PREFACE

To the SECOND VOLUME.

THEN the first volume was printed. I had not feen the 'Political 'Annals' of the American Colonies, published in 1780, by George Chalmers, Esq. This gentleman, being in England, was favored with fome advantages, of which I was destitute; having access to the books and papers of the Lords of Trade and Plantations, from the first establishment of that Board. He feems to posless the diligence and patience which are necessary in a historian; but either through inadvertence or want of candor, has made fome mifrepresentations respecting New-Hampshire, on which I shall take the liberty to remark.

In page 491, speaking of the first Council, of which President Cutts was at the head, he says, 'they resused to take the 'accustomed oaths, as the English law 'required, because liberty of confcience 'was allowed them.' In the first volume of my history, page 176, I have said, 'they published the commission and took the oaths; for which I cited the Council records; and on recurring to them, I find the following entry, in the hand writing of Elias Stileman, Secretary.

' Fanuary 21, 1679-80.

' His Majesty's Commissioners, nomy-' nated in faid commission, tooke their respective oathes, as menconed in said commission.

That the oaths were really taken, is a fact beyond all dispute; but if there is any ground for what Mr. Chalmers is pleased to call a refusal, it must have been respecting the form of swearing; which was usually done here by lifting the hand, and not by laying it on the bible, as was the form in England. Was it a forced construction of the clause respecting liberty of conscience, to suppose, that this indulgence was granted to them? What other use could they have made of this liberty, than to act according to the dictates of their consciences? Is it then confistent with candor, to publish an affertion; fo worded as to admit the idea, that these gentlemen refused to obey an essential part of the duty prescribed by the commission, which they undertook to execute? Or is it confistent with the character which he gives of the Prefident, CUTTS, p. 492, that 'he was allowed to have been ' an honest man and a loyal subject?' The commission required them to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and an oath of office; which last is recited in the commission: but not a word is said of the mode and form, in which the oaths should be taken; neither was it faid that they fnould be taken 'as the English law required.' They were therefore left at their liberty, to take them in any form which was agreeable to their conscience, or their former usage.

In the fame page (491) he fays; 'An 'Affembly was foon called, which, by 'means of the ufual intrigues, was composed of persons, extremely favorable to 'the projects of those who now engrossed 'power.' And in a note (page 507) 'the 'Council transmitted to the towns, a list 'of those who should be allowed to yote.'

With what propriety can it be faid that these gentlemen engrossed power, when they were commissioned by the King; and it is acknowledged, that not only their appointment, but their entering on office, was contrary to their inclinations?

That the persons chosen into the Asfembly should be 'favorable' to the sentiments of the Council, or of 'the wife men of Boston,' was not the result of any intrigues; but because the majority of the people were of the same mind. As to fending 'a lift of those who should be ' allowed to vote;' the true state of the matter was this. The commission provided for the calling of an Affembly, within three months after the Council should be fworn, by fummons under feal, 'using ' and observing therein such rules and ' methods, as to the perfons who are to ' choose the deputies, and the time and ' place of meeting, as they (the Council) ' shall judge most convenient.' The mode which they judged most convenient was, to order the felect men of the four towns. to take a lift of the names and estates of their respective inhabitants, according to their usual manner of making taxes, and fend it to the Council. The Council then iffued an order, appointing the perfins therein named, to meet in their respective towns, and elect by a major vote, three persons from each, to represent them in a general Assembly, on the 16th of March; and in the order, there is this proviso, 'Provided that wee do not intend that what is now done be presidential for the future, and that it shall extend noe farther, than to the calling this first assembly.'

Now as the rules and methods of calling an affembly, and the persons who were to choose deputies, were left to the difcretion of the Council; what more proper method could they have taken, than to call for a lift of the inhabitants and their estates, and by that means to determine, who were qualified in point of property and habitancy to be electors? And as the numbers were few, and the perfons well known, was it not as proper to name them at once, in the writs, as to establish qualifications, and appoint other persons to judge of those qualifications; especially when there was no law in force by which they could be judged? It is observable that each voter was ordered to take the oath of allegiance if he had not taken it before; and in the lift of names in the book, a mark is fet against several persons, who did not take the oath; and another against those who did not appear at the election. Has this the appearance of intrigue?

In page 492, he fays, 'they were extremely flow in conforming to prefent 'requisitions, and passed no laws during the first session.' Having again consulted the records, I find in the Journal of the Council this entry, 'At a general Assembly held in Portsmouth, the 16th of 'March, 1679—80. Present, &c. Sundry 'laws and ordinances made at this session 'are in another booke, for that purpose.'

In that other book, a body of laws is recorded, in the fame hand writing, viz. of Stileman the Secretary, which bears the following title; 'The 'general laws and liberties of the Province of New-Hampshire, made by the general Assembly in Portsmouth, the 16th 'day of March, 1679—80, and approved by the President and Council.'

It appears from the books, that this Affembly

Affembly held four fessions within the year, viz. on the 16th of March, the 7th of June, the 12th of October, and the 7th of December. As there is not a particular date to each law, but the whole code bears the date of the first session in March: it may fairly be inferred, that the bufiness' was begun in the first fession, and continued through the other three; and when completed, was immediately fent to England; for Mr. Chalmers himself tells us, that 'the laws which they transmitted, in conformity to their Constitution, had ' not the good fortune to pleafe, and were disapproved of, by the Lords of the Committee of Plantations, in Dec. 1681.

From this statement it may be concluded, that they were not slower in 'essaying 'their legislative talents,' than the necessity of proceeding with due deliberation required; and that there was no just cause for the reproach which he has cast upon them.

In page 494, he gives this account of the character of the people of New-Hampshire. 'When Cranfield arrived, 'he found the Province containing four 'thousand inhabitants, extremely poor

'from the devastation of the Indian war. 'But when he spoke contemptuously of ' the country which he had been fent to ' rule, he feems not to have reflected, that 'all Colonies had once known the like ' paucity of numbers, the fame weakness, ' and the fame poverty; animated only by a dissimilar spirit from that of New-' Hampshire, which now disdained that ' independence on her neighbours, that other 'Provinces had contended for, with en-' thusiasm. And other plantations, actuated by very different maxims, had not complained, even in their weakest days, of their inability to defend their fron-' tiers, against the attacks of a foe, that ' has never proved dangerous, except to ' the effeminate, the factious, or the cow-' ardly. When New Plimouth confifted only of two hundred persons, of all ages ' and fexes, it repulsed its enemies and fecured its borders, with a gallantry worthy of its parent country; because it ' stood alone, in the defert, without hope of aid.

That the people of New-Hampshire ever deserved the character of effeminate or cowardly, can by no means be admitted. Innumerable facts evince the contrary beyond a doubt. Had this author ever refided among them, especially in time of war, he would have thought quite otherwise of them. That the native savages have 'never proved a dangerous foe, to 'any but the effeminate, the factious and 'the cowardly,' is an affertion totally unfounded. Their manner of attacking was always by surprise, and the bravest and best men may sometimes be deficient in vigilance, where no suspicion of danger exists.

If the people of New-Hampshire 'dif-'dained independence,' let it be considered, that they had been, for about 40 years, connected with Massachusetts, to their mutual satisfaction; and the proposed 'indepen-'dence' which he means was but another name for subjection to a landlord. When independence, in its genuine meaning, became necessary, in 1776, they freely joined with their brethren in asserting it, and in bravely defending it.

Without any disparagement to the first settlers of Plymouth, who, from the year 1643, were protected by a confederacy of the four New-England Colonies, it may with truth be faid, that the people of New-Hampshire were never behind them, in vigorous exertions for their own defence, when they were conducted by officers in whom they could place confidence; but in Cranfield's time, there was no war with the Indians; though he attempted to frighten them into an apprehension of danger, from the Indians, to serve his own purposes.

The account which Mr. Chalmers gives of Cranfield's administration differs not very materially from mine, except in one instance. He represents 'the ministers as 'very attentive to him, because they 'deemed him gained over to the Independents.' I have met with no evidence of this, the deception, if any, must have been very short lived.

Mr. Chalmers fays nothing of the profecution of Moody, and of Cranfield's endeavours to ruin him, for his non-conformity to the Church of England; but tells us that he 'deemed it unfafe, to re- main any longer among the ministers, 'who ruled an enthufiaftic people, with 'the fame fway as did the popifh clergy 'during the darkeft ages;' and that in his letters to England, he 'gave warning, 'that while the clergy were allowed to 'preach, no true allegiance would be 'found in those parts.' This may be confidered as a corroborating evidence of his bigotry and intolerance. Truth obliges me to add, that his opponents were not deficient in those unhappy qualities, which were too much in fashion among all parties in that age.

Mr. Chalmers concludes his account of New-Hampshire in these words. 'Being excluded from the charter granted to Massachusetts, it has continued to the present time, a different, though inconsiderable fettlement; irregular and factious in its economy, affording no precedents that may be of exemplary use to other Colonies.' What justice there is in this remark, the reader will be able to determine, from the following portion of its history, which, after much unavoidable delay, is now submitted to his perusal.

The administration of Governor Shute, and bis Lieutenants, VAUGHAN and WENT-WORTH.

EORGE VAUGHAN, Esq. was the fon of Major William Vaughan, who had been so ill used by former Governors, and had fuffered fo much in the cause of his country, that the advancement of his fon, to the office of Lieutenant Governor, was esteemed a mark of particular favor, from the Crown to the Province, and a fingular gratification to the parent, then in the decline of life. The Lieutenant Governor had been employed by the Province, as their agent in England, to manage their defence against Allen. There he was taken notice of, by fome persons of quality and influence, with whom his father had been connected; and by them he was recommended as a candidate for the honor to which he was now advanced.

After he had arrived, and opened his commission; Dudley, though not actually superseded,

1715. fuperfeded, yet daily expecting Burges to fucceed him, did not think it proper to come into the Province, or perform any acts of government; so that, during a year, Vaughan had the sole command. In year, Vaughan had the fole command. In this time he called an Assembly, who granted him the product of the impost and excise, for one year, but refused to establish these duties for any longer time; upon which he dissolved them, and called another.

1716. these duties for any longer time; upon which he dissolved them, and called another; to whom he recommended, in a style Adembly Records.

perpetual revenue to the Crown; a matter in which he had been fo much engaged, that while in England, 'he prefented a 'Sir w' 'memorial to the King and Ministry, to 'bring New-England into the land tax of 'Great Britain; and proposed that a Re-'ceiver should be appointed by the Crown.'

The Assembly was of opinion, that the public charges might be defrayed in the public charges might be defrayed in the ufual manner, by an equal tax on polls and effates; and declined laying an impost, or entering on any, but the common business of the year, till the arrival of a Governor.

When Governor Shute came to the chair, feveral of the old Counfellors were laid afide, and fix new ones appointed, all of whom were inhabitants of Portsmouth. That town, at the same time, was unhappily agitated by a controverfy, which had for some years subsisted between the two parishes. This had not only imbittered the minds of the people, but had prejudiced some of the members of the Council and Assembly; so as to affect the proceedings of the Legislature, and break the harmony, which had been preferved in that body, during the preceding administration. . The Governor, in his first speech to the Assembly, took notice of their divifion, and advised them to unanimity. Jan. 10. They thanked him for his advice, but remonstrated against the removal of the old Jin. 23. Counfellors, and the confining of the new appointments, both in the Council and the Judicial Courts, to residents in one town, as being contrary to former usage, and giving an advantage, to the trading, above the landed interest. This, they faid, was the reason that an impost could not now be obtained, and that the whole burden of taxes was laid on the husbandman, and the laborer, who had been greatly impoverished by the late war. The Governor wifely avoided an answer to this remonstrance, by putting it on the Council, who were a party in the controversy. The Council, in their answer, acknowledged that the Province had been much diffreffed by the war; but had in a great measure recovered: that there would have been no opposition to an impost, if the Representatives had agreed to an act of export, according to the practice in England; that the King had a right to appoint his Counfellors, from any part of the Province; that it was an affront to the prerogative to find fault with the exercise of this right; and that it was most convenient for the affairs of government, especially upon sudden emergencies, that the Council should refide near the feat of government. This answer might have appeared decent enough if they had not added, that they were 'gen-'tlemen of the best quality, and greatest ability to ferve the government, in that " flation; and had as good or better eftates in land, and land fecurities, than any in the House, and not inferior to the gen-" tlemen who were laid afide."

While these altercations were in hand there was a great complaint of the scarcity of money, and some expedient was judged necessary to supply the place of current coin. A proposal was made to if-fue ten thousand pounds in bills, on loan, for twenty-three years, at five per cent. on land fecurity. In this both Houses agreed; Jan. 24. but the next day the Council proposed to enlarge the fum to fifteen thousand pounds, to which the House would not consent. The Governor then ordered the House to attend a conference with the Council; they defired to know on what fubject; he gave them no answer, but commanded their attendance. Having conferred about the proposed loan to no purpose, the circumstance of asking on what subject they were to confer was deemed an affront, and ferved as a pretext for diffolving them. The next affembly was more pliant, and issued fifteen thousand pounds, on loan, Records. for eleven years, at ten per cent.

A controverfy also arose between the Governor and Lieutenant Governor about the power of the latter, in the absence of the former. Vaughan contended, that when the Governor was present in his other Province, he was absent from New-Hampshire, and consequently that the administration devolved on him. The position was a metaphyfical truth, but the inference was to be measured by political rules. Shute alleged that his commissions, being published

1717, published and recorded, in New-Hampshire and Massachusetts, he had the power of commander in chief over both Provinces, during his refidence in either; and thought it an abfurdity to suppose, that the King had appointed the Governor commander in chief, for five or fix weeks only in the year, and the Lieutenant Governor during the rest of the time; and that if the Lieutenant Governor should happen, in that time, to step over the Province line, the fenior Counfellor must take the chair; this he faid would make the Province 'a monster with three heads." The controverfy was foon brought to an iffue; for Vaughan received an order from Shute, while at Boston, to appoint a fast, which he did not obey; he received another to prorogue the Assembly, instead of which he dissolved them, without the advice of Council. He required the opinion of the Council on the extent of his power, but they declined giving it. Penhallow, the Governor's chief friend, was a warm oppofer of Vaughan's pretenfions, and incurred fo much of his displeasure, that he publicly charged him with fowing discord in the government, and fulpended him from his feat in Council. On hearing this, Shute

Sept. 24.

Shute hasted to Portsmouth, and having fummoned the Council, ordered the King's instruction to him for suspending Counsellors to be read, and demanded of Vaughan whether he had any instruction which superfeded it. He answered, No. The Governor then asked the Council's advice whether the fuspension of Penhallow was legal; they answered in the negative. He Council Minutes. then restored him to his seat, and suspended Vaughan.

The Affembly, which Vaughan had affumed the right to dissolve, met again, and approved the proceedings against him, justifying the construction which the Governor had put on his commission, and his opinion of the extent of the Lieutenant Governor's power; which was 'to observe ' fuch orders, as he should from time to ' time receive from the King or the Gover-'nor in chief.' The Representatives of Hampton presented a remonstrance; in which, admitting the Lieutenant Governor's opinion that 'when the Governor is out of the Province, the Lieutenant Governor is impowered to execute the King's commission, and afferting that the Governor was not in the Province when the bly, they declared that they could not act with the House, unless they were re-elected. This remonstrance was deemed a libel, and the Governor in Council having fummoned them before him, laid them under bonds of four hundred pounds each, for their good behaviour. He then iffu-Council Minutes.

To maintain a controverfy with a fuperior officer on the extent of power, equally claimed by both, requires a delicacy and address which does not fall to the lot of every man. An afpiring and precipitate temper may bring on fuch a contention, but disqualifies the person from managing it with propriety. Had Vaughan propofed to fubmit the question to the King, he would have acted more in character. and might have preferved his reputation, though he had loft his power. But having offended the Governor, and difgusted the Council and Affembly, he could hope for no favor from the Crown. When the report of the proceedings was fent to England, Sir William Ashurst, who had great interest interest at Court, and was a friend to New-England, and who greatly difrelished the memorial which Vaughan had formerly presented to the King, easily found means to displace him; and in his room was appointed John Wentworth, Efq. whose commission was published on the seventh of December. The celebrated Mr. Addison, being then Secretary of State, this commission is countersigned by a name particularly dear to the friends of liberty Orig. MS. and literature.

John Wentworth, Efq. grandfon of William Wentworth, formerly mentioned as one of the first settlers of the country, had been in the early part of his life, commander of a ship; and had acquired a handsome fortune by mercantile industry. Without any superior abilities or learning, by a fleady attention to bufinefs, and a prudent obliging deportment, he had recommended himself to the esteem of the people. Having been five years in the Council, before his appointment as Lieutenant Governor, he had carried the same useful qualities into public life, and preferved or increased that respect which he had acquired in a private station. rancour of contending parties made moderation 1717. eration a necessary character in a chief magistrate; and the circumstances of the Province, at that time, required a person of experience in trade, at its head.

It being a time of peace, after a long and diffressing war, the improvement of which the Province was capable, in regard to its natural productions, lumber and naval stores, rose into view and became objects of close attention both here and in England. As early as 1668, the government of Massachusetts, under which the ment of Mallachufetts, under which the Province then was, had referved for the public use all white pine trees of twentyfour inches in diameter, at three seet from the ground. In King William's reign, a furveyor of the woods was appointed by furveyor of the woods was appointed by the Crown; and an order was fent to the Earl of Bellamont, to cause acts to be passed in his several governments for the prefervation of the white pines. In 1708 a law made in New-Hampshire prohibited the cutting of fuch as were twenty-four inches in diameter, at twelve inches from the ground, without leave of the furvey-or; who was inftructed by the Queen, to mark with the broad arrow, those which were or might be fit for the use of the navy, and to keep a register of them. Whatever

Laws Chap. 20. ever feverity might be used in executing thelaw, it was no difficult matter for those who knew the woods and were concerned in lumber, to evade it; though fometimes they were detected and fined. Great complaints were frequently made of the de- MSS. struction of the royal woods; every Governor and Lieutenant Governor had oc- Council & Affenbly cafion to declaim on the subject in their Records. speeches and letters; it was a favorite point in England, and recommended them to their fuperiors as careful guardians of the royal interest. On the other hand, the people made as loud complaints against the furveyor, for prohibiting the cutting of pine trees, and yet neglecting to mark fuch as were fit for masts; by which means many trees, which never could be used as masts, and might be cu tinto logs Penhale for fawing, were rotting in the woods; or the people who got them were exposed to a vexatious profecution. When no furveyor was on the spot, the Governor . and Council appointed fuitable persons to take care that no waste should be made of the mast trees; and these officers, with a very moderate allowance, performed the duty, to much better purpose, than those who were fent from England and main- Affembly tained at a great expense to the Crown. . As

As those trees which grew within the limits of the townships were deemed private property, the people were defirous to get other townships laid out, that the trees might be fecured for their own use. This was a difficult point. The Assembly, in 1704, during the controverfy with Allen, had explicitly disclaimed all title to the waste lands, by which they understood all those without the bounds of their towns. The heirs of Allen kept a jealous eye upon them. Usher, who claimed by mortgage from Governor Allen, was still living, and was daily inviting purchasers by ad-The heir of Sir Charles vertisements. though the matter had been, by the Judge of Probate, fubmitted to the General Court, and by their advice suspended, yet the letters had been granted. Allen's other heirs were in a state of minority in England; but their guardian was attentive to their interest. The controversy had become more complex than before; and the claimants, however views, yet had an interest separate from that of the public. The royal determination could not be had, but on an appeal from a verdict at law: but no fuits were now pending; nor could the lands be granted by royal charter, without feeming to intrench on the property of the claimants. Notwithstanding these difficulties, the necessity of extending the fettlements, and improving the natural advantages of the country, was too apparent to be neglected.

Great quantities of iron ore were found in many places; and it was in contemplation to erect forges on some of the rivers, and to introduce foreign artists and laborers to refine it. A law was made laying a penalty of ten pounds per ton, on the Laws transporting of it out of the province; but for the further encouragement of the manufacture, it was deemed necessary, that some lands should be appropriated, to the purpose of supplying with fewel, the iron works which were to be erected, on Lam- council prey river, and of fettling the people who were to be employed in that fervice. On this occasion, it was recollected, that in 1672, while this Province was fubject to the Massachusetts government, and after the town

1719. town of Portsmouth had made a liberal contribution for the rebuilding of Harvard College, a promise had been made by the General Court to grant to that town a quantity of 'land for a village, when they 'should declare to the court the place duantity of 'land for a village, when they

'fhould declare to the court the place
'where they defired it.' Upon this, a petition was prefented to the Governor and Council praying for a fulfilment of this promife; and after fome hefitation, a grant was made of a flip of land two miles in breadth, above the head line of Dover, for the use of the iron works, which miles in breadth, above the head line of Dover, for the use of the iron works, which was called the 'renewing a grant former' ly made.' This was known by the name of the two mile slip, and it was afterward included in the township of Barrington.

In some parts of the Province, were many pitch pine trees, unfit for masts, but capable of yielding tar and turpentine. A monopoly of this manufacture had been attempted by a company of merchants; but when many thousand trees were prepared for use they were destroyed by unknown hands. Afterward a law was made providing that tar should be received in lieu of taxes, at twenty shillings per barrel. This encouraged the making of

Too many incisions being made in the trees at once, they were foon destroyed; and as those which were near at hand became fcarce, the manufacture was gradually difcontinued.

Hemp was another object. Some had been fown, and from the specimen of its growth, much advantage was expected. An act was made to encourage it; and it Chap. 94, was allowed to be received at the treasury. in lieu of money, at one shilling per pound. But as there was fcarcely land enough in cultivation, for the production of corn, it was vain to think of raifing a less necessary commodity. The Parliament of England was attentive to the advantages which might be derived to the nation from the Colonies, to which they were particularly incited by the war, which at this time raged between Sweden and Russia, the grand marts for naval stores in Europe. A duty which had been paid on lumber imported from America, was taken off; and this was efteemed fo great a favor to New-Hampthire that the Assembly thanked Shute for the share he had in obtaining it. About 1719. the same time, an act of Parliament was made for the prefervation of the white pines. Penalties in proportion to the fize of the trees, were laid on the cutting of those which grew without the bounds of townships; and for the greater terror, these penalties were to be recovered by the oath of one witness, in a court of Admiralty; where a fingle Judge, appointed by the Crown, and removeable at pleafure, determined the cause without a Jury. While this bill was pending, Henry Newman, the agent for New-Hampshire, petitioned against the severity of it, but with-MS petiout effect.

Great inconveniencies had arisen for want of a due fettlement of the limits of the Province. The people who lived near the supposed line, were sometimes taxed in both Provinces, and to arrests by the officers of both; and fome times the officers themfelves were at variance, and imprisoned each other. Several attempts had been made to remove the difficulty, and letters frequently passed between the two Courts on the subject, in consequence of petitions and complaints from the borderers. In

1716, Commissioners were appointed by both Provinces, to fettle the line. The New-Hampshire Commissioners were furnished by Lieutenant Governor Vaughan, with a copy of the report of the Lords Chief Justices in 1677, and were instructed to follow the course of the river Merri-' mack, at the distance of three miles north ' as far as the river extends.' The commissioners on the other side complained that this power was not fufficient; if by fufficient it was meant that they had no power to vary from their instructions, the objection was true, but why this should have been objected it is not easy to account. fince the inftructions would have given Massachusetts all which they could claim by virtue of their old charter; or the judgment upon it, on which they always laid much stress. Three years afterward the affair was agitated again, in obedience to an order from the Lords of trade; who directed a map to be drawn and fent to them, in which the boundaries of the Province should be delineated, and the Original best accounts and vouchers procured to elucidate it. Commissioners were again appointed to meet at Newbury; and those from New-Hampshire were instructed by Lieutenant Governor Wentworth Arustions. to

to confer with the others; and if they could agree, in fixing the place where to begin the line, they were to report accordingly; but if not, they were to proceed ex parte 'fetting their compass on the ' north fide of the mouth of Merrimack riv-' er at high water mark, and from thence ' measuring three miles on a north line, and from the end of the first three miles on a west line, into the country, till they ' should meet the great river which runs ' out of Winipisiogee pond.' To this idea of a west line, the Massachusetts Commisfioners objected; and defired that the commission of the Governor of New-Hampfhire might be fent to Newbury, which was refused, and the conference ended without any agreement. However, a plan was drawn, agreeably to these instructions, and fent to the Lords of trade; and Newman the agent was instructed to folicit for a confirmation of it. In these instructions, the ideas of the gentlemen in government are more fully expressed. The due west line on the southern side of the Province, they fupposed, ought to extend as far as Massachusetts extended. The line on the northerly fide adjoining to the Province of Maine, they supposed, ought to be drawn, up the middle of the river Pascataqua,

While these things were in agitation, the Province unexpectedly received an accession of inhabitants from the north of Ireland. A colony of Scots prefbyterians had been fettled in the Province of Ulfter, Hume, in the reign of James I; they had borne a large share in the sufferings, which the protestants in that unhappy country underwent, in the reign of Charles I and James II; and had thereby conceived an ardent and inextinguishable thirst for civil and religious liberty. Notwithstanding the peace which Ireland had enjoyed, fince the subjection of the Popish party by King William, fome penal laws were still in force; which, with the inconvenience of rents and tithes, made these people wish for a fettlement in America; where they might be free from these burthens and have full scope for their industry. One Holmes, a young man, fon of a clergyman, had been here and carried home a favora- MS of John Harble report of the country, which induced vey. his father, with three other presbyterian Ministers.

Having converted their fubstance into money, they embarked in five ships, and about one hundred families of them arrived at Boston. Cornwell, with about twenty families more, arrived at Casco. They immediately petitioned the Assembly of Massachusetts for a tract of land; who gave them leave to look out a fettlement of fix miles square, in any of the unappropriated lands at the eastward. As foon as they could collect their families, they called Macgregore to be their minister, who since his arrival in the country had preached at Dracut. These people brought with them the necessary materials for the manufacture of linen; and their spinning wheels, turned by the foot, were a novelty in the country. They also introduced the culture of potatoes, which were first planted in the garden of Nathaniel Walker of Andover. They were an industrious, frugal and confequently thriving people.

They met with fome difficulty in obtaining a title to their lands. If the due west line between the Provinces had been established, it would have passed through their fettlement and divided it between Massachusetts and New-Hampshire; but the curve line, following the course of Merrimack at three miles diffance, would leave them unquestionably in New-Hampshire. This was the idea of the General Court of Maffachufetts, who, upon application to them for a confirmation of their former grant, declared them to be out of their jurisdiction. Among the many claimants to these lands, they were informed, that Col. Wheelwright of Wells had the best Indian title, derived from his anceftors. Supposing this to be valid in a moral view, they followed the example of the first settlers of New-England, and obtained a deed of ten miles square, in virtue of the general license granted by the Indian Sagamores in 1629. To prevent difficulty from Allen's claim, they applied for leave of fettlement to Col. Usher, who told them that the land was in dispute, and that he could not give them leave, but that he supposed they might settle on it, if they would hold it either of the King or of Allen's heirs, as the case might be determined. They also applied to the Lieutenant Governor of New-Hampshire, who declined making them a grant in the King's name; but, by advice of Council, gave them a protection, and extended the benefit of the law to them; appointing James McKean to be a Justice of the Peace, and Robert Wier a Deputy Sheriff.

Some

Some persons who claimed these lands, by virtue of a deed of about twenty years date, from John, an Indian Sagamore, gave them some disturbance; but, having obtained what they judged a superior title, and enjoying the protection of government, they went on with their plantation; receiving frequent additions of their countrymen, as well as others, till in 1722, their town was incorporated by the name of Londonderry, from a city in the north of Ireland, in and near to which most of them had resided; and in which some of them had endured the hardships of a memorable stege.*

Harvey's & Macgregore'sMSS

The fettlement of these emigrants, on the waste lands, opened the way for other plantations. Those who had borne the burthens and distresses of war, in defend-

9 John Barr, William Caldwell and Abraham Blair, with feveral others who had fuffered in this fiege, and came to America, were by King William's special order made free of taxes through all the British dominions.

This, with feveral other circumflances relating to these people, I took from a manufeript letter written (1729) by Mrs. John Harvey, school-malter in Londonderry, to Mr. Prince. In the same letter was the following brief account of the seige above mentioned. 'Londonderry was befreged ones half a year (1639) by King James's army, when he shad all Ircland Subdued but Derry and a little place hard by. The befreged defended the city, most of thembeing prechagerians, till they were very much pinched by famine, that a dog's head was fold cheap enough at half a crown; and yet God supported them until King Will-liam sent them relief by two ships with men and provisions from England at which sight, before the ships got up to the city and I snded their men, the besiegers moved their camp and fled to the west of Irc-land, where a streamer's two bloody battles were fought and the papits fubbude.

They thought it hard to be excluded from the privelege of cultivating the lands, which they and their fathers had defended; while strangers were admitted to fit down peaceably upon them. These were weighty reasons. At the same time no attempt was making, by any of the claimants, to determine the long contested point of property; and in fact, no perfon could give a clear and undisputed title to any of the unfettled lands.

In these circumstances, a company of about one hundred persons, inhabitants of Portsmouth, Exeter and Haverhill, petitioned for liberty to begin a plantation, on the northerly part of the lands called Nutsield. These were soon followed by petitioners from the other towns, for the lands which lay contiguous to them. The Governor

Governor and Council kept the petitions fuspended for a long time, giving public notice to all persons concerned to make their objections. In this time the lands were furveyed, and the limits of four proposed townships determined; and the people were permitted to build and plant upon the lands 'provided that they did not ' infringe on, or interfere with, any form- Council 'ergrants, possessions or properties.' Some of these lands were well stocked with pine trees; which were felled in great abundance; this occasioned a fresh complaint from the King's furveyor.

April 21. Records.

At length, charters being prepared, were figned by the Governor; by which four townships, Chester, Nottingham, Barrington and Rochester were granted and incorporated. The grants were made in the name of the King, who was confidered as the common guardian, both of the people and the claimants; but with a clause of refervation, 'as far as in us lies,' that there might be no infringement on the claims Nothing was more offensive to these emigrants than to be called IR ISH. Macgregore in a letter to Governor Shute, (1720) fays: 'We are furprifed to hear ourfelves termed Irish people, when we so frequently e ventured our all for the British Crown and liberties against the Irish papifts; and gave all tefts of our loyalty, which the government of · Ireland required, and are always ready to do the fame when demanded."

The people of this country did not understand the distinction; nor in fact did they treat thefe ftrangers with common decency on their first arrival. The grudge subfisted a long time, but is now worn out.

The figning of these grants was the last act of Government performed by Shute in New-Hampshire. A violent party in Massachusetts had made such strenuous opposition to him and caused him so much vexation, as rendered it eligible for him to ask leave to return to England. He is faid to have been a man of a humane, obliging and friendly disposition; but having been used to military command, could not bear with patience the collision of parties, nor keep his temper when provoked. Fond of eafe, and now in the decline of life, he would gladly have fpent his days in America if he could have avoided controverfy. The people of New-Hampshire were fatisfied with his administration, as far as it respected them; and though they did not settle a falary on him as on his predecessor, yet they made him a grant twice in the year, generally amounting to a hundred pounds, and paid it out of the excise which was voted from year to year. This was more in proportion, than he received from his other government. On his departure for England, which was very fudden and unexpected, Lieutenant Governor Wentworth, took the chief command, in a time of diffress and perplexity; the country being then involved in another war with the natives.

C H A P. XIV.

The fourth Indian War, commonly called the three years war, or LOVEWELL'S war.

TO account for the frequent wars with the eaftern Indians, usually called by the French, the Abenaquis, and their unsteadiness both in war and peace; we must observe, that they were situated between the Colonies of two European nations, who were often at war with each other, and who pursued very different measures with regard to them.

As the lands, on which they lived, were comprehended in the patents granted by the crown of England, the natives were confidered by the English, as subjects of that crown. In the treaties and conferences held with them, they were styled the King's subjects; when war was declared against them, they were called rebels; and when they were compelled to make peace, they subscribed an acknowledgement of their persidy, and a declaration of their submission to the government, without any just ideas of the meaning of those

terms; and it is a difficult point, to determine what kind of subjects they were.

Befide the patents, derived from the Crown, the English in general were fond of obtaining from the Indians, deeds of fale for those lands, on which they were disposed to make settlements. Some of these deeds were executed with legal formality, and a valuable confideration was paid to the natives for the purchase; others were of obscure and uncertain original; but the memory of fuch transactions was foon loft, among a people who had no written records. Lands had been purchafed of the Indian chiefs, on the Rivers Kennebeck and St. George, at an early period; but the fucceeding Indians either had no knowledge of the fales made by their ancestors, or had an idea that such bargains were not binding on posterity; who had as much need of the lands, and could use them to the same purpose as their fathers. At first, the Indians did not know that the European manner of cultivating lands, and erecting mills and dams, would drive away the game and fish, and thereby deprive them of the means of fubfiftence; afterward, finding by experience that this was the consequence of admitting foreigners to fettle among them, they repented repented of their hospitality, and were inclined to dispossess their new neighbours, as the only way of restoring the country to its priffine state, and of recovering their ufual mode of fubfiftence.

They were extremely offended by the fettlements, which the English, after the peace of Utrecht, made on the lands at the eastward, and by their building forts, block houses and mills; whereby their usual mode of passing the rivers and carrying-places was interrupted; and they could not believe, though they were told with great folemnity, that thefe fortifica- Governor tions were erected for their defence against conference invasion. When conferences were held with them on this fubiect, they either denied that the lands had been fold, or pretended that the Sachems had exceeded their power in making the bargains; or defence of Loreret's had conveyed lands beyond the limits of title. their tribe; or that the English had taken advantage of their drunkenness to make them fign the deeds; or that no valuable consideration had been given for the purchase. No arguments or evidence which could be adduced would fatisfy them, unless the lands were paid for again; and had this been done once, their posterity after a few years would have renewed the demand. On

Abbe Raynal. On the other hand, the French did not in a formal manner declare them subjects of the crown of France; but every tribe, however small, was allowed to preserve its independence. Those who were situated in the heart of Canada kept their lands to themselves, which were never solicited from them; those who dwelt on the rivers and shores of the Atlantic, though distant from the French Colonies, received annual presents from the King of France; and solitary traders resided with, or occasionally visited them; but no attempt was made by any company to settle on their lands.

It was in the power of the English to supply them with provisions, arms, ammunition, blankets and other articles which they wanted, cheaper than they could purchase them of the French. Governor Shute had promised that trading houses should be established among them,* and that a smith should be provided to keep their arms and other instruments in repair; but the unhappy contentions between the Governor and Assembly of Massachusetts prevented a compliance with this engagement. The Indians were therefore fore obliged to fubmit to the impositions of private traders, or to feek fupplies from the French; who failed not to join with them in reproaching the English for this breach of promise, and for their avidity in getting away the land.

The inhabitants of the eastern parts of New-England were not of the best character for religion, and were ill adapted to engage the affections of the Indians by their example. The frequent hostilities on this quarter, not only kept alive a spirit of jealoufy and revenge in individuals, but prevented any endeavors to propagate religious knowledge among the Indians by the government; though it was one of the conditions of their charter; and though many good men wished it might be attempted. At length Governor Shute, in his conference with their Sachems at Arrowfic, introduced this important bufiness by offering them in a formal manner, an Indian bible, and a protestant missionary; but they rejected both, faying 'God ' hath given us teaching already, and if we ' should go from it we should displease ' him.' He would have done much better fervice, and perhaps prevented a war, if he had complied with their earnest desire to fix a boundary, beyond which the English thould not extend their settlements. rial.

Penhal-

A gentleman, in conversation with one of their Sachems, asked him why they were so strongly attached to the French, from whom they could not expect to receive so much benefit as from the English; the Sachem gravely answered, 'Because the French have taught us to pray to God, 'which the English never did.'

Vol. 1, page 253.

It has been observed in the former part of this work, that the Jesuits had planted themfelves among thefe tribes. They had one Church at Penobscot, and another at Norridgwog, where Sebastian Rallè, a French Jesuit, resided. He was a man of good fense, learning and address, and by a compliance with their mode of life, and a gentle, condescending deportment, had gained their affections fo as to manage them at his pleasure. Knowing the power of fuperstition over the favage mind, he took advantage of this, and of their prejudice against the English, to promote the cause, and strengthen the interest of the French among them. He even made the offices of devotion ferve as incentives to their ferocity, and kept a flag, in which was depicted a cross, furrounded by bows and arrows, which he used to hoist on a pole, at the door of his church, when he gave them absolution, previously to their engaging in any warlike enterprise.

New England Courant, No.

With

With this Jesuit, the Governor of Canada held a close correspondence; and by him was informed of every thing transacted among the Indians. By this means, their discontent with the English, on account of the fettlements made at the eastward, was heightened and inflamed: and they received every encouragement, to affert their title to the lands in question, and molest the fettlers, by killing their cattle, burning their stacks of hay, robbing and infulting them. These insolencies discouraged the people, and caused many of them to remove. The garrifons were then reinforced; and fcouting parties were ordered into the eastern quarter, under the command of Col. Shadrach Walton. By this appearance of force, the Indians, who dreaded the power of the English, were restrained from open hostilities. They had frequent parleys with the commanders of forts, and with commissioners who visited them occasionally; and though at first they feemed to be refolute in demanding the removal of the English, declaring that ' they had fought for the land three times, ' and would fight for it again;' yet when they were told that there was no alterna- low's MSS. tive but perfect peace or open war, and that if they chose peace they must forbear n every men as hoftages.

This proceeding was highly difrelished by the Governor of Canada; who renewed his efforts to keep up the quarrel, and secretly promised to supply the Indians with arms and ammunition; though as it was a time of peace between the two crowns, he could not openly affist them.

Hutchinfon II.263.

The New-England governments, though highly incenfed, were not eafily perfuaded to confent to a war. The dispute was between the Indians and the proprietors of the eastern lands, in which the public were not directly interested. No blood had as yet been shed. Canseau had been furprised and plundered, and some people killed there; but that was in the government of Nova-Scotia. Rallè was regarded as the principal inftigator of the Indians; and it was thought, that if he could be taken off they would be quiet. It was once proposed to send the Sheriff of York County with a posse of one hundred and fifty fifty men, to feize and bring him to Bofton; but this was not agreed to. The next fummer, Rallè in company with Caftine from Penobscot, and Croisil from Canada, appeared among the Indians, at a conference held on Arrowsic Island, with July. Capt. Penhallow, the commander of the garrifon, and brought a letter, written in the name of the feveral tribes of Indians. directed to Governor Shute; in which it was declared, 'that if the English did not remove in three weeks, they would kill them and their cattle, and burn their 'houses.' An additional guard was sent down; but the government, loth to come to a rupture, and defirous if possible to treat with the Indians separately from the French emissaries, invited them to another conference, which invitation they treated with neglect.

In the fucceeding winter, a party under Col. Thomas Westbrooke was ordered to Noridgwog to seize Rallè. They arrived at the village undiscovered, but before they could surround his house, he escaped into the woods, leaving his papers in his strong box, which they brought off without doing any other damage. Among these papers were his letters of correspondence with the Governor of Canada, by which ch it 1722. it clearly appeared, that he was deeply engaged in exciting the Indians to a rupture, and had promifed to affift them.

This attempt to feize their spiritual father, could not long be unrevenged. The next fummer they took nine families from Merry-meeting bay, and after difmissing some of the prisoners, retained enough to secure the redemption of their hostages and fent them to Canada. About the fame time they made an attempt on the fort at St. George's; but were repulfed with confiderable loss. They also surprised fome fishing vessels in the eastern harbours; and at length made a furious attack on the town of Brunfwick, which they destroyed. This action determined the government to iffue a declaration of war against them, which was published in form at Boston and Portsmouth.

July 25.

New-Hampshire being seated in the bosom of Massachusetts, had the same interest to serve, and bore a proportionable there of all these transactions and the expenses attending them. Walton, who first commanded the forces fent into the eastern parts, and Westbrooke, who succecded him, as well as Penhallow, the commander of the fort at Arrowfic, were New-Hampshire men; the two former were of the Council. A declaration of war being made, the enemy were expected on every part of the frontiers; and the Affembly were obliged to concert measures for their security, after an interval of peace for about ten years.

were

The usual route of the Indians, in their marches to the frontiers of New-Hampshire, was by the way of Winipiseogee lake. The distance from Cochecho falls in the town of Dover, to the foutheast bay of that lake, is about thirty miles. It was thought that if a road could be opened to that place, and a fort built there, the encmy would be prevented from coming that way. Orders were accordingly issued, and a party of two hundred and fifty men were employed in cutting down the woods for a road; but the expense so far exceeded the benefit which could be expected from a fort at fuch a distance, in the wildernefs, to be fupplied with provisions and ammunition by land carriage, which might eafily be interrupted by the enemy, that the defign was laid afide, and the old method of defence by fcouts and garrifons was adopted. Lieutenant Governor Wentworth, being Commander in Chief in Shute's absence, was particularly careful to fupply the garrisons with stores, and visit them in person, to see that the duty was regularly performed; for which, and other prudent and faithful fervices, he frequently received the acknowledgments of the Assembly and grants of money, generally amounting to one hundred pounds at every fession, and sometimes more. They also took care to inlist men for two years, and to establish the wages of officers and foldiers at the following rates: a Captain, at feven pounds per month; a Lieutenant, four pounds; a Sergeant, fifty-eight shillings; a Corporal, forty-five shillings, and a private, forty shillings. A bounty of one hundred pounds was offered for every Indian fcalp. The difference between the currency and sterling, was two and an half for one.

The first appearance of the enemy in New-Hampshire, was at Dover; where they furprifed and killed Joseph Ham, and took three of his children; the rest of the family escaped to the garrison. Soon after they waylaid the road, and killed Triftram Heard. Their next onfet was at Lamprey River, where they killed Aaron August 29. Rawlins and one of his children, taking

His wife went out at the door, e perhaps fooner than they would otherwise have affaulted the house, f and was immediately feiged, and one or two of her children who fol-I lowed her. Her hufband being alarmed, fecured the door before they could enter, and with his eldeft daughter, about twelve years old, frood supon his defence, repeatedly firing wherever they attempted to enter, and at the fame time calling earneftly to his neighbors for help; but the people in the feveral parrifoned houses near, apprehending from 4 the noise and inceffant firing, the number of the enemy to be greater than they were, and expecting every moment to be attacked themselves, did not venture to come to his affiftance. Having for fome time hravely withstood such unequal force, he was at last killed by their frandom thots through the house, which they then broke open, and killed his daughter. They fealped him, and cut off his daughter's head, either through hafte, or probably being enraged against her, on account of the affiftance the had afforded her father in their defence, which evsidently appeared by her hands being foiled with powder. His wife and two children, a fon and a daughter, they carried to Canada: The woman was redeemed in a few years. The fon was adopted by the Indians, and lived with them all his days; he came into Pennycook with the Indians after the peace, and expressed to some people with whom he conversed, much resentment against his uncle Samuel Rawblins, on fuppoling he had detained from his mother fome pruperty left by his father, but manifested no defire of returning to Newmarket again. The daughter married with a Frenchman, and when she was a near fixty years old, returned with her husband to her native place, in sexpectation of recovering the patrimony she conceived was left at the deat hof her father : But the effate having been fold by her grandfather Taylor's administrator, they were disappointed, and after a year or two went back to Canada."

On a fabbath day they ambushed the road at Oyster River, and killed George Chesley, and mortally wounded Elizabeth Burnham, as they were returning together from public worship. In a few days more, five Indians took Thomas Smith and John Carr at Chester; and after carrying them about thirty miles, bound them and lay down to sleep; the captives of caped, and in three days arrived safe at a garrison in Londonderry.

The fettlements at Oyster River being very much exposed; a company of volunteers under the command of Abraham Benwick, who went out on the encouragement offered by the government for scalps; were about marching to make discoveries. It happened that Moses Davis, and his son of the same name, being at work in

They immediately gave notice of this difcovery to the volunteer company, and went before to guide them to the spot. The Indians had placed themselves in ambush; and the unhappy father and son were both killed. The company then fired, killed one and wounded two others, Penhallows who made their escape, though they were purfued and tracked by their blood to a considerable distance. The slain Indian was a person of distinction, and wore a kind of coronet of fcarlet dyed fur, with an appendage of four small bells, by the found of which the others might follow him through the thickets. His hair was remarkably foft and fine; and he had about hima devotional book and a musterroll of one hundred and eighty Indians; from which circumstances it was supposed that he was a natural fon of the Jesuit Rallè, by an Indian woman who had ferved him as a laundress. His scalp was prefented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by Robert Burnham, and the promifed bounty was paid to Capt. Francis Matthews, in trust for the company.

Within the town of Dover were many families of Quakers; who, scrupling the lawfulness lawfulness of war, could not be perfuaded to use any means for their defence though equally exposed with their neighbours to an enemy who made no diffinction between them. One of these people, Ebenezer Downs, was taken by the Indians, and was grossly infulted and abused by them, because he refused to dance as the other prisoners did, for the diversion of their favage captors. Another of them, John Hanson, who lived on the outside of the town, in a remote fituation. could not be perfuaded to remove to a garrison, though he had a large family of children, A party of thirteen Indians, called French Mohawks, had marked his house for their prey; and lay feveral days in ambush, waiting for an opportunity to affault it. While Hanfon with his eldest daughter were gone to attend the weekly meeting of friends, and his two eldest fons were at work in a meadow at fome distance; the Indians entered the house, killed and scalped two small children, and took his wife, with her infant of fourteen days old, her nurse, two daughters and a fon, and after rifling the house carried them off. at her return from the meeting before her father. Seeing the two children dead at the door, she gave a shriek of distress, which was distinctly heard by her mother, then in the hands of the enemy among the bushes, and by her brothers in the meadow. The people being alarmed, went in pursuit; but the Indians cautioufly avoiding all paths, went off with their captives undiscovered. After this difaster had befallen his family, Hanson removed the remainder of them to the house of his brother; who, though of the fame religious persuasion; yet had a number of lufty fons, and always kept his firearms in good order, for the purpose of fhooting game.*

their field. The fuccess of the forces at Norridgwog and the large premium offered for fcalps, having induced feveral volunteer companies to go out, they visited one after another of the Indian villages, but found them deferted. The fate of Norridgwog had struck such a terror into them, that they did not think them-felves fafe at any of their former places of abode, and occupied them as resting places only, when they were fcouting or hunting.

One of these volunteer companies, under the command of Capt. John Lovewell of Dunstable, was greatly distinguished, first by their success and afterward low,p.107, by their misfortunes. This company confifted of thirty; at their first excursion to the northward of Winipiseogee lake, they discovered an Indian wigwam in which were a man and a boy. They killed and fcalped the man and brought the boy alive to Boston, where they received the reward, promifed by law, and a handsome gratuity besides.

By this fuccess his company was augmented to seventy. They marched again, and vifiting the place where they had killed the Indian, found his body as they had left it two months before. Their provi-difmiffed by lot and returned. The remaining forty continued their march till they discovered a track, which they followed till they faw a smoke just before funfet, by which they judged that the enemy were encamped for the night. They kept themselves concealed till after midnight; when they filently advanced, and discovered ten Indians asleep, round a fire, by the fide of a frozen pond. Lovewell now determined to make fure work; and placing his men conveniently, ordered part of them to fire, five at once, as quick after each other as possible, and another part to referve their fire: He gave the fignal, by firing his own gun, which killed two of them; the men firing according to order, killed five more on the fpot; the other three starting up from their sleep, two of them were immediately shot dead by the referve: the other, though wounded, attempted to escape by croffing the pond, but was feized by a dog and held fast till they killed him. Thus in a few minutes the whole company was destroyed, and fome attempt against the frontiers of New-Hampshire prevented; for these Indians were marching from Canada, well furnished with new guns, and plenty of ammunition:

The pond where this exploit was performed is at the head of a branch of Salmonfall River, in the township of Wakefield, and has ever fince borne the name of Lovewell's pond. The action is spoken of by elderly people, at this distance of time, with an air of exultation; and confidering the extreme difficulty of finding and attacking Indians in the woods, and the judicious manner in which they were fo completely furprifed, it was a capital exploit.

The brave company, with the ten scalps stretched on hoops, and elevated on poles, Feb. 244 entered Dover in triumph, and proceeded thence to Boston; where they received the bounty of one hundred pounds for each,

out of the public treasury.

Encouraged by this fuccess, Lovewell marched a third time; intending to attack the villages of Pigwacket, on the upper part of the river Saco, which had been the residence of a formidable tribe, and which they still occasionally inhabited. His company at this time confifted of forty-fix, in- Memoirs.

Here the furgeon was left with the fick man, and eight of the company for a guard. The number was now reduced to thirty-four. Purfuing their march to the northward, they came to a pond, about twenty-two * miles distant from the fort, and encamped by the fide of it. Early the next morning, while at their devo-May 3. tions, they heard the report of a gun, and discovered a fingle Indian, standing on a point of land, which runs into the pond, more than a mile distant. They had been alarmed the preceding night by noises round their camp, which they imagined were made by Indians, and this opinion was now strengthened. They suspected that the Indian was placed there to decoy them, and that a body of the enemy was in their front. A confultation being held they determined to march forward, and by encompassing the pond, to gain the place

It happened that Lovewell's march had croffed a carrying-place, by which two parties of Indians, confifting of forty-one men, commanded by Paugus and Wahwa, who had been fcouting down Saco river, were returning to the lower village of Pigwacket, distant about a mile and a half from this pond. Having fallen on his track, they followed it till they came to the packs, which they removed; and counting them, found the number of his men to be lefs than their own: They therefore placed themselves in ambush, to attack them on their return. The Indian who had flood on the point, and was returning to the village, by another path, met them, and received their fire, which he returned, and wounded Lovewell and another with fmall shot. Lieutenant Wyman firing again, killed him, and they took his scalp.* See-

^{*} This Indian has been celebrated as a hero, and ranked with the Roman Curtius, who devoted himself to death to fave his country. (See Hutchinson's history, vol. 11, page 315.)

Having been on the foot where this celebrated action happened, and baving converted with persons who were acquainted with the Indians of Pigwacket, ing no other enemy, they returned to the place where they had left their packs, and while they were looking for them, the Indians role and ran toward them with a horrid yelling. A fmart firing commenced on both fides, it being now about ten of the clock. Captain Lovewell and eight more were killed on the fpot. Lieutenant Farwell and two others were wounded: Several of the Indians fell; but, being fuperior in number, they endeavoured to furround the party, who, perceiving their intention, retreated; hoping to be sheltered by a point of rocks which ran into the pond, and a few large pine trees standing on a fandy beach. In this forlorn place they took their station. On their right was the mouth of a brook, at that time unfordable; on their left was the rocky point; their front was partly covered by a deep bog and partly uncovered, and the pond was in their rear. The enemy galled them in front and flank, and had them igwacket, before and after this bettle; if am convinced that there is no foundation for the idea that he was placed there as a decoy; and that he had no claim to the character of a hero. The point on which he dood is a noted filling place; the pus which alaymed Lovewell's company was fired at a flock of ducket; and when they meet him he was set uraning home with his game and two fewling pieces. The willings was fixed at the edge of the meadow, on Saco river; which here forms a large bend. The remains of the flockstee were found by the fift feature, factly sear afterward. The pood is in the township of Frieburgfo completely in their power, that had they made a prudent use of their advantage, the whole company must either have been killed, or obliged to furrender at difcretion; being destitute of a mouthful of sustenance and an escape being impracticable. Under the conduct of Lieutenant Wyman they kept up their fire, and shewed a resolute countenance, all the remainder of the day; during which their chaplain, Jonathan Frie, Enfign Robbins, and one more, were mortally wounded. The Indians invited them to furrender, by holding up ropes to them, and endeavored to intimidate them by their hideous yells; but they determined to die rather than yield; and by their well directed fire, the number of the favages was thinned, and their cries became fainter, till, just before night, they quitted their advantageous ground, carrying off their killed and wounded, and leaving the dead bodies of Lovewell and his men unscalped. The shattered remnant of this brave company, collecting themfelves together, found three of their number unable to move from the fpot, eleven wounded but able to march, and nine who had received no hurt. It was melancholy to leave their dying companions behind, but there was no possibility of removing them. One of them, enfign Rob-E 2 bins.

bins, defired them to lay his gun by him charged, that if the Indians should return before his death he might be able to kill one more. After the rifing of the moon, they quitted the fatal foot, and directed their march toward the fort, where the furgeon and guard had been left. To their great surprise they found it deserted. In the beginning of the action, one main (whose name has not been thought worthy to be transmitted to posterity) quitted the field, and fled to the fort; where, in the style of Job's messengers, he informed then of Lovewell's death, and the defeat of the" whole company; upon which they made the best of their way home; leaving a quantity of bread and pork, which was a feafonable relief to the retreating furvivors. From this place, they endeavored to get home. Lieutenant Farwell and the chaplain, who had the journal of the march in his pocket, and one more, perished in the woods, for want of dreffing for their wounds. The others, after enduring the most severe hardships, came in one after another, and were not only received with joy, but were recompenfed for their valor, and fufferings; and a generous provision was made for the widows and children of the flain;

A party

A party from the frontiers of New-Hampshire, were ordered out to bury the dead; but by some mistake did not reach the place of action. Colonel Tyng, with a company from Dunstable, went to the fpot, and having found the bodies of twelve, buried them, and carved their names on the trees where the battle was fought. At a little distance he found three Indian graves, which he opened; one of the bodies was known to be their warrior Paugus. He also observed tracks of blood, on the ground, to a great distance from the scene of action. It was remarked that a week before this engagement happened, it had been reported in Portsmouth, at the distance of eighty miles, with but little variation from the truth. Such incidents were not uncommon, and could fcarcely deserve notice, if they did not indicate that a tafte for the marvellous was not extinguished in the minds of the most fober and rational.

This was one of the most fierce and obstinate battles which had been fought with the Indians. They had not only the advantage of numbers, but of placing themselves in ambush, and waiting with deliberation the moment of attack. These circumstances gave them a degree of ardor and though disappointed of meeting the enemy in their front, expected and determined to fight. The fall of their commander, and more than one quarter of their number, in the first onset, was greatly discouraging; but they knew that the situation to which they were reduced, and their distance from the frontiers, cut off all hope of fafety from flight. In these circumstances, prudence as well as valor dictated a continuance of the engagement, and a refusal to surrender;

The conduct of the Marquis de Vaudreuil, Governor of Canada, was so flagrant a breach of the treaty of peace, sub-sisting between the Crowns of England and France, that it was thought, a spirited remonstrance might make him ashamed, and produce some beneficial effects. With this view, the General Court of Massachusets proposed to the Colonies of

New-York, Connecticut, Rhode-Island and New-Hampshire, to join in sending Commissioners to Canada on this errand. New Hampshire was the only one which confented; and Theodore Atkinfon was appointed on their part, to join with William Dudley and Samuel Thaxter on the part of Massachusetts.*

The instructions which they received from the Lieutenant Governors, Dummer and Wentworth, by advice of the Council and Affembly of each Province, were nearly fimilar. They were to demand of fetts and the French Governor, restitution of the thire Reca captives who had been carried into Canada; to remonstrate to him on his injustice and breach of friendship, in countenancing the Indians in their hostilities against the people of New-England; to infift on his withdrawing his affiftance for: the future; and to observe to him, that if in the farther profecution of the war, our Indian allies, should in their pursuit of the enemy commit hostilities against the French, the blame would be entirely chargeable to himfelf. If the French Governor or the Indians, should make any overtures for peace, they were empowered to Boston or Portsmouth, for that purpose, and to return; but they were not to enter into any treaty with them. The Commissioners were also furnished with the original letters of Vaudreuil to the Governors of New-England, and to the Jesuit Ralle, and with copies of the several treaties which had been made with the Indians. The gentlemen went by the way of Albany, and over the lakes, on the ice, to Montreal, where they arrived after a tedious and dangerous journey.

The Marquis, who happened to be at Montreal, received and entertained them with much politeness. Having delivered their letters, and produced their commissions, they presented their remonstrance in writing, and made the several demands agreeably to their instructions; using this among other arguments, 'Those Indians 'dwell either in the dominions of the King of Great-Britain, or in the territories of the French King: If in the French King's 'dominions, the violation of the peace is 'very flagrant, they then being his sub'jects; but if they are subjects of the Brit'ish Crown, then much more is it a breach 'of the peace, to excite a rebellion among

'the subjects of his Majesty of Great'Britain.'

The Governor gave them no written answer; but denied that the Abenaquis were under his government, and that he had either encouraged or supplied them for the purpose of war. He said that he considered them as an independent nation, and that the war was undertaken by them, in defence of their lands, which had been invaded by the people of New-England. The Commissioners in reply, informed him, that the lands for which the Indians had quarrelled, were fairly purchased of their ancestors, and had been for many years inhabited by the English. They produced his own letters to the Governors of New-England, in which he had (inconfiftently, and perhaps inadvertently) ftyled these Indians 's subjects of the King of 'France.' They also alleged the several treaties held with them as evidence that they had acknowledged themselves subjects of the British Crown; and, to his great mortification, they also produced his own original letters to the Jesuit Rallè, which had been taken at Norridgwog, in which the evidence of his affifting and encouraging them in the war was too flagrant to admit of palliation. Farther to strengthen this part of their argument, they prefented to the Governor, a Mohawk whom whon they had met with at Montreal, who, according to his own voluntary asknowledgment, had been supplied by the Governor with arms, ammunition and provision to engage in the war, and had killed one man and taken another whom he had fold in Canada.

In addition to what was urged by the Commissioners in general; Mr. Atkinson, on the part of New-Hampshire, entered into a particular remonstrance; alleging that the Indians had no cause of controversy with that Province, the lands in question being out of their claim. To this the Governor answered, that New-Hampshire was a part of the same nation, and the Indians could make no distinction. Atkinson asked him why they did not for the same reason make war on the people of Albany? The Governor answered, 'The people of Albany have sent a message of the same reason make the same sent as message of the same reason make the same sent as the same sent

'fage to pray me to reftrain the favages from molefting them; in a manner very 'different from your demands:' To which Atkinson with equal spirit replied, 'Your 'Lordship then is the right person, for our Governments to apply to, if the Indians are subject to your orders.

Finding himself thus closely pressed, he promised to do what lay in his power to bring them to an accommodation, and to restore those captives who were in the hands of the French, on the payment of what they had cost; and he engaged to fee that no unreasonable demands should be made by the persons who held them in fervitude; as to those who still remained in the hands of the Indians, he faid, he had no power over them, and could not engage for their redemption. He complained in his turn, of the Governor of New-York, for building a fort on the river Onondago, and faid, that he should look upon that proceeding as a breach of the treaty of peace; and he boafted that he had the five nations of the Iroquois fo much under his influence, that he could at any time, cause them to make war upon the fubjects of Great-Britain.

The Commissioners employed themselves very diligently in their inquiries respecting the captives, and in settling the terms of their redemption. They succeeded in effecting the ransom of sixteen, and engaging for ten others. The Governor obligated the French, who held them, to abate of their demands; but after all, they were paid for at an exorbitant rate. He was extremely desirous, that the gentlemen should have an interview with the Indians, who were at war; and for this purpose, fent for a number of them from the village of St. Francis, and kept them concealed in Montreal. The Commissioners had repeatedly told him, that they had no power to treat with them, and that they would not speak to them unless they should defire peace. At his request, the chiefs of the Nipissins visited the Commisfioners, and faid that they disapproved the war which their children the Abenaquis had made, and would perfuade them to ask for peace. After a variety of manœuvres, the Governor at length promifed the Commissioners, that if they would consent to meet the Indians at his house, they should speak first. This assurance produccd an interview; and the Indians asked the commissioners whether they would make propofals of peace? they answered, No. The Indians then proposed, that 'if 'the English would demolish all their ' forts, and remove one mile westward of ' Saco river; if they would rebuild their ' church at Norridgwog, and restore to them ' their priest, they would be brothers again.' The Commissioners told them that they had no warrant to treat with them; but if they were disposed for peace, they should have fafe conduct to and from Boston or Portsmouth; and the Governor promised to fend his fon with them to fee justice done. They answered, that 'this was the only place to conclude peace, as the na-' tions were near and could readily attend.' The Governor would have had them recede. from their propofals, which he faid were unreasonable, and make others; but father Le Chase, a Jesuit, being present, and acting as interpreter for the Indians, embarraffed the matter fo much that nothing more was proposed. It was observed by the commissioners, that when they conversed with the Governor alone, they found him more candid and open to conviction, than when Le Chase, or any other Jesuit was present; and, through the whole of their negociation, it evidently appeared, that the Governor himself, as well as the Indians, were fubject to the powerful influence of these ecclesiastics; of whom there was a feminary in Canada, under the direction of the Abbe de Belmont.

Having completed their business, and the rivers and lakes being clear of ice, the Commissioners took their leave of the Governor, and set out on their return, with the redeemed captives, and a guard of soldiers, which the Governor ordered to attend them, as far as Crown-point. They went

1725. went down the river St. Lawrence to the mouth of the Sorel, then up that river to Chamblee, and through the lakes to fort Nicholon. After a pleasant passage, of feven days, they arrived at Albany.

Here they found Commissioners of Indian affairs for the Province of New-York, to whom they communicated the observations which they had made in Canada, and what the Marquis de Vaudreuil had faid respecting the five nations, and the fort at Onandago. There being a deputation from these nations at Albany, they held a conference with them, and gave them belts; requesting their assistance in establishing a peace with the Abenaquis. From this place Mr. Atkinfon wrote to M. Cavanielle, fon of the Marquis, acknowledging the polite reception the Commissioners had met with from the family; fubjoining a copy of the information which they had given to the Commissioners of New-York; and promifing, that a due representation should be made, to the Kings of England and France, on the fubject of their negociation.

The report of the Commissioners being laid before the Assemblies of Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, it was determined to prosecute the war with vigor. Orders were iffued for the defence and supply of the frontiers, and for the encouragement of ranging parties, both volunteers and militia. A petition was sent to the King, complaining of the French Governor, and defining that orders might be given to the other Colonies of New-England, and to New-York, to furnish their quotas of afsistance, in the further prosecution of the war; and letters were written to the Governor of New-York, requesting that such of the hostile Indians as should refort to Albany, might be seized and secured.

The good effects of this mission to Canada were foon visible. One of the Indian hoftages who had been detained at Bofton through the whole war, together with one who had been taken, were allowed on their parole, to vifit their countrymen; and they returned with a request for peace. Commissioners from both Provinces went to St. George's; where a conference was held, which ended in a proposal for a farther treaty at Boston. In the mean time; fome of the enemy were disposed for further mischief. Those who had been concerned in taking Hanson's family at Dover, in a fhort time after their redemption and return, came down with a defign to take them again, as they had threatened 1725. Sept. 15. them before they left Canada. When they had come near the house, they observed some people at work in a neighbouring field, by which it was necessary for them to pass, both in going and returning. This obliged them to alter their purpose, and conceal themselves in a barn, till they were ready to attack them. Two women paffed by the barn, while they were in it, and had just reached the garrison as the guns were fired. They fhot Benjamin Evans dead on the fpot; wounded William Evans and cut his throat; John Evans received a flight wound in the breaft, which bieeding plentifully, deceived them, and thinking him dead, they stripped and scalped him: He bore the painful operation without discovering any figns of life, though all the time in his perfect fenses, and continued in the feigned appearance of death, till they had turned him over, and struck him several blows with their guns, and left him for dead. After they were gone off he rose and walked, naked and bloody, toward the garrison; but on meeting his friends by the way dropped, fainting on the ground, and being covered with a blanket was conveyed to the house. He recovered and lived fifty years. A pursuit was made after the enemy, emy, but they got off undiscovered, carrying with them Benjamin Evans, junior, a lad of thirteen years old, to Canada, whence he was redeemed as usual by a charitable collection

This was the last effort of the enemy in New-Hampshire. In three months, the treaty which they defired was held at Bof. Dec. 153 ton, and the next fpring ratified at Falmouth. A peace was concluded in the ufual form; which was followed by restraining all private traffic with the Indians, and establishing truck-houses in convenient places, where they were supplied with the necessaries of life, on the most Hutchinadvantageous terms. Though the governments on the whole, were losers by the trade, vet it was a more honorable way of preferving the peace, than if an acknowledgment had been made to the Indians in any other manner.

None of the other Colonies of New-England bore any share in the expenses or calamities of this war; and New-Hampthire did not fuffer to much as in former wars; partly by reason of the more extended frontier of Massachusetts, both on the eastern and western parts, against the former of which the enemy directed their greatest fury; and partly by reason of the fuccess of the ranging parties, who con-1725. stantly traversed the woods as far northward as the White Mountains. The militia at this time was completely trained for active service; every man of forty years of age having feen more than twenty years of war. They had been used to han lle their arms from the age of childhood, and most of them, by long practice, had become excellent markimen, and good hunters. They were well acquainted with the lurking places of the enemy; and possessed a degree of hardiness and intrepidity, which can be acquired only by the habitude of those scenes of danger and fatigue, to which they were daily exposed. They had also imbibed from their infancy a strong antipathy to the savage natives; which was strengthened by repeated horrors of blood and defolation, and not obliterated by the intercourse which they had with them in time of peace. As the Indians frequently reforted to the frontier towns in time of scarcity, it was common for them to visit the families whom they had injured in war; to recount the circumstances of death and torture which had been practifed on their friends; and when provoked or intoxicated, to threaten a repetition of such insults, in future wars. To bear fuch treatment required more than human patience; and it is not improbable that fecret murders were fometimes the confequence of these harsh provocations. Certain it is, that when any perfon was arrested, for killing an Indian in time of peace, he was either forcibly rescued from the hands of justice, or if brought to trial, invariably acquitted; it being impossible to impannel a jury some of whom had not suffered by the Indians, either in their persons or families.

DURING the war, the Lieutenant Governor had managed the executive department with much prudence; the people were fatisfied with his administration, and entertained an affection for him, which was expressed not only by words, but by frequent grants of money, in the General Assembly. When he returned from Boston, where the treaty of peace was concluded, they presented to him an addrefs of congratulation, and told him that ' his absence had seemed long; but the ' fervice he had done them filled their ' hearts with fatisfaction.' The

The divisional line between the Provinces of New-Hampshire and Maslachufetts was yet unfettled, and in addition to the ufual difadvantages occasioned by this long neglect, a new one arofe. By the construction which Massachusetts put on their charter, all the lands three miles northward of the river Merrimack were within their limits. On this principle, a grant had formerly been made to Governor Endicot, of fome lands at Penacook : which had been the feat of a numerous and powerful tribe of Indians. The quality of the land at that place invited the attention of adventurers from Andover, Maffecture Bradford and Haverhill; to whom a grant fetts Ree. was made of a township, seven miles fquare; comprehending the lands on both fides of the Merrimack, extending fouthwardly from the branch called Contoocook. This grant awakened the attention of others; and a motion was made in the Massachusetts Assembly, for a line Dec. 21. of townships, to extend from Dunstable on Merrimack, to Northfield on Connecticut river; but the motion was not immediately adopted. The Affembly of New-Hampshire was alarmed. Newman, their agent, had been a long time at the British Court, foliciting the fettlement of the line, and a supply of military stores for the fort. Fresh instructions were sent to him to expedite the business, and to submit the fettlement of the line to the King. A committee was appointed to go to Penacook, to confer with a committee of Maffachufetts, then employed in laying out the lands, and to remonstrate against their proceeding. A furvey of other lands near Winipiseogee lake, was ordered; that it might be known, what number of townfhips could be laid out, independently of the Massachusetts claim. On the other hand, the heirs of Allen renewed their endeavours, and one of them, John Hobby, petitioned the Affembly to compound with him for his claim to half the Province; but the only answer which he could obtain was that 'the Courts of law were and his petition was dismissed.

Both Provinces becameearnestly engaged. Massachusetts proposed to New-Hampshire the appointment of commissioners, to establish the line. The New-Hampshire Assembly refused, because they had submitted the case to the King. The Massachusetts people, foreseeing that the result of this application might prove unfavorable to their claim of jurisdiction, competent to the determination of titles, were folicitous to fecure to themselves the property of the lands in question. Accordingly, the proposed line of townships being furveyed, 'pretences were encour-'aged and even fought after, to entitle ' persons to be grantees.' The descend- fon 11,321. ants of the officers and foldiers, who had been employed in expeditions against the Narraganfet Indians, and against Canada, in the preceding century, were admitted; and the furvivors of the late Captain Lovewell's company, with the heirs of the deceased, had a select tract granted to them at Suncook. There was an appearance of gratitude in making these grants, and there would have been policy in it, had the grantees been able to comply with the conditions. New-Hampshire followed the example, and made grants of May 18 & the townships of Epsom, Chichester, Barnflead, Canterbury, Gilmantown and Bow. All these, excepting the last, were undoubtedly within their limits; but the grant of Bow interfered with the grants which Massachusetts had made, at Penacook and Suncook, and gave rife to a litigation, tedious, expensive, and of forty years continuance.

These tracts of land granted by both Provinces were too numerous and exten-

five. It was impracticable to fulfil the conditions, on which the grants were made. Had the fame liberal policy prevailed here as in Pennsylvania, and had the importation of emigrants from abroad been encouraged, the country might have been foon filled with inhabitants; but the people of Londonderry were already looked upon with a jealous eye, and a farther intrusion of strangers was feared, lest they should prove a burden and charge to the community. People could not be spared from the old towns. Penacook was almost the only fettlement which was effected by emigrants from Massachusetts. A small beginning was made, by the New-Hampthire proprietors, at Bow, on Suncook river: but the most of the intermediate country remained uncultivated for many years. Schemes of fettlement were indeed continually forming; meetings of proprietors were frequently held, and an avaricious spirit of speculating in landed property prevailed; but the real wealth and improvement of the country instead of being promoted were retarded.

On the death of King George I; the Affembly, which had fubfifted five years, was of course disloved; and writs for the election of another were issued in the New-Hampflire Records. Nov. 21. name of George II. The long continuance of this Assembly was principally owing to the absence of Governor Shute, in whose administration it commenced : and the uncertainty of his return or the appointment of a fuccessor. It had been deemed a grievance, and an attempt had been made in 1724 to limit the duration of Assemblies to three years, in conformity to the custom of England. At the meeting of the new Assembly, the first Dec. 15business which they took up was to move for a triennial act. The Lieutenant Governor was disposed to gratify them. Both Houses agreed in framing an act for a triennial Assembly, in which the duration of the prefent Assembly was limited to three years (unless sooner dissolved by the commander in chief) writs were to iffue fifteen days at least, before a new election; the qualification of a reprefentative was declared to be a freehold estate of three hundred pounds value. The qualification Faidon of Laws in of an elector was a real estate of fifty of Laws in pounds, within the town or precinct where the election should be made: but habitancy was not required in either case; the felectmen of the town, with the moderator of the meeting, were constituted judges of the qualifications of electors, faving .

1727. faving an appeal to the House of Reprefentatives. This act having been paffed, in due form, received the royal approbation, and was the only act which could be called a constitution or form of Government, established by the people of New-Hampshire; all other parts of their government being founded on royal commissions and instructions. But this act was defective, in not determining by whom the writs should be issued, and in not describing the places from which Representatives should be called, either by name, extent or population. This defect gave birth to a long and bitter controversy, as will be seen hereafter.

The triennial act being paffed, the House were disposed to make other alterations in the government. An appeal was allowed in all civil cases from the inferior to the superior court; if the matter in controversy exceeded one hundred pounds, another appeal was allowed to the Governor and Council; and if it exceeded three hundred pounds, to the King in Council. The appeal to the Governor and Council was first established by Cutts's commission, and continued by subsequent commissions and instructions. In Queen Anne's time, it was complained of as a grievance, that the Governor and Council received appeals and decided causes, without taking an oath to do justice. An oath was then prescribed and taken. The authority of this court had been recognifed by feveral clauses in the laws; but was difrelished by many of the people; partly because the judges who had before decided cases, were generally members of the Council; partly because no jury was admitted in this court of appeal; and partly because no such institution was known in the neighbouring Province of Maffachufetts. The House moved for a repeal of the feveral claufes in the laws relative to this obnoxious court: the Council non-concurred their vote, and referred them to the royal instructions. The House persisted in their endeavors, and the Council in their oppofition." Both fides grew warm, and there was no prospect of an accommodation. The Lieuteuant Governor put an end to the fession, and soon after dissolved the Affembly by proclamation.

A new Affembly was called; the fame persons, with but two or three exceptions, were re-elected, and the same spirit appeared in all their transactions. They chose for their speaker Nathaniel Weare, who had been speaker of the former Alfembly, fembly, and having as usual presented him 1728. to the Lieutenant Governor, he negatived the choice. The House desired to know by what authority; he produced his commission; nothing appeared in that, which fatisfied them; and they adjourned from day to day without doing any bufiness. After nine days they chose another Speaker, Andrew Wiggin, and fent up the vote, with a preamble, justifying their former choice. The Lieutenant Governor approved the Speaker, but disapproved the preamble; and thus the controverfy clofed, each fide retaining their own opinion. The speeches and messages from the chair, and the answers from the House, during this fession, were filled with reproaches; the public business was conducted with ill humour, and the House carried their opposition so far as to pass a vote for addressing the King to annex the Province to Massachusetts; to this vote the Council made no answer. But as a new Governor was expected, they agreed in appointing a committee of both Houses to go to Boston, and compliment him on his arrival.

The expected Governor was WILLIAM BURNET, fon of the celebrated Bishop of Sarum, whose name was dear to the people of New-England, as a steady and active friend to civil and religious liberty. 1728. Mr. Burnet was a man of good understanding and polite literature; fond of books and of the conversation of literary men; but an enemy to oftentation and parade. He had been Governor of New-York and New-Jersey, and quitted those Provinces with reluctance, to make way for another person, for whom the British Ministry had to provide. Whilst at New-York, he was very popular, and his fame having reached New-England, the expectations of the people were much raised on the news of his appointment, to the Government of Massachusetts and New-Hampshire. Lieutenant Governor Wentworth characterifed him in one of his speeches as 'a gentleman of known worth, having justly obtained an universal regard from all who have had the bonor to be ' under his government.' He was received with much parade at Boston, whither the Lieutenant Governor of New-Hampshire, with a committee of the Council and Affembly, went to compliment him on his arrival.*

Mr. Hutchinfon has represented Governor Burnet as a man of humour, and given an ancedote respecting his indifference to the eustom of faying grace at meals. The following flory of the fame kind, perhaps will not be difagreeable to the reader.

One of the committee, who went from Boston, to meet him on the borders of Rhode-Island, and conduct him to the feat of government, was the facetious Col. Tailer. Burnet complained of the long graces which were faid by clergymen on the road, and afked Tailer when they 1728.

Mr. Burnet had positive instructions from the crown to insist on the establishment of a permanent salary in both his Provinces. He began with Massachusetts, and held a long controversy with the General Court to no purpose. In New-Hampshire, a precedent had been established in the administration of Dudley, which was favorable to his views. Though some of the Assembly were averse to a permanent salary; yet the Lieutenant Governor had so much interest with them, by virtue of having made them proprietors in the lately granted townships, that they were induced to consent; on condition that he

This bargain being concluded, the House passed a vote, with which the Council concurred, to pay, 'Governor Burnet, for the term of three years, 'or during his administration, the sum of 'two hundred pounds sterling, or six hundred pounds in bills of credit; which sum was to be in full of all demands from this 'Government, for his salary; and all expenses in coming to, tarrying in, or go-would shorten. He answered, 'The graces will increase in length, till 'you come to Boston ; after that they will shorten till you come to 'your government of New-Hampshire; whete your Excellency will sind 'no grace at all.'

ing from this Province; and also for any allowance to be made to the Lieutenant Governor; and that the excise on liquors should be appropriated to that use. To this vote six of the Representatives entered their diffent.

The Governor came but once into New-Hampshire. His death, which happened after a few months, was supposed to be occasioned by the ill effect, which his controversy with Maslachusetts, and the disappointment which he suffered, had on his nerves.

When the death of Governor Burnet was known in England, the refentment against the Province of Massachusetts was very high, on account of their determined refusal to fix a salary on the King's Governor. It was even proposed, to reduce them to 'a more absolute dependence on the crown;' but a spirit of moderation prevailed; and it was thought that Mr. JONATHAN BELCHER, then in England, being a native of the Province, and well acquainted with the temper of his countrymen would have more influence than a stranger, to carry the favorite point of a fixed falary. His appointment, as Governor of New-Hampshire, was merely an appendage to his other commission.

Belcher's Letter to the Biffing of Lincoln.

Belcher was a merchant of large fortune and unblemished reputation. He had fpent fix years in Europe; had been twice at the Court of Hanover, before the protestant succession took place in the family of Brunswick; and had received from the Princess Sophia, a rich golden medal. He was graceful in his person, elegant and polite in his manners; of a ofty and afpiring disposition; a steady, generous friend; a vindictive, but not implacable enemy. Frank and fincere, he was extremely liberal in his censures, both in conversation and letters. Having a high fense of the dignity of his commission, he determined to support it, even at the expense of his private fortune; the emoluments of office in both Provinces being inadequate to the style in which he chose to live

Whilft he was in England, and it was uncertain whether he would be appointed, or Shute would return, Wentworth wrote letters of compliment to both. Belcher knew nothing of the letter to Shute, till his arrival in America, and after he had made a vifit to New-Hampshire, and had been entertained at the house of the Lieutenant Governor. He was then informed, that Wentworth had written a letter to Shute.

felf. This he deemed an act of duplicity. How far it was fo, cannot now be determined. The perfuation was fo strong in the mind of Belcher, that on his next visit to Portsmouth, he refused an invitation to Wentworth's house. This was not the only way in which he manifested his displeasure. When the affair of the falary came before the Affembly, he not only re- Aug. 31. fused to make such a compromise as Burnet had done; but obliged the Lieutenant Governor under his hand, to 'quit all claim to any part of the falary, and to acknowledge that he had no expectation from, or dependence on the Assembly, for any allowance, but that he depended wholly on the Governor.' The fame falary was then voted, and in nearly the fame words, as to his predecessor. He allowed the Lieutenant Governor, the fees and perquifites only which arose from registers, certificates, licenses and passes, amounting to about fifty pounds sterling. Wentworth and his friends were disappointed and disgusted. He himself did not long survive; being feized with a lethargic diforder, he died Dec. 12. within five months; but his family connexions refented the affront, and drew a confiderable party into their views. ning Wentworth, his fon, and Theodore Atkinson, who had married his daughter, were at the head of the opposition. The latter was removed from his office of Collector of the Customs, to make room for Richard Wibird; the Naval Office was taken from him and given to Ellis Huske; and the office of High Sheriff, which he had held, was divided between him and Eleazer Ruffell. Other alterations were made, which greatly offended the friends of the late Lieutenant Governor; but Belcher, fatisfied that his conduct was agreeable to his commission and instructions, difregarded his opponents and apprehended no danger from their refentment. Atkinfon was a man of humor, and took occasion to express his disgust in a singular manner. The Governor, who was fond of parade, had ordered a troop of horie, to meet him on the road, and escort him to Portsmouth. The officers of government met him, and joined the cavalcade. Atkinfon was tardy; but when he appeared, having broken the Sheriff's wand, he held one half in his hand. Being chid by the Governor for not appearing fooner, he begged his Excellency to excuse him, because he had but half a horse to ride.

In addition to what has been observed, respecting Lieutenant Governor Wentworth: the following portrait of his character, by fome contemporary friend, deferves remembrance.

DUNBAR'S Lieutenancy and enmity to BELCHER. Efforts to fettle the boundary lines. Divisions. Riot. Trade. Epifcopal Church. Throat distemper.

MR. WENTWORTH was fucceeded in the Lieutenancy by DAVID DUNBAR, Esq. a native of Ireland and a June 24. reduced Colonel in the British service; who was also deputed to be surveyor of the King's woods. This appointment was made by the recommendation of the Board of Trade; of which Col. Bladen was an active member, who bore no good will to Governor Belcher. Dunbar had been Hurching commander of a fort at Pemaquid, which for 1 it was in contemplation to annex to Nova-Scotia. He had taken upon him to govern the few scattered people in that district, with a degree of rigor to which they could not easily submit. This conduct had already opened a controversy, between him and the Province of Massachusetts: and it was very unfortunate for Belcher to have fuch a person connected with both his governments. What were the merits, which recommended Dunbar to these sta-

1731. mine; the only qualifications, which appear to have pleaded in his favor, were poverty and the friendship of men in power. He was an instrument of intrigue and difaffection; and he no fooner made his appearance in New-Hampshire, than he joined the party who were in opposition to the Governor. Belcher perceived the advantage which his enemies would derive from this alliance, and made all the efforts in his power to displace him. In his letters to the ministry, to the Board of Trade, and to his friends in England, he continually represented him in the worst light, and folicited his removal. It is not improbable, that his numerous letters of this kind, written in his usual style, with great freedom and without any referve, might confirm the suspicions, raised by the letters of his adverfaries, and induce the balance of parties. Within a few weeks after Dunbar's coming to Portsmouth, a complaint was drawn up against Belcher, and figned by fifteen perfons; alleging that his government was grievous, oppressive and arbitrary, and praying the King for his removal. This roused the Governor's friends, at ministry to keep Dunbar in place, as a check upon Belcher, and to preferve the

the head of whom was Richard Waldron, the fecretary, who drew up a counter address, and procured an hundred names to be subscribed. Both addreffes reached England about the fame time. Richard Partridge, Mr. Belcher's brother in law, in conjunction with his fon Jonathan Belcher, then a student in the Temple, applied for a copy of the complaint against him, at the Plantation office, and obtained it; but could not get letters. fight of the letters which accompanied it. though, on the foundation of those letters, a reprefentation had been made by the Board of Trade, to the King.

The only effect which Dunbar's letters had at that time, was to procure the appointment of Theodore Atkinson, Benning Wentworth and Joshua Peirce, to be Counsellors of New-Hampshire; and though Belcher remonstrated to the Secretary of State against these appointments, and recommended other persons in their room, he could not prevail, any farther than to delay the admission of the two former for about two years; during which time, they were elected into the House of Representatives, and kept up the opposition there. The recommendations, which he made of other persons, were duly attended to when vacancies happened; and thus the Council was composed of his friends, and his enemies. The civil officers, whom he appointed, were fometimes fuperfeded, by persons recommended and sent from England; and in one instance, a commisfion for the naval office, in favor of a Mr. Reynolds, fon of the Bishop of Lincoln, was filled up in England, and fent over with orders for him to fign it; which he was obliged punctually to obey.

Belcher's. Waldron's Atkinfon's & Thomlinfon's letters MS.

From the confidential letters of the leading men on both fides, which have fallen into my hands in the course of my refearches, the views of each party may plainly be feen; though they endeavored to conceal them from each other. The Governor and his friends had projected an union of New-Hampshire with Massachusetts; but were at a loss by what means to bring it into effect. The most defirable method would have been, an unanimity in the people of New-Hampfhire, in petitioning the Crown for it; but as this could not be had, the project was kept out of fight, till some favorable opportunity should present.

The other party contemplated not only the continuance of a separate government, but the appointment of a distinct Governor, who should reside in the Province, 1731. and have no connection with Maffachufetts. The greatest obstacle in their way, was the smallness and poverty of the Province, which was not able to support a gentleman in the character of Governor. To remove this obstacle, it was necessary to have the limits of territory, not only fixed, but enlarged. They were therefore zealous, in their attemps for this purpose ; and had the address to persuade a majority of the people, that they would be gainers by the establishment of the lines; that the lands would be granted to them and their children; and that the expense of . obtaining the fettlement would be fo trifling, that each man's share would not exceed the value of a pullet.

The Governor's friends were averse to pressing the settlement of the line; and their reasons were these. The controversy is either between the King and the subjects of his charter government of Massachusetts; or else, between the heirs of Mason or Allen and the people of Massachusetts. If the controversy be settled even in savor of New-Hampshire, the lands which fall within the line, will be either the King's property, to be granted by his Governor and Council according to royal instructions:

1731. inftructions; or else the property of the heirs of Mason or Allen, to be disposed of by them. On both suppositions, the people of New-Hampshire can have no property in the lands, and therefore why should they be zealous about the division or tax themselves to pay the expense of it?

The Governor, as obliged by his in-Aructions, frequently urged the fettlement of the lines in his speeches, and declared, that the Assembly of New-Hampshire had done more toward effecting it, than that of Massachusetts. A committee from both Provinces met at Newbury in the autumn of 1731, on this long contested affair; but the influence of that party in Massachusetts, of which Elisha Cooke was at the head, prevented an accommodation. Soon after this fruitless conference, the Representatives of New-Hampshire, of whom a majority was in favor of fettling the line, determined no longer to treat with Massachusetts; but to represent the matter to the King, and petition him to decide the controversy. Newman's commission, as agent, having expired, they chose for this purpose, John Rindge, merchant, of Portfmouth, then bound on a voyage to London. The appointment

Allembly Records. Oct. 7. of this gentleman was fortunate for them. not only as he had large connexions in England: but as he was capable of advancing money, to carry on the folicitation. The Council, a majority of which was in the opposite interest, did neither concur in the appointment, nor confent to the petition.

Mr. Rindge, on his arrival in England, petitioned the King in his own name, and in behalf of the Representatives of New-Hampshire, to establish the boundaries of the Province; but his private affairs requiring his return to America, he did, agreeably to his instructions, leave the business in the hands of Capt. John Thomlinson, merchant, of London; who was well known in New-Hampshire, where he had frequently been in quality of a fea commander. He was a gentleman of great penetration, industry and address; and having fully entered into the views of Belcher's opponents, profecuted the affair of the line, 'with ardor and diligence; employing for his folicitor, Ferdinando John Parris; who being well fupplied with money, was indefatigable in his attention. The petition was of course referred to the Lords of Trade, and Francis Wilks the agent of Massachusetts, was ferved with a copy to be fent to his con-While flituents.

1732.

Whilst the matter of the line was pending on the other fide of the Atlantic, the parties in New-Hampshire maintained their opposition; and were on all occasions vilifying and abufing each other, especially in their letters to their friends in England. On the one fide, Belcher inceffantly represented Dunbar, as the fomenter of opposition; as false, perfidious, malicious and revengeful; that he did no fervice to the crown, nor to himself; but was 'a ' plague to the Governor and a deceiver of ' the people.' He was also very liberal in his reflections, on his other opposers. On the other fide, they represented him as unfriendly to the royal interest; as obstructing the fettlement of the lines; conniving at the destruction of the King's timber, and partial to his other government, where all his interest lay; and that he had not even a freehold in New-Hampshire. As an instance of his partiality, they alleged, that in almost every session of the Assembly of Masiachusetts, he consented to grants of the disputed lands, to the people of that Province; by which means, their Assembly raised money, to enable their agent to protract the controversy, that they might have opportunity to lay out more townships; while at the same time, he rejected a fupply bill of the New-Hampshire Assembly, and disloved them, because that in it, they had made an appropriation for their agent. The truth was, that the Council did not consent to the bill, because they had no hand in appointing the agent, and the bill never came before the Governor. The frequent dissolution of Assemblies was another subject of complaint; and in fact this measure never produced the desired effect; for the same persons were generally re-elected, and no reconciling measures were adopted by either party.

The Governor frequently complained, in his speeches, that the public debts were not paid; nor the fort, prison, and other public buildings kept in repair; because of their failure in supplying the treasury. The true reason of their not supplying it was, that they wanted emissions of paper money, to be drawn in, at distant periods; to this the Governor could not confent, being restrained by a royal instruction, as well as in principle opposed to all fuch practices. But one emission of paper was made in his administration; and for its redemption a fund was established in hemp. iron, and other productions of the country. When a number of merchants and others had combined to iffue notes, to supply the place of a currency, he iffued a proclamation against them; and in his next speech to the Assembly, condemned them in very severe terms. The Assembly endeavored to vindicate the character of the bills; but in a few days he dissolved them, with a reprimand; charging them with trifling, with injustice and hypocrify. It must be remembered, that his complaints of an empty treasury were not occasioned by any failure of his own falary, which was regularly paid out of the excise.

Belcher revived the idea of his predeceffor Shute, which was also countenanced by his instructions, that he was virtually present in New-Hampshire, when personally absent, and attending his duty, in his other Province; and therefore that the Lieutenant Governor could do nothing but by his orders. Dunbar had no feat in the Council, and Shadrach Walton being senior member, by the Governor's order fummoned them and prefided. He also held the command of the fort, by the Governor's commission, granted passes for thips, and licenses for marriage; and received and executed military orders, asoccasion required. The Lieutenant Gov-. ernor contested this point; but could not prevail:

prevail; and finding himself reduced to a state of insignificance, he retired in difgust, to his fort at Pemaquid; where he resided almost two years. The Governor's friends gave out that he had absconded for debt, and affected to triumph over the opposition, as poor and impotent; but their complaints, supported by their agent Thomlinson, and the influence of Bladen at the Board of Trade, made an impression there much, to the disadvantage of Mr. Belcher; though he had friends among the ministry, and nobility; the principal of whom was Lord Townsend, by whose influence he had obtained his commission.

After Dunbar's return to Portsmouth, the Governor thought it good policy to relax his severity; and gave him the command of the fort, with the ordinary perquisites of office, amounting to about fifty pounds sterling. Not content with this, he complained, that the Governor did not allow him one third of his salary. The Governor's salary-was but six hundred pounds currency; he spent at least one hundred, in every journey to New-Hampfhire, of which he made two in a year. At the same time Dunbar had two hundred pounds sterling, as Surveyor General of the woods; which, with the perquisites, amounting

amounting to one hundred more, were divided between him and his deputies. But it must be remembered that he was deeply in debt, both here and in England.

The rigid execution of the office of Surveyor General had always been attended with difficulty; and the violent manner. in which Dunbar proceeded with trefpaffers, raifed a spirit of opposition on fuch occasions. The statutes for the prefervation of the woods impowered the furveyor to feize all logs, cut from white pine trees, without license; and it rested on the claimant, to prove his property, in the court of Admiralty. Dunbar went to the faw-mills; where he feized and marked large quantities of lumber; and with an air and manner to which he had been accustomed in his military capacity, abused and threatened the people. That class of men, with whom he was disposed to contend, are not easily intimidated with high words; and he was not a match for them, in that species of controversy, which they have denominated fwamp law. An instance of this happened at Dover, whither he came, with his boat's crew, to remove a parcel of boards, which he had feized. The owner, Paul Gerrish, warned him of the consequence; Dunbar threatened with death the first man who should 1734. obstruct his intentions; the same threat was returned to the first man who should remove the boards. Dunbar's prudence at this time, got the better of his courage, and he retired.

With the like spirit, an attempt of the fame kind was frustrated at Exeter, whither he fent a company in a boat to remove lumber. Whilst his men were regaling themselves at a public house, in the evening, and boafting of what they intended to do the next day; a number of persons, difguifed like Indians, attacked and beat them; whilst others cut the rigging and fails of the boat, and made a hole in her bottom. The party not finding themselves fafe in the house, retreated to the boat, and pushed off; but being there in danger of finking, they with difficulty regained the shore, and hid themselves till morning, when they returned on foot to Portfmouth.

This was deemed a flagrant infult. Dunbar fummoned the Council, and com- April 26. plained to them of the riotous proceedings at Exeter, where there was 'a conspiracy ' against his life, by evil minded persons, ' who had hired Indians to destroy him.' He proposed to the Council, the issuing of of a proclamation, offering a reward to apprehend the rioters. The major part of the Council were of opinion, that no proclamation could be iffued but by the Governor.* Information being fent to the Governor, he iffued a proclamation; commanding all magistrates to affift in discovering the rioters.

This transaction afforded matter for complaint, and a memorial was drawn up by Thomlinion, grounded on letters which he had received. It was suggested, that the Governor's pretence to favor the furveyor was deceitful; that the rioters at Exeter were his greatest friends; that the Council, wholly devoted to him, would not advise to a proclamation till they had sent to Boston; that the proclamation was delayed; and when it appeared offered no reward; though Dunbar had proposed to pay the money himself; and, that by reason of this delay and omission, the rioters escaped with impunity.

In

⁴ This was also the Governer's opinion; and in his letters he frequently afferts that Dunbar had no command in New-Hamphine, whilt he wais cither of his governments. To be consilient, he flood have maintained, that the Livetenant Governor of Maffachufetts had no command whilt he was in New-Hamphine; but there occurs an inflance of a proclamation issued by Lieutenant Governor Phips, (March 25, 1737) on occasion of a riot at Botton, whild the Gornor was in New-Hamphine; and at his return, he issued souther, in, which he refers to the former, not only without exclusing it, but interns of approbation.

In justice to Mr. Belcher, it must be faid, that there was no delay on his part, the proclamation being fent from Boston within fix days. It also appears, from the fecret and confidential letters of the Governor, that he disapproved the riot, and even called it rebellion; that he gave particular orders to the magistrates, to make inquiry, and take depositions, and do their utmost to discover the rioters. If he did not advertise a reward, it was because there was no money in the treafury; and if Dunbar had been fincere in his offer to pay it, he might have promifed it, by advertisement. The true reason that the rioters were not discovered, was, that their plan was fo artfully conducted, their persons so effectually disguised, and their confidence in each other fo well placed, that no proof could be obtained; and the fecret remained with themselves, till the danger was over, and the government had paffed into other hands.

A law had been made, for holding the Inferior Court of Common Pleas, alternately in each of the four old towns; and the practice had been continued for feveral years, much to the convenience and fatisfaction of the people; but Dunbar remonstrated against it, to the Board of

The act was in consequence disallowed, and the courts were afterward consined to Portsmouth. The order for disallowance, came to the hands of Dunker who called a meeting of the Council.

disallowance, came to the hands of Dunbar, who called a meeting of the Council, that they might advise to its publication. A majority of them would not consent, till the original order was sent to Boston, and Governor Belcher directed the publication of it. This transaction served as matter of fresh complaint, and was alleged as an argument for the appointment of a Governor, who should reside constantly in the Province.

To finish what relates to Dunbar. He was caressed by the party in opposition to Belcher, under the idea that he had interest enough in England, to obtain a commission for the government of New-Hampshire. In 1737 he went to England to prosecute his design; where, by his old creditors, he was arrested and thrown into prison. Thomlinson found means to liberate him; but perceived that he had neither steadiness nor ability for the station at which he aimed, nor interest

enough to obtain it; though, by his prefence in England, he ferved to keep up the opposition to Belcher, and was used as a tool for that purpose, till the object was accomplished. After which he was (1742) appointed, by the East India Company, Governor of St. Helena.

The trade of the Province at this time confifted chiefly in the exportation of lumber and fish to Spain and Portugal, and the Caribbee Islands. The mast trade was wholly confined to Great Britain. In the winter small vessels went to the fouthern Colonies, with English and West India goods, and returned with corn and pork. of Trade, The manufacture of iron within the Province, which had been fet up by the late Lieutenant Governor Wentworth, and other gentlemen, lay under discouragement, for want of experienced and induftrious workmen. The woollen manufacture was diminished, and sheep were scarcer than formerly; the common lands on which they used to feed, being fenced in by the proprietors. The manufacture of linen was much increased by means of the emigrants from Ireland, who were skilled in that business. No improvements were made in agriculture, and the newly granted townships were not cultivated with fpirit or fuccess.

There had not been any fettled Episcopal Church in the Province from the beginning, till about the year 1732; when some gentlemen who were fond of the mode of divine worship, in the Church of England, contributed to the erection of a neat building on a commanding eminence, in Portfmouth, which they called the Queen's Chapel. Mr. Thomlinson was greatly instrumental of procuring them affistance in England, toward completing and furnishing it. It was confectated in 1734; and in 1736 they obtained Mr. Arthur Browne for their minister, with a salary from the society for propagating the gospel in foreign parts.

About this time, the country was visit-the thirs the country was with a new epidemic difease, which has obtained the name of the throat distemper. The general description of it is a swelled throat, with white or ash-colored specks, an efflorescence on the skin, great debility of the whole system, and a strong tendency to putridity. Its first appearance was in May 1735, at Kingston in New-Hampshire, an inland town, situate on a low plain. The first person seized, was a child, who died in three days. About a week after, in another family, at the distance of four miles, three children were fuccessively attacked, who also died on the third day. It continued spreading gradually, in that township, through the summer, and of the first forty who had it, none recovered. In August it began to make its appearance at Exeter, fix miles northeastward; and in September, at Boston,* fifty miles southward, though it was October, before it reached Chester, the nearest settlement on the west of Kingston. It continued its ravages through the succeeding winter and spring, and did not disappear till the end of the next summer.

The most, who died of this pestilence, were children; and the distress, which it occasioned, was heightened to the most poignant degree. From three to six chil-

Dr. Dougla's computes the number of persons who had the difference in Boston at 4000; of whom 114 died, which is one in 35. The whole number of inhabitants at that time was estimated at 16,000.

^{*} On its first appearance in Boston, it was supposed to be nothing more than a common cold; but when the repurt of the mortality in New-Hampshire was received, and a yaong man from Exters, whose bother had died of it, was feired (Odbober 1735) the house was that and garded, and a general alarm spread through the neighbouring towns and colonies. Upon his detth, no infection was observed in that house or neighbourhood; but the distemper appeared in other places, which had no communication with the fick. The physicians did not take the infection, nor convey it to their families, nor their other patients. It was therefore concluded, that it was not like the small pox, or the plague, communication by infection, from the sick or from clushes; and the physicians, having by define of the selectmen, held a consolution, published their opinion; that it proceeded enticly from 'some occult quality in the air.'

1735. dren were lost out of some families; several buried sour in a day, and many lost their all. In some towns, one in three, and in others one in four of the sick were carried off. In the parish of Hampton-Falls it raged most violently. Twenty families buried all their children. Twenty seven persons were lost out of sive families; and more than one sixth part of the inhabitants of that place died within thirteen months. In the whole Province, not less than one thousand persons, of whom above nine hundred were under twenty years of age, fell victims to this raging distemper.

Since the fettlement of this country fuch a mortality had not been known. It was observed, that the distemper proved most fatal, when plentiful evacuations, particularly bleeding, were used; a great proftration of strength being an invariable symptom. The fummer of 1735, when the ficknefs began, was unufually wet and cold, and the easterly wind greatly prevailed. But it was acknowledged to be, not 'a crea-' ture of the featons;' as it raged through every part of the year. Its extent is faid to have been 'from Pemaquid to Carolina;' but with what virulence it raged, or in what measure it proved fatal, to the southward of New-England, does not appear.

The

The fame distemper has made its appearance at various times fince. In 1754 and 1755, it produced a great mortality in feveral parts of New-Hampshire, and the neighbouring parts of Massachusetts. Since that time it has either put on a milder form, or physicians have become better acquainted with it. The last time of its general foreading was in 1784, 5, 6 and 7. It was first feen at Sanford in the county of York; and thence diffused itself, very flowly, through most of the towns of New-England; but its virulence, and the mortality which it caused, were comparatively inconfiderable. 'Its remote, or predifpof-'ing cause, is one of those mysteries in ' nature, which baffle human inquiry.'

State of parties. Controversy about lines. Commissioners appointed. Their session and result. Appeals. Complaints.

TE have now come to that part of the History of New-Hampshire, in which may be feen, operating in a smaller sphere, the same spirit of intrigue which has frequently influenced the conduct of princes, and determined the fate of nations. Whilst on the one hand, we see Masfachusetts stiffly afferting her chartered claims; and looking with contempt, on the fmall Province of New-Hampshire, over which she had formerly exercised jurisdiction; we shall see, on the other hand, New-Hampshire aiming at an equal rank, and contending with her for a large portion of territory; not depending folely on argument; but feeking her refuge in the royal favor, and making interest with the fervants of the Crown. Had the controverfy been decided by a court of law, the claims of Massachusetts would have had as much weight, as those of an individual, in a case of private property; but the question being concerning a line of jurisdiction, jurisdiction, it was natural to expect a decision, agreeable to the rules of policy and convenience; especially where the tribunal itself was a party concerned.

It must be observed, that the party in New-Hampshire, who were so earnestly engaged in the establishment of the boundary lines, had another object in view, to which this was subordinate. Their avowed intention was to finish a long controversy, which had proved a source of inconvenience to the people who refided on the disputed lands, or those who sought an interest in them; but their fecret design was to displace Belcher, and obtain a Governor who should have no connexion with Massachusetts. To accomplish the principal, it was necessary that the subordinate object should be vigorosly pursued. The Government of New-Hampshire, with a falary of fix hundred pounds, and perquifites amounting to two hundred pounds more, equal in the whole to about eight hundred dollars per annum, was thought to be not worthy the attention of any gentleman; but if the lines could be extended on both fides, there would be at once an increase of territory, and a prospect of speculating in landed property; and in future there would be an increase of cultivation, and confequently of ability to support a Governor.

The people were told that the lands would be granted to them; and by this bait they were induced to favor the plan; whilft the ministry in England, were flattered with the idea, of an increase of crown influence in the plantations.

The leading men in Maffachusetts were aware of the views of those in New-Hampshire, and determined to guard against them. They prefumed, that a line of jurifdiction would not affect property; and therefore endeavored to fecure the lands to themselves, by possession and improvement, as far as it was practicable. The fame idea prevailed among the Governor's friends in New-Hampshire. They perceived, that a tract of wilderness on the north eastern fide of Merrimack River. and the ponds which flow into it, must doubtless fall into New-Hampshire. For these lands they petitioned the Governor, and a charter was prepared, in which this whole tract, called King's-Wood, was granted to them. It contained all the lands not before granted, between the bounds of New-Hampshire on the fouthwest and north-east; which, according to the ideas of those concerned, would have been fufficient for about four large townships, Governor

Governor Belcher had a difficult part to act. He was at the head of two rival Provinces: he had friends in both, who were feeking their own as well as the public interest: He had enemies in both, who were watching him, eager to lay hold on the most trivial mistake, and magnify it to his difadvantage. His own interest was to preferve his commission, and counteract the machinations of his enemies ; but as the fettlement of the line, and the removing of him from his office, were carried on at the fame time, and by the fame perfons, it was difficult for him to oppose the latter, without feeming to oppose the former. Besides, Mr. Wilks, the agent of Massachusetts, was well known to be his friend; and when it was found necessary to increase the number, one of them was his brother, Mr. Partridge. On the other hand, Mr. Rindge and Mr. Thomlinfon were his avowed enemies. There was also a difference in the mode of appointing these agents. Those of Massachusetts were constituted by the Council and Representatives, with the Governor's confent. Those of New-Hampshire were chosen by the Representatives only, the Council nonconcurring in the choice; which, of courfe, could could not be fanctioned by the Governor's fignature, nor by the feal of the Province.

When the petition which Rindge prefented to the King, had been referred to the Board of Trade, and a copy of it given to Wilks, to be fent to his constituents, it became necessary that they should instruct him. Their instructions were defignedly expressed in such ambiguous terms, that he was left to guess their meaning, and afterward blamed for not observing their directions. His embarrassment on this occasion, expressed in his petition and counter petition, to the Board of Trade, protracted the bufiness, and gave it a complexion, unfavorable to his constituents, but extremely favorable to the defign of New-Hampshire.

To bring forward the controverfy, Parris, the folicitor for the agents of New-Hampshire, moved a question, 'From 'what part of Merrimack river the line 'should begin?' The Board of Trade referred this question, to the Attorney and Solicitor General, who appointed a day to hear council on both fides. The council for New-Hampshire infisted, that the line ought to begin three miles north of the mouth of the Merrimack. The council for Massachusetts declared, that in their opiniattorney and folicitor reported, that 'whether this were so or not, they could 'not judge; but as the question had been 'referred to them, they were of opinion, 'that according to the charter of William and Mary, the dividing line ought to be taken, from three miles north of the mouth of Merrimack, where it runs 'into the sea.' Copies of this opinion were given to each party; and the Lords of Trade reported, that the King should appoint Commissioners, from the neighboring Provinces, to mark out the dividing line. This report was approved by the Lords of Council.

Much time was spent in references, messages and petitions, concerning the adjustment of various matters; and at length, the principal heads of the commission were determined. The first was, that the commissioners should be appointed, from among the Counsellors of New-York, New-Jersey, Rhode-Island and Nova-Scotia. These were all royal governments, except Rhode-Island; and with that Colony, as well as New-York, Massachusetts lad a controversy, respecting boundaries.

boundaries. Connecticut, though proposed, was defignedly omitted, because it was imagined that they would be partial to Massachusetts, from the similarity of their habits and interests. The other points were, that twenty commissioners should be nominated, of whom five were to be a quorum; that they should meet at Hampton, in New-Hampshire, on the first of August, Printed 1737; that each Province should fend to the Commissioners, at their first meeting, the names of two public officers, on whom any notice, fummons, or final judgment might be ferved; and at the fame time should exhibit, in writing, a plain and full state of their respective claims, copies of which should be mutually exchanged; and that if either Province should neglect to fend in the names of their officers, or the full state of their demands, at the time appointed, then the Commissioners should proceed ex parte. That when the Commissioners should have made and signed their final determination, they should send copies to the public officers, of each Province; and then should adjourn for fix weeks, that either party might enter their appeal.

These points being determined; the Board of Trade wrote letters to Belcher, enclosing the heads of the proposed commission, and directing him to recommend to the Affemblies of each Province, to choose their public officers, and prepare their demands, by the time when the Commissioners were to meet. These were accompanied with letters to the Governors of the feveral Provinces, from which the Commissioners were elected, informing them of their appointment. The letters were delivered to Parris, and by him to Thomlinfon, to be fent by the first ship to America. Those to Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, were directed, the one to Mr. Belcher, by name, as Governor of Mailachusetts; the other, to the commander in chief, refident in New-Hampfhire; and it was required that the delivery of the letters should be certified by affidavit. The defign of this fingular injunction was, that Dunbar, if present, should receive the letter, and call the Assembly of New-Hampshire immediately; and that if Belcher should forbid or hinder it, the blame of the neglect should fall on him. At the fame time another letter, respecting a petition of a borderer on the line, and containing a reprimand to Belcher, was fent in the fame manner, to be delivered by Dunbar, into Belcher's hands.

Thefe

Original letters of Parris. These intended affronts, both failed of their effect : Dunbar having, before the arrival of the letters, taken his passage to England.

The anxiety of Thomlinson, to have the earliest notice possible, of the intended commission sent to New-Hampshire, led him not only to forward the public letters; but to fend copies of all the tranfactions, to his friends there. In a letter to Wiggen and Rindge (the committee who corresponded with him) he advised them, to make the necessary preparations, as foon as possible, to act in conformity to the commission and instructions; and even went fo far as to nominate the perfons, whom they should appoint, to manage their cause before the Commissioners.

'to prepare witnesses, pleas and allega-'tions, papers and records, to be laid be-' fore the Commissioners; to provide for ' their reception and entertainment, and to draw upon the Treasurer for such ' fupplies of money as might be needful.' This appointment was made by the united voice of the Council and Representatives, and confented to by the Governor; and though it was made, three weeks before the reception of the letters, from the Lords of Trade, directing the appointing of public officers, and preparing a statement of claims; vet it was understood to be a full compliance with the orders and expectations of the government in England.

The same day on which this order pasfed, the Governor prorogued the Affembly to the fixth of July; and on the twentieth of June he prorogued it again, to the fourth of August.

The letters respecting the commission, were delivered to Mr. Belcher, on the twenty-fecond of April; and he acknowledged the receipt of them, in a letter to the Board of Trade, on the tenth of May. The commission itself was issued on the ninth of April, and fent to Mr. Rindge; who kept it till the meeting of the Com-

May 27. Journal of Affembly.

At the fpring fession of the General Court in Massachusetts: the Governor laid before them the letter from the Lords of Trade, inclosing an order from the Privy Council, and recommended to them to ftop all processes in law, respecting any disputes of the borderers, till the boundaries should be determined. During the fame fession, he reminded them of the order, and defired them to confider it; telling them that he had no advice of the appointment of Commissioners. His meaning was, that the commission itself, in which they were named, had not been fent to him; nor was he actually informed that it was in America, till after he had prorogued the Assemblies of both Provinces to the fourth of August. In obedience to the royal order, the Assembly of Massachusetts appointed Josiah July 5. Willard, Secretary, and Edward Winflow, Sheriff of Suffolk, to be the two public officers; on whom, or at whose place of abode, any notice, summons, or other process of the Commissioners, might be ferved.

On the fame day, the Committee of eight, who had been appointed by the Affembly of New-Hampshire, in April, appeared; and delivered a paper to the court, reciting the order of the King, for the appointment of two public officers; alleging that the Affembly had not been convened fince the arrival of that order; but, that there should be no failure for want of such officers, they appointed Richard Waldron, Secretary, and Eleazer Russell, Sheriff. They also delivered the claim and demand of New-Hampshire, in the following words. 'That the fouthern boundary of ' faid Province should begin at the end of three miles north from the middle of · the channel of Merrimack river, where 'it runs into the Atlantic Ocean: and ' from thence should run, on a straight

And that the northern boundary of New-Hampshire should begin at the entrance of Piscataqua harbour, and so pass up the same, into the river of Newichwanock, and through the same, into the farthest head thereof; and from thence northwestward, (that is, north, less than a quarter of a point, westwardly) as far as the British dominion extends; and also the western half of the Isles of Shoals, we say, lies within the Province of New-Hampshire.

The fame day, Thomas Berry and Benjamin Lynde, Counfellors of Massachusetts, appeared and delivered the vote of their Affembly, appointing two public officers, with a letter from the Secretary, by order of the Governor, purporting, that 'at the ' last rising of the Assembly there was no ' account that any commission had arrived; ' that the Assembly stood prorogued to the fourth of August; that a commit-'tee had been appointed, to draw up a ' ftate of their demands, which would be 'reported at the next fession, and there-' fore praying that this short delay might ' not operate to their difadvantage.' Upon this, the committee of New-Hampfhire drew up and presented another paper, charging the government of Massa-

Thus the Assemblies of both Provinces were drawn within five miles of each other; and the Governor declared, in his speech, that he would 'act 'as a common father to both.'

In the speech, which the Governor made to the Assembly of New-Hampshire, he recommended to them to appoint two officers, agreeably to his Majesty's commission. The Assembly appeared to be much surprised at this speech; and in their answer, faid, that 'the committee before appointed had already given in 'the names of two officers, which they 'approved of; for had it not been done, 'at the first meeting of the Commissioners, 'they might have proceeded ex parte."

Affembly Journal and printed bilot.

Confidering the temper and views of Mr. Belcher's opponents, this was rather unfortunate for him, fo soon after his profession of being 'a common father to both Provinces.' For if the committee had a right to nominate the two officers, then his recommendation was needles; if they had not, it might justly be asked, why did he not call the Assembly together, on the fixth of July, to which day they had been prorogued? The excuse was, that he did it, to avoid any objection, 1737: which might be made to the regularity of their appointment; and to give them an opportunity to ratify and confirm it. The truth was, that Mr. Belcher highly refented the conduct of the committee of New-Hampshire, who concealed the commission, and never communicated it to him in form. Had he been aware of the use, which his enemies might make, of his rigid adherence to forms, when he couldnot but know the contents of the commission, and the time when it must be executed, prudence might have dictated a more flexible conduct. They did not fail, to make the utmost advantage of his mistakes, to ferve the main cause which they had in view.

The expresses which were sent by Masfachusetts, to call the other Commissioners, had no other effect than to add to the number, Philip Livingstone, from New-York; who, being senior in nomination, prefided in the Court.

To prevent the delay, which would unavoidably attend the taking of plans from actual furveys; the Commissioners recommended, to both Assemblies, to agree upon a plan, by which the pretensions of each Province should be understood; but as this could not be done, a plan drawn by Mitchel was accepted, and when their refult was made this plan was annexed to it. They then proceeded to hear the anfwers, which each party made, to the demands of the other, and to examine witnesses on both sides. Neither party was willing to admit the evidence, produced by the other, and mutual exceptions and protests were entered. The points in debate were, whether Merrimack river, at that time, emptied itself into the sea, at the fame place where it did fixty years before? Whether it bore the fame name, from the sea, up to the crotch? and whether it were possible to draw a parallel line, three miles northward, of every part of a river: the course of which was, in some places, from north to fouth?

With respect to the boundary line, between New-Hampshire and Maine; the controverted points were, whether it should run up the middle of the river, or on its north-castern shore; and whether the line, from the head of the river, should be due north-west, or only a few degrees westward of north.

The grand point on which the whole controverfy respecting the southern line turned, was, whether the charter of William

liam and Mary granted to Massachusetts, all the lands which were granted, by the charter of Charles the first? On this queftion, the Commissioners did not come to any conclusion. Reasons of policy might have fome weight, to render them indecifive; but, whether it were really fo or not, they made and pronounced their refult in the following words. 'In purfuance of Sept 2. 'his Majesty's commission, the Court took MS Copy. 'under confideration, the evidences, pleas, ' and allegations offered and made by each Maifische-' party; and upon mature advisement on fembly, p. the whole, a doubt arose in point of law; and the Court thereupon came to the ' following refolution. That if the char-' ter of King William and Queen Mary, grants to the Province of Maffachufetts ' Bay, all the lands granted by the charter of King Charles the first, lying to the 'northward of Merrimack river; then the Court adjudge and determine, that 'a line shall run, parallel with the faid river, at the distance of three English ' miles, north from the mouth of the faid ' river, beginning at the foutherly fide of the Black Rocks, fo called, at low wa-'ter mark) and from thence to run to the crotch, where the rivers of Pemigewasset ' and Winipiseogee meet; and from thence 4 due

1737

'due north three miles, and from thence due ' west, toward the south sea, until it meets ' with his Majesty's other governments; ' which shall be the boundary or dividing ' line, between the faid Provinces of Maffachusetts and New-Hampshire, on that ' fide. But, if otherwise, then the Court 'adjudge and determine, that a line on the foutherly fide of New-Hampshire, be-' ginning at the distance of three miles ' north, from the foutherly fide of the Black Rocks aforefaid, at low water mark, ' and from thence running due west, up 'into the main land, toward the fouth 'fea, until it meets with his Majesty's other governments, shall be the bounda-'ry line between the faid Provinces, on the ' fide aforefaid: Which point in doubt, the Court humbly fubmit, to the wife confideration of his most facred Majesty, 'in his Privy Council; to be determined ' according to his royal will and pleasure.

'As to the northern boundary, between the faid Provinces, the Court refolve and determine; that the dividing line shall pass up through the mouth of Piscata-qua harbour, and up the middle of the river of Newichwanock, (part of which is now called Salmon-Falls) and through the middle of the same, to the farther

'head thereof, and from thence north, 1737. 'two degrees westerly, until one hundred ' and twenty miles be finished, from the ' mouth of Piscatagua harbour aforesaid; or until it meets with his Majesty's other governments. And, that the dividing ' line shall part the Isles of Shoals, and ' run through the middle of the harbour, between the islands, to the sea, on the ' foutherly fide; and that the fouthwester-'ly part of faid iflands shall lie in, and be ' accounted part of, the Province of New-' Hampshire; and that the north-easterly ' part thereof shall lie in, and be account-' ed part of, the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and be held and enjoyed by the faid ' Provinces respectively, in the same man-' ner as they now do, and have heretofore ' held and enjoyed the fame.

'And the Court do further adjudge, that the cost and charge arising by taking out the Commission, and also of the Commissioners and their officers, viz. the two Clerks, Surveyor and Waiter, for their travelling expenses, and attendance in the execution of the same, be equally borne by the said Provinces.'

Thus this long depending question, after all the time, expense and argument, which it had occasioned, remained undecided.

When

When this evafive decree was published, the Commissioners adjourned, to the fourteenth of October, to receive appeals; and the fame day, the Governor, at the request of the Council only, adjourned the Assembly of New-Hampshire to the twelfth of October. By this fudden adjournment, it was impossible for them to obtain a copy of the decree, before their dispersion, or to frame an appeal, till two days before the time, when it must have been presented. The Assembly of Massachusetts continued their fession, at Salisbury, five days longer. On the fifth of September, they obtained copies of the royal Commission, and the decree of the Commissioners, which they entered on their journal. On the fixth, they agreed upon an appeal; and on the feventh, at the united request of both Houses, the Governor adjourned them to the 12th of October.

The fudden adjournment of the Assembly of New-Hampshire, when that of Massachusetts continued their session, was unfortunate for Governor Belcher; and gave his opponents another advantage, to pursue their grand design against him. The reasons assigned for it were, that the report of the Commissioners being special, the whole matter would of course come before the King, without any appeal from either Province. For this reason, a majority of the Council were against an appeal. That as the committee, appointed in April, had the fame power to act in the recefs, as in the fession of the Assembly; and, as the Council were against appealing; fo the appeal could not be made, by the whole Affembly, and therefore the Governor thought, that the best service which he could do to the Province, was to adjourn the Assembly, and leave the whole business in the hands of the committee. With respect to the short time, between the 12th and 14th of October, it was obferved, that the claim of New-Hampshire was contained in a few lines, and their exceptions to the judgment of the Commissioners might be prepared in a quarter of an hour.

Both Affemblies met again, in the same places, at the appointed time. The Re- oa. 12. presentatives of New-Hampshire having, by the help of their committee, in the recefs of the Assembly, obtained the papers, framed their exceptions and fent a message, to know if the Council were fitting; but the Council, being determined against an appeal, had met and adjourned, without doing any business. The House therefore was reduced to the necessity of desiring the Commissioners to receive their appeal, without the concurrence of the Governor and Council. The appeal, from the Affembly of Massachusetts, was presented in due form, authenticated by the Speaker, Secretary and Governor. Their committee entered a protest against the appeal of New-Hampshire, because it was not an act of the whole Legislature; nevertheles, the Commissioners received it, and entered it on their minutes. Having received these appeals, the Commissioners adjourned their Court to the first of August in the next year, but they never met again.

Massachufetts Journal of Affembly. The Affembly of Maffachufetts appointed Edmund Quincy and Richard Partridge Agents, to join with Francis Wilks, their former agent, in the profecution of their appeal before the King; and raifed the fum of two thouland pounds fterling, to defray the expense.

When the Representatives of New-Hampshire proposed the raising of money, to prosecute their appeal, the Council non-concurred the vote. Their reasons were, that the appeal was not an act of the Council; that they had no voice in the appointment of the agent; and, that at the beginning of the affair, the House had declared

Printed brief. declared to the Council, that the expense 1737. of it would be defrayed by private sub-Scription.

At this fession of the Massachusetts Asfembly, Mr. Belcher put them in mind that he had fuffered in his interest, by the continually finking value of their bills of credit, in which his falary was paid; a point which he had, often before, urged Hutch. 11, them to consider. In answer to this meffage, they made him a grant of £333,6,8, in bills of the new tenor. The same day, they made a grant of the like fum, to the Prefident of Harvard College. Both these fums appear to have been justly due; and at any other time, no exception could have been made to either. But, because the grant to the Governor happened to be made, at the fame time with the grant of £ 2000 sterling to the agents, his opponents pretended, that he received it as a bribe, from the Assembly of Massachusetts, for favoring their cause.

The appeal of New-Hampshire, from the judgment of the Commissioners, was MSS. founded on the following reasons. With respect to the southerly line; because it made the Black Rocks, lying in a bay of Merrimack river, the point from which the three miles were to be meafured; which point point was three quarters of a mile north of the river's mouth; and, because a line, parallel with the river, was not only impracticable, but founded on the old charter, which had been vacated; and, if practicable, yet ought not to go farther than the river held a westerly course. With respect to the northern boundary, they objected to that part of the judgment only, which directed the line to run up the middle of the river; alleging that the grant to Gorges was only of land, between that river and Kenebec; and that New-Hampshire had always been in possession of the whole river, and had maintained a fortress which commanded its entrance.

The appeal of Massachusetts was grounded on the following reasons. That by the charter of William and Mary, the old Colony of Massachusetts was re-incorporated without any exception; that this charter empowered the Governor and General Atlembly to grant all lands, comprehended in the old Colony; that the committee of New-Hampshire acknowledged, that New-Hampshire lay without the late Colony of Massachusetts, by declaring that it was between that and the Province of Maine; that the west line, claimed by New-Hampshire, would cross Merrimack river, thirty miles from its mouth, and exclude forty 1737. miles of faid river out of Massachusetts, though declared, by both charters, to be in it. They objected to extending the line of New-Hampshire till it should meet with his Majesty's other governments; because according to Mason's grant, New-Hampshire could extend no farther than fixty miles from the fea. With respect to the northern boundary, they objected to a line north, two degrees westwardly, alleging that it ought to be on the northwest point; they also excepted to the protraction of this line, till it should meet with his Majesty's other governments; alleging that it ought to extend no farther than one hundred and twenty miles, the fixed limits of the Province of Maine

It was unfortunate for Maslachusetts that their committee had brought Mason's grant, in evidence to the Commissioners, and again recited it in their appeal; for a line of fixty miles from the sea would cross Merrimack river, long before the similar curve line, for which they contended, could be completed. Besides, Mason's grant extended to Naumkeag; which was much further southward, than they would have been willing to admit.

It

It may feem curious and unaccountable to most readers, that the Commissioners should determine the northern, or rather eastern bounds of the northern part of New-Hampshire, to be a line drawn north, two degrees westerly, from the head of Salmon-sall River; when the express words of Gorges' patent are 'north westward.' The agents for Massachusetts, when this claim was put in by New-Hampshire, could hardly think it was seriously meant, claim was put in by New-Hampshire, could hardly think it was feriously meant, when it was alleged that by northwestward must be understood, north a little westward. The only oftensible reason, given for this construction was, that if a northwest line had been intended, then a foutheast line, drawn from the mouth of the harbour, would leave all the Isles of Shoals in New-Hampshire; whereas, the dividing line runs between them. On the other fide, it might have been faid, with equal propriety, that a line drawn fouth, two degrees east, from the mouth of the harbour, would leave all these islands in Massachusetts. For the point where the islands are divided bears fouth, twentynine degrees east, from the middle of the harbour's mouth; the variation of the needle being fix degrees west.

Observed 1781.

When

When this affair was again agitated in England, the agents of Massachusetts obtained a certificate from the learned Dr. Halley, that a line northwestward ought to run forty-five degrees westward of the north point. This was demonstratively true; but there were political reasons for diffenting from mathematical demonstration. One of them is thus expressed, in a private letter, from a committee of the Affembly, to their agent Thomlinson. We hope that the northern line will be but a few degrees, to the westward of north, that his Majesty's Province may 'include the greatest number, and best ' mast trees for the royal navy.' Though this thought might never have occurred to a mathematician, yet some of the Commissioners were doubtless acquainted with it; and it was too important, not to have been communicated to the King's minifters. Another political reason of dissent was, that by enlarging New-Hampshire, there would be a better prospect of obtaining a distinct Governor, which was the grand object in view.

The new agent of Maffachufetts, Edmund Quincy, died of the fmall-pox, foon after his arrival in London. The affair was then left in the hands of Wilks 1738.

and Partridge, neither of whom understood so much of the controversy as Thomlinfon; who was also far superior to them in address. In his letters, to his friends in New-Hampshire, he frequently blames them for their negligence, in not fending to him the necessary papers in proper feafon; and when fent, for the want of correctness and regularity in them. But their deficiency was abundantly compenfated by the dexterity of his folicitor, Parris; who drew up a long 'petition of ap-' peal;' in which, all the circumstances, attending the whole transaction, from the beginning, were recited, and colored, in fuch a manner, as to afperfe the Governor and Assembly of 'the vast, opulent, overgrown Province of Massachusetts; while ' the poor, little, loyal, diffressed Province of 'New-Hampshire' was represented as ready to be devoured, and the King's own property and possessions swallowed up, by the boundless rapacity of the charter government. Concerning the manner in which this mafterly philippic was framed, and the principal object at which it was directed, there can be no better evidence, than that which is contained in a letter, written by Parris to Thomlinfon, and by him fent to New-Hampshire. 'Two nights inights ago, I received a heap of papers 1738. from you, about the lines; and have been four times to the Colony Office, ' and Board of Trade, to discover what I ' could in this imperfect affair; but can-' not see the case, till after Tuesday next. ' Notwithstanding which, I have, as well ' as I can, without proper materials, drawn 'up a long petition of appeal, to his Ma-' jesty; and as the Massachusetts have not yet presented theirs, I send you ' the draught of it, and hope we shall have our appeal, as well as the petition, from ' the New-Hampshire Assembly, in, be-' fore the Maffachusetts get theirs in. Had 'your principals confidered the great con-' fequence of being first, surely, in all this time, they would have fent you a copy of their proceedings, in order to have en-'abled us to be first; but, as it is, I am 'forced to guess at matters, and affirm facts at adventure, or upon dubious passages in letters; which is a fad way of proceeding, and I wish we do not mistake 'fome facts. They oblige us to make brick without straw. Above all, why ' did they not fend a copy of their own 'appeal? For want of it, I have been forced to guess what that appeal was, from · loofe

'loose passages in Mr. A's letters. Beg

'You'll observe, I have laid it on him pret'ty handsomely, in my petition to the

' King.'*

Thus the petition of appeal became a petition of complaint, against the Governor and Assembly of Massachusetts. Copies were delivered to their agents, and the Governor was ordered to make answer to the allegations against him. At the same time, Thomlinson advised his friends in New-Hampshire, to prepare their proofs, as silently as possible; and by no means to give any offence to the Governor; assure any offence to the Governor; assure any offence to the Frivy Council, as well as the Board of Trade, toward their cause; and that they had need to be in no pain, about the event.

This petition is printed at large, in the Journal of the Maffachufetts Affembly for 1738, with their vindication annexed, in which they call the petition factorian of blundeting, if not malificious faltchoods.

The death of Mr. Quincy at this critical period, and the length of time neceffary to prepare and fend over answers, to the complaint which Parris had thus artfully drawn up, obliged the agents of Massachusetts to suspend the presenting of their appeal for several months.

HE spirit of intrigue was not confined to New-Hampshire; for the politicians of Massachusetts, by bringing into view the long dormant claim of Mafon, had another game to play, befides proving the small extent of New-Hampshire. They perceived that the line, whether fettled according to their own demand or that of New-Hampshire, would cut off a confiderable part of feveral of their townships; and though they had, by their agent, obtained a promife, that private property should not be affected by the line of jurisdiction, yet they thought it best to have some other securitv.

For what reason the government of Massachusetts did not purchase the Province of New-Hampshire, from Robert Mason.

Mason, at the same time (1677) that they purchased the Province of Maine, from the heirs of Gorges, we are not now able precifely to determine. It is probable see Vol. I. that the purchase might then have been eafily made, and much controverfy prevented. When it was fold, by John and Robert Mason, to Samuel Allen (1691) the bargain was made in England; and the lands were, by fiction of law, supposed to be there; * by which means, the process respecting the fine and recovery was carried on in the Court of King's bench. During the lives of the two Masons, no notice was taken of the supposed flaw; and the sale to Allen was not disputed. The brothers returned to America. John the elder, died without issue. Robert married in New-England, and had a fon; who, after the death of his father, conceived hopes of invalidating Allen's purchase, and regaining his paternal inheritance; which it was supposed could not have been transferred by his father and uncle, for any longer term, than their own lives. It was also faid that the fiction, by which the lands were described, to be within the jurisdiction of the Courts of the lands is expressed in these words.

* In the process by which the entail was then docked, the fituation

of Westminster Hall, rendered the proceedings void; and therefore that the entail was still good. Filled with these ideas, he made strenuous exertions, to acquire money, to affift him in realizing his expectations; but died in the midst of his days, at the Havanna, whither he had made a voyage with this view. His eldest fon, John Tufton, was bred to a mechanical employment in Boston; and came of age, about the time in which the controverfy between the two Provinces was in . agitation. He inherited the enterprifing spirit of his ancestors, and the public controverfy called his attention to his interest. On this young man, the politicians cast their eyes; and having confulted council, on the validity of his claim, and the defect of the transfer; they encouraged him to hope, that this was the most favorable time to affert his pretenfions. Had they purchased his claim at once; they might doubtless have obtained it for a trifle, and have greatly embarraffed the views of their antagonists. Instead of such a stroke of liberal policy, they treated with him, concerning the release of all those lands, in Salisbury, Amesbury, Haverhill, Methuen and Dracut, which the line would cut cy, obtained a quit-claim of twenty three thousand fix hundred and seventy five acres. They also admitted his memorial to the Assembly; in which he represented to them, that his interest might probably be affected, by the final determination of the line, and praying that the Province would be at the expense of his voyage to England, to take proper measures for fecuring it. To this they confented, on condition that he should prove his descent from Captain John Mason, the original patentee. Depositions were accordingly taken in both Provinces, to which the public feals were affixed; and they put him under the direction of their agents, ordering his expenses to be paid, as long as they should judge his presence in England ferviceable to their views.

The agents stated his case to their Council, the King's folicitor; and asked his opinion, how they should proceed; but he advised them, not to bring him into view, lest the Lords should think it an artifice, intended to perplex the main cause. On this consideration, they dismissed him from any farther attendance; and paid his expenses, amounting to above ninety pounds sterling.*

[&]quot; Mr Hutchinson, in his History of Massachusetts, has passed over this whole transaction in fileace; tho it is well known that he was one of the managers of it. See Journal of Mass. Rep. June 2, 1738, p. 11.

Such a transaction, though conducted as privately as the nature of the thing would admit, did not escape the vigilance of Thomlinfon; who, on finding Mafon detached from the agents of Massachusetts, entered into an agreement with him, for the release of his whole interest, to the Affembly of New-Hampshire; in consideration of the payment of one thousand pounds, currency of New-England. This manœuvre ferved to strengthen the interest of New-Hampshire, and Thomlinson was much applauded for his dexterity. He had the strongest inducement, to continue his efforts in their favor; for no less than twelve hundred pounds sterling had been already expended, in profecuting the affair of the line; which fum had been advanced by himfelf and Rindge. There was no prospect of repayment, unless the Province could be put under a feparate Governor; and this point could not be obtained, till the removal of Belcher. The agents of Maffachusetts, after a long delay, prefented their appeal; and followed it with a petition, for the benefit of their former protefts, againft the New-Hampshire appeal; objecting also to its regularity, as it contained matters of personal complaint, against the Governor; which had been no part of the rec- 1738. ords of the Commissioners. Such were the complaints against the Governor, and the importunity of his adversaries to prosecute them, that it was necessary to hear and dispatch them, before the appeal respecting the lines could be brought forward.

It must be remembered, that Mr. Belcher had enemies, in his government of Massachusetts as well as New-Hampshire, who united their efforts to obtain his removal from both; but, as they supposed him more vulnerable in his capacity of Governor of New-Hampshire, so they joined in strengthning the complaints, from that quarter, as a preparatory step, to effect his complete removal. Whilft he was engaged, in preparing for his defence, against the charges, in the petition of appeal; other attacks were meditating, which were conducted with fuch filence that it was impossible for him to guard against their effects. One of these was a letter, purporting to have been written at Exeter, subscribed by five persons, said to be inhabitants of that town, and directed to Sir Charles Wager, first Lord of the Admiralty. In this letter it was faid, that finding his Lordship had ordered the ' Judge Advocate of the Court of Admi-' ralty to inquire into the riot, which had been committed there, (1734) and the ' affault of the furveyor and his officers; and fearing to be brought into trouble on that account, they would confess the whole truth. That they had been in-' dulged, by former furveyors, in cutting 'all forts of pine trees, till the appoint-' ment of Col. Dunbar to that office; who ' had restrained and prosecuted them; but that Governor Belcher had privately given them encouragement, to go on; by affuring them that they had the best ' right to the trees; that the laws were ' iniquitous, and ought not to be regard-'ed; that although he must make a shew ' of affifting that Irish dog of a surveyor; ' yet he would fo manage it with the 'Council and Justices, who were under ' his influence, that they should not suffer; and further to encourage them, 'he had made several of them justices of ' the the peace, and officers of militia. That he ' had also told them not to fear any inquiry into their conduct; for that he ' would write to the Board of Admiralty, ' in their favor : and boafted, that he had ' fuch an influence over their Lordships, that they would believe every thing which he should say. That as they had ' now confessed the truth, they hoped to be forgiven, and not profecuted in the 'Admiralty Court; and begged that this ' information might be kept fecret till the 'Governor's removal, which they hoped would foon be effected. That whatever ' might have been faid to the contrary, they could affure him that the Province of New-Hampshire contained the largeft number of pine trees, and of the best ' quality, in all his Majesty's American 'dominions; and, for further informa-' tion, they referred his Lordship to seve-' ral persons then in London, particular-'ly to Mr. Wentworth and Mr. Waldo; the latter of whom, was agent to Mr. 'Gulfton, for procuring masts for the ' royal navy.'

Onthe receipt of this letter, Sir Charles, with the candor of a gentleman, fent a copy of it to Mr. Belcher; who immediately ordered an inquiry; and it was proved to be an entire forgery; four of the persons whose names were subscribed utterly disclaimed it, and the fifth was not to be found; no such person being known in the town of Exeter. The evidence of this forgery was transmitted to England, with all possible expedition; but not till it had made an impression, to the disadvantage of the Governor.

Another artifice used against him, was a memorial of Gulston, the navy agent, and others; complaining of the defenceless state of the Province; that the fort lay in ruins, and that the militia were without discipline; notwithstanding the probability of a war. This memorial was fo artfully drawn, as to throw the blame of the neglect on the Governor, without mentioning his name; which was intended, to prevent his obtaining a copy, and being allowed time to answer. Another complaint was made in the form of a letter, respecting the grant of the tract called Kingfwood; in which he was represented, as partial to his friends, in giving them an exclusive right, to the whole of that territory, which they deemed, the unappropriated lands of the Province. Several parts of his administration were also complained of; and in particular the infrequency of his vifits to New-Hampshire. This letter was figned by fix members of the Council, and a majority of the Representatives.

Belcher's

Gulston's memorial was presented to the Lords of Council; and by them referred to the Board of Trade, accompanied by the letter; and though Mr. Belcher's brother and fon applied for copies, and time to answer, the request was evaded; and a report was framed, in favor of putting New-Hampshire under a separate Governor. When this report came before the Privy Council, Lord Wilmington, the Prefident, ordered it back again; that the Governor might have that justice which his agents had asked. By this means, he had opportunity to answer in his defence; that without money, the fort could not be repaired; that it was not in his power to tax the people; that he had frequently applied to the Astemblies for money, to repair the fort; to which they had constantly answered, that the people were too poor to be taxed; and had folicited him to break through his instructions, and allow them to issue paper money, without any fund for its redemption; that the militia had always been trained according to law; and that he had conftantly vifited New-Hampshire, and held an Assembly, twice in the year, unless prevented by sickness; for which he appealed to the journals. To corroborate these pleas, the Governor's friends procured five petitions, in his favor, and praying for his continuance, signed by about five hundred people. The petitions, however, did not express the sense of the majority; who had been persuaded into a belief, that they should receive much benefit by a separate Governor; and accordingly, a counter petition being circulated, was signed by about seven hundred of the inhabitants.

Nov. 21. Printed brief. inhabitants.

Things being thus prepared, the complaints were brought to a hearing, before the Lords of Council; who reported to the King, 'that Governor Belcher had 'acted with great partiality, by proroguing the Affembly of New-Hampshire, 'from the fixth of July, 1737, to the 'fourth of August following; in disobedience to his Majesty's order in Council; which had been transmitted to him by the Lords of Trade, and which was 'proved to have been delivered to him, 'in due time; and, also by farther proroguing the said Affembly, from the section of September, 1737, to the thirteenth of October; whereby the Prov-' ince were deprived of the time, intended by his Majesty's said order, to be allow-'ed them, to prepare a proper and regu'lar appeal; thereby endeavoring to frustrate the intention of his Majesty's commission.' This report was approv- Dec, 27. ed by the King; and from this time, it may be concluded, that Mr. Belcher's removal from the Government of New-Hampshire was feriously contemplated. The grant of Kingswood was also annulled; and he was prohibited from making any other grants of land, till the lines should be determined.

This cenfure being passed on the Governor, and the complaints being at an end; the way was prepared for a hearing of the appeals, from both Provinces, respecting the lines. Which being had, the determination of this long controversy was made on a plan entirely new. The fpecial part of the decree of the Commissioners was fet afide, and no regard was had to their doubt, whether the new charter granted all the lands comprehended in the old. It was faid, that when the first grant was made, the country was not explored. The course of the river, though unknown, was supposed to be from west to east;

therefore it was deemed equitable, that as far as the river flowed in that course, the parallel line at three miles distance should extend. But as on the one hand, if by pursuing the course of the river, up into the country, it had been found to have a fouthern bend, it would have been inequitable to have contracted the Massachusetts grant; fo, on the other hand, when it appeared to have a northern bend, it was equally inequitable to enlarge it. Therefore it was determined: 'that the ' northern boundary of the Province of 'Massachusetts be, a similar curve line, ' pursuing the course of Merrimack river, at three miles distance, on the north side thereof, beginning at the Atlantic Ocean, ' and ending at a point due north of Pa-' tucket falls; and a straight line drawn ' from thence due west, till it meets with ' his Majesty's other governments.' The other parts of the decree of the Commiffioners, respecting the northern line, and the payment of expenses, were affirmed.

This determination exceeded the utmost expectation of New-Hampshire; as it gave them them a tract of country, four-teen miles in breadth, and above fifty in length, more than they had ever claimed. It cut off from Massachusetts, twenty eight new townships, between Merrimack and Connecticut rivers; besides large tracts of vacant land, which lay intermixed; and districts from fix of their old towns, on the north side of the Merrimack; and if, as was then supposed, the due west line were to extend, to twenty miles east of Hudson's river, the reputed boundary of New-York; a vast tract of fertile country, on the western side of Connecticut river. was annexed to New-Hampshire; by which an ample scope was given, first for landed speculation, and afterward for cultivation, and wealth.

When this determination was known, Belcher's the politicians of Maffachusetts were chagrined and enraged. They talked loudly of injustice; and some of the more zealous proposed trying the merits of the cause, upon the words of the charter, before the Judges in Westminster Hall; who, it was expected, would upon their oath and honor reverse the judgment, and tell the King that he had mistaken the meaning of the royal charter. This would indeed have been a bold stroke. But a more moderate and pufillanimous scheme was adopted; which was to fend over a new agent, to petition the King, that he would re-annex to their government, the twenty Thomlinfon's obfervations on Maffachufetts petition. eight new townships, which had been cut off, and the districts of the fix old towns. It was also thought prudent, that the whole Province should not openly appear, in the affair; but that petitions should be drawn, by the inhabitants of these towns, and that the agent should be chosen by them. Accordingly town meetings were held; petitions were prepared and subscribed; and Thomas Hutchinson was appointed their agent, and sent over to England; where he formed those connexions, which afterward served to raise him, to the chair of government in his native Province.

Thomline fou's MS About the same time, Governor Belcher procured a petition, from his six friends, of the Council of New-Hampshire, to the King; praying that the whole Province might be annexed to the government of Massachusetts. This matter had been long in contemplation, with these gentlemen; but was now produced at the most unfortunate time, which could have been chosen. Their petition was at once rejected. But that from the towns was kept in suspense a long time; till Thomlinfon was prepared, to answer all the pleas, which Hutchinson could advance, and proved too hard an antagonist for him.

It was finally difinissed,* because it was thought, 'that it never could be for his 'Majesty's service, to annex any part of his 'Province of New-Hampshire, as an increase of territory, to Massachusetts; but 'rather, that it would be for the benefit of 'his subjects there, to be under a distinct 'government.'

Though Belcher's removal was feriously feared, by his best friends; yet he had so much interest with some of the Lords in high office, that they could not be prevailed with to give him up. The war, which had commenced between Britain and Spain, afforded him an opportunity, to signalize his zeal for the King's service; and he determined to prove himself, a faithful servant to the Crown, in every instance; in hope that a course of time and sidelity might efface the impressions, which had been made, to his disadvantage,

It being refolved by the British Court, to undertake an expedition to the Island of Cuba; Governor Belcher, agreeably to the orders which he had received from the Duke of Newcastle, issued a proclamation, for the encouragement of men who would enlist in the service; 'that they should be 'supplied with arms and clothing; be in ' the King's pay; have a share of the booty 'which should be taken; and be fent home, 'at the expiration of their time of service; 'and that his Majesty would order a number of blank commissions, to be filled up by the Governor, and given to the officers, 'who should command the troops, to be ' raised in the Provinces.' He afterwards pressed this matter, closely, in his speech to the Assembly; and urged them, to make provision, for one hundred men, and a transport, to convey them to Virginia; where all the Colony troops were to rendezvous; and thence to proceed, under the command of Col. Gooch, to the place of their destination. The Assembly voted, as much as they judged fufficient for this purpose; and the Governor appointed a

Captain, and gave him beating orders; but the commissions and arms not being fent, according to the royal promife, no men could be inlifted in New-Hampshire. The Governor received commissions and arms for four companies to be raifed in Massachusetts; where he could easily have inlifted ten, had he been furnished according to the engagement. To this failure, and not to any want of exertion, on his part, in either of his governments, may be ascribed the paucity of troops raised in them; and yet his enemies failed not of blaming him on this account. The Representatives of New-Hampshire took this occasion to frame a vote, disapproving his administration; and upon this vote, their agent founded another battery, to attack his character.

In conformity to the royal determination of the boundaries, orders were given to Belcher, to apply to both his governments, to join in appointing Surveyors, to run out, and mark the lines; and that if either should refuse, the other should proceed ex parte. The Assembly of Massachusetts delayed giving an answer in season. which was conftrued a denial. The Affembly of New-Hampshire appointed three Surveyors, to execute the fervice, who were commissioned by the Governor. They were directed to allow ten degrees, for the westerly variation of the needle; and the work was performed in the months of February and March. George Mitchel furveyed and marked the fimilar curve line, from the ocean, three miles north of Merrimack river, to a station north of Patucket falls, in the township of Dracut. Richard Hazen began at that station and marked the west line, across Connecticut river, to the supposed boundary line of New-York.

MS returns in the files. New-York. Walter Bryent began the line, from the head of Salmon-falls river, and marked it about thirty miles; but was prevented from proceeding farther, partly by the breaking up of the rivers, which rendered travelling impracticable; and partly by meeting a company of Indians who were hunting, and took his men who were hunting, and took his men who were found on one of the trees, which they had marked, "the figure of a man's hand grafping a fword;" which they interpreted, as a fignal of defiance, from the Indians.

Bryent's Journal.

The return of these lines to the Board of Trade was one of the last acts of Mr. Belcher's administration. His enemies in both governments were indefatigable in their endeavors to remove him; and by their incessant applications to the ministry; by taking every advantage of his mistakes; by falsehood and misrepresentation; and finally, by the diabolical arts of forgery and perjury, they accomplished their views. He was succeeded in the government of Masachusetts, by William Shirley; and in New-Hampshire, by Benning Wentworth.

> At this distance of time, when all these parties are extinct, and every reader may be supposed impartial; it may seem rather strange, that Governor Belcher should meet with fuch treatment, from the British Court, in the reign of fo mild and just a Prince, as George the fecond. That Mr. Belcher was imprudent and unguarded, in some instances, cannot be denied. He was indeed zealous to ferve his friends, and hearken to their advice; but, by this means, he laid himself open, to the attacks of his enemies; to whom he paid no court, but openly treated them. with contempt. His language to them was fevere and reproachful, and he never spared to tell the world, what he thought of them.

This provoked them; but they had the art to conceal their refentment, and carry on their defigns, in filence, till they were ripe for execution. He had by far too mean an opinion of their abilities, and the interest which they had at Court; and when he knew that they had the ear of the Lords of Trade, he affected to think them, 'not-very mighty Lords, nor able 'to administer life and death.' He had a consciousness, of the general integrity of his own intentions; and appears to have been influenced, by motives of honor and justice; but he was not aware of the force of his own prejudices. It may admit of doubt, whether, confidering the 'extreme delicacy of his fituation, it were within the compass of human policy, to have conducted fo as to give offence to neither of his Provinces, in the management of fuch a controverfy; but it is certain, that his antagonists could not fairly fix but one real stigma, on his character; and that when impartially examined, can amount to no more than an imprudent step, at a critical time, grounded on an undue refentment of an affront; for to suppose that his intention was to frustrate the commission, is inconsistent with the whole tenor of his public declarations, and private correspondence. When his enemies met him on fair and open ground, he was always prepared to answer; but it was impossible to guard against their secret attacks. If the cause which they meant to ferve was a good one, why did they employ the basest means to effect it?

The cruelty and hardfhip of his case may appear from the following considerations. He had been one of the principal merchants of New-England; but, on his appointment, to the Chair of Government, quitted every other kind of business; that he might attend with punctuality and dignity to the duties of his station. By the royal instructions, he was restrained from giving his affent, to any grant of money, to himself; unless it should be a permanent falary. What he received from New-Hampshire was fixed, and paid out of the excise; but the Assembly of Massachusetts could not be persuaded, to settle any fary upon him. They made him a gran of three thousand pounds, {worth about seven or eight hundred sterling) generally once in a year, at their fession in May. He was then obliged to folicit leave from the King, to accept the grant, and fign the bill; and fometimes could not obtain this leave till the end of the year; once not till five days before the diffolution of the Assembly. In the mean time he was obliged to fubfift on his own estate; and had he died within the year, the grant would have been wholly loft, to his family. He was earnest to obtain a general permission to sign these grants; but in that case the clerks of offices, in England, through whose hands the permission must have passed, would have lost their fees. He was now in the fixtieth year of his age; he had a family of children and grand children, whose fole dependence was on him; and he thought M 2 With

with reason, that if his course of faithful fervice, and the unworthy arts of his enemies had been duly considered; the cenfure of his superiors would have been less fevere, than 'to deprive him of his bread 'and honor.'

Whilft he entertained the worst opinion possible of the characters of his enemies, he had a strong confidence, in the justice of the government, before which he was accused. In one of his letters to his son, he fays, 'I must expect no favor while Bladen is at the Board of Trade; but were the devil there, I should expect jus-' tice, under the British Constitution, cor-'roborated by the Hanover fuccession.' The event proved, that his confidence was not ill founded. For, on being superseded. he repaired to Court; where, though his presence was unwelcome to some, yet he had opportunity to bring the most convincing evidence of his integrity, and of the base defigns of his enemies. He was so far restored to the royal favor, that he obtained a promise, of the first vacant government in America, which would be worthy of his acceptance. This proved to be the Province of New-Jersey; where he spent the remaining years of his life; and where his memory has been treated with deferved respect. CHAP.

The beginning of BENNING WENTWORTH'S administration. War opened in Nova-Scotia. Expedition to Cape-Breton; its plan, conduct and success, with a description of the island, and of the city of Louisbourg.

ENNING WENTWORTH, Efg. on of the deceased Lieutenant Govenor, was a merchant of good reputation in Portfmouth, and well beloved by the people. He had represented his native town in the Assembly for several years, where he distinguished himself in the opposition to Belcher. He afterward obtained a feat in Council; where, fenfible of the popularity of his family, and feeling the pride of elevation, he continued the opposition, and joined in the measures which were purfued for obtaining a diftinct Governor, without any apprehension that himself would be the person; till a feries of incidents, at first view unfortunate, prepared the way for his advancement to the chair.

In the course of his mercantile dealings, he had entered into a contract with an agent of the Court of Spain, and supplied him with a large quantity of the best oak timber; to procure which, he borrowed money in London. When he delivered the timber at Cadiz, the agent with whom he had contracted, was out of place, and the new officer declined payment. In returning to America the ship foundered and he was faved with the crew in a boat. These misfortunes deranged his affairs and reduced him to a state of bankruptcy. Afterward he went again to Spain, hoping by the interest of Sir Benjamin Keene, the British Minister, to obtain his due, but his fuit was ineffectual. About that time Thomlinfon, defpairing of Dunbar's advancement to the government of New-Hampshire, turned his thoughts toward Wentworth; and having procured him a letter of license from his creditors in London, invited him thither. Wentworth represented his case to the British Court, complained of the injustice of Spain, and petitioned for redrefs. Many British merchants, who had fuffered by the infolence of the Spaniards, were, at the fame time, clamorous for reparation. The ministry were studious to avoid a war. A negociation was begun, and the Court of Spain promifed restitution; but failed in the performance. War was then determined on, and all negociation ended. Difappointed in his plea for justice, Wentworth made his fuit for favor; and by the aid of Thomlinfon, who understood the ways of access to the great, he obtained a promise from the Duke of Newcastle, that when New-Hampshire should be put under a distinct Governor, he should have the commission. The expense of the solicita- of Thomtion and fees, amounting to three hundred Atkinion. pounds sterling, was advanced by his friends in England, and repaid by his friends in New-Hampshire.

He was received in Portsmouth, after a long absence, with great marks of popular respect. Among the compliments which were paid to him on that occasion, one was, that he had been instrumental of ' rescuing New-Hampshire from contempt ' and dependence.' In his first speech to the Assembly he reflected on the conduct of his predecessor, not by name, but by implication; for not having taken early measures to raise men for the expedition against the Spanish West-Indies; and intimated his apprehension, that the good intention of the Province in raising money for that purpose, would be frustrated, 1742. fince the men who were willing to enter into the fervice had enlifted in the other Provinces. He also complimented them, on their good faith in regard to the feveral emissions of paper money; all of which were to be called in within the present year. He did not forget to recommend a fixed falary for himfelf, not fubject to depreciation; nor the payment of expenses which had arisen on account of the boundary lines; he informed them of the King's indulgence, in giving him leave to confent to a farther emission of bills of credit, to enable them to discharge their obligations to the Crown; provided that no injury should be done to the trade of the mother country. He also recommended to their attention the faithful fervices of their agents, one of whom, Rindge, was dead, and the payment of the debt due to his heirs.

The Affembly, in their answer, acknow-ledged the wisdom and justice of the King in determining the long controversy between them and Massachusetts; but as to payment of the expense, they reminded him that one half ought to be paid by Massachusetts, and defired him to use his influence for that purpose. With respect to the failure of raising men for the expedition, they fet him right by ascribing it to the true cause; there being no commissions fent to the Province for that service. Concerning the salary, they said, that as soon as they could know what number of inhabitants would be added to them by the settlement of the lines, and how the money could be raised, they should make as ample provision for his honorable support as their circumstances would admit. They acknowledged the sidelity and industry of their agents, and professed a good will to reward them; but could not then promise adequate compensation.

The Assembly voted a salary of two hundred and fifty pounds, proclamation money, to the Governor, funded as usual on the excise; and having obtained the royal license for emitting twenty-five thousand pounds on loan for ten years,. they granted the Governor two hundred and fifty pounds more, to be paid annually out of the interest of the loan. When this fund failed, they made annual grants for his ' further and more ample support,' and generally added fomething for houserent. They presented their agent Thomlinfon one hundred pounds sterling, for his faithful fervices; but what they did for the heirs of Rindge does not appear.

After

1743. After Mr. Wentworth was quietly feated in the chair of government, an opportunity prefented to advance his interest still farther. For the sum of two thousand pounds sterling, Dunbar was prevailed on to resign the surveyorship of the woods, and Thomlinson negociated an appointment in favor of Wentworth, with a salary of eight hundred pounds sterling, out of which he was to maintain four Deputies. But to obtain this office, he was obliged to 'rest his claim on the 'Crown of Spain for fifty-fix thousand 'dollars'

These appointments of Mr. Wentworth gave the oppofers of the former administration great cause of triumph; but the fpirit of opposition had only changed fides. It was hoped and expected by fome, that Mr. Belcher, by going to England, would not only remove the ill impressions, which the malice of his enemies had made; but return to his former station. who had no predilection for Belcher, looked with envy on the good fortune of Wentworth, and aimed to undermine him; at the fame time courting the friends of the former administration to join in their measures. These things were managed with fecrecy, and a few hints only are left as evidence of the existence of defigns, which were never brought to ma-

It was one of the royal instructions to Governors, that in any cases of difficulty or fudden emergency, they should communicate with each other. Mr. Wentworth had a high opinion of the abilities of the new Governor of Maffachufetts. and there being a strict friendship between them, confulted him on all occasions. Shirley was gratified by this deference, and knew how to make his advantage of it. Thus, though New-Hampshire was under a Governor distinct from that of Massachusetts, a point which had long been contended for; yet the difference was not fo great in reality as in appearance. This was a circumstance not much known at that time. The advice which Shirley gave him was, in general, falutary and judicious.

The war which had been kindled between Britain and Spain, extended its flame over a great part of Europe; and when France became involved in it, the American Colonies were more nearly interested, because of the proximity of the French, and of the Indians, who were in their interest. War is so natural to say-ages, that they need but little to excite them to it. An Indian war was a necessary appendage of a war with France. The scene of both was opened in Nova-Scotia.

That. Province had been alternately claimed and possessed by the English and French for more than a century. Ever fince the peace of Utrecht it had been subject to the Crown of Britain, and the French inhabitants who were under a kind of patriarchal government of their priefts, and devoted to the French interest, were kept in awe, partly by the fear of having their dikes destroyed, which they had erected to prevent the fea from overflowing their fields; and partly by a British garrifon at Annapolis where a Governor and Council refided. The Indian tribes maintained their native independence, though they were attached to the French by religious, as well as interested obligations. Canfeau, an island on the northeastern part of Nova-Scotia, was in possession of the English. It was reforted to by the fishermen of New-England. It was defended by a block-house and garrisoned by a detachment of troops from Annapolis. The island of Cape-Breton was poffessed by the French, and lay between the English of Canscau and those of Newfoundland.

Duquefnel, the Governor, fent May 13. Duvivier with a few fmall armed veffels. and about nine hundred men, who feized and took poffession of the island, burned the houses, and made prisoners of the garrison and inhabitants. This was done, before the news of war had arrived in New-England. It was followed by an attempt upon Placentia, in Newfoundland, which miscarried. An attack was also made upon Annapolis, the garrifon of which was reinforced by feveral companies of militia and rangers from Massachusetts, and the enemy were obliged to retire. The Indians of Nova-Scotia affifted the French in this attack; which, with fome other infolencies committed by them, occasioned a declaration of war, by the government of Massachusetts, against them, with a premium for fcalps and prisoners.

Thefe proceedings of the French were rash and precipitate. They were not prepared for extensive operations; nor had they any orders from their Court to undertake them. What they had done, ferved to irritate and alarm the neighbouring English Colonies, and shew them their danger in the most conspicuous manner. Their sea coast, navigation and fishery lay exposed to continual infults. Their frontier fettlements on the western side were but eighty miles diftant from the French fort on Lake Champlain. The Indians who lay between them, had not yet taken up the hatchet; but it was expected that encouragement would be given them by the Governor of Canada, to infult the frontiers. Several new fettlements were wholly broken up; and many of the women and children of other frontier places retired to the old towns for fecurity.

Prince and Dooglass. In the autumn, Duquesnel the French Governor of Cape-Breton, died, and was succeeded in the command by Duchambon, who had not so good a military character. Duvivier went to France to solicit a force to carry on the war in Nova-Scotia in the ensuing spring. The storeships, expected from France at Cape-Breton, came on the coast so late in the fall; and the winter there set in so early and sierce, as to keep them out of port, and drive them off to the West-Indies. The captive garrison of Canseau, with other prisoners, who had been taken at sea, and carried into Louisburg, were fent to Bofton. From them, as well as from other informants, Governor Shirley obtained fuch intelligence of the state of that island and fortress, as induced him to form the project of attacking it. But before we open this romantic and hazardous fcene. it is necessary to give some account of the . place which was to be the theatre of operations.

The Island of Cape-Breton, fo denominated from one of its capes, lies between the forty-fifth and forty-seventh degrees of north latitude; at the distance of fifteen leagues from Cape Ray, the fouthwestern extremity of Newfoundland. It is feparated from the main land of Nova-Scotia by a narrow strait, fix leagues in' length, the navigation of which is fafe for a ship of forty guns. The greatest length of the island, from north-east to fouth-west is about fifty leagues and its greatest breadth thirty-three. It is about eighty-eight leagues in circuit as feamen estimate distances. Its general form is MS of Sie triangular, but it is indented by many deep Peppeaell. bays.

The foil of this island is by no means inviting. It is either rocky and mountainous, or elfe cold and boggy; and much less capable of improvement than Nova-Scotia. Its only valuable productions are of the fossil kind, pit-coal and plaster. Its atmosphere in the spring and fummer is an almost continual fog, which prevents the rays of the fun from perfecting vegetation. Its winter is fevere and of long continuance; and as the island forms an eddy to the current which fets through the gulf of St. Lawrence, its harbours are filled with large quantities of floating ice, with which its shores are invironed till late in the fpring.

Trade by OrisLittle, p. 18 39.

Much has been faid by French and English writers on the great importance and advantage of this island, and some political and temporary purposes were doubtless to be answered by such publications; but in fact the only real importance of Cape-Breton was derived from its central situation, and the convenience of its ports. On the north and west sides it is steep and inaccessible; but the southeastern side is full of sine bays and harbours, capable of receiving and securing ships of any burden; and, being situated between Canada, France and the West-Indies.

Indies, it was extremely favorable to the French commerce. It was not fo good a station for the fishery as several parts of Nova-Scotia and Newfoundland. The greater part of the French fishery was profecuted elfewhere; and they could buy fish at Canseau, cheaper than they could cure it at Cape-Breton.

Hutchin-

Whilft the French held possession of the coasts of Nova-Scotia and Newfoundland, this island was neglected; but after they had ceded these places to the Crown of England, and the Crown of England had ceded this island to them by the trea- Charlevois ty of Utrecht (1713) they began to fee its Douglafe, value. Instead of giving so much attention to the fur trade of Canada, as they had before done, they contemplated building a fortified town on this island, as a fecurity to their navigation and fishery. For this purpose they chose a fine harbour on the fouth-east side of the island, formerly called English harbour; where they erected their fortifications, and called the place Louisbourg.

The harbour of Louisbourg lies in latitude 45° 55'; its entrance is about four hundred yards wide. The anchorage is uniformly fafe, and ships may run ashore on a foft muddy bottom. The depth of 1744

water at the entrance is from nine to twelve fathoms. The harbour lies open to the fouth-east. Upon a neck of land on the fouth fide of the harbour was built the town, two miles and a quarter in circumference; fortified in every accessible part with a rampart of stone, from thirty to thirty-fix feet high, and a ditch eighty feet wide. A space of about two hundred yards was left without a rampart, on the fide next to the fea; it was enclosed by a fimple dike and a line of pickets. The fea was fo shallow in this place that it made only a narrow channel, inacceffible from its numerous reefs to any shipping whatever. The fide fire from the bastions fecured this fpot from an attack. There were fix bastions and three batteries, containing embrasures for one hundred and forty-eight cannon, of which fixty-five only were mounted, and fixteen mortars. On an island at the entrance of the harbour was planted a battery of thirty cannon, carrying twenty-eight pounds shot; and at the bottom of the harbour, directly opposite to the entrance, was the grand or royal battery of twenty-eight cannon, forty-two pounders, and two eighteen pounders. On a high cliff, opposite to and within this point, at the north-east part of the harbour, was a careening wharf fecure from all winds, and a magazine of naval stores.

The town was regularly laid out in fquares. The streets were broad; the houses mostly of wood, but some of stone. On the west side, near the rampart, was a spacious citadel, and a large parade; on one side of which were the Governor's apartments. Under the rampart were casemates to receive the women and children during a siege. The entrance of the town on the land side was at the west gate, over a draw bridge, near to which was a circular battery, mounting sixteen guns of twenty-four pounds shot.

These works had been twenty-five years in building; and though not finished, had cost the Crown not less than thirty millions of livres. The place was so strong as to be called 'the Dunkirk of America.' It was, in peace, a safe retreat for the ships of France bound homeward from the East and West-Indies; and in war, a source of diffress to the northern English Colonies; its situation being extremely favorable for privateers to ruin their fishery and interrupt their coasting and foreign trade; for which reasons, the reduction of it was an

Nov. 10. Shirley's letters to Wentworth, MS.

In the autumn, Shirley wrote to the British ministry, representing the danger of an attack on Nova-Scotia, from the French, in the enfuing fpring; and praying for fome naval affiftance. These letters he fent by Capt. Ryal, an officer of the garrison, which had been taken at Canfeau, who, 'from his particular know-'ledge of Louisbourg, and of the great 'confequence of the acquisition of Cape-Breton, and the preservation of Nova-Scotia, he hoped would be of confiderable fervice to the northern Colonies, with the Lords of the admiralty.' Thus carly did Shirley conceive and communicate to Wentworth his great defign; and the most prudent step which he took in this whole affair was to folicit help from England. His petition, supported by that worthy officer, was fo favorably received by the ministry, that as early as the beginning of January, orders were dispatched to Commodore Warren, then in the West-Indies, to proceed to the northward in the fpring, and employ fuch a force as might be fufficient to protect the northern Colonies in their trade and fishery, and distress the enemy; and for this purpose to consult with Governor Shirley. Orders of the fame date were written to Shirley, inclosed to Warren, directing him to affift the King's ships with transports, men and provisions. These orders, though extremely favorable to the defign, were totally unknown in New-England, till the middle of April following, before which time the expedition was completely formed.

It has been faid, that a plan of this famous enterprise, was first suggested by William Vaughan, a son of Lieutenant GovHutchiaernor Vaughan of New-Hampshire. Seve- fon. ral other persons have claimed the like merit. How far each one's information or advice. contributed toward forming the defign, cannot now be determined. Vaughan was largely concerned in the fishery on the eastern coast of Massachusetts. He was a man of good understanding, but of a daring, enterprifing and tenacious mind, and one who thought of no obstacles to the accomplishment of his views. An instance of his temerity is still remembered. He had equipped, at Portsmouth, a number of boats to carry on his fishery at Montinicus. On the day appointed for failing, in the month of March, though the wind was fo boifterous that experienced mariners deemed it impossible for such vessels to carry fail, he went on board one, and ordered the others to follow. One was loft at the mouth of the river, the rest arrived with much difficulty, but in a short time, at the place of their destination. Vaughan had not been at Louisburg; but had learned from fishermen and others, fomething of the strength and fituation of the place; and nothing being in his view impracticable, which he had a mind to accomplish, he conceived a defign to take the city by furprife; and even proposed going over the walls in the winter on the drifts of fnow. This idea of a furprifal forcibly struck the mind of Shirley, and prevailed with him to haften his preparations, before he could have any answer or orders from England.

In the beginning of January he requested of the members of the General Court, that they would lay themselves under anoath of secrety, to receive a proposal from him, of very great importance. This was the first request of the kind which had ever been made to a legislative body in the Colonies. They readily took the oath, and he communicated to them the plan which he had formed of attacking Louisbourg. The secret was kept for some days;

till an honest member, who performed 1745. the family devotion at his lodgings, inadvertently discovered it by praying for a bleffing on the attempt. At the first deliberation, the proposal was rejected; but by the address of the Governor and the invincible perseverance of Vaughan, a petition from the merchants concerned in the fishery, was brought into Court, which revived the affair; and it was finally carried in the affirmative by a majority of one voice, in the absence of several Jan. 26. members who were known to be against it. Circular letters were immediately difpatched to all the Colonies, as far as Pennsylvania, requesting their assistance, and an embargo on their ports.

With one of these letters, Vaughan rode Feb. 1. express to Portsmouth, where the Assembly was fitting. Governor Wentworth immediately laid the matter before them, and proposed a conference of the two Houses to be held on the next day. The House of Representatives having caught the enthufiasm of Vaughan, were impatient of delay, and defired that it might be held immediately. It was accordingly held, and the Committee reported in fa- Feb 2. vor of the expedition; estimated the exPrinted Journal of pense at four thousand pounds, and desired the Governor to iffue a proclamation for inlifting two hundred and fifty men, at twenty-five shillings per month, one month's pay to be advanced; they also recommended that military stores and transports should be provided, and that fuch preparations should be made as that the whole might be ready by the beginning of March. All this was instantly agreed to, on condition that proper methods could be found to pay the charges. This could be done in no other way than by a new emission of bills of credit, contrary to the letter of royal instructions. But, by the help of Shirley, a way was found to furmount this difficulty; for on the fame day, he wrote to Wentworth, informing him that he had, in answer to PrivateMS repeated folicitations, obtained a relaxation of his instructions relative to bills of credit, so far, as to have leave to consent to fuch emissions as the exigencies of war expedition. He also fent him a copy of the instruction, enjoining him to let no person know that he had sent it. Shirley himself had consented to an emission of fifty thousand pounds, to be drawn in by a tax in the years 1747 and 1748.

The House of Representatives passed a pounds toward defraying the charge of vote for an emission of ten thousand the expedition and farther carrying on the war, and the support of government; to be drawn in by taxes in ten annual payments, to begin in 1755. The Council objected and faid, that the grant should be wholly appropriated to the expedition and the payments should begin in 1751. The House adhered to their vote. The Govenor interposed, and an altercation took place, which continued feveral days. The Governor adjourned the Assembly till he could again ask Shirley's advice and receive his answer. At length the House altered their vote, and appointed the year 1751 for drawing in the money; augmenting the fum to thirteen thousand pounds, and at the Governor's express desire, they publicly affured him that they 'could not 'find out any other way to carry on the 'expedition, or in any degree fliorten the ' period for bringing in the money.' This was done to serve as an apology for the 1745. Governor's confenting to the bill, notwithstanding he had no liberty to recede from his instructions; and thus, the mat-Feb. 13. ter being compromised, he gave his con> fent. During this tedious interval, a report was spread, that the House had refused to raise men and money for the expedition; and the author of the report was fought out and called to account by the House for his misbehaviour. The next day they altered their terms of inliftment, conformably to those offered in Massachusetts, and by the 17th of February, two hun-Feb. 17. dred and fifty men were inlifted for the fervice.

... The person appointed to command the expedition was WILLIAM PEPPERRELL, Efg. of Kittery, Colonel of a regiment of militia; a merchant of unblemished reputation and engaging manners, extenfively known both in Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, and very popular. These qualities were absolutely necessary in the Commander of an army of volunteers, his own countrymen, who were to quit their domestic connexions and employments, and engage in a hazardous enterprise, which none of them, from the highest to the lowest, knew how to conduct. Profestional skill and experience were entirely out of the question; had these qualities been necessary, the expedition must have been laid afide; for there was no person in New-England, in these respects qualified for the command. Fidelity, resolution and popularity must supply the place of military talents; and Pepperrell was possessed of these. It was necessary that the men should know and love their General, or they would not inlift under him.*

After this appointment was made, and shirley's while it was uncertain whether the Assembly of New-Hampshire would agree with the Governor in raifing money for the expedition, Shirley proposed to Wentworth, the raifing of men in New-Hampshire, to be in the pay of Massachusetts, and in the letter which he wrote on that occasion paid him the following compliment. It would have been an infinite fat-' isfaction to me, and done great honor to or I othe

' the expedition, if your limbs would have ' permitted you to take the chief command.' Wentworth was charmed with the idea. and forgetting his gout, made an offer of his personal service; but not till after the Affembly had agreed to his terms and the money bill was passed. Shirley was then obliged to answer him thus. ' Upon com-' municating your offer to two or three ' gentlemen, in whose prudence and judg-' ment I most confide, I found them clear-' ly of opinion, that any alteration of the ' present command would be attended ' with great risque, both with respect to ' the Assembly and the foldiers being en-' tirely difgusted.'

Before Pepperrell accepted the command, he asked the opinion of the famous George Whitesield, who was then itinerating and preaching in New-England. Whitesield told him, that he did not think the scheme very promising; that the eyes of all would be on him; that if it should not succeed, the widows and orphans of the slain would reproach him; and if it should succeed, many would regard him with envy, and endeavor to eclipse his glory; that he ought therefore to go with 'a single eye,' and then he would find his strength proportioned to his necessity. Henry Sherburne, the Commissary of New-Hampshire, another of Whitefield's friends, pressed him to favor the expedition and give a motto for the flag; to which, after fome hefitation, he confented. The motto was, 'Nil despe-' randum Christo duce.' This gave the expedition the air of a crusade, and many of his followers inlifted. One of them, a Chaplain, carried on his shoulder a hatchet, with which he intended to destroy the images in the French churches.

There are certain latent sparks in human nature, which, by a collision of causes, are fometimes brought to light; and when once excited, their operations are not eafily controled. In undertaking any thing hazardous, there is a necessity for extraordinary vigor of mind, and a degree of confidence and fortitude, which shall raife us above the dread of danger, and dispose us to run a risque which the cold maxims of prudence would forbid. The people of New-England have at various times shewn such an enthusiastic ardor, which has been excited by the example of their ancestors and their own exposed situation. It was never more apparent, and perhaps never more necessary, than on oc-

1745. casion of this expedition. Nor ought it to be forgotten, that several circumstances, which did not depend on human forefight, greatly favored this undertaking.

The winters in this country are often fevere; but the winter in which this expedition was planned, and particularly the month of February, was very mild. The harbours and rivers were open, and the weather was in general fo pleafant, that every kind of labor could be done abroad. The fruitfulness of the preceding season had made provisions plenty. The Indians had not yet molested the frontiers; and though fome of them had heard that an expedition against Cape Breton was in hand, and carried the news of it to Canada, fuch an attempt was fo improbable, that the French gave no credit to the report, and those in Nova-Scotia did not receive the least intelligence of the preparations. Douglass observes, that 'some 'guardian angel preferved the troops ' from taking the fmall pox,' which appeared in Boston about the time of their embarkation, and was actually imported in one of the ships which was taken into the fervice. A concurrence of happy incidents brought together every British ship of war from the ports of the American continent and islands, till they made a formidable naval force, confifting of four ships of the line and fix frigates, under the command of an active, judicious and experienced officer. On the other hand. the garrison of Louisbourg was discontented and mutinous; they were in want of provisions and stores; they had no knowledge of the defign formed against them; their shores were so environed with ice, that no fupplies could arrive early from France, and those which came afterward, were intercepted and taken by our cruifers. In short, 'if any one circumstance ' had taken a wrong turn on our fide, and ' if any one circumstance had not taken a Douglass, wrong turn on the French fide, the ex' pedition must have miscarried.'

In the undertaking and profecuting of an enterprise so novel to the people of New-England, it is amufing to fee how many projects were invented; what a variety of advice was given from all quarters, and what romantic expectations were formed by advifers and adventurers. During the inliftment, one of the officers was heard to fay with great fobriety, that he intended to carry with him three shirts, one of which should be ruffled, because he expected that the General would give ral a plan for the incampment of the army, the opening of trenches and the placing of batteries before the city. To prevent danger to the troops from fubterraneous mines, he proposed, that two confidential persons, attended by a guard, fhould, during the night, approach the walls; that one should with a beetle strike the ground, while the other should lay his ear to it, and observe whether the found was hollow, and that a mark should be fet on all places fuspected. Another gentleman, of equal ingenuity, fent the General a model of a flying bridge, to be used in scaling the walls of Louisbourg. It was fo light, that twenty men could carry it on their shoulders to the wall, and raise it in one minute. The apparatus for raifing it confifted of four blocks, and two hundred fathoms of rope. It was to be floored with boards, wide enough for eight men tomarch abreast; and to prevent danger from the enemy's fire, it might be covered with raw hides. This bridge, it was faid, might be erected against any part of the wall, even where no breach had been

been made; and it was supposed that a thousand men might pass over it in four minutes.

But the most extraordinary project of all, was Shirley's scheme for taking the city by furprise, in the first night after the arrival of the troops, and before any British naval force could possibly come to their affistance. It is thus delineated in a confidential letter which he wrote to Wentworth, when he urged him to fend the New-Hampshire troops to Boston, to proceed thence with the fleet of transports. 'The fuccess of our scheme for surprising the harbour; to cover the retreat of the two beforementioned parties in case of ' a repulse; and, to attack the grand battery; (which attack must be made at the same time with the two other attacks) will take up two hours more at ' least. After these four bodies are formed, their march to their respective posts from whence they are to make their attacks and ferve as a cover to the retreat, ' will take up another two hours; which, ' fuppofing the transports to arrive in Chap-' peau-rouge bay at nine o'clock in the 'evening, and not before, as it will be e necessary for them to do, in order to ' land and march under cover of the night, will bring them to four in the morning, being day break, before they begin the attack, which will be full late for them. to begin. Your Excellency will from ' hence perceive how critical an affair, the ' time of the fleet's arrival in Chappeau-'rouge bay is, and how necessary it is to ' the fuccess of our principal scheme, that ' the fleet should arrive there, in a body, at ' that precise hour.'

It is easy to perceive that this plan was contrived by a perfon totally unfkilled in the arts of navigation and of war. The coast of Cape-Breton was dangerous and inhospitable,

inhospitable, the feason of the year rough and tempestuous, and the air a continual fog; yet, a fleet of an hundred vessels, after failing nearly two hundred leagues (for by this plan they were not to ftop) must make a certain point of land sat a precise hour,' and enter an unknown bay, in an evening. The troops were to land in the dark, amidst a violent surf, on a rocky shore; to march through a thicket and bog three miles, to the city, and fome of them a mile beyond it to the royal battery. Men who had never been in action, were to perform fervices, which the most experienced veteran would think of with dread; to pull down pickets with grapling irons, and fcale the walls of a regular fortification, with ladders, which were afterward found to be too short by ten feet: all in the space of twelve hours from their first making the land, and nine hours from their debarkation. This part of the plan was prudently concealed from the troops.

The forces which New-Hampshire furnished for this expedition, were three hundred and fifty men, including the crew of an armed sloop which convoyed the transports and served as a cruifer. They were formed into a regiment, consisting of eight companies, and were under the command of Col. Samuel Moore. The floop was commanded by Capt. John Fernald; her crew confifted of thirty men. The regiment, floop and transports, were, by Governor Wentworth's written instructions to the General, put under his command. Besides these, a body of one hundred and fifty men was inlifted in New-Hampshire and aggregated to the regiment in the pay of Massachusetts. Thus New-Hampshire employed five hundred men; about one eighth part of the whole land force.* In these men, there was fuch an ardor for action, and fuch a dread of delay, that it was impracticable to put them so far out of their course, as to join the fleet at Boston. Shirley therefore altered the plan, and appointed a rendezyous at Canseau; where the forces of the General and his other troops from

March 31. New-Hampshire arrived, two days before Bofton.

^{*} In the introductory part of Dr. Ramfay's elegant history of the American Revolution (page 34) it is faid, that this enterprise was undertaken by the sour authority of the Legislature of Massachusetts." This is not fufficiently accurate. It originated in Massachusetts; but the Colonies of New-Hampshire, Rhode-Island and Connecticut, by their legislative authority, furnished troops and stores. New York fent a supply of artillery, and Pennsylvania of provisions; but the troops from Rhode-Island, and the provisions from Pennsylvania, did not arrive till after the furrender of the city.

The instructions which Pepperell received from Shirley, were conformed to the plan which he had communicated to Wentworth, but much more particular and circumstantial. He was ordered to proceed to Canfeau, there to build a blockhouse and battery, and leave two companies in garrison, and to deposit the stores which might not immediately be wanted by the army. Thence he was to fend a the byte army. detachment to the village of St. Peters, on the island of Cape-Breton and destroy it; to prevent any intelligence which might be carried to Louisbourg; for which purpose also, the armed vessels were to cruise before the harbour. The whole fleet was to fail from Canfeau, fo as to arrive in Chappeau-rouge bay about nine o'clock in the evening. The troops were to land in four divisions, and proceed to the affault before morning. If the plan for the furprifal should fail, he had particular directions where and how to land, march, encamp, attack and defend; to hold councils and keep records; and to fend intelligence to Boston by certain vessels retained for the purpose, which vessels were to stop at Castle William, and there receive the Governor's orders. Several other veffels were appointed to cruife between Can-03 feau feau and the camp, to convey orders, tranfport stores, and catch fish for the army. To close these instructions, after the most minute detail of duty, the General was finally 'left to act upon unforeseen emergencies according to his difcretion; which, in the opinion of military gentlemen, is accounted the most rational part of the whole. Such was the plan, for the reduction of a regularly constructed fortrefs, drawn by a lawyer, to be executed by a merchant, at the head of a body of husbandmen and mechanics; animated indeed by ardent patriotifm, but destitute of professional skill and experience. After they had embarked, the hearts of many began to fail. Some repented that they had voted for the expedition, or promoted it; and the most thoughtful were in the greatest perplexity.

The troops were detained at Canfeau, three weeks, waiting for the ice which invironed the island of Cape-Breton, to be disfolved. They were all this time within view of St. Peters, but were not discovered. Their provisions became short; but they were supplied by prizes taken by the cruifers. Among others, the New-Hampshire sloop took a ship from Martinico, and retook one of the transports,

which she had taken the day before. At length, to their great joy, Commodore Warrren, in the Superbe, of fixty guns, with three other ships of forty guns each, arrived at Canfeau, and having held a confultation with the General, proceeded to cruife before Louisbourg. The General having fent the New-Hampshire sloop, to cover a detachment which destroyed the village of St. Peters, and scattered the inhabitants, failed with the whole fleet; April 20. but instead of making Chappeau-rouge point in the evening, the wind falling thort, they made it at the dawn of the next morning; and their appearance in the bay, gave the first notice to the French, of a defign formed against them.

The intended furprifal being thus happily frustrated, the next thing after landing the troops was to invest the city. Vaughan, the adventurer from New-Hampshire, had the rank and pay of a Lieutenant Colonel, but refused to have a regular command. He was appointed one of the Council of War, and was ready for any service which the General might think fuited to his genius. He conducted the first column through the woods, within fight of the city, and faluted it with tity of wine and brandy. The smoke of this fire being driven by the wind into the grand battery, fo terrified the French, that they abandoned it and retired to the city, after having spiked the guns and cut the halliards of the flag-staff. The next morning as Vaughan was returning, with thirteen men only, he crept up the hill which overlooked the battery, and observed, that the chimnies of the barrack were without smoke, and the staff without a With a bottle of brandy, which he had in his pocket, (though he never drank fpirituous liquors) he hired one of his party, a Cape Cod Indian, to crawl in at an embrafure and open the gate. He then wrote to the General, these words, ' May ing for a reinforcement, and a flag.' Before either could arrive, one of the men climbed up the staff, with a red coat in his teeth, which he fastened by a nail to the top. This piece of triumphant vanity alarmed the city, and immediately an hundred men were dispatched in boats to retake the battery. But Vaughan, with his fmall party, on the naked beach, and in the face of a fmart fire from the city and the boats, kept them from landing, till the reinforcement arrived. In every duty of fatigue or fanguine adventure, he was always ready; and the New-Hampshire troops, animated by the same enthusiastic ardor, partook of all the labors and dangers of the fiege. They were employed for fourteen nights fuccessively, in drawing cannon from the landing place to the camp, through a morafs; and their Lieutenant Colonel Messervè, being a ship carpenter, constructed fledges, on which the cannon were drawn, when it was found that their wheels were buried in the mire. The men, with straps over their shoulders, and finking to their knees in mud, performed labor beyond the power of oxen; which labor could be done only in the night or in a foggy day; the place being within plain view and random shot of the enemy's walls. They were much disapappointed and chagrined, when they found that these meritorious services were not Wentworth's more distinctly acknowledged in the accounts which were sent to England, and afterwards published.

May 26.

In the unfortunate attempt, on the island battery by four hundred volunteers from different regiments, the New-Hampshire troops were very active. When it was determined to erect a battery on the lighthouse cliff; two companies of them (Mafon's and Fernald's) were employed in that laborious fervice, under cover of their armed floop; and when a propofal was made for a general affault by fea and land, Colonel Moore, who had been an experienced fea commander, offered to go on board the Vigilant, with his whole regiment, and lead the attack, if in case of fuccess he might be confirmed in the command of the ship; but when this was denied, most of the men who were fit for duty, readily went on board the Princess Mary, to act as marines on that occasion.

Douglas I,

It has been faid, that 'this fiege was 'carried on in a tumultuary, random manser, refembling a Cambridge commencement.' The remark is in a great measure true. Though the bufiness of the Council of War was conducted with all the formality of a legislative affembly; though orders were iffued by the General, and returns made by the officers at the feveral posts; yet the want of discipline was too visible in the camp. Those who were on the fpot, have frequently in my hearing, laughed at the recital of their own irregularities, and expressed their admiration when they reflected on the almost miraculous prefervation of the army from destruction. They indeed presented a formidable front to the enemy; but the rear was a feene of confusion and frolic. While fome were on duty at the trenches, others were racing, wreftling, pitching quoits, firing at marks or at birds, or running after thot from the enemy's guns, for which they received a bounty, and the shot were fent back to the city. The ground was fo uneven and the people fo scattered, that the French could form no estimate of their numbers; nor could they learn it from the prisoners, taken at the island battery, who on their examination, as if by previous agreement, represented the number to be vaftly greater than it was. The garrifon of Louisbourg had been fo mutinous before the fiege, that the officers could not trust the men to make a fortie, left they should defert; had they been united and acted with vigor, the camp might have been furprifed and many of the people destroyed.

Much

Much has been ascribed, and much is justly due to the activity and vigilance of Commodore Warren, and the ships under his command; much is also due to the vigor and perseverance of the land forces, and the success was doubtless owing, under God, to the joint efforts of both. Something of policy, as well as bravery, is generally necessary in such undertakings; and there was one piece of management, which, though not mentioned by any historian, yet greatly contributed to the surrender of the city.

The capture of the Vigilant, a French

fixty-four gun ship, commanded by the Marquis de la Maison forte, and richly laden with military stores for the relief of the garrison, was one of the most capital exploits performed by the navy. This thip had been anxiously expected by the French; and it was thought that the news of her capture, if properly communicated to them, might produce a good effect; but how to do it was the question. At length, the Commodore hit on this expedient, which he proposed to the General, who approved, and put it into execution. In a skirmish on the island, with a party of French and Indians, fome English prifoners had been taken by them, and used with with cruelty. This circumstance was made known to the Marquis, and he was requested to go on board of all the ships in the bay where French prisoners were confined, and observe the condition in which they were kept. He did fo, and was well fatisfied with their fare and accommodations. He was then defired to write to the Governor of the city, and inform him how well the French prisoners were treated, and to request the like favor for the English prisoners. The humane Marquis readily confented, and the letter was fent the next day by a flag, intrusted to the care of a Capt. Macdonald. He was carried before the Governor and his chief officers; and by pretending not to understand their language, he had the advantage of listening to their discourse; by which he found, that they had not before heard of the capture of the Vigilant, and that the news of it, under the hand of her late commander, threw them into a visible perturbation. This event, with the erection of a battery on the high cliff at the light house, under the direction of Lieutenant Colonel Gridley, by which the island battery was much annoyed, and the preparations which were evidently making for a general affault, determined Ducham-

Had this happened before the furrender, the troops who had then begun to be fickly, and had none but very thin tents, must have perished in great numbers. Reinforcements of men, stores and provisions arrived,* and it was determined in a Council of War to maintain the place and repair the breaches. A total demolition might have been more advantageous to the nation; but in that case, individuals would not have enjoyed the profit of drawing bills on the navy and ordnance ordnance establishments. The French flag was kept flying on the ramparts; and several rich prizes were decoyed into the harbour. The army supposed that they had a right to a share of these prizes; but means were found to suppress or evade their claim; nor did any of the Colony cruisers (except one) though they were retained in the service, under the direction of the Commodore, reap any benefit from the captures.

The news of this important victory filled America with joy, and Europe with aftonishment. The enterprising spirit of New-England gave a ferious alarm to those jealous fears, which had long predicted the independence of the Colonies. Great pains were taken in England to afcribe all the glory to the navy, and leffen the merit of the army. However, Pepperell received the title of a Baronet, as well as Warren. The latter was promoted to be an Admiral; the former had a commiffion as Colonel in the British establishment, and was empowered to raise a regiment in America, to be in the pay of the Crown. 7 HILST the expedition to Cape-Breton was in hand, the active mind of Governor Shirley contemplated nothing less than the conquest of all the French dominions in America; and he confulted with Governor Wentworth and Mr. Atkinfon on the practicability of fuch a defign. as they could spare, and form them into companies of one hundred; to be ready to unite, and act according to the orders which they should afterwards receive. The plan was, that a fquadron of ships of war, and a body of land forces, should be sent from England against Canada; that the troops raifed in New-England should join the British fleet and army at Louisbourg, and proceed up the river St. Lawrence ; that those of New-York and the other Provinces at the fouthward, should be collected at Albany, and march against Crown Point and Montreal. The management of this expedition was committed to Sir John St. Clair, in conjunction with Sir Peter Warren and Governor Shirley. St. Clair did not come to America. Warren and Shirley gave the orders, while Warren was here; and afterward Commodore Knowles, who fucceeded him, was joined with Shirley; but as Knowles was part of the time at Louisbourg, most of the concern devolved on Shirley alone.

Befide the danger of losing Nova-Scotia and Cape-Breton, there were other reafons for undertaking this expedition. The Indians, instigated by the Governor of Canada, were ravaging the frontiers, deftroying the fields and cattle, burning houses and mills, killing and carrying away the inhabitants. Though scouts and garrisons were maintained by the governments; yet to act altogether on the defensive, was thought to be not only an ineffectual, but a disgraceful mode of carrying on the war; especially after the success which had attended the arms of the Colonists in their attempt against Louisbourg. The continuance of such a mode of defence, would neither dispirit the enemy, nor secure the frontiers from their depredations.

The defign was pleafing, and the Colonies readily furnished their quotas of men. In New-Hampshire, the same difficulty occurred as on occasion of the Louisbourg expedition. The Governor had no authority to confent to the emission of bills of credit, but Shirley removed that obstacle, by fuggesting to him, that as the ministry did not disapprove what he had done before, fo there was no reason to fear it now; and that the importance of the fervice, and the necessity of the case, would justify his conduct. The demand at first, was for levy money and victualing. The arms and pay of the troops were to be furnished by the Crown; but it was afterward found necessary that the seve-

Transports and provisions were prepared, and the men waited, impatiently, all fummer for employment. Neither the General nor any orders arrived from England; the fleet, which was faid to be destined for the expedition, failed feven times from Spithead, and as often returned. Two regiments, only, were fent from Gibraltar, to Louisbourg, to relieve the New-England men, who had garrifoned it fince the conquest. It is much easier to write the history of an active campaign, than to trace the causes of inaction and disappointment; and it is in vain to supply the place of facts by conjecture.*

At the fame time, Clinton, Governor of New-York, folicited and obtained the friendly affiftance of the Six Nations of Indians, on the borders of his Province. It was thought, that if this attempt should be made, the alliance with these Indians would be strengthened and secured; and the frontiers would be relieved from the horrors of defolation and captivity, to which they were continually exposed. No fooner was this plan refolved on, and preparations made to carry it into execution, than accounts were received of danger which threatened Annapolis, from a body of French and Indians at Minas, and the probable revolt of the Acadians: It was thought that Nova-Scotia would be loft, if fome powerful fuccour were not fent thither. Orders were accordingly issued, for the troops of Massachusetts, Rhode-Island and New-Hampshire, to embark for that place, and 'drive the en-'emy out of Nova-Scotia.' But, within a few days more, the whole country was alarmed, and thrown into the utmost consternation, by reports of the arrival of a large fleet and army from France, at Nova-Scotia, under the command of the Duke D'Anville. It was supposed that their object was to recover Louisbourg; to take Annapolis; to break up the fettlements on the eastern coast of Massachufetts; and to diftress, if not attempt the conquest of the whole country of New-England. On this occasion, the troops destined for Canada found sufficient employment at home, and the militia was collected to join them; the old forts on the fea coast were repaired, and new ones were erected. A new battery, confisting of fixteen guns, of thirty-two and twentyfour pounds shot, was added to fort William and Mary, at the entrance of Pascataqua harbour; and another, of nine thirty-two pounders, was placed at the point of Little Harbour. These works were supposed to be sufficient to prevent a surprisal. Military guards were appointed; and in this state of fear and anxiety, the people were kept for fix weeks, when some prisoners, who oa. 25. had been released by the French, brought the most affecting accounts of the distress and confusion on board the fleet. It was expected, by the people in New-England, that an English fleet would have followed them to America. This expectation was grounded on fome letters from England, which Shirley had received and which he forwarded by express to Admiral Townsend, at Louisbourg. The letters were intercepted by a French cruifer, and carried into Chebucto, where the fleet lay. They were opened in a Council of War, and caused a division among the officers; which, added to the fickly condition of the men, and the damage which the fleet had fustained by storms, and their loss by shipwrecks, dejected their commander to that degree, that he put an end to his life by poison; and the second in command fell on his sword. These melancholy events, disconcerted their first plan. They then resolved to make an attempt on Annapolis; but when they had sailed from Chebucto, they were overtaken by a violent tempest, off Cape Sable; and those ships which escaped destruction, returned singly to France. Never was the hand of divine Providence more visible, than on this occasion. Never was a disappointment more severe, on the side of the enemy; nor a deliverance more complete, without human help, in favor of this

Nova-Scotia was not yet out of danger. The French and Indians, who, during the stay of the sleet at Chebucto, had appeared before Annapolis, but on their departure retired, were still in the peninfula; and it was thought necessary to disloge them. For this purpose Shirley sent a body of the Massachusetts forces, and pressed the Governors of Rhode-Island and New-Hampshire to send part of theirs. Those from Rhode-Island, and one transport from Boston, were wrecked on the passage. The armed vessels of New-Hampshire, with two hundred men, went to Annapolis; but the commander of one of them, instead of landing his men. failed across the bay of Funda, into St. John's river: where, meeting with a French fnow, and miftaking her for one of the Rhode-Island transports, he imprudently fent his boat with eight men on board, who were made prisoners, and the fnow escaped. The floop, instead of returning to Annapolis, came back to Portfmouth. These misfortunes and disappointments had very ferious ill confequences. The Maffachufetts forces, who were at Nova-Scotia, being inferior in number to the French, and deceived by false intelligence, were surprifed in the midst of a fnow storm, at Minas; and after an obstinate relistance, were obliged to capitulate. Their commander, Col. Arthur Boston Noble, and about fixty men, were killed, Post. and fifty were wounded. The enemy being provided with fnow fhoes, made forced marches; and ours being destitute of built a flight fort. They were plentifully fupplied with provisions, and had but little exercise or discipline. Courts martial were not instituted, nor offences punished. The officers and men were tired of the fervice; but were not permitted to enter on any other business, lest orders should arrive from England. Some were employed in fcouting; fome in hunting or fifhing, and fome deferted.

Shirley's MS letters.

Shirley was fo intent on attacking Crown Point that he even proposed to march thither in the winter, and had the address to draw the Assembly of Massachusetts into an approbation of this project. He enlarged his plan, by proposing that the New-Hampshire troops should at the fame time go, by the way of Connecticut river, to the Indian village of St. Francis, at the distance of two hundred miles, and destroy it; while the troops from Massachusetts, Connecticut and New-York, should go by the way of the Lakes to Crown Point. The Governor of New-York would have confented to this wild projection, on account of the Indian allies, who were impatient for war; but it was happily frustrated, by the prudence of the Connecticut Assembly; who deemed the winter an improper feafon for fo great an undertaking, undertaking, and deferred their affiftance till the enfuing fpring. At the fame time the fmall pox prevailed in the fettlements above Albany, through which the forces must have marched; and that diftemper was then an object of much greater dread, than the storms of winter, or the face of an enemy.

To finish what relates to the Canada forces, it can only be faid, that excepting fome who were employed on the frontiers, they were kept in a state of military indo- october. lence, till the autumn of the enfuing year; when by order from the Duke of Newcastle they were disbanded, and paid at the same rate as the King's troops. Governors drew bills on the British treafury; which were negociated among the merchants at feven and eight hundred per cent. and the Parliament granted money, MS letters, to reimburse the charges of the equipment and fubfiftence of these forces.

The state of the frontiers now demands our attention. By the extension of the boundaries of the Province, feveral fettlements which had been made by the people of Massachusetts, and under the authority of grants from their General Court, had fallen within New-Hampshire. In one of them stood Fort Dummer, on the west fide of Connecticut river, and within the lately extended line of New-Hampshire. This fort had been erected and maintained, at the expense of Massachusetts; but when it was found to be within New-Hampshire, the Governor was instructed by the Crown to recommend to the Affembly, the future maintenance of it. In the fame Affembly, which had fo zealoufly entered upon the expedition against Cape Breton, this matter was introduced; but a confiderable majority of the lower House declined making any grant for this purpose, and adduced the following reasons, viz. That the fort was fifty miles distant from any towns which had been fettled by the government or people of New-Hampshire; that the people had no right to the lands which, by the dividing line, had fallen within New-Hampshire; notwithstanding the plaufible arguments which had been used to induce them to bear the expense of the line; namely, that the land would be given to them or else would be fold to pay that expense; that the charge of maintaining that fort, at fo great a distance, and to which there was no communication by roads, would exceed what had been the whole expense of government before the line

Printed Journal, May 3. line was established; that the great load of debt contracted on that account, and the yearly support of government, with the unavoidable expenses of the war, were as much as the people could bear; that if they should take upon them to maintain this fort, there was another much better and more convenient fort at a place called Number-four, befides feveral other fettlements, which they should also be obliged to defend; and finally that there was no danger that these forts would want support, fince it was the interest of Masfachusetts, by whom they were erected, to maintain them as a cover to their frontier.

When thefe reasons were given, the Governor dissolved the Assembly and called another, to whom he recommended the same measure in the most pressing June 7terms; telling them, 'that it was of the ' last consequence to the present and future prosperity of the government; that their refusal would letten them in the es-' teem of the King and his ministers, and ' ftrip the children yet unborn of their ' natural right; and deprive their brethren ' who were then hazarding their lives before the walls of Louisbourg of their 'just expectations, which were to sit down on that valuable part of the Province.' But his eloquence had no effect. They thought thought it unjust to burden their Constituents with an expense which could yield them no profit, and afford them no protection.

When it was determined, that New-Hampshire would make no provision for fort Dummer, the Assembly of Massachusetts continued its usual support, and also provided for the other posts on Connecticut river and its branches, which were within the limits of New-Hampshire. They afterwards petitioned the King, to deduct that charge out of the reimbursement, which the Parliament had granted to New-Hampshire, for the Canada expedition; but in this they were deseated, by the vigilance and address of Thomlinson, the agent of New-Hampshire.

Most of the frontier towns of New-Hampshire, at that time, were distinguished by no other than by Indian or temporary names. It may be convenient to compare them with their present names. On Connecticut river, and its eastern

Besides the forts which were maintained at the public expense, there were private houses enclosed with ramparts, or palifades of timber; to which the people who remained on the frontiers retired; these private garrisoned houses were disstinguished by the names of the owners. The danger to which these distressed people were constantly exposed, did not permit them to cultivate their lands to any advantage. They were frequeutly alarmed when at labor in their fields, and obliged either to repel an attack, or make a Their crops were often injured, and fometimes destroyed, either by their cattle getting into the fields where the enemy had broken the fences, or because they were afraid to venture out, to collect and fecure the harvest. Sometimes they were afraid even to milk their cows; though they kept them in pastures as near as possible to the forts. When they went abroad, they were always armed; but frequently they were shut up for weeks together in a state of inactivity.

can be little else than a recital of the exploits, the fufferings, the escapes and deliverances of individuals, of fingle families or small parties. The first appearance of the enemy on the western frontier was at the Great Meadow, fixteen miles above fort Dummer. Two Indians took William Phips, as he was hoeing his corn. When they had carried him half a mile, one of them went down a steep hill to fetch fomething which had been left. In his absence, Phips, with his own hoe, knocked down the Indian who was with him; then feizing his gun, shot the other as he ascended the hill. Unfortunately, meeting with three others of the same party, they killed him. The Indian whom he knocked down died of his wound. The

As they were leading him away, by the fide of the river, they espied a canoe coming down, with two men, at whom they fired, and killed David Rugg; but Robert Baker got to the opposite shore and escaped. Proceeding farther, they met three other men, who, by skulking under the bank, got fafe to the fort. One of them was Caleb How, the prisoner's fon. When they came opposite to Number-four, they made their captive write his name on a piece of bark, and left it there. Having travelled feven days westward, they came to a lake, where they found five canoes, with corn, pork and tobacco. In these canoes they embarked; and having stuck the scalp of David Rugg on a pole, proceeded to the fort at Crown-Point: where How received humane treatment from the French. He was then carried down to Quebec, where he died

The danger thus increasing, a reinforcement was fent by the Massachusetts Affembly, to these distressed towns. Capt. Paine, with a troop, came to Numberfour; and about twenty of his men, going to view the place where Putnam was killed, fell into an ambush. The enemy rose and fired, and then endeavored to cut off their retreat. Capt. Phinehas Stevens, with a party, rushed out to their relief: A skirmish ensued: in which five men were killed on each fide, and one of ours was taken. The Indians left fome of their guns and blankets behind.

ral blankets, hatchets, spears, guns and other things, were left on the ground, which were fold for forty pounds old tenor. This was reckoned 'a great booty from fuch beggarly enemies.

At Bridgman's fort, near Fort Dummer, William Robins and James Baker were killed in a meadow. Daniel How and John Beeman were taken. How killed one of the Indians before he was taken.

When the people wanted bread they were obliged to go to the mills, with a July 3. guard, every place being full of danger. A party who went to Hinsdale's mill, with Colonel Willard at their head, in fearching round the mill, discovered an ambush. The enemy were put to flight with the lofs of their packs.

At Number-four, one Phillips was killed; and as fome of the people were bringing him into the fort, they were fired upon; but none were hurt. Having burned fome buildings, and killed fome cattle, the enemy went and ambushed the road near Winchester, where they killed Aug. 6. Iofeph Rawfon.

Whilst the upper settlements were thus fuffering, the lower towns did not escape. A party of Indians came down to Rochefter, within twenty miles of Portsmouth. Haven's MS. letters

Five men were at work in a field, having their arms at hand. The Indians concealed themselves; one of them fired, with a view to induce the men to discharge their pieces, which they did. The enemy then rushed upon them before they could load again. They retreated to a fmall deferted house and fastened the door. The Indians tore off the roof, and with their guns and tomahawks dispatched Joseph Heard, Joseph Richards, John Wentworth and Gershom Downs. They wounded and took John Richards; and then croffing over to another road, came upon fome men who were at work in a field, all of whom escaped; but they took Jonathan Door, a boy, as he was fitting on a fence. Richards was kindly used, his wounds were healed, and after eighteen months he was fent to Boston in a flag of truce. Door lived with the Indians and acquired their manners and habits; but, after the conquest of Canada, returned to his native place.

Soon after this, another man was killed at Rochefter. Two men were furprifed and taken at Contoocook; and a large party of Indians lay in Ambush at Penacook, with an intention to attack the people, while assembled for public worship;

but feeing them go armed to their devotions, they waited till the next morning, when they killed five and took two.

In these irritating skirmishes the summer was fpent; till a large body of French and Indians attacked Fort Maslachusetts, at Hoofuck. This fort was loft for want Norton's of ammunition to defend it. After this fuccess, the enemy remained quiet during the rest of the summer.

The prospect of an expedition to Canada had induced many of the foldiers who were posted on the frontiers to inlist into the regiments, because they preferred active fervice to the dull routine of a garrison. The defence of the western posts was not only hazardous; but ineffectual; and fome persons in the north-western part of Masfachusetts thought it inexpedient, to be at the charge of defending a territory, which was out of their jurisdiction. Their peti- November. tions prevailed with the Affembly, to withdraw their troops from the western parts of New-Hampshire. The inhabitants were then obliged to quit their estates. They deposited in the earth, such furniture and utenfils as could be faved by that means; they carried off on horseback such as were portable; and the remainder, with their buildings, was left as a prey to the enemy, who came and destroyed or carried away what they pleafed. Four families, who remained in Shattuck's fort (Hinfdale) defended it against a party of Indians, who attempted to burn it. Six men only were left in the fort at Number-four, who, in the following winter deferted it; and it was wholly destitute for two months. In this time fome gentlemen, who understood the true interest of the country, prevailed on the Assembly of Massachusetts, to refume the protection of those deserted places; and to employ a fufficiency of men, not only to garrison them, but to range the woods and watch the motions of the enemy.

In the latter end of March, Captain Phinehas Stevens, who commanded a ranging company of thirty men, came to Number-four; and finding the fortentire, determined to keep possession of it. He had not been there many days, when he was attacked by a very large party of French and Indians, commanded by M. Debeline. The dogs, by their barking, discovered that the enemy were near; which caused the gate to be kept shut, beyond the usual

ing that they were discovered, arose from 1747. their concealment and fired at the fort on all fides. The wind being high, they fet fire to the fences and log-houses, till the fort was furrounded by flames. Captain Stevens took the most prudent measures for his fecurity; keeping every vessel full of water and digging trenches under the walls in feveral places; fo that a man might creep through, and extinguish any fire, which might catch on the outfide of the walls. The fire of the fences did not reach the fort; nor did the flaming arrows which they incessantly shot against it take effect. Having continued this mode of attack for two days, accompanied with hideous shouts and yells; they prepared a wheel carriage, loaded with dry faggots, to be pushed before them, that they might fet fire to the fort. Before they proceeded to this operation, they demanded a ceffation of arms till the fun-rifing, which was granted. In the morning Debeline came up with fifty men, and a flag of truce which he stuck in the ground. He demanded a parley, which was agreed to. A French officer, with a foldier and an Indian, then advanced; and proposed that the garrison should bind up a quantity of provisions with their blankets, and having laid laid down their arms should be conducted prisoners to Montreal. Another proposal was, that the two commanders should meet, and that an answer should then be given. Stevens met the French commander, who, without waiting for an anfwer, began to enforce his proposal, bythreatning to storm the fort, and put every man to death, if they should refuse his terms, and kill one of his men. Stevens answered, that he could hearken to no terms till the last extremity; that he was intrusted with the defence of the fort, and was determined to maintain it, till he should be convinced that the Frenchman could perform what he had threatned. He added, that it was poor encouragement to furrender, if they were all to be put to the fword for killing one man, when it was probable they had already killed more. The Frenchman replied, 'Go and fee if ' your men dare to fight any longer, and ' give me a quick answer.' Stevens returned and asked his men, whether they would fight or furrender. They unanimoufly determined to fight. This was immediately made known to the enemy, who renewed their shouting and firing all that day and night. On the morning of the third day, they requested another cesfation fation for two hours. Two Indians came 1747with a flag, and proposed, that if Stevens would fell them provisions they would withdraw. He answered, that to fell them provisions for money was contrary to the law of nations; but that he would pay them five bushels of corn for every captive, for whom they would give a hostage, till the captive could be brought from Canada. After this answer, a few guns were fired, and the enemy were feen no more.

In this furious attack from a starving enemy, no lives were lost in the fort, and two men only were wounded. No men could have behaved with more intrepidity in the midst of such threatning danger. An express was immediately dispatched to Boston, and the news was there received with great joy. Commodore Sir Charles Knowles was fo highly pleafed with the conduct of Capt. Stevens, that he prefented him with a valuable and elegant fword, as a reward of his bravery. From this circumstance, the township, when it was incorporated, took the name of Charleftown.

and escaped unhurt, though fired upon and pursued by two others.

Other parties went farther down the country; and at Rochester, they ambushed a company who were at work in a field. The ambush was discovered by three lads, John and George Place, and Paul Jennens. The Indians fired upon them. John Place returned the fire and wounded an Indian. Jennens presented his gun but did not fire; this prevented the enemy from rushing upon them, till the men from the field came to their relief and

No purfuit could be made, because the garrison was not provided with fnow shoes, though many hundreds had been paid for by the Government.

The next fpring, Captain Stevens was again appointed to command at Numberfour, with a garrison of an hundred men; Capt. Humphrey Hobbs being fecond in command. - During this affecting scene of devastation and captivity; there were no instances of deliberate murder por torture exercifed on those who fell into the hands of the Indians; and even the old custom of making them run the gantlet was in most cases omitted. On the the contrary there is an universal testimony from the captives who furvived and returned, in favor of the humanity of their captors. When feeble, they affifted them in travelling; and in cases of distress from want of provision, they shared with them an equal proportion. A fingular instance of moderation deserves remembrance. An Indian had furprifed a man at Ashuelot; the man asked for quarter, and it was granted: Whilst the Indian was preparing to bind him, he feized the Indian's gun, and that him in one arm. The Indian, however, fecured him; but took no other revenge than, with a kick, to fay 'You dog, how could you treat me fo?' The gentleman from whom this information came, has frequently heard the story both from the captive and the captor. The latter related it as an instance of English persidy; the former of Indian lenity.

There was a striking difference between the manner in which this war was managed, on the part of the English and on the part of the French. The latter kept out fmall parties continually engaged in killing, fealping and taking prisoners; who were fold in Canada and redeemed by their friends, at a great expense. By this mode of conduct, the French made their enemies pay the whole charge of their predatory excursions, besides reaping a handsome profit to themselves. On the other hand, the English attended only to the defence of the frontiers; and that in fuch a manner, as to leave them for the most part insecure. No parties were fent to harrafs the fettlements of the French. If the whole country of Canada could not be fubdued, nothing less could be attempted. Men were continually kept in pay, and in expectation of fervice; but fpent their time either in garrisons, or camps, or in guarding provisions when fent to the feveral forts. Though large rewards were promifed for scalps and prisoners, scarcely any were obtained, unless by accident. A confusion of councils, and a multiplicity of directors, caufed frequent changes of measures, and delays in the execution of them. The forts were ill supplied with ammunition, provisions, clothing and snow-shoes. When an alarm happened, it was necessary, either to bake bread, or dress meat, or cast bullets, before a pursuit could be made. The French gave commissions to none but those who had distinguished themfelves by some exploit. Among us, persons frequently obtained preferment, for themselves or their friends, by making their court to Governors, and promoting favorite measures in town meetings, or General Assemblies.

A community recovering from a war, like an individual recovering from fickness, is fometimes in danger of a relapfe. This war was not decifive, and the caufes which kindled it were not removed. One of its effects was, that it produced a class of men, who, having been for a time released from laborious occupations, and devoted to the parade of military life, did not readily liften to the calls of industry. To such men peace was burdenfome, and the more fo, because they had not the advantage of half pay. The interval between this and the fucceeding war was not long. The peace took place in 1749, and in 1754 there was a call to resume the sword.

HILST the people were contend-ing with an enemy abroad, an attempt was making at home, to revive the old claim of Mason, which their fathers had withstood, and which for many years had lain dormant, till recalled to view by the politicians of Massachusetts, as already related. After Thomlinfon had engaged with Mason, for the purchase of his title, nothing more was heard of it, till the controverfy respecting the lines was finished, and Wentworth was established in the seat of government, and in the office of Surveyor of the Woods. The agreement which Thomlinfon had made, was in behalf of the Representatives of New-Hampshire; and the instrument was lodged in the hands of the Governor, who fent it to the House for their perusal and consideration. messages were sent time after time; but the affairs of the war, and Mason's abfence at fea, and in the expedition to Louisbourg, where he had a company, together with a difinclination in the House, which was of a different complexion from that in 1739, prevented any thing from being done.

In the mean time Mason suffered a fine and recovery, by which the entail was docked, in the Courts of New-Hampshire, and he became entitled to the privilege of felling his interest. He also presented a memorial to the Assembly, in which he told them that he would wait no longer; and unless they would come to some resolution, he should take their silence as a refusal. Intimations were given, that if they would not ratify the agreement, a fale would be made to other persons, who stood ready to purchase. At length the House came to a resolution, 'that they would comply with the agreement, and Jan. 29. pay the price; and that the waste lands ' should be granted by the General Assembly, to the inhabitants, as they should think ' proper.' fame day, by deed of fale, for the fum of fifteen hundred pounds currency, conveyed his whole interest to twelve persons, in fifteen shares. When the House sent a melfage to the Council to inform them of this refolution, the Council objected to that clause of the resolve, ' that the lands 'be granted by the General Assembly,' as contrary to the royal commission and instructions; but if the House would addrefs the King, for leave to dispose of the lands, they faid that they were content.

These transactions raised a great ferment among the people. Angry and menacing words were plentifully thrown out against the purchasers; but they had prudently taken care to file in the Recorder's office a deed of quit claim to all the towns which had been fettled and granted within the limits of their purchase.* In this quit claim, they inferted a clause in the following words, 'excepting and referving our respective rights, titles, inheritance and possessions, which we heretofore had, in 'common or feveralty, as inhabitants or proprietors of houses or lands, within any of the towns, precincts, districts or villages aforefaid.' This precaution had not at first its effect. A committee of both Houses was appointed to consider the matter, and they reported, that 'for quiet-'ing the minds of the people, and to pre-' vent future difficulty, it would be best ' for the Province to purchase the claim, for the use and benefit of the inhabitants; ' provided that the purchasers would sell 'it for the cost and charges.' This report was accepted, concurred and confented to, by every branch of the legislature. A committee was appointed to confult Council, and agree on proper instruments of conveyance. The fame day, this committee met with the purchasers, and conferred on the question, whether they would fell on the terms proposed? At the conference, the purchasers appeared to be divided, and agreed fo far only, as to withdraw their deed from the Recorder's office. The committee reported that they could make no terms with the purchasers; in conse- Aug. 28. R₃ quence

Much blame was cast on the purchasers, for clandestinely taking a bargain out of the hands of the Assembly. They said in their vindication, 'that they faw no prof-' pect of an effectual purchase by the As-' fembly, though those of them who were ' members, voted for it, and did what 'they could to encourage it; that they ' would have gladly given Mason as much ' money, for his private quit-claim to their ' feveral rights in the townships already ' granted and fettled; that Mason's claim ' had for many years hung over the Prov-'ince, and that on every turn they had been threatened with a proprietor; that 'Mason's deed to a committee of Massa-' chusetts, in behalf of that Province, for ' a tract of land adjoining the boundary 'line, had been entered on the records, ' and a title under it fet up, in opposition to grants made by the Governor and 'Council; that it was impossible to fay where this evil would stop, and therefore they thought it most prudent to prevent any farther effects of it, by taking up with his offer, especially as they knew that he might have made a more advantageous bargain, with a gentleman

Within that month, the alarm caused by the approach of D'Anville's fleet, put a stop to the negociation. After that danger was over, the affair was revived; but the grand difficulty subfisted. The purchasers would not fell, but on condition that the lands should be granted, by the Governor and Council. The Affembly thought that they could have no fecurity that the land would be granted to the people; because the Governor and Council might grant it to themselves, or to their dependents, or to strangers, and 1747. the people who had paid for it might be Aug. 20. excluded from the benefit which they had purchased. A proposal was afterward made, that the fale should be to feoffees in trust for the people; and a form of a deed for this purpose was drawn. To this proposal, the purchasers raised several objections; and as the Assembly had not voted any money to make the purchase, they declined figning the deed; and no R 4 farther farther efforts being made by the Assembly, the purchase rested in the hands of the proprietors. In 1749 they took a fecond deed, comprehending all the Mafonian grants, from Naumkeag to Pascata-qua; whereas the former deed was confined to the lately established boundaries of New-Hampshire. This latter deed was not recorded till 1753.

After they had taken their first deed, the Masonians began to grant townships, and continued granting them to petitioners, often without fees, and always without quit-rents. They quieted the proprietors of the towns, on the western side of the Merrimack, which had been granted by Massachusetts, before the establishment of the line; fo that they went on peaceably with their fettlements. The terms of their grants were, that the grantees should, within a limited time, erect mills and meeting-houses, clear out roads and settle ministers. In every township, they referved one right for the first settled minifter, another for a parsonage, and a third for a school. They also reserved fifteen rights for themselves, and two for their attorneys; all of which were to be free from taxes, till fold or occupied. By virtue of these grants, many townships were were fettled, and the interest of the people became fo united with that of the proprietors, that the prejudice against them gradually abated; and, at length, even fome who had been the most violent oppofers, acquiefced in the fafety and policy of their measures, though they could not concede to the validity of their claim.

The heirs of Allen, menaced them by advertisements, and warned the people against accepting their grants. They depended on the recognition of Allen's purchase, in the Charter of Massachusetts, as an argument in favor of its validity; and supposed, that because the ablest lawyers in the kingdom were confulted, and employed in framing that charter, they must have had evidence of the justice of his pretenfions, before fuch a refervation could have been introduced into it. So strong was the impression, which this argument had made, on the minds of fpec- MS lettere ulators in England, that large fums had linfon. been offered, to some of Allen's heirs, in that kingdom; and, Thomlinson himself, the first mover of the purchase from Mafon, in behalf of New-Hampshire, had his doubts; and would have perfuaded the affociates to join in buying Allen's title al-

1748. fo, even at the price of two thousand pounds sterling, to prevent a more expensive litigation, the issue of which would be uncertain. But they, being vested with the principal offices of government; being men of large property, which was also increased by this purchase; and having satisfied themselves, of the validity of their title, by the opinions of some principal lawyers, both here and in England, contented themselves with the purchase which they had made; and by maintaining their country within their limits. The words of the original grants to Mason, describe an extent of fixty miles, from the fea, on each fide of the Province, and a line to cross over from the end of one line of fixty miles, to the end of the other. The Masonian proprietors pleaded, that this cross line should be a curve, because, no other line would preserve the distance of fixty miles from the fea, in every part of their western boundary. No person had any right to contest this point with them, but the King. It was not for the interest of his Governor and Council to object; because feveral of them, and of their connections, were of the Masonian propriety; and no objection objection was made by any other persons, in behalf of the Crown. Surveyors were employed, at feveral times, to mark this. curve line; but on running, first from the fouthern, and then from the eastern boundary, to the river Pemigewaffet, they could not make the lines meet. Controversies were thus engendered, between the grantees of Crown lands and those of the Masonians, which subsisted for many years. In some cases, the disputes were compromised, and in others, left open for litigation; till, by the revolution, the government fell into other hands.

This was not the only controversy, which, till that period, remained undetermined. When the extension of the boundary lines gave birth to a demand, for the maintenance of fort Dummer, the Gover- Printed nor had the address, to call to that Assem- Journal, Jan. 1744bly, into which he introduced this demand, fix new members; who appeared as representatives for fix towns and diftricts, fome of which had been, by the fouthern line, cut off from Massachusetts. It was supposed that his design, in calling these members, was to facilitate the adoption of fort Dummer. Other towns, which ought to have had the fame privilege extended to them, were neglected. When the

the new members appeared in the House, the Secretary, by the Governor's order, administered to them the usual oaths; after which, they were asked, in the name of the House, by what authority they came thither? They answered, that they were chosen by virtue of a writ, in the King's name, delivered to their respective towns and districts, by the Sheriff. The House remonstrated to the Governor, that these places had no right, by law, nor by custom, to fend persons to represent them, and then debarred them from the privilege of voting, in the choice of a Speaker; two only diffenting, out of nineteen. Several sharp messages passed, between the Governor and the House, on that occasion; but the pressing exigencies of the war, and the proposed expedition to Cape-Breton, obliged him, for that time, to give way, and fuffer his new members to be excluded, till the King's pleafure could be known.

The House vindicated their proceedings, by appealing to their records; from which it appeared, that all the additions, which had been made to the House of Representatives, were, in consequence of their own votes, either issuing a precept themselves, or requesting the Governor to do it; from which they argued, that no town, or parish, ought to have any writ, for the choice of a Representative, but by a vote of the House, or by an act of the Affembly. On the other fide, it was alleged, that the right of fending Representatives was originally founded on the royal commission and instructions, and therefore, that the privilege might, by the same authority, be lawfully extended to the new towns, as the King, or his Governor, by advice of Council, might think proper. The precedents on both fides were undifputed; but neither party would admit the conclusion drawn by the other. Had this difficulty been foreseen, it might have been prevented when the triennial act was made in 1727. The defects of that law, began now to be severely felt; but could not be remedied.

The difpute having thus fubfided, was not revived during the war; but as foon as the peace was made, and the King had gone on a vifit to his German dominions, ii, 35. an additional instruction was feat from the Lords Justices, who presided in the King's absence, directing the Governor to diffolve the Affembly then fubfifting; and June 36. when another should be called, to issue the King's writ to the Sheriff, commanding him to make out precepts to the towns and districts, whose Representatives had been before excluded; and that when they should be chosen, the Governor should support their rights.

Had this inftruction extended to all the other towns in the Province, which had not been before represented, it might have been deemed equitable; but as it respected those only, which had been the subject of controversy, it appeared to be grounded on partial information, and intended to strengthen the prerogative of the Crown, without a due regard to the privileges of the people at large.

1749. Jan. 3.

The party in opposition to the Governor became more acrimonious than ever. Richard Waldron, the former Secretary, and the confidential friend of Belcher, appeared in the new Assembly and was chofen Speaker. The Governor negatived him: and ordered the House to admit the new members, and choose another Speaker. They denied his power of negativing their Speaker and of introducing new members. The style of his messages was peremptory and fevere; their answers and remonstrances were calm, but refolute, and in some instances satyrical. Neither party would yield; no bufiness was transacted:

once in a month, and was kept alive, by adjournments and prorogations, for three years. Had he diffolved them, before the time for which they were chosen had expired, he knew, that in all probability, the same persons would be re-elected.

The effect of this controversy was injurious to the Governor, as well as to the people. The public bills of credit had depreciated fince this administration began, in the ratio of thirty to fifty-fix; and the value of the Governor's falary had declined in the fame proportion. The excise could neither be farmed nor collected; and that part of the Governor's falary, which was funded upon it, failed. The Treasurer's accounts were unsettled. The foldiers, who had guarded the frontiers in the preceding war, were not paid; nor were their muster-rolls adjusted. The public records of deeds were shut up; for the Recorder's time having expired, and the appointment being by law vested in the Affembly, no choice could be made. No authenticated papers could be obtained, though the agent was constantly soliciting for those which related to the controversy about Fort Dummer, at that time before the King and Council.

When

When the fituation of the Province was known in England, an impression to its difadvantage was made on the minds of its best friends; and they even imagined that the Governor's conduct was not blameless.* The language at Court was totally changed. The people of New-Hampshire who had formerly been in favor, as loyal and obedient subjects, were now faid to be in rebellion. Their agent was frequently reproached and mortified on their account, and was under great apprehension, that they would fuffer, not only in their reputation, but in their interest. The agent of Massachusetts was continually soliciting for repayment of the charges of maintaining fort fort Dummer, and it was in contemplation, to take off a large district from the western part of New-Hampshire, and to annex it to Massachusetts, to satisfy them for that expense. Besides this, the paper money of the Colonies was under the confideration of Parliament; and the Province of Maslachusetts was rising into favor for having abolished that system of iniquity. The same justice was expected of New-Hampshire, fince they had the same means in their power by the reimbursement granted to them by Parliament for the Cape-Breton and Canada expeditions. This money, amounting to about thirty thousand pounds sterling, clear of all fees and commissions, had lain long in the treasury; and when it was paid to the a-gent, he would have placed it in the funds, where it might have yielded an in-terest of three per cent; but having no directions from the Assembly, he locked it up in the bank. This was a clear loss to them of nine hundred pounds per annum. There were some who reflected on the agent, as if he had made an advantage to himself of this money. Had he done it, his own capital was sufficient to have answered any of their demands; but it was also sufficient to put him above the necessity.

linfon, at the Governor's request, had folicited and procured the instruction, which had occasioned this unhappy stagnation of business. When this suggestion came to his knowledge, he exculpated himfelf from the charge, in a letter which he wrote to a leading member of the Assembly; and gave a full account of the matter as far as it had come to his knowledge. He faid, that the Governor himself had flated the facts in his letters to the miniftry; concerning his calling of the new members, in 1745, and their exclusion from the Assembly, with the reasons given for it; and had defired to know the King's pleasure, and to have directions how to act. That the ministry, without any exception or hefitation, had pronounced his conduct conformable to his duty. That nevertheless, the Board of Trade had folemnly confidered the matter, and confulted Council, and had fummoned him, as agent of the Province, to attend their deliberation. Their refult was, that as the Crown had an indifputable right to incorporate any town in England, and qualify it to fend members to Parliament, fo the the fame right and power had been legally given to all the Governors in America; by means of which, all the Assemblies in the King's governments had increased in number, as the Colonies had increased in fettlements. That any other usage in calling Representatives was wrong; although it might have been indulged, when the Province was under the fame Governor with Maffachusetts. This was all which passed before the additional instruction came out, which was fent through the hands of the Agent. As it was founded on a question concerning the rights and prerogatives of the Crown; he argued the abfurdity of fuppoling, either that it had been folicited, or that any attempt to have it withdrawn could be effectual. His advice was, that they should submit to it; because, that under it, they would enjoy the fame rights and privileges with their fellow fubjects in England, and in the other Colonies; affuring them, that the then reigning Prince had never discovered the least inclination to infringe the constitutional rights of any of his subjects.

This advice, however falutary, had not the intended effect. Instead of submitting, the party in opposition to the Governor, framed a complaint against him,

This disappointment vexed the opposition to such a degree, that they would have gladly diffolved the government, and put themselves under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, had it been in their power. But, finding all their efforts ineffectual, either to have the instruction withdrawn, or the Governor removed, they confoled themselves with this thought, that it was 'better to have two privileges taken from them, than voluntarily to ' give up one.'

The time for which this Assembly was elected having expired, a new one was called in the same manner. They came together with a spirit of moderation, and a disposition to transact the long neglected business. The members, from the new towns, towns, quietly took their feats. An unexceptionable Speaker was elected. A Recorder was appointed. A committee was chosen to settle the Treasurer's accounts, and a vote was passed for putting the reimbursement money into the public funds in England. The Governor's salary was augmented, and all things went on smoothly. The party which had been opposed to the Governor, declined, in number and in virulence: Some were removed by death; others were softened and relaxed. A liberal distribution of commissions, civil and military, was made, and an era of domestic reconciliation commenced.

The controverly respecting Fort Dummer, and the sear of losing a district in that neighbourhood, quickened the Governor to make grants of several townships in that quarter, on both sides of Connecticut river; chiefly to those persons who claimed the same lands, under the Massachusetts title. The war being over, the old inhabitants returned to their plantations, and were strengthened by additions to their number. It was in contemplation, to extend the settlements, farther up Connecticut river, to the rich meadows of Cohos. The plan was, to cut a road to that place; to lay out two townships, one Atkinfon's MS letters. on each fide of the river, and opposite to each other; to erect flockades, with lodgments for two hundred men, in each townfhip, enclosing a space of fifteen acres; in the center of which was to be a citadel, containing the public buildings and granaries, which were to be large enough to receive all the inhabitants, and their movable effects, in case of necessity. As an inducement to people to remove to this new plantation; they were to have Courts of Judicature, and other civil privileges among themselves, and were to be under strict military discipline. A large number of persons engaged in this enterprise; and they were the rather stimulated to undertake it, because it was feared, that the French, who had already begun to encroach on the territory claimed by the British Crown, would take possession of this valuable tract, if it should be left unoccupied.

MS letters of Col. Ifrael WilliIn pursuance of this plan, a party was fent up in the spring of 1752, to view the meadows of Cohos, and lay out the proposed townships. The Indians observed them, and suspected their intentions. The land was theirs, and they knew its value. A party of the Arosaguntacook, or St. Francis Tribe was deputed, to remonstrate against this proceeding. They came to 1752. the fort at Number-four, with a flag of truce; pretending that they had not heard of a treaty of peace, which had been made with the feveral Indian tribes. They complained to Captain Stevens, of the encroachment which was meditating on their land; and faid, that they could not allow the English to settle at Cohos, when they owned more land already than they could improve; and, that if this fettlement were purfued, they should think the English had a mind for war, and would resist them. This threatening being communicated to the Governor of Massachusetts. and by him to the Governor of New-Hampshire, threw such discouragement on the project that it was laid aside.

The Indians did not content themselves with remonstrating and threatning. Two Aprile of the same tribe named Sabatis and Christi, came to Canterbury; where they were MS depoentertained in a friendly manner for more than a month. At their departure, they forced away two negroes; one of whom escaped and returned; and the other was carried to Crown Point and fold to a French officer. A party of ten or twelve of the fame tribe, commanded by Captain Moses, met with four young men who were hunting on Baker's river. One of these was John Stark. When he found himself surprised and fallen into their hands, he called to his brother William Stark, who being in a canoe, gained the opposite shore, and escaped. They fired at the canoe and killed a young man who was in it. John received a fevere beating from the Indians for alarming his brother. They carried him and his companion, Eastman, up Connecticut river, through feveral carrying places, and down the Lake Memphrimagog to the head quarters of their tribe. There they dreffed him in their finest robes and adopted him as a fon. This early captivity, from which he was redeemed, qualified him to be an expert partifan, in the fucceeding war; from which station, he afterward rose to the rank of Major General in the armies of the United States.

June. MS depoThe next year Sabatis, with another Indian named Plaulawa, came to Canterbury; where, being reproached with the mifconduct respecting the negroes, he and his companion behaved in an infolent manner. By the treaties of peace, it had been stipulated, on the one part, that if any of the Indians should commit an act of hostility against the English, their young men should join with the English in reducing such Indians to submiffion; and on the other hand, that if an Englishman should injure any of them, no private revenge should be taken; but application should be made to the government for justice. In the autumn of the same year, a conference being held, with the eastern Indians, by the government of Massachusetts, a present was made to the Arofaguntacook tribe, Printed expressive of an intention to wipe ence, 1753away the blood. They accepted the present, and ratified the peace which had been made in 1749.

The two men who killed Sabatis and Plaufawa, were apprehended and brought to Portsmouth. A bill was found against MS letters them by the Grand Jury, and they were nor Wentconfined in irons. In the night, before the day appointed for their trial, an armed mob from the country, with axes and crows, forced the prison, and carried them fued, and a reward offered by the Governor for apprehending the rioters; but no discovery was made, and the action was even deemed meritorious. The next summer, another conference was held at Falmouth, at which Commissioners from New-Hampshire assisted. The Arosaguntacooks did not attend; but sent a message, purporting that the blood was not wiped away. The Commissioners from New-Hampshire made a handsome present, to all the Indians, who appeared at this conference; which ended as usual, in fair promises of peace and friendship.

C H A P. XXII.

The last French and Indian war, which terminated in the conquest of Canada. Controverly concerning the lands westward of Connecticut river.

Y the treaty of Aix la Chappelle, in D 1748, it was stipulated, that 'all ' things should be restored, on the foot- treaty. 'ing they were before the war,' The island of Cape-Breton was accordingly restored to France; but the limits of the French and English territories on the continent, were undetermined; and it was the policy of both nations to gain possesfion of important passes, to which each had fome pretentions, and to hold them, till the limits should be fettled by Commissioners mutually chosen. These commissioners met at Paris; but came to no decision. By the construction of charters and grants from the Crown of England, her colonies extended indefinitely westward. The French had fettlements in Canada and Louisiana, and they meditated to join these distant Colonies, by a chain of forts and posts, from the St. Lawrence to the Miffifippi; and to extend the limits of Canada, as far eastward, as to command navigation in the winter, when the great river St. Lawrence is impassable. These claims of territory, extending on the one part from east to west, and on the other from north to south, necessarily interfered. The Colonies of Nova-Scotia, New-York and Virginia, were principally affected by this interference; and the encroachments made on them by the French, were a subject of complaint, both here and in Europe.

1754. Shirley's Jetters and Speeches.

It was foreseen that this controversy could not be decided but by the fword; and the English determined to be early in their preparations. The Earl of Holderness, Secretary of State, wrote to the Governors of the American Colonies, recommending union for their mutual protection and defence. A meeting of Commissioners from the Colonies, at Albany, having been appointed, for the purpose of holding a conference with the Six Nations, on the subject of French encroachments, within their country; it was proposed, by Governor Shirley, to the feveral Governors, that the delegates should be instructed on the subject of union.

At the place appointed, the Congress was held; confifting of delegates from Maffachufetts.

They MS Jourtook their rank in geographical order, beginning at the north. One member from each Colony was appointed to draw a plan of union; Hutchinfon of Massachusetts: Atkinson of New-Hampshire, Hopkins of Rhode-Island, Pitkin of Connecticut. Smith of New-York, Franklin of Pennfylvania, and Tasker of Maryland. The fubstance of the plan was, that application be made, for an act of Parliament, to form a grand Council, confifting of delegates from the feveral legislative Assemblies, subject to the control of a President-General, to be appointed by the Crown, with a negative voice. That this Council should enact general laws; apportion the quotas of men and money, to be raifed by each Colony; determine the building of forts; regulate the operations of armies; and concert all measures for the common protection and fafety. The delegates of Connecticut alone, entered their diffent to the plan, because of the negative voice of the President-General. It is worthy of remark, that this plan, for the union of the Colonies, was agreed to, on the 1754. the fourth day of July; exactly twentytwo years before the declaration of American independence, and that the name of FRANKLIN appears in both.*

> With the plan of union, a representation was made to the King, of the danger in which the Colonies were involved. Copies of both were laid before the feveral Assemblies. They were fully sensible of their danger from the French; but they apprehended greater danger from the plan of union. Its fate was fingular. It was rejected in America, because it was supposed to put too much power into the hands of the King; and it was rejected in England, because it was supposed to give too much power to the Assemblies of the Colonies. The miniftry made another propofal; that the Governor, with one or two members of the Council, of each Colony, should affemble, and confult for the common defence, and draw on the British treasury for the sums expended; which should be raised by a

At this Congrefs, a prefent from the Crown was difficulted to the Indians. It is a sustom a mang the Six Nations, to give a NAMA to their benefactors on such occasions. The name which they gave have to their benefactors on such occasions. The name which they gave the Province of New-Hampshire wis So-saguax-cwans. I have inquired of the Rev. Mr. Kitkland, then ming of this name: He informed met his 5 signifier, A carm sidney of the comment of the comment of the such provided that the such provided the su general tax, laid by Parliament, on the Colonies. But this was not a time to push such an alarming innovation; and when it was found impracticable, the ministry determined to employ their own troops, to fight their battles in America, rather than to let the Colonists feel their own frength, and be directed by their own Counsels.

To draw fome aid however from the Colonies was necessary. Their militia might ferve as guards, or rangers, or laborers, or do garrison duty, or be employed in other inferior offices; but British troops, commanded by British officers, must have the bonor of reducing the French dominions in North America.

The favage nations in the French interest were always ready, on the first appearance of a rupture, to take up the hatchet. It was the policy of the French government, to encourage their depredations, on the frontiers of the English Colonies, to which they had a native antipathy. By this means, the French could make their enemies pay the whole expense of a war; for all the supplies, which they afforded to the Indians, were amply compensated, by the ransom of captives. In these later wars, therefore, we find the savages which commenced between the English and French, in the western part of Virginia, spread through the continent; than the Indians renewed their attacks on the frontiers of New-Hampshire. A party Aug. 15. of them made an affault, on a family at Baker's-town, on Pemigewasset river; where they killed a woman, and took feveral captives. Within three days they killed a man and woman at Steven's town Aug. 18. in the fame neighbourhood; upon which the fettlements were broken up, and the minutes. people retired to the lower towns for fafety, and the government was obliged to post foldiers in the deserted places. After a few days more, they broke into the house Aug. 29. of James Johnson, at Number-four, early in the morning, before any of the family were awake; and took him, with his wife and three children, her fifter Miriam Wil-

who from the circumstances of its birth was named Captive. The Indians halted one day, on the woman's account, and the next day refumed their march; carrying her on a litter, which they made for the purpose, and afterward put her on horseback. On their march, they were diffreffed for provision; and killed the horse for food; the infant was nourished, by sucking pieces of its flesh. When they arrived at Montreal, Johnson obtained a parole, of two months, to return and folicit the means of redemption. He applied to the Affembly of New-Hampshire, and after some delay obtained one hundred and Dec. 10. fifty pounds sterling. But the season was Assembly fo far advanced, and the winter proved fo fevere, that he did not reach Canada till the fpring. He was then charged with breaking his parole; a great part of his money was taken from him by violence; and, he was thut up with his family in prison; where they took the small pox, which they happily furvived. After eighteen months, the woman, with her fifter, and two daughters, were fent in a cartel ship to England; and thence returned to Boston. the fingular ill fortune, to be fuspected of defigns unfriendly to his country, and was again imprisoned; but no evidence being produced against him, he was liberated. His eldest daughter was retained in a Canadian nunnery.

The fort and fettlement at Numberfour, being in an exposed fituation, required affistance and support. It had been built by Massachusetts when it was supposed to be within its limits. It was projected by Colonel Stoddard, of Northampton, and was well situated, in connection with the other forts, on the western frontier, to command all the paths, by which the Indians travelled from Canada to New-England. It was now evidently in New-Hampfhire; and Shirley, by advice of his Council, applied to Wentworth, recommending the future maintenance of that poft, to the care of his Affembly; but they did not think themfelves interested in its preservation, and refused to make any provision for it. The inhabitants made several applications for the same purpose; but were uniformly disappointed. They then made pressing remonstrances to the Assembly of Massachustetts, who sent soldiers for the desence of that post, and of Fort Dummer, till 1757; when they supposed that

The next fpring, three expeditions were undertaken against the French forts. One against Fort Duquesne, on the Ohio, was conducted by General Braddock; who was defeated and flain. Another against Niagara, by Governor Shirley, which mifcarried; and a third against Crown Point, by General Johnson. For this last expedition, New-Hampshire raised five hundred men, and put them under the command of Col. Joseph Blanchard. The Governor ordered them to Connecticut river, to build a fort at Cohos, supposing it to be in their way to Crown Point. They first marched to Baker's-town, where they began to build batteaux, and confumed time and provisions to no purpose. By Shirley's advice they quitted that futile employment, and made a fatiguing march through the woods, by the way of Number-four, to Albany. Whilft Johnson lay encamped at Lake George, with his other forces, he posted the New-Hampshire regiment at Fort Edward. On the eighth of T 2 September, 1755. Sept. 8. September, he was attacked in his camp, by Baron Diefkau, commanding a body of French regular troops, Canadians and Savages. On the morning of that day, a fcouting party from Fort Edward difcovered waggons burning in the road; upon which Captain Nathaniel Folfom was ordered out, with eighty of the New-Hampthire regiment, and forty of New-York under Capt. McGennis. When they came to the place, they found the waggoners and the cattle dead; but no enemy was there. Hearing the report of guns, toward the lake, they hasted thither; and having approached within two miles, found the baggage of the French army, under the care of a guard, whom they attacked and dispersed. When the retreating army of Dieskau appeared, about four of the clock in the afternoon, Folfom posted his men among the trees, and kept up a well directed fire, till night; the enemy retired, with great lofs, and he made his way to the camp, carrying his own wounded, and feveral French prisoners, with many of the enemy's packs. This well-timed engagement, in which but fix men on our fide were loft, deprived the French army of their ammunition and baggage; the remains of which were brought into camp the next day. After this, the regiment of New-Hampshire joined the army. The men were employed in fcouting, Atkinfon's which fervice they performed in a manner fo acceptable, that no other duty was required of them. Parties of them frequently went within view of the French fort at Crown-Point; and at one time they brought off the scalp of a French foldier, whom they killed near the gate.

After the engagement on the 8th of September, when it was found necessary to reinforce the army; a fecond regiment, of three hundred men, was raifed in New-Hampshire, and put under the command of Col. Peter Gilman. These men were as alert, and indefatigable as their brethren, though they had not opportunity to give fuch convincing evidence of it. The expedition was no farther purfued; and late in autumn the forces were disbanded and returned home.

The exertions made for the reduction of Crown Point, not only failed of their object, but provoked the Indians, to execute their mischievous designs, against the frontiers of New-Hampshire; which were wholly uncovered, and exposed to their full force. communication by fhort carrying-places, with which they were perfectly acquainted. The Indians of that river, therefore, made frequent incursions, and returned unmolested with their prisoners and booty.

At New-Hopkinton, they took a man and a boy; but perceiving the approach of a fcouting party, they fled and left their captives. At Keene, they took Benjamin Twitchel, and at Walpole they kill-Daniel Twitchel, and a man named Flynt. At the fame place Colonel Bellows, at the Feffenden's head of twenty men, met with a party of fifty Indians; and having exchanged fome shot, and killed several of the enemy, he broke through them and got into the fort; not one man of his company being killed or wounded. After a few days, these Indians, being joined by others to the number of one hundred and seventy, assaulted the garrifon of John Kilburne, in which were himfelf, John Pike, two boys and feveral women; who bravely defended the house and obliged the enemy to retire, with confiderable lofs. Pike was mortally wounded. Some of these Indians joined Dieskau's army, and were in the battle at Lake George. At Number-four, they killed a large number of cattle, and cut off the flesh. At Hinsdale, they attacked a party, who were at work in the woods; killed John Hardiclay and John Alexander, and took Jonathan Colby; the others escaped to the fort. Within a few days afterward, they ambushed Caleb Howe, Hilkiah Grout, and Benjamin Gaffield, as they were returning from their labor in the July 27. field. Howe was killed: Gaffield was drowned in attemping to cross the river; and Grout made his escape. The Indians went directly to Bridgman's fort, where the families of these unfortunate men refided. They had heard the report of the guns, and were impatient to learn the cause. By the found of feet without, it being in the dusk of the evening, they concluded that their friends had returned. and too hastily opened the gate to receive them; when to their inexpressible surprise, they admitted the favages, and the three families, confifting of fourteen persons, were made captives.*

" One of thefe, the wife of Caleb Howe, was the FATA CAPTIVE, of whom fuch a brilliant account is given in the life of General Putnam, published by Col. Humphreys. She is still living at Hinfdale, and has obliged the author with a particular narrative of her fufferings and deliverance. This account, drawn up by the Rev. Mr. Gay, is too long to be here inferted, and too entertaining to be abridged; but will probably be published at some future time. As to that part of the flory, that the people of Hinfdale chofe her to go to Europe, as their ageot in a case of disputed lands; it was never known or thought of by them till the life of Putnam appeared in priot.

1756. Shirley's letters.

After the defeat and death of Braddock, the chief command of the operations against the enemy fell into the hands of Shirley; who called another Congress, at New-York, and planned another expedition against Crown Point; for which purpose, he called on the leveral governments to raile men and provide stores. A regiment was raifed in New-Hampshire, the command of which was given to Col. Nathaniel Messerve. They also appointed two Commissaries, Peter Gilman and Thomas Westbrooke Waldron, who refided at Albany, to take care of the stores, whilst the regiment, with the other troops, affifted in building forts and batteaux. In the midst of this campaign, Shirley was superfeded by the Earl of Loudon; but the fummer passed away in fruitless labor; whilft the French, by their fuperior alertness, belieged and took the English fort at Oswego; and the regiments of Shirley and Pepperell who garrifoned it, were fent prisoners to France. During this fummer, the Indians killed Lieutenant Mofes Willard, and wounded his fon at Number-four; and took Joliah Foster, with his wife and two children, from Winchefter. They also wounded Zebulon Stebbins, of Hinfdale, who, with Reuben

The foldiers of New-Hampshire were fo expert, in every fervice which required agility, and so habituated to fatigue and danger: that, by the express defire of Lord Loudon, three ranging companies were formed of them; who continued in fervice during the winter as well as the fummer. The command of these companies was given to Robert Rogers, John Stark, and William Stark. They were eminently ufeful in fcouring the woods, procuring intelligence, and skirmishing with detached parties of the enemy. These companies were kept during the war, in the pay of the Crown; and after the peace, the officers were allowed half pay on the British establishment.

Lord Loudon's MS letters.

The next year, another Crown Point expedition was projected by Lord Loudon. The Crown was at the expense of stores and provisions, and required of the Colonies, to raise, arm, clothe, and pay their quotas of men. Another regiment was raised in New-Hampshire, of which Meservè was commander; who went to Halifax with part of his regiment, a body of one hundred carpenters, and the three companies companies of Rangers, to ferve under Lord Loudon, whilft the other part of the regiment under Lieutenant Col. Goffe, was ordered by General Webb, who commanded at the westward, in the absence of the Earl of Loudon, to rendezvous at Number-four. Before their arrival, a large party of French and Indians attacked the mills in that place, and took Sampson Colefax, David Farnsworth and Thomas Adams. The inhabitants, hearing the

The enemy burned the mills; and in their retreat, took two other men, who were coming in from hunting, viz. Thomas Robins and Afa Spafford. Farnfworth and Robins returned; the others died in Canada,

Goffe with his men marched through Number-four and joined General Webb at Albany; who posted them at fort William Henry, near Lake George, under the command of Col. Munroe, of the thirty-fifth British regiment. The French General Montcalm, at the head of a large body of Canadians and Indians, with a train of artillery, invested this fort; and in fix days, the garrison, after having expended all their ammunition, capitulated; on condition, that they should not serve against the French for eighteen months. They were allowed the honors of war, and were to be escorted by the French troops to Fort Edward, with their private baggage. The Indians, who served in this expedition, on the promise of plunder, were enraged at the terms granted to the garrison; and, as they marched out unarmed, fell upon them, stripped them naked, and murdered all who made any resistance. The New-Hampshire regiment happening to be in the rear, felt the chief sury of the enemy. Out of two hundred, eighty were killed and taken.

This melancholy event threw the whole country into the deepest consternation. Webb, who remained at Fort Edward, expecting to be there attacked, sent expresses to all the Provinces for reinforcements. The French, however, did not pursue their advantage, but returned to Canada. A reinforcement of two hundred and fifty men was raised in New-Hampshire, under the command of Major Thomas Tash; which, by the orders of General Webb, was stationed at Number-four. This was the first time that the troops of New-Hampshire occupied that important post.

M3 letters of Governor Wentworth. 1757.

Hitherto the war had been, on our part, unfuccessful. The great expense, the frequent disappointments, the loss of men, of forts, and of stores, were very discouraging. The enemy's country was filled with prisoners, and scalps, private plunder, and public stores and provisions, which our people, as beafts of burden, had conveyed to them. These reflections were the difmal entertainment of the winter. The next spring called for fresh exertions; and happily for America, the British ministry had been changed, and the direction of the war, in answer to the united voice of the people of England, was put into the hands of that decifive statesman WILLIAM PITT.

In his circular letter to the American Governors, he affured them; that to repair the loffes and disappointments of the last inactive campaign, it was determined to send a formidable force, to operate by sea and land, against the French in America; and he called upon them to raise 'as large bodies of men, within their respective governments, as the number of inhabitants 'might allow;' leaving it to them, to form the regiments and to appoint officers at their discretion. He informed them that arms, ammunition, tents, provisions, and boats would be furnished by the Crown; and he required the Colonies to levy, clothe and pay their men : affuring them that recommendations would be made to Parliament ' to grant them a compensation.'

Governor's Proclamation, April 1.

Notwithstanding their former losses and disappointments, the Assembly of New-Hampshire, on receiving this requisition, cheerfully voted eight hundred men for the fervice of the year. The regiment commanded by Col. John Hart, marched to the westward, and served under General Abercrombie. A body of one hundred and eight carpenters, under the conduct of Col. Messerve, embarked for Louisbourg, to ferve at the fecond fiege of that fortress, under General Amherst. Unhappily the fmall pox broke out among them, which disabled them from service; all but fixteen were feized at once, and thefe attended the fick. Mefferve* and his eldeft fon died of this fatal diforder. This year was remarkable for the fecond furrender of Louisbourg; the unfortunate attack on the lines of Ticonderoga, where Lord

Howe was killed; the taking of fort Frontenac by Col. Bradstreet, and the destruction of fort du Quesne on the Ohio, the contention for which, began the war.

In the course of this year, the Indians continued to infest the frontiers. Hinfdale, they killed Capt. Moore, and his fon, took his family, and burned his house. At Number-four, they killed Afahel Stebbins, and took his wife, with Ifaac Parker and a foldier. the enemy for provisions.

MS letters.

The next year, a fimilar requifition being made by Secretary Pitt, New-Hampshire raised a thousand men for the service, who were regimented under the command of Col. Zaccheus Lovewell, fon of the famous partifan, who lost his life at Pigwacket. This regiment joined the army at the westward, and ferved under General Amherst in the actual reduction of Ticonderoga and Crown Point, and in building a new fortress at the last place. The fuccess of this fummer was brilliant. beyond former example. The French fort at Niagara furrendered to General Johnson; and the strong city of Quebec was taken by the British troops under General Wolfe, who, with the French General Montcalm, 1759. was flain in the decifive hattle.

When the British arms had obtained a decided fuperiority over the French, it was determined to chastise the Indians who had committed fo many devastations on the frontiers of New-England. Major Robert Rogers was dispatched from Crown Sept. 13. Point, by General Amherst, with about two hundred rangers, to destroy the Indian village of St. Francis. After a fatiguing march of twenty-one days, he came within fight of the place, which he discovered from the top of a tree, and halted his men at the distance of three miles. In the even- N. Hamping, he entered the village in difguife with hire Gatwo of his officers. The Indians were 165. engaged in a grand dance, and he passed through them undiscovered. Having formed his men into parties, and posted them to advantage; he made a general affault, just before day, whilst the Indians were afleep. They were fo completely furprifed that little refistance could bemade. Some were killed in their houfes; and of those who attempted to flee, many were shot or tomahawked by parties placed at the avenues. The dawn of day disclosed a horrid scene; and an edge was given to the fury of the affailants by the fight fight of feveral hundred scalps of their countrymen, elevated on poles, and waving in the air. This village had been enriched with the plunder of the frontiers and the fale of captives. The houses were well furnished, and the church was adorned with plate. The fuddenness of the attack, and the fear of a pursuit, did not allow much time for pillage; but the rangers brought off fuch things as were most convenient for transportation; among which were about two hundred guineas in money, a filter image weighing ten pounds, a large quantity of wampum and clothing. Having fet fire to the village, Rogers made his retreat up the river St. Francis, intending that his men should rendezvous at the upper Cohos, on Connecticut river. They took with them five English prisoners, whom they found at St. Francis, and about twenty Indians; but these last they dismissed. Of the rangers, one man only was killed; and fix or feven were wounded. In their retreat, they were purfued, and loft feven men. They kept in a body for about ten days, passing on the eastern fide of lake Memfrimagog, and then fcattered. Some found their way to Number-four, after having fuffered much by hunger hunger and fatigue. Others perished in the woods, and their bones were found near Connecticut river, by the people, who after feveral years began plantations at the upper Cohos.

After the taking of Quebec, the remainder of the feafon was too fhort to complete the reduction of Canada. The next fummer General Amherst made preparations to approach Montreal, by three different routes; intending, with equal prudence and humanity, to finish the conquest, without the effusion of blood. For the service of this year, eight hundred men were raifed in New-Hampshire, and put under the command of Col. John Goffe, They marched, as usual, to Number-four; but instead of taking the old route, to Albany, they cut a road* through the woods, directly toward Crown Point. In this work they made fuch dispatch, as to join that part of the army which July 11. Amherst had left at Crown Point, twelve days before their embarkation. They Aug. 11.

to Otter Creek; where they found a good road, which led to Crown Point. Their flores were brought in wazgons, as far as the 26 miles extended; and then transported on horses over the mountains. A drove of cattle for the supply of the army went from No. 4, by this route, to Crown Point.

mand of Col. Haviland. The enemy made some resistance at Isle au Noix. which stopped their progress for some days, and a few men were lost on both sides. The conquest of Canada, gave peace to the frontiers of New-Hampshire, after a turbulent scene of fifteen years; in which, with very little intermission, they had been diftreffed by the enemy. Many captives returned to their homes; and friends who had long been separated, embraced each other in peace. The joy was heightened by this confideration, that the country of Canada, being fubdued, could no longer be a fource of terror and diffress.

The

The expense of this war, was paid by. a paper currency. Though an act of Parliament was passed in 1751, prohibiting the Governors, from giving their affent to acts of Affembly, made for fuch a purpole; yet, by a proviso, extraordinary emergencies were excepted. Governor Wentworth was flow to take advantage of this proviso, and construed the act in a more rigid sense than others; but his friend Shirley helped him out of his difficulties. In 1755 paper bills were iffued under the denomination of new tenor; of which, fifteen shillings were equal in value to one dollar. Of this currency, the foldiers were promised thirteen pounds ten shillings per month; but it depreciated fo much in the course of the year, that in the muster rolls, their pay was made up at fifteen pounds. In 1756 there was another emission from the same plates, and their pay was eighteen pounds. In 1757, it was twenty-five pounds. In 1758, they had twenty-feven shillings sterling. In the three fucceeding years, they had thirty shillings sterling, besides a bounty at the time of their inliftment, equal to one month's pay. At length fterling money became the standard of all contracts; and though the paper continued II 2 paffing passing as a currency, its value was regulated by the price of filver, and the cours of exchange.

It ought to be remembered as a fignal favor of divine Providence; that during this war; the feafons were fruitful, and the Colonies were able to fupply their own troops with provisions, and the British fleets and armies with refreshments of every kind which they needed. No fooner were the operations of the war in the 1761. northern Colonies closed, than two years of scarcity succeeded; (1761 and 1762) in which the drought of fummer was fo fevere, as to cut short the crops, and render supplies from abroad absolutely necessary. Had this calamity attended any of the preceding years of the war, the diffress must have been extreme, both at home and in the camp. During the drought of 1761, a fire raged in the woods, in the towns of of Barrington and Rochefter, and paffed over into the county of York, burning with irrefiftable fury for feveral weeks, and was not extinguished till a plentiful rain fell, in August. An immense quantity of the best timber was destroyed by this conflagration.

For the fucceeding part of the war, a fmaller body of men was required to garrison the new conquests; whilst the Brittifh troops were employed in the West India islands. The fuccess which attended their operations in that quarter, brought the war to a conclusion; and by the treaty of peace, though many of the conquered places were reftored, yet, the whole continent of North America remained to the British Crown, and the Colonies received a reimbursement of their expenfes.

The war being closed, a large and valuable tract of country, fituated between New-England, New-York and Canada, was fecured to the British dominions; and it became the interest of the Governors of both the royal Provinces of New-Hampshire and New-York, to vie with each other, in granting this territory and receiving the emoluments arising from this lucrative branch of their respective offices. The feeds of a controversy on this subject had been already fown. During the short peace which followed the preceding war, Governor Wentworth wrote to Governor Clinton, that he had it in command from the King, to grant the unimproved lands within his government; that the war had prevented that progrefs, which he had hoped for in this business; but that the peace had had induced many people, to apply for grants in the western parts of New-Hampflure, which might fall in the neighbourhood of New-York. He communicated to him a paragraph of his commission, describing the bounds of New-Hampshire, and requested of him a description of the bounds of New-York. Before he received any answer to this letter; Wentworth, prefuming that New-Hampshire ought to extend as far westward as Massachusetts; that is to the distance of twenty miles east from Hudson's river, granted a township, fix miles fquare, called Bennington; fituate twenty-four miles east of Hudson's river, and fix miles north of the line of Massachusetts. Clinton having laid Wentworth's letter before the Council of New-York; by their advice answered him, that the Province of New-York was bounded easterly by Connecticut river. This claim was founded on a grant of King Charles the fecond; in which, 'all the land from ' the west side of Connecticut river, to ' the east fide of Delaware bay,' was conveyed to his brother James, Duke of York; by whose elevation to the throne, the fame tract merged in the crown of England, and descended at the Revolution to King William and his fucceffors.

N. Hamperhire book of Charters.

The Province of New-York had formerly urged this claim against the Colony of Connecticut; but for prudential reasons had conceded that the bounds of that Colony should extend, as far as a line drawn twenty miles east of Hudson's river. The like extent was demanded by Massachufetts; and, though New-York affected to call this demand 'an intrusion,' and strenuously urged their right to extend eastward to Connecticut river; yet the original grant of Massachusetts, being prior to that of the Duke of York, was a barrier which could not eafily be broken. Thefe reasons, however, it was said, could be of no avail to the cause of New-Hampshire, whose first limits, as described in Mason's patent, did not reach to Connecticut river; and whose late extent, by the fettlement of the lines in 1741, was no farther westward than 'till it meets with the King's other governments.' Though it was agreed, between the two Governors, to fubmit the point in controversy to the King; yet the Governor of New-Hampshire, continued to make grants, on the western side of Connecticut river, till 1754; when the renewal of hostilities not only put a stop to applications; but prevented vented any determination of the controverfy by the Crown.

During the war, the continual paffing of troops through those lands, caused the value of them to be more generally known; and, when by the conquest of Canada, tranquillity was restored, they were eagerly fought by adventurers and speculators. Wentworth availed himfelf of this golden opportunity, and by advice of his Council, ordered a furvey to be made of Connecticut river for fixty miles, and three lines of townships on each fide, to be laid out. As applications increased, the furveys were extended. Townships of fix miles fquare were granted to various petitioners; and fo rapidly did this work go on, that during the year 1761, not less than fixty townships were granted on the west, and eighteen on the east side of the river. Besides the fees and presents for these grants, which were undefined; a refervation was made for the Governor, of five hundred acres in each township; and of lots for public purposes. These refervations were clear of all fees and Atkinfon's charges. The whole number of grants on the western side of the river, amounted to one hundred and thirty-eight; and their extent was from Connecticut river to twenty miles east of the Hudson, as far as that river extended northerly; and after that, westward to Lake Champlain. The rapid progress of these grants filled the coffers of the Governor. Those who had obtained the grants were feeking purchasers in all the neighbouring Colonies; whilst the original inhabitants of New-Hampshire, to whom these lands had formerly been promised, as a reward for their merit in defending the country, were overlooked in the distribution; unless they were disposed to apply in the same manner, as persons from abroad; or unless they happened to be in favor. When remonstrances were made to the Governor man and on this fubject, his answer was, that the people of the old towns had been formerly ly complimented with grants in Chichester, Barnsted and Gilmantown, which they had neglected to improve; and that the new grantees were better husbandmen and would promote the cultivation of the Province.

may be dated the flourishing state of New-Hampshire; which before had been circumscribed and stinted in its growth; by the continual danger of a savage enemy.

The grants on the western side of Connecticut river, alarmed the government of New-York; who, by their agent, made application to the Crown, representing that it would be greatly to the advantage of the people settled on those lands, to be annexed to New-York; and submitting

' annexed to New-York;' and fubmitting the cause to the royal decision. In the mean time, a proclamation was iffued by Lieutenant Governor Colden, reciting the grant of King Charles to the Duke of York; afferting the jurisdiction of New-York as far eastward as Connecticut river; and enjoining the Sheriff of the County of Albany, to return the names of all perfons, who, under color of the New-Hampfhire grants, held poffession of lands westward of that river. This was answered by a proclamation of Governor Wentworth, declaring the grant to the Duke of York to be obsolete, and that the western bounds of New-Hampshire were co-extensive with those of Massachusetts and

Connecticut; encouraging the grantees to maintain their possessions, and cultivate their lands; and commanding civil offi-

1764. March 13. cers to execute the laws and punish dif-

turbers of the peace.

The application from New-York was July 20, referred to the Board of Trade; and upon Miss. their representation, seconded by a report of a committee of the privy council, an order was passed, by the King in Council; declaring 'the western banks of Connecticut river, from where it enters the Province of Massachusetts Bay, as far north 'as the forty-fifth degree of latitude, TO BE the boundary line, between the two 'Provinces of New-Hampshire and New-' York.' This decree, like many other judicial determinations, while it closed one controverfy, opened another. The jurisdiction of the Governor of New-Hampshire, and his power of granting land, were circumscribed by the western bank of Connecticut river; but the grantees of the foil, found themselves involved in a dispute with the government of New-York. From the words TO BE, in the royal declaration, two very opposite conclusions were drawn. The government supposed them to refer to the time past, and construed them as a declaration that the river always bad been the eastern limits of New-York; confequently, that the grants made by the

Governor

Governor of New-Hampshire, were invalid, and that the lands might be granted again. The grantees understood the words in the future tense, as declaring Connecticut river from that time to be the line of jurisdiction only, between the two provinces; confequently that their grants, being derived from the Crown, through the medium of one of its Governors, were valid. To the jurisdiction, they would have quietly submitted, had no attempt been made to wrest from them their posfessions. These opposite opinions, proved a fource of litigation for ten fucceeding years; but, as this controverly belongs to the history of New-York, it is difmissed, with one remark only. That though it was carried on with a degree of virulence, unfriendly to the progress of civilization and humanity, within the difputed territory; yet it called into action, a spirit of vigorous self defence, and hardy enterprise, which prepared the nerves of that people for encountering the dangers of a revolution, more extensive and beneficial.

C H A P. XXIII.

Beginning of the controversy with Great-Britain. Stamp act. Resignation of Ben-NING WENTWORTH.

FROM the earliest establishment of the American Colonies, a jealousy of their independence had existed among the people of Great-Britain. At first, this apprehension was perhaps no more than a conjecture founded on the viciflitude of human affairs, or on their knowledge of those emigrants who came away from England, difgusted with the abusive treatment which they had endured at home. But from whatever cause it arose, it was strengthened by age; and the conduct of the British government toward America, was frequently influenced by it. In the reign of James the first, 'speculative rea-' foners raifed objections to the planting of these Colonies; and foretold, that after draining the mother country of in-'habitants, they would shake off her yoke 'and erect an independent government.' Some traces of this jealoufy appeared in every fucceeding reign, not excepting that See vol 1. of William, whom America, as well as Britain,

Britain, was proud to style 'our great' deliverer.' But it became most evident, and began to produce its most pernicious effects, at a time when there was the least reason for indulging the idea.

During the administration of PITT, a liberal kind of policy had been adopted toward the Colonies; which being crowned with fuccess, had attached us* more firmly than ever, to the kingdom of Britain. We were proud of our connexion with a nation whose flag was triumphant in every quarter of the globe; and by whose assistance we had been delivered from the danger of our most formidable enemies, the French in Canada. The accession of George the third, at this critical and important era, was celebrated here, with as true zeal and loyalty, as in any part of his dominions. We were fond of repeating every plaudit, which the ardent affection of the British nation bestowed on a young monarch, rifing to the throne of his ancestors, and professing to 'glory 'in the name of Briton.' At fuch a time, nothing could have been more easy, than by purfuing the fystem of commercial regulation.

ulation, already established, and continuing the indulgencies which had been allowed, to have drawn the whole profit of our labor and trade, into the hands of British merchants and manufacturers. This would have prevented a spirit of enterprise in the Colonies, and kept us in as complete fubjection and dependence, as the most fanguine friend of the British nation could have wished.

We had, among ourselves, a set of men, who, ambitious of perpetuating the rank of their families, were privately feeking the establishment of an American Nobili- ters. ty; out of which, an intermediate branch Offiver's of legislation, between the royal and democratic powers, should be appointed. Plans were drawn, and presented to the British ministry, for new modelling our governments, and reducing their powers; whilst the authority of Parliament should be rendered absolute and imperial. The military gentlemen of Britain, who had ferved here in the war, and on whom, a profusion of grateful attention had been bestowed, carried home reports of our wealth; whilft the fons of our merchants and planters, who went to England for their education, exhibited specimens of prodigality which confirmed the idea.

During

1763. During the war, there had been a great influx of money; and at the conclusion of it, British goods were largely imported; by which means, the cash went back again with a rapid circulation.

History of the minority, 1765, page 286.

In no age, perhaps, excepting that in which Rome loft her liberty, was the fpirit of venality and corruption fo prevalent as at this time, in Britain. Exhausted by a long war, and difgraced by a peace which deprived her of her most valuable conquests, the national supplies were inadequate to the continual drain of the exchecquer. A new ministry, raised on the ruin of that by which America was conquered and fecured, looked to this country as a fource of revenue. But, neglecting the 'principles of law and polity, which had been early fuggested to them by an officious correspondent; and by which they might have gradually and filently extended their fystem of corruption into America; they planned meafures by which they supposed an addition to the revenues of Britain might be drawn from America; and the pretence was, ' to defray the expenses of protecting, de-'fending and fecuring it.' The fallacy of this pretence was eafily feen. If we had not done our part toward the protection and defence of our country, why were our expenditures reimburfed by Parliament? The truth is, that during the whole war, we had exerted ourselves beyond our ability; relying on a promife from a Secretary of State, that it should be recommended to Parliament to make us compensation. It was recommended: the compensation was honorably granted, and gratefully received. The idea of drawing that money from us again by taxes to repay the charges of our former defence, was unjust and inconsistent. If the new conquests needed protection or defence, those who reaped the gain of their commerce, or enjoyed the benefit of grants and offices within those territories, might be required to contribute their aid. Notwithstanding this pretext, it was our opinion, that the grand object was to provide for dependents, and to extend the corrupt and venal principle of crown influence, through every part of the British dominions. However artfully it was thrown out, that the revenue to be drawn from us would ease the taxes of our brethren in Britain, or diminish the load of national debt; it was not easy for us to believe that the ministry had either of these objects fincerely in contemplation. But if it had been ever fo equitable that we should contribute to discharge the debt of the nation, incurred by the preceding war; we supposed that the monopoly and control of our commerce, which Britain enjoyed, was a full equivalent for all the advantages, which we reaped from our political connexion with her.

N. Hampfire Gazette, May

The same gazette, which contained the definitive treaty of peace, announced the intentions of the British ministry to quarter troops in America, and support them at our expense. The money was to be raised by a duty on foreign sugar and molasfes, and by stamps on all papers legal and mercantile. These intentions were at first thrown out in the form of resolves, and afterward digested into acts of Parliament. The first of these acts, restricting the intercourfe which the American Colonies had enjoyed with the West-India islands, caused a general uneasiness and fuspicion, but was viewed as a regulation of trade, and was submitted to, though with reluctance. The effect of this act was to call forth a spirit of frugality, particularly in the introduction of a less expensive mode of conducting funerals. Petitions and remonstrances were fent to England by fome of the Colonies; but instead of any redress, a new act of Parliament was made for raifing a revenue by a general stamp duty through all the American Colonies. The true friends of constitutional liberty now faw their dearest interests in danger; from an assumption of power in the parent state to give and grant the property of the colonists at their pleasure. Even those who had been seeking alterations in the colonial governments, and an establishment of hereditary honors, plainly faw that the ministry were desirous of plucking the fruit, before they had felect letgrafted the stock on which it must grow. To render the new act less odious to us. fome of our fellow citizens were appointed to distribute the stamped paper, which was prepared in England and brought over in bales. The framers of the act boafted that it was fo contrived as to execute itself; because no writing could be deemed legal without the stamp; and all controversies which might arise, were to be determined in the Courts of Admiralty, by a fingle judge, entirely dependent on the Crown.

This direct and violent attack on our dearest privileges at first threw us into a filent gloom; and we were at a loss how to proceed. To fubmit, was to rivet the

fhackles of flavery on ourselves and our 1765. posterity. To revolt, was to rend asunder the most endearing connexion, and hazard the refentment of a powerful nation. In this dilemma, the House of May 28. Burgesses in Virginia, passed some spirited refolves, afferting the rights of their country, and denying the claim of parliamentary taxation. The Assembly of Massa-June 6. chusetts proposed a Congress of Deputies from each Colony, to confult upon our common interest, as had frequently beenpractifed in times of common danger. Several speeches made in Parliament by oppofers of the stamp-act were reprinted here: in one of which the Americans were styled 'Sons of liberty,' and the speaker Col. Barre.

ventured, from his perfonal knowledge of this country, to foretel our opposition to the act.

> The spirit of the Virginian resolves, like an electric spark, diffused itself instantly and universally; and the cautious proposal of Massachusetts was generally approved. The anxious mind, resting on the bold affertion of constitutional rights, looked forward with pleasure, to the time when an American Congress would unite in a fuccessful defence of them. The title ' Sons of liberty,' was eagerly adopted by affociations affociations in every Colony; determining to carry into execution the prediction of him, who with fuch noble energy, had espoused the cause of our freedom. began the opposition at Boston; by publicly exhibiting effigies of the enemies of America, and obliging the stamp-officer to refign his employment. The popular commotions in that town were afterward carried to an unjustifiable excess; but the fpirit of opposition animated the body of the people in every Colony.

The person appointed distributor of stamps for New-Hampshire, was George Messervè, son of the late Colonel, who died at Louisbourg. He received his appointment in England, and foon after embarked for America, and arrived at Bofton. Before he landed, he was informed Sept. a. of the opposition which was making to the act; and that it would be acceptable to the people if he would refign, which he readily did, and they welcomed him on shore. An exhibition of effigies at Portsmouth had prepared the minds of the people there for his reception; and at his Sept. 18. coming to town he made a fecond refignation, on the parade, before he went to his own house. This was accepted with the usual falutation; and every one appeared to be fatisfied with the fuccess of the popular measures. W 3 measures. Soon after, the stamped paper destined for New-Hampshire arrived at Boston in the same vessels with that intended for Massachusetts; but there being no person in either Province who had any concern withit, it was, by order of Governor Bernard, lodged in the castle.

The stamp-act was to commence its operation on the first day of November: previously to which the appointed Congress was formed at New-York, confisting of delegates from the Assemblies of Massachusetts, Rhode-Island, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Delaware Counties, Maryland and South-Carolina. Having, like the Congress at Albany in 1754, formed themselves in geographical order; they framed a bill of rights, for the Colonies; in which the fole power of taxation was declared to be in their own affemblies. They prepared three distinct addresses to the King, Lords and Commons, stating their grievances, and asking for redress. These were subscribed by the delegates of fix Colonies; the others who were present were not empowered to fign; but reported their proceedings to their constituents, who approved them in Assembly, and forwarded their petitions. No delegates went from New-Hampshire to this Congress; but the Affembly at their next meeting adopted the same measures, and sent similar petitions to England, which they committed to Barlow! Trecothick, their agent, and John Wentworth, a young gentleman of Portsmouth, who was then in England, to be by them presented to the King and Parliament of These measures were the most respectful and prudent which could be devised and were attended with some prospect of success from a change which had been made in the British ministry.

In the mean time, the newspapers were filled with effays, in which every plea for and against the new duties was amply difcuffed. These vehicles of intelligence were doomed to be loaded with a stamp; and the printers felt themselves interested in the opposition. On the last day of October, the New-Hampshire Gazette appeared with a mourning border. A body of people from the country approached the town of Portimouth, under an apprehension that the stamps would be diftributed; but being met, by a number from the town, and affured that no fuch thing was intended; they quietly returned. The next day, the bells tolled, and a funeral procession was made for the Goddess Nov. 1. of Liberty; but on depositing her in the grave, some signs of life were supposed to be discovered, and she was carried off in triumph. By such exhibitions, the spirit of the populace was kept up; though the minds of the most thoughtful persons were filled with anxiety.

It was doubtful, whether the Courts of Law could proceed without stamps; and it was certain that none could be procured. Some licentious perfons began to think that debts could not be recovered, and that they might infult their creditors with impunity. On the first appearance of this diforderly spirit, associations were formed at Portsmouth, Exeter and other places, to support the Magistrates and preferve the peace. The fifth of November had always been observed as a day of hilarity, in remembrance of the powderplot. On the following night, a strong guard was kept in Portsmouth. By these precautions, the tendency to riot was feafonably checked, and no waste of property or perfonal infult was committed; though fome obnoxious characters began to tremble for their fafety.

When Mefferve arrived, the people fupposed that he had brought his commission with him, and were content that it should remain in his own hands, being rendered void by his refignation. But, in fact, he did not receive it till after the time fixed for the operation of the act. Having shown his instructions to the Governor, and some other public officers, it was fuspected that he intended 'to commence ' the execution of his office.' The fons of liberty were alarmed; they affembled by beat of drum, and obliged him pub- Jan. 9. licly to deliver up his commission and instructions; which they mounted on the point of a fword, and carried in triumph through the town. An oath was administered to him by Justice Claget, purporting that he would neither directly nor indirectly attempt to execute his office. The master of a ship, then ready to sail for England, was also fworn to deliver the packet containing the commission and instructions, as it was directed. It was first addressed to the Commissioners of the stamp-office in London; but afterward it was enclosed in a letter to the agents of the Province, refering the disposal of it to their discretion. It happened to arrive, when great exertions were making, and a strong probability existed, of the repeal of the stamp-act. The agents therefore concealed the packet, and had the good fortune to suppress the intelligence of all thefe might enfue to prevent the expected repeal.

During all these commotions, Governor Wentworth was filent. The ministry, either by accident or defign, had neglected to fend authentic copies of the stamp-act, to some of the American Governors, and to him among others. There had been no tumults, which rendered his interpolition necessary. He was in the decline of life, and his health was much impaired, His fortune was made, and it lay chiefly in his native country. One of the reafons given, for the removal of his predeceffor, was, that he had enjoyed his office ten years; Mr. Wentworth had been twenty-five years in the chair, and expected foon to be superfeded. It was therefore his interest, not to put himself forward in support of unpopular mea-fures. His example was followed by most of the gentlemen in the Province, who held offices under the Crown: If any of them were fecretly in favor of the act, they were restrained by fear, from contradicting openly the voice of the people.

"The popular fpirit was sufficiently roufed to join in any measures which might be necessary for the defence of liberty.

All fear of the consequence of proceeding 1766. in the public business without stamps, was gradually laid afide. The courts of law, and custom houses were kept open. Newspapers circulated, and licenses for marriage, without stamps, were publicly advertised. As it was uncertain, what might be the event of the petitions to the King and Parliament, it was thought best, to awaken the attention of the merchants and manufacturers of England, by an agreement to import no goods, until the stamp-act should be repealed. To provide for the worst, an affociation was formed by the 'fons of liberty' in all the northern Colonies, to stand by each other, and unite their whole force, for the protection and relief of any who might be in danger, from the operation of this, or any other oppressive act. The letters which passed between them, on this occa- of the sone fion, are replete with expressions of loyalty and affection to the King, his person, family and authority. Had there been any difaffection to the royal government, or defire to shake off our allegiance, where would the evidence of it be more likely to be found, than in letters which passed between bodies of men, who were avowedly endeavoring, to form an union, to relift

the usurped authority of the British Lords and Commons?* Webstill

The idea which we entertained of our political connexion with the British empire, was, that the King was its supreme head; that every branch of it was a perfect State, competent to its own internal legislation, but subject to the control and negative of the fovereign; that taxation and reprefentation were correlative, and therefore that no part of the empire could be taxed, but by its own Reprefentatives in Affembly. From a regard to the general interest, it was conceded, that the Parliament of Great-Britain, representing the first and most powerful branch of the empire, might regulate the exterior commerce of the whole. In Britain, the American governments were confidered as corporations, existing by the pleasure of the King and Parliament, who had a right to alter or dissolve them. Our laws were deemed bye-laws; and we were fupposed to be, in all cases of legislation and taxation,

From an intimate acquaintance with many persons, of all ranks, who were influenced of conducting the American revolution, through all its flages; and from a persolid of many of their configential letters; the author of these faces is fully fastissed, that the public professions of loyalty, made by his countrymen, were faceres; and that the most determined opposers of the claims of Parliament, were very far from detring a disandag of the British empire, till they were driyen took by necessity.

taxation, subject to the supreme, undefined power of the British Parliament. Between claims for widely different, there was no arbitrator to decide. Temporary expedients, if wifely applied, might have preserved peace; but the most delicate and judicious management was necessary, to prevent irritation.

When the commotions which had happened in America, were known in England, a circular letter was written to the feveral governors, by Secretary Conway, 08.24. in which it was 'boped that the relistance to the authority of the mother country. ' had only found place among the lower. and more ignorant of the people. To the constitutional authority (as we understood it) of the King and Parliament, there had been no refistance; but to the assumed authority, of our fellow subjects in Britain, over our property, the refistance began, and was supported by the Representatives of the people, in their Affemblies. Those who appeared under the name of 'the fons of liberty' were chiefly tradefmen of reputation, who were occafionally affifted by lawyers, clergymen, and other persons of literary abilities. The writings of Sydney and Locke were produced, in evidence of the justice of our claims;

claims; and the arguments which had formerly been used in England, against the usurpations of the house of Stuart, were adopted and repeated by us, in favor of our rights and liberties. Political inquiries were encouraged, and the eyes of the people were opened. Never was a sentiment more generally adopted, on the fullest conviction, than that we could be constitutionally taxed by none but our own Representatives; and that all assumption of this power, by any other body of men, was usurpation which might be lawfully resisted.

The petitions of the American Affemblies, enforced by the agreement for non-importation, and aided by the exertions of the British merchants and manufacturers, induced the new ministry to recommend to Parliament, a repeal of the odisous stamp-act. It was accordingly repealed; not on the true principle of its repugnancy to the rights of America; but on that of political expediency. Even on this principle, the repeal could be obtained by no other means; than by passing, at the same time, a declaratory act, afferting the right and power, of the British Parliament, 'to bind America, in 'all cases whatsoever,' and annulling all with the rejoicings which were occasioned by the repeal of the stamp-act, in this country, were extravagantly disproportioned to the object. We felt a transient relief from an intolerable burden; but the claim of sovereign power, in our fellow subjects, to take our property, and abridge our liberty at their pleasure, was established by law. Our only hope was, that they would profit by their recent experience; and whilst they enjoyed the pride of seeing their claim exist on paper, would suspend the exercise of it in future.

With the repealing and declaratory acts, a circular letter came from Secretary. Conway; in which, 'the lenity and tenderefs, the moderation and forbearance of the Parliament toward the Colonies' were celebrated in the language of panegyric, and we were called upon, to show our 'respectful gratitude and cheerful obedience,' in return for such a 'fignal display of indulgence and affection.' This letter enclosed a resolution of Parliament, that those persons who had 'furfered any injury or damage,' in consequence of their affishing to 'execute the

'late act, ought to be compensated, by 'the Colonies, in which such injuries were 'fustained.'

June 25.

When Governor Wentworth laid this letter before the Assembly, he told them with pleasure and fatisfaction, that he ' had no requisition of this kind to make.' Messervè, however, applied to the Assembly to grant him a compensation for the injuries which he faid he had fuffered. A committee, being appointed to inquire into the ground of his petition, reported, ' that he had fuffered no real damage either 'in person or property; but that when 'any danger had been expected, guards 'had been appointed to protect him.' Upon this report, his petition was difmiffed. He afterward went to England and obtained the office of Collector of the the Customs.

At this feffion, the Affembly prepared a respectful address to the King and both Houses of Parliament, on account of the repeal; which was sent to England, at the same time that the stamped paper and parchment, which had been deposited at castle in Boston, were returned.

Complaints had been made in England against fome of the American Governors, and other public officers, that exorbitant fees had been taken for the passing of patents for land; and a proclamation had been iffued by the Crown and published in the Colonies, threatning fuch perfons with a removal from office. Governor 1764. Wentworth was involved in this charge. He had also been accused of negligence in corresponding with the King's ministers; of informality and want of accuracy in his grants of land; and of paffing acts of Assembly respecting private property, without a suspending clause 'till his Majesty's 'pleasure could be known.' In his office of Surveyor-General he had been charged with neglect of duty, and with indulging his deputies in felling and wasting the King's timber. By whom thefe complaints were made, and by what evidence they were supported, I have not been able to discover. Certain it is, that fuch an impression was made on the minds of the ministry, that a resolution was taken to remove him: but the difficulties attending the stamp-act, caused a delay in the appointment of a fuccessor. When the ferment had fubfided, the attention of the ministry was turned to this object. JOHN WENTWORTH, fon of Mark Hunking Wentworth, and nephew of the Governor, was then in England. He had ap-X peared peared at Court, as a joint agent with Mr. Trecothick in presenting the petition of the Province against the stamp-act. He had become acquainted with feveral families of high rank and of his own name, in Yorkshire, and in particular with the Marquis of Rockingham, then at the head of the ministry. By his indulgence, Mr. Wentworth prevailed to foften the rigor of government against his uncle. Instead of being censured and removed from office, he was allowed opportunity to refign, and the appearance of refigning in favor of his nephew, who was destined by the Marquis, to be his succesfor. Having received his commissions, as Governor of New-Hampshire, and Surveyor of the King's woods in North America, Mr. Wentworth failed from England, and arrived at Charlestown, in South-Carolina. Thence he travelled through the continent, registering his commission of Surveyor in each of the Colonies, and was received at Portsmouth, with every mark of respect and affection. This appointment, made by a popular ministry, was peculiarly grateful to the people of

New-Hampshire, by whom Mr. Wentworth was well known and much esteem-

In addition to what has been faid, of 1767. the fuperfeded Governor, it may be obferved: that his natural abilities were neither brilliant nor contemptible. As a private gentleman he was obliging, and as a merchant honorable. He was generous and hospitable to his friends; but his passions were strong and his refentments lasting. He was subject to frequent and long continued visits of the gout; a diftemper rather unfriendly to the virtue of patience. In his deportment there was an appearance of haughtiness, contracted by his refidence in Spain, where he learned the manners of the people of rank; as well as the maxims of their government. He thought it best that the highest offices, should be filled with men of property; and though in some instances he deviated from this principle, yet, in others, he adhered to it fo closely, as to difregard more necessary qualifications.

In the former part of his administration, he was scrupulous in obeying his instructions, and instexible in maintaining the prerogative. In conducting the operations of two fuccessive wars, his attention to the service was very conspicuous; and he frequently received letters of thanks, from the Generals, and other of1767. ficers of the British troops employed in America.

He was closely attached to the interest of the church of England; and in his grants of townships, reserved a right for the fociety for propagating the gospel, of which he was a member. A project was formed during his administration, to establish a college in New-Hampshire. When he was applied to for a charter, he declined giving it, unless the college were put under the direction of the Bishop of London. But, when a grant was made by the Assembly, of three hundred pounds fterling, to Harvard College, where he had received his education, to repair the deftruction which it had fuffered by fire; he consented to the vote, and his name is inscribed on an alcove of the library, as a benefactor, in conjunction with the name of the Province.

In his appointment of civil and military officers, he was frequently governed by motives of favor, or prejudice to particular persons. When he came to the chair he found but twenty-five Justices of the Peace in the whole Province; but in the first commission which he issued, he nominated as many in the town of Portsmouth only. In the latter part of his time, appointments of this kind became so numerous erous, and were so easily procured, that 1767. the office was rendered contemptible.*

The following pasquinade was publified in the Portsmouth Mercary of October 7, 1765. It was supposed to have been written by the late Judge Parker, and was intitled

THE SILVER AGE. In days of yore, and pious times, Great care was had to punish crimes ; When confervators pacis fought To keep good order as they ought. This office then, was no great booty, Small were the fees, though great the duty. But when a law, the old restriction Dock'd-and enlarg'd the jurisdiction ; His Worship had a right to hold, In civil plea, a pound twice told. The post was then thought worth possessing, For 'twas attended with a bleffing. But ftill, in after times it grew Much better, as our tale will shew; When, as it goes by common fame. Two pounds and forty were the fame. [By depreciation] Then civil fuits began to thrive. And claims grown obfolete revive. But when their Worfhips, manifold, Like men divinely blefs'd of old, Were bid 't' increase and multiply.' Obfequious rofe a num'rous fry, Who, ever prompt, and nigh at hand, Could featter juffice through the land. Then, with important air and look, The fons of Lyttleton and Coke Swarming appear'd, to mind the Squites; What honors fuch a post requires ! This was the happy filver age When magistrates, profoundly fage, O'erfpread the land ; and made, it feems, " Juffice run down the ffreets in ffreams."

Notwithstanding some instances, in which a want of magnanimity was too conspicuous, his administration was, in other respects, beneficial. Though he was highly cenfured, for granting the best lands of the Province to the people of Massachusetts and Connecticut, with views of pecuniary reward; vet, the true interest of the country was certainly promoted; because the grantees in general, were better husbandmen than the people of New-Hampshire.

In those cases, where distatisfaction appeared, it was chiefly owing to the nature of a royal government, in which the ariftocratic feature was prominent, and the democratic too much depressed. The people of New-Hampshire, though increafing in numbers, had not the privilege of an equal representation. The aim of most of those gentlemen, who received their appointments from abroad, was rather to please their masters, and fecure the emoluments of their offices, than to extend benefits to the people, or condescend to their prejudices. They did not feel thier dependence on them, as the fource of power; nor their responsibility to them for its exercise. And, the

THE genius, as well as the interest of the new Governor, led him to cultivate the good will of the people. He was grandfon, by his mother, to the late agent John Rindge, who had been instrumental of establishing the boundaries of the Province, and had advanced a large fum for that purpose. His family, who had long complained of ingratitude and neglect, were now amply gratified, not only by the advancement of the new Governor, but by his recommending feveral other gentlemen, who were connected with it, to fill vacant feats at the Council board, and other offices of government. Several Several gentlemen of other respectable families, who had been treated with neglect, in the preceding administration, were also taken into favor; and a spirit of conciliation, among those who had formerly been at variance, seemed to mark the beginning of this administration with fair omens of peace and success.

Being in the prime of life, active and enterprifing in his disposition, polite and easy in his address, and placed in the chair by the same minister who had procured the repeal of the stamp-act, to which event his own agency had contributed; Mr. Wentworth enjoyed a great share of popular favor; which was much heightened when his conduct was viewed in contrast with that of some other Governors in the neighbouring Provinces. Though bred a merchant, he had a tafte for agriculture, and entered vigorously into the spirit of cultivation. He frequently traversed the forests; explored the ground for new roads; and began a plantation for himself in the township of Wolfborough, on which he expended large fums, and built an elegant house. His example was influential on other landholders, who also applied themfelves in earnest to cultivate the wildernefs.

The improvement of the country at this time occupied the minds of the people of New-Hampshire, and took off their attention, in a great measure, from the view of those political difficulties, which were occasioned by a new act of Parliament, laying duties on paper, glass, painters' colors, and tea; and the establishment of a board of Commissioners for collecting the American revenue. In the other Colonies, particularly in Maffachufetts, thefe duties had become a fubject of altercation and ferious alarm, being grounded on the right which the Parliament had affumed of 'binding America in all cases whatfo-'ever.' The only remedy was to be found in frugality, non-importation, and domeftic manufactures. These things were recommended, and, in fome measure, complied with; and by means of these exertions, the revenue fell short of the sanguine expectations which its advocates had formed.

The popularity of the Governor of New-Hampshire, and the influence of his numerous friends and connexions, who were of the principal families and the richest merchants in the Province, prevented the adoption of a non-importation agreement in Portfmouth.* till the merchants in some of the other Colonies threatned to withhold any mercantile intercourse with them. A plan of the same kind was then (1770) formed; and the union of fo many Colonies, in this measure, caused the manufacturers in Great-Britain to experience diftreffes of the fame nature with those occafioned by the stamp-act; and to exert their influence for a repeal of the new revenue law, which was in part effected. All the duties, excepting that on tea, were taken off. This relaxation, on the other fide of the Atlantic, produced a relaxation here. The ministry in Great-Britain was frequently changed; and no uniform fyftem either of coercion or lenity was adopted. The opposition on this side languished for want of unanimity. The more candid among us were willing to suppose that Britain would never lay any more duties; and there was some foundation for this fupposition, as far as letters from minifters of state, and speeches from provincial Governors might be depended on. tax on tea was referved as a latent spark to rekindle the controversy.

When the Governor, at his first meeting the Affembly, according to the cuftom on fuch occasions, recommended to them. the establishment of an 'adequate, honorable and permanent falary, they made fome hesitation, on account of a report, that the falaries of the American Governors were to be paid out of the revenue. On being affured, that if fuch a general establishment should take place, it would be fo guarded as to prevent his receiving any reward from the Assembly; they framed a vote, granting feven hundred pounds per annum during his administration (dollars being then fixed at fix shillings.) The fund appropriated to the falary was the excise, and in case of its insufficiency, other provision was made. But the vote was limited with an exception, 'unless provi-' fion shall be made by Parliament.' When the question was put, the House was equally divided, and the Speaker, Peter Gilman, turned it against a permanent salary. It was therefore voted from year to year, and generally amounted to feven hundred pounds; besides which an allowance was made for house-rent, from fixty or seventy to one hundred pounds.

Among the improvements which, during this administration, were made in the Province, one of the most conspicuous, was the establishment of a seminary of literature. It was founded on a projection of Doctor Eleazer Wheelock of Lebanon in Connecticut, for the removal of his Indian charity school.

The first design of a school of this kind was conceived by Mr. John Sergeant, Miffionary to the Indians at Stockbridge. A rambling mode of life, and a total want of letters, were ever unfriendly to the propagation of religious knowledge among the favages of America. That worthy missionary, intent on the bufiness of his profession, and having observed the progress made by fome of the younger Indians, who refided in the English families, in reading and other improvements, conceived the benevolent idea of changing their whole habit of thinking and acting; and raising them from their native indolence to a ftate of civilization; and at the fame time, by introducing the English language, instead of their own barren dialect, to instil into their minds the principles of morality and religion.

- To accomplish this defign, he procured benefactions from many well disposed persons both here and in England; and began a school at Stockbridge; where the Indian youth were to be maintained, under the instruction of two masters; one to overfee their studies, and the other their field labor; whilst a matron should direct the female children in acquiring the arts of domestic life. Death put an end to the labors of this excellent man before his plan could be accomplished.

This defign was revived by Wheelock. Having made fome experiments, he was encouraged to proceed, by the tractable (1754) disposition of the Indian youths, and their proficiency in learning; but especially, by the numerous benefactions, which he received from the friends of religion and Wheehumanity. Among which, a donation of Joshua Moor, of Mansfield, being the larg-termined its name 'Moor's school.' To increase the means of improvement, charitable contributions were folicited in different parts of America, in England, and in Scotland. The money collected in England, was put into the hands of a Board of Trustees, of whom the Earl of Dartmouth was at the head: and that collected in Scotland was committed to the fociety for promoting christian knowledge.

est, in the infancy of the institution, de-

As an improvement on the original defign, a number of English youths were educated with the Indians, both in literary and agricultural exercises; that their example might invite the Indians to the love of those employments, and abate the prejudice which they have universally imbibed, that it is beneath the dignity of man to delve in the earth.

As the number of scholars increased, it became necessary to erect buildings, and extend cultivation. That part of the country in which the school was first placed, being filled with inhabitants, a removal was contemplated. When this intention was publicly known, offers were made by private and public perfons in feveral of the neighboring Colonies. The wary forefight of the founder, aided by the advice of the Board of Trustees, in England, led him to accept an invitation made by the Governor, and other gentlemen of New-Hampshire. The township of Hanover, on the eastern bank of Connecticut river, was finally determined on, as the most convenient situation for the school: to which the Governor annexed a charter of incorporation for an university, which took the name of Dartmouth College, from its benefactor, the Earl of Dartmouth. Of this university, Doftor Wheelock was declared the founder and the Prefident; with power to nominate his fuccessor, in his last will. A Board of twelve Trustees was constituted, with perpetual fuccession; and the college was endowed with a large landed estate, confisting of one whole township (Landaff) besides many other tracts of land, in different fituations, amounting in the whole, to forty-four thousand acres. One valuable lot, of five hundred acres. in the township of Hanover, given by the late Governor, Benning Wentworth, was fixed upon as the fite of the school and college. Besides these donations of land, the amount of three hundred and forty pounds sterling, was subscribed, to be paid in labor, provisions, and materials for building. With these advantages, and the prospect of a rapidly increasing neighborhood, in a fertile foil, on both fides of Connecticut river, Doctor Wheelock removed his family and school into the wilderness. At first, their accommodations were fimilar to those of other fettlers, on new lands. They built huts of green logs, and lived in them, till a proper edifice could be erected. The number of scholars, at this time, was twenty-four; of which eighteen were whites, and the rest Indians.

Experience had taught Doctor Wheelock, that his Indian youths, however well educated, were not to be depended on for instructors of their countrymen. Of forty who had been under his care, twenty had returned to the vices of favage life; and fome whom he esteemed 'fubiects of divine grace, had not kept their garments 'unspotted.' It was, therefore, in his view, necessary that a greater proportion of English youths should be educated, to ferve as missionaries, and overfee the conduct of the Indian teachers. This was given as the grand reason, for uniting the college with the Indian school, and placing it under the same government; though the appropriations were distinctly preserved. That the general concerns of the institution might be better regulated, and the intrusion of vicious persons within the purlieus of the college prevented; a district of three miles square was put under its jurisdiction, and the President was invested with the office of a magistrate. In 1771, a commencement was held, and the first degrees were conferred, on four fludents:

> Another improvement was made about the same time, by dividing the Province into counties. This had been long fought, but could not be obtained. The inconvenience to which the people in the western parts of the Province were subject, by reason of their distance from Portsmouth. where all the Courts were held, was extremely burdensome; whilst the convenience and emoluments of office were enjoyed by gentlemen in that vicinity. Some attempts to divide the Province had been made in the former administration : but without effect. The rapid increase of inhabitants for feveral years, made a division, so necessary, that it had become one of the principal subjects of debate, in the Asfembly, from the time of the Governor's arrival. Several fessions passed before all points could be adjusted. The number of counties, and the lines of division, were not easily agreed to, and a punctilio of prerogative about the erecting of Courts, made some difficulty; but it was finally determined, that the number of counties should be five; and the Courts were established by an act of the whole legislature. It was passed with a clause, suspending its operation, operation, till the King's pleasure should be known. The royal approbation being obtained, it took effect in 1771. The five counties were named by the Governor. after fome of his friends in England; Rockingham, Strafford, Hillfborough, Cheshire, and Grafton. The counties of Strafford and Grafton being much less populous, than the others, were to remain annexed to the county of Rockingham, till the Governor, by advice of Council, should declare them competent to the exercise of their respective jurisdictions; which was done in 1773.

The year 1771 was also distinguished by the abolition of paper currency. Silver and gold had been gradually introduced, and the paper had for feveral years been called in by taxes. The time limited for its existence being now come, it totally disappeared.

The death of the late Governor produced consequences which materially affected on 1470. 4. his fuccessor. This family had been for 1770. 4. 1475. many years of the first rank in the Province, and fome of its members and connexions had held the principal offices. fuch a case, domestic union may be confidered as necessary to preferve public honor. The late Governor, though superfeded, had been treated with every mark of respect; and having no children, it was expected that his fuccessor would be his principal heir. A later will, made in favor of his young widow, and unknown till after his death, caufed a fudden difappointment; which, if it had evaporated in private reflections only, might have passed among the infirmities incident to humanity, and with them might have been configned to oblivion; for it is beneath the dignity of history, to record the altercations of families, unless they are connected with public transactions, or events.

Antiquated claims upon the late Governor's estate were revived; and law-suits were commenced, which probably would not have been agitated, if the expected disposition had been made. But the most alarming effect of this unhappy difappointment was a question, which the Governor moved in Council, 'whether the referva-' tions of five hundred acres, in feveral 'townships, made by the late Governor,

March 19. MS depo-Benning Wentworth, in the charter fition of ' grants, conveyed the title to him?' The Council determined this question in the negative. The Governor then asked, whether they would advise him to grant feven of the Coun-

the faid tracts, to fuch of his Majesty's fubjects, as should fettle and cultivate the fame? To this they gave their affent. Seven of the Counfellors prefent on this occasion were the Governor's relations. The eighth was Peter Livius, a gentleman of foreign extraction, who entered his diffent. He had for feveral years fervied as a Justice of the Common Pleas; but on the divition of the Province into counties, it was necessary to issue new commisfions. Finding himfelf overlooked in the appointment of officers, and his private affairs calling him abroad, he failed for England, and there exhibited to the Lords of Trade, articles of complaint against 1772. the Governor and his Council.

The first was, that the Governor and Council, without any legal process, or the Complaint. intervention of a jury, had deprived the grantees under the Crown of their lands, on fuggestion only that the conditions had not been fulfilled. The fecond was, that the duty paid by foreign shipping, commonly called powder money, had not been accounted for, fince the year 1741; and that the Council had refused to join with the Representatives in an inquiry into this matter in the year 1768.

The third was, that the Governor had moved in Council, that the lands referved to the late Governor, in the charters of townships, should be regranted to himself, through the medium of another person; and that the protest of the complainant, against the legality of this proceeding, was rejected.

The fourth was, that in confequence of the opposition, which he was in duty bound thus to make, he had been injuriously treated, and had received personal abuse from the Governor.

The fifth was, that pending an action in the Common Pleas, brought by the Governor, thoughin other names, the Judges had feveral times been changed, till a question on a point of law was determined in favor of the Governor.

'The fixth article stated, that the complainant had expected to prove several of the above sacts, by referring to copies of the Council records in their Lordship'soffice; but was surprised to find that the Governor had disobeyed his instructions in not sending them.

The memorial concluded with a general charge of partiality arifing from the family connexions of the Governor and

Copies of this memorial were fent to the Governor and Council, who feparately prepared and returned diffinct answers to the several articles of complaint.

To the first, it was said, that the resumption of grants forseited by non-compliance with the conditions of settlement was supported by the opinion of the Attorney and Solicitor General, given in 1752; that the invariable usage in these cases, had been to issue notice to delinquent proprietors, that they should appear on a set day, and shew cause why their shares should not be forseited and regranted; that their allegations had been always treated with proper respect, and that no complaint of insuffice had been made by any persons whose grants had been thus resumed.

To the fecond it was answered, that the amount of powder-money, during the former administration, though long neglected, had been lately recovered; and that fince 1768, it had been regularly accounted for. The reason for the non-concurrence of the Council, with the vote for inquiring into this matter, was their respect to the royal prerogative, conceiving that the House had no concern with the matter.

To

To the third article, it was faid, that the late Governor, conscious of the insufficiency of his title, had folicited his fucceffor for grants of these reservations, which he had declined giving, unless a mandamus from the King could be procured; that this uncertainty had prevented his alienating them; that in consequence, they were uncultivated and forfeited; that fome of these lands had been regranted to other persons; but that the present Governor had no interest directly or indirectly in them. The Council denied, that the Governor had ever proposed the granting of these lands to himself, through another person. They also denied that the dissent of the memorialist had been refused.

The charge of personal abuse, in the fourth article, was contradicted and retorted; but it was conceded, that the Governor had told him that his reasons of diffent were not founded in truth.

In answer to the fifth article, it was acknowledged, that the action was brought for the Governor's benefit; but that any unfair means were used to influence the Court was denied. This denial was corroborated by the depositions of the Judges themselves, and of the Attorneys who were concerned in the suit. It was also proved that that the judgment of the Court on the question of law, was of no moment, being reversed by the Superior Court, before which the cause was carried by appeal.

To the fixth article, it was answered, that the Governor had directed the Secretary to furnish him with copies of all the public transactions which had usually been fent to England, and that he had regularly transmitted them. But it appeared from the affidavit of the Secretary, that in June 1760, the late Governor had ordered him not to transcribe the minutes of the Council, when fitting without the Assembly, unless specially directed; and fince that time it had been usual to fend the journal of the Council when fitting as a House of Assembly, and not as a Council of State.

In fine, the Council denied that they had ever acted, in their public capacity, from any private or family interest; but afferted, that they had frequently given their judgment directly against it; and they concluded with very fevere reflections on the complainant.

With these answers, were transmitted a great number of depolitions, from persons MS copies of all ranks and professions, testifying in favor of the Governor, These being laid

May 10. Printed re prefensation. before the Lords of Trade, and the memorialist being heard in reply, the Board represented to the King, that the complaint against the Governor 'had been fully verified.' At the fame time they thought it their duty to represent, 'that the reports ' which they had received, through different channels, of the fituation of affairs within New-Hampshire, did all concur in representing the colony to have been, fince Mr. Wentworth's appointment, in a state of peace and prosperity; that its commerce had been extended, and the 'number of its inhabitants increased; and that every attempt made to excite the people to diforder and difobedience, ' had been, by the firm and temperate conduct of Mr. Wentworth, suppressed and reffrained.

July 29.

When the cause was reheard before a committee of the Privy Council, it was observed by the Governor's advocate, that 'peace, prosperity and obedience, were not 'compatible with oppression and injustice; and that however the Lords of Trade had in the beginning of their report condemned the Governor, they had, by the praise 'bestowed upon him, in the end contradictived themselves.'

The Lords of the committee reported to the King in Council, their judgment upon feveral articles of the complaint, in fubstance as follows.

'That by the law of England, when lands were granted, upon condition, the breach of that condition must be found by a jury under a commission from the Court of Chancery; but that no fuch Court existed in New-Hampshire; and though the general rule was that the law of England extended to the Colonies, yet it must be understood to mean, such part of the law as is adapted to the state and constitution of them. That though the Governor had refumed and regranted lands, yet there was no evidence that fuch refumptions had been made without proof or public notoriety, that the conditions of former grants had not been complied with; and that no complaint had been made by any person supposed to be injured. That it had not been proved that refumptions had been made without notice to the proprietors; and it had not even been fuggested, in cases where time had been allowed, that grants were resumed before the expiration of it. That the lands granted to the late Governor were granted in the name of the King, which was fuffi-

cient to convey a title; and that the Council was mistaken in thinking otherwise. That the Governor, by their advice, did refume and regrant feveral tracts of land which had been granted to the late Governor; but it had not been proved that the faid lands were regranted in trust for himself; and in many instances such lands were regranted to different inhabitants for their own use and benefit; and that the late Governor's widow had not complained of any injury, by fuch resumption. That it appeared to have been the constant practice when any standing Justice of a Court was interested in a fuit, for a special Justice to be appointed; that other causes were depending at the fame Inferior Court of Common Pleas, in which the standing Justices were interested, and there was no proof that special Justices were appointed on account of that particular cause in which the Govenor was concerned; but that the commission was folicited in the common form; and that the defendant himself had testified that he had no objection to the commission or to the special Justices. With respect to the transmission of the records of Council, it was their opinion that it might be proper to revive that practice, as it had been conducted previously to the year year 1760. But upon the whole, they 1773. fubmitted their judgment that there ' was 'no foundation for any cenfure upon the · faid Governor, for any of the charges contained in the complaint, and that ' the general conduct of his administration 'had tended greatly to the peace and ' prosperity of the faid Province.'

This report was approved by the King October 8. in Council, and the complaint was difmissed. But the Governor was strictly enjoined, to transmit to the Lords of Trade, authentic copies of the journals of of the Council, as a Council of State.

In this controverfy Mr. Livius met with great support, from the interest of those who wished to displace the Governor; and they became fo deeply engaged to him, as to procure for him an appointment to be the Chief Justice of New-Hampshire; but, upon more mature confideration, this was thought too likely to produce discord and confusion, and he obtained an appointment to a more lucrative office in the Province of Quebec.

When the final iffue of the complaint was known in New-Hampshire, a general fatisfaction appeared among the people. At the next fession of the Assembly, the House of Representatives presented to the Governor.

Governor, an adddress of congratulation, in the name of their constituents; and the citizens of Portsmouth gave a splendid ball, to which the Governor and both Houses of Assembly were invited.

Hitherto the Governor had preferved his popularity; and the people, in general, were fatisfied with his administration. But, the obligation which lay on him to support the claims of Britain, and aid the plans of her ministry, rendered his situation extremely delicate, and his popularity very precarious. The controversy between Britain and the Colonies was drawing to a crisis. By the refervation of the duty on tea, the Parliament infifted on it as their right, to tax their American brethren without their confent; and the Americans, by withholding the importation of tea from Britain, made use of the only peaceable mode, in their power, effectually to oppose that claim. The revenue failed, and the warehouses of the East India company were filled with an unfaleable commodity. The ministry and the company, thus feverely disappointed, formed a plan, by which it was expected, that the one would enforce their claim, and the other fecure their traffic.

It was therefore enacted in Parliament, that the duty on the exportation of tea, from Britain, should be taken off; and the East India company be enabled to fend tea, on their own account, to America, subject to a duty only of three pence on the pound; by which means it would come to us, cheaper than before, or than it could be procured by illicit trade.

This measure caused a general alarm, through the Colonies; and united the interest of the merchants, with the views of the politicians, and the general fense of liberty in the people. The trading towns fet the example, which the others followed, of passing resolves, not to permit tea, freighted by the East India company, to be landed or fold. These resolutions were effectual. In fome places the confignees were obliged to relinquish their appointments, and the tea was returned unladen. In other places it was deposited in stores, till it could be reshipped. In Boston, where the obstinacy of Governor Hutchinson drove the people to desperation, it was destroyed. In New-Hampthire, the prudence of Governor Wentworth, the vigilance of the magistrates and the firmnels of the people were combined, and the hateful commodity was 1774. June 25.

The first cargo of tea, confisting of twenty-feven chefts, was landed and ftored at the custom house, before any people could affemble to obstruct it. A town meeting was called, and a propofal was made to Mr. Parry, the confignee, to refhip it: To this he confented. A guard was appointed by order of the town, to watch the custom house. The tea having been entered, it was necessary that the duty should be paid; which was done openly, by the confignee. The Governor convened the Council, and kept the magistrates and peace officers in readiness to suppress any riotous appearances; but there was no need of their exertion. The tea was peaceably reshipped and sent to Halifax.

Sept. 18.

A fecond cargo, of thirty chefts, which came configned to the fame perfon, raifed a fmall ferment; and the windows of his lodgings were broken. He applied to the Governor for protection. The Governor, as before, fummoned the Council and magistrates. The town, by their committee, prevailed on the confignee to fend the tea to Halifax, after having paid the duty, without which the ship could not legally be cleared at the custom house. A general

A general detestation of the measures, pursued by the British ministry, to rivet the chains on America, universally prevailed. The towns had severally passed resolves, afferting their right of exemption from all taxation by Parliament; condemning the importation and use of tea; and appointing committees of inspection to carry their resolutions into effect. The committees were vigilant; and being aided by the general sentiment of the people, their exertions were successful.

The controversy had now advanced, to a stage, which excited the most serious apprehensions. The Parliament had assumed judicial, as well as legislative powers; and directed their vengeance against Boston. Its port was shut, and guarded by ships of war; its commerce was interdicted; its tradesmen were without employment; and its poor without bread. A military Governor presided there, and was drawing together all the British troops from every part of America; that he might be prepared, to make any sanguinary experiment, which, in the ministerial plan of coercion, might be judged necessary.

The fympathy of their American brethren, raifed contributions, for the relief of the numerous poor in Boston, who were regarded as fuffering in the common caufe. But, to guard ourselves effectually against the gathering storm, a union of the Colonies was thought absolutely neceffary; and recourse was had to the same measure which had formerly been tried in cases of common danger, to hold a Congress of delegates from each Col-

The enemies of America have uniformly cenfured this measure as unprecedented, illegal and dangerous. That it was dangerous to the defigns of the British administration, is admitted; but for that reason, it was to us the means of safety. Though it was not supported by any written law, yet it was evidently founded on felf preservation, the first law of nature. But that it was unprecedented, is a very great mistake. From the middle of the preceding century, the united Colonies of New-England, held annual, or femiannual meetings of Commissioners, on their common concerns, for above forty years. From the reign of Queen Anne, to that of George the fecond, Governors, and delegates from Councils and Assemblies, occasionally met in central places, to hold conferences relative to the operations of war, or treaties with the Indian tribes.* These meetings, usually called by the name of Congresses, though unknown, or difregarded in Britain, were familiar to the people of America; and what could be a more natural or obvious step, in a time of common danger, than to assemble by deputies, and confer on the means of fafety? Precedents were numerous, that Governors and delegates had held these Assemblies, when their interests were united; what then should hinder the people from following the example, when their interest required them to meet, without their Governors, who were endeavoring to maintain a feparate interest?

At the meeting of the Assembly of May 10. New-Hampshire, in the spring, the House of Representatives, conformably to the proceedings of the Assemblies in the other Colonies, appointed a committee of correspondence. The Governor, who had in vain labored to prevent this measure, adjourned the Assembly, and after a lune s.

few days, diffolyed it; hoping, by this means, to dissolve the committee also. But they were not restricted by forms. On a fummons iffued by the committee, the Representatives met again, in their own chamber. The Governor, attended Tuly 6. by the Sheriff of the county, went among them. They rose at his entrance. He declared their meeting illegal, and directed the Sheriff to make open proclamation, for all persons to disperse, and keep the King's peace. When he had retired they refumed their feats; but, on further confideration, adjourned to another house; and after some conversation, wrote letters to all the towns in the Province; requesting them to fend deputies, to hold a Convention at Exeter, who should choose delegates for a general Congress; and to pay their respective quotas of two hundred pounds, agreeably to the last proportion of the Provincial tax. They also recommended a day of fasting and prayer, to be observed by the several congregations, on account of the gloomy appearance of public affairs. The day was observed, with religious folemnity. The money was col-July 14. lected. Eighty-five duputies were chosen and met at Exeter, where they delegated July 21. Nathaniel Folfom and John Sullivan,

Efquires,

Esquires, to attend the proposed Congress, at Philadelphia, in September, and delivered to them the money which had been collected, to defray their expenses. They also recommended the distressed state of Boston, to the commiseration of their brethren in New-Hampshire; and contributions were raifed in many of the towns for their relief

The Governor was now convinced, and in his letters to the ministry acknowledged, Parlia, that 'the union of the Colonics would 'not be loft in New-Hampshire.' At vol I, page the same time, he did the people the juitice to fay, that they had abstained from violence and outrage, and that the laws had their courfe. In his letters which were published by the ministry, there appears a spirit of candor toward the people, as well as a defire to recommend himfelf to the approbation of his superiors. Though he faw another authority rifing in the Province, founded on the broad basis of public opinion, and unrestrained reprefentation, an authority over which he had no influence or control; yet he endeavored to preferve the shadow of the royal government, and keep up its forms fpirit of the people.* That his wish was to prevent a rupture, there is sufficient evidence, for candor to believe. But it cannot be thought strange, that in his endeavors to comply with the expectations of the ministry, and their instruments, which he conceived to be his duty, he should fall into such a snare, as to lose the affections of the people; for it was impossible to please both.

The troops in Boston wanted barracks, to fecure them against the approaching winter. The artificers of the town, were, by the popular voice, restrained from working in the fervice of government. General Gage was therefore obliged to fend for affiftance to the neighboring Governors, and, among others, to Governor Wentworth. Instead of convening his Council for their advice, or iffuing a proclamation, inviting help and promifing reward, he privately employed a perfon to hire carpenters to go to Boston. friends reprobated his conduct. The 1774. Committee of Portsmouth, at the head of which, was his uncle, Hunking Wentworth, bore their public testimony against it; and cenfured him, not by name, but by implication, as 'an enemy to the community,' and the men whom he had employed, as 'unworthy of fociety.' The agent in this fecret bufinefs, was brought on his knees before the committee of Rochefter, and made an humble acknowledgment. This prudent step of the committee, difarmed the popular rage, and prevented any injury to his person or property.

The transactions of the Congress which met at Philadelphia, were univerfally ap- Sept. 4. proved. The fpirit of them was firm, but pacific. The mode of opposition, to the arbitrary claims of Britain, which they recommended, was non-importation and non-confumption. But in the close of their address, to their constituents, they advised them to 'extend their views to the most unhappy events, and to be in 'all respects prepared for every contin-"gency.' Not long after this advice was made public, a contingency presented itfelf, in which the people of New-Hampshire gave an example of that spirit, by which the whole country was animated.

Dec. 13.

An order having been paffed by the King in Council, prohibiting the exportation of gunpowder and other military stores, to America; a copy of it was brought by express to Portsmouth, at a time, when a ship of war was daily expected from Boston, with a party of troops, to take possession of fort William and Mary, at the entrance of the harbour. The committee of the town, with all poffible fecrefy and dispatch, collected a company, from that and some of the neighboring towns; and before the Governor had any fuspicion of their intentions, they proceeded to Newcastle, and assaulted the fort. The Captain and his five men (which was the whole garrison) were confined, and one hundred barrels of powder were carried off. The next day, another company went and removed fifteen of the lightest cannon, and all the fmall arms, with fome other warlike stores; which they distributed in the several towns, under the care of the committees. Major John Sullivan, and Captain John Langdon, diffinguished themselves, as leaders in this affair. It was transacted with great expedition and alacrity, and in the most fortunate point of time; just before the arrival of the Scarborough frigate,

frigate, and Canfeau floop, with feveral companies of foldiers; who took possesfion of the fort, and of the heavy cannon which had not been removed.

The Governor put the five men, who belonged to the fort, on board the ships of war, to be referved as evidences in case of a profecution of the offenders for high treason; and having consulted Council in this and the neighbouring Province, thought it his duty; that he might prevent any charge of misprision of treason against himself; to dismis from public trust, all those persons concerned in the affault of the fort, who had held any office under the government, and concerning whose proceedings he had authentic testimony. He also issued a proclamation, commanding all officers, civil and military, to affift in detecting and fecuring the offenders; and exhorting all the people to beware of being feduced, by the false arts and menaces of abandoned men.

It was thought proper by the Governor and some of his friends, to form an association, for the support of the royal government, and for their mutual defence. They boasted, that an hundred men could be procured, from the ships, at a minute's warning. This transaction exposed the

Jan. 25.

1775. weakness of the cause, which they meant to support; for what could an hundred men do against the whole country?

A fecond convention of deputies met at Exeter, to confult on the state of affairs, and appoint delegates for the next general Congress, to be holden on the tenth of May, at Philadelphia. Major Sullivan and Captain Langdon were chosen; and the fum of two hundred and fifty pounds, was ordered to defray their expenses. This convention issued an address to the people, warning them of their danger; exhorting them to union, peace and harmony, frugality, industry, manufactures, and learning the military art; that they might be able, if necessary, to defend the country against invacion. They appointed a committee of correspondence, with power to call another convention, when they flould judge it necessary.

The winter passed away in gloomy apprehension and anxiety. Men of consideration saw that a wide breach was made, and that it could not easily be closed. Some happy genius was wanted to plan, and wisdom on both sides to adopt, a constitution for Britain and America. Royal charters and instructions, acts of Parliaments and precedents of all kinds, were at best but a rotten foundation. The store of temporary expedients was exhausted. It was doubtful whether force could generate fubmission, or whether resistance could enervate force. Neither country was fensible of the strength and resources of the other. The press teemed with arguments on both fides; but no plan of conciliation was adopted. A fair and candid reprefentation of our grievances could not be received, in the Court of Britain. Each fide was tenacious of its claims, and there appeared no disposition to relax. When two independent nations are in fuch a state, they generally find among their friends and allies, some mediating power, to bring them to terms and prevent a rupture. Between Britain and America, no mediator could be found. The controverfy could be decided only by the fupreme Arbiter of nations.

The first ships, which arrived in the spring, brought us news that the petition of Congress was graciously received by the King; and that the merchants of England were petitioning in our favor. This revived our hopes. Soon after we were informed, that the Parliament had voted the existence of a rebellion in Massachusetts; and that the other Colonies were aiding and affifting: That the Lords and Com-1775. mons had addressed the King, to enforce the revenue-acts, and had affured him, that they would stand by him, with their lives and fortunes : That the King had demanded an augmentation of his forces, by fea and land: That the commerce of the New-England Colonies was to be restrained, and their fishery prohibited; and that an additional number of troops, horse and foot, were ordered to America. These tidings threw us into diffress. A war feemed inevitable; and a gloom overspread the whole country. The people of Boston began to remove from the town; and those, who could not remove, were folicitous to fecure their most valuable effects. In the midst of this distress, a frigate arrived express from England; with an account of a propofal made and voted in Parliament, which was called Lord North's conciliatory proposition. It was this; ' that when any Colony by their Gover-' nor, Council and Assembly, shall engage ' to make provision, for the support of ' civil government, and administration of 'justice, in such Colony; it will be proper, ' if fuch propofal be approved by the King 'and Parliament, for fo long time as fuch ' provision shall be made, to forbear to

April 14.

'levy any duties or taxes in fuch Colony,
'except for the regulation of commerce;
'the year proceeds of which shall be care

' the neat proceeds of which shall be carried to the account of fuch Colony refpectively. The troops, however, were to remain; and the refractory Colonies were to be punished. This proposition was faid to be founded on some advice, received from New-York, that if concessions were made by Parliament, they would censure the proceedings of Congress, and break the union of the Colonies. The proposal was evidently a bait thrown out to divide us, and tempt us to defert the Colony of Massachusetts; who could not comply, without submitting to the alteration, lately made by Parliament in their charter.

What might have been the effect of this proposition in the other Colonies, if it had been allowed time to operate, is uncertain. The conduct of General Gage, on receiving this news, was in the highest degree absurd and inconsistent. He had been blamed in Parliament for his inactivity. He had friends in Boston, who constantly assured him, that the people in the country would not dare to face his troops. He had been informed of a magazine of provisions and stores, at Concord, laid up by the Provincial Congress, in case of extremity. With the news of the conciliatory proposition, he received orders to make an experiment of its fuccess. On the eighteenth day of April, he issued writs for calling a general Affembly, to comply with the proposed terms of reconciliation; and in the night following, he privately dispatched a body of his troops, to destroy the magazine at Concord; and to feize fome of the leaders of opposition, who had retired from the town. He was induced to believe, that if between the iffuing of his writs, and the meeting of the Assembly, he could strike a bold stroke; it would to intimidate the people, and unfit them for defence, that they would eafily comply with the terms proposed. But he totally mistook the genius of the people of New-England. Nor were his defigns carried on fo fecretly as he imagined. The popular leaders were feafonably apprifed of their danger, and kept themselves out of his reach. The country was alarmed, by expresses sent off in the night, before he had taken the precaution to shut the avenues of the town. A company of armed citizens kept guard at Lexington, on the road to Concord. The British troops, when they appeared in the morning, having ordered them to disperse, fired upon 1775. them, as they were retiring, and killed April 19. feveral on the foot. They then proceeded to Concord, and destroyed such of the stores as had not been removed; and having accomplished their object, as far as they were able, they retreated through showers of musquetry from the people. who fuddenly collected from all quarters to oppose them.

On the alarm of this act of hostility, the people of New-Hampshire, and of the other Colonies, took arms, and flew to the affistance of their brethren.

Notwithstanding this ill-advised and unfuccefsful attempt of Gage, Governor Wentworth had very fanguine hopes of the good effect of the 'conciliatory propofition; and determined, as he faid, 'to plant 'the root of peace in New-Hampshire.' He fummoned a new Assembly; and in his fpeech, entreated them, as 'the only May 4. ' legal and conftitutional Representatives of the people, to direct their counfels ' to fuch measures, as might tend to secure 'their peace and fafety; and effectually ' lead to a restoration of the public tran-' quillity; and an affectionate reconcilia-'tion with the mother country.' The House defired a short recess, that they might might advise with their constituents on so momentous a question; and the Governor reluctantly consented to adjourn them to the twelfth day of June.

In the mean time, the officers and men of the Scarborough began to difmantle the fort; they also stopped two vessels laden with provisions, which were coming into the harbor; and notwithstanding the most pressing remonstrances of the inhabitants, and folicitation of the Governor, refused to release them. Upon this, a body of armed men, went to a battery on Jerry's point, at Great Island, and took away eight cannon of twenty-four and thirty-two pound shot, which they brought up to Portfmouth; and whilst they were engaged in this work, the Canfeau floop convoyed the two provision vetlels to Bofton, for the supply of the fleet and army.

May 26.

A new convention was at this time fiting at Exeter; in which the Province was more fully and equally represented, than it ever had been before. They paffed votes of thanks to those who had taken the powder and guns from the fort, in the preceding winter, and to those who had removed the cannon from the battery. They also instructed the Representatives, how to act at the next meeting of the Afsembly; fembly; and the voice of the convention was regarded by the House, as the voice of their constituents.

At the adjournment, the Governor June 12. again recommended 'the conciliatory proposition.' The first step which the House took, was in obedience to the voice of the convention, to expel three members whom the Governor had called by the King's writ, from three new townships; whilst many other towns, of much older standing, and more populous, were neglected, and never enjoyed the privilege of representation, but in the newly-established conventions. The Governor then adjourned the Affembly to the eleventh of July. One of the expelled members, having spoken his mind freely without doors, was assaulted by the populace, and took shelter in the Governor's house. The people demanded him, and brought a gun, mounted on a carriage, to the door; upon which the offender was delivered up, and conveyed to Exeter. The Governor, conceiving himfelf infulted, retired to the fort; and his house became a scene of pillage.

When the Affembly met again, he fent July 11. a message from the fort, and adjourned them to the twenty-eighth of September;

but they never met any more. He continued under the protection of the Scarborough, and another ship of war, till all the remaining cannon of the fort were taken on board, and then sailed for Boston. In September he came to the Isles of Shoals, and there issued a proclamation, adjourning the Assembly to the next April. This was the last act of his administration, and the last time that he set his foot in the Province. Thus an end was put to the British Government in New-Hampshire, when it had subsisted ninety-sive years.

From this view of the administration of Governor Wentworth, it is easy to conclude, that his intentions were pacific; and whilst the temper of the times allowed him to act agreeably to his own principles, his government was acceptable and beneficial; but when matters had come to the worst, his faults were as few, and his conduct as temperate, as could be expected from a fervant of the Crown. If a comparison be drawn, between him and most of the other Governors on this continent, at the beginning of the revolution, he must appear to advantage. Instead of widening the breach, he endeavored to close it; and when his efforts failed, he retired from a fituation, where he could no longer exercife the office of a Governor; leaving his eftate and many of his friends; and preferving only his commission, as surveyor of the King's woods; the limits of which were much contrasted by the succeeding revolution.

HEN the controverfy with Britain fhewed fymptoms of hostility, and the defign of the Ministry and Parliament to provoke us to arms became apparent; the people of New-Hampshire began feriously to meditate the defence of their country. It was uncertain in what manner the scene would open; for this and other reasons no regular plan of opera-tions could be formed. By the old militia law, every male inhabitant, from fixteen years old to fixty, was obliged to be provided with a musket and bayonet, knapfack, cartridge-box, one pound of powder, twenty bullets and twelve flints. Every town was obliged to keep in readiness one barrel of powder, two hundred pounds of lead and three hundred flints, for every fixty men; befide a quantity of arms and ammunition for the supply of such as were not able to provide themselves with the necessary necessary articles. Even those persons who were exempted from appearing at the common military trainings, were obliged to keep the same arms and ammunition. In a time of peace, these requisitions were neglected, and the people in general were not completely furnished, nor the towns supplied according to law. The care which the Governor had taken to appoint officers of militia and review the regiments, for fome years before, had awakened their attention to the duties of the parade; which were performed with renewed ardor, after the provincial convention had recommended the learning of military exercises and manœuvres. Voluntary affociations were formed for this purpose, and the most experienced persons were chosen to command on these occasions. To prevent false rumors and confusion, the committees of inspection in each town were also committees of correspondence, by whom all intelligence concerning the motions of the British, were to be communicated; and proper persons were retained to carry expresses when there should be occasion.

In this state of anxiety and expectation; when an early spring had invited the husbandman to the labor of the field; General Gage thought it proper to open the drama of war. The alarm was immediately communicated from town to town through the whole country, and volunteers flocked from all parts; till a body of ten thousand men assembled in the neighborhood of Boston, completely invested it on the land side, and cut off all communication with the country.

On the first alarm, about twelve hundred men marched from the nearest parts of New-Hampshire, to join their brethren, who had affembled in arms about Bofton. Of these, some returned; others formed themselves into two regiments, under the authority of the Massachusetts Conven-As foon as the Provincial Congress of New-Hampshire met, they voted to raise two thousand men, to be formed into three regiments; those which were already there to be accounted as two, and another to be inlifted immediately. These men engaged to serve till the last day of December, unless sooner discharged. The command of these regiments was given to the Colonels John Stark, James Reed and Enoch Poor. The two former were prefent in the memorable battle on the heights of Charlestown, being posted on the left wing, behind a fence; from which they forely galled the British as

In their retreat they loft feveral men, and among others, the brave Major Andrew McClary, who was killed by a cannon shot after he had passed the isthmus of Charlestown. On the alarm occasioned by this battle, the third regiment collected and marched to the camp; and with the other New- June 20. Hampshire troops was posted on the left wing of the army at Winter-Hill, under the immediate command of Brigadier General Sullivan, who with the other general officers, received his appointment from Congress.

It had been a common fentiment among the British troops, that the Americans would not dare to fight with them. This battle effectually convinced them of their mistake. They found that fighting with us was a ferious thing; and the lofs which they fustained in this battle, evidently had an influence on their fubfequent operations.

Whilst the Scarborough frigate remained in the harbour of Piscataqua, frequent bickerings happened between her crew and the inhabitants. Captain Berkeley seized all inward bound vessels, and sent them to Boston. He also prevented the Aa4 boats 1775 boats belonging to the river from going out to catch fish. This conduct was conformable to the orders which he had received to execute the restraining act. In return, his boats were not permitted to fetch provisions from the town; and one of them was fired upon in the night, by fome of the guards stationed on the shore. A compromife, at length, was made between him and the committee of the town; open boats were permitted to pass, to catch fish for the inhabitants; and his boats were allowed to take fresh provisions for the use of the ship. This agreement subfifted but a short time, and finally all intercourse was cut off.

August 24.

After the departure of the ship, the people went in volunteer parties, under the direction of Major Ezekiel Worthen, whom the convention appointed Engineer, and built forts on the points of two islands, which form a narrow channel, about a mile below the town of Portfmouth. One of these was called Fort Washington, and the other Fort Sullivan. The cannon which had been saved from the old fort and battery were mounted here, and the town was thought to be secure from being surprised by ships of war.

The tenth of September was the last 1775. day of exportation fixed by the general Sept. 10. ed out of the harbor were feized by the British cruisers and carried into Boston. One was retaken by a privateer of Beverly and carried into Cape-Anne.

In the following month, feveral British on is armed veffels were fent to burn the town of Falmouth; which was in part effected, by throwing carcafes and fending a party on shore, under cover of their guns. It was fuspected that they had the same defign against Portsmouth. General Washington dispatched Brigadier General Sullivan from the camp at Cambridge, with orders to take the command of the militia and defend the harbour of Pascatagua. On this occasion, the works erected on the islands were strengthened; a boom, conftructed with mafts and chains, was thrown across the Narrows, which was feveral times broken by the rapidity of the current, until it was found impossible to fecure the paffage by fuch means; an old ship was scuttled and funk in the northern channel of the river; a company of rifle-men, from the camp, was posted on Great-Island; and fire-rafts were constructed to burn the enemy's shipping.

Thefe

These preparations served to keep up the spirits of the people; but many families, not thinking themselves safe in Portsmouth, removed into the country, and there remained till the next spring.

A spirit of violent resentment was excited against all who were suspected of a disposition inimical to the American cause. Some persons were taken up on suspicion and imprisoned; some fled to Nova-Scotia, or to England, or joined the British army in Boston. Others were restricted to certain limits and their motions continually watched. The passions of jealousy, hatred and revenge were freely indulged, and the tongue of flander was under no restraint. Wife and good men fecretly lamented these excesses; but no effectual remedy could be administered. All commissions under the former authority being annulled, the courts of justice were shut, and the fword of magistracy was sheathed. The Provincial Convention directed the general affairs of the war; and town committees had a discretionary, but undefined power to preferve domestic peace. Habits of decency, family government, and the good examples of influential persons, contributed, more to maintain order than any other authority. The value of these secret bonds of fociety was now more than ever con-ipicuous.

In the convention which met at Exeter, in May, and continued fitting with but MS Records of cone little interruption till November, one hundred and two towns were reprefented. by one hundred and thirty-three members. Their first care was to establish post offices; to appoint a committee of supplies for the army, and a committee of fafety. To this last committee, the general instruction was fimilar to that, given by the Romans, to their Dictators, 'to take un-' der consideration, all matters in which ' the welfare of the Province, in the fecu-' rity of their rights, is concerned; and to take the utmost care, that the public " fustain no damage.'* Particular instructions were given to them, from time to time, as occasion required. They were confidered as the supreme executive; and during the recess of the convention, their orders and recommendations had the fame effect as the acts and resolves of that

pointed in his place. The records of deeds, and of the probate office, for the county of Rockingham, were also removed to Exeter, as a place of greater fafety than Portsmouth. The former Treasurer, George Jaffrey, Efq. was applied to for the public money in his hands, which, to the amount of one thousand five hundred and fixteen pounds four shillings and eight pence, he delivered; and Nicholas Gilman, Efq. was appointed Treasurer in his room.

During this year, three emissions of paper bills were made. The first, of ten thousand and fifty pounds; the second, of ten thousand pounds; and the third, of twenty thousand pounds. For the amount of those fums, the Treasurer gave his obligation in fmall notes, which paffed for a time, as current money, equal in value to filver and gold. But as emissions were multiplied, as the redemption of the bills was put off to diftant periods, and the bills themselves were counterfeited, it was impossible for them long to hold their value.

Befide the three regiments which made part of the American army at Cambridge, a company a company of artillery was raifed to do duty at the forts. A company of rangers was posted on Connecticut river; and two companies more were appointed, to be ready to march wherever the committee of fafety should direct. The whole militia was divided into twelve regiments: the field officers were appointed by the convention, and the inferior officers were chosen by the companies. Out of the militia were inlifted four regiments of minute-men, fo called, because they were to be ready at a minute's warning. They were constantly trained to military duty, and when called to fervice, were allowed the same pay as the regiments in the continental army. In the fucceeding winter, when the Connecticut forces had withdrawn from the camp, because their time of fervice was expired, fixteen companies of the New-Hampshire militia, of fixtyone men each, supplied their place, till the British troops evacuated Boston.

The convention having been appointed for fix months only; before the expiration of that time, applied to the general Congress for their advice, respecting some mode of government for the future. In answer to which, the Congress recom-

1775. Nov. 3. mended to them, 'to call a full and free ' representation of the people; that these Representatives, if they should think it ' necessary, might establish such a form of government, as, in their judgment, would best conduce to the happiness of the ' people, and most effectually tend to fe-' cure peace and good order in the Prov-' ince, during the continuance of the dif-' pute between Great-Britain and the Col-'onies.' On receiving this advice, the convention took into their confideration the mode in which a full and free reprefentation should be called; and finally agreed, that each elector should possess a real estate of twenty pounds value, and every candidate for election, one of three hundred pounds; that every town, confifting of one hundred families, should fend one Representative, and one more for every hundred families; and that those towns which contained a lefs number than one hundred should be classed. They had before ordered a furvey to be made of the number of people in the feveral counties; and having obtained it, they determined, that the number of Representatives to the next convention, should bear the following proportion to the number of people, viz.

These Representatives were to be empowered, by their constituents, to assume government as recommended by the general Congress, and to continue for one whole year from the time of such assumption. The wages of the members were to be paid by the feveral towns, and their travelling expenses out of the public treasury. Having formed this plan, and fent copies of it to the feveral towns, the convention diffolyed.

This convention was composed chiefly of men who knew nothing of the theory of government, and had never before been concerned in public bufinefs. In the short term of fix months, they acquired fo much knowledge by experience, as to be convinced, that it was improper for a legislative Assembly to consist of one House only. As foon as the new convention came together, they drew up a temporary form of government; and, agreeably to the trust reposed in them by their constituents, having affumed the name and authority of a House of Representatives, they proceeded to choose twelve persons, to be a distinct branch of the legislature; by the name of a Council. Of these, five were chosen from the county of Rockingham, two from Strafford, two from Hillfborough, two from Cheshire and one from Grafton. These were empowered to elect their own President, and any seven of them were to be a quorum. It was ordained, that no act or refolve should be valid, unless passed by both branches of the legislature; that all money bills should originate in the House of Representatives; that neither House should adjourn for more than two days, without the confent of the other; that a Secretary, and all other public officers of the Colony, and of each County, for the current year, all general and field officers of militia, and all officers of the marching regiments, should be appointed by the two Houses; all subordinate militia officers by their respective companies; that the present Assembly should subsist one year, and if the dispute with Britain should continue longer, and the general Congress should give no directions to the contrary, that precepts should be issued annually to the several towns towns on or before the first day of No- 1776. vember for the choice of Counfellors and Representatives, to be returned by the third Wednesday in December.

In this hafty production, there were fome material defects. One was the want of an executive branch of government. To remedy this, the two Houses, during their fession, performed executive as well as legislative duty; and at every adjournment appointed a committee of fafety, to fit in the recess, with the same powers, as had been given in the preceding year, by the convention. The number of this committee varied from fix to fixteen. The President of the Council was also President of this executive Committee. The person chosen to fill this chair was an old, tried. faithful fervant of the public, the honorable Meshech Weare, Efq. who was also appointed Chief Justice of the Superior Court. So great was the confidence of the people in this gentleman, that they fcrupled not to invest him, at the same time, with the highest offices, legislative, executive, and judicial; in which he was continued by annual elections during the whole war.

This constitution was prefaced with feveral reasons for adopting government, viz. That Rh

·1776. That the British Parliament had, by many grievous and oppressive acts, deprived us of our native rights; to enforce obedience to which acts, the ministry of that kingdom had fent a powerful fleet and army into this country, and had wantonly and cruelly abused their power, in destroying our lives and property; that the fudden and abrupt departure of our late Governor, had left us destitute of legislation; that no judicial Courts were open to punish offenders; and that the continental Congress had recommended the adoption of a form of government. Upon these grounds the convention made a declaration in these words, 'We con-' ceive ourselves reduced to the necessity of establishing a form of government, to ' continue during the present unhappy and unnatural contest with Great Brit-'ain; protesting and declaring, that we 'never fought to throw off our depen-'dence on Great-Britain; but felt our-' felves happy under her protection, whilft ' we could enjoy our constitutional rights ' and privileges; and that we shall re-' joice, if fuch a reconciliation between us and our parent State can be effected, as ' shall be approved by the continental Congress, in whose prudence and wisdom "we confide." Such

Such was the language, and fuch were the fentiments of the people at that time; and had the British government, on the removal of their troops from Boston, treated with us, in answer to our last petition, upon the principle of reconciliation; and restored us to the state in which we were before the stamp-act was made, they might even then, have preserved their connexion with us. But in the course of a few months, we not only found our petitions difregarded, and our professions of attachment to the parent state treated as hypocritical; but their hostile intentions became so apparent, and our fituation was fo fingular, that there could be no hope of fafety for us, without diffolving our connexion with them, and affuming that equal rank among the powers of the earth for which nature had destined us, and to which the voice of reason and Providence loudly called us. Britain had engaged foreign mercenaries to affift in subjugating us; justice required that we should in our turn court foreign aid; but this could not be had, whilft we acknowledged ourselves subjects of that Crown against whose power we were flruggling. The exertions which we had made, and the blood which we had fhed, were deemed too great a price Bb2 for reconciliation to a power which still claimed the right 'to bind us in all cases 'whatfoever,' and which held out to us unconditional fubmiffion, as the only terms on which we were to expect even a pardon. Subjection to a Prince who had thrown us out of his protection; who had ruined our commerce, destroyed our cities and spilled our blood; and who would not govern us at all, without the interpofition of a legislative body, in whose election we had no voice, was an idea too abfurd to be any longer entertained. These sentiments, being fet in their just light by various publications and addresses, had such force as to produce a total change of the public opinion. Independence became the general voice of the fame people, who but a few months before had petitioned for reconciliation. When this could not be had, but on terms difgraceful to the caufe which we had undertaken to support, we were driven to that as our only refuge. The minds of the people at large in most of the Colonies being thus influenced, they called upon their delegates in Congress to execute the act which should sever us from foreign dominion, and put us into a fituation to govern ourselves.*

^{*} On the 18th of June 1776, a committee was cholen by the Affembly of New Hamphire 'to make a draught of a declaration of the Ge-"neral Affembly for the INDEPENDENCE of the united Colonies on

It ought ever to be remembered, that the declaration of our independence was late made, at a point of time, when no royal Governor had even the shadow of authority in any of the Colonies; and when no British troops had any footing on this Continent. The country was then abfolutely our own. A formidable force was indeed collected on our coasts, ready to invade us; and in the face of that armament this decifive step was taken. The declaration was received with joy by the American army then affembled at New-York. Within fourteen days it was published by July 18. beat of drum in all the shire towns of New-Hampshire. It relieved us from a state of embarrassment. We then knew the ground on which we stood, and from that time every thing affumed a new appearance. The jargon of distinctions between the limits of authority on the one fide, and of liberty on the other, was done away. The fingle question was, whether we should be conquered Provinces, or free Observaand independent States. On this question, American every person was able to form his own Revolution p. 57, 52. judgment; and it was of fuch magnitude that no man could be at a loss to stake his life on its decision.

It is amuling to recolled, at this diftance of time, that one effect of independence was an averfion to every thing which bore the name and marks of royalty. Sign boards on which were painted the King's aims, or the crown and fceptre, or the portraits of any branches of the royal family, were pulled down or defaced. Pictures and efcutcheons of the fame kind in private houses were inverted or concealed. The names of ftreets, which had been called after a King or Queen were altered; and the half-pence, which bore the name of George III, were either refused in payment, or degraded to farthings, These last have not yet recovered their value.

The new Affembly began their adminiftration by establishing Judicial Courts, on the same system as before, excepting that the Court of Appeals, which had long been esteemed a grievance, was abolished, and all appeals to Great-Britain were prohibited. Appeals from the Probate Courts, which formerly came before the Governor and Council, were transferred to the Superior Court, whose judgment was now made final. Encouragement was given to sit out armed vessels, and a maritime Court was established for the trial of captures by

lea. A law was made to punish the counterfeiting of the paper bills of this and of the United States; and to make them 'a tender for any money due by deed or ' fimple contract.' After the declaration of independence the style of Colony was changed for that of the STATE of New-Hampshire. A new law was enacted to regulate the militia. More paper bills were issued to pay the expenses of the war; and provision was made for drawing in fome of the bills by taxes. Doubts had arisen, whether the former laws were in force; a special act was therefore passed; reviving and re-enacting all the laws which were in force, at the time when govern+ ment was assumed; as far as they were not repugnant to the new form, or to the independence of the Colonies, or not actually repealed. rity. Powder mills were erected, and the manufacture of gunpowder was, after fome time, established; but notwithstanding all our exertions, foreign supplies were necessary.

For the service of this year, two thoufand men were raised, and formed into three regiments, under the same commanders as in the former year. Three hundred men were posted at the forts in the harbour. Supplies of fire arms and ammunition were sent to the western parts of the State, and a regiment was raised in that quarter, under the command of Col. Timothy Bedel, to be ready to march into Canada.

The three regiments went with the army under General Washington to New-York; and thence were ordered up the Hudson, and down the lakes into Canada, under the immediate command of Brigadier General Sullivan. The defign of this movement was to fuccour and reinforce the army, which had been fent, the preceding year, against Quebec; and which was now retreating before a fuperior force, which had arrived from Britain, as early as the navigation of the St. Lawrence was opened. Our troops having met the retreating army at the mouth of the Sorel, threw up some slight works round their camp.

camp. General Thomas, who had com- 1776. manded the army after the fall of the brave Montgomery, was dead of the smallpox. Arnold was engaged in stripping the merchants of Montreal, under pretence of fupplying the army; and Thompfon was taken prisoner in an unsuccessful attack on the village of Trois Rivieres. The command therefore devolved on Sullivan, who, finding a retreat necessary, conducted it with great prudence. At this time the American troops, and in particular the regiments of New-Hampshire, had taken the infection of the small-pox. The sick were placed in batteaux, and with the cannon and stores, were drawn against the rapid current, by the strength of men on shore, or wading-in the water; and fo close was the pursuit of the enemy, that they could fcarcely find time to kindle a fire to dress their victuals, or dry their clothes. At St. John's the pursuit ceased. On the arrival of our army at July 1. Ticonderoga, Sullivan, being superseded by Gates, returned to the main army at New-York. The troops in the northern department being reinforced by the militia of the neighbouring States, fortified the posts of Ticonderoga and Mount Independence. Befide the fmall-pox, a dyfentery and

When the danger of an attack on Ticonderoga for that feafon, was paffed, the remaining part of the New-Hampfhire troops marched by the way of the Minifinks, into Pennfylvania. There they joined General Washington, and affisted in the glorious capture of the Hessians at Trenton, and afterward in the battle of Princeton. Though worn down with fatigue, and almost destitute of clothing, in that inclement season, they continued in the service six weeks after the term of their inlistment had expired; and two regiments of the militia which were sent

By this time the inconvenience of maintaining an army, by annual inliftments and temporary levies, was feverely felt, and generally reprobated; and the Congress, though flow in liftening to remonstrances on this head, were obliged to adopt a more permanent establishment. In recruiting the army for the next year, the officers were appointed by Congress, during the war; and the men inlisted either for that term, or for

for three years. The commanders of the three regiments of New-Hampshire, were the Colonels Joseph Cilley, Nathan Hale and Alexander Scammell. These regiments were supplied with new French arms; and their rendezvous was at Ticonderoga, under the immediate command of Brigadier General Poor. There they remained, till the approach of the British July 6, army under General Burgoyne, rendered it eligible to abandon that post. On the retreat, Col. Hale's battalion was ordered to cover the rear of the invalids, by which means, he was feven miles behind the main body. The next morning he was attacked, by an advanced party of the enemy at Hubberton. In this engagement, Major Titcomb of the New-Hampfhire troops, was wounded. Col. Hale, Captains Robertson, Carr, and Norris, Adjutant Elliot, and two other officers were taken prisoners, with about one hundred men. The main body of the army continued their retreat to Saratoga. On their way they had a skirmish with the enemy at Fort Anne, in which Captain Weare, fon of the Prefident, was mortally wounded, and died at Albany.

Hampshire Grants (who had now formed themselves into a new State) wrote in the most pressing terms, to the committee of fafety at Exeter for affiftance, and faid that if none should be afforded to them. they should be obliged to retreat to the New-England States for fafety. When the news of this affair reached New-Hampthire, the Assembly had finished their spring fession and returned home. A summons from the committee brought them together again; and in a short session of three days only, they took the most effectual and decifive steps for the defence of the country. They formed the whole militia of the State into two Brigades; of the first they gave the command to William Whipple, and of the fecond to John Stark. They ordered one fourth part of Stark's brigade, and one fourth of three regiments of the other brigade, to march immediately under his command, to stop the progress of the enemy on our western frontiers.' They ordered the militia officers, to take away arms, from all persons, who scrupled or refused to affift, in defending the country; and appointed a day of fasting and prayer, which was observed with great so-

The appointment of Stark, to this command, with the same pay as a Brigadier in the Continental service, was peculiarly grateful to the people as well as to himfelf. In an arrangement of general officers, in the preceding year, a junior officer had been promoted, whilft he was neglected. He had written on this subject to Congress, and his letters were laid on the table. He therefore quitted the army, and retired to his own estate. He was now by the unanimous voice of his fellow-citizens. invested with a separate command, and received orders to 'repair to Charlestown of orders on Connecticut river; there to consult on file. with a committee of the New-Hamp-' shire Grants, respecting his future operations and the supply of his men with r provisions; to take the command of the ' militia and march' into the Grants : to ' act in conjunction with the troops of that had taken post at Manchester, twenty miles northward of Bennington. Here-Stark joined him, and met with General Lincoln, who had been fent from Stillwater, by General Schuyler, commander of the northern department, to conduct the militia to the west side of Hudson's river. Stark informed him of his orders, and of the danger which the inhabitants of the Grants apprehended from the enemy, and from their difaffected neighbours; that he had confulted with the committee, and that it was the determination of the people, in case he should join the Continental army and leave them exposed, that they would retire to the east of Connecticut river; in which case New-Hampshire would be a frontier. He therefore determined to remain on the flank of the enemy, and to watch their motions. For this purpose he collected his force at Bennington, and left Warner with his regiment at Manchester. A report of this determination was transmitted to Congress, and the orders on which it was founded were by them disapproved; but the propriety of it was evinced by subsequent facts.

General Burgoyne, with the main body of the British army lay at Fort Edward. Thence he detached Lieut. Col. Baum, with about fifteen hundred of his German troops, and one hundred Indians, to pervade the Grants as far as Connecticut river. with a view to collect horses to mount the dragoons, and cattle, both for labour and provisions; and to return to the army with his booty. He was to perfuade the people among whom he should pass, that his detachment was the advanced guard of the British army, which was marching to Boston. He was accompanied by Colonel Skeene, who was well acquainted with the country; and he was ordered to fecure his camp by night,"

The Indians, who preceded this detachment, being discovered about twelve Stark's MS miles from Bennington; Stark detached letters in Col. Greg, with two hundred men, to stop their march. In the evening of the fame day, he was informed that a body of regular troops, with a train of artillery, was in full march for Bennington. The next Aug. 14. morning he marched with his whole brigade, and some of the militia of the Grants, to support Greg, who found himself unable to withstand the superior number of the enemy. Having proceeded about four miles, he met Greg retreating, and the main body of the enemy purfuing, within half a mile of his rear. When they difcovered Stark's column, they halted in an advantageous 1 advantageous position; and he drew up his men on an eminence in open view; but could not bring them to an engagement. He then marched back, about a mile, and encamped; leaving a few men to skirmish with them; who killed thirty of the enemy and two of the Indian chiefs. The next day was rainy. Stark kept his position, and fent out parties to harrass the enemy. Many of the Indians took this opportunity to desert; because, as they faid, 'the woods were full of yankees.' On the following morning Stark was joined by a company of militia from the Grants, and another from the county of Berkshire in Massachusetts. His whole force amounted to about fixteen hundred. He fent Col. Nichols, with two hundred and fifty men, to the rear of the enemy's left wing; and Col. Hendrick, with three hundred, to the rear of their right. He placed three hundred to oppose their front and draw their attention. Then fending Colonels Hubbard and Stickney, with two hundred to attack the right wing, and one hundred more to reinforce Nichols in the rear of their left, the attack began in that quarter precifely at three of the clock in the afternoon. It was immediately seconded by the other detachments; and at the same time Stark himself advanced with the main body. The engagement lasted two hours: at the end of which he forced their breaftworks, took two pieces of brass cannon and a number of prisoners; the rest retreated.

Just at this instant, he received intelligence that another body of the enemy was within two miles of him. This was a reinforcement for which Baum had fent. when he first knew the force which he was to oppose. It was commanded by Col. Breyman. Happily Warner's regiment from Manchester came up with them and stopped them. Stark rallied his men and renewed the action: it was warm and desperate; he used, with success, the cannon which he had taken; and at funfet obliged the enemy to retreat. He purfued them till night, and then halted, to prevent his own men from killing each other, in the dark. He took from the enemy two other pieces of cannon, with all their baggage, waggons and horses. Two hundred and twenty-fix men were found dead on the field. Their commander, Baum, was taken and died of his wounds; befide whom, thirty-three officers, and above feven hundred privates, were made prisoners. Of Stark's brigade four officers and Cc ten privates were killed and forty-two were wounded.

Aug. 18.

In the account of this battle, which Stark fent to the committee of New-Hampthire, he faid, 'our people behaved with 'the greatest spirit and bravery imaginable. Had every man been an Alexander, or a Charles of Sweden, they could not ' have behaved better.' He was fenfible of the advantage of keeping on the flank of the enemy's main body; and therefore fent for one thousand men to replace those whose time had expired; but intimated to the committee that he himfelf should return with the brigade. "They cordially thanked him 'for the very effential fervice ' which he had done to the country,' but earnestly pressed him to continue in the command; and fent him a reinforcement, ' affuring the men that they were to ferve ' under General Stark.' This argument prevailed with the men to march, and with Stark to remain.

The prisoners taken in this battle were fent to Boston. The trophies were divided between New-Hampshire and Massachusetts. But Congress heard of this victory by accident. Having waited some time in expectation of letters, and none arriving; inquiry was made why Stark had had not written to Congress? He answered, that his correspondence with them was closed, as they had not attended to his last letters. They took the hint; and though they had but a few days before resolved, that the instructions which he had received were destructive of military subordination, and prejudicial to the common cause; yet they presented their thanks to him, and to the officers and troops under his command, and promoted him to the rank of a Brigadier General, in the army of the United States.

This victory gave a fevere check to the hopes of the enemy, and raifed the spirits of the people after long depression. It wholly changed the face of affairs in the northern department. Instead of disappointment and retreat, and the lofs of men by hard labor and fickness; we now were convinced, not only that our militia could fight without being covered by intrenchments; but that they were able, even without artillery, to cope with regular troops in their intrenchments. The fuccess thus gained was regarded as a good omen of farther advantages. 'Let us get them in-'to the woods,' was the language of the whole country. Burgoyne was daily putting his army into a more hazardous fitu-Cc2 ation :

ation; and we determined that no exertion should be wanting on our part to complete the ruin of his boafted enterprife. The northern army was reinforced by the militia of all the neighbouring States. Brigadier Whipple marched with a great part of his brigade; besides which, volunteers in abundance from every part of New-Hampshire flew to the army under General Gates. Two desperate battles were fought, the one at Stillwater and the other at Saratoga; in both of which, the troops of New-Hampshire had a large share of the honor due to the American army. In the former action, two Lieutenant Colonels, Adams and Colburne, and Lieutenant Thomas, were flain in the field; and feveral other brave officers were wounded, one of whom, Captain Bell, died in the hospital. In the latter, Lieut. Col. Conner and Lieut. McClary were killed, with a great number of their men; and Col. Scammel was wounded. The confequence of these battles was the furrender of Burgoyne's army. This grand. object being attained, the New-Hamp-fhire regiments performed a march of-forty miles, and forded the Mohawk river, below the falls, in the space of fourteen hours. The defign of this rapid movement movement was to check the progress of a detachment, commanded by the British General Clinton; who threatened Albany with the same destruction which he had spread in the country below; but on hearing the fate of Burgoyne, he returned quietly to New-York. The regiments then marched into Pennsylvania and passed the winter in huts at Valley-forge. Beside those officers stain at the northward, we sufficient a loss in the death of Major Edward Sherburne, Aid de Camp to General Sullivan, who was killed in a bold, but unsuccessful action at Germantown.

After the capture of Burgoyne's army, all danger of invasion from Canada ceased; and the theatre of the war was removed to the fouthward. The troops of New-Hampshire, being formed into a distinct brigade, partook of all the fervices and fufferings, to which their brethren were exposed. In the battle of Monmouth, a part of them were closely engaged, under the conduct of Col. Cilley and Lieut. Col. Dearborn; and behaved with fuch bravery as to merit the particular approbation of their illustrious General. They continued with the main body, all that campaign, and were hutted, in the following winter, at Reading.

In the summer of 1778, when a French fleet appeared on our coast, to aid us in the contest with Britain; an invasion of Rhode-Island, then possessed by the British, was projected, and General Sullivan had the command. Detachments of militia and volunteers, from Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, formed a part of his troops. But a violent storm, having prevented the co-operation of the French fleet, and driven them to sea; the army, after a few skirmishes, was under the disagreeable necessity of quitting the island; and the retreat was conducted by Sullivan with the greatest caution and produces.

with the greatest caution and prudence. When an expedition into the Indian country was determined on, General Sullivan was appointed to the command, and the New-Hampshire brigade made a part of his force. His route was up the river Sufguehanna into the country of the Senekas; a tract imperfectly known, and into which no troops had ever penetrated. The order of his march was planned with great judgment, and executed with much regularity and perfeverance. In feveral engagements with the Savages, the troops of New-Hampshire behaved with their usual intrepidity. Capt. Cloyes and Lieut. McAulay were killed, and Major Titcomb was again badly wounded. The provi- 1779: fions of the army falling fhort, before the object of the expedition was completed, the troops generously agreed to subast on fuch as could be found in the Indian country. After their return, they rejoined the main army, and paffed a third winter in huts, at Newtown in Connecticut. In the latter end of this year Sullivan refigned his command and retired.

In the following year, the New-Hampshire regiments did duty at the important post of West-Point, and afterward marched into New-Jersey, where General Poor died. Three regiments of militia were employed in the fervice of this year. The fourth winter was passed in a hutted cantonment, at a place called Soldier's For-tone, near Hudson's river. In the close of this year, the three regiments were reduced to two, which were commanded by the Colonels Scammel and George Reid.

The next year, a part of them remained in the State of New-York, and another 1781. part marched to Virginia, and were prefent at the capture of the fecond British army, under Earl Cornwallis. HE war in which we became involve ed with Britain, found us not deftitute of resources, but unskilled in the art of finance. Former wars had been maintained by a paper currency; which, though it depreciated in some measure, yet was finally redeemed by the reimburfements which we received from the British Treasury. We had been also used to issue bills on loan, and receive landed property as fecurity for its redemption. To the fame mode we had recourse on this occafion, without either of the foundations on which our former currencies had been fupported. Bills of credit were emitted with no other fund for their redemption than taxation, and that deferred to distant periods. It was imagined that the justice of our cause, and the united ardor and patriotism of the people, would preserve the value of these bills during the contest which we were very fanguine would be fhort; and in fact the circulation of them

1776. for the first year was supported by no other means. But being counterfeited, they began to depreciate, and then it was thought necessary to enact a law against forging them, and to make them a legal Tuly 3. tender in all payments. In some of the States, these bills were made a tender for the interest, but not for the principal of former debts; but in New-Hampshire, if the creditor should refuse them when offered in payment, the whole debt was cancelled. Had this law regarded future contracts only, every man would have known on what terms to make his engagements; but to declare it legal to pay debts, already contracted, with money of an inferior value, was altogether unjust. It was not in human power to prevent a depreciation of the bills; and the enforcing of their currency accelerated the destruction of their value. The fraudulent debtor took advantage of this law to cheat his creditor, under colour of justice; whilst the creditor had no other refuge, than in fome cases privately to transfer the written obligation; and in other cases to refuse the tender, at the risque indeed of losing the debt; but in hope that justice would at some future time have its course. Hus-

bandmen, who lived remote from the scene

of hostilities, and who had the produce of the earth at their command, were able to keep their property good. Hawkers and monopolifers, who crept from obscurity and assumed the name of merchants, could even increase their substance in these perilous times. But those persons whose property was in other men's hands; or whose living depended on stated salaries; or whose honest minds could not descend to practise knavery, though established by law, were doomed to suffer.

To palliate these evils, at one time, a law was enacted against monopoly and extortion; and when found impracticable, it was repealed. At other times, the prices of different articles were stated under severe penalties; but ways were soon found to evade these establishments; and when found ineffectual, the laws were repealed. It is not confistent with the nature of commerce to hear fuch restrictions; and the laws increased the evils which they pretended to cure. At another time public fales by auction were prohibited, because it was faid that they were the means of depreciating the currency; but in fact they ferved only to demonstrate its real value. There was a disposition in the governing part of the people to keep out of fight the true cause of this growing mischief. Even the general Congress, in a public address which they ordered to be read in the congregations, affembled for religious worship, after saying much in praise of paper money, told us, that it was the only kind of money which could not make to itself wings and fly away.' Had this been intended as the language of burlesque, it might have been received with a fmile; in any other fense, it was an infult to the feelings of honest men.

In the midst of these distresses, frequent meetings of different bodies of men were held, to confult on some practicable modes of relief. Committees of counties, and of different States, at various times, formed projects, and iffued public addresses; but palliatives in this, as in all other cases, foon loft their efficacy. From one of these Conventions, holden at Springfield, and composed of delegates from the New-England States and New-York; a letter was addressed to the general Congress, which put them on deviling means to furmount the existing difficulties. Among other expedients they recommended effectual taxation, the opening of loan-offices, and that the States individually should emit no more bills of credit. These were falutary propofals;

proposals; but the most notable effect of 1777. this letter was a recommendation from Congress to the several States to confiscate and make fale of all the real and operfonal estates of such of their inhabitants and other persons as had forfeited the fame, and the right to the protection of their respective States; and to invest the ' money arifing from the fales in conti-'nental loan certificates, to be appropriated as the respective States should direct.

This was a delicate point, and required the most critical discussion. It involved a question of national law; and some perfons who were acquainted with the subject, thought fuch a ftep not only illegal, but impolitic and dangerous. In cases of war between independent nations, acknow- vattel, ledging no common superior, the acquisition of immoveable property is not complete till confirmed by a treaty of peace. The war between America and Britain was fo far a war between two independent nations, that the common laws of war ought to have been observed. Had the estates of absentees been taken into possession, and the income arifing from them been applied to the support of the war; and had the question of property remained undecided till the conclusion of a peace, there is no doubt that the State would have been a gainer both in reputation and interest; but when we were daily cheating and deciving ourselves with a fraudulent paper medium, it is not strange that the voice of justice toward those whom we deemed our enemies could not be heard.

1778.

The first step toward executing this recommendation of Congress, was an act proscribing certain persons, to the number of seventy-fix, who had at various times, and for various reasons, quitted this State. These were forbidden to return without leave, under the penalty of transportation; and in case of a second return, they were to suffer death.

The next step, was to conficate the whole estate, real and personal, of twenty-eight of the proscribed; of whom it was declared that they had 'justly forfeited all 'right to protection from the State; and 'also their right to any farther enjoyment of their niterest and property within it.'

In these acts, no distinction was made between those persons who had withdrawn themselves from the State, by a sense of their duty; those who were in fast British subjects, but occasionally resident here; those who had absconded through timidity; and those who had committed crimes a-gainst express law, and had fled from justice. No conditional offer of pardon was made; no time was allowed for any to return and enter into the service of the country; but the whole were put informinately into one black list, and stigsthatised as 'having basely deserted the cause of liberty, and manifested a disposition inimical to the State, and a design to aid its enemies in their wicked purposes."

Some persons who had legal demands on these estates, had for the security of their debts laid attachments on them; but by another act, all attachments which had been made since the commencement of hostilities, were declared null and void, and the Courts were required to dismiss them.

Trustees were appointed in each county to take possession of all these estates, real and personal; and to sell the personal immediately at public auction; with a discretionary power to leave out of the sale, such articles as they should deem necessary, to the support of the families of the proferibed. To preserve some farther appearance of justice, the creditors of these estates, though they were not allowed to bid at the auctions without payment, were ofdered

dered to exhibit their claims to the truftees, and in cases of insolvency, all claims were to be settled by the Judges of Probate.

Whilst the settlement of these estates was going on, the money was rapidly depreciating. After the year 1777, the State issued no more bills, and the former were called in and exchanged for Treasurer's notes on interest, of a value not less than five pounds. The Continental bills continued passing and depreciating till the fpring of 1781, when fuddenly, and by general confent, they went out of circulation, and folid coin succeeded in their place. Then a scale of depreciation for the preceding years of the war was framed, and all past payments were regulated by it. The treaty of peace obliged us to proceed no farther in the matter of confiscations. By a subsequent act, the Judges of Probate were empowered to liquidate by the scale of depreciation, the fums paid into the Treasury by the Trustees; to receive claims against the estates, and to adjust and certify the same to the President, who was authorised to order the Treasurer, to issue notes, bearing interest from the time when the faid fums were paid into the Treasury; which notes the creditors were to receive in payment; but if any of the estates fhould

March 1, 1783. should prove infolvent, then the creditors were to receive their average. In this manner some of these estates have been settled and the creditors paid; others remain unfettled. Some of them barely paid the expenses of their management; others were rendered infolvent. The estate of the late Governor paid all the demands upon it excepting that of his father; who generously withdrew his claim that the other creditors might be paid in full.*

Power, when delegated without reftrictions, and for the abuse of which the delegate is not held accountable, has a fifting tendency toward despotism. The temporary constitution which we had adopted at the beginning of the war, was found, by experience, to have many im-Vperfections; and the necessity of checks and exclusions became every day more evident. the people, in their town-meetings, it was rejected. Another convention was appointed, which had more advantage than the former, the neighbouring State of Maffachusetts having digested and adopted a conftitution, which was supposed to be an improvement on all which had been framed in America. This convention had no less than nine sessions, and continued From June 1781, to for more than two years. In the first plan Od. 1781. for more than two years. In the first plan of government which they composed, they distinctly stated the alienable and unalienable rights of the people. They divided the government into three branches, legislative, executive and judicial, and defined the limits of each. The legislative branch was composed of a Senate and House of Representatives. The Senate was to confift of twelve persons, five for the county of Rockingham, two for Strafford, two for Hillsborough, two for Cheshire and one for Grafton. These were to be voted for in town-meetings, and the votes fealed and returned to the Secretary's office. The number of Representatives was limited to fifty, and apportioned among the counties, thus twenty for Rockingham; eight for Strafford; ten for Hillsborough; eight for Cheshire; and four for Grafton. These were to be elected by County Conventions, confisting of one delegate for every fifty rateable polls. This mode was recommended, to prevent those interested views and that party spirit, which too often appear in fingle towns in the election of Representatives. The executive power was vested in a Governor. whom the convention, in their address to the people, described in the following terms: 'They have carrayed him with 5 honors, they have armed him with power s and fet him on high; but still he is only the right hand of your power, and the mirror of your majefty. "But though armed with power and liable to be impeached for misconduct, he was shrouded from responsibility, by a Council, without whose advice he could not take one ftep of any importance. The judicial department was to be appointed by the executive and supported by the legislative; but the Judges were removeable for misconduct, by the Governor and Council, on the address of both Houses of the Legislature. Justices of the Peace were to hold their commiffions five years only. Provision was made for the exclusion of persons from holding feveral offices at the fame time; the reason of which was thus expressed. The name of Governor, and most of his powers, were still retained; but the mode of representation was altered. Instead of superior officers being chosen by their inferiors, and inferior officers by the privates, as had been practifed fince the beginning of the war, the order of appointment was reversed, and the privates had no power of choice at all. This was faid to be necessary to the preservation of harmony, fubordination and discipline. To the convention which formed this constitution several towns in the western part of the State did not fend delegates. The cause of this omission, and of some plained d relong said assistive ronguit lo The inhabitants of the district on the western side of Connecticut river, which was fevered from New-Hampshire in 1764, had been engaged in a long and bitter controverfy with the government of New-York. They had even been obliged to have recourse to arms in defence of their estates; and frequent acts of violence had been committed. There was among them a fet of intrepid men, ready to encounter dangers, and trained to hardy enterprise. At the commencement of hostilities, by the advice of some principal oppofers of the British Government, in the other Colonies, a company of those people flyling themselves Green Mountain Boys, marched to Ticonderoga, and wrested that fortress, together with Crown-Point, out of the hands of the British garrisons. A regiment of them was embodied by order and in the pay of the general Congress. Their exertions in the common cause were meritorious and their fervices were accept-To the convention, which formed slds peculiar fituation and concert measures for their fafety. The opportunity which then presented for a change in their political connexions, was too precious to be loft. By the diffolution of the bonds which had held America in subjection to the Crown of Britain, they conceived themselves free from the government of New-York, to which the most of them had never voluntarily submitted; and, being as they faid, reduced to 'a state of nature,' they thought that they had a right to form fuch connexions as were agreeable to themselves. Accordingly they made and published a declaration; 'that they would at all times confider themfelves as a free and independent State; capable of regulating their own internal police; that they had the fole exclusive right of governing themselves, in such ' manner as they should choose, not repugnant to the refolves of Congress; and that they were ready to contribute ' their proportion to the common defence.' Under the influence of thefe principles, they formed a plan of government and a code of laws, and petitioned Congress to receive them into the union.

The inhabitants on the eastern fide of Connecticut river were very conveniently

fituated to unite with those on the western fide, and many of them had the fame principles and views. They argued that the original grant of New-Hampshire to Mafon was circumscribed by a line drawn at the distance of fixty miles from the sea that all the lands westward of that line. being royal grants, had been held in fubjection to the government of New-Hampthire by force of the royal commissions. which were vacated by the assumed independence of the American Colonies; and therefore that the inhabitants of all those lands had 'reverted to a state of nature.' By this expression, however, they did not mean that each individual was reduced to fuch a state; but that each town retained its corporate unity, unconnected with any fuperior jurisdiction. They diftinguished between commissions derived from the King, which were revokable at his pleafure, and incorporations held on certain conditions, which being performed, the powers and privileges granted by the incorporations were perpetual. They afferted that jurisdictions established by royal commisfions could bind a people together no longer than the force which first compelled continues to operate; but when the coercive power of the King was rejected, and Mr. ympodyl its operation had ceased, the people had a right to make a stand at the first legal stage, viz. their town incorporations. These by universal consent were held sacred; hence they concluded that the major part of each one of those towns had a right to control the minor part; and they considered themselves as so many distinct corporations, until they should agree to unite in one aggregate body.

In these sentiments the people were not all united. The majority of some towns was in favor of their former connexion, and in those towns where the majority inclined the other way, the minority claimed protestion of the government.

They supposed that the existence of their town-incorporations, and of the privileges annexed to them, depended on their union to New-Hampshire; and that their acceptance of the grants was in effect an acknowledgment of the jurisdiction, and a submission to the laws of the State; from which they could not fairly be disengaged without its consent; as the State had never injured or oppressed them.

Much pains, were taken, by the other party, to differninate the new ideas. Conventions were held, pamphlets were printed, and at length a petition was drawn in the name of fixteen towns* on: 1778. the eastern fide of Connecticut river, requesting the new State, which had affumed the name of VERMONT, to receive them into its union, alleging, that they were Hamphire ' not connected with any State, with ref- files. The Affembly at first appeared to be against receiving them; but the members from those; towns which were fituated near the river on the west side, declared that they would withdraw and join with the people on the east side, in forming a new State. The question was then referred to the people at large, and means were used to influence a majority of the towns to vote in favor of June 11. the union, which the Affembly could not but confirm. The fixteen towns were accordingly received; and the Vermont Affembly refolved, that any other towns on the eastern fide of the river might be admitted on producing a vote of a majority of the inhabitants, or on the appointment

The Prefident of New-Hampshire, in the name of the Aslembly, wrote to the Governor of Vermont, claiming the fixteen towns as part of the State, the limits of which had been determined pilor to the revolution reminding him that those towns had fent delegates to the convention in 1775; that they had applied to the Affembly for arms and ammunition, which had been fent to them; that their military officers had accepted commissions and obeyed orders from the government; that the minority of those towns was averse to a difunion, and had claimed protection of the State, which the Affembly thought themselves bound to afford; and beseeching him to use his influence with the Affembly of Vermont to dissolve the newly formed connexion.

At the fame time, the President wrote to the delegates of the State in Congress; desiring them to take advice and endeavour to obtain the interposition of that body;

orl: A convention of delegates from feveral towns on both fides of the river affembled at Cornifh and agreed to unite, without any regard to the limits established by the King in 1764; and to make the following proposals to New-Hampshire, viz, either to agree with them on a dividing line, or to fubmit the diffute to Congress, or to arbitrators mutually chosen. If meither of these proposals were accepted, then, in case they could agree with New-Hampshire on a form of government, they would consent that 'the whole of the grants on both sides of the river should connect 'themselves with New-Hampshire, and 'become one entire State, as before the royal determination in 1764.' Till one or other of these proposals should be complied with, they determined 'to trust in Providence and defend themselves.'

and An attempt was made in the following year to form a constitution for New-Hampshire, in which the limits of the State were faid to be the fame as under the royal government, sreferving nevertheless our claim to the New-Hampshire Grants west of Connecticut river.' The this form of government was rejected by a majority of the people; yet there was a disposition in a great part of the Assembly to retain their claim to the whole of the grants westward of the river. At the same time the State of New-York fet up a claim to the fame lands, and it was fuspected, perhaps not without reason, that intrigues were forming to divide Vermont between

New-Hampshire and New-York, by the ridge of mountains which runs through the territory. Certain it is that the Vermonters were alarmed; and, that they might have the same advantage of their adversaries, they extended their claim west-ward into New-York and eastward into New-Hampshire; and thus not only the fixteen towns, but several other towns in the counties of Cheshire and Grafton, became incorporated with Vermont by 'ar-' ticles of union and confederation.'

It is not eafy to develope the intrigues of the several parties, or to clear their transactions from the obscurity which surrounds them.* He who looks for consistency in the proceedings of the Conventions and Assemblies which were involved in this controversy, will be disappointed. Several interfering interests conspired to perplex the subject. The people on the western side of the Green Mountains, wished to have the seat of government among them. Those adjoining Connecticut river, on both sides, were desirous of bringing the centre of jurisdiction to the verge of the river. The leading men in the eastern part of New-Hampshire, were averse to a removal of the government from its old feat. Vermont had affumed independence; but its limits were not defined. New-York had a claim on that territory as far as Connecticut River, from which there was no disposition to recede. That State had been always opposed to the independence of Vermont. New-Hampshire at first seemed to acquiesce in it; and some letters which the President wrote to the Governor of Vermont, when threatened with invafion in 1777, were understood as an acknowledgment of it. Had there been no attempt to unite with the towns on the eastern fide of the river, New-Hampshire would perhaps never, have opposed the independence of Vermont. But the Affembly was afterward induced to claim all that territory, which before the year 1764, had been supposed to be within the limits of the State. This interfered with the claim of New-York; and at the same time Massachusetts put in a claim to a part of Vermont. The controverfy had become fo intricate, that it was thought necessary to be decided by Congress; and application being made to Sept. 24. that body, they recommended to the three States of New-York, Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, to passacts which should authorise Congress to determine their boundaries; and at the fame time they, advised the people of Vermont to relinquish jurisdiction over all persons on the west or east fides of Connecticut river, who had not denied the authority of New-York and New-Hampshire; and to abstain from granting lands, or confiscating estates, within their assumed limits, till the matter should be decided. States of New-York and New-Hampshire passed these acts; but Massachufetts did not. The Vermont Affembly proceeded in granting lands and confilcating estates; and Congress could only refolve that their proceedings were unwarrantable.

It was necessary that nine States should be present in Congress, beside those whose claims were to be heard. A deficiency in the representation caused a long delay; but after the expiration of another year the question was brought on. The claims of New-York and New-Hampshire were put in; and both pleaded that Vermont had no right to independence. The agents of the new State afferted their right, and offered

The cause was farther perplexed by a constitutional question, whether Congress had any power to form a new State with- 1781. in the limits of the union? The decision was deferred ; and after eleven months, Aug. 20. When this resolution was laid before the Assembly of Vermont, which met at Charlestown, they determined to 'remain' firm in the principles on which they first' assumed government, and to hold the articles of union inviolate; that they would 'not submit the question of their inde- pendence to the arbitrament of any power whatever; but they were willing 'at present to refer the question of their jurisdictional boundary to Commission' ers mutually chosen, and when they should be admitted into the American 'union, they would submit any such disputes to Congress.'

The state of society within the seceding towns, at this time, was very unhappy. The majorities attempted to control the minorities, and these were disposed not to submit, but to seek protection of the government with which they had been connected. At the same time and in the same place, Justices, Sherists and Constables, appointed by the authority of both States, were exercising jurisdiction over the same persons. Party rage, high words and deep resentment, were the effect of these clashing interests. An affray which which began in the town of Chesterfield, threatened a fcene of open hostility, between the States of New-Hampshire and Vermont.

A Constable, appointed by the authority of Vermont, had a writ, in an action of debt against a man who was in the interest of New-Hampshire. He found the man in company with a number of peo- Nov. 14ple of his own party, and attempted to arrest him. The owner of the house interpofed. The Constable produced a book which he faid contained the laws of Vermont, and began to read. The owner of the house forbad him. Threatening words were used; and the officer was compelled to retreat. be confined; and for this purpose the Sheriffs were empowered to raise the posses.

In attempting to release the two prisoners from Charlestown gaol, the Sheriff himfelf was imprisoned by the Vermont Sheriff, under the authority of a warrant from three Justices. The imprisoned Sheriff applied to a Brigadier General of New-Hampshire, to raise the militia for his liberation. This alarmed the Vermonters; and orders were issued by the Governor for their militia to oppose force with force. A committee of Vermont was fent to Exeter, 'to agree on measures to prevent hostilities.' One of this committee was the Vermont Sheriff;" he was immediately arrested and thrown into prison at Exeter, and there held as a hoftage for the release of the Sheriff of Chethire. The Atlembly issued a proclamation, allowing forty days for the people in the revolted towns to repair to fome Magistrate of New-Hampshire, and subfcribe a declaration, that they acknowledged the extent of New-Hampshire to Connecticut river; and that they would demean themselves peaceably as good cittizens of the State! They also ordered the militia of all the counties to hold themselves in readiness to march against the revolters.

Whilst affairs wore such a threatening aspect between the two States, means were used at Congress to take up the controversy on more general ground. A committee, who had under confideration the affair of admitting Vermont into the union and determining its boundaries, prevailed on General Washington, then at Philadelphia, to write to the Governor of Vermont, advising to a relinquishment of their late extension, as an indispensible pre-'liminary' to their admission into the union; intimating also, that upon their non-compliance, they must be considered as having a hostile disposition toward the United States, in which case coercion on the part of Congress, however disagreeaflire The Aff. yeales and ble, would be necessary. This letter had the defired effect. The Affembly of Vermont, taking advantage of the absence of the members from the Feb. 23-23 eastern side of the river, obtained a majority for complying with the preliminary, and resolved, that the western bank of Connecticut river on the one part, and a 'line drawn from the north-west corner of Massachusetts, northward, to Lake Cham-

'plain on the other part, be the eaftern 'and western boundaries of the State of 'Vermont, and that they relinquished all 'claim of jurisdiction without those limits.' When the members from the eastern side of Connecticut river arrived, they found themselves excluded from a feat in the Assembly, and took their leave with some expressions of bitterness.

After this compliance, it was expected that Vermont would be admitted into the union, and the question was solemnly put in Congress, but a majority decided against it; to the no small disappointment of many persons, beside the inhabitants of the disputed territory. The pretence for this decision was, that they had exceeded the limited time; but they had complied with the 'indispensible preliminary;' and the order of Congress, requiring it, stood unrepealed.

Though cut off from their connexion with Vermont, the revolted towns did not at once return to a flate of peace; but the divisions and animolities which had fo long fublished, continued to produce difagreeable effects. When the Inferior Court was holden september. at Keene, a number of persons appeared, to oppose its proceedings, and effected their purpose so far as to make an adjournment necessary; but three of the leaders of the opposition were arrested and bound over to the Superior Court. In the mean time efforts were made to raise a party who should oppose the Superior Court; and it was reported that two hundred men had affociated and armed themselves for that purpose. On the morning before the Court was opened, feveral of the leaders came to the Judges' chambers and prefented a petition, praying, 'that the 'Court might be adjourned, and that no judicial proceedings might be had, whilft the troubles in which the country had been involved ftill fubfifted.' They were told that the Judges could come to no determination on the subject, but in open Court. When the Court was opened, their petition was publicly read; and the confideration of it was postponed to the next day. The Court then proceeded to

A bill was found against them. They were arraigned, they pleaded guilty, and cast themselves on the mercy of the Court. The Court remitted their punishment on condition of their future peaceable behavior. This well judged combination of firmness and lenity disarmed the infurgents; and they quietly dispersed. From that time the spirit of opposition to government in that quarter gradually abated; and the people returned to their connexion with New-Hampshire, and of and not te mercual the way of the

THE American revolution had been crowned with fuccefs, as far as it respected our emancipation from foreign jurifdiction, the establishment of forms of government among ourselves, and our deciverance from war. It remained, to accommodate the minds and manners of the people, under the new administration, to a regular course of justice, both public and private; to perfect the union of the States; and to establish a system of finance. These things were necessary to make the revolution complete.

The extremes of despotism on the one hand, and of licentiousness on the other, are equally to be avoided. In a just medium between these, a government well balanced and executed with vigor, is capable of producing the most valuable benefits. To this point it was necessary to conductour revolution. But it was equally neceffary, that it should proceed by flow degrees; that errors in principle should be gradually reformed; and that men should be taught, by their own experience, the folly of relying on any system of politics, which, however supported by popularity, is not sounded in rectitude.

A large debt, accumulated by the war, remained to be discharged. For this purpole, requisitions were made by Congress, as well as by the State Government. Silver and gold, which had circulated largely in the latter years of the war, were returning, by the usual course of trade, to those countries, whence large quantities of necessary and unnecessary commodities had been imported. Had any general fystem of import been adopted, some part of this money might have been retained, and fome part of the public debt discharged; but the power of Congress did not extend to this object; and the States were not united in the expediency of delegating new and fufficient powers to that body. The partial imposts, laid by some of the States, were ineffectual, as long as others found their interest in omitting them. Recourse therefore was had to the usual mode of taxation on polls and effates; by which means, a heavy burden was laid on the husbandman husbandman and the labourer. Those who were punctual in their payments, faw no probable end of their exertions, whilst the negligence of others occasioned repeated demands. Private creditors, who had fuffered by long forbearance, were importunate for their dues; and the Courts of Law were full of fuits.

The people who felt themselves distressed, held conferences with a view to devife means of redrefs. The most easy remedy which appeared to many of them, was a new emission of paper bills, funded on real estate, and loaned on interest. To effect this, petitions were addressed to the Legislature; and to remedy the grievance, as far as it was occasioned by a debt of the State, an act was passed, to draw into the Treasury all notes issued by the State, and give certificates for the interest, and for fifteen per cent. of the principal, annually; which certificates were to be received by the Treasurer for taxes, 'in lieu of, and equal to filver and gold.' By this means, it was expected that the debt would gradually be extinguished; and that the people would easily be enabled to pay at least one species of their taxes.

This was far from fatisfying the complainants. The public fecurities, they new religion west faid, were engrossed by rich speculators, and the poor were distressed for the means of paying their taxes and their private debts. The cry for paper money was incessant; and the people were called upon in the public papers, 'to assert their 'own majesty, as the origin of power, and 'to make their Governors know, that 'they are but the executors of the public 'will.'

To this clamor, the voice of reason and justice calmly answered; that it was not in the power of the Legislature to establish any fund, which should secure paper money from depreciation; that there was fo much paper then in circulation; and the time of its redemption was fo distant, that the notes passed at a discount of fixty, and the certificates of twenty per cent; that if the quantity were increased, the depreciation would increase in proportion; that if bills were iffued and made a tender in all payments, it would never be in the power of government to redeem them by filver and gold, because none could be collected; and in that case, no part of the continental or foreign debt could be discharged; that if bills were loaned on land fecurity, it would be in the power of the public debtor to purchase the bills at a reduced

a reduced value, and with them to make his payment at the Treafury, in which case, though the public cheft might be filled with paper, yet the government would fuffer all the embarrasiment of poverty. It was added, that the Legislature were by the Constitution expressly forbidden to make retrospective laws, and had no right to alter the nature of private contracts; and that should the majority of the people petition the government to make paper a lawful tender, it would be their duty to relect the petition as unconflitutional. When it was proposed, that the paper should not be a tender for past but only for future contracts; it was answered, that this would not relieve the debtor, who was fuffering for his past; engagements, and the difficulties which it pretended to cure would ftill exist. ada

In vain were agriculture and manufactures, industry and frugality recommended as the only adequate sources of relief; the complainants had no disposition to apply a remedy so slow in its operation; and indeed it was doubtful whether, the utmost exertions in that way would have been sufficient, completely to extricate us, out of these difficulties, without some alteration in our confederated government. 464

Similar difficulties, at the fame time, existed in the neighbouring State of Masfachusetts; to remedy which, among other palliatives, a law was passed called a tender-act, 'by which it was provided that executions iffued for private demands, 'might be fatisfied by cattle and other ' enumerated articles, at an appraisement of impartial men under oath.' For fuch a law the discontented party in New-Hampshire petitioned; and to gratify them the Legislature enacted, that 'when ' any debtor shall tender to his creditor, 'in satisfaction of an execution for debt, either real or personal estate suffi-'cient, the body of the debtor shall be exempt from imprisonment, and 'the debt shall carry an interest of ' fix per cent; the creditor being at lib-'erty either to receive the estate, so ' tendered, at a value estimated by three ' appraisers, or to keep alive the demand by taking out an alias, within one year ' after the return of any former execution, ' and levying it on any estate of the debt-'or which he can find.' At the fame time an act was made, enlarging the power er of Justices of the Peace, to try and determine actions of debt and trespass to the value of ten pounds. These laws were were complained of as unconftitutional; the former as being retrospective, and changing the nature of contracts; the latter as depriving the creditor, in certain cases, of a right to trial by Jury. But so strong was the clamor for redress of grievances; and so influential was the example of the neighbouring State, that some of the best men in the Legislature, found it necessary to comply; whilst another part were secretly in favor of worse meanings.

The tender-act, at first, was made for two years only; before the expiration of which it was revived, with some alterations, and continued for three years longer. The effect of this law, in cases where an attempt was made to execute it, was, that the most valuable kinds of property were either concealed or made over to a third person; and when the Sheriff came with an execution, it was levied on such articles as were of little use to the creditor. But the most general effect of the law was to prevent any demand on the part of the creditor, and to encourage the debtor in neglecting payment.

The scarcity of money was still a grievance which the laws had not remedied, but rather had a tendency to increase.

To encourage its importation into the country the Legislature exempted from all portduties, except light-money, every veffel which should bring gold and filver only; and from one half of the duties, if a fum of money equal to one half of the cargo should be imported. But it was to no purpose to import money, unless encouragement were given for its circulation, which could not be expected whilst the tender-act was in force; for every man who owned money thought it more secure in his own hands, than in the hands of others.

The clamor for paper currency increafed, and, like a raging fever, approached toward a crifis. In every town there was a party in favor of it, and the public papers were continually filled with declamations on the subject. It was faid that an emission of bills of credit would give a fpring to commerce and encourage agriculture; that the poor would be able 'to pay their debts and taxes; that all the arguments against issuing paper were framed by speculators, and were intended to ferve the wealthy part of the community, who had monopolifed the public fecurities, that they might raise their value and get all the good bargains into their own hands:

hands; that other States in the union had iffued paper bills, and were rejoicing in the happy effects of their currency without any depreciation; that the people had a right to call upon their Representatives to stamp a value on paper, or leather, or any other substance capable of receiving an impression; and that to prevent its depreciation, a law should be enacted to punish with banishment and outlawry, every person who should attempt by any means to lessen their states.*

The fame party who were so zealous in favor of paper currency, and against laws which obliged them to pay their debts, proceeded to inveigh against Courts and lawyers. The Inferior Courts were represented as sinecures for Judges and Clerks; the defaulting, appealing, demuring, abatements, sees and bills of costs, without any decision, were complained of

A specimen of the language ased on this occasion is as follows.

Seven States are now bleffed with harmony, plenty and happiness.

Worthy, industrious men can go to market with a penny in their pockets; their benevolent friends, the farmers, meet them halfway with cheerfulness, and are as ready to receive as they to offer; now one greats the other with facile beneditions, rates floatified; agti-tulture increases, mutual considence is resorted, and harmony reigns triumphane. Elysan fields these work when coincrasted with the bondings of the inhabitants of New-Hampshire; for 1 in the midd of slife, they are in death, death of the work kind, penary and want of the common blessings of Providence. How long, freemen of New-Hampshire, can ye bear the yoke of opportion!

New-Hampshire Gazette, July 20, 1786.

as burdens, and an abolition of these Courts became a part of the popular cry. But the party did not content themselves with writing in the public papers. An attempt was made to call a convention, at Concord, whilst the Assembly was sitting there, who should petition the Legislature in favor of the plan; and it was thought, that the presence of such a body of men, convened at the same time and place, would have great weight. This attempt was defeated in a manner singular and humorous.

June.

At the first fitting of the Assembly, when five only of the members of the proposed convention were in town, some wags, among whom were feveral young lawyers, pretended to have been chosen by the towns in which they lived for the fame purpose. In conference with the five, they penetrated their views, and perfuaded them to post an advertisement, for all the members who were in town to affemble immediately; it being of the utmost importance to present their petition as early in the fession as possible. By this means, fixteen pretended members, with the five real ones, formed themselves into a convention, choosing one of the five their President, and one of the fixteen their their Clerk. They carried on their de- 1786. bates and paffed votes with much apparent folemnity. Having framed a petition, complaining in the most extravagant terms of their grievances; praying for a loan of three millions of dollars, funded on real estate : for the abolition of Inferior Courts, and a reduction of the number of lawyers, to two only in a county; and for a free trade with all the world : they went in procession to the Assembly, (some of whom had been previously let into the fecret) and with great formality presented their petition, which was fuffered to lie on the table, and was afterward withdrawn. The convention then diffolved; and when others, who had been really chosen by the towns arrived, they were exceedingly mortified on finding their views for that time to completely fruftrated.

The next effort of the party was to call County Conventions. Of what class of people these were composed, some idea may be formed from this circumstance. An innholder, at whose house one of these conventions first met, refused to take their promise for lumber to pay the expense of their meeting; upon which they adjourned to a ware-house, belonging to one of the party, and were treated with liquor gratis. Junio empressing languages

From two of these conventions, and from feveral towns in different parts of the State, petitions were prefented to the Legislature, at their session in Exeter. On calm deliberation, these petitions appeared to be inconfiftent with each other, with the constitution, with justice and public faith. But to ftill the clamor and collect the real fense of the people on the subject of paper currency; the Affembly formed a plan for the emission of fifty thousand pounds, to be let at four per cent. on land fecurity; to be a tender in payment of State taxes, and for the fees and falaries of public officers. This plan was immediately printed, and fent to the feveral towns; and the people were defired to give their opinions in town-meetings for and against it, and to make return of their votes to the Assembly at their next feffion.

This way of proceeding did not coincide with the views of the party; the principal directors of which endeavoured to conceal themselves, whilst they perfuaded a confiderable number of persons of various characters, to appear openly in support of the petitions. They took pains pains to fpread false reports through the country; and among other things, it was faid that the Affembly had paffed an act, to refund the value of the conficated eftates, which was to be immediately affelled on the people.

It must be observed, that at this time, causes of a similar nature had excited numbers of people in fome counties of Massachusetts, to assemble in arms and prevent the Judicial Courts from fitting. This example, aided by false reports, and a fense of grievances, partly real and partly imaginary, operated fo powerfully on the minds of a number of people, in the western part of the county of Rockingham; that on the morning of the twentieth of Sept. 20. September; about two hundred men affembled at Kingston, fix miles from Exeter, where they chose leaders and procured a drum. By the help of fome militia officers they formed themselves into military order, and in the afternoon marched to Exeter: about one third of them being armed with muskets, and the others with fwords and clubs. Having entered the confines of the town, they halted; and fent a paper to the Affembly, figned by one of them who styled himself moderator, demanding an answer to their former Ff4 petition petition immediately. They then marched through the town, and paraded before the meeting-house, where both Houses of Affembly were holding a conference. The doors were open, and as many of them as were disposed, entered. The President, in a cool and deliberate speech, explained the reasons on which the Aslembly had proceeded in rejecting the petitions; exposed the weakness, inconsistency and injustice of their request; and faid, that if it were ever so just and proper in itself, and if the whole body of the people were in favor of it, yet the Legislature ought not to comply with it, whilft furrounded by an armed force. To do this, would be, to betray the rights of the people, which they had all folemnly fworn to fupport. He concluded by declaring, that no confideration of perfonal danger would ever compel them to violate the rights of their constituents.

This speech being ended, the drum beat to arms; as many as had guns were ordered to load them with balls; sentries were placed at the doors, and the whole Legislature were held prisoners; the mob threatening death to any person who should attempt to escape, till their demands were granted. The Assembly went on with their bufiness, taking no farther notice of the rioters, till the approach of evening; when the President attempted to go out, but was stopped by an impenetrable column. He then reasoned with them, and warned them of the fatal tendency of their conduct, affuring them, that the force of the country would support the government. Their answers to him were insolent and reproachful. They raifed a cry for paper-money, an equal distribution of property, and a release from debts. The inhabitants of Exeter had all this time beheld with filence the infult offered to the Legislature; having no orders to take arms, they restrained their indignation, till the dusk of the evening; when some of them beat a drum at a distance, and others cried, 'Huzza for government! Bring up the artillery!' At the found of these words the mob were struck with a panic, and began to disperse. Their moderator ordered them to meet again, at nine of the clock the next morning, and they scattered in every direction.

The Affembly being thus at liberty, requested the President to call out the force of the State to quell the insurrection. In the evening he issued his orders, and before morning companies of militia, well armed, began to come in from the neighbouring towns. By ten of the clock in the morning a fufficient body of horse and foot, with field-pieces and military mufic, having arrived; the Prefident put them in motion against the infurgents; who were then parading, about a mile diftant, Having by their spies obtained intelligence of the motion of the militia; the unarmed part of the infurgents retreated to a hill beyond the river; the others kept their ground till a party of light-horse appeared in view, and then the whole body retired. Some of them were taken by the purfuers; others recovered the bridge at King's-fall, and being met by those who had first retreated, made an appearance as if they would dispute the passage. Orders were given by one of their leaders to fire; but the force of the government appeared fo formidable that they dared not to obey. The officers of the militia rushed in among them, seized their moderator and others to the number of forty, the rest fled with precipitation, and no farther purfuit was made. The prisoners were disarmed and conducted to the town; where they were brought to an examination before the Prefident and Council. Had these men heen been engaged in a good cause, and commanded by proper officers, they would have maintained the honor of their country, and fought her battles with ardor and perseverance; but, conscious that they were opposing a government of their own establishing, their native fortitude forfook them; and being taken in arms; they gave an example of the most humila iating submission. Most of them professed to be ashamed of their conduct, and their shame appeared to be fincere.

The dignity of government being thus vindicated, its lenity was equally conspic-Six only of the prisoners were detained, and a party of light-horse was fent to apprehend two others of the most culpable. They were taken out of their beds and brought to Exeter. This manœuvre had an excellent effect, for some, who knew themselves equally guilty, were afraid to fleep in their own houses. The Superior Court being then in fession at Sept. 25. Exeter, these eight prisoners were arraigned on an indictment for treason. One dropping on his knees, pleaded guilty; others hefitated when they pronounced the words 'not guilty.' They were ordered to recognife for their appearance at the next Superior Court, when their bonds were discharged.

1786. discharged. Some of them, who belonged to the Presbyterian Churches, were cited before the ecclesiastical session, and there cenfured, as oppofers of just government.. Others, being militia officers, were tried by a general Court Martial; of thefe, some were cashiered, but not incapacitated for future fervice; fome were reprimanded, and others were acquitted. The whole opposition was completely fubdued; wavering minds became fettled; converts were made to the fide of government; and the fystem of knavery received a deep wound, from which it has not fince recovered.

Jan. 4.

The plan which had been iffued by the Affembly, for emitting paper-money, was in course referred to the people, in their town-meetings; and at the next session the returns were made, when a majority appeared against it. To finish the whole matter, two questions were put in the Affembly. The first was, 'whether the Legislature can, consistently with the constitution, and their oaths, pass an act making paper bills of credit, a tender to discharge private contracts, made prior to the passing such act?' The other was, 'whether paper-money be emitted on any plan which has been proposed?' Both these questions were determined in the 1787.

To observe the progress of wisdom and virtue, and the obstacles which are laid in the way of vice, is a most pleasing entertainment to the philanthropist; and it is but just, in such a contemplation, to acknowledge that fuperintending influence, which brings good out of evil. It was feared by many, that the American revolution would not produce that fum of political happiness which its warmest advocates had fondly predicted. The efforts of taction in feveral of the States were very alarming. In New-Hampshire, the affault being made directly at the fupreme head of the government, the force of the State immediately rose and crushed it. In Massachusetts, the attacks were made on the Judicial Courts, which of themselves had no power effectually to oppose them. The difaffection there rose to a higher degree; it was more extensively diffused, and with more difficulty quelled. But at length the constitutional powers of government being exerted with vigor, the fpirit of anarchy was suppressed. In another neighbouring State, the same spirit reigned triumphant. A depreciating currency was established by law, and pertinaciously adhered to by the government.

The imbecility of the confederation by which the States were united, had long been felt, and fome attempts had been making to strengthen it; but the view of our fituation at this time demonstrated the total inefficacy of that constitution, to bind together thirteen distinct sovereignties, over which no coercive power was established, which could prevent or cure fuch evils as threatened the deffruction of all public and private credit. Happily for the American union, the remedy existed within itself. The good sense and public virtue of the great body of our citizens readily adopted the idea of a CONVENTION OF THE STATES. first proposal came from Virginia, where American liberty was first publicly afferted, when it was flagrantly violated by the stamp-act. The name of Patrick Henry will ever be illustrious in the American annals for moving the refolves of 1765; and the name of James Madison will be equally diftinguished for proposing the Convention of 1787.

To this Convention, which was holden at Philadelphia, all the States, except one, fent their delegates. After a close and particular investigation, they produced a new federal Constitution; containing adequate remedies for those political disorders, which had threatened with extinction, the liberty and independence of the American States.

Among other wife provisions, to establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty, those which respect public and private credit are not the least conspicuous. To support the former, the Congress has a power which, by the first confederation, was not delegated, 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States.' For the latter it is declared, that 'no State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make any thing but gold and filver coin a tender in payment of debts, pass any bills of attainder or ex post facts law, or any law impairing the 'obligation of contracts.'

When this new Conflitution was proposed to the people, conventions were called in each State to consider it. In these bodies, composed of persons who represented impartially every class and description of the people, and who were themselves equally various in their principles, habits and views; the Constitution underwent the most critical and severe discussion. Whilst it was in debate, the anxiety of all parties was extended to the utmost degree, and the efforts of its friends and its oppofers were unremitted.

After the Constitution had been, with the help of some proposed amendments, adopted by Massachusetts, a convention was called at Exeter in New-Hampshire. At its first meeting, a debate which continued ten days ended in an adjournment for four months; at the expiration of which term, in a fhort fession of three days only at Concord, the question for June 21. adopting and ratifying the Constitution, was, with the same help as in Massachufetts, carried in the affirmative, by a majority of eleven; the whole number present being one hundred and three. This was the ninth State in the union which accepted the Constitution; and thus the number was completed which was neceffary to put in motion the political machine. In about a month, two more States' were added. Then a Congress was formed, and the illustrious WASHINGTON, by the unanimous suffrage of the people, was placed in the first seat of government. Three other States, of which one is Vermont, have fince been admitted into the union; and there is now in operation a general general system of energetic government, which pervades every part of the United States, and has already produced a furprifing alteration for the better. By the funding of the Continental debt, and the affumption of the debts of the individual States, into one general maís, a foundation is laid for the support of public credit; by which means the American revolution appears to be completed. Let it be the fincere prayer and endeavour of every thoughtful citizen, that fuch harmony may prevail between the general government, and the jurisdiction of each State, as the peculiar delicacy of their connexion requires; and that the bleffings of 'peace, 'liberty and fafety,' fo dearly obtained, may descend inviolate to our posterity.

Copy of a letter from his Excellency General WASHINGTON, to THOMAS CHITTENDEN, Effuire. [Certified by Tobias Lear, Efq. private Secretary to the

Prefident of the United States.]

Philadelphia, 1ft Fanuary, 1782.

SIR,

I RECEIVED your favor of the 14th of November, by Mr. Brownfon. You cannot be at a lofs to know why I have not heretofore, and why I cannot now, addrefs you in your public character, or answer you in mine: But the confidence which you have been pleased to repose in me, gives me an opportunity of offering you my sentiments, as an individual, wishing most ardently to see the peace and union of his country preserved, and the just rights of the people of every part of it fully and firmly established.

is not my business, neither do I think it necessary , to discuss the origin of the right of a number of bitants to that tract of country formerly diftinguishby the name of the New-Hampshire Grants, and known by that of Vermont. I will take it for ted that their right was good, because Congress, by r resolve of the 7th of August, imply it; and by that ne 21st, are willing fully to confirm it, provided the State is confined to certain described bounds. It ears, therefore, to me, that the dispute of boundary e only one that exists, and that that being removed urther difficulties would be removed also, and the er terminated to the fatisfaction of all parties. Now ould ask you candidly, whether the claim of the ole of Vermont, was not, for a long time, confined y, or very nearly, to that tract of country which is ribed in the resolve of Congress of the 21st of Aulast; and whether, agreeable to the tenor of your letter to me, the late extention of your claim upon -Hampshire and New-York, was not more a politmanœuvre, than one in which you conceived youres justifiable. If my first question be answered in affirmative, it certainly bars your new claim. y fecond be well founded, your end is answered, you have nothing to do but withdraw your jurifon to the confines of your old limits, and obtain an lowledgment of independence and fovereignty, unhe resolve of the 21st of August, for so much tery as does not interfere with the ancient established nds of New-York, New-Hampshire and Massachu-. I perfuade myfelf you will fee and acquiefce in reason, the justice, and indeed the necessity of such cifion.

ou must consider, Sir, that the point now in dispute the utmost political importance to the future union peace of this great country. The State of Vermons, knowledged, will be the first new one admitted into consideracy; and if suffered to encroach upon the ent established boundaries of the adjacent ones, will e as a precedent for others, which it may hereaster expedient to set off, to make the same unjustifiable demands. demands. Thus, in my private opinion, while it hoves the Delegates of the States now confederated do ample justice to a body of people sufficiently pectable by their numbers, and entitled by other cla to be admitted into that confederation, it becomes the also to attend to the interests of their constituents. fee, that under the appearance of justice to one, do not materially injure the rights of others. I am to think this is the prevailing opinion of Congress, that your late extension of claim has, upon the prin ple I have above mentioned, rather diminished than creased your friends; and that, if such extension sho be perfifted in, it will be made a common cause, not confidered as only affecting the rights of those Sta immediately interested in the loss of territory; a loss too ferious a nature not to claim the attention of people. There is no calamity within the compais my forefight, which is more to be dreaded than a nee fity of coertion on the part of Congress; and conseque ly every endeavour should be used to prevent the exe tion of fo difagreeable a measure. It must involve ruin of that State against which the resentment of others is pointed.

I will only add a few words upon the fubject of I negociations, which have been carried on between y and the enemy in Canada and in New-York. I w take it for granted, as you affert it, that they were far innocent, that there never was any ferious intenti of joining Great-Britain in their attempts to fubjug your country; but it has had this certain bad tendent it has ferved to give fome ground to that delufive opini of the enemy, and upon which they, in a great meaful found their hopes of fuccess; that they have numere friends among us, who only want a proper opportuni to shew themselves openly; and that internal dispu and feuds will foon break us in pieces. At the fall time the feeds of diffrust and jealousy are scatter among ourselves by a conduct of this kind. If you a ferious in your professions, these will be additional m tives for accepting the terms which have been offere (and which appear to me equitable) and thereby co vincing cing the common enemy, that all their expectations difunion are vain, and that they have been worsted

as you unbofom yourfelf to me, I thought I had the ater right of fpeaking my fentiments openly and can by to you. I have done fo, and if they fhould prote the effect which I most fincerely wish, that of an orrable and amicable adjustment of a matter, which, arried to hostile lengths, may destroy the future hapes of my country, I shall have attained my end, ile the enemy will be deseated of theirs.

Believe me to be, with great respect,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

GEORGE WASHINGTON.
