from which they came, and these had their influence with the people to employ Mr. Noble as a religious teacher. An arrangement was made with him at a stipend of $400 per year, and advantage was taken of Mr. Little's visit to have him installed.

It was intended to have Mr. Powers (probably Rev. Peter Powers, who was at Deer Isle) assist in the installation, but on learning that he could not come it was concluded that, "considering the great trouble and expense of convening a council," Rev. Mr. Little should induct Mr. Noble into office.

Accordingly, on September 10, 1789, upon a platform laid upon barrels in a grove of magnificent oaks, not far from what is now the intersection of Oak and Washington streets, overlooking the then broad and unobstructed Penobscot, whose banks below were covered with almost unbroken woods, in the presence of a large and reverential assembly, the solemn ceremonies were performed. Mr. Little gave the pastoral charge and the right hand of fellowship, and, as he simply and quaintly says, "the people were satisfied, without offering any objections." Mr. Noble preached the sermon, and afterward administered the Lord's supper to Thomas Howard, Andrew Webster, Simon Crosby, and their wives, of Condeskeag, and John Brewer and Simeon Fowler, of New Worcester.†

Mr. Noble was at this time forty-three years of age. He is described as "thin-faced, spare, not tall, of light complexion with a fresh countenance; active, quick, smart, and nervous—a very good preacher,"‡ "a man of energy."‡ On March 27, 1787, the people of Sunbury (as Mr. Noble had now taught them to call the place) were so well pleased with their preachers that, in a meeting for village purposes, they voted to build a meeting-house forty by thirty-six feet at Condeskeag, and

Captain Budge, who was Moderator of the meeting with Mr. Smart, his brother-in-law, agreed to give an acre of land upon which it was to be built. The people also voted that the timber for the house should be twelve shillings per hundred, or tun, delivered. Nothing was accomplished, however, during the year, and on February 8, 1789, a meeting of the inhabitants of the Plantation from Widow Wheeler's mills upwards, was called for March 2, to consult in regard to building a meeting-house and selecting a site for it, and for adopting some proper method for collecting the minister's salary. The meeting-house or site does not appear by the record to have received the slightest attention at the meeting, and the action in regard to the salary is recorded thus: "Voted Captain Abraham Tourtellet to weight on the Selectmen of Orrington with our Selectmen, to consult on Mr. Noble's salary."

After the first year the ministerial enthusiasm in the community evidently had abated. It is probable they lost the respect for Noble to which his clerical character should have entitled him. His conversation was light, and he did not sustain the gravity becoming a minister. He had acquired army habits, and would take a dram with almost any one who invited him; would laugh and tell improper anecdotes. The quantity of liquors bought by him of Robert Treat would astonish a temperance man.* Yet he was able and eloquent, "so that one would think" (his Deacon Boyd says) "when he was in the pulpit that he ought never to leave it." "He was quite gifted in prayer, and often very eloquent in his sermons."† He used notes, some of which had the flavor of age. One of his sermons which is remembered, was preached in reference to the loss of his oldest son, Seth, and two of his neighbors' children, by shipwrecks late in the fall in the midst of a thick snow-storm; on their passage towards Boston, from the text: "Is it well with thy husband; is it well with thy child; is it well with thee? And she said, It is well." It was full of pathos.

He was fond of singing; had a fine tenor voice, and sang well himself. He taught singing also, and Mr. Little found him one evening, a few weeks before his installation, at a singing meeting at Mr. Nevers's. He also had the poetical afflatus. His first wife (Hannah Barker) died in 1791, and he dedicated a tribute to her memory, of which the following stanzas are a part;—

"She was my friend, my guide, my earthly all;
Love grew with every waning moon;—
Ah! Heaven through length of years delayed the call,
And still, methinks, the call too soon.

* * * * *
Not the gay splendors of an earthly court
Could tempt her to appear and shine;
Her solemn airs forbade the world's resort,
But I was blest that she was mine."‡

Mr. Noble lived in a log-house near the river, several rods northerly of Newbury street. His first meeting was at Nevers's house, which stood near the foot of that street. The indifference of the people in regard to his support; his free habits in regard to drink, and "moral

*Kidder's Eastern Maine, 129.

†Rev. Mr. Little's Journal. Bangor Centennial, 42-3.

‡Williamson's Annals of Bangor.

‡Kidder's Eastern Maine, 129.

*Bangor Centennial, 77.

†Williamson's Annals.

‡Bangor Centennial, 146.

obliquity in another respect" were the occasion of his leaving the place. He had probably discontinued his ministerial labors prior to April 4, 1792, for the inhabitants on that day met at Captain James Budge's for town purposes, and chose William Boyd and Nathaniel Harlow, Sr., a committee to hire a minister, and voted "66 Dollars, 66 Cents for the Gospel."^{*}

The following letter was addressed by Mr. Noble to Colonel Jonathan Eddy, Major Robert Treat, Captain John Crosby, Mr. Elisha Nevers, and the rest of the Committee chosen to make proposals to settle the Gospel on Penobscot River, June 7, 1786.

PENOBSCOT RIVER, August 21st, 1790.

GENTLEMEN:—Sundry attempts have been made for a settlement between the People and myself; but all to no effect. When I settled here I consented to accept of twenty pounds less than what was really necessary to support my family, because the people said they were poor; still, to release them of the burden, I have been at the expense to collect a great part of what has been collected. Very little thanks have I had for the trouble I have been at. I was desired to draw a Bond for the People to sign for my support, which was rejected and another drawn (unknown to me) which hath deprived me of one-half the sum proposed. I am willing to do in this and in all cases as I would be done by; but necessity constrains me to say, I must have my pay. I must further tell you I shall look to no other persons for a settlement but that committee which covenanted with me on June 7, 1786, to give me seventy pounds annual salary. What you then did is as binding as a note of hand. I am sorry to take any concise measures; but I tell you again, I must have my pay immediately.

I am, gentlemen, with due respect,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

To the Committee.

SETH NOBLE.

Mr. Noble evidently did not rely solely upon his salary for support. Among his letters to Colonel Eddy was found one, of which the following copy is evidence that he earned something outside of his pulpit; and that he was not probably more successful in obtaining his pay for the one service than for the other:

BANGOR, June 7, 1793.

SIR:—I have a small account against Jacob Bussell, Jr., which I would wish you to collect as soon as possible. I find his word is not to be regarded. Try easy means first; and if that will not do, put the law in force.

To one quarter of a year's schooling, in 1792, one thousand of the best of shingles. Ditto, in 1793, six shillings, and one day's labor.

If he will labor four days for me next week, or when I shall call for him, I will accept of it; if not, sue him for six shillings.

To Colonel Jonathan Eddy.

SETH NOBLE.

Mr. Noble married a second wife—Mrs. Ruhana Emery—April 11, 1793. He removed his family to Newmarket, New Hampshire, in 1797, where he was hired to preach six months, on May 28, 1798. On November 29, 1799, he removed to Westfield, the place of his nativity. From there he removed to Montgomery, Massachusetts, where he was ordained November 4, 1801. He continued there until 1806, when he removed to Franklinton, Ohio. His second wife died in Montgomery, in 1805. He afterwards married Mary Riddle. He died September 15, 1807, aged sixty-four. [Colonel Porter's Memoirs of Eddy, 52, 53; Allen's American Biography, 610.]

To return from this digression, Rev. Mr. Little was in earnest in his intentions to instruct the Indians, but was not aware of the magnitude of the obstacle in his way. The greater part of two centuries they had been under

Roman Catholic influence, and the plausible manner of Ruthven, the priest, in assenting to the usefulness of schools and in agreeing to propose them to the Indians, misled the hopeful missionary. But he was soon convinced of his error, as was a clergyman of a later day.

On the morning of the day after the installation, he sent Mr. Marsh from Mr. Colburn's to Oldtown to ascertain why the Indians did not appear, and to invite them to a conference at his lodgings. In the afternoon the priest appeared, saying that he had come from Passadunkee that day—forty miles; that the Indians had a grand council on the day before, and concluded not to have their children taught by an English school-master; that they were "jealous that their children would be taught a different religion," and that he was desired to come and inform him of the result of the council. The next morning Mr. Marsh confirmed what the priest had told him, and he became satisfied of the uselessness of any further efforts in that direction.

Mr. Little came on foot from Mr. Colburn's to Mr. Treat's, six miles, where he dined and again met the French priest. He had a conversation with him in Latin, which he found the priest could speak pretty well. On the 15th he was again at Captain Brewer's, where he copied his Indian vocabulary while waiting for a passage down the river. By the 1st of October he had returned to his home.

In the spring of 1787 a tragedy occurred, which, but for the confidence of the Indians in the Government, would have placed the settlers in great peril.

The facts, as related by Captain Brewer to Mr. Little, were that Andrew Gilman and an Indian named Peol, with his wife and her son by a former husband, went hunting together to Pushaw Lake, near which Peol had a camp. They were very successful, and deposited their furs in the camp. When they came to a division of the furs a dispute arose as to the share that each should receive. Gilman claimed one-half, but the Indian claimed that, as his squaw and boy (who was about sixteen years old) had skinned the game and cooked for the party, he was entitled to two-thirds. They then took some of the furs and went together to Mr. Treat's to buy some rum and reconcile the matter over a friendly drink. But the dispute continued. Peol and his wife returned to their camp, where the furs were lodged. Gilman remained about Treat's for a day or two, and engaged James Page, a young man about nineteen years of age, to go with him and get the fur. On reaching Peol's camp they found Archibald McPhetres, Jr., and an Indian named Sabattis, upon business of their own. These they hired to go to Treat's for more rum. On their return they all drank together, and Sabattis, considerably overcome, staggered about eight rods down to the lake and fell into his canoe and went to sleep. Gilman then demanded that the furs be divided into halves, which was agreed to peaceably. Then came up a new dispute in regard to some sable skins, and Page thrust himself into the controversy, which provoked Peol to wrath. Whereupon Gilman asks:

^{*} Williamson's Annals.

"Will you, Page or McPhetres, help me carry off my furs to the canoes?"

"I will go," McPhetres replied.

While Gilman and McPhetres were conveying the furs, Page and Peol continued the dispute, and became so warm that Page struck Peol a blow with his fist. Upon which the Indian said to his wife and boy, "run," and they immediately fled into the woods for safety. While Gilman and McPhetres were stowing the furs in the canoes, they heard the report of a gun, and Gilman said:

"I am afraid Page has killed Peol," and they both ran towards the camp, and meeting Page, Gilman asked:

"Page, have you killed Peol?"

"Yes," Page replied, "if I had not killed him he would have killed me."

Gilman, Page, and McPhetres about midnight took the canoes and went down the pond, leaving Sabattis still asleep.

In the morning Sabattis awoke, and finding only the dead body of Peol, he placed it in his canoe, and sought for the wife and boy. Having found her, he proceeded with her to Oldtown, and had hardly arrived when her son made his appearance from the woods, having swam the rivers. The tribe was in great excitement. The young men in a frenzy called for revenge, and begged to be permitted to go in pursuit of the murderers. The sachems said, "No. We are under Massachusetts government. See what the General Court will do first, then we shall know what to do."

They immediately sent word to the first American settlement. Captain Brewer, who was a deputy sheriff, collected sufficient aid, and before night arrested Gilman, Page, and McPhetres, and the next day carried them before Justice Simeon Fowler. The chiefs were present with the body of Peol, and the wound was examined. Upon the above facts the magistrate ordered the accused committed, and they were taken by Captain Brewer to gaol in Pownalboro.

Mr. Williamson states that a few days previous to the time at which they were to be brought into court, a report was circulated among the Indians that the court was to be held a week later than it actually was, and as no witnesses appeared against the prisoners they were discharged. Gilman never returned to Penobscot. The result of this matter was the occasion of much heart-burning amongst the Indians.

It will be recollected that the treaty made by the Commissioners with the Indians in 1786 was not completed by the passing of the consideration and the transfer of the lands. Instead of acting promptly upon the agreement, the Government were so dilatory that when they actually sent an agent to ratify it, the other party were disposed to postpone it altogether.

It was not until June, 1788, that the Massachusetts Government appointed its agent, and the person they selected was no other than Rev. Daniel Little. Whether his selection was the most judicious may be determined from the following narrative:

That gentleman arrived at Sunbury, as the place was then called, on June 17, and sent a formal request to the Indians at Oldtown, through Mr. Treat, the interpreter, to meet him at the head of the tide on Friday, the 20th, to receive their blankets and other articles, and sign the deeds. Mr. Treat, with Mr. Colburn, visited them and gave them the notice. They took time to consider an answer, and finally told them that they had been down several times on public business; that their young men were apt to drink; that their number was large, and that it was most fit that the meeting should be at their town, and they should be glad to meet Mr. Little and any other person, as everything might be done coolly and calmly there.

Mr. Little had some scruples as to whether he would not be compromising the dignity of the Government if he yielded to their request, and conferred with some of the principal gentlemen on the river in regard to it. They had but one answer. It was a condition not to be disregarded, if a conference was to be had at all. Accordingly he notified the tribe that he would meet them as they proposed, on Saturday.

Having requested Mr. Treat to provide him with a canoe and stores for temporary purposes, he proceeded to collect the witnesses to the treaty and other gentlemen of character acquainted with the Indians to accompany him. His company consisted of Captain Brewer, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Treat, Mr. Noble, Colonel Lowder, Mr. John Lee, and Mr. William Colburn. All things being in readiness, they set off from Mr. Treat's in the afternoon of the 18th, and, reaching Mr. Colburn's at night, they stopped with him. The next morning they crossed the Stillwater River to Marsh Island, and walked, says Mr. Little's journal, "through a trackless wood, about six miles, when Indian Oldtown, about two hundred acres, opened to view, with a thicket of houses on the lower point of said island, just above the Great Falls. Immediately upon our arrival, in open view of the town, a number of their canoes were manned with sprightly young men, in which they came over (about forty rods) to transport us into town. As we landed, their shore was lined with women and children. We walked up to their parade, about fifteen rods from the shore (a walk very smooth, about three rods in width, lined on each side with a range of houses, built with poles about six inches diameter and the same asunder, placed perpendicularly and covered very neatly with bark in shingle form), was introduced into their capital-house by a waiter who stood at the door; only one sachem in the House of Conference, who made us very welcome, directing us to take possession of one half the room, twenty by forty, which was carpeted with fur. Very soon came in all the sachems and placed themselves on the opposite side, which being divided by two poles from one end of the house to the other. Then about forty of their men of years placed themselves in rank next the sachems, and lastly an old man, about one hundred years, a former sachem, was introduced in memory of past services. They then fired a cannon abroad."

The conference began. Mr. Little informed them that he had been appointed by the Government to confirm the treaty made with General Lincoln and others two years before; that the blankets, etc., were ready for them at Condeskeag, and a deed of land in his hand was ready to be delivered to them as soon as they should sign the quit-claim of the lands of the river which he presented to them. He recapitulated the agreement, which he called the witnesses to confirm, and explained clearly all the papers, and said that the Government was ready fully to comply with all the stipulations on their part. After half an hour of consultation apart, the Indians gave their reply through Orson Neptune, who spoke as follows:

We are thankful to see Mr. Little and desire to be remembered to the Governor and Council, and we are glad to see all well here together. The King of France says we are all one—it is all peace; and the King of England says it is peace, though it was war some time ago.

Brothers:—We are all one; we don't talk of hunting one another. We live here to serve God; we all live together. We and our children mean to help each other. We don't mean to take any lands from you. If anybody takes any lands from us, it must be King George, for General Court and General Washington promised we should enjoy this country. General Washington and General Court told us if they knew anything was doing against us they would tell us.

Brothers:—Now we are all here together. When we were at Condeskeag we had not a right understanding of these matters, and the young men were not all collected, and we were pressed to make that treaty contrary to our inclinations.

Brother:—God put us here. It was not the King of France nor King George. We mean to stay on this island. The Great God put us here, and we have been on this island five hundred years. And we have been of the French King's religion, and mean to be so always. From this land we make our living. This is the general speech of all our young men. We don't know anything about writing. All that we know, we mean to have a right heart and a right tongue.

Brother:—We don't incline to do anything about the treaty made at Condeskeag, or that writing.

The speaker then turned to the interpreter, Mr. Treat, and said:

“Is not Mr. Little a minister?”

The reply being in the affirmative, he turned to Mr. Little and said:

“Brother, minister ought not to have anything to do with public business about lands.”

Mr. Little replied that they must remember what General Lincoln told them, that they now held the lands from the Massachusetts Government; that in a former war, in Governor Pownall's day, they lost all their lands here, but that the Government in 1775 gave them six miles on each side of the river; that their claim rested on this, and that they assented to it; that the chiefs who were present were at Condukeag, and that the chiefs always spoke for the whole tribe, and that in regard to his being a priest he was not present as such, but as a Commissioner. He then asked again whether they would not abide by the agreement made at Condukeag, and presented the deed for their signatures. They said in answer:

“We have put our names to many papers at Albany, New York, and elsewhere, but will not put our hands to that paper now nor any other paper forever hereafter.”

Mr. Little then told them that, notwithstanding their refusal, the Government would abide by the treaty and expect them to; and that if they did not they must not expect prosperity from Heaven or favors from Government. He referred to Peol's death, and assured them justice would be done; that a court would be held in about two weeks by four or five great and good men, and they could send their chief and witnesses at the charge of the Government; but that they would want proof of what was done in Peol's camp. They expressed themselves gratified at the care that Government had given the matter, and thought that the court at Kennebec would do justice in the case.

The conference continued about four hours, during which not a smile was seen upon any of their countenances, or a word was spoken, except by their orator and an occasional prompting. In the midst of the conference, at 12 o'clock, the bell rang, and they “made a composed mental prayer for about ten minutes, when they appealed to Heaven as having given them a secure right to the soil, all the sachems rose from the ground on which they sat, and stood in a posture for a minute expressive of an appeal to the Great God for the truth of their declarations.” No strong drinks were used by either party during the visit.

Neither women nor children were seen or heard during the conference. A request to see the tribe paraded and numbered was declined. No complaint was made of injuries received; the death of Peol was not even alluded to until Mr. Little introduced it, and no favor was asked of the Government. The chiefs waited on Mr. Little's party to the water, and the parting was most friendly. The young men took them over the river again in their canoes, a cannon was fired, and other marks of friendship manifested.

The next day being Sunday, there were religious services at Mr. Treat's. Mr. Noble preached in the forenoon and Mr. Little in the afternoon. After the services Orono came in from Oldtown and told Mr. Little that, in council the evening before, the tribe concluded to send neither sachem nor witnesses to Kennebec—that the young men were going on a new hunt—that Peol's widow and sons were at Passamaquoddy, and they should leave the matter of his death with the court and be satisfied with the result. Orono added that Peol's wife had two sons and one daughter, no father, mother, or brother living, and her last infant was dead.

Before parting with Orono, Mr. Little hinted that if the tribe wished to renew their conference with him, he should be on the river about a week or ten days longer.

He saw him afterwards at Mr. Brewer's, but no proposition for the renewal of negotiations was again made by Orono or any of the tribe.

CHAPTER IV.

Jonathan Eddy—Grant of Land to Him and Others—Some Account of Him—His Settlement upon the Penobscot and Death—Population of New Worcester in 1783—Incorporation of Orrington—Story of its Name—Two Meeting-houses—Settlement of Hampden—Benjamin Wheeler—His Grist-mill—Wheelerborough—Frankfort from Belfast to the Sowadabscook—Assessment on the Inhabitants on the Westerly Side of the River in 1784—Meeting-house in Hampden—"Condeskge"—"Sunbury"—Action of the Inhabitants for Several Years—Captain James Budge, James Turner, General Boyd, Nathaniel Harlow—Incorporation of Bangor—Settlers—Farms on the Kenduskeag—Fish—Hammond & Smart Erect a Saw-mill on the Kenduskeag—$66.66 Raised for the Gospel—Agents Appointed to get Title to Land for Settlers—Rev. Thomas Hall—Mode of Crossing the River.

1785 to 1800. Jonathan Eddy, with nineteen others, received a grant of 9,360 acres of land north of and adjoining the Brewer tract from the Commonwealth June 29, 1785. By the terms of the grant each settler was to erect a dwelling house upon his lot within two years. These persons had been residents of Nova Scotia. Colonel Eddy was a native of Norton, now Mansfield, Massachusetts, and had resided in Nova Scotia ten years. He had been a member of the Assembly, was Provost Marshal in 1769, and was Sheriff of the county of Cumberland, and in 1776 was at the head of an attempt to take Fort Cumberland on Chignecto Bay. The attempt was unsuccessful, and he, with his party, was obliged to flee.* Colonel Allan had endeavored to dissuade him from this attempt because of the insufficiency of his force, but in vain.† The consequence was that the inhabitants were involved in great distress. A reward of £200 was offered by the Council of Nova Scotia for the apprehension of Eddy. He was brave, active, and patriotic, and led another expedition to Nova Scotia, by direction of Massachusetts, but nothing was accomplished.

There had been settlers upon the township prior to 1784, and in 1778, by an act of the Legislature, the wild lands were exempted from taxation for ten years from the date of the State's deed; and every permanent settler previous to 1784 was to have a title to a lot so laid out as best to include his improvements on the payment of five dollars.

Colonel Eddy settled in his township, and when it was incorporated as a town, in 1811, it was named Eddington in compliment to him. His death occurred in August, 1804, at the age of seventy-eight.

The population of "New Worcester" in 1785 was 188; 39 men, 34 women, and 115 children.

There was a village or plantation organized, probably pretty early after the first settlement. The following records are evidence of this:

31 March, 1785. James Ginn's marke of his stoke [stock] is a crop and slit in the Rite yeare and Crop and a hole in the left.

31 March, 1786. Mr. Eben Whealdon's Marke for his stoke is a Crop in the write yeare and a happaney [half-penny] on the under side.

James Dunning and Anna Tomb [Thoms] Both of Penobscot River in County Lincoln was Published the 21 October, 1786 Jas. Ginn, T. Clerk.

Mr. Jacob Buzell was Published to the Widow Sarah Mansel the 27th August, 1786. Jas. Ginn, T. Clerk.

*Murdock Nova Scotia, II., 578-8.

†Kidders' Eastern Maine, 12.

Joshua Severans and Elizabeth Snow, Both of New Worcester, was Published 14 April, 1787. Jas. Ginn, T. Clerk.

Joseph Plympton and the Widow Jeune Borton, Both of this Town was published the 4 Jan. 1788.

The following table contains the names of the settlers on March 7, 1785, with the quantity of acres in his lot and when and by whom it was settled:

Occupant March 7, 1785.	Number of Acres.	When Settled.	By Whom Settled.
Town Lot.....	100
Elihu Hewes.....	100		Elihu Hewes.
Ebenezer Wheelden.....	200	1772	Moses Wentworth.
Thomas Smith.....	100	1772	Moses Wentworth.
Moses Wentworth.....	700	1770	Major Edward More.
Ephraim Downs.....	200	1773	Ephraim Downs.
Asa Downs.....	100	1773	Asa Downs.
Nathaniel Clarke.....	100	1773	Noah Downs.
Edward Snow.....	100	1777	Jesse Cole, Jr.
Henry Cole.....	100	1777	Henry Cole.
Paul Nickerson.....	100	1775	Paul Nickerson.
Eliphalet Nickerson.....	100	1776	Eliphalet Nickerson.
Warren Nickerson.....	100	1774	Warren Nickerson.
Daniel Nickerson.....	100	1774	Joseph Carey.
Joseph Harding.....	100	1774	Edward Smith.
Set off Lot.....	100	1773	Voted by Town.
Oliver Doane.....	100	1774	James McCurdy.
Jesse Atwood.....	150	1774	James McCurdy.
George Brooks.....	100	1774	Simeon Gorton.
Simeon Fowler.....	100	1773	Samuel Low.
Peter Sangster*.....	100	1772	Jeremiah Coburn.
Jesse Rogers.....	100	1774	Samuel Rogers.
Nathaniel Pierce.....	100	1774	John Carle.
Samuel Freeman.....	100	1774	James Deane.
Widow Hannah Carey.....	100	1777	Joseph Carey.
Solomon Sweat.....	100	1777	Solomon Sweat.
Benjamin Snow.....	100	1772	James Rice.
Edward Smith.....	100	1772	Abraham Preble.
Samuel Wiswell.....	100	1772	Benjamin Wheeler.
Joseph Baker.....	200	1773	Jonathan Pendleton.
James Shirley.....	150	1771	James Shirley.
Robert McCurdy.....	150	1771	Robert McCurdy.
James McCurdy.....	100	1771	Josiah Brewer.
Edward Smith.....	100	1772	Jonathan Pearce.
David Wiswell.....	100	1772	Phineas Rice.
James Ginn.....	125	1771	Peter Sangster.
John Brewer.....	100	1770	John Brewer.

*Peter Sangster, a foreigner, died without heirs here, and his lot escheated to the State.

Measures were taken to procure the incorporation of the town after the arrangement with Knapp and associates. A meeting was held, and after the preliminaries for application to the Legislature were settled, the question of a name came up, and Captain John Brewer or Captain James Ginn, who was Clerk, and remarkable for both his chirography and orthography, suggested that it be Orangetown—the name of a town of which he was a native or had knowledge. It being approved, Ginn inserted it in the petition "Orrington." Parson Noble, who was employed to procure the act of incorporation, being an orator, poet, and musician, was pleased with the euphony of the word, and, although he was aware of Captain Ginn's intention, yet he concluded he had no authority to interfere with his mode of expressing it, and to the captain's surprise, no doubt, when the name came into common use there was a little want of harmony in regard to it betwixt his ear and his eye.

Knapp and associates demonstrated against the incorporation of the town, and thereby procured exemption from taxation for seven years. The whole tract which embraces the three towns of Orrington, Brewer, and Holden, was incorporated as Orrington on March 21, 1788, and was the fifty-second town incorporated in Maine.

Many of the people in Orrington had a regard for religious observances, and voted to build two meeting-houses forty by forty-two feet on front lots. They were built seven miles apart—one near the ferry between Orrington and Hampden; the other a mile above the ferry between Brewer and Bangor. After they were boarded and shingled, the pew ground in both houses was sold for a sum sufficient to finish them in a "decent manner and paint one of them." It was then voted to paint the other. These houses were without steeple or tower—very unpretending, but very conspicuous. They were used for the purposes for which they were built during, perhaps, half a century, after which the northerly one was used for a stable for a while, and then demolished, and the southerly one was used as a town house until 1871.

The people were divided in religious sentiment; those of the southerly half being generally Methodists, and those of the northerly half generally Congregationalists. There were periods when there was much intolerant feeling between the two sections, but happily, in the march of Christian principle, the feeling has to a great degree, if not altogether, subsided.

It is a matter of some question when Hampden was first settled. It is agreed that Benjamin Wheeler, who was originally from Durham, New Hampshire, was the first settler. By referring to the table of the first settlers in Orrington, it will be seen that Benjamin Wheeler settled there in 1772, on a farm which, in 1785, belonged to Samuel Wiswell. Did he not first take up a lot in Orrington, and afterwards relinquish it for the purpose of occupying the mill privilege on the Sowadabscook?

He erected a log cabin on the left bank of the stream, which then flowed down on the northerly side of the Island, as it is called, and built the first grist-mill ever erected above Fort Point, in 1776-77, where no one now would suppose any man in his senses would build a mill, over the ledge on the northerly side of the island; and there the corn and grain of the neighbors, from those next door to those a dozen miles distant, were ground, until one morning the mill was found high and dry; the water having on one night taken advantage of a slight passage in the gravel on the southerly side of the island, which had been made for the purpose of erecting mills upon that side, to work out for itself a channel through which large vessels were to sail for many years.

But, notwithstanding the river had taken a freak to change its course, it still ran, and presented to the enterprising miller a better mill-site than that which it had abandoned — one which he did not fail to appropriate. About the mills of Wheeler the people settled apace, and, in compliment to the first settler, called the hamlet Wheelerborough. But this was at length found too inconvenient a name for a numerous population to use. The territory beginning at Belfast and terminating at Sowadabscook Stream in 1789 was embraced in the Plantation of Frankfort, which at one time had its principal settlement at Sandy Point. In 1784, ten years before Hampden was incorporated, it is probable that the name "Wheelerborough" was applied to the river territory of Hampden for some distance below Wheeler's Mills and that Condeskeag Plantation to that above Wheelerborough was organized for village purposes probably pretty early after its first settlement, and appears to have assessed taxes on the west side of the river, all the way from Marsh Bay to the most northerly settlement, for the purpose of paying for Jeremiah Colburn's lot.

Mr. Elihu Hewes, who was in Orrington in 1772 (and before that settled on an island at the mouth of the river, then owned by Isaac Winslow, Esq., containing six or seven thousand acres, probably Orphan Island), was in 1784 in Wheelerborough, and made the following list of persons upon whom the taxes were assessed. He says:

These are sums due from the inhabitants to them that bought Jeremiah Colburn's lot for the town, May. 1784, and to be paid in the hands of the Committee of Safety by the first day of July next; by a vote of and order of the town at their meeting ye 27 May. 1784.

ELIHU HEWES, town clerk.

(This was a tax of 3s. 6d. on each toll H.

— Clark, Ephriam Grant, James Grant, Adam Grant, William Grant, Thomas Linen, Hatevil Colson, James Colson, Stephen Littlefield, Thomas Down, Noah Downs, Paul Downs, William Sullivan, John Aldersham, Joshua Harding, Daniel Tibbetts, Benjamin Higgins, Simon Smith, James Mayo, Nathaniel Mayo, Nathaniel Myrick, Daniel Whiting, Thomas Harding, Isaac Hopkins, Freeman Knowles, Jona Philbrook, Jesse Harding, James Philbrook, Moses Baker, Reuben Newcomb, Andrew Grant, Elisha Grant, Gooden Grant, Andrew Patterson, Samuel Patterson, Bangs Ballard, Jona Pease, John Miller, Gustavus Swan, Nahum Emery, Benjamin Wheeler, Joseph Pomroy, John Crosby, Ebenezer Crosby, Elihu Hewes, Simeon Gorton, Abner Crosby, John Emery, Samuel Cary, Benjamin Smith, Simon Crosby, Ebenezer Mayo, Thomas Low, James Emery, Jacob Dennett, James Dunning, Joseph Potter, John Smart, Jacob Bussell, Thomas Howard, William Tibbetts, Abner Tibbetts, George Tibbetts, Isaac Bussell, Andrew Mayhew, Andrew Webster, Abram Allen, Ashbel Harthorn, Robert Treat, Joseph Page, Joseph Page, Jr., Isaac Page, Abraham Tourtelott, Archibald McPhetres, Abraham Frees, Silas Harthorn Reuben Simpson.

At this time Benjamin Wheeler occupied the Stream lot. Elihu Hewes was his nearest neighbor. Nahum Emery occupied the lot on the right hand of the road near the top of the hill between the two villages, before reaching the Town House lot, upon which latter a meeting-house was built, nearly resembling those upon the opposite side of the river. This house had its sounding-board, high pulpit, galleries, square pews, and—no appointment for heating in the winter, as some now living can testify. It was built, probably, at a later day than the others, but like them, in its old age it fell from its high estate. It had no steeple. It was not in fashion. It was used for town purposes, for caucuses, for levees, for jollifications, and finally was demolished to make way for the present fine Town House. Andrew Grant lived on the southern declivity of the hill on the same side of the road, Reuben Newcomb on the other side of the road, in the field below Pitcher's Brook. Moses Baker was a tanner at Bald Hill Cove. Gooden Grant kept a tavern a little north of Hampden Upper Corner, and Simeon Gorton and Ebenezer Crosby lived on the back road, about half way between the Sowadabscook and Condeskeag Streams. John Crosby lived on the southerly and westerly side of the Sowadabscook, on the hill overlooking the water, and easterly of the intersection of the county road with the street leading to the long wharf. He settled in Hampden in 1775, three years after his father settled in Bangor.

When Captain Budge removed to Bangor he occupied a log house near the intersection of Oak and Washington streets, overlooking the Penobscot. He afterwards built a one-story frame house on the northerly side of York street, a few rods northerly of Oak street—now Stetson Square. The Plantation and town meetings were held at his house for ten or twelve years afterward.

On March 27, 1787, the people of Condeskge assembled there and chose him Moderator, Andrew Webster Town Clerk, Jacob Dennet, Isaac Frees, and Simon Crosby Committee, John Budge Treasurer, and the pioneer, Jacob Bussell, "Tithenman," and "voted Andrew Webster, Philip Lovejoy, and William Holt is hog Reafts, and that "hogs shall Run at Large Being well yoked," and that "every hog the hog Reaft yoaks shall have 4 shillings; and voted to Buld a Meating house forty and thirty-six feet large," and "that the meating house Shall be Bult at Condeskge;" and "Mr. Budge and Mr. Smart agreed to gave an acor of Land to the town to Set the meating house on;" and "voted that the timber for the meating house is to be 12 shillings Per hundred or tun Delivered at the spot where the house is to be Bult."

It was in "Sunbury" that the inhabitants met on March 3, 1788, and elected a part of their officers. Of course Andrew Webster was again elected Clerk. Mr. Robert Treat was Moderator at this meeting, and Thomas Howard was elected culler of hoops and staves, and Jeremiah Colburn and others surveyors of roads. The meeting was adjourned to April 10, when Captain James Budge, Silas Harthorn, and Archibald McPhetres were chosen Selectmen, Levi Bradley Collector, and Daniel Campbell Fish Committee and Church Warden, and it was "voted that hogs is to run at large being well yoaked."

The inhabitants of "Penobscot River on the west side" met again on October 6, 1788, and chose Simeon Gorton (who lived nearer the Sowadabscook than the Condeskeag), Thomas Howard, Abraham Tourtelott, and Archibald McPhetres, Assessors, and John Crosby (who lived near the Sowadabscook) and Robert Treat (who lived near the head of the tide), Collectors.

At the annual meeting, on March 2, 1789, the inhabitants, besides their action in regard to "Mr. Noble's Sallary," elected Captain James Budge Surveyor of Highways, and "voted four days to be worked on the hiway this year for every man," and that "every man that Dont work on the hiway is to Pay 6s. Per Day."

On June 30 it was voted to raise £10 to defray "Plantation Charges," and to raise "tax No. 7" this year.

Mr. Budge was a prominent man at this time in the Plantation, as may be supposed from the positions he occupied. He was the owner of the lot where he lived,—the City Point lot,—containing one hundred acres, with the point which, during that generation, was familiarly known as Budge's Point. As has been said, he was a man of much business ability; and he was a ready and fluent speaker. He succeeded Captain Edward Wilkins as captain of the militia company organized after the Revolutionary War below the Penjewoock Stream, Mansell being captain of that above. Physically he was rather stout. Ten or twelve years after the war he became involved in debt, and as the facilities for drowning trouble were everywhere at hand, he resorted to them until he became a pitiable wanderer. He finally became deranged, and so continued until a few weeks before his death, when "his reason was fully restored, and he expressed a willingness to resign a life which, he said, had been as troublesome to himself as to his friends." He died at Garland, May 13, 1827, at the age of seventy-six.

While living his unfortunate street life in Bangor, he was famous for rhyning, and for another habit which was sometimes inconvenient to people having trifling articles of property lying carelessly exposed. But he was not without wit, and his delinquencies were good-naturedly borne with. Mr. Thomas Bartlett, a worthy and witty dealer, once made an effort to protect his goods by presenting him with a goodly quantity of fine fish, on condition that he should steal none. The captain took them and went away, apparently delighted. But he soon returned and surprised and amused his compromising friend by throwing down the fish and saying:—

"Here, Bartlett, take your fish. I can do better!"

A building, the lower story of which was occupied by a trader who was a Federal politician, and by the family of a lame citizen, and the upper story by the fashionable tailor, John Reynolds, Esq., he made the subject of a piece of his doggerel, which may be taken as a specimen of all his rhymes:—

Down by the shore
There is a store
Occupied by a Fed.
Prouty, the lame,
Lives in the same,
And Reynolds overhead.

Prouty was the same individual who afterwards resided in Hampden, just below the Bangor line, and remonstrated against a proposition to set off that part of Hampden to Bangor because of the unhealthiness of the latter place.

Rev. Lemuel Norton, in his autobiography, published in 1861, says that he was an apprentice in 1800, with David Jones Waters, editor of the Castine Gazette, and that Mr. Waters was appointed a deputy Sheriff and took charge of the jail, and that he (Norton) had to convey to the prisoners their food; that among the prisoners was "James Budge, a man forty-five years of age, who was brought down the river from Bangor, who owned a large part of the land on which the city now stands. This Major Budge, as he was called, was a notorious drunkard and dangerous man, so much so that his wife swore her life against him and had him put into prison." The Rev. Mr. Norton states that he detected the prisoner in an enterprise which indicated that he was possessed of ingenuity and industry enough when himself. This was an attempt to release himself from jail. When discovered his work was so far advanced that he would have probably been out that night. With a knife and a file he had removed the sheet iron from the door and made a hole almost through, large enough for the passage of his body. He had been at work upon it for weeks, and removed the wood in small pieces, which he found means to convey to the exterior of the building. Accidentally Norton got sight of two or three pieces on the floor which awakened his suspicions, and he then went outside of the jail and came upon a pile of "hacks or small chips, as large as a winnow of hay, as much as ten or twelve feet long." This led to Budge's being placed in more secure quarters. After some weeks "he having greatly improved and become humble and penitent, his friends came and took him out of prison and carried him home to Bangor." Mr. Norton closes his notice thus: "He was a man of strong intellectual powers, rather a good scholar, and something of a poet; wrote a great deal, made some excellent poetry—but rum, that demon rum, which destroys its thousands every year, destroyed him, got the mastery over him, and probably ruined him for this world and for that which is to come."

Some time prior to 1791, before the forests had been to any great extent removed, there came to Bangor a Frenchman, who was called Junin.* He established himself in a log hut on the river-side about twenty rods above where the Central Railroad station now is. In this hut he lived and carried on a traffic with the Indians. He had with him a nephew, Louis Perrin or Perrinneau. His business was what was called a trucking business; that is, an exchange traffic, where little or no money was used. His stock consisted of guns, ammunition, rum, blankets, blue and red broadcloth, ribbons, plumes, green and red baize, and a variety of other goods, which he exchanged for furs. He appeared to be doing business solely on his own account, and was supposed to have considerable means.

On the evening of February 18, 1791, his nephew, in a state of apparent excitement, rushed into the house of Mr. Jacob Dennet, who lived a few rods westerly, and expressed alarm for his uncle, as there were Indians about from whom he was in danger and he feared they would kill him. He remained a short time, and soon after he left the report of a gun was heard. Afterwards Junin's house was visited, and he was found dead in his bed with two bullet-holes through his brains.

The murder naturally created great excitement among the settlers. Jacob Dennet, John Dennet, Elisha Mayhew, John Emery, and John Emery, Jr., searched the woods for the Indians, but found none. It is probable that, if Indians perpetrated the murder, they knew better where to conceal themselves than their hunters knew where to find them.

An inquest on the body was held.

On the next day after the murder, Jonathan Eddy, Esq., who lived about four miles above, on the easterly side of the river, issued his warrant to Abraham Tourtellott, a constable, to summon thirteen good men legally qualified to hold an inquest. The persons summoned were Captain Thomas Campbell, Major Robert Treat, Captain James Budge, Captain John Rider, William Plympton, Robert Hickborn, Andrew Webster, John Smart, William Hasey, Elijah Smith, Nathaniel Harlow, and Abraham Allan, who were sworn as jurors.

The jury soon came to the conclusion that Junin was killed, for there was the evidence of two shot-holes through his head, plain to be seen. It took them longer not to determine who killed him. Indians or Louis probably committed the murder. It was a locality for Indians, and it was proved that muskrat skins were discovered scattered about the house at the time Junin was found dead. It was proved also that Louis went to the house of Dennet, as above stated. As Indians could not be found, notwithstanding the assertion of Louis before the murder that they were "about," it was thought that Louis must have been the murderer to obtain his uncle's property. The jury had not the actual evidence that he was the murderer, and they returned the verdict that there was probable cause for the belief that "Louis Parronneau" committed the murder.

Whether or not there were any other facts to influence public opinion than what have come down to us, it appears to have concurred with the verdict of the jury.*

On the 23d of February, Jona. Eddy, Esq., and Simeon Fowler, Esq., issued their warrant for the arrest of Louis, and as he had not absented himself, he was taken by deputy Sheriff Joshua Woodbury before them. After examination they issued their mittimus for his committal to the goal in Pownalborough (now Dresden) then the shire town of the county of Lincoln, in which Bangor was.

• The French Consul at Boston was made acquainted with the case, and interested himself in behalf of Louis, and used all his influence to procure an acquittal. Why he should have done this, if from examination he had reason to believe him guilty, is a question not easy to answer. Louis was defended by two of the most eminent counsel of the Kennebec and Lincoln Bars, the distinguished barrister, John Gardiner, Esq., and General William Lithgow, Jr., and was acquitted.

From the strong circumstantial evidence, the tradition is that the people held him guilty; and some believed that he got off to France with the fruits of his robbery; and that he escaped directly after the murder was committed. But of what became of him after his acquittal we have no record or tradition.

The body of Junin was laid in the burial ground at the intersection of Oak and Washington streets (where the Hinckley & Egery Iron Foundry now is), and his headstone was standing early in the century.

Two individuals, who afterward became prominent citizens of the town, established themselves at Condeskeag between 1787 and 1791. They were William Boyd from Bristol, Maine, and Nathaniel Harlow from Plymouth, Massachusetts. The former was a ship-carpenter, the latter a pump- and block-maker. Mr. Harlow had been into the West, and explored the country previous to settling here. He preferred Condeskeag to any place he had seen. He saw in the West houses built of hewn timber, and built one similar on the side hill, near where the First Baptist meeting-house now stands, which he occupied until his means enabled him to build the two-story frame-house which now stands in the rear of the First Baptist Chapel.

* There is a tradition that Louis slept with the Dennet boys that night, and shook and trembled badly, which was construed as evidence against him.

*Sometimes Junot.

The population slowly increased. It had reached the number of one hundred and fifty, or thereabouts. The people were ambitious. They were not content with the primitive organization of the Plantation of that day. Their incorporation as a town would give them dignity, and peradventure in many ways advance their interests. They resolved that the sunny banks of their river, to which the æsthetic Parson Noble had given the fitting name Sunbury, should with their inhabitants be incorporated and bear the name legally, and delegated that reverend gentleman to proceed to the General Court at Boston, and procure an act of incorporation. But he was fond of music—he was a singer—the minor key was very appropriately in vogue in this locality during the Revolution and for a generation afterwards, and the music set to the words—

Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound !
 Mine ears, attend the cry—
 Ye living men, come view the ground
 Where you must shortly lie ; which bore the name of Bangor, so haunted his imagination, and was often breathed through his lips, that he felt it to be more euphonious and a more fitting name for the town than Sunbury. He therefore substituted it, and the act incorporating the town of Bangor was passed on February 25, 1791. It has never been hinted that his constituents were dissatisfied with his conduct, and to this day the name has been satisfactory to all its people.

With its incorporation Bangor received a new impetus. Mr. Treat had been successful in his traffic. From the poultry trade he derived enormous profits. His means were sufficient to enable him to go into the business of ship-building. He employed Mr. Boyd as master-carpenter, and in 1791 laid the keel of a vessel, which in two years was ready to receive her rigging and sails. Mr. Treat had the opportunity to avail himself of the craft of Mr. Harlow for pumps and blocks ; that of Mr. Timothy Crosby, son of Simon, for masts and spars ; and that of Mr. Jacob Dennett for boats. This vessel was the first, larger than a boat, ever built in the region of Bangor.*

About 1794, several farms were commenced on the banks of the Condeskeag. William Potter had the farm whose westerly line was near Lover's Leap, and was subsequently owned and occupied by Francis Carr, more recently by Simon Norvell, afterwards, so much as remained of it, by Captain Thomas Norvell, his son ; then by Mr. Frank H. Lowell, and now by Mr. Johnson, from New York. Aaron Clark commenced a farm a mile further up the stream, near what are now the Hatch or Merrill Mills. Samuel Sherburne took up a lot at the intersection of the Six-Mile-Falls and Pushaw roads. But agriculture did not occupy all the attention of the farmers. The winters were long ; timber was abundant, and they were tempted to engage themselves in the production of what has ever since been the chief staple of this region—lumber. William Potter had built a small mill on the fall under Lover's Leap as early as 1786, and Clark, Sherburne, and others could do no less than contribute their share of shingles for the market. Fish, too, began to be a marketable commodity. The streams were full of them. Salmon, shad, and alewives were taken under Lover's Leap, at the mouths of the Manta-wassuck, Segeunkedunk, and Sowadabscook Streams, and at Penobscot Falls. Vessels began to frequent the river, and the surplus lumber and fish of the inhabitants were taken at remunerative prices.

No record was made of the quantity or value of the fish taken at Bangor in any one year, but between thirty and four hundred barrels of shad and alewives were usually taken at one tide at each of the several fishing places or eddies—the average would be from seventy-five to one hundred barrels. At Treat's Falls sometimes forty salmon were taken in a day.

The fishing season, in the spring, continued about five weeks ; time of greatest plenty, two weeks. Salmon were taken during three months at least, but they were not abundant.* From $1 to $1.25 per barrel were paid from the vessels for alewives, and what were then considered fair prices for shad. Newburyport vessels were engaged in the trade and took large quantities of fish to the Southern markets and the West Indies for plantation purposes.

In 1795 William Hammond and John Smart erected a saw-mill at the head of the tide on the Condeskeag, where the Morse & Co. mills now are. There was a great supply of good lumber upon the stream, which continued to supply the mills there until about the year 1850.

Game was found in great abundance along the banks of this river. There are those living who had fine sport in hunting moose and the larger animals of the forest, as well as birds and smaller game. Besides the fish mentioned, bass were plenty in the Penobscot, and sturgeon, which were esteemed of no value for food, made havoc with the seines of the fishermen. They were, however, made use of in furnishing sport for the boys. When caught a rope would be attached to their tail, and they would be returned to the water and used as a motive power for the boats, which they drew very swiftly until they became exhausted, and then, like any other tired draft animal, had to be urged forward by sticks.†

The records of the Plantation and of the town of Bangor are extremely meagre until after the year 1800. It is supposed that at some time when there was danger of their being destroyed—perhaps when the British made their incursion—some careful person deposited them in a garret for safety, and the rats and mice, having no more respect for them than the British would have had, converted them into linings for their nests. At any rate, but a small remnant could ever be found, and that affords hardly as much evidence of the business transacted as of the want of business knowledge of the persons whose peculiar business it was to preserve that evidence—the Clerks. In several instances they did not certify to the truth of the record, or even sign their names to it, and in no instance does it appear that they were sworn.

*Jacob McGaw's Sketch of Bangor, in Library of Maine Historical Society.

*McGaw's Sketch.
 †Bangor Centennial, '81.

The action of the town upon the act of incorporation appears nowhere.

The petition for an act of incorporation is as follows :

PENOBSCOT RIVER, 18th May, 1790.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled.

The petition of the subscribers, inhabitants of and living upon a tract of land in the county of Lincoln, by the name of No. One, Second Range, lying on the west side of Penobscot River, bounded as follows, viz.: Southerly on No. One, Easterly on Penobscot River, northerly and westerly on Govm't land, as will appear by Captain Stone's survey. Humbly sheweth that there is living upon said land forty-five families, seventy-nine pools [polls], and are possessed of about two-thirds of the property of what is commonly called Kenduskeag Plantation, or the Plantation from the Widow Wheeler's Mills and upwards to the head of the settlement on the West side of the Penobscot River. We labor under many disadvantages for want of being incorporated with town privileges, therefore humbly pray your honours would be pleased to take our difficult circumstances into your wise consideration, and incorporate it into a town by the name of Bangor. We have no Justice of the Peace for thirty miles this side of the River—No Grand Jury, and some people not of the best morals. Your Honours know what the consequence must be. We doubt not but you will grant us our request, and your petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray.

ANDREW WEBSTER, Clerk.

P. S.—The inhabitants of said Plantation, at sundry legal meetings for two years past, have unanimously Voted to be incorporated, without which we can have no benefit of our school or ministerial lands.

From the form of the petition it would seem that the town voted that the name should be Bangor. Mr. Williamson, author of the History of Maine, learned from some of the earliest and most intelligent inhabitants, who knew the fact, that Mr. Noble, from his fondness for the old church tune, procured the incorporation of the town by the name mentioned in the petition.

Colonel Porter's Memoirs of Colonel Eddy contains the warrant to organize the town. It is as follows:

Hancock, ss. To Captain James Budge, of Bangor, in said county. Gentleman—Greeting :

WHEREAS an act passed the General Court in the State of Massachusetts, February the 25th Day, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, incorporated into a town a certain tract of Land known by the name of Condiskeag plantation, together with the inhabitants therein, by the name of Bangor; and called on me to issue a warrant to some suitable inhabitant of Bangor to have a meeting of the inhabitants at some convenient time and place, to choose such officers as towns are by law required to choose in the months of March and April, annually, Therefore, in the name of the Commonwealth you are Required to warn the above said inhabitants to meet at some convenient time and Place for the aforesaid purposes, and this shall be your sufficient Warrant for so Doing. Given under my hand and seal this 25 Day of February, in the year 1792.

JONA. EDDY, Justice of the Peace.

In obedience to the written warrant to me Directed, I have warned the within-named Inhabitants to meet at the Dwelling house of Major Robert Treat, on Thursday, the 22 day of March.

JAMES BUDGE.

The town was doubtless organized under the act, for it appears that on April 4, 1796, the inhabitants met at Captain James Budge's, and having chosen William Boyd Moderator, elected William Hammond, Jr., Town Clerk, and other town officers, They then made Nathaniel Harlow, Andrew Webster, and William Hammond, Jr., a committee to settle town business with the Town Treasurer and Collector from the incorporation of the town; and William Boyd and Nathaniel Harlow a committee to hire a minister, and "voted 66 Dollars 66 cents for the Gospel." There were twenty-five votes cast at this meeting, fifteen of which were for Samuel Adams for Governor, and ten for Increase Sumner. Moses Gill received all save one for Lieutenant-Governor, and Isaac Parker twenty, Daniel Conant one, and Alexander three, for Senator.

The next meeting of which there was a record was held on May 2, 1796. Robert Hickborn, Buckley Emerson, and Simon Crosby were appointed a committee to settle with the former Collector and Treasurer of Condeskeag Plantation. "To settle with the part not of the town, and the remainder to be assessed their proportions, and have six shillings a day for actual service."

A meeting was held at Captain Budge's, October 24th, of the same year, and ten votes were cast for Isaac Parker for Elector, and nine votes for Henry Dearborn for Representative to Congress.

Another meeting was held on February 6, 1797, at Captain Budge's, where their votes were cast for Isaac Parker for Elector, and all for Henry Dearborn for Representative to Congress, except one for Isaac Parker. Politics did not run high.

Rev. Mr. Noble continued in Bangor, and betwixt June 1, 1796, and December 15, solemnized five marriages. The persons made happy by this benignant clergyman were Aaron Griffin and Peggy Webster, both of Bangor; William Hammond, of Bangor, and Susannah Campbell, of Orrington; William McPhetres and Esther Ayres, of Colbourn as a Plantation; Ichabod Clark and Mary Lankester, both of Condeskeag; and Benjamin Low and Mary Hutchings, both of Bangor.

The year 1797 was very prolific of town meetings. On April 3 it was voted to lay out a road on the northeast side of Condeskeag (Harlow street), and that there should be two pounds in the town. Twenty-two votes were cast for Moses Gill for Governor and Increase Sumner, Lieutenant-Governor.

On May 10 they met at Captain Budge's "for the purpose of separating the State and choosing a Representative to Congress." This is the full record of the proceedings of the meeting:

- Vote 1. William Boyd, Moderator.
- 2. Henry Dearborn, Esq., 12 votes for Rep. to Congress.
- 3. Voted to sepperate the State.

Dissolved without day.

WM. H., T. Clerk.

At another meeting on November 30, it was voted, "that William Hammond, of Newtown, be an agent to receive a petition from the town to get the settlers' land granted to them, and a title," and to raise $40 to pay the expenses of the petition; and that "the Selectmen be a committee to rite a petition and fix the papers that is necessary to send to court for a Lottery to build a Bridge over Condeskg Stream." The record is signed by Mr. Hammond, "Wm. T., T. Clerk."

Rev. Joshua Hall, a Methodist clergyman, itinerated in this region in 1794-95. His circuit extended from Union, in the county of Lincoln, northerly to Stillwater, and from Stetson Plantation easterly to Orland. He preached in Bangor once in six weeks through the year. Deacon William Boyd, Nathaniel Harlow, James Budge, Jacob Dennett, and James Dunning were the only residents then near the Kenduskeag. There was only one store—that kept by Major Treat—though not far from that time Captain Budge kept goods for sale in his log cabin. That is said to have been the first store in the present business part of the city. The land on the western side of the Condeskeg was covered with wood. There being no bridge near Bangor, nor boat or gondola of sufficient size above Buckstown [Bucksport] to convey horses across the river, Rev. Mr. Hall sometimes resorted to the expedient of lashing two canoes together, side by side, and then putting his horse on board with his fore feet in one and hind feet in the other; and thus, at great risk when the current was strong, he ferried his docile beast over the river, though generally the horse had to make the passage by swimming, while his master went in a canoe. Roads there were none worthy the name, and the locomotion was chiefly by canoes. The people went in them from ten to twenty miles to attend Mr. Hall's ministrations. He was at that time about twenty-six years of age. His residence, during the latter part of his life, was in Frankfort.*

* Colonel Little's letter in Bangor Jeffersonian, December, 1852.

CHAPTER V.

Hampden Incorporated—Its Extent—Why so Named—Population in 1790—First Town Meeting—Ballard's Survey—First Meeting House—General Crosby's Mill and Brick Store—His Enterprise—Academy—Settlers of New Worcester—Bangor Settlers—A Minister, Rev. James Boyd—His Ordination—His Delinquencies and Removal—Rev. Mr. Mudge—School-house—Legislature and Settlers—Park Holland's Survey—Bangor in 1800—Voters in 1801—Taverns in 1802—Town Officers—Two School Districts—School Committees—Votes for Governor and Representative to Congress—Dr. Balch—Bridge Project—$400 Raised for Schools—Eliashib Adams—Morals of the People—Town House Contemplated—Main and Water Streets—Cemetery—Change of Annual Meeting—Town Officers in 1804—School Committee—Excursion to Mt. Katahdin.

1800 to 1805. Hampden was incorporated as a town February 24, 1794. It extended from about a mile and a half below the Kenduskeag Stream to Bald Hill Cove, and embraced about twenty-three thousand acres. Its name was adopted in memory of the eminent English Republican, John Hampden. With the people of Orrington and Bangor they were equally annoyed by the British in 1779, and some of the inhabitants removed to the places whence they originally came—the Kennebec and beyond—but returned at the close of the war.

A portion of the town was assigned to General Knox to supply a deficiency in the Waldo Patent, and a portion was surveyed and lotted by Ephraim Ballard, and each settler received a lot of one hundred acres, upon the payment of six dollars and fifty-six cents, if he came before January, 1784, and fifty dollars if he took up his lot between that time and January, 1794. It is uncertain what was the population within the limits of the territory incorporated in 1790. Bangor, including the territory above the Sowadabscook, contained a population of 567. In 1800, after incorporation with that territory eliminated, it contained but 277. If it increased none in the decade, the prior adjacent territory must have contained a population of 290. Of this one-half—145, if not more—was probably in the Hampden part. The remaining portion of Hampden contained more than that number, and the population of the incorporated Hampden territory was in 1790 between 300 and 400.

The first warrant for a meeting of the inhabitants of Hampden was issued by Simeon Fowler, Esq., of Orrington, and was directed to Simeon Gorton, Constable. The meeting was at the house of Benjamin Wheeler, which stood on the side hill towards the Dudley residence, near High Head, and there the town meetings were regularly held for several years afterwards.

Ballard's survey was made in 1796. He gave each settler a certificate of the survey of his lot, and the next year the agents of Massachusetts arranged with the settlers, and gave them deeds agreeably to the certificates.

As in Condeskeag and New Worcester, the idea of a meeting-house was prominent in the minds of the inhabitants of Hampden. It proves that they felt that, notwithstanding they had set down on the extreme confines of civilization, they were still the subjects of Christian influences.

At their first town meeting they voted to build a meeting-house, and made some arrangements for raising the funds. It progressed slowly, however, but was sufficiently completed to accommodate a town meeting in 1798, after the Wheeler house was considered too small for the purpose. Mortified that the town should be so indifferent in regard to its completion, Mr. John Crosby, who was an enterprising and prosperous merchant, pressed to have it finished, and succeeded in 1800. The pews were then sold to individuals for $750 more than the cost of the whole structure.

Mr. Crosby erected a saw-mill on the privilege near the mouth of the Sowadabscook, and extended his business largely. He engaged in navigation, and had wharves not only at the mouth of the Sowadabscook, but also two miles further up the Penobscot. At one time he was probably the most prominent merchant and ship-owner upon the Penobscot. In 1809 he built the brick store near the Upper Corner, which bids fair to stand many a century, a monument of his enterprising spirit and of his town's early prosperity.

General Crosby, besides being enterprising in business, was ambitious for the religious and educational improvement of his town. He built what in his day was esteemed an elegant residence, which he occupied. Everything about it indicated comfort, and gave evidence of the well-to-do proprietor. It was the home of the missionary while attending to the religious needs of the people of his locality, and the resort of all good people. Rev. Jotham Sewall was always a welcome guest. His wife was the worthy companion of such a man, and they reared a family worthy of themselves — intelligent, industrious, and exemplary sons, and refined and beautiful daughters. He was instrumental in the establishment of Hampden Academy, an institution that, for two-thirds of a century, has educated the youth of the valley of the Penobscot, and sent many hundreds of men and women into the world who have risen to honorable positions in their several spheres. He obtained the act incorporating it, having previously obtained a subscription of about $3,000 to its funds. In after life, however, he was unfortunate in business, but he never forgot his early habits of industry. A late work was to secure the erection of a grist-mill near the site of the ancient Wheeler mill, and this he superintended until old age compelled him to yield to its behests.

Towards the close of the century Messrs. Brewer and Fowler, who looked after the interests of the settlers of the 10,864 acres saved from Knapp and associates, made a list of those entitled to the several lots into which its river front was surveyed, beginning at the northerly extremity and extending to the southern, prefacing it with the following remarks:—

It appears to us that the names in this column come sufficiently under the resolve of the General Court, passed the 25th of June, 1789, defining the term settler; because their lands were taken up, houses built, and improvements made thereon, intending it for their abode, before the late war with England; but some were forced away by reason of the defeat at Bigwaduice; some others enlisted and went into the Continental service, and before and since the first day of January, 1784, have returned themselves, or somebody under them, and have made large improvements thereon, and still continue to live thereon.

[Signed]

SIMEON FOWLER.

JOHN BREWER.

June 3, 1796.

Peter Robshaw, 100 acres; Samuel Turner, 100; John Mansel, Jr., 100; John Phillips, 200; Moses Knap, 125; Samuel Knap, 100; Emerson Orcutt, 275; Thaddeus Adams, 100; John Mansell, 100; Samuel Bayley, 100; Solo'n Harthorn, 200; Levi Bradley, 100; Elisha Crane, 100; Bryant Bradley, 75; Thomas Campbell, Jr., 100; Thomas Campbell, 100; James Campbell, 100; John Thorn, 100; Loti Rider, 100; John Rider, 100; Simeon Johnson, 100; John Rider, Jr., 100; Benjamin Perkins, 100; Andrew Mayhew, 100; John Holvoke, 200; Joseph Burr, 100; Elisha Skinner, 100; Daniel Skinner, 75; Charles Burr, 100; School and Ministerial Lot, 150; John Emery, 100; Henry Kenney, 200; Elias Dupee, 100; John Tibbitts, 100; Josiah Brewer, Jr., 100; Josiah Brewer, Esq., 100; John and Josiah Brewer, 100;* John Brewer, 100; James Gum, 200; David Wiswell, 100; Ephraim Doane, 100; Heman Smith, 100; Jona Haskins, 100; Robert McCurdy, 100; Amos Dole, 100; Thomas Brastow, 100; Joseph Baker, 100; Moses Baker, 100; Joseph Baker, Jr., 100; Benjamin Snow, 130; Solomon Swett, Hannah Arey, widow, Samuel Freeman, 200; Nath'l Pierce, 100; Jesse Rogers, 100; Joseph Rooks, 100; Simeon Fowler, 100; George Brooks, 100; Jesse Atwood, 150; Oliver Doane, 75; Thomas Deane, 75; Samuel Brown, 100; Daniel Nickerson, 100; Warren Nickerson, 100; Eliphalet Nickerson, 100; Paul Nickerson, 100; Henry Cole, 100; Betsey Snow, widow, 100; Timothy Freenan, 100; Samuel Bartlett, 150; Jeremiah Holmes, 150; Moses Wentworth, 150; Timothy Nye, 50; Joseph and Jesse Smith, 100; Ebenezer Whelding, 100;—total, 3,360 acres.

1800 to 1804. We have now traced the history of the three towns of Bangor, Orrington, and Hampden, from their primitive and plantation state—Bangor as Condeskeag and Sunbury, Orrington as New Worcester, and Hampden as Wheelerborough—and find them at the beginning of the nineteenth century well started in their career as corporate municipalities.

* Built grist-mill on it in 1794.

It will be recollected that at a town meeting on the 4th of April, 1796, there was appointed "a committee to hire a minister." It does not appear that a selection was made until the year 1800. Then Rev. James Boyd was ordained, but by whom the selection was made there is no record, which is well, perhaps, as both tradition and record give him no enviable reputation. But the town of Bangor and the Congregationalists of Orrington and Hampden united and gave Mr. Boyd a call. A council was convened, consisting of Rev. Mr. Coffin and Rev. Roswell Messenger, of York, and others, who organized a church made up of members belonging to the three towns. The ordination followed in the northerly of the two early meeting-houses erected in Orrington. After the ordination there was a feast at Madam Holyoke's, and as new rum and other liquors in that day were indispensable on such occasions, they flowed freely on this, and Rev. Mr. Boyd gave infallible evidence of their intoxicating qualities. At that time Rev. Enoch Mudge was preaching acceptably to the Methodists in the lower part of Orrington, and much denominational feeling existed between the Methodists and Calvinists. Mr. Heber Eldridge, the poet of the river, who appears to have sympathized with the former, took advantage of Mr. Boyd's over-indulgence to fire a shot into the stronghold of the latter in this fashion:

A minister, a drunken cur

As ever yet was seen,

Came from the west, and built his nest

Down by Condeskeag Stream.

'Till twenty-four, or something more,

He served his master, Dagon,

Then from Methodist to Calvinist

He altered his persuasion.

Thankful and Jenny* were fierce as any

For joining Parson Boyd.

They gave their voice, it was their choice

That Mudge should be destroyed.

Dr. George Shepard, in his sermon on the Early Religious History of Bangor and Vicinity, said of the persons concerned in his ordination, "whether these men laid hands suddenly on Mr. Boyd we do not know—that they did it unfortunately we do know—for at the end of one year the town called a council to try him on six charges—some of them allegations of gross immorality."

The "wolf in sheep's clothing" clearly made his way to Condeskeag when Parson Boyd came. It was a wilderness region; such a place as wolves of that description are accustomed to wander into. But the parson did not have all the business for which clergymen are considered peculiarly fitted, or he would have enjoyed an experience which fell to the lot of one of another profession, settled near the Sowadabscook, and earned a dollar that he might have well laid away as a memento of a very primitive feast and a very odd marriage, described in the following letter.

* Thankful and Jenny Baker.

Any marriage, with its concomitants, in 1800 in the backwoods, would hardly compare with a backwoods marriage of this day; but regard was paid to the legal requirements at whatever trouble, if not to the clerical.

The letter is from Daniel Livermore—who was, perhaps, a physician and Justice of the Peace combined—dated Hampden, February 4, 1800, and directed to "Mr. Samuel E. Dutton, Hallowell."

A few days ago a young man came into my office, clad in a short blue coat, a pair of blue trowsers very much patched, a pair of woolen stockings so much patched and darned that I could not discover what their first color was; a very wide ruffle to his shirt, exposed to view from his waistband to his handkerchief, which was tied in two large bows, extending from one shoulder to the other. His face, I suppose, had never been touched with a razor; and there was a thick matted yellow down growing around his mouth, about half an inch in length. He stood nearly half an hour before he broke silence (I being busy writing). At last, in a tone scarcely audible, he addressed me in the following manner:

"Do you marry young folks, sometimes?"

I told him "Yes." He then said:

"I want to be married."

I then asked him where he lived and the distance. He said he did not know the place nor the distance, but thought General Crosby knew. I asked him whether it was up or down the river. He said:

"Up."

I asked him who his neighbors were, and found he lived two miles from the river, ten miles above Hampden. It was then just sundown. I mounted my horse and set out on a trot; kept the poor fellow upon the run, as he was on foot, for the most part of the way. The distance being about twelve miles, many curious thoughts ran through my head on the passage (to the effect that the candidate for matrimony was having a rather severe preparation). At length (some time in the night) we arrived at a small log hut, about fifteen feet square, two miles distant from any other in the woods; tied my horse to a small stack of meadow-hay; crept into the camp, where was a man sitting on a bunch of straw in a kind of bunk, a woman sitting by a little fire in one corner of the hut, a little girl squatting at her side, with their stockings pulled off, their faces and legs very dirty, and dressed very meanly.

"Good heavens!" says I to myself, "is here a bride?"

I sat down by the fire, for it was very cold. They mustered and made some tea and fried some pork. We sat down and ate and drank without sugar, cream, knives, or forks, making use of our fingers to help ourselves, with no light but the fire, and that poor. I wished myself back to Hampden, but could not get there without riding twelve miles in the cold. However, as soon as we had supped, I told them we must do what we did quick, for I was in a hurry. The little dirty thing had taken a scrub-broom and was scratching the floor. The woman told her:

"Betty, you need not sweep any more."

Betty then stripped, in my presence; put on a calico gown and a wide, red sash (for I suppose she thought those little duds she had on would not answer to be married in); the groom seized her left hand with his left, and stood on the wrong side. I began to say; the woman of the house at the same time was placing herself for a bride-maid. Her husband did not take the opposite side; she ordered him to his stand, helping to place him at the side of the groom, while I was saying the ceremony. I proceeded and did not mind the disturbance, and got through as quick as possible; put on my coat and hat; came off with all possible speed, and got home before morning—received one dollar for my night's work—Fees, $1.00.

Physicians at the present day cannot think that the charges at that period were exorbitant, if any opinion may be formed in regard to them by a memorandum of Dr. Squire Livermore's business for January, 1800, and three months previous, attached to this letter. "For that time," he says, "my charges are:

For physic.....$35 33
In my office.....20 87

$62 20

On April 22, 1801, the inhabitants of Bangor voted $100 as the salary of Rev. Mr. Boyd, and on the 26th, four days afterwards, they appointed James Drummond, Timothy Crosby, and Amos Patten to settle with him, and "obtain a discharge from him on the best terms possible." His delinquencies would seem to have been a surprise upon the good people, from their impulsive action. They learned, however, that there must be some formality in disposing of a settled clergyman in that day, for at a meeting at Samuel Greenleaf's tavern—which stood on the easterly side of Newbury street, between State and York—on the 19th October, it was voted that the town, with the societies of Orrington and Hampden call a council of ministers to dismiss Rev. James Boyd from the ministry over said town and societies, that Rev. Jona. Fisher, of Bluehill; Rev. Jona. Powers, of Penobscot; Rev. Daniel Merrill, of Sedgwick; and Rev. Eben Rice, of Belfast, with their delegates, compose the council, and that Buckley Emerson be agent to provide accommodations for them.

Accordingly those clergymen were invited, and with the delegates, Deacon Robert Wood and Eben Hinckley, of Bluehill; Deacon David Hawes, of Penobscot; David Thurston, of Sedgwick; and Deacon Tolford Thurston and I. Gillmore, of Belfast, on November 4, 1801, constituted an ecclesiastical council, at Greenleaf's tavern, to act upon the charges against Boyd. He was requested to accept the council as mutual "to which he did not accede."

Mr. Amos Patten, who was Town Clerk, made a record of the proceedings of the council. There were "six heavy charges," but these do not appear. The Clerk's delicacy was so great that, instead of recording them, he made this note, "Decency might blush at recording them."

After fully investigating the causes of complaint, the Council "unanimously agreed that, in consequence of what appears to have been Mr. Boyd's conduct as manifested by what is supported of the said charges, we consider his usefulness as a minister of the Gospel to be at an end, and our duty to take from him the charge of the church of the town of Bangor and of the Congregational societies of Orrington and Hampden."

Thus was the second minister of Bangor disposed of, and with him apparently all desire to have another. But the Methodists in the lower section of Orrington were more fortunate in their minister, Mr. Mudge. Professor Shepard says of him that "he came from Lynn to Orrington in the latter part of the century; he wrought through the week at his trade as a shoe-maker, and on the Sabbath preached with great acceptance to the people, laying the foundations of the flourishing church or churches of that persuasion now existing there. That town owes a vast debt to that faithful Christian."

Although the people of Bangor were unfortunate in their religious enterprises, yet there was a desire to provide for the education of their children, and in 1800-01 they voted the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars to James Drummond to build a school-house. The house was built near the bank of the Penobscot just northerly of the first hill above Treat's Falls, on the right hand of the road, Drummond's house standing high above it on the opposite side of the road. It was one story, had a square or "hip" with pretty belfry in the centre. This was the first school-house in Bangor. There was a struggle, however, to get the appropriation of one hundred and fifty dollars. An attempt was made to have the vote reconsidered, but it did not succeed, and another project more important did not succeed, as appears by this record of a vote on April 22, 1801: "Negated a vote to raise a sum of money for the support of schools."

But the indications began to appear that Bangor was not to be forever shrouded in intellectual darkness. Prior to the year 1801, not a settler had a title to this land; that was in the Commonwealth, and he was at its mercy. But on March 5, 1801, the General Court passed a resolve authorizing a deed to be given to each settler before January 1, 1784, or his legal representative, of his lot of one hundred acres on his paying into the treasury eight dollars and seventy cents, and to each settler between that date and February 23, 1793, a deed of his lot of one hundred acres on his paying one hundred dollars. The resolve provided for the appointment of a committee to cause the lots to be surveyed and their bounds established. Accordingly the Committee employed Park Holland, Esq., a veteran surveyor, who had been a captain in General Lincoln's army to put down Shay's Rebellion in 1793, an assistant surveyor with General Rufus Putnam, in 1784, in Government service in what is now Washington county; and with Jonathan Maynard in 1794, in surveying the Indian reserved lands on the Penobscot and lands in the northerly part of the State. He had in this year (1801) removed his family from Massachusetts to the "Bend" in Eddington, and his appointment as surveyor of the settlers' lots in Bangor "was eminently fit to be made."

The following table contains the names of the settlers, or of their representatives, and the numbers of their lots as surveyed by Mr. Holland in 1801. The numbering commences at the line betwixt Bangor and Hampden, and extends northerly (with 19 interjected for Daniel Webster and 88 for Fessenden & Bussell; 99 for William Forbes, and 40 for Joseph Trott), to the Orono line, on the river until it reaches 40; 41 is in the rear of 3839, and 40, then there is a jump to the lot adjoining the Glenburn line on the westerly side of the Kenduskeag, which the numbering follows to 40 inclusive, when there is another jump to 47 on the Glenburn line on the easterly side of the Kenduskeag, which it follows down until it comes to 68, which extends somewhat below Kenduskeag Bridge and intersects in the stream with 70, which extends on the westerly side to the neighborhood of Lover's Leap. The other numbers are scattered irregularly over the town.

Timo. Crosby, 1; heirs of Simon Crosby, 2; Theodore Frafton, 3; Peter Burgess, 4; Bulkeley Emerson, 5; Thomas and Charles Low, 6; William Hammond, 7; Jacob Dennet, 8; John Dennet, 9; heirs of James Dunning, 10; Robert Lapish, et al., 11; Haynes, 12; William Boyd, 13; heirs of John Kelsea, 14; Seth Noble, 15;

Thomas Howard, 16; Robert Treat, 17; Robert Hickborn, 18; Daniel Webster, 19; Robert Treat, 20; Robert Treat, 21; James Drummond, 22; Abraham Allen, 23; Evans & Hains, 24; Robert Treat, 25; Robert Treat, 26; Jona. Lowden, 27; Archibald McPhetres, 28; Robert Treat, 29; Robert Treat, 30; Robert Treat, 31; Robert Treat, 32; Robert Treat, 33; Robert Treat, 34; Bulkeley Emerson, 35; Robert Treat, 36; Joseph Munsell, 37; Timo. Crosby, 38; Robert Treat, 39; Robert Treat, 40; Richard Webster, 41; John Crosby, 42; Godfrey & Webster, 43; Samuel Greenleaf, et al., 44; S. Greenleaf and others, 45; James Gardner, 46; Aaron Griffin, 47; William Davis, 48; William Davis, 49; William Hasey, 50; William Hasey, 51; Robert Lapish and others, 52; Robert Lapish and others, 53; Samuel Sherburn, 54; William Lancaster, 55; Aaron Clark, 56; George Fulman, 57; Robert Lapish and others, 58; Stinson Potter, 59; Robert Lapish and others, 60; Joseph Potter, 61; Robert Lapish and others, 62; William Hammond, 63; Robert Lapish and others, 64; Robert Lapish and others, 65; William Potter and others, 66; John Smart, 67; Nathaniel Harlow, 68; William Hasey, 69; William Hammond, 70; heirs of James Dunning, 71; Daniel Campbell, 72; Daniel Campbell, 73; William Hammond, 74; William Hammond, 75; William Hammond, 76; William Hammond, 77; Amos Patten, 78; Robert Lapish and others, 79; Robert Lapish and others, 80; heirs of John Kelsea, 81; heirs of James Boyd, 82; heirs of Thomas Howard, 83; John Haynes, 84; Robert Lapish and others, 85; Robert Lapish and others, 86; Robert Lapish and others, 87; Fessenden & Bussev, 88; Robert Lapish, 89; William Boyd, 90; Daniel Webster, 91; Jona. Morse, 92; Patrick Campbell, 93; Patrick Campbell, 94; James Drummond, 95; Daniel Neal, 96; John Harlow, 97; James Drummond, 98; William Forbes, 99; Joseph Treat, 100; heirs of McLaughlin, 101; Hatch, Patten, and others, 102; Bulkeley Emerson, 103; Robert Treat, 104; Jona. Lowden, 105; William Hammond, 106; Ashbel Harthorn, 107; David Harthorn, 108; Silas Harthorn, 109; Joseph Trott, 110; Patten and others, 111; Benjamin Low, 112; John Hutchings, 113; Thomas and Charles Low, 114.

Bangor entered upon its thirty-second year and the nineteenth century with a population of 277. It had been a town for nearly ten years. It was in the midst of a wilderness, nearly at the extremity of the Republic, and far from the commercial centre. Still it began to attract attention because of its situation. The population of Massachusetts was rapidly increasing. The law of primogeniture had been practically reversed in that commonwealth; the youngest son instead of the eldest was made the heir of the homestead, and the eldest must seek his fortune elsewhere. The newly opened country in Maine was represented as having attractions. The Penobscot region was talked about. These provisions by the Legislature of farms for the asking had their effect upon the young men of enterprise, and the emigration in this direction increased yearly. The situation of Bangor at the head of navigation, and a point to which the business of two-thirds of Maine when settled evidently must centre, had an influence, and soon after the opening of the century there were valuable accessions to its population. Among the new comers were Moses and Amos Patten, Abner Taylor, Luke Wilder, Allen Gilman, Francis, Joseph, and James Carr, William Emerson, and Samuel E. Dutton, all men of enterprise, intelligence, and business capacity, which was almost immediately recognized, and they were in leading positions, some for a quarter of a century and some longer. They gave an impulse to the prosperity of the town, and weight to its character.

The population began to centre near the mouth of the Condeskeag. It will be seen on referring to the table of Holland's survey, that No. 11, which was the Bridge Point lot, was assigned to Robert Lapish and others, and No. 70, which was that commencing a little below the Kenduskeag Bridge, and extending about a mile up on the westerly side of the stream, was assigned to William Hammond. The Dunning lot (10) adjoined 70, and embraced the westerly bank of the stream below it, and of the river to the Dennet lot (9), which embraced what is now the Central Railroad station property. The Harlow lot (68) intersected with 70 in the stream and extended up on the easterly side. Upon these lots people began to make inroads. Lots were taken up for building purposes, and the "Point" was at first esteemed the most eligible locality for business.

In 1801 the number of voters had increased. For Elbridge Gerry, for Governor, 23 votes were cast; for Caleb Strong, 22. At this meeting Amos Patten was elected Town Clerk for the first time. Captain Budge had for some time been under a cloud, and William Boyd had become the favorite presiding officer. The house of Elisha Crane was the place of meeting.

In 1802 travel had so much increased that two taverns were found necessary to accommodate the public. Mr. Isaac Hatch, the year previous, had built a two-story frame house on Main street, which he occupied as an inn until he died. This was continued several years by his widow and his son Thomas F., and after them by Ezra Hutchins. The building was always occupied as a hotel, although in its later years it was so metamorphosed that neither Captain Hatch, his widow, nor their shrewd and shapely son, would have been able to recognize it. It bore the name of "Hatch House" for a long period, and finally, with its unpretending primitive features hidden under a showy aggregation of dry-goods shops, gothic arches, cornices, friezes, and battlements, gave up the ghost under the name of "Harriman House." Mr. Samuel Greenleaf built a three-story frame house on Newbury street, upon the lot now owned by Colonel David Bugbee. The site was commanding, and the view embraced the valley and river of the Penobscot for miles. It was not so convenient for visitors as Mr. Hatch's inn, but it was more spacious, and was for years used by the town for its meetings. After this it was abandoned as an inn for many years, and occupied by Philip Coombs, Esq., as a private residence. At length it became again a public hostelry under the style of "American House," and as such continued until it was razed a few years ago, to give place to the more elegant private mansion.

About this period William Crosby, who afterwards settled in Belfast and became one of the most prominent lawyers in Eastern Maine, and a judge, visited the region, and in an interesting autobiography gave this account of his visit to Bangor:—

I had heard much of Maine, and was charmed with the prospects which a new country presented to me. I examined the map and fixed on Bangor as a central point which would rise to eminence.

In the summer of 1801 I mounted my little horse Robin, and took the tour of Maine. On arriving at the Kennebec I visited the towns of Gardiner, Hallowell, Augusta, Norridgwock, and Waterville. From Waterville I crossed over to Hampden. I found the road from Albion to Hampden merely cross-tied and causewayed. At Hampden I put up at a Mr. Libbey's, who kept a public house there, and devoted two days to rest for myself and horse, preparatory to my visit to Bangor, the grand object of my visit. On the third day I went to Bangor, but, to my astonishment, I could see no village, now the city. I tied my horse to a bush fence, and descended the precipice just above the present Hatch House, which was then a mere frame, where I found one James Thomas. Mr. Thomas was kind enough to pull a paper out of his pocket, on which he shewed me the great to-be city of Bangor. I was so disappointed and mortified that I made up my mind to return home in the most direct way, immediately. I mounted my horse, returned to Hampden, dined, and started for Belfast.

The first town meeting held in Mr. Greenleaf's house was on September 6, 1801, to take measures for the deposition of Rev. James Boyd. The next meeting but one after that unfortunate matter was disposed of, was held in it on April 6, 1802. The list and quality of the officers elected at this meeting would lead to the belief that the town had realized a large addition to its population. Mr. Amos Patten was not only chosen but elevated from the office of Town Clerk to be the peer of Jeremiah Dudley and Robert Hickborn as Selectman; Samuel Call was made one of the Assessors; Daniel Webster and Joseph Potter, et al., were made Surveyors of Highways; Moses Patten, William Forbes, and William Hasey, Surveyors of Wood and Bark; Daniel Webster agreed to collect the taxes for six cents on the dollar, therefore he was made Collector, as he was the lowest bidder; Samuel E. Dutton was made Town Agent; James Thomas, Samuel E. Dutton, and Allen Gilman were chosen a committee to settle the accounts of the town.

The Selectmen had been authorized to divide the town into school districts, and at this meeting reported that No. 1 extend from the southerly town line to the stream; No. 2 from the stream north to David Howard's north line, "including Wm. Potter up said stream;" No. 3 from said Howard's to the north line of the town, and No. 4 from William Potter's to the town line west, at Six-Mile-Falls; and it was voted that the money assessed for schools be apportioned to the districts according to the number of children four years old to sixteen, and that there be a school committee consisting of three to a district.

For District 1, Timothy Crosby, Daniel Campbell, and Jeremiah Dudley were appointed; for District 2, Nathaniel Harlow, William Boyd, and Allen Gilman; for District 3, William Hasey, Joseph Potter, and Aaron Clark; for District 4, Daniel Evans, William Forbes, Robert Hickborn, and Timothy Crosby. Nathaniel Harlow, William Hasey, Daniel Evans, and Bulkely Emerson, were made a General School Committee.

At this meeting Caleb Brooks Hall had eight votes for County Treasurer, and Simeon Fowler twenty-one.

A meeting had been held at Greenleaf's on the day before to choose a committee to hire a "Gospel preacher," and to give in their ballots for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Senators, and Representatives to Congress.

The committee appointed to hire the preacher were William Boyd, Aaron Patten, and Daniel Evans.

The votes cast for Governor were 79, of which Elbridge Gerry had 57, Caleb Strong 20, scattering 2; for Lieutenant-Governor, William Heath had 53, Edward H. Robbins 17; for Senators, Nathaniel Dummer had 17, David Cobb 17, Martin Kinsley 2, John Chandler 43, Nathan Weston 45; for Representative to Congress, Martin Kinsley 52, Nathaniel Dummer 9.

Nathaniel Harlow, on the 30th, was drawn to serve as grand juror, and James Drummond on the petit jury at the Supreme Court in Castine.

By the above report it will be perceived that with the aid of the new ability brought into the business of the town, it was now transacted systematically.

Among the new citizens was Dr. Horatio G. Balch. He was the first resident physician, "and practiced with good reputation and success until 1809,"* when he removed to Lubec. He afterwards was High Sheriff, and held several political positions in Washington county.

The subject of a bridge across the Condeskeag Stream had occupied the attention of the citizens for several years. The population was increasing, and the communication between the inhabitants on both sides of the stream constant, and Crane's ferry, which was about at the foot of Water street, was inconvenient. The project of building one by means of a lottery had fallen through, and in 1802 Robert Lapish and others made a petition to the General Court to build a toll-bridge across the stream. This plan did not meet with favor. A meeting was called on May 11, and Samuel E. Dutton, Samuel Call, James Thomas, Amos Patten, and Daniel Evans were appointed a committee to draw up an answer to the petition, setting forth that the town would build the bridge, and complete it in one year and six months from that date, provided "the privilege of the tide-waters might revert to the town," and Amos Patten was chosen to present the remonstrance to the Legislature. Mr. Patten declined, and Allen Gilman was chosen.

On the petition of Robert Treat and others, another meeting was held on the 17th of July, to see if the town would raise money to build a bridge across the Condeskeag Stream, at its mouth; if not, to see if they would consent that Robert Lapish and others would have "a toll of two cents a person, on condition that they should complete the bridge in eighteen months." This was evidently a device in the interest of the Lapish party, but the townspeople were too wary to be caught in this manner. They voted to "pass over" both the propositions.

Another subject to which the citizens were required to give their attention was the balloting for a member of Congress for the First Eastern District, in place of Silas Lee, who had resigned his seat. But little interest was manifested. There were three several ballotings. At the first meeting Martin Kinsley had 3 votes; Samuel Thacher, 3. At the second, Nathaniel Dummer had 1 vote; Samuel Thacher, 7; Martin Kinsley, 5. At the third Phineas Bruce had 8 votes; Martin Kinsley, 11.

In March, 1803, the town chose Amos Patten, Town Clerk; Deacon William Boyd, Amos Patten, and Joseph Treat, Selectmen and Assessors; Samuel E. Dutton, William Boyd, William Hasey, and Robert Treat, School Committee; and Samuel E. Dutton, Nathaniel Harlow, Horatio G. Balch, Robert Treat, and William Hasey, General School Committee.

In that day the School Committee employed the teachers, wood, and conveniences for the school. The General School Committee examined the teachers in regard to their educational qualifications, and examined the schools.

The town this year raised $400 for the support of schools, and passed over the article to raise money for the support of preaching, although those desirous of having it caused the subject to be brought before the town at two several meetings.

Deacon Eliashib Adams, a gentleman of strict Puritanical views, who became a valuable citizen of Bangor, made this note in his journal:

Soon after I came to Buckport, which was July 5, 1803, I walked to Bangor. From its being the head of navigation and safe for ships, I had no doubt it would be the most important place on the river. I should have remained here had it not been that there were no religious privileges. It was a mere Sodom, with Lot dwelling in it by the name of William Boyd, afterwards one of the first deacons of the First church. I was so disgusted with the character of the place, that, for several years when my business made it necessary to remain over night, I used to cross the river to Orrington, now Brewer, and put up at Dr. Skinner's, who and his wife were both pious and intelligent.

This is pretty severe. The mass of the people were very poor, and perhaps not over-exemplary in their morals — rum being their chief drink — but it probably would not have been difficult to find ten righteous men in the town. It is probable that the second emphatic refusal of the town to raise money for preaching that year was the occasion of the harsh stricture of the good man.

Some building was contemplated this year for a town-house, for a committee was appointed "to provide and repair the town-house to meet in."

Main and Water streets were laid out, the former from Andrew Morse's house, at the intersection of Main and Union streets, to where the contemplated bridge was to cross the Condeskeag, and the latter from Jeremiah Dudley's house (where the Washington buildings are) to the stream near Isaac Hatch's store. Proposals made by Lapish, French, and Stetson, in regard to building the bridge, were "passed over." Respect for the dead was manifested by a vote that the fences around the burial ground should be repaired. This was at the corner of Oak and Washington streets, where Egery's Iron Works are.

Caleb Strong had 24 votes, and Elbridge Gerry 30, for Governor; Edward H. Robbins 24, and James Bowdoin 27 for Lieutenant Governor; Martin Kinsley 34 votes for Senator; Simeon Fowler 43 votes for County Treasurer; and Bradshaw Hall had 34 votes at one meeting and 20 at another for Register of Deeds.

* McGaw's Sketch.

Some attention was this year paid to schools. It was at about this time that school houses in Districts 1 and 2 were built. The former was a one-story frame building with a hip roof, and stood upon the lot of the city at the corner of Union and First streets.

The money raised this year for schools by a vote of the town was to be appropriated by such districts as saw fit, to the building and repairing school-houses. District No. 2 was extended north to Penjewock Stream, and Joseph Mansell was chosen Committee for the Third District.

By a vote of the town the time of the annual meetings was changed from March to April, and on April 2, 1804, there was a change in some of the officers. Amos Patten appears to have withdrawn himself entirely from town business. Horatio G. Balch was elected Town Clerk. James Thomas, Daniel Campbell, and Robert Hickborn were made Selectman and Assessors; William Forbes, Treasurer; Samuel E. Dutton, Allen Gilman, Horatio G. Balch, Superintending School Committee; Allen Gilman, Town Agent. Five hundred dollars were raised for schools, $75 for preaching, $1,600 for highways. Seventy-one votes were cast for Governor: for James Sullivan, 44; for Caleb Strong, 26. The meeting for the first time was held in a house belonging to the town—the school-house in the First District.

This year the town made some new provisions in regard to school committees. The Superintending School Committee was to consist of three persons, whose duty it should be to examine teachers for the several districts at such times and seasons as they should think proper, and direct them to their districts; that they should frequently visit the schools and generally superintend and direct them. The District Committeeman was required to hire the teachers directed to him by the Superintending School Committee, to provide a commodious house for the school and firewood, and the teacher with convenient "boarding and lodging, etc.," and to advise with the Superintending School Committee respecting any difficulties "appertaining to the school." No one individual should be a member of both committees.

Mr. Thomas Bradbury, who was honored this year by being elected to the several positions of Constable, Tythingman, and Hog-reeve, was the constable commissioned to notify the inhabitants of the meetings for choice of Elector, etc., in 1804, Samuel Greenleaf, who had performed the service before, having disappeared from the list of constables. The number of voters present at the meeting for choosing Electors was forty-eight. The town voted to sell the school-house in the Second District.

This year a party, consisting of William Howe, Amos Patten, Joseph Treat, Samuel Call, William Rice, Richard Winslow, and Charles Turner, Jr., made an excursion to Mt. Katahdin. They took with them two Indians as guides, whose superstitions about the mountain created some difficulty in regard to proceeding, when they had accomplished the larger portion of the ascent.

They had a tradition that no person who had ascended the mountain lived to return, and averred that some time before seven Indians had resolutely made the ascent, but never returned, having, undoubtedly, become the victims of Pomola, the evil spirit who ruled there. The guides refused to proceed, but when they found that the party was determined to go on without them, they became courageous and made an effort to be the first on the summit.

The party was impressed with the extensive and magnificent views from this isolated mountain, which is nearly six thousand feet in altitude. They counted sixty-three lakes of different dimensions, which discharge their waters by the Penobscot. Mt. Desert was distinctly in view and the highlands extending westerly from the Bay of Chaleur, which were then the boundary between the northeast territory of the United States and the British possessions, but which since, by unfortunate diplomacy, have been, together with a breadth of nearly seventy miles of good Maine territory, surrendered to Great Britain.

Their view was from the highest point towards the east end, and "was enchanting." Upon the top of the mountain they found a plain nearly a mile and a half in length. After feasting themselves with a survey of the greater portion of Maine for several hours, they deposited a sheet of lead, with the initials of their names cut upon it, and a bottle of rum corked and leaded, upon the highest part of the mountain, and commenced their descent. Whether the precious deposits have since been discovered is not known to the public. It would be strange, however, if some old bacchanalian, in a stringent period of the Maine law, had not made a successful effort to discover them.

CHAPTER VI.

Subject of Bridge Over the Kenduskeag Agitated—Town Officers in 1805 and Appropriations—Fishing Privileges—Alexander Savage—Town Clerk—Officers and Appropriations in 1805—Schools—First Report of School Committee—Vote for Governor—Horatio G. Balch Chosen Representative to General Court—Project for Bridge at Crane's Ferry—Remonstrance 1807—Bridge Question Concluded, and Proposals Received for Building are Accepted—School-house in Second District—Town Meeting There—Bridge at Meadow Brook—Vote to have Town Meetings in March—Votes for Governor—Vote to Make Maine a State—Breakwater—Embargo Effect in Bangor—Toll Bridge Over Kenduskeag River Completed in 1808—Rev. John Sawyer—His Work—His Treatment by the People—Second District School-house—Deacon Boyd's Claim—Movement for New Burial-ground—Proposition to Suspend Embargo—Black Death—William D. Williamson as Town Clerk—Arrival of Joseph Leavitt—His Notes on Bangor—His Contracts for Building a Ship.

1805 to 1811. The first business of the town in 1805 was to consider the subject of a bridge across the "Condukeeg" Stream. At a meeting in the school-house in the First District, on February 7th, Samuel E. Dutton, Samuel W. Hayes, Amos Patten, John Weeks, and Luke Wilder were appointed a committee to receive "communications from Mr. Little upon the subject of erecting a bridge;" to draw a plan, make an estimate, and "devise the best scheme or schemes," and report at the next annual meeting. At that meeting the subject was postponed until the 22d April; then to the 12th September, when the town assembled and "voted to dissolve the meeting."

At the town meeting, April 1st, Horatio G. Balch was again elected Town Clerk; William Forbes, Treasurer; Moses Patten, Timothy Crosby, Luke Wilder, Selectmen and Assessors; Samuel E. Dutton, Allen Gilman, H. G. Balch, Superintending School Committee; and Allen Gilman, Town Agent. Appropriations were made: For Schools, $500; for "the support of the Gospel," $100; for highways, $1,400; and this vote extraordinary was passed: "Voted, the thanks of this town to Mr. John Minot and Joseph Cleavland for their faithful and extraordinary services as schoolmasters for the past year."

Allen Gilman, Samuel Call, and Amos Patten were appointed a committee to ascertain if the town had the right to use the fishing privileges in town, or receive the profits of them. Middle and Fore streets were accepted.

James Thomas received thirty-three votes, and Robert Treat six, for Representative to the General Court.

The closing business of the year related to the bridge across "Conduskeag" Stream. On the 21st of December the town voted not to build a free bridge, but to petition the General Court for liberty to build a toll bridge the ensuing year.

Alexander Savage had now become a resident of Bangor, and being a better penman than those who had before kept the records, the town selected him for Town Clerk at the annual meeting in 1806, and retained him in that capacity for two years. Moses Patten, Nathaniel Harlow, and Timothy Crosby were Selectmen and Assessors; Samuel E. Dutton, Treasurer; Allen Gilman, Town Agent; and Samuel Call, Samuel E. Dutton; and Samuel Call, Samuel E. Dutton, and Jacob McGaw, Superintending School Committee for 1806.

The town appropriated this year $600 for schools, $150 for preaching, and $1,600 for highways, and voted to build two pounds.

The interest in the schools was increasing, and the Superintending School Committee of the last year made some propositions to the town for their improvement—among others, that the Superintending School Committee should visit the schools immediately after their commencement and immediately before their close, and endeavor to form the best possible opinion of their progress in literature, and report the same and such other things as they should deem necessary, that the town might "know to what advantage the money raised for the support of schools is disposed of;" that they should examine teachers and recommend to the district committees in writing those suitably qualified, and dismiss teachers who did not properly perform their duties as instructors, and have charge of all school concerns of the first and second districts; that there should be a committee for each of the third, fourth, and fifth districts, who, among other things, should notify the Superintending School Committee seasonably when the schools commenced and when they were to close.

The propositions were adopted and regulations accordingly with them were established.

The committee for the first time made a report, by which it appeared that Mr. Sumner taught the school in the first district, but owing to want of information when it was to close, they could form no opinion in regard to its progress. The case was the same in the second district when under Mr. Minot, but after Mr. Foster took the school in the winter, they visited it at its commencement and at its close, and were "happy to state that during its six weeks' tuition under Mr. Foster, the scholars made handsome progress; particularly in writing." They further reported that in the third district there had been no school during the year except for a very short time; that in the fourth district the inhabitants had saved their money for a school-house and had only a private school, and that they had not understood that any attention had been paid to schools in the fifth district during the year. [This district was probably on the west side of the stream and north of the first district].

The votes this year were for James Sullivan for Governor, 65; Caleb Strong, 27; William Heath, 1. At least 103 votes were cast in town meeting, showing that the population exceeded 500.

The inhabitants were exercised upon the subject of pounds. There had been two, but they were not equal to the needs of the town in location or quality; therefore they wisely determined to have two that would be, and appointed a committee upon the subject, who, at an adjourned meeting, reported one on the southerly side of the Condeskeag Stream, easterly side of the bridge over the brook, below the corner of Main and Emerson streets [running under Eastern Railroad Station]; and one on the north side of the Condeskeag Stream, four feet from the easterly side of the Howard Brook on the north side of the road. The report was accepted, and $160 appropriated for building the pounds.

Horatio Gates Balch was chosen Representative to the General Court.

The question of the bridge was again sprung upon the town by a notice that John Barker and others had petitioned the General Court for liberty to build one at Crane's Ferry, which was not far from the foot of Water street. James Thomas, Nathaniel Harlow, and William Hammond were appointed to draw up a remonstrance against the petition, and the Representative to the General Court was instructed to advocate the petition of the town for leave to build a bridge across Condiskeag River at the county road (Main street).

At an adjourned meeting on May 15th the remonstrance was presented to the town and approved. It set forth "that the Condiskeag River, so called, empties into the river Penobscot, the confluence of which forms the harbor of Bangor; that from the mouth of said harbor, seventy-five rods or thereabouts, up said Condiskeag, holding and continuing the width from the mouth of said river of from eight hundred to four hundred and fifty feet, with the depth of water in said river of from twenty-four to sixteen feet, and is sufficiently navigable for vessels of any burthen;" . . . "that on each side of said Conduskeag River there are a number of wharves, stores, and ware-houses, handsomely situated, with many lots and privileges, regularly laid out, on the banks of the river, where much business is done, and much more may be done if our navigable waters are not obstructed;"

. . . "that Crane's Ferry crosses at the mouth of said Conduskeag River (the place prayed for by the said John Barker and others); that a bridge extended across the Conduskeag River agreeably to the prayer of their petition would not only materially injure and sacrifice the property of individuals by abridging their rights and privileges, but would destroy the harbor of Bangor without benefiting the public good."

The people were now fully awake upon the subject, and on March 16, 1807, appointed a committee, consisting of Luke Wilder, Joseph Treat, Andrew Morse, William Boyd, and Horatio G. Balch, to make a plan and estimate of the cost of the bridge, and to "devise the most proper means to raise" the same.

At a meeting on the 23d, Jeremiah Dudley, Joseph Treat, Luke Wilder, James Thomas, and Allen Gilman, were appointed a committee to receive proposals for erecting a bridge. On the 30th the committee reported a proposition, signed by Moses and A. Patten, Perkins & Parker, Joseph Whipple, Ebenezer Webster, Isaac Hatch, Samuel E. Dutton, and Jacob McGaw, that, with others, they would be incorporated at the next session of the Legislature, with the privilege of a toll for twenty years, to build a handsome bridge across the "Kenduskeag,"* this season, thirty-two feet in width, with sidewalks, and they would enter into a contract with the town to relinquish the toll to the inhabitants, if the town would pay them annually, for the first five years, $200; for the second five years, $250 annually; for the third, $400 annually; and for the fourth five years, $600 per year, and at the expiration of twenty years convey and deliver the bridge to the town in good repair; but the contractors were to have toll in the meantime from persons not taxed in the town. The proposition was accepted, and Jacob McGaw, James Thomas, and Allen Gilman, were appointed a committee to draft a petition to the Legislature to "transfer the right of the town to a toll, and for a further time of ten years." The contract was completed April 13.

Thomas Bradbury, who it will be recollected was in 1803 elected constable, tythingman, and hog-reeve, was this year raised to the important position of Town Clerk, vice Savage. His handwriting was not so good as Mr. Savage's, but he evidently took pains to make it readable.

A new school-house had been built in the second district of a somewhat pretentious appearance. It had a tower, belfry, and bell. It stood on the lot of the city where the brick house now stands, at the corner of State and Pine streets. Its tower projected from the end on the street all the way from the foundation. All about it was an open field, but at a little distance from the northerly corner was a fine grove of white oaks. Like the school-house in the first district, it never experienced the adornment of paint. In this house, in 1807, the annual town meeting was held. Horatio G. Balch, Andrew Morse, and David W. Haynes were elected Selectmen; William Forbes, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Town Agent; Jacob McGaw, Samuel E. Dutton, Horatio G. Balch, Superintending School Committee; and Thomas Bradbury, Tythingman. For schools $600 were appropriated; for the ministry $300; and $1,400 for highways. A bridge had been built over Meadow Brook on Harlow street, and John Weeks was allowed this year $18 for his services upon it in 1805. Mr. Weeks built and lived in a little cottage on the hill north of the brook.

The town voted that their annual meeting for the election of town officers should be held in March in future; also that the Selectmen should petition the Legislature to incorporate the Bridge Company.

James Sullivan had 80 votes for Governor; Caleb Strong 26; Levi Lincoln had 80 votes for Lieutenant Governor, Edward Robbins 26; George Ulmer and William King had 80 votes for Senators, Samuel Thatcher and John Crosby 26.

The town voted 68 to 19 in favor of a separation of the District of Maine from Massachusetts, in order to being created into a State.

Caleb Strong, Federalist, was elected Governor in 1806, though Lieutenant Governor Heath and both Houses of the Legislature were of opposite politics.

It was by this Legislature that Orono was incorporated, embracing Marsh Island within its limits. It was settled originally by Jeremiah Colburn, Joshua Eayres, and John Marsh. Eayres and Colburn came first and settled southerly of the Island; Marsh settled upon the Island and it was named for him. That part of it which was connected with Condeskeag at first, was called Deadwater. Afterward one Owen Madden, who had been with Burgoyne's army, and stationed at Stillwater, New York, suggested that Stillwater would be a more agreeable name than Deadwater, and it was adopted. He was an ambulatory schoolmaster between Stillwater and Condeskeag, but he had army habits, like Parson Noble, and his brain was often obfuscated. His education and disposition, however, were both good.

The religious people were not indifferent to the religious needs of Bangor. The appropriation of $300 for preaching is evidence that their influence was increasing. They even procured a vote appointing a committee, consisting of William Boyd, Samuel E. Dutton, and Luke Wilder, to get information in regard to the most advantageous plan for a meeting-house, and receive proposals for erecting such a house, and to report at a future meeting.

The town reconsidered the vote by which they gave to the Superintending School Committee greater power over the first district than they had over the third, fourth, and fifth districts.

* Spelled so for the first time.

The votes for County Treasurer were: For Martin Kinsley, 40; Eben Floyd, 28. For Representative to the Legislature, James Thomas had 44 votes; Luke Wilder, 10.

The contractors for building the bridge proposed to the town to exchange the contract with them, as individuals, for one with the President and Directors of the Bangor Bridge Company, incorporated; and to extend the time for completing the bridge until the last of September, 1808. The propositions were not acceded to. The contract required its completion by the 1st of May, 1808.

On December 30 the town met for the purpose of considering propositions for the removal of the courts from Castine to Buckstown, and for petitioning the Legislature for a division of the county of Hancock. The Selectmen were instructed to remonstrate against the removal of the Courts. The county project was not acted on.

War existed in Europe. Bonaparte's Berlin and Milan decrees were promulgated—the first in November, declaring the British Islands in a state of blockade; the last, on December 17, declaring that any ship which should be found on a voyage to the British dominions, or should pay that Government a tax or duty, or submit to be searched by the English, could be lawfully seized. These decrees were followed by the retaliatory Orders in Council of the British of January 7 and November 11, 1807, interdicting the trade of all neutrals not in amity with Great Britain, and by the direction of the King of Great Britain that subjects born in his dominions should be seized, in whatever foreign service they might be found.

American commerce suffered from these orders and decrees. American vessels in the carrying trade were seized; they were also brought to by British men-of-war and boarded, and not only Englishmen, but Americans, were impressed, under the pretense that they were English.

With the remembrance of the wrongs the Americans had suffered from the British fresh in their minds, and with that natural sensitiveness that weaker nations possess at any seeming manifestation of supremacy over them by a more powerful nation, it was not difficult to revive their ancient feelings of hostility. The taking of one white man and four black men by the British frigate Leopard from the American Chesapeake, a weaker vessel, and the hanging of the white and forcing the blacks into the British navy, although there was no question that they were Americans, aroused the whole country. President Jefferson ordered British ships to leave American waters, and demanded reparation. The British Government disavowed the act, recalled Admiral Berkeley, under whose orders it was committed, and offered to restore the black sailors, and a pecuniary satisfaction to the families of the killed and to the wounded of the Chesapeake, on condition that the President would revoke his proclamation closing American ports to British ships. This he refused to do. But the British Government would not abandon the right of search and impressment on board private ships. On December 18, 1807, Mr. Jefferson sent a message to both Houses of Congress, recommending the first measure of the "Restrictive System," "an inhibition of the departure of our vessels from the ports of the United States." The Federalists opposed it, and John Quincy Adams, who had before acted with them, joined the Democrats and voted for the Embargo, which became a law in four days after its recommendation. This was felt to be a great calamity by the commercial men of Massachusetts.*

The people of Bangor, however, were not so much interested in navigation as to condemn Mr. Jefferson for proposing the measure, as they deemed it retaliatory on the British nation and would operate to its injury and to our benefit; therefore their vote for James Sullivan, the Democratic candidate for Governor, continued to increase. Whether their perseverance was to receive no check, remains to be disclosed.

The year 1808 was an era in the history of Bangor, for the two sides of the stream then became united by a connection that has never yet been broken, and which will continue as long as there is a living people within its limits, viz., the bridge.

A meeting was held on January 14 to act upon a request to pay Rev. John Sawyer for his ministerial labors, and to see if the town would agree upon the appropriation of the money raised for the support of the Gospel which was not yet expended. They voted to give Mr. Sawyer four dollars a day for the days he had preached, then reconsidered the vote and voted to give him "fifty dollars for his attention on funeral occasions in said town;" then voted to suspend the appropriation of the money unexpended until the next annual meeting, and refused to raise a committee to secure preaching while the funds were sufficient.

Mr. Sawyer came to Bangor about 1807. He was born in Hebron, Connecticut, October 9, 1755, therefore was over fifty years of age when he came. He was a volunteer in the American army in 1777, and was at Saratoga at the surrender of Burgoyne. He afterwards gave his attention to study and was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1786, having entered in 1781. He studied theology and was ordained to preach in Oxford in 1787. After nine years he accepted a call to preach in Boothbay. There he remained ten years, when he was dismissed by his own request, and removed to Newcastle. From this time his work commenced as a missionary, and believing that he could accomplish something among the people of Penobscot, he pitched his tent in Bangor. There was need of his services. He said that when he came here there was but one man who gave him evidence of being a true Christian. This was, probably, Deacon Boyd.

Besides preaching Mr. Sawyer taught school, by which he eked out a livelihood. He was promised two hundred dollars, probably by leading men, under the belief that the town would give him two hundred of the three hundred dollars that had been voted. But the town refused to give him more than fifty dollars, and that only for his services at funerals—emphatically nothing for preaching.

Dr. Shepard says: "It is said that those in power about this time, or some of them, though not learned, yet affected literary reputation, and attempted to reach it by using some large words, declaring on one occasion, after an examination, that they had perambulated the school-master and found him qualified."

* Life of Josiah Quincy, 121.

Mr. Sawyer was a great preacher of the doctrines, and was not interesting to the "unregenerate," of whom evidently the community was mainly composed. Besides, he was extremely prolix. Captain Hart, a relic of the Revolution, used to say of him: "Mr. Sawyer is a good man and a strong preacher, but he has a little too much of 'once more, my brethren; twentiethly, once more, my brethren; and again; H-m-m."

Mr. Sawyer remained in Bangor about six years, in which period occurred that terrible epidemic called the "black death." It was so fatal that he officiated at a hundred funerals in the course of a year. He removed to Garland, where he made his home. He was devoted to his work; made frequent and long journeys on horseback to minister to the religious needs of the people.

He was largely instrumental in establishing the Theological Seminary, which has flourished for more than half a century in Bangor. He accomplished much good. It is said that in the old town meeting-house in Brewer he received sixty persons into the church and baptized thirty children in one day. He lived to the age of one hundred and three, maintaining his mental faculties nearly to his death. On his hundredth birthday he delivered a discourse to a large assembly in the Central Congregational church in Bangor. He was quite vigorous. His voice was strong, his delivery clear, and his discourse very well connected. His death occurred on October 14, 1858.

The annual meeting in 1808 occurred on March 14. It was held in the school-house in the second district. Mr. Bradbury was again elected Town Clerk; Andrew Morse, David W. Haynes, and James Carr, Selectmen; the same Selectmen were constituted Superintending School Committee; William Forbes, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Town Agent. Dr. Hosea Rich, who had made his residence here since 1806, was made one of the Health Officers. Among the appropriations were $650 for schools; $200 for preaching; $400 for town charges. William Boyd, Jonathan Plummer, and Joseph Carr were appointed to expend the money for preaching.

A committee was appointed to purchase land for a burial ground, and the Selectmen were recommended to purchase a pall.

Jeremiah Dudley, Moses Patten, and Jacob McGaw were made a committee on accounts, and to them was referred a claim of Deacon Boyd for services and expenditures in the recovery of one John Horton, who, when Mr. Boyd was Selectman in 1798, was left upon his hands by the master of a vessel who brought him into port as a passenger from Boston, sick of yellow fever. Deacon Boyd took Horton's note for his indebtedness, but as he could not collect it, he called upon the town for reimbursement. The committee reported that from the manner in which the business had been done, the town had no remedy against the town where Horton had his legal settlement, therefore should not pay anything of Mr. Boyd's claim. They, however, recommended that the town make a present of $15 to Mr. Boyd "as a testimony of the estimation with which we behold every charitable act by a citizen of said town towards a stranger in distress." The report was accepted and $15 voted to Deacon Boyd. This is the first sum voted by Bangor for a purpose not authorized by law.

Messrs. Amasa Stetson, Zadock French, and Robert Lapish proposed to give the town a piece of land near the school-house to be kept forever for a market-place, and Jacob McGaw, John Balch, and James Carr were made a committee to confer with them in relation thereto.

At the gubernatorial meeting, April 4, the vote for James Sullivan, for Governor, was 92, for Christopher Gore 35; for Levi Lincoln, for Lieutenant-Governor, 91, for David Cobb 37; for William King, for Senator, 90, and Francis Carr 96, for William Vinall 5, for Samuel Thatcher and Theodore Lincoln, each 36.

At an adjourned meeting the Committee on the Burial Ground reported that they had examined two pieces of ground, one belonging to Captain Hatch on the west side of the stream, and a piece belonging to Messrs. Stetson and Lapish on the east side; that the piece of Captain Hatch contained one and three-quarters acres, and could be had for $200; the piece owned by Messrs. Stetson and Lapish was on a gravelly swell of ground on the new road made through the lots about half a mile from the Point, but the owners were absent and they could not consult them. That on the west side was a gravelly hill, or rather bluff, extending from where the court-house now is to where the Savary House stands. The highest point of this bluff was about easterly from the Savary House over where Court street is. It was a beautiful spot, and no one at that time dreamed that in thirty or forty years its contents would have been spread over the streets, and that far below its summit would pass one of the most used thoroughfares of a city. The committee proposed that action be deferred until more could be learned respecting the lot on the east side of the stream.

The town accepted a street between the end of Washington street and what is now Hancock street, at Boyd's Eddy; "approved" a petition of individuals to the Legislature to be incorporated for the purpose of building a meeting-house; accepted Broad street from the Kenduskeag Bridge to Water street; Hammond street from the Bridge to Ohio street; Independent street, and the road near John Weeks's, crossing land of Widow Smart. This was near "Morse's Hill."

The report of a committee, consisting of James Carr, Allen Gilman, and Andrew Morse, to settle with the Bridge Company, was accepted, and the taxed inhabitants of the town, with every member of their family and person in their employ—a certificate of the fact having been left with the toll-gatherer two days before availing themselves of the right—were to pass free of toll for twenty years from November 1, 1808, also all horses, carriages, teams in the employ, and all cows, oxen, sheep, and swine, the property of said inhabitants. The bridge, thirty-two feet in width, with sidewalks four feet in width, was to be maintained by the corporation during twenty years, and then surrendered fully to the town, they having paid annually agreeably to the contract proposed on March 30, and completed on April 13, 1807.

The effects of the embargo had now been for some time experienced in the depression of the market for lumber and fish, which were the chief exports of Bangor. "Business of every kind was in a ruinous condition. Dwelling houses were so far advanced as to supply shelter to families in most cases, but remained in such an unfinished state as to indicate the poverty or great embarrassment of their owners."*

Mechanics could find employment barely sufficient for support, and traders found it difficult to maintain their standing with Boston merchants, and habits of extreme economy were adopted.

The opponents of the administration took advantage of this state of affairs to inflame the people against it. A meeting was held October 10, called by the "request of a number of inhabitants," to see if the inhabitants would petition the President to suspend the embargo acts, so far as by law authorized, and to "take the opinion of the inhabitants on such other matters in relation to the safety and support of our Federal Republican Government" as might be brought before the town.

The record of the proceedings of that meeting is very concise. With the exception of the first, under which Major John Balch was made moderator. Every article in the warrant was dismissed.

This year James Thomas had sixty votes for Representative to the Legislature, and Luke Wilder twenty-one. Barzillai Gannett had fifty-four votes for Representative to Congress, and Thomas Rice thirty-four.

In addition to the depression in business and discouragement necessarily occasioned by governmental action for the purpose of compelling the more respectful regard of the British, was the epidemic before mentioned, which continued from the year 1808 to 1810, and was so fatal that in Hampden, from one point, were counted eighteen houses, in each of which was the dead body of at least one of its victims.† It was doubtless in one of these years that Rev. Mr. Sawyer attended one hundred funerals.

Notwithstanding all these calamities, the people commenced the municipal year 1809 by dismissing the consideration of the proposition to raise money for the "support of the Gospel," and contenting themselves with raising $650 for schools; $1,000 for roads; $400 for town charges; and $400 for the bridge.

Thomas Bradbury disappears as Town Clerk, and Samuel W. Hayes is elected; Andrew Morse, Asa Davis, and Jonathan Plummer are made Selectmen; James Carr, Abner Taylor, and William Forbes, Assessors; Joseph Carr, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Town Agent; and Jacob McGaw, Samuel E. Dutton and William D. Williamson, Superintending School Committee.

The action of the General Government had begun to have its influence upon the politics of the State in 1808, and upon the politics of Bangor in 1809. Governor Sullivan's majority was reduced in 1808. In 1809 Christopher Gore, the Federal candidate, was elected over Levi Lincoln by a majority of 2,788 votes, and David Cobb was elected Lieutenant-Governor over Joseph B. Varnum. The vote of Bangor for Lincoln was 80, six less than the Democratic vote of 1808, and the vote for Gore was 55, twenty more than in the year before.

Francis Carr and William King each had 87 votes for Senator; Theodore Lincoln & Mark L. Hill, each 51; Ephraim Goodale had 56 votes for County Treasurer; Ebenezer Floyd, 44.

The votes for Representative to the Legislature were: for James Carr, 70; Joseph Treat, 40; Charles Hammond, 1.

In 1810 the town exchanged Mr. Samuel W. Hayes, (whose method of keeping records would not at all compare with that of his grandson, who was elected City Clerk of Bangor in 1871), for Thomas Bradbury again. The Selectmen this year were Moses Patten, Joseph Carr, and James Drummond; Assessors, James Carr, William Forbes, Moses Giddings; Treasurer, William D. Williamson; Moses Patten, Joseph Carr, and James Drummond, Superintending School Committee; and seventeen of the most respectable men in the town, Hog-reeves for the amusement of the wags; $100 were raised to defray town charges; $800 for schools; nothing for the "support of the Gospel;" $200 for the Bridge Company; $1,000 for highways. The erection of a hay-scale was provided for; a communication from the town of Milton, relating to the kine-pock, was referred to a committee consisting of Jacob McGaw, James Carr, and William D. Williamson, who had been appointed to draft a by-law for the future regulation of the Health Committee; and voted to accept any lands which might be offered for public use.

William D. Williamson now appears as "T. Clerk pro tempore." How he was appointed, the records do not show, but his hand-writing, though not so elegant as Mr. Savage's, is bold and vigorous, and his records are clear and intelligible. His first record is that of a warrant directed to John Ham, constable, requiring him to warn the "male inhabitants" having an annual income of three pounds or any estate of the value of sixty pounds, to give in their votes for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Senators, and "Counsellors," on April 2, at the school-house, second district.

At this meeting Elbridge Gerry had 82 votes and Christopher Gore 58 votes for Governor; William Gray, 84 votes for Lieutenant Governor, and David Cobb, 57. The number of votes for the other officers was nearly the same. For County Treasurer, Ephraim Goodale had 43 votes; Bradshaw Hall, 37; Benjamin Poor, 7.

At a meeting on May 12, Mr. Bradbury, the Town Clerk, being still absent William D. Williamson was made and sworn Town Clerk pro tem. For Representative to the General Court James Carr had 59 votes, Robert Parker, 30, and Moses Patten, 1. Carr was elected.

*McGaw's Sketch.

†Bangor Centennial, 46.

A road laid out by Messrs. Patten and Le Gro, from Hammond street to the west line of the town, "in a direction for Miller's Mills, in Hampden," and certain roads and streets laid out by Amasa Stetson and others, were accepted.

The Representative in Congress this year, Barzillai Gannett, had 24 votes; Thomas Rice 19. The meeting was held Nov. 5.

This year Joseph Leavitt, Esq., with his wife, removed from Lee, New Hampshire, to Bangor. He came by land, by way of Augusta. He found the road generally good, with the exception of about thirty miles, from Unity to Bangor. Twenty miles of road was "intolerably bad. Over ten miles his wife rode on a hired horse, while with the help of a man he hired he got his own horse and chaise over it. He arrived on the 8th of October. We have his description and views of the town at that time in the following extract from his journal :

Bangor is a pleasantly situated town at the westerly side and at the head of the tide of the great Penobscot River, at the confluence of the Kenduskeag Stream. The principal settlements which are now made are about equally divided by the stream, the whole containing about two hundred families.

The trading and mercantile interests consist of about twenty traders, with small stocks, and, I believe, with small capitals. Little or no navigation is now owned, although several vessels the present season have been built, to wit: a brig by John Barker, and a brig by Perkins & Parker of about two hundred tons. The Carrs own, and have sent out to Europe, a schooner of about eighty or ninety tons, with timber. Another company of eight have purchased and loaded a ship of about two hundred tons and sent her to Liverpool. But a part of the company live in Bangor. Marshall owns a small sloop of about thirty tons. The above-named, I believe, comprise all the mercantile interest here. No meeting-house, several school-houses, several tolerable houses, partly finished. On the whole, the place has the appearance of but little wealth. The inhabitants generally complain of the effects of the late embargo law, and the other restrictions on our general commerce, and attribute the slow improvement to that cause. It may be just, but I am of the opinion that there are other causes—say illness, stupor, drinking, and some extravagance, etc.

The country around is new. But few settlers, very poor, want credit; obtain it, and goes directly to their ruin; never pay till sued, then their stock, if any they have, is taken; otherwise their land goes, and they go to jail.

However, there are some few likely, industrious men, lately moved into the back settlements, do well, and will soon be wealthy farmers. They report generally favorably of the interior. At this time lumber is the staple; some fish.

Mr. Leavitt immediately went into trade with James Bartlett, with whom he had previously been in company in Portland. Trade not being found profitable there, they removed their stock to Bangor in September, and Mr. Leavitt made it up to $7,000. In November he completed a contract with "Lieutenant Daniel Webster of Bangor, and tenant Ebenezer Webster of Orono (two brothers), for a ship, burthen 250 tons, to be got off the 1st day of October, 1811."

On November 22 a new single-deck brig of the Pattens & Taylor, sailed for Liverpool.

CHAPTER VII.

Unpropitious Opening of the Year 1811—Religious Freedom—Law—Preaching—Rev. Harvey Loomis—Organization of First Congregational Church—Ordination of Mr. Loomis—Effect on the Town—Effect of the Non-intercourse Act in Bangor—Penobscot County Contemplated—Cold Opening of the Year 1812—Town Election—Twenty-seven Hog-reeves—Fish Street—Mr. Leavitt's Trade with James Penniman—Embargo April 4, 1814—Pushaw Road—Efforts to Provide a Place of Public Worship—Court-House Projected—Vote to Petition Legislature for a New County—Singular Proposition—Mr. Leavitt's Experience with Shipping.

1811—1812—1813. The year 1811 opened unpropitiously for Bangor. The restrictions on commerce continued. Business continued dull, and, says Mr. Leavitt's journal, "a very extraordinary time for bread, corn, etc. All provisions scarce."

The administration of Massachusetts was Democratic in 1810 and 1811. Elbridge Gerry was Governor and William Gray Lieutenant Governor. Several important acts were passed, such as the "Religious Freedom" law, by which when a town issued money for religious purposes, every individual might have that portion assessed to him applied towards supporting a minister of his own denomination. Circuit Courts of Common Pleas were established. There were three Circuits in Maine; the Third embraced the eastern counties, Hancock and Washington; and William Crosby, of Belfast, Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, and William Campbell, of Harrington, were appointed the Judges in this Circuit.

At the annual meeting Mr. Bradbury was again elected Town Clerk; Joseph Carr, James Drummond, Edward Sargent, were elected Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor. This is the first year in which any action appears by the records to have been taken in relation to the poor.

William D. Williamson was made Treasurer and Town Agent. Jacob McGaw, Joseph Carr, and William D. Williamson, Superintending School Committee.

The sum raised for town charges was $400; for schools, $600; for highways, $1,300, and $200 for the Bridge Company.

The votes for Governor were for Elbridge Gerry 71, Christopher Gore 43; for Lieutenant-Governor, William Gray had 72, William Phillips 44; Joseph Carr had 48 votes for Representative to the Legislature, and was elected; Robert Parker had 37.

Notwithstanding the niggardliness of the town in regard to paying for preaching, they were occasionally favored with it. Sometimes a Congregationalist, sometimes a Methodist, and sometimes a Baptist would occupy the desk of the school-house, and the attention of the people was directed to the consideration of religious concerns. On Sunday, January 6th, Rev. Mr. May, Congregationalist, preached; on the 27th, Rev. Mr. Mudge, Methodist; on February 3, Rev. Mr. Sawyer, Congregationalist; on the 10th Rev. Mr. Merrill, Baptist; March 3, 17, 31, April 7, and July 29, Rev. Mr. Oliphant, Methodist. Mr. Leavitt says:

Sunday, 11 [August]. A Mr. Loomis preached. A young man. A good preacher. A candidate for settlement. A Congregationalist and Calvinist also. Old Elder Snow, of Thomaston, preached a lecture; he holds the Savior died for a part, not for the whole.

Rev. Professor Shepard gives this account of Mr. Loomis's advent into Bangor:

Father Sewall had an appointment to preach in Bangor on a certain Sabbath in _____, 1811. But he could not come, and falling in with Mr. Loomis, who had just preached a Sabbath or two in _____, engaged him to come. He came, making his first introduction Saturday eve to Mr. Crosby's family, of Hampden. Sunday morning he presented himself to the assembled congregation in Bangor—greatly to the disappointment of the people. A stranger, a young man, in the place of him they loved to hear! But they thought better of it at the close. Mr. Snow, a shipwright and a Methodist professor, rose in his place and said, Amen to the doctrine—and all the people said, Amen to the man. They cared little for the doctrine, but they were struck with the man. He was fine-looking—had a sweet voice—was a taking speaker—to crown all, he evidently was an agreeable man, and every heart and voice said, "he is the one for our minister." They settled him, and he was a wonderful fit.

He preached several Sundays in August, September and October, and on October 19 the town assembled and appointed Joseph Carr, John Barker, and Moses Patten a committee to wait upon Rev. Mr. Loomis, and make these propositions:—That the town would give him $600 a year for the first two years of his ministry; $700 a year for the next two years; and $800 a year during the residue of his ministry; that the term of his ministry should not expire until two-thirds of the male members of his society should wish the connection dissolved, and that they would then give him six months' salary. Mr. Loomis wished for time to consider the matter and to consult his friends. Thought the salary offered "generous considering the present situation of the town," though he should expect, in case his "situation required it, and the prosperous condition of the town permitted it, some eight or ten years hence, to receive additional salary."

On November 23, the committee reported Mr. Loomis's answer accepting the call. Whereupon the town appointed Samuel E. Dutton, Jacob McGaw, and William D. Williamson a committee to execute an agreement with Mr. Loomis and to provide for his ordination. The agreement was made on the basis of the proposition first made to the gentleman, and was executed on the 20th of November, 1811. On the same day an ecclesiastical council convened for the purpose of establishing a church and ordaining Mr. Harvey Loomis as their pastor.

There were present, from the church in Belfast, Deacon Goddard and Mr. Benjamin Poor. From the church in Bluehill, Rev. Mr. Fisher. From the church in Castine, Rev. Mr. Mason. From the church in Buckstown, Rev. Mr. Blood and Mr. Enoch Page. From the church in Penobscot, Rev. Mr. Spaulding and Mr. Samuel Wasson.

Mr. Blood was chosen scribe, and Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Belfast, Moderator, who opened the council with prayer.

Rev. Mr. Sawyer was invited to assist in the council.

Upon a platform there adopted, Deacon William Boyd, Stephen S. Crosby, and William D. Williamson were received and acknowledged as the Church of Bangor.

The council being satisfied with the call, credentials and examination of the candidate, voted to proceed with his ordination on the morrow. The ordination took place accordingly. Rev. Mr. Fisher made the introductory prayer. Rev. Mr. Gillett, of Hallowell, preached the sermon. Rev. Mr. Sawyer made the consecrating prayer. Rev. Mr. Johnson gave the charge. Rev. Mr. Blood gave the right hand of fellowship. Rev. Mr. Mason made the concluding prayer. Mr. Leavitt says: "The whole was conducted with much decorum. The text was from Jeremiah, 61, 2: 'To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.' The discourse was exultant."

Prior to the settlement of Mr. Loomis, the Sabbath was little observed. The streets were thronged with idlers, whose disregard of the day was shameful. This was gradually changed after the establishment of regular meetings, and the town became as well ordered on that day as any New England town.

The non-intercourse act of Mr. Jefferson's administration went into effect on the 2d of March of this year. It was designed to operate against England. The Berlin and Milan decrees had been revoked by the French Emperor, and the American restrictive measures ceased to operate against France nearly simultaneously with that revocation November 1, 1810. Great Britain, however, had not repealed the obnoxious Orders in Council, hence the enforcement of the non-intercourse act. But there were many attempts to evade it. A vessel from Martinique with a cargo of molasses was seized at Bangor in March. Several other vessels had been seized in the river, but bonded.

Mr. Leavitt's ship, built by the Websters, was launched on the 12th of October. It was the first ship ever built in Bangor. It measured 264 tons.

On December 19, the town chose Jeremiah Dudley, Robert Parker, and Thomas Bradbury a committee to endeavor to procure a division of the county of Hancock, and to communicate with the towns within the lines of the contemplated county, in which Bangor was, to aid in procuring the division and to petition the next Legislature for it. This was the beginning of the measures which ultimately secured the establishment of Penobscot county, with Bangor for its shire town.

The year 1812 opened with severely cold weather. The month of February was remarkable for cold and snow; it was said to have been the coldest February ever known here.

The annual meeting was held on March 9. Mr. Bradbury was re-elected Town Clerk. He was also elected third Selectman, with Moses Patten and Joseph Carr. Mr. Williamson was re-elected Treasurer; Samuel E. Dutton, Town Agent. Rev. Mr. Loomis, Samuel E. Dutton, and William D. Williamson were elected Superintending School Committee; John Ham, Newell Bean, John Reynolds, Thomas Bradbury, and others, Constables. Mr. Bradbury held this office very late in life. He gives a list of the Hog-reeves, composed of many of the most influential citizens, "making," as he says, "only twenty-seven." They appeared to take their election as a serious matter, for they were all sworn; $600 were raised for schools; $600 for Rev. Mr. Loomis; $200 for the Bridge Company; and $1,000 for highways. It was found that it would be necessary to raise $450 to make up the deficiency of the year 1811. April 6, Fish street, which had been laid out in 1808, was accepted; it extended from Broad street to Water street, and was afterwards Wall street, and is now merged in Pickering Square.

Elbridge Gerry had seventy-four, Caleb Strong sixty-seven, and William King two votes for Governor, Benjamin Gannet having resigned his seat, at a special election held on March 27. For Representative to Congress, Francis Carr had sixty-four votes, Pitt Dillingham forty-seven votes, and David Cobb nine votes. Mr. Carr was elected.

Mr. Leavitt sold half of his ship to James Penniman, of Boston, and purchased of him his house (which is the larger portion of that at the right hand corner of State and Brown streets), and the lot whereon he built a brick block of two stories, which has been converted into offices for the European & North American Railway Company. For the house he gave $1,500; for the one-fourth acre water-lot, with a small store thereon, $1,000.

An embargo was laid, on April 4, by Congress, on all vessels within the harbors of the United States for ninety days. During its existence ship-owners in Bangor were employed in having their vessels ready for service at its expiration; but they were destined to disappointment. On June 18, war was declared by Congress between the United States and Great Britain. This the Federalists considered an impolitic and cruel measure, especially those in the maritime States. Mr. Leavitt said, "all is confusion, disorder, and dismay;" but business experienced very little change in Bangor this year.

The Pushaw road, laid out by Samuel E. Dutton, was accepted. An attempt to convert the Second District School-house into a place of permanent public worship fell through; but the town hired of General John Crosby and Benjamin Joy, of Boston, a large hall in a frame building standing upon the spot now occupied by the last two warehouses at the foot of Exchange Street, on the stream side, for the term of five years, at the rate of fifty dollars per annum, to be expended in fitting up the hall for religious services, and the first choice of a seat to Mr. Crosby for himself and family. This hall was known as Union Hall, and was occupied by Mr. Loomis's society until the court-house was completed. Mr. Crosby had the first choice of sittings for himself and family, and Mr. Loomis the second.

On the 20th of July the town authorized the contract for the hall, and on the 23d and 24th leases were taken in accordance therewith, and a committee was appointed to fit up the hall with pews and other conveniences; but at several meetings in August the whole matter was reconsidered, and the town voted that it was not expedient to take any further measures for fitting up the hall. They appointed a committee consisting of Moses Patten, Samuel E. Dutton, William Boyd, and James Drummond to provide a location for a public building that the town proposed to erect, which committee reported that they could not agree.

A company this year commenced the erection of a building at the corner of Hammond and Columbia Streets, intending it for a court-house permanently and for public worship temporarily. The company tendered the use of the house, when it should be completed, to the town for three years or more for public worship, free of expense. The town readily voted to accept the building for three years "so soon as the proprietors shall, on their own expense, have rendered the same convenient for meeting therein for public worship, provided the said building be furnished as aforesaid within one year from the date hereof."

The town voted to accept one hundred square rods of land situated between the school-house and land of John Barker, sixteen rods on the country road, running back forty-five rods, with a three-rod street to run in the middle of the sixteen rods, "for the setting a meeting-house on," offered by Richard Pike, Philip Coombs, and Benjamin Wyatt, but declined to make any provision for erecting a meeting-house.

This year there was a great revolution in the politics of Bangor, in the Representative District, and throughout the North. Francis Carr, the Democratic sitting member, who, when elected in place of Mr. Gannett last year, received sixty-four votes to fifty-six opposition, at the regular election, on November 2, this year, received but forty votes to seventy-two votes for John Wilson, Federalist, who was elected by a majority of about five hundred votes in the district. Judge William Crosby, Federalist, had seventy-two votes for Elector, and was chosen. Judge James Campbell, Democrat, had twenty-two votes. There were but six votes for Madison for President north of Pennsylvania—those of Vermont. Mr. Madison's strength was in the South, and it was predicted that this opposition of the two sections would sooner or later lead to a separation.

On November 12 a proposition was made "to expung from being placed on their records all the doings of the town respecting furnishing Union Hall." That proposition was dismissed. At the same meeting the town "set up at auction Mrs. Gregg and Philip Lovejoy, town paupers, and they were struck off—the former to William Seward, to keep for $2.50 per week; the latter to Elisha Crane, to keep for $2.33 per week."

On February 3, 1813, the town voted that "setting off the northern section of the settled part of Hancock county as a new county would be highly beneficial to this part of the county, particularly by inducing a great increase of settlement, and would be a great relief to that portion of the inhabitants who are compelled to travel an unreasonable distance to the present shire town of the county," and appointed Charles Hammond, Joseph Leavitt, Thomas Bradbury, John Barker, and James B. Fiske, a committee to draft and forward to the Legislature a petition to that effect, and to furnish the Representative with "documents and reasons to further the object."

March 8, 1813, at the annual town meeting, the following officers were elected: Moses Patten; Joseph Carr and Thomas Bradbury (Town Clerk), Selectmen; Rev. Harvey Loomis, Jacob McGaw, Charles Hammond, Superintending School Committee; William D. Williamson, Treasurer; and $1,200 were raised for highways, $600 for Mr. Loomis, $250 for the bridge company, and $450 for town charges.

The first and second school districts were united, that the inhabitants in both districts might have "equal benefits from the schools alternately."

The votes for Governor were: For Caleb Strong, 74; Joseph B. Varnum, 62. Charles Hammond, 72 votes to James Carr 54, and was elected Representative to the General Court. Mr. Strong was elected Governor of Massachusetts for the eighth time.

The subject of the fisheries became prominent. There were no regulations relating to them upon the Penobscot River and its tributaries. A meeting was held at Frankfort to determine upon a law to regulate the taking fish in the rivers, streams, and ponds connected therewith. Charles Hammond was appointed an agent to attend the meeting. Asa Davis was appointed to procure depositions, Joseph Carr to take them, and Asa Davis, Abner Taylor, Amos Patten, Thomas Bartlett, and several others to make suggestions for proper alterations in existing laws upon the subject.

A meeting was held February 21st to consider whether the town would "memorialize in form of petition, resolution, or otherwise, the General Court of this Commonwealth, expressing to them the views of said inhabitants in respect to the administration of the Government of the United States and requesting them to take measures, such as in their wisdom shall seem meet, to afford said inhabitants and the other citizens of this Commonwealth relief from the operation of some of the unnecessary and iniquitous laws passed by the Congress of the United States," by the request of nine citizens of Bangor.

This ill-advised proposition, which evidently originated with the strong partisans, in their excitement occasioned by the certainty of war from which the nation was suffering, was read, and the good sense of the citizens assembled would not allow the subject to be discussed, deeming it improper; and it was dismissed on motion of Jacob McGaw, who was one of those who signed the request for the meeting at the instance of a friend without reading it, understanding it contained nothing objectionable.

Mr. Leavitt was an enterprising man and contributed much to the business of Bangor, particularly by ship-building and navigation. But the war was a great annoyance to him, and the occasion of much loss.

His ship Alpha sailed on January 13th for Alexandria, Virginia, to take a cargo of flour to Cadiz, Spain, for $2.50 per barrel, under British license. The ship arrived at Alexandria February 9th, and was loaded on March 1st and ready to sail, but a blockade had been established and the vessel remained all through the summer and fall, at a very heavy expense, together with the outfits, amounting to upwards of $6,000, including $1,300 worth of flour, which was owned by Mr. Leavitt and his copartner, Mr. James Bartlett. When Washington was captured the ship was burnt. Mr. Leavitt's loss was between $9,000 and $10,000.

But he had a schooner called the Experiment, whose history was more eventful. He chartered her to Mr.

Samuel Stone, and then sold half to him. She sailed for Charleston, South Carolina, February 23d; arrived after a very rough passage on May 25th. On June 7th she sailed for Boston and was taken by the Tenedos frigate. She was released, however, and arrived in Boston June 25th, and soon returned to Bangor.

The British cruisers Tenedos, Shannon, Liverpool Packet, Emulous, Rattler, Boxer, and Curlew, were hovering along the coast, and the Bay, from the mouth of the Penobscot, was under their constant surveillance. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Leavitt must try to do something with his vessel. In July the Experiment sailed for Boston, and on her passage up ran upon a rock called the "Londoner," and was much damaged. She was not troubled by the enemy before she arrived in Boston, but on her return passage she was captured by the British privateer Matilda. Her captors took from her about $200 worth of property, and seeing that she was too much damaged to be of any value to them, they released her. She again returned to Bangor, took in a cargo, and sailed for Boston on the 1st day of August. On her passage down the river she struck upon a rock, was driven ashore, listed off, and filled with water. The owners thought at first to condemn her, she was so much injured; but finally concluded to try her again. Leavitt and Stone agreed with each other to buy or sell, and the former proposing to give $300 for Stone's half, he again became the owner of the whole vessel. He repaired her, and taking passage in her himself, she sailed for Boston. On August 27th, when off George's Island, she was captured by the British privateer Weazel.

Mr. Leavitt was treated well, personally, but his captors appropriated his bed and shoes, the captain's boots, and clothes of some of the sailors; then set them all, excepting two hands, on shore at the mouth of George's River, about eighty miles from Bangor. Mr. Leavitt reached home on the 1st of September, and on the next day was surprised by the news that the Experiment had been recaptured by the American privateer Superior, and carried in to Camden. He then proceeded to Camden, paid $225 salvage and $50 expenses, and arrived with her in Bangor on September 12th.

Mr. Leavitt had arrived at a point when, in his opinion, forbearance ceased to be a virtue. As the chronicle has it, he was "disappointed and a little saddened, but prevailingly angry."* He was fit for "stratagems and spoils." He found no difficulty in getting up an expedition to make reprisals. There were enough of his neighbors idle, and disposed to appropriate the goods and chattels of the enemy to their own use, if they could find them. A schooner of about fifty tons burthen was fitted out and sent into the bay, with a force of forty men with small arms, to capture British vessels and re-capture their prizes. It would have been a very profitable business, if there had been any British vessels or prizes to capture. But, unfortunately for Captain Cary and the rest, they were all either too far distant or of too great force to be encountered voluntarily by the Bangor adventurers. The schooner, therefore, was navigated back to Bangor with a supposed smuggler's boat, which Captain Cary brought as evidence that he had an eye to the well being of the revenues of the country, if he had not the ability to humble the proud Briton. Thus ended this patriotic expedition. A "good time," perhaps, was compensation for those engaged in it.

*McGaw's Sketch.

Several of the vessels of the Penobscot were captured and recaptured. Among these was one commanded by Captain Joshua Jordan, another by Captain Barker, and carried into Halifax.

The fight between the American brig Enterprise, sixteen guns and one hundred and two men, under Captain Burrows, and the British brig Boxer, one hundred and four men and eighteen guns, took place in sight of Monhegan on September 5th. The battle continued thirty-five minutes, when the Boxer, Captain Blythe, surrendered and was carried into Portland. Both commanders were killed. The killed and wounded of the Enterprise were fourteen; of the Boxer, forty-six.

The risk to navigation from capture had become so great, and the restrictive laws being still in force, the vessels of Bangor in Boston were hauled up, and the masters and crews found their way home as best they could. Goods were transported from Boston to Bangor by horse- or ox-teams.

CHAPTER VIII.

Contribution for Portsmouth—Bangor Bank Chartered—Maine Charity School Chartered—Death of Jonathan Lowder—Death of William Hammond—Members of Mr. Loomis's Church—School Districts 1 and 2—Hay Scales and Burial Grounds—James Crosby, Town Clerk—House Carpenters build a Vessel for Employment—Other Vessels Built—Smuggling—United States Ship Adams—Visit of the British—Lieutenant Lewis and Lieutenant Little at Castine—Their March with American Commands to Hampden—Preparations there for the Reception of the British—Captain Morris—General Blake—Position of the Americans—Approach of the British Forces—Flight of the Militia—The "Adams" Destroyed—Retreat of her Men—Anecdotes—Pluck and Panic—Pursuit of the British—Depredations in Hampden—American Thieves—Parole of Citizens of Bangor—Vessels Burned—Proceedings of Selectmen—Representatives and Petition to Sir John Sherbrook—Delegation Sent—British leave the River—Territory East held as Conquered—Amusements of the British at Castine—Special Session of the Legislature—County Erected—Registry of Deeds removed from Castine to Bangor—Recollections of Eye-witnesses—Explosion of the "Adams."

1814. The year 1814 commenced under circumstances as depressing as the year 1813. The information reached Bangor that a great conflagration had occurred in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, December 22, 1813, in which four hundred buildings were destroyed, besides various wharves. Eighty dollars were immediately contributed and forwarded as Bangor's mite in this time of general distress.

A charter was obtained in the name of Joseph Leavitt for the Bangor Bank, with a capital of $100,000; the first instalment to be paid in on January 1, 1814.

A charter was obtained February 25, for the Maine Charity School, to be established in Hampden.

Captain Jonathan Lowder died this month, at the age of eighty years. His residence was at the angle of the two roads running through Veazie, near Mount Hope. He had, before the Revolution, performed services for the Government as a courier, and was a sergeant in the French and Indian war. He was gunner at Fort Pownall in 1774, and April 7, 1776, was allowed by the Massachusetts Government £29 4s for his services. After the dismantling of that fort he became a clerk for Major Treat, at the head of the tide in Bangor. He had the confidence of the Indians and performed various services for them. They made great efforts to have him appointed truck-master. Orono died on his farm in about 1777, being poor at the time of his death.

Captain William Hammond died in March at the age of about seventy-five. He came from Newton, Massachusetts, and was here in the latter part of the century. He held important positions in the town and was highly esteemed. He had a large family of daughters, who married prominent business men, and his descendants are numerous and of the first respectability.

March 14, at the annual meeting, the last year's Board of Selectmen were re-elected, and same Town Clerk; Joseph Leavitt, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Town Agent; Rev. Harvey Loomis, Allen Gilman, and John Barker, Superintending School Committee; $800 were raised for schools; $700 for town charges; $250 for Bridge Company; $900 for highways, and $700 for Mr. Loomis's salary.

Mr. Loomis's church at this time had the following members: Deacon William Boyd, Deacon Sewall S. Crosby, William Hasey, William D. Williamson, Stephen S. Kimball, Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. Timothy Crosby, Mrs. Joseph Kendrick, Mrs. Mary Gould, Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Hutchins, Mrs. Low, Mrs. Dresser, Mrs. Samuel E. Dutton, Mrs. Almira Carr, Mrs. Nathaniel C. Little, Mrs. Eben Crosby, Anna Adams, Deacon Eliashib Adams. Deacon Adams came from Bucksport to Bangor to reside May 22, 1813.

At the annual meeting of the town this year the First and Second School Districts were separated and placed under the regulations which existed prior to March, 1813.

The Selectmen were instructed to procure "a lot of dry measures."

The subjects of hay-scales and a burial ground were again agitated. A committee consisting of Joseph Leavitt and William D. Williamson reported favorably to the erection of two hay-scales, where the Selectmen should determine, by such persons as would erect them at their own expense and keep them in repair for ten years, for the exclusive use and benefit of them during that term, provided they should not exact for weighing more than two and one-half cents per hundred-weight.

Two hay-scales were erected—one opposite where the Exchange now stands, on the west side of Poplar (now Exchange) street, the other on the easterly side of Main street, about two hundred feet from West Market Square.

One hundred dollars were directed to be paid to Philip Coombs for an acre of ground from the westerly third part of the Haynes lot, for a burial ground. This was easterly of Oak street, between Washington and Hancock streets. Burying on the ground between the residence of Caleb S. Billings and Penobscot River was discontinued.

The votes for Governor this year were: For Caleb Strong, 78; for Samuel Dexter, 50. Strong was elected by a majority of about 1,100.

For Register of Deeds, Charles Rice received 47 votes; Alexander Savage, 20; John Wilkins, 33.

The Representative to the General Court, Charles Hammond had 53 votes; Jacob McGaw and Samuel K. Whiting one vote each, and Mr. Hammond was declared elected.

John Wilson received 49 votes for Representative to Congress; James Carr, 28.

James Crosby was chosen Town Clerk pro tem., August 6, 1814; and fifty dollars were appropriated from the moneys to be raised in 1815, for building an engine house, and Benjamin Garland was appointed a committee to expend the money.

In order to avoid paying taxes for the support of the Congregational minister in Bangor, some from inability or indisposition to pay more than one ministerial tax, and some to avoid paying any tax at all, obtained certificates from two or more members of some other religious denomination that they were members thereof, like the following:

We certify that John Weeks, of the town of Bangor, is a member of the religious society in Bangor called Methodist.

Bangor, April 15, 1813.

Ashbel Harthorn, David, John, and Thomas Howard, Simon Harriman, Jeremiah Dudley, and others, in 1812; James Drummond, William Thompson, Zebulon Smith, James Carr, Francis Carr, Samuel Salmond, and others, in 1813. Nathaniel Burrill was certified to belong to the Baptist society the same year, and Allen Gilman was certified to be a member of a Congregational society in Brewer.

During the existence of the troubles betwixt America and England regular business was interrupted, but the majority of the citizens of Bangor were workers, and would be employed. Several mechanics—house-carpenters principally—engaged themselves in building a large vessel. Each supplied his own personal labor, and such of them as possessed the means provided materials.

Messrs. William & Charles Rice built a ship of about two hundred and sixty tons, which was launched just before the declaration of war in 1812. She was not rigged. Messrs. R. & P. Salmond were building a ship of more than four hundred tons. Messrs. Joseph & James Carr were building a ship of nearly four hundred tons burden. These ships, with the vessel built by mechanics, remained upon the stocks until 1815 before they were launched. The last was named "Mechanic." Mr.

Leavitt built and launched a small schooner of forty tons.

The British fleet, under Sir Thomas Hardy, took possession of Eastport. There was no opposition, and persons and property were protected.

With no regular business upon their hands, many persons took advantage of the disturbed condition of affairs to turn a penny by smuggling. Their conscience—such as had any—had become hardened, and they labored diligently to put governmental duties in their pockets by surreptitiously transporting goods from the British Provinces to Boston. Thousands of dollars' worth of English goods were brought from Fredericton in birch canoes over the lakes and streams, and on men's backs over the carrying-places in trunks and packages. From Bangor they were transported to Boston on teams at the rate of $7 per hundred weight. The Custom House officers were vigilant, and some importers preferred to do their business legitimately. They entered their goods and paid the duties on them. But a great many goods got through free of duty. A citizen describes the Government officers as "pimps and spies," and said that they made, now and then, what they called "a good grab." "The whole," he says, "I can compare to nothing better than a hungry set of wolves prowling after prey upon the defenseless lamb—thus we have here an exhibition of some of the fruits of a Democratic Administration." He was a Federalist, and would have his fling at his political opponents—still he would stand well on the moral platform, and adds: "However, I will remark that I do not approve of smuggling."

On August 17, the United States corvette Adams, twenty-four guns and two hundred and fifty-eight men, was injured by being driven upon the rocks at Isle au Haut in severe weather. She had been successful in her captures, having taken in three months a ship, two brigs, and a schooner, and became herself an object of desire to British cruisers. Captain Morris, her commander, brought her up the Penobscot River for repairs, and anchored her off the mouth of the Sowadabscook Stream in Hampden. It was not long before the British were made acquainted with her situation, and made arrangements for her capture.

In July Major Perley Putnam, of Salem, was in command of the forts at Eastport and Robbinston, having under him two companies of militia, detached from General Blake's brigade at Penobscot.

Relieved by the downfall of Napoleon from the war with France, Great Britain was enabled to give more attention to the war with the United States, and made disposition of her troops to that end. Maine was weak, and, lying contiguous to the British provinces, could be easily occupied. On July 5 Captain Sir M. T. Hardy, with the Romilies, seventy-four; the Martin, sloop-of-war; the Borer, brig; the Breame, the bomb-ship Terror, and several transports with the One Hundred and Second Regiment, just from Bermuda, under Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Pilkinton, with a party from Halifax, appeared before Eastport and summoned it to surrender, giving five minutes for an answer. Putnam replied that he should fight, and prepared for defense. The people, however, remonstrated. They could not be destroyed with their town, when really no object was to be gained. Putnam yielded to their importunities, and surrendered, on condition that the persons and property of the inhabitants should be respected. Thus Fort Sullivan fell into the hands of the enemy without resistance. British troops were sent to Canada to reinforce those on the frontier, and up the Chesapeake Bay, in the summer, and in September Sir John Sherbrook and Rear Admiral Griffith sailed from Halifax with the Dragon, seventy-four guns; Endymion, forty; Bacchante; Sylph, eighteen; and Peruvian, sloops; the Spenser, Bulwark, and Tenedos, and a number of transports, with the Twenty-ninth, Sixty-second, and Ninety-eighth Regiments, two rifle companies of the Sixtieth, and detachments of Royal Artillery and Engineers, to take possession of Penobscot. It was the intention of Sherbrook to take possession of Machias on his way, but falling in with the Rifleman sloop, and being informed by Captain Pearse that the Adams had run up the Penobscot to Hampden, he proceeded directly to Castine, and a little after sunrise on September 1 summoned the fort to surrender. Lieutenant Lewis, who was in command of the fort with twenty-eight United States regulars, refused to surrender, and opened a fire from four twenty-four-pounders upon a small schooner which, under Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols, of the Royal Engineers, was reconnoitering the work.

Lieutenant Henry Little, of Bucksport, in command of a detachment of General Blake's militia of ninety-two men, was quartered in the Court House at Castine. When his attention was called to a fleet of sixteen British war-vessels coming up the harbor, he indicated his faith in the sentiment that discretion is the better part of valor by marching his men with due promptness from the peninsula. Lieutenant Lewis, however, had a duty to perform, and waited to witness the next movement of the enemy. Seeing that the force was disembarking, and that the number of the troops was immense, he blew up the magazine of the fort, and followed in the footsteps of Lieutenant Little. After the latter had proceeded about six miles in the direction of Bucksport, it was announced that the British were in pursuit; whereupon he ordered his company to "right about," and prepare to receive the enemy. Presently he saw an officer waving a flag, and the anxiety of his command was allayed on learning that the supposed British were no other than Lieutenant Lewis and his men. They shortly came up with him, and with true military ardor pressed on. Lieutenant Little's command, being so much larger, stopped at Bucksport over night and recruited themselves for the morning march; but Lieutenant Lewis made no delay. He reached Hampden on the 2d, and was with his men on the right of the American force in position during the next night. On the morning of the 2d Lieutenant Little recommenced his march.

The British, however, had not slept on their guns. Directly after the arrival of the fleet at Castine, Sir John Sherbrook directed Major General Gosselin to occupy Belfast, in order to prevent the armed population below annoying the British in their operations on the Adams, and to support his own forces, if necessary. He and Rear-Admiral Griffith then directed Captain Barrie, with the Dragon, Sylph, Peruvian, Harmony, and a transport and prize-tender, and Lieutenant-Colonel John, with a detachment of artillery, the flank companies of the Twenty-ninth, Sixty-second, and Ninety-eighth Regiments, and one rifle company of the Sixtieth, to proceed to Hampden and co-operate in either obtaining possession of the Adams or destroying her.

Lieutenant Little was surprised the next forenoon, when just above Frankfort, by a report of cannon from the river. On examination he found that the British ships, with the troops on board, were keeping pace with him, and, further, that a force was landing to intercept him. This caused him to leave the main road and take a route around Sweats's Hill, in Orrington. He arrived by nightfall at Goodale's Corner, where he and his company were provided with good quarters and entertainment for the night by Hon. Mr. Goodale, who resided there. Colonel John learned afterward that his direction to Major Croisdale and Lieutenant Wallace to land with some regulars and riflemen and intercept this company, had the effect to prevent them from joining the main body at Hampden. It was so; while Lieutenant Little in the morning of the 3d, with his men, was leaving the domains of his hospitable host, and his heart behind him with his host's daughter—whom he saw for the first time that night, and afterwards made his wife—the battle of Hampden was fought. In the glory of that affair Lieutenant Little had no part.

At noon on the first of September Captain Morris received intelligence at Hampden, by express from Castine, that the British fleet were off the harbor. Knowing that the Adams was the object of their pursuit, he proceeded to make arrangements for the ship's protection. He communicated the intelligence at once to Brigadier-General Blake, requesting him to collect such force as he could at Hampden. The guns had been taken out of his ship and preparations were in progress for her repair. By the "great and unremitting exertions" of his men and the assistance of the inhabitants during the 1st and 2d, nine guns were conveyed to the top of the hill overlooking the river below the long wharf; one to the hill near the meeting house on the right of General Blake's line of battle; fourteen upon the wharf which commanded the river below, and one to a point covering the communication between the hill and wharf batteries. The arrangements were perfect for disputing the passage of the naval force, if Morris's batteries could be protected from being flanked, and it was for this purpose that General Blake's force was designed.

This officer had succeeded in collecting about five hundred militiamen of Colonel Andrew Grant's regiment, with Captain Charles Hammond's company of artillery from Bangor, which, with two brass four-pounders, was stationed on the right, with Lieutenant Lewis's men.

The line extended easterly from the meeting-house along the crest of the academy hill towards the river. The position was admirable and could easily have been defended against an infinitely large force, with men of the least experience. A Northern officer, who had seen much service in the Rebellion, on examining the position in 1864, remarked that he had seen three hundred rebels in such a position resist the advance of two brigades, consisting of eight thousand men, five hours. They had intrenchments and rifle-pits, and it was that length of time before it was ascertained how they could be flanked. With intrenchments and rifle-pits here, if the officers knew how to manage their men, they could have repulsed the British with ease.

On the evening before the battle there was a consultation of leading citizens of Hampden and Bangor, at the academy in Hampden, with General Blake and some of his officers. The emergency was so unexpected that the people were unnerved, therefore there was no unanimity as to the course to be pursued. The citizens were not prepared to lose everything, and many counseled no resistance. Others, more patriotic, thought that everything should be done to save the Adams and to repel the invaders. Captain Morris was mortified to find so much indecision and disposition to submit, and when it was concluded to leave the whole matter to the judgment of General Blake, Morris proceeded to do all that was possible on his part to make the resistance a success. He found that many of Blake's men were without arms, and most of them without any ammunition; and as his own men were barely sufficient to man his batteries, he distributed the ship's muskets to the militia and supplied them with ammunition.

General Blake's pickets were advantageously posted on the northerly side of Bald Hill Cove; the artillery, with the two four-pounders, under Lieutenant George W. Brown, Sergeant John Williams and Michael Sargent acting as gunners; and the United States regulars, with the eighteen-pounder, under Lieutenant Lewis, were stationed near the meeting-house (where the Town House now stands), and commanded the approach from the bridge over Pitcher's brook; the militia companies, forming the line on their left towards the river, were under Colonel Grant and Major Chamberlain.

The women and children were removed to Mr. Joshua Lane's, about a mile distant through the woods, on a road leading into the country on the right bank of the Sowadabcook Stream.

The arrangements were not completed until late in the evening of the 2d. The night was dark and rainy. Morris's men were compelled to remain at their batteries to prevent a surprise, as the wind was fair for the enemy's approach, and General Blake's force was kept in position. It was a terrible night for those men, scarcely one of whom had had any experience in war, and very few, aside from those of the independent companies, understood the management of fire-arms. There were no redoubts or entrenchments, and there was constant expectation of an attack from experienced troops in unknown numbers. Some of the officers were brave and plucky, although none had had experience. Some of the men were arrant cowards, while others made sport of their pusillanimity. There were three brothers who threw themselves upon the ground and feigned sickness.

A man of weaker mind, but of more courage, seeing this, fell to pulling their hair and whiskers with great persistence. When inquired of what he meant, he replied: "I want to get these men mad. If I can do this, they will fight like the ——!" It was a fearful night to many, and an uncomfortable one for all.

The British vessels arrived at Bald Hill Cove about five o'clock in the evening of the 2d of September. By direction of Colonel John, Major Riddle, with grenadiers, and Captain Ward, with rifles, dislodged General Blake's pickets. This was accomplished by seven o'clock, and the troops were all landed by ten. They then bivouacked for the night. In the morning, at five o'clock, they were formed, the rifle company (under Captain Ward) being in advance, and the light company (under Major Keith, of the Sixty-second) in the rear, and a detachment of eighty marines (under Captain Carter) moving on their flanks. There were also a light company of the Twenty-ninth (under Captain Cooker), a detachment of Royal Artillery (under Lieutenant Carston), with a six-pounder, a six-and-a-half-inch howitzer, and a rocket apparatus, and a detachment of sailors (under Lieutenants Symonds, Botely, and Slade, and Mr. Sparkling, Master of the Bulwark). The wind being favorable, Captain Barrie, with the ships, advanced at the same time with the troops, and on their right.

It was supposed by the British that the force against which they were moving consisted of 1,400 men; and the fog being so thick that they could neither form a correct idea of the features of the country or of the army opposed to them, they moved with the utmost caution. Between 7 and 8 o'clock Colonel John's skirmishers were sharply engaged, and he sent forward Captain Cooker with half of his light company for their support. The British pressed into their service an American named Oakman residing at Bald Hill Cove, to guide them, and he was unwittingly shot by his own countrymen.

The British were first seen through a break in the fog advancing towards the bridge over Pitcher's Brook. As soon as they came in sight a heavy fire was opened upon them by Lieutenant Lewis with the eighteen-pounder, and Lieutenant Brown, Adjutant Bent, and others with the four-pounders of the Bangor Artillery (which were at the right of the eighteen-pounder), that completely raked the road.

After passing the bridge, the British troops deployed and charged up the hill to get possession of the guns. General Blake had ordered the militia to reserve their fire until the enemy had approached so near that it might be effectual; but he did not consider that his men were not veterans, and were in a frame of mind which made them totally incapable of appreciating such an order. The consequence was that when they saw those veteran troops in their scarlet uniforms pressing up the hill right upon them so like an avalanche that it seemed as if resistance would be madness, they were seized with a panic and fled.

The fog was so dense that Captain Morris could not see the operations of the troops, but he discovered the enemy's guard and rocket boats at about 7 o'clock advancing; and his batteries opened a brisk fire upon them. From their movements he concluded that a simultaneous attack by land and water was intended, and he placed the hill battery under the direction of his First Lieutenant, Wadsworth, assisted by Lieutenant Madison and Mr. Rogers, the Purser, and directed Lieutenant Watson to place his small detachment of twenty marines in a position to watch the movements of the enemy's main body, assist in covering the Adams's men's flank, and their retreat if it became necessary. The wharf battery was under the direction of Lieutenants Parker and Beatty, and Sailing Master McCulloch. Captain Morris had just joined it. The enemy's boats were stationary, beyond the reach of fire, and his infantry had commenced their attack upon the militia. In a few minutes Lieutenant Wadsworth informed Captain Morris that our troops were retreating. Immediately the retreat became a confused flight, and there was now no alternation for Morris but to retreat also. Against the enemy's troops he had no other means of defense than pikes and cutlasses. The tide was rising, and the bridge over the Sowadabscook was the only thoroughfare across that stream. He immediately ordered the guns to be spiked and the ship to be fired. These things were hardly accomplished before the British appeared upon the hill, and, seeing that the object of their expedition was destroyed, opened fire upon Captain Morris and those of his men who had fired the ship, they being the last to retire, Lieutenant Wadsworth with his detachment having previously, by order of Captain Morris, crossed the bridge. The Captain's party had not time to reach the bridge, and, therefore, attempted to ford the stream. In this they succeeded, and, ascending the bank, joined their comrades without having received the slightest injury from the well-intended but ill-directed fire of the pursuers.

Some plucky American officers were exceedingly enraged at this ignominious flight of the militia, and made an effort to save the troops from utter disgrace. Major Chamberlain and a minor officer, Timothy George, finding themselves at the bridge, thought it might be possible to detain brave men enough, and ordered all as they came to fall in. One of the first was a ponderous seven-foot giant, who apparently had physique enough to withstand a section. On being ordered to halt he drew himself up, and with a look of terror exclaimed: "Why, Major Chamberlain, you—you'll have us all killed! This is dangerous!" He then rushed to the stream, which he forded, and was well on his way to Bangor before the British left the hill.

There was much swift moving on that day, both on horseback and on foot. Colonel ——, with others, proceeded rapidly to Mr. Lane's, where the women and children were. The Colonel had had enough of war for the present, and changed his regimentals for Colonel Lane's wedding apparel, in which he was afterwards discovered by the British and taken to Castine, where he was imprisoned until the fresh ten-dollar broadcloth suit was so defaced that its owner never afterwards recognized it.

One well-known Major declared that he never marched with such courage as that with which he marched from Hampden to Bangor on that day.

A citizen on horseback, riding up from the bridge towards Bangor, caught sight of a rocket which seemed to be coming directly towards him. He turned his horse and was riding rapidly in another direction, when lo! the erratic projectile had also changed its course and was close in pursuit. He thought verily it was a messenger from the pit and he an object of demoniacal vengeance, until it suddenly made another detour and permitted him to escape. Having reached his home, about two miles from the scene of action, this citizen seized his best feather-bed and was making his way in the direction of the woods, when he heard a volley from the invaders. He threw himself instantly upon the ground, and drawing the bed over himself peeped out and saw the bullets passing over him looking like a flock of swallows. Mr. Zadock Davis thought it not best to leave the artillery guns to be taken by the foe and used against his countrymen, and, with others, removed them in hot haste in the direction of Bangor, and hid them under a bridge on some by-road in the woods. But guns were what the British wanted, and when they learned that Mr. Davis had some knowledge of them, they constrained him to reveal it, and the guns became British property.

General Blake was among the last to leave the field. He did not hesitate to expose himself when necessary, and even when unnecessary. Sergeant Williams, who afterwards became Brigadier-General, served as gunner to the artillery, which stood its ground until after the flight of the militia, and said that when he and his company retreated, they ran as fast as the rest, and passed General Blake, who was on foot, walking towards the village much excited and swearing to himself. Michael Sargent, who was also a gunner, said that Blake did not prohibit the firing of the eighteen-pounder or the guns of the artillery; that he rode up near to the guns and took a survey of the British forces as they came in view; that afterward, in his interview with Colonel John at the Hatch tavern, the Colonel inquired of him what officer it was who exposed himself thus on the hill. He replied that it was himself. The Colonel then told him that he was in great danger; that his men were firing at him and he ordered them to desist, for he would not permit them to shoot down so brave a man.

"But what were you there for?" continued John.

"To calculate your numbers."

"How many did you take them to be?"

"About seven hundred."

"A pretty good calculation; there were seven hundred and fifty."

It was probably at this interview that a conversation took place, which was published not long afterwards. The British officers were dining together, the General being their guest and wearing his epaulettes and other military accoutrements that he had worn in the battle, and the Colonel remarked that he must indeed be insensible to danger to wear those ornaments on the field; that the British officers wore a dress of common mixed cloth, that they might not be targets for the enemy. "Oh," replied the General, "I have never, if my recollection serves me, gone upon the field of battle in disguise."

The General was a sergeant in the Revolutionary war, and among his companions bore the soubriquet of "Black Jack." It came to his knowledge one evening in camp that a party of British officers were having a revel in a secluded farm house, where they could not conceive of any possible chance of discovery. He took a squad of reliable men and went to the house, reconnoitered, and came to a window through which he saw a happy party indulging in a game of whist. "What's trumps?" reached his ear. "Black Jack, by ——" he exclaimed, and with one bound stood by the astonished whist-players, with his men at his side. Of course they were his prisoners, and he reaped the reward of his bold adventure, as well by making "Black Jack" an appellation of distinction as in other respects.

Eighty prisoners were taken by the British in Hampden; the twenty guns of the Adams and several vessels fell into their hands; many of the houses were riddled with bullets, and the furniture therein was destroyed. The contents of the stores were appropriated, and about a third of the troops being left in possession of the town, many of them amused themselves with playing upon the fears of the inhabitants, and indulging in various kinds of mischief. One set took feather beds from General Crosby's house to his grist-mill, and after pouring the feathers into the hopper, hoisted the gates and tried the experiment of making flour of feathers. Another took the law books from Godfrey's office and stuffed them into a martin-house, which they set on fire. The swine in the streets afforded them much delight, especially after they had established themselves in the good graces of Madame Grant, who understood the cuisine of pork perfectly, as well as that of other flesh. There was great damage done to property, but the persons of women and children were respected. The British were not alone engaged in the work of destruction. A writer in the Boston Repository of September 20, 1814, said: "It is confidently asserted that no small part of the depredation committed on private property at Hampden and its vicinity, was the work of some miscreants enjoying the name and privileges of American citizens--that the most atrocious outrages and vilest species of plunder were perpetrated by some traitorous villains from whom was expected protection and defense." But the invaders were not over-compassionate. The appropriation of houses was very common. A gentleman from another town, who happened to be traveling on a journey quietly, was taken prisoner, and despoiled of his horse and baggage. He applied to the commanding officer for redress, but in vain.

The prisoners were put into the cabin of the Decatur (a vessel that had arrived at Hampden in July from Bordeaux with a cargo of brandy, wines, oil, and silks), where they were confined during the night, and were near perishing for want of air and water. All but ten or twelve of these were released the next day on their parole. Those retained were put on board a prison-ship, but admitted to their parole on the day following. The soldiers were not sparing of insulting and abusive language, but inflicted no personal injury. The loss of the people of Hampden was $44,000, not a small sum for that people in that day. The Decatur and Kutusoff were burnt, and the town was compelled to give a bond in $12,000 for the delivery of other vessels in Castine in October.

The enemy made little delay at Hampden. Leaving sufficient troops to keep possession of the town and captured property, Colonel John and Captain Barrie pursued the flying soldiers to Bangor. They, with Major Riddle, rode on horseback, and were met by flags of truce, with the request for terms, to which they replied that the surrender must be unconditional. They reached Bangor about noon and demanded barracks and provisions for the troops, threatening to permit the plunder of the village unless the demand was immediately complied with. The court-house, two school-houses, a dwelling-house and another, building were provided, and an abundant supply of provisions was furnished. The officers occupied two dwellings. The ammunition of the town and a quantity of merchandise, seized for a breach of the revenue laws, were taken, and the guns, of which Mr. Zadock Davis knew the whereabouts, were forthcoming. The following paper was submitted to them by citizens, being prompted thereto by the invaders:

We, the undersigned, being now prisoners of war to the British advanced Military and Naval forces in the Penobscot, do engage, on our words of honor, not to take up arms against Great Britain or her allies during the continuance of the present hostilities, unless regularly exchanged; and to this agreement we pledge our words of honor and affix our several signatures:

Charles Hammond,	A. Patten,	Thomas Bradbury,
Thomas Bartlett,	Allen Gilman,	William Emerson,
Joseph Carr,	James B. Fiske,	William Robinson,
John LetGro,	John LetGro, Jr.,	Theodore Trafton,
Joseph Leavitt,	Thomas A Hill,	Peter Burgess,
Oliver Frye,	H. Gould,	Joseph Kendrick,
George Logan,	James Bartlett,	Nathaniel Boynton,
Jacob Chich,	Philip Coombs,	William Bruce,
Zebulon Smith,	George Barker,	James Poor,
John Balek,	Hosea Rich,	William Thompson,
F. Carr,	S. E. Dutton,	David Hill,
John Ham,	Asa Flagg, Jr.,	Green Sanborn,
Abner Taylor,	Robert Lapish,	Jona Webster,
Elisha Crane,	John Harlow,	Benjamin Garland,
James Drummond,	Robert Salmond, Jr.,	Oliver Frost,
John Pearson,	Richard McGrath,	Newell Bean,
Isaac Hatch,	John Allen,	Wiggins Hill,
Nathaniel C. Little,	Edmund Dole,	John Barker,
Ebenezer Weston,	Jona Holt,	Alexander Savage,
Mathew M. Burns,	John Blake,	William Dole,
Nathaniel Harlow,	Joseph W. Boynton,	Eliashib Adams,
James Carr, Jr.,	Barney Hollis,	Benoni Hunt,
Jacob Dennett,	Gillman Hook,	Asa Davis,
J. C. Liscomb,	Nathaniel Harlow, Jr.,	Samuel Salmond,
Frederick Knight,	Stephen S. Crosby,	Elisha Skinner, Jr.,
Daniel Emerson,	Joseph Perry,	Samuel S. Fields,
Joseph Knapp,	Joseph Carnes,	Silas Hatch,
Lynde Valentine,	Moses Basford,	Robert Boynton,
Zadock Davis,	James Dudley,	Wm. D. Williamson,
William Gregory,	David J. Bent,	William Rice,
Daniel Webster,	Elijah Webster,	B. Harrod,
Nathaniel Bunell,	Robert Boyd,	John Webster,
John Williams,	James Tilton,	Joshua Jordan,
Edward D. Jarvis,	Amos Emerson,	David Randall,
William Randall,	Daniel Dennis,	Samuel G. Adams,
Simon B. Harrimon,	Sarson Weston,	David Howard,
Timothy W. Barns,	Henry George,	Michael Sargent,

Moses Patten,	Isaac Watson,	Elijah P. Goodrich,
Joseph Lambert,	Caleb C. Billings,	Joseph Potter,
Peter Perkins,	John Boynton,	John Sargent,
Jackson Davis,	Thomas Mann,	George Savage,
John Oakes,	William Boyd,	Simon Harrimon,
John Oakes, Jr.,	Asa Flagg,	Edward Sargent,
Isaac Lincoln,	Allen Clark,	Samuel Smith,
John Howard,	John Treat,	Jacob Hart,
Simeon Everton,	John Hook,	Jacob McGaw,
Edward Kelly,	Robert Treat,	William Forbes,
Joshua Treat,	Joseph Whipple,	Elisha Hammond,
George W. Brown,	John Kenny,	Tilly Brown,
Harvey Jameson,	John Garman,	Plyn Clark,
Daniel Lambert,	Daniel Dresser,	Nathan Parsons,
Silas Harthorn,	Sherlock Parsons,	Josiah Stone,
Timothy Crosby,	Timothy Crosby, Jr.,	William Lowder,
David G. Parsons,	Abel Morrill,	John Lafavor,
John Howard,	Moses Brown,	John Clark,
Archibald McPhetres,	David Harthorn,	David Harthorn, 2d,
Ashbel Harthorn,	Joseph Harthorn,	Andrew Hasey,
Benjamin Clark,	Samuel Sherburne,	Joseph Clark,
Joseph Harthorn,	Robert McPhetres,	Richard Garcelon,
Daniel Clapp,	Timothy Miller,	Daniel Kimball,
Sylvanus Rich,	Joel Fisher,	Lemuel Smith,
John Miller,	Levi Leathers,	Arnold Murray,
William Little,	John Brasdell,	Gideon Dutton,
Isaac Spencei,	William Hasey,	Joseph Mansell. —

We do hereby certify that the persons named in the foregoing list, beginning with the name of Charles Hammond and ending with the name of Joseph Mansel (one hundred and ninety-one) are by us this day admitted to their Parole of honor, not to serve against Great Britain or her allies, unless regularly exchanged, and that, if demanded by us or the British Government, they be forthcoming.

Given under our hands in Bangor this 3d day of September, 1814.

ROBERT BARRIE,
Senior Officer in Command of the Advanced Naval Forces in Penobscot.

HENRY JOHN,
Lieutenant-Colonel 7th Batt., Sixtieth Regiment, Commanding Advance British Light Troops.

GEORGE PEDLAR,
Sen't Lt. H. M. S. Dragon.

This submission was followed the next day by the following guarantee :

The undersigned guarantee to all persons, inhabitants of the townships of Bangor and Orono, who bring in their arms, and have signed, or shall within thirty days next coming sign a parol of honor not to serve against his Britanic Majesty, or his Allies, during the present war, unless regularly exchanged as prisoners of war, their personal safety, with that also of their families not so old as eighteen years of the male sex and all females. The undersigned have also received from Moses Patten and Thomas Bradbury, Selectmen of Bangor, a bond in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars in behalf of said town, conditioned principally for the faithful performance of the conditions of the following propositions, viz:

"The subscribers, principally inhabitants of Bangor, promise to the Commodore of the British Naval force in Penobscot river and Commander of land forces to deliver the vessels now on the stocks in Bangor, to the Commodore and land commander at Castine by the last day of October next.

Bangor, September 4, 1814.

MOSES PATTEN, } Selectmen in behalf of THOMAS BRADBURY, } the town of Bangor.

Which proposition is by us on behalf of his Britanic Majesty, accepted, and in consideration of having received said bond, we pledge ourselves that no private property, except vessels, shall be in any way molested or injured; but of others if his said Majesty's troops, by land or sea, should hereafter, before the last day of October next, arrive at Bangor, they are to respect all private property, and especially all unfinished vessels within the above named townships of Bangor and Orono, whether deficient in finishing hull or rigging, the bond aforesaid being by us considered adequate security, and we accordingly pledge our honors that said vessels and private property shall be respected by his Britanic Majesty's subjects.

Bangor September 4, 1814.

ROBERT BARRIE,
Senior Officer in command of H. M's advanced Naval force in the Penobscot.

HENRY JOHN,
Lt. Col. 7th Light Batt. 60th Regt. Commanding the advance British light Troops.

GEORGE PEDLAR,
Senior Lt. H. M. S. Dragon.

General Blake's troops reached Bangor about 9 o'clock in the morning of the 3d, three or four hours before the British, and disposed of their arms and accoutrements so that no one who had affected to be a soldier in Hampden could be recognized as such in Bangor. But by the orders of John and the menaces of the imperative Barrie, the arms came to the light again and were surrendered to the invaders. General Blake retired to his home in Brewer, but when inquired for submitted himself as a prisoner of war and was paroled.

The fog had cleared off when the vessels ascended the river, and whenever the retreating Adams men (of whom there were more than two hundred, in squads) were seen from the decks, the sharp report of the guns indicated that iron messengers were sent in pursuit of them. They, however, escaped unharmed, and made their way from Bangor, through the woods, to the Kennebec. Captain Morris stopped in Bangor for refreshments, and an old citizen, who had an interview with him, said that he was in such haste that "he poured his coffee into his saucer, that it might cool the more rapidly." All had lost their personal effects, and he learned that the country through which he was to pass was almost destitute of inhabitants, and that his men could not be subsisted as a body; he therefore ordered them to make their way to Portland in such manner and time as they might be able. He afterwards, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, expressed his gratitude to the inhabitants between the Penobscot and the Kennebec, who "most cheerfully and liberally supplied their wants to the utmost extent of their limited means." He complimented the subordinate officers, and said of the seamen and marines that their bravery was unquestioned, and "their uncommon good conduct upon their march — those feelings which induced them to rally round their flag at a distance of two hundred miles from the place of their dispersion, without one instance of desertion, entitle them to particular approbation."

As the British vessels approached the town, Mr. John Barker, whose store was upon the Point at the corner of Exchange and Washington streets, put a flag of truce from his window, and when the barges came to land he and Mr. Robert Lapish and Captain Greene Sanborn gave assurances of the surrender of the town. After the sailors landed they made themselves quite at home, and appropriated such things as took their fancy or they needed, as if they were their own. Entering Mr. Barker's store, they laid their hands upon the shoes and boots and similar articles. Mr. Barker, who was a very shrewd man, in a bland manner proposed to wait upon them, as he said he wished to make a memorandum of the articles, in order to charge them to their King! This was perfectly satisfactory to them, and he made a list of all his goods taken by these free customers.

Among the first inquiries of the British officers, after coming into town, was who were Republicans (Democrats) and who were Federalists. They knew well that the Federalists had been adverse to the war, and were comparatively lenient to them. Hon. Francis Carr, who had been in Congress and sustained the war measures, was especially obnoxious, and was careful to keep out of their way. It was difficult to obtain his name to the submission. Previously, on his return from Congress, the feeling was so strong against him in Portland that when he passed through that town there were strong manifestations of disapprobation towards him, which came near developing into violence.

Barrie was a rough, repulsive person—was very harsh with the citizens, and made himself extremely obnoxious. At Hampden he was grossly severe, and threatened to burn the houses, although he said he would spare the lives of the people. Sir John Sherbrooke, however, forbid the burning of the houses, unless as a measure of necessity. Colonel John, on the other hand, was courteous, and made himself popular. Mr. and Mrs. John Barker resided in the house which was built for Jeremiah Dudley, at the corner of Main and Water streets. It was a pleasant residence facing the water, and had a pretty front yard extending to Fish street (now Pickering Square). The occupants were Federalists and offered Colonel John their house for quarters.

The citizens of all parties, conscious of their helplessness, were disposed to be conciliatory. A prominent Republican meeting Barrie on Main street, pointed to his garden and said :

“Captain, there is some sauce in my garden to which you are welcome.”

“I wants none of your sass,” Barrie coarsely replied.

“I mean, there are vegetables which you can take if you wish.”

“To be sure I can—they are mine already.”

The soldiers, especially the Hessians, were very lawless, and rifled the stores on the west side of the Kenduskeag of most of their contents. It was related as a joke that they entered one store on the east side of the stream and found the goods marked so high that they left in disgust, without taking much spoil. They found much rum in the stores. Hogsheads were rolled out upon Broad street, the heads broken in, and the rum and brandy were taken out in buckets and distributed among the men. Mr. Thomas F. Hatch, who had charge of the bar at the Hatch tavern, found his business as great as he could attend to, and while it was in the full tide of successful operation, his counter covered with decanters and glasses, Captain Barrie came in, and seeing Hatch dealing out liquor to the soldiers, raised his sword and with a huge oath cut off the faucets of his rum barrels. Of course the liquor ran out upon the floor, but as soon as Barrie's back was turned, Hatch mopped it up and turned it back into the barrels, and dealt it out to the soldiers as he had before!

But Barrie was a brute. By Mr. Hatch's testimony, he took a bottle of rum and drank the whole of its contents at one draught.

The British officers were good customers of the inn, and Mr. Hatch did not let conscience stand in the way of his dealing with his country's enemies. He said that on one occasion Captain Bruce, Colonel John, and four or five other officers dined at the house, and when the bill was called for, he made it ten times larger than was customary, and handed it to Barrie; Barrie handed it to John, and John took from his pocket $3 and gave Hatch, and told him he must wait for the rest until the next time. Hatch laughed while relating the story, and said that that was four times as much as it was worth.

It was said that his mother remonstrated against his making so large a bill, saying the officers would deem it an insult; but the son said he “might as well be hung for an old sheep as for a lamb,” and presented it without a qualm.

The soldiers and sailors were not much looked after in their vagaries, although the officers pretended disapprobation, and some appeared to be in earnest. Barrie and John had forbidden the furnishing liquor to the troops, and when Barrie heard they were drinking it from buckets in the streets, without inquiring into the matter, he ordered a general destruction of the liquors in town. It was thought that the departure of the troops was hastened by the officers, from fear that the inhabitants might take advantage of their helpless condition and have revenge.

While Dr. James B. Fiske and his wife were riding in their carriage along the street, some of the men met them and ordered them out. The Doctor turned his horse, as if he supposed they wanted the street to themselves. But they wanted the carriage and a ride, and the Doctor and lady were compelled to yield to them and walk home. But the Doctor was an apothecary, and when they visited his store they were ill at ease. They knew that there were chemicals of a dangerous nature usually in such establishments, and some one in attendance did not hesitate to hint that a long tarry there might be the occasion of a catastrophe far more disastrous than any they had yet witnessed since they entered the river. Their tarry was short.

The vessels in the harbor were either burned or taken. The brig Caravan, belonging to the Messrs. Patten and A. Taylor; Schooners Neptune's Barge, Thinks-I-to Myself, Eunice and Polly, Gladiator, Three Brothers, and the sloop Ranger were burned. The Bangor Packet, Oliver Spear, Hancock, Lucy, Polly, and boat Cato, were taken. A new ship of the Messrs. Rice and J. Drummond, of three hundred tons, not rigged, was burned. Fire was about to be set to the vessels on the stocks, six in number (which, if burned, with the fresh breeze then blowing, would have involved the burning of the town), when the Selectmen proposed to give the bond above referred to, obligating the town to deliver the vessels at Castine in October.

With such visitors among them, inflamed by drink, having the knowledge that they could do almost any act with impunity, it may well be supposed that the inhabitants passed a sleepless night. However, the troops were tired enough to need rest, and the people were not molested. After remaining in Bangor about thirty hours, the invaders started on their return. They marched to Hampden on Sunday afternoon and encamped in the neighborhood of the academy. They took with them about twenty horses from Bangor. Even the officers did not scruple to do this, although some of the owners had assurances of their return, and succeeded in securing some by going after them.

Dr. Hosea Rich was a surgeon of the American troops at Hampden. The house of Josiah Kidder, Esq., was the hospital, and that of John Godfrey, Esq., the sub-hospital. This surgeon had knowledge of eleven of Blake's men being wounded, and one killed. One of the wounded was a Mr. Carlton, from Carleton's Corner, in Frankfort. His wound was by a ball, and severe. Dr. Rich removed the ball in February afterward. He knew of only two of the British being killed, and these were at first buried in the front yard of Mr. Jacob Curtis. Afterward their remains were removed to the burial ground in rear of the meeting-house. Colonel John reported the British loss as one rank and file killed, one captain, seven rank and file wounded, and one rank and file missing. One of the wounded of the British was under Dr. Rich's care, but they took all his surgical instruments and his assistant surgeon to Bangor, and left him with no means to help their wounded or ours. During the time they remained in Hampden, on their return, the soldiers and sailors were particularly busy in their depredations upon the property of the citizens. As the resistance had been made in that town, they conducted as if they felt justified in doing more injury there than they had done in Bangor. A petty officer, being a sportsman, with several of the rank and file, started a hunt, and with horse and gun he was very successful with the pigs and sheep and among the geese and other fowls. His companions returned from a two- or three-mile excursion loaded with this kind of game. Mr. Leavitt, in describing the conduct of these men, says: "They inflicted much more severity, insult, and distress upon the people of Hampden than on us, and our situation was comfortable, when compared with theirs." They left that town on the 6th of September.

After Bangor was freed from the presence of the marauders, the Selectmen, who had been in a very unusual situation and had acted in the emergency as their judgment dictated, aided by that of other prominent citizens, issued the following :

Whereas the Selectmen of Bangor are, by the change of circumstances in this town, placed in a very critical and responsible situation; and whereas, they feel it to be their duty, as well as their wishes and determination, to comply with the promises and agreements made with the British commanders at the time of the surrender of the town; and as many questions may come before them which they wish to advise with others of the citizens of the town upon, whose judgment they rely upon, and who have the same wishes and determination with themselves, think it their duty to appoint twelve persons from among such citizens as a Council, to meet with said Selectmen at such times as they may direct, to advise them on all matters which may come before them, and they accordingly appoint the following persons Counsel as aforesaid, viz: John Barker, Charles Hammond, Jacob McGaw, Allen Gilman, Samuel E. Dutten, William D. Williamson, William Emerson, Joseph Leavitt, Amos Patten, Philip Coombs, Asa Davis, and Robert Lapish.

Dated at Bangor the 6th of September, 1814.

MOSES PATTEN, }
THOMAS BRADBURY, } Selectmen of Bangor.

The Clerk of the town of Bangor is directed to notify the persons above-named of this appointment, and to request their attendance at the Selectmen's office formerly occupied by Samuel K. Whiting, Esq., at 10 o'clock A. M. of the 7th instant.

Bangor, September 6, 1814.

MOSES PATTEN, }
THOMAS BRADBURY, } Selectmen of Bangor.

Pursuant to the above order to me directed, I have notified the above-named persons, selected as Council, to meet at the time and place and for the purposes above expressed.

Bangor, September 7, 1814.

THO. BRADBURY, To. Clerk.

The result of the deliberations of the Council was that Amos Patten, Esq., should be despatched to Sir John Sherbrooke and Admiral Griffith with the following petition :

To their Excellencies, Lieutenant General Sir John Coape Sherbrooke, Knight of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief over His Majesty's, the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Province of Nova Scotia, commanding a Division of His said Majesty's forces; Edward Griffith, Esquire, Rear Admiral of the White, Commanding a Squadron of His said Majesty's Ships of War, employed in taking possession of the eastern side of the Penobscot river and the boundary line of the Province of New Brunswick :

Your petitioners, Selectmen and Magistrates of the town of Bangor, on the west side of Penobscot River, respectfully represent, that on the third day of September last, a detachment of his aforesaid Majesty's troops, under the command of Lieut. Col. Henry John and a squadron of his Majesty's ships of war, under the command of Lieut. Col. Henry John and a squadron of his Majesty's ships of war under command of Capt. Robert Barry, appeared at said Bangor, and that a flag of truce from the Selectmen of said town met said commanders and possession of said town was unconditionally surrendered to his said Majesty's arms, and an assurance given by said Lieut. Col. John and Capt. Barry that the private property of the citizens thereof, except ships and vessels, should be respected; that when the troops entered the town, quarters and provisions were demanded and with all possible speed supplied; that an order was issued by said Commanders requiring that no liquors should be sold or given to the men, and that in obedience thereto all the stores and shops were within twenty minutes after the issuing of said order shut, and all the taverns prohibited furnishing said men with spirituous liquors; that unfortunately, however, at the same time Capt. Barry was giving his order aforesaid, Lieut. Symms, of the Bulwark, made a demand upon a merchant of said town for a pipe of brandy, which, as an officer demanded it, was delivered without ceremony, rolled into the street, put on tap, and, under the direction of said officer, served out in buckets to the men. Capt. Barry, seeing the brandy thus serving out, supposed his order treated with contempt, ordered another Lieut. of the navy to go through the town, open the stores and destroy all the liquors he could find, Capt. Barry himself at the same time destroying all the liquors in the tavern where he then was. Before this mistake was discovered and the last order countermanded, six stores were opened, and not only the liquors therein destroyed, but nearly all the property therein plundered by the sailors, whereby property to the amount of six thousand dollars was lost to the owners. That the arms of the people of the town were demanded and surrendered, and every demand by said Commanders made was promptly complied with, notwithstanding which private property from stores and dwelling-houses was plundered to the amount of some thousands of dollars besides that above-mentioned; said Commanders burnt or carried away the following vessels, viz: one brig lying afloat, hull complete; the hull of on-ship; one ditto, finished in part; two brigs nearly completed; and the frames of two small vessels upon the stocks, said Commanders determined to burn; but as they stood among our buildings, the burning them would have involved our little village in one general conflagration; wherefore your petitioners supplicated said Commanders that they would not burn said vessels on the stocks. They would consent to spare them on no other condition within our power to perform, than that of executing to them a bond in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars, conditioned that said vessels on the stocks should be delivered at Castine before the first day of November then next. It being then stated to Capt. Barry that it was impossible to comply with the condition of said bond, he replied that it was indifferent to him whether the ships were delivered or not, because, if they were not, he should file the bond before the Commissioners who should treat for peace as a claim against the United States. Upon this the bond was executed.

The inhabitants of Bangor, for the supply of the forces aforesaid, at the demand of the Commanders, and by the plunder of the sailors aforesaid, furnished in articles of provisions, shoes, boots, etc., $1,000, for which not a cent was paid. Nine horses, saddles, and bridles were also furnished by loan to said Commanders and their officers, with a promise that they should be returned, six of which were obtained from Hampden and Castine with much trouble, and three were never returned, though requested at Castine. One other horse Colonel John claimed as captured—that we do not include in the above.

Now, may it please your Excellencies, we have confided to Amos Patten, Esquire, one of the Magistrates of Bangor, this our petition, who will represent our distressed case and condition to your Excellencies. And we respectfully submit to the consideration of your Excellencies, the question, whether according to the usages of war among civilized nations, the foregoing facts being taken fully into view, it would not be consistent and proper, as well as humane and honorable, that the bond aforesaid should be given up or cancelled. We would beg leave further to represent, that as soon as the Commanders aforesaid returned from Bangor to Castine, a delegation of five of our magistrates waited on your Excellencies with an expectation of a full hearing on this subject at that time when all parties were present, but unfortunately your Excellencies were then on the eve of departure for Halifax, and in the hurry of that particular period, our case could not be fully taken up or understood. One of your Excellencies remarked that you would be at Castine again in two or three weeks; therefore we waited until the arrival of your proclamation of September 21, when we delegated two of our Magistrates to wait on Hon. Major-General Gosselin and your Agent, Captain Owen, both of whom expressed much feeling and regret at the hardship of our case, but could do no more for us than to say they thought the vessels aforesaid might be ransomed at the sum of five thousand nine hundred dollars, and the bond thereby cancelled, and submit the same to your Excellencies for consideration, advising us to petition your Excellencies for further clemency; our said Magistrates at the same time assuring the General and the Captain, that the ability of our village was incompetent to the payment of so great a sum; an assurance which we most conscientiously reiterate, and which sum we verily believe to be more than twice as much as their owners can obtain for said vessels, or make them worth under the present unpromising aspect of peace—a peace which we sincerely hope Divine Providence, in his infinite mercy, will speedily bestow upon the two nations.

Most cordially reciprocating the desire expressed by your Excellencies to the delegation from Bangor at Castine, that so long as his Majesty retains possession of the Eastern bank of the Penobscot, harmony and good understanding may prevail on the banks of said river between his Majesty's troops and subjects and the citizens of the United States, we respectfully subscribe ourselves your Excellencies' humble servants."

Mr. Amos Patten, in behalf of Bangor, and Mr. John Crosby, in behalf of Hampden, were dispatched to Halifax to procure at least a commutation of the penalties that had been imposed by Barrie and John. After reading the petition from Bangor and a full statement of the case by Mr. Patten, Sir John Sherbrooke communicated to him that the people of Bangor could have their choice of four conditions, viz: To destroy the vessels, deliver them at Castine in the spring, dispose of them at public sale and distribute the proceeds among the captors, or pay the penalty of the bond. No other concession would he make to Bangor; and he would make no concession at all to Hampden. Messrs. Patten and Crosby were absent six weeks. They returned in December with the British Governor's ultimatum, and the people made up their minds to make the best of their calamities. But other agents were busy in making such comprehensive arrangements of the difficulty between the American and British Governments, that no further care was necessary in regard to the bonds. The treaty of Ghent was concluded on the 24th of December, and reached America on the 11th of February. Castine was evacuated on the 25th of April, 1815, and the bonds by these events became of no effect. A part of the vessels at Hampden, for which the bond of that town was given, however, were taken by the British, but the peace came too late for the relief of the owners of them, although the relief it afforded to the people was incalculable.

Rear-Admiral Griffith left Castine on September 12, 1814, with Sir John Sherbrooke and half the troops in seven or eight ships, and sailed for Machias, where there was a fort and a garrison of fifty United States soldiers under Captain Leonard. There were mounted at this fort ten twenty-four pounders. There were not sufficient troops to resist the British force with effect, therefore the fort was blown up and nearly all the guns were destroyed, and the garrison retreated westward, taking at Frankfort twelve Englishmen prisoners (of a party sent from Castine to capture a cargo of cocoa), whom they carried with them to Salem. They also retook fifty muskets and restored them to the citizens.

Half of the British troops were left at Castine, under General Gosselin. Rear-Admiral Milne was in command of the ships that remained. Half the county between the Penobscot and St. Croix was held as conquered territory, but by the proclamations of Lieutenant General Shérbrooke the people were permitted to enjoy their own law and to attend their customary avocations, provided they submitted peacefully to the British domination; and assurances were given that provisions and supplies for the troops would be paid for.

During the winter the officers in Castine devoted themselves to pleasure as well as business. They extemporized amusements of various kinds, chief among which were theatrical representations. The place was much resorted to as a market, and the business of supplying the troops was quite profitable to the Americans.

A special session of the Legislature convened on October 5, to make provision for the public need of the people who had been deprived of their American privileges. The November term of the Court of Common Pleas was adjourned from Castine to Bangor, in January; all deeds were to be recorded at Bangor or Augusta, and all commitments were to be made at Augusta. James Campbell, a Senator from Washington County, and Martin Kinsley, a senator from Hancock, had signed a submission as prisoners of war, and it was made a question whether they could exercise the functions of Senators under such circumstances. General Burgoyne's course was referred to as a precedent. After he was captured he returned to England and took his seat in Parliament. The Senators were not disturbed. It was determined that the State make no effort to remove the British forces from Castine, as the benefit would not be commensurate with the sacrifice that would attend such an attempt.

Eye-witnesses have preserved accounts of what came under their observation during the visit of the British.

One who was in the battle said that the line of Blake's militia was upon the pitch of the hill below the academy in Hampden, its left being nearly on the bank of the river and its right on the road; that the fog was so dense that a man could be seen only at a very short distance, and this, with the smoke from the British guns, which was blown by a southerly wind directly into the faces of our men, almost wholly concealed the advancing foe until they were nearly upon them; that he was made a prisoner and kept fourteen hours in the guard-house in Bangor, near Dr. Fiske's store.

Another said that he first saw the redcoats through a break in the fog on the opposite side of Pitcher's Brook, coming down from the Lower Corner; that after they crossed the Brook they deployed to the right and left in coming up the hill; that our cannon fired three rounds each, and he heard a great outcry among the British on the west side of the road, behind a board fence, as if men were killed or wounded, and that it was said that a British captain, who had been in forty pitched battles, was killed; that our force was only six hundred men, while the British force was eight hundred; that the ensign of his company was wounded; that one Oakes, who had been taken by the British, on attempting to escape when the action began, was shot down by them; that a Mr. Reed and others were standing by the Loud house in Orrington, looking upon the British war vessels as they were coming up the river, and being seen were shot at from the vessels; that Reed directed all to lie down on the east side of the house, which they did, and he with them, but his shoulder was raised above the underpinning, when a 32-pound shot passed through the house on a level with the floor and took off the exposed shoulder, killing Reed instantly; that the Adams men fired from their battery on the hill near Crosby's Wharf, and cut in two a British barge that was passing up near Ram Island, and destroyed the crew.

Another said that he was a fifer; that his position was about midway between the right and left of the militia; that he recollected Colonel Grant and Major Chamberlain, and the latter was very brave; that after the flight he found himself at Mr. Lane's, where the women and children were, and Colonel Grant came there in great trepidation and told him and the other soldiers who were with him that soldiers were not safe there, and they kept on with the Colonel five miles further, where there was no sign or sound of an Englishman.

Another said of John Wilkins, then a resident of Orrington (who was for many years in offices of trust before and afterward), that when it was understood that the British were coming, he took his gun and went to a bluff on the river for three days successively, to pick off the men on board the vessels; that he was a fine shot (he had seen him on horseback shoot a partridge), and a man of pluck. It happened, however, that it was foggy when the vessel passed the bluff, and he missed his prey; that afterward he mounted a white horse and rode up the road, and when near Brewer village he was seen and shot at. Upon this he dismounted and led his horse all the way to Bangor. Seeing that he was a lame man, the British expended no more ammunition upon him, probably deeming it hardly creditable to shoot a cripple. This observer said that a crowd of people were standing near the liberty pole in Orrington, and were seen by the British as they passed, and were fired upon by them, whereupon they cut down the liberty-pole.

Another said that he boarded with Edward Sargent, who occupied the house owned by Hon. Amos M. Roberts when he died, which he was building on State Street, in Bangor; that he carried his sword and equipments home and hid them in the rear of the house, and that one of the Selectmen came to him in a state of great excitement and inquired what he had done with his sword. When he told him, he replied: "What do you mean by that? do you want the town burnt over our heads? Go at once and get it, that it may be surrendered to the British." As he did not want to be the cause of such a catastrophe, he complied. That a great many personal and domestic articles were plundered from the houses, and, after the enemy left, the toll-house at Kenduskeag Bridge was made a depository for such as were recovered, and a great many men's, women's, and children's garments of all sorts were left there; that a vessel just launched by the Pattens was started for Castine, and grounded. The officer in charge ordered it to be fired, and it was done. Several of the citizens proposed to cut a hole in her, that a portion of her timbers might be saved, but Mr. Moses Patten would not permit it, lest some might be shot by the enemy.

Another, who lived among the Holden hills, said the explosion of the "Adams" made a noise like thunder, and the earth there was felt to tremble as if shaken by an earthquake.

The remains of the ship lay upon the beach inside the "Long Wharf" at Hampden for several years, and the copper nails that were mixed with the gravel were a great temptation to the boys to make frequent visits to that locality.

BRITISH ACCOUNTS RELATING TO THE AFFAIR AT HAMPDEN.

The following extract from a private letter dated Castine, September 9, 1814, was received at Halifax a few days after the return of the British from Bangor:

I shall not trouble you with an account of our voyage. Our Flank Companies have just returned from Hampden, a small town about 30 miles from this; at which place the enemy's ship, the Adams, and several valuable merchant vessels lay secure, as they thought. Hearing of our advance, they blew up the Adams, after taking out all her guns; with which they erected a very strong battery on a wharf commanding the river, and another battery on the hill directly above it; in both there were upwards of 30 pieces of cannon and more than 2,000 men, pouring grape and canister shot upon our brave fellows, who only waited to give them a few volleys, then charged—and the Yankees ran in every direction. Our loss is but small—1 soldier and 1 sailor killed; 1 captain and 5 or 6 soldiers wounded.

The Battalion Companies of the 29 Regt. have gone, under col. Pilkington, to Machias.

Among the prisoners we took a general Blake, who commanded the fort on the hill at Hampden; but captain Morris, of the Adams, made his escape.

Sir John Sherbrook's report of his proceedings at Penobscot is contained in the following dispatch to the Admiralty:

DOWNING ST., Oct. 9, 1814.

Major Anderson has arrived with the following despatch from Lieut. Gen. Sherbrook, dated CASTINE, AT THE ENTRANCE TO THE PENOBSCOT, September 18.

MY LORD—I have now the honor to inform your Lordship that after closing my despatch on the 26th ult., in which I mentioned my intention of proceeding to the Penobscot, Rear Admiral Griffith and myself lost no time in sailing from Halifax with such a naval force as he deemed necessary, and the troops as per margin,* to accomplish the object we had in view.

Very early in the morning of the 30th we fell in with the Rifleman sloop-of-war, when Captain Pearse informed us that the United States frigate Adams had got into the Penobscot; but from the apprehension of being attacked by your cruisers if she remained at the entrance of the river, she ran up as high as Hampden, where she had landed her guns and mounted them on shore for her protection.

On leaving Halifax it was my original intention to have taken possession of Machias on my way hither; but on receiving this intelligence, the Admiral and myself were of opinion that no time should be lost in proceeding to our destination, and we arrived here very early on the morning of the 1st instant.

The fort of Castine, which is situated upon a peninsula of the eastern side of the Penobscot, near the entrance of that river, was summoned a little after sunrise; but the American officer refused to surrender it, and immediately opened a fire from four twenty-four-pounders upon a small schooner that had been sent with Lieutenant-Colonel Nicholls (commanding the Royal Engineers) to reconnoitre the work.

Arrangements were immediately made for disembarking the troops; and before a landing could be effected, the enemy blew up his magazine, and escaped up the Majetaguadous River, carrying off in the boats with them two field-pieces.

As we had no means of ascertaining what force the Americans had on this peninsula, I landed a detachment of Royal Artillery, with two rifle companies of the Sixtieth and Ninety-eighth Regiments, under Colonel Douglass, in the rear of it, with orders to secure the isthmus, and to take possession of the heights which command the town; but I soon learned that there were no regulars at Castine, except the party which had blown up the magazine and escaped, and that the militia which were assembled there had dispersed immediately on our landing.

Rear-Admiral Griffith and myself next turned our attention to obtaining possession of the Adams, or, if that could not be done, to destroying her. The arrangements for this service having been made, the Rear-Admiral entrusted the execution of it to Captain Barrie, Royal Navy, and as the co-operation of a land force was necessary, I directed Lieutenant-Colonel John, with a detachment of artillery, the flank companies of the Twenty-ninth, Sixty-second, and Ninety-eighth Regiments, and one rifle company of the Sixtieth, to accompany and co-operate with Captain Barrie on this occasion; but as Hampden is twenty-seven miles above Castine, it appears to me a necessary measure of precaution, first, to occupy a post on the western bank, which might afford support, if necessary, to the force going up the river, and at the same time prevent the armed population, which is very numerous to the southward and westward, from annoying the British in their operations on the Adams.

Upon inquiry I found that Belfast, which is upon the highroad leading from Hampden to Boston, and which perfectly commands the bridge, was likely to answer both these purposes, and I consequently directed Major-General Gosselin to occupy that place with the Twenty-ninth regiment, and to maintain it till further orders.

As soon as this was accomplished, and the tide served, Rear-Admiral Griffith directed Captain Barrie to proceed to his destination, and the remainder of the troops were landed that evening at Castine.

Understanding that a strong party of militia from the neighboring township had assembled at about four miles from Castine, or the road leading to Bluehill, I sent out a strong patrol on the morning of the 2d, before daybreak. On arriving at the place I was informed that the militia of the county had assembled there on the alarm-guns being fired at the fort at Castine upon our first appearance, but that the main body had since dispersed and returned to their respective homes. Some stragglers were, however, left, who fired upon our advanced guard, and then took to the woods; a few of whom were made prisoners.

No intelligence having reached us from Captain Barrie on Saturday night, I marched with about seven hundred men and two light fieldpieces on Buckstown,* at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, the 4th instant, for the purpose of learning what progress he had made, and of affording him assistance if required. This place is about fifteen miles higher up the Penobscot than Castine, and on the eastern bank of the river. Rear-Admiral Griffith accompanied me on this occasion, and as we had reason to believe that the light guns which had been taken from Castine were secreted in the neighborhood of Buckstown, we threatened to destroy the town unless they were delivered up, and the two brass three-pounders on travelling carriages were in consequence brought to us in the course of the day, and are now in our possession.

*First Company Royal Artillery, two rifle companies of the Seventh Battalion, Sixtieth Regiment, Twenty-ninth, Sixty-second, and Ninety-eighth Regiments.

At Buckstown we received very satisfactory accounts of the success which had attended the force employed up the river. We learned that Captain Barrie proceeded from Hampden to Bangor; and the Admiral sent an officer in a boat from Buckstown to communicate with him, when finding there was no necessity for the troops remaining longer at Buckstown, they marched back to Castine the next day.

Having ascertained that the object of the expedition up the Penobscot had been attained, it was no longer necessary for me to occupy Belfast; I, therefore, on the evening of the 6th, directed Major-General Gosselin to embark the troops and join me here.

Machias being the only place now remaining where the enemy had a post between Penobscot and Passamaquoddy Bay, I ordered Lieutenant-Colonel Pilkington to proceed with a detachment of Royal Artillery and the Twenty-seventh Regiment to occupy it; and as naval assistance was required, Rear-Admiral Griffith directed Captain Parker, of the Tenedos, to co-operate with Lieutenant-Colonel Pilkington on this occasion.

On the morning of the 9th, Captain Barrie, with Lieutenant-Colonel John and the troops which had been employed with him up the Penobscot, returned to Castine. It seems the enemy blew up the Adams, on his strong position at Hampden being attacked; but all his artillery, two stand of colors, and a standard, with several merchant vessels, fell into our hands. This, I am happy to say, was accomplished with very little loss on our part; and your Lordship will perceive, by the return sent herewith, that the only officer wounded in this affair is Captain Gell, of the Twenty-ninth Grenadiers.

Signed,

J. C. SHERBROOK.

The following papers are of interest as part of the history of the British occupation:

Proclamation by Lieutenant-General Sir John C. Sherbrook, K. B., commanding a body of His Britannic Majesty's land forces, and Edward Griffith, Esq., Rear-Admiral of the White, commanding a squadron of His Majesty's ships, now arrived in the Penobscot.

This is to notify unto all whom it may concern, that the municipal laws, as established by the American Government for the maintenance of peace and tranquillity in that part of the District of Maine lying between the Penobscot River and Passamaquoddy Bay, will continue in force until further orders; and the civil magistrates are permitted to execute the laws as heretofore, and shall be supported in so doing.

By command,

T. F. ADDISON, Military Secretary.

CHARLES MARTYR, Naval Secretary.

5th September, 1814.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, September 26, 1814.

Sundry Post-offices in the District of Maine being possessed or under the control of the public enemy, and it being possible that others may be in the same situation, it is hereby ordered that the Postmaster (at the nearest safe post-office to those offices so possessed or controlled by the enemy) detain, open, and account for the mails address to them in the same manner as if addressed to his own office. Whenever it shall become safe to forward mails to such Post-offices, the letters and papers remaining undelivered are to be remailed and forwarded immediately to their place of destination, either by special express at the expense of this office, or by the regular carrier.

R. J. MEIGS, JR., Postmaster-General.

Proclamation by Major-General Gosselin, commanding his Britannic Majesty's forces between the River Penobscot and the former boundary at New Brunswick, etc.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, His Britannic Majesty's forces have taken possession in full the territory lying between the same river and the boundary line of the Province of New Brunswick, including Long Island and the other islands near, and contiguous to the shores thereof; and, whereas, it has been deemed expedient to require from the male inhabitants above

* Now Bucksport.

sixteen years of age, residing within the said district, to take an oath of allegiance to his said Majesty, or an oath that they will peaceably and quietly demean and conduct themselves while inhabiting and residing in the territory lying on the eastern side of the River Penobscot, or any part thereof; and they will not carry arms, harbor British deserters, nor carry intelligence to the King's enemies, or in any respect act in any hostile manner to his Brittanic Majesty, or any of his subjects, during the present war between Great Britain and the United States of America:

Know ye, therefore, that I have constituted, deputed, and by these presents do constitute, depute, and appoint the Selectmen of Sullivan, commissioners to administer the oaths of allegiance, or the oath of neutrality herein before mentioned, to all such male persons inhabiting within the said district, above the age of sixteen years aforesaid, and the said commissioners are hereby enjoined and required to keep regular rolls or records of all the names of such persons as shall take either of the said oaths aforesaid, to which rolls the persons taking the said oaths are to be required to subscribe their names; giving and hereby granting to the said commissioners full power and authority to perform the matters and things herein before mentioned, ratifying and confirming all and whatsoever the said commissioners shall lawfully do by virtue hereof.

Given under my name and seal-at-arms, at Castine, the 31st day of October, in the 54th year of his Majesty's reign, Anno Domini, 1814.

GERARD GOSSELIN, Major-General Commandant.

[CIRCULAR.]

CASTINE, 1st November, 1814.

GENTLEMEN:—It being deemed expedient to require the male inhabitants above sixteen years of age, residing within the territory lying to the eastward of the Penobscot River and the boundary of New Brunswick, to take the oath of allegiance to his majesty or an oath of neutrality, I hereby enclose our authority to administer such oaths to the inhabitants of your township, with the form of the oath of neutrality, and have to acquaint that you will carry these instructions into effect as soon as possible, and report to me within one month from the date hereof, a list of such persons with their places of residence, as refuse to take the oath of neutrality; that in case they do not immediately leave the country, measures may be taken to apprehend them as prisoners of war.

I am, gentlemen, your humble servant,

G. GOSSELIN, Major-General Commandant.

To the Selectmen of the town of Sullivan.

It may be well to note here that a great deal of patriotism and bravery (?) were manifested in the bar-rooms and shops after the British had disappeared. And this "bravery" expanded as the years progressed. It was not unusual to hear the remark, "If the British were to come here now, they would not get off so easily." Or, after some enthusiasm was generated by a good nautical singer with the popular song of the day, called "Constitution and Guerriere:"* "Let them come once more, and they'll never come again! They'll get a taste of Yankee courage that 'll put their pipes out forever!"

* As this song was in all mouths, it ought not to be permitted to die yet; therefore it has a place here:

CONSTITUTION AND GUERRIERE.

I often have been told that the British seamen bold Could beat the tars of France so neat and handy, O;
 But they never found their match till the Yankees did them catch—
 For the Yankee tars for fighting are the dandy, O.

O, the Guerriere so bold on the foaming ocean roll'd,
 Commanded by Dacres, the grandee, O,
 With as choice a British crew as a rammer ever drew;
 They could beat the Frenchmen two to one so handy, O.

When this frigate hove in view, "O," said Dacres to his crew,
 "Prepare ye for action and be handy, O;
 On the weather-gauge we'll get her, and to make the men fight better,
 We'll give to them gunpowder and good brandy, O."

Now this boasting Briton cries, "Make that Yankee ship your prize
 You can in thirty minutes do it handy, O;
 Or in twenty-five, I'm sure; if you do it in a score,
 I will give you a double share of good brandy, O."

"When prisoners we've made them, with switchel we will treat them, We'll welcome them with Yankee Doodle dandy, O;"
 O, the British balls flew hot, but the Yankees answered not,
 Until they got a distance that was handy, O.

"O," cries Hull unto his crew, "We will try what we can do;
 If we beat these boasting Britons we're the dandy, O;"
 The first broadside we poured bro't the mizzen by the board,
 Which doused the Royal Engin quite handy, O!

O, Dacres he did sigh, and to his officers did cry,
 "O, I didn't think the Yankees were so handy, O;"
 The second told so well that the fore and mainmast fell;
 That made this lofty frigate look quite handy, O.

"O," says Dacres, "we're undone," so he fires a lee gun,
 And the drummers struck up Yankee Doodle Dandy, O!
 When Dacres came on board, to deliver up his sword,
 He was loth to part with it, it look'd so handy, O.

"You may keep it," says brave Hull; "What makes you look so dull?
 Have you drank too much of your brandy, O?"
 O Britons, now be still, since we've hook'd you in the gill;
 Don't boast upon your Dacres the grandee, O!

CHAPTER IX.

Town Officers of 1815 Tythingmen Desecration of Lord's Day Intemperance—Profanity Money raised—The Schools—Benjamin Bussey—Gives a Ball to the First Religious Society—Anecdote of him—Court House occupied as a Place of Worship—First Sunday School—Charles Hanan, his death—The Court House—A high Quarrel—Tythingman's Association—First Newspaper in Bangor—Peter Edes—Anecdote of him—Attempt to Court-martial—General Blake's failures—Court-martial of Colonel Grant et al., 1816—Town Officers Appropriations—Vote on Separation of State—Fire Company—Annual Meeting and Dinner—The Moral Society—Public Sentiment—Extreme Cold and Snow in June—Murder of Knight—Arrest and Trial of Peol Susep—John Neptune's Speech—Susep Convicted of Manslaughter—Afterwards Becomes Insane—Advertisement—Judy Brown's Advertisement—Philanthropic Movement of Ladies—Survey of the River Penobscot a Half Shire—Its Officers—Zadock Davis—Captain John Perkin's Packet—Dr. Dickinson Comes—Captain Isaac Hutch—Anecdote of him—Proceedings for Separation—Mr. Leavitt a Delegate—Greenleaf's Map of Maine—Phenomenon—Military and Religious—The Goodrich Affair—Joseph Carr Appointed Inspector of Customs.

1815—1816. At the annual meeting Moses Patten, Joseph Carr, and William Rice were made Selectmen; James Bartlett, Town Clerk; Thomas A. Hill, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Town Agent; Harvey Loomis, Samuel E. Dutton, Jacob McGaw, Eliashib Adams, Superintending School Committee, and twenty-eight Tythingmen were elected, all of whom, excepting William Hasey, John Ham, Abner Taylor, and Francis Carr, Jr., were qualified, while the number of Hog-reeves was reduced to five. Men had, by reason of that laxness in morals always consequent upon war, become more wicked than swine. "Many excellent essays were written, sermons delivered, and at length an additional statute passed to check the profanation of the Lord's day. Tythingmen in towns were multiplied, and only those chosen who were expected to do their duty. The intemperate use of ardent spirits was another prevailing sin. Equally lamentable and, perhaps more heinous, was the increasing profaneness in conversation."* Great exertions were made to effect a reform. The then future historian of Maine was one of the Tythingmen who qualified, and must be supposed to have done his duty.

The moneys raised this year were $900 to pay debts and current expenses; $250 for the Bridge Company; $700 for Mr. Loomis's salary; $600 for schools; $950 for highways.

A vote was passed that no scholar be admitted into a man's school who was not qualified to read in a class. A committee, consisting of Mr. Williamson, Mr. Loomis, and Eliashib Adams, was appointed to prepare a plan for the better regulation of the schools, and for the appropriation of the school moneys. They reported that there were in Districts 1 and 2 about 250 scholars,—a large number for three schools, that a third of them, at least, ought to be under the tuition of a master qualified to teach the ordinary and higher branches of education and the languages, while the two other schools might be made the instruction of mistresses; that the master's school should be supported principally by subscription, but each scholar be entitled to draw his school money; and that in each of the other three districts a third of the school money should support a school taught by a female in the summer and two-thirds for a master in the winter.

The report was adopted. Mr. McGaw resigned as committee of the Second District, and Philip Coombs was substituted. The vote adopting the report was reconsidered at an adjourned meeting April 3d.

The taxes on the vessels burnt by the British, assessed in 1814, were abated. Columbia and Cross streets were accepted.

Benjamin Bussey, Esq., of Roxbury, who was a large proprietor of lands in Bangor and neighborhood, gave Mr. Loomis's Society a fine-toned bell, that could be heard at the distance of five miles in favorable weather, weighing one thousand and ninety-five pounds. It was put into the belfry of the Court-house, at the corner of Hammond and Columbia streets, which was used by that Society as a church, in July of this year; and one of the votes of the town was that the Selectmen employ some person to ring it at certain hours of each day. In passing, it may not be amiss to repeat an anecdote of Mr. Bussey, which is recorded by Professor Shepard. He belonged to the class denominated Liberal Christians. He liked Mr. Loomis as a man and a gentleman, and socially was on very good terms with him. Calling upon him at one time, he said: "I don't believe your doctrine of future damnation, Mr. Loomis, myself; but it is just what is wanted by the villains who steal my timber. Go on and preach it, and I will give you a hundred acres of land to begin with." "A good speculator," the learned Doctor adds, "for he knew that his other hundred acres would be nearly doubled in value, if Mr. Loomis's doctrine could be put into the hearts of the people."*

The votes for Governor were for Caleb Strong, 65 votes; for Samuel Dexter, 46. William D. Williamson had 41 votes for Senator and Counsellor, against 62 for Benjamin Hasey. Jacob McGaw and Martin Kinsley were also candidates, the former having 13 votes, and the latter 3 votes. John Wilson had 56 votes for Representative to Congress; James Carr, 46. Amos Patten had 50 votes for Representative to the Legislature, and was declared elected; Jacob McGaw had 32 votes; Joseph Carr, 4; Nathaniel Burrill, 1.

The First Congregational Society occupied the Court-house as a place of worship for the first time in the summer of 1813. Its first meetings were in the Hadlock House, which stands in the northerly angle of York and Exchange streets. It was in a store-room of this building that Deacon Boyd, Deacon Adams, and Miss Martha Allen, at the instance of Mrs. Jacob McGaw, commenced the first Sabbath-school in town, early in the summer of 1814. The number of scholars at first was eight or nine. Deacon Adams was Superintendent, and, with others, continued the school there until the autumn of 1815.†

But Mr. Loomis was ordained in Union Hall. The pulpit was a table with a chair. The seats were of rough plank. Notwithstanding the ardor with which the town

* Williamson's History of Maine, II., 660.

*Sermon on the Religious History of Bangor.

†Autobiography of Eliashib Adams, 63.

Hon. George W. Ladd

commenced making arrangements for putting it in a proper condition for public worship, there was a sudden abatement of zeal in the people. But during nearly two years the society worshipped in it as fervently and sincerely, no doubt, as it ever did afterwards in a more elegant house. The attendance on Mr. Loomis's ministrations, in good weather, numbered from one hundred and fifty to two hundred. Mr. Leavitt says that this year (1815) there appeared to be "a general awakening and a serious attention to religion" in the society, and expressed the wish that it might "prove sincere and effectual to the conversion of many, nay all."

On the 13th of April Charles Hammond died. He had been an enterprising and prominent citizen. Was born in Newton, Massachusetts, September 6, 1779, and was a brother of William Hammond. He purchased lot No. 70, Holland's plan, which extended from the stream at a point nearly opposite the head of Mercantile Row to the north of Thomas's Hill, and included the City Hall lot, being bounded on its easterly side by the Kenduskeag. The City Hall lot proper he contracted to sell to proprietors. It was divided into sixty shares, which were not all conveyed at the time of his death. His administrator, Moses Patten, conveyed several of them afterward under a special act of the Legislature. Mr. Hammond was captain of the Bangor Artillery Company, which he was instrumental in raising, and held several offices of trust in town. He left a widow, who afterward became the wife of Caleb C. Billings. Mr. Leavitt, in recording his death, added: "The brightest ornament we have in point of talent and usefulness."

A quarrel commenced in the early part of the season between two of the leading men of the town in relation to some brandy of which they were joint proprietors. It was stored in the cellar of one of them, and when they were making arrangements for a division the other charged the "one" with watering it, which was denied. The quarrel grew bitter. The "one" pulled the nose of the other, whereupon the other procured an indictment against the "one" for watering the brandy. The case was tried before the Court of Common Pleas in April. After a long examination, the testimony being insufficient, the "one" was acquitted. Both the parties, with their families, being of the first respectability, there was much excitement among them, as well as interest in the community. A brother-in-law of the "one" called the other a rascal and names of similar import not agreeable to him, and the latter being a man of deliberation, determination, and some vindictiveness, proceeded to get his revenge within the pale of the law for the slander, and recovered $500 of the brother-in-law. This, however, he offered to remit if an apology were made. This was refused, and the father of the mulcted person paid it. Mr. Leavitt says of the original parties, the one is "of high standing in point of property, and so in the opinion of many who have dealt much with him;" the other "is of unexceptionable character in point of honesty. Both my friends."

This year there was organized, by the Tythingmen, an association for bettering the morals of the town, called "The Bangor Moral Society and Tythingmen," which proceeded to business. Deacon William Boyd was its President. The object was to enforce the "laws against vice, and more particularly against profane swearing and Sabbath-breaking." The members were zealous. They patrolled the streets on Sunday to see that it was not profaned by unnecessary perambulation, and it is said "reprimanded, among others, citizens who happened to be abroad, that were as much opposed to the violation of the Sabbath as themselves." The perversity of man was manifested now, as usual when there is an undue attempt to enforce sumptuary laws, "the old offenders renewed their old practices," boys were slyly coasting upon their sleds and skating during public worship, while the older irreverent class looked on approvingly.

In this year an enterprise was commenced in Bangor which has never been discontinued, and which has been of more benefit to its citizens in many respects than any other. On the 25th of November Peter Edes issued from his printing-office the first number of the first newspaper that was ever published in Bangor, called Bangor Weekly Register. Mr. Edes was the son of Benjamin Edes, a newspaper publisher and printer in Boston. He had published successfully the Kennebec Intelligencer, Gazette and Herald of Liberty, in Augusta, since 1795, at a loss; and with the hope of better success in the new town upon the Penobscot, which was becoming known, he made up his mind to remove thither. He employed Mr. Ephraim Ballard, with his team of six oxen, to remove his press and types, which weighed about four tons. The roads were next to impassable, but in the course of three weeks the four tons of material were taken to Bangor at an expense of $143. The Kennebec bridge was so frail a structure that the whole could not be taken over at one time.*

The population of Bangor at this period was about one thousand. Mr. Edes had reason to believe that his paper would meet with reasonable encouragement. He was an ardent Federalist, and had been threatened with personal violence on account of his sometime exhibitions of fervor. Experience had convinced him that it would be better to pursue a more conciliatory course in his new location; he therefore made his paper the organ of no party. As Mr. Edes was a printer and publisher merely, and unable to employ what is now so important to a newspaper, an editor, his editorials were few and far between. But there were persons in the town who assisted him by their contributions. The separation of Maine from Massachusetts had been long agitated; and now its friends, having an opportunity to express their views, used the columns of the Register very freely. But Mr. Edes did not meet with the encouragement he anticipated. He expected subscribers in Buckstown, Castine, and Belfast, but the people of these places had begun to foster feelings of jealousy towards the upstart town away up at the head of the tide that thought itself equal to a newspaper, and they were not disposed to lend it any assistance. About two years' experience with the Register was sufficient for Mr. Edes. He then disposed of the establishment to James Burton, Jr., from Augusta. In taking leave of his patrons he said that, although he had occasionally appeared to complain of want of patronage and punctuality, yet he felt a pleasure in acknowledging "that for such a period of profound peace and tranquillity throughout the world, the paper had received a decent support." Mr. Burton wanted seventy-five new subscribers to enable him to renew the publication of the Register. Subscription papers were left with Messrs. Williamson, Dutton & Hill, and Hill & McLaughlin, and Mr. Burton was enabled to renew the publication of the paper December 25, 1817. Mr. Edes took up his connection with it on the 23d of August previous.

* North's History of Augusta, 385.

Mr. Edes was small in stature, industrious, possessed of energy, and was much respected in Bangor. He continued the fashion of small clothes and long stockings pretty late, and having thin legs and being unused to artificial calves, the fashion was not altogether becoming to him. His residence in Bangor being during the Tythingmen's reformatory era, he had some experiences which were not agreeable. James Orrock, his apprentice, was one of the Sabbath-breaking boys, and became the subject of legal discipline. Mr. Edes in a letter says: "You must know the people are very strict on this day, and will not let men walk out, much less boys. James was strolling about and was ordered home by the tythingmen, but he would not obey them. A complaint was lodged against me on the next day, and I should have been obliged to pay a fine had not Judge Dutton pleaded in my behalf that I did not approve of such conduct, and so got clear." Mr. Edes afterwards resided in Baltimore, Maryland, with Benjamin Edes, his son. He spent his last days in Bangor, however, with his daughters, Mrs. Rider and Mrs. Michael Sargent. He died March 29, 1840, at the age of eighty-three.

Some of the fugacious Hampden multitude, mortified by the reproach that was cast upon them for the result of the "Hampden Battle" (which no one, acquainted with the quality and equipment of the three or four hundred raw militiamen got together there to oppose the war-worn British regulars, could have expected to be otherwise), earnest for a scapegoat to bear the whole stigma of the catastrophe, procured a Court of Inquiry, to determine whether a Court-martial should not declare the commanding General, John Blake, to be the one. Accordingly on May 15, 1815, orders were issued by Governor Strong for such Court of Inquiry. The result will be found in the following papers:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. GENERAL ORDERS—
HEADQUARTERS, BOSTON, January 8, 1816. }

The Court of Inquiry, whereof Major-General Henry Sewall is President, appointed by the Orders of 15th day of May last, to examine into the grounds of a complaint exhibited against Brigadier-General John Blake, of the First Brigade and Tenth Division of the militia, by Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Grant and sundry other officers of the Third Regiment of said Brigade, having assembled at Bangor, conformably to said orders, and having deliberately and carefully examined into the grounds of complaint, and the evidence adduced in support thereof, as well as that which was adduced to rebut the same, and also the written defense and replication, which are made part of the record of the case, has reported to his Excellency, the Commander-in-chief, as the opinion of the Court, which opinion he approves, "that the charges do not appear to be so far supported as to render a reference of them to a Court Martial expedient or proper."

The Court of Inquiry, of which Major-General Sewall is President is dissolved. By his Excellency's command.

J. BROOKS, Adjutant General.

There was much delay in making known the conclusion to which the Court had arrived, but at length the following communication reached General Blake with the foregoing orders:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, BOSTON, Jan. 10, 1816.

SIR: I have the satisfaction now to forward to you the result of the Court of Inquiry appointed by the orders of the 15th of May last; at the same time regretting that any circumstances should have occurred to occasion so tedious a delay in the publication of that result. By a communication I have received from Major Wilson, the Judge Advocate of the 6th Division, I learn that the delay was accidental and not to be avoided. I transmit to you at the same time thirty copies of the Orders for distribution in the 10th Division, intending that every field officer and the Judge Advocate should receive one each.

I am, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

Brigadier-General John Blake.

J. BROOKS, Adj. Gen.

A court-martial, consisting of Major-General Alfred Richardson, President, two Brigadier-Generals, four Colonels, and six Majors, with John Wilson, Esq., as Judge Advocate, and Major A. W. Atherton (aid de-camp of General Richardson), Marshal, assembled for the trial of Colonel Andrew Grant, of Hampden, and Major Joshua Chamberlain, of Brewer (grandfather of General Joshua L. Chamberlain, late Governor), of the Third Regiment, First Brigade, Tenth Division, for offenses alleged to have been committed in presence of the enemy at Hampden, in September, 1814, and adjourned finally April 9. Major Chamberlain was honorably acquitted.

1816. Joseph Leavitt was chosen Town Clerk this year, in place of Mr. James Bartlett, his copartner in business, whose records show him to have been a well-qualified scribe. The Selectmen of the last year were all popular enough to gain a re-election. Thomas A. Hill was made Treasurer, and Rev. Harvey Loomis, Joseph Leavitt, Allen Gilman, and Joseph Carr, Superintending School Committee. The Tythingmen were reduced to fifteen, and the Hog-reeves increased to that number, "indicating a growing sentiment more favorable to anthropomorphous, and less favorable to pachydermatous, offenders." The appropriations were, for schools $1,200, for highways $1,200, for the Bridge Company $250, for Mr. Loomis's salary $800, and $600 for the support of the poor. This is the first sum ever directly raised for the poor in Bangor.

The votes for Governor were for John Brooks, 73; Samuel Dexter, 50; William King, 1.

The votes for Register of Deeds were, for John Wilkins, 42; Charles Rice, 40. For Representative to the Legislature Robert Parker 61 votes, and was elected.

The town voted this year to pay the Assessors two dollars a day each for their services.

On April 1 the shore road from Mt. Hope to William Thompson's, and the continuance of Broad street to a pine-tree near the ferry-way, laid out September 30, 1808, were accepted.

On May 20 the town voted on the question of the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, 66 yeas, 29 nays; Hampden, 43 yeas, 32 nays; Brewer, 36 yeas, 7 nays.

The people of Bangor were proud of their fire-engine.

It was a little tub, but effective, and was housed in a fifteen by twenty-foot building, painted yellow, which stood at the corner of State and Exchange streets, near the easterly corner of the Kenduskeag bridge. In its latter days it was known as the "Old Settler." On the 1st of May the Engine Company held their annual meeting at the Hatch Tavern, and with the Selectmen and other invited guests partook of a dinner in the great Hall. "The greatest unanimity and harmony prevailed, and nothing occurred to mar the pleasures of the day;" and this sentiment, with others, was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm: "Ourselves; should any member of our company take fire, we'll quick put him out!"

On May 7 the President of "The Bangor Moral Society and Tythingmen," Deacon Boyd, gave notice that the society had made its annual election of officers and entered into arrangements for enforcing the laws against vice, and more particularly those against profane swearing and Sabbath-breaking, and that they would be faithfully and duly executed the ensuing year, and that the society congratulated the friends of good order and morality on the favorable change effected by the successful exertions of last year.

This pronouncement of the society had a different effect from that anticipated. The opposers of the movement came to another conclusion from that announced by the President. They alleged that the course pursued by the society had had an effect detrimental to the cause of morals; that, prior to the erection of a house for public worship in 1812, the appearance of the village on Sunday was really degrading; disorderly boys and other persons were seen at all times of the day assembled in groups in direct violation of the Sabbath; but from that time, like terrapins, they had drawn themselves into their shells on that day, and until this new movement its observance was regarded; but now the old offenders had returned to their old practices, and the disregard of the day was becoming as bad as before. Some wag travestied Deacon Boyd's notice in the following lines:—

PARAPHRASE.

Tune: "Plunged in a Gulph."

"O, procul este profani."

"Keep off, you race of infidels, we pious people are."

The Bangor Club of moral folks,
And eke the Tythingmen,
Of officers our annual choice
This day have made again.

We'll have them quickly quorum nob,
And (if we do not fail)
Our chest shall profit by the job,
Or they must go to gaol.

For last year's labor and success,
(Which we think very great),
Our orderly and moral friends
We do congratulate.

This privilege alone we claim,
On Sabbath day to roam;
While others of less pious fame
Must keep themselves at home.

The friends of good morals at length became satisfied that their cause suffered from the undue zeal manifested in its behalf, and discontinued the enforcement of the laws further than it could be sustained by the public sentiment.

The Bangor Athenæum was opened this season. It was a library and reading-room. The collection of books was quite valuable; the magazines were the best of the time, and twenty-five newspapers furnished the news to the patrons of the institution. Mr. Joseph Whipple, a gentleman of taste and literary ability, who about this time commenced the publication of a History of Acadia in the columns of the Register, was instrumental in its establishment.

The season was remarkable for the low state of the thermometer, etc. In June the cold was severe. A very unusual change in the temperature occurred early in that month. A warm rain commenced on the 5th and continued until the afternoon of the 6th. The night was quite warm. At 3 o'clock the weather had changed, and snow fell for about an hour and a half; some of the flakes on striking the ground covered spaces two inches in diameter. It snowed again in some places on the 7th and 8th. Water froze for several nights, and on the 10th the ice over puddles would bear a man. Great numbers of birds—among which were the humming bird, the yellow bird, the marten, the scarlet bird—were so benumbed that they could be taken readily in the hand, and many perished.

On the night of June 13, the community was thrown into a state of excitement by the murder of William Knight, of the firm of Knight & Lumbert, keepers of the inn at the corner of Oak and Hancock streets, by Peol Susep, an Indian of the Penobscot tribe. With another Indian Peol had been in the house, and both had been so noisy and troublesome from the excitement of drink that Knight put them into the street. Upon this they threw stones at the house, and Knight went out to drive them away; Peol then attacked him with a knife and stabbed him fatally. Peol admitted the stabbing, but gave as a reason that he was intoxicated. He had the reputation of being inoffensive when sober.

As there was no jail yet in Bangor, and the Supreme Court was still to hold its sessions at Castine for both Hancock and Penobscot counties for several years, Susep was taken to the jail in Castine, and tried in June, 1817. Great interest was manifested in this trial, and the crowd in attendance was so great that the court adjourned to the meeting-house.

The court assigned Prentiss Mellen and William D. Williamson as counsel for the prisoner, and these gentlemen used all their skill and eloquence in his behalf, and Solicitor-General Davis summed up in behalf of the State. After the arguments were concluded, the court gave the prisoner an opportunity to be heard if he had anything further to say. He replied that John Neptune would say something for him.

Neptune, who was afterward Lieutenant-Governor of the tribe, was a tall, fine-looking individual, of dignified bearing, of much ability, and of much influence among his tribe. A reporter of the case says, "he came forward to the forum with the ease and assurance of a Cicero," and addressed the court in an impressive manner. He claimed immunity for the prisoner on the ground that several white men, who had murdered Indians, had escaped punishment, and referred particularly to the case of one Livermore, who had been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of an Indian, and whose sentence had been commuted to imprisonment for life—that he and his people were willing that Livermore should be released if Susep could be discharged. He then urged the importance of there being peaceful relations between the whites and Indians, and averred that it was the sincere wish of his own tribe, and of the Passamaquoddy and St. John Indians to live on good terms with the Americans.

Susep's wife and relatives and about thirty of the tribe were present during the trial and "behaved with the utmost decorum."

The jury retired, and in a short time returned and rendered a verdict of manslaughter, whereupon the court sentenced the prisoner to one year imprisonment in the county jail.

In September, 1819, more than two years after this conviction, Peol Susep was indicted for a felonious assault on the prison-keeper. The jury returned a verdict that he was insane, and the court ordered him to be imprisoned, under a statute, until he should give bond for good behavior!

Notwithstanding the coldness of the season, and the disposition of the people to remove to Ohio, there was much advertising, by the most respectable traders, of fourth-proof cognac brandy, Holland gin, Jamaica rum, St. Croix rum, Teneriffe wine, best London porter, shrub and loaf sugar, and some manifestations of humor. Mr. Tilley Brown advertised real estate in this style:

The numerous individuals who for want of house-room are under the necessity of taking their repose in a perpendicular attitude, or at heads and points, or, at best, with one foot out of the window, are informed that a house is to be sold for part song and part cedar shingles, and at a reduced price. It would be strange indeed if some of the multitude did not make themselves cripples in their exertions to be first on the premises.

But there were philanthropic ladies then in the town, as there are now, whose sympathies went out to the poor and unfortunate. In July they met at Mr. Philip Coombs's to organize a society "for the instruction of the children in the new settlements by means of schools."

Prior to July 20th of this year, it was the practice of the inhabitants on the shores of the river from twelve to eighteen miles below Bangor to board vessels ascending the river and warn the masters of the danger attending the navigation above. This led to a survey of the river by two shipmasters and a merchant—competent persons—and they reported twenty-one feet at low water off Dutton's Head, on the west side of the river. Thence to India Point (between Central Depot and the Kenduskeag Stream, the water fell in the channel to fourteen feet at lowest ebb, the channel being narrow and not very direct. On the easterly side of the river, above Dutton's Head, is a shoal with from five to nine feet of water at low ebb. Opposite India Point, the depth is seventeen or eighteen feet in the channel; thence parallel with India street (Joppa, now Front street), it is twenty to twenty-one feet at lowest ebb, about twenty fathoms from the shore, and seventeen to twenty-one feet, to three hundred fathoms above Kenduskeag Point. The bottom of the river is in most places rocky. There is an eddy under the High Head on the Brewer side, about one hundred fathoms above Kenduskeag Point, where in one place is twenty-eight feet at low water, and the bed is an excellent sandy bottom, and several ships of from five hundred to seven hundred tons' burthen, loaded, may lie afloat at low water.

On the first Tuesday of July the first session of the Court of Common Pleas was held in Bangor under the act incorporating the county of Penobscot passed February 15, 1816. Bangor had been made a half-shire town with Castine, February 28, 1814, and an office for the Registry of Deeds in the northern half of the county had existed there since that time.

The act incorporating the new county went into operation on April 1, 1816, with the following officers, appointed by the Governor: Samuel E. Dutton, Bangor, Judge of Probate; Allen Gilman, Bangor, Register of Probate; Jacob McGaw, Bangor, County Attorney; Thomas Cobb, Bangor, Clerk of the Courts; Jedidiah Herrick, Hampden, Sheriff.

John Wilkins was elected Register of Deeds. There were only two towns in the county that made legal returns, Corinth and Levant. Mr. Wilkins was elected by twenty-six votes over Charles Rice, who had eight votes, by the legal returns.

Zadock Davis, a tanner, lived at the end of the street called Joppa, and for a great number of years was honored by his fellow-townsmen with the office of keeper of the pound, which was directly opposite his establishment, and convenient for him to look after. It was situated on the river side of Main street, near the brook which runs under the Maine Central depot. And to Mr. Davis the great men of the town had frequently to resort and pay tribute for the trespass of a horse, cow, or other animal. They always found him urbane and gentle, therefore he was a popular office-holder. He it was who after the Hampden battle voluntarily performed good service for his company in hiding the guns in the woods after the famous retreat, and, involuntarily, a like good service to the enemy in revealing to them their place of concealment. But the enemy patronized him—for he was a shoe-manufacturer, as well as a tinner, and they wanted shoes. Some came, got fitted, and marched off triumphantly, forgetting to pay; others, more considerate, paid him any price he saw fit to put upon his wares; and on the whole he was the better off for the custom. He probably fared quite as well with them as he did with his regular customers, many of whom had as poor memories as the non-paying Britons. But he had a way of demanding payment of these, which was effective and not offensive. The Register was a convenient vehicle for his duns, and in this way did he use it:

IF THE COAT SUITS, PUT IT ON.

To such as promise and don't pay,
But forfeit promise-keeping,
I have a word or two to say,

And then I must send GREETING,

Unless these lines soon take effect
And bring you to your bearing,
And each one comes and pays his debt,
And shuns the storm preparing.

And now if you'll take my advice,
You'll have it cheap as dirt, sirs;
You'll pay me promptly, if you're wise,
And then you shan't be hurt, sirs.

Else there'll be trouble in the camp
For each delinquent debtor;
Now, dear sirs, do not act the scamp,
But pay, for that is better.

ZADOCK DAVIS.

BANGOR, August 7, 1816.

Bangor was resorted to for lumber this year from the East as well as from the West. In the three weeks next preceding August 17th, thirteen large vessels sailed from the port for Lubec with cargoes of lumber. Several others sailed shortly afterwards.

Some enterprising person, deeming that packeting from Bangor would be profitable, built a packet sloop which he called the Herald, to put into the business. It was launched August 13th, and was sailed by Captain John Perkins.

On August 23d Joshua P. Dickinson established himself in Bangor, and practiced in the families of the Congregational Society, whose meetings he attended. The practice was divided between him and Dr. Rich, who had been established in the town since 1806, and gave more attention to his business than to the ordinances of the church; therefore, on the arrival of the more complaisant physician, many left the old and employed the new one. The effect was as is usual in such cases.

The Sunday-school, which was commenced in 1814, with eight scholars, had now an attendance of from seventy to eighty. "A worthy young gentleman and three pious and accomplished young ladies," were the teachers. Three or four classes were taught in separate apartments in the same building. The school was in session an hour and a half after the church service in the afternoon. The pupils were examined as to their knowledge of the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Westminster Catechism, and taught lessons from the Scriptures. Each child was expected to repeat religious poetry—generally from Dr. Watts. The class containing the more advanced members were questioned in reference to a particular chapter of the Bible which the Superintendent had designated on the preceding Sunday for reading in the week. He explained the difficult passages and closed the session with prayer. It was said of this school that it had "already become the source of much good, and gave assurance of invaluable usefulness."

On August 19 Captain Isaac Hatch died, at the age of fifty-one. He built the Hatch tavern on Main street in 1801, and had a store at the foot of Water street, which was afterward occupied by Perkins and Parker. Mr. Hatch's tavern was for several years the principal inn of the place. Besides carrying this on he gave his attention somewhat to trade, and consequently had dealings in lumber. It was then the practice to send lumber to Boston for a market, and as purchasers were sought they had their own way in regard to the survey. If a cargo of merchantable lumber was shipped from Bangor, under the manipulation of the Boston Surveyor a considerable portion of it turned out to be refuse, a lower grade, and the price was regulated accordingly. Mr. Hatch had once a customer who wished him to ship to him at Boston some merchantable lumber at a certain price. As he had patronized the Captain's inn the Captain agreed to do so, and was disposed to take pains to send him as good a quality of lumber for the price as he could afford. He went to Boston and was there when the cargo arrived, and found that lumber had advanced in value. The purchaser put his surveyor upon the cargo, who set aside about half of it as "refuse." In a different state of the market the Captain might have objected, but as it was he said nothing. After the different qualities were separated, and the customer had computed his indebtedness for the merchantable lumber, he said to Mr. Hatch that they would have the refuse surveyed. Mr. Hatch demurred. The customer insisted. Mr. Hatch said he had furnished him with the merchantable lumber as he had agreed; that he had not agreed to furnish him with refuse. He would take charge of that. He did so, and obtained more for it per thousand than he had for the merchantable!

The Selectmen were instructed that year to petition the Legislature to obtain the enactment of a law securing all the fishing privileges in Bangor to the town.

The petition for the separation of the District from Massachusetts resulted in a reference of the question by the Legislature to the people who were to hold meetings upon the 20th of May to vote upon it. The whole number of votes in the District was 37,328. Only 16,894—not half—voted. There were 10,393 yeas to 6,501 nays. Notwithstanding the people were so indifferent to the matter, the Maine Senators and most of the Representatives procured the passage of an act on the 20th of June, directing meetings to be held throughout the District on the first Monday of September to vote on the question, "Is it expedient that the District of Maine be separated from Massachusetts and become an independent State?" and delegates were to be chosen, equal in number to the Representatives, to meet at Brunswick on the last Monday of September to determine if a majority of five to four of the votes returned were in favor of the separation.

The delegate elected in Bangor was Joseph Leavitt. He received 53 votes; William D. Williamson, 22; Allen Gilman, 18; Moses Patten, 10; Jacob McGaw, 1; Amos Patten, 1.

The number of delegates elected at the Convention was 185. If they found that the legal majority of votes was in the affirmative, they were authorized to form a Constitution. Two-thirds of the delegates were favorable to the separation. The votes cast were 10,969 yeas, 10,347 nays. The committee of the Convention reported that "the whole aggregate majority of yeas over the nays, in the towns and plantations in favor, was 6,031; the whole aggregate of nays over the yeas, in the towns and plantations, opposed was 4,409; then as five is to four so is 6,031 to 4,825 ; but the majority of nays is 4,409 only." The Convention accepted the report, appointed one committee to draft a constitution and another to apply to Congress for admission into the Union as a State, and adjourned to the third Tuesday of December.

Mr. Leavitt was appointed a member of the Committee on the Constitution, but his services were not required. The Legislature's arithmetic was different from that of the Convention. They did not see that as "five is to four, so is 11,969 to 10,357," but declared that the convention had misconstrued the act, and dissolved it. Our delegate thus expressed his disappointment: "Thus by much artful management of the officers and I think unfair and improper measures, and by help of the strong arm of the Government, the high, important, and beneficial question is put at rest—but, I hope, but for a short time."

The question had been discussed at length in the Register and in other papers in the State, with considerable vigor, not to say acrimony. But the question of separation was known to be only one of time.

The vote of Bangor for Representative to Congress this year was: For John Wilson, 39; Martin Kinsley, 17; Jacob McGaw, Francis Carr, and Martin, each one vote.

Mr. Kinsley was the Republican candidate, nominated on October 16 by a convention held at Tobey's tavern, in Frankfort, in pursuance of the first call for a Republican or Democratic convention that ever appeared in a newspaper in the county of Penobscot. It was in the Register of September 21st.

Moses Greenleaf, of Williamsburg, first published his map of Maine this year.

A singular phenomenon occurred in October. The water in the Penobscot River, and in springs and wells in various parts of the town, was salt for several weeks. It was conjectured that the water contained one-sixteenth saline matter. The saltiness of the water in the river was easily accounted for, if there was an unusual drought. That of the water in the springs and wells is more incomprehensible. The Register said that such a circumstance was "never before known to the oldest inhabitant."

Much attention was given to military affairs in these days, and a militia organization was deemed as important throughout the State as it is now in Massachusetts. But there were people who possessed ideas upon the subject "in advance of the times," and in expressing them sometimes permitted their zeal to get the better of their discretion.

In October a preacher of the Methodist persuasion was addressing a congregation in a school-house in Levant (now Kenduskeag) on Sunday, and Colonel Trafton, who the day before (12th) had been reviewing a battalion of his regiment in Charleston, being on his return to Bangor in company with the field officers, they manifested their regard for religious observances and the Lord's day by attending the meeting in costume. As may be supposed, the attention of a large part of the congregation was diverted from the preacher to the military strangers, who presently found themselves shocked by a little diversion of the preacher himself in their direction, as they imagined. He warned his hearers against "the evil consequences and the dangerous tendency of those military appearances and badges of military distinction that were then present in their view." After the service, one of the visitors "insulted the minister with his conversation, and then went off without any person making him any answer." However, he had revenge, for he preached the preacher a long sermon in the Register, though it was not quite as impressive as it would have been if the result of the Hampden battle had been different, and he had had before him a poor, war-worn soldier who had been wounded by the shafts of the enemy."

A brief history of the first ununiformed militia of Bangor is embraced in the following paragraph:—

After the commencement of the Revolution, the first organized militia—a company of infantry—on June 11, 1776, elected Thomas Campbell its first captain. In 1779 he removed to Brunswick, and came to Brewer in 1783. In 1785 or 1786, Robert Treat was elected captain in place of Campbell, removed. Before he took command of the company he was elected Major, and James Budge was elected captain. He was honorably discharged by Governor John Hancock, at his own request, and on January 1, 1794. Benjamin Smith was elected to the vacancy. Captain Smith removed to Salem; and, several plantations having been annexed to the Bangor military district, Captain Edward Wilkins, of New Charleston, was elected captain. Captain Elisha Mayhew succeeded Wilkins, October 21, 1805, who was honorably discharged. Captain Mayhew was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel. On April 29, 1811, Josiah Barker, of Exeter, was elected captain, and commanded the company in 1816. A later company of infantry was organized in Bangor, and Timothy Crosby was elected its captain. Captain Crosby was promoted to Major.

A cause of much excitement in Bangor this year was the reported robbery of Elijah P. Goodrich. He had resided in Danvers, Massachusetts, and removed to Bangor, where he opened a country store. In December he made a visit to Boston, ostensibly for the purpose of purchasing goods, and on his way procured $1,700 in gold from the Exeter Bank. On the 19th of December, about 9 o'clock in the evening, he passed the chain bridge at Newburyport. About an hour afterward he returned to the toll-house and reported that he had been robbed of his money by three men; that one of them seized his horse and another demanded his money, which he promised to deliver. He then opened his portmanteau and took therefrom a pistol to shoot the robber, but the robber had a pistol at his breast; that he struck it aside, and, the robber discharging it, its contents went through his hand; that he was then dragged into an adjoining field, his handkerchief was stuffed into his mouth, and he was struck several blows. He was then robbed, and the robbers disappeared. Having obtained assistance at the bridge, he attempted to return to the place of the robbery, but, fainting on the way, he was taken back to the bridge. After recovering, he accompanied the men with a lantern to the place, and found his portmanteau, letters, papers, watch, $50 in bills upon the ground, and a letter containing money which a friend in Bangor had sent by him.

Three men were arrested for the robbery, taken before a magistrate and discharged for want of evidence. Levi and Laban Kenniston were afterwards arrested in Newmarket, New Hampshire. They were both in Newburyport on the day of the occurrence, and Goodrich, pretending to have reason therefor, caused their father's house, where they lived, to be searched. The result of this search was the discovery of two doubloons with Goodrich's mark on them, in a pork barrel in the cellar; another in their father's pantaloons pocket, which were hanging up; and a bank-bill in a drawer, with a name which had been written upon it by Mr. Goodrich. The Kennistons were committed and tried at Ipswich in April. They were defended by Daniel Webster and Samuel L. Knapp, and after a trial of two days were acquitted. Solicitor-General Davis conducted the prosecution.

Goodrich wrote to a friend in Bangor in April, saying that he had traced one of the robbers to New York, and finding a part of his money and papers upon him, had caused his arrest; that the fellow "defended himself most manfully, and one of the Marshals of the city received a severe wound in arresting him."

The belief arose and gained ground that this was a case of self-robbery, and that Goodrich's motives were best known to himself, though pretty well understood by others. He returned to Bangor and put into his store a new stock of goods. He continued for a while to do business, but finally failed and went to Norfolk, Virginia.

This year Joseph Carr was appointed Inspector of the Revenue for the Port of Bangor. John Wilkins was appointed Collector of the United States of the direct tax of 1816, and of the arrearages of the taxes of 1798.

Mr. Leavitt launched the schooner America in September. In October, on her first voyage to Boston, she got caught in the ice and was cut out for about three miles at Hampden. The weather was very cold this month, but the last two weeks of December were as warm and pleasant as April.

CHAPTER X.

Political Parties—Military—Mr. Loomis—Affair of the Singers—Opposition—Proposal for two Parishes—Not Agreed to—Gaul Built—Hessian Fly—Bangor Bank Organized—James Burton takes the "Register"—Agriculture Reviving.

1817. The name of Federalist had been for many years applied to the party opposed to the Administration, and that of Republican or Democrat to the party that sustained it. A writer in the Register of January 27, 1816, said that they were terms of reproach. "With one is very often associated the idea of Tory and British politics, and with the other disorganization and French politics." Doubtless each party entertained these views of each other, and as there were few persons who did not belong either to the one party or the other, the feeling of reproach did not extend beyond the limits of the party that harbored it. The political parties did not permit their regard for the welfare of the country to slumber, or their virulence towards each other to abate. The Republicans nominated William D. Williamson as their candidate for Senator. The Federal Republicans nominated Jacob McGaw.

The military organizations were still active. Captain Jona. Haskins, of Hampden, of the cavalry, and Captain David J. Bent, of Bangor, of the artillery, were elected Majors.

Personally attractive as Mr. Loomis was, it was too much to expect that, among such a promiscuous population as existed in Bangor, he could be popular with all, or that he could altogether avoid giving offense. In the Court House where he held his meetings there was a gallery opposite his desk, and seats were provided for a choir. Among the singers were some of the leading young gentlemen of the town; all of whom subsequently held offices of trust. One at least became Mayor of the city; others Representatives to the Legislature, and attained to other important positions. On one Sunday, the heat being oppressive, these gentlemen, as is not uncommon with singers in a choir, after their great efforts in helping the devotions along as far as the sermon, placed themselves in comfortable positions for taking in the eloquent periods of the speaker, but, unfortunately, went to sleep, and continued in a happy state of oblivion until aroused by a reproving remark which the divine—whose forbearance had been too long taxed—directed towards them. Their pride was touched. They left the gallery and the house; and not more than two of the number ever re-entered it when Mr. Loomis officiated, and only one of them permanently.

Much feeling grew out of the affair in the town, and it was not difficult to organize an opposition among the non-religious and others who did not sympathize with Mr. Loomis and his people in the matter of doctrine.

At the town meeting on March 10, 1817, the opposition had so much strength that the town refused to raise the customary sum for his salary; $1,200 were raised for highways; $850 for schools; $250 for the bridge company; $750 for town expenses, but nothing for preaching.

At this meeting Joseph Leavitt, Moses Patten, and Joseph Carr, were elected Selectmen; Joseph Leavitt, Town Clerk; Mr. Loomis, Allen Gilman, Joseph Carr, Joseph Leavitt, Superintending School Committee; Thomas A. Hill, Treasurer; Samuel E. Dutton, Town Agent. Mr. Joseph Leavitt was not in favor of raising Mr. Loomis's salary "in that way." But presently Messrs. Stephen S. Crosby, Joseph R. Lumbert, Newell Bean, Abner Taylor, Edmund Dole, Robert Parker, and Joseph Treat, requested Mr. Leavitt and the other Selectmen to call a meeting "to see if the inhabitants will vote to raise the present year's salary of Rev. Mr. Loomis

according to the contract made with him," to be held on April 23, at 10 of the o'clock A. M. There Messrs. Edward Sargent, Mark Trafton, John Ham, Samuel Smith, Zebulon Smith, John Harlow, Wiggins Hill, and Thomas Bradbury addressed a request to Mr. Leavitt and the other Selectmen to call a meeting of the inhabitants on April 28, at 9 o'clock A. M., to see if the town will take any measures or adopt any mode to divide said town into two ministerial or religious parishes, with metes and bounds, or otherwise, with equal rights and privileges, and appropriate money thereto," and "to see if the town will think it advisable to reconsider the vote passed at the annual meeting relative to the Rev. Mr. Loomis's salary."

The Selectmen called the meetings as requested, and the town voted at the meeting which was to be held at 10 o'clock to raise eight hundred dollars for Mr. Loomis's salary. The vote was taken by yeas and nays, and Mr. Leavitt says the salary was raised "rather by consent," etc., etc. At the 9 o'clock meeting it was voted to divide the town into two parishes, and a large committee was raised to fix upon a dividing line between the parishes, and to report at an adjourned meeting on May 5. At that meeting a report was made which the town voted not to accept, and thus ended the matter of the two parishes.

This year Joseph Carr received, for County Treasurer, 3 votes, John Wilkins 50, Thomas A. Hill 36.

For Governor, Major-General Henry Dearborn had 67 votes, John Brooks 62, Luther H. Hills 1.

For Senator and Counsellor, William D. Williamson had 61 votes, Jacob McGaw 55. Mr. Williamson was elected.

For Representative to the General Court, Joseph Treat had 76 votes, William Emerson 50, and Major Treat was elected.

At the March term of the Court of Common Pleas, Jedediah Herrick, Moses Patten, and Joseph Treat were authorized to contract for the building of a gaol of wood, well secured with iron, and one thousand dollars were appropriated for the purpose, and on April 3 they advertised for proposals for materials and building. The jail was built. It occupied a small portion of the space occupied by the present Court-house, its front being about where the front of the Court-house is. Between the jail and Hammond street stood the gaoler's house. It was a narrow two-story frame house, painted straw-color, with the front door in the center.

A short distance from the left of these buildings on entering, was a high, steep gravel hill, from which the gravel—which was excellent—was taken for the streets. The top of this hill was, perhaps, twenty feet above where Court street now is, and had a large surface which was occupied many years as a burial-ground. At the northerly end, a little west of where the city stable now is, was a brick powder-house. The view from this hill was very fine. At this time one can hardly be made to understand how great a change the little piece of territory between the Court-house, the Savary House, Hammond street, and the Kenduskeag, has undergone in fifty years.

Stephen Kimball, Thomas A. Hill, James Bartlett, Stephen S. Crosby, and Joseph Treat, having last year applied for incorporation to build a canal from Pushaw Lake to Bangor tide-waters, and a dam across the Pushaw Stream, below Dead Stream, organized on July 12 as the "Penobscot Canal Corporation." The canal is not now in existence, if it was ever built.

In July it was stated that the "Ohio fever" seemed to have received a check "by the season's pleasing prospect." But the "Hessian fly" made its appearance and created great alarm amongst the farmers, who feared that their wheat would be utterly devastated by the pest.

During the autumn of this year Messrs. Leavitt and Bartlett put up the walls and roof of the brick building on Washington street, now containing offices of the European & North American Railway, commenced it on September, and had the walls and roof completed November 1.

The French Block of three stores, at the corner of Exchange and Washington streets—now also the estate of the European & North American Railway Company—was built by Zadock French about 1808. About the same time Mr. French built on the water side of Exchange street, about half-way between Washington and Hancock streets, a long, low building which ran lengthwise toward the river, called the "Still House." It was never used as a distillery, however, and hardly for any other purpose except storing.

The Bangor bank was organized September 15, 1817. Samuel E. Dutton, Joseph Leavitt, John Barker, Eliashib Adams, and Thomas A. Hill were elected Directors unanimously. Mr. Dutton was elected President, and Mr. Adams Cashier. On October 20th the first deposit and discounts were made.

The bank had formed a connection with Ebenezer T. Andrews, John French, and Ashur Adams, of Boston, who were the owners of four hundred shares, and were jointly and severally agents of the bank, and were to keep the bills in good credit.

On December 25 Mr. James Burton, Jr., from Augusta, commenced to publish the Register. He promised to furnish the public with a good paper; that "temperate and well-written communications would not be excluded because they were of a Republican or Federal character, for the Register would entertain no political predilection for the one more than the other." It "would espouse the tranquil spirit of the age, and support the ingenuous character it had borne under the management of its former editor."

Notwithstanding the murmurings in regard to the barrenness of Maine and the inhospitableness of its climate, yet there were those who had confidence in its fruitfulness and faith as to its progress. Breadstuffs were scarce in 1810, and people feared a famine and removed to Ohio. This year, under the influence of a genial sun, the hopes of the disconsolate were revived, and they discovered that by making an effort they could obtain from the soil food sufficient for their families and to spare; that the reason of the scarcity of breadstuffs the last year "was not that wheat would not grow, but that it was not sown." Much was made of the fact that Mr. Daniel Hussey, on the Kennebec, raised sixty-four and a half bushels of wheat on an acre and twenty rods of ground. It had been a cattle yard for two summers before, was plowed in July, 1815; cross-plowed in the fall; plowed twice in the spring of 1816. Two and a half bushels of seed were put in.

CHAPTER XI.

The Register's Editorials—First Baptist Church Organized—Music—Successful Agriculture—Town Officers—State Election—River Fisheries—Haty Colson—A Charitable Work Criticised—County Officers—The Court-house—The Gaol—How a Salmon was Caught—Negotiations with the Penobscot Indians for their Lands—Solicitor Davis's Speech—Result, the British Surrender Eastport—Commissioners of the Land Office Procure a Survey of the Indian Purchase—James Irish—Andrew Strong—Anecdotes of him—Young Ladies' Academy—Military training—Trustees—Visit of Governor Brooks—Colonel Hodsdon's Enthusiasm—Canvass for Representative to Congress—Martin Kinsley—Leonard James—Kinsley Elected—The Bussey Lands—Daniel Pike and others Shipwrecked—Rev. Mr. Loomis's Sickness—His Singular Recovery—Death of James Carr—Land Speculation.

1818. Mr. Burton's editorials were few and far between in the early issues of his paper. The most important bit of news on January 1st was communicated semi-editorially by "Brewer," that the Eastern Argus announced that "Mr. Holmes had a new suit of clothes before he went to Congress!"

On the last Friday in January the First Baptist church was organized in the "John Harlow house." The members were Nathaniel Burrill, Royal Clark, John LeGro, Edward Sargent, Thomas Bradbury, Rachel Burrill, Susan R. Clark, Patience LeGro, Sarah Randall, Catharine Logan, and Sarah P. Burr. In the December previous, Rev. Isaac Case baptized, in the Kenduskeag Stream, Edward Sargent and Sarah Randall. It is believed that these were the first persons baptized by immersion in Bangor.

The people were not yet sufficiently engrossed in the severer labors of life to be averse to the harmonizing influence of music. Allen Gilman gave notice on January 6th that the Hancock Musical Society would meet on February 22d, at the dwelling-house of Rev. Jonathan Fisher, in Bluehill. William Abbott, then a leading lawyer of Castine, and perhaps Joseph Bryant, a leading merchant, and Bradford Harlow, of the same place, were promoters of it. Mr. Gilman, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Bryant, and Mr. Harlow were afterwards Mayors of Bangor.

When the fact of Mr. Daniel Hussey's success in wheat-raising became known, people who had had similar success had something to communicate in favor of the agricultural capabilities of the soil on the Penobscot. In 1817 Mr. Philip Coombs had raised in Bangor two hundred bushels of potatoes on half an acre of ground, and a squash weighing forty-nine, and a half pounds. Mr. John Ham had raised on a piece of ground twelve by fifteen feet, four bushels of onions—at the rate of 963 bushels to the acre. He sold them for $1.12½ per bushel—at the rate of $1,083 to the acre; and Mr. Tileston Snow, of Piscataquis, to excite "emulation in farming," informed the public that he had raised a hog weighing 480 pounds, which he sold in the Bangor market for $60.07. This was well for that day. But in March, 1873, when the capabilities of the hog-kine were better understood, Mr. Elhanan Garland, of Kenduskeag, sold in the Bangor market a swine twenty-six months old, which weighed before it was dressed nine hundred pounds, and measured eight and a half feet in length, girth seven feet and an inch.

At the annual meeting March 9, 1818, Joseph Leavitt, Moses Patten, and Joseph Carr were again elected Selectmen and Assessors; Thomas A. Hill, Treasurer; Samuel E. Dutton, Agent; Harvey Loomis, William D. Williamson, and Daniel Pike Superintending School Committee; $800 were raised for highways, $900 for schools, $400 for the Bridge Company, $1,400 for town expenses, $800 for Mr. Loomis's salary.

In April the votes for John Brooks for Governor were 66; for Benjamin W. Crowninshield, 59; for Jacob McGaw, for Senator, 57 votes; for William D. Williamson, 63. John Wilkins had 89 votes for County Treasurer. Amos Patten, Allen Gilman, and Jacob McGaw were appointed a committee to memorialize the Legislature in regard to the fisheries and weirs in Penobscot River, and to give instructions to the Representative respecting them. At the May meeting, called to elect a Representative to the Legislature, Mr. Amos Patten made a motion that it was inexpedient that year. The motion was negatived, and Joseph Treat received 88 votes and was elected. On November 2d the town balloted for Representative to Congress. Martin Kinsley had 35 votes, John Wilson 20, Leonard Jarvis 2.

Mr. Tileston Snow, who raised hogs "to excite emulation in farming," having been obliged to pay to Thomas A. Hill an office fee of 25 cents on one of Mr. Edes's bills, was so much aggrieved that he attempted to raise the public indignation by giving public notice that he had found to his cost that there was no reliance to be placed on the assurance given that "the fears of timid persons of being immediately put to cost were perfectly groundless."

Some good people were annoyed by children going out of the meeting and crowding around the stoves during religious services; and portable stoves were suggested as a remedy in cold weather. This, however, would not do for Hatevil Colson—called "Haty Colson"—an unfortunate man, who had been jilted by "Jenny Goldthread," and was supposed to be "love-cracked," and wandered about the country telling the young ladies of his griefs, and filling his pockets with such unwatched goods and chattels as he could readily lay his hands upon. Much of this property was stowed away in his pockets to appease hunger in his travels; but sometimes it needed heat to make it palatable. When this was the case he resorted to the place most convenient for cooking, no matter where it was. On Sunday, happening to be passing, it occurred to him that a stove in Mr. Loomis's meeting-house, which stood near the door, would enable him to get up a feast. Accordingly he went in, and it was not long before the savory smell of sausages and bacon frying reached the olfactories of the congregation. The effect upon the tythingmen, it is said, was a marvel to see.

This Haty Colson was not without wit. When the British were at Castine, in his wanderings he reached that place, and getting into the fort greatly amused the soldiers, and the officers also. Having heard of General Gosselin, he demanded to be conducted into his presence. The wags humored him, and it was announced to the General in his quarters that a person wished to see him. The General ordered that he be admitted. On entering the room, Haty approached the General and asked, quite peremptorily, if his name was Goslin. "Yes," replied the General, "that is my name. What is your wish?" "— the goose that hatched you."

The General discovered his infirmity, and being amused by him, permitted him to come and go at his pleasure. He was the terror of children, but many amusing anecdotes are remembered of him by people who are now living on his ancient vagabond route.

A controversy was started this year by an intermeddling "stranger," as he called himself, such as is not unusual in the growth of communities. The ladies of Mr. Loomis's society had formed an association to provide means by their labor for the education of young men for the ministry. This "stranger" took it upon himself to suggest—while acknowledging their object noble and praiseworthy—"the absolute and imperious necessity to do something for the poor, suffering children in this vicinity," and that instead of spending $40 or $50 as they proposed it "would not be more a deed of real charity to examine and relieve the children of their immediate vicinity!"

This aroused the champions of the ladies. They belabored "stranger" for intermeddling with matters that he did not understand, and for intimating that the ladies had expended only $40 or $50 in the education of ministers, when they had in thirteen months earned $100 for the purpose; and that the poor were neglected for this charity, when they were not "overlooked in the general regulations of the village or in the exercise of general munificence."

The controversy closed with accomplishing all that such controversies usually accomplish—the stirring up of bad blood. The Christian people of America have learned since then that men can bestow their labors and their charities for the improvement or comfort of their fellow-men as they think fit; and that, perhaps, they are as good judges of what it is proper for them to do as those who criticise them.

For the purpose of correcting an erroneous report that was circulating in the community, Professor Ashmun, of the Theological Seminary, gave public information that express provision is made in the constitution of the seminary for the gratuitous education of young men of any religious denomination, who appear to possess the requisite character and hold the essential doctrines of the Gospel.

The subject of erecting a fire-proof building for the Record offices was agitated this year, and resulted in the erection of a long narrow building of three stories on the west side of Main street, directly opposite the southerly side of West Market Square, in the lower story of which, at the right as you entered, was the Bangor Bank, at the left the Athenæum; in the second story the Registry of Deeds and of Probate, and, in the third story, offices.

There were then no buildings between the bank building and Hammond street. The Court-house fronted on West Market Square, and the ascent to it was terraced and turfed. The building was handsome for that day, and appeared well from the Square. It was approached by broad steps. After a time Mr. Thomas A. Hill commenced encroaching upon the front by erecting a block of two buildings next north of the bank. In a few years the whole front, including the passage-way to the steps, was closed, and the courts were at length accommodated elsewhere.

The jail proved not to be so strong that smart prisoners could not make their way out of it. On May 22 Thomas Delahant, an Irishman and a spinner, who for theft had been imprisoned, tried the strength of the "jug," as it was called, and found little difficulty in making his way out of it and compelling the keeper, Lynde Valentine, to offer a reward of $20 for his re-arrest. This Delahant was the first goal-breaker in the county. Many others succeeded him at different times, for that jail was rather inadequate to the purpose for which it was designed. John Dearborn, another thief, taxed Mr. Valentine's pocket, a month afterward, for another $20, by leaving the jail suddenly.

A feat performed by John Chambers was thought extraordinary. Standing upon Samuel Stone's wharf, at Brewer village, one evening in May, he observed the wake of a fish which was swimming in the river, and made up his mind to capture him. He jumped into a boat, and sculling near, thrust his hand into the water, seized the fish, and drew it into the boat. It proved to be a nice fat salmon weighing ten and a half pounds. The salmon of that day were more absent-minded than those of the present, or we should not have had this fish story.

At the last session of the Legislature a resolve was passed authorizing the Governor to appoint three Commissioners to negotiate with the Penobscot Indians for their lands. Accordingly the Governor appointed Edward H. Robbins, who had been for many years Speaker of the House, Daniel Davis, Solicitor-General, and Mark Langdon Hill, of Bath, who was many years a Senator, to carry out the intentions of the Legislature.

They met the Indians at Bangor, on the 24th of June, who were represented by their chiefs, twenty-seven in number, including their Governor, John Etienne, and Lieutenant-Governor John Neptune, and accompanied by General John Blake, the Indian agent.

The occasion was made of some notoriety by the magistrates of the town. The Free Masons had a celebration, it being St. John's day—and had the Commissioners to dine with them at Lambert's Hotel. After the dinner, agreeably to the arrangements, a procession was formed at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, consisting of the Commissioners, municipal officers, Rev. Thomas Williams, of Brewer, military officers, magistrates of the county, strangers, and citizens, and marched to the Court-house, where many ladies and gentlemen had already assembled. After the Commissioners were seated, the chiefs entered the house, accompanied by General Blake, Colonel Eben Webster, and Major Joseph Treat, and the Commissioners arose. When all were seated, Mr. Davis, on the part of the Commissioners, addressed them in these words:

Chiefs and Brothers of the Penobscot Tribe: We acknowledge the goodness of Almighty God, the Great and Good Spirit, who made both you and us, and from whom all our blessings are received, that we are permitted to meet you here this day, in peace and friendship.

And as he is this year blessing the earth with the warmth of the sun and the refreshing rain from the clouds, and giving us the prospect of great abundance for the use of man and beast, it is the duty of both you and us to praise and adore him with our whole hearts.

Then, after saying that they had nothing in view but what was for the benefit of the tribe and the best means of improving their condition in life, and desired that nothing should be agreed upon without their "free will and consent," he proceeds:

Brothers: The General Court have empowered us to agree with you for the purchase of your right to the lands and islands on Penobscot River, which you now possess, and have a right to use for hunting and fishing. We therefore ask you to tell us plainly and explicitly, whether you are willing to sell us your right to the Islands. This is the first thing that we shall ask you to tell us; and we shall wait patiently for your answer, before we make you any particular proposals.

Brothers: If you tell us that you are willing to sell your right to the lands and islands, we now declare to you, that we are authorized to give and deliver you therefore such articles as will feed and clothe you and your women and children, while you shall be hunting in the forest, and they shall be suffering in the cold and storms of winter.

He then protests their intention to deal plainly and honestly with them, and their liability to punishment by the Great Spirit, the General Court, and the Governor, if they did not, and proceeded:

Brothers: If you should agree to sell us your right to these lands and islands, and if all can agree on the terms thereof, we further declare to you, that we are authorized and commanded by the General Court to examine into your situation and condition as men. The General Court consider you as their children; for they know that you were made and are protected and governed by the same kind Parent and Benefactor as ourselves. We will therefore propose and are ready to agree upon all proper means to improve your moral and religious habits and feelings—to learn [sic] you the use of tools for the improvement and tillage of the land—for it is the express command of the Great Spirit that we shall till the ground and subdue it—to afford you the means of obtaining useful knowledge for yourselves and your children—to persuade you to live industrious and useful lives—to abstain from the use of spirituous liquors, which is the poison that has destroyed so many white men and Indians, and caused them to melt away like snow before the fire. But, above all things, to persuade you to love and obey God and his son Jesus Christ; so as that when you come to die and leave the land to your children, and your mortal bodies be buried in its bosom, you may be prepared to live forever with your good friends and fathers that have gone before you.

Lieutenant-Governor Neptune made the reply, and the public ceremonies were concluded.

The result of the conference was that the Indians released to the Commonwealth all above the territory of thirty miles on the river before released, excepting the islands in the river and four townships six miles square, two contiguous to that territory and two on each side of the Penobscot River near the mouth of the Mattawankeag, which were to remain to the tribe for occupation forever. The consideration for the release was that the Indians should have for a camping ground two acres of land in Brewer, opposite Kenduskeag Point; the employment of a suitable person to teach them husbandry; the repair of their church at Oldtown; the delivery at that place in October, yearly, of five hundred bushels of corn, fifteen barrels of flour, seven barrels of clear pork, one hogshead of molasses, one hundred yards of broad-cloth—blue and red—fifty blankets, one hundred pounds of gunpowder, four hundred pounds of shot, one hundred and fifty pounds of tobacco, six boxes of chocolate, and $50 in silver.

At the time of the execution of the deed, Mr. Robbins had some difficulty in getting it acknowledged, owing to the ignorance of the Indians. After they had made their signatures he asked them the usual question, "Do you acknowledge this to be your free act and deed?" They made no reply, but assumed an expression of imperturbable gravity. He repeated the question, and the expression became intensified. General Blake saw the difficulty at once, and turning to Mr. Robbins, said: "Oh, you don't understand them, let me try." Then taking the deed in his hand and turning to the Governor he said:

"You willing—and all the rest of the Indians willing?"
 "Oui!" was the prompt and emphatic reply.

The business being happily concluded, the Commissioner presented the tribe with a six-pounder cannon, a swivel, a box of pipes, fifty knives, six brass kettles, two hundred yards of calico, two drums, four fifes, and three hundred yards of ribbon. The transaction was ratified by the Government February 20, 1819; and the Government appropriated the annual sum of three hundred dollars for a religious teacher.

On St. John's Day Mr. William Thompson, who lived at the head of the tide, had a little surprise for the Free Masons, Commissioners, and the rest. He brought into market green peas from his garden, a gustable rarity that was not in the Boston market until five days afterward. Whether the Free Masons and Commissioners, or other persons, enjoyed them, is not remembered.

Information reached Bangor that on June 30 the British surrendered Eastport to the United States, and removed their troops to St. Andrews. General Miller, for the United States, and Colonel Sargent, for the State, received possession. The American flag was again hoisted and greeted by a national salute. Lieutenant Merchant, with American troops, took possession of the fort, and Mr. Stephen Thacher, Collector, reopened the Custom-house. There was great rejoicing among the inhabitants. When the British troops embarked they gave three cheers, accompanied by Yankee Doodle.

This year, under a law of the Commonwealth, Messrs. Edward Robbins, of Milton; Lathrop Lewis, of Gorham; and Joseph Lee, of Bucksport, were appointed "Commissioners of the Land Office." The Commissioners had the oversight and management of the State's lands in Maine, and made arrangements for the laying out and making roads, quieting settlers, and for exploring and surveying. They met at Bangor and adopted measures to be carried out under their commission, and employed General Irish, who commenced on June 27 to survey the front lots of the lands purchased of the Indians, on the east side of the river. They looked out a line for a road from Eddington to the mouth of the Passadumkeag, to connect with a road which was commenced there the year previous, directed towards the northeast boundary. They employed Andrew Strong to survey Townships One and Four into hundred-acre lots; and taking with them Joseph Treat as surveyor, Messrs. Lewis and Lee went up the river for the purpose of locating the four townships reserved by the Indians and of exploring the West Branch to its source.

These Commissioners were men who had held offices of trust and had the confidence of the people. Mr. Robbins had been Speaker ten years and Lieutenant-Governor five years, and at this time was Judge of Probate of the county of Norfolk; Colonel Lewis had been a member of the Senate, and was now Surveyor-General of the public lands, and Colonel Lee had been for several years a member of the House.

The surveyor, Mr. Strong, was a great wag, and many anecdotes are related of him. In the fall of 1826, one of his neighbors, an independent farmer, raised the frame of a large barn. Being economical as well as independent, he braved the sentiment of the barn-raisers of that day, who were accustomed to New England rum, and raised the frame on home-brewed beer, under the pretense that his temperance principles would not permit him to offer anything stronger. His neighbors were satisfied that niggardliness rather than temperance controlled his action, and they fixed on Strong, who entertained the same belief, to christen the frame, as the custom was. He did not decline, but taking the bottle and mounting the ridge-pole, he dashed off these words, and wound up with dashing the bottle:

Here is a fine frame raised on a knoll,
Put up by a poor, stungy old soul.
The work is good, the frame complete,
Raised without Rum, good men to cheat.
The Scripture says—prav think of that—
The liberal soul shall be made fat,
But deacon's souls are always lean
As soles of Stag, and twice as mean.
I don't much like this pious shaving,
Where pious self gets all the saving.
It seems so odd and devilish queer
To raise a barn on sloppy beer;
And such mean conduct can't be right,—
Therefore we'll call it Hell's Delight!

Once an old friend, whom he had not seen for years, arrived at his house after the supper hour. Finding that he had not been to supper Mr. Strong had some provided, and sat down with him at the table. The quantity of butter not being up to his ideas of hospitality, he inquired of Mrs. Strong (who did the marketing) what price she sold her butter for when in Bangor. She replied at fourteen cents a pound. Taking some pennies from his pocket and handing them to her, he said, "Mrs. Strong, we will have two cents' worth more of your butter, if you please!"

He became blind in his old age, and called in Dr. McKeese, in whom he had great confidence, for his opinion. After a thorough examination the doctor was obliged to tell him that he could give him no encouragement that he would ever recover his sight. He instantly replied: "I am glad of that—I have seen as much as I want to of this world."

An effort was made to erect a building for the Young Ladies' Academy. Mr. Williamson had interested himself much in this institution, which had recently been incorporated, and as Secretary called a meeting of the Trustees, to be held on August 21st, to determine in regard to raising funds and erecting a building. The Trustees were Messrs. Loomis (who was President), Dutton, Williams, Perham, McGaw, Carr, Barker, Bent, Patten, Williamson, Leavitt, and Dr. Dickinson. It was concluded to go on with the project, and Mr. Leavitt dug the clay for the purpose of manufacturing one hundred thousand bricks for the purpose. The school was commenced in the hall of Mr. Leavitt's brick building on the "Point." It was afterward removed to a one-story frame building that stood on Columbia street, seventy or eighty feet from Hammond street. It was a valuable school, and continued in operation for several years. The preceptors were Willard, Baldwin, Brewer, Coburn, Quimby, all learned and able teachers. Mr. Willard afterward became Judge Willard, of Troy, New York. Mr. Brewer was afterward a missionary among the Indians at Oldtown, and then in Beirut, Syria. He returned and afterward resided in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, until his death in November, 1872, at the age of seventy-eight. He was a man of great kindness of heart, and lived to do good. Mr. Quimby devoted much time to chemistry and natural philosophy. After leaving the Academy he taught one or more of the public schools in Bangor. He then went to New York, where he devoted himself to perfecting and manufacturing the lightning-rod. His business was quite extensive. During the first years of the existence of the school much interest was manifested in it, but after the decease of Mr. Loomis it began to flag, and somewhere about 1830 the Bangor Young Ladies' Academy was a thing of the past. There are many men and women of high position in society now living, who look back upon the days they spent in that school with great satisfaction.

There had been much military ardor among ambitious patriots in Bangor even after the Revolution; but the rank and file, who got neither honor nor profit from carrying a gun and marching after a drum and fife all day, took no especial pains to recollect the manual exercise from one training to another—there being for the militia usually two trainings in a year. The young men, however, were quite ready to turn out to musters in the autumn, when all the men, women, and children of the country came for miles to see the show, to eat gingerbread and pumpkin pie, and peradventure to dance a little to the tune of some old fiddler or fifer. They were willing to endure all the fatigue for the fun they were sure to get out of the thing.

Such occasions were the delight of the officers. They imagined, perhaps, that they were doing much for the country, that its future salvation would be due to their skill and to their labors in imparting military knowledge, courage, and patriotism to men who cared nothing about it. The display of these qualities by the warriors at Hampden, in the unfortunate affair there, was not calculated to encourage them that military training like that of the past would be of essential service, and when the smoke of it had cleared away and they had fully considered the matter, they felt that the military education of the people must be entered upon with new zeal, and stringent laws, thorough organization, drill, and discipline, under their own efficient supervision, would render them competent to repel the most determined invaders, if any should dare to make another attempt against the Republic. Then they had an opportunity to show their epaulettes!

The "Hampden Battle" was referred to by the officers in their address at regimental musters, to stir up the patriotism of the soldiers. At one of these musters Colonel Trafton adverted to it, and, after tendering his acknowledgments to his men for their good conduct during the day, he recommended to them to carry to their several homes the idea that "on them rested the responsibility of raising the Penobscot militia from its present unfortunate degradation."

General Blake had been appointed Major-General of the Tenth Division of Massachusetts Militia, but in 1818 he had resigned, and General Jedidiah Herrick, of Hampden, had been appointed Major-General. Colonel Trafton had been appointed Brigadier-General; Colonel Isaac Hodsdon, of Corinth, and Major Joseph Treat, of Bangor, were active officers.

It was announced in August that the Commander-in-chief, Governor John Brooks, would review the troops of this Division, and the military enthusiasm of the officers was thoroughly awakened. The Third, Fourth, and Fifth Regiments of the First Brigade were ordered to meet at Bangor for review and inspection on the 21st of September. Brigadier General Trafton being absent, the command devolved on Colonel Isaac Hodsdon, as the senior Colonel. The enthusiasm with which this officer entered upon his duties, communicated itself to the people throughout the limits of the Division, and all made preparations to witness the great military exhibition. The information was promulgated by him that in this parade there would be "thirty companies and one hundred and twenty commissioned officers under arms." And then he said the motives which would "operate to bring these troops and a vast many spectators together" were: "The military ardor of our militia in this section of the Commonwealth. Our commissioned officers are generally young, but anxious to excel, respectful in appearance, and meritorious in character. Our soldiers are freemen of the Republic, the yeomanry and mechanics of our country—men of sober lives and correct habits, and emphatically the sons of enterprise." He referred to the patriotism and valor of "our fathers" between 1660 and 1760, their vast and repeated sacrifices of life and substance in resistance of savage inroads and invasions, and to what they had done in repelling the attacks of the mother country, and then came this appeal: "No one of their worthy descendants can probably be found who would utter an excuse for non-attendance because of cost or toil. The voice of your fathers' example forbids; the glowing feelings of patriotism forbid—nay, military ardor exclaims, 'let no excuse be named.' Come, show your Captain-General that some scenes and events in this quarter during the late war are a sheer libel on the Penobscot name, and on the military and public spirit of our citizens."

Then to meet the Commander-in-chief was urged as richly worthy the attention of all, more especially the soldiery. It was a very favorable time for the interview. It was a popular affair. Every one who was exempt from bearing arms expressed a determination to attend; and finally, such an occasion "seldom happens; it may never occur again during our lives." These arguments elaborated were sent through the country until it was thoroughly aroused to the importance of seeing the General, the gaily dressed officers, the crowds of soldiery and citizens, and of hearing the noise of drums and guns and the uproar of an excited crowd.

The day fixed for the great occasion was Monday. The Governor, with Adjutant-General Sumner and Colonel Swett, were met at Dixmont at 1 o'clock on Saturday, the 19th, by the High Sheriff and county officers of Penobscot, and escorted to Township No. 2, where a number of gentlemen from Hampden joined the escort and conducted them to that place. There a dinner was provided and partaken of at the house of David Vose. At 5 o'clock a committee of arrangements and gentlemen from Bangor escorted his Excellency to that town. His arrival was announced by a salute from Captain Fitts's artillery, and in the evening many officers and gentlemen paid their respects to him. On Sunday his Excellency attended Mr. Loomis's meeting. Mr. Leavitt has this minute in his journal: "Went to meeting. Of my family, all my children, viz: seven sons and two daughters—their mother, being sick, did not attend. The Governor sat in my pew!"

It may be supposed that, with the expectation of such an unusual military display on Monday, there could not be much quiet on Sunday. Tythingmen were impotent on that day, for unavoidably the clans must be gathering.

On Monday morning a scene such as was never before upon the banks of the Penobscot, was witnessed in Bangor. In the extensive field formerly of Thomas Howard, stretching from the road to the wood, were the long columns of the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Regiments. The people had gathered and were gathering from all quarters. Drums were beating, horses were prancing, banners were waving, and the tumult and excitement of the crowd were immense.

The troops were facing the east, and conspicuous on the right were Captain Fitts's Artillery, of Bangor, and Captain William H. Reed's Light Infantry, of Hampden, in their gay uniforms. Then there were Captains Stephen Ide and Elijah P. Pike, of Frankfort; Alden Nickerson, of Orrington; Joshua Howes, of Bucksport; Allen Rogers, of Hampden; Ezra Thistle, of Monroe; Rowland Tyler, of Dixmont; Jeremiah Simpson, of Hampden; Jacob Cowan, of Hermon; and Samuel Homer, with their companies, and twenty-two subalterns, all of the Third Regiment, and under Colonel Rufus Gilmore, of Newburg; Lieutenant-Colonel Samuel Butman, of Dixmont; Major John Emery, Jr., and Adjutant Daniel Emery, of Hampden.

Next were Captains Andrew Hasey, of Bangor; Jacob Holyoke, William Copeland, Brewer; John Frees, Orono; Wright Stockwell, Eddington; John Butterfield, Sunkhaze, with their companies, all under Colonel Solomon Blake, of Brewer; Lieutenant-Colonel Lynde Valentine, Bangor; Major Eben Webster, Orono; Adjutant Thomas Treadwell, Brewer; Quartermaster Robert Harvey, Bangor; Chaplain Rev. Thomas Williams, Brewer; Surgeon Dr. Hosea Rich, Bangor.

Next were Captains Samuel Chamberlain, Foxcroft; David Laken, Stetson; Philip Greely, Garland; Levi Bradley, New Charleston; Ira Sheperdson, Exeter; Robert Carlton, Sangerville; William Stevens, Guilford; Luther Turner, No. 2; Isaac Smith, Dexter; John Shaw, Sebec; John Hunting, Corinth, with their companies, and twenty-two subalterns.

With the artillery were Captain Roswell Fitts, of Eddington; First Lieutenant George W. Brown, of Bangor; Second Lieutenant John Williams, of Bangor—all under Major David J. Bent, Adjutant Levi Crane, and Quartermaster Timothy Crosby, of Bangor.

With a company of cavalry were Captain Elisha Grant, of Hampden; First Lieutenant John Reynolds and Second Lieutenant Simon B. Harriman, of Bangor; and Cornet Lewis Barker—all under Major Jonathan Haskins, Adjutant Robert Haskins, and Quartermaster Joshua Lane, of Hampden. This company performed escort duty, and when it appeared, all eyes were strained to catch a glimpse of the distinguished visitor.

Captain Fitts's artillery announced, when he had reached the field, the arrival of his Excellency, John Brooks, Captain-General, and his suite: Major-General Jedidiah Herrick; Major William R. Ware, his aid-de-camp; Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Blake, Division Quartermaster; Acting Brigadier-General Isaac Hodsdon, Colonel Commanding; Captain Joshua Wingate Carr, Aid (to Brigadier-General Trafton, absent); Brigade Major Joseph Treat; Major Royal Clark, Brigade Quartermaster.

The Captain-General immediately proceeded to review the troops. After the review a hollow square was formed, and the chaplain (Williams) prayed.

When the officers had been presented to the Captain-General, a line was formed, and, under Colonel Hodsdon, the troops performed various evolutions very satisfactorily. After witnessing them and listening to the enthusiastic drumming and fifeing, and bugle-playing of the musicians, the volleys of musketry, the booming of cannon, and the shouts of the excited multitude, his Excellency, having been "pleased to express his highest approbation," retired. No review of this brigade ever equalled this in splendor or in the good conduct of the troops.

After the review, the Governor, with the General and aids, the brigade staff, and fifty or sixty gentlemen of "the first respectability," were entertained by a feast at Mrs. Hatch's Inn.

In the afternoon the Governor, with aids, crossed the river. On landing he was addressed by Mr. Leonard, Chairman of the Selectmen of Brewer, and replied. He then proceeded to Bucksport and Castine, reviewed the First Regiment of Infantry, and, accompanied by General Herrick and aids, visited the fort, partook of a dinner at Lukemer's, by invitation of Messrs. Abbot, Hook, Little, and Adams, then embarked for Belfast, where he reviewed the Second Regiment, after which, and the customary feast, he went to Thomaston and reviewed a regiment in Major-General King's division.

The Hancock and Penobscot Bible Society met on the 24th October, and after a sermon by Rev. Jona. Fisher, of Bluehill, took up a contribution. Much interest was felt in the distribution of the Bible. William Abbot, of Castine, was made President; Samuel E. Dutton, of Bangor, Vice-President; Rev. Mighill Blood, of Bucksport, Corresponding Secretary; Daniel Pike, of Bangor, Recording Secretary; Josiah Hook, Jr., Castine, Treasurer. A Board of fourteen Trustees was established, and eighteen agents were appointed in the counties. Felicity Lodge of Free Masons, in Bucksport, appropriated one-fifth of their fees for aiding the translating the Bible in the Asiatic languages!

The Lieutenant-Governor, two colonels, ten captains, and seven men of no rank, of the Penobscot tribe of Indians, declared that all future contracts made by any member of the tribe for the sale of timber would be void, and contracts made by John Blake, agent of the tribe, only would be respected.

A schism occurred in the Republican (Democratic) party in this Congressional District in regard to a member of Congress. Colonel Gabriel Jehonnot,* of Hamp-

*This man, although a Republican, was an aristocrat in his feelings and manners. It is said that he lost his French wife, by whom he had an only son and child, in Boston, who went to the West Indies as a companion of John Quincy Adams; that he married a second wife in Boston, and lived in such style that his fortune vanished, and that one morning after he had given a great entertainment the night before he removed to Hampden, where he took a little cottage which he occupied until he died. The farmers in his neighborhood at Hampden he considered and treated rather as serfs than as fellow-citizens, and was hated by them. When his wife called upon her friends her maid followed her at a respectful distance, after the fashion with ladies of quality in France. This maid was called by the people "Polly Johnno." The Colonel was a Free Mason, and was instrumental in establishing the "Rising Virtue Lodge," the first Masonic lodge in Bangor. His handwriting was very beautiful. Specimens of it may be seen in the records of that lodge. He became very much pinched in his means, and being an infidel, did not hesitate to express his sentiments in blasphemous terms if vexed. On one occasion his hay was frequently wet by showers in the making, and his neighbors would render him no assistance. In his extremity he sent to Simeon Stetson, Esq., for his team and help to get in his hay. They came, and while he was for the last time cocking the hay, which had been cocked and spread and wet much to its injury before, a shower den, President of a convention held at Bucksport, September 30th, published a circular saying that Hon. Martin Kinsley was nominated by a large majority as a candidate for Representative to Congress. "One of the Minority" published a circular declaring that that nomination would not have been made had there been a full representation of the Republicans of that district, that Leonard Jarvis, who at the first ballot had fifteen votes to Kinsley's ten, would doubtless have been their choice; that the District, though decidedly Republican, was represented by John Wilson, a Federalist, therefore it was impolitic to nominate a candidate whom the people would not support.

Much controversy grew out of this nomination. Jarvis was a young man; had just arrived from France; was scarcely known in the district; had been little or none in the employment of the public; was ambitious and very persistent, and had an influential family connection. On the other hand, Kinsley was a "good, respectable citizen," a firm Republican, and faithful to his country and constituents, and always a candidate for some office. The vote by which he was nominated was 23 to 11 for Jarvis. Mr. Jarvis, however, would not stand aside. It is alleged that he was brought forward by his brother, and his brother, who was as remarkable for persistency as himself, saw to it that he received a large portion of the votes of Hancock county, and that Mr. Kinsley was defeated. The Eastern Argus advocated the election of Mr. Jarvis and was thought to intermeddle with matters out of its province by the friends of Kinsley, and by the Federalists in Mr. Kinsley's district also. The votes of the district were: for Kinsley 616, for Wilson 411, for Jarvis 340, scattering 57. The first Monday in April was designated for another balloting. A committee of Republicans, consisting of Benjamin Butman, Benjamin Nourse, Daniel Greely, Isaac Hodsdon, and Ezekiel Chase, appointed by the General Convention, reported that Mr. Kinsley lacked out ninety-seven votes of an election, and suggested that scattering votes would be worse than thrown away; that Mr. Jarvis was a stranger—had resided many years in France and other parts of Europe, and had but recently taken up his residence in the district; and that they had long known Judge Kinsley as "a respectable merchant and agriculturist, and also as a member of the various branches of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Departments of the Government."

At the meeting in April Mr. Kinsley was in fact elected, but owing to informality in the returns of several of the towns whose votes were rejected, a new balloting was ordered on July 20th. Mr. Kinsley was again elected. At the November meeting Bangor gave Kinsley 35 votes, Willson 20, Jarvis 2; Hampden gave Kinsley 60 votes, Wilson 10; Orrington gave Kinsley 25 votes, Wilson 1, Jarvis 1. At the April meeting Bangor gave Kinsley 45 votes; Wilson 20, Jarvis 23; Hampden gave Kinsley 86 votes, Wilson 21; Orrington gave Kinsley all, 53 votes. At the April meeting Bangor gave Kinsley 34, Wilson 17, scattering 6; Hampden gave Kinsley 41, Wilson 7; Orrington gave Kinsley 33, scattering 16.

On October 22, 1818, Mr. Levi Cram opened a large variety store and, by dint of enterprise and advertising, obtained a large custom. Mr. Nathaniel Harlow, Jr., opened a variety and book-store. Daniel Pike opened a book-store.

Benjamin Bussey, Esq., of Roxbury, in November offered for sale forty thousand acres of settling land in Bangor, Hermon, and Newburg. That in Bangor and Hampden lay in the westerly part of those towns, between the Kenduskeag and Sowadabscook Streams.

Mr. Daniel Pike, Mr. Daniel Kimball, of Bangor, Mr. Henry Little, then of Bucksport, and Miss Rhoda Shed, of Billerica, took passage in the lumber schooner Hancock, from Penobscot for Boston. On the 29th the vessel was wrecked off Cape Ann in a northwesterly gale. The sea broke constantly over the vessel and swept off almost everything excepting the passengers and ship's company. These secured themselves upon the wreck, where they remained without food for sixty hours. They were at length rescued by Captain Lowry, of the schooner Hannah Jane. A brig went to the assistance of the Hancock immediately after the disaster, but the violence of the storm was such that it could do nothing, and night coming she was obliged to leave the unfortunate people to their fate. They were barely saved with only the clothing they had upon them.

The first snow fell on the 18th and 19th of November this year, but soon disappeared. December 8th the ground was free from snow. On the 9th sleighs were running. The river closed permanently on December 10.

Mr. Clement Bunker, a wag, gave notice from Bangor gaol that he would pay a fourth part of his debts or deliver all his property, excepting his furniture, to his creditors to be discharged from debt. It was this same "Clem Bunker," who, on being asked whose horse that was, replied: "If you want to attach it, it is old Jemerson's [or some other person's]; if you want to buy it, it is mine."

This year, several events of painful interest occurred. The cold in the winter was intense. February was one of the coldest months for forty years. The ice formed in the Bay so that there was passing upon it from Castine to Long Island, and to the opposite shore; also among the Fox Islands.

came up suddenly. Jehonnot threw down his implement, and, raising his hands, uttered such blasphemous expressions as made the bystanders shudder. He was a Justice of the Peace, and did a pettifogging business, and there being no lawyer in his vicinity he did considerable. After Mr. Godfrey established himself in Hampden Jehonnot brought a suit before Mr. Stetson, who was a magistrate. Mr. Godfrey appeared for the defendant and filed a special plea. Jehonnot said that he did not know anything about that. Mr. Stetson said that he must answer it before he could go on. He said he couldn't; and giving vent to a violent oath, threw his papers upon the table and said that the case might take care of itself, and he would have no more to do with such things. Towards the latter part of his life he became extremely reduced in circumstances. His wife was dead. He was alone; and, being ill, Mr. Stetson took him into his house and cared for him. Rev. Robert Page, a missionary, supposing he was about to die, called to see him, with the idea that he might be of service in a religious point of view. Jehonnot for a long time refused to see him. At length Mrs. Stetson prevailed upon him to admit the visitor. Colonel Jehonnot was very courteous—had a social glass with the minister, and kept up such a constant conversation that Mr. Page could not say a word to him about his soul. He died at the age of eighty-one.

Rev. Mr. Loomis had a severe fever, by which he was confined to his bed for weeks. At one time he was thought by his physician to be dying. Rev. Mr. Williams entered an evening meeting of Mr. Loomis's church at the time, announced his death, and suggested that the evening be devoted to prayers. Deacon Adams afterwards said that twelve prayers were offered, and in no one instance was there a request that his life might be spared; when before that had been the burden of prayer. After the meeting he with others went to his house, and, to their surprise, "found the doors all open from the street to his chamber—which was the house where the first Sabbath-school collected in Bangor—the curtains removed from his bed, though a cold winter's night. He had revived; his reason was restored; he had been bolstered upon his bed, and preaching the gospel to those who had gathered around him."*

There was much sickness in the year and several deaths.

Information reached the town that Mr. James Carr, a former resident of the town, who had gone into the Western States two years before, was drowned in the Ohio River from a boat in which he and his family had taken passage for Mississippi, where he intended to reside, while endeavoring to save his daughter, who had accidentally fallen overboard.

Some speculation in wild lands was attempted this year by Penobscot men. Judge Kinsley, General Herrick, Colonel Gilmore, Francis Carr, John Wilkins, Amos Patten, Moses Patten, John Barker, William D. Williamson, and Joseph Leavitt, obtained a title to about twenty thousand acres in different proportions.

* Adams' Autobiography, 64.

CHAPTER XII.

Confidence Reviving—James Bartlett—Ploughing in January—Asylum for the Indolent—Annual Meeting—Hearse Committee—Sixth School District—Poor-house—William Emerson Elected Representative—Committee Appointed to have Maine made an Independent State—York Street—Mr. Zadock Davis—Objection to Separation—Kine-pock—Rev. Elijah R. Sabine—Ohio Emigrants—Ham and Bean—Comet—Court-house—Corporation Organized—Theological Seminary—New Regiment—Delegates to Constitutional Convention—Daniel Pike's Goods—Constitutional Convention—Debate on Name of the State—Powder House—Hatter—William Allen, President of Bowdoin College.

1819. People this year had increasing confidence in the resources and capabilities of Maine. Reports of successful farming were frequently made, and families who, under the discouragements of the calamities consequent upon the troubles with England and of the cold season of 1815 and 1816, had emigrated to Ohio, had met with greater discouragements from fever and ague there and were returning. They became satisfied that unpleasant things exist in all climates and everywhere, and that a man must labor to live in all places, and that a stern climate, although it compelled to great exertion, yet there was compensation in a more vigorous and intelligent manhood.

Occasionally the death of a prominent man in Bangor would throw a gloom over the little community. On January 9th Mr. James Bartlett, a merchant, who had come to Bangor from New Hampshire about the time Mr. Leavitt came, had been connected with him by marriage and in business, and had been an officer in the town, died at the age of thirty-two. He was highly respected, but his business had not proved so fortunate as he had anticipated. Alfred Veazie, Esq., late President of the Veazie National Bank, was his grandson.

Mr. Charles Rice received the appointment of Postmaster in Brewer.

In February swine were troublesome to the citizens, and hog constables were reminded that their position was no sinecure.

The weather this month was remarkably mild. In some places the ground was perfectly free of frost. Mr. Stilman Kent, of Orrington, ploughed his ground on the 10th and sowed a peck of peas on the next day. It was predicted that if the weather continued as warm as it had been until the 18th through the month, that Mr. Kent would have green peas in March.

There were indolent as well as poor people in Bangor at this time, and it was proposed that the town, at its next annual meeting, consider the subject of erecting a house for them.

A large convention of gentlemen from Maine was held in the Senate Chamber in Boston, on February 2d, to consider the subject of separating Maine from Massachusetts. William King was President and William D. Williamson Secretary. A standing committee of two from each of the new counties of Maine was appointed. Those for Penobscot were William D. Williamson and Robert Parker.

The annual meeting was held March 8th. Thomas Cobb was chosen Town Clerk; Allen Gilman, Royal Clark, and Wiggins Hill were chosen Selectmen and Assessors; Harvey Loomis, Allen Gilman, and Hosea Rich, Superintending School Committee; William Emerson was elected Town Treasurer, and William D. Williamson Town Agent; $1,150 were raised for highways; $1,200 for schools; $400 for the Bridge Company; $600 for the poor; $810 for Mr. Loomis's salary and for collecting it. The collecting of the salary was put up at auction and bid off by Samuel E. Dutton. The collecting of the town taxes was bid off by Francis Carr.

On April 5 John Brooks received 67 votes for Governor, and Benjamin Crowningshield 46 votes; William D. Williamson received 65 votes for Senator, and Jacob McGaw 48; John Wilson received 30 votes for Representative to Congress, Martin Kinsley 45; Leonard Jarvis, 23; Jacob McGaw, 2; John Wilkins received 73 votes for County Treasurer.

At a meeting Daniel Pike, Robert Parker, and Alexander Savage were made a committee to procure a hearse, to fence the burial-ground, and to build a sufficient pound, and $100 were raised for the purpose. The sixth school district was established from Lot 78, on the old Levant road, to the Hermon and Glenburn lines; and the town was authorized to borrow $500 at not exceeding six per cent interest. At the adjournment of this meeting Jacob McGaw, William D. Williamson, and Allen Gilman were appointed a committee to inquire into the expediency of hiring a building for the poor, and of appointing a Superintendent thereof. The same gentlemen reported a code of by-laws for the town, having previously been appointed for the purpose, and it was adopted and established.

On May 3 William Emerson was elected Representative to the Legislature, having received sixty-two votes to Joseph Treat's fifty-four. The town instructed the Selectmen to petition the Legislature to consent that Maine be formed into an independent State. Eliashib Adams, Robert Parker, and Jacob McGaw were appointed a committee "to take all necessary measures, at the expense of the town, to obtain a general and effectual inoculation of the inhabitants thereof with the kine-pox." Voted $120 to pay the expense.

On June 2 York street, which had been run out between Pine street and Newbury street, by Daniel Pike, was accepted; also the road which has since been named Kenduskeag avenue for a distance of two miles from Harlow street bridge.

On June 23 the town wanted to raise $250 to rebuild the Harlow street bridge "in a durable and permanent manner, with an arch or water-course of stone." But on July 3 they voted to erect a wooden bridge, instead of one of stone and earth, provided Messrs. Burrill & Tilton would secure the payment of $100 towards the expense thereof.

On July 26 Jacob McGaw had 1 vote for Representative to Congress; John Wilson, 17; Martin Kinsley, 34; William D. Williamson, 4; and David Perham, 1. Eighty-nine votes were cast for the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, and 17 against it.

Mr. Zadock Davis, with whom the reader has become somewhat acquainted, had a poetical propensity and a way of stirring up his customers, at the same tickling the lawyers, that told. Here is an instance of his enterprise on March 11, 1819:

NOTICE TO CUSTOMERS.

"This notice, or this Proclamation,
May meet with no one's approbation;
Although my warmest thanks are tendered
To such as have me service rendered;
While those who have delinquent been
Are much reprov-ed for their sin,
Are cautioned now to mend their ways
And pay me up in THIRTY DAYS!
And there you'll find 'twill make a saving
You'll save what lawyers all are craving,
You'll save the sheriff's lawful ration,
And gain my hearty approbation."—ZADOCK DAVIS.

The snow was so deep in March that the mails were interrupted and delayed for weeks. At one time, for two weeks, not a paper of any description whatever was received at the office of the Register.

The subject of the erecting Maine into an independent State was again discussed. The committee appointed at the Boston meeting put forth a circular, giving reasons for the separation; one among others was this, that the new State would "become an inviting receptacle for emigration hither." The circular was satirized and ridiculed. Time was wanted for consideration, when the subject had been before the people for thirty years! People were warned not to leap from the frying-pan, lest the fire should be their portion; as if there could be a choice! But the sentiment in favor of separation was growing stronger.

The Selectmen this year did not overlook the suggestion in regard to the "indolent." They gave notice of their intention to bind out a number of children from six to sixteen years of age, who were chargeable to the town, and others who were spending their time in idleness and vicious pursuits, and the parents of such children, who had no visible means of support, but lived idly and indulged themselves in habits of continued intemperance, "unless such parents, by a change of conduct, rendered that measure unnecessary."

Mr. Daniel Pike had provided a respectable quantity of books this year which he offered at Boston prices. But there was not sufficient demand for them to enable him to keep a book-store exclusively. Dry goods and groceries were a part of his stock in trade.

The action of the town in regard to the kine-pock was occasioned by the arrival of a vessel in the river with the small-pox on board, and of the prevalence of that disease in Belfast. No case existed in Bangor, and the committee appointed to procure the vaccination of the inhabitants attended to their duty so promptly that every person was vaccinated in one week, and all fear of the small-pox entering the town allayed. The physicians and the people were indebted to Dr. Manly Hardy, of Bucksport, for genuine vaccine matter, which he distributed without compensation.

Rev. Elijah R. Sabine, a clergyman of the Methodist denomination, a native of Connecticut, whose residence was in Hampden, died at the age of forty-two, at Augusta, Georgia, in the summer of 1818. He possessed some literary ambition, and wrote a work called "Charles Observator." He was highly esteemed. He was the father of Francis M. Sabine, Esq., of Bangor, and of Hon. Lorenzo Sabine, the author of "The Loyalists," and other works. The following poem, from his pen, was published this year:

CHRISTIAN CONTENTMENT.

Holy contentment, which our God commands,
Is not a stupid dullness of the soul;
It well consists with sympathy of friends,—
It bids the tide of pure affection roll.
It gives refinement to the human mind,
And makes the feeling heart more feeling still;
And by its God-like nature seems designed
To fit the soul of all we see or feel.

Tho' sad afflictions be our lot beneath,
It sees the hand of Providence in all;
And humbly bows, without a murmuring breath,
Yields to its Sovereign and obeys his call.

That pride and unbelief, and Satan, too,
 Would keep our souls from such a useful grace;
 The world and peevish nature join the crew,
 To vex our spirits and destroy our peace.

If we would baffle all their skill and power,
 And gain the price for which we should contend,
 We must believe the word of promise sure;
 Gird on the armor and their power withstand.

Consider, too, our trials here are small
 Compared with others and what we deserve:
 And eke the promise, which declares that all
 Augment our bliss, and shall God's glory serve.

Such faith and works the victory shall give,
 And peace in streams shall water all the soul;
 And we a life of holiness shall live,
 And with the shout of victory reach our goal.

Heaven, at last, shall be our endless rest,
 Angels our friends, and God our father be;
 And saints shall join to shout redeeming grace,
 And glory give to the Eternal Three.

And if we miss this happy frame of soul,
 Do lift our hearts against the King of Heaven,
 We must lament while endless ages roll,
 Without a hope that we can be forgiven.

Let nothing hinder, then, the great pursuit
 Of seeking for this necessary grace,
 But gain the temper and bring forth the fruit,
 And stand prepared to quit the world in peace.

James Brooks was re-elected Governor this year, by a majority of 6,704. The whole number of votes thrown in Massachusetts and Maine was 79,885. More than two-thirds of the votes were in favor of the separation, and the act of separation was passed by the Legislature.

On June 17 Drs. Hosea Rich and Joshua P. Dickinson gave notice that they had "carried the inoculation for the kine-pock to every house and every family," and that "the small-pox is not, and has not been, in this place or the immediate vicinity."

The reports from Ohio emigrants, on the whole, continued to be discouraging. Daniel Campbell, who had removed to Columbia, from Charleston, wrote on the 23d of March that for three or four months in the year the mud and roads were so bad as to be almost impassable. "The whole face of the country is like a hog-yard in a wet time. I should think, on a moderate calculation, twenty thousand souls emigrated into this State last year, and through it into the Western States. Matthew Hedges was here the other day, and said he believed his wife had shed tears enough to grind a bushel of wet rye. If that be true I should think that there was enough among them to keep a mill a-going all the time." All the large bottoms were subject to inundation—the water rising sometimes sixty feet. On all the intervals and the large rivers it was rather sickly, and very sickly on the great prairies and fertile places in Illinois. "I cannot say but the laws of the country are good enough; but there doth not appear to be energy enough to execute them so far as to protect the innocent and condemn the guilty."

Mr. John Ham and Mr. Newell Bean became partners in June, under the style of Ham & Bean. They kept those articles for sale, as well as "rum, brandy, Holland gin, and an assortment of wines and cordials." Mr.

Ham many years afterward became a rigid temperance man, and made amends for any mischief he might have done in the sale of liquors, by sacrificing a portion of his fortune in the purchase of the Franklin House for a temperance hotel.

A comet made its appearance this summer. Its apparent size was that of a star of the first magnitude. The length of its train was more than twice the apparent diameter of the moon. Believers in the supernatural predicted another war. They had hardly recovered from the terror occasioned by the last war, and were in a frame of mind to predict anything. Certain elderly ladies of the more ignorant class were considerably distressed.

The anniversary of Independence was celebrated in Brewer by a parade of Captain Fitts's Bangor Artillery and a public dinner. There were the usual regular toasts, and this with other volunteer sentiments:

"Separation: Maine has arrived at the age of manhood and claims its freedom." Two guns.

The Penobscot Court-house Corporation, having been incorporated on June 12, 1819, a meeting for organization was notified to be held on July 31.

On the 7th of July the Theological Seminary was permanently established in Bangor.

This institution was incorporated by the Legislature of Massachusetts in February, 1814, at the instance of the Orthodox Congregationalists, under the name of "Maine Charity School." Rev. John Sawyer was very active in procuring its establishment. It was originally located in Hampden, and was designed to educate young men of proper capacity for the ministry, even though their preliminary education had not been liberal. The war operated to its prejudice, and on March 10, 1817, a meeting was held in Hampden to resuscitate it, and a society was organized to raise funds in its aid. Martin Kinsley was made President; Rev. Mighill Blood, Vice-President; John Godfrey, Treasurer, Jehudi Ashmun, Secretary. The subscriptions were liberal beyond expectation, and agents were appointed further to increase its funds.

On August 20, 1819, the Trustees of the school published a circular, setting forth the place, purposes, and position of the institution, with a view to interest the public in its welfare.

They said that as early as 1810 an association was formed in Portland denominated "The Society for Theological Education," designed to aid intelligent young men in procuring an education for the gospel ministry, and having in view the supply of the new settlements; that in February, 1812, it obtained a charter; that a Literary and Theological Seminary was essential to its success; that they appointed a committee who obtained a charter of a distinct corporation entitled "Trustees of the Maine Charity School;" with fifteen Trustees—John Sawyer, Harvey Loomis, Samuel E. Dutton, and Eliashib Adams, of Bangor; Kiah Bailey, Newcastle; Eliphalet Gillet, Hallowell; William Jenks, Bath; Mighill Blood, Bucksport; David Thurston, Winthrop; Jona. Fisher, Bluehill; Daniel Lovejoy, Fairfax; Edward Payson, Portland; Thomas Williams, Brewer; David M. Mitchell, Waldoboro; Ammi R. Mitchell, North Yarmouth; and that the trustees organized May 5, 1814, and that the school went into operation under Mr. Jehudi Ashmun as Principal, who continued as such until November, 1817, when it contained eleven theological students. The literary department of this school during the time was in connection with the Hampden Academy.

At this date the friends of the school were enabled to admit a greater number of scholars and to provide for every department of instruction. Therefore the trustees elected Rev. Abijah Wines, M. A., late of Newport, New Hampshire, Professor of Theology; Jehudi Ashmun, B. A., Professor of Classical Literature; Ebenezer Cheever, B. A., was placed in the academic branch.

At this date (August 20, 1818,) there were under its tuition eight students from New Hampshire; six from Maine; three from Massachusetts; and two from Vermont, preparing for the ministry.

The resources of the seminary were a few thousand dollars subscribed by the Trustees mainly; less than $1,500 subscribed by ladies in the eastern part of New England, to endow one or more scholarships; half of the funds of the society for theological education; the aid of the Maine Charity School Society, that had, besides direct members, under its patronage above thirty cent societies of ladies and gentlemen; annual subscriptions; congregational collections; the donations of benevolent individuals, and the avails of the missionary services of the instructors in the vicinity of the institution.

On August 26, 1813, the Trustees voted to establish the institution permanently in that place which would give the best encouragement, and appointed Rev. Mighill Blood, Samuel E. Dutton, and Thomas Adams a committee to receive propositions and to report on the first Wednesday of July, 1819. Propositions came from Castine, Bucksport, Hampden, Brewer, and Bangor. The subscriptions were for Castine, $7,644; for Bucksport, $6,200; Hampden, with the subscriptions for the county of Penobscot, $7,751; Brewer, with the same subscriptions, $8,468; Bangor, with same, $8,960. These subscriptions for the county of Penobscot, without reference to town, were $5,168. The institution was accordingly located in Bangor.

The season of 1819 was remarkably favorable for agriculturists. The appearance of the crops was more than usually encouraging. Mr. Jacob Chick, the keeper of the inn on Fish street, raised corn which was fit for the table on the 12th of August.

During the absence of Brigadier-General Trafton, on the petition of Major Henry Little and others, approved by Acting Brigadier-General Colonel Hodsdon, the companies of Deer Isle, Vinalhaven, Islesborough, Sedgwick, and Brookville were detached from the First Regiment, First Brigade, Tenth Division, and formed into a new regiment called the Sixth. On his return, August 11th, General Trafton resumed his command.

On September 20th, the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were chosen. Those from the county of Penobscot were Joseph Treat, Bangor; John Wilkins, Orrington; George Leonard, Brewer; Simeon Stetson, Hampden; Nathaniel Atkins, Exeter; Andrew Strong, Corinth; Moses Hodsdon, Levant; Daniel Wilkins, New Charlestown; Eleazer W. Snow, Atkinson; Samuel Chamberlain, Foxcroft; Amos Gordon, Garland; Samuel Butman, Dixmont; Jackson Davis, Orono; Benjamin Shaw, Newport; Abel Ruggles, Carmel; Cornelius Coolidge, Dexter.

The annual meeting of the Hancock and Penobscot Bible Society was held at Belfast, October 5th, sermon by Mr. Nourse, of Ellsworth. The officers were William Abbot, President; Samuel E. Dutton, Vice-President; Josiah Hook, Jr., Treasurer; Rev. M. Blood, Corresponding Secretary; Daniel Pike, Recording Secretary.

October 6. The Young Ladies' Academy was open to youth of both sexes. The Preceptor was Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. Daniel Pike had a great variety of goods on sale this month—dry goods, boots and shoes, fifes and flutes, paper-hangings, combs, cognac brandy, Sketch of Missions to the Heathen, Jamaica, St. Croix, and Windward Island rum, Preacher's Manual, Holland gin, Channing's Sermon, and Stuart's Reply, Port, S. M., and Lisbon wine, fish, rice, teas, coffee, sugar, tobacco, etc. Most traders did likewise at that period.

On October 11 the Convention assembled at Portland to prepare a Constitution for the new State. There was considerable discussion over the style and title. Mr. William Pitt Preble, from the committee on the name, reported as its title the "Commonwealth of Maine." It was voted—119 to 113—to substitute "State" for "Commonwealth." Judge Cony, of Augusta, moved to substitute "Columbus" for "Maine." A "Venetian manufacturer of maps and charts" had forever defrauded the discoverer of America of the glory which was his due, and he desired to render him tardy justice by giving his name to the new community, and as on the 11th of October Columbus discovered signs of land, and on that day the Convention met to form a Constitution for the new State, it would be fitting to commemorate the day of the discovery by adopting the name of the discoverer. Judge Thacher, of Saco, said that it would be long before the State could be known as Columbus when it had been so long known as Maine, and the change would occasion much inconvenience to the commercial world. Columbus was good; Maine was good; he liked both; but, under the circumstances, there should be no change. The Convention agreed with him. Then Mr. Adams, of Gorham, wanted to reconsider the vote whereby "State" was adopted in preference to "Commonwealth." Judge Dana, of Fryeburg, thought there was "a degree of inefficiency in the association of two monosyllables," and that "Commonwealth would add dignity to Maine." General Chandler, of Monmouth, said the term Commonwealth was "more sonorous and respectable" than State. Judge Thacher did not think it of any great importance which was adopted. There was greater facility in writing and pronouncing State than Commonwealth. A slight difference was sufficient to turn the scale. Mr. Emery, of Portland, thought the "lexicographical definitions of the word State relieved it of its want of dignity; he regarded the terms as nearly synonymous; saw no important advantage Commonwealth possessed in pomp and dignity over the simple and emphatic word State, so as to make him tremble at the alteration." Judge Bridge, of Augusta, thought the "style of Commonwealth best comported with the brevity of Maine, and corresponded to the slenderness of its sound." It was fortunate for the tongues and fingers of the men of this rapid age that the Convention had common sense enough to adopt the style of "State of Maine," rather than "Commonwealth of Columbus." The motion to reconsider was lost by a vote of yeas, 101; nays, 140. The Constitution was completed October 28, and the Convention adjourned to meet at Portland on the first Wednesday in January, 1820.

Mr. Wiggins Hill was appointed a committee to build a powder-house for the use of the town, under the direction of the Selectmen.

On December 6 the Constitution of the State was submitted to the people of the town for their approval or disapproval. The votes for approval were 47; against, 4.

Mr. Enoch Eaton opened a "new hatter's shop." He continued in the business many years.

Rev. William Allen, of Hanover, New Hampshire, late President of Dartmouth College, was elected President of Bowdoin College, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of President Appleton.

prohibiting slavery in that State. Northern members enough yielded at last—among whom was John Holmes, one of the Maine Senators—and both States were admitted.

Revs. John Smith and Bancroft Fowler were inaugurated Professors of the Theological Seminary on the 8th of March. Addresses were made by each, with which the hearers were well pleased. The former had under his charge the department of Theology; the latter that of Classical Literature.

The annual meeting occurred on the 13th of March. The Clerk, Treasurer, Agent, and Superintending School Committee, were the same as those of last year. The Selectmen and Assessors were Allen Gilman, Thomas Cobb, and Wiggins Hill. For highways, $1,200 were assessed; for Mr. Loomis's salary and collecting, $840; for Bridge Company, $400; for schools, $1,200; for the poor and town charges, $1,200. The Superintending School Committee were authorized to expend $30 in rewards to the best scholars. The Treasurer was authorized to borrow $500, to pay certain town orders, and with other moneys in the treasury to pay the $500 borrowed the last year.

At a meeting on April 3, William King received 136 of 231 votes for Governor. William D. Williamson received 109 of 138 votes for Senator. John Wilkins received 57 votes for County Treasurer. Joseph Treat received 82 votes for Representative to the Legislature. Jackson Davis, 96. Scattering 6.

The Professors of the Theological Seminary deemed it necessary to oppose the delinquencies of a person who afterwards became quite notorious—John Dods Bovee. They represented that he offered himself as a candidate to the Seminary under the name of John Bovee Dods; that he represented, and produced a certificate from an officer of a Presbyterian church in Amsterdam, New York, that he was a member of that church, and was a suitable person to receive charitable assistance for the ministry. That his appearance of uncommon piety added strength to their representation, and he was received into the institution. That it had since been discovered, and he had confessed, that the certificate was a forgery; that he had practiced a similar imposition at Andover, where he had been admitted to the academy, and on its discovery he had been dismissed from that institution with disgrace, and that on his examination in regard to this matter by the Trustees of the Bangor Seminary he "discovered such a destitution of moral principle and disregard for truth as was painful to witness." In connection with their statement, the professors published letters from John Adams, of Andover Phillips Academy, and of Halsey A. Wood, pastor of the church at Amsterdam, from which it appears that Bovee was very respectably connected in Amsterdam; that he had been a member of the church, had been suspended for crime, and upon evidence of repentance had been restored; that afterwards he obtained from his pastor a writing, saying simply that he was a member of the church in regular standing, as he desired it to take with him to New Jersey; that he married a daughter of a gentleman five miles from Albany, where

CHAPTER XIII.

Professors Smith and Fowler Inaugurated—Annual Meeting—Vote for Governor—History of John Dods Bovee—Jackson Davis Elected Representative—William D. Williamson, Senator—Votes for the Constitution—An Oppressed Poetaster—Address of Representatives on the Maine and Missouri Question—Sunday-schools—Immigration—William Emerson Elected Councillor—Extra Session Court of Common Pleas—Vote for Governor—William King Elected—William D. Williamson, President of the Senate—Report on Seal of the State—Excursion in "Boston Packet"—Thompson & Chick's Peas and Beans—Supreme Judicial Court Organized—First Annual Exhibition of the Theological Seminary—State and Penobscot Indians—Lothrop Lewis Confers with them—County Officers Appointed—Rev. Otis Briggs—Cavalry Company—Contest for Representative to Congress—John Dods Bovee—John Bovee Dods Explains—Population of Bangor—Weather—Republicans (Democrats) Propose to Settle their Difficulties—Contributions to the Theological Seminary.

1820. Mr. Abraham Allen and Mr. Joseph Mansfield, with their families, who left Bangor—the former in 1817 and the latter in 1818—for the West, came to the conclusion that Maine was the better country, and returned here on the 16th of January.

There was some alarm lest Maine would not be admitted into the Union, because Congress had connected Missouri with it, and Southern members would not vote for the admission of Maine unless Missouri was admitted also, and Northern members would not vote for the admission of Missouri without a clause in its Constitution

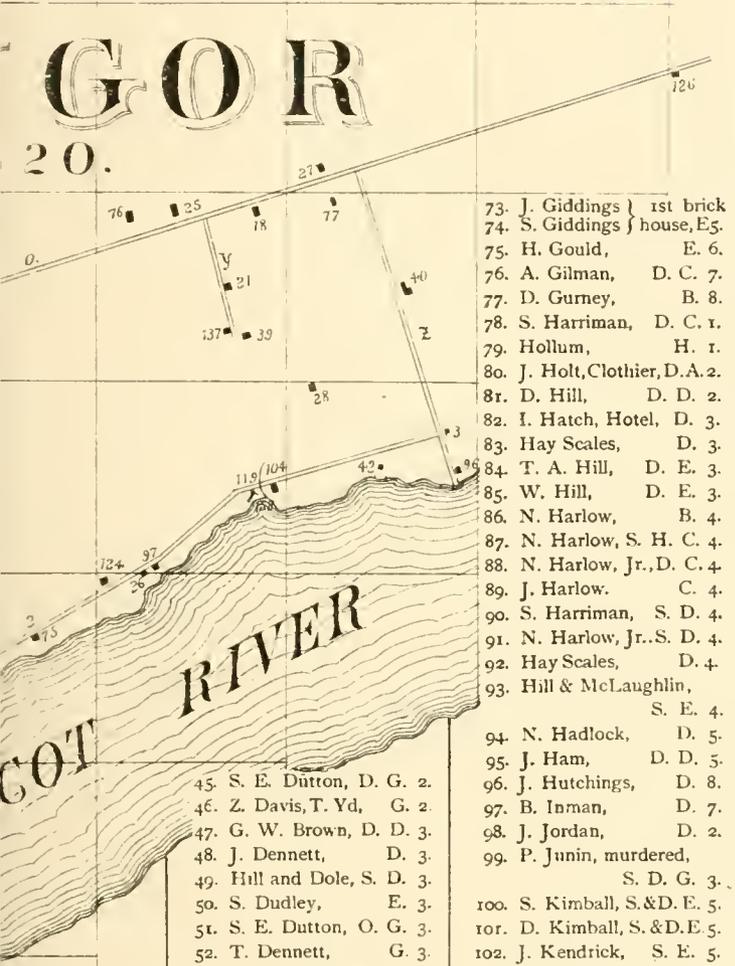

BANGOR

- | | | | | |
|---------------------------------|----------|---------------------------|----------|---------------|
| 1. F. Adams, | D. 2. | 15. C. C. Billings, | D. 4. | 30. J. C. ... |
| 2. J. Allen, | E. 6. | 16. Toll Bridge, | D. 4. | 31. Cor... |
| 3. B. F. Adams, | D. 8. | 17. Bents' Bakehouse, | D. 4. | 32. H. ... |
| 4. N. Boynton, | B. 1. | 18. J. Budge, | G. 4. | 33. J. C... |
| 5. N. Burrill, | D. A. 2. | 19. J. Balch, | A. 5. | 34. J. C... |
| 6. Burrill & Tilton S. & T. Yd. | A. 2. | 20. Bean & Ham, | S. D. 5. | 35. L. ... |
| 7. T. Bradbury, | C. 2. | 21. J. Bartlett, | E. 5. | 36. J. C... |
| 8. J. Burton, | C. 2. | 22. Barker & Crosby, | S. E. 5. | 37. J. C... |
| 9. N. Bean, | D. C. 2. | 23. T. Bartlett, | S. E. 5. | 38. Ca... |
| 10. J. Bridges, | H. 2. | 24. Cemetery, 1st, | E. 6. | 39. T. ... |
| 11. J. Barker, | D. E. 3. | 25. W. Bruce, | C. 7. | 40. P. ... |
| 12. Bangor Bank, | E. 3. | 26. Polly Boyd, | D. 7. | 41. P. ... |
| 13. D. J. Bent, | D. F. 3. | 27. W. Boyd, Deacon, | B. 8. | 42. P. ... |
| 14. H. G. Balch, | G. 3. | 28. Buzze'l, 1st settler, | D. 8. | 43. Bu... |
| | | 29. T. Colby, | H. 2. | 44. E. ... |

STREETS—a. Levant Road. b. Hammond. c. High. d. Columbia. e. Cross. f. Middle. g. Wall. h. Exchange. p. Exchange. r. Ash. s. Oak. t. York. v. Hancock. w. Washington. y. Boyd. z. Newbury.

G O R

20.

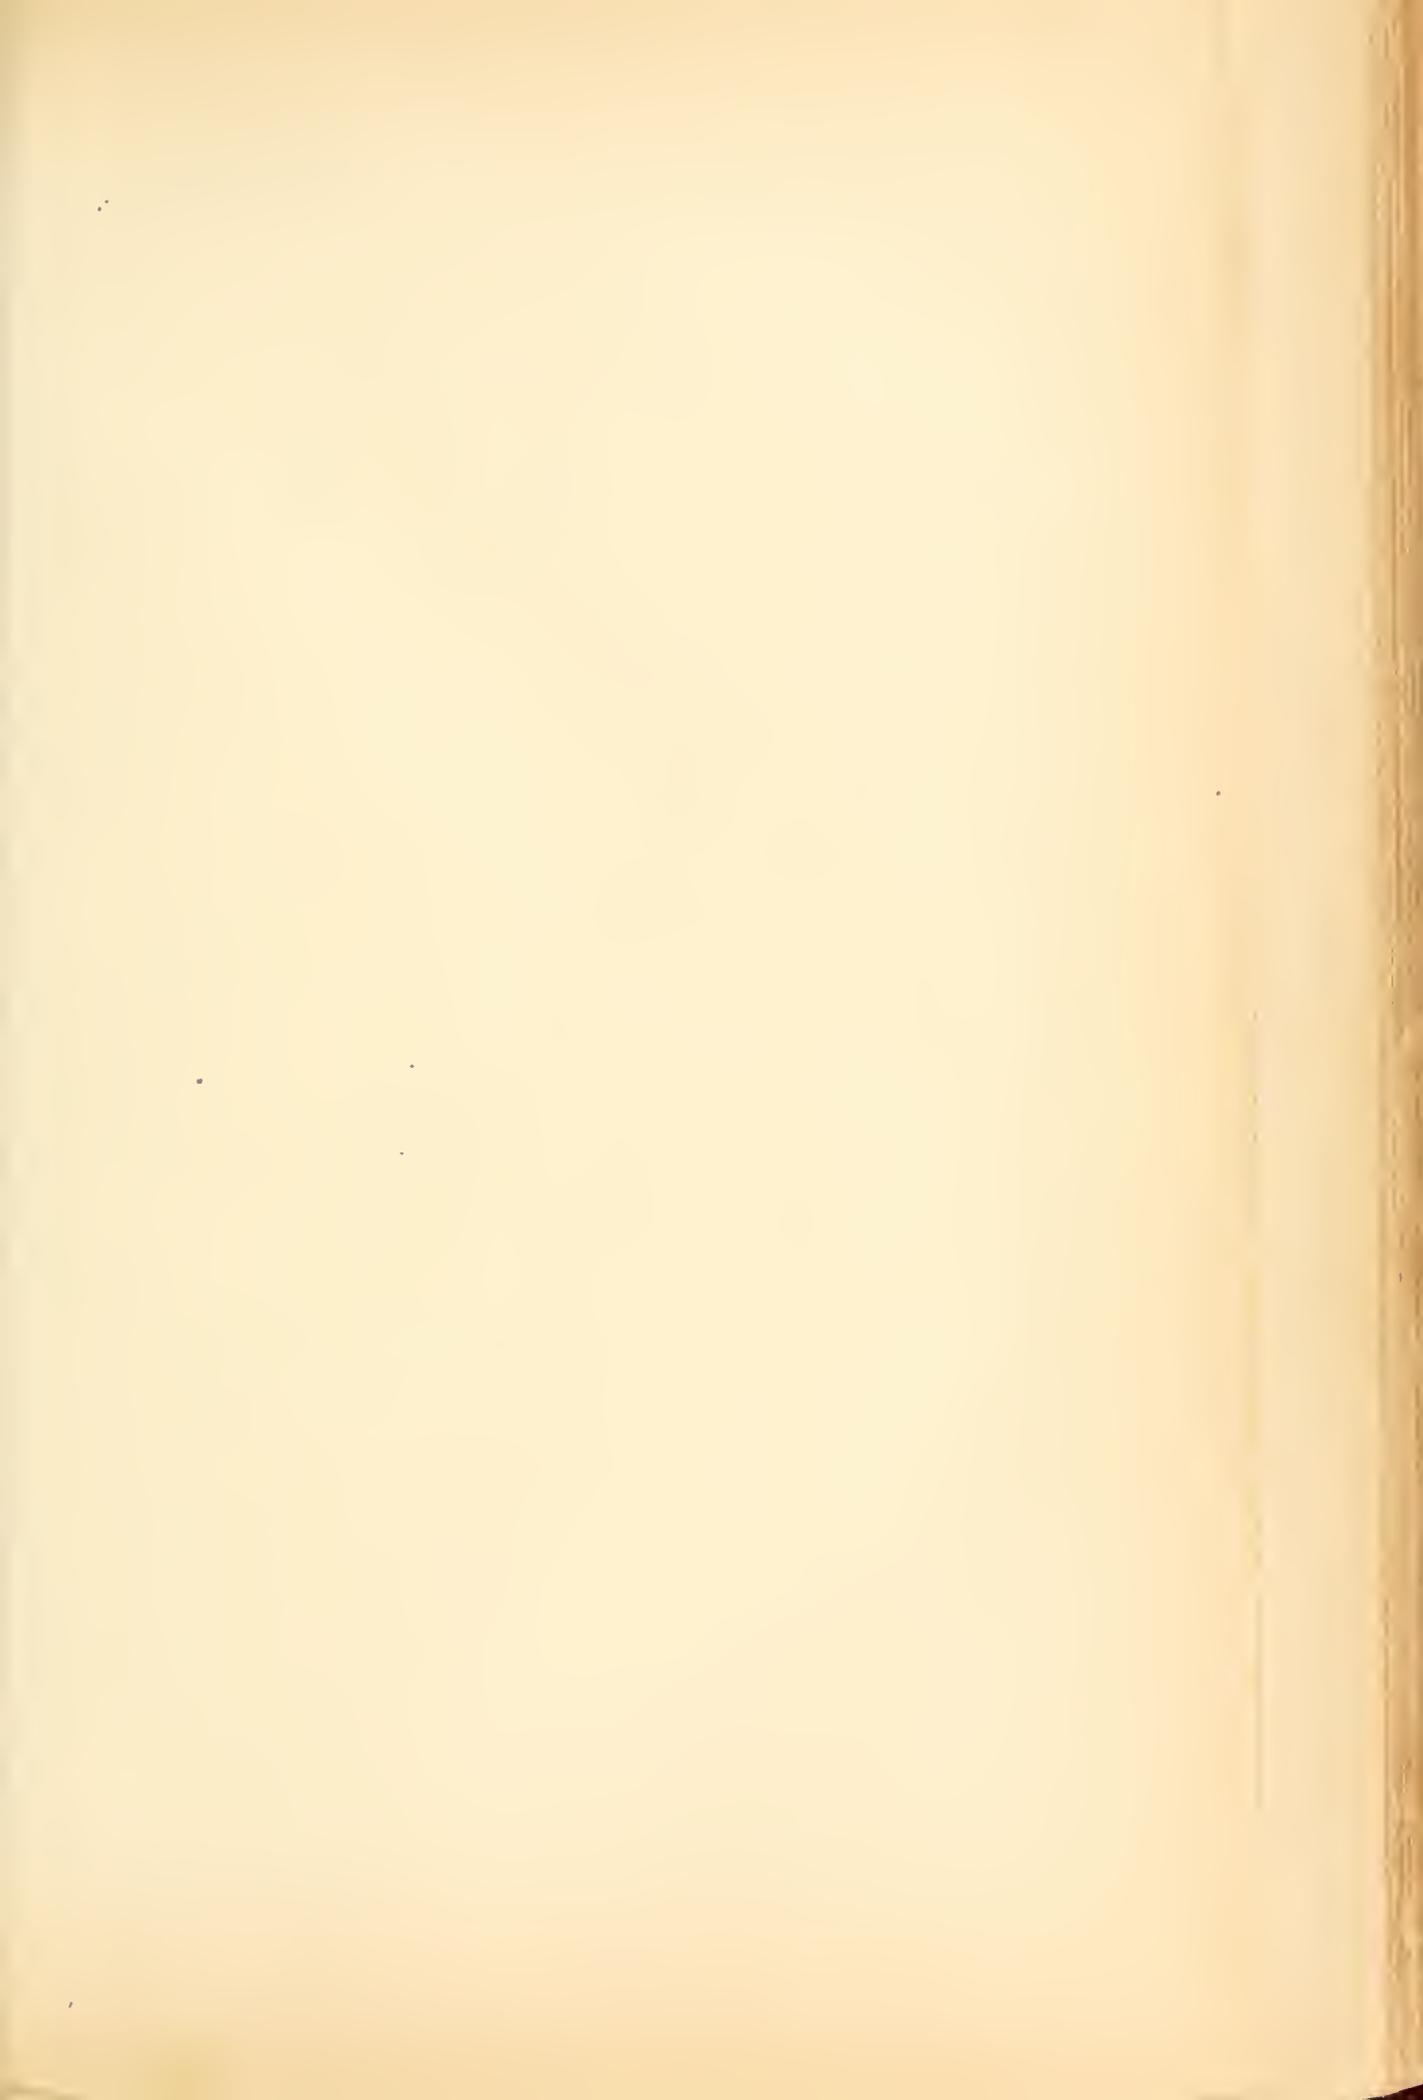

- 45. S. E. Dutton, D. G. 2.
- 46. Z. Davis, T. Yd, G. 2.
- 47. G. W. Brown, D. D. 3.
- 48. J. Dennett, D. 3.
- 49. Hill and Dole, S. D. 3.
- 50. S. Dudley, E. 3.
- 51. S. E. Dutton, O. G. 3.
- 52. T. Dennett, G. 3.
- 53. Dr. J. P. Dickinson, O. D. 4.
- 54. A. Davis, D. 5.
- 55. Distillery, E. 5.
- 56. E. 2.
- 57. E. 3.
- 58. E. Eaton, F. 3.
- 59. B. Emerson, G. 3.
- 60. J. & W. Emerson, S. D. 4.
- 61. Fulling Mill, Holts', A. 2.
- 62. J. B. Fiske, S. D. 4.
- 63. Ferryways, F. 4.
- 64. J. B. Fiske, D. D. 5.
- 65. Z. French's Block, E. 5.
- 66. Grist-mill, A. 2.
- 67. Gun-house, D. 2.
- 68. B. Garland, C. 4.
- 69. J. Garland, C. S. D. 4.
- 70. A. Gilman, O. D. 4.
- 71. J. Garland, D. D. 5.
- 72. E. P. Goodbridge, S. D. 5.

- 73. J. Giddings } 1st brick
- 74. S. Giddings } house, E. 5.
- 75. H. Gould, E. 6.
- 76. A. Gilman, D. C. 7.
- 77. D. Gurney, B. 8.
- 78. S. Harriman, D. C. 1.
- 79. Hollum, H. 1.
- 80. J. Holt, Clothier, D. A. 2.
- 81. D. Hill, D. D. 2.
- 82. I. Hatch, Hotel, D. 3.
- 83. Hay Scales, D. 3.
- 84. T. A. Hill, D. E. 3.
- 85. W. Hill, D. E. 3.
- 86. N. Harlow, B. 4.
- 87. N. Harlow, S. H. C. 4.
- 88. N. Harlow, Jr., D. C. 4.
- 89. J. Harlow, C. 4.
- 90. S. Harriman, S. D. 4.
- 91. N. Harlow, Jr., S. D. 4.
- 92. Hay Scales, D. 4.
- 93. Hill & McLaughlin, S. E. 4.
- 94. N. Hadlock, D. 5.
- 95. J. Ham, D. D. 5.
- 96. J. Hutchings, D. 8.
- 97. B. Inman, D. 7.
- 98. J. Jordan, D. 2.
- 99. P. Junin, murdered, S. D. G. 3.
- 100. S. Kimball, S. & D. E. 5.
- 101. D. Kimball, S. & D. E. 5.
- 102. J. Kendrick, S. E. 5.
- 103. J. Kendrick, E. 5.
- 104. Kinney, D. 7.
- 105. C. Low, I. 1.
- 106. J. Lovell, H. 1.
- 107. D. Lambert, D. A. 2.
- 108. G. Logan, D. 3.
- 109. Rev. H. Loomis, F. 3.
- 110. C. V. Lansill, G. 3.
- 111. D. Lord, C. 4.
- 112. D. Lord, S. C. 4.
- 113. R. Lapish, B. 5.
- 114. C. 4.
- 115. J. R. Lumbert, Hotel, E. 5.
- 116. N. C. Little, E. 5.
- 117. J. Leavitt's Block, E. 5.
- 118. J. Leavitt, D. C. 7.
- 119. J. Leavitt's S. Yd. D. 7.
- 120. G. Mansell, G. 3.
- 121. J. Mason, S. D. 4.
- 122. Mayhew, D. 5.
- 123. J. McGaw, O. E. 5.

- 124. J. McGaw, D. E. 6.
- 125. A. Nye, miller, D. A. 2.
- 126. S. Noble, 1st minister, C. B. 10.
- 127. J. Perkins, D. C. 2.
- 128. Powder-house, C. 3.
- 129. A. Patten, D. D. 4.
- 130. Marshall, E. 3.
- 131. R. Parker, D. D. 5.
- 132. Mrs. Phillips, C. 4.
- 133. Pickering & Hill, S. D. 4.
- 134. M. & A. Patten, S. E. 4.
- 135. Perkins & Parker, S. E. 4.
- 136. Pine Tree, F. 4.
- 137. D. Pike, C. 7.
- 138. J. Reynolds, E. 3.
- 139. O. Randall, D. 4.
- 140. Dr. H. Rich, E. 5.
- 141. G. Savage, H. 1.
- 142. Saw-mill, A. 2.
- 143. M. Sargeant, C. 2.
- 144. Z. Smith, D. B. 3.
- 145. E. Sargeant, B. 3.
- 146. School-house, E. 3.
- 147. A. Savage, E. 3.
- 148. I. Smith, G. 3.
- 149. B. Blodgett, G. 3.
- 150. Smith, D. D. 5.
- 151. Smith, S. D. 4.
- 152. Saw-pit, F. 4.
- 153. Z. Smith, J. S. D. 5.
- 154. Miss Sawyer's School, D. 5.
- 155. W. Seward, D. 5.
- 156. Captain I. Snow, E. 5.
- 157. School-house, C. 6.
- 158. Saw-pit, D. 7.
- 159. J. Tilton, A. 2.
- 160. T. Trafton, D. G. 3.
- 161. Toll House, D. 4.
- 162. Taylor & Brown, S. D. 4.
- 163. T. Trafton, S. E. 4.
- 164. Thomas, S. E. 4.
- 165. A. Taylor, D. F. 4.
- 166. M. Trafton, D. D. 5.
- 167. Trafton & Bright, S. E. 5.
- 168. Union Hall, 1st M. H., E. 5.
- 169. J. Webster, D. 3.
- 170. J. Williams, E. 3.
- 171. W. D. Wilhamson, D. E. 3.
- 172. W. D. Williamson, O. E. 3.
- 173. B. Watson, D. E. 3.
- 174. J. Williams, S. D. 4.
- 175. I. Watson, S. E. 4.
- 176. E. Weston, Jr., D. 5.
- 177. J. P. Dickinson, D. E. 3.
- 178. Pound, G. 2.
- 179. T. Bartlett, D. A. 3.
- 46. T. D. Liscomb, G. 2.

oad. i. Water. & Independent. l. Union. m. Co. R. to Hampden, or Main. n. Fore. o. Co. R. to Orono. a. Harlow. bb. Six Miles Falls Co. R.

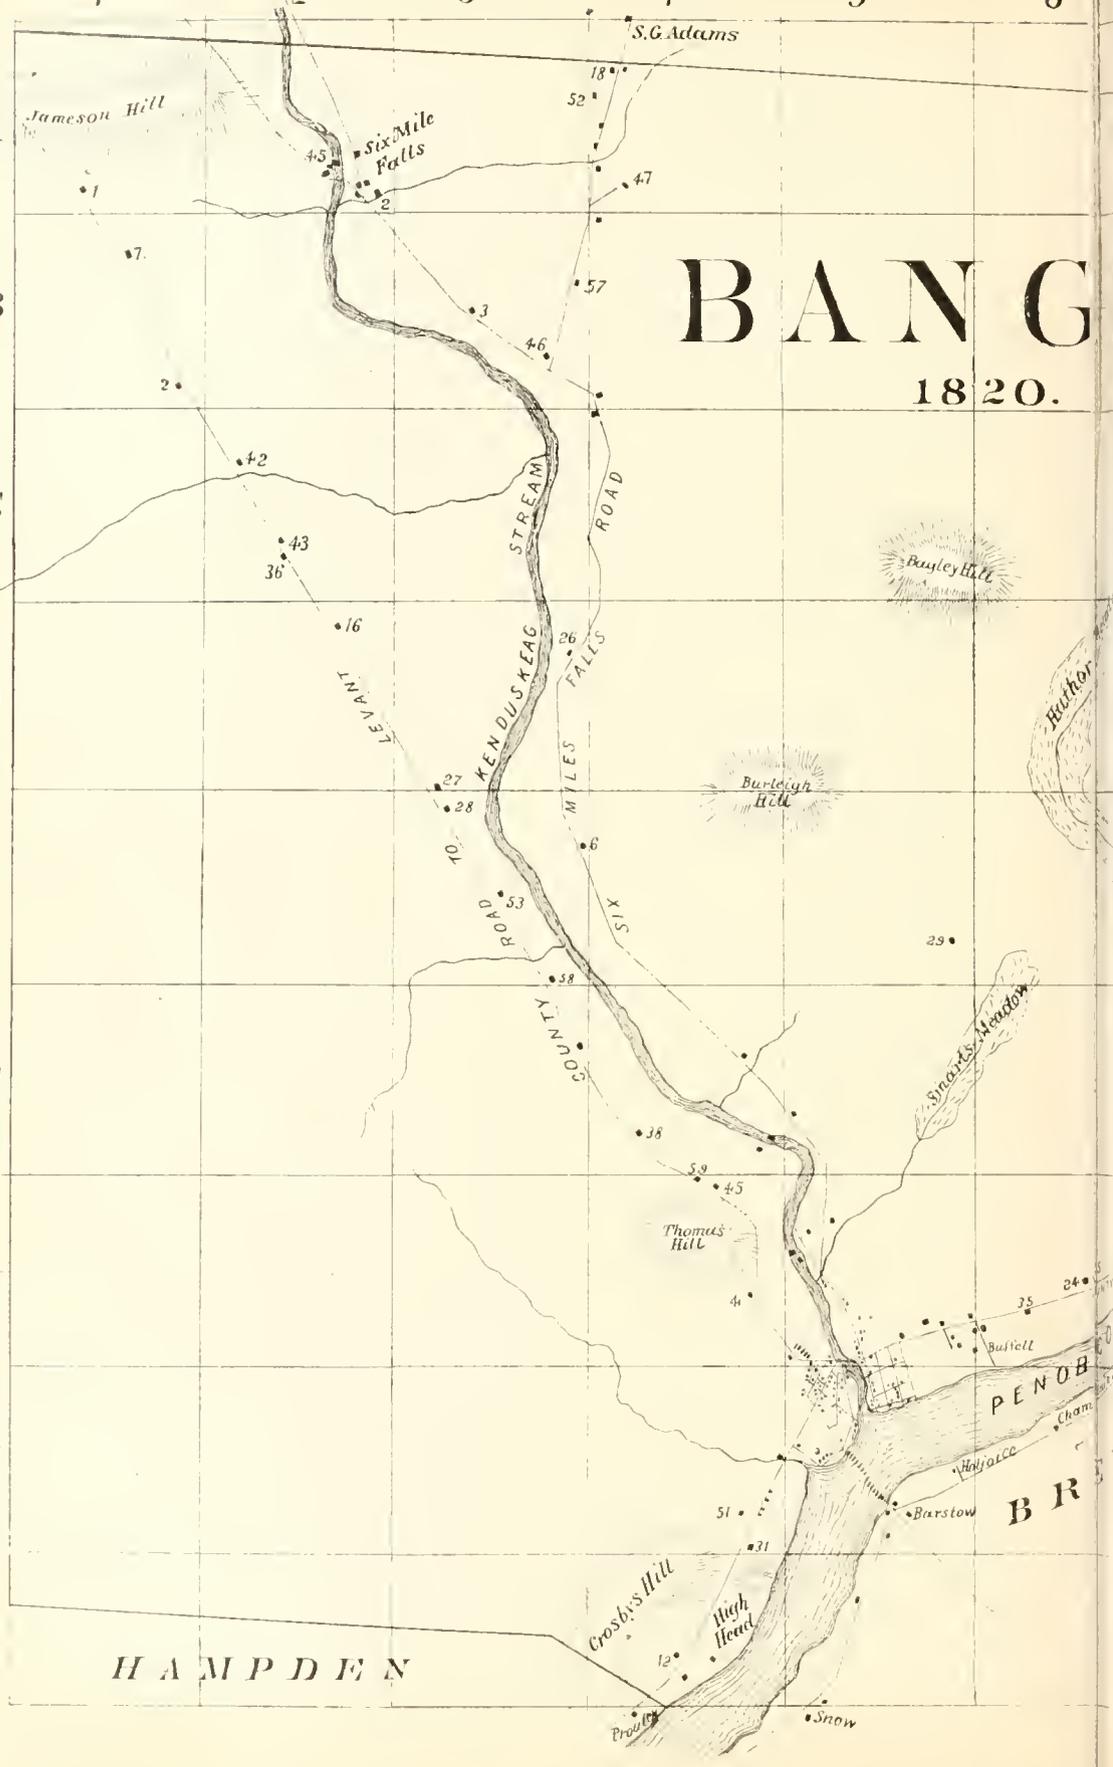

G L E N B U R N

1 2 3 4 5 6

A
B
C
D
E
F
G
H
I

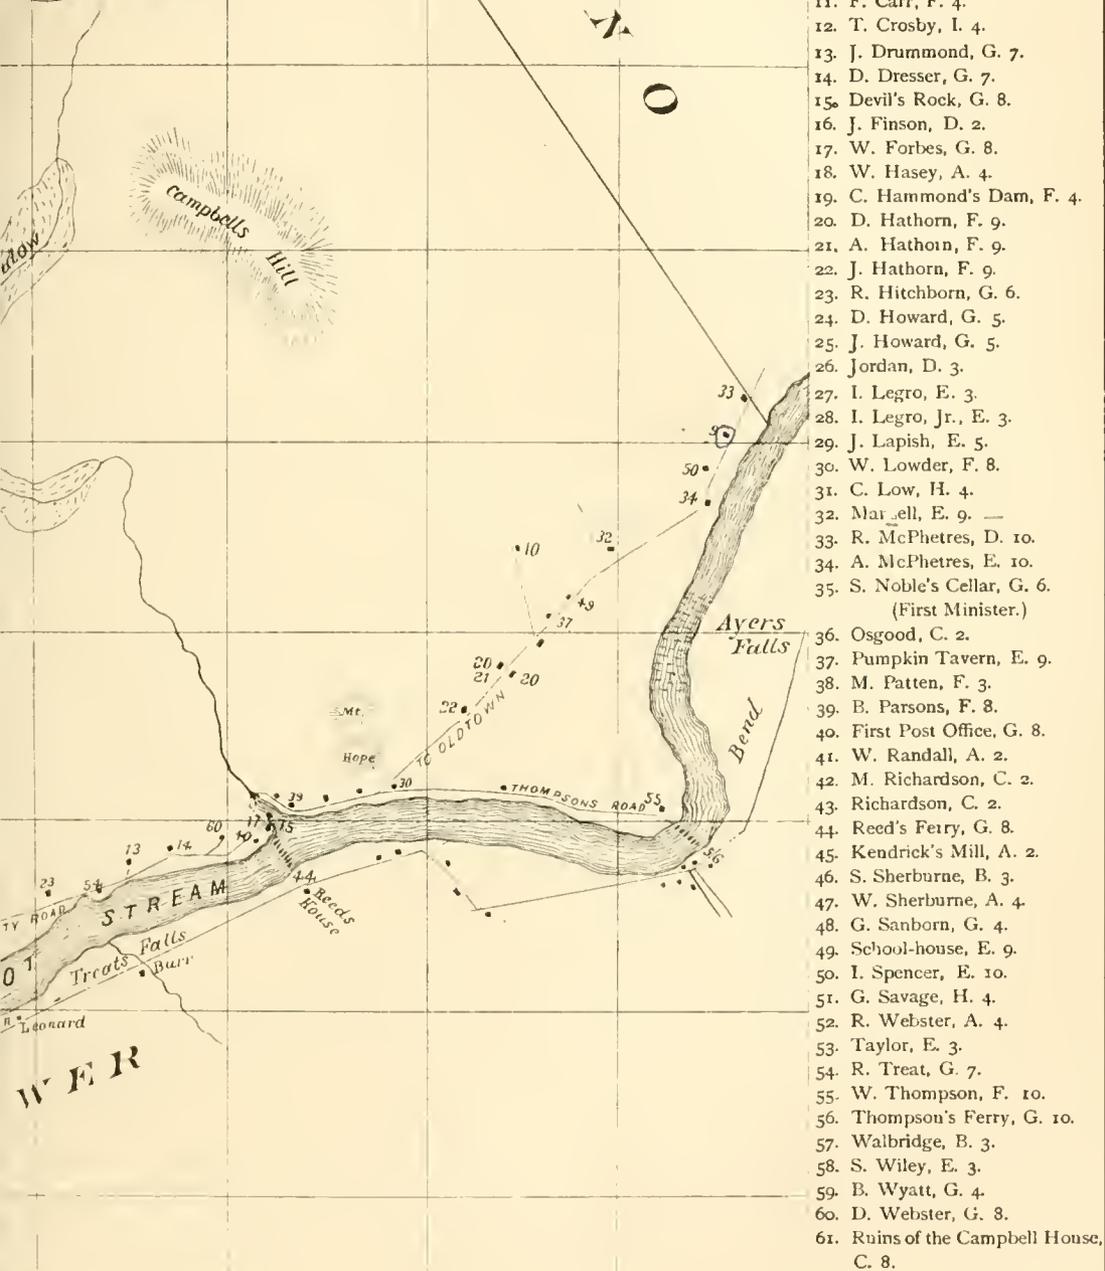

BAN G O R
1820.

HAMPDEN

O R

O R O N O

1. J. B. Bond, A. 1.
2. W. Blaisdell, B. 1.
3. T. Brown, B. 3.
4. N. Boynton, B. 4.
5. P. Burgess, A. 4.
6. R. Boyd, E. 3.
7. A. Cartland, B. 1.
8. D. Campbell, C. 8.
9. Capres, D. 10.
10. J. T. Clark, E. 9.
11. F. Carr, F. 4.
12. T. Crosby, I. 4.
13. J. Drummond, G. 7.
14. D. Dresser, G. 7.
15. Devil's Rock, G. 8.
16. J. Finson, D. 2.
17. W. Forbes, G. 8.
18. W. Hasey, A. 4.
19. C. Hammond's Dam, F. 4.
20. D. Hathorn, F. 9.
21. A. Hathorn, F. 9.
22. J. Hathorn, F. 9.
23. R. Hitchborn, G. 6.
24. D. Howard, G. 5.
25. J. Howard, G. 5.
26. Jordan, D. 3.
27. I. Legro, E. 3.
28. I. Legro, Jr., E. 3.
29. J. Lapisch, E. 5.
30. W. Lowder, F. 8.
31. C. Low, H. 4.
32. Marshall, E. 9. —
33. R. McPhetres, D. 10.
34. A. McPhetres, E. 10.
35. S. Noble's Cellar, G. 6.
(First Minister.)
36. Osgood, C. 2.
37. Pumpkin Tavern, E. 9.
38. M. Patten, F. 3.
39. B. Parsons, F. 8.
40. First Post Office, G. 8.
41. W. Randall, A. 2.
42. M. Richardson, C. 2.
43. Richardson, C. 2.
44. Reed's Ferry, G. 8.
45. Kendrick's Mill, A. 2.
46. S. Sherburne, B. 3.
47. W. Sherburne, A. 4.
48. G. Sanborn, G. 4.
49. School-house, E. 9.
50. I. Spencer, E. 10.
51. G. Savage, H. 4.
52. R. Webster, A. 4.
53. Taylor, E. 3.
54. R. Treat, G. 7.
55. W. Thompson, F. 10.
56. Thompson's Ferry, G. 10.
57. Walbridge, B. 3.
58. S. Wiley, E. 3.
59. B. Wyatt, G. 4.
60. D. Webster, G. 8.
61. Ruins of the Campbell House,
C. 8.

he resided for some time, and taught a common school in the neighborhood until he was arrested for having connection with a girl there, and was bailed by his father-in-law and sent away; that he had labored at Andover to impress the people that he was eminently pious and a proper object of charity, until there were strong presumptions against him in relation to a pair of white pantaloons and about $2 in change in one of the pockets; that his relatives were disturbed in relation to his course, and did not "entertain a shadow of a hope that he would ever change his abominable course, but were rather looking forward to a time, and that not far distant, when he would close his life in infamy and ruin."

The statement and letter were published in the Bangor Register of March 23, 1820. Of course Bovee was discharged from the institution. He afterward went to Levant, in this county, where he intermarried with Miss Mercy Hodsdon, daughter of Moses Hodsdon, Esq. He resided there for some time, and created great excitement through certain manifestations akin to those of the present day attributed to spiritual agency. Reports reached Bangor of these extraordinary demonstrations, and gentlemen—one a military man of high position—visited Levant to test the truth of the reports. Their experience of noises in the night-time of a violent and unaccountable character was such that they had no desire to encounter them again. After spiritualism had made some progress, Bovee was in the field as a lecturer, and published a book in reference to it. He was a man of considerable ability, and possessing much plausibility of manner and sufficient assurance, he kept himself before the public and upon good terms with such as did not know his history.

Under the apportionment of Representatives in the new State of Maine, Bangor was classed with Orono and Sunhaze, and the class had one Representative. Jackson Davis was elected Representative. Mr. Williamson was elected Senator of the county, and Mr. King Governor of the State.

The votes for the Constitution were 10,025; against it, 875.

Some poor fellow who doubtless had experienced inconvenience from the frowns and, perhaps, fangs of his neighbors, sent through the county some lines upon "Forgiveness," which might have had reference to the case of the ex-Andover student. It is to be hoped that the repentance was equal to the poetry. After putting in the mouth of the Saviour these words: "If you'll not forgive, you shall ne'er be forgiven," and saying that man, "no mercy would show, nor pardon the crimes of his fellows in woe," he proceeds:

While drawing this contrast I can't but exclaim,
What tender dear souls in the new State of Maine!!
To issue their writs and take their last cent,
To open their prisons, to threat'nings give vent

To dash reputation, more precious than gold,
To strip him of home and expose him to cold,
To influence friends to turn him away,
Amid the keen dawn of a cold winter day.

Forgiveness and mercy here greatly combined,
How noble their actions! how feeling their mind!

All hands turn him off was the word of command,
Or your horses are gone at once from their stand!!

Then lock up your stable and bolt every door;
The thieves are coming; hark, hear the wind roar!!
You are in great danger, your farms may be gone!!
Or Breeches carried off and you left undone.

A writer in the Register of April 20 thought it would be going a great way in the exercise of the virtue of forgiveness for the people of Maine to pardon the writer for "insulting their ears with such barbarous rhyme and inharmonious measure."

Representatives M. Kinsley, Joshua Cushman, Ezekiel Whitman, and Enoch Lincoln, on March 7 sent forth an address from Washington to the people of Maine, in which they expressed their mortification at the manner in which Maine was linked with Missouri in being admitted into the Union, "without any regulation as to slavery." It behooved "the people of the North not to be inattentive to the signs of the times. Although no objection was made, on our part, to the diminution of the power of the old States in the North, by the admission of the slaveholding States in the South—not even at the present session to the admission of Alabama—yet, the moment a State is offered in the North, gentlemen in the slaveholding States instantly cry out: 'Give us a slave-holding State in the West, as a counterpoise to its influence in the Senate, or we will not agree.' They say to Maine: 'You may come into the Union; but if you do come, you must bring with you Missouri slaves and all—not only what she now has, but all that she may acquire to the end of time,' and if this was not done they threatened that 'a continuation of the Union must not be expected.'" Against such a course of procedure those Representatives protested, "and refused to sanction it with their approbation, and believed they had fulfilled the reasonable expectations of their fellow-citizens.

In May, the movement in regard to Sunday schools was renewed. The people were solicited to take an interest in them as a means for their moral improvement. Mr. Daniel Pike, Superintendent, gave notice that the Sunday-school for the season would be commenced on the 1st, and would be free to all.

Families continued to arrive from the West, with the intention of settling in the county. The current of emigration had turned towards Penobscot.

The interest felt in the education of the people had expression among the members of the Grand Jury in May. Instead of taxing the new members for a "treat," all united in a contribution for the aid of schools in the new settlements.

At the session of the Legislature, William Emerson, of Bangor, was elected a member of the Governor's Council for Penobscot. The Government was Republican, or Democratic. Governor King delivered his message on the 2d of June.

The whole vote of the State for Governor was 22,914. William King received 21,083. John Chandler was elected President of the Senate, Benjamin Ames Speaker of the House, Ashur Ware was elected Secretary of State, and Joseph E. Boyd Treasurer. John Holmes and John Chandler were elected United States Senators.

William Moody was chosen President of the Senate to supply the place vacated by General Chandler. Mr. Moody shortly afterward resigned, and William D. Williamson was elected President of the Senate.

The Legislature provided for an extra session of the Court of Common Pleas throughout the State, for administering the oath to establish the pensions of Revolutionary soldiers. Fifty cents were allowed to the court and fifty cents to the clerk in each case. The session for Penobscot was held on June 27.

A committee was appointed by the Legislature to report a seal and device, and on June 9 presented the following as the description and explanation of the seal and arms of the State of Maine:

A Shield, argent, charged with a Pine Tree, a Moose Deer at the foot of it recumbent. Supporters: on dexter side an Husbandman resting on scythe; on sinister side: a Seaman resting on an anchor. In the foreground representing land and sea and under the Shield, the name of the State in large Roman capitals, to wit:—MAINE—the whole surrounded by a Crest, the North Star. The motto, in a label interposed between the Shield and Crest, in small Roman capitals, viz:—DIRIGO.

Explanation: The Moose Deer (Cervus alces) is a native of the forests of Maine. When full grown it is scarcely inferior to a horse in size. It has a neck short and thick, a large head, horns dilating immediately from the base into a broad, palmated form; a thick, broad, heavy upper lip, hanging very much over the lower, very high shoulders and long legs. The color is a dark greyish brown, much paler on the legs and under part of the body. The hair is coarse and strong, and is much longer on the top of the shoulders and edge of the neck, than on other parts. The eyes and ears are large, the hoofs broad, and the tail extremely short. The greatest height of the Moose Deer is about seventeen hands, and the weight about twelve hundred and twenty pounds. In deep snows they collect in numbers in pine forests.

The Mast Pine (Americana, quinus ex uno folliculo setis) leaves five together, cones cylindrical, imbricated, smooth, longer than the leaves, crest of the anthers of two minute awl-shaped bristles. It is as well the staple of the commerce of Maine, as the pride of her forests. It is an evergreen of towering height and enormous size. It is the largest and most useful of all American Pines and the best timber for masts.

Application of the Emblems. Name. The territory embraced by the limits of the State bears the name of Maine.

Crest: As in the arms of the United States, a cluster of stars represents the States composing the Nation, the North Star may be considered particularly applicable to the most northern members of the confederacy, or as indicating the most northern State of the Union.

Motto: "Dirigo," I guide, or I direct. As the Polar Star has been considered the mariner's guide and director in conducting the ship over the pathless ocean to the desired haven, and as the centre of magnetic attraction; as it has been figuratively used to denote the point to which all affections turn, and as it is here intended to represent the State, it may be considered the citizen's guide, and the object to which the patriot's best exertions should be directed.

Shield: The Pine Tree. The stately pine, with its straight body, erect head, and evergreen foliage, whose beauty is only exceeded by its usefulness, while it represents the State, will excite the constant prayer of its citizens, semper viridis.

The Moose Deer. The native animal of the State, which retires before the approaching steps of human inhabitancy, in his recumbent posture and undisturbed situation denotes the extent of unsettled lands, which future years may see the abode of successive generations of men, whose spirit of independence shall be untamed as this emblem, and whose liberty shall be unrestricted as the range of the Moose Deer.

The Supporters of the Shield. A Husbandman with a scythe represents Agriculture generally, and more particularly that of a grazing country; while a Seaman resting on an anchor, represents Commerce and Fisheries; and both indicate that the State is supported by these primary vocations of its inhabitants.

The committee probably did not have the idea that manufactures would ever be one of the interests of Maine, therefore they did not represent them upon the seal. It may be well for future generations that the committee were so particular in their description of the moose deer and pine-tree, for it is not certain that they will continue to exist so long as Maine has inhabitants. The rifle and the axe are rapidly rendering them subjects of history. The husbandman and seaman possibly may live in the future; but there are times when it would seem as if the aversion of the young men to hardening their hands by tilling the soil, and the policy of the Government, would place the supporters of the shield in the same category with the pine and the deer. The crest and the motto will probably be understood while the stars shine and the Latin language exists; and the explanations may not be deemed pedantical or supererogatory.

On June 24 Mr. William Thompson anticipated Mr. Jacob Chick in the matter of green peas.

This season there was an improvement in packet accommodations. The rough cabins of the "coasters" were not up to the requirements of such of the people as were accustomed to make a trip or two to Boston in the year, therefore the "elegant new schooner Boston Packet," was finished in a style to meet their necessities. John Perkins, a veteran and skillful navigator, was master; and to try her fitness for the purpose designed, Rev. Mr. Loomis and several of his parishioners, with their families, made a trial trip into the bay. There was some seasickness notwithstanding the "superior accommodations;" nevertheless the vessel was pronounced a success, and was for a long time afterwards a favorite. A journey to Boston was no inconsiderable undertaking. A fortnight's absence was usual. A passage up occupied four or five days frequently, seldom less than two. It would have required several years to accomplish as much traveling as is now accomplished in a single season. And some of the ancients of that day would have had to live to the age of Methusaleh to master as many journeys and as many miles as some of our modern business men master in their business lives.

Mr. Jacob Chick's garden yielded string beans on July 7, to his and his guests' gratification. He thought that esculent never came forward so early here before. He rejoiced in cucumbers on the 19th. Mr. Charles Burr brought new potatoes from Brewer on the 25th. Mr. Chick had green corn on the 27th.

The Governor appointed Prentiss Mellen Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, and William P. Preble and Nathan Weston, Justices; Benjamin Avery, of Bath, Attorney-General; and Simon Greenleaf, Reporter of Decisions.

The first annual exhibition of the Theological Seminary occurred on the 2d day of August. It was well attended and interesting. The performances were by N. W. Sheldon, M. Ingalls, H. A. Merrill, J. Sewall, Jr., R. Jones, L. Wilcox, H. B. Chapin, N. Chapman, I. Dunning, E. Jones, T. Simpson, S. Stone, A. Jackson. Query—did these gentlemen establish the custom of substituting capital letters for Christian names?

As the Penobscot Indians, after the separation, were within the jurisdiction of Maine, the State assumed the obligations of Massachusetts in regard to them, as it was right that it should. But it was necessary that the tribe should assent to this, therefore the Governor and Council appointed Hon. Lathrop Lewis, of Gorham, under a resolve of the Legislature, to treat with the Indians upon the subject. He accordingly met at the Court-house in Bangor, on August 15, the Governor and chiefs of the tribe, and in a short address informed them of the change that had been made in the relations betwixt Maine and Massachusetts; that Maine had become an independent State, and that our Governor and chiefs no longer resided in Boston, but among us; that they were ready and willing to assume the obligations of the Governor of Boston and enter into a new treaty to secure an exact fulfillment of every thing that was promised by the old, and trusted they would consider the matter and agree to accept the proposition. An adjournment was then taken to the 17th, in order that the chiefs, captains, and men of the tribe might consult in regard to it.

Samuel Nichols.

On the day to which the conference had been adjourned Colonel Lewis again met Governor Etienne, Lieutenant-Governor Neptune, and other chiefs, at the Court-house. Captain Francis, a chief, addressed the Commissioners in his native language. He acknowledged the goodness of the Great Spirit, who placed the red men here before the white men came, and gave them all the land from which the waters run into the Penobscot. He filled the forests with game and the rivers with fish for their subsistence—they were then contented and happy. When the white men came over the great waters, they received them as friends and brothers; they were then many and strong, the white men few and weak; they gave them land and permitted them to live peaceably among them, and had remained their friends. The white men were now strong, the red men weak, and wanted them to be their friends.

They were well pleased that by the consent of their father, the President of the United States, the Governor and people of the old State, Maine had been formed into a new State, and hoped the time would come when the land once owned by the great Penobscot tribe would contain white men enough to form another new State. That as the Governor and people of the new State wished to take them under their care and protection, and promised to do for them all their good friends, the Governor and people of Massachusetts, had agreed to do, and they placed the greatest confidence in the Governor, chiefs, and people of the State of Maine, they were willing to put themselves under their care and protection.

By their last treaty with Massachusetts they relinquished their claim to all their lands, except four townships and the islands in Penobscot River, above and including Oldtown, which the Commissioners—Robbins, Davis, and Hill—told them they were to hold for their use, improvement and benefit, so long as the sun shone, waters run, trees grew, and the world lasted. They wished the Government of Maine to understand this, and to fulfill the promise made by the Government of Massachusetts. They were now ready to relinquish their claim on the old and make a treaty with the new State.

Colonel Lewis replied, expressing satisfaction with what had been said, and assuring the Indians that so long as they conducted well the white men would be their friends, and expressing the hope that their reasonable expectations would be relieved, and that the new State would perform all promises to them as faithfully as the Governor and people of Massachusetts had.

The treaty was signed, and the whole business was conducted with great propriety and decorum.

After the delivery of the papers Governor Etienne and Lieutenant-Governor Neptune were each presented by Colonel Lewis with a piece of fine scarlet broad-cloth for coats. He presented each of the chiefs with a silver brooch, on which were engraved the Arms of the State. The presents were made in the name of Governor King.

The chiefs were much gratified with their presents, and with the new arrangements for the benefit of their people.

On July 11, prior to Colonel Lewis's visit to Bangor, Lieutenant-Governor John Neptune and several other chiefs visited Portland and were introduced to Governor King and the Council in the Senate Chamber. The interview excited some curiosity, and a large number of citizens were present.

The Governor addressed them, saying that our chiefs no longer resided in Boston; that their visit gave him pleasure; that their fathers were our friends and we were their friends; that their fathers, long since, "helped us to drive away the redcoats:" that in the last war they did right to take no part; we were strong enough without them: that we should consider them our children; and they should have everything from us that our friends in Boston promised them. Colonel Lewis would talk to them for us, and they could believe everything he said.

Neptune replied through an interpreter:

I thank you for the good you say. You see us well to-day. Christ is our Saviour as yours. He is the same to us all no difference of color. The same Heaven is for the black men and the white men.

One thing in particular I wish to say to-day. Perhaps we get nothing for it. The white people take the fish in the river so they do not get up to us. They take them with weirs; they take them with dip-net. They are all gone before they get to us. The Indians get none. If you can stop them so that we can get fish, too, we shall be very glad.

There is another thing—our hunting privilege. The white men come and spoil all the game. They catch all the young ones and the old ones. We take the old ones and leave the young ones till they grow bigger and are worth more. We wish the white men to be stopped from hunting. They take the timber—they have teams and oxen to haul the trees. Indians have no teams; no oxen to haul timber. We wish your Government to stop the white men from hunting—put their traps in their chests. Let white men have the timber and the Indians have the game.

You see us here very poor. If we were not poor you would see us better dressed. We want you to give us something so that when you see us again you will know us. Perhaps a hat, or shoes, or powder and shot.

One word more. We want a new Agent. You have a new Government, a new State. We want you to give us a new Agent.

The Governor promised that what had been said about the wing, the dip-nets, and hedges down in Penobscot Bay, should be attended to, and hoped that the injury done to their fishery would not be much longer a subject of complaint; that he was sorry to learn that white people interfered with their hunting, because it was not in our power to prevent it; that as to white people hauling timber, they could do so too. If they had oxen, they could; and could employ them in ploughing their grounds and becoming good farmers. In regard to an new agent, he had no objection; wished them to be satisfied, and that the agent should be their friend as well as ours. That their request for something to remember them by should be complied with, and General Cony should provide for their accommodations and wants.

Mr. Alexander Savage, whose handsome chirography may be seen in the town and in the Probate records, taught a writing school this season.

In September there was an examination of the students of the Young Ladies' Academy, with which the Trustees expressed great satisfaction. "The first class of young ladies appeared to great advantage in reading their own compositions, as well as in history, and in rhetoric and criticism. The pieces selected by the young masters were so well spoken as to afford no inconsiderable entertainment." The number of students in constant attendance was between forty and fifty.

The Governor appointed David Perham, Judge of Probate for Penobscot county; Enoch Brown, Chief Justice of Court of Sessions; Isaac Hodsdon and Daniel Wilkins, Associates; Alexander Savage, Register of Probate.

Erastus Foote was appointed Attorney-General of the State.

Rev. Otis Briggs, who had for some time been the preceptor of Hampden Academy, gave notice on September 21, that the fall term commenced on the 18th and students would be received at twenty cents per week, and board could be obtained in his family at $1.50 per week.

The company of cavalry was in existence this year under the command of Captain Grant, of Hampden. On September 27, Simon B. Hamman, of Bangor, was elected Lieutenant, and Gershom Flagg, of Hampden, Cornet.

With October came political excitement. On the 13th September the Republicans of the Fourth Congressional District, at Bucksport, nominated William D. Williamson as candidate for Representative to Congress, and Francis Carr as candidate for Elector. Mr. Kinsley's friends, who were disappointed by this nomination, thought it was effected by a sleight of hand and by keeping the people of Penobscot in the dark in regard to a change in the old mode of representation, by a few individuals at the court in Castine. Here was trouble in the party.

But outside of the party there was but one opinion, that as Mr. Williamson could not "possibly bear all the burdens of the people," and was "now tolerably well loaded with offices," it would "be best to try and find some other person who would answer to represent us in Congress, and let Mr. Williamson (for a short time, at least) try how well he could bear the weights of office he had upon him." Therefore the Federalists at Eastport, on the 29th September, nominated Jacob McGaw as a person who, being burthened with no office, could attend to the interests of the district. Others thought John Wilkins could represent the people well, and that Horatio G. Balch or Lemuel Trescott could serve as Electors.

The candidates for Congress, who were finally put before the people of the district in this canvass, were Mr. Williamson, Mr. Kinsley, Mr. McGaw, and Mr. Wilkins.

The meetings were held on November 6th. Bangor shows its appreciation of the candidates by giving Mr. Williamson 25 votes, Mr. McGaw 41, and Mr. Wilkins 20. Brewer gave Williamson 5, McGaw 17, Wilkins 1; Orrington gave Wilkins 51, Kinsley 1, the other candidates none. The votes in the district were, for Williamson 608, for McGaw 289, for Wilkins 126, for Kinsley 152, for J. Cooper 160, scattering 30. Mr. Williamson required 150 votes more to be elected.

Mr. John Bovee Dods, after taking sufficient time, on November 15th issued a statement intended to relieve his reputation from the stigma cast upon it by Rev. Halsey A. Wood. He had intended to abide the "judgment of the great day" in regard to his errors and those of his slanderers. He would "not be understood to refer to any of the officers and students of the institution, but to all those persons who have not only made public remarks, but a thousand additions to the published letters of Halsey A. Wood." He said that Mr. Wood had acknowledged two of his statements to be erroneous—that he had given him no later certificate, and that he was in Amsterdam early in the summer of 1819; but he had not altered that in relation to the affair in the vicinity of Albany, that would be "decided hereafter in a more serious contest." He challenged any one to prove any statement Wood had made against him. In relation to his change of name he made this explanation: "My family name is Bovee; but it is customary among the Dutch to permit their children to be offered up in baptism by a godfather in the Dutch Reformed churches. After this manner I was presented for baptism by John Dods, my mother's brother. I, therefore, according to this custom, take upon me this name. My youngest brother was offered up in baptism by Philip Vedder. It is always customary that the eldest son should retain the family name and annex to his own the first letter of his father's given name. The name given to my father was Jacob; therefore my eldest brother's name is Matthias Jacob Bovee. The wife, also, after the death of her husband, again subscribed her maiden name, retaining only the first letter of her husband's name." He annexes a certificate signed Jane B. Dods, Matthias J. Bovee, Philip Bovee Vedder, and several other Bovees, that they had never given Halsey A. Wood, or any other person, permission to publish John's name throughout the Union. They did not, however, deny that Mr. Wood's statement in regard to John's conduct was true.

The only thing striking in Mr. Dods's statement is his disposition to forgive his calumniators.

By the census taken this year, the population of Bangor was 1,221, showing an increase since 1810 of 371. That of Hampden was 1,478, increase 199. Brewer, 734; Orrington, 1,049; increase of both in the decade, 444.

The weather in December was unusually cold, even for that season of the year. The mercury on high ground stood at twenty-six degrees, and near the river at thirty and three-fourths degrees below zero, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. Williamson sent circulars this month to every town in Maine for materials for his history.

A meeting of the Republicans of the county of Penobscot was notified to meet at Mrs. Hatch's tavern, on the 4th January, 1821, to see if a candidate for Congress could be agreed upon, and the difficulty in the party settled.

The subscriptions and contributions in money for the Theological Seminary in the months of June, July, and August, were 64, in sums varying from $1 to $76 each, amounting in all to $498.08. In September, October, and November, they were 75, in sums varying from $1 to $163 each, amounting to $667.19.

CHAPTER XIV.

Penobscot Agricultural Society Formed—Canvass for Representative in Congress—The Mails—Comet—The Aspirants for Office—Town Meeting—Officers Elected—Appropriations—First Congregational Meeting-house—General Herrick Appointed Sheriff—Isaac Hodsdon Clerk of Courts—Receipts of Seminary—Ice—Earthquake—Mr. Williamson Made Governor in Place of Mr. King, resigned—Mr. Davenport Gives the Seminary Its Site—Bangor Young Ladies Academy—Hampden Academy—Colonel Webster—Premiums Offered by the Penobscot Agricultural Society—Williamson Resigns the Post-office—Clark Appointed Postmaster—Fourth of July—Boys' Celebration—"Federalist"—Candidates for Governor—Mr. Williamson Elected to Congress—George W. Pickering—L. & L. Crane—Charles Hammond's Block—Bent's Bake-house—Moses Burley's Stages—Death of Hon. F. Carr—Supreme Judicial Court—Chief Justice Mellen's Charge—Snow October 19—Cattle Show—Governor Williamson and General Herrick—A Political Controversy—The Militia System—Musters Criticised—A Court-martial and Its Result—A Military Arrest—Troops Complimented—Receipts of the Seminary.

The interest in regard to agriculture found expression early this year in the formation of the Penobscot Agricultural Society. A meeting was held at the Court-house on the 3d of January, at which General Jedidiah Herrick presided, and Daniel Pike was Secretary. A committee of one from each town in the county was appointed to solicit subscriptions and collect the assessments of one dollar a year from the members, and Jedidiah Herrick, Philo H. Washburne, Samuel E. Dutton, Francis Carr, Simeon Stetson, Zeba French, David Perham, Samuel Clark, and Green Sanborn were appointed Trustees: Daniel Pike, Treasurer.

The subject of Representative to Congress was renewed. At the meeting at Mrs. Hatch's Tavern, at which Wiggins Hill was chosen Chairman and Thomas Treadwell Secretary, the Bucksport nomination of Mr. Williamson was "cordially approved," and the meeting was declared adjourned "sine qua non."

It was said that a friend of Mr. Wilkins called this meeting, and four Federalists acted in it. But An Elector was of opinion that "if talents, integrity, and an unimpeachable character were considered as any recommendations to public notice, and his profession as a lawyer was no objection, Jacob McGaw, Esq., was in every respect deserving the support of the intelligent and independent electors of the district." This writer was doubtless a "Federal Republican."

But there was still dissatisfaction with Mr. Williamson among the "Democratic Republicans." Some said only nine towns in the county were represented at the Hatch Tavern meeting, when there were twenty-seven towns in the county, and it was simply a caucus nomination of only a third part of the county. Some thought a man should not be taken for Congress because he was a member of a particular party, without regard to talents or qualifications, but "a liberal man, a man of talents and integrity," such as Mr. McGaw, should be taken. The wrangling increased, and Mr. S. Harriman stepped into the area and proclaimed John Wilkins "to be an upright, faithful, honest, judicious, and capable man for any office," therefore as suitable to represent the Fourth District in Congress.

Mr. Wilkins, being Collector of United States Taxes, was calling for the arrearages of the direct tax of 1798.

The second trial for Representative to Congress occurred on the 22d of January. The votes in Bangor were: For McGaw, 48; Wilkins, 26; Williamson, 24; Kinsley, none; scattering 1. In the district, Williamson received 863, against 944 for all others. There was no choice.

The mails were a subject of complaint. One mail a week was hardly up to the requirements of a growing community, when it was received regularly by the way of the Kennebec, but after the Post-office Department changed its route and sent it to Bucksport and across the Penobscot twice it became so old and diluted by the time it reached Bangor that it was of "very little service."

In March a comet of considerable brilliancy attracted attention.

Mr. Wilkins, in consequence of his aspirations for Congress, was disturbed by the appearance of a rival for the offices of Register of Deeds and County Treasurer. Thomas Cobb, who had been for twenty years Register of Deeds, County Treasurer and Clerk of the County in the county of Hancock, and more recently Clerk of the Courts in Penobscot county, but supplanted by Isaac Hodsdon, was presented for Mr. Wilkins's places, and it was said that Mr. Wilkins was not satisfied with those offices because of his efforts to get into Congress, therefore neither he nor his friends had cause of complaint because another candidate was set up against him.

The annual town meeting was held March 12. Thomas Cobb was again elected Town Clerk; Thomas Cobb, Wiggins Hill, and James Tilton, Selectmen and Assessors; Thomas A. Hill, Treasurer; Allen Gilman, Agent; Harvey Loomis, Hosea Rich, Thomas Cobb, Superintending School Committee.

For schools \$800 were raised; for highways \$1,000; for Mr. Loomis's salary \$870; for the Bridge Company \$400; for the Treasurer \$15 for his services; to the Assessors \$1.33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per day were to be paid "while engaged in the duties of their offices." The Superintending School Committee were supplied with \$25 for rewards for the best scholars. The Treasurer was authorized to borrow \$500.

At another meeting, on this day, Thomas Cobb received 63 votes for Register of Deeds, and John Wilkins 53. Thomas Cobb received 68 votes for County Treasurer, and John Wilkins 49. But the county did not know Mr. Cobb as well as they did Mr. Wilkins, therefore it elected the latter.

On March 29 the Bangor Meeting House Corporation (Congregationalist) issued proposals for materials and the building of a house of wood, seventy-two feet long by fifty-two feet wide, and thirty feet post, with a cupola.

The members of the Legislature nominated Governor King for re-election.

The Governor and Council appointed Jedidiah Herrick, of Hampden, Sheriff of the county; Isaac Hodsdon, of Corinth, Clerk of the County; Ephraim Goodale, of Orrington, and Zeba French, of Dexter, Justices of the Court of Sessions.

The receipts for the Bangor Seminary in the three months from January, inclusive, in sums of from $1 to $50, were $840.67.

April 15 the ice left the river, and the schooner Aurora, Captain Joshua Jordan, arrived from Boston, loaded with goods.

The shock of an earthquake was felt on the 5th of May. It commenced with a heavy rumbling, which was followed by a detonation loud as the heaviest thunder, and then a rumbling again. In some instances crockery ware was thrown from shelves, and the houses were considerably shaken. The night and morning had been tempestuous, with snow, wind, and rain, which continued in the forenoon. The earthquake was felt between 7 and 8 o'clock A. M. It was probably the severest shock that has been felt in Bangor in this century.

Mr. Williamson, who had been for some time Postmaster of Bangor, being also Senator from Penobscot and President of the Senate, left Bangor for Portland on the 17th of May to assume the position of Governor of the State, Governor King having accepted the appointment of Commissioner, with Hugh White and L. W. Tazewell, for the settlement of claims under the treaty with Spain, to sit in Washington the same month.

The Penobscot Agricultural Society, having obtained an act of incorporation, organized upon the 17th of May and proceeded vigorously to work. Martin Kinsley was made President; Jonathan Farrar and Benjamin Butman, Vice-Presidents; Daniel Pike, Recording Secretary and Treasurer; and Archibald Jones, of Frankfort, Corresponding Secretary; which officers ex officio, and Jedidiah Herrick, Samuel E. Dutton, Simeon Stetson, William R. Ware, Jacob McGaw, Francis Carr, Rufus Gilmore, Ephraim Goodale, Seba French, Joshua Stockwell, Jonathan Sibley, Joshua Lane, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., and John Swan were made the Trustees.

The Governor appointed Allen Gilman County Attorney for Penobscot.

On May 28 Governor King addressed a letter to the committee who had notified him of his re-nomination for Governor, declining to accept it, for the reason that he had concluded to accept the appointment of Commissioner, a less eligible position than that of Governor, which he resigned, as the "unfortunate claimants in this section of the country asked, in the most feeling terms, his attention to the business of the Commission, fearing if he should decline that another person might not be selected from our State."

On the same day Mr. Williamson was inducted into the office of Governor in the Senate chamber in Portland, "in presence of a large and respectable number of citizens from different parts of the State."

On June 4 Mr. Isaac Davenport, of Milton, Massachusetts, presented the Theological Institution with a deed of a site for its permanent buildings, valued at $1,000.

In this month the Trustees of the Bangor Young Ladies' Academy elected their officers for the year, and made arrangements for its future usefulness. Preceptor Briggs continued in Hampden Academy, and gave notice that tuition was still twenty cents per week, and board could "now be obtained not only in the family of the Preceptor, at 9 shillings per week, but in the family of the Hon. Judge Kinsley, and other most respectable families."

A military election was held on the 20th. Major Ebenezer Webster was chosen Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fourth Regiment, First Brigade, Third Division, and Captain Joshua W. Carr, Major.

The gardens of Mr. Jacob Chick and Mrs. Hatch yielded green peas on the 23d June, well-filled.

The public mind in June was turned toward the selection of a candidate for Governor. The persons most prominent were General Joshua Wingate, Jr., of Portland; General John Chandler, of Monmouth; and Judge Albion K. Parris, of Paris. Mr. Chandler at once declined to be considered a candidate, and opinion began to concentrate upon Judge Parris.

The Trustees of the Penobscot Agricultural Society determined to hold a cattle show on the 18th of October, and offered their premiums of from $5 to $25. This latter premium was to be given to the person who should "furnish satisfactory evidence of having discovered a cheap, certain, and effectual mode of destroying wood-lice upon fruit trees."

Mr. Williamson resigned the office of Postmaster, and Major Royal Clark was appointed.

The anniversary of independence was celebrated by the usual salutes and a public dinner at Lumbert's tavern, to which about forty citizens sat down, and "the countenance of every one," says the Register, "indicated much good feeling, and a general expression of warm national partialities gave an interest to the occasion seldom witnessed." The last regular toast was: "The Downfall of Party—a union of all honest men."

The boys, to whom the uproar and excitement of the Fourth of July is the greatest treat of the whole year, had erected a fort of cobble-stones on the hill west of Main street, below the Bangor House, in which they had placed a swivel in order to salute a company of lads that was to visit them from Hampden. They were up early in the morning, and by 1 or 2 o'clock had succeeded by ringing the bell and firing their swivel and muskets, and making every other noise they could invent, in getting the whole town awake. Some time in the forenoon the company from Hampden, under Captain William A. Howard—who has since been a prominent captain in the revenue service of the country—made its appearance prettily uniformed, and attracted much attention by its soldierly appearance. The boys, of course, renewed their labors at the swivel, and Captain Howard's company was handsomely received by a company of Bangor lads that had been extemporized for the occasion. After exhibiting their proficiency in marching and drill to the admiring lookers-on, they sat down at Mr. Jacob Chick's table and partook of his green peas and the other nice things he had provided for them. On the whole the boys had an exceptional good time on that day, as many of them remember.

Mr. Chick's peas were probably more tender than those of Mr. R. T. Man, of Sangerville, which were ready for the table as early as the 12th of June this year.

In July the excitement in regard to a candidate for Governor had much increased. The epithet of "Federalist," which since the Hartford convention had become obnoxious, was applied profusely by those calling themselves Democratic Republicans to their opponents. Mr. Parris and Mr. Wingate were the two candidates in the field. Mr. Wingate was a Republican, and Mr. Parris was in fellowship with that party. But a troublesome memory presented to the people the fact that the latter gentleman was once a Federalist, and not only he, but William King, John Holmes, Abiel Wood, Benjamin Green, Mark L. Hill, and Erastus Foote.

But Mr. Holmes said of Mr. Parris, that "his father was a respectable farmer, and he himself was brought up and identified with a population exclusively agricultural." But Mr. Wingate, while Mr. Parris had been fighting single-handed against the opposers of the Administration, had been enjoying the emoluments of the Custom-house, and the public had rewarded him with property which had been estimated at $100,000; but it was "exceedingly questionable whether the habits there imbibed were very consistent with the prudence, economy, and frugality of a new and agricultural State."

Mr. Parris was the more popular and received the nomination in various counties, and was afterwards elected Governor by a very large vote.

The interest in the Fourth Congressional District was concentrated in the canvass for Representative to Congress. Mr. Williamson was recommended by a convention at Castine on July 11, as the candidate regularly nominated by a convention at Bucksport, who should be supported by the Republicans, and on August 6 he was again nominated by a convention at Bucksport, having received fourteen votes to Mr. Kinsley's twelve, and one scattering. Still there were Republicans who considered this Bucksport meeting packed and unfair. But a convention at Bangor on the 7th of August, at which Isaac Case was nominated for Senator and John Wilkins for Register of Deeds and Treasurer, approved the Bucksport nomination of Mr. Williamson.

Simeon Stetson was a candidate for the nomination for Senator, and Thomas Cobb for Register of Deeds and Treasurer at this convention. They had a very small number of the votes, but their friends were dissatisfied that they were not nominated, and held a meeting at Lumbert's tavern and nominated Mr. Stetson for the Senate and Mr. Cobb for Congress.

The tickets were now presented to the electors of the district. The "Republican ticket," with Albion K. Parris for Governor; Isaac Case for Senator; John Wilkins, for Register and Treasurer; and William D. Williamson, for Representative to Congress; and the "Union Ticket," with Simeon Stetson, for Senator, and Thomas Cobb, for Representative to Congress.

The canvass became interesting and amusing. It was claimed for Mr. Williamson that he knew the principles of law and could combat Southern lawyers, and we Northerners had not our proportion of lawyers in Congress; most of our Representatives were farmers at home; and Mr. Williamson could do something for us, while Mr. Kinsley could not, having been there two years without saying or doing anything that was ever heard of for our benefit; and Mr. Cobb, although as clever as the day was long (except his Federal notions), would make but a poor figure and do but little good where his head swam as it would swim if he went to Congress; and as for Cooper and Mowry, they were both notorious smugglers and British agents, and unfit to represent a free people.

On the other hand, it was denied that Mr. Williamson was sufficiently acquainted with the principles of law to combat successfully the prejudices of Southern lawyers; and we Northern folks had too many of that gentry in Congress, most of whom, when at home, knew nothing about farming; then Mr. Williamson would do nothing for us more than Mr. Kinsley; but Mr. Cobb, besides being as clever as the day is long, would prove more efficient in the Government than a brigade of goose quill heroes. Then if we suffered ourselves "to be divided and scattered by such restless and ambitious men as Judge K., W. D. W., Cooper, Mowry, and the Lord knows who, we may go on to eternity without effecting an election, and to balance the evil of being represented by such truck, we might fondly realize the blessing of attending frequent town meetings."

While these and more bitter things were said of the several candidates, Mr. Larry Costigan, of Sunkhaze, continued patiently to wear a beaver hat which had been in constant service for fifty-five years. He, however, expressed the belief that he was entitled to a new one, but made no complaint that his personal qualities and qualifications had not been discussed with reference to his fitness for Congress.

On September 18th the trial was had for the election to the several offices. In Bangor Mr. Parris received 54 votes; Mr. Wingate, 36; and Mr. Whitman, 38; scattering 3. Mr Stetson received 66 votes for Senator; Mr. Case, 75. Mr. Williamson received 58 votes for Congress: Mr. Cobb, 47; Mr. Kinsley, 9. In Hampden Mr. Stetson received 147 votes; Mr. Case 2; Mr. Williamson, 6; Mr. Kinsley, 40; Mr. Cobb, 23.

Mr. Williamson received 1,823 votes against 1,816, and was elected. There was no election of Senator.

On September 4th a military election was made in Brewer of Messenger Fisher, captain of the "New Wrentham" company, vice Captain Copeland, resigned; Ensign Russell Hart, Lieutenant, and Alexander A. Fisher, Ensign.

Moses Burley established a new line of stages between Bangor and Augusta this month. The route was through Hampden, Newburg, Dixmont, Joy (Troy), Unity, Ligonía, Clinton, Winslow, and Vassalborough. It left Bangor on Thursday, at 11 o'clock, A. M., and reached Augusta on Friday at 6 P. M. Left Augusta on Wednesday at 4 o'clock, and arrived at Bangor at 10 o'clock A. M., Thursday. Fare, $4.75.

On September 12th George W. Pickering opened "new goods" at the new store opposite Messrs. L. & L. Cram's. This firm transacted business in the middle store of a wooden block of three stores, that was erected by Charles Hammond on the east side of West Market Square. In the rear of this building was the bake-house of Major David J. Bent. The building in which Mr. Pickering commenced business was completed this year. It was a frame block of two stores, and stood on the recent site of the Kenduskeag bank, occupying more ground, however. It was Mr. Pickering's place of business for many years.

The Messrs. Cram, who were doing a thriving business in all sorts of goods, found a rival in Mr. Pickering, who was a native of Bangor and popular. There was considerable competition for the trade.

Hon. Francis Carr died on October 5th, at the age of sixty-nine. He came first to Brewer from Newbury, and afterward removed to Bangor. He was a prominent citizen and politician, and represented the district in Congress.

The Supreme Judicial Court held its first session in Bangor on the first Tuesday of this month. The three Judges, Mellen, Weston, and Preble, were upon the Bench.

Chief Justice Mellen made a charge to the Grand Jury, which was published by their special request. After referring to the "mildness and equity of our laws," and the advantages the American people possessed for political and social happiness, and the necessity of vigilance in regard to the execution of the laws, and defining the various crimes and misdemeanors of which the Grand Jury were required to take notice, he called attention to several important matters, essential to the welfare of the people, over which the people, as individuals, had control—the proper training by parents and masters of those under their care; good family government; public worship on the Lord's day. The practice of attending public services on this day would produce habits of attention to those duties (of parents) and respectful deportment to all of reverence to the laws of their Maker and of the Government under which they live; it will tend to form them into good citizens, and gradually diminish the number of those who disgrace themselves by their vices and disturb the happiness and good order of the community.

"Idleness was the mother of a thousand crimes." The young should be honestly and industriously employed. Vicious and profane company corrupted not only good manners, but the heart. Another monstrous evil, which was extending its devastating influence in our country, bringing disgrace as well as ruin upon thousands, was intemperance. "Let us all do our endeavor to effect a discontinuance of this destructive practice."

The Chief Justice thought it a cause of congratulation that a term of this court was to be held annually in Bangor, for the more convenient administration of justice; that respect for the laws and confidence in those who administer them was of vital importance; that, compared with the inhabitants of any other country, we are free and happy in the proudest import of those terms; and that, "in proportion to our privileges and blessings, is our obligation to preserve them"; that the subjects he had referred to were momentous, and he trusted that "this new and interesting occasion would give them increased importance and lasting effect."

Snow fell on October 19. The sleighing was so good that Colonel Joshua Lane rode from his house in Hampden, a distance of six and a half miles, in a sleigh with three hundred pounds' weight besides himself, in fifty-five minutes.

The cattle-show was held in Bangor at the time appointed, and the "chief part of the cattle and articles exhibited would have made a respectable appearance at any cattle-show." Colonel Joshua Lane received the society's premium of $5 for butter; Captain William Comins, of Eddington, received the premium of $5 for cheese; Hon. Ephraim Goodale, of Orrington, had much credit for seventeen varieties of apples, and seven of choice pears, of his own raising. The exhibition of domestic manufactures was not gratifying to the trustees. An address was delivered by Jacob McGaw, Esq., and a copy was requested for publication, but he declined to have it published. Mr. Benjamin Bussey, of Boston, presented the society with $50, being gratified with its exhibition.

Charles Plummer took the stock of books of Daniel Pike, and opened a book-store and bindery in connection with it.

Before Mr. Williamson left the Governor's chair, he removed General Herrick from the office of Sheriff, and appointed Major Royal Clark to the place. The Portland Gazette regretted the removal of this "faithful, prompt, and intelligent officer," saying that no charge could be "brought against him but that of entertaining political opinions different from the ruling powers," and "thus we are furnished with a new illustration of the doctrine of conciliation." To this a person, signing himself "Penobscot," said that Mr. Clark was "at least as faithful, prompt, and intelligent as the late Sheriff, and would be as easily satisfied with the honest fees of office."

Out of this change of officials came a painful controversy. A writer, under the title of "Sidney No. 1—And pigmies rule," commenced by saying that he was "no office-seeker, or dependant upon office," that he was "no hot-blooded politician or religious bigot," but he had not arrived at that state of stoical philosophy that he "could view with indifference the intrigues of designing demagogues and ignorant political empirics." He had for some time seen "in our infant State combinations among little, weak, and unprincipled politicians for the mercenary purpose of procuring the individuals concerned to be elected or appointed to offices to which, by their natural diminutiveness and paucity of talents, they would never be entitled." He would warn these "Jackalents" of the fate of the frog in the fable, and would soon take notice of the article of "Penobscot."

But the notice of "Penobscot" in "Sidney No. 2" was simply an arraignment of Governor Williamson and his Council. It had been understood, when the new State was organized, that the policy of the Government in regard to officers should be conciliatory; that although the incumbents were Federalists there should be no general removal, but a portion retained, and Democrats should be appointed in the places of the other portion. In Penobscot county, as between the Sheriff and the Clerk, Governor King and his Council thought it better to retain General Herrick as Sheriff, and appoint General Hodsdon as Clerk, in place of Mr. Cobb, who was a lawyer, and had been in office a long time. But when Mr. Williamson (whom the people had no more thought of making Governor than they had of making him Grand Sultan) clomb into the Executive window he ejected from office one old faithful Sheriff, and thus at once destroyed the fabric which Governor King had so cautiously reared. He could not wait the short months until Governor Parris, whom the people had elected, came into office, but he must take advantage of his accidental power to thrust from office one against whom there was "no other evidence of his official misconduct than what could be derived from a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." He adverted to the inconsistency of the Council (in which he implicates Mr. Emerson), who, with Governor King, had sustained him, in uniting with Governor Williamson in removing him, without notice or giving him an opportunity to be heard; and as to the base insinuation of "Penobscot" of "various instances of extortion objected against him," he would reply to that hereafter.

To this a writer over the signature of "Kenduskeag" replied that the writer of Sidney was General Herrick himself; that his object was to make the people of other counties believe that he was removed for his political opinions; but Mr. Williamson and Mr. Emerson well knew what were the wishes of the people of their county in regard to him—that his removal was "demanded in that language which is, and ever ought to be irresistible." As to "the old, faithful officers" party, it was impossible to tell to which political party he belonged—both parties seemed to have passed upon him a sentence of excommunication.

In "Sidney No. 3," the writer, after saying that he inroduces individual characters not from any pleasure, but to illustrate his general doctrine "that it is not safe or prudent to put men in office who are wholly incompetent to discharge the duties of their station," he proceeds to examine the assertion of Penobscot that "in August, 1820, various instances of extortion were objected against" Herrick. The present Council had concurred in his appointment in February or March, 1821, after the subject had been canvassed for months by them, "and after every objection that could be generated by envy, jealousy, malice, and competition had been argued with the greatest force and acrimony; backed in one instance by family connexions, and in another by religious sympathy;" yet this Council, six months after the objections were made and proof offered, confirmed the appointment of General Herrick—that man "Penobscot" charged with being guilty of extortion! The writer "by exonerating them from censure in making the removal, convicts them of conniving at extortion by making the appointment."

"It would be a gross libel on the citizens of Penobscot to assert that they could sympathize with Mr. Williamson in his personal hostility to General Herrick, or with the Council in their oscillating policy." He then enumerated the moral, intellectual, and physical qualities necessary in a Sheriff, all which General Herrick possessed, and although Major Clark might possess them yet the question of the removal was one between the people and the Executive.

In "Sidney—No. 4," the writer has some general remarks in regard to the indulgence of party spirit. In time of peace we should prepare for war. Party zeal had somewhat subsided now, but opposition was arising in the South against John Quincy Adams as a candidate for the Presidency; and from the intemperance with which the South pursued the Missouri question, we could not expect the calm long to continue. As to "Kenduskeag's" communication, as he "did not wield an assassin's dagger, but a chastising rod, he must be excused if he did not take much notice of it."

Mr. Williamson was so much annoyed by the "Sidney" criticisms that he made an effort to procure the name of the writer of those papers, by threatening the printer in the following note:

BANGOR, November 21, 1821.

MR. JAMES BURTON, SIR:—As you in your last Register published libellous matter on my character, nothing else will satisfy me and the public than that you immediately make in your paper a satisfactory apology and confession for the wrong you have done, give up the real name of the writer under the signature "Sidney," or answer it yourself at the next term of the Supreme Judicial Court in this County.

I am yours, &c.,

WM. D. WILLIAMSON.

Mr. Burton said he had "endeavored to avoid all personal abuse and 'libellous matter,' and thought that in this, as yet, he had been perfectly successful—that 'Sidney' was personally unknown to him, but he hoped that, if necessary, he would come forward with his name. Such was his 'apology,' etc."

"Sidney" came forward in No. 5 with a severe castigation of Mr. Williamson for this attempt to interfere with the liberty of the press. Was it possible that he "is so ignorant of the dispositions of freemen and of the nature of our republican institutions as to imagine that he can stop the mouths of freemen and deter them from writing their thoughts freely on the subject of his official misconduct? Does he really think that he has become Pope or Emperor, and that by the word of his power or the majesty of his name, he can awe them into silence? Vain and impotent attempt of an impotent mind!" He assumed that Mr. Williamson was "Kenduskeag," and denied his charge that he had tried to mislead the people and make them believe that the removal of General Herrick was in consequence of his political opinions. This was not true, for he had "e-established the fact that the removal was without any cause, either political, natural, or moral."

In "Sidney—No. 6," which is the last of these papers, the writer undertakes to show, among other things, that the act of Mr. Williamson in removing General Herrick was "in opposition to the spirit of the Constitution," because he was not elected to that office, and it was not one of the "duties" devolving upon an accidental Governor, such as he, to remove officers appointed by legitimate Governors.

The propositions of this writer were not replied to, excepting when he illustrated them by referring to the case of Williamson and Herrick. Then the friends of Mr. Williamson felt called upon to reply. A writer over the name of "December" justified the removal of General Herrick by citing a case of extortion, saying that "for some time past General Herrick had been in the practice of taking too much fees." An instance had accidentally come to his knowledge "where the fees charged on twelve small precepts were $18.21, and the legal fees on the same precepts were only $11.60," making the sum of "extorted fees" $6.61. From that he argued that if the Sheriff's fees in one year amounted to $1,500, at that rate the amount of extorted fees would be $854.74; and in five years, to $4,273.70! He inquired if General Herrick was not a bankrupt when first appointed (five years before), and if so, how he had maintained his family, paid his debts, and become rich in so short a time unless he did it by taking too much fees and hiring deputies by the month?

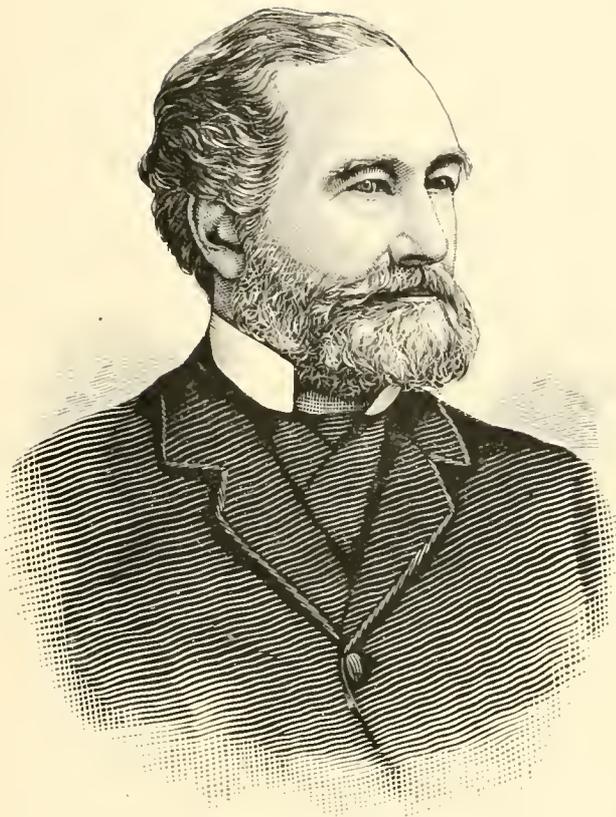

A friend of Mr. Burton, the printer, at this stage takes up the cudgel against Mr. Williamson under the name of "Sidney Secundus," in a bit of irony. He places the Governor in the category with George the Fourth, who was going to war with Spain because a Spanish newspaper said his majesty was about marrying a young princess eighteen years of age, and added "that the news can excite no surprise, since there are persons to whom all crimes are permitted, and who, although the objects of general execration, nevertheless enjoy all the favors of fortune." The Spaniards "saw no matter of prosecution in the act alleged," and could not give England satisfaction by punishing the printer. The writer was at a loss at first to know for what "libellous matter" he was to be called before the Supreme Court. But on looking back through the papers of Sidney he found that he had charged his Excellency with "climbing into the Executive window," and as we are told that "he who entereth not by the door, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber," there was no manner of doubt that Mr. Sidney had been guilty of writing and Mr. Burton of printing "libellous matter" against Mr. Williamson.

Now although Sidney had completed his strictures, yet Gen. Herrick had something to say. "December" had touched him to the quick. He found much fault with Mr. Burton for withholding from him the names of his scurrilous and malicious slanderers, and thought the manner in which he had performed the duties of the "highly responsible and somewhat difficult office of Sheriff for five years, was sufficient answer to their charges. That specific allegation of taking $6.61 illegal fees had been made against him when he was a candidate for appointment, and when the facts were understood had no weight, and 'December' knew that a disclosure of the whole truth would have convicted him of falsehood, and proved the villainous character of the charge." Respect for the feelings of others not connected with the discussion, prevented him from giving the facts himself. The manifestations of respect of the field officers of the brigade showed their confidence in him. All the emoluments of his office made a gross average of $11.35 per annum, from which must be deducted a loss of twenty per cent. for bad debts and traveling expenses. As his supporting his family, paying his debts, and becoming rich, were matters of innocent speculation, his enemies might pursue it as long as it would give them amusement or satisfaction.

Two other articles from "December" and "Penobscot," brought this exciting controversy to a close. The criticism to be made of it is, that, like all political controversies, where there is some private grief, the principal parties did not have sufficient self-control. After the controversy was over they stood with the public as well as they did before it began. Governor Williamson had the same right to remove General Herrick that General Jackson had to remove a great many officers whose term had not expired; and it was well understood that the charges against General Herrick were on account of the malfeasance of some of his subordinates. They both had their political friends and political enemies, and continued to have so long as they continued in political life. They were both valuable members of the community. They now "rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

The militia system was considered burthensome by many of the people. The men capable of performing duty were called out about three times a year, and as none but volunteer companies appeared in uniform there was nothing to create any enthusiasm in the privates. Very few, except very young men aspiring to the offices, took any interest in the drill; the appearance of a militia company in the street was a subject of burlesque: the time spent was considered by many as so much money lost; and the annual musters were deemed the occasion of much immorality. They afforded great amusement to crowds of men, women, and children who came from long distances—some to sell pumpkin pies, gingerbread, cider, apples, molasses candy, and such other com-estibles as a hungry rabble would be compelled to purchase for want of better—some to sell liquors—some to encourage gaming and to gamble—some to sell knick-knacks from carts—some to fiddle and some to dance—and all to hear the music and the noise and to see what was to be seen. The general and his staff, the field officers, and the volunteer companies were the admiration of the boys and girls and childish adults, and the maneuvering of the troops sometimes attracted attention; but there was a growing feeling that the benefits derived from these displays were not sufficient to warrant their being sustained by the State. Consequently much litigation grew out of the neglect of individuals to perform military duty when summoned, and some insubordination among the officers.

J. E. Chapman

A court-martial was held at Hampden on November 10, for the trial of Colonel Ziba Marsh, of Orono, for neglecting to call out his company in 1820; for neglecting to make out the annual inspection return; for neglecting to take the oath to qualify him for the duties of his office; and for neglecting to call out and appear with his company at the muster in October of that year—in other words with treating the whole matter with contempt, and he further manifested his contempt by not appearing at the trial, whereupon the court proceeded to try and find him guilty of all but the first charge, and to sentence him to be divested of his commission and to be disqualified from holding any office in the militia for five years. It is to be presumed that he treated the conclusion with the same contempt with which he had treated the preliminaries.

Captain Rufus Holbrook, of the artillery, also came under discipline. He was arrested by Brigadier-General Trafton for setting on foot a combination to resist the orders of a commissioned officer, for wilfully oppressing those under his command, and for other misdemeanors. General Herrick relieved Holbrook from arrest and ordered a court of inquiry.

General Herrick, who had been detained from the reviews by the indisposition of his family, from the reports made to him of the improvement of the troops in discipline and tactics felt it his duty to compliment them.

The receipts for the Theological Seminary between April 1 and October 9, from subscriptions, donations, and public collections, were $1,505.69.

CHAPTER XV.

Albion K. Parris Governor of Maine Earthquake—Wilmot Wood—Theological Seminary Subscriptions—Annual Election—Cattle in Streets—School Money—Broad-rimmed Wheels—Court of Common Pleas—Orrington Rifle Company—Annexation of Frankfort—Drum and Fife Serenaders—Artillery Election—Captain Holbrook's Court of Inquiry—Bangor Bank Suspension—Sharp Criticisms—Bank Resumes—Davis & Weed—Main Street—Sale of Pews in First Meeting House—Captain Williams's Artillery Celebrates the "Fourth"—Hon. Martin Kinsley Appointed Judge of Probate—Academy—Seminary Exhibition—State Election—Supreme Judicial Court—Appleford Case—Death of John Emerson—Death of Lothrop Lewis—Massachusetts Commissioners—Sheriff Clark becomes Gaoler—Gaal Broken—John Godfrey Appointed Chief Justice Court of Sessions—Cattle Show—Posting Drunkards—Deaf and Dumb Portrait Painter—Brewster—A Young Lady's Poetry.

1822. On the 4th of January, 1822, Albion K. Parris was qualified as Governor of Maine. He was the fifth individual who had held that office in the new State within the first year of its existence. The first was William King, elected by the people; the second, William D. Williamson, the second President of the Senate in 1821, and, by virtue thereof, was inducted into the Gubernatorial chair because of the resignation of Governor King to accept the office of Commissioner on the Spanish Treaty; the third was Benjamin Ames, Speaker of the House, on whom devolved the duties of Governor on Mr. Williamson's resignation to accept a seat in Congress; the fourth was Daniel Rose, who was elected President of the Senate on the assembling of the Legislature of 1822, when Mr. Ames's authority ceased; and the fifth was Albion K. Parris, elected by the people.

A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in Bangor on the 28th between 1 and 2 o'clock A. M.

In February Wilmot Wood, from Wiscasset, established himself in Bangor in the practice of law.

The subscriptions and donations for the Theological Seminary between October 9, 1821, and March 9, 1822, amounted to $1,604.13.

At the annual meeting Alexander Savage was chosen Town Clerk; Amos Patten, Treasurer; William Emerson, Agent; Allen Gilman, Wiggins Hill, and James Tilton, Selectmen, Assessors, and Overseers of the Poor; Harvey Loomis, Hosea Rich, and Allen Gilman, Superintending School Committee. The amount of moneys appropriated was, for schools, $800; Rev. Mr. Loomis's salary, $840; town charges, $800; for the Bridge Company, $400; to build a bridge across the Kenduskeag at Six-mile Falls, $200; for highways, $1,500.

Cattle were prohibited from running at large in the streets within half a mile from the Kenduskeag bridge between the first days of December and April, and during the remainder of the year between 8 o'clock P. M. and sunrise.

It was voted to pay the Treasurer $25 for his services during the year.

Moses Patten was refused the privilege of receiving and appropriating his proportion of the school money to the private instruction of his children. He lived upon the Levant road about two miles from any school, and sent his children to the Young Ladies' Academy, of which Mr. Willard was preceptor.

It was voted that the Selectmen allow a premium to "any person or persons" who would use exclusively "broad-rimmed wheels," not exceeding, however, $6 for the first year.

Ezekiel Whitman, of Portland; Samuel E. Smith, of Wiscasset; and David Perham, of Brewer, were appointed Judges of the Court of Common Pleas.

The Orrington Rifle Company on April 5 elected for officers David Nickerson, second, captain; Hiram Nourse, lieutenant; Seth Eldridge, ensign. They partook of a dinner at Captain Atwood's, and among the sentiments given was:

"The Orrington Rifle Company—May their example be the means of assisting in the dissemination of that patriotism which shall wipe from Penobscot the disgrace of former transactions."

This referred to the affair at Hampden in 1814, of which military men felt quite enough ashamed. This company became remarkably efficient in drill, and attracted much admiration for years, whenever it appeared. Its uniform was of green, and its movements were those of a perfect machine.

An attempt was made this year to procure the annexation of Frankfort to Penobscot county. Hancock county opposed it, and very much interest was not manifested by Penobscot county in favor of it; therefore Frankfort continued a part of Hancock county until Waldo county was incorporated, when it constituted a part of that.

The proprietors of Kenduskeag Point laid out their lands into house and store lots, and offered two hundred for sale. In their advertisement they say that "the town, which till recently was scarcely known, has now a bank, Court-house, and other establishments in it of public utility, and is assuming rank among the important places of business in the new State."

The village had not yet become so large that two people behind that number of drums, with a persistent fifer, could fail to make themselves heard by a large portion of the population. And as there were at least that number of men who during the evenings of the month of May devoted their energies to developing the resources of a great and little drum to a fife accompaniment, it is not to be wondered at that there was at length an uprising of such of the people as in consequence of the devotion of these men were unable to sleep after they had retired to their beds. One unmusical individual of this species made a public remonstrance against it, declaring that he considered it an evil thing, and a great annoyance, that every man, woman, and child in the village, whether sick or well, asleep or awake, dead or alive, should be compelled, volens volens, to become hearers."

The occasion of it, perhaps, was the endeavor of a few to keep up the military spirit, which required these noisy appliances. The Bangor artillery having lost its captain, George W. Brown, by resignation, came together this month and elected Lieutenant John Williams captain, John Sargent, lieutenant; and Daniel Dole, second lieutenant. Captain Williams possessed much military ardor and a firm belief in all expedients necessary to create martial enthusiasm. It is not presumed that he was the remonstrant against the nocturnal harmonies of the drums and fife, who gave utterance to the indignant language above quoted.

The Court of Inquiry ordered by General Herrick reported that a court-martial for the trial of Captain Holbrook was expedient. It was thought, however, that Captain Holbrook would remove from the State and avoid the consequences of a finding against him. His discharge from arrest by General Herrick was the occasion of severe strictures upon the conduct of that officer.

In June the little community was startled by rumors involving the solvency of the Bangor Bank. This institution had been established in order to aid the business men; but, the capital being small, it was deemed necessary, to carry out the intentions of its Directors, to have an agent in Boston, and capitalists who would render them aid when it was wanted.

The Directors of the bank were Samuel E. Dutton, Eliashib Adams, Thomas A. Hill, John Barker, and Joseph Leavitt. Mr. Dutton was President, and Mr. Adams Cashier.

The capital stock was $100,000, and divided into 1,000 shares. Eliashib Adams was the owner of 75 shares; John Barker of 30, Samuel E. Dutton of 200; Thomas A. Hill of 85; Joseph Leavitt of 104; Ashur Adams, of Boston, of 134; E. T. Andrews, of Boston, of 166; John French, of Boston, of 100; Martin Kinsley, of Hampden, of 20; Isaac Case, of Levant, of 3; S. S. Crosby, of Bangor, of 30; David J. Bent of 18; Moses Patten of 5; Daniel Kimball of 5; John Godfrey of 3; Maine Charity School of 30. The Boston stockholders were the agents in that city. Mr. Adams was the acting agent, and received a compensation of $350 per annum and a commission of a quarter per cent. Messrs. Andrews and French assisted in managing the funds, but received no compensation. Mr. Adams and some debtors of the bank failed, consequently suspicion arose in regard to the effect upon the bank. The bills had been redeemed at the New England Bank, at a discount. This bank presently stopped redeeming, and the credit of the Bangor Bank suffered.

There had been the failure of the Castine Bank, of the Hallowell Bank, and of other country banks in Massachusetts, and when the report of the failure of the Bangor Bank became current in Boston there was much excitement. A large meeting of the holders of its bills was held at the Marlboro Hotel on June 13, and a committee was appointed to investigate the proceedings of the bank. The newspapers commented severely upon the failure, as they called it, and without knowing anything of the facts, favored the worst suspicions. Messrs. Andrews and French were called upon to answer questions implying wrong-doing, and representations were made of the distress of poor laborers who held the bills and could get rid of them only at a large discount, while their families were crying for bread.

Messrs. Andrews and French were honorable gentlemen, and disposed to do what they could to aid the bank and relieve the community; but as they could not do everything in a day, they published a card, simply denying the imputation of the questions, and asking the public to suspend its judgment until an investigation could be made, and giving it as their opinion that the bills would be paid in full. The Directors of the bank also published a card saying that the losses by the failures in Boston were not so great as was at first apprehended, and they were making every exertion to resume specie payments, which they hoped to be able to do in a few months.

While the investigation was in progress the New England Galaxy—the Thersites of newspapers—under the charge of Joseph T. Buckingham, came into the arena. "One would think," it said, "to judge from the quantity of bills in circulation, that all the specie in the United States was deposited in Bangor. A person to whom this observation was made, remarked that it might be so, but he doubted it—Bangor was a little village of about twenty buildings, scattered on the banks of the Penobscot River, in the same manner that we would suppose a parcel of frogs would collect round a mud-puddle in spring. There were, three years ago, about as many shop-keepers in the place as were wanted for directors of the bank; and they were probably located there for that purpose. These store-keepers sell their goods for lumber entirely; they send their lumber to sell here, and with the proceeds purchase more goods; that if there was as much specie as the bills seem to indicate, it kept in the bank, there was none to be seen in the village. Lumber is a 'legal tender' there, would buy any goods or pay any debts, and that he could not see why they wanted a bank at all; unless, indeed, they made their bills payable in lumber, and had the bank vaults filled with clapboards, shingles, boards, etc."

This aroused the indignation of a Bangor writer, who had feared the reputation of his town would suffer from the failure of the bank, but he "did not anticipate such terrible destruction! What! to be reduced instanter from a thriving and populous town—the shire town of the county of Penobscot, having a Court-house, gaol, and just now a new and elegant meeting-house, a theological institution, a Young Ladies' Academy, public and private schools, more or less, an atheneum or reading-room, a social library, a post-office and printing-office, flour-mills, clothing-mills, carding machines (not to mention saw-mills, for we are allowed to have lumber), and most of the useful mechanics; twenty mercantile stores, twelve or fifteen wharves, public squares, eight-rod streets, etc., etc., to say nothing of eight lawyers and all the concomitant evils of sheriffs, notaries, coroners, and constables—to be reduced to a little village, to be all swept away at one fell swoop, saving and excepting twenty buildings, scattered like frogs round a mud-puddle!"

"But why all this denunciation of Bangor, because, forsooth, three men of the great city of Boston and five men of the little village of Bangor have issued more notes than they were able to redeem? What! has no person a right to become bankrupt but the merchants of Boston?"

The Boston Committee made a report on the 15th of July exonerating the Directors from any unfairness, and were satisfied that they had made every exertion to preserve the credit of the bank; they had given their responsibility to their agents in Boston for $46,000, and their bills were dishonored without notice to provide further funds. They condemned the practice of country banks, which had been adopted by the Bangor bank, of entrusting the management of the business to agents remote from the location of the bank, as in their opinion "pregnant with evil." The Directors had given assurances that all their bills of a less denomination than five dollars should be paid by the first day of the next October, and all others by the first day of the next December, with interest on all, and these assurances the committee thought might be relied on. Not more than twenty per cent. of the capital stock could be absorbed by the losses made or apprehended, and they saw no reason to doubt the solvency of the bank; and they had full confidence in the honorable intentions of the directors.

On the 28th of November Thomas A. Hill, per order, published a notice in the Boston papers and in the Eastern Argus, that the bank had resumed specie payments and had abundant means in Boston to continue their business with entire security to the public. Mr. Leavitt made a note in his journal on December 28, that the bank was "in good repute and the stock at par value."

On June 20 Zadock Davis and Benjamin Weed gave notice that they had erected a building near the hay-scales on the westerly side of the Kenduskeag, where they kept for sale boots, shoes, and leather, and Mr. Davis added a gentle hint to his customers that June was "drawing rapidly to a close."

At this time John Reynolds's tailoring shop was on the southerly side of Main street say forty or fifty feet from the corner of West Market Place; a little further up the street was Simon Harriman's blacksmith shop; next were the hay-scales; then Davis & Weed's building; next Hill & Dole's cabinet-maker's shop (nearly opposite the Hatch House); next a vacant lot; next Thomas A. Hill's residence; next John Barker's buildings, which extended nearly to Water street. There were vacant places between the shops and buildings of greater or less extent.

The pews of the First Parish Meeting House were sold on June 24 for $10,878. The cost of the land and building was about $8,000.

The subscriptions and donations to the Theological Seminary between March 9 and June 9, amounted to $1,182.16, besides books, papers, and clothing of considerable value.

Captain John Williams and his Artillery Company did not permit the anniversary of American Independence to pass unobserved. At sunrise those citizens who had succeeded in sleeping through the uproar created by the boys during the night, were aroused by a patriotic peal of the guns. At eight o'clock the company paraded in full uniform, and performed a variety of evolutions. At noon "they fired a national salute of twenty-four guns, which made the welkin ring." At two o'clock they sat down to partake of the green peas of Mr. Chick and other dainties that he had provided for their patriotic appetites. The sentiments did full honor to the American Eagle. Among them were:

"The Day: May it continue a jubilee to the last syllable of recorded time.

"The Signers of the Declaration of Independence: May the scroll which preserves their names be held sacred,

"Till Nature's self the Vandal torch shall raise,
And the vast alcove of creation blaze."

"The American Fair: May their smiles encourage, their hearts admire, and their virtues reward patriotism and valor."

General Holman, of Massachusetts, and Colonel Lewis, of Gorham, Commissioners to survey the four ranges of townships north of the Bingham Lottery lands, and to explore other lands owned in common by Maine and Massachusetts, were in Bangor on business connected with their commission.

Hon. Martin Kinsley was appointed by the Governor Judge of Probate for the county of Penobscot.

Luther H. Hills, a prominent merchant, died of pulmonary consumption July 14, at the age of thirty-one. He had many friends, and his death occasioned great sorrow throughout the town.

On the 17th, the First Parish Meeting House was dedicated.

Mr. Chick's green corn came upon the table on the 31st of July.

The Young Ladies' Academy, since Mr. Baldwin left it, had been under the charge of Mr. Willard until the summer of this year. Mr. Josiah Brewer became the Preceptor of the school, and commenced the fall term on the 5th of September.

The annual exhibition of the Theological Seminary occurred on the 28th of August, in the First Parish house of worship. The attendance was large, and the performances were very satisfactory. The candidates for the ministry were Ingalls, Merrill, Shelden, Wilcox, and Chapin. Their orations were sensible and entertaining. These gentlemen obtained settlements and were useful ministers.

On September 9th occurred the annual election of State officers. The vote of Bangor was for Albion K. Parris for Governor, 77; Ezekiel Whitman, 31; Joshua Wingate, 9.

For Senator, Isaac Case received 62 votes; Benjamin Nourse, 55.

For Representative to the Legislature, Samuel Call received 73 votes; Joseph Treat, 45.

John Wilkins received 60 votes for County Treasurer.

Governor Parris was re-elected. Messrs. Case, Call, and Wilkins were elected to the offices for which they were candidates.

The Supreme Court commenced its fall session on the first Tuesday of October, with Chief Justice Mellen and Justice Weston upon the Bench. At this session a case was tried which attracted unusual attention.

Stephen Appleford was indicted for assault and battery, the abduction and false imprisonment of a child alleged to be Ruth Ames, the daughter of Daniel and Mary Ames, of the age of three years and ten months. Attorney-General Foote conducted the case in behalf of the Government, and the celebrated Benjamin Orr, of Brunswick, was assigned as the counsel of Appleford. The Court-house was thronged during the trial—the galleries being filled with ladies.

The facts proved to the court were, that on the 6th day of June Mrs. Ames sent the child to a neighbor's, who lived about half a mile distant, to carry a towel. On the road was a small wood through which the child passed, and the mother watched her until she had gone through and nearly reached the house to which she was sent. From this time nothing more was seen or heard of the child. Alarmed at her not returning, the mother went in pursuit of her, and found that she had not been to the house, whereupon the neighborhood was aroused, and a search was instituted. The people of seven or eight of the neighboring towns, hearing of the loss, and full of sympathy for the distracted parents, united in the search. The woods, the streams, and every place were examined, but without success. As many as three hundred persons were engaged in the search for two days, when they gave it up in despair, believing the child had become the food of the wolf or some other ferocious animal of the woods.

After the lapse of eleven weeks a report reached the parents in Sangerville that a man by the name of Appleford—a sort of vagabond—had appeared in Hallowell with a child answering to the description of that they had lost. The father immediately went to Hallowell to ascertain whether it was indeed his. He did not recognize it. Its hair was short, while Ruth's was long; and he found no scar upon her hand, such as his daughter had; and he immediately went home. But the mother had made up her mind that it could be none other than her child. She clung to this last hope, and would not relinquish it. She insisted that the child at Hallowell should be sent for and brought to Sangerville. A man by the name of Oaks was despatched to Hallowell to bring the child, armed with this description of her person: "Description of Ruth Ames, who was lost on the 6th of June, 1822, aged three years and ten months when lost. Middling as to size; rather clumsy in body and limbs; very light hair; light blue eyes; had scars on its right hand, the forefinger, little finger, and thumb; the thumb shorter than the other, scarred by burning; was scarred on its belly; reels when it walks; could not talk distinctly. Taken as Mr. and Mrs. Ames gave in. Guy Carlton."

The parents told Mr. Carlton they could recollect no other mark. Oaks brought the child to Sangerville at the instance of the Selectmen, notwithstanding difference was found in the length of the thumb, and no distinct marks could be found upon it corresponding to those in the description, though some thought there was a slight scar on the hand and some marks upon the body. But there was a wart, a scar of a boil on the left hip, and a scar of vaccination on this child. Oaks testified that, in reply to his questions, the child sometimes called her name Mary Clifford, sometimes Mary Stafford, and sometimes

Ruth Ames; that she named the house to which she was sent on the 6th of June; that she said that Appleford was not her father; that when brought to Sangerville, Mr. and Mrs. Ames, with a crowd of other people, met her at a house about a mile distant from their own; that a ring was formed about her by persons of both sexes, and when she was asked which was her mother she stretched her hands towards Mrs. Ames and wished to go to her. On the road she had called several middle-aged women mother, and one or two old ladies grandmother. Oaks said that Appleford claimed that the name of the child was Sally Appleford. He followed the child to Sangerville, and was in the room when the child appeared to recognize Mrs. Ames as its mother.

Mrs. Ames testified that at first she had painful misgivings as to whether it was her child. Her doubts continued for several days. But she identified it by its age, size, expression of countenance, color of the hair and eyes and complexion, by a wart on the left hand, by a small scar of vaccination on the left arm, by a scar of a boil on the left hip, by slight scars of a scald on the breast and abdomen, and by some faint traces of a burn on the left hand; that soon after her return the child recognized her clothing and toys, among which were some bits of calico that she accurately drew from a parcel, leaving the rest as not her own, that she asked for calico which was formerly in a basket that she recognized, that she gave a correct account of the breaking one of her toys, for which she had been chastised, that there were instances of her recollecting places, persons, and events, although in this she did not manifest any extraordinary quickness or excitement, that she was a lively, playful child, and would readily go to any one who showed her a kindness, but did not give a clear account of where she had been, that she—the mother—now felt confident that the child was her own, and had as much affection for her as she had for any other of her children.

It was proved in defense that on the 8th and 9th of June, four days after the child was lost, Appleford was in Wrentham, Massachusetts, nearly three hundred miles from Sangerville, with a child of the apparent size, age, and appearance of that taken from him at Hallowell, that when she was taken from him he insisted that she was his own flesh and blood, but gave his consent that she might be taken to Mrs. Ames to satisfy her that it was not the child she had lost.

He represented himself to be an Englishman by birth, that his wife had recently died in the State of New York, that he had formerly worked for Dr. Vaughan in Hallowell, that he had lived in Buffalo and in Lewiston, near Lake Ontario; that he had left there in the spring with the child to come to Hallowell, and that he came by way of Albany and received assistance on the way.

Three or four witnesses testified that he was in Wrentham as early as the 10th of June with a child resembling this. It was proved that he manifested great affection for the child, and that he was anxious in regard to it; that he reached Sangerville in advance of her.

The evidence was such that Mr. Orr was willing to submit the case to the jury without remarks. He, as well as many others, were satisfied that a case had not been made out, but the jury were not able to agree.

Appleford was a very ignorant and somewhat simple man. He had been confined in jail for his alleged offence; he had no money, no friends. When the case was understood, the sympathies of many went out to him; they could not believe that he was other than the father of the child, and that the yearning of Mrs. Ames for her lost one had led her to the conclusion that this was her child against the first evidence of her senses.

The interest in the trial was enhanced by the manner in which it was tried. The Attorney-General, a conceited man, with a piping voice, but of much ability, succeeded in so shaping the evidence as to obfuscate some members of the jury, notwithstanding the efforts of Mr. Orr to have it receive its natural construction. The sharp repartees and sarcasm of this gentleman would have sorely disturbed most men, but the conceit of the attorney was proof against all.

Appleford was ordered to recognize for his appearance at the next term of the court. Some gentlemen became his bail, and it was not long after the case was reported in the newspapers before evidence came from abroad sustaining Appleford's statements conclusively. Rev. John Marsh, minister of Haddam, Connecticut, testified that he saw Appleford with his child in Attleborough, Massachusetts, on the 5th of June, and that he said that he had buried his wife on the banks of Ontario, and had brought Sally in his arms and on his back to that place. Robert Anderson, Supervisor of Gaines, New York, certified that Stephen Appleford's wife Betsey died there in February, 1822, and that Appleford, with his child Sally, left and went to parts unknown. A letter from Fitch Chamberlain, of Gaines, to a gentleman in Bangor, gave the history of Appleford, described the child, stated that the parents had been in his employ in harvesting, and that he left in March, 1822. Affidavits of Oliver Booth, Overseer of the Poor of Gaines, and others, said that the family were foreigners and paupers; that the wife died as above stated, and the father and child left for Canada, but had been heard from traveling East, and fully describing the child.

The evidence received was so conclusive that the Attorney-General signified his intention of entering a nolle prosequi at the next term of the court, and an application was made to Judge Weston at Augusta for a writ of habeas corpus. It was granted, and Daniel Ames himself came to the conclusion that, although it was a very mysterious affair, the child could not be that which he lost. He therefore surrendered her with this note:

To Mr. Stephen Appleford: This may signify to you that I voluntarily give up to you SALLY APPLEFORD, as she is called, whom you claim to be your daughter, and whom I have been required by a writ of Habeas Corpus, issued by Judge Weston, to bring before him immediately—And I do hereby relinquish all claim to said child, and engage never more to reclaim her, nor to require any compensation for her board or damages of you for any supposed caption of her, the said S. Appleford.

DAVID AMES.

Sangerville, Feb., 1823.

On the 4th of October John Emerson, a merchant of the firm of John & William Emerson, died. He was a man of position in the community, and his loss was deeply lamented. His age was forty-five.

In the next week, October 9, occurred the death of Hon. Lothrop Lewis, in this town, at the age of fifty-eight. He had the confidence of the governments of Maine and Massachusetts, and had held several responsible positions under both. At the time of his death he was serving as Commissioner under the act of separation, on the part of Maine, in surveying lands, preparatory to setting off to Maine those of the value of $30,000 as an indemnity for the assumption of payment of the annuities to the Penobscot Indians. General Holman was the Commissioner on the part of Massachusetts. The residence of Colonel Lewis was Gorham. His death was sudden and unexpected. In his death the State lost a valuable servant.

In October Messrs. Lincoln, Bliss, and Holman, of Massachusetts, Messrs. Bridge and Porter of Maine, Commissioners under the act of separation, with James L. Child, Secretary of the Board, made a three days' inspection of the public lands as far as Passadumkeag.

Major Royal Clark, Sheriff of the county, assumed the duties of jailer. But the dignity of the former office brought no additional strength to the latter in securing prisoners. The Major arose on the morning of October 12th to find that a forger, a fighter, and a thief had each walked through the wooden walls of the jail, and left nothing for him to do but offer a reward of $40 for their return to his keeping.

John Godfrey was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Enoch Brown.

On the 17th October the annual cattle show of the Penobscot Agricultural Society was held in town. Much interest was taken in the exhibition. The committee were of opinion that in the eighteen months of its existence, the condition of the society was better than that of any "of the older and wealthier counties of the State." Benjamin Bussey, of Roxbury, and Amasa Stetson, of Dorchester, each gave the society $50. The gift of the latter was to be expended in premiums for the best essays on clearing new lands, with particular reference to avoiding injury by fires to lands not intended to be cleared.

Major Clark was again astonished on the morning of the 6th of November to find that a counterfeiter and two thieves had manifested their dissatisfaction with their quarters and his strict surveillance, by leaving the gaol on the night before, and giving him an opportunity to offer $100 for their return. At the rate the offers were accumulating, it would not be long before they would amount to a sum large enough to build a gaol from which no prisoner could escape—that is, if the prisoners should not be captured.

It was customary in these years for the Selectmen of towns to caution retailers of liquor against supplying persons addicted to excessive drinking, whom they named, without regard to the feelings of their families; as if the exposure of a person lost to all sense of shame or the community would be benefited by it. It would have been sufficient to publicly caution the sellers of liquor by the glass, not to sell to any such; and avoided subjecting their friends to mortification by publishing their names.

Mr. John Brewster, a portrait painter, deaf and dumb, and a gentlemanly person, appeared in town in November, and gave notice that if any would please to call, they would "be pleased with the striking likenesses of his, and with the reasonableness of his prices," and if there was "no application made to him within ten days, he would leave the town." Applications were made and the prices suited.

A young lady was informed that she was no favorite of the muses, when in good faith she wrote the following lines, and many more like them, On the Approach of Winter:

Winter! stern winter comes in advance
A month or more 'fore nominal time,
And forces the mind's eye to a glance
Centripetal, to more Southern clime.

But, then! the thoughts on health are cast,
Nay life—chief good to man—of course.
And bids avoid th' pestiferous blast,
With more than centrifugal force.

CHAPTER XVI.

Mr. Williamson in Congress—Movement for Fortifying Penobscot River—Agents for Settlement of Massachusetts's Claim on Account of War of 1812—Annual Town Meeting—Gun-house—Crow Bounty—Republican (Democratic) Controversy about Representative to Congress—Emerson and Kidder Nominated—Williamson Withdraws in Favor of Somerset—Kidder Elected—Bovee Dodds opens a School—John C. Mayhew Elected Lieutenant of Artillery—Gaol Limits—A Carper—Earthquake—Fourth of July—"Independent Volunteers"—Standard Presented—Northwest Avenue—School Among the Penobscot Indians—Singular Confession and Retraction—Unitarian Society—Baptist Society—Levi Cram Elected Captain of Artillery—Davis & Weed—General Trafton's Sword—Senatorial and Representative Divisions—State Election—Hammond Street Cemetery Discontinued—Death of John Giddings—Singular Case of Mr. Gotobed et al.—Death of Nathan Parsons—Agricultural Society Exhibition—Bangor Bank—Daniel Cole Elected Captain of Artillery—Mr. Coburn and Bangor Academy Exhibition—William Hammatt—Gilman Harriman—John Reynolds—Complaint of the Land Agent—Loafers—Jealousy—Indians—Candidates for Representative and Electors—General Treat Elected to the Legislature—Adams Electors Chosen in the County—Brewer Congregational Meeting-house Built—Newell Bean, Gaoler—Abel M. Quimby, Preceptor—Davis & Weed—Lumber Business—Good Season.

1823. Mr. Williamson called the attention of Congress to the defenseless situation of the people upon the Penobscot River in the time of war, and obtained the passage of a resolve in the House that the President be required to cause a survey to be made of the Bay and river, and to determine in regard to the expediency of constructing a battery or other fortification in or near Prospect, on the west side of the river.

This was the inception of the measures that resulted in the erection of Fort Knox, a work that is much neglected, while by this time it should be near completion.

Mr. Zadock Davis, shoe-dealer, published his pronunciamento to his debtors in January, 1823. His allusions to lawyers and deputy sheriffs contained much that was alluring to those useful members of society, while they had a stimulating effect upon many delinquent men of business, who were standing upon foundations made by him and his partner—Weed—and which only lawyers and deputy sheriffs could shake.

The Governor and Council appointed William King agent on the subject of claims for reimbursement to Massachusetts of expenses incurred in the War of 1812, and John Godfrey and Isaac Hodsdon to settle the claims assigned by Massachusetts to this State for Penobscot county.

At the annual town meeting Wiggins Hill, James Tilton, and Isaac Hodsdon were elected Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor; Alexander Savage was elected Town Clerk; Amos Patten, Treasurer; John Godfrey, Town Agent; Harvey Loomis, William D. Williamson, and Hosea Rich, Superintending School Committee. The number of Tythingmen had now become reduced to three. These were Eliashib Adams, Royal Clark, William Lowder. Moneys were appropriated for schools, $1,200; for highways, $2,000; for town charges, $600; for repair of bridge over brook above Lover's Leap, $25.

The gun-house stood on land at the intersection of Hammond and High streets. A committee was raised to ascertain what title could be obtained to that land.

On the same day the town voted to pay a bounty of twenty-five cents for each crow killed in town.

A difficulty arose between the Republican electors of Somerset and Penobscot in regard to a candidate for Representative to Congress from this District. A convention at Dexter, on March 6th, nominated William Emerson, of Bangor; another convention at Norridgewock, on March 12th, nominated David Kidder, of Norridgewock.

The reasons given for this last nomination were that Somerset was the elder and larger county of the two, and entitled to the first Representative; that the representatives of the two counties at Portland, when it was arranged to have the convention at Dexter, so understood it; that on the day of the convention there was a violent storm of rain, and "the delegates from the county of Penobscot, taking advantage of their local situation and the inclemency of the weather, were, in the midst of power, disposed to forget right; and that then, after several trials, Mr. Emerson was nominated by a majority of but one.

By no less than five friends of Mr. Emerson were most of these statements denied; it was said that his nomination was perfectly fair; that he "was honest, capable, had ever been the friend of the people, and done more for the section of the country where he lived than any other man." But a friend of Mr. Williamson did not approve the nomination of a supporter of a duellist—Mr. Crawford—for the Presidency, as Mr. Emerson was, when Mr. Williamson, "a man of moral and religious principle," who from principle would support the best man for President, had "represented Penobscot in the last Congress to the entire satisfaction of all his constituents." But Mr. Williamson withdrew his name in favor of Somerset.

On March 17th, Gorham Parks gave notice that he had established himself in Bangor as an attorney at law.

In the course of the canvass for Representative to Congress, Mr. Kidder, or some other person, was charged with ransacking the purlicus of the Court-house in Norridgewock, and assembling twenty-four men from different towns, who voted unanimously as a convention to support David Kidder for Congress. Mr. Kidder took fire at this as "slander and billingsgate abuse heaped upon him personally," and pronounced the charge, so far as it respected himself, "an absolute falsehood; and the writer, whoever he might be, a liar and calumniator." Mr. Kidder had not probably been long in the political arena, or he would have saved his dignity by permitting his friends to take care that their candidate stood right before the public, and kept himself to himself.

The day fixed for the voting for Representatives was the 7th of April. Mr. Emerson received in Bangor, 99 votes; Mr. Kidder, 68; there were 3 scattering. Mr. Kidder was elected in the district.

The famous John Bovee Dods—John Dods Bovee—opened a school in April, to teach "the English grammar on an improved plan," by which he alleged that as much knowledge could be communicated in twelve lessons as was usually taught in several months by the common mode. Conditions, $3 for ladies, and $5 for gentlemen. It did not come to light that Bangor contained, after the labors of Mr. Dods were completed, any better or larger number of grammarians than other towns of the same size.

Mr. Zadock Davis gave notice that those notes and accounts that had not been attended to were at the office of Mr. Williamson.

John A. Mayhew was elected lieutenant of the Bangor Artillery, vice John Sargent, resigned.

On the question of extending the gaol limits to the exterior boundary of the county, on the petition of a large number of respectable inhabitants, the laws relating to the jurisdiction of the Court of Sessions in the matter were examined, and that court "reluctantly came to the conclusion that they had not the power to grant the prayer of the petitioners."

Some carper was disturbed by the activity of Bangor at this period, and published a letter upon the subject which he professed to have found in the street, in which the writer says: "Bangor is certainly the busiest town I ever was in; there is no cessation to motion except for a few hours in the dead of night. Sunday, which in other places is a day of rest, is here the business day of the week. To give you a specimen—last Sunday, the first thing in the morning the bell rang for the Sunday school, next the forenoon meeting, then a prayer-meeting, then the afternoon meeting, then a meeting for sailors on board a vessel (Bethel I think they call it), then an evening lecture at the meeting-house, and finally a church meeting at the academy. Religion, or at least meetings, are much in vogue here. I am told they have several meetings in the course of the week, besides those on Sunday. On Monday evening they have an enquiry meeting, Tuesday I do not know that they have any, on Wednesday a conference meeting, on Thursday preaching by the students of the Theological Institution, on Friday the female prayer meeting; I have not learned the particular business of Saturday. Besides the above they have monthly prayer meetings, and I do not know how many other meetings.

"The different doctrines and tenets of the different orders of Christians are common subjects of conversation."

On June 10th the shock of an earthquake was felt about ten minutes before 12 o'clock M. Its duration was estimated by various persons at from twenty seconds to a minute. Its course was southerly—the earth trembled, and the sound was like that of thunder. A vessel in the harbor appeared to the master to be sailing at the rate of five knots, and rubbing over a pebbly bottom, and the water arose eight inches by the wharves and subsided immediately. It occasioned a very general terror, and some persons suffered from a disagreeable sensation in the head.

On Sunday, 15th, Rev. Mr. Storer, of Cambridge, of the Unitarian denomination, preached in the town.

The Fourth of July was celebrated this year by the usual matutinal uproar of the boys, the clanging of bells, and the thunder of guns, the parading of Captain Williams and his company of artillery, and several public dinners, including that of Mr. Chick, with the green peas, of which the young men partook with patriotic and gustatory ardor.

But this was the last anniversary of American Independence that Captain Williams was to celebrate in that capacity. Major David J. Bent, having resigned the office of Major on the 15th, Captain Williams was promoted to that office, with which he was very much pleased.

Several young men felt it a duty to keep the military spirit alive, and organized a company of light infantry, which they called the Independent Volunteers. On the 11th of July under the command of Captain Zebediah Rogers, they marched to what is now Emerson street, and, when opposite the residence of Judge Dutton, were presented with an elegant standard (painted by Hardy) by Miss Julia Dutton—in behalf of the young ladies—who made an address, in which, among other things, she said:

The young ladies of Bangor, yet retaining a fresh recollection of the horrors excited by an invading enemy in war, and fully appreciating the blessings of civil freedom and liberty enjoyed in common, and that sex upon whom they must at all times depend for protection; and feeling a deep interest for the welfare of our common country, avail themselves of the present opportunity for interchanging with you the sentiments essential to the existence of every happy political government, by respectfully presenting to you this standard. We do not exhort you to study war and destruction; we invite you to practice the principles and enjoy the pleasures of virtuous peace.

Ensign David Nye received the standard, and, after thanking the fair donors, said:

We are proud of your compliments, and we hope to deserve them. We wish, as you do, for peace, but we know that in order to secure it we must be prepared for war, and let it come when it will, the enemy shall find that we strike our colors only to those by whom they were presented!"

The soldierly appearance and performances of the company excited much admiration. And it was meet that they should afterward sit down to one of Colonel Lumber's best dinners, with several of their friends, and enjoy themselves after the manner of soldiers under such circumstances.

This year the road from the pine tree at the ferry-way, thence running northwesterly through Hermon and other towns to Exeter, called the "Northwest Avenue," was contemplated, and Samuel Lowder, Jr., William Emerson, James McLaughlin, and others, originated a movement for its laying-out.

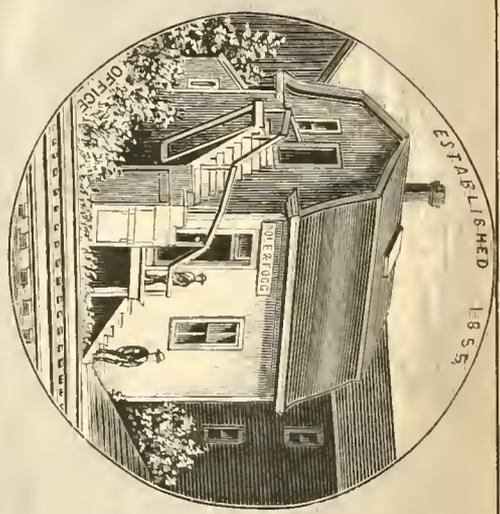

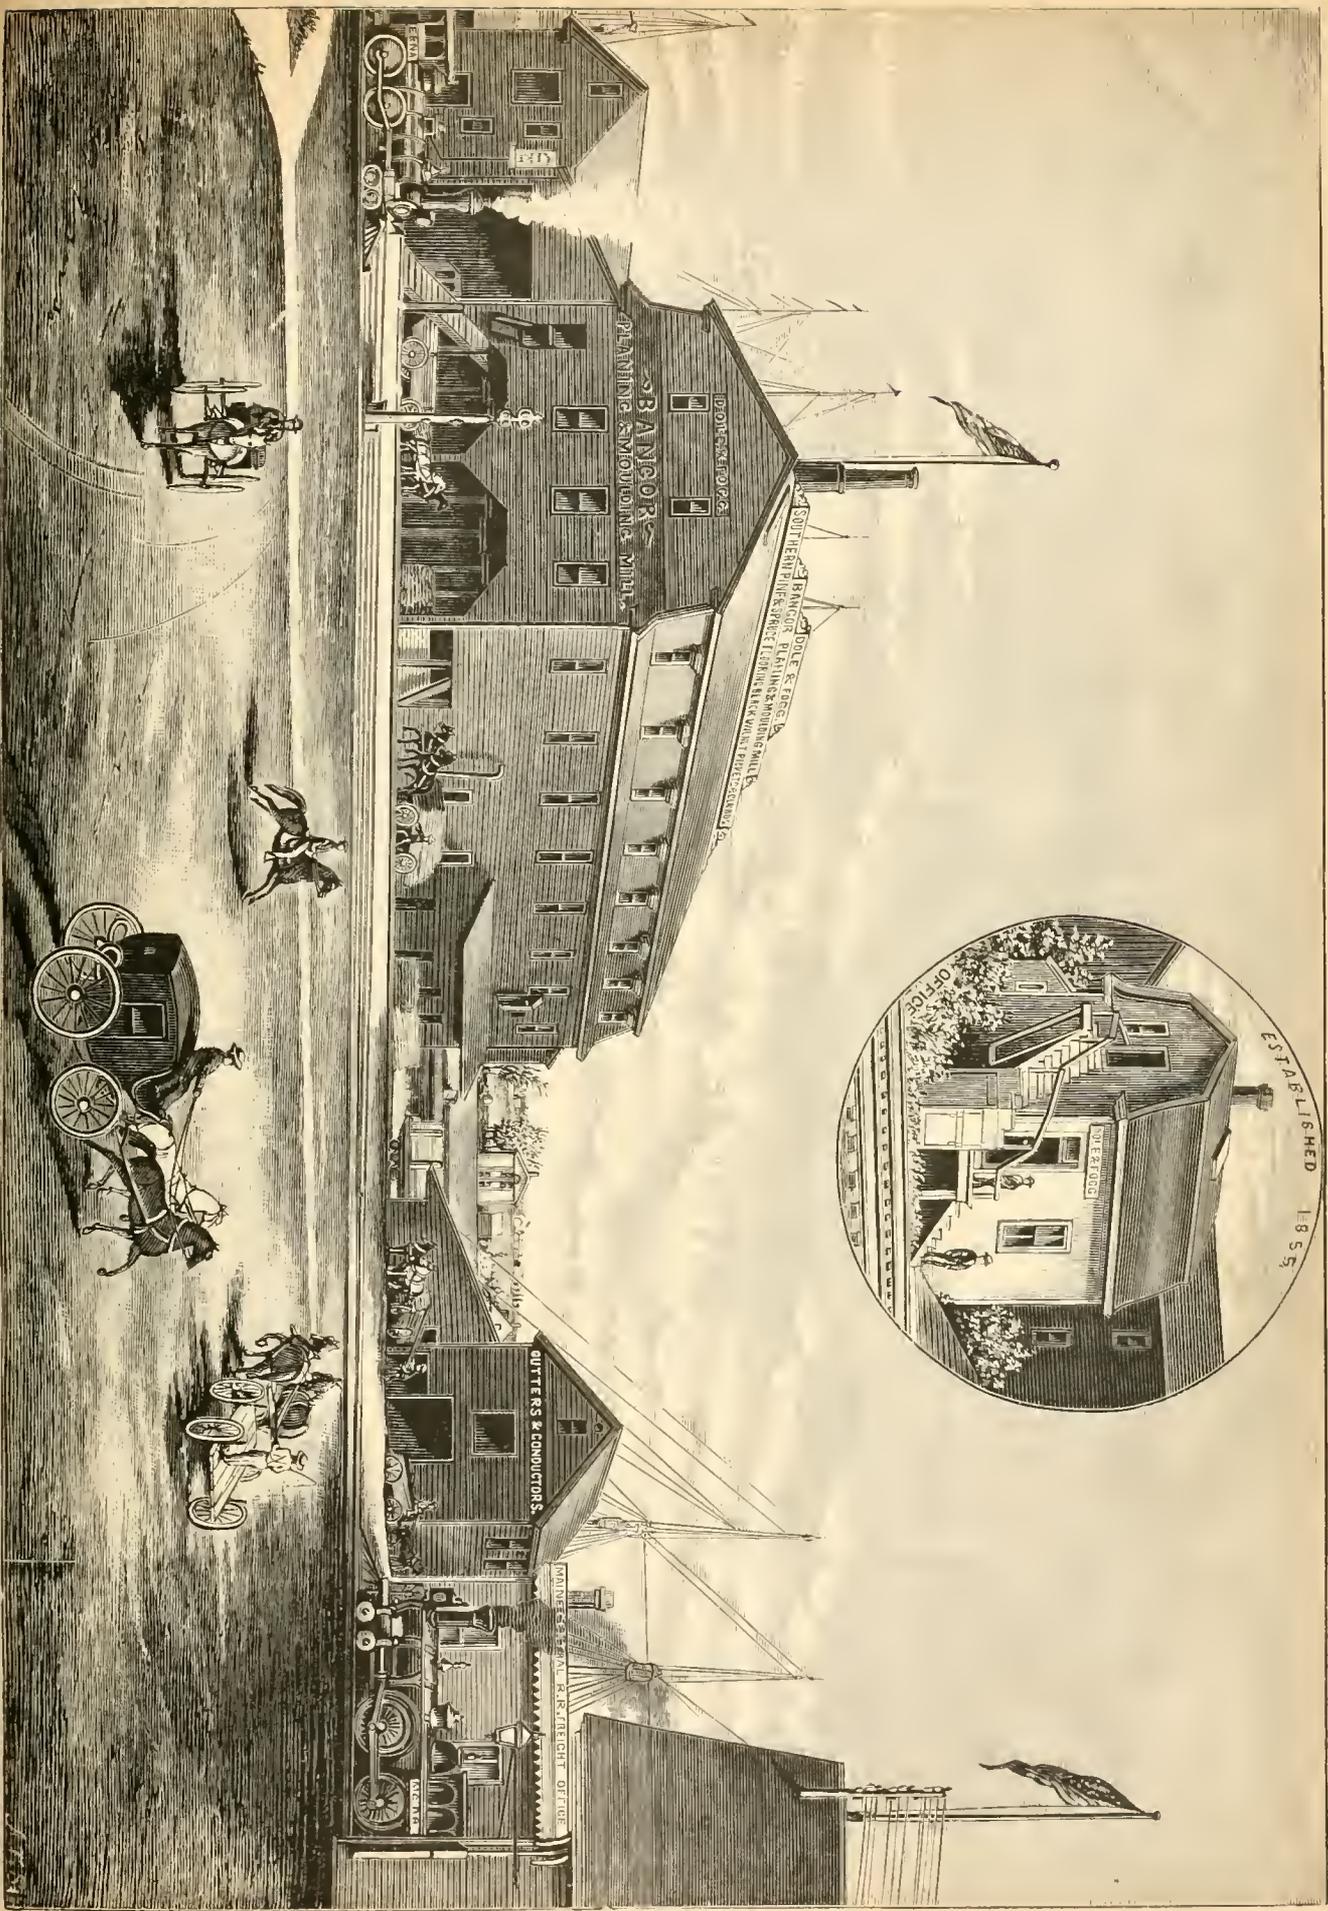

Much interest was felt in the Penobscot Indians, and a society was formed in March, this year, for their improvement. Rev. Professor John Smith was made President; Rev. Harvey Loomis, Vice-President; Mr. Daniel Pike, Secretary; Deacon Stephen S. Crosby, Treasurer; Rev. Otis Briggs, Rev. Professor Fowler, and Messrs. Jacob McGaw, Wilmot Wood, Ebenezer Webster, Joseph Treat, and Royal Clark, with the other officers, were constituted a Board of Managers.

In July the society had a school in operation at Old-town, under the charge of Mr. Josiah Brewer, late Preceptor of the Bangor Academy. About thirty children attended the school. These children had never been under any restraint, and the utmost patience was required in training them. It was very difficult to induce them to give their attention to any particular study for more than a few minutes at a time. The least occurrence would divert their mind, and in the midst of a lesson they would run away, and return when the mood suited them. The society was fortunate in obtaining the services of Mr. Brewer. He loved the work, was kind and patient, and by his gentle, persuasive manner succeeded in accomplishing much good.

The tribe consisted of about three hundred persons. They were poor and degraded. The men continued their old customs of hunting and fishing, and the women wove baskets. Their dwellings were wretched wigwams and cabins, and the comforts of civilized life were not appreciated by them. The purpose of the society was to inspire them with some ambition for a better condition, morally, intellectually, and physically. But they had to depend upon small contributions and the assistance of ladies by the needle in clothing the children. The managers expected to derive about $100 a year from subscriptions of members. The funds realized were not sufficient to maintain a teacher for a great length of time, and Mr. Brewer, after a few months' labor, went into the employ of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and spent a considerable portion of his life in Syria, believing that he could accomplish more good as a missionary than in any other way.

From notices published in the Register, Mr. James Mason appears to have taken advantage of his opportunity to humiliate Mr. Stephen Crosby. A notice "To whom it may concern" appeared on July 31, signed by the latter individual, in this form:—

PANIC OF 1857 AND MOUNTAIN DRIVING

Whereas I have reported false stories about James Mason, I do acknowledge that I have done wrong, and promise, by his forgiving me for my unjust treatment towards him at this time, that I never will report any more stories about him, or any other person, whether they are true or not—but will behave well and speak well of my neighbors, or say nothing about them, unless I can say something for their benefit, to promote their estimation before the world at large.

The unusual character of this document must have obtained for Mr. Crosby a peculiar kind of notoriety, if he were not a public man before. Under a Dickens's hand he might have attained as conspicuous a position as that of Uriah Heep, had he not thought better of his literary effort during his journey and taken the earliest opportunity after his return to assert his manhood, as he did in this wise:—

"To all whom it may concern." My signature was obtained to a publication bearing the above inscription by means of threats to prosecute me for defamatory words said to have been spoken by me towards James Mason. I am not conscious of having spoken anything but truth relative to Mr. Mason, or any other person. I regret my weakness in consenting to do wrong through fear of expense, for fear of being detained while on a journey that I had commenced when I was induced to sign said paper.

In August the Independent Congregational Society engaged Rev. Mr. Fessenden, of Cambridge, to preach for them. This society was composed of Unitarians, and on the 22d engaged the Court-house for the purpose of religious worship.

The Baptists were at this time increasing in number, and had occasional preaching. Professor Briggs, of Waterville, sometimes supplied their desk.

In consequence of the promotion of Captain Williams to the rank of Major, it was necessary that his place should be supplied, and Adjutant Levi Cram was elected Captain of Artillery.

Davis & Weed were becoming impatient with some of their customers for withholding their dues, and threw this bone to the law's agents: "Unless something is done to prevent it, it will be next to impossible to keep the lawyers' and deputies' fingers off their notes and accounts many days longer."

Some warlike person of bad memory obtained possession of Brigadier-General Trafion's sword, and detained it so unreasonably that that industrious officer was compelled publicly to beg him to return it, that he might have it in season for the approaching review.

A little division occurred among the Republicans in regard to a nomination for Senator. They met at the Court-house on the 26th of August, and the delegation from Hampden after objecting to the appointment of the representation withdrew to Mr. Chick's tavern, accompanied by the Orrington delegation, with delegates from other towns, and nominated Benjamin Nourse for Senator, and a member of the regular convention said "they appointed a committee of some they deemed the most sonorous and influential names in the county to assign reasons for this unwarrantable, and, till of late, anomalous proceeding." The President of the new convention was Joseph Carr; Secretary, J. Herrick. The "sonorous names" were J. Herrick, S. Stetson, J. Carr, Thomas A. Hill, John Farrington, S. Fowler, Jr., and William Upton. The President of the original convention was William D. Williamson; Secretary, Isaac Hodsdon. This convention nominated Daniel Wilkins for Senator and elected him.

The meeting for choice of Governor and Senator occurred September 8. The vote of Bangor for Albion K. Parris for Governor was 78, scattering 6. For Senator Wilkins received 54 votes, Nourse 47. The Hampden vote was for Wilkins, 53; for Nourse, 115; in Orrington all, 55, were for Nourse; in Brewer, 28 for Wilkins, 32 for Nourse.

On the 6th the famous Rifle Company, of Orrington, elected Hiram Nourse Captain, vice Nickerson, promoted to Colonel; Seth Eldridge, Lieutenant; Archelaus D. Atwood, Ensign.

A division arose in regard to Representative to the Legislature. There were four candidates, Samuel Call, Paul Dudley, Wiggins Hill, and Amos Patten. At the first trial there was no choice. Paul Dudley had 51 votes; Samuel Call, 40; Wiggins Hill, 6; Joseph Treat, 4; Ebenezer Webster, 2; Edmund Dole, 2; Wilmot Wood, 2; Amos Patten, 1; J. Jording, 1; Abner Taylor, 1; Benjamin Nourse, 1; Simon Harriman, 1. At the next balloting, September 19, Ebenezer Webster received 68 votes; Samuel Call, 32; Wiggins Hill, 16; Amos Patten, 15; Wilmot Wood, 6. Mr. Webster happily concentrated a majority of the votes in the District, and was elected.

On the 13th of October the town voted to discontinue the cemetery on Hammond street, above the county buildings, and to hire $1,000 and purchase two lots on the Hampden road, on the hill south of the block below Emerson street, of Messrs. Emerson & Hill and of John Barker, for a cemetery.

Mr. John Giddings, a citizen of many years, died on the 15th of September, at the age of forty-three. He was the father of Moses Giddings, Esq., the present efficient President of the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad.

Samuel Lowder offered for sale from sixty to seventy house lots centrally and pleasantly situated on the west side of the Kenduskeag.

Two persons were taken before Mr. Justice Williamson, one on a charge of passing counterfeit money, and the other, who was thought to be an accomplice, as a witness. The former said his name was Matthew M. Gotobed; the other declined to give his name, and the magistrate was of opinion that he "was not obliged to answer to that point." This witness, of course, knew nothing about his accomplice passing counterfeit money, and as no further questions were asked, Mr. Gotobed was permitted to depart. He appears to have been taken up merely on suspicion. He had been begging money down the river, under pretense that a partner, of whom he was in search, had ran away from Newark and defrauded him of a large sum of money, and that he was out of means. Both he and his companion were "well dressed and of decent manners," but, notwithstanding the discharge, Mr. Burton said "there can be no doubt but they are cheats and impostors." They created a sensation in the village, and the circumstances and manner of the examination were unique.

Mr. Nathan Parsons, an old citizen, who had been an officer in the war of the Revolution, died in October, at the age of seventy-one.

The Penobscot Agricultural Society held its annual exhibition on the 2d of October. An address was delivered by Hon. Mr. Williamson. A straw bonnet, made by Miss Thayer, of Hampden, obtained the premium for that description of manufacture, and was deemed to possess such merit for "elegance" that Messrs. Hill & McLaughlin obtained it for sale and made it the subject of a special advertisement.

The Bangor Bank had a revolution in its management at this time. William D. Williamson became its President; John Wilkins its Cashier, vice Eliashib Adams, resigned; Samuel E. Dutton, Thomas A. Hill, Mark Trafton, with the President and Cashier, were the Directors.

The election of Levi Cram to the captaincy of the Bangor Artillery was set aside for some cause, and Lieutenant Daniel Dole was elected Captain, and Jeremiah Eldridge Lieutenant.

During about a fortnight after the 10th of November the weather was so cold that the ice commenced running in the river, and it was feared that a fleet of twenty-three vessels in port would be detained until spring. There came a change in the temperature, however, and by the 23d all the vessels had departed.

The Young Ladies' Academy, which, after Mr. Brewer had left it to teach the Indian school at Oldtown, had been under the charge of Mr. Coburn, was examined on November 27 by the Trustees, in the presence of many of the parents and friends of the school. The visitors were delighted with the appearance of the school, which was quite well prepared for the occasion. The compositions attracted much attention on account of their excellence and supposed originality, "and it was a matter of regret that darkness prevented the reading of any part of them, since such as were read gave striking evidence of genius, good sentiment, and correct writing." The most severe criticism made was "that a few did not speak sufficiently audible." Mr. Coburn thought that "young masters and misses of so much promise might well be valued by society as its best blossoms."

In November and December, William Hammatt, of Scituate, Massachusetts, put into the market settling lands in what is now Howland, describing them as better lands than any in the old colony, and inviting young men who worked to make themselves independent, "with no tool but an axe, and no stock in trade but honesty, industry, and sobriety," to establish themselves there.

CHAPTER XVII.

Music and Poetry—Thornton McGaw—A Portland Writer on the Seminary—He is Replied To—A Snarler—Annual Town Meetings—Seven School Districts Established—Samuel Call Appointed Indian Agent, and James Irish Land Agent—Another Concert—Military Men Indignant at Rations—Hill & Starrett—First Steamboat—Excursion to Bucksport—Captain Porter—Death of Major Treat—Great Change of Temperature—Professor Holland Sings—Lover's Leap Romance—Timber Thieves Punished—Boston Banks "Run" on Bangor Bank and Others—The Fourth at Mattanawcook—Rapid Transit—William D. Williamson Appointed Judge of Probate, vice Kinsley, Disqualified by Being Seventy—Penobscot Gazette Established—Joseph Treat Elected Brigadier-General—Exhibition of Theological Seminary—Criticism.

1824. The musical people were disposed to have the year open harmoniously, however it might continue. Henry Call, J. P. Dickinson, and Levi Cram, a committee of arrangements of the Bangor Singing Society gave notice that the society would give a concert of sacred music at the meeting-house on the evening of the 20th, when they would perform "Sons of Zion," "Scotland," "Strike the Cymbal," "Dying Christians," "Judgment Hymn," "Sound the Loud Timbrèl," and many other like pieces. And the concert was given. Mr. Daniel Pike sometimes officiated as conductor of the concerts at this period, and was peculiarly gifted in time (being a civil engineer), and his voice was about as good as might be expected.

And Mr. Zadock Davis opened his throat in song—for the firm of Davis & Weed was to be immortalized by that eminently poetical advertiser—and astonished the delinquent customers of the firm with this enunciation:

Davis & Weed, in time of need,
Must work their bills by square-root;
And those who may refuse them pay—
They'll leave them to go bare-foot.

Thornton McGaw was admitted to practice as an attorney at the January term of the Court of Common Pleas.

A writer in the Christian Mirror, the organ of the Congregationalists in Portland, was much disturbed in regard to the Theological Seminary in Bangor. He had ever thought that this plan was not the best to afford to the multitudes, who are perishing for want of religion, the means of obtaining it. He was moved by the successful efforts that were making to raise $12,000 to establish a professorship, and gave it as his opinion that the amount could not be raised; and if it could, there would be nothing to support the institution hereafter; and there was a powerful opposition to it in the denomination. The plan of the institution was not a good one. "It seems to be a college, a theological institute, and an academy; and yet nothing is more evident than that it is neither of these." Why adhere to this to the injury of the Congregational cause, where there might be a more useful institution that would invite the whole denomination, "and be reputable to the State?" The pith of his objection is contained in this sentence: "As I am called upon to give money or assign my reasons for not doing it, I prefer to do the latter."

Another writer very calmly considers the objections to the Seminary—among them that the education which it would afford, if it should become permanent, would be superficial, and sets forth the advantages to be derived from the studies taught by the student, and to the portion of the State in which it was situated. Its object was not to be lost sight of, to provide good, judicious ministers, of good abilities and ardent piety, if not the most refined education, for the destitute churches and congregations in the State. It had sent out already eighteen young men, and no one had been out of employment. The writer disclaimed the design of writing a dissertation in favor of the institution; he simply wished to present its position and object in its proper light, to enable the friends of morality and religion to determine whether they could appropriate a portion of their religious charity where it would be more immediately and extensively beneficial to their fellow-men; and whether "any portion of the human race had a stronger claim on their sympathy and benevolence than their destitute brethren and fellow-citizens in the eastern section of Maine."

The people of Portland, in their best mood, could not avoid depreciating the people of Eastern Maine. It is a little singular, with their views of the benighted condition of these people, that any should object to a plan for lifting them from their state of heathen degradation, while they were so liberal in their contributions for the purpose of converting the heathen in Hindostan!

Rev. David Thurston, of Winthrop, reviewed the article of the first writer, in regard to the advantages of the Seminary, its prosperity, prospects, etc. There were various views among the Congregationalists as to what kind of an institution it should be; whether one of the highest, the lowest, or intermediate grade of schools. It was concluded to adopt the intermediate, as according with the majority of opinions, and on the principle that "the middle way is the best," and had a fair prospect of receiving the united support of the Congregationalists. The Trustees were desirous that it should be so managed as to receive the favor, not only of all the orthodox, but of all the friends of learning, morality, and order." Many who had opposed it, were now favoring it.

This discussion among the friends of the object of the institution was sure to bring out the snarlers. One "James" was very desirous that the Professors, the character, capacity, and views of the managers, the grade of the students as to ability and moral character, and the reputation and usefulness of the graduates should be inquired into, that the contributions of the "widow knitting till midnight, depriving herself and children of the necessaries of life" might not be misappropriated!

The annual meeting for town purposes was held on March 8th. Alexander Savage was elected Clerk; Amos Patten, Treasurer; John Godfrey, Agent; James Tilton, Isaac Hodsdon, Newell Bean, Selectmen and Assessors; Harvey Loomis, Allen Gilman, and Wilmot Wood, Superintending School Committee.

The town was divided into seven school districts, and their limits were defined.

Samuel Call, of Bangor, was appointed an Agent of the Penobscot Indians, and James Irish, of Gorham, Land Agent of the State.

The musical people received sufficient encouragement at the concert in January to induce them to give another on the evening of April 1st, Fast Day. "Denmark" and "Cambridge" were in the programme for this occasion.

The military men were indignant at the passage of a law requiring the Selectmen of towns to deliver on the day of inspection and review to each member of a military company one ration, to consist of one pound of meat, one pound of bread, and one gill of spirits, or pay him in lieu thereof twenty-five cents; and at a meeting of officers and soldiers of the Fifth Regiment at Dover, in March, Brigadier-General Mark Trafton in the chair and Adjutant James S. Holmes Secretary, it was unanimously resolved that it would not be beneficial to the soldiers of the regiment, and as they paid a principal part of the taxes, they did not deem it for their interest, and therefore refused to "accept the provisions which they were authorized by law to receive."

George Starrett, in connection with Thomas A. Hill, opened a law office in May; their firm name was Hill & Starrett.

In this month Bangor was visited by a steamboat for the first time. Steamboating was in its infancy. A boat had been run between Portland and Boston successfully, called the "Legislator." A company called the "Kennebec Steam Navigation Company," had been organized in Bath, of which Captain Porter was the principal agent, and were extending their business as patronage warranted. The company had a small steamer called the Maine,* of no marvelous capacity or beauty, which they sent up to Bangor, under Captain Smith Cram, formerly of Montville. She arrived on the evening of Sunday, the 23d, and created much excitement, as no previous notice had been received that it was contemplated to send a boat up the river.

But perhaps it was as well for the proprietors that the people were taken by surprise. An excursion to Bucksport was at once proposed, and as there were sufficient persons in town desirous to know all about the affair, a party of 120 was easily obtained to run all risks of being blown up—explosion being then deemed a quality of a steamboat—and make the voyage. At nine o'clock the boat was under way; at noon it arrived at Bucksport, where it remained about one hour. At night it was safely moored again in the harbor of Bangor. An excellent dinner was provided, and Captain Porter, who understood the amenities of life, did all in his power to render the trip agreeable. Particularly did he enjoin it upon the excursionists to "Drive Dull Care Away," and repeatedly sang the song with that name to give emphasis to the injunction.

The Maine was afterward put upon the route, and ran between Bangor and Portland occasionally during the season.

On May 27th, Major Treat died at the age of seventy-

* She measured only one hundred and five tons, and was constructed from the hulls of two schooners, with beams across each. Her cost, with second-hand engine, was $13,000. Hon. J. Williamson's History of Belfast, 655.

two. He was born in Boston on July 14, 1752, where he resided until he was seventeen years of age, when he came to Prospect with an elder brother, who was an armorer in Fort Pownall. In 1774 he came to Bangor. He was then twenty-two years of age. He first located in a cabin at the foot of what is now Newbury street. Afterward he removed up to the Pennejawock Stream, near the head of the tide, where, as appears in the early part of this history, he carried on an extensive traffic, acted as interpreter with the Indians, and built vessels. He resided for many years in a handsome frame dwelling at the Falls (where are now the Water Works) which bear his name, and there died. This dwelling was afterward enlarged by his son, General Joseph Treat, and converted into a hotel, called the "Rose Place." The establishment was finally destroyed by fire. Major Treat was an enterprising citizen, and left a handsome estate.

On the last Tuesday of May the mercury was at 20° below the freezing point at sunrise; on the first Tuesday of June it was at 86° above zero.

Bangor became so much interested in sacred music that Professor Holland, a singer from somewhere, took advantage of it, and with the aid of the Bangor people tried his skill in "Strike the Cymbal," "Sound the Loud Timbrel," "Vesper Hymn," etc., with some success. Mr. John Fiske and Mr. John Bright took an interest in this concert. The price of admission was the then unusual sum of fifty cents each.

The Selectmen, having advertised for proposals to ring the bell of Mr. Loomis's meeting-house three times a day, etc., and having employed Mr. Hayden to perform that service, were somewhat disturbed on finding that the person whom they had contracted with to use the property of a private corporation for the public benefit was threatened with a criminal prosecution for so doing by Mr. Loomis, whereupon they (Messrs. Tilton, Hodsdon, and Bean) assured the inhabitants of the town that "THIS bell will be no longer rung at their expense, until some new arrangement is made on the subject."

About this time lovers haunted "Lover's Leap," and the following came of it:

Lines copied from a tree in a beautiful and romantic spot on the banks of the Kenduskeag.

Miss
Thy beauty rivals all the classic pride
Of sculptured forms that taste has deified;
Love's earliest light plays timidly and shy
In the soft lustre of that gentle eye;
Yet have I dared, thou most enchanting maid,
To inscribe thy name within this hallowed shade.

Inscription copied from a tree near Lover's Leap:

Miss
Of lovely Sophia's eyes beware,
Mirth and mischief mingle there;
I with her have careless laugh'd,
Nor fear'd shy beauty's dangerous shaft;
But pensive now I linger here,
To trace a name forever dear.

At the session of the Supreme Court in June, Chief Justice Mellen sentenced James Clark and Edward Lawrence to twenty-five days' imprisonment and costs for an aggravated assault in the night-time upon Samuel

Stetson. They had trespassed upon land of which Stetson had the care. They afterwards disguised themselves as Indians, and, imitating the language and manner of those people, were removing the timber they had cut, when they detected Stetson watching to ascertain who they were, whereupon they attacked and beat him with clubs, with which they were armed. In passing sentence the Judge gave them this wholesome advice:

You ought to know and remember that this practice of secretly depredating on lands to which you have no claim, and carrying away the timber you have collected there, is, in the eye of Heaven, no less than stealing. It is a shameful violation of the rights of others and defiance of Justice and Law. How can you answer it to your wives and children, who may, and probably must be, left without protection, and be deprived of their ordinary comforts, during that imprisonment which you will soon be sentenced to suffer for your misconduct?

Let this be a warning to you, never again to attempt to gain property by plundering and then to defend your plunder, and endeavor to save yourselves from detection by abuse and violence.

It had been a practice among a kind of squatters in the county to appropriate the lumber upon the lands of proprietors as if it were their own. At length the attention of the owners was drawn to the wholesale plundering of these people, and they felt that unless the laws were resorted to they soon would have little timber for themselves. This prosecution came up in the right form, was timely and effective. The fact that one of the trespassers was at the time "holding an office of respectability" among his fellow-townsmen, rendered the case particularly noticeable.

Mr. Chick's green peas came to the table this year on June 30th, "quite well filled."

About half the banks of Boston combined and collected about $70,000 worth of the bills of banks in Cumberland, Kennebec, and Penobscot counties, and sent agents to demand the specie for them. These agents refused to accept drafts or current bills of other banks at fair exchange discount. The specie was paid, but the proceeding was the occasion of much animadversion in Maine. It was attributed to a disposition on the part of the Boston banks to break down the banks in Maine, out of pure hostility. On the other hand, the Boston banks alleged that their motive was to try the solvency of the Maine banks and to protect the public from imposition. They had tried the Bangor bank before, and, notwithstanding its embarrassment occasioned by Boston failures, it satisfied the public that its affairs were honestly managed and that its ability to take care of its liabilities was undoubted. The question was very pertinently asked, "why did they make an attempt upon its resources so soon afterward, and in so uncompromising a manner, if it were not from a disposition to indulge a feeling of superciliousness?"

The anniversary of Independence fell on Sunday, and there was no public celebration in Bangor. In Levant, Brewer, and Orrington, however, the fifth was celebrated with the reading of the Declaration, addresses, dinners, and sentiments. It was celebrated at Mattanawcook, where three years before there were only Captain Aaron Woodbury and his three sons (who were the only population within a radius of eighteen miles), by more than forty persons. There was a very patriotic address, an excellent dinner, and sentiments that the Eagle could well scream over. Among them, however, was this:

"The Yeomanry of Penobscot: Good lands; good farms; a surplus of produce, and cash markets; immediate want of old maids and bachelors to multiply and replenish Penobscot county."

It was worthy of note that Mr. Appleton Walker left Providence on Wednesday, and arrived in Ellsworth on Saturday morning at 6 o'clock. Taking into consideration the means of traveling at that time, it was deemed a rapid transit. He was in pursuit of two men who were largely indebted to him, and traced them through Boston, Portsmouth, Portland, Bangor, Bluehill, to Ellsworth in seventy hours, where he secured one of the men.

William D. Williamson was, in July, appointed by the Governor and Council Judge of Probate, in place of Hon. Martin Kinsley, who, having arrived at the age of seventy years, was in consequence disqualified by the Constitution of the State from holding the office longer. Joseph Williamson, of Belfast, was at the same session appointed County Attorney of Hancock county, and Horatio G. Balch was appointed Sheriff of Washington county.

A new weekly newspaper was issued in Bangor under the name of Penobscot Gazette. Ezra S. Brewster was the publisher, Daniel Pike editor. Under the administration of President Monroe party lines were almost obliterated. The Federal party had ceased to exist. There were five candidates for the succession—Adams, Jackson, Calhoun, Clay, Crawford. John Quincy Adams was elected by the House of Representatives, as neither of the candidates had a majority of the popular vote. Mr. Adams was a Republican; General Jackson was a Republican; and whatever new papers came into existence this year could not be designated by any partisan name. The Gazette was friendly to Mr. Adams. It was esteemed by the Register its "rival and competitor," and the two papers were not upon the most amicable terms.

On the 11th of August Major Joseph Treat was elected Brigadier-General of the First Brigade, Third Division, in place of General Mark Trafton, who had resigned. Benjamin Nourse was appointed Inspector, Thornton McGaw Aid-de-camp, and John Fiske, Quartermaster.

The Republican nominations before the people at this time were: for President, John Quincy Adams; for Governor, Albion K. Parris; for Elector, Benjamin Nourse; for Senator, Joseph Kelsey; for County Treasurer, John Wilkins.

Mr. Chick, as usual at this season, delighted his guests with green corn on the 11th of August.

On the 4th of August was the annual exhibition of the Theological Seminary. This institution continued to be the subject of criticism. One writer said: "The students, in gesture, utterance, style, etc., more than equaled my expectations, considering what had probably been their literary advantages. But then, the spirit of orthodoxy which was exhibited filled me with sorrow and regret. . . . It seemed to me there was a little want of candor." He came away, he said, from an exhibition at Andover, two or three years before, with very different impressions.

This month Gilman Harriman, who some years before gave notice that he had left his father and set up blacksmithing by himself, went openly into a business that at this day he would go into very slyly anywhere in Maine. He informed his friends that he had taken the cellar and the new brick store next the bank, where he intended to keep constantly for sale the best of liquors. "He had on hand old Jamaica rum, cognac and American brandy, Holland and American gin, Sicily, Madeira, sherry, and Lisbon wines, porter, etc. Raftsmen, marketmen, and others who wished for refreshments without delay or ceremony, might find it convenient to call on him. He had a retired room, suitable for the negotiation of business or the accommodation of small parties. Cool punch would be kept constantly ready for use."

This cellar was entered from the northerly side of West Market Square. The refreshments were such as were indulged in freely and openly, but a large portion of the people avoided that entrance; they preferred the back door. Mr. Harriman was a constable. Men became intoxicated there by their own free will, and other men half-intoxicated wheeled them on wheelbarrows to gaol.

Prior to this Harriman had kept the toll-house at the Kenduskeag bridge, and refreshments also. He had lungs which answered a good purpose when an unlucky stranger attempted to pass the bridge ignorant of his existence and occupation. On one pleasant summer day a tall, handsome young gentleman who had not before been seen in the streets of Bangor, well dressed, with a tall white hat, was sauntering carelessly toward the bridge, and had reached the southerly sidewalk, when he heard some one shouting, "Hullo, there! ye goin to run your toll."

Surprised, the stranger turned his steps in the direction of the voice, and inquired "if that thing was a toll-bridge?"

"Yes, to strangers, one cent for a foot passenger; for citizens, nothing!"

"It's the last thing I should have thought. 'Twill be worth while to become a citizen."

Passing to Mr. Harriman his toll, the young gentleman, much amused, continued his walk. He afterwards became a citizen, and still afterwards the Governor of the State—Edward Kent.

In this connection it may not be improper to digress a little further, in order to perpetuate the memory of another character once conspicuous in Bangor.

The predecessor of Mr. Harriman as toll-gatherer was a veteran of the Revolution, having the souvenir of an "empty sleeve," and bearing the name of Oliver Randall. Like others of his class of worthies, he was fond of a little tipple, gossip, and a pipe, and he had some leisure for the indulgence of these luxuries, the strangers from whom only he could require toll not often being at hand. Among those citizens who took delight in the society of this old gentleman was Mr. Phinson. He too was fond of a pipe and gossip, to say nothing of the tipple. One day when Mr. Randall was indulging in a small rest, with pipe, Mr. Phinson made his appearance, using a new pipe with which he seemed to take much satisfaction; but he had hardly seated himself beside his friend before his pipe blew up, to that gentleman's great amazement; as soon as he recovered himself he exclaimed:

"What's got into that pipe? Curious tobacco! Smells like powder!"

Mr. Phinson also had an idea that it smelled like powder. The pipe was the last of a half-dozen post-prandial pipes of a long-suffering merchant, that Phinson had appropriated, and the merchant had filled for Mr. Phinson's especial benefit on that day.

Mr. Phinson didn't call for that merchant's pipes any more, and Mr. Randall played shy of him when he approached with such an implement thereafter, fearing that he might again be treated to a sudden smell of powder.

John Reynolds, Esq., the fashionable tailor, was the brother-in-law of Mr. Harriman, and a lieutenant in the battalion of cavalry. He was somewhat above his military position, and held it in such contempt that he was tried by court-martial, found guilty of neglect of duty, disobedience of orders, and unofficerlike conduct, removed from office and disqualified from holding any military office under the authority of the State for three years. It is but reasonable to presume that Mr. Reynolds held the sentence in as much contempt as he held the position from which he was removed.

Some dissatisfaction arose about this time against the Land Agent, James Irish, for demanding stumpage of timber cut from the public lands prior to his appointment, from twenty to thirty-three per cent. above the price stipulated before the separation, and afterward by the Governor and Council, for "estimating stumpage on all a lot of logs would make in boards, making that of refuse equal to that of clear lumber; and for limiting the maximum of two hundred acres of land granted by the Legislature to the person who should erect the first saw-mill, and grist-mill on the best mill-site in any township belonging to the State, with the site, to half a dozen acres, and demanding the highest price for an adjacent lot." This was attributed to his desire to retain his office, which he imagined he could do "by a tyrannical, penurious calculation, degrading to the State, in order to enlarge the receipts of the treasury."

There were loafers in those days, and there were those who were annoyed by them, also. That one to whom these words were addressed, if he were a sensitive person, possibly changed his habits.

TO T— —.

I see thee in the back bar-room;
I see thee on the parlor floor;
I see thee to'ther side the stream;
I see thee, zounds! in every store.
In every square, in every street,
Thy haunting form I never miss;
Where can I go and fail to meet,
Trivius, thy omnipresent phiz.

For many years there existed a jealousy between the inhabitants on the opposite sides of the Kenduskeag Stream. It grew out of an attempt to draw the new comers to the west side of the stream in order to make that the centre of trade, while the tendency of the population early in the century appeared to be towards the "Point." The antipathy grew to be so strong that the boys met in squads upon the bridge and pelted each other with stones, and the men of one side of the stream declared that they would not live upon the other if a house and lot should be given them. This feeling diminished very slowly as the population increased, and possibly still exists in some persons.

The improvement of the Penobscot Indians continued to occupy the attention of a portion of the people, but their want of appreciation of the benefits to be derived from education was discouraging. It was almost impossible to excite any ambition in them. Doubtless a little good had been effected by Mr. Brewer, sufficient to keep alive the hopes of their friends. The temptations to indulge in intoxicating liquors, which unprincipled white men were constantly putting in their way, kept the men in a state of degradation. For drink they would barter their furs, and many men would not scruple to take from them the results of a winter's hunt for a very small consideration.

John Wilkins having been elected Cashier of the Bangor Bank, resigned the office of Register of Deeds, and Alexander Savage and Charles Rice placed themselves before the people as candidates for the office.

Some of the marrying people of the Penobscot Indians at this time took some pains to be married right. Four couples went to Newcastle in order to have Rev. D. Ryan, of the Catholic church, perform the ceremony. Captain Nicoli, aged fifty-nine, was married to Miss Molliali Sombit, aged fifteen, his third wife; Mr. Solmon, aged twenty-four, to Miss Molly Blansuais, eighteen; Mr. Meshel, aged twenty-two, to Miss Mollian Selique, twenty; Mr. Louis Neptune, aged twenty-five, to Miss Mary Susep, nineteen.

The candidates for Representative to Congress and to the Legislature swarmed. David Kidder was again in the field for Congress; William D. Williamson, also; and Allen Gilman appeared. Amos Patten, Joseph Treat, Wilmot Wood, and Gorham Parks were before the people for the Legislature. Major Simon Harriman also, "after mature deliberation," offered himself as a candidate for the latter office, "not doubting that all interested would eagerly step forward and avail themselves of this unexpected opportunity of securing his services and talents."

On the 13th of September there were in Bangor 112 votes for Albion K. Parris for Governor; scattering, 9. Joseph Kelsey had 71 votes for Senator; Jacob McGaw, 52. David Kidder received 55 votes for Representative to Congress; William D. Williamson, 39; Allen Gilman, 28. John Wilkins received 53 votes for County Treasurer; Charles Rice, 36. Charles Rice received 79 votes for Register of Deeds; Alexander Savage, 42. Joseph Treat was elected to the Legislature.

The Presidential campaign was opened in September. A meeting was held in Garland at the time of a regimental muster, and Jonathan Farrar was nominated for Elector of the district. A committee, consisting of William Emerson, Daniel Wilkins, Isaac Case, Cornelius Coolidge, Isaac Hodsdon, Joshua Carpenter, Gilman M. Burleigh, Gorham Parks, Philip Greely, Isaac Jacobs, William Eddy, Amos Gordon, and Francis Hill, was appointed to address the electors. They did so, impressing upon them the importance of securing the election of the President by the people, and recommending the election of an unpledged person for Elector, who would cast his vote for either of the five candidates—Adams, Jackson, Clay, Crawford, or Calhoun—whose prospects of election should be most certain.

The friends of Mr. Adams considered this a movement in favor of Mr. Crawford. Mr. Emerson was understood to be in favor of that gentleman, and Mr. Farrar not to be in favor of Mr. Adams. They called it all a trick, at any rate, to give prominence to the Elector rather than to the President.

A caucus in Anson, Somerset county, nominated Mr. Farrar for Elector, and the issue was fairly made up between him and Mr. Nourse; the latter being sustained as an Adams man, and the former as understood to be a Crawford man.

The meeting for the choice of Electors occurred on the first day of November. Mr. Nourse received in Bangor 96 votes; Mr. Farrar, 30. The vote of the county, very generally, was for Adams Electors. Fifty towns in the district gave Adams 1,801, votes, and Crawford 350.

The meeting-house on the hill near the Brewer Ferry was erected this year.

Seth Elliot, of Freedom, was tried at Castine on the 1st of November, for the murder of his son, John Wilson Elliot, a child under two years of age. The Government Counsel were County Attorney Joseph Williamson and Attorney-General Foote. Counsel for the prisoner, William Abbott and Benjamin Orr. Judges Weston and Preble severally charged the jury. The verdict was guilty. Judge Preble passed the sentence.

Newel Bean was appointed jailer.

Abel M. Quimby was the Preceptor of the Bangor Young Ladies' Academy.

Mr. Zadock Davis came again before the public on December 14, with a little "friendly advice" to debtors on his own account, and in behalf of Davis & Weed. He introduces it thus:

Davis & Weed have now agreed
To rouse delinquent debtors,
And those who've need to learn to read,
They'll send them printed letters.

The river closed on the 12th of December. Mr. Leavitt's note is, "It has been a fine year for the lumber business—boards of the first quality [pine] merchantable, were fetching $13.00 per thousand, and others in the same proportion, here. The season has been good—a fine crop of wheat, hay, and potatoes, and sauce of all kinds; a middling crop of Indian corn."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Kenduskeag Bridge Free—Death of Rev. Mr. Loomis—Beautiful Poetical Tribute—The Land Agent Still Criticized—His Reply—Burley & Arnold's Bi-weekly Mail—Elliot Hanged—Adams President—Annual Town Meeting—John Godfrey Appointed County Attorney—Isaac Hodsdon Clerk—Amos Patten et al. Justices of the Court of Sessions—Lottery Tickets—Gaal Limits Extended—Business Men—William Bruce's House Burned—Unitarian Society—Mr. Loomis's Library Sold—Death of Nathaniel Harlow, Sr.—Prosperity—Caravan—The Man and the Elephant—Griffin & Wyman's Catastrophe—Fears for the Harbor—Fourth of July—Colonel Park's Oration—Mr. Hutchins's Dinner—Mr. Chick's Dinner—First Congregational Society give Mr. Pomroy a Call—Accepted—Another Indian School Projected—Chick's Coach—Another "Peol" in Trouble—Mr. Chick Again—His House Burned with Others—A Great Conflagration—Friend Watson—Chick Still Lives—The Land Agent Burns the Hay—Wilmot Wood Declines to be Representative—Simon Harriman Offers Himself—Mr. Pomroy Ordained—Destructive Fires in the Woods—Death of Timothy Crosby, Sr.—State Election—Kenduskeag Bridge Again—The Land Agent and the Fires—John Neptune Speaks—Manufacturing and Exporting Company—Mr. Colby's Shad—Loss by the Fires—Eastern Argus on Bangor—Register's Comments—David Nye Elected Captain of Volunteers—Raids Upon Bangor Bank—Census—The Land Agent's Hard Experience with Timber Thieves—Lots West of West Market Place Sold—Abraham Houson—New Business Men—Edward Kent Establishes Himself in Bangor.

The bridge over the Kenduskeag, which had up to the year 1825 been a toll bridge, on the first day of this year become exempt from that annoyance. By the terms of the contract, it will be recollected, the inhabitants were to pass free, and this year the same privilege was to be extended to all persons. People felt that they had an addition to their liberties from this time.

On the 2d of January the town met with an irreparable loss. Rev. Harvey Loomis, after taking his seat in the pulpit in the morning, dropped dead. There was a snow storm on that day, and Mr. Loomis walked from his house on Union street, below Main, to his house of worship. The ascent to the church from the bridge was quite steep, and the snow that had fallen rendered the walk fatiguing. It was not more than ten minutes from the time he had taken his seat before his spirit had taken its flight. As soon as his head dropped his friends were at his side, but no human help availed to restore him. The shock occasioned by his sudden death was aggravated by the fact that the text of his discourse for the morning was from Jeremiah xxviii; 16: "This year thou shalt die."

For more than fourteen years Mr. Loomis had been the only settled minister in Bangor. He was eminently a lovable man. His influence in elevating the character of the people had been remarkable. He was a preacher of the doctrine of Calvin, it is true; but he was amiable and genial, his life was so true and consistent, and his appeals to the irreligious were so honest and earnest that large numbers were added to his church, religion was respected, and the morals of the community greatly improved. He established a meeting for religious conference on Wednesday evening, which has been continued in his church to the present time; and that evening was, during his life and for many years after his death, regarded with as much reverence as Sunday itself, especially among the people of his society. No parties were held upon that evening, and amusements were dis-countenanced. This meeting was at first held in the Hadlock house, at the westerly corner of York street, where it enters Exchange street. Afterwards it was removed to the Academy room on Columbia street. The walls of that room were dark with age, and as it was lighted with tallow candles or oil lamps there was a gloom attending these convocations which, with the solemn music of such tunes as Bangor, China, and St. Martin's, was well in accord with the doctrines taught, especially when the meetings were conducted by the brethren. Usually, however, Mr. Loomis, with his benign countenance and manner, give to them an aspect of cheerfulness. Mr. Loomis was thirty-nine years old at the time of his death.

A member of his church, a young lady, Miss Eliza L. Adams, who at this day, as Mrs. James Crosby, says: "Fresh and warm is the place his name occupies in the hearts of the few lingering ones who knew him as he was, and who can recall the day when suddenly he vanished from their sight," shortly after that event wrote the following poem:

THE DESOLATED CONFERENCE ROOM.

Ye need not hang that candle by the desk;
Ye may remove his chair and take away his book;
He will not come to-night. He did not hear the bell
Which told the hour of prayer. I cannot speak the reason,
But he does not seem to love as he did once
The conference room.

We've waited long of late, and thought we heard
At length his well-known step. We were deceived.
He did not come. 'Tis very sad to say,
But he will never come again.

Do ye remember how he used to sit
In that now vacant corner, hid by its obscurity?
Only ye might perceive his wondrous eye
Striving to read the feelings of your souls,
That he might know if ye would hear the word.
Ye do remember—well, he's not there now;
Ye may be gay and thoughtless if ye will,
His glance shall not reprove you;
Or, if ye choose it, ye may slumber on your seats
And never fear the watchman's eye;
It weeps not o'er you now.

There! Listen to that hymn of praise.
But how it falters on the lip!
How like a funeral dirge it sounds!
Oh! ye have lost your leader and ye cannot sing.
But hearken! when ye struck that note
Did ye not hear an angel voice take up
The lofty strain, "For Thou, O Lamb of God, Art worthy?" 'Twas his voice.
Not using as in former days from this
Low temple;—sing softly, or ye will not hear!
Only the clearest, sweetest note, waving its way
From the celestial world, just strikes the ear,
Intent and now—'tis gone.

Oh, how it chills the heart to think
That voice is heard no more within these walls.
It is no fiction, is it? no deluding dream?
Oh, no! our friend is gone. The dump of death
Is o'er him. The moon is shining on his grave,
He will not wake until he wakes to immortality.
'Tis sweet to pause and think, in what
A higher world than this his spirit dwells,
How very near he is to Jesus. Since he must now
Be near to him in heaven, who did so love
His name on earth. And now
He's washed his mortal woes and sins away,
And now he drinks the river of a Saviour's love,
And now he tunes his harp to angel themes.
And now he joins a band, the rapture of whose song

An angel mind can scarce imagine;
How does he swell the chorus, "Thou wast slain for us"—
A song not new to him—he sang it oft
In years gone by.

But we are not in heaven; we are here
Where desolation reigns in every heart,
And sorrow looks from every eye.
Soon we must go away, and there is none
To say a blessing for us. Though, when prayer is done,
We stand—and wait—yet none shall say,
"Now grace be unto you."

Yet surely we must not repine
At what He does who made us. He hath done well.
So be it, Father, even so, since it hath seemed
Most righteous in thy sight.
And if we ask of God a blessing for ourselves,
If we repent that we have sinned against Him,
He will not frown on us, He'll hear our prayer.
We'll go, then, trusting in His name.
He oft hath blest us in this room;
He'll bless us yet again—we'll go.*

On January 13th Bangor had not yet the advantages of more than one mail in a week directly from Portland. On the assembling of the Legislature in Portland it was five days before any report of its proceedings were received here.

On January 18th Messrs. Burley & Arnold gave notice that the mail stage would leave Augusta at 4 o'clock A. M. on Wednesday and Saturday, and arrive at Bangor the same evening, and that it would return on Monday and Thursday.

The Court of Common Pleas held a session of eleven days this month, during which time there were three verdicts of "not guilty" in criminal cases, and eleven verdicts in civil cases. The amount involved in the cases adjudicated in the aggregate was $800.

Some one writing over the signature of "500 Lumbermen and 500 Young Farmers," is much dissatisfied with the action of the Land Agent in regard to the timber lands. His charges for stump leave he considered exorbitant, and his course in selling lands such as to retard emigration and prevent their settlement. The writer appealed to the Legislature to limit the power of this office, that the lumbermen and farmers might obtain lands at a price that would keep people here and induce immigration.

The Land Agent, in his report, sets forth his proceedings in the sale of timber lands as being, in his judgment, most for the interest of the State and the settlers. He did not think it necessary to give away lands in order to accomplish the object of the State in procuring the erection of saw-mills and grist-mills in large quantities; therefore he had sold one mill site, with 163 acres of land therewith, for $500, and bargained for the building of mills on two other sites in different townships. As the law made it discretionary with the Agent whether to give this land away or not, he felt it to be his duty to act for the interest of the State, and make no sacrifices when it was unnecessary. By his management he had netted for the State $16,374.50, having made ninety contracts for the sale of land and delivered thirty-one deeds to purchasers.

* It is somewhat strange that this poem has since been at times appropriated as original, to "indicate the deep feeling that pervaded the community" over the decease of various good men.

Seth Elliot was hanged for the murder of his child at Castine, on February 3. There were about two thousand persons present. This was the last execution in the State for many years, although several persons were convicted of the crime of murder, a law having been enacted prohibiting the execution until the expiration of a year after the sentence and the fact was certified to the Governor, who might thereupon fix the time for carrying the sentence into effect.

It was announced, in February, that John Quincy Adams was elected President and John C. Calhoun Vice-President of the United States, whereupon a salute of thirteen guns was given as an expression of the joy of the people, and not as a signal of party triumph.

The election of President was by the House of Representatives. The States that voted for Adams were Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Louisiana, and Missouri—13. Those that voted for Jackson were New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Indiana, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Alabama—7. For Crawford: Virginia, Delaware, North Carolina, and Georgia—4.

The inauguration of President Adams was celebrated in Bangor on the 4th of March by the discharge of thirteen guns at sunrise, twenty-four at noon, and thirteen at sunset, and by illuminations and a display of fireworks in the evening. Captain Isaac R. Park, a painter of houses, got up three transparencies, on which were represented the "Genius of Liberty," "Justice," and the "American Eagle," which were exhibited in front of the Court-house, and attracted much attention.

The annual meeting for town business was held on March 14. Alexander Savage was elected Clerk; James Tilton, Isaac Hodsdon, Newell Bean, Selectmen and Assessors; John Godfrey, George Starrett, Amos Patten, Joshua P. Dickinson, and Wilmot Wood, Superintending School Committee; Amos Patten, Treasurer.

The Governor and Council appointed John Godfrey, of Bangor, County Attorney; Isaac Hodsdon, Clerk of the Courts; Amos Patten, Ephraim Goodale, Seba French, Justices of the Court of Sessions.

Tickets in the Cumberland and Oxford Canal Lottery were offered for sale at the office of the Bangor Register.

The Court of Sessions, in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court, then lately announced, extended the gaol-yard to the exterior limits of the county.

The leading merchants and business men in Bangor at this period were: Messrs. Barker & Carr, Joseph Carr, Pickering & Hill, Hill & McLaughlin, Waldo T. Peirce, M. & A. Patten, James Crosby, Fiskes & Billings, Taylor & Brown, Lewis & James Cram, William Emerson, William V. Crane, Daniel Kimball, Herman Fisher, John Ham, Newell Bean, Charles Plummer, Barker & Crosby, John Williams, David J. Kent, Asa Sawyer, David Hill, Edmund Dole, Henry Cole, Zebulon Smith, Levi Cram.

The dwelling-house of William Bruce, a manufacturer of lumber at the third fall on the Kenduskeag, with his books, furniture, and papers, was destroyed by fire on the night of April 23d, and the family had barely time to save themselves. The house was a mile and a half from the fire companies, and there were no near neighbors to render assistance.

The Unitarian society was provided with preaching this season by the Theological school at Cambridge. Mr. Crafts officiated several months.

Rev. Mr. Loomis's library was sold by auction on the 20th of May.

Mr. Nathaniel Harlow died on the 10th of May, at the age of sixty-seven. He removed to Bangor from Plymouth, Massachusetts, July 13, 1789. His estate extended from the easterly bank of the Kenduskeag Stream northerly perhaps a mile. On the shore of the stream it extended from below the Kenduskeag Bridge to some distance above Franklin Bridge. It was lot No. 68, Holland's plan, and was very irregular. His first house was of solid hewn timber, and stood on the slope of the hill near the foot of Centre street. His second was a frame house and is the first dwelling-house on the left of Central street, above Harlow street. At the time of his death he cultivated his lot as a farm. His son Nathaniel, who inherited it, with his sister Mrs. Parker, extended Centre street through it and laid it out into house-lots, which have been nearly all sold and built upon.

This year there were indications of general prosperity throughout the country. Population and business were increasing. Manufactures were extending, canals excavating, railways contemplated, ships, steamboats, dwellings, and warehouses building. Bangor shared in this prosperity. Many buildings were erected, real estate increased in value, and all felt encouraged by the prospects.

The proprietors of Kenduskeag Point took advantage of this state of feeling and advertised for sale at public auction, on June 9, about eighty house and store lots. As an inducement to purchasers they said that from the rapidity of the growth of Bangor and the enterprise of its inhabitants it had already obtained a respectable rank among commercial towns, and from its situation in the heart of the State, at the head of ship navigation and tide-water on the Penobscot River, must soon become distinguished as a place of trade. A view of the map of the State would show that Bangor must at some future day enjoy the trade of a country of greater extent than any other town in Maine—that "the land about it, and particularly in the north and west, was improving in agriculture and increasing in population with a greater rapidity than any other portion of New England."

The showmen had for several years found their way to Bangor, and this year a "Grand Caravan of Living Animals," with its elephant and monkeys and baboons, and "Dandy Jack," made its appearance, to the delight of all the "little folks." This was an occasion to be remembered. A young man took liberties with the elephant, which the animal was not disposed to submit to without indicating his disapproval. He therefore took him by the arm, drew him upon his tusks, and broke both the bones of one of his legs, to the great terror of the bystanders, some of whom were perhaps benefited by the lesson.

Another lesson was learned by Messrs. Griffin & Wyman about that time. They had a horse and chaise at Oldtown, which they concluded to take with them to Bangor upon a raft, instead of having them come by land. When the raft reached Great Works falls, it ran under the water, and the horse, supposing that he was about to be plunged into the current, became frightened, and ran backward with the chaise into the river, destroying the chaise and drowning himself.

There was much jealousy at this time in regard to encroachments upon the harbor. Some one had built a pier off Kenduskeag Point, and the Selectmen presented it to the Grand Jury as a nuisance. The fear was that if such erections were acquiesced in, there would not, in a few years, be sufficient accommodation for the navigation, as it was believed the business of the town would continue to increase. It is wonderful how, as the necessity for water accommodation increased, that jealousy subsided. Wharves which had been projected as far as was necessary into the Kenduskeag to answer the public requirements, have since, through the cupidity and finesse of individuals, been so extended that navigation will some day be seriously impeded. And every few years the disposition is manifested to extend them still further.

Mr. Chick's green peas were ready for the table on the 18th of June; "a week sooner than ever known before," says the Register.

The Fourth of July was celebrated this year with considerable ceremony. At eleven o'clock a procession of citizens and strangers was escorted from the Court-house, by Captain Dole's artillery, and Captain Rogers' infantry; to the meeting-house, which was thronged with ladies and gentlemen. After a prayer by Rev. Professor Smith, a hymn, the reading of the Declaration of Independence by Rev. Mr. Crafts, and an ode, "an eloquent and impressive address" was delivered by Colonel Gorham Parks. An anthem concluded the services at the meeting-house.

Ezra Hutchins was then the keeper of the Hatch tavern. He erected a bower between the house and Main street, and therein served a dinner, of which two hundred patriots partook. Among these were several soldiers of the Revolution—one, Captain Wilkins, of Charleston, who was in the battles of Lexington, Concord, Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Princeton, and others. Others of those worthies fought their battles over again, and fell, flourishing their weapons nearly as vigorously as they did of yore. Fortunately they fell to rise again after the evening gun had proclaimed the close of the day.

But Mr. Chick was not to be outdone by his neighbor Hutchins. His "Tavern was elegantly decorated with evergreens on each side—with three arches composed of the lofty birch—and in the evening were displayed from the windows two elegant transparencies representing the Genius of Liberty and the American Eagle," which were recognized by several citizens as the productions of Captain Isaac R. Park, and that had performed duty on the celebration of the inauguration of President Adams. The Register affirmed that the "effect of the whole was very pleasant."

The Orrington band enlivened the evening by its music, after which the people—many of them—retired in a frame of mind fitted for a state of happy obliviousness.

On the evening of the 5th of July the First Congregational society voted, without a dissenting voice, to extend an invitation to Rev. Swan L. Pomroy to become their pastor. A salary was voted. A committee was appointed to confer with him, and the call was shortly after accepted.

On the 12th of July there was a meeting of the Penobscot tribe of Indians at Oldtown, at which were present the President and one of the Directors of the society for their improvement, who made propositions to them in regard to a school. The Register said: "It was pleasant and rare to see Mr. Smith, an 'orthodox' or Calvinistic minister, Mr. Crafts, a Unitarian minister, and Mr. Byrne, a Roman Catholic priest, engaged in friendly and social conversation, principally with a view to the improvement of the Indians."

The result was similar to that attending the efforts of Rev. Mr. Little, in 1786, when he attempted to obtain the co-operation of a Roman Catholic priest in his plan for the improvement and education of the Indians. The Register regretted to learn that they (the President and Director) were not able to make such arrangements as they proposed.

The enterprising Mr. Chick, at this period, furnished himself with an "excellent coach and horses for the accommodation of" those ladies and gentlemen who might wish to make an excursion to Oldtown and elsewhere.

The Indian name of Peol was an unfortunate one. Early in the history of the town Peol was murdered by Page; later, Peol murdered Knight. This year Peol, though unfortunate, was more fortunate than his predecessors. He was arrested on a warrant issued on the complaint of one Knight, who charged him with stabbing him with intent to kill, "at a place called Aroostic." At the examination before Justice Thomas Bartlett, the complainant showed several scars, one on the head or neck, one on the shoulder, and one on the breast. No one appeared for the respondent, and the complainant not being subjected to cross-examination, made a plausible story, and Peol was ordered to jail until the sitting of the Supreme Court the next June.

But the red man found friends. He had a story also, which he related to several gentlemen who visited him in prison. He exhibited scars and a gunshot wound—two balls and several shot had been discharged at him by this Knight, and had penetrated his back just below the right shoulder blade, and one of the balls had come out below the right breast, and shots were felt under the skin of the breast. Upon his making oath to this statement, a warrant was issued against Knight for shooting Peol with intent to murder him. The Sheriff found him at Owen's ferry, on his way to Bangor, in Mr. Chick's famous coach, and informed him that he had a warrant for his arrest, but permitted him to proceed to Bangor. After his arrival he disappeared. Peol was bailed; and that appears to have been the conclusion of the whole matter.

Mr. Chick did not relax his endeavors to be in advance of the world in all things whatsoever pertaining to his vocation. He had served up the first salmon, and titillated the palates of his guests with the first green peas of the season from his garden, and now, on the 27th of July, he presents Mr. Burton with a "fine mess of green corn, very well filled."

But Mr. Chick's good fortune was not uninterrupted. On the 1st of August a fire broke out in his stable, which it consumed, with his other out-buildings, in which were two horses and five hogs; the stable of Major Williams; the inn and stable of Captain Andrew W. Hasey; the dwelling house, out-house, and stable of Mr. John Barker; and the dwelling house occupied by Major Simon Harriman and Mr. John Reynolds, on Main street. This was the most destructive conflagration that Bangor had ever experienced. The whole territory from opposite the Hatch Tavern, between Main, Fish, and Water streets, was burnt over.

The fire was set by Friend Watson, a young man about nineteen years of age, whose habits had been such that he was not considered accountable for his actions. He was imprisoned, tried, and afterwards confined in the poor-house as a person of unsound mind.

At this fire the females of the town of all conditions were in the ranks with the men, passing water and rendering such assistance as was in their power.

Mr. Chick, however, was not discouraged. He immediately notified his patrons at a distance that they should have every accommodation to which they had been accustomed at his inn. He had procured another stable and his house had been saved.

Captain Zebadiah Rogers, of the Independent Volunteers, was elected Colonel of the Second Regiment, vice Daniel Nickerson, resigned.

The Land Agent, General Irish, in order effectually to prevent trespassers taking timber from the public lands, caused the hay, which they had cut between the mouth of the Mattawamkeag and Baskahegan Lake, to be burned. This act created much animadversion among the operators and those who derived benefit from the public plunderings.

Wilmot Wood, Esq., having learned from the Penobscot Gazette that he was nominated at a meeting of a number of respectable citizens of Bangor, on the 20th of August, as a candidate for Representative to the Legislature, declined the honor.

So did not Simon Harriman, a manufacturer of cowbells and pitchforks, that could be "heard from one to five miles," an illiterate and conceited person. Some wags, who styled him Major, flattered him with the idea that he was a fit person for the office of Representative, and aided him in presenting himself for the public suffrages in this language: "The time has arrived when men of talents, integrity, and political information should be elected to offices so important as that of a member of our Legislature; and should my fellow-citizens select me, they may be assured that their interest will be strictly attended to, and that no court favor, no private or selfish views shall deter me from a faithful discharge of my duty."

The wags followed up this Harriman movement by recommending him themselves, saying that he had taken the fair way of nominating himself, that he was a friend of the lumbermen, and that if the people would elect him, they might doubtless "see some exertions made to promote the interests of the very life of our wealth and prosperity," and that in sending him they would send a person "who not only had an opinion of his own in these matters, but would not be backward in advancing or defending them."

Rev. Swan L. Pomroy was ordained on August 31st, over the First Congregational Church and Society. The order of the services was: Prayer, by Rev. John Sawyer; Sermon, by Rev. Dr. Edward Payson, of Portland; text, Luke xx. 36: "For they were equal unto the angels;" Consecration Prayer, by Rev. Eliphalet Gillet, of Hallowell; Charge, by Rev. Jona. Fisher, of Bluehill; Right Hand of Fellowship, by Rev. Mighill Blood, of Bucksport; Address to the Church and Society, by Rev. Arthur Tappan, of Augusta; Concluding Prayer by Rev. Thomas Williams, of Foxcroft. The audience was large and the services impressive.

A county convention, on August 30th, nominated Daniel Wilkins for Senator, and Charles Rice for County Treasurer. A town convention on the 26th nominated David J. Bent for Representative to the Legislature. All were not satisfied with these nominations, and individuals put forward Samuel Butman for Senator and John Wilkins for Treasurer, and Joseph Treat for Representative. As we have seen, "Major" Harriman put forward himself.

For a fortnight fires were raging in the forests north of Bangor. At one time nearly the whole country from Passadumkeag to Mattanawcook, on both sides of the Penobscot and Piscataquis, was a sea of flame. The roaring of the fire was like thunder, and was heard at a distance of from twelve to fifteen miles. The islands in the river were burnt over. The country between Passadumkeag and Lincoln was devastated. The towns upon the Piscataquis suffered from loss of buildings, cattle, fences, crops. The house, barn filled with hay, and store and tool-house of Joseph McIntosh, of Maxfield, were burned and the family driven to the river for safety. Other houses and barns, and saw-mills and grist-mills, were destroyed. A lad returning from school through the woods was so badly burned that his life was despaired of; hawks and other birds were killed by the fire; and the fish in the Piscataquis River were killed by the heat. Twenty bass, weighing from twenty to forty pounds each, many young salmon, shad, trout, and other small fish, were found dead in the shoal water and on the shores. The fires were running in Bangor, doing much injury in the woods, and the whole country was filled with smoke.

A prominent citizen — Timothy Crosby, a son of Simon Crosby, one of the first settlers of the town — died on the 3d of September, at the age of fifty-nine. He was not far from six years of age when his father came to Bangor.

The meeting for the election of State and county officers was held on the 12th of September. The vote of Bangor was: For Governor, Albion K. Parris 34, William King 28, scattering 17; for Senator, Daniel Wilkins 64, Samuel Butman 44; for Treasurer, Charles Rice 27, John Wilkins 67; for Representative, Simon Harriman 48, David J. Bent 39, Gorham Parks 29. In the class there was no choice for Representative; Mr. Bent received the largest number of votes. He was elected at the third balloting on October 13. John Wilkins was elected County Treasurer, having 587 votes, to 528 for Mr. Rice.

A question having arisen between the town and the Bangor Bridge Company, the agents of the company published a statement that the validity of the contract between the town and the company, to permit the inhabitants to pass free of tolls, for stipulated sums to be paid by the town from year to year, was questioned, and the opinion of the Supreme Court obtained that it was invalid and, in consequence of the decision, toll was exacted from each inhabitant, as well as other persons, from July, 1824; that the charter of the company would expire in 1828, and that the additional sum that the town was to pay would amount to $3,000; that in December, 1824, the town agreed to purchase the bridge and pay $2,800 therefor by the 1st of September, 1826, and the company were within a year to remove the toll-house, so that Hammond street in its original width should extend to the stream; that the authority to purchase was subsequently given to the town, but a misunderstanding had arisen in regard to the agreement to remove the toll-house, the town contending that the toll-house was to be so far removed that a passage-way might be made to the water; the company, on the other hand, contended that the toll-house should be so far removed that the north line of Hammond street should pass unobstructed to the water; and that, as it had since discovered that the toll-house was not in the street, they were not, by the terms of the contract, obliged to remove it at all; and as the town did not see fit to adopt that view of it, the company would be reluctantly compelled again to demand toll.

The matter was arranged, and the bridge was ever afterwards free.

The enemies of the Land Agent were not unwilling that he should have the reputation of originating the fires which had caused such devastation in the northerly part of Penobscot county, when he caused the hay cut by trespassers to be burnt. Although this was not the case, yet the Indians had been impressed with the idea that it was, and some one penned for the Lieutenant-Governor of the tribe this communication for the Register:

Now me speak in paper—hay timber all burnt up — all bare just like my harm no blanket — What me num states agent send Captain Chase to burnum hay when everything so dry — Indian two township all burn up before rane come — Indian lossom all timber and hay — sartin me now walk general court next winter then me speakum Governor Parris — me hearum he givum to the agent to burnum all hay — spouse Governor Parris speak he no say so — then me speak states agent pay Indian all hay and timber he burn — spouse he say so — then Governor Parris he pay sartin — When indian havum all timber and hay nobody burnum hay — now state gettum all indian land but two township, then he settum fire to drive all indian off — now me havum no more timber — by-by me be naked just like snake — all indians speak so.

JOHN NEPTUNE.

This year the following well-known business men of Bangor and neighborhood applied to the Legislature to be incorporated as the "Penobscot Manufacturing and Exporting Company," for the purpose of manufacturing, purchasing, and vending all kinds of lumber, viz: James B. Fisher, Joseph Carr, James Crosby, Joseph Rolph Lumbert, Amos M. Roberts, Simon T. Pearson, Stephen Kimball, Ebenezer Webster, Samuel Baxley, Charles B. Prescott, John Ham, John J. Coombs, George W. Pickering, Mark L. Hill, Jr., John Bright, Mark Traf-ton, Caleb C. Billings, Jackson Davis, John M. Princee, Jedediah Herrick, David J. Burt, Jonathan B. Rogers, John Fiske, Joshua P. Dickinson, Jacob McGaw, and Thomas A. Hill. Only one of these persons is known to be now living, Mr. Bright.

Mr. Timothy Colby, who by trade was a brick-maker, was also a rare lover of the piscatory profession. He was famous for "drifting" nights in the Penobscot, and in the morning was proud of exhibiting the plump salmon and shad with which his labors were rewarded, in West Market Square, to which all good husbands resorted for a good dinner. In the early part of October he achieved quite a reputation among the good-livers by bringing into the market one hundred and eighty shad which were deemed superior to those taken in the spring. As the Register made this unusual advent of these delicious fish a matter of congratulation, the Kennebec Journal attempted to detract from "Uncle Tim's" laurels by calling them "outward bound," in other words, "run-down shad." Mr. Burton's indignation was aroused at this, and he called it "a gross libel on our taste and judgment," and undertook to show from Rees's Encyclopaedia and a little argumentation that, although the visit of these sea shad to the Penobscot was an unusual event, yet that for six months, from May to November, they were about the capes and the mouths of our large rivers, and there was no good reason why they should not take a turn up the Penobscot, a large river, occasionally. Thus was Mr. Timothy Colby's averment that they were fine, fat, delicious sea shad, just from the ocean, verified.

The fires had ceased in October, and it was ascertained that, besides the buildings destroyed on the lower Piscataquis, there were burned in Guilford 4 houses and 5 barns; in Parkman, 1 house, 5 barns; in Ripley, 11 houses, 9 barns; in Harmony, 4 houses, 5 barns; in Dover, 1 barn; in Monson, 1 barn. There were other buildings burned, and the damage to the timber lands was enormous.

In October the editor of the Eastern Argus made a visit to Bangor and Oldtown, and gave an account of his travels in his paper. He had been more or less in thirteen of the United States, and had never seen a more flourishing part of the country of like extent, than on the banks of the Androscoggin, Kennebec, Sheepscot, St. George, and Penobscot Rivers, though the smoke of the fires, in the woods obscured the prospect so that the landscape sometimes was confined within the circle of a mile. The country was entirely enveloped in smoke.

"At Bangor," he proceeds, "the river is something like a furlong in width; the current is not rapid, and the ferry is pleasant—of easy passage, and well attended. Although it was in the night when I crossed it, it seemed more like taking a sail for pleasure than encountering a formidable and fatiguing barrier of a journey.

Although there are some very pleasant seats and some fine prospects, in different parts of the village, yet, as a whole, its local situation is not altogether so pleasant as [that of] many other villages in the State. The picture has many agreeable scenes and well finished parts, but they are not well connected; the groundwork is broken, and the whole view betrays a want of symmetry. Some central parts of the village are low, nearly on a level with the river; and others are built on almost as many hills as there were in Rome. And yet the hills are not remarkably tedious; perhaps hardly so much so as are found in Hallowell or Augusta. Bangor is a highly flourishing village, and will, without doubt, continue to grow rapidly. It stands at the head of the navigable waters of the Penobscot, and the country above it is fast settling. A fine stream of water, the Kenduskeag, flows directly through the village into the Penobscot, and affords some good sites for machinery.

Most of the buildings have a new appearance, and I observed that many had been erected the present season, and yet I was told that every building was occupied, and that to obtain one at any rent was exceedingly difficult." He mentioned the public buildings and the academy, which had sixty or seventy students the last winter, and proceeds: "Bangor is amongst the candidates for the seat of the State Government, and there are some who seem to feel confident that the Government will eventually be located there.

It is unquestionably destined to become the metropolis of that section of the State. There are two public newspapers published at Bangor, which may be regarded as a proof of its central situation and extensive population and business. There are but three other towns in the State which support more than one newspaper each, viz: Portland, Bath, and Hallowell."

The editor of the Register, in commenting upon these notes, said the writer's route did not lead him through the best lands and most flourishing portion of Penobscot county. He had been twice up the West Branch above Grand Falls. The first time was about eighteen years before, when he ascended Katahdin to its summit. The last was two years before, when he had the pleasure of traveling about forty miles on snow-shoes, and camping out seven or eight nights on the snow in the vicinity of the Grand Falls, and he must say that, "although he too had traveled more or less, in just thirteen of the United States," besides having visited the colonies of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, most of the West India Isles, and traveled sixty miles over the mountains of Spain, yet had he seldom if ever seen a more beautiful and picturesque country than the region of Katahdinoga.* There are immense lakes, noble rivers, grand and stupendous cataracts, murmuring rivulets, and from the lakes a view of a vast chain of mountains, of which Katahdin, whose head is often veiled with clouds, is the principal. He had no doubt that in a few years a visit to that section of the country would be more fashionable than a visit to any other part of New England.

Captain Rogers having been promoted to Colonel, Ensign David Nye was chosen captain of the Independent Volunteers, and Robert Long, ensign, on October 25. Sheriff Royal Clark gave notice to the coroners that as his term of office would expire immediately, the duties of the office would devolve on them.

The Bangor Bank suffered in various ways, and the Directors probably thought that there never was a bank of its size and importance that received so much of all sorts of attention. We have seen that bank men, business men, and failed men, had paid it their respects after different fashion. On the night of October 29th the robbers made an attack upon it, and succeeded in getting as far as the vault door, but that was an obstacle too difficult to master with the appliances they had; therefore they had retired, leaving indications that on the next night the attack would be more vigorous. Of course the Cashier, Mr. Wilkins, who lay in wait for the British ships in 1814, was still brave enough to lay in wait for the robbers. He did so with "two or three strong men," but the robbers were too wary—they did not try again. But on the next day an agent of the Suffolk and other Boston banks made a raid upon the bank, against which Mr. Wilkins and his strong men could make no resistance, and took what the robbers would have been glad to obtain—$10,000 in specie. Mr. Wilkins rather laughed at this, but he would have been better pleased if the raid had not been made.

A census was taken this year by Mr. Simpson and the number of inhabitants was found to be 2,002. The increase was 781 since 1820, when the population was 1,221.

It has been before stated that the proceedings of the Land Agent of the State in regard to the public lands north of Bangor were of a character to subject him to censure. The State had changed its policy in regard to the lands, and his course, instead of being conciliatory and judicious, was deemed harsh and unwarrantable.

Prior to the separation Massachusetts had permitted timber to be cut upon the public lands, and was not very exacting or critical. After the separation Maine felt the necessity of more care. The timber lands might be made a source of revenue, and it was important that they should be looked after. The State prohibited the cutting of timber, but the old operators could not keep their hands off the grand old pines, and drove them down the Penobscot as usual. When threatened with prosecution they made their peace with the State by paying a small consideration and went on as before. Finding that the valuable timber of the State was going to enrich individuals, and that the State was receiving no benefit from it, the Legislature passed a stringent law for the protection of their property, and directed the Land Agent to enforce it.

* Indian name of the country about Katahdin.

He might have been judicious in his action, and he might not have been. He certainly did not get the good will of the operators. He gave public notice that the law would be enforced against trespassers. He, however, gave permits to these trespassers to cut hay on the meadow lands in the neighborhood of the timber, but gave it to be understood that the teams of the violators of the law would be seized, and the severest penalties would be imposed upon them. Upon some this had effect; others said "it is the same old story—the offense is venal—we can buy forgiveness, as we have before.

They operated. The Land Agent remained at his office, apparently oblivious to what was doing on the State's demesnes; but in the spring he sent an obnoxious deputy into the woods to ascertain if there had been any trespassing, and if there had been, to take an account of and mark the logs that had been cut upon the public lands. This was not agreeable to the trespassers. A party blacked and armed themselves and ordered the deputy away. He would have no collision, and returned. He had, however, obtained an account of the logs.

He supposed that he had, also, proof sufficient to convict the disguised men. He therefore informed the Attorney General, and he caused them to be arrested and examined. The proof on the tribunal being in fault, the desperadoes were not convicted. The Attorney-General sued these trespassers for the damages they had done the State, and caused their logs to be attached, but finding from the failure of the original prosecution against the rioters that his civil suits would probably fail, he settled with them on the best terms he could obtain, as he supposed; although it was alleged, on the other hand, that if he had prosecuted the suits, he would have recovered the full amount of damages.

Believing, from the experience of the past year, that no reliance was to be placed upon the promises of the lumberers, for they had the year before agreed not to use the hay they had been permitted to cut upon the public lands, averring that they had purchased it to use only in obtaining timber that they had purchased of proprietors, the Land Agent refused to permit the hay to be cut upon the meadows of the State, and gave public notice to that effect. This notice was disregarded, and the lumbermen went on and cut the hay as usual.

On learning this the Land Agent informed the Attorney-General, and proposed to go with sufficient force to bring off the trespassers. This course being approved, the Sheriff was sent with a posse to take the trespassers; but when he arrived at the meadows no persons were to be found to arrest. Interested parties at Bangor and Oldtown, who had become acquainted with the design of the Land Agent, anticipated the movements of the Sheriff, and the haymakers were all notified in season to take care of themselves, which they did. But the "grass was in swath, in winnow, and in cock."

The order of the Agent to his deputy or assistant was that, if the Sheriff was defeated in making the arrest, the hay should be burnt—particular care being taken that every spark of fire afterwards should be extinguished. The order was obeyed, and the trespassers, finding themselves defeated this time, gave vent to their indignation in various ways. Lieutenant-Governor Neptune was doubtless one of their instruments to create a prejudice through the letter which he caused to be published. Much was said on both sides, and a pretty extensive feeling was excited against the Agent; but it is very certain that, if it had not been for the lawless acts of the timber and hay thieves, there would have been no occasion of complaint against the Land Agent for burning their hay, or for any other proceeding against them.

The lots on the westerly side of Main street, opposite West Market Square, owned by the Court-house corporation, were sold in December by auction, and brought from fifty-four to seventy cents a square foot.

A movement was started in Boston for the purpose of establishing a line of steamboats between that city and the State of Maine and the Provinces. This stimulated the citizens of Bath to add to their boats with a view to running the "Patent" between Bath and Owshead. This led to the suggestion in Bangor to build a good boat to ply between Bangor and Owshead, touching at towns upon the river, to give the people the advantage of steam travel to Boston.

In this year a colored barber, by the name of Abraham Hanson, came to Bangor. He possessed much humor, much good nature, and had quite as much confidence in the sincerity of his fellow-men as was for his interest. As he afforded amusement to his customers he was well patronized, and was deemed worthy to have his portrait painted by Hardy, who retained it many years in his possession. He announced the different capacities in which he was willing to serve the public, in rhyme, thus:

TO BE SHAVED OR NOT TO BE SHAVED.

A. Hanson, the barber, would publicly mention
His trade and his goods, for they are worthy attention,
His shop near the Court-house and A. Hasey's inn,
Is always kept warm and decently clean;
On whose pictured walls the artist displays
Bold folly to scorn—modest virtue to praise.
He'll shave you directly, without pain or delay,
And always with thanks will pocket his pay.
Your boots he'll polish, and your flowing hair
Will neatly trim, and clean your coats with care.
He'll sell cologne, to invigorate your looks,
And, if you wish, soap, pomatum, or a shaving-box.
He'll sell you razors, keen and polished well,
(Not Pindar's razors, only made to sell).
The ladies, too, his kind attentions share,
He'll make them curls of any colored hair.

While he was in Bangor the Greek cause was agitated, and his sympathies, in common with those of the citizens, were enlisted in their behalf. Being disposed to contribute to the extent of his ability towards helping them in their struggle for independence, he advertised that he would devote a day in shaving for the benefit of the Greeks. As may be supposed the calls were as numerous as he could attend to. When the pay was tendered, however, he declined to take it, saying, with African simplicity, that he had given notice that he would shave for the benefit of the Greeks, and "d'ye spose I will take pay when I shave for the benefit of the Greeks?"

Among the new merchants of this year who established themselves in Bangor, were Elmore Parker, Samuel B. Morrill, J. F. & E. Hatch, P. H. & J. J. Coombs, Thomas Furber, S. & H. Allen, George W. Randall, William A. Hatch, John Roberts, Stover Perkins & Thomas Hancock, and Thomas Green & Co.

Edward Kent opened a law office in Bangor this year. His advertisement ran as follows:

EDWARD KENT, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, has taken an office over Messrs. Fiskes & Billings' store, and will attend to any professional business entrusted to his care.

Bangor, Sept. 19, 1825.

CHAPTER XIX.

James Burton Takes as Partner John S. Carter—Burton & Carter Publish the Register—Oliver Leonard—"Washington" Fire Engine—Edward Kent's First Office—John Wilkins Appointed Sheriff—The Land Agent's Action Relative to the Northeast Boundary Lands—Explains His Conduct in Regard to Timber, Trespassers, and Hay—His Receipts—Commission for Dividing Maine and Massachusetts Lands—"Hampden Volunteers"—Town's Right to Waive Election of Representative—Stillwater Bridge—Influenza—Annual Meeting—Mary Leland—A Character Settled by Reference—Charles Rice Appointed County Treasurer—Brig "Bold Jack"—Brief History of Bangor—"Posse Comitatus and Trespassers—Nathaniel Hatch Chosen Captain of Militia—Fourth of July Claimed for All—"Penobscot Guards"—Supreme Judicial Court—Trial of Friend Watson—Mr. Chick on His Feet Again—Death of Amos Patten, Jr.—Citizens's Celebration of the Fourth—Blackguards—Death of Adams and Jefferson—Singular Circumstance—Thomas J. Forbes, Preceptor of the Academy—Candidates for Office—Political Excitement—No Choice of Representative to Congress—Major Bent Elected Representative to the Legislature—Business "Dispatch"—Willey Family Destroyed—Steamer "New York" Burnt—Sale of Timber Lands—An Apology—Report on Fortifying the Penobscot—Penobscot Boom—Corporation—New Canvass for Representative to Congress—Mr. Williamson Withdraws, and Mr. Wilkins Recommended—Samuel Call in the Field—No Choice—Franklin House Opened—School Books—Business Men—Taylor & Brown—Winter Rhymes—Death of Tilly Brown.

1826. This year commenced with a change in the management of the Bangor Register. Mr. James Burton, Jr., who had served his apprenticeship with Peter Edes, in Augusta, and started the Augusta Patriot in March, 1817, and in December of the same year taken charge of the Register, and continued his connection with it and published it alone until now, concluded that he must have a partner in his labors. For eight years he had devoted all his ability to the Register, and, with an increasing family on his hands, had found it difficult, if not impossible, to make both ends meet. He therefore formed a connection with Mr. John Stearns Carter, a young printer of considerable ambition and industry. As lotteries were then deemed of importance, legal, fashionable, and respectable, the firm added the business of selling lottery tickets to that of printing the Register. In his salutatory Mr. Carter said he "would be always at his post, and use every exertion to accommodate the advertising and other customers," and he was faithful to his promise.

Oliver Leonard had removed from Brewer to Bangor, and gave notice that he would hold a Justice's Court every Wednesday, at 6 o'clock A. M., at Mr. Hutchins's hotel.

Mr. Leonard was a lawyer by profession, and was the first representative from Orrington to the General Court, in 1798. He was re-elected for several years. His successor was Joseph Carr, who was succeeded by Timothy Freeman, who was succeeded by Francis Carr. John Farrington succeeded Francis Carr. Joshua Chamberlain succeeded Farrington, and Rev. Enoch Mudge succeeded Chamberlain.

Mr. Leonard's residence in Orrington and Brewer was about a mile above the Brewer and Bangor Ferry, on lot No. 53, upon which John Thoms had settled. He obtained a title to the farm while Thoms occupied it, but Thoms, from some reason, forbade his taking possession, and drew a line in front of the house, over which he bade Leonard pass at his peril. He did so, and was shot and severely wounded by Thoms. For this exercise of his will Thoms was arrested, sent to Pownalborough, tried, convicted, and sentenced to sit on a gallows. He afterward returned to Brewer and died there.*

Mr. Leonard's wife was an Englishwoman, and having an annuity, they lived at first in some style. He was reduced in circumstances when he removed to Bangor, and eked out a living as best he could. The annuity was stopped by a writ in chancery, but renewed after Mrs. Leonard's decease.

The town had purchased a new fire-engine, built by Hunneman, and it arrived on the 7th of January. It was "a single lever village engine, of the first-class, constructed on the old double-chamber principle," the chambers being five and a half inches in diameter and the length of stroke sixteen inches. It had a suction hose. On trial with a force of twenty-four men, it was considered a success. Mr. French had just erected the Exchange Coffee House, and as the engine threw water so as to wet the roof, and a hundred feet horizontally, it was thought that, with the old engine, the "Old Settler," it would be sufficient for the present wants of the town.

A company was afterward organized to run with it. They named it the "Washington." They elected Edward Kent their Captain, and this was the first public office that gentleman ever held in Bangor.

During a session of the Court of Common Pleas in January, held by Judge Perham, sixteen verdicts in civil cases were rendered.

John Wilkins was appointed Sheriff of the county.

A convention of the members of both Houses of the Legislature nominated Enoch Lincoln as candidate for Governor.

The publishers of the Register announced that Messrs. Burleigh & Arnold had provided for the Kennebec line of stages one of the most elegant and convenient stage sleighs they had ever seen. It was upon double runners,

* Bangor Centennial, 80.

"very easy to the passengers," of which it was calculated to carry twelve inside.

January found Mr. Zadock Davis still among the business men of Bangor, and still reminding his customers of the sheriff:

Davis & Weed are friends indeed
To those who pay in season;
But those who pay at Judgment Day
Are asked to give the reason.

At the time he published this premonition he advertised "To Sell or Let" a pew in the southeasterly corner of Rev. Mr. Pomroy's Meeting House.

The Land Agent of Maine, James Irish, made a report to the Legislature, in which he stated that he and George W. Coffin, the Land Agent of Massachusetts, had made inquiries in pursuance of resolves of the Legislature, with regard to the amount of timber cut upon the Aroostook and Madawaska rivers, under authority from the Government of New Brunswick, from a "mistaken view of the boundary line," and had visited Fredericton and left a written document with the Surveyor General of New Brunswick—William Baily—requesting the information; that they had posted up notices offering to give deeds to settlers of lands upon the St. John and Madawaska rivers, in actual possession, of one hundred acres each, for $10 and the cost of survey; that they took Mr. Baker in a batteau down the St. John River to the boundary—which is about thirty miles from the Madawaska River, and about two miles above the Grand Falls—that the settlers upon the St. John were from ninety to an hundred rods apart; that he counted two hundred and twenty-two houses which averaged eight or ten inhabitants each, making in all about two thousand persons—a "very industrious, civil, and hospitable people, well deserving the fostering care of the Government;" that many of them had grants of their lands from New Brunswick, but placed little value upon them; that they were informed that the Home Government had given instructions that no more permits be granted upon the Aroostook and Madawaska waters until the boundary line was established.

Mr. Irish stated his proceedings under the resolve for the sale and the settlement of public lands and the protection of the timber—that he learned at Passadumkeag and Piscataquis that trespassers were upon the undivided lands of Maine and Massachusetts, above the Ninth Range of townships, near the Nollesemic Indian township, on the Salmon Stream, and the East Branch of the Penobscot, and on the Seboois emptying therein; upon the Mattawamkeag and Baskahegan; that he attempted to trace the lines and take an account of the timber, and ascertain the names of the trespassers; that his agents were met by men blackened and disguised, calling themselves Mohawks, and threatened them with death if they attempted to proceed; that they returned with the best account of the timber cut that he could obtain. He then details the attempts made to punish the trespassers and his want of success, as has been before related in these pages. He gives an account of the defeat of the Sheriff when he went to arrest the trespassers and seize their implements, and was at a loss to know what course to pursue in regard to the hay he found cut. The trespassers carried on their operations in the summer, cutting trees standing near the river and rolling the logs in, and it was suspected that this kind of logging was to be carried on still. If he attached the hay he would be obliged to leave it, and it would be used as if it were not attached, to strip the land. The Land Agents of Maine and Massachusetts consulted together, and concluded that the only means left to protect the timber was to destroy the hay by fire, and joint orders were given to that effect, and the utmost care was enjoined. He proceeds: "The hay was accordingly destroyed; and the Agent is happy to say without occasioning any damage or loss to public or private property, and has in a good degree had the desired effect. But few have had the hardihood and effrontery to continue their work of trespassing; and those few will, if it is not already done, be brought off by the proper authority, and a stop will be put to the pernicious practice of taking timber without liberty." He found no difficulty on the Kennebec and Schoodic waters in protecting the timber belonging exclusively to Maine.

His net receipts from the public lands were $45,607.41.

In January the Commissioners for dividing the lands held by Maine and Massachusetts, jointly, had surveyed 422,025 acres to Massachusetts, and 420,488 acres to Maine.

A rifle company was organized in Hampden this month, called the "Hampden Volunteers." Adaffy Haskins was made Captain; George Stetson, Lieutenant, and Jonathan T. Hardy, Ensign.

A. Mr. Tenney entertained the people with a series of chemical lectures. They were of a popular character, designed to amuse much, instruct some, and put money in the purse of the lecturer.

The questions having arisen whether a town having a right to choose a Representative, has the power to waive that right, and whether, where towns are classed for that purpose, minority towns have the right to send a Representative when the majority towns have voted not to do so, the House of Representatives submitted them to the Justices of the Supreme Court, and Justices Mellen and Weston answered them in the affirmative; Justice Preble dissented on the first proposition, concurred in the last.*

The Legislature incorporated the Stillwater Bridge Company this year.

The influenza as an epidemic prevailed very extensively this year. It was an uncomfortable and inconvenient disorder, though not often fatal.

Notwithstanding its prevalence, the business of the spring opened encouragingly, and the hopes were high of an excellent season.

The meeting for the election of town officers was held on the 13th of March. James Tilton, Isaac Hodsdon, and Howell Bean were chosen Selectmen; Alexander Savage was chosen Clerk; John Godfrey, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Agent. The Superintending School Committee were Rev. Swan L. Pomroy, William D. Williamson, Benjamin Nourse, Joshua P. Dickinson, and Samuel Cull.

At this time there died in Bangor a beautiful and interesting Indian girl. She was the daughter of a native doctor, Loland. Her name was Mary. She possessed a beautiful figure, and her countenance, though dark, was fine and expressive. There was a dignity in her bearing that attracted the attention of all who beheld her. And she was as good as she was beautiful. Brought up among savages, her habitation a wigwam, with few of the comforts and conveniences of civilized life, surrounded by companions whose influence was rather for evil than for good, her instincts and tastes led her to a higher plane. She felt the difficulties of her situation—destined to a life of barbarism surrounded by civilization. She was bound to her family, and no civilized family cared to make her its inmate. But a kind Providence cared for her. At the age of eighteen she went into a consumption, and in the wigwam of her parents, who loved and were kind and tender to her, though destitute of the means to make a sick bed comfortable—upon a bed of boughs, in one apartment where a family of eight persons lived and cooked, ate and slept, “she bore a long and distressing illness without a murmur, and with a patience and resignation which may truly be called Christian. She was sensible when her change drew nigh, and desired her mother not to weep for her when she died, saying she was willing to die, for she might grow wicked if she should live.”

*Maine Reports, Vol. 6, pp. 486 to 495.

Henry Lord.

Messrs. Burton & Carter rejoiced in the agency of the Cumberland and Oxford Canal and the Sullivan Bridge Lotteries, and tickled the people with promises of “lots of cash.” With all this cash business, however, it does not appear that either they or their customers ever became rich.

Mr. Ezekiel Hayes, of Exeter, feeling aggrieved by words spoken by John Shaw in reference to him, which he regarded as defamatory to his character, they referred the matter to their neighbors, Francis Hill, Flavel Butters, Joseph Walker, Daniel Butters, Barachias Holt, and James Adams. These gentlemen reported that in their opinion “Mr. Shaw had no just cause for a reproach against Captain Hayes,” and therefore “ought to make his acknowledgment as public as he made the reproach.”

John Wilkins resigned the office of County Treasurer, and Charles Rice was appointed by the Court of Sessions.

The connection of the St. John and Penobscot waters was at this time suggested. It was thought that a canal six miles in length would unite the Aroostook with the East Branch of the Penobscot, so that the lumber and produce of the fine country in the north of Maine might be brought to Bangor.

On April 12th the famous firm of Davis & Weed dissolved copartnership. That was an unfortunate day for the muses.

A brig, built by William Lowder, and owned by him and William V. Crane, called the Bold Jack, was launched. It was very much complimented for “beauty and strength.”

On the 11th day of May the Register published a brief history of Bangor, which, with the aid of a friend, it had some trouble to obtain. According to that history “the first settlements in the town commenced at a very remote period, and were probably amongst the first in New England, as there are traces of them now remaining whose origin cannot be learned from history, and the traditions of which are very obscure. They are supposed to have been made by the French, for they, when in possession of the territory in this region, called by them Acadie, and which extended as far west as the Kennebec, established a fort and trading-house within the limits of this town. These were probably abandoned during the French war of 1756.

“Of subsequent events very little is known until the year 1772, when a number of families from old Massachusetts and New Hampshire removed hither. Among them was that of Thomas Howard, who is now living at an advanced age. A permanent settlement was then commenced, the trading-house re-established, and some soldiers, under the authority of the colonial government, stationed in this neighborhood.

“In 1793 there were only forty-five ratable polls in the town, and in 1796 but three dwelling-houses on the present site of the village.” The writer says that the growth of the town was impeded by the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812, and by the severe cold of three successive seasons. The regular re-establishment of business may be dated from 1817. The following are “the branches of business in which the population is now engaged, with the number:”

Merchants, 44; bookstores, 2; printing offices, 2; lawyers, 13; doctors, 3; apothecaries, 2; watch-makers, 2; tinmen, 2; machinist, 1; blacksmiths, 5; shoemakers, 4; tailors, 5; mantua-makers and milliners, 7; cabinet-makers, 4; painters, 4; coopers, 3; hatters, 2; saddlers, 2; masons, 4; tanners, 2; pump- and block-makers, 2; victualling cellars, 4; bakers, 1; taverns, 6; barbers, 2. There were four religious societies, Congregationalist, Baptist, Unitarian, and Methodist.

There was still trouble between the State and the trespassers. The latter had become so accustomed to appropriating the timber of the public lands to their own use that the Land Agents were constrained to take extreme legal measures to satisfy them that the property of Government was to be protected, as well as that of individuals. Consequently Sheriff Wilkins was sent to take possession of the logs that had been cut on the joint lands of Maine and Massachusetts. The trespassers, however, essayed to try their strength against that of the States and re-took the logs and forcibly retained them, converting some of them into boards. The posse comitatus was called out and, as is usual where the odds are so great, Government was triumphant.

Nathaniel Hatch was chosen captain of the company of militia of the town, in place of Captain William Randall, resigned. Thomas Hancock was chosen lieutenant, in place of Joseph K. Lumbert, appointed adjutant, and Francis Fowler was chosen ensign.

A little excitement was created this year by an effort on the part of certain religious people to appropriate the celebration of the anniversary of Independence to themselves and such as entertained similar religious views. It was thought that as the anniversary was national so narrow a way of celebrating it should be stamped out; and it was. The "American Colonization Society" was to reap the benefit of the celebration in the form of a contribution! But the people bestirred themselves to get up a general celebration, in which all might indulge in a little patriotic enthusiasm.

Orono was not without its military enterprise. A company of light infantry was organized there this year, called the Penobscot Guards. John Bennock, Jr., was its captain; John T. Davis, lieutenant; Herman White, ensign.

The Supreme Court, with Justices Mellen and Preble upon the Bench, commenced its session on June 13. Charles Stetson, of Hampden, Nathaniel Hatch, of Bangor, and James S. Holmes, of Foxcroft, were admitted to practice as attorneys.

At this session Friend Watson was indicted for setting fire to Mr. Chick's stable and occasioning the destruction of so much property the year previous, but was acquitted on the ground of insanity. He was confined in the Alms-house for many years, and at length died in the Insane Hospital in August.

James Potter and two others learned at this session that there was a day of retribution for bearding the State. They were convicted of assault and resisting a Sheriff and the Land Agent, and were sentenced to two months' imprisonment in the county jail.

Mr. Chick having been driven from his old quarters on Fish street, established himself in a building on the westerly side of Water street, in which the Bangor Bank first opened business. It stood perhaps from one hundred and fifty to two hundred feet from Main street, opposite what is now Pickering Square. He called it the Maine Coffee House. The green peas came along the 12th of June this year, but Mr. Chick's name was not in connection therewith. He had become an auctioneer, and had so much other business upon his hands that he left the raising of peas to Mr. William Thompson, Mr. Fifield, and others.

In June of this year Mr. Amos Patten, long a leading citizen, was afflicted by the loss of his only child, Amos Patten, Jr., at the age of seventeen years. He was a lad of great promise, and his death was generally lamented.

The leaders of the movement against a sectarian celebration of the Fourth of July—Allen Gilman, John Wilkins, Samuel Lowder, Z. Rogers, John Williams, Thornton McGaw, Samuel Call, and others—having organized a celebration at Mr. Chick's Coffee-house, carried it into effect, to the satisfaction of a goodly portion of the people.

Colonel Zebediah Rogers, as Chief Marshal, assisted by Captain Waldo T. Pierce and Lieutenant Samuel Thatcher, Jr., led a procession from the Court-house to the meeting-house, where Rev. Mr. Goldsbury, of the Unitarian Society, officiated as chaplain, Hon. William D. Williamson read the Declaration of Independence, Thornton McGaw, Esq., delivered the oration. The Mozart Society sang the following hymn, written for the occasion by Samuel Lowder, Jr., Esquire :

O Thou who wast our father's God;—
Thro' the wide wilderness and wave,
Thro' all the perilous paths they trod,
Thou who didst cherish them and save;—

Great God of Battle! to whose shield
In war's dire conflict they did flee;
Who gav'st the heart that would not yield
To aught on earth save Truth and Thee;—

Giver of sweetest peace! whose hand,
When war's destruction passed away,
Didst heal and bless our favor'd land,
And light up Freedom's purest ray;—

O be propitious, gracious still;—
Father of mercies! Thou alone
Canst guide us by Thy sovereign will,
And bless us, suppliants at Thy throne.

After the services at the meeting-house, the procession re-formed and marched to Hutchins's hotel, where a "handsome dinner was provided."

A patriotic company, presided over by "Allen Gilman, Esq., assisted by General Joseph Treat, Mr. James Crosby, Major David J. Bent, Samuel Lowder, and Samuel Call, Esqrs., as Vice-Presidents, partook of the dinner.

The following volunteer sentiments by a son and his father indicate a somewhat different kind of culture in each:

"By S. Lowder, Jr., Esq. The Orator of the Day: The eloquent advocate of liberty, of the liberty which, to use his own language, 'is on the march, and will march until the sun shall no longer look upon a slave.'"

"By Samuel Lowder, Esq. Fourth of July, 1776: Its spirit, meliorated by the lapse of fifty years, has lost none of its strength, but is still fourth-proof."

These men, as well as the orator, Presidents, and Vice-Presidents, and all whose names have been mentioned as connected with the celebration have been dead many years. Most of them lived to witness such an agitation of the principles which they that day celebrated as they never had conceived could exist. None of them, however,—unless Major Bent is an exception,—lived to witness the culmination of that agitation in the greatest rebellion that ever existed among civilized men, in the sacrifice of millions of treasure and a million lives, the emancipation of four millions of slaves, and the martyrdom of a President of their Republic.

Notwithstanding good influences had been operating for many years to make Bangor an exemplary town, yet blackguards, low-minded and malicious persons, occasionally got into it and caused annoyance. On the 29th of June the Selectmen were constrained to offer a reward of $30 for the detection of the person or persons who, on the night before, smeared the store of Messrs. Barrell & Randall, and the office of Hon. William D. Williamson, with black paint.

The report of the death of ex-President John Adams and Thomas Jefferson on the Fourth of July, reached Bangor before the 13th, and created a profound sensation. The former was ninety years of age, and the latter eighty-three years, three months, and two days.

On that day, at a celebration in Hampden, Simeon

Fowler, Esq., of Orrington, whose name is associated with the first settlements in Orrington and Bangor, and who was now eighty-nine years of age, by particular request, sang a patriotic song. Enoch Brown, Esq., delivered the oration on that occasion. It was pronounced "pertinent and eloquent."

Ezekiel Fisher Crane, Esq., delivered an eloquent oration at Corinth.

No less than fourteen Sheriff's sales were advertised in the Register of July 13—an indication that some kinds of business were overdone.

On July 13 an "elegant standard" was presented to the Penobscot Guards in Orono, by Miss Bathsheba Holland, with an appropriate address.

Five brigs, five sloops, and twenty-five schooners lay in the port of Bangor on July 27, the largest number then ever known at that season of the year.

Mr. Chick came forward with his green corn on that day.

A very singular circumstance occurred on the 2d of August. A flock of seven geese belonging to Mr. Dole, of Orrington, were sitting in the road opposite his house, when a storm with thunder and lightning came up, and a bolt fell and destroyed the whole flock, without disturbing a particle of earth or, from appearances, a spear of grass.

The Register was of opinion that a great change had taken place in Bangor in twenty-five years. At the beginning of that quarter of a century, if a stranger of respectable appearance rode into the town on a tolerable horse, his name, residence, and business were known in a few hours through all the village. At its close, coaches, curricles, barouches, and carriages of every description came and went unheeded.

Thomas Jefferson Forbes, Esq., was in charge of the Bangor Academy this year.

David J. Bent was again nominated for the Legislature.

The political season having arrived, there were candidates in abundance for Representative to Congress. Enoch Lincoln was the only candidate for Governor, and Charles Rice for County Treasurer and Register of Deeds; but Samuel Butman and Thomas Dawes were nominated as opposing candidates for the Senatorship; Jacob McGaw, William D. Williamson, David Perham, and Jonathan Farrar were nominated, and "Major" Simon Harriman nominated himself, as opposing candidates for Representative to Congress.

The canvass became very exciting. A writer under the name of "27 Delegates" proclaimed that Mr. Williamson was the only candidate of the Republicans of the Old School, that he had always been uniform in his politics; had served the people in several capacities and given uniform satisfaction; had once represented the District in Congress "with honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents." On the other hand, Mr. McGaw had uniformly been a Federalist; had directly opposed every measure of the Administration during the difficulties and war with Great Britain; opposed the separation; had always been defeated when a candidate; and had the nomination in the convention over Mr. Williamson, because the majority were avowed Federalists.

"Freeman" follows in a similar strain. "Mr. Williamson was a Federalist," etc.

"Orono" sings the praises of Mr. McGaw in this style:

We rejoice with joy unspeakable that this nomination was made. We do not hesitate to believe and state that, for integrity, firmness, intelligence, and every virtue and ornament that can adorn a generous and cultivated mind, the character of Colonel McGaw would lose nothing by comparison with the brightest among the worthies that grace the County of Penobscot, and the most substantial patriots that can be numbered. He is the man of the people. Believing that Colonel McGaw will represent this District with honor, with dignity, and with majesty, we shall cordially give him our suffrages.

But Simon Harriman considered it far more manly to ask for the suffrages of the people himself than to be influenced by "that extreme modesty which induces gentlemen to crawl behind the scenes and seek a nomination through the management of friends or the contrivance of a packed convention."

He flattered himself "that his age, gravity, experience, long residence in and knowledge of the interests of the district, and, what his opponents must be willing to allow him, his good sense and sound judgment, will be full as serviceable to him in judging of public men and measures as the empty verbosity of some or the vanity and assumed importance of others." He was: "no lawyer, to assist in encumbering the statute-book with entangling laws; no politician, to contrive perplexing plans and artful measures for private aggrandizement; no schemer for possible public good with the certain loss of good public moneys; no partisan, ready to sacrifice any and everything to the interest of party;—but one who will endeavor to be an honest and upright man, whose aim it is to attain to the greatest possible good by the simplest, most direct, fair, and honest means." There was no question that Major Harriman's brains wrought over a forge.

"A Republican of '76" was grieved because the Republicans were overslaughed by the Federalists in the Convention. Mr. Williamson had been elected to Congress over Mr. McGaw and others who ran as Federal candidates against him, and now he would have the friends of Mr. Williamson bolt the nominee of the convention, for the reason, as he says, that the said nominee "had exhibited no evidence of political conviction or conversion."

"An Elector" denied that a majority of the convention were avowed Federalists, and said that forty of the sixty delegates were Democratic Republicans, as the list showed; that Mr. McGaw voted for Monroe and Adams; and that the opposers of Mr. Adams "are now the most virulent opposers of Mr. McGaw."

"Moderato" ridicules "Freeman," deprecates the calling an opponent "a Federalist," as if names were of any importance when men of good morals and abilities should be the candidates for office. He had no particular choice in regard to the two candidates; wished the best man to be elected, whether it may be one of them or some other person.

"Democrats of 1798, Republicans of 1814," did not want a Federalist of the Hartford Convention school, like Mr. McGaw, or a Republican who "grew fearful in the hour of danger, who deserted the Administration in the late war and joined the Federal opposition under DeWitt Clinton, as Mr. Williamson did; but a man of more correct principles, who would not desert his party, such as Jonathan Farrar, of Dexter."

"A Republican" was astonished that Mr. McGaw should have been nominated by this Republican county as a candidate for Congress.

"Somerset" was opposed to Mr. McGaw, because he was not and never had been a Republican. He had been the "denouncer of Jefferson, the reviler of Madison, and the sycophant of Strong."

"Candour" says it is painful "to see our Newspapers the vehicles of slander and bitter invective;" that the articles of "Subscriber" and "Castigator," which "sullied the columns of the Register," must "reflect disgrace upon their authors," and it was to be hoped that their indecent and abusive example would "not be imitated by the friends of the very respectable and worthy gentleman [Mr. Williamson] whose honestly acquired fame had rendered him an object of envy with the victims of disappointed ambition."

"Castigator" said that his communication had thrown the supporters of Mr. Williamson off their guard. They now raised the cry of "scurrility; Disagreeable truths they called scurrility. He should spare Mr. Williamson for the present, as he had heard it suggested that he was to withdraw from the canvass.

"A Farmer" wanted to know what "rotation in office" meant.

"A Mechanic" likes to see "men of stern integrity and competent abilities elected to office by fair means," and when a man is nominated for office, he likes to see him remain perfectly passive and let the people act as they think best. He don't like to see men of mean abilities and questionable integrity thrusting themselves into notice, boasting of their Republicanism, and charging their opponents with a want of moral principle; their near relations helping them; professing to be Christians; reviling their fellows of the same profession; being in public office crying with the horse-leech, give, give, and just before election fawning about men whom a few days before he would not speak to in the street.

"No Fiction" flings to the world

"A NEW SONG TO AN OLD TUNE."

1.

Election day is fast approaching,
Cheerly O, O, cheerly O.
Some on our rights will be encroaching,
Drearly O, O, drearily, O.

2.

Who from ruin now shall save us?
Harriman O, O, Harriman O;
He'll guard the rights our fathers gave us,
Cheerly man O, O, cheerly man O.

3.

In politics he's all perfection,
Cheerly man O, O, cheerly man O;
Witness John Quincy's late election;
Harriman O, O, Harriman O.

4.

As a mechanic he is able,
Harriman O, O, Harriman O,

To furnish pitchforks for our stable,
Cheerly man O, O, cheerly man O.

5.

His fame through all the country soundeth,
Cheerly O, O, cheerly O,
From one to five miles it reboundeth,
Merrily O, O, merrily O.

6.

Prove he's the man of your appointment,
Cheerly O, O, cheerly O,
And he'll drop the trade of making ointment;
Merrily O, O, merrily O.

"Bangor" was of opinion that the electors of the district should give their "suffrages to the firm and decided friends of the National Administration," whatever their preliminaries in politics might have been. Samuel Butman, an old Republican, had been nominated for Senator, and Jacob McGaw, an old Federalist, had been nominated for Representative to Congress, and were the friends of the Administration; therefore they should be elected.

A somewhat obscure writer intimates that it is understood by some "that the Hon. S. H., the inventor of the celebrated Cutaneous Liniment, and the favorite of Vulcan and Esculapius, is about to journey through a neighboring county for the benefit of health, and to eradicate the diseases of others, especially of the Scotch species. But those who see deeper into a millstone, whisper that the journey is, in truth, of a political nature."

A county convention in Somerset, which was exclusively Republican, did not concur in the nomination of Mr. McGaw.

A candidate to represent the district in Congress was advertised for, who "must be a man of honesty, integrity, firmness, independence, and a tolerable share of modesty, good common sense, and a good common-school education. But none having a diploma of law, physics, or divinity, need apply."

"A Citizen" deprecated the action of the Somerset convention. He was of opinion that if they had reflected on the changes in the Government and in the two great parties in the last ten years, "their partiality to the present administration would have prevented their making any invidious distinction between Federalist and Republican."

"A Backwoodsman," in reply to "A Republican of '76," says: "Well, after the general notice, if Republicans enough could not be found to form a convention, or righteous persons enough to save the city from fire and brimstone, what can we do? Why, do as well as we can; and choose enough out of the second best to hold a convention, and save the city in that way." This was done; no unfairness was practiced.

"A Revolutionary Soldier" comes out in a tirade against Crawfordism and the evil it has done, and favors the election of Mr. McGaw, as a man "of fair character, a firm friend of the administration, capable and honest." "But it seems he has a competitor in the famous W. D. Williamson, of office-seeking memory; for a specimen of whose talents I refer you to his speech on the late President Adams's bust, and his speech in Congress on circumcision."

"Fair Play" says he is neither a friend nor an enemy of Mr. Williamson, but rather an "amicus curiæ—a kind of go-between, whose business it is to prove that both sides are altogether in the wrong, and neither of them at all to blame." After a scathing review of Mr. Williamson's course in the canvass, he concludes: "I appeal to the candor of his opponents to say whether, placed in precisely the situation of Mr. W., they would have man aged better than he has done."

"A Republican of 1815" is astonished at the "abuse and obloquy poured out upon the character of Judge Williamson." If his reputation is thus to "be aspersed with impunity, there is no character so pure as not to be polluted by the breath of slander." He enumerates the offices he has held with honor; how he has been the friend of the people, while other lawyers were opposing them, cursing their politics, and calling them a "swinish multitude."

"Brewer" inquires: "What are Mr. McGaw's claims? Whatever opinions we may entertain concerning him as a citizen or as a lawyer, we must award him the sentence of all antecedent time, that he is not a man of the people—that he does not possess those qualifications requisite to public employment."

"Arator:" "Mr. McGaw is as bitter a Federalist as he was in the time of the embargo and war. Mr. Williamson, though he professes to be a Republican, has neither talent nor energy sufficient to represent the Republicans." He then enlarges on the excellencies of Jonathan Farrar as a candidate. Full confidence might be had in him.

"An Elector" is of opinion that if there was truth in half that had been said against Mr. Williamson and Mr. McGaw, both ought to be set aside and David Perham elected, against whom nothing could be objected.

"Bangor" is strongly laudatory of "Hon. Simon Harriman," whose "undoubted talents, strict integrity, and undeviating principles" had long since marked him as the man whom the people delighted to honor. He stood alone on his own naked merits, and if his friends did their duty he would receive a vote worthy of his independence of character and integrity and soundness of judgment.

"Castigator" criticises "Candor," etc., says that he shall leave Mr. Williamson to the full enjoyment of their panegyrics, as he found that under the castigation he had administered even his opposers pitied him, and bade that gentleman take his chance at the polls, as he should raise no more sympathies in his favor.

The reader will gather from the foregoing abstracts the manner in which a political campaign was conducted in Penobscot about half a century ago. The candidates nominated by conventions and by individuals were respectable men. It is not to be supposed that any body of men or any man would be so stupid as to nominate a person who was not of average respectability—unless, peradventure, he should nominate himself—with the expectation of procuring for him a decent support. But it mattered not who were the candidates; when one obtained sufficient prominence he was pursued by the friends of the others with a bitterness that would be hardly excusable in savages. Like death they pursued the shining mark; no matter how sensitive the subject or how pure his life, if there was the least flaw in the armor of his character it was found and pierced, and reamed and rasped, until it would seem to be the most tickety, unsubstantial character in existence.

The effect of all this miserable discussion with the electors in the district will be gathered from the vote. Mr. McGaw, the regular nominee of the district, received 1,162 votes; Mr. Williamson, the irregular nominee, received 1,427. Of the nominees of individuals, Mr. Farrar received 169; Judge Perham, 117; General Herrick, 92; Daniel Wilkins, 46; Benjamin Nourse, 29; and "Major" Harriman, who nominated himself, 211; scattering, 54. Necessary to choice 1,669. The vote of Bangor was 112 for McGaw; 33 for Williamson; 33 for Harriman; 18 scattering.

The meeting for the choice of Representative was held on the 11th of September. A week afterwards Mr. Williamson attempted to close the office of the Register by attaching the printing materials, in a suit on a demand of $281 which he had held against Mr. Burton for several years, and which Mr. Burton said his creditors had assured him should not be pressed to cause him distress. This act embittered Mr. Williamson's enemies more than ever against him, and caused his friends much regret. Whether he deserved it or not, he was thought to be actuated by feelings of revenge. He may have obtained payment of the debt from the friends of Messrs. Burton & Carter, who would not have the paper discontinued; but he lost much of that sympathy which the virulent attack upon him had awakened in the bosoms of many of his supporters.

The candidates for Representative to the Legislature were David J. Burt, Thomas A. Hill, and William Neil. There was no choice. Joseph Treat was afterwards brought into the field, but after the third balloting, Major Bent was elected.

At this period goods came to Bangor by sailing vessels. It was considered "dispatch" when a gentleman went from Bangor to Boston, selected $3,000 worth of various kinds of goods, shipped them on board a sailing vessel, in which he took passage, and had the goods opened and marked, and was selling them in Bangor in just one week after he left the town to purchase the goods.*

On the 28th of August the slide in the Notch of the White Mountains occurred, which destroyed the Willey family. The report of this calamity created a profound sensation.

On the 24th the steam-packet New York, which had some time before visited Bangor, was burnt near Petit Menan Island on her passage from Boston to Eastport.

General Irish, the Land Agent, offered for sale at Jacob Chick's inn, on September 21st., the west half of Township No. 3, Third Range; Nos. 1 and 3, Fourth Range; Nos. 1, 2, 3, A, and Tract Z, Sixth Range; 1 and 3, Seventh Range, by Norris & McMillan's plan, and tract B, of Third Range, north of the Mattawamkeag and south of the Monument line. As no minimum price was fixed and a third of the purchase money was required down, only one tract of twenty-one acres was struck off. The ability of such as wanted to buy was too limited for so large purchases.

*Rufus Dwinel.

Mr. Reuben Bartlett, of Garland, thought the occasion required that he should publicly inform the gentlemen who convened at Garland to ascertain the state of the vote in that Representative class, on the 13th of September, that he did not intend to slight Esquire Wheeler (they not being personally unfriendly) in not extending a special invitation to him to drink, because he did not vote for him—a matter for which he did not care, as every one had the right to vote as he pleased—when he included him in the general invitation. There were some diffident persons to whom he spoke particularly, without intending to slight any. He added, for the benefit of those who had misrepresented his religious principles, that he believed in a just God who would, “most assuredly, chastise vile calumniators.”

In October the circus, with its “ground and lofty tumbling,” Shetland pony, hunted tailor, etc., exhibited at Hutchins’s hotel to the great delectation of the grown and small boys.

On October 12 the “Debating Society” assembled at the office of Edward Kent, and discussed the question whether “it was commendable in a candidate for office to be active in promoting his own election.”

The Stillwater bridge in Orono was completed this month. In the Report to Congress of the Board of Engineers for the Defense of the Seaboard, the Penobscot Bay was stated to be an important part of the coast. “Upon this bay,” it says, “and upon the river of the same name flowing into it, are situated several flourishing towns and villages. Of the many bays which intersect this coast, the Penobscot is the one which presents the greatest number of safe and extensive anchorages; their number, indeed, is such as to render it inexpedient to attempt, under present circumstances, the defense of them. . . . It is necessary, however, to protect the valuable commerce of the bay and river, and to afford a secure retreat for such vessels as, endangered by an enemy, may be enabled to place themselves under the protection of the works to the right or left of the bay. The lowest point at which the object can be accomplished, without great expense, is at the narrows of the river opposite Bucksport, and the Board have accordingly presented a project for a fort at that position, accompanied by a memoir and estimate; the expense is estimated at $101,000.”

Thirty-two vessels were in port on the twenty-third day of November.

The Penobscot Boom Corporation was organized this year. Messrs. Fiske & Bridge, of Boston, erected this year two double saw-mills in Milford, at the foot of Old-town Falls. They also erected a dam across the main channel of the Penobscot, having a sluice, sixty feet wide, for the passage of rafts. But the sluice was of no value, and the dam was thought by many to be a nuisance, as persons having lumber above could not get it over the Falls as they could before the dam was built. There was great dissatisfaction, when the proprietors altered the sluice, and the lumber public was accommodated.

The 18th of December having been appointed for a new trial for a Representative to Congress, “Elector” nominated Samuel Call as a candidate. “Penobscot” had no hesitation in saying that Jacob McGaw’s qualifications entitled him to the entire confidence of the electors. Another “Penobscot” thought poorly of Mr. Williamson, better of Mr. McGaw, but Samuel Call was preferable to either. “Kenduskeag” also was pleased with the nomination of Mr. Call, and was severe upon the lawyers.

“Philo” was of opinion that, as the subjects of the Northeastern boundary, our claims for indemnification for trespasses on our timber lands, the navigation of our waters, the defense of the country, a military road from the head of our tide-waters to the St. John River, a collection district for the county of Penobscot, the interruption of our fisheries, the capture of our vessels by the British ship Dotterell, were pending before Congress, we ought to have a gentleman there to protect our rights “of paramount natural and acquired accomplishments,” and he wished to know of the gentlemen who had made the new nomination “how many of these paramount qualifications their candidate was supposed to possess.” He thought, as it had been suggested that Judge Williamson had withdrawn, and the people of the county were so indifferent in regard to a candidate, there would be no election at the next trial.

“An Elector” nominated John Wilkins as preferable to the other candidates.

“Justitia” says in regard to Mr. Wilkins: “The ambition of filling a public office, no matter how unsuitable our talents or incompetent our powers to discharge the duties of it, has become proverbial. Give a man a taste of public life and he hungers and thirsts eternally. The persons who had nominated Mr. Wilkins had been for a year circulating reports detrimental to him, and now had signed a circular recommending him for office. There is something so abhorrent to good sense and propriety in this as to excite in every breast emotions of indignation.”

At a meeting of Democratic Republicans of Bangor and neighboring towns, on November 23, Joshua Chamberlain Chairman, and Peleg Chandler Secretary, “inasmuch as Mr. Williamson declined to be considered a candidate for Representative to Congress,” John Wilkins was recommended.

“Philo Justitia,” in a long, wordy article, in which he made some flings at Mr. Williamson and Mr. McGaw, thought the private caucus that nominated Mr. Wilkins was composed of “treacherous friends and open enemies.”

“Justitia” comes out against McGaw and Wilkins, and squarely for Call as the most suitable and best qualified of either of the candidates.

Mr. McGaw—a lawyer who confined himself to his profession and generally had little to do with politics—had been brought forward by his friends, who knew his genial and kindly qualities, but who were not intimate enough with him to understand the sensitiveness of his nature. There was one mean calumniator, however, who did understand that, and he did not hesitate to use his knowledge to get so formidable an antagonist out of the way of his candidate. He was probably one of those who marched with such courageous celerity from Hampden in September, 1814. He called himself "Scrutator," and produced from the town records the copy of a petition, of the contents of which he knew that Mr. McGaw knew nothing when it was signed, and had remained ineffectual afterwards; accompanied by an accusation which in the morbid condition of the public mind at the time he had reason to believe must operate injuriously to him, false and malicious as it was. The petition was this:

To the Selectmen of Bangor: Whereas we, the subscribers, have witnessed and felt, with deep sensibility and concern, the inroads and breaches made upon the Constitution of the United States and laws, too grievous to be borne, made by those whose duty it is to govern the Union with honest moderation and profitable justice; and whereas, after waiting seven years, with a hope that the evils we have felt from the General Government would come to an end, and seen the vanity of supplicating them for relief—we despair, and rest our hope only on the Government of Massachusetts, to which we naturally owe allegiance.

We feel desirous that the people of the town of Bangor should assemble in town meeting for the purpose of memorializing the Legislature of the State on the subject of the iniquitous, oppressive, and unconstitutional laws passed by Congress, and praying them to adopt measures to relieve us against their operation. Wherefore we request you to issue your warrant, whereby the inhabitants of the town of Bangor may be notified to meet on Monday next, at two of the clock in the afternoon, at such place as you may think proper to appoint, to act on the following proposition: To memorialize in the form of petition, resolution, or otherwise, the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, expressing to them the views of said inhabitants in respect to the Administration of the Government of the United States, and requesting them to take measures, such as in their wisdom shall seem best, to afford said inhabitants, and the other citizens of the Commonwealth, relief from the operation of some of the unnecessary and iniquitous laws passed by the Congress of the United States.

Bangor, February 15, 1814.

"The above petition was signed by nine persons, among whom were Jacob McGaw and some of his most strenuous supporters."

This malignant and unscrupulous writer then charges Mr. McGaw with friendship for the enemy in this manner: "When the English were in Bangor in 1814, Barry, the English commander, ordered the inhabitants to assemble at the Court-house and sign a parole not to serve against the English during the war. The inhabitants of the town paid little or no attention to the demand. Barry, disappointed at not seeing them, was apparently in a great rage. This Mr. McGaw, who was near, says to him [these are the very words], 'Commodore, we have no music by which to collect them; if you will furnish me with a drummer and fifer, I will go round and bring them in.' Barry ordered out a drummer and fifer, and McGaw marched through the village at their head, and collected some who took the oath. This he did with an unblushing countenance and elastic step, as if he gloried in his shame. And is this volunteer lacquey of a British commander, and he such a brute as Barry, to be our member of Congress? Forbid it, Patriotism. Forbid it, Decency."

The facts were, with regard to the petition, that it was handed to Mr. McGaw for his signature by one in whom he had confidence, saying it was a request for a town meeting to consider the existing state of things; and he, being otherwise occupied, put his name to it without reading it. When the town-meeting assembled and the petition was read, Mr. McGaw moved that the meeting adjourn without action and without day, as has been stated elsewhere in these Annals. The subject-matter of the petition was thought not to be proper to be even debated, and it was not. As to the other allegation, Mr. McGaw "was ordered under guard by Barry for attempting to procure the release of some of the citizens of Hampden, who were then imprisoned on board the enemy's vessels." He was active in rendering every assistance in his power to his fellow-citizens, and in so doing he was compelled to submit to many indignities. The citizens were all prisoners of war until the parole was signed, and the will of the conquerors was their law, except to do things dishonorable; and of that Mr. McGaw would not be guilty.

"A Republican" sounds the trumpet for John Wilkins as a man of undoubted integrity, sound judgment, extensive general and political information, a firm and undeviating Republican and supporter of John Quincy Adams.

A meeting of the friends of the Administration on November 30th, at which Joseph Carr presided, with James Crosby Secretary, dissented from the nomination of Mr. Wilkins as not a friend of the National Administration, and sustained the nomination of Mr. McGaw, as made by "a numerous and respectable convention of Republicans."

Whereupon William D. Williamson, William Emerson, Joshua Chamberlain, Isaac Jacobs, Isaac Hodsdon, James Tilton, Royal Clark, Wiggins Hill, Thomas Davee, and Joshua Carpenter, with fifteen gentlemen of Somerset, issued circulars in favor of Mr. Wilkins for Congress, as "the poor man's friend, the good man's companion."

A convention of delegates from eight towns, fearing that from the distracted state of the public mind upon the subject of a Representative to Congress, a person wholly unqualified would be elected, concluded that they would avoid the calamity by still further distracting the public mind by assembling at Hampden on December 9th and repudiating Mr. McGaw and nominating another candidate—Simeon Stetson, Esq.

Simon Harriman deprecated the course that had been pursued in regard to him. The law had pronounced some of the votes for him legal; others not, because of verbal errors in the votes, "conjured up by technical lawyers;" then, that it was said that his nomination was got up for sport, when it was no such thing, but a real, serious, honest nomination, and his intentions were "true, pure, and honorable," and that he was still a candidate for the suffrages of the people.

"Somerset and Penobscot" urged the election of Jacob McGaw as having been nominated in the old Democratic way, and repudiated Mr. Wilkins as a Crawfordite and a candidate of the friends of William H. Crawford.

"Veritas" said that John Wilkins had been taken from that obscurity for which nature evidently designed him and forced into office, "in which he could neither do credit to himself nor reflect honor on the community;" therefore the electors should vote for the regular nominee of the convention, Jacob McGaw, who was the equal of Mr. Wilkins in integrity, and "in talents greatly superior, and certainly in no respect inferior to either of the opposing candidates."

An anonymous writer thought Samuel Call the man who preserved "that intelligence which would make him respected everywhere; that virtue which may be relied upon; that moral and physical courage which will be proof against the sarcasm of a Randolph or the pistols of a McDuffie;" that love of country, etc., which rendered him the fittest candidate for Congress.

This was the last shot fired before the meeting, which was held on the 18th. Mr. McGaw then received in Bangor 136 votes (doubtless "Scrutator's" attack helped him in Bangor), Mr. Call 33, Mr. Wilkins 32, Simon Harriman 17, scattering 15. Mr. Wilkins had the highest number of votes in the district—1,300; Mr. McGaw received 993, all others 607. There was no choice. The 2d day of April was assigned for the third trial.

December 13, Benjamin Garland opened the Franklin House. It was a very pretty two-story dwelling, with the end on Harlow street, of red brick. The front was towards Franklin street, sheathed, and painted white. It had a hip-roof, and was at that time one of the handsomest dwellings in town. Its dimensions have since been greatly enlarged.

Rev. S. L. Poirroy, Chairman of the Superintending School Committee, gave notice that the following-named books had been adopted for the public schools, viz: New York Primer, Marshall's Spelling Book, Beauties of the Bible, Historical Reader, American First Class Book, Fisk's Murray's Grammar, Cummings's Geography, and Colburn's Arithmetic and Sequel.

Among the business men this year whose names have not been mentioned were John Roberts, Benjamin Nourse (books), Ford & Isaac S. Whitman, Thomas Furber, Elmore Parker, Philip H. & John J. Coombs, Rufus Dwinel, George W. Randall, Benjamin Haskell, Micajah Haskell, Charles B. Prescott, Thomas F. Hatch, Edward Hatch, William A. Hatch, Thomas Green, Hazen Mitchell, Samuel True, David Reynolds, Samuel L. Valentine, Mark Trafton, John Bright, Nathaniel French, Dustan C. Quimby, Hosea Stodder, William Emerson, Jr., Fordyce Hills.

The old firm of Taylor & Brown (Abner Taylor and George W. Brown), which had been in existence a great many years in a two-story frame store at the right-hand corner of West Market Square approaching Kenduskeag Bridge, was dissolved this month.

With the winter came the muse of the season, and "Sleighting" was announced in these lines:

The bells are jingling—winter now,
With his white livery clothes the ground,
And o'er the glar'd, hard-trodden snow,
The merry bells are ringing round.

Jingling—the shingle weavers come—
The roads are full, the streets beset—
To buy molasses or new rum,
Or any thing that they can get.

The bells are jingling—farmers hie
With beef, or pork, or wheat, or oats;
Of winter goods to get supply—
And some hard cash to pay their notes.

Jingle the bells—the merchant smiles,
And at dull times no longer frets;
Takes care of profits—and the whites
Most carefully collects his debts.

The're jingling, too, the lawyers please,
In office pent so long and wary;
It tells of clients and of fees,
And the next Court, in January.

This jingle, too, the printer cheers,
He loves to hear the merry clash,
It soundeth to his practised ears,
As saying—"produce, sir, or cash."

All love to see the busy men,
And motion of the bustling throng;
And those, the loveliest in the scene,
The merry belles that glide along.

Mr. Tilly Brown, a respected citizen, a native of Concord, Massachusetts, died at the age of forty. He was employed in aiding the settlement of Township No. 2, Old Indian Purchase, and building mills, surveying and running lines, but over-exerting himself among the fallen timber, he burst a blood-vessel and died from loss of blood.

CHAPTER XX.

Mozart Society—Female Charitable Society—Amos Patten Elected Councillor—Case of Call and Williamson—Judge Perham Nominated for Congress—Penobscot Gazette Discontinued—Colonel Hodsdon Elected Major-General—Obstructions at Piscataquis—Edward Kent Chief Justice Court of Sessions—Early and late Canvass—More Politics—Mr. Williamson again Nominated—Wilkins, Herrick, Harriman, and Carr in the Field—No Choice—Fire Wardens—Horse Ferry-boat—Eastern Republican Established—Nathaniel Haynes Editor—Greek Cause—Northeast Boundary—Road Travel—River Obstructions—Major Harriman's Pitchforks—Great Haul of Shad and Alewives—Houlton Mail—Penobscot Indians in New York—Boston Survey of Lumber—Needham, the Mail Robber—Fourth of July—Temperance—Independent Volunteers' Anniversary—Political Movements—Major-General Hodsdon—Samuel Butman Nominated for Congress—General Hodsdon Nominated—Party History—Poor Farm—Abuse of Indians—State Election—Death of Mrs. Howard—Washington Guards—Circus—Hops—Anna Royal—Arrest of Baker at Madawaska—Methodist Meeting-house Contemplated—Military Order—Death of Dr. Skinner—Orono Canal Contemplated—Agent on Boundary Troubles—Governor's Proclamation—War Feared—Isaac R. Park's Peril—Stillwater Bridge—Death of Thomas Howard—British Claims—The Clarion—Military Road—The Baker Case at Washington—Brig Bold Jack Lost—Business Men.

1827. The year 1827 was ushered in with music. The Bangor Mozart Society, of which Mr. Levi Cram was Clerk, devoted much time to the practice of the "hard masters."

The Female Charitable Society did not forget its mission. It assembled at the dwelling of Mr. Asa Davis, under the promptings of Mrs. Dorcas P. Pike, in the performance of its objects, early in January.

Amos Patten, of Bangor, was elected as a member of Governor Lincoln's Council, for Penobscot.

At the session of the Court of Common Pleas, in January, William D. Williamson was tried a second time for an assault upon Samuel Call. Mr. Call was Surveyor of Highways, and at some time in the year 1826 was repairing the street in front of Mr. Williamson's dwelling, and in such a way as to render the entrance inconvenient. As politics were high, and these two gentlemen were not politically friendly, Mr. Williamson imagined that Call was taking advantage of his position to annoy him, and interfered, with his stepson, Benjamin Wiggin, sufficiently to give an occasion for an indictment for assault and battery. After two trials—the jury declining to agree—a nolle prosequi was entered. The result was as might have been expected, with politics an element in the case.

On January 31 Albion K. Parris was elected a United States Senator for Maine.

A prospectus for a new paper, to be called the Eastern Republican, was circulated, to the dismay of the Register. It was to be a "genuine Republican" paper, and the Register never forgot that announcement.

William King, of Bath, and Rufus McIntyre, of Parsonfield, were appointed Commissioners for the survey and establishment of the boundary line between Maine and New Hampshire.

The report of the Land Agent showed that the net receipts of the State for lands, timber, and grass sold the past year, were $38,884.32.

The delegation in the Legislature from the Penobscot and Somerset District, nominated Judge Perham as candidate for Congress.

The Penobscot Gazette was discontinued. The Register gave as the cause of its death "an atrophy," though it had been reported that it was strangled to make room for "Miss Eastern Republican."

The abduction of William Morgan by Free Masons, as was alleged, for publishing a book revealing the secrets of Free Masonry, occurred about this time and caused great excitement.

The members of the Legislature re-nominated Governor Enoch Lincoln for re-election.

Colonel Isaac Hodsdon was elected Major-General of the Third Division of Militia, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of General Jedediah Herrick.

George B. Moody, of Oldtown, and Nathaniel Haynes, of Bangor, formed a law copartnership.

Great indignation was occasioned among the business men on the Piscataquis River by the erection of a dam at its mouth, and a meeting was held in Sebec, by which it was declared a public nuisance in its situation and an effectual obstacle to the passage of rafts of lumber and timber. A committee, consisting of John Bradbury, of Foxcroft; Francis Brown, of Brownville; and Josiah Towle, of Sebec, was appointed to cause the obstructions there and at Oldtown, if necessary, to be removed.

At the annual meeting for the choice of town officers, Alexander Savage was elected Town Clerk; George Starrett, Treasurer; Jacob McGaw, Agent; Amos Patten, James Crosby, Daniel Pike, Selectmen, Assessors and Overseers of the Poor; Swan L. Pomroy, William D. Williamson, Benjamin Nourse, Joshua P. Dickinson, and John Godfrey, Superintending School Committee.

Edward Kent was appointed by the Governor Chief Justice of the Court of Sessions. Joshua Carpenter, of Howland, was appointed a commissioner to lay out a road from Township No. 2 to Mattanawcook; and Joel Wellington, of Albion, a commissioner to lay out a road from Mattanawcook to Houlton.

A convention of the "Democratic Republicans" of the District was held in Bangor, to nominate a candidate for Representative to Congress. Joshua Chamberlain was Chairman; Isaac Hodsdon, Secretary. Two sets of delegates presented themselves from Bangor. A meeting had been called by the trained politicians at the unusual hour of 6 o'clock, at which time a dozen persons assembled and selected delegates and adjourned. Presently about thirty persons appeared at the usual hour for such meetings and elected another set of delegates. The convention concluded that the delegates elected by the prompt caucus, that elected delegates before they took their supper, were entitled to be recognized rather than the delegates elected by the late caucus, after supper! They therefore received the delegates of the former and rejected those of the latter, not considering that when anything was to be accomplished in a political convention, there was such a thing as being "too smart." Such proceedings are not yet obsolete—the prompt men at caucuses doing everything in their own way, and leaving the later men to reconcile themselves to the fact as best they can.

The convention nominated William D. Williamson as candidate for Congress, sixteen to ten.

Another meeting was held at Mr. Chick's hotel by gentlemen who deemed that the first meeting was unfairly conducted, and nominated General Jedediah Herrick as a candidate.

The model proclamation of Governor Lincoln for a day of fasting and prayer was published at this time, and ought to have been carefully studied by the politicians.

"I recommend to every one," he said, "to observe the day [April 5] as a Christian; if he be under the influence of any vice, to banish it; if in error, to correct it; if under obligations to others, honestly to discharge them; if suffering injuries, to forgive them; if aware of animosities, to extinguish them; and if able to do any benevolent act to any being created by the Almighty Power to which he owes his existence and his faculties, to do it.

"And with a conscience thus prepared, may we visit the Temple of God, to worship him with humble and happy disposition, which always belongs to piety and innocence; beseeching Him that the religion he sent by our Saviour may not be perverted through the pride and prejudices of sectarianism, but may universally receive the homage of a correct faith and good works.

"Especially I recommend that, being members of one great community, we unite as Christian politicians, so that we may render perpetual the peace and prosperity of our country and of this State."

The nomination of Mr. Williamson by a packed caucus occasioned no little animadversion among the Democratic Republicans. There were but twenty-six votes cast, and the balloting did not take place until after two adjournments—for lunch at 11 o'clock and dinner at 1, in Mr. Chick's hotel.

"An Elector" could not adopt the nomination of Mr. Williamson, made by such a caucus, "after spending most of the day in taking a little refreshment prepared for the occasion, and adding a few talesmen to make a decent number in the convention, but preferred to vote for the unanimously nominated Republican candidate, John Wilkins.

"Penobscot" fearlessly asserted that the convention was packed; that some of the friends of the candidate "very ingenuously confessed that they assembled at the convention, not for the purpose of an interchange of sentiment, not to nominate a candidate who would unite the Republicans, but to nominate William D. Williamson."

An anonymous writer publishes the circular of Mr. Williamson, Mr. Hodsdon, Mr. Clark, and Mr. Tilton, addressed to the electors before the last trial, recommending Mr. Wilkins, and urges that, as Mr. Wilkins was regularly nominated and had not withdrawn, he should be supported in preference to Mr. Williamson, who had withdrawn, and was afterward nominated at the expense of every fair principle, because he could not be satisfied until he was permitted to figure once more upon the floor of Congress. But the people were not stupid fools; they could read, they could see, they could think.

"Cato" wanted his fellow citizens to look at the candidates. First, there was William D. Williamson "clothed with the recommendations of the conventions of each county," which at first blush had an imposing appearance, but when it was understood how the conventions were managed "by less than half a dozen inconsistent intriguers," their doings were of no binding force.

Second, there was John Wilkins, whom Mr. Williamson and others of his present supporters had recommended as "a Democratic Republican from his youth, the poor man's friend and the good man's companion."

Then there was Jediah Herrick, whose "abilities were far above mediocrity, whose integrity was undoubted; a man of extensive views and general information."

Then there was Joseph Carr, "one of the oldest settlers, a firm and undeviating Republican from his childhood. . . . Of these candidates choose ye whom ye will, but so act that ye may not repent."

"Philo Justitia" eschewed old party distinctions, and said we had good examples for doing so; Georgia, a Republican State, had elected a Berrien, an old Federalist, to Congress; Virginia, a Tazewell; Delaware, a McLane; and Massachusetts, a Webster. Let us do likewise, and elect from among the candidates, without regard to party predilections, the one best competent to serve us—General Jediah Herrick. The writer's admiration of that gentleman was unbounded.

"Penobscot" favored General Herrick as a "man of undoubted integrity, superior talents, and an undeviating friend of the administration of John Quincy Adams."

"A Republican of the Old School" treated the course of Mr. Williamson's friends to a choice bit of irony.

Simon Harriman again lifted his clarion voice:

I am the proper person to be elected. I have been consistent in my course; I have not, like a brother candidate, at one election withdrawn my name, and then endeavored to force myself again into nomination; nor have I, like another candidate, been dispirited by two unsuccessful attempts, and then retired from the contest too late for my friends to substitute another in my stead. No, my friends, I have pursued a uniform course; I have, and do still offer myself to you.

On March 26 the Republicans from several towns in the county met at the Franklin House, Benjamin Garland in the chair and Joseph R. Lumbert Secretary, and nominated Joseph Carr as "a pure and tried Republican and a firm friend of the National Administration;" as one to whom the Republican electors would not hesitate to give their votes.

An address to the Republicans of 1812 in the District set forth that when the country was suffering from the restrictive measures which became necessary in consequence of the British impressment of our seamen and Orders in Council and French Decrees, the late Hon. Francis Carr was willing to risk his all—to see his ship rot on her stocks, and the debts due to him sacrificed, for the support of the honor of his country; that when in Congress from this District, he did not hesitate to make the sacrifice; that when our country was struggling hard in the contest of war for her rights, Hon. James Carr sustained these rights in a manner highly honorable to himself and useful to his constituents." Now several who had always basked in the sunshine of public favor, but had never sacrificed a cent for the public good, were urging an addition "to their wealth, their ease and their honor." But all the electors of the District had not forgotten to be grateful for past favors. Some remembered that another member of that family still lived, and they well knew that Joseph Carr, Esq., of Bangor, possessed talents at least equal to those of his late honorable father and brother. He was the instrument for restoring union among friends. If he is elected to Congress "our country will honor our judgment, and our consciences approve of our deeds."

A convention at Norridgewock on the 11th of March voted to concur in Mr. Williamson's nomination. The report outside was that the "convention barely concurred."

The vote was taken April 2. Bangor gave for Mr. Carr, 105; for Mr. Wilkins, 38; for General Herrick, 28; for "Major" Harriman, 27; for Judge Williamson, 41; scattering, 6.

The vote of the District was, for Carr, 579; Wilkins, 225; Herrick, 760; Williamson, 1,520; others, 567. There was no choice.

The Fire Wardens of the town held a meeting and distributed the duties among themselves thus: Amos Patten, or in his absence George W. Brown, to have the direction of Washington engine at any fire; Benjamin Haskell or J. B. Fiske, the direction of engine No. 1; George Bradford; charge of fire hooks and removing vessels; David Hill, charge of ladders; John Barker, Jacob McGaw, Wiggins Hill, and John Ham, to form lines to convey water to Washington engine; Edmund Dole, Abner Taylor, and John M. Prince, to form lines for engine No. 1; J. B. Fiske and G. W. Brown, charge of removing furniture and merchandise.

G. W. Brimmer, Esq., of Boston, interested himself in putting a horse ferry-boat on the Bangor ferry this season.

The Eastern Republican was established, under the editorial management of Nathaniel Haynes, a lawyer of liberal education. Samuel Call, who wrote the editorials for the Register, suggested "that he was not the first young man who had been disappointed in his expectations to lead the inhabitants of the county of Penobscot;" that he must treat his seniors with respect, his equals with courtesy; that he should learn to see himself as others saw him; that he should learn to express his ideas in English, and not vaunt himself on a smattering of Latin; and that he should never attempt wit."

On April 13th Mr. Chick served to his guests a fine fresh salmon.

Much interest was felt for the Greek cause. A public meeting was held in the Court-house April 16th; Amos Patten, Chairman; Edward Kent, Secretary. William D. Williamson, James Crosby, Professor Smith, Mark L. Hill, Jr., Nathaniel Harlow, and Rufus Dwinel were appointed a committee to solicit contributions. Prominent gentlemen named in the several towns in the county were requested to co-operate. Samuel Call, Jacob McGaw, and Edward Kent were appointed a committee to address the citizens of the county on the situation and sufferings of the Greeks, and they published a very clear statement of the condition of that people. They were struggling for liberty against the Turks. They were struggling for the same principle for which the founders of our Republic struggled successfully, and "we owe a debt of humanity."

John G. Deane, Esq., of Ellsworth, about this time commenced a series of valuable articles upon the North-eastern boundary, in the "Independent Courier," under the signature of "Cato."

Miss Brown commenced her first summer term of a school for young ladies in Bangor on the 1st of May. Tuition from $3 to $5 per quarter. The higher English studies were taught, with drawing, painting, and ornamental needlework. It was a good and successful school.

The travel upon the road leading into Bangor was becoming noticeable. A person confined to his house on the Orono road, about a mile from the Kenduskeag Stream, counted the people, horses, and carriages that passed between 7 o'clock A. M. and 7 P. M. There were 219 persons, 90 horses, 35 chaises, 39 wagons. He calculated that one-third as many passed before 7 A. M. and after 7 P. M., and there was no unusual excitement. It was the everyday travel.

The business men of Piscataquis were in earnest in regard to the Piscataquis dam. A party of men was employed and removed the obstruction to the navigation of the river without the consent of the owner. The Fiske & Bridge sluice at Oldtown was of no benefit, and the dam was the occasion of so much complaint that the owners were compelled to satisfy the public in regard to a passage for lumber.

Major Harriman did not permit his want of success in running for Congress to prevent his caring for the farmers as usual. He could afford no time for recrimination, but continued the manufacture of pitchforks, ox, cow, and sheep bells, "warranted to be heard from one to five miles." He, however, removed his shop "to Fore street, next door to Mr. Chick's Maine Coffee House," probably having a taint idea that such proximity to so famous a political hotel would give him some advantages in enforcing his claims to high position in the Government.

Major Nathaniel Haynes, aid of Major-General Hodson, gave notice of the appointment by that officer of George W. Pickering Division Inspector, and Samuel Lowder, Jr. Division Quartermaster.

The grand caravan, with lions, tigers, elephant, ichneumon, Dandy Jack, and Captain Dick, accompanied by wax statues, made its annual visit in May.

The finding a piece of wood with the appearance of a petrified post, in the ground in the front of the Court-house, was thought worthy of note. Mr. Comins was digging a cellar, and was astonished when he fell upon this piece of "wooden stone."

Some opinion may be formed in regard to the immense quantities of fish in the Penobscot at the head of the tide, when it is understood that seven thousand shad and a hundred barrels of alewives were taken at one haul of the seine, about the middle of May this year. They were taken by Mr. Luther Eaton, of Eddington. This was an unusual fish year. Shad were sold at Oldtown at fifty cents a hundred, and alewives were deemed hardly worth saving.

Samuel K. Gilman, of Hallowell, was appointed Collector of Customs for Penobscot, in place of Josiah Hook, deceased.

The mail was carried from Bangor to Houlton by James Lander, on the 31st of May; after that it left Bangor for that town on every succeeding fourth, and Houlton on every succeeding third Thursday following.

Edward Kent was admitted at the June term of the Supreme Court, as an attorney of that court.

On June 9th sixty-four vessels were lying in the harbor.

On the 11th Mr. Fifield picked cucumbers from his vines measuring from five to six and one-half inches in length, raised in the open air in this town. They were said to be the earliest then ever raised in the county. Mr. Chick had green peas pretty well filled on his table the 19th of June, and in a day or two after treated a party to turtle soup, green peas, etc.!

A party of about fifty Penobscot Indians encamped on an island in the North River, New York, between Waterford and Lansingburg, this season. They went by the way of the River St. Lawrence, Lake Champlain, and the Northern Canal in their canoes. They might have been a portion of the tribe that seceded the first of the century, on the election of a Governor, and went to Canada. They attracted much attention by their expert management of their canoes.

The annuity this year was paid by the State to about three hundred and seventy Indians, which was not far from the number in the tribe at home.

A newspaper was established in this year in Castine, called the American.

There was a great deal of feeling in Maine at this time relative to the "Boston survey" of lumber. The justice of their complaint was acknowledged in Boston, but it was alleged that the difficulty grew out of a want of definiteness in the law. This, however, was not the whole reason of the complaint. Gross frauds were alleged on the part of the purchaser and surveyor, who, instead of making reasonable allowance for a rot that damaged two feet of a board measuring forty feet, condemned the whole board as refuse, and in this way obtained much good lumber for nothing—refuse being half the price of merchantable. Then, what was really refuse they called mill-refuse, which they valued at one-fourth the price of merchantable. Then, if boards sold at a high price in Boston, the refuse and mill-refuse made the greater portion of the cargo. There was no principle, except the interest of the purchaser, that governed the surveyor.

The matter was a constant theme of conversation among the lumber-dealers of Bangor. A writer in the Boston Patriot said that the Boston survey was a proverbial expression of reproach in Maine, and that many of the good people of the State "actually believed that there was a secret, nefarious understanding between the surveyors and buyers by which in some way great benefit accrued to them—in other words, that the surveyors were bribed; that the present method of survey was calculated to deceive in regard to the quality of the lumber; that the superior goodness of the lumber from the neighborhood of Penobscot and Passamaquoddy is admitted by all, and often a subject of conversation. The writer then asks what the decision of the public would be, if they were to judge by the survey, when they were informed that three-fourths of this excellent lumber is pronounced refuse. When delivered in Boston the lumber is assorted and divided into qualities designated by them as "clear, merchantable, refuse, and mill refuse" [scoots]. Then to show the difference betwixt the Maine and the Boston surveys, he gives the contents of a cargo surveyed in Calais and shipped to Boston and there surveyed. By Maine survey it contained 68,026 feet of clear boards; 8,057 feet of refuse boards; 13,760 feet of merchantable; total, 89,843. By the Boston survey: 8,527 feet of clear; 50,507 feet of merchantable; 28,021 feet of refuse; 1,230 feet of mill-refuse: total, 88,285.

The difference these surveys made against the seller and in favor of the purchaser may be determined by the sales of a cargo: 52 feet of clear boards, at $26 per M; 2,334 feet of merchantable, at $21 per M; 21,532 feet of refuse, at $10.50 per M; 9,550 feet mill-refuse, at $5.25 per M.

The logs from which these boards were made cost $7.50 per thousand feet, and netted to the shipper less than $7.25. Of course the cost of sawing, rafting, and removing was lost.

The people of Maine submitted to this until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, when they sought other markets, and Boston began to experience the consequences.

On the 28th June considerable excitement grew out of the arrest of one George Needham, on a charge of robbing the mail. He was carried before William D. Williamson, Esq. The case was continued a week, and he was ordered to recognize for his appearance in the sum of $500. As he could not obtain bail, he was ordered to be committed to gaol. On his way to the gaol he obtained leave from the officer to change his apparel at his lodgings. After this, when near the gaol, he drew a dirk and pistol from under his coat, and pointing them at the officer (Simon B. Harriman) and his assistant, started and ran up Hammond street. Simon was dumb-founded for an instant, and, being somewhat heavy, it was difficult for him to run; he therefore, as soon as he recovered himself, secured a big boulder and flung it toward the retreating malefactor, who, fortunately, was a long way beyond its reach, or it would have smashed his skull or his bones, if it had hit either. Needham's legs were good, and he nearly reached the wood southerly of the seminary buildings before he was overtaken. When he felt a strong hand upon his shoulder he drew his dirk and stabbed a student who had seized him, inflicting a slight wound. But he was again a prisoner, and lodged that night in the gaol. On the next day he was taken before Justice Jonathan P. Rogers, on one charge of resisting the officer and on another for a murderous assault on Mr. Cushing. On the first charge he was ordered to recognize in $200, and on the last $500. Being no more able to procure bail for these sums than he had been for the first, Mr. Simon B. Harriman had the felicity of witnessing this genteel criminal incarcerated, as he supposed for some time.

But Mr. Needham was a man of resources. He took advantage of the absence of Deacon Clark, the gaoler, and his family at meeting on the next Sunday, to wheedle the servant girl into the belief that he was in love with her, and induced her to get his clothing (which she did, with some apparel for herself belonging to a member of the family), and to release him and one Flanders—another prisoner—from prison and go with them. Their absence was discovered within twenty minutes, but not themselves. They had escaped to the wood. Handbills were issued, and $130 reward was offered for their apprehension.

On the next day a girl called at a house in Hampden, near the Sowadabscook bridge, to procure some milk for some children on board a vessel, as she said; but she was observed, on leaving the house, to go in the direction of the wood. This excited suspicion that she might be the girl referred to in the advertisement, and eight or ten men placed themselves in different localities to watch. At about 10 o'clock at night a man and girl were seen crossing the bridge answering to the description of Needham and the girl, and they were arrested by Major Jona. Haskins and others, and recommitted to the gaol.

Needham was afterward tried in the Supreme Court, and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment in the State Prison at Thomaston. In October he was indicted in the United States Court, at Wiscasset, for robbing the mail.

There was no great display in the celebration of the Fourth of July this year. The religious portion of the community listened to an excellent address in the meeting-house by Rev. George E. Adams, and several anthems, and a prayer by Professor Smith, of the Theological Seminary. The artillery company fired the several salutes, dined at Andrew Hasey's inn, and in the afternoon amused themselves with firing at a target.

From 12 (midnight) until the artillery saluted the rising sun, there was neither sleep nor slumber for the eyelids, for the noises of every description made by the boys. It was a time of universal racket. In the evening a meeting was held in the Court-house to devise means for the "suppression of intemperance." The Register thought that, considering "the place, the day, and the hour, the meeting might be called 'taking the bull by the horns.'"

The agitation of this subject was becoming greater than ever before. The ruinous effects of the use of alcoholic liquors were everywhere discussed in New England; and pledges to abstain from it were circulated, and generally signed by the best men in the community. The temperance men, meetings, and pledges were sneered at by the lovers of strong drink, but the reformers persevered and increased in numbers and power.

The "Independent Volunteers" celebrated their fourth anniversary on the 4th of July. An address was delivered by Charles Gilman at the Court-house "worthy of this occasion," after which the company marched to the Franklin House, "which was handsomely decorated, and partook of a sumptuous dinner provided for the occasion by Mr. Benjamin Garland."

Several gentlemen opened the political campaign in Dover this year on the 23d of July, and nominated William Allen, Jr., of Norridgewock, for Representative to Congress, and Thomas Davee, of Dover, for Senator to the Legislature.

This was followed on the 6th of August by a meeting at the Franklin House of gentlemen friendly to the Administration. It was then resolved to call a convention of delegates from Penobscot and Somerset counties, to be held at Garland on the 16th of August to nominate candidates for the several offices.

The "Democratic Republicans" in Penobscot and Somerset counties were prompt in their movements. Their Penobscot County Committee was composed of Joseph Kelsey, Jona. Knowles, William R. Lowney, Isaac Jacobs, Alden Nickerson, Joshua Carpenter, Reuben Bartlett, James S. Holmes, and Gorham Parks.

Democratic Republicans from all parts of the county had assembled at Bangor on June 12, and resolved to patronize the Eastern Republican, as the paper solely devoted to the interests of the Republican party; a journal edited by Nathaniel Haynes, "a gentleman alike distinguished for his talents and for the soundness of his political principles," as a means of uniting the party, in which there had been long wanting a concert of action. At that meeting the above committee was appointed.

The committee at once issued a circular to obtain subscribers for the Republican. Mr. Kelsey, as chairman of the district and county committees, issued calls for district and county conventions, to nominate a candidate for Representative to Congress and a candidate for State Senator, to be held at Dexter on August 20.

The agitation of the subject of the survey of lumber became so serious that several meetings were held at Lambert's tavern in August to consider the system then existing.

The Eastern Republican began soon after the meeting for its benefit to give evidence of prosperity, and very much disturbed the managers of the Register, who noticed it in the following undignified manner:

The "Gemini" has at length (we will not say by what means) attained to its "super-royal sheet—new fount of small picas, iron press, and new Blockhead." Elated with the acquisition, the editor in his last number struts and gobbles with all the grace and dignity of a turkey-cock.

